b. In Case of Felonious Assault. The above rule is held to apply in some jurisdictions, even where defendant was violently and feloniously assaulted, and even though he was without fault in bringing on the difficulty.³ But in other jurisdictions it is held that one is under no duty to retreat in such a case, although he could do so with safety, but may stand his ground and kill his assailant, if necessary to save himself from death or great bodily harm,⁴ except where he was at fault in bringing on the difficulty.⁵

c. Attack While in Exercise of Legal Right—(1) IN GENERAL. In accordance with the above rule, in some jurisdictions where a person, being without fault and in a place where he has a right to be in the exercise of his lawful business or calling, is violently or feloniously assaulted, he may without retreating, W. 100; Blake v. State, 3 Tex. App. 581. Under Tex. Pen. Code, arts. 674-679 (569-574), where the manifest purpose of an unlawful and violent attack is not to murder, maim, disfigure, or inflict serious bodily injury, the person killing must before killing resort to all other means to prevent the injury, except retreat (Taylor v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 552, 43 S. W. 1019; Childress v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1897) 43 S. W. 100; Gonzales v. State, 30 Tex. App. 203, 16 S. W. 978; Miller v. State, 27 Tex. App. 63, 10 S. W. 445; Kendall v. State, 8 Tex. App. 569, holding that the phrase "all other means" does not import all possible means but all means reasonably proper and effective under the circumstances); and the killing must take place while the person killed is in the very act of making such unlawful and violent attack (Miller v. State, 27 Tex. App. 63, 10 S. W. 445); but he is not required to resort to other means where the attack is for the manifest purpose of murdering, maiming, disfiguring, etc. (Foster v. State, 11 Tex. App. 105); or where it reasonably appears by acts or by words coupled with the acts of the person killed that it is his intent to commit murder, etc. (Kelly v. State, 27 Tex. App. 562, 11 S. W. 627); or where the attack is such as produces a reasonable expectation or fear of death or some serious bodily harm (Hunnicut v. State, 20 Tex. App. 632).

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," § 172.

Where the assailant is a violent man more prompt measures of defense will be justifiable than if he is of a peaceable disposition.

bound to call on bystanders to restrain his assailant before he is entitled to make personal resistance.¹³

b. Use of Deadly Weapon. The use of a deadly weapon or other resistance of like effect in self-defense is justifiable or excusable only where it is necessary or reasonably necessary to defend against death or great bodily harm.¹⁴ It is not justifiable in repelling an attack without a weapon,¹⁵ such as an assault with blows from the hand or fist,¹⁶ or with insulting words and blows,¹⁷ unless there are other circumstances giving the assailed a reason to apprehend danger of death or great bodily harm.¹⁸

10. PURSUIT OF ADVERSARY. Where a person free from fault is attacked by another, who manifestly intends by violence to take his life or to do him great bodily harm, he is not only not obliged to retreat,¹⁹ but may pursue his adversary until he has secured himself from all danger, and if he kills him in so doing, it is justifiable self-defense.²⁰ But this right of pursuit, even in the most extreme case, ceases as soon as the assailed has reasonable grounds for believing that the danger has ceased to be immediate and impending, as where the adversary endeavors in good faith to withdraw from the combat.²¹ If, however, the adversary attempts to withdraw merely for the apparent purpose of securing a better position from which to renew the combat, defendant's right of pursuit does not cease.²²

11. RENEWAL OF CONTEST. Where after the original difficulty has ceased or defendant has an opportunity of declining further combat, and he instead continues the struggle or renews the combat, he becomes the aggressor, irrespective of whether he was at fault in bringing on the original difficulty, and is not justified or excused in killing in self-defense.²³ But where the contest is renewed by the adversary, defendant's right of self-defense is not affected by the original encounter even though he was the aggressor therein.²⁴

F. Defense of Property — 1. IN GENERAL. Although a person may use such force as is reasonably necessary to protect his property, real or personal, he is not justified or excused in taking life in defense of such property, other than his habitation, in order to prevent a mere trespass,⁴⁵ or larceny.⁴⁶ But where one in defense of his property kills another who manifestly intends and endeavors by violence or surprise to commit a forcible or atrocious felony thereon, such as murder, burglary, robbery, and the like, the killing is justifiable or excusable homicide.⁴⁷ and the absence of any one of them will involve in guilt.⁵¹ As a general rule, the act resulting in death must be a lawful one,⁵² and must be done with reasonable care and due regard for the lives and persons of others.⁵³ Thus it is excusable homicide if death unfortunately ensues where a parent is correcting his child or a master or teacher his apprentice or pupil, and the bounds of moderation are not exceeded either in the manner, the instrument, or the quantity of punishment;⁵⁴ where an officer is punishing a criminal in moderation and within the limits of the law;⁵⁵ where the parties are engaged in a lawful sport or game;⁵⁶ or where a physician or surgeon or one acting as such administers a drug or performs an operation with due skill and caution.⁵⁷ But the homicide is not excusable if the act causing it is unlawful,⁵⁸ or if it is done in an unlawful or grossly negligent manner.⁵⁹

2. KILLING ONE IN DEFENDING AGAINST ATTACK BY ANOTHER. In accordance with the above rule the unintentional killing of a bystander by a random shot fired in the proper and prudent exercise of the right of self-defense is excusable or justifiable if the killing of the party intended to be killed would, under all the circumstances, have been excusable or justifiable as in self-defense.⁶⁰ But where the latter killing could not have been excused or justified under the circumstances, the accidental killing of another would not be excusable or justifiable.⁶¹

VII. INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION.

A. For Homicide—1. IN GENERAL. The general rules governing indictments and informations are applicable to indictments or informations for homicide.¹ Such indictments and informations must be clear and certain as to the acts constituting the offense² and as to the parties charged³ to such a degree as is sufficient to give notice to the accused of the particular accusation which they must prepare to meet.⁴ There must be a specific charge that defendant committed the act alleged.⁵ Under the rule that nothing material in the indictment shall be taken by intendment or implication, a misspelling of material words may be fatal;⁶ but as in the case of other indictments the mere misspelling of a word⁷ or an omission⁸ by which the meaning of the indictment is not obscured is as a general rule immaterial. In those states in which the name of the offense is regarded as matter of form, it may be rejected under a statute providing for the rejection of surplusage and defendant tried for the crime defined by the statement of facts.⁹

2. STATUTORY PROVISIONS AND FORMS. Under the statutes of criminal procedure existing in many states, much of the common-law technicality concerning an indictment for homicide has been removed, and it is sufficient if the indictment charge the essentials of the offense in simple and concise language.¹⁰ The form of the indictment itself is prescribed by statute in many of the states,¹¹ and an indictment following such form is valid.¹² Such forms, in case they require the charge of the crime to be set forth with reasonable certainty, although many of the common-law averments are omitted, do not violate the constitutional right of the accused to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him.¹³ The statutory form need not be literally followed,¹⁴ but an indictment which attempts to mingle a common-law and a statutory form, without fully embracing the requirements of either, is defective.¹⁵

3. FOLLOWING STATUTE DEFINING OFFENSE—a. In General. In those states in which murder is defined by statute, an indictment is usually regarded as sufficient if it follows the language of the statute.¹⁶ It is not, however, sufficient to Matakovich*, 59 Minn. 514, 61 N. W. 677 (holding that the fact that the accusation was of manslaughter in the first degree was immaterial in case the statement of facts warranted the conviction had).

10. People v. Dolan, 9 Cal. 576 (holding it sufficient if a man of ordinary intelligence can understand from the indictment that under such circumstances as show a felonious intent the mortal wound was inflicted by defendant upon the deceased, of which wound he died within a year and a day from its infliction); State v. Ellington, 4 Ida. 529, 43 Pac. 60 (holding that the indictment contained a sufficient statement that deceased died from the effect of the wound inflicted by defendant).

Illustrations of this rule may be found in People v. Davis, 73 Cal. 355, 15 Pac. 8 (holding an indictment sufficient if it charge that defendant did unlawfully, feloniously, and of his malice aforethought, kill deceased, naming him and the time and appropriate place being stated); People v. Martin, 47 Cal. 101; People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 191; People v. Ybarra, 17 Cal. 166; Territory v. Evans, 2 Ida. (Hasb.) 425, 17 Pac. 139 (murder in second degree); *Lane v. follow the language of the statute where the crime is defined generally without naming the particular acts which constitute it.¹⁷ A substantial compliance with the words of the statute is usually sufficient.¹⁸ Where the common-law and statutory definitions of murder are identical, an indictment is good if it follows the common-law form; ¹⁹ but where the common-law and statutory definitions are variant, a common-law indictment is not sufficient.²⁰ Acts mentioned disjunctively in a statute as constituting but a single offense may be charged conjunctively.²¹

b. Negating Exceptions. Where an indictment is drawn upon a statute, an exception forming a portion of the description of the statutory offense must be negated.²² And it is not an objection that the negative averment contained in the indictment is more inclusive than the statutory provisions.²³

4. TIME AND PLACE OF OFFENSE. The rules governing the statement of the time and place of the crime of homicide are in general those applicable to indictments for other offenses.²⁴ An averment of the place at which the mortal wound was inflicted is necessary to fix venue; ²⁵ but such averment is in general required to be only sufficiently definite to establish that the offense occurred within the jurisdiction of the court.²⁶ Where the prosecution is under a general statute of the

No. 16,241, 4 Biss. 29, holding that an indictment for the murder of an officer in the performance of services in relation to the enrolment of the militia was defective where it did not state whether the person killed was an officer or not or under what or whose authority he was acting, but merely that he was "a person employed in the performance of service relating to the enrolment" and that he was "duly ordered by the proper legally constituted authorities" to perform those duties.

21. Rosenbarger v. State, 154 Ind. 425, 56 N. E. 914, holding that under a statute making it a crime to administer or to procure to be administered any poison, etc., to a human being, with intent to kill, an indictment which charged that defendant did administer and procure to be administered a certain poison is not self-contradictory, since the word "procure" in the statute is used in the sense of "cause," and it is not impossible for a person in the same transaction to both administer a poison, and cause the same to be done.

22. See, generally, INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS. And see State v. Leeper, 70 Iowa 748, 30 N. W. 501 (holding that the acts charged to have been done to produce a miscarriage must be alleged to have been unnecessary to save the woman's life); State v. McIntyre, 19 Minn. 93.

Exception contained in another section of the statute need not be negated. State v. Rupe, 41 Tex. 33, holding that in an indictment for destroying the vitality or life of an infant during the parturition of the mother, while the infant was in a state of being born and before actual birth, it is not necessary that the indictment should negative the existence of the fact that it was done under the advice of a physician.

Death and assault in different jurisdictions.—Where the fatal blow was given in one parish, and death ensued in another, the United States which is silent as to jurisdiction, it is unnecessary to state the particular facts bringing the case within the jurisdiction of the federal courts.²⁷ An averment of the time of the commission of the offense is not in general material and need not be proved as laid,²⁸ and there being usually no statute barring a prosecution for murder, it is not necessary to show that the offense was within any period of limitations.²⁹ It is, under many statutes, sufficient if the offense appears to have been committed before the finding of the indictment.³⁰ The date of the offense is properly charged as of the date of the mortal blow.³¹ An averment of the date of the wounding and of the death is, however, essential for the purpose of determining whether death occurred within a year and a day from the assault.³² At common law it was necessary that the averment of place and time crime may be prosecuted in either, and the facts need not be set forth in the indictment. It is sufficient to charge the commission of the crime in the parish where the bill is found. State v. Jones, 38 La. Ann. 792. An indictment for murder charging defendant with feloniously inflicting the wound in the county of Washington, state of Minnesota, from which the murdered man, upon the same day, died in the county of Pierce, state of Wisconsin, states the commission of the offense in Washington county. State v. Gesert, 21 Minn. 369.

Offenses on the high seas.—It is sufficient that an indictment for murder on the high seas charge it as committed on the high seas within the jurisdiction of the court and within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular state of the United States on board of an American vessel, without stating on what part of the high seas it was committed. Anderson v. U. S., 170 U. S. 481, 18 S. Ct. 689, 42 L. ed. 1116; St. Clair v. U. S., 154 U. S. 134, 14 S. Ct. 1002, 38 L. ed. 936.

Offenses on navigable waters.—Where the place named is such that the court will take judicial notice that it is a navigable water, such fact need not be alleged. U. S. v. Beacham, 29 Fed. 284, so holding with regard to Chesapeake bay.

Statutes dispensing with the necessity of an averment of place but requiring proof thereof showing it to have been within the jurisdiction only are constitutional. Noles v. State, 24 Ala. 672.

27. U. S. v. Holtzhauser, 40 Fed. 76, holding that in an indictment punishing negligence in the management of steamboats or vessels resulting in loss of human life, it need not be alleged that the offense was committed at a place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States or on the high seas and outside the jurisdiction of any state.

28. Vinegar v. Com., 104 Ky. 106, 46 S. W. 510, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 412; Foster v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 803, holding that it is sufficient if it is shown that the killing occurred prior to presentment, and not so remote as to be barred by limitation.

29. State v. Williams, 30 La. Ann. 842.

Where the prosecution is for manslaughter which may be barred, the averment of time is necessary to show the limitations have not run, although the indictment is in form for murder. People v. Miller, 12 Cal. 291.

Georgia.—Baker v. State, 121 Ga. 592, 49 S. E. 782; Sutherland v. State, 121 Ga. 591, 49 S. E. 781.

Minnesota.—State v. Ryan, 13 Minn. 370, holding that a charge, in an indictment for murder, that defendant killed the deceased upon a certain day, implies ex vi termini that the latter died on that day, and sufficiently shows "that the offence was committed at some time prior to the time of finding the indictment."

Nevada.—State v. O'Connor, 11 Nev. 416, sustaining an allegation that the offense occurred on a certain date or "thereabouts."

New York.—People v. Murphy, 93 N. Y. App. Div. 383, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 786 [affirmed in 179 N. Y. 595, 72 N. E. 1146], holding that where an indictment for manslaughter caused by negligence alleged that such negligence occurred on the 27th day of November, 1902, and that subsequently deceased was killed by reason thereof, such allegation was tantamount to the averment that deceased was killed on the same day.

North Carolina.—State v. Shepherd, 30 N. C. 195, holding that an indictment charging the prisoner with murder on the "twelfth" day of August was sufficient under the statute, as time was only essential to show that the deceased died within a year and a day from the time of the wounding.

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," § 212.

31. State v. Hobbs, 33 La. Ann. 226 (holding that an indictment for murder is not defective in failing to state the time when the death took place, the day on which was inflicted the wound causing the death being set forth; and the rule is the same, although death did not ensue for several days); State v. Wallman, 31 La. Ann. 146 (although death occurred the day following). But see Hill v. State, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 135, 2 West. L. J. 427, holding that where the giving of the mortal blow and the death ensuing are laid as of different dates, a charge that the murder was committed upon the date of the blow is inconsistent.

be repeated to every material fact in the indictment;³³ hence, it was necessary to allege time and place to the actual striking;³⁴ but this rule has been greatly relaxed under modern statutes, and it is sufficient if the place and time clearly appear from the entire indictment,³⁵ and time and place may be repeated by words of reference such as "then and there"³⁶ or "aforesaid."³⁷

5. DESCRIPTION OF PERSON ACCUSED. The description of the accused is governed by the rules applicable to indictments generally;³⁸ hence it is not necessary to state his residence³⁹ or other matter of particular description.⁴⁰

6. DESCRIPTION OF PERSON KILLED — a. Name. It is necessary to state both the christian and surname of the person killed, if known;⁴¹ but it is sufficient to allege that the christian name is unknown,⁴² or that the surname is unknown.⁴³ It may be sufficient to employ the initials of the first name.⁴⁴ An error in the middle name of the deceased is not material.⁴⁵ A description of the deceased by the name by which he is commonly known is sufficient, although variant from his true name.⁴⁶ Where the name of a person has been once well stated, a variance in its repetition has been held not fatal unless prejudicial to defendant,⁴⁷ as has the occurrence of a blank in place of a subsequent repetition.⁴⁸ An error by which the name of the deceased is substituted for that of defendant in the charg-

Cherry*, 7 N. C. 7 (both holding that if the time and place of the assault be set forth, they need not be repeated to the mortal blow).

ing part of the indictment is fatal where such error occurs in the only clause which alleges the infliction of the mortal wound.⁴⁹ By statute in some states an error in the name of the person deceased is not material where the offense is described in other respects with sufficient certainty to identify the act.⁵⁰

b. Sex. Under the modern statutes it is not necessary to allege the sex of the person killed,⁵¹ except when the killing occurs in the perpetration of another offense which may be committed only upon a female,⁵² and in such case the absence of an express averment may be supplied by reference to other parts of the indictment.⁵³

c. As a Human Being. Where the name of the person killed is set out in the indictment, the further fact that he was a human being need not be alleged,⁵⁴ nor is it necessary to allege that he was a reasonable creature in being.⁵⁵

d. As Being in the Peace of God and the State. An averment that the person killed was "in the peace of the state"⁵⁶ or "in the peace of God"⁵⁷ is unnecessary.

e. Social and Civil Status. As a general rule, it is unnecessary to set out particular descriptive matters with relation to the person killed.⁵⁸ So, upon an indictment for killing an officer in the discharge of his duty, the fact that deceased was an officer so acting need not be alleged;⁵⁹ but in the case of indictments under statutes punishing offenses by or against slaves, it was held that particular averments bringing the offense within the description of the statute must be inserted.⁶⁰

f. Woman Killed by Abortion. An indictment for the murder or manslaughter of a pregnant female in an attempt to procure an abortion need not allege that she was "quick with child,"⁶¹ but the rule has been held otherwise in an indictment for manslaughter where the words are made a descriptive averment in the statutory definition.⁶²

g. Description of Child. An indictment for the murder of a child must state its name or account for the omission.⁶³ The child may, however, be described as not named,⁶⁴ or as of name unknown.⁶⁵ Its age⁶⁶ or sex⁶⁷ need not be stated. Missouri.—State v. Smith, 66 Mo. 92, holding that an indictment for manslaughter, based on a statute, making it manslaughter to cause death by culpable negligence, which charged a druggist with negligently filling a medical prescription with opium, thus causing the death of the person to whom it was administered, but did not allege that the druggist delivered the medicine to any one to be administered to the deceased, nor state the ingredients of the prescription, the respective quantities of each, or by whom the prescription was given, was fatally defective.

United States.—U. S. v. Holtzhauer, 40 Fed. 76, holding that an indictment against the officers of a steamboat was insufficient, which charged in the words of the statute, that by defendant's negligence, misconduct, and inattention to their duties a certain person's life was destroyed.

England.—Reg. v. Barrett, 2 C. & K. 343, 61 E. C. L. 343, holding that an engineer who had charge of an engine which was worked for the purpose of keeping up a sup-charged.⁷¹ When the act causing death is one of gross carelessness or of foolhardy presumption, knowledge of its dangerous nature need not be averred.⁷² An indictment for manslaughter by a mother in the exposure of an infant child need not allege a duty to protect the child or that it was unable to protect itself, when a wrongful act in exposing the child and its death from such exposure are alleged.⁷³

c. In the Perpetration of Another Offense. Under statutes providing that murder in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate certain specific felonies shall constitute murder in the first degree, it is not necessary that an indictment drawn in the ordinary form for the first degree contain a specific averment that the offense was committed in connection with one of such felonies to permit proof and conviction thereof.⁷⁴ Nor is it necessary to set out the facts descriptive of the connected felony,⁷⁵ but under such an indictment it is held in some jurisdictions that it is necessary to prove that the murder was committed with intent to kill and after premeditation and deliberation.⁷⁶ In case it should be regarded as ply of pure air in a mine who neglected his duty, so that the engine stopped, and the mine thereby became charged with foul air, which afterward exploded and caused the death of one of the miners, could not be convicted of manslaughter on an indictment which did not allege a duty in him which he had neglected to perform.

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," § 214.

Negligence by medical practitioner.—An indictment against a medical practitioner charging that he made divers assaults on the deceased, a patient, and applied wet clothes to his body and caused him to be put in baths, is sufficient, although all that was done was by the consent of the deceased; and the indictment need not charge an undertaking to perform a cure, and a felonious breach of duty. Reg. v. Ellis, 2 C. & K. 470, 61 E. C. L. 470.

Where the words "did feloniously kill" are employed, it has been held not necessary to state that it was an act of omission that caused the death. Reg. v. Smith, 11 Cox C. C. 210.

necessary to set out the felony, however, it would seem that it must be pleaded with the formality necessary were it the sole basis of the indictment.⁷⁷ Under statutes defining murder in the second degree as a homicide perpetrated without design to effect death by a person engaged in the commission of any felony, it is held essential to set out facts showing that the homicide was unintentional and that it resulted as an incident while defendant was engaged in the commission of a felony which was collateral to the homicide and not one of the aggravated felonies associated with murder in the first degree,⁷⁸ and the averment of such facts does not render the indictment faulty as charging two offenses.⁷⁹ So when death ensues in the pursuit of an unlawful design, it is necessary that the intended offense be so described that the question whether the homicide is murder or manslaughter may be determined.⁸⁰ An indictment under a statute for involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act must show that the act was unlawful.⁸¹ In case killing of the mother in an attempted abortion is made punishable by a specific statute, an indictment for such offense must contain all the descriptive averments of the statute and an ordinary indictment for manslaughter is held insufficient.⁸² An indictment for murder in the prosecution of a riot to which accused was a party need not state that it so occurred.⁸³

See also Lohman v. People, 1 N. Y. 379, 49 Am. Dec. 340 [affirming 2 Barb. 216], holding that where one statute renders it a misdemeanor to administer drugs to a pregnant female with intent to produce a miscarriage and another statute declares it manslaughter to use the same means with intent to destroy the child, in case the death of such child should be thereby produced, an indictment charging all the facts necessary to constitute manslaughter under the latter statute, except the intent to destroy the child, and alleging only an intent to produce miscarriage, is fatally defective as an indictment for manslaughter, but it is good as an indictment for a misdemeanor.

A charge of the use of instruments to produce an abortion whereof a woman sickened and died is to be construed as a charge of causing death while in the pursuit of an unlawful design and not as a charge of having inflicted violence on the mother and caused her death. *Smith v. ing;⁸⁴ but under the statutes of many states the necessity for such an averment has been dispensed with,⁸⁵ and indictments drawn under such statutes are held not to deprive the accused of his constitutional right to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation,⁸⁶ or to be charged by indictment, presentment, or impeachment.⁸⁷ Such a statute does not dispense with the necessity of setting out the facts constituting the offense,⁸⁸ but an unnecessary or defective statement of the manner or means will not vitiate the indictment.⁸⁹ Under statutes requiring only a clear and distinct statement of the offense in ordinary and concise language, the manner and means of the killing need not be set out,⁹⁰ or they may be averred as unknown.⁹¹ The state, in those cases in which an averment of manner and means is essential, is not, however, held to strict proof of the allegations.⁹² That Statement of means in other indictments.

—That an indictment of an accessory to a murder stated that the deceased was choked to death by the principal does not render invalid an indictment, returned the following day, charging the principal with the killing by "ways, means and manner and by instruments to the grand jurors unknown." Sanchez v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 179, 73 S. W. 504.

That reasonable diligence would have enabled a statement to be made does not invalidate the indictment (Terry v. State, 120 Ala. 286, 25 So. 176), the means must be shown to have been actually known to the grand jury (Eatman v. State, 139 Ala. 67, 36 So. 16). But see State v. Brown, 168 Mo. 449, 68 S. W. 568, holding the facts must be not readily ascertainable.

State*, 137 Ala. 47, 34 So. 633 (holding under a statute permitting the statement of different means alternatively in the same count that an indictment for homicide which alleged that defendant killed decedent "by hitting him or by striking him with a miner's pick," or "by stabbing or cutting him with a knife, or with some sharp instrument to the grand jury unknown," was sufficient); Hiicks v. State, 105 Ga. 627, 31 S. E. 579 (holding that an indictment which charges murder "by choking and by other means to the jurors unknown" is not demurrable, on the ground of indefiniteness).

98. State v. O'Neil, 51 Kan. 651, 33 Pac. 287, 24 L. R. A. 555 (holding that charges of an assault with a blunt instrument, of striking, beating, kicking, and choking, and of violently throwing against a stone wall might be united); Andersen v. U. S., 170 U. S. 481, 18 S. Ct. 689, 42 L. ed. 1116 (holding that where deceased was first shot and afterward thrown into the sea by defendant, an indictment is good which charges both acts in the same count, and that death resulted from both shooting and drowning); St. Clair v. U. S., 154 U. S. 134, 14 S. Ct. 1002, 38 L. ed. 936.

99. Wilson v. State, 84 Ala. 426, 4 So. 383, striking or choking.

Each alternative must be a sufficient charge under such statutes. Hornsby v. State, 94 Ala. 55, 10 So. 522, holding an indictment charging an averment of murder "by stabbing with knife or other weapon" demurrable.

Such statutes are not mandatory and the acts may be charged conjunctively when they are cooperative. State v. Fiester, 32 Oreg. 254, 50 Pac. 561 (beating her with his fists, and by choking her, and by pushing and dragging her into the water, and holding her under the water, whereby she was drowned); State v. Hall, 14 S. D. 161, 84 N. W. 766 (shooting and striking).

(IV) SUFFICIENCY OF STATEMENT—(A) In General. As a general rule a plain, direct, and certain statement of the facts constituting the crime from which the connection between the facts alleged as the cause of death and the death itself appears will be sufficient.¹ A state or condition of the body of deceased making the assault more dangerous need not be averred.²

(B) Murder by Poison. An indictment for murder by poison is sufficient in general if it charge that the poison was administered and that such poison so administered caused the death.³ It need not be expressly alleged that the substance was a poison,⁴ how it was administered,⁵ or its amount,⁶ or to set out in detail the mode in which it affected the body or the particular organ upon which it operated,⁷ or to charge that the poison was not knowingly and voluntarily received and swallowed by the deceased.⁸ Nor is it necessary to state the particular poison employed;⁹ and if unnecessarily stated, the proof need not correspond with the allegation.¹⁰ An indictment for murder perpetrated by

State, 54 Ind. 25 (holding an indictment insufficient which alleged that defendant murdered deceased by "firing a large . . . pistol, loaded," etc., but did not show in what manner deceased came to his death); Com. v. Fox, 7 Gray (Mass.) 585; State v. Freeman, 1 Speers (S. C.) 57.

Improbable but not impossible manner.—An indictment is not demurrable because it charges two defendants with having in their hands only one gun, with which the murder is alleged to have been committed. Evans v. State, 58 Ark. 47, 22 S. W. 1026.

Charge of assault by means of false representations is too bad for argument. State v. McBride, 26 Wis. 409, malpractice of physician causing death.

tion the immediate cause of suffocation, namely, the swelling of the throat).

mingling poison in the food of another need not aver that the poison was given to the deceased by defendant;¹¹ nor after verdict can it be objected that it was not alleged that defendant had any intention of drinking the liquid in which the poison was mixed.¹²

e. Assault — (i) IN GENERAL. An assault must be charged when a battery occurs in the perpetration of a murder,¹³ and the assault and battery must be alleged to have been made and done on the same person.¹⁴ Under the more modern decisions, it is held unnecessary to charge the assault¹⁵ or an assault and battery¹⁶ in formal and express terms. The indictment may allege a series of assaults upon different dates, as a result of which death ensued, although not from any particular assault.¹⁷ Where the homicide is by shooting, it is not necessary to charge the assault as "with" a pistol or gun;¹⁸ but where the instrument is some weapon of striking, the word must be used to show the connection of the instrument and the assault.¹⁹ It is not necessary to repeat the charge of the assault in the part of the indictment stating the mortal wound, where connectives such as "then and there" are employed.²⁰

(ii) DESCRIPTION OF WEAPON. While it is usual to name the weapon used,²¹ the omission to do so is not regarded as material under the modern statutes requiring the indictment to contain merely a certain and concise statement of the offense,²² so it is unnecessary to aver that the weapon employed was deadly or dangerous,²³ unless the indictment is drawn under a statute employing such words

W. 553, holding that where an indictment for murder charges that defendant, with a gun, assaulted deceased, and killed and murdered him, it is not open to criticism as not charging any battery, since the allegation of killing and murdering implies a battery.

in defining the crime.²⁴ The state is not in any case held to strict proof of the weapon alleged.²⁵ It need not be stated with what a gun or pistol used was charged.²⁶

(iii) MANNER OF USE OF WEAPON. Although the requirement of a statement of the facts and circumstances of the crime is sometimes held to render it necessary to state the manner in which the deadly weapon was employed,²⁷ it is apparently unnecessary to allege the way in which the instrument was held,²⁸ or that it was in the hands of the accused.²⁹ A charge of killing by means of shooting may be sufficient, although there is no direct allegation that the bullets struck and penetrated,³⁰ that the contents of a firearm were discharged into³¹ the body of the deceased, that the wounds were inflicted by the shooting,³² or what was the size or weight of an instrument with which a blow was given.³³

f. Description of the Mortal Wound. While at common law great particularity in the description of the wound was deemed to be essential,³⁴ requiring its length, breadth, and depth, if incised, to be stated,³⁵ as well as the part of the body upon which it was inflicted,³⁶ any repugnancy being fatal,³⁷ under the modern statutes of criminal procedure such particularity is unnecessary.³⁸ It is as a general rule unnecessary to state the part of the body upon which the wound was it being necessary to aver the connection between the act done by the accused and the death.⁴⁶ In some cases it is held that the averment that defendant killed and murdered deceased is a sufficient allegation of the death of deceased,⁴⁷ as a result of the wrongful act.⁴⁸ In all indictments in which death is charged to have resulted from a stroke or blow, there must be an averment that the wound inflicted by the stroke was mortal and that death resulted therefrom.⁴⁹ It has, however, been held sufficient to allege that deceased died from the wound inflicted,⁵⁰ and that the use of the word "mortal" is not imperative.⁵¹

b. Time and Place of Death. It is in many jurisdictions stated to be necessary to allege both the time and place to the fact of death,⁵² the allegation of time being necessary to show that death occurred within a year and a day,⁵³ and the allegation of place to show that death occurred within the jurisdiction of the court;⁵⁴ but under modern statutes providing that the court having jurisdiction

But see Caldwell v. State, 28 Tex. App. 566, 14 S. W. 122, holding that where an unlawful killing is alleged, the indictment need not charge the infliction of a mortal wound.

A failure to allege that defendant "gave" deceased a mortal wound may be cured by the use of words which are fairly equivalent. McDonnall v. People, 168 Ill. 93, 48 N. E. 86, sustaining an indictment charging that defendants "did strike, penetrate and wound" the deceased "one mortal wound." Contra, State v. Brown, 168 Mo. 449, 68 S. W. 568, holding that an indictment for murder, which charges that defendant made an assault on deceased with a gun, and did shoot and strike him, in and upon his body, one mortal wound, of which wound he died, is defective in not directly stating that deceased was "given" a mortal wound.

50. People v. Judd, 10 Cal. 313.

51. Brown v. State, 18 Fla. 472.

It is sufficient to charge that defendant gave deceased a mortal "blow, mashing his head" from which he died (State v. Noblett, 47 N. C. 418) or to employ the words "mortal injuries and a mortal sickness" instead of "mortal bruise or mortal wound" (Territory v. Godas, 8 Mont. 347, 21 Pac. 26).

52. State v. Sundheimer, 93 Mo. 311, 6 S. Mayfield*, 66 Mo. 125 (holding that an allegation that on the — day of May, 1875, the defendant shot C, and that C died on the 3d day of May, fatally defective for not stating the year of the death).

Where the indictment shows that it is returned within a year and a day, from the date laid to the assault, an express averment of the date of death is not necessary. Brassfield v. State, 55 Ark. 556, 18 S. W. 1040; Bowen v. State, 1 Oreg. 270; State v. Champoux, 33 Wash. 339, 74 Pac. 557.

54. State v. Cummings, 5 La. Ann. 330 of the place where the mortal blow was struck may have jurisdiction of the offense without regard to the place of death, it is held in many instances that the averment of place is now unnecessary.⁵⁵ Where time and place have been well laid to the giving of the mortal blow, they may be repeated as to the fact of death by words of reference such as "then and there."⁵⁶ In some jurisdictions it is held that the expression "instantly" did die is a sufficient averment of time and place;⁵⁷ but others deny this rule,⁵⁸ unless the words "then and there" are also used,⁵⁹ or there are other words showing the relation of the death to the blow;⁶⁰ and in these states "immediately" is also held insufficient.⁶¹ An averment that the accused killed the deceased on a certain day is in some jurisdictions a sufficient allegation of the day of death.⁶² It is not necessary to aver that the deceased languished and languishing did live until the date of death,⁶³ and the fact that he is stated to have lived and languished, although death is alleged to have occurred on the day of the mortal blow, does not render the indictment repugnant.⁶⁴

9. INTENT, MALICE, DELIBERATION, PREMEDITATION, ETC.—a. In General. As a general rule the specific intent necessary to the commission of the offense must be attached to all material allegations of the indictment.⁶⁵ Where by statute certain acts are defined as without regard to intent, an allegation of intent is unnecessary.⁶⁶

State*, 8 Ohio St. 98 (holding that an averment that the prisoner "unlawfully, feloniously, purposely, and of deliberate and premeditated malice" inflicted wounds upon one S, of which he then and there died, is insufficient); Wright v. Territory, 5 Okla. 78, 47 Pac. 1069 (must be a charge of premeditated design or intent); State v. Champoux, 33 Wash. 339, 74 Pac. 557 (holding a charge that defendant unlawfully and of his deliberate and premeditated malice, did make an assault on deceased with a knife, with which he then and there purposely and of his deliberate malice struck and mortally wounded deceased, from which wound, etc., she died, was sufficient to state an intent to kill).

Murder by abortion.—State v. Baldwin, 79 Iowa 714, 45 N. W. 297.

Murder by poison.—Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 131. See Schaffer v. State, 22 Nebr. 557, 35 N. W. 384, 3 Am. St. Rep. 274, so holding under the statute providing that any person who shall purposely and of deliberate and premeditated malice or in the perpetration of any rape, etc., or by administering poison, shall kill another, such person shall be deemed guilty of murder in the first degree.

Preliminary complaint.—A failure to allege a purpose and intent to kill in a preliminary complaint is not fatal after judgment where the complaint, although informal, did charge murder. Haunstine v. State, 31 Nebr. 112, 47 N. W. 698.

73. State v. Shuff, 9 Ida. 115, 72 Pac. 664 (holding that an indictment for murder in the first degree is sufficient if it informs the accused that the act of killing was done unlawfully, feloniously, wilfully, deliberately, premeditatedly and of his malice aforethought, although in express words it does not charge that the killing was intentionally or purposely done); Loeffner v. State, 10 Ohio St. 598; Kain v. State, 8 Ohio St. 306 (holding an averment that the prisoner "purposely and of deliberate and premeditated malice did strike" insufficient).

Sufficiency of averments.—It is sufficient that the averment is that accused "purposely gave a mortal wound" (Loeffner v. State, 10 Ohio St. 598); that defendant assaulted and purposely wounded deceased with intent to kill him, of which wound deceased died (Price v. State, 35 Ohio St. 601); that defendant then and there feloniously and on purpose shot deceased giving him a wound of which he immediately died (State v. Bradford, 156 Mo. 91, 56 S. W. 898); that defendant "did feloniously, wilfully, intentionally, deliberately, premeditatedly, with felonious intent and with malice aforethought, shoot, kill, and murder George Babb with the aforesaid deadly weapons" (State v. Bridges, 29 Kan. 138); or that accused did, purposely, unlawfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought, and with the premeditated design to effect the death of deceased, kill and murder him (Perkins v. Territory, 10 Okla.

At common law a purpose or design to kill was not an essential ingredient of a charge of murder and was not required to be alleged,⁷⁴ it being held that the intent with which the acts were done may be inferred from the proof that they were done and that death ensued;⁷⁵ and a similar rule is followed in some states under statutes making killing murder where malice aforethought may be implied,⁷⁶ where intent is not in all instances necessary to the definition of murder,⁷⁷ or where a common-law indictment for murder is regarded as sufficient to charge murder in first degree;⁷⁸ but the better practice would appear to be to aver the intent specifically even in those states in which the omission is not regarded as fatal.⁷⁹ An allegation of intent to kill is not necessary upon a charge of murder in the first degree defined as a killing done while accused was engaged in the commission of a felony,⁸⁰ or by means of poison.⁸¹ An indictment insufficient to sustain a charge of murder in the first degree under a statute, by reason of its failure to charge a purpose to kill, may be sufficient to support a judgment for manslaughter.⁸² In those states in which it is held that in charging murder in the first degree, a purpose or intent to kill must be alleged, it is held that the conclusion of the indictment will not aid the defective averment.⁸³

f. Feloniousness. As a general rule an indictment must aver that the act was "feloniously" done;⁸⁴ but in some states it is held sufficient to follow the language of the statute defining the offense, although "feloniously" is omitted.⁸⁵ While the act as well as the intent is usually charged as felonious in indictments for murder, it would seem that where the intent is charged as felonious it is unnecessary to aver that the act itself was unlawful or felonious;⁸⁶ and under statutes requiring merely that the indictment or information shall contain a statement of the offense in ordinary and concise language, it has been held unnecessary that the assault as well as the killing shall be alleged to have been felonious.⁸⁷

506, 63 Pac. 860). An averment that the blow was of deliberate malice and that death ensued does not charge an intent to kill. Schaffer v. State, 22 Nebr. 557, 35 N. W. 384, 3 Am. St. Rep. 274; Hagan v. State, 10 Ohio St. 459. "Wilfully killed" is not equivalent to "with a design to effect death" as defining murder in the second degree. State v. Smith, 78 Minn. 362, 81 N. Generally, however, the charge should be made as to the assault,⁸⁸ and as to the wounding as well as the assault.⁸⁹

g. Wilfulness and Unlawfulness. It is essential to aver that the killing was unlawful either by express allegation or by the use of terms or statements of fact which conclusively imply it.⁹⁰ The words "wilfully"⁹¹ or "unlawfully"⁹² differing in this respect from such technical words as "feloniously" and "malice aforethought" are usually regarded as unnecessary in case their place is supplied by the use of other words.⁹³ So the killing need not be alleged to have been unlawful, where it is charged to have been done with "malice aforethought,"⁹⁴ or "feloniously,"⁹⁵ So also "wilfully" is supplied by "feloniously,"⁹⁶ or "malice aforethought,"⁹⁷ although it has been held that "wilfully" as well as "feloniously" must be employed where both words are inserted in the form of indictment prescribed by statute,⁹⁸ or in the statute defining the offense.⁹⁹ In case wilfulness is alleged as to the intent to kill, it need not be repeated with relation to the assault.¹

h. Malice—(1) NECESSITY OF AVERMENT. A common-law indictment for murder must charge that the act was done "with malice aforethought,"² and in some jurisdictions, under statutes in which the expression is employed in the definition of murder, the same rule is applicable,³ and it is held that no other word will suffice.⁴ In other states, however, equivalent expressions may be employed,⁵ it being stated in some cases that words which imply malice aforethought necessarily to the common understanding are sufficient.⁶ So an averment that the act was "malicious" has been held unnecessary where the manner and means of the killing are set forth.⁷ In some jurisdictions an indictment which describes murder in the first degree in the language of the statute is sufficient without the technical words "malice aforethought."⁸ So where the statute provides that murder in the first degree shall be a killing with a premeditated design to effect the death of the deceased, such words may be employed without the use of "malice aforethought."⁹ It is not necessary to allege whether the malice was express or implied, where malice aforethought is charged.¹⁰ Upon an indictment for manslaughter an allegation of malice aforethought is of course unnecessary,¹¹ and, where the crime is otherwise sufficiently charged, may be rejected as surplusage.¹²

Murder in the second degree.—Where under the statutes the only distinguishing fea-

(II) SUFFICIENCY OF AVERMENT. The murder itself must be charged to have been done with malice aforethought; it is not sufficient to charge that the mortal wound was so given;¹³ but where the murder is so charged, there is no necessity of repeating the charge in the description of the means.¹⁴ In case malice aforethought between indictments for murder in the first and second degrees is the averment in the indictment for the second degree which negatives deliberation and premeditation the failure to allege malice aforethought in an indictment for murder in the second degree is fatal. Etheridge v. State, 141 Ala. 29, 37 So. 337.

Schmidt*, 63 Cal. 28 (holding that "wilfully, unlawfully, and feloniously" were not equivalent); People v. Vance, 21 Cal. 400 (holding the words "wilfully, maliciously, feloniously, and premeditatedly" sufficient); Gates v. State, 95 Ga. 340, 22 S. E. 836 (holding that while it is necessary to allege in an indictment for murder that the homicide was committed with malice aforethought, yet the omission to use that exact expression may be supplied by the employment instead thereof of any language which may be its legal equivalent. The use of the words "malice aforesaid" in lieu of the words "malice aforethought" is not such a defect of substance affecting the real merits of the case as will, after verdict, support a motion in arrest of judgment); State v. Holong, 38 Minn. 368, 37 N. W. 587 (holding that, although the statutory form for murder contained the words "malice aforethought," the phrase "with the premeditated design to effect the death" as used in the statute defining the offense might be employed, such deviation being cured by statute as a defect in form not prejudicial to the substantial rights of defendant).

13. Staton v. State, 3 Tenn. Cas. 602; Com. v. Gibson, 2 Va. Cas. 70, holding an indictment in which the conclusion substituted the word "maliciously" was insufficient. But see Fitzpatrick v. U. S., 178 U. S. 304, 20 S. Ct. 944, 44 L. ed. 1078, holding under the statutes of Oregon, dispensing with unnecessary repetition in the statement of the acts constituting the offense, that where deliberate and premeditated malice is laid to the giving of the mortal wound, it need not be repeated with regard to the intent to kill.

Rep. 1251 (holding that an indictment was sufficient to charge voluntary manslaughter which alleged that defendant wilfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought killed deceased and that the means used inflicted on her serious injury and danger and caused her to abort thought is charged with regard to the intent to kill, it is not necessary to charge it also with relation to the assault.¹⁵ In determining whether malice aforethought is properly averred with regard to the killing, the natural and grammatical construction of the words is to be considered,¹⁶ and in some cases the entire indictment has been resorted to.¹⁷ Under statutes which provide that ordinary and concise language without repetition is sufficient, it is not necessary to allege that the particular acts or instrumentalities of the killing were done with premeditated malice, where such malice is alleged to the killing.¹⁸

i. Matter Defining Grade or Degree — (1) IN GENERAL. It is sufficient where the indictment is required to name the offense that it be stated as murder, without specifying the degree;¹⁹ but it is not a fatal defect that it attempts to do so.²⁰ It is not necessary to charge in terms "murder in the first degree."²¹ Where the statute requires the degree to be stated, it may be by an averment that murder in a particular degree was committed, added after a statement of the offense in the common-law form.²²

(ii) MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE — (A) Necessity of Averments. Where the statutory definition of murder includes the degrees into which the crime is divided, it is sufficient that the indictment follows the language of the statute without setting forth the words defining the various degrees, and such an indictment is a good indictment for murder in the first degree.²³ So where the statute defines murder as an unlawful killing with malice aforethought, the indictment need not allege deliberation, premeditation,²⁴ or wilfulness.²⁵ In many states a common-law indictment for murder which clearly alleges the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought is a good indictment for murder in the first degree;²⁶ in these states the matter which under the statute differentiates the

from which abortion and the means used she died).

degrees need not be alleged,²⁷ and hence it is not necessary to add the averments of premeditation and deliberation, which usually distinguish murder in the first degree,²⁸ malice aforethought being held to include wilfulness, deliberation, and premeditation.²⁹ In some states these decisions are based on statutes prescribing what shall constitute a valid indictment.³⁰ Such indictments are held not to contravene the constitutional right of the accused to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation.³¹ In some states, however, the qualifying words which define murder in the first degree when committed other than by specific methods named must be inserted in the indictment;³² so that, to charge murder in the first degree, it must be charged that the killing was wilful, deliberate, and premeditated,³³ or that it was committed under some of the peculiar circumstances defined Wilful.—Under the Iowa statute, murder in the first degree when not committed in the perpetration of certain numerated felonies must be by a wilful as well as a deliberate, premeditated killing (State v. Townsend, 66 Iowa 741, 24 N. W. 535), but it is not necessary to use the word "wilful" (State v. Townsend, 66 Iowa 741, 24 N. Under the Iowa statute, to constitute murder in the first degree, it must appear that the means were employed with the specific intent to kill and also that the act was done wilfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, and with malice aforethought. State v. Linhoff, 121 Iowa 632, 97 N. W. 77; State v. Knouse, 29 Iowa 118; State v. Watkins, 27 Iowa 415; State v. McCormick, 27 Iowa 402. Where an assault is charged as well as the killing, it must appear that both were wilful, deliberate, and premeditated and that the shooting or other means used was with intent to kill. State v. Linhoff, 121 Iowa 632, 97 N. W. 77; State v. Andrews, 84 Iowa 88, 50 N. W. 549; State v. Baldwin, 79 Iowa 714, 45 N. W. 297. It is sufficient if the word "wilful" is employed in the specific charge of the killing, although it is not employed in the charge of the assault, it being the wilful killing and not the assault which constitutes murder in the first degree. State v. Gray, 116 Iowa 231, 89 N. W. 987; State v. Dunn, 116 Iowa 219, 89 N. W. 984.

words as to intent are properly laid to the assault, they may be referred to the actual killing by words of reference;⁴² and conversely an intent laid to the killing may be referred to the assault.⁴³ The fact that the killing was done wilfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, and with malice aforethought, cannot, however, be charged by inference.⁴⁴ Under a statute providing that murder in the first degree must be with a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, it is sufficient to use words of equivalent import.⁴⁵ Where purpose, malice, deliberation, and premeditation are laid to the charge of killing, the fact that in the description of the means the words "unlawfully" and "feloniously" only are employed will not reduce the grade of the offense charged.⁴⁶ In those states in which it is regarded as unnecessary that the indictment should bring out the elements rendering the crime murder in a particular degree and holding that a common-law indictment is sufficient, it has been held that the omission of the word "deliberately" was not fatal upon a general demurrer.⁴⁷ Under a statute rendering it sufficient that the premeditated design be entertained against any human being and not limiting it to the person killed, it has been held that an error in the repetition of the name of the deceased in charging the premeditated design, was not fatal.⁴⁸

(iii) MURDER IN THE SECOND DEGREE. By statute in some states, express permission is given the grand jury to prefer an indictment for murder in the second degree.⁴⁹ The enactment of such a statute is within the power of the legislature,⁵⁰ and its provisions are not in conflict with statutes permitting the trial jury to fix the degree.⁵¹ As a general rule, however, the practice is to indict for murder in the first degree and take a conviction for murder in a lower degree or manslaughter as the evidence may develop,⁵² there being in some states no indictment for murder in a particular degree.⁵³ In case the indictment is drawn specifically for the second degree, it seems that it should contain material averments of an indictment in the first degree, omitting the matter of aggravation which differentiates the degrees.⁵⁴ An averment that the act was done maliciously is essential

54. Ward v. State, 96 Ala. 100, 11 So. 217 (holding an indictment which charged defendant unlawfully and with malice aforethought, but without deliberation or premeditation with killing, etc., was sufficient to charge murder in the second degree); State v. Lowe, 93 Mo. 547, 5 S. W. 889 (holding that a common-law form of indictment was sufficient to charge murder in the second degree under a statute which after designating murder in the first degree as deliberate and premeditated killing provided that all other counts of murder at common law should be deemed murder in the second degree).

Language of statute.—Upon an indictment for murder in the second degree, under the Ohio statute it is sufficient to follow the language of the statute and charge that defendant purposely and maliciously committed the offense. State v. Williamson, 7 to a charge of murder in the second degree.⁵⁵ A nolle prosequi to so much of an indictment charging murder in the first degree as charges deliberate and premeditated malice will not invalidate the indictment as a charge of murder in the second degree.⁵⁶

(iv) MANSLAUGHTER. An indictment for manslaughter may, under some statutes, be drawn as for murder omitting the elements of aggravation.⁵⁷ Where the manner and means of the killing are set out, matter differentiating the degrees need not be averred.⁵⁸ The absence of apt words characterizing the acts to have been done with malice aforethought and the declaration that the crime intended to be charged is manslaughter is a sufficient declaration that the homicide was accomplished without design to effect death.⁵⁹ The omission of the words "in the heat of passion," as employed in a statutory definition, is not material,⁶⁰ nor need it be alleged that the acts were done by the accused "in the fury of his mind."⁶¹ Where by statute voluntary and involuntary manslaughter are made distinct offenses, the indictment must contain facts rendering it certain which offense is charged.⁶² It would seem to be immaterial that an offense is charged as manslaughter where the description as set out in the indictment indicates that it was murder;⁶³ the error, if any, being at least one of which the accused cannot complain.⁶⁴

10. CONCLUSION. At common law great strictness and technical accuracy was exacted as to the conclusion of the indictment for murder,⁶⁵ and in some states it is still held that the conclusion of an indictment for murder distinguishes it from an indictment for manslaughter, the previous words without the conclusion being insufficient to charge murder.⁶⁶ Under this rule the conclusion must aver that it heat of passion, and in a cruel and unusual manner; or in the heat of passion by means of a dangerous act. And see Dukes v. State, 11 Ind. 557, 71 Am. Dec. 370, holding that an indictment which merely avers that the act was without malice is insufficient to charge manslaughter in the absence of an averment that it was in sudden heat or in the commission of an unlawful act.

is upon the oath of the grand jurors,⁶⁷ or, in the case of an information, of the prosecuting attorney.⁶⁸ The words "kill and murder" must be employed⁶⁹ and the name of the person murdered must be stated.⁷⁰ The term "malice aforethought" must be employed,⁷¹ and in some states the elements distinguishing murder in the first degree must be also inserted.⁷² A defective conclusion cannot be aided by the conclusion of other counts.⁷³ Under statutes relaxing the common-law strictness of criminal procedure, however, it is now generally held that the use of the technical terms "kill and murder" is unnecessary.⁷⁴ So an indictment for manslaughter may employ the term "kill and murder" instead of "kill and slay" as in the statutory form,⁷⁵ or the words of the statute may be followed without an express averment that the crime charged was manslaughter.⁷⁶ Under such statutes it is likewise unnecessary to repeat the term "malice aforethought,"⁷⁷ or the specific charge of an intent to kill⁷⁸ or to repeat the acts which defendant did.⁷⁹

People*, 12 Mich. 27, holding that a conviction for manslaughter might be sustained where the name of the person killed was omitted from the conclusion.

A repetition of the name after the word "murder" is not essential where a pronoun is so used as to render it certain who has been murdered. State v. Griffin, 48 La. Ann. 1409, 30 So. 905. See also State v. Brabson, 38 La. Ann. 144, holding that it is not essential that the name of the deceased follow the word "murder," but that it is sufficient if it is in another part of the sentence and certainly appears to be the object of the verb, so that there can be no doubt upon whom the crime is charged to have been committed.

B. Assault With Intent to Kill — 1. IN GENERAL. Indictments and informations for assault with intent to kill or murder are governed by the rules applicable to indictments and informations generally.⁸⁶ It has been held that the same particularity of averment is not necessary in an indictment for an assault with intent to kill as is required in an indictment for murder.⁸⁷ Under statutes, a statement of the offense in ordinary and concise language is usually sufficient,⁸⁸ or a statement of which the meaning is plain to a common intent.⁸⁹ A clerical error by which the meaning is not obscured will not in general invalidate the charge.⁹⁰ In case the assault with intent to kill is charged to have grown out of a neglect of duty, it is necessary to aver the ability to perform the duty.⁹¹

2. FOLLOWING STATUTE DEFINING OFFENSE. A charge of the offense in the language of the statute is as a general rule sufficient;⁹² but the language of the charge); State v. Northrup, 13 Mont. 522, 35 Pac. 228.

Statement of name of offense.—Where by statute the name or a brief description of the offense must be stated, it is sufficient to charge "malicious cutting and wounding" (Clark v. Com., 38 S. W. 489, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 758) or "cutting and wounding another" (Tubbs v. Com., 57 S. W. 623, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 481) or "malicious cutting and wounding with intent to kill" (Gratz v. Com., 96 Ky. 162, 28 S. W. 159, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 465), although the statute punishes any person who shall "wilfully and maliciously cut another . . . with intention to kill."

For forms of indictments considered and held sufficient either in whole or in part see People v. McFadden, 65 Cal. 445, 4 Pac. 421 (shooting); Knight v. State, 44 Fla. 94, 32 So. 110 (shooting); State v. Munco, 12 La. Ann. 625; State v. Maguire, 113 Mo. 670, 21 S. W. 212; State v. Walker, 40 Tex. 485 (shooting); *James v. E. 133 (holding that the word "thereby" or an equivalent need not be employed after the statement of facts constituting the assault, in order to connect them with the intent).

For form of indictment held sufficient to charge an assault and battery with intent to murder in the first degree see Bass v. State, 136 Ind. 165, 36 N. E. 124.

90. Wall v. State, 23 Ind. 150, holding that a charge that defendant did unlawfully and feloniously make and perpetrate "and" assault was sufficient, since the words "make and perpetrate and" might be stricken out as surplusage without changing the sense. But see Wood v. State, 50 Ala. 144, holding a misspelling of malice in a charge of intent, fatal, although the meaning was apparent.

91. State v. Merkle, 74 Iowa 695, 39 N. W. 111, holding that an indictment for assault with intent to murder, in that defendants neglected and refused to nourish, sustain, and provide for a child, must allege that defendants were able to furnish support.

92. Cundiff v. Com., 86 Ky. 196, 5 S. W.

statute must be sufficient to inform the accused as to the nature and cause of the accusation,⁹³ and in case it is not, the facts necessary to constitute the offense must be set out.⁹⁴ The precise words of the statute need not be followed, but equivalent expressions may be used,⁹⁵ except where the words employed in the statute are technical terms or phrases which have no equivalents.⁹⁶ Under this rule the insertion of all the words employed in the statute is not essential,⁹⁷ and the language of the statute need not be employed if all the essential elements therein described are set out in the indictment or information.⁹⁸ An indictment which sufficiently charges an offense under a particular statute is not vitiated by the fact that it contains expressions appropriate to a charge of a distinct offense, but which are insufficient to charge the latter offense.⁹⁹

3. DESCRIPTION OF PERSON ASSAULTED. The indictment must contain a clear and certain averment of the person assaulted,¹ although where the name has been

Rep. 241, holding that an indictment under a statute punishing unlawful shooting at another, with intent to kill or wound, must state the instrument or weapon and show that it was sufficient for the purpose. See also State v. Brown, 21 La. Ann. 347, holding that under a statute punishing an assault with intent to murder committed in the perpetration of certain felonies, it is not sufficient to follow the statute, but the facts constituting the felony and the assault must be set out with the particularity necessary in a charge of either offense alone.

95. State v. Hammerli, (Kan. 1899) 58 Pac. 559; Johnson v. Com., 94 Ky. 341, 22 S. W. 325 (holding that an indictment charging defendant with wounding another by striking him with a stick was good, although it did not aver a bruising in the language of the statute); Hall v. Com., 34 S. W. 894, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1365 (holding that a charge that defendant shot another was sufficient under a statute punishing the shooting "at" another); Owens v. Com., 1 Ky. L. Rep. 124; State v. Broussard, 107 La. 189, 31 So. 637 (holding that a charge of shooting with intention to kill was equivalent to the statutory term "intent to kill"); State v. Samuels, 38 La. Ann. 457; State v. Feamster, 12 Wash. 461, 41 Pac. 52.

96. State v. Nichols, 8 Conn. 496, where, however, it was held that the words "with actual violence" were not technical terms as employed in a statute describing assault with intent to murder.

97. Burns v. Com., 3 Mete. (Ky.) 13, holding the omission of the statutory terms "did not die thereby" or "loaded with a leaden bullet or other hard substance," not important in a charge of shooting and wounding.

"Shooting another" is equivalent to "shooting at another." Thompson v. Com., 5 Ky. L. Rep. 610; Stone v. Com., 2 Ky. L. Rep. 391; State v. Vaughn, 26 Mo. 29.

Word employed only in title.—An indictment following the exact words of the enacting clause but using the word "feloniously" instead of "wilfully," which is found only in the title of the statute, is sufficient, the word used including the other. State v. McDaniel, 45 La. Ann. 686, 12 So. 751.

98. State v. Cruikshank, (N. D. 1904) 100 N. W. 697.

Compare Young v. State, 44 Tex. 98; Johnson v. State, 1 Tex. App. 130 (both holding an indictment not invalidated by the fact that it contained charges constituting an aggravated assault); Reg. v. McEvoy, 20 U. C. Q. B. 344 (holding that an indictment not charging an offense under a statute might be sustained as of common law.

1. Adams v. State, 28 Fla. 511, 10 So. 106 (sustaining an indictment which charged that three persons did, with design to effect the death of a human being, make an assault upon one J, and holding that the words "to effect the death of a human being" did not render it uncertain that the assault was made upon J); State v. Knadler, 40 Kan. 359, 19 Pac. 923; State v. Evans, 128 Mo. 406, 31 S. W. 34 (holding defective an indictment charging that defendant "did then once well stated, it has been held not necessary to repeat it in the charge of the specific intent to murder.²

4. DESCRIPTION OF ASSAULT — a. In General. Save in the case of indictments drawn under statutes punishing the doing of specific acts with intent to kill,³ the indictment must either charge defendant directly with having made an assault⁴ or use such words as necessarily imply an assault.⁵

b. Necessity of Charging Battery. As a general rule a battery need not be charged,⁶ unless it is sought to bring the offense within a statute punishing an assault and battery with an intent to kill or murder.⁷ In case the statute requires the assault to have been made with actual violence, such violence need not be charged in express terms, when the facts of the assault as set out imply it.⁸

and there . . . strike, cut, stab and thrust, with intent then and there him the said S to kill and murder"); State v. Nations, 31 Tex. 561; State v. Patrick, 3 Wis. 812 (holding defective an indictment which charged "with intent in so striking and beating him, the said Jerome Wetherbee, with the club," etc., "feloniously," etc., "to kill and murder").

A statute providing that an error as to the person injured shall not be material in case the offense is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act has been held inapplicable to an indictment for assault with intent to murder. State v. Boylson, 3 Minn. 438, holding a conviction bad, where the proof offered in an indictment, charging an assault with intent to kill one person, rendered it doubtful whether the intent was to kill such person or to kill another.

2. People v. Murray, 2 Mich. N. P. 94.

3. State v. Crittenden, 38 La. Ann. 448 (holding that while an indictment for shooting with intent to murder need not charge an assault, the fact that it unnecessarily did so did not vitiate it); State v. Phelan, 65 Mo. 547 (shooting at another).

4. Territory v. Milroy, 8 Mont. 361, 20 Pac. 650, holding that instead of a charge that defendant "did assault" the facts constituting the assault might be stated. See also State v. Jordan, 19 Mo. 212.

5. See cases cited infra, this note.

Sufficiency of charge.—An averment that defendant did "commit" an assault is sufficient. State v. Murphy, 35 La. Ann. 622. A charge of shooting at or against another (State v. Munco, 12 La. Ann. 625), or of shooting (State v. Colomb, 108 La. 253, 32 So. 351) is sufficient. See also Pittman v. State, 25 Fla. 648, 6 So. 437; Barnes v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 297, 59 S. W. 882, 96 Am. St. Rep. 801.

Charge of use of deadly or dangerous weapon see Malone v. State, 77 Ga. 767; State v. O'Conner, 11 Nev. 416; State v. Kelly, 41 Ore. 20, 68 Pac. 1 (holding that where an information for assault with intent to kill charged that accused on a certain date, in the county of M, "then and there being armed with a dangerous weapon, did then and there feloniously assault one L, with such dangerous weapon," the information was not objectionable on the ground that the phrase "then and there being armed," etc., referred to the date of the information, and not the time when the act was alleged to have been committed); State v. Lavery, 35 Ore. 402, 58 Pac. 107 (holding that an indictment charging that "defendant did unlawfully and feloniously assault one D with a dangerous weapon with intent to kill by . . . shooting at him with a loaded pistol which he held within shooting distance, and pointed at D," sufficient as against an objection that it charged the impossible intention to kill by merely shooting "at").

