The successful business man should know that a profit will result from the transactions in connection with his business before they are completed. To determine this he should have such information as will show the detailed operating cost, the profit from trading or other operations, the net profit for each fiscal period, its source, and the increase or decrease over previous periods.

A report concerning the failure or suspension of a business, accompanied by the statement that the creditors will not know what percentage of their claim may be collected until the experts have audited the books, indicates that the management did not have all the facts available in connection with the business. Such a statement is so common in the newspaper announcement of failures that it suggests a connection between accounting and success.

If these conditions are to be improved, it is necessary to teach the correct principles of accounting and the best practice in applying them. The bookkeeping student of today is the bookkeeper or business man of tomorrow. If he has a knowledge of the correct principles, as bookkeeper he will apply them, or, as manager, he will see that they are applied by the bookkeeper.

The purpose of this text is to present the correct principles of bookkeeping and accounting,—principles advocated and practiced by modern bookkeepers and accountants. The information upon which it is based was obtained from standard authorities on accounting and from consultations with practicing bookkeepers and accountants.

The text is prepared primarily for the student and not for the practicing bookkeeper or accountant. The presentation permits the beginner to master first the simple principles of accounting as applied in a small business. When he understands these, he can then appreciate the more complicated principles of accounting necessary in recording the transactions for a business of extensive operations.

A study of the text would result in only a theoretical knowledge of the subject. Practice is necessary in applying the principles. A correct knowledge of the principles is essential, but efficiency in applying this knowledge is of equal importance. The student who has mastered the principles of bookkeeping and accounting should have also acquired accuracy, neatness and speed. For this reason the practice sets require the recording of a number of transactions,—a sufficient number to impress on the student's mind the importance of a correct record and to give him confidence and skill in applying his knowledge of the subject.

That the student may learn to recognize a transaction from the paper that represents it in business, he is required to make his record in the practice sets from reproduced business papers. The transactions, moreover, are practical, and identical with those that occur in business. Applying the correct principles and recording practical transactions represented in the same manner as they are in business, gives the student a knowledge of the subject which will make his services desirable to the business man, and valuable to himself.

Not only should the student who has completed a course in bookkeeping and accounting understand the principles of the subject and the best practice in applying these principles, but he should also have some knowledge of the efficient methods employed in modern business. This knowledge, given in connection with the sets, includes special ruling in all books of original entry, carbon copy and loose leaf records, controlling accounts, and many other time-saving methods made popular by practicing bookkeepers.

Efficiency in office routine means the greatest amount of work with the best results at the least cost. As applied to the work of the bookkeeper, it means the ability to record the greatest number of transactions with correct results in the least possible time. Throughout the text and sets, special attention is given to modern methods in recording transactions.

The student who has mastered the principles in this text and completed the sets that accompany it, need not hesitate to accept a position as bookkeeper in any office. He can rest assured that the training received will have prepared him to make a correct record in an efficient manner. If the work of his predecessor has not been correctly done, he is prepared to improve the method in use. He can act with the assurance that the work he does will be approved by the accountant who audits his books.

The student of bookkeeping will soon be receiving an income, hence should know the connection between the knowledge gained through the bookkeeping course and the income tax statement required by the Government. To provide this information, practice is given in the preparation of income tax statements. Information in regard to the forms is given in an appendix because these forms will be changed from time to time by legislation. The student who understands the principles of accounting as explained in this text, and the bookkeeping practice illustrated in the practice sets, will find the preparation of an income tax statement a very simple problem.

Chapter I

BUSINESS AND BOOKKEEPING

The Purpose of this Chapter is to introduce the student to the subject of bookkeeping by showing him its purpose through an explanation of business. There are many reasons why the student should understand bookkeeping. The business man will pay well for information which he needs; hence the one who can provide this information through a knowledge of bookkeeping will command a good salary for his services. The student who is ambitious to become a business man should know bookkeeping because this knowledge will enable him to interpret the information obtained from his bookkeeping records and to use it as a basis for future operations of the business.

§ 1. Each Individual requires food, clothing, education, amusement, and many other things necessary for his comfort and enjoyment. These necessities and luxuries can be obtained with money, which is a medium of exchange and the standard of value. An individual secures money (a) through income received as wages or salary for services he has rendered to others, (b) through the use by others of property which belongs to him, or (c) through the profit resulting from the operations of a business owned by him either in part or as a whole.

James Brown is employed as salesman for the Citizens Motor Car Co.; his income is the salary received for the service rendered. J. W. Smith owns the building in which the Citizens Motor Car Co. is operated; his income is the rent received for the use of the building. W. O. Winkler owns the Citizens Motor Car Co.; his income is the profit made by selling automobiles at a price greater than the cost.

§ 2. A Business. The one who sells to the individual the food, clothing, education, amusement, or other things which the individual needs for his comfort and enjoyment, is said to be engaged in business, and the operations in connection therewith are referred to as business transactions. The operations include the buying and selling of the commodities in which the business deals, at a place of business and under a name selected by the owner. There are many kinds of businesses, each of which supplies a specific demand; there are many businesses of the same kind which undertake to supply the same demand.

Robert Brown owns and operates a drug store at 405 Main St., known and advertised to the public as "The Central Drug Store." Mr. Brown is a business man because he operates a business. The operations of his business include the buying and selling of medicine and drugs, as well as the other articles a drug store usually handles, and his business is referred to as a drug business.

§ 3. Assets, Liabilities and Proprietorship. If the owner of a business is to have ready for sale the merchandise or service which he expects to sell, he must have cash with which to purchase this merchandise or service. The cash, merchandise, and other property needed to carry on the operations of a business are known as its assets. Should the owner of a business agree either in writing or verbally to pay at a later date for the merchandise or service purchased, he has incurred an obligation or debt; this obligation is known as a liability, and all the obligations of the business are known as its liabilities. The liabilities are to be paid out of the assets of the business, hence the owner's interest in the business is the excess of total assets over total liabilities; this interest is known as his proprietorship. Stated in equation form, assets—liabilities=proprietorship.

John Jones, who has $3,000.00 in cash, wishes to purchase a drug store; Robert Brown, who owns and operates "The Central Drug Store" is willing to sell the same for $2,500.00. January 1, Mr. Jones pays Mr. Brown $2,500.00 for which he secures all the assets of the store; these include drugs, medicine, and other merchandise usually offered for sale by a drug store, and a soda fountain with the usual equipment. He retains the $500.00 for the purpose of buying other drugs. If this $500.00 is not sufficient to pay for the drugs purchased and these drugs are sold to him upon his promise to pay later, he incurs a liability. During the operations of the business his interest in the business is the value of all the assets belonging to the business less the liabilities.

§ 4. The Name of an Asset or a Liability depends on its nature. Custom has fixed the names of the assets which usually belong to a business and the liabilities which are usually incurred. Money is referred to as "cash;" written promises (in negotiable form) of those who agree to pay money to the business, as "notes receivable," and verbal promises, as "accounts receivable;" merchandise in stock, as "inventory;" fixtures used in the business, as "furniture and fixtures;" written promises (in negotiable form) of the business to pay money at a future date, as "notes payable;" and verbal promises, as "accounts payable."

§ 5. Cost and Income. When a business is organized, the owner expects to purchase the merchandise or other property which he sells, also to pay rent, salaries, advertising, etc.; these are known as costs. The owner of the business also expects to sell the merchandise or service which he offers for sale; the returns from sales are known as income. If the income be greater than the cost, the business has been operated at a profit; if the income be less than the cost, it has been operated at a loss.

When Mr. Jones bought the drug business, he knew there would be certain costs in connection with its operations, including rent, salaries, telephone service, purchases of merchandise, supplies for the soda fountain, etc. However, he was willing to assume these costs because he expected an income from the sales of merchandise which he purchased and from the products of his soda fountain. If at the end of the first year his costs amount to $4,000.00 and his sales to $5,000.00, he will have made a profit of $1,000.00 through owning and operating the drug business.

§ 6. The Name of Each Cost and Income depends on its nature. It is quite evident that cost for rent and cost for merchandise purchased are of an entirely different nature; also that the income from the sale of merchandise and the income from the sale of service are of a different nature. Custom has fixed the names of the costs and income which occur in the usual operations of the business. Rent and salary costs are known as "expenses;" merchandise purchased for sale, as "purchases;" income from the sale of this merchandise, as "sales;" income from the use of money, as "interest;" income from the sale of services such as that rendered by telephone and telegraph companies, as "tolls;" and income from the sale of service rendered by a street railway company, as "passenger receipts."

§ 7. A Business Transaction is, theoretically, an exchange of equivalent values; that is, the business receives an equivalent value for the material or service which it sells to others, and gives an equivalent value for the material or service which it purchases. Because of this exchange of values, each transaction will result in a parting with values by the business with a resulting increase of liabilities or income; and a corresponding receipt of value with a resulting increase of assets or cost.

Mary Davis pays John Jones, the owner of The Central Drug Store, 25c for a magazine; this is a transaction performed by the owner because he receives cash and parts with a magazine. James Doyle pays the street-car conductor a fare of 8c; this is a transaction performed by the street-car company because it receives 8c cash for service it has rendered.

§8. Bookkeeping is the systematic recording of the transactions of a business, or of any changes which may affect the owner's interest in the business. This record is made (1) by writing the date, explanation, and amount of each transaction; (2) by classifying the items of the record to show values received (assets and costs), and values parted with (liabilities and income).

The term "accounting" in the title of this text is usually used with the same meaning as bookkeeping. However, there is a technical difference which will be explained later. No attempt is made to explain everything about bookkeeping and accounting at the beginning, because it would only result in confusion, and the student can better learn as he advances.

§ 9. The Purpose of Bookkeeping for a Business is to provide a record of all transactions performed by the business. The owner of the business needs this information in order that he may know the value of the assets and liabilities of the business, and the cost and income resulting from its operations. The information gained through the operations of the business in the past can be of value to the owner in connection with the performance of future transactions only when he has a complete record of the transactions performed.

§ 10. The Purpose of Bookkeeping for an Individual whose income results from a salary or an investment is the same as for a business—that is, to assist the individual to better control his income and expenditures. If, at the end of each year, the individual knows his total income for the year and his expenses for the year, he will be in a far better position to control future expenditures than if he depends on the information obtained from an actual count of the assets he has remaining at the end of the year. The individual who has money invested in property should record the cost of the property, the cost of taxes, insurance, repairs, etc., and the income from rent; with this information he can determine whether his investment is profitable.

The individual whose income is a salary can better control his expenditures by making appropriations for those expenditures which he knows will occur, such as rent, food, clothing, amusements, contributions, etc; this will enable him to avoid spending more for any one of these items than his salary will permit. This plan of making appropriations is referred to as a "budget system," and the list of appropriations, as a "budget." The budget system is not only applicable to the affairs of an individual, but is also applicable to the affairs of a government and a business concern. City, county, state, and national governments are rapidly adopting the budget system for the control of expenditures, and many business concerns make expenditures for advertising, salaries, improvements, etc., through a system of budgetary control.

§ 11. Summary. The student needs to know bookkeeping because a knowledge of the subject will increase the value of his services, whether sold to others or used in connection with his own business. Income can be earned through a salary received, an investment, or the operations of a business. A business man is one who undertakes to provide services or commodities for which there is a demand. Assets are needed in connection with the operations of a business, and liabilities may be incurred. The proprietorship of a business is the value of the assets after the liabilities are deducted. Cost refers to expenses and purchases made necessary in order that the business man may have an income through the sales of merchandise or services. A business transaction is an exchange of equivalent values; each value involves an asset, a liability, a cost, or an income. These transactions are recorded in order that the owner of the business may have a record of them. This record is made by writing the date of the transaction, the name of the asset, liability, cost or income, and the value received and the value parted with. Every transaction affects an asset or an income and a liability or a cost.

Chapter II

RECORDING TRANSACTIONS

The Purpose of this and the three succeeding Chapters is to explain (a) the method of recording transactions in accounts with Cash, Purchases, Sales, persons, Expense, and the proprietor, (b) the use of the general journal, (c) the use of special journals, and (d) the Trial Balance. Exercises consisting of business transactions which have been performed are provided in order that the student may obtain practice in applying the principles discussed in the text.

§ 12. An Account is a systematic record of all the transactions with any one asset, liability, cost or income collected under a specific title; this title is the name of the asset, liability, cost or income. The ruled form for an account should contain two sides (Illustration No. 1), one to show the date of the transaction and the value received, and the other the date of the transaction and the value parted with. The balance of an account is the difference between the totals of the two sides. An account is "open" when the totals of the two sides are not equal, and "in balance" when the totals are equal.

Illustrations Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 8 in this chapter illustrate and explain the form of an account. Illustration No. 3 shows that at least two accounts are required to record each transaction.

NAME OF THE ACCOUNT

Values Received						Values Parted With
Year	Month	Day	Explanation	Page	Dollars	Cents	Year	Month	Day	Explanation	Page	Dollars	Cents

Illustration No. 1, The Account.

