Illustration.—A father put his minor son to live with a third person till he arrived at a given age, under a contract that if he took him away before the son arrived at such age he should pay such person such sum as indifferent persons should judge right. The mother, before such age, took away the son, paying such sum as was thought right. It was held that the father could not repudiate the act of the wife, and recover back the money paid by her, without returning the boy to such person and restoring him to his rights. Gray v. Otis, 11 Vt. 628.

A wife cannot bind her husband for goods purchased for her daughter by a former marriage, with directions to charge them to herself and send them to her daughter residing away from home; and a promise of the husband to pay therefor, without any new consideration, is not binding. Gaffield v. Scott, 40 Ill. App. 380.

Part payment not ratification.—Where a wife makes a contract in her own name for improvements on her husband's home, not as his agent, he is not bound as principal by ratification, under Civ. Code (1895), § 2997, because he paid for part of the work. Thompson v. Brown, 121 Ga. 814, 49 S. E. 740.

54. Gray v. Otis, 11 Vt. 628. And see Gates v. Brower, 9 N. Y. 205, 59 Am. Dec. 530.

Conversations.—In an action against a wife for household supplies purchased by her, a conversation between defendant and her husband is admissible for the purpose of showing agency. Strong v. Moul, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 299.

Joint use of goods.—The joint use of goods purchased by the wife may be strong evidence that she was acting as her husband's agent. Connerat v. Goldsmith, 6 Ga. 14; Hamilton v. Peck, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 38 S. W. 403.

Authority to make note.—That a husband has given his wife authority to make a note so as to render him liable thereon cannot be inferred from his knowledge that the wife is carrying on business and gave the note in the course of business. Reakert v. Sanford, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 164.

Evidence held insufficient to establish wife's agency see Trepp v. Barker, 78 Ill. 146; Bergh v. Warner, 47 Minn. 250, 59 N. W. 77, 28 Am. St. Rep. 362; Day v. Boyd, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 458.

Insufficient evidence to establish agency.—Where, however, in an action to recover from a husband for articles sold to his wife after she had left him, it did not appear that defendant knew of previous purchases made by her from plaintiff, or that any bill therefor had ever been rendered to him, or that he ever personally paid any money on account of any such indebtedness, he could not be held liable on the theory that he had actually or apparently invested her with authority as his agent. Bostwick v. Brower, 22

8. ACTIONS AGAINST HUSBAND. In actions against a husband upon a contract made in his name by his wife, it is first necessary to show the fact of her agency.⁵⁷

O. Agency of Husband For Wife⁵⁸—1. IN GENERAL. Since a married woman has no contractual power at common law, she cannot act by an agent.⁵⁹ But under her statutory authority to act as a feme sole, and to manage and control her separate estate, she may appoint an agent to do whatever she herself might do in that behalf;⁶⁰ and the husband may be constituted such agent.⁶¹ The authority of her agent, however, is limited by her own statutory authority to act as a principal.⁶² The husband has no original or inherent power to act as his wife's agent, and his authority arises only from her appointment.⁶³ It cannot be

Statutes.—Under Minn. Laws (1869), c. 56, § 4, which provides that no power of attorney from a wife to her husband "to convey real estate, or any interest therein" shall be of any force, a husband cannot, as attorney or agent of his wife, make a valid lease of her real estate. *Sanford v. implied from the marital relation,⁶⁴ or from circumstances which ordinarily owe their existence solely to the marriage relation.⁶⁵

2. RATIFICATION BY WIFE. The wife may, by her subsequent ratification of her husband's act as her agent, bind herself and her estate within the scope of her authority to act in person;⁶⁶ but of course cannot ratify a contract which she herself was incapable of making.⁶⁷

3. EVIDENCE OF HUSBAND'S AGENCY. Whether the husband was the agent of his wife is a question of fact to be found as any other fact.⁶⁸ Owing to the husband's presumed influence over the wife, it is said in a number of cases that the fact of the husband's agency for the wife should be shown by clear and positive evidence,⁶⁹ yet it is also held that no higher standard of proof is required than in other civil cases, namely, a preponderance of evidence.⁷⁰ Although the husband's agency may be implied from the fact that the wife allowed the husband to act for her,⁷¹ yet whether the authority of the husband to act as agent for the wife can

Amount of evidence distinguished.—In Farley v. Stroch, 68 Mo. App. 85, it is held that in case of a written contract made by a husband in his own name, in order to establish the agency of the husband for the wife, there must be not only a preponderance of evidence, but it must be clear and convincing beyond a reasonable doubt, while in case of a verbal contract the agency may be established by a preponderance of the evidence.

be shown by the fact that she allowed him so to act in similar transactions with other persons has been both affirmed⁷² and denied.⁷³ The fact of the marital relationship may properly be considered in determining the question of the husband's agency,⁷⁴ but the husband's admissions are not admissible to prove him the agent of his wife.⁷⁵

4. ACTS OF HUSBAND AS AGENT. The fact of the husband's agency for the wife being established, she is bound by his acts within the scope of his agency,⁷⁶ and his admissions estop her as in case of other principals.⁷⁷ The husband can, however, bind or estop the wife only as to matters within the scope of his agency,⁷⁸ and where he acts without due authority, she is not bound unless his acts are subsequently ratified by her with full knowledge of the transactions.⁷⁹ So if she has no authority to act as principal, she is not bound by his acts.⁸⁰ And acts or admissions on his part subsequent to the transaction in which he acted as her agent are not binding upon her.⁸¹ Thus authority given to a husband merely to receive rents will not authorize him to accept surrender of the premises.⁸²

to the husband's agency for the wife, and consequently notice to him as her agent is likewise notice to her.⁸³

6. ACTS OF HUSBAND IN JUDICIAL AND OTHER PROCEEDINGS. When the husband acts for the wife by representing her in place of a guardian ad litem,⁸⁴ by confessing judgment against her lands,⁸⁵ by compromising her actions,⁸⁶ by appointing an attorney to defend a suit in which both are jointly interested,⁸⁷ by accepting a deed for her,⁸⁸ by making an election for her,⁸⁹ by releasing a mortgage executed to her before marriage,⁹⁰ or by accepting payment of money due her,⁹¹ the wife is bound by his acts, not, however, so much by the doctrine of agency as by his common-law rights as husband in her property.

II. MARRIAGE SETTLEMENTS.

A. In General — 1. DEFINITION AND NATURE. Marriage settlements proper are contracts or agreements between a man and woman before marriage, but in contemplation and generally in consideration of marriage, or contracts between both or either of them and a third person, in consideration of their marriage, whereby the property rights and interests of either the prospective husband and wife, or of both of them, are determined, or where property is secured to either or to both of them, or to their children.⁹² Strictly speaking marriage settlements are confined to agreements entered into before marriage, or antenuptial agreements. There can be of course no contract between husband and wife based upon the consideration of marriage after the marital relation has been entered into.⁹³ Conveyances, however, either voluntary or for consideration, between husband and wife, gifts, and mutual agreements after marriage concerning property rights may in proper cases be upheld.⁹⁴ Such transactions have been often designated as post-nuptial settlements, in distinction from settlements agreed upon before marriage, and are accordingly conveniently considered in connection with marriage settlements.

2. WHAT ARE SUBJECTS OF SETTLEMENT. Any kind of property, either real or personal, may be the subject-matter of marriage settlements,⁹⁵ and either party may waive or release rights in the property of the other, such as rights of dower, curtesy, or distributive share.⁹⁶ Nevertheless marriage settlements, being intended for maintenance and support, particularly to guard the wife against the changes of fortune liable to occur in the husband's affairs, are confined in their subject-matter to rights in property.⁹⁷ They do not include agreements relating to the general personal rights, duties, and liabilities of the married state.⁹⁸ Contracts whereby either party stipulates that he or she shall be relieved of a personal marital duty or obligation imposed by the marital condition are invalid.⁹⁹

3. ENFORCEMENT IN EQUITY. Executory agreements between a man and a woman being, after their marriage, unenforceable at common law,¹ the protection and upholding of marriage settlements came under the jurisdiction of equity which will enforce them.² Such settlements have long been favored by courts of equity, provided that the rights of third persons have not been infringed.³ Settlements upon the wife, either before or after marriage, will, if free from fraud, be upheld and enforced therefore according to the intention of the parties creating the same.⁴

4. STATUTES. Although statutes now generally recognize the separate estates of married women, yet marriage settlements, being of equitable origin, do not rest upon the statutory doctrine of separate estates.⁵ Statutes, however, may as a result of the existence of statutory estates for married women, create legal remedies for the enforcement of marriage settlements, and may confer upon other than equity courts jurisdiction concerning such settlements.⁶

B. Antenuptial Settlement — 1. FORM IN GENERAL. No particular form of words is required to constitute a marriage settlement.⁷ Any language which clearly shows an intention to create a settlement is sufficient,⁸ and, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the contract may be oral or in writing.⁹ It may be in the form of a bond to convey,¹⁰ or even in the form of a will.¹¹ Such a will is, under any circumstances, altogether inoperative so far as the rights of issue of the marriage are involved.¹² So a formal deed of settlement may be duly exe-

Instance.—Thus where a woman gives a bond to her intended husband that in case of their marriage she will convey her lands to him in fee, and they marry, and the wife dies without issue, and then the husband dies, the bond, although void in law, is yet good evidence of an agreement in equity, and the heir of the husband is entitled to specific performance against the heir of the wife. *Cannel v. ented before marriage, or the mutual stipulations of the parties may be evidenced by "marriage articles."¹³

2. MARRIAGE ARTICLES. "Marriage articles," as distinguished from formal deeds of settlement, are memoranda or informal statements of agreement, serving as notes or heads, from which as outlines or instructions the formal deed may be drawn.¹⁴ While the subsequent execution of the deed supersedes the articles,¹⁵ nevertheless the articles themselves if clear, and entered into with mutual good faith, will be upheld by the courts, and will generally be sufficient to effectuate the intention of the parties in respect to the terms of the agreement.¹⁶

3. STATUTE OF FRAUDS. By the English statute of frauds, promises and agreements in consideration of marriage are required to be "in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or some other person thereunto by him lawfully authorized."¹⁷ Many American states have a similar statute, and in such jurisdictions the statute must be complied with, a verbal promise to settle property in consideration of marriage being void in such states.¹⁸ Letters, however, sufficiently and clearly setting forth the terms of the agreement have been held to

Whether contract or memorandum must be in writing before the marriage.—An oral antenuptial agreement that the survivor should

4. SCHEDULE OR DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY. It is sometimes provided by statute that all marriage settlements shall particularize the property to be settled,²¹ or that a schedule containing a description of the property shall be annexed to the deed.²² No schedule is necessary, however, in the absence of such requirement,²³ and a settlement, although void as to creditors for want of a schedule, may be good as between the parties to it.²⁴

Under the Massachusetts statute, the transfer of bonds delivered by the husband to the wife before marriage, to become her property on consummation of the marriage, as a settlement, is void as an antenuptial contract, under Pub. St. c. 147, §§ 26, 27, authorizing antenuptial contracts in writing, agreeing that after the marriage the whole of a designated part of the property of either shall remain or become the property of the husband or

the wife.²⁵ Her acceptance of the contract and intermarriage with him will make it binding against him.²⁶ Likewise a bond, recorded as a marriage settlement, and in which the obligor binds himself to settle particular property on his future wife, will create a lien on the property, even against the obligor's creditors.²⁷ It has been held, however, that where a prospective husband executes a unilateral instrument, renouncing his marital rights in his wife's property, and limiting the property after her death to her children, such instrument is not binding upon the wife.²⁸

6. INTERVENTION OF TRUSTEE. Although in marriage settlements it is common practice to name a trustee in whom is vested the legal title of the property settled upon the wife, yet the intervention of a third person as trustee is not necessary.²⁹ The wife may apply in her own name to a court of equity for the protection of her rights either against her husband or his creditors,³⁰ and the husband holding property settled by antenuptial agreement upon the wife will be considered as trustee.³¹ If trustees are appointed, their consent to the conveyance or other disposal of the property is not requisite, unless so specified in the deed of settlement.³²

b. In Whose Behalf Consideration Operative. Not only between husband and wife does the consideration of marriage sustain antenuptial settlements, but marriage as a consideration extends also to the issue of the marriage.³⁵ As to collateral relatives, however, they are not, by the prevailing English rule, included within the consideration of the mere marriage.³⁶ Thus brothers or sisters of the settler,³⁷ and nephews or nieces,³⁸ are not included. There may, however, be some consideration over and above the marriage, tending to show that such additional consideration was for the purpose of including the collaterals within the benefits of the settlement.³⁹ Thus it is said: "The cases in which collaterals are not within the consideration of a marriage agreement proceed upon the ground that the wife cannot be treated as stipulating on the part of the relations of the husband, and that there is no one therefore who purchases anything for the benefit of these relations; but if there be a party to the agreement who distinctly purchases on behalf of collaterals, the limitations so purchased are good and binding as against purchasers for value."⁴⁰ In this country, in the leading case upon the subject, it is said: "The result of all the cases, I think, will show, that if, from the circumstances under which the marriage articles were entered into by the parties, or as collected from the face of the instrument itself, it appears to have been intended that the collateral relatives, in a given event, should take the estate, and a proper limitation to that effect is contained in them, a court of equity will enforce the trust for their benefit."⁴¹ And this rule has been followed in other cases.⁴² Other decisions hold, however, that collaterals as a general principle are not to be included within the scope of the marriage consideration.⁴³

c. Considerations Other Than Marriage. While marriage is a sufficient consideration, yet any other valuable consideration may support an antenuptial settlement. The mutuality of the stipulations in the contract may constitute a sufficient consideration to each of the parties for the rights relinquished by the other;⁴⁴ as for instance a mutual relinquishment by each of all rights in the property of the other.⁴⁵ The forfeiture by a soldier's widow of her pension upon a second marriage⁴⁶ is a sufficient consideration, as is a forbearance to sue.⁴⁷ It has also been held that an agreement by an intended husband to build a dwelling-house is a sufficient consideration for an agreement by the mother of the intended wife to convey to the latter a building lot.⁴⁸ Although there are some decisions to the contrary,⁴⁹ yet it is held in a number of cases that marriage itself is a sufficient consideration for a release of dower.⁵⁰ However, in the absence of other consid-

Recital of consideration.—Although an antenuptial contract whereby a husband conveys a life-estate in land to his wife, and she relinquishes her dower and homestead rights, recites that the consideration moving to him is the marriage, where it recites that the consideration to the wife is the conveyance, the conveyance will be held to be the sole consideration. *Spurlock v. See also Coulter v. Lyda, 102 Mo. App. 401, 76 S. W. 720, where it is held that the statutory allowance to a widow for support is not barred by an antenuptial contract, made when the title of the wife's estate does not vest in the husband upon marriage, and providing that the wife shall have full ownership of her separate property, and be barred from any claim of dower, such agreement being void for want of consideration.

eration, there must be clear evidence of the consideration of marriage, in order to uphold the obligations of a marriage settlement, since a mere promise after the engagement to settle a certain sum of money upon the intended wife constitutes no inducement to the marriage, and is not binding as an antenuptial contract.⁵¹ Statutes should be consulted to determine whether any other consideration than marriage is necessary to protect the settlement against existing creditors.⁵²

d. Failure of Consideration. Where both parties mutually agree to rescind the promise to marry there is a failure of the consideration to support the settlement.⁵³

8. RELEASE BY HUSBAND OF RIGHTS IN WIFE'S PROPERTY. By antenuptial agreement a prospective husband may release the interest in the wife's estate which he otherwise would have by reason of the marital relation.⁵⁴ Such a contract if entered into in good faith, and free from fraud, will be valid against the husband's creditors,⁵⁵ and to have this effect, it is not necessary that the contract shall expressly secure such property against liability for the husband's debts.⁵⁶

9. RELEASE BY WIFE OF RIGHTS IN HUSBAND'S PROPERTY. A woman may release her rights in her intended husband's property.⁵⁷ Such a contract, however, to be enforced in equity, must be free from fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the husband, reasonable in its provisions, and entered into with the utmost good faith on the part of both;⁵⁸ and an agreement releasing all claims against the estate of the intended husband, although valid when fairly made, will be most

rigidly scrutinized, and if the circumstances show that she has been deceived it will be set aside.⁵⁹ The intended wife may stipulate that in case she survives her husband she shall receive but a child's part of his estate,⁶⁰ or that she shall take an equal share with the heirs at law,⁶¹ in lieu of her dower or statutory provision; and such agreements, if clearly understood by the wife, and just and reasonable, will be upheld.⁶² Where, however, by antenuptial agreement a woman had relinquished all claims on the estate of her husband, she was held, as widow, to be entitled to homestead rights for herself and minor children, on the ground that the provision of the statute could not be defeated by contract between parties not alone under its protection.⁶³

10. REASONABLENESS OF PROVISION FOR WIFE. Courts of equity will take into consideration the adequacy of the provision for the wife, since antenuptial agreements wherein the wife releases her rights in her husband's estate should be reasonable in their terms.⁶⁴ To determine the fairness and reasonableness of the agreement all the circumstances, such as the wealth of the husband,⁶⁵ the existing means of the wife,⁶⁶ the age of the parties,⁶⁷ and the prospective wife's full and clear knowledge and understanding of the nature and meaning of the terms of the contract⁶⁸ are properly regarded. Good faith is the cardinal principle in such

by some courts that a woman's right to dower cannot be barred by a marriage contract which does not secure to her a provision for her support during life after the death of the husband. See In re Pulling, 93 Mich. 274, 52 N. W. 1116; Farris v. Coleman, 103 Mo. 352, 15 S. W. 767; Mowser v. Mowser, 87 Mo. 437; Brandon v. Dawson, 51 Mo. App. 237. See also Graham v. Graham, 67 Hun (N. Y.) 329, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 299, holding that an antenuptial agreement to release dower must be supported by a substantial and not a nominal consideration. But see Gould v. Womack, 2 Ala. 83, where the right of the wife to bar her dower by an antenuptial agreement is denied. See also Sullings v. Richmond, 5 Allen (Mass.) 187, 81 Am. Dec. 742. Burden of proof.—The burden is upon the husband or his representatives to show that an antenuptial contract apparently unjust to the wife was fairly procured. Fisher v. Koontz, 110 Iowa 498, 80 N. W. 551. See also Pierce v. Pierce, 71 N. Y. 154, 27 Am. Rep. 22; Russell's Appeal, 75 Pa. St. 269.

Hafer*, 36 Kan. 524, 13 Pac. 821, holding that the homestead is included, upon its partition, when the wife's agreement is to receive "a child's part." In Mann v. Mann, 53 Vt. 48, it is held that a release of a homestead can be predicated only upon something which exists at the time the release is given, and consequently an intended wife cannot bar her homestead right by antenuptial contract.

Inadequacy of provision for wife.—Where an antenuptial agreement provides that the wife shall, in case of the husband's death, have only two hundred dollars a year during contracts.⁶⁹ If the provision made for the wife is unreasonably disproportionate to the means of the husband, the presumption of designed concealment is raised, and the burden of disproving the same is upon him.⁷⁰

11. EXECUTION, ACKNOWLEDGMENT, AND DELIVERY. Where the marriage settlement is made by a deed, the usual formalities required in the execution of deeds must of course be observed, and the deed must be duly delivered in order to give it effect.⁷¹ Where, however, a husband retained possession of a deed of settlement, but had recognized its existence, its delivery was presumed.⁷² And where a wife kept a deed during her life the deed itself, although invalid for want of delivery, was sufficient evidence of an existing contract.⁷³ Where the statute requires settlement deeds to be acknowledged, the statute must be strictly followed as to the method and time of acknowledgment.⁷⁴ Acknowledgment, as required by the statute, may be unnecessary between the parties and their heirs,⁷⁵ but to render the same valid against third persons the acknowledgment must be her widowhood, and the use of half of a house and lot, and the husband's estate consists of personalty worth about ten thousand dollars and land worth twelve thousand five hundred dollars, the provision for the wife is so disproportionate to the husband's means that the agreement cannot be sustained in the absence of clear proof that it was fairly entered into with full knowledge on the part of the wife of the extent of the husband's property. Achilles v. Achilles, 151 Ill. 136, 37 N. E. 693. Where, by an antenuptial contract, a wife agreed to accept property worth about twelve thousand five hundred dollars in lieu of dower and a widow's share, and her husband was then worth about one hundred and seventy-nine thousand dollars, and at his death was worth about three hundred and ninety-one thousand dollars, and he left her by his will the sum of fifteen thousand dollars additional to the property granted by the contract, no presumption of fraud arises from the smallness of the provision. Smith's Appeal, 115 Pa. St. 319, 8 Atl. 532.

No presumption of fraud where wife is fully advised.—Where a woman fully advised as to the condition of her future husband's estate, and well acquainted with business methods, made an antenuptial contract providing that the survivor should take all the estate of the other, the fact that the husband had no estate would not raise the presumption of undue influence on his part. Green v. Benham, 57 N. Y. App. Div. 9, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 248.

Unreasonable provision must first appear.—Where, however, complainant sought to set aside an antenuptial agreement between herself and testator, made in consideration of marriage, on the ground that the latter had fraudulently concealed the amount of property possessed by him, and the evidence failed to show any unconceivable variance between the value of the property secured to her by the agreement and the total value of testator's property in which she would have acquired an interest by the marriage, the burden was not on defendant to show the fairness of the contract. Russell v. Russell, 60 N. J. Eq. 282, 47 Atl. 37.

Presumptions.—Where a prospective husband nearly eighty years old, and possessed of a competency, by an antenuptial agreement cuts off the woman he is about to marry, without a cent for her support after his death, it raises the presumption that he designedly concealed from her the value of the estate. In re Warner, 207 Pa. Delivery in escrow.—An antenuptial agreement and the mortgage and note mentioned in it were executed before marriage, and left with a third party, to be handed to the parties after the marriage. After the marriage defendant received the note and mortgage, and her husband the contract. Both the contract and the mortgage were recorded. It was held that the delivery by the third party related back to the first delivery, and made the contract binding. Koch v. Koch, 126 Mich. 187, 85 N. W. 455.

duly made.⁷⁶ If the statute requires an acknowledgment before marriage, an acknowledgment made after marriage will be void.⁷⁷

12. REGISTRATION. Unless a statute requires the recording of a deed of settlement, failure to do so cannot affect the rights of creditors,⁷⁸ and although by statute recording may be necessary to give notice to third parties, an unrecorded antenuptial contract will in general be binding upon the parties themselves and those claiming under them,⁷⁹ unless the statute expressly requires a recording in order to give the settlement any validity at all.⁸⁰ Notwithstanding the fact that the statutes require registration the deed will not be void as to creditors having actual,⁸¹ or other constructive,⁸² notice. To prove that a creditor or subsequent purchaser had actual notice, a preponderance of evidence is required,⁸³ and the burden of proof is upon the beneficiary of the settlement.⁸⁴ The registration law of the state where the contract is made must be followed in order to make the settlement valid in a state to which the parties subsequently remove,⁸⁵ and it must also be recorded in the state to which the parties subsequently remove.⁸⁶ Subsequent registration in another county, in the same state, to which the parties have removed, is not necessary.⁸⁷ While statutes relating to recording are not in principle retroactive, yet a statute may specifically require all deeds of marriage settlement to be placed on record, including existing as well as subsequent settlements.⁸⁸ Contracts between a man and woman before their marriage, not properly of the nature of marriage settlements, are not included in the registration requirements.⁸⁹ Likewise a statute requiring marriage settlements to be

Consideration of marriage as a test.—No conveyance by a husband to the use of his wife is a marriage settlement within the purview of the registry act, except such as are in consideration of marriage, executed before marriage, or afterward in consideration of previous articles, or voluntary conveyances after marriage. U. S. Bank v. Brown, 2 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 558, 30 Am. Dec. 380, Riley Eq. 131.

In Massachusetts it has been held that an antenuptial agreement relating only to the rights which either party, after the death of recorded does not extend to a provision made for a married woman by the will of a third person.⁹⁰ Registration laws must be strictly followed both as to the place and time of registration.⁹¹ Where the husband is the trustee for the wife, it is his duty to have the deed of settlement recorded, and he cannot take advantage of his own neglect.⁹² And an unrecorded marriage settlement is not invalid as against a husband's creditors, when the husband was not the grantor.⁹³

13. VALIDITY AS TO CREDITORS. An antenuptial settlement in consideration of marriage may be good, even though the settler is then indebted.⁹⁴ It has been said that the claim of creditors is never an objection to the execution of marriage articles, unless they are creditors by judgment or other matter of record before the articles of marriage are entered into.⁹⁵ To make an antenuptial settlement void as a fraud upon creditors, it is necessary that both parties should concur in or have cognizance of the intended fraud. If the settler alone intends a fraud and the other party has no notice of it, but is innocent of it, he or she cannot be affected by it.⁹⁶ She is entitled to the same protection, when taking without an Contracts held marriage settlements within recording statutes.—A bond in consideration of marriage conditioned for the payment of money to the obligor's intended wife (Smith v. Patterson; Cheves Eq. (S. C.) 29); a contract whereby the intended husband agrees that there shall be conveyed on his death, to his intended wife, by a proper deed, certain lands therein described, but that if she does not survive him the agreement shall be void (*Aultman v. Within statutory limit but after marriage.—A deed of marriage settlement made before the marriage of the parties, although not recorded until afterward, but within the time required by law for recording such instruments, is conclusive against creditors of the husband for debts contracted before the marriage. Scott v. Gibbon, 5 Munf. (Va.) 86.

Effect of coverture.—Where a marriage settlement reserved to the wife full and complete control over the property conveyed to the same extent as though she were a feme sole, her coverture does not relieve her from the duty of recording the settlement in compliance with the statute, nor from the consequences of a failure to do so. *Boston v. Contra.—In some jurisdictions the rule stated in the text does not seem to obtain. Thus in Massachusetts it has been held that an antenuptial settlement made by the husband with intent to defraud creditors is void even though the wife did not participate in the fraud. Deshon v. Wood, 148 Mass. 132, 19 N. E. 1, 1 L. R. A. 518. In a later decision intent to aid the grantor in defrauding his creditors, as a purchaser who has paid the full value of the land.⁹⁷ A contract, however, by which the wife is to have her earnings to her separate use has been held fraudulent as to previous and subsequent creditors of the husband.⁹⁸ So a woman about to marry cannot settle her property in trust to pay the income to her with the provision that it shall not be alienated by anticipation so that it shall be beyond the reach of her creditors.⁹⁹ And property settled by a woman upon her marriage to her separate use is liable, after her husband's bankruptcy, for debts contracted by her before marriage.¹ A marriage settlement may, as against creditors, embrace the husband's whole estate, although before it was made the parties had illegitimate children.²

C. Post-Nuptial Settlements—1. NATURE. Post-nuptial settlements are in the nature of gifts of personal property, or voluntary conveyances of realty, between husband and wife.³ They are not based upon the consideration of marriage as are antenuptial settlements, but they will be generally upheld in equity if made without fraud upon third persons.⁴

2. EQUITY AND MODERN STATUTES. As in the case of antenuptial settlements, which were unknown to the common law, but were created by equity,⁵ post-nuptial settlements likewise fall within the jurisdiction of courts of chancery.⁶ Since gifts and conveyances between husband and wife are void at common law,⁷ it is in equity alone, in the absence of statutory authority, that the transactions known as post-nuptial settlements can be sustained.⁸ Modern statutes, however, by providing for contracts between husband and wife, including conveyances, in the same state this doctrine seems to have been approved, but it was held that in the absence of any evidence of fraud on the part of the husband in making an antenuptial settlement of property on the wife, such settlement is not void as matter of law as to his creditors. Clark v. McMahon, 170 Mass. 91, 48 N. E. 939. In South Carolina it has been held that an antenuptial settlement made by the intended husband when deeply in debt, covering the greater part of the grantor's property, on the eve of judgments against him and not recorded, is void as to creditors. Croft v. Arthur, 3 Desauss. Eq. 223. See also FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES, 20 Cyc. 465-487.

Reason for rule.—An antenuptial settlement, although made with a fraudulent design by the settler, should not be annulled without the clearest proof of the wife's participation in the intended fraud, for upon its annulment there can follow no dissolution of the marriage, which was the consideration of the settlement. *Prewit v. have made the equitable doctrine of post-nuptial settlements less important than in former years.⁹

3. FULFILMENT OF ANTENUPTIAL AGREEMENT. Settlements made after marriage, in pursuance of antenuptial agreements or marriage articles, are not post-nuptial settlements, but relate to the antenuptial contract, and are to be construed as a part of it.¹⁰ It has been held that a deed of marriage settlement made after marriage in pursuance of a parol contract made before marriage is void,¹¹ although there is authority sustaining the contrary view.¹² If a post-nuptial contract recites an antenuptial agreement, and there is no distinct legal proof of the antenuptial contract, the settlement will not be binding against the creditors of the husband.¹³

4. WHAT CONSTITUTES. To constitute a post-nuptial settlement, the act creating it must be clear and unequivocal.¹⁴ The contract of settlement may, however, be either express or implied.¹⁵ Where real estate is purchased with the joint means of husband and wife, and placed in the wife's name, it implies a settlement by the husband upon the wife.¹⁶ The surrender of a deed by the husband to his grantors for the purpose of their conveying the property to the wife will amount to a settlement upon the wife, the conveyance being made and the former deed destroyed.¹⁷ Where a husband established his wife in business, and conveyed lands to her with an indefinite agreement that the whole was to be enjoyed jointly, the transaction was held to be a post-nuptial settlement rather than an implied trust.¹⁸ Where, however, a husband, in prospect of death, executed deeds to his wife of all his real estate, and died about one month later, it was held that the deeds could not be sustained as a post-nuptial settlement.¹⁹

5. NECESSITY FOR THIRD PERSON AS TRUSTEE. Although at common law a direct conveyance by the husband to the wife is void,²⁰ and the use of a third person's name is necessary to effectuate the transfer,²¹ yet equity will sustain a post-nuptial settlement, when otherwise valid, without the intervention of a third person as trustee.²² The instrument, however, must be in such a form as to place the property within the wife's power and under her control.²³

6. SEPARATE INSTRUMENTS OR INDORSEMENTS. While an antenuptial agreement

9. Although a married woman's equitable estate is not destroyed by statutory separate property acts (Pennsylvania L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Foster, 35 Pa. St. 134), yet the freedom of modern statutory conveyancing between husband and wife, and the control of married women over their separate statutory estates, make the equitable doctrines of settlements less necessary to invoke. may, upon sufficient consideration, be modified by a post-nuptial agreement,²⁴ yet an indorsement made after marriage on marriage articles cannot be regarded as part of the contract or explanatory thereof.²⁵ Where two post-nuptial settlements were executed by the husband at different times, but the latter was recorded first, it was held that the registration related to the times of executing the deeds, and did not affect the priority.²⁶

7. CONSIDERATION—a. As Between the Parties. Between the husband and wife no consideration is necessary to support an executed post-nuptial settlement.²⁷ Between them and their heirs and representatives, equity will sustain gifts and voluntary conveyances, if reasonable, and if made freely and fairly, and without prejudice to third persons.²⁸ On the other hand a mere promise to give or to convey cannot be enforced, without some consideration.²⁹ The gift or voluntary transaction must be completed, since a mere intention to make a post-nuptial settlement is not sufficient.³⁰

b. As to Third Persons. As against creditors who are prejudiced thereby,³¹ or subsequent purchasers,³² a consideration other than the marriage is necessary to support the settlement.³³ Where a valuable consideration exists, equity will generally uphold post-nuptial settlements against all persons.³⁴ If, however, the 24. Fisher v. Koontz, 110 Iowa 498, 80 N. W. 551, holding that a statute providing that "when property is owned by the husband or wife, the other has no interest therein which can be the subject of contract between them" does not prohibit a husband and wife from making a post-nuptial contract canceling an antenuptial agreement, and restoring her marital property rights, which she had relinquished.

What amounts to modification.—By an antenuptial contract it was stipulated on the part of the husband that the persons to whom the wife might bequeath her property should possess and enjoy it. It was held that the subsequent agreement, founded upon sufficient consideration, to the effect that the husband should possess the wife's land during his life, in consideration of valuable improvements made thereon by him, is a modification pro tanto of the antenuptial contract. *Booker v. consideration is unreasonably inadequate, or if the wife participated in the fraud upon existing creditors, the transaction will not be sustained.³⁵ Among instances of sufficient consideration are money advanced by a woman before marriage, and subsequent thereto, from her own estate;³⁶ a note given to a married woman for her share in her father's estate and collected by the husband as a loan to him by the wife;³⁷ and the release of dower by the wife.³⁸ The interest which a husband has in his wife's lands by marriage is a sufficient consideration for a post-nuptial settlement of her estate, by which an interest is given to him.³⁹ Where, however, a wife, by articles of agreement, conveyed to her husband all her interest in an estate, the amount of such interest being unknown at the time, the settlement was held void.⁴⁰ Where also a husband used money of the wife for various purposes, but no evidence appeared that it was a loan, such use is not a sufficient consideration.⁴¹

8. RELEASE OF RIGHTS IN PROPERTY. Equity will sustain an agreement whereby a husband releases for the benefit of the wife an interest which he may have in her property.⁴² Likewise, an agreement making provision for the wife, in lieu of her rights in the property of the husband, if properly evidenced and reasonable, and freely assented to by her, is valid.⁴³

9. REGISTRATION. In some jurisdictions statutes relating to the registration of marriage settlements include post-nuptial as well as antenuptial settlements.⁴⁴ In other states it is held that post-nuptial agreements are not included within the registration laws relating to marriage settlements.⁴⁵ It is generally held, however, that, although marriage settlements are required to be registered, failure to have them recorded will make them void only as against creditors.⁴⁶ The laws of registration must be strictly followed both as to place and time of registration.⁴⁷

D. Construction and Operation—1. WHAT LAW GOVERNS. The construction of a marriage contract depends on the law existing at the time of its execution.⁴⁸ As a general rule, it is the law of the state where the marriage settlement is made, and not the law of the jurisdiction to which the parties may subsequently remove, that governs the validity of the agreement;⁴⁹ but where the contract is made in one state with reference to the laws of another in which the parties intend to reside, the contract is governed by the laws of the latter state.⁵⁰ Where an antenuptial contract was entered into in a foreign country, relating to property to be acquired during coverture, and the contract contemplated no change of domicile, it was held that it did not affect realty acquired in this country after a change of domicile.⁵¹

strue a marriage contract differently from its terms in favor of the parties,⁵³ although it might do so in favor of the issue of the marriage.⁵⁴ General language in deeds of settlement, in conflict with the expressed purposes of the deed, will be qualified and restricted by the recitals of the deed,⁵⁵ and a deed of marriage settlement will not divest the marital rights of the husband to a greater extent than its terms clearly require.⁵⁶ Marriage settlements, although good between the parties and against creditors, cannot divest existing liens, such as judgments and mortgages,⁵⁷ but if the husband discharges an existing lien on property settled on the wife with money raised by the creation of a new lien, the wife's estate will be superior to the new lien.⁵⁸ Where a specific legacy is given to a wife by will, of the same amount as mentioned in a post-nuptial bond, it will be held a satisfaction of the bond, unless the contrary intention clearly appears.⁵⁹ In an antenuptial contract releasing the wife's rights in the husband's real estate, "should there be no heirs born to this contemplated marriage," the quoted words operate as a condition subsequent, and upon the birth of a posthumous child the contract terminates.⁶⁰

3. INTENTION OF PARTIES. Liberal construction will be given to marriage settlements in order to carry out the intention of the parties.⁶¹ In construing marriage articles, however, greater liberality is allowed than in case of wills, and their construction will be freed from technical rules, in order to carry out the presumed intent of the parties.⁶² The intention is to be collected from the nature of the agreement, the language and context, and the usage in similar cases.⁶³ Manifest intention will prevail over doubts which might be raised by strict grammatical construction.⁶⁴ A marriage trust deed may be altered before marriage by another instrument, and the property rights of children of the marriage, as fixed by the original deed, may be changed by that instrument, and in such case the two should be construed together at the time of marriage.⁶⁵

4. ESTATE OR INTEREST CREATED. The estate created by the deed of settlement, both with reference to the parties and their heirs, depends necessarily upon the construction of the language of the deed.⁶⁶ The wife's estate may be absolute⁶⁷ or limited to her life.⁶⁸ The technical language of the deed may create or leave in the husband a life-estate which, to the amount of his interest, may be subject to his debts.⁶⁹ The interests of heirs may be vested or not according to the terms used.⁷⁰ The settlement may be in the form of a trust for the wife,⁷¹ for the husband,⁷² or jointly for both.⁷³

Express appointment unnecessary.—By the terms of a marriage settlement, the intended husband contracted with L, who was a party to the settlement, that the property of the intended wife should be free from his marital rights. It was held that L became ipso facto trustee under the settlement, although there were no express words of appointment. Logan v. Goodall, 42 Ga. 95.

Subject to husband's debts.—The interest of the husband in property settled to the joint use of himself and wife will be subjected in equity to the claims of his creditors, although it may destroy the scheme of settlement and prejudice the interests of the wife. Creighton v. Clifford, 6 S. C. 188.

It has been held that where a woman, in an antenuptial contract, relinquishes all right of dower and all interest of any kind whatsoever to which she might be entitled in the estate of her intended husband by reason of her marriage she waives her right to the widow's allowance on his death.⁷⁵ Where the marriage settlement provides that the wife in consideration of certain provisions therein made for her shall relinquish all claims against her husband's "estate" the word "estate" will be construed to mean both personal and real property.⁷⁶ The phrase in a marriage settlement "all the lands, slaves, goods, chattels and property," of the wife include her choses in action.⁷⁷ Heirlooms are not included in a settlement on the survivor of the marriage of all the furniture, plate, horses, carriages, and other personal property in use by the parties for family purposes at the time of the death of either.⁷⁸ A body of land consisting of several subdivisions but which has always been considered one tract will pass under a deed of settlement of "one tract of land."⁷⁹ Other decisions showing the construction of particular contracts for the purpose of determining what property is therein included are set out in the note below.⁸⁰

b. After-Acquired Property. Marriage agreements providing that after-acquired property shall be settled upon either the husband or the wife are valid, if clearly expressed, or if the manifest intention of the parties can be so determined from the contract.⁸¹ But property acquired by the survivor will not be held included in the trust unless the intention clearly appears.⁸² It has tended wife of all her rights of dower and inheritance as widow and heir "in his said estate," and renunciation of "all claim, right, title and interest therein by reason of the said relation of wife or widow" does not enlarge, by the latter clause, the contract, so as to exclude the widow from her statutory homestead right.

Limiting to after-acquired property.—A marriage settlement providing for conveyance to trustees of all the property of an intended wife, "to which she might thereafter become entitled," is properly construed to include only such property as may be acquired during marriage. Steinberger v. Potter, 18 N. J. Eq. 452.

When construed as contract to convey.—A contract between an intended wife and trustees by which she conveys to them not only all the property to which she was then entitled, but also that to which she might thereafter become entitled, in trust for her use, does not at law convey after-acquired property. It will be construed as a contract to convey, and be enforced only when it is necessary to do so to carry out the intention of the parties. Steinberger v. Potter, 4 N. J. Eq. 452.

In Quebec the gift of future property made by husband to wife in their contract of marriage is a gift in contemplation of death, which can take effect only upon the death of the husband. The wife to whom such gift has been made is not the owner of effects which are not proved to have belonged to her husband at the time of her marriage, and she cannot prevent their seizure and sale by a creditor of her husband. *Demers v. been held that even a contingent or an expectant interest may be included in a settlement.⁸³

6. RIGHTS OF SURVIVOR. As already shown marriage settlements may properly provide that the surviving spouse shall be barred from all rights of dower, curtesy, or statutory share in the property of the deceased husband or wife,⁸⁴ and the right to administer may even be excluded by express agreement.⁸⁵ A provision that the wife's property is "never to be subject to the control, contracts or liabilities of" her husband excludes the husband after the decease of the wife, as well as during coverture;⁸⁶ but in the absence of proof of contrary intention a surviving spouse will be entitled to legal rights of inheritance or distribution,⁸⁷ although a divorced husband, if he survives, acquires no rights under an antenuptial settlement providing that the wife's property should go to her husband in case of his surviving her.⁸⁸ Where an antenuptial agreement provided that the wife should have a good and sufficient maintenance during her life, she was not bound to live with her husband's executor or his relatives after his death without children; but was entitled to be supported wherever she reasonably chose to live, according to the style in which she lived during his life.⁸⁹ An antenuptial agreement providing that the balance of the money paid the wife, remaining in her hands at her death, shall revert to the husband does not cut off the rights of the creditors of the deceased wife, no trust being created.⁹⁰

7. WIFE'S POWER OF CONTROL AND DISPOSITION. The instrument creating the marriage settlement may, as is frequently the case, provide for the wife's right to

And see Ex p. Beresford, 1 De-sauss. Eq. (S. C.) 263, holding that a trust deed whereby a woman settled upon her intended husband all the estate to which she was in any manner entitled does not include the wife's share under a will which was doubtful and contested at the time of settlement.

84. See supra, II, A, 8, 9.

Failure of consideration.—Upon failure of the husband during his life to make a settlement, as agreed before marriage, in consideration for which the wife was to relinquish her rights in his property, the widow may assert the rights to which she would have been entitled had no such agreement been made. Pierce v. Pierce, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 50 [affirmed in 71 N. Y. 154, 27 Am. Rep. 22]. And see Bliss v. Sheldon, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 152.

Release of dower; wife dying before husband.—An antenuptial agreement providing that the wife should receive certain sums of money after her husband's death, in lieu of dower, does not enable the wife's administrator to claim either of them from the husband's estate where she died first. In re Doll, 1 Walk. But where a marriage settlement provided that the wife's property should be and remain hers, and "subject to her control and disposal forever," on the death of the wife, the property vested absolutely in the husband. Brown v. Brown, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 127.

87. See Jones v. Brown, 1 Md. Ch. 191, holding that when the settlement makes no disposition of the property in the event of the wife's death, and provides only for her dominion over it during coverture, the right of the husband as survivor is a fixed and stable right, over which a court of equity has no control, and of which he cannot be divested.

Wife's failure to exercise power of disposal.—An antenuptial agreement providing that the wife shall retain for her separate use her personal property, with power to dispose of the same by will, does not prevent the husband's succession to the same upon the wife's dying intestate. Talbot v. Calvert, 24 Pa. St. 327. Where, however, a man deeds land to his intended wife, under an agreement that after marriage she shall devise the same to him, if he survives her, the deed will hold in favor of her heirs if she dies intestate before him. *Turner v. Powers of sale and exchange are usual and proper in marriage settlements, and are not included within a statute prohibiting the alienation of trust estates by the trustee. Belmont v. O'Brien, 12 N. Y. 394.

Power of disposition may create liability for debts.—A married woman having, by the terms of the settlement executed in 1848, the use for life in the trust property, which was hers prior to the marriage, and having retained over the fee an absolute power of disposition by deed or will, is wholly independent of the trustee since the enactment of the Married Women's Law of 1866, and her life-estate in the property is subject to levy and sale for her debts. McLaughlin v. Ham, 84 Ga. 786, 11 S. E. 889.

Husband reserving power of disposition.—Under a nuptial agreement providing that the husband should have the right to dispose of his lands by will or otherwise, provided that his wife survived him, the widow is excluded from claiming that portion of interest in her husband's realty which otherwise the law would have given her, and her husband had full power of disposal over it by his will. Richards v. Richards, 17 Ind. 636.

Necessity of consideration.—A written instrument, signed by the husband, and executed without consideration, expressing his willingness that his wife should control the property owned by her at the time of her marriage, is not sufficient to sustain an assignment of such property by the wife during the husband's life. Brewer v. Hobbs, 30 S. W. 605, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 134.

Control under trust created for wife.—Where the property of the wife is vested by an antenuptial contract in the husband as trustee for the exclusive use of his wife during her life, she is entitled in equity to the possession and control of the property, when it is such that the enjoyment of it consists in its possession and use, and it does not appear that she is incompetent to take and manage the property, and such possession would not be inconsistent with the rights of any of the cestuis que trustent, or those in remainder. Roper v. Roper, 29 Ala. 247.

Will may be upheld as execution of a power.—Although the will of a married woman might be invalid at law, yet it may be valid as to past property which was given to her absolutely by marriage settlement, her disposal of the property being upheld as the execution of a power. *Shley v. Negative covenant by husband gives wife no positive power.—A covenant by the intended husband, in a marriage settlement, that he would not at any time thereafter oppose, obstruct, or defeat the uses or estates therein declared does not confer on the wife the power to do any of those acts by deed or will. Withington's Appeal, 32 Pa. St. 419.

Consent to change of investment.—Under a marriage settlement, reciting that the lady was an infant, property was assigned to trustees upon the usual trusts, with power to vary investments with the consent in writing of the husband and wife, or the survivor. It was held that the wife, whilst still an infant, could consent to a proposed change of investment. In re Cardross, 7 Ch. D. 728, 47 L. J. Ch. 327, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 778, 26 Wkly. Rep. 389.

of the antenuptial settlement,⁹⁵ and courts of equity have no power to pass a wife's separate property beyond the power reserved to her by the deed of settlement.⁹⁶

8. EXERCISE OF POWER OF DISPOSITION—a. In General. The right reserved to a married woman by antenuptial contract to dispose of her own property may be exercised by a will.⁹⁷ So a power of appointment reserved to a married woman before marriage may be exercised by her in an instrument purporting to be her last will, duly executed as such, although otherwise such instrument would have been void.⁹⁸ So where property is devised to the wife for life with power to dispose of one-half thereof at her death, the power of disposal is executed by a marriage settlement made by the wife conveying her whole estate in the land to the trustees for the benefit of herself and her intended husband and directing that at her death the same should be divested of all trusts and vested in him.⁹⁹ If, under an antenuptial agreement, the husband and wife convey the wife's separate property to a trustee with a proviso that she may, with the husband's consent, mortgage it, a mortgage executed by the husband and wife and trustee is a proper execution of the power.¹

b. Failure to Exercise. In general the failure of a married woman during her lifetime to dispose of property which, together with the right of disposition, has been secured to her by antenuptial agreement, will give to the surviving husband the same right in the property as though the agreement had not been made.² The terms of the deed of settlement may, however, provide for the disposal of the property in case of the wife's failure to do so;³ but if it is intended, in a marriage settlement, to exclude the rights of the husband, in default of the wife's appointment, an express provision to such effect should be inserted in the deed.⁴

9. PROVISIONS FOR CHILDREN. Marriage settlements generally provide for the issue of the marriage, and unless the contrary clearly appears, an intention to make provision for the issue of the marriage will be presumed.⁵ Courts will construe marriage settlements with favorable regard to the interests of children,⁶ but this rule does not apply in a contest between collaterals— devisees under the will of the husband on the one side, and the wife on the other.⁷ Children provided for in a marriage settlement are presumed to be the children of the marriage for which the settlement was made.⁸ But by express agreement the children of

Restricted power of disposition.—Where a woman, before her marriage, conveyed property to a trustee to be disposed of under her direction for the benefit of her issue, and died without directing any disposal, the legal estate remained in the trustee for the benefit of such issue. *Steele v. Children as purchasers.—Where property is limited by a marriage settlement to the issue of the marriage generally, the children born of the marriage take as purchasers under both father and mother, and on the death of the parents as coparceners per stirpes, and not per capita. *Tabb v. a former marriage may be included.⁹ The term "children" will include grandchildren when other parts of the instrument show an intention to provide for grandchildren.¹⁰ Where a marriage settlement provides that the property of the wife shall remain to the use of her children, the children born by such marriage are tenants in common with the wife.¹¹

10. RIGHTS OF CREDITORS AND THIRD PERSONS IN GENERAL. While a husband may make in the absence of fraud a valid settlement upon the wife freed from all claims of future creditors, yet if there remains to the husband any legal interest at all in the property settled upon the wife, his creditors may reach that interest, and it is subject to his debts.¹² If he has, before marriage, for a valuable consideration, relinquished his marital rights in his wife's lands and after her death claims no further interest than a life-estate therein given him by will, no third person can assert that he has any other estate in the land.¹³ If a woman, by antenuptial contract, settles money and personalty upon herself and after marriage buys a lot and building materials, and the husband contributes nothing but services in building, the property is not liable for his debts.¹⁴ A mere equitable interest of a husband under a marriage settlement cannot be sold on execution.¹⁵

E. Revocation—1. POWER TO REVOKE. An antenuptial contract may be rescinded after marriage by the full and free consent of all the parties interested,¹⁶ unless prohibited by statute.¹⁷ Where, however, the interests of a third person are prejudiced, the husband and wife alone cannot by agreement rescind the contract,¹⁸ and ordinarily, the contract cannot be revoked by the action of but one of the parties.¹⁹ A marriage settlement is sometimes made revocable by an express Relinquishment of rights by husband.—An antenuptial contract settled the wife's property to her separate use during coverture, with a provision that it should go absolutely to the survivor. By an indorsement made after marriage, the husband relinquished interest, and the wife relinquished "all the right she might have to inherit my property in virtue of said contract." The contract made no reference whatever to the husband's property. It was held that the husband had power to relinquish his contingent interest, and his relinquishment was valid, although, on account of her disability as a feme covert, the wife had no power to make any relinquishment on her part. Maclin v. Haywood, 90 Tenn. 195, 16 S. W. 140.

power of revocation given in the deed,²⁰ and some cases hold that a settlement containing no clause providing for revocation, but not intended to be irrevocable, may be revoked by the settler.²¹ So it has been held that a deed of trust executed by a woman in contemplation of immediate marriage and for the protection of her property may be revoked by her upon her becoming discovert.²² An express power of revocation does not subject the property to the husband's debts.²³

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES. Acceptance of a certain sum by the wife in full of her claim under an antenuptial contract will amount to a revocation.²⁴ Likewise, where, for a valuable consideration, she joins her husband in a conveyance of her rights in the property settled.²⁵ On the other hand a mere delay in the execution of marriage articles will not be presumed to be a revocation of them.²⁶ And where a husband in his last illness was removed to the home of his son, although against the protest of the wife, in order that he might have better care, it was held not to be a desertion of his wife, so as to affect the validity of an agreement by which she had surrendered her rights in his estate.²⁷ So a settlement vesting the wife's property in a trustee for her sole use and reserving the power to cancel the same on notice to the trustee is not revoked by a mere order by the wife on the trustee to deliver a portion of the trust property to her husband.²⁸

3. EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT MARRIAGE. Although, at common law, a covenant entered into by a man and woman before marriage, to be executed after marriage, would be void after the parties were married,²⁹ yet equity upholds contracts for marriage settlements, since otherwise the terms of the proposed agreement could not be carried out.³⁰ Likewise covenants in marriage agreements which are not to be performed during coverture are not extinguished by the marriage.³¹

4. EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT WILL. Where one executes a will carrying out the provisions of a prior executory settlement, the agreement is executed by the will, and the testator cannot afterward, by codicil or subsequent will, defeat the agreement,³² and an antenuptial agreement to pay a certain sum at the settler's

Statute of uses not executed in marriage settlements.—A covenant in marriage articles, by the father of the intended wife, to stand seized to her use, after marriage, of a piece of real estate, does not operate, after marriage, to pass the legal estate by the statute of uses, but the use remains executory in the trustee and his heir at law. *Magniac v. death is not revoked because the will gave a legacy in lieu thereof, thus postponing it to the debts.³³

5. EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT LEGISLATION. A valid marriage settlement existing between husband and wife is not revoked by subsequent legislation changing the laws concerning married women's property.³⁴

6. CONSIDERATION FOR AGREEMENT TO REVOKE. Upon a suit by the wife against her husband for the enforcement of an antenuptial contract, an agreement for the dismissal of the suit on consideration that the husband shall give the wife, for her separate use, a certain fund held by him in her right, is valid.³⁵ So an agreement by the wife, on a separation from her husband, to accept half of the amount fixed by antenuptial settlement to be paid her on her husband's death and make no further claim against his estate, is supported by sufficient consideration, the value of the obligation to pay the sum mentioned in the marriage settlement being contingent on the duration of the husband's life and the solvency of his estate.³⁶ But where the wife is dissatisfied with the antenuptial settlement, and in consequence estranges herself from her husband, his promise to revoke the marriage settlement if she will resume marital relations with him is not binding, since her agreement amounts to neither a valuable nor a meritorious consideration, it being her legal duty to resume such relations.³⁷

F. Cancellation — 1. GROUNDS — a. In General. Actions to set aside or reform a marriage settlement are governed in the main by the rules applicable to like actions to set aside or reform other instruments.³⁸ A marriage settlement will not be set aside at the suit of the husband and wife, on the ground of the infancy of the wife at the time the settlement was entered into, the husband having been a party thereto, and no fraud or imposition being suggested.³⁹ That an antenuptial settlement deed contains no power of revocation, nor restraint against anticipation, is no ground for setting it aside.⁴⁰

But compare Russell's Appeal, 75 Pa. St. 269, holding that a mistake consisting in the omission of a power of revocation may be basis for a release in equity against an antenuptial settlement of the wife's estate.

between the parties, an antenuptial contract will be regarded with most rigid scrutiny.⁴¹ It is not the theory of the law that the parties are "dealing at arm's length."⁴² Any designed and material concealment will avoid an antenuptial contract at the will of the party who has been injured.⁴³ It is sufficient ground to cancel a marriage settlement that the husband misrepresented the amount of his property,⁴⁴ or the effect of the settlement,⁴⁵ or induced the wife to sign a paper through misrepresentation that it contained the stipulations agreed upon;⁴⁶ but there must be clear evidence of fraud to justify the setting aside of a marriage contract.⁴⁷ A valid settlement made by a woman will not be set aside on the mere ground that the trustee was also her confidential adviser.⁴⁸ But where even the smallest amount of coercion has been used,⁴⁹ or where the mode prescribed by law to ascertain the woman's free consent has been omitted,⁵⁰ equity will relieve against the contract. The failure to fulfil an executory promise made to secure the consent of a woman to an antenuptial agreement may constitute a fraud which will invalidate the agreement.⁵¹

c. Misconduct. As a general rule the rights granted under a marriage settlement are not forfeited by subsequent misconduct.⁵² Cruel and inhuman conduct of the husband, condoned by the wife, does not work a forfeiture of an antenuptial contract,⁵³ and even a settlement on the husband by the wife cannot be set aside for his adultery, unless a condition to that effect is inserted in the contract.⁵⁴ The fact that the wife refuses to live with her husband, especially when he has been guilty of cruel conduct, constitutes no ground for setting aside a marriage settlement,⁵⁵ nor does the elopement of the wife with an adulterer.⁵⁶ Even a divorce, when obtained for some post-nuptial act, does not forfeit a settlement.⁵⁷ Rights under statutory settlements may, however, by virtue of statutory provisions, be forfeited by the guilty party by divorce,⁵⁸ and the same result may be reached because of the provisions of the settlement.⁵⁹ So divorce for cause existing at the time of the marriage may cause forfeiture of rights under a settlement.⁶⁰

2. ACTION FOR CANCELLATION. Where the antenuptial agreement entered into makes a provision for the wife grossly disproportionate to the value of the husband's estate, the burden is on the husband or those claiming under him after his death to show that full disclosure was made to the wife of the value of the estate before entering into the agreement.⁶¹ The time allowed for a widow to elect under a will not having expired, it is not necessary that she should make such election before filing a bill to set aside an antenuptial contract providing for a definite sum in lieu of her distributive share.⁶² Where a husband seeks to impeach a marriage settlement, executed by himself and wife, she must be joined as defendant.⁶³

G. Enforcement — 1. IN GENERAL. It is generally by the equitable remedy of specific performance that the terms of marriage settlements are enforced.⁶⁴ Trustees under a marriage settlement for the sole and separate use of the wife will be required to protect the estate from both the husband and herself.⁶⁵ Equity, 65. Lowrie's Appeal, 1 Grant (Pa.) 373.

Equity has general authority over trustees.—The court has jurisdiction in equity to require the trustee of the property of a married woman who has become insane, the income of which is secured to her sole and separate use by a marriage settlement, to pay over to her husband and guardian such portion of the income as may be reasonable to aid in her support. Davenport v. Davenport, 5 Allen (Mass.) 464.

however, will not enforce a marriage agreement where the effect would be, contrary to the intention of the parties, to disinherit the only issue of the marriage.⁶⁶ Equity may reform marriage articles,⁶⁷ may enjoin proceedings at law to protect the estate,⁶⁸ and may appoint a trustee to succeed one resigned.⁶⁹ All persons connected with the marriage contract should be made parties to the action to enforce the settlement.⁷⁰ The burden of proving exceptions in the settlement is on the person desiring to take advantage thereof, especially where the matters of exception are within his knowledge and presumably not within the knowledge of the opposing party.⁷¹ In all cases involving marriage settlements a court of equity has power to grant such relief as may be proper under the particular circumstances.⁷²

2. CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE. A clear and definite agreement must exist before the courts will lend relief,⁷³ and a mere honest belief and expectation on the part of complainant that provision would be made for her by defendant will not justify the court in decreeing specific performance.⁷⁴ An executory post-nuptial settlement, being revocable until executed, cannot be specifically enforced;⁷⁵ but equity will decree performance of a parol antenuptial agreement which is admitted by the husband, provided the statute of frauds is not insisted on.⁷⁶

Walt*, 113 Tenn. 189, 81 S. W. 228, holding that where a trust created by a post-nuptial settlement was intended for the protection of the wife's estate in the land during the life of her husband, the wife after the husband's death was entitled to enforce her rights in the land without making the heirs of the deceased trustee parties to the suit, since the trust became inoperative on the husband's death.

Lands of deceased husband subject to annuity.—Where by antenuptial contract an annuity, payable to the wife for her life, in consideration of her release of dower and all other claims upon the husband's estate, was made a charge upon the husband's "estate and lands," the probate court, upon the death of the husband intestate, might properly make a decree assigning the real estate to the heirs, subject to the charge of the annuity. *Desnoyer v. The loss of a marriage settlement deed being proven, the court may properly revive and enforce the settlement.⁷⁷

3. DEFENSES. Marriage settlements being merely civil contracts, all defenses which could be properly set up against other contracts may be set up against them, such as the statute of frauds, laches, want of consideration, incapacity of the parties, fraud, and duress.⁷⁸

4. PERSONS ENTITLED. In general marriage contracts will be enforced in favor of all persons coming within the scope of the marriage consideration.⁷⁹ In the scope of the marriage consideration are included the wife and offspring and those claiming under and through them.⁸⁰ Collateral relatives and mere volunteers are not by general rule within the reach and influence of the mere consideration of marriage, and consequently in general marriage articles will not be enforced at their instance.⁸¹ When, however, equity enforces a marriage settlement in favor of those coming within the scope of the marriage consideration, it will enforce it in full, in favor of all the beneficiaries, whether they are within the scope of the consideration or only volunteers.⁸² A marriage settlement enforceable against a husband may after his death be enforced by the wife against his representatives.⁸³

case of executed contracts, such as conveyances.⁸⁸ And for many purposes courts of equity treat husband and wife as distinct persons, recognizing their ability to mutually contract and to possess separate estates and interests.⁸⁹

3. EFFECT OF STATUTES. Under many of the prevailing statutes relating to married women, contracts between husband and wife are valid for many purposes. Whether or not husband and wife are restricted in their mutual contracts, or can enter, by force of statute, into contracts generally with each other, including conveyances directly from one to the other, depends upon the form of the statute, or upon its judicial interpretation. In a few states the statutes expressly authorize direct conveyances from one to the other.⁹⁰ In other states the statutes conferring general contractual powers upon married women are held by the courts to authorize general contracts between husband and wife, including a wife's direct conveyance to her husband, and his direct conveyance to her.⁹¹ In other jurisdictions, however, the courts have held that statutes empowering a married woman to contract generally, and to manage and control her separate estate, do not remove her common-law disability to contract with her husband.⁹² So the provisions of a few statutes expressly prohibit married women from making contracts with their husbands.⁹³

4. WHAT LAW GOVERNS. The law governing the contractual relations between husband and wife is the law in force at the time of the alleged contract, and not the subsequent law.⁹⁴ The general principles of contract to the effect that matters as to validity are regulated by the place of contract, and matters of performance by the place of performance, and matters respecting remedies by the place of the forum, also generally apply.⁹⁵ The further principles that contracts relat-

was held that Rev. St. (1889) § 6864, which renders the contracts of a married woman enforceable, does not extend to contracts between husband and wife; and as between themselves the common-law disability remains. Lindsay v. Archibald, 65 Mo. App. 117. Under a later statute, it was held, in 1903, that Rev. St. (1899) § 4335, which gives a married woman the right to contract and carry on business on her own account, and to sue without joining her husband as a party, is broad enough to permit her to contract with her husband, and to have such contract enforced at law. Rice v. Sally, 176 Mo. 107, 75 S. W. 398.

Submission to arbitration.—A married woman, being unable to bind herself personally by contract, except as prescribed by statute, cannot agree to submit to arbitrators the respective rights of herself and husband to property. Crouch v. Crouch, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 288, 70 S. W. 595.

Estoppel.—Although a wife cannot acquire title to property from her husband, where the husband stands by and acquiesces in the sale by his wife of property given her by him, the buyer, if he acted in good faith, is entitled to the same, as against the husband's creditors. *Stockwell v. Partnership a contract.—Under the statute prohibiting a married woman from making contracts with her husband, a husband and wife cannot enter into a valid partnership, and the wife cannot therefore be liable as her husband's partner for rent of a store. Bowker v. Bradford, 140 Mass. 521, 5 N. E. 480. See also infra, III, A, 9; IV, E, 9.

The New Jersey Married Women's Act of March 27, 1874 (2 Gen. St. p. 2015), § 14, declaring that nothing in the act should "enable husband and wife to contract with or to sue each other except as heretofore," is not repealed by the amendatory act of June 13, 1895 (2 Gen. St. p. 2017), authorizing married women to bind themselves by contract. Turner v. Davenport, (N. J. Err. & App. 1901) 49 Atl. 463.

95. Law of place of contract.—Where the transfer of property to a wife by her husband was before the operation of the code of 1880, declaring invalid unrecorded transfers from husband to wife, and a gift was made while the parties resided in Alabama, it was good between the parties, and the statutes of that state could have no effect after the persons and property came under the laws of Mississippi. Walker v. Marseilles, 70 Miss. 283, 12 So. 211. See also Beard v. Basye, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 133; Dougherty v. Snyder, 15 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 84, 16 Am. Dec. 520.

Note signed in New Jersey, but negotiated in New York.—The written promise of a married woman, domiciled in New Jersey, to pay a sum of money to the order of her husband, signed by her at her domicile, and carried by him, with her acquiescence, to New York, and there indorsed, and delivered in exchange for other notes of like import, is a contract made in the state of New York; and the capacity of the wife to bind herself by a contract of suretyship is to be determined by the law of that state. Thompson v. Taylor, 66 N. J. L. 253, 49 Atl. 544, 54 L. R. A. 585.

ing to personality are governed generally by the law of the domicile,⁹⁶ and contracts connected with the conveyancing of lands by the law of the jurisdiction in which the land is situated,⁹⁷ are likewise applicable to the present discussion.⁹⁸

5. CONTRACTS BY INTERVENTION OF TRUSTEE. Contracts are frequently made indirectly between husband and wife by means of the intervention of a third person or a trustee. Where, at common law, the married pair cannot mutually contract, the only way in which a contract for the benefit of the wife can be made valid is by the husband entering into an agreement with the trustee of the wife's estate.⁹⁹ Of course no third person or trustee is necessary where husband and wife are permitted by force of statute to contract directly, and equity will sustain a direct contract between husband and wife when such a contract, if made with a trustee for the wife, would be good at law.¹

6. IMPLIED CONTRACTS. Where husband and wife may legally enter into contracts directly with each other, contracts between them may be either express or implied as in case of other contracting parties.² Whether or not specific dealings

Application of equitable principles.—Where a husband sought to recover from the wife's estate moneys which he had advanced her under promise of repayment, the parties having resided in New Jersey, where the agreement was made and the money used, the statutes of New York relative to a wife's separate estate do not apply, and, there being no statute of New Jersey relating thereto offered in evidence, the rules of courts of equity in such cases will govern. Hendricks v. Isaacs, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 239. See also supra, I, B.

Covenant to surrender marital rights in lands.—Where a husband and wife were domiciled in North Carolina, and the wife took steps which, under the North Carolina statutes, gave her the right to contract as a feme sole, with her husband as well as with others, and she afterward released her dower in her husband's lands, and in consideration of this release, and for other adequate considerations, the husband executed a covenant to her to surrender all his marital rights in certain lands owned by her in Massachusetts, the validity of the contract, and the competency of the wife to receive the covenant, were to be determined by the law of North Carolina. Polson v. Stewart, 167 Mass. 211, 45 N. E. 737, 37 Am. St. Rep. 452, 36 L. R. A. 771.

Delivery to third person not necessary.—Where a husband executes a bill of sale to a third person, and the third person executes a bill of sale to the wife, it is sufficient to convey title, if both bills of sale are handed to the wife without having been actually delivered into the hands of the third person. Kulin v. Heller, 69 N. J. L. 33, 54 Atl. 519.

Purpose of a trustee.—The object of the Pennsylvania act of April 15, 1851 (Pamph. Laws 675), contemplating the intervention of a trustee where a wife loans money to her husband, is to protect the wife, and not to render loans made by her to her husband in good faith void. The better practice is to contract through a trustee. Mancil v. Mancil, 2 Del. Co. (Pa.) 531.

Assignment operating by way of declaration of trust.—A husband by a deed poll recited as follows: "Whereas I am beneficially possessed of the ground-rents hereby intended to be settled," and continued as follows: "I do hereby settle, assign, transfer, and set over unto my wife as though she were a single woman" several leasehold houses and the ground-rents thereof. The deed was voluntary. It was held that this deed was not void as being an intended assignment from husband to wife, but operated as a declaration of trust. Baddeley v. Baddeley, 9 Ch. D. 113, 48 L. J. Ch. 36, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 906, 26 Wkly. Rep. 850.

2. Steadman v. Wilbur, 7 R. I. 481, holding that it is not necessary, to constitute the relation of debtor and creditor between husband and wife, that there should be an express promise by him to repay her at the time of loans by her to him, or that a prior promise by him should be express, but inferential proof is sufficient.

between them amount in a given case to an implied contract depends of course upon the circumstances of each case.³

7. CONTRACTS AND DEBTS AT TIME OF MARRIAGE. At common law a debt owed by a man to a woman or by a woman to a man is extinguished upon their intermarriage;⁴ and contracts rescinded before marriage of the parties thereto are not revived by the marriage.⁵ The debt or contract is not merely suspended during coverture, but is extinguished, and does not revive upon divorce,⁶ nor when the marriage is dissolved by death.⁷ So a debt owed by a firm to a woman is extinguished upon her marriage to a member of the firm, upon the familiar doctrine that the release of one joint obligor releases all.⁸ Where, however, a debt is owed by a man to a woman in a representative capacity, as where she is administratrix, their subsequent marriage does not extinguish the debt, but only suspends it during coverture, or until the appointment of an administrator in the wife's place.⁹ Where, by virtue of statute, all property and contractual rights of parties to a marriage are preserved, debts due before marriage from the husband to the wife and vice versa are not extinguished by the subsequent marriage.¹⁰

A husband who occupies a homestead owned by his wife may pay taxes and interest on encumbrances thereon, without becoming a creditor of his wife. Hamill v. Henry, 69 Iowa 752, 28 N. W. 32.

Equitable lien.—Where a wife advanced money for buildings on land of her husband as an investment, without any promise by him of repayment, she has an equitable lien on the property for the amount of the advances. Stramann v. Scheeren, 7 Colo. App. 1, 42 Pac. 191.

Trustee by implication.—If a wife places money in her husband's hands to be invested for her, and he accepts it with that understanding, he becomes her trustee, and is bound to execute his trust faithfully. Tresch v. Wirtz, 34 N. J. Eq. 124.

Marriage of mortgagor and mortgagee.—The married women's acts have not changed the common-law rule that the marriage of a mortgagor and the mortgagee operates to extinguish the debt, so that a mortgage executed by a feme sole cannot be enforced after she has married the mortgagee. Schilling v. Darnody, 102 Tenn. 439, 52 S. W. 291, 73 Am. St. Rep. 892.

Mortgage to secure third person.—A mortgage made by a woman to secure the debt of another person is not extinguished by her subsequent marriage to the mortgagee. Bemis v. Call, 10 Allen (Mass.) 512.

8. SERVICES. Although the married women's property acts have not in general changed the common-law rule that the wife's earnings belong to the husband,¹¹ yet in connection with her separate estate a married woman may employ her own husband's services the same as any other employee or agent.¹² A husband cannot charge his wife, or her estate after her death, for services rendered or moneys paid in improving her real estate during the coverture, or for moneys expended in settling controversies in regard to her real estate.¹³

9. PARTNERSHIP.¹⁴ A married woman cannot, at common law, enter into a partnership with her husband or with any third person.¹⁵ But a partnership between husband and wife may be valid under legislation authorizing it.¹⁶

Spencer v. Stockwell, 76 Vt. 176, 56 Atl. 661. Contra, see Gosnell v. Jones, 152 Ind. 638, 53 N. E. 381.

The wife's statutory right to her "property" has been held not to include services rendered by her, and her marriage to the person to whom the services were rendered abrogates his agreement to pay for them. In re Callister, 153 N. Y. 294, 47 N. E. 268, 69 Am. St. Rep. 620 [modifying 88 Hun 87, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 628]. Contra, Carlton v. Carlton, 72 Me. 115, 39 Am. Rep. 307.

An agreement by the husband to pay for the wife's services in keeping house is without consideration and void as against public policy. Michigan Trust Co. v. Chapin, 106 Mich. 384, 64 N. W. 334, 58 Am. St. Rep. 490.

A contract that the product of joint labor of husband and wife, engaged in farming, shall be the property of the wife is against public policy and invalid against creditors. Dempster Mill Mfg. Co. v. Bundy, 64 Kan. 444, 67 Pac. 816, 56 L. R. A. 739.

A statute which enables a wife to contract with her husband respecting her property and the "acquisition" of property, and "to exercise all powers and enjoy all rights in respect thereto and in respect to her contracts . . . as if she were unmarried," does not change the rule which renders invalid a contract by which a husband agrees to pay his wife for her services. In re Kaufmann, 104 Fed. 768.

Wife's compensation as receiver.—Under the Illinois statute a wife is not precluded from accepting compensation as receiver in an action by her husband. Meissler v. Meissler, 101 Ill. App. 256.

Assistance in business.—The mere fact that a wife assists her husband in his business does not give her either a separate or joint pecuniary interest in the business or compensation. Overbeck v. Ahlmeier, 106 Ill. App. 606.

Wife as clerk for husband.—A wife's services as clerk in her husband's store is not "labor for her husband or family" within the meaning of the Indiana statute, and a contract for such employment is valid. *Roche v. Although it is generally held that the statutes relating to married women's property rights do not permit a feme covert to enter into partnership with her husband,¹⁷ yet when husband and wife are empowered to contract with each other a valid partnership may be formed between them.¹⁸

10. LOANS AND ADVANCES. Loans between husband and wife do not create, at common law, any liability to repay the same, since the transaction is invalid both for want of competent parties and for lack of consideration.¹⁹ In equity, however, a promise by the husband to repay money which he has borrowed from her separate estate and which has been loaned to him on the strength of such promise will be enforced against him and will be a lien upon his estate.²⁰ It is also enforceable against his assignee in bankruptcy.²¹ Likewise an agreement by a wife to reimburse her husband for money loaned to her for the benefit of her separate estate

Under the New York statute a husband may enter into a valid partnership agreement with his wife, and the use of the term "Co." to represent her does not contravene the requirement of Laws (1833), c. 281, that the same represent an actual partner. Zimmerman v. Erhard, 8 Daly 311, 58 How. Pr. 11 [affirmed in 83 N. Y. 74, 38 Am. Rep. 396].

Under the Vermont statute, providing that a married woman may contract with any person other than her husband, binding herself and separate property as if unmarried, and be sued on all contracts made by her without the joinder of her husband, and that execution may be levied upon her separate estate, a married woman may, in conducting a partnership business with her husband, bind herself to third persons for goods furnished the partnership, and such obligation may be enforced against her when sued with him as a partner. Lane v. Bishop, 65 Vt. 575, 27 Atl. 499.

will be chargeable to her estate.²² Loans and advances between husband and wife are now valid at law, moreover, in many jurisdictions by force of legislation.²³ As in case of other contracts, however, the mere fact that the wife's separate estate is secured to her by statute will not necessarily empower husband and wife to legally bind themselves by mutual loans.²⁴ If the spouses may directly contract, then a loan of money from one to the other under an express or implied agreement to repay is binding.²⁵ In determining the existence of an implied contract all the circumstances of each case must of course be considered, in order to show that husband and wife dealt with each other as debtor and creditor.²⁶ The mere delivery of money by a wife to her husband does not create an obligation on his part.²⁷ Where the husband advances money to pay his wife's debts, it will be presumed, in absence of evidence to the contrary, that it was advanced by virtue of her marital rights.²⁸ Where a valid loan exists between husband and wife the creditor is entitled to interest under the same rules as a third person would be.²⁹ A Statutory requirements as to evidence must be observed. A married woman cannot, by an

Loan on homestead property.—The fact that it is the duty of a husband to furnish a home for his wife will not prevent him from fairly contracting with her for the repayment of money furnished by him for the building of a house on land owned by her, merely because the property is occupied as a homestead. *North v. When interest not allowable.—If the separate property of a wife passes into the possession and control of her husband, with her consent, she is entitled to recover against his estate only the amount of the principal without interest, in the absence of an agreement to repay or to pay interest, or a demand for repayment. *King v. 11. BILLS AND NOTES. A note given by the husband to the wife, or by the wife to the husband, is void at common law.³¹ And this is so, although the note is in the hands of a third person in payment of a debt of the spouse making it.³² Likewise where a husband indorses over to the wife a note payable to his order, such indorsement at common law passes no interest to her.³³ In equity and under statutes married women may, however, contract for the benefit of their separate estates, and for such purposes may bind their estates by their promissory notes.³⁴ Whether or not, however, under statutes relating to the contractual powers of married women, a feme covert's note to her husband, or his note to her is valid, depends upon the character of the statute. In some jurisdictions, by force of each statute, notes between husband and wife are valid,³⁵ if based on a sufficient

Wife as party plaintiff.—Under the Missouri code a wife as transferee of a note payable to her husband may enforce the same at law. Goza v. Sanford, 79 Mo. App. 95.

Ratification of invalid note.—One who, before July 1, 1874, made a note payable to his wife with personal security could, after the statute of that date permitting contracts between husband and wife, so ratify the note as to make it as binding on him as if he had made a new note in lieu thereof. Thomas v. Mueller, 106 Ill. 36.

Insolvency of husband.—Where a wife loans money to the husband, taking his note, she stands on an equal footing with other creditors in case of his insolvency. The statute requiring a wife, in order to protect her rights when she leaves property in her husband's control, to file a notice, etc., does not apply to such a case. In re Alexander, 37 Iowa 454.

such agreements to convey are invalid at law,⁴¹ although, as has been stated, such executory contracts may be upheld in equity when such contracts are for the benefit of the wife.⁴² Where the statute prohibits such contracts, but a contract therefor has been executed, the wife, upon default on her part, takes the property ex maleficio in trust for the parties beneficially interested.⁴³

B. Sales and Transfers of Personal Property—1. IN GENERAL. At common law all sales of personal property between husband and wife are absolutely void.⁴⁴ In equity, however, where there is no fraud upon creditors, a transfer of personal property from husband to wife vests an equitable title in the wife.⁴⁵ Although the sale is invalid at law, yet equity will in a proper case regard the wife as the beneficial owner,⁴⁶ and while the legal title remains in the husband, equity will regard him as trustee of the property for the use of the wife.⁴⁷ Although, as has been previously stated, the power given by statutes to married women to contract generally is not as a rule construed to extend to direct transfers between husband and wife, yet in a number of jurisdictions, by force of express legislation, or by judicial interpretation of the statute, husband and wife may sell personal property to each other, and give a valid title to the same.⁴⁸ Some states require, as against third persons, that such transfers shall be in writ-

Equitable owner under "captured property act."—Under Abandoned or Captured Property Act, § 3 (12 U. S. St. at L. 820 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 736]), making a person who has a "right of the proceeds" the beneficiary of a fund arising out of property seized during the war of the rebellion, a wife in Tennessee, holding by deed from her husband, is the owner entitled, notwithstanding that state has no statutes permitting her to hold a separate estate, since equity would uphold such a conveyance. Meriwether v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cl. 259.

46. Holmes v. Winchester, 133 Mass. 140.

Right of action based upon equitable ownership.—A wife who purchases personal property from her husband in good faith and for a good and sufficient consideration is in equity the owner of such property, and if a subsequent creditor of her husband levies on the same she can maintain replevin for recovery thereof. Going v. Orns, 8 Kan. 85.

Vermont.—Leavitt v. Jones, 54 Vt. 423, 41 Am. Rep. 849.

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 229.

Rights of creditors.—A direct sale and transfer, for a fair and valuable consideration, of personal property by husband to wife confers, as against strangers who are not creditors of the husband, a title thereto upon the wife, which may enable her to maintain an action of detinue in the name of herself and husband to recover the same, when unlawfully detained. Robinson v. Woodford, 37 W. Va. 377, 16 S. E. 602.

Chattels exempt from execution.—A statute which provides "that any deed from the husband to the wife, for her use, shall be void as against his creditors, who were such at the time of executing the deed," does not invalidate as against creditors a voluntary conveyance to the wife by the husband of a chattel which is exempt from seizure and sale for the payment of his debts. Smith v. Allen, 39 Miss. 469.

Vermont statute.—The character of possession required in case of a sale of chattels by a husband to his wife is not affected by Vt. Acts (1884), No. 104, whose object is to enable married women to contract as if sole, and to protect their property against their

ing, acknowledged and recorded.⁴⁹ The written consent of the wife is required under some statutes in order to transfer to the husband the title to her personal property;⁵⁰ and generally speaking where the interests of creditors may be injuriously affected clear evidence of a bona fide transfer is necessary;⁵¹ mere uncorroborated testimony of the wife is insufficient in such cases to sustain the transaction.⁵²

2. TRANSFERS OF BILLS AND NOTES. Where bills and notes between husband and wife are valid under statutes, such property may be transferred from one to the other by indorsement,⁵³ or by delivery when the note is payable to bearer.⁵⁴ And although an indorsement of a note from husband to wife may have no validity at law, yet equity may hold the same binding upon the husband.⁵⁵ Where, however, a note indorsed by a husband to his wife is sued on in another jurisdiction than that in which the indorsement was made, the common law will be presumed husbands' creditors. Wheeler v. Selden, 63 Vt. 429, 21 Atl. 615, 25 Am. St. Rep. 771, 12 L. R. A. 600.

A husband who has separated from his wife may sell property to her in consideration of her past and future support of their children. Kraft v. Kraft, 70 Minn. 144, 72 N. W. 804.

Assignment of chose in action.—The Illinois statute requiring transfers between husband and wife to be recorded does not relate to an assignment by a husband of a chose in action to the wife. Cole v. Marple, 98 Ill. 58, 38 Am. Rep. 83.

Statutory requirements in lieu of change of possession.—The requirements of a statute that no transfer of goods and chattels between husband and wife shall be valid as against any third person, unless such transfer or conveyance be in writing, acknowledged and recorded as a chattel mortgage, are in lieu of a change of possession; and hence where a transfer of personal property between husband and wife living together was duly acknowledged and recorded as required by such section, it was valid as to creditors of the transferrer, although there was no actual change of possession of the property. Larsen v. Ditto, 90 Ill. App. 384.

Transfer of insurance policy.—A transfer by a wife to her husband of a policy of insurance for her benefit on his life is within a statute requiring all contracts between them impairing or changing the "body" or capital of the wife's personal estate for longer than three years to be in writing and certified in a certain way by an officer after making a private examination of the wife. Sydnor v. Boyd, 119 N. C. 481, 26 S. E. 92, 37 L. R. A. 734.

Indorsement in blank.—The mere indorsement in blank by a wife of a promissory note payable to her is not such a written consent as is required, to enable the husband to pass title thereto to another. Case v. Espenschied, 169 Mo. 215, 69 S. W. 276, 92 Am. St. Rep. 633.

51. See Elliott v. Keith, 32 Mo. App. 119, holding that, in passing on the validity of a sale to a wife by her husband of live stock on a farm under his supervision, regard should be had to the fact that owing to the peculiar situation of the parties there cannot be had that change of possession obtainable in ordinary cases.

The burden of proof is on the husband, or those claiming under him, to show that a gratuitous transfer to him from his wife was freely made and that the transaction was fair and open. Hovorka v. Havlik, (Nebr. 1903) 93 N. W. 900.

Transfer of stock; presumption.—The transfer by a husband to his wife of stock held in trust by a third person for the husband is presumptively a provision for the wife, and does not prima facie raise a resulting trust to the husband. Hill v. Pine River Bank, 45 N. H. 300.

55. See Proctor v. Cole, 104 Ind. 373, 3 N. E. 106, 4 N. E. 303, holding that where a husband borrows money of his wife, and expressly promises to repay it to her children, and does repay it by assigning a promissory note, the assignment is founded upon an equitable consideration sufficient to sustain it.

Specific performance.—An agreement by a husband to transfer to his wife a note for a part of the purchase-money, for her separate use, in consideration of her release of her potential right of dower in land sold by him is binding in equity, and may, upon her application, be specifically enforced against him. Ward v. Crotty, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 59.

Transfer by delivery.—A husband making a gift of a promissory note to his wife, the equitable title, so far as concerns the parties to exist in the latter jurisdiction, in the absence of contrary proof, and the note will be void in her hands.⁵⁶

C. Conveyances by Husband to Wife—1. AT COMMON LAW. Under the common-law doctrine of the merger of identity of husband and wife,⁵⁷ a husband cannot by deed convey directly to his wife the legal title in lands.⁵⁸

2. INDIRECT CONVEYANCE THROUGH THIRD PERSON. By means, however, of a third person as a medium, a husband may, even at common law, make a conveyance indirectly to his wife, by making an absolute conveyance to the third person, who in turn conveys to the wife. This will result in passing the legal estate to the wife.⁵⁹

3. CREATION OF TRUST. The husband may also use a third person as trustee, conveying the property to him for the use and benefit of the wife, thereby vest-to it, vests in her, and she may maintain an action on it against the maker. Tullis v. Fridley, 9 Minn. 79.

Execution of a power to convey.—A power in a deed conveying land to a married woman, authorizing her husband, with the concurrence of the wife, to sell and convey the property, does not authorize the husband to convey to the wife. Horsfall v. Ford, 5 Bush (Ky.) 642.

Conveyance before marriage.—Where a married woman, prior to her marriage, receives a deed of real estate from one who subsequently becomes her husband, such a deed is in no sense a conveyance to her from her husband, since she received her title from one who at the time sustained no such relation to her. *Reed v. Lease through third person.—If a husband conveys land through a third person to his wife, to hold so long as she remains his widow, and afterward executes a lease of the land for the term of her life to A, who on the same day assigns the lease to her, the lease and assignment may be found to be parts of one transaction in which the husband released to the wife through A, as a conduit, the condition subject to which she held the land under the deed, and such a release is valid. Hammond v. Abbott, 166 Mass. 517, 44 N. E. 620.

ing the legal estate in the trustee and the equitable estate in the wife.⁶⁰ By virtue of the statute of uses, such a conveyance would also vest the legal estate in the wife.⁶¹

4. RULE IN EQUITY. Despite the common-law rule, equity may uphold a direct conveyance from husband to wife, providing that it does not affect the rights of third persons.⁶² Equity will scrutinize the motives and purposes of the conveyance, but when made in good faith, and especially when supported by some valuable or meritorious consideration, it will generally be sustained.⁶³

wife is expressly authorized by statute.⁶⁴ In other states the statutes permitting married women to exercise general contractual powers and to control their property as if unmarried have been construed to authorize such conveyances.⁶⁵ It is held, however, that where husband and wife are enabled to convey directly, such power refers only to lands owned by them in their own right, and does not include any authority to convey to each other property derived from the marital relation, such as dower, curtesy, or other interest which marriage may vest in either in the property of the other.⁶⁶ In a few states husband and wife are prohibited by statute from contracting with relation to the real estate of either.⁶⁷ Under the influence of modern statutes it has been held that a husband may convey to the wife his interest in an estate in entirety.⁶⁸

6. MORTGAGES. A husband, to secure a debt owed by him to his wife, may execute a mortgage to her either directly, when he may legally convey,⁶⁹ or otherwise by the intervention of a trustee.⁷⁰ Statutes forbidding contracts between husband and wife relative to the real estate of either may, however,

Statutes may impose restrictions.—Where immovable property purports to have been sold by a husband to his wife for a certain sum, the title is invalid on its face, the apparent consideration not being within the exceptions provided by La. Civ. Code, art. 2446, authorizing a sale between husband and wife on judicial separation, or when the transfer is for the purpose of replacing the wife's dotal or other effects alienated, or when the transfer is made by the wife in payment of a sum promised as dowry. Priorities.—A mortgage by a husband to his wife to secure a portion of her separate estate used in the purchase of the mortgaged property will be postponed to senior mortgages to third persons, who took without notice of the wife's lien. Neal v. Perkerson, 61 Ga. 345.

70. Coleman v. Smith, 55 Ala. 368; Northington v. Faber, 52 Ala. 45. See McFarland v. Gilchrist, 25 N. J. Eq. 487, holding that a mortgage given by a husband and wife in trust for the wife to secure to her money loaned by her and her husband out of her separate estate is a lien subsequent to a junior mortgage by the same parties.

7. CONSIDERATION — a. Between the Parties. Between the parties themselves a conveyance from husband to wife requires no pecuniary consideration to make it valid.⁷² In other words the husband's voluntary conveyance, if free from undue influence or fraud, will be upheld.⁷³ Thus a conveyance to the wife without further consideration than love and affection is valid between the parties.⁷⁴

b. As to Third Persons. With reference to third persons, however, such as creditors and others, a valuable consideration is necessary when otherwise their rights would be prejudiced.⁷⁵ In general a conveyance by the husband to the wife, if in good faith and for adequate consideration, will be valid against all persons.⁷⁶

c. What Constitutes Valuable Consideration. The relinquishment by the wife of her interest in her husband's estate may be a valuable consideration.⁷⁷ Likewise a conveyance based upon a debt owed by the husband to the wife is for a valuable consideration,⁷⁸ as is a conveyance of property where the purchase-

Inadequacy of price.—Inadequacy of price in a conveyance from a husband to his wife will not be deemed a reason for construing the conveyance to be a mortgage, rather than a contract of sale with a privilege of repurchasing. A bounty may be presumed to have been intended. John's Appeal, 102 Pa. St. 59.

Right to homestead as a consideration.—The wife's right to the homestead after her husband's death is a meritorious consideration for his deed of it to her, there being neither creditors nor children to protect. Albright v. Albright, 70 Wis. 528, 36 N. W. 254.

Validity against heir.—A conveyance by a husband to his wife without further consideration than love and affection is valid as against the heir of the husband, after the latter's death, where the heir was of full age at the time of the execution of the deed, and was in no manner dependent on the husband for support. *Horder v. Solvent husband may make voluntary conveyance.—In the absence of a design to injure or delay creditors, a man in debt may without consideration voluntarily convey property to his wife for the purpose of creating a separate estate in her, where his creditors are protected by the retention on his part of property enough to satisfy their demands. Nichols v. Wallace, 31 Ill. App. 408. See also FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Recital of consideration not conclusive.—The fact that deeds from a husband to his wife recite money considerations as passing from the wife does not show that the deeds were not intended as settlements on the wife by the husband. McCartney v. Fletcher, 11 App. Cas. (D. C.) 1.

Wife must be able to contract.—At common law a husband and wife cannot contract with one another, and therefore the promise of the wife to release her right of dower in certain property of the husband is not a valuable consideration for a conveyance by him to her of other property. Collinson v. Jackson, 14 Fed. 305, 8 Sawy. 357.

Conveyance by insolvent husband.—A conveyance made by an insolvent husband to his wife pursuant to an agreement made with the wife when he was solvent, in consideration of the wife's parting with property of her own and relinquishing her right of dower in the husband's property, is valid. Green v. Green, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 250. See, however, Baxter v. Hecht, 98 Iowa 531, 67 N. W. 407.

money for the same was furnished by the wife.⁷⁹ A conveyance from husband to wife in fulfilment of a valid agreement entered into previous to marriage, and founded upon the consideration of the marriage, is based upon a valuable consideration.⁸⁰ A conveyance, however, based upon the consideration of the husband's use of the rents and profits of his wife's estate is not a valuable consideration when the same belongs to him by virtue of his marital rights.⁸¹ The consideration must be connected with the conveyance.⁸² The fact that a statute prohibits contracts between husband and wife for the sale of property does not prevent the husband from executing, or the wife from accepting, a conveyance of real estate in restitution for her separate property which he has appropriated.⁸³ A husband may convey land to his wife in consideration of her agreement to devise it to him, and a subsequent devise by her to others may be set aside as a cloud on his title.⁸⁴

Insolvency of husband.—A husband, although he be insolvent, may convey real estate to his wife in payment of a note given her by him for money of hers loaned him, if there be no intention to defraud or delay creditors. Randall v. Lunt, 51 Me. 246. See also FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Wife as innocent purchaser.—A husband was indebted to his wife in the sum of six thousand dollars. He promised to purchase a home and place the title in her name. With her knowledge and consent, he negotiated for and purchased a house and lot, and procured the deed to be made in her name, and delivered the same to her. It was held that the husband was the agent of his wife in making the purchase, and in law she is chargeable with full knowledge of the details of the transaction, and does not occupy the position of an innocent purchaser for value from her husband, although she received the conveyance in actual ignorance of the terms and conditions of the purchase. Bray v. Booker, 8 N. D. 347, 79 N. W. 293. See Basye v. Basye, 152 Ind. 172, 52 N. E. 797.

Subsequent payment by wife of husband's debt.—The fact that a wife, after receiving a conveyance from her husband in payment of her claim, pays to a third person, from personal and family reasons, a demand against the husband, does not establish the fact that she received the conveyance in trust for him. Hyde v. Powell, 47 Mich. 156, 10 N. W. 181.

Antenuptial indebtedness.—A conveyance from the husband to the wife, based on an antenuptial agreement by which the husband agreed to secure to the wife the amount received by him from her, was based upon a sufficient consideration, and was not fraudulent as to creditors, although not made until after the husband became embarrassed. table estate the wife may dispose of to the same extent that she may dispose of any other similar separate estate.⁸⁵ If no third person is named as trustee, equity will regard the husband as a trustee for the benefit of the wife.⁸⁷ By force of statute, however, a deed from the husband directly to the wife may vest in her the legal title,⁸⁸ which will be sufficient on which to base an action of ejectment.⁸⁹ If the husband holds the legal title as the wife's trustee, upon a divorce obtained by the wife, the use has been held to be executed in the wife, and she thus becomes seized of the legal estate.⁹⁰ A deed from a husband to a wife is to be construed as operating to her separate use, although no such words are used as would be necessary to create a separate estate in her if the conveyance were by a third person.⁹¹

Legal estate remains in husband.—Since before the Alabama act of Feb. 28, 1887, a conveyance by a husband directly to his wife was absolutely void at law, although it might give her an equity if otherwise valid, a purchaser of the land at execution sale under judgment against the husband, between the date of such conveyance and the passage of the act of 1887, took it free from any rights at law which that act would otherwise have given to the wife by virtue of the conveyance. Maxwell v. Grace, 85 Ala. 577, 5 So. 319. And see Meyer v. Sulzbacher, 75 Ala. 423; Canby v. Porter, 12 Ohio 79.

Title to maintain ejectment.—In ejectment, plaintiff claimed title under a conveyance from a married woman, who held under a deed of gift from her husband, executed in consideration of natural love and affection only. It was held that under the law incapacitating the husband from conveying a separate estate to his wife, she took only an equitable estate in the premises, the legal title and the possession whereof remained in the husband; and an equitable title being insufficient to support the action of ejectment judgment was properly rendered for defendants. Kinney v. Dexter, 81 Wis. 80, 51 N. W. 82.

Termination of trust.—A conveyance by a husband to a trustee on the following trust, viz., "In trust, nevertheless, for the use and benefit of [the grantor's wife], as a separate estate and property for her support," clearly indicates that the object of the settlement was the support and maintenance of the wife during her life; and it makes no difference that the conveyance was to the trustee in fee. The trust terminates when the purpose for which it was created is accomplished, and the estate then reverts to the grantor. Pillow v. Wade, 31 Ark. 678. And see Conrad v. Starr, 50 Iowa 470.

86. Conner v. Williams, 57 Ala. 131; Davison v. Sage, 20 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 115.

Use to wife for life.—A deed from husband to wife conveyed to her for life, "not subject to be disposed of by her will, nor in any other manner whatever, neither subject to the control and liabilities of any future husband," habendum to her only during her natural life. There followed a clause subjecting the land to the grantor's maintenance, use, benefit, and control during his life, "also subject to the distribution of the legal heirs" of the husband at the wife's death. It was held that the wife took a use for life in connection with her husband while he lived, and that he had power to dispose of the estate in any way, subject only to her life-estate. Sasser v. McWilliams, 73 Ga. 678.

Wife holding in trust for husband.—Property conveyed to the wife by her husband, to be held by her for their common living and as a source of payment of his debts, on many of which she had become liable, with the understanding that on the death of either the property should be disposed of according to law, is held for the husband's benefit. Waltson v. Smith, 70 Vt. 19, 39 Atl. 252.

Wife's rights in property conveyed as jointure.—Since a wife does not come into possession of land conveyed to her by her husband as a jointure until his death, she is not entitled, after his death, to rents and profits which accrued prior thereto. Bryan v. Bryan, 62 Ark. 79, 34 S. W. 260.

9. EXECUTION, DELIVERY, AND RECORDATION. The deed of the husband to the wife should be executed, acknowledged, and recorded in accordance with the local laws.⁹² The deed must of course be delivered, but delivery may be implied from the circumstances of the case and from the conduct of the parties.⁹³ The fact, however, that the deed comes into the possession of the wife is not necessarily a delivery. The husband must intend to part with its control.⁹⁴ In general recording of the deed is not essential to make the conveyance valid between the parties,⁹⁵ yet to protect the same against third persons the recording statutes must be carefully observed.⁹⁶ A defective deed may, however, be valid in equity as showing an intention to create a trust.⁹⁷

10. PRESUMPTIONS. There is no presumption from the mere relation of husband and wife, according to the better rule, that a conveyance from him to her was induced by undue influence.⁹⁸ It is the presumption that a conveyance by the husband to the wife is for her support and a proper provision for her comfort.⁹⁹

92. See the statutes of the different states.

Property outside of state.—Miss. Code, § 2294, requiring transfers from a husband to the wife, or from her to him, to be recorded in order to make them valid, does not apply to property situated out of the state. Davis v. Williams, 73 Miss. 708, 19 So. 352.

Deed defectively executed may be valid in equity.—Although a deed from a husband to his wife is defective in not having the attestation of a subscribing witness, it may be valid in equity. Goodlett v. Hansell, 66 Ala. 151.

93. Dale v. Lincoln, 62 Ill. 22; Glaze v. Three Rivers Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 349, 49 N. W. 595; Gage v. Gage, 36 Mich. 229. See Davis v. Davis, 92 Iowa 147, 60 N. W. 507.

Possession of premises by husband not rebuttal of delivery.—Where a deed from a husband to his wife is executed by both parties and duly acknowledged and recorded, evidence to rebut the fact of delivery must be clear and convincing. The subsequent possession of the land by the husband and joint possession of the land by both is insufficient. Wells v. American Mortg. Co., 109 Ala. 430, 20 So. 136.

94. Pitts v. Sheriff, 108 Mo. 110, 18 S. W. 1071, holding that the fact that a grantor signed and acknowledged a deed and placed it in a trunk, whereby it fell into the hands of his wife, the grantee, is not a sufficient delivery.

95. Dimmick v. Dimmick, 95 Cal. 323, 30 Pac. 547; Brookbank v. Kennard, 41 Ind. 339; Woodson v. McClelland, 4 Mo. 495.

Conveyance not necessarily a marriage settlement.—A deed from a husband to his wife does not belong to the class of "marriage settlements and other marriage contracts" which, under N. C. Code, § 1269, are void unless registered within six months after execution. Walton v. Parish, 95 N. C. 259.

Destruction of unrecorded deed.—Where real estate is conveyed by a husband to his wife through the intervention of a trustee, the destruction of the unrecorded deed by the husband with the assent of the wife and trustee will not of itself estop her, as against the grantor's heir, to claim the land under such conveyance. Dukes v. Spangler, 35 Ohio St. 119.

96. White v. Magarahan, 87 Ga. 217, 13 S. E. 509; Montgomery v. Scott, 61 Miss. 409; Gregory v. Dodds, 60 Miss. 549.

"Transfer" includes sublease.—Miss. Code (1880), § 1178, declaring no "transfer" of lands between husband and wife valid as against third persons unless in writing and filed for record, applies to a sublease. Montgomery v. Scott, 61 Miss. 409.

Priority over judgment against husband.—After a conveyance of land by a husband to his wife, a judgment was recovered against the husband, and was assigned to a third person before the deed to the wife was recorded, there being no fraud in the conveyance. It was held that the wife's title under such deed would prevail against the judgment. Morris v. Ziegler, 71 Pa. St. 450.

Deed from third person.—A deed by a third person conveying property to the separate use of a wife is valid against the creditors of her husband, although not recorded. Such conveyance can be avoided only by the creditors of the grantor. Hamilton v. Bishop, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 33, 29 Am. Dec. 101.

Circumstances of course may show undue influence. Sears v. Shafer, 6 N. Y. 268; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 27 Ont. App. 658; McCaffrey v. McCaffrey, 18 Ont. App. 599.

This presumption, however, may be rebutted, in order to show that the conveyance was not made in good faith.¹

11. BURDEN OF PROOF. The general rule is that the burden of showing the validity of the conveyance is on those claiming under it.²

D. Conveyances by Wife to Husband³—1. COMMON LAW. At common law, husband and wife being one,⁴ she cannot make a direct conveyance to her husband.⁵

2. IN EQUITY. Equity will, however, in some cases, uphold a deed from the wife to the husband where there is a reasonable consideration or obligation to support it.⁶ The wife, however, has no duty to support the husband or to pro-

Heirs of husband.—The burden of proof is on the heirs of a husband who attack a deed by him to his wife as having been obtained by undue influence and duress. Brown v. Brown, 44 S. C. 378, 22 S. E. 412.

3. Release of dower see DOWER, 14 Cyc. 941 et seq.

4. Doctrine of unity.—The doctrine of merger of identity or legal unity is the reason usually given for the common-law incapacity of the wife to contract with, or to make conveyance to, her husband. The clearer theory would seem to be that she is sub potestate viri, and that therefore she ought not to be bound by her acts while under his coercion. See Stone v. Gazzam, 46 Ala. 269; Hoker v. vide a maintenance for him, and consequently the wife's deed stands upon a different footing in equity than does the deed of the husband.⁷

3. STATUTES.⁸ By express statutory provisions,⁹ or by the decisions of the courts as to the application of the statutes relating to married women,¹⁰ in some jurisdictions, although a conveyance directly from husband to wife may be valid, yet on account of the required joinder of the husband in the wife's deed, a direct conveyance from the wife to the husband is not valid.¹¹ In still other states transactions between husband and wife relative to their real property are expressly prohibited by statute.¹²

4. THIRD PERSON AS TRUSTEE. Since by custom established at an early day in this country even prior to the "Married Women's Acts" a married woman could make a valid conveyance of her lands by a deed in which the husband joined,¹³ a wife may, by having her husband join her in the deed, convey her real estate to a third person to be held in trust by him for the husband,¹⁴ or to be conveyed by him to the husband.¹⁵ Such a conveyance by the third person vests the legal title in the husband.¹⁶

Estate in entirety.—Where defendants, husband and wife, tenants by entireties of certain real estate, execute deeds to a third person, who reconveys to the husband alone, such deeds being without consideration and only for the purpose of vesting title in the husband singly, and the husband then mortgages the property to secure his individual debt, such mortgage is voidable by both hus-

5. CONSIDERATION. A conveyance by the wife to the husband, if in consummation of a valid antenuptial agreement, will be sustained by the consideration of the marriage alone.¹⁷ In other conveyances, however, some valuable consideration will be generally necessary to support the deed,¹⁸ and the consideration must be substantially the same as that recited in the deed.¹⁹

6. EXECUTION, ACKNOWLEDGMENT, AND RECORDATION. The deed must be duly executed and delivered.²⁰ Acknowledgment must be made in accordance with the statute.²¹ In some states the wife's acknowledgment must be taken apart from the presence of her husband.²² The general principles relating to notice by record applicable to the husband's deed apply to the wife's deed.²³

7. PRESUMPTIONS. Equity will scrutinize more closely a conveyance from the wife to the husband than an ordinary conveyance.²⁴ On account of the confidential relation and the supposedly greater influence of the husband, the wife's conveyance may be attended with a presumption against its validity.²⁵ Upon satisfactory evidence, however, that an adequate consideration was given, and that no coercion or undue influence was used, any presumption of fraud will be removed.²⁶

8. BURDEN OF PROOF. When the question of fraud is raised in connection with the validity of the wife's conveyance to her husband, the burden is upon band and wife, since it would be so voidable if made by both without the intervening conveyances, and what cannot be done directly cannot be done by indirection. Abicht v. Searls, 154 Ind. 594, 57 N. E. 246. And see Grzesk v. Hibberd, 149 Ind. 354, 48 N. E. 361; Wilson v. Logue, 131 Ind. 191, 30 N. E. 1079, 31 Am. St. Rep. 426; *McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Husband's possession of papers executed to wife.—The mere possession by a husband of a note and mortgage executed to his deceased wife is not sufficient to show a transfer of the title to him. Clark v. Clark, 76 Wis. 306, 45 N. W. 121.

Power must be strictly executed.—Where a power of appointment by the wife by writings under her hand and seal attested by three or more witnesses was attempted to be executed by a deed to her husband, which was not so witnessed, equity will not aid the defective execution. Breit v. Yeaton, 101 Ill. 242.

It is not, however, essential to the validity of such an appointment that it should spring from the suggestions of the wife's own mind. The persuasions and importunities of the husband unaccompanied by commands or threats are insufficient of themselves to invalidate it; and it is a circumstance favorable to the instrument that its dispositions are reasonable.

E. Gift by Husband To or For Wife²⁸ — 1. COMMON LAW. A gift of personal property from a husband to the wife is void at common law, since all the personal property in possession of the wife vests in the husband.²⁹ At common law the husband cannot even give the wife's earnings to her, since these too belong to him, and his creditors have rights therein.³⁰

2. IN EQUITY. In equity, independent of statute, a gift of personal property from a husband to his wife will be upheld, if fair and reasonable, provided that the rights of creditors are not prejudiced thereby.³¹

3. STATUTES. Where by statute a married woman may own property exclusive of the husband's common-law marital rights, a gift of personal property from

Wife guilty of adultery.—Equity will not, however, uphold the gift if the wife is guilty of adultery. Warlick v. White, 86 N. C. 139, 41 Am. Rep. 453.

General property acts do not affect equity rule.—The Nebraska Married Woman's Act, being for the purpose of extending, and not contracting or limiting, the rights of married women in this state, will not be held to have abrogated the equitable rule which upheld gifts from husband to wife, made when the husband was solvent, and which did not impair the existing rights of creditors. *Wahoo First Nat. the husband to the wife may be valid, and the equitable right will thus be changed to a legal one.³² By statute the husband may also make a valid gift of his wife's services to her.³³ Statutes relating to married women's property rights in some states place restrictions upon gifts between husband and wife.³⁴ A statute forbidding gifts to the wife has been held not to apply to a gift causa mortis.³⁵

4. INTERVENTION OF TRUSTEE. Although it was at one time held that a trustee was necessary in all voluntary transfers of property from husband to wife,³⁶ yet by the modern equitable rule a gift to the wife may be sustained either with or without the intervention of a trustee.³⁷ Where a married woman may by statute acquire property by gift, although not directly from her husband, a gift by her husband through a third person may pass the legal title.³⁸

5. WHAT CONSTITUTES.³⁹ A mere promise by the husband to transfer property to the wife is not binding even in equity.⁴⁰ The transaction must be consummated by delivery,⁴¹ or there must be some clear and distinct act by which the husband divests himself of the property and holds it as trustee for the wife.⁴² The actual delivery of the personalty under circumstances showing the husband's intention that the wife should hold it as her own will amount to a gift.⁴³ In determining whether there has been an acceptance of an alleged gift by a husband to his wife, acts of the wife apparently recognizing ownership in the husband are competent.⁴⁴ Depositing money in a bank in the wife's name will generally be sufficient,⁴⁵ although the presumption of a gift arising therefrom is subject to rebuttal.⁴⁶ Transferring stock on the books of a bank from the wife's maiden to her married name may constitute a gift.⁴⁷ A husband may make a valid gift to his wife by transferring an account to her name, although she knows nothing of the transaction at the time.⁴⁸ Keeping rents of the wife's land separate, and paying the same to her,⁴⁹ an indorsement on a note in the presence of the obligee,⁵⁰ permitting the wife to keep the proceeds of her earnings in trade,⁵¹ and delivering to the wife a key to a box containing money, at the same time authorizing her to take and use the same when she wished,⁵² have been held to constitute gifts to the wife. A mere direction, however, that money due to the husband be paid to the wife does not vest in the wife a legal title to the claim.⁵³ And a gift is not created where the wife deposited money of her husband's in a savings bank in her own name without his knowledge.⁵⁴ The fact that the husband handed to his wife all his earnings from week to week from which to pay the family expenses does not constitute a gift to her of any surplus over such expenses.⁵⁵

6. VALIDITY IN GENERAL. A gift sustainable in equity or valid by statute is good between the parties and their heirs or representatives.⁵⁶ Even a gift to the wife of all the husband's property, if it be no more than a reasonable provision for the wife, is valid against the donor's child.⁵⁷ A gift, however, to the wife, if it affects the rights of existing creditors, may be set aside by them, regardless of fraudulent intent;⁵⁸ but subsequent creditors can make no objection to the gift unless made with intent to defraud.⁵⁹ Statutes in some states provide that no gifts between husband and wife shall be valid against third persons unless in writing and duly acknowledged and recorded.⁶⁰ The gift by a husband to his wife of property in fulfillment of a valid antenuptial settlement is good even against creditors.⁶¹ A gift to a wife by the husband of the money received as a bounty for enlistment in the army is valid,⁶² as is a gift of land which the husband had disposed of by a void contract.⁶³

7. PRESUMPTIONS. Where a husband transfers property to his wife,⁶⁴ or expends money in making improvements on her property,⁶⁵ or pays the consideration for a transfer to her,⁶⁶ it will be presumed that these advances are gifts, and no promise to repay, or a trust in favor of the husband, will be in such cases presumed.⁶⁷ This presumption, however, may be rebutted by evidence showing a different intent.⁶⁸ For instance the presumption of a gift arising from the act of the husband in allowing the title to property owned by him to be taken in his wife's name may be rebutted by evidence that the husband thereafter exercised acts of dominion over the property of such a character as was inconsistent with the ownership by the wife.⁶⁹

8. BURDEN OF PROOF. When the rights of creditors are involved, in connection with alleged gifts of the husband to the wife, the burden is on her to show consideration.⁷⁰ When, however, the presumption of a gift exists, and the husband alleges that the property is held by the wife merely in trust, the burden is upon him to establish the existence of the trust.⁷¹

9. EVIDENCE. In order to establish the fact of a gift from husband to wife, the circumstances of each case must largely govern, although clear evidence will be required.⁷² Upon a sale of the husband's property, a note taken by the husband, payable to his wife, is prima facie evidence of a gift to her.⁷³ A bill of sale of furniture purchased for the home, made out to the wife, but no evidence appearing that it was done with the husband's knowledge, is not sufficient to establish a gift;⁷⁴ and possession by the wife of household furniture to no greater extent than the ordinary use of the family is not sufficient to establish a gift of the same to her.⁷⁵ Where, however, a husband told his wife in the presence of another that he gave a horse to her, and she afterward sold the animal as her own, it was held a completed gift, although the horse remained in the husband's stable.⁷⁶ The possession by a wife, as administratrix of her husband, of a bond which he had indorsed to her is not evidence of delivery.⁷⁷

Undue influence by wife.—Where the wife had acquired such an influence over her husband, had inspired him with such a dread of her, and had obtained such a control over him, as to preclude the exercise by him of his free and deliberate judgment, the onus of proving that a gift obtained under such circumstances was the spontaneous offspring of a free and unbiased mind lay upon her; and it was essential to the validity of a gift obtained under such circumstances that the donor should have had competent and independent advice. *Hopkins v. Bill of sale.—The only safe method in general to establish change of possession between husband and wife where chattels are used in common is by delivery of a bill of sale, provided that the parties can contract; otherwise, by medium of a third person. See Enders v. Williams, 1 Mete. (Ky.) 346; Hutchins v. Dixon, 11 Md. 29; Ex p. Cox, 1 Ch. D. 302, 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 757, 24 Wkly. Rep. 302.

operates as a transfer by gift of all the wife's personal property in possession,⁷⁸ it is only in connection with the wife's equitable or statutory separate estate that a gift by her to her husband can be upheld.⁷⁹

2. POWER TO MAKE. If the wife has a separate estate at her disposal, she may generally make a gift to her husband, if it be voluntary and free from any undue influence.⁸⁰ It has been held that a statute forbidding a sale by a wife of her separate property to her husband does not prevent a gift of the same,⁸¹ although such a gift is voidable for constructive fraud.⁸²

3. WHAT CONSTITUTES. Whether a transaction between a wife and her husband is a gift or a loan depends upon the circumstances of the case.⁸³ It does not necessarily follow from the fact that no note or receipt is given that the transaction is a gift rather than a loan,⁸⁴ although the failure of written evidence in connection with other facts may be sufficient to rebut any presumption of a loan.⁸⁵ In general the management of a wife's separate estate by the husband, and the collection and the appropriation of the rents and profits by him without protest on her part, will be treated as a gift.⁸⁶ On the other hand it is held in some jurisdictions that when a husband receives property of his wife, and with her knowledge and consent deals with it as his own, without any express promise to repay, the presumption is that it was not a gift, but that he took the property as trustee for her.⁸⁷ Notes and mortgages given to the husband with the free consent of the wife in payment for lands purchased from the wife become his property.⁸⁸ Money given to the husband for the purchase of realty under circumstances showing that the same was not given in trust or as a loan cannot be recovered by the wife either from the husband or from his estate.⁸⁹

4. VALIDITY IN GENERAL. In some jurisdictions a parol gift is invalid.⁹⁰ So, irrespective of statute, the terms of the settlement on the wife may preclude a parol gift to the husband.⁹¹ A delivery is of course necessary to complete the gift.⁹² The courts will not uphold a gift, if any extortion, misrepresentation, fraud, or undue advantage is exercised by the husband.⁹³

5. PRESUMPTIONS.⁹⁴ As in the matter of conveyances, equity will examine a gift of the wife to the husband more closely than a gift of the husband to the wife,⁹⁵ since there is often, under the facts, a presumption of undue influence.⁹⁶

Receipt as agent.—The income from a wife's property is not presumed to have been given the husband, but to have been received by him as her agent, it appearing only that for seven years before her death it passed directly into his hands from those owing it, he giving receipts signed in his own name as her attorney, and that, exclusive of such income, she died without personal estate, and owing taxes on real estate. In re Mahon, 202 Pa. The mere possession of a wife's property by the husband raises no presumption of a gift.⁹⁷

6. BURDEN OF PROOF. When the circumstances raise a presumption that the transaction between husband and wife constituted a gift to him, if the wife claims the property in question as against his creditors, the burden of proof is upon her to show her separate ownership.⁹⁸ Where, however, a husband, from the mere fact of his having received his wife's property, claims it as a gift, the burden is on him to establish his claim.⁹⁹ The intention of a married woman to make a gift to her husband must clearly appear.¹

G. Confession of Judgment. While at common law a husband could not confess a judgment in favor of his wife,² yet such a judgment will be sustained in equity.³

H. Releases Between Husband and Wife. When husband and wife may legally contract with each other, or when their agreements would be valid in equity, a release of property rights in the estate of the other, such as dower, curtesy, or distributive share, may, if fairly made, be sustained,⁴ although it has been held that a contract by which a wife releases her husband, who has deserted her, from all claims on him is void.⁵ Such transactions must, however, be entered into in good faith, and no undue advantage be taken.⁶ Where, however, a wife having a judgment lien against her husband, joins in a conveyance of her husband's lands, she does not release such lien, in the absence of any provision in the deed to that effect.⁷

I. Rescission or Avoidance of Conveyances or Contracts — 1. GROUNDS. When any conveyance or other transaction between husband and wife has been

Release of mortgagee's interest in husband's lands.—A married woman owning in her own right a note secured by mortgage on the husband's estate may, with the assent of the husband, release such interest and take a new note from the grantee of the husband, payable to herself; and when such note has not been reduced to possession by the husband, his creditors cannot hold the maker of the note liable as his trustee. Nims v. Bigelow, 45 N. H. 343.