6. Miller v. State, 53 Miss. 403.

7. See cases cited infra, this note.

Sufficiency of charge of battery see Voght v. State, 145 Ind. 12, 43 N. E. 1049 (holding an averment of shooting and wounding sufficient); Hays v. State, 77 Ind. 450 (shooting); Jarrell v. State, 58 Ind. 293 (shooting); State v. Prather, 54 Ind. 63 (holding a charge of an assault at and against the third person sufficient); State v. Miller, 27 Ind. 15; State v. Farley, 14 Ind. 23 (holding that the charge did not render the indictment double).

In Indiana an indictment for an assault and battery with intent to murder must charge that the touching was unlawful and in either a rude, insolent, or angry manner. Chandler v. State, 141 Ind. 106, 39 N. E. 444; Howard v. State, 67 Ind. 401; McCulley v. State, 62 Ind. 428 [followed in Agee v. State, 64 Ind. 340] (holding that a charge that defendant fired a pistol "toward, at and against" the person of another, did not imply such unlawful touching as would render the indictment one for assault and battery); State v. Hubbs, 58 Ind. 415; Adell v. State, 34 Ind. 543. See also Keeling v. State, 107 Ind. 563, 8 N. E. 559. It is not necessary to employ the exact words of the statute, but it will be sufficient to use others which import the same meaning. Knight v. State, 84 Ind. 73; Hays v. State, 77 Ind. 450; Sloan v. State, 42 Ind. 570. So where the words "unlawfully," "feloniously," "purposely and with premeditated malice" are employed, they import that the alleged assault and battery was done in either a rude, insolent, or angry manner, if not in all of them. Chandler v. State, 141 Ind. 106, 39 N. E. 444 [following Hays v. State, 77 Ind. 450; Shinn v. State, 68 Ind. 423; Sloan v. State, 42 Ind. 570, and disapproving Howard v. State, 67 Ind. 401; McCulley v. State, 62 Ind. 428].

8. State v. Nichols, 8 Conn. 496.

c. Manner and Means. As a general rule a particular averment of the means employed, or the manner in which they were used to effect the murderous intention, is regarded as unnecessary,⁹ the gist of the offense being regarded as an assault with a felonious intent.¹⁰ Under this rule it is not necessary to state the weapon with which the assault was made,¹¹ or if it is stated to be a firearm, it is not necessary to aver that it was loaded,¹² pointed,¹³ or discharged,¹⁴ or that the person was struck by the weapon or by a shot therefrom;¹⁵ nor is it necessary to aver the manner in which the weapon was held.¹⁶

d. Description of Weapon. It is in general unnecessary to allege that the weapon or instrument employed in the assault was deadly or dangerous,¹⁷ unless the statute defining the offense makes the use of a deadly weapon,¹⁸ or the employment of means likely to produce death,¹⁹ an essential element of the offense, in which case the averment of the use of such means becomes necessary.²⁰ In case the description of the weapon necessarily imports its deadly or dangerous character, an express averment is unnecessary.²¹ It has been held that a charge of shooting sufficiently avers the employment of a dangerous weapon.²² If the weapons employed are averred to be deadly, it is not necessary to charge them also as being likely to produce death in the language of the statute.²³

5. INTENT, MALICE, ETC.—a. Specific Intent in General. The indictment must allege a specific intent to kill or murder²⁴ directed toward a particular person,²⁵ and such intent must be stated in the body of the indictment,²⁶ although when once specifically stated it need not be repeated in the statement of the circumstances of the offense.²⁷ At common law it was apparently necessary to aver that the intent was feloniously to kill and murder;²⁸ but in some states a charge

Sufficiency of averment of weapon employed see State v. State, 41 Ga. 155; State v. Prendible, 165 Mo. 329, 65 S. W. 559 (holding that an indictment for assault with intent to kill, which charged that defendant "with a certain weapon, did shoot off," etc., is not vitiated because of the use of the word "with" before the words "a certain weapon," as that word is necessary to show what weapon was employed in the felonious act); McVey v. State, 57 Nebr. 471, 77 N. W. 1111 (holding that an information charging that defendant did then and there make an assault on defendant with a certain pistol, loaded with gunpowder and one leaden bullet, and then and there did shoot him, charges the "shooting" to have been done with a loaded pistol); *Lenahan v. A charge of an attempt is not equivalent to a charge of intent to murder. State v. Marshall, 14 Ala. 411. But see Felker v. State, 54 Ark. 489, 16 S. W. 663, holding that a charge of an attempt to kill may be sufficient to charge an intent to kill where the assault is well charged.

Intent to commit felony.—Under a statute punishing an assault with intent to commit a felony, the intent must be distinctly alleged with the certainty required as to other material allegations (Hogan v. State, 42 Fla. 562, 28 So. 763), but it is not necessary to allege in terms that the intent was to commit a felony where the charge is of intent to murder (Pyke v. State, (Fla. 1904) 36 So. 577).

Assault endangering life.—Under a statute punishing the making of an assault whereby the life of another is endangered, an express allegation of an intent to kill is unnecessary. State v. Hays, 67 Mo. 692.

Sufficiency of averment in general see People v. Swenson, 49 Cal. 388; State v. Clark, 100 Iowa 47, 69 N. W. 257; State v. Barton, 142 Mo. 450, 44 S. W. 239.

State*, 2 Wash. 504, 27 Pac. 226, holding an information stating that the prosecuting attorney gave the court to understand that defendant was "guilty of the crime of assault with intent to commit murder," but which did not charge the intent in the body of the information, insufficient.

A charge of an intent to commit manslaughter has been held insufficient to charge an intent to kill. Bradley v. State, 10 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 618.

of intent to kill is sufficient.²⁹ The indictment may conclude with a charge of intent to kill and murder, although the statute defines the offense specifically as an assault with intent to kill,³⁰ or an assault with intent to murder.³¹ It is not ordinarily necessary to allege the intent to commit any particular degree of murder.³² The characterization of the intent of the assault need not be repeated in the specific averment of intent to kill and murder.³³

b. Grade or Degree of Offense Had Death Ensued. In some jurisdictions it is held that the indictment must contain averments showing that had death ensued the assault would have constituted murder,³⁴ and so it is regarded as necessary to allege the intent as wilful, felonious, and of malice aforethought.³⁵ The more general rule, however, is that such averments are unnecessary;³⁶ and also that Separate offenses.—Where by separate statutes a punishment is provided for an assault with intent to murder and with intent to kill, it has been held that an indictment may charge the two offenses together by an averment of intent to kill and murder. State v. Alfred, 44 La. Ann. 582, 10 So. 887.

29. Smith v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 33, 19 S. W. 546 (so holding where the assault was alleged to have been made with malice aforethought); U. S. v. Angney, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 66 (so holding under a statute providing for the punishment of any person convicted of an assault with intent to kill).

30. People v. Odell, 1 Dak. 197, 46 N. W. 601; State v. Johnson, 9 Nev. 175 (holding that, although there was no statutory offense known as an assault with "intent to kill and murder," or "to murder," the words "and murder" might be rejected as surplusage). And see Pontius v. People, 82 N. Y. 339, holding that where the words of the statute defining the offense exclude the idea of manslaughter, a charge of intent to murder instead of intent to kill as employed in the statute may be sufficient.

Assault endangering life.—An indictment under a statute punishing an assault endangering life need not show the circumstances which, had death ensued, would have constituted murder or manslaughter. State v. Moore, 65 Mo. 606.

Malice generally see infra, VII, B, 5, f.

where murder is divided by statute into degrees, the matter showing the degree need not be averred.³⁷

e. Statement of Intent as Defined in Statute. As a general rule it is sufficient to charge the intent in the language of the statute,³⁸ and in some cases the use of equivalent terms has been permitted.³⁹ Under a statute making it necessary that the assault be committed on purpose and of malice aforethought, such elements must be charged in the indictment.⁴⁰

d. Connection of Intent With Assault. It is not sufficient to charge defendant with having a premeditated design and intent, without connecting such design and intent with the assault.⁴¹

e. Present Ability to Execute Intent. The rule supported by the weight of authority is that in an indictment for assault with intent to commit murder it is not necessary to charge that there was a present ability to inflict the intended injury.⁴² So when the assault is charged to have been committed with a firearm, it is not necessary to charge that defendant was within range.⁴³ Nor is it

Defective attempt to charge first degree.—An indictment drawn for assault with intent to commit murder in the first degree may be sustained as a charge of the second degree, in case it fails to allege deliberation and premeditation. State v. Saylor, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 586. So also where the assault has been alleged to have been of premeditated malice, the averment as to premeditation may be rejected as surplusage and the charge sustained as for the second degree. State v. Ackles, 8 Wash. 462, 36 Pac. 597.

Sufficiency of allegation of present ability see Greenwood v. State, 35 Tex. 587; Rainbolt v. State, 34 Tex. 286.

In Indiana an indictment charging an assault and battery with intent to kill need not allege a present ability to commit the injury. Vaughan v. State, 128 Ind. 14, 27 N. E. 124; Keeling v. State, 107 Ind. 563, 8 N. E. 559. But such an averment is essential to an indictment merely charging an assault. Chandler v. State, 141 Ind. 106, 39 N. E. 444; Howard v. State, 67 Ind. 401; State v. Hubbs, 58 Ind. 415; Adel v. State, 34 Ind. 543. And in its absence the indictment can be construed only as an attempt to charge an assault and battery with intent to murder. Voght v. State, 145 Ind. 12, 43 N. E. 1049 (holding an allegation that defendant "shot and wounded" sufficient to show present ability); Chandler v. State, 141 Ind. 106, 39 N. E. 444; Keeling v. State, 107 Ind. 563, 8 N. Trulock*, 46 Ind. 289), but an attempt to do so does not render the indictment defective (Freel v. State, 125 Ind. 166, 25 N. E. 178).

f. Malice. The more general rule is that it is sufficient to allege an intent to murder without averments of malice aforethought,⁴⁵ this rule being in some instances based upon statutes rendering it sufficient that the indictment follow the language of the statute defining the offense,⁴⁶ and in others upon the fact that malice is not an ingredient of the offense under the statutes defining it.⁴⁷ In some jurisdictions, however, an indictment which fails to allege that the assault was with malice aforethought is fatally defective.⁴⁸ So also where malice is made a statutory ingredient of the offense, it must be averred⁴⁹ and in the technical terms employed.⁵⁰ Where an averment of malice aforethought is laid to the acts done, it has been held that it need not be repeated with regard to the intent.⁵¹ An indictment from which the charge of malice is omitted may be sufficient to sustain a conviction of assault with intent to commit voluntary manslaughter.⁵²

g. Feloniousness. At common law, an assault with intent to kill was not a felony and hence it was not necessary to charge a felonious intent;⁵³ and where the statutes have not altered the degree of the offense,⁵⁴ or the indictment has did shoot at William Newsom with a shotgun loaded with leaden bullets, with intent to kill him," etc., sufficient); Mayfield v. State, 44 Tex. 59. See also *State v. Although by statute the offense is made a felony, it is not necessary to charge that the acts were feloniously done where by another statute it is provided that in the case of offenses, the grade of which has been raised by statute, they may still be charged as common law. Beasley v. State, 18 Ala. 535.

followed the language of the statute,⁵⁵ the same rule is held to apply; but under some statutes it is necessary to charge that the assault was felonious.⁵⁶ An unnecessary employment of the term "felonious" does not, however, vitiate the indictment.⁵⁷ Where the intent to murder is charged to have been felonious, it is not necessary to charge the assault to have been felonious.⁵⁸

h. Unlawfulness and Wilfulness. It is not in general necessary to characterize the intent as unlawful,⁵⁹ particularly where other words rendering the unlawfulness of the act apparent are employed.⁶⁰ The use of the word "wilful" is governed by similar rules.⁶¹

6. WOUND OR OTHER INJURY INFLICTED. Unless the infliction of a wound is made by statute an essential element of the offense, it need not be alleged,⁶² nor need the wound be described.⁶³ A charge of shooting is equivalent to a charge of wounding.⁶⁴

C. For Attempt to Kill. An indictment for an attempt must allege some act done by the defendant of such nature as to constitute an attempt in a legal sense to commit the contemplated offense.⁶⁵ It has been held that the indictment need not aver in express terms that the acts done in the attempt to kill were done

65. Hicks v. Com., 86 Va. 223, 9 S. E. 1024, 19 Am. St. Rep. 891 (holding an indictment charging defendant with attempting to poison with intent to kill one A by buying the poison and delivering it to one L and soliciting her to administer it in coffee to A, was insufficient to charge an offense under a statute punishing an attempt to administer poison with intent to kill where there was no allegation that L consented to administer the poison or that anything else was done); Com. v. Clark, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 675; U. S. v. Barnaby, 51 Fed. 20 (holding that an indictment charging that defendant made an assault with a knife with the intent to kill a person named wilfully, feloniously, and of malice aforethought, was insufficient without a charge that defendant struck the person named with the knife or inflicted upon him any wounds or battery which would have the tendency to produce death).

Sufficiency of allegation.—A charge that defendant delivered knowingly and wilfully to a person named a pill containing a large quantity of deadly poison and solicited such person to swallow it with intent to murder such person sufficiently charges an overt act. Bittle v. State, 78 Md. 526, 28 Atl. 405.

Indictments for attempt generally see INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS.

with intent to murder,⁶⁶ but the better practice is to charge both the intent and the overt act.⁶⁷ An indictment for an attempt to poison need not allege defendant's knowledge of the deadly character of the substance used,⁶⁸ or that the quantity was sufficient to kill.⁶⁹ In case the offense is defined by statute, language equivalent to that employed in the statute may be used in the description of the offense.⁷⁰

D. For Threat to Kill. By statute in some states, a threat to take the life of another is made a substantive offense.⁷¹ An indictment under such a statute is sufficient if it substantially follows the statutory language,⁷² and it is not necessary to negative facts which by a separate section of the statute would prevent the act from being criminal.⁷³ It is not necessary to set out the language in which the threat was expressed.⁷⁴

E. Variance — 1. IN GENERAL. It is necessary to prove all the specific elements of the offense;⁷⁵ but failure to establish matter which is unnecessary to the description of the offense is not as a general rule fatal.⁷⁶ In case, however, 66. State v. Hager, 50 W. Va. 370, 40 S. E. 393, holding that an allegation that defendant "did attempt" was sufficient to imply an intent. See, however, Com. v. Brosk, 8 Pa. Dist. 638, holding that an attempt to shoot another must charge that the shooting was done of defendant's malice aforethought so that it might be seen from the indictment that if death had ensued the crime might have been murder in the first degree.

70. Ben v. State, 22 Ala. 9, 58 Am. Dec. 234, holding that under a statute punishing any slave who should attempt to poison or deprive any white person of life by any means not amounting to an assault, it was sufficient to aver that defendant feloniously, etc., administered and caused to be administered arsenic which was then and there a deadly poison, calculated in its effects to destroy human life.

A charge that a letter was sent unlawfully is not sufficient to charge "knowingly," which is a statutory element of the offense. Tynes v. State, 17 Tex. App. 123.

The sending or delivering must be charged to have been knowingly done; it is not sufficient to charge the person with having knowingly threatened by sending a threatening letter, etc. Castle v. State, 23 Tex. App. 286, 4 S. W. 892.

75. State v. Chambers, 1 Marv. (Del.) 550, 41 Atl. 197 (holding that there must be proof that a pistol was pointed "in jest" under an indictment in the language of a statute accusing defendant of "intentionally pointing in jest, a certain pistol"); People v. White, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 520 (holding that where the indictment charged both malice aforethought and premeditated design, it was necessary to prove the premeditated design); Rex v. Crutchley, 7 C. & P. 814, 32 E. C. L. 887 (holding that where an indictment charged murder of a child after delivery it was not supported by proof that the child was strangled before it was fully delivered). See also INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS. But see Pyke v. State, (Fla. 1904) 36 So. 577, holding that failure to prove an allegation of a battery, in a charge of assault with intent to commit a felony, of murder in the first degree, did not invalidate a verdict of guilty of assault with intent to murder in the second degree.

76. Com. v. Woodward, 102 Mass. 155 (holding that an averment in an indictment for manslaughter that the killing was wilful is unnecessary and need not be proved); State v. Drumm, 156 Mo. 216, 56 S. W. 1086 (holding that since under the statute it was not necessary that an assault be committed with a deadly weapon in order to constitute a felony, it was not necessary to show by direct proof upon the trial that the instrument used was a deadly weapon, although it was alleged to be a dangerous weapon); Curry v. State, 4 Nebr. 545 (holding that on an indictment charging an assault with intent to commit murder with "deliberate and premeditated malice," a conviction might be had where the assault was committed purposely and maliciously but without deliberation and premeditation). See also Thompson v. State, 131 Ala. 18, 31 So. 725 (holding that since proof of intention was not necessary to sustain a conviction for manslaughter in the second degree, it was proper on a trial of an indictment for killing a person while racing upon a public road, to refuse an instruction that defendant could not be convicted if there was a reasonable doubt as to an indictment for negligent homicide sets out the specific negligence, it has been held that the negligence must be proved as laid.⁷⁷ A charge that defendant jointly with others killed the deceased may be supported by proof that defendant acted alone or in concert.⁷⁸

2. PROOF OF DISTINCT OFFENSE. In case the same act constitutes two offenses, it is immaterial that on a charge of one offense the proof incidentally discloses the other.⁷⁹ Upon a charge of voluntary manslaughter, under some statutes, defendant cannot be convicted on proof of involuntary manslaughter.⁸⁰ Where it is charged that deceased was killed in an assault upon a third person with intent to murder such person, evidence is admissible of the character of the assault upon the third person.⁸¹

3. NATURE OR DEGREE OF OFFENSE. An indictment in the ordinary form for murder in the first degree is sufficient to admit proof that the crime was committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate a felony, thus bringing the killing within the statutory definition of murder in the first degree.⁸² Some authorities hold, however, that upon a charge of a specific kind of murder as defined by statute, there can be no conviction on proof of another specific kind.⁸³ Proof that the killing was done after lying in wait is admissible, although not charged.⁸⁴ Declarations made as a part of the res gestæ are admissible, although they tend to show malice not charged in the indictment.⁸⁵

4. TIME AND PLACE. As a general rule a variance as to the time of the offense is immaterial in case it is shown to have occurred prior to the finding of the indictment and within the period prescribed by the statutes of limitations,⁸⁶ in

Where the offense may be prosecuted either in the county in which the injury was inflicted, or in that in which death resulted, it may be shown that death occurred in a county other than that alleged,⁹⁰ or even in another state.⁹¹

5. DESCRIPTION OF PERSON KILLED OR ASSAULTED. The rules as to variance concerning the name of the person killed are those applicable to indictments generally with regard to the names of third persons necessary to the statement;⁹² hence it is sufficient to show that the deceased was generally known by the name stated in the indictment.⁹³ A mistake in the middle initial is not fatal.⁹⁴ It is not necessary to aver that the person killed was a peace officer acting in the discharge of his duty, in order that proof of such fact be admissible.⁹⁵ Averments descriptive of the person killed, although unnecessarily made, must, however, be proved as alleged.⁹⁶

6. MANNER AND MEANS. Where an indictment is drawn without specification of the manner and means of the killing,⁹⁷ the state may prove any manner of killing or may prove different manners.⁹⁸ In case the indictment charges the use of several means,⁹⁹ or charges both known and unknown means,¹ the state may the indictment charge but one wound to have been inflicted, and proof shows several,¹⁴ either of which might have been mortal.¹⁵ Where the indictment contains no description of the wounds, such fact does not render the evidence with regard thereto inadmissible.¹⁶

8. INTENT. An indictment charging an intent to kill a person named cannot be supported by proof of intent to kill another,¹⁷ although proof of a general intent to kill,¹⁸ or that the person injured, and as to whom the intent was laid, was mistaken for another,¹⁹ has been held sufficient. It has been held, however, that under an indictment in the common-law form, it may be proved that the killing occurred in the attempt to kill another person, such killing being made murder by statute.²⁰ Since there may be a conviction of an included offense, on failure of proof of the specific intent to kill, defendant is not entitled to an acquittal if such intent is not proved.²¹

9. KILLING OR ASSAULT UPON SEVERAL. A charge of killing two persons may be supported by proof of the killing of one.²² So on a charge of assault against several, it is not a fatal variance that the proof establish that one person only was assaulted.²³ In case an assault is charged with intent to murder two persons, it may be shown that it was by different acts, although in the same transaction.²⁴

Where all the circumstances attending the killing are fully shown, the fact that a deadly weapon was used does not raise a presumption of malice, but the character of the killing is to be determined from a consideration of such circumstances. *Godwin v. defense,⁵⁰ or in the heat of passion caused by sufficient provocation from the person slain,⁵¹ the law does not necessarily imply malice from the use of a deadly weapon. If one person kills another in mutual combat, the superiority of the weapon used by the slayer is not a fact from which malice is to be inferred.⁵² One who has been threatened with a murderous attack with a deadly weapon, and has ground to believe it will be made, may arm himself for the defense and no inference of malice can be drawn from the fact of such preparation.⁵³ It has been held that in a state where there is a constitutional right to carry weapons in self-defense, there is no presumption of malice from the carrying of a weapon, such as a bowie-knife, when the circumstances of procuring and carrying it show that it was only for self-defense;⁵⁴ and that in a state where carrying deadly weapons secretly is expressly prohibited, secretly carrying a deadly weapon does not, under all circumstances, import malice.⁵⁵ And it is well settled that malice is presumed, not only when a killing under special circumstances or by certain means is shown, but when a mere fact of killing is shown without any explanatory circumstances.⁵⁶ According to some of the authorities in cases where the killing is proved, and no accompanying circumstances appear in the evidence, the law presumes that the killing was done maliciously;⁵⁷ but if the attendant circumstances are shown in evidence, whether on the part of the prosecution or the accused, the character of the killing is to be determined by considering them, and it is then not a matter for presumption which operates in the absence of explanatory evidence, but for determination from the circumstances shown in evidence.⁵³ Malice is implied in the killing of one person by another, where the act is committed while the accused is engaged in the perpetration of some other felonious or unlawful act.⁵⁴ And where a person kills an officer in the discharge of his duty, knowing him to be such, malice is implied.⁶⁰ If an act is unlawful and is of such a character that the known consequences of it would be to produce great bodily harm, or to endanger life, the law will infer malice;⁶¹ but malice is not necessarily implied from an intent to inflict a personal injury.⁶² Malice aforethought is not to be inferred from deadly intent merely, as a deadly intent may exist in a case of self-defense, or upon sudden and reasonable provocation.⁶³ Where a homicide is committed under mitigating circumstances, malice is not implied, although the homicide may be neither excusable nor justifiable.⁶⁴

b. Rebuttal of Presumption. Where the killing is shown by the prosecution to have been of such character, or to have taken place under such circumstances, as to give rise to the presumption of malice, it devolves upon the accused to rebut this presumption.⁶⁵

c. Antecedent Malice. Where the existence of deliberate malice in the slayer is once ascertained, its continuance down to the perpetration of the meditated act must be presumed, unless there is evidence to repel this presumption.⁶⁶ And where a deliberate purpose to kill or do great bodily harm is ascertained, and there is a consequent unlawful act of killing, the provocation, whatever it may be, which immediately precedes the act, is to be thrown out of the case and goes for nothing, unless it can be shown that this purpose was abandoned before the

A mere grudge or malice in its general sense is not sufficient to bring a case within act was done.⁶⁷ Where, however, express malice and a subsequent reconciliation followed by fresh provocation is proved, the law will refer the motive of the slayer to the recent provocation, and not to the antecedent malice, unless the special circumstances of the case forbid such a presumption.⁶⁸ So too if a person, upon unexpectedly meeting his adversary who intercepts him on his lawful road and in his lawful pursuit, accepts a fight which he might have avoided by passing on, the provocation being sudden and unexpected, the law will not presume it to be on the old grudge, but upon the fresh insult given by stopping him on his way.⁶⁹

4. DELIBERATION AND PREMEDITATION. Proof of the fact of killing merely,⁷⁰ or of killing with a deadly weapon,⁷¹ does not raise a presumption of premeditation or deliberation, so as to make the offense murder in the first degree under statutes dividing murder into degrees;⁷² but the premeditation or deliberation which is essential for this purpose may be inferred from the circumstances of the killing.⁷³

5. MATTERS OF DEFENSE — a. In General. The general rule, as usually stated by the authorities, is that the fact of killing being first proved, any circumstances in mitigation or of excuse or justification are to be shown by the accused,⁷⁴ unless the principle that, where one having express malice toward another, kills that other, the killing is referable to the previous malice and not to a provocation at the time of the killing. To do this there must be a particular and definite intent to kill, so that the provocation is a mere collateral circumstance, the intent existing before and independently of it. *Cannon v. they arise out of the evidence produced against him to prove the homicide, and the circumstances attending it.⁷⁵ Several well considered cases, however, expressly announce the rule that the burden of proof never shifts from the prosecution upon the accused, in the sense in which it is understood to shift upon a party in a civil suit.⁷⁶ And it has been held that the burden of proof is not upon the accused to prove self-defense,⁷⁷ accident,⁷⁸ want of evil intent, or any other defensive fact, which is immediately connected with and constitutes a part of the transaction, and which is not peculiarly within his knowledge.⁷⁹ When

Killing to prevent murder must be absolutely necessary after using all other means, as well as bona fide, to prevent the crime, and not in a preconceived purpose of revenge, for the accomplishment of which such prevention is a pretext, and the burden is on the slayer to show that he killed to prevent murder. Mitchell v. State, 22 Ga. 211, 68 Am. Dec. 493.

Due care.—A man was indicted for the manslaughter of a woman by driving a cab over her in a public street, and his defense was that he had used due and proper care in driving the cab upon the occasion in question. It was held that the burden of proving negligence did not lie on the crown, but that, upon the fact of the killing being proved, it was cast upon the prisoner to show that he had used due and proper care in driving the cab. Reg. v. Cavendish, Ir. R. 8 C. L. 178.

In Oregon, when it is shown that the killing was done voluntarily or intentionally, with a deadly weapon, it devolves upon defendant to show an excuse or justification for the killing (State v. Conally, 3 Oreg. 69; State v. Bertrand, 3 Oreg. 61); but the mere fact of killing having been proved, it does not devolve on him to prove excuse or justification (Goodall v. State, 1 Oreg. 333, 80 Am. Dec. 396).

Reason for rule.—This is so, because the burden of proof is upon the state to prove that the homicide, or the alleged assault, was unlawful, intentional, and committed with the necessary criminal intent; and until this proof is made to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt defendant is shielded by the presumption of innocence, and is not required to prove anything. But suppose in such case his guilt is established in all essential particulars beyond any reasonable doubt, does the burden of proof then fall upon him to show justification or excuse for the act? How can he justify or excuse a murder? Murder is neither justifiable nor excusable. He can introduce evidence in rebuttal of the state's case, and break down and destroy the case made against him by the state, and thus the accused relies upon any substantive, distinct, separate, and independent matter as a defense, which is outside of and does not necessarily constitute a part of the act or transaction with which he is charged, such as the defense of insanity, non-age, license from proper authority to do the act, or the like, then it devolves upon him to establish such special and foreign matter;⁸⁰ and when the accused relies upon a defensive fact which is peculiarly within his knowledge, the burden rests upon him to prove it.⁸¹ Under a statute making the commission of an abortion resulting in death manslaughter in the first degree, unless the same was necessary to preserve the life of the deceased, the burden of proving the exception is upon the accused.⁸² In several jurisdictions the burden of establishing mitigation, justification, or excuse is regulated by statute.⁸³

b. Self-Defense. The rule as generally stated is, that when the killing is shown, and self-defense is pleaded, it is incumbent upon the accused to establish this defense,⁸⁴ unless it is shown by the evidence offered by the prosecution to establish the killing.⁸⁵ It has been expressly decided, however, that the rule that the burden of proof never shifts in criminal prosecutions is applicable;⁸⁶ and acquit himself of the charge; but in doing this he is not justifying or excusing the act, but is combatting the issue of guilt made against him by the state. Jones v. State, 13 Tex. App. 1.

there are cases holding that the burden is upon the prosecution to show that the accused was not acting in self-defense.⁸⁷

c. Accidental Killing. The defense that the homicide was accidental is in no sense an affirmative defense. It is a denial of criminal intent, and throws upon the prosecution the burden of proving such intent, beyond a reasonable doubt, and the accused is not required to sustain such defense by a preponderance of testimony.⁸⁸

6. PERSONAL RELATIONS. There is no additional presumption of innocence when a husband is charged with the murder of his wife,⁸⁹ or a parent with the murder of his child,⁹⁰ because of the relations which the accused bore to the deceased. Where the deceased had supplanted defendant in the illicit affections of a female, it was held proper for the jury to infer that the shooting was prompted by malice.⁹¹

7. GRADE OR DEGREE OF OFFENSE. When nothing more appears than an unlawful, intentional killing, without justification, excuse, or mitigation, at common law, murder is presumed;⁹² and where murder is divided into degrees by statute, murder in the second degree is presumed,⁹³ the burden being upon the prosecution to raise it to the first degree.⁹⁴ Under a statute making a homicide committed in the attempted perpetration of a felony, murder in the first degree, the prosecution must establish the fact that the accused attempted the felony, and that death occurred as the outcome of such attempt.⁹⁵ death is not rendered objectionable merely because the witnesses give other incompetent testimony.²

b. Inspection of Dead Body. The best proof of the corpus delicti of a homicide and the most effectual means of ascertaining its cause is the finding and inspection of the dead body;³ but where the body cannot be found the fact of death may be established by cogent and unequivocal circumstances.⁴

c. Confessions, Declarations, and Circumstances. The corpus delicti may be proven by declarations and circumstances;⁵ but the general rule is that the corpus delicti must be established by evidence extrinsic of extrajudicial confessions.⁶ If the existence, alive, of the alleged victim of a homicide is in question, it can be shown that he stated that he was going away and bade certain persons good-bye, with other facts which go to show that he did in fact go away.⁷ In order to establish the fact of death and to rebut defendant's claim that the deceased has merely gone away, evidence of declarations and acts of the deceased negating any intention of leaving home is competent.⁸ Evidence of events happening after the disappearance of deceased, and which could not have influenced his departure, is not admissible to support such a claim by defendant.⁹

d. Blood-Stains. Proof of blood-stains at or about the place where violence is alleged to have been inflicted,¹⁰ or upon articles of the deceased found in possession of defendant, not satisfactorily explained,¹¹ is competent to establish the corpus delicti.

e. In Infanticide Cases. Where the subject of the homicide is a new-born infant, a non-expert witness may testify as to its being a fully developed child.¹²

f. Order of Proof. While the better practice requires that the corpus delicti

3. U. S. v. Williams, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,707, 1 Cliff. 5.

In Texas the statute (Pen. Code (1895), art. 654) requires the finding and identification of the body or portion of it. But the identification may be established by circumstances (Gay v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 242, 49 S. W. 612); but circumstances attending the disappearance of a person indicating his death should not be considered in identifying unrecognizable fragments of clothing and of a human body as being those of the alleged murdered man (Gay v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 450, 60 S. W. 771).

4. St. Clair v. U. S., 154 U. S. 134, 14 S. Ct. 1002, 38 L. ed. 936; U. S. v. Williams, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,707, 1 Cliff. 5. In the latter case the evidence showed that defendant and others threw deceased overboard from a ship at sea, and the master of the ship was permitted to testify that for several days before and after the commission of the crime he saw no vessels.

In Ohio the rule is that while confessions are not sufficient, they may be considered in connection with other evidence to prove the corpus delicti. State v. Knapp, 70 Ohio St. 380, 71 N. E. 705; Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 146; State v. Wehr, 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 478, 6 Ohio N. P. 345.

In Pennsylvania the rule is, that "when the Commonwealth has given sufficient evidence of the corpus delicti for the case to go to the jury, it is competent to show a confession made by the defendant connecting him with the crime." Gray v. Com., 101 Pa. St. 380, 47 Am. Rep. 733.

be first established,¹³ the rule is not imperative, and the order of its proof is not always material.¹⁴

2. To SHOW IDENTITY OF DECEASED — a. In General. The identification of the body of a person alleged to have been murdered is a material fact which must be proved,¹⁵ and it may be established by circumstantial evidence.¹⁶ Proof by defendant that the person alleged to have been murdered was seen by divers persons at various places after the time of the alleged murder cannot be rebutted by the prosecution by evidence that a person resembling the deceased was at and about such places at the times stated.¹⁷

b. Body Not Lost or Destroyed. Where the body of deceased is recovered, although it may be mutilated and many of the features destroyed, it is competent to prove its identity by relatives and acquaintances who are enabled to identify it by certain peculiar marks, as birth-marks, or other points of resemblance;¹⁸ but the witness can only testify as to the points of resemblance, and not to positive identity.¹⁹ It is not essential that the witnesses testifying as to the identity of the body should have seen it. Their testimony as to identity may be based on a minute description of it given by others who saw it, and who did not know the deceased,²⁰ or it may be identified by articles found thereon.²¹ Defendant will not be permitted to support a claim that the body found is not that of the person alleged to have been murdered by proof that the latter stated before his disappearance that he intended to leave and never make himself known.²²

c. Body Wholly or Partially Destroyed. If the body is substantially destroyed, as by fire, its identity may be established by proof that deceased was accustomed to wear or carry certain articles found at the place of destruction;²³ and the length of time elapsing between the time of wearing such articles and the disappearance affects only the weight not the competency of such evidence.²⁴ Or the identification may be made by proof identifying unconsumed fragments of the clothing as being parts of similar clothing worn by deceased;²⁵ but such proof must be positive to the extent of removing every reasonable doubt.²⁶ Identity may also be shown by proof on the part of those acquainted with the deceased that undestroyed portions of the body are parts of the body of the person missing.²⁷ Variance or uncertainty in such evidence goes to its credibility only, not its competency.²⁸ It is not competent for experts to testify that on account of natural and inevitable changes after death it is impossible for any one to identify a dead person from his head preserved in alcohol.²⁹

d. Photographs. A photograph of a missing person may be offered in evidence to show his identity with that of a murdered person;³⁰ and a witness who saw the body of deceased may testify that the face resembled the photograph.³¹ Photographs taken after death may be introduced in aid of identification.³²

3. TO SHOW MALICE, INTENT, AND PREMEDITATION—a. In General. The criminal purpose or intent of the accused must always be proved. It may be and sometimes is shown by direct evidence;³³ but it is usually inferred from the character and circumstances of the offense, or proved by preceding threats, accompanying declarations or subsequent conduct, admissions, or confessions.³⁴ So express malice may be proved directly by showing the deliberate intent of the accused expressed or declared in words at the time of the killing or shortly before it took place;³⁵ but in many cases this cannot be done, and then it is competent to prove the intent by showing the acts and conduct of the accused and the other circumstances in the case.³⁶ Implied malice is proved by showing that the killing was done suddenly, without justification or excuse and without provocation, or without sufficient provocation to reduce the homicide to manslaughter.³⁷ But while the law implies malice upon proof of voluntary homicide, it does not impute express malice.³⁸ Malice, express or implied, may also be proved by showing that an unlawful act resulting in the death of another was attended with such circumstances as are the ordinary symptoms of a wicked, depraved, and malignant

36. State v. Di Guglielmo, 4 Pennw. (Del.) 336, 55 Atl. 350.

Express malice is evidenced not by words only, but also by external circumstances discovering the inward intention, such as lying in wait, antecedent menaces, former grudges, deliberate compassings, the nature and character of the act done, the instrument used, the coldness and deliberation shown in the preparation, and the manner in which the murder was committed. State v. Di Guglielmo, 4 Pennw. (Del.) 336, 55 Atl. 350; Republica v. Langcake, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 415; Sharpe v. State, 17 Tex. App. 486; Gomez v. State, 15 Tex. App. 327; Singleton v. State, 1 Tex. The fact that defendant could not be convicted of a higher offense than murder in the second degree does not render evidence of express malice inadmissible, nor furnish ground for refusing to permit counsel to comment thereon. Everett v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1893) 24 S. W. 505.

37. State v. Di Guglielmo, 4 Pennw. (Del.) 336, 55 Atl. 350.

38. This is not an inference of law, but a question of fact, consisting of intention dependent upon the state of the mind, and it must be proved, as any other fact in the case, by such evidence as is reasonably sufspirit, without reference to what was passing in the mind of the accused at the time he committed the offense.³⁹

b. Defendant's Direct Testimony as to Intent. Now that the defendant in a criminal prosecution is generally a competent witness in his own behalf, a question has been raised as to whether he may testify directly as to his motive and intent in doing the act charged against him as a crime. According to one view his condition of mind is a fact of which he alone of all the world has positive knowledge, and it must be competent for him to testify directly to that which is always a subject of proof or disproof by indirect evidence, his testimony going to the jury with the other evidence contradicting or corroborating it.⁴⁰ On the other hand it has been held that the intent of defendant is a conclusion to be ascertained by the jury from all the facts proved in the case, and that defendant cannot be permitted to testify directly to the secret and uncommunicated motive, intention, or state of mind with which he did the act charged against him.⁴¹

c. All Facts Attending the Homicide Are Admissible. As bearing on the question of malice and premeditation all the facts attending a homicide, including the character of the deceased, previous threats, bad feeling, going armed, lying in wait, and the like, may be shown by the evidence before the jury.⁴² Any fact or

circumstance tending to show whether the prisoner had a previously formed design to take the life of the deceased is admissible in evidence.⁴³

d. Previous Threats by Accused—(1) To Do VIOLENCE TO DECEASED. Threats of the accused to do violence to the person eventually slain, although not communicated to the deceased, and all declarations and demonstrations of personal hostility are admissible in evidence, as evincing malice and premeditation and tending to prove the criminal intent charged in the indictment.⁴⁴ But reckless,

Part of the res gestæ.—On a trial for murder threats and declarations of hostile purpose and feeling made by the deceased on the day and near the time of the killing, and his acts and conduct indicative of an intention to execute such threats, are admissible in evidence as parts of the res gestæ, although the threats were not communicated to the defendant. Pitman v. State, 22 Ark. 354.

Intention to fight a duel.—Evidence that deceased had told witness a few moments before the homicide that he proposed to wait for defendant until seven o'clock the following morning and fight a duel with him was not admissible, in a prosecution for murder, where it did not appear that defendant had any knowledge of such intention, since such evidence had no bearing on the question of defendant's motive, animus, or intent. intending to kill one person kills another, evidence evincing malice, a criminal intent, and a motive for killing the person really intended is admissible on the same principles and for the same reasons as if such person had been killed under the same circumstances.⁴⁷ So also where the accused fires at one man and kills another, evidence of his state of feelings toward his intended victim is competent to show the intention with which the fatal shot was fired.⁴⁸

(iii) GENERAL THREATS. General threats by the prisoner to kill someone shortly without alluding to any particular person are admissible to prove general malice and to show that the prisoner was seeking trouble with general homicidal intent of which the deceased became the victim.⁴⁹

(iv) TO KILL A WHOLE FAMILY OR CLASS OF PERSONS. So also threats to do violence to an entire family or a class of persons, one of whom became the victim, are admissible to show malice and criminal intent, although no particular person was named by the accused.⁵⁰

(v) LAPSE OF TIME BEFORE KILLING. If a long period intervened during which there were frequent opportunities of doing the threatened injury, and there was no attempt to do it, and no repetition of the threat, it would be but a slight circumstance in connecting the accused with the crime, and it might well be regarded as a mere ebullition of temporary passion. The remoteness of threats may greatly impair their probative force, but as a rule it does not affect their admissibility in evidence.⁵¹ It should be observed that the evidential value of threats and hostile demonstrations is strictly for the consideration of the jury, who should take into account the circumstances under which they were made, whether the threats were absolute or conditional, whether they were repeated under circumstances tending to show a deliberate and fixed deadly purpose or were mere exhibitions of idle bravado under immediate provocation, preparation, and opportunity for carrying them into execution, the lapse of time intervening before the fatal meeting and all other circumstances indicative of the state of mind of the accused and the feelings he entertained or cherished toward the deceased.⁵²

e. Previous Threats by Deceased. Threats of violence by the deceased of recent date and communicated to defendant are admissible in evidence as relevant to the question whether defendant had reasonable cause to apprehend an attack fatal to life or fraught with danger of great bodily injury, and hence was justified in acting on a hostile demonstration of much less pronounced character than if such threats had not preceded it; and, in the absence of other evidence of premeditation, the prosecution has no right to contend that the communication of such threats aroused the hostility of the accused to the point of deliberately killing the deceased.⁵³ When the evidence leaves it in doubt as to who was the aggressor, recent threats of the deceased to do violence to the person of the accused, although

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," § 294. Reconciliation of the parties.—In Jefferts v. People, 5 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 522, evidence of threats made two years before the alleged murder was admitted, and it was held that evidence showing that after the threats had been made friendly relations were restored between the parties would not remove the threats from the consideration of the jury.

Discretion of court.—It has been held, however, that it is within the discretion of the court to determine whether the evidence offered is so remote in time or so insignificant in character as to furnish no aid in deciding the fact to be found, and in the absence of a manifest abuse of such discretion the ruling of the trial court will not be disturbed. *Com. v. Ostensibly made in jest.—Evidence of threats, although ostensibly made in jest by the accused to the deceased, is admissible on the trial, and may be construed by the jury in the light of subsequent events, as bearing on the question of malice. People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364, 69 N. W. 501.

Thoughtless bragging.—While threats made in a thoughtless and bragging manner should not receive too much consideration from a jury, yet they are competent and proper evidence, and what weight they should have with a jury is a question for them under proper instructions from the court and a consideration of all the circumstances under which they were made. *State v. not communicated to him, are admissible in evidence as tending to show malice and deadly hostility on the part of the deceased.⁵⁴ But, as it is settled law that no mere threat of violence can justify the taking of human life, it follows on principle that where the slayer sought his enemy and killed him, and there is no question of self-defense, evidence of previous threats of violence by the deceased, although communicated to the accused, is not admissible to rebut the imputation of malice and reduce the grade of the offense.⁵⁵

54. Evidence of such uncommunicated threats is of course not admissible to show directly quo animo the prisoner did the act, but it tends to repel the imputation of malice by showing the motive and intention of the deceased, and thus giving rise to an inference that in the fatal encounter he was the aggressor. son under the control of the accused, evidence of cruel and inhuman treatment of the deceased by the accused on other occasions is admissible to show malice;⁵⁷ but evidence of previous acts of cruelty to the deceased is not admissible unless there is evidence connecting defendant with such acts.⁵⁸ On the other hand evidence of this description is not confined to feelings of hatred and hostility; where no deliberate killing is shown evidence of defendant's kindness to the deceased is admissible as tending to show that the killing was unintentional or purely accidental;⁵⁹ but where a deliberate killing is shown evidence that the prisoner was on friendly terms with the deceased and his family is not admissible.⁶⁰

(ii) DIFFICULTY BETWEEN ACCUSED AND THIRD PERSON. Evidence of a difficulty between the accused and a third person with which the deceased was in no way connected, or of threats made against the accused by a person who was not present at the homicide and who is not shown to have been acting in concert with the deceased, is not admissible,⁶¹ although evidence of defendant's ill-will toward a member of the family of the deceased has sometimes been admitted.⁶²

Refusal to accept apology.—On a prosecution for murder, it appeared that prior to the killing there had been a difficulty between the parties; and a witness testified that after the difficulty he had a conversation with defendant, and asked him if the trouble could not be settled, and that defendant said that he did not want any acknowledgments. It was held that the evidence as to defendant refusing to accept an apology was admissible. Pettis v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1904) 81 S. W. 312.

Mutual feeling of hostility.—Where the evidence in chief for the prosecution has been confined to the res gestæ, and defendant then shows that for some time prior to the fatal occurrence the deceased had entertained a hostile and vindictive feeling toward him and had threatened to kill him, the prosecution may show in rebuttal that the feeling of hostility was mutual for the purpose of showing express malice on the part of the accused. Statements made by a prisoner showing malevolence toward the father and family of deceased, who was killed while attempting to

And where the matter sought to be introduced in evidence is a part of the res gestæ it is always admissible.⁶³

(III) DIFFICULTY BETWEEN DECEASED AND THIRD PERSON. Evidence of a difficulty between the deceased and a third person in which the accused took no part or of threats by a third person to do violence to the person of the deceased is not admissible, in the absence of proof tending to show that such third person either did the killing or was in conspiracy with the accused for that purpose,⁶⁴ unless the accused afterward espoused the cause of such third person and made the quarrel his own.⁶⁵ But where the evidence is conflicting as to whether defendant or another person perpetrated the crime, the prisoner has a right to show the conduct, acts, motives, and threats of that other person.⁶⁶ So in case of a neighborhood feud where the accused and the deceased were members of opposing factions, evidence of previous fights and quarrels between such factions in which the accused participated is admissible.⁶⁷ And where a conspiracy is shown evidence of threats and an unfriendly state of feelings toward the deceased on the part of any of the conspirators is admissible.⁶⁸

g. Lying in Wait. Lying in wait for the victim is always strong evidence of malice and premeditation, and, where death results, the extent of the injury intended to be inflicted is immaterial.⁶⁹

h. Fierceness of Attack. The fierceness and atrocity of the attack, the circumstances under which it was made, the nature and extent of the injury inflicted, the condition of the body and wearing apparel, the deadly nature of the weapon used and the manner of using it, and all other facts constituting the res gestæ are proper subjects of inquiry on the question of malice and intent.⁷⁰

i. Subsequent Declarations of Hostility. Subsequent statements of the accused showing that his hatred of the deceased was so intense that it pursued him beyond the grave are admissible on the issue of express malice.⁷¹ So also on a trial for assault with intent to murder subsequent statements of the assailant showing bitter hatred toward the person assaulted are admissible to show malice at the time of the assault.⁷²

j. Indignity to the Remains. Any unseemly conduct toward the corpse of the person slain or any indignity offered it by the slayer should go to the jury on the question of malice.⁷³

k. Jeering at Weeping Relatives. His jeerings at the weeping relatives and friends of the deceased may be considered as bearing upon the question of the malice of the accused.⁷⁴

l. Acts in Preparation. Upon a trial for murder it is competent to prove all the acts of the accused in preparation for the commission of the homicide, inasmuch as preparation beforehand of the means with which to perpetrate the crime tends to show malice, deliberation, and a fixed deadly purpose.⁷⁵ And this is true even though such acts involve the commission of another crime.⁷⁶ Where there is evidence of preparation tending to show antecedent malice, the accused has the right to show that such preparation was made in anticipation of an expected attack upon himself or for some other innocent purpose and the exclusion of such evidence is fatal error.⁷⁷

m. Commission of Other Offenses. Evidence of the commission of offenses by defendant not in any way connected with that for which he is being prosecuted should be carefully excluded from the jury;⁷⁸ but in a trial for murder evidence tending to prove a material fact, to show a motive for the deed, or to establish the criminal intent of the accused, cannot be excluded on the ground that it also tends to prove his commission of another offense.⁷⁹

n. Eccentric Conduct and Irascible Temper of Accused. Evidence of eccentricities in the conduct of the accused for a period before the homicide, not offered to prove insanity, but want of premeditation, is not admissible.⁸⁰ So where it appears that murder was committed with premeditation evidence that defendant has an irascible temper and is subject to sudden fits of passion from slight causes is incompetent.⁸¹

o. Provocation. For the purpose of showing the absence of premeditation it is always competent to show that the accused, in attacking the deceased, acted under immediate or very recent provocation.⁸² It may be shown that the deceased had debauched defendant's wife or daughter.⁸³

p. Defendant's Desire For Peace. Any evidence tending to show defendant's desire for peace or an innocent purpose in going to the place of the fatal encounter is admissible to repel the imputation of malice.⁸⁴ Thus it may be shown that defendant was deputized by an officer to arrest the deceased,⁸⁵ or that he had made overtures to the deceased for a peaceable settlement of their differences.⁸⁶

q. Fleeing From Justice. The flight of the accused, while admissible for some purposes, does not tend to prove deliberation or premeditation in the act of killing.⁸⁷

4. TO SHOW COMMISSION OF OR PARTICIPATION IN ACT BY ACCUSED — a. In General. Evidence tending to connect defendant with the commission of the crime is always admissible.⁸⁸

b. Ability and Opportunity — (i) ABILITY. Proof that defendant had in his possession the means,⁸⁹ or claimed to have the peculiar skill,⁹⁰ or, where he denies it, that he had the skill,⁹¹ for committing the homicide in the manner it was committed, is admissible on the question of his ability to commit it.

(ii) OPPORTUNITY. Evidence that defendant had an opportunity to commit the crime is always competent.⁹² And the probability of defendant's guilt may be shown by the lack of opportunity on the part of others.⁹³ Such proof may be rebutted by evidence of an alibi.⁹⁴

c. Identity and Presence of Accused — (i) IN GENERAL. Any evidence tending to identify defendant as the guilty person and show his presence at the scene of the crime is relevant and competent,⁹⁵ especially where proof of defendant's guilt depends alone on circumstantial evidence.⁹⁶

(ii) NATURE OF THE EVIDENCE. Evidence of identity must be of a character to clearly connect defendant with the homicide.⁹⁷ It cannot be reinforced by proof that the witness failed to identify others as the guilty parties,⁹⁸ nor rebutted by proof that the witness thereto was silent when the deceased stated he did not know who his assailants were.⁹⁹ Such testimony need not be positive, uncertainty affecting only its weight and not its admissibility.¹

(iii) REASONS FOR IDENTIFICATION. Reasons for the identification are not essential to render the testimony admissible,² but they may be given.³ If called for, and the witness cannot give any reason for the identification, the evidence should be excluded.⁴

(IV) ILLUSTRATIONS OF ADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE. In order to show the identity evidence may be offered of a spot of blood on defendant's clothes,⁵ together with a physician's analysis thereof;⁶ bloody articles found in defendant's room soon after the murder;⁷ the condition of defendant's clothing found in his room the morning after the crime;⁸ his ownership of property found at the place of the crime;⁹ the character of shot taken from the pockets of clothes shown to belong to the accused;¹⁰ cartridges found upon his person;¹¹ and, where the deceased was robbed, the possession of money at the time of arrest immediately after the murder, although such money is not identified as having belonged to deceased;¹² and, where defendant had a motive, and had made threats against the deceased, testimony tending to show that he saw deceased pass his house and pursued him;¹³ statements of defendant tending to connect him with a mask found at the scene of the murder;¹⁴ a trunk and its contents which was shown to have been used by defendant and his wife and which contained his bloody garments;¹⁵ that defendant threw a missile, comprehended within the indictment, at the injured person;¹⁶ declarations of accused made several days before the crime indicating an intention to use a deadly weapon against deceased,¹⁷ or to kill him,¹⁸ his statements made at the time of joining others who had declared their intention to commit murder;¹⁹ his presence in the vicinity of the scene of the crime at or about the time of its commission;²⁰ or, after his admission of presence at the place of the murder, his previous denials of his presence;²¹ defendant's presence and complicity in a robbery, for which he was arrested by the officer whom he is charged with killing,²² or that he was a member of the band of robbers;²³ a previous altercation with defendant and pursuit by him;²⁴ that just after the shooting defendant appeared at a near-by house and renewed his shooting there;²⁵ outcries of deceased, or another who was also killed at or near the same time and place, made at the time of the assault;²⁶ dying declarations of deceased identifying defendant as the assailant;²⁷ that he, while armed, accompanied others bent on a homicidal purpose,²⁸ or was implicated in the administration of poison to the deceased by another;²⁹ that deceased was murdered in the execution of a conspiracy by defendant and others to collect insurance on his life;³⁰ that tracks near where deceased's body was found were similar to those made by defendant,³¹ although no comparison is made except the size of the shoe,³² and no measurement is made,³³ but the witness cannot give his opinion whether defendant's boot made the track;³⁴ or that horse tracks near the scene of the crime were identical with those of a horse ridden by defendant the following morning.³⁵ The conduct of persons before whom the accused is brought for identification is incompetent to prove his identity.³⁶

(v) DECLARATIONS OF DECEASED. The weight of authority favors the admissibility of declarations of the deceased made shortly before the crime, which tend to prove the presence of the accused at the time and place of the homicide;³⁷ but in some jurisdictions a contrary rule prevails.³⁸

(vi) EVIDENCE OF SIMILAR CRIME. Evidence of another similar crime may be admitted to establish the identity of the accused.³⁹

d. Suicide. As a general rule evidence of attempts or threats by the deceased to commit suicide are admissible in behalf of a defendant charged with his murder,⁴⁰ and the length of time intervening between the declarations and the death of deceased does not affect their competency, but only goes to their weight.⁴¹ A suicidal tendency or disposition may also be shown in order to create the presumption of suicide, where the testimony shows that death may have been produced by the deceased, or there is no positive and direct proof of homicide.⁴² But evidence of isolated facts relative to deceased's financial condition or domestic troubles, not showing a suicidal tendency,⁴³ or of the disordered condition of his mind,⁴⁴ or statements made by members of his family to the effect that he committed suicide,⁴⁵ or his statement that he was tired of living and indifferent as to life or death,⁴⁶ are inadmissible. While the acts and declarations of a person alleged to be insane or predisposed to suicide are competent to prove a contrary state of mind, they should be only such acts and declarations as fairly tend to prove the mental condition of such person.⁴⁷ Where it appears from the evidence that the deceased either committed suicide or was murdered, the prosecution may, in order to rebut the suggestion of suicide, show the absence of any motive therefor;⁴⁸ or experiments made with the weapon with which the deed was done repelling the theory of suicide;⁴⁹ or expert testimony showing that suicide with the weapon producing death or a similar weapon was improbable.⁵⁰ Such testimony, however, should be given only by an expert.⁵¹ Proof of possession by deceased of the kind of poison with which he was killed is inadmissible to establish the claim of suicide.⁵²

e. Incriminating Others—(1) IN GENERAL. Where the evidence against defendant is circumstantial, testimony tending to show that the homicide was committed by some other person is always admissible,⁵³ although it may be insufficient to establish his guilt;⁵⁴ the purpose of such testimony being, not to prove the guilt of the other person, but to generate a reasonable doubt of the guilt of defendant.⁵⁵ Its admissibility is not affected by the previous trial and acquittal of the other person,⁵⁶ and evidence of the acquittal is not admissible in rebuttal.⁵⁷ Such evidence, however, must be of a character tending to fix the guilt upon the other person, and to generate a doubt of defendant's guilt.⁵⁸ Where there is no other evidence implicating the other person in the homicide, his declarations that he committed it, or procured its commission, are mere hearsay and inadmissible. Such declarations, to be competent, must be a part of the res gestæ.⁵⁹ Evidence of a previous difficulty with another,⁶⁰ or of apprehensions by the deceased of harm or violence from another,⁶¹ or of the flight of another from the vicinity immediately or a short time after the crime was committed,⁶² or the presence of one known to be a dangerous character, but who is not in any manner connected with the crime,⁶³ or that defendant and deceased lived in a lawless neighborhood, where there is no proof connecting any one else with the crime,⁶⁴ or that another had been charged with and arrested for the crime,⁶⁵ or an indictment against another charging him with the crime,⁶⁶ is inadmissible on behalf of defendant. (II) MOTIVE FOR OTHERS TO COMMIT CRIME. One indicted for murder may show that another had a motive for committing it,⁷¹ especially where the testimony as to who inflicted the fatal wound is circumstantial,⁷² and the deceased and defendant are shown to have been on friendly terms but a short time before the homicide.⁷³ But testimony of the isolated fact of motive on the part of another is inadmissible; there must be evidence connecting the other person with the homicide in order to render it competent.⁷⁴ To refute the evidence of motive on the part of another the state may show that intimate and friendly relations

In North Carolina the rule is that evidence that a third party had malice toward deceased, a motive to take his life, and an opportunity to do so, and had made threats against him, and that sometime before deceased was killed he went in the direction of deceased's house with a deadly weapon threatening to kill him is inadmissible. State v. Davis, 77 N. C. 483. See also State v. Lambert, 93 N. C. 618; State v. Duncan, 28 N. C. 236.

existed between such person and the deceased.⁷⁵ Where the state offers evidence tending to refute the claim of motive on the part of another, defendant is entitled to introduce proof in rebuttal thereof.⁷⁶

(iii) THREATS AND ADMISSIONS BY OTHERS. Threats of other persons against the deceased are hearsay and as a rule are not admissible in evidence on behalf of one charged with criminal homicide.⁷⁷ But where the evidence of threats is accompanied by proof tending to show the guilt of the other person, or connecting him with the crime,⁷⁸ or where the evidence against defendant is wholly circumstantial,⁷⁹ the threats of another person against the deceased become competent evidence on behalf of defendant.

5. CHARACTER, HABITS, CONDITION, AND RELATIONS OF PARTIES — a. Character and Habits of Accused — (i) IN GENERAL. On a trial for murder it is always competent for the accused to introduce evidence showing his general character and reputation for being peaceable and law-abiding.⁸⁰ Such evidence is admissible, although the fact of homicide is proved by direct testimony, and does not depend on circumstantial evidence;⁸¹ and where the guilt of defendant is clearly established;⁸² or the defense is insanity.⁸³ But under the plea of insanity it is not competent to show that defendant possessed a nervous temperament, or that he was excitable and eccentric.⁸⁴

(II) MANNER OF PROVING CHARACTER—(A) On Behalf of Defendant. Evidence as to character must not relate to the general character, but must be confined to those peculiar traits which make it improbable that defendant would commit the crime charged,⁸⁵ and must be directed to his reputation or character among those with whom he, and not the witness, associates.⁸⁶ The moral character of defendant,⁸⁷ or whether he is a brave man or a coward,⁸⁸ is not a proper subject of inquiry. It is not always necessary to establish character by proof of reputation in the community. It may be shown by the testimony of those who know the accused;⁸⁹ but a witness as to the character of defendant must have some personal knowledge of the fact to render him competent to testify with respect thereto.⁹⁰ It may be shown by negative testimony,⁹¹ but cannot be established by proof of particular facts and circumstances;⁹² and a witness who testifies to his quiet and peaceable character should not be permitted to state what his disposition was when crossed or abused.⁹³ Evidence of character at a period remote from the date of the crime may properly be excluded.⁹⁴ Where a person is accused of murder by firearms, evidence of his familiarity with the use of firearms is admissible.⁹⁵ Where a conspiracy is charged defendant cannot show the good character of his co-defendants.⁹⁶ If defendant refuses to put his general character in issue, he will not be permitted to prove by his jailer what his character was while confined in prison.⁹⁷

(B) On Behalf of State. The state should not be permitted to introduce evidence of the bad character of defendant, where he has not made his character an issue,⁹⁸ nor may it show that he lived expensively or had no occupation or means.⁹⁹

where it is proved that defendant anticipated an interview with the deceased, the probabilities of a man of good character arming himself for such an interview may be considered by the jury. Com. v. Shurlock, 14 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 33.

However, it is not improper for the state to show what defendant's business was¹ or where he lived.² But when defendant introduces evidence of his good character the state may oppose it by proof that his previous character was bad.³ However, state witnesses will not be permitted to give testimony of such bad character based on what they heard after the homicide.⁴ While the state cannot, primarily or in rebuttal, offer evidence of specific acts of defendant involving the trait of character evidenced by the crime charged,⁵ it may on cross-examination properly test the credibility or information of a witness testifying to defendant's good character by inquiry as to his knowledge of particular acts of defendant involving such trait.⁶ If such examination results in proof that defendant has been prosecuted for a disturbance of the peace, he cannot be permitted to meet it by showing the details of his arrest and the offense.⁷

(II) ADMISSIBILITY ON BEHALF OF PROSECUTION. The general rule excluding evidence of the character of the deceased applies with equal force against the state and defendant. The state will not be permitted to offer primary evidence of the character of the deceased for morals, or for peace and quiet,⁹ although defendant offers evidence of his own good reputation.¹⁰ But where defendant attempts to show that deceased was a violent and dangerous man the state may properly offer proof of his peaceable and law-abiding character,¹¹ although defendant does not attack the general reputation of deceased for peaceableness and good disposition.¹² The evidence offered by the state should be confined to the question of deceased's character for peaceableness. His general moral character or piety are not material to the issue.¹³ If the accused undertakes to justify the homicide on the ground of threats made by deceased, the state may prove that the general character of deceased was that of an inoffensive man, and one not reasonably to be expected to execute the threats.¹⁴ When it is admitted that deceased was sitting down when shot, testimony as to the habit of deceased of squatting down when conversing is not prejudicial.¹⁵ Evidence that the deceased, who died from a pistol wound, was an expert with a pistol, is immaterial.¹⁶ Evidence as to where the deceased lived,¹⁷ with whom he lived,¹⁸ and his family relations¹⁹ is admissible.

