"One can have but one heir at one time; and this shall go from heir to heir." Dub-

is nomen collectivum,¹⁹ or nomen generalissimum, and in a comprehensive sense may include all kinds of heirs;²⁰ the word being in such cases used in a collective sense as comprehending any number of persons who may happen to answer the description.²¹

B. Primary Meaning. In its primary sense, "heir" means a person who inherits,²² or may by law inherit;²³ such of the offspring or issue as may by law inherit;²⁴ a person who succeeds to the estate of a decedent²⁵ under the statutes of a country;²⁶ a person who would be entitled to represent a decedent by the law of the country;²⁷ he who receives a title in succession to a deceased person;²⁸ the person who succeeds to property on the death of another who is the ancestor,²⁹ he who succeeds by descent to the inheritance of an ancestor,³⁰ a person whom the law appoints to succeed to his estate, in case the owner dies without disposing of it by will;³¹ one who by statute is capable of inheriting from another, or one who succeeds to the estate of a deceased;³² a person who receives, inherits, or is entitled to succeed to the possession of any property after the death of its owner;³³ one on whom the law bestows the title or property of another at the death of the latter.³⁴ The word refers to a class of persons who take by succes-

takes by will and who therefore does not inherit the property in the strict sense of the term.⁸⁴

F. Civil Law Meaning. In the Roman law and in the modern civil law, the term "heir" has a more extended significance than in the common law;⁸⁵ in the civil law it means one who succeeds to the rights and occupies the place of a deceased person,⁸⁶ or is entitled to succeed to the estate of one deceased,⁸⁷ whether by the act of the party or by operation of law;⁸⁸ a universal successor in the event of death;⁸⁹ he who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property or estate, rights, and obligations of a deceased, and occupies his place.⁹⁰

G. Meaning in Scotch Law. In Scotch law the word "heirs" comprehends not only those who succeed to lands, but successors to personal property also.⁹¹

H. Colloquial Meaning. In common speech the word is frequently used to indicate those who come in any manner to the ownership of any property by reason of the death of the owner;⁹² and is often employed to denote a person who acquires or may receive property, either personal or real, by right of blood relation;⁹³ one who, upon the death of another, acquires or succeeds to his estate by right of blood and by operation of law;⁹⁴ one who is born or begotten in lawful wedlock;⁹⁵ one who is next of blood;⁹⁶ one who takes by right of blood;⁹⁷ the person upon whom property devolves on the death of another,⁹⁸ either by law or by will;⁹⁹ the persons entitled by will or otherwise to share in the estates of decedents.¹ Ordinarily it is a word used to designate those persons who answer to this description at the death of the testator.² The word is not technically appli-

Construction may depend upon special facts.—"The decision of every case involving the construction of testamentary words must depend in some measure on its special facts." Huber's Appeal, 80 Pa. St. 348, 356.

"The word 'heirs' is not, taken by itself, conclusive as to the persons intended to take. It may, doubtless, have a broad or a narrow meaning, according as the one or the other is indicated by the context. The definitions in the text books are broad enough to include such a life estate as under our statutes 'descends' to the widow of a childless intestate, and in the indexes to our revised and compiled laws, the widow is referred to as 'inheriting' under these circumstances." The more comprehensive rule is, that it must be governed by the intent of the testator; and if his intent appears to be to designate those who are strictly his heirs in the primary sense of the term, and not distributees, it must be so construed; as in De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, 3 H. L. Cas. 524, property be real or personal in its nature;⁴⁹ and according to the nature of the property given, it may mean heir at law or next of kin,⁵⁰ it being susceptible, according to the context, of two meanings; thus, heir at law as to the real estate, and next of kin as to the personal estate.⁵¹ Where the word is used to denote succession, there it may be well understood to mean such person or persons as would legally succeed to the property,⁵² according to its nature and quality;⁵³ but where it is used, not to denote succession, but to describe a legatee, and there is no context to explain it otherwise, it must be used in its natural and ordinary sense.⁵⁴ According to the rule in Shelley's case,⁵⁵ the word "heir" in its natural signification is a word of limitation,⁵⁶ and is not to

"In a legacy of personal property to a legatee named and his heirs, the word 'heirs,' although technically appropriate to real estate, is taken to be a word of limitation." Wood v. Seaver, 158 Mass. 411, 412, 33 N. E. 587.

Where the heir takes for life only then the word "heir" is not to be treated as a word purchase,⁵⁷ but is presumed to have been used as a word of limitation unless a contrary intention appears,⁵⁸ or unless there be other controlling words clearly showing that a contrary meaning was intended by its use;⁵⁹ and a merely presumed intention, even in wills, will not control that significance of the word, and it will not be treated as a word of purchase unless the testator's intent to so use it is manifest.⁶⁰ But the term is construed as a word of limitation, or purchase, as will best accord with the manifest intention of the person who employed it,⁶¹ and where it manifestly appears that such was the intent,⁶² or the context so requires, the term is, in general, construed as a word of purchase,⁶³ and not as a word of limitaof limitation, and the rule in Shelley's case does not apply. Pedder v. Hunt, 18 Q. B. D. 565, 572, 56 L. J. Q. B. 212, 56 L. T. Rep. N. S. 687, 35 Wylk. Rep. 371.

