CHAPTER I.

THE CONSTRUCTION AND INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES.

§ 1. The necessity for construction and interpretation.

The lay reader would naturally suppose that there was no excuse for the enactment of law which needed any interpretation; that it was the duty of the Legislature to frame their enactments in such simple phrases as to be clear of doubt. But notwithstanding a great deal has been written by text writers and much said in decisions, the fact still remains that because of the imperfection of the language and the variety of circumstances to which it may apply, the construction of statutes by the courts for a considerable period of time is necessary before a cautious practitioner would venture an absolute opinion as to the final meaning which will be placed upon the statute law. It is for this reason that wise jurists deprecate inconsiderate and hasty legislation, for in almost all cases it brings in its train a vast volume of litigation and it is only after a considerable period that the statute acquires a fixed meaning.

The example of the Statute of Frauds which was intended to settle the law, but which resulted in so much litigation that a distinguished jurist said that every line had cost a subsidy, shows how legislation generally works. The Statute of Uses and Trusts at the hands of judicial interpretation resulted in accomplishing almost the direct opposite of the object recited in its preamble. This necessity for interpretation has brought about a considerable body of law consisting of the principles and rules of construction.

§ 2. What may be construed. The general subjects of construction are constitutions and laws in the one class, and private documents in another class. The laws are again subject to subdivision into constitutions and statutes while private documents are easily distinguishable into three distinct classes, namely, dispositive documents or documents transmitting the title to property, as deeds, wills, bills of sale; those which create contractual relations or contracts; and another class which are really only evidentiary, that is, they evidence facts, like receipts.

It is intended in this connection, however, to treat only the subject of statutory construction. It should be borne in mind, however, that the general principles governing the construction of constitutions and statutes are the same (1).

§ 3. The various parts of a statute. It may throw some light on the interpretation and the construction of a statute to understand something of the component elements which go to make up a statute. The word "statute" is used in modern law in a more restricted sense than was given to it anciently. In the Bible and very frequently in the legal nomenclature of the Middle Ages, the word "statute" referred to and included all law. But at the present time the word "statute" indicates a law deliberately passed by the legislature.

§ 4. Same: The title. Regularly every statute has a title, and notwithstanding it was formerly the rule that the title of an act was no part of it (2), under the modern rule which requires that the body of a statute shall not be broader than its title, the title of an act is necessarily an important part of the statute.

§ 5. Same: The preamble. The preamble of a statute is a recital generally introduced by the phrase, "Whereas it appears," &c., after which is stated the reasons why the legislature deem it necessary to pass an act. Preambles have in late years fallen greatly into disuse.

§ 6. Same: The enacting clause or purview. At the present time generally the first clause in the first section of an act, stating, in effect, that "It is hereby enacted by the General Assembly that" &c., is called the enacting clause or purview. The body of the act describes or states the rule intended to be stated by the legislature.

§ 7. Same: Provisos and exceptions. A proviso in a statute is introduced to indicate the effect of certain things which are within the statute but accompanied with the peculiar conditions embraced within the proviso of the act.

Exceptions on the other hand have the effect of excluding from the operation of the statute certain things and in this respect they differ from provisos.

§ 8. Same: Emergency clause. An emergency clause of a statute, as it is called, is a clause which states in effect that it is highly desirable or necessary that the law should go into immediate effect and not await the rising of the legislature—that is, the adjournment of the body—but shall go into effect on the date when it has received all the sanctions required by the law such as due authentication by the clerks, Secretary of State, and the Governor.

SECTION 1. CLASSIFICATION OF STATUTES.

§ 9. Declaratory acts. Statutes differ essentially in their nature. For example, a statute may be intended merely as a revision or a codification of existing law, avoiding as much as possible introduction of any new rule or principle. Such a statute is called a declaratory act.

§ 10. Directory acts. A directory act is one which indicates that a certain thing shall be done under certain circumstances, always in connection with some other more paramount object. It is called directory because even though there be some deviation or omission, that which may be done supposedly under the statute may still have some validity or force although the directory clause of the statute is not complied with. Mandatory clauses in a statute are contrasted with directory clauses for the reason that they are imperatively commanded to be done, otherwise that which is done under the statute cannot have the sanction of the statute.

Generally speaking, when the word "may" is used it will be held to be directory and when the word "shall" or "must" is used generally the statute is mandatory. But the context or the subject may leave room for the interpretation of these words according to the evident intent of the Legislature.

§ 11. Other classifications. English statutes, in part entering into our jurisprudence and in part foreign, are distinguished as ancient and modern. In our system we have federal, state, colonial and territorial statutes. A generical classification of all statutes is as public or private. The former are divided into species of general, and local or special statutes. General statutes are further divided by other distinctions. In respect to duration they are temporary or perpetual; in respect to the date of taking effect, as prospective or retroactive; as to the nature of their operation, declaratory, permissive, prohibitive, preceptive, remedial, directory, mandatory or repealing statutes; as to form, affirmative or negative. Another large and important class of public statutes is designated as penal (3).

(3) Sutherland on Stat. § 324.

§ 12. Ancient statutes of England. The statutes termed ancient are those adopted in Latin and French prior to the reign of Edward III., which commenced in 1327 (4). Since that time they are contradistinguished as nova statuta, and since the accession of Richard III., 1483, the statutes have been first printed in English, and entirely so since the time of Henry VII. (5).