(III) ADMISSIBILITY ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT. In the absence of proof of those circumstances which create an exception to the rule excluding evidence as to the character of the deceased person, defendant should never be permitted to show that deceased was a man of violent character.²⁰ The violent, revengeful, Delaware.—State v. Thawley, 4 Harr. 562.

blood-thirsty character of deceased cannot be shown in excuse or palliation of the homicide, for the unprovoked killing of a bad man is no less murder than the killing of the most peaceful and law-abiding person in a community.²¹ Such proof should never be admitted, when at the time of the killing there is no act or word of deceased which can be illustrated or explained by it; or where there is not evidence conducing to show that the homicide was committed in self-defense.²²

(IV) ADMISSIBILITY DEPENDENT ON CIRCUMSTANCES. To the general rule excluding evidence of the character of the deceased when offered by defendant the courts uniformly recognize that there are exceptions, but, aside from cases in which defendant pleads self-defense, the instances are rare in which such testimony has been admitted.²³ The violent, turbulent, and dangerous character of deceased may be shown when from the circumstances of the case it is a part of the res gestæ,²⁴ or when the evidence of the homicide is wholly circumstantial,²⁵ or when it is doubtful as to who was the aggressor in bringing on the difficulty resulting in the killing,²⁶ or where the immediate circumstances of the killing render it doubtful whether the act was justifiable or not.²⁷

Doubt created as to character of offense.—When the killing has been under such circumstances as to create a doubt as to the character of the offense committed, the general character of the accused may sometimes afford a clue by which the devious ways by which human action is influenced may be threaded, and the truth attained. Quesenberry v. State, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 308.

Degree of crime and extent of punishment.—Evidence of the general bad character of the deceased as a turbulent, blood-thirsty, revengeful, dangerous man is competent to enable the jury to determine the degree of the crime, and the extent and severity of the punishment. Fields v. State, 47 Ala. 603, 11 Am. Rep. 771.

(v) KNOWLEDGE OF DEFENDANT AS TO CHARACTER. It is competent, however, when the evidence shows that accused was under reasonable fear of his life, or of great bodily harm from the deceased, and acted in self-defense,²⁸ unless defendant had no knowledge of such dangerous or violent character, in which event he will not be permitted to give evidence with respect to it;²⁹ and in the absence of proof of the bad and violent character of deceased the accused cannot be permitted to testify that he knew deceased had such character.³⁰

(vi) MANNER OF PROVING CHARACTER. The inquiry as to the character of deceased must relate solely to his general character for violence, ferocity, vindictiveness, or blood-thirstiness.³¹ It cannot be established by proof of isolated facts or specific acts which form no part of the res gestae, and are in no way connected with defendant.³² But on the cross-examination of the state's witnesses defendant is entitled to inquire as to their knowledge or information with respect to deceased or other difficulties in which he was engaged, the purpose of such inquiry being to test their credibility or their knowledge of deceased's character.³³ However, where the witnesses deny any knowledge or information of other difficulties,

A question asking a witness if he knew the character of the deceased, "when he was intoxicated, from report of his neighbors," was held illegal. Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 231. And defendant cannot prove the character of another participant in the fight in which the deceased was killed, by showing the circumstances of previous difficulty between such person and a witness. *Logsdon v. Where defendant proved that deceased was a dangerous and violent man, and the state introduced evidence to the contrary, an indictment against deceased for aggravated assault and battery on defendant is competent evidence. Johnson v. State, 28 Tex. App. 17, 11 S. W. 667.

defendant cannot introduce independent evidence thereof and of their notoriety.³⁴ Nor is the reputation of deceased in a foreign country and at a time remote from the date of the killing a proper subject of inquiry on the part of defendant.³⁵ Where a witness had no knowledge of the character of deceased prior to the homicide, his testimony relative thereto is inadmissible, being mere hearsay.³⁶ An error of the trial court in excluding evidence relative to the character of deceased, if not prejudicial to defendant, will not constitute reversible error.³⁷

c. Physical Conditions of Parties — (I) ADMISSIBILITY IN GENERAL — (A) On Part of Defendant. Evidence as to the relative size, strength, and physical condition of the parties to a homicide is admissible in behalf of defendant only when the proof establishes a prima facie case of self-defense, or a predicate has been laid therefor by proof that at the time of inflicting the mortal wound defendant had been attacked by the deceased,³⁸ and in the absence of such proof it is incompetent.³⁹

(B) On Behalf of State. It is also proper for the state to show the relative physical strength of the parties;⁴⁰ and while the rule requires that the inquiry should be general and not leading, with a constant view to avoid the introduction of irrelevant matter,⁴¹ the state may prove the age of the person assaulted as tending to show the fact of disparity of strength,⁴² or that he was intoxicated at the time, and unable to make or resist an attack.⁴³ It is competent to show the state of deceased's health at the time of the killing,⁴⁴ or to show the mental and physical condition of the deceased immediately after receiving the mortal wound.⁴⁵ But the state cannot show that the accused was afflicted with a loathsome disease at the time of the killing, the only effect of such proof being to prejudice defendant with the jury.⁴⁶

(II) MANNER OF PROOF. The relative physical condition and strength of the parties cannot be established by the opinion of non-expert witnesses,⁴⁷ nor by proof of specific tests of strength, either on the part of defendant⁴⁸ or the state;⁴⁹ it must be shown by giving to the jury facts as to the relative size, mus-

ular development, activity, and apparent health of the parties,⁵⁰ and must be confined to the time of the homicide;⁵¹ but the reasons for the disparity of strength cannot be shown.⁵² It has been held, however, that deceased's health at the time of the killing may be established by his declarations with respect thereto, although made to a non-expert witness.⁵³

d. Personal Relations of Parties—(1) RULE STATED. On a trial for murder it is proper to admit evidence of the previous relations existing between deceased and accused in explanation of their conduct and motives;⁵⁴ but such evidence must relate solely to those previous relations which bear directly upon the question of the homicide;⁵⁵ hence as a rule defendant cannot show that he and deceased were friendly a year before the killing,⁵⁶ that the person assaulted made frequent visits to him,⁵⁷ or that deceased bore malice toward him,⁵⁸ or entertained bad feelings toward his co-conspirator in the homicide,⁵⁹ or the relations between the victim and the brothers of the accused.⁶⁰ Nor can the state show the relations between accused and the daughter of the person assaulted.⁶¹

(1) RULE APPLIED—(A) In General. Under the rule making evidence of previous relations competent, it is proper to admit proof of quarrels and difficulties between the parties, although they may have occurred long before the homicide, provided the evidence shows that the disagreeable conditions continued to the time of the killing,⁶² but evidence of the details of the quarrels and difficulties are not admissible;⁶³ that deceased had threatened to kill defendant's mother;⁶⁴ of the relations between deceased and defendant's daughter, as tending to show who was the aggressor and the presence of a motive;⁶⁵ of a former prosecution of the accused by deceased, which may be shown by the record thereof;⁶⁶ of anticipated litigation between the parties, and defendant's threats with respect thereto;⁶⁷ that defendant opposed deceased in a certain political aspiration which the latter realized;⁶⁸ that defendant was a convict and deceased was a guard over him and others at the time of the killing;⁶⁹ that the person killed was an officer charged with preserving the peace;⁷⁰ of defendant's attendance at meetings held for the purpose of ridding the community of foreigners of the deceased's nationality;⁷¹ of declarations made by accused before the homicide;⁷² or of conduct and conversations between the parties tending to show a bad state of feeling;⁷³ but if the conversation cannot be recalled the witness cannot testify as to the impression it made on him.⁷⁴ On the inquiry as to the previous relations between the parties it is proper to permit a witness to testify whether those relations were friendly or otherwise, although his statement can be nothing more than an expression of his opinion;⁷⁵ yet when it appears that he speaks only from what he has heard one or the other say to himself or to third persons, it is nothing more than hearsay, and should be excluded.⁷⁶ The state of feelings between the parties may be shown by proof of the fact that deceased had circulated slanderous reports about the accused,⁷⁷ but the truth of such reports is immaterial and evidence thereof should be excluded.⁷⁸

(B) Ill-Feelings Between Wives of Parties. Ill-feeling between the wives of the parties to a homicide is not a proper subject of proof in the absence of evidence showing that defendant had knowledge thereof.⁷⁹

(C) Improper Relations With Wife of Accused. Where defendant claims to have killed the deceased for insulting his wife, whether or not she was his lawful wife is a pertinent subject of inquiry.⁸⁰ So too where one man kills another, evidence of criminal intimacy between the mistress of the slayer and deceased is competent to show motive or provocation.⁸¹

(D) Improper Relations With Wife of Deceased. Criminal intimacy between defendant and the wife of deceased is competent as showing the relations between them and as bearing upon the means and opportunity to commit as well as the motive for committing the offense.⁸² Defendant may, however, show that the relations were proper.⁸³

(E) Killing of Wife or Mistress. The rule admitting evidence of previous relations applies with peculiar force in the case of the indictment of a husband charging him with the murder of his wife.⁸⁴ These relations may be shown by proof of quarrels between the accused and his deceased wife, and his ill treatment of her;⁸⁵ and proof of his illicit relations and conduct with another woman is competent to show his unpleasant relations with his wife, and his lack of respect and affection for her.⁸⁶ Upon such issue letters of the accused to third persons are admissible, where they tend to show his relations with his wife,⁸⁷ or with a lewd woman,⁸⁸ or that he was engaged to marry another woman.⁸⁹ And letters of the wife to a third person, written within a few months of the killing, showing the pleasant and happy relations of the parties, are admissible on behalf of defendant.⁹⁰ Or their relations may be shown by proof of the pendency of a suit for divorce brought by the wife against the accused,⁹¹ or the issuance of a peace warrant against accused on the complaint of his wife,⁹² or a prosecution of the accused by the deceased for an offense committed upon her.⁹³ But it is not proper to permit the state to prove, as showing malice, that defendant failed to pay the burial expenses of his murdered wife.⁹⁴ A husband charged with the killing of his wife cannot show in extenuation or justification of the act that she was guilty of improper or unchaste conduct with other men;⁹⁵ or that she was bitter and vindictive, either generally or for the purpose of affecting her dying declaration against him.⁹⁶ So too where a man murders his mistress proof of their relations is admissible;⁹⁷ and the fact that he is married to another woman may be shown.⁹⁸ Where the state makes no attempt to show the conduct of the accused toward the deceased, his mistress, the exclusion of cumulative proof on his part of his kind treatment will not constitute reversible error.⁹⁹

6. MOTIVE — a. In General. Although the state, in a prosecution for murder, is under no obligation to show a motive for the commission of the crime charged,¹ evidence tending to show the existence or non-existence of a motive is admissible.²

Illustration.—One charged with the murder of a woman has no ground of exception because the court submitted to the jury all the evidence of the relations and intercourses between defendant and deceased for six months before the killing, and ruled that the jury should consider all the facts as showing the relations and explaining the conduct of the parties, refusing to rule, as requested by defendant, that there was no

It is essential, however, that the facts upon which the motive is assigned shall be within the knowledge of the party accused.³ The mere fact that the alleged motive is not correlative to the crime committed does not require the evidence thereof to be excluded,⁴ for although weak and inconclusive in itself, it is a circumstance to be considered in conjunction with others, which tend to implicate the accused.⁵ The state's theory of motive is subject to rebuttal by defendant.⁶

b. Quarrels and Ill-Feeling—(1) IN GENERAL. Evidence of previous difficulties between defendant and deceased,⁷ and of the state of the former's feelings toward the latter,⁸ is admissible on the trial of an indictment for murder. It

This rule is especially applicable when responsibility for the homicide rests entirely upon circumstantial evidence. People v. Ah Fung, 17 Cal. 377; State v. West, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 371; State v. Lucey, (Mont. 1900) 61 Pac. 994.

Motive must be proved as a fact, and not as hearsay. Faire v. State, 58 Ala. 74.

Facts occurring after the homicide when they tend to illustrate the motive which actuated the accused in killing the deceased may be shown. Hoxie v. State, 114 Ga. 19, 39 S. E. 944.

A conversation between a witness and defendant is admissible which tends to throw light on defendant's motives and state of mind. Com. v. Kennedy, 170 Mass. 18, 48 N. E. 770.

The secret and uncommunicated motives or intent of defendant is not a matter about which he can be permitted to testify. Seams v. State, 84 Ala. 410, 4 So. 521; Stewart v. State, 78 Ala. 436.

The remoteness of evidence on the issue of motive on a trial for homicide goes to its weight, and not to its admissibility. Weaver v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 607, 81 S. W. 39; Baines v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 490, 66 S. W. 847.

On the separate trial of one of several persons who acted in concert in the commission of an alleged murder, it is competent for the state to show the motives which actuated the others in the alleged homicide. Rufer v. State, 25 Ohio St. 464.

Resisting or escaping from arrest.—Evidence tending to show the motive of defendant to have been a desire to prevent or escape from arrest is admissible. People v. Pool, 27 Cal. 572; Patterson v. State, (Tex. Cr. 1901) 60 S. W. 557; Williams v. Com., 85 Va. 607, 8 S. E. 470.

Everything which happened within the immediate hearing and presence of the prisoner at the time of the homicide is material and admissible as tending to show his motive for the act. McKee v. People, 36 N. Y. 113, 1

Transer. App. 1, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. 216, 34 How. Pr. 230.

Love letters.—On the trial of a defendant for the murder of his paramour, it is not reversible error to admit the woman's love letters to defendant, tending to show her claims and dependence upon him, since, if they do not furnish some evidence of motive, they are at least harmless to defendant. Evidence of another assault, committed on the prosecuting witness by defendant a few months before the one in question, is admissible to prove motive. Crass v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 312, 20 S. W. 579; Sullivan v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 406, 20 S. W. 927, 37 Am. St. Rep. 826.

The fact of anticipated litigation between the deceased and the accused, or of litigation in which the accused felt an interest, is also proper to introduce evidence of facts tending to show the cause of such difficulties and ill-feeling.⁹

(II) BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE. This rule is peculiarly applicable on the trial of a husband for the murder of his wife. Thus ill-treatment, recent acts of personal violence, and threats by defendant to kill his wife may be shown as bearing on motive.¹⁰

c. Other Offenses—(i) IN GENERAL. The general rules relating to the giving in evidence of other offenses committed by the accused as showing motive for the commission of the crime in question are applicable in homicide cases.¹¹ connected with his declaration that he would kill any one who sued him under like circumstances, is admissible as bearing on the state of the feelings of the accused toward the deceased; but evidence touching the merits of such litigation is not admissible in rebuttal. *Commander v. Compare Blake's Case, 1 City Hall Rec. 99, holding that on the trial of a husband for the murder of his wife, proof of a quarrel between them unconnected with the transaction wherein the death ensued is inadmissible to show motive, unless followed by proof of a continued difference flowing from such quarrel.

Divorce.—Under an indictment against a husband for an attempt to murder his wife, evidence that she had applied for a divorce is admissible to show motive (Pinkord v. State, 13 Tex. App. 468); but the record of a divorce suit by a wife against her husband, including an order for the payment of alimony by defendant, is not competent (Binns v. State, 57 Ind. 46, 26 Am. Rep. 48). See also People v. Barthleman, 120 Cal. 7, 52 Pac. 112.

A complaint to a magistrate for failure to support, made by deceased against defendant sometime before the killing, is admissible on the question of motive. People v. Otto, 101 N. Y. 690, 5 N. E. 788, 4 N. Y. Cr. 149. See also People v. Williams, 3 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 84.

Letters of third party.—On a trial for murder, it was shown that, while on a visit to another town, defendant quarreled with his wife, the deceased, because she expressed a desire to live there. After her return home, a sister of the deceased wrote her two letters requesting her to return. The letters not being found, parol evidence of the fact that they were written, and of their contents, is admissible, in connection with other testimony adduced, as tending to show a motive. Gonzales v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 508, 21 S. W. 253.

(II) CONCEALMENT OF OTHER OFFENSE. Thus it may be shown that the motive actuating the accused in the commission of the crime charged was the concealment of another offense by the destruction of one who had knowledge of such offense, or who had manifested a disposition to acquire information as to the perpetrators thereof.¹²

(III) DECEASED AS PROSECUTOR OR WITNESS OF ANOTHER OFFENSE. Evidence of the pendency of an indictment against defendant for another crime in which deceased was prosecutor¹³ or a witness¹⁴ is admissible on the question of motive, where it appears that defendant knew such fact.¹⁵ In such case, how-

Record of indictment.—On a trial for murder, the state, to show the motive of the prisoner, may introduce the record of an indictment pending against him and others charging them with larceny, and prove that deceased was implicated in the same but, having turned state's evidence, was omitted from the indictment. *State v. Opinion of witness.—It is error, in a prosecution for an assault with intent to kill, ever, it is not competent to introduce evidence of defendant's guilt or innocence of such other crime.¹⁶

d. Loss of Affection For Spouse, and Infatuation With Another. Upon a trial for the murder of a husband or wife, evidence tending to show a want of affection on the part of defendant for the deceased,¹⁷ or infatuation with another,¹⁸ is admissible on the question of motive. So also improper relations of the accused survivor with persons of the opposite sex may be shown,¹⁹ but evidence as to the reputation for unchastity of the paramour of one accused of wife murder is not competent.²⁰ Evidence tending to disprove the existence of such a motive for committing the crime is admissible for the defense.²¹

e. Unlawful Relations With Deceased's Spouse. Evidence of intimate friendship²² and illicit relations between defendant and deceased's wife is admissible on the trial of an indictment for murder for the purpose of showing motive.²³ to permit a witness to testify that defendant knew, at the time of the difficulty, that the person assaulted had been to obtain a warrant for his arrest. Bailey v. State, 107 Ala. 151, 18 So. 234. It is also error to allow the prosecuting witness in answer to the question why defendant shot him, to testify that he laid it to his having been a witness in a horse case, such being a conclusion of the witness and there being nothing in the evidence to connect defendant with any horse case. *Plew v. The reason of the rule is that evidence of this character tends to repel the presumption of love and affection that arises out of the marital relation, and to establish a motive for the desire to get rid of one who, under normal conditions, would be the natural object of kindness and protection. People v. Aughtry, 49 S. C. 285, 26 S. E. 619, 27 S. E. 199.

Evidence that defendant was married to the deceased's widow shortly after his murder and under oath stated to the officiating clergyman that there was no legal objection to his being married was held admissible. Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 35 Am. Rep. 524 [affirming 18 Hun 239].

But independent acts of adultery, disconnected from other evidence in the case, cannot be shown.²⁴

f. Jealousy and Unrequited Love. As going to show motive, evidence of the illicit relations existing between defendant and deceased,²⁵ that the former was jealous,²⁶ and that his advances were spurned²⁷ is admissible. The fact that deceased was an obstacle in the way of defendant's marriage may also be shown.²⁸ So the infidelity of defendant's wife is relevant to the question of motive, provided he had knowledge thereof at the time of the killing.²⁹

g. Robbery. Where the theory of the prosecution is that the homicide was committed for the purpose of robbery, evidence that deceased had the reputation of being a wealthy man,³⁰ or that he had money upon his person or in his house shortly before the murder, of which defendant was aware,³¹ is admissible. The fact that defendant was penniless before the homicide, but in funds immediately thereafter, is a relevant circumstance which may be shown in evidence.³² In short any evidence legitimately tending to prove that robbery was the motive of

See also infra, VIII, B, 8, d, (vii).

Payments by defendant before homicide.—Where it is shown that deceased was possessed, just before his death, of a considerable sum of money, it is competent for the prosecution to prove payments of money by the prisoner just before, as well as after, the homicide was committed. Clough v. State, 7 Nebr. 320.

the crime is admissible.³³ Evidence in rebuttal of the state's theory is admissible for the defense.³⁴

h. Obtainment of Property by Grant, Devise, or Descent. Evidence of the fact that defendant was an heir of deceased and would come into the possession of property on his death is admissible as showing a motive for the commission of the crime.³⁵ Evidence of a will made by decedent in favor of defendant is admissible,³⁶ provided the latter had knowledge thereof prior to the homicide.³⁷ So also the business and social relations between defendant and deceased, not only just about the time of the murder, but also for a reasonable time before, are competent evidence as having a direct tendency to show a motive on the part of the prisoner for the commission of the crime charged.³⁸ Defendant may show in rebuttal declarations of deceased to establish a gift to him of the property of which he was found in possession.³⁹

i. Obtainment of Life Insurance. On the trial of an indictment for murder, evidence tending to show that the motive of the murder was to obtain the proceeds of policies of insurance on the life of the deceased is admissible;⁴⁰ but to

33. See cases cited infra, this note.

Proposition by defendant to rob another.— Upon a trial for murder, where the only incentive to the act appears to have been robbery, it is competent to show that defendant, a week or ten days prior to the homicide, proposed to a witness to rob an old man and woman who lived on the edge of the town, and who had money "piled up." Stafford v. State, 55 Ga. 591.

Presence of defendant near deceased's premises.— Evidence that defendant was seen in the shrubbery adjoining the deceased's premises a few days before the homicide is admissible to prove that robbery was the motive for the murder. State v. Craemer, 12 Wash. 217, 40 Pac. 944.

Amount of defendant's bank-account.— Where the state's theory in a prosecution for homicide is that defendant killed deceased in order to get possession of certain papers evidencing an indebtedness, without making payment, evidence respecting the amount of defendant's bank-account at the time is admissible. State v. Mortensen, 26 Utah 312, 73 Pac. 562, 633.

Evidence that deceased was impecunious immediately prior to the homicide may be shown in rebuttal (Lancaster v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1895) 31 S. W. 515) but not that he was so at a period long before the murder (Lancaster v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 16, 35 S. W. 165).

Williamson*, 106 Mo. 162, 17 S. W. 172 (holding that evidence that a son of deceased was killed about the same time, near the farm where defendant was working for deceased, is admissible, where it appears that after the killing defendant had property belonging to the son, a forged lease of the farm from him, and a forged bill of sale from deceased, since such evidence, although of a different offense, tends to show a motive for the killing); Marion v. State, 20 Nebr. 233, 29 N. W. 911, 57 Am. Rep. 825; Clough v. State, 7 Nebr. 320; People v. Buchanan, 145 N. Y. 1, 39 N. E. 846 (holding that a deed from the wife to the husband, made a few days after their marriage, and a deed of the same land from the husband to a third person, made after his wife's death, are admissible on the question of motive; the court saying that the deed made a few days after marriage showed defendant's desire to obtain the property, while the deed after death tended to show the realization and consummation of defendant's scheme. The evidence is relevant to show that the formed intention to be possessed of the estate of his deceased wife was accomplished by securing the fruits of his crime).

render evidence of such insurance admissible it must be shown that defendant had knowledge of its existence.⁴¹

7. THREATS, PREPARATIONS, AND PREVIOUS ATTEMPTS — a. Threats by Accused —

(1) IN GENERAL. On a trial for murder, previous threats by defendant to kill the deceased may be shown.⁴² The fact that the threats were made a considerable time before the homicide affects their weight and not their admissibility.⁴³

Medical examination sheets and certificates, applications for insurance, notes for premiums, and a will naming defendant as beneficiary in an insurance policy, may all properly be admitted, under the state's theory that defendant applied for insurance and executed a will in favor of his brother to induce him to do the same for defendant. State v. Coleman, 17 S. D. 594, 98 N. W. 175.

Evidence of various applications for insurance, although in some cases resulting in rejection of the risk, is admissible, all of them being made practically at the same time and forming part of one transaction (Reg. v. Hammond, 29 Ont. 211), but evidence of a previous attempt by the prisoner to insure another person for his own benefit cannot be given in evidence against him (Reg. v. Hendershott, 26 Ont. 678).

In the absence of a conspiracy between defendant and the wife of deceased, or that the latter had instigated the killing, the state cannot show that the deceased carried a life policy in which his wife was beneficiary. Barry v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 302, 39 S. W. 692.

Braggadocio.—Where, on a murder trial, there is testimony that defendant, who had been drinking, threatened to knock down three men and kill one, it is error to exclude the part relating to knocking down, since the threat, as a whole, might be braggadocio. People v. Curtis, 52 Mich. 616, 18 N. W. 385.

Where defendant unequivocally denies threats attributed to him by a witness, it is not error to refuse to permit him to state that, if he used such expression, he had no reference to deceased. State v. Harlan, 130 Mo. 381, 32 S. W. 997.

There is no particular limit as to the time anterior to a homicide when evidence of threats made by defendant against deceased will be excluded, the admissibility of such evidence depending on the circumstances of the case. U. S. v. Neverson, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 152; State v. Campbell, 35 S. C. 28, 14 S. E. 292.

Long-continued animosity and ill-will are better evidence of a state of mind which

Such evidence of course is subject to rebuttal by defendant by disproving or explaining the threats or by showing reconciliation, etc.⁴⁴

(ii) INDEFINITE, IMPERSONAL, AND CONDITIONAL THREATS. A threat to kill or injure someone, not definitely designated, is admissible in evidence,⁴⁵ where other facts adduced give individuation to it;⁴⁶ but general threats not shown to have any reference to the deceased cannot be proved.⁴⁷ So also words uttered under such circumstances as prima facie to import a threat are admissible.⁴⁸ The fact that the threat made was conditional⁴⁹ or was immediately retracted⁵⁰ does not affect its admissibility.

(iii) THREATS AGAINST A CLASS. Threats made by defendant against a class to which deceased belonged, and prima facie referable to deceased, although would ripen into deliberate murder than the hasty ebullition of passion. Murder is done on premeditation, and the motives for such an act are not the less powerful because they are the result of ill-feeling entertained for years. Jefferds v. People, 5 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 522.

44. State v. Cross, 68 Iowa 180, 26 N. W. 62 (holding that where a witness has testified to threats made by the accused, and the accused has denied such threats, and detailed the conversation between himself and the witness, such witness may be recalled to contradict his statement); Petty v. State, 83 Miss. 260, 35 So. 213 (holding that on trial of defendant for murder of his wife, the state having shown that there had been trouble between them, and that he had threatened to kill her unless she returned to him, he should be allowed to prove that he had made up with her, and that she was to have come back to him); State v. Duncan, 28 N. C. 236 (holding that in order to rebut the presumption arising from evidence of threats by the prisoner against the deceased, it is not admissible to show that the prisoner is a man of violent passions and in the habit of using threatening language).

State*, 110 Ala. 9, 20 So. 450 (holding that evidence that in a difficulty between the same persons earlier in the day of the assault, defendant said to the person thereafter assaulted, "I will see you later," is admissible); Wilson v. State, 62 Ala. 6 (holding that a remark of defendant to a witness on seeing deceased shortly before the killing, "There is a man I cannot get along with," although of little weight of itself, is relevant and admissible); White v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 625, 25 S. W. 784 (holding that evidence that, a week before the homicide, defendant said to a third person that he would "fix" deceased, is admissible); Frizzell v. State, 30 Tex. App. 42, 16 S. W. 751 (holding that on the trial of a man for the murder of his wife, testimony that some months prior to the killing he stated that if she did not live with him she should not live with any one else is competent).

Explanation of threat.—Where it appeared that, in an altercation over certain rights of property, defendant had threatened to "take the law into his own hands," evidence that defendant had been licensed to practise as an attorney is admissible in order to explain the threat as meaning merely that the defendant could manage his own case. *Haynes v. his name is not mentioned, are admissible against defendant.⁵¹ Thus threats against policemen,⁵² persons of a certain nationality,⁵³ the members of the family,⁵⁴ or any persons visiting a certain woman⁵⁵ are admissible, where deceased was a member of the class referred to.⁵⁶

b. Threats By or Against Third Persons. Threats against a person other than deceased are only admissible under circumstances which show some connection with the injury inflicted on deceased.⁵⁷ Threats by third persons, entirely isolated from the transaction in question and tending in no way to elucidate any material act in the case, are inadmissible.⁵⁸ But if they are part of the res gestæ, or form links in a chain of evidence connecting with the crime itself, they are admissible both in favor of and against defendant.⁵⁹

c. Threats by Person Killed or Assaulted.⁶⁰ Threats by the deceased against the accused are admissible as part of the res gestæ when they were made at the time of the act which they are supposed to characterize, and so harmonize with it as to constitute one transaction.⁶¹ Whether or not such threats were communicated to defendant is immaterial.⁶²

d. Preparations. A conversation between defendant and another tending to show that at the time of the conversation defendant contemplated the commission of the crime is admissible,⁶³ provided the time of such conversation is not too remote.⁶⁴ So also it is proper to show that shortly before the killing defend-

Where the existence of a conspiracy is proved, the threats by one of the conspirators, made in the presence and hearing of all a few hours before the killing of deceased by them, are admissible, although the witness is unable to state which one of them made the threats (State v. Perry, 16 La. Ann. 444; Mask v. State, 32 Miss. 405); but where there is no evidence tending to show a conspiracy, or any concert of feelings or action prior to the conflict resulting in the murder, threats by a third person are not admissible (State v. Weaver, 57 Iowa 730, 11 N. W. 675; State v. Laque, 41 La. Ann. 1070, 6 So. 787).

App. 576 (holding that whether the threats by deceased against defendant were made seriously or not is immaterial, if deceased did that which justified a reasonable belief on defendant's part that deceased intended to execute his threats).

Threats by deceased against defendant's brother are properly excluded. Drake v. State, 5 Tex. App. 649.

Conspiracy.—On a trial for homicide, where defendant claimed that a conspiracy existed between deceased and two others to kill him, evidence that one of the persons alleged to be in the conspiracy remarked the evening before the killing that defendant would be killed before the next night was properly excluded as not tending to show a conspiracy so far as deceased was concerned. *Holly v. ant purchased, borrowed, or otherwise possessed himself of the means of committing the crime.⁶⁵ In some jurisdictions it is held that defendant should be permitted to testify in rebuttal as to how he happened to be carrying the weapon with which the crime was committed.⁶⁶ In others such evidence is held irrelevant and inadmissible.⁶⁷ So also in some states he is entitled to prove remarks made by him at the time the weapon was purchased,⁶⁸ while in others he is not.⁶⁹

e. Previous Attempts. Evidence of previous attempts by accused to kill deceased is admissible as showing the probability of his having committed the crime in question.⁷⁰

8. ATTENDANT CIRCUMSTANCES — a. Res Gestæ Generally. The res gestæ in cases of homicide are the surrounding facts of the transaction, explanatory of the act, showing a motive for acting,⁷¹ or standing in a causal relation to the Hobbs*, 140 Mass. 443, 5 N. E. 158; State v. Cole, 94 N. C. 958; McLean v. State, 1 Tenn. Cas. 478.

Evidence that defendant was armed two weeks before the homicide with weapons similar to those with which he armed himself on the night of the homicide is admissible together with his declarations implying that he then anticipated some such occasion as actually arose when the homicide was committed, and on which occasion a weapon similar to one previously seen on his person was actually used in inflicting the mortal wound. Burgess v. State, 93 Ga. 304, 20 S. E. 331.

Evidence that defendant practised shooting at a mark before the murder is competent. People v. McGuire, 135 N. Y. 639, 32 N. E. 146.

Conspiracy.—Testimony that the person from whom defendant procured the pistol with which the killing was done got it from witness in a clandestine manner, there being no evidence of a conspiracy between defendant and such person, is inadmissible. Moore v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 526, 72 S. W. 595. On a prosecution for murder, where the theory of the prosecution was that defendant had conspired with the one who did the killing, evidence that defendant went after a gun and gave it to the one who did the killing a short time before the crime was competent as showing an aiding and abetting, aside from any previously formed design or conspiracy, or independent of evidence of a previous conspiracy between the parties. Collins v. State, 138 Ala. 57, 34 So. 993.

68. Taliaferro v. State, 40 Tex. 523, holding such remarks to be part of the res gestæ.

69. State v. Holcomb, 86 Mo. 371, holding that such evidence is not part of the res gestæ, and to admit it would be to open wide the door to defendant to make evidence for himself.

70. Shaw v. State, 60 Ga. 246; Taylor v. Com., 90 Va. 109, 17 S. E. 812, holding that declarations of accused concerning a previous shooting at the deceased, showing that he had done it himself or procured it to be done, renders evidence of the fact of the shooting admissible. See also People v. Blake, 1 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 272, 1 City Hall Rec. 99, holding that on trial of a husband for the murder of his wife by stabbing, the prosecution cannot show that a scar near the fatal wound was occasioned by a stab previously inflicted by the prisoner, unless it is shown to have been followed by a continuous quarrel, so as to make the whole one entire transaction.

71. Carr v. State, 43 Ark. 99. See also CRIMINAL LAW; EVIDENCE.

Circumstances which are contemporaneous with the main fact under consideration or so nearly related to it as to illustrate its character and the state of mind, sentiments, or dispositions of the actors are parts of the res gestæ, and the same is true of declarations of a like character which are regarded as verbal facts indicating a present purpose and intention, and are therefore admitted in proof like any other material facts. Carr v. State, 43 Ark. 99.

Where two persons agree to fight with deadly weapons, and by agreement separate to arm themselves, both intending to return presently and begin the combat, and they do in fact arm themselves and meet, and actually fight with the weapons thus prepared, and one of them is slain by the other, the res gestæ of the transaction comprehend all pertinent acts and declarations of the parties, either or both, which took place in the interval between the agreement to fight crime.⁷² The res gestæ consist of circumstances or declarations made admissible in evidence by reason of their connection with the particular fact under investigation,⁷³ and the test is, whether the fact or circumstance put in evidence is so connected with the main fact under consideration as to illustrate its character, to further its object, or to form in conjunction with it one continuous transaction.⁷⁴ They are proper to be submitted to the jury provided they can be established by competent means, sanctioned by the law, and afford any fair presumption or inference as to the question in dispute.⁷⁵

b. Antecedent Circumstances—(1) IN GENERAL. Evidence is admissible of matters occurring before the homicide which legitimately tend to show defendant's animus toward deceased,⁷⁶ to show motive,⁷⁷ malice,⁷⁸ or premeditation⁷⁹ on the part and the consummation of the homicide, such interval being very brief; and this is true, although they meet, not at the place appointed but near by, and although the meeting was later than the time contemplated. Cox v. State, 64 Ga. 374, 37 Am. Rep. 76.

Where there is a considerable interval of time, as half an hour, intervening between the declarations of a witness or a party and the commission of a criminal act, the declarations cannot be considered as part of the res gestæ. Wood v. State, 92 Ind. 269.

75. Carr v. State, 43 Ark. 99; State v. Swain, 68 Mo. 605.

Evidence of the whole transaction leading up to the homicide is admissible. Ryan v. State, 100 Ala. 105, 14 So. 766; Jordan v. State, 81 Ala. 20, 1 So. 577; State v. McCahill, 72 Iowa 111, 30 N. W. 553, 33 N. W. 599; Bowlin v. Com., 34 S. W. 709, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1319; State v. Donelon, 45 La. Ann. 744, 12 So. 922.

Fears of deceased.—Where upon the trial of a husband for the murder of his wife a neighbor has testified that a week before the homicide the wife visited her house bringing an ax and a carving knife and gave them to the witness to take care of, evidence that on handing witness these articles deceased said that her husband always threatened her with them and she felt safer when they were out of the way was admissible. Reg. v. Edwards, 12 Cox C. C. 230.

Possession of poison.—People v. Cuff, 122 Cal. 589, 55 Pac. 407.

Evidence in rebuttal of alleged animus.—Where the theory of the prosecution was that defendant and others went to the place of the difficulty to resist, with violence if necessary, a claim of deceased and others to certain lumber that was there, in pursuance of which the homicide occurred, it was competent for defendant to testify in his own behalf that at the time of the difficulty he did not know of any claim of any person to the lumber. *Boulden v. Evidence as to why purpose not accomplished sooner.—On the separate trial of defendant, indicted with several others for the murder of one with whose family defendants were having trouble over property, it appearing that long before the murder, but subsequent to the beginning of their enmity deceased and his house had been severely injured by missiles exploded by defendant, it is proper to show that after such explosions deceased and his family never went out at night, but kept the house securely locked and slept upstairs, such evidence tending to show, their malice continuing, why defendants had not sooner accomplished their purpose. Jones v. State, 64 Ind. 473.

79. Mann v. State, (Ala. 1902) 32 So. 704.

Circumstances negating premeditation.—Where it appeared that defendant had written a letter to his wife, the deceased, appointing a meeting at a certain place, and the proof on the part of the defense tended to show that he had sought the meeting so that he might persuade his wife to again live with him, while the prosecution claimed that the letter was sent to decoy his wife from the house, defendant then having the intention of killing her, defendant had the right to prove that after the sending of the letter, and about an hour before the homicide, he made arrangements with a magistrate for him to issue, on the afternoon of the same day or the next morning, process to take of defendant, or to explain the conduct of deceased.⁸⁰ Occurrences a few minutes before the homicide which elucidate the subsequent criminal transaction and give it its proper complexion and expression constitute part of the res gestæ and are competent evidence.⁸¹ When defendant denies that he killed deceased, evidence of antecedent circumstances legitimately tending to connect him with the homicide is admissible.⁸² Thus where it is claimed that the deceased was murdered by being poisoned or by other similar means, the prosecution may show that other members of defendant's household, or other persons to whom defendant had access, died from a similar cause or under suspicious circumstances.⁸³ So also the prosecution may show that defendant had tools or implements similar to those with which the homicide was effected.⁸⁴ And where it is claimed that defendant and another person conspired to kill deceased, the acts and declarations of the co-conspirator in furtherance of the principal object and design of the conspiracy may be shown against defendant.⁸⁵ On the other hand defendant, denying the killing, may introduce evidence tending legitimately to the conclu-from the possession of his mother-in-law the clothes of his wife, as such conduct had a tendency to negative the state of mind imputed to him by the prosecution. Schlemmer v. State, 51 N. J. L. 23, 15 Atl. 836.

Roden*, 12 Cox C. C. 630 (holding that upon the trial of a woman for the murder of her infant by suffocation in bed, evidence to prove the previous death of her other children at early ages is admissible, although such evidence does not show the causes from which those children died); Reg. v. Cotton, 12 Cox C. C. 400 (holding that where a woman was charged with the murder of her son by poison, and the defense was that his death resulted from an accidental taking of such poison, evidence to prove that two other children of hers, and a lodger in her house, had died previously to the present charge from the same poison was admissible). Purpose of such evidence.—Such evidence is admissible for the purpose of showing that the death was the result of deliberate and not accidental poisoning, but is not admissible for the purpose of establishing a motive, although the fact that it may tend indirectly to that end is no ground for its exclusion. Reg. v. Flannagan, 15 Cox C. C. 403 [following Reg. v. Geering, 18 L. J. M. C. 215, and disapproving Reg. v. Winslow, 8 Cox C. C. 397].

sion that deceased met or might have met his death at the hands of some person other than defendant;⁸⁶ but the evidence of the guilt of another must relate to and be derived from the facts and circumstances of the killing.⁸⁷ Defendant may also give evidence explaining circumstances relied upon to connect him with the crime.⁸⁸ Evidence of the conduct of defendant shortly before the homicide indicating that he was in a reckless or vicious humor and desired trouble is admissible,⁸⁹ and the prosecution may also show that defendant was armed at the time of such conduct.⁹⁰ Evidence is admissible of antecedent circumstances which tend to throw light on the difficulty in which the homicide occurred,⁹¹ or to show the circumstances under which the killing occurred.⁹² On an issue whether the killing was by lying in wait, evidence that deceased was in the habit of going alone at night along the street on which he was killed is admissible, without showing that accused had knowledge thereof; its weight being for the jury.⁹³ Where the homicide was the result of an altercation the entire transaction leading up to the killing is admissible in evidence against defendant.⁹⁴ The prosecution may give evidence of circumstances immediately preceding the homicide for the purpose of showing the exact time when it occurred.⁹⁵ Where a third person has apparently acted with defendant in the transaction which culminated in the homicide, the acts of such third person shortly before the homicide are admissible in evidence, although such acts took place in defendant's absence.⁹⁶ Where it is

Rep. 1269 (holding that where the theory of the state was that defendant had given deceased whisky containing a poison, to produce an abortion, which had caused her death, it was error not to permit a witness to testify that a few days before the death of deceased he heard her say that she was pregnant, and that she asked him to procure an abortifacient for her, suggesting ergot; that he had refused to do so, but that on her request her brother-in-law had taken some money from her and agreed to get it for her); Territory v. Rehberg, 6 Mont. 467, 13 Pac. 132 (evidence that another person was in the habit of beating and abusing deceased, and as to whether any person was seen abusing deceased before the time prior to which it was shown that defendant had no opportunity to abuse her).

State*, 110 Ala. 63, 20 So. 323 (holding that on a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, in which defendant, as accessory, participated, evidence that the assault grew out of a difficulty immediately preceding it, between the principal and another, which took place in the presence of the party assaulted is admissible); Com. v. Gray, 30 S. W. 1015, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 354; Spivy v. Rodawald, 177 N. Y. 408, 70 N. E. 1.

Valentine sent by defendant.—Where prosecutor accused defendant of sending a scurrilous valentine reflecting on his sister, and in the quarrel ensuing was shot, the valentine is admissible, if there is evidence to show either that defendant wrote it, or, knowing its contents, urged that it be read at the party where it was received. *Kelley v. the theory of the prosecution that defendant got deceased with child and enticed her away from her father's house in order to commit the abortion which resulted in her death, all that he did and said in furtherance of his purpose from the time deceased left her home, and the means employed in the doing and saying is part of the res gestæ and is properly admitted in evidence against him.⁹⁷ Where defendant has treated certain acts and declarations as though they were in fact the acts and declarations of a certain person, such acts and declarations may be introduced in evidence against defendant and treated as the acts and declarations of such person, if they would be competent evidence, if they were in fact his acts and declarations, unless the contrary be shown.⁹⁸ When it is shown that the day before the homicide deceased called defendant's wife a drunken woman and otherwise insulted her, which she immediately communicated to defendant, the prosecution may show that defendant's wife was in fact intoxicated at the time.⁹⁹ On a trial for manslaughter, where it was charged that the killing resulted from a steam-boiler explosion, due to wilful negligence of defendant in leaving the boiler unattended, it was competent, as bearing upon his recklessness, to show that he had been warned that danger would follow his absence from the boiler room.¹ A petition by deceased for the annulment of his marriage to defendant is not competent evidence.² Evidence of circumstances occurring before the homicide which form no part of the res gestæ and do not throw any light upon the actions, animus, or intent of defendant or the circumstances of the killing, or any issues in the case, is of course inadmissible,³ especially where the only legitimate effect thereof would be to excite the sympathies of the jury either for or against deceased or defendant.⁴ Nor, where defendant denies that he killed deceased, can the prosecution introduce evidence of a conspiracy to rob deceased in which defendant is not proved to be implicated.⁵ Where there is no evidence of a conspiracy, it is error to permit a witness to testify that defendant and another purchased cartridges of him the day before the killing, and not to permit the other to explain how he came to be with defendant.⁶ Evidence of antecedent facts which were unknown to defendant and hence could not have influenced his conduct or motives is not admissible.⁷

(ii) PREVIOUS DIFFICULTIES. Evidence of disturbances prior to the killing, and out of which it might have resulted is admissible;⁸ but evidence of a previous difficulty between defendant and a third person with which deceased had no connection, and which was not a part of the transaction in which deceased was killed, is not admissible,⁹ nor is evidence of a difficulty or fight between deceased and defendant which occurred some time before the homicide admissible as part of the res gestæ where the parties had separated and that difficulty had been concluded.¹⁰ Where the deceased was killed by being violently thrown down, evidence of other acts of violence upon the deceased by defendant on the same evening and only a short time before the homicide is admissible.¹¹ On the trial of a husband for the murder of his wife, the state has a right to prove a long course of ill-treatment by the husband toward the wife,¹² and it has been held proper in such case to ask the daughter of deceased and defendant whether her father and mother did not "quarrel."¹³ Evidence of difficulties of defendant with or threats by him against persons other than the deceased is not admissible,¹⁴ unless there is a direct connection between the facts sought to be proved and the homicide, in which case such evidence is admissible.¹⁵

(iii) OTHER OFFENSES. Notwithstanding the general rule excluding evidence of other crimes than the one for which defendant is on trial,¹⁶ evidence of the commission of other offenses by defendant is admissible when it tends to identify him as the slayer of deceased,¹⁷ or where the other offense and the homicide are connected as parts of one entire transaction.¹⁸

(IV) CONSPIRACY. The prosecution may give evidence tending to show a conspiracy between defendant and others who were acting with him at the time of the homicide,¹⁹ and it is competent to prove a conspiracy among third persons to commit the crime, without showing knowledge or concurrence by defendant at that time, if he is afterward, by competent evidence, connected with the conspiracy.²⁰ On the other hand defendant may show that meetings relied upon to show a conspiracy were for a lawful purpose,²¹ and where the prosecution has introduced evidence from which the jury might infer that certain acts of a particular person were done in pursuance of a plan to murder deceased, defendant may in rebuttal introduce evidence tending to show that such acts were done in good faith and without collusion with defendant.²²

(V) REMOteness. Evidence of matters antecedent to the homicide but so remote in point of time as to have no legitimate bearing on the circumstances of the homicide or the points at issue on the trial is not admissible.²³

declarations and the homicide form parts of one continuous transaction the declarations are admissible, although not shown to have any immediate connection with the crime.²⁶ Declarations of defendant a few minutes before the homicide showing his intention to attack or kill deceased are admissible as part of the res gestæ,²⁷ and in order to connect defendant with the homicide it may be shown that shortly before the time thereof he stated that deceased was in such a state of health that he was liable to die at any time.²⁸ Threats of defendant against the life of deceased are admissible,²⁹ and evidence that defendant on several occasions had used language expressing hostility to and dislike of deceased has been held admissible, although the language proved did not amount to threats;³⁰ but a threat a considerable time before the homicide may be inadmissible on the ground of remoteness.³¹ The prosecution cannot show antecedent declarations of defendant not so connected with the killing as to form part of the res gestæ,³² and evidence of declarations of defendant, having no apparent connection with the homicide, but tending merely to damage him in the estimation of the jury, is not admissible.³³ Declarations of defendant some time before the homicide and not connected with the transaction in which the killing occurred, but amounting merely to statements in his own favor, are not part of the res gestæ and are not admissible on his behalf;³⁴ but declarations of defendant upon starting out for the place of the fatal encounter showing that he did not anticipate a hostile meeting are admissible.³⁵ Declarations of defendant made a considerable time before the killing cannot be made evidence to explain his carrying arms on the day of the killing.³⁶

Expression of opinion.—A statement by a third person, as deceased started to return to the place where defendant was, and where he had just previously grossly insulted defendant, that "hell's going to be to pay" is inadmissible in evidence on behalf of defendant, for deceased's purpose in returning cannot be shown by evidence of witness' declarations in the premises expressed in this ambiguous manner. *Allen v. Assault with weapon other than that specified in indictment.—Where the indictment for assault with intent to murder charged it as made with certain instruments other than an ax-handle, it was not error to admit evidence of an assault with an ax-handle as a part of the res gestæ, where the jury were explicitly instructed that they could convict only for an assault with the instruments action is competent,⁴² and any chain of facts or circumstances continuous in their nature leading up to and eventuating in the homicide may be shown.⁴³ Evidence is admissible to show the respective positions of the parties at the time of the homicide,⁴⁴ who were present at the time,⁴⁵ what was said⁴⁶ and done,⁴⁷ the actions of a third person who acted in concert with defendant,⁴⁸ and all facts connected with the transaction and so related as to form part of the res gestæ.⁴⁹ The drunkenness⁵⁰ and disorderly conduct of defendant at the time of the crime⁵¹ may be shown. Evidence of circumstances tending to elucidate the motives and acts of the parties is admissible.⁵² Where defendant and another were acting in concert at the time of the homicide, evidence of the acts and words of either is admissible as part of the res gestæ.⁵³ Evidence of the nature of the blow or of the wound inflicted is admissible,⁵⁴ as is also evidence to show that defendant had the means

Where the homicide was in an affray, all the circumstances of the quarrel, including those immediately preceding the killing, are admissible. Robinson v. State, 118 Ga. 198, 44 S. E. 985. Where the homicide was the result of a quarrel which occupied only a brief space of time, it is error to allow the state to give only the immediate facts of the killing and to refuse to allow defendant, on cross-examination, to ask witnesses as to the origin of the difficulty. *Shumate v. of committing one of the acts which attended and may have induced the homicide.⁵⁵ Evidence of opprobrious epithets applied to defendant by the deceased at the time of the commission of the homicide is admissible.⁵⁶ Evidence of the character of the house where the homicide occurred may be admissible.⁵⁷ Articles of clothing worn by deceased at the time of the homicide are admissible in evidence if properly identified.⁵⁸ Where, on the trial of one charged as accomplice in a murder, a letter from defendant to deceased, asking him to meet him at the time and place of the killing, is admitted, it is error to exclude evidence that defendant wished to meet deceased to settle a controversy between the latter and defendant's accomplice.⁵⁹ Where defendant denies the killing, evidence of circumstances pointing to him as the guilty party is admissible.⁶⁰ Defendant may introduce evidence to explain his possession of poison of the kind with which it is claimed the crime was committed.⁶¹ Evidence of circumstances which, although contemporaneous with the homicide, are not relevant to any issue in the case and have no bearing on or connection with the killing is not admissible.⁶²

(II) PHYSICAL CONDITIONS. It is proper to prove the physical conditions existing in the vicinity of the place where the homicide was committed at the time of its commission, where they tend to throw light upon the surrounding circumstances and illustrate the real nature of the transaction.⁶³ Thus it may be

is competent as bearing on his guilt or innocence. Terry v. State, 118 Ala. 79, 23 So. 776.

Precautions of another.—Where the theory of the defense on an indictment for murder was that the death of deceased was caused by the communication of smallpox virus by a medical man who attended him, and one of the witnesses for the defense explained how the contagion could be guarded against, and the medical man had not in his examination in chief or cross-examination been asked anything on this subject, he was properly allowed to be called in reply, to state what precautions had been taken by him to guard against the infection. *Reg. v. shown that the place where the killing occurred was barricaded as for defense against attack,⁶⁴ and evidence is admissible to show the respective positions of defendant and deceased at the time of the killing,⁶⁵ the condition of deceased's body⁶⁶ and clothing,⁶⁷ the position in which his body was found,⁶⁸ and the location of deceased's wound or wounds.⁶⁹ Where deceased and another were assaulted at the same time the latter may testify as to the nature and character of the wounds inflicted on him.⁷⁰ Evidence of the presence of arsenic in the stomach of one who drank in company with deceased some liquor given them by defendant is admissible.⁷¹ Evidence of physical conditions not throwing light on any issues in the case is not admissible.⁷²

(iii) MENTAL CONDITIONS. Evidence is admissible to show the mental condition of defendant⁷³ or deceased⁷⁴ at the time of the fatal encounter.

(iv) OTHER OFFENSES. Evidence of other criminal acts done by defendant at the time of the homicide is admissible, where such acts are part of the res gestæ and illustrate the real nature of the transaction,⁷⁵ tend to show that deceased was actually slain by violence,⁷⁶ or point to defendant as the perpetrator of the deed.⁷⁷

Condition of body of another victim.—On a trial for the murder of one of two traveling companions whose bodies were found about a mile apart, evidence of the condition in which the body of the other was found is admissible, there being proof that both were murdered in the same onset. Fernandez v. State, 4 Tex. App. 419. See also People v. Coughlin, 13 Utah 58, 44 Pac. 94.

Identification of body of another victim.—Where another dead body was found several miles from that of deceased, evidence tending to identify it as that of a traveling companion of said deceased, who was missing, was competent as tending to show the motive, knowledge, and intent of defendant, and as a circumstance in the res gestæ. *Morris v. In order that defendant's declarations may be part of the res gestæ they must have been made at the time the act was done which they are supposed to characterize, and must be calculated to unfold the quality of the facts which they were intended to explain, and so to harmonize with them as obviously to constitute but one transaction. State v. Evans, 65 Mo. 574. See also Newcomb v. State, 37 Miss. 383.

Corroboration of declaration of deceased.—Where a declaration of deceased that he had severely whipped his daughter for going with accused was material and admissible as part of the res gestæ, it was error to exclude the daughter's testimony in corroboration. Turner v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 46 S. W. 830.

Declarations of persons acting with prosecutor.—Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, the evidence tended to show that defendant was assaulted by the injured party and several others, declarations of these persons made at the time of the assault, illustrative of its object and motive, were admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ. People v. Roach, 17 Cal. 297.

Precise coincidence in point of time not necessary.—In order to constitute declarations of deceased a part of the res gestæ in a trial for murder, it is not necessary that they should have been precisely coincident in point of time with the principal fact. If they sprang out of the principal fact, tended to explain it, were voluntary and spontaneous, and were made at a time so near as to preclude the idea of deliberate design, they may be regarded as contemporaneous and are admissible as evidence. *Boothe v. d. Subsequent Circumstances—(i) IN GENERAL. Circumstances occurring subsequent to the homicide may be admissible when they form part of the res gestæ and throw light upon the transaction,⁸⁴ or are of such a character as to point to defendant as the person through whose agency deceased came to his death.⁸⁵ Evidence is admissible of the demeanor and conduct,⁸⁶ appearance,⁸⁷ and acts of defendant shortly after the homicide,⁸⁸ such as acts evidencing a desire to elude discovery⁸⁹ or to conceal the crime or the evidence of it,⁹⁰ acts showing malice toward deceased⁹¹ or a motive for taking his life⁹² or indifference to his

Hearsay.—Exclamations of bystanders on the spot where a murder has been committed expressing the opinion that defendant ought to be hung are hearsay, and not admissible to show that he was accused of the crime, and by his silence assented to the accusation. *Kaelin v. Question as to ordinary demeanor.—Where it appeared that defendant had visited a witness, it was proper to ask the witness as to the temperament of defendant, if pleasant, talkative, or otherwise, it appearing that it was proposed to follow the question by showing that defendant's demeanor on the visit made by him after the homicide was different from that usual to him, and the questions going only to the witness' actual knowledge. People v. Leung Oek, 141 Cal. 323, 74 Pac. 986.

Evidence as to the conduct and appearance of defendant's wife after the homicide is irrelevant. People v. Wood, 126 N. Y. 249, 27 N. E. 362. Compare Com. v. Twitchell, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 551.

Conduct of third person.—The fact that defendant's father appeared to be confused and surprised in defendant's presence, when he was first informed that deceased's wife, whom the murderers supposed they had also killed, was alive, is admissible in evidence. State v. Adair, 66 N. C. 298.

fate,⁹³ or acts of communication with a person known to have been concerned in the crime.⁹⁴ The acts of an accomplice of defendant in connection with the homicide may be shown.⁹⁵ Where murder by poison is charged the subsequent death of other persons to whom defendant had access under like circumstances and with similar symptoms to deceased may be shown.⁹⁶ Evidence of circumstances subsequent to the homicide which are not part of the res gestæ and throw no light on the circumstances of the killing or any of the issues of the case is not admissible.⁹⁷

(II) PHYSICAL CONDITIONS. Physical conditions in many cases throw great light on the circumstances of the homicide or the probability of defendant's guilt or innocence, and in such case evidence of such conditions is admissible.⁹⁸ Thus evidence is admissible to show the physical condition of defendant soon after the

with deceased's wife which existed before killing.

93. Perry v. State, 110 Ga. 234, 36 S. E. 781, holding that evidence that shortly after the mortal wound was inflicted defendant proposed to kill the doctor who was on his way to attend deceased, and that he threatened to kill the person who protested against his killing the doctor, is admissible.

94. Darlington v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 333, 50 S. W. 375, evidence that defendant was seen writing a letter to such person.

95. Jenkins v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 173, 75 S. W. 312, holding that it was proper for the state to show the movements of an accomplice, who turned state's evidence, in connection with the homicide, up to and including his arrest. See also CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 435 et seq.

96. Reg. v. Heesom, 14 Cox C. C. 40, to show that the poisoning was not accidental.

Motive for poisoning others.—Where it is proved that a motive for causing the death of deceased might exist, by reason of the fact of defendant having insured the life of deceased in a benefit insurance society, evidence may be given that there might be an equal motive for the deaths of the other persons by showing that they also were each of them insured by defendant in the same or kindred societies. *Reg. v. E. 157 (holding that there being circumstances to show that defendant, charged with the murder of his wife, after committing the murder went into a woodshed and threw articles from the window thereof, evidence of the finding thereafter of mammalian blood on the window sill is admissible); State v. Harris, 45 La. Ann. 842, 13 So. 199, 40 Am. St. Rep. 259 (holding that where it appears that in the conflict which resulted in the homicide the ear of deceased was torn off by defendant, it is proper to show the finding of the severed ear on the ground where the conflict took place fifteen or twenty minutes thereafter); Rocha v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 169, 63 S. W. 1018 (holding that evidence that deceased's house was found on fire early in the morning after the killing, all the doors being locked, the gate fastened with wire, so that it had to be broken, and oil on the floor, is admissible, although defendant is not shown to have set the fire).

homicide,⁹⁹ or the presence of blood or blood-stains on his person, clothing, or possessions.¹ The position of the body of deceased when found may be admissible to rebut defendant's theory of the killing,² and where defendant denies the killing it is proper to bring out all evidence as to the condition of deceased when found.³ The finding near the place of the killing or where the body was found of articles belonging to defendant has a tendency to show his guilt and is admissible for that purpose.⁴ Evidence of physical conditions is not admissible unless they are connected with the crime.⁵

(iii) MENTAL CONDITIONS. The evidence of the mental condition of defendant after the homicide is admissible.⁶

(iv) OTHER OFFENSES. Evidence of other offenses committed by defendant subsequent to the time of the homicide for which he is on trial is admissible where such offenses form part of the res gestæ or throw light upon the circumstances of the homicide,⁷ but evidence of a subsequent criminal offense having no apparent connection with the homicide is not admissible.⁸

(v) THREATS. Threats made by defendant after the homicide may be shown when they are part of the res gestæ, throw light upon the motive of defendant or the circumstances of the killing, or indicate a consciousness of guilt and fear of discovery on the part of defendant;⁹ but otherwise subsequent threats are not admissible.¹⁰

(vi) POSSESSION OF WEAPONS AND OTHER OBJECTS. Evidence is admissible to show that after the homicide defendant had in his possession a weapon similar

State*, 126 Ala. 44, 28 So. 617 (evidence that on the day deceased's body was found in a ditch witness saw defendant come out of the ditch and that there were spots of blood on the front and arm of his coat); People v. Neufeld, 165 N. Y. 43, 58 N. E. 786, 15 N. Y. Cr. 178 (holding that it was not error to overrule defendant's objection to the admission in evidence of a dark suit of clothes belonging to him, on which were blood-stains, on the ground that there was no direct evidence of defendant's having worn the clothes on the day of the murder, where witnesses testified that he wore a dark suit that day, since it was competent, and the absence of direct evidence affected its weight only, which was for the jury); Barbour v. Com., 80 Va. 287 (holding that evidence that defendant's hands and knife, soon after the killing, were smeared with blood, is admissible, without proof of a chemical analysis of the substance on the hands and knife).

Evidence as to articles not produced.—It was error to admit evidence relative to a pair of overalls in the possession of the state said to have been found near accused's charcoal kiln after the crime and to bear blood-stains and to have the appearance of having been washed, where the overalls were not produced, or their non-production explained. Johnson v. State, 80 Miss. 798, 32 So. 49.