§ 13. Debit and Credit when used as bookkeeping terms, describe the two sides of an account; debit refers to the left side and credit to the right side. The value received in a transaction is recorded on the debit (left) side of one account, and the value parted with on the credit (right) side of another account.

§ 14. The Ledger is a bound book, loose-leaf book, or cards, with rulings to contain a record of transactions in account form; Illustration No. 2 shows a ruled ledger page. The name of the account is written across the page, and each transaction recorded on the opposite sides of two accounts, as in Illustration No. 3 which shows a ledger with three accounts.

The number of accounts in the ledger depends entirely on the nature of the operations of the business, and the extent of these operations. The space required for recording transactions in any one account depends on the number of transactions which affect the account; this space is determined by one who is familiar with the nature of the business and the transactions performed by it.

Illustration No. 2, One Form of Ruling for a Ledger.

CASH ACCOUNT

§ 15. The Purpose of this Account is to show the amount of cash belonging to the business as a result of the transactions in which cash is received and paid. "Cash" is a term applied to money or any commercial paper which the bank will accept at its face value as money. The various forms of commercial paper which are regarded as cash will be explained and illustrated later.

Debit the Cash Account:

Credit the Cash Account:

¶ 1. For cash received.

¶ 2. For cash paid.

¶ 3. The Balance of the Cash Account shows the amount of cash which belongs to the business as a result of the cash transactions completed; it is one of the assets of the business. This cash may be in the safe, in the bank for safe-keeping, or a part in each place. (See Illustration No. 3.)

There are four important points relating to each account which the student should understand: (a) its purpose, (b) the transactions to be recorded on the debit side, (c) the transactions to be recorded on the credit side, and (d) the interpretation of its balance—that is, whether it represents an asset, a liability, a cost, or an income. The discussion of each account in this text is arranged so as to emphasize these four points.

§ 16. Proving Cash. Since the Cash account is a record of all cash received and paid, the balance should be the same as the cash belonging to the business. Cash is proved by counting the cash and comparing the amount with the balance of the Cash account. If there has been an error in making change, or a transaction affecting cash has not been recorded, it is obvious that the balance of the account will not be the same as the cash on hand.

PURCHASES ACCOUNT

§ 17. The Purpose of this Account is to show the net cost of all the merchandise purchased for sale. Merchandise is a general term applied to goods bought and sold in the trading business, such as groceries, clothing, shoes, hats, hardware, drugs, musical instruments, jewelry, etc.

Debit the Purchases Account:

Credit the Purchases Account:

¶ 1. For the cost of merchandise purchased, and the transportation (freight, express, and postage), drayage, and storage cost of this merchandise.

¶ 2. For the cost price of merchandise returned to the seller, and allowances granted by him.

¶ 3. The Balance of the Purchases Account shows the net cost of merchandise purchased during the period for which the record is kept; it is one of the costs of the business. This balance will not, as a rule, represent the value of the merchandise owned by the business because the merchandise was purchased for sale and a part of it has probably been sold. (See Illustration No. 3.)

SALES ACCOUNT

§ 18. The Purpose of this Account is to show the net returns from the sales of merchandise. It is a record of the transactions affecting the sales of those articles purchased for sale, the cost of which is charged to the Purchases account.

Debit the Sales Account:

Credit the Sales Account:

¶ 1. For the selling price of merchandise returned by the customer, and allowances granted to him.

¶ 2. For the selling price of merchandise sold.

¶ 3. The Balance of the Sales Account shows the net returns from the sales of merchandise during the period for which the record is kept; it is one of the incomes of the business. (See Illustration No. 3.)

RECORDING TRANSACTIONS DIRECT IN THE LEDGER

§ 19. Transactions are Recorded in the order in which they occur. The record may be made direct in the ledger or in a separate book and transferred to the ledger. Illustration No. 3 shows the method of recording direct in the ledger the transactions outlined below and at the top of page 12. The transactions are those relating to the sales and purchases of merchandise for cash performed by the soda fountain department of The Central Drug Company during the week beginning July 2.

- July 2. Cash sales for the day per cash register, $39.40.
Recorded in Illustration No. 3 on the debit side of the Cash account and credit side of the Sales account.
 - 3. Bought syrups and extracts, $5.00; Coca-Cola, $12.75; ice cream, $19.20.
Recorded in Illustration No. 3 on the debit side of the Purchases account and credit side of the Cash account.
 - Cash sales for the day per cash register, $50.30.
Recorded in Illustration No. 3 on the debit side of the Cash account and credit side of the Sales account.
 - 5. Returned one gallon of ice cream purchased on the 3d, and received $2.50, the cost price, for the same.
Recorded in Illustration No. 3 on the debit side of the Cash account and credit side of the Purchases account.
 - Bought sandwiches, $12.50; flavoring, $16.40; ice cream, $20.00.

EXPLANATION. The information given in connection with each transaction and the method of recording it is sufficient explanation of this illustration.

THE TRIAL BALANCE.

- July 6. Cash sales for the day per cash register, $21.50.
Recorded in Illustration No. 3 as explained in § 15, ¶ 1 and § 18, ¶ 2.
7. Gave James Smith $1.50 for one-half gallon of ice cream which he returned because it was received in bad condition.
Recorded in Illustration No. 3 as explained in § 18, ¶ 1 and § 15, ¶ 2.
- Cash sales for the day per cash register, $62.50.
Recorded in Illustration No. 3 as explained in § 15, ¶ 1 and § 18, ¶ 2.

§ 20. A Trial Balance is a list of the open accounts in the ledger with the balance or the total debits and total credits set opposite the name of each account; its purpose is to test the equality of the debits and credits recorded in the ledger. The Trial Balance is usually prepared on paper with two money columns ruled at the right so that the debit totals or debit balances may be entered in one column, and the credit totals or credit balances in the other. The test is satisfactory when the total of the debit column on the Trial Balance equals the total of the credit column. Illustration No. 4 shows a Trial Balance of totals, and No. 5 a Trial Balance of balances prepared from the ledger in Illustration No. 3.

Illustration No. 4, A Trial Balance of Totals.

EXPLANATION. This Trial Balance is prepared from the ledger in Illustration No. 3. The page in the ledger and the name of each account are written at the left, and the total debits and total credits are written in the two money columns at the right. If the Trial Balance is footed before it is ruled, the totals are entered in small pencil figures in the same manner as the totals in Illustration No. 3. By comparing Illustration No. 4 with Illustration No. 3, the student will observe that it is necessary to add the accounts in the ledger and write the totals in small pencil figures before preparing the Trial Balance.

Illustration No. 5, A Trial Balance of Balances.

EXPLANATION. It is customary, when taking a Trial Balance of balances, to write the balance in the explanation column on the larger side of the account in the ledger. These balances are not shown in Illustration No. 3 because they are not necessary in taking a Trial Balance of totals.

Exercise No. 1, Recording Transactions Direct in the Ledger.

Record on ledger paper* (paper with the same ruling as Illustration No. 2) the following transactions performed during the month of January by J. W. McCormick, a dealer in musical instruments. Write the names of the three accounts before recording the transactions; allow twelve lines for Cash, eight lines for Purchases and twelve lines for Sales. The space given for each account includes sufficient lines for recording the transactions and one line for the name of the account. If one sheet of ledger paper is used for the three accounts, separate them by double red lines as in Illustration No. 3.

In practice, transactions are recorded separately from the ledger and transferred to it, but for the purpose of instruction the first few exercises are recorded direct in the ledger.

- Jan. 1. Sold for cash one piano, $450.00.
Record on the debit side of the Cash account and on the credit side of the Sales account in the same manner as the transaction for July 2 is recorded in Illustration No. 3.
2. Bought for cash one hundred Victrola records, $110.00.
Record on the debit side of the Purchases account and on the credit side of the Cash account in the same manner as the first transaction for July 3 is recorded in Illustration No. 3.
5. Sold for cash one Victrola, $225.00; records, $10.50.
Record in one amount on the debit side of the Cash account and on the credit side of the Sales account in the same manner as the second transaction for July 3 is recorded in Illustration No. 3.
7. Sold for cash one piano, $350.00.
10. Sold for cash one player-piano, $500.00; rolls, $22.50.
12. Bought for cash three Victrolas, $320.00; paid freight on the same, $52.50.
14. Sold for cash one Victrola, $200.00; records, $42.50.
17. Gave J. O. Smith $1.50 for a damaged record which he purchased on the 14th and returned.
Debit $ 18, ' 1; credit $ 15, ' 2.
18. Sold for cash one Victrola, $50.00; records, $6.50.
20. Bought for cash one piano, $225.00; paid freight and drayage on the same, $42.65
23. Sent the damaged record returned to us on the 17th to the distributing agent of the records and received 90c for the same.
Debit $ 15, ' 1; credit $ 17, ' 2.
27. Sold for cash one Victrola, $75.00; records, $10 50.
- Bought for cash one piano, $300.00; paid freight on the same, $48.65.
30. Received $3.50 from the railroad company to pay for overcharge on freight paid on the 20th.
Debit $ 15, ' 1; credit $ 17, ' 2.
31. Sold for cash one piano, $350.00.

When these transactions have been recorded in the three accounts, add the debit side and the credit side of each account, enter the totals in small pencil figures as in Illustration No. 3, and prove the equality of the debits and credits by a Trial Balance of totals as in Illustration No. 4.

Exercise No. 2, Recording Transactions Direct in the Ledger.

§ 21. A Book of Original Entry is one ruled to contain a record of business transactions arranged chronologically, that is, in the order of their occurrence. The information given in connection with the record of each transaction in a book of original entry should be arranged so that the value received and the value parted with may be transferred to the accounts in the ledger. The method of recording transactions in book of original entry is illustrated and explained in this and succeeding chapters.

The purpose of a book of original entry is to provide a basis for the information recorded in the ledger. When transactions are recorded direct in the ledger it is difficult to detect errors because there is no complete record of each transaction in one place. Should the bookkeeper fail to record a debit or a credit he might have difficulty in locating the error.

§ 22. The Journal is a book of original entry. The ruling is shown in Illustration No. 6 and the method of recording transactions on this ruling, in Illustration No. 7. A comparison of these two illustrations shows that space is provided for the name of the account debited and the amount (value received), the name of the account credited and the amount (value parted with), and the explanation of the transaction; this explanation should be so worded that one who is familiar with accounting may know that the values received and the values parted with have been correctly expressed in the record.

Illustration No. 6, Ruling for a Page in the Journal.

EXPLANATION. The purpose of the ruling in this journal can be understood better by comparing it with that in Illustration No. 7, which contains the same form of ruling with transactions recorded. The student will observe that debits and credits are indicated by the position of the writing and figures.

¶ 1. Journalizing is the analysis of transactions to determine which accounts shall be debited and which credited; and the recording of the names of the accounts debited and credited with the amounts in a book of original entry.

§ 23. Posting from the Journal is transferring the amounts from the journal to the accounts in the ledger. Each amount in the first money column is posted to the debit side of the account written on the same line with it, and each amount in the second money column is posted to the credit side of the account written on the same line with it. The posting is indicated by writing the letter "J" and the page of the journal in the folio column in the ledger, and the page of the account in the ledger in the folio column in the journal. The amounts recorded in the journal are posted to the ledger in the same order as they appear in the journal; the purpose of posting is to provide in the ledger, through accounts, a complete history of all the transactions with each asset, liability, cost and income.

The transactions recorded in Illustration No. 7, when posted to the ledger accounts, will appear as in Illustration No. 8, and a Trial Balance from these ledger accounts will appear as in Illustration No. 4 or No. 5.

RECORDING TRANSACTIONS IN THE JOURNAL

§ 24. Transactions Are Recorded in the Journal in the order in which they occur. A complete record of a transaction in the journal shows the date of the transaction, the name of the account debited and the amount, the name of the account credited and the amount, and the explanation. This explanation is for the information of the bookkeeper or any person who may have occasion to examine the record. The record should show a distinction between debits and credits to facilitate posting.

The posting is indicated by writing the journal page (1) in the ledger, and the ledger page (1) in the journal.

Chapter III

§ 25. Purchases and Sales of Merchandise on Account. When the owner of a business purchases merchandise with the agreement that it is to be paid for at a later date, he incurs an obligation or a liability. The transaction will be recorded in the same manner as if he had paid cash except the name of the person or business from whom the merchandise is purchased will be credited in place of cash; when the obligation is paid as per agreement, the account with the person or business will be debited and Cash credited. The value received in the first transaction is the merchandise purchased, and the value parted with, the promise to pay the liability incurred. The value received in the second transaction is the cancellation of the obligation, and the value parted with, the cash.