Distinguished from "children" or "issue" see Sewall v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 262, 276; Clarkson v. Hatton, 143 Mo. 47, 50, 44 S. W. 761, 65 Am. St. Rep. 635, 39 L. R. A. 748; 7 Cyc. 126.

The word "is of far broader significance than the word 'children' or 'grandchildren,' or even lineal descendants." Hunt's Estate, 133 Pa. St. 260, 267, 272, 19 Atl. 548, 19 Am. St. Rep. 640.

Where the context decisively shows that it was employed in that sense it must be so construed. Granger v. Granger, 147 Ind. 95, 97, 44 N. E. 189, 46 N. E. 80, 36 L. R. "In the common use of language, the children of a deceased intestate leaving personal property only, would be called his heirs, and such use of the term would be justified by the definitions of the word heir by lexicographers, but, technically, they would not take the estate of the deceased, as heirs, they would take it as distributees, according to the rules established by the existing laws." *Mace v. HENCEFORWARD. A word synonymous with "hereafter."¹³

HENCHMAN. A servant, page, hanger-on.¹⁴

HER. A personal pronoun, referring exclusively to females.¹⁵

HERBAGE. The green pasture and fruit of earth provided by nature for the food or bite of cattle.¹⁶ (See, generally, COMMON LANDS; CROPS; EASEMENTS.)

HERD. A number of beasts assembled together.¹⁷ (See, generally, ANIMALS.)

HERD LAWS. See ANIMALS.

HERE. In the place or region where the person speaking is; on this spot or in this locality.¹⁹

HEREAFTER. After this time, in time to come, in some future time or state.²⁰

Co., 170 N. Y. 109, 114, 62 N. E. 1073; U. S. v. Le Baron, 19 How. (U. S.) 73, 75, 15 L. ed. 525 [citing and approving Clayton's Case, 5 Coke 1a].

13. A permanent or a temporary arrangement is imported by the word, according to the general tenor of the instrument and the nature of the subject-matter about which it is used. Opinion of Chief Justice, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 125 note, 128 note.

14. Barnes v. State, 88 Md. 347, 352, 41 Atl. 781, holding that the meaning of the word as used in an alleged libel does not include "policeman" or "special policeman."

15. Warner v. State, 54 Ark. 660, 663, 17 S. W. 6; State v. Farmer, 26 N. C. 224, 225; State v. Goings, 20 N. C. 289, 290; Battle v. State, 4 Tex. App. 595, 596, 30 Am. Rep. 169; Taylor v. Com., 20 Gratt. (Va.) 825, 828.

The phrase "her real estate" as used in an act providing that "a divorce granted for misconduct of the husband, shall entitle the wife to the same rights, so far as her real estate is concerned, that she would have been entitled to by his death," means the separate real estate of the wife. Fletcher v. Monroe, 145 Ind. 56, 59, 43 N. E. 1053.

In connection with other words the term has been judicially construed in some cases, for example: "Her property" (McDuffie v. Montgomery, 128 Fed. 105), "her and her children" (Abbot v. McCadden, 81 Wis. 563, 51 N. W. 1079, 29 Am. St. Rep. 910).

As defined by statute see N. D. Rev. Codes (1899), § 1544a.

19. Teague v. Schaub, 133 N. C. 458, 464, 45 S. E. 762, construing the term, when occurring in a contract, to refer to the place where the parties to it were at the time of its execution.

20. Century Dict. See also Nevada County v. Hicks, 48 Ark. 515, 520, 3 S. W. 524; Gerding v. Beall, 63 Ga. 561, 562; Nelson v.

State, 17 Ind. App. 403, 46 N. E. 941, 943; Atty.-Gen. v. Ware River R. Co., 115 Mass. 400, 404; Chapman v. Holmes, 10 N. J. L. 20, 26; In re Ingersoll, 167 Pa. St. 536, 549, 31 Atl. 858; Webb v. Com., 2 Leigh (Va.) 721, 723; Perry v. Com., 3 Gratt. (Va.) 632.