Ratification of release by counsel.—Where counsel for the wife, in a proceeding for divorce on her behalf, accepted, without specific authority, the husband's proposition to pay her a certain sum in full of all claims and demands against his estate, the receipt of such money by the wife operated as a ratification of such contract. Price's Appeal, 2 Mona. effected by taking advantage of any lack of knowledge of rights, or through fraud, undue influence, or duress, the same will not be enforced and will be set aside in equity, upon proper application by the party wronged.⁸ Breach of the agreement pursuant to which the conveyance was made is ground for setting aside the transfer,⁹ but subsequent misconduct of the spouse to whom the transfer is made is not ground.¹⁰ Where a husband makes a conveyance to his wife because his creditors were threatening action against him, equity will not thereafter at his instance set aside the conveyance.¹¹ Where new deeds to the wife are executed and recorded after the execution of an unrecorded deed to the husband, and the husband acquiesces for years in the wife's ownership and improvements, but thereafter procures his deed to be recorded, his wife may have his deed canceled.¹²

2. WHO MAY QUESTION VALIDITY. Not only the wronged party may question the validity of a fraudulent conveyance or other transaction, but also the heirs or representatives of the party.¹³ If the conveyance is valid between the parties, only the creditors of the grantor can challenge its good faith.¹⁴ The right to attack may be precluded by laches.¹⁵

Rule different than where conveyance is to stranger.—If a person who is addicted to the excessive use of ardent spirits and is a spendthrift conveys all his property in trust for the benefit of his wife and children, such conveyance will not be set aside in equity, although procured by the influence of another and under such circumstances as would have authorized a court of equity to have annulled it if the conveyance had been made to a stranger. *Birdsong v. 15. James v. Hanks, 202 Ill. 114, 66 N. E. 1034, holding that any right of a husband, by reason of his wife's action, to cancel an agreement with her by which each released any interest he or she might have in the property of the other as survivor is waived, where he permits her to have use of property to which, under their agreement, she is not entitled, during his life, and he, although sur-

statute, maintain an action in tort against the other.¹⁶ This rule applies to injuries both to person and to property.¹⁷ A wife cannot sue her husband for false imprisonment,¹⁸ nor even those who coöperated with him in the wrong.¹⁹ She cannot sue him for slander,²⁰ or for assault and battery.²¹

b. Effect of Statutes. Statutes often expressly provide that husband or wife may sue the other in tort for the protection of property,²² or that a married woman may sue in her own name for any injury to person or character.²³ In general, however, statutes conferring upon a married woman general powers to sue and to be sued do not authorize an action in tort against the husband.²⁴

c. Effect of Divorce. Divorce does not enable an action to be brought for a tort committed during coverture.²⁵

2. CRIMES. At common law crimes against the property "of another," such as larceny and arson, cannot be committed by husband or wife against the other, owing to the doctrine that husband and wife are one.²⁶ Neither can a husband viving her four years, claims no interest in her property, so that his heirs cannot insist on such right of cancellation.

Statute may prescribe mode of appointment.—Since the disability of coverture can be removed only in the way prescribed by statute, a married woman may plead coverture in bar of contracts made in her behalf by one whom she has orally appointed and held out to the public as her agent, but whom she has not appointed in the manner prescribed by statute. *Troy Fertilizer Co. v. Joinder of husband.—Where a married woman owns land in this state in her own right, and she and her husband reside out of the state, she may, by joining in a power of attorney with her husband, empower another to convey such property. Moreland v. Brady, 8 Oreg. 303, 34 Am. Rep. 531.

Chargeable with agent's notice.—A married woman who gives an agent general authority to sell or exchange property for her is chargeable with such agent's notice of a defect in the title to property received by her in exchange. *Hickman v. Husband's liability for the wife's acts as trustee may require his consent to her assuming the trust. U. S. Trust Co. v. Sedgwick, 97 U. S. 304, 24 L. ed. 954.

Statutes.—Where a married woman brought suit on behalf of herself and as guardian of the person of a minor against one who, as guardian of the estate of plaintiff and her ward, had collected moneys due them, it was error to overrule a demurrer to the complaint, since, under the statute, a married woman may not be guardian of the estate of a minor. *Campbell v. Conflict of laws.—Where a married woman constitutes herself a trustee under N. Y. Laws (1867), c. 782, and afterward removes to a state where, under the laws, a married woman cannot act as trustee, such removal will not divest her of her title to the trust property located in New York, nor of her right to enforce the same. *Schluter v. has signed an agreement for an arbitration, she cannot be compelled to perform an award.⁴⁴ This disability has in general been removed by statute,⁴⁵ although it has been held that a married woman cannot submit to arbitration the question of title to lands owned by her, where the statute authorizes her to convey real estate only with the written assent of her husband.⁴⁶

4. ELIGIBILITY FOR PUBLIC OFFICE. A married woman has been appointed a commissioner to take evidence,⁴⁷ and by statutory implication has been held qualified, as a householder, to act as a grand juror.⁴⁸ At the present time women, regardless of coverture, are eligible in many states as members of school-boards, and in some states eligible to municipal, county, and even state offices.⁴⁹

5. POLITICAL RIGHTS IN GENERAL. The incapacities of femes covert do not extend to their political rights, nor prevent their acquiring or losing a national character.⁵⁰

B. Removal of Disabilities — 1. AUTHORIZATION BY HUSBAND. By the civil law as it obtains in some states, a wife's act may be authorized by the husband, and thus made valid.⁵¹ The husband's authorization will be presumed from his joint contract with the wife,⁵² or when he permits her to trade in her own name.⁵³ The authorization does not make the husband personally liable.⁵⁴

2. REMOVAL BY JUDICIAL AUTHORITY. In some states disabilities of coverture may be removed by a judicial decree or order, under statutes which provide that the courts may thus relieve married women in order to empower them to deal with and to manage their separate estates.⁵⁵ The judicial authorization is limited to the provisions of the statute, however, and no general power to contract, trade, or sue as a feme sole can be conferred by the court when the statute makes provision for contracts only in connection with separate estates.⁵⁶ Under the civil law as it obtains in some states, a court of competent jurisdiction can, in absence of the husband from the state, authorize the wife to make contracts as if she were sole.⁵⁷

3. INCAPACITY OR ABSENCE OF HUSBAND — a. In General. Civil death of the husband, at common law, removed the disabilities of the wife.⁵⁸ This rule applies where the husband has been banished,⁵⁹ or has abjured the realm or state,⁶⁰ or, it seems, where he is imprisoned for felony.⁶¹

b. Alienage of Husband. Where the husband is an alien and has never been in the country, the disabilities of coverture are removed, at common law.⁶²

e. Insanity of Husband. The mere fact that the husband is insane does not, at common law, remove the contractual disabilities of the wife.⁶³ Statutes, however, in case of the insanity of the husband, sometimes confer contractual powers upon her;⁶⁴ but a statute providing that when from "drunkenness, profligacy, or other cause" a husband fails to provide for his wife, she may act as if sole, does not include his insanity.⁶⁵

d. Absence of Husband or Separation. The absence of the husband, or his abandonment of the wife, or his separation from her, does not in itself remove her common-law disabilities as a feme covert.⁶⁶ However, in some of the states, where a husband has deserted his wife, leaving her without means of support, and con-

60. What constitutes abjuration of the state.—To constitute an abjuration of the state by the husband, there must be an abandonment of the wife, and a removal from the state with the full intention of not returning. When he has thus abjured the state, and the wife has acted as a feme sole, she will be so regarded. Krebs v. O'Grady, 23 Ala. 726, 58 Am. Dec. 312. And see cases cited infra, note 71.

Abandonment under laws of Indian marriage.—Where a couple were married by the laws of an Indian tribe, by which the husband might dissolve the marriage at his pleasure, his doing so by an abandonment effected the dissolution of the marriage, and the wife tributes nothing to her maintenance, she may make contracts, and in other respects have the privileges of a feme sole, although he continues to reside in the state.⁶⁷ In other states certain rights are given the wife by statute when she is deserted by her husband, but she is not altogether treated as a feme sole.⁶⁸ Although the parties are living apart under a deed of separation, the wife cannot sue or be sued alone.⁶⁹ It has been held, in a number of cases, however, that where the husband deserts his wife and goes into another state or country, with the intention of repudiating the marital relation, the wife's disabilities of coverture are removed, and she may contract as an unmarried woman.⁷⁰ It is disputed whether or not a

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 288.

What constitutes desertion.—The fact that a married woman lived in a different town from her husband, and kept a boarding-house for two years, the two spouses having kept up friendly communications, and visited each other occasionally, does not show such a desertion of the wife by the husband as would enable her to contract as a feme sole. *Finks v. Statute does not apply to a temporary absence.—Cal. Act March 9, 1870, which provides that while the wife lives separate and apart from her husband she shall have the sole use of her property, and may sue and be sued, etc., does not apply to a case where the wife is temporarily absent from her husband with his consent, but to cases where there has been an abandonment on the part of the husband or wife, or a separation which is intended to be final. Tobin v. Galvin, 49 Cal. 34. See Humphrey v. Pope, 122 Cal. 253, 54 Pac. 847.

Statute does not affect common-law implied agency of wife.—Iowa Code (1873), § 2207, which provides that, in case of the abandonment of the wife by the husband without providing for the support of her and her children, the court may authorize her to sell property of the husband for such support, does not invalidate a sale of a cow made by the abandoned wife, without such authority, in order to provide family supplies. Rawson v. Spangler, 62 Iowa 59, 17 N. W. 173.

Constitutionality of statute.—N. C. Code, § 1832, providing that every woman whose husband shall abandon her shall be deemed a free trader, and she shall have power to convey her personal estate and her real estate without assent of her husband, is not in violation of Const. art. 10, § 6, providing that a married woman may convey her lands with her husband's written consent. *Hall v. The earlier doctrine laid down in Corbett v. Poelnitz, 1 T. R. 5, and in Ringsted v. Lanesborough, 3 Dougl. 197, 26 E. C. L. 136, that under a deed of separation a wife might sue and be sued as a feme sole was denied in the later English decision of Marshall v. Rutton, 8 T. R. 545.

married woman whose husband has abjured the state is able to convey by deed. Some jurisdictions have held that where the husband is an alien, or has abjured the state, she can convey, as well as contract, as a feme sole.⁷¹ In other jurisdictions the contrary is held.⁷² The presumption of death by the absence of the husband for seven years without being heard of will enable the wife to contract, and to sue and be sued, as a feme sole.⁷³

4. TERMINATION OF COVERTURE. The termination of coverture, either by the death of the husband, or by divorce a vinculo, removes all disabilities imposed on the wife during marriage.⁷⁴ Her contracts as a married woman being, at common law, void and not merely voidable, she therefore is not bound after the marriage relation ceases, by any confirmation or ratification of her attempted contracts during coverture, since a new consideration must arise after the marriage in order to support her promise.⁷⁵ Divorce a mensa et thoro does not remove the Repudiation of marital relation necessary.—The mere fact that a married woman resided in Pennsylvania during the Civil war while her husband was in the Confederate army would not so affect their marital status as to give her the rights of a feme sole, especially where she went through the lines of the belligerents to visit her husband, and where all the time they have fully recognized their marital relation. Stewart v. Conrad, 100 Va. 128, 40 S. E. 624.

Statutes sometimes provide that when a married woman comes into a state without her husband to reside, she may, after a stated time, her husband not coming into the state, contract as a feme sole. C. Contracts of Married Women — 1. CAPACITY TO CONTRACT IN GENERAL —

a. Common Law, Equity, and Statutory Rules. At common law the contracts of a married woman, except in such instances as have been previously noted,⁷⁸ are absolutely void.⁷⁹ So a married woman contracting jointly with her husband is not liable.⁸⁰ And, independent of statute, her contracts do not personally bind her, even in equity.⁸¹ A married woman has no power to contract unless in direct reference to her separate property,⁸² and she cannot, except when author-

Civil law.— In France, where the civil law obtains, the separation from bed and board produces as to the wife the same civil effects as a separation in property; and in both cases her incapacity to contract without authorization continues until dissolution of the marriage. *Garnier v. Not enforceable elsewhere if invalid where made.—Plaintiff brought trespass for the attaching of a mare as her husband's property, but which she claimed by virtue of a purchase from him while living in New Brunswick. It was held that she could not recover, as by the law of New Brunswick such a purchase by a woman living with her husband, and without separate maintenance, was void. Bond v. Cummings, 70 Me. 125.

Contract connected with prior valid act.—The defense, in an action against a married woman on a note given in Indiana to make good the default of one for whom, as surety, she executed a bond in Ohio, that under the laws of Indiana she cannot make a contract of suretyship, is unavailing, the bond being governed by the laws of Ohio, under which she can contract as if unmarried. *Robison v. Guaranty for use in another state.—Where a married woman in Connecticut executed and delivered to her husband a guaranty to enable him to obtain credit from plaintiff in Illinois, to whom the husband sent it by mail, the contract is to be governed by the Illinois law, and is therefore binding on her, although she was incapacitated from making it by the laws of Connecticut. Chicago First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell, 92 Fed. 565, 34 C. C. A. 542. Compare Freeman's Appeal, 68 Conn. 533, 37 Atl. 420, 57 Am. St. Rep. 112, 37 L. R. A. 452.

In Missouri, however, it is held that where a married woman, residing in Missouri, at the request of her son, residing in Indiana, signs a note payable to him in Indiana, and delivers it by mailing it in Missouri to him, her contract is made in Missouri; and she cannot escape its payment as against a bona fide holder on the ground that it is void under the Indiana law for want of legal capacity to bind herself personally. The law of the place of performance does not in any way affect the capacity of a married woman to contract in a state which authorized her to make the contract, unless it is apparent from the terms of the contract that the parties intended to incorporate the laws of the state of performance in the contract. F. B. Hauck Clothing Co. v. Sharpe, 83 Mo. App. 385.

Absence of evidence of place of performance.—An accommodation note payable in Illinois was executed and delivered in Alabama by a firm and two of the partners individually, and signed by their respective wives as sureties for the firm. The parties the contract was to be performed.⁹¹ If the statute of the state where the contract was made is not proved, it will be presumed that the common-law rule prevails in that state.⁹²

(II) CONTRACT AS TO LANDS. The validity of a married woman's contracts in connection with realty is governed by the law of the state where the land is situated.⁹³

(III) DATE OF LAW. It is the law in force at the time of the execution of the contract that governs, and not the prior or the subsequent law.⁹⁴

c. Duty of Third Persons to Take Notice. Parties dealing with a married woman are bound to take notice of her coverture, and to inquire whether a contract, or the consideration thereof, is for her benefit, or for the benefit of her estate, and one which, under the statute, she may lawfully make.⁹⁵

d. Implied Contracts. If a married woman cannot make an express contract, the law will not recognize an implied one.⁹⁶ If, however, she can lawfully contract, an implied promise may be recognized.⁹⁷

2. PARTICULAR CLASSES OF CONTRACTS — a. Lease From Third Person. Although, even at common law, a lease of lands may be made by a third person to a married woman, subject to the husband's rights of property therein,⁹⁸ it is only where she has the ability to contract that she may bind herself to pay rent for the same.⁹⁹ Being authorized to contract, she may hire premises under a lease, and will be liable for the payment of the rent.¹ Even though living with her husband, she had no knowledge as to where it would be negotiated, except as shown by the note itself. It was held that the contract, with respect to the suretyship, was an Alabama contract, and void under the laws of that state prohibiting the wife from becoming surety for her husband. *Union Nat. Valid bond secured by invalid mortgage.—Where a married woman domiciled in Pennsylvania executed a bond of her husband as surety, which was thereafter delivered to her husband, and by him delivered to the obligee in Ohio, is valid in Ohio, although the wife is not liable thereon in Pennsylvania, and although the mortgage securing it is on her land in Pennsylvania. *Smith v. Vested rights not affected by subsequent law.—If a married woman acquired property in California before its cession to the United States, her power to contract concerning it is not governed by the act of April 17, 1850, defining the rights and duties of husband and wife. Racouillat v. Sansevain, 32 Cal. 376.

Subsequent law affecting remedy.—Where a married woman, a resident of one state, enters into a contract in another state, to take effect in that state, which, although valid there, is invalid in her own state, and the latter state afterward empowers her to make such a contract, the contract may be there sued on. *Case v. may be liable on her personal agreement to pay the rent for the premises occupied.² Her mere occupancy of a house, however, where she resides with her husband, does not render her liable for its rent.³ Even if a married woman has no power to take a lease of personal property, the owner has the right to reclaim it on breach of the contract on her part.⁴

b. Lease to Third Person. The wife's common-law disability to contract, and the husband's marital right to the use and income of her lands, prevents her from leasing her real property in her own name.⁵ In connection, however, with her right to make contracts in relation to her separate estate, and by force of her general contractual powers, she may be able to make a valid lease, under the statutory requirements, if any, as to her husband's consent or joinder and due execution of the lease in writing, if required.⁶

c. Employment of Counsel. A married woman's contract to pay an attorney for his professional services in her behalf is void, unless the statute gives her authority to bind herself as a feme sole.⁷ Accordingly it is held that an agreement, during coverture, to pay counsel for services in prosecuting a suit for divorce is not binding upon her,⁸ although a promise to pay for such services, made subsequently to the decree, may be valid.⁹ Likewise an attorney cannot maintain an action against a married woman for services in recovering her lands,¹⁰ nor for contesting her father's will,¹¹ nor for soliciting a pension for her.¹² Her statutory contractual liabilities, and her authority to contract in relation to her separate estate, may, however, render her liable for the services of an attorney when employed by her under such circumstances.¹³ The husband's liability for counsel fees incurred by the wife has been considered in another connection.¹⁴

d. Employment of Servant. A married woman is not bound, at common law, by any contract for hire of servants.¹⁵ A mechanic furnishing, at her request, materials and labor for a building, cannot enforce a lien for the same.¹⁶ Domestic service may be a necessary for which the husband will be responsible,¹⁷ and when the wife may contract for necessaries, as implied agent of her husband, she may contract for such services under such authority.¹⁸ If the wife has full power to contract as a feme sole, she can make a valid contract for services rendered her.¹⁹

e. Contract For Wife's Services. It has already been stated that the general property acts relating to married women have not changed the common-law rule that the household services of the wife, and likewise her earnings, belong to the husband.²⁰ Statutes, in a number of states, however, expressly provide that the wife's earnings from her services or labor, apart from what is rendered in the family, shall belong to her separate estate.²¹ Likewise as a sole trader a married woman may enter into a valid contract for her services.²²

f. Necessaries. A married woman's ability to contract for necessaries as agent of her husband has been considered.²³ Her statutory liability for family expenses is discussed in connection with her separate estate.²⁴ A promise by a married woman to pay for board and lodging furnished her under contract with her husband is without consideration.²⁵

g. Loans. A married woman's contract to repay a loan is at common law absolutely void.²⁶ Moreover, her husband is not liable for any loan made to her,

Presumptions.—A contract whereby a married woman agrees to furnish her services, payment to be made to her, will be presumed to have been made on her sole and separate account, nothing to the contrary appearing. Rowe v. Comley, 11 Daly (N. Y.) 317. Likewise by statute in New York. See Stevens v. Cunningham, 75 N. Y. App. Div. 125, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 364. The general rule, however, is that the presumption does not exist in favor of the wife, but that there must be some evidence to show that she intended that such services should be for her sole and separate use. McCluskey v. Provident Sav. Inst., 103 Mass. 300; Burke v. Cole, 97 Mass. 113; Stokes v. Pease, 79 Hun (N. Y.) 304, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 430.

unless loaned at his request, or unless the wife acted as his agent.²⁷ Whether or not, under statutes, a married woman is personally liable for borrowed money, and whether or not her separate estate is chargeable for the same, depends upon the form and interpretation of the statute.²⁸

h. Bills and Notes—(1) IN GENERAL. At common law the promissory note of a married woman is absolutely void,²⁹ even in the hands of a bona fide assignee for value.³⁰ Where, under statutory authority, she has limited powers to make contracts, one seeking to enforce a note against a married woman must show that it is within such statutory power.³¹ If she has authority to make a valid note only in connection with her separate estate, a note for any other purpose will be void.³² If the statute authorizes her to contract as a feme

Purpose of loan may be test.—A feme covert has not the general power to borrow money, although it is specified in the note, signed by herself and husband, to be for one of the purposes for which she may make a valid contract. If, however, it is shown that the money was actually used for such purpose, her promise to repay would be binding. The actual use to which the money was put fixes the liability. *Viser v. Statutes.—Notes given by a married woman not carrying on a separate business or having any separate estate are not commer-

sole, she may make a valid note.³³ If she engages in business as a sole trader, notes given by her in connection with such business may be valid.³⁴ If the note is made by her jointly with another person, the co-maker alone is bound at common law, and the fact that he styles himself a surety makes no difference in his liability.³⁵ In equity her note may be a charge upon her estate.³⁶

(ii) ACCEPTANCE. If a married woman cannot make a valid note, she cannot accept a bill of exchange drawn upon her.³⁷

(iii) INDORSEMENT. At common law a married woman may, with the joinder of her husband, transfer by indorsement a note payable to her,³⁸ and she may give a valid title by her indorsement alone, provided her husband consents to the same, but she will not be personally liable as an indorser.³⁹ If she has power to make a note, she may indorse one, and make herself personally liable thereon.⁴⁰ Her indorsement in her maiden name of a note given her before marriage will, with her husband's consent, pass title.⁴¹

(iv) JOINT NOTE OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. At common law a joint note, or a joint and several note, of both husband and wife, is the note of the husband alone.⁴² Such a note will bind her personally, however, if she has statutory cial paper, and did not bind her, prior to the enabling statute of 1884. Linderman v. Farquharson, 101 N. Y. 434, 5 N. E. 67.

Estoppel.—Under Mass. Pub. St. c. 147, § 2, authorizing a married woman to contract as if she were sole with any one except her husband, a married woman who indorses printed blank forms of notes at the request of her husband, who takes them, and afterward, not in her presence, fills up the blanks, and negotiates them for value, before maturity, to third persons, cannot deny the validity of the notes as against such third persons. *Binney v. Husband's written consent required by statute.—Under N. C. Const. art. 10, § 6, declaring that real and personal property of a married woman shall remain her sole property, and may, with the written assent of her husband, be conveyed by her as if she were unmarried, her indorsement of her note, if for the purpose of transfer of title, must have his written assent. Walton v. Bristol, 125 N. C. 419, 34 S. E. 544. The indorsement and transfer by a married woman of her note without the consent of her husband does not vest the title in the indorsee, and hence, on her death, the note passes to her husband, subject to her debts. Vann v. Edwards, 128 N. C. 425, 39 S. E. 66.

Renewal of antenuptial indorsement.—Pa. Act June 8, 1893, forbidding a married woman to become an accommodation indorser for another, does not prevent her from making a binding renewal of a valid indorsement made before her marriage. Harrisburg Nat. Bank v. Bradshaw, 178 Pa. St. 180, 35 Atl. 629, 34 L. R. A. 597.

Marriage with maker.—Where a woman assigns by delivery a note payable to her order, and afterward marries the maker, her indorsement of the note after such marriage transfers the legal title. Guptill v. Horne, 63 Me. 405.

authority to make a note.⁴³ A note signed by husband and wife jointly is executed with the husband's written consent, within a statute requiring his written consent to certain contracts of the wife.⁴⁴ Even if a joint note is void as to the wife, it is enforceable against the husband, although he is merely a surety thereon.⁴⁵

(v) LIABILITY OF HUSBAND. The husband is not ordinarily liable on his wife's notes⁴⁶ unless made by her as his agent.⁴⁷

(vi) NOTE FOR HUSBAND'S DEBT. At common law, and even by statute in some of the states, a note given by a married woman for her husband's debt is not enforceable against her,⁴⁸ although it has been held that such a note is merely voidable and not void,⁴⁹ and hence valid in the hands of a bona fide purchaser without notice.⁵⁰ Such a note may be valid where given to pay a debt incurred solely for the wife's benefit,⁵¹ or where such contracts are permitted by statute.⁵²

i. Purchases and Sales—(1) IN GENERAL. Under the disabilities of coverture at common law, the personal contracts of a married woman to purchase or to sell property are generally void.⁵³ A sale to her may be avoided by the husband⁵⁴ or by the wife after coverture,⁵⁵ but unless so avoided it may be ratified by her upon dissolution of coverture.⁵⁶ When, however, under statutes she may contract as a feme sole, she may buy and sell, and in most states a married woman without any separate estate may acquire goods or land by purchase from a stranger on credit, and bind herself for the payment of the purchase-price.⁵⁷

Joint bond of executrix and her husband.—Where the executrix of a former husband's estate and her present husband, by virtue of his relation to the estate as her husband, execute a joint bond for money borrowed for the benefit of the estate under an invalid order of court, the husband alone is personally liable on the bond. *Wilson v. Statutes may also impose a liability on her separate estate for purchases made as family necessities.⁵⁵ Where, however, the statutes merely provide that she may by purchase acquire property for her own use or in connection with her separate estate, or in other ways restrict her powers or prescribe modes of purchase or of sale, the validity of her contracts will be generally confined to the limits of the powers conferred.⁵⁹ When entitled by statute to her earnings, it has been held that she may purchase implements for use in her business.⁶⁰ When empowered to purchase, she will of course be bound by a purchase duly made for her by her agent.⁶¹ When her sale is void, she may recover her property, and will not be required at common law to return the price,⁶² although in equity, under the doctrine of estoppel, she may be required in some jurisdictions to put the vendee in statu quo.⁶³ She may bind herself by an executory contract for personal property, although it is to be delivered to a third person in her behalf.⁶⁴

(II) LIABILITY FOR PURCHASE-PRICE. A married woman is not, at common law, personally liable for the purchase-price of property conveyed or transferred to her upon her promise to pay.⁶⁵ A conveyance of realty to her in consideration of her note is, at common law, practically a gift to her,⁶⁶ and a statute authorizing a married woman to purchase land does not empower her to execute a note in payment.⁶⁷ In equity, however, property purchased by her will

(II) AGREEMENTS TO CONVEY. An agreement made by a married woman to sell her real estate is void, at common law, even though her husband assents to the same.⁷¹ Her bond to give a deed is likewise void and is not enforceable either at law or in equity.⁷² A statute authorizing her to convey her common-law property does not make her mere agreement to convey the same a valid contract, since a contract to convey is not a conveyance,⁷³ and this rule applies to her separate estate.⁷⁴ If, however, she has full ownership of her lands, or has full powers to contract as a single woman, she can make a valid contract to convey.⁷⁵

Equitable lien upon legal title.—Unless a married woman has a separate estate in lands purchased by her and her husband, and the legal title to which is conveyed to her alone, no equitable lien on her interest in the land arises out of an agreement that one who advanced them a part of the purchase-money paid for the land should have a lien thereon for his security. *Pearl v. woman can make no valid contract of guaranty or suretyship.⁷⁶ In some states statutes defining her contractual powers expressly exclude contracts of suretyship.⁷⁷ In other jurisdictions such contracts are held valid under her general power to contract as a feme sole.⁷⁸ It is important, however, that the statute be carefully consulted, since restrictions are often placed upon a married woman's contracts of suretyship, and the husband's consent may be necessary.⁷⁹ The statute is to be strictly construed, nothing being presumed in order to enlarge her liability.⁸⁰

Suretyship distinguished from original undertaking.—While a married woman may not contract a debt of suretyship that will bind her, she may, as an original undertaker, become liable for goods furnished to another, from which she derives no personal benefit. Freeman v. Coleman, 86 Ga. 590, 12 S. E. 1064. See also Lester v. Savannah Guano Co., 94 Ga. 710, 20 S. E. 1.

Determining whether principal or surety.—Whether or not a married woman is surely or principal on any obligation is to be determined not from the form of the contract but from whether she received in person or by benefit to her estate the consideration on which the contract depends. Field v. Campbell, 164 Ind. 389, 72 N. E. 260.

Distinction as to statutory and equitable separate estate.—It is important to keep in mind that a statute which prohibits a contract of suretyship in connection with a married woman's statutory separate estate does not apply to her equitable separate estate, or govern her capacity to charge such equitable estate. See Short v. Battle, 52 Ala. 456; Northington v. Faber, 52 Ala. 45.

Ignorance of mortgagee.—Horner Ind. Rev. St. (1901) § 5119, provides that a married woman's contract of suretyship shall be void. In an action to foreclose a mortgage given by a married woman, she pleaded by cross complaint that she had given the mortgage as a surety. pledge it to secure the debts of her husband or those of a third person.⁸¹ The statute, however, in some states, forbids the wife from either directly or indirectly becoming a surety for her husband.⁸² It is not necessary, to bind her, that the consideration should move to her,⁸³ since the consideration that the husband or third person receives is sufficient for her contract.⁸⁴ A loan of money to the husband,⁸⁵ or an agreement to extend the time of paying a debt owed by him,⁸⁶ or a forbearance to sue,⁸⁷ may be a sufficient consideration.

(III) INDORSEMENT OF NOTES AS SURETY. Except where authorized by statute,⁸⁸ a married woman's indorsement of a note as surety is not binding upon her.⁸⁹

k. Releases and Receipts — (1) IN GENERAL. A release or a receipt by a married woman is void at common law by reason of her general disability to make a contract,⁹⁰ but may be sustained in equity.⁹¹ Where, however, she may execute a valid deed by joinder with her husband, a deed of release executed by herself and husband will be valid;⁹² but in such cases the statutory requirements, if any, as to acknowledgment must be followed.⁹³ If she can contract as if unmarried, or has full powers as to the jus disponendi of the property, her release will be valid.⁹⁴

(II) RELEASE OF LIABILITY FOR PERSONAL INJURIES. Notwithstanding the fact that a married woman cannot sue as a feme sole, but must join her husband, it has been held that she can alone execute a valid release for her cause of action arising from her personal injuries, when she has exclusive management of her property.⁹⁵ Other courts have held, however, that if the joinder of the husband is required, her release alone will not bind her.⁹⁶

(III) COMPROMISE OF LITIGATION. Although at common law a married woman can make no valid settlement, without her husband's consent, of a claim in litigation,⁹⁷ yet where she can sue or be sued alone, or where she has the full control of her property, she may compromise her lawsuits.⁹⁸

3. INSTRUMENTS UNDER SEAL — a. In General.⁹⁹ The fact that a married woman contracts under a sealed instrument, such as a deed, a bond, or a covenant, does not in general make her contract valid.¹ Her seal does not estop her from claiming that there was no consideration.² A formal written instrument, however, tends to show manifest intention on the part of the one executing it, and thus, in the English courts of chancery, where the power of a married woman to contract debts in connection with her separate estate was at first denied,³ the first step toward the freedom of the modern equitable rule was subsequently taken by permitting her to do so only when she had charged such estate by a formal instrument, such as a bond, under seal.⁴

b. Bonds. At common law a bond executed by a married woman is of no validity,⁵ and the same rule has been held under statutes giving married women

What law governs.—A married woman residing in Wisconsin, while on a visit to Washington city, received an injury through the negligence of another, for which she executed a release of all claim for damages in consideration of a sum of money paid her. limited powers to contract,⁶ although under most of the present statutes she has such power.⁷ A bond executed jointly by husband and wife is, at common law, binding only on the husband.⁸ Even in a judicial proceeding, a married woman's bond is invalid, unless there is express authority to file the same.⁹ A married woman's bond is not, however, void as to her sureties, although she is not liable thereon.¹⁰ In equity a bond expressly charging her separate estate may be valid as to that property.¹¹

c. Covenants of Warranty. The covenants of warranty of a married woman are void at common law,¹² and they cannot be enforced in equity.¹³ Where the wife joins in a deed to relinquish dower, she is not liable on the covenants therein.¹⁴ The same rule applies to a conveyance of her homestead interest¹⁵ or of community property.¹⁶ Likewise she is not bound by her covenants in a conveyance with her husband of her own land,¹⁷ and in some states the statute expressly provides that she shall not be bound.¹⁸ Under express or implied statutory provisions, however, a married woman may be bound by her covenants, especially in the conveyance of her separate property.¹⁹ In some jurisdictions it is held that, although a married woman cannot be personally bound by her covenants, yet she may be estopped by the same.²⁰

d. Liability on Debt Collateral to Mortgage. In general a married woman is not personally liable for a debt incurred in connection with the mortgage of her separate estate, even though the mortgage itself be valid either in equity or by her statutory authority to convey.²¹ Consequently she is not liable for any deficit, if upon foreclosure sale the land fails to bring enough to pay the amount due.²² Under statutory powers to contract as a feme sole, she may, however, be bound by a personal judgment.²³

e. Assignment of Mortgage. Under general contractual powers as a feme sole, a married woman may make a valid assignment of a mortgage.²⁴ Statutes, however, sometimes require the joinder of the husband in order to make the same valid.²⁵

4. RATIFICATION OF CONTRACTS — a. After Dissolution of Coverture. A married woman's contracts being void at common law, she is not bound by the confirmation or ratification, made after the dissolution of marriage, of any promise or agreement entered into during coverture, unless there is a new consideration.²⁶ Although the weight of authority supports this principle, yet some courts have held that the moral obligation of her promise during coverture is a sufficient consideration for a new express promise when the disability of coverture has been removed.²⁷ A contract that was enforceable against her estate in equity is, however, a sufficient consideration for an express promise, and may thereupon become a valid contract at law.²⁸

b. Ratification by Estoppel. A married woman may be estopped from claiming, after judgment, the privilege of coverture, when she neglected to set up the defense before judgment.²⁹ Likewise if, when becoming discovert, she continues a suit as a feme sole, she will be bound.³⁰ An agreement to convey, although invalid during her coverture, may, upon her acceptance of a part of the purchase-price after discoverture, be thus made binding by estoppel.³¹ In the same way she may be barred from her dower by estoppel, as where she accepts, after the death of her husband, in accordance with an agreement made with him during coverture, a provision in lieu of dower,³² although a mere agreement concerning such a provision, made by her during coverture, will not alone amount to estoppel.³³

c. Ratification by Husband. While the husband has generally no authority to ratify an invalid contract of his wife,³⁴ yet in instances where his consent is necessary to give validity to her contracts, his subsequent assent may work retroactively.³⁵

Renewal of note after husband's death.—A married woman gave a note, which was indorsed. After her husband's death she gave a renewal note, which the same sureties also indorsed. It was held that she was liable on the last note, although not on the first. Spitz v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 641.

5. AVOIDANCE OF CONTRACTS. The avoidance of a contract on the ground of coverture is a personal privilege, a protection which the law throws around the married woman, and consequently no one except herself, or those in privity with her, can plead her disability.³⁶ It follows that the other party to the contract cannot refuse to perform on the ground that it was made with a married woman and is not binding on her.³⁷ The surety is bound, although the obligation of the married woman as principal may be avoided by her plea of coverture.³⁸ Likewise one who is sui juris cannot, after dealing with a married woman, upon an executed consideration by her, deprive her of the property, or, upon her rescission of an agreement, be excused from returning to her the purchase-price.³⁹ On the other hand by the better rule a married woman cannot avail herself of her disability and at the same time retain the consideration,⁴⁰ although the contrary has been held.⁴¹ The court cannot inquire into the motive of her rescission, since her contract is not binding upon her.⁴² She may, however, in some instances, be prevented from setting up the defense of coverture because of an estoppel.⁴³ If an infant who is also a married woman makes an instrument voidable because of her infancy, the disability of coverture enables her to postpone the act of avoidance until a reasonable time after the coverture ends.⁴⁴

6. ANTENUPTIAL CONTRACTS. The husband's liability at common law for his wife's antenuptial debts, and the revival of her own liability for the same after the dissolution of coverture, have already been treated.⁴⁵ An invalid contract entered into by an unmarried woman cannot be ratified by her promise made during coverture,⁴⁶ and in general a power of attorney given by a feme sole will be revoked by her subsequent marriage.⁴⁷

D. Property and Conveyances—1. CAPACITY TO TAKE AND TO HOLD PROPERTY—a. In General. In the absence of a dissent on the part of the husband, a married woman may, even at common law, acquire or take property⁴⁸ by

deed⁴⁹ or otherwise, but she cannot hold it against the husband's marital rights in the same, since her personal property in possession acquired during coverture becomes his absolutely, and he is entitled to the usufruct of her estates in realty.⁵⁰ The husband, however, may dissent to her purchase or to a devise to her of realty, since otherwise he might incur liabilities to his disadvantage, but by such dissent he cannot defeat her rights as heir.⁵¹ In equity and under statutes she may acquire and hold property, either real or personal, either with or without a trustee, to her sole and separate use, unaffected by any marital rights of the husband.⁵²

b. Adverse Possession. Although at common law the possession of the wife is the possession of the husband,⁵³ and no adverse possession, so long as they cohabit, can exist as between them,⁵⁴ yet if in her own right a married woman holds adversely to a third person she may acquire a valid title which cannot be disturbed by her husband.⁵⁵

2. CAPACITY TO CONVEY—a. Transfers of Personal Property. A married woman can, in her own name, make no valid transfer of personal property at common law, since she has no title to convey, all her personal property being subject to the husband's marital rights.⁵⁶ She may, however, as her husband's agent, sell his property,⁵⁷ as a sole trader,⁵⁸ and likewise in connection with her separate estate, when she has full disposition of the same, or when authorized to act as a feme sole.⁵⁹

b. Transfers of Realty. The deed of a married woman is absolutely void at common law.⁶⁰ By the strict common-law rule a married woman cannot make a deed of conveyance of her property, even jointly with her husband, a joint deed conveying only the interest of the husband.⁶¹ The only way at common law by which a married woman could convey her title to lands was by fine.⁶² By early custom, however, in many of the American states, even before the adoption of statutes concerning the subject, a married woman, by a deed in which her husband joined, was enabled to convey a valid title to her lands.⁶³ In all of the states, at the present time, there are statutes relating to conveyances by married women; but statutes regulating conveyances in general do not necessarily apply to the deeds of married women,⁶⁴ unless they can convey as if sole,⁶⁵ as they may do in many jurisdictions.⁶⁶ However, with reference to the separate property of married women, it is necessary to determine the powers or restrictions imposed upon it by the instrument creating the equitable estate, or by the statutes governing the statutory estate, since the jus tenendi is by no means the same thing as the jus disponendi.⁶⁷

c. Power to Mortgage.⁶⁸ By force of statute married women in most if not all of the states may now mortgage their property.⁶⁹ The mortgage may secure the debts of another person where not prohibited by statute.⁷⁰

d. Adverse Possession. As a general rule title by adverse possession cannot be acquired against a married woman,⁷¹ since possession of her lands under a con-

Buying claim distinguished from paying debt.—Under S. C. Rev. St. (1893) § 2167, empowering a married woman to purchase any species of property, and to bind herself by contract, but providing that she shall not be liable on any promise to pay the debt of another person, a married woman has the right to purchase claims against her husband, and to mortgage her land to secure the purchase-price. Ellis v. Gribb, 55 S. C. 328, 33 S. E. 484.

veyance from the husband is not adverse to her during coverture.⁷² If, however, prescription begins against her before marriage, her subsequent marriage will not stop the running of the statute.⁷³ It has also been held that an adverse possession that will bar the legal estate of a trustee will also bar the equitable estate of the beneficiary, even though such beneficiary be a married woman.⁷⁴ Under the modern statutes, in most of the states, a valid title by adverse possession may be created as to her separate estate.⁷⁵

3. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONVEYANCES — a. In General.⁷⁶ A married woman's power to convey being regulated by statute, and these statutes being in derogation of the common law, all the requirements of such statutes relative to execution and acknowledgment must be strictly complied with, in order to make her deed valid.⁷⁷ If a privity examination is required for the acknowledgment of the deed, its omission will be a fatal defect.⁷⁸ In general equity will not reform and enforce the defective deed of a married woman where she has no general power to convey;⁷⁹ but if she may contract and convey as a feme sole, and the statute does not prescribe a particular mode of conveyance, equity will reform her deed and compel specific performance.⁸⁰

b. Joinder of Husband in Deed.⁸¹ In many states a married woman can execute a valid deed only with the consent and joinder of her husband.⁸² His joinder or consent is expressly dispensed with in a few states,⁸³ while in other jurisdictions the statutes declare that she may convey as if unmarried.⁸⁴ When the husband's joinder is required, the general rule is that the statute is complied with by his signifying his assent under his hand and seal, without appearing as a grantor in the deed,⁸⁵ but in accordance with other decisions this is not sufficient, but it is necessary for him to join with his wife in the granting clause.⁸⁶ If a married woman is a trustee,⁸⁷ or is acting under a power contained in a written instrument,⁸⁸ she may convey the trust property without the consent of her husband.

4. GIFTS. At common law a married woman could not make a gift of property, either *inter vivos*⁸⁹ or causa mortis. A married woman may in general make a gift causa mortis of her equitable estate only by and with the consent of her husband;⁹⁰ but the husband's consent or ratification may be effective even after her death to make a gift valid.⁹¹ By force of statute, however, a married

Husband out of the country.—Although the statute requires that the husband must join with the wife in her conveyance, the fact that at the time a wife executed and delivered a deed of land owned by her husband did not sign the same did not render the deed void, where the husband at the time was out of the country, and the parties expected him to sign on his return. Andola v. Picott, 5 Ida. 27, 46 Pac. 928.

Application for extension of street.—Md. Laws (1876), c. 399, requires that an application to the county commissioners for the extension of streets and avenues in Baltimore county shall be signed by the "owners of a majority of front feet of ground," etc. It was held that, notwithstanding her common-law disability to encumber her land independently of her husband, a married woman, owner of land abutting on a street proposed to be extended, may sign the application with the same force and effect as if she were sui juris. Galloway v. Shipley, 71 Md. 243, 17 Atl. 1023.

Execution by de facto wife.—If a woman married de facto to one whom she knows to have another prior wife executes a deed as his wife jointly with him, she is bound as a feme sole. Anstie v. Mason, 3 Anstr. 833.

Small gift as charity.—Where a wife gave her old and needy brother a frock of small value which he was much in need of, without the permission of her husband, it was held that the husband could not annul the gift, it being but a reasonable charity which a wife had a legal right to give. Spencer v. Storrs, 38 Vt. 156.

Under the Missouri statute requiring the wife's written consent to the husband's dealings with her property, it is held that on a joint gift of personality by husband and wife, the written consent of the wife is not necessary. Payne v. Payne, 57 Mo. App. 130.

woman may be capable of making a gift without her husband's consent.⁹² A married woman may acquire property by gift in connection with her separate estate.⁹³

5. RATIFICATION — a. By Act of Party. In general if a married woman's deed is invalid for want of compliance with the statute she can by no act on her part other than meeting the statutory requirement, either during coverture⁹⁴ or after its dissolution,⁹⁵ ratify the same. Where, however, the consent of the husband is required, it is not necessary that he should sign and acknowledge the deed at the same time as the wife,⁹⁶ or before the same official.⁹⁷ If the wife has not properly acknowledged the deed, she may cure the defect by making a correct acknowledgment, and by subsequently delivering it,⁹⁸ even after the husband's death.⁹⁹ Passive acquiescence by a married woman in an invalid deed executed by her when an infant will not ratify the same, and she will not be bound by an estoppel in connection with it.¹ Where, however, she has general powers to enter into contracts, she may be bound by her conduct, and may thus ratify a deed, although originally invalid.²

b. By Statute. Whether a married woman's deed, defective for lack of proper execution or acknowledgment, can be ratified or confirmed by a curative act of the legislature is both denied³ and affirmed.⁴ One view is that the legislative confirmation of a void act would amount to the divesting of rights in property,⁵ while the other is that such acts merely execute the intention of the grantor and deprive her of no rights.⁶

6. AVOIDANCE — a. Grounds. A married woman may avoid her deed on the ground of fraud⁷ or duress.⁸ So she may avoid it because of its invalid exe-

Failure to read.—An injunction against the foreclosure of a mortgage given by a wife, on the ground that she had executed the same at the request of her husband without knowing that the same was a mortgage, will not be granted where there was no evidence that the husband obtained it by fraud or deceit, but simply that the wife failed to read the paper, and there was no evidence that the mortgagee had any notice thereof. Comegys v. Clarke, 44 Md. 108.

Ignorance of legal rights.—A conveyance executed by a feme covert cannot be avoided by her after her husband's death on the ground that she executed it under a misapprehension of her legal rights. McNeely v. Rucker, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 391.

caution,⁹ or because of her want of capacity to make a deed.¹⁰ As a general rule, however, if the certificate of her acknowledgment be in required form, she cannot, as against bona fide purchasers for value, set up mere defects in execution.¹¹ So it is the general rule that if the grantee is without notice of the fraud or duress practised upon a married woman by a third person, as for instance her husband, to induce her to execute the deed, the defense cannot be set up against the grantee.¹² She may disaffirm her conveyance at any time before the statute of limitations takes effect,¹³ and where a married woman is also an infant, she has a reasonable time after her husband's death to avoid the deed.¹⁴

b. Who May Avoid. The defense of coverture being a personal one, the grantee of a married woman cannot avoid her deed on the ground that she was incompetent to convey.¹⁵ The defense, however, is available to those in privity with her, and consequently her children or heirs may, upon her death, set up the invalidity of her deed.¹⁶ Her creditors, if no fraud was practised upon them at the time of the conveyance, cannot afterward claim any rights in the lands conveyed, by reason of her disability as a married woman to make the conveyance.¹⁷ Whether or not a married woman must refund the consideration received before she can avoid her deed is a question upon which the decisions are conflicting.¹⁸

E. Trade or Business—1. CAPACITY OF MARRIED WOMEN TO TRADE. A married woman's contracts being void at common law,¹⁹ and her earnings being the property of her husband,²⁰ it follows that she cannot engage in trade or business in her own name for her personal profit.²¹ If a single woman in trade or business marries, all her personal property invested in the same, together with the business itself, including the assets and the liabilities, passes at common law to her husband.²² In equity, the separate estate of a married woman trading as a feme sole may be subjected to the payment of her debts incurred therein.²³ The power of a wife to engage in business as a sole trader is now generally regulated by statute. Some states expressly permit married women to trade as if unmarried.²⁴ Others place limitations upon her capacity,²⁵ or require conditions precedent, such as the consent of the husband,²⁶ judicial permission,²⁷ the filing of a certificate of her intention,²⁸ or the obtaining of a license.²⁹ General property acts do not as a rule authorize a married woman to engage in separate business;³⁰ but where she is entitled by statute to all her earnings, or may contract in relation to her separate estate, it is held that she may engage in trade to the extent thus specified in the statute.³¹ Where the civil law is in force, the wife may be a sole

Implied right to trade by right to earnings.—Pa. Act April 3, 1872, securing to a married woman her earnings the same as if she were a feme sole, does not make her a trader.³² Thus in Louisiana a married woman may become a "public merchant," so as to bind her paraphernal property;³³ but when she has no separate estate, her contracts as a trader will be presumed to be made in connection with community property.³⁴

2. INCAPACITY, INSOLVENCY, OR DESERTION OF HUSBAND. Abandonment by the husband, where actual and permanent,³⁵ gives her authority to engage in trade as a feme sole,³⁶ without regard to the cause of the abandonment,³⁷ although in some states the wife must first obtain a judicial decree entitling her to act as a sole trader.³³ Insolvency of the husband is not of itself a sufficient ground for a decree entitling the wife to act as a sole trader.³⁹

3. WHAT CONSTITUTES SEPARATE OR SOLE TRADE. A married woman may be a sole trader, although she lives with her husband.⁴⁰ Trading includes mechanical, feme sole trader, but gives an implied authority to engage in business, and if she does so engage with her earnings, she is liable on her contracts in relation thereto. Bovard v. Kettering, 101 Pa. St. 181.

"Drunkenness, profligacy, or other cause."

—A statute providing that when the husband from "drunkenness, profligacy, or other cause" shall neglect or refuse to provide for his wife, she shall have all the rights and privileges of a sole trader, does not include any involuntary failure of the husband to support her. Ellison v. Anderson, 110 Pa. St. 486, 1 Atl. 539; King v. Thompson, 87 Pa. St. 365, 30 Am. Rep. 364. Neither does such a statute give a wife authority to trade because the husband is ill, and unable to support her. Weiler v. Greiner, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 440. In Wis. Rev. St. c. 95, § 4, which provides that "any married woman whose husband, either from drunkenness, profligacy or any other cause, shall neglect or refuse to provide for her support, or the support and education of her children, shall have the right in her own name to transact business, and to receive and collect her own earnings," etc., the words "any other cause" must be understood to refer to causes ejusdem generis, and do not include mere physical or mental incapacity. Edson v. Hayden, 20 Wis. 682.

Business carried on in house where both reside.—In order that the property of a married woman who carries on a business for herself may be protected from executions against her husband, it is not necessary that she should live separate and apart from her husband, or that the business should be carried on in a house other than that in which the husband and his wife reside. Murray v. McCallum, 8 Ont. App. 277.

Carrying "on business separately from husband."—A married woman does not "carry on business separately from her husband" within the meaning of a statute, because she has an interest in the business which is carried on, which is her separate property. The test is whether she is trading independently of her husband, and without manufacturing, or commercial pursuits.⁴¹ Any legitimate trade or profession may be included under the designation of a sole trader,⁴² and fraud upon her husband's creditors will not be conclusively presumed, although the trade is unsuitable for her sex.⁴³ It has been held, however, that the business "must be pursued as a continuing and substantial employment,"⁴⁴ and that she must in good faith actually carry on the business on her own account.⁴⁵ The management of her landed property, together with the receipt and disposal of the rents and income thereof, is not a carrying on of a trade or business, within the meaning of the statute authorizing married women to carry on a trade or business.⁴⁶ Under a statute requiring a married woman "doing business on her separate account" to file a certificate in order to prevent the attachment of the "property employed in such business"⁴⁷ as the property of the husband, it has been held that an investment in property even though made with a view to profit therefrom is not a "doing business";⁴⁸ and that permitting her husband to use her property in carrying on his business is not a "doing business on her separate account";⁴⁹ nor is the purchase of a single animal,⁵⁰ although keeping a boarding-house is,⁵¹ as is the running of a farm for the support of the family.⁵² She carries on business in her own name, although she carries it on through an agent.⁵³ being accountable to him for the profits of the business. In re Edwardes, 2 Manson 182, 15 Reports 362, 43 Wkly. Rep. 509.

41. Nash v. Mitchell, 71 N. Y. 199, 27 Am. Rep. 38.

Meaning of "trade or business."—The provisions of Miss. Code (1871), § 1780, that a married woman may "engage in trade or business," means that she may engage in trade in the commercial sense, and in other employments which require time, labor, and skill. Netterville v. Barber, 52 Miss. 168.

In Louisiana, under a code provision that the wife is "considered as a public merchant if she carries on a separate trade, but not if she retails only the merchandise belonging to the commerce carried on by her husband," the words "separate trade" refer only to trade in merchandise, and not to any other business or pursuit. Moussier v. Gustine, 25 La. Ann. 36.

In South Carolina the practice of making feme covert's sole traders is derived from the custom of London, and applies to only such as are engaged in trade and commerce. McDaniel v. Cornwell, 1 Hill 428. See also Ewart v. Nagel, 1 McMull. 50. Therefore a married woman as a sole trader cannot engage in farming (McDaniel v. Cornwell, 1 Hill 428), nor be a feme sole carrier (Ewart v. Nagel, supra).

42. Guttman v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 455; Dayton v. Walsh, 47 Wis. 113, 2 N. W. 65, 32 Am. Rep. 757.

Business of boating.—A married woman may purchase a boat and carry on the business of boating on her sole and separate account, and she may employ her husband as master of such boat. Whedon v. Champlin, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 61.

Keeping livery stable.—A married woman bought horses and carriages of her father, as her separate property, and for the purpose of carrying on the business of a livery stable. She carried it on for herself and in her own name, and he served her in the capacity of hostler. There was no contrivance between her and her husband by which she was put forward as the ostensible owner, while he was the real owner, but the property was managed by her, exclusive of any authority or control over it by the husband. It was held that this was a case within the protection of the Married Woman's Act of 1848. Manderbach v. Mock, 29 Pa. St. 43.

44. Holmes v. Holmes, 40 Conn. 117. And see Young v. Ward, 24 Ont. App. 147.

Neither keeping a colt for use, nor buying materials to build a house for herself and husband is such a carrying on of business by a married woman as to require the filing of a certificate, under the statute, in order to protect the colt and materials from attachment for her husband's debts. Proper v. Cobb, 104 Mass. 589.

45. Hurlburt v. Jones, 25 Cal. 225.

46. Nash v. Mitchell, 71 N. Y. 199, 27 Am. Rep. 38.

Plantation operated for married women.—Under Miss. Code (1871), § 1780, a married woman cannot, in reference to a plantation operated for her account, be considered to be engaged "in trade or business as a feme sole," so as to render her liable with respect to such operations. Duncan v. Robertson, 58 Miss. 390.

47. See Lockwood v. Corey, 150 Mass. 82, 22 N. E. 440, holding that a sow bought by a married woman with a view to its natural increase was not property employed in the business of keeping boarders.

4. CONSENT OF HUSBAND. In some of the states the consent of the husband is necessary to authorize the wife to act as a sole trader.⁵⁴ Such consent is shown by his acting as her agent in her business.⁵⁵ The husband's consent is not of itself sufficient where the statute fixes another mode of procedure as exclusive.⁵⁶ If the husband's consent is without consideration, it may be revoked at any time.⁵⁷

5. PROCEEDINGS TO BECOME SOLE TRADER—a. Declaration. Statutes requiring the filing of a declaration of intention to do business as a sole trader must be fully complied with.⁵⁸ Statutory requirements that the notice or certificate state the nature of the business proposed to be done,⁵⁹ its location,⁶⁰ that it is to be carried on "in her own name"⁶¹ and "on her own account,"⁶² etc., must be fully complied with in order to make her liable and to preclude the rights of her husband's creditors. The declaration need not specify her property.⁶³ The declaration is usually required to be recorded,⁶⁴ although it may be made orally before a magistrate who must reduce it to writing.⁶⁵

b. Petition For Judicial Decree. In proceedings to obtain judicial authority to trade as a feme sole, the statute may require, for the purpose of protecting the husband's creditors, that the wife must show that she has separate property, or a calling by which property may be acquired.⁶⁶ Insolvency of the husband need

Statute not prohibitory but enabling.—Ala. Code, § 2350, providing that the wife may, "with the consent of the husband, expressed in writing, duly filed and recorded," "enter into and pursue any lawful trade or business as if she were sole," is not prohibitory, but enabling; and a purchase of goods by the wife, without her husband's consent, for the purpose of entering into business, is not void. Wolffsohn, 137 Mass. 134; Cahill v. Campbell, 105 Mass. 40 (holding that a certificate stating that the nature of the proposed business is "the general business of saloon keeper" is sufficient); Shed v. Blakely, 6 Mont. 247, 11 Pac. 639.

60. Harriman v. Gray, 108 Mass. 229, holding that a certificate setting forth that the business is proposed to be done at a certain number on a certain street, "and such other rooms as may be necessarily connected therewith," does not entitle her to claim, against her husband's creditors, property employed in business in a distinct and separate building of a different number, although on the same street, without other proof of its necessary connection with the first named place than is afforded by the nature of the business. And see Pearce v. Archibald, 34 Nova Scotia 543.

61. Manton v. Tyler, 4 Mont. 364, 1 Pac. 743, holding that the two requirements that the married woman's declaration shall state that she intends to do business "on her own account," and also "in her own name," are not synonymous, but each a distinct essential.

Filing.—Recording is not a compliance with a statutory requirement that the married woman file such certificate where, after being recorded, the certificate is not kept in the clerk's office. Chapin v. Kingsbury, 135 Mass. 580.

Petitioner must give evidence of separate property or calling.—In the absence of evidence to show that the wife had any property whatever, or any trade, calling, or business in which she might engage, she is not entitled to a decree empowering her to trade as a feme sole. The mere fact that she is a hard-working, industrious woman, who would not be shown.⁶⁷ The decree will not be granted where the application is made with intent to defraud or delay the husband's creditors.⁶⁸ Although the husband may be required to join in the wife's petition, yet his reasons for his consent need not be alleged therein.⁶⁹

c. Publication. In the absence of a statute requiring publication, the declaration of intention need not be published.⁷⁰ Where leave to act as a sole trader must be obtained by judicial decree, the statutes sometimes require publication of the filing of the petition and the object thereof,⁷¹ and such publication is held necessary to enable the court to acquire jurisdiction,⁷² although defective proof of publication does not invalidate a judgment subsequently obtained against her.⁷³

6. POWERS AND LIABILITIES OF SOLE TRADERS. When a married woman trades, by authority of statute, as a feme sole, she has all the powers and liabilities incidental to her business.⁷⁴ She may buy and sell on credit,⁷⁵ execute notes,⁷⁶ sue be able to carry on business, and could get assistance from her relatives to enable her to start in business, and that the husband is insolvent, is not sufficient to entitle her to a decree. Kohn v. Steinau, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 751.

The law applies to all classes of women. Ex p. Franklin, 79 Ky. 497.

Annulment of decree.—A decree making a married woman a feme sole cannot be declared void on the ground that she did not understand its full force and effect, especially where by her own action, based on the rights conferred by the decree, the interests of third persons have become involved, and they have been induced to give her credit on the strength of it. Such ignorance could at most furnish ground only to thenceforth annul the privilege. Sypert v. Harrison, 88 Ky. 461, 11 S. W. 435, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 1052.

7. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF HUSBAND. Where a married woman engages in trade after marriage merely by consent of her husband, the business at common law is his, and the profits and the liabilities are his.⁸² If, however, credit is given to the wife personally the husband is not bound.⁸³ If the statutory requirements

Accommodation notes.—An accommodation acceptance by a married woman acting as a free trader under Ga. Code, § 1760, providing that such free trader shall be “liable as a feme sole for all her contracts,” does not bind her, since section 1760 is qualified by section 1783, providing that a married woman “cannot bind her separate estate by any contract of suretyship.” Madden v. Blain, 86 Ga. 780, 13 S. E. 128. To the same effect see Herron v. Frost, 9 Mont. 308, 23 Pac. 469; Harley v. Leonard, 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 431, 40 Wkly. Notes Cas. 225; Bell v. Ladd, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 168; Heiss v. Davison, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 221. On the other hand it is held that where a married woman carries on a separate business, she is estopped from asserting that negotiable paper issued by her was in fact accommodation paper, in like manner as a man would be estopped. Buffalo Third Nat. Bank v. Guenther, 13 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 428.

Indorsement of note.—A feme sole trader is bound to a third person by her indorsement to him of a note drawn by her husband, payable to herself. Wilthaus v. Ludecus, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 326.

Indorsement to husband.—A married woman's indorsement on a check payable to her, “Pay [her husband] or order” is not such an express assent in writing as places the title to the property in her husband, under Mo. Rev. St. § 6869, requiring an assent in writing by a wife to contain full authority to the husband to sell or encumber the wife's property for his own use and benefit, but simply authorizes the husband to collect. Pub. St. c. 147, § 11, where the certificate is filed before the execution of the note. Browning v. Carson, 163 Mass. 255, 39 N. E. 1037.

Notice given by husband.—Where the husband gives notice to one dealing with the wife that he will not be liable for debts incurred by her in connection therewith, he will not be subsequently liable to such a person extending credit to her. Thompson v. Hibberd, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 190; In re Shepherd, 10 Ch. D. 573, 48 L. J. Bankr. 35, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 652, 27 Wkly. Rep. 310.

Whether credit given to husband or to wife a question of fact.—If a married woman is engaged in mercantile business, and the husband as agent purchases goods for her, the fact that it is her business, and that the purchase was made for her, is not enough to determine whether the credit for the purchase-price was given to him or to her. It should be shown that the fact was known to the seller, or that between him and the husband there was a clear and distinct understanding that the credit was given to her, else the husband will be liable. McQuaid v. Fontane, 24 Fla. 509, 5 So. 274. See also Gulick v. Grover, 33 N. J. L. 463, 97 Am. Dec. 728.

Evidence precluding presumption of credit to wife.—Where the business is conducted in a name which is that of neither husband nor wife, and where plaintiff, in his business correspondence, addresses his letters in such name, with the prefix of "Monsieur," he cannot allege that he supposed the name to designate the wife. Querouze v. Capmartin, 40 La. Ann. 262, 4 So. 497.

Removal of business.—The rights and liabilities of the husband attach where a new certificate is not filed after the wife removes her business to another town. Dawes v. Rodier, 125 Mass. 421.

If the husband is domiciled in another state, he is not liable on contracts of his wife, who is doing business in Massachusetts, although she has not filed the certificate required in that state. Hill v. Wright, 129 Mass. 296.

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 375.

Creditor not having knowledge of filing of certificate.—The fact that a seller of goods sold to a married woman doing business on her own account, at the time he took her note in payment, was unaware that the certificate required by Mass. Pub. St. c. 147, § 11, had been filed, does not entitle him to rescind that transaction, in order to hold the husband liable. Browning v. Carson, 163 Mass. 255, 39 N. E. 1037.

Community property bound under civil law.—A married woman carrying on a separate trade as a public merchant may bind herself without authorization for anything relative to her trade, and in such case, if there be a community, the husband will be also bound; otherwise if not a public merchant. If there be no community, he is not bound. Deslix v. Jone, 6 Rob. (La.) 292; Thorne v. Egan, 3 Rob. (La.) 329.

Husband liable for wife's necessities.—The husband is liable for necessities furnished to the wife for the support of herself and family, although she has been decreed a feme sole trader. Markley v. Wartman, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 236.

business or with her management of it, she may have relief against him by way of injunction.⁸⁹

8. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF CREDITORS. If a married woman is authorized by statute to trade as if unmarried, her creditors in connection with her business have the same rights and remedies against her as if she were a single woman.⁹⁰ If she is trading by mere equitable authority, or in connection with her separate estate, then her separate estate may be bound,⁹¹ although no judgment in personam can in general be rendered against her.⁹² The creditors of the husband have no rights in the wife's stock in trade, if the same is her exclusive property;⁹³ but if his property is used or invested in her business, his creditors may proceed against his interest.⁹⁴ If the wife has not complied with the statutory requirements in connection with proceeding to become a sole trader, the husband's creditors will be entitled to regard the business as his.⁹⁵ In any case where husband and wife are connected with a business, the question whether the husband is the agent of the wife or whether the business belongs to the husband is one of fact.⁹⁶ A creditor who applies for an injunction against a married woman doing business as a sole trader and obtains the appointment of a receiver does not thereby acquire any right to be paid in full, to the exclusion of intervening creditors of the same class.⁹⁷

9. MARRIED WOMEN AS PARTNERS. At common law a married woman cannot form a valid partnership,⁹⁸ and general property acts securing to a married woman the use, control, and profits of her separate estate do not, by the weight of authority, authorize her to become a partner.⁹⁹ Under statutory authority to engage

Creditors claim for husband's reasonable services.—Where services rendered by the husband in the conduct of a business carried on by the wife under a decree empowering her to trade as a feme sole are not worth more than the cost of the support of his family, he has no interest in the profits that can be subjected to the payment of his debts. Paul v. Parks, 45 S. W. 873, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 241. See also Sheldon v. Shattuck, 108 Mich. 344, 66 N. W. 220; Abbey v. Deyo, 44 N. Y. 343; Kendall v. Beaudry, 107 Wis. 180, 83 N. W. 314.

Circumstances showing husband's ownership.—In an action by creditors of the husband to subject property claimed by his wife, it appeared that the wife had been made a feme sole by decree of court; that at the time of the decree she owned no property at all; that the husband bought goods and conducted business in her name, and realized large profits therefrom; and that he was a man of superior business capacity. It was held that the property was subject to the husband's debts. Carter v. Martin, 91 Ky. 294, 15 S. W. 663, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 836.

Failure to disclose wife as owner.—Where the husband managed a business alleged to be the wife's, his failure to display, as required by statute, a sign disclosing the name of his wife as owner, made the property liable for his debts. Hamblet v. Steen, 65 Miss. 474, 4 So. 431.

Partnership dissolved by marriage.—A woman's marriage dissolves her business partnership, and during coverture she can form none, either with her husband or the former partner, in the absence of a statute authorizing her to do so. Brown v. Chancellor, 61 Tex. 437.

in trade or business, she may, however, as a rule, trade in partnership,¹ although her inability to contract with her husband may prevent her from entering into a partnership with him.² If a married woman enters into a partnership without contractual power to do so, she will not be liable for any of the partnership debts,³ and she may recover her property put into the business of a firm of which she could not legally become a member.⁴

10. MARRIED WOMEN AS MEMBERS OF CORPORATIONS. A married woman may be a stock-holder in a corporation, but at common law her shares are liable, as choses in action, to her husband's right of reduction.⁵ When she may contract as if sole,

Limitation of contractual rights.—A statute providing that a married woman's contracts are valid except those to answer for the liability of another does not empower a married woman to make a contract of partnership, since she would thereby become liable to answer for the liability of another. Vannerson v. Cheatham, 41 S. C. 327, 19 S. E. 614.

Personal defense.—In an action on a partnership obligation, it is no defense that one of the firm is a married woman. Carter Merchandise Co. v. Dickson, 39 S. C. 433, 17 S. E. 996.

Partnership sued by firm-name.—Although a married woman cannot incur any personal liability by contract, and may plead coverture as a defense to an action founded on a contract, a plea of coverture is no defense to an action brought against a partnership by its firm-name, under the authority of Ala. Code, § 2904, of which she was in fact a member, as the judgment in such action does not issue against the individual partners, but is leviable only on the firm property. *Le Grand v. Enfaula Nat. F. Estoppels Against Married Women — 1. IN GENERAL. The disabilities imposed by coverture prevent in many instances the application to married women of the doctrine of estoppel in cases where a person, if acting under no disability, would be bound.⁸

2. ESTOPPEL BY RECORD. A married woman is estopped to deny the truth of her declarations or admissions contained in a pleading,⁹ deposition,¹⁰ or other judicial record.¹¹

3. ESTOPPEL BY DEED — a. In General. It is the general rule that a married woman is not estopped by her unauthorized or invalid deed, since she cannot be estopped by any conveyance she had no power to make.¹² She is not estopped

Subscription for stock.—A married woman, without contractual power, is not liable on a subscription for stock. Shields v. Casey, 155 Pa. St. 253, 25 Atl. 619, 35 Am. St. Rep. 879.

Building and loan association.—A married woman may become a member of a building and loan association, so as to be held liable for dues and fines on stock held by her. Goodrich v. Atlanta Nat. Bldg., etc., Assoc., 96 Ga. 803, 22 S. E. 585. A stock-holder in a building association who owes it for balance of money borrowed, although a married woman, must, on the association becoming insolvent, contribute to the losses. Meares v. Duncan, 123 N. C. 203, 31 S. E. 476. Where a married woman had purchased stock in, and obtained a loan from, a building association prior to the Pennsylvania act of April 10, 1879 (Pamphl. Laws 16), removing the disability of married women to become members of a building and loan association, and subsequently continued to pay monthly premiums on a loan to her, she cannot set up the disability which existed prior to the act in an action to recover payments made by her to the association. Dilzer v. Beethoven Bldg. Assoc., 103 Pa. St. 86. As a building and loan association is not a partnership, its shares of stock are property which a married woman may purchase and hold. City Building, etc., Assoc. v. Jones, 32 S. C. 308, 10 S. E. 1079.

Defective acknowledgment of deed.—A married woman is not estopped from claiming land by a deed of the same signed by her but void because of defects in the certificate of her acknowledgment. Stone v. Sledge, 87 Tex. 49, 26 S. W. 1068, 47 Am. St. Rep. 65. Compare Godfrey v. Thornton, 46 Wis. 677, 1 N. W. 362.

Usurious mortgage.—An unmarried woman made a usurious mortgage which, after her marriage, was assigned to her husband in even though she has received the purchase-price,¹³ although some cases hold that she must return the purchase-money.¹⁴ If, however, she has fraudulently misled the grantee as to her capacity to give a valid deed, some courts hold that she is estopped.¹⁵ When her deed is valid she will be estopped from asserting her claim to the title conveyed.¹⁶ If a married woman would not have been bound by estoppel, her heirs may claim the privilege of her disability.¹⁷

b. Covenants. Although a married woman is estopped by her valid deed, she is not bound, at common law, by any covenants of warranty contained therein,¹⁸ and consequently she is not estopped from asserting her claims to an after-acquired title.¹⁹ However, a mere release of dower by her, in her husband's deed does not estop her from claiming an after-acquired interest,²⁰ unless it is consideration of a mortgage on other land executed by them both. In an action in which an attempt was made to enforce the second mortgage against the husband and wife personally, it was held that the relations of the parties were not so changed by the transaction as to prevent her from alleging that the former mortgage made the latter usurious and void. McCraney v. Alden, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 272. See also Payne v. Burnham, 62 N. Y. 69.

Subsequent deed.—A married woman is not estopped to recover property voluntarily conveyed by her to her husband, such conveyance being void, by the fact that she afterward joined her husband in conveying it to a third person, without consideration, in order to have it conveyed to a daughter of the husband by a former marriage, in fraud of plaintiff's rights. *Connar v. Concealment of coverture.—A married woman, owner of real estate, representing herself to be, and selling the property as, a spinster, is not entitled in equity to set up that the sale was void because of a conveyance not having been executed in conformity with the statutes as to the conveyance of land by married women. *Graham v. Estoppel as to marriage settlement interest.—Where a wife joins with her husband in a conveyance of his land, relinquishing her right of dower, she is estopped to say that by reason of an antenuptial contract she had a greater interest in the land than that expressly stated in the deed that she is to be bound by the covenants,²¹ and this is so even though the statute authorizes her to contract and incur liabilities as a feme sole.²² If, however, she has general powers to convey, she may be bound by her covenants, and estopped from setting up any claims by virtue of an after-acquired title.²³ A statute, moreover, may, by express provision, preclude her from making claim to an after-acquired title.²⁴ On the other hand the statute may bind the wife only by such covenants as are necessary to convey the title expressed to be conveyed.²⁵ In some jurisdictions it is held that, although a married woman cannot be personally bound by her covenants, yet she may be estopped by them.²⁶

4. ESTOPPEL IN PAIS — a. In General. Under the general common-law disabilities of married women, it is held by some courts that the doctrine of estoppel in pais to divest their title in realty does not apply to them at all,²⁷ a married woman not being estopped in relation to any contract she has no power to make,²⁸ not even if she falsely represents that she can contract,²⁹ nor even if mistakenly she attempted to convey. Razor v. Lucas, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 824.

Estoppel as to resulting trust.—A wife entitled to a resulting trust in land owned by her husband, by joining her husband in a mortgage on the land and renouncing her dower is estopped to assert her claim as to the resulting trust as against the mortgagee. Campbell v. Sloan, 21 S. C. 301.

Fraudulent conduct in connection with conveyance of land.—In accordance with the principle stated in the text, a married woman who is unable to convey her lands except in the method prescribed by statute will not be estopped by her invalid conveyance, but if in connection with the transaction she is guilty of fraud to the injury of one who relied upon her representations, she may be estopped from asserting her claims. which can be separated from her contracts will estop a married woman.³⁷ Misrepresentations for example made for deceiving others that her property belongs to her husband will estop her.³⁸ Whether she may be estopped by false representations connected with her contracts is the subject of some conflict in the opinions. The rule has been laid down that the legal incapacity of a married woman cannot be removed, even by fraudulent misrepresentations, so as to create an estoppel in the act to which the incapacity relates.³⁹ Other courts, however, have taken the broader view that, although a married woman may not be liable on her contract, yet if, in connection with the same, she has made fraudulent misrepresentations, thereby causing another to act to his injury, she will afterward be estopped from setting up the invalidity of her contract.⁴⁰ This rule has frequently been applied in connection with separate estates, where, having authority to make contracts only in connection with the same, fraudulent misrepresentations have been made by a married woman to the effect that a contract was for the benefit of herself or of such estate. In instances of this character the doctrine of estoppel has been applied.⁴¹ So a married woman has been held estopped to set up that her contract was in reality to secure her husband's debt, where her representations were to the contrary.⁴² However, a fraudulent misrepresentation that she has capacity to contract will not generally create an estoppel against a married woman.⁴³ The expression of a mere opinion as to the legal effect of a writing that she is about to execute will not estop a married woman, although the other party may have been misled and injured thereby.⁴⁴

Notice.—Where, however, the mortgagee has notice of the character of the transaction, and that the wife's conveyance of her land to her husband in order that he may mortgage the same is merely to avoid the statute prohibiting her from becoming a surety for her husband, she will not be estopped from showing that she was the real owner. *Sohn v. estopped by her contract on the ground of its invalidity, she cannot be estopped by inference that she has tacitly bound herself by her silence, since estoppel through silence or acquiescence depends upon ability to contract.⁴⁵ In general therefore a married woman is not estopped by her mere silence.⁴⁶ If, however, there is any fraudulent suppression of the truth, she will generally be estopped by keeping silent when it is her duty to speak.⁴⁷ Some courts, however, have said that she must do some positive act, or make some assurance, in order to preclude her from asserting a right.⁴⁸ The presumption of constructive fraud from silence or acquiescence will not, however, be strictly applied to a married woman in reference to the dealings of her husband with her property.⁴⁹ And a fraudulent concealment by the husband of his wife's interest in property will not estop the wife unless she participated in the fraud,⁵⁰ although acquiescence of the husband in the construction of a railroad on his wife's lands, where not held to her sole use, estops her.⁵¹ Where, however, by her voluntary silence, she has induced third persons to believe that her property belongs to the husband, or to another, and upon such bona fide belief such third persons act to their prejudice, she will afterward be estopped from asserting her right of ownership.⁵²

5. ESTOPPEL AS SOLE TRADER. Where a married woman may legally transact business as a sole trader, she is estopped, when others act in good faith in reliance on her conduct and misrepresentations, from alleging her disability for liabilities incurred in connection with the business.⁵³

Wife's ignorance of transaction.—Where a husband executed a chattel mortgage on the property of his wife without her knowledge to secure his own debt, and before the mortgage became due informed her of the mortgage, but she did not inform the mortgagee of her title, she is not estopped to set up such title when the mortgagee takes possession. Taylor v. Riley, 37 Kan. 90, 14 Pac. 476.

Silence through fear.—The threats once made by a husband to induce a wife to sign an act of sale are presumed to influence her and cause her silence until an opportunity is presented for the assertion of her right to the property alienated; and she is not bound by the doctrine of estoppel, as usually understood. Vicknair v. Trosclair, 45 La. Ann. 373, 12 So. 486.

Distinction between third persons and husband.—A married woman may be estopped as to others than her husband by her conduct in letting him handle her property as his own, but in passing on such question her peculiar relation to her husband must be considered. As to her husband she can only be estopped by following the statute requiring her express assent in writing authorizing him to treat her property as his own. Stone v. Gilliam Exch. Bank, 81 Mo. dedication cannot be established against her by an equitable estoppel.⁵⁴ If lands have been condemned by a city, a married woman, in the absence of fraud, will not be estopped to claim them as her separate estate.⁵⁵

7. AS BARRING DOWER. By conduct amounting to a fraud upon the rights of others who have been misled by her representations or silence, a married woman may be barred of her dower,⁵⁶ although the doctrine has been broadly laid down that dower cannot be barred, during coverture, by an estoppel in pais.⁵⁷ That the wife does not notify purchasers of land from her husband, when valuable improvements are being made, that she will claim dower, will not estop her, since they are charged with notice of her rights.⁵⁸ Upon the death of the husband, the widow may by her conduct estop herself from setting up her right of dower, although the same was relinquished during coverture by an invalid release.⁵⁹

8. UPON DISSOLUTION OF MARRIAGE. Upon the dissolution of coverture a woman will be estopped in connection with new transactions as a feme sole,⁶⁰ but without subsequent conduct or a deed a widow is not estopped by matter which arose during coverture which did not constitute an estoppel during her marriage.⁶¹

9. ESTOPPEL BY ACTS OF HUSBAND. If the husband is actually the agent of his wife, she will be estopped by his acts, within the scope of his agency.⁶² Likewise when she permits others to regard him as her agent she will be estopped,⁶³ at least to the extent that she is able to contract.⁶⁴ When the wife permits the husband to hold the title to her lands in his own name, she will be estopped from

Oral admissions.—The fact that a married woman and her children have constantly traveled over land alleged to have been dedicated to public uses, and have admitted that it was a public road, does not estop them from claiming such land as their own. McBeth v. Trabue, 69 Mo. 642.

When capable of donating lands.—The acts of the wife during coverture, tending to show an agreement on her part to donate to a railroad company a lot on the plat of a town laid out on lands belonging to her, on the faith of which the company has acted, estop her from asserting her rights of ownership therein. Todd v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 19 Ohio St. 514.

Presumption.—Where land on which a public improvement is constructed belongs to a married woman in her legal right, and not as a separate estate, there is no presumption that she consented to its construction. Johnson v. Duer, 115 Mo. 366, 21 S. W. 800.

Improvements of estate during and after coverture.—Although a married woman cannot be estopped from avoiding her deed, executed while an infant, by improvements made with her knowledge and encouragement, she will be estopped by such improvements made with her knowledge after she becomes discoverable, although made without her encouragement. Logan v. Gardner, 136 Pa. St. 588, 20 Atl. 625, 20 Am. St. Rep. 939.

Unauthorized act of husband.—An instrument executed by a husband, waiving all claims against a building contractor for failure to comply with the contract in building a house, will not estop the wife from claiming, in proceedings to foreclose a mechanic's lien thereon, that the mechanic's lien was invalidated by such failure, where the house was their homestead. Rhodes v. Jones, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 568, 64 S. W. 699.

Ratification by wife.—Where the husband assumed to apply the wife's money, without her cooperation, in payment of his own debt, and the wife and husband afterward united in ratifying such application thereof, the wife is estopped to recover back such money from the husband's creditor. Hollingsworth v. Hill, 116 Ala. 184, 22 So. 460.

asserting her rights against his creditors and bona fide purchasers for value.⁶⁵ The husband's creditors must, however, have extended credit in reliance upon the husband's ownership in order to estop the wife.⁶⁶

G. Torts — 1. BEFORE MARRIAGE.⁶⁷ At common law the husband is liable for the antenuptial torts of the wife,⁶⁸ but a de jure marriage is necessary in order to render him responsible.⁶⁹ Under the modern statutes, however, the husband is not liable for the antenuptial torts of his wife.⁷⁰

2. DURING COVERTURE. At common law the husband is liable for the torts of his wife committed during coverture.⁷¹ He may be alone liable, or both spouses may be jointly liable according to the circumstances of the case. Thus if the tort is committed by the wife in his presence and under his coercion, it is his tort, and he alone is liable.⁷² When, in the presence of her husband, a married woman Partition of wife's land.—At common law, a partition of a married woman's land, made by her husband and consented to by her, binds her inheritance, if fair and equal; and such partition, made by parol and acquiesced in, may estop the married woman to dispute it. *Berry v. Act of insane wife.—Where a husband of a wife admitted to be insane is the owner of buildings insured by defendants, and the care and custody of the wife are for the time being intrusted to her husband, and she burns the buildings while thus insane, defendants will be liable for the loss, unless they can show actual design, or such a degree of negligence on the part of the husband as will evince a corrupt design or a fraudulent purpose on his part. *Gove v. Husband and wife living apart.—A man is answerable to a third person for what is done by his wife, so long as the relation of husband and wife continues, although they may be permanently living apart, at least if it is not shown that the wife at the time was living in adultery. Head v. Briscoe, 5 C. & P. 484, 24 E. C. L. 667. A married woman, living apart from her husband, and maintaining a separate establishment with her own means, is not liable for the tort of a servant hired by her, although her husband lives in a different state, and was never domiciled here. *Ferguson v. commits a tort, and no further evidence appears, the law presumes that the act was done under his coercion.⁷³ The husband's presence may be actual or constructive, and if he is sufficiently near to exert an influence over her his coercion will be presumed.⁷⁴ The presumption of coercion is, however, only prima facie, and may be rebutted by evidence to the contrary.⁷⁵ Where, in her husband's presence, a married woman acts of her own volition,⁷⁶ or even against his will,⁷⁷ they are jointly liable. Petition alleging tort by wife alone.—The general rule that no joint action will lie against the husband and wife for their joint trespass, but only against the husband, the wife being presumed to be under the coercion of her husband, and consequently not liable where the act is done in his presence and in connection with him, will not apply where the petition charges a trespass to have been committed by the wife alone, and contains no allegation that he took any part in it or was present at the time. Dailey v. Houston, 53 Mo. 361.

Wife physically superior.—Where the husband and wife were together inciting an assault on plaintiff, the husband assenting to what his wife did, the mere fact that she was physically superior to him, owing to his recent illness, will not rebut the presumption of coercion. Husband's participation inferred.—Where a wife commits an assault and battery in the presence of her husband, and without his interposition, the jury may infer that the assault was by his consent, and he will be jointly liable with her. Phillips v. Phillips, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 268.

Wife ignorant of nature of act.—A grantor's wife having executed a deed to bar her right of dower without knowledge of what transpired in connection with the sale, the purchaser cannot recover, as to her, for fraudulent representations of the grantor in regard to the boundaries of the land. Ramsey v. Wallace, 100 N. C. 75, 6 S. E. 638.

his bidding.⁷⁹ The husband's liability for the wife's torts, as in the case of her antenuptial torts, continues only during coverture,⁸⁰ but in case the wife survives him the wife's liability also survives.⁸¹ A de facto marriage is sufficient to bind the husband for his wife's post-nuptial torts.⁸²

3. TORTS CONNECTED WITH INVALID CONTRACTS. Where a married woman is incapacitated by the common law from binding herself by a contract, neither she nor her husband can be held liable for her tort, which is so connected with the contract as to be a part of the transaction.⁸³ The general principle of liability applies to her pure torts, and not to her torts founded upon her invalid contracts.⁸⁴

4. Vicious dog on wife's premises.—A wife living with her husband on premises owned by her is not liable for injuries caused by the bite of a vicious dog kept on such premises, although Ala. Code, § 2345, provides that a married woman shall be alone liable for her torts. Strouse v. Leipf, 101 Ala. 433, 14 So. 667, 46 Am. St. Rep. 122, 23 L. R. A. 622. See, however, Valentine v. Cole, 1 N. Y. St. 719.

Liability by implication.—Although the statute does not in express words repeal the common-law rule that the husband is liable for the torts of the wife, it has wholly relieved married women from their common-law disability, and given them power to deal as if single, so that a married woman is liable for her torts. *Culmer v. In Missouri a husband is liable for his wife's slanders and torts committed out of his presence during coverture, regardless of Rev. St. (1889) §§ 6864, 6868–6870, making married women femes sole respecting their property, as section 6870 releases the common-law liability of the husband for the wife's antenuptial torts only. Taylor v. Pullen, 152 Mo. 434, 53 S. W. 1086.

A statute will not be deemed to exempt a husband from the common-law liability for his wife's torts unless it expressly so declares. Quick v. Miller, 103 Pa. St. 67.

she is presumed to be coerced by him when committing a criminal act in his presence, immediate or constructive,⁹⁰ and unless this presumption is rebutted, he alone, in such cases, will be legally responsible.⁹¹ For crimes committed by her when living apart from her husband,⁹² or voluntarily committed by her in his absence,⁹³ or committed in his presence when under no coercion or restraint from him,⁹⁴ her coverture is no defense.

b. For Crime of Husband. A wife is not responsible for the crime of her husband;⁹⁵ but for the act of her husband as her agent, as for example in the illegal sale of liquors, she is liable.⁹⁶

2. RESPONSIBILITY OF HUSBAND FOR WIFE'S CRIMES. The husband is liable for his wife's criminal acts committed by his bidding, or in his presence and under his coercion.⁹⁷ Likewise where she, in his presence and with his knowledge, commits an act not malum in se, he may be found guilty,⁹⁸ as where, with the husband's knowledge or consent, the wife sells intoxicating liquors contrary to stat-

Indictment need not deny coercion.—In an indictment against a feme covert for receiving stolen goods, it is unnecessary to show that at the time she was not acting under the coercion of her husband. State v. Nelson, 29 Me. 329. And see State v. Clark, 9 Houst. (Del.) 536, 33 Atl. 310.

Greater activity of wife not the test.—A charge that if the wife was drawn into the crime by her husband, but was the more active of the two, she is equally guilty, is erroneous, as her guilt would depend, not on the fact of her activity, but whether that activity was voluntary or caused by coercion of her husband. State v. Houston, 29 S. C. 108, 6 S. E. 943.

Coercion of wife a question of fact see State v. Hendricks, 32 Kan. 559, 4 Pac. 1050; State v. Parkerson, 1 Strobb. (S. C.) 169; Reg. v. Baines, 19 Cox C. C. 524, 64 J. P. 408, 69 L. J. Q. B. 681, 82 L. T. Rep. N. S. 724.

ute.⁹⁹ If such sales are made by her in his house, even in his absence, and even contrary to his wishes, he may be held guilty, since it is his duty to control or prevent the same.¹

3. JOINT RESPONSIBILITY OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. If the wife voluntarily joins with her husband in committing a crime, both are equally guilty,² and where, without coercion on his part, she engages with her husband in the commission of a felony, and murder is committed by the husband in connection with the other crime, the wife is also guilty.³ Husband and wife may be jointly indicted and convicted for a crime,⁴ or under a joint indictment one may be acquitted and the other convicted.⁵ Where, however, the offense is joint, it has been held that the wife cannot be convicted unless the husband is also.⁶

4. COERCION. Where a criminal act is committed by a married woman in her husband's presence, she is generally presumed to be acting under his influence or coercion.⁷ From this general rule the common law excepts heinous crimes, such presence, although not proof to convict him, is admissible "to illustrate the character of the sale" in the particular case, and to show that it was made by authority of the husband. Hensly v. State, 52 Ala. 10.

Statutes.—The presumption of coercion because of the presence of the husband no longer exists in Arkansas, where by statute the wife is not excused, unless it is made to appear affirmatively "from all the facts and circumstances of the case that violence, threats, commands or coercion were used." Edwards v. State, 27 Ark. 493; Freel v. State, 21 Ark. 212. By statute in Georgia the wife is not excused for a criminal act done in the presence of her husband, unless "violent threats, commands and coercion were used by him." Bell v. State, 92 Ga. 49, 18 S. E. 186. And in Kansas, under the laws removing the disabilities of married women, and in view of the changed conditions of society, it is declared that there is no reason for the existence of the presumption. State v. Hendricks, 32 Kan. 559, 4 Pac. 1050. In Nebraska a married woman falsely testifying as treason,⁸ murder,⁹ and possibly robbery,¹⁰ no presumption of coercion existing as to them. Certain other offenses also which from their character are generally committed by women, such as keeping a house of prostitution, are not presumed to be committed under marital coercion.¹¹ It is not necessary that the presence of the husband should be actual or immediate;¹² his constructive presence is sufficient.¹³ It has been held that the husband need not be in the same room with his wife,¹⁴ or even in the same house,¹⁵ provided he is sufficiently near to exert a present or immediate influence.¹⁶ This presumption is a rebuttable one and may in the presence of her husband is subject to the penalties of perjury. Smith v. Meyers, 54 Nebr. 1, 74 N. W. 277. And a conviction under an indictment for libel contained in a letter will be set aside where the testimony shows that, although the letter was signed in defendant's name, it was wholly written by his wife, and that he did not cause it to be written, or aid in the composition. Mills v. State, 18 Nebr. 575, 26 N. W. 354. In some states, however, it has been held that the general Married Women's Acts do not change the rule. Com. v. Wood, 97 Mass. 225; Neys v. Taylor, 12 S. D. 488, 81 N. W. 901. In Kansas, however, it is held that the laws of the state presume that all persons of mature age and sound mind act upon their own volition. Consequently there is no presumption that a wife who unites with her husband in the commission of a crime acts under his coercion; but the question whether she so acted is for the jury. State v. Hendricks, 32 Kan. 559, 4 Pac. 1050.

No presumption of coercion arises from the mere fact of marriage. Brown v. Atty.-Gen., [1898] A. C. 234, 18 Cox C. C. 658, 67 L. J. P. C. 7, 77 L. T. Rep. N. S. 414; Reg. v. Baines, 19 Cox C. C. 524, 64 J. P. 408, 69 L. J. Q. B. 681, 82 L. T. Rep. N. S. 724.

Mistress.—Although a wife who is present, aiding, abetting, or assisting her husband in the commission of an offense is presumed to be under his control, and is therefore not responsible, such presumption does not extend to a mistress. Brandon's Case, 4 City Hall Rec. (N. Y.) 140.

Mere reputation of cohabitation.—The fact of marriage must be established, since mere reputation of cohabitation is not sufficient unless from such reputation the jury finds that marriage existed. Davis v. State, 15 Ohio 72, 45 Am. Dec. 559. And see State v. Barnes, 48 La. Ann. 460, 19 So. 251.

The presumption probably extends to an invalid marriage. Reg. v. Good, 1 C. & K. 185, 47 E. C. L. 185.

Robbery not excepted.—Where a wife, participating with her husband in a robbery, throttled the victim while her husband and a confederate rifled his pockets, the jury would be justified in finding that she did not act under her husband's coercion, but was independently guilty. *People v. Husband sick in adjoining room.—The fact that at the time of an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor by a married woman her husband was lying sick on a bed in a room adjoining that in which the sale was made, the door between the rooms being open, does not raise a conclusive presumption of law that she was acting under his coercion. Com. v. Gormley, 133 Mass. 580.

15. Conolly's Case, 2 Lew. C. C. 229, where a wife went from house to house uttering base coin, her husband accompanying her, but remaining outside, and it was held that she was not guilty. And see in general Com. v. Daley, 148 Mass. 11, 18 N. E. 579.

16. State v. Fertig, 98 Iowa 139, 67 N. W. 87; Com. v. Daley, 148 Mass. 11, 18 N. E. 579; Com. v. Munsey, 112 Mass. 287; Com. v. Burk, 11 Gray (Mass.) 437; Rex v. Archer, 1 Moody C. C. 143. But see State v. Shee, 13 R. I. 535, holding that the mere proximity of a husband not actually present when his wife commits a minor offense will not raise be overcome by proof that in fact no coercion existed.¹⁷ The state may introduce evidence to show that the wife acted voluntarily, where she is the accused.¹⁸

V. WIFE'S SEPARATE ESTATE.

A. What Constitutes—1. DEFINITION. A wife's separate estate is that from which the dominion and control of the husband is excluded, and from which he is to derive no benefit by reason of the marital relation.¹⁹ It may be equitable or statutory, according to the mode of its creation.²⁰

2. EQUITABLE SEPARATE ESTATE—a. Definition. A married woman's equitable separate estate is a trust securing property to her sole and separate use during coverture, recognized and upheld by courts of equity, to the exclusion, for the purposes of such use, of the husband's general common-law rights.²¹ It is thus distinguished from an ordinary equitable estate, or trust for a married woman, to which the common-law marital rights of the husband attach.²² in her favor the presumption that she acts under his coercion, and that any inference of coercion from such proximity is a question of fact.

An instruction that if the husband was near enough to see, hear, or know that defendant was making unlawful sales, she was not liable, is too favorable to her, and was properly refused. Com. v. Daley, 148 Mass. 11, 18 N. E. 579.

Wife delivering revolver to husband in jail.

—Where a wife whose husband was incarcerated after conviction for murder, at his instigation procured a revolver, which she carried and delivered to him in the jail, such offense was committed in the husband's presence, although he was not present when she procured and conveyed the revolver to the jail; and hence there was nothing to rebut the presumption that the crime was committed at the husband's instigation, so as to relieve the wife from liability. State v. Miller, 162 Mo. 253, 62 S. W. 692, 85 Am. St. Rep. 498.

Statements of wife.—Defendants being husband and wife, evidence that the wife, in the absence of the husband, offered to produce the abortion for the deceased, and stated that she had helped other women out of similar trouble, is admissible to show that she acted without the coercion of her husband. Hatchard v. State, 79 Wis. 357, 48 N. W. 380.

Burden of proof.—Where an offense has been committed by a husband and wife jointly, and the presumption is that she acted under coercion, the burden of proof is on the commonwealth to show no coercion on the part of the husband. Com. v. Conrad, 28 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 310.

Equitable and statutory separate estates distinguished see Short v. Battle, 52 Ala. 456. The only difference between the separate estate of a married woman as formerly recognized by courts of equity, and her title to property acquired or held under the New York acts of 1848 and 1849, is that the former is an equitable, and the latter a legal, estate or title. *Colvin v. (iii) NECESSITY FOR TRUSTEE. It was at one time questioned whether in connection with the creation of an equitable separate estate a trustee was not necessary;⁴² but it is now the settled rule that in order to create such an estate no trustee need be expressly named,⁴³ although for the sake of prudence and safeguard a third person as trustee may be often advisable.⁴⁴ If no trustee is appointed, the husband, when such a trust is created, may be considered her trustee,⁴⁵ and when a gift or conveyance is made directly by the husband to the wife, it can be made effective in equity only by holding the husband as trustee.⁴⁶ In case of the unfitness of the husband to serve as trustee, the court may appoint some third person,⁴⁷ and the wife herself may properly object to her husband's acting in such capacity.⁴⁸ The matter of a trustee may be regulated by statute.⁴⁹

d. Creation by Wife. By agreement with her intended husband, a woman may, from her own property, make an antenuptial conveyance to a trustee, the same to be for her separate use.⁵⁰ Such a conveyance, however, without the prospective husband's knowledge, may be a fraud upon his marital rights,⁵¹ the question of fraud being one of fact in each case.⁵² Likewise a man and woman

Statute of limitations.—It was stipulated in an antenuptial agreement that the husband should reduce such agreement to writing after marriage. The husband, however, failed to do so, but nevertheless held and used the wife's property as her separate estate during the greater part of the coverture. It was held that, although the statute of limitations would run against the wife as to her right to compel the husband to create written evidence of the contract, yet, until the husband asserted title to the property in himself and ceased to hold it as hers, the statute would not run against her equitable title to it, so as to bar a recovery of the property itself. *Bradley v. The words "for me and in my name" in a power of attorney from a wife to her husband nuptial settlement by a husband on his wife the use of technical words, necessary in conveyances from third persons, is not required to create a separate estate.⁶²

f. Transactions Between Husband and Wife. By mere agreement or contract between husband and wife the latter's statutory separate estate cannot be converted into equitable separate property so as to give her power to charge it with her debts;⁶³ and where a judicial decree is necessary to enable the wife to claim separate property as a sole trader, the assent of the husband will not alone be sufficient to make the goods and profits of her business her separate estate.⁶⁴ His own marital rights, however, the husband may waive, and to this extent make her property separate.⁶⁵ The husband and wife may also by joint deed convey her general estate to a trustee for her separate use.⁶⁶ A statutory provision that a married woman's separate estate must be acquired from "a person other than her husband" has been held not to apply to property received in good faith from the husband in exchange for her own property.⁶⁷

g. Duration. The wife's equitable separate estate ceases upon her death, and if the husband survives her his common-law rights, in the absence of statute, then attach,⁶⁸ unless by the terms of the instrument creating the estate other disposition of it is made.⁶⁹ It also terminates on the death of the husband⁷⁰ or on the rendition of a decree of divorce.⁷¹

h. Revival Upon Subsequent Marriage. By the English rule a trust as a separate estate may be created for a single woman, the same, if undisposed of by her, to come into operation upon her marriage,⁷² and upon dissolution of her marriage to revive upon a subsequent marriage.⁷³ This rule has been recognized authorizing him to collect her share of an intestate's estate are not sufficient to create a separate estate in favor of the wife. Turton v. Turton, 6 Md. 375.

in some states in this country,⁷⁴ but in other states the courts have held the contrary.⁷⁵

1. Effect of Statutes. General property acts relating to married women have not destroyed their equitable separate estates.⁷⁶ An equitable separate estate may be created, although the statute also provides for a statutory separate estate.⁷⁷

3. STATUTORY SEPARATE ESTATE — a. Definition and Nature. A statutory separate estate is an estate made separate by statute.⁷⁸ In distinction from a married woman's separate estate under a trust recognized only by courts of equity, property rights secured to married women by legislation are commonly referred to as the wife's statutory separate estate.⁷⁹

b. Married Woman's Property Acts — (i) IN GENERAL. In all the American states,⁸⁰ and also in England,⁸¹ statutes have been passed modifying or destroying the husband's common-law rights in the property of his wife, and making such property, with varying details as to the control of, and contractual rights over, the same, the separate property of the wife.

(ii) CONSTITUTIONALITY. The vested rights which a husband has in the property of his wife cannot be disturbed by legislation,⁸² and according to the

In Alabama the earlier cases distinguished between the two kinds of separate estates, holding that equitable separate estates were independent of the statute which gave the husband the control of the wife's statutory estate. The cases of Molton v. Martin, 43 Ala. 651; Glenn v. Glenn, 47 Ala. 204, and Denechaud v. Berrey, 48 Ala. 591, "abolished the distinction between the two classes of separate estates, . . . except where the legal title was vested in a trustee, within the statute." Lippincott v. Mitchell, 94 U. S. 767, 24 L. ed. 315.

Estates not coexistent in same land.—A married woman cannot at the same time have in the same land both an equitable separate estate and a statutory separate estate. Clifton v. Anderson, 47 Mo. App. 35.

78. Effect of statute.—Since the adoption of the Alabama Revised Code, all the property of a married woman which has accrued to her is her separate estate. This statute overturned the old system, and made the wife capable of owning property independent of her husband. This law is thoroughly repugnant to the whole theory of the common law on the subject of the wife's property. Stone v. Gazzam, 46 Ala. 269.

Legal estate.—Speaking of the New York statute, the court said: "It is true that the [wife's] property is thus converted into a legal estate, but it is none the less a separate estate, independent of the husband." Colvin v. Currier, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 371.

The provisions of the Alabama code which speak of the separate estates of married women relate to their estates made separate by law. Fleming v. Glimmer, 35 Ala. 62. And see McMillan v. Peacock, 57 Ala. 127.

better opinion his right to reduce her choses in action to his possession is such a right, and cannot be removed by a subsequent statute.⁸³ There is no constitutional objection, however, to a statute providing that a married woman shall have the sole and separate use of property afterward acquired by her;⁸⁴ and a statute providing that the future rents or profits of any property then owned by the wife shall not be subject to the debts or contracts of her husband does not impair any vested right of the husband, or infringe any right belonging to his creditors.⁸⁵

(iii) CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL. The general provisions of married women's property acts do not of themselves change the general status or relation of husband and wife;⁸⁶ and the personal disabilities of married women are not removed by such general statutes,⁸⁷ although they entirely destroy the husband's common-law rights in his wife's property.⁸⁸ A statute, however, providing that the property of the wife shall be free from her husband's debts does not deprive him of all his marital rights.⁸⁹ As a general rule statutes conferring property rights upon married women, in so far as they are in derogation of the common law, are to be strictly construed, and such rights are to be limited to those expressly mentioned in the statute.⁹⁰ Thus her separate estate will be confined to such classes of property as are expressly specified.⁹¹ On the other hand, it has been held that, in order to secure and enforce the rights actually given, so that the intent and purpose of the statute may be carried out, a liberal construction will generally be employed.⁹² Where, however, property rights are conferred upon married women residing within the jurisdiction, the provisions of the statute will not apply to a husband and wife residing without the state.⁹³

(IV) RETROACTIVE OPERATION. Under a constitutional provision that no retroactive laws shall be enacted, a legislature cannot take away from a husband his vested rights in the property of his wife.⁹⁴ Moreover, in general, statutes creating a separate estate in the wife, and thereby abolishing the husband's common-law rights in her property, will not be construed retroactively, unless the legislative intent be clearly indicated; ⁹⁵ but this rule does not prevent the statutes being held applicable to property acquired by the wife after the passage of the statute. ⁹⁶ Statutes concerning a married woman's liability for debt are not retroactive so as to apply to debts contracted before the act. ⁹⁷ Statutes providing new remedies or changing the procedure may apply retroactively, since no vested right in property is thereby affected. ⁹⁸

c. Necessity For Particular Words to Create Estate. A statutory separate estate may be created by an ordinary conveyance, no specific words that the same is for the married woman's sole and separate use being necessary, ⁹⁹ since while the equitable separate estate is created by the terms of the instrument, the legal separate estate is created by the statute. ¹

Income of existing trust as property "thereafter acquired."—Under Conn. Act (1878), providing that all property thereafter acquired by a married woman shall be her separate property, the income paid to a married woman under a trust existing at the passage of the act and providing for the payment to her of such income annually is not property acquired after the passage of the act. Vail v. Vail, 49 Conn. 52.

Property not claimed by husband till after passage.—A married woman, prior to 1871, purchased personal property with money derived from her father's estate. The property remained in the joint possession of the wife and her husband, he exercising acts of ownership over it, but laying no claim to it until 1876, when it was seized for his debts. It was held that the wife was entitled to the benefit of the Married Woman's Act of June 1, 1871, § 1 (Nebr. Comp. St. c. 53), securing to the wife her separate property. Deck v. Smith, 12 Nebr. 389, 11 N. W. 852.

Power to deal with separate estate may be retroactive. Since the Kentucky act of 1894, abolishing the distinction previously existing between the separate and the general estate of a married woman, merely enlarges her powers over it without affecting the title thereto, it applies to the estate of a married woman acquired before its passage. Morrison v. Morrison, 113 Ky. 507, 68 S. W. 467, 69 S. W. 1102, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 786.

purpose of such statutes being to protect the wife's estate against the creditors of the husband.³ Money, however, kept in a wife's possession has been held not to be included within the requirements of such a statute.⁴ In some cases it has been held that actual notice of the wife's ownership renders unnecessary any notice by a formal record.⁵ The wife's property is liable for the debts of the husband contracted before the filing of the required schedule,⁶ and even if the debt was contracted before he obtained possession of her property, nevertheless, if the property is afterward left in his hands, and no inventory is filed, it will be liable.⁷ Where a woman, prior to her marriage, filed a schedule, accompanied by a notice of her intended husband's name, it has been held sufficient,⁸ as has the ordinary recording of a chattel mortgage executed by her,⁹ or of a mortgage due her,¹⁰ or of a deed,¹¹ so far as such property is concerned. However, the recording of a will in which property is bequeathed to the wife has been held an insufficient compliance with the statute.¹² Upon a second marriage the property must be registered anew.¹³ Failure to file such inventory or schedule does not prejudice the wife's title,¹⁴ or give the husband any authority to dispose of it;¹⁵ and it has been held that where the wife sues for conversion of separate property the only effect of the failure to file the schedule is to cast on her the burden of proving her ownership.¹⁶

b. Equitable Separate Estate. The wife's separate equitable estate may include property settled upon her by either an antenuptial or a post-nuptial agreement, and may consist of her own property, or that of her husband, or property obtained from a third person.²⁴ It may be property owned by her at the time of marriage or after-acquired property.²⁵ It may embrace gifts from her husband,²⁶ or from a third person,²⁷ and may arise by way of conveyance,²⁸ devise,²⁹ or bequest.³⁰ The property may consist of the proceeds of sales,³¹ rents, profits, and increase from her separate property,³² or investments made therefrom.³³ Her earnings, with her husband's consent, may also become her separate equitable estate.³⁴

"Made lands."—A married woman owned land on the East river in the city of New York, which the city corporation directed to be extended out into the river, in pursuance of the city charter and the laws of the state, and her husband caused the designated portion to be filled up accordingly. It was held that the land thus regained belonged to the wife in fee. Dickinson v. Codwise, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 214.

d. Wearing Apparel.⁴⁰ The wearing apparel of a married woman purchased during coverture with her husband's money,⁴¹ or furnished by him as his marital duty,⁴² does not generally become the wife's separate property, but belongs to him as against her creditors. She may, however, retain as her paraphernalia such wearing apparel as she may have at his death.⁴³ Gifts, such as jewels and ornaments, from a third person to a married woman are, however, considered a part of her separate estate.⁴⁴

e. Life Insurance. A policy of insurance on the husband's life for the benefit of the wife becomes her separate property,⁴⁵ regardless of the fact that his marital Purchases from separate property.—In England it is held that the property in wearing apparel bought for herself by a wife living with her husband out of money settled to her separate use before marriage and paid to her by the trustees of the settlement vests by law in the husband, and it is liable to be taken in execution for his debts. Carne v. Brice, 8 Dowl. P. C. 884, 10 L. J. Exch. 28, 7 M. & W. 183.

Wife's right upon separation.—In trover by one for the conversion of his wife's clothing, disposed of by her after a separation agreed on, he having permitted her to take her clothing with her, it appeared that among the articles of clothing was a shawl paid for by wool from sheep given by the husband to his wife. It was held that the shawl was not the husband's property. Delano v. Blanchard, 52 Vt. 578.

However, it has been said that the character and use of articles forming the paraphernalia of a wife and actually used by her, although purchased by the husband, imply a personal gift, and the separate possession, in the absence of other facts contradicting this inference, establish her title. *Whiton v. Express agreement for sole use of wife.—

A policy of insurance purporting on its face to have been effected by a married woman on the life of her husband, wherein the company, in consideration of annual premiums to be paid by her, agrees to insure the life of the husband for the sole use of the wife, to be paid her at his decease, and, if not living, then to her children for their use, is prima facie the sole property of the wife, and as such is not affected by Ohio Rev. St. § 3628, which relates to insurance effected by the husband for the benefit of his widow and children. Weber v. Paxton, 48 Ohio St. 266, 26 N. E. 1051.

Murder of husband by wife.—A husband insured his life for the benefit of his wife under the provisions of the English Married Women's Property Act, § 11. He died and his wife was convicted of his murder. It was held that the effect of the statute was to create a trust in favor of the wife in respect of the sum insured, but that inasmuch as it was against public policy for the wife to benefit by her own criminal act, the trust in her favor failed, and a resulting trust arose in favor of the deceased husband's estate, in respect of which his executors were entitled to recover the sum insured from the insurance company. Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assoc., [1892] 1 Q. B. 147, 56 J. P. 180, 61 L. J. Q. B. 128, 66 L. T. Rep. N. S. 220, 40 Wkly. Rep. 230.

Policy as creating contingent interest.—Under Wis. Rev. St. (1898) § 2347, a policy of insurance taken out on any life for the benefit of a married woman, nothing being said as to who shall be the beneficiary in case she shall not survive, vests a contingent interest in the fund in her, which is her separate property, free from the control of the hus-rights are not expressly excluded.⁴⁶ Such a policy is assignable by her the same as any other chose in action, provided she has general authority to transfer her property.⁴⁷ Statutes, however, sometimes fix a maximum limit of the amount of such insurance that shall inure to her separate use.⁴⁸

f. Property Acquired in Another Jurisdiction. Property acquired by a wife as her separate estate does not lose its character upon the removal of the husband and wife to another jurisdiction,⁴⁹ since vested rights are not disturbed by a change of residence.⁵⁰ The transfer accordingly of personal property from one state to another does not change an equitable estate in it to a legal one.⁵¹ Some states, however, have held that a wife's choses in action, unreduced to the husband's possession in a former domicile, where he might so have reduced them, may become, by the laws of another state to which the spouses have removed, the wife's separate property.⁵² The remedy, however, in connection with a separate estate acquired in another jurisdiction, will be governed by the laws of the state where the action is brought.⁵³ In order to protect the wife's rights, it may be necessary to show that the laws of the state where the property was acquired were complied with.⁵⁴

5. TIME AND MANNER OF ACQUISITION—a. Property of Wife at Time of Marriage. The statutes of the different states relating to the property rights of married women generally provide that property owned by the wife at the time of her marriage shall remain her separate estate as if she were sole.⁵⁵ The per-band, and beyond the reach of the creditors of any one. Ellison v. Straw, 116 Wis. 207, 92 N. W. 1094.

Assignment of policy to wife by insolvent husband.—Where an insolvent husband voluntarily assigned to his wife insurance on his life, payable to himself and his assigns, and also surrendered a policy, and had the same reissued in her favor, the insurance being made payable to her in each case, without saying "to her sole and separate use," Mo. Rev. St. (1889) § 5851, authorizing her in her own name to insure his life for her sole use, applies so as to entitle her to such insurance to the extent to which, under such section, it is exempt from the claims of his creditors where he pays the premiums, the Married Woman's Law (Act March 25, 1875), entitling a wife to take transfers of personal property for her sole and separate use without the intervention of a trustee, and without technical words of limitation. *Judson v. Trust to support prosecutrix in bastardy proceedings.—A trust fund to secure the support of the prosecutrix in bastardy proceedings and her child is property which may be the separate estate of a married woman, under Wis. English statute; title accruing after the act.—The English Married Woman's Property Act (1882), § 5, applies only to property of a married woman her title to which accrues for the first time after the commencement of the act; it does not therefore include an interest to which she was contingently entitled before, but which falls into possession after, the act. In re Tench, L. Ilgenfritz*, 49 Mo. App. 127.

Presumptions.—The mere fact of a gift of a check to a wife does not raise a presumption that the husband appropriated it, sufficient to support an action against his estate, thirty years after his wife's death, for an ac-

Reservation does not alter nature of transaction.—A transfer of an icehouse, made by a judgment creditor purchasing it at a bona fide sheriff's sale to the debtor's wife, with the reservation of so much ice as he might want during the year, is a gift, and such reservation is no consideration to convert the transfer into a sale; and the wife, who subsequently became a sole trader, may hold the property as against the husband and his creditors. Hess v. Brown, 111 Pa. St. 124, 2 Atl. 416.

Title in wife no presumption of gift.—From the sole fact that the deed to property acquired during the marriage relationship is taken in the wife's name, no presumption arises that it was intended that she should take it as her separate property, and as a gift. *Caffey v. (ii) GIFT FROM HUSBAND. The husband may, by gift to his wife, unless such gift is paraphernalia,⁶⁶ create in equity a separate estate in her.⁶⁷ The evidence of such gift must, however, clearly show the husband's intention to divest himself of the property,⁶⁸ although the conveyance need not contain the technical

Purchase of real property with gift.—Real estate of a married woman acquired by purchase with money, the gift of her husband, and conveyed to her by an ordinary deed, with nothing on its face to indicate that she was to have a separate estate therein, is not chargeable, as equitable separate estate, with payment of a note signed by her while holding it. Powell v. Scott, 43 Mo. App. 206 [following Nicholson v. Flynn, 24 Mo. App 571].

Husband may create separate estate by waiver of rights.—Horses given by her father to a wife, which were always treated as her absolute property and never claimed by the husband, are the separate property of the wife. White v. Clasby, 101 Mo. 162, 14 S. W. 180.

Joint gift to husband and wife.—The mere fact that a conveyance is made by a father to his daughter and her husband for no other consideration than that of love and affection will not deprive the husband of his joint interest in the estate. Goodin v. Goodin, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 249.

Marriage not de jure.—A gift from a father to his daughter, who has married a man who had another wife then living and undivorced vests the property in the daughter; but otherwise if the gift has been direct to the sup-

Deposit in savings bank in wife's name.—A husband cannot maintain an action against a savings bank for its refusal to pay to him money which he has deposited in his wife's words required where the gift is from a third person,⁶⁹ and of course it must be free from fraud upon creditors.⁷⁰ The husband also may hold himself as trustee of the personal property of the wife which at common law became his upon marriage.⁷¹ In connection with the wife's statutory estate she may likewise generally acquire property by gift from her husband,⁷² unless the statute excludes property acquired from him.⁷³ When the wife may acquire by gift from her husband, improvements by him upon her lands will, if such be his intention, pass to her by way of gift.⁷⁴

women, property devised or bequeathed in the ordinary way to a wife becomes her statutory separate estate.⁷⁶ Where, however, the statute specifies what kind of property shall become the wife's separate estate, the rule of strict construction applies,⁷⁷ and accordingly a provision that "stocks and bonds of any kind given by a parent to a daughter with the proceeds thereof" shall become her separate estate does not include a bequest to a daughter, although such personality was derived from dividends on stocks and bonds.⁷⁸ A separate estate may, by proper words, be created by will in favor of a single woman, which will be good against her future husband's marital rights, although no particular marriage is contemplated when the estate is given;⁷⁹ but a devise to a single woman which does not exclude a future husband's rights will not create an equitable estate to her sole and separate use upon her subsequent marriage.⁸⁰ An ordinary bequest, however, to a single woman, may, by antenuptial agreement with her husband, be secured to her sole and separate use,⁸¹ and the husband may also waive his marital rights by post-nuptial agreement,⁸² or by his desertion.⁸³

(II) CONSTRUCTION. In order to create an equitable separate estate by will, it is necessary, as in the case of any other instrument purporting to vest such an estate,⁸⁴ that the testator's intent clearly appear by the employment of sufficient words, although no particular form is required.⁸⁵ The courts have at times, however, taken into consideration the circumstances, and have given effect to an intention made clear by the light of the same.⁸⁶ If a bequest is made to husband and wife jointly "and to the survivor of them," no separate estate is created under a statute making property that comes to her by devise or bequest her separate property;⁸⁷ and the term "bequeathed," under circumstances showing knowledge of technical terms by the testator, will be limited to personal property in connection with the creation of a separate estate.⁸⁸ By the general principle that the married women's property acts are not retroactive,⁸⁹ the husband's marital rights will attach to a legacy to which the wife's title accrued before the passing of a statute securing her property to her.⁹⁰ Where, however, a remainder interest, although devised prior to the statute, does not vest by the death of the life-tenant until after the passing of the statute, the same becomes separate estate.⁹¹

(iii) DEVISE OR BEQUEST IN TRUST. A devise or bequest may be made in trust for the sole and separate use of a married woman,⁹² provided that the intention of such separate use in trust clearly appears.⁹³ A subsequent clause in a will has, however, been included with a preceding clause creating a separate use trust, although the second clause was not for such purpose sufficient in itself.⁹⁴ When a separate use trust is created in the proceeds of the sale of lands, the same is not changed because the beneficiary elects to take the land instead of the proceeds;⁹⁵ and such a trust does not fail because the will names no trustee.⁹⁶ The savings from the income of a trust estate paid to the wife have been held, by force of statute, although passed subsequently to her marriage, to be her statutory separate estate, free from any vested rights of the husband.⁹⁷

Before the distribution is made, a share is "property,"⁹⁹ and where the statute specifies as her separate estate "property owned at the time of her marriage," a share to which she is entitled upon marriage is a part of her separate estate, although not distributed until after her marriage.¹ Under a statute specifying property acquired by inheritance or distribution, it has been held that a share paid after the statute takes effect becomes separate property, although the wife was entitled to the same before the statute was passed.² Under a statute providing that married women may become seized or possessed of property, real or personal, by distribution, the word "distribution" applies as well to realty derived by descent as to personalty received from the estate of an ancestor.³ Even if the husband has any marital rights in property inherited by his wife, he may waive them, as by placing the same in trust for her,⁴ or by agreeing to hold it as her trustee,⁵ or by other acts evidencing an intention to treat it as her separate property.⁶

e. Property Conveyed to or For Use of Wife — (1) CONVEYANCE TO WIFE IN GENERAL. A married woman's equitable separate estate may be created by a conveyance to her using words showing an intent that she hold the property as her sole and separate estate,⁷ and such conveyance may be either in trust,⁸ or a direct conveyance.⁹ The sufficiency of the words used to show that the estate is for her separate use to the exclusion of the husband's marital rights has been

Husband using wife's distributive share as purchase-money.—Where a husband purchases property at an administrator's sale, and is allowed a credit on his purchase to the extent of his wife's distributive share of the estate, this is not an investment for the wife, but a conversion of her interest, and renders him her debtor for the amount. Lyne v. Wann, 72 Ala. 43.