When the owner of a business sells his merchandise with the agreement that it is to be paid for at a later date, he extends credit to the one who purchases the merchandise. A transaction of this nature will be recorded in the same manner as when cash is received, except that the name of the person who purchases the merchandise will be debited instead of Cash; when the owner of the business receives cash from the one to whom he has extended credit, he debits Cash and credits the account with the person. The value received in the first transaction is the promise of the person to whom the merchandise is sold, and the value parted with, the merchandise; the value received in the second transaction is cash, and the value parted with, the cancellation of the obligation of the one to whom the merchandise was sold.

Purchases and sales of merchandise where cash is not involved are referred to as "on account," possibly because the account with the person takes the place of cash until the amount is paid. The owner of the business regards those who extend credit to him as his creditors, and those to whom he extends credit as his customers; the term "customer" also applies to those from whom cash is received at the time the sale is made.

ACCOUNTS WITH PERSONS

§ 26. Accounts with Persons are those required when credit is extended to the business through the purchase of merchandise, or when the business extends credit to its customers through the sale of merchandise. Accounts with persons are divided into two classes: one (accounts with customers) shows the result of transactions with the persons to whom the business sells merchandise or other assets on account, usually referred to as "accounts receivable"; and the other (accounts with creditors) shows the result of transactions with those from whom merchandise is purchased on account, usually referred to as "accounts payable."

ACCOUNTS RECEIVABLE

§ 27. The Purpose of an Account with a Customer is to show the balance due from the customer as a result of the transactions in which the business sells merchandise to him on account. When a customer pays cash for merchandise, it is not necessary to record the transactions in an account with him; but when he buys and does not pay cash, it is necessary to record the date and amount of the sale in an account with him so that the owner may know the amount the cus-customer owes him when settlement is desired. A separate account is kept with each customer because the owner of the business should know the amount due from each customer to whom he sells on account as well as the total amount due from all customers. The address of each customer should be given in connection with the title of his account; this includes street, number, city, and state.

Debit the Account of Each Customer:

- ¶ 1. For the selling price of merchandise sold to him on account, and for prepaid transportation charges if the terms of sale do not include delivery.

Credit the Account of Each Customer:

- ¶ 2. For the cash or other assets received from him to apply on account, and for the amount of any allowance or deduction granted to him. Partial payments are indicated as explained in ¶ 5.

¶ 3. The Balance of an Account Receivable shows the amount the customer owes the business. It is one of the assets of the business. The debit side will be the larger unless the customer should pay for more than he has purchased. When the two sides are equal, his account is said to be in balance; this indicates that he has paid for all the merchandise sold him on account.

¶ 4. Ruling an Account Receivable. When the account with a customer is in balance, it should be ruled with a single red line on each side, across the money columns only, as in the account with Walter Rogers in Illustration No. 9; the lines should be drawn on the same blue line on each side when possible. If there are a number of debits or credits, the two sides should be footed with small pencil figures to prove that they are equal before ruling as in the account with People's Hotel on page 71. The use of red ink for ruling is not arbitrary but it is customary for bookkeepers to use it, hence its use in the illustrations.

¶ 5. Partial Payments. A debtor has the right, by law, to indicate on what item his payment shall be applied. Thus if he owes several amounts and wishes the payment to be applied to any one particular amount, and indicates this, the credit must be applied on that amount. In cases of this kind the bookkeeper should indicate the amount on which the credit is applied by placing a letter at the left of the amount of the item on the debit side, and placing the same letter to the left of the amount of each payment on the credit side. It is best to begin with "a" and continue with as many letters as may be required for payments on different debits. The letters are not necessary when an item is paid in full by one payment, and the account is ruled. If the payments are indicated by letter as explained, the bookkeeper can ascertain the amount due for any one sale without referring to a book of original entry. The use of the letters as explained here is illustrated in the personal accounts on pages 70, 71 and 72.

Those to whom the business sells merchandise on account are referred to as "trade customers" and those from whom it buys merchandise on account as "trade creditors." Property other than merchandise may be bought or sold on account; such sales and purchases are recorded in personal accounts in the same manner as sales and purchases of merchandise.

ACCOUNTS PAYABLE

§ 28. The Purpose of an Account with a Creditor is to show the balance due from the creditor as a result of the transactions in which the business buys merchandise from him on account. When merchandise is purchased for cash, no account with the one from whom it is purchased is necessary because the transaction is completed; but when the business buys on account, it is necessary to keep a record of such transactions in order that the owner may know the amount he owes at the time settlement is made. A separate account is kept with each creditor because the owner of the business should know the amount he owes each creditor as well as the total amount due all creditors.

Debit the Account of Each Creditor:

¶ 1. For cash or other assets of the business given him to apply on account, and for any allowance or deduction granted to the business by him. Partial payments are indicated as explained in § 27, ¶ 5.

¶ 3. The Balance of an Account Payable shows the amount the business owes the creditor. The credit side will be the larger unless the business should pay a creditor more than it owes him. The balance due a creditor is one of the verbal obligations of the business, hence a liability.

¶ 4. Ruling an Account Payable. The account with a creditor is ruled in the same manner as an account with a customer, as described in § 27, ¶ 4.

¶ 5. Partial Payments should be indicated by letter as explained in § 27, ¶ 5. This enables the bookkeeper to ascertain the balance due on any one purchase without referring to a book of original entry.

Credit the Account of Each Creditor:

¶ 2. For the cost of merchandise purchased from him on account, and for prepaid transportation charges if the terms of purchase do not include delivery.

RECORDING TRANSACTIONS DIRECT IN THE LEDGER

§ 29. Transactions with customers and creditors on account may be recorded direct in the ledger in the same manner as cash transactions. When credit is extended to a customer of the business, his promise to pay the amount of the sale is recorded on the debit side of his account as the value received, and the value of the merchandise sold, on the credit side of the Sales account in the same manner as a cash sale. When credit is extended to the business, the cost of the merchandise purchased is recorded on the debit side of the Purchases account in the same manner as a cash purchase, and the same amount is recorded on the credit side of the creditor's account because the promise of the owner of the business to pay for the merchandise bought is regarded as the value parted with. The account with a customer remains on the ledger as an asset, and that with a creditor as a liability, until settlement is made, either with cash or some other asset.

The following transactions affecting the purchases and sales of merchandise for cash and on account, performed by J. H. Henderson, a retail furniture dealer, during the month of November, are shown recorded direct in accounts with Cash, customers, creditors, Purchases, and Sales in Illustration No. 9 and a Trial Balance of totals made from the accounts, in Illustration No. 10.

Illustration No. 9, A Ledger with Six Accounts.

EXPLANATION. This illustration is in the same form as Illustration No. 3, with the exception of three additional accounts, two with customers and one with a creditor. A comparison of the transactions with the record will show that the value received in each is recorded on the debit side, and the value parted with on the credit side. The "60 days" in the explanation column of the account with the Consolidated Furniture Co. refers to the time when payment is to be made. Since the purchase is on November 1, payment will be expected on December 31. When no specific time of settlement is mentioned, the purchase or sale is sometimes referred to as "on account," and settlement is usually required on the first of the month following the purchase or sale.

Illustration No. 10, A Trial Balance of Totals.

EXPLANATION. This Trial Balance, which is prepared from the ledger in Illustration No. 9, is the same form as Illustration No. 4 with the addition of two personal accounts. By comparing this illustration with Illustration No. 9, it will be observed that the account with Walter Rogers does not appear on the Trial Balance. The reason for this is that the amounts recorded on the debit and credit sides are equal. This explains the statement in § 20 that only the open accounts in the ledger appear on the Trial Balance.

Exercise No. 7, Recording Transactions Direct in the Ledger.

Record on ledger paper* the following transactions performed during the month of October by J. J. Hammond, a retail shoe dealer. RECORDING TRANSACTIONS IN THE JOURNAL

§ 30. Transactions with customers and with creditors may be recorded in the journal in the same manner as cash transactions. When credit is extended to a customer, his name is written in the journal as the account debited, and the Sales account credited; when credit is extended to the business, the Purchases account is debited, and the name of the creditor is written as the account credited. The owner should have a record of the articles sold on account; this information may be obtained by retaining a copy of the list given the customer, or writing the names of the articles in connection with the explanation in the journal. It is not necessary to itemize the articles purchased in the explanation of the transaction in the journal because the creditor provides a list of these articles.

The following transactions affecting the purchases and sales of merchandise for cash and on account, performed by J. H. Henderson, a retail furniture dealer, during the month of November, are shown recorded in the journal in Illustration No. 11 and posted to the ledger in Illustration No. 12. "Six boxes candy at $2.75" means that the amount of the sale is $16.50. "Six boxes candy, $2.75," means that the amount of the sale is $2.75.

Chapter IV

§ 31. Expense. Each business has a building or place in which to carry on its operations; this building or place of business is provided with heat and light; modern business requires the use of the telephone, telegraph, and other means of rapid communication; clerks are employed to assist with the purchasing and selling of the merchandise or service which the business sells; bookkeepers and stenographers are required in connection with the office operations; the owner receives a compensation for his services in connection with the operations of the business; these and many other services must be purchased and paid for by the business. Such services are usually referred to as the "operating cost" of the business, also as the "expenses" of the business.

The term "expenses" also includes any material purchased by the business which will be consumed by its use; this class of material includes books of account for use in the office, stationery, wrapping paper, twine, nails for packing cases, etc. The cost of material regarded as expense is usually shown in an account separate from the amounts paid for services; this will be discussed later in more detail.

A record of the payments for operating cost (expenses) is made in one or more expense accounts, depending on the nature of the expenses and the extent of the business operations. When cash is given in payment for services or property which is regarded as an expense item, the account which is to show a record of this operating cost is debited and the Cash account credited; should an asset other than cash be given in payment, the account which shows the value of the asset parted with is credited instead of the Cash account.

EXPENSE ACCOUNT

§ 32. The Purpose of this Account is to show the cost of operating the business, that is, its expenses. If all operating cost is debited to one account, the total cost of the business operations will be shown in this account. The debit and credit given below refer to only one Expense account.

Debit the Expense Account:

Credit the Expense Account:

¶ 1. For amounts paid for operating cost as outlined in § 31.

¶ 2. For any adjustments* which reduce the operating cost as shown by the debit side of this account.

¶ 3. The Balance of this Account shows the operating cost of the business for the period covered by the debits and credits to the account. The total expense is a deduction from the profit made by the operations of the business.

§ 33. Capital. It is usually necessary for the owner of the business to invest cash or other property at the beginning of the business, because, if the business is

*NOTE. The term "adjustment" used in connection with the credits to the Expense account refers to those transactions which reduce the cost of operating the business. If the cost of stamps is debited to the Expense account, and a part of these stamps is sold, Cash or the asset received is debited, and Expense credited because the amount received reduces the expense cost.

to supply a demand, it must have on hand those things which its customers will wish to purchase. The cash or other property which the owner assigns to the operations of the business at its beginning or at any time subsequent thereto is regarded as an investment in the business and referred to as the "invested capital of the business." If the operations of the business are successful—that is, if the costs are less than the income—the interest of the owner (proprietorship) will be increased by this profit; if the result of operating the business is a loss, the interest of the owner (proprietorship) will be decreased by this loss. Once each year it is necessary for the owner of the business to ascertain the profit or loss resulting from the operations of the business during the year because of the governmental tax on income. If the business has been operated at a profit, the owner's capital is increased the amount of this profit; if the business has been operated at a loss, the owner's capital is decreased the amount of the loss.

The owner may, if he desires, withdraw part of his capital; the withdrawal of a part of his capital will decrease his proprietorship in the business. Should the owner take cash, merchandise or other assets from the business as a remuneration for his services in connection with the operations of the business, the value of these withdrawals is debited to Expense in the same manner as amounts paid for the salaries of clerks and other employees. If desired, the owner may be debited for the value of the property which he takes from the business and credited with the salary he is to receive as compensation; the title of this account would be the name of the owner with the word "personal" written after it. The owner's personal account is debited with withdrawals and credited with the salary; the balance, if a debit, will show the amount he has withdrawn in excess of his salary, and if a credit, the amount of salary yet to be withdrawn. Under no circumstances should withdrawals for services be debited to the Capital account.

CAPITAL ACCOUNT

§ 34. The Purpose of this Account is to show the result of transactions which the business has with the owner of the business as they relate to investments and withdrawals.

Debit the Capital Account:

- ¶ 1. For debts of the owner assumed at the beginning of the business.
- ¶ 2. For amounts withdrawn from the capital invested.
- ¶ 3. For the net loss at the end of the business year.

Credit the Capital Account:

- ¶ 4. For cash or other assets invested at the beginning of the business.
- ¶ 5. For subsequent investments.
- ¶ 6. For the net profit at the end of the business year.

¶ 7. The Balance of this Account, shows the owner's interest in the business, that is, his proprietorship or net investment.

RECORDING TRANSACTIONS DIRECT IN THE LEDGER

§ 35. The Complete Operations of a business include transactions which relate to the investment at the beginning of the business, the purchases and sales of merchandise, and the payment of operating expenses. All of these transactions may be recorded direct in the ledger as explained in §§ 19 and 29.