Articles in possession of accomplice.—Where there is evidence that a certain person assisted defendant in the murder, evidence that a damp and bloody shirt and towel were taken from his possession the day after the crime is admissible. Thompson v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 217, 26 S. W. 198.

10. Holt v. Com., 13 S. W. 71, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 773, holding that where the evidence tends to show a killing in self-defense, a statement made by defendant about an hour after to that with which deceased was killed,¹¹ or that such a weapon was found on his premises,¹² or in a place where he was after the homicide.¹³ Defendant's possession of other objects tending to show his guilt is also admissible.¹⁴ On the other hand he should be allowed to explain his possession of such objects.¹⁵ Defendant may also rebut evidence tending to trace to his possession the weapon with which the killing was done.¹⁶ Where, soon after the alleged killing, defendant appeared at the police station with a revolver, and an officer testified that four of the chambers contained empty shells, it was not error to admit evidence that witness heard a report of firearms, four in number, about the time and in the direction of the place where deceased was killed.¹⁷ The admission of evidence on a prosecution for assault with intent to kill that when arrested, nearly a month after the assault, defendant had deadly weapons on his person is prejudicial error.¹⁸

(vii) POSSESSION OF MONEY OR PROPERTY OF DECEASED. Where it is claimed that deceased was robbed as well as murdered, evidence is admissible to show that after the homicide defendant or his confederate was in possession of property of deceased,¹⁹ or of property similar to that which deceased had and of which he was robbed,²⁰ or of money of a kind and denomination similar to that which deceased was known to have had;²¹ and conversely, where defendant had no money before the murder, but had money afterward, it may be shown that deceased had money of a similar kind and denomination which was not found on his body.²² Evidence that defendant after the homicide had money when he had previously had little or none is admissible even though there be no identification.²³

the killing, and while under arrest, that he would kill any man "for a dollar" is irrelevant.

Evidence not admissible.—Where a piece of paper was found near the body of deceased, similar to paper used by defendant in wadding his gun, and a merchant in the vicinity, where people of the neighborhood made their purchases, used like paper for wrapping paper, testimony that similar paper was found in the house of one jointly indicted with defendant, together with a rope supposed to have been used in carrying away the body of deceased, and that the house was newly scrubbed was inadmissible without connecting defendant with the house or the other defendant. *McBride v. Failure to deny that property was deceased's.—It is not error to allow a witness to testify that defendant after his arrest was brought in the presence of the deceased, then lying wounded, who stated that a purse found on defendant was deceased's, and that defendant neither affirmed nor denied the statement. People v. Young, 108 Cal. 8, 41 Pac. 281.

Lapse of time.—Evidence that the person alleged to have been murdered carried two watches a short time before the murder, together with evidence that one of the watches was seen in the prisoner's possession a few months after, was not incompetent because of the lapse of time, as the objection went only to its weight. *Lindsay v. Evidence of specific expenditures in the line of riotous living after the homicide is admissible where it is offered in connection with evidence that defendant had no money prior to the homicide. State v. Magers, 36 Oreg. 38, 58 Pac. 892.

(viii) FLIGHT, AVOIDANCE OF ARREST, OR ESCAPE. Evidence of the flight of defendant after the homicide is admissible, as this tends to show his state of mind and indicates a consciousness of guilt,²⁴ and the incidents of the flight may be shown when relevant.²⁵ So also evidence of defendant's resistance to arrest,²⁶ or attempt to escape after he was arrested for the homicide is admissible.²⁷ Defendant should be allowed to account for his flight,²⁸ and where the prosecution relies on certain matters to show flight and evasion of arrest defendant may show that he was ready to surrender.²⁹

(ix) DECLARATIONS—(A) Of Defendant. Declarations of defendant after the killing are admissible where they form part of the res gestæ,³⁰ and were generated

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," § 365. And see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 395 et seq.

Identification of defendant as person who fled see Deal v. State, 136 Ala. 52, 34 So. 23.

Motions of third person.—Where a person present at the homicide motioned to defendant with a stick, as if indicating flight, being in front of him at the time, and defendant thereupon fled, evidence of the making of such motion is admissible. Doyal v. State, 70 Ga. 134.

Even where the homicide is admitted, evidence of flight is admissible in connection with other circumstances and facts immediately connected with the homicide, to enable the jury to determine the condition of defendant's mind at the time of flight and the degree of the crime charged. People v. Flannelly, 128 Cal. 83, 60 Pac. 670; State v. Lyons, 7 Ida. 530, 64 Pac. 236.

Evidence supporting theory of flight.—Where the homicide occurred in a highway in a sparsely settled country, and the theory of the prosecution was that defendant had traveled a certain road about two miles from the scene of the homicide in his flight immediately thereafter, and had used a rifle of a certain caliber, it was not error for the court to admit in evidence a cartridge of that caliber found in the highway two miles from the scene of the homicide, about two weeks from the date of the killing. Horn v. State, 12 Wyo. 80, 73 Pac. 705.

25. Ford v. State, 129 Ala. 16, 30 So. 27; Patterson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 60 S. W. 557, refusal to surrender gun. See also State v. Batson, 108 La. 479, 32 So. 478, holding that an instrument purporting to have been written by defendant and found in the pocket of a vest shown to have been left by him upon the occasion of his flight from the town where the murder was committed, which instrument showed an intention or desire of defendant to take his own life, was admissible in evidence without proof of the handwriting or signature.

26. People v. Flannelly, 128 Cal. 83, 60 Pac. 670, although the plea is self-defense and not a denial of the killing. See CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 396.

27. Burris v. State, 38 Ark. 221; Hittner v. State, 19 Ind. 48; State v. Dufour, 31 La. Ann. 804; State v. Morgan, 22 Utah 162, 61 Pac. 527. See CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 396.

Forfeiture of bail-bond.—In Kentucky it has been held that evidence that after the indictment was found against defendant he forfeited his bail-bond and eluded arrest for more than two years was properly rejected. Morgan v. Com., 14 Bush (Ky.) 106.

28. Batten v. State, 80 Ind. 394 (holding that it is proper for defendant to account for his flight by showing the manner of the persons present toward him, and that they followed and threatened him with violence); State v. Barham, 82 Mo. 67 (holding that to rebut the presumption of guilt arising from flight defendant has a right to show that his life was threatened by relatives of deceased; and in such case it is error to refuse evidence of the desperate and dangerous character of the persons making the threats). Compare People v. Ah Choy, 1 Ida. 317, holding that where it was clearly proved that defendant struck the blow from which the death resulted, he could not be heard to complain that his explanation of his motive in running away was not received in evidence, as such evidence could have no bearing upon the case. See also CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 396.

Statements of defendant explaining the reason for his flight are not admissible as part of the res gestæ, when made to persons having nothing to do with the case several weeks after his flight, and a considerable time before his arrest. Hester v. Com., 85 Pa. St. 139. See also Pharr v. State, 9 Tex. App. 129, 10 Tex. App. 485.

29. Cole v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 225, 75 S. W. 527, holding that evidence that defendant told witness that if he saw the officers looking for him to tell them he would return and give himself up; that afterward he tried to go to a certain town to surrender, and went to a certain point, where he remained all night, being unable to go further owing to high water, etc., was admissible.

by an excited feeling which extended without break or let-down from the moment of the event they illustrate until the time they were made.³¹ Defendant's declarations concerning the homicide at the time of its discovery have also been held admissible.³² Declarations of defendant made shortly after the homicide may be admitted to show malice,³³ and his declarations tending to show that the defense set up was fabrication and an afterthought are admissible.³⁴ Evidence of declarations of defendant tending to support the theory that he was the person who killed deceased is admissible,³⁵ as are also declarations showing apprehension on his own account because of deceased's condition.³⁶ Declarations of defendant showing an attempt to suppress evidence and intimidate a witness are admissible.³⁷ But declarations of defendant after the homicide are not admissible where they are not part of the res gestæ,³⁸ but were made a considerable time after the homicide,³⁹ and were in the nature of a narrative of past transactions,⁴⁰ especially where

(c) Of Third Persons. Declarations of third persons are as a rule not admissible,⁴⁰ but a statement made directly to defendant with reference to the crime, and to be judged of by his conduct, may be admitted as part of the res gestæ;⁵⁰ and where a witness who testified concerning a homicide was nearly killed herself by one who murdered deceased, her declaration, shortly after the homicide, that she expected to die, and that she wanted a neighbor to be sent for, so that she could tell him all about it, was held admissible as confirmatory evidence.⁵¹

9. COMMISSION OF OR ATTEMPT TO COMMIT OTHER OFFENSES — a. In General. The general rule relating to the proof of other offenses committed by defendant applies in homicide cases.⁵² However, there are numerous exceptions to the rule, and evidence of another crime is admissible when it forms part of the res gestæ,⁵³ when it shows or tends to show a particular intent,⁵⁴ the motive prompting the crime charged,⁵⁵ or defendant's connection with the crime,⁵⁶ provided the time is not too remote.⁵⁷

b. Killing of Officer Attempting Arrest. On a trial for the killing of an officer while attempting to arrest defendant, the warrant of arrest, if regular on its face, is admissible to establish the fact that the deceased was an officer acting in the discharge of his duty when killed.⁵⁸ So evidence is admissible, in justification of an arrest without a warrant, to prove that defendant had committed a felony,⁵⁹ that the officer had reasonable belief of defendant's guilt,⁶⁰ or that his conduct and threats demanded it.⁶¹ Presumptive knowledge on the part of the prisoner of the official character of the deceased may be established by circumstantial evidence.⁶²

10. EXTENT OF INJURY FROM ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL. In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, evidence as to the nature and extent of the wounds inflicted upon the person assailed is admissible to show the intent of the accused.⁶³ A physician or surgeon who has examined such wounds may testify as to their character,⁶⁴ and as to what in his opinion would be the natural and probable results thereof.⁶⁵

11. MEANS USED AND CAUSE OF DEATH—a. Means or Instruments Used. Evidence that at the time of the homicide or shortly beforehand the accused had possession of a weapon or instrument of the character apparently used in the commission of such homicide;⁶⁶ evidence as to finding at or near the scene of Illinois.—Balmer v. People, 138 Ill. 356, 28 N. E. 130, 38 Am. St. Rep. 126, holding that the warrant is admissible even though it is not under seal.

Massachusetts.—Com. v. Moran, 107 Mass. 239, holding further that parol evidence is admissible to show that the warrant was sufficient for attempting arrest.

Michigan.—People v. Durfee, 62 Mich. 487, 29 N. W. 109, holding that the warrant of arrest is admissible, although it was held at the time of the killing by a deputy sheriff, the companion of the officer who was killed.

Minnesota.—State v. Spaulding, 34 Minn. 361, 25 N. W. 793, holding that the warrant is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that evidence of threats, showing malice and premeditation, is undisputed.

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," § 373.

Although a warrant for an arrest be not strictly legal, yet, if the matter be within the jurisdiction of the magistrate who issued it, the killing of an officer in its execution is murder; hence a warrant which charges a party with a riot, without alleging the concurrence of others in the offense, is, even if such offense amounts to illegality, admissible to prove murder in its execution. Boyd v. State, 17 Ga. 194.

Killing in attempt to escape.—The prosecution, in a trial for murder committed by a prisoner in jail, need not put in evidence the proceedings taken on the examination of defendant before his imprisonment, in order to show that at the time of the murder he was lawfully imprisoned on a charge of felony, it being shown that he was arrested on a valid warrant, and examined before a duly authorized magistrate, and held to answer, and that commitments were then made and delivered to the sheriff. *People v. the crime the weapon or instrument apparently used by the accused,⁶⁷ or cartridges or bullets, when a gun or pistol is shown to have been used;⁶⁸ and evidence as to the condition of the weapon of the accused,⁶⁹ or of deceased,⁷⁰ after the homicide is admissible. It may be shown that a bullet taken from the body of the deceased, and one taken from a tree near the place of the homicide, fit the molds found in the possession of the accused.⁷¹ Evidence in relation to the examination of guns in the neighborhood, to ascertain whether any of them carried a bullet of the size of one found in the body of deceased is admissible.⁷² Evidence that the wound could not have been made with the gun of the accused is admissible in his behalf.⁷³ Where, in a trial for the murder of an infant, the evidence of the state tends to show that it came to its death by a fracture of the skull, it is admissible to show by a doctor that it is possible to fracture an infant's skull by pressure of the hands, in order to show that the accused possessed the means by which its skull might have been crushed.⁷⁴ Testimony of a physician who conducted an autopsy on the bodies of other persons killed at the same time as the person for the killing of whom the accused is on trial is admissible to show that the killing was accomplished in such instance by the same instrument.⁷⁵ Where an instrument with which an assault was committed and a serious injury was inflicted is before the jury, no further direct proof of its deadly character is necessary.⁷⁶ evidence as to the character and location of the wounds on the body of deceased,⁷⁸ evidence as to the health of the deceased immediately before the infliction of such wounds,⁷⁹ and evidence that the ground at the place where deceased was killed was covered with pieces of rock, where the character of the wound indicated that it could not have been produced with the fist,⁸⁰ is admissible. It having been proved that the accused beat the deceased, complaints of pain made by the deceased within a short time of the beating are admissible in evidence.⁸¹ The testimony of a physician that he found poison in the stomach of deceased is admissible;⁸² but evidence that deceased took poison medicinally several years before his death is not admissible unless accompanied by evidence that he also took it shortly before his death;⁸³ and evidence that deceased took large quantities of a certain drug several months before his death is properly rejected where no evidence is offered to connect his death with the use of the drug.⁸⁴ It is competent for a witness to state how deceased acted at the time he was said to have been poisoned.⁸⁵

(ii) EXPERT AND OPINION EVIDENCE. A properly qualified physician who has himself examined the body of deceased, or who has heard its condition and the wounds inflicted upon it described by other witnesses, may be allowed to express his opinion as to the cause of the death of deceased.⁸⁶ Where the evidence of experts as to the fatal character of the wounds is not accessible, non-experts may, after describing the wounds, give their opinions as to whether such wounds caused the death, with their reasons therefor,⁸⁷ and it is competent for the prosecution to show the cause of death, without the aid of professional witnesses, in a case where death did not ensue immediately after the infliction of the wound.⁸⁸

(iii) POST-MORTEM EXAMINATIONS. The fact that a post-mortem examination was made long after death is no reason in itself for its exclusion as evidence, if the body was in such a state of preservation that the jury could judge whether its condition was caused by injuries inflicted before or after death.⁸⁹ Evidence obtained by making a post-mortem examination is not inadmissible because such examination was made after a prosecution for murder had been commenced,⁹⁰ and without notice to the accused.⁹¹ Questions asked a medical expert, based on a hypothetical state of facts assumed to have been proved, relative to the condition of the body as shown at an autopsy, are properly admitted in a trial for murder, notwithstanding the accused's objections to the manner of making the autopsy.⁹² Two witnesses having testified for the prosecution as to the condition of the body examined, it is not error to allow the prosecution to call other witnesses afterward, one of whom is a physician, to testify as to the same matter.⁹³

(iv) CHEMICAL ANALYSES. It is not necessary to the admission of testimony regarding the analysis of the internal organs of deceased that they shall have been placed in hermetically sealed jars,⁹⁴ or so preserved as to preclude the possibility of their having been tampered with.⁹⁵ Where such organs or a vessel containing poison have been submitted to an expert for analysis, it is for the jury to decide as to the sufficiency of the identification of such organs or vessel, where there is evidence tending to identify them;⁹⁶ and it is competent for the prosecution to prove by the expert the condition and contents of the organs or vessel, and the analysis made by him of the contents, although the identification of them is not positive.⁹⁷ Where poison was found in the stomach of deceased, and the question is raised whether a powder administered to him by his attending physician during his illness contained traces of the same poison, the testimony of a chemist who analyzed a part of the powder taken from the same package as that administered by the physician is admissible.⁹⁸

12. CAPACITY TO COMMIT AND RESPONSIBILITY⁹⁹—a. Insanity. On a prosecution for murder, defended on the ground of insanity, evidence of acts, conduct, and declarations of the accused before and after, as well as at the time of the commission of the act charged, is competent,¹ provided the inquiry does not call for evidence which is too remote.² The fact that defendant's insanity took the form of an insane delusion or frenzy, and the actuating cause thereof, may be shown.³

An inquisition of lunacy, showing a verdict of sanity or insanity, is admissible, although it is not conclusive.⁴ So defendant can show a tendency to hereditary insanity.⁵ Reports current in the neighborhood where defendant resides concerning the condition of his mind are not admissible on the question of insanity.⁶ The atrocity of the murder is not evidence of the insanity of the perpetrator.⁷ In the absence of an offer of proof that defendant had not sufficient intelligence to be responsible for his acts, evidence that he had not "much sense" and was little above an idiot is inadmissible.⁸ Evidence tending to disprove the defense of insanity is admissible on behalf of the prosecution.⁹

b. Intoxication. On a prosecution for murder evidence that the accused was intoxicated at the time of the killing is admissible on the question of deliberation and premeditation.¹⁰ And evidence of the effect generally of intoxicants upon defendant is admissible to lower the grade of the crime.¹¹ But evidence that defendant was in the habit at times of drinking to excess, and of the effect

Change of habits as to drink.—On a trial for manslaughter it is proper to exclude testimony as to whether there had been a change in deceased's habits with reference to drink, where defendant was permitted to prove his condition on the day he was shot. Com. v. Brewer, 164 Mass. 577, 42 N. E. 92.

Previous intoxication.—On a trial for murder where defendant is shown to have been intoxicated at the time, evidence of his previous intoxication is properly received as bearing on the question of intoxication at the time of the killing, and of his conduct while in that state. Upstone v. People, 109 Ill. 169.

of this habit on his mind, is incompetent unless it is confined to a period within a few days of the homicide.¹²

c. Somnambulism. One accused of crime is entitled to offer evidence to prove that he committed the crime while in a paroxysm of somnolentia or somnambulism.¹³

13. PASSION AND PROVOCATION — a. In General. Evidence of circumstances of provocation, as tending to arouse passion, is admissible in mitigation of the crime.¹⁴ Facts thus admissible must tend directly to establish provocation,¹⁵ and be within the knowledge of defendant at the time of the killing;¹⁶ but should not be limited to acts of provocation occurring at the time of the homicide.¹⁷

b. Insults and Defamation. In some states insults in conduct or language offered by deceased to a member of defendant's family or a female relative may be shown in evidence as affording a sufficient provocation to reduce the degree of the crime,¹⁸ where it is first shown that defendant had knowledge thereof when he killed deceased.¹⁹ Such evidence, however, to be admissible, must have direct connection with the crime charged.²⁰ Proof of the general character of the female insulted is admissible as bearing on the extent of the provocation.²¹ Evi-

Previous insults.—Defendant has the right to have the insulting conduct at the time of the killing viewed in the light of former provocation and insulting conduct. Willis v. State, (Tex. Cr. State*, 32 Tex. Cr. 426, 24 S. W. 412.

Slander of others.—In a prosecution for murder where defendant claimed that deceased had insulted his daughter, and that he killed deceased after having learned this fact, evidence of slanderous remarks alleged to have been made by deceased concerning various other young women is not admissible. McComas v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 72 S. W. 189.

In determining whether deceased's conduct toward defendant's wife was insulting, the relations between her and deceased before she married defendant may be considered in connection with his conduct. Jones v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 492, 26 S. W. 1082, 47 Am. St. Rep. 46.

dence of the good or bad character of deceased for chastity is irrelevant.²² Evidence is admissible to rebut the defense of provocation,²³ and the contention of the state that such defense was fabricated.²⁴

c. Infidelity of Husband or Wife. Defendant on trial for the murder of his wife may show that he was informed, and believed, that she had been unfaithful, as bearing on the question of provocation.²⁵ So also where the prosecution is for the murder of one with whom defendant believed his wife to have been criminally intimate.²⁶ Reports and rumors of the infidelity of the wife cannot be shown in the absence of proof that defendant had knowledge thereof.²⁷ The state may offer in rebuttal any evidence tending to disprove this defense.²⁸

d. Cooling Time. Previous acts or threats by the deceased are inadmissible in mitigation if sufficient time has elapsed for the blood to cool.²⁹

14. UNLAWFUL CHARACTER OF ACT OF DECEASED. Evidence that the killing was committed in resisting an illegal arrest is admissible in mitigation of the crime.³⁰ Evidence in justification of an attempt at arrest without a warrant is admissible for the prosecution.³¹

Killing by third party.—Where one employed by a husband to detect the infidelity of his wife killed the adulterer, evidence that the wife had committed adultery is not relevant upon his trial, whatever might be the law if the husband had killed him. People v. Horton, 4 Mich. 67.

Conspiracy to induce defendant's wife to elope.—Evidence that the person killed had entered into a conspiracy with a third person to induce defendant's wife to elope, and that the facts tending to prove such conspiracy had lately come to the knowledge of defendant is competent. Cheek v. State, 35 Ind. 492.

15. EXCUSE OR JUSTIFICATION—a. In General. On the trial of an indictment for murder any legitimate evidence tending to show matters which would excuse or justify the act of defendant is of course admissible on his behalf.³² Thus defendant may introduce evidence to show that the killing was accidental,³³ or that it was done while he was under a hallucination or illusion,³⁴ or that at the time of the homicide defendant mistook the deceased for another person who had, to defendant's knowledge, threatened and attempted to take his life.³⁵ But intoxicated immediately after the attempted arrest, or within a short time after the shooting, is admissible, over objection that her intoxication while in the house did not justify her arrest without a warrant.

Such evidence to be admissible must show circumstances or conditions under which an arrest without a warrant is authorized. Cortez v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 169, 69 S. W. 536.

Where deceased was not a peace officer and had no right to arrest without a warrant, evidence tending to show that he was vested with the authority of such an officer is inadmissible. Bates v. Com., 19 S. W. 928, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 177.

32. See supra, VI; and cases cited infra, note 33 et seq.

Evidence admissible only as affecting punishment.—Upon a trial for murder of a girl in an attempt to kill her father, evidence that on the day before the homicide the father was in persistent pursuit of defendant armed with a deadly weapon and seeking to take his life, and after failing to find him still threatened to kill him at sight, of which facts defendant was informed, while it would not be admissible if the only duty imposed upon the jury were that of finding whether or not defendant was guilty, is admissible as affecting the extent of the punishment to be imposed where under the statute the duty is imposed upon the jury, if they find the accused guilty, of fixing the punishment by their verdict. Nowaczyk v. People, 139 Ill. 336, 28 N. E. 961.

Evidence not admissible.—A defendant on trial for assault with intent to kill will not be permitted to show in his justification that prior to the affray he made a complaint before a peace officer charging the brother of the assaulted person with having threatened his life and asking to have him bound over to keep the peace, for this evidence has no connection with the person assaulted and in addition it is in the nature of a declaration in the interest of the party making it. State v. Doty, 5 Oreg. 491.

33. See State v. Wright, 112 Iowa 436, 84 N. W. 541; and supra, VI, G.

Illustration.—Where it was contended as a defense to a prosecution for homicide that the shooting was accidental, it was error to refuse to allow defendant to show that he carried his revolver and money in the same pocket and on being requested by the barkeeper of the saloon where the homicide occurred to pay for certain drinks he attempted to get his money and took the revolver from his pocket and that it was accidentally discharged; and it was also error to exclude the testimony as to whether defendant had been drinking before on the day when the homicide occurred, as to whether he appeared intoxicated at or prior to the time of the shooting, as to whether he appeared angry at the time, and as to whether he pointed the revolver at the time the shot was fired. State v. Wright, 112 Iowa 436, 84 N. W. 541.

Opinion of witness.—A witness cannot be asked whether defendant's pistol was fired accidentally or purposely, as this calls for his opinion, whereas it is for the jury to determine whether the shooting was accidental as the defense claims. State v. Ross, 32 La. Ann. 854.

Relatives of defendant and deceased—Time for introducing evidence.—On a trial for murder defendant cannot ask a witness for the state as to the feeling between defendant and the deceased, his wife, at a time when the testimony given shows unmistakably a case of murder; but after the testimony for defendant has disclosed his theory of the killing, that it was accidental, evidence as to the friendly relations between defendant and his wife is admissible, and he may recall the state's witness for the purpose of asking him such question. Nelson v. State, 61 Miss. 212.

Evidence to defeat theory of accident.—On a prosecution for the murder of the wife of defendant whom he shot immediately after shooting her brother, where the theory of the defense is that defendant shot the brother in self-defense, and in the effort to defend himself one of the shots which he had intended for the brother-in-law accidentally struck his wife and killed her, evidence is admissible on the part of the prosecution, for the purpose of defeating the theory of accident, to show that immediately after killing his wife defendant drove to another house and without any warning killed his wife's father and mother, for, taken in connection with previous threats on the part of defendant against the family of his wife, the evidence is relevant for the purpose of showing the scope of those threats and enabling the jury to determine whether the killing of the wife's father and mother was a part of the execution of a single plan that had existed in his mind, and if the jury should so determine it would enable them to more readily determine whether the killing of the wife was also a part of that plan or whether the claim of defendant that he shot her accidentally was well founded. People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460, 44 Pac. 186.

evidence is not admissible to show facts which even if proved would furnish no excuse or justification for the homicide.³⁶

b. Exercise of Authority or Duty. In a prosecution for murder, committed on a farm of which accused had charge for the owner, the latter can testify as to the instructions given accused as to policing the farm;³⁷ but on the prosecution of a saloon-keeper for an assault with intent to kill, committed in his saloon, an ordinance requiring saloon-keepers to give bond to keep an orderly place is not admissible.³⁸ Where the circumstances show a wilful murder rather than an attempt to arrest deceased evidence that defendant had a warrant for his arrest is incompetent;³⁹ and the same principle applies where defendant was acting in excess of the authority he claims to have had,⁴⁰ or where no such office legally existed as that which he claims to have held.⁴¹ Neither can an ordinance which it is not claimed defendant was attempting to enforce at the time of the homicide be admitted in evidence.⁴² Where defendant had a warrant for deceased's arrest evidence that the warrant was read and explained to him and that he was told what to do under it in reference to the arrest is inadmissible.⁴³ Where defendants contend that they were officers of the law, and killed deceased in overcoming his resistance to the execution of valid process placed in their hands for his arrest on a criminal charge, the state cannot show that deceased was not guilty of the offense charged;⁴⁴ and where a police officer killed one whom he rightfully believed to be an escaping felon evidence that deceased went to the place where he was killed on lawful business is irrelevant.⁴⁵ The uncommunicated intention of a constable, authorized to appoint a deputy constable, that a certain appointee should not act in that capacity, is inadmissible in evidence, upon trial of the deputy for a homicide committed under color of office, in order to affect the consideration of his official status.⁴⁶ Where defendant was prosecuted for a murder committed by him and several others conspiring with him by going to deceased's house and shooting him when he came out, and it was contended by accused that deceased's house was a house of prostitution, and that himself and his companions went there to get a daughter of one of the conspirators, testimony as to a conversation of the father with deceased, tending to show that his daughter was living there with her father's consent, was properly admitted.⁴⁷ Where defendants, on trial for murder, endeavored to excuse the homicide by showing that they were undertaking to arrest the deceased for stealing cattle belonging to one of defendants, but they had no warrant for the arrest of deceased, and neither of them was an

c. Prevention of Commission of Offense. Defendant is entitled to introduce evidence tending to show that at the time of the homicide he was lawfully engaged in an effort to prevent the commission of a criminal offense by deceased;⁴⁹ and where it is contended for defendant that deceased was killed while in the act of committing a felony evidence of the previous bad character of deceased may be admitted.⁵⁰

d. Self-Defense—(1) IN GENERAL. Where defendant claims that he acted in self-defense evidence is admissible to show any facts legitimately tending to bear out this theory,⁵¹ such as that defendant apprehended danger from meeting deceased,⁵² that he endeavored to avoid meeting deceased⁵³ or avoided rather than sought the difficulty in which deceased was killed,⁵⁴ that deceased brought on the difficulty or was the aggressor therein,⁵⁵ that deceased appeared angry just before the fatal encounter and when overtaking defendant on the street,⁵⁶ that defendant was in such a place that he could not retreat out of the reach of deceased and thus escape his attack,⁵⁷ that it was defendant's intention merely to hurt or repel and not to kill deceased,⁵⁸ that defendant had a fresh bruise soon after the killing,⁵⁹ or that there was a conspiracy between deceased and others to take defendant's life.⁶⁰ The purpose and attitude of deceased at the time of the alleged attack on

W. 527 (holding that in a prosecution of defendant for the murder of his wife's father, it being set up in defense that deceased was forcing defendant's wife to remain away from him, and the state claiming that she was remaining away from choice, it was error to refuse to admit in evidence letters written by the wife to defendant during the spring preceding the homicide, in which she expressed in strong terms her affection for him and her desire to be with him); Gaines v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 331 (holding that where on a trial for an assault with intent to murder his wife's brother, defendant attempted to justify the shooting on the ground of self-defense, and relied mainly on the fact that the brother came to his house, armed with a rifle, and inquired for him, it was not error to admit evidence that there was trouble between defendant and his wife the day before the assault, about which the brother called to inquire). See supra, VI, C.

Statement of bystander.—Evidence of a statement that deceased was about to attack the accused, made by a bystander in the hearing of defendant just before he fired at deceased, is competent as bearing on the bona fides and reasonableness of the act. Stroud v. Com., 19 S. W. 976, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 179.

Fear at time prior to difficulty.—In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, evidence that defendant was afraid of prosecutor a few days prior to the difficulty is not admissible, where there is no evidence that he was afraid of him at the time of the difficulty. Wynne v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 51 S. W. 909.

Opinion of another person.—Defendant cannot show that on the day of the homicide a certain person told him not to have any violence with deceased, that deceased would shoot him down like a dog. Poole v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 348, 76 S. W. 565.

defendant may also be shown.⁶¹ Where self-defense is set up, any of the declarations of deceased, explanatory of accompanying acts, are admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ.⁶² Defendant may show the extent of the injuries received by him in the combat, and the time when and place where they were inflicted.⁶³ When defendant submits a particular act done by deceased at the time of the homicide as evidence of an overt act of dangerous intentions, the act must either be one of such character as would per se be indicative thereof, or it must be shown affirmatively to have been done under circumstances such as to have reasonably led to a belief that it was of that character.⁶⁴ Under a plea of self-defense evidence is not admissible which has no tendency to show that in killing deceased defendant acted in defense of his own life or to avoid serious bodily harm.⁶⁵ Thus evidence that defendant had been attacked by third persons with murderous weapons just before he killed deceased is inadmissible to show self-defense, in the absence of any evidence showing a conspiracy between such third persons and deceased,⁶⁶ and where defendant contended that deceased first assaulted him, evidence that deceased told a witness that he had had sexual intercourse with defendant's wife did not tend to prove such assault, and was properly excluded.⁶⁷ The opinions of witnesses at the inquest that defendant committed the homicide in necessary self-defense are not competent as direct evidence.⁶⁸ When defendant admits that he began the attack which resulted in the killing, and offers no evidence tending to prove the facts necessary to revive his right of self-defense, it is competent for the judge, as a preliminary to ruling on the admissibility of evidence, to assume the non-existence of such facts, even although they bear upon the question of guilt or innocence;⁶⁹ but where the evidence offered relates to and tends to prove all the facts required, and those facts bear upon the question of the guilt or innocence of accused, the question whether such facts are established should be submitted to the jury, together with the evidence the admissibility of which is dependent upon the determination of such question.⁷⁰ Where self-defense is set up the prosecution may prove that deceased was unarmed,⁷¹ that he feared the defendant and was not the aggressor,⁷² that defendant provoked the difficulty under such circumstances as would excite certain and probably desperate resistance,⁷³ and introduce other evidence legitimately tending to rebut the

Conspiracy.—Where defendant, to prove a conspiracy against him on the part of deceased and others with him at the time of the killing, offered evidence that after he had fired the first shot at deceased one of those with deceased struck him, and another shot at him, it was held that no prior evidence of a conspiracy having been offered the evidence so offered was incompetent. *Simmons v. defense.⁷⁴ The prosecution has even the right to anticipate the defense of self-defense, predicated on the theory that deceased brought on the difficulty, and was in the act of shooting defendant when defendant fired.⁷⁵ But evidence which has no tendency to prove that the killing was not done in self-defense and is not otherwise relevant cannot be introduced by the prosecution.⁷⁶ A question to a witness for the state on cross-examination as to the direction in which defendant was retreating when he was walking back from deceased, and as to whether he was walking in the direction of his home, is properly excluded.⁷⁷ Where deceased had made several threats to kill defendant, and defendant claimed that the killing was in self-defense, it was error to compel him to answer on cross-examination whether he had filed any complaint to place deceased under a peace bond after he heard of the threats, as his applying for a peace bond could not enlarge or restrict his right of self-defense, and under the evidence the jury might have considered his failure to apply for a bond as limiting or restricting his right.⁷⁸

(II) CHARACTER AND HABITS OF DECEASED—(A) In General. Where there is evidence tending to show self-defense or the character of the transaction in doubt the reputation of the deceased for being a violent and dangerous character can be shown for the purpose of showing a reasonable apprehension of immediately impending danger on the part of defendant,⁷⁹ and defendant may also show the general reputation of deceased as to using firearms or other deadly weapons when engaged in quarrels.⁸⁰ But under a plea of self-defense defendant cannot introduce evidence of deceased's moral character, as whether he was honest, or a thief, a gambler, etc.,⁸¹ or, where deceased was a woman, evidence of her character for chastity.⁸² The general character of the prosecutor as a violent and dangerous man, at a time subsequent to an alleged assault with intent to murder made on him by defendant, is immaterial on a trial for the assault.⁸³

(B) Knowledge of Defendant. It is generally considered to be necessary in order to admit evidence of the dangerous and violent character of deceased that this should appear to have been known to defendant, as otherwise it could not have influenced him, and hence evidence of defendant's knowledge of deceased's character is admissible;⁸⁴ but it has been said that such knowledge is involved in

Indictment for murder.—Where defendant had been allowed to prove that the deceased had killed a man, as tending to show that defendant knew the deceased to be of a violent character, it was not error to exclude evidence that for that killing the deceased had been indicted. *State v. Leading question.—Where there is evidence introduced tending to show that at the time of the killing the deceased was drinking, a question asked a witness on direct examination, if it is not true that when the deceased was drinking he was a fussy and overbearing

The testimony of defendant alone, to the effect that he acted necessarily in self-defense, when sufficient in itself for that purpose, would authorize the admission of proper evidence of the violent and dangerous character of the deceased. Hart v. State, 38 Fla. 39, 20 So. 805 [followed in Allen v. State, 38 Fla. 44, 20 So. 807].

is offered it appears from the evidence already introduced that defendant provoked the difficulty⁸⁷ or was the assailant;⁸⁸ where he was in no danger of loss of life or seriously bodily harm,⁸⁹ or did not believe himself to be in such danger,⁹⁰ or there was nothing to excite the fears of a reasonable man that such danger existed;⁹¹ where he did not retreat while he might safely have done so;⁹² where deceased was retreating or running away from defendant at the time of the killing;⁹³ or where it is claimed that the killing was accidental⁹⁴ or defendant denies that he killed deceased.⁹⁵ But it has been held that where the evidence of the killing is wholly circumstantial, testimony of the violent character of deceased even if unknown to defendant is admissible as tending to show the inherent probabilities of the transaction irrespective of any question of self-defense.⁹⁶

(b) *Habit of Carrying Weapons.*⁹⁷ Where the evidence tends to show that defendant might have acted in self-defense, evidence is admissible to show that deceased was in the habit of carrying firearms or other deadly weapons or that he had the reputation of habitually being armed.⁹⁸ It must of course be made to appear that such habit or reputation of the deceased was known to defendant, as Defendant may testify that deceased was habitually armed. Naugher v. State, (Ala. 1898) 23 So. 26; Com. v. Booker, 76 S. W. 838, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1025.

Improper questions.—Where there is no attempt to prove that deceased was in the habit of going armed or that defendant knew of any such habit, questions asked by defendant's counsel of a witness whether witness ever did or did not see deceased with pistols and whether witness knew anything about deceased carrying a pistol were properly excluded. McDonnall v. People, 168 Ill. 93, 48 N. E. 86.

otherwise it could not have influenced his conduct;⁹⁹ but it has been held that if it was generally known that deceased was in the habit of carrying firearms, it is reasonable to assume that defendant knew of that habit as well as others.¹ In rebuttal the prosecution may introduce evidence to show that deceased was not in the habit of carrying weapons.² Where there is no claim or evidence that the killing was done in self-defense evidence of deceased's habit of going armed is inadmissible.³

(E) Showing by Prosecution of Peaceable Reputation. Where defendant has set up self-defense and introduced evidence tending to show the turbulent, violent, and quarrelsome character of deceased it is competent for the prosecution in rebuttal to introduce evidence showing the reputation of deceased to have been that he was of a quiet and peaceable character;⁴ but it has been held that the prosecution cannot in the first instance and as a part of its case, before anything as to deceased's character has been shown by defendant, introduce evidence showing deceased to have been quiet and peaceable,⁵ although there is also authority for the view that a plea of self-defense and evidence in support thereof, showing an attack by deceased, is sufficient to let in evidence by the prosecution that deceased was peaceable and quiet, although defendant has not attacked his general character in this respect.⁶

(F) Manner of Proving Character. As a general rule the evidence of the character of deceased must be confined to his general reputation, and evidence of particular acts of violence or lawlessness is inadmissible,⁷ unless they were directly

When evidence not admissible.—Where defendant relied on self-defense, and introduced testimony tending to show that at the time defendant shot him deceased was making a move as if to draw a pistol, evidence that deceased was not in the habit of carrying a pistol was incompetent. McCandless v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 58, 57 S. W. 672.

Actual character.—The prosecution cannot prove that deceased was not in fact a dangerous man, as the proper inquiry is as to his reputation. People v. Anderson, 39 Cal. 703.

What amounts to attack on character.—Where the defense by various kinds of evidence seeks to show that the deceased was of a quarrelsome, morose, irritable, and vindictive disposition, subject to violent outbursts of temper and the making of threats against defendant, this amounts to an attack upon the good character of the deceased for peaceableness and good disposition, and hence evidence on behalf of the prosecution that the general reputation of the deceased for peaceableness and good disposition was good is admissible, although no evidence of general reputation as to the bad character of the deceased in these respects was given by defendant. *People v. connected with and involved in the homicide,⁸ especially where defendant had no knowledge of and was not concerned in such acts;⁹ but on cross-examination of a witness for the prosecution who has testified as to deceased's good character, testimony of particular facts tending to show his character to have been otherwise may be elicited as going to discredit the witness.¹⁰ It has also been held that the record of a conviction of deceased for manslaughter is admissible,¹¹ and that a witness may be asked if he had not heard that deceased had, a short time before he was killed, "several rows and shooting serapes in another county," as tending to show deceased's character.¹² Where, shortly prior to the killing of deceased by defendant, deceased had committed numerous boisterous and disturbing acts, some of which had been witnessed by defendant, and there was evidence that defendant knew the dangerous character of deceased, and that deceased had threatened his life, such acts were admissible as showing the condition of deceased's mind, and as bearing on the subsequent conduct of defendant.¹³ Information conveyed to defendant before the killing that deceased was a violent and turbulent man, and accustomed to go about armed, is admissible whether the informant gained his knowledge from general reputation of deceased or from personal observation of his specific acts.¹⁴ In a case where defendant knew at the time he was assaulted by deceased, who was promptly shot, that the latter had made assaults on others, the circumstances of which indicated that deceased would become infuriated without notice or reasonable cause and make violent assaults, evidence of the circumstances of such prior assaults was held admissible.¹⁵ Evidence as to the unpleasant relations existing between the deceased and a particular witness and the latter's unwillingness to work under deceased is not admissible.¹⁶ The opinions of witnesses are not competent to prove the character of deceased,¹⁷ especially where the witnesses did not know deceased during his lifetime and their opinions are formed from what they have heard about him after his death.¹⁸ Proof that the manner of deceased was reckless is not admissible.¹⁹ Negative evidence of the good reputation of deceased for peace and quiet given by witnesses who have never heard deceased's reputation or these particular traits discredited is admissible.²⁰

as to who was the aggressor in the affray in which the homicide was committed;²¹ but evidence of defendant's character for honesty and integrity is not admissible.²² Where defendant has introduced evidence of his good character or reputation the prosecution cannot in rebuttal prove particular facts in order to show it to be bad.²³ former occasions deceased assaulted or attacked,³¹ beat,³² waylaid,³³ or shot at him.³⁴ There must, however, be some connection between the previous difficulties and the homicide;³⁵ defendant cannot go back to a remote period and prove a particular quarrel or grudge unless he also proves a continued difference flowing from that source;³⁶ but where there has been a series of difficulties down to the time of the killing defendant may introduce evidence of previous affrays, difficulties, and attacks, although remote in time and place, their weight being for the jury.³⁷ The prosecution may prove that the hostile feeling was on the part of defendant rather than of deceased.³⁸ Where the law of self-defense is not in the case, evidence of the hostile feelings³⁹ or acts of the deceased,⁴⁰ or of previous quarrels,⁴¹ is irrelevant and inadmissible.

Defendant may testify as to such threats. Bowlus v. State, 130 Ind. 227, 28 N. E. 1115.

Assault in connection with threat admissible.—Harkness v. State, 129 Ala. 71, 30 So. 73, two judges dissenting.

Evidence of the reason for the intention of deceased to kill defendant is irrelevant, as is also the fact that the deceased had shot at another person at about the same time for the same reason. People v. Lombard, 17 Cal. 316.

Defendant has the right to show all the circumstances which go to show the character of the threats, the intention with which they were made, and the grounds of fear on which defendant acted, as bearing upon the difficulty whether the grounds for fearing death or serious bodily harm were serious. Russell v. State, 11 Tex. App. 288.

Circumstances under which threat made admissible.—Poole v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 348, 76 S. W. 565.

The fact that deceased had a weapon in his hands when he made threats against defendant some months before the homicide, defendant not being present at the time, is immaterial. State v. Parker, 172 Mo. 191, 72 S. W. 650.

Basis of threats.—Evidence of slanders of the brother of deceased circulated by defendant is admissible on behalf of defendant only to show threats made by deceased and their basis and conditions. State v. Bartlett, 170 Mo. 658, 71 S. W. 148, 59 L. R. A. 756.

The threats must have been of a nature to show the intention or desire of deceased to take defendant's life,⁴⁵ or at least to do him serious bodily harm.⁴⁶ The threats must have been directed against defendant,⁴⁷ and mere impersonal threats are not admissible;⁴⁸ but it is not necessary that defendant should have been named in the threats, it being sufficient if the circumstances show that he was the person against whom they were directed,⁴⁹ and evidence of threats against a class to which defendant belongs is admissible, it being for the jury to determine whether they were made against defendant.⁵⁰ Evidence of general threats against any person found in a certain situation or attempting to do certain things is admissible where it appears that deceased found defendant within the scope of the threats.⁵¹ The fact that threats of deceased were to a certain degree conditional does not render them inadmissible,⁵² but a conditional threat is not admissible in the absence of any showing that the things ever transpired on which the threat was based or that deceased knew of their transpiring.⁵³ Evidence of vague and uncertain threats has been held not admissible,⁵⁴ but the fact that the threats were made indirectly or by innuendo does not make proof of them irrelevant.⁵⁵ In a case where defendant pleaded self-defense and there was evidence tending to show a standing feud between the families of defendant and of the deceased it was held that statements of the deceased's father made in deceased's presence, and to which he did not dissent, that if defendant's family did not look out for themselves deceased would shoot some of them were admissible.⁵⁶

(c) Necessity of Claim or Showing of Self-Defense. In order that evidence of threats of deceased against defendant may be admissible, the law of self-defense must be in the case, that is to say there must be a claim on the part of defendant that the killing was necessary to prevent the loss of his own life or serious bodily injury to himself through deceased, and some evidence in support of such claim, or as it has been expressed, there must have been some overt act on the part of deceased.⁵⁷ Evidence of such threats is not admissible where

63. People v. Cook, 39 Mich. 236, 33 Am. Rep. 380.

64. State v. Cosgrove, 42 La. Ann. 753, 7 So. 714, where deceased's only overt act prior could have avoided killing deceased,⁶⁵ or where defendant waylaid and killed deceased.⁶⁶ So also where the theory of the defense is that the homicide was committed in defense of another person, evidence of threats of the deceased against defendant himself is inadmissible.⁶⁷ Where, however, the evidence does not authorize the conclusion that there was nothing in the conduct of deceased to induce the belief of a purpose to execute his threat, defendant should be given the benefit of the rule applicable to previous threats communicated to him,⁶⁸ and the fact that the only evidence to show that deceased was the assailant is the testimony of defendant does not render evidence of threats by deceased inadmissible.⁶⁹

(d) Necessity of Communication of Threats to Defendant. It has been laid down as a general rule that threats of deceased against defendant are not admissible in evidence unless such threats were communicated to defendant before the homicide,⁷⁰ but there are important modifications of this rule. Thus in case the evidence leaves it doubtful as to whether or not the deceased was the aggressor in the difficulty in which the killing occurred as claimed by defendant, evidence of threats of the deceased against defendant, even though not communicated to him, tends to show the deceased's animus toward defendant and bears on the probability of his having been the aggressor, and hence is admissible for this purpose,⁷¹ and evidence of uncommunicated threats is also admissible when accomto the killing was shaking his finger in defendant's face.

Where there is the slightest evidence tending to show that before the killing deceased made a hostile demonstration toward defendant which might be reasonably regarded as placing defendant in imminent danger of losing his life or sustaining great bodily harm evidence of threats previously made by deceased should not be excluded. *Garner v. panied by proof of threats which have been communicated to defendant, as such evidence corroborates the communicated threats and tends to establish the reality of the peril in which defendant considered himself to be at the time of the killing.⁷² Evidence of uncommunicated threats of deceased shortly before the killing, together with acts and conduct indicating an intention to put the threats into execution, may be admissible as part of the res gestæ.⁷³ It has also been held that where the evidence of the killing is wholly circumstantial, threats of deceased even if unknown to defendant are admissible in evidence as tending to show the inherent probabilities of the transaction irrespective of any question of self-defense.⁷⁴

(E) Rebuttal of Evidence of Threats. The prosecution may introduce evidence tending to show that the threats of deceased were mere idle talk⁷⁵ or that he did not intend to execute or had abandoned any intention of executing them.⁷⁶

Preparations of deceased to remove from neighborhood admissible.—Trumble v. State, 25 Tex. App. 631, 8 S. W. 814.

(VII) THREATS OF THIRD PERSONS AGAINST DEFENDANT. Evidence of threats of third persons against defendant is as a rule irrelevant and inadmissible,⁷⁷ but on a trial for killing a stranger upon his roughly and suddenly awakening defendant, evidence was held admissible to show that defendant's life had recently been threatened by another person, on the ground that this tended to support a contention of the defense that defendant fired the fatal shots while partially or wholly unconscious and under the false impression that he was being assaulted.⁷⁸

(VIII) IMMINENCE OF DANGER TO DEFENDANT—(A) In General. Defendant seeking to justify his act upon the ground of self-defense may introduce evidence of any facts legitimately tending to show the imminence of the danger to himself of loss of life, or serious bodily injury at the time he acted, or the reasonableness of his apprehension that such danger existed.⁷⁹ The effect produced on a bystander by the conduct of deceased may be shown as illustrating the effect likely to be produced on defendant,⁸⁰ and the behavior of deceased when on his way to the place where the homicide occurred may be proved on behalf of defendant;⁸¹ but the opinion of a witness as to the intention of deceased in approaching defendant and as to defendant's danger is not admissible.⁸² The evidence must be confined to danger from the acts of deceased, and defendant cannot show that he was in danger from other people, as this has no proper bearing upon his act in killing deceased.⁸³ In rebuttal the prosecution may show that defendant had no reasonable grounds to apprehend that there was any imminent danger to him.⁸⁴

(B) Disparity in Size and Strength. Under the issue of self-defense and as bearing on the imminence of the danger to defendant, defendant may show that deceased was a larger and stronger man than himself,⁸⁵ but he cannot show that

by reason of his physical infirmities he was particularly nervous and sensitive and apprehensive of danger or physical violence.⁸⁶ On the other hand it is competent for the prosecution to show that there was not such disparity in the size and strength of the two men as to induce defendant to believe himself in greater peril in consequence of such disparity,⁸⁷ or that defendant was the larger and stronger of the two;⁸⁸ but the prosecution cannot show that deceased, by reason of some accident or injury, was not as strong as he appeared, when defendant did not know of this.⁸⁹

(c) *Possession and Use of Weapons by Deceased.*⁹⁰ As bearing upon the question of self-defense and as tending to support the contention of defendant that at the time of the killing he acted under a well-grounded apprehension of loss of life or serious bodily injury to himself through deceased, evidence is admissible to show that at the time of the difficulty in which the killing occurred deceased was armed, and that in such difficulty he used or attempted to use deadly weapons.⁹¹ Thus it may be shown that weapons such as defendant claims deceased had were found at or near the place of the encounter or near the body of deceased,⁹² that in the difficulty defendant received a wound apparently made with a deadly weapon,⁹³ or that after the difficulty there were cuts in his clothes which were not there before.⁹⁴ In rebuttal the prosecution may introduce evidence legitimately tending to show that deceased was not armed at the time of the difficulty,⁹⁵ that he did not have any such weapon as defendant claims he used or sought to use,⁹⁶ or that he did not use a weapon which he had.⁹⁷ But evidence that a firearm carried by deceased could not be discharged is not admissible where knowledge of the defect is not brought home to defendant,⁹⁸ nor can the prosecution show that deceased's gun was loaded with small shot when it is not shown that defendant knew this.⁹⁹ Evidence of threats against the life of deceased, made by persons other than defendant, but who had a grudge against deceased in common with defendant, and which threats the witness communicated to deceased, is admissible against defendant to show a motive on the part of deceased in carrying a rifle at the time of the homicide.¹ On a trial for assault with intent to murder, evidence that after the assault the prosecutor carried arms for the avowed purpose of shooting defendant is immaterial.²

(D) Intoxication of Deceased. It may be that the intoxication of deceased is a proper circumstance to be shown in evidence and to be considered by the jury in determining whether there was any present and pressing necessity for defendant to take the life of deceased to protect his own or to prevent great bodily harm;³ but evidence that deceased was intoxicated is irrelevant when offered before there is any evidence of necessity for defendant to kill him and when all the evidence introduced shows that defendant was the aggressor.⁴

(IX) SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS OF DEFENDANT. Self-serving declarations of defendant made before the killing with reference to his anticipation of trouble with deceased, his desire to avoid it, and the like are not admissible.⁵

(X) FACTS UNKNOWN TO DEFENDANT. As a general rule facts unknown to defendant at the time of the homicide cannot be shown by either the defense or the prosecution, as such facts could not have influenced his action.⁶

e. Defense of Another. Every fact which would be competent to establish justification in the case of a person killing another in self-defense is competent to establish it in the case where the killing was done in defense of another.⁷ Thus defendant may show that deceased was assaulting or attacking the person defended;⁸ that deceased entertained hostile feelings toward,⁹ and had made threats against,¹⁰ and assaults on the person defended;¹¹ that deceased was larger and stronger than the person defended;¹² or that deceased was a fierce, violent, and dangerous man.¹³ But defendant is not entitled to set up justification unless the person defended could himself have set up such defense if he had been the slayer,¹⁴ and hence the prosecution may show that the person defended was the aggressor,¹⁵ or that the purposes of deceased were not felonious.¹⁶

f. Defense of Habitation. Where deceased sought to gain admittance into a house of ill fame by violence, and against the will of the keeper thereof, who attacked the aggressor, from which death ensued, it was held that testimony that threats had been made a week previous to the assault by persons who had broken into the house that they would return some other night and break in again might be received and submitted to the jury under the instructions of the court;¹⁷ but where the acts of officers of the law who were attempting to break into defendant's house to arrest him were such as conferred upon him the undoubted right of self-defense if he was mistaken as to their character or object, and the question was as to whether or not defendant was ignorant of their official character, evidence that the night before a part of the crowd who were with the officers at the time of the homicide had stoned the defendant's house was immaterial.¹⁸ Where deceased, who was an officer, was shot while ejecting defendant from her home under a writ of possession, and he had previously ejected defendant, but she had returned to the premises, evidence as to the advice of counsel given defendant concerning her rights was inadmissible.¹⁹

g. Defense of Property. Where defendant claims that the killing was done in defense of his property, evidence of defendant's title or claim to the property may be admissible;²⁰ but such evidence is not admissible where the violence used was unjustifiable;²¹ and where only the possession of the land in dispute at the time of the homicide is involved, evidence as to the title is not admissible.²² Where deceased was shot while entering on defendant's land, testimony as to what he said to a witness with reference to his intention to go on the land at all hazards was proper, defendant having had notice of the conversation;²³ but on a trial for assault with intent to kill one of a party coming upon defendant's mining claim, evidence that another of the party went to defendant's claim, intending to cross it against the will of defendant, was inadmissible, as it did not show that the person assaulted so intended.²⁴ Where an officer had dispossessed deceased and placed defendant in possession of premises on which the homicide occurred, evidence of the instructions given defendant by the officer at the time of placing him in possession was admissible.²⁵ Evidence of former trespasses committed by deceased on the same land is inadmissible in the absence of any evidence tending to establish a conspiracy to drive defendant off his land.²⁶

16. GRADE OR DEGREE OF OFFENSE.²⁷ Where the jury have the right to fix the punishment by their verdict, evidence of mitigating circumstances is admissible; but where the jury have nothing to do with fixing the punishment, evidence that goes only to the mitigation of punishment is irrelevant and inadmissible.²⁹

C. Dying Declarations—1. DEFINITION. Dying declarations are statements of material facts concerning the cause and circumstances of homicide made by the victim under the fixed and solemn belief that his death is inevitable and near at hand,³⁰ and as such are to be distinguished from other admissible declarations such as declarations which constitute a part of the *res gestæ*³¹ or declarations made in the presence of the accused.³²

Louisiana.—State v. Harris, 112 La. 937, 36 So. 810.

Michigan.—People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 431.

31. Thus declarations of the deceased so closely connected with the act of killing as to be a part of the res gestæ are admissible in evidence, although they may not have been made with a consciousness of impending death. Healy v. People, 163 Ill. 372, 45 N. E. 230; Goodall v. State, 1 Oreg. 333, 80 Am. Dec. 396; Grubb v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 72, 63 S. W. 314.

Declarations made several hours after receiving the injuries, not shown to have been made in view of approaching death, amount to nothing more than a narrative of a past transaction, and are not admissible in evidence. Com. v. Densmore, 12 Allen (Mass.) 535. So too where, on the trial of a person for the murder of his stepchild, it appeared that defendant gave the child a severe beating, and that five days afterward it died, evidence that on the day after the beating deceased said to witness, defendant not being present, that he then felt a pain in his head caused by the whipping administered by defendant the day before is inadmissible. Johnson v. State, 63 Miss. 313.

Either as res gestæ or as dying declaration.

—At the trial the commonwealth offered to show that the murdered woman, as she rushed from the cellar with her throat cut, cried out, "I am murdered! It was George Van Horn who did it." It was held that this testimony was admissible either in the character of dying declarations or as part of the res gestæ. Com. v. Van Horn, 4 Lack. I. eg. N. (Pa.) 63.

32. Thus a statement by the deceased, after he had received the fatal wound, made in the presence and hearing of the accused, may be received in evidence for the purpose of showing the behavior of defendant when confronted by his victim, and in such case it is not essential that the declarant should be apprehensive of immediate dissolution.

2. GENERAL RULE AS TO ADMISSIBILITY. In prosecutions for homicide the declarations of the deceased voluntarily made, while sane, when in articulo mortis and under the solemn conviction of approaching dissolution, concerning the facts and circumstances constituting the res gestæ of his destruction are always admissible in evidence, provided the deceased would be a competent witness if living.³³ The rule admitting dying declarations is not confined to their introduction by the prosecution. They are also admissible in behalf of the defense.³⁴

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," § 428.

3. RULE FOUNDED ON NECESSITY. From the very necessity of the case, dying declarations are admissible to prove the fact of the killing, who was the murderer, and such other facts and circumstances as are immediately attendant on the homicide and form a part of the res gestæ. They may extend to the entire circumstances of the fatal occurrence, but should not include narratives of matters not immediately connected with it.³⁵ But the admissibility of dying declarations does not depend on the absence of other evidence of the same facts. They are admissible in evidence, although there be eye-witnesses who testify positively to the facts, and it is no objection to their admission that the exigencies of the case do not require it.³⁶

Extent and limits of rule.—Dying declarations are admissible on behalf of the accused to show that the killing was by another person. People v. Southern, 120 Cal. 645, 53 Pac. 214. But a mere expression of opinion that the accused was not to blame or had done nothing wrong affords no evidence of anything more than a truly christian spirit on the part of one who has been unjustly done to death, and who in his dying agonies is willing to forgive the malefactor. Moek v. People, 100 Ill. 242, 39 Am. Rep. 38; Adams v. People, 47 Ill. 376. Nor is a mere expression of opinion by the deceased that the infliction of the wound was accidental admissible in favor of the accused. Kearney v. State, 101 Ga. 803, 29 S. E. 127, 65 Am. St. Rep. 344.