Formally the judges formulated the statutes from the petition of the commons and the king's answer (6). All those passed at one session of parliament were strung together, making so many capitula or chapters of one statute, to which was usually prefixed a memorandum of the time and place of the meeting of parliament, and the occasion for calling it (7). On account of the generality or brevity of ancient statutes, a very liberal and latitudinarian construction was practiced and held to be justifiable (8), not admitted of new or modern statutes (9). Hence, there is a wide distinction between the construction of ancient and modern statutes. This consideration should detract from the force of rules of interpretation which originated in reasons peculiar to the administration of ancient statutes, and originating in the forms of legislation then in vogue and now obsolete, or displaced by others radically different. These ancient statutes are, so far as appropriate to our conditions and institutions, a part of our common law.

§ 13. Federal, state, territorial and colonial statutes. Federal statutes have force and are binding throughout the Union and the federal domain, or in such lesser part of it as the act professes to operate in. Treaties are also a part of the law (10).

The states have supreme power within their limits for local government, except as this power is restrained by the federal powers. With this limitation, for the purpose of local government, the states are supreme and independent (11). The law-making powers of state legislatures are plenary, subject only to the restrictions of the federal and state constitutions.

Colonial statutes are those in force in the colonies prior to their becoming states. Those laws which were suited to their new condition, politically and otherwise, continued to form part of the jurisprudence of the succeeding states until altered by later statutes. Territorial statutes are those enacted by territorial legislatures, pursuant to the authority of an act of congress (12).

§ 14. Public and private statutes. Blackstone defines a public act as a universal rule that regards the whole community, of which the courts are bound to take judicial notice; private acts are those which concern only a particular species, thing or person, and of these the courts are not bound to take notice; they must be pleaded (13). Dwarria thus defines these statutes in contradistinction: "Public acts relate to the public at large, and private acts concern the particular interest or benefit of certain individuals or particular classes of men." A public act need not be a universal rule, in the sense that it must purport to apply to the whole territory or the entire people subject to the legislative jurisdiction. It may be applicable to only the smallest political division, or to a small class of the people, and still be a public statute. If it concern the public, and not merely a private interest, it is a public statute, though local or special (14). A public statute affects the public at large, either throughout the entire state or within the limits of a particular locality where the act operates; and a private statute relates to or affects a particular person, by name, or so that certain individuals or classes of persons are interested in a manner peculiar to themselves, and not in common with the entire community (15). The form or declaration of the legislature will not fix the character of a law, but this is to be determined by the effect. Otherwise the legislature could evade constitutional provisions (16). In a public act there may be a private clause (17). So, in a private act, there may be a provision of a public nature

(18); and thus a statute may be public in one part and private in another. A public statute is local when it relates to a particular place or locality, or does not extend to all places which would classify with that to which the act is confined (19). It is special not only when it is local, but also when it is confined in its subject to less than a class of persons or things (20).

Public and private statutes are construed upon different considerations. In a late case Lord Esher, M. R., said: "In the case of a public act, you construe it keeping in view the fact that it must be taken to have been passed for the public advantage, and you apply certain fixed canons to its construction. In the case of a private act which is obtained by persons for their own benefit, you construe more strictly provisions which they allege to be in their favor, because the persons who obtain a private act ought to take care that it is so worded that that which they desire to obtain is plainly stated in it; but when the construction is perfectly clear, there is no difference between the modes of construing a private act and a public act" (21).

§ 15. Declaratory statutes. A declaratory act was originally one declaratory of the common law; such statutes were made, says Dwarris, "when an old custom of the kingdom is almost fallen into disuse, or become disputable, in which case the parliament thinks proper,' in perpetuum rei testimonium,' and for avoiding all doubts and difficulties, to declare what the common law is and ever hath been'' (22). Such statutes are to be construed, if possible, according to the common law (23). They are expressed affirmatively or in negative terms. A statute made in the affirmative, without any negative expressed or implied, does not take away the common law (24). In other words, the common law continues to be construed as it was before the recognition by parliament. A declaratory statute should not retroact upon past controversies, or reverse decisions which the courts in the exercise of their undoubted authority have made. This would be the exercise of judicial power, which, if tolerated, might constitute the legislature a court of review in all cases where disappointed partisans could obtain a hearing after being dissatisfied with the rulings of the court (25).

A declaratory statute is sometimes intended to declare the meaning of an existing statute. Such statutes are akin to interpretation clauses,—they are futile and inoperative in legislation when designed to affect rights retrospectively; but will operate prospectively (26). A declaration in an act of the legislature as to what they intended in a preceding act does not make the law retrospectively what is so declared to be intended, if the previous act will not bear that interpretation; though such declared intention will be effective in the future (27). Such statutes will be construed, if possible, as intended only to lay down the rule for future cases (28).

§ 16. Affirmative and negative statutes. An affirmative statute is one which is enacted in affirmative terms. A negative statute is one expressed in negative terms. These statutes have very different effects; the former is generally cumulative, the other displaces existing rules. An affirmative statute does not take away the common law in relation to the same matter (29). An affirmative provision without any negative expressed or implied makes no alteration in any common-law rule in regard to the same subject-matter. A statute authorizing a tenant in fee to lease for twenty-one years did not affect his common-law right to lease for a longer period (30). An act authorizing a particular court to try a certain offense does not conflict with an earlier act giving power to another to try the same offense (31). Where an affirmative statute provides a new remedy for an existing right not inconsistent with the common-law remedy, the latter is not abolished; the new remedy is cumulative, and the party possessing the right may pursue either at his election (32). The same rule applies as between successive statutory remedies or successive statutes creating rights, and against implied repeal (33). An affirmative statute giving a new right does not necessarily destroy a previously existing right, created by another statute to which it does not refer, but will do so if it appears to have been the intention of the legislature that the two rights should not exist together (34). Although a statute provides that a certain thing shall prove a certain fact, this does not render other proof incompetent unless it is explicitly so provided (35). The absence from the code of a principle which has been part of the jurisprudence does not impair its authority (36).