The following transactions relative to the complete operations of a business (including investment, operating cost, and purchases and sales of merchandise for

RECORDING TRANSACTIONS IN THE JOURNAL

§ 36. Transactions with the owner and with operating expenses may be recorded in the journal in the same manner as transactions in which merchandise is purchased or sold for cash or on account. When the owner invests cash or other assets in the business, the transaction is recorded in the journal by writing the date, the name of the account debited and amount, the name of the account credited and amount, and the explanation, in the same form as other transactions; each asset invested is debited to the account which is to show its value, and the owner's Capital account credited. When the owner withdraws a part of his capital, the transaction is recorded in the journal in the same form as the entry for investment; in this case, however, the owner's Capital account is debited with the amount of the withdrawal, and the account which shows the value of the asset withdrawn is credited. When operating costs are paid, the transaction is recorded in the journal by writing the date, the name of the operating account affected (usually Expense) and the amount of the payment, the name and amount of the asset parted with, and the explanation.

Before recording transactions in the journal, the student should journalize each one mentally; that is, he should determine from the nature of the transaction the account to be debited and the account to be credited. Since the information the owner desires is obtained from the accounts, it is essential that the proper accounts be debited and credited in each transaction. Thus if M. E. Studebaker, the proprietor of the business, withdraws from the business $1,000.00 during the year, as salary, and the bookkeeper debits M. E. Studebaker Capital instead of Expense, the report which Mr. Studebaker receives from his bookkeeper at the end of the year would show $1,000.00 less expenses than have really been paid.

The following transactions relative to the complete operations of a business (including investment, operating cost, and the purchases and sales of merchandise for cash and on account), performed by M. E. Studebaker during the month of October, are shown recorded in the journal in Illustration No. 15 and posted to the ledger in Illustration No. 16. These transactions are the same as those at the top of page 35.

- Oct. 1. M. E. Studebaker invested $1,000.00 in the office supplies business.
 7. Purchased from A. R. King, Clinton, on account, merchandise, $317.65.
 10. Received $75.50 for cash sales of merchandise.

Chapter V

RECORDING TRANSACTIONS—Concluded

§ 37. Special Journals. While all transactions may be recorded in the journal as explained in § 22, yet it is not customary to do this because efficiency in bookkeeping means the greatest amount of work with the best results at the least cost. When a number of transactions affect the same account, much time can be saved by recording them in special journals. Fifty purchases during one month recorded in the journal would require writing "Purchases" fifty times and posting fifty separate amounts to the Purchases account. In addition to the extra time required in recording the transactions and posting, fifty lines would be needed in the ledger for the Purchases account. If these transactions were recorded in a journal and no other transactions were recorded in this journal, it would not be necessary to write "Purchases" in each transaction and the total could be posted to the Purchases account in one amount at the end of the month, thus saving practically half the time in the recording and posting of these transactions. In addition to the time saved in posting, forty-nine lines will be saved in the ledger as a result of posting the total purchases in one amount.

In a mercantile business the transactions which are of the most frequent occurrence are those in connection with the purchase and sale of merchandise and the receipt and payment of cash. If these transactions are recorded in special journals, the work in the accounting department will be much more efficient, and, where the volume of business is large and more than one bookkeeper is needed, the several bookkeepers can use the different journals without interfering with the work of each other.

The title of any special journal is usually the name of the account affected by posting the total at the end of the month. Thus, the journal in which purchases are recorded is usually referred to as the purchases journal because the Purchases account will be debited with the total, and the journal in which sales are recorded is referred to as the sales journal because the Sales account will be credited with the total.

§ 38. The Purchases Journal is a book of original entry in which all purchases of merchandise are recorded and no other transactions are recorded in it. The complete record of a transaction in which merchandise is purchased includes the date of entry, the name and address of the person or firm from whom the merchandise is purchased, the terms, the number of the purchase and the amount of the purchase. The ruling in the purchases journal should be so arranged that all this information can be recorded on one line. When arranged in this manner, each person or firm from whom merchandise is purchased can be credited in his account in the ledger, and the Purchases account debited for the total at the end of the month. Illustration No. 17 shows one form of the purchases journal.

If cash purchases are recorded in the cash book (§ 43), it is not necessary to record them in the purchases journal. This is explained further in connection with the discussion of the cash book.

The following purchases of merchandise made by E. B. Taylor, a retail grocer, during the month of January, are shown recorded in the purchases journal in Illustration No. 17:

- Jan. 2. Bought of E. C. Cline, Chicago, on account, merchandise, $77.30.
- 3. Bought of Langley Bros., City, on thirty days' time, merchandise, $134.95.
- 23. Bought of Logan & Moseley, Centerville, on twenty days' time, merchandise, $228.60.

EXPLANATION. Each transaction is recorded on one horizontal line. The information in the "Pur. No." column refers to the list of merchandise (invoice) sent by the seller to the purchaser; this list is filed for future reference. The entire record in this illustration is equivalent to one journal entry in which the Purchases account is debited and three personal accounts credited.

§ 39. Posting from the Purchases Journal. The accounts affected by each transaction recorded in the purchases journal are Purchases (debit) and the account of the person or firm (credit); for this reason, each amount entered in the EXPLANATION. A Trial Balance from this ledger will show that the debit amount is equal to the credit amounts even though the record in the accounts does not represent all of the transactions that the business would perform. One purpose of this illustration is to show that the ledger is in balance when all the transactions from any one journal have been posted.

money column is posted to the credit of the account written on the same line with it, and the Purchases account is debited at the end of the month with the total. The posting is the same as in the journal, except that the amounts debited to Purchases are grouped and posted at one time; the posting to the accounts with creditors should be daily, and the posting of the total to the Purchases account, monthly. The date, the letter "P" and the page of the purchases journal are entered in the ledger; the letter "P" indicates the title of the book of original entry. If a specific time of payment is stated, this should be written in the explanation column of the ledger as explained in Illustration No. 1. The page of the ledger is written in the folio column of the purchases journal to indicate where the entry has been posted.

The posting of the transactions recorded in the purchases journal, Illustration No. 17, is shown in Illustration No. 18.

Exercise No. 15, Recording Transactions in the Purchases Journal.

Record in the purchases journal (paper ruled similar to Illustration No. 17) the following transactions relative to the purchase of merchandise during the month of February by W. O. Gardner, who is engaged in the hardware business:

- Feb 1. B. A. Ames, Toledo, 30 days, Purchase No. 1, $350.00.
 5. H. M. Lowe, Nashville, Feb. 3, 30 days, Purchase No. 2, $325.00.
 In this purchase the merchandise was shipped Feb. 3 and received Feb. 5; the amount is due 30 days from Feb. 3.
 9. H. T. Harris, Rochester, 20 days, Purchase No. 3, $486.00.
 12. J. T. Goodrich, City, Feb. 10, 90 days, Purchase No. 4, $825.00.
 18. J. P. Benson, Cleveland, Feb. 17, 60 days, Purchase No. 5, $64.00.
 23. C. O. Parsons, City, 30 days, Purchase No. 6, $128.00.
 28. H. L. Simpson, Dayton, Feb. 26, 30 days, Purchase No. 7, $242.00.

When the above transactions have been recorded in the purchases journal as instructed, and the purchases journal ruled as in Illustration No. 17, open accounts on a sheet of ledger paper with Purchases and each of the seven creditors, allowing four lines for each account. When the posting has been completed, prove the equality of the debits and credits by a Trial Balance.

Exercise No. 16, Recording Transactions in the Purchases Journal.

Record in the purchases journal the following transactions relative to the purchase of merchandise during the month of January by H. H. Goodman, a retail grocer:

- Jan. 2. Brown & Co., Elmwood, on account, Purchase No. 1, $77.30.
 3. Knox Bros., City, on account, Purchase No. 2, $134.95.
 10. Hazen & Lockhart, Danville, on account, Purchase No. 3, $228.60.
 15. Brown & Co., Elmwood, on account, Purchase No. 4, $226.00.
 17. Lake View Creamery, Lake View, Jan. 14, 20 days, Purchase No. 5, $28.00.
 23. J. Allen Smith & Co., Rockford, 10 days, Purchase No. 6, $197.10.
 27. Donaldson Bros., City, Jan. 24, account, Purchase No. 7, $172.75.

When the above transactions have been recorded in the purchases journal as instructed, and the purchases journal ruled, open accounts on a sheet of ledger paper with Purchases and each of the six creditors, allowing five lines for Brown & Co. and four lines for each of the other accounts. When the posting has been completed, prove the equality of the debits and credits by a Trial Balance.

After the instructor has approved this exercise, retain the purchases journal only for use in connection with Exercise No. 22.

Exercise No. 17, Recording Transactions in the Purchases Journal.

Record in the purchases journal the following transactions relative to the purchase of merchandise during the month of March by C. U. Steele, a retail shoe dealer:

- March 2. Bay State Shoe Co., Boston, Feb. 28, 10 days, Purchase No. 1, $496.81.
 3. Haynes, Henson & Co., Newark, N. J., Mar. 2, 10 days, Purchase No. 2, $387.65.
 4. M. B. Lang, City, Mar. 3, 30 days, Purchase No. 3, $1,691.42.
 6. Cline Shoe Co., Pittsburgh, Mar. 4, 30 days, Purchase No. 4, $168.42.
 18. Bay State Shoe Co., Boston, Mar. 15, 30 days, Purchase No. 5, $987.35.
 25. Haynes, Henson & Co., Newark, N. J., Mar. 20, 30 days, Purchase No. 6, $462.85.
 26. Cline Shoe Co., Pittsburgh, Mar. 20, 30 days, Purchase No. 7, $785.00.
 31. A. O. Haines, Albany, Mar. 21, 60 days, Purchase No. 8, $432.50;
 M. B. Lang, City, Mar. 22, 30 days, Purchase No. 9, $356.00.

When the above transactions have been recorded in the purchases journal as instructed, and the purchases journal ruled, open an account with Purchases at the top of page 1 of a double sheet of ledger paper, and an account with each of the five creditors on page 2 of the same sheet, allowing equal space for each personal account; prove the equality of the debits and credits by a Trial Balance.

If double ledger paper ruled with from thirty to forty horizontal lines on each page can not be obtained, use any ledger paper available and allow five lines for each account.

After the instructor has approved this exercise, retain the ledger sheet only for use in Exercises Nos. 20 and 23.

§ 40. The Sales Journal is a book of original entry in which all sales of merchandise on account are recorded and no other transactions are recorded in it. The complete record of a transaction in which merchandise is sold on account includes the date of the sale, the name and address of the person or firm to whom the merchandise is sold, the terms, a list of the items sold, and the amount of the sale. It is necessary for the seller to retain a record of the items sold a customer on account because this information will be needed in case adjustments are required. If a customer returns merchandise which he claims was purchased from the seller and the seller has no record of the items sold to this customer, he might be imposed on by allowing credit for merchandise which was not purchased from him.

Illustration No. 19 shows a form of sales journal containing a list of the items sold, and Illustration No. 20 the same sales recorded in a sales journal with the list of items indicated by the sale number. The method shown in Illustration No. 20 is more efficient because it requires less time to record a number than a list of articles sold. The other form is shown because it is used by some business concerns.

If cash sales are recorded in the cash book (§ 43), it is not necessary to record them in the sales journal. This is explained further in connection with the discussion of the cash book.

The following sales made by E. B. Taylor, a retail grocer, during the month of January, are shown recorded in the sales journals in Illustrations Nos. 19 and 20.

- Jan. 6. Sold A. R. Manley, 106 Elm St., City, on account, 40 lbs. Arbuckle coffee at 20c; 1 bbl. White Lily flour, $6.25.
 16. Sold Gibson Hotel, 12 E. 4th St., City, on ten days' time, 6 bbls. Roller King flour at $5.10; 3 bbls. White Lily flour at $6.25; 40 lbs. Arbuckle coffee at 20c.
 17. Sold T. L. Staples, Clinton, on sixty days' time, 4 bbls. Roller King flour at $5.10; 4 cans, 200 lbs., lard at 15c.
 26. Sold A. R. Manley, 106 Elm St., City, on account, 5 bbls. White Lily flour at $6.25; 115 lbs. Arbuckle coffee at 20c.

Illustration No. 19, Sales Journal Containing a List of Items Sold.

EXPLANATION. The transactions recorded in this sales journal are equivalent to a journal entry in which four accounts are debited, each for the amount written on the same line with it, and the Sales account credited for the total. Each entry shows the date, the name and address of the customer, the total amount of the sale, and a list of the items sold.

Illustration No. 20, Sales Journal Without a List of Items Sold.

EXPLANATION. The above facts are the same as those in Illustration No. 19, except the articles are not itemized. Information concerning these is obtained from a copy of the sale (sales ticket).