Property inherited not within "demise or bequest"—A statute providing that a married woman may receive "by gift, grant, demise, or bequest" property to be held for her separate use does not include property which she inherits as an heir. Horner v. Gerner, 33 N. J. L. 387.

Illustration.—Where a husband took an absolute conveyance of land descended to his wife and sisters, gave his note to the wife for her interest, made payments on the note, and treated it as the wife's separate estate, the inference is that he intended to waive his marital rights in the land in consideration of the additional rights acquired by the conveyance; and equity therefore will see to the enforcement of the wife's claim. Hackett v. Moxley, 65 Vt. 71, 25 Atl. 898.

previously considered.¹⁰ Under married women's property acts, a statutory separate estate may be created by a conveyance to or for the wife,¹¹ and for the creation of the statutory estate no intention to create a separate estate need be expressed in the deed.¹² Whether the deed creates an equitable or a statutory separate estate depends therefore upon the language thereof,¹³ although in some states the statutes convert an equitable estate in trust into a legal estate.¹⁴ In the absence of a statute authorizing the creation of a statutory separate estate by ordinary conveyance, a deed which is ineffectual to create an equitable separate estate owing to the lack of such clearly expressed intention will convey an ordinary legal estate to the wife to which the husband's marital rights will attach.¹⁵

Trust but not a separate estate.—The words in a deed, "to J, trustee of M and her heirs and assigns," create a trust, but not a separate estate, which M, a married woman, could bind on her contracts as if she were sole. Warren v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 557.

Ineffectual conveyance, husband accepting trust.—Where a father, having executed in favor of his daughter an instrument which is ineffectual as a conveyance but of which fact he is ignorant, immediately after her marriage delivers property to the husband under the impression and belief that such instrument secures it to her sole and separate use, and the husband accepts it with full notice and under a similar belief, a trust arises in behalf of the wife which a court of equity will enforce. *Betts v. Under the laws of Vermont, which provide that neither the separate property of a wife nor its rents and profits shall be subject to the disposal of her husband or liable for his debts, but by which, as at common law, the husband is tenant by the curtesy of his wife's lands and entitled to their use unless they are limited to her separate use by the conveyance or the use is kept separate, a wife's lands held by her under a deed without limitation, occupied by the family, and farmed by her husband are not her separate property, and their products are assets of the husband's estate in bankruptcy. In re Rooney, 109 Fed. 601.

In Alabama an equitable separate estate is of much more value to a married woman than a statutory separate estate, since the husband has certain rights in the latter estate. It is therefore often important to ascertain whether the words of exclusion used in a deed are strong enough to create an equitable separate estate rather than a statutory one. In Lippincott v. Mitchell, 94 U. S. 767, 24 L. ed. 315, it was held that a conveyance of lands in Alabama to a married woman, "to have and to hold to the sole and proper use, benefit, and behoof of her, her heirs and assigns forever," vests in her a statutory separate estate, so that a mortgage of the lands executed by her and her husband to secure the payment of his debts is void. Conveyance to a trustee, resulting in an

An ordinary deed cannot, by parol, be changed into a deed creating an equitable separate estate.¹⁶

(II) CONVEYANCE FROM, OR AT REQUEST OF, HUSBAND. An equitable separate estate may be created in the wife by a direct conveyance from the husband,¹⁷ or a conveyance to her at his request by a third person.¹⁸ Such a direct conveyance from the husband does not require the same technicality of expression to create the separate estate as is necessary in conveyances from a third person.¹⁹ The conveyance to her may be for a consideration,²⁰ or, if free from fraud upon the husband's existing creditors, by way of gift.²¹ Property, however, purchased for the wife with money borrowed by the husband,²² or transferred to her by his voluntary conveyance when he is in debt,²³ may be liable for his creditors' claims. Under the statutes in some of the states, where a direct conveyance may be made from husband to wife, she may by such conveyance take a statutory separate estate;²⁴ and a conveyance to her by a third person through the husband's procurement may create such separate estate, either in connection with a consideration moving from her,²⁵ or by way of gift from the husband, when such a gift, under the statute, may become her separate property.²⁶ Where, however, the ordinary trust estate, will not exclude the husband's rights. Berry v. Williamson, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 245; White v. Sale, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 570; White v. White, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 264, 80 Am. Dec. 706.

Consummation of antenuptial agreement.—A conveyance of land in the usual form from husband to wife in consideration of an antenuptial contract, and which recited a consideration of love and affection, passed the title to the land to the wife, and vested in her a separate estate therein, notwithstanding the absence of any words evincing an intention to create a separate estate in the wife. Barnum v. Donaldson, 128 Mass. 169.

Conveyance for life with profits to separate use.—Where a husband conveys property to his wife, to have and to hold during her natural life, with power to use the profits to her separate use, the estate conveyed is an estate for life to the sole use of the wife. Viek v. Gower, 92 Tenn. 391, 21 S. W. 677.

statute provides that property acquired by the wife during marriage "in any other way than by gift or conveyance from her husband" shall be her separate property, she cannot, in such a case, derive from him by ordinary conveyance a legal separate estate.²⁷

(III) CONVEYANCE BY HUSBAND TO TRUSTEE FOR WIFE. A conveyance by the husband to a trustee for the sole and separate use of the wife will create in her an equitable estate,²⁸ and it seems that the husband himself may be the trustee.²⁹ So a joint conveyance by husband and wife to a trustee may convert the wife's general estate into her separate estate,³⁰ but not unless appropriate words are used to show an intention to create a separate estate.³¹ Under a conveyance for separate use she will take the property freed from his marital rights.³² While the intention to create the separate use should be clear, the circumstances may serve to establish it.³³

(IV) CONVEYANCE THROUGH THIRD PERSON. By the means of a third person as a medium, the husband may convey a legal title in lands to his wife,³⁴ and under statutory provisions such a title may inure to her as her separate estate.³⁵ It has been held, however, that where a husband cannot directly convey to his wife an indirect conveyance will not create a separate estate.³⁶

Mutual understanding that wife holds title for husband's benefit.—Where the title to land purchased is taken in the wife's name because the husband is an alien, and in pursuance of an arrangement between them that the husband should deal in real estate and the deeds thereof be taken in the wife's name, and the land is afterward sold by the husband for his own benefit under the same arrangement, the proceeds of the sale belong to him. *Dunn v. Dec. 559, holding that although no technical words were used to create a separate estate in the wife, yet where the property was conveyed in trust by her husband for her, and it appeared from extraneous evidence that a separation between the parties was intended, the property was her separate estate.

Particular words.—A conveyance by a husband in trust for the wife, and at her death to the issue of herself and husband, if any, and, if not, to her heirs, does not vest in her a separate estate. To vest a separate estate in her, it should be conveyed to her separate use, free from the control of the husband. Bowen v. Seabee, 2 Bush (Ky.) 112.

Effect of conveyance to wife in fee.—Defendant and her husband united in a deed containing a clause that it was in trust for defendant and for her sole and separate use, and providing further that the grantee should afterward convey to defendant in fee, which was done. It was held that defendant took an estate in fee simple, and not merely a separate use in the premises. Warden v. Lyons, 118 Pa. St. 396, 12 Atl. 408.

(v) TRANSFER OF NEGOTIABLE NOTES AND SECURITIES. Under statutes providing that the personal property of a married woman acquired during coverture shall be her separate estate, a negotiable security, transferred to her, such as a promissory note,³⁷ bond,³⁸ share of stock,³⁹ or mortgage,⁴⁰ constitutes such estate. And where a husband, as attorney for his wife, subscribes for stock in her name, it will be presumed that he intends the stock to be for her sole use.⁴¹ If, however, the statute prevents her from acquiring as her separate estate property proceeding from her husband, a note taken by the husband in the name of his wife, in payment of his property sold by him, will not inure to the wife, but remains his property.⁴²

f. Property Acquired by Husband in Trust For Wife—(i) IN GENERAL. Where the husband acquires possession of his wife's separate property otherwise than by gift,⁴³ he is deemed to hold it in trust for her.⁴⁴ So if, with money belonging to her separate estate, he purchases land, and without her consent takes title in his own name, a trust will result in her favor.⁴⁵ Her right moreover to pursue her money will fasten a trust on lands received by the husband

Sale of wife's farm and reinvestment of proceeds.—A husband sold his wife's farm, which was her separate property. With her consent he invested part of the proceeds in a farm, taking the deed to himself. After residing thereon two years, he, with her knowledge, exchanged it for another farm, taking the deed to himself. A portion of this farm was afterward sold by him, the family residing on the residue over a year. The wife, during all this time, set up no claim to either farm, or to the money invested in them. It was held that there was no resulting trust to her in either of the farms. McGinnis v.

in exchange for the lands originally bought by him with her funds.⁴⁶ The husband's bona fide assignees for value and without notice take free from the trust,⁴⁷ although the contrary rule prevails as to purchasers and others dealing with the land with notice.⁴⁸ Clear and convincing proof is required to show that the purchase-money belonged to the wife;⁴⁹ but if even a part of the purchase-price is paid with the wife's money, and title is taken by the husband without her consent, the husband will hold in trust for the wife to the extent of her interest.⁵⁰

(II) AGREEMENT BY HUSBAND OR EXPRESS TRUST. Whenever property is acquired by the husband under an express trust for the benefit of the wife, or upon his agreement to hold the same in trust for her, the property will generally become her separate estate.⁵¹ Such a trust may arise in connection with his declaration that he holds as trustee for her certain property of his own;⁵² and especially where, under an express agreement to invest or to buy for her benefit, he purchases property with her separate funds, taking legal title to himself;⁵³ or when, having purchased property in his own name with her money, he makes a

Purchase-money must be wife's separate property.—The facts that land purchased by a married man in his own name was paid for with the proceeds of chattels belonging to his wife before marriage and that he agreed to convey the land to her do not give her any title to the land, if these events occurred before the passage of the Illinois Married Woman's Act, since at common law the chattels of the wife became at marriage the property of the husband, and contracts between husband and wife were void. *Erringdale v. Reducing choses to possession in right of wife.—Where, after the Georgia act of 1866,

g. Property Purchased With Wife's Money.—(i) IN GENERAL. Property purchased with money from a married woman's separate estate generally becomes her separate property,⁵⁸ and as such it is not liable to her husband's creditors for his debts.⁵⁹ But a purchase by the husband with money acquired by the wife prior to the statute constituting such money her separate estate belongs to the husband.⁶⁰ If the wife loans her own money to her husband, and purchases with it are made by him without any agreement that they are to be hers, such property will be his, and liable for his debts.⁶¹ And the title to property, although bought on the request of the wife but on the husband's credit, will vest in him, although subsequently paid for with money borrowed by him from the wife.⁶² A recital in the deed from husband to wife that the purchase-price is paid from her separate estate is not conclusive thereof.⁶³

(ii) WHAT CONSTITUTES WIFE'S MONEY. The following considerations have been held to be money belonging to the wife's separate estate, and property purchased therewith has accordingly been held to be exempt from seizure by the husband's creditors: The proceeds of her labor given her by her husband;⁶⁴ her statutory separate earnings;⁶⁵ profits made by her from keeping boarders;⁶⁶

a husband reduced property to possession in the right of his wife, it became her separate estate, and he and his privies are estopped from denying her right thereto. Archer v. Guill, 67 Ga. 195.

Recognition of trust.—Money of a married woman was, in her husband's absence, invested in bank-stock by a friend and the certificate taken to the husband as her trustee, and he on his return recognized the trust, and paid over the dividends to her. erty.⁸¹ Under a statute giving her the same rights that the husband has to acquire and hold property, she may acquire a valid title by purchase.⁸² In some states the wife may acquire property by purchase from her husband,⁸³ and in connection with her separate trade or business she may purchase goods for the same.⁸⁴

(ii) PURCHASES ON CREDIT. When a married woman can acquire separate property by purchase, she can, by the weight of authority, purchase the same on credit.⁸⁵ Owing to the form of the statute, the distinction has been made, however, between credit extended to the wife's separate estate and credit given to her as an individual, it being held that a purchase made by her upon the credit of her separate estate becomes her separate property,⁸⁶ while if she has no separate estate property purchased upon her personal credit will not become her separate estate but will be subject to the husband's debts.⁸⁷ Goods bought by the husband on his wife's credit do not thereby become part of her statutory separate estate.⁸⁸

(iii) WIFE'S PURCHASES WITH HUSBAND'S MONEY. A purchase made by a married woman in her own name with money furnished by the husband will be presumed to be a settlement upon her,⁸⁹ in the absence of circumstances to the contrary.⁹⁰ The mere fact of a purchase with the husband's money does not make the property the wife's separate estate;⁹¹ but in the absence of fraud upon creditors, money given by the husband to the wife may be used by her in the purchase of property, which will be hers independent of the husband's debts.⁹² A purchase by the wife with a loan from her husband, if the loan was in good faith and repaid by her, makes the property purchased her separate estate.⁹³ No trust arises in favor of the husband from his payments made after the purchase.⁹⁴

(iv) PURCHASE FROM HUSBAND'S CREDITOR. In connection with purchases accruing to her separate estate, a married woman may acquire a valid title from the husband's assignee in bankruptcy,⁹⁵ or his mortgagee under a power of sale.⁹⁶ The husband's property may also be bought by her at a sheriff's sale thereof.⁹⁷

1. Proceeds of Separate Property—(i) IN GENERAL. The proceeds of the sale of the separate property, real or personal, of a married woman remain her separate estate,⁹⁸ and proceeds of property obtained from a former husband will, if treated as separate property by a subsequent husband, be exempt from the latter's debts.⁹⁹ If the marriage took place before the passage of the statute giving the wife her property as a separate estate, and thereafter the real estate is converted into personalty by consent of both husband and wife, the personalty is

ried woman's separate property becomes generally her separate property.¹¹ The fact that the husband by her authority makes the exchange does not affect the rule;¹² but where the husband retains in his possession property exchanged for other property belonging to the wife, the rights of bona fide creditors may prevail over the wife's equities.¹³

j. Rents, Profits, and Increase of Separate Property—(i) IN GENERAL. The rents, profits, income, interest, and increase of a married woman's separate property belong generally to her as an addition to her separate estate;¹⁴ and a statute securing to her the rents and profits of her lands includes by implication the profits of her personal property, since the increase of personalty is a natural right of its ownership.¹⁵ By the statutes of some states the husband has the right to the use of the rents and profits of the wife's statutory separate estate;¹⁶ but the man is not legally bound to labor for his creditors.²⁴ In some states, however, it is held that if a married woman advances her own separate money, and places it in the hands of her husband for the purpose of carrying on business, even in her name, the profits acquired by his labor and skill, together with the entire capital, are not the wife's separate property, but are liable for the husband's debts.²⁵ A few cases, while recognizing the general principle of the wife's right to make use of the husband's services in her business, yet hold that if the profits accruing through his skill are in excess of the expenses of the business and the family support, his creditors will in equity be entitled to a just apportionment of such surplus between the wife and themselves.²⁶

(iv) PROPERTY PURCHASED WITH RENTS AND PROFITS. Purchases made by or for the wife out of the rents and profits of her separate property become her separate property.²⁷ Even under a statute providing that the husband shall be entitled to the use of the wife's rents and profits, lands purchased, with the husband's consent, out of such profits are part of the wife's separate estate.²⁸ Where, however, through the husband's skill in the management of a business, the capital being furnished by the wife, and the husband assuming to be her agent, large profits are made and invested in real estate in the name of the wife, the real estate has been held to be the property of the husband, and liable for his debts.²⁹

(v) CROPS GROWN ON WIFE'S LAND. The crops grown on a wife's land which is her separate estate are her separate property, and as such protected against the creditors of the husband.³⁰ That the husband lives with her upon the Income accruing before and after wife's death.—A husband purchased land in his own name, partly with his own money, partly with the income accruing from his wife's estate before her death, and partly with income from her estate accruing after. It was held that her heirs could claim such part of the land as was represented by the income accruing from her estate before her death, that accruing after belonging to the husband as tenant by the curtesy. Robinson v. Payne, 58 Miss. 690.

Purchase by husband as apparent owner.—If a husband and wife live on her land, where he conducts the business of farming as if owner and without any agreement as to his compensation, a horse purchased by him with the proceeds of a crop raised on the land is subject to execution for his debts. Bryan v. Webb, 55 Ill. App. 674.

Purchase from profits of equitable separate estate.—If other property is purchased with the income of property held in trust for the exclusive use of the wife, and title thereto is taken to the trustee for the wife, and especially if the husband is cognizant of it, her right to the same may be protected against the marital rights of the husband, although no technical words creating a separate estate in her are contained in the deed. *Artope v. land and assists in its cultivation does not in itself vest the ownership of the crops in him;³¹ the husband may contribute his labor in raising a crop upon his wife's land without affecting her separate ownership of the same.³² Likewise the assistance of the minor children of the family may be used for the same purpose, and the crops produced on the lands of the wife by means of their help cannot be taken by the husband's creditors.³³ Where, however, the husband is by statute entitled to the use and profits of the wife's statutory separate estate, he will be entitled to the crops raised by him upon her land.³⁴

(VI) INCREASE OF ANIMALS. The increase of domestic animals belonging to a wife's statutory separate estate becomes a part of such estate;³⁵ and this is so although her live stock may be kept upon her husband's farm,³⁶ or the husband's labor may assist in the raising of her cattle.³⁷

k. Earnings of Wife—(i) IN GENERAL. Although the general property acts relating to married women do not change the common-law rule of the husband's right to the earnings of the wife,³⁸ yet statutes in most of the states provide that

The fact that a husband furnished his wife with money to assist in paying the price of a farm bought by her does not authorize his creditors to levy on the growing grain and other personalty on the farm. Phillips v. Hall, 160 Pa. St. 60, 28 Atl. 502.

Wife's earnings confused with husband's.—The law respecting the separate estate of married women was intended to protect their property and earnings, and not that of their husband's, against creditors; and when the earnings of a wife become so mixed with those of a husband that they cannot be separated, the husband cannot make a clear, distinct gift of her earnings to his wife, and they remain, as at common law, his property. Quidort v. Pergeaux, 18 N. J. Eq. 472. And see McCluskey v. Provident Sav. Inst., 103 Mass. 300; Kelly v. Drew, 12 Allen (Mass.) 107, 90 Am. Dec. 138.

Earnings derived from husband not included.—The rule of the common law that a husband, by virtue of the marital contract, is entitled to the earnings of the wife is superseded by statute, where the wife contracts for her services with any other person than her husband; and wages to which she is entitled under such a contract are her separate property, and cannot, as against her claim therefor, be reduced to possession by the husband. Turner v. Davenport, 63 N. J. Eq. 288, 49 Atl. 463.

Husband's consent may be necessary. In the absence of any consent or agreement, either express or implied, on the part of a husband that the earnings of his wife shall be retained by her as her separate estate, they belong to him. Roberts v. Haines, 112 Ga. 842, 38 S. E. 109.

Earnings as confined to individual labor.—A statute providing that the property acquired by a married woman during coverture by her labor shall not be liable for the debts of her husband does not limit the exemption to such property of a married woman as she acquires by manual labor actually performed by her, but includes the proceeds of a mining claim which she worked through her employee under a contract with another. *Elliott v. business, her earnings in connection with such business are her separate estate; ⁴¹ but such a statute does not secure to the wife her general earnings. ⁴² If, however, in the state in which she lives her earnings are her separate property, she may sue for the separate recovery of money so earned, even in another jurisdiction where her earnings would have belonged to the husband. ⁴³ Outside of statutory enactment, an antenuptial or post-nuptial agreement may of course provide that a wife's earnings shall be for her sole and separate use. ⁴⁴

(II) EARNINGS IN KEEPING BOARDERS. When the wife is entitled to her earnings as a part of her separate estate, she may keep boarders as an independent employment, and retain as her own property the proceeds thereof. ⁴⁵ A like rule applies when the husband relinquishes all claims to such profits. ⁴⁶ Generally, however, under the husband's right to the services of his wife, when a boarder is taken into the family, and the supplies are furnished by the husband, in the absence of proof of any special agreement, the money for board belongs to the husband; ⁴⁷ and when husband and wife are living together it is the presumption

Whether wife's services are for herself or for her husband a question of fact.—Under N. Y. Laws (1884), c. 381, permitting a wife to contract for her own benefit, it is not error for the court to refuse to hold absolutely that a husband cannot recover for his wife's services under a contract of employment, as it is a question of fact whether the husband made the contract, or whether it was made as a separate contract by the wife. *Holcomb v. Application of rule.—Where a wife during coverture, while living with her husband, earned money by sewing and washing, and by his consent bought two lots with the money, and the deed thereof was made to her, and she made improvements thereon, her husband's creditors have a right to subject such lots and improvements to the payment of their claims. *Bailey v. Rule not affected by fact of husband's assistance by labor.—Where a wife paid for property largely with her own labor, the fact that her husband contributed his labor toward the purchase will not give his subsequent creditors a claim against the property. King v. Wells, 106 Iowa 649, 77 N. W. 338.

become her separate estate by gift from the husband,⁵² and this waiver of his marital rights may also be presumed from his conduct.⁵³ Whether or not such gifts are valid against creditors depends upon the principles that determine fraudulent conveyances in general.⁵⁴ A husband cannot, to the prejudice of existing creditors, renounce his right to the services or earnings of the wife.⁵⁵ If the husband has made an express gift to the wife of her earnings, the fact that he purchases property in his own name with such earnings is not sufficient to overcome her right to the same.⁵⁶

1. Judgment or Damages Due to Wife—(1) INJURIES TO PERSON OR PROPERTY. Under a statute securing to a married woman property coming to her from any source, a right of action growing out of a personal injury to her is her separate property;⁵⁷ and, by weight of authority, under the statutes generally, damages due her for a tort to her person belong to her as her separate estate.⁵⁸ Where the wife's separate property is destroyed by the tort of a third person, any judgment she may recover therefor becomes her separate property;⁵⁹ and where the wife is entitled to sue in tort for the benefit of her separate estate, the husband cannot, without her consent, release her claim.⁶⁰ Damages for the

Not entitled to recover for loss of time from domestic duties.—In an action by a married woman to recover for a personal injury, where it appeared that a part of her time had been devoted to the discharge of the domestic duties in the household, an instruction which authorizes the jury to allow her for the loss of time sustained by reason of the injury is erroneous. *Wyandotte v. wrongful death of a husband belong to the separate property of the widow.⁶¹ Alimony awarded to a wife by a decree of divorce granted in her favor is not the property or separate estate of the wife, and cannot be subjected to debts contracted by her before the decree was rendered.⁶²

(11) PROPERTY TAKEN FOR PUBLIC USE. When lands belonging to the separate estate of a married woman are taken for public use, damages awarded for such taking belong to her.⁶³

(111) JOINT JUDGMENT. When damages claimed for a personal injury to the wife are her separate property, the fact that husband and wife join in bringing the action, and recover judgment in their joint names, does not reduce the claim to the husband's possession or make it liable for his debts.⁶⁴

m. Estoppel to Claim Property⁶⁵—(i) IN GENERAL. A married woman, in so far as her separate estate is concerned, may be estopped by record, deed, or conduct in connection with acts and contracts which she has the power to make,⁶⁶ but no estoppel arises in connection with a deed which is void because not executed according to the statute.⁶⁷

(ii) ESTOPPEL BY DEED. If a married woman, with her husband, executes a conveyance, she cannot have the land so conveyed declared to be her separate estate on the ground that she was ignorant of her rights, without proving that the purchaser had notice of her equity.⁶⁸ If, however, an assignment by a married woman is invalid because not in conformity with the statutory method, her consent to an assignment made subsequently by her assignee will not estop her from asserting the invalidity of her original assignment.⁶⁹ If, merely to release her dower, a married woman signs a mortgage deed of her lands, a recital in such deed that the land is subject to a prior mortgage will not amount to an equitable mortgage against her land, and will not enable the first mortgagee to enforce his claim against her.⁷⁰ Even before the passing of the statute creating her separate property, an assignment, valid in form, of an estate only contingent at the time will estop her from claiming the land from her assignee after it has vested in her by the statute.⁷¹ A general release of all claims against her husband, executed for valuable consideration after separation, will estop her from setting up against him a resulting trust in lands purchased with her money.⁷²

(iii) ESTOPPEL BY MATTER IN PAYS—(A) In General. If a married woman has no power to contract, she cannot in general be estopped by her invalid contract,⁷³ and some cases hold that the doctrine of estoppel in pays does not apply at all,

at common law, to persons not sui juris, including married women.⁷⁴ Where, however, a married woman has the sole and entire control of her separate property, and in this respect becomes sui juris, she may be estopped by her acts and declarations.⁷⁵ However, she may be estopped by her fraud separable from contract, even though she has no power to bind herself by contract.⁷⁶ As is true of all estoppels in pais, there must be some injury resulting from reliance upon the misrepresentation in order to estop a married woman from claiming her separate estate.⁷⁷

(B) Acquiescences, Laches, and Consent. Laches in acting to recover her separate estate in lands may estop a married woman.⁷⁸ By permitting her husband to use her separate property as his own, or by holding out to the world that he is the owner thereof, she will be estopped to claim it against his creditors whose claims arose while the property was so held and who relied upon such apparent ownership.⁷⁹ Under such circumstances she will not be permitted to show that her husband was merely her agent.⁸⁰ The credit, however, must have

Allowing property to remain in husband's name.—Where a husband appropriates his wife's separate property by purchasing land in his own name, and she allows the title to remain in his name till he sells the property, six years thereafter, she loses any right to the proceeds as her separate estate, there having been no promise at the time of the investment that title should be taken for her, although she supposed it would be so taken. Rosenbaum v. Davis, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1898) 48 S. W. 706.

Resulting trust.—A married woman may be estopped from asserting against her grantor's devisee her claims to an alleged resulting trust, where she has taken a life-estate in the property by a conveyance reciting that the grantor was the sole, legal, and equitable owner of the property, and has permitted such conveyance to remain unquestioned for more than twenty years. Laughlin

Wife subsequently taking title to herself.—If a wife permits the husband to take title to her lands, and to hold himself out to the world as the owner, and to contract debts on the credit of such ownership, she cannot afterward, by taking title to herself, withdraw them from the reach of his creditors. City Nat. Bank v. Hamilton, 34 N. J. Eq. 158.

Where a married woman indorses a blank mortgage and collateral bond, and permits her husband to make use of them for the purpose of raising money, she will be estopped from claiming them as her separate property as against a bank which took them in good faith by assignment from the husband. *Flanagan v. been extended in reliance upon the husband's ownership caused by some act of the wife;⁸¹ and if he is her agent in fact and buys property for her, his mere failure to disclose his agency will not estop her against his creditors who are not parties to the transaction.⁸² Money furnished the husband by the wife for the purpose of carrying on business ostensibly as his own will be subject to his debts, the wife being estopped from asserting her claims thereto.⁸³ If the wife willingly permits her property to be so mixed with the husband's that it cannot be distinguished, she will be estopped from claiming the same as against his creditors.⁸⁴ If the husband, with the wife's consent, purchases lands with her money in his own name, she cannot maintain an action to recover the money so paid;⁸⁵ and even though he receives the money for a specific purpose, and uses it without her knowledge to purchase land, she cannot recover it.⁸⁶

Notice through recorded title.—Making a lease as "authorized agent" for her husband by a married woman in whose name the record title has stood for eight years is not such a representation as to ownership as will estop her from claiming title against the notary acknowledging the lease, who two years afterward loans money to the husband, supposing him to own the lands. Laing v. Evans, 64 Nebr. 454, 90 N. W. 246.

Loose expressions by husband.—The fact that the husband of a married woman intrusted with the custody and care of her property sometimes, in her absence, speaks of the property as his own does not estop her from claiming the property when seized on execution for the debts of her husband. Reed v. Kimsey, 98 Ill. App. 364.

Joint possession by husband and wife.—A married woman who is in joint possession of her land with her husband under an unrecorded deed to her is not estopped from setting up her title as against judgment creditors of her husband whose debts were contracted without notice of her title and on the faith of his ownership of the land. Feig v. Meyers, 102 Pa. St. 10.

Husband's payment to wife before creditor's rights arose.—A wife to whom a husband makes a conveyance in repayment of a loan by her from property held in her own right is not estopped to deny that the property is subject to her husband's debts, since she does not claim the property after having permitted persons to extend credit on it to him. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Webster, 76 Iowa 381, 41 N. W. 47.

Selling timber as wife's agent.—The fact that a husband, without fraud, acting as his wife's agent, sold timber from her separate estate does not estop her from claiming the proceeds when attached by trustee process as her husband's property. Webster v. Farnum, 60 N. H. 568.

Permitting husband to collect rents.—One's transaction of the ordinary business of his wife's estate, such as receiving her rents, interest, etc., raises a presumption that it was with her assent and authority; and she is estopped to claim interest money thus received by him. Failure of wife to specify her property upon levy for husband's debts see Sherman v. Elder, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 178.

Consent to common use of part of property does not include the balance.—The acquiescence by a wife in the appropriation to a common use of funds realized by the sale of a portion of a herd of cattle which are her separate property does not estop her from asserting her exclusive title to those not sold. Wife's equity in the land.—The wife, however, will have an equity in lands purchased with her money, title being taken in the husband's name, and she will not be estopped from asserting this equity against one who, with knowledge of the same, takes the land by conveyance from the husband. her from afterward pleading the truth.⁸⁸ If her property is sold without her authority when she is not present, no estoppel will arise,⁸⁹ even though she had knowledge of the sale;⁹⁰ and when after the transaction she is informed of the sale, her failure to notify the purchaser of her title, she not knowing that payment had not been made, will not estop her.⁹¹ Where, however, the husband sold, without authority, property belonging to his wife, and before payment was made she had knowledge of the facts, and had full opportunity to assert her rights, but neglected to do so until after payment had been made, she was estopped from thereafter asserting her title.⁹² The mere fact, however, that the ownership is not disclosed at the time of the sale will not estop her.⁹³ If the wife, without objection, permits her husband to mortgage, in her presence, her separate property, thereby causing the mortgagee to rely upon the supposed ownership of the husband, she will be estopped from claiming the property against the mortgagee.⁹⁴ Where, however, her property is mortgaged by the husband to one not influenced by any act of the wife, and without extending credit upon faith of the property, she will not be estopped to assert her ownership.⁹⁵ So there is no estoppel where the husband mortgages his wife's property without her knowledge.⁹⁶ If the wife's property has been scheduled as her separate estate, the fact that the husband mortgages such property while in possession of it will not estop her from claiming it against the mortgagee, since he will be bound by the notice of the record.⁹⁷

(D) Acceptance of Benefits. A married woman who, having full power to dispose of her property, voluntarily accepts compensation in connection with transactions involving its transfer or exchange will be estopped from afterward denying the validity of such transactions.⁹⁸ Thus if she has notice that condemnation proceedings for a railroad right of way over her land are void, and accepts a sum of money equal to the amount of the void award, she will be estopped from

Sale of alleged property of wife by husband's executor.—Where chattels alleged to have been given to the wife were in the husband's possession at his death, and came into the possession of his executor without claim by the wife, and she made no objection to his accounting on sale of the same, although appearing by attorney, she is estopped to charge him therefor. Ives v. Striker, 69 N. Y. App. Div. 601, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 135.

Wife's property included with husband's.—A wife who knows that her husband is about to include some of her own property in a chattel mortgage given in part to secure payment for her own board is estopped from claiming the property as against the mortgagee, if she neglects to assert her right to it at the time. Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

Acceptance of resulting trust.—If a married woman accepts and enjoys a resulting trust purchased with her separate estate, she is precluded from afterward asserting her right to the separate property so disposed of, although such disposition was not within the power of the trustee who so disposed of it. Dozier v. Freeman, 47 Miss. 647.

Acceptance of proceeds of void sale.—If an heir, although a married woman, receives from the administrator the purchase-money of a void sale of her land, it will amount to an affirmance of the sale, and she will be estopped from denying its validity. Kempe v. Pintard, 32 Miss. 324.

Estoppel of heirs upon inheritance of equal value.—Where a husband, without his wife's assent, conveys her property in fee simple recovering possession of the property.⁹⁹ The mere acceptance, however, of a gift from her husband, intended by him as a settlement of her claims against him for her separate property, no evidence appearing that she accepted it in such settlement, will not estop her.¹

(E) Mistake. Where by mistake the title to lands purchased with the wife's money was conveyed to the husband, the wife is estopped from recovering from one who purchased from the husband without notice of her equities.²

(F) Fraud. A married woman will be estopped from claiming her separate estate where she has practised fraud,³ and likewise where, for the improvement of her lands, she participates in her husband's fraud upon his creditors.⁴

(G) Recognition of Superior Title. Where, at an execution sale of property standing in her husband's name, a married woman gives notice to the sheriff of her claim to a resulting trust therein, the fact that she subsequently leases the land from the purchaser does not estop her from afterward reasserting the trust.⁵

n. Evidence of Ownership—(i) PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF—

(A) In General. As a general rule, under the statutes relating to the separate property of married women, where property is claimed as separate estate by the wife against the creditors of the husband, the burden of proof is upon her to show by satisfactory evidence that the property so claimed is in fact her own.⁶ In absence of such proof, the property is presumed to belong to the husband,⁷ unless it is included in the inventory of her separate estate, filed as provided for by statute.⁸ The presumption is that personal property in the possession of the wife is the property of the husband;⁹ and property in their joint possession, with general warranty of title, his wife's heirs, who are also his heirs, are estopped from claiming the land so conveyed as against the purchaser of the husband, if they have inherited from the husband estate equal to the value of the land. Lane v. Berry, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 282.

Necessity of showing purchase.—Where property in possession of the husband is seized and sold under execution against him in favor of his creditors, his wife, unless she shows that the property was paid for out of her separate estate, cannot, on the ground that she owned it, recover against the execution creditors or the officer who made the seizure and sale. *Bollinger v. Rule not changed by statute.—As before the passage of the Pennsylvania Married Woman's Act of 1848, the possession of money by a wife, or of anything purchased with it, was in law the possession of her husband, even though she might have had an estate settled to her separate use, so since that act, although it has worked many important changes in the marital relations, his interest in his own property is not disturbed by it, nor has the prima facie presumption of ownership above stated been destroyed. The reason for this presumption in the first instance is stronger now than before. Winter v. Walter, 37 Pa. St. 155.

used by the spouses in common or by the family generally is presumed to be the husband's.¹⁰ Some cases, however, hold that under the statutes permitting married women to hold property as their own, no presumption exists that personal property in the possession of the wife belongs to the husband,¹¹ and that the mere fact of possession by either the husband or the wife is not sufficient evidence to warrant a presumption of transfer of title from one to the other,¹² since with reference to the wife's separate property the possession of the husband will be presumed to be the possession of the wife.¹³ In a contest, however, with the husband's creditors, his possession is presumed to be in his own right until the contrary is shown.¹⁴

Woman claiming to be wife.—The rule that property in the wife's possession will be presumed to be her husband's and not her separate estate applies to property of a woman who had lived with a man and falsely claimed to be his wife. Philadelphia v. Williamson, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 179.

10. Rhoads v. Gordon, 38 Pa. St. 277; Walker v. Reamy, 36 Pa. St. 410; McDevitt v. Vial, 7 Pa. Cas. 585, 11 Atl. 645.

Wife's paraphernalia.—Separate possession of the wife is implied in the character and use of articles of her paraphernalia, although bought by her husband, when actually used by her; but such presumption does not apply to chattels used by the family generally, adapted thereto, and in their common possession. Whiton v. Snyder, 88 N. Y. 299.

Tenants in common.—Where the records show a husband and his wife to be entitled to land as tenants in common, possession by the wife along with the husband as one family is not of itself notice to a bona fide purchaser for value from the husband of any claim upon the part of the wife to sole ownership. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Wallace, 45 Ohio St. 152, 12 N. E. 439.

Presumption in favor of wife.—Under N. Y. Laws (1862), c. 172, recognizing the right of a married woman to take and hold property as her own, where it is a gift in good faith and fairly made to her by her husband, as well as where she acquires title from other sources, her separate personal possession of chattels raises a presumption of ownership. Whiton v. Snyder, 88 N. Y. 299.

Money in bank in wife's name.—Where money deposited in a savings bank in the name of a married woman is claimed by her husband after her death as his property, evidence that at different times he had given her money, telling her to save it for him, is sufficient to rebut the presumption that the money belonged to the wife. Qualters' Estate, 147 Pa. St. 124, 23 Atl. 348.

Wife's acts of ownership.—Where a wife exercises acts of ownership over personal property, there is no presumption from such acts that the property belongs to the husband. McCarty v. Quimby, 12 Kan. 494.

12. Root v. Schaffner, 39 Iowa 375; White v. Zane, 10 Mich. 333; Bachman v. Killinger, 55 Pa. St. 414; Grabill v. Moyer, 45 Pa. St. 530.

13. Robison v. Robison, 44 Ala. 227; Stewart v. Ball, 33 Mo. 154.

Possession referred to title.—When, on a trial of the right of property between the wife and an execution creditor of her husband, she is proved to have an equitable estate and to be a "free dealer," the law refers the possession to the title. Newbrick v. Dugan, 61 Ala. 251.

Presumption against husband's adverse claim.—To entitle one to betterments, his possession must have been adverse; and by managing and controlling his wife's estate, on which both lived with their family, the presumption is against an adverse claim on the husband's part, although he has appropriated the profits, paid all the taxes, and never paid or promised to pay rent to any one. Clarke v. Hilton, 75 Me. 426.

14. Curry v. Bott, 53 Pa. St. 400.

Knowledge of facts precludes presumption.—Where, in an action to set aside a conveyance, it appeared that the grantee knew that the husband of his grantor had no interest in the premises, the rule of law that the occupancy of land by a husband and wife jointly is presumptively by virtue of his possession was not applicable. Bates v. Harris, 112 Ga. 32, 37 S. E. 105.

Husband exercising dominion over wife's property.—The fact that a married woman intrusted her husband with personal property belonging to her, and that he exercised absolute dominion over it and used the same as his property, does not authorize a constable to levy an execution against the husband thereon, and to sell the same as the property of the husband. Rice v. Millard, 42 Ill. App. 232.

Presumption not conclusive.—Where a purchaser acquires title which is good as against both husband and wife, the presumption of ownership in the husband arising from possession is not conclusive in a suit between the purchaser and a creditor of the husband. Edey v. Fath, 4 Ill. App. 275.

Construction of statute.—Under a statute providing that when the property of the wife is left under the husband's control, it is presumed that it has been transferred to him as against third persons acting in good faith and without notice of the real ownership, unless the wife has caused a record to be made of her rights, property of the wife which is

(B) Property of Wife at Time of Marriage. Evidence that property came into the possession of a woman prior to her marriage raises a presumption that it is her separate estate.¹⁵

(C) Gift or Settlement. A presumption of a gift or settlement arises when a husband purchases land and causes the deed to be made to his wife.¹⁶ This presumption, however, may be rebutted,¹⁷ the burden of proof being upon the husband.¹⁸ Where an equitable separate estate in personal property is claimed to have been created by parol, there must be clear evidence of the exclusion of the husband's marital rights,¹⁹ since otherwise the gift will be presumed to be merely the general property of the wife.²⁰

(D) Property Devised or Bequeathed to Wife. The question whether a married woman takes a separate estate under a will, in the absence of a statute making a devise or bequest her separate property, depends upon whether there is a clear expression of an intention by testator to create an estate for her sole and separate use.²¹

(E) Property Acquired by Husband in Trust For Wife. If the husband takes title in his own name to property purchased with the wife's money, it is presumed that he holds it in trust for her,²² and the burden is on his creditor to show the contrary.²³ In general, whenever the husband receives money belonging to his wife's separate estate, the presumption is that he receives it as trustee,²⁴

under the control of the husband does not vest in him in such sense as to give his heirs and personal representatives a right superior to the wife. Lower v. Lower, 46 Iowa 525.

Application of rule.—Evidence that personal property came to the wife from her first husband, who had died thirty-four years before trial, warrants a presumption that her title thereto is settled, as against creditors of her second husband, who are seeking to apply it in satisfaction of their judgment. Norbeck v. Davis, 157 Pa. St. 399, 27 Atl. 712.

Date of marriage.—In replevin, evidence by plaintiff that the articles in controversy were given to her by defendant before her marriage to him, without stating the date of the marriage, raises the presumption that it was solemnized under existing statutes, which enable a married woman to acquire a separate estate, and not under laws in force when no such right existed. *Loyd v. Husband's receipt of proceeds of sale of wife's lands.—A husband who acknowledges the receipt of the proceeds of the sale of his wife's real estate, to be held by him for the benefit of her children, is a trustee, and the

although the circumstances of the particular case may raise a presumption of a gift of the money by the wife to the husband.²⁵

(F) Property Purchased by, or Conveyed to, Wife. Where the wife alleges that property purchased by her or conveyed to her was paid for with money belonging to her separate estate, the burden is upon her to establish such fact, since the general presumption is that it was paid for by the husband.²⁶ Contrary to this general rule, it has been said in some cases that in the absence of any evidence as to the source of the purchase-money, the presumption will be that the consideration was paid by the wife.²⁷ In some states property purchased by a trust can be enforced against his estate. Hammons v. Renfrow, 84 Mo. 332.

Rents and profits of separate property.—The wife is entitled to the income and profits derived from her separate estate; but if she lives with the husband, and he receives such income and profits, it will be presumed, in the absence of an express dissent on her part, to have been with her consent, and it will be regarded as a gift to him. Roper v. Roper, 29 Ala. 247; Dillenberger v. Wrisberg, 10 Mo. App. 465.

Presumption limited to amount received.—In 1866 a wife placed five thousand dollars in the hands of her husband to invest in real estate for her until such time as they could select a suitable location for a home. The money was invested, and in 1869 the husband purchased lots for a residence, for which he paid two thousand dollars. In 1874 he erected a residence on the lots in question, costing about eight thousand dollars, he at the time being insolvent. It was held that as no profits were proved to have accrued from the investments, none could be allowed the wife as against creditors of her husband. *Omaha First Nat. Bank v. Wife must show application of her money to the purchase.—A wife claiming money in the homestead on the death of her husband must show, in order to entitle her to the money, that the husband was her debtor when he died; it is not sufficient to show merely that she earned money, or that she received a portion from her father's estate, or that at times her husband gave her money, without showing that the sums so received passed to the husband without consideration. Van Liew v. Galtra, 36 N. J. Eq. 251.

No presumption by recitals in deed that purchase was with wife's means.—In an action by plaintiff to recover land as heir of his father, it is not error to refuse an instruction that his mother having acquired the property under a conveyance which was executed after the father's death and which recited that the consideration was paid by her, a presumption arises that it was purchased with her separate means, since there is no statute which makes such facts presumptive evidence that the property was purchased with the wife's separate means. Clark v. Clark, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 371, 51 S. W. 337.

Husband's consent presumed.—Where it appears that land was purchased with the money of the wife, whether her sole and separate estate or simply assets which the husband had the power to appropriate to his own use, the husband's consent that she should receive the deed in her own name will be presumed, and the title will not be disturbed. *Smith v. married woman is presumed to be her separate property,²⁸ even though not registered as such.²⁹

(h) Presumptions as to Wife's Earnings. Under the general statutes relating to the property of married women, the presumption exists that the earnings of the wife belong to the husband,³¹ and to overcome such presumption the wife must show that her services were rendered under such circumstances, or by such agreement with her husband, as to entitle her to the same.³² The statutes in some states, however, expressly provide that the wife's earnings from others than her

A contract to purchase is not within a statute providing that where property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property. Peiser v. Bradbury, 138 Cal. 570, 72 Pac. 165.

Presumption against equitable separate estate.—Where there is nothing to show whether a married woman is seized of land in fee as at common law, or as a separate estate in equity, or under the provisions of the Married Woman's Act, the court will assume that she is the owner of the premises either under the Married Woman's Act or as at common law. *Hach v. Evidence of ownership of farm.—In a contest between a wife and her husband's creditors for farm produce which, together with the farm on which it was grown, was in the apparent possession of the husband, her claim to the crop being rested on title to the farm, she has the burden of showing the existence of an estate in her not derived from her husband, and a bona fide purchase by herself of the farm with such separate estate; and the mere showing of a deed to her is not enough. *Eavenson v. Statute giving right of election.—A statute giving a married woman the right to perform any labor on her sole and separate account, and providing that her earnings shall be her separate property, merely allows her to elect to labor on her own account, but the presumption is that her services were rendered for her husband. Stevens v. Cunningham, 75 N. Y. App. Div. 125, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 364.

No presumption of gift from possession.—The fact that a wife is in possession of her earnings affords no presumption of a gift thereof to her by her husband. McDermott's Appeal, 106 Pa. St. 358, 51 Am. Rep. 526.

Boarder in family.—A husband living with his wife is presumed to be the head of the family; and the fact that she makes the contracts for board and receives the pay therefor, in the business of keeping a hotel or boarding-house, will not prove the receipts to be her separate property. Flynn v. Gardner, 3 Ill. App. 253.

Living apart from husband.—In an action by a married woman for services performed by her, the fact that for a number of years she lived apart from her husband, who did nothing for her support, is sufficient to show her right to sue for services rendered "on her sole and separate account." Burke v. Cole, 97 Mass. 113.

Burden of proof.—The burden of proving that a wife has acquired property in her earnings by agreement with her husband is on the party making the assertion. Grambling v. Dickey, 118 N. C. 986, 24 S. E. 671.

Effect of subsequent marriage.—The fact that a woman married after entering on the discharge of her duties under an employment contract does not necessarily show that her services were not rendered on her separate account. Wetzel v. Kellar, 12 Ind. App. 75, 39 N. E. 895.

Evidence for the jury.—Evidence that a wife gave her wages to her husband, directing him to apply them in payment for a lot purchased by her, and that he paid the money as directed, and was heard to remark, as he was paying for the lot, that it was hers, makes it a question for the jury whether he treated her as the owner of her own earnings, so that the lot became her separate property.

husband shall be presumed to be on her separate account,³³ and in most states the earnings of a married woman are made a part of her separate estate.³⁴

(i) Negotiable Paper Payable to Wife. A note made payable to a married woman will be presumed to belong to her and not to her husband.³⁵ So a check given for realty conveyed by husband and wife, if made payable to her, will be presumed to be her property.³⁶

(ii) ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—(A) In General. As evidence of the wife's title to property, on issues as to the possession or ownership of the husband, receipts for rent given to her,³⁷ a lease of the premises to her,³⁸ policies of insurance in her name,³⁹ a receipt to her for payment for other property as a part of the property in dispute,⁴⁰ and the facts that the husband merely acted as her agent in procuring the property,⁴¹ and that she took up an agreement originally made by her husband for the purchase of land, and completed the payment with her own money,⁴² have been held admissible.⁴³ Evidence that the purchase-money was given to the wife by a third person is admissible to rebut the legal presumption of ownership in the husband.⁴⁴

(B) Acts and Admissions. Acts and admissions of either the husband or the wife relative to the ownership of property may, in accordance with the general rules governing evidence, be admissible to prove or disprove title.⁴⁵ Declarations made by the wife in her own favor, such as a recital in a deed that the land which she conveys is her separate estate,⁴⁶ or a devise or bequest of certain property as her own,⁴⁷ are not evidence against the husband's claims. So where the husband, without the knowledge or consent of the wife, listed for taxation as his own certain property claimed by her, it is not admissible as evidence against her;⁴⁸ nor in general are declarations of the husband as to owner-

The presumption is rebutted by evidence that a wife's total earnings were two hundred dollars and that she purchased several notes, in all amounting to about one thousand dollars, and that her husband transacted the business for her. Gardner v. Connelly, 75 Iowa 205, 39 N. W. 650.

43. Conveyance to husband alone.—Where a husband, with his wife's consent, conveyed land to a creditor, a deed of reconveyance to the husband alone is admissible to defeat a claim of title by the wife in proceedings against the husband on a mortgage executed after such reconveyance. Montgomery v. Payne, 93 Ga. 600, 21 S. E. 127.

Prior listing by husband of indebtedness.—In proceedings by a wife to establish, as a claim against her husband's insolvent estate, a note received by her as heir at law of her grandfather, evidence is not admissible to show that the insolvent gave in such indebtedness to the listers as an offset the year before plaintiff's grandfather died, and did not do so afterward; and this even if his action in such respect was with plaintiff's consent. ship admissible against the wife in a contest between her and the husband's creditors,⁴⁹ although declarations of both husband and wife made at the time the property was acquired may be admitted as part of the res geste.⁵⁰

(c) Intention of Parties. In order to show the intention of the creator of an alleged equitable separate estate, or the intention as to ownership as between husband and wife, evidence tending to show and explain the circumstances of the settlement, or how the matter was understood and treated between the husband and wife, is relevant.⁵¹

(iii) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—(A) In General. The weight and sufficiency of evidence in questions involving presumptions of ownership, and how much evidence is sufficient to overcome the presumption, must in general necessarily depend upon the circumstances of each case. Where husband and wife may contract with each other, it has been held that, in a controversy between her and her husband's creditors regarding the ownership of personal property, the question is to be determined on a fair preponderance of evidence as in other cases.⁵² The mere fact, however, that a husband has given a chattel mortgage on his wife's property, there being no evidence of the wife's consent or knowledge,⁵³ or that he was employed on her farm,⁵⁴ or leased the shop in which she carried on business,⁵⁵ is not sufficient to show ownership in him. However, by the wife's long continued acquiescence in the husband's claims of ownership,⁵⁶ by her listing for taxation certain property as his,⁵⁷ or by mingling her property with his so that it cannot be distinguished or separated,⁵⁸ the husband's

On an issue as to ownership of realty standing in a husband's name, evidence that it was regularly assessed to him is a fact to be considered in connection with his testimony that it was his wife's property, taken in his name by mistake and inadvertence. *Miller v. Declaration inadmissible to vary absolute deed.—Where land was purchased in the husband's name with a legacy left to the wife in the lands of her guardian, declarations by the husband, made at the time of the purchase, that the land was purchased for the wife's benefit, are inadmissible to show that the deed, which was absolute on its face, was affected with an express trust in her favor. Miller v. Blackburn, 14 Ind. 62.

Presumption of intention of provision for wife rebuttable.—Where a husband pays for land, but takes a deed in his wife's name, the presumption that a provision for the wife is intended may be rebutted by evidence that it is the intention of the parties that the wife shall hold for her husband. Seibold v. Christman, 75 Mo. 308.

Stale claim.—The failure of the estate of a wife to present a claim against the husband for property alleged to belong to the wife, during the ten years which he survived her, is a circumstance which the jury is entitled to consider in determining the justness of the claim. Mains v. Webber, 131 Mich. 213, 91 N. W. 172.

Fraud.—Where land belonging to the wife but recorded in the name of the husband is sold under judgment confessed by the husband, the wife may show that the judgment was fraudulently confessed for the purpose of destroying her title, and that the purchaser had notice of her title and of the fraud. Mitchell v. Kintzer, 5 Pa. St. 216, 47 Am. Dec. 408.

Leasing wife's lands.—The acts of a husband in leasing lands and taking notes to himself for rent, the record title remaining all the time in his wife, do not show such ostensible title in him as to preclude her from claiming title against his creditors. Laing v. Evans, 64 Nebr. 454, 90 N. W. 246.

Funds in joint investment.—Under a statute reserving to a married woman her separate property, investments made jointly by husband and wife, each furnishing half of the means, and in which they take all securities in their joint names, are not blended, ownership of the property in question may be established. In general fair and satisfactory evidence will be required to overcome the original presumption of the husband's ownership.⁵⁹

(B) Gift From Wife to Husband. To overcome the presumption of a gift to the husband where the wife permits him to collect the rents and profits of her separate estate,⁶⁰ especially after the lapse of years, clear and convincing proof is required.⁶¹ Evidence that she has repeatedly directed him to invest it in her name for her benefit will, however, rebut the presumption of a gift.⁶² The mere deposit of the wife's money in a bank by the husband is not sufficient evidence of a gift to him,⁶³ and in general in order to establish the fact of a gift from the wife so as to consolidate their interests and deprive the wife of her share as her separate estate. Wait v. Bovee, 35 Mich. 425.

Admissions.—Testimony of three witnesses that the husband admitted that certain land belonged to the wife's estate, together with the fact that in a suit for divorce the pleadings on both sides stated the same fact, is sufficient proof that the land belonged to the wife's estate. Dooley v. Baynes, 86 Va. 644, 10 S. E. 974.

Presumption of husband's ownership of household goods.—Where husband and wife live together in a house in which boarders are kept, the presumption that the chattels in the house belong to the husband is not rebutted by evidence that the husband is an incapable business man and his wife a good manager. Rice v. Sayles, 23 Ill. App. 189.

Documentary evidence.—The contention of a debtor's wife, as against his creditor, that she has a resulting trust in land cannot be maintained on the mere testimony of herself and husband, the documentary evidence showing that it was bought by his mother, and that she devised it to him. Kegerreis v. Lutz, 187 Pa. St. 252, 41 Atl. 26.

Conclusions.—Testimony of a wife that previous to her marriage her father gave a piano to her; that he said he gave it to her as her special property for her separate and sole use; that he spoke of reducing the gift to writing, but that she never saw any sets forth facts from which the court may infer that there was a separate estate, and is not a mere conclusion of the witness. Manning v. Mayberry, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1899) 54 S. W. 682.

Uncorroborated evidence of wife.—Where a wife sues to establish title to land of which she paid the consideration, but the title to which was taken in the husband's name, her uncorroborated testimony, in the absence of conflicting testimony, is sufficient to show that the deed was made to the husband fraudulently and without her knowledge and consent. Kelly v. Kelly, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1900) 58 S. W. 870.

Prima facie proof of ownership of notes.—Testimony of a wife that she bought and paid for certain notes, and had them in her possession, and that they were forcibly taken from her by her husband is sufficient prima facie proof of ownership in her to entitle her to recover them in replevin against one who was at most a mere bailee of the husband. Goldsmith v. Taussig, 60 Mo. App. 460.

Question for jury.—Certain money on deposit in a bank in the name of the husband on being garnished by his creditor was claimed by the wife. The husband testified that the deposits in question were "principally" his wife's, and that such money "was deposited for her." It appeared that nearly all the investments from which the wife received an income were made with money received from the husband, and that the income from her investments was not sufficient to account for all the deposits. It was held that there was a question for the jury. McIntyre v. Farmers', etc., Bank, 115 Mich. 255, 73 N. W. 233.

(c) Property Acquired by Husband as Trustee. Where, in connection with property held by the husband, a claim of a trust in favor of the wife is asserted against creditors, the evidence should be clear and convincing, so as to make the justice of the claim manifest.⁶⁵ A distinct and precise declaration by the husband at the time of acquiring the property may be sufficient to establish his relation as trustee,⁶⁶ but loose declarations of an intention are not enough.⁶⁷

(d) Property Purchased by Wife or With Her Money. In jurisdictions where the presumption is that property purchased by the wife was paid for by the husband,⁶⁸ her ownership must, as against existing creditors, be established by clear and full proof that she paid for it with her own separate funds.⁶⁹ Upon such evidence she will be entitled to the property as her separate estate.⁷⁰ The mere fact, however, that a husband joins with his wife in a note to borrow money for the purchase-price does not create in him any interest in land bought by her, where the note was subsequently paid by the wife;⁷¹ nor does the fact that he pays the taxes thereon when the title is in her.⁷² Failure by the wife to show that she had separate means with which to make the purchase will generally defeat her claims;⁷³ and the mere declaration by the husband, on taking a deed in the wife's name,

Jury need not "be satisfied."—Where a husband and wife seek to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment against the former by levy on land held by the latter on the ground that the land, which appeared from the deed to the wife to be community property, was in fact the separate property of the wife, as having been purchased with the proceeds of her separate property, which had been appropriated by the husband, it was error to charge that the jury must be satisfied that the land was paid for with the separate estate of the wife before a verdict could be found in her favor, the charge requiring too high a degree of proof. *Thompson v. Payment with wife's money not necessarily conclusive.—The mere fact that money of the wife was used by the husband in making a purchase of land is not sufficient to show that such land was the separate property of the wife, in the absence of testimony of an intention to make it such. *Hirseh v. B. Rights and Liabilities of Husband — 1. RIGHTS IN GENERAL — a. Exclusion of Husband. With reference to the wife's equitable separate estate, the essential object and purpose of the same is the exclusion of the husband's marital rights and control,⁷⁵ and the exemption of the property from liability for his debts.⁷⁶ Under the statutes the general effect is to deprive the husband of his common-law property rights,⁷⁷ although in some jurisdictions he is given the right to manage and control the property,⁷⁸ or to act as her trustee.⁷⁹

b. Vested Rights. The statutes do not affect the husband's vested rights, as has been previously stated.⁸⁰

c. Adverse Claimant, or Mortgagee, of Wife's Land. The purchase by a husband of an adverse claim to his wife's land inures primarily to the benefit of her title, and to his benefit only so far as his marital interests are concerned.⁸¹ Thus a husband cannot acquire a tax title to his wife's lands,⁸² and his purchase of the reversion of an estate, a leasehold being in the wife, does not operate as a merger of the wife's interest.⁸³ Where, however, by the terms of a deed conveying lands to the wife, she was to assume and pay a mortgage, the assignment to

Wife possessing sufficient means not conclusive.—The mere fact, however, that the wife had sufficient means with which to purchase is not enough to prove that she actually did pay. Aurand v. Schaffer, 43 Pa. St. 363.

Ownership of jewels.—Where the only evidence of the ownership of jewels by a wife, in a contest between the estates of the wife and her husband, is the fact that they were worn by her on various occasions, and there is evidence that the wife received no property from her father, and that the jewels were kept in a jewel box, to which she held the key, in a safety vault in a bank of which the husband was a part owner, and that they were worn after her death by his second and third wives, the question whether the jewels belonged to the estate of the wife was properly taken from the jury. *Mains v. Statute may change laws to apply to future property. The contract of marriage does not imply that the husband shall have the same interest in the future acquisitions of the wife that the law gives him in the property she possesses at the time of the marriage, but that he shall have whatever interest, if any, the legislature, before she is invested with them, may think proper to prescribe. Sleight v. Reed, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 159.

Vested rights under another jurisdiction.—The vested right of a wife in separate property acquired under the laws of another state in which she and her husband resided is entitled to the protection of the laws of Missouri, on their becoming residents thereof, the same as any other vested right of property, although the same right could not have been acquired in Missouri. *Rice v. the husband of the mortgage and the note vests in him a good title to the mortgage.⁸⁴

d. Rights as Survivor. Where an equitable separate estate in personalty is created in the wife with no limitation over upon her decease, the husband has, on the death of the wife, the same rights that he would have in her general property.⁸⁵ He will have, as at common law, his curtesy in her lands.⁸⁶

e. Right to Income and Proceeds of Sales. While the income of the wife's separate estate, and proceeds of sales of the same, become a part of her separate estate, her husband may be entitled to the same by way of gift from the wife.⁸⁷

f. Support of Husband. A wife, although possessing a separate estate, is not bound to support her husband;⁸⁸ but statutes sometimes provide that the duty to support each other shall be a mutual obligation, and thus make her separate estate liable for his support in case he is needy and unable to support himself.⁸⁹

2. HUSBAND AS TRUSTEE FOR WIFE— a. Right to Act. As previously stated,⁹⁰ the husband may be named as the trustee of his wife's equitable separate estate;⁹¹ and when property is conveyed to him for the sole and separate use of the wife, equity will regard him as her trustee, and hold him liable as such.⁹² In some states, moreover, by force of statute, the husband is made the trustee of his wife's statutory separate property.⁹³

Husband not included among those taking "by descent."—A settlement of personal property, in trust for a married woman, in case of intestacy, "to such person or persons as would, by the existing laws . . . take an estate in fee-simple by descent from her," does not include her surviving husband. Waters v. Tazewell, 9 Md. 291.

Husband diverting wife's estate.—Where, in a marriage settlement, property was settled on the wife for life, remainder to the husband for life, remainder to the heirs generally of the husband, and the husband diverted a portion of the income of the estate conveyed, and invested the same without the wife's consent in land, and subsequently with her consent invested a portion of the corpus of the estate in the same land, the heirs of the husband have no right in the remainder of the corpus, as against the right of the wife to be reimbursed for so much of the income as was so diverted. *Varner v. In Alabama the code of 1867 provided that the wife's separate estate should vest in the husband as her trustee. Act Feb. 23, 1887, however, gave married women the rights of a feme sole. See under old statute Hall v. Cres-

b. Authority. Where the husband is the trustee of his wife's separate property, he alone can sue for the rents, income, and profits thereof.⁹⁴ He has the right to reduce into possession her choses in action for her sole use and benefit; and like any other trustee he and his representatives are responsible to her separate estate for whatever funds he may receive belonging to it.⁹⁵ He cannot, however, as trustee, reap any personal benefit from the use of the property,⁹⁶ or make unauthorized investments⁹⁷ or applications of trust funds not included in the scope of the trust.⁹⁸ The husband cannot enter into any agreement or contract, binding upon the estate in excess of his authority as trustee.⁹⁹ Trust property in his possession cannot be subjected to his debts.¹

c. Liability. Like any other trustee, the husband and his representatives are responsible to the wife's separate estate for whatever funds belonging to it he may receive,² even though he so mingles his wife's property with his own that its identity is destroyed.³ Her rights may be superior to those of his creditors, although the title is apparently in the husband.⁴ For a fraudulent appropriation of her separate property, she has a remedy against him to enforce the trust, as in case of other persons.⁵ If, however, the wife, with authority to do so, regards her husband, who has used her funds, as her debtor, he will not be liable as trustee.⁶

d. Removal. A court of equity may remove a husband as trustee if he is unfit or incompetent to fill the office,⁷ and this may be done on the wife's petition.⁸ It has been held, under a statute, that he may be removed for his wilful abandonment of the wife,⁹ or for habitual drunkenness rendering him incapable of properly performing his duties.¹⁰ To effect a removal, the decree must specifically provide therefor.¹¹ Upon the death of a husband who is a trustee of either an equitable or a statutory separate estate,¹² the wife will take the property discharged of the trust, having the same control over her estate as if she were a feme sole.¹³

e. Adverse Possession. The possession of the husband as trustee is not adverse to the wife,¹⁴ except after an open and explicit disclaimer of a holding under his wife's title, brought to the wife's knowledge.¹⁵

3. RIGHT TO POSSESSION OR OCCUPATION. Under the statutes, it is generally held that the husband has the right to occupy his wife's property in connection with their marital relation,¹⁶ and a husband residing with his wife on her land is in rightful possession thereof;¹⁷ but his possession does not affect his wife's title or possession.¹⁸ The husband does not hold adversely to the wife when they occupy her land.¹⁹ If the statute merely exempts her property from liability for his debts, his rights as husband are not affected in other respects.²⁰

4. POWER TO MANAGE OR CONTROL — a. In General. In some states the statutes give the husband the power to manage and control the separate property of the wife;²¹ but in general, under the statutes, he has no such authority, the power to control her separate estate being vested in herself.²² As to her equitable separate estate, his rights of control as husband are excluded by the very nature of the estate;²³ but where the instrument creating an alleged equitable estate fails to clearly exclude him from all control of the property, he will, provided such estate is not made separate by statute, be entitled to exercise his common-law rights.²⁴

b. Leases. A lease of a married woman's separate real property, executed by the husband without the knowledge of the wife, is void.²⁵ Where, however, the husband is authorized by the statute to manage and control her separate estate, a lease may be executed by him²⁶ under such restrictions, if any, as may be imposed by the statutes.²⁷

d. Assignment of Legacy, Reversionary Interest, or Insurance Policy. A legacy given to the wife for her sole use²⁹ or her reversionary interest³⁰ cannot be assigned by the husband. Her sole use in a life policy of insurance is sometimes protected by statute from the husband's assignment;³¹ but a statute enumerating certain other kinds of her property, and providing that such property shall not be conveyed by the husband unless by joint deed with the wife, has been held not to apply to a certificate of insurance made payable to her.³²

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 519.

Consent.—A contract on the part of the husband to sell the wife's land, although known and assented to by her, is not binding on her or her heirs. She can bind herself only by executing a deed in the form prescribed by law. Rogers v. Brooks, 30 Ark. 612.

Joint deed pursuant to contract with husband.—Although the wife joins with the husband in the sale of property bequeathed to her, to be held by her to her separate use and "not to be sold, bartered, or traded by her husband," if the sale be made to one who contracts with the husband and makes the payment to the husband, it is void as to the wife. Woodrum v. Kirkpatrick, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 218.

Sale by order of court of the lands of an infant feme covert on the application of her husband is not authorized. Degenhart v. Cracraft, 36 Ohio St. 549.

Subsequent covenant by husband.—Where lands of a wife are sold by deed of herself and husband without warranty as to quantity, an instrument signed by the husband alone more than a year afterward, without any new consideration, agreeing to have a resurvey of the land made to correct any mistakes as to quantity does not affect the wife. Rogers v. Peebles, 72 Ala. 529.

South Carolina.—Ellis v. Woods, 9 Rich. Eq. 19; Franklin v. Creyon, 1 Harp. Eq. 243.

Virginia.—Hughes v. Pledge, 1 Leigh 443. See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 520.

Recovery of value of property sold.—A wife may recover from her husband's administrator the value of her separate personal property taken and sold by her husband. Jones v. Cannon, 8 Houst. (Del.) 1, 31 Atl. 521.

The husband may sell with the wife's assent. Cunningham v. Mitchell, 30 Ind. 362.

Statute may require written consent.—The exchange by a husband of a horse belonging to his wife's statutory estate, not evidenced by any writing signed by her, does not divest the wife's title to the horse, although she assents to the exchange. Pollak v. Graves, 72 Ala. 347. See also Stout v. Kinsey, 90 Ala. 546, 8 So. 685.

Wyoming.—Knight v. Beckwith Commercial Co., 6 Wyo. 500, 46 Pac. 1094.

United States.—Chaffe v. Oliver, 3 Fed. 609, 1 McCrary 626.

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 521.

Statute may require wife's consent to be in writing.—The husband's possession of a negotiable note payable to his wife, with her indorsement thereon in blank, gives him no right to pledge the same to secure payment of his debts, although she has given him parol authority to use it as collateral for a specific debt. Hurt v. Cook, 151 Mo. 416, 52 S. W. 396.

What constitutes encumbrance.—An agreement by which a third person was allowed by a husband to gather the crops on his wife's land is an encumbrance within the meaning of the statute rendering void all encumbrances of a husband on his wife's real estate unless the instrument is executed and acknowledged as required by statute. Jenney v. Gray, 5 Ohio St. 45.

Mortgage of homestead after death of wife.—Where a husband and wife occupy property as a homestead, his right after her death is merely to continue to possess and occupy it until disposed of according to law; hence he is unable to execute a valid mortgage thereon. Butterfield v. Wicks, 44 Iowa 310.

Property in husband's name.—A husband dealt with his wife's money and invested it in real property, taking title in his own name, and lived with his wife thereon, and afterward mortgaged it to a bona fide mortgagee. It was held that the title of the purchaser under foreclosure was good, even though the husband had perpetrated a fraud on his wife. Oakley v. Macrum, 8 Pa. Cas. 523, 11 Atl. 320.

36. Patterson v. Flanagan, 37 Ala. 513.

f. Ratification by Wife. The wife may ratify an unauthorized sale or encumbrance of her property by the husband,³⁷ and by permitting him to use her property as his own, and thereby to obtain credit thereon, she will be estopped from afterward asserting her claims.³⁸ Her mere acquiescence or silence, however, will not in general defeat her rights;³⁹ and her ratification must be clear and definite, something more than mere loose expressions being required.⁴⁰

5. AUTHORITY AS AGENT OR ATTORNEY — a. In General. The husband, by virtue of his marital right, is not the agent of the wife in respect to her separate estate;⁴¹ but when a married woman is authorized to appoint an agent, she may appoint her husband as such in connection with the management and control of her separate property,⁴² without subjecting it to the claims of his creditors.⁴³

Wife may maintain trover for mortgaged property.—A husband cannot pass the title to personality which is the corpus of the wife's statutory separate estate by mortgage; hence she can maintain trover against his mortgagee. Linam v. Reeves, 68 Ala. 89.

b. Presumptions and Evidence of Agency — (1) IN GENERAL. In some jurisdictions, where the husband manages the estate of the wife, as where he receives the income of the same or collects debts due her, he will, so far as the protection of her interests are concerned, be presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary, to be acting as her agent.⁴⁴ In general, however, when it is sought to bind a married woman by acts of her husband on the ground of his agency, the evidence must be clear and unequivocal, the one seeking to charge the wife having the burden of establishing the agency.⁴⁵ The mere statement of the husband that he is the agent of his wife is insufficient to prove his authority.⁴⁶ Where, however, the wife voluntarily places her property in her husband's hands, no fraud being practised upon her, and he obtains credit upon the same by the presumption of his ownership, she will not be entitled to claim the same against the interests of such creditors.⁴⁷ It is not necessary that the husband's appointment as agent should be in writing,⁴⁸ or that particular words be used to create

Agency must be in good faith.—Under statutes which permit a married woman to make contracts and to do business as a feme sole, she may avail herself of the services and agency of her husband in the conduct of her business or management of her property without necessarily subjecting it or the profits arising therefrom to the claims of his creditors; but an insolvent debtor may not use his wife's name as a mere device to cover and keep from his creditors the assets and profits of a mercantile business which is in truth his own. Hyde v. Frey, 28 Fed. 819.

Statutes.—Mansfield Ark. Dig. § 4637, providing that a husband having the custody and control of his wife's separate property is presumed to be the wife's agent, makes the husband the natural and presumptive agent of the wife, his agency being implied when the wife accepts the benefits resulting from his transaction. American Express Co. v. Lankford, (Indian Terr. 1898) 46 S. W. 183.

Insurance taken out by a husband in his own name on sole and separate property of his wife is to be presumed to have been procured by him as her agent and for her benefit. Hunt v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 22 Fed. 503. See, however, Goldsohl v. Chatham Nat. Bank, 80 Mo. 626.

Registry of deed and husband's management.—The registry of a deed of settlement on a married woman, accompanied by the management of the trust property by her husband, is as to third persons evidence of his agency for the trust property. Wyly v. Collins, 9 Ga. 223.

Action by husband and wife.—The rule requiring superior evidence of a husband's authority to act as his wife's agent has no application where the two are joined as plaintiffs, affirming the agency. Bridges v. Russell, 30 Mo. App. 258.

Relationship as bearing on agency.—In an action involving the issue whether a husband was the wife's agent for the sale of her land, it was proper to instruct the jury that in determining the agency they might consider that the alleged agent was husband of the alleged principal. Barnett v. Gluting, 3 Ind. App. 415, 29 N. E. 927.

Mingling wife's funds.—Where there was evidence justifying the inference that the husband mingled his own money with that of his wife with her knowledge and consent and upon the understanding that the entire fund should be treated as his own, and the husband testified merely that it was not done "to any extent," such fund was subject to garnishment for his debt. McIntyre v. Farmers, etc., Bank, 115 Mich. 255, 73 N. W. 233.

48. Lister v. Vowell, 122 Ala. 264, 25 So. 564; Merrill v. Parker, 112 Mass. 250; Long v. Martin, 152 Mo. 668, 54 S. W. 473; Stone v. Gilliam Exch. Bank, 81 Mo. App. 9; Southwick v. Southwick, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 234. But see Nason v. Lingle, 143 Cal. 363, 77 Pac. 71, holding that under the statute

the agency,⁴⁹ since by her acts and conduct in connection with the transaction in issue she may constitute the husband her agent.⁵⁰ The husband's agency may be implied from the acceptance by the wife of the benefits of his acts.⁵¹

(II) ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE. The fact that the wife allowed her husband to make similar transactions with other persons,⁵² or paid a former bill for a like purchase made by the husband from the same person,⁵³ is admissible in proof of the husband's agency. The fact that he was her agent for a particular purpose is not, however, evidence that he was her general agent;⁵⁴ and the fact that he was her agent in other and different transactions is not admissible to show his agency in the matter at issue.⁵⁵ Testimony of a witness that he was shown by the husband a paper bearing the wife's name and purporting to give the husband authority to transact her business is inadmissible in the absence of proof that the signature was the wife's.⁵⁶ The testimony of a husband is inadmissible to prove a contract between his wife and a third person, made through his agency, without showing that he had authority to act for the wife, or that his acts were subsequently ratified by her.⁵⁷

requiring written authority to empower one to act as agent to sell land, oral authority to a husband is insufficient.

Wife's proxy at corporate meeting.—Corporate stock being personal property, a married woman may by parol authorize her husband to vote it for her at corporate meetings, and to consent for her to a transfer of all the corporate property to another corporation for its capital stock, to be issued to the stock-holders of the former, where the statute authorizes the personal property of the wife to be disposed of by the husband and wife by parol. *Hoene v. See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 527.

Wife by conduct may broaden statutory liability.—The statute declaring that a husband doing business with his wife's means acts as her agent as to persons dealing with him without notice, unless the contract between husband and wife is filed, etc., does not prevent the wife from making, by her conduct, the agency of the husband broader than that provided for by the statute. Ross v. Baldwin, 65 Miss. 570, 5 So. 111.

Wife's knowledge of husband acting as her agent.—Where a husband contracted for a street improvement in front of his wife's property as her ostensible agent, and she had knowledge that he signed the contract, and took no steps to repudiate his authority, the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the contract was made by the husband on behalf of his wife. Santa Cruz Rock-Pavement Co. v. Lyons, 133 Cal. 114, 65 Pac. 329.

Agency to hire premises not shown by occupation with husband.—The fact that the wife subsequently resided on the premises with her husband, without proof of knowledge on her part that they had been hired in her name, is no evidence of her husband's authority to contract for her; nor does it render her liable in an action for use and occupation. Sanford v. Pollock, 105 N. Y. 450, 11 N. E. 836.

52. Barnett v. Gluting, 3 Ind. App. 415, 29 N. E. 927.

Written consent of wife.—The statute giving the wife the absolute property in the products of her realty, and protecting them from disposition by the husband without her written consent, the fact that he has on former occasions sold and delivered portions of the products of his wife's farm without her written consent, to which sales she interposed no objections, is not sufficient to establish a general agency of the husband with power to sell all the future products of her lands, without her written consent. Nunn v. Carroll, 83 Mo. App. 135.

agency for his wife must be clear and cogent in order to charge her.⁵⁸ In general, however, the husband's agency in connection with a transaction relative to her separate estate or business will be sufficiently shown by the fact that the wife had intrusted him with the general management of her affairs.⁵⁹ A husband who contracts in his wife's name, no evidence appearing that she ever authorized him to do so, or that she ever had anything to do with the subject-matter, cannot be held to be her agent.⁶⁰ The fact that the wife is the owner of the premises upon which she and her husband reside is not sufficient to charge her for goods sold to the husband in his business of farming thereon,⁶¹ or for supplies purchased by him in maintaining on her property a hotel in his own name.⁶² Where one deals with the husband as principal, no fact of undisclosed agency appearing, it is not sufficient evidence to charge the wife that the purchases were for the benefit of her separate estate.⁶³ If, however, the wife is in fact an undisclosed principal, she may upon evidence of such fact be held liable.⁶⁴ The husband's possession of an obligation due to his wife, upon which he receives payments of money, tends to prove his authority to receive the money as agent, although it is not conclusive of such fact.⁶⁵

c. Notice of Agency to Third Persons. In dealing with the wife's separate real property, the husband acts as her agent, and persons dealing with him are bound to take notice of his authority as in the case of other agents.⁶⁶ Persons

Instructions.—Where a husband gives a note to which he signs the name of his wife, his own name as agent, and his name individually, it is error, in an action on the note, to instruct that plaintiff cannot recover against the wife unless the evidence shows that she authorized the husband to sign this particular note for her as her agent, such an instruction excluding all evidence of general agency, and all evidence of authority, express or implied, to make notes generally. *Bouck v. Wife liable if husband was actually agent.—Where a vendor did not know that he was selling to the husband simply as agent for the wife, and the goods were actually used on the plantation of the wife, he can recover from her on discovering the fact of the agency. Miller v. Watt, 70 Ga. 385.

Agency inferred from possession of wife's mortgage.—The agency of the husband to bind the wife, to be inferred from the possession of a mortgage of her real estate conditioned for the payment of a certain sum within a specified time, is limited by the terms of the instrument. His agency does not extend to a delivery of such a mortgage as a continuing guaranty for any indebtedness of his to the amount stated. Albion Bank v. Burns, 46 N. Y. 170.

Agency may be presumed from the possession of a bill of lading. Furman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 68 Iowa 219, 26 N. W. 83.

having notice of the husband's agency will not be protected as to transactions with him hostile to her interests and beyond the apparent scope of his agency.⁶⁷ Where, however, he is her general agent, any particular limitation she may have placed upon his authority will not free her from liability without notice to third persons with whom he deals.⁶⁸

d. Scope of Authority—(1) IN GENERAL. As in the case of other agents, the husband has authority to act and to bind the wife within the scope of his employment.⁶⁹ Under full power to do and perform every act and thing necessary to do, he may employ a subagent in connection with the business.⁷⁰ The husband has, however, no power to bind his wife in excess of the authority conferred upon him,⁷¹ and under authority to merely manage and control her separate property or business he cannot sell the same.⁷² As her general agent to look after the farming operations of her land, he cannot authorize her lessee on shares to buy stock on joint account with her,⁷³ or bind her by his agreement with an adjoining owner to establish a boundary line.⁷⁴ The extent of his authority is of course a matter of fact.⁷⁵ In the absence of evidence of any authority to hold himself out as her agent, she will not be bound by his acts,⁷⁶ unless she afterward ratifies the same.⁷⁷ When acting as her agent he has no authority to reap a benefit for himself in opposition to her interests.⁷⁸

Acting without wife's knowledge.—An agreement between a grantor and his grantee's husband fixing the division line between the land conveyed and that retained by the grantor at a line different from the one stated in the deed, in consequence of which the grantor extended improvements up to the new line, is not binding on the grantee, where it and the improvements were made without her knowledge. Mitchell v. Brawley, 140 Ind. 216, 39 N. E. 497.

Innocent purchaser relying upon husband's title.—A wife directed her husband to purchase shares with moneys belonging to her separate estate, and without her knowledge he had the certificate issued in his name, and assigned it to a person having no notice that it had been purchased with funds of the wife, as collateral for a loan to himself. It was held that the pledge was valid against the wife. Anderson v. Waco State Bank, 92 Tex. 506, 49 S. W. 1030, 71 Am. St. Rep. 867.

Power to mortgage wife's lands "for any purpose."—Where a wife, by power duly executed, constitutes her husband and others named her "attorney and attorneys in fact and in law," and grants such "attorney or attorneys" full power to mortgage her land "for any purpose," an equitable mortgage by the husband alone to secure a loan to him on his individual note is valid as to the entire consideration thereof, in the absence of any collusion between the husband and the mortgagee, it appearing that part of the proceeds of the loan was used for the wife's benefit, and there being no evidence as to the use made of the balance. *Eaton v. f. Estoppel to Deny Agency or Authority. Where a married woman permits her husband to deal with her property as owner or agent, or by her conduct holds him out as her agent or induces the belief that he acts as such, and in that belief third persons in good faith act to their detriment, she is estopped to deny that he acted as her agent.⁸⁸ Where, however, there is not sufficient evidence to show the fact of the husband's agency, either by her conduct or otherwise, she will not be estopped from denying that he acted without authority.⁸⁹ She will moreover not be estopped from showing that he was not her agent where he exceeds his authority, provided his act was not within the apparent scope of his agency.⁹⁰

Husband's usurious contract.—Where the husband, as agent for his wife, makes a loan, and takes a bonus over and above the legal rate of interest, and applies the same to her support, her knowledge of the usurious character of the transaction will not be presumed against her own and her husband's positive evidence to the contrary. *Brigham v. Estoppel, although husband disregarded instructions.—A married woman owning a sawmill and carrying on its business through her husband as an agent is estopped from denying his authority to purchase materials to repair the mill, so far as others have been induced to act on the faith of it, although he disregarded her instructions to buy them of a particular person designated by her. Treman v. Anderson, 78 Mo. 85 (holding that where the husband alone files a plat of his wife's land, their joint conveyance of lots designated on the plat does not estop her, as against the public, to assert title to land appearing on the plat as a street).

Husband's subsequent acts.—A married woman is not estopped from claiming relief against one from whom she has bought corporation stock on the ground of fraud in the sale, because of the fact that after the purchase her husband became an officer in the corporation and much of the money paid in by her was paid out under his direction and by his consent. Booth v. Smith, 117 Ill. 370, 7 N. E. 610.

Credit given to husband.—Where merchants sold supplies to a husband for a plantation, and did not discover until after his death that the plantation belonged to his wife, she was not estopped to deny that she ever received said supplies or that they were used for her benefit. *Caldwell v. wise in case he exceeds his authority as her agent she may bind herself by her ratification of the transaction.⁹² She will in general be held to have ratified his acts when, with knowledge of the same and with no fraud practised upon her, she accepts the benefits thereof.⁹³ By signing a note and mortgage to secure a credit or loan applied for by her husband,⁹⁴ or by accepting improvements upon her property,⁹⁵ she will be presumed to have ratified the unauthorized transaction. No act can be ratified, however, if she could not originally authorize the same;⁹⁶ and a subsequent ratification will not affect the intervening rights of third persons.⁹⁷ Mere silence on her part is not in itself ratification.⁹⁸

h. Termination of Agency. As in case of agency in general, the husband's agency may be terminated by performance of the object, by act of the parties, or by operation of law.⁹⁹ The husband's statutory power to bind, as agent, the separate estate of the wife terminates with her death.¹ The wife's insanity dissolves likewise, through operation of law, the relation of principal and agent.² Notice to third persons of the termination of the agency may be necessary to protect the wife.³

i. Rights and Liabilities of Wife. For the acts of the husband as the legally authorized agent of his wife, she is liable to others as in case of any other agency.⁴

United States.—Hennessey v. Woolworth, 128 U. S. 438, 9 S. Ct. 109, 32 L. ed. 500.

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 537.

Nuisance.—The fact that the husband of a landowner assented to the construction and maintenance of an embankment on adjacent lands, which constitutes a private nuisance, will not preclude the wife from enjoining the nuisance. Nininger v. Norwood, 72 Ala. 277, 47 Am. Rep. 412.

Notice of husband's unauthorized act.—A wife cannot be held on a contract of her husband with plaintiff on the theory of actual or apparent authority in the husband, plaintiff being informed at the start by the husband that nothing could be done without his wife's approval. Simpson v. Bonnel, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 225.

7. Leland v. Collver, 34 Mich. 418.

Representations as to wife's financial condition.—A husband who manages a business belonging to his wife and buys and sells goods and purchases goods on her credit has implied authority to make representations as to her financial condition. Morris v. Posner, 111 Iowa 335, 82 N. W. 755.

Usurious contract of husband.—Where the wife has no knowledge of a usurious contract entered into by her husband as her agent, she is not liable. Brigham v. Myers, 51 Iowa 397, 1 N. W. 613, 33 Am. Rep. 140.

8. Quarg v. Scher, 136 Cal. 406, 69 Pac. 96; Knappen v. Freeman, 47 Minn. 491, 50 N. W. 533.

Not bound if statute prevents his agency.—Since a husband cannot be the agent of his wife for the sale of her land, the wife is not bound by false statements and representations made by her husband to induce a sale thereof. Lewis v. Hoeldtke, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 76 S. W. 309.

Tenant entering without authority.—Where defendant became a tenant at will by entering without authority and paying rent, false statements and representations as to the condition of the heating plant on the premises made by the husband as the agent of his wife are inadmissible as a defense in an action for rent brought by the wife. Van Brunt v. Wallace, 88 Minn. 116, 92 N. W. 521.

Not liable for husband's act in absence of privity.—The act of a husband in making a fraudulent alteration of the codicil to a will will not deprive the wife of an estate therein devised to her, there being no privity between them making her responsible for his acts. Camp v. Shaw, 61 Ill. App. 66.

where the wife employs her husband as her agent, property intrusted to him or coming into his possession by virtue of such relation belongs to her, and cannot be subjected by his creditors to his debts,¹⁰ except where there is a failure to comply with statutory provisions applicable to cases in which he transacts business without disclosing the name of his principal or partner.¹¹ If he disposes of her property without authority, there being no evidence to show that she held him out as her agent, she may recover the same.¹²

6. IMPROVEMENTS BY HUSBAND — a. In General. Improvements by the husband upon the lands of the wife will in general be presumed to be intended by him for her benefit,¹³ and he is consequently not entitled to compensation for the same;¹⁴ nor does he acquire thereby any lien on or interest in his wife's separate estate.¹⁵ Materials bought by him for the erection of a building or for other improvements upon her land will not be chargeable to her, in the absence of any agreement on her part.¹⁶ If, however, the husband is the actual agent of the wife for such purpose, a contract entered into by him for repairs or improvements upon her property will bind her;¹⁷ but his authority is not to be presumed

Mere knowledge of husband's dealing with her estate.—Where a husband in the transaction of his own business assumes to deal in his wife's name and on the credit of her estate, her knowledge of the fact will not operate to charge her with participation in the fraud, or charge her estate with liability for the indebtedness. Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N. J. Eq. 234. See Heavener v. Godfrey, 3 W. Va. 426.

Collusion.—Where a husband as the agent of his wife buys land for her at a price named, but by an arrangement between him and the vendor double that price is paid and the excess repaid to the husband and appropriated to his own use without the knowledge of the wife, she can recover the amount of such excess from the vendor in a suit for money had and received to her use. *Walker v. Wife's note for voluntary advancement void for want of consideration.—Where a husband voluntarily advanced money for the improvement of his wife's separate estate, such advance created no charge on the separate estate; and the wife's note therefor, and her promise subsequent to discovery to pay such note, are not founded on a valid consideration. Long v. Rankin, 108 N. C. 333, 12 S. E. 987.

Copartner's lien for partner's personal improvements of wife's estate.—If a partner expends money drawn by him on his own account from the firm's funds in improvements on his wife's separate property and in payment of interest on a mortgage thereon, and there is no proof that it was done surreptitiously, fraudulently, or without the knowledge of the copartner, the copartner is not entitled to a lien on the wife's property. Sharp v. Hibbins, 42 N. J. Eq. 543, 9 Atl. 113.

16. Russell v. Stoner, 18 Ind. App. 543, 47 N. E. 645, 48 N. E. 650.

Mechanic's lien without authority from wife.—A husband cannot, without authority, subject his wife's land to a mechanic's lien; and it is immaterial that the contract was made in her presence, and that the work was done under her inspection, the contract under which the lien is claimed being in writing. Geary v. Hennessy, 9 Ill. App. 17.

merely from the knowledge of or consent to the improvements.¹⁸ Whether or not the husband is the wife's agent in contracting for improvements upon her property, where the wife gives directions as to the manner of doing the work, is a question for the jury.¹⁹ Where, however, the husband may contract with his wife, improvements made by him may, by agreement between them, create a charge or lien in his favor.²⁰ The husband should be reimbursed, however, where the improvements are made because of a mistake in a deed naming him as well as his wife as grantee,²¹ or where the improvements are made under a contract between husband and wife afterward declared void.²²

b. Rights of Husband's Creditors. Where improvements are made in good faith by the husband, for the wife's benefit, and there is no fraud, his creditors cannot subject the same to the satisfaction of their claims.²³ But if a husband, to the prejudice of his creditors, expends money in improvements upon his wife's lands, they may charge the same to the extent of such improvements with liability for their claims.²⁴ Creditors cannot, however, charge the wife's separate estate with his labor or services in making improvements thereon,²⁵ or with materials furnished by him for such improvements, where such materials in his possession were exempt from execution.²⁶ The insolvency of the husband at the time the improvements are made will render the enhanced value of the property liable to the creditor's claims.²⁷

7. SERVICES OF HUSBAND— a. In General. If the husband voluntarily gives his time and skill to the management of his wife's separate estate, or bestows his labor thereon, there will be in general in the absence of any express agreement for compensation no obligation on her part to pay him.²⁸ By such gratuitous services he acquires no title to the increase or profits of her separate estate.²⁹ On the other hand it is said that, in the absence of a special contract, the husband as agent for the wife in regard to her separate estate is entitled to a reasonable compensation the same as any other agent.³⁰ So if his labor in managing her property exceeds in value the cost of supporting himself and family, he will be entitled to the ascertained excess.³¹

b. Rights of Husband's Creditors. In accordance with the principles stated in the preceding section, the creditors of the husband will have in general no rights against the separate estate of the wife for his voluntary services rendered in connection therewith,³² since he may make a valid gift to her of such services.³³ Likewise the crops or other increase of her property upon which the husband has gratuitously expended his time or skill are not thereby subjected to the payment of his debts.³⁴ Under a stipulated agreement, however, that he shall receive wages, a creditor may reach by action money due from the wife to the husband for his services;³⁵ and where, with money furnished by her, he engages in business under circumstances showing that the business is his own and not conducted by him as agent for her, his accumulations in such trade or business will be liable for his debts.³⁶ Some cases hold that, for the benefit of his creditors, the husband is entitled to the reasonable value of his services rather than the contract price, where husband and wife cannot contract with each other, for attending to the business of the wife.³⁷ Where the wife's success in business is due to the skill and industry of her husband, who conducted the business as her agent, real estate purchased with the profits of the business has been held to be subject to the husband's debts.³⁸

8. ACCOUNTABILITY FOR PROPERTY AND INCOME — a. In General. The husband, or upon his decease his estate, is in general bound to account to the wife for such part of the principal of her estate, provided the same is not a gift to him, as he receives for her,³⁹ or upon her death to her heirs or representatives.⁴⁰ Generally the receipt of the wife's property by the husband raises an implied promise to account for or repay it,⁴¹ although in some states the wife's consent to the use of her moneys or other property by her husband precludes the right to compel an accounting in regard thereto, in the absence of a promise to repay or account for such money or other property.⁴²

Funds used in support of family.—Where a husband received large sums of money belonging to his wife's separate estate as her agent, he is not entitled, in an action for an accounting, to charge sums deposited to his wife's credit in her bank-account, which was used entirely for the payment of family expenses, in the absence of proof that the wife had agreed to support the family. Young v. Valentine, 78 N. Y. App. Div. 633, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 536.

Where a husband uses his wife's separate funds to improve his property, she is entitled to be reimbursed, and the property so improved is liable therefor, so long as it remains in the hands of the husband or of his heirs, although the heirs are not liable personally. Parrish v. Williams, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 53 S. W. 79.

Burden on husband to prove a gift.—Under the statute giving the wife sole control of her separate property, where a husband has received his wife's money and claims it as his own, the burden is on him, as against her estate, to show her express assent to his taking the money for his own benefit. Yocum v. Allen, 58 Ohio St. 280, 50 N. E. 909.

Priorities.—Where a bailee of a wife's separate property transferred it to the husband, who converted it, the wife's right to the funds in the hands of a receiver appointed on her petition is superior to that of the bailee, but not to the rights of general creditors proving their demands before distribution. *Rieper v. In Maryland neither the husband nor his estate need account for the wife's property received by him with her knowledge and consent, unless there was an agreement to repay. Stockslager v. Devlin, supra), he or his estate must account for it.

become an additional part of her estate,⁴³ where the husband collects such rents and income he will generally be presumed to have received the same as her agent or trustee, and therefore accountable for the same.⁴⁴ Where, however, for many years she permits him to receive and use as his own the rents of her separate property, it has been held that she cannot after his death recover them from his estate, in absence of an express or implied agreement to account for them;⁴⁵ and her consent to his use of her income prevents her from compelling an accounting until such permission is revoked.⁴⁶ In a few states, either by statute or following the English equity rule, the husband has the right to receive the rents and income of the wife's statutory separate estate free from liability to account.⁴⁷ Under the English chancery doctrine, a wife can claim as creditor not more than one year's arrears of her separate estate, as in the case of pin-money;⁴⁸ and by statute in some of the states the husband's liability to account for the rents, profits, and income of the wife's separate estate is limited to a like period,⁴⁹

although it has been held that the statute does not apply where there is an express agreement to account.⁵⁰

c. Expenditures With Wife's Consent. Expenditures out of the wife's separate estate made by the husband with her knowledge and consent will not render him liable to account for the same.⁵¹

d. Confusion of Property. Where the wife permits the husband to so mix her property with his own that it cannot be distinguished or their proportionate values ascertained, the loss, as between her and those claiming under the husband, must fall upon her.⁵² If, however, without her consent, he mingles her separate property with his, she may recover from his assigns the value of her interest.⁵³

e. Interest. In the absence of any agreement therefor, express or implied, the husband is not in general liable for interest on money or other property of the wife's separate estate which she permits him to use or to keep in his possession,⁵⁴ except as provided for by statute.⁵⁵ Her representatives, however, if funds are retained by the husband after the decease of the wife, may be entitled to interest upon the same from the time of her death.⁵⁶ Where moreover the wife makes a valid loan to the husband of money belonging to her separate

Rents prior to divorce.—Where a husband buys property as a home for himself and family and conveys it to his wife, and she afterward goes into another state for the professed purpose of visiting her father and there obtains a divorce, he continuing to occupy the premises as his home, she cannot, in an action to recover possession, recover rents for the period prior to her divorce. *Edwards v. To be kept until called for.—If money is received by the husband for the wife, and at her request is to be kept by him until she shall call for it, his estate is not chargeable with interest thereon, no demand being shown. Boughton v. Flint, 74 N. Y. 476.

After death of husband.—When a husband is allowed to use his wife's money during his life without any claim for interest, the wife is not entitled to interest thereon until after his death. Wormley's Estate, 137 Pa. St. 101, 20 Atl. 621.

Money converted by husband.—Where a wife gave gold to her husband for a certain purpose, and he converted the greater part into currency and did not apply it as specified but bought real estate therefor and appropriated it to his own use, she may recover from his estate interest on the proceeds of the conversion. In re Jaeger, 1 Del. Express provision against liability for interest.—Where the husband agreed, in a marriage settlement, to account to the wife's trustees for personalty of hers coming into estate she may reeover interest,⁵⁷ especially when he has stipulated to pay it.⁵⁸ An exeecutor whose wife is residuary legatee may be held liable to account for interest on securities converted to his own use, even with her consent.⁵⁹

f. Accounting. As between husband and wife it has been held that an account stated is not even prima facie evidence of its correctness.⁶⁰ A bill for an accounting may be brought by the representatives of the deceased wife;⁶¹ and an action to recover property from the husband may be brought by a trustee appointed for the estate.⁶² So an accounting may be required on the wife's petition to have her husband removed from the trusteeship.⁶³ Where under the statute the husband is the trustee of the wife's statutory separate estate, it is held that a court of equity may direct its management in case the statute fails to properly protect the estate.⁶⁴ In a settlement of his trusteeship of the wife's separate estate, the husband should render to the court a full account of all moneys or other property received by him belonging to such estate, and credit himself with all proper payments or disbursements made by him as trustee.⁶⁵ The evidence must show that the husband received the property in question under such circumstances as to impose a trust upon him.⁶⁶ The husband as administrator of the wife's estate is not an insurer of the property, and where a house belonging to such estate was, after demand of possession made by the heirs of the wife, destroyed by fire, he is liable only in case the fire was the result of his negligence.⁶⁷

9. LIABILITY FOR WRONGFUL ACTS OR NEGLECT. For the wrongful conversion of the separate property of the wife the husband will be held liable,⁶⁸ as well as for waste committed by him upon her lands.⁶⁹

Money used by wife for personal needs.—In an action by a wife to recover from her husband's estate money received by him from her personal property, the mere fact that money paid by the husband to his wife and charged to her in his account of her separate property is used by her to pay for clothing and other necessities does not warrant the conclusion that the charges were improperly made, since she may pay for necessities from her own funds. Nostrand v. Ditmis, 127 N. Y. 355, 28 N. E. 27.

Book entries as sustaining action.—Where the books of the husband, whether kept by himself or his clerks, show charges against himself for moneys received in right of his wife, and charges against her for disbursements made by him for her account, and at his death a balance appears in favor of the wife, such entries will be sufficient to support an action by the wife or her representatives against the executors of the husband to recover such balance. *Adams v. Right to sell timber on wife's lands.—A husband has no right to commit waste on the lands of his wife, and therefore he cannot sell the growing timber on it, except so far as good husbandry permits to reduce a due proportion of the land to immediate cultivation. He can clear only so much as a prudent owner of the fee would, having proper

10. LIABILITIES TO THIRD PERSONS — a. Contracts as Agent or Trustee For Wife.

Where the husband as the lawful agent or duly authorized trustee of the wife contracts with third persons within the scope of his authority, he will not be personally liable thereon.⁷⁰ If, however, he acts without authority,⁷¹ or exceeds the authority given him,⁷² he will be liable. In dealing with third persons relative to his wife's separate estate, he may also bind himself by special agreement to such effect;⁷³ but the fact that it is known that he acts as a mere adviser to his wife will not render him liable for breach of contract on her part.⁷⁴ Where the wife is incapacitated to contract concerning her separate estate, the husband, assuming to act in her name, may make himself personally liable;⁷⁵ but not if the creditor does not depend upon the husband but gives the credit to the wife alone.⁷⁶

b. Wife's Separate Contracts. For the contracts made by the wife in her own name in connection with her separate property the husband is not personally liable.⁷⁷ If credit is given solely to her, the husband is not liable, although they live together, and he sees her in possession of goods bought or fruits of work ordered by her.⁷⁸ And in general for charges connected with her separate estate he incurs no personal liability by the mere fact of the marital relation.⁷⁹

c. Joint Contracts. Where husband and wife jointly contract with some third person, as where they join in executing a mortgage or a note, the husband will be personally liable,⁸⁰ although he may not have intended to bind himself.⁸¹ Where, however, the debt secured is that of the wife, he is not primarily liable,⁸² and if compelled to pay may be reimbursed out of the wife's land which was mortgaged to secure the note.⁸³ If the wife cannot bind herself, the husband

Admission of consideration.—In a deed by a husband and wife of her land, reciting a consideration "to them in hand paid," the husband admits consideration for his joinder in the covenants. Mygatt v. Coe, 142 N. Y. 78, 36 N. E. 870, 24 L. R. A. 850.

Personal covenant for life only.—The husband of a married woman, by joining in the execution of an agreement between her and adjoining landowners to reserve an open space in front of their lots, and any purchaser from him, are bound thereby during his life only. *Bradley v. will, however, be bound. For example the fact that she is not bound by her covenant in a conveyance of her lands in which the husband joins does not release him.⁸⁴

d. Torts in Management of Separate Property. The husband is not liable for the torts of his wife committed by her in the management and control of her separate property.⁸⁵ In order to make him responsible, there must have been participation by him in the wrong or an obligation on his part to obviate the cause.⁸⁶ Thus it has been held that he is not responsible for her harboring of a vicious dog upon her separate estate,⁸⁷ for her setting fire to her own insured house, thereby destroying her tenant's furniture,⁸⁸ or for the trespass of her cattle.⁸⁹ Likewise it is held that, although living with her on her separate property, he is not, in legal presumption, so in control thereof as to make him liable for injuries sustained by her carelessly leaving a pit thereon uncovered.⁹⁰

C. Liabilities and Charges — 1. WHAT LAW GOVERNS. A contract made in one state which binds the separate estate of a married woman will generally be enforced in another state according to the laws of the former state.⁹¹ On the other hand it has been held that, although the contract is invalid in the state where made, its enforceability is to be determined by the laws of the state where the action is brought.⁹² Some decisions seem to hold that the domicile of the wife governs.⁹³ It has been held that her separate property situated in one state is liable for a debt contracted in another state, if such debt is binding upon her in the state where she resided at the time the contract was made, although she would not have been competent to bind herself in the state where the property is situated.⁹⁴ A local statutory remedy of one state to enforce a liability cannot be

Local equity rule not enforceable elsewhere.—It appearing that in Ohio married women are not authorized to contract generally, although where they engage in business and execute notes a court of equity will hold their separate estate liable so far as found within the state, a recovery cannot be had in Pennsylvania on business notes of a married woman living and doing business in Ohio and owning real estate in Pennsylvania, there being no liability in such case by the Pennsylvania law. Note void in one state may be a charge in place of forum.—Where a married woman possessing a separate estate situated in Ohio signs a note in Indiana as surety for her husband, which note is void under the laws of the latter state, in an action brought in Ohio the question whether the execution of the note operated as a charge on her Ohio estate is to be determined by the laws of Ohio. Statutory liability not extended to parties domiciled elsewhere.—The liability of a wife's statutory separate estate for contracts for necessities, being statutory, does not extend to contracts made and performed in another state where the contracting parties are domiciled. Judge v. Wright, 73 Ala. 324.

94. Gibson v. Sublett, 82 Ky. 596; Toof v. Brewer, (Miss. 1888) 3 So. 571.

Temporary resident.—The Illinois statute making both husband and wife liable for the family expenses, even though applicable to citizens of other states temporarily in that state, does not impose any liability on the applied, however, by the courts of another state,⁹⁵ since the remedy is governed by the lex fori.⁹⁶ The liability of the wife's separate real estate for her debts has been held to be governed by the law of the state where such real property is situated.⁹⁷

2. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO LIABILITY — a. In General. The property of the wife's separate estate that may be subjected to her statutory liabilities and charges depends of course upon the provisions of the local statutes, and the construction of the same by the courts. Where a married woman may by statute contract as freely as if unmarried, all her statutory separate estate, except such as is specifically exempted, is liable for her debts.⁹⁸ "All property not exempt by law" is liable under some statutes for the payment of debts contracted for family necessities.⁹⁹ It is the general rule that the statutory separate estate is in equity liable the same as the equitable separate estate would be,¹ except as affected by the limitation of particular statutes preventing a charge on her separate property for her individual contracts.² If, however, the statutory separate estate is liable, no change in the form of the property can defeat proceedings to subject it to the payment of claims.³ Under a statute providing that "all the property" held in any manner shall be liable, the wife's equitable interests in property are included.⁴ In enforcing a charge in equity the court will generally decree payment to be made out of the personal property and the rents and profits of the land, before decreeing the principal or corpus of the estate to be sold;⁵ and in some states it is held that the realty itself cannot be sold to satisfy the wife's debt, unless the wife which will be enforced by the courts of other states, for purchases made by the husband without her knowledge while they were temporarily in Illinois. Mandell v. Fogg, 182 Mass. 582, 66 N. E. 198, 94 Am. St. Rep. 667. A husband and wife while temporarily residing in Louisiana entered into a contract with a bank of that state. It was held that the contract could not be enforced against her personally in Mississippi, where she resided. Louisiana Bank v. Williams, 46 Miss. 618, 12 Am. Rep. 319.

Separate estates in different jurisdictions.—Where a wife has a separate estate in lands in Tennessee and also in Mississippi, a Tennessee court of chancery will not charge the Tennessee lands with expenditures made for the benefit of the Mississippi estate. *Shacklett v. creditor has a specific lien on the property.⁶ By force of statute, however, a married woman may bind both the income and the corpus of her separate estate.⁷ A charge imposed by her upon a specific part of her estate will in general be limited to such express portion,⁸ but otherwise the entire estate may be liable.⁹

b. Equitable Separate Estate. Property held by a trustee for the benefit of a married woman is chargeable with her debts in equity, within the limits of her powers to contract concerning the same;¹⁰ but not where, by statute or otherwise, she has no power to contract.¹¹ In some jurisdictions a married woman can charge her equitable separate estate only when power to do so is given her in the instrument creating it;¹² but generally her equitable separate estate held in trust will be liable in equity for her debts, unless the power to charge is restricted by the instrument creating it.¹³ Where a deed of trust expressly authorizes the subjection of it by her creditors, any creditor may avail himself of that privilege.¹⁴

c. Time of Acquiring Property. Under the rule in equity, the liability of the wife's separate estate extends only to the property or interest owned by her at the time the liability was incurred,¹⁵ and this rule is recognized in connection with the married women's acts.¹⁶ In general therefore the separate property of the wife acquired after making a contract or incurring a debt cannot be charged with liability in regard thereto.¹⁷ In some states, however, by express provision of the statute or judicial construction thereof a liability may be enforced as well against the after-acquired separate estate as that held when the debt was created.¹⁸

d. Life Insurance. Proceeds of an insurance policy on the life of the husband paid to the wife after his death, although exempt from liability for the husband's debts, are liable for the debts of the wife.¹⁹ Such insurance, however, cannot be subjected to the payment of a debt originating previous to payment of the loss and at a time when a married woman could charge by contract only separate property possessed at the time.²⁰

3. PURCHASE-MONEY AND PRIOR ENCUMBRANCES— a. Vendor's Lien. A vendor's lien may attach to a purchase of lands by a married woman.²¹ So where a deed conveying land to a married woman as separate property reserves a lien upon it for money, the fee may be sold for its payment.²²

In equity lands bought by a married woman will be liable for the purchase-price,²³ and although a note given by her therefor may be void as a personal obligation, the land may be subjected to the payment of the lien.²⁴ Where, under the statutes, a married woman may

Must have some separate estate at the time of contract.—The English statute of 1882 does not enable a married woman who had no existing separate estate to bind by contract property afterward acquired, but merely enables a creditor to enforce a charge against subsequently acquired property if the debt was originally incurred upon faith of property in existence at the time. *Deakin v. The assignee of a married woman's note for land sold by title bond can compel her in equity to pay the note or surrender the land. Hendrick v. Foote, 57 Miss. 117.

A lien reserved in a deed to a married woman of land, purchased with her husband's consent, to secure her notes given therefor, may be enforced against the land, although the notes are void because of her coverture; and she is not entitled to have the conveyance declared void and the money paid bind herself by contract for the purchase-price, or may execute a valid note or mortgage to secure the same, the obligation may be enforced against the land,²⁵ or she may be held personally liable on the contract.²⁶

c. Husband's Obligation For Purchase-Price. Where the husband gives his personal note for the balance of the purchase-money of land bought by the wife, the vendor has no lien on the land for such balance.²⁷ An agreement, however, that one who advances part of the purchase-price for lands purchased by a husband and wife, the legal title being conveyed to the wife alone, shall have a lien thereon for such amount advanced is good against the husband to the extent of his marital interest in the land.²⁸

d. Joint Obligation For Purchase-Price. The vendor may have a lien upon the land for the purchase-price, although a note to secure the same is executed jointly by the husband and wife.²⁹ Where, however, title to land is taken in the name of the wife, and a joint note executed by the husband and wife as evidence of a loan negotiated to raise the purchase-money is invalid as to the wife on account of her coverture, the payee of the note cannot subject the land to its payment, no fraud being shown.³⁰

e. Trustee's Note For Purchase-Price. A trustee of the wife's separate estate may bind the trust estate by his note for the purchase-price of property for her separate use.³¹

f. Encumbrances. Land upon which there are existing encumbrances when conveyed to a married woman remains liable for their payment,³² although, by her refunded, although consenting to account for rents and profits; nor can she or her husband recover for improvements. Bedford v. Burton, 106 U. S. 338, 1 S. Ct. 98, 27 L. ed. 112.

Taking subject to encumbrances.—As a married woman who accepts a deed conveying land takes the land with the burdens thereby imposed, a provision in such a deed for a lien in favor of a third person is valid, the statute providing that a married woman shall not encumber her land except by the execution of a deed in which her husband unites having no application. *Blakeley v. Renewal of note given under previous coverture.—Under a statute providing that a wife may contract debts for the benefit of her separate property, a widow who has remarried has power to renew a note given by her former husband and herself as part of the purchase-price of property, where the owner of the note is threatening to foreclose a lien on the premises for the purchase-price, so as to keep the purchase-money lien from being barred by limitations as to her interest. *Proetzel v. Joint bond paid by wife as husband's executrix.—A husband bought land and caused the deed to be made to his wife. Both joined in a bond and mortgage for part of the purchase-money. The husband died, and his wife as executrix paid the bond. Equitable transfer of encumbrance to property taken in exchange.—A married because of the disability of coverture, her covenant to pay the encumbrance would not have bound her or any of her separate property except the land so conveyed.³³ Where, however, she may bind herself by contract, her agreement to pay a mortgage or other encumbrance will render her personally liable;³⁴ and her separate estate³⁵ or she herself³⁶ may be held liable for any deficiency. The fact that her assumption of a mortgage debt would not bind her personally does not invalidate a similar assuming of the debt by her subsequent grantee.³⁷

4. RIGHTS OF HUSBAND'S CREDITORS — a. In General. An essential attribute of the wife's separate estate is that it is not liable for her husband's debts,³⁸ and she is entitled in equity to relief by injunction against the levy of execution thereon by his creditors.³⁹ Separate property derived from her husband in fraud of his creditors may, however, be reached by them,⁴⁰ but the creditor cannot reach property other than that fraudulently conveyed.⁴¹ The rights of the wife are superior to those of her husband's creditors where she furnishes from her separate estate part of the price of land purchased by her husband,⁴² or where a note for the purchase-price of her land is, by mistake, executed to her husband.⁴³ Notice by the husband's creditors, at the time credit was extended, of the real ownership of the wife will protect such property from the creditor's claim.⁴⁴

b. Effect of Use of Property by Husband. Where the husband uses, or is in control of, the separate estate of his wife as her business manager or agent, his possession of her property under such circumstances will not make it liable for woman, after exchanging deeds of a lot, her separate estate, for a mill property refused to fulfil her promise to remove an encumbrance on the former. It was held that equity would compel a sale of the latter for payment of the encumbrance. Pratt v. Eaton, 65 Mo. 157.

his debts;⁴⁵ the wife may employ the services of her husband in connection with her separate estate without subjecting the same to the claims of his creditors.⁴⁶ The fact that the wife's separate property has increased through the skill and industry of her husband's services does not generally make it subject to his debts,⁴⁷ although the rule has been modified to some extent according to the value of the services.⁴⁸ Where, however, the wife permits her husband to use funds or other property belonging to her separate estate under such circumstances as to justify creditors in believing that the property is his own, no evidence appearing that he is acting merely as agent, the property so used by him and upon which credit has been extended in good faith will be liable for such debts.⁴⁹ However, unless the wife had knowledge of the acts of the husband,⁵⁰ and the creditor was misled by the supposed ownership of the husband or extended credit upon the strength of the apparent ownership,⁵¹ the wife's property will not be liable. Where husband and wife are living together the mere use of her chattels by him will not render them liable to attachment for his debts;⁵² but a gift to the husband of her property or of its use will make it liable to the extent of his interest.⁵³ In some states, in order to protect the wife's separate property against the husband's creditors, a notice of her ownership,⁵⁴ or a certificate of the nature and location of her separate business,⁵⁵ must be filed as directed by the statute. In some states the wife's consent in writing must be shown before her property in the husband's possession can be sufficiently established as his own and liable for his debts.⁵⁶

5. IMPROVEMENTS AND MATERIALS FURNISHED—a. Contract of Wife in General. For work and labor performed and materials furnished for the necessary improvement of her separate estate a married woman may in general charge in equity her separate estate,⁵⁷ or, when able to bind herself by contract, render herself personally liable.⁵⁸ Repairs ordered independently by her father, who resides with her,⁵⁹ or apartment decorations ordered by her as part of her duty in looking after the home,⁶⁰ will, however, bind neither her estate nor herself. A debt contracted by a married woman for the improvement or preservation of her separate estate is presumed in some jurisdictions to have been intended to charge such estate.⁶¹ The statutes in some states require the contract to be in writing in order to obtain a personal judgment against her.⁶²

b. Contract of Husband—(1) IN GENERAL. The husband cannot upon his own responsibility, having no authority to act as agent for his wife, bind her separate estate by his contract for improvements or repairs thereon, or render her liable therefor.⁶³

 Agency may be inferred.—Evidence that a husband who had the management of a parcel of land of his wife ordered materials for building a house thereon, and that she knew that the house was being built, and occupied it when finished, will warrant the jury, in a suit against her for the price of the materials, in finding that he acted as her agent. making of an improvement on her separate property under a contract with her husband, or her consent thereto,⁶⁹ or both,⁷⁰ does not necessarily render her liable therefor or create a lien on the property improved, yet such facts usually constitute a ratification of her husband's contract which will give the person doing the work or furnishing the materials either a lien or a cause of action against the wife personally.⁷¹ If the contract is one beyond her power to make, however, her subsequent promise to pay will not bind her.⁷²

c. Joint Contract by Husband and Wife. If the wife has power to make a contract, a joint contract by herself and husband for improvements upon her separate property, or for materials furnished in connection therewith, will bind her.⁷³ The question of her liability must be determined in each case by her power to bind herself or her estate by such contract.⁷⁴

d. Estoppel of Wife to Deny Liability. The wife, by her conduct in connection with repairs or improvements upon her separate estate, may so confirm the bona fide belief that the husband was acting, in ordering such repairs, as her agent, as to be estopped from denying her liability.⁷⁵ Mere knowledge on her part,⁷⁶ or her failure to dissent to the improvements,⁷⁷ is not sufficient, however, to estop her.