A negative statute is one expressed in negative terms. And here the rule prevails that if a subsequent statute, contrary to a former, has negative words, it shall be a repeal of the former; and a negative statute, it is said too, so binds the common law that a man cannot afterwards have recourse to the latter (37). Of this form and nature is the provision generally found in the statute of limitations that: "No acknowledgment or promise is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract, by which to take the case out of the operation of this statute, unless the same is contained in some writing signed by the party to be charged thereby." Negative words make a statute imperative (38).

§ 17. Same: Implied negative. An affirmative statute may imply a negative (39). If a new power be given by an affirmative statute to a certain person by a particular designation, although it be an affirmative statute, still all other persons are in general excluded from the exercise of the power, since "expressio unius est exclusio alterius" (40). If a thing is limited to be done in a particular form or manner it excludes every other mode, and affirmative expressions introducing a new rule imply a negative (41). Affirmative words which are imperative, and therefore mandatory, imply a negative of anything contrary or alternative to the direction so given (42). Where an act requires that a juror shall have 20 pounds a year, and a later act that he shall have 20 marks, the latter implies an abrogation of the former, otherwise it would have no effect (43). There is an implied negative in statutes which are intended to prescribe the only rule to be observed; they repeal all acts which provide a different rule (44).

Where a statute creates a right, and also provides the remedy, the latter is exclusive; it implies a negation of any other (45). So where the same statute creates an offense and prescribes the penalty and mode of procedure only what the statute provides is allowable (46).

The rule of the preceding paragraph is so strong that it may operate as a constitutional limitation on the legislature as illustrated by the following quotation: "There is not, it is true, anything in the Constitution which directly prohibits the Legislature from exacting another oath, in any other form, than that prescribed, to be taken by all officers, in the 4th Article—but Lord Coke says, (1 Inst. 381) that the most natural and genuine way of construing a statute, is to construe one part by another, of the same statute; for this best expresseth the meaning of the makers, and such construction is “ex visceribus actus.” This rule is alike applicable to all writings, constitutions and compacts—and it is well remarked, by Judge Nott, in Cohen v. Hoff (2 Tread Rep. 671), that sometimes affirmative words necessarily imply a negative of what is not affirmed, as strongly as if expressed. That remark was applied to the question, whether an Act of the Legislature, authorizing the Governor, in case of the sickness of the Judge on circuit, so as to be unable to hold the Courts, to appoint a person to perform his duty, was or was not constitutional—and to see its full force, it will be necessary to remark, that the 6th Art. of the Constitution declares that the Judges of the Superior Courts shall be elected by both branches of the Legislature—and although negative terms are not introduced to restrain the appointment of Judges, in a different manner, that learned and able Judge came to the conclusion that the Constitution must be so understood. If one having authority prescribes the mode in which a particular act is to be done, can the agent who executed it substitute any other? Does not the act of prescribing the mode, necessarily imply a prohibition to all other modes?” (46).

§ 18. Preceptive, prohibitive and permissive statutes. When a statute commands certain actions, and regulates the forms and acts which ought to accompany them, it is called a preceptive statute (47). A prohibitive statute is one that forbids all actions which disturb the public repose, and injury to the right of others, or crimes and misdemeanors, or forbids certain acts in relation to the transmission of estates or the capacity of persons or other objects (48). A permissive statute is one which allows certain actions or things to be done without commanding them; as, for example, when it allows persons of a certain description, or, indeed, any person, to make a will (49), to pre-empt lands, to vote, or to form corporations. Of this nature is a statute which permits a candidate at an election at the polling place or canvass, or that a clergyman accused of an ecclesiastical offense may attend the proceedings of the commission appointed to inquire into the accusation (50). Such statutes confer a privilege or license which the donee may exercise or not at pleasure, having only his own convenience or interest to consult (51).

§ 19. Prospective and retrospective statutes. A prospective statute is one which regulates the future. It operates upon acts done and transactions occurring after it takes effect (52).

A retrospective statute, on the other hand, operates upon a subject already existing or an act done. Certain statutes of this nature are unjust, and, says Chancellor Kent, "are very generally considered as founded on unconstitutional principles, and consequently inoperative and void" (53). Of this obnoxious character are those affecting and changing vested rights (54); one which takes away or impairs any vested right under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, or imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability in respect to transactions or considerations already past (55).

“Ex post facto” laws, and those impairing the obligation of contracts, are expressly forbidden by the federal and by state constitutions. The constitutions of some states expressly prohibit retrospective laws generally (56). To avoid injustice and unconstitutionality, it is always laid down as a rule of construction that a statute is to be taken or construed as prospective, unless its language is inconsistent with that interpretation (57).

All retrospective statutes, however, are not unjust or unconstitutional. A large class of remedial and curative statutes have been enacted with beneficent effect. They are liberally construed to carry out the intention of the legislature, in view of the intrinsic merit of the particular case and on a broad, fostering consideration of the general interest (58). Statutes relating to remedies and forms of procedure generally apply to rights already accrued, to cases ripe for action, and actions pending (59); but subject to the principle that the right is not thereby destroyed or seriously impaired (60). The legislature is not restrained from all legislation which may prejudicially affect private interests not protected by the constitution (61).