§ 41. Posting from the Sales Journal. The accounts affected by each transaction recorded in the sales journal are the customer (debit) and Sales (credit); for this reason each amount written on the line with the name of the customer is posted to the debit of his account, and the Sales account is credited with the total at the end of the month. The posting of the amounts to accounts with customers is daily, and the total to the Sales account, monthly. The date, the letter "S" and the page of the sales journal are entered in the ledger; the letter "S" indicates the title of the book of original entry. If a specific time of payment is stated, this should be written in the explanation column of the ledger as explained in Illustration No. 1. The page of the ledger is written in the folio column of the sales journal to indicate where the entry has been posted.

The posting of the transactions recorded in the sales journal, Illustration No. 19 or No. 20, is shown in Illustration No. 21.

When the posting has been completed, take a Trial Balance.

 27. C. L. Loyd, 1604 Vine St., 100 lbs. brown sugar at 6½c; 100 lbs. granulated sugar at 7c; 5 bbls. White Rose flour at $9.75.

When the above transactions have been recorded in the sales journal as instructed, and the sales journal ruled as in Illustration No. 19, open accounts on a sheet of ledger paper with Sales and each of the eight customers, allowing five lines each for A. R. Jennings and Imperial Hotel and four lines for each of the other accounts. When the posting has been completed, take a Trial Balance.

After the instructor has approved this exercise, retain the sales journal only for use in connection with Exercise No. 22.

When the above transactions have been recorded in the sales journal as instructed, and the sales journal ruled as in Illustration No. 19, open an account with Sales eight lines from the top of page 1 of the double sheet of ledger paper used in Exercise No. 17; open an account with each of the six customers on page 3 of this same ledger sheet, allowing equal space for each personal account; take a Trial Balance. When approved, retain the ledger sheet for use in Exercise No. 23.

§ 42. The Cash Record. There are two classes of cash transactions: those in which cash is received, and those in which cash is paid. These transactions may be recorded in two separate journals, the receipts in a cash receipts journal and the payments in a cash payments journal, or they may be recorded in a cash book which is a combination of the two journals. When one bookkeeper records all the transactions with cash received and paid, it is better to use the cash book; when the recording of cash transactions requires more than one bookkeeper, it is better to use separate cash receipts and cash payments journals.

Illustration No. 22, Receipts Side of Cash Book.

EXPLANATION. The transactions recorded on the receipts side of the cash book in the illustration are equivalent to a journal entry in which the Cash account is debited for the total, and each of the four accounts credited for the amount written on the same line with it. The ruling separates the cash receipts for two different months; the balance at the beginning of the month is carried down below the ruling because it will be needed in subsequent proving of cash.

§ 43. The Cash Book is a book of original entry in which all receipts and payments of cash are recorded and no other transactions are recorded in it. Receipts and payments are usually recorded on separate pages opposite each other, receipts on the left and payments on the right. The complete record of a transaction in which cash is received or paid consists of the date, the name of the account affected, explanation, and the amount received or paid. The ruling in the cash book should be so arranged that all this information can be recorded on one line. When arranged in this manner, each account affected by a cash receipt can be credited for the amount and the Cash account debited for the total at the end of the month; each account affected by a cash payment can be debited for the amount and the Cash account credited for the total at the end of the month. One form of the cash book is shown in Illustrations Nos. 22 and 23; other forms will be illustrated and explained later.

When a cash sale is recorded in the cash book only, the Sales account is credited; if recorded in the sales journal and cash book, the customer whose account is debited by the sales journal entry is credited in the cash book entry. When a cash purchase is recorded in the cash book only, the Purchases account is debited; if recorded in the purchases journal and cash book, the creditor whose account is credited by the purchases journal entry is debited in the cash book entry.

The following receipts and payments of cash made during the month of January by E. B. Taylor, a retail grocer, are shown recorded in the cash book in Illustrations Nos. 22 and 23:

- Jan. 1. E. B. Taylor invested $1,000.00 in the retail grocery business.
- 4. Paid $20.00, city and state license for one year.
- 10. Paid J. F. Sherwood $102.00 for a cash purchase of merchandise.
- 12. Received $30.50 for sundry cash sales.
- 13. Paid E. C. Cline $77.30 in full of account.
- 20. Received $10.00 from A. R. Manley to apply on account.
- 27. Received $30.50 from the Gibson Hotel to apply on account.
- 30. Received $41.85 for sundry cash sales.

Illustration No. 23, Payments Side of Cash Book.

EXPLANATION. The transactions recorded on this side of the cash book are equivalent to a journal entry in which three accounts are debited, each for the amount written on the same line with it, and the Cash account credited for the total. The balance is entered in red ink because it is customary to use red ink when an amount is entered in a book of account or a ledger account in order to make the two sides equal. The ruling separates the cash payments for two different months.

§ 44. Proving Cash. The difference between the two sides of the cash book should at all times equal the amount of cash belonging to the business; the proof is effected by counting the cash and comparing it with the balance shown by the cash book. Cash should be proved before posting. After the cash is proved at the end of the month, the cash book is ruled; Illustrations Nos. 22 and 23 show the method of footing and ruling the cash book at the end of the month.

Illustration No. 24, Ledger Resulting from Posting Illustrations Nos. 22 and 23.

EXPLANATION. This illustration is given to show that the ledger is in balance when all the transactions recorded in the cash book have been posted, and not to show the true meaning of the accounts. Accounts resulting from the posting of transactions recorded in the cash book only will not show their true meaning because of the connection between the record in the cash book and that in the purchases and sales journals. If desired, the posting from the receipts side, the payments side, and both sides of the cash book may each be proved by a separate Trial Balance.

§ 45. Posting from the Cash Book. The accounts affected by each transaction recorded on the receipts side of the cash book are Cash debited and some account credited; for this reason each amount written on the line with the name of the account is posted to the credit of the account, and Cash is debited with the total at the end of the month. The accounts affected by each transaction recorded on the payments side of the cash book are some account debited and Cash credited; for this reason each amount written on the line with the name of the account is posted to the debit of the account, and Cash is credited with the total at the end of the month. The posting to the accounts debited and credited is daily, and to the Cash account monthly. The date, the letter "C" and the page of the cash book are entered in the ledger; the letter "C" indicates the title of the book of original entry. The page of the ledger is written in the folio column of the cash book to indicate where the entry has been posted.

The posting of the transactions recorded in the cash book, Illustrations Nos. 22 and 23, is shown in Illustration No. 24.

Some bookkeepers advise a Cash account in the ledger, while others accept the record in the cash book as the Cash account. The Cash account in the ledger will show the total receipts and total payments of cash for a period longer than a month, while the record in the cash book shows the total receipts and total payments for each month only. If it is desired to know the cash receipts and cash payments for the first six months of a given year, this information can be obtained from the total debits and total credits to the Cash account in the ledger; if the cash book is the only record of cash, it will be necessary to add the totals for each of the six months in order to ascertain the desired information.

Exercise No. 21, Recording Transactions in the Cash Book.

Record in the cash book (the two inside pages of a double sheet of journal paper* ruled similar to Illustrations Nos. 22 and 23), receipts on the left and payments on the right, the following cash transactions performed during the month of February:

 9. Received $90.00 from J. K. Lachman in payment for merchandise sold him on the 4th.
 10. Paid drayage on merchandise purchased, $22.50.

 24. Received $210.00 from H. M. Lovert to apply on account.
 25. Paid salesman's expenses, $76.00.
 Received $52.50 for cash sales.

(Concluded on page 54.)

*If double journal paper with from thirty to forty lines on each page is not available, cash receipts should be recorded on one sheet of paper and payments on another, as the proper ruling of the cash book cannot be shown when receipts are entered on one side and payments on the other side of the same sheet.

(Exercise No. 21—Continued from page 53.)

- Feb. 27. Paid $32.80 for freight on merchandise purchased.
 Paid clerk hire, $40.00.
 28. Paid for advertising, $22.50.
 Cash balance, $1,439.60.

When the above transactions have been recorded in the cash book as instructed, prove cash and rule the cash book as in Illustrations Nos. 22 and 23. Open accounts on a sheet of ledger paper with Student, Capital (5), Cash (5), Purchases (6), Sales (8), Expense (8), E. H. White (4), J. K. Lachman (4), P. B. S. Peters (4), H. M. Lovert (4), H. R. Swanson (4), A. B. Hill (4), J. G. Pipkin (4), J. T. Ludlow (4), allowing for each account the number of lines indicated. Post the transactions, and prove the equality of the debits and credits by a Trial Balance of balances.

Exercise No. 22, Recording Transactions in the Cash Book.

Record in the cash book, receipts on the left and payments on the right, the following cash transactions performed during the month of January by H. H. Goodm n, a retail grocer:

- Jan. 1. H. H. Goodman invested $2,000.00 in the retail grocery business.
 4. Paid $20.00 for city license.
 5. Paid City Milling Co. $192.00 for a cash purchase.
 6. Received $30.00 for sundry cash sales.
 Paid Brown & Co. $77.30 in full of account.
 9. Received $10.00 from A. R. Jennings to apply on account.
 12. Received $30.00 from Central Hotel to apply on account.
 13. Received $40.00 for sundry cash sales.
 Paid Knox Bros. $100.00 to apply on account.
 18. Received $35.00 from M. A. Johnson to apply on account.
 20. Paid Knox Bros. $34.95 in full of account.
 Received $50.00 for sundry cash sales.
 24. Received $15.00 from Central Hotel to apply on account.
 Paid Hazen & Lockhart $125.00 to apply on account.
 26. Received $15.10 from A. R. Jennings to apply on account.
 27. Received $42.50 for sundry cash sales.
 29. Received $50.00 from C. L. Loyd to apply on account.
 30. Paid Brown & Co. $150.00 to apply on account.
 31. Paid bookkeeper's salary, $35.00; rent, $25.00.
 Cash balance, $1,558.35.

When the above transactions have been recorded in the cash book as instructed, prove cash and rule the cash book; then proceed as follows:

1. Open accounts on ledger paper with H. H. Goodm n, Capital (4), Cash (4), Purchases (4), Sales (6), Expense (4), A. R. Jennings (4), Central Hotel (4), M. A. Johnson (4), C. L. Loyd (4), Brown & Co. (4), Knox Bros. (4), Hazen & Lockhart (4), allowing for each account the space indicated; post the transactions, and prove the equality of the debits and credits by a Trial Balance of balances.

2. After the instructor has approved the work required in the first paragraph, post to a sheet of ledger paper the transactions in the purchases journal for Exercise No. 16 and the sales journal for Exercise No. 19, which you were instructed to retain, and the cash book in this exercise. Arrange the accounts as follows: Cash (6), customers (each 4 lines), creditors (each 4 lines), H. H. Goodm n, Capital (5), Sales (7), Purchases (4), Expense (4), allowing for each the number of lines indicated; take a Trial Balance of balances from this ledger.

The purpose of the second division of this exercise is to show that the ledger is in balance when all the transactions from all the special journals have been posted, the same as it is when all the transactions from each special journal have been posted.

Present the purchases journal, sales journal, cash book, ledger resulting from posting the transactions from the three books, and Trial Balances to the instructor for approval.

Exercise No. 23, Recording Transactions in the Cash Book.

 6. Received $10.50 from R. L. Watson in full of account.
 8. Paid Bay State Shoe Co. $496.81 in full of account.

Paid Cline Shoe Co. $168.42 for merchandise purchased on the 6th.
Received $361.92 for cash sales.
Cash balance, $902.54.

When the above transactions have been recorded in the cash book as instructed, prove cash and rule the cash book. Open an account on page 1 of the double sheet of ledger paper used in Exercises Nos. 17 and 20 with C. U. Steele, Capital, eleven lines below the heading of the Sales account, an account with Expense seven lines below the heading of the account with C. U. Steele, Capital, and an account with Cash fourteen lines below the heading of the Expense account. Post the entries in the cash book to the accounts on pages 1, 2 and 3 of the ledger sheet, and take a Trial Balance of balances.

Retain the ledger and Trial Balance for use in Exercise No. 37.

§ 46. The General Journal is a book of original entry in which all transactions are recorded except those recorded in special journals. The general journal is the same as the journal explained in § 22, and the ruling is the same as the various illustrations of the journal given in preceding chapters. When purchases are recorded in the purchases journal, sales in the sales journal, and cash receipts and payments in the cash book, all other transactions are recorded in the general journal. These transactions may be classified into four groups: (1) opening entries; (2) current entries; (3) correcting entries; (4) adjusting and closing entries.

¶ 1. Opening Entries are those necessary to record assets other than cash invested by the owner at the beginning of the business. If the business is owned by one person and his investment is cash, the opening entry will be made in the cash book. If assets other than cash are invested, the accounts which are to show the value of the assets will be debited, and the owner's Capital account credited for the total of the assets in the opening entry in the journal. If the owner wishes to have the business assume liabilities, two entries are necessary to open the books, one to record the assets, and the other to record the liabilities; the owner's Capital account is debited for the total liabilities, and the accounts which are to show the liabilities, credited.