Statute may provide sole method of contract.—Under the statute providing that no woman, during her coverture, shall, without her husband's written consent, make any contract to affect her real estate, except for her necessary personal expenses, etc., unless she be a free trader, a married woman is not liable for labor and material furnished for her real estate under her husband's contract, although the evidence tends to show that she was aware of the contract, and ratified and approved it. *Weir v. Joint note.—A note executed jointly by husband and wife in payment for lumber used in repairing their house, which belonged to the wife, is sufficient "evidence in writing" to support a mechanic's lien on the house, under the laws rendering the estate of a married woman liable for necessities furnished to her or her family when the indebtedness is evidenced by writing signed by her and her husband. Marsh v. Alford, 5 Bush (Ky.) 392. That a wife knew that her husband was building on her land and joined with him in a note given for the work does not prove such a participation in the contract for the work as will give a right to file a lien against her interest in the land. Hughes v. Anslyn, 7 Mo. App. 400.

Brown*, 100 Ala. 217, 14 So. 110.

Misrepresentations.—If a married woman is in the possession of property, claiming to own and control it, and on her declaration of ownership employs a person to make improvements thereon under the belief that it is her separate property, she will be estopped from denying that she owned it, when sued for the value of the labor performed. *Nixon v. e. Lien For Repairs or Improvements. It is generally held that the statutes regarding mechanics' liens apply to the estates of married women where, by express or implied authority from her, repairs or improvements are made upon her separate property.⁷⁸ Irrespective of the statute, an equitable lien moreover will be created where she charges her estate for such benefits.⁷⁹ In the absence of a contract made by the wife herself, no statutory lien is created unless all the requirements of the statute have been complied with.⁸⁰ Where a married woman's disability to contract has been removed, she has the same power to create liens for improvements as has a feme sole;⁸¹ but in some jurisdictions, by statute, a lien can be created only by a written contract signed by her.⁸² Her lands cannot ordinarily be subjected to a lien by the contract of her husband on his own credit.⁸³

6. NECESSARIES AND FAMILY EXPENSES⁸⁴ — a. In General. Although a wife's estate is secured to her separate use, the husband's common-law duty to maintain her during coverture and to provide family necessities still remains.⁸⁵ In equity she may, however, bind her separate estate for necessities,⁸⁶ and generally under her statutory powers to contract her agreement to pay for necessities will be

Under the New York statute of 1860, providing that the property of any married woman shall not be liable for her husband's debts, "except such debts as may have been contracted for the support of herself or her children, by her as his agent," her estate is liable for goods purchased by her as his agent, if necessary for and used in the support of herself and children. *Covert v. Oregon.—Black v. Sippy, 15 Ore. 574, 16 Pac. 418; Watkins v. Mason, 11 Ore. 72, 4 Pac. 524.

Liability as limited to statutory estate.—An action for necessaries supplied for the wife's use during coverture cannot be main-

b. Persons Included in Family.⁹² Minor children⁹³ and domestic servants⁹⁴ are a part of the "household" for the expenses of which the separate estate of the wife is liable; but laborers employed by the husband in cultivating the wife's lands,⁹⁵ children of the husband by a former marriage,⁹⁶ or married sons with his own family,⁹⁷ are not included.

c. Requisites of Contract. In some states, by statute, in order to bind the estate of the wife, the contract must be in writing and signed by both husband and wife.⁹⁸ That the wife's contract was made on the faith or credit of her separate estate,⁹⁹ or made an express charge upon the same,¹ may also be necessary in order to bind her property or herself.

d. Contract by Husband. If the wife's separate estate is made, by the statute, generally liable for the support of the family, it will be charged, although the husband contracted the debt in his own name;² but it is otherwise if the articles were purchased for the husband's exclusive use.³ Where the article is not necessary, her property cannot be bound if she protests against the purchase and gives notice that she will not be bound thereby.⁴ Where the husband acts as her duly authorized agent her estate will be bound,⁵ but a settlement giving the husband the rents and income of her separate estate for the family maintetained under Ala. Code, §§ 1987, 2131, if the separate estate of the wife is made such by the instrument creating it and independent of legislation. Baker v. Flournoy, 58 Ala. 650; Cannon v. Turner, 32 Ala. 483.

Liability dependent upon husband's inability.—Under a statute providing that if a husband is unable to support himself, his wife, and minor children, the wife shall assist him so far as she is able, an action against a wife for supplies used in support of the family can be sustained only by proof that the husband is unable to support such family out of his property or by his labor. Kelley v. Mills, 2 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 265, 1 Ohio N. P. 382.

Action for breach of contract.—The statute which creates a joint liability on the part of the husband and wife for family necessaries, and provides "that judgment shall not be rendered against the wife, in such joint action, unless it shall have been proved that the debt sued for in such action was contracted by the wife, or incurred for articles necessary for the support of the family of the husband and wife," does not render a married woman liable in a joint action for damages for breach of an executory contract of the wife for necessaries. Fell v. Brown, 115 Pa. St. 218, 8 Atl. 70.

Judgment against husband as condition precedent.—Under a statute providing that both husband and wife shall be liable for the price of articles purchased by either for the benefit of both, but that the husband's property, when found, shall be first applied to satisfy any such joint liability, a judgment against the husband is not a condition precedent to an action against the wife, since the statute refers to proceedings to collect the judgment rather than to obtain judgment. *Buckingham v. Confusion of the accounts for the family and for the husband in a running account does not preclude the right to charge the wife's separate estate with the price of articles for the support and maintenance of the family. Lee v. Tannenbaum, 62 Ala. 501.

4. Haggard v. Holmes, 90 Iowa 308, 57 N. W. 871.

nance will not empower him to subject the principal to liability for such debts.⁶ Where a husband applies the principal of his wife's separate property in the support of their family, she may, in the absence of an agreement to repay the same, recover it back.⁷ The wife may consent to the husband's act, and thus make her separate estate liable.⁸

e. What Constitutes Necessaries⁹—(1) IN GENERAL. No exact legal definition of family necessities can be given,¹⁰ the question of what are necessities chargeable on a wife's separate estate being a mixed question of law and fact.¹¹ The quantity and quality of the articles purchased,¹² and the wife's estate and rank in society,¹³ are properly considered in connection with the inquiry. Under necessities and "expense for the family," chargeable either against the wife's estate or herself, have been included a cooking stove,¹⁴ meat for food,¹⁵ a sewing-machine,¹⁶ a piano,¹⁷ an organ,¹⁸ musical instruction rendered to her children,¹⁹ a carriage for personal use,²⁰ services of an attorney in protecting her property rights,²¹ medical attendance for her husband,²² taxes paid by her grantee and the value of improvements made by him when he entered in good faith under her invalid deed,²³ a diamond shirt stud worn by the husband,²⁴ and any debt incurred on account of the family, the subject of the debt to be used in the family.²⁵ On the other hand, necessities and family expenses in relation to the wife's separate estate or personal liability have been held to not include money borrowed to pay for articles, although in themselves proper items of family expense,²⁶ a note for money borrowed to pay interest on a mortgage on the wife's dwelling-house,²⁷ a debt for rent of a hotel leased by the wife for profit,²⁸ goods supplied to a married woman for the purposes of a boarding-house,²⁹ a note given for the college tuition of a daughter,³⁰ a debt incurred in procuring a substitute for the husband when drafted,³¹ her contract for the erection of a house upon her lands,³² or for the construction of additions to a house on her property,³³ furniture and upholstery purchased by her,³⁴ and services for the care of an inebriate husband separated

Statute preventing wife from becoming a surety.—While a married woman having an estate may bind herself for necessities, it is essential that the credit originally should be given to her, and not alone to the husband; but if it is given to him alone, and the wife afterward signs a note with him therefor, she will not then be liable as an original debtor, but as a mere security, and her property cannot be subjected to its payment. *McMahon v. from her.³⁵ Gutters, spouts, and stove-pipe;³⁶ pipes, tobacco, cigars, newspapers;³⁷ and a smoke-house, carriage-house, and fencing³⁸ have been held not chargeable on the wife's separate estate. So a debt contracted by the husband for moneys and supplies for the improvement of the wife's separate estate,³⁹ the expense of farming operations,⁴⁰ a plow,⁴¹ and a reaper⁴² have been held not necessities or family expenses. Since the question of what constitutes necessities often turns upon the language of the statute or upon the statutory limitation imposed upon the wife's power to contract, the decisions of each state should be independently consulted.⁴³

(ii) RENT OF DWELLING. Under the statutory liability for family expenses, the wife's property or she personally, as the law may provide, will be liable for dwelling-house rent;⁴⁴ but the wife is not liable for rent during a time when the premises were not occupied by her.⁴⁵

f. *Medical Services.*⁴⁶ The common-law duty of the husband to support the wife and family includes proper medical service for them,⁴⁷ and hence the wife's separate estate is not liable for such medical attendance unless she has bound the same for the payment of the services.⁴⁸ A married woman may, however, bind her separate property for family medical services,⁴⁹ and under a general power to bind herself by contract she may render herself personally liable⁵⁰

Medical service pending action for divorce.—A married woman is not liable for medical services rendered pending an action for divorce, during the receipt of alimony from her husband, where she has not bound herself as prescribed by statute. Gougler's Estate, 18 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 116.

Services rendered husband.—A credit for medical services rendered for plaintiff's deceased husband cannot be claimed as an offset to a note owned by her, as such service is chargeable to the estate of the husband. Hollandsworth v. Squires, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 1044.

Agreement to pay.—A married woman is not personally liable for medical services rendered to her and her child at her own request, in the absence of special agreement making her so, although N. Y. Laws (1896), p. 220, c. 272, permits actions against a mar-therefor. The statutory liability imposed upon both husband and wife for necessities for the family generally includes medical services.⁵¹

g. Funeral Expenses. Following the common-law rule that the surviving husband is bound to pay the reasonable funeral expenses of his deceased wife,⁵² it has been held in some jurisdictions that, although the wife possesses a separate estate, it is not liable for her burial expenses, and that the husband is not entitled to charge such expense against her estate.⁵³ Other cases, while recognizing the husband's general liability, hold that the estate of the wife is liable in case of the husband's insolvency.⁵⁴ The weight of authority, nevertheless, under the married women's acts, holds that the estate of the wife who dies leaving separate property is primarily liable for her funeral expenses, and that the husband having paid the same may recover from such estate.⁵⁵ The wife, however, is not bound to use her separate property for the payment of the husband's funeral expenses.⁵⁶

h. Lien of Boarding-House Keeper. A statute giving a boarding-house keeper a lien on the goods of boarders, the same as the common law gives to innkeepers, does not apply to the separate effects of the wife living at a boarding-house with her husband.⁵⁷

Limited powers of making contracts.—Wis. Rev. St. (1898) § 2345, making a married woman liable to suit in connection with her separate property or business, does not remove the common-law disability rendering her not liable for the services of a physician, contracted by her for herself and family, since such contract does not relate to her separate property or business. *Stack v. Provisions in will.—Although the duty of burying the body of his deceased wife rests on the husband, the wife may charge by her will her own separate estate with the funeral expenses, and, where she has done so, such expenses cannot be charged to the husband. Jackson v. Westerfield, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 399. Since a husband is primarily liable for the funeral expenses of his wife, he cannot, although the wife's will directs that such expenses be paid out of her estate, on payment of such expenses, claim that he be reimbursed therefor, as against the wife's creditors. Wheeler's Estate, 4 Pa. Dist. 265, 36 Wkly. Notes Cas. 296.

7. CONTRACTS IN GENERAL—a. Introduction. Probably no other question in the law relating to married women is attended with so many perplexities and with so much confusion, so far as any general application is concerned, as the question of the general powers of a married woman to contract with reference to her separate estate. In equity, both in England and in the United States, the decisions have so varied from time to time that any attempt to harmonize them is hopeless. In many jurisdictions the contract, in order to charge the separate estate, must be for its benefit, must be expressly charged thereon, or must be expressly upon its credit, or an intent to charge the estate must exist. Yet what amounts to an intent to charge, or what is for the estate's benefit, or what constitutes an express charge, or what amounts to a contract upon its credit, and what, under the statutes, "relates" to the separate estate, or what contracts are implied from the statute, are questions concerning which the courts are widely divergent. The decisions of the practitioner's own state should be carefully reviewed, since but little help, owing to the differences in judicial opinion and the diversity of statutes, can be obtained from the decisions of other jurisdictions.

b. Equitable Separate Estate. A married woman's common-law disability to make contracts is not removed by the fact that she possesses an equitable separate estate, and such estate is not liable, at common law, for the payment of her debts.⁵⁸ By the English chancery rule, a married woman is regarded as a feme sole as concerns her power to make contracts upon the faith and credit of her equitable separate estate, except as otherwise restricted by the terms of the instrument creating it.⁵⁹ In other words where, by her contract, an unmarried woman would be bound personally, a married woman possessing an equitable separate estate will, by her contract, upon its faith and credit, charge the same thereby, although she will not be personally liable.⁶⁰ In the United States two equitable Credit given to separate property.—Something more than the obligation which the law would create in the case of a single woman is necessary to affect the separate estate of a married woman; and in order to bind the separate estate by a general engagement, it should appear that an engagement was made with reference to and upon the faith or credit of that estate. Johnson v. Gallagher, 3 De G. F. & J. 494, 7 Jur. N. S. 273, 30 L. J. Ch. 298, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 72, 9 Wkly. Rep.

rules are recognized. One is that of the English courts that a married woman may in equity contract as a feme sole upon the faith and credit of her equitable separate estate unless prevented by the creating instrument;⁶¹ the other is that the wife can in equity bind by contract her equitable separate estate only when expressly empowered to do so by the conveyance, will, or other instrument that gave her the separate use of such estate.⁶² By force of statute a married woman

Theory of wife's right to charge.—The early cases placed the wife's right to charge her separate estate upon her right as owner to dispose of it. See Fettiplace v. Gorges, 3 Bro. Ch. 8, 29 Eng. Reprint 374; Hulme v. Tenant, 1 Bro. Ch. 16, 28 Eng. Reprint 958, Dick. 560, 21 Eng. Reprint 388. A later theory, however, was advanced to the effect that the wife's charge operated as an appointment of her separate property. See Bolton v. Williams, 4 Bro. Ch. 297, 29 Eng. Reprint 901, 2 Ves. Jr. 138, 30 Eng. Reprint 561. In the subsequent case of Owens v. Dickenson, Cr. & Ph. 48, 4 Jur. 1151, 18 Eng. Ch. 48, 41 Eng. Reprint 407, the doctrine was enunciated as follows: "The general engagements of a married woman are enforced by a court of equity against her separate estate, not as executions of a power of appointment, but on the principle that to whatever extent she has, by the terms of the settlement, the power of dealing with her separate property, she has also the other power incident to property in general, namely, the power of contracting debts to be paid out of it."

may acquire legal contractual powers over her equitable separate estate;⁶² but although possessing such statutory powers of contract, she may also charge the estate in equity even as before.⁶⁴ If, however, the statute gives her the right to contract and to be sued as a feme sole, the reason for invoking her right or liability to charge her estate in equity fails, since there is an adequate remedy at law.⁶⁵

c. Statutory Separate Estate. General property acts relating to married women do not in themselves enlarge their power to contract debts not connected with their statutory property.⁶⁶ The equitable rules regarding the right to contract are generally held by courts of chancery to apply also to the statutory separate estate;⁶⁷ that is the wife may in equity, unless restricted by the statute, charge her statutory separate estate in the same way as she is empowered to charge her equitable separate estate.⁶⁸ However, if the statutory mode of contracting is inclusive, it must be followed.⁶⁹ Some jurisdictions, however, hold that the doctrine of equitable contract does not extend to separate estates created by law.⁷⁰ The statutory power to contract in connection with her ownership of statutory separate property depends upon the form of the statute or the judicial interpretation of the same. Even in the same jurisdiction, as the statutes have changed, her contractual powers have changed in accordance with them. Under some statutes, she has full contractual powers as a feme sole.⁷¹ Under other statutes, either general or limited, power is conferred upon her to make contracts

Liberal construction.—Statutes enlarging the rights of married women should be liberally construed. Wills v. Jones, 13 App. Cas. (D. C.) 482; Kriz v. Peege, 119 Wis. 105, 95 N. W. 108. See also supra, V, A, 3, b, (III).

Equity may refuse to apply general statutes to married women.—A change in the statutes of a state by which a married woman is given the same power to make contracts as though she were single, with the same rights and liabilities, in the absence of an authoritative construction by the state courts, will not be construed by a federal court of equity to

d. Consideration. As in case of other contracts, the enforceability of a married woman's contract either against herself or as a charge upon her separate estate depends upon the existence of a consideration.⁷⁵ While some cases hold that in order to charge the separate estate of the wife the consideration of the contract must be for the benefit of the wife or of such estate,⁷⁶ and others that the intention to charge the estate must be expressly declared in the contract or else the consideration must be for the benefit of the estate itself,⁷⁷ the rule followed in other cases is that the separate estate will be charged when the liability is incurred upon the faith and credit of such estate.⁷⁸ That the consideration was in fact for her own benefit or for the benefit of her separate estate will like-abolish an exception in her favor, and place her within the general rule of the state, which makes invalid restrictions on the power to anticipate or charge future income. Hunter v. Conrad, 94 Fed. 11.

Mere assertion of benefit not sufficient.—Although a note of a husband and wife bears beneath the signature a statement by the wife that the note is made for the benefit of her separate estate, and that she charges such estate with payment, there can be no recovery against her in an action on the note unless it be shown that the transaction was necessary for the use of her separate estate, or the carrying on of her separate business, or in relation to her personal services. *Ritter v. Express intent either in writing or verbally.—If a married woman declares expressly and in writing her intention to charge her separate equitable estate, or if she so declares verbally, and her contract is for the benefit of herself or her separate estate, the charge will be valid. Elliott v. Gower, 12 R. I. 79, 34 Am. Rep. 600.

Intention not apparent from instrument.—Under the South Carolina act of 1887, providing that a mortgage by a married woman of her separate estate shall be a charge thereon whenever an intention to that effect is declared in the mortgage, no such intention need appear in the instrument, if it was in fact executed for the benefit of her separate estate. Gibson v. Hutchins, 43 S. C. 287, 21 S. E. 250. See also Rigby v. Logan, 45 S. C. 651, 24 S. E. 56.

Wife living apart from husband.—Where a married woman for several years lived apart from her husband, and was in possession of a separate estate, and supported herself and her children by her own means, her separate estate is liable for a contract made by her for such support, if the other party to the contract entered into it on the faith of such estate. Conlin v. Cantrell, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 312.

Effect of statute.—Where the statute provides that the separate estate can be sold or encumbered only by an order of a court of equity, a debt incurred upon the faith and wise be sufficient generally to charge it.⁷⁹ When a contract can be sustained upon the fact that it was entered into upon the credit of the estate, or under statutory authority to contract in respect to the same, the consideration need not move directly to the wife.⁸⁰

e. Contracts For Legal Services. In general contracts made by the wife for legal services for the benefit of herself or of her separate estate are proper charges upon such estate.⁸¹ Under the statutory authority to contract in relation to her separate estate, she may also become personally liable for the services of an attorney employed by her in protecting her property rights.⁸² Legal services procured by her husband, in the absence of evidence that he acted as her agent, are not binding, however, upon her or upon her estate, although such services may have been beneficial to her.⁸³ credit of such estate will not charge it. Hanly v. Downing, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 95.

Vermont.—Sargeant v. French, 54 Vt. 384.

Representation concerning benefit.—A married woman to whom a loan is made on her husband's representation in her presence that it is for the benefit of her separate estate, understood by the wife and believed and relied on by the lender in good faith, is liable, although no part of the money was in fact so used. Vosburg v. Brown, 119 Mich. 697, 78 N. W. 886.

Instrument may restrict debts.—A married woman is only sub modo a feme sole in dealing with her separate estate. Her debts contracted in its management and for its benefit, or for her benefit on the credit of such estate, will be enforced in equity, against such estate, whether the same consists of personal or real estate, unless the instrument creating such estate protects it against being charged with such debts. *Dale v. Employment of counsel to defend son.—The employment of counsel by a married woman, living separate from her husband, to defend her son against the charge of murder is such a meritorious claim as will authorize the chancellor to decree its payment out of her separate estate. Coleman v. Wooley, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 320. Contra, see Lee v. Winston, 68 Ala. 402.

Attorney in divorce suit.—A married woman may make herself chargeable for the services of an attorney employed by her in a divorce suit. Oswalt v. Moore, 19 Ark. 257; McCurdy v. Dillon, 135 Mich. 678, 98 N. W. 746; Owen v. Griffin, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 670. But the separate estate of a married woman is not liable for professional services rendered in procuring her divorce, unless it is proved that she contracted to pay for the services or undertook so to charge the estate. Pfirshing v. Falsh, 87 Ill. 260.

Must prove authorization.—In an action on a note for attorney's fees against husband and wife, where plaintiffs seek to enforce the same against the wife's separate property, they must show, not only that the services were necessary for the protection of her separate rights, but that the contract of employment was made by her, or her husband as her authorized agent. Cushman v. Masterson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 64 S. W. 1031.

Stipulation in note for attorney's fees.—Although a wife's property is chargeable with family expenses, she is not chargeable with attorney's fees and interest at ten per cent, on such a debt, they being stipulated in a note given by her husband therefor. Fitzgerald v. McCarty, 55 Iowa 702, 8 N. W. 646.

When husband and wife are sued jointly but not as partners, there is no implied authority in the husband to employ counsel in behalf of the wife on her credit. Shelton v. Holderness, 94 Ga. 671, 19 S. E. 977.

f. Contracts For Hiring Servants. Contracts for services rendered to a married woman, or for the benefit of her separate estate, are proper charges upon it,⁸⁴ or may bind her personally.⁸⁵ A married woman, however, is not liable for the wages of her husband's servant, although occasionally they may have been paid by her.⁸⁶

g. Contracts Between Husband and Wife. Contracts between husband and wife in relation to the wife's separate estate may be held good in equity,⁸⁷ and also at law where the statute permits her to deal with him directly.⁸⁸

h. Contracts Jointly With Husband. For her benefit or that of her separate estate a married woman may contract jointly with her husband, binding thereby either her separate estate in equity,⁸⁹ or becoming personally liable under the statutes.⁹⁰ A joint contract for necessities will, in the absence of any statutory liability against the wife's property, be regarded, however, as the contract of the husband only,⁹¹ and in general unless the joint contract is for the benefit of her estate, or within the powers given her by the statute, neither the wife nor her estate will be bound.⁹²

Wife's liability for violation of joint covenant by husband.—A married woman who owned a factory for the manufacture of cheese, and sold it, together with the secret of the manufacture, and covenanted for herself and husband that they would not impart such secret to any one other than plaintiffs, or engage in the business of manufacturing or selling such cheese for a certain period of time, is liable for a violation of the covenant by the husband. *Tode v. Partnership with husband.—The statute fixing the liability of a married woman for debts and torts has not so far removed her common-law disabilities as to empower her to form a business partnership with her husband, and thereby subject her separate estate to debts contracted by the partnership. Hag-

8. MONEY LENT TO WIFE. Although a married woman may have no legal power to bind herself for borrowed money, yet for money loaned to her for the use and benefit of her separate property, her estate is in equity liable.⁹³ Money borrowed by her for the benefit of her separate estate may also, under the statutes authorizing her to contract in relation to the same, be a binding contract.⁹⁴ Under such statutes, however, the money must be for her benefit and not for the benefit of the husband.⁹⁵ By strict construction of some of the statutes, it has been held that a married woman cannot render her separate estate liable for money borrowed by her, even though the loan is for her benefit.⁹⁶ The lender is generally not bound to see that the loan is applied to the benefit of the separate estate,⁹⁷ although the failure to so apply it has been held to invalidate a mortgage to a building association to secure a loan made to her as a stock-holder.⁹⁸ Only legal interest can be collected where money is let out to a married woman as the highest bidder by a building and loan association, although more could be collected from other persons.⁹⁹

9. BILLS AND NOTES — a. In General. The statutory ability of a married woman to contract in relation to her separate estate makes valid as a general rule her note given in a transaction for the benefit of such property,¹ and in equity her note, Money borrowed for necessities.—Money advanced by a stranger in providing necessities for the support of a married woman living separate from her husband is a debt binding her separate estate; and, being a debt payable out of funds held in trust for her separate use, is not barred by the statute of limitations. *Hodgson v. Mortgage to secure debts of husband see infra, V, C, 10.

Evidence of loan for wife's benefit.—A wife owning a farm on which she resided with her husband borrowed one thousand two hundred dollars from her sister on a note signed by herself and husband. The wife kept the accounts relating to the farm, held the moneys received, and paid most of the bills. The husband had charge of the work on the farm. The wife prepared the note in question, and received the money thereon. It was held sufficient to support a verdict that the wife borrowed the money on her own account. *Feather v. Application of proceeds.—One who presents the note of a married woman against her estate is entitled to payment thereof without any proof of what she did with the proceeds, as the claim can be defeated only by proof that the contract was one prohibited by the Pennsylvania Married Persons' Property Act of 1887. In re Spotts, 156 Pa. St. 281, 27 Atl. 132.

No separate estate at time of executing note.—In an action against a married woman on a note wherein she pledges her separate estate for its payment, an answer averring that at the time of its execution she was a married woman and had no separate estate and owned no property in her own right states a good defense. McKell v. Merchants'

if within her recognized power to contract, may be a charge upon her separate estate.² Where she may personally make a note that would bind her or her separate estate, she may also make a note through her properly authorized agent.³

b. Joinder of Husband. If the note of a married woman would otherwise be binding upon her, or would charge her separate estate, the fact that her husband joined with her in its execution does not affect it. Misrepresentations by husband.—A husband borrowed money on a representation that it was for his wife, to be used on her separate estate. The money was not so used, and the wife knew nothing of the loan and the execution of a note therefor until two months afterward. It was held that the signing of such note by her at the time, without knowledge of the representations, was not an adoption of such representations. Barker v. Gillett, 4 N. Y. St. 370.

Misappropriation of funds.—If a person borrows money for a married woman, and signs the note in his own name as trustee, and appropriates the money to pay notes given for the purchase-money of her separate estate, the lender cannot charge her separate estate for the payment thereof, although she may have requested the maker to borrow the money for that purpose. *Seborn v. Separate personal and real estate distinguished.—A note signed by a husband and wife reciting that she, as one of the principals, "binds her own separate estate for the payment of this note, the aforesaid two hundred and seventy-five dollars having been advanced by aforesaid creditors for the benefit of her said estate," is sufficient to bind her separate personal estate. But a note signed by husband and wife without a privy examination of the wife cannot be enforced against her separate real estate. Harvey v. Johnson, 133 N. C. 352, 45 S. E. 644.

Joint-note in connection with partition of wife's interest in lands.—A married woman and others owning land in common as heirs made deeds for purpose of partition, more than her share being conveyed to her and her husband, they executing a note to one of the other heirs for the surplus, on which he made a payment. It was held that he had no interest in the land, but was to be considered as making the payment as her surety, with a consideration is, however, a subject of inquiry, and if it is found to be one that equity does not recognize or the statute does not include, the joint note will not be enforceable against either her or her separate estate.⁵

c. Consideration. A consideration beneficial to the wife or to her separate estate is sufficient generally to support her promissory note.⁶ Money due for improvements and repairs upon her property may be a good consideration.⁷ Where she may contract as a feme sole concerning her separate property, or where

Insurance on life of husband.—Where a married man makes application for life insurance, and his wife, in the absence of the husband, agrees to take the policy on condition that it be made payable to her, and gives her note in payment of the first premium, her separate estate is charged with its payment. Mitchell v. Richmond, 164 Pa. St. 566, 30 Atl. 486.

Insurance on her property.—The rule of the common law incapacitating a married woman from binding herself by an executory contract still prevails. Her contract for insurance on her separate property is not one for the betterment of her estate which can be enforced, and she is not liable on her note executed in consideration of a policy therefor. American Ins. Co. v. Avery, 60 Ind. 566.

The moral obligation of a married woman to pay notes given by a firm of which she was a member prior to the Pennsylvania Married Woman's Property Act of June 3, 1887, is a sufficient consideration to make her liable personally on renewals of the notes by such firm after the passage of such act. Brooks v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 23 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 502.

The moral obligation of a married woman to pay for material ordered for her without previous authority, but which is accepted and used in a house on her separate estate, con-

she is liable for household expenses by force of statute, her note for necessaries for herself or family will likewise be valid.⁸

d. Note For Benefit or Debt of Husband. In general, either in equity or at law, under the statutes authorizing her to contract in relation to her separate estate, a married woman's note for the benefit or for a debt of her husband is invalid.⁹ But if a note is executed for the husband's benefit only in part, and a part of the consideration moves to her, the note is valid,¹⁰ although she is liable only to the amount of the consideration that she receives.¹¹ Statutes in some states expressly provide that her separate estate shall not be bound,¹² while in other states her stitutes sufficient consideration for a note. Ferguson v. Harris, 39 S. C. 323, 17 S. E. 782, 39 Am. St. Rep. 731.

Note for money borrowed for repairs.—A married woman is not liable upon a bond or note given by her for money borrowed for repairs to her separate estate and actually applied to that purpose. Sellers v. Heinebaugh, 117 Pa. St. 218, 11 Atl. 550.

Note to discharge mortgage lien on personalty bought by husband.—A married woman may bind herself by a note given to the holder of a mortgage on personalty bought by her husband to discharge the lien, the payee of the note not knowing that the wife has no interest in the property, and the husband signing without the payee's request. *Jones v. Wife may purchase husband's note.—Where a married woman purchases from her husband's creditor the debt owing by her husband and a third person, and gives her own note for the price, such note is not invalid as a promise to pay the debt of another, within the proviso of the fifth section of the New Jersey Married Women's Act. Cranbury First Nat. Bank v. Dohm, 52 N. J. L. 363, 19 Atl. 258.

Note to pay encumbrance on land conveyed by husband.—Where a husband conveyed mortgaged land to his wife, who afterward borrowed money on her note, intending to use a portion thereof in paying off the encumbrance, which was in fact done, she cannot defeat a recovery on the note by the lender on the ground that it was given for her husband's debt, or for money with which to pay such debt, although he knew of her intention to pay off the encumbrance at the time the estate is not bound unless set apart for that purpose.¹³ If the wife has, under the statute, full power to contract irrespective of any benefit to herself or estate, her note for her husband's benefit may be valid,¹⁴ and some cases hold that in equity a note given for the benefit of the husband will create a charge upon her separate estate.¹⁵

Extension of time for payment of husband's note.—Where defendant executed and delivered her own note to her husband's creditor, on an agreement (which was carried out) that the creditor should surrender her husband's past-due paper, thereby obtaining further time for payment, there was a sufficient consideration for her obligation. Osborne v. Doherty, 38 Minn. 430, 38 N. W. 111.

Preventing action against husband.—Where a married woman made and delivered her note for the debt of her husband to induce a creditor to refrain from bringing an action against the husband to recover the same, there was a sufficient consideration for the note. King v. Hasing, (Minn. 1903) 93 N. W. 307.

Release of partnership debt.—The release of a debt due from a partnership is a sufficient consideration for the wife's joining her husband and one of the partners in the execution of a note. She may bind thereby her separate estate. Dages v. Lee, 20 W. Va. 584.

Evidence of intent to charge.—A note given by the wife for the debt of her husband, with a stipulation that the note is taken by the payee "on the credit" of her separate estate, is sufficient evidence of her intention to charge her estate with the payment of such debt. Orange Nat. Bank v. Traver, 7 Fed. 146, 7 Sawy. 210.

Drafts on trustee.—A married woman may bind her separate estate by drawing drafts on her trustee, under circumstances clearly indicating that she intends to bind her estate; and it is immaterial that her husband received for his own use the money for which the drafts were given, there being nothing in the trust settlement limiting her right. Bain v. Buff, 76 Va. 371.

Statute relating to formal instruments in writing.—A note is not a "conveyance, mortgage, and like formal instrument of writing," within the South Carolina act of 1887, which provides that such instruments, executed by a married woman, shall be effectual to convey or charge her separate estate when the intention to do so is declared in them. Singluff v. Tindal, 40 S. C. 504, 19 S. E. 137.

In Ohio, where a married woman having a separate estate executes a note as surety for the principal maker, a presumption arises that she thereby intends to charge her separate estate with its payment; and a court of equity will carry such intention into effect by subjecting such estate to the payment of the debt in the mode prescribed by the statute. Williams v. Urnston, 35

f. Liability as Indorser. Generally as an indorser of a note, in connection with a consideration, a married woman will charge her separate estate, or, if the statute so provides, will make herself personally liable.¹⁷ Her liability as an accommodation indorser or as a mere surety is considered in the following sections.¹⁸

10. GUARANTY AND SURETYSHIP— a. Statutory Prohibitions. In some states, for the intended protection of the property of married women, statutes have been enacted expressly prohibiting them from becoming, according to the varying language of the acts, guarantors, sureties, or accommodation indorsers.¹⁹ Under such statutes their contracts of suretyship, both generally²⁰ and as sureties upon notes,²¹ whether they deal with the husband or third persons, are void. In a few other states the statutory prohibition is directed against the husband only, the

Indorsement as an appointment.—Where property was conveyed to trustees to the sole use of a married woman, "and to such uses and purposes, and in such manner as she might, in writing, appoint," and subsequently she became indorser of a negotiable note, such indorsement was an appointment in writing, and she thereby charged her separate estate. Clafin v. Van Wagoner, 32 Mo. 252.

Indorsement for transfer.—No personal liability is imposed on a wife by a written assignment of a note payable to her, signed by her and her husband and attested by two witnesses, but such assignment merely transfers her property in the note. Walker v. Struve, 70 Ala. 167.

Liability to indorser.—A married woman is liable to an indorser of her note, which he has been obliged to pay, the note having been indorsed for her accommodation and for the purpose of being used for the benefit of her separate estate or in her separate business, and it is immaterial whether it was in fact so used or not. Who may avoid the contract.—A creditor of a married woman cannot avoid her contracts of suretyship. Lackey v. Boruff, 152 Ind. 371, 53 N. E. 412.

Estoppel.—An affidavit signed by a married woman that a loan was a joint one will not estop her to claim the benefit of the statute declaring void contracts of suretyship by married women, where persons loaning money to her husband knew that she executed the contract as surety, she not being present when the affidavit was delivered, or when the loan was consummated, and testifying that she did not know the contents of the affidavit. Neighbors v. Davis, (Ind. App. 1905) 73 N. E. 151. It is otherwise where she knows the contents of an affidavit that the loan is for her own use and the creditor relies thereon. Ward v. Berkshire L. b. Statutes Authorizing Contracts. Under the statutes limiting the contracts of married women to matters in connection with, or in relation to, their separate estates, it is the general rule that the wife's signing of a note as mere surety for the husband is not a contract included within such provisions, and is therefore not enforceable,²³ although in some jurisdictions if contracts of suretyship are made on the faith of her separate estate, and in reference thereto,²⁴ or made with the intention on her part to bind such estate,²⁵ or in connection with a benefit to Rule stated.—“To the extent that the consideration was received by her, or enured to her benefit or the benefit of her estate, she will be held to have contracted as principal. To the extent that the consideration was received by her husband, or any other person, or that it went to pay a debt or liability, for which neither she nor her property was bound, it will be held a contract of suretyship. . . . Whether she was principal or surety will be determined not from the form of contract, nor from the basis upon which the transaction was had, but from the inquiry, was the wife to receive, either in person or in benefit to her estate, or did she so receive, the consideration upon which the contract rests?” Vogel v. Leichner, 102 Ind. 55, 60, 1 N. E. 554. See also Harbaugh v. Tanner, 163 Ind. 574, 71 N. E. 145; Guy v. Liberenz, 160 Ind. 524, 65 N. E. 186; Field v. Noblett, 154 Ind. 357, 56 N. E. 841; John C. Groub Co. v. Smith, 31 Ind. App. 685, 68 N. E. 1030.

Subsequent benefit received by wife.—A contractor, in order to complete a building, borrowed money, he and his wife giving a note and mortgage on realty held by them as tenants by the entirety. The owner of the building was unable to pay the contractor therefor, and assigned to him a contract for the purchase of the land occupied by the building, which land was subsequently conveyed to the wife. It was held that such conveyance did not operate to make her a principal rather than a surety on the note and mortgage. Guy v. Liberenz, 160 Ind. 524, 65 N. E. 186.

Subsequent surety.—Where a mortgage of a wife's separate estate recites that it is given to secure a note of her husband and others if the same remains “due and unpaid,” she is not bound as cosurety, but only as a subsequent surety. McCullum v. Boughton, 132 Mo. 601, 30 S. W. 1028, 33 S. W. 476, 34 S. W. 480, 35 L. R. A. 480.

Indorsing husband's note for her own benefit.—Where a wife indorses her husband's note for discount at a bank for her own benefit, such indorsement, as against the bank, is not a promise to answer for another's default. First Nat. Bank v. Craig, 1 N. J. L. J. 153.

34. Athens Nat. Bank v. Carlton, 96 Ga. 469, 23 S. E. 388.

May transfer property to secure debt of another.—A married woman cannot bind herself by promise to pay the debts of another, but she is invested with power to dispose of her property, and may transfer it to secure the payment of the debt of another, and when she has actually made such transfer, she cannot afterward at will avoid it. Walker v. Joseph Dixon Crucible Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 342, 20 Atl. 885.

A warranty in a wife's conveyance of her separate realty in discharge of her husband's debt is not a contract of suretyship within the statute avoiding her contracts of suretyship, the transaction having extinguished the debt. Nichol v. Hays, 20 Ind. App. 369, 50 N. E. 768.

35. Harbaugh v. Tanner, 163 Ind. 574, 71 N. E. 145.

same property to the wife, and she executes a mortgage therefor to secure the purchase-money notes, it is not an assumption of the debt of her husband, so as to render her not liable on the notes, but she is liable as principal and purchaser.³⁶ So where a deed is made subject to the payment of a judgment, and the purchaser, a married woman, gives a note to the owner of the judgment for its payment, she is not a surety for the payment of the judgment, but is a principal primarily liable.³⁷ A married woman who unites with her husband in mortgaging his own property for his benefit does not thereby become, as to such property, a surety for him;³⁸ but the recordation of the wife's title to property which she has mortgaged to secure her husband's debt is in itself a notice to the creditor of her relation as surety.³⁹

f. Consideration. Of course there must be a consideration for the guaranty or suretyship, although it may consist entirely of a benefit to the principal.⁴⁰

g. Rights as Surety. Where a married woman becomes a surety, she is entitled to all the rights possessed by any other surety.⁴¹

11. DEBTS INCURRED IN SEPARATE BUSINESS — a. In Equity. Where a married woman carries on business in her own name,⁴² and incurs debts in connection with such business upon the faith and credit of her separate estate, such debts are a proper charge in equity upon her separate property.⁴³

b. Separate Business Under Statutes. When power is given a married woman by statute to carry on a trade or business on her separate account, she may con-

The extension of payment of her husband's past-due indebtedness is a sufficient consideration for a contract by the wife as surety for such debt. Smith v. Spaulding, 40 Nebr. 339, 58 N. W. 952.

Contract to release prior indorser.—A contract by a married woman, taking up a note on which she is an accommodation indorser, to release a prior indorser, is binding on her, although the consideration did not pass to her directly, but to a third person. Headley v. Leavitt, 65 N. J. Eq. 748, 55 Atl. 731.

Primary liability.—Where the borrower of money secures the same by note and trust deed on land owned by him, signed by himself and his wife, he cannot complain that on foreclosure he alone is directed to pay the money, since as to him she is a mere surety. Telford v. Garrels, 132 Ill. 550, 24 N. E. 573.

Wisconsin.—Todd v. Lee, 15 Wis. 365, 16 Wis. 480.

Nature of equitable remedy.—A suit in equity by a creditor against a married woman to subject her separate property to payment of claims for money used by her in purchasing goods for a business conducted in her own name is not a creditor's bill but is sui generis; and the bill in such a case and the appointment of a receiver for such separate property is an equitable attachment, creating a lien on the property to taken. Pensacola First Nat. Bank v. Hirschowitz, (Fla. 1903) 35 So. 22.

Partnership interest.—A married woman possessed of a separate estate, after charging it with an indebtedness, formed a copartnership with another and contributed her separate estate to the capital of the concern. It was held that her interest in the partnership might be subjected by suit in equity to such indebtedness, without regard to the death of her husband after the creation of the charge on the estate. Chicago Coffin Co. v. Fritz, 41 Mo. App. 389. The partnership liability is limited to the amount invested in the firm. Little v. Grayson, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. (Pa.) 222. A judgment against a married woman as a member of a copartnership binds only her separate estate then owned by her. Raymond v. Breckenridge, 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 156, 7 Ohio N. P. 377.

tract debts in relation to such business, and she personally, if the statute so provides, or at least her separate property, will be liable for the same.⁴⁴

c. Business Managed by Husband. The fact that the husband manages, as agent, the separate business of his wife, or that he is employed by her in good faith in connection with it, will not affect her own or her separate estate's liability for the debts incurred within the scope of such business.⁴⁵ The business, however, must be actually that of the wife, and not conducted in reality by the husband under mere color of her name.⁴⁶

12. DEBTS CONTRACTED ON CREDIT OF SEPARATE ESTATE — a. In General. Subject to rules hereafter to be noticed,⁴⁷ it is a general rule both in equity and under the statutes that debts, within the scope of authority to incur the same, contracted on the faith and credit of a married woman's separate estate, will charge such estate.⁴⁸

b. What Constitutes. Unless a married woman has plenary power to contract as a feme sole, it is impossible to state any general rule as to what will amount to a debt on the credit of her separate estate, since the varying rules of her equitable liability and the statutes authorizing her to contract only "in relation to" her separate estate must also be taken into consideration. As illustrations merely of such debts may be cited, furniture purchased by her for a house forming her separate estate,⁴⁹ but not where the furniture was put into a house which she did

Liability governed by authority to act as sole trader.—The act providing that the property which a wife owned at the time of her marriage should remain her own, and not be under the control of the husband or liable for his debts, did not by implication confer on her unlimited power to engage in trade and contract debts irrespective of the property which belonged to her, and therefore did not authorize a personal action against a married woman on a note executed by her. *Wooster v. Intention to charge.—A writing by a married woman engaged in a business managed by her husband that "for the purpose of establishing my credit and as a basis therefor, I make the following statement which shall apply to all future purchases," in which a schedule of her separate property is set out, is an agreement to charge her separate estate for future purchases from the person to whom the statement is made. Bates v. Sultan, 117 N. C. 94, 23 S. E. 261.

not own, although when buying the goods she said she was the owner of such house;⁵⁰ wearing apparel for her own use purchased upon a promise by her to pay for it out of her separate estate;⁵¹ an executory contract for the purchase of land, the money to be paid from her own means;⁵² goods to be used in her business of keeping boarders, sold upon her sole credit;⁵³ and a note indorsed by her, bought by one to whom she gave a letter promising to pay the same should the maker fail to do so.⁵⁴ If, however, the credit was given to the husband rather than to the wife, the debt will not be a charge upon her estate by reason of any reliance upon its faith and credit.⁵⁵ A mortgage, however, given by the wife alone upon her separate estate, and a subsequent mortgage executed by husband and wife jointly to secure the same loan, do not restrict the creditor to the wife's separate estate in order to satisfy the debt.⁵⁶

13. CONTRACTS FOR BENEFIT OF SEPARATE ESTATE. It being conceded that the separate estate is liable for debts contracted for its benefit,⁵⁷ the question arises as to what contracts are for its benefit. Among the classes of contracts generally held to be for the benefit of a married woman's separate estate are reasonable hire of servants for the care of such property;⁵⁸ labor employed in the cultivation of her land;⁵⁹ purchases of animals⁶⁰ or materials and machinery⁶¹ for use on

Hotel bill of husband and wife.—A wife was left by her husband at a hotel at which they had been staying together. The landlord caused her to be detained for payment of the unsettled hotel bills. In order to get away she gave a memorandum, stating "the debt of Madame B. was 5,000 florins." It was held that there had been no credit given to her separate estate, and that under the circumstances of the case the words "the debt of Madame B." did not bind her separate estate. Bromley v. Norton, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 478, 21 Wkly. Rep. 155. And see Littlefield v. Shee, 2 B. & Ad. 811, 1 L. J. K. B. 12, 22 E. C. L. 341.

Statutory liability not affected by giving credit to husband.—The taking of a husband's note in payment of a debt for which the wife's statutory estate is liable does not discharge the estate, if default is made in payment of the note at maturity. Lewis v. Dillard, 66 Ala. 1.

Benefit of wife's estate.—Where a husband contracted a debt for the benefit of his wife's estate, the creditor supposing the property to belong to the husband, the court decreed payment of the debt out of the wife's estate, the husband being insolvent. Cater v. Eveleigh, 4 Desauss. Eq. (S. C.) 19, 6 Am. Dec. 595.

Statute requiring husband's written consent.—Under the statute providing that no married woman can, without her husband's written consent, make any contract to affect her estate, except for necessary expenses or to pay antenuptial debts, a married woman residing with her husband cannot contract with a person to oversee a plantation owned by her separately. *Sanderlin v. 61. McCormick v. Holbrook, 22 Iowa 487, 92 Am. Dec. 400.

Supplies furnished to third persons.—A mortgage signed by a married woman, which recites that it is given to secure advances of supplies for agricultural purposes to be made to two others, who also execute the mortgage, to be used in cultivating land be-her farm; labor and materials furnished for the improvement and repair of her separate estate;⁶² and money borrowed to pay off a mortgage⁶³ or other encumbrance⁶⁴ upon her separate estate. So a covenant to support the settler of her separate estate in consideration of the settlement is one for the benefit of her separate estate.⁶⁵ Under a statute providing that all contracts of the husband and wife, or of either of them, for supplies for the wife's plantation, may be "enforced and satisfaction secured out of her separate estate,"⁶⁶ the wife's lands, when leased to the husband and cultivated by him for his own benefit, are not, during the term of the lease, her plantation.⁶⁷

14. DEBTS CHARGED ON SEPARATE ESTATE — a. In General — (i) NECESSITY FOR WRITING. While in general an undertaking on the part of the wife to charge her separate property need not be in writing,⁶⁸ a writing is necessary in some states to create a liability in respect to all or particular contracts.⁶⁹

(ii) INTENTION TO CHARGE IN GENERAL. In many cases it is held that the separate estate of a married woman cannot be charged with her engagements or debts unless she intended to charge it,⁷⁰ some cases holding that the fact that longing in part to the married woman, is not a contract for the benefit of her separate estate. Simon v. Sabb, 56 S. C. 38, 33 S. E. 799.

Plans furnished by architect.—Where a married woman contracted with an architect to furnish plans for a building on her separate estate, it is unnecessary in an action for services that the architect should show that the plans were used on and benefited such estate. Emerson v. Kneezell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 62 S. W. 551.

Necessity of express charge.—Where a contractor delivered to plaintiff an order on the married woman and her husband to pay to plaintiff a certain sum and charge the same to his account, the order, although accepted, was not effectual to bind her real estate, since it contained no express charge on the land, and could not be considered a lien by way of mortgage. *Zachary v. credit was given merely on the faith of such property is not sufficient to create a charge against it.⁷¹

(iii) NECESSITY FOR EXPRESSION OF INTENT. It has been held that there must be an express agreement to charge the separate estate,⁷² although in some states there need be an expression of intent only where no benefit accrues to the wife from her contract.⁷³ In some cases it has been held that the intention to charge the separate estate must be affirmatively shown,⁷⁴ and that where the intention must be expressed it must be stated in the contract,⁷⁵ although the more general rule is that the intention may be implied from the circumstances.⁷⁶ Some

Intent to charge or else a benefit.—To sustain a contract made by a married woman charging her separate property with the payment of a debt, it must appear that she intended to charge the separate estate, or that the contract claimed to be a charge was one reasonably adapted to better her separate estate. Kantrowitz v. Prather, 31 Ind. 92, 99 Am. Dec. 587; Yale v. Dederer, 18 N. Y. 265, 72 Am. Dec. 503, 22 N. Y. 450, 78 Am. Dec. 216, 20 How. Pr. 242.

Pleading.—The complaint must allege that the married woman intended to or did charge, or agreed to charge, the indebtedness against her separate estate. Dame v. Coffman, 58 Ind. 345; Shannon v. Bartholomew, 53 Ind. 54.

Agreement not shown by willingness to execute a deed invalid when made.—An agreement by a married woman to charge a note signed by her on her separate estate is not shown by evidence that she expressed willingness to make a deed of trust on such estate to secure the note, which deed was illegal when made because of usurious stipulations therein. *Wallace v. Need not specify the property to be charged.—It is unnecessary for a married woman to make her indorsement of her husband's note a charge on her separate estate that the contract should recite the property to be charged. It is sufficient if it declares her intent to charge her separate estate in general terms. Corn Exch. Ins. Co. v. Babeoek, 42 N. Y. 613, 1 Am. Rep. 601.

In South Carolina the statute provides that all conveyances, mortgages, and like instruments of writing, affecting her separate estate, executed by a married woman, shall be effectual to convey or charge such separate estate whenever the intention so to do is declared therein. Such statute has been held not to apply to a note. Singluff v. Tindall, 40 S. C. 504, 19 S. E. 137; Martin v. Suber, 39 S. C. 525, 18 S. E. 125. Intention shown either from the obligation or evidence aliunde.—A married woman may render her separate property liable for her debts; and whether she does so by a given transaction is a question of intent which may be determined from the obligation creating the debt or by evidence aliunde. Fowler v. Jacob, 62 Md. 326; Koontz v. Nabb, 16 Md. 549.

Intention to be deduced from writing.—A note made by a married woman jointly with her husband does not create a charge upon her separate estate unless she has clearly manifested an intent to make her separate estate liable; and this intention must be deducible from the note itself or the contract on which it is based. Extraneous parol evidence is not admissible. Kimm v. Weippert, 46 Mo. 532, 2 Am. Rep. 541.

Wife living apart from her husband.—Where a wife having a separate estate lives apart from her husband and contracts debts, the court will impute to her the intention of dealing with her separate estate, unless the Intention of contracting a debt of her own.—In determining whether the separate estate of a married woman is liable for goods furnished to her at her request, the practical question is, not whether she expressly designed to charge her separate property, but whether she intended to contract a debt of her own; for if she did the law, and not her ideas about her property, fixes the liability. Miller v. Brown, 47 Mo. 504, 4 Am. Rep. 345.

Trust deed of homestead property.—Where a woman who has a separate estate joins with her husband in a note and a deed of trust of lands in which they have a homestead as security for the note, the fact that she signed such deed is proof that she did not intend to charge her separate estate, which is not liable for the amount of the note. Seifert v. Jones, 84 Mo. 591.

Charged unless expressly exempted.—Where a married woman has a separate estate which may be charged with the payment of her contract, the execution of the contract will charge such estate with its payment, unless expressly exempted therefrom by the contract. Duval v. Chelf, 92 Va. 489, 23 S. E. 893.

Separate estate less than debt.—Where a married woman entered into a covenant in a mortgage deed for the payment of £400, and the only free separate estate that she had at the date of the covenant was about £3 or £4, there was no presumption of law that the contract was entered into with respect to, and to bind such small separate estate, and the contract was not binding. Braunstein v. Lewis, 55 J. P. 775, 65 L. T. Rep. N. S. 449. See also Abraham v. Hacking, 27 Ont. 431.

goods purchased by her, it is not necessary that she should specifically charge her separate estate.⁷⁸

(IV) MERE INTENT TO CHARGE AS SUFFICIENT. An intent to charge, although positively expressed, will not bind the wife's separate estate if the engagement is one which the courts refuse to recognize as a proper charge,⁷⁹ or if the statutory requirements are not complied with.⁸⁰ Likewise if the wife is restricted by the terms of the instrument creating the estate, her power to charge it, notwithstanding she may intend to, will be limited to the authority conferred.⁸¹

(V) NECESSITY FOR ASSENT OF TRUSTEE. A married woman may bind her equitable separate estate without the concurrence of the trustee, unless such assent is required by the instrument giving her the property.⁸²

(VI) CONSTRUCTION OF INSTRUMENT CREATING DEBT. A charge upon a particular piece of separate estate negatives an intention to charge the separate estate generally,⁸³ but a charge upon "separate real and personal property" has been held to apply to separate property acquired after the contract but before trial and judgment.⁸⁴ A written intention to charge the separate estate with the payment of a note, although on a separate piece of paper but executed at the same time and appended to the note, has been construed to be a sufficient charge, the two instruments being construed as one.⁸⁵ A charge upon "my personal estate" has also been construed to mean the separate estate.⁸⁶ An express statement of an intended charge will not, however, operate as an estoppel where it is also required that the consideration must be beneficial to the wife.⁸⁷ It has been held that a contract in the form of a will cannot bind a married woman's statutory separate estate.⁸⁸

Intent to charge other property rights of bona fide purchasers.—A married woman inserted in her mortgage a declaration that she "hereby makes a payment of the moneys hereby secured a charge upon her other sole and separate estate." It was held that her other separate property was not thereby charged as against one afterward purchasing it in good faith and for value. Rourk v. Murphy, 12 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 402.

Must be no fraud on creditors.—Where a feme covert had a separate estate with a general power of appointing the same by deed or will, and she disposed of such estate to various devisees and legatees, subjecting expressly only a portion of it to the payment of her debts, her creditors might resort to the whole estate for their satisfaction. (VII) JOINDER OR ASSENT OF HUSBAND. In order to create a charge upon the wife's separate estate it is not necessary in general that the husband should assent.⁸⁹ Statutes, however, in some jurisdictions require his consent before her property can be bound by her engagements or debts.⁹⁰ It is also a statutory provision of many states that the joinder of the husband is necessary in order to make a valid conveyance of the wife's separate property,⁹¹ and some cases have held that if the husband's consent to her conveyance is necessary, his consent will likewise be required to make effective a charge upon it.⁹² A letter written by the husband as agent for his wife ordering goods for her mercantile business and giving a statement of the wife's property is held sufficient to show consent on his part.⁹³ Likewise a guaranty by the husband to pay for purchases by his wife on her default,⁹⁴ and a note executed by husband and wife containing a clause that the husband "hereby consents that the above note shall be a charge on the separate estate of his said wife,"⁹⁵ are a sufficient compliance with the statute.

b. Debts of Husband ⁹⁶—(i) IN GENERAL. Neither the wife's equitable nor statutory separate estate is liable for the debts of her husband, in the absence either of a statute imposing such charge thereon or her own agreement, operating as a charge, to pay such debts.⁹⁷ In many states, moreover, the statutes expressly Wife's right to recover money paid.—Under the statute positively forbidding any assumption by a wife of the debts of her husband, if a creditor of the husband in any manner receives in payment of his debt money of the wife, knowing it to be hers, the wife can recover of him the amount so paid. Lewis v. Howell, 98 Ga. 428, 25 S. E. 504. So she may recover from the estate of her husband. Shaw v. Shaw, 29 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 390. There is authority, however, holding that she cannot reclaim such moneys. Warwick v. Lawrence, 43 N. J. Eq. 179, 10 Atl. 376, 3 Am. St. Rep. 299; Butler v. Hughes, 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 90, 1 Cinc. L. Bul. 104.

Wife's right in general to be indemnified.—The question whether a married woman who charges her property for the purpose of paying her husband's debts is entitled to have her property indemnified by him against the charge is a matter of inference to be drawn from the circumstances of each particular case; and where the debts, although legally the debts of the husband, were contracted to pay the expenses of the extravagant mode of living of both the wife and the husband, no inference of a right to indemnity will be drawn in her favor. Paget v. Paget, [1898] 1 Ch. 470, 67 L. J. Ch. 266, 78 L. T. Rep. N. S. 306, 46 Wkly. Rep. 472.

Conveyance to secure.—Under the statute providing that no part of a married woman's estate shall be subjected to the payment of any liability upon a contract made after marriage to answer for the debt of another, including her husband, "unless such estate shall have been set apart for that purpose by deed of mortgage or other conveyance," the wife's written assignment of a policy of insurance to secure a loan made to the husband or to indemnify his surety is valid. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Miller, 56 S. W. 975, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 230.

Wife may impose conditions concerning her agreement.—Even if a wife, being in no way liable for her husband's debts, can appropriate her separate estate for the payment

some states make her separate property liable for the family expenses.¹ On the other hand, where her contracts in equity are binding only when for her benefit or for the benefit of her estate, and where the statute authorizes her to contract only in relation to such estate, the separate property will be limited to charges in harmony with such requirements.²

(II) WHAT CONSTITUTES DEBT OF HUSBAND. Where the wife borrows money to pay the debts of her husband he becomes the principal debtor.³ An overpayment of the wife's distributive share by an executor to her husband makes the husband the debtor for the sum overpaid.⁴ It has been held that, although a sale of the wife's goods to a creditor of the husband to pay his debt is in part also to pay her debt, if the portion sold for her debt is not severable from the rest, the purchaser gets no title to any of the goods.⁵ Of course supplies furnished and charged to the husband to run his hotel only create a debt against the husband,⁶ and the same is true as to articles of apparel purchased by the husband for his own individual use.⁷

(III) EFFECT OF HUSBAND'S USE AND CONTROL OF WIFE'S ESTATE. While a wife's separate property may become subject to the debts of her husband, when he is permitted to deal with it, and obtain credit on it as his own with her knowledge and consent,⁸ yet the mere fact that the husband has the care and control of the wife's property, such use and control not being inconsistent with their common interests and their mutual enjoyment of it, will not subject it to his debts.⁹

(IV) ESTOPPEL TO DENY LIABILITY. Although the wife's property would not otherwise have been liable for her husband's debts, yet where she has actively misled and deceived his creditors as to his ownership, she may be estopped from afterward asserting her rights,¹⁰ and although her promise to pay his debts could not be enforced, her voluntary payment of the same may prevent her from later rescinding the executed contract.¹¹

15. MORTGAGE OR PLEDGE — a. In General — (i) POWER TO ENCUMBER. The general rule is that, unless restricted by the instrument creating an equitable thereof, the act being purely voluntary, she can impose such terms or conditions on the appropriation as she sees fit, and, if they are not or cannot be complied with the appropriation necessarily fails. Witt v. Carroll, 37 S. C. 388, 16 S. E. 130.

2. See supra, V, C, 7, 9.

Illustrations of rule.—The statute authorizing a married woman to contract, sell, transfer, mortgage, convey, etc., her separate estate as if she were unmarried does not make her liable on a contract for the debt of her husband when no consideration moves to her. De Vries v. Conklin, 22 Mich. 255; Mawhinney v. Cassio, 63 N. J. L. 412, 43 Atl. 676; Warwick v. Lawrence, 43 N. J. Eq. 179, 10 Atl. 376, 3 Am. St. Rep. 299. Where a debtor voluntarily conveys all his property to his wife, and the wife, to relieve herself from a creditor's attack on the property conveyed, promises to pay the husband's debt, it is a contract in relation to her own property, and hence is valid. Whelpley v. Stoughton, 112 Mich. 594, 70 N. W. 1098.

Statutory liability.—A judgment for costs in a criminal proceeding against the husband is a debt against him, within the meaning of the statute, for the satisfaction of which personal property of the wife, in his possession, without notice of his wife's ownership according to statutory provisions, may be taken. Gray v. Ferreby, 36 Iowa 146.

Recordation of title.—It is not presumed that a creditor of the husband trusted him on the faith of property which, although occupied by him in conjunction with his wife, appeared from the registry of deeds to have been at the time the property of the wife. Dick v. Hamilton, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,890, Deady 322.

separate estate, the wife may mortgage it,¹² although in some states no authority to charge her separate estate is recognized in equity unless such authority is expressly conferred by the creating instrument.¹³ Statutes giving the wife contractual powers over her separate estate authorize her in general to mortgage the same;¹⁴ but under some of the statutes her mortgage is invalid in the absence of a consideration beneficial to the estate or to herself.¹⁵ The statutes moreover in

In Tennessee, the statute giving married women power to sell, etc., or mortgage their separate realty, provided the power is not expressly withheld in the deed or will under which they hold it, does not enable a wife to mortgage land which she holds for life, with power to dispose of it by sale or by will. Under such a settlement, the power to mortgage is expressly withheld, in the sense of the statute. Lightfoot v. Bass, 2 Tenn. Ch. 677. But if the instrument is silent as to the power of disposition, the wife may mortgage the property. Molloy v. Clapp, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 586. See also supra, V, C, 7.

Power to convey includes power to mortgage.—A statutory power to "convey," on the principle that the greater includes the less, includes the power to mortgage. Pickett v. Buckner, 45 Miss. 226.

Mortgage to secure a valid note.—Since a married woman's note for the price of land bought by her is a "contract," within the meaning of the statute permitting a married woman holding property in her own right to contract in respect to such property, her mortgage given to secure the note is valid. Messer v. Smyth, 58 N. H. 298.

Mortgage of estate of entirety.—The statutes authorizing a married woman to convey her property to the same extent as her husband can convey property belonging to him, having removed the wife's common-law disability to convey her interest in an estate of the entirety with her husband, where a married woman mortgaged such an estate, and the death of the husband removed his right of survivorship, the mortgage was a valid lien on the fee. some states, as has been already stated,¹⁶ prohibit a married woman from becoming a surety and this restriction affects her power to give a mortgage as a surety.¹⁷ In many states, however, the statutes make express provisions for the conveying and mortgaging of the property of married women, thereby limiting their powers to the method, or to the purposes, prescribed by the statute.¹⁸ For instance, the statutes sometimes require an order of a court of equity permitting the mortgage.¹⁹

(ii) EFFECT OF NATURE OF ESTATE. The wife's life-estate in lands may be mortgaged,²⁰ and so may even an expectancy if coupled with an interest.²¹ A power to mortgage her property during coverture may be reserved by her in a marriage settlement made by her while she was a feme sole.²² An interest merely in the rents and profits of lands gives no authority, however, to mortgage the land itself,²³ and in general a mortgage cannot be binding upon trust property when given in excess of the limitations of disposal placed upon it.²⁴ Under the former Alabama

Money borrowed to remove encumbrance and to purchase supplies.—Where an application by a husband for a loan, subsequently ratified by the wife, expressly states that the wife is the borrower, and that part of the money borrowed is to be used to pay off a former mortgage given for supplies to be used on the wife's plantation, which, by the testimony of both husband and wife, is shown to have been managed by the husband, not as his own, but for the wife, the wife is liable for the money borrowed to pay off such mortgage. *Scottish-American Mortgage Co. v. Pledge for debt partly owing by the wife.—Where a promissory note owned by a wife is given in pledge to secure a debt which is part hers and in part that of her husband, and such parts are readily ascertainable, the pledge is valid as to the part of the debt due by the wife, and the pledgee is entitled, when due, to recover from the maker the amount expressed in the note. *Johnston v. Estoppel to deny suretyship as against mortgagee or his assignee.—Where a married woman signed a mortgage as surety, the mere fact that it recited that it was made for the benefit of her separate estate did not estop her from denying that fact as against the mortgagee or an assignee of the mortgage who took the assignment in consideration of a past indebtedness due to him from the mortgagee. Pittman v. Raysor, 49 S. C. 469, 27 S. E. 475. But where a married woman made her note, and a mortgage to secure the same, each reciting that it was for the benefit of her separate estate, and that it was her intention to bind her separate estate thereby, she was estopped to deny such recitals as against an innocent transferee for value before maturity and without notice. White v. Goldsberg, 49 S. C. 530, 27 S. E. 517.

Limited power to sell.—Under a deed of settlement by which a wife was allowed to sell the property by consent of the trustee for the purpose of reinvesting the proceeds in other property, she had no power, even with the consent of the trustee, to pledge such property as security for a loan resulting in the absolute disposition of the property contrary to the provisions of the deed. Bailey v. Hill, 77 Va. 492.

Husband's creditors charged with notice of conditions of conveyance.—Where property is conveyed to a trustee for the sole benefit of a married woman, creditors of the husband, taking a deed of trust from the husband, wife, or trustee, will be chargeable with notice of the conditions on which the same may be conveyed. *Swift v. Sufficiency of assent.—The assent in writing, required by Mass. Gen. St. c. 108, § 3, of a husband to his wife's lease to her real estate for a term exceeding one year is sufficiently shown by the husband's signing the lease as attesting witness only. Child v. Sampson, 117 Mass. 62.

Supposed death of husband.—Where a woman, supposing that her husband, who had been absent and unheard of for more than seven years, was dead, remarried, and joined with the second husband in a mortgage of her realty, and the first husband afterward returned, the mortgage was void, the statute declaring that a married woman has no power to encumber her realty except by deed in which her husband joins. Cook v. Walling, 117 Ind. 9, 19 N. E. 532, 10 Am. St. Rep. 17, 2 L. R. A. 769.

Effect of husband's unnecessary joinder.—A wife's mortgage upon her own land is not invalidated by her husband's joining in it, nor is the sale thereunder made void by the fact that the notice of sale describes her as his wife. Yale v. Stevenson, 58 Mich. 537, 25 N. W. 488; Frickee v. Donner, 35 Mich. 151.

Chattel mortgage on household goods.—The statute requiring both husband and wife to join in a chattel mortgage on the household goods of either does not prevent a wife from purchasing household goods, and giving a valid mortgage on them in her own name to secure the price. Pease v. L. Fish Furniture Co., 176 Ill. 220, 52 N. E. 932.

she may give a valid mortgage to secure her husband's debt,³⁰ he must join with her.³¹ If, however, the statute prohibits her from giving a mortgage to secure a debt of her husband, the fact that he unites with her in executing a mortgage deed will give to it no validity.³² Where the husband joins in a mortgage to secure notes executed by his wife, he is personally liable if there is an express agreement in the mortgage to pay the sum secured.³³ The husband's covenants are not binding on his wife.³⁴

(IV) VALIDITY IN GENERAL. A mortgage upon the wife's separate property procured by threats or duress practised upon her by the husband may be avoided by the wife, provided that the mortgagee had knowledge of the facts at the time.³⁵ A mortgage procured or given through fraud is voidable,³⁶ although the mortgagee

Wife living apart from husband.—A mortgage executed by a woman as a feme sole, while living apart from her husband, upon her separate estate, to secure a debt by her for her benefit, is a valid lien upon her estate. Harrison v. Stewart, 18 N. J. Eq. 451.

Concealment of fact of marriage.—A married woman, who obtained a loan in her former name by concealing her marriage, and secured it by a trust deed executed in such former name, without her husband joining therein, will not be permitted in equity to retain the money borrowed and avoid the trust deed; but a lien will be decreed upon the land for the amount of the loan. Patterson v. Lawrence, 90 Ill. 174, 32 Am. Rep. 22.

Subsequent purchaser bound by notice of equities.—Where a feme covert executed a mortgage to secure purchase-money but her husband did not join in the mortgage, a person who purchased the land subject to the mortgage, with notice thereof, could not set up the coverture of the wife to defeat the mortgage. Hatch v. Morris, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 313.

Where a husband purchased land with property of his wife, taking title in his own name, a mortgage by the wife alone passed all the equitable interest the wife had in the land. Owings v. Wiggins, 133 Mo. 630, 34 S. W. 877.

Importunity of husband not duress.—A mortgage by a wife of her own real estate, to secure notes given by her husband to his sureties to secure them for liability incurred through a defalcation in his accounts as county treasurer, made upon her husband's repeated importunities, and representations of his liability to a criminal prosecution, accompanied by a statement that "before he would go to jail, he would shoot himself through the brains" is not invalid as made under duress and undue influence. Lefebvre v. Dutruit, 51 Wis. 326, 8 N. W. 149, 37 Am. Rep. 833.

Insufficient evidence of coercion see Watson v. Thurber, 11 Mich. 457; Kaufmann v. Rowan, 189 Pa. St. 121, 42 Atl. 25.

Innocent mortgagee.—Where a wife signs a mortgage with her husband under duress practised by the latter, of which the mortgagee is totally unaware and innocent, the mortgage is valid even as to her. Rogers v. Adams, 66 Ala. 600; Green v. Scranage, 19 Iowa 461, 87 Am. Dec. 447.

did not participate in the fraud;³⁷ but where one in good faith loaned money on a trust deed signed by the wife, it has been held no defense that the husband deceived the wife as to the identity of the land.³⁸ Even the unauthorized addition of the wife's name to her husband's note as joint maker with him will not render her mortgage, given to secure such note, void, where the note is assigned to an innocent purchaser.³⁹ Where, however, a person loans money to a married woman on a pledge of stock, he is warranted, in the absence of anything showing a trust in favor of another, in assuming that she is the owner thereof.⁴⁰ The fact that a married woman is not personally bound by her covenant does not affect the validity of her mortgage.⁴¹ It has been held that where a married woman had at the time power to give a valid mortgage in accordance with previous decisions of the supreme court, the rights of the mortgagee are not affected by the subsequent overruling of such decisions.⁴²

(v) *FORM AND REQUISITES OF MORTGAGES.*⁴³ A mortgage requires no particular form of language in order to make it valid, and in some of the states the statutes set forth simple forms which are declared sufficient.⁴⁴ Like other mortgages, the statutes usually require that they be witnessed⁴⁵ and acknowledged.⁴⁶ Some states require the separate examination of the wife in order to give effect to the instrument.⁴⁷ In case of married women the failure to comply with the statutory requirements as to acknowledgment generally renders their deeds void, even as between the parties.⁴⁸ In case of property held in trust, it is not necessary that the trustee join in the mortgage, unless the creating instrument

A mortgage by a feme sole trader is valid, although in fraud of her husband's rights. Hedden's Appeal, (Pa. 1889) 17 Atl. 29.

Mistake in description of land.—Where a mortgage made by husband and wife by mistake describes land not belonging to them, a correction of the mistake made after delivery, with the husband's consent, but without the wife's knowledge or authority, is, after the husband's death, nugatory and inoperative as to that part of the land described which constitutes the homestead. *Foote v. Stipulation concerning security not a covenant.—In a mortgage on a wife's separate estate, executed by both husband and wife, a stipulation that it should stand as security for a note given in renewal of the original note was merely a description of the indebtedness which it was intended to secure, and was not a conveyance in the sense of the statute enacting that a married woman is not bound by any covenants in her deed. Philbrooks v. McEwen, 29 Ind. 347.

Meaning of "deed."—The word "deed," as used in the statute disabling a wife from encumbering her lands, "except by deed, in

45. See MORTGAGES.

Unattested deed in satisfaction of mortgage note.—Where a conveyance by husband and wife of a statutory separate estate of the wife, in satisfaction of notes secured by a valid mortgage on her property, is not sufficient to pass title, because not witnessed as required by statute, and she repudiates it on that account, the mortgage and debt secured by it are not extinguished, but remain unimpaired, although, in pursuance of the sale, the notes and mortgage were surrendered to the mortgagors. Kieser v. Baldwin, 62 Ala. 526.

46. Blackford v. Stoops, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 563.

False certificate of acknowledgment.—A mortgage of separate real estate of the wife, signed by herself and husband, and delivered by the latter, the annexed notary's certificate stating that she had acknowledged it apart from him, but it being clearly shown that the contents were unknown to her at the time of signing, that she never received any consideration, and that her acknowledgment was never taken, is void. *Annau v. requires such joinder.⁴⁹ Whether a mortgage executed in blank requires written authority in order to be filled in by another in the signer's absence, or whether mere parol authority is sufficient, is a disputed question.⁵⁰ In case of a married woman, however, it has been held that she, not being sui juris, has no authority to delegate such powers.⁵¹ Where, on the other hand, she may act through an agent, some cases have held that she may give authority by parol to fill material blanks, and that she will be bound, although the agent may exceed his instructions.⁵² Where, however, without the wife's knowledge, the husband, as mortgagor, inserted in a deed executed by her, additional property, which was the homestead, and which required their joint conveyance, the mortgage was invalid as to such addition.⁵³

(vi) CONSIDERATION. A married woman's mortgage must be based upon some consideration;⁵⁴ but in many jurisdictions her mortgage executed in conformity with the statute is enforceable, although the consideration moves to her husband or even to a third person.⁵⁵ A mortgage for the purchase-price of lands conveyed to her,⁵⁶ or to secure other of her debts,⁵⁷ or to discharge a lien upon her property,⁵⁸ is based on a sufficient consideration.

Blanks filled by mortgagee in presence of the wife.—A mortgage on the separate property of a married woman is valid, although she and her husband executed and delivered it and their bond, blank as to the amount of consideration, and such blanks are afterward filled up by the mortgagee in the presence of the wife alone. In re Hogan, 181 Pa. 54. Heller v. Groves, (N. J. Ch. 1887) 8 Atl. 652.

False recital of consideration.—A mortgage of the separate property of a wife to a partnership consisting of her husband and another, reciting that it is to secure her debt to the firm, when she owes them nothing, but for which her husband is given credit on the firm-books, cannot be enforced, to collect his indebtedness to the firm. Bliss v. Cronk, 62 N. J. Eq. 496, 50 Atl. 315.

Failure of consideration.—Where a creditor prepared a note and mortgage, which he sent to the debtor in order to secure the signature of his wife, and the debtor falsely represented to the wife that the consideration of the instruments was merchandise to be shipped to her for her own use, the creditor, having made the husband his agent, was bound by his representations; and, the merchandise not being sent, there was a failure of consideration for the note and mortgage. *Haskit v. Subsequent contract between husband and mortgagee.—A married woman will not be released from her liability on a mortgage on her separate property to secure payment of her individual indebtedness by any subsequent contract between her husband and the mortgagee. Christensen v. Wells, 52 S. C. 497, 30 S. E. 611.

(VII) INVALIDITY OF COLLATERAL OBLIGATION. Although a note signed by a married woman may impose no personal liability upon her, as for example a joint note signed by herself and husband, yet her mortgage given to secure such note may, either in equity or by force of statute, be valid.⁵⁹ Where, however, her own note is absolutely void and not enforceable even in equity, the defense of the invalidity of the note may extend to a mortgage given to secure it.⁶⁰

(VIII) CONSTRUCTION. Where a married woman, in a mortgage given by her husband on her separate estate, merely purports to release all right of dower and homestead "to said grantee," and is not mentioned in the other parts of the mortgage, her title is not concluded by the exercise of the power of sale contained therein, since the mortgage conveys only a life-estate.⁶¹ A provision that any surplus on foreclosure should be paid to the "husband and wife" should be construed only to require such payment "as their several interests shall appear," and not to constitute a conveyance of any interest in such surplus from the wife to her husband.⁶²

(IX) AVOIDANCE OF MORTGAGES. A married woman may set up in defense, in avoidance of a mortgage upon her separate estate, the fact that she was induced to execute it through fraudulent representations as to the nature of the consideration;⁶³ but acquiescence for several years in a sale made under a trust deed executed by her will prevent her from maintaining a suit to avoid the sale on the ground that a part of the consideration was beyond her power of contract.⁶⁴ In general a married woman will be estopped to deny the validity of her mortgage when in proper form and for a valid consideration,⁶⁵ and where the mortgagee acts in

Mortgage executed by husband as agent.—Where a wife by power duly executed constitutes her husband and other named persons her "attorney and attorneys in fact and in law," and grants such "attorney or attorneys" full power to convey or mortgage her land, so much of the consideration of a mortgage made by her husband as consists in the mortgagee's agreement to discharge an existing mortgage on the land is manifestly for the wife's benefit, and the land is to that extent bound by the husband's mortgage. *Eaton v. Distinction between power to dispose of property and incapacity to contract.—In equity a married woman may encumber her separate property by mortgage, although the mortgage note imposes no personal liability on her. The distinction is between a contract which she cannot make and a disposition of her property which she can make absolutely, and therefore conditionally. Heath v. Van Cott, 9 Wis. 516.

61. Allendorff v. Gaugengigl, 146 Mass. 542, 16 N. E. 283.

Mistake.—Where husband and wife join in a deed of trust in fee of the wife's land to secure their joint indebtedness, the trustee takes a fee simple, although the deed recites that the wife's joinder is only for the purpose of releasing her dower and homestead, the draughtsman having neglected to strike this clause from the printed form, since, as there is no dower or homestead right if such clause is to control, there is nothing on which the deed can operate. Pritchard v. Bailey, 113 N. C. 521, 18 S. E. 668.

Estoppel to attack payment of encumbrances.—Where a married woman signs deeds of trust, authorizing payment by the grantee of encumbrances on her land, and thereafter receives the benefits of such payment, she is estopped to say that she did not in writing authorize the payment of the good faith upon recitals as to consideration in her mortgage she will generally be estopped from denying their truth.⁶⁶

(x) EXTENT OF LIABILITY. Where a mortgage is given by a married woman for the benefit of her separate estate, a personal judgment may under the statutes be enforced for any deficiency against other separate property possessed by her,⁶⁷ but in equity the lien is only enforceable against the mortgaged premises.⁶⁸

b. Debts of Husband—(1) IN GENERAL. It is the general rule, both in equity and under the statutes, that a wife may mortgage her separate property to secure the debts of her husband.⁶⁹ In a few states, however, either by reason of express encumbrances. Continental Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Wilson, 144 Cal. 776, 78 Pac. 254.

Decree establishing lien not retroactive.—The execution of a mortgage by a married woman alone, upon her separate property, may furnish a satisfactory ground upon which a court of equity may properly establish a lien upon it; but if this is done the lien will have no retroactive operation, so as to affect rights acquired prior to the decree and after the execution of the mortgage. See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 671.

Conveyance to third person to evade statute.—If a husband and wife convey her statutory estate to a third person, who mortgages it to one advancing money on the faith of it, knowing at the time the transaction was a device to obtain a loan of money for the husband, by mortgage of the wife's statutory estate, a court of equity will annul the conveyances, and avoid the entire transaction so far as it affects the wife. Conner v. Williams, 57 Ala. 131. See also Freeman v. Mutual Bldg., etc., Assoc., 90 Ga. 190, 15 S. E. 758.

—Where a married woman mortgages her separate property with the concurrence of her husband, and the money is paid to her agent, the husband's obtaining the money and using it does not make the loan his debt. Hamil v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co., 127 Ala. 90, 28 So. 558; White v. Stocker, 85 Ga. 200, 11 S. E. 604.

Husband's debt combined with doubtful claim against wife's property.—A deed of a wife to secure a debt of her husband, and also a debt of her own, is not binding, although made for the purpose of effecting a compromise of what she regarded a doubtful claim against her property. Mickleberry v. O'Neal, 98 Ga. 42, 25 S. E. 933. See also Cartersville First Nat. Bank v. Bayliss, 96 Ga. 684, 23 S. E. 851.

Sale of property.—In Georgia, a wife may, however, sell her property to pay her husband's debt. Nelms v. Keller, 103 Ga. 745, 30 S. E. 572.

Mortgage to secure loan from school fund.—Where a married woman makes application in her own name for a loan from the wife's separate property shall not be liable for the debts of her husband does not prevent her from voluntarily mortgaging her estate for his debts,⁷¹ and under a statute providing that a married woman shall not become an "accommodation indorser, maker, guarantor, or surety for another," the wife is not prevented from mortgaging her property to secure her husband's debt, since the statute merely prohibits her personal liability in such direction.⁷² A statute prohibiting contracts of suretyship has been held to apply to a mortgage by a married woman of land owned by herself and husband by entireties.⁷³ A mortgage, even if prohibited, is generally held to be voidable rather than void,⁷⁴ and the defense of coverture cannot be set up by a third person.⁷⁵

(ii) EFFECT OF NATURE OF ESTATE. Statutes in some states making invalid the wife's mortgage for the debt of her husband refer only to her statutory separate estate,⁷⁶ while in other states they have been construed to apply to all her separate estate, whether equitable or statutory.⁷⁷ In the creation of an equitable separate estate, the creating instrument may place a restraint upon the wife's power to give a mortgage for the debts of her husband,⁷⁸ or may, on the other hand, expressly or constructively give her the power to mortgage to secure the debts of her husband.⁷⁹

school fund, and, joined by her husband, gives the statutory note and mortgage on her separate estate to secure the loan, she cannot, in an action by the state to foreclose the mortgage, set up as a defense that she signed the note and mortgage merely as surety for her husband. State v. Frazier, 134 Ind. 648, 34 N. E. 636; Lloyd v. State, 134 Ind. 506, 34 N. E. 311.

Where the debt secured is in reality the wife's debt the mortgage is valid. McGee v. Cunningham, 69 S. C. 470, 48 S. E. 473; Christensen v. Wells, 52 S. C. 497, 30 S. E. 611. A wife who on a consideration moving to her estate agrees to execute with her husband a mortgage on her property to pay her husband's debts is not a surety, but a principal. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 162 Ind. 430, 70 N. E. 535.

Conveyance of estate by entirety to third person.—Where, however, husband and wife conveyed their estate by entirety to a third person, who reconveyed to the husband, the transaction being intended to enable the husband to negotiate a loan for his own benefit, the husband's mortgagee, having no knowledge of the secret agreement, had the right to rely upon the husband's ownership as shown by the record. Webb v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co., (Ind. App. 1903) 66 N. E. 470.

Construction of provisions.—A married woman, taking a conveyance of land, "to her sole separate use, and to be held by her free from the debts, liabilities and contracts of her present husband," may mortgage the land to secure her husband's debts. Grotenkemper v. Carver, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 280. But it has been held that where a will creates a separate estate in a married woman, but provides that the land devised shall not be subject to the husband's debts, it cannot be mortgaged for the husband's debts, even though the husband and wife might jointly sell it. Hirschman v. Brashears, 79 Ky. 258.

General power to mortgage.—Where the deed of a married woman of property owned by her authorized her to mortgage it, that mortgage must nevertheless be to carry out the purpose for which the deed was made, and cannot be made to secure an indebtedness of the husband. Nichol v. Nichol, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 145.

(iii) PLEDGE. As in the case of a mortgage, it is the general rule that the wife may make a valid pledge of her personal property to secure her husband's debt.⁸⁰ The statutes, however, sometimes require the written consent of the wife⁸¹ or that of the husband.⁸²

(iv) CONSIDERATION. An extension of time by the husband's creditor is a sufficient consideration for the wife's mortgage to secure the debt,⁸³ and a consideration supporting a note by the husband will support her mortgage for its security.⁸⁴ Likewise a consideration sufficient for her former mortgage for the husband's debt will support a new mortgage given in place of the old.⁸⁵ A mortgage, however, given for a preëxisting debt of the husband without any new consideration is without consideration and unenforceable;⁸⁶ but a consideration of further advances to the husband will sustain a mortgage by the wife for an antecedent indebtedness.⁸⁷

Trustee expressly authorized to mortgage.—The Georgia statute forbidding a wife to bind her separate estate by any assumption of her husband's debts, and declaring void any sale of her separate estate made to a creditor of her husband in extinguishment of his debts, does not prevent a wife from joining with her husband in mortgaging, for the husband's debts, property conveyed by the husband to a trustee for the wife's sole benefit, the trustee being authorized in the deed to mortgage the property on request of the husband and wife. Broadnax v. Ætna Ins. Co., 128 U. S. 236, 9 S. Ct. 61, 32 L. ed. 445.

Pledge of life-insurance policy.—In the absence of statutory prohibition, a policy of insurance on the life of the husband for the benefit of the wife may be assigned or pledged by her as collateral security for his debts. Collins v. Dawley, 4 Colo. 138, 34 Am. Rep. 72; Emerick v. Coakley, 35 Md. 188; Kulp v. Brant, 162 Pa. St. 222, 29 Atl. 729.

Married woman under disability to contract not bound by promise.—A married woman cannot be held liable, either on an express or an implied promise, to pay over to one to whom she has pledged stock, to secure her husband's debt, money which she has received on a subsequent sale of the stock, contrary to the rights of the pledgee. Platt v. Hawkins, 43 Conn. 139.

Husband's exercise of common-law right.—A pledge by a husband of his wife's shares of stock for a debt of his own is an exercise of his common-law power of appropriation, where he intends thereby to appropriate the stock as his own. Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Hume, 121 Ala. 168, 25 So. 806, 77 Am. St. Rep. 43.

Husband's fraudulent representation as to consideration.—Where a husband procures his wife's signature to a deed of her land or homestead to secure his preëxisting debt to a third person, he acts as agent of such person, and binds him by his acts, so that the fraud of the husband on the wife renders the instrument void. Edwards v. Boyd, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 204.

Wife succeeding husband as partner.—A wife, becoming a copartner in place of her deceased husband, is presumed to be liable for his partnership debts, and a mortgage executed by her therefor is sustained by a good consideration. Preusser v. Henshaw, 49 Iowa 41.

Original consideration void.—Where a pledge of her separate property for her husband's debt is void because prohibited by law, a ratification after his death is not binding unless supported by some new consideration, other than the original obligation. Union Nat. Bank v. Hartwell, 84 Ala. 379, 4 So. 156.

87. Linton v. Cooper, 53 Nebr. 400, 73 N. W. 731.

Fraud.—A mortgage of a wife's property, covering an old debt of the husband of which she was not informed, procured to be executed by her after the husband had obtained her consent to mortgaging her property to secure the purchase-price of goods he was about to purchase, even when obtained without any false representations, is void for

(v) JOINT BENEFIT OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. In the absence of a statute invalidating her mortgage for the debt of her husband, the wife's mortgage for the joint benefit of herself and husband will be good.⁸⁸ If, however, a married woman's mortgage of her separate estate for the husband's debt is not enforceable, her mortgage for their joint benefit will be valid only to the extent of the benefit received by her, the amount of the husband's debt being deducted in computing the sum due.⁸⁹ A mortgage of the wife's lands for the payment of a joint judgment against husband and wife is valid.⁹⁰

(vi) ESTOPPEL TO DENY VALIDITY. When the wife is without authority to give a valid mortgage for the debt of her husband, she will not be estopped from showing that the consideration was in fact for his benefit, although the deed recites that it was given to secure her own indebtedness,⁹¹ especially where the mortgagee knew that the transaction was merely colorable.⁹² So she is not estopped from denying her want of power to make the mortgage, although she fraud as to such undisclosed prior indebtedness, although valid as to the purchase-price of the goods. Smith v. Osborn, 33 Mich. 410.

Failure of joint consideration.—Where a husband and wife mortgage land of the wife to secure advances and sales to be made to them, but the evidence shows that the advances and sales were made to the husband alone, a bill to foreclose the mortgage cannot be maintained. Browne, etc., Co. v. Sampson, 44 Ill. App. 308.

Kentucky Bank*, 48 Ala. 451, holding that such a mortgage vests no title in the mortgagee.

Amount of wife's benefit not ascertainable.—A married woman is not liable on a mortgage executed by her given in part to secure a loan to her husband, although part of the consideration was for the benefit of the wife, where it is not shown how much was for the wife's benefit. Chambers v. Bookman, 32 S. C. 455, 11 S. E. 349; Taylor v. Barker, 30 S. C. 238, 9 S. E. 115.

Joint mortgage on separate lands of each.—A joint mortgage by a man and his wife on the separate farms of each, which recites that it is given for supplies and advances for both farms, is not void as to the separate farm of the wife. Neal v. Bleckley, 36 S. C. 468, 15 S. E. 733.

Mortgage for purchase-price.—Where a wife purchased land, paid part of the price, and took a bond for title, and subsequently the land was conveyed to her and her husband, both of whom executed a mortgage to secure the price, the mortgage attached to whatever the wife acquired in the lands by her purchase, and, so far as it operated on that interest, was subject to foreclosure. Prout v. Hoge, 57 Ala. 28. And see Lammons v. Allen, 88 Ala. 417, 6 So. 915.

In Mississippi, the mortgage of a married woman for a joint benefit can be enforced for her debt upon the corpus of her estate, but for the husband's debt only upon its income. Williams v. Schwab, 56 Miss. 338; Klein v. McNamara, 54 Miss. 90; Hand v. Winn, 52 Miss. 784. Where a wife, her husband joining, executes a trust deed of her property to secure payment of supplies to be advanced, and on default the land is sold under the deed and bought in by creditors, she cannot recover against one who subsequently becomes the owner, on the ground that the deed was not valid to convey the corpus of her estate because given to secure her husband's obligation. Walker v. Ross, 65 Miss. 523, 5 So. 107.

Mortgage given after husband's receipt of consideration.—A mortgage of the separate property of the wife, executed by her jointly with her husband, to secure the purchase-price of goods, reciting that the grantors convey the land, and also the goods "which we have purchased," to secure notes given for the goods, and acknowledging that the grantors own the land equally as tenants in common, and not by entirety, will not bind the wife where the mortgage was procured from the wife after sale and delivery of the goods to the husband alone, who had no authority to act for his wife. Cole v. Temple, 142 Ind. 498, 41 N. E. 942.

has indirectly received the benefits of the proceeds of the mortgage.⁹³ Where a wife executed a mortgage of her property to secure her husband's debt, believing his statement that the mortgage was on his property, and there has been no fraud on her part, she is not estopped to assert the invalidity of the mortgage.⁹⁴ As a general rule, however, a married woman who has power to give a mortgage may be equitably estopped by her acts to assert that the debt secured was that of her husband.⁹⁵

(VII) EXTENT OF LIABILITY. Independent of statute imposing a personal liability,⁹⁶ the mortgage of a married woman to secure the debt of her husband imposes no personal liability upon her,⁹⁷ and where she mortgages her property for the benefit of her husband she will not be liable for any deficiency after the application of the mortgaged property in payment of the debt.⁹⁸ A mortgage executed by the wife may be void in part and valid in part, as where given to secure the purchase-price of goods to be sold the husband but fraudulently made also to cover an existing indebtedness.⁹⁹ A wife's mortgage to secure a loan to her husband from a building and loan association covers the premiums and fines due from him in accordance with the rules of the association.¹

(VIII) RIGHTS OF THE WIFE AS HUSBAND'S SURETY. A married woman who mortgages her separate property for the debt of her husband thereby assumes the relation of a surety,² and is entitled to all the rights and privileges that belong to sureties in general.³ Thus the mortgage is discharged by an extension of the time of payment of the principal debt without her assent,⁴ by the procuring a third person to sign the mortgage note,⁵ or by the release of property belonging to the husband and covered by the mortgage.⁶ She is generally entitled to have her separate estate exonerated by the application of the estate of the husband to the payment of the mortgage debt,⁷ and she becomes a creditor of the husband or his estate to the amount of the debt discharged out of her estate.⁸ If two mortgages

Perversion of security.—Where a joint mortgage by a husband and wife of the separate property of the wife to secure a debt of the husband covered a farm and the crops to be raised thereon, and the creditor, by direction of the husband, applied proceeds of the crop to a different debt of the husband from that secured by the mortgage, as against the wife, this was a perversion of the security which discharged her land. Purvis v. Carstaphan, 73 N. C. 575. But where a wife executes a mortgage on her lands to satisfy her husband's debts, the funds procured to be paid by the mortgagee to the creditor, it is not diversion of security if the creditor takes the note by indorsement from the mortgagee in lieu of the funds. Voluntary forbearance of mortgagee to sue.—Where husband and wife joined in a mortgage on property of each to secure the husband's debt, and after the debt was due the husband, with the assent of the creditor, conveyed his property in trust to manage and sell the same, and apply the proceeds on the debt, the voluntary forbearance to sue while this arrangement was being carried out did not amount to an extension of time which would discharge the property of the wife from the mortgage, as it was neither for a time certain, nor for a valuable consideration, and left her at liberty to pay the debt, and become subrogated to the rights of the creditors. Allen v. O'Donald, 28 Fed. 17.

In Kentucky, however, it is held that a married woman, by signing a note jointly with her husband, and mortgaging her land as security for the loan made to him, does not become the surety of the husband, but the pledge of her estate is valid, and therefore an extension of time granted the husband does not discharge her land from liability for the repayment of the loan. Burden of proof.—A wife who has mortgaged property given her by her husband for his debt is a surety merely of her husband, and as such is entitled to exoneration of her estate and reimbursement from her husband's estate; and, if such a claim by her is sought to be defeated by showing that the mortgage was for her benefit or for the benefit of her estate, the burden of proof is on the husband or those representing his estate. Shea v. McMahon, 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 65.

Postponement of wife's claim.—A wife who mortgages her own land for the payment of her husband's debts is postponed until the

are given for the same debt of the husband, one of the husband's lands and the other of the wife's, his property is the primary fund for the satisfaction of the debt,⁹ and the same rule applies where there is only one mortgage which includes lands of both husband and wife.¹⁰ To charge the mortgagee with the wife's equities as surety, it is essential that he have knowledge of such suretyship,¹¹ although if the wife is prohibited from acting as surety, the mortgagee who knows that the security is upon the separate property of a married woman is bound to inquire as to the consideration,¹² and in general when the consideration is known to be the debt of the husband, the creditor is affected with notice of the wife's relation.¹³

c. Debts of Third Person. Unless the statute prevents, a married woman may as a general rule give a valid mortgage for the debt of a third person.¹⁴ Statutes, however, forbidding her contracts of suretyship may render such mortgages invalid,¹⁵ but the general principles of estoppel will apply to such mortgages.¹⁶ creditors of the husband are paid, although, as against the husband's heirs and legatees, she may claim the rights of a creditor. Lancaster Bank v. Hogendobler, 3 Pa. L. J. Rep. 36, 4 Pa. L. J. 372.

The mortgage may be enforced in equity although void at law. Hepburn v. Warner, 112 Mass. 271, 17 Am. Rep. 86.

Mortgage as part of transaction vesting title.—A married woman cannot avoid a mortgage given by her to secure the debt of a third person, when such mortgage was made at the time she took title to the mortgaged property, and as part of the transaction by which she became vested with the title thereto. Conkling v. Levie, 66 Nebr. 132, 94 N. W. 987, 988.

Benefit to wife.—A deed of trust executed on the separate estate of a married woman, which is void as an alienation of the corpus of the estate, is not an encumbrance on the rents and profits, where it does not appear that the loan was for her benefit, and her sole object in executing a deed was to create a specific lien on the estate for the payment of the debt. *Taylor v. Pennsylvania statute.—The power of a married woman to mortgage her estate for the debt of another was not restricted by the act of June 8, 1893, providing that a married woman "may not become accommodation indorser, maker, guarantor or surety for another." Kuhn v. Ogilvie, 178 Pa. St. 303, 35 Atl. 957; Mansmann v. Cady, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 54.

May pay debts of another.—While a married woman cannot become surety for her son-in-law, so as to bind herself or her property for the payment of his debts, she may extinguish his debts, on her own credit, with a mortgage on her property as security for the performance of her own contract. Athens Nat. Bank v. Carlton, 96 Ga. 469, 23 S. E. 388; Villa Rica Lumber Co. v. Paratani, 92 Ga. 370, 17 S. E. 340.

Husband distinguished from third person.—Where a married woman transferred her property to a partner of her husband, who mortgaged it to obtain advances for the firm, the mortgage was valid, although the wife could not be the surety of her husband, the partnership being a distinct personality from the individuals who compose it. Stothart v. Hardie, 110 La. 695, 34 So. 740.

16. Bailey v. Seymour, 42 S. C. 322, 20 S. E. 62.

Her mortgage given to secure another's debt may be foreclosed, although she is not personally liable on the accompanying note.¹⁷

16. CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT. Where, under the statutes, a valid judgment may be rendered against a married woman in connection with contracts relating to her separate estate, she may charge such estate by a confession of judgment on a contract for which she is liable,¹⁸ and it has been held that, although she is not liable in an action, she may charge her separate estate by directing her attorney to allow judgment to be taken against her.¹⁹ If, however, the contract is one not authorized by the statute, her confession of judgment will be void.²⁰

17. TORTS²¹ — a. Liability in General. The separate estate of a married woman may be subjected to liability for her torts in connection therewith,²² or the torts of her agents within the scope of their authority.²³ In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that the common-law rule²⁴ has not been changed by the modern statutes.²⁵ Where a wife is liable for a tort it follows that an execution on the judgment may be levied on her separate estate.²⁶

b. Torts of Husband. For the tortious acts of her husband, in connection with her property, the separate estate of the wife is not liable to be charged,²⁷

Injury to servant.—A wife living with her husband is not liable for injuries to a domestic servant who, at her request, went to a loft on the husband's premises, and was injured because the ladder to the loft was not suitable for the purpose. Steinhauser v. Spraul, 127 Mo. 541, 28 S. W. 620, 30 S. W. 102, 27 L. R. A. 441.

The husband's liability for the tort of his wife, not done by means of, or in the use of, or in the assertion of some right in reference to her separate property, is not changed by the fact that under the statutes she may have a separate estate, and may manage it. Henley v. Wilson, 137 Cal. 273, 70 Pac. 21, 92 Am. St. Rep. 160, 58 L. R. A. 941.

unless where she is empowered to appoint an agent and he acts for and on her behalf as such.²⁸

c. Harboring Vicious Animals. A few cases have held that the wife is not liable for injuries caused by dogs belonging to and kept by her husband, although harbored on her separate premises,²⁹ especially when the husband keeps such animals there against her consent.³⁰ Where, however, she had knowledge of a dog's viciousness, and permitted it to remain, she was held liable for damages inflicted by it.³¹ So where a bear belonging to the husband escaped from its place of confinement on the separate property of the wife, harbored there without objection from her, she was held liable for injuries caused by it upon the public street.³²

18. ENFORCEMENT OF LIABILITIES AND CHARGES — a. Equitable Remedy. Unless some statute provides for a remedy at law, charges against the wife's separate estate are enforceable only by a bill or proceedings in equity.³³ The proceeding is one in rem against the separate estate and not a remedy against her personally.³⁴

Vanneman v. Powers, 56 N. Y. 39; Corning v. Lewis, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 51, 36 How. Pr. 425; Birdseye v. Flint, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 500.

Conversion of trust property by husband.—Although the husband is the equitable owner of his wife's estate, conversion by him of assets of an estate, to a share of which his wife is entitled as distributee, does not impair her right to recover her share of the estate. Currie v. McNeill, 83 N. C. 176.

Devastavit by husband of executrix.—An executrix who marries and survives her husband is liable in equity to answer, out of her own separate estate, for the devastavit of her husband, committed during coverture, in the exercise of her office as executrix; yet, as an equitable rule, its application will be governed by the circumstances of each particular case. Calhoun's Appeal, 39 Pa. St. 218.

Joint liability with husband.—A husband, as agent of his wife, leased her land, and, with her knowledge, made her his co-plaintiff in an attachment suit against the tenant for her rental part of the crops, prosecuting the suit for their joint benefit. It was held that the wife was jointly liable for the wrongful acts of the husband in carrying forward the prosecution. Byford v. Girton, 90 Iowa 661, 57 N. W. 588.

No capacity to appoint agent.—Although a married woman cannot have an "agent" with respect to her property, the mere fact that she is permitted by statute to own property in fee implies that she may improve or repair it, and for that purpose she may therefore employ servants, for whose negligence she and her husband will be jointly liable. Sale of separate estate.—Where a married woman has in good faith sold her separate estate for a valuable consideration, equity will not afterward take jurisdiction of an action to subject such estate to the payment of her note or other general engagement. French v. Waterman, 79 Va. 617.

A note for the debt of another, signed by a married woman merely as surety or accommodation maker, cannot be enforced against her in an action at law. Kavanagh v. O'Neill, 53 Wis. 101, 10 N. W. 369.

Equity gives execution against the separate property just as a court of law gives execution against the property of other debtors.⁵⁵

b. Nature of the Suit. Creditors' bills may be maintained for the purpose of enforcing a charge against a married woman's separate estate;⁵⁶ but perhaps the more accurate statement would be that the bill is peculiar to itself, seeking a special and particular remedy.⁵⁷ It is also the clearer view that debts contracted by a married woman are not equitable liens upon her separate estate, until made so by a decree of the court.⁵⁸

c. Allegations and Evidence. A bill in equity to enforce a contract of a married woman should show that she possesses an equitable separate estate,⁵⁹ and

Nature of jurisdiction.—The jurisdiction of a court of equity over the separate estate of a married woman does not rest upon the ground that the estate is an equitable interest merely, but upon the ground that it is her separate estate, which is equitably subject to contracts entered into by her which are not legally binding upon her personally, and which cannot be enforced at law. Johnson v. Cummins, 16 N. J. Eq. 97, 84 Am. Dec. 142.

Execution.—In a proceeding to subject the separate estate of a married woman to the payment of notes executed by her, equity recognizes her obligation to pay, although execution is awarded against her property only. Staley v. Howard, 7 Mo. App. 377.

The phrase "in rem," as used in the statute providing that a claim against a married woman's estate, to pay which she has charged the same, shall be enforced "in rem," means "quasi in rem," and the suit is inter partes. Dulin v. McCaw, 39 W. Va. 721, 20 S. E. 681.

Ch. 387, 45 Eng. Reprint 969.

Income and profits applied first.—Where the annual proceeds of the separate estate of a married woman are insufficient to discharge within a reasonable time a debt with which such estate is chargeable, the chancellor may properly decree a sale of the property itself. Bradford v. Greenway, 17 Ala. 797, 52 Am. Dec. 203.

Rents and profits.—A decree selling the separate estate of a married woman for a debt made during coverture and before the acts of 1893 is wholly void, as prior to such act only the issues and profits could be sold. Waldron v. Harvey, 54 W. Va. 608, 46 S. E. 603, 102 Am. St. Rep. 959.

Enforcement limited to power to charge.—The power of the courts to enforce the engagements of a married woman against her equitable separate estate is no greater than that conferred upon the woman by the instrument creating it. Dezendorf v. Humphreys, 95 Va. 473, 28 S. E. 880.

The rule that a creditor must exhaust his remedy at law before seeking equitable relief does not apply to an action to charge the separate estate of a married woman for the payment of a claim, the statutes in force giving him no remedy at law. Elliott v. Lawhead, 43 Ohio St. 171, 1 N. E. 577.

Specific performance.—A contract founded upon proper consideration, by which the husband and wife bind themselves to execute a mortgage of the separate estate of the wife, will be enforced by a court of equity, and such estate will be held liable for the debt intended to be secured. Hall v. Eccleston, 37 Md. 510.

Property to be designated.—To support a levy on the wife's personal property for a debt of the husband for necessities, under Mo. Rev. St. § 6869, as amended by Sess. Acts (1895), p. 222, the petition must aver the wife's ownership of separate property, and point out the property on which the levy is to be made. Latimer v. Newman, 69 Mo. App. 76.

Enforcement of claim for family necessities.—Under the statute securing to a wife the profits of her separate estate, except that income from her realty and her personalty shall be liable for her husband's debts for in accordance with her limited equitable liability existing in some jurisdictions, the evidence must show that her contract was made with direct reference to such separate estate,⁴⁰ or upon the credit of the same.⁴¹

d. Remedy at Law. By force of statute in many states a married woman may be sued at law in connection with her authorized legal contracts, such legal action being the only remedy,⁴² and a special mode of exclusive procedure is pointed out by the statute in many states.⁴³ In general the statutory liability of the statutory separate estate is enforceable by proceedings at law,⁴⁴ although it has frequently been held that the statutory estate may also be subjected in equity to charges recognizable as equitable liabilities, especially where the statutes have not provided for personal actions against her.⁴⁵

e. Exhausting Husband's Property. The equitable remedy against the wife's separate estate for a debt contracted by her jointly with her husband is generally enforceable without first exhausting the property of the husband;⁴⁶ but where the wife occupies the relation of a surety, the remedy against the husband's family necessities, and providing that before any execution shall be levied on her separate estate she shall be made a party to the action, and all questions involved shall have been therein determined, a petition in a suit against a husband and wife for family necessities, seeking a satisfaction out of the rents and products of a farm belonging to the wife, without in any manner describing them, is insufficient to warrant a decree against the wife. *Megraw v. Equitable separate estate.—It is held, however, in some cases, that a statute providing for general legal remedies does not destroy equity's jurisdiction over the equitable estate. See Herzberg v. Sachse, 60 Md. 426; Levi v. Earl, 30 Ohio St. 147; Phillips v. Graves, 20 Ohio St. 371, 5 Am. Rep. 675.

Concurrent jurisdiction.—In some states the remedy by statute is "either" in law or equity. Wilson v. Herbert, 41 N. J. L. 454, 32 Am. Rep. 243; Corn Exch. Ins. Co. v. Babcock, 9 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 156.

Seizure of crops.—The statute empowering a wife to make an agreement by which she can charge her separate estate for the support of her family does not authorize a creditor who has sold her merchandise necessary for the support of her family to take possession of crops raised by her on her own land to satisfy his claim for such merchandise, but he must proceed to obtain judgment and issue execution, subject to her right of exemption. Rawlings v. Neal, 126 N. C. 271, 35 S. E. 597.

Ohio.—Levi v. Earl, 30 Ohio St. 147; Phillips v. Graves, 20 Ohio St. 371, 5 Am. Rep. 675.

Equitable lien on statutory estate.—An equitable lien, a charge on a separate estate of a married woman, secured to her by the code, may be enforced as well by petition in a pending suit, to which they are parties, as by an original bill. Wingert v. Gordon, 66 Md. 106, 6 Atl. 581.

In Alabama the estate of a married woman is purely legal, and a court of equity cannot charge it otherwise than in the manner prescribed by the statute creating it. O'Connor v. Chamberlain, 59 Ala. 431. However, a court of law has no power to render a judgment condemning lands of a married woman, so as to specifically charge them with the payment of costs incurred in a suit for the recovery of such lands as a part of her statutory separate estate. This power exists alone in a court of chancery. Worthy v. Guilmartin, 81 Ala. 97, 1 So. 767.

46. Bradford v. Greenway, 17 Ala. 797, 52 Am. Dec. 203; Sadler v. Houston, 4 Port. (Ala.) 208; Forrest v. Robinson, 4 Port. (Ala.) 44.

property must be first exhausted;⁴⁷ and under a special statutory liability, as for household supplies, it is sometimes provided that the wife shall not be sued unless the husband's property is found insufficient to satisfy the execution.⁴⁸

f. Attachment. While in several states it has been held that an attachment cannot issue against the separate property of a married woman in an action to charge her estate,⁴⁹ the general rule is that an attachment may be granted in the action.⁵⁰

g. Parties. Under the equity practice in most of the states the husband is a proper party with the wife in suits seeking to enforce charges against her separate property,⁵¹ and this is also the rule in the federal courts.⁵² Generally, however, the husband is not a necessary party.⁵³ The trustee is ordinarily a necessary party.⁵⁴

h. Service of Subpœna. In a suit against the wife's separate estate service of the subpœna should be made upon the wife personally.⁵⁵

i. Priority of Liens. A charge upon a married woman's separate estate takes Previous judgment against husband.—Porter v. Caspar, 54 Miss. 359.

Joint-purchase note.—Where a husband has the title to lands purchased by him conveyed to his wife, and joins with her in executing the purchase-money notes, but the wife alone gives a mortgage on the land to secure them, the vendor must first exhaust his remedy against the husband on his personal obligation for unpaid purchase-money before selling the land under foreclosure of his vendor's lien. Martin v. Cauble, 72 Ind. 67.

48. Cauly v. Blue, 62 Ala. 77; O'Connor v. Chamberlain, 59 Ala. 431; Wright v. Preston, 55 Ala. 570; McMillan v. Hurt, 35 Ala. 665; Rodgers v. Brazeale, 34 Ala. 512; Fulton v. Ryan, 60 Nebr. 9, 82 N. W. 105.

Unsatisfied judgment in another state.—Where medical services are rendered a husband, temporarily helpless, and he and the family, including his wife, removed to another state, and no judgment can be obtained against him in the state, the obtaining of a judgment against him in the state where he resides, causing an execution to issue thereon, and having it returned unsatisfied, is a sufficient compliance with the statute to sustain an action against his wife to recover for such medical attendance. *Leake v. Goods purchased for separate trade.—A proceeding to charge the separate estate of a married woman for a debt contracted by her in purchasing goods for her trade as a merchant may be begun by attachment. Frank v. Siegel, 9 Mo. App. 467.

50. Crocker v. Clements, 23 Ala. 296; Wallace v. Monroe, 22 Ill. App. 602; Virgie v. Stetson, 77 Me. 520, 1 Atl. 481.

Non-residents.—The separate personal estate of a non-resident married woman may be proceeded against by a suit in equity, with order of attachment in the circuit court of the county in which her separate personal estate is found. Dulin v. McCaw, 39 W. Va. 721, 20 S. E. 681. There is nothing in the foreign attachment laws which prohibits the commencement of an action against a non-resident feme covert on a valid cause of action, by an attachment against her real estate. Thompson v. Owen, 8 Kulp (Pa.) 36.

Garnishment.—A judgment for a debt against a married woman enforceable only against property to her separate use which she is not restrained from anticipating is a "judgment" within a provision which entitles the judgment creditor to institute garnishee proceedings, and to attach a debt owing or accruing to such married woman. Holtby v. Hodgson, 24 Q. B. D. 103, 59 L. J. Q. B. 46, 62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 145, 38 Wkly. Rep. 68.