§ 20. Remedial statutes. Remedial statutes are such as the name implies, embracing a great variety in detail; those enacted to afford a remedy, or to improve and facilitate remedies existing for the enforcement of rights and the redress of injuries; and also those intended for the correction of defects, mistakes and omissions in the civil institutions and administrative policy of the state. It is a rule that remedial statutes are to be liberally construed to suppress the evil and advance the remedy (62). But other rules also apply, even to particular provisions of such statutes which come within the general notion of remedial laws, and qualify and abridge the application of the rule of liberal construction, as will be seen hereafter. As, for example, statutes in derogation of the common law (63); or for taking private property for public use (64); statutes granting power (65), or authorizing summary proceedings for obtaining judgment, as by motion (66), writs of attachment (67), and those providing for any novel proceeding or remedy (68).

§ 21. Penal statutes. Penal statutes are often treated as contradistinguished from remedial statutes. They are not, however, in full and direct contrast. Penal statutes are those by which punishments are imposed for transgressions of the law. They are construed strictly and more or less so according to the severity of the penalty (69). When a law imposes a punishment which acts upon the offender alone, and not as a reparation to the party injured, and where it is entirely within the discretion of the law-giver, it will not be presumed that he intended it should extend further than is expressed; and humanity would require that it should be so limited in the construction (70). The general purpose or aim of a statute may be remedial; as where they provide punitive compensation to the injured party (71). But the provisions that enforce the wrong for which a penalty is provided, and those which define the punishment, are penal in their character and are construed accordingly (72). A statute may be remedial in one part and penal in another (73). And the same statute may be remedial for certain purposes, and liberally construed therefor, and at the same time be of such a nature, and operate with such harshness upon a class of offenders subject to it, that they are entitled to invoke the rule of strict construction (74). All of the provisions of criminal statutes are not construed strictly; they are construed strictly against the accused, and favorably and equitably for him (75), but reasonably with a view to effectuate the purpose of the act (76).

§ 22. Repealing statutes. Repealing statutes are revocations of former statutory enactments (76). A repeal may be in express words or by implication; as where a subsequent conflicting statute is enacted (77). To constitute a repeal by implication there must be a clear repugnancy or an absurdity in giving effect to both the new

SECTION 2. PARTS OF A STATUTE AND THEIR RELATIONS.

§ 22a. The title. The English courts held the title to be no part of the act; it is said to be no more so than the title of a book is part of the book (77a). In strictness, Lord Coke said, it ought not to be taken into consideration at all (78a). It was generally framed by the clerk of the branch of parliament where the act originated, and was intended only as a convenient means of reference (79a). The same declaration, that the title is no part of the act, has been frequently made by judges in this country (80). But in modern practice the title is adopted by the legisla-

In Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 635, the court says: "In olden times legislative titles were unknown; bills were drawn in the form of petitions, which were entered upon the parliament rolls. At the end of each parliament the judges put them in the form of a statute, and in that form they were entered on the statute rolls. It was not until the reign of Henry VI. that bills in the form of acts according to modern customs were first introduced. When titles were first introduced there was a general one for all the acts passed in the session, but in the first year of Henry VIII. distinct titles were introduced for each chapter. Until a comparatively recent date the title of an act in this country was regarded as no part of it; but if the language of the act was ambiguous the title might be considered in determining the intent of the legislators."

ture, more thoroughly read than the act itself, and in many states is the subject of constitutional regulation. It is not an enacting part, but is in some sort a part of the act, though only a formal part (81), and this is held to be true even in states which have no constitutional provision on the subject (82). By the common law it could not control the plain words of a statute; it was resorted to only in cases of doubt for such aid as it could afford in removing ambiguities (83). An act may have effect as to persons and subjects broader than the title where the words are plain, and where there is no constitutional barrier (84). But if the meaning is doubtful, the title, if expressive, may have the effect to resolve the doubts by extension of the purview (85), or by restraining it (86), or to correct an obvious error (87); for in ascertaining the intention nothing is to be rejected from which aid can be derived;

therefore, the title of an act may claim a degree of notice, and is entitled to its share of consideration (88). But the title cannot enlarge or confer powers, control the plain words of the act, or extend the purview to objects mentioned in the title but not in the act (89). Where the text of the statute is plain and unambiguous, the title cannot have the effect to modify it (90).

The constitutional provision that no law shall embrace more than one subject, and requiring that to be expressed in the title, has given the title of legislative acts more importance (91). It is not, however, required or intended that the title shall contain a full index to all the contents of the law; it is permitted to be general in its terms, and therefore it will seldom occur that it will afford a clue to the intention when the text of the statute is uncertain. But the title of an act is now so associated with it in the process of legislation that when, in performing its constitutional functions, it affords means of determining the legislative intent, in cases of doubt its help cannot be rejected for being extrinsic and extra-legislative (92). language of an act should be construed in view of its title and its lawful purposes; broad language should be confined to lawful objects (93). The subject or object expressed in the title fixes a limit to the scope of the act, and provisions not germane but foreign to such subject will be excluded as unconstitutional and void (94). The Supreme Court of Kentucky, in speaking of the title of an act, says: "It is essentially a part of the act, not only because it has been selected and adopted by the Legislature as one of the tests of their meaning as expressed in the bill, but because the constitution has made it a part, and the controlling part, of the law to which it applies. It is therefore not only useful in affording a fair index of the legislative intent, in case of ambiguity in the context, but it must be read in connection with the remainder of the act, as a part of it, in determining what is the law" (95).