ILLUSTRATION. January 1, S. J. Shook began the retail shoe business. He invested cash $500.00, merchandise $425.65, and an account due him from W. H. Barton for $221.75. He owes the Ritter Shoe Co. $150.00 and the Haynes Shoe Co. $75.85. The cash invested will be recorded in the cash book as in the first entry in Illustration No. 22; the other assets and the liabilities will be recorded in the general journal as in the illustration at the right.

If desired, the entry for the cash invested may be made in connection with the entry in the general journal for the other assets. When this plan is followed, cash and each asset is debited and the proprietor credited in the same form as in the illustration. The proprietor is also credited for the cash in the cash book in the same manner as though the entry for the cash had not been made in the general journal. A check mark is placed in the L. F. column at the left of Cash in the general journal and at the left of the proprietor's name in the cash book to avoid double posting.

¶ 2. Current Entries are those necessary to record transactions in the regular operations of the business. When the nature of these transactions is such that they cannot be recorded in one of the special journals, it is necessary to record them in the general journal. Current entries include those for transactions in which merchandise is returned to a creditor, a customer returns merchandise, assets other than cash are accepted from customers in payment of their obligations, and assets other than cash are given to a creditor in payment of an obligation owed him.

ILLUSTRATION. May 12, George A. Douglas purchased from the Potter Shoe Co. two pairs shoes at $8.50, with the privilege of returning one pair within five days. This transaction was recorded in the sales journal, his account being debited with $17.00. May 15 he returned one pair and received credit for $8.50 as per agreement. The entry required in the general journal is shown in the illustration at the right.

¶ 3. Correcting Entries are those made necessary because of errors in recording transactions. These errors may occur in the calculations necessary to ascertain the amount of a sale, a purchase, merchandise returned by a customer, merchandise returned to a creditor, or they may be the result of incorrect posting.

ILLUSTRATION. April 16, C. A. Moore purchased from Dawes Bros., retail tire dealers two 32 x 3½ Fisk cord tires at $37.75 each. The transaction was recorded in the sales journal by the bookkeeper for Dawes Bros., but through an error, the amount was entered as $85.50 instead of $75.50. May 1, Dawes Bros. received $75.50 from Mr. Moore in full payment for the two tires. When the bookkeeper for Dawes Bros. posted the amount to Mr. Moore's account, there was a balance of $10.00, due to the error which Mr. Moore had reported. The only means of correcting this error was through an entry in the general journal similar to that in the illustration at the right.

¶ 4. Adjusting and Closing Entries are those required at the end of a business year. These are explained and illustrated in Chapter VIII.

¶ 5. Posting from the General Journal. Each amount entered in the debit column is posted to the debit side of the account written on the same line with it. Each amount entered in the credit column is posted to the credit side of the account written on the same line with it. The process is the same as that given in § 23.

C. Miller (7), M. B. Wallace (7), Central Hotel (6), Central Coal Co. (6), Davis Coal Co. (6), Jellico Coal Co. (6), H. A. Popp, Capital (8), Sales (12), Purchases (10), Expense (8), allowing for each account the number of lines indicated; post from the books of original entry, and take a Trial Balance of balances.

Retain the ledger and Trial Balance for use in Exercise No. 39.

Summary of Chapters II, III, IV and V. Transactions may be recorded direct in the ledger, in one journal and posted to the ledger, or in special journals and posted to the ledger; the final results are the same in each case. The Trial Balance, if in balance, proves that the total of the debit amounts recorded in the ledger equals the total of the credit amounts recorded in the ledger; also that the addition of those accounts which have more than one amount recorded on the debit or credit side is correct. The Trial Balance may be made by using the total debits and total credits of each account, or the balance of each account; the final results are the same with either method.

Each account is debited and credited through the recording of business transactions. All money received is recorded on the debit side of the Cash account, and all money paid on the credit side. The value of merchandise purchased is recorded on the debit side of the Purchases account, and the value of merchandise returned to a creditor on the credit side of this account. The value of merchandise sold is recorded on the credit side of the Sales account and the value of merchandise which customers return is recorded on the debit side of this account. When a customer buys merchandise and does not pay for it at the time it is purchased, his account is debited for the amount; when he pays this obligation to the business, his account is credited. When a business buys merchandise and does not pay for it at the time of purchase, the account with the creditor is credited; when the business pays this obligation, the account with the creditor is debited. When a customer has paid all he owes, his account will be in balance; when the business has paid a creditor all it owes him, his account will be in balance. The expenses of the business are recorded on the debit side of the Expense account. The owner of the business is credited in his Capital account with the investment, and debited with any amount which he withdraws from the investment.

The purpose of special journals is to save time in recording transactions and posting to the accounts in the ledger. When a number of transactions affect the same account, the amounts debited or credited to this account may be posted in one amount if all these transactions are in one journal. The purchases journal contains a record of all transactions in which merchandise is purchased on account; the sales journal contains a record of all transactions in which merchandise is sold on account; the cash book contains a record of all transactions in which cash is received and paid.

Chapter VI

A MODEL SET

The Purpose of this Model Set is to illustrate the recording of transactions for a period of two months and to serve as a basis for completing the two practice sets which are separate from the text. The references in connection with each transaction correlate the principles discussed in the preceding chapters with the recording of the transactions. Illustrations Nos. 25-38 show the method of recording the transactions for September and October, ruling the books of account, posting, forwarding accounts, and the Trial Balance at the close of each month. The student is not required to record the transactions for September and October, but he should check them with the entries in the illustrations before he begins the first practice set, or as he proceeds with it.

Paid bookkeeper's salary for September, $75.00; rent for September, $65.00. (§ 32, ¶ 1; § 15, ¶ 2. Illustration No. 30.)
Proved cash (balance, $618.00), and ruled the cash book. Posted* from the purchases, sales and general journals, and the cash book. Footed and ruled the purchases journal and sales journal; posted the total purchases, sales, cash receipts and cash payments. Took a Trial Balance of balances; checked the Trial Balance because it did not balance due to an error in posting. (Illustration No. 37.)

The check marks on the double line at the left of each amount in the books of original entry indicate that the September Trial Balance did not balance and it was necessary for the bookkeeper to check the posting to ascertain the error. These check marks should be made on the double line to avoid confusion with the figures. It is not always possible to show the exact position of these check marks in the illustrations due to the variation in printing.

Chapter VII

BALANCE SHEET AND STATEMENT OF PROFIT AND LOSS

The Purpose of this Chapter is to explain the Balance Sheet and Statement of Profit and Loss—two reports prepared by the bookkeeper for the information of the owner. The illustrations are applicable to the business of W. A. Gordon in the Model Set, Chapter VI. The income tax return for an individual is explained and illustrated in Appendix C.

§ 47. Fiscal Period. The owner of a business will want to know from time to time the results of his operations because he has invested cash or other assets in the business with the purpose of making a profit. Since the Federal Government requires a report of the results of the operations of the business for one year in order to ascertain the amount of income tax the business is to pay, the owner usually ascertains the results of operating the business yearly. However, if the nature of the business is such that the profit should be ascertained more often, the owner can obtain this information at such times as he desires, but this does not release him from the yearly report required by the Federal Government. The period of operation for which the profit is ascertained is referred to as the fiscal period, which, as explained, may be for one year or such part of a year as the owner may designate.

§ 48. Method of Ascertaining the Profit or Loss. The profit or loss resulting from the operations of a business is (1) the difference between the proprietorship at the beginning and the proprietorship at the end of a fiscal period, and (2) the difference between the income and the cost for the period. If the value received and the value parted with in each transaction are recorded, the profit or loss will be the same with each of the two methods. When ascertaining the profit or loss by subtracting the proprietorship at the beginning and end of the period, it is necessary to take into consideration withdrawals from capital and additional investments during the period.

The proprietorship of W. O. Crosswhite, a retail grocer, January 1, is $8,000.00, and on December 31 of the same year, $11,500.00. If he has not withdrawn part of his invested capital or invested additional capital during the year, his net profit is $3,500.00; if he had withdrawn $500.00 from his capital during the year, his net profit would have been $4,000.00, and if he had invested an additional $500.00 during the year, his net profit would have been $3,000.00. If, during the same year, the income resulting from the operations of the grocery business conducted by Mr. Crosswhite is $6,500.00 and the cost, $3,000.00, his net profit is $3,500.00. It is necessary for Mr. Crosswhite to know the amount of the income and cost as well as the net profit, because he must submit this information on his income tax return as explained in Appendix C.

§ 49. A Merchandise Inventory is the value of all merchandise in stock at the close of a fiscal period as shown by a written list of this merchandise. The information on this list includes the quantity and description of each kind of merchandise and its value at cost or present market price whichever is the lower.

It is necessary to ascertain the value of the merchandise owned by the business through an inventory at the close of the fiscal period because it is one of the assets and its value is not shown in either the Purchases or the Sales account. The Purchases account shows the cost of the merchandise bought, and the Sales account the returns from sales, but the value of the merchandise in stock is not shown as a result of this record because the selling price is greater than the cost price.

A unit record of the merchandise purchased and sold may be kept in certain lines of business, such as musical instruments, shoes, clothing, and furniture; but in other lines, such as hardware, groceries, and dry goods, it is not practicable to keep a record of each unit purchased and sold. It is necessary to ascertain the value of merchandise in stock by an inventory at the close of the fiscal period whether or not a record of the units purchased and sold is kept, because of thefts, errors in filling orders, and many other causes which result in the number of units shown by the record not corresponding with the number of units on hand.

An inventory of the following merchandise owned by W. A. Gordon and in stock by actual count at the close of the fiscal period ending October 31, would appear in inventory form as in Illustration No. 39:

Granulated sugar, 1,216 lbs., cost $4.50 per 100 lbs.; 1,183 lbs. brown sugar, cost $4.10 per 100 lbs.; 256 lbs. roasted coffee, cost 22c per lb.; 1,802 lbs. bacon, cost 15c per lb.; 8 hams, 183 lbs., cost 17c per lb.; 5 cans, 261 lbs., lard, cost 16c per lb.; 24 doz. cans tomatoes, cost $1.10 per doz.; 20 doz. cans pineapples, cost $2.00 per doz.; 18 doz. cans peaches, cost $1.95 per doz.; 20 doz. cans corn, cost $1.50 per doz.; 268 lbs. creamery butter, cost 33c per lb.; 60 bbls. THE BALANCE SHEET

§ 50. The Balance Sheet is a written report of the assets, liabilities, and proprietorship of a business prepared at the close of a fiscal period. The information is obtained from the asset and liability accounts in the ledger (Trial Balance) and the merchandise inventory at the close of the fiscal period. The assets are usually listed as follows: cash, notes receivable (written promises to pay money to the business), accounts with customers, and merchandise inventory. The liabilities are usually listed as follows: notes payable (written promises signed by the business), and accounts with creditors. The accounts should be arranged in the ledger in the order in which they appear on the Balance Sheet.

The Balance Sheet may be prepared in "account" form (Illustration No. 40) or "report" form (Illustration No. 41). Either form is correct, but accountants usually prefer the account form because it shows assets opposite liabilities; this information is of value to the owner of the business in determining his financial condition because the liabilities must be paid out of the assets.

STATEMENT OF PROFIT AND LOSS

§ 51. The Statement of Profit and Loss is a written report of the income, costs, and net profit or loss resulting from the operations of a business during a fiscal period, prepared at the close of the period. This information is obtained from the income and cost accounts in the ledger (Trial Balance) and the inventory of merchandise at the close of the period. The report should show (1) the net sales, (2) the cost of the merchandise sold, (3) the profit made by selling merchandise, (4) the operating cost of the business, and (5) the net profit or loss. The accounts should be arranged in the ledger in the order in which they appear on the Statement of Profit and Loss so that this report can be prepared from the Trial Balance without rearranging the accounts thereon.

The Statement of Profit and Loss may be prepared in account form or in report form (Illustration No. 42), the same as the Balance Sheet. Accountants usually prefer the report form because the deductions in connection with ascertaining the profit on sales and the operating cost of the business can be shown more distinctly in this form.

The income, costs, and beginning inventory of W. A. Gordon, as shown by the accounts in his ledger October 31, page 73, are as follows:

Income:
Sales of merchandise.....	$2,364.00
Less merchandise returned by customers.....	15.35
Costs:

Purchases of merchandise during the period.....	2,635.10
Less merchandise returned to creditors.....	22.60
Expense (operating cost) for the period.....	327.40

The merchandise inventory at the close of the fiscal period, October 31 (Illustration No. 39), is $1,477.15.

Gordon, prepared in "report" form from the income and cost accounts in the ledger on page 73 (Trial Balance, page 74) and the inventory of merchandise, page 78. The same information may be shown in "account" form in the same manner as in the Balance Sheet, Illustration No. 40. Sales Cr. minus Sales Dr. equals net returns from sales; Purchases Dr. minus Purchases Cr. equals net purchases; net purchases minus inventory at the close of the fiscal period equals cost of merchandise sold; net returns from sales minus cost of merchandise sold equals profit made by selling merchandise; profit made by selling merchandise minus Expense Dr. equals net profit. The "Proof" shown on this statement is explained in § 52.