Interruption of conflict.—While a dying declaration is competent only as to the circumstances of the death, yet a mere interruption of a few moments in the conflict between deceased and accused will not exclude deceased's declarations as to the proceedings before the interruption, when it is apparent that the entire occurrence was one conflict. *U. 4. GENERAL PRINCIPLE INVOLVED. The general principle on which this species of evidence is admitted is that they are declarations made in extremity when the party is at the point of death, and when every hope of this world is gone; when every motive of falsehood is silenced, and the mind is induced by the most powerful considerations to speak the truth; a situation so solemn, and so awful, being considered by the law as creating an obligation equal to that which is imposed by a positive oath administered in a court of justice.³⁷

5. CONSTITUTIONALITY OF RULE. It is well settled that the admission in evidence of the dying declarations of the person murdered is not an infraction of the constitutional right of the accused to be confronted by the witnesses against him. The constitution does not alter the rules of evidence or determine what shall be admissible evidence against the accused, but only secures to him the right to confront the witnesses who may be called to prove such matters as are evidence against him as determined by the settled principles of law.³⁸

6. CONDITIONS ESSENTIAL TO ADMISSIBILITY — a. Declarant Must Be In Extremis. Unsworn statements can be admitted in evidence as dying declarations only when made in extremis.³⁹

b. Declarant Must Be Conscious of His Condition. And it is not enough was apprehensive of immediate dissolution, it being sufficient to show that he had abandoned all hope and regarded his death as impending and certain as a result of the injury inflicted by the accused.⁴¹ Nevertheless a statement made under circumstances which would not render it admissible as a dying declaration becomes admissible as such if approved or repeated by the declarant after he had abandoned all hope of recovery.⁴²

c. Other Conditions. A declaration which is competent evidence when made will not be rendered incompetent by a subsequent revival of the dying person,⁴³ or by the fact that he afterward entertained some hope of recovery.⁴⁴ The length of time that may elapse between the making of the declaration and the death of the declarant furnishes no rule for the admission or rejection of the evidence.⁴⁵

7. FORM OF DECLARATIONS AND MANNER OF COMMUNICATION — a. In General. It is immaterial in what form the declaration is made.⁴⁶ And it need not all be made at one time without interruption or turning aside to other matters.⁴⁷ The fact that a dying declaration was made in response to questions does not deprive it of its voluntary character or render it inadmissible,⁴⁸ even though the questions be leading;⁴⁹ and the declarant may even be urged to answer, as this affects only the value of the evidence and not its admissibility;⁵⁰ nor is it material that the questions are omitted and the answers only given when they are reduced to writing and are read and approved by the declarant.⁵¹ Where the victim was unable to speak audibly a dying declaration communicated by signs may be received in evidence.⁵² It is not necessary that the accused should be present or be represented by counsel,⁵³ or that he should even have notice of the taking of the ante-mortem statement of his victim.⁵⁴

b. Written Declarations. A written declaration may be received in evidence if it was approved by the declarant after reading it or hearing it read by another, and is shown by a competent witness who was present at the time to be the identical statement so made and approved;⁵⁵ and it is no objection that it is

Substance of answers.—Upon an indictment for murder or manslaughter a statement giving the substance of questions put to and answers given by the deceased person is not admissible in evidence as a dying declaration. Such a declaration must, in order that it may be admissible in evidence, be in the actual words of the deceased, and if questions are put, the questions and answers must both be given, in order that it may appear how much was suggested by the examiner, and how much produced by the person making the declaration. Unsigned statements.—Where declarations have been made in extremis, and committed to writing, the mere fact that the writing was not signed by the deceased, who at the time was conscious and mentally capable, but physically unable to sign it, does not render the writing inadmissible. State v. Carrington, 15 Utah 480, 50 Pac. 526. written declaration properly authenticated must first be introduced, if accessible, and if not, its non-production must be accounted for.⁶¹ The fact that a dying declaration has been reduced to writing will not preclude evidence of unwritten declarations made on other occasions;⁶² and where the deceased made separate statements at different times they are all admissible in evidence, if made under a sense of impending death.⁶³ Even where a written memorandum of a dying declaration is not regarded as primary evidence, the witness who made it may use it to refresh his memory.⁶⁴ Although partial and incomplete statements of the facts should not be allowed to go to the jury, it has been considered, in some of the decided cases, that it is sufficient if the substance of the declarations be proved where the witness is not able to state the precise language of the declarant.⁶⁵ than homicide; and it is admissible then only when the declarations are those of the person whose death is the subject of the charge against the accused and the circumstances of such death are the subject of the declarations. Such declarations are not admitted to prove the killing of any person other than the declarant.⁶⁷ According to the weight of authority this rule is adhered to where the accused has killed two or more persons by the same felonious act and is on trial for the murder of one of them;⁶⁸ but there are cases holding that upon the trial of the accused for the murder of one of his victims the dying declarations of another are admissible, inasmuch as he might have been charged in one indictment for the murder of all of them when such evidence would have been clearly admissible.⁶⁹

(ii) THE RULE IN ABORTION CASES. Accordingly upon an indictment for feloniously producing an abortion the death of the woman is not an essential ingredient of the crime and her dying declarations are not admissible in evidence,⁷⁰ unless they are made so by statute;⁷¹ but where the death of a woman results from an unlawful attempt to produce an abortion the perpetrator of the offense may be prosecuted for felonious homicide and then her dying declarations are admissible in evidence.⁷²

9. LAYING THE FOUNDATION OR PREDICATE — a. In General. It is always necessary to lay a foundation for the introduction of dying declarations on the trial of an indictment for murder by first proving that they were made under a sense of impending death. This may be proved by the express words of the deceased to such effect if he made it a part of his declaration; but if he made no direct statement on the subject it will suffice to prove his conduct and condition and to show facts and circumstances which reasonably satisfy the court that he was Reception of evidence; dying declarations, see infra, IX, A, 4, b.

Dying declarations should not be allowed to go directly to the jury without any preliminary determination by the court as to their admissibility. State v. Johnson, 118 Mo. 491, 24 S. W. 229, 40 Am. St. Rep. 405.

The apprehension of danger may appear either from the express declaration of the deceased at the time, or may be inferred from the state of the wound, or illness, or other circumstances indicating the same. John's Case, 1 East P. C. 357. The belief of a speedy dissolution is the test by which the competency of dying declarations is to be measured, and evidence is admissible showing the condition of the deceased at the time such declarations were made. Sullivan v. Com., 93 Pa. St. 284 [affirming 13 Phila. 410]. Since dying declarations, to be admissible, must have been made under a sense of impending death, it was competent for the party offering them to prove the physical condition of deceased at the time they were made. Basye v. State, 45 Nebr. 261, 63 N. W. 811.

Declarations made by decedent three days before death, after being informed by a physician that her entrails were cut, and after her repeated expressions of opinion that she could not recover, were admissible in evidence. State v. Umble, 115 Mo. 452, 22 S. W. 378.

Statements immediately following one's declaration that the accused had shot him are admissible to bring the latter within the rule of dying declarations. State v. Spencer, 30 La. Ann. 362.

Foundation to be laid by state.—The court determines as to the admissibility of dying declarations reduced to writing on the evidence produced by the state to establish it, without hearing any evidence from the other side. State v. Frazier, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 176.

Compelling accused to proceed.—Where dying declarations are objected to by the defense, and the court refuses to decide on their admissibility until all the evidence is in, and compels defendant to proceed, and subsequently decides that parts of the declarations are not admissible, and the defendant is convicted, the judgment will be reversed. Johnson v. State, 47 Ala. 9.

74. When this is shown the admissibility of his declarations cannot be affected by the fact that his physician or others believed he had a chance to recover. People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474, 12 N. W. 662; State v. Brad-

istered to the declarant the last rites of the church,⁷⁵ or the previously disclosed opinion of his physician or other attendants that his injuries were mortal and must speedily prove fatal.⁷⁶ Again the serious character of the injury and the evident danger of the declarant's condition may always be shown as circumstances tending to deprive him of hope.⁷⁷ So also the court may consider whether the conduct of the deceased was that of a person conscious of impending death, as whether he gave directions respecting his funeral, his will, the care and custody of his children, or took leave of his relatives and friends, and the like.⁷⁸

c. Whether in Presence of Jury. The preliminary inquiry to determine the admissibility of alleged dying declarations may be conducted in the presence and hearing of the jury, or otherwise, at the discretion of the trial court.⁷⁹

It is only to avoid the possibility that they may hear improper evidence in case the dec-

But if the preliminary hearing is had in the absence of the jury and it is decided that the dying declarations are admissible in evidence, it is error to allow them to go to the jury without submitting the evidence upon which their admissibility was decided, for it is the province of the jury to decide as a fact, upon all the evidence in the case, whether or not the statement was made when the declarant was in extremis and had abandoned all hope of recovery.⁸⁰

d. Questions For Court and Jury. In limine the question as to whether alleged dying declarations were made under such circumstances as to render them admissible in evidence is to be determined by the court upon the preliminary proof or predicate for their introduction.⁸¹ But in such case all that is required to let the statement go to the jury is to make out a prima facie case that the utterances were made when the declarant was in articulo mortis and was conscious of his dying condition; the question is ultimately for the jury and they may disregard the statement if they believe it was not made when the deceased was in larations are not admissible that the jury are withdrawn while the court hears the preliminary proof. North v. People, 139 Ill. 81, 23 N. E. 966.

Where such declarations are properly admissible there certainly can be no error in permitting the preliminary evidence to be given in the presence of the jury, for then it is their province to hear and consider it as a part of the evidence in the case. North v. People, 139 Ill. 81, 23 N. E. 966.

extremis and was conscious of his condition, and it is error to remove this question from their consideration.⁸³ When the preliminary question of admissibility has been determined by the court and dying declarations have been admitted in evidence their credibility is exclusively for the jury whose province it is to weigh them and the circumstances under which they were made, and give to them only such credit, upon the whole evidence in the case, including that heard by the court on the question of competency, as they may think they deserve.⁸³ So whether alleged dying declarations, introduced in evidence, were statements of fact or opinions of the injured party may be considered by the jury in determining their evidential value.⁸⁴

85. Nothing can be admitted as evidence in such a declaration to which the declarant would not be permitted to testify on the witness stand had he survived.

b. Conclusions and Opinions—(i) IN GENERAL. A mere conclusion or an expression of opinion or belief by a dying man is not admissible as a dying declaration, and it is immaterial whether this appears from the statement itself or from other undisputed evidence showing that it was impossible for the declarant to have known the fact stated.⁸⁶ Thus the mere expression of an opinion that the accused was not at fault or of a desire that he should not be prosecuted cannot be received in evidence.⁸⁷

(ii) DECLARATIONS AS TO PROVOCATION. A dying declaration by the victim of a homicide that the act was without provocation, or words of a like import, although very general, is as a rule held admissible as the statement of a collective fact and not a mere conclusion.⁸⁸ But in other cases it is held that a statement that the

Exculpatory statement.—Declarations of deceased that he and the accused were playing, and that the shooting, from which the death of deceased resulted, was an accident, were statements of facts, and not matters of opinion, and were competent as dying declarations. *Com. v. Cases of poisoning.—The facts occurring at the time and the suffering of the deceased soon after swallowing the potion are admissible, but a statement that the accused poisoned the declarant is a mere matter of opinion. *Berry v. declarant and the accused had no difficulty is not admissible unless it relates to the act of killing and the circumstances immediately attending it which form a part of the res gestæ.⁸⁹

89. See cases cited infra, this note.

Illustrations.—Where the fact that defendant killed deceased is abundantly proved by other evidence, and virtually admitted, a dying declaration that "Michael Collins killed me, and killed me for nothing," is not admissible, since it is a mere expression of opinion. Collins v. Com., 12 Bush (Ky.) 271. Since dying declarations must be confined to the act of killing and the circumstances attending it and forming part of the res gestæ, mere declarations of the deceased that he had not had any trouble with defendant were inadmissible. Henderson v. Com., 5 Ky. L. Rep. 244. Dying declarations that defendant would never have killed declarant if it were not for the fact that defendant was a man of unsound mind are mere opinion and incompetent. Smith v. Com., 17 S. W. 868, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 612. Statements by deceased that he hated to die without knowledge why defendant shot him, and that he did not believe defendant would have shot him if he had not been told to do so, were not admissible as a dying declaration, because they did not relate to the circumstances of the shooting; the fact of the shooting by defendant not being disputed. Starr v. Com., 97 Ky. 193, 30 S. W. 397, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 843. These words, uttered in extremis, "He picked a fuss with me, and was running over me, and, because I did not want him to, he killed me," state conclusions only, and are not admissible as dying declarations. State v. Elkins, 101 Mo. 344, 14 S. W. 116. A statement by deceased that he was "an innocent man; that he went there with no evil intentions" should not be admitted. Fitzgerald v. State, 1 Tenn. Cas. 505.

Part of the res gestæ.—Dying declarations of deceased that he and defendant had no difficulty, being evidently intended to relate to the time and place he was shot, were competent, as dying declarations are admissible when they relate to the act of killing and the circumstances immediately attending it, and form part of the res gestæ. Luker v. Com., 5 S. W. 354, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 385. The statement of deceased, in detailing the facts attending the infliction of the fatal wound, that "he was not doing a thing," was the statement of a fact, and not a conclusion, and admissible as part of his dying declara-

c. Declarations as to State of Feelings Between Parties. Declarations tending to show the state of feeling that existed between the accused and the deceased prior to the homicidal act are not admissible in evidence for the prosecution.⁹³ For example, it is not permissible thus to prove that the accused had previously threatened violence to the deceased.⁹⁴ Neither is it competent thus to prove the conduct of the accused at a time previous to the homicide,⁹⁵ or any other former and distinct transaction not relating to the particular facts constituting the subject-matter of the charge or the identification of defendant, from which the jury might infer malice toward the deceased.⁹⁶

d. Vague and Indefinite Statements. All vague and indefinite expressions which do not point distinctly to the res gestæ of the fatal occurrence, but require a resort to inference or supposition to establish facts tending to incriminate the accused, should be excluded.⁹⁷ So also mere expressions or ejaculations not connected with any statement of facts or circumstances connected with the killing are not admissible.⁹⁸

e. Incomplete Statements. It is said that a dying declaration must be complete and go to the jury as a whole or not at all. This rule, however, does not require that the deceased should have stated everything which constituted the res gestæ of the fatal occurrence. If he stated anything material to the issue and it appears that he said all he desired to say, his statement should not be excluded on the ground of incompleteness.⁹⁹ But if it appears that the statement

Illustration.—When the dying declaration of the deceased is, "A. B. has shot me," or "has killed me," the court must presume prima facie that the deceased intended to state a fact of which he had knowledge, and not merely to express an opinion. The jury must judge of the weight of this, as of other evidence, by the accompanying circumstances. If the deceased merely meant to express his opinion or suspicion, as an inference from the other facts, the jury should disregard it as evidence of itself. State v. Arnold, 35 N. C. 184.

Illustrations.—On indictment of "Lawson Baldwin" for murder, committed in an attempt to perform an abortion, dying declarations of deceased: "He is the cause of my death. Oh, those horrible instruments! Laws. is the cause of my death, he is my murderer. They abused me terribly," are not admissible, since they may have referred to defendant as the seducer, and not as concerned in the abortion. State v. Baldwin, 79 Iowa 714, 45 N. W. 297. On a prosecution of one Castillo for murder, the state attempted to introduce the alleged dying declarations of deceased by a witness who testified that deceased, when near death, stated that some one shot him, and called a "name like Castando or something like that." The witness was then asked if the name were "Castillo," and he stated he believed that was the name. It was held that the evidence was too indefinite as to the party accused by deceased. *Castillo v. was intended by the declarant to be connected with and qualified by other statements which for any cause he was prevented from making it should be excluded as fragmentary and incomplete.¹

f. Contradictory Statements. The fact that dying declarations are inconsistent with each other does not preclude them, but bears only on their weight as evidence.²

11. DECLARANT'S COMPETENCY AS A WITNESS — a. In General. On the question of competency the general rules of competency of witnesses are applicable. That is, where the declarant would be a competent witness, if living, his dying declaration is admissible, unless otherwise objectionable;³ but where for any reason, such as infamy, want of religious belief, lack of mental capacity, or the like, the declarant would not have been permitted to testify, had he survived, his dying declaration is not admissible in evidence.⁴ And where by statute a want of religious belief is no longer a disqualification of witnesses, although the irreligious character of the declarant cannot be relied on to exclude his dying declaration, it may be shown that he did not believe in a future state of rewards and

Child of tender age.—A declaration in articulo mortis, made by a child only four years old, is not admissible on the trial of an indictment for the murder of such child; because a child of such tender years cannot have that idea of a future state which is necessary to make such a declaration admissible. Rex v. Pike, 3 C. & P. 598, 14 E. C. L. 735. See Reg. v. Perkins, 9 C. & P. 395, 2 Moody C. C. 135, 38 E. C. L. 236. Before the dying declarations of a child ten years old can be admitted, proper ground must be laid as to his competency. State v. Frazier, 109 La. 458, 33 So. 561.

Semiconscious condition.—Dying declarations by one deprived of full consciousness, so as to be unable to give an intelligent account of the facts, should not be received. McHugh v. State, 31 Ala. 317; McBride v. People, 5 Colo. App. 91, 37 Pac. 953; Mitchell v. State, 71 Ga. 128.

punishments for the purpose of impeaching his credibility; for such a person, although in articulo mortis, might not be solemnly impressed with the necessity of speaking the truth.⁵

b. Husband and Wife. At common law either the husband or the wife, being the injured party, may testify to acts of personal violence perpetrated by the other, and it follows that the dying declarations of one are admissible on a trial of the other for the murder of the declarant.⁶

c. Competency Presumed. It is not a preliminary requisite to show that the deceased would have been a competent witness had he survived.⁷ The law will presume that he would have been such and the burden of establishing the contrary is on the party objecting to the introduction of his statement.⁸

12. WEIGHT AS EVIDENCE. It has been said that the dying declarations of a person who has been mortally wounded, with regard to the circumstances which caused his death, are to be received with the same degree of credit as the testimony of the deceased would have been had he survived and been examined on oath;⁹ and where this view obtains it is not error to instruct the jury to that effect.¹⁰ But while the awful situation of the declarant in prospect of immediate dissolution may act as powerfully on his conscience as the obligation of an oath, it must be remembered that proof of this description is classed as hearsay evidence, and is admitted under an exception to the general rule from considerations of public necessity; it is the only case in which evidence is admitted against the accused without his being confronted by the witness and having an opportunity of cross-examination; and again such declarations are frequently made when the declarant is in the throes of mortal agony, when the accuracy of his memory and the coolness of his judgment are to some extent impaired and it is impossible for him to make a full, clear, and accurate statement of the facts. And it is always to be considered that the acts of violence of which the deceased may have spoken were likely to have occurred under circumstances of confusion and surprise calculated to prevent their being accurately remembered and leading to the omission of facts important to the truth and completeness of the narrative. In view of these facts such declarations should always be admitted with caution and weighed by the jury with the greatest deliberation in the light of all the evidence in the case.¹¹ Again, from a personal observation of a witness on the stand, from his manner of testifying, and the apparent accuracy or inaccuracy of his memory, the jury are enabled to judge of the truth of his statements in a manner which gives a weight and force to testimony given in open court that evidence given in any other way should not receive. It has therefore been considered reversible error to instruct the jury that dying declarations are entitled to the same credit and force as if the statements had been regularly sworn to before the court and jury, as this would give to secondary evidence the same weight which is due to the direct testimony of a witness subject to cross-examination.¹²

13. IMPEACHMENT. Dying declarations are open to impeachment in any of the modes by which the testimony of the deceased could have been impeached had he been alive and testifying under oath.¹³ Thus it is competent to prove statements made by the declarant at other times in conflict with his dying declaration, although they were not made when he was in extremis or under the apprehension of approaching dissolution; and to enable the jury properly to weigh his dying declaration it is open to the accused to prove all that he said on the subject at any time after the fatal occurrence.¹⁴ There is, however, some authority to the effect that evidence of statements in contradiction of dying declarations is not admissible unless such statements were a part of the res gestæ, or were made under

A charge in relation to dying declarations that "it is the experience of mankind that the pronouncement of immediate death, from which there is no hope of recovery, is always sufficient to influence persons so situated to speak the truth" is erroneous, although the court also charged that such declarations are not to be given such weight as if deceased had testified while subject to cross-examination. *People v. oath or in contemplation of death.¹⁵ Of course the rule requiring that a foundation be laid by first asking the witness whether he had made contradictory statements at other times has no application to this class of cases.¹⁶ Whatever may be the rule as to the competency of witnesses the accused may always show by way of impeachment that the declarant was without an enlightened conscience or a deep sense of accountability to his maker; for where the declarant was without fear of final retribution, it cannot be said that the solemnity of the occasion was equivalent to the sanction of an oath, and his dying declarations should not be given much consideration by the jury.¹⁷ It is competent for the accused to impeach dying declarations introduced in evidence against him by showing that the deceased because of general bad character was unworthy of belief,¹⁸ that his general reputation for truth and veracity in the community in which he lived was such that he could not be believed under oath,¹⁹ or that when he made the statement he was in a reckless, irreverent state of mind and entertained feelings of malice and hostility toward the accused.²⁰

14. CORROBORATION. When dying declarations have been successfully impeached, it is competent for the prosecution to introduce evidence in corroboration.²¹ But statements of the deceased other than dying declarations are not admissible for this purpose.²²

D. Proceedings at Inquest—1. ADMISSIBILITY IN GENERAL. As a general rule the proceedings before the coroner are not admissible in evidence at a trial for murder,²³ at least when the object is merely to corroborate defendant's testimony upon the trial.²⁴

When a person testifies at an inquest as an accused or arrested party, his testimony cannot be used against him upon a subsequent trial of an indictment growing out of the inquest, unless it has been voluntarily given after he has been fully advised of all his rights, and has been given an opportunity to avail himself of them;²⁵ and the logical and necessary

Reason of rule.—These proceedings are usually conducted in the absence of the accused without the aid of counsel, and often in the absence of most material witnesses, both for the prosecution and the defense. To admit these proceedings, and a verdict thus arrived at, to be used as evidence upon the trial, to influence, perhaps to control, the verdict of the jury, would lead to the subversion and final overthrow of the jury system; while in nearly every case the rights, either of the commonwealth or of the accused, would be inevitably prejudiced. *Whitehurst v. corollary of this rule is that when a person testifies simply as a witness and not as a party, his testimony can be used against him even though he is afterward indicted and tried for the commission of the crime disclosed by the inquest.²⁶ The test of admissibility is whether or not such testimony was voluntarily given.²⁷ Defendant's testimony at an inquest will be presumed to be voluntary in the absence of proof to the contrary,²⁸ and will not be rendered inadmissible against him as an involuntary statement because made under oath.²⁹

3. TESTIMONY OF WITNESSES. Testimony of a witness at a coroner's inquest, reduced to writing and duly certified, is competent evidence on the trial of one subsequently indicted for the murder, who was present at the inquest, and given opportunity to cross-examine the witness, where such witness has since died;³⁰ but the fact that the witness is ill,³¹ or that he has removed from the state,³² is not sufficient to render his testimony before the coroner admissible. Such testimony is admissible for the purpose of contradicting the statement of the witness made on the trial of the person accused,³³ but not to prove the existence of any fact deposed to by the witness.³⁴ Where such evidence has been admitted without objection both sides can use it.³⁵

5. METHOD OF PROOF. Parol evidence of the testimony given at a coroner's inquest is not admissible, when the record can be used.³⁷ Where, however, the testimony at a coroner's inquest is not reduced to writing, parol evidence of what was sworn to at such inquest is admissible as being the best evidence procurable,³⁸ but the proper foundation for secondary evidence must first be laid.³⁹

E. Weight and Sufficiency — 1. PROOF OF CORPUS DELICTI AND IDENTITY OF DECEASED — a. In General. In a prosecution for homicide, as in the case of prosecutions for other offenses, the corpus delicti must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.⁴⁰ In homicide it involves two elements — first, the fact of the death of the deceased, and second, the existence of the criminal agency of another as the cause of death.⁴¹ In some cases a distinction is made as to the evidence necessary to coroner, and admits his signature thereto, it is error to refuse to allow it to be read in argument on the ground that it was not sufficiently identified); State v. Terry, 23 S. C. 603.

Agency of defendant.— In some of the cases the agency of the person accused in causing the death has been stated as an element of the corpus delicti in homicide. Edwards v. Territory, (Ariz. 1904) 76 Pac. 458 [citing Ruloff v. People, 18 N. Y. 179, which, however, does not support this view, but is to the contrary]; Cavaness v. State, 43 Ark. 331; State v. Dickson, 78 Mo. 438; State v. Leuth, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. 94, 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 48; Williams v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 65 S. W. 1059; Lovelady v. State, 14 Tex. App. 545. These cases, however, are not supported by authority. The true rule is, as stated in the cases cited at the beginning of this note, that the elements of the corpus delicti in homicide are (1) the death of the deceased, and (2) the fact that it was caused by the criminal agency of some other person, and that the question establish these branches, it being said that the first must be established by direct and positive evidence, while the second may be established by presumptive or circumstantial evidence;⁴² but in the majority of cases this distinction is not made, and it is held generally that the corpus delicti may be established by circumstantial evidence.⁴³

b. Fact of Death. A conviction for murder cannot be supported unless the body has been found or there is equivalent proof of death by circumstantial evidence to that result,⁴⁴ the more modern rule being that the fact of death as well as other branches of the corpus delicti may be established by circumstantial or presumptive evidence,⁴⁵ this rule growing out of the fact that otherwise in many cases a conviction of the murderer could not be had. But great caution must be observed in acting on presumptive or circumstantial evidence in the absence of direct proof of death.⁴⁶ In some jurisdictions, however, the rule is stated to be that death must be proved directly either by finding and identification of the body, or by proof of criminal violence sufficient to produce death and of defendant's agency is not an element, but is merely a fact to be proved after proof of the corpus delicti. State v. Wehr, 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 478, 6 Ohio N. P. 345 [disapproving State v. Leuth, supra]; and other cases cited supra, this note.

The manner and means in and by which the crime was committed is not an element of the corpus delicti. State v. Knapp, 70 Ohio St. 380, 71 N. E. 705.

The identity of the deceased has also been held not to constitute an element of the corpus delicti. People v. Palmer, 109 N. Y. 110, 16 N. E. 529, 4 Am. St. Rep. 423.

42. Pitts v. State, 43 Miss. 472, holding that while the fact of death is always required to be proved by direct testimony or by presumptive evidence of the strongest kind, the criminal agency may be established by circumstantial evidence or presumptive reasoning upon all the facts and circumstances of the case. And see Edwards v. Territory, (Ariz. 1904) 76 Pac. 458; People v. Bennett, 49 N. Y. 137, holding that when direct evidence is given as to one branch, circumstantial evidence may suffice to prove the other. See also supra, VIII, B, 1, a.

No. 15,741b. But see People v. Wilson, 3 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 199, holding that where a murder, although at sea, was near the shore, and there was strong reason to suppose that the body would have been discovered had there been a murder committed, identification of a body which was found was necessary.

46. Campbell v. People, 159 Ill. 9, 42 N. E. 123, 50 Am. St. Rep. 134; U. S. v. Brown, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,656a (requiring that the evidence be weighed "with scrupulous circumspection"); U. S. v. Williams, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,707, 1 Cliff. 5 (requiring strong exerted in such manner as to account for the disappearance of the body,⁴⁷ and by statute in some states the finding of the body, or a portion thereof, sufficient to identify it, is imperative.⁴⁸ Under other statutes, direct proof of death is required.⁴⁹ Direct testimony to the effect that the deceased is dead may be supplied by language of witnesses, which conclusively indicates such fact.⁵⁰ In case the killing of deceased at the hands of defendant is not seriously questioned upon the trial but the defense is justification, it seems that such strict proof of the fact of death as would be required in other cases is unnecessary.⁵¹ Where accused asserts as a defense that defendant had been seen alive after the time when by the theory of the proof on the part of the prosecution he is supposed to have been dead, he must establish such defense by the preponderance of the evidence.⁵²

e. Identity of Deceased — (I) IN GENERAL. Proof of the killing of a person of the same name is sufficient to prove the killing of the person named in indictment.⁵³ The identity of the person named with the person killed may be established by his occupation,⁵⁴ or by circumstantial evidence.⁵⁵

(II) IDENTIFICATION OF BODY. Where remains have been found which are alleged to be those of the murdered person, such fact must be established by full proof.⁵⁶ Circumstantial evidence is sufficient for this purpose,⁵⁷ even in those states in which the fact of death is required to be proved by direct evidence.⁵⁸

48. See cases cited infra, this note.

Under the Texas statute no person may be convicted of any grade of homicide unless the body of the deceased or portions of it are found and sufficiently identified to establish the fact of the death of the person charged to have been killed. Jackson v. State, 29 Tex. App. 458, 16 S. W. 247; Walker v. State, 14 Tex. App. 609, holding the identification of a body insufficient. This proof of identity must be established by evidence outside of the death of the person charged to have been killed. Gay v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 450, 60 S. W. 771, holding evidence insufficient.

49. See the cases cited infra, this note.

Under the New York penal code, a conviction for homicide cannot be had "unless death of the person alleged to have been killed and the fact of the killing by the defendant, as alleged, are each established as independent facts, the former by direct proof, and the latter beyond a reasonable doubt." See People v. Place, 157 N. Y. 584, 52 N. E. 576. Where the death has been shown by direct evidence, the fact that it has been produced by criminal means and by whom may be established by circumstantial evidence. People v. Benham, 160 N. Y. 402, 55 N. E. 11, 14 N. Y. Cr. 188.

The Montana statute is similar to the New York statute with the exception that it does not provide that the facts shall be "each" established as independent facts and it has received the same construction. State v. Calder, 23 Mont. 504, 59 Pac. 903; State v. Pepo, 23 Mont. 473, 59 Pac. 721, holding that the death of a human being is directly proved by the identification of certain teeth and bones as those of an adult person.

Direct evidence of an accomplice to the fact that a certain person is dead is rendered sufficient proof of his death when corroborated by independent evidence, indirect though it may be, which tends to establish such fact. State v. Calder, 23 Mont. 504, 59 Pac. 903, holding the evidence sufficient.

existed, a sufficient basis for the conclusion that the result arose from the known cause is afforded.⁶³ A mere possibility that death resulted from some cause other than the act of accused will not overcome facts proved leaving no rational grounds for doubt,⁶⁹ nor will an inference from incompetent evidence.⁷⁰ The cause of death may be established by circumstantial evidence,⁷¹ especially when no question as to the cause of death is raised at the trial;⁷² and in some cases without the use of expert testimony,⁷³ especially where there is no suggestion of death from any cause other than the wound inflicted, and deceased is shown to have been of previous good health and to have received proper medical treatment.⁷⁴ It is not necessary that the evidence that death was caused by criminal means should be obtained from the body of the deceased.⁷⁵ So an autopsy is not essential.⁷⁶ When an autopsy is made its probative effect is not destroyed by the fact that it is not complete,⁷⁷ but its conclusiveness is materially affected by the fact that it is made at some considerable time after death.⁷⁸ In case evidence as to the effect of poison as causing death is insufficient, a conviction cannot be sustained, although defendant admits the administering of the poison.⁷⁹

e. Time and Place. The place of the offense may be proved by circumstantial evidence.⁸⁰ It need not be established by one who witnessed the infliction of the wounds.⁸¹ So the fact that death occurred before the finding of the indictment may also be established by inference from circumstances in evidence.⁸²

be established by the uncorroborated extrajudicial confession of the accused.⁸⁴ Corroboration may be afforded by circumstantial evidence,⁸⁵ and such suppletory evidence need not be complete⁸⁶ or conclusive⁸⁷ in itself. It would seem that a judicial confession is sufficient without corroboration.⁸⁸ While the corpus delicti cannot be proven by the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice,⁸⁹ such testimony may be sufficient if aided and corroborated by the confession of the accused.⁹⁰

g. Proof in Infanticide Cases. It is of course as necessary to establish the corpus delicti in infanticide as in other homicide cases.⁹¹ It must be proved that the child was born alive,⁹² but for this purpose circumstantial or presumptive evidence is sufficient.⁹³ Circumstantial evidence may also be sufficient to show that a newly born infant was the child of accused.⁹⁴

2. ELEMENTS OF THE OFFENSE — a. Intent. An intent to kill where necessary to a conviction of murder must be established beyond a reasonable doubt,⁹⁵ and it has been stated that, where the intent to kill is conceived on the instant of inflicting the wound, more care and caution is required from the jury than where the intent is derived from a series of acts manifesting deliberation.⁹⁶ The intent to kill may be inferred from circumstances,⁹⁷ such as the use of a deadly considered by the jury. Deliberation and premeditation cannot be inferred from the mere fact of killing,²¹ or the use of a deadly weapon,²² in the absence of a showing of other facts. Premeditation may be inferred from express malice in case the other ingredients of the crime are established.²³ In determining the weight to be given threats, as establishing a predetermined intention to kill, all the circumstances under which they were made are to be considered.²⁴ Where provocation intervenes between the threat and the killing, the threat is not conclusive of the fact that killing was done in pursuance thereof, and not upon the passion produced by the provocation.²⁵

d. Motive. Proof of a motive is not essential to a conviction,²⁶ even in cases of purely circumstantial evidence,²⁷ although when the evidence connecting accused with the crime is merely circumstantial, the jury may properly consider the absence of motive as favorable to accused, and give it such weight as they

Lying in wait.—Evidence that the mother was killed in the house, while her daughter was at the barn, that defendant desired to effect a temporary concealment of the crime, and that the daughter was killed on her return to the house, would warrant a finding that the murder of the daughter was accomplished by "lying in wait." *State v. may deem proper.²³ But where there is direct evidence of a deliberate killing without provocation the question of motive need not be submitted to the jury.²⁹ Malice having been established, proof of other motive is unessential.³⁰ Where by reason of the circumstantial nature of the evidence, the question of motive becomes important, if not controlling, as showing the cogency of the circumstances, it is necessary that facts be established from which motive may be implied, and a motive cannot be supplied by mere speculation.³¹

3. PARTICIPATION OF ACCUSED IN THE CRIME — a. In General. The evidence must be sufficient to show beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant committed the crime charged.³² Defendant's previous good character may be considered as tending to create a reasonable doubt.³³ Dying declarations may be overcome by other evidence.³⁴

b. Direct Identification of Accused. Direct evidence of the identity of accused must be such as to leave no reasonable doubt.³⁵ It is not necessary that the witnesses swear positively as to identity, it is sufficient that they swear as to their belief.³⁶ Where, from the circumstances proved on an indictment for murder, the jury believe that there is a reasonable doubt whether the witnesses might not be mistaken as to his identity, the accused is entitled to an acquittal.³⁷ The personal identity of the accused may be established by the testimony of a witness that he was familiar with and recognized his voice.³⁸

c. Circumstantial Evidence—(1) GENERAL RULES. In order to show the connection of the accused with the crime, circumstantial evidence may be resorted to,³⁹ and frequently the body of the offense and the identity of the murderer are established by the same circumstances.⁴⁰ In drawing inferences from the proved facts, great care and caution must be employed.⁴¹ Each fact which is necessary to the conclusion must be distinctly and independently proved by competent evidence,⁴² although failure to prove a particular fact does not destroy the chain of evidence, but only fails to give it corroboration in that particular.⁴³ All the facts proved must be consistent with each other and with the main fact.⁴⁴ It is not sufficient that the circumstances produce a strong probability,⁴⁵ or a strong suspicion.⁴⁶ All the circumstances taken together should be of a conclusive nature and tendency, leading on the whole to a satisfactory conclusion and producing in effect a reasonable and moral certainty that the accused and no one else committed the act.⁴⁷ Where circumstances tend to show the guilt of accused, the absence of evidence of any other guilty agent may be considered as evidence against the accused upon the question of whether he committed the homicide.⁴⁸

(ii) MOTIVE AS INCRIMINATING CIRCUMSTANCE. Where the case depends on circumstantial evidence and the circumstances point toward accused as the criminal, the probabilities created by such circumstances are much strengthened when a motive appears.⁴⁹

(III) THREATS AND ILL-WILL AS CIRCUMSTANCES. The guilt of accused cannot be established by mere threats in the absence of other evidence connecting him with the crime,⁵⁰ although the evidence does not establish that any other person might have committed the offense.⁵¹

(IV) FALSE AND CONTRADICTIONARY STATEMENTS. In case the accused has made false or contradictory explanations of incriminating circumstances, such fact in connection with other circumstances may be sufficient to warrant the inference of his guilt.⁵² So likewise where he has made false and improbable⁵³ or contradictory⁵⁴ statements with regard to the occurrence or as to his whereabouts,⁵⁵ or where he has given false explanations as to the absence of deceased.⁵⁶

(V) CONFESSION OF ACCUSED OR ACCOMPLICE IN CONNECTION WITH CIRCUMSTANCES. In many cases extrajudicial confessions and admissions of accused have been held sufficient, when corroborated by other circumstances, to establish his guilt,⁵⁷ and the same is true of confessions of co-defendants and accomplices.⁵⁸ The confession of accused alone may be sufficient in case the corpus delicti is established by other evidence.⁵⁹ In many states a conviction cannot be had upon uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice,⁶⁰ but in other states such a conviction may be supported.⁶¹ But in addition to the suspicion which must attend the evidence of an accomplice, his evidence must be subjected to the same tests as to reliability and force as that of other witnesses.⁶²

but where a common design to kill is established, such proof is unnecessary.⁸¹ Where a conspiracy is established, the identity of the member actually committing the homicide need not be established.⁸² The common design may be established by circumstantial evidence.⁸³ The evidence to establish that a defendant aided and abetted in a homicide must be such as to establish the fact beyond a reasonable doubt.⁸⁴ The fact that a bystander does not interfere to prevent a homicide is not sufficient to establish that he is an accessory thereto.⁸⁵

4. COMMISSION OF OR ATTEMPT TO COMMIT OTHER OFFENSE. On a trial for homicide committed during the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate, another felony, the fact that defendant was engaged in the commission of a felony at the time of the killing must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.⁸⁶ Where the homicide is committed in resisting arrest by, or in escaping from, an officer acting in the discharge of his duty, it must be clearly shown that the accused had knowledge of the official character of deceased, in order to convict him of murder in the first degree.⁸⁷

In Pennsylvania it is held that if the evidence clearly establishes the killing by the prisoner purposely with a deadly weapon and if the prisoner's evidence under a plea of self-defense leaves his extenuation in doubt, he cannot be acquitted of all crime, but must be convicted of homicide in some of its grades. Com. v. Drum, 58 Pa. St. 9.

The defense of accidental killing is a denial of criminal intent, and throws upon the state the burden of proving such intent beyond a reasonable doubt, and the accused is not required to sustain such defense by a preponderance of testimony. State v. Cross, 42 W. Va. 253, 24 S. E. 996.

97. Com. v. York, 9 Mete. (Mass.) 93, 43 Am. Dec. 373 (self-defense); Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Brown v. State, 62 N. J. State*, 60 Miss. 714] (holding that it is error, on a murder trial, to instruct the jury that the presumption of malice arising from the deliberate use of a deadly weapon must control, unless from the evidence it appears "to their satisfaction" that there were circumstances of excuse or justification); Ingram v. State, 62 Miss. 142 [overruling Harris v. State, 47 Miss. 318]; Hawthorne v. State, 58 Miss. 778; Schaffer v. State, 22 Nebr. 557, 35 N. W. 384, 3 Am. St. Rep. 274.

In North Carolina the rule is laid down that when killing with a deadly weapon is proven or admitted by the prisoner, the burden of showing mitigating circumstances is on the prisoner, who must prove them not by preponderance of testimony or beyond a reasonable doubt, but to the satisfaction of the jury, and that if the jury are left in doubt as to the instigating circumstances, the case is murder. State v. Barrett, 132 N. C. 1005, 43 S. E. 832; State v. Byers, 100 N. C. 512, 6 S. E. 420.

In Illinois it is held that an instruction to the effect that it is "incumbent upon defendant satisfactorily to establish" the defense of excuse or justification is erroneous as requiring a higher degree of proof than is required by law. Halloway v. People, 181 Ill. 544, 54 N. E. 1030; Wacaser v. People, 134 Ill. 438, 25 N. E. 564, 23 Am. St. Rep. 683 (holding that an instruction which requires the jury to be "satisfied" that the killing was done in self-defense, in order to acquit on that ground, is erroneous); Alexander v. People, 96 Ill. 96.

b. Testimony of Accused. The rule has been laid down that in determining the weight the jury shall give to defendant's testimony on the issue of self-defense, they should consider along with the other circumstances having any bearing in the matter the fact that he is defendant and the fact if they so find that his testimony is in conflict with other evidence in the case.⁹⁹

c. Evidence Adduced by Prosecution. Facts or circumstances in mitigation or justification may be established by the evidence on the part of the state as well as by evidence introduced by the prisoner.¹ Thus if on the state's evidence alone self-defense is established by a preponderance of the evidence, the accused is entitled to an acquittal, although he introduces no evidence in his part.²

8. PRINCIPALS AND ACCESSARIES. To justify a conviction of a person for aiding and abetting a homicide the evidence must establish that he did or said something showing his consent to the felonious purpose and contributing to its execution.³

Texas.—Wagner v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 255, 33 S. W. 124; Jones v. State, 13 Tex. App. 1.

Rule applied to evidence of self-defense see Henson v. State, 112 Ala. 41, 21 So. 79; Miller v. State, 107 Ala. 40, 19 So. 37; Whitaker v. State, 106 Ala. 30, 17 So. 456; State v. Porter, 34 Iowa 131; McKenna v. State, 61 Miss. 589; Gravely v. State, 38 Nebr. 871, 57 N. W. 751.

In California "section 1105 of the Penal Code provides: 'Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon him, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justified or excusable.' The section casts upon the defendant the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse the commission of the homicide. This does not mean that he must prove such circumstances by a preponderance of the evidence, but that the presumption that the killing was felonious arises from the mere proof by the prosecution of the homicide, and the burden of proving the circumstances of mitigation, etc., is thereby cast upon him. He is only bound under this rule to produce such evidence as will create in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt of his guilt of the offense charged. . . . It can make no difference whether this reasonable doubt is the result of evidence on the part of the defendant tending to show circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse the killing, or from other evidence coming from him or the prosecution." People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 160, 163, 22 Pac. 127, 1549 [overruling People v. Raten, 63 Cal. 421; People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387]. To the same effect see People v. Marshall, 112 Cal. 422, 44 Pac. 718; People v. Lanagan, 81 Cal. 142, 22 Pac. 482; People v. Elliott, 80 Cal. 296, 22 Pac. 207. See also People v. West, 49 Cal. 610; People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 476. Compare People v. Stonecipher, 6 Cal. 405.

In New Jersey a distinction is made between the obligation to make proof of facts and circumstances upon which a particular defense rests and the effect of such evidence upon the ultimate issue of the trial, and it is held that the facts and circumstances relied on to establish self-defense must be shown to the satisfaction of the jury, but that, after the facts are proven, the accused is entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt with respect to his guilt upon the entire evidence in the case. Brown v. State, 62 N. J. L. 666, 42 Atl. 811.

them beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused is guilty. When the state has proved an unlawful homicide with a deadly weapon, and has identified the accused as the perpetrator, it has shown all that is essential to a conviction of murder.⁶ Evidence such as to create a reasonable doubt whether deceased had drawn a pistol at the time of the shooting should be considered in determining the grade of the homicide.⁷

b. Doubt as to Degree. Where the jury believe defendant guilty from the evidence, but have a reasonable doubt as to the degree of the crime, they should convict of the lesser degree.⁸

IX. TRIAL.²³

A. Course and Conduct of Trial—1. IN GENERAL. With respect to the argument and conduct of counsel,²⁴ the right to open and conclude,²⁵ the remarks and conduct of the trial judge,²⁶ the custody and conduct of the jury,²⁷ and other matters relating to the conduct of the trial,²⁸ the same rules that obtain in criminal prosecutions generally²⁹ apply in prosecutions for homicide.

2. EXPERT EXAMINATION OR EXHUMATION OF BODY OF DECEASED. An examination by experts, for the defense, of the heart and clothes of a murdered man, will not be ordered before the trial, unless it is shown that such examination is necessary to bring the facts properly before the jury.³⁰ It has been held that a conviction of murder in the first degree will not be set aside because the prosecuting attorney, and not the coroner, exhumed the body of deceased, in order to submit to the jury conclusive evidence that a bullet from the pistol of the accused had caused the death of deceased.³¹ In Kentucky it has been held that there is no law requiring the court, at the instance of an accused person, to have the body of deceased taken up and examined at the expense of the state or county, for the jury room the weapon with which the homicide was committed, and the clothing worn by the deceased at the time of the homicide.⁴⁴ A threatening note addressed to deceased, found stuck on the fence at the point from which the fatal shot was fired, which is proved to be in the accused's handwriting and to have been written on a leaf torn from a blank-book belonging to him, is admissible in evidence.⁴⁵ There is no error in allowing the jury to go to the front of the court-room without accused, to view a buggy alleged to be the one used by him and deceased at the time of the homicide.⁴⁶

4. RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE — a. In General. The rules governing the reception of evidence in criminal prosecutions generally⁴⁷ are applicable in prosecutions for homicide.⁴⁸

S. W. 978, holding that it was proper to exhibit to the jury a gun found the morning following the homicide, hidden between the mattresses of a bed in co-defendant's house.

Part of floor of house.—It is competent to admit in evidence a board taken from the floor of the house in which the accused lived at the time of the homicide, upon which were said to be blood-stains; and the fact that it was cut from the floor nine or ten months after the homicide does not affect its competency. State v. People, 38 Ill. 527 (where the theory of the defense is that deceased shot himself with a pistol found near him, and after the jury retire they are, without defendant's knowledge, permitted to take a pistol which has been used at the trial, but not proved to be the one found near deceased, and experiment with it, a conviction will be reversed).

Evidence taken at coroner's inquest.—On a trial for homicide, parts of the testimony of the accused at a coroner's inquest may be introduced in evidence against him, without the introduction of his whole testimony, the accused being entitled to introduce the remainder. Emery v. State, 92 Wis. 146, 65 N. W. 848. See also supra, VIII, D.

The proceedings on a preliminary examination need not be introduced by the state in a prosecution for homicide. State v. Guilieri, 26 Nev. 31, 62 Pac. 497.

b. Dying Declarations. Regularly the court should require it to be shown that the declarations of deceased were made under a sense of impending death before admitting them in evidence;⁴⁹ but it has been held that if the proper foundation is laid after their admission no error is committed.⁵⁰ The question whether the declarations of a deceased person were made under a sense of impending death, so as to be admissible as dying declarations, is for the court;⁵¹ but it may in its discretion allow the preliminary inquiry necessary to their admission to be conducted in the presence of the jury.⁵² Good practice would suggest, however, that such inquiry be conducted in the absence of the jury when properly insisted on.⁵³ The scope to be allowed to such inquiry is in the discretion of the court, and may include the whole conversation between the witness and deceased, including the conversation objected to, if necessary to a clear understanding of the facts, and provided the court makes it clear to the jury that the inquiry is merely preliminary.⁵⁴ The judge cannot require the testimony introduced to lay the foundation for offering dying declarations, to be reduced to writing, in the absence of disagreement between him and accused's counsel, as to what that testimony is.⁵⁵ Where a paper has been admitted as a dying declaration accused can afterward introduce evidence as to the condition and state of mind of deceased when it was made;⁵⁶ and on the examination of a witness as to dying declarations, it is not error for the judge to make inquiry of the witness on this subject.⁵⁷ It is error for the court, in passing on a motion to exclude all testimony of dying declarations, to sustain the motion only as to the testimony of one witness who had stated that deceased said nothing about impending death, and whose testimony was therefore favorable to accused, and to deny it as to the rest of the testimony.⁵⁸ Whether the prosecution shall, at the instance of the accused, be required to introduce the dying statement of deceased rests in the sound discretion of the court.⁵⁹

B. Questions of Law and Fact—1. IN GENERAL. The general principles defining the province of court and jury as to questions of law and fact are treated elsewhere.⁶⁰

Proof of express malice.—Where, in a case of homicide, malice was to be inferred from all the circumstances of the case, and the accused had put in evidence to some extent rebutting this presumption, it was held that the prosecution could then prove express malice. Bird v. State, 14 Ga. 43.

Threats made by the deceased cannot be admitted on the trial for murder, until there has been proof of a hostile demonstration on his part. State v. Harrison, 111 La. 304, 35 So. 560. See supra, VIII, B, 15, d, (VI).

2. DEADLY WEAPON. As a general rule the question whether or not an instrument or a weapon is a deadly one is for the decision of the court.⁶¹ This rule, however, is subject to the qualification that where the character of the particular weapon — whether deadly or not — is in doubt, or depends upon the manner in which it is used, the question should be left to the jury under appropriate instructions.⁶² within the province of the jury, and it is for the jury to determine whether or not there was any motive for the homicide.⁶⁵

4. PASSION AND PROVOCATION. The sufficiency of provocation to excuse or extenuate murder is generally a question of law.⁶⁶ Whether such provocation existed in the particular case is one of fact.⁶⁷ So also the better rule seems to be that the question of reasonable cooling time is for the jury,⁶⁸ although there are cases to the contrary.⁶⁹

5. EXCUSE OR JUSTIFICATION. What facts excuse or justify a killing is a question of law;⁷⁰ whether such facts exist in the particular case is a question for the jury.⁷¹

6. INSANITY OR INTOXICATION. Whether or not the accused was insane⁷² or intoxicated⁷³ at the time he committed the crime is a question for the jury to determine.

7. SELF-DEFENSE. What constitutes self-defense is a question of law for the court.⁷⁴ But it is purely a question of fact for the jury to determine whether defendant, at the time he slew deceased, had reasonable ground to believe his own life to be in danger.⁷⁵ It is also a question of fact for the jury to determine

Louisiana.—Juries in Louisiana are judges in criminal cases both of the law and of the evidence, and the question of "cooling time" is one of fact. State v. Cooper, 112 La. 281, 36 So. 350, 104 Am. St. Rep. 447.

In all cases where the time of cooling may be under consideration, whether the time be regarded as evidence of the fact of cooling, Dying declarations.—The weight of dying declarations as evidence is a question for the jury (State v. Davis, 134 N. C. 633, 46 S. E. 722), and if inconsistent with each other, it is the duty of the jury to weigh them, and to determine which, or whether either, is to be believed (Moore v. State, 12 Ala. 764, 46 Am. Dec. 276). See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," § 574.

Although one pleads guilty in the first degree, the question of degree is for the jury. Sanders v. State, 18 Tex. App. 372.

Although defendant offers no evidence, and all the evidence for the state tends to show only murder in the first degree, the question of degree should be submitted to the jury. State v. Locklear, 118 N. C. 1154, 24 S. E. 410; State v. Gadberry, 117 N. C. 811, 23 S. E. 477.

Not arbitrary discretion.—The jury has not an arbitrary discretion to render a verdict of murder in the first or second degree. The degree of murder depends upon the facts as the jury find them to be, and applying the law laid down by the court to that state of facts. State v. Cole, 132 N. C. 1069, 44 S. E. 391; State v. Freeman, 122 N. C. 1012, 29 S. E. 94 [explaining and distinguishing State v. Gadberry, 117 N. C. 811, 23 N. E. 477].

power in assessing punishment, the court has no power to determine or control the extent of such punishment.⁹⁵

C. Instructions — 1. PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY — a. Province of Court —

(1) IN GENERAL. In a prosecution for homicide, defendant is entitled to a plain, accurate, and unquestioned statement by the court of the law of the case, and such statement should be given to the jury directly, connectedly, and affirmatively, and in such a manner as to show its applicability to the facts in evidence.⁹⁶

(II) NECESSITY FOR PARTICULAR INSTRUCTIONS—(A) In General. On a trial of an indictment for homicide, it is the duty of the court to specifically charge the jury upon every phase of the law of homicide presented by the issues, applicable to the particular facts of the case.⁹⁷ Thus it is the duty of the trial court in an indictment for murder to give the jury instructions as to the technical meaning of the words of the statute "wilful," "deliberate," "malicious," and "premeditated," and not merely to use the words unexplained.⁹⁸

(B) Reasonable Doubt. It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury that in order to convict the accused the prosecution must prove the charge against him beyond a reasonable doubt.⁹⁹

95. Washington v. State, 125 Ala. 40, 28 So. 78; Edgar v. State, 43 Ala. 312; People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387, holding further that where defendant, on a trial for murder, is serving out a life sentence, it is proper that the jury should be put in possession of that fact, under instructions limiting its application, that they may be guided thereby in fixing a punishment, should they convict of murder in the first degree.

Waiver of capital punishment.—A state's solicitor, on a prosecution for murder, has no authority to waive capital punishment with the consent of defendant, since such waiver is an invasion of the province of the jury, who alone can fix the punishment upon conviction. Kilgore v. State, 124 Ala. 24, 27 So. 4; Bankhead v. State, 124 Ala. 14, 26 So. 979.

Freidrich*, 4 Wash. 204, 29 Pac. 1055, 30 Pac. 328, 31 Pac. 332 (holding that a defendant indicted for murder is not entitled to an instruction calling the attention of the jury to his personal appearance and demeanor during the trial).

(c) Circumstantial Evidence. An instruction merely defining the nature of circumstantial evidence, or stating the degree of certainty required as compared to or in connection with direct evidence, is proper.¹ Where there is direct evidence sufficient, if believed, to convict, an instruction on circumstantial evidence, although there be such evidence in the case, is properly refused.²

(II) APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE. The charge of the trial court to the jury should be applicable to the evidence introduced in the case; and while a charge requested may be correct as an abstract proposition of law, yet it is not error to refuse to give such charge where there is no evidence in the case to sustain it.³

Likewise an instruction which ignores positive evidence given in the case is erroneous.⁴

(IV) WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE. While it is within the province of the court to sum up and review the evidence for the benefit of the jury, it is exclusively the function of the jury to pass upon the weight and sufficiency of the evidence, and an instruction which assumes a fact, or charges on the weight of evidence, is erroneous.⁵ Where, however, the evidence offered in defense to a charge of homicide is legally insufficient for that purpose, an instruction to the jury to that effect is a declaration of law, and not an invasion of the province of the jury to determine the facts.⁶ And where there is no dispute as to any particular fact in a prosecution for homicide, an instruction which assumes such fact to be true is not open to the objection that it is a charge upon the facts, or upon the weight of evidence.⁷

(v) ASSUMPTION OF FACTS. While the various constitutional and statutory provisions prohibiting judges from charging jurors with respect to matters of fact do not prohibit them from determining and charging the jury whether there is any evidence with regard to an issue, or tending to sustain a fact on which a verdict may depend,⁸ yet it is error for the court in its charge to the jury to assume the existence of essential facts concerning which there is conflict of evidence.⁹

b. Duty of Jury. While it is true that the court is not invading the province of the jury where in its charge it enjoins upon the jury a full, careful, and conscientious consideration of the case, and a fearless discharge of their duty,¹¹ yet, since the circumstances attending the homicide, and the direct evidence in the case are questions of fact for the jury to decide, it is error for the court to charge as to the weight and sufficiency of such evidence, or to draw inferences from circumstances, and thus invade the province of the jury.¹²

2. CORPUS DELICTI. The trial court should charge the jury that the burden of proving the corpus delicti is upon the prosecution, and where it is not proved they should acquit the accused.¹³ While the court may charge that the corpus delicti can be established by circumstantial evidence, yet it need not distinguish between circumstantial and other evidence tending to establish the corpus delicti.¹⁴

3. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE — a. In General. The court in its charge to the jury should accurately define the offense charged, setting forth the essential elements thereof.¹⁵ It is generally sufficient, however, to charge the offense in the exact

the presumption of facts respecting the intention of accused, where the evidence warrants it, yet the jury should be instructed that the presumption must be drawn by them, and does not arise by implication of law.²¹ Since it is not the intention to use a deadly weapon, but the intention to kill, of which the use of the weapon is evidence, that constitutes the crime of murder, this distinction should be made clear to the jury in the instruction on this point.²² However, a charge that an intention to kill may be inferred from the use of such deadly weapon is not erroneous.²³ Where defendant sets up self-defense, an instruction that the law presumes that he intended to kill deceased from the fact that he killed him, and that, unless it be shown that his intention was other than his act indicated, he should be found guilty, is erroneous, since under such circumstances defendant might have intended to kill, and yet have been guiltless.²⁴

c. Malice—(1) IN GENERAL. Under a statute making malice an element of the offense, the general rule is that it is fatal error to fail to charge fully and explicitly on that point.²⁵ Thus where it is shown that a homicide has been committed with a deadly weapon, and no circumstances of mitigation appear, an instruction that the law implies malice is proper.²⁶ In some jurisdictions, however, it is held to be error for the court to instruct the jury that the law presumes malice from the facts and circumstances connected with the homicide, such as the use of a deadly weapon, since such presumption is a presumption of fact and clearly within the province of the jury.²⁷

(11) DEFINITION OF. The general rule is that on an indictment for homicide the court should in its instructions specifically define the word "malice" as used as an element of murder.²⁸ The court, however, need not define "malice aforethought" where it has also defined express and implied malice.²⁹

Express and implied malice differentiated.

—An instruction in a homicide case which defines implied malice as the negative of express malice, and as negating the elements thereof, is erroneous, since the only difference between express and implied malice is the state of mind in which the malicious intent to kill is formed. Patterson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 60 S. W. 557.

(iii) SUFFICIENCY. An instruction that malice may be implied from the facts and circumstances, before, at, and after the commission of the offense is proper.³⁰

(iv) APPLICABILITY. An instruction as to malice, although legally and technically correct in the abstract, is properly refused where it is inapplicable to the evidence of the case, and therefore misleading.³¹

(v) MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. Where the statute provides that to constitute murder the killing must have been done with "malice aforethought," it is error to instruct the jury that they may find defendant guilty of that offense if they believe that he maliciously killed deceased.³² An instruction that if the jury believe accused killed deceased with malice aforethought, but in sudden transport of passion or heat of blood, on provocation by deceased, they must find accused guilty of murder in the second degree, is erroneous, as malice and passion are inconsistent, and an act which proceeds from one cannot also proceed from the other.³³ However, a charge to the effect that the intent necessary to constitute malice aforethought need not have existed any particular length of time before the killing, but may spring up at the instant and may be inferred from the fact of the killing, is not erroneous.³⁴

d. Deliberation and Premeditation. Where deliberation or premeditation are essential elements of the offense charged, it is error for the court to fail to charge on these points, and a charge defining these words is proper.³⁵ An instruction that it is not essential to constitute a homicide murder in the first degree that the wilful intent shall exist in the mind of the slayer any considerable length of time, and that it is sufficient if there was a fixed determination to maliciously kill, distinctly framed, at any time before the fatal injury was inflicted, is proper.³⁶ Since the intentional taking of life with a deadly weapon implies a formed design to take the life, a charge that the jury cannot presume a formed design by defendant to take deceased's life by the use of a deadly weapon is properly refused.³⁷ However, where deliberation and premeditation are not elements of the offense charged, as for instance in most jurisdictions, in the case of murder at common law and murder in the second degree under the statutes, it is error to instruct the jury to acquit defendant unless the killing was deliberate and premeditated.³⁸

e. Motive. While on a trial of an indictment for homicide, a charge that the absence of a probable motive is a circumstance favorable to accused, or at least a circumstance to be considered in weighing the evidence of guilt, is proper;³⁹ yet,

b. Commission of or Attempt to Commit Other Offense. An instruction that the guilt has its origin in the unlawful act which the party designs to commit, and if loss of life attend it, as an incident or consequence, the crime and guilt of murder will attach to the party committing such unlawful act is correct.⁴³ However, a charge that assumes the commission of such unlawful act or attempt to commit it is erroneous.⁴⁴

c. Nature of Means or Instrument Used. While it is the province of the court to charge the jury as to what constitutes a deadly or dangerous weapon,⁴⁵ yet, in the absence of a request to charge, a charge with reference to the deadly or dangerous character of the weapon is only necessary where the evidence leaves the question in doubt as to whether it was deadly or dangerous.⁴⁶ An instruction that a designated weapon or instrument, without further description or evidence of its character, is not presumed to be a deadly weapon is abstract and properly refused, where there is evidence of the nature of the wounds inflicted from such instrument or weapon from which its character can be inferred.⁴⁷ A charge that if the jury are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that deceased came to his death at the hands of defendant, it matters not what sort of weapon he was killed with, or how the weapon was used, is not erroneous.⁴⁸

A charge that where defendant inflicts a fatal blow he cannot escape liability for his wrongful act from the fact that subsequent intervening causes hasten the death;⁴⁹ but that where defendant inflicts a mortal wound and before death ensues his victim is killed by the independent act of another person without concert or procurement of defendant, he cannot be convicted of any grade of homicide is proper.⁵⁰ It is not error to fail to charge on the possibility of deceased's death having been due to some other cause than the wounds inflicted by defendant, where there is no testimony in the case suggesting any other cause.⁵¹

b. Intent and Malice. On the trial of an indictment for assault with intent to kill, it is the duty of the court to fully and explicitly charge the jury on the law of intent and malice as necessary ingredients of the offense charged,⁵³ unless the indictment is drawn under a statute providing for the punishment of assault with intent to kill without malice.⁵⁴ A charge that it is the intent unlawfully and maliciously to kill the person assaulted, which constitutes the crime of the assault with intent to murder, when construed in reference to evidence showing an actual assault with a deadly weapon, is not obnoxious to the objection that it asserts the proposition that mere intent, although ability real and apparent to accomplish it may be wanting, completes the offense.⁵⁵

Degrees of murder.—As Minn. Rev. St. c. 100, § 2, as amended by Laws (1853), p. 24, defines the degrees of murder, it is error, on trial of the indictment for assault with intent to murder, to instruct the jury that to find a verdict of guilty it is only necessary for them to find that, if death had resulted, the killing would have been murder within the common-law definition; such an instruction being misleading. Shooting at without wounding.—Where on a trial for maliciously shooting at another with intent to kill, without having wounded him, there was evidence tending to show that the shooting was done in sudden heat and passion, it was held that defendant was entitled to an instruction as to the offense of shooting at without wounding in a sudden

c. Definition of Murder and Manslaughter. Upon the trial of an indictment for assault with intent to kill, defendant is likewise entitled to an instruction defining the crime of murder and manslaughter.⁵⁶

d. Application to Facts and Evidence. Since the instructions should be applicable to the evidence in the case, a charge based upon a hypothetical state of facts which there is no evidence to sustain is properly refused.⁵⁷ Likewise an instruction is erroneous where it assumes as a fact a question which it is directly within the province of the jury to decide.⁵⁸

e. Ignoring Issues, Defenses, or Evidence. It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury fully and explicitly on the legal effect of all the circumstances developed on the trial, and an instruction which ignores or evades any evidence, defenses, or issues presented in the case is fatally defective, and a ground for reversal.⁵⁹ On the other hand, however, a charge is erroneous which lays undue emphasis or stress on particular facts or evidence.⁶⁰

7. DEFENSES — a. In General. On an indictment for any degree of homicide, it is error for the court, while stating the charge or the evidence against defendant, to omit to charge the jury as to the defenses set up by him, or to state a hypothetical case, omitting the leading fact which goes to the exculpation of the

nor any other evidence tended to show insanity, it is not error to refuse an instruction on that subject.⁶⁵ An instruction which presents the general rule applicable to the defense of insanity at the time of the killing, and which contains a clear exposition of the law applicable to the defense of emotional or delusive insanity, is sufficient.⁶⁶ The court may properly instruct the jury to weigh carefully the evidence and beware of pretended insanity, or an ingenious counterfeit of the malady.⁶⁷

United States.—U. S. v. Armstrong, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,467, 2 Curt. 446, holding that upon a prosecution for murder, when the extenuating circumstances can be apprehended by the court, it is their duty to declare as a matter of law whether it is sufficient to mitigate the offense, but when the case is such that the court cannot foresee what the jury may find the provocation was, only a general and hypothetical instruction can be given.