§ 23. The preamble. The preamble in a statute is a prefatory statement or explanation. It purports usually to state the reason or occasion for making the law to which it is prefixed. It accompanies the bill through the process of enactment, and thus emanates from the law-maker. It is not part of the law, in the legislative sense, and hence can never enlarge the scope of a statute; it cannot of itself confer any power. Its true office is to expound powers conferred, not substantially to create them (96). But it is a guide of some importance to the intention of the legislature. It is "a good means," says Lord Coke, "to find out the meaning of the statute, and is a true key to open the understanding thereof" (97). The supreme court of Alabama says: "The preamble to an act neither confers nor restricts powers, rights, privileges or duties, and, strictly speaking, is no part of the act itself. . . . If the legislative intent is clearly expressed in the preamble, and the body of the act is so constructed as to render its meaning and intent uncertain; and if the act admits of two constructions, one in accord with the intent clearly expressed in the preamble, and the other in conflict with it, courts should adopt that construction which harmonizes with the preamble" (97a).

The established doctrine seems to be that if, on reading the enacting part, there is no ambiguity or doubt as to its scope or meaning, there can be no recourse to either the title or preamble in search of a different meaning. "This is the case where the words are plain without any scruple, and absolute without any saving" (98). And then the preamble cannot restrain or extend the import of the enacting clause (99).

§ 24. The purview or enacting clauses. The enacting part of a law is comprehensively termed its purview. It has been defined to be that part of an act of the legislature which begins with the words "Be it enacted," etc. (100). It is not unfrequently used, however, to indicate the providing part only, and, therefore, excluding exceptions, provisos and saving clauses; it is used to refer to such providing part in distinction from such restrictive clauses (101). It is to be presumed that all the subsidiary provisions of an act harmonize with each other, and with the purpose of the law; if the act is intended to embrace several objects, that they do not conflict. Therefore it is an elementary rule of construction that all the parts of an act relating to the same subject should be considered together, and not each by itself (102).

Exceptions, provisos, interpretation, repealing and saving clauses are often introduced to restrict or qualify the effect of general language, remove possible obscurities that might otherwise exist, and render the law more precise. One provision may be qualified by another, though it does not profess to have that effect. Words expressive of a particular intent incompatible with other words expressive of a general intent will be construed to make an exception, so that all parts of the act may have effect (103).

§ 25. Effect of direct conflict between two parts of an act. Where one part of an act is in conflict with another, and they cannot be brought into harmony by any rule of construction; where they are of equal scope, and there is a point-blank repugnancy, so that if one operates at all it will necessarily antagonize any effect of the other, both are void, by one neutralizing the other, on the ground that the legislature have enacted a contradiction; or one, for being earlier or later in position, must be deemed to render the other nugatory, or repeal it. The decisions are to the effect that the provision which is latest in position repeals the other (104).

A saving clause totally repugnant to the purview is rejected, while a proviso directly repugnant to the main body of the act repeals the purview, as it is said to speak the last intention of the makers (105).

§ 26. Provisos, exceptions and saving clauses. It has not been an unfrequent mode of legislation to frame an act with general language in the enacting clause, and to restrict its operation by a proviso. It is often found difficult to limit the language in the enacting clause so as to admit every exception or limitation designed to be introduced into the section in its finished state (106). Provisos and exceptions are similar; intended to restrain the enacting clause; to except something which would otherwise be within it, or in some manner to modify it (107). A proviso is something engrafted upon a preceding enactment, and is legitimately used for the purpose of taking special cases out of a general class, or to guard against misinterpretation (108). The general intent will be controlled by the particular intent subsequently expressed (109). A proviso is so identified with the text of a statute which it qualifies that if such enacting part is repealed by a subsequent statute repugnant to it, the proviso will fall also (110). The effect of an exception which is a part of the enacting clause and is of general application is simply to restrict it as to the matter excepted. It operates for this purpose co-extensively with the matter which precedes. Hence in actions based on the statute the pleadings must negative the exception (111). An exception is strictly construed (112). An exception is not universally so extensive as the provision which it qualifies, as to subject-matter, for its purpose may be, and usually is, to reduce the subject-matter by withdrawing a part from the operation of the general words, or to give them a qualified operation merely as to the matter of the exception (113).

A saving clause is, like a proviso, an exemption of a special thing out of the general things mentioned in the statute (114). Its name implies such exemption to preserve from loss or destruction, and such is its use. It is generally employed to restrict repealing acts; to continue repealed acts in force as to existing powers, inchoate rights, penalties incurred, and pending proceedings, depending on the repealed statute. An absolute repeal puts an end to such rights, powers and proceedings, and discharges such penalties. To preserve them to any extent or for any purpose requires a special provision in the repealing act or existing statute having a saving effect. When such saving is included in the repealing statute it usually follows the repealing clause. The same reasons which exist for a strict construction of a proviso apply to a saving clause where there is an express repeal, and the saving clause is intended to restrict it. The special intent in the saving clause prevails over the general intent in the repeal (115).

§ 27. Interpretation clauses: Legislative construction.

The legislature cannot authoritatively declare what the law is or has been; that is a judicial function and appertains to the courts (116). The legislature has exclusively the power to make laws, and thus declare what the law shall be (117). A legislative construction of a statute is entitled to consideration, and will often have much weight (118). The legislature in passing an act may declare its meaning and construction, and such declaration will be § 28. General interpretation statutes. Statutory provisions are made in various forms to have effect specially in the interpretation of the law. They are distinguishable, and all are not construed and applied in the same manner. There is a manifest difference between definitive or interpretation clauses which are special, and those which are general; the former always having the most controlling effect where it is obvious that the legislature, without misconception of the effect of other legislation, have precisely in view the particular words or provisions to which the clause in question ostensibly applies.

CHAPTER II.

GENERAL RULES OF CONSTRUCTION.