The inventory of merchandise, July 31, is $6,181.75.

§ 52. Relation Between the Two Reports. The Balance Sheet and Statement of Profit and Loss have been discussed independent of each other because the purpose of the discussion was to explain the nature of each report. However, there is a relation between these two reports because the information is obtained from the accounts which show the results of recording business transactions completed by a business during a fiscal period.

If all the accounts on pages 70, 71, 72 and 73 are checked with those accounts used in preparing the Balance Sheet (Illustration No. 40) and the Statement of Profit and Loss (Illustration No. 42), it will be observed that the only account not appearing on either of the two reports is that with W. A. Gordon, Capital; also that the Balance Sheet shows the capital of W. A. Gordon as a different amount from that shown by his Capital account in the ledger. The reason his Capital account as it appears at the close of the fiscal period is not shown on either report is that his proprietorship has increased through the operations of the business; in this case the increase is $385.90, the difference between the net investment and the proprietorship at the close of the period, also the difference between the income and cost.

Because of this relation between the two reports, the bookkeeper can prove the correctness of each report before submitting it to the owner of the business. A proof of the reports in Illustrations Nos. 40 and 42 is given below the Statement of Profit and Loss, Illustration No. 42. If desired, this same proof may be shown in connection with the Balance Sheet.

It is customary to show assets, liabilities, and proprietorship on the Balance Sheet, and income, costs, and the net profit on the Statement of Profit and Loss; hence the proof of the two reports may be made separate from the reports or in connection with one of them.

8. Name some conditions that might cause a discrepancy between the record and the actual stock on hand.
9. If merchandise which cost $800.00 is inventoried at $600.00, the present market price, what effect will this have on the net profit for the period?

19. If the net returns from sales are $4,565.50 and the expense of operating the business is $4,375.00, what does this indicate?
20. If the total assets are $7,682.50 and the total liabilities $6,552.90, what does this indicate?
21. If the total assets are $10,500.00 and the total liabilities $1,500.00, what does this indicate?
22. Would it be practicable for a department store to make a Balance Sheet and Statement of Profit and Loss at the close of each month? Why?
23. Why is it necessary for each business concern in the United States to have a Balance Sheet and a Statement of Profit and Loss prepared at least once each year?

Chapter VIII

CLOSING THE LEDGER

The Purpose of this Chapter is to explain and illustrate the process of closing the ledger at the end of a fiscal period. It is customary to close the ledger at the end of a fiscal period in order that the profit or loss resulting from the operations of the business during the period may be credited or debited to the owner's account, and in order that the income and cost accounts may be in balance at the beginning of the next period. The illustrations are applicable to the business of W. A. Gordon in the Model Set, Chapter VI.

§ 53. Closing the Ledger is an accounting term applied to the process of transferring the net profit or net loss to the owner's Capital account at the close of a fiscal period. This process requires the closing of all income and cost accounts which appear on the Statement of Profit and Loss. As explained in § 34, the owner's interest in the business consists of the assets invested at the beginning of the business, subsequent investments, and the net profit resulting from the operations of the business, less withdrawals from the investment, and the net loss, if the business has been operated at a loss. The debits and credits to the owner's Capital account will show the investments and withdrawals, but will not show the profit or loss resulting from the operations of the business until the ledger has been closed. For this reason, it is customary for the bookkeeper or accountant to close all accounts shown on the Statement of Profit and Loss at the close of a fiscal period and to debit or credit the owner's Capital account with the loss or profit reported to the owner on the Statement of Profit and Loss.

§ 54. Accounts Required in Closing the Ledger. Two accounts in addition to those discussed in the preceding chapters are required in closing the ledger: one to show the value of the merchandise inventory and the other to show the operating cost, special losses, gross profit on sales, special profits, and net profit; the former account is usually given the title "Inventory" or "Merchandise Inventory," and the latter, "Profit and Loss." Other accounts may be required; these will be explained and illustrated as they are needed in connection with the discussion of the adjusting and closing entries.

INVENTORY ACCOUNT

§ 55. The Purpose of this Account is to show the value of the merchandise on hand at the close of the fiscal period as indicated by the merchandise inventory. It is necessary to show the value of the inventory in an account in the ledger because it is shown as one of the assets on the Balance Sheet.

Debit the Inventory Account:

¶ 1. At the close of each fiscal period, with the value of the merchandise inventory at the close of the period.

Credit the Inventory Account:

¶ 2. At the beginning or close of each fiscal period, with the value of the merchandise inventory at the close of the preceding fiscal period as indicated by the entry on the debit side.

¶ 3. The Balance of this Account shows the value of the merchandise inventory at the close of the fiscal period.

PROFIT AND LOSS ACCOUNT

§ 56. The Purpose of this Account is to show the operating cost, special losses, principal income, and special profits for the fiscal period as shown by the Statement of Profit and Loss. No transactions are recorded in this account, the debits and credits being formed by transferring to it the balances of the profit and loss accounts shown on the Statement of Profit and Loss. If desired, the balances of these accounts could be closed direct into the owner's Capital account, but it is considered the better practice to have one account in the ledger which summarizes the facts shown on the Statement of Profit and Loss. This account is opened only at the close of the fiscal period, and when the balances of all the profit and loss accounts have been transferred to it and its balance transferred to the owner's Capital account, it is ruled and remains in balance until the close of the next fiscal period.

Direct profits or losses that occur during the fiscal period should not be credited or debited to the Profit and Loss account, but to a special account, the name of which should indicate the nature of the profit or loss, as "Profit on Sales of Real Estate," "Loss on Stolen Typewriter," "Loss on Delivery Truck," etc.

Debit the Profit and Loss Account:

- ¶ 1. At the close of each fiscal period, with the balance of the Expense account or accounts.
- ¶ 2. At the close of each fiscal period, with the balance of each account which shows a loss.

Credit the Profit and Loss Account:

- ¶ 3. At the close of each fiscal period, with the gross profit on sales.
- ¶ 4. At the close of each fiscal period, with the balance of each account which shows a profit.

¶ 5. The Balance of the Profit and Loss Account shows the net profit or net loss for the fiscal period, which is the same as the "Net Profit" or "Net Loss" shown on the Statement of Profit and Loss. This balance is debited or credited to the owner's Capital account.

The student may wonder why the account is not named "Loss and Profit," or "Loss and Gain," because the losses are recorded on the debit side and the gains or profits on the credit side. The title "Profit and Loss" is not arbitrary, and "Loss and Gain" may be used if desired. However, the title "Profit and Loss" is preferred by accountants because the account is a summary of those accounts used in connection with the preparation of the Statement of Profit and Loss.

CLOSING ENTRIES

§ 57. Entries to Close the Ledger. Five or more entries are necessary to close the ledger as follows: (1) to record the merchandise inventory at the close of the fiscal period; (2) to close the Purchases account; (3) to close the Sales account; (4) to close the Expense account; (5) to close the Profit and Loss account. A separate entry is required to close each account which shows an income or a cost, hence the number of entries will depend on the number of accounts to be closed. The information for these entries is obtained from the Statement of Profit and Loss, hence this statement is used as a guide in closing the ledger.

The first entry may be regarded as an adjusting entry required to show in the ledger the value of an asset used in the preparation of the Balance Sheet, or as one of the entries necessary in the process of closing the ledger. (§ 46, ¶¶ 4 and 5.)

§ 58. Methods of Closing the Ledger. The five or more closing entries are of the same nature as entries for transactions which occur in the regular operations of the business in that each entry requires an account debited and an account credited, the values being the same. These entries may be made direct in the ledger accounts or in the general journal and posted to the ledger in the same manner as transactions. When entries are made in the general journal and posted to the ledger, the process is known as the "journal entry method" of closing the ledger; when the adjusting entries are made direct in the ledger, the process of closing is referred to as the "direct method" of closing the ledger. Both methods of closing the ledger will be discussed and illustrated to emphasize the fact that the final results are the same no matter which method is used.

The student might conclude from the foregoing discussion that the direct method of closing is used when the transactions are recorded direct in the ledger, and the journal entry method of closing when the transactions are recorded in books of original entry and posted to the ledger. However, this is not true in practice, because many bookkeepers prefer the direct method of closing even though the transactions are recorded in books of original entry and posted. It is quite evident that the journal entry method is the better because it facilitates auditing by providing a record of the closing entries in a book of original entry.

§ 59. Journal Entry Method. When the closing entries are made in the journal, they are recorded in the same manner as those necessary to record transactions. All the entries are made under date of the last day of the fiscal period. The five journal entries required to close the ledger of W. A. Gordon (Model Set) on pages 70-73 are shown in the illustration on page 90. The posting of these closing entries is shown in the illustration on pages 91 and 92; pages 70 and 71 are not repeated because none of the accounts on these two pages are affected by the closing entries. An analysis of the closing entries is given on pages 94, 95 and 96.

§ 60. Direct Method of Closing. When the closing entries are made direct in the ledger and not in the journal, they are recorded in the same manner as transactions (§§ 19, 29 and 35), except it is customary to use red ink in the entry which balances an account. The ledger page is given in each entry for reference. The entries are made under date of the last day of the fiscal period. The process of closing the ledger of W. A. Gordon (Model Set) on pages 70-73 by the direct method is explained and illustrated in Appendix B.

The direct method of closing is illustrated in Appendix B, separate from the journal entry method in this chapter to avoid confusion. The student should compare the two methods because a knowledge of both is necessary to a thorough understanding of each. The final results are the same with either method, but preference is given to the journal entry method in this text because it is preferred and recommended by practicing accountants. The reason for this preference is that the entries in the journal facilitate auditing. Before auditing a ledger which has been closed by the direct method, it is necessary for the auditor to prepare journal entries so that he may know that each entry has been posted.

§ 61. Balancing an Account. When it is desired to rule an account which does not balance and carry the balance down below the ruling on the same page or forward it to a new page, the process is referred to as balancing an account. This is effected by entering the balance on the smaller side under the date on which the account is balanced and ruling the account. It is customary to use red ink for the date, figures and the ruling, but its use is not arbitrary. The balance is brought down with black ink on the opposite side of the account below the ruling or under the title of the account on a new page. The method of balancing the Cash account is shown on page 70 and the proprietor's Capital account on page 91.

§ 62. A Post-Closing Trial Balance is a list of the open accounts in the ledger with the balance set opposite the name of each account, prepared after all the adjusting and closing entries have been made in the accounts. The facts shown on this Trial Balance are the same as those shown on the Balance Sheet and should be checked with it before the Balance Sheet is submitted to the owner for his approval. This Trial Balance is necessary in order that the bookkeeper may know that the accounts in the ledger agree with the facts shown on the Balance Sheet, and that the ledger is in balance before the transactions performed in the next fiscal period are recorded.

EXPLANATION. This illustration shows the five entries (§ 57) to close the ledger for W. A. Gordon, Model Set, made in journal form (§ 59). The information is obtained from the Statement of Profit and Loss, Illustration No. 42. These entries are analyzed and further explained on pages 94, 95 and 96.

The above account would be opened on page 5 of the ledger for the Model Set, the first four pages being full as shown on pages 70, 71, 91 and 92. This account is the result of closing the Purchases, Sales and Expense accounts; the balance has been transferred to W. A. Gordon, Capital, as shown in the illustration at the bottom of page 91.

BALANCING THE CAPITAL ACCOUNT

If desired, the owner's Capital account may be ruled and his present capital (proprietary interest in the business) carried down under date of the beginning of the next fiscal period. If this plan is followed, the present capital is entered on the debit side with red ink, and the balance carried down on the credit side under date of the beginning of the next fiscal period as in the illustration at the bottom of page 91.

This Trial Balance is made from the ledger accounts on pages 70, 71, 91 and 92; the Accounts Receivable and Accounts Payable are each shown in one amount because these were not affected by the closing entries. The accounts are arranged in the same order as the accounts appear in the ledger. The facts on this Trial Balance are the same as those shown by the Balance Sheet. The post-closing Trial Balance proves that the ledger is in balance after the closing entries are posted.

Combined Journal Entry

If desired, the accounts used in making the Statement of Profit and Loss may be closed with their balances by a combined journal entry. The journal entry at the right shows this method of closing the accounts which were closed by the five separate entries on page 90. This form of closing is not recommended by accountants because the Profit and Loss account is omitted. It is desirable to have in the ledger a summary of all the accounts showing a profit or loss such as that provided by the Profit and Loss account, because this information is very valuable for statistical purposes. The student will understand this better after he is more familiar with the accounting procedure developed later in the course.