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," § 606.

(iii) ASSUMPTION OF FACTS. However, it is error for the court to assume as a fact a point within the province of the jury to decide, and base thereon a charge as to passion or provocation.⁷³

(iv) APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE. Since the instructions must be applicable to the evidence introduced in the case, where there is no evidence tending to show heat of passion or provocation, it is error for the court to give an instruction based on such theory.⁷⁴

(v) IGNORING ISSUES OR DEFENSES. Conversely, an instruction which ignores any issues or defenses, such as passion, provocation, or self-defense, is erroneous.⁷⁵

e. Excuse or Justification. Defendant is entitled to clear and explicit instructions as to excusable and justifiable homicide, where there is any evidence in the case to support the theory;⁷⁶ but where it plainly appears that in no view of the case is the law of excusable or justifiable homicide applicable, a refusal or omission to give instructions on those points is not error.⁷⁷

f. Exercise of Authority or Duty. The court should instruct the jury on the law of justifiable homicide in the case of an officer who kills another while attempting to arrest him;⁷⁸ and likewise where an officer is killed by defendant in resisting arrest.⁷⁹

g. Self-Defense—(i) NECESSITY OF INSTRUCTIONS IN GENERAL. The general rule is that it is the duty of the court, on the trial of an indictment for homicide, to instruct the jury as to the law of self-defense, where there is any evidence, however slight, to establish the same, and that failure to instruct fully on all phases of the law, warranted by the evidence, is reversible error.⁸⁰ And this is the facts transpiring at the time of the homicide; although an instruction detailing such facts is not improper.⁸⁴

(II) NECESSITY FOR REQUESTS. In some jurisdictions the rule is laid down that failure to instruct on the subject of self-defense is not error in the absence of special requests for such instructions;⁸⁵ while in other jurisdictions it is held that where there is evidence warranting an instruction on self-defense, it is reversible error to fail to give such instructions, whether a request is made on behalf of defendant or not.⁸⁶

(III) FORM AND LANGUAGE. The general rule is that an instruction on the law of self-defense which follows the words of the statute, or which substantially does so, is sufficient.⁸⁷

(IV) ARGUMENTATIVE INSTRUCTIONS. An instruction which is argumentative, and which by comments on the evidence tends to prevent the jury from determining controverted facts on their own responsibility,⁸⁸ or which gives undue or provocation on the part of defendant,⁹⁴ or the duty to retreat, where there is no evidence in the case upon which to base such instruction, is reversible error.⁹⁵

(B) Where Evidence Shows Contrary. Likewise it is proper to refuse a requested instruction based on the theory of self-defense, where the evidence shows such theory to be untenable, and that the contrary was true.⁹⁶

(C) Where Unsupported by Claims or Evidence of Either Party. It is proper for the court to refuse instructions on any phase of the law of self-defense,

(VIII) EXCLUDING OR IGNORING ISSUES OR EVIDENCE—(A) In General. An instruction charging on the law of self-defense which ignores any phase or element of such defense, or fails to cover any material evidence in the case, is fatally defective, and should be refused.⁹⁸

(B) Aggression or Provocation. Thus an instruction on self-defense which ignores the question of fault of defendant in the inception of the difficulty of which there is evidence is properly refused.⁹⁹

"Actual danger."—In a murder trial, where the court charged that to sustain a plea of self-defense defendant must show that the danger was actual and urgent, it was held that there was no error in the phrase, "actual danger," meaning danger which appeared actual and imminent to defendant, whether it existed in fact or not. *State v. show that the accused after provoking a quarrel with deceased withdrew therefrom in good faith, and was thereafter fired upon without warning by deceased, whom he then shot and killed, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to the effect of such withdrawal, and its refusal to do so as requested, is reversible error.⁴

(x) THREATS. In some jurisdictions defendant is entitled to a charge on the subject of threats made by the deceased or person assaulted, where such threats are shown to have been communicated to him, and an abstract instruction on the subject of threats, merely in the language of the statute, is insufficient.⁵

(xi) MUTUAL COMBAT. Where the evidence in the case warrants it, it is the duty of the court to charge upon the law as applied to the theory of mutual combat.⁶ Since, however, a charge on mutual combat on a prosecution for homicide is a limitation on the right of self-defense, such charge should not be given where there is no evidence in the case to warrant it.⁷

(xii) BURDEN OF PROOF. An instruction that where the prosecution has made out a prima facie case the burden of proof is upon defendant to show that he acted in self-defense is not error.⁸ Likewise a charge that when the ingredients of self-defense have been established, the burden is on the state to show that defendant is not free from fault, is correct.⁹ However, where there is evidence on the part of the state that defendant was at fault in bringing on the difficulty, a charge to the effect that to make the plea of self-defense available defendant must have been without fault is not open to the objection that it places the burden of proving that fact on defendant.¹⁰

h. Defense of Another. Applying the well established rule that what one may do in his own defense another may do for him, and if he believes life to be in immediate danger, he may use such force as is apparently necessary to him to repel the attack of the aggressor, provided the party in whose defense he acts was not in fault, it is the duty of the court to charge fully and explicitly as to the law on this point, where there is evidence to support the issue.¹¹ Where on an indictment for homicide defendant sets up that the killing was in defense of another, a charge which fails to negative the existence of an avenue of escape, and demands an acquittal, pretermittting all inquiries as to the possibility of a retreat by the party attacked after the situation is disclosed to defendant,¹² or which ignores the question of provocation on the part of the party attacked, where there is evidence on that point, is properly refused.¹³ However, it is not error for the court to refuse to charge upon the legal right of defendant to kill in defense of another, where there is no evidence in the case to support such theory.¹⁴

i. Defense of Habitation and Property—(i) OF HABITATION. Where the evidence warrants it, it is the duty of the court to give instructions to the effect that every man has a right to protect his house from invasion, and in so protecting it, he has a right to use such force as may be necessary, or as may reasonably appear to him to be necessary, to accomplish this end.¹⁵

(ii) OF PROPERTY. Where there is evidence on which to predicate such an instruction, defendant is entitled to an instruction fully and clearly stating the law, common or statutory, as to the right of one to protect his property against a trespasser.¹⁶ Where, however, the issues and evidence in the case do not present the question of the defense of property, it is proper for the court to refuse a requested instruction on this point.¹⁷

j. Accident. It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to the law in relation to accidental killing, where there is evidence in the case to support such theory;¹⁸ but a refusal to give instructions on the law of excusable homicide by defendant killed deceased in the necessary defense of his son were held to be properly refused, where there was no evidence that his son was assaulted or attacked by deceased.

16. Thus defendant is entitled to an instruction in a proper case that in the protection of his property, of which he is in actual lawful possession, he may oppose force with force in resisting a trespass or ejecting the trespasser, and is not bound to retreat, and that he is justified in such a case in killing the trespasser, if it becomes necessary in order to save himself from death or great bodily harm. See People v. Hecker, 109 Cal. 451, 42 Pac. 307, 30 L. R. A. 403; State v. Bodie, 33 S. C. 117, 11 S. E. 624, where, however, the requested instruction was refused on the ground that it ignored the distinction between a trespass on land in possession of and that owned by another, and also the effect of a license to enter, where the instructions already given fully covered the law applicable to the right of a person in possession to remove a trespasser.

Homicide in resisting or ejecting a trespasser see supra, VI, F.

In Texas, in a prosecution for homicide, defendant is entitled in a proper case to an instruction as to his right to kill in defense of his property under Pen. Code, arts. 675, 677, 680, justifying homicide under certain circumstances in order to protect property. Weaver v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 76 S. W. 564; Howell v. State, (Tex. Cr. App.

1900) 60 S. W. 44; Howell v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 57 S. W. 835; Wartham v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 385, 55 S. W. 55; McGlothlin v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 53 S. W. 869 (where, however, the instruction was held to have been properly refused because it did not require defendant to resort to all other means before killing deceased, holding likewise that the charge should include the statement of what constitutes actual lawful possession); Hopkins v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1891) 53 S. W. 619; Laws v. State, 26 Tex. App. 643, 10 S. W. 220 (holding, however, that under Tex. Pen. Code, art. 570, making homicide to prevent theft at night justifiable, it is error to omit to instruct the jury as to the meaning of the word "night," where the evidence showed that the killing occurred at or after sunset). See also Sims v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 154, 36 S. W. 256.

17. Taylor v. Com., 34 S. W. 227, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1214 (holding that it was enough to give instructions as to self-defense, without instructing as to defense of property, where the only evidence of an attack on property was that a shot fired at defendant struck the house); Dean v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1904) 83 S. W. 816 (holding that on a prosecution for homicide, it was not error to fail to charge Tex. Pen. Code (1895), art. 680, justifying homicide in defense of property, where the evidence showed that deceased merely informed defendant that he was going to take certain property which was in defendant's possession); Askew v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1904) 83 S. W. 706 (where the dispute which led to the homicide resulted from deceased's failure to cover defendant's wager on a game, or, having put the money down, afterward, and before defendant reduced it to possession, withdrew it, and it was held that there was not such a theft or attempt to rob defendant as required an instruction on the right to kill in the defense of property); Jones v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 77 S. W. 802; Hudson v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 251, 70 S. W. 764; Williams v. State, (Cr. App. 1898) 48 S. W. 515.

reason of accident is not error, where there is no evidence in the case on which to rest such defense.¹⁹

8. PRINCIPALS AND ACCESSARIES. Since, if several persons conspire to do an unlawful act and death happens in the prosecution of the common object, all are alike guilty of homicide,²⁰ instructions which ignore evidence of conspiracy to do an unlawful act, and limit defendant's liability to the question whether he actually participated in the killing of deceased, are erroneous and properly refused.²¹

Likewise, where there is evidence tending to show that defendant, while he did not actually do the killing, was with the person who did, encouraging him, and ready to assist him if necessary, although there may have been no previously formed purpose or agreement between him and the perpetrator of the crime to do an illegal act, charges which withdraw from the jury the question of defendant's culpability as an immediate aider or abetter in the offense are erroneous and properly refused.²² Where the evidence shows that defendant, if guilty, perpetrated the homicide himself, and there is no testimony that he aided or assisted another in the commission of the deed, it is error to charge that defendant can be convicted if he aided or assisted another in the commission of the crime.²³ Where two or more persons are jointly indicted for murder and there is no proof that the murder was prearranged, a charge is erroneous which fails to instruct the jury that if one of defendants in a sudden quarrel, or for other cause, killed deceased without the aid or support of the other, he alone is guilty of the murder.²⁴

9. determine what grade of the crime the evidence tends to establish and then the instructions should be limited accordingly. It is not the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to any grade of the offense not suggested by the evidence.²⁷

(11) *ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS.*²⁸ An erroneous instruction as to the constituents of the crime is fatal error.²⁹ This is true of any instruction which authorizes a conviction of a designated grade of the offense upon proof of a lower grade or of justifiable homicide.³⁰ On a trial for murder the jury should be instructed that in order to constitute murder in the first degree it is essential not only that the act should have been done with malice aforethought, but also with premeditation and deliberation; but it is proper to further instruct that this does not mean that there must have been time for defendant thoroughly to ponder the act and its consequences, and that it is enough if there was some time, however brief, for thought and reflection before forming the determination to perpetrate the crime; and if the accused did reflect, for even a moment, before striking the fatal blow, this is premeditation and deliberation within the meaning of the law, and the crime is murder in the first degree.³¹ An instruction that premeditation and malice are

Ignoring defendant's evidence.—On a trial for murder, where the evidence is conflicting, a charge that the jury, if they believe the evidence offered in behalf of the people to be true, would be justified in finding the prisoner guilty of murder in the second degree, is misleading, as it virtually excludes any modifying effect thereon by defendant's testimony. *McKenna v. unnecessary to constitute murder in the second degree is reversible error where the accused is convicted of murder in the second degree, since the instruction authorizes a conviction in that degree when the offense is no more than manslaughter.³² So also an instruction which authorizes a conviction of murder in the first degree upon proof of murder in the second degree is fatal error.³³ The court should explain the meaning of malice, the difference between express and implied malice, and the effect of unlawful killing without malice;³⁴ but where the essential elements of the offense are all correctly defined, the omission of the word "feloniously" is not error, as it is used only in classifying offenses and is not a distinct element of the crime.³⁵

(III) OFFENSES DEFINED BY STATUTE. Where the offense is defined by statute it is proper, and perhaps preferable, to charge the jury in the language of the statute.³⁶ This, however, is not necessary, but it is sufficient for the court to state clearly and correctly in other language all the elements of the offense,³⁷ unless the judge undertakes to give the statutory definition, in which case it is error to substitute other words and phrases in the place of those used in the statute.³⁸ And where by statute there are degrees of murder it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury fully as to what constitutes each degree of the offense, leaving to the jury the question whether the evidence warrants a conviction in the first degree, unless the evidence shows conclusively that the prisoner is guilty of murder in the first degree or nothing.³⁹ It will not suffice to define murder in the first degree and then merely add that all other kinds of murder are murder in the second degree.⁴⁰ Nor is it sufficient to give merely the statutory definitions of murder in the first and second degrees without giving an additional instruction distinguishing between the two degrees.⁴¹

(IV) *INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY.*⁴² Care should be taken not to violate constitutional or statutory inhibitions against charging on the facts or commenting on the effect of the evidence, as that is a matter for the consideration of the jury only.⁴³

b. Where Evidence Indicates Murder in First Degree or Nothing—(i) IN GENERAL. Where on a trial for murder the evidence proves murder in the first degree or nothing, the court need not instruct the jury as to other grades of the offense.⁴⁴

(ii) POISONING OR LYING IN WAIT. Where it is shown that the prisoner purposely made use of a deadly poison or lay in wait for his victim, deliberate and premeditated murder with malice aforethought is the only grade of the offense the evidence will support,⁴⁵ and the court may and should confine the instructions to that.⁴⁶

(iii) KILLING IN COMMISSION OF ANOTHER FELONY. And where the absence of an actual preconceived design to take life does not reduce the grade of the offense where the homicide was committed in the perpetration of certain other felonies, such as arson, burglary, rape, or robbery,⁴⁷ the court need not, in such cases, instruct the jury as to minor included offenses.⁴⁸

(iv) ACTS SHOWING RECKLESS DISREGARD OF HUMAN LIFE. The same rule applies under some statutes to the killing of a human being without authority of law, when done in the commission of an act manifestly dangerous to others and evincing a depraved and wicked heart, regardless of human life, although without any premeditated design to effect the death of any particular person;⁴⁹ but if there is some evidence of strong provocation or of self-defense the rule will not apply.⁵⁰

offense to murder in the second degree, the court should instruct the jury as to that degree.⁵¹ Thus where the evidence shows an intentional killing with a deadly weapon without any lawful provocation, but fails to show any circumstances of deliberation, the jury should be instructed as to murder in the second degree.⁵² An instruction that murder in the second degree is an unlawful killing with malice aforethought without the premeditation and deliberation essential to murder in the first degree is correct.⁵³

(ii) CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE. While ordinarily instructions must conform to the proof and be suggested by it, yet where there were no eye-witnesses to the killing and the evidence is purely circumstantial, the court should instruct the jury as to the different grades of homicide, and self-defense; otherwise the jury might feel bound to conclude that the accused committed the homicide with malice aforethought.⁵⁴ But where the evidence, although circumstantial, discloses a deliberate cold-blooded murder, with malice aforethought, a failure to charge on murder in the second degree is not error.⁵⁵

If there be an eye-witness to the homicide, the case is taken outside of circumstantial evidence; and the court need not give instructions as to all degrees of homicide and as to self-defense, but only such as are warranted by the proof. *Justice v. degrees higher than that for which he is on trial.⁵⁶ But it is not error for the court to explain the elements of murder in the first degree with a view to a more lucid exposition of the elements of the offense for which defendant is on trial, if the jury are admonished that he cannot be convicted of any higher grade of the offense than that on which he has been arraigned.⁵⁷

e. Manslaughter—(1) GENERAL DUTY TO INSTRUCT. Where there is any evidence tending to show such a state of facts as may bring the homicide within the grade of manslaughter, defendant is entitled to an instruction on the law of manslaughter and it is fatal error to refuse it.⁵⁸ In every case where it becomes a question whether or not there was an intention to kill, suggested by the character of the weapon used, the court should submit the issue of manslaughter.⁵⁹

(ii) DUTY TO DEFINE MANSLAUGHTER—(A) In General. Since an indictment for murder includes the lower grades of homicide, where the evidence tends to show mitigating circumstances upon which the jury might find a lower grade of the offense than that charged, it is generally held the duty of the court, whether so requested or not, to instruct the jury as to all the lower grades to which the facts in evidence will apply, define each and state the punishment applicable to each, and submit the issues to the jury whose province it is to find from the evidence of what particular grade of the offense, if any, defendant is guilty;⁶⁰ and that a failure to define all the grades of homicide to which the evi-

Absence of request.—It has been held, however, in some cases, that in the absence of a request, it is not fatal error to omit to instruct the jury on the law governing the crime of manslaughter, although the evidence permits of such a charge. Copeland v. State, 41 Fla. 320, 26 So. 319; Tillery v. State, 99 Ga. 209, 25 S. E. 170; Odette v. State, 90 Wis.

the jury should be instructed as to the essential elements of manslaughter. They should be told that murder differs from manslaughter in that in murder the element of malice always exists, whereas manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being without premeditation and without malice express or implied; and it is error to omit the definition, although the jury are instructed that they may find the prisoner guilty of manslaughter.⁶² The court, having properly instructed the jury as to the different degrees of homicide and the evidence requisite to prove each, is not bound, at the request of either party, to repeat the charge in substance, although in different terms.⁶³

(b) *Invading Province of Jury.*⁶⁴ The trial judge discharges his duty when he states the law of manslaughter, and he should be careful not to invade the province of the jury by expressing or intimating an opinion as to its applicability to the facts in evidence.⁶⁵

(iii) DEGREES OF MANSLAUGHTER. Where by statute there are degrees of manslaughter, and the evidence in a prosecution for murder calls for an instruction on manslaughter, all the different degrees applicable under any theory of the case should be defined and explained, and the jury should be informed of the punishment appropriate to each.⁶⁶ But instruction as to a degree to which the evidence has no application is not required.⁶⁷

(iv) SUDDEN HEAT AND PASSION. Where there is any evidence that the act was done in sudden heat and passion induced by provocation so great as to render defendant incapable of cool reflection and was not the result of malice or a pre-conceived design to take the life of the deceased, an instruction on manslaughter must be given.⁶⁸ Thus where a husband detects his wife in the act of adultery and instantly kills one or both of the guilty parties, the jury should be told that they are at liberty to consider the provocation sufficient to reduce the grade of the crime to manslaughter.⁶⁹

(v) ADEQUATE CAUSE OR PROVOCATION. And on a trial for murder it is error to neglect or refuse to instruct the jury as to the provocation or adequate cause necessary to reduce the offense from murder to manslaughter.⁷⁰ The jury should be instructed that such adequate cause is such a provocation as would commonly produce a degree of anger or heat of passion in a person of ordinary temper sufficient to render the mind incapable of cool reflection and not an unreasonable fit of passion.⁷¹

Kentucky.—Com. v. Hourigan, 89 Ky. 305, 12 S. W. 550, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 509. An instruction defining manslaughter is not prejudicial to defendant on account of substituting the phrase "impulse of the moment" for the phrase "sudden heat and passion." Henson v. Com., 11 S. W. 471, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 314. See also Clem v. Com., 13 S. W. 102, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 780, use of the words "riot and passion" instead of "heat and passion" not prejudicial.

W. 207. Under Tex. Pen. Code, art. 597, subd. 3, providing that adultery with defendant's wife shall be a cause of provocation sufficient to reduce homicide from murder to manslaughter, provided the killing occurred as soon as the fact of the illicit intercourse was discovered by the husband, it is error to charge that "the provocation must arise at the time of the commission of the offense," and that the passion must not be the result of a former provocation. Paulin v. State, 21 Tex. App. 436, 1 S. W. 453.

W. 737; Greer v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 12. A charge on manslaughter need not enumerate all the causes which are deemed adequate to reduce a killing to manslaughter; it is only necessary to apply the law to the facts in evidence. Logan v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 53 S. W. 694. An instruction that, to reduce a felonious killing to manslaughter, it must have been superinduced by "considerable provocation," is not objectionable where the expression is defined by enumerating such acts of the deceased as would constitute sufficient provocation. Doyle v. Com., 37 S. W. 153, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 518. Under the statute making assault and battery adequate cause to reduce a homicide from murder to manslaughter, it is not necessary to define "assault and battery" in a charge on manslaughter. Bearden v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 578, 73 S. W. 17.

(vi) CAUTION AS TO COOLING TIME. Where the fatal encounter did not immediately follow the provocation the jury should be instructed to consider whether or not the accused had time to cool his passion before the killing, for if he had such time the act may have been the result of deliberation, which would be murder and not manslaughter.⁷² But under the Texas statute, by which insulting words or conduct by the deceased toward a female relative of defendant is made sufficient provocation to reduce a homicide to manslaughter, if it occurred at the first meeting of the parties after defendant was informed of the insults, the jury should be instructed, where the killing occurred upon the first meeting of the parties after the accused was informed of such provocation, that mere lapse of time does not of itself show that the accused was not actuated by passion rendering him incapable of reflection at the time of the killing.⁷³

(vii) *WHEN INSTRUCTION IS NOT REQUIRED*⁷⁴—(A) Voluntary Manslaughter. Upon a trial for murder, where there is no evidence which would warrant a conviction of manslaughter in any of its degrees, the issue is not involved and it is not error to refuse to instruct the jury as to that grade of homicide.⁷⁵

S. C. 405, 27 S. E. 905, 62 Am. St. Rep. 837; Hatchell v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1904) 84 S. W. 234; Blanco v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 57 S. W. 823; Gardner v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 19, 48 S. W. 170. In a prosecution for murder, in which defendant was convicted of manslaughter in the fourth degree, an instruction as to that degree which fails to define the words "heat of passion" is erroneous. State v. Skaggs, 159 Mo. 581, 60 S. W. 1048. An instruction that, if the killing was prompted by passion, it is manslaughter, is error, because it fails to distinguish between passion and heat of passion necessary to reduce homicide to manslaughter. State v. Sloan, 22 Mont. 293, 56 Pac. 364. It is not error to instruct the jury that a homicide would not be manslaughter, if committed in an unreasonable fit of passion. State v. Brooks, 23 Mont. 146, 57 Pac. 1038. An instruction that voluntary manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice, voluntarily, on a sudden heat, as where, on provocation, the passion has been aroused, and the act is committed before it has cooled, is erroneous; for it fails to qualify "provocation" with the term "adequate or sufficient." Bridgewater v. State, 153 Ind. 560, 55 N. E. 737.

St. Rep. 553, 42 L. R. A. 774. On trial for murder, an instruction that, in "considering the question as to whether or not the defendant had time to cool his passions between the quarrel and the killing, they must . . . believe beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant . . . did cool his passions," was properly refused, as the question is not whether he did cool his passions, but whether he had time to cool them. And a request to charge on all the grades of homicide is properly refused, where there is nothing in the evidence or theory of the defense requiring it.⁷⁶ Where the facts in evidence are such that it is incumbent on the jury either to acquit defendant or to find him guilty as charged in the indictment, the court is not called upon to give instructions concerning any minor grade of the offense.⁷⁷ A case for the application of this rule arises where the evidence shows that defendant is guilty of murder or nothing at all.⁷⁸ Thus where the evidence shows clearly that defendant is guilty of murder, unless the homicide was justifiable, a refusal to instruct on the law of manslaughter is proper.⁷⁹ Another case for the application of the rule is where the homicide was committed in the perpetration of another felony, and by statute or at common law the killing under such circumstances is declared to be murder.⁸⁰

(b) Involuntary Manslaughter and Negligent Homicide. The refusal or neglect to instruct the jury as to involuntary manslaughter or negligent homicide is not error where there is no evidence of such a description of killing, as in cases where it clearly appears that the killing was intentional, or that for any other reason it was either murder or voluntary manslaughter or nothing.⁸¹ But where the evidence is consistent with the theory of negligent homicide or an unintentional killing in the commission of an unlawful act, a failure to instruct the jury on the law of that grade of homicide is fatal error.⁸²

(c) Under Statute Authorizing Conviction of Manslaughter. Where a statute authorizes a conviction of manslaughter on every trial for murder an instruction on the subject should be given no matter what the evidence may be.⁸³

83. Under La. Rev. St. (1870) § 785, providing that "in all trials for murder the jury may find a verdict of manslaughter," it is error for the judge to refuse so to charge, whatever the evidence may be. State v. Brown, 40 La. Ann. 725, 4 So. 897. See also State v. Thomas, 50 La. Ann. 148, 23

(D) Combination of Manslaughter and Self-Defense. Since self-defense excuses or justifies a homicide and has nothing to do in determining its degree, it has no place in the definition of manslaughter or of any other degree of homicide.⁸⁴ But the state of the evidence may be such as to call for an instruction both on manslaughter and on self-defense, and in that case the court should instruct the jury that if the defense is established it renders the killing excusable and defendant should be acquitted altogether.⁸⁵

(E) Effect of Giving Instruction Not Supported by Evidence. In the absence of a statute authorizing a conviction of manslaughter on every trial for murder,⁸⁶ it has been said that an instruction as to a grade of the offense lower than that indicated by the evidence cannot ordinarily mislead the jury to the prejudice of defendant.⁸⁷ And it has even been held that in a trial for murder a refusal to instruct upon the law of manslaughter is error because it discloses the opinion of the judge upon a question of fact, the theory being that such refusal is in effect to tell the jury that if the prisoner is guilty at all, in the opinion of the judge, his crime cannot fall below murder in the second degree.⁸⁸ On the other hand it has been held that where there is no question but that the crime is murder, if anything, and the only question is as to whether defendant is the guilty party, it is fatal error to instruct the jury that they are at liberty to find him guilty of manslaughter, since such an instruction might lead the jury into finding him guilty of manslaughter, because they are unwilling to convict him of murder on the evidence and would otherwise acquit him.⁸⁹

f. Assault With Intent to Murder—(1) WHEN GUILTY AS CHARGED OR NOT GUILTY AT ALL. Where the evidence shows that one accused of an assault with intent to commit murder, if guilty at all, is guilty as charged in the indictment, there is no occasion for an instruction as to minor included offenses.⁹⁰

So. 250; State v. Clark, 46 La. Ann. 704, 15 So. 83; State v. Brown, 41 La. Ann. 410, 6 So. 670. As the jury, in trying an indictment for murder, have the power to find the prisoner guilty of manslaughter, it is pertinent and right for the judge to instruct the jury on the law both of murder and manslaughter, notwithstanding his counsel chooses to assert that the only issue for the jury to try is the sanity of the accused. State v. Buffington, 66 Kan. 706, 72 Pac. 213. The fact that defendant claims that the killing was done in self-defense does not destroy the right to an instruction based on the claim that the killing was manslaughter. *State v. (II) WHEN EVIDENCE SHOWS MITIGATING CIRCUMSTANCES. If, however, the evidence shows mitigating circumstances which tend to reduce the degree of criminality, the jury should be instructed as to any minor offense of which they may find the prisoner guilty,⁹¹ as a simple assault, or assault and battery when a battery is also charged in the indictment;⁹² and there is no error in instructing the jury as to the form of their verdict in case they find defendant guilty of simple assault or assault and battery.⁹³ Where there is evidence tending to show that, had death ensued, defendant would not have been guilty of murder, the court should charge on the subject of manslaughter and justifiable homicide.⁹⁴ But inasmuch as an act is sometimes murder where there is no specific intent to kill, it is fatal error to instruct the jury that if they believe that had death ensued defendant would have been guilty of murder, it is their duty to find him guilty of assault with intent to murder.⁹⁵ A failure to instruct as to specific minor included offenses has been held not to be reversible error in the absence of a request for the instruction.⁹⁶ Although in assault with intent to commit murder a specific intent to kill the person assaulted is an essential ingredient of the offense, the court should take care not to state the law in such a manner as virtually to withdraw minor grades of the offense from the consideration of the jury.⁹⁷ It is error to charge the jury upon a theory of the case that could not arise under the issues.⁹⁸

(iii) WHEN EVIDENCE TENDS TO REDUCE GRADE OF CRIME. Where the evidence of felonious intent is not clear and does not justify a conviction of assault with intent to murder, it is proper to instruct the jury on the question of aggravated assault,⁹⁹ of assault likely to produce great bodily injury,¹ of an assault with a dangerous weapon,² or of the statutory offense of shooting at another.³

(iv) CHARGING AS TO ASSAULT WHEN DEATH HAS ENSUED. On the trial of an indictment or information for murder, where the killing is admitted or established by the evidence, there is no propriety in giving an instruction as to assault in any of its grades of atrocity.⁴ But where there is any evidence that the wound inflicted was not dangerous in itself and that death resulted from improper treatment or from disease subsequently contracted and not resulting from the wound, the jury may properly be instructed on the question of assault or malicious wounding.⁵ So too, where the evidence discloses that while defendant and the deceased were engaged in combat, a third person killed the deceased, and there is no evidence of a conspiracy, it is proper to submit the issue of assault.⁶

g. Reasonable Doubt as to Grade of Offense. By statute in some jurisdictions where the jury are satisfied of defendant's guilt of some degree of the offense charged, but are in doubt as to which degree, it is their duty to find him guilty of the lowest degree only. Where this is the law, and evidence has been introduced in a trial for murder which might raise a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury as to the degree of the offense, it is the duty of the court to instruct them on this statutory rule, and a refusal to do so, upon defendant's request, is fatal error.⁷

Failure to charge on aggravated assault was not error where the evidence, from the standpoint of the state, made a case of murderous assault, and, from the standpoint of defendant, self-defense. Duval v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 70 S. W. 543. In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, where defendant's testimony tended to show that he fired merely to frighten prosecutor, with no intent to shoot anybody, a charge on aggravated assault was not required. Bouldin v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 74 S. W. 907. On an appeal from a conviction of an assault with intent to murder, whether a charge on aggravated assault should have been given will not be considered, where no charge upon the subject was requested, and there is no bill of exceptions to the failure of the court in that respect, and the motion for a new trial does not raise the question. Yett v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 46 S. W. 931. In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, it is not error to refuse to charge as to aggravated assault where, if the person assaulted had been killed, it would have been a clear case of murder, and not of manslaughter. Harris v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 47 S. W. 643. But the fact that one uses greater violence or force than is necessary in repelling an attack does not relieve the court from charging the issue of aggravated assault, when otherwise presented by the evidence. *Palmer v. h. Province of Court and Jury—(1) INSTRUCTION AS TO POWER OF JURY. Where the evidence is such as to call for a charge on the degrees of homicide, the court may instruct the jury that they have the power to find defendant guilty of murder—in either degree where by statute there are degrees of murder—or of manslaughter, stating the punishment applicable to each;⁸ and such an instruction is not objectionable as conveying an intimation to the jury that they should find defendant guilty of manslaughter at least.⁹

(11) VIRTUAL DIRECTION OF VERDICT. It is fatal error for the court to give an instruction which is equivalent to directing a verdict in the alternative.¹⁰ According to some of the cases the court may instruct the jury that under the law and the evidence they would not be justified in finding defendant guilty of a greater than a designated degree of the offense charged.¹¹ But according to the weight of authority it is the province of the jury, and not that of the court, to determine of what grade, if any, of the offense defendant is guilty, and he is not entitled to an instruction which virtually directs his acquittal of any of the higher grades of the crime charged against him, unless the evidence without conflict shows that he is not guilty of the graver offense.¹²

(III) INSTRUCTION TO CONVICT AS CHARGED OR ACQUIT. It is fatal error to give a binding instruction to the jury that if they find defendant guilty of the homicide charged, they must find him guilty of murder in a designated degree.¹³ So also it has been held to be error to charge that the jury must find defendant guilty of murder or acquit him, if there is evidence which would justify finding him guilty of a lower degree of crime.¹⁴ There are cases, however, in which it has been held that where there is no conflict in the evidence as to the commission of murder, the court may instruct the jury that if they find the prisoner guilty they should find him guilty as charged in the indictment.¹⁵ But the court should be careful not to withdraw from the consideration of the jury any evidence tending to reduce the grade of the homicide to manslaughter.¹⁶ Where it appears that defendant armed himself after he had reason to apprehend danger by reason of the communicated threats or hostile conduct of the deceased, it is error for the court, when instructing the jury, to assume that this showed a purpose to kill before the actual affray.¹⁷

1. Charge Should Be Clear and Explicit. The charge should be explicit and definite in the application of the law to the facts in evidence in order that the jury may not be misled.¹⁸ But error cannot be predicated on the ground of generality or insufficiency where the instructions fully cover all the theories of the defense presented by the evidence in the case.¹⁹

10. PUNISHMENT— a. In General. Where, by statute, the assessment of the punishment is placed in the discretion of the jury, it is the duty of the court to instruct them that if they find the accused guilty they should assess the punishment;¹ and where the court in its charge to the jury incorrectly states the

Illustrations of erroneous instructions.—Instructions that defendant could not be convicted of murder in the first degree "unless he had murder in his heart" were held confusing. Holley v. State, 75 Ala. 14. An instruction that defendant might be found guilty of manslaughter in the third degree if deceased "died . . . in the heat of passion, without a design to effect death," was unintelligible and misleading. *State v. punishment which should be assessed by them it is reversible error,² even though the punishment actually assessed by the jury is within the limits of their discretion as prescribed by statute.³ In jurisdictions where the statute confers on the jury no power to assess the punishment, an instruction that the jury are not charged with any responsibility with respect to the punishment, but that they are merely to determine whether or not defendant is guilty, is correct.⁴ In some jurisdictions, on a trial for homicide, an instruction which adverts to the quantum of punishment for any degree of the crime less than murder is erroneous, as a charge as to the punishment in murder cases is the only instance in which it is permissible to inform the jury that they may, if they agree on it, fix the sentence at imprisonment for life, if they convict.⁵

b. Infliction of Death Penalty. In some jurisdictions, where the jury have the power, where defendant is found guilty of murder in the first degree, to commute the death penalty to imprisonment for life, or to recommend such commutation to the court, it is held to be reversible error for the court to fail to instruct the jury as to their discretion in this respect;⁶ while in other jurisdictions it is held that the court is not bound to instruct the jury that if they find defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, then they may fix the penalty at imprisonment for life, or may recommend the same to the court, in the absence of a specific request for such charge.⁷ In some jurisdictions where the court has instructed the jury that the punishment for murder in the first degree shall be death or life imprisonment, at the discretion of the jury, it is held that a further instruction that their discretion is a legal discretion, and that they should determine from the evidence which punishment is proper, is correct, and does not abridge the exercise of their discretion in the premises.⁸ In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that the court cannot direct or advise the jury upon the question of the discretion given them in regard to the punishment in case they find defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, further than to inform them of their province, and that it is not error to refuse to instruct them as to how they should use the discretion given them.⁹

D. Verdict—1. IN GENERAL. The general rules governing verdicts in prosecutions for homicide are the same as those that apply in criminal actions generally.¹⁰

2. SEALING. Where defendant is charged with assault with intent to kill the jury may, under the order of the court, seal up a verdict found by them during an adjournment for the day, separate, reassemble on the meeting of court, and then return their verdict.¹¹

3. FORM AND REQUISITES— a. In General. Verdicts are not required to be of any particular form, or to use technical language. It is sufficient if the meaning is not doubtful¹² and the findings are responsive to the indictment.¹³

In Colorado the rule requiring the jury to find as a fact the intention of the accused, in a prosecution for murder, from the proof of the killing, does not refer to the ordinary inference of malice, which, by common law and the general statute as to homicide, arises on such proof, but to the premeditation and deliberation contemplated by the statute, providing that the crime of murder shall not be capitally punished unless the jury's verdict indicates that the killing was deliberate or premeditated. *Hill v. c. General Verdict. Under an indictment for murder, in the absence of a statute dividing murder into degrees and requiring the jury to fix the degree of guilt, a general verdict of guilty,¹⁵ or guilty as charged in the indictment,¹⁶ is sufficient. Where an indictment for murder contains two substantially identical counts, a general verdict of murder in the first degree is sufficient as a finding upon both counts.¹⁷ Under an indictment charging assault with intent to murder in the first degree, and assault with intent to murder in the second degree, a general verdict of guilty is good, the crimes being of the same nature.¹⁸ Under a statute making either the murder or the voluntary manslaughter of a white person by a slave punishable with death, a general verdict of guilty upon an indictment charging a slave with both offenses in separate counts was held sufficient to authorize a judgment and sentence of death.¹⁹

d. Necessity of Finding on All Issues. As a general rule the courts have held that under an indictment for murder or murder in the first degree accused may be convicted of any degree of murder or manslaughter, and the verdict need not expressly acquit him of the other degrees.²⁰ Where, however, distinct and independent offenses, subject to different degrees of punishment, are named in the indictment, the jury should be required, in the absence of a general verdict of not guilty, to affirm or negative each charge in their finding.²¹

e. Recommendation to Mercy. On a prosecution for murder a verdict of "guilty," with a recommendation to mercy, is valid.²²

f. Uncertainty and Ambiguity. Where the verdict is sufficiently certain to enable the court to pass sentence advisedly it is not invalid for uncertainty;²³ but where it is so indefinite and uncertain as to be unintelligible²⁴ or where it is

State*, 7 Md. 442, holding that where defendant is indicted for murder and convicted of manslaughter, the verdict for the latter offense is insufficient unless it negatives the murder, but a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree is sufficient without expressly finding that defendant is not guilty of the other degrees of the offense.

Recommendation eliminated.—Where a verdict finding a defendant guilty of murder in the second degree and requesting that the term of imprisonment be not more than five years is returned, which is not received by the court, and the jury retire and return the same verdict, with the request eliminated, defendant is in no wise prejudiced, and has no legal ground of complaint. *Coil v. ambiguous, as in the case of a verdict of "guilty of capital punishment,"²⁰ it cannot be sustained.

g. Mistakes in Grammar, Spelling, Etc. As a general rule neither bad spelling nor bad grammar will vitiate a verdict when its meaning is clear.²⁶ A verdict of guilty of assault with "attempt" to murder on an indictment for assault with "intent" to murder is sufficiently definite.²⁷

4. SPECIFICATION OF GRADE OR DEGREE OF OFFENSE — a. In General. The jury is sometimes required by statute to state the degree of unlawful homicide of which accused is found guilty.²³ And where murder²⁹ or manslaughter³⁰ is divided into degrees, it is generally required by statute that the verdict shall specify the degree of murder, manslaughter, or assault, of which defendant is guilty, and it has been held that, where murder is divided into degrees the verdict must specify the degree, although there is no statutory requirement to that effect.³¹ In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, a general verdict of guilty is usually sufficient.³² A verdict which finds a person indicted as being accessory to murder to be guilty thereof, but does not determine whether he is guilty as accessory to the murder in the first or second degree, is erroneous.³³ Where defendant is charged as an accessory before the fact, or principal in the second degree, to the crime of murder, a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment is sufficient.³⁴ Where it is provided by statute that the jury shall find by their verdict whether a person charged with murder is guilty of that crime in the first or second degree and that accomplices shall be punished in the same manner as the principal offender, a verdict finding defendant guilty of being an accomplice to the crime of murder, without specifying the degree, is insufficient.³⁵

b. Where Indictment Charges Degree or Sets Forth Facts Showing It. Where there is no statutory provision requiring the degree to be found by the jury, a general verdict of guilty as charged, on an indictment which by apt and proper averments charges a particular degree of murder, and but one degree thereof, is sufficient.³⁶ And it has been held that, even where the statute expressly requires the degree to be found, a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment is good where the indictment explicitly charges the highest degree of murder in language that cannot be applied to the lower degrees, as where it charges the murder to have been perpetrated by poison or by lying in wait, or to have been committed in the perpetration of robbery, burglary, or other felony.³⁷ Where, however, there is such a statutory requirement, and the indictment charges murder in general language applicable to the crime, both in the highest and lower degrees, the jury must specify in the verdict the degree of the guilt of the accused.³⁸

c. Assessment of Punishment as Finding of Degree. It has been held that even when the jury are required to specify the degree of guilt in their verdict, a verdict which does not expressly find the degree may nevertheless be valid if the assessment of punishment clearly indicates such degree.³⁹ Other decisions,

In Kansas it has been held that, where the accused is charged with an assault with intent to kill, a verdict of guilty as charged in the information is insufficient, because it fails to specify the degree of the offense of which defendant is found guilty, the offenses of assault and battery, and assault, being inferior degrees of the offense charged. "The degree of offense of which the conviction is had must be determined from the verdict itself, and that the addition of the words 'as charged and set forth in the information' is insufficient to show that the jury intended to find the defendant guilty of every element of the principal crime charged in the information." State v. Gilchrist, 113 N. C. 673, 8 S. On an indictment for an assault with intent to murder, while defendant may be convicted of an aggravated or common assault and battery, it is not necessary that the jury should in such a case declare in terms that they found defendant guilty of an aggravated assault and battery, or of a common assault and battery; but it is sufficient for them however, hold that failure of a verdict to designate the degree is not cured by an assessment of punishment indicating the degree.⁴⁰

5. ASSESSMENT OF PUNISHMENT. In many jurisdictions it is provided by statute that the jury shall in their verdict assess the punishment when they have found accused guilty of criminal homicide, and the rights and duties of juries in this respect depend upon the particular provisions of such statute.⁴¹ The assessment must of course be in conformity to the statute and a verdict assessing more or less than the prescribed punishment is unauthorized and will not support a judgment.⁴²

6. RECOMMENDATION TO MERCY. Whether the jury will make a recommendation to mercy is for them alone to determine.⁴³ If they do make such a to find that defendant is guilty of an assault and battery and that they assess the punishment, as the amount of the punishment determines whether it was regarded by the jury as an aggravated or common assault and battery. Reynolds v. State, 11 Tex. 120.

Texas.—Doran v. State, 7 Tex. App. 385. See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," §§ 677, 678.

Necessity for assessment.—In some jurisdictions where the jury find defendant guilty of murder in the first degree the verdict is not invalid because it is silent as to the penalty. People v. French, 69 Cal. 169, 10 Pac. 378; People v. Welch, 49 Cal. 174; Thomas v. State, 89 Ga. 479, 15 S. E. 537; Green v. State, 55 Miss. 454; Territory v. Webb, 2 N. M. 147; Territory v. Rominc, 2 N. M. 114; Perry v. State, 44 Tex. 473. In Indiana a verdict of guilty of manslaughter must fix the punishment, otherwise it is erroneous. Dias v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 20, 39 Am. Dec. 448.

Extent of right.—Under some statutes the right of the jury to fix the punishment in capital cases is without any condition. Spain

v. State, 59 Miss. 19; Winston v. U. S., 172 U. S. 303, 19 S. Ct. 212, 43 L. ed. 456. On the other hand the power of the jury to commute the death penalty for murder to imprisonment for life is sometimes limited to cases where the conviction is founded solely on circumstantial evidence. Long v. State, 38 Ga. 491.

Insufficient assessment.—In a prosecution for homicide, in which the jury was required to fix the penalty, the verdict, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment, and fix the penalty to serve a term in the state penitentiary, and ask the mercy of the court," was held insufficient. Owens v. State, 82 Miss. 18, 33 So. 718.

The words "opposed to capital punishment," coupled with the last juror's name on a verdict, are immaterial where the verdict is "guilty" as charged in the indictment and is signed by each juror, and the court has instructed the jury that such verdict will be followed by capital punishment. Harris v. State, (Miss. 1891) 10 So. 478.

In Alabama it is discretionary with the jury, on a conviction of murder in the second degree, to sentence the accused to imprisonment for life, or for any number of years exceeding ten, and this discretion cannot be disturbed by the court. Miller v. State, 54 Ala. 155.

In Indiana the statute provides that murder in the perpetration of robbery is murder in the first degree, and on conviction accused shall suffer death or be imprisoned for life, in the discretion of the jury, and it has been held that the jury are the exclusive judges as to which punishment shall be imposed, and their decision must stand, unless it is manifest that they have exceeded their powers. Jackson v. State, 161 Ind. 36, 67 N. E. 690.

In New Mexico the statute allowing the jury to recommend clemency does not apply to murder in the first degree as the punish-recommendation it is not binding upon the court and it may therefore be disregarded.⁴⁴

7. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION. A verdict must be taken as a whole and its meaning determined from a consideration of every part of it;⁴⁵ and so a verdict finding accused not guilty as charged in the indictment, but guilty of a crime included in the offense charged, is good as a conviction of the crime specified.⁴⁶ So much of the verdict as declares defendant not guilty is plainly, when taken in connection with the other part thereof, to be limited to the major offense in terms charged.⁴⁷ On a trial for murder, a verdict of guilty imports a conviction on every material allegation in the indictment, and is therefore a conviction for murder.⁴⁸ A verdict of guilty includes a finding that the murder was at the place charged in the indictment.⁴⁹ Under an indictment for murder, a verdict that defendant is guilty of murder in the second degree is a general verdict;⁵⁰ and so is a verdict finding that from the evidence produced the accused is guilty of the murder of the person alleged in the indictment to have been murdered.⁵¹ Where the indictment charges assault and battery with intent to kill, but fails to allege that the assault was made by means of a deadly weapon, or such other force as is likely to produce death, a general verdict of assault and battery with intent to kill amounts to a finding of assault and battery only.⁵² If, on an indictment for murder in the first degree, defendant is found guilty of an inferior grade of homicide, without saying anything as to a higher grade, the finding is by implication an acquittal of the higher grade.⁵³ A verdict that defendant is guilty of an assault with intent to kill without any other words will be referred to the indictment; and, if that charge an assault with intent to kill and murder, the verdict will be considered as finding the prisoner not guilty of an intent to murder.⁵⁴ Where defendant is indicted in a single count for wounding with a dangerous weapon and wounding with intent to kill, a verdict of guilty of wounding with a dangerous weapon operates as an acquittal of wounding with intent to kill.⁵⁵ On an indictment for manslaughter, a verdict convicting defendant of an assault without reference to the charge of manslaughter is equivalent in law to an acquittal of the latter crime.⁵⁶ Where the indictment contains two counts, the first charging a homicide committed by defendant personally and with premeditated malice and the second charging the killing to have been done purposely and with premeditated malice in the perpetration of burglary, an acquittal as to the first count and a conviction on the second does not acquit defendant on the whole indictment.⁵⁷ Where one count of an indictment charges the accused with feloniously and maliciously cutting, striking, and wounding a person with intent to maim and kill, ment for that crime is specifically declared by statute to be death. Territory v. Griego, 8 N. M. 133, 42 Pac. 81.

and another charges him with assaulting such person and feloniously and maliciously wounding him, and the jury finds the prisoner not guilty of the malicious cutting and wounding as charged in the indictment, but guilty of an assault and battery as charged in the indictment, the verdict amounts to an acquittal of the felony charged and a conviction of a simple assault and battery.⁵⁸ Under an indictment for shooting with intent to murder, a verdict of guilty with intent to kill will be understood as referring to the offense of shooting with intent to kill, although the indictment charges the crime of the higher grade.⁵⁹ Where an indictment charges assault with intent to commit murder, and the jury finds the accused guilty of an assault with intent to kill, there being no such offense under the statute in the jurisdiction in which the prosecution is brought, the verdict cannot be construed as a finding that the accused is guilty of anything more than assault and battery.⁶⁰ If, upon an indictment for murder, a special verdict be found by the jury undertaking to detail the facts, but in which they say they are not convinced of the malice, and neglect to describe the weapon with which the fatal blow was struck, the court has nothing to found the implication of malice upon, and the verdict should be construed as a conviction of manslaughter.⁶¹ It has been held that where manslaughter is divided into voluntary and involuntary manslaughter, a verdict finding accused guilty of manslaughter has the legal effect of finding him guilty of the highest grade of manslaughter, to wit, voluntary manslaughter;⁶² and that by exactly the same principle, if the accused is found guilty of involuntary manslaughter, the verdict must be treated as finding that he has committed the highest grade of that offense, or involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act.⁶³

X. NEW TRIAL.

The general rules of law relating to the granting of new trials in criminal cases obtain in prosecutions for homicide.⁶⁴ This is true whether the application for a new trial is based upon errors and irregularities,⁶⁵ misconduct of jurors,⁶⁶ absence of a witness,⁶⁷ incompetency or negligence of counsel for accused,⁶⁸ misconduct of counsel for prosecution,⁶⁹ surprise and mistake,⁷⁰ or newly discovered evidence.⁷¹

appellate court, such as the presumption of defendant's consent to trial required by statute, or presumptions as to evidence, etc.⁸⁰

B. Review of Questions of Fact. The extent to which appellate courts will pass upon the weight and sufficiency of evidence in prosecutions for homicide depends upon the general rules on this subject.⁸¹ A conviction will not be set aside merely because the evidence is conflicting,⁸² or merely because the evidence

Illustrations.—A conviction of murder will not be set aside for a refusal to admit proof of the desperate character of the deceased, unless the record shows how that fact affected defendant's conduct. State v. Burns, 30 La. Ann. 679. is circumstantial,⁸³ if it is sufficient to warrant the verdict. Where the trial court has approved the verdict, the appellate court will not reverse it, although they have some doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence.⁸⁴

C. Harmless Error—1. IN GENERAL. Errors not substantially prejudicing defendant are not available as grounds for reversal.⁸⁵ This applies to error in proceedings before trial,⁸⁶ and in the conduct of the trial generally.⁸⁷

2. RULINGS ON EVIDENCE. The rule that harmless error is not ground for reversal is applicable to rulings on evidence.⁸⁸ So the admission of incompetent evidence is harmless error in the absence of affirmative showing of injury to defendant.⁸⁹

4. VERDICT AND SENTENCE. Defendant cannot complain that he was convicted of a lower degree of the crime than the evidence would have warranted.⁷ One convicted of murder in the second degree cannot complain that the conviction was erroneous on the ground that the evidence showed murder in the first degree.⁸ An error committed by the court in passing sentence does not necessarily entirely vitiate the sentence and require a reversal of the judgment.⁹

D. Determination and Disposition of Appeal. The determination and disposition of appeals in prosecutions for homicide are governed by the rules applicable in criminal prosecutions generally;¹⁰ thus in a proper case the judgment of the trial court will be affirmed¹¹ or the sentence imposed by it reduced or modified.¹²

called "eleemosynary" for the perpetual distribution of the free alms of their founders.²

II. PUBLIC HOSPITALS.

A. In General. A hospital created and endowed by the government for general charity is a public corporation;³ and a public hospital may be defined in general as an institution owned by the public and devoted chiefly to public uses and purposes.⁴

instances, to denote an institution in which poor children are fed and educated. But that is not the ordinary meaning of the word." See also Moses v. Marsland, [1901] 1 K. B. 668, 65 J. P. 183, 70 L. J. Q. B. 261, 83 L. T. Rep. N. S. 740, 49 Wkly. Rep. 217.

As defined by statute see Magdalen Hospital v. Knotts, 4 App. Cas. 324, 327 note, 48 L. J. Ch. 579, 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 466, 27 Wkly. Rep. 602; Moore v. Clench, 1 Ch. D. 447, 452, 45 L. J. Ch. 80, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 13, 24 Wkly. Rep. 169. See also 13 Eliz. c. 10, § 3; 53 Vict. c. 5, § 341; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 76, § 141.

Almshouse defined see 2 Cyc. 135.

"The primary meaning of the word 'hospital' . . . was an inn, (and from which our modern word 'hotel' is derived,) where guests were entertained for compensation. Now the word is more commonly applied to a building founded through charity, where the sick and disabled may be treated solely at their own expense, or at the sole expense of the corporation, which receives only indigent patients, and then has all the attributes of an almshouse, and in either case it becomes, as we understand the term, a charitable institution. In re Curtis, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 207, 208, 1 Connolly Surr. 471, 475. See also Moses v. Marsland, [1901] 1 K. B. 668, 671, 65 J. P. 183, 70 L. J. K. B. 261, 83 L. T. Rep. N. S. 740, 49 Wkly. Rep. 217.

A pest-house is included within the meaning of "hospitals" as used in an ordinance providing for the establishment of hospitals. Clayton v. Henderson, 103 Ky. 228, 44 S. W. 667, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 87, 44 L. R. A. 474.

Compared with "college" in Philips v. Bury, 2 T. R. 346, 353.

Distinguished from "dispensary" in Dilworth v. Stamp Commissioner, [1899] A. C. 99, 107, 68 L. J. P. C. 1, 79 L. T. Rep. N. S. 473, 47 Wkly. Rep. 337.

The state prison is not a "hospital" or "other charitable institution," within the meaning of N. H. Laws (1895), c. 54. New Hampshire Insane Asylum v. Belknap County, 69 N. H. 174, 44 Atl. 928.

Does not necessarily include land.—"If the word 'hospitals,' as used in the statute, does not necessarily include land, then we cannot say that it was intended that land should be so included; and we think the inference is very strong that when the legislature said 'hospitals' they meant only buildings occupied and used as such." Thurston County v. Sisters of Charity, 14 Wash. 264, 267, 44 Pac. 252.

4. Hennepin County v. Brotherhood of Gethsemane, 27 Minn. 460, 462, 8 N. W. 595, 38 Am. Rep. 298, where it is said: "The word 'public' has two proper meanings. A thing may be said to be public when owned by the public, and also when its uses are public." Compare McDonald v. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529.

Charging patients able to pay.—The fact that a hospital established by the state charges patients who are able to pay or that the hospital realizes certain sums annually from the sale of surplus farm products does not stamp the hospital as a private enterprise, the revenue thus derived being merely incidental and tending to lessen the public burden. Hughes v. Monroe County, 147 N. Y. 49, 41 N. E. 407, 30 L. R. A. 33. See also Hennepin County v. Brotherhood of Gethsemane, 27 Minn. 460, 462, 8 N. W. 595, 38 Am. Rep. 298 (where it is said: "That patients who are able to pay are charged for hospital services according to their ability, and that the county pays for such services rendered to those who are a legal county charge, are facts of no importance upon the question as to the character of the institution as one of purely public charity; for the fact still remains, that, notwithstanding all receipts from said sources, the hospital is established, maintained and conducted without profit or a view to profit, and that, on the whole, it is operated at a loss, which is necessarily made up by private contributions"); Blake v. London, 18 Q. B. D. 437, 445, 56 L. J. Q. B. 148, 35 Wkly. Rep. 212 [quoted in Cause v. Nottingham Lunatic Hospital, [1891] 1 Q. B. 585, 590, 55 J. P. 582, 60 L. J. Q. B. 485, 65 L. T. Rep. N. S. 155, 39 Wkly. Rep. 461] (where it is said: "A hospital would not be the less entitled to the exemption because certain fees were taken from rich persons who chose to take the benefit of the hospital").

Public and private hospitals distinguished.—Whether a hospital is to be considered as a public or a private institution must depend, it seems, upon the purposes for which it was created and the attending circumstances. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 668, 4 L. ed. 629 [quoted in Washingtonian Home v. Chicago, 157 Ill. 414, 423, 41 N. E. 893, 29 L. R. A. 798; Allen v. McKean, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 229, 1 Sumn. 276, 297], where Story, J., said: "Public corporations are generally esteemed such as exist for public political purposes only, such as towns, cities, parishes and counties; and in many respects, they are so, although they

B. Establishment and Maintenance. Under the law of necessity,⁵ or in the exercise of the power of eminent domain when specially authorized by the legislature,⁶ a public hospital may appropriate or condemn private property for hospital purposes. A contract made by county commissioners for the building of a hospital without first submitting the question of the expenditure to a vote of the directors of the county as required by statute, has been held void.⁷

C. Regulation and Supervision—1. IN GENERAL. The legislature,⁸ the board of trustees,⁹ or other persons to whom such power may be delegated¹⁰ may prescribe reasonable rules and regulations for the proper management and government of the institution.¹¹

2. VISITATION. Like other eleemosynary or charitable institutions a public hospital is subject to visitation.¹²

D. Powers—1. IN GENERAL. While the board of trustees of a public hospital have no power to contract debts beyond the legislative appropriation made for the maintenance of the hospital,¹³ they may exercise their discretion as to the disbursement of moneys which have been so appropriated.¹⁴

2. CONTRACTS. A corporation chartered for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a public hospital is limited in the making of contracts by the general rules governing contracts of corporations,¹⁵ and hence cannot enter into a contract which is contrary to public policy or ultra vires.¹⁶

involve some private interests; but strictly speaking, public corporations are such only as are founded by the government, for public purposes, where the whole interests belong also to the government. If, therefore, the foundation be private, though under the charter of the government, the corporation is private, however extensive the uses may be to which it is devoted, either by the bounty of the founder or the nature and objects of the institution [citing as an illustration a hospital created and endowed by the government for general charity]. . . . An hospital, founded by a private benefactor, is, in point of law, a private corporation, although dedicated by its charter to general charity." E. Liabilities. A hospital created and existing for purely governmental purposes and under the exclusive ownership and control of the state is not liable for injuries to a patient caused by the negligence or misconduct of its employees,¹⁸ or for personal injuries sustained by an employee.¹⁹ But a public hospital may be enjoined from maintaining a nuisance and the nuisance abated by judicial proceedings.²⁰

21. People v. King, 127 Cal. 570, 60 Pac. 35 (holding that under a statute providing that medical superintendents of insane hospitals shall have had a prescribed number of years' experience in the care of insane persons, a general practitioner who does not pretend to be a specialist is ineligible to the office of superintendent, although he has in the course of his practice occasionally treated persons afflicted with mental diseases); State v. Kuehn, 34 Wis. 229 (holding that under Wis. Laws (1872), c. 176, the secretary or treasurer of the Northern Wisconsin Hospital for the insane need not be a member of the board of trustees).

Among the qualifications which may be prescribed are the possession of a good judgment, amiability of disposition, and a temper held in perfect control. People v. Higgins, 15 Ill. 110.

The place of medical superintendent of an insane hospital is an "office" within a constitutional provision that no person shall be elected or appointed to any office in the state unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector. State v. Wilson, 29 Ohio St. 347.

Incompatible offices.—The offices of superintendent and member of the board of directors of a county infirmary are incompatible. State v. Taylor, 12 Ohio St. 130.

Bond.—Under Ohio Rev. St. § 960, an infirmary director is not required to give bond before his term of office begins but must give such bond before entering on the discharge of his duties as such officer. State v. Nash, 65 Ohio St. 549, 63 N. E. 83.

22. People v. Higgins, 15 Ill. 110; State v. Hay, 45 Nebr. 321, 63 N. W. 821.

Petition.—The office of "practicing physician of the Yuba County Hospital" is a county office, and a vacancy therein cannot be filled by the board of supervisors except upon petition signed by at least thirty qualified electors. People v. Harrington, 63 Cal. 257.

The faculty of the medical college of Ohio are entitled to appoint as resident physicians of the Commercial Hospital of Cincinnati as many physicians as may be requisite to discharge the duties thereof. Alexander v. Cincinnati, 2 Handy (Ohio) 183.