§ 29. Interpretation and construction distinguished. There is a difference between interpretation and construction, and this difference consists in the fact that interpretation is confined to the words of the statute, observing of course the etymology and derivation of the words, as they have been used throughout all time, as well as in the vernacular. Construction takes a broader view. It regards all of the surrounding facts and conditions of society, and in this manner seeks the intent of the legislature. While this distinction between interpretation and construction is noticed in the books, and is frequently referred to by the courts, neither is applied to the exclusion of the other, but both are used to ascertain the intention of the legislature.

At the very outset in the examination of the statute it is assumed by the court that it was passed by the legislative body in the interest and to the advantage of the public, and therefore means what it says and says what it means. In the event of the statute containing any ambiguity the court applies certain well defined and fixed canons of interpretation and construction in seeking to ascertain the legislative intent and meaning (1).

(1) Gibbon v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 188.

Dr. Lieber says: "According to the character of the text before us we are obliged to take words either in their common adaptation in daily life, or in the peculiar signification which they have in certain arts, sciences, sects, provinces, etc.; in short we have to take words according to what is termed "usus loquendi." Horse, in common language, means a common animal; in a marine insurance case it might mean this animal, or a certain part of the vessel" (2). We are to take the words in that meaning which we may faithfully believe their utterer attached to them" (3). "It is important to ascertain whether words were used in a definite, absolute and circumscribed meaning, or in a generic, relative or expansive character" (4).

"The words of a statute are to be taken in their ordinary and familiar signification and import, and regard is to be had to their general and proper use" (5). "The peculiar sense in which a word is used in any section is to be determined by the context. . . . If the words of a statute are plain, they must be strictly followed" (6). "It is a rule of construction, founded in reason and supported by many authorities, that words in a will or statute are to be construed according to their strict and proper acceptation, unless there be something to show that such a construction is not intended" (7). "Words are to be taken according to their customary, not in their original or classical, signification”(8). “The most enlightened and experienced judges have for some time lamented the too frequent departure from the plain and obvious meaning of the words of the act of parliament by which a case is governed, and themselves hold it much the safer course to adhere to the words of the statute construed in their ordinary import, than to enter into any inquiry as to the supposed intention of the parties who framed the act” (9). “When technical words occur in a statute they are to be taken in a technical sense” (10). “Words or phrases shall be taken in their plain or ordinary or usual sense, but technical words and phrases having a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law shall be understood according to their technical import”(11).

The cardinal rule is to seek the intention of the Legislature and it is a very old rule, and the only one which justifies a construction seemingly different from the literal interpretation of the words that “a thing within the intention is within the statute, though not within the letter, and a thing within the letter is not within the statute, unless within the intention” (12).

Even the quaint expression of the old cases is repeated in our modern decisions: “Our law consists of two parts, viz.: of body and soul; the letter of the law is the body of the law, and the sense and reason of the law are the soul of the law . . . It often happens that when you know the letter you know not the sense" (13).

§ 30. Interpretation and construction compared. Dr. Lieber defines interpretation as "the art of finding out the true sense of any form of words; that is, the sense which their author intended to convey, and of enabling others to derive from them the same idea which the author intended to convey" (14). He uses this word in a sense distinct from construction (15). These words, however, are very generally used interchangeably and as practically synonymous. The literal interpretation of a statute is finding out its true sense according to Dr. Lieber's definition—by making the statute its own expositor. If the true sense can thus be discovered, there is no resort to construction (16). The certainty of the law is next in importance to its justice. And if the legislature has expressed its intention in the law itself, with certainty, it is not admissible to depart from that intention on any extraneous consideration or theory of construction (17).

(15) He says: "Construction is the drawing of conclusions respecting subjects that lie beyond the direct expression of the text, from elements known from and given in the text. Conclusions which are in the spirit though not in the letter of the text." Hermeneutics, 44. And again he says: "In the most general adaptation of the term, construction signifies the representing of an entire whole from given elements by just conclusions. Thus, it is said, a few actions may sometimes suffice to construe the whole character of a man." Id., 49.

§ 31. Intent first to be sought in language of statute itself. "It is beyond question the duty of courts in construing statutes to give effect to the intent of the law-making power, and seek for that intent in every legitimate way. But . . . first of all in the words and language employed; and if the words are free from ambiguity and doubt, and express plainly, clearly and distinctly the sense of the framers of the instrument, there is no occasion to resort to other means of interpretation. It is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation" (18).

The Legislature must be understood to mean what it has plainly expressed, and this excludes construction (19). The legislative intent being plainly expressed, so that the act read by itself, or in connection with other statutes pertaining to the same subject, is clear, certain and unambiguous, the courts have only the simple and obvious duty to enforce the law according to its terms (20). Cases cannot be included or excluded merely because there is intrinsically no reason against it (21). Even when a court is convinced that the legislature really meant and intended something not expressed by the phraseology of the act, it will not deem itself authorized to depart from the plain

(18) Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650. "A primary rule of construction is that the legislature must be assumed to have meant precisely what the words of the law, as commonly understood, import; and this may be said to be the fundamental and controlling rule of construction." Lemonius v. Mayer, 71 Miss. 514, 521.

meaning of language which is free from ambiguity (22). If a legislative enactment violates no constitutional provision or principle, it must be deemed its own sufficient and conclusive evidence of the justice, propriety and policy of its passage (23). Whether the law be expressed in general or limited terms, the legislature should be held to mean what they have plainly expressed, and consequently no room is left for construction; but if, from a view of the whole law, or from other laws "in pari materia," the evident intention is different from the literal import of the terms employed to express it in a particular part of the law, that intention should prevail, for that, in fact, is the will of the Legislature (24).