When husband is trustee.—A trust estate in the property of a wife, created by an antenuptial contract, for the purpose of paying her debts, can only be subjected to the payment of her antenuptial debts by an action in equity against her husband as trustee and herself as the beneficiary. Coles v. Hurt, 75 Va. 380.

j. After Termination of Coverture. Upon the termination of coverture, a woman may be sued at law upon any contract she may have previously made binding her separate estate.⁵⁸ The death of the husband may, however, prevent an action against the wife to recover for necessaries furnished the family.⁵⁹

k. After Death of Wife. Charges enforceable against the separate estate of a married woman during her lifetime may after her death be recovered from her estate by the method prescribed by the local practice.⁶⁰ Laches, however, may prevent the enforcement of claims;⁶¹ and under a statute making the wife's separate estate liable for household necessaries during coverture, an action at law does not lie against the administrator of the deceased wife to charge her separate estate with payment of the same.⁶² Where a mortgage on the wife's property given to secure her husband's debt is foreclosed after her death, the value of the husband's curtesy interest in the land should be applied to the payment of the debt, in distributing the surplus.⁶³

D. Conveyances and Contracts to Convey—1. POWER OF ALIENATION—

a. In Equity. As in the case of contracts,⁶⁴ there are two general rules in equity governing a married woman's right to dispose of or to alienate her separate estate. The rule observed in England and in a number of our states is that, unless restricted by the instrument creating the separate estate, a married woman may alienate such estate, whether it consists of realty or personalty, as if she were a feme sole.⁶⁵ The other general rule is that a married woman has no powers of alienation over her separate estate except such as have been conferred upon her

The filing of a bill by a creditor against a married woman to subject her separate property to her debts, and the appointment of a receiver by whom the property is taken into possession, gives such creditor a prior lien over other creditors, provided such suit is successfully prosecuted to final decree. *Pensacola First Nat. by the trust instrument.⁶⁶ The general rule is that if the instrument creating the separate estate specifies the mode by which she may dispose of her estate such method is exclusive,⁶⁷ although the contrary has been held in some states.⁶⁸

b. Corpus of the Separate Real Estate. The general authority, under the first of the two rules just mentioned, to dispose of the separate estate, is held in some cases to extend only to the separate personal estate, and to the rents and profits of the separate real estate, but not to the corpus of the separate real estate.⁶⁹ By the English equity rule, however, although some doubt was at first expressed as to the power to dispose of the corpus except by statutory deed or by fine and recovery, the wife may dispose of her separate lands held in fee, regardless of her failure to acknowledge her deed in accordance with the statutory method of alienation.⁷⁰

c. Restraint on Anticipation or Alienation. To guard against the improvident alienation or charging of the wife's separate estate, made possible by the broad powers of disposal given to her by the English rule, the custom of inserting, in settlements to the use of married women, clauses restricting or restraining alienation, became common, and such restraints, when not in violation of the rule against perpetuities, were upheld by the courts of equity.⁷¹ This doctrine

The origin of the plan of preventing alienation of trust estates by married women is credited to Lord Thurlow, in connection with a settlement in which he was a trustee. The clause used, namely, "not by way of anticipation," was held to effectively prevent aliena-

has also been recognized in a number of the American states.⁷² However, under the English statutes, a restraint on anticipation does not prevent a married woman from exercising the powers conferred upon her by such statutes, and the court, notwithstanding the restraint, may, if for the married woman's benefit, by judgment or order, with her consent, bind her interest in any property.⁷³

d. Authority Under Statutes. In all the states, at the present time, there are statutes providing for and regulating the conveyances of married women.⁷⁴ Such statutes, however, have been held to relate only to the statutory estate and to not affect the equitable separate estate;⁷⁵ but in general, where the statutes provide a particular method of alienation, a married woman can, at law, dispose of her property only in the manner pointed out.⁷⁶ A statute, however, merely giving a

After termination of coverture.—The restraint on alienation is annexed to the separate estate only, and the separate estate has its existence only during coverture; but whilst the woman is discovert, the separate estate, whether modified by restraint or not, is suspended and has no operation, although it is capable of arising upon the happening of a marriage. *Tullet v. married woman the right to hold property does not confer upon her the right to dispose of it.⁷⁷

e. What Law Governs. The alienation of the separate real property of a married woman may be valid under the laws of the state where the property is situated, although she may be incapacitated by the laws of her domicile;⁷⁸ but, in general, with reference to the transfer of her personal property the law of the place of contract will apply.⁷⁹ The law in force at the time of the conveyance will determine the validity of the transaction.⁸⁰

the body of the deed.⁸⁹ It is not essential that husband and wife should execute the deed at the same time,⁹⁰ and in some states, where the husband's joinder is ordinarily required, the statutes provide for a separate deed by the wife when abandoned by, or living separate from, her husband,⁹¹ or when the husband is a non-resident of the state,⁹² or is insane.⁹³ The joinder of the husband is also required by statute, in some states, in a conveyance of the wife's equitable separate estate;⁹⁴ but where, in equity, the wife is regarded as a feme sole, the consent or joinder of the husband is generally unnecessary.⁹⁵

other hand, the statute sometimes expressly requires the consent of the husband in order to make valid the wife's lease of her lands.⁹⁷ It is generally held that a lease is not a "conveyance" within the statutes requiring the husband to join in a conveyance.⁹⁸

d. Alienation of Personal Property. As has been stated,⁹⁹ personal property as well as real may, in equity, be disposed of by a married woman under the rule regarding her as a feme sole,¹ although, as in case of realty, she may be restrained by the settlement from alienating it.² Under the statutes she is generally empowered to sell or otherwise dispose of her separate personalty,³ although in some jurisdictions the consent of the husband is required to effect a valid transfer of the same.⁴

e. Consent and Joinder of Trustee. When the wife can otherwise dispose of her equitable separate estate, the consent or joinder of the trustee in her conveyance is not necessary,⁵ unless the deed or instrument of settlement requires such

The payment by the wife of a debt of the husband, with money belonging to her separate estate, is not the making of a contract by the wife, within Code (1886), § 2346, authorizing her to contract in writing, with the assent of her husband expressed in writing, but is a disposition of her personal effects, which, under section 2348, may be made by the wife and husband jointly, by parol or otherwise. *Hollingsworth v. Effect on trustee's title.—A gift or sale by a married woman of her separate estate will consent or joinder of the trustee.⁶ The failure of the trustee to join in the deed as a formal party, when required by the trust, does not prevent the conveyance operating as an equitable mortgage;⁷ but if the statute requires the joinder of the trustee a deed executed without such joinder will be invalid.⁸

f. Judicial Order. Under some statutes an order of court is necessary before a valid disposition of a married woman's separate estate can be made,⁹ but such order cannot be granted where the creating instrument has prohibited its alienation.¹⁰

g. Consideration. A married woman may convey her separate estate in exchange for other property,¹¹ or for the purpose of purchasing other property,¹² or in general for any consideration beneficial to herself.¹³ Moreover, in most jurisdictions, a debt owing by the husband is a sufficient consideration to support a conveyance by the wife,¹⁴ and a statute prohibiting her from encumbering her real estate as security for her husband's debt does not prevent her from conveying it in payment of such debt.¹⁵ By statute, however, the debt of the husband may not be a valid consideration,¹⁶ and the terms of the settlement of the trust may exclude any conveyance for the husband's benefit.¹⁷

3. CONTRACTS TO CONVEY — a. Validity in General. A married woman who possesses full power of disposition over her equitable separate estate can make a contract to convey the same,¹⁸ and where she has, under the statutes, capacity to not impair the title of the trustee in a court of law. Puryear v. Beard, 14 Ala. 121.

she is bound or not under her contract to convey if she offers to carry out her agreement the purchaser is bound.²⁹

4. CONVEYANCES — a. General Requisites. The name of a married woman should appear in the body of her deed,³⁰ which must indicate an intention to convey the wife's estate,³¹ although it is not necessary that it contain covenants on the part of the wife.³² These rules do not apply, however, to the taking of her lands by condemnation proceedings.³³ The deed must be properly signed,³⁴ attested,³⁵ acknowledged,³⁶ and delivered.³⁷

b. Recording. The statutes frequently provide that the deed of a married woman shall not be effectual to pass title until it has been lodged for record.³⁸ In the absence, however, of such statutory requirement, a married woman's deed, if otherwise valid, will be good as between the parties, although not recorded.³⁹

c. Construction and Operation.⁴⁰ Where appropriate words of conveyance are used by a married woman in the granting clause of her deed, the effect of such words will not be controlled or invalidated by a final clause stating that she relinquishes her right of dower.⁴¹ Her deed of her separate property will generally be held void as to her unless executed in compliance with the statutory direc-

Statutes.—A deed by a married woman, of her separate estate, in the usual form, is valid, although it contains no formal declaration of her intent to convey her separate estate, since the act of 1887, providing that all conveyances, mortgages, and the like, affecting a married woman's estate, shall be effectual to convey such estate where the intent is declared in such conveyances, does not render a conveyance without such declaration ineffective to convey the estate. *Carroll v. Wife's name following husband's in deed.—Where land belonging to H, a married woman, was conveyed by deed purporting to be executed by J and H, his wife, the fact that the wife's name followed that of the husband did not show that she joined in the deed merely to release her dower; she appearing in the deed as one of the parties, conveying all her interest in the land. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Whitham, 155 Ill. 514, 40 N. E. 1014, 46 Am. St. Rep. 355, 28 L. R. A. 612.

tions.⁴² The deed of a married woman does not ordinarily pass a subsequently acquired title.⁴³

d. Curative Acts. It has been held that the defective deed of a married woman may be legalized by a subsequent statute;⁴⁴ but a statute giving validity to all deeds duly signed by the grantor has been held not to apply to a conveyance made by a husband of his wife's land, he acting as her attorney in fact, and she giving a subsequent deed alone, where she had no power to execute a deed or to give a power of attorney.⁴⁵

e. Conveyances by Agents or Attorneys. If a married woman has no contractual capacity to execute a valid power of attorney, a conveyance executed by one acting as her attorney will be void,⁴⁶ and a deed executed by her attorney in fact, when the statute requires her separate examination in acknowledgment of the deed, has been held invalid,⁴⁷ although where the power of attorney was privily acknowledged similarly to the acknowledgment required for the deed, it has been held that her conveyance under such power of attorney was, under the statute, valid.⁴⁸ By express provision of statute, however, or by her general authority to convey as if unmarried, a married woman may make a valid deed through an agent or attorney.⁴⁹ The statutory requirements as to the husband's joinder,⁵⁰

Statutory method to be strictly followed.—Some cases place the wife's inability to convey by attorney upon the ground that she is authorized to convey only by the prescribed statutory method. See Duckett v. Jenkins, 66 Md. 267, 7 Atl. 263; Gillespie v. Worford, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 632; Cardwell v. Rogers, 76 Tex. 37, 12 S. W. 1006.

Agreement by attorney to convey.—If a married woman had no authority to appoint an attorney in fact, an agreement to convey made by her agent will be invalid. Rogers v. Higgins, 48 Ill. 211.

Letters of attorney to sell personalty.—Under the statute which provides that "the separate property of the wife shall not be sold . . . unless she joins in deed as prescribed in the conveyance of real estate," a letter of attorney by a wife to her husband, authorizing him to make a sale and transfer of personal property belonging to her separate estate, is void, and no evidence in rela-

Fraudulent representations made by a husband to induce a sale of his wife's property are grounds for cancellation of the sale, where the wife, although not directly participating in the negotiations, permits them to be conducted by her husband, executes the contract thus induced, and accepts the fruits of the services. Chisholm v. Eisenhuth, 69 N. Y. App. Div. 134, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 496.

Long lapse of time.—A conveyance by agents, acquiesced in for more than thirty years, will not be disturbed, although a married woman failed to join in the deed as required by statute. Smith v. Tanner, 32 S. C. 259, 10 S. E. 1008.

or as to other essentials, such as the requirement that the contract be in writing,⁵¹ must of course be observed.

5. ESTOPPEL TO ASSERT INVALIDITY. A married woman will not in general be estopped to assert the invalidity of the void sale of her separate personal property,⁵² of her contract to convey,⁵³ or of her void deed,⁵⁴ when such transfer, contract, or conveyance is not executed in accordance with the requirements of the statute,⁵⁵ although she may have received the purchase-money,⁵⁶ and although improvements may have been made upon the land.⁵⁷ Where, however, she has Joinder of husband in power but name omitted in deed.—Ellison v. Branstrator, 153 Ind. 146, 54 N. E. 433.

Sale of state loans.—Under the statute which declares that any married woman owning any loans of the state, or of the city of Philadelphia, may sell and transfer the same as if unmarried, a married woman may sell such loans by attorney, although her husband is a non-resident alien, and does not join in the power of attorney. *Loftus v. Necessity of written contract.—The statute which declares that a wife shall not enter into any executory contract to sell, convey, or mortgage her land unless her husband joins therein, necessarily means a written contract, since no other contract relating to real estate is valid and enforceable under the statute of frauds; and hence a parol contract for the sale of the wife's land, entered into by her husband as her agent, whose authority also rested in parol, is absolutely void. *Percifield v. The recital in a deed of trust of her separate estate, executed by her and her husband, that it is given to secure her indebtedness, evidenced by her and his notes, does not estop her from showing that they were given for supplies furnished for a plantation, which he cultivated in his name and for his benefit.

Acceptance of benefits by a married woman, under an illegal sale of her separate property, will not estop her from asserting title to the property where she has not been guilty of any fraud in the transaction. Owen v. New York, etc., Land Co., 11 Tex. Civ. App. 284, 32 S. W. 189.

Failure of husband to join in the deed.—Houck v. Ritter, 76 Pa. St. 280.

Failure to comply with law where land is situated.—A married woman, executing in South Carolina a deed with covenant of warranty, conveying her land in North Carolina, in the manner prescribed by the law of South Carolina, but not in compliance with the law of North Carolina, is not estopped from recovering the land. Smith v. Ingram, 132 N. C. 959, 44 S. E. 643, 95 Am. St. Rep. 680, 61 L. R. A. 878.

Failure to reduce to writing.—In the absence of fraud in a parol sale of land by a feme covert or a showing of her acts after her husband's death inducing payment, she is not estopped to set up her title, she being unable, under the statute, to convey by parol. Jackson v. Knox, 119 Ala. 320, 24 So. 724; Gilbert v. White, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 187.

Subsequent purchaser.—The execution by a married woman of a deed, in which her husband does not join, and receipt by her of the purchase-money, do not estop her or her privies, as against a subsequent purchaser without notice of her coverture, and relying on the apparently clear title of record, from attacking the validity of her deed. Daniel v. Mason, 90 Tex. 240, 38 S. W. 161, 59 Am. St. Rep. 815 [reversing (Civ. App. 1896)] 36 S. W. 1113].

received a consideration, some cases hold that she may be estopped from reclaiming her lands notwithstanding that the deed was defectively acknowledged.⁵³ So she has been held to be estopped where the sale by her grantee to a third person was induced by her active efforts,⁵⁴ or where she did not read the deed but relied on her husband's false representations as to its contents.⁵⁵ If, however, she executes a deed for a purpose not permitted by the statute, as for example to indemnify a surety for a debt for which she was not liable, she will not be estopped to deny the consideration by the fact of the recital of a consideration in the conveyance,⁶¹ but the fact that she devotes the price of her conveyed land to paying a debt due from her husband will not prevent an estoppel.⁶² On the other hand, when she may contract as a feme sole, with regard to her separate estate, she will be estopped to deny the validity of her contract to convey,⁶³ and she will also be estopped to deny the validity of her deed when executed in conformity to the statute.⁶⁴ Furthermore, she will be estopped to deny that she received consideration, when her deed recites a consideration, if the rights of innocent third persons have intervened.⁶⁵ Where a purchaser is not chargeable with notice by record or otherwise of her title to land, and she, with full knowledge of her rights, acquiesces and takes part in its sale by her husband, she will afterward be estopped from setting up her title to the same,⁶⁶ and the same rule applies to a sale of personal property.⁶⁷ So likewise where she permits her husband to lease her property, she may be estopped by her acts from denying his authority to lease;⁶⁸ and where without fraud, mistake, or duress, she induces one to purchase her equitable separate estate from her trustee, she will be estopped to impeach the sale.⁶⁹

ried woman, who is the owner of land lying on a creek, agrees for a valuable consideration to let plaintiff build a tramroad along the creek, through her land, for the purpose of transporting timber to market, and, in pursuance of such permission, plaintiff, at considerable expense, and under her immediate observation, constructs the road, and operates it for some time, a court of equity will restrain her by injunction from obstructing the road, and thereby defeating its use as aforesaid. *Tufts v. Statutes.—Under the Indiana married woman's statute which makes void contracts of suretyship by a married woman, but provides that she shall be bound by an estoppel in pais, like any other person, a married woman who conveys her realty for the purpose of enabling the grantee to make a mortgage thereon for his own benefit, which he does to a person who has no knowledge of such fact, and accepts the mortgage on the faith of the recorded title, is estopped from asserting the invalidity of the transaction to defeat the mortgage. *Bragg v. Acceptance of rent after husband's death.—The acceptance by a wife, after her husband's death, of rent under a lease made by the husband of land belonging to the wife, does not estop her from disaffirming the lease and reëntering upon the land. Winstell v. Hehl, 6 Bush (Ky.) 58.

6. RATIFICATION. An invalid deed of a married woman, as for example one in which her husband does not join, cannot be ratified by a subsequent separate deed of the husband to the same grantee;⁷⁰ and a subsequent deed executed by both husband and wife will not relate back to an invalid deed given by the wife alone.⁷¹ Likewise her mortgage, defective for want of proper acknowledgment, is not ratified by a duly executed mortgage on other property which recites the prior mortgage, but which shows no intention of validating the first mortgage.⁷² By joining, however, in a suit to enforce her husband's contract with reference to her separate property, she has been held to have ratified it;⁷³ and it has also been held that where she executes a deed in blank, and delivers the same to her husband to be filled in by him, and to be used for the purpose of conveying her real estate, her subsequent acceptance and use of the consideration will amount to a ratification of the conveyance.⁷⁴ Where the statute, however, prohibits her from becoming a surety for her husband, or from selling her separate estate to his creditor in extinguishment of her husband's debts, she cannot ratify a sale of her separate property by her husband made by him for the purpose of paying his debts.⁷⁵

7. AVOIDANCE. A married woman may in general recover possession of her separate estate when illegally conveyed by reason of a failure to comply with the statutory requirements,⁷⁶ or when the conveyance was made to secure or to pay her husband's debts, providing that such a consideration is prohibited by the statute or the instrument creating the separate estate.⁷⁷ Likewise the deed of the one to whom her husband had sold it, and to whom she and the husband jointly had executed a title bond, agreeing to execute to him a deed if he would buy the land, which he did, paying to plaintiff a small part of the purchase-price, plaintiff is estopped to claim that she was forced by the threats of her husband to sign either the title bond to defendant's vendor, or the deed which she and her husband jointly executed to defendant, defendant being ignorant of any duress. Frasure v. McGuire, 66 S. W. 1015, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1990.

71. Hirsch v. Tillman, 2 Pa. Dist. 662, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 251.

Invalid lease.—Likewise a lease, invalid, under the statute, for lack of husband's joinder, will not become valid by an express exception of it from the covenant against encumbrances in a subsequent warranty deed of the premises by her and her husband to a third party, nor by her assignment of it afterward to such third person with the written assent of her husband. Melley v. Casey, 99 Mass. 241.

72. Evans v. Dickenson, 114 Fed. 284, 52 C. C. A. 170.

Mortgage of wife's lands by husband.—To prove that a wife ratified a mortgage by her husband, it was shown that she afterward joined in a quit-claim deed to the land, never disclaimed her husband's act, and made no defense to the foreclosure. This, however, was insufficient, since joining in the deed did not indicate ratification, and, having parted with her interest in the land, there was no occasion for her to disclaim the act or to defend the foreclosure. Waughtal v. Kane, 108 Iowa 268, 79 N. W. 91.

Defective acknowledgment.—A wife who in equity is the owner of land occupied as a homestead and conveyed by the husband, having the legal title, to secure a debt due from him, is entitled to maintain a bill for the cancellation of the deed on the ground that it is void because not acknowledged by her in the manner prescribed by Code (1896), § 2034. *Shook v. separate estate of an infant married woman may be avoided by her on the ground of her infancy.⁷⁸ Generally she will not be required to refund the consideration received by her as a consideration to recovery.⁷⁹ In order, however, to set aside her deed for the fraud or coercion of her husband, it is necessary to show that the grantee participated in or had notice of the wrong.⁸⁰ When duress is alleged, the proof must be clear, and the evidence must show that the conveyance was the result of such misconduct.⁸¹ The burden of proof is upon the party who seeks the annulment of the deed.⁸² An authorized conveyance by a married woman, duly executed by her, and not obtained by fraud or undue influence, will not be set aside;⁸³ and a suit to recover her property, even in case of an unauthorized conveyance, may be barred by laches.⁸⁴

8. EFFECT OF TERMINATION OF COVERTURE. Where, during coverture, the wife may convey her equitable separate estate with the consent of her husband, she may, after his decease, the fee being in her, convey a valid title alone.⁸⁵ Restraints upon alienation terminate with coverture, and upon the death of her husband she may alienate her property freed from any restrictions.⁸⁶ The validity of her conveyance during coverture, however, is determined by the law and the facts at the time the deed is made;⁸⁷ and it is, perhaps, the clearer doctrine that her void deed, or a void act, cannot be ratified by her after coverture,⁸⁸ but that

Return of balance of consideration.—Where a wife empowered her trustee to convey trust property to her husband's creditor in payment of her husband's debt, for which she was not liable, and received a balance over the amount necessary to satisfy such debts, she was entitled to a reconveyance of the property on payment of the balance so received. *Newman v. Consideration moving to third person.—Where, in payment of a patent right sold to a third person, a married woman conveyed real estate without her husband joining in the deed, having derived no benefit from the sale of the patent, she is not liable to account for any profits realized by the purchaser thereof before she could recover the land. *Brady v. Knowledge of purchaser.—A wife seeking the cancellation of a void deed of trust executed by the husband, in which she joined, and which conveyed real estate owned in equity by her, is not bound to prove that the beneficiary knew of the equity, although she alleged it, where the beneficiary failed to prove that it was a bona fide purchaser. Shook v. Southern Bldg., etc., Assoc., 140 Ala. 575, 37 So. 409.

Three years.—The mere fact that complainant, suing to set aside a deed executed by her and her husband, on the ground that it was procured by her husband's coercion, had waited three years before bringing the suit, would not preclude relief. Pratt Land, etc., Co. v. McClain, 135 Ala. 452, 33 So. 185, 93 Am. St. Rep. 35.

Life-estate in wife.—When land is conveyed to the separate use of a wife for life, with remainder in fee simple to her children, the subsequent death of her husband frees the property from the restrictions incident to the separate estate, and a conveyance by her of her life-estate to the children vests an absolute fee in them. *Lake v. Void lien executed by husband.—The execution of a lien by a husband on crops belonging to the wife, without her joining therein, being a void act, cannot be ratified by the wife after she has become discover her acts after coverture in affirmance of her previous defective deed date only from the time of such affirmance.⁸⁹ Some cases, however, hold that her void deed during coverture may be ratified by her acceptance of a consideration after coverture,⁹⁰ or may prevent her from asserting the invalidity of her deed by the doctrine of estoppel.⁹¹

9. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PURCHASERS. Although a married woman's title bond, or her deed, be invalid, yet where a purchaser has taken possession in good faith and has paid the price, or has made improvements on the land, some cases hold that he is entitled to reimbursement,⁹² or to a lien upon the land for the amount paid by him,⁹³ although in other cases this doctrine is denied.⁹⁴ Where, however, under the instrument creating the trust estate, power is given to convey, with directions as to the investment of the proceeds, a bona fide purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase-money.⁹⁵ In general if the conveyance by a married woman does not conform to the statutory requirements concerning execution and acknowledgment, the grantee acquires no title to the land;⁹⁶ but where the husband, as trustee of the wife's equitable life-estate with remainder over, conveyed the whole estate, under a void power of attorney from the wife, it was held that although the purchaser, who had notice of the trust, took the legal title, the wife's interest did not pass, and the purchaser held the land subject to the trusts.⁹⁷ Under a statute, however, authorizing a married woman to convey her lands as if unmarried, but providing that the husband shall be entitled to his estate by curtesy, a conveyance by the wife alone passes a valid title, subject only to the husband's curtesy,⁹⁸ and the statute regulating title by

Intervening encumbrancer.—Although a married woman's title bond be invalid, yet, if the purchaser takes possession, pays the price, makes improvements, and afterward accepts a deed, his equity is superior to that of an encumbrancer between the date of the bond and the deed. Rockafellow v. Oliver, 41 Ark. 169.

Second purchaser with notice.—Although the bond of a married woman is void and not enforceable against her, yet where, with her husband's consent, she has sold land and received the money and put the purchaser in possession, a second purchaser from husband and wife with notice of the first sale holds for the benefit of the first purchaser, and his note may be canceled. *Warner v. Rights against subsequent grantee.—Where a married woman executed a contract to convey land to plaintiff, which was unenforceable by reason of her failure to acknowledge the same as required by the statute, the purchaser under such contract was not entitled to compel a conveyance by a subsequent grantee of such feme covert, who took with notice of plaintiff's contract. Ten Eyck v. Saville, 64 N. J. Eq. 611, 54 Atl. 810.

Blanks in deed.—Where a wife executes a deed of her land, leaving the name of the grantee, the amount of the consideration, and the date blank, and delivers it to her husband for the purpose of enabling him to sell and convey the land, such deed, duly filled up, in the hands of a bona fide grantee, who purchased from the husband and paid the consideration, will be sustained. *Reed v. adverse possession may bar the wife's right of recovery, although she did not privily acknowledge her deed as required by law.⁹⁹ Subsequent grantees, without notice, may acquire title, although their grantors had notice that the consideration was for the debt of the husband, contrary either to the provisions of the statute or of the creating instrument.¹ If a married woman is bound by her covenant against encumbrances, the grantee, in an action for the unpaid purchase-money, may deduct the amount paid for the removal of a mechanic's and tax lien existing at the time of the deed.² A beneficiary in a void deed of trust who acquires no semblance of title cannot claim to be a bona fide purchaser without notice.³ A purchaser, when sued to recover the price, cannot set up the defense that the sale was not entered into in the manner provided for by statute.⁴

VI. ACTIONS.

A. Capacity of Married Women to Sue and Be Sued—1. IN GENERAL.

At common law a married woman is unable to sue or to be sued as a feme soie,⁵ unless her husband is an alien who has always resided abroad or is regarded as civilly dead.⁶ In equity the rule is practically the same as at law, and the husband must usually join in her suit.⁷ In equity, however, in connection with her separate estate, when the wife's claims are adverse to her husband's, she should sue by her next friend, and make her husband a defendant,⁸ and the husband like-

Innocent third person receiving from husband money belonging to wife.—Although where a husband becomes possessed of his wife's money without her consent, whether by larceny or by violation of trust, the title remains in her, yet she cannot recover the same from one who takes it from the husband for a valuable consideration without notice, since the same rule applies to money and commercial paper. *Courtial v. wise may bring suit against the wife.⁹ If a suit is brought against the wife by a third person, the husband should also be made a party defendant.¹⁰ The rules in equity are, however, affected by the local practice;¹¹ and, in a number of the state jurisdictions, a married woman may now, by statute, maintain in her own name a suit in equity in respect to her separate property.¹² When a married woman, however, sues by her next friend, the choice of such next friend is her personal right, and a bill cannot be filed without her consent.¹³ Statutes in all the states have variously changed the common-law rules, and in most jurisdictions married women may sue or be sued alone in connection with their statutory separate property.¹⁴ Owing, however, to the many differences, and frequent changes, in the statutes, the laws of each particular state must be consulted.

2. CAPACITY DEPENDENT UPON LAW OF THE FORUM. The capacity of a married woman to sue or to be sued is to be determined by the law of the state where the remedy is sought, and not by the law of the state of her residence, or of the state where the right of action may have accrued; ¹⁵ and when the statute provides that married women may sue and be sued, the right is conferred upon any married woman, when within the jurisdiction, whether or not she be a citizen of the state. ¹⁶ Residence within the state for a certain length of time may, however, be a prerequisite of the statute in some special cases. ¹⁷

3. INCAPACITY OR ABSENCE OF HUSBAND. The early common-law rule seems to have been that only when the husband was an alien who had always resided abroad, or was civilly dead, could the wife sue and be sued as a feme sole. ¹⁸ It was held in some cases that the abandonment of a wife by a native husband, without his abjuring the realm, did not render her liable to be sued; but that, the husband being a foreigner, and abandoning her by going abroad, she might become liable on her contracts, and therefore liable to be sued. ¹⁹ Although some of the earlier American cases seem inclined to recognize the English distinctions, ²⁰ yet the general trend of the decisions is in a more liberal direction, and many cases hold that where the husband has permanently abandoned his wife, ²¹ as where he has deserted her and removed to another state with the avowed intention of not returning,²² she may sue and be sued as a feme sole. The confinement of the husband in an asylum for the insane has also been held to be equivalent to an abandonment.²³ The later cases in England hold that a married woman cannot sue or be sued when living apart from her husband, under a deed of separation,²⁴ and the same rule has been laid down in some cases in this country.²⁵ So where husband and wife were divorced from bed and board, it has been held in England that she cannot sue or be sued,²⁶ although the contrary has also been held.²⁷ In a number of states the statute provides that the wife may sue or be sued, upon the desertion of the husband.²⁸

4. MARRIED WOMEN ACTING AS SOLE TRADERS. Where a married woman engages in trade by the custom of London, she cannot sue in the superior courts,²⁹ or be sued,³⁰ without the joinder of her husband. If, however, she is a sole trader, when her husband is civilly dead, or has abandoned her under such circumstances as would authorize her to sue as a feme sole,³¹ actions may be brought by her or against her.³² Under the statutes authorizing her to engage in separate trade, it is the general rule that she may sue and be sued, as if single, on contracts incidental to the business.³³

5. REPRESENTATIVE CAPACITY. In actions at common law brought by a married woman in a representative capacity, such as administratrix, executrix,³⁴ or guardian,³⁵ her husband should join with her. In actions where she could have sued in her own name, if unmarried, rather than in her representative capacity, the husband could sue alone.³⁶ Likewise in suits against her in a representative capacity the husband was required to join.³⁷ Even in suits brought by her as a trustee, the husband should join.³⁸ By force of statute, however, a married woman, when acting in a representative capacity, may sue or be sued as a feme sole.³⁹

6. LIABILITY TO ARREST IN CIVIL ACTIONS. Formerly the rule was that a married woman could not be arrested,⁴⁰ and this rule has been held not to be changed by the statutes permitting her to sue and to be sued as a feme sole.⁴¹ It has also been held that a writ of ne exeat will not issue against her.⁴² There are cases, however, since the married women's acts, holding that where it is not necessary to join her husband with her as a party, she may be arrested in cases where an unmarried woman may be arrested.⁴³

7. LIABILITY OF PROPERTY TO ATTACHMENT. While the separate estate of a married woman is generally subject to attachment in actions properly brought against her to the same extent as the property of any other person, an attachment will not lie against a married woman to enforce her obligations, in a jurisdiction in which her common-law disability to contract has not been removed.⁴⁴

8. OBJECTIONS TO CAPACITY TO SUE. Objection to the capacity of a married woman to sue must be taken by demurrer, if the incapacity appears upon the record,⁴⁵ or by plea in abatement if it does not so appear.⁴⁶ If objection is not so taken, it cannot be afterward urged.⁴⁷

B. Rights of Action and Defenses — 1. RIGHTS OF ACTION BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE — a. In General. At common law, owing to the identity of husband and wife, neither can sue the other;⁴⁸ but, in equity, when the wife's claims are adverse to her husband's, she, by her next friend, may sue her husband, and likewise the husband may sue the wife.⁴⁹ Under the statutes, however, in some of the states, actions at law between husband and wife may be maintained, either generally, or as to certain specified matters;⁵⁰ but in general statutes enabling the wife to sue and to be sued as a feme sole do not authorize either husband or wife to bring an action against the other.⁵¹ In case, however, the statute gives to a married woman a remedy against her husband at law for the protection of her property, her remedy in equity is superseded.⁵² On the other hand a statute expressly forbidding actions at law between husband and wife does not necessarily prohibit suits in equity.⁵³

b. Actions on Contracts. Under some of the statutes, actions at law are maintainable by the wife for the recovery of money loaned to her husband,⁵⁴ and also upon his promissory note executed to her.⁵⁵ Where a married woman is Recovery of property.—A wife may sue her husband in equity during coverture to recover title to her property, which he wrongfully took in his name. Reed v. Painter, 145 Mo. 341, 46 S. W. 1089. But it has been held that a wife cannot sue her husband in equity to recover her separate property, except where the husband has left her without sufficient cause, or fails to support her. Reinhold v. Reinhold, 7 Pa. Dist. 565.

Enforcement of contract rights.—Prior to the enactment in 1889 of what is now Rev. St. § 4340, authorizing a married woman to own real and personal property as her separate estate, which shall not be liable for her husband's debts, and providing that a married woman may own and in her own name litigate concerning her separate estate, a husband and wife could become creditor and debtor of each other, and enforce their rights in equity as such, where the wife had a separate estate. Grimes v. Reynolds, 184 Mo. 679, 83 S. W. 1132 [affirming 94 Mo. App. 576, 68 S. W. 588]. Equity is the proper forum in which to enforce contracts between husband and wife. Mockridge v. Mockridge, 62 N. J. Eq. 570, 50 Atl. 182; Bishop v. Bourgeois, 58 N. J. Eq. 417, 43 Atl. 655; Buttler v. Buttler, (N. J. Ch. 1897) 38 Atl. 300.

Interpleading husband and wife.—Kopinger v. O'Donnell, 16 R. I. 417, 16 Atl. 714.

Remedy at law.—A person imprisoned in the penitentiary for life cannot maintain a suit in equity against his wife and another, to whom she has sold his property, for the purpose of adjusting the respective rights of the three, on an allegation in his bill that the sale is void, and an admission that she has an interest in the property which should be determined; the wife having no interest in his property which can become the subject of suit between them under such circumstances. He has a remedy at law against the purchaser, if the sale was void. Willingham v. King, 23 Fla. 478, 2 So. 851.

Action for partition.—A wife owning real estate as tenant in common with her husband may maintain an action for partition against him. Moore v. Moore, 47 N. Y. 467, 7 Am. Rep. 466. So the husband may maintain an action for partition against his wife. Wurz v. Wurz, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 720, 27 Abb. N. Cas. 58.

Suit to set aside fraudulent conveyance.—Under the statute providing that a married woman, abandoned by her husband, may "sue and be sued as a feme sole," she may maintain a suit against her husband to procure the setting aside of a conveyance of land obtained by him from her by fraud, undue influence, and duress. Adams v. Adams, 51 Conn. 135.

entitled to the value of her services as her separate property, she may in some jurisdictions make her husband a party defendant, if he with others became liable for the same.⁵⁶

c. Wife's Separate Estate. Without the aid of a statute, a married woman may, in equity, sue her husband in respect to her separate property,⁵⁷ and under many of the statutes she is expressly or impliedly authorized to bring action against him for the recovery of, or for any unlawful interference with, the same.⁵⁸ For instance, she may maintain replevin where she lives apart from her husband.⁵⁹ So she may bring detinue,⁶⁰ ejectment,⁶¹ or an action against him for the conversion of her property.⁶² So the husband has been permitted to sue his wife in a court of law on a contract between them for the benefit of her separate estate.⁶³ It has been held that where a married woman leases her lands to a firm of which her husband is a member, she may, with his consent, obtain judgment against the firm for breach of the covenants in the lease.⁶⁴

d. Actions For Torts. Neither under the rules which obtain at common law nor generally under the provisions of the various statutes, can the wife maintain an action against her husband for his personal torts to her person or character.⁶⁵ Thus it has been held that the wife cannot sue her husband for slander,⁶⁶ nor for assault and battery.⁶⁷ Even the dissolution of marriage by divorce does not permit the wife to sue the husband for a tort committed upon her during coverture.⁶⁸ Under the statutes, however, the wife may generally sue the husband for wrongs done to her property.⁶⁹ She may bring replevin against her husband,⁷⁰ and the husband likewise may bring replevin against his wife.⁷¹ She may sue him for conversion,⁷² and he may sue her therefor.⁷³ It has been held, however, that the husband cannot sue his wife for deceit by which he was induced to marry her.⁷⁴

e. Wife's Right to Allowance to Maintain Action. It has been held that a husband cannot be ordered to pay money to enable his wife to maintain an action against him, except in actions for separation or divorce.⁷⁵ Pending a suit to enforce a marriage settlement, however, a reasonable allowance for the expenses of the litigation has been allowed.⁷⁶

2. RIGHTS OF ACTION BY HUSBAND OR WIFE, OR BOTH—a. On Contracts—

(i) WIFE'S ANTENUPTIAL CONTRACTS. On contracts made by the wife before marriage, the husband and the wife must, according to the common-law rule, sue jointly.⁷⁷ The reason of this rule is that such actions survive to the wife, and, if not sued on during coverture, she may herself bring action after her husband's death.⁷⁸ Under the statutes, however, a married woman's right to sue for the recovery of her separate property includes, in many jurisdictions, choses in action accruing before her marriage, and in such actions she may now generally sue alone.⁷⁹

(ii) CONTRACTS OF WIFE DURING COVERTURE—(A) In General. At common law, the husband could sue in his own name on contracts made after marriage with the wife alone.⁸⁰ Generally, however, the husband may join the

Husband's right, in general, to recover for board.—The right to recover for board furnished in a married man's household belongs to him, his wife having no separate business or interests of her own, and the expenses of to sue alone upon contracts in connection with her separate trade or business.⁸⁶ However, a contract made by a wife as agent for her husband is to be sued upon in his name.⁸⁷

(b) Contracts For Personal Services. The husband's common-law right to the services of his wife⁸⁸ enables him to sue to recover her earnings either alone⁸⁹ or to join her in the action as the meritorious cause.⁹⁰ If he makes a gift to her of her services, she may sue for their value as her separate property;⁹¹ and under

Services of wife in household.—A husband should sue alone for the support, in his own household, of a third person, although the services consisted largely of the personal attendance of his wife. Peterson v. Christianson, 68 N. J. L. 392, 56 Atl. 288.

Right of action survives to husband's representative.—The representative of the husband, and not the wife, is entitled to sue for work and labor performed by the wife during the coverture. Todd v. Todd, 15 Ala. 743.

90. Candy v. Smith, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 303.

Express promise to wife.—If the property or service of the wife has been the meritorious cause of action, and an express promise of payment is made to her, she may be joined with her husband in an action to enforce payment. *Prescott v. Husband may elect to sue alone or join.—A husband may sue for services rendered by his wife; but, where such services were performed in pursuance of a contract made directly with her, it is optional with the husband to join his wife with him as plaintiff. Avogadro v. Bull, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 384.

Wife cannot, in the absence of statute, sue alone.—A wife could not sue in her own name, her husband living, for work performed by her. Murphy v. Bunt, 2 U. C. Q. B. 284.

Estoppel by making joint claim.—A husband is entitled to the earnings of his wife, and the fact that such claim is made against the estate of a decedent in the name of the husband and wife jointly will not estop him from claiming such earnings. Gorrecht's Estate, 12 Lanc. Bar (Pa.) 143.

Husband may waive his marital right.—Under Mo. Rev. St. (1889) §§ 1996, 6864, empowering women to contract, husband and wife may join in a suit to enforce a contract the statutes which prevail in many jurisdictions, expressly securing her earnings to her, she may alone bring action upon a contract for her labor and services for her sole and separate use.⁹³ The husband may still sue, under his common-law right, for her services not within the purview of the statutes.⁹³

(iii) CONTRACTS OF HUSBAND. On contracts made by the husband in his own right, and in his own name, he should sue alone,⁹⁴ although, by force of statute, a contract made by him in his own name for the benefit of the wife may give rise to their joint right of action.⁹⁵ Where, however, transactions by the husband, in his name, prejudice her property rights, she may generally sue for the protection of her own interests.⁹⁶

made by them jointly with defendant, although the contract be for the wife's services, since the husband may, under equity rules, independent of statute, waive his right to his wife's personal property. Niemeyer v. Niemeyer, 70 Mo. App. 609.

Contract by husband for services of himself and wife.—In an action for the breach of a contract with plaintiff to employ him and his wife, the wife is not a necessary party, as her earnings belong to the husband. Sines v. Wayne County Superintendents of Poor, 58 Mich. 503, 25 N. W. 485; Harrington v. Gies, 45 Mich. 374, 8 N. W. 87.

Single sale of goods of both.—Where a husband, with his wife's knowledge and consent, makes a single sale of personalty, some of which belongs to him, some to her, and some to them both jointly, he can sue for the price without joining her as plaintiff. Gillett v. Knowles, 97 Mich. 77, 56 N. W. 218.

Husband suing for wife's benefit.—Insurance taken out by a husband in his own name upon sole and separate property of his wife is to be presumed to have been procured by him as her agent, and he may sue in his own name for her benefit in case of loss. Hunt v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 22 Fed. 503.

In decreeing specific performance of a husband's contract for the conveyance of land to which his wife was not a party, it is error to require her to join, and, on her failure, for the master to convey her interest in the land. Mathison v. Wilson, 87 Ill. 51.

Recovery of money lost at gaming.—An action to recover money lost at gaming may be maintained by the husband in his own name, although the money belonged to the corpus of his wife's statutory separate estate. Harris v. Brooks, 56 Ala. 388.

Assignment of right of action to wife.—A married woman may sue, even in a court destitute of equity powers, upon a cause of action transferred by her husband directly to her. Brown v. Thurber, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 188.

Notes to husband for loan of wife's money.—Where a married woman's money was loaned to persons who knew it to be hers, and who gave notes therefor to the husband in his own name, the wife could bring an action therefor, as the husband did not thereby become trustee of an express trust, and the action was not therefore subject to the code provision requiring such trustee to sue in his own name. Stannus v. Walker, 1 Handy (Ohio) 537, 12 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 277.

(iv) JOINT CONTRACTS. At common law, in an action on a promise to husband and wife, both may join,⁹⁷ or the husband may sue alone.⁹⁸ Thus, in an action on a promissory note given to a married woman and her husband,⁹⁹ or on a promise to pay them jointly for services performed by them,¹ the wife may properly be made a party plaintiff. The wife, however, cannot sue alone upon a joint contract, unless the husband assigns his claim to her as her separate property.²

(v) *ABATEMENT OR SURVIVAL OF ACTION.*³ Upon the death of the wife a right of action arising from a promise made to her during coverture survives, at common law, to the husband,⁴ and the same is true in case of a contract made jointly with husband and wife by a third person.⁵ If the wife dies pending an action by her and her husband for an antenuptial debt due her, the husband may, at common law, prosecute the suit as her administrator,⁶ since contracts made with the wife before marriage do not survive to the husband and therefore he must sue as administrator.⁷ In case the husband dies first an action on a contract made with him and his wife survives, by the common-law rule, to the husband's administrator;⁸ and she cannot maintain an action in her own name even for services performed by her for a third person, during coverture, when there was

from his wife leased the house where she lived in order to dispossess her, she could not sue the lessee because of acts of dominion exercised by him without violence, although an antenuptial agreement gave her the use of the house for a year after her husband's death. Goodnow v. Shattuck, 136 Mass. 223.

Enforcing contract on title bond.—Although a wife cannot bind herself by title bond to convey her land, where she and her husband give a title bond to convey land held by them by the entirety, they can jointly maintain a bill to enforce the sale of the land to pay the purchase-money. Mullens v. Big Creek Gap Coal, etc., Co., (Tenn. Ch. App. 1895) 35 S. W. 439.

Joinder with subsequent husband.—An action on a bond executed to a married woman and her husband, after the latter had died, may be maintained by the woman and her second husband; but she should then sue in the name of her second husband. Hoy v. Rogers, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 225.

Husband not taking administration.—A surviving husband, or, in case of his death, his executor or administrator, may maintain an action on a personal contract made with the wife before the marriage, or for their joint benefit afterward, notwithstanding he did not take administration on his wife's estate. Chichester v. Vass, 1 Munf. (Va.) 98, 4 Am. Dec. 531.

Mortgage on condition to support husband and wife.—If a person takes a bond and mortgage to himself, with a condition to support him and his wife during their lives, an action upon the mortgage to enforce the performance of the condition for the benefit

no express promise of payment to herself.⁹ Where, however, a contract entered into with husband and wife, during coverture, was based upon a consideration arising from her separate estate, the action will, upon the husband's death, survive to her.¹⁰

b. On Torts to the Person—(i) CAUSES OF ACTION ARISING FROM INJURY TO MARRIED WOMAN. A personal injury to a married woman caused by the tort of a third person gives rise to two causes of action; one for her personal pain and suffering,¹¹ and the other for the husband's consequential loss of her society and services and for expense incurred for medical attention and nursing.¹² The husband may sue for the loss of her services resulting from an injury by a com-of the wife after his decease must be brought in the name of his administrator. Holmes v. Fisher, 13 N. H. 9.

Joint note based on consideration of wife's land.—A wife may maintain an action, after the death of her husband, without joining his personal representatives, on a note payable to the husband and wife jointly in consideration of the conveyance of land belonging to the wife, when the husband did not in his lifetime attempt to reduce the note to possession. *McMillan v. Express promise to wife.—Where defendant gave his acknowledgment of indebtedness to plaintiff, which recited the borrowing from plaintiff a certain sum payable at a certain time, and plaintiff was married at the time, but her husband afterward died, the cause of action survived to her. May v. Boisseau, 12 Leigh (Va.) 512.

Reduction to possession.—A sealed note given to a wife for her separate earnings during coverture survives to her on the death of her husband, he never having laid any claim to it, even as against creditors. Boozier v. Addison, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 273, 46 Am. Dec. 43. In general, however, money due a wife for services is regarded as a chose in possession, and as such requires no reduction to possession. Husband and wife injured by same act.—Where plaintiff and his wife were at the same time personally injured by the same act of negligence of defendant, a recovery by plaintiff for the injury to his person is no bar to an action by him to recover for the loss of the society and services of his wife and for expenses in effecting her cure, caused by the injury to her. *Skoglund v. mon carrier,¹³ or from the sale of injurious drugs to the wife;¹⁴ but a statute authorizing an action against a city by "the person or persons" injured by a defective sidewalk does not permit an action by the husband for loss of services where his wife is so injured.¹⁵ The husband's release for injuries to his wife's property and for physician's bills, the injury to person and property being caused by the same act, does not bar his action.¹⁶ The consent of the wife to the procuring of an abortion on her does not preclude her husband's action therefor.¹⁷

(11) WHO MAY SUE. In the wife's action to recover for pain and suffering, since the action survives to the wife in case of the husband's death,¹⁸ husband and wife must, independent of statute, sue jointly,¹⁹ the wife having no power to sue alone during coverture,²⁰ except in case of desertion by her husband.²¹ For the loss of her society and services, and for expenses incurred, the right of action is, at common law, in the husband alone, and he only can sue.²² By statute, however, in many jurisdictions, a married woman may now, without joining her husband, sue in her own name, and for her own benefit, for her personal injuries and suffering.²³ In some states indeed it is provided by statute that the wife must

Refusal of husband to join.—Under Civ. Code, § 34, as amended in 1892, providing that in actions for personal sufferings, in which a husband refuses to unite, the wife may sue alone, it is no defense to an action by a woman for personal injuries that she is married, where defendants do not raise the question as to whether the husband refuses to unite with her. Baumeister v. Markham, 101 Ky. 122, 39 S. W. 844, 41 S. W. 816, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 305, 72 Am. St. Rep. 397.

Effect of statute.—The statute authorizing the wife to sue alone merely permits such actions as could previously be sustained when brought by the husband alone or by the husband and wife jointly. It follows that a divorced woman who had been compelled by her husband to submit to an attempt by a third person to produce a miscarriage cannot maintain an action against the third person therefor. A joint action brought by a husband and wife under the statute which provides that, in an action by a husband and wife for personal injuries to the wife sustained through defendant's negligence, plaintiffs may recover all the damages sustained by both, and which might otherwise be recovered by separate ac-injuries survives to her.⁵⁰ The husband's right of action survives, on his death, to his personal representatives,⁵¹ except the right to recover damages for the loss of the wife's society.⁵² By force of statute, moreover, an action for injuries sustained by the wife may survive, on her death, to her administrator.⁵³ Where husband and wife sue for an assault committed upon them both, the wife's subsequent withdrawal will not abate the action as to the husband, but he may continue it and recover for the assault made on his own person.⁵⁴

(c) *Damages to Wife's Land.*⁶⁰ For the mere recovery of damages to the real property of the wife, during coverture, the husband, under the common-law rule, may join the wife,⁶¹ or he may sue in his own name.⁶² Where, however, the injury occurred before the marriage, and would survive to the wife, she must be joined,⁶³ since the rule in all cases where an action would survive to her is that husband and wife must join.⁶⁴

(ii) WIFE'S PERSONAL PROPERTY—(A) Injury Committed During Coverture. For actions arising during coverture, in connection with the conversion, or injury, of the personal property of the wife, the husband should, at common law, sue alone, since marriage vests her personal chattels in him.⁶⁵

Sale under power of attorney from husband and wife.—Where lands of a wife are sold by virtue of a power of attorney from the husband and wife, it is not necessary that the wife should be joined in an action to recover the proceeds of the sale. Hutchins v. Gilman, 9 N. H. 359.

Although a wife may live separate from her husband, and acquire property by her personal labor and exertions, or by gift, yet under the common law it belongs to the husband, and he alone must sue for any in-

(B) Injury Committed Before Marriage. If an injury is done to the personal property of a woman before her marriage, husband and wife must join if the cause of action would survive to her.⁶⁶ In detinue, however, it is said that the husband should sue alone, since the wife, upon her marriage, has no longer any interest in the property.⁶⁷ Where, however, the cause of action had its commencement before marriage, but is completed after marriage, as in case of trover before marriage, and conversion during coverture, the husband and wife may, at common law, either join, or the husband may sue in his own right alone.⁶⁸

(c) Actions For Rents, Legacies, or Distributive Shares. For rents accruing before marriage from the wife's real property, the husband should, at common law, join with the wife;⁶⁹ but for rent accruing during coverture, the husband and wife may join, or the husband may sue alone.⁷⁰ The same rule applies to the recovery of legacies⁷¹ and distributive shares⁷² accruing to the wife.

(III) ABATEMENT OR SURVIVAL OF CAUSES OF ACTION. The right of action for injuries to the real property of the wife which affect the inheritance survives to her upon the death of the husband.⁷³ If, however, the wife dies pending the action by the husband and herself, he cannot prosecute alone.⁷⁴ Upon an action in respect to her lands for which the husband might maintain a suit alone during the coverture, he may likewise sue after the wife's death, since the action survives to jury to it. The wife cannot join in the action. Moore v. Carter, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,782a, Hempst. 64.

Distributive share in trust.—Where a wife's distributive share of a decedent's estate is by a decree in equity settled on trustees for her and her children, without excluding her husband's marital right, and the property is situated in another state, where the common law is presumed to prevail, the husband may join with the wife in a bill to recover it from the possession of one wrongfully appointed a trustee, and to have a trustee appointed. *Howard v. In Pennsylvania, the wrongful cutting and conversion of timber on land of a married woman, before the passage of the Married Woman's Act of 1848, gave a right of action to the husband and wife, which survived to the husband at her death, to the exclusion of her administrator. Irwin v. Brown, 35 Pa. St. 331.

him.⁷⁵ For rents of the wife's lands accruing during coverture, the husband may sue, after her death, since, at common law, they belong to him.⁷⁶ So where he has the legal title to her property, as trustee, he may sue on a note of which his deceased wife was the payee.⁷⁷ Likewise, in case of a distributive share, or a legacy, accruing to the wife during coverture, the right to sue survives to the husband.⁷⁸ In general an action by husband and wife to recover a chose in action accruing to the wife before marriage abates by the death of the wife before judgment,⁷⁹ but it survives to the wife in case of the husband's death pending the suit.⁸⁰

d. In Respect to Wife's Separate Property — (1) STATUTORY RIGHT OF MARRIED WOMAN TO SUE ALONE. The common-law rules relating to the rights of action by husband and wife have been greatly changed by the effect of modern statutes, so that, in nearly all the states, a married woman may sue alone in actions concerning her separate property.⁸¹ The action must, however, relate to Petition of married woman stock-holder to dissolve corporation.—Under Code, § 2347, providing that "the wife must sue alone, at law or in equity, upon all contracts made by or with her, or for the recovery of her separate property," a married woman who, as a stock-holder, joins in a petition to dissolve a corporation, should sue in her own name. Wolfe v. Underwood, 91 Ala. 523, 8 So. 774.

No joint action for wife's individual property.—Donahue v. Hubbard, 154 Mass. 537, that the statute is not mandatory, and that if the parties so elect husband and wife may join as at common law.⁸⁷ In a few jurisdictions the joinder of the husband is still required,⁸⁸ especially where he has an interest in the subject-matter of the suit.⁸⁹ Where the wife owns land upon which her husband operates a stone quarry of which he is the sole owner, both may join in a suit to restrain the flooding of the quarry by the damming up of water by defendant.⁹⁰

(III) SUITS IN EQUITY. In equity, in suits connected with her separate property, a married woman sues with her husband,⁹¹ or, providing his interest be adverse, sues by her next friend, making the husband a party defendant.⁹² Under the statutes, however, she may now, in many jurisdictions, sue alone where the suit relates to her separate property.⁹³

The Alabama statute requiring the wife to sue and be sued alone relates exclusively to separate estates created under the laws of Alabama; and a complaint in an action for chattels, which are the separate estate of the wife under the laws of another state, does not disclose a misjoinder of plaintiffs because the husband is made a party plaintiff. *Gluck v. 89. McCoy's Estate, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 9, holding that the statutory provision that the husband need not be made a party to "any action, suit or legal proceeding of any kind, brought by or against her in her individual right" does not embrace a suit to partition the wife's land; and, since the act preserves his curtesy in her land, he is a party in interest to such proceeding, and, under the provision of the Married Woman's Act of

Tenants by entireties.—Where land is held by a husband and wife as tenants by entirety, both the husband and the wife should be joined as plaintiffs in an action for recovery of damages for an injury thereto. *Fowles v. Joint interest in homestead.—When the legal title to a homestead is in a wife, but the larger portion of the purchase-price was paid by the husband, their joint interest in the preservation of the homestead gives them the right to join as plaintiffs in an action to enjoin its sale. Anderson v. Davis, 18 Utah 200, 55 Pac. 363.

Husband's interest by right of curtesy.—A husband, tenant by the curtesy initiate, has an interest in the land, and is a necessary party to a suit respecting it; and if he refuses to become a co-plaintiff in an action by the wife to assert her right to the property, he should be made a party defendant. McGlennery v. Miller, 90 N. C. 215.

In California, where a husband and wife may hold property as joint tenants, tenants in common, or as community property (Civ. Code, § 161), in an action by husband and wife for injuries to their house, evidence that plaintiffs had the house built for them, and that they occupied it, is sufficient evidence of their joint ownership to sustain the action. *Harlow v. (IV) *ACTIONS FOR LOSS OR INJURY.*⁹⁴ Under the general statutory rule authorizing a married woman to sue alone, she may sue for the loss of, or injury to, personal property belonging to her separate estate,⁹⁵ and also for injuries to her separate realty.⁹⁶ However, the husband's occupancy with his wife of premises owned as separate property by her, or his use of her lands by raising crops thereon, is held in a number of cases to be such a possession by him as will entitle him to maintain in his own name an action of trespass for injury to the "possession."⁹⁷ So where a husband is entitled to the rents and profits of his wife's

In California, in an action by a married woman to recover possession of land, it is necessary that the complaint should show that the land sued for is covered by a valid declaration of homestead, as otherwise, under Code Civ. Proc. § 370, the right of action is in her husband. Tappendorff v. Moranda, 134 Cal. 419, 66 Pac. 491.

Land conveyed to husband and wife.—Under the Married Woman's Act (Rev. St. (1889) §§ 6864, 6869), declaring the real estate of a wife to be her separate property, and authorizing her to sue for the possession thereof in her own name, a wife may sue to recover land conveyed to herself and husband Foreible entry and detainer.—Mo. Rev. St. § 1996, does not impair the husband's marital right to enjoy the land of his wife, and he may maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer in respect thereto in his own name. Meriwether v. Howe, 48 Mo. App. 148.

Election to join.—Under the act of 1861, securing to married women the enjoyment of their separate property, the husband and wife may join in an action to recover the land of the wife, but are not bound to do so. Noble v. McFarland, 51 Ill. 226.

Lands conveyed in infancy.—Under Ky. Civ. Code, § 49, permitting a married woman to sue alone "where the action is between herself and her husband," she may so sue to recover land conveyed away by her in her infancy, his interest being antagonistic to hers by reason of his covenant of warranty. *Hardin v. sue to recover the rents and profits of the same.⁴ The action cannot be brought by the husband alone,⁵ except where he has the right to receive the rents and income of the wife's statutory separate estate free from liability to account.⁶

(VII) ACTIONS FOR PURCHASE-MONEY. For the purchase-money arising from the sale of lands belonging to her statutory estate a married woman may maintain an action in her own name.⁷

(VIII) ABATEMENT AND SURVIVAL OF ACTIONS. Where, during coverture, an action for injury to the wife's lands is maintainable by husband and wife jointly, the action may be prosecuted in her name alone after the husband's death.⁸ If the husband has his common-law right of possession of the wife's lands, a suit to recover them from a third person unlawfully holding them cannot be maintained by the wife prior to the death of the husband;⁹ but where the husband has a statutory right to the income and interest of the wife's separate estate, her right of action to recover a note transferred by him accrues forthwith, and is not defeated by his death.¹⁰ The death of the wife, however, pending suit brought by her and the husband for an injury solely to her interest in land, prevents the husband from proceeding alone with the suit.¹¹ If, during the progress of an action concerning a wife's separate property in which the husband has been joined, the husband and wife are divorced, and the wife subsequently marries again, the suit does not thereby abate.¹² Ordinarily the wife's cause of action against her husband, based on contract or the wrongful act of her husband in relation to her property, survives against his representatives.¹³ A judgment on a note given to the wife for a loan of her separate property survives the death of the husband who was a co-plaintiff.¹⁴

3. RIGHTS OF ACTION AGAINST HUSBAND OR WIFE OR BOTH — a. In General. Both at common law and in equity, a married woman is generally incapable of being sued alone.¹⁵ Under the statutes, however, she may now, in most jurisdictions, be sued as if single, especially in matters connected with her separate estate.¹⁶ In actions respecting her real property, the husband should be a co-defendant if he has a legal interest either in the possession,¹⁷ or in the title.¹⁸ Where the husband is alone liable, no action lies against the wife,¹⁹ nor should she be joined as a defendant in actions affecting his rights in property in which she has no interest.²⁰

Joinder of husband optional.—Under Wis. Rev. St. § 2608, providing that a husband may be joined as a party defendant with his wife in an action against her concerning her separate property, plaintiff has the option of joining the husband as a party defendant in a suit against a wife to have her declared a trustee for the benefit of creditors of lands conveyed to her by a third person in fraud of his creditors. Allen v. McRae, 91 Wis. 226, 64 N. W. 889. Under earlier statutes the joinder of the husband was required. Owsley v. Case, 16 Wis. 606; Oatman v. Goodrich, 15 Wis. 589. Under S. C. Code, § 135, which provides that "when a married woman is a party, her husband must be joined with her, except that, when the action concerns her separate property, she may sue or be sued alone," in an action against her as heir, for the debt of her ancestor, on account of real estate descended, her husband may be joined as a party defendant. Lowry v. Jackson, 27 S. C. 318, 3 S. E. 473.

Joinder of husband improper.—Although a husband is an improper party to a summons brought to recover an interest in land which is the separate estate of the wife, it is not error to refuse to quash the summons on that ground, under Acts Assembly (1893-1894) p. 489, which requires the court in such case to direct the action to abate as to the husband and then to proceed with the cause. West v. Adams, (Va. 1897) 27 S. E. 496.

Statute not applicable to suits in equity.—Code (1876), § 2892, providing that a married woman "must sue and be sued alone, when the suit relates to her separate estate," does not apply to suits in equity; and hence, to a bill to enforce a vendor's lien, the husband of a subpurchaser under a conveyance creating in her a separate statutory estate is a proper party defendant. Sims v. National Commercial Bank, 73 Ala. 248.

Test of liability to be sued alone.—Under Code, § 2892, the test of the wife's liability to suit alone, in ejectment to recover lands in possession of herself and husband, under a deed creating a separate statutory estate in her, is not the validity, but the nature and character, of her title. Betz v. Mullin, 62 Ala. 365.

Ejectment against husband.—A husband who, while owning certain lands, erects improvements thereon extending upon a neighbor's lands, and conveys the property to his wife, and occupies it thereafter by virtue of his marital rights only, is not liable to an action of ejectment with respect to the land occupied by the encroaching portions of said improvements. Arbuckle v. Walker, 63 Vt. 34, 22 Atl. 458. Where a person lives with his wife and family on his wife's lands, but has no interest in the possession of the land other than as husband, ejectment by a third person will not lie against him. Debt for support of wife.—Although a wife's property may be subject to the payment of an indebtedness contracted by her as her husband's agent for the support of herself and children, she is not personally liable therefor, and the action must be against the husband. Reilly v. Roache, 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 87.

Mechanic's lien against husband's estate in wife's lands.—Schnell v. Clements, 73 Ill. 613.

A wife's inchoate right of dower in her husband's land does not make her a necessary party to a bill to set aside his title. Kusch v. Kusch, 143 Ill. 353, 32 N. E. 267. But see Smith v. Rothschild, 4 Ohio Cir. Ct. 544, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 698. Where a husband and wife were married before the act of 1866,

Where, however, she has an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, she should also be made a defendant.²¹

b. Wife's Antenuptial Contracts. Actions on the antenuptial contracts of the wife must, at common law, be brought against the husband and wife jointly.²² By statute in some states, however, the wife is alone liable for her antenuptial contracts, and may be sued without the joinder of her husband.²³ Under some statutes providing that the property of a married woman shall be liable for her debts contracted before marriage, husband and wife are properly joined as defendants as at common law.²⁴ restoring the common-law right of dower, the wife is not a necessary party in an action against the husband for the sale of his land for a balance due from him to his vendor for the price. Bunting v. Foy, 66 N. C. 193.

Mortgage executed by husband before marriage.—The wife of a mortgagor, in a mortgage executed before his marriage, is not a necessary party to proceedings for its foreclosure, even if a homestead had since been created in the lands. Wilson v. Scott, 29 Ohio St. 636.

Wife's contingent remainder.—A bill to enjoin the obstruction of a prescriptive right of way over land in which a husband has a life-estate, and his wife a remainder for life if she survives him, may be maintained against the husband, although it must fail as against the wife on account of her coverture and the nature of her estate. Coleman v. Aldrich, 61 Vt. 340, 17 Atl. 848.

In proceedings for the partition and to subject the interest of a tenant in common in land to his debts, the wife of such tenant in common is a proper party, on account of her inchoate right of dower. Smith v. Rothschild, 4 Ohio Cir. Ct. 544, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 698.

In a suit to enjoin a husband from lowering his wife's land, and depriving an adjacent lot of lateral support, the wife is a necessary party. Wykes v. Ringleberg, 49 Mich. 567, 14 N. W. 498.

Ejectment from homestead.—In ejectment, when a husband and wife claim and occupy the land as a homestead, the wife must be made a party defendant. Davis Sewing-Mach. Co. v. Whitney, 61 Mich. 518, 28 N. W. 674.

Bill in equity.—Where a bill in equity is brought against a married woman with the view of obtaining payment of a debt contracted by her before her marriage, from her property fraudulently conveyed while sole, the husband, although a certified bankrupt, should be joined as a party. *Hamlin v. Mississippi.—Code, § 1783, requires the husband to be also a party defendant to a suit on the wife's separate liability, that he may assist her in protecting her interests. If the declaration shows that the contract was made while she was unmarried, her coverture is no obstacle to the recovery of

c. Contracts of Wife During Coverture. The general incapacity of a married woman to bind herself by contract prevents her in general from being sued, either alone or with her husband, at common law, on a contract made by her while married.²⁵ Under the statutes, however, a married woman may, in most states, be sued alone, at law, on contracts in respect to her separate estate,²⁶ and also in some states upon her contracts in general.²⁷ Under some of the statutes, however, the husband should be joined with the wife in actions seeking to enforce her contractual liability.²³ The right of action against a married woman is limited to her statutory capacity to bind herself by contract,²³ and the husband is not such judgment against her as might be rendered against any other defendant. Travis v. Willis, 55 Miss. 557.

Wisconsin.—Under Sanborn & B. Annot. St. § 2608, providing that "where a married woman is a party her husband must be joined with her, except that when the action concerns her separate property or business . . . she may sue or be sued alone," it was error to permit plaintiff to dismiss, as against the husband, in an action against a married woman and her husband to recover for money loaned the wife, who had no separate property or business. *Gallagher v. d. Joint Contracts. At common law the husband is alone suable upon an alleged joint contract of himself and wife, since the contract is his alone.³³ Where, however, the wife has statutory power to make contracts she may be sued jointly with the husband upon her joint obligations with him,³⁴ as where they execute a joint note³⁵ or she joins in her husband's mortgage.³⁶ Under the statutes of some of the states making husband and wife jointly liable for household supplies, an action upon such liability may be brought against them jointly,³⁷

Contract reduced to writing.—Md. Code, art. 45, § 2, declaring that a married woman may be sued jointly with her husband on any note, bill, contract, or agreement which she may have executed jointly with him, includes only contracts wholly reduced to writing, and signed by both husband and wife. Harvard Pub. Co. v. Benjamin, 84 Md. 333, 35 Atl. 930, 57 Am. St. Rep. 402.

Action against husband as waiver of right to sue wife.—Where a husband agreed with his wife to transfer his land to her, on which she was to borrow money and discharge his note due plaintiffs, and she also agreed with plaintiffs, when such transfer was made, to borrow money to pay the note, the commencement of an action against the husband on the note was not a waiver of the right to sue the wife. McIntire v. Schiffer, 31 Colo. 246, 72 Pac. 1056.

35. Herbert v. Gray, 38 Md. 529.

Action against wife alone.—No recovery can be had against a married woman upon a note on which she is jointly and severally liable with her husband, in an action against her alone, unless it is shown that she has separate property. Buning v. Berteling, 7 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 129, 5 Ohio N. P. 167.

Discontinuance against husband.—An action on the joint note of husband and wife, although discontinued as to the husband by its being proved against his estate in bankruptcy, may be prosecuted to judgment against the wife. Goodnow v. Hill, 125 Mass. 587.

Statutes.—Where a husband and wife are not partners, and the husband signs the wife's name to a note for her debt under authority as her agent, and also signs his own name, it is not necessary to bring suit against him before suing the wife, or to join him in the action under the authority of Howell Annot. St. § 7352, providing that nothing in the chapter of which it is a part shall prevent the holder of a note from bringing separate actions against the parties to such note in the manner prescribed by law. *Pontiac First Commercial Bank v. or against either of them, and such statutory joint and several liability may be enforced against both or either of them.³⁸

e. Torts—(1) IN GENERAL. At common law, both husband and wife must be joined as defendants, in an action for a tort committed by the wife before marriage,³⁹ and the husband is a proper,⁴⁰ and sometimes a necessary,⁴¹ party in an action for the wife's tort committed during coverture. If the tort was committed by her under the coercion of the husband, the action lies against the husband alone.⁴² Where, however, by statute, a married woman is made solely liable for her torts,⁴³ she may be sued without the joinder of the husband.⁴⁴

Confusion of accounts.—Where an indebtedness is contracted with a merchant, most of the articles furnished being purchased by the husband, and the account runs through several years, some of the items being such as the statutory estate of the wife is liable for, and others for expenses of the husband and his estate, and this account is kept as one continuous running account on the books of the merchant, such account constitutes but one debt, for the whole of which the husband is liable; and but one suit can be maintained against him for its recovery. Lee v. Tannenbaum, 62 Ala. 501.

Recovery against wife after dismissal of suit against husband.—Under Rev. St. c. 63, § 15, making the liability of the husband and wife for family expenses a joint and several liability, recovery may be had against the wife after the suit has been dismissed as to the husband. Richardson v. W. L. Robinson Coal Co., 95 Ill. App. 283.

Evidence to show joint liability.—In an action against a husband and wife for the value of goods, it is not necessary to show that defendants are jointly liable; and, if either is liable, the verdict should be for plaintiffs. Christian v. Tyler, 70 Ill. App. 227.

(ii) JOINT TORTS. For the joint tort of husband and wife, the wife acting without the husband's coercion, they may be sued jointly.⁴⁵ For instance, for an assault and battery jointly committed by them, the husband and wife may be jointly sued.⁴⁶ Under the wife's statutory liability, they may be sued jointly or severally.⁴⁷

(iii) LIBEL AND SLANDER. Under the common-law rule the husband should be joined in an action against a married woman for slander,⁴⁸ or for a libel uttered and published by the wife.⁴⁹ The common-law rule has not been changed by the general statutes relating to suits against married men.⁵⁰ If slanderous words are spoken jointly by husband and wife, two torts are committed rather than one joint tort, and separate causes of action arise; one against the husband, for his tort, and the other against them both for the tort of the wife.⁵¹

(iv) ARREST OF HUSBAND FOR WIFE'S TORT. It is doubtful whether at present a husband may be arrested in an action against both for the tort of his wife, although it was formerly held that he was liable to arrest.⁵² It is held that a husband taken on a capias ad respondendum for his wife's tort is entitled to discharge on common bail, where the affidavit to hold to bail does not aver the husband's presence or consent.⁵³

f. Abatement or Survival of Actions—(i) DEATH OF HUSBAND. Upon the death of the husband, the wife may be sued upon her contracts entered into before marriage,⁵⁴ and her liability upon her torts, committed either before or instalment plan, upon her default in paying for the same; and under Rev. St. (1889) § 1996, her husband need not be made a party. Gentry v. Templeton, 47 Mo. App. 55; Thomas v. Cooksey, 130 N. C. 148, 41 S. E. 2.

In connection with the control and management of her separate estate, the wife may be, under the statutes, alone subject to liability for the torts of herself or agents. Mayhew v. Dennis, Yelv. 106.

The presumption is, however, that when a tort is committed by husband and wife jointly, the act is that of the husband alone, the wife being under his coercion. This presumption, however, may be rebutted. Warner v. Moran, 60 Me. 227; Marshall v. Oakes, 51 Me. 308; Handy v. Foley, 121 Mass. 259, 23 Am. Rep. 270; Carleton v. Haywood, 49 N. H. 314; Vanneman v. Powers, 56 N. Y. 39.

Malicious prosecution.—An action against a husband and wife jointly for malicious prosecution cannot be sustained when the suits complained of were prosecuted, some by the wife without the knowledge of the husband, and others by the husband without the knowledge of the wife; there being no evidence to justify a finding that the suits were brought in pursuance of a conspiracy previously formed. Shields v. McKee, 11 Ill. App. 188. See Cassin v. Delany, 38 N. Y. 178; Simmons v. Brown, 5 R. I. 299, 73 Am. Dec. 66.

during coverture, does not abate upon his death, but she may be sued separately.⁵⁵

(II) DEATH OF WIFE. Upon the death of the wife before judgment, an action on her antenuptial contract abates,⁵⁶ and the surviving husband is not liable to be sued.⁵⁷ And where property has been sold to her on her sole credit an action for the price will not lie against the husband after her death.⁵⁸ Likewise an action against husband and wife for the torts of the wife will abate upon her death.⁵⁹ But her estate is liable to the assignee of her husband for moneys taken from her husband during her lifetime.⁶⁰

4. DEFENSES — a. Against Husband or Wife — (I) IN GENERAL. In an action by a married woman based upon her right to contract in reference to her separate estate, her general disability to make contracts is no defense,⁶¹ and in general if a married woman is authorized to sue alone, the plea of coverture is no bar.⁶² Moreover coverture is a personal defense, and a person sui juris contracting with her cannot in general, when properly sued, plead her inability to enter into a contract.⁶³ Fraud on the part of the husband cannot be imputed to her to prevent her from recovering a lawful chose in action;⁶⁴ and the presumption that a wife while sole abates as to the husband by his death. Nutz v. Reutter, 1 Watts (Pa.) 229.

Action commenced before marriage.—Where an action was brought against a woman dum sola, who subsequently married, and the action was revived against the husband, who subsequently died, and the suit was allowed to abate as against him, the suit might proceed against the surviving wife; the debt as to her not having been extinguished by the marriage. Parker v. Steed, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 206.

An action against a husband and wife to recover dower in lands of the wife survives against her on the death of her husband pending the suit. Cozens v. Long, 3 N. J. L. 764.

Foreclosure suit.—Upon the death of the husband, in a suit against him and his wife to foreclose a mortgage executed by them, after the bill has been taken pro confesso, but before decree, no decree could be had without a revivor of the suit against the representatives of the husband. *Thomson v. Coercion of husband.—A suit against husband and wife for a tort does not abate by his death, unless the tort was committed by her in his presence or by his coercion. Douge v. Pearce, 13 Ala. 127.

Acts not amounting to tort.—Where a married woman hired of plaintiff a horse to use on her husband's business, and she overloaded the vehicle, and drove the horse immoderately, and a suit was brought against husband and wife, plaintiff declaring in tort, and the husband died before trial, the acts did not constitute an actual tort, and the action did not survive against the wife. Barnes v. Harris, 44 N. C. 15.

Defense that money was applied to charges against separate estate.—A creditor in possession of moneys belonging to a married woman, received by him for her use, can, in an action by her to recover them, defend on the ground that they were applied to charges against her statutory separate estate. Castleman v. Jeffries, 60 Ala. 380.

64. Moore v. Foote, 34 Mich. 443.

Husband's gift of her services to wife no fraud on creditor.—The fact that a husband permits his wife to keep boarders and to receive the pay therefor does not impose on her an obligation to pay the interest on a mortgage on the premises given for a loan to her husband; nor is such an arrangement committing a criminal act in her husband's presence acts under his coercion is no defense to an action by a married woman for slander imputing a crime committed by her jointly with her husband, on the ground that in consequence of such presumption no crime was therefore charged against her.⁶⁵

(II) SET-OFF. In an action by a married woman to recover for services, defendant has been permitted to set off a debt due him by the husband, since the wife's earnings belong to the husband; ⁶⁶ and in a suit by husband and wife on a note given to them jointly, an account created in the same course of dealing as gave rise to the note was allowed as a set-off.⁶⁷ In an action, however, by husband and wife, upon a promise made to the wife, neither a debt due by the wife after marriage, a debt due by the husband alone, nor a debt due by husband and wife jointly, can be pleaded as a set-off.⁶⁸ The right of set-off depends on the general principles applicable thereto as affected by the contract liability of the wife.⁶⁹

b. By Husband or Wife—(i) IN GENERAL. As a defense to a contract made by a married woman, coverture can be interposed by her or by her personal representative.⁷⁰ Her incapacity to be sued alone, or her inability to make a valid contract, enables her to plead her coverture.⁷¹ When, however, she may make contracts in respect to her separate estate or otherwise, coverture is no longer a defense to such contracts;⁷² and the fact that money realized on mortgages made a fraud on the mortgagor which he can set up as a defense to an action by the wife against him for board and lodging. Springer v. Stiver, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 184.

Set-off of husband's debt.—A bequest to a married woman "for her own use" is equivalent to a bequest to her for her separate use, and in an action by the husband and wife for the legacy a debt due by the husband to the testator cannot be set off against it. Jamison v. Brady, 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 466, 9 Am. Dec. 460. In an action by a widow for her distributive share of an estate, the administrators cannot offset a debt due from the husband of plaintiff, he never having reduced her distributive share into possession during his life. Flory v. Becker, 2 Pa. St. 470, 45 Am. Dec. 610. Where, to discharge a certain indebtedness of H, defendant gave to him his promissory note, payable to plaintiff, a married woman, and the note, by direction of H, was subsequently given to plaintiff as a gift to her, and as her separate property, in an action by the wife on such note, counter-claims against her husband could not be set up. Paine v. Hunt, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 75.

Set-off of medical services.—In an action brought by the original obligees of a bond to the use of a feme plaintiff and her husband, an account may be set off for medical services rendered her before her marriage. Gary v. Johnson, 72 N. C. 68.

Recovery of wife's lands.—Where a husband and wife are suing for property claimed through the wife, and the husband dies, having sold his interest, and the purchaser has possession of the property, he may set off the purchase-money as against the wife. Holloway v. Conner, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 395.

Civil liability distinct from penal.—A suit brought against a feme covert by a city to recover a penalty under an ordinance relating to markets is a civil suit, and a plea of coverture, if established, is a sufficient defense. Philadelphia v. McCaffrey, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 164.

Allegation of suretyship.—It is no defense to foreclosure of a chattel mortgage given by a husband and wife to secure their note that the wife is his surety, unless she is the owner of the mortgaged property. Miller v. Blich, 74 Ga. 360.

Death of husband.—If coverture is a defense in an attachment suit, the death of the husband after attachment, but before judgment, will bar it. Ahern v. Fink, 64 Md. 161, 3 Atl. 32.

72. Hoke v. Applegate, 88 Ind. 530; Hinckley v. Smith, 51 N. Y. 21.

Seal as conclusive as to consideration.—A married woman may, in an action at law or in equity, plead want of consideration against a sealed obligation given by her during coverture. Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. 917.

No indulgence on ground of coverture.—The provisions of the statutes admitting a married woman to the courts on the same terms as if she were sole are sufficient reasons for disallowing her claims for indulgence on the grounds of coverture, in an action against her; but, independent of the statute, she is under no disability in respect to the time or manner of making a defense to an action brought against her. Mills v. Angela, 1 Colo. 334.

Wife's non-liability no defense to husband's contract.—A husband cannot set up his wife's on her property was used by her husband alone, the mortgagees having no knowledge of such use, constitutes no defense to an action to enforce the mortgages.⁷³ On the other hand, in an ejectment suit by a wife against her husband, for her separate realty, the fact that he had expended large sums in improving it is no defense for him,⁷⁴ and in an action by the husband against his wife, he will be estopped from denying her competency to assert the rights belonging to her as a defendant.⁷⁵

(II) SET-OFF. In a suit by a wife against the husband, he cannot plead as a set-off a promissory note given to the wife for moneys belonging to her before marriage, but remaining her separate property afterward.⁷⁶ Where the wife has the sole right of action for a tort inflicted upon her, the husband cannot, in an action against himself and wife, set up, by way of set-off or cross demand, a claim against plaintiff for a previous tort to the wife.⁷⁷ In an action on a note by a wife against her husband, he cannot plead as set-off gratuitous improvements made by him upon their farm owned by them as tenants in common;⁷⁸ but in a mortgage foreclosure suit against a married woman she may, when entitled to her earnings as separate property, plead as a counter-claim a debt due her by the mortgagee for board and services.⁷⁹ Payments by the husband on the note sued on may be set-off in some instances.⁸⁰

C. Jurisdiction and Limitations⁸¹—1. JURISDICTION. In the absence of an enabling statute authorizing an action at law, suits to charge the separate estates of married women with their contracts can be brought only in a court having equity jurisdiction.⁸² By force of the statutes, however, now generally prevailing, married women may, in many jurisdictions, sue and be sued in courts of law, the question of jurisdiction as to the subject-matter being determined by the nature of the suit.⁸³

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—a. Actions By or Against Wife. As a general rule the statutes of limitation expressly exempt married women under the disabilities of coverture, and consequently by such a saving clause the statute does not begin to run against a married woman until the dissolution of the marriage.⁸⁴ Where, however, married women are empowered to sue as if single, the proviso is generally held to be repealed,⁸⁵ although some cases hold that the exemption applies until expressly removed by statute.⁸⁶ Where the wife's disabilities are but partially removed by statute, limitations do not run against her in respect to matters in which she is still incapacitated.⁸⁷ When, however, a married woman is sued, either alone or with her husband, the statute runs in her favor against plaintiff despite her coverture, and the statute may be pleaded by her in bar,⁸⁸ although a husband and wife suing on the wife's chose cannot avail themselves of an exception in the statute in favor of femes covert.⁸⁹ In some states where by statute the wife is made jointly liable with the husband for necessaries furnished to the family, the statute does not begin to run in favor of the wife until judgment against the husband has been returned unsatisfied.⁹⁰ Neither husband nor wife can, by a new promise, arrest the running of limitations against the other or remove the bar of the statute after it is complete.⁹¹

b. Actions By or Against Husband. As to the suits of the husband, in his own name and in his own right, in connection with actions growing out of the marital relation, the statute will run from the time the action accrued.⁹²

c. Laches. It is the general rule in equity that a married woman under disabilities of coverture is not chargeable with laches;⁹³ and hence it is held that the engagements and contracts of a married woman, who is competent to bind

Joint action barred, wife's statutory right to sue alone.—Under Tenn. Code, § 2481, providing that a husband and wife shall not be dispossessed of the real estate of the wife by any judgment against the husband, where a stranger has taken possession of the land of the wife, and a joint action by the husband and wife is barred by limitation, the wife can sue in her own name, and need not wait until the death of her husband to enforce her right. *Key v. Limitations of penal statute not applicable to husband's civil liability for support.—Wife desertion is neither a felony, a misdemeanor, nor a crime, and the husband's liability for support is not barred by the statute of limitations. Com. v. Kerbey, 8 Pa. Dist. 671.

Laches of husband not imputable to wife.—The laches of a husband to enforce the claim of his wife to a legacy bequeathed to her is not available in equity to defeat the claims of the wife, except upon the ground of presumption of payment. Black v. Whitall, 9 N. J. Eq. 572, 59 Am. Dec. 423.

Statute of limitations not applicable to wife's mere equitable claim.—Where a wife has no remedy by suit at law against her husband, her claim being purely an equitable one, there is no statute of limitations which can operate as a positive bar. Bowie v. Stonestreet, 6 Md. 418, 61 Am. Dec. 318.

her separate estate in equity, are not generally barred by the statute of limitations as are ordinary contracts.⁹⁴

D. Parties⁹⁵—1. SUITS IN EQUITY AGAINST WIFE. Where the wife's equitable separate property is held by trustees under an active trust, the trustees are necessary parties in suits affecting such property.⁹⁶ A co-maker of a note given by a married woman is a proper party to a bill to subject her separate estate to its payment.⁹⁷ When a suit affects her right of dower in lands of a former husband, her present husband has such an interest as entitles him to be made a party,⁹⁸ and where a married woman is a member of a firm, in a suit to subject her interest therein to the payment of the debts of her husband, the other members of the firm are necessary parties.⁹⁹ It has also been held that the husband's curtesy in the estate of the wife makes him a proper party in a suit to set aside a deed to her,¹ and in a suit to enforce a lien on her property he has been held a necessary defendant.² To charge, however, the wife's separate estate with a note given to pay a debt of the husband, her general creditors are not necessary parties.³

2. SUITS IN EQUITY BY WIFE.⁴ To obtain the control of property held by a trustee's executor under an antenuptial settlement the children in remainder are proper parties.⁵ The children of the marriage are necessary parties when their rights are affected by the suit,⁶ as in an action to reform a marriage settlement under which they take an interest in remainder.⁷ The husband should be made a party defendant where the wife seeks to recover her separate property from one who purchased it from her husband;⁸ although ordinarily the husband is not a necessary defendant to an action by a wife to recover her separate estate, unless he claims an interest in the subject of the action, or unless a complete determination cannot be made without him.⁹ In the suit of an infant wife by guardian ad litem, as provided by statute, to have a substituted trustee appointed for the execution of a trust created by will, the husband is not a necessary party;¹⁰ but where a wife files a suit to protect her lands, the husband's interest by right of curtesy makes him a proper party defendant.¹¹

3. SUITS IN EQUITY BY HUSBAND. The wife is a necessary party to a suit to recover her interest in a trust fund,¹² to recover her distributive share,¹³ or to restrain proceedings in a suit at law against husband and wife which affects her interests.¹⁴ To impeach an antenuptial contract between himself and wife, she

Homestead property.—Under Code Civ. must be made a defendant, and not joined as plaintiff;¹⁵ but in the husband's suit to rescind, on the ground of fraud, a contract for the purchase of land, the fact that the wife executed her notes for a part of the price and gave a trust deed of her separate property to secure them does not make her a necessary party.¹⁶

4. SUITS IN EQUITY AGAINST HUSBAND. In a suit brought by a creditor to set aside the husband's assignment of his wife's distributive share,¹⁷ or a settlement by the husband on his wife,¹⁸ the wife is a necessary party. So where a creditor of the husband seeks to subject to the payment of his debt property which is in his wife's possession, and which the husband claims belongs to her, the question of title cannot be determined unless the wife is a party.¹⁹ Where a decree would enjoin the husband from using the wife's property in a manner beneficial to its use, the wife should be made a party.²⁰ In a suit, however, by a vendor to enforce a vendor's lien upon lands purchased by the husband, the wife is not a necessary party.²¹

5. BRINGING IN NEW PARTIES AND CHANGE OF PARTIES. Under the equity rule allowing the bringing in of new parties for the purpose of settling the whole controversy in one suit, and in accordance with analogous statutory provisions, which permit the court, in furtherance of justice, to add the name of any party to an action,²² either the husband²³ or the wife,²⁴ having a substantial interest in the subject-matter of the suit, may, by leave of the court, be admitted as a new party.²⁵ By the former chancery practice, the marriage of a female plaintiff abated the suit;²⁶ but the suit might be continued by a bill of revivor, the husband being made a new party.²⁷ A suit never abated, however, by the marriage of a female defendant, although the husband was made a party to the subsequent proceedings.²⁸ Under ancient chancery practice, upon abatement, a subpoena in the nature of a writ of scire facias was also sometimes used to bring in a new party;²⁹ but by modern practice, both in equity and at law, if, upon the marriage of a party, the husband or the wife is to be added, it is the general practice to merely amend the pleadings upon motion.³⁰ If, in a bill in equity, the husband has been made a party plaintiff with the wife when he should have been made a party defendant, he may by amendment be made a defendant, and another be substituted as her next friend.³¹ If the husband is a necessary party in an action by a

6. INTERVENTION.³⁴ For the protection of her rights a married woman may, by statute, intervene as a party in a pending cause.³⁵ This cannot be done, however, at common law.³⁶

7. OBJECTIONS TO PARTIES. At common law, if the pleadings show upon their face a misjoinder or a non-joinder of husband and wife, objection to the defect should be taken by demurrer.³⁷ Where, however, the defect is not apparent, objection can be taken only by a plea in abatement.³⁸ Likewise, in equity, if a married woman exhibits a bill, and her coverture appears, and no next friend is named, defendant may demur, or if the incapacity does not appear, defendant may take advantage of it by plea.³⁹ Under the codes, the objection of non-joinder⁴⁰ or misjoinder⁴¹ of husband or wife may be taken by demurrer, although in some states misjoinder of defendants is not a specific ground of demurrer except in so far as included in the ground that there is a misjoinder of causes of action.⁴² It has been held that a misjoinder of husband and wife as plaintiffs may be raised by a demurrer on the ground that the complaint does not state a cause of action,⁴³ but a demurrer on the ground of failure to state a cause of action does not raise the question of a defect of parties.⁴⁴

husband and wife is fatal and the action will fail.⁴⁵ So if the husband sue or be sued alone when the wife should be joined, the non-joinder is a fatal objection.⁴⁶ Under the rules and statutes of amendments now generally prevailing, the name of a husband or wife improperly joined may be stricken out,⁴⁷ or the name of an omitted party may be added,⁴⁸ in accordance with the local rules governing such amendments, such as notice of the amendment to the party affected,⁴⁹ and the payment of costs by the moving party.⁵⁰ Where the husband is hostile to the wife's interests, it has been held that he need not be joined.⁵¹

E. Process — 1. SERVICE — a. Necessity For Personal Service on Wife. In a suit in equity seeking to charge the wife's separate estate, service of the subpoena should be made upon her personally,⁵⁶ although where husband and wife are joint defendants, and the relief sought does not affect her separate estate, it is held that service may be made upon the husband for them both.⁵⁷ In general, in connection with the statutory liability of the wife, where husband and wife are both parties, each must be served personally, and a service of process upon one alone is not service upon the other,⁵⁸ although, at common law, husband and wife being one, service upon the husband is service upon the wife.⁵⁹

Where a married woman has no regular place of business, service should be made at her residence,⁶⁰ and the residence of the husband is the residence of the wife for the purpose of serving her, although she has left him, it not appearing that she had sufficient legal grounds for a final separation from him, or that, when she left him, she intended the separation should be permanent, and she having afterward returned to him.⁶¹ In some states service may be made on the wife by delivering a copy to her husband as a member of the family.⁶² Service on the wife as the agent of the husband may constitute a good service on the husband.⁶³ Whether service may be made by publication depends, for the most part, on the rules relating to service by publication in general.⁶⁴

2. ACKNOWLEDGMENT AND WAIVER OF SERVICE. Under the married women's acts, a husband cannot, without authority from his wife, acknowledge service of a summons upon her;⁶⁵ but acceptance of service by a married woman gives the court jurisdiction over her.⁶⁶

3. RETURN OF SERVICE. Where the return to a summons against husband and wife shows personal service upon the husband, but fails to show that the wife was summoned, it will not support a judgment by default against the wife.⁶⁷ A mere return of "executed" has, however, been held to be sufficient.⁶⁸

F. Appearance and Representation of Wife by Attorney — 1. IN GENERAL. Where husband and wife are joint defendants in equity, the husband may enter an appearance for her,⁶⁹ and by the former rules he was required to do so.⁷⁰ In connection with suits relating to her separate estate she may, however, enter an appearance and answer separately.⁷¹ Under modern statutes rendering her sui juris she may generally in all actions appear in person or by attorney,⁷² although, at common law, having no authority to appoint an attorney, she is unable to appear by one.⁷³ Where authorized, she may cause an appearance to be entered for her husband,⁷⁴ and authority to appear for her husband may be implied.⁷⁵ A married woman may be bound by the admissions of her attorney.⁷⁶

G. Pleading — 1. DECLARATION, COMPLAINT, OR PETITION — a. Actions by Husband or Wife or Both — (i) IN GENERAL. It is a general rule of pleading, at common law, that in an action brought by husband and wife, her interest must be explicitly stated in the declaration.⁷⁸ Likewise, in a suit in equity, brought by a married woman, the bill must allege her title and interest in the subject-matter, and defendant's liability for the wrong or injury complained of.⁷⁹ Under a statute, however, authorizing a married woman to sue in connection with her separate estate, it is usually not necessary to allege her marriage, or that the subject-matter of the suit was separate property, it being sufficient if the evidence at the trial shows her right to sue.⁸⁰ In general, in a joint action by husband and wife, the pleadings must show the right of action in both.⁸¹ In suits by husband

Wife's separate property.—Where the husband joins with the wife in a suit concerning her separate property, no averment of his interest other than the marital relations is necessary in the complaint. Roller v. Blair, 96 Ind. 203.

Joinder of causes of action.—Where a complaint wherein a husband and wife are properly joined as plaintiffs states a cause of action in favor of both of them, the statements therein of facts constituting a cause of action in favor of the husband alone, while improper, does not make the complaint demurrable as not stating a cause of action. New Albany v. Lines, 21 Ind. App. 380, 51 N. E. 346.

Husband's joinder merely for conformity.—Where an act requires the husband to be joined in any action by or against the wife, an allegation in the declaration that plaintiff husband has no interest in the action, and wife, in right of the wife, the fact of marriage must be alleged;⁸² but under statutes allowing a married woman to sue and be sued as a feme sole, the declaration or complaint need not aver that she is a married woman.⁸³

(ii) ON CONTRACTS. At common law a declaration laying a promise to husband and wife on a note to the wife dum sola is good.⁸⁴ An allegation in a complaint by a married woman, as indorsee of a promissory note, that it was "duly assigned" to her, and still is her property in "her sole right and possession," is a sufficient allegation that the note is her separate property.⁸⁵ Where the note of a married woman was sold by the payee, and subsequently paid by her, it was not necessary for the maker, in an action against the payee for money had and received, to allege her coverture and suretyship in order to maintain the action on that ground.⁸⁶ The complaint in an action by a married woman for her personal services, alleging that defendant was indebted to her therefor, authorizes evidence of an agreement between her and her husband that her earnings should be her separate property.⁸⁷ It has been held that, in an action upon an executory contract between husband and wife, the statutory provision that a written contract imports a consideration does not apply, and the consideration must be set out in the petition.⁸⁸ Where the husband is by statute entitled to the rents of the wife's separate estate, a complaint in his name alone on a note to her, the note showing that it was for such rent, and the complaint alleging that plaintiff is her husband, is sufficient.⁸⁹

(iii) ON TORTS—(A) In General. At common law declarations by husband and wife for injuries before marriage to the personal property of the wife should allege the possession in the wife before marriage, and not the possession by husband and wife, since the possession of the wife is the possession of the husband.⁹⁰ The declaration should conclude, however, "to their damage."⁹¹ Under a statute giving a married woman the right to sue in her own name, it is necessary to allege, in a declaration for injury to her property, sufficient facts to show that the action is one included within the statute.⁹² Where the wife is the owner of separate real property, her declaration for disturbance to the possession need not aver a permanent injury thereto,⁹³ and for injury to realty owned jointly by husband and wife, their joint declaration is not vitiated by mere matters of aggravation, but is joined for conformity only, will not vitiate the declaration. Tate v. Perkins, 85 Va. 169, 7 S. E. 328.

Action for personal injury to wife.—While, as a general rule, a complaint, to withstand a demurrer, must show a cause of action in all the plaintiffs, an exception occurs where plaintiffs are husband and wife, and the action is to recover damages for injury to the person or character of the wife. Ohio, etc., *R. When not necessary to allege separate property.—In an action by a married woman for the conversion of goods, a demurrer to the petition because it did not state that the goods were plaintiff's separate property was properly overruled where the petition did not state that she was a married woman. *Hand v. although such matters were injuries to the husband alone.⁹⁴ In an action brought by husband and wife for fraud affecting her separate property, it is not necessary to allege that the husband was deceived.⁹⁵

(B) Personal Injuries to Wife. In an action brought by husband and wife for the personal suffering or injury to the wife, the declaration, at common law, should not include any loss of service or expense incurred by the husband, since, such damage being his alone, there would be an improper joinder of causes of action.⁹⁶ The statutes, however, often authorize the joinder of both rights of action in one suit.⁹⁷ The petition by the husband for loss of services of the wife need not show that the action could be maintained in the state where the alleged injury was received, although the action was brought in another state.⁹⁸ The husband may recover damages for the loss of his wife's services without specially pleading such damages⁹⁹ or the value of the services.¹ In an action for personal injuries, when the complaint does not show that plaintiff is a married woman, and it prays for all damages which might be recovered in such an action, it is not open to the objection that the cause of action is in the husband, because the action is for his money, expended on account of the injuries.²

b. Actions Against Husband or Wife or Both—(i) IN GENERAL. In an action against husband and wife, at common law, the ground of her liability must be explicitly stated in the declaration,³ and a cause of action against the husband cannot be joined with one against the husband and wife.⁴

(ii) *ON CONTRACTS*⁵—(A) In General. In an action founded on a contract by a married woman who has limited powers to contract, the declaration or complaint should generally allege such a state of facts as will show her capacity to contract.⁶ If the action is based on a debt contracted before marriage, the complaint must show that the debt was so contracted,⁷ but need not allege that the husband received property from his wife by the marriage.⁸ The marriage must be averred in actions against husband and wife for her antenuptial debts.⁹ Where the disabilities of coverture have been generally removed, some cases hold that the complaint need not set forth the facts showing her liability to be sued.¹⁰ When the action is against husband and wife the fact that she is the wife of the other defendant should duly appear.¹¹ In an action against a married woman based upon her husband's act as her agent, a direct allegation of his agency is required,¹² although for necessities furnished to the wife, a declaration consisting of merely the common counts is sufficient against the husband.¹³

(B) Contracts Relating to Separate Property. In actions based upon contracts seeking to charge the separate estate of a married woman, it is the general rule that the declaration or petition must show that she has a separate estate.¹⁴ Some cases hold that a mere averment that she has separate property is insufficient, but that the property must also be specifically described,¹⁵ although other authorities hold that a particular or specific description need not be set forth.¹⁶ In accordance with the different rules in different jurisdictions as to what constitutes a charge upon the wife's separate estate,¹⁷ the petition may be required to show that there was an intention to charge the estate,¹⁸ or that the consideration was for the benefit of such estate.¹⁹ Where, however, a married woman may be sued and a judgment obtained against her, as a feme sole, it is not necessary to allege that she possesses a separate estate,²⁰ and some cases hold such an allegation unnecessary, although the judgment is enforceable only against her separate estate.²¹ Where a married woman's contracts of suretyship are void, the complaint need not allege a negative by averring that her contract was not one of suretyship.²² It has been held that a bill seeking to subject an equitable separate estate to a debt charged thereon must show that the power of alienation is not restricted by the instrument creating the estate.²³

(c) Contracts Relating to Separate Business. Actions against married women on contracts in connection with their separate trade or business as authorized by statute should show in the declaration or petition that defendant is a sole trader, and that the liability was incurred in connection with such business.²⁴

Contract "in relation to" separate estate.—Where the petition in an action upon the contract of a married woman alleged that the property sold was for the use and benefit of the wife, and that it was purchased at her special interest and request, and used in and about her premises, there was a sufficient averment that the contract was made by the wife, in relation to her separate property, to sustain the action. improvements upon the land of a married woman does not require an allegation in the complaint that such improvements were necessary for the enjoyment of the premises,²⁵ nor is it necessary that the particular property repaired should be described.²⁶ An action, however, seeking to charge the wife's realty with a claim for materials furnished and work done, under an agreement with the husband, must clearly show in the complaint the fact of the husband's agency.²⁷

(E) Contracts For Necessaries and Family Expenses. In an action under statutes making the separate estate of the wife liable for necessaries and household supplies, the declaration or complaint must allege the existence of her separate estate when the debt was created, and its liability under the statute;²⁸ and where the statute provides that her separate estate shall be bound for necessaries purchased by her upon her credit, the pleadings must show that the debt was in fact contracted by her, and that the articles were necessary for the support of the family.²⁹ In an action against the husband under his common-law liability for necessaries furnished the wife even without his consent, the special circumstances rendering the husband liable must be set forth.³⁰

(F) Joint Contracts. At common law a declaration which shows that an action against husband and wife is based upon their joint contract during coverture is bad, since the contract is that of the husband alone.³¹ Where, however,

Insufficient allegations.—A declaration that "the plaintiffs sue the defendant, a married woman conducting a mercantile business as a free dealer," without alleging facts showing that she is a free dealer, is not a sufficient basis for a judgment at law against a married woman. *Crawford v. Specification of items.—A complaint under Code, § 1987, to charge the wife's estate for articles "of comfort and support of the household," need not specify the items. Sharp v. Burns, 35 Ala. 653.

Allegation that articles were necessary.—In a proceeding by motion under Code, § 1988, to subject the wife's estate to a judgment against the husband for the price of family supplies, it is not necessary that the declaration against the husband should aver that the articles were necessary for the family. McMillan v. Hurt, 35 Ala. 665.

Inability to collect from husband.—The petition, in an action to charge the separate property of a married woman for a debt created by her husband for necessaries, should show that she has a separate estate, and had when the debt was created, should describe such estate, and allege that the debt could not be collected against the husband. *Glass v. the wife's separate estate may be liable upon her joint contracts with her husband, the complaint should describe the wife's property sought to be charged,³² and aver the separate estate's benefit of the consideration.³³ The wife's general power, however, to make contracts may make the common counts a sufficient declaration against her and her husband upon their joint promise.³⁴ A bill to foreclose a trust deed made by husband and wife need not aver that the wife had power to make the conveyance.³⁵

(iii) ON TORTS. An action against both husband and wife for a tort should negative the presumption of the husband's coercion; ³⁶ but if the complaint alleges that the wife's tort was committed out of the presence of the husband, it is not necessary to aver that it was done without his consent or direction.³⁷ A declaration against husband and wife alleging a conversion to "their" own use, is bad, at common law, upon demurrer,³⁸ although it would be good after verdict.³⁹

(iv) AMENDMENTS. In an action against husband and wife for the debt of the wife, the court may allow, at the trial, an amendment showing that the debt was incurred before marriage; ⁴⁰ but where husband and wife are joined for conformity, and judgment is asked for, and recovered, against the wife only, the complaint cannot, after verdict, be amended for the purpose of demanding judgment against the husband also.⁴¹

2. PLEA, ANSWER, AND DEMURRER — a. Joinder in Plea or Answer. At common law, in an action against husband and wife, the husband must join in the plea with his wife.⁴² Likewise, in equity, when husband and wife are defendants, the general chancery rule is that the answer must be joint.⁴³

b. Separate Plea or Answer by Wife. When a suit affects a married woman's separate estate, or her interests are adverse to those of her husband, she may, in equity, by leave of the court, file a separate answer; ⁴⁴ and, generally, under the statutes enabling her to sue and to be sued in her own name, she may, when a co-defendant with her husband, make a separate defense.⁴⁵ It has been held, however, that a statute enabling a married woman to be sued alone in an action at law does not affect the equity rule which requires her to obtain leave before putting in a separate answer.⁴⁶

c. Sufficiency of Plea or Answer. Where a married woman's contractual liability depends upon her ownership of separate property liable to be charged, and the complaint contains no averment that she has separate property, her answer that at the time of incurring the alleged obligation she was a married woman, the wife of a person named, is good.⁴⁷ A mere denial of the allegation of an intention to charge her separate estate is sufficient without setting forth the facts,⁴⁸ although the denial is nugatory, in some states, where she admits that she received the goods to be used in connection with her separate estate.⁴⁹ Where she is not liable, under the statute, upon a contract of suretyship on which she is sued, her answer properly setting forth her exemption constitutes a sufficient defense;⁵⁰ but it has been held that she must negative all the causes from which her liability may be otherwise inferred,⁵¹ and that if such contracts are prohibited only in connection with the separate property acquired in particular ways the answer must state that the property was so acquired.⁵² If marital coercion is to be relied on as a defense to an action based on a tort, it must be specifically pleaded;⁵³ and where a statute makes a married woman alone liable for her torts unless her husband "participates therein or coerces her thereto,"

Assault and battery.—Ohio Code, § 29, providing that, "if the husband and wife be sued together, the wife may defend for her own right," does not apply to an action against husband and wife for an assault and battery committed by her. Coolidge v. Parris, 8 Ohio St. 594.

Enforcement of mechanic's lien.—In an action against husband and wife to enforce a mechanic's lien against the property of the wife, the separate answer of the husband, setting up payment, is good. Stephenson v. Ballard, 82 Ind. 87.

Plea by husband for wife.—Where a husband and wife are both sued, and she pleads, and does not reside out of the county, a plea by him for her is, under Code, § 3449, properly stricken out. Brent v. Mount, 65 Ga. 92.

Husband in privity with wife.—A husband sued with his wife in forcible detainer, filing a joint and several answer, and defending his possession by averments of her right, puts himself in the position of a privy for the purposes of the action. De la Mar v. Hurd, 4 Colo. 442.

Wife defending for both.—Where husband and wife are sued for alleged trespasses of the wife on a private alley, in which the wife in her own right claims an easement and right of use appurtenant to a lot owned by her, in default of answer by the husband, the wife may make a separate defense without prejudice from such default; and, if her defense is good, it is complete as to both. *Lowe v. her plea that her husband was present and participated is insufficient to show his coercion.⁵⁴ In pleading duress, the facts constituting the alleged duress should be set forth.⁵⁵ In general the plea or answer of a married woman, as of other persons, must admit or deny the averments of the declaration or complaint, must be positive and direct, and must answer all that it assumes to answer.⁵⁶

d. Verification of Answer. In equity, when it is necessary that an answer be sworn to, the joint answer of husband and wife must be verified by both;⁵⁷ but the failure to verify may be waived by the filing of a replication.⁵⁸ In actions at law, however, a verification by the husband alone has been held sufficient.⁵⁹

Feme sole trader.—Where one sued as a feme sole trader, in her affidavit of defense, says that she "is not now and never has been declared a feme sole trader, and is not now and never was such," judgment cannot be entered against her for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense. Burke v. Adams, 105 Pa. St. 151.

In a suit on a note signed jointly by husband and wife, an affidavit, on behalf of the Demurrer or answer.—Where a suit is commenced by a wife as sole plaintiff, an objection that she is legally incapable of maintaining the action by reason of her coverture must be taken by demurrer or by answer. Hastings v. McKinley, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 273.

Husband's statutory right to rents of separate estate.—Where a husband, as agent for his wife, brings an action in her name to recover the rents of her separate estate, a plea which sets up plaintiff's coverture either in abatement or in bar is bad. Lyles v. Clements, 49 Ala. 445.

Sufficiency of plea.—In a personal action by husband and wife, a plea that they were never joined in lawful matrimony would not be good either in bar or in abatement. It should deny the fact of their marriage. Benner v. Fowles, 31 Me. 305.

her husband, such joinder being required, her coverture can be pleaded only in abatement, and cannot be shown under the general issue or pleaded in bar.⁶⁴ The right to plead coverture may be barred, however, by laches in presenting the defense.⁶⁵

b. Actions Against Married Women. When a married woman is sued upon an existing cause of action, but without her husband, as required at common law, she may plead her coverture in abatement,⁶⁶ or the husband may avoid the judgment by writ of error.⁶⁷ If she is sued either alone or with her husband, upon an obligation not maintainable against a married woman, she may, if the fact be apparent on the face of the pleadings, demur,⁶⁸ or otherwise specially plead her coverture in bar,⁶⁹ or in some jurisdictions prove it in defense under the general issue.⁷⁰ She may also move in arrest of judgment when the declaration shows no cause of action.⁷¹ Where, however, she is liable, or properly joined, her coverture of itself is no defense.⁷² At common law her coverture must be pleaded in person and not by attorney, since she has no capacity to appoint an attorney.⁷³

c. Defense as Personal. The plea of coverture is a personal defense, and can be pleaded only by a married woman or those in privity with her.⁷⁴

d. Necessity of Plea. While there are cases holding that coverture may be shown under a plea of the general issue,⁷⁵ the rule in most of the states is that

Action on judgment recovered before marriage.—Where a bill is filed against a feme covert for satisfaction of a judgment recovered against her as a feme sole, she cannot plead her coverture in abatement. Gardner v. Moore, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 313.

Action to recover upon judgment against wife.—In an action against husband and wife to recover upon a judgment rendered against the wife as administratrix, suggesting a devastavit by her, a plea that defendants intermarried before the rendition of such judgment is no bar to the action, and is properly adjudged bad on demurrer. Bobe v. Frowner, 18 Ala. 89.

Sufficiency of allegation.—A plea in abatement that "at the time of bringing this suit the defendant was the lawful wife of the plaintiff" is not bad, as averring no date when the marriage relation existed, nor showing by itself when such relation is alleged to have existed. *Walko v. coverture, in order to be made available as a defense to a suit on contract, must be pleaded.⁷⁶

e. Sufficiency of Plea. When a married woman is liable upon part but not all of her contracts, and the particular contract upon which she is sued is beyond her power, a mere plea of coverture alone, without averments showing her particular disability, is insufficient.⁷⁷ In a plea of coverture in abatement, allegations of coverture at the time of the commencement of the action, and its continuance by the continued life of a husband up to the time of filing of the plea, are sufficient.⁷⁸

f. Replication to Plea. The plea of coverture is an issuable one, and by replication any matter showing that plaintiff has a right to sue may be alleged,⁷⁹ providing there is no departure.⁸⁰

H. Evidence—1. PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF—a. In General. It is the general rule that when a married woman has only limited powers of contract, as, for example, only in connection with her separate estate or business, the burden of proof, in an action seeking to enforce her liability, is on plaintiff to show that the contract was one she had power to make.⁸¹ Where, however, general contractual powers have been conferred upon her, the burden is on her to show that her contract is void,⁸² and under statutes making a married woman's contracts of suretyship invalid, but permitting her otherwise to contract generally, it is held that the burden is upon her to prove that her contract is within the exception.⁸³ Likewise, in a contest between her husband's creditors and herself, when she claims

What constitutes departure.—Where, in an action against a married woman, the declaration asserts a right at common law, a replication to a plea of coverture setting up facts which, by force of the act of 1882, imposes on a married woman a liability to answer for her contracts, is bad as a departure. Bradley v. Johnson, 45 N. J. L. 487. Where coverture is pleaded by a married woman to defeat a recovery on a promissory note, it is not a departure for plaintiff to allege in reply that the note was given for necessities furnished the family of defendant, and that an execution had been issued against the property of defendant and returned unsatisfied, or that the note was executed with special reference to, and upon the faith and credit of, the separate estate, trade, or business of the wife. *Fulton v. Lease of wife's property executed by husband.—Where a lease, under seal, of a wife's property did not purport to be executed by her or in her behalf, but was in fact executed by her husband, the burden of proof was on the lessee to show that she was bound thereby. Western New York, etc., R. Co. v. Rea, 83 N. Y. App. Div. 576, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 1093.

Express declaration of benefit.—Where a married woman expressly states in a mortgage that it is given for the benefit of her separate estate, the burden of proof is on her to show that an assignee of the mortgage was not misled by such representation, and knew that the mortgage was made for the benefit of another. Bailey v. Seymour, 42 S. C. 322, 20 S. E. 62.

Where property of both husband and wife had been mortgaged to secure the husband's debt, and subsequently a portion of the husband's property was, under an arrangement between him and the creditor, sold and released from the mortgage, and the proceeds applied on the debt, the burden of proof is on the creditor to show that the sale was fair, and the proceeds justly applied, or that the property of the wife was not wrongly made to bear more than its just portion of the debt. Allen v. O'Donald, 28 Fed. 17.

property as her separate estate, she has the burden to show that the property is her own.⁸⁴ In an action by a married woman under a statute permitting her to sue for her services as her separate property, she has the burden to show that the cause of action is within the statute;⁸⁵ but where a note or other security is executed in favor of a married woman there exists a presumption of her right to sue thereon.⁸⁶ Where neither the pleadings nor the mortgage given by husband and wife show in whom the title to the premises is, the presumption, in absence of proof, is that the title is in both.⁸⁷

b. Action For Necessaries.⁸⁸ In actions against the husband for necessities furnished to the wife while living apart from him, the burden is on plaintiff to show the failure or neglect of the husband to provide,⁸⁹ and that her absence was such as to give her a right to use her husband's credit.⁹⁰ The affirmative on the question of the wife's agency to bind the husband by a purchase of jewelry is on him who seeks to hold the husband.⁹¹ A contract for board and lodging made by a married woman presumptively creates a liability against the husband; and the boarding-house keeper, in order to bind the wife, has the burden of proving that she in express terms undertook to pay therefor.⁹² When coverture is alleged in the pleadings, and the same is material as a right of action or as a defense, the fact of coverture must be proved as alleged.⁹³

2. PROOF AND VARIANCE UNDER PLEADINGS. So the fact of agency must be shown under an allegation of agency, where there is no presumption of law as to such fact.⁹⁴ It has been held, however, that it is not necessary to prove surplusage in

Time of marriage.—In an action for slander of a wife, it is not necessary to prove that plaintiffs were husband and wife at the time of the slander, if it is shown that they were married at the time of bringing the suit. Spencer v. McMasters, 16 Ill. 405.

94. Coyle v. Hill, 19 D. C. 72.

Declarations and admissions of husband.—

A husband's admissions are incompetent to prove him agent for his wife in matters concerning her separate property. Whitescarver v. Bonney, 9 Iowa 480. But evidence that a husband acted openly as his wife's agent, under circumstances implying a knowledge by the wife of the acts, establishes a prima facie agency, and authorizes the admission of evidence of the husband's declarations. Barnett v. Gluting, 3 Ind. App. 415, 29 N. E. 154, 927. See also supra, I, O, 3; and PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Evidence of connected acts.—Where a married woman is sued by a bank on notes for overdrafts, which plaintiff claims defendant's husband executed in her name as her agent for such purposes, evidence of contracts for the purchase of cattle by defendant's husband, in which defendant participated, is admissible, as tending to show the agency of the husband in contracts affecting her bank-account. Pontiac First Commercial Bank v. Newton, 117 Mich. 433, 75 N. W. 934.