ANALYSIS OF CLOSING ENTRIES ON PAGE 90

The First Entry is that required to record the merchandise inventory at the close of the fiscal period. This entry is necessary because the cost of sales is ascertained on the Statement of Profit and Loss by subtracting the inventory at the close of the fiscal period from the net purchases. The Inventory account is debited to record the asset; the Purchases account is credited for the inventory so that when it is posted, the subtraction will be indicated. It is customary to write "Mdse. Inv." in the explanation column of the Inventory account, and "Inventory" in the explanation column of the Purchases account.

The illustration at the right shows the Purchases account at the close of the fiscal period, the journal entry to record the inventory at the close of the period, and the Inventory and Purchases accounts as they appear after the journal entry has been posted.

			31	Inventory fr 147715

The Second Entry is that required to transfer the balance of the Purchases account to the Sales account. This entry is necessary because the profit on sales is ascertained on the Statement of Profit and Loss by subtracting the cost of merchandise sold from the net sales. The Sales account is debited for the cost of sales so that when it is posted, the subtraction will be indicated; Purchases is credited because this account shows the cost of sales. When this entry is posted, the Purchases account will balance and be ruled, and the balance of the Sales account will show the net profit on sales as shown by the Statement of Profit and Loss. It is customary to write "Cost of Sales" in the explanation column of each of these accounts.

The illustration at the right shows the Sales and Purchases accounts before the second entry has been posted, the journal entry to close the Purchases account into the Sales account, and the Sales and Purchases accounts after this journal entry has been posted. The balance of the Sales account now shows the net profit made by selling merchandise because the credit side shows sales and the debit side cost.

The Third Entry is that required to transfer the balance of the Sales account to the Profit and Loss account. This entry is necessary because it is customary to show in the ledger a summary of the facts shown by the Statement of Profit and Loss. Sales is debited because this account shows the profit on sales; the Profit and Loss account is credited because this account is credited for all income. When this entry is posted, the Sales account will balance and be ruled, and the Profit and Loss account will show the profit on sales. It is customary to write "Profit on Sales" in the explanation column of each of these accounts.

The illustration at the right shows the Sales account before the third entry has been posted, the journal entry to close the Sales account into the Profit and Loss account, and the Sales and Profit and Loss accounts after this journal entry has been posted. The profits and losses could be closed direct into the proprietor's account instead of Profit and Loss as explained in § 56.

The Fourth Entry is that required to transfer the balance of the Expense account to the Profit and Loss account. This entry is necessary because the net profit is ascertained on the Statement of Profit and Loss by subtracting the expense from the profit on sales. The Profit and Loss account is debited so that when it is posted, the subtraction will be indicated; the Expense account is credited because this account shows the expense for the period. When this entry is posted, the Expense account will balance and be ruled, and the balance of the Profit and Loss account will show the net profit. It is customary to write "Profit and Loss" in the explanation column of the Expense account, and "Expense" in the explanation column of the Profit and Loss account.

The illustration at the right shows the Profit and Loss and the Expense accounts before the fourth entry has been posted, the journal entry to close the Expense account into the Profit and Loss account, and the Profit and Loss and the Expense accounts after this entry has been posted.

The Fifth Entry is that required to transfer the balance of the Profit and Loss account to the proprietor's Capital account. This entry is necessary because the purpose of closing the ledger is to transfer the net profit to the proprietor's account. The Profit and Loss account is debited because this account shows the net profit; the proprietor's Capital account is credited because this profit is equivalent to an additional investment. When this entry is posted, the Profit and Loss account will balance and be ruled, and the proprietor's Capital account will show his present proprietorship as shown by the Balance Sheet. It is customary to write the name of the proprietor's Capital account in the explanation column of the Profit and Loss account, and "Profit and Loss" in the explanation column of the proprietor's account.

The illustration at the right shows the Profit and Loss account and the account with W. A. Gordon, Capital, before the fifth entry has been posted, the journal entry to close the Profit and Loss account, and the Profit and Loss and W. A. Gordon Capital accounts after this entry has been posted.

If desired, the proprietor's Capital account may be balanced and ruled as explained on page 93 and illustrated at the bottom of page 91; this plan is usually followed.

Closing the Inventory Account

If desired, the inventory of merchandise at the close of the fiscal period may be transferred to the Purchases account at the beginning of the next fiscal period. If it is not transferred to the Purchases account at the beginning of the period, then it will be necessary to transfer it to this account at the close of the period because the cost of merchandise on hand at the beginning of the period must be added to the cost of merchandise purchased during the period to ascertain the total cost of all merchandise. The form of entry for transferring the merchandise inventory to the Purchases account is the same whether it is made at the beginning or the close of the period. The entry necessary to transfer the inventory to the Purchases account for W. A. Gordon, Model Set, is shown at the right. The date, November 1, at the top, indicates that this entry was made at the beginning of the next fiscal period. After this is posted, the Inventory account will be in balance, and the value of the inventory will appear on the debit side of the Purchases account under date of November 1; it is customary to write "Inventory" in the explanation column of the ledger.

The student was instructed to retain the Trial Balance and ledger at the conclusion of Exercise No. 26.

Summary of Chapters VI, VII and VIII. The Model Set in Chapter VI illustrates the method of recording transactions, posting and taking a Trial Balance. Illustrations are provided so that the student may see the connection between the transactions and the Trial Balance at the end of the month.

The Balance Sheet is a report showing the assets, liabilities and proprietorship. The Statement of Profit and Loss is a report showing a list of the income, costs and net profit. The proprietorship as shown by the Balance Sheet less the net profit or plus the net loss as shown by the Statement of Profit and Loss equals the proprietorship at the beginning of the fiscal period.

"Closing the ledger" is a term used to describe the method of transferring the profit or loss to the owner's Capital account. Certain entries are required to make this transfer. These entries may be made direct in the ledger in the same manner as transactions may be recorded direct in the ledger, or they may be recorded in the general journal and posted to the ledger. The accounts to be closed are those used in connection with the Statement of Profit and Loss; they include cost and income accounts. The Profit and Loss account is used in the process of closing; when all accounts have been closed, the balance of the Profit and Loss account is transferred to the owner's Capital account. The post-closing Trial Balance proves that the equality of debits and credits has been maintained throughout the closing process.

11. If the business had made a profit other than that shown by the Purchases, Sales and Inventory accounts, would a separate entry be required to close this profit into the Profit and Loss account? If the profit is credited to a Profit on Sales of Real Estate account, name the accounts debited and credited in the closing entry.
12. A business owned a horse which it used in connection with the delivery of its merchandise; this horse died and the loss was debited to a "Loss on Dead Horse" account. Would a special entry be required to close the balance of this account into the Profit and Loss account? Name the accounts debited and credited in this closing entry.
13. After the ledger is closed, what accounts remain open?
14. What relation does the credit to the owner's Capital account after it is closed have to the assets and liabilities shown by the accounts that remain open after the ledger is closed?
15. Describe the process of closing the ledger by the direct method.
16. Describe the process of closing the ledger by the journal entry method.
17. Which method of closing the ledger is considered the better? Why?
18. Are the debits and credits equal in each closing entry? Why is this necessary?
19. If an account is closed with an incorrect amount, what effect will this have on the Trial Balance of the first month of the next fiscal period?
20. Mention an error in the closing of the ledger which would effect future Trial Balances.
21. Why is the Cash account balanced at the close of the fiscal period?
22. Describe the entry necessary to close the balance of the Inventory account into the Purchases account. When should this entry be made?
23. Is it necessary to balance each customer's account and each creditor's account in the ledger at the close of the fiscal period? Give reasons for your answer.
24. Is it necessary to balance the Capital account after the net profit or net loss for the period has been credited or debited to it?
25. Why is red ink used for closing the Capital account even though the other accounts may be closed by journal entries?

Chapter IX

BUSINESS FORMS AND VOUCHERS

The Purpose of this and the two Succeeding Chapters is to explain and illustrate those business forms used most frequently in connection with the performance of business transactions. A printed statement of the business transaction which has been completed is sufficient for determining the debits and credits in connection with the transaction, but a knowledge of business forms is necessary because they represent transactions to the bookkeeper.

§ 63. A Business Form or Voucher is a written statement concerning a business transaction to be performed or one that has been completed. The two terms are used with the same meaning, but the term "voucher" usually refers to a business form which is an evidence of a cash payment. Business forms prepared for a specific purpose are usually printed with blank space for the information desired in connection with a transaction. These forms are referred to by name, as purchase order, invoice, purchases invoice, sales invoice, bill, sales ticket, receipt, deposit ticket, check, note, sight draft, time draft, trade acceptance, etc. The various business forms will be explained and illustrated as they are needed in the recording of transactions in the practice sets. In this chapter, those which relate to the purchases and sales of merchandise are explained and illustrated.

§ 64. Use of Business Forms. A business form serves two purposes: (1) it provides written information in regard to a business transaction, thus avoiding the misunderstanding which might result from a verbal contract; (2) it provides information for the basis of the entry made by the bookkeeper when he records the transaction. From the standpoint of the bookkeeper, business forms are very important because they not only provide the information which he needs in recording transactions, but also support his records when these are verified by the auditor.

In the preceding chapters, the transactions have been recorded from a printed statement of the facts; in practice, the bookkeeper would make his record from business forms because no printed record of the transactions would be available. The usual process is (a) transactions performed as evidenced by business forms; (b) a record of these transactions in books of original entry; (c) the accounts in the ledger resulting from posting; (d) the Trial Balance at the end of the month to prove the equality of the debits and credits; (e) a report of the assets and liabilities, and profits and losses to the owner at the close of the fiscal period.

§ 65. A Purchase Order, or "order" as it is sometimes termed, is the written authority from the purchaser, authorizing the seller to make shipment of the merchandise described therein. The printed form provided for a purchase order should be made in duplicate, the original and duplicate printed on different-colored paper, and each original and duplicate numbered the same, the numbers being arranged consecutively. When the order is made, the same facts are shown on the duplicate as on the original and the duplicate is filed for reference. When this plan is followed, the purchaser has available all the information given in each order and can check the list of the merchandise received with this to determine whether the order has been filled as directed.

Merchandise may be ordered by letter, by telegraph, or by telephone; when the order is placed by letter, a description of the merchandise desired is given on the order blank enclosed with the letter, and not in the letter; when the merchandise is ordered by telegraph or by telephone, an order, accompanied by the copy of the telegram or containing the date of the telephone message is mailed to the seller confirming the telegram or the telephone call. Unfilled orders should be filed numerically, and, when they have been filled, they should be placed in another file in the same order. Illustration No. 48 shows one form of purchase order; others will be discussed and illustrated later.

Illustration No. 48, Purchase Order.

EXPLANATION. This illustration shows a purchase order issued by the South-Western Publishing Co., Cincinnati, O., for filing devices manufactured by the Yawman & Erbe Mfg. Co., Rochester, N. Y. The order is issued in triplicate; the original is mailed to the Yawman & Erbe Mfg. Co., one copy is filed in the office, and the other is sent to the receiving department. The instructions in the upper right hand corner are for information in checking the invoice; the instructions in regard to marking the cases are for the receiving department.

§ 66. An Invoice is a written list of merchandise purchased or sold. The purchaser usually refers to the invoice he receives as a "purchase invoice," and the seller to one which he issues as a "sales invoice." If the printed form on which the invoice is prepared is made in duplicate, the seller can, by the use of carbon paper, retain a copy of the list of items sold each customer; the method of doing this will be explained later. An invoice is authorized by a purchase order and should contain all the information given in the order; this includes the date and number of the purchase order, method of making shipment, detailed description of the merchandise shipped, prices and extensions of each item, and the total. In addition to this information, the invoice should show the date the merchandise was shipped, which should be the date of the invoice; the terms which the seller allows; the name and address of the seller; and any other information which the seller may wish to include. If all the merchandise mentioned in the purchase order is not shipped, an explanation of this omission should be given on the invoice, because the purchaser, in checking the information on the invoice with his order, will want to know the reason it has not been filled as specified. Illustrations Nos. 49 and 50 show two forms of invoices; other forms will be explained and illustrated later.

EXPLANATION. The information on this sales invoice is practically the same as that on the purchase invoice except it is rendered by a retail merchant and he does not need the information shown on the purchase invoice.

§ 67. A Sales Ticket is a form of sales invoice used by some retail merchants. Sales tickets are usually printed in duplicate and bound in a book. Each clerk is provided with a book, and, when he makes a sale, either on account or for cash, he makes a list of the merchandise sold on the sales ticket. By the use of carbon paper, the two copies can be made at one time; one copy is sent to the office for the information of the bookkeeper and the other to the wrapping department to be wrapped with the merchandise sold; additional copies may be made at the same time if they are needed in connection with the accounting records. There are many methods of arranging sales tickets, but no attempt will be made here to discuss all of these. The method described will enable the student to understand the meaning and purpose of the sales ticket and its use in connection with the sales invoice. Illustration No. 51 shows one form of sales ticket. The student is advised to inquire from local merchants for other forms and their use in the sales, packing, and accounting departments.