The trustees cannot remove an officer except for cause shown which must be one affecting his capacity or fitness to perform the duties of the office which he holds. State v. Kuehn, 34 Wis. 229, decided under Wis. Laws (1872), c. 176.

and the tenure of office²³ of officers or persons in charge of a public hospital. An act of the legislature changing the name of an office, the duties, rights, and powers remaining the same, does not abolish the office or oust the incumbent.²⁴

2. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES. The officers in control of a public hospital are under obligation to avail themselves of the latest scientific knowledge in treating their patients and to avoid drastic measures where others would be equally efficient,²⁵ and should be guided by the direction of competent physicians.²⁶ An officer of a hospital who is supplied with the necessary assistance, help, food, medicine, and supplies, is liable in damages to an inmate for failure to give proper care and treatment.²⁷ Where officers are charged by indictment with positive acts of official misfeasance the exact range of their duties need not be shown, but it is sufficient to show that they had duties which were violated by the acts charged.²⁸

3. COMPENSATION — a. In General. Physicians in public hospitals are entitled to a reasonable compensation for their services.²⁹ It has been held, following the analogy of the law as to state officers, that the superintendent of a public hospital is only entitled to receive his salary by certificate of the directors to the county auditor for a warrant on the county treasury.³⁰

b. Recovery of Compensation From Inmate. A visiting surgeon of a public

Good and sufficient cause for removal exists where it is shown that the superintendent treats patients with unnecessary harshness, and fails to use the most approved methods of treatment. State v. Hay, 45 Nebr. 321, 42 N. W. 821.

Removal at pleasure.—The fact that the superintendent of a state hospital may be removed for causes mentioned in the constitution does not impair the power of the board of trustees to remove him at pleasure. State v. Archibald, 5 N. D. 359, 66 N. W. 234.

County infirmary directors may remove superintendent at any time. Littleton v. Board of Infirmary Directors, 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. 891, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 850.

Enjoining investigation.—An investigation by a board having charge of a public hospital, of charges against an appointee, looking to his removal, cannot be enjoined because a separate committee of each house of the legislature investigated the same charges and made a report exonerating the appointee. Miller v. Longview Asylum, 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 650, 4 Cinc. L. Bul. 690.

In case of wrongful removal mandamus is the proper remedy. Eastman v. Householder, 54 Kan. 63, 37 Pac. 989.

Filling vacancy.—If a director of the insane asylum resigns, and the board of directors fills the vacancy, the new incumbent will hold until the assembling of the legislature, and thereafter until the legislature fills the vacancy; and if the legislature adjourns without filling the vacancy he will hold until a successor who has been appointed by the board or elected by the legislature appears. People v. Parker, 37 Cal. 639.

The governor has no power to fill a vacancy in the board of directors of the insane asylum by appointment, whether the vacancy be for a full or for an unexpired term. People v. Parker, 37 Cal. 639. Aliter, prior to act of 1866. People v. Baine, 6 Cal. 509; People v. Reid, 6 Cal. 288.

Municipal or county hospitals, although public institutions in that they are established under the legislative authority of the state and subject to legislative government and control, are not state institutions within the meaning of a constitutional provision that trustees of such institutions shall be appointed by the governor. Chalfant v. State, 37 Ohio St. 60 [reversing 8 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 159, 6 Cinc. L. Bul. 66].

23. State v. Hayes, 55 Kan. 298, 40 Pac. 648, holding that under a statute providing that officers of an insane asylum "shall hold their office for the term of three years," no vacant, unexpired, or fractional terms are recognized, and such officers, whenever appointed, are entitled to hold office for three years from the date when the appointment of each takes effect.

hospital whose rules permit the use of the hospital by other than charity patients, upon the payment of a stated sum, may recover upon an implied assumpsit for services rendered to a patient who was able to pay and went to the hospital to secure the benefit of nursing which he could not have had at home.³¹

III. PRIVATE HOSPITALS.

A. In General.³² A private hospital is one founded and maintained by a private person or corporation,³³ the state or municipality having no voice in the management or control of its property or the formation of rules for its government.³⁴

B. Establishment and Maintenance. No legislative authority is necessary for the establishment and maintenance of a private hospital.³⁵

C. State and Municipal Regulations—1. IN GENERAL. It is a proper exercise of the police power of the state to prohibit the establishment of private hospitals in localities where by reason of the crowded condition of the neighborhood, or for other reasons, such location would tend to spread contagious diseases,³⁶ and in the exercise of its police power a municipality may prescribe reasonable regulations for the draining of the premises of private hospitals within the city limits, for the purification and ventilation of the buildings, for the removal therefrom of any patients having infectious or contagious diseases, and for the general management of the hospital grounds and buildings.³⁷ In Pennsylvania by statutory enactment it has been made unlawful "hereafter to establish or maintain any additional hospital . . . in the built-up portions of cities; provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the maintenance of any hospital . . . now lawfully established and maintained."³⁸

2. LICENSES. The legislature may require private hospitals to be licensed,³⁹ but it has been held that a municipality has no such power.⁴⁰

D. Internal Regulations. A hospital maintained by private funds may prescribe reasonable rules concerning the qualifications of physicians allowed to practice in the hospital.⁴¹

Moving established hospital.—Where a hospital, prior to the passage of the act, had been established on a certain street, and was thereafter moved to another street, it was within the provisions saving those established prior to the passage of the act. *Mason v. E. Liabilities. A private hospital which is in its nature a charitable institution is not liable in damages to patients for the negligence or misconduct of its officers or employees,⁴² but the rule is otherwise where the hospital is not a charitable institution.⁴³ A corporation which has no control over or interest in a medical institute except the right to a royalty on each patient there treated is not liable for the unskilful or negligent treatment of such patients.⁴⁴

The test which determines whether a hospital is charitable or otherwise is its purpose. If a hospital is organized by a corporation not for the purpose of making a profit, but to take care of injured employees, who are received into the hospital without charge, the hospital is a charitable enterprise, although the employees contribute to its support. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Artist, 60 Fed. 365, 9 C. C. A. 14, 23 L. R. A. 581.

The fact that patients who are able to pay are required to do so does not deprive the hospital of its eleemosynary character, or permit the recovery of damages on account of the existence of contract relations. *Downes v. In an application for a life-insurance policy the question, "Have you received any wound, hurt or serious bodily injury?" was answered in the negative. In an action upon the policy it was held that the word "hurt" in the above connection meant an injury to the body causing an impairment of health or strength or rendering the person more liable to contract disease or less able to resist its effects; and that a cut causing a slight hemorrhage, but healing in a few days and leaving no evil consequences, was not a hurt within the meaning of the above question. *Bancroft v. I. MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

A. Introduction — 1. IN GENERAL. The mutual rights, duties, and liabilities of husband and wife depend necessarily upon the general character of the legal relation that exists between them. This relation may arise from a fundamental conception inherent in the customs or common law of a people, or may result from express legislation. In primitive times, among peoples yet rude and barbarous, marriage, as now recognized, did not as a rule exist. At first promiscuous living was the custom, and even when the relation of husband and wife became more or less recognized the woman was practically a slave, the captive or purchase of her master, and mutual rights and duties were either unknown, or at most but crudely suggested by local customs. The rights were all with the strong — the man; the duties belonged to the weak — the woman.¹ As the social life advanced there was more or less ceremony in connection with the selection of a wife, and a recognition of the husband's supremacy. His control of the wife's person and his dominion over whatever property she possessed began to be regarded as the law. These general statements are not without their exceptions, since, as previously said, marital rights and duties are governed by the fundamental idea of the nature of marriage. Among many of our Indian tribes the husband and wife obtain by the marriage no rights in the property of each other, and no contractual disability attaches to the wife.² The development of the law of husband and wife in the systems of Roman and English law was largely due to the idea of single marriage that prevailed among the early Roman and Teutonic peoples. This fact explains most of the wide differences in the domestic laws of the most of Europe and America, on the one hand, and oriental, polygamous countries, on the other.

2. ROMAN LAW. In the early Roman law, under the doctrine of manus, the marital power of the husband was absolute.³ The wife's identity was completely merged in that of the husband's.⁴ He could chastise, sell, or even kill the wife.⁵ The husband became the possessor and owner of all the property the wife might have,⁶ and he was entitled to all her labor and earnings.⁷ In contemplation of law she was the child of her husband, filia loco, a sister, legally, of her own offspring.⁸ Her only rights were her support, and a share of her husband's property at his death, as one of his heirs.⁹ During the later period of Roman law, under the doctrine of consensual marriage, the so called "free marriage," husband and wife were regarded as partners,¹⁰ and the marital rights of the husband were those of the jus gentium, namely, the right to choose the domicile, right of her society (consortium), right of regulating household expenses, and right of custody and education of children.¹¹ It was his duty to support her, but he had no legal control over her actions.¹²

3. COMMON-LAW RULE AS TO IDENTITY. By the common law of England, hus-

5. Sohm Inst. § 93. The sale of the wife did not make her a slave, but resulted in a sale of her labor. The theoretical absolute power over the person of the wife was confined to very primitive times. See Bryce Studies Hist. and Jur. 787. Some writers, however, doubt the former power of the husband to kill the wife. See Hunter Rom. L. (3d ed.) 224.

6. Gaius, II, 98; III, 83, 84; Sohm Inst. § 93. In marriage without manus the husband had no control over the property of the wife. Gaius, III, 1.

band and wife are in general contemplation but one person.¹³ The legal existence of the wife is for most purposes suspended during marriage, and her identity is merged in that of the husband.¹⁴ Upon this principle of a union of person in husband and wife depend almost all the legal rights, duties, and disabilities that either of them acquires by the marriage.¹⁵

4. EQUITY. In equity, under the influence of the later Roman law, and long before the changes effected by modern legislation, the wife's individual existence was recognized, and her right to enjoy, control, and dispose of her separate estate was enforced through chancery's extraordinary jurisdiction over the property of married women.¹⁶

5. STATUTES. Statutory enactments in recent years have revolutionized the legal relation of husband and wife. These statutes have removed many of the common-law disabilities of married women, particularly changing the law in reference to the merger of identity, the wife's earnings, her contractual powers, and generally giving her the control of her separate property.¹⁷ These statutes vary greatly in the different jurisdictions, thereby producing considerable confusion in our laws. Some jurisdictions give married women absolute control over their property, as if unmarried.¹⁸ Other states have incorporated in their statutes the

15. 1 Blackstone Comm. 442. The often repeated statement that by the doctrine of the common law husband and wife are one person requires some modification. It was absolutely so under the Roman law doctrine of manus, but in English law the personality of the wife is at times recognized, as for example the requiring her to join with her husband in suits by or against her, and her separate judicial examination in fine and recovery where she is permitted to give legal consent to her act. "It is better to regard the wife's position as a compromise between the three notions of absorption, guardianship, and of a kind of partnership of property in which the husband's voice normally prevails." and their subsequent removal to another state only affects personal property afterward acquired, the right to which is governed by the laws of the new domicile.²⁵ The right to personal property which the wife becomes possessed of after the marriage, although situated in another state, is to be determined by the law of the domicile.²⁷ Vested interests cannot be divested by removal to another state or by subsequent legislation.²³ The state where the marriage is performed is not always the matrimonial domicile, the law of which governs the rights to personal property theretofore acquired, since the law of the husband's domicile will prevail where the husband and wife have different domiciles, both outside of the state where the marriage is performed;²⁹ and if the parties at the time of the marriage had reference to another state than the one where it was made, as the place where they intended to live, the law of the place of intended residence, if it becomes the actual residence, will govern the rights to such property.³⁰

3. LAW IN FORCE AT TIME OF MARRIAGE. The law in force at the time of the marriage, and not that which exists at the time of its dissolution by death of one of the spouses, determines the marital rights of the parties.³¹ So the law in force at the time of the marriage governs the exemptions to which the husband is entitled when it is sought to enforce his liability for the antenuptial debts of his wife.³² The marital rights of persons in Texas, married before the introduction of the common law, are regulated by the law in existence at the time of the marriage.³³

4. PRESUMPTION THAT COMMON LAW PREVAILS IN OTHER STATES. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed by the courts of one state that the common law prevails in another state as to the rights of married persons.³⁴

5. INDIANS. Indians, in this country, maintaining tribal relations, control the marriage relation according to their own laws and customs,³⁵ and the rights and duties that attend it.³⁶ The federal government may by treaty or legislation regulate these matters;³⁷ but a state, as long as the tribal relation is preserved, cannot exercise any authority over the domestic laws and customs of these peoples.³⁸

6. SLAVES. Statutory "enrative" acts, enacted to create the status of valid marriage for previous cohabitation between slaves, providing such cohabitation continues after the passage of the act, have been common, since the Civil war, in this country, and such statutes are generally retroactive both as to property and other rights.³⁹

C. Personal Rights and Duties—1. HUSBAND AS HEAD OF FAMILY. The husband is the head of the family,⁴⁰ and as such has the general right at common law to regulate the household, its expenses, and its visitors, and to exercise the general control of the family management.⁴¹

Marriage in England.—Where a marriage took place in England, and the parties subsequently came to New York, the wife bringing with her money, part of which belonged to her before marriage, and the balance of which she acquired in England by her own labor subsequent to the marriage, the title to and property in said money is governed and to be determined by the common law of England, in the absence of proof of any statutory enactment of that country on the subject; and the statutory enactments of New York have no bearing on the question. *King v. 2. FAMILY NAME. The husband, as head of the family, has the right to fix the family name.⁴² The wife, by custom, takes the surname of the husband, yet since by common law a man may lawfully change his name, there would seem to be no legal objection to his adopting his wife's family name should he desire.

3. CUSTODY OF CHILDREN. By virtue of being the family head, the husband also at common law is entitled to the custody of the children, and to decide matters concerning their education.⁴³

4. COHABITATION. The duty to cohabit is mutual.⁴⁴ Cohabitation includes the mutual right to each other's society.⁴⁵ Consequently an agreement on the part of the husband to convey property or to pay money to the wife if she will live with him is null and void for lack of consideration.⁴⁶ The duty of living together carries with it the right to sexual intercourse,⁴⁷ yet this latter right cannot be unreasonably exacted, as where, for example, health would be endangered by rendering the wife liable to contracting disease.⁴⁸ In this country there is no legal process by which cohabitation can be enforced;⁴⁹ but in England a suit may be brought by either husband or wife, for the restitution of conjugal rights, and Unreasonable restriction on marital rights as condition of cohabitation.—A wife has no right without cause to refuse to allow her husband to have sexual intercourse with her; and if she refuses to live under the same roof with him except upon his undertaking not to exercise his full marital rights, he is justified in separating himself from her, and is not guilty of desertion if he does so. Jurisdiction.—The ecclesiastical courts in former times had jurisdiction of suits for restitution of conjugal rights, and when either party without sufficient reason lived separate from the other, the suit might be instituted to compel cohabitation. See 3 Blackstone Comm. 94. The probate and divorce division of the high court of justice has at the present time jurisdiction.

Formerly disobedience of this decree resulted in attachment and imprisonment until the delinquent party obeyed the decree (Weldon v. Weldon, 9 P. D. 52, 53 L. J. P. & Adm. 9, 32 Wkly. Rep. 231; Morris v. Freeman, 3 P. D. 65, 47 L. J. P. & Adm. 79, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 125, 27 Wkly. Rep. 62; Milne v. Milne, L. R. 2 P. & D. 202, 40 L. J. P. & M. 13, 23 L. T. Rep. Cherry, 29 L. J. P. & M. 141); but the act of 1884 took away the remedy by attachment, and since then the decree cannot be made effective (Matr. Causes Act 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68); Reg. v. Jackson, [1891] 1 Q. B. 671, 55 J. P. 246, 60 L. J. Q. B. 346, 64 L. T. Rep. N. S. 679, 39 Wkly. Rep. 407). Mr. Bryce in referring to the above case says (Studies Hist. and Jur.) that the suit is destined to fall into disuse because it can no longer be made effective. This is undoubtedly true as regards the enforcement of cohabitation; yet the suit is still effective for obtaining a decree of periodic payments, like unto alimony, upon failure of defendant to obey the order to resume cohabitation; and upon continued disobedience of the order a decree of judicial separation may be granted.

Periodical payments.—By the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1884, the court may, after a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, upon the application of the wife, order that in the event of such decree not being complied with the respondent shall make to the petitioner such periodical payments as may be just, and such order may be enforced in the same manner as an order for alimony in a suit for judicial separation. Where a husband has not complied with a decree of restitution of conjugal rights obtained by the wife within the time named in the decree, the court ordered that he should secure to her for their joint lives a "periodical payment" equal to one third of their joint incomes. Theobald v. Theobald, 15 P. D. 26, 59 L. J. P. & Adm. 21, 62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 187.

Judicial separation.—Where a husband had refused to comply with a decree ordering him to resume cohabitation within fourteen days of the service thereof the court granted a decree of judicial separation, although the period of two years had not elapsed. Harding v. Harding, 11 P. D. 111, 55 L. J. P. & Adm. 59, 56 L. T. Rep. N. S. 919. And see Bigwood v. Bigwood, 13 P. D. 89, 57 L. J. P. & Adm. 80, 58 L. T. Rep. N. S. 642, 36 Wkly. Rep. 928, col. 757.

Procedure.—A written demand for cohabitation and restitution of conjugal rights is required to be made before commencing proceedings against the party to be cited. Such demand made by the petitioner's solicitor, at the petitioner's request, is sufficient. Field v. Field, 14 P. D. 26, 58 L. J. P. & Adm. 21, 59 L. T. Rep. N. S. 880, 37 Wkly. Rep. 134. In a petition by a wife for restitution of conjugal rights it appeared that after eleven days' separation, and before filing the petition, she addressed a letter to her husband expressing a desire to return to cohabitation, and demanding restitution of conjugal rights, and threatening to commence legal proceedings in case of refusal. The husband acknowledged the receipt of his wife's letter, but refused to receive her back. It was held that the wife's letter was a sufficient demand within the meaning of rule 175 of the additional rules and regulations of 1875, and that she was entitled to a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights. Smith v. Smith, 15 P. D. 47, 59 L. J. P. & Adm. 9, 62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 237, 38 Wkly. Rep. 276. When there was reason to believe that the husband was keeping out of the way to avoid a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the court allowed the written demand to be served on his father, coupled with the requirement that it should be advertised. Matter of Sheehy, 1 P. D. 423, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 367.

Deeds of separation as bar to suit.—By the earlier rule it was held that deeds of separation or agreements to live separate were no bar to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. See Aunquez v. Aunquez, L. R. 1 P. & D. 176, 35 L. J. P. & M. 93, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 635, 14 Wkly. Rep. 972; Spering v. Spering, 32 L. J. P. & M. 116, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 24, 3 Swab. & Tr. 211, 11 Wkly. Rep. 810. By the present rule, however, a covenant in a separation deed not to compel cohabitation or to institute proceedings for

5. HUSBAND'S RIGHT TO CHOOSE DOMICILE. It is the husband's right to choose and establish the domicile,⁵² and it is the duty of the wife to follow her husband to the domicile of his choice.⁵³ Refusal without reasonable cause on the part of the wife to accept the domicile of the husband constitutes desertion.⁵⁴ The right of the husband to determine the domicile is not entirely arbitrary, since the law contemplates a reasonable exercise of his right, expecting him to take into consideration the circumstances and to act in good faith.⁵⁵ He cannot lawfully require her to reside in a place where her health will be endangered, or where she will be subjected to unreasonable hardship or distress.⁵⁶ He cannot require her to change her domicile for the purpose of defrauding her of her property rights.⁵⁷ If the wife is entitled to sue for divorce, she may acquire a domicile wherever she may wish to bring her action, since she is not required to bring it in the forum of the husband's domicile.⁵⁸

6. CHASTISEMENT. While the early common law recognized the right of the husband to chastise his wife, providing it was not done in a cruel or violent manner,⁵⁹ the modern doctrine is that a husband does not possess the right to inflict corporal punishment on his wife.⁶⁰ However, in some cases the husband restitution of conjugal rights will be enforced, and chancery will restrain proceedings in the divorce court for restitution of such rights. Clark v. Clark, 10 P. D. 188, 49 J. P. 516, 54 L. J. Duty of wife to support husband.—There is no common-law duty incumbent upon the wife to support her husband, although she may possess a large fortune and he be poor. Common-law right of husband presumed.—In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the common law is presumed to exist in another state, and accordingly earnings of the liable for his debts.⁸⁰ If she bought lands with such earnings, she held them in trust for him and his creditors.⁸¹ Upon the death of the husband, her accumulated earnings belonged to the husband's estate.⁸² Her duty to render service being correlative with the husband's duty to support, it follows that a husband who abandons a wife, thereby compelling her to labor for her own support, cannot claim her earnings.⁸³ Under statutes, where married women are authorized to act as sole traders, their earnings which are not connected with their separate estate or business are held to belong to their husbands.⁸⁴ But statutes giving married women the absolute control of their earnings do not apply to money or other property acquired by the services of the wife prior to the time of the statute taking effect,⁸⁵ and therefore such property is liable for the husband's debts.⁸⁶ Unless the wife has been appointed the husband's agent to receive wages due her, payment to her will not at common law discharge the debt,⁸⁷ since only the husband, either in person or by an agent, can release and receipt for the same.⁸⁸

Connors*, 4 Wis. 112, in which case it was held that an allegation in a bill in equity that the land to which it relates was purchased and paid for by complainant "from her own hard earnings and her own separate property" will not create a trust in her husband, in whose name the title to the land had been taken, in favor of the wife, when from other parts of the bill it appeared that the purchase-money was earned during the coverture. Balance of wages due husband.—A laborer

2. PRESUMPTION AS TO TITLE TO HOUSEHOLD GOODS. It will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that household goods, where husband and wife are living together, belong to the husband.⁹²

3. RIGHT TO TRANSFER OR ENCUMBER. The husband is at common law the absolute owner of his personal property, and may alienate it all, at his pleasure, without the consent of the wife.⁹³ A husband may mortgage or alienate his real property, thereby transferring his entire interest in the same, without the signature of the wife,⁹⁴ although her dower rights would not be affected by his conveyance.⁹⁵

4. TRANSFERS DURING COVERTURE IN FRAUD OF WIFE. Conveyances of real estate made by the husband during coverture for the purpose of defeating the wife's rights are fraudulent and void as to her,⁹⁶ but there is some conflict as to the extent to which this rule applies to transfers of personal property. The general rule is that, inasmuch as the wife obtains no interest in the husband's personalty was employed on condition that he would abstain from drink, and would allow his wife to draw his wages, to be used in support of himself and wife and children. Part of the wages were drawn by the wife to support the family, and the balance deposited in a savings bank, in the name of the employer, for the wife. The balances so deposited constituted the fund in dispute. It did not appear that the husband directed or ever knew of the form in which the deposit was made. It was held that the wife had no right to this fund as her separate estate, so that she could dispose of it by will or otherwise. McCubbin v. Patterson, 16 Md. 179.

In the last case cited plaintiff told his wife, with whom he did not live, "that if she was not going to live with him again she might have a part of the household furniture, and might come and get it," and it was held that this did not give the wife a license to go to the house in the husband's absence and take what she pleased.

A wife, on leaving her home for alleged misconduct on the part of her husband, cannot take from the homestead household goods without his consent. The court of chancery alone has jurisdiction to determine, in a divorce case, how much of the husband's property should be decreed to the wife. Johnson v. Johnson, 125 Mich. 671, 85 N. W. 94.

Mere possession by husband not conclusive.—The fact that one is in possession of property belonging to the former husband of his wife, but which has not been divided or distributed among the distributees, many of whom are minors, does not subject it to the payment of his individual debts. *Johnson v. G. Property of Wife—1. IN GENERAL—a. Inequalities at Common Law. At common law the effect of marriage upon the property of the wife is quite different from the effect upon the property of the husband. The doctrine of merger of identity and the duty imposed upon the husband to support and maintain the wife afford the explanation for this difference.⁶

b. Husband's Vested Interests. Upon coverture the husband has a vested interest forthwith in the property of his wife, the nature of his interest depending upon the character of the property and the kind of estate held by the wife.⁷ His interest at marriage is subject, however, to the existing equities in the property of the wife.⁸ And upon his death his creditors have interests in the personal property brought to him by the marriage.⁹

c. Property Held in Common or Jointly With Another. Where the wife at marriage holds property in common or jointly with others, the marital rights of the husband in such property attach to such interest as the wife possesses.¹⁰

d. Property Held in Trust For Wife. Where property is left in trust for the sole use of a married woman, equity will bar the marital rights of the husband in the same.¹¹ A trust estate, however, not clearly designated to her separate use will not defeat the husband's rights,¹² and profits or incomes from her separate estate paid over to the married woman may become subject to the husband's rights.¹³ Nevertheless if the husband is trustee for the wife's separate estate, his possession as trustee gives him no right to use the personalty as his own;¹⁴ nor of the execution of an antenuptial deed does not conclusively establish a fraud against her marital rights, but the circumstances surrounding each case may be shown.

Application of rule.—Property was conveyed in trust for a husband and wife during their joint lives, and to the use of the sur-

ture.²⁵ Crops growing upon the land pass to the husband's representatives, upon his death,²⁶ or, on the death of the wife, to the husband.²⁷ Where a husband alienates his wife's life-estate in lands, her entire interest is conveyed, providing he survives her;²⁸ but if she survives him only the interest during his life passes.²⁹

h. Estates in Remainder or Reversion. The general rule is that the husband does not obtain any marital rights in his wife's estates in remainder or reversion³⁰ until the termination of the life-tenancy,³¹ and that until such time they are not subject to the husband's debts.³² But the husband may assign the wife's remainder interest, during the life-tenancy, so as to bar all his rights therein after the termination of the life-estate,³³ although if the husband dies before the wife his transferee obtains no title.³⁴

vivor for life, and, after the death of the survivor, to the issue of the marriage. The husband died, and the widow remarried. It was held that the life-estate of the wife was liable to execution against the second husband. Pringle v. Allen, 1 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 135.

Slaves.—A wife's life-estate in personalty, as has been frequently illustrated in cases of slaves, vests absolutely in the husband, and becomes liable for his debts.

On death of wife.—Where real and personal property was devised to a married woman, her heirs, administrators, and assigns, as executrix and residuary legatee, and for her sole use, and, after paying the debts of the testatrix, she died intestate, without issue or creditors, the husband of the devisee was entitled to the personal property absolutely. Faries' Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 29.

j. Husband's Waiver or Relinquishment of Marital Rights⁴⁴—(1) IN GENERAL. Although by the common law the husband, after title to his wife's property has vested in him, cannot reconvey it to her,⁴⁵ yet equity will recognize his waiver or relinquishment of his marital rights by unequivocal acts on his part, showing an intention to create a separate estate for the wife.⁴⁶ Such waiver of his rights may be made by express declaration of intention,⁴⁷ or may be inferred from his conduct, as for example by treating the property as belonging solely to his wife,⁴⁸ or by refusing to reduce personal property to his possession.⁴⁹

(ii) RIGHTS OF CREDITORS. Upon a release or relinquishment of his rights by the husband, his creditors cannot attach or levy upon the property;⁵⁰ but property relinquished by the husband under circumstances showing fraud upon creditors will still be liable for his debts, since such a release is without effect.⁵¹

(iii) HUSBAND'S MISTAKE OF LAW. If a husband, mistaking the law as to his marital rights, delivers his wife's property to the distributees of her estate, equity will not grant relief to him.⁵² Where, however, in ignorance of his rights, admissions of his wife's ownership were made by him, such admissions vest no equitable title in the wife.⁵³

Personal property.—The husband may, however, relinquish his rights in personalty, for while at common law the chattels of the wife vest in the husband by virtue of the marriage, he could waive his right thereto and permit her to retain them. Clark v. Clark, 86 Mo. 114.

Admissions.—A husband's disclaimer of conversion to his own use, at the time of reducing his wife's chose in action to possession, may be established by his subsequent admissions proved by the testimony of witnesses; but the admissions must appear to have been deliberate, positive, precise, clear, and consistent. And where a husband's declaration that he had certain money of his wife's, that he would pay it back to her, and that it should not be said that he had any of her money, or that he wanted only the use of it for the present, and that it would go to her children, or that they should have it, it was insufficient to establish her right of survivorship. In re Gray, 1 Pa. Permitting wife to possess property.—However the marital rights of a husband in his wife's real estate cannot be alienated or defeated merely by his permitting her to hold and enjoy the property and collect and apply the rents, issues, and profits to her own use; nor can the wife in that way acquire a separate property in such estate. Schafroth v. Amsb, 46 Mo. 580.

Promise to refund.—A promise by the husband to refund moneys received by him from her, or collected on notes owned by her at the time of her marriage, or realized from sales of her separate estate made subsequent to the reception thereof, does not create a legal obligation against him; and such promise, being without legal consideration, is void. *Fletcher v. Deposit in bank.—On a sale of land, the vendor, in consideration of the release of dower by the wife, agreed to set aside a portion of the purchase-money for her use; and a portion of the purchase-money, together with the proceeds of certain land of the wife sold by her while sole, was deposited in a savings bank in the name of the wife; and the husband never claimed such investment, or attempted to reduce it to possession. the husband does not affect his common-law rights in her property after the same have once vested.⁵⁴ Equity, however, will refuse him aid in obtaining possession of his wife's property when she has been deserted by him or left to support herself.⁵⁵

(v) BANISHMENT OF HUSBAND. A husband who is banished is civilliter mortuus, and such rights as he would be entitled to on the death of his wife are extinct.⁵⁶

k. Antenuptial Transfer in Fraud of Husband—(i) IN GENERAL. The mere fact of an antenuptial conveyance by the wife is not per se fraudulent as to the intended husband,⁵⁷ although the general rule is that it is a fraud upon the marital rights of the husband for a woman, before her marriage, and without her prospective husband's knowledge, to convey her property to another without the payment of a valuable consideration.⁵⁸ A transfer made before the engagement to marry is not, however, in fraud of the husband.⁵⁹ him.⁷⁰ He cannot, however, dispose of them by will to the prejudice of the wife, since should the wife survive she is entitled to them regardless of the will.⁷¹ Should, however, the husband survive, a bequest of her leasehold estates made by him during coverture will be effective to pass them during their entire term.⁷²

c. Dower Interest. The dower interest which a wife has in realty derived from a former marriage is a life-estate to which the marital rights of a subsequent husband attach.⁷³ His interest is the same as in any other freehold estate of the wife.⁷⁴ Upon the sale of a widow's dower rights, the proceeds, like other personalty, vests in a subsequent husband.⁷⁵

d. Land Held in Trust. A term for years settled on a single woman in trust may at law be disposed of upon coverture by the husband as if the legal interest were in her;⁷⁶ but the husband's right is not that of a purchaser for value,⁷⁷ and he takes her leaseholds subject to attached equities.⁷⁸

Agreement for lease a reduction into possession.—An agreement by a husband for a lease of the chattel real of the wife is in equity a reduction into possession, and binding on the surviving wife. Sale by widow before second marriage.—But a sale by a widow, while a feme sole, of land received by her by descent from her husband, will not be affected by her subsequent marriage. Dewcese v. Reagan, 40 Ind. 513.

Unallotted dower.—A widow's dower not allotted does not vest in her second husband. Smith v. Cunningham, 79 Miss. 425, 30 So. 652. It has been held, however, that where the second husband of a widow, who has an unpartitioned child's part in the lands of her first husband, has vested in him at the time of marriage the title of the widow as joint tenant with the children of the deceased, and, where he survives his wife, the land is his and descends at his death to his heirs. Royston v. Royston, 21 Ga. 161.

Surrender of claim.—Where a husband, in possession of land belonging to his wife and her children by a former marriage, on the children coming of age surrenders the land to such children and resigns any claim for the dower of his wife, he is not entitled, on the filing of a bill thereafter to recover such dower, to interest on the amount of the rents and profits which he is entitled to recover. 79. A married woman may voluntarily agree to a partition where the husband has notice and gives consent. Hardy v. Summers, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 316, 32 Am. Dec. 167.

80. See Willard v. Willard, 145 U. S. 116, 12 S. Ct. 818, 36 L. ed. 644. At early common law the right to demand partition was limited to coparceners only. The statutes of 31 rights of the husband attach to his wife's portion, as in case of other realty, when the apportionment is made by a division of the lands.⁸¹ When, however, the land is sold, and the wife's share is in money, or when an owelty of partition is ordered paid to her, the decisions are conflicting as to the nature of the husband's interests. Some of the courts treat the proceeds of such sales like choses in action, requiring therefore some act of dominion or reduction to possession on the part of the husband before his interests attach.⁸² The more usual rule seems to be to treat the money derived from the sale as personalty in possession of which the husband has absolute ownership.⁸³ Equity may treat the proceeds as lands, by the doctrine of conversion, so that the marital rights of the husband will be governed by the rights in the realty of the wife.⁸⁴

Hen. VIII, c. 1, and 32 Hen. VIII, c. 32, extended the right to joint tenants and tenants in common, and to tenants for life and for years.

At common law if a coparcener is married, her husband can make partition which will be binding unless, after his death, the wife or her heir can show that the part received by her husband in the partition was less in value than the part received by the other parcener. *Brooks v. Husband's interest.—A husband who took lands in right of his wife on a partition, without payment of owelty, acquires but a life-estate, not subject to judicial sale. Snavely v. Wagner, 3 Pa. Eq. 73 (holding that a sale under a decree in partition operating as a statutory conversion, the sum payable to a married woman for the value of her contingent dower is personalty, which belongs to the husband, subject to her claim for a settlement, and on her death, after asserting such a claim, it will be paid over to him); *Ellsworth v. Note given for share in sale.—If any part of the amount due the wife is secured by a note, reduction of the note to possession by the husband is necessary before his interests attach. Croft v. Bolton, 31 Mo. 355.

Statutory requirements.—On partition and sale of land belonging to married women, under the statute, the proceeds of the sale will be ordered to be paid to the husband and wife. In re Lippencott, 8 N. J. L. 88. Before payment to a husband of the share of the proceeds of a sale in partition belonging to the wife, it must appear by a master's certificate that on a private examination of the wife he fully explained to her the nature and extent of her rights, and that she voluntarily consented to relinquish them in favor of her husband, either absolutely or on the terms and conditions specified in the certificate. *Hallenbeck v. h. Conveyances by Husband. The husband may convey at common law his interest in his wife's real property,⁹⁷ whether such property be held by the wife in fee,⁹⁸ for life,⁹⁹ or for years.¹ His power, however, to convey is measured by the estate or interest which he enjoys by his marital right.² He cannot alienate or encumber her estates to the prejudice of the ultimate rights of the wife³ or her heirs,⁴ since only his individual estate is affected by a voluntary or involuntary transfer.⁵ If he gains a tenancy by curtesy, his right to alienate his interest lasts during his life;⁶ but otherwise his power to convey continues only during coverture,⁷ and one acquiring possession of lands by a conveyance from the husband is bound, on the death of the husband, to restore the possession to the wife or to her heirs.⁸ The husband's right to convey includes his right to charge, lease, or mortgage the estate,⁹ within of course the limits of his interests. The husband, although he cannot bequeath by will the leasehold estates of his wife, may nevertheless sublease them for a term to begin after his death;¹⁰ and the wife's right of survivorship will be either absolutely or partially cut off, accordingly as the underlease is for the whole of the remaining term¹¹ or for a portion separate estate, will pass to his grantee the estate in the land during the joint lives of the husband and wife, and during his own life if he survives the wife and there has been issue born of the marriage. Jones v. Freed, 42 Ark. 357.

Rights after death of husband.—In an early case in Maryland a husband made a parol lease of his wife's lands in the fall of 1810 for the year 1811, and the lessee gave his bond to the husband for the rent, payable in August, 1811, which bond the husband assigned, and in August, 1811, it was paid by the lessee. In April, 1811, the husband died. Part of the land was seeded in wheat in 1810, and the residue was woodland. The wife brought an action against the lessee for use and occupation from April, 1811, to the end of the year. It was held that the parol lease by the husband terminated with his death, and the lessee had no right to possess the premises, except to preserve the crop, and that, if he had occupied for any other purpose, he was liable therefor to the wife. Bevans v. Briscoe, 4 Harr. & J. (Md.) 139. Under Tex. Rev. St. art. 624, providing that no estate of inheritance or of freehold, or for a term of more than one year, shall be conveyed, except by writing, and article 635, requiring the husband and wife to join in the conveyance of separate real estate of the wife, "the sole management" of the wife's property during marriage, given to the husband by article 2967, does not authorize him to lease her real estate for a term longer than one year without her signature to the lease. Dority v. Dority, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 216, 70 S. W. 338 [affirmed in 96 Tex. 215, 71 S. W. 950, 60 L. R. A. 941]. By the early law the husband could alienate the whole estate of the wife, subject to the wife's writ of cui in vita, or to her heir's writ of sur cui in vita. The conveyance by the husband amounted to a "discontinuance," signifying the legal inability of one, although having a right to enter into lands because of such alienation. The wife therefore upon the death of the husband could not enter into the lands alienated by him, but was obliged to resort to the action. Coke Inst. II, 325, 326. The statute of 32 Hen. VIII, c. 28, changed this, giving to the wife and her heirs the right to enter into the lands, after the decease of the husband, although conveyed by him. The statute also provided that husband and wife might make a joint lease of the wife's lands for a term not exceeding three lives or twenty-one years. See Hill v. Saunders, 2 Bing. 112, 9 E. C. L. 505, 1 C. & P. 80, 12 E. C. L. 56, 9 Moore C. P. 238, 4 B. & C. 529, 7 D. & R. 17, 10 E. C. L. 689, 28 Rev. Rep. 375. Massachusetts has held that said English statute relating to the wife's right to enter is in force in that state as a part of the common law. Bruce v. Wood, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 542. Virginia, by a statute modeled after the English pattern, provides (V. C. (1873) c. 129, § 2) that upon any conveyance by the husband alone no discontinuance of the wife's estate shall be made. New York and other states had at various times similar statutes. In nearly all states at the present time ejectment or statutory summary process may be used by the wife for the recovery of her lands. See Miller v. Shackleford, 4 Dana (Ky.) 264; Stevens v. Richardson, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 156. Where a lease for years of the wife's land was executed by the husband, and his administrator, having a general power from the widow to receive all moneys due her, received the rent during the residue of the term, the rent after the husband's death belongs to the widow. Brown v. Lindsay, Riley Eq. (S. C.) 97.

Adverse possession.—The possession under a deed from a husband, conveying his life-interest in his wife's land, during the husband's life, is not adverse to the wife, and on her husband's death she may recover the land. Mellus v. Snowman, 21 Me. 201.

of it.¹² As to conveyances of the wife's estates in remainder or reversion, the better rule is that no conveyance can be made before the vesting of the estate in the wife.¹³

i. Effect of Dissolution of Marriage. Upon the dissolution of the marriage, either by divorce a vinculo,¹⁴ or by the death of the wife,¹⁵ there is no interest which the husband can convey, except in case of tenancy by curtesy.¹⁶

j. Alien Husband. At common law an alien husband has no vested interest in his wife's real property, but statutes have generally removed this disability.¹⁷

3. PERSONAL PROPERTY — a. In General. At common law marriage gives to the husband an interest in all the personal property of the wife. The nature of the husband's interest is absolute or qualified according to whether such personalty is choses in possession or choses in action.¹⁸

b. Choses in Possession. At common law all the personal property of the wife in her possession at time of marriage, such as money, goods, chattels, household furniture, farm stock, crops, and slaves, vests absolutely in the husband.¹⁹

Marriage operates as a gift to the husband of all the movable effects of the wife of which she is in possession at the time, and of all choses in action which he reduces to possession during coverture.²⁰ No act on the husband's part is required, since her choses in possession are his by the right of marriage.²¹ The husband's control of the wife's personalty in possession is at common law unlimited and unrestricted.²² He may make any disposition of it during her lifetime, without her consent,²³ and hence it follows that she has no interest in it which she can convey.²⁴ He may bequeath his wife's personalty.²⁵ It is liable for his debts,²⁶

c. Property Acquired During Coverture. All personal property in possession accruing to the wife during coverture vests absolutely in the husband, whether such property comes to her by way of gift, legacy, bequest, or earnings.²⁸

d. Sufficiency of Wife's Possession. Mere possession of personalty by the wife is not sufficient for the husband's rights to attach, since if she is a bailee or guardian, or if she finds goods, and afterward marries, detainee may be brought against her and her husband.²⁹ On the other hand the wife need not be in actual possession for the husband's rights to attach. If a third person is in possession of personalty belonging to her as her agent or trustee,³⁰ guardian,³¹

Effect of consent to retention by wife.—At the time of marriage the wife had a small sum of money, which her husband afterward permitted her to retain and manage as she thought proper, he being at the time insolvent. He also permitted her to retain some portion of her own earnings, all of which she placed in the hands of a friend to invest for her. It was held that this fund was liable for the debts of the husband, and that the wife was not entitled in equity to have the same settled on her. Basham v. Chamberlain, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 443.

Tennessee.—Ewing v. Helm, 2 Tenn. Ch. 368.

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 38.

Wife's earnings.—On the marriage there vests in the husband a right to all his wife's goods and to earnings and property subsequently acquired by her by business carried on in her own name. Cropsey v. McKinney, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 47.

Separate use.—A gift or sale of personal property to a married woman by a third person vests the absolute title in the husband, unless expressed to be for her separate use. Withers v. Hurbelee, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 536.

Inheritance of wife.—Moneys arising from the sale of a wife's inheritance and from her distributive share of her other personal estate before the adoption of the code is subject to the control of the husband by virtue of his marital rights. Plummer v. Jarman, 44 Md. 632.

Presumptions.—Where a husband, prior to the Married Woman's Act of 1876-1877, purchased land with money which his wife had derived from her father's estate, the presumption is that the money when received by him was his by virtue of his marital rights. Jesser v. Armentrout, 100 Va. 666, 42 S. E. 681.

Wife as executrix or administratrix.—If a feme sole be an executrix or administratrix, and marries, the husband at common law is entitled to perform her legal duties as such by virtue of his marital right. Presumption as to husband's ownership.—Personal property in the possession of a married woman is presumed to belong to her husband. If the fact is otherwise it must be so shown. Hemelreich v. Carlos, 24 Mo. App. 264.

e. Husband Living Apart. Although the husband be living apart from the wife, his ownership of her personalty is not affected.³⁴ Only death or divorce a vinculo puts an end to his right.³⁵

f. Wife's Rights in Equity. Equity will recognize the wife's right to her personal property, to the exclusion of her husband, when such property has been clearly set apart as her separate estate.³⁶

g. Under Statutes. Modern statutes have quite generally changed the common law by permitting a married woman to retain her personal property, and to exercise full control over the same.³⁷ Such statutes are not retroactive, however, and personal property derived from the wife and vested in the husband is not divested by such acts.³⁸

h. Wife's Paraphernalia.³⁹ Wearing apparel of the wife, and jewels and other adornments worn by her suitable to her rank or station in life⁴⁰ are termed "paraphernalia,"⁴¹ and are subject to an exception to the general rule governing the wife's personalty in possession. While they are the property of the husband

Wife's money in custody of court.—A husband's marital rights do not attach to the undivided interest of his wife in a fund which is in the custody of the court. Jackson v. McAliley, 5 Rieh. Eq. (S. C.) 38. Under a general order of court that money in the hands of the commissioner be paid to the parties entitled, the share of a wife may be paid to the husband. Geiger v. Geiger, Cheves Eq. (S. C.) 162.

Surviving husband's rights in wife's personalty held by another.—By the common law the personalty of the wife vests in the husband as her administrator or survivor, whether the property was given directly to the wife or to another for her use, if the instrument conveying the property to her contained no words excluding the husband's right therein. Brown v. Alden, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 141.

In Alabama the doctrine of the wife's constructive possession has been denied in some cases, it being held that the wife's possession must be actual. See Hair v. Avery, 28 Ala. 267; Mason v. McNeill, 23 Ala. 201; Johnson v. Wren, 3 Stew. 172.

Russell v. Brooks, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 65; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 32 Miss. 279.

35. See DIVORCE, 4 Cyc. 728.

Divorce a mensa et thoro.—Divorce from bed and board, or voluntary separation, does not take away the husband's right. Prescott v. Brown, 23 Me. 305, 39 Am. Dec. 623; Washburn v. Hale, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 429; Glover v. Drury Lane, 2 Chit. 117, 18 E. C. L. 540.

Statutes may, however, deprive the husband of his marital rights in the personal property of the wife as a penalty for his failure to support her. Thus in Pennsylvania a failure to support his wife must concur with drunkenness to deprive the husband of the right to the wife's personal property under the act of May 4, 1855. D'Arros' Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 51.

40. See Vass v. Southall, 26 N. C. 301, holding that a watch which cost one hundred dollars given by a husband to his wife is not "suitable to her condition in life," where he is a man of little means and financially embarrassed.

41. Derivation of word; paraphernal property distinguished.—The term "paraphernalia" is derived from the Greek "para-

the same as other personalty,⁴² and may be disposed of during coverture by him,⁴³ and are during his life subject to his debts,⁴⁴ yet they cannot be bequeathed by him,⁴⁵ and at his death they pass, not to his representatives, as other personalty, but belong absolutely to the wife.⁴⁶ If, however, there was a deficit of assets in pherna," signifying in excess of, or in addition to, dowry. Although the term has been adopted from the civil law, nevertheless the common-law doctrine of the wife's paraphernalia should not be confused with the doctrine of the wife's "paraphernal property" in the civil law, in which system the phrase has a much broader meaning, equivalent to "separate estate." See Stuffer v. Puckett, 30 La. Ann. 811. And see infra, XI, 1, 2.

Suitable wearing apparel and jewels are paraphernalia. Howard v. Menifee, 5 Ark. 668; Tllexan v. Wilson, 43 Me. 186; In re Harrall, 31 N. J. Eq. 101, in which case the term is used more in accord with the civil law significance of "separate estate." Rawson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 48 N. Y. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 543; Graham v. Londonderry, 3 Atk. 393, 26 Eng. Reprint 1026.

Family jewels.—Old family jewels do not constitute paraphernalia, but pearl ornaments presented to a married woman by a third party held to be part of her paraphernalia, and also brilliant bracelets bought by the husband and given to the wife, although worn with the family jewels. Jervoise v. Jervoise, 17 Beav. 566, 23 L. J. Ch. 703, 2 Wkly. Rep. 91, 51 Eng. Reprint 1154.

Gifts distinguished.—Diamonds given by the husband's father to his son's wife on marriage are a gift to her separate use, and she is entitled to them; and the same is true in case of a gift by a stranger to the wife. So are trinkets given to her by her husband; but where given to her expressly to be worn as ornaments they are to be deemed as paraphernalia, although if considered as a gift the wife may dispose of them contrary to the husband's intention. Graham v. Londonderry, 3 Atk. 393, 26 Eng. Reprint 1026. Gifts of jewelry made by husband to wife on occasions such as Christmas day or on her birthdays, or in order to settle differences that have arisen between them are not paraphernalia, unless it can be shown that the husband intended to impress the character of the paraphernalia upon them. The Married Women's Property Act does not affect a gift of paraphernalia. Tasker v. Tasker, [1895] P. 1, 64 L. J. P. & Adm. 36, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 779, 11 Reports 619, 43 Wkly. Wife's paraphernalia may be barred by antenuptial agreement.—A wife who by articles before marriage is by express words barred of everything she could claim out of her husband's personal estate, by the common

the hands of the husband's administrator, the creditors of the husband could resort to the wife's paraphernalia, not including, however, her necessary wearing apparel.⁴⁷

1. Pin-Money. The wife's "pin-money" is sometimes confused with her paraphernalia. The two, however, are quite distinct.⁴⁸ "Pin-money" is a term often used in English marriage settlements, and has received judicial consideration in a number of cases in that country.⁴⁹ It has thus far received very little recognition in the United States.⁵⁰ Pin-money is an allowance by the husband to the wife, either in an annual stipend or otherwise, for her own private use in supplying herself with needs incident to her domestic affairs.⁵¹ In general pin-law, custom of England, or otherwise, has no right to paraphernalia. Read v. Snell, 2 Atk. 642, 26 Eng. Reprint 784.

Wife's claim to her paraphernalia a personal one.—Where a husband devises a wife's jewels to her for life, remainder to his son, and the wife makes no election or claim to have the jewels as her paraphernalia, her administrator cannot make this claim. Clarge's Case, Nels. 174, 21 Eng. Reprint 819, 2 Vern. Ch. 245, 23 Eng. Reprint 758. In one English case, a wife's next of kin were, however, permitted after her death to claim the right. A lady was possessed of jewels and ornaments of the person before her marriage, and after her marriage they were in all writings spoken of by her husband as hers. After her lunacy the husband made his will, giving her the use of his plate, furniture, linen, jewels, and household effects, including the jewels and effects "which belonged to her before her marriage," and which he "had assumed by marital right" during her life. Upon the death of the lunatic, who survived her husband, the court held that the next of kin of the husband were entitled to such of the articles as did not consist of paraphernalia as their property, but as to such as formed paraphernalia, the next of kin of the wife were entitled to elect whether they would take them or the benefits given by the will. In re Hewson, 23 L. Statutes affecting wife's paraphernalia.—In a few states there are statutes expressly exempting this class of property of the wife from the control of the husband, and from liability for his debts. Thus in Georgia the wife's "paraphernalia" is exempt. Gen. St. (1882) § 1773. In Colorado her "wearing apparel," her "watch," and "table ware" are exempt. Gen. St. (1883) § 2266. In Rhode Island her "jewelry," and "plate" are mentioned. Gen. St. (1882) c. 166, § 4. So in many states there are statutes expressly reserving to the wife, upon the death of the husband, her wearing apparel, household goods, etc. See Mass. Gen. St. (1882) c. 96, §§ 4, 5. See also Whiton v. Snyder, 88 N. Y. 299.

Wife's compensation in equity for seizure of her paraphernalia by husband's creditors.—The wife is not entitled to paraphernalia when the husband dies indebted. The court will, however, let her in on other funds, if any. Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 1, 28 Eng. Reprint 1. See also Howard v. Menifee, 5 Ark. 668; In re Harrall, 31 N. J. Pin-money distinguished from paraphernalia and from separate estate.—Pin-money differs from paraphernalia in the fact that pin-money is subject to the wife's control during coverture, and does not await the husband's death. It differs from the wife's separate estate in being a conditional gift, and not at her absolute disposal. Macqueen Husb. & W. 318; Schouler Husb. & W. § 291.

Must be used for dress.—There is annexed to the wife's pin-money an implied duty of applying it toward her personal dress, decoration, and ornament. Jodrell v. Jodrell, 9 Beav. 45, 9 Jur. 1022, 15 L. J. Ch. 17, 50 Eng. Reprint 259.

money, if unpaid, cannot be collected for more than one year in arrears,⁵² and, since the allowance is personal to her, her representatives are not entitled upon her death to any recovery for any period.⁵³

Recovery of arrears where assigned for value.—The rule that after the wife's death no arrears of pin-money are recoverable does not apply where either the wife has parted with her right to the personal enjoyment of the pin-money, or the husband has been deprived of the enjoyment of the estate on which the pin-money is charged. Assignees for value are therefore entitled to resort to arrears of pin-money. Tuffnell v. O'Donoghue, [1897] 1 Ir. 360.

Husband furnishing clothes.—Where pin-money is secured to the wife, and the husband furnishes her clothes and necessaries, this is a bar as to any arrears of pin-money incurred during such time. *Fowler v. Desertion by husband.—A husband deserted his wife, having first fraudulently assigned all his property. The court decreed her a maintenance out of the estate assigned, although she had the interest of £4,000 as pin-money. In a suit for alimony, separate maintenance or pin-money is not a good plea. Colmer v. Colmer, Moseley 118, 25 Eng. Reprint 304.

Subject to property tax.—Pin-money was subject to the property tax, although not to deduction for alimony, as it is clear of maintenance. Ball v. Coutts, 1 Ves. & B. 292, 35 Eng. Reprint 114.

Bills and notes as choses in possession.—In Ames Cases, Bills and Notes, II, 697, the learned author, in a note to McNeilage v. Holloway, 1 B. & Ald. 218, strenuously insists that bills and notes are not choses in action but chattels in possession. There are indeed some earlier cases that take this view. The great weight of authority, however, is to the effect that bills and notes, although anomalous, are to be regarded as choses in action. See Phelps v. Phelps, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 561. In Connecticut a distinction was made under the common-law marital rights of the husband, prior to the statutes relating to the property rights of married women, between choses in action accruing to the wife before marriage, and those arising during coverture. It was held to be the common law that choses in action of the former class must be reduced to the possession of the husband before they became his property; but in case of her choses in action accruing during coverture they were his absolutely, the same as choses in possession. See Winton v. Barnum, 19 Conn. 171; Baldwin v. Carter, 17 Conn. 201, 42 Am. Dec. 735; Whittlesey v. McMahon, 10 Conn. 137, 26 Am. Dec. 389; Cornwall v. Hoyt, 7 Conn. 420; *Griswold v. (iv) BILLS AND NOTES. Bills and notes payable to, or indorsed to, the wife vest in the husband upon his reducing them to his possession.⁶⁶ During coverture the indorsement of the husband alone is sufficient to pass title,⁶⁷ and if the wife indorses jointly with the husband, her indorsement is merely surplusage.⁶⁸ Upon a note payable to the wife, the husband may sue either alone or jointly with his wife.⁶⁹ She, however, cannot sue alone.⁷⁰ Where a bill or note was payable to a married woman the rule prevailed at common law that, in the absence of the consent of her husband, payment could not be made to her.⁷¹ But under the statutes in respect to the rights of married women now prevailing in the United States, where a note is payable to a married woman she may receive payment of the same.⁷²

Proceeds of land of infant wife.—Money arising from the sale of the wife's land by her and her husband, in 1851, becomes his property by virtue of his marital rights.

The rule is not affected by the fact that she was an infant at the time of making an executory contract of sale, which was not consummated until after she became of age. Black v. Justice, 86 N. C. 504.

Proceeds of land taken by right of eminent domain.—The correlative constitutional right to demand and receive the value of property taken by right of eminent domain can only ever, notes or other evidences of indebtedness are given to the wife for the lands, they are choses in action, and require some act of the husband to vest absolute title in him.⁸¹

(VIII) WHAT CONSTITUTES REDUCTION TO POSSESSION—(A) Intent. The reduction to possession by the husband must be with the intention of converting them to his own use.⁸² Mere reduction to possession without intent to make them his own is not sufficient.⁸³ Both elements, the reduction and the intention, must exist.⁸⁴ Mere intention alone to reduce a wife's choses in action is not sufficient.⁸⁵ There must not only be an intent but also a reduction, or some step taken to that end, or some act of dominion exercised over the property.⁸⁶ Reduction to pos-be asserted by the true owner; and, where the land belongs to a feme covert, she is entitled to the price when the property is taken from her otherwise than by her free and voluntary consent, in the mode pointed out by statute on a sale by her husband. *East Tennessee, etc., R. Proceeds of land in form of certificate of deposit.—In an action against a bank on a certificate of deposit by a married woman, it appeared that the woman's husband was authorized to sell her land and collect the price, and that he then, without authority, deposited it in his own name, but afterward transferred it to her to avoid creditors, and that the bank paid out a portion on his checks. It was held that the money had not, according to Sess. Acts (1875), p. 61, been reduced to the husband's possession. Rodgers v. Pike County Bank, 69 Mo. 560.

Presumption may be rebutted.—The possession and use by a husband of a wife's money is very strong evidence of the conversion of it to his own use, and with the intent that her right to it shall be divested. Such presumption may, however, be rebutted by sufficient proof of an opposite intention; but in such case the evidence must be of the clearest and most unquestionable character. Nolen's Estate, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 298. Although the presumption is that money of the wife, reduced to possession by the husband during the marriage, becomes his, such presumption is not conclusive, and the husband may so treat it as to charge himself and his heirs, as trustees of the wife, with the duty of applying it to her separate use. Resor v. Resor, 9 Ind. 347.

Under statute.—Where money belonging to the wife was by her direction invested in land by the husband, who took title in his own name, the fact that the wife allowed the title so to remain, in ignorance of the effect thereof, does not show an assent to the use of the money for his benefit, sufficient, under Rev. St. (1889) § 6869, to raise the presumption that it had been reduced to possession by the husband. Alkire Grocer Co. v. Ballenger, 137 Mo. 369, 38 S. W. 911.

Intention to reduce to possession inferred from husband's conduct as administrator.—If an administrator with a will annexed, whose wife is a legatee in the will, receives assets of the estate sufficient to pay the legacies, and dies without settling any account of his administration, leaving his wife surviving him, it is such a reducing to possession of the choses in action of the wife as will preclude a recovery by her after his death. *Ellis v. An assignment by a husband of a chose in action belonging to his wife operates as a reduction of it to possession, so as to give a good title to the assignee, only where the husband at the time has the power to reduce it to actual possession. Matheney v. Guess, 2 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 63.

Possession and user as his own, by a husband, of his wife's legacy or distributive share, at the time he might have reduced it into possession as his own, amounts to such reduction, although he unlawfully acquired the possession in the first instance. Both judgment and execution required.—To reduce a wife's chose in action to his possession, the husband must have actually received the money thereon, or there must be a sale of it absolute or conditional by him, or the recovery of a judgment thereon, and an execution issued in his name or his and his wife's name. Latourette v. Williams, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 9. The recovery of a judgment by a husband in the name of both on a bond given to husband and wife for their maintenance during each of their lives, without taking out execution, shows a disposition not to appropriate it to himself. Pike v. Collins, 33 Me. 38.

Joint judgment necessary where debt accrued before coverture.—Although a husband and wife sue for a debt due the wife before marriage, it remains a debt due to her, and will survive unless there be a joint judgment. Tillet v. Com., 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 438.

Judgment connected with wife's separate estate.—The presumption arising from the fact that a judgment has been obtained in the name of the husband for an injury to the separate property of the wife, and that he has reduced it to possession, may be overcome by proof that the action was prosecuted at the instance of the wife and for her sole benefit, without any intent on the part of the husband to appropriate the chose in action to his own use. Pierson v. Smith, 9 Ohio St. 554, 75 Am. Dec. 486.

Damages for an injury to the person of a wife, being her property, a recovery of a judgment in the joint names of the husband and wife does not reduce them to the possession of the husband, so that they can be attached for his debts. Jeanes v. Davis, 3 Pa. L. J. Rep. 60, 4 Pa. L. J. 406.

Husband as executor.—However, where a husband as executor of the wife's ancestor had made a final settlement of the estate, and was ordered by the court of common pleas to distribute the assets, part of which was a legacy to her, his retaining the money in his hands until his death was an extinguishment of the wife's contingent right of survivorship. *Walden v. personalty by a husband as executor or administrator of a wife's distributive share;⁷ and a joint receipt by husband and wife, the money being paid to the wife.⁸ Where the husband takes mere evidences of debts such as bonds, bills, or notes payable to the wife, this does not amount to a reduction to his possession.⁹

(IX) ASSIGNMENT BY HUSBAND—(A) In General. At early common law a chose in action could not be assigned.¹⁰ Equity, however, recognized the validity of such assignments, providing they were in good faith and for a valuable consideration.¹¹ By the equity rule, however, the assignee obtains the same right as the husband, namely, the right to reduce to possession; and upon such failure of reduction by the assignee, the property, upon the death of the husband, passes to the wife by the right of survivorship.¹² Many of the common-law courts have also in later years adopted this rule.¹³

Receipt by agent of husband and wife.—The receipt by an agent, appointed by husband and wife, of money forming part of the estate of an intestate of which the wife is administratrix, amounts to a reduction into possession by the husband of the wife's distributive share of the money. In re Barber, 11 Ch. D. 442, 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 649, 27 Wkly. Rep. 813.