An interpretation of a statute which leads to consequences mischievous and absurd is inadmissible if the statute is susceptible of another interpretation by which such consequences can be avoided (25). But when the words of a provision are plainly expressive of an intent not rendered dubious by the context, no interpretation can be permitted to thwart that intent; the interpretation must declare it, and it must be carried into effect as the sense of the law (26).

In the case of Sturges v. Crowninshield (27) the court say: "Although the spirit of the instrument, especially of the constitution, is to be respected not less than its letter, yet the spirit is to be collected chiefly from its words. It would be dangerous in the extreme to infer from extrinsic circumstances that a case for which the words of the instrument expressly provided shall be exempt from its operation. Where words conflict with each other, where the different clauses of the instrument bear upon each other, and would be inconsistent unless the natural and common import of the words be varied, construction becomes necessary; and to depart from the obvious meaning of words is justifiable. Yet, in no case, the plain meaning of a provision, not contradicted by any other provision in the same instrument, is to be disregarded because we believe the framers of that instrument could not intend what they say. It must be one in which the absurdity and injustice of applying the provision to the case would be so monstrous that all mankind would, without hesitation, unite in rejecting the application."

§ 32. Subjects for consideration in showing legislative intent. The intent of the Legislature being the cardinal inquiry, the following elements have been recognized as the proper subjects for consideration in ascertaining the legislative intent:

(27) 4 Wheat. 202.

(a) The condition of the old law.

(b) The subject matter of the law, and its condition in fact—that is, the state of an art, trade, commerce, or husbandry.

(c) The mischiefs, inconveniences, or hardships of the condition of things existing when the Legislature acted.

(d) The remedy to be provided by the law enacted.

(e) The effect and consequences of diverse constructions of the statute which seem to be possible.

(f) The spirit and object of the law—that is to say, the policy of the law.

All these elements are components of what is one whole (28).

It is frequently said that statutes in derogation of the common law are to be construed strictly, but this rule while perfectly feasible and logical at the time of its origin cannot be said to have much operation at the present time if by the common law is meant the common law of England (29). If, however, this rule is confined to the common law of the State or the Nation recognized as existing at the time of the enactment, and having reference also to the rights of persons affected by the legislation, and as therefore restricting what was before the common right, it is a reasonable and proper rule.

A statute should be construed so as to give effect to all of its parts, and to every word of all of its parts (30). It is not proper to confine the attention to the one section to be construed (31). "It is always an unsafe way of construing a statute or contract to divide it by a process of etymological dissection, into separate words, and then apply to each, thus separated from its context, some particular definition given by lexicographers, and then reconstruct the instrument upon the basis of these definitions. An instrument must always be construed as a whole, and the particular meaning to be attached to any word or phrase is usually to be ascertained from the context, the nature of the subject treated of and the purpose or intention of the parties who executed the contract, or of the body which enacted or framed the statute or constitution" (32).

The general intent should be kept in view in determining the scope and meaning of any part (33).

In seeking the sense of the words several rules have been recognized, namely, (a) words are to be used in their most natural sense, having relation to the subject matter. (b) Where the sense is doubtful the court should lean to that sense which is most agreeable to justice and the spirit and reason of the law (34).

(31) Ellis County v. Thompson, 95 Tex. 22. In Grimes v. Legion of Honor, 97 Iowa, 315, it is said that when words are plain and unambiguous they should be given effect and that recourse should not be had to other parts of the statute.

§ 33. Intention of whole act controls interpretation of parts. Words and clauses in different parts of a statute must be read in a sense which harmonizes with the subject-matter and general purpose of the statute. This rule is well stated by Chancellor Kent in his Commentaries as follows: "In the exposition of a statute the intention of the law-maker will prevail over the literal sense of the terms; and its reason and intention will prevail over the strict letter. When the words are not explicit the intention is to be collected from the context; from the occasion and necessity of the law; from the mischief felt, and the remedy in view; and the intention is to be taken or presumed according to what is consonant with reason and good discretion" (35). If upon examination the general meaning and object of the statute be found inconsistent with the literal import of any particular clause or section, such clause or section must, if possible, be construed according to that purpose. But to warrant the change of the sense, according to the natural reading, to accommodate it to the broader or narrower import of the act, the intention of the legislature must be clear and manifest (36).

Literal interpretation is seldom adequate. "The subtle signification of words," says the Supreme Court, "and the niceties of verbal distinction furnish no safe guide for construing the Act of Congress" (37). An act which authorized the purchase, or if necessary the appropriation, of land for cemetery purposes, provided that no land should be so appropriated within two hundred yards of any dwelling-house. It was held that the intent was to prevent the evil effects of a cemetery within the specified distance of a dwelling, and that the words so appropriated should be read in the sense of devoted to the purpose in question and so as to limit the acquisition of property by contract or condemnation (38). An act provided that life insurance effected by the husband on his own life should inure to the benefit of the widow and next of kin to be distributed as personal property, free from the claims of the husband's creditors. The act was held to apply to insurance effected by the husband before his marriage (39).

The mere literal construction of a section in a statute ought not to prevail if it is opposed to the intention of the Legislature apparent by the statute; and if the words are sufficiently flexible to admit of some other construction it is to be adopted to effectuate that intention (40). The intent prevails over the letter, and the letter will, if possible, be so read as to conform to the spirit of the act. "While the intention of the legislature must be ascertained from the words used to express it, the manifest reason and the obvious purpose of the law should not be sacrificed to a literal interpretation of such words'' (41). Words or clauses may be enlarged or restricted to effectuate the intention or to harmonize them with other expressed provisions (42).