Relevancy of evidence.—In an action to charge defendant with material alleged to have been bought by her, through her husband as agent, and used in building a house on her separate real estate, and for which plaintiff alleged she afterward promised to pay, testimony that she tried to borrow money with which to build the house is irrelevant. Russell v. Stoner, 18 Ind. App. 543, 47 N. E. 645, 48 N. E. 650.

pleadings.⁹⁵ Where a married woman alleged her ownership of lands as her statutory separate estate, and brought action thereon under the statute relating exclusively to such estates, evidence showing that her estate was merely an equitable one was held a fatal variance.⁹⁶ But in a suit for possession against a husband and wife, alleging that the husband was in possession, claiming in right of his wife, it is not a fatal variance that the evidence showed that he claimed in his own right, since the facts showed that he could not have been misled to his prejudice by the erroneous allegation.⁹⁷

3. EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE UNDER PLEADINGS. In a suit by husband and wife, defendant cannot prove the fact of no marriage where not pleaded in abatement.⁹⁸ On the other hand evidence that plaintiffs are husband and wife is not admissible where not pleaded.⁹⁹ Evidence of the separate interest of the wife, in a cause of action brought by both husband and wife, cannot be admitted unless the declaration sets out such interest;¹ but evidence that the note sued on was the wife's separate property is admissible, although not pleaded, where the coverture of plaintiff did not appear from the complaint but was alleged in the answer.² In an action by husband and wife for personal injuries to the wife, marriage being proved, defendant cannot show in mitigation of damages, in the absence of allegations in the answer, a common reputation that plaintiffs had not lived together for many years,³ and, on the other hand, in an action by the wife for personal injuries, she cannot show special damages on account of loss to her separate business when the complaint contains no allegation that she had a separate business.⁴ The husband, however, in his action for services rendered may show service rendered by the wife, although her services are not alleged.⁵ Evidence that the husband gave notice not to furnish the goods sued for as necessities is not admissible where not pleaded.⁶ In the wife's action to recover the proceeds of a check belonging to her separate estate, defendant may prove, under a plea of payment, that it was received in payment of goods sold and delivered to husband and wife, although the articles were not of a class for which her separate estate was liable.⁷ In an action brought by a married woman when she should have joined with her husband, evidence of her incapacity cannot be shown at the trial, in the absence of a plea in abatement.⁸ In an action of trespass against husband and wife jointly, evidence of an assault by the husband alone is not admissible.⁹ Where an action seeks to charge the separate estate of a married woman, the insolvency of the husband may be shown by plaintiff as tending to show to whom credit was given.¹⁰ In an action against a married woman for services rendered her, she may present in evidence, under a plea of nil debet, a note given by her husband for the work, as showing that no indebtedness rested on her.¹¹

4. ADMISSIBILITY IN GENERAL — a. General Considerations. Generally speaking, whatever facts are logically relevant and material to a fact in issue are admissible,¹² and facts logically irrelevant or immaterial are not admissible.¹³

b. Parol Evidence. The general rules relating to the admissibility of parol evidence,¹⁴ such as that it is not admissible to vary or contradict the terms of a written instrument, apply equally well to actions in which husband or wife or both are parties. For instance, parol evidence is not admissible to change the character of the estate created in the wife by deed,¹⁵ but is admissible to show the real relation of the wife to a lease executed by husband and wife jointly,¹⁶ or to show that the wife signed a note as surety.¹⁷

c. Documentary Evidence. Subject to the rules as to the admissibility of documentary evidence in general,¹⁸ books, contracts, deeds,¹⁹ and other documents,²⁰ are admissible in evidence. However, a deed of a married woman is not admissible in evidence if not properly executed.²¹

d. Conversations, Declarations, and Admissions. The general rules of evidence relating to the admissibility of conversations²² and declarations²³ apply in actions by, against, or between husband and wife. In an action against husband and wife for family expenses, admissions of the husband that the account is due are admissible.²⁴

e. Evidence in Particular Actions — (i) IN GENERAL. In an action for board- ing defendant's wife and taking care of her in sickness, evidence that a third person contributed toward her support is admissible,²⁵ as is evidence of an agreement made between plaintiff and the wife before the rendition of the services.²⁶ In an action to recover the price of goods claimed to be necessaries, evidence is admissible to show the husband's condition in life.²⁷ So where the wife is living apart from her husband and he is sought to be charged for her board or other necessaries, evidence is admissible to show whether she is living apart from him for justifiable cause.²⁸ So evidence is admissible to show to whom the seller extended credit.²⁹ In an action to charge the wife's separate estate with the price of household articles, any evidence is admissible which tends to prove or disprove that the articles were necessary and proper for the support of the family.³⁰ On an issue as to whether a married woman signed as surety for another, any competent evidence as to her knowledge and intention is admissible.³¹ On an issue as to whether a debt was that of the husband or of the wife, evidence is admissible as to his representations in regard thereto.³² On an issue as to whether the husband acted as the agent for his wife or vice versa, any competent evidence is admissible to show the existence of express or implied authority, or a ratification of the acts of the other spouse as agent.³³ In an action on a written instrument by a married woman in her own name, any competent evidence is admissible to prove or disprove the ownership of the wife.³⁴ In an action to recover for services rendered by a married woman to a third person, evidence is admissible to show whether the services were rendered on the wife's separate account.³⁵ On an issue as to whether a note signed by a wife was her note or that of her husband, evidence is admissible as to who paid the interest.³⁶

(II) IN ACTIONS BASED ON TORT. The general rules of evidence apply to actions ex delicto.³⁷ In an action to charge the husband with a tort committed by his wife, evidence of a threat made by her to perform the tortious act is admissible.³⁸ In a joint action by husband and wife for personal injuries inflicted on the wife, evidence of damages sustained by the husband is inadmissible,³⁹ as is evidence of words or acts of the husband in mitigation of damages where the wife was not privy to them,⁴⁰ or evidence that the spouses were separated;⁴¹ but where the action is against a common carrier evidence is admissible to show whose money purchased the ticket.⁴² In an action against husband and wife for slanderous words spoken by the wife, evidence as to the pecuniary circumstances of the husband is inadmissible.⁴³ Evidence as to the return of property by the husband for assessment, and his mortgaging it, is not, standing by itself, admissible to show his ownership of property which the wife sues to recover.⁴⁴

weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions apply in actions by, between, or against husband and wife.⁴⁵ A married woman may establish her title to personal property by the same kind and quantity of proof that would suffice in the case of any other plaintiff.⁴⁶ It has been held that the rule that a married woman must prove her title to property, claimed as her separate property, by evidence which will not admit of reasonable doubt, applies only to a contest between a married woman and the creditors of her husband.⁴⁷ The official certificate of the register of the land-office is sufficient to show title in the wife.⁴⁸ But the mere supposition of the parties, or their general statement, that certain property is the separate property of the wife is not sufficient to show such fact.⁴⁹ The fact that the wife owns separate estate is not alone sufficient to show that a note drawn by her, payable to her husband, is for the benefit of her business or estate.⁵⁰ Evidence that a paper has been read in the presence of the husband is not sufficient to show that the contents thereof are known to his wife.⁵¹ The unsupported testimony of the wife alone is insufficient to contradict the certificate of acknowledgment to her deed, especially where her evidence is open to suspicion.⁵²

I. Trial⁵³ — 1. DISMISSAL OF SUIT. The husband's common-law right to manage suits brought by himself and wife will generally authorize him to release or dismiss the same.⁵⁴ In an action, however, against a married woman, it has been held that the court will protect her by refusing to sanction a discontinuance entered by plaintiff's consent but without the knowledge of her counsel.⁵⁵ Gen-

2. QUESTIONS FOR JURY. Whether the husband acted as his wife's agent,⁵⁷ or the wife acted as her husband's agent,⁵⁸ is usually a question of fact for the jury. So the question whether one carrying on his wife's farm, dwelling with her thereon, taking the crops annually, and managing generally, is her tenant or her servant, is one of fact for the jury.⁵⁹ And the questions whether a husband by his absence intends wilfully to abandon his wife, and if he does whether he intends that his personal property left with her is to be used and disposed of by her as a means of support for herself and family are for the jury.⁶⁰ But the question whether one loaning money to a married woman made such an investigation as would warrant him in treating the woman as a principal in the transaction is, when the facts are undisputed, a question of law.⁶¹ In an action against the husband for necessaries furnished to the wife, whether the articles were necessaries suitable to the husband's degree is also one for the jury,⁶² as is the question of the neglect of the husband to himself provide therefor;⁶³ and where a married woman may bind herself, and the evidence is conflicting as to whether the credit for necessaries was given to herself or to her husband, it is for the jury to say to whom the credit was given.⁶⁴ The question whether the property in question is the separate estate of the wife is generally one of fact for the jury.⁶⁵ Where the evidence is conflicting as to whether there was any consideration for the wife's deed and whether it was delivered, such questions are for the jury.⁶⁶ The ques-

4. VERDICT AND FINDINGS. In a statutory action to charge the wife's separate estate for family supplies, the verdict need not specify the items for which she was liable;⁶⁹ nor, in finding that she owned "separate estate," is it necessary to describe it as "statutory" separate estate.⁷⁰ Where husband and wife are sued jointly upon a joint contract, a verdict against the wife alone is void.⁷¹ In an action against both, where no cause of action is shown against the wife, a general verdict against both is erroneous as against the wife.⁷² If, however, in an action by husband and wife, the wife was unnecessarily joined, a verdict for "plaintiff" is sufficient.⁷³ Where both husband and wife are sued for the tort of the wife, under the husband's common-law liability, a verdict of guilty, if found, must be against both defendants.⁷⁴

J. Judgment⁷⁵—1. BY CONFESSION—a. By Wife. At common law a married woman, being under the disabilities of coverture, is incompetent to confess judgment;⁷⁶ but judgment may be confessed by a warrant of attorney executed before her marriage, the authority not being revoked by the marriage.⁷⁷ Where she holds property as her separate estate it has been held that she may confess judgment only for the purchase-price of the same.⁷⁸ When, however, the disability of coverture has been removed by statute, and a married woman may be sued upon her obligations, she may, within her power to bind herself or her estate, confess a valid judgment against herself.⁷⁹ In some states, a confessed judgment being a contract, the assent or concurrence of the husband is necessary as in case of other contracts.⁸⁰

b. By Husband. Likewise, at common law, the husband cannot confess judgment in favor of the wife;⁸¹ but where by statute she is permitted to bring an action against him, he may confess a judgment in her favor.⁸² The husband's common-law right to manage an action against himself and wife may permit him to confess judgment in favor of plaintiff,⁸³ although where the judgment would be invalid against the wife, a confession of judgment against both husband and wife has been held invalid as to the wife,⁸⁴ and, by regarding the judgment as an entirety, it has been held invalid against both.⁸⁵

2. BY CONSENT. In equity a consent decree may be valid against a married woman.⁸⁶ Under the statutes removing her disabilities, a married woman's consent to a judgment will make it binding on her,⁸⁷ and she is concluded by a judgment rendered against her on her attorney's withdrawal of her plea.⁸⁸

3. BY DEFAULT. In jurisdictions where coverture must be pleaded in order to be available as a defense, a married woman suffering judgment against her by default will be bound thereby.⁸⁹ Some cases, however, hold that where a married woman is not liable upon her contracts, a judgment by default cannot be sustained.⁹⁰ Where, however, a valid judgment can be rendered against a married woman, she will be concluded by a judgment by default,⁹¹ and, at common law, where husband and wife are joined as defendants, he may suffer a default as to both.⁹² Where, however, under statutes, the wife may separately defend her title and possession of land, the failure of the husband to answer, although joined as defendant with the wife, will not authorize a judgment by default against his interest in the land.⁹³ Equity will protect the wife's claim to her separate estate in a portion of the premises against which a foreclosure decree by default has been entered.⁹⁴

4. IN ACTIONS BY HUSBAND OR WIFE OR BOTH. At common law, where husband and wife join for the recovery of the wife's choses in action, judgment, if obtained, should be entered in the names of both.⁹⁵ So, under the statutes, where husband and wife sue on a cause of action accruing to the wife, judgment should be rendered in favor of both.⁹⁶ By force of statute, however, judgment, in joint actions should be given in favor of either the husband or the wife, as plaintiff, as

Vacation of judgment.—Where a married woman allowed judgment to be taken by default on a note to which she might have pleaded coverture, a court of equity will not set aside the judgment. Evans v. Calman, 92 Mich. 427, 52 N. W. 787, 31 Am. St. Rep. 606.

Injunction against enforcement.—A judgment rendered upon default against a married woman, in an action to which coverture would have been a defense, is not void, but voidable; and the enforcement of such judgment will not be enjoined unless some equitable ground of relief be shown, such, for instance, as fraud or coercion. McCurdy v. Baughman, 43 Ohio St. 78, 1 N. E. 93.

Judgment without notice.—A judgment rendered by default, without personal notice to the wife, on a levy of an attachment on her statutory estate, is void as to her so far as it condemns her statutory estate. Cauly v. Blue, 62 Ala. 77.

Marriage of female plaintiff; default by defendant.—Where a woman marries pending a suit brought by her, and no proceeding is had in the suit with regard to the marriage, and defendant does not plead coverture in abatement, but suffers default in the case, he cannot afterward avoid the judgment. *Bates v. Notice to wife of entry.—Judgment against all the defendants having been obtained by default, and no notice of its entry having been given the wife, she, having made her objection before final decision of the cause, was entitled to have the judgment confined to her husband. Freundt v. Hahn, 28 Wash. 117, 68 Pac. 184.

Relief against husband.—Where a husband and wife were sued on her contract, but no relief was demanded against the husband, and both were defaulted, judgment could not properly be entered against the husband, and it was immaterial whether technically the judgment was nil dicit or by default; the code making no distinction. Wilbur v. Maynard, 6 Colo. 483.

Marriage pending suit.—Where a woman was sued and afterward married, and her husband was joined with her, it was not error to enter judgment against her alone for want of an affidavit of defense. Town v. McIlvaine, 2 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 428.

their respective interests may appear,⁹⁷ and the wife may recover judgment in her name against the husband when she is authorized by statute to bring action against him.⁹⁸ Where a feme sole marries pending an action commenced by her, judgment may be rendered in her original name unless the change is brought to the notice of the court.⁹⁹

5. IN ACTIONS AGAINST HUSBAND AND WIFE. In accordance with the common-law rule, when husband and wife are sued upon the antenuptial debt of the wife, judgment must be rendered against both.¹ Under statutes, however, authorizing actions against married women, and permitting judgment against one or more of several defendants, a several judgment may be entered against either husband or wife, when sued jointly, as the several liability may appear.² Where the wife, or her separate estate, is alone liable, but the husband is unnecessarily joined, or merely for conformity, it is error to render a personal judgment against § 2214, the wife is personally liable with her husband for the expenses of the family; and a personal judgment may be rendered against her therefor in a joint action against her and her husband, although he may have been discharged in bankruptcy. Jones v. Glass, 48 Iowa 345. Under Iowa Code, § 3165, making the expenses of the family chargeable on the property of both husband and wife, in an action against husband and wife on notes given by the husband for family necessities a judgment may be rendered against the wife, as well as against the husband. Whinery v. McLeod, 127 Iowa 11, 102 N. W. 132. In an action against a husband and wife, authorized by 3 Mills Annot. St. (1891, 2d ed.) § 3021a, providing that the expenses of the family are chargeable on the property of both husband and wife, and in relation thereto they may be sued jointly, a personal judgment may be rendered against both for wearing apparel purchased by the husband. Gilman v. Matthews, (Colo. App. 1904) 77 Pac. 366.

Family expenses.—Under Miller Code Iowa,

Necessaries.—Kotheimer v. Schwab, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 287.

Action on joint contract.—In an action on contract against a husband and wife, a contract signed by the husband alone is insufficient to support a judgment against the wife, and it is proper to strike off the judgments as to her. Murdock v. Wasson, 158 Pa. St. 295, 27 Atl. 944.

Judgment joint if liability is joint.—In a suit on a note executed by a husband and wife, it is error to render a judgment against the husband alone. Thomas v. Lowy, 60 Ill. 512.

Judgment against wife alone where husband necessary party.—Cal. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 578, 579, authorizing entry of judgment against one of several parties, apply only to parties severally liable, and do not authorize judgment against the wife alone, where she is sued, and the husband is a necessary party. McDonald v. Porsh, 136 Cal. 301, 68 Pac. 817.

Death of husband.—Where, in an action against husband and wife for slanderous words spoken by the wife, the husband dies after verdict and before judgment, the widow is liable to a separate judgment against herself alone. Sunman v. Brewin, 52 Ind. 140.

him;³ and likewise when husband and wife are joint defendants, a judgment against her is erroneous when the liability is that of the husband alone.⁴ Although a personal judgment against the wife may not be enforceable,⁵ yet upon recovery of judgment in an action against husband and wife, to enforce their joint and several obligation as in case of a mortgage, a personal judgment may be entered against the husband, and a decree in rem against the separate property of the wife.⁶ In a joint action of tort against husband and wife, there may be a judgment against one and in favor of the other.⁷

Husband acting as wife's agent.—Where a husband, as agent of the wife, contracted for the labor of plaintiff's minor son for a specified time, in an action against the husband and wife to recover the wages of the minor, judgment rendered against the husband and wife is erroneous. Ingram v. Nedd, 44 Vt. 462.

Order in equity.—In a suit to compel a husband and wife to answer if they, or either of them, have money belonging to the estate of plaintiff's intestate, evidence that money belonging to such estate came to the hands of the wife does not justify an order requiring herself and husband jointly to refund the same. personal judgment can be entered against a married woman only in case she is shown to have a separate estate.¹¹

7. AGAINST WIFE'S SEPARATE PROPERTY. Under the statutes in many of the states, a judgment is enforceable only out of the wife's separate property,¹² and in some states such judgment is limited to the separate property in reference to which the contract was made,¹³ or to her separate personal property.¹⁴ Some cases hold that judgments against the wife should expressly state that the amount is "to be levied . . . out of her separate estate,"¹⁵ but under other statutes a general judgment may be sufficient.¹⁶

8. RECORD OF JUDGMENT. In states where judgments against a married woman are presumed to be invalid, it is held that every judgment is void where the record does not show upon its face her liability;¹⁷ but where the record discloses Family necessities.—Mo. Rev. St. (1889) § 6869, does not charge a married woman personally with her husband's debts created for necessities of wife and family, but merely renders the personal property liable therefor and a personal judgment against her is erroneous. Harned v. Shores, 75 Mo. App. 500. And see Latimer v. Newman, 69 Mo. App. 76.

Action to set aside contract.—It is error to enter a decree for the recovery of money against a married woman personally, in a suit in equity instituted to set aside a contract for the sale of land on the ground of fraud and to recover the amount of a cash payment made thereon by the complainant. Prentiss v. Paisley, 25 Fla. 927, 7 So. 56, 7 L. R. A. 640.

Conveyance to wife in fraud of creditors.—A wife is not liable to judgment in personam for the value of property conveyed to her in fraud of her husband's creditors; nor, in event of her death, can such judgment be rendered against her executors. The only remedy available to the creditors, or to the assignee in bankruptcy, is to pursue the property. Phipps v. Sedgwick, 95 U. S. 3, 24 L. ed. 591.

Specification of property.—A judgment condemning the statutory separate estate of the wife to the satisfaction of a claim for articles of comfort and support of the household must specify the property. Lee v. Ryall, 68 Ala. 354.

Form of judgment.—See Starke v. Malone, 51 Ala. 169.

Action against administrator of married woman.—In an action against the administrator of a married woman to charge her separate estate in his hands with indebtedness contracted by her, the decree should confine the charge to her separate estate, and should make provision for apportionment of such estate among all the claims chargeable thereon. Baer v. Pfaff, 44 Mo. App. 35; Kern v. Pfaff, 44 Mo. App. 29.

Dissolution of coverture.—The separate estate of a married woman cannot, after coverture ceases, be subjected to a general judgment obtained against her during coverture. Woodfolk v. Lyon, 98 Tenn. 369, 39 S. W. 227.

Effect of failure to direct mode of enforcement.—The fact that a judgment against a married woman, to be collected out of her separate property, is imperfect in not directing the mode of enforcing the lien does not render the judgment, so far as it goes, invalid or irregular. Chapman v. Lemon, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 235.

her coverture, and her liability under the statute, she will be bound by the entry.¹⁸ Where the record does not disclose the fact of her coverture, it has been held that a married woman may have the judgment opened, and a new trial granted,¹⁹ but, on the other hand, where the judgment is regular in form, and there is nothing on the record to indicate that defendant is a married woman, it is held that no reason exists for opening or striking off the judgment.²⁰

9. ARREST OF JUDGMENT. Where the liability of the wife is not shown in the pleadings, the defect may be taken advantage of by a motion to arrest judgment.²¹ So the judgment will be arrested where there is an improper joinder of causes of action,²² but not merely because of a misjoinder of parties.²³

Pennsylvania statute relating to sewing-machines.—Where neither the judgment note given by a wife for a sewing-machine, nor the judgment entered on it against her, under the act of Feb. 29, 1872, giving married women power to contract for sewing-machines for their own use, shows that the note was given for a sewing-machine for her own use, the void judgment cannot be cured by collateral proof of the consideration. Baker v. Singer Mfg. Co., 122 Pa. St. 363, 15 Atl. 458.

Later Pennsylvania rule.—Since the passage of the act of June 3, 1887, which empowered married women to contract as a feme sole for the purpose of carrying on a trade, managing her separate estate, or purchasing necessities, the record of a judgment against a married woman need show no special fact fixing her liability. Record failing to show liability.—If a judgment is obtained against a feme covert defendant, and it is not stated in the record by what authority the contract was made on which the judgment was entered, the judgment should be arrested. McHugh v. Cave, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 37.

Omission to file amended declaration.—Where a jury, sworn to try the issue between plaintiff and wife and defendant, returned a verdict for plaintiff, the omission to file an amended declaration, inserting the name of the wife, is not a ground for an arrest of judgment. Lyon v. Brown, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 64.

Declaration failing to allege relation.—The fact that the declaration, in an action of trespass against a husband and wife for an assault and battery committed by the wife in his presence, does not allege their relation, is no ground for arrest of judgment against them jointly, if the evidence shows them to be husband and wife. Phillips v. Phillips, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 268.

show her liability as a married woman.²⁴ The fact of coverture may be reviewed, at common law, by a writ of error coram nobis.²⁵ A motion to set aside the judgment is, however, the prevailing modern practice.²⁶

11. EFFECT AND OPERATION. There are cases holding that an unauthorized judgment against a married woman may be attacked collaterally,²⁷ and that in an action against her on such judgment she may set up any defense she might have availed herself of originally.²⁸ The weight of authority, however, at the present time, holds that a judgment against a married woman is not void, and although erroneously rendered, it is not subject to collateral attack, but it is to be treated as binding and enforceable, until set aside by appeal or other direct proceedings for the purpose.²⁹ In case of a judgment against both husband and wife, if the Motion at any time during coverture.—A judgment on a promissory note made by a married woman during coverture may be reversed and set aside on motion and affidavits at any time during the coverture and before the satisfaction of the judgment. Albree v. Johnson, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 146, 1 Flipp. 341.

Action to review judgment.—An action cannot be maintained by a married woman to have a personal judgment rendered against her upon a simple contract declared void, although her coverture and the nature of the indebtedness appear on the face of the complaint in such case, the proper remedy being by an action to review such judgment. Hinsey v. Feeley, 62 Ind. 85.

Unexplained delay.—A judgment should not be opened to allow defendant to defend on her petition setting forth that she was a married woman after an unexplained delay of three years, and where, although she was personally summoned, no excuse is offered for her failure to appear. Littster v. Littster, 151 Pa. St. 474, 25 Atl. 117.

Grounds for denial of motion.—Where it appeared that the husband of defendant had been long absent, and that she did business alone, a motion to set aside a judgment against defendant and execution thereon on the ground, disclosed for the first time, that defendant was a married woman, should be denied. Collins v. Heather, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 132.

judgment against the wife is void by reason of her disability, the judgment against the husband remains nevertheless in full force.³⁰ Where husband and wife have joint and separate actions, arising out of the same transaction or the same subject-matter of controversy, a judgment in one action will not be a bar to the other action.³¹ A judgment in favor of the wife to recover for injuries to her is conclusive in favor of the right of the husband to recover from the same person for his loss and expenses by reason of the wife's injuries.³² Where by statute a married woman may contract and be sued as a feme sole, she will be estopped by a judgment the same as any other person.³³ In equity, suits to bind the separate estates of married women are proceedings in rem, and a decree binds the parties thereto, until reversed, although such party is a married woman, and no averment can be made by her against the decree in a collateral proceeding.³⁴

12. LIEN. A judgment against a married woman is usually a lien upon her land,³⁵ but judgments recovered against the husband prior to a statute securing to married women their separate property are not liens upon the property of the wife acquired after the passage of such statute.³⁶ A judgment against the husband after marriage will not affect the wife's right of dower,³⁷ although a judgment against him before the marriage will be superior to the wife's dower

Want of provision as to enforcement.—A judgment against a married woman cannot be attacked collaterally and declared void on the ground that it is a general personal judgment against her, with no limitation of execution to her sole and separate estate under the Married Woman's Act. Magruder v. Armes, 15 App. Cas. (D. C.) 379 [writ of error dismissed in 180 U. S. 496, 21 S. Ct. 454, 45 L. ed. 638].

Slander of husband and wife.—A recovery by the husband for slanderous words spoken of himself and wife is not a bar to another action by the wife for the same slanderous words, in which the husband is joined as a nominal party plaintiff. Bash v. Sommer, 20 Pa. St. 159.

Legal and equitable titles.—Whitten v. Jenkins, 34 Ga. 297.

Husband's suit in respect to wife's separate estate.—A suit brought in the name of husband and wife, in respect to the wife's separate estate, is considered as so far the suit of the husband that a decree therein, adverse to the claim of the wife, will not bar a subsequent suit in her own name by next friend for the same matter. Stuart v. Kissam, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 493.

Judgment in action by husband alone.—A judgment on an action brought by a husband for an injury done to his wife, where the wife was not joined, is not erroneous, since such judgment will be a good bar to a joint action by the husband and wife for the same cause. Southworth v. Packard, 7 Mass. 95.

Mortgage executed by husband alone.—A decree of foreclosure of a mortgage, executed by the husband alone, will not bind the separate estate of the wife, although she is made a defendant and joins with him in an answer. The answer is considered that of the husband alone, notwithstanding the wife joins in it. Bird v. Davis, 14 N. J. Eq. 467.

Foreclosure judgment.—A judgment foreclosing a mortgage on the wife's land, but establishing no personal liability, is not a judgment against her as a married woman which the law declares void. Hoskinson v. Adkins, 77 Mo. 537.

Decree for contribution to other heirs.—Winston v. McAlpine, 65 Ala. 377.

right.³³ Where land was conveyed by a husband as a gift to his wife, he being in ignorance of a judgment against her while a feme sole, it was held that the judgment lien attached, although she shortly after the conveyance to her reconveyed the property to him.³⁹

13. REVIVAL. Where it is sought to revive a judgment under the common-law writ of scire facias, the husband must join with the wife if she recovered judgment before the marriage.⁴⁰ If the judgment was rendered against her while sole, the writ must be sued out against both husband and wife,⁴¹ and upon judgment against husband and wife for her antenuptial debt, upon the death of the husband, a scire facias may be issued against his executor.⁴² Upon judgment in favor of both husband and wife, and upon the death of both, the husband dying first, the executors of the wife are entitled to sue.⁴³ Under a statute permitting an assignee to sue in his own name, the administrator of a deceased assignee may bring an action to revive the judgment.⁴⁴ A married woman may, by force of statute, maintain scire facias against her husband when judgment was entered in her favor before the marriage.⁴⁵ As a defense, defendant may show that the judgment was void;⁴⁶ and in a state where the original judgment was a nullity against a married woman, the judgment in scire facias will be also void.⁴⁷ It is the general rule, however, that where the judgment is valid on its face, and no record of coverture appears, coverture cannot be set up in defense against a revival.⁴⁸

K. Execution — 1. ON JUDGMENTS AGAINST HUSBAND. At common law the wife's chattels real may be taken on execution for the husband's debts,⁴⁹ and his interest by curtesy, after issue born, in her freeholds may likewise be levied on;⁵⁰ but land held by husband and wife jointly, or as tenants by the entirety, is not subject to sale by his creditors.⁵¹ The husband's marital interest in the use and profits of the wife's realty is also liable for his debts.⁵² Under modern statutes, Interest in lands assigned to wife as dower.—Where the interest of a husband in land, assigned to his wife as dower, is taken in execution, the annual value of the land should be appraised, and the land set off to the creditor to hold for a sufficient time to sat-

however, the wife's property is generally exempt from execution on judgments against the husband,⁵³ and in general where the wife is not a party to the suit, a writ of execution against the husband cannot be levied against her property.⁵⁴ Where the statute permits the wife to sue the husband, execution may issue in her favor against him as in case of third persons.⁵⁵

2. ON JUDGMENTS AGAINST WIFE. In jurisdictions where personal judgments against married women are held void, an execution sued out on such a judgment is invalid and of no effect.⁵⁶ Where, however, the wife may be sued as if single, in relation to her separate estate, personal judgments against her in such suits may be executed against her separate property.⁵⁷ Upon the execution sale of her lands, on a valid judgment, the inchoate marital rights of the husband will be extinguished.⁵⁸

Sale as passing wife's interest.—A sale of land upon a judgment against the husband alone does not carry the interest of the wife. Wright v. Tichenor, 104 Ind. 185, 3 N. E. 853.

Property devised to husband and wife.—Wagner St. Mo. p. 935, § 14, exempting the separate property of a wife from liability for the individual debts of her husband during coverture, does not prevent the sale, under execution against the husband, of his interest in property devised to himself and wife. Hall v. Stephens, 65 Mo. 670, 27 Am. Rep. 302.

Property claimed by wife.—Where property levied on under an execution is claimed to be the property of the wife, it is a question to be determined from all the circumstances whether the husband was carrying on the business as his own, or was managing it for his wife. *Magerstadt v. Writ of possession in ejectment against husband.—A wife living with her husband on land which she claims as her separate estate, under a right derived from a person other than her husband, prior to commencement of the action, cannot be turned out of possession by a writ of possession in ejectment against her husband to which she was not a party. She is, as to her claim, a person distinct from her husband, and must be made a party to the action, in order to bind her by the judgment. Bushong v. Rector, 32 W. Va. 311, 9 S. E. 225, 25 Am. ever, a personal judgment cannot be rendered in a foreclosure suit against husband and wife, an execution on a deficiency judgment can issue only against the husband.⁶⁰ Where a husband is joined as a nominal defendant with his wife in an action for a tort of the wife, in which he took no part, and which is alleged to have been committed by her alone, no execution can issue against the husband or his property, as the property of the wife alone is subject to execution.⁶¹ Where the husband is liable upon the antenuptial contracts of the wife only to the extent of the property he may have acquired from her, execution against the husband must be limited to such property.⁶² Upon the death of the husband, a joint judgment against husband and wife survives against the wife, and may be satisfied out of any property not held by her as equitable separate estate.⁶³

Enjoining levy upon land held by entireties.—A husband and wife may maintain an action to enjoin the sheriff from levying upon and selling, on an execution against the husband, land held by them as tenants by entireties. Hulett v. Inlow, 57 Ind. 412, 26 Am. Rep. 64.

Notifying officer of claims.—Where property has been purchased with the joint funds of the husband and wife, and it afterward seized upon execution levied to satisfy a judgment against the husband alone, the wife may protect her interest in such property by notifying the officer of the existence of her claim thereto. She is not compelled to have recourse to an injunction. McTighe v. Bringolf, 42 Iowa 455.

Conspiracy to deprive wife of dower.—A bill in equity will lie by a married woman to restrain execution on judgment confessed by her husband through conspiracy with plaintiff, in order to deprive the wife of her dower right and of maintenance, and to prevent the collection of a forfeited recognizance against the husband. *Black v. b. At Law. Replevin may be brought to recover chattels of the wife levied on by the husband's creditors,⁷² or an action to recover damages will lie.⁷³

5. EXECUTION AGAINST THE BODY. A feme covert is subject to arrest on a body execution.⁷⁴ Where a judgment is obtained against a husband and wife, in an action in which the body of defendant can be taken on execution, plaintiff is entitled to an execution running against the bodies of both husband and wife;⁷⁵ and where the execution is against both husband and wife, the wife may be imprisoned with or without her husband.⁷⁶

L. Enforcement of Judgment Against Wife's Separate Property. In enforcing a decree against the wife's separate estate, it is the rule, in equity, that the personality should first be applied to the payment of the debt;⁷⁷ but the personality, including the rental of lands, being insufficient, equity may decree the sale of the realty itself,⁷⁸ especially after the death of the wife.⁷⁹ Property, however, subject to restraints on anticipation or alienation will be protected from execution.⁸⁰ Under the statutes authorizing personal judgments against married women, her separate property may be seized and sold on execution,⁸¹ and the firm debt, injunction will not lie to enjoin the satisfaction of the judgment out of her land. Burk v. Platt, 88 Ind. 283.

judgment may be enforced even against her after-acquired property.⁸² Statutes, however, making husband and wife jointly liable for family necessaries often provide that no execution shall issue against the property of the wife until execution against the husband has been returned nulla bona.⁸³ A statute imposing liabilities upon the wife for her own support is not self-executing, and, in case of a judgment against the husband alone, her property cannot be seized in execution in the absence of an adjudication as to its liability.⁸⁴ If executions against husband and wife are both returned unsatisfied, the judgment creditor may sue in equity to have a deed of trust of the wife's property given to secure other debts foreclosed, and the surplus applied on the execution.⁸⁵

M. Appeal and Error ⁸⁶—1. PARTIES.⁸⁷ A writ of error to reverse a judgment obtained against a woman prior to her marriage should be sued out in the names of both husband and wife.⁸⁸ The same rule applies where a judgment was rendered against her during coverture.⁸⁹ At common law, if a female party to a suit itinerarily after judgment, and before service of the writ of error, service of the citation must be on her husband.⁹⁰ In general, on appeal or writ of error, husband and wife, if properly made joint parties in the court below, should also be joined in the appellate proceedings;⁹¹ but where, under statutes, the wife may

2. TIME WITHIN WHICH PROCEEDINGS MUST BE BROUGHT. The limitations as to time for proceedings for removal are controlled, as in case of other parties, by the local statutes.⁹⁴

3. REVIEW.⁹⁵ Where a judgment has been rendered against a married woman and her husband, and the judgment is erroneous as to the wife, but valid as to the husband, the judgment will be reversed only as to her;⁹⁶ but where the judgment is an entirety it cannot be reversed as to the wife without a reversal as to her co-parties.⁹⁷ Where the judgment may be corrected by simply striking out the name of the wife, it is held that there is no ground for a general reversal.⁹⁸ The entry of remittitur⁹⁹ may prevent a reversal, and an error cured by verdict is not ground for reversal.¹ Questions of fact decided upon evidence and proper instructions, such, for example, as whether a wife acquired property as her separate estate,² whether she mortgaged her separate property to secure her own debt or merely as a surety for her husband,³ whether she was authorized as his agent to bind him for necessaries,⁴ whether a contract entered into by her was for the benefit of her separate estate,⁵ or whether an alleged agreement with her husband as to her property was made by her,⁶ will not generally be disturbed by the reviewing court. A decree granted upon the petition of the wife, her trustee, and her husband, praying that land settled by her before marriage, to her sole and separate use, may be reconveyed to her after the passage of a statute securing her property as her statutory estate, will not be reversed upon the death of the husband, since, her disability being then removed, she could not be prejudiced by such a decree.⁷

N. Costs — 1. IN GENERAL. Where a married woman is authorized to sue as a feme sole, she will be liable for costs incidental to such suits.⁸ Likewise, where she may sue in respect to her separate property, either she, or at least her separate estate, will be liable for costs assessed against her.⁹ In equity, her next friend, by whom she sues, is held liable for the costs,¹⁰ but, at common law, in suits by or against husband and wife, the husband alone is held responsible for the costs adjudged against them.¹¹ Where a married woman institutes a suit, and dies, pendente lite, a judgment afterward rendered against her personally for costs will be absolutely void.¹² Where it is optional with the husband whether to join in the wife's suit, his joinder renders him liable for costs.¹³ The dismissal of the wife's action against the husband for assault and battery resting on the theory of unity of person, it is error to award costs against her.¹⁴

2. SECURITY FOR COSTS. For the purpose of affording greater protection to married women in connection with their separate property, statutes in some states provide that suits may be maintained by them without giving security for costs;¹⁵ and when, in equity, a married woman sues alone she will not generally be required to give security.¹⁶ In most of the states, however, a married woman is compelled to give security the same as any other person.¹⁷ If a bond is given in an action wherein the husband is joined, it has been held that he is the proper party to execute the bond.¹⁸

3. COLLECTION. When a married woman is liable for costs, execution therefor may be enforced against her separate estate,¹⁹ and this rule likewise obtains in

VII. SEPARATION AND SEPARATE MAINTENANCE.²²

A. Separation Agreements²³ — 1. DEFINITIONS. Separation as here used and in distinction from judicial separation or divorce signifies a cessation of cohabitation between husband and wife by voluntary or mutual agreement.²⁴ A separation deed is one by which, through the medium of some third person, acting as a trustee, provision is made by a husband for the support of his wife.²⁵

2. VALIDITY — a. In General. The question whether a separation agreement is illegal as being against public policy is considered in another place in this work.²⁶

b. Provisions For Custody of Children. An agreement is not invalid because it provides for the custody of the children,²⁷ although some courts have held that provisions giving the custody of the children to the wife are contrary to public policy, since they interfere with the due discharge of the father's duties with respect to them.²⁸

c. Fraud and Coercion. Agreements providing for a separate allowance must be voluntary, fair, and reasonable, and not the result of fraud or coercion.²⁹

Reprin⁴ 764 (holding that where a husband uses force to compel a wife to execute a deed of separation and thereby to take a very small maintenance, a court of equity will give relief and direct proper maintenance); Evans v. Edmonds, 13 C. B. 777, 1 C. L. R. 653, 17 Jur. 883, 22 L. J. C. P. 211, 1 Wkly. Rep. 412, 76 E. C. L. 777.

Agreements sustained.—Fraud on the part of a husband in procuring the execution by the wife of an agreement of separation cannot be predicated on the fact that during the negotiations for the agreement he wrote letters to the wife in which he expressed the hope and expectancy that they would soon be living together again, where there were no misrepresentations of existing facts. Daniels v. Benedict, 97 Fed. 367, 38 C. C. A. 592. So the fact that under a contract executed by a husband in satisfaction of his wife's claim for alimony she received property less than she might have been legally entitled to, although sufficiently valuable to provide a support for her, does not show fraud, and accordingly the agreement will not be set aside. Sumner v. Sumner, 121 Ga. 1, 48 S. E. 727. Where a wife executed a deed of separation from her husband on receiving from him one thousand dollars, while she supposed he was a poor man, and he was of very penurious character, and died twenty-six years later, worth sixty thousand dollars, it is insufficient to show that he concealed the amount of his wealth when the settlement was made. Franks' Estate, 8 Pa. Dist. 86 [affirmed in 195 Pa. St. 26, 45 Atl. 489]. Where a husband and wife have parted, and the wife, under a contract of settlement, in consideration of her releasing certain rights to the husband's property, has received a certain sum paid her by the husband, she cannot at law recover damages from the husband for alleged misrepresentations as to the value of his property, whereby he induced her to sign the release. Schmoltz v. Schmoltz, 116 Mich. 692, 75 N. W. 135. Misrepresentations must be relied upon else no relief can be granted as for fraud. Robertson v. Robertson, 25 Iowa 350.

34. Scherer v. Scherer, 23 Ind. App. 384, 55 N. E. 494, 77 Am. St. Rep. 437 (holding that a wife cannot recover support provided for in a contract with her husband which recites that they were living apart "by reason of the abandonment one of the other," since, the contract failing to show that she left him for reasons justified by law, she has no claim for support, and hence the contract to furnish it is without consideration); Cropsey v. McKinney, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 47 (holding that a deed of separation without consideration is void at law, even between the parties thereto, and even in equity, as against the assignees of the husband).

Consideration held sufficient.—An agreement of separation by which the wife agrees, in consideration of a payment of twenty dollars per month, payable quarterly, to support her two minor children is based on sufficient consideration. Rodenbaugh v. Rodenbaugh, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 619. A covenant to indemnify a husband against his wife's debts duty of the husband to support the wife is a sufficient consideration to sustain his promise for such support while living apart,³⁵ and a reasonable provision for the wife is a sufficient consideration to relieve the husband from further obligation for her maintenance.³⁶ A relinquishment by the wife of her interest in the husband's property is an ample consideration for his covenant to pay to her, or to a trustee for her, an agreed sum of money for her support,³⁷ and where the amount received by a wife on separation in consideration of the release by her of all claims on her husband's estate was probably greater than what she would have received as an heir, the release was based on a sufficient consideration.³⁸ As a valuable consideration, to protect the husband from his legal liability for the wife's support and from debts for necessities incurred by her during the separation, or from further claims on her part, a bond to indemnify the husband may be executed by some third person, usually by a trustee under deeds of trust formerly common,³⁹ or by the wife herself under a statutory provision.⁴⁰ A deed of separation containing, however, no covenant on the part of the trustee to indemnify the husband is not on that account void, since such consideration is not necessary inter partes,⁴¹ although with respect to the interests of creditors in connection with agreements concerning property, a valuable consideration becomes an important question.⁴²

d. Necessity For Trustee. The common-law incapacity of the wife to make contracts and to sue for their enforcement, followed also at one time in equity is not the only consideration that will support articles of separation; a covenant to put an end to a suit against the husband in the ecclesiastical court, or to pay him an annuity, or to pay his existing debts is sufficient. Wilson v. Wilson, 9 Jur. 148, 14 L. J. Ch. 204, 14 Sim. 405, 37 Eng. Ch. 405, 60 Eng. Reprint 415 [affirmed in 1 H. L. Cas. 538, 12 Jur. 467, 9 Eng. Reprint 870, and disapproved in 5 H. L. Cas. 40, 23 L. J. Release of alimony.—A release of claim for alimony is sufficient consideration for a deed of separation. Bratton v. Massey, 15 S. C. 277.

Agreements enforceable in part.—The fact that an agreement of separation is void as a release of the wife's statutory rights in the husband's real property does not render it void as a relinquishment of all claim on his personality. *Bowers v. made the intervention of a trustee necessary for a valid deed of separation and separate maintenance.⁴³ Equity, however, in a number of cases has sustained a reasonable and just contract for separate maintenance without the intervention of a trustee,⁴⁴ and under the influence of modern statutes removing the common-law disabilities of the wife, no trustee is necessary.⁴⁵ Where, however, the statute has not changed the incapacity of the wife to contract with the husband a trustee is still required.⁴⁶

4. CONSTRUCTION. The rules of construction applied to contracts and deeds in general are applicable to separation agreements or deeds.⁴⁷ An unqualified covenant in a separation deed for payment of an annuity to the wife for her life is not avoided by the subsequent renunciation of the parties, or by the wife's leaving the husband without cause,⁴⁸ or by a subsequent change in the financial condition of the husband.⁴⁹ The wife cannot as a rule accept one provision in the deed and repudiate another.⁵⁰ The institution of a suit for divorce does not necessarily constitute a breach of covenant not to molest the adverse party;⁵¹ nor does the subsequent adultery of the wife even though such adultery is followed by the birth of a spurious child.⁵²

5. EFFECT OF BREACH. If the covenants respectively entered into by the husband and the wife are interdependent, a breach of one avoids liability under the other.⁵³ If the husband and wife, after her abandonment by him, enter into an agreement, not amounting to a deed of separation, by which he agrees to pay her a certain sum monthly for her support, his breach thereof revives his liability for her maintenance.⁵⁴

6. EFFECT OF DEATH. Valid agreements between husband and wife as to the division of property in lieu of all other property rights cannot be set aside upon the death of either,⁵⁵ and are binding as to the interest of each.⁵⁶ However, a covenant that an annuity accepted by the wife in lieu of all other claims shall be paid so long as she remains his wife or continues his widow is defeated by the death of the wife or her subsequent marriage.⁵⁷ Money paid to the wife under her agreement to relinquish all other rights in the husband's estate is her separate property and if invested by her cannot be claimed by the husband upon her decease;⁵⁸ and money paid to the wife under a separation agreement, a reconciliation subsequently taking place, cannot be recovered from her by her husband's executor, the husband in his lifetime having made no claim for its return.⁵⁹ And the share of the property allotted to the wife is not liable for the deceased husband's funeral expenses.⁶⁰

Independent covenants.—Covenants in a separation deed by which respectively the husband has covenanted to pay an annuity to a trustee for the wife and the trustee has covenanted that the wife shall not molest the husband must be construed as independent covenants in the absence of any express terms making them dependent, and therefore a breach of the covenant that a wife shall not molest the husband is not an answer to an action for the annuity. *Fearon v. offer on the part of one of the separated spouses to return does not put an end to the contract, where the separation was intended to be permanent.⁶⁶

b. Effect of Subsequent Abandonment. After a resumption of marital relations the subsequent abandonment of the husband by the wife will not revive the husband's liability under his former bond for her separate maintenance.⁶⁷

9. EFFECT OF SUIT FOR DIVORCE.⁶⁸ The fact that the wife institutes a suit for divorce does not relieve the husband of his obligation to pay the periodic sum agreed on for the wife's maintenance, where there is no condition in the deed to the contrary.⁶⁹

10. ACTIONS — a. General Rules. Although an action on an agreement of separation made through the intervention of a trustee is properly brought by the trustee alone,⁷⁰ and he is a necessary party to a suit to set the agreement aside,⁷¹ yet equity will entertain a suit by the wife to enforce a separation agreement for her support;⁷² and where the wife's disabilities to sue have been removed, she may bring action in her own name.⁷³ Upon failure of a trustee to perform the provisions of the deed, the wife, by her next friend, may, by suit in equity, compel performance;⁷⁴ and the husband may in a proper case sue the wife and trustee to prevent diversion of the trust fund.⁷⁵

b. Allowance of Alimony. In an action to annul articles of separation the court may grant temporary or permanent alimony.⁷⁶

B. Right to Allowance For Separate Maintenance⁷⁷ — 1. RIGHT OF WIFE. Alimony was originally granted only as an incident to a decree of divorce, but the American cases are in conflict as to whether an independent suit by the wife for alimony will lie.⁷⁸ In many jurisdictions, however, the statutes authorize the courts to grant the wife alimony or an allowance for separate maintenance for specified causes.⁷⁹ Accordingly, the wife's right to an allowance for separate maintenance, as used in the present discussion, means that reasonable support for the wife which a court of equity or the statutes will compel the husband to provide for her, where without just cause he deserts her, or where by his misconduct she is justified in living apart from him, when otherwise she would be without adequate means of support.⁸⁰ To entitle the wife to an allowance for separate maintenance there must of course have been a valid marriage.⁸¹

2. RIGHT OF HUSBAND. There is no common-law duty of the wife to support the husband, and consequently she cannot be compelled to provide for his separate maintenance,⁸² in the absence of statute to the contrary.⁸³

3. GROUNDS. In equity and under the statutes the generally recognized grounds for the wife's right to an allowance for separate maintenance are desertion or abandonment of the wife by the husband without just cause,⁸⁴

What constitutes abandonment.—Abandonment is the act of wilfully leaving the wife with intent to cause a palpable separation from her, and implies an actual desertion of the wife by the husband. Stanbrough v. Stanbrough, 60 Ind. 275. To constitute abandonment there must be a cessation of cohabitation with the intention not to resume it, and the absence of the wife's consent thereto. Youngs v. Youngs, 78 Mo. App. 225. Conduct on the part of the husband depriving the wife of full conjugal enjoyment constitutes abandonment. Marsh v. Marsh, 10 N. J. L. J. 300. So the act of a husband in driving his wife from his house and denying her the right to live there because she refused to promise not to go near her father and mother constitutes abandonment. Gloster v. Gloster, 23 N. Y. App. Div. 336, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 160.

Period of abandonment.—In Kentucky a wife is not entitled to sue for alimony on the ground of abandonment until she has been abandoned for at least a year. See Steele v. Steele, 96 Ky. 382, 29 S. W. 17, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 517; Logan v. Logan, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 142; Butler v. Butler, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 201. In Washington the abandonment need not continue for any fixed time to entitle the wife to separate maintenance. Schonborn v. Schonborn, 27 Wash. 421, 67 Pac. 987.

What constitutes desertion.—A husband who contracts a venereal disease from adulterous intercourse, and inoculates his wife therewith, in consequence of which she leaves him, taking her children with her, is guilty of desertion. Carr v. Carr, 6 Ind. App. 377, 33 N. E. 805.

What constitutes cruelty.—A husband's refusal to allow his wife to put a clean cloth on the table, and requiring her to use a carpet for a table-cloth, while very reprehensible, is not legal cruelty, entitling her to a decree for alimony. Wise v. Wise, 60 S. C. 426, 38 S. E. 794. However, the wife is entitled to recover alimony on account of cruelty, although it may not have been such as to endanger her life. Thornberry v. Thornberry, 2 J. App. 229, holding that a married woman who without her fault lives separate and apart from her husband may have her remedy in equity against him for a reasonable support and maintenance. When bill may be sustained.—A bill for the support of the wife separate from the husband will only be sustained when the reasons for it are imperative, and if from the evidence the court is satisfied that the difficulties between the parties are not serious, the bill should be dismissed, especially where there are young children for whom they ought to provide a home. Davidson v. Davidson, 47 Mich. 151, 10 N. W. 179.

Necessity of showing ground for divorce.—In Illinois a wife in order to obtain separate maintenance need not show a statutory ground for divorce, but it is sufficient if a persistent, unjustifiable course of conduct on the part of the husband be shown which necessarily renders the life of the wife miserable. Mellanson v. Mellanson, 113 Ill. App. 81. In New York, however, an application by a wife who has voluntarily separated from her husband, praying that a portion of the marriage covenant and refusal to live with the wife in the conjugal relation by reason of joining himself to a sect whose doctrine requires a renunciation of the marriage covenant,⁹² are also recognized in some jurisdictions. Adultery in itself is no ground for alimony.⁹³

4. EFFECT OF DEATH OF HUSBAND. The wife's right to separate maintenance ceases upon the death of the husband.⁹⁴

5. EFFECT OF DIVORCE OR SUIT THEREFOR. The husband's duty to support the wife being dependent upon the marriage relation, she cannot maintain an action for separate maintenance after a decree of divorce;⁹⁵ and where alimony is decreed with the divorce, it will operate as a dismissal of a pending suit for separate maintenance.⁹⁶ The pendency of a bill by the wife for divorce and alimony precludes a subsequent bill for separate maintenance.⁹⁷

6. EFFECT OF MISCONDUCT OF WIFE.⁹⁸ To entitle the wife to a separate allowance, the grounds upon which her claims are based must exist without her fault.⁹⁹ Where she has left her husband without just cause,¹ or where the cruelty or husband's real property which she had voluntarily and without fraud conveyed to him after their marriage be conveyed to her for her support and maintenance, must be denied where no charges such as to entitle her to a limited divorce are made. Noe v. Noe, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 436.

In some states, however, a previous decree for alimony is not merged in a subsequent decree of divorce, so as to render the former inoperative. Williams v. Williams, 96 Ky. 397, 29 S. W. 132, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 644. And see Harrison v. Harrison, 20 Ala. 629, 56 Am. Dec. 227.

In North Carolina the fault of the wife is not a material issue. Skittletharpe v. Skittletharpe, 130 N. C. 72, 40 S. E. 851.

Adultery of the wife is a good defense to an action for separate maintenance. Bickley v. Bickley, 136 Ala. 548, 34 So. 946; Hilbert v. Hilbert, 14 York Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 149; Watkins v. Watkins, 2 Atk. 96, 26 Eng. Reprint 460.

Insufficient cause for abandonment.—The fact that previous to her marriage unfounded rumors affecting the chastity of a woman were circulated is no ground for her husband to abandon her and escape his marital responsibilities. Verner v. Verner, 64 Miss. 184, 1 So. 52. Nor is a man justified in deserting his wife because she is extravagant, lazy, profane, and coarse, and of violent temper, thus making his life uncomfortable. Boyce v. Boyce, 23 N. J. Eq. 337.

And see Schindel v. Schindel, 12 Md. 294; Reade v. Continental Trust Co., 49 N. Y. App. Div. 400, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 395.

Just cause held to exist see Smith v. Smith, 154 Mass. 262, 28 N. E. 263; McGrady v. McGrady, 48 Mo. App. 668 (holding that if the husband's conduct renders the wife's condition intolerable at his house, she may leave it without forfeiting her right to support by him or out of his property); Fred v. Fred, (N. J. Ch. 1904) 58 Atl. 611; Parker v. Parker, 57 N. J. Eq. 577, 42 Atl. 160 (holding that where the husband unjustly accused the wife of unfaithfulness, and frequently violence complained of by her was induced by her own provocation,² she has in general no right to a separate maintenance. If the parties are both in fault and cannot live together, alimony may, however, be decreed.³ Subsequent misconduct of the wife may terminate her right to an allowance previously decreed.⁴

7. EFFECT OF OFFER TO RETURN OR TO MAINTAIN, OR OF RESUMPTION OF COHABITATION. Upon an offer made in good faith by the wife to return to her husband, his refusal to accept and provide for her will entitle her to sue for alimony.⁵ A corresponding offer on the husband's part to accept and maintain the wife will generally defeat her right to a separate allowance.⁶ His offer, however, must be sincere,⁷ and not accompanied with unreasonable conditions.⁸ The allowance will be discontinued upon a resumption of cohabitation.⁹

8. EFFECT OF ANTENUPTIAL CONTRACTS AND SEPARATION AGREEMENTS. An antenuptial contract by which each party renounces all right to the property of the other told her that she might go to her own home if she did not like his proceedings, and finally struck her in the face with such force as to injure her eyesight, her act in separating from him was justified, and was an abandonment by him); Marsh v. Marsh, 10 N. J. L. J. 300 (holding that a wife need not stay under her husband's roof with his prostitute, and if she leaves for that reason, and he refuses to support her, she is entitled to a decree for alimony); Taylor v. Taylor, 173 N. Y. 266, 65 N. E. 1098.

Just cause held not to exist.—The fact that the husband against his wife's wishes suffers the mother of his former wife to control the household affairs absolutely does not justify the wife in living apart from the husband. Giese v. Giese, 107 Ill. App. 659. Compare Obrock v. Obrock, 32 Ill. App. 149. A wife is not justified in law in abandoning her husband because he is rude and dictatorial in speech, exacting in his demands upon her, and sometimes unkind and negligent in his treatment of her, even when she was worn and weary in nursing their sick child. Carr v. Carr, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 168. See also Rhame v. Rhame, 1 McCord Eq. (S. C.) 197, 16 Am. Dec. 597. So the fact that the husband becomes disagreeable by reason of sickness which he cannot control furnishes his wife no sufficient cause for leaving him. Orendorff v. Orendorff, 91 Ill. App. 61. Evidence held not to show justifiable cause see Briggs v. Briggs, 102 Iowa 318, 71 N. W. 198; Kuster v. Kuster, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 136, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 853.

Necessity of existence of ground for divorce.—A wife may be justified in living apart from her husband for reasons which would not be grounds for a divorce in her favor. *Watts v. 5. Farber v. Farber, 64 Iowa 362, 20 N. W. 472.

Sufficiency of evidence of offer.—Evidence of the husband that he "sent his friends" to his wife, from whom he was separated, to make an offer to resume the marital relation is per se insufficient to show such offer. *Buttler v. Eq. 577, 42 Atl. 160 (holding that a formal invitation to the wife by the husband to return, where made after suit brought by the wife for support because of abandonment and refusal to support, there being no evidence of his intent to treat his wife justly, does not relieve the husband of the consequence of his abandonment); *Elliott v. is no bar to a decree for alimony on a bill for separate maintenance.¹⁰ Although a separation agreement may not bar a wife's right to separate support,¹¹ yet where an agreement for her separate maintenance is fair and reasonable, and free from fraud and coercion, she is estopped from suing for separate support.¹² Upon the husband's failure to pay the sum agreed, however, he cannot set up such agreement in bar.¹³

9. EFFECT OF WIFE'S POSSESSING INDEPENDENT MEANS. Some cases hold that where the wife has separate property adequate for her maintenance, alimony will not be granted to her;¹⁴ but the fact that she has property of her own does not deprive her of her right to temporary alimony in all jurisdictions.¹⁵

10. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO ALLOWANCE. The wife's right to alimony gives her no claim to any specific property of the husband.¹⁶ While in order to authorize a decree "out of the estate or property of the husband," as provided by statute, there must be some property in existence,¹⁷ yet in general alimony may be decreed against a husband having means of supporting his wife, although he has no visible property or permanent income.¹⁸ The wife, however, cannot obtain alimony out of property previously conveyed in good faith by the husband.¹⁹

C. Actions For Separate Maintenance²⁰—1. JURISDICTION.²¹ The inherent right claimed by many courts of equity to grant separate maintenance, and the right as conferred by statute have been considered in preceding sections.²² Generally, to give jurisdiction, at least one of the parties must be a bona fide resident of the state in which the suit is brought.²³

Action by non-resident wife against resident husband.—It is not necessary that a wife be a resident of the state in order to maintain a bill against the husband for alimony, where the husband is a resident. Action by resident wife against non-resident husband.—If a wife who has left her husband for just cause returns to him on his promise to amend his conduct, and they remove to another state, where the husband continues his ill-treatment, the wife may remove to their former domicile and sue him there for separate maintenance. Harrison v. Harrison, 20 Ala. 629, 56 Am. Dec. 227. So where a husband passing through the state abandoned his wife, a bill for alimony will lie in the county of the abandonment, if he is served with process while in the state, the wife having chosen the place of abandonment as her residence. Campbell v. Campbell, 67 Ga. 423. And if the husband abandons the wife and leaves the state, the

2. LIMITATIONS²⁴ AND LACHES.²⁵ In general the statute of limitations cannot be pleaded against the action of the wife for maintenance, since the duty of the husband to support her lasts during the marital relation;²⁶ but long delay after the separation in bringing suit may bar the wife from her action.²⁷

3. PARTIES.²⁸ Where an injunction or a receiver is prayed for as incidental relief in an action for maintenance, all parties interested in the granting or denying of that relief may be joined with the husband as defendants;²⁹ and a fraudulent grantee to whom the husband has transferred his property may be joined as a defendant.³⁰

4. PROCESS.³¹ By force of statute service on the husband, when out of the jurisdiction, may be made by publication,³² and process by arrest³³ or attachment³⁴ may be authorized. Service of process by leaving same at the husband's abode is insufficient in some states.³⁵ Although the statute provides for proceedings to be held before the judge, yet the fact that the summons is made returnable during the term instead of during vacation does not affect the jurisdiction of defendant's person.³⁶

5. TEMPORARY ALLOWANCE AND COUNSEL FEES.³⁷ It is the general rule that in an action for separate maintenance a temporary allowance of alimony may be made,³⁸ and there may also be added an order for counsel fees to a reasonable

Where the controversy is whether the marriage relation exists or ever did exist, the order granting counsel fee and alimony pendente lite cannot be made upon the mere ex parte affidavits of the wife; but it should appear to the reasonable satisfaction of the court that a marriage has in fact taken place or that the woman has been openly treated as a wife. Vreeland v. Vreeland, 18 N. J. Eq. 43.

Sufficiency of showing.—The allowance of alimony and attorney's fees depends on its being affirmatively shown that plaintiff has a meritorious cause is proceeding in good faith, and that the allowance is just and equitable. Earle v. Earle, 60 Ill. App. 360. Such a showing is sufficient. Harding v. Harding, 144 Ill. 588, 32 N. E. 206, 21 L. R. A. 310 [affirming in part and reversing in part 40 Ill. App. 202].

maintenance must set forth the grounds for her action.⁴⁵ However, the wife should allege that the separation was without her fault if she is living apart from the husband,⁴⁶ and the statute may require the complaint to state the sum necessary for support;⁴⁷ and in some states the complaint must aver that the township may become chargeable with the wife's support.⁴⁸ To justify an injunction against the husband's disposing of his property, the pleadings must show plaintiff's right to maintain her suit, and the danger of irreparable injury to her property interests.⁴⁹ Allegations in a complaint for alimony on the ground of cruelty and desertion, giving the history of the case, showing separations and forgiveness, specific instances of cruelty, and that plaintiff was driven from her home and lived with a son unable to support her properly should not be stricken out as irrelevant, evidentiary, or mere surplusage.⁵⁰ The husband may plead the wife's adultery in defense,⁵¹ but vague charges of infidelity not sufficient to constitute grounds for divorce are not a defense.⁵² The husband may also file a cross bill to have the marriage declared void on the ground of his insanity at the time it was contracted.⁵³ A bill of particulars will not be ordered in an action for separation on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment where many of the averments relate to a general course of conduct.⁵⁴

b. Pleading and Proof. The allegations must be proved in substance, and a bill for maintenance on account of the husband's cruelty is not supported by mere proof of his desertion.⁵⁵ However, in some states a bill for a divorce a mensa et thoro on account of the husband's refusal to maintain the wife, although pre-

Pleading held sufficient see Cunningham v. Cunningham, 72 Conn. 157, 44 Atl. 41 (holding that a complaint is sufficient which alleges that the husband deserted the wife five months after marriage and neglected to provide her with necessaries; that he is able to support her, but has warned all persons not to give her credit; that he has conveyed his property to avoid supporting her; and that she is unable to support herself); Carr v. Carr, 6 Ind. App. 377, 33 N. E. 805 (holding that an allegation that the husband "abandoned" the wife without cause is a sufficient allegation of "desertion" within the statute authorizing relief on that ground); Earle v. Earle, 79 N. Y. App. Div. 631, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 613 (holding that an answer, in an action by the husband for separation, asking that a separation be decreed in defendant's favor on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment, and setting out many particulars of such treatment, is sufficient); Schonborn v. Schonborn, 27 Wash. 421, 67 Pac. 987.

Time for objection.—Where a complaint alleges that the husband frequently abused the wife without cause, charged her with infidelity, threatened her life, and drove her away from home, compelling her to take her infant children with her, an objection that it does not sufficiently charge the husband with desertion must be raised by demurrer, and cannot be considered for the first time after trial. Walter v. Walter, 117 Ind. 247, 20 N. E. 148. And see Harris v. Harris, Harris, 101 Ind. 498.

Abandonment is sufficiently alleged by a complaint averring that defendant, without cause or provocation, left plaintiff, and ever since has refused and still does refuse to live with her, and maintains that he will never live with or support her. Schonborn v. Schonborn, 27 Wash. 421, 67 Pac. 987.

Aider by verdict.—A complaint which fails to allege that the desertion was without cause may be cured by verdict. Harris v. Harris, 101 Ind. 498.

sending no ground of divorce, may be sustained as a bill for support.⁵⁶ It is erroneous to decree a greater allowance than is asked for in the complaint.⁵⁷

7. EVIDENCE.⁵⁸ Where the wife is living apart from her husband, the burden of proof is on her to establish that she left him for just cause.⁵⁹ On defendant's denial of desertion, evidence of his relations with another woman is properly admitted,⁶⁰ and evidence of his conduct toward the wife immediately before and during the year previous to the separation is competent.⁶¹ In a suit by a wife for support under a statute authorizing such a suit in case the husband without just cause fails to furnish suitable support, a finding of facts in a prior suit for divorce brought by the husband showing that the wife was not guilty of wilful desertion in living apart from him is immaterial.⁶² In order to determine the amount of the allowance, evidence of the value of the husband's property is admissible.⁶³

of each case are to be considered, such as the husband's circumstances, the wife's separate property, the social position and manner of life of the parties.⁶⁵ The wife's conduct as well as that of the husband should be taken into consideration;⁶⁷ and the court should take the value of the husband's property at the date of the decree,⁶⁸ the question as to what is a reasonable allowance being within the discretion of the court.⁶⁹ The age of the parties,⁷⁰ their infirmities,⁷¹ the earning capacity of the husband,⁷² and a proper provision for minor children who remain with the mother⁷³ are also factors in determining what is a reasonable amount. Following English chancery precedents one third of the husband's income has been considered a reasonable amount.⁷⁴

9. JUDGMENT⁷⁵—a. In General. The decree should provide that the alimony continue until a dissolution of the marriage by the death of either party,⁷⁶ or Determination of husband's income.—In determining the income of the husband every source from which it is derived or derivable should be taken into account (Ray v. Ray, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 902), and hence his pension should be considered (McGrady v. McGrady, 48 Mo. App. 668). Where the husband had invested money in a company which was under his management, interest at six per cent should be computed on such investment in determining the amount of his income, although such investment was not at present productive; but where the computation of the annual income included an estimate of the gross yearly rental of property occupied by complainant, defendant is entitled to credit therefor so long as complainant's occupancy continues. *Bennett v. until the husband shall receive the wife and treat her in accord with his marital duty.⁷⁷ The allowance must be made to the wife in name.⁷⁸ An alternative decree for a sum in lieu of annual payments has been made,⁷⁹ and the custody of minor children may, in the discretion of the court, be awarded to the wife.⁸⁰ If the husband is under guardianship as a spendthrift, no decree can be rendered requiring the guardian to pay money to the wife;⁸¹ and in some states the judge cannot order the husband to make monthly payments to the wife.⁸² In making the decree the rights of the husband's creditors will be protected.⁸³ A judgment sustaining a demurrer to a wife's suit for separate maintenance will be a bar to a subsequent action on the same grounds.⁸⁴

b. Modification.⁸⁵ A decree for separate maintenance may upon due notice be amended or modified as justice and equity may require.⁸⁶

c. Enforcement — (1) IN GENERAL. In equity a judgment for separate maintenance may be enforced by attachment of the person for contempt.⁸⁷ Decrees for fixed payment may be enforced also by execution and sale,⁸⁸ or by placing the husband's property in the hands of a trustee or receiver;⁸⁹ but the court cannot give the wife control of the husband's property.⁹⁰ A fraudulent conveyance made by the husband to defeat the rights of the wife may be set aside, and the property subjected to a lien for the alimony awarded.⁹¹ However, the court cannot require

Extent of judgment.—Where a wife seeks to set aside transfers made by the husband in fraud of her rights, the court should subject to its judgment only so much of the property as is necessary to satisfy it, and should exempt the remainder. *Murray v. (II) INJUNCTION.⁹⁴ A decree for separate allowance may be enforced by injunction against the husband's disposing of his property,⁹⁵ and the husband may be enjoined also from molesting the wife.⁹⁶

10. APPEAL AND ERROR⁹⁷—a. General Rules. Appeal may be taken by either party in accordance with the local procedure.⁹⁸ In general findings of fact will not be disturbed,⁹⁹ and matters within the discretion of the lower court will not be reviewed in the absence of evidence of abuse of discretion.¹ Harmless error will not work a reversal.²

b. Allowance of Alimony and Counsel Fees. Alimony may be awarded pending appeal,³ but it has been held that the appellate court cannot compel the husband to pay the wife a sum for solicitor's fees to defend the appeal.⁴

11. COSTS.⁵ Where the suit is in equity by the wife's next friend, the costs of an unsuccessful suit may be decreed against them both;⁶ and where a married woman is entitled by statute to her own earnings, the costs of an unsuccessful suit may be taxed to her.⁷ Upon a decree for separate maintenance, allowance of fees for the wife's attorneys may within a reasonable amount be assessed against the husband;⁸ but unnecessary expenses should not be allowed.⁹ Security for suit against him by his wife for separate allowance had knowledge of the pendency of the action and accepted the conveyance without the wife's joining therein, he cannot claim the premises as an innocent purchaser. Starr v. Kaiser, 41 Oreg. 170, 68 Pac. 521.

costs may be required of the wife in states where she is not exempted by statute and the case comes within the general statutes relating to costs.¹⁰

VIII. ABANDONMENT.¹¹

A. Statutory Offense. At common law the husband's neglect to support the wife in connection with his abandonment or desertion of her is not an indictable offense;¹² but in many states by force of statute the husband may, for such breach of marital duty, be prosecuted under criminal or quasi-criminal proceedings.¹³ The general purpose of such laws is to prevent the abandoned and unsupported wife from becoming a public charge.¹⁴

B. What Constitutes. The word "abandonment" when referring to the person leaving his wife in danger of becoming a burden on the public may be prosecuted as a disorderly person. People v. Walsh, 33 Hun 345; In re Newkirk, 37 Misc. 404, 75 N. Y. Revised Greater New York Charter provides for proceedings against one who actually abandons his wife without adequate support. People v. Crouse, 86 N. Y. App. Div. 352, 83 N. Y. Suppl. 812. See People v. Bergen, 36 Hun 241.

Constitutional law.—There is no provision in the constitution withdrawing from the general assembly the power to constitute the desertion by a husband of his wife without just cause or the wilful neglect of a husband or father to provide for the support of his wife and child a misdemeanor. State v. Cucullu, 110 La. 1087, 35 So. 300.

Retrospective operation of statute.—The words "wilful abandonment," as used in N. C. Acts (1869), c. 209, § 1, "to protect married women from the wilful abandonment, or neglect of their husbands," include the act of separation and not merely its continuance; hence no one can be convicted under that statute for an abandonment which took place before its enactment. State v. Deaton, 65 N. C. 496. Compare State v. Witham, 70 Wis. 473, 35 N. W. 934.

Nature of proceeding.—A proceeding under a statute providing that every person who shall unlawfully neglect to support his wife and children shall be sentenced to hard labor for not more than sixty days in the workhouse or jail, but that the court may, in lieu of the penalty, accept a bond with surety that he will furnish such support is a criminal one and not a civil one in criminal form. *State v. act of one consort in leaving the other is defined to mean "the act of a husband or wife who leaves his or her consort wilfully, and with an intention of causing perpetual separation."¹⁵ The penal statutes in question refer to abandonment by the husband and generally make non-support an element of the offense.¹⁶ Mere inability to support the wife, if there is an honest effort to obtain work, is not sufficient to constitute abandonment and non-support;¹⁷ nor does the husband's refusal to maintain the wife upon her leaving him or remaining away from him without cause amount to an abandonment;¹⁸ and a husband who has deserted his wife is not guilty of the offense if he offers to provide her a home,¹⁹ or to make her a reasonable allowance.²⁰ A separation by mutual consent is not abandonment;²¹ nor is a living apart under a judicial separation, although no provision for alimony was made.²² Generally the abandonment must be without good cause,²³

The word "abandon" means a physical abandonment, and does not include a constructive abandonment. Milbourne v. State, 161 Ind. 364, 68 N. E. 684.

Infidelity of the husband is not in itself sufficient to constitute abandonment. People v. Neyer, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 367 [citing People v. Cullen, 153 N. Y. 629, 47 N. E. 894, 44 L. R. A. 420; People v. Pettit, 74 N. Y. 320].

However, a prosecution of a husband as a disorderly person in refusing to support wife is not barred by his offer to try to support the wife. People v. Du Bois, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 895. And it is no defense to a prosecution for non-support that the husband left the wife, to give his services to his father, hoping thereby to succeed to his father's home on the latter's death. People v. Malsch, 119 Mich. 112, 77 N. W. 638, 75 Am. St. Rep. 381.

Earning capacity of husband.—The words "being of sufficient ability," as used in Wis. Laws (1885), c. 422, § 2, refer as well to the husband's capacity to earn wages or salary as to property actually owned by him. State v. Witham, 70 Wis. 473, 35 N. W. 934.

Offer by wife to return.—Notwithstanding a wife deserts her husband, intending not to return, the law allows her two years to repent; and if within that time she offers to return and is repelled, the husband may be prosecuted for neglect to support her. Com. v. Boetcher, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 544. And see People v. Vitan, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 909, 8 N. Y. Cr. 25.

The fact that the wife had formerly abandoned the husband is no defense. Bell v. People, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 302.

If the wife is justified in leaving the husband, she may prosecute him for abandonment. People v. Walsh, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 345; Com. v. Monroe, 9 Kulp. (Pa.) 369.

What justifies wife in leaving husband.—Where the charge consists, not in the husband's having actually left his wife, but in having forced her to withdraw from his house by means of cruel and barbarous treatment endangering her life, or of such indignities to her person as to render her condition intolerable and her life burdensome, the facts must be such as would entitle the wife to a divorce. Com. v. Wylukus, 8 Kulp (Pa.) 137. Compare Com. v. Ham, 156 Mass. 485, 31 N. E. 639.

Failure to keep agreement for wife's board.—Foster v. People, 101 Ill. App. 84.

Good faith of offer.—An offer made by the husband by letter to furnish the wife transportation to the place where he is working and support her there does not relieve him of liability for abandonment where it does not name the place where he is at work. People v. Harris, 60 Hun (N. Y.) 581, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 830.

20. State v. Maher, 77 Mo. App. 401, holding that where a husband earns sixty dollars a month, and pays thirty dollars a month for the support of his aged and indigent father and family, an offer to pay ten dollars a month to the wife is a reasonable one.

The causes which justify a man in deserting his wife and failing to provide for her support must be such as would warrant a divorce. Sterling v. Com., 2 Grant (Pa.) 162; Com. v. Porter, 4 Pa. Dist. 503. And see State v. Macklin, 86 Mo. App. 636.

Estoppel to assert good cause for abandonment.—The fact that the husband, at the time he abandoned the wife, stated that he did so because she was unfaithful does not and in other public offenses there must be present not only the wrongful act of the defendant but also a criminal intent.²⁴

C. Defenses.²⁵ Adultery of the wife prior to the abandonment is a defense to a prosecution for the husband's failure to support;²⁶ but the pendency of a suit for divorce by the husband is no defense.²⁷ Neither is it a defense that the wife's motion for temporary alimony, made in a divorce suit instituted by the husband, was denied.²⁸

D. Jurisdiction and Venue.²⁹ Ordinarily the desertion must take place within the state to give the courts thereof jurisdiction to try the offense.³⁰ In some states the prosecution must be instituted in a court having a clerk.³¹ The jurisdiction of a police justice to try the offense is not ousted by the husband's denial of the marriage;³² but a conviction obtained before a magistrate in one borough while the same charge is pending before a magistrate in another borough is invalid.³³ In some states the prosecution can be maintained only where the desertion was within the county.³⁴

E. Indictment, Information,³⁵ or Complaint. Generally, in charging the preclude him from assigning on the trial another good cause for leaving her. State v. Satchwell, 68 Mo. App. 39.

Validity of statute.—A statute making it a misdemeanor for one without just cause to desert or wilfully neglect to provide for a wife or minor children in destitute circumstances is not void because it fails to define the meaning of the words "without just cause," it being for the court to decide under what circumstances the husband will be excused from performing his legal duties toward his wife or minor children. *State v. Place of offense.—Where an agreement for a separation provided that the husband should pay a certain weekly sum for the support of his wife and child, and afterward he failed to make the payments, he is guilty of neglecting to support his wife and children in the county in which she then resided. *People v. offense, the words of the statute will be sufficient,³⁶ and whether an allegation that the wife is a public charge must be made depends upon the language of the statute.³⁷ An indictment charging abandonment but omitting to charge failure to support may be fatally defective;³⁸ and it may also be necessary to set out the resident township or city of defendant.³⁹ The information must clearly state that abandonment was without due cause,⁴⁰ but an information averring wilful abandonment without good cause need not further charge that defendant separated from his wife against her will;⁴¹ nor need an information by a wife setting forth that her husband abused her so that she was compelled to leave him, and has since failed and refused to contribute anything to her support, allege an actual desertion by the husband.⁴² And a complaint which charges in the language of the statute that defendant neglected and refused to support his wife need not allege that he was married to her.⁴³ Under a statute making it an offense for one to neglect to provide for his wife "or" children, one may be complained of for neglecting to provide for his wife "and" children.⁴⁴ In accordance with the various statutes, the complaint may be made by the wife,⁴⁵ an overseer of the poor,⁴⁶ or any person.⁴⁷

Desertion without provision for support.—An indictment charging desertion of his wife by defendant "without making provision for her comfortable support" does not charge an offense within Ind. Rev. St. (1881) § 2033, as to deserting a wife and leaving her "without provision for comfortable support." State v. Rice, 106 Ind. 139, 5 N. E. 906.

The existence of the marital relation must be proved by the state. State v. Maher, 77 Mo. App. 401. Where defendant admits the marriage, but claims that it was not legal because plaintiff had a husband by a former marriage living, and she admits the former marriage, but alleges that she had obtained a divorce from the former husband, the burden is on her to establish the divorce. Com. v. Isaacs, 3 Pa. Dist. 517, 7 Kulp (Pa.) 304. Evidence of cohabitation of the parties justifies the jury in finding an actual marriage. State v. Schweitzer, 57 Conn. 532, 18 Atl. 787, 6 L. R. A. 125.

The fact of abandonment must be proved by the state. State v. Macklin, 86 Mo. App. 671; State v. Linck, 68 Mo. App. 161. And see State v. Satchwell, 68 Mo. App. 39; State v. Greenup, 30 Mo. App. 299.

The refusal or failure to support the wife must be established by the state. State v. Macklin, 86 Mo. App. 671; State v. Linck, 68 Mo. App. 161; State v. Greenup, 30 Mo. App. 299. And see State v. Satchwell, 68 Mo. App. 39.

defenses.⁵² Any evidence which tends to prove or to disprove these matters is therefore admissible.⁵³ The state must prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt;⁵⁴ but an affirmative defense may be established by a preponderance of the evidence.⁵⁵

H. Trial⁵⁶—1. INSTRUCTIONS. Rules applicable to instructions in criminal cases in general apply in prosecutions for abandonment.⁵⁷

2. VERDICT AND FINDINGS. Where a complaint under a statute making the failure to support wife "or" children an offense charges a failure to support wife "and" children, a verdict of guilty as charged is not vitiated by a special finding that defendant is not guilty as to the wife but guilty as to the children.⁵⁸ But judgment cannot be rendered on a general verdict of guilty, where the jury specially find that defendant is and for four months last past has been sufficiently sup-

401; State v. Doyle, 68 Mo. App. 219; State v. Linck, 68 Mo. App. 161; State v. Satchwell, 68 Mo. App. 39; State v. Greenup, 30 Mo. App. 299.

That the wife is a burden on the public is required to be shown by the prosecution in some states. People v. Walsh, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 292. In Alabama it need not be shown that the danger of defendant's wife and child becoming a burden to the public is imminent, but only that they will probably become such a burden within a reasonable time and in the ordinary course of events. Carney v. State, 84 Ala. 7, 4 So. 285.

52. State v. Schweitzer, 57 Conn. 532, 18 Atl. 787, 6 L. R. A. 125.

53. People v. Karlsioe, 1 N. Y. App. Div. 571, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 481, holding that defendant may show his financial condition.

To prove the marriage of the parties the marriage certificate is admissible as original evidence. So the marriage may be proved by the testimony of the wife or by that of any competent persons who witnessed it. Defendant's acknowledgment of the fact of marriage is admissible against him; and evidence of cohabitation is also admissible as tending to prove marriage. State v. Schweitzer, 57 Conn. 532, 18 Atl. 787, 6 L. R. A. 125.

Willingness to provide for wife.—Evidence that defendant had rented a house for prosecutrix which she refused to occupy is admissible in his behalf. State v. White, 45 Mo. 512. Defendant having testified that he was always willing to support them, it was competent to show on cross-examination that he caused a notice to be published in a local newspaper warning the public that he would not be responsible for debts contracted by his wife. Jenness v. State, 103 Wis. 553, 79 N. W. 759.

The record of a divorce proceeding brought by the husband against the wife before the prosecution was commenced and afterward dismissed by him, wherein he charged her with infidelity, was competent to show his animus and purpose in abandoning her. State v. Wonderly, 17 Mo. App. 597. So it is competent to introduce in evidence that accused, on an ex parte hearing for divorce from his wife on the ground that she was guilty of such indignities as rendered his condition intolerable, was denied a decree, as tending to prove his intention to get rid of her entirely, instead of to support her, as he testified he always meant to do. State v. Hendrix, 87 Mo. App. 17. The record of a divorce suit instituted by defendant against prosecutrix after the abandonment in which he obtained a decree is properly excluded, where it does not appear that the divorce was granted for cause antedating the abandonment. Hall v. State, 100 Ala. 86, 14 So. 867.

Irrelevancy.—Where the abandonment is admitted or fully proved by direct evidence, it is error to admit evidence that defendant had seduced prosecutrix under promise of marriage and married her only after the institution of the prosecution therefor. State v. Wonderly, 17 Mo. App. 597. So the prosecution should not be permitted to show improper acts of accused with women before the alleged desertion took place and in no way connected therewith. Cuthbertson v. State, (Nebr. 1904) 101 N. W. 1031.

54. Stanley v. People, 104 Ill. App. 294; State v. Maher, 77 Mo. App. 401; State v. Doyle, 68 Mo. App. 219.

55. State v. Schweitzer, 57 Conn. 532, 18 Atl. 787, 6 L. R. A. 125, holding that it is not necessary that the defense of adultery be proved beyond a reasonable doubt but that it may be established by a preponderance of evidence as in civil cases.

56. See, generally, CRIMINAL LAW.

57. State v. Vollenweider, 94 Mo. App. 158, 67 S. W. 942 (holding that an instruction need not define the word "cohabit"); State v. Greenup, 30 Mo. App. 299 (holding that an instruction that requests or persuasions employed by defendant to get his wife to come to him constitute no defense if the jury believe that they were mere artifices to shield himself is error, where there is no evidence of any artifice or any covering of a secret purpose on defendant's part); State v. Wonderly, 17 Mo. App. 597 (holding that where the abandonment is admitted or fully proved by direct evidence, and testimony is given by a state's witness, without design on the part of the prosecution, that defendant had seduced prosecutrix before their marriage, the court should warn the jury against considering the seduction in determining the punishment).

58. State v. Sutcliffe, 18 R. I. 53, 25 Atl. 654, since the offense consists in failure to support either wife or children.

porting the wife.⁵⁹ In New Jersey, where the overseer of the poor complains that a husband wilfully refuses or neglects to provide for his family, the justice, or the sessions on appeal, must first decide, either by their own determination or by the verdict of a jury when demanded, that the husband is guilty of the matters charged in the complaint before they can adjudge him a disorderly person or direct him to pay money for his family's support.⁶⁰

I. Judgment or Order and Enforcement Thereof.⁶¹ The judgment on conviction is generally in the form of an order directing defendant to pay a certain sum for the support of the wife.⁶² The modification of such an order, either by increase or decrease, or in a proper case for discontinuance altogether is within the discretion of the court.⁶³ For the purpose of enforcing such order, the statutes sometimes provide that a bond with sureties shall be given,⁶⁴ or they may subject defendant to arrest and commitment to jail on his failure to comply with the order.⁶⁵ The statutes sometimes provide also for a fine or imprisonment as a penalty for the offense,⁶⁶ and sometimes require a bond for future good behavior.⁶⁷

J. Review.⁶⁸ Judgments or orders in proceedings against a husband for the abandonment of the wife may be reviewed in accordance with the local law.⁶⁹

A bond to provide for a "family" is invalid where a wife only has been abandoned, under a statute providing that a man who abandons his wife or children may be compelled to give bond that he will pay for the support of the wife or children or either of them. People v. Sagazei, 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 727, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 701.

The bond is void if for more than the sum specified in the order. Kings County v. Hammill, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 348.

Defenses in action on bond.—In an action on a recognizance in a desertion case, any defense available between private persons may be pleaded thereto. Com. v. Fields, 3 Lack. Jir. (Pa.) 111.

Adultery of the wife after the husband's conviction is no defense in an action on the bond to recover defaulted payments. Keller v. Foleton, 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 534, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 951. And see supra, VIII, C.

Estoppel of sureties to deny marriage.—A surety on an undertaking given on a conviction of a husband for abandoning his wife under N. Y. Laws (1871), c. 395, cannot deny that complainant was the principal's wife (Kings County v. O'Rourke, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 349); but this defense is available to the sureties in an action on a recognizance taken on conviction of defendant of being a disorderly person for neglect to provide for his wife under 1 N. Y. Rev. St. 638, § 9 (Duffy v. People, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 75 [reversing 1 Hill 355]).

A writ of error does not lie in proceeding by wife against husband for desertion. Barnes' Appeal, 2 Pennyp. (Pa.) 506.

To what court appeal should be made.—People v. Hinsdale, 29 N. Y. App. Div. 364, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 425.

Questions reviewable.—As no appeal lies from an order for support of a wife in a desertion case under Pa. Act, April 13, 1867 (Pamphl. Laws 78), except an appeal under the act of May 9, 1899 (Pamphl. Laws 158), which is only a common-law certiorari, the question whether an agreement of separation executed by the parties is a bar to the proceeding is not reviewable. Com. v. Smith, 200 Pa. St. 363, 49 Atl. 981. And see Com. v. Mills, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 549 (holding that the appellate court can pass on nothing but the regularity of the proceedings below); Com. v. Rogers, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 461.

K. Costs.⁷⁰ Costs in prosecution for abandonment are usually governed by statute.⁷¹

IX. ENTICING AND ALIENATING.

A. Husband's Right of Action.⁷² Against one who entices away or alienates the affections of the wife, the husband may maintain an action for damages;⁷³ and where a wife is not justified in abandoning her husband, he who knowingly and intentionally assists her in thus violating her duty is guilty of a wrong for which an action will lie.⁷⁴ This right of action is not based upon the loss of service in consequence of the wrongful act, but upon the loss of the conjugal society or consortium of the wife,⁷⁵ and a pecuniary loss is not a necessary element of the right of action.⁷⁶ It is not necessary to a recovery that the wife be actually debauched or seduced,⁷⁷ or that there be a physical separation of the spouses.⁷⁸

B. Wife's Right of Action.⁷⁹ At common law, by the weight of authority, the wife cannot maintain an action for the alienation of the husband's affections,⁸⁰ or for the consequent loss of his society.⁸¹ Among reasons given for this position is the wife's lack of any property right in the affections and companionship of her husband,⁸² and her incapacity to sue alone, since the husband should not be permitted to join with her in redress for a wrong in which he was a participant.⁸³ It has, however, been contended that with respect to conjugal society and affection the husband owes to the wife all that she owes to him, and that upon principle the wife's right is a property right as valuable to her as is the husband's right to him.⁸⁴ Be this as it may, under the authority of modern statutes enabling married women to sue generally and securing to them separate property rights, the wife may sue for the alienation of the affections of the husband and the loss of his society,⁸⁵ although it has been held that statutes giving limited property and contractual rights to the wife do not authorize the maintenance of such action by her.⁸⁶ Loss of the husband's services is not essential to sustain an action by the wife against a third person for enticing away the husband and depriving her of the comfort of his society;⁸⁷ and the fact that the damages recovered by the wife might be community property does not affect her right of action.⁸⁸

C. Persons Liable.⁸⁹ Although from the nature of things the majority of actions for alienation of affections are brought against a defendant of the same sex as plaintiff, yet inasmuch as the gist of the action is the loss of consortium and not the transferring of the affections to another, the action may be brought against any person who may be liable in tort.⁹⁰ Thus the husband may sue a woman,⁹¹ and the wife may sue a man.⁹² The husband may sue his wife's parents jointly,⁹³ or her father⁹⁴ or mother.⁹⁵ So the wife may sue her parents in law,⁹⁶ or either of them.⁹⁷

D. Defenses—1. IN GENERAL.⁹⁸ Defendant is not liable if the acts complained of did not alienate the affections of plaintiff's spouse or cause the separation;⁹⁹ and the consent of the husband to the act complained of is a defense.¹ Parents, however, are not justified in disrupting a marriage entered into by their minor son because he entered into it without their consent and against their wishes;² and since a marriage by a woman under the age of sixteen without the consent of her father becomes irrevocable by cohabitation after that age, if the mother subsequently induces her to leave her husband solely from motives of ill-will toward him, the father is liable to the husband.³ A recovery in an action of trespass for taking away plaintiff's wife is a bar to a recovery in an action on the case for enticing her away.⁴

2. COUNSELING SEPARATION OR HARBORING WIFE IN GOOD FAITH.⁵ Parents may, in good faith, promoted by sincere desire to promote the welfare and happiness of their children, advise them as to their domestic affairs;⁶ and a parent may lawfully harbor and protect his married daughter when seeking his home to avoid the ill-treatment of her husband.⁷ Consequently when such shelter is afforded, or when parental advice is honestly given under such motives, it is a defense to an action by the husband for the alienation of the wife's affections.⁸ This rule applies also in favor of other near relatives of plaintiff's spouse,⁹ and also in favor of such spouse's guardian.¹⁰ The privilege accorded to parents, relatives, and guardians of a spouse in their communications and conduct with reference to the marital relation does not exist in favor of strangers.¹¹ In the former case advice which may lead to a separation is presumed to have been given in good faith,¹² but in case of a stranger malice is presumed.¹³ A parent may of course be guilty of wrongfully alienating the affections of his child,¹⁴ but only where he does so maliciously.¹⁵ A stranger, on the other hand, may in good faith, acting from humanity or hospitality, receive the wife of another within his home, without being guilty of harboring or enticing her,¹⁶ and defendant may show that in aiding the separation he acted honestly, intending only to befriend both husband and wife.¹⁷ And any person, whether relative of the wife or not, if he acts in good faith, is justified in aiding her to leave her husband's home or in harboring her, where she asks assistance on the ground of ill-treatment by the husband.¹⁸

3. DIVORCE OR SEPARATION AGREEMENT. Where the wife's right to sue is recognized, she may maintain her action, although she has subsequently obtained a divorce from her husband;¹⁹ and the husband may likewise recover for alienation of his wife's affections in a proper case although she has obtained a divorce.²⁰ A separation agreement between husband and wife is no defense to an action for alienating the husband's affections.²¹

4. OTHER CAUSES CONTRIBUTING WITH DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT. It is not necessary in order to confer a right of action that defendant's conduct be the sole cause of the alienation or separation; it is sufficient if his conduct was the controlling cause.²²

5. TRANSFERENCE OF AFFECTIONS OR SEPARATION AS VOLUNTARY ACT OF SPOUSE.²³ That a spouse voluntarily gives his or her affections to another, the latter doing nothing wrongfully to win such affections, is no ground for action;²⁴ and where a wife voluntarily remained at her father's house, there being no evidence of compulsion or solicitation, or of language on the father's part that the husband's misconduct did not merit, the latter had no action.²⁵

E. Damages²⁶—1. IN ACTION BY HUSBAND. In an action for alienating the wife's affections, the husband may recover the value of her services and the loss of her society, affections, and assistance, less the value of the performance of his duty to support, clothe, and care for her,²⁷ although the value of her services and

Decree of separation prior to alienation.—A wife may recover for loss of conjugal society and support incurred subsequently to a decree of separation granted her, where the decree was sought only by reason of her inability to find her husband and the need of enforcing a provision for her support, the wrongful acts of defendants having caused him to desert her. *Wilson v. Res judicata.—Defendant in a divorce suit who makes a bona fide defense but fails to charge adultery is not barred from maintaining an action against a third person for alienating his wife's affections, based on acts prior to the divorce suit; and a decision of the supreme court reversing a judgment denying a divorce, holding that the evidence showed plaintiff entitled to a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, had no effect on an action subsequently brought by defendant against a third person for the alienation of his wife's affections, where it was tried before the decision was rendered. *Knickerbocker v. Where, however, by articles of separation, the wife, for a stipulated consideration, releases the husband from all obligations of support, it precludes her from recovering damages for the loss of her support from one whose conduct with the husband had led to the separation. Metcalf v. Tiffany, 106 Mich. 504, 64 N. W. 479. Alienation of affections aggravates the damages to which a husband is entitled for consort, and not the value of her services merely, is the true measure of damages.²³ Plaintiff may also recover for the wrong and injury done to his feelings and character,²⁰ and for the disgrace and humiliation brought upon him.³⁰ Matters cannot be urged in aggravation of damages which are not the natural and probable consequences of the act of defendant in enticing the wife away and which are not due to defendant's negligence in connection therewith.³¹ Exemplary or punitive damages may also be awarded, based on the wilful, aggravated, or malicious character of the offense.³² Malice must be proved to warrant exemplary damages,³³ but not to warrant compensatory damages.³⁴ The amount of damages depends upon the circumstances of the particular case.³⁵

2. IN ACTION BY WIFE. The wife may recover as damages the value of her support and loss of consortium;³⁶ and also for mental anguish and injury to her feelings,³⁷ and for injury to her character.³³ It has been held that the rank and condition of defendant cannot be considered in assessing damages.³⁹ Exemplary damages may also be allowed where malice is shown.⁴⁰ The amount of damages depends upon the circumstances of the particular case.⁴¹

G. Procedure⁴⁴—1. PARTIES⁴⁵ The capacity of a wife to sue in her own name for alienation of her husband's affections and the loss of her society has been considered in another connection.⁴⁶ Where one's parents by threats and inducements separate him from his wife, although each does not participate in all the acts of the other, the injury is joint and they may be sued together.⁴⁷

2. PLEADING⁴⁸—a. General Rules. The complaint or declaration for alienation of affections or enticement must set forth the essential elements of the cause of action.⁴⁹ A statement of the ultimate facts of the alienation is, however, sufficient without pleading the acts done or the arts used to accomplish the purpose.⁵⁰ Under some circumstances the complaint should allege that defendant's acts were done maliciously.⁵¹ A motion to require a pleading to be made more definite and certain will be granted in a proper case.⁵² Defendant is not entitled to a bill of particulars where the complaint alleges only a continued depreciation by defendant to the husband of plaintiff as a wife.⁵³

b. Pleading and Proof. A parent if relying on the defense of parental advice honestly given must plead it.⁵⁴ So if respondent in an action for enticing, harboring, and debauching plaintiff's wife justifies on the ground of the husband's ill-treatment of her, he must plead that defense.⁵⁵ Where a complaint alleges a conspiracy of two defendants to entice plaintiff's wife away, but the conspiracy is not the gist of the wrong, a recovery may be had against one defendant, although no conspiracy or cause of action against the other is proven.⁵⁶ Where the court orders plaintiff to serve a bill of particulars stating the particular times and places when he expects to prove that defendant had sexual intercourse with his wife, and he complies only in part, it is proper to preclude him from offering evidence as to times and places other than those stated in the bill.⁵⁷

Possession of spouse's affections.—If the averments of the complaint clearly imply that plaintiff enjoyed the society and support of her husband, it is not vitiated by the want of a positive averment that she possessed his affections, in the absence of a demurrer. Bowersox v. Bowersox, 115 Mich. 24, 72 N. W. 986.

Time of defendant's enticements.—Although the complaint should state with some certainty during what period of time the enticements of defendant were brought to bear on plaintiff's spouse, yet its failure to do so, although a special demurrer is interposed, is not ground for dismissing the action without leave to amend. Humphrey v. Pope, 122 Cal. 253, 5 Pac. 847.

51. Reed v. Reed, 6 Ind. App. 317, 33 N. E. 638, 51 Am. St. Rep. 310, action against parent-in-law.

3. EVIDENCE⁵⁸ — a. In General. In an action for harboring plaintiff's wife after defendant was notified by plaintiff not to do so, the burden of showing justification is not on defendant;⁵⁹ but in an action for enticing, harboring, and debauching a wife, if defendant justifies on the ground of the husband's ill-treatment of her, the burden is on defendant to prove that defense.⁶⁰ In the absence of contrary evidence, the affection of the husband for the wife will be presumed.⁶¹ The admissibility of evidence in actions for alienation of affections or enticing away⁶² and its weight and sufficiency⁶³ are governed by the rules that apply in civil actions generally.

b. Admissions and Declarations. Declarations made by the wife to third persons previous to the alienation of her affections are admissible to show the state of her feelings toward plaintiff and defendant.⁶⁴ Declarations made by her immediately before and at the time of leaving plaintiff respecting his ill-treatment are also admissible.⁶⁵ Conversations between plaintiff's husband and his father and between his father and plaintiff's mother while plaintiff and her husband were living with defendants is admissible to explain the relations of the parties and their motives for their actions.⁶⁶ Declarations of the husband, although not a party, as to his estrangement are competent to show the effect of the wrongful interference of defendant and the attempt to induce a separation.⁶⁷ Statements made by plaintiff may also be proved for the purpose of showing unworthy motives in contracting the marriage.⁶⁸ Conversations, however, between plaintiff and defendant subsequent to the desertion of plaintiff by her husband are not admissible, except as admissions, in order to show that the desertion was caused by defendant's wrongful conduct;⁶⁹ and evidence of complaints by plaintiff as to defendant's conduct with plaintiff's wife, made in the absence of defendant, are inadmissible.⁷⁰

c. Conduct. The conduct of the parties, either of the spouses or of the alleged guilty pair, may be shown as tending to establish or to disprove the fact of alienated affections and defendant's enticement;⁷¹ and in an action by the husband evidence of his ill-treatment of the wife is material in defense as showing the cause of her leaving his home.⁷² In an action by the husband, his neglect of or lack of affection for the wife may also be shown in mitigation of damages;⁷³ and in an action by the wife, the husband's criminal intimacy with other women than defendant during the period of her illicit relations with him may be shown for the same purpose.⁷⁴

d. Letters. Letters passing between husband and wife prior to accrual of the cause of action may be admitted to show the conjugal affection existing between them previous to the alienation complained of;⁷⁵ and letters of love and affection from defendant to the husband or wife of plaintiff are proper evidence to show the character of the relation between them and to establish the fact of alienation.⁷⁶ A letter from plaintiff's wife to defendant inviting him to call on her is admissible to explain his subsequent visit to her.⁷⁷

4. TRIAL⁷⁸ AND REVIEW.⁷⁹ Instructions in actions for alienation of affections or enticement are governed by the rules applicable in civil actions in general.⁸⁰ Statements made by the physician who attended plaintiff's wife should not be withdrawn from the jury where they tend to show, in connection with other testimony, that her mental depression and ill-health were the result of her husband's indifference and inattention to her.⁸¹ To support a judgment for plaintiff, it is not necessary that a special verdict should show the nature of the statements made by defendant to plaintiff's spouse to alienate his or her affections.⁸² A judgment for alienating a wife's affections and persuading her to leave her husband will not be set aside because they become reunited pending the appeal.⁸³

X. CRIMINAL CONVERSATION.

A. Husband's Right of Action. For criminal conversation,⁸⁴ or sexual intercourse with one's wife, the husband has at common law a right of action in tort against the paramour,⁸⁵ and this right of action is not affected by the married woman's acts, so called.⁸⁶ Although most of the cases are connected with the seduction of the wife, yet the husband has his action even against one who has Thompson*, 123 Iowa 717, 99 N. Worthing*, (Mich. 1904) 101 N. W. 540 (holding that charge that plaintiff must prove: (1) An adulterous disposition on defendant's part toward plaintiff's wife; (2) an adulterous disposition on her part toward defendant; and (3) an opportunity for the gratification of this adulterous disposition was properly refused, as ignoring testimony almost directly proving adulterous intercourse, and as calculated to lead the jury to understand that the various elements must be established by distinct and segregated testimony; and that a charge that mere opportunity to commit adultery is not sufficient to establish the offense, but that there must be evidence of such facts, circumstances, times, and places of association as naturally to lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to the conclusion that the parties were having illicit sexual intercourse sufficiently embraced the element of disposition to commit adultery); Zimmerman v. Whiteley, 134 Mich. 39, 95 N. W. 989 (holding that instructions that defendant acted maliciously and was actuated by malice were not erroneous as using the word "malice" as synonymous with "spite" and "unprovoked," where in an oral charge it was stated that if defendant separated plaintiff from his wife, and did so wrongfully and from bad motives, then plaintiff was entitled to a verdict, and that the burden was on plaintiff to intercourse with her without her consent.⁸⁷ As in the alienation of the wife's affections, the law bases the injury upon the husband's loss of consortium.⁸⁸

B. Wife's Right of Action. The wife has no common-law right of action in the nature of criminal conversation against a woman who has had intercourse with the husband,⁸⁹ but it is sometimes given by statute.⁹⁰

C. Defenses⁹¹—1. IN GENERAL. It is no defense to an action for criminal conversation that defendant did not know that plaintiff's wife was a married woman;⁹² nor is unchastity of the wife a defense.⁹³ A judgment for enticing the wife away is not a bar to an action for debauching her,⁹⁴ nor does a recovery against one adulterer bar an action against another.⁹⁵

2. CONDONATION.⁹⁶ The fact that the husband forgives or condones the wife's offense and cohabits with her after knowledge of her infidelity is no defense, the defense of condonation in divorce not applying here.⁹⁷

3. CONSENT OR CONNIVANCE OF HUSBAND.⁹⁸ If the husband consents to or connives at the wrong, he cannot maintain an action for criminal conversation.⁹⁹

87. Bigaoutte v. Paulet, 134 Mass. 123, 45 Am. Rep. 307 (holding that a husband may maintain the action, although the conversation was without the wife's consent, and caused no actual loss of her service to him); *Egbert v. However, it has been held that the fact that the spouses are living apart (see infra, X, C, 7), or that the husband also is guilty of misconduct (see infra, X, C, 6) does not bar the right of action.

Permitting wife to live as a prostitute.—It is not always necessary to show that the husband connived at the particular acts of adultery charged; if he suffered his wife to live as a prostitute, he has no right of action. Cook v. Wood, 30 Ga. 891, 76 Am. Dec. 677. However, connivance by the husband is a defense even though he does not permit the wife to live as a prostitute. Lowe v. Massey, 62 Ill. 47.

Leaving open opportunities for the wrong.—It is no defense that the husband, suspecting his wife or knowing her to have been guilty, left open opportunities for the wrong complained of, so long as he did not make new opportunities or invite the wrong. Puth v. Zimbleman, 99 Iowa 641, 68 N. W. 895; Lee v. Hammond, 114 Wis. 550, 90 N. W. 1073. See, however, Silvernali v. Westerman, 11 Luz. Leg. Reg. (Pa.) 5.

4. CONSENT OF WIFE. The fact that the wife consented to the act does not defeat the husband's right of action.¹

5. DEATH² OF WIFE. The subsequent death of the wife does not divest the husband of his right of action.³

6. MARITAL MISCONDUCT OF HUSBAND. The fact that the husband was dissolute and unfaithful to the wife is no defense.⁴

7. SEPARATION OR DIVORCE. It has been held that the husband may recover, although he is living apart from his wife;⁵ but where the spouses are living apart under articles of separation, the consortium being voluntarily relinquished, it has been held that the husband has no right of action.⁶ It is ordinarily no defense that plaintiff and his wife were divorced in the interim between the adultery and the bringing of the suit.⁷

8. LIMITATIONS.⁸ The statute of limitations may be set up in bar as in other cases.⁹

D. Damages¹⁰—1. IN GENERAL. In determining the amount of damages in actions for criminal conversation, the jury may consider the social relations of the parties, the apparent affection of the spouses, the misconduct of defendant, and ant is no defense. Sanborn v. Neilson, 4 N. H. 501. And see Cook v. Wood, 30 Ga. 891, 76 Am. Dec. 677. Connivance at intimacy with other men as mitigating damages see infra, X, D, 2.

The fact that plaintiff's wife had been intimate with other men before meeting defendant does not show plaintiff's connivance at defendant's acts, where it is not shown that plaintiff ever knew of such prior intimacy. Smith v. Hoekenberry, (Mich. 1904) 101 N. W. 207.

Connivance at or consent to future misconduct is no defense to an action for past offenses. Brown v. Spaulding, 63 N. H. 622, 4 Atl. 394.

1. Yundt v. Hartrunft, 41 Ill. 9 (since the wrong relates to the injury which the husband sustains by the dishonor of his bed, the alienation of the wife's affections, the destruction of his domestic comfort, and the suspicion cast upon the legitimacy of her offspring); Moore v. Hammons, 119 Ind. 510, 21 N. E. 1111; Wales v. Miner, 89 Ind. 118; Sieber v. Pettit, 200 Pa. St. 58, 49 Atl. 763 (so holding, although the wife was equally guilty with defendant).

ground on which damages may be assessed against a co-respondent, but that a man is wronged by the seduction of his wife far beyond the loss which he sustains by the breaking up of his home); Izard v. Izard, 14 P. D. 45, 58 L. J. P. 83, 60 L. T. Rep. N. S. 399, 37 Wkly. Rep. 496.

It has been held, however, that loss of consortium is the sole ground of action. See cases cited supra, X, A; infra, note 6.

Separating for other cause than seduction or alienation of affections.—If plaintiff separates from his wife for any other cause than the seduction or the alienation of the affections of his wife by defendant, he cannot recover damages. Silvernall v. Westerman, 11 Luz. Leg. Reg. (Pa.) 5.

King*, 27 Ont. App. 703.

the pecuniary situation of the parties.¹¹ The husband may recover for the loss of the wife's affections, society, and services,¹² and for the mental anguish and disgrace he has sustained.¹³ Owing to the very nature of the offense, punitive or exemplary damages are recoverable.¹⁴

2. MITIGATION OF DAMAGES. The jury may consider in mitigation of damages the facts that defendant did not know that the wife was a married woman,¹⁵ that the husband had connived at her intimacy with other men,¹⁶ that the wife and defendant were equally guilty,¹⁷ that the wife was of unchaste character,¹⁸ and that her fall was due to her own licentiousness;¹⁹ and also that the husband has been false to the wife.²⁰

E. Procedure²¹ — 1. FORM OF ACTION.²² For criminal conversation the husband may recover either in trespass²³ or in case.²⁴ In England, however, actions for criminal conversation are abolished, and the seducer may be made a co-respondent in divorce proceedings and damages recovered against him in the same action.²⁵

2. PLEADING²⁶ — a. General Rules. The declaration, petition, or complaint in an action for criminal conversation must allege that the woman was the wife of plaintiff at the time of the alleged wrong.²⁷ Every particular act of adultery need not be set forth, but the time of the alleged wrongful act may be laid with a continuendo;²⁸ nor need the means by which the seduction was accomplished be set forth.²⁹ Allegations charging an abduction may be treated as surplusage in a proper case.³⁰ The court may in its discretion compel plaintiff to furnish a bill of particulars, but a refusal to do so cannot be assigned for error.³¹

b. Pleading and Proof. A plea of not guilty does not put the marriage of plaintiff and his alleged wife in issue.³² Proof of adultery is not confined to the precise time³³ or place³⁴ alleged in the complaint. If relied on in defense, plaintiff's consent and connivance must be specially pleaded;³⁵ but unchastity of plaintiff and his wife need not ordinarily be pleaded in order to prove it in mitigation of damages.³⁶

3. EVIDENCE³⁷—a. In General. Declarations made by the wife after the adultery which tend to show the husband's connivance thereat are not ordinarily admissible against him in the absence of a conspiracy between the spouses.³⁸ The relation of a husband to his wife after her criminal conversation with his knowledge may be considered as bearing on his connivance;³⁹ but the fact that when plaintiff was informed of the improper relation between his wife and defendant he made little remark and continued to live with her is not evidence that he consented to such relation.⁴⁰

b. As to Marriage. In actions for criminal conversation, the marriage must be strictly proved; and evidence of mere reputation and cohabitation is not enough.⁴¹

c. As to Criminal Conversation. The fact of the criminal conversation must of course be proved;⁴² but the adultery may be established by circumstantial evidence,⁴³ and in such instances what must be shown may be briefly summarized as opportunity for the act, and an adulterous disposition in the mind of both the wife and defendant.⁴⁴ Evidence of any facts which legally tend to prove the illicit relations is proper.⁴⁵ Thus letters between defendant and plaintiff's wife tending to show their criminal intimacy are admissible.⁴⁶ However, confessions or statements of the wife relative to the guilt or innocence of defendant are not admissible either against him⁴⁷ or in his favor;⁴⁸ and declarations of third persons are not as a rule admissible against defendant.⁴⁹ Plaintiff is entitled to recover on a preponderance of evidence.⁵⁰

d. As to Damages—(i) IN GENERAL. It is not necessary, to support an action for criminal conversation, for plaintiff to show that he suffered any pecuniary damage from the loss of his wife's company and of her services, since this will be presumed.⁵¹ The burden of showing that defendant knew that the wife was a married woman is cast on plaintiff, and in the absence of evidence the jury should assume that defendant had no reason for believing that the wife was other than a single woman, and should mitigate the damages accordingly.⁵² As bearing on the question of damages, evidence of the relations existing between the spouses before the adultery was committed and the terms upon which they lived is admissible in behalf of the husband;⁵³ and where the intercourse was forcibly obtained, he may

So in an action for criminal conversation with plaintiff's wife at a time named within the statutory period of limitation, evidence of prior acts of adulterous intercourse upon which the statute has run is admissible to show the intimate relations of the parties, and to corroborate the evidence introduced to establish the illicit act upon which a recovery is sought. *Conway v. XI. COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

A. Nature of System and General Considerations — 1. NATURE OF SYSTEM. The general principle underlying the system of community property which prevails in some of the southwestern and Pacific states of this country is that all property acquired, during marriage, by the industry and labor of either the husband or the wife, or both, together with the produce and increase thereof, belongs beneficially to both during the continuance of the marital relation.⁷³

2. WHERE SYSTEM OBTAINS. The system of community property is established by statute in Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, New Mexico, Nevada, Texas, Washington,⁷⁴ and in Porto Rico,⁷⁵ the province of Quebec,⁷⁶ Mexico⁷⁷ and in Prejudicial error.—Evidence of a conversation between plaintiff's wife and her father-in-law in which she refused to comply with his request that she discontinue her interviews with defendant was apt to lead the jury to infer that unless her relations with defendant were meretricious she would have been willing to terminate them, and hence its erroneous admission was not harmless. *Billings v. Acquets and gains.—By the law of Louisiana, where there is no stipulation to the contrary, the acquets and gains during coverture, or the property jointly acquired by husband and wife, including the profits of property under the control of the husband, the estates which they may acquire, together with the profits and increase of the same, and also the earnings of their labor or business, are made community property. M. 1901) 66 Pac. 539, holding that the Spanish-Mexican law as to community or acquets property became the law of the territory from the time of the cession, and is still in force in so far as the same has not been abrogated or modified by statute.

In Alabama, under the Spanish law in force in a portion of that state previous to its acquisition from France, the husband could make a valid sale of the paraphernal estate of the wife with her consent, and her joining in the deed was evidence of such consent, although it was not executed with the formalities required for a public act. McVoy v. Hallett, 11 Ala. 864.

In Missouri the Spanish law of community between husband and wife relative to their property has not been in force since the taking effect of the territorial act of July 4, 1807, giving dower to the wife in lieu of her interest under the Spanish law. Riddick v. Walsh, 15 Mo. 519. See also Childress v. Cutter, 16 Mo. 24.

some of the countries of western continental Europe, notably Spain⁷³ and France.⁷⁹

3. ORIGIN OF SYSTEM. The notion entertained by some that the doctrine of community property between husband and wife is derived from the Roman law is without any known foundation.⁸⁰ It may, as has been suggested, have taken its rise from some of the Teutonic peoples, and be founded on the theory that the wife by her industry and care contributes, equally with her husband, to the acquisition of property.⁸¹ Having become established in the laws of Spain and France, the system was transplanted by those countries to their American colonies.⁸²

4. MODE OF CREATION. Community property is of two kinds, legal and conventional. The legal community is fixed by law, and regulates the property rights of the husband and wife in the absence of any agreement to the contrary.⁸³ The conventional community is the community resulting from the express agreement of the parties as set forth in the marriage articles.⁸⁴

B. What Law Governs. Where persons are married in one state and thereafter remove into another state where the community system is in force, with the intention of making their residence there, the laws of the latter state will govern the property acquired during their residence in that state.⁸⁵ So the law of the

Not a part of general law.—In Morales v. Marigny, 14 La. Ann. 855, it was held that the community of acquets and gains between husband and wife did not exist as a part of the general law of Spain, it prevailing in certain provinces in the kingdom, and not in others.

Existence of community without stipulation.—In Bruneau v. Bruneau, 9 Mart. (La.) 217, it was held that by the Spanish law, as under the civil code, a community existed without being stipulated.

Property rights under the Roman law.—Under the earlier system of the Roman law, the marriage with manus, all the wife's property passed absolutely to the husband. Under the free marriage of the jus gentium, the doctrine of separate property was strictly applied. Whatever the wife acquired, during marriage, by her labor, by devise, descent, or otherwise, belonged to her alone, and over her property the husband had no control. In short marriage in no way affected the property rights of each. Sohm Inst. Rom. L. § 94.

Property acquired at husband's residence.—A wife is common in goods as to the property acquired by the husband in a state, although she has never resided in that state. Cole v. His Executors, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 41, 18 Am. Dec. 241. See also Jacobson v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., 3 Ida. 126, 28 Pac. 396; McKenna's Succession, 23 La. Ann. 369; Dixon v. Dixon, 4 La. 188, 23 Am. Dec. 478.

Wife's removal from state to educate children.—In Moore v. Thibodeaux, 4 La. Ann. 74, it was held that if a wife, after remaining in a state where her husband was domiciled, removes by his order to another state to rear and educate their children, and does not return, property acquired by him during her absence will be community.

Insufficient evidence of intention of fixing domicile.—That one went to Texas and remained several years, and then went to Massachusetts, thinking he might return to place where, at the time of the marriage, the parties intended to fix the matrimonial domicile governs the rights resulting from such marriage, where the intention is unequivocally ascertained and supported by a subsequent removal to the place contemplated within a reasonable time.⁸⁶ So the general rule seems to be that the community laws are applicable to acquisitions within a community property state, although made by non-resident married persons.⁸⁷ Where, however, property has been acquired outside of a community law state by non-resident married persons it will not become community property merely because of the removal of the husband and wife to a community law state.⁸⁸ A marriage which by the law in force at the time of itself superinduces a community is not affected by a subsequent law abolishing the community.⁸⁹ So a statute prescribing what property shall be separate and what common has been held not to operate

Texas, but thereafter lived in Massachusetts for twenty years without intent to live anywhere else, does not show that he obtained a domicile in Texas, and was temporarily absent therefrom, so that the marital rights as to property acquired in Massachusetts should be governed by the laws of Texas. Blethen v. Bonner, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 585, 71 S. W. 290.

Real property in another state.—The community laws of Louisiana do not operate on real estate in another state or country. Nott v. Nott, 111 La. 1028, 36 So. 109.

Property acquired during migration.—Where property is acquired by a husband or wife in the course of their migration to a community law state, their rights in the property upon taking up residence in the community law state is regulated by the laws of such state. State v. Barrow, 14 Tex. 179, 65 Am. Dec. 109. See also Le Breton v. Nouchet, 3 Mart. (La.) 59, 5 Am. Dec. 736.

The law of the country where the marriage was celebrated, and not where it was dissolved, governs the rights of the parties as to their property, unless there be in the latter an absolute and prohibitive statute, or real one, which must then prevail. Saul v. His Creditors, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 569, 16 Am. Dec. 212.

87. Heidenheimer v. Loring, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 560, 26 S. W. 99 (acquisition of real estate); Gratton v. Weber, 47 Fed. 852 (holding Washington community law applicable to realty within the state acquired by non-resident married persons).

In Louisiana it was held under the Spanish law that the wife, although she never resided in the state, and the marriage was contracted abroad, had half the husband's property acquired in the state. Dixon v. Dixon, 4 La. 188, 23 Am. Dec. 478. After the repeal of the Spanish law in 1828 and before the passage of the act of March 18, 1852, by which the community of acquets was extended, in favor of non-resident married persons, to property in this state thereafter acquired, no such community existed. Waterer's Succession, 25 La. Ann. 210; Leech v. Guild, 15 La. Ann. 349; Armorer v. Case, 9 La. Ann. 288, 61 Am. Dec. 209; Huff v. Borland, 6 La. Ann. 436; McGill's Succession, 6 La. Ann. 327; Cooper v. Cotton, 6

Husband's vested common-law rights in another state.—Where a husband received money belonging to his wife at the time of their marriage, in Tennessee, where they resided, when the common law was in force therein, declaring that marriage operated as a gift from the wife to the husband of all money and personalty held and owned by her at the date of the marriage, and reduced to possession by the husband during the marriage, and they afterward removed to Texas, where he invested the money in land, the land was not community property, but the separate estate of the husband. McDaniel v. Harley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 42 S. W. 323. See also Short v. Short, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 86, 33 S. W. 682; Byars v. Byars, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 565, 32 S. W. 925; Chapman v. Chapman, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 392, 32 S. W. 564.

Marriage articles in another jurisdiction.—Under the Code Napoleon, an antenuptial contract entered into in France, with reference to the community of property to be acquired by the spouses after marriage, gives the husband the right to manage realty owned by the wife at the time of the marriage, and disables the wife from alienating it without his special consent; and therefore such realty, situated in Missouri, is not the wife's separate estate under the Missouri laws. Richardson v. De Giverville, 107 Mo. 422, 17 S. W. 974, 28 Am. St. Rep. 426.

Presumption of ownership.—Where a husband and wife removed with personal property to a community law state from a state where the common law prevails, it will be presumed that the husband is the owner of the property. Martin v. Boler, 13 La. Ann. 369; Penny v. Weston, 4 Rob. (La.) 165; Slocomb v. Breedlove, 8 La. 143, 28 Am. Dec. 135.

retrospectively so as to affect rights to or interests in property previously acquired.⁹⁰

C. Necessity of Valid Marriage. Where a marriage is null and void no community can exist between the parties.⁹¹ Thus in a jurisdiction in which common-law marriage is not recognized property acquired with the earnings of a man and woman who live together and hold themselves out to the world as man and wife is not community property.⁹² Where, however, a marriage has been entered into, by one of the parties, in good faith, it is held in some jurisdictions that such party is entitled to a share of the property acquired by their joint efforts.⁹³

D. Marriage Settlements — 1. VALIDITY. A man and woman, in contemplation of marriage, may, by marriage articles, stipulate that there shall be no community between them, or what the interest of each in the community shall be, or that property brought by them to the marriage shall become a part of the community effects, or may make any other stipulations, provided that such agreements do not violate any prohibitory law.⁹⁴ So it is held that stipulations in Cohabitation without marriage.—That plaintiff, while maintaining illicit relations with deceased, acted as his cook and house-keeper, and sometimes worked on his farm, without receiving specific wages therefor, is insufficient to give her a partnership or community interest in the property acquired by deceased during the continuance of such relations. Harris v. Hobbs, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 367, 54 S. W. 1085.