Collection of a part or of interest.—Collection of a part of a fund is not necessarily a reduction of the whole. Likewise the collection of interest is not a reduction of the principal. Dunn v. Sargent, 101 Mass. 336; Stanwood v. Stanwood, 17 Mass. 57; Nash v. Nash, 2 Madd. 133, 56 Eng. Reprint 284; Howman v. Corie, 2 Vern. Ch. 190, 23 Eng. Reprint 724; Hart v. Stephens, 6 Q. Including a wife's chose in action in the schedule of property filed by a bankrupt is not of itself such a reduction into possession, or dissent to her separate holding of it, as to subject it to his creditors' claims. Poor v. Hazleton, 15 N. H. 564.

Notes taken in name of husband.—The mere fact that notes given for the purchase-money of land belonging to a married woman as her separate property were taken in the name of the husband, the notes never having been collected by him, will not be regarded as a reduction of the wife's property to the possession of the husband, so that by common law the title would vest in him. McCullough v. Ford, 96 Ill. 439.

Possession as administrator.—Where a husband is administrator of an estate of which his wife is distributee, and on a sale of the property takes notes or other securities for her share, if he converts them to his own use or wastes them this is a sufficient reduction of them to his possession; but if after his death they are found in his possession, the wife's right to them still exists. Wardlaw v. Gray, 2 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 644.

A transfer by husband and wife of the distributive share of the latter, not yet reduced to possession, in the estate of a decedent, made before a commissioner in another state, according to Acts (1839), c. 26, § 6, is inoperative and void as against the wife. Copledge v. Threadgill, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 577.

recognize the validity of the husband's assignment, not only of a present interest of a wife in her choses in action, but also of her contingent or reversionary interest.¹⁴ Later, however, it became the rule in chancery, that, although a present vested interest of the wife might be assigned by the husband, there could be no assignment by him of a wife's reversionary interest unless the interest became vested in the wife during the lifetime of the husband.¹⁵ This is also the prevailing doctrine in this country, the reason of the rule being that the result otherwise would be to give the assignee a greater right than the husband himself.¹⁶ It has been held, however, that if the husband be living at the time the wife's interest accrues, then a previous assignment by him will defeat the wife's right of survivorship.¹⁷ Some of the cases still further modify the rule, holding that no assignment of a wife's reversionary choses is valid, unless it becomes possible for the husband to reduce them during his lifetime, and in addition that he actually does reduce them.¹⁸

(xi) RIGHTS OF CREDITORS. The right of the husband to reduce his wife's choses in action is a privilege. It is personal to him, and depends upon his election.²¹ If he has reduced his wife's choses in action to his possession, the property, like other personalty in possession, is subject to his debts, and may be attached by his creditors.²² However, until the husband has exercised some act of ownership, the better rule is that the property remains vested in the wife, and cannot be reached by the creditors of the husband.²³ Some jurisdictions, how-

Effect of statutes.—A debt due to a married woman, not reduced to possession by her husband at the time of the passage of the statute of April 11, 1840, cannot afterward be released by her husband, without her assent. Goodyear v. Rumbaugh, 13 Pa. St. 480.

Release of bond.—A release by husband and wife of a sum of money secured by bond to A, and payable to the wife after A's death, was held not binding on the wife on her surviving both A and the husband. Rogers v. Acaster, 14 Beav. 445, 51 Eng. Reprint 358.

4. WIFE'S EQUITY TO A SETTLEMENT—a. In General. At common law the whole of the husband's interest, embracing all the personal property of the wife, may be taken by the husband or his creditors, without any reservation to the wife.²⁵ Equity, however, by virtue of its protectorate over the property of married women, will guard the interests of the wife and her children.²⁶ When a husband or his creditor, in order to reduce to his possession the wife's choses in action, or to enforce any claim of the husband against the property of the wife, is compelled to resort to the aid of equity, as in case of an equitable interest,²⁷

Considerations which govern right.—The wife's rights to provision for support depend on considerations and principles entirely distinct from those controlling her rights by survivorship. Norris v. Lantz, 18 Md. 260.

Doctrine not recognized.—In a few jurisdictions the doctrine of the wife's equity to a settlement is either not recognized at all or but indirectly applied. In New Hampshire the doctrine has been refused recognition. See Parsons v. Parsons, 9 N. H. 309, 32 Am. Dec. 362. In North Carolina the doctrine has received but a limited recognition. Lassiter v. Dawson, 17 N. C. 383; Bryan v. Bryan, 16 N. C. 47. See Allen v. Allen, 41 N. C. 293. In Pennsylvania the doctrine has been indirectly applied by preventing a recovery in a legal action unless suitable provision be made for the wife. Rees v. Waters, 9 Watts 90; Yohe v. Barnet, 1 Binn. 358; Matter of Miller, 1 Ashm. 323. But see Ex p. Titus, 3 Pa. L. J.

Wife's right to a settlement out of her legal interests.—If a court of equity has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the wife's interests, it has been held, will be protected by a settlement upon her regardless of the fact whether her interests are purely equitable or legal. *Bell v. Virginia.—The guardian of an infant husband is clothed with the powers of a husband estate;³³ and arrears of income accruing before the suit are personalty in possession of the husband, and to such vested rights of the husband the wife can make no claim.³⁴ Where moreover the wife has already a sufficient independent estate or provision for her needs she cannot claim a further settlement.³⁵

b. Effect of Desertion or Separation. Where a husband has deserted his wife, leaving her in a destitute situation, a court of equity will make a suitable settlement on her out of her property to which his marital rights attach.³⁶ But where the wife lives apart from her husband without his consent and without justifiable cause, she cannot be allowed maintenance out of property owned by her at the time of the marriage.³⁷

c. Voluntary Settlement by Husband. Although the wife's equity to a settlement is generally determined by a decree of the court, that is, in connection with the husband's effort to obtain the property of the wife, yet where the husband has made for her support a voluntary settlement, such settlement will be upheld by the court when the court would have made a like settlement of the property.³⁸

d. Restraining Proceedings at Law. As an adjunct to the jurisdiction of equity in the exercise of its prerogative to protect the estates of married women by properly providing for their maintenance and support, an injunction has often to reduce to possession choses in action inherited by the wife; and, if he has succeeded in doing so without the aid of equity, the wife cannot compel him to make a settlement. Ware v. Ware, 28 Grant. 670.

Guardian of infant wife compelling settlement.—The guardian of a married woman, who was a minor, before settling with her husband, who was insolvent and owed many debts, obliged the husband to make a trust deed for the sole and separate use of the wife to a trustee whom the guardian selected. It was held that as a court of equity would have obliged the guardian and husband to have settled the estate in that way, as his debts were not liens on it, the settlement voluntarily made was to be sustained. Ryan v. Bull, 3 Strobb. Eq. (S. C.) 86.

Parol settlement.—In equity the husband may make an assignment of his wife's choses for her separate use by parol, and hence a settlement by deed of a legacy due her, although void for want of registration, operates as an assignment of the husband's interest and puts the property out of the reach of his creditors. Perryclear v. Jacobs, Riley Eq. (S. C.) 47.

Promise to executors as to settlement of a legacy in favor of wife.—A legacy left by will to a married woman, to her separate use, was paid over by the executors to her husband on his promise to invest it for her; but he did not do so, and at his death his estate was found not sufficient to pay all his debts. It was held that the executors had a right to require such a promise from the husband, and that it was founded on a sufficient consideration, and was one which a court of equity would enforce. State v. Reigart, 1 Gill (Md.) 1, 39 Am. Dec. 628.

Mere promise does not create a settlement.—A husband received his wife's share of her father's personal estate prior to the adoption of the code, and used it to purchase land in his own name under a promise to her, before the purchase, that the money should be so applied and treated as a loan to him. It was held that the husband was entitled in his own right to receive the proceeds of such personal estate, and any promise or engagement to pay it to his wife was a mere voluntary promise, without consideration, and constituted no ground of claim against him or his estate. Oswald v. Hoover, 43 Md. 360.

e. When Barred by Acts of Wife. The wife, however, may voluntarily waive her right to her equity,⁴⁰ or it may be barred by her fraud,⁴¹ although not, it seems, by her adultery.⁴²

f. Amount Settled. Under the former practice in chancery, it was customary to settle upon the wife one half of the funds sought by the claimant.⁴³ No general rule, however, applies to all cases. The individual circumstances and needs of the wife according to her station and condition will govern the discretion of the court.⁴⁴

g. Actions in Which Right Is Enforced. The wife's right to a settlement is recognized in suits brought by the husband where the wife is joined as a co-plaintiff,⁴⁵ in actions by his assignee,⁴⁶ or in actions by herself against her husband⁴⁷ or his assignee.⁴⁸ The court will protect the right of a wife to a provision out of her equitable property, although she is not present to insist on it, without reference to the source of the application.⁴⁹ Likewise, in any suit brought against the wife, either against her alone or jointly with others, her right will be enforced.⁵⁰

h. Against Whom Right Exists. The right to a settlement exists not only against the husband but also against his creditors,⁵¹ or his assignee in bankruptcy.⁵² When the husband has previously sold, conveyed, or assigned for a valuable consideration his interest, and the same has been reduced to possession, the wife's equity is lost;⁵³ but in case no reduction to possession has been made the wife's

Fortune of children irrelevant.—When a married woman has established her equity to a settlement, the usual provision for her children follows as a matter of course, wholly irrespective of any other fortune they may have, and her children by a former marriage are within the equity. j. Where Wife a Ward of Court. Where an infant wife is the ward of a court of chancery, chancery will compel the husband to make a proper settlement on the wife before he assumes control over any of her property in the hands of the chancery guardian.⁶⁰ Although chancery's authority to determine what may seem to be a suitable marriage for its female ward is not applicable to the courts of equity in the United States,⁶¹ yet the right of a court of equity, when a female ward's property is in its hands, to insist that upon her marriage suitable provision shall be made for her before the husband shall be permitted to reduce her property into his possession is recognized.⁶²

k. Effect of Modern Statutes. Where the property of a married woman is secured to her by statute, the reasons for the existence of the doctrine of a wife's equity to a settlement have passed away, and it is practically obsolete.⁶³

H. Property Acquired by Husband and Wife — 1. IN GENERAL. At common law, owing to the doctrine of identity⁶⁴ of husband and wife, a conveyance or devise of lands to them during coverture⁶⁵ does not create a joint tenancy or a tenancy in common, which estates necessarily require more than one tenant, but such conveyance or devise creates an estate in entirety.⁶⁶ This estate is confined

64. A different doctrine is laid down by some authorities to the effect that the estate of entirety peculiar to husband and wife is not founded upon the theory of their identity whereby they are incapable of taking by moieties, or per tout and per my, but rather that the estate in entirety rests upon the presumption of an intention on the grantor's part to convey such an estate. This view becomes necessary of course, in those jurisdictions which hold that an express conveyance of either a joint estate or an estate in common to husband and wife passes the estate designated, since if the husband and wife are incapable of holding by moieties, such estates could not be created even by express words.

65. Conveyances before coverture.—Where, however, before marriage a joint estate or a tenancy in common is conveyed to a feme sole and a man who afterward became her husband, they will continue after marriage to hold by moieties, and no estate in entirety results. *Holt v. however, even in the absence of statutes upon the subject, estates by entirety have never been recognized,⁶⁸ joint conveyances or devises to husband and wife being recognized as joint tenancies⁶⁹ or as tenancies in common. In some jurisdictions, by force of statute, an estate in entirety is not created unless expressly stated in the instrument.⁷⁰

2. PERSONAL PROPERTY. Since a wife's choses in action, if unreduced by the husband, survive, by common law, to the wife, it has been held by a majority of the cases that a similar rule of survivorship applies to choses in action jointly due to husband and wife, in conformity to the common law governing estates in entirety,⁷¹ since, it is asserted, such estates may be of personalty as well as of Joint annuity.—An annuity given to husband and wife belongs solely to the husband during their joint lives, and is liable for his debts. Gifford v. Rising, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 61, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 279.

Note payable to husband and wife.—Where a husband loans money and takes a note payable to himself and wife, it remains during his life subject to his control, and the wife has no legal interest therein until his death. Sanford v. Sanford, 45 N. Y. 723.

A bequest to a husband and wife of a sum of money in equal proportions is not an entirety, and hence the husband's share, on his death in the lifetime of the testatrix, lapses, and does not pass to the wife by survivorship. Mitchell's Estate, 12 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 422.

Consideration for wife's separate estate.—A bond and mortgage, taken in the name of husband and wife, to be held by them, their executors, etc., will not vest in them jointly, so that either will have the right of survivorship on the death of the other, where they contribute equally in making up the loan out of their separate property, but on the death of either the interest of the decedent lands.⁷² By other courts, however, this doctrine has been denied, the holding being that estates in entirety apply exclusively to lands, and have no reference to personality of any kind.⁷³

3. EFFECT OF EXPRESS WORDS IN GRANT. Although a transfer of real property to a husband and wife will generally create a tenancy by entireties, the weight of authority is that if the grant clearly shows an intention to create a joint tenancy or a tenancy in common, husband and wife take as joint tenants or tenants in common,⁷⁴ although there are decisions holding that, irrespective of the terms used in the grant, they take an estate in entirety.⁷⁵

4. NATURE OF ESTATE IN ENTIRETY. An estate in entirety resembles a joint tenancy more than a tenancy in common.⁷⁶ The survivor, as in a joint tenancy, is entitled to the estate,⁷⁷ and the heirs of the survivor succeed, excluding thereby will vest in his personal representatives. In re Albrecht, 136 N. Y. 91, 32 N. E. 632, 32 Am. St. Rep. 700, 18 L. R. A. 329 [reversing 10 N. Y. Suppl. 388 (affirming 4 N. Y. Suppl. 462, 1 Connolly Surr. 12)].

Joint investments.—Where husband and wife, being each possessed of means, have made investments jointly, each supplying half, and have taken the securities in their joint names, the wife, on the decease of the husband during her lifetime, does not take the whole by the right of survivorship. The rule which prevails as to the right of survivorship, in the case of united holdings of real estate by husband and wife, is not applicable to personality. Wait v. Bovee, 35 Mich. 425. Survivor has no new title.—The survivor in an estate by the entirety takes not by the new title of survivorship, as is true in joint tenancies, but by virtue of the original conveyance under which he or she was seized of the whole. The survivorship is not a new acquisition, but an ending of participation by the other.

Rights of husband in annuity to husband

gaged, or assigned by him.⁸⁷ The general rule is that the interest of the husband during coverture may be reached by his creditors by execution,⁸⁸ but there are authorities to the contrary which hold that during coverture there can be no sale of any part or execution against either.⁸⁹

7. RIGHTS OF SURVIVING WIFE. If the wife survives she is entitled to the possession of the whole, and may bring action to recover the property.⁹⁰ She is not barred moreover by lapse of time reckoned from the date of conveyance, since the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the disability of coverture has been removed.⁹¹

8. EFFECT OF DIVORCE. Divorce of the wife from the husband results in vesting in the wife her moiety.⁹²

9. EFFECT OF STATUTES. In England, and in some of our states, modern statutes relating to the property relation of husband and wife have abolished estates in entirety.⁹³ In some jurisdictions this has been brought about by acts providing that joint conveyances to husband and wife shall create tenancies in common.⁹¹ In other jurisdictions it has been decided that estates in entirety have been abolished inferentially by such statutes.⁹⁵ Some statutes provide that no right of survivorship shall exist unless so expressly stated in the deed or will creating the estate.⁹⁶ In most of the states, however, it is held that such statutes have not by inference abolished estates in entirety but that the common law relating to them is still in force.⁹⁷ Some of this latter class of decisions hold, however, that, although the common-law right of survivorship exists, yet by force of the statute giving to married women the control and use of their separate estates, husband and wife may independently during coverture convey or otherwise dispose of their interest,⁹⁸ and that each is entitled to half of the income of such estates during the marriage.⁹⁹ In such cases survivorship may be defeated,

I. Conveyances by Husband and Wife¹—1. DEED OF WIFE. By the common law, the deed of a married woman is not merely voidable but absolutely void.² She could not convey, either alone or jointly with her husband, any real property of her own, or her dower right in the realty of her husband.³ In accordance with this rule, a conveyance jointly by husband and wife, whether the lands be her own or those of her husband, is considered to be the act of the husband only, and conveys no greater interest than if only the husband executed it.⁴ Statutes in some states provide for separate deeds of married women in case of the insanity of the husband,⁵ or of his desertion of her.⁶ Where, however, the statute, without such exception being made, requires a joint deed, the wife's separate deed is void, although the husband is insane, or lives apart from her, or has deserted her.⁷ The husband at common law must join in every conveyance of the wife, in order to give validity to the deed,⁸ except, in some cases, where he is under disability.⁹

2. DEED OF HUSBAND. The husband may convey his own lands without his wife joining therein, and his grantee takes the fee subject to the wife's right of dower.¹⁰

The effect of a wife uniting with her husband in a deed is not to vest in the grantee any estate separate and distinct from that of the husband, but simply to relinquish a contingent right, in the nature of an encumbrance upon the land conveyed, which, if not so relinquished, would attach and be consummate on the death of the husband. Corr v. Porter, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 278.

A purchase-money mortgage executed by a husband is valid without the signature of the wife. Stanley v. Johnson, 113 Ala. 344, 21 So. 823.

Presumptions as to consideration.—A wife has no vested interest in her husband's lands,

3. FINE AND RECOVERY. The only way at common law by which a married woman could convey her title in lands was by the now obsolete method of fine.¹¹ Strictly speaking a fine was not a conveyance, but rather a proceeding which resulted in what amounted to a conveyance. After the wife had made open acknowledgment in a court of record, she and her heirs were estopped from pleading her coverture against the record.¹² If a married woman made such acknowledgment, she was questioned apart from her husband to determine whether her act was voluntary, or by compulsion of her husband.¹³ By this means a fine by husband and wife effectually conveyed both the wife's and the husband's interest in the land covered by the fine.¹⁴ In the United States conveyances by mode of fine were never generally recognized,¹⁵ and the practice is now entirely obsolete.¹⁶

4. JOINT DEED OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. Long before the passage of statutes in this country providing for the conveyance of the lands of a married woman, by a deed made jointly with her husband, it was the custom, recognized from the time of the colonies, for married women to convey their real property by deed in which the husband joined.¹⁷ The subsequent statutes in many instances but formally enacted what had been long widely recognized as the customary law.¹⁸ and hence her joinder in a lease thereof will be presumed to have been on the consideration paid to him, and not on any separate consideration from the grantee to her. Murray v. Cazier, 23 Ind. App. 600, 53 N. E. 476, 55 N. E. 880.

Where legal title is in wife.—A husband may use such words of conveyance in his deed as to pass all his interest, whether the legal title be in him or his wife. See *Brown v. 5. STATUTORY PROVISIONS. In many states the statutes confer upon married women absolute power to convey as if sole, and do not require a joinder by the husband for the purpose of conveying the wife's title.¹⁹ In other states the husband must still join in the wife's deed, or give his assent thereto, in order to convey his vested interest as husband.²⁰ Where, however, the statute requires the husband's joinder or written consent merely for the purpose of releasing his tenancy by the curtesy, the wife may pass her own interest by her sole deed, leaving the husband's interest unaffected.²¹

6. NECESSITY OF NAMING WIFE AS GRANTOR. A deed by the husband of his wife's lands, containing no grant or release by her, is ineffectual to convey the wife's title, and passes only such interest or right as the husband may have.²² The mere joining in the acknowledgment by the wife, or a mere release of her dower, where the fee is in her, but the grant is by the husband alone, conveys no title from her to the grantee.²³ In order to convey her interest it is necessary that she appear as a grantor in the deed.²⁴

Husband's interest defeated by adverse possession.—Where the life-estate of the husband in land belonging to his wife is lost by an adverse possession sufficient to bar an action by the husband for the recovery thereof, a conveyance of the premises by the husband and wife only passes the wife's interest, the remainder, and therefore does not enable their grantee to maintain an action for the possession during the life of the husband. *Stubblefield v. Express reference to wife's individual interest.—A deed by husband and wife, although not expressly purporting to convey the individual estate of the latter, passes all her interest therein. Clow v. Plummer, 85 Mich. 550, 48 N. W. 795.

7. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF JOINT DEEDS. Deeds made under authority of statutes must strictly conform to the requirements of the statute.²⁵ It is not necessary that husband and wife, in a joint deed, use the same identical words, if they use language calculated to pass all their interests, and the legal effect is the same;²⁶ but both must be named as grantors, in order to convey their independent interests.²⁷ A mere signature on the part of the wife without words of grant on her part does not convey her estate in the lands,²⁸ and a mere release of dower by her will not pass her estate in fee.²⁹ To give validity to her deed, however, the signature of the husband is generally sufficient.³⁰ The signature of the wife

Intention to grant entire interest.—A husband and his wife, together with others, were the owners of an undivided three-fourths' interest in certain land, and all joined in a deed which recited: "It being the intention of this instrument to convey . . . three undivided fourth parts . . . of the above-described land, being all our right and interest therein, . . . do covenant," etc. There was also a clause in which the wife of one of the owners, who had no right other than her dower, joined in token of her release of such right. It was held that the wife, who was owner of an interest, conveyed all her interest in the land, and not merely her right of dower. Bent v. Rogers, 137 Mass. 192.

Words of grant not affected by surplusage.—Where husband and wife execute a warranty deed of the husband's property, which contains the usual words of grant, followed by a clause, "intending hereby to convey absolutely" all the interest of the wife in the property, such clause is mere surplusage, and does not limit the estate conveyed to the inchoate interest of the wife. Davenport v. Gwilliams, 133 Ind. 142, 31 N. E. 790, 22 L. R. A. 244.

Sufficiency of designation of grantors.—A deed is the instrument of both husband and wife when they are named at the commencement as parties of the first part, and when afterward the parties of the first part are named as grantors. Thornton v. National Exch. Bank, 71 Mo. 221.

Reservations.—Where a married woman, owning a judgment which was a lien against lands of the husband, joined with the husband in conveying the lands, but reserved in the deed her rights and interests against the premises by virtue of her judgment, her rights under the judgment were not impaired. *Larison v. Omission of required words.—A husband and wife sold and conveyed a tract of land owned by the wife. The wife relinquished in the deed "all her interest and estate" in the premises, without including her "inheritance," as required by the act of 1795. It was held that the omission was fatal, and that her heirs could recover the land from the purchaser. Williams v. Cudd, 26 S. C. 213, 2 S. E. 14, 4 Am. St. Rep. 714.

Subscribing witness.—The deed of husband and wife, acknowledged by them, is a full compliance with the law so far as the husband is concerned, and may be admitted to record without any proof of execution by a subscribing witness. Harvey v. Doe, 23 Ala. 635.

Defective acknowledgment.—A deed executed by a husband and wife, conveying the wife's lands, although defectively acknowledged as to the wife, will pass the husband's life-estate; and such a title is good to maintain or resist an action of ejectment. Beal v. Harmon, 38 Mo. 435.

must be free and voluntary, and a deed to which her signature was obtained by fraud may be set aside.³¹

8. EFFECT OF WIFE'S JOINDER.³² A voluntary conveyance of the wife, in a joint deed with her husband, bars the claims of the husband's creditors to her property thus conveyed.³³ If the wife is named as a grantor, and not as merely releasing her dower or homestead, the deed conveys whatever title she may have.³⁴

9. SEPARATE EXECUTION OF DEED, AND SEPARATE DEEDS. Even though the wife's deed must be joined in by the husband in the same instrument, yet it is not necessary that husband and wife execute the joint deed at the same time.³⁵ Husband and wife may execute the deed on different days, or even years apart, since, regardless of the separate times of execution, the subsequent delivery of the deed, after joint execution, will make it valid.³⁶ It has been held that husband and wife may convey the title to land by executing separate deeds at different times.³⁷

J. Possession Between Husband and Wife — 1. IN GENERAL.³⁸ The right to possession, as between husband and wife, has already been considered.³⁹ In a life-estate in land, purporting to convey it in her own name, without that of the husband appearing in the body of the instrument, but only affixed after the signature of the wife, is void as to her on account of the coverture, and is void as to him because he is not a party to it.

Signing deed blank as to description.—A wife signed a note with her husband, and delivered to him a mortgage, which was blank as to description, but which he represented was to cover property belonging to him. He inserted in the mortgage the description of the homestead belonging to his wife, and negotiated the note and mortgage. The mortgage was in due form, and acknowledged, and there was nothing on the face of the note and mortgage to arouse suspicion. The purchaser advanced the money thereon, and had no notice of the fraud. It was held that the wife was bound. Nelson v. McDonald, 80 Wis. 605, 50 N. W. 893, 27 Am. St. Rep. 71.

Wife bound by delivery.—Where a deed regularly executed and acknowledged by husband and wife is delivered by the husband without the knowledge of the wife, and is accepted by the grantee, acting in good faith and without notice of her dissent, she is bound by such delivery. Baldwin v. Snowden, 11 Ohio St. 203, 78 Am. Dec. 303.

Interest of both husband and wife.—A deed purported to be made by husband and wife in right of the wife. Each of them owned several shares of the property conveyed. The number of shares described to be conveyed was sufficient to include the interest of both. It was held that the deed passed the shares of both husband and wife. Emerson v. White, 29 N. H. 482.

this connection a few general rules as to possession will be stated. The possession of personal property by the wife is at common law the possession of the husband, and his declarations are competent to show its character.⁴⁰ Where husband and wife are in joint possession of personal property, the property is prima facie under the control of the husband.⁴¹ Statutes in some states provide for the protection of the wife's interest by permitting her to record her title to personalty in her own right,⁴² but unless such statutes are complied with, the joint possession of husband and wife will be considered the possession of the husband, and the property will be liable for his debts.⁴³

2. PRESUMPTIONS. No presumption exists in favor of a wife's title to property claimed by the creditors of the husband.⁴⁴ Possession by the husband is presumed to be in his own right and the burden is upon the wife to show that the property is hers.⁴⁵

3. ADVERSE POSSESSION. The husband cannot, by his possession of the lands of his wife, under his common-law marital right to the use and enjoyment of the same, acquire any title to the wife's interest by adverse possession.⁴⁶ Where the

In estates in entirety the husband has the right to the possession and to the enjoyment of the profits of the same during coverture. Peer v. O'Leary, 8 Misc. (N. Y.) 350, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 687; Coleman v. Bresnaham, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 158. See also supra, I, H, 6. A tenant by the entirety in possession of the premises is not affected by a proceeding adverse to her rights, and of which she had no notice, instituted by her husband, and resulting in a decree by which he took a deed as owner of the fee. Orthwein v. Thomas, (Ill. 1887) 13 N. E. 564. Upon his death the title is absolute in the surviving wife, and the deceased husband's lessee by holding over after the death of the husband becomes forthwith a trespasser against the widow. Torrey v. Torrey, 14 N. Y. 430. See also supra, I, H.

Possession of deceased wife's letters.—The husband is not entitled, either as survivor or as administrator of the estate of his wife, to the possession of letters written by other persons to his wife before and after marriage, as against one to whom she had given them. Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush (Ky.) 480, 92 Am. Dec. 509.

Husband's possession of wife's separate estate.—Where the wife has a separate estate in slaves, and the husband and wife live together, the possession of the husband is the possession of the wife. Lee v. Mathews, 10 Ala. 682, 44 Am. Dec. 498.

Possession of land imputed to the better title.—Where the owner of land deeds it to a wife, and afterward to her husband, and such husband and wife take possession, the wife is seized and possessed of the land; and in the absence of a conveyance by her she dies seized and possessed of it, although at that time she is living with her husband and family on other land. Hill v. Nash, 73 Miss. 849, 19 So. 707.

Possession in wife by agreement.—A husband and wife entered into possession of land on obtaining a title bond, with an agreement that the title, which was derived from a judicial sale, should run to the wife, and continued in possession until her death. The master's deed was never given. It was held that the possession and seizin were in the wife, at least after the execution of the agreement by the three parties. *Templeton v. husband has a life-estate in the lands of his wife, remainder in her, prescription by adverse possession of another may run against his estate, but not against hers.⁴⁷ If husband and wife are in possession of lands in which the wife has a life-estate, the possession of the husband will not be adverse until the termination of the life-estate of the wife.⁴⁸

K. Contracts With Third Persons — 1. CONTRACTS OF WIFE.⁴⁹ Considering the wife's contracts in connection with the mutual rights and liabilities of husband and wife, it is sufficient to state that at common law the contracts of a married woman are in general absolutely null and void ab initio.⁵⁰ She is not liable upon her contract whether such contract is entered into by herself, or on her behalf by her husband.⁵¹ The husband, however, at common law, will be personally liable for the contract he enters into as the purported agent of his

Payment of taxes.—Where a husband conveys land to his wife by a valid deed, duly recorded, and both continue to reside on the land, the possession is that of the wife, and the husband does not acquire possession adverse to the wife by paying taxes on the land. Reagle v. Reagle, 179 Pa. St. 89, 36 Atl. 191.

Tax title.—Neither husband nor wife can obtain a valid tax title to the real estate of the other by the purchase thereof at a tax-sale. *Warner v. After the death of a wife the husband may acquire title to her land by adverse possession, although he had taken a tax deed of it prior to her death. Ward v. Nestell, 113 Mich. 185, 71 N. W. 593.

Husband's possession adverse after divorce.—Where a husband has been in possession of his wife's land for many years, and obtains a divorce, his possession after divorce, in the absence of any agreement, is adverse to the wife. Ferring v. Fleischman, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1896) 39 S. W. 19.

Wife's possession may be adverse to husband.—The father of a married woman conveyed land to her, and the deed was not such as to prevent the husband's marital rights from attaching. Afterward, the wife having left her husband, the latter, in consideration of her returning and cohabiting with him, made a deed of the land to her. It was held that the deed created a trust in favor of the wife, and her possession became adverse to that of her husband. McQueen v. Fletcher, 77 Ga. 444.

Strouse, 89 Ala. 232, 7 So. 248, 18 Am. St. Rep. 111, 7 L. R. A. 568.

Adverse possession by third person against husband also adverse to wife.—It is the law in Missouri that the adverse possession for the statutory period which will defeat the husband's sole right of possession of his wife's land will likewise defeat an action of ejectment therefor brought by the husband and wife jointly. *De Guire v. Money left with wife.—Where a person, without the authority or consent of the husband, leaves money with the wife, and she applies it to her own use, the husband will not be liable. Andrews v. Ormsbee, 11 Mo. 400.

Prior payments by husband.—The fact that goods bought by a wife to furnish her father's house have been paid for by her husband will not render him liable for goods bought by her on a subsequent occasion for the same purpose. Bray v. Beard, 5 Mo. App. 584.

Agreement as to division of inheritance.—The husband's assent to an arrangement entered into by the wife and her brothers and sisters respecting the division of her father's estate cannot be presumed, in the absence of all evidence that he assented to or ratified it, that it was beneficial to him, or that his wife was accustomed to act as his agent; and, if the agreement is not binding on the husband, it is not obligatory on the other parties. Whitworth v. Hart, 22 Ala. 343.

Services of physician.—Where the wife assented to send for a physician for a third person, for whose support she and her husband had given a bond, and the husband refused his assent on the arrival of the physician at his house, and the physician rendered services, making his entire charge therefor to such third party, he cannot, after such election, recover of the husband and wife, or either of them, either the whole charge for such visit, or so much of it as accrued prior to the husband's repudiation of his authority to act. Shaw v. Graves, 79 Me. 166, 8 Atl. 884.

Leases.—Where a married woman rents a house, her husband, who resides with her, and does not repudiate the contract, becomes a tenant of the lessor. Hagar v. Wikoff, 2 Okla. 580, 39 Pac. 281.

Contracts of employment.—If a husband entirely abandons his wife and infant children, leaving them no other means of support than the cultivation of a small farm on which he had resided, the jury may infer from those facts that he had authorized his wife to employ, on his responsibility, one of his sons after he became of age to cultivate the farm for the support of the family. 4. HUSBAND AS SURETY FOR WIFE.⁶³ By common law, a husband cannot in general become a surety for his wife. The merger of the two into one legal personality prevents the relation of principal and surety between them.⁶⁴ Where

In Louisiana it has been held that a husband, as co-defendant, may be surety for his wife, where she is sued for a debt antecedent to the coverture. Shiff v. Wilson, 3 Mart. N. S. 91.

however, a husband becomes surety on the promissory note of his wife, he is held liable, although the wife is not personally bound.⁶⁵ Since, however, a surety upon a note is regarded as a promisor, and may be sued as such,⁶⁶ the correct principle seems to be that, eliminating the question of the husband's suretyship for the wife, the note is to be treated as a joint note by husband and wife, upon which the husband is liable, although the wife, owing to the disability of coverture, is not liable.⁶⁷ When the wife by aid of statutes is authorized to contract as a feme sole, no reason exists why a husband may not be a surety for her.⁶⁸

L. Antenuptial Liabilities of Wife⁶⁹—1. ANTENUPTIAL DEBTS. The husband at common law is liable for debts contracted by his wife before marriage.⁷⁰ This liability, in the theory of the common law, is compensated by the fact that all the wife's personal property vests in the husband, and the use and enjoyment of all her real property belongs to him.⁷¹ The rule also considers the rights of her antenuptial creditors, since otherwise they would be without remedy upon her marriage.⁷² However, the common-law liability of the husband is not limited to the amount of property the wife brings the husband.⁷³ Although she possessed at marriage no property at all, or even if she has, by antenuptial agreement, secured all her property to her separate use, the husband is alone liable for all her debts contracted before the marriage.⁷⁴

Bonds.—Where a husband gave a bond conditioned for the payment of a wife's mortgage on her individual property, although the wife was not liable by reason of her coverture, this fact constituted no defense on the part of the husband who had become her surety. Wiggins' Appeal, 100 Pa. St. 155.

2. ANTENUPTIAL ACTS OF WIFE IN REPRESENTATIVE CAPACITY.⁷⁵ At common law, by marriage with a woman who is an executrix or a guardian, the husband becomes liable, during coverture, for the sums for which she is chargeable.⁷⁶

3. EFFECT OF TERMINATION OF COVERTURE. The liability of the husband extends only during coverture.⁷⁷ The personal liability of the husband ceases on the death of the wife,⁷⁸ provided no judgment has been recovered against the husband during the lifetime of the wife,⁷⁹ although the husband received a large amount of property by the marriage.⁸⁰ If, however, after the death of his wife, the husband voluntarily submits to judgment, as by default, in an action brought against him for her antenuptial debts, he cannot maintain an action against her estate for reimbursement.⁸¹ The deceased wife's unreduced choses in action remaining in the husband's hands as administrator jure mariti are liable, however, to their full amount, for the wife's antenuptial debts, and may be reached by her creditors;⁸² but if such choses in action are insufficient to satisfy her debts dum sola the husband is not liable for the residue.⁸³ If the wife survive, no judgment having been rendered during the lifetime of the husband, the wife is liable as before the marriage,⁸⁴ and no liability exists against the estate of the deceased husband.⁸⁵

4. LIABILITY AS AFFECTED BY MUTUAL AGREEMENT. The liability of the husband for the antenuptial debts of the wife does not arise from any express or implied agreement between them, but it is an obligation imposed upon the husband by a fixed rule of law.⁸⁶ It follows that any agreement between them before marriage, or during coverture, that the husband shall not be liable for such debts is of no effect as against third persons.⁸⁷

5. EFFECT OF EXPRESS PROMISE TO PAY. In the absence of a new consideration the promise of a husband to pay the debt of the wife is not enforceable because of the want of consideration.⁸⁸

6. LIABILITY OF SUBSEQUENT HUSBAND. Upon the marriage of a woman who has been previously married, her debts at the time of the subsequent marriage are considered her debts dum sola, whether such debts were contracted before her previous marriage,⁸⁹ after its termination,⁹⁰ or even during the previous coverture under circumstances, such as where there was a separation and separate maintenance, that would render her personally liable.⁹¹ For all such debts, legally enforceable against her at the time of the subsequent marriage, the husband is liable.⁹²

Judgment in personam in action against wife.—Although an agreement by husband and wife that the property of each should not be liable for the debts of the other does not exempt the husband from liability for his wife's antenuptial debts, a creditor of the wife, who seeks to sue in equity to subject her property to a payment of her debt, is not entitled to have a personal judgment against the husband. Coles v. Dig. § 4947, which expressly releases the husband from all liabilities for such separate debts of the wife. Gill v. Kayser, 60 Ark. 266, 29 S. W. 981.

could have made.⁹⁴ If the wife was an infant at the time of contracting the alleged debt, he may plead her general incapacity, and thus be liable, as she was, only for her necessaries.⁹⁵ The statute of limitations may also be pleaded in bar by the husband,⁹⁶ and the statute runs from the time the action accrued against the wife when a feme sole.⁹⁷ The wife dum sola, may, however, by a new promise, or part payment, stop the running of the statute;⁹⁸ but a promise, without consideration, by the husband, after marriage, is not sufficient to check the operation of the same.⁹⁹

b. Bankruptcy of Husband. A discharge in bankruptcy has been held to release the husband from his obligations in connection with his wife's antenuptial debts,¹ but it does not affect the liability of the wife.²

8. EFFECT OF STATUTES. At present the husband is liable for the antenuptial debts of the wife in only a very few states. The cases cited below have in many instances been changed by later statutes.³ The statutes changing the husband's liability are not retroactive, and parties married before the passage of the statute are subject to the mutual rights and liabilities in force at the time of marriage.⁴

Wife's separate estate.—The bankruptcy of a husband whose wife has contracted a debt before marriage, which remains unpaid, although it extinguishes the debt as to him, and suspends the legal remedy as to her during the coverture, does not afford any ground for proceeding in equity to charge her separate estate. *Vanderheyden v. Reason for rule.—The liability of the husband for the contracts of his wife is imposed by reason of his assent to or approval of them, or because the law of marriage has imposed on him the duty of supplying her with necessaries during the marriage until she has relinquished the right to claim them by her own voluntary act, or forfeited it by her misconduct. *Shelton v. cannot, however, pledge his credit for necessaries to any greater extent than if he were sane.¹⁴

d, Presumptions. It is a prima facie presumption that a wife purchasing family necessaries does so with the authority and consent of the husband, and consequently he is prima facie liable for the same.¹⁵ This presumption may be rebutted, however, by the fact that the husband personally supplied such needs, or that he had made suitable arrangements for their supply by others who had duly furnished them.¹⁶ If the husband makes suitable provision for the wife, a tradesman who supplies her with necessaries without the husband's knowledge does so at his own risk.¹⁷

The relation of husband and wife is ipso facto a letter of credit to the wife for necessaries suitable and proper to the sphere in which she moves. Calkins v. Long, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 97.

Applications of rule.—Evidence that a wife living with her husband employed a servant for ordinary domestic service in their family is competent against the husband in an action for such services without showing any express authority from him. Wagner v. Nagel, 33 Minn. 348, 23 N. W. 308. The burden of proof is on the husband to show that he has made suitable provision for his wife. Tebbets v. Hapgood, 34 N. H. 420.

Necessity of payment of money for support.—Defendant claimed that he had provided for his wife's support, and showed her receipt for five hundred dollars, as "in advance for support," but it was shown that after plaintiff had joined defendant in a deed, for which he agreed to give her five hundred dollars, he refused to do so, unless she gave such a receipt. It was held that the money was not given plaintiff for her support. Elliot v. Elliot, 48 N. J. Eq. 231, 21 Atl. 381. And see Cory v. Cook, 24 R. I. 421, 53 Atl. 315.

moving in the wife's social sphere is no criterion as to what is a necessity.²⁴ No hard and fast rule can be laid down that will apply to all cases. If the articles for which the husband's credit is pledged come properly within the general classes of necessaries recognized by the law, the question is generally one of fact, in each case, for the jury, whether or not they are reasonable under all of the circumstances.²⁵ In general it is for the court to say what are classed as necessaries, but in doubtful cases this question also may be left to the jury.²⁶

b. Medical Services. Medical services are necessaries within the rule making the husband liable for necessaries furnished to the wife,²⁷ and the fact that the wife during her sickness removes, with her husband's assent, to her father's home will not enable him to resist payment of the physician's bill for subsequent visits.²⁸ The liability of a husband for medical services is not affected by the

Applications of rule.—Where the attending physician had advised the wife of a miller, receiving thirty dollars per month, who was an invalid, to ride out in pleasant weather, a horse worth forty-five dollars might be considered suitable to a miller's condition in life; but the question of suitability is a question of fact for the jury. Cornelia v. Ellis, 11 Ill. 584. So whether a cooking stove is a "necessary" within the meaning of Code, § 1826, which provides that no married woman, not a free trader, may make a contract to affect her property except for necessary personal expenses, or the support of her family, without the written consent of her husband, is a question of fact for the jury. *Berry v. c. Legal Services. Services of counsel for the wife may be necessities or not according to the purpose for which such services were employed. In case the wife is accused of crime, reasonable legal service for her defense is a necessary for which the husband is liable.³² Attorney's fees incurred by the wife's engaging counsel to defend a suit for divorce brought against her by her husband have been classed as necessities,³³ but the weight of authority is to the contrary,³⁴ and such fees are not recoverable even though the defense is successful.³⁵ So where the wife institutes divorce proceedings, the probable weight of authority is that the husband is not liable for her legal expenses thus incurred.³⁶ But it has been held in a few jurisdictions that attorney's fees incurred by a wife in connection with divorce proceedings against her husband, particularly when such suit is instituted in good faith and for justifiable cause, are necessities for which the husband is liable.³⁷ Counsel fees incurred in defending the wife's good name, d. Money Furnished to Wife. It has been held in courts of law as distinguished from courts of equity that money loaned to the wife by third persons is not a necessary, even though the same is borrowed "for the purpose of procuring necessaries," and accordingly that the husband is not liable for such loans,³⁹ except where the money was loaned at his request.⁴⁰ In other decisions at common law, however, the contrary conclusion has been reached in cases where the money lent was actually applied to the purchase of necessaries.⁴¹ And in equity a third person supplying a married woman with money for necessaries is those who give credit to her do so at their peril.⁴⁵ Under such circumstances no implied agency exists sufficient to bind the husband for purchases of necessaries by the wife.⁴⁶ In case of separation the presumption is that the husband is not liable,⁴⁷ and the burden of proof is on the tradesmen to show that the separation has taken place under such circumstances as will render the husband liable.⁴⁸ Nevertheless the assent of the husband to the supply of necessaries furnished the wife, living apart from him without his consent or fault, may be implied from circumstances.⁴⁹ So if the wife returns to her husband, or is willing to return, and without sufficient cause he refuses to receive her he is liable for her necessaries from such time.⁵⁰ His liability in such a case does not extend back, however,

Wife leaving husband, and taking his money.—A wife, without the consent of the husband and in his absence, left his house and went to live with her brother, taking with her money of the husband, which she applied to her own use. After his death his administrator filed a bill against her to recover the money so taken and applied by her. It was held that the husband could not have recovered the same in his lifetime, and that his administrator could not. McCormick v. McCormick, 7 Leigh (Va.) 66.

Statutes.—Acts (1890), No. 33, provides that when a husband fails without just cause to support his wife, or deserts her, or when the wife for justifiable cause is living apart from her husband, the court may make such order as is expedient concerning the support of the wife. It was held that where a wife, who for a number of years had been blind and deaf, and had been cared for by one of her daughters and suitably supported by her husband in his home, left her husband, against his objection, to live with her daughter, who had married, and has manifested no intention to return to her husband, he is not liable for her support, although he testifies that he is not willing she should come back, and would not support her if she did. *Morse v. through the period of her desertion.⁵¹ And in case the wife has committed adultery during the separation, the husband is not bound to receive her back, and on his refusal to do so, he is not bound for necessaries supplied to her.⁵² Nevertheless his forgiveness and reception of her would restore his liability.⁵³

c. Separation Through Fault of Husband. If through the fault of the husband, such as his cruelty, violence, or other acts such as would entitle her to a divorce, the wife is living apart from her husband, or where he has driven her away or has abandoned her, without making suitable provision for her, she may pledge his credit for her support, and he is liable for the same.⁵⁴ She must have good and sufficient cause, however, to separate herself from him, otherwise he

Wife, lawfully leaving, may seek any place, so long as it is respectable and the expense thereof does not exceed proper limits, considering the husband's financial condition. Kirk v. Chinstrand, 85 Minn. 108, 88 N. W. 422, 56 L. R. A. 333. In an action for board furnished the wife, where it appears that the wife was deserted at plaintiff's house, unjustifiably, and that a new abode offered by the husband was unfit, plaintiff is not bound to show that there was a refusal to maintain the wife "elsewhere or at all." *Tibbetts v. Adulterous intentions of party furnishing necessaries.—One who has received into his house a woman and her child, who have been forced to leave their home through the cruelty of the woman's husband, cannot recover from the husband for their maintenance if one of his motives for receiving the woman was that he might maintain an adulterous intercourse with her. Almy v. Wilcox, 110 Mass. 443.

Conspiracy to abduct defendant's child.—A right of action against a husband for board of his wife after she has justifiably left him is not barred by the fact that plaintiff and the wife conspired to abduct and conceal a minor child of defendant in order to compel him to settle a separate maintenance on his wife. *Burlen v. Sec 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 134.

What are sufficient grounds.—The same facts on which a divorce from bed and board is granted against a husband for the cause of cruelty are sufficient prima facie evidence to justify a wife in leaving his house with a credit for necessaries. Hancock v. Merrick, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 41. So the introduction by the husband of a woman of profligate habits into his house, and his permitting her to remain there as an inmate, is a sufficient ground for leaving him. Descelles v. Kadmus, 8 Iowa 51. On the other hand divorce proceedings by the husband on the ground of cruelty will not of itself alone justify her in leaving his house, where he is willing to provide proper support for her. Sturbridge v. Franklin, 160 Mass. 149, 35 N. E. 669. And where it was proved that a husband had used violence toward his wife on an occasion five months before their separation, and there had been other difficulties and quarrels, but it was not shown affirmatively that he was the offending party, nor that she left him in consequence of his misconduct, and it was also proved that she left to make a visit, and refused to return unless his relatives who lived with him would go away, it was held that he was not liable for her board furnished by her father during such separation. Blowers v. Sturtevant, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 46. So evidence that a husband had said, with reference to his wife, that "a thunder-storm would rise and strike one of them," "there must be an alteration" between them, "in six weeks thunder and lightning should rise and strike the one who was in fault," is not necessarily proof of threats sufficient to justify the wife in leaving her husband, so far as to make him liable for clothing procured by her; but it is proper to go to the jury. Breinig v. Meitzler, 23 Pa. St. 156.

Irrelevant testimony.—In an action by a wife's father against her husband for her board and funeral expenses, testimony that during her absence the husband went to balls and rode out with young ladies, and, when he knew she was fatally diseased, wrote to another woman proposing matrimony, is inadmissible to show that he had obliged her to be absent from his home. *Graham v. her husband, for just cause, has means of her own with which she can support herself, however derived, no necessity exists for others to supply her, and the husband cannot be made liable except on an express promise to pay.⁵⁸ This doctrine, however, has been flatly denied.⁵⁹

d. Separation by Agreement. Where husband and wife, by mutual agreement, live separately, the husband is still liable for her necessaries unless he has made suitable provision for her needs,⁶⁰ and also for necessities for his children living with her.⁶¹ If he has agreed to supply her with a reasonable allowance but fails in paying such allowance punctually, he is liable for necessities furnished her;⁶² and notwithstanding his allowance of a separate maintenance he may

Burden of proof.—To make a husband liable for his wife's board and lodging at the house of a third person, when the wife leaves in consequence of a dispute, it must be shown, either that his conduct rendered it improper for her to live with him, or that he knew where she was residing, and did not make any offer to take her back, except upon conditions which he had no right to make. *Reed v. Where the husband makes a contract with a third person to maintain the wife, and the wife leaves such third person voluntarily and without any just cause, she has no authority to pledge the credit of her husband for her support; otherwise, if she be driven from the house of such third person by improper usage there. Pidgin v. Cram, 8 N. H. 350.

Release of dower.—If a husband and wife lives apart by mutual consent, the wife receiving a sum not sufficient for her support, and agreeing to release dower in his land, support herself, and make no claim on him, he is not liable for necessities furnished her she not having made any claim on him for support or offered to return. Alley v. Winn, 134 Mass. 77, 45 Am. Rep. 297.

What amounts to separation.—The living apart, but continuing matrimonial cohabitation, while a separation is being negotiated, is not such a separation as affects the husband's liability for necessities supplied to the wife. Arnold v. Allen, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 198.

become liable to pay for goods ordered by the wife by expressly agreeing to pay for them.⁶³ So notwithstanding provision for maintenance is made, if the wife, during the separation, buys necessaries which, after a reconciliation, come to the possession of the wife and family, the husband is liable.⁶⁴ Persons supplying her with necessaries have the burden of proof, however, of showing that no provision was made for her by the husband,⁶⁵ and the mere filing of a bill of divorce by the husband is no evidence of that fact.⁶⁶

4. RATIFICATION BY HUSBAND. Although necessaries may have been furnished to the wife under circumstances that might not have made the husband legally liable for the same, nevertheless by his subsequent ratification of such purchases he may make himself liable for the price,⁶⁷ and this is true, although they were living separate.⁶⁸

5. PENDENCY OF SUIT FOR DIVORCE. Whether or not the husband is liable for the necessaries of the wife during the pendency of the suit for divorce by either party depends upon the nature and circumstances of the suit. The mere bringing of the suit ought not upon principle to relieve the husband of his liability, if he would otherwise be liable, and this is the general rule followed by the courts.⁶⁹ If, however, the wife should separate herself from her husband, without cause, and subsequently bring suit for divorce, no new circumstances having arisen, the husband should not be held liable.⁷⁰ Where, on the other hand, the wife with justifiable cause leaves the husband and commences a suit for divorce, he should be liable for her necessaries, unless of course he has otherwise made

suitable provision for her.⁷¹ If alimony has been decreed, pending the suit, he is still liable for necessaries furnished her before the decree;⁷² but where, in obedience to orders of the court, he is paying her alimony, he is relieved from subsequent liability for necessaries.⁷³ One dealing with the wife is chargeable with the knowledge of the allotment and cannot question the sufficiency thereof.⁷⁴ If the husband leaves the wife for good cause and institutes divorce proceedings, recovery cannot be had from him if he obtains the divorce.⁷⁵

6. MISCONDUCT OF WIFE DURING COHABITATION. As long as husband and wife continue to cohabit, he is liable for her necessaries, although she may be guilty of serious misconduct, and even, it seems, if she commit adultery, providing the cohabitation continues.⁷⁶ The fact that a cause for divorce exists will not relieve him from his duty as long as he voluntarily continues the marriage relation with her,⁷⁷ and if the wife commits adultery and the husband subsequently turns her out of doors, it is a wrongful act on his part and he will be liable for the necessaries furnished her.⁷⁸

7. NOTICE NOT TO GIVE WIFE CREDIT. The husband may, when providing necessaries for his wife, forbid certain persons or all persons to give her credit in his name,⁷⁹ and if they do so such notice will bar a recovery from him.⁸⁰ Actual

Failure to pay alimony.—Before 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, § 26, a husband separated from his wife by a divorce (a mensa et thoro) for adultery on his part, with a decree for alimony, was liable for necessaries supplied to the wife if he omitted to pay the alimony. Hunt v. De Blaquiére, 5 Bing. 550, 7 L. J. C. P. O. S. 198, 3 M. & P. 108, 30 Rev. Rep. 737, 15 E. C. L. 716.

A statute restricting alienation of property by the husband after separation for the purpose of securing alimony to the wife when sought by her does not operate in favor of third persons; and one furnishing her with necessaries stands on the same footing as any other creditor of the husband, and can assert no lien on property of the husband sold to a bona fide purchaser for value before his claim has been reduced to judgment. Lamar v. Jennings, 69 Ga. 392.

notice, however, is necessary;⁸¹ and it is held that a general notice in a newspaper is of no effect as to those to whom the notice did not actually come.⁸² So the mere fact that a husband gives notice to one, either orally or in writing, or by publication in a newspaper, not to give credit to his wife for necessaries, will not relieve him from his liability where he fails to support her and where the supplies furnished her are within the classification of necessaries.⁸³ It is, however, incumbent upon persons who furnish the wife with necessaries after such notice to show that the goods were necessaries and that the husband had failed to supply them, in order to bind him.⁸⁴

8. NECESSARIES FURNISHED ON CREDIT OTHER THAN HUSBAND'S. If one sells necessaries to a married woman and extends credit to her personally, or upon the credit of her individual estate, the husband will not be liable.⁸⁵ And where the husband has made a suitable allowance for her, and credit has been given on her allowance, the husband will not be bound.⁸⁶ Circumstances showing that the wife purchased upon her own responsibility, and without the assent express and

91. Gilman v. Matthews, (Colo. App. 1904) 77 Pac. 366; Straight v. McKay, 15 Colo. App. 60, 60 Pac. 1106.

Definition.—"Family expenses" are expenses incurred for something used in the family, kept for use, or beneficial to the family. Straight v. McKay, 15 Colo. App. 60, 60 Pac. 1106; Fitzgerald v. McCarthy, 55 Iowa 702, 8 N. W. 646. In Hyman v. Harding, 162 Ill. 357, 360, 44 N. E. 754, in discussing the term "expenses of the family," the following language is used: "It does not include business expenses, which are incurred merely to secure the means to maintain the family, nor private or individual expenses, which do not affect the collective body of persons under one head constituting a household or family, but it does include expenses for many articles, used by individual members of the family, if they mutually affect the members generally. It is apparent that even though an article is purchased for and used by only one member of the family, yet it is a family expense if it conduces, in any substantial manner, to the welfare of the family generally. Musical instruments may be as pleasant and beneficial to the other members of the family as to the operator. Books, pictures and articles of ornament used to adorn and beautify the home, though owned by individual members of the family, are beneficial to the family generally, and tend to maintain its integrity. Articles of clothing, though purchased for and used exclusively by individual members, are family expenses, as they contribute, in a substantial manner, by preserving health and otherwise, to the general well-being of all the members."

utensils,⁹⁷ piano or organ,⁹⁸ sewing-machine,⁹⁹ buggy,¹ and jewelry used by either husband or wife.² The liability does not extend to money borrowed for family expenses.³ The term includes the necessaries of the children as well as of the wife.⁴ As the express agent of the husband the wife may of course bind him for necessaries for the children, and it has been held that where the husband neglects to properly supply necessaries for his children by abandoning them, or where, upon separation between husband and wife, he voluntarily permits the children to remain with her, he thereby makes the wife, in absence of other provision, his implied agent to see to their necessary support.⁵ Persons living together as husband and wife, although not married, are within the provisions of these statutes.⁶ The statutes are not retroactive and do not affect the liability for such expenses contracted before their enactment.⁷ The spouses can be held jointly liable only where they are living together, since it is a condition precedent to any family expenses that there should be a "family" in fact.⁸

10. JOINT LIABILITY OF HUSBAND AND WIFE. It has already been stated⁹ that in some states husband and wife are jointly and severally liable for "family expenses." In other states a more or less limited liability is imposed on the wife in connection with the liability of the husband.¹⁰

11. WIFE SUPPORTED AT PUBLIC EXPENSE. Where a husband neglects to support his wife, or turns her from his home, so that she becomes a public charge, it has been held in some jurisdictions that necessaries furnished her as a pauper by the town or county may be recovered from the husband.¹¹ In other states, however, this doctrine has been denied,¹² it being said in one case that it would be extremely

Husband and wife living apart.—A father of a child who has been given medical treatment by a physician at the mother's request is liable therefor, where such mother and father have not separated, although they live apart, since, by leaving the child with the dangerous to confer upon the superintendents of the poor, in their official capacity, the right to interpose in cases of difficulties between husband and wife and thus involve the county in the controversy and array its power against one of the parties.¹³ So it has been held that a husband who is willing to support his insane wife at his home, there being no just cause for her to leave him, is not liable to any third person or public institution for her support.¹⁴

12. REPUTED MARRIAGE AS BASIS OF HUSBAND'S LIABILITY. It is the cohabitation of a man and woman as husband and wife that is the basis of his presumed liability for her support, and if a man holds out to the world a woman as his wife, he cannot escape liability for her previously supplied necessaries by afterward denying marriage with her.¹⁵ It is reputed marriage and not necessarily marriage de jure that makes him liable.¹⁶ Where, however, a separation occurs in an unlawful cohabitation, the man will not continue to be liable for her necessaries.¹⁷ Nor will he be prima facie liable, although allowing the woman to call herself by his name, if he does not cohabit with her or otherwise hold her out as his wife.¹⁸

13. FUNERAL EXPENSES. The husband is liable for the reasonable funeral expenses of his wife, whether or not she may have had property of her own.¹⁹ He cannot, upon paying such expenses, charge the same to her separate estate.²⁰ So where the wife has been obliged to separate from her husband for justifiable cause, a person who provides suitable burial for her can recover for the same from the husband.²¹ Even in case of separation by agreement it is his duty, upon her death, to provide for the expense of a suitable burial.²² And in one case it has been held that the husband is liable for the wife's funeral expenses, although she was living apart from him through her own fault.²³ A married woman may, however, provide by her will that her funeral expenses shall be paid out of her own estate.²⁴ The wife is under no liability, at common law, for the funeral expenses of her husband.²⁵

against him.⁴² Thus a married woman, acting as her husband's agent, may sell, mortgage, hire, or otherwise dispose of his real or personal property,⁴³ or may sign receipts for rent.⁴⁴ Acts of the wife not within the authority of her agency are of course not binding upon the husband.⁴⁵

5. ACTS OTHER THAN AS AGENT. Unless the wife is acting as her husband's agent, she has no authority to make or rescind any contract in his name,⁴⁶ or to dispose of his property.⁴⁷ She cannot sell⁴⁸ or lease his lands,⁴⁹ nor give a license to enter upon the same;⁵⁰ nor has she any implied authority to draw his money from a savings bank.⁵¹

Execution of deed.—Under the act of March 27, 1869, enabling a married woman to convey her land by "joining with her husband in the execution" of a deed, a deed from husband and wife, to which the wife signs her own name and also her husband's, passes good title to her land, since, in the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that she wrote his name by his direction. 44. Smith v. Stockbridge, 39 Md. 640.

45. Day v. Boyd, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 458.

Applications of rule.—A wife, intrusted by her husband with the ordinary business of a tavern, cannot bind him by a special contract to find provender and board for less than the usual rate. Webster v. McGinnis, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 235. So where a husband permitted his wife to carry on a business in his name, and to draw in his name checks and notes to be used in the course of business, she had no power to make him liable as surety for loans to third persons or on mere accommodation paper. Gulick v. Grover, 31 N. J. L. 182. And where a husband, on leaving home, gave his wife authority to order off all persons coming on the premises to hunt, and defendant had previously received permission from the husband to hunt on the premises, the mere ordering of defendant off by the wife, without stating that she had authority from her husband, and without any knowledge on the part of defendant of the authority actually given, or that she was in charge of the premises, did not constitute a valid revocation of the license. Kellogg v. Robinson, 32 Conn. 335.

Vermont.—Stevens v. Story, 43 Vt. 327.

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Husband and Wife," § 139 et seq.

Contracting for insurance.—Plaintiff insured his household furniture, including a piano belonging to his wife, with defendant. The policy provided that it should be void if the insured had or procured other insurance on the property without consent. His wife obtained additional insurance on the piano. He did not know of her act until after the property was destroyed by fire. Tex. Rev. St. art. 2967, provides that during marriage the husband shall have the sole management of the property of his wife. It was held that as the wife had no authority as owner or otherwise to insure the piano without her husband's consent, her act did not bind her husband or affect the policy issued by defendant. National F. Ins. Co. v. Wagley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 68 S. W. 819.

6. RATIFICATION BY HUSBAND. The unauthorized sale by the wife of the husband's property may, however, be afterward ratified by him,⁵² and likewise any other act of the wife as assumed agent for the husband may be subsequently ratified by him, and thus made binding upon him.⁵³

7. EVIDENCE OF AGENCY. In general any relevant evidence tending to prove that the wife acted as the agent of her husband is admissible,⁵⁴ and the fact of her agency may be inferred from the circumstances of the case.⁵⁵ Thus the fact that the husband had knowledge at the time of acts performed by the wife in his name, and made no objection thereto, will be presumptive evidence of her agency, and may estop him from denying such relation.⁵⁶