§ 35. Words disregarded, eliminated, or substituted (44). Where a word or phrase in a statute would make the clause in which it occurs unintelligible, the word may be eliminated and the clause read without it (45). It would be mischievous to attempt to wrest such words from their proper and legal meaning merely because they are superfluous (46). A statute of Illinois provided that any woman of the age of twenty-one years or upwards, belonging to either of the classes mentioned in article seven of the Constitution of the State, might vote for school officers. The three classes thus incorporated into the act were, (1)

those who were electors in the state on April 1, 1848, (2) those naturalized prior to January 1, 1870, and (3) male citizens of the United States, above the age of twenty-one years. Literally the act gave women the right to vote provided they were male citizens. It was held that the word "male" should be rejected in construing the statute (47).

§ 36. History of act. In interpretation and construction the history of an act should be considered, and generally throws much light on the meaning of the words.

§ 37. The "ejusdem generis" rule. General words following particular words are confined to the genus of the particular words used (48), or, in other words, general words will be limited to the same genus or class as the specific words which precede them.

In Broom's Legal Maxims (side page 65) the rule is laid down as follows: "Where a particular class (of persons or things) is spoken of, and general words follow, the class first mentioned is to be taken as the most comprehensive, and the general words treated as referring to matters 'ejusdem generis' with such class; the effect of general words when they follow particular words being thus restricted."

Sedgwick, in his work on Construction of Statutes (page 361), says: "Where general words follow particular words, the rule is to construe the former as applicable to things or persons particularly mentioned.”

The decisions of the courts fully sustain the text-writers, that this is the true rule of construction in such cases, subject to certain limitations not necessary to be mentioned here (49).

“When several statutes relate to the same thing and are made in ‘pari materia’ (50), they are all to be taken together in the construction of any one of them and considered as one statute.”

If parts of a statute are so mutually connected with and dependent on each other, as conditions, considerations or compensation for each other as to warrant a belief that the Legislature intended them as a whole, and that if all could not be carried into effect, the Legislature would not pass the residue independently, and some parts are unconstitutional, all the provisions which are thus dependent, conditional or connected, must fall with them (51).

§ 38. Equitable construction. “An equitable construction of statutes is sometimes necessary; so that acts within the letter shall not be considered within the meaning, and acts not within the letter shall be considered within the meaning. If a law be made, that whoever does a certain act shall suffer death, it will not comprehend a mad-man” (52).

§ 39. Effect of a proviso. In the case of Am. Ex. Co. v. U. S. (53), Mr. Justice Day, in his opinion says: "There is no doubt that a proviso has not infrequently been the means of introducing into a law independent legislation, notwithstanding it is the true office of a proviso to restrict the sense or make clear that which has gone before and which might be doubtful because of the generality of the language used (54). This court has had occasion to hold more than once that language used in provisos shows the legislative intention to bring in new matter rather than to limit or explain that which has gone before (55).

"While, therefore, a proviso may sometimes be construed as extending rather than limiting legislation, each statute must depend upon its own terms, and a proviso will be given such construction as is consistent with the legislation under construction" (56).

§ 40. Effect of repealing and amending statutes. The expiration of a repealing statute does not necessarily revive the original act unless such intention clearly appears, but the expiration of a repealing statute by its own termination revives a statute supplied or suspended by it (57). The repeal of an act creating a new cause of action destroys the right of action unless it is expressly reserved (58). The general rule is that independently of express words on the subject of revival, repealing a statute which repealed a former act revives the first statute (59). Where a statute professes to repeal absolutely a prior law and substitutes other provisions on the same subject limited to continue only a certain time, the prior law does not revive after the repealing statute is spent unless that intention is expressed (60).

“Where an existing general statute is amended so as to leave it in full force and effect so far as it goes, and the only amendment consists in the addition of new matter, a limitation in the amendatory statute providing that such statute shall not affect pending suits or proceedings qualifies only the addition which is made to the pre-existing general law by the amendatory statute and does not qualify or limit the pre-existing general law itself. In the case of a statute amended ‘so as to read as follows’ the portions of the amended sections, which are merely copied without change, are not to be considered as repealed and again enacted, but to have been the law all along (61).

“Where an amendment preserves a portion of a section unaltered, but adds new matter to the section, it is equivalent to an independent statute embodying the new matter” (62).

§ 41. Punctuation. When statutes were enacted without punctuation, it was a necessary conclusion that the punctuation subsequently inserted was no part of the law. That was often declared (63), and has been declared since the practice has changed and punctuated bills are enacted (64). So, when bills are not printed and furnished in their perfected form to members of the legislative body, and they are heard read, so that the ear and not the eye takes cognizance of them (65), the punctuation, whether inserted or not, does not receive the attention of individual legislators. It may be assumed that the principal points are observed in the reading. The questions in court relating to punctuation or affecting construction have generally arisen on the presence, omission or misplacing of commas.

In Ewing v. Burnet (66), the court say: "Punctuation is a most fallible standard by which to interpret a writing. It may be resorted to when all other means fail; but the court will first take the instrument by the four corners in order to ascertain its true meaning. If that is apparent on judicially inspecting it, the punctuation will not be suffered to change it" (67).

§ 42. When statute takes effect. Statutes take effect from the first day of the session of the Legislature in which they are passed, unless a particular time for the commencement is appointed in the statute, and then it takes effect from that time; but the injustice of giving statutes a retrospective operation has induced the Parliament of Great Britain to pass an act that the Clerk of Parliament shall endorse on the act the time it receives the royal assent, which shall be the time of its commencement. But no law should be in force till it has been published so that the people have an opportunity of knowing the provisions of it; and in some states there is a provision that all public statutes shall take effect from the rising of the general assembly by which they are passed, unless otherwise directed by such statutes.