Cohabitation followed by marriage.—Under the laws of Washington it has been held that property acquired by a man during cohabitation with a woman, whom he afterward marries, is his separate property, and is not affected by the community property law. Hatch v. Ferguson, 57 Fed. 966.

93. McCaffrey v. Benson, 40 La. Ann. 10, 3 So. 393 (holding that under La. Civ. Code, §§ 117, 118, a marriage declared null will have its civil effects as to the parties contracting in good faith, among which effects will be included the legal community of acquets and gains which result from a legal marriage, and the community will continue until the decree annulling the marriage); Morgan v. Morgan, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 315, 21 S. W. 154. See also Barry's Succession, 48 La. Ann. 1143, 20 So. 656.

Rights of legal and putative wives.—In Hubbell v. Inkstein, 7 La. Ann. 252, it was held that if a married man, coming into Louisiana, contracts a second marriage, the property which he subsequently acquires will be community property on which both wives will have the same rights as formerly had under the laws of Spain. But in Re Winter, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 131, it was held that where a husband has deserted his wife and married another woman, who does not know that he has a wife living, such marriage cannot be regarded as a partnership, entitling the second wife to claim as a partner a portion of the property accumulated since the marriage, as against the lawful wife. In Routh v. Routh, 57 Tex. 589, it was held that if the husband is induced to leave his wife by her misconduct, she desiring the separation, and marries another woman who is ignorant of his former marriage, and, while living with the latter, acquires property, the community rights of the legal wife to that property are not lost. In Babb v. Carroll, 21 Tex. 765, however, it was held that where a man and woman emigrated to this state in 1835, and from that time to the death of the man, in 1837, lived and cohabited together, and passed themselves and were reputed as husband and wife, lands acquired by the husband as a colonist are community property between them, to the exclusion of a wife elsewhere.

marriage contracts may be altered by the parties jointly before the celebration of the marriage, but not afterward.⁹⁵ Under a statute authorizing husband and wife to alter their legal relations as to property, it has been held that the separate estate of either may by post-nuptial agreement be transmuted into community property.⁹⁶ issue of the marriage his property shall descend to his heirs as if the marriage had never taken place).

Agreement for community held to be in violation of law.—In Landry v. Marchais, 6 La. Ann. 87, it was held that lands brought in marriage by the wife while the Spanish laws were in force remained her separate estate, notwithstanding any agreement by her that it should enter into the community according to the coutume de Paris, which had been abrogated.

Stipulation against a community.—If the marriage contract stipulates that the wife brings in marriage certain property, with the reservation that its appraisal does not transfer it to her husband, but provides that there shall be no community, and that she shall trade and alienate her property as she pleases, and that any part thereof that the husband receives he shall acknowledge by authentic act, the property remains paraphernal. De Young v. De Young, 6 La. Ann. 786.

Agreements for acquets to go to survivor.—In Parquin v. Finch, 1 Mart. N. S. (La.) 465, it was held that a clause in a marriage contract by which the whole acquets are to go to the survivor, if there be no children, is legal.

Donation of money valid without delivery.—A donation of a sum of money at a future time by a marriage contract does not require a delivery; neither is it necessary that it should be in the form of a testament to render it valid. Wood v. Stokes, 13 La. Ann. 143.

Pretense of want of acceptance of donation.—Donations by marriage contract cannot be impeached or declared void on pretense of want of acceptance. Wood v. Stokes, 13 La. Ann. 143.

A conveyance by a mortgagor of his interest in the premises to his intended wife in consideration of marriage and money is valid. Klauber v. Vigneron, (Cal. 1893) 32 Pac. 248.

Restrictions upon donations, under Spanish law.—By the Spanish law, a donation propter nuptias could not exceed one tenth of the donor's property, debts deducted. Mercer v. Andrews, 2 La. 538.

Donation by third party.—A donation propter nuptias to the future wife by another than the husband forms part of the dowry, unless there be a stipulation to the contrary. La. Civ. Code, arts. 2317, 2318; Gates v. Legendre, 10 Rob. (La.) 74.

of the wife was not indefeasible until the marriage was consummated); Gates v. Legendre, 10 Rob. (La.) 74; Flores v. Lemece, 16 La. 271; Union Bank v. Slidell, 11 La. 23; Cable v. Coe, 4 La. 554; Mercer v. Andrews, 2 La. 538.

Time of execution of contract.—The marriage contract must, it has been held, be executed before the celebration of the marriage, but the precise day of its execution is immaterial. Starns v. Hadnot, 45 La. Ann. 318, 12 So. 561.

Form of donation.—Donations inter vivos, although made by marriage contract to a husband or wife or made between married persons by matrimonial agreement have been held to be subject to the general rules as to the forms of donations. Harlin v. Leglise, 3 Rob. (La.) 194; Flores v. Lemece, 16 La. 271. An act passed before a Spanish commandant without the signatures of any witnesses, or mention of any, and signed only by the marks of the parties, which were not proved, has been held to be no evidence of a donation or marriage contract. Placencia v. Placencia, 8 La. 573.

Recording of the marriage contract is sometimes required by statute in order to affect third persons. Dutillet v. Dutillet, 3 Mart. N. S. (La.) 468; Rowel v. Buhler, 3 Mart. N. S. (La.) 348; De Armas v. Hampton, 11 Mart. (La.) 552; Lafarge v. Morgan, 11 Mart. (La.) 462. Compare Youngblood v. Flagg, 11 La. 337; Lott v. Bertrand, 26 Tex. 654.

The contents of a lost or destroyed marriage contract may be proved as in case of other lost instruments. Starns v. Hadnot, 45 La. Ann. 318, 12 So. 561.

Ratification after marriage of unauthorized donation.—Where a person, acting under a power of attorney which did not contain the power to donate, made a donation propter nuptias, which donation was ratified by the principal after marriage had taken place, this act of ratification was not a constitution of dowry after marriage; for every ratification relates back to the time of doing the act or making the contract ratified. Baines v. Burbridge, 15 La. Ann. 628.

Contract made during period intervening between a void and a valid marriage.—The fact that a marriage contract was made subsequent to a void and illegal marriage will not affect its validity, where a subsequent valid marriage took place, prior to and in view of which such marriage contract was executed. Spears v. Shropshire, 11 La. Ann. 559, 66 Am. Dec. 206.

2. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION. The usual rules governing the construction of contracts generally are applicable to marriage settlements in community law states.⁹⁷ If, in construing several articles of a marriage contract, to attach a clause of one article to another article would make the article to which it is attached contradictory, such clause will be applied only to the article in which it is found.⁹⁸ So it has been held that the general rule being that dotal property is not susceptible of hypothecation, it should appear manifestly from the terms of the marriage contract that the right claimed for its exercise in a particular case was expressly reserved.⁹⁹ Unless the property of the wife described in the contract is declared to be given in dower, it will remain paraphernal property.¹ The mere designation in a marriage contract of certain money as dotal property does not, it is held, make it such, unless it comes within the definition of such property in the statute.²

3. WHAT LAW GOVERNS. A marriage settlement valid in the state where made will not as a general rule be affected by the subsequent removal of the parties to another state,³ provided such settlements are not violative of the policy of the state or country whose aid is invoked to carry them into effect.⁴ But it has been laid down as a settled principle of law, in relation to contracts regulating the rights of property consequent upon a marriage, so far at least as personal property is concerned, that if the parties marry with reference to the laws of a particular place or country as their future domicile, the law of that place is to govern as the place where the contract is to be carried into full effect, and this is especially so where the marriage contract in terms refers to the intended domicile of the parties as the place or country by whose laws their rights under the marriage contract are to be determined.⁵ A marriage contract executed by persons domiciled in another jurisdiction will, in so far as it relates to the sale of immovable property, be construed according to the laws of the state where the property is situated.⁶

In Texas it is held that a contract entered into after marriage by which the wife agrees not to claim her interest in community is void. Proetzel v. Schroeder, 83 Tex. 684, 19 S. W. 292; Engleman v. Deal, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 37 S. W. 652. So it is held that while if there are no creditors a husband may bestow upon his wife all the community property they possess, he cannot by agreement surrender all claim to that which the law declares community property and thus withdraw it from the reach of creditors. Green v. Ferguson, 62 Tex. 525; Cox v. Miller, 54 Tex. 16. So it is held that husband and wife cannot alter the legal order of descent in respect to themselves or their children by a contract made in contemplation of marriage and that for a much stronger reason they cannot do so by a contract during marriage. Groesbeck v. Groesbeck, 78 Tex. 664, 14 S. W. 792.

The appointment of a trustee in a marriage settlement at common law is a matter of form, and not of its essence, and a trust under such an appointment will be recognized in a community law state. Sherrod v. Callegan, 9 La. Ann. 510.

Where the parties in their marriage contract agree that the community established by the laws under which they are married shall continue wherever they remove, and they remove to a country by whose laws there is no community, it will continue between them, but not, on the death of one, between the heirs and the survivor. *Murphy v. Under the Spanish law, property, real and personal, acquired by husband or wife during marriage, enters into community, and on the death of the husband one half goes to the wife. Picotte v. Cooley, 10 Mo. 312.

Property held by a husband and wife by adverse possession under an unrecorded tax deed is not acquired, within the statute, defining community property, until the limitation period has run; and the wife, having died before that period, acquired no community interest. *Zafford v. Receipt of property in payment of debt due in separate right.—The community does not embrace property received in payment of a debt due to either the husband or wife in his or her separate right. McIntyre v. Chappell, 4 Tex. 187. See also Spalding v. Godard, 15 La. Ann. 277.

Acquisitions during voluntary separation.—The voluntary separation of husband and wife does not prevent their acquisitions during the period of the separation from falling into the community, under La. Civ. Code, art. 2371. Joffrion v. Bordelon, 14 La. Ann. 618.

Lands held in trust.—A wife acquires no partnership or community interest in lands the title of which is passed to the husband solely in the capacity of trustee—as for instance, lands conveyed to the husband by his parents without consideration, and for the sole purpose of putting the title in the son's name so as to enable him to qualify as surety on his father's postmaster bond. *Crenshaw v. Purchases by either spouse on borrowed money.—As a rule property purchased with money borrowed by either spouse during the existence of the community is community property. Northwestern, etc., Hypothek Bank v. Rauch, 7 Ida. 152, 61 Pac. 516.

Under the Spanish laws, property acquired during marriage by purchase, whether the acquisition be made in the joint names of the husband and wife, or either of them separately, must be considered as common property. Scott v. Maynard, Dall. (Tex.) 548.

b. Property Conveyed to Wife. A conveyance to a married woman, other than by way of gift,¹⁰ and not for a consideration moving from her separate estate,¹¹ will vest title in the community.¹² To make property conveyed upon a consideration her separate estate she must clearly show that it was paid for with her separate funds.¹³ That the wife takes in her own name title to property pur-

Fact of purchase excludes presumption of gift, etc.—Under the statute providing that all property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, except such as may be acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, shall be common property, the fact of purchase excludes the presumption that property was taken by gift, bequest, devise, or descent. Meyer v. Kinzer, 12 Cal. 247, 73 Am. Dec. 538.

A partition decree allotting lands previously purchased by the husband to him and his wife jointly does not change the community character of the property. Cunha v. Hughes, 122 Cal. 111, 54 Pac. 535, 68 Am. St. Rep. 27.

Presumption in favor of the community.—Where a husband during the life of his second wife sold land which he owned during his first marriage and bought the land in controversy, and it did not appear what he did with the proceeds of the first tract of land, or that any of it was used in the purchase of the land in controversy, the latter was held to be community of the second marriage. McDougal v. Bradford, 80 Tex. 558, 16 S. W. 619. See also infra, XI, E, 7, a, note 67 et seq.

10. See infra, XI, F, 4, note 94 et seq.

Donation by husband.—Where property purchased with community funds is conveyed to the wife by direction of the husband, and with the intent that it shall become separate property, that conveyance will operate as a gift from him to her. Wright v. Wright, (Cal. 1895) 41 Pac. 695.

When a conveyance is made to a married woman in consideration of money paid, as well as love and affection, the estate conveyed becomes the common property of the husband and wife. Tustin v. Faught, 23 Cal. 237.

11. See infra, XI, E, 2, d, note 21 et seq.
Presumption of payment with community funds.—Where real property has been conveyed to a married woman by a deed which shows on its face a consideration paid by her, the legal presumption is that the property was purchased by the community property of the husband and wife. Schuyler v. Broughton, 70 Cal. 282, 11 Pac. 719. See also infra, XI, E, 7, a, note 67 et seq.

622; Augustine v. State, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. 794.

Wife holding as mere trustee.—When real estate is purchased by a person, and the title is conveyed to a married woman for convenience only, the grantee is a mere trustee, and the property is not community real estate. Stockstill v. Bart, 47 Fed. 231, decided under Washington statute.

Agreement to hold in trust for community unnecessary.—Where property purchased with community funds is conveyed to the wife, its status as community property being fixed by law, no express agreement by the wife to hold it in trust for the community is necessary to entitle the husband to recover his community interest. Kahn v. Kahn, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 946 [reversed on another point in 94 Tex. 114, 58 S. W. 825].

Reconveyance to wife of mortgaged property.—Where community property conveyed to secure the husband's debt is, on payment of the debt, reconveyed to the wife on a nominal consideration, it again becomes community property. Ballew v. Casey, (Tex. 1888) 9 S. W. 189.

Retransfer to wife of property conveyed by her before marriage.—The retransfer to the wife during marriage of land sold by her before marriage, the purchaser being unable to pay for it, is not a purchase during marriage. The property is hers as if the sale had been judicially rescinded or never made, and she holds by the original title. Fulton v. Fulton, 7 Rob. (La.) 73.

Personal property.—Personal property, bought by the husband, although entered upon the records in the name of the wife, becomes community property, and is subject to the disposition of the husband, unless there was an intention to make it her separate property. Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Shrader, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 255, 31 S. W. 1100, 32 S. W. 344.

Loan from husband for partial payment.—Where real estate is conveyed to a wife, with the understanding between her and her husband that it is to be her separate estate, and is to be paid for out of the separate property which she already owns, the fact that the husband loans her money to make a partial payment thereon gives him no interest in the land, as between himself and her. Flournoy v. Flournoy, 86 Cal. 286, 24 Pac. 1012, 21 Am. St. Rep. 39.

13. Rouyer v. Carroll, 47 La. Ann. 768, 17 So. 292 (holding that to render property the separate estate of a wife during the existence of the community, it is necessary to show the origin and investment of her paraphernal funds under her separate control); Pope v. Foster, 24 La. Ann. 521; Shaw v. Hill, 20 La. Ann. 531, 96 Am. Dec. 420; Bouligny v.

chased, and pays for it out of her personal earnings, does not take the property out of the community.¹⁴ Lands purchased by a married woman on her mere personal credit,¹⁵ or with borrowed money,¹⁶ will likewise as a general rule be community property. Where, however, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the husband, a conveyance is made to the wife, in pursuance of a common understanding and intent that the property shall vest in her, as between her and the husband and all parties with notice, the property will be her separate estate.¹⁷

c. Contracts of Purchase Completed After Marriage. Property purchased by a contract entered into before marriage but not fully paid for until after marriage will generally be separate property,¹⁸ especially where the balance due is not paid Fortier, 16 La. Ann. 209; Clark v. Norwood, 12 La. Ann. 598; Morris v. Hastings, 70 Tex. 26, 7 S. W. 649, 8 Am. St. Rep. 570.

14. Knight v. Kaufman, 105 La. 35, 29 So. 711.

In Washington under Gen. St. §§ 1398, 1399, which provide that the property and pecuniary rights of every married woman at the time of her marriage and afterward acquired, with the issues and profits thereof, is her separate property, and that all other property is community property, real estate bought by a wife with money saved by her out of funds furnished by her husband with which to pay household expenses is not her separate property, but is community property. Abbott v. Wetherby, 6 Wash. 507, 33 Pac. 1070, 36 Am. St. Rep. 176.

Wife abandoned by husband.—In Texas, where the wife has been abandoned by the husband, property conveyed to her, the consideration being paid out of her personal earnings, is held to be her separate estate. Queen Ins. Co. v. May, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 829.

Illustration of rule.—Where a married woman, claiming the possession of paraphernal property yielding a revenue of twenty dollars a month, bought two pieces of real estate, one from a building association for three thousand dollars entirely on credit, and the other from an individual for two thousand four hundred dollars, of which three hundred and fifty dollars was paid in cash and a note given for the balance payable in one year, it was held that the property was liable to seizure as belonging to the community. Fortier v. Barry, 111 La. 776, 35 So. 900.

Land purchased with money borrowed by the wife and repaid by a sale of a part of the land purchased is community property, although the loan was secured by mortgage on the wife's separate property. Yesler v. Hochstetler, 4 Wash. 349, 30 Pac. 398.

Where a conveyance of land is made to the sole and separate use of the wife, it becomes the separate property of the wife, even if paid for with community funds. Morrison v. Clark, 55 Tex. 437. So a deed to a wife, made by a person other than the husband, for a valid consideration paid to the grantor by the husband, which conveys the property to the wife "as her separate property, and to and for her sole and separate use," constitutes the premises, in law, the separate estate of the wife. Swain v. Duane, 48 Cal. 358.

A deed of land, made, at the purchaser's request, to his wife, she executing notes and a mortgage thereof to the vendor to secure the purchase-money, does not constitute the land community property, within Code, § 167, exempting community property from liability for her contracts. Remington v. Higgins, 54 Cal. 620.

Conveyance to wife in fraud of creditors.—The fact that a husband causes land which he purchases to be conveyed to his wife, with intent to shield it from his creditors, will not give the wife a separate estate in the land, in the absence of any recitals in the deed sufficient to create in her a separate estate. Gaston v. Wright, 83 Tex. 282, 18 S. W. 576.

18. Wade's Succession, 21 La. Ann. 343; Barbet v. Langlois, 5 La. Ann. 212; Medlenka v. Dowing, 59 Tex. 32.

Compromise of suit for lands purchased prior to marriage.—Where a man who purchased and paid for land before his marriage compromised a suit against him for the land by paying half its value, after his marriage, with money constituting community property, all of such land would constitute his separate property if, before his marriage, he acquired a good title by the first purchase or by limitation, but would be community property if, at the time of the marriage, he did not have title thereto. Akin v. Jefferson, 65 Tex. 137. Compare Johnson v. Johnson, 11 Cal. 200, 70 Am. Dec. 774.

Purchase of outstanding title.—Where a wife owned property before her marriage, and had been in peaceable possession under the deed conveying it, and had paid all taxes for with community funds.¹⁹ If part of the price be paid out of the community, the purchase, if made before marriage, will remain separate property, but the community must be reimbursed to the extent of the purchase-money advanced from it.²⁰

d. Purchase With Separate Property as Consideration or Security—(1) SEPARATE PROPERTY AS CONSIDERATION. In general property purchased by either spouse by means of his or her separate property²¹ will be separate and not community property. But in Louisiana property purchased even with separate funds becomes as a general rule a part of the community,²² although a legal claim in the thereon, for more than five years before her husband purchased an outstanding title for the purpose of bettering her title, paying for it out of community property, at which time he owed her more than the amount paid, her husband acquired no interest in the land by such payment. Gebhart v. Gebhart, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 61 S. W. 964.

Effect of second deed delivered after marriage.—A deed conveying land to a single woman sufficiently shows the land to be her separate estate, although followed after her marriage by a second deed from the same grantor to her in her married name, and on an expressed money consideration. Maguire v. De Fremery, 76 Cal. 401, 18 Pac. 410.

19. Medlenka v. Downing, 59 Tex. 32.

Payment from community funds not presumed.—The payment of a portion of the purchase-price of property purchased by a husband during a second marriage, the property being contracted for during his first marriage, raises no presumption that the money so used is the community fund of the spouse of the second marriage, and this even when the payment was made with the rents of the property not shown to have accrued during the second marriage. Medlonka v. Downing, 59 Tex. 32. Where during his first marriage, the husband owned land, which he sold during the life of his second wife, and purchased other land, the fact that the balance was paid soon after his third marriage creates no presumption that the payment was made out of the community of that marriage. McDougal v. Bradford, 80 Tex. 558, 16 S. W. 619.

If the husband purchases real estate with the separate property of the wife, and takes the conveyance to himself, the land thus purchased is the separate property of the wife, as between the husband and wife. Rich v. Tubbs, 41 Cal. 34.

Deed to wife deposited in escrow.—Where a wife purchases lands for her separate estate, and the deed is deposited in escrow, to be delivered on payment of the balance of the purchase-money, the husband cannot gain an interest in the lands, as between himself and her, by paying the money and receiving the deed, without the wife's knowledge. Flournoy v. Flournoy, 86 Cal. 286, 24 Pac. 1012, 21 Am. St. Rep. 39.

Subsequent payment for improvements out of community funds.—Where land is bought with separate funds of the wife, and the deed taken in her name, the fact that subsequent improvements are paid for out of community funds does not divest her of title, or give the community such interest in the property as can be taken by execution against the husband. Schwartzman v. Cabell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 49 S. W. 113.

A wife, investing her separate funds in a stock of goods and exposing them to daily sale in course of trade, does not thereby render them a part of community property. Ratto v. Holland, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 469.

Purchase with funds separate under law of former domicile.—Lands in Texas, purchased by a married man, after moving there, with money which he earned in another state while a citizen thereof, under the laws of which the money was his separate property, are not community property. Blethen v. Bonner, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 585, 71 S. W. 290. See also In re Burrows, 136 Cal. 113, 68 Pac. 488; Kraemer v. Kraemer, 52 Cal. 302.

Necessity of intention to purchase as separate estate.—The fact that the wife's separate funds are furnished by her to the husband in part payment of realty purchased by him, no evidence appearing that the purchase was made for her separate estate, will not take the property out of the community. Strnad v. Strnad, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 63 S. W. 69.

Effect of mutations of property by reinvestment.—To maintain the separate character of separate property of a married woman which has undergone mutations by reinvestment, it must be clearly identified and traced throughout its various changes. *Glasscock v. nature of a debt, to the amount of the separate property thus used in the purchase, is imposed upon the community in favor of the one whose separate estate has furnished the consideration.²³ Even in this state, however, the wife, in her own name, may purchase other paraphernal property, by means of such paraphernal funds as she has retained under her own control and management.²⁴ Moreover the courts in the same jurisdiction have laid down the rule that property bought by the husband, and paid for out of his own funds, under circumstances showing a clear intention to buy for his separate account, is his separate property.²⁵

(II) PLEDGE OR MORTGAGE OF SEPARATE PROPERTY. So it is held that property purchased upon the credit or pledge or mortgage of the separate property of a spouse as a security for the price is separate and not community property.²⁶ In Louisiana the rule is laid down that the wife's title will be protected where she has purchased partly for cash and partly on credit, on showing that the cash paid was paraphernal and that she has paraphernal means to meet the Rule to be strictly construed.—Jordy v. Muir, 51 La. Ann. 55, 25 So. 550.

Purchase must be by wife or her agent.—In order to distinguish a purchase of paraphernal property from community property, or to form an exception to the general rules as to purchase during the community, the wife must purchase herself, or through an agent, and in her own name. Dees v. Seale, 5 La. Ann. 688; Squier v. Stockton, 5 La. Ann. 741. See also Comeau v. Fontenot, 19 La. 406.

Purchase by wife's agent.—Stauffer v. Morgan, 39 La. Ann. 632, 2 So. 98.

Purchase with dotal funds.—An immovable bought with dotal funds is dotal. Fleytus v. Her Husband, 15 La. Ann. 62.

Where a wife, after desertion by her husband, but during coverture, buys land with her paraphernal funds, it is her separate property, which she may convey after the dissolution of the marriage. Reinach v. Levy, 47 La. Ann. 963, 17 So. 426.

Recital as to source of consideration unnecessary.—When during marriage a wife buys property with her separate funds, intending the purchase to be an investment of her separate funds, the act of purchase need not recite that the purchase is made with her separate funds and for her sole account.

Necessity of indicating intention in act of purchase.—Where a husband during marriage buys property in his name as an investment of his separate funds, to be held for his individual account, and not that of the community, some indication of this intention and of the character of the funds used should be given in the act of purchase. Burke's Succession, 107 La. 82, 31 So. 391. See also Sharp v. Zeller, 110 La. 61, 34 So. 129. If no intention of purchasing for his separate estate is declared, the property falls into the community. Durham v. Williams, 32 La. Ann. 162.

26. Heney v. Pesoli, 109 Cal. 53, 41 Pac. 819; Martin v. Martin, 52 Cal. 235.

Settlement of adverse claim by husband who is trustee for wife.—Where an adverse claim to land which is the separate property of the wife is settled for by a note signed by the husband, who holds as trustee money belonging to his wife, and the alleged interest in the land is conveyed to the wife, and intended as her separate property, it does not become community property. Cobb v. Trammell, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 527, 30 S. W. 482.

Husband joining pro forma in wife's note.—Parker v. Fogarty, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 615, 23 S. W. 700. See also Henry v. Pesoli, 109 Cal. 53, 41 Pac. 819.

Admissibility of evidence as to source of deferred payments.—A wife buying land and making the cash payment out of her separate estate can defend against an attaching creditor levying on the land as community property, by showing that she expected to meet the deferred payments with money that her mother would give her. Sinsheimer v. Kahn, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 143, 24 S. W. 533.

Merchandise purchased by the wife with money borrowed on the security of her separate property is not the separate property of the wife, but the community property of husband and wife. Heidenheimer v. McKean, 63 Tex. 229.

credits.²⁷ And it is intimated generally that a wife having sufficient paraphernal means to make a purchase is not debarred from availing herself of the usual terms of credit.²⁸

e. Purchase With Separate and Community Funds. It is the general rule that purchases made partly with separate and partly with community funds will be community property to the extent and in the proportion that the consideration is furnished by the community, the spouse supplying the separate funds having a separate interest therein to the amount of his or her investment.²⁹ In Louisiana, however, purchases made with joint, separate, and community funds will fall generally into the community,³⁰ although the husband, or the wife, if paraphernal funds under her control are used, will be the creditor of the community to the amount of the separate funds so used.³¹

f. Purchase With Profits or Proceeds of Separate Property. In those jurisdictions in which the rents and profits of separate property are made separate by statute,³² property purchased with such proceeds and profits will also be separate.³³ In other community states, however, property purchased with such profits or proceeds becomes community property.³⁴

Ann. 160, 169 (where it is said: "It is difficult to lay down precise rules as to the limits within which the wife's liberty to purchase on credit should be restricted, but we think the following general propositions are reasonable, viz.: 1st. It should be regarded as essential that the wife should have some paraphernal funds to invest, because such investment is the foundation of her right to purchase. 2nd. The cash so invested should bear such fair proportion to the total price of the purchase, as to render it reasonably certain that the property furnished would furnish sufficient security for the credit portion of the price. 3rd. The wife's paraphernal property and revenues should be ample to enable her to make the acquisition, with the reasonable expectation of being able to meet the deferred payments"); Metcalf v. Clark, 8 La. Ann. 286; Vanrenselaer's Succession, 6 La. Ann. 803.

29. Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521, 23 Pac. 695; Schuyler v. Broughton, 70 Cal. 282, 11 Pac. 719 (holding that if real property be purchased in part with the community funds of husband and wife, and in part with the wife's separate funds, the wife becomes a tenant in common of the land with her husband; her interest being proportionate to her investment); Northwestern, etc., Bank v. Rauch, 7 Ida. 152, 61 Pac. 516; Parker v. Coop, 60 Tex. 111; Braden v. Gose, 57 Tex. 37; Love v. Robertson, 7 Tex. 6, 56 Am. Dec. 41; Moore v. Moore, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 68 S. W. 59; Clardy v. Wilson, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 196, 58 S. W. 52; Goddard v. Reagan, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 272, 23 S. W. 352.

Evidence of use of separate funds must be clear.—Where, in a case in which a piano was claimed by a wife as her separate property, the evidence showed that, of the purchase-price of one hundred and sixty-seven dollars paid by her husband, ninety-seven dollars was paid with the proceeds of cotton raised on community lands, and that as to the balance of seventy dollars it was by no means clear that that amount, which she gave to her husband in cash to pay for the piano, was a part of a specific sum of money claimed as her separate property, the piano was held to be community property. Conner v. Hawkins, 66 Tex. 639, 2 S. W. 520.

Circumstances showing intention to purchase for separate use.—Where money belonging to the wife is deposited by her with the husband, who mingles it with other moneys held by him, and then, at the request of the wife, purchases land, which he pays for out of the common fund in his hands and has conveyed to his wife, such land is her separate estate, and not community property. Moore v. Jones, 63 Cal. 12.

No. 11,669, 2 Woods 151, 155 (where it was said: "It seems clear that when a wife mingles her own paraphernal funds with the community funds, in the purchase of property, she cannot claim the whole as her separate estate. The property belongs to the community," etc.).

Statute held not retroactive.—Bollinger v. Wright, 143 Cal. 292, 76 Pac. 1108.

34. Cleveland v. Cole, 65 Tex. 402 (holding that property purchased by the wife on credit, to be paid for out of the proceeds of crops grown upon her land, is community property); Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Lastinger, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 924.

g. Effect of Recitals in Deeds. In some jurisdictions it is held that a deed to the wife reciting that the consideration was paid out of her separate property will prima facie create a separate estate in her.³⁵ In Louisiana, however, a recital that property was paid for out of the separate funds of the wife will not relieve her from having the burden of proving as to creditors, and forced heirs of the husband, that the consideration was, in fact, so paid from separate funds under her own control;³⁶ but a husband who is a party to an authentic act by which it is declared that the wife purchases with her separate paraphernal funds, and for her separate benefit, is estopped from contradicting the verity of such recitals unless he first prove that such recitals were embodied in the act through fraud, error, or violence.³⁷ Property conveyed to the wife during coverture and limited by the terms of the deed to her sole and separate use is presumed to be the separate property of the wife,³⁸ and this, it is held, whether the consideration paid for the acquisition was the separate means of the husband or wife or community funds.³⁹ In such cases the intention to make the property separate estate of the wife is apparent upon the face of the deed charging all who have knowledge of its existence with notice.⁴⁰ But it is held that the evidence of a separate estate in the wife afforded by recitals of this character is prima facie only and not conclusive.⁴¹ In general, when the deed contains no recital as to the character

37. Jordy v. Muir, 51 La. Ann. 55, 25 So. 550 (holding that the recital, in the act by which the wife purchases, that it is made with her paraphernal funds, that the husband is a party to the act, and that the sale is made on credit, is evidence for her to charge the husband with the amount of the cash payment, where he subsequently sold the property and received and applied the proceeds); Bellande's Succession, 42 La. Ann. 241, 7 So. 535; Maguire v. Maguire, 40 La. Ann. 579, 4 So. 492. Compare Ellis v. Rush, 5 La. Ann. 116.

Only creditors and forced heirs can contradict recitals in a deed of immovable property in the name of a married woman that the purchase was made with her paraphernal funds, and that the property is to remain her paraphernal property; and even forced heirs can question such recitals only so far as to protect their legitime. Kerwin v. Purinton, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 158, 34 S. W. 350 (holding that where deeds recite the title to be in the separate estate of the wife, the burden of tracing in the lands the investment of community funds of husband and wife is on the party assailing the truth of the recitals).

Recital as notice to purchasers and creditors.—Where a deed of land to a married woman shows on its face that the land was conveyed to her for her sole use and benefit, notice sufficient is given to purchasers and creditors of her separate ownership. Spencer v. Rosenthal, 58 Tex. 4.

Where a power of attorney to convey land, executed by the husband and wife, recited that the land was held by the wife, "as her separate property," as against the wife's estate after her decease, the husband cannot hold the land described as community property, although the power was revoked before any conveyance. Yesler v. Hochstettler, 4 Wash. 349, 30 Pac. 398.

of the property conveyed, the presumption is that it is community property.⁴² Where the separate means of the husband or the community effects make up the consideration, and the conveyance does not contain anything to indicate that it was intended as a gift, it may be shown by parol or extrinsic evidence that the deed was taken in the name of the wife by direction of the husband with the intention of making it her separate estate.⁴³

3. PROCEEDS OF INSURANCE. Proceeds of insurance, the premiums on which are paid with community money, belong to the community.⁴⁴ So it is held that where a part of the premiums are paid before marriage, and the remainder with community funds during marriage, the community will take such share of the proceeds as is equivalent to the share of the premiums paid by it.⁴⁵ The proceeds of a policy of insurance, however, issued on the husband's life in favor of the wife,⁴⁶ or on the wife's life in favor of the husband,⁴⁷ are separate property and belong exclusively to the husband or wife when the event insured against happens.

4. RENTS, PROFITS, IMPROVEMENTS, AND PROCEEDS OF SEPARATE PROPERTY — a. In General. In some states it is provided by statute that the rents and profits of separate property shall also be separate.⁴⁸ It is the general rule under the com-

A recital in a deed by a married woman that the property conveyed is her "sole and separate property, acquired by her while living separate and apart from her husband," is of no effect in the face of evidence showing that the property belongs to the community. Lewis v. Gaves, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 409. See also infra, XI, E, 7, a note 67 et seq.

Recitals insufficient to rebut presumption as to community property.—A deed to a married woman in consideration of a sum "paid by" the wife "with the previous consent" of her husband, and one by her "acting with the consent and authority" of her husband, and in consideration of a sum "paid to" her, the husband joining in the signing and acknowledgment, do not destroy the presumption that the land was community estate. Maxson v. Jennings, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 700, 48 S. W. 781.

Moran*, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 509, 32 S. W. 904 (holding that where the premiums of an insurance policy on the life of a husband, payable "as directed by will," are paid out of the community estate, the wife is, on death of the husband, entitled to one-half the proceeds of the policy, although his will makes the entire proceeds payable to his own estate).

45. In re Webb, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 93, holding that where a decedent paid the first third of the amount of the premiums on his life-insurance policy out of his earnings before marriage, and the remainder from his earnings received after marriage, one third of the policy belonged to his separate estate, and the remainder to the community property. Compare In re Moseman, 38 La. By the Spanish law as introduced in 1769 into the province of Louisiana, dote, arras, marriage gift, and paraphernalia were not ganancial property, or subject to division; but the fruits of them, as well as that which accrues by onerous cause, are ganancial property. Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 206.

In Louisiana as a general rule the fruits of the separate property of the spouses fall into the community. Webre's Succession, 49 La. Ann. 1491, 22 So. 390. The revenues of the separate estate of the husband form part of the community. Viaud's Succession, 11 La. Ann. 297; Glenn v. Elam, 3 La. Ann. 611; Depas v. Riez, 2 La. Ann. 30. Likewise the fruits of the wife's paraphernal property when administered by the husband. Trezevant v. Holmes, 38 La. Ann. 146; Webb v. Peet, 7 La. Ann. 92; Fisher v. Gordy, 2 La. Ann. 762; Rowley v. Rowley, 19 La. 557; Lambert v. Franchebois, 16 La. 1. But the rents and profits of the wife's paraphernal property retained under her own control are also paraphernal. Miller v. Handy, 33 La. Ann. 160; Pinard v. Holten, 30 La. Ann. 167.

Application of rents of separate property to discharge encumbrance thereon.—The community cannot, under La. Civ. Code, art. 2402, charge a husband with the amount of the rents of his paraphernal property which he had applied during his second marriage to the payment of an interest-bearing mortgage debt which existed on the property at the time of his marriage. Sharp v. Zeller, 110 La. 61, 34 So. 129.

Annuity from property conveyed before marriage.—Where one, before his marriage, conveys property on condition that from the income there be paid him annually a certain amount, such annuity is his separate estate. Krohn v. Krohn, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 125, 23 S. W. 848.

The increase of slaves belonging to the separate estate of either spouse have been held to constitute no part of the community of gains. Deshautels v. Fontenot, 6 La. Ann. 689; Childers v. Johnson, 6 La. Ann. 634; Young v. Young, 5 La. Ann. 611; Gonor v. Gonor, 11 Rob. The enhancement of the value of mules owned by a wife at her marriage by reason of their natural growth, their care by the husband, and sustenance from the community estate, is not an increase of the wife's separate estate, constituting community property, liable to execution against her husband. Stringfellow v. Sorrells, 82 Tex. 277, 18 S. W. 689.

In California it is held that a crop raised on land leased by a wife in her own name, from seed barley for the price of which she gave her promissory note, but which was bought by the husband in her name, and was planted under his personal superintendence, is community property, and subject to execution for the husband's debts, in the absence of an agreement between them that the crop raised on the leased land should be the separate property of the wife. Davis v. Green, 122 Cal. 364, 55 Pac. 9.

A crop made after the dissolution of the community by the husband on his land, partly with his slaves and partly with those of the community, does not belong to it, and is not to be included in its settlement. Babin v. Nolan, 6 Rob. (La.) 508.

52. White v. Lynch, 26 Tex. 195, holding that lumber sawed at a mill, which was the separate property of a married woman, by slaves who were also her separate property, and out of logs cut from land which was her separate property, is community property.

53. Claffin v. Pfeiffer, 76 Tex. 469, 13 S. W. 483; Smith v. Bailey, 66 Tex. 553, 1 S. W. 627; Epperson v. Jones, 65 Tex. 425.

Interest accruing on separate funds falls into the community. Parrish v. Williams, from clay upon separate property,⁵⁴ and rents accruing from separate real estate⁵⁵ have been held to belong to the community.

b. Profits From Business. The profits made in commercial transactions carried on by husband or wife are community property,⁵⁶ and this, it is held, although the capital of the business belongs to the wife's separate estate.⁵⁷

c. Improvements on Separate Estate. Improvements made during marriage on the separate property of either husband or wife, although with community funds, will, as a general rule, belong to the spouse owning the separate property.⁵⁸

(Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 53 S. W. 79; Cabell v. Mencer, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 206.

The interest on money acquired by gift, devise, or descent is not property acquired by gift, devise, or descent, and consequently not the wife's separate property. Braden v. Gose, 57 Tex. 37.

Interest due from a husband on money borrowed from his wife, and agreed to be paid her for its use, is her separate property. Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Whitaker, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 380, 23 S. W. 520. Prize in a lottery.—Money received as a prize on a lottery ticket purchased with the separate money of the wife is community property under Tex. Rev. St. art. 2852, providing that all property acquired by either husband or wife during marriage, except that acquired by gift, devise, or descent, shall be deemed the common property of both. Dixon v. Sanderson, 72 Tex. 359, 10 S. W. 535, 13 Am. St. Rep. 801.

The corpus remains separate property.—As long as the substance of property resulting from a wife's separate money can be traced and identified, it remains her separate property, no matter how often it may have been invested, loaned, collected, and reinvested. Married woman as partner.—A married woman's separate property cannot be invested in a partnership, so as to entitle her to a share of the profits as her separate estate. Miller v. Marx, 65 Tex. 131.

Wife's contribution to firm property.—Where a wife contributes from her separate property to the original capital stock of a firm engaged in selling merchandise, and the stock is replenished from time to time, purchases being made for cash and on credit, the interest in the partnership held in the name of the wife becomes community property. Middlebrook v. Zapp, 73 Tex. 29, 10 S. W. 732. To the same effect see Smith v. Bailey, 56 Tex. 553, 1 S. W. 627; Epperson v. Jones, 65 Tex. 425.

When community funds are invested in a partnership business by the wife, the husband becomes a partner in the business. Houghton v. Puryear, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 383, 30 S. W. 583.

In Texas it has been held that buildings erected by joint labor or funds upon the separate property of a husband or wife are fixtures attached to the soil, and in the nature of things indivisible in specie, and go to the owner of the land, although the community estate must be reimbursed for their cost; and hence that when one of the parties owns the entire land upon which improvements were made with community funds, the land could not be taken to compensate for the improvements. Rice v. Rice, 21 Tex. 58. But when improvements are made upon lands in which the husband and wife each have separate interests, the improvements retain their character as community property, and in a division the survivor may be compensated for his or her interest in such improvements by setting apart land equal to the value of the improvements or less land with the improvements, so as to make them equal. Summerville v. King, 98 Tex. 332, 83 S. W. 680 [affirming (Civ. App. 1904) 80 S. W. 1050, and following Clift v. Clift, 72 Tex. 144, 10 S. W. 338; Furrh v. Winston, 66 Tex. 521, 1 S. W. 527].

Rights of creditors.—A house built upon land which is the separate property of the wife and paid for with funds of the com-

The community is entitled, however, at its dissolution to an amount equivalent to the consequent enhanced value of the property.⁵⁹

d. Proceeds of Sale. The proceeds arising from sales of separate property do not belong to the community, but become the separate property of the spouse whose property was sold.⁶⁰ So a note given to a married woman in payment for her separate estate is her separate property.⁶¹

5. EARNINGS OF HUSBAND OR WIFE. It is a basic principle of the community law that the earnings of both of the spouses become a part of the community,⁶² and

munity does not, as to existing creditors of the husband, become her separate property but remains a part of the community estate, unless the wife shows that when the gift was made the husband had enough property remaining to pay his existing debts. *Maddox v. Presumption that community funds were used for improvements.—Sims v. Billington, 50 La. Ann. 963, 24 So. 637 [citing Webre's Succession, 49 La. Ann. 1491, 22 So. 390; Boyer's Succession, 36 La. Ann. 506; McClelland's Succession, 14 La. Ann. 762]. See also Clift v. Clift, 72 Tex. 144, 10 S. W. 338.

Improvements by wife upon husband's property.—Where, after a husband's inexcusable abandonment of his wife, she used community funds with which to make improvements on his separate property and pay taxes thereon, in good faith, it was held that the husband's land was liable to the wife's heirs for one half of the cost of the improvements and the taxes. Cervantes v. Cervantes, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 76 S. W. 790.

W. 206 (holding that under a statute providing that the "increase of land" shall be separate property, profits accruing from the sale of land purchased by a wife with her separate money are included in the term, and are therefore her separate property); German Ins. Co. v. Hunter, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 344.

Note renewed in husband's name.—In Rose v. Houston, 11 Tex. 324, 62 Am. Dec. 478, it was held that if a note is taken for the purchase of a wife's separate property, and such note is delivered up to the maker by her husband and another taken to his order, the second note is also the separate property of the wife.

Note payable in merchandise to husband.—Where a husband sold timber from lands owned separately by his wife, and took an obligation of the purchaser for so many dollars, payable in lumber to the husband, such obligation was held to be community property. Holland v. Seward, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 944.

Washington.—Sherlock v. Denny, 28 Wash. 170, 68 Pac. 452; Yake v. Pugh, 13 Wash. 78, 42 Pac. 528, 52 Am. St. Rep. 17; Abbott v. Wetherby, 6 Wash. 507, 33 Pac. 1070, 36 Am. St. Rep. 176.

Services of wife as nurse.—A claim by a married woman for services rendered a decedent as nurse constitutes community property, under Cal. Civ. Code, § 164, declaring "all other property required after marriage by either husband or wife," community property. Smith v. Furnish, 70 Cal. 424, 12 Pac. 392.

A donation in remuneration or compensation for services rendered by a married woman to the donor is not a part of the community estate, nor can real estate so received be disposed of by the husband. Fisk v. Flores, 43 Tex. 340.

Non-liability of wife's earnings for debts of husband.—Under statutes in California it has been held that the earnings of the wife are not liable for the debts of the husband. Finnigan v. Hibernia Sav., etc., Soc., 63 Cal. 390. But a judgment for costs recovered by a married woman is not her earnings, so as to be exempt from the debts of her husband, especially where there is no showing that the money paid out as costs had been earned by her, but, on the contrary, it was shown that they were paid out of money "earned, obtained or accumulated" by the husband and wife since their marriage, so as to be community property, within Nev. Act, March 10, 1873, § 2. Adams v. Baker, 24 Nev. 375, 55 Pac. 362.

property purchased with such means is likewise a part of the same.⁶³ But the husband by virtue of his control of the community may make a gift of her earnings to the wife.⁶⁴ Moreover it is provided by statute in many of the community property states that the earnings of the wife when living apart from her husband shall be her separate property.⁶⁵

6. DAMAGES FOR INJURIES TO HUSBAND OR WIFE. It is very generally held that the right of action for damages accruing from personal injuries to either spouse is community property.⁶⁶

7. EVIDENCE AS TO CHARACTER OF PROPERTY—a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. It may be stated as a general proposition that the presumption of the law is against separate property, and in favor of the community, the presumption attending the possession of property by either spouse being that it belongs to the community;⁶⁷ and hence of course it follows as a matter of course that the burden of proof is generally upon the party claiming that the property is not a part of Property purchased with donated earnings.—Where a husband gave to his wife the proceeds of her dairy, it is not error to set apart to her the property purchased from such proceeds as her separate property. Dority v. Dority, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 216, 70 S. W. 333 [affirmed in 96 Tex. 215, 71 S. W. 950, 60 L. R. A. 941]. So where a husband told his wife, who was about to engage in the business of keeping boarders, that whatever money she made should be her separate property, and afterward paid his own board, personal property purchased by the wife with the profits of the business, and taken possession of by her with the husband's consent, is not subject to his debts accruing after such property was obtained. Yake v. Pugh, 13 Wash. 78, 42 Pac. 528, 52 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Intention of gift must be specific.—In Washington under Ballinger Annot. Codes & St. §§ 4493, 4494, making the earnings of the wife while living with her husband community property, it is held that a mere general agreement between the husband and wife that whatever the wife earns shall belong to her, not having reference to any particular business or employment, is insufficient to impress on her earnings the character of separate property. Sherlock v. Denny, 28 Wash. 170, 68 Pac. 452.

Where a married woman, not separate in property, is engaged in trade, she is presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, to trade on the funds of the community. Manning's Succession, 107 La. 456, 31 So. 862. See also Repplier v. Gow, 1 La. 474.

Where a note is payable to the wife, the presumption is that it is community property, subject to the disposition of the husband. Wells v. Cockrum, 13 Tex. 127.

Community waived by marriage contract.—Where the community has been waived, by the marriage contract, between husband and wife, the law does not in that case create the presumption that the property belongs to the husband. Williams v. Hardy, 15 La. Ann. 286.

the community estate.⁶⁸ Property purchased or acquired during the existence of the marital relation, whether the title be taken in the name of the husband, or that of the wife, or in their joint names, is presumed to be community property.⁶⁹

Rule applied to husband.—Bass v. Larche, 7 La. Ann. 104 (holding that where a husband claims property purchased in his own name during the existence of the community, it is incumbent on him to show a clear intention to make an investment on his own account; and this should be so established as to have thrown the loss on him separately, in case the property purchased had been lost); Osborn v. Osborn, 62 Tex. 495.

Rule applied to husband's grantee.—Hill v. Young, 7 Wash. 33, 34 Pac. 144.

Burden on administrator of deceased husband.—In Allardyce v. Hambleton, 96 Tex. 30, 70 S. W. 76. It was held that the burden is on the administrator of a deceased husband to prove the right of the husband's separate estate to reimbursement out of the community.

Moreover it has been held that in the absence of proof that the property was acquired before marriage took place, the presumption arises that the property was obtained during the marriage relationship and is community.⁷⁰ So property found in the possession of either husband or wife at the time the marriage is dissolved is presumed to be community estate.⁷¹ The above-mentioned presumptions belonged to the claimant before the marriage, or were acquired by gift, devise, or descent, or that said funds were the proceeds of property thus owned or acquired); York v. Hilger, (Civ. App. 1905) 84 S. W. 1117; Blackwell v. Mayfield, (Civ. App. 1902) 63 S. W. 659; Somes v. Ainsworth, (Civ. App. 1902) 67 S. W. 468 (holding that where money procured by a mortgage, in which the husband joined, on the separate estate of a wife is loaned, and a note taken therefor, such money and note must be presumed to be community property, for which she cannot recover alone, in the absence of evidence that when the money was so procured by such mortgage it was the intention to look to her separate estate alone for reimbursement).

Washington.—Hill v. Gardner, 35 Wash. 529, 77 Pac. 808; O'Sullivan v. O'Sullivan, 35 Wash. 481, 77 Pac. 806.

A married woman's recorded brand on cattle raises the presumption that they are community property if acquired by her during coverture, unless the record shows the contrary. Rhodes v. Alexander, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 552, 47 S. W. 754.

Link*, 16 Wash. 72, 47 Pac. 222 (holding that in the absence of proof that it was the intention, when a deed to a lot was taken in a wife's name, and a house built thereon, that it should be her separate property, it will be regarded as community property, and subject to the husband's debt, although contracted after he contributed to the purchase of the lot and erection of the house); Yesler v. Hochstetler, 4 Wash. 349, 3 Pac. 398.

Bond for title executed before marriage.—In Hawley v. Geer, (Tex. 1891) 17 S. W. 914, it was held that the presumption that property conveyed to a married man by a deed reciting payment of the consideration in money at the time of its execution is community property is not affected by the fact that a bond for title had been executed to him before his marriage.

Presumption stronger against husband than against wife.—It has been intimated that the presumption that a deed to the husband is a conveyance to the community is, under ordinary circumstances, much stronger than when the deed is to the wife. Higgins v. Johnson, 20 Tex. 389, 70 Am. Dec. 394.

Conclusiveness of presumption in favor of bona fide purchaser.—Openheimer v. Robinson, 87 Tex. 174, 27 S. W. 95 [following Cooke v. Bremond, 27 Tex. 457, 86 Am. Dec. 626].

Civ. App. 560, 26 S. W. 99.

Effect of declarations in will in determining character of property.—The character of the estate of a decedent as separate or community property of himself and his first wife is not effected or changed by his opinion thereon, or by any declaration which he may make in his will in reference thereto, but is determined from the mode in which the property was acquired. In re Granniss, 142 Cal. 1, 75 Pac. 324.

Presumption from ancient deed.—Where a deed executed by the surviving wife of the one who during his lifetime held the title is more than thirty years old, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the land was of their community are, however, prima facie only and may be overcome by evidence showing that the property purchased or otherwise acquired was in fact paid for with separate funds, or otherwise acquired as separate property.⁷²

b. Admissibility. In showing the separate character of property for the purpose of rebutting the presumption in favor of the community, any legal evidence is admissible.⁷³ Thus, although the property was conveyed by deed, parol evidence is admissible to show that the title was in fact taken as the separate property of one of the spouses, at least as against persons who have not acquired some right in or to the property for a valuable consideration without notice and relying in good faith upon the apparent title.⁷⁴ The declarations of the husband, at the time of the purchase of lands, as to his intentions in buying the same for the separate estate of the wife, are admissible;⁷⁵ but the unauthorized declarations of the husband as to the character of property are not admissible against the wife.⁷⁶ Tax receipts running to the husband are admissible in support of his allegations that he owns as separate estate property standing in the names of himself and wife, and that he has paid the taxes thereon.⁷⁷

c. Weight and Sufficiency. In defining the degree of proof required to overcome the presumption in favor of the community, the courts have used various expressions, such as "a preponderance of evidence,"⁷⁸ "clear and satisfactory estate, and that the sale was made to pay community debts. Wolf v. Gibbons, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 69 S. W. 238.

The inventory of an administrator not a party to the suit has been held not to be prima facie evidence against intestate's second wife, not a party to the inventory, that realty was community property of the intestate and his first wife. *Blackwell v. The marriage contract and judgment of separation for the amount of the wife's claims are admissible for the purpose of proving the reality of her dower as against creditors, and, if fully corroborated, will establish her rights. Benoist v. Blanchard, 6 La. Ann. 789.

Testimony of a surviving husband is admissible to show that the paraphernal property of the wife was improved by the community, and that the value of the improvements is common property. Bellande's Succession, 41 La. Ann. 491, 6 So. 505.

74. Peck v. Brummagin, 31 Cal. 440, 89 Am. Dec. 195; Pinard v. Holten, 30 La. Ann. 167, holding that where the validity of a wife's title to property bought by her during marriage is assailed, and the property is claimed by the husband's creditors as community property, the wife may prove by parol evidence that the property was purchased by her with her separate funds.

In Texas it is held to be the settled rule that parol evidence is admissible to show that a deed, although taken in the name of the husband or wife or in the names of both, is separate property, as between the parties to such deed, their privies in blood, purchasers without value or with notice. Cooke v. Bremond, 27 Tex. 457, 86 Am. Dec. 626; Dunham v. Chatham, 21 Tex. 231, 73 Am. Dec. 228; Higgins v. Johnson, 20 Tex. 389, 70 Am. Dec. 394. evidence,"⁷⁹ "conclusive proof,"⁸⁰ "clear and conclusive proof,"⁸¹ "clear and decisive proof,"⁸² and "such legal evidence, as under all the circumstances . . . would ordinarily produce conviction in an unprejudiced mind."⁸³ The weight and sufficiency of the evidence in specific instances must be determined from a consideration of the various facts in each particular case.⁸⁴

8. ESTOPPEL TO DENY NATURE OF PROPERTY. A spouse who has by his or her acts or conduct induced third persons to deal with property as separate, will be estopped afterward to deny that it is separate, where to permit him to do so would operate to the prejudice of such third persons.⁸⁵ And the same principle is applicable to property represented or treated as community property.⁸⁶

"Loose and unsatisfactory" evidence insufficient.—In Smith v. Smith, 12 Cal. 216, 73 Am. Dec. 533, it was held that the presumption that a building erected on land bought after marriage is community property is too strong to be rebutted by loose and unsatisfactory testimony.

Presumption of husband's coercion.—McIntosh v. Smith, 2 La. Ann. 756.

A married woman is not bound by a false declaration made in a mortgage executed by her, to the effect that the mortgaged property is community property, whether the mortgage is or is not executed with all the forms prescribed by law. Reid v. Roehereau, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,669, 2 Woods 151.

F. Separate Property — 1. IN GENERAL. Under the community system the property of married persons is either community property or separate property.⁸⁷ All property not belonging to the community, as for example property brought by either into the marriage, or acquired by either in any manner not included by statute in the community of gains, is the separate property of either the husband or wife as the case may be.⁸⁸ In Louisiana the wife's separate property is called either dotal or extradotal. Dotal property is that which is brought by the wife to the husband to assist in bearing the household expenses.⁸⁹ All other separate property of the wife is extradotal, or, as it is more commonly called, her paraphernal property.⁹⁰

2. PROPERTY HELD AT TIME OF MARRIAGE. Property owned by either the husband or wife at the time of the marriage does not, under the statutes of the community law states, become a part of the legal community but remains the separate property of each.⁹¹ If, however, funds constituting separate property become commingled with community property so that they cannot be traced or distinguished therefrom, they will be regarded as community estate.⁹²

87. See the statutes of the different states.

88. See the statutes of the different states. See also McMurrin v. Soria, 4 How. (Miss.) 154, declaring the law of Louisiana.

Separate property defined.—The term "separate property" means an estate held, both in its use and in its title, for the exclusive benefit either of the husband or wife. Kraemer v. Kraemer, 52 Cal. 302 [citing George v. Ransom, 15 Cal. 322].

Distinction between statutory and equitable separate estate not recognized.—Under the act of 1840 relating to the subject of marital rights, the distinction between the separate property of the wife and property limited to her sole and separate use is not recognized. Cartwright v. Hollis, 5 Tex. 152.

The capacity of the wife to hold property separate and apart from her husband is held to be as complete and perfect as that of the husband to hold property in his own right separate and apart from his wife. *Reynolds v. Under the Spanish law all property held by either a husband or a wife before marriage remains the separate property of such consort; and the status of the property is to be determined by the origin of the title to the property, and not by the acquisition of the final title. Welder v. Lambert, 91 Tex. 510, 44 S. W. 281. Personal property of the parties before marriage did not, under the Spanish law, fall into the community in consequence of the neglect to establish the amount at the time of the marriage. Norès v. Caraby, 5 Rob. (La.) 292. But see Childress v. Cutter, 16 Mo. 24.

By the law of France, personal property owned by either spouse at the time of marriage becomes community assets; but real property so owned does not form part of the community. Mo. Civ. One partner in the community will not be permitted to question the title of the other partner to property possessed by the latter prior to the existence of the community. McClelland's Succession, 14 La. Ann. 762. If a husband actually holds and possesses as owner property at the date of his second marriage, the fact that he may hold it unduly as against the children of his first marriage does not preclude him, as between himself and his second wife, from claiming it as his own, since the origin of the property does not concern her, and it is enough that it does not belong to her and the second community. *Imhof v. Liability of community for commingled separate property.—In Louisiana it is held

3. PROPERTY ACQUIRED DURING MARRIAGE BY DEVISE, BEQUEST, OR INHERITANCE.

Property acquired during marriage by devise, bequest, or descent, by either the husband or the wife, is also held under statutes to be separate property.⁹³

4. PROPERTY ACQUIRED BY GIFT. It is a general rule under statute that property acquired from third persons by gift or donation during marriage belongs to the separate property of the spouse to whom it is given.⁹⁴ So it is held in some jurisdictions that a conveyance of lands intended as a joint gift to a husband and wife invests each with an undivided half interest as his or her separate property.⁹⁵ In Louisiana, however, donations made jointly to husband and wife become a part of the community.⁹⁶

5. PROPERTY PURCHASED WITH SEPARATE PROPERTY. Property purchased or that where property which must be held to have been the separate property of the husband was carried by him into the community formed by the marriage, became merged into it, and inured to its benefit, the value of the property becomes an indebtedness due the husband by the community. Cormier's Succession, 52 La. A monthly allowance received by a husband from executors of one who created a trust in favor of the husband, with provision for the allowance, is separate property, in which the wife has no community interest. McClelland v. McClelland, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 350.

Pension money paid to a veteran in the Civil war is a donation from the government, and is his separate property, although he did not receive it until after his marriage; and the fact that he invested it in land does not change its character into community property. Johnson v. Johnson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. 1022.

Necessity of clear intent to give spouse exclusive interest.—In Hawkins v. Lee, 22 Tex. 544, it was held that the husband's rights attach upon property given to the wife unless the grantor manifests a clear and unequivocal intention to exclude him and give the wife the exclusive interest and control.

Husband held estopped to dispute wife's title.—In Lemmon v. Clark, 36 La. Ann. 744, it was held that where an immovable has been donated to a wife by her parents by a private act defective in form, the husband, after holding the property as her paraphernal estate and as her agent, cannot object to her title, or make his possession the basis of a prescription; and that his heirs and creditors have no greater rights.

acquired by means of the separate property of either husband or wife belongs generally to the purchaser's separate estate.⁹⁷

6. RENTS AND PROFITS OF SEPARATE PROPERTY. By express provision of statute in some of the states where the community system prevails the rents and profits of separate property are made separate property,⁹⁸ but the rule in other jurisdictions is that such rents and profits become a part of the community.⁹⁹

7. PUBLIC LANDS ACQUIRED BY GRANT OR ENTRY — a. In General. As a general rule lands granted as pure donations by the government will not enter into the community, but will become separate estate.¹ But the rule is otherwise where the public grant is not purely an act of sovereign grace and bounty to one of the spouses but a consideration for the grant passes from both of them.²

b. Time of Acquiring Title. The determination of the question whether public lands acquired by grant or entry are separate or community property may depend upon the time when the title was acquired. If the patent be issued before the marriage, the land will be separate property.³ So where the right to acquire title to public lands exists before marriage, but the title is not perfected until some time during the marriage, it is held, under the doctrine of relation, that the title will date from the time the initial right is acquired, and that the property is separate.⁴ On the same principle where the right to a patent or complete title is

A. 759, decided under a Washington statute. But where a statute offers a bounty for future military services rendered by volunteers, a land certificate acquired during marriage and issued in pursuance of a statute enacted in discharge of the preëxisting obligation resting upon the state in virtue of the prior law offering the bounty becomes a part of the community. Kircher v. Murray, 54 Fed. 617 [affirmed in 60 Fed. 48, 8 C. C. A. 448, and following Nixon v. Wichita Land, etc., Co., 84 Tex. 408, 19 S. W. 560]. See also Barrett v. Spence, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 344, 67 S. Lands acquired by immigration and settlement.—Where public lands are acquired by one by the mere fact of immigration, settlement, residence, etc., such as independently of his right as a married man would entitle him thereto, no further conditions being imposed, they are generally held to be separate property. Boone v. Laws (1875), p. 634, § 2, declaring all property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, except such as may be acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, common property. Jacobson v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., 3 Ida. 126, 28 Pac. 396. But a locator of a mining claim has no such interest in the same after conveyance and abandonment thereof that the community interest of the wife attaches. McAlister v. Hutchison, (N. Timber lands.—In Gardiner v. Port Blakeley Mill Co., 8 Wash. 1, 35 Pac. 402, it was held that land acquired by a married man under the act of congress of June 3, 1873 (20 St. 89) entitled "An act for the sale of timber lands," is his separate and not community property in view of section 2 of the act which requires the purchaser to make oath that the purchase is not for speculation but for his own exclusive use and benefit, and of the practice of the federal government in permitting husband and wife to each make such purchases, and this, it was intimated, although it be admitted that the purchase-money was the property of the community.

c. Conditions Precedent and Subsequent. In Texas it is held that where in entering upon public land, certain requirements, such as residence, improvements, charges, etc., must be complied with, such requirements are to be regarded as conditions precedent to the vesting of title, and that they are burdens, in the nature of a consideration for the lands, thrown upon the community, and therefore the lands are to be treated as community property.⁶ In other states, however, it is held that such requirements are regarded as conditions subsequent to a donation, the non-performance of which will merely divest the conditional gift, and therefore, as a donation, the lands will be separate property.⁷

If a man marries while in possession of land which he claims to own under a purchase from grantees in Mexico, and the grant is afterward rejected, and he then purchases it from the United States by permission under the act of congress of 1865, relating to the "ex-Mission of San Jose," the land is his separate estate, and not community property. Lake v. Lake, 52 Cal. 428.

A naked right of partnership possession in lands before marriage is not such a right as to give one of the partners an equity to which the subsequently acquired title to a portion of the land so held could attach, as his separate estate, after marriage. In re Boody, 113 Cal. 682, 45 Pac. 858.

Where a woman, living upon public land, married, and the husband filed a declaratory statement upon it in his own name, and made the required proof, and was allowed to enter and purchase the land in his own name, and subsequently the husband and wife, by their joint deed, sold the land, and, with the proceeds the husband purchased other land, the land so purchased was community property. *Eslinger v. A homestead claim, filed during the existence of the community, to land in possession of and cultivated by the community during five years, is property of the community, although the final receipt was issued after the dissolution of the community by the death of the wife. Brown v. Fry, 52 La. Ann. 58, 26 So. 748. But where a homesteader had not been in possession five years at the date of his death, but his widow remained in possession until the five years had elapsed, when she perfected the homestead entry and obtained a patent to the land, the title became hers by the patent, and did not fall into the community, which was dissolved at the date of the husband's death. Richard v. Moore, 110 La. 435, 34 So. 593.

Mere possession during marriage.—Where the title to the land is acquired under a statute passed after the death of the wife, the previous mere occupation of it by husband and wife, during her life, does not render the land community property. Labish v. Hardy, 77 Cal. 327, 19 Pac. 531, 23 Pac. 123. See also Carratt v. Carratt, 32 Wash. 517, 73 Pac. 481.

Where the husband merely selected certain land as a colonist before the death of the wife, but no steps were taken to secure the land during her life, and he did not receive the title till afterward, the land was not acquired as community. Webb v. Webb, 15 Tex. 274. See also Sexton v. McGill, 2 La. Ann. 190.

Issuance of patent after dissolution of community by judicial decree.—As the title to government land dates from the certificate, and not from the patent, if land be entered in the name of the wife during marriage, but the patent issues after the community is dissolved by a judgment, the land will be presumed to be an acquisition of the community. *Simien v. G. Rights of Husband or Wife During Existence of Community—1. HUSBAND'S RIGHT TO MANAGE AND CONTROL THE COMMUNITY. It is the general rule of the community system that the husband has the control and management of all the community property,⁸ and he may in general sell and dispose of the same, provided that no fraud be committed upon the rights of the wife.⁹ In Texas the wife and the husband have equal interests in the community,¹⁰ although the rights of the wife are said to be passive, while those of the husband are active.¹¹ In other states the wife is held to have only an expectancy.¹²

2. MANAGEMENT OF SEPARATE PROPERTY—a. In General. In some jurisdictions the wife has the control and management of her separate property,¹³ while in other jurisdictions such control and management is conferred by statute on the husband.¹⁴ In Louisiana the dotal portion of the wife's separate estate is under the control and administration of the husband.¹⁵ But over her extradotal or par-

In Washington it is held that Code (1881), § 2409, declaring community property to be property acquired by either husband or wife or both, does not contemplate that the legal title shall be in the community, but the legal title to lands acquired by and conveyed to the husband is in him; the wife having only an equitable interest. *Sadler v. aphernal property she may exercise entire control,¹⁶ although she may also permit the husband to manage and administer it.¹⁷ The right to control her paraphernal property may, however, be resumed by the wife at any time.¹⁸

b. Character and Extent of Husband's Rights and Duties. The powers conferred by law on the husband over the separate property of the wife have been said to be similar in some respects to those vested in the husband under rules of equity jurisprudence when permitted and authorized by the wife to receive the rents, issues, and profits of estates limited to her sole and separate use.¹⁹ He can-

16. Bouligny v. Fortier, 16 La. Ann. 209 (holding that all the wife's property which is not declared to be dotal is paraphernal, and the wife has the administration and enjoyment of it); Compton v. Compton, 6 Rob. (La.) 154.

The authorization of the husband is not required to give validity to the acts of a wife necessary in the administration of her paraphernal property. Dickerman v. Reagan, 2 La. Ann. 440.

Wife may administer through an agent other than her husband. Dodd v. Orillion, 14 La. Ann. 68.

17. Davis v. Robertson, 14 La. Ann. 281.

Paraphernal property is presumed to be under the husband's management in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Le Blanc v. Le Blanc, 20 La. Ann. 206; Johns v. Race, 18 La. Ann. 105; Collins v. Bal'n, 16 La. Ann. 290; Breaux v. Le Blanc, 16 La. Ann. 145; Davis v. Robertson, 14 La. Ann. 281; Gillett v. Deranco, 6 La. Ann. 590; Pinckney v. Mulhollan, 6 Rob. And such presumption renders him accountable to her succession for all moneys received and used by him belonging to it. Johns v. Race, 18 La. Ann. 105.

Presumption as to use of funds.—Rachal v. Le Roux, 18 La. Ann. 588.

Liability of community.—Money belonging to the wife, received by the husband during the marriage, constitutes a charge against the community. Downs v. Morrison, 13 La. Ann. 379.

The husband, having by the marriage contract the administration of the paraphernal property, may assign the wife's paraphernal claims to pay for property bought in the name of the community; but he will be responsible to her for the amount. Rousse v. Wheeler, 4 Rob. (La.) 114.

Payment to husband.—A husband has authority to receive whatever may be due his wife for paraphernal property, when not proved to be under her separate administration; and a payment to him discharges the debtor. Richard v. Blanchard, 12 Rob. (La.) 524.

Mere deposit in husband's bank.—When a wife deposits paraphernal funds in a bank, of which her husband is a member, and the account thus opened with the wife is kept in her name, and subject to her exclusive order and control, without interference by the husband, this constitutes a separate administration by her. Stauffer v. Morgan, 39 La. Ann. 632, 2 So. 98.

Husband's right to employ agents.—The husband may administer the wife's paraphernal property through an agent. Wilcox v. Henderson, 9 La. Ann. 347.

18. Morales v. Marigny, 14 La. Ann. 855; Brooks v. Wigginton, 14 La. Ann. 676; Meadows v. Dick, 13 La. Ann. 377; Terrell v. Cutrer, 1 Rob. (La.) 367; *Rowley v. Right to interest.—The husband who has the administration of the wife's paraphernal funds owes no interest thereon before the dissolution of the community, or before the wife has obtained a judgment for the restitution of her separate funds. Burns v. Thompson, 39 La. Ann. 377, 1 So. 913. But where part of a paraphernal estate in the hands of a husband is represented by notes of the husband secured by mortgage upon his separate property, which were acquired by the wife before marriage, she is entitled, in resuming the administration of her paraphernal property, to recover the amount of the face of the notes, with interest as stipulated up to the date of her marriage, and with like interest from judicial demand. Bordes v. Duprat, 52 La. Ann. 306, 26 So. 821.

Securing judgment against husband.—Where the paraphernal estate of the wife consists of, or has been reduced to, money, in the hands of the husband, she may, in order to resume her administration thereof, obtain judgment against him for the amount so held. Bordes v. Duprat, 52 La. Ann. 306, 26 So. 821.

Proof of husband's obtaining possession.—Where the wife is, by the marriage contract, to retain exclusive control of her paraphernal property, she cannot recover it from her husband without showing that it came into his possession after the marriage. De Young v. De Young, 6 La. Ann. 786.

19. Milburn v. Walker, 11 Tex. 329.

Dealings closely scrutinized.—Dealings of a husband with the separate property of his

not use or apply her separate estate for his own benefit,²⁰ or make a gratuitous disposition thereof.²¹ If he makes use of her property as his own, or alienates it, he will become a debtor to her to the amount of its value.²² In his administration of the wife's separate property, the husband is bound to render a faithful account.²³

c. Wife's Tacit or Legal Mortgage. By the civil law, when the wife's separate property, whether dotal or paraphernal,²⁴ is administered or received by the husband, she has a tacit or legal mortgage on his property for the restitution of the same, and for reimbursement when any part of her paraphernal property is used by him for his own benefit.²⁵ This legal mortgage attaches to any immovable property, or lands, acquired either before or after marriage by the husband, and while his liability to the wife continues to exist,²⁶ and it takes effect from the

Where there is no hindrance by the husband to the wife's administration of her paraphernal property, any loss resulting from the non-enforcement of her rights must be borne by her. Wallace v. McCullough, 20 La. Ann. 301.

Husband's liability for wife's unauthorized act.—Barbet v. Roth, 16 La. Ann. 271.

Title to note taken for loan of wife's money.—Where the husband loans money belonging to his wife's dowry, and takes a note therefor in his own name, the note is his property, and his wife has no title to it. Tauzin v. Deblieux, 18 La. Ann. 585.

Recording mortgage.—Under the civil code of Louisiana the preservation of the wife's legal mortgage or privilege against the husband's estate depends on the record of the evidence thereof. Sauton v. Leverich, 23 La. Ann. 460; Nalle v. Young, 160 U. S. 524, 16 S. Ct. 420, 40 L. ed. 560; Bradley v. Claffin, 132 U. S. 379, 10 S. Ct. 125, 23 L. ed. 367. Compare Cane v. Alley, 2 La. Ann. 918; West v. His Creditors, 1 La. Ann. 365.

Fruits of paraphernal property.—Before the civil code, the wife had no mortgage for the fruits of paraphernal property consumed by the husband. Lanusse v. Lanna, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 103.

Paraphernal funds jointly received.—The wife has no mortgage for paraphernal funds received by her and her husband jointly during marriage, if not proved to have been converted to his individual use. Babin v. Brosset, 11 La. 557.

A donation propter nuptias does not carry with it a mortgage upon the husband's property. Cambre v. Grabert, 33 La. Ann. 246; Gates v. Legendre, 10 Rob. (La.) 74.

The wife, authorized by law to join in a contract, has no mortgage for money paid by her as her husband's coöbligor in solido. Arrioux v. Dugas, 5 Rob. (La.) 453.

date when the paraphernal funds went into the husband's hands.²⁷ The wife may, however, renounce, that is, postpone, in favor of third persons, her mortgage rights in the property of the husband,²⁸ by means of an act or deed duly acknowledged as required by the statute.²⁹

3. AGENCY OF WIFE FOR HUSBAND. The wife may as the agent of her husband bind him by her acts.³⁰ In Texas it is held that in the absence of the husband,

The privilege granted to wivcs on the movable effects of their husbands exists for dotal property only and does not extend to paraphernal property. Friend v. Fenner, 2 La. Ann. 789; Stafford v. Mead, 9 Rob. (La.) 142; Montfort v. Husband, 4 Rob. (La.) 453; Stafford v. Dunwoodie, 3 Rob. (La.) 276.

Husband's discharge in bankruptcy.—The husband's liability is extinguished by his discharge in bankruptcy. Fleitas v. Richardson, 147 U. S. 550, 13 S. Ct. 495, 37 L. ed. 276.

Claim acquired against husband in another state.—It has been held that on the removal to Louisiana of French subjects, who were married and resided long after their marriage in France, a tacit mortgage in favor of the wife for preëxisting claims against her husband, originating during their residence in France, does not attach to the immovables acquired by her husband after his arrival in Louisiana. Valansart's Succession, 12 La. Ann. 848. See also Stewart v. Creditors, 12 La. Ann. 89; Arnold v. McBride, 6 La. Ann. 703. Compare Hall v. Harris, 11 Tex. 300, holding that where by the laws of another state a wife has obtained a legal or tacit mortgage on her husband's estate for her extradotal property, after their removal to Texas, such a mortgage or lien can be enforced by the wife, but cannot have priority over any lien created by the laws of the latter state before the rendition of her judgment.

Lien not divested by levy of process by creditor of husband.—The lien which, by the civil law, a wife has on her husband's property, to the amount of the dotal property of which he became possessed through her, is not divested by the levy of process by a creditor of her husband nor by a sale on execution. Chavez v. McKnight, 1 N. M. 147.

The wife must exhaust her lien on movables, subject to no special lien, before touching immovables mortgaged to a third person. Dreux v. Creditors, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 635.

The mortgage for dowry affects property of the husband and community and that sold by him before its dissolution. Cassou v. Blanque, 3 Mart. (La.) 390.

Priority of vendor's privilege.—The legal mortgage accorded by law to a married woman on the real property of her husband to secure to her the recovery of her paraphernal means, used by the husband for his own purposes, has force and effect on land purchased by the husband from the day of the purchase; but a vendor's privilege will outrank the mortgage of the wife. Lombas v. Collet, 20 La. Ann. 79.

In a credit sale of paraphernal property, the wife's mortgage attaches only from the date the money is received, and for the amount received. Denaule v. Nunez, 6 La. 27.

Retraction of renunciation.—The rule that an interruption begins only when brought home to the parties affected by it applies to the act of March 27, 1835, No. 74, allowing married women to retract within forty days from its promulgation certain renunciations of their legal rights. Landry v. Segond, 15 La. 154.

Invalid declaration in act of renunciation.—A declaration in the act of renunciation that it shall deprive the wife irrevocably of all recourse on her husband's property will not invalidate the contract, but may be treated as a mere subterfuge, and is not binding on her. Porehe v. Le Blanc, 12 La. Ann. 778.

Widow's purchase of mortgaged estate of husband.—Kenner v. Holliday, 19 La. 154.

Where a wife was party to an act of mortgage by her husband to secure the payment of the purchase-price, it was a renunciation of her rights, precluding her from afterward setting up title in herself. Richardson v. Chevalley, 26 La. Ann. 551.

What property released.—The wife's renunciation of her mortgage releases only the property on which she renounces. Dreux v. Creditors, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 502; Lanusse v. Lanna, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 103.

leaving no one else authorized to take care of the community property and the separate property of the wife, she has the implied power to do so.³¹

4. AGENCY OF HUSBAND FOR WIFE. Where the wife may legally appoint an agent, she may appoint her husband and will be bound by his acts in accordance with the ordinary rules of agency;³² but the husband's unauthorized acts will bind neither the wife nor her separate property.³³ The mere fact of the marital relation does not, it has been held, constitute the husband the agent of the wife for the purpose of binding her or her separate estate.³⁴

H. Contracts, Conveyances, and Gifts Between Husband and Wife —

1. CONTRACTS IN GENERAL. In Louisiana husband and wife are incapacitated from contracting with each other,³⁵ except in certain cases enumerated by statute.³⁶ In some of the other community states, however, husband and wife may enter into any engagement or transaction with each other respecting property in like manner as if they were unmarried.³⁷ In Texas a post-nuptial contract will not be enforced,³⁸ unless it is equitable in its terms and its observance is demanded by the clearest principles of justice.³⁹

General authority to control distinguished from power to incur liabilities.—The general mandate to the husband to act as agent for the wife, separated in property from him, confers upon him only a power of administration. He must have an express and special authority to acknowledge a debt, or to draw or indorse bills of exchange or promissory notes. Laplante v. Briant, 13 La. Ann. 566.

2. CONVEYANCES AND TRANSFERS — a. In General. It has been held that the husband may transfer or convey his separate property or his interest in the community in payment of claims due to the wife's separate estate,⁴⁰ and this even though he may be insolvent at the time.⁴¹ Indeed the rule has been laid down generally in some jurisdictions that the husband may for a consideration convey or transfer to the wife his separate property or his interest in the community property,⁴² and this by a deed directly from the husband to the wife,⁴³ although it has been held that, owing to the disability of coverture, a conveyance by the wife to the husband may not be made directly but only through a third person.⁴⁴ In Louisiana a con-

Husband's note to wife in consideration of money loaned.—A note executed by a husband to the wife, in consideration of money, the separate property of the wife, loaned to the husband, is binding upon the estate of the husband, and both principal and accrued interest remain the separate property of the wife. Hall v. Hall, 52 Tex. 294, 36 Am. Rep. 725.

Wife's contract without consideration see Proetzel v. Schroeder, 83 Tex. 684, 19 S. W. 292.

Under the Mexican law, if a husband held real estate as his separate property, which he had purchased with money earned by his wife, he could divide the land with her in discharge of his obligation, arising from her having earned the purchase-money, and she would hold her part as her sole and separate property. Fuller v. Ferguson, 26 Cal. 546.

Transfer of savings-bank deposit.—A transfer of a savings-bank deposit from a husband to his wife in consideration of her relinquishing a claim of homestead in land (presumably community property), and joining with him in a deed of it, vests in her absolutely and for her own use the title to the deposit. Schuler v. Sav., etc., Soc., 64 Cal. 397, 1 Pac. 479.

Cattle transferred by purchaser of homestead.—Cattle received in exchange for a homestead which is community property are not subject to execution against the homesteader, where such cattle are conveyed by the purchaser of the homestead directly to the homesteader's wife in consideration of her joining in the sale of the homestead. *Blum v. Delivery of deed held unnecessary.—Under a statute giving the husband sole management of his wife's property during coverture, it has been held that he is the custodian of her title papers; and, as between him and her and their heirs, his deed to her is effectual without actual delivery to her. *Brown v. tract of sale between husband and wife is void unless it comes within certain exceptions enumerated by statute.⁴⁵

b. Voluntary Conveyances and Transfers. Gifts between husband and wife, in the absence of fraud upon third persons, are valid generally under the American community system.⁴⁶ Such donations become the separate property of the donee.⁴⁷ Thus a voluntary conveyance by the husband to the wife of his separate property or of the community property, provided that there be no fraud upon creditors, will vest the property in her separately.⁴⁸ Conveyances or transfers to take effect as gifts must, however, be free from fraud upon third persons,⁴⁹ and in general clear and satisfactory evidence of intention will be required, in contests as to title, to establish the fact of a gift.⁵⁰ In Louisiana, moreover, all donations

Dotal immovables, whether valued or not, cannot be transferred to the husband, even by express agreement either during the marriage or by antenuptial contract. Esneault v. Cooley, 16 La. Ann. 165, where, however, it was intimated that a different rule applied to movables.

A husband may purchase at a probate sale of a succession to which his wife is an heir, since such purchase does not constitute a sale by the wife to the husband. Huguet v. Bates, 32 La. Ann. 454.

By the Spanish law, husband and wife could make any onerous contract with each other, as a sale. Labbe v. Abat, 2 La. 553, 22 Am. Dec. 151.

Mere verbal sales and gifts between husband and wife should only be admitted, even as between their heirs, on clear and satisfactory proof of an actual divesting and vesting of the title. Bradshaw v. Mayfield, 18 Tex. 21.

Receipt in wife's name for money deposited in bank.—The fact that a husband deposits his money in a bank and takes a receipt in his wife's name does not constitute a donation to his wife, but the money remains community property, subject on his death to be administered as belonging to his estate. Wellborn v. Odd Fellows Bldg., etc., Co., 56 Tex. 501.

Deposit in bank to be drawn by either husband or wife.—In re Cunningham, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 76.

Formal requisites of donation.—In the absence of proof of a manual gift, a donation by a husband to his wife will not be valid unless an act be passed before a notary and two witnesses. Coste's Succession, 43 La. Ann. 144, 9 So. 62. A donation from one spouse to the other, made during coverture and without the forms of a donation inter vivos, is invalid. Atkinson v. Atkinson, 15 La. Ann. 491. Cal. Civ. Code, § 172, providing that a married man may not make a gift of community property unless his wife,

c. Conveyance by Third Person to Wife by Husband's Direction. Although there is a prima facie presumption that a conveyance by a third person to the wife by direction of the husband, when paid for out of common property, is community property,⁵² yet it may be shown by extrinsic evidence that it was intended as a gift, and therefore separate property.⁵³

d. Conveyances in Trust. By a deed of trust, the rents and profits of the trust estate may be secured to the separate use of the wife.⁵⁴ So it has been held that the wife may convey to the husband through the intervention of a trustee.⁵⁵ But where a wife makes a deed to a trustee for the benefit of her husband, she may attack the deed on the ground of duress and undue influence on the part of the husband.⁵⁶

I. Sales, Conveyances, and Encumbrances — 1. COMMUNITY PROPERTY — a. Sale by Husband. By virtue of the husband's sole right to control the community property,⁵⁷ he may, in most jurisdictions where the community system obtains, alienate, during the coverture, even without the consent or joinder of the wife, any of the property belonging to the community.⁵⁸ He must, however, act in writing, consent thereto, does not apply to a gift by him to her. Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 145 Cal. 596, 79 Pac. 272.

Transfers made by the husband in the satisfaction of paraphernal claims of the wife are excepted from the general rules governing the revocatory action. Thompson v. Freeman, 34 La. Ann. 992. See also Duval v. Roder, 46 La. Ann. 814, 15 So. 201.

Gift propter nuptias not revocable when vested. Stauffer v. Morgan, 39 La. Ann. 632, 2 So. 98.

By the Spanish law a donation by one of the married parties to the other was revocable during the donor's life, but was fixed by his death. Labbe v. Abat, 2 La. 553, 22 Am. Dec. 151. See also Fuller v. Ferguson, 26 Cal. 546; Ferris v. Parker, 13 Tex. 385.

By Roman law gifts between husband and wife were not, as is sometimes said, prohibited (see Ferris v. Parker, 13 Tex. 385), but the law treated a donatio inter virum et uxorem as though it were a donatio causa mortis. The property might be recovered at any time, but if the donor died before exercising such right, the gift became valid ex post facto. Sohm Inst. Rom. L. § 94.

Purchase with separate funds.—If, however, funds for a purchase in the name of the wife are advanced from the separate means of the husband, the presumption of a gift arises. Dunham v. Chatham, 21 Tex. 231, 73 Am. Dec. 228.

in good faith toward the wife, and if he disposes of property with intent to defraud her of her rights his conveyance or disposal will be voidable on that ground.⁵⁹ In Washington it is provided by statute that the husband shall have no right to sell or encumber the real property belonging to the community, unless the wife joins with him in the execution of the deed.⁶⁰

An assignment for the benefit of creditors executed by a husband and wife, covering property that is actually community property, and given to secure community debts, is valid, even though the property and debts are described as being those of the wife. Hayden Saddlery Hardware Co. v. Ramsay, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 185, 36 S. W. 595. See also Schmick v. Bateman, 77 Tex. 326, 14 S. W. 22.

An unrecorded sale of community property by the husband does not bind the wife, who subsequently renounces the community. She is a third person, standing in the position of a creditor, who can be bound by registry alone. Brassac v. Ducros, & Rob. (La.) 335.

Sale after dissolution of coverture.—Where a husband remained in undisputed possession of community real estate from the death of his wife, in April, 1868, until 1882, when he sold the same without objection to a bona fide purchaser for value, the law will presume that the sale was lawfully made, and this presumption will prevail to protect the title of such purchaser, whether there were community debts at the death of the wife or not, in a suit by the heirs of the wife. Crary v. Field, 10 N. M. 257, 61 Pac. 118.

Gifts.—It has been held that the Louisiana code limits the power of the husband to dispose of the real estate of the community to acts of alienation by sale or otherwise where an equivalent in value is impliedly received for the community property disposed of. Bister v. Menge, 21 La. Ann. 216. Compare Trahan v. Trahan, 8 La. Ann. 455. So by the amendment of 1891 of the California statute the husband cannot make a gift of community property, or convey the same without a valuable consideration, unless the wife in writing consents thereto. Spreckles v. Spreckles, 116 Cal. 339, 48 Pac. 228, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170, 36 L. R. A. 497.

Rights of innocent purchasers.—Harris v. Hardeman, 15 Tex. 466.

Sale for husband's personal benefit.—A husband cannot, at will, sell property belonging to the community to pay a community debt to himself from the proceeds, and re-invest the same in separate property. Sharp v. Zeller, 110 La. 61, 34 So. 129.

60. Kimble v. Kimble, 17 Wash. 75, 49 Pac. 216; Wortman v. Vorhies, 14 Wash. 152, 44 Pac. 129; Mabie v. Whittaker, 10 Wash. 656, 39 Pac. 172; Thygesen v. Neufelder, 9 Wash. 455, 37 Pac. 672.

The contract of a husband to lease community property, made without the wife joining in the contract, is an encumbrance, within the meaning of the statute, prohibiting a husband from selling or encumbering community property of himself or wife, and, when the lessee knew that the land was community property, the lease is void. Hoover v. Chambers, 3 Wash. Terr. 26, 13 Pac. 547. See also Snyder v. Harding, 34 Wash. 286, 75 Pac. 812; Isaacs v. Holland, 4 Wash. 54, 29 Pac. 976.

Power to dispose of personalty.—But in Washington the husband has the same power of disposition over the community personal property that he has over her separate personal property. Tustin v. Adams, 87 Fed. 377, construing Washington statute. The interest conferred by a lease for any term of years, on the lessee or his assignee, is a chattel interest, which he can dispose of without his wife's consent. Tibbals v. Iffland, 10 Wash. 451, 39 Pac. 102.

Assignment for benefit of creditors.—A husband, in the absence of fraud, may assign all the community property for the benefit of community creditors without the wife joining in the deed, as such assignment is only a surrender of the property into the custody of the court, to be applied as the law requires. Thygesen v. Neufelder, 9 Wash. 455, 37 Pac. 672.

Sale of improvements by the husband alone, accompanied by his placing the purchaser in possession of the land, without any objection by the wife, passes whatever interest

b. Sale by Wife. The wife has no power of disposal over the community property, and in general a sale or conveyance of such property by her alone is absolutely void.⁶¹ But it is held that a deed of community property by the wife in which the husband joins, expressing his assent and authority, will pass the title.⁶² In Texas, moreover, the rule is laid down by statute that when the wife has been permanently abandoned by her husband she has the right to sell the community property for the maintenance and support of the family.⁶³

they have, even if it be admitted that any of their property rights constituted an interest in land. Fowler v. Burke, 13 Wash. 13, 42 Pac. 624.

Location of mining claims.—The statute requiring husband and wife to join in the conveyance of community real estate has no application to the property of the husband as locator of a mining claim on public lands, since U. S. Rev. St. § 2322 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 1425], creating such right of location, fixes the sole property therein in the locator. Phoenix Min., etc., Co. v. Scott, 20 Wash. 48, 54 Pac. 777.

Contract to sell community property.—A contract to sell community real property need not be signed by the wife in order to be binding; it is enough if the contract when made by the husband has the sanction and approval of the wife, or if it is subsequently ratified by her. State Bank v. Dickson, 35 Wash. 641, 77 Pac. 1067.

Possession under oral contract.—O'Connor v. Jackson, 33 Wash. 219, 74 Pac. 372. See also Konnerup v. Frandsen, 8 Wash. 551, 36 Pac. 493.

Marital agreement as to separate property.—Where there is an oral agreement between husband and wife to allow property acquired by either to remain the property of the one so acquiring it, a conveyance for value, by the husband alone, if an equitable interest acquired by him, is good as against a subsequent transfer of such interest by both husband and wife to one taking with notice of such agreement. Calhoun v. Leary, 6 Wash. 17, 32 Pac. 1070.

Where a husband who has been trading in his wife's name directs the wife to execute in her own name an assignment of the community property for the benefit of creditors, the assignment so executed is binding as against his attaching creditors. Wetzel v. Simon, 87 Tex. 403, 28 S. W. 274, 942.

Wife's sole mortgage invalid.—Where real estate is the community property of the husband and wife, the wife's separate mortgage thereof and the proceedings for the foreclosure of the mortgage are invalid. Humphries v. Sorenson, 33 Wash. 563, 74 Pac. 690.

Wife's assignment of a claim relative to community realty.—The fact that the real estate represented in a contract of sale is community property does not render invalid an assignment by the wife of a claim relative thereto. Grippen v. Benham, 5 Wash. 589, 32 Pac. 555.

Indorsee of note without notice of community.—Where a note, payable to a married woman or order, is indorsed for value before maturity to one who supposes her to be married, but has no notice that the note is community property, a valid title passes, and the indorsee can recover against the maker, although the husband intervenes to disaffirm the indorsement. Caster v. Peterson, 2 Wash. 204, 26 Pac. 223, 26 Am. St. Rep. 854.

62. Hardin v. Sparks, 70 Tex. 429, 7 S. W. 769 (holding that the fact that a husband, who by the law of Texas has full power to convey community property, conveys also in the name of his wife, does not change the effect of the deed); Maxson v. Jennings, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 700, 48 S. W. 781. See also Thomas v. Chance, 11 Tex. 634; Clopper v. Sage, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 296, 37 S. W. 363; Hayden Saddlery Hardware Co. v. Ramsay, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 185, 36 S. W. 595.

Deed by husband and wife construed.—A deed by husband and wife of "our undivided interest of one-half" in certain land (the grantee immediately reconveying to the husband) will be held to convey their undivided community interest, and not the undivided separate interest of the wife. Stratton v. Robinson, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 285, 67 S. W. 539.

Deed executed by widow as administratrix.—A warranty deed of community property, executed by the widow as sole executrix, passes her undivided one-half interest in the property, although the deed be invalid as to the other half. Masterson v. Stevens, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 364.

The wife may sell to preserve the property from loss. Woodson v. Massenburg, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 146, 22 S. W. 106.

A married woman, during the insanity of her husband, has a legal right to dispose of so much of the community property as may be necessary to support herself and her children, and, if there be no community property, she has the right to the same extent to dispose of her husband's separate property. Forbes v. Moore, 32 Tex. 195. But she cannot dispose of the community property in

c. Rights and Liabilities of Purchasers. Where one in good faith purchases lands from the husband without having actual or constructive notice of the wife's interest, the purchaser will be protected against her claim, or that of her heirs.⁶⁴ Likewise purchasers without knowledge of the facts will not be affected by fraud practised by the husband upon the wife.⁶⁵ In Texas, however, the purchaser of a "head-right certificate," issued under statutory provisions to the head of a family, is charged with notice that it was issued to a married man,⁶⁶ and, in Washington, where the purchaser knows that the land is community property, his contract made with the husband alone for its sale is void.⁶⁷ Where the husband's deed conveys land, one undivided part of the same being community, and the other undivided part being separate property of the wife, the grantee will take only the community property, becoming a tenant in common with the wife.⁶⁸ But it has been held that where a transferee takes community property encumbered with a mortgage for its price, and acquired as community property under a covenant against alienation, he will nevertheless, as against the wife and her heirs, be entitled, in case of its seizure and sale to pay the mortgage, to the residue of the price after such payment.⁶⁹

d. Mortgage by Husband. The husband may not only convey absolutely but may also mortgage the community property,⁷⁰ and it may be stated as a general order to pay an antecedent debt. Cason v. Laney, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 420.

64. Edwards v. Brown, 68 Tex. 329, 4 S. W. 380, 15 S. W. 87 [explaining Johnson v. Harrison, 48 Tex. 257; Garner v. Thompson, 1 Tex. L. Rev. 286]; Sadler v. Niesz, 5 Wash. 182, 31 Pac. 630, 1030.

Burden of proof as to notice of wife's interest.—Where a married man conveys land to which he holds the legal title, the burden is on those claiming under the wife to show that the grantee had notice of the wife's interest in the property, and not on him to show that he did not have notice. Saunders v. Isbell, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 513, 24 S. W. 307.

Grantor living with wife.—Where a married man, in whom is the record title to community property, conveys it, representing himself as unmarried, and the grantee believes such representation, and takes the deed in good faith, he does not acquire any title to the property, if his grantor was at the time living with his wife, and she was guilty of no act or omission on which an estoppel could be founded. Adams v. Black, 6 Wash. 528, 33 Pac. 1074 [distinguishing Sadler v. Niesz, 5 Wash. 182, 31 Pac. 630, 1030, where the wife was living apart from her husband].

Constructive notice.—Where, on the death of a wife, there were no debts with which community real estate was charged, and the husband thereafter sold such land while it was occupied by two of the heirs of his deceased wife, and after he had surrendered possession, a purchaser of the vendor's lien note securing the price was charged with constructive notice of the rights of all the heirs. Davidson v. Green, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 394, 65 S. W. 1110.

Wife's recorded deed made during abandonment by husband.—A purchaser of community property from a husband who has abandoned his wife must at his peril take notice of a prior recorded deed made by the wife after the abandonment. Zimpleman v. Robb, 53 Tex. 274.

65. Webb v. Burney, 70 Tex. 322, 7 S. W. 841; Smitheal v. Smith, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 446, 31 S. W. 422.

Beutler*, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 380, 41 S. W. 658; Hearfield v. Bridges, 75 Fed. 47, 21 C. C. A. 212, decided under California statute.

Rights of mortgagee.—A mortgage accepted on the faith of a recorded title based on a conveyance made by the husband as the head and master of the community is not affected by the fraud of the husband, as against the wife, in encumbering it. Lacassagne v. Abraham, 51 La. Ann. 840, 25 So. 441. See also Terry v. Gilkeson, 50 La. Ann. 1040, 24 So. 128.

Husband's agreement to procure wife's renunciation.—The husband's stipulation with his mortgage creditors to procure his wife's renunciation does not affect the validity of the mortgage, without proof of threats of violence on his part or of fraud. Porche v. Le Blanc, 12 La. Ann. 778.

Rights of heirs of first wife.—Where the legal title to community property was in the husband, a mortgage on one tract, executed by the husband and a second wife after the first wife's death, is void as against the children of the first marriage, who inherited rule that the wife's execution and acknowledgment are not essential to the validity of such mortgage.⁷¹

e. Mortgage by Wife. The wife has no power to mortgage the community property,⁷² although if she does so and survives her husband, the mortgage, it has been held, becomes a lien on the interest inherited by her.⁷³

2. SEPARATE, PARAPHERNAL, OR DOTAL PROPERTY—a. Power of Alienation—

(1) WIFE'S PROPERTY. Over the wife's separate property the husband can exercise no power of alienation.⁷⁴ This right is vested in her;⁷⁵ but the mode of their mother's community interest, unless the mortgagee occupied the position of an innocent purchaser. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co. v. Dulock, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 67 S. W. 172.

Mortgage by husband living separate from wife.—A mortgage on community property, executed by a man living separate from his wife, and holding himself out as unmarried, is valid, unless the mortgagee knew that the mortgagor was a married man, or had such knowledge as would lead a man of ordinary prudence to further investigation. Schwabacher v. Van Reyphen, 6 Wash. 154, 32 Pac. 1061. See also Canadian, etc., Mortg., etc., Co. v. Bloomer, 14 Wash. 491, 45 Pac. 34.

Cancellation of mortgage.—A married woman who has not renounced the community is without right to have a mortgage thereon canceled as if she were a third person. Neal v. Lapline, 48 La. Ann. 424, 19 So. 361. Compare Belden v. Hanlon, 32 La. Ann. 85.

Wife's rights upon foreclosure.—Where several lots are mortgaged by the same act separately and specially for a fixed part of the debt, and the wife renounces her rights on them, a surplus at a sale under the mortgage, yielded by any one lot over its part of the debt, must be applied to her claims, after deducting its proportion of the costs of the sale. Brassac v. Ducros, 4 Rob. (La.) 335. See also Noel v. Clark, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 136, 60 S. W. 356; Hirshfeld v. Howard, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 59 S. W. 55, (1901) 60 S. W. 806.

72. Remington v. Higgins, 54 Cal. 620; Parry v. Kelley, 52 Cal. 334.

Wife abandoned by husband.—In Texas a wife having authority, by reason of the husband's abandonment of her, to bind the community estate for necessities, can execute a valid mortgage thereon for debts theretofore incurred for necessities. Fermier v. Brannan, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 543, 53 S. W. 699. To same effect see Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Redeker, 75 Tex. 310, 12 S. W. 855, 16 Am. St. Rep. 887; Slator v. Neal, 64 Tex. 222; *Heidenheimer v. Assignment of mortgage.—A married woman cannot, without the consent of her husband, assign a mortgage on common property. Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 490.

73. Parry v. Kelley, 52 Cal. 334.

74. McMurrin v. Soria, 4 How. (Miss.) 154 (construing the law of Louisiana); Stone v. Sledge, 87 Tex. 49, 26 S. W. 1068, 47 Am. St. Rep. 65; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Donahoo, 59 Tex. 128; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Durrett, 57 Tex. 48.

By the Spanish law the husband could not alienate the wife's paraphernal property without her consent. Boyle v. Chambers, 32 Mo. 46. See also Allen v. Urquhart, 19 Tex. 480.

Right to control does not include right to sell. O'Brien v. Foreman, 46 Cal. 80.

Leasing wife's separate property.—Where a wife leased her real estate, with a condition that it should not be sublet without her written consent, the consent of her husband was not sufficient to justify a subletting, as the fact of the wife's leasing the property herself showed that she retained the control and administration of it, so far as the lease was concerned at least. Wolls v. Collins, 18 La. Ann. 470.

Acts not amounting to ratification of disposition of note by husband.—The mere acceptance by the wife, as administratrix, of a claim against the husband's estate, growing out of a note payable to her and disposed of by the husband is not, as a matter of law, a ratification of the husband's disposition of the note. Hamilton v. Brooks, 51 Tex. 142.

75. Preston v. Humphreys, 5 Rob. (La.) 299; Slaughter v. Glenn, 98 U. S. 242, 25 L. ed. 122, holding that land in Texas belonging to a married woman is termed in that state her "separate property," and she has in equity all the power to dispose of it which could be given to her by the amplest deed of settlement. See also Bodley v. Ferguson, 30 Cal. 511 (holding that the California act of April 17, 1850, does not apply to the separate property of married women who lived in California and acquired such property before its cession to the United States; and that they had full right under the treaty of cession and the constitution to convey or contract to convey the same, subject only to the restrictions applicable to transfer prescribed by statute must be complied with,⁷⁶ and the husband's joinder in her conveyance is generally required.⁷⁷ In Louisiana the wife's paraphernal property may be alienated with the consent of both spouses.⁷⁸ So in Louisiana under the express provisions of the Code immovables settled as dowry may be alienated with the wife's consent, when the alienation of the same has been common-law contracts generally); Cartwright v. Hollis, 5 Tex. 152.

Due delivery necessary.—Where a deed of a married woman, executed to a bank in settlement of her husband's defalcation, is silently handed by her, before she acknowledges it, to one of the directors, who passes it to the notary to attach his certificate, there is no delivery, especially where such settlement or an acceptance of the deed is not authorized by the board of directors. Healdsburg Bank v. Bailhache, 65 Cal. 327, 4 Pac. 106.

A verbal sale by a wife of her property, with her husband's consent, was good in Texas prior to 1840. Monroe v. Searcy, 20 Tex. 348.

Land certificate.—A married woman may sell or transfer her interest in a land certificate by parol. Ballard v. Carmichael, 83 Tex. 355, 18 S. W. 734; Ikard v. Thompson, 81 Tex. 285, 16 S. W. 1019.

New York*, etc., Land Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 1057; Coleman v. Vollmer, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. 413; Ford v. Ballard, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 376, 21 S. W. 146.

Time of signing.—The wife need not sign or acknowledge her deed at the same time with the husband. Halbert v. Hendrix, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 911.

Husband need not appear as grantor.—A deed purporting to convey property claimed as the separate property of the wife, signed by husband and wife and properly acknowledged by both, is admissible in evidence, although the name of the husband is not mentioned in the body of the deed. Ochoa v. Miller, 59 Tex. 460. See also Dentzel v. Waldie, 30 Cal. 138.

Where a declaration of homestead is made under Cal. St. (1860) p. 311, as amended by St. (1862) p. 593, declaring that a husband and wife hold the homestead as joint tenants, and upon the death of either it shall vest absolutely in the survivor, the homestead property, on the death of the husband, becomes the separate property of the wife, so that on her marriage it is disposable without her husband's consent. Graham v. Stewart, 68 Cal. 374, 9 Pac. 555.

A married woman can execute a valid bond for title or executory contract to convey her separate real estate, when she is joined by her husband, and the instrument is properly acknowledged, as required by the laws in case of conveyances by her. Angler v. Coward, 79 Tex. 551, 15 S. W. 698. See also Clayton v. Frazier, 33 Tex. 91.

Husband's consent presumed.—In Texas it has been held that in a conveyance by a wife of her separate property in 1839, it was not necessary that the assent of the husband should appear by the instrument of conveyance. The silent acquiescence of the husband for fourteen years warranted a presumption that his assent had been given in due form. Poor v. Boyce, 12 Tex. 440. See also McKisick v. Colquhoun, 18 Tex. 148.

78. Caldwell v. Trezevant, 111 La. 410, 35 So. 619; Morrow v. Goudchaux, 41 La. Ann. 711, 6 So. 563; Delacroix v. Nolan, 7 La. Ann. 682 (holding that if the wife, with full knowledge of her rights, becomes in due form a party to an act by which her husband sells her property, she is bound by her consent, and the sale is valid); Kirkland v. New Orleans Gaslight, etc., Co., 1 La. Ann. 299; Langlini v. Broussard, 12 Mart. (La.) 242; De Armas v. Hampton, 11 Mart. (La.) 552; O'Connor v. Barre, 3 Mart. (La.) 446.

Sale of property belonging partly to both spouses.—Where the husband makes a sale of property partly belonging to himself and partly to his wife, in which his wife joins him, and declares that she gives and grants to the vendee "all and singular any rights, titles, or privileges which she may have in her own separate right or otherwise, in and to the property mentioned in the act, and binds herself to maintain the validity of the act," it is a valid alienation of the wife's separate property, and binding on her. Henderson v. Fort, 15 La. Ann. 383.

Husband incurs no warranty.—A husband, joining in a sale by his wife merely to assist her, incurs no warranty. Lynch v. Kitchen, 2 La. Ann. 843.

Refusal of authorization by husband.—Where the wife wishes to sell her paraphernal property, and her husband refuses his authorization, she must apply to the parish judge of her domicile, who may authorize her to contract. Fowler v. Boyd, 12 La. 70.

Under the Spanish law, although the assent of the husband to the wife's disposition of her paraphernal property must appear on the face of the instrument, or must always be given, yet the husband might ratify the wife's act done without his assent by a gen-allowed by the marriage contract, but their value must be reinvested in other immovables.⁷⁹

(II) HUSBAND'S PROPERTY. The husband's separate property may be conveyed or mortgaged by him without the aid of the wife.⁸⁰

b. Conveyance by Agent or Attorney. When the statute provides that the separate lands of the wife can be conveyed only by the mode therein prescribed, and no provision is made authorizing her to appoint an attorney in fact, she cannot convey by attorney,⁸¹ and consequently a deed of her separate property executed by her husband under a power of attorney from her is void.⁸² The wife, however, may, it is held, execute a deed of her land in her own name and as attorney in fact of her husband,⁸³ and under a joint power of attorney from both husband and wife a third person as the attorney in fact may execute a valid lease or conveyance of the wife's separate property.⁸⁴

c. Consideration. The wife may convey her separate property in discharge of any debt exclusively chargeable against her estate,⁸⁵ and it has been held even for the payment of her husband's debts.⁸⁶ The husband, however, is entitled to no part of the proceeds as a consideration for joining in the wife's conveyance.⁸⁷

d. Estoppel to Assert Invalidity. Where the statute prescribes an exclusive method of conveyance by a married woman, she will not be estopped by a deed not executed in accordance with such statutory requirements.⁸⁸ So, when the wife cannot legally alienate her separate property in payment of or as security for her husband's debts, she will not be estopped from seeking to annul her deed on such ground by her declarations in the conveyance.⁸⁹ In absence of fraud she is not estopped from revoking a parol gift of land,⁹⁰ nor will the acts of her executor ratify an invalid conveyance of her property during her lifetime.⁹¹ The wife, however, will be estopped, if with knowledge of the facts she accepts the consideration paid for the purchase of her personal property sold by her husband.⁹²

Ann. 834 (holding that while immovables settled as dowry cannot be alienated during marriage, except in the cases provided for in the code, yet, when alienated in conformity to law, the sale is irrevocable, forever freeing them from any dotal rights of the wife); De Armas v. Hampton, 6 Mart. (La.) 567.

92. Woodward v. McNeill, 75 Tex. 146, 13 S. W. 222.

So it has been held that, when living apart from her husband, and representing herself as unmarried, she will be bound by her deed acknowledged as a single woman.⁹³ Where the husband joins with his wife in the conveyance of realty held out to be her separate property, he is estopped, as against innocent purchasers for value, from asserting that it was in fact community property.⁹⁴

e. Rights and Liabilities of Purchasers. Although it may be provided by statute that the wife cannot bind herself for her husband's debts, yet where one purchases, in good faith, her separate property, the sale will not be set aside on the ground that a part of the purchase-price went to pay such debts,⁹⁵ and the purchaser is not bound to see to the proper investment of the purchase-price by the husband.⁹⁶ One who purchases in good faith from the husband property legally presumed to be a part of the community will take good title to the same,⁹⁷ and the record of a deed by husband and wife reciting that the property is the wife's separate property, is not notice to an execution purchaser when the execution was levied prior to such record.⁹⁸ Neither the husband nor the wife can claim community rights in property sold as the separate property of either, where a purchaser without notice has acquired it, under circumstances estopping the setting up of such claim.⁹⁹ But where the wife's property is illegally conveyed, or sold by the husband, without authority, she can recover the same, provided there be no ground for estoppel.¹

Illegal sale of wife's real property.—The fact that a married woman accepts the benefits of an illegal sale of her property, without any act of disaffirmance, with full knowledge, does not amount to a ratification or estoppel, nor does it raise an equity against her right to recover. Owens v. New York, etc., Land Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 1057. But see Morris v. Turner, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 708, 24 S. W. 959.

A husband who witnesses a deed of the wife purporting to convey the wife's separate estate, and who, although he must be presumed to know its contents, does not dispute or object thereto, is estopped to deny the validity of the deed. Stockton Sav. Bank v. Staples, 98 Cal. 189, 32 Pac. 936.

Purchase-money notes in hands of innocent third parties.—Where a married woman sells by authentic act her paraphernal property, although the sale is a disguised mortgage for the benefit of the husband, if the notes given for the purchase-price fall into the hands of innocent third parties, the vendor's lien and special mortgage securing the notes will be enforced. Lester v. Connelly, 46 La. Ann. 340, 15 So. 4.

Gift of proceeds to husband.—A wife can, with the consent of her husband, sell her separate property and give the proceeds to him, who then becomes her debtor; and such sale being made to raise money for her husband does not make it any the less a sale as to third parties without knowledge. Walker v. Limongy, 26 La. Ann. 324.

Under the Spanish law, where a husband sells the separate property of his wife, all that it is incumbent upon the purchaser to show is that the price paid inures to her benefit at the time that she receives the proceeds of the sale, and he cannot be held responsible for the subsequent management of the property. *Allen v. Ignorance of marital relation.—Where, however, a pledgee of personal property is ignorant of the relationship of husband and wife, credit cannot be presumed to have been given on reliance that the property pledged was community property. Kempner v. Comer, 73 Tex. 196, 11 S. W. 194.

f. Power to Pledge or Mortgage.—(i) IN GENERAL. In some jurisdictions the wife's separate property cannot be encumbered except by an instrument in writing signed by both husband and wife, and privily acknowledged by her.² In Louisiana a married woman may mortgage and give securities affecting her separate estate only when authorized either by her husband, or by the judge of the district or parish.³ Her mortgage or pledge must be, moreover, for her own benefit or for the securing of her separate debt.⁴

(ii) FOR DEBTS OF HUSBAND. A married woman may as a general rule mortgage her separate property for the debts of her husband.⁵ In Louisiana, Purchase with notice of wife's ownership.—No contract made by the husband, for the sale of property conveyed to the wife by a third party, can confer any right on one who had notice that it was the separate property of the wife, unless express authority be shown from the wife to the husband to make such contract. Johnson v. Poag, 39 Tex. 92.

Sale of property taken in exchange for paraphernal property.—If the husband sell, without his wife's consent, property exchanged for her paraphernal property, his vendee cannot attack the title by alleging that she had none to the property given in exchange. Newson v. Adams, 3 La. 231.

Fraud upon wife.—Cole v. Bammel, 62 Tex. 108.

Refunding consideration.—A married woman who seeks to recover an estate illegally conveyed by her husband is not required to refund the consideration received by her. Owens v. New York, etc., Land Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 1057.

In California the statute at one time required the husband's joinder in a mortgage of the wife's separate estate. Spear v. Ward, 20 Cal. 659; Harrison v. Brown, 16 Cal. 287. But under a subsequent statute the husband's signature to the wife's mortgage was held to be unnecessary. Marlow v. Barlew, 53 Cal. 456.

Mortgage on lands partly separate.—Real property, purchased by a married woman in her own name, partly with her separate funds, and partly with money borrowed by her for that purpose, becomes in part her separate estate, and in part community property; and where she gives a mortgage on the whole tract, whatever separate interest she has may be foreclosed, and it is not for her to object that the decree directs the sale of the whole tract. Loring v. Stuart, 79 Cal. 200, 21 Pac. 651.

Burden of proof as to authorization.—Where a married woman obtained a certificate of the judge authorizing her to borrow money and mortgage her separate property, in an action on a mortgage given, the burden of proof is on her to show that it was not given under such authority, but was her separate act. Berwick v. Frere, 49 La. Ann. 201, 21 So. 692.

A substantial variation, to the disadvantage of the wife, from the terms of the authorization of the judge, pursuant to La. Rev. Civ. Code, art. 128, does not annul the mortgage, but destroys the efficacy of the authorization, so that the creditor must prove aliunde that the debt incurred to her separate benefit. West v. De Moss, 50 La. Ann. 1349, 24 So. 325. See also Stuffer v. Puckett, 30 La. Ann. 811; Conrad v. Le Blanc, 29 La. Ann. 123.

Mortgage must be free from fraud.—Mortgages by the wife of her separate property, for the benefit of the husband, should be closely scrutinized, and they must be free from symptoms of fraud, coercion, or undue influence. Shelby v. Burtis, 18 Tex. 644.

Mortgage to secure future debt.—A wife may execute a mortgage jointly with her husband, which shall subject her separate property to the payment of debts which may be contracted by the husband subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, or to the payment of interest on a debt due at the time. McCormick v. Blum, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 9, 22 S. W. 1054, 1120.

Wife's right to subrogation.—Money borrowed on the mortgage of a wife's separate land is community property, and hence, on payment therewith of the husband's debt, the wife is not entitled to subrogation to the creditor's securities against the husband. Canfield v. Moore, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 472, 41 S. W. 718.

however, the wife cannot bind herself or mortgage or pledge her separate property for her husband's debts;⁶ and when the husband controls her paraphernal estate he cannot mortgage the same to secure his own indebtedness.⁷

g. Rights and Liabilities of Mortgagees or Pledgees. In jurisdictions where the wife cannot mortgage or pledge her separate property except for her own benefit, it is held that where a mortgagee has taken in good faith a duly authorized mortgage upon such property, under representations that the consideration was for her own use, his rights will be protected against her denial afterward that she received the benefit.⁸ So as a general rule where the wife sets up compulsion or undue influence on the part of her husband, the rights of the mortgagees without notice will not be affected thereby.⁹ The transferee of a negotiable bond who receives the same before maturity as collateral from the husband without notice of the wife's ownership acquires a good title.¹⁰

erty, and also on separate property of the wife, to secure a debt of the husband, she is entitled to have the community property first exhausted to pay the debt before resort is had to her separate property. Schneider v. Sellers, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 226, 61 S. W. 541.

A life-insurance policy, in which a married woman is named as beneficiary, vests a complete title in her as separate paraphernal property, which cannot be pledged as security for the debts of her husband or of the community. Putnam v. New York L. Ins. Co., 42 La. Ann. 739, 7 So. 602.

Authorizing pledge by husband.—Union Nat. Bank v. Hartwell, 84 Ala. 379, 4 So. 156.

Effect of subsequent use of proceeds by husband.—A mortgage by a wife for money borrowed for her own use under proper judicial authority is not invalidated by evidence that the money was received from her by her husband, and used in his business. Johnson v. Pessou, 49 La. Ann. 109, 21 So. 177.

Ratification after husband's death.—The wife may, after the death of the husband, ratify the act by which she bound herself and her property for his debt, during his lifetime, either expressly or impliedly by silence. Brownson v. Weeks, 47 La. Ann. 1042, 17 So. 489.

7. Compton v. Sandford, 28 La. Ann. 237. Money borrowed in husband's name and used for wife's benefit.—A husband borrowing money in his name on his individual note, which he secures by mortgage on his wife's property, and employing it in paying his wife's notes secured by mortgage on her property, creates no liability on the part of the wife through her property to the lender. Aiken v. Robinson, 52 La. Ann. 925, 27 So. 134, 529.

band to alienate the immovable dotal property, provided that an investment of equal value be made in other immovables, does not authorize the husband to mortgage such property to pay off another mortgage. Belouguet v. Lanata, 13 La. Ann. 2.

Notice of intended use for husband's benefit.—Where, on the face of an act of mortgage by the wife, knowledge was brought home to the mortgagee that the money about to be borrowed was intended to be used for the purposes of cultivating a plantation carried on by the husband for the benefit of the community, the wife will not be bound. Berwick v. Frere, 49 La. Ann. 201, 21 So. 692.

Innocent holder of mortgage notes.—Where the mortgage given by a married woman for the benefit of her husband accompanies the note which it secures in its transfer to an innocent holder, the secret equities between the original parties do not affect the title of the transferee. Lester v. Connolly, 46 La. Ann. 340, 15 So. 4.

Burden of proof as to character of debt secured.—Under the former rule, in Louisiana, where a wife denied that she derived benefit from an act of mortgage given by her husband, and signed by her, on her separate property, it was sufficient to put the creditor on proof that the debt contracted by the act inured to her benefit, or to the advantage of her separate estate. Levy v. Ledoux, 22 La. Ann. 404. See also Hardin v. Wolf, 29 La. Ann. 333. By the present rule, however, where a married woman, with the authority of her husband and the sanction of the judge, executes a mortgage on her property, to secure the payment of money borrowed by her, it is prima facie valid. O'Keefe v. Handy, 31 La. Ann. 832.

J. Community and Separate Debts—1. LIABILITY OF COMMUNITY—a. Community Debts. The community property is liable for the community debts,¹¹ and it will be presumed that every debt contracted during the marriage is a community debt.¹²

b. Separate Debts. The community property is in general also liable for the husband's separate debts.¹³ In Washington, however, the real estate belonging to the community is not liable for the husband's separate debts,¹⁴ although the personal property of the community is liable.¹⁵

c. Antenuptial Debts. It is the general rule under the community system that the community property is liable for the debts of either the husband or the wife contracted before the marriage.¹⁶ In Louisiana, however, the antenuptial

Illustrations of community debts.—The following obligations and liabilities have been held to constitute community debts enforceable against the community: A judgment for the statutory liability on corporate stock purchased by the husband (Shuey v. Adair, 24 Wash. 378, 64 Pac. 536); a note executed by the husband in consideration of money borrowed for building a house for the husband and wife to live in (Clark v. Eltinge, 29 Wash. 215, 69 Pac. 736); a note executed by a husband and his sons (Reed v. Loney, 22 Wash. 433, 61 Pac. 41). So where a wife joins her husband in making a note in payment of one upon which he was surety, and which was secured by a mortgage, and it is agreed that they are to have the mortgage, on the payment of the note, it is a community contract; and the wife is bound by an extension of their note, or by any other action of the husband which is for the benefit of the community interest. McKee v. Whitworth, 15 Wash. 536, 46 Pac. 1045. So where a husband who held stock in a corporation for the benefit of the community became surety for the corporation in order to protect its business, the liability so incurred was enforceable against the community estate. Horton v. Donohoe Kelly Banking Co., 15 Wash. 399, 46 Pac. 409, 47 Pac. 435. So where a husband begins an action in his own name to collect a claim which is community property, and, in furtherance of such action, executes a bond, his obligation thereon constitutes a community debt, and the community real estate is liable for its satisfaction. Barnett v. O'Loughlin, 14 Wash. 259, 44 Pac. 267. So where the pretended title of a mine which has no existence is in a wife, and the alleged mine is sold through fraudulent representations by husband and wife, and the price is paid to them, the liability to the purchaser for the amount of the price is a community liability. Oudin v. Crossman, 15 Wash. 519, 46 Pac. 1047. On the other hand it is held that the liability incurred by a stock-holder of a corporation on his guaranty of payment for goods sold to the cor-

Where a debt incurred by a husband in a sister state which does not recognize community property would have been enforceable against property which from the nature of its acquisition would have been community property in Washington, it is by comity enforceable in the latter state against community property. La Selle v. Woolery, 11 Wash. 337, 39 Pac. 663, 32 L. R. A. 73.

Presumption that debt was contracted during existence of community.—The fact that the community has been in existence for more than seven years prior to the rendition of a judgment against the husband raises a presumption that the debt for which it was rendered was contracted while the community existed. *Bryant v. Property partly community and partly wife's separate estate.—Real property, purchased in part with community funds of husband and wife, and in part with wife's separate funds, is liable for the husband's debts to the extent of his interest therein, which is to be determined by the ratio between the amount of community funds invested in the purchase and the total consideration. *Schuyler v. Purchase by husband's authority in wife's name.—The purchase of property under the husband's authority in the wife's name is as binding on the community as if made by him, and she cannot bind herself personally with him for the purchase-price. Exchange, etc., Co. v. Bein, 12 Rob. (La.) 578.

The fee of the attorney for the wife, who has successfully prosecuted to judgment a suit for separation from bed and board and separation of property against her husband, is a just and valid charge against the community, and may be recovered on a quantum meruit. Benedict v. Holmes, 104 La. 528, 29 So. 256.

Under the Spanish law, the wife could bind herself jointly, or jointly and severally with her husband, if she renounced the sixty-first law of Toro, as prescribed by the laws of Spain; and, when she had made that renunciation in due form, her obligee need not prove that the engagement turned to her advantage. Banks v. Trudeau, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 39; Chapillon v. St. Maxent, 5 Mart. (La.) 166; Brogner v. Forstall, 3 Mart. (La.) 577. See also Moussier v. Zunts, 14 La. Ann. 15, 17, where it is said: "It is a principle which has come down to us from the law of Spain, that he who contracts with a married woman must show affirmatively that the contract turned to her advantage. The exception was when the wife renounced the 61st Law of Toro, but this exception no longer exists."

Burden of proof as to benefit inuring to wife.—Prior to the statute of 1855, it was held in Louisiana that the burden of proof was upon the creditor to establish affirmatively that the debt inured to the wife's separate benefit. Moussier v. Zunts, 14 La. Ann. 15; Beauregard v. Her Husband, 7 La. Ann. 293; Erwin v. McCalop, 5 La. Ann. 173; Pascal v. Sauvinet, 1 La. Ann. 428; Dranguet v. Prudhomme, 3 La. 74; Alling v. Egan, 11 Rob. (La.) 244; Lombard v. Guillet, 11 Mart. (La.) 453; Durnford v. Gross, 7 Mart. (La.) 465. But under the act of 1855 (La. Civ. Code, arts. 126, 127, 128), enabling the wife, with the authorization of her husband or with the sanction of the judge, to contract debts for her separate benefit, it is now held that the effect of this legislation is to shift the burden of proof from the creditor to the married woman, and that a debt contracted by her will be presumed to be for her benefit, and that the wife must show affirmatively that it did not in fact inure to her benefit or to the benefit of her separate estate. Chaffe v. Oliver, 33 La. Ann. 1008; McLellan v. Dane, 32 La. Ann. 1197; Hall v. Wyche, 31 La. Ann. 734; Barth v. Kasa, 30 La. Ann. 940; City Nat. Bank v. Barrow, 21 La. Ann. 396; *Marchand v. Improvements of separate estate.—The wife is liable for all debts incurred for the improvement of her separate estate, and advances made for the payment of debts and supplies of necessities for a plantation, which is her paraphernal property, whether she has retained the administration of her paraphernal property or intrusted it to her husband. Penny's Succession, 14 La. Ann. 194. See also Furrh v. Winston, 66 Tex. 521, 1 S. W. 527; Perkins v. Baker, 38 Tex. 45.

Contracts against public policy.—A contract by a married woman, under the pretext of investing paraphernal effects, is against the policy of the law, where the amount invested bears no just proportion to the value of the property substituted therefor. Jordy v. Muir, 51 La. Ann. 55, 25 So. 550. And see Fortier v. Barry, 111 La. 776, 35 So. 900.

4. NECESSARIES AND FAMILY EXPENSES. In some states in which the community system obtains, the husband alone is primarily liable for all necessaries and family expenses.²⁸ In equity, however, or by force of statute, the wife may bind her separate estate by her contracts for necessaries for herself and children.²⁹

5. LOANS TO WIFE. In Louisiana, money loaned to a married woman, duly authorized to borrow the same for her benefit, constitutes her separate debt,³⁰ and

v. Hopson, 13 La. Ann. 626; Eager v. Morris, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 177.

Repairs on wife's plantation.—Where the wife's separate property is cultivated by the husband for the community, the ordinary repair account of the plantation, by which the same is kept in a fair state of preservation, and deterioration prevented, is a liability of the community. Courrage v. Colgin, 51 La. Ann. 1069, 25 So. 942.

Mules bought by the community, and put on a plantation of the wife, cultivated by the husband, do not become immovables by destination, or necessarily give rise to a debt on the part of the wife. Hall v. Wyche, 31 La. Ann. 734.

Machinery placed on wife's estate.—A married woman, whose husband, without authority from her, has purchased machinery which has been placed on her separate estate, does not ratify the purchase, or estop herself from denying her husband's authority to make it, by signing, as surety, a note given by the husband for the price, where she does so without any knowledge of the purchase, or of the purpose for which the note was given. Gossard v. Lea, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 3, 21 S. W. 703.

Where the wife signed lien contracts in favor of a factor for supplies and advances, she not having the administration of her separate estate, such contracts cannot be enforced against her separate property. Chaffe v. McIntosh, 36 La. Ann. 824.

Where a husband and wife separately owned an undivided half of certain real estate, a debt created by them for the erection of improvements on the land was a community debt. Summerville v. King, 98 Tex. 332, 83 S. W. 680.

A wife is under no legal obligation to support her husband, and her separate estate cannot be charged for necessaries furnished for him. Magee v. White, 23 Tex. 180.

In Louisiana if all the property of the wife be paraphernal and she has reserved to herself the administration of it, she ought to bear a proportion of the marriage charges, equal if need be to one-half her income. v. Gardanne, 9 La. Ann. 4; Rowley v. Rowley, 19 La. 557. But the husband is bound to pay the marriage charges, and the wife can only be called to contribute one half of the income of her paraphernal effects, of which she retains the administration. De Lesdernier v. De Lesdernier, 45 La. Ann. 1364, 14 So. 191. The husband as head of the community, and not the wife, is responsible for rent of property occupied by him and his wife, who is an heir, and has an interest in the property. Dumestre's Succession, 45 La. Ann. 200, 12 So. 123. A debt for the support and education of the common offspring, contracted by the husband, while he has the control and administration of the dotal property of the wife, cannot be enforced against the wife after she has resumed the administration of her separate estate by authority of a judgment of separation. St. Louis University v. Prudhomme, 21 La. Ann. 525. The husband cannot be made to pay counsel fees of the wife, in a suit for separation from bed and board, even though she may be in necessitous circumstances, and entitled to alimony pending the proceedings for separation. State v. Judge New Orleans Seventh Dist. Ct., 22 La. Ann. 264. See also Tucker v. Carlin, 14 La. Ann. 734. Compare Benedict v. Holmes, 104 La. 523, 29 So. 256. But the fees due a lawyer for successfully defending a wife in a suit for her interdiction brought by her husband are a debt of the community. Breaux v. Francke, 30 La. Ann. 336.

Note given for family necessaries.—If the wife is separated in property, she is liable on her joint note with her husband, who is without means, when executed for the board of herself and family. *Fenn v. Money borrowed to pay indebtedness on separate property.—Money borrowed by a married woman to pay notes secured by mort-

6. BILLS AND NOTES. As a general rule when a note is shown to have been given by the wife for her husband's benefit, or in a transaction connected with the community, the debt is not hers, but is a community obligation.³² Where, however, a married woman may contract as if unmarried, even her accommodation note can be enforced against her separate estate.³³ Under statute in Louisiana it is held that where a married woman gives her note, upon authorization by her husband or the court, she is not estopped to show that the loan did not inure to her benefit,³⁴ although the burden of proof of such defense is upon her.³⁵ A note given by the husband will, it has been held, be presumed to have been given in relation to community business.³⁶

7. GUARANTY AND SURETYSHIP. In the absence of an enabling statute the wife's gage upon the property which she claimed as her own cannot be considered as money borrowed and used for the benefit of her husband. Rainey v. Asher, 26 La. Ann. 262.

Money received by the wife as a deposit, with the knowledge and consent of the husband, constitutes a debt of the community, for which he is liable. Cousins v. Kelsey, 33 La. Ann. 880.

Hunter*, 2 La. Ann. 806; Ruiz v. Campbell, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 714, 26 S. W. 295.

Wife's conversion of consideration.—Where the wife proves that her mortgage note for money paid to her in the notary's presence was but a disguised advance to her husband, she will still be bound, when it is shown that she afterward converted the fund to her own use to the prejudice of her husband's creditors. Alling v. Egan, 11 Rob. (La.) 244.

Husband's note in consideration of purchase to replace wife's separate property.—The wife, not separate in property from her husband, cannot be made liable for the amount of a note executed by her husband during the marriage, although the consideration of the note was the price of property purchased in the name of the wife; the object being to replace her paraphernal property which the husband had alienated. Wright v. Railey, 13 La. Ann. 536.

Note for goods to replenish wife's stock.—A note by husband and wife, for goods purchased for the wife, to replenish a stock of goods which are her separate property, is not given for the benefit of the wife's separate property, so as to make her liable on the note. Wallace v. Finberg, 46 Tex. 35.

Ct. 234, 28 L. ed. 764. Compare McLellan v. Dane, 32 La. Ann. 1197, holding that evidence is not admissible to show that the money borrowed by a married woman, under the proper judicial authority, was received and used by the husband in his own affairs.

For former rule in Louisiana see Barth v. Kasa, 30 La. Ann. 940; Robertson v. Levy, 19 La. Ann. 327; Thomson v. Chick, 19 La. Ann. 206; Bowles v. Turner, 15 La. Ann. 352; *White v. Where a note and mortgage show that they were executed by a married woman without the authorization of the judge, and the consideration is stated to be a past indebtedness, a purchaser of such note and mortgage should be on his guard, and the maker may show that she was induced by fraudulent representations to give the same for her husband's debt. Stapleton v. Butterfield, 34 La. Ann. 822.

In Texas it is held that unless it is proven that the debt for which a note was given decedent by her daughter and her daughter's husband was contracted by the daughter herself, or by her express authority, for necessities for herself and children, or for the benefit of her separate property, it is not a lien on her share of the estate, being otherwise merely a charge on their community estate. Ruiz v. Campbell, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 714, 26 S. W. 295.

36. McDonough v. Craig, 10 Wash. 239, 33 Pac. 1034; Bierer v. Blurook, 9 Wash. 63, 36 Pac. 975.

contracts of suretyship will be invalid.³⁷ When a married woman may control and dispose of her separate property as if single, and may enter into contracts with her husband, she may become a surety for him.³⁸ By statute, however, in some jurisdictions the wife is prohibited from binding herself as surety for her husband,³⁹ although such a statute may not prevent her from entering into a valid contract of suretyship for a third person.⁴⁰

8. DEBTS INCURRED IN BUSINESS. Debts incurred by the husband in business are prima facie community debts,⁴¹ for which the separate property of the wife will not be liable.⁴² If the wife engages in business with community capital, the debts contracted are likewise community debts for which the community or the husband alone will be liable.⁴³

9. EFFECT OF PAYMENT OF DEBTS. Payment of community debts by the husband out of separate property belonging to the wife makes him her debtor for the amount so used,⁴⁴ since payment of a community debt cannot be made out of her property.⁴⁵ Where the wife has separate property, there must be satisfactory evidence to raise a presumption that her debts were paid out of community

37. Stiles v. Lord, (Ariz. 1886) 11 Pac. 314, holding that a married woman is not liable as an indorser on a note.

Contract construed not to be a collateral undertaking by wife.—Where a husband was the sole maker of a note, a stipulation in a mortgage given by both husband and wife as security that "they [the mortgagors] will pay said note and interest thereon as expressed when from any cause the same shall become due," is not an undertaking by the wife to become personally liable for the payment of the note where the note was in part due when the mortgage was executed. Exchange Nat. Bank v. Wolverton, 11 Wash. 108, 39 Pac. 248.

Liability of community for debt incurred by husband as surety.—Under the statute providing that neither spouse shall be liable for the separate debts of the other, community property is not subject to sale to satisfy a debt incurred by the husband as surety. *Spinning v. 45. Clark's Succession, 27 La. Ann. 269.

Presumption of payment from community funds.—Where the wife of an absconding debtor gives property in payment of a debt due by her husband, the law presumes that the property so given belongs to the community, and the act of the wife, in giving funds.⁴⁶ It has been held that while there may be cases in which the courts will refuse to allow the husband interest, where it is evident that payments in behalf of his wife were fraudulently deferred for the purpose of injuring her rights, yet where the debts of the wife are paid in good faith the interest must be considered as an incident of the principal obligation and therefore chargeable against her.⁴⁷

10. RIGHTS OF CREDITORS. Community debts attach to the property,⁴⁸ and community creditors have priority over separate creditors of the spouses.⁴⁹ It has been held, however, that an unsecured community creditor is not entitled to priority over a creditor of the husband who has obtained a prior levy on community property.⁵⁰

K. Actions⁵¹ — 1. CAPACITY OF MARRIED WOMAN TO SUE AND BE SUED. Subject to exceptions elsewhere referred to⁵² it may be stated as a general rule in community property states that married women have no capacity to sue or to be sued alone.⁵³ In some jurisdictions a married woman cannot sue or be sued without the authorization or consent of her husband,⁵⁴ or, in case the husband refuses or is absent, by authorization of the court.⁵⁵ In these jurisdictions a married woman, when duly authorized to sue, may take such steps as are necessary to secure her rights;⁵⁶ but when the husband has not been cited with the wife to appear, or she has not been authorized to defend, a judgment against her will be null and void.⁵⁷

Priority over second wife's allowance.—Where a married woman died leaving community property and community debts, and her husband married again, and then died, an order giving the second wife an allowance, and making it a charge on the husband's interest in the community property superior to community debts, was erroneous. In re Cannon, 18 Wash. 101, 50 Pac. 1021.

Want of authorization as ground for dismissal of suit.—Where there is no evidence that a husband has authorized his wife to sue, and there is no appearance on his part, personally or by attorney, the suit must be

It is held that if the husband appears jointly in a suit by or against the wife, his authorization will be implied;⁵³ but not if both are sued and she appears alone.⁵⁹ The husband's suit against the wife will raise the implication that he has authorized her to be sued,⁶⁰ but the wife cannot sue her husband without the authorization of the court.⁶¹ The authorization must be shown by satisfactory evidence;⁶² the mere statement of a married woman or of her counsel that she has been authorized by her husband to sue is not sufficient.⁶³

Remand of suit.—In Robinson v. Butler, 6 Rob. (La.) 78, it was held that plaintiff's omission to have the wife, whom he sues, duly authorized, will be noticed by the court ex officio. And in such case, the judgment may be reversed and the case remanded, to enable him to have her authorized. See also Stone v. Seymour, 5 La. Ann. 647.

Ct. 350, holding that a wife sued together with her husband, the latter being joined for the purpose of authorizing the action, is deemed to be in a position to be properly sued if defendants are represented by the same attorney and no objection has been filed by the husband.

In an action by executory process to foreclose a mortgage on the wife's separate property, the authorization by the husband or by the court is not necessary in order to empower the wife to defend. See Dobard v. Thibault, 34 La. Ann. 1193; Stewart v. Boyle, 23 La. Ann. 83; In re Hall, 21 La. Ann. 692.

The authorization of the wife to give an injunction bond is implied when the husband joins her in the suit for the injunction. Hart v. Conolly, 49 La. Ann. 1587, 22 So. 809.

The insolvency of the husband, who has made a surrender of his property, does not affect his right to appear in court as plaintiff or defendant to assist his wife. Twichel v. Andry, 6 Rob. (La.) 407.

Judgment held to be wife's property.—Where a suit is brought on a promissory note, the property of the wife, in her name conjointly with that of her husband, she must be viewed as appearing therein only to assist and authorize his wife, and the judgment rendered in such suit is the property of the wife. Raiford v. Wood, 14 La. Ann. 116.

Husband appearing by counsel.—An exception to a wife's action, on the ground that she had not been authorized to sue by her husband, will not be sustained where the

as a general rule, the wife cannot, during the marriage, maintain a suit in her own name in respect to community property;⁶⁵ and the joinder of her name in such actions has been held to be a ground for demurrer,⁶⁶ although it has been elsewhere held that the adding of the wife's name may be regarded as mere surplusage.⁶⁷ In Washington, where the husband and wife have equal interests in the community real estate, actions affecting such property must be brought by the husband and wife jointly.⁶⁸

An action on a liquor-dealer's bond for the "liquidated damages" allowed by the statute for the sale of liquor to a minor cannot be maintained by a married woman, joined pro forma by her husband, as the cause of action is community property, and such an action should be brought by the husband. Wartelsky v. McGee, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 220, 30 S. W. 69.

Action for failure to deliver telegraph message.—The husband is the proper party to bring a suit against a telegraph company for failure to deliver a message summoning a physician to attend his wife, and she is not a necessary party. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507, 9 S. W. 598, 10 Am. St. Rep. 772, 1 L. R. A. 728.

A suit for damages for the malicious prosecution of a married woman must, it has been held, be brought by her husband. Mayerson v. Alter, 11 Fed. 688, 4 Woods 126, decided under Louisiana statute.

Action continued in husband's name after death of wife.—A suit by a husband and wife, any recovery in which will belong to the community estate, may be prosecuted to judgment by the husband in his own name after his wife's death, without making her children parties to the action, and this, although there are no community debts. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Goldman, 87 Tex. 567, 29 S. W. 1062.

Effect of divorce in another state.—One who voluntarily leaves the state, and community property located therein, and obtains a decree of divorce in another jurisdiction, cannot maintain an independent action thereafter in the state for a division of the community property. Bedal v. Sake, 10 Ida. 147, 77 Pac. 638, 66 L. R. A. 60. Compare Biggi v. Biggi, 98 Cal. 35, 32 Pac. 803, 35 Am. St. Rep. 141; De Godey v. Godey, 39 Cal. 157.

An action for personal injuries to an insane husband cannot be brought by his wife as for the recovery of community property, but must be prosecuted by the husband through a guardian. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Bailey, 83 Tex. 19, 18 S. W. 481.

Right of action for homestead exemption.—A wife cannot represent her husband in a suit to enforce the right to a homestead exemption. Mallon v. Gates, 26 La. Ann. 610.

The wife is a proper party to a suit on a note given by the husband and wife for the purchase-price of property, and to foreclose the vendor's lien thereon. Linn v. Willis, 1 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 158.

Objection by general demurrer not sustained.—An objection that a husband joined with him his wife in an action for injuries to her cannot be made by general demurrer. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Pollard, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 481.

67. Brown v. Penn, McGloin (La.) 265.

In Texas it has been held that, although the husband has a right to the sole management of community property, he may permit a suit therefor to be brought in the joint names of himself and wife; and a judgment rendered in such suit will be binding on him and those not injured by such joinder of the wife. Hackworth v. English, 53 Tex. 488.

68. Parke v. Seattle, 8 Wash. 78, 35 Pac. 594.

In an action to recover rents and profits of community property, both husband and wife are necessary parties plaintiff. Lonsdale v. Gray's Harbor Boom Co., 21 Wash. 542, 58 Pac. 663.

Land owned jointly with third person.—A husband and wife owning a portion of a tract of land as community property and the remainder jointly with another may join with each other and the joint owner in a suit to recover possession of and to quiet title to the land. Snyder v. Harding, (Wash. 1904) 75 Pac. 812.

Action on personal contract by husband.—Belt v. Washington Water Power Co., 24 Wash. 387, 64 Pac. 525.

Recovery of property owned prior to community statute.—Although plaintiff acquired title to a portion of the property after his marriage, his wife was not a necessary party in an action against a railroad for damages by fire to the realty, where it appeared that plaintiff had owned the property long prior to the first statute as to community property. Spurlock v. Port Townsend Southern R. Co., 13 Wash. 29, 42 Pac. 520.

(ii) PERSONAL INJURIES. Damages for personal injuries to the wife, being property acquired during marriage, and therefore community property,⁶⁹ are in some jurisdictions properly sued for by the husband alone.⁷⁰ In California it is held that in actions of this character the wife must join.⁷¹ In California and Texas, however, the wife when permanently abandoned by her husband may sue alone for personal injuries received by her,⁷² but the refusal of the husband to

The husband may join the wife as plaintiff. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Gwaltney, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 684. See also Sullivan v. Magog, 18 Quebec Super. Ct. 107.

Damages for the mental suffering of the wife may be had by the husband. Loper v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 689, 8 S. W. 600. See also Pacific Exp. Co. v. Black, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 363, 27 S. W. 830.

Mental suffering after death of husband.—An action by a wife for mental suffering caused by defendant's failure to deliver telegrams announcing the shooting of her husband, whereby she was prevented from seeing him before he died, is not an action to recover community property. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kelly, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 29 S. W. 408.

Injury to wife by husband's fellow-servant.—A married man may maintain an action against his employer for injuries to his wife caused by the negligence of his fellow-servant. Campbell v. Harris, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 636, 23 S. W. 35.

Right of recovery not dependent on probable duration of husband's life.—A husband's right to recover compensation for permanent injury to his wife is not dependent on the probable duration of his life. International, etc., R. Co. v. Anthony, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 9, 57 S. W. 897.

In Louisiana it was the rule at one time for the husband to sue in his own name to recover damages sustained by the wife. Harkness v. Louisiana, etc., R. Co., 110 La. 822, 34 So. 791; Fournet v. Morgan's Louisiana, etc., Steamship Co., 43 La. Ann. 1202, 11 So. 541; Holzab v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 38 La. Ann. 185, 58 Am. Rep. 177; Holmes v.

Holmes, 9 La. 348. But under a recent statute suits to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by a married woman, living under the régime of the community, are to be brought by her with the usual authorization of her husband or the court in her name for her own separate use and benefit. Harkness v. Louisiana, etc., R. Co., 110 La. 822, 34 So. 791. It is held, however, that where a husband sues in his own name for injuries to his wife, under allegations showing the object is to recover damages therefor, and no want of capacity in the husband is seasonably raised, a judgment may be properly rendered for damages, which will be the property of the wife. Harkness v. Louisiana, etc., R. Co., supra.

What law governs right to sue.—A claim for damages ex delicto arising from a tort or trespass upon the person of a married woman while temporarily sojourning in the state of Louisiana, whose matrimonial domicile and residence were in the state of Mississippi, cannot be considered as property acquired in the former state, in the sense of its community statute; and, being completely and fully capacitated, under the statute law of Mississippi, to institute suit, and stand in judgment therefor in the courts of that state, she has like capacity to sue in her own name in a Louisiana court. Williams v. Pope Mfg. Co., 52 La. Ann. 1417, 27 So. 851, 78 Am. St. Rep. 390, 50 L. R. A. 816.

Judgment rendered in favor of both.—As damages resulting from a personal injury to the wife are community property, and the husband is a necessary party to an action therefor, a judgment for such damages is properly rendered in favor of both. Paine v. San Bernardino Valley Traction Co., 143 Cal. 654, 77 Pac. 659.

An improper joinder of actions may be waived by the failure of defendant to demur at the proper time. McKune v. Santa Clara Valley Mill, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 480, 42 Pac. 980.

sue has been held not to entitle the wife to sue alone.⁷³ The cause of action has been held not to cease on the death of the husband pending an action by him,⁷⁴ but to survive to the wife who may be substituted as plaintiff.⁷⁵

b. Separate Property. In respect to her separate property the wife may, under statute in some jurisdictions, sue alone,⁷⁶ and the husband's joinder, although permissible, is not essential.⁷⁷ In Louisiana, however, actions relating to the wife's paraphernal or dotal property can be maintained by the wife only when duly authorized to sue,⁷⁸ and when the paraphernal property is administered by the husband, suits in respect to the same should be brought in his name.⁷⁹ In Texas it is held under statute that in suits for the recovery of any separate property of the wife, or injuries thereto, the husband may sue either alone,⁸⁰ or jointly with the wife.⁸¹ In the latter state, however, if the husband abandons his wife, and

Adding wife's business name.—In Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Red Cross Stock Farm, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 114, 53 S. W. 834, it was held that where a married woman joined by neglects to sue for her separate property,⁸² or if her interests are in conflict with his,⁸³ she may sue alone.

3. RIGHTS OF ACTION BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE. Actions between husband and wife with respect to their separate property are sometimes authorized by statute.⁸⁴ In Louisiana, under authorization of the court,⁸⁵ the wife may sue the husband for the restitution of her paraphernal property.⁸⁶ But in Texas it has been held that a tort inflicted by the husband upon the wife gives the wife no right of action against the husband.⁸⁷

4. RIGHTS OF ACTION AGAINST HUSBAND OR WIFE OR BOTH. For the recovery of community debts the action is as a general rule to be brought against the husband only.⁸⁸ In Washington the interest of the spouses in the real estate of the community being equal, actions seeking to charge the realty must be brought against both.⁸⁹ Where the action is based upon the wife's liability, or concerns her sepaher husband sued for the value of an animal killed as for her separate estate, her designation of the name "Red Cross Stock Farm," under which she was doing business, might be rejected as surplusage.

Return of purchase-money not essential to recovery of land.—Where one of plaintiffs in an action to recover land is a married woman, she cannot be made to repay any of the purchase-money received by her before recovering an interest in the land. De Garcia v. Lozano, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 54 S. W. 280. See also Grandjean v. San Antonio, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 38 S. W. 837; Owens v. New York, etc., Land Co., 11 Tex. Civ. App. 284, 32 S. W. 189; Smith v. Powell, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 373, 23 S. W. 1109; Moore v. Linney, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 293, 21 S. W. 709.

If a husband acts unfairly or iniquitously toward his wife, thereby inducing her to execute upon her separate property a trust deed to secure his debt, he cannot join with her in a suit to repudiate such act, to the injury of innocent third parties. Hartley v. Frosh, 6 Tex. 208, 55 Am. Dec. 772.

Suit by wife against husband's firm.—Where a firm gives its note for money loaned by a married woman, payable to her husband as trustee, her husband being a member of the firm, the wife, on the firm's becoming insolvent, may sue on the note in her own name. Martin Brown Co. v. Perrill, 77 Tex. 199, 13 S. W. 975.

84. Wilson v. Wilson, 36 Cal. 447, 95 Am. Dec. 194; Kashaw v. Kashaw, 3 Cal. 312; Ryan v. Ryan, 61 Tex. 473, holding that the wife may maintain an attachment against the community property for a debt, which is her separate property, due from her husband; but her claim should be closely scrutinized to guard against their collusion to defeat creditors. Compare Valensin v. Valensin, 28 Fed. 599, declaring the law of California.

85. See supra, XI, K, 1, note 54.

86. Boulogny v. Fortier, 16 La. Ann. 209. Suit against husband's firm.—Where a married woman, separated in property, loaned her paraphernal property to a firm, the fact that her husband was a member of the firm was held to be immaterial, in an action to recover the same. Drake v. Hays, 27 La. Ann. 256.

A married man may sue his wife as executrix for a debt due him by the testator. Alexander v. Alexander, 12 La. Ann. 588.

Wife's heirs not necessary parties.—Where the wife dies pending a suit against her husband, her heirs need not be made parties. He is liable for the obligations of the community, and his recourse against her heirs, if they accept the community, cannot affect third persons. McIntosh v. Smith, 2 La. Ann. 756.

Action involving title to homestead.—A wife is not a necessary party to an action involving the title to land purchased with community funds, and this, although it is occupied as a homestead. Central Coal, etc., Co. v. Henry, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 47 S. W. 281.

Creditor's right to make wife a party.—Although community property is prima facie liable for a debt contracted by the husband, yet a creditor has a right to make the wife a party to the action, so as to have it judicially appear that his judgment was a community debt. Allen v. Chambers, 18 Wash. 341, 51 Pac. 478.

Action on note.—The wife of one executing a note is a proper defendant in an action thereon, for the purpose of determining rate property, it has been held that the husband and wife should be sued jointly.⁹⁰ If the spouses are jointly liable, the action should be against both.⁹¹

5. DEFENSES—a. By Husband or Wife. A married woman sued as a feme sole must plead her coverture at the trial in order that it may be available as a defense.⁹² A married woman who has bound herself with the marital authorization toward an innocent third person, as surety of a person between whom and her husband there exists a secret partnership, cannot plead that she has, by her contract of suretyship, assumed to pay her husband's debt in violation of a prohibitive statute, and thereby exonerate herself from her obligation.⁹³ In an action based upon the husband's alleged agency for his wife, a plea denying such agency presents a good defense.⁹⁴ In an action on a note representing a debt chargeable against the community, it is no defense or bar to a judgment to show that the community property has been exhausted or appropriated.⁹⁵ In an action by an alleged wife against an alleged husband to enforce the legal effects of a marriage, the husband may collaterally plead the nullity of the marriage.⁹⁶

b. Against Husband or Wife. It is a good defense to an action by a woman that she is a married woman, and that the debt sued on is a community debt.⁹⁷ whether the judgment can be executed as one for a community debt. Clark v. Eltinge, 29 Wash. 215, 69 Pac. 736. Compare Freundt v. Hahn, 28 Wash. 117, 68 Pac. 184; Commercial Bank v. Scott, 6 Wash. 499, 33 Pac. 829, 34 Pac. 434.

Action to foreclose mortgage.—The husband and wife are both necessary parties to an action to foreclose a mortgage on their community real property. Dane v. Daniel, 23 Wash. 379, 63 Pac. 268 [distinguishing Bryant v. Stetson, etc., Mill Co., 13 Wash. 692, 43 Pac. 931; Curry v. Catlin, 9 Wash. 495, 37 Pac. 678, 39 Pac. 101; *Calhoun v. Wife's antenuptial debt.—In an action against the wife to recover an antenuptial debt, the husband must be joined. Nash v. George, 6 Tex. 234. See also Keller v. Hicks, 22 Cal. 457, 83 Am. Dec. 78.

The wife of defendant, in a suit for partition of land, is a necessary party when she claims an interest in the premises. De Uprey v. De Uprey, 27 Cal. 329, 87 Am. Dec. 81.

91. Silva v. Holland, 74 Cal. 530, 16 Pac. 385.

A wife may be jointly sued with her husband on a joint note or contract when executed by them for the benefit of her separate property. Smolridge v. Lovell, 35 Tex. 58. But a wife is not a necessary party to an action on a contract executed by herself and husband, where it does not appear that it was made for the benefit of, or that the money to be furnished thereunder was, her separate property. Burke v. Purifoy, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 50 S. W. 1089.

Where a husband and wife are jointly liable, and he is also severally liable, a suit against both may be discontinued against her without affecting it as against him. Payne v. Bentley, 21 Tex. 452.

Pleading statute of limitations.—A wife may plead the statute of limitations where any other person may plead it. Reynolds v. Lansford, 16 Tex. 286.

93. Lafayette Bank v. Bruff, 33 La. Ann. 624. See also Shuey v. Holmes, 22 Wash. 193, 60 Pac. 402.

Inconsistent defenses.—Where a wife, in contravention of a prohibitory law, has assumed a debt of her husband in consideration for certain property conveyed to her by him, she cannot, when sued on the debt, set up the invalidity of the assumption, and at the same time enjoin the sale of the property for the debt. Bienvenu v. Prieur, 28 La. Ann. 758.

94. Lee v. Crosby, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 140.

95. Brown v. Adams, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 761.

Partition of community as affording no ground for cross action.—Where, in an action on a note, plaintiff sought to subject to the payment thereof certain community lands of the debtor, the wife cannot set up a cross action alleging abandonment by the husband, and his taking away more than half of the community, and praying for a judgment investing the title to the remainder of the community in her. Teague v. Lindsey, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 161, 71 S. W. 573.

96. McCaffrey v. Benson, 38 La. Ann. 198.

97. Holton v. Sand Point Lumber Co., 7 Ida. 573, 64 Pac. 889.

In an action by a married woman for the settlement of a commercial partnership, it is no defense that she was not separated in

A defense set up in an action by a husband on a note that defendant before the commencement of the action had fully paid and discharged it by payment to the wife of plaintiff, disconnected from any averment that the money was the wife's separate property, is insufficient to bar the action, and indeed it has been intimated that an averment in this connection that the money belonged to the wife's separate estate would not have been availing.⁹⁸ In a suit or claim by the wife respecting her separate property a community claim cannot be set up in defense.⁹⁹

6. PARTIES.¹ The general rules as to the joinder or non-joinder of husband and wife have been previously considered.² Where a widow seeks to establish her interest in partnership assets as community estate, and to charge expenditures therefrom as liens on the husband's separate estate, the deceased husband's executor, being also the surviving partner, and the heirs and devisees of the husband's separate estate, are, it has been held, proper parties.³ But in an action by a married woman to recover property purchased with money arising from a sale of land limited to her for life, with remainder to her children, the children have been held not to be necessary parties.⁴ The right of a married woman to become by intervention a party to a suit affecting her separate property has been recognized.⁵

7. PROCESS.⁶ It has been held that where a married woman is a defendant, process of citation must be served upon her personally, and that service upon her husband is insufficient.⁷ In Louisiana, however, service of citation upon the husband is good service upon the wife when not separated from her husband,⁸ and property from her husband, and that the funds which she paid in belonged to the community. Mangrum v. Norsworthy, 26 La. Ann. 640.

Second husband as party to action for child's death.—It has been held that in an action to recover damages for the negligent killing of a child, brought by a widow who afterward married, if defendant wishes to make the husband a party plaintiff, under Tex. Rev. St. art. 1252, he must do so before the trial. San Antonio St. R. Co. v. Cail-loutte, 79 Tex. 341, 15 S. W. 390.

Intervention to determine nature of debt.—In an action on a note executed by a married man, defendant's wife may intervene for the purpose of having it adjudged, in case judgment is rendered against defendant, that the debt is not a community debt, and that it shall not be satisfied out of the community property, although plaintiff is seeking no relief against said property. Gund v. Parke, 15 Wash. 393, 46 Pac. 408.

Code St. § 5908*, or by publication within the time given by section 4869); Thibaudeau v. Desilets, 10 Quebec Q. B. 183.

Publication designating married woman by maiden name.—A judgment against a married woman, founded on service by publication, in which she is designated by her maiden name instead of her husband's surname, is not binding, nor admissible in evidence against her in any other suit. *Freeman v. Service on husband temporarily in state.—A wife cannot be brought into court to respond in a civil suit by citation on her husband, an absentee, who happens to be temporarily in the state. Crow v. Manning, 45 La. Ann. 1221, 14 So. 122.

when husband and wife are co-defendants service upon either is sufficient for both.⁹ Service may be made upon the wife personally or by a copy left for her at the domicile of the husband.¹⁰

8. PLEADING.¹¹ As a general rule when a married woman sues in her own name, the pleadings should show that the cause of action is one upon which she is authorized by statute to bring suit.¹² So, in an action against a married woman, either alone, or jointly with her husband, the petition should set forth the facts necessary to show her liability under the statute.¹³ If the husband is sued for Citation must be addressed to both.—Where husband and wife are defendants, citation served on the husband, in order to be binding upon the wife, must be addressed to her as well as the husband. Marrionneaux v. Downs, 19 La. Ann. 208.

Allegation as to coverture unnecessary.—In an action by a married woman to recover personal property, she need not, in her complaint, allege the coverture; but, where that fact appears on the trial, she may show that the property demanded is her separate property. Shumway v. Leakey, 67 Cal. 458, 8 Pac. 12.

Allegations as to abandonment.—In Texas it has been held that a petition, in an action by a married woman for the conversion of community property, which fails to allege abandonment of plaintiff by her husband, or separation, and that she had the sole management and control of the property, is insufficient to show her right to sue alone. Schwulst v. Neely, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 50 S. W. 608.

Allegation as to ownership.—Where a married woman seeks to recover her alleged separate property, levied upon as the husband's, it is held not to be necessary to set out the evidence of her ownership. Freeburger v. Gazzam, 5 Wash. 772, 32 Pac. 732; Freeburger v. Caldwell, 5 Wash. 769, 32 Pac. 732.

A wife who seeks to vacate a sale of community property on an execution issued in an action in which it did not appear whether or not the debt sued on was that of the community must affirmatively allege that the judgment was not rendered on a community debt. Bryant v. Stetson, etc., Mill Co., 13 Wash. 692, 43 Pac. 931.

Allegation as to notice of agreement between husband and wife.—In an action by the wife to recover for her earnings, donated to her by her husband, it is not necessary to allege that defendant had notice of the agreement between husband and wife. Wren v. Wren, 100 Cal. 276, 34 Pac. 775, 38 Am. St. Rep. 287.

Burleson*, 28 Tex. 368 (holding that a petition averring that the note sued on was jointly and severally executed by the husband and his wife for the purchase-money of a lot, but no other fact to fix the liability upon her, discloses no cause of action against her); Haynes v. Stovall, 23 Tex. 625; Laird v. Thomas, 22 Tex. 276; McFaddin v. Crumpler, 20 Tex. 374; Rosenbaum v. Harloe, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 849; Searcy v. Mealler, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 929.

Statutory liability of sole trader.—In a suit against a married woman and her husband for rent claimed to be due under a lease to the wife, an allegation that she was doing business as a feme sole with her husband's consent is insufficient to fix her liability as a sole trader under the statute, without an averment of the facts required to charge her under the statute. Aiken v. Davis, 17 Cal. 119.

Averment as to ownership of separate property held unnecessary.—Where, after her marriage, a suit is brought against a wife on account of a debt contracted by her while sole, in a suit against her by a surety on her appeal-bond it is unnecessary to aver in the complaint that she has separate property. Since she is liable in personam on the contract before coverture, she continues so afterward. Bostic v. Love, 16 Cal. 69.

Allegation as to separate benefit inuring from obligation.—Where a suit was instituted on the obligation of a married woman, after the joinder of issue, a peremptory exception, filed to the petition on the ground that it was not alleged that defendant was separate in property from her husband, or that the obligation inured to her separate benefit, was held to be properly sustained. Robson v. Shelton, 14 La. Ann. 712.

goods furnished to the wife, an allegation that the goods were sold and delivered to the husband is held to be necessary.¹⁴ So an action by the husband for injuries to the separate property of the wife should, it has been held, allege the ownership in the wife.¹⁵

9. ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE. In a suit against a married woman relative to her separate estate, demands connected with the community property cannot be determined.¹⁶ So it has been held that the wife when sued on her note, which she was authorized by her husband to make, cannot raise the objection that the contract is not shown to have been for her benefit, where that issue is not pleaded.¹⁷

10. EVIDENCE.¹⁸ The ordinary rules with respect to the burden of proof,¹⁹ the

In an action seeking to enforce a conveyance of land standing in the name of the wife, an averment that the land is community property is material, in order to show the propriety of joining the husband, in a state where the wife may convey her separate property alone. Swain v. Burnette, 76 Cal. 299, 18 Pac. 394.

Action to subject lands to judgment for community debts.—A complaint, in an action to have lands conveyed to a wife after marriage declared community property, and subjected to a judgment against the husband for community debts, is demurrable, where it fails to allege that the wife was claiming the land as her separate property. Curry v. Catlin, 9 Wash. 495, 37 Pac. 678, 39 Pac. 101.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by a husband and wife, an allegation that the wife had some interest or claim upon the mortgaged premises is sufficient to show that she is a proper party, without alleging the character of that interest. Anthony v. Nye, 30 Cal. 401.

In a suit against a husband and wife to enforce their contract to alienate their homestead, the petition should show that she executed the contract in the mode prescribed by statute. Cross v. Everts, 28 Tex. 523.

Allegations as to duress.—Where a wife seeks to avoid her mortgage on the ground that it was executed or acknowledged under the compulsion or undue influence of her husband, she must allege such to be the fact in her answer; and an allegation that she did not acknowledge it freely and voluntarily is not sufficient. Connecticut L. Ins. Co. v. McCormick, 45 Cal. 580.

14. Nissen v. Bendixsen, (Cal. 1885) 9 Pac. 111; Simon v. Scott, 53 Cal. 74.

A suit against the husband, for services rendered, after divorce, at the request of the wife, should, it has been held, allege that such services were for the benefit of the community estate. Bohannon v. Pearson, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 621.

Allegation as to right in which husband sues.—Houston v. Schrimpf, 31 Tex. 667.

Allegation as to marriage in action for injuries to wife.—Under Tex. Rev. St. art. 1204, giving authority to the husband to sue alone for the separate property of his wife, the petition in an action for personal injuries to a woman need not allege that she was plaintiff's wife at the time of the accident. It is enough to allege that she was plaintiff's wife when the action was brought. San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Corley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 903.

16. Mason v. Layton, 38 La. Ann. 675.

Under an allegation that a house was her separate property, a married woman cannot recover on a fire-insurance policy upon evidence that the property was purchased partly with her separate funds, and partly with a note not shown to be other than community property. German Ins. Co. v. Hunter, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 344.

Wife's interest in a business partnership.—Where a wife contributes from her separate property to the capital stock of a firm engaged in selling merchandise, and the stock is replenished from time to time, purchases being made for cash and on credit, the interest in the partnership held in the name of the wife becomes community property; and where she sues for damages to her separate property on account of a wrongful levy upon the partnership effects, and the husband is joined only as a nominal party, the variance is fatal. Middlebrook v. Zapp, 73 Tex. 29, 10 S. W. 732.

Necessary allegations in answer to justify judgment for set-off.—In an action by husband and wife in favor of her separate estate, where a set-off is proved against the husband, judgment cannot be rendered against him for it unless that relief be asked by the answer. Hubby v. Camplin, 22 Tex. 582.

The burden of showing facts that require the joinder of the husband as a plaintiff is on defendant in an action brought by the wife alone. Rosenbaum v. Harloe, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 849.

In a suit by the wife to vacate a sheriff's sale of community real estate, on a judgment against the husband, the burden is held to be upon her to show that the judgment was not rendered on a community debt. Andrews v. Andrews, 3 Wash. Terr. 286, 14 Pac. 68.

In an action upon a draft drawn by both husband and wife, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the draft is valid as to the wife. Adams v. Cuny, 15 La. Ann. 485.

admissibility²⁰ and the weight and sufficiency²¹ of evidence generally are applicable in controversies involving community or separate property. The general principles connected with evidence as to the character of property have been previously considered.²²

11. INSTRUCTIONS.²³ Where the pleadings of both parties treat property sued for as community property, it is not error to charge that it is community property,²⁴ and the rules governing instructions generally are applicable to instructions in controversies involving community or separate property.²⁵

12. JUDGMENT.²⁶ A judgment against a married woman will be invalid unless the liability it imposes is warranted by the facts appearing on the record.²⁷ Thus Presumption of consideration for note from husband to wife.—Under the California statute authorizing contracts between husband and wife, it has been held that in an action on a note given by the husband to his wife, the consideration will be presumed, and no burden lies upon plaintiff to show a sufficient consideration. Dimond v. Sanderson, 103 Cal. 97, 37 Pac. 189. See also Kennedy v. Bossiere, 16 La. Ann. 445.

20. See cases cited infra, this note.

Evidence admissible see Charauleau v. Wolfenden, 1 Ariz. 243, 25 Pac. 652; Angulo v. Sunol, 14 Cal. 402; Rainey v. Asher, 26 La. Ann. 262 (holding that acts of mortgage under which a married woman borrowed money, signed by her and duly authorized by the judge, are admissible in evidence in an action upon the note secured thereby); De Lesdernier v. De Lesdernier, 45 La. Ann. 1364, 14 So. 191 (holding that notes given by a husband to his wife for her paraphernal funds are admissible to prove the indebtedness); Willis v. Kern, 21 La. Ann. 749; Austin City v. Emanuel, 74 Tex. 621, 12 S. W. 318; Goldberg v. McCracken, (Tex. 1888) 8 S. W. 676; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Lackey, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 229, 33 S. W. 763 (holding that in an action by a married woman against a railway company for placing cars in front of plaintiff's premises, plaintiff's testimony that her husband had abandoned her for more than four years is admissible to show the wife's right to sue alone).

Evidence inadmissible see Berry v. Marshall, 23 La. Ann. 244; Baily v. Trammell, 27 Tex. 317.

Unsupported testimony of wife.—The paraphernal claims of the wife against the husband are not sufficiently established by her testimony, unsupported by corroborative circumstances. Citizens' Bank v. Maureau, 37 La. Ann. 857.

Misleading instruction.—A charge that a crop raised by the husband upon community property would be subject to execution for his debt is misleading, and therefore erroneous. Nelson v. Frey, (Tex. App. 1891) 16 S. W. 250.

Erroneous instructions as to fact of consent of husband to wife's conveyance see Fox v. Brady, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 590, 20 S. W. 1024.

Instruction as to degree of evidence required.—An instruction, in an action to recover land as the separate property of the wife, sold on execution of a judgment against the husband, that the testimony showing that the wife's property purchased the land must be clear and conclusive, is as favorable as defendant can ask. Yoe v. Montgomery, 68 Tex. 338, 4 S. W. 622.

Failure to charge in absence of request.—Where there is evidence that part of the land was paid for by the wife with a pony given her by the minor son of herself and her husband, who had bought it with his earnings, and there is no evidence that he had been emancipated, a charge on the hypothesis that the pony was the wife's separate property is applicable; and failure to charge as to the title in case the pony was community property is not error, where no such instruction is asked. Schuster v. Bauman Jewelry Co., 79 Tex. 179, 15 S. W. 259, 23 Am. St. Rep. 327.

Instructions as to character of funds used to purchase lands.—Where an issue as to whether certain land was the community property of a husband and wife, and whether they acquired the property during marriage, was submitted to the jury, the court was not required to instruct the jury how, in what manner, or with what character of funds the land must have been acquired in order to make it community property. York v. Hilger, (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 84 S. W. 1117.

Demand as prerequisite to validity of judgment by default.—In Tillet v. Upton, 12 La. Ann. 146, it was held that the husband being sued by the wife, and both cited, plaintiff might have made his judgment by default final on proving his demand, but that it must appear from the record that such proof was made.

Where the petition does not state that defendant was a feme covert at the time when a judgment against the wife was held to be void where the debt sued on was the debt of the husband, not inuring to her benefit or the benefit of her separate estate.²⁸ So in Louisiana it is held that where the husband has not been cited conjointly with the wife to appear, and she has not been authorized to defend, a judgment against her is void.²⁹ Under a statute making the separate property of the wife liable for her debts contracted before marriage, it has been held that a judgment may properly be rendered against both husband and wife.³⁰ Moreover it has been held that where a married woman may be sued as a feme sole on her contracts relating to her separate property, a judgment against her alone will be

she made the contract sued on, and she does not plead that she was, judgment against her separate property cannot be arrested on that ground. Phelps v. Brackett, 24 Tex. 236.

A personal judgment against the wife where she joined in a trust deed of land in order to secure the husband's note has been held to be void. Ferguson v. Reed, 45 Tex. 574. See also Powers v. Parks, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 33 S. W. 718; Farr v. Wright, 27 Tex. 96; Lynch v. Elkes, 21 Tex. 229.

Judgment in action on account for supplies.—Where an action is brought against a husband and wife on an account in his name alone for supplies to two plantations, owned by them separately, and the evidence does not distinguish the items which relate to each, judgment will go against him alone, reserving plaintiff's rights against her. Robertson v. Davis, 9 La. Ann. 268.

On a community debt judgment cannot be obtained against both the community and the wife. Surls v. Hienn, 20 La. Ann. 229. The registry of a judgment for a community debt against the husband after the wife's death creates a mortgage only against his and none against her share of the community property. Scott's Succession, 9 La. Ann. 336.

Confession of judgment.—In a revocatory action to set aside a sale from a husband to his wife as fraudulent and simulated, she may confess judgment on what terms she pleases, if in good faith and for her own advantage, and not her husband's. Woodward v. Lurty, 11 La. Ann. 280. In Dawson v. Babin, 9 La. Ann. 357, it was held that where a wife, for her husband's insolvency, obtained a separation of property and confessed judgment for supplies for her separate property she could not sue to set aside the judgment on the ground that she had but become surety for her husband's debt for things he was bound to furnish his family, and that such matters could be only rectified upon appeal.

Default judgment on joint and several note.—In Aubic v. Gil, 2 La. Ann. 342, it was held that a wife sued on a note made jointly and severally with her husband, although for his debt, will be bound by default where no fraud or duress is alleged to have prevented her appearance and defense of the action.

Judgment foreclosing wife's interest in lands.—In an action against a man and wife on notes given for land which is conveyed to her, and to foreclose the vendor's lien, a judgment as to the wife, foreclosing the lien as to her interest, and providing that no execution shall run against her for any balance after exhausting the property, is proper. Sigal v. Miller, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. 1012. See also Webb v. Mallard, 27 Tex. 80.

Judgment for improvements on homestead.—Where the owners of a community homestead had knowledge that valuable improvements were being put on the land by third persons without asserting their homestead rights, it was held that personal judgment should have been rendered for their value against the husband. Paris, etc., R. Co. v. Greiner, 84 Tex. 443, 19 S. W. 564.

Effect of payments on judgment against husband see Bienvenu v. Prieur, 28 La. Ann. 758.

Res judicata.—A judgment in a suit between the mortgage creditor of the husband and the wife, based on a compromise of the latter's rights, and an abandonment of her title, cannot be pleaded as res judicata or estoppel in a subsequent action between the same parties, their heirs or assigns, with reference to the same matter. Luckett v. Canadian, etc., Mortg., etc., Co., 47 La. Ann. 1259, 17 So. 836 [modifying doctrine of Baron v. Sollibellos, 26 La. Ann. 289].

29. Dirmeyer v. O'Hern, 39 La. Ann. 961, 3 So. 132; Washington v. Hackett, 19 La. Ann. 146.

Judgment by default.—The tacit joinder of issue, resulting from a judgment by default, taken against husband and wife, in a suit in respect to her separate property, dispenses with the necessity for an order of court authorizing her to stand in judgment. Gilmore v. Gilmore, 9 La. Ann. 197. See also Francis v. Martin, 28 La. Ann. 403.

If, in a suit against husband and wife, he alone answers, there can be no judgment against her unless the nature of her estate and the quantum of her interest be shown. Corcoran v. Hatch, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 614.

30. Roundtree v. Thomas, 32 Tex. 286; Nash v. George, 6 Tex. 234, holding that in an action against a wife and her husband for the recovery of an antenuptial debt of the wife, the judgment should be rendered against both, with an order that satisfaction shall be made out of the separate property of the wife.

binding.³¹ But a judgment rendered against the husband for property claimed as the separate property of the wife in a proceeding against the husband, to which the wife was not made a party, has been held not to be binding on the wife.³² A judgment in favor of or against the husband in an action involving a debt due the community will, it has been held, bind the wife regardless of her non-joinder.³³ A judgment, however, in favor of the wife should be in favor of the husband also when he is a necessary party to the suit.³⁴ It has been held that a judgment against a married woman is valid until reversed and cannot be impeached in a collateral action on the ground of coverture.³⁵

13. EXECUTION AND ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT.³⁶ On judgment against the husband for a community debt execution may issue and be levied upon the community property.³⁷ But community property has been held not to be subject to Setting aside judicial mortgage on wife's property.—Where a wife purchased property with her own paraphernal funds, and administered it independently of her husband, it was held that she was entitled to have a judicial mortgage, resulting from a judgment against her husband, set aside in so far as it operated as an encumbrance on her separate paraphernal funds. Reilly v. Rodewald, 22 La. Ann. 243.

33. Jordan v. Moore, 65 Tex. 363; Jergens v. Schiele, 61 Tex. 255.

Community judgment lien superior to mortgage by survivor.—The lien of a judgment against community property is superior to that of a special mortgage by the surviving member of the community, whether prior of record or not. Healey v. Ashbey, 47 La. Ann. 636, 17 So. 195.

Legal ownership of judgment in husband's favor.—Where the wife's paraphernal property was sold, and negotiable notes taken for the price, payable to the husband, on which the husband sued the makers, and obtained judgment against them in his own name for the amount of the notes, the legal ownership of the judgment was in the husband. Gilmore's Succession, 12 La. Ann. 562.

An action by a wife for damages to her separate estate is not barred by a judgment in a former action, brought by the husband in his own right, upon the same cause of action. San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Flato, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 214, 35 S. W. 859.

In trespass to try title brought against the husband alone, the wife is not bound by a judgment against him as to such of the land as was homestead or community property when the suit was instituted; but the judgment is conclusive against her as to a portion of the land conveyed to the husband after the institution of the suit, although such portion was also used as a homestead. Mexia v. Lewis, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 113, 21 S. W. 1016.

The judgment in an action by a husband to determine the boundary line of land which was community property is conclusive on both husband and wife, although the wife was not a party to the action, in the absence of proof that it was brought without her consent. Leggett v. Ross, 14 Wash. 41, 44 Pac. 111.

A judgment in an action against a husband only, to determine adverse claims to land, is a bar to a subsequent action by such husband and his wife against plaintiff in the former action, involving the same questions, although the land is community property. Lichty v. Lewis, 63 Fed. 535, declaring the law of Washington.

34. Taylor v. Pridgen, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 89.

The accidental omission in a judgment of the name of a married woman, plaintiff, is not fatal to the judgment, when the name of the husband who was also a party was included in the judgment, and the wife's rights were recognized therein. Miller v. Rogers, 49 Tex. 398.

Homestead property.—But community property that is also homestead property may be exempt from execution. See Knight v. Kaufman, 105 La. 35, 29 So. 711; Wingfield v. Hackney, 95 Tex. 490, 68 S. W. 262; Richey v. Hare, 41 Tex. 336; Teague v. Lindsey, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 161, 71 S. W. 573.

Recovery of community property sold for debt.—Community property sold for a community debt cannot be recovered without first paying or tendering the amount by which plaintiffs have been benefited from the price thereof paid by the purchaser. Kellogg v. Duralde, 26 La. Ann. 234.

Judgment against survivor.—An execution may issue to be levied on the community es-execution for the wife's individual debt.³³ So execution for a community debt cannot be satisfied out of the wife's separate property.³⁹ The community property, however, may be levied on for the husband's separate debts,⁴⁰ and the separate property of either spouse may be sold in execution of judgment against them on their separate obligations.⁴¹ A judgment against both husband and wife may in general be enforced out of the community property, or out of the separate property of either.⁴² In Texas, it is held that, although a judgment against a married woman, in connection with her separate property, should direct executate, whether so directed or not, on a judgment for a community debt against the survivor of the community. Hollingsworth v. Davis, 62 Tex. 438.

Effect of execution sale as against heirs.—The sale of community property under a judgment recovered against the wife on a community debt, the husband having died before the action was brought, carries the title to the land as against the husband's heirs. White v. Waco Bldg. Assoc., (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. 58. See also Pool v. Wedemeyer, 56 Tex. 287.

A sale under a judgment on a note given by a husband for the price of land purchased by him passes whatever community interest the wife has in the land. Culmore v. Medlenka, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 676.

Sale under a judgment foreclosing a mechanic's lien against community property will not be enjoined on the ground that the wife was not a party to the suit. Turner v. Bellingham Bay Lumber, etc., Co., 9 Wash. 484, 37 Pac. 674.

An injunction will lie to restrain execution upon the wife's separate property for a judgment recovered against the community. Knight v. Kaufman, 105 La. 35, 29 So. 711; Hart v. Connolly, 49 La. Ann. 1587, 22 So. 809; Bowman v. Kaufman, 30 La. Ann. 1021; Atkinson v. Atkinson, 15 La. Ann. 491; Thompson v. Wilson, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 666, 60 S. W. 354. But in Walters v. Cantrell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 66 S. W. 790, it was held that an injunction will not lie to restrain execution against a wife's separate property on a judgment against husband and wife on a joint note, on the contention that the note was not given for necessities, or for expenses incurred for her separate estate, or for any tort committed by her.

Execution on husband's interest in wife's store.—Fleytas v. Poutz, 16 La. Ann. 414.

Land separate in part.—Where an undivided third of land was community property, and two thirds separate property of the wife, the husband's interest can be levied upon; and a schedule of the wife's separate estate being recorded prior to the levy only the community interest would pass to the purchaser. Braden v. Gose, 57 Tex. 37. See also Claiborne v. Tanner, 18 Tex. 68.

Judgment for wife's antenuptial debt.—On a judgment against a married woman on an indebtedness incurred by her before marriage, execution should issue against her separate property, and not against that of her husband. *Tarlton v. Judgment for wife's antenuptial debt.—In Texas it has been held that although, under the laws which make the separate property of the wife liable for her debts contracted before marriage, judgment may properly be rendered against both husband and wife, it should specifically order levy of the execution issued on it to be made upon the separate property of the wife in his possession or under his control. Roundtree v. Thomas, 32 Tex. 286.

Judgment in action for necessities.—Carson v. Taylor, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 177, 47 S. W. 395. See also Emerson v. Kneezell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 62 S. W. 551.

Judgment for services for wife's estate.—A judgment against a husband and wife for services rendered for the benefit of the separate estate of the wife should order payment

tion, first, upon the profits, and, if they are not sufficient, then upon the corpus of her estate, yet, in the absence of such direction, the levy may be made in the same way as in other executions.⁴³ In Louisiana it has been held that the wife's tacit mortgage, existing prior to an execution sale of the husband's property, must be first paid out of the proceeds, unless the execution creditor shows that there is other property sufficient to satisfy her claim.⁴⁴

14. APPEAL AND ERROR.⁴⁵ If it is necessary to join the husband in the original action, he must likewise be made a party on appeal;⁴⁶ but it has been held that if the suit be against both husband and wife she is not a necessary party to his appeal.⁴⁷ In Louisiana the wife, in order to appeal from a judgment against her, must be duly authorized,⁴⁸ as in the case of her original suit,⁴⁹ and an appeal taken by her without authorization will be dismissed.⁵⁰ The wife, however, is sufficiently authorized to appeal when the husband unites with her in the petition for appeal.⁵¹ Unless objection to the wife's incapacity to sue alone is taken in the court below it cannot be raised on appeal.⁵² The fact that a wife was unnecessarily joined as a party in a suit by her husband to recover for her services is not reversible error.⁵³ A finding that land bought during marriage was community

Where a married woman commenced a suit assisted and authorized by her husband, it was held that citation of appeal to her was sufficient, and that the appeal would not be dismissed because not including the husband. Deblanc v. Levasseur, 26 La. Ann. 541. But see Reese v. Couyers, 16 La. Ann. 39.

Where a wife authorized by the judge prosecutes a suit alone and unassisted by her husband, an appeal from a judgment rendered in her favor will not be dismissed on the ground that the appeal-bond was not executed in favor of her husband as well as of herself. Holmes v. Barbin, 13 La. Ann. 474.

In California it has been held that where in an action against married women on an express contract alleged to have been made by them, their husbands were properly joined, under Code Civ. Proc. § 370, but judgment was rendered against the wives only, on appeal by the wives, the husbands were not adverse parties, on whom the notice of appeal must be served. Terry v. San Diego County Super. Ct., 110 Cal. 85, 42 Pac. 464.

A married woman residing in another state may prosecute an appeal from a judgment rendered against her in the courts of Louisiana, and the prosecution of the appeal includes the right on her part to give an appeal-bond. Bailey's Succession, 24 La. Ann. 486.

47. Brannin v. Womble, 32 La. Ann. 805.

In Texas it has been held that where a husband joins with his wife in a suit for her separate property, and a judgment is rendered against him, he may alone prosecute an appeal, since he is authorized by Rev. St. art. 1204, to sue either alone or jointly with his wife for the recovery of her separate property, and the appeal is in effect a continuation of the suit for the wife's benefit. *Corley v. The allegation of a married woman, in her petition, that she is "joined and authorized" by her husband, is not sufficient authority to enable her to prosecute the suit or to maintain an appeal. Pomeroy's Succession, 21 La. Ann. 576.

An appeal by a married woman will not be dismissed on objections, urged for the first time in the reviewing court, as to the want of marital authorization, where the record shows that the husband attended the trial below, and himself signed the appeal-bond with the wife. *Fairex v. property, the evidence being conflicting as to whether it was purchased with the wife's separate property, will not be disturbed by the reviewing court.⁵⁴

15. COSTS.⁵⁵ It has been held that if a married woman is enabled by the statute to sue or to be sued alone, she will be liable to a judgment against her for costs.⁵⁶ On the other hand it has been held that the husband alone will be liable when he is the custodian and manager of her estate.⁵⁷

L. Dissolution of Community — 1. METHODS OF DISSOLUTION. The community of property between husband and wife is dissolved by the death of either spouse,⁵⁸ by divorce,⁵⁹ and, in Louisiana, by a judicial decree following a suit for a separation of property.⁶⁰ A culpable abandonment of one spouse by the other may, it has been held, entitle the party abandoned to the rights in the community that follow upon its dissolution.⁶¹ On the other hand it has been held that mere voluntary separation of the spouses does not put an end to the community.⁶² The insanity of either spouse has been held not to operate as a dissolution of the community.⁶³ Under the Spanish law, the adultery of the wife causes a forfeiture of her share of the community acquired during the marriage.⁶⁴

2. SEPARATION OF PROPERTY — a. Grounds For Separation. In Louisiana, whenever the wife's dowry is in danger from the mismanagement of her husband, or when his affairs are so disordered as to make it probable that his estate may not be sufficient to meet her lawful claims,⁶⁵ or although she brought no dowry to the marriage, whenever the habits or financial embarrassment of her husband render it necessary to preserve for her family the earnings of her industry or talents,⁶⁶

A verdict in favor of the wife will not be set aside, however, where the evidence by her shows that she purchased land with means derived from her father, on the mere ground of some impeaching evidence. *Batte v. An allegation by a married woman that her husband had permanently abandoned her, without her fault, and had left the state, is sufficient to authorize her to sue for the community property. Word v. Kennon, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 75 S. W. 334. Compare Holloway v. Shuttles, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 188, 51 S. W. 293.

In Texas it has been held that where a husband and wife actually separate, intending that the separation shall be permanent, a division of their community property made to separate their interests and give to each one half, if fairly consummated, is effectual, and what each thus obtains becomes his or her separate property. Batla v. Batla, (Civ. App. 1899) 51 S. W. 664 [following Rains v. Wheeler, 76 Tex. 390, 13 S. W. 324]. But a mere agreement between husband and wife cannot, it has been held, change the character and nature of their rights and interest in property owned and acquired by them from that prescribed by law, and thereby relieve it from liability to be taken in satisfaction for the payment of community debts. Cox v. Miller, 54 Tex. 16. See also Green v. Ferguson, 62 Tex. 525.

she may sue for a separation of property.⁶⁷ She cannot maintain such a suit, however, without showing the facts that will warrant the dissolution.⁶⁸

b. Incidents of Suit. In her suit for separation the wife may enjoin the husband from disposing of community property.⁶⁹ While the husband's creditors cannot require the separation of the community between husband and wife,⁷⁰ yet they may intervene, in order to protect their interests after the suit has been instituted.⁷¹ The insolvent husband's assignee, or syndic, is properly made a defendant in the wife's suit.⁷² If the judgment of separation is based exclusively on the husband's testimony it will be null and void as to interested third persons.⁷³

c. Judgment or Order of Separation—(1) IN GENERAL. The code of Louisiana provides⁷⁴ that a separation of property, although decreed by a court of justice, is null if it has not been executed by the payment of the rights and claims of the wife, made to appear by an authentic act, as far as the estate of the husband can meet them, or at least by a bona fide non-interrupted suit to obtain payment.⁷⁵ This provision is for the protection of creditors when the judgment is founded on

The "returning to the domicile where her marriage was contracted," which authorizes a non-resident wife to sue her husband for separation of property, under the civil code of Louisiana, article 2437, means a return for the purpose of living there under the protection of its laws. Hyman v. Schlenker, 44 La. Ann. 108, 10 So. 623.

The right of the wife to demand and resume the management and control of her paraphernal property previously intrusted to her husband should not be confounded with her action for the dissolution of the community. Burns v. Thompson, 39 La. Ann. 377, 1 So. 913. The wife's demand, under La. Code, arts. 2387, 2391, of her paraphernal property, may include restitution of the proceeds of such portion thereof as may have been sold by the husband, and need not be accompanied by a demand for dissolution of the community. Possession of a separate industry or of ability to make acquisitions for support of herself and family, on the wife's part, is implied from her allegation, in a petition for the separation of property, "that owing to the insolvency of her husband, it becomes necessary for the preservation of her acquisitions, and the education, maintenance and support of herself and family, that a dissolution of the community, etc., be decreed," so as to admit proof of those facts. Meyer v. Smith, 24 La. Ann. 153.

Execution delayed more than a year.—Where a judgment of separation of property between husband and wife was rendered, but no execution issued, under which seizure was made, for more than a year afterward, it was not a bona fide non-interrupted suit such as is required in order to obtain payment of the wife's claim. Chaffe v. Scheen, 34 La. Ann. 684.

Suit de novo by wife.—When the judgment of separation is null, for want of execution, the wife may sue de novo. Spires v. McKelvy, 23 La. Ann. 571; Dawson v. His Creditors, 6 La. Ann. 212.

a cause susceptible of execution against the husband's estate,⁷⁶ and applies only when there is a judgment against the husband for a sum of money,⁷⁷ or involves the transfer of property,⁷⁸ and not to a case where the object of the action is merely to put an end to the community status, and to secure to the wife her future earnings, and the right, independent of her husband, separately to acquire property in her own right.⁷⁹

(II) ATTACK UPON JUDGMENT. The husband's creditors may attack a judgment of separation of property on the ground of fraud,⁸⁰ and, in such a case, the burden of proof to show the good faith of the judgment is upon the wife.⁸¹ A judgment of separation of property, if void, may be directly or collaterally attacked by any one having an interest;⁸² but it cannot be attacked collaterally by the husband's creditors whose claims had not arisen when the judgment was rendered.⁸³

Wife's claims unaffected by failure to execute judgment.—The failure of a wife to execute a judgment of separation of property, which she has obtained, will not impair or prejudice any claim she may have against her husband. Lehman v. Levy, 30 La. Ann. 745.

Effect of judgment on property not mentioned.—A judgment separating the wife in property does not, in a contest with the husband's creditors, conclude her rights as to property which it does not mention; and this is especially true as to creditors who were such before the judgment was rendered. Broussard v. Broussard, 11 Rob. (La.) 445.

Execution not required as to property in possession of wife.—The fact that one has separate property, the right to the administration of which she desires to have recognized, owing to her husband's disordered financial condition, free from his interference, entitles her to a judgment of separation of property; and, if she has possession, the judgment will not require execution, nor be nullified merely by her failure to execute a moneyed judgment recovered against him at the same time. Chaffe v. Forcheimer, 35 La. Ann. 205.

Objection as to non-execution not available to wife.—A wife, separated in property from her husband, when sued upon an obligation contracted by herself, cannot, in bar to the action, plead that the decree of separation had not been advertised, and that no feri facias had issued upon her judgment, although these objections might properly be raised by third parties. *Campbell v. Petition praying only restitution of property.—A wife's judgment of separation of property, not impeached for fraud or collusion, cannot be attacked by third persons, because her petition prayed only for a restitution of paraphernal property. Wolf v. Lowry, 10 La. Ann. 272.

separation of property the community is dissolved.⁸⁴ The parties stand in the same position as if no community had existed between them,⁸⁵ and the husband ceases to be the head of the community.⁸⁶

d. Rights and Liabilities After Separation. Although separated in property from her husband, the wife remains without capacity to bind herself for his debts,⁸⁷ unless such debts were contracted by the husband for her separate benefit.⁸⁸ She will be liable on her individual obligations, however,⁸⁹ and may be sued personally.⁹⁰ Her legal mortgage against the husband's property for his conversion to his own use of her separate property still exists,⁹¹ and property purchased by her, after the separation, becomes her separate estate.⁹² Property which was formerly dotal may also be alienated by her,⁹³ and she may dispose of succession property without the consent of her husband.⁹⁴

3. ACCEPTANCE OR RENUNCIATION OF DISSOLUTION. In Louisiana it is provided by statute that upon the dissolution of the community for any cause the wife may accept the community of acquets and gains under the benefit of inventory in the same manner and with the same benefits and advantages as heirs are allowed to accept a succession under the benefit of inventory.⁹⁵ It is also provided that upon separation from bed and board, the failure of the wife to accept the community

Burden of proof.—Where a wife, separate in property, seeks to annul her transfer of paraphernal property to her creditors, made according to the forms of law, on the ground that the consideration of her transfer was the debts of her husband, the burden of proof is on her to show in the most positive manner the truth of what she alleges. *Blake v. within the time prescribed by statute operates as an irrevocable renunciation thereof.⁹⁶ Where, moreover, the community is dissolved by a judgment of separation of property, the wife is presumed to have renounced the community.⁹⁷ The general effect of renunciation is the same as if the community had never existed, and transactions of the husband during the marriage in relation to the purchase and alienation of property are regarded as performed by him alone.⁹⁸

4. SETTLEMENT OF DISSOLVED COMMUNITY. The property of a dissolved but unsettled community continues to be community property, and liable for its debts,⁹⁹ and the husband is entitled to settle its affairs.¹ The wife may recover, in a suit for settlement, the proceeds of property belonging to her;² but it has been held that in an action by the wife, after the marriage has been declared void, for her share of the community, the husband is under no obligation to account for the proceeds or income of any property belonging to the community.³ A transfer of property by the husband to his wife's sister, with an understanding that after a judgment of separation she should transfer it to the wife in settlement of the judgment the wife might obtain, will estop him from having the two acts declared simulations.⁴

Sale of homestead.—A surviving husband has power to sell land occupied by himself and wife as a homestead at the time of the wife's death in order to pay community debts owing at the time of her death. Linson v. Poindexter, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 358, 80 S. W. 237.

Sale to satisfy husband's claims.—A surviving husband has the right to sell community real estate, not only to pay community debts, but also to reimburse himself for his separate funds used in payment of such debts. Walker v. Howard, 34 Tex. 478. Although a surviving husband cannot be compelled to yield up his homestead to pay community debts, he may sell such homestead to reimburse himself for the payment of community debts out of his separate funds. *Martin v. A voluntary conveyance, made by a widow who has not qualified as survivor in com-living spouse may sell his or her interest in the community estate, in the absence of fraud upon the rights of others;⁹ but the survivor cannot, except for the payment of community debts, alienate the interest of the heirs of the deceased spouse.¹⁰ The surviving husband may also mortgage the community property to satisfy or to secure a community obligation;¹¹ but, as in the case of absolute transfers the interest of the heirs cannot be mortgaged or pledged except for community debts.¹² The survivor may mortgage his or her own interest, how-community of land which is part of the community estate of herself and her husband, is void as against a subsequent sale by the husband's administrator for payment of debts. Nix v. Mayer, (Tex. 1886) 2 S. W. 819; Mitchell v. De Witt, 20 Tex. 294.

Deed of widow and heirs.—Where a husband held the legal title to community property, and was in possession, at the time of his death, a deed of all "our interest" in the property "owned or possessed" by the husband, to his son, executed by the other heirs and the widow, in adjusting their rights in the estate, conveyed the community interest of the widow. *Henslee v. Transfer for purpose of obtaining necessities.—Where a widow transfers a land certificate which was community property of herself and husband, the interest therein of their children does not pass, although the transfer was made for the purpose of obtaining necessities for herself and children. Booth v. Clark, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 315, 78 S. W. 392.

Resulting trust in favor of heirs.—Where, on the death of a wife, her husband sells the community property and uses more than one half of the proceeds to pay his individual debt, the balance belongs to her heirs, and property purchased therewith is held in trust for them. Oaks v. West, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 64 S. W. 1033.

A married woman's warranty deed, whereby she conveyed her one-half interest as survivor in community property, does not carry with it her son's share in the land, subsequently inherited by her. Peterson v. McCauley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. 826.

Sale partly to pay community debts.—In an action by heirs to recover community land sold by a widow, an instruction that the jury should find for plaintiffs if she sold the land for any purpose other than to pay community debts was error, where she had testified that she sold to pay such debts, and also because, her husband being dead and her son sent to the penitentiary, she wanted to get away from the place, the fact that the sale was not made solely to pay debts not invalidating it. Cage v. Tucker, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 586, 69 S. W. 425.

Crops delivered to mortgagee in payment.—Morris v. Covington, 2 La. Ann. 259.

Pledge of community stock by surviving husband.—Where the surviving husband borrows a sum on the pledge of community bank-stock, he should be charged in settlement with the sum borrowed, and not the whole stock, which continues to be community property. Mercier v. Canonge, 12 Rob. (La.) 385.

Inventory as notice to mortgagee.—The possession of a copy of an inventory of community property, filed by the survivor of a community, showing that certain property was community property, is notice to one taking a mortgage thereon from such survivor of the interest of the heirs of the deceased therein. Taylor v. Taylor, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 889.

Mortgaging for benefit of heirs.—Where community property has been mortgaged by a surviving husband for the purpose of raising funds for the maintenance and education of the heirs, pursuant to advice of a family meeting, concurred in by the judge of probate, and the property is afterward sold to satisfy the mortgagee, the heirs cannot reclaim it without refunding the amount of the ever,¹³ but the rights of community creditors must not be prejudiced.¹⁴ In Texas the general rights and authority of the surviving wife in respect to the management and liquidation of the community, when there is no administration of the community estate, are the same as those of the husband.¹⁵

b. Survivor's Share—(1) IN GENERAL. Upon the death of either the husband or the wife, it is the general rule in absence of antenuptial agreements to the contrary, that one half of the community property vests in the surviving spouse, and one half, in the absence of testamentary disposition, in the heirs of the deceased.¹⁶ In some jurisdictions, however, the surviving husband takes all mortgage, with interest. Chambers v. Worthington, 7 La. Ann. 113.

Husband as sole heir of wife.—Where the surviving husband, after mortgaging community property, has been recognized by the probate court as sole heir of his deceased wife, in default of descendants, ascendants, or collaterals, the mortgage is legal upon the whole property, and a sale under foreclosure will convey a valid title. Billgery v. Billgery, 34 La. Ann. 387.

Effect of mortgage of whole estate on survivor's interest.—Under 1 Hill Annot. Code, § 1481, providing that, on the death of the husband or wife, one half of the community realty shall descend to the survivor, and the other half to their children, a mortgage by the survivor purporting to embrace the whole estate is valid as to his undivided one-half interest. *Wortman v. Mortgaging specific property prior to payment of debts.—The widow in community cannot, while the succession is still under administration, and before its debts are paid and her residuary interest thus definitely ascertained, execute a valid mortgage on her undivided half of any specific property of the succession. Dickson v. Dickson, 33 La. Ann. 1370; Cestac v. Florane, 31 La. Ann. 493.

Heirs as creditors of the community.—When the surviving husband is the debtor of his wife at the time of her death, her heirs are creditors of the community, and the survivor has only a limited power to mortgage his half of the community property to secure his individual debts. Newman v. Cooper, 46 La. Ann. 1485, 16 So. 481.

Facts showing absence of survivor's share.—Where during coverture decedent was engaged in no business except looking after his property acquired before marriage, and left no real estate not owned by him before marriage or derived from investments of his personal estate, and his personal property was greatly decreased, and nearly all of it was directly traced to that possessed before marriage, his widow had no interest therein as community property. In re Cudworth, 133 Cal. 462, 65 Pac. 1041.

Order of succession upon death of widow without kindred.—If a decedent be a widow, and leave no kindred, the common property of the decedent and her deceased spouse goes to the lawful issue of any deceased brother of the community,¹⁷ although the surviving wife takes only a half interest.¹⁸ If there are no heirs the survivor is entitled to the entire community property.¹⁹ Upon the death of one of the spouses, the rights of the survivor attach at once by operation of law.²⁰ The provisions of the codes have varied, however, in details, from time to time, in some of the jurisdictions, and the rights of the husband and the children in the community property are governed by the law in force at the time of the wife's death.²¹

(ii) FORFEITURE. The adultery of the wife will, it has been held, work a forfeiture of her rights as widow.²² So it has been held that a wife who deserts her husband and forms an adulterous relationship with another cannot claim any interest as the widow of the latter.²³ But where a woman marries in good or sister of such deceased spouse. In re McCauley, 138 Cal. 432, 71 Pac. 458.

Disposal of community property by will.—The statutes generally limit the testator's right to dispose of community property to his half interest in the same. But in In re Boody, 113 Cal. 682, 45 Pac. 858, it was held under a subsequent statute that on the death of the husband, intestate and without issue, the widow is entitled to three fourths of the community property, and her heirs take in like proportion.

Absolute title vested in surviving spouse and heirs.—Where the community is dissolved by the death of one of the spouses, the survivor and the heirs take the title absolutely, and it continues in them subject to be divested by the creditors, with power in them to alienate the same to a person taking it to the extent of the transferor's interest therein. *Thompson v. faith a man who has a wife living and is undivorced, it has been held that she will be entitled to her rights as a survivor,²⁴ the estate being divisible equally between the two wives.²⁵

c. Use and Possession of Community Property. In Louisiana, in the absence of testamentary disposition, the surviving spouse has the usufruct of the share of the community inherited by the issue of the marriage.²⁶ This right continues during life, or until a subsequent marriage.²⁷ The widow may waive, however, her right as usufructuary, either as to a portion of the usufruct, or as to the whole thereof.²⁸ In Texas the rule has been laid down that the survivor without administration or qualification as survivor has no power over the interest of the heirs, except that which would arise by reason of the analogy to a partnership estate or as a tenant in common.²⁹

d. Liability For Debts—(1) IN GENERAL. Upon the dissolution of the community, all the community property, except such as may be exempt from execution, is subject to the community debts,³⁰ and the surviving spouse cannot claim

Right to temporary control.—After the death of the wife the husband is entitled to the custody and control of the community property only for a reasonable time necessary to pay all the community debts. Miller v. Miller, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 367, 78 S. W. 1085.

Community creditors preferred to secured individual creditors.—On the dissolution of the matrimonial community by the death of one of its members, the community creditors whose claims are unsecured by mortgage are entitled to be paid from the assets of the community, by preference over the individual creditors, although the latter are secured by special or judicial mortgage on the survivor's individual interest in the community property. Newman v. Cooper, 46 La. Ann. 1485, 16 So. 481.

Liability of community share of deceased for separate debts see Sharp v. Loupe, 120 Cal. 89, 52 Pac. 134, 586; Columbia Nat. Bank v. Embree, 2 Wash. 331, 26 Pac. 257.

his or her share from the community before such debts are paid.³¹ The usufruct, in Louisiana, of the share inherited by the issue of the marriage, is not conferred regardless of debts; but the survivor has the use of the residue of such share after payment of the debts.³² If the husband survive, he is personally liable for all the debts owed by the community,³³ while in some jurisdictions the wife, as survivor, is liable for only one half of the community debts.³⁴

(II) ACCEPTANCE OR RENUNCIATION OF COMMUNITY. In Louisiana the surviving wife may exonerate herself from the debts of the community by renouncing the community.³⁵ The renunciation may be made at any time before a final judgment against her as a partur in the community.³⁶ By taking, however, an active part in dealing with the community, the widow will be presumed to have accepted it.³⁷ The surviving husband cannot renounce the community for the purpose of exonerating himself from the community debts.³³

(III) DEBTS INCURRED AFTER DISSOLUTION. Separate debts incurred by the survivor after the dissolution of the community are not chargeable against the community share of the deceased.³⁹

Neither a decree of separation of property nor her husband's discharge in bankruptcy will relieve the widow from liability for one half the community debts, should she accept the community. Ludeling v. Felton, 29 La. Ann. 719.

Liability restricted to half of each creditor's debt.—While a surviving wife, by failing to have the succession of her husband opened, and to avail herself of the benefit of inventory, by taking possession of the property of the succession, by paying the debts, and by continuing the business, commits herself to an acceptance of the community, she does not render herself liable to each individual creditor of the community for the payment in entirety of his debt; but each creditor can recover from her, as widow in community, only one half of the debt. Davie v. Carville, 110 La. 862, 34 So. 807.

When presumption inapplicable.—While as against creditors generally the renunciation of the wife may be inoperative, yet as against one who, exercising a complete moral control over a young and inexperienced wife, has acquiesced in her conduct, she cannot be regarded as having accepted or intermeddled with the community, and so become liable for its debts. *Wilcox v. Survivor continuing community business.—On the death of the wife, leaving children, the husband has no right to continue a mercantile business as his own, form a partnership with another, and transfer the stock to the firm, and the children are not chargeable with debts thus incurred. Cochran v. Sonnen, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 521. See also Cleveland v. Harding, 67 Tex. 396, 3 S. W. 537.

Renewal of community note.—A second note, given by a husband after the dissolution of the community by the death of his wife in renewal of a note which he had given before the dissolution of the community, is not such a novation of the first note as will prevent the payee from enforcing its payment out of community property. Rusk v. Warren, 25 La. Ann. 314; Turner v. O'Neal, 24 La. Ann. 543. See also Montreal Bank v. Buchanan, 32 Wash. 480, 73 Pac. 482.

e. Profits or Losses After Dissolution. In Louisiana the survivor, having the usufruct of the share of the issue of the marriage, is not accountable for the revenues of the community estate,⁴⁰ or for losses arising from natural causes.⁴¹ Property acquired, in the survivor's name, after the dissolution, will be separate property and not a part of the community,⁴² unless such property is purchased with community funds,⁴³ or unless it was purchased during the marriage, and the title was merely perfected after the dissolution.⁴⁴

f. Survivor's Claims Against Community. The community is liable for the bona fide claims of the survivor against it,⁴⁵ but the surviving partner's claims are postponed to the claims of the other creditors.⁴⁶ In order to charge the community with a claim of the surviving husband, he must prove the investment of his separate money for the community's benefit.⁴⁷ Upon the dissolution of the community, the widow is as a general proposition entitled to recover, or to be

Daily consumption and deterioration of property.—If the personal property of the community is of daily use and necessary to improve and cultivate the plantation, from which the heir has received his share of the crops, and from whose increased value by improvement he has realized his portion, the surviving partner is not liable for what has been consumed for those purposes, nor the deterioration of what remains. *Babin v. Property purchased with community funds transferred to bona fide purchaser.—In Golding v. Golding, 43 La. Ann. 555, 9 So. 638, it was held that on proof that property purchased by the husband in his own name, after dissolution of the community by death of the wife, was purchased with identified funds of the community it could be claimed as community property only against the husband while the title remained in his name, and could not avail against bona fide mortgagees and subsequent purchasers, who acted on the faith of the recorded title.

Husband's maintenance of child of former marriage.—Where the community is solvent and possesses ample means the widow in community has no claim for money expended by the deceased husband in the maintenance of his child of a former marriage, in the absence of evidence of any intention on the part of the husband of making such charge. Applegate's Succession, 39 La. Ann. 400, 2 So. 42; Boyer's Succession, 36 La. Ann. 506.

Wife's claim against heirs to husband's separate estate.—Where a house which is community property is situated on lots owned by the husband, the wife is entitled to be reimbursed therefor from the heirs to whom the property descends. Gilroy v. Richards, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 355, 63 S. W. 664.

Subrogation to rights of creditors.—A husband who, after dissolution of the community, by the death of the wife, pays out of his own funds, debts of the community, becomes subrogated to the rights of the creditors so paid. Pior v. Giddens, 50 La. Ann. 216, 23 So. 337.

Priority as between claims of spouses.—Where the funds of the community are insufficient to pay the claims of both spouses, the charges in favor of the wife must be taken out of it before those in favor of the husband can be paid. Bergey v. Labat, 112 La. 992, 36 So. 829.

Degree of proof required.—No fixed rule or standard as to the extent or sufficiency of evidence necessary to establish a claim of a husband against the community can be formulated. Each case must rest on its own peculiar state of facts. Cormier's Succession, 52 La. Ann. 876, 27 So. 293. See also Kidd's Succession, 51 La. Ann. 1157, 26 So. 74.

Presumptions after long lapse of time.—It will not be presumed seventeen years after a wife's death that any community debts were unpaid, or that money received from the sale of community property by the survivor at

g. Rights of Survivor's Creditors. Judgment creditors of the survivor may seize the community property for community debts.⁴⁹ So the interest in the community of the surviving spouse is subject to levy and sale for the satisfaction of the survivor's separate creditors.⁵⁰ The creditor of either spouse has the right after the dissolution of the community to have the community liquidated and to subject according to law to the satisfaction of his claim the interest of his debtor thus ascertained.⁵¹

h. Rights and Liabilities of Purchasers. A purchaser in good faith of community property sold by the survivor will in general acquire a valid title thereto,⁵² and is, it has been held, under no obligation to see to the proper appropriation of the purchase-money.⁵³ So it has been held that where a purchaser in good faith, without notice, actual or constructive, of any community interest, buys property sold by the survivor or his grantee, he will take a valid title.⁵⁴ So land sold by the survivor as community property, there being nothing by way of notice to the

A judgment creditor may sell merely the interest of the husband in the community property, where the husband does not object, notwithstanding the wife's share was liable under the judgment. Campbell v. Antis, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 161, 51 S. W. 343.

Sale subject to community debts.—The share of the surviving wife in the community property may be seized and sold for her individual debt, but the purchaser will take it as she held it, subject to the debts of the community. Webre v. Lorio, 42 La. Ann. 178, 7 So. 460.

Sale of entire community interest.—Where a father and minor children by his first wife reside on a tract of land patented to him during her life, a sale of the whole of the tract under a judgment recovered against him after her death is void, as the land is community property, and her half descends to her children. *Philbrick v. Community property sold to reimburse the survivor for payment of community debts.—Community property in its descent to the heirs is chargeable with the payment of community debts, and a purchaser thereof from the survivor is protected, when it is sold to reimburse him or her for separate means used in discharging a community debt. Wilson v. Helms, 59 Tex. 680.

In Washington, under Laws (1871), p. 70, § 12, providing that the husband shall have no right to sell the common real estate unless he shall be joined therein by the wife, a deed by the husband, after the wife's death, of the common real estate, passes no title to the wife's interest therein, although the grantee be a bona fide purchaser. *Mabie v. Purchaser of homestead property.—A purchaser from a surviving husband, of land occupied by husband and wife as a homestead at the time of the latter's death, need not, for his own protection, see that the purchase-money is applied to the payment of community debts. Linson v. Poindexter, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 358, 80 S. W. 237.

Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. 712. Compare Burleson v. Alvis, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 51, 66 S. W. 235.

Purchaser of lands acquired under patent issued after dissolution of community.—A purchaser from a vendor to whom a patent issued after the death of her husband takes title as against the heirs unaffected by his purchaser that the deceased spouse had a separate interest therein, will, if the sale is otherwise valid, vest good title in such purchaser.⁵⁵ Where, however, one purchases property with the knowledge that it is community property⁵⁶ and with knowledge that the property was not sold to pay community debts, he takes no title against the heirs;⁵⁷ and the rule has been laid down that the burden is on the purchaser to prove the existence of circumstances authorizing the sale.⁵⁸ Since the survivor may sell his own interest,⁵⁹ a purchaser may become an owner in indivision with the deceased spouse's heirs.⁶⁰

1. Actions By or Against Survivor. For the purpose of enforcing obligations due to the community, the husband, as survivor, may sue alone,⁶¹ and creditors of the community may likewise bring action against the surviving husband without joining as defendants the wife's heirs.⁶² Upon a judgment against the husband on a community debt, an execution sale divests all the community rights.⁶³ In a community interest, in the absence of the notice of it. Wren v. Peel, 64 Tex. 374.

Purchaser ignorant of a former marriage.—Where property deceded to a married man was after the death of his wife and his second marriage conveyed by deed, in which his second wife joined, to persons who knew nothing of his first marriage, and had nothing to put them on inquiry, it was held that in an action by the children of the first wife for half the land, claimed by inheritance from her, they could not recover, defendants being bona fide purchasers. Hensley v. Lewis, 82 Tex. 595, 17 S. W. 913.

The original acquisition of a head-right certificate is sufficient to put a purchaser upon inquiry as to the interests of others in the property. Hill v. Moore, 85 Tex. 335, 19 S. W. 162; Randolph v. Junker, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 517, 21 S. W. 551.

Perrault*, 5 Ida. 719, 51 Pac. 774 (holding that a purchaser in good faith from the husband after the death of the wife is not bound to show, in order to support his title against a child of the community, that the sale of the premises conveyed to him was in point of fact necessary to provide for the payment of the community debts); Solomon v. Mowry, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 61 S. W. 335; Mangum v. White, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 254, 41 S. W. 80 (holding that where a husband sells land which was community property, after the death of his wife, the burden is on the heirs of the wife to show

Presumption of valid sale after lapse of years.—The lapse of thirty-eight years after community property has been sold and conveyed by the surviving member of the community raises the presumption that there were community debts, and that it was disposed of for the purpose of paying them. Auerbach v. Wylie, 84 Tex. 615, 19 S. W. 856, 20 S. W. 776. To the same effect see Von Rosenberg v. Perrault, 5 Ida. 719, 51 Pac. 774. See also Hensel v. Kegans, 79 Tex. 347, 15 S. W. 275; *Veramendi v. Facts showing a prima facie valid title.—Where plaintiffs allege that a conveyance of community property to defendant by their mother after their father's death was fraudulent, defendant establishes prima facie a good title in himself by showing the existence of community debts in an amount which reasonably indicates a necessity for the sale, and thereby casts on plaintiffs the burden of proving the fraud alleged. Cage v. Tucker, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 316, 37 S. W. 180.

Reimbursement of vendee for purchase-price applied to community debts.—In Calvit v. Mulhollan, 12 Rob. (La.) 266, it was held that if the vendee of community property sold by the husband after the wife's death, when sued by her heirs, proves that the price was applied to community debts, he is entitled to reimbursement by the heirs for an amount in proportion to their interest.

jurisdiction where the surviving wife is empowered to act with the same authority as the surviving husband she also, in the settlement of the community, may sue,⁶⁴ or be sued alone.⁶⁵ In Louisiana, when the widow accepts the community, she may be sued to the extent of her liability, namely, for one half of the community debts.⁶⁶

j. Effect of Subsequent Marriage of Survivor. In Texas, upon the marriage of the surviving wife, her control over the community property at once ceases,⁶⁷ and in Louisiana the code provides that a surviving spouse who remarries, having living children by the preceding marriage, cannot dispose of property given or bequeathed to him or to her by the deceased spouse, or which came from any deceased child of the first marriage; but that such property shall become the property of the children of the preceding marriage.⁶⁸ A husband who pays community debts of a preceding marriage out of moneys belonging to the community arising from a second marriage is bound to reimburse the second community for the amount.⁶⁹

66. Monget v. Pate, 2 La. Ann. 485; Cox v. Hunter, 10 La. 425.

Effect of renunciation of the community.—The surviving wife, who has ceased to administer the deceased husband's succession as natural tutrix, who is not its administratrix, and who has renounced the community between her and her deceased husband, cannot stand in judgment as defendant in a suit against the succession. Lemann v. Truxillo, 32 La. Ann. 65.

Period of prescription.—The liability of the widow for her share of community debts is prescribed in ten years from her acceptance of the community. Ludeling v. Felton, 29 La. Ann. 719.

Right to usufruct.—But the spouse remarrying has the usufruct of such property. Zeigler v. His Creditors, 49 La. Ann. 144, 21 So. 666. The surviving spouse of a second marriage is not entitled, however, to the usufruct of property inherited by a child of the first marriage. Hall v. Toussaint, 52 La. Ann. 1763, 28 So. 304. To same effect see Reems v. Dielmann, 111 La. 96, 35 So. 473.

69. Schwenck's Succession, 43 La. Ann. 1110, 10 So. 185.

Liability of second community to first.—The community formed by a man's second marriage cannot be held liable for the value of property belonging to a former community, sold by him during his second marriage, unless it be proved that the proceeds of such property were expended for the benefit of the second community. Bollinger's Succession, 30 La. Ann. 193.

Purchase of property of former community.—Where a man, married for the second time, purchases property belonging to the community which existed between himself and first wife at a sale to effect a partition between himself and the heirs of his wife, such property, unless he explains himself differently at the time of purchase, will fall into the community then existing between himself and second wife. Chapman v. Woodward, 16 La. Ann. 167.

tion to the contrary, one half of the community property, upon dissolution by death, descends to the heirs,⁷⁰ and for any unauthorized use, or disposal, by the survivor, of their community share, the heirs have a right to reimbursement.⁷¹ The interest of the heirs is, however, residuary only and is subordinated to the payment of the community debts.⁷² Advancements made from community property to a child, prior to the dissolution of the community by death, in considera-

Community property of a deceased husband and wife is properly divided equally between their children and children of their deceased children, although such deceased children died before the death of one of their parents. McKenzie v. Ross, 74 Tex. 600, 12 S. W. 317.

Father's homestead right upon death of mother.—Where a man and his wife acquire two hundred and forty acres of land as community property, and live upon the land as their homestead, one half of it becomes the property of the children upon their mother's death, subject, however, to the homestead right of the father in two hundred acres of the entire tract during his life. Crocker v. Crocker, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 296, 46 S. W. 870.

Stepmother as beneficiary of insurance policy.—In Hall v. Toussaint, 52 La. Ann. 1763, 28 So. 304, it was held that an amount collected on a policy of insurance, of which a stepmother was the beneficiary, was properly collected by her as her separate property, and a child of the first marriage was not entitled thereto.

Right of minor heirs to support see Schmitt v. Schmitt, 39 La. Ann. 982, 3 So. 225.

Where a husband improves his separate property with the funds of the community estate, the wife's heirs upon her death will be entitled to reimbursement out of his separate property to the extent of their share of the community, and their demand for such reimbursement is in the nature of an equitable lien on the property so improved. *Robinson v. Extinguishment of heir's equitable claim.—Where a surviving husband who has conveyed community property to a third person gives land taken in exchange to the wife's heir in settlement of her interest in her mother's estate, it discharges her equitable interest therein, and inures to the benefit of the grantee. Randolph v. Junker, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 517, 21 S. W. 551.

Where the husband, after his wife's death, uses mules and other stock belonging to the community, and farms the land, not excluding the children, he is not liable for hire. Akin v. Jefferson, 65 Tex. 137.

Liability for debts inoperative to render heir's title contingent.—When the community of acquets and gains is dissolved by the

tion of the relinquishment of such heir's interest in the estate, will, it is held, be binding on the heir.⁷³ As a general rule, upon the dissolution of the community, the interest owned therein by an heir is subject to his own debts.⁷⁴

b. Acceptance or Renunciation of Rights. In Louisiana the heirs of the wife, if they accept the community, will be liable for the community debts to the extent of their shares;⁷⁵ but for the purpose of exonerating themselves from the community debts they may renounce the community.⁷⁶

c. Actions By or Against Heirs. When community property is sold, or conveyed, without authority, by the survivor, the heirs of the deceased spouse may sue the vendee for the recovery of their interest.⁷⁷ Each heir of the wife, without making the other heirs parties, has a separate action for an undivided share of community property when so alienated in entirety by the surviving husband.⁷⁸ The heirs may also enjoin the surviving husband from making an unauthorized death of the wife, the interest of the wife's heirs attaches at once to the undivided half of the community, and the fact that the property is held by them subject to the rights of the community creditors does not make their title conditional nor contingent. Bossier v. Herwig, 112 La. 539, 36 So. 557.

In establishing the residuum of the community—that is, its assets, after having deducted the debts from the active mass—only debts of the community are to be deducted, and not debts that have been secured by special mortgage in favor of minors in proceedings instituted to that end. Scovell v. Levy, 106 La. 118, 30 So. 322.

Debt of deceased husband before marriage.—Where partition of the community property has been made between the heir and the surviving widow, a debt, contracted by the husband before the marriage is chargeable to that portion which has fallen to the heir, and not to the share of the community belonging to the wife, under La. Civ. Code, art. 2372. Markham v. Allen, 22 La. Ann. 513.

Wife's paraphernal claims pass to children.—Where a wife dies while the community is indebted to her for paraphernal funds received by the husband and used for the benefit of the community, her claim passes to her minor children as their property. Zeigler v. Creditors, 49 La. Ann. 144, 21 So. 666. See also Robin v. Castille, 7 La. 292.

Wife's funeral expenses.—The husband is entitled to compensate the claim of the wife's heir for her dowry with the amount paid by him for her funeral expenses. Lacour v. Lacour, 16 La. Ann. 103.

Mortgage on community paid in part by widow.—Where, on the death of a husband, leaving his widow and daughter as his only heirs, the community property is encumbered with a mortgage, part of which is paid by the widow, the share of the daughter should be charged with one half the amount so paid and one half the balance unpaid. *Sims v. Effect of renunciation by heirs on other heirs.—In Texas it is held that a renunciation by one of defendant's heirs of his interest in decedent's share in the value of improvements made with community money will inure to the benefit of the remaining heirs. Robinson v. Moore, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 93, 20 S. W. 994.

Proof of marriage as prerequisite to recovery.—Where a wife dies and her heir seeks to recover property from a third person as belonging to the community the heir must establish the marriage. McConnell v. New Orleans, 15 La. Ann. 410.

Conditions of recovery of property sold to pay debts.—Where community property has been sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of community debts for which it was mortgaged, the minors cannot claim restitution in integrum without showing injury from the sale, and paying or tendering the amount which has inured to their benefit. Coulson v. Wells, 21 La. Ann. 383.

Solvency of community immaterial.—Levy v. Robson, 112 La. 398, 36 So. 472. See also Murphy v. Jurey, 39 La. Ann. 785, 2 So. 575.

Suits for mere recognition of rights.—Heirs of the deceased wife, suing, not for a partition of the community property, but only for the recognition of their rights in the same, need not make their coheirs parties to the suit. Tugwell v. Tugwell, 32 La. Ann. 848.

sale of the community property,⁷⁹ or bring action against him, or his executors, to obtain their interest.⁸⁰ In Texas the equitable title which the heirs of the wife have in her community interest in land will support an action in trespass to try title.⁸¹ A mortgage by the husband, during coverture, of homestead community property by a deed in which the wife did not join, will, it has been held, upon foreclosure after her death prevent her heirs from setting up a claim of homestead in her right, as its absolute control was then vested in the husband.⁸² Actions by heirs may be barred on the ground that their claims have become stale by the lapse of time.⁸³ To make the wife's heirs liable for a community debt, they must be joined with the husband in an action thereon, and judgment obtained against them.⁸⁴

N. Administration and Settlement—1. IN GENERAL. In Louisiana the administration of the succession or estate of a deceased husband necessarily includes with it the administration of the community.⁸⁵ On the death of the wife, however, the administrator or executor of her estate has no right or authority to administer upon the community.⁸⁶ If a succession consisting wholly of community property owes no debts, and there is a surviving spouse, no administrator is necessary.⁸⁷ The surviving wife in such a case may take possession of Limitations of actions.—After the death of a wife the husband is entitled to the custody and control of the community property only for a reasonable time necessary to pay all the community debts, and thereafter an action may be brought by her heirs for their interest, and limitations begin to run without his having expressly repudiated their claim. Kennedy v. Baker, 59 Tex. 150; Wingate v. Wingate, 11 Tex. 430; Tinnen v. Mebane, 10 Tex. 246, 60 Am. Dec. 205; Miller v. Miller, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 367, 78 S. W. 1085 [citing *Albrecht v. Suit for paraphernal claim.—After the dissolution of the community by the death of the wife, her heirs, to whom a wife's paraphernal claim has descended, may enforce it against the community as an ordinary community debt. Thompson v. Vance, 110 La. 26, 34 So. 112. See also Richardson v. Richardson, 38 La. Ann. 657.

A judgment homologating a final account of executors and discharging them is no bar to an action by the heirs of the surviving wife to recover their interest in the community, the executors not having liquidated the community between the husband and his surviving wife. *Durham v. Administration of estate of husband and of predeceased wife.—When the husband and survivor of the community dies, without having administered the succession of his predeceased wife, of which he had the usufruct, his heirs being also the heirs of his wife, the two successions may be settled and distributed among the heirs in his succession alone. Lamm's Succession, 40 La. Ann. 312, 4 So. 53.

The widow in community administers the succession only so long as it is not intrusted to an administrator. Saloy v. Chexnaidre, 14 La. Ann. 567.

Right to demand an accounting.—The administratrix of the succession of a deceased wife has the right to demand an accounting of the executor of the husband as to community property. State v. Theard, 48 La. Ann. 926, 20 So. 286.

Right of community creditor to compel administration of wife's succession.—Where a matrimonial community exists and the wife dies, and her husband qualifies as natural tutor of the minor children, a creditor who has obtained judgment on a community debt cannot compel the administration of the wife's succession. Hooke's Succession, 46 La. Ann. 353, 15 So. 150, 23 L. R. A. 803.

the community as half owner and usufructuary of the other half.⁸⁸ In California it is expressly provided by statute that upon the death of the wife all the community property belongs to the husband without administration.⁸⁹ In Washington, unless otherwise required by creditors or other persons interested, administration may be had of the separate property of a deceased spouse, without administration of the community property;⁹⁰ and it will not be presumed that the administration upon the deceased wife's separate property draws into its custody the community property.⁹¹ In Texas the statute provides that either the husband or the wife as survivor may by giving bond qualify as survivor, and as such may take charge of all the community assets, managing and controlling the same, in trust, however, for the community debts.⁹² The statutes also provide that an appraisal and an inventory must be filed by the spouse qualifying as survivor.⁹³

Discretion of the court as to appointment.—The appointment of an administrator, however, even when there are no debts, is within the discretion of the court. See Romero's Succession, 42 La. Ann. 894, 8 So. 632.

Agreement between wife and creditors dispensing with administration.—If the surviving wife expresses her willingness to pay all the debts, and no creditors desire an administration on the husband's estate, an administration, so far as it concerns the community, is unnecessary. Pratt's Succession, 12 La. Ann. 457.

Penalty for taking unauthorized possession of vacant estates.—La. Civ. Code, art. 1100, which inflicts penalties on persons who take unauthorized possession of vacant estates, does not apply to the surviving spouse who takes possession of her community property. Trosclair's Succession, 34 La. Ann. 326. See also Selby v. Bass, 19 La. 499.

Release by heirs of debts due to succession.—Where the wife dies solvent and no separation of goods having been applied for, her heirs of full age accept her succession simply so as to release debts due to the succession, the subsequent appointment of an administrator cannot revive them. Stratton v. Rogers, 11 La. Ann. 380.

A contract by the survivor as administratrix of the community estate to pay an attorney a large contingent fee for the collection of a doubtful claim is valid and binding on the estate, for the powers of a survivor who qualifies to administer the community estate are much broader than those of an ordinary administrator. James v. Turner, 78 Tex. 241, 14 S. W. 574.

On the death of husband and wife, a joint administration on their community estate, against which there are valid claims, may properly be granted. Stephenson v. Mar-salis, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 162, 33 S. W. 383.

The administration of the husband's estate includes also the community. See Carlton v. Goebler, 94 Tex. 93, 58 S. W. 829; Lawson v. Kelley, 82 Tex. 457, 17 S. W. 717; Williams v. Howard, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 527, 31 S. W. 835.

2. WHAT ARE COMMUNITY ASSETS. The rules determining what constitutes community property in general⁹⁴ apply in determining the community assets upon dissolution of the community,⁹⁵ and presumptively everything found in the succession of the deceased spouse is included in the community.⁹⁶ In Louisiana crops ungathered at the dissolution of the community belong to the community.⁹⁷ A widow's separate property is not, however, an asset out of which payment of a community debt can be elaimed.⁹⁸

3. ALLOWANCE TO WIDOW OR MINOR CHILDREN. Some of the community property states provide for an allowance for the temporary support for the widow or for the minor children.⁹⁹ In Louisiana, however, the widow who brought no dowry to the marriage has no claim for her year's allowance.¹ As a general rule the allowance is a claim prior to that of creditors of the community.²

4. ALLOWANCE AND PAYMENT OF CLAIMS. Statutory requirements as to the time and manner of proving claims must be observed.³ The rights in the community

Inference as to community profits.—Where a man, upon marriage, owned as his separate property, cattle worth about twenty thousand dollars, and died intestate, his wife surviving him, when this capital and its accretions had increased to thirty-five thousand dollars, his business, in the intervening years, being buying and selling cattle, it was a fair inference that the profits or common property consisted of the difference between the original value of the capital and the value of the property held at the time of the death, less the community debts. *Lewis v. Fruits hanging by roots on separate land.—In Louisiana, under Civ. Code, § 2407, fruits hanging by the roots on lands belonging separately to either the husband or wife at the time of the dissolution of marriage are equally divided between the husband and the wife or their heirs, and consequently such fruits on the separate estate of the husband at the dissolution of the marriage by his death fall in the community, and are to be equally divided between his wife and his heirs. In re Jones, 41 La. Usufructuary's right to crops.—The surviving wife being entitled, under the act of March 25, 1844, to the usufruct of the community property until her second marriage, and, under Civ. Code, § 538, to the natural fruits or such as are the product of the industry of the usufructuary, the surviving widow is not chargeable or accountable to the heirs for the growing crops in the field not gathered at the time of the succession. In re Davis, 22 La. of the husband's separate creditors are subordinated to the rights of the community creditors.⁴ In Texas it is held that the widow as survivor may make preferences among creditors.⁵ A widow as executrix is liable for the community debts and for the debts of her husband to the extent of his separate property and of the community property coming into her hands.⁶ But debts incurred by the surviving wife for her personal advantage after having qualified as administratrix of the community property are not liens on the interest of the heirs.⁷ In Louisiana, when the administration of the succession of the husband necessarily involves the settlement of the community, the costs of the administration of the succession of the husband are chargeable to the succession and to the community in proportion to the interest of each.⁸

5. ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE OF COMMUNITY PROPERTY. The community property may be sold by the administrator or executor if such sale is necessary for the payment of community debts,⁹ and such sales legally made in the course of administration pass to the purchaser a valid title to all the property.¹⁰ But unauthorized sales and conveyances will not affect the interest and rights of a surviving widow or of the heirs.¹¹ The husband, it has been held, cannot by his will empower his executor to dispose of the wife's share of the homestead or community property.¹² So the administrator of the widow's separate estate has no power to sell the community.¹³ When a sale of community property is lawfully made, the surviving wife, although executrix or administratrix, may, it has been held, become a purchaser thereof at probate sale.¹⁴ Under the Texas statute relating to the qualifying of survivors a sale by a survivor not duly qualified will not be valid to pass the whole interest,¹⁵ but a mere irregularity in the proceedings to qualify will not render a sale void.¹⁶

Allowance for gravestone from wife's estate.—In In re Weringer, 100 Cal. 345, 34 Pac. 825, it was held that while a husband's duty to give his wife decent burial included the placing of some mark of identification over her burial place, yet if he was poor, and she left a considerable estate, the court might allow a reasonable amount from her estate toward a monument.

6. ACCOUNTING AND SETTLEMENT. It has been held that the administrator owes but one account to the legal representatives of the deceased and that accordingly, although the widow who accepts the community is entitled to one-half of the balance found due, after a full administration and payment of all the charges of the estate, yet the account rendered and finally approved contradictorily with the heirs and the widow must ascertain the amount to which the widow is entitled.¹⁷ Separate property improved, during marriage, out of community funds is chargeable therefor in behalf of the community.¹⁸ On the other hand, the community is chargeable for separate funds expended for its benefit.¹⁹ The administrator of the succession of the wife has the right to demand an accounting of the executor of the husband with respect to community property.²⁰ In a suit for a settlement of the community the surviving spouse may set up in defense the nullity of the marriage.²¹

7. DISTRIBUTION OF PROPERTY. It has been held that the persons entitled to the deceased's share of the community may, after twelve months from the filing of the bond of the survivor, demand and have a distribution thereof as in the case of other administrations.²² So it is held that a surviving widow may apply for the partition of the community property and the distribution of her share.²³ But an action by distributees against the mother's administrator to compel a settlement, and a partition of the community real estate, does not include a partition of the separate estate of the deceased.²⁴ The amount of property brought by either spouse to the marriage, and not what either may have had at any time before marriage, is to be deducted as separate property for the purpose of ascertaining the community to be distributed at dissolution.²⁵ The surviving spouse has the right to retake his separate property in kind, if practicable.²⁶ So in the distribution of the community the survivor is entitled to have his half given to him in kind if it can be done.²⁷ It has been held that, in the absence of any administration, a conveyance by a father to his children, in severalty, of community lands, made after the mother's death and accepted by the children, constitutes, as between them as her heirs, a partition of her estate.²⁸

59. Standard Dict.

"Ignorance of a particular fact, that is, want of knowledge of that fact, consists in this, that the mind, though sound and capable of receiving an impression, has never acted upon that subject because that subject has never been brought to the notice of the perceptive faculties. Ignorance is a negative condition of the mind, and that condition is communicable to others only by some act or by some declaration. Whether an individual is ignorant of a particular fact depends in no measure upon the want of knowledge of some one else as to the same fact, however closely allied the latter may be to the former; but the existence of such ignorance must, as to each individual, be sought by other methods consistent with the settled rules of evidence." McCosker v. Banks, 84 Md. 292, 295, 35 Atl. 935.

Ignorance of law, within the meaning of the rule that ignorance of law will not excuse, is to be construed as meaning ignorance of the laws of one's own country or state, and not laws of foreign countries or states, which are regarded as mistakes of fact. Marschall v. Coleman, 187 Ill. 556, 581, 58 N. E. 628; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112, 130, 19 Am. Dec. 353. See also 12 Cyc. 155; 10 Cyc. 431, 894; 4 Cyc. 965; 3 Cyc. 719 note 15.