In statutory construction the word has been held to refer to the time of the passage of a statute (Tremont, etc., Mills v. Lowell, 165 Mass. 265, 266, 42 N. E. 1134; Moore v. Mausert, 49 N. Y. 332, 335) or ordinance (Kendig v. Knight, 60 Iowa 29, 14 N. W. 78), and so also to the time of the adoption of a constitution (Lish v. Wheeling, 7 W. Va. 501, 522). But the greater weight of authority supports the view that it refers to the date of taking effect of an act. Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Barbee, 59 Ind. 592, 593; Thatcher v. Haun, 12 Iowa 303, 311; Bennett v. Bevard, 6 Iowa 82, 89; Iowa Code (1897), § 54; Matawan v. Horner, 48 N. J. L. 441, 445, 5 Atl. 807; Erie County v. Jones, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 557, 558; Perry v. Com., 3 Gratt. (Va.) 632; Gilkey v. Cook, 60 Wis. 133, 138, 18 N. W. 639; Hurd Rev. St. Ill. (1901) c. 131, § 1, subd. 17; Mo. Rev. St. (1899) § 4155; Mont. Civ. Code (1895), § 4670; N. Y. Laws (1892), c. 677, § 9; Wis. Rev. St. (1898) § 4971.

As expressive of duration.—When used in connection with a grant contained in a contract the word has been held not to imply an unlimited duration. The court says: "The word 'hereafter' used as an adverb does not necessarily refer to unlimited time. . . . It is not a synonym for 'forever.' It rather indicates the direction in time merely to which the context refers, and is limited by it. The duration of the 'hereafter' is usually expressed by some other word, or is inferred from the context. In fact, the mind does not rest satisfied with the use of the word 'hereafter' in such case, but naturally inquires, and expects to hear in addition, how long the hereafter is to last." Dobbins v. Cragin, 50 N. J. Eq. 640, 648, 23 Atl. 172.

As relating to execution of power of attorney.—A power of attorney authorizing the entry of the appearance of the grantor of the power in term time or in vacation "at any time hereafter" to file a cognovit and confess judgment, etc., means at any time after the power was executed, and hence such appearance could be entered on the day that the warrant of attorney was executed. Thomas v. Muller, 106 Ill. 36, 43.

HEREBY. By this act or statute,²¹ will,²² or other document,²³ as the case may be. The word indicates an act in presenti.²⁴

HEREDERO. In Spanish law a term denoting the person who by a testamentary disposition or by law succeeds to the rights which a deceased person held at the time of his death.²⁵

HEREDITAMENT. Anything capable of being inherited, be it corporeal, incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed.²⁶ (See, generally, ESTATES; PROPERTY.²⁷)

HEREDITARY. Descended or capable of descending from an ancestor to an heir at law;²⁸ transmitted or capable of being transmitted.²⁹ (See, generally, DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; LIFE INSURANCE.)

HEREIN. A location adverb which, according to the context, may refer to the section, the chapter, or the entire enactment in which it is used.³⁰

HEREINAFTER. Afterward in this (statement, narrative or document); referring to something afterward to be named or described.³¹

HEREINBEFORE. Before in this (statement, narrative or document); referring to something already named or described.³²

In an agreement to hold in trust a sum of money and to pay interest thereon, the word "hold" implies a defensive possession, consistent with that of a trustee, in contradistinction from a promise payment of a loan or indebtedness. Gutch v. Fosdick, 48 N. J. Eq. 353, 356, 22 Atl. 590, 57 Am. St. Rep. 473 [cited in Tucker v. Linn, (Ch. 1904) 57 Atl. 1017, 1019].

Statutory liens.—The actual holding essential to a common-law lien on personal property does not exist in the case of statutory liens; the latter imply a holding in contemplation of law only. Willingham v. Rushing, 105 Ga. 72, 78, 31 S. E. 130.

"To hold court" see Wallace v. Helena Electric R. Co., 10 Mont. 24, 29, 24 Pac. 626, 25 Pac. 278; Smith v. People, 47 N. Y. 330, 334.

Holding money, as used in Iowa Code (1873), § 1747, providing that the treasurer of a school district shall hold the moneys belonging to the district, does not necessarily imply physical retention of it in kind. It is sufficient if he retains control of and keeps it subject to the payment of orders. Hunt v. Hopley, 120 Iowa 695, 698, 95 N. W. 205.

The perfect participle "held" has been construed in connection with other words in the following instances: "Held by contract" (Lorillard F. Ins. Co. v. McCulloch, 21 Ohio St. 176, 180, 8 Am. Rep. 52); "held and enjoyed" (Justus' Succession, 45 La. Ann. 190, 12 So. 130); "held and firmly bound" (Shattuck v. People, 5 Ill. 477, 478); "held open" (*State v. There is no ambiguity about the phrase "holding up" when used in relation to an attack upon a train; on the contrary those words are distinctly and universally understood to mean the forcible detention of a train with intent to commit a robbery or some other felony. I. DEFINITION.

Holiday means (1) a consecrated day, a religious festival, and (2) a day on which the ordinary occupations are suspended, a day of exemption or cessation from work, a day of festivity, recreation, or amusement.¹ In its present conventional meaning it is scarcely applicable to Sunday.²

II. EFFECT OF STATUTORY DESIGNATION.

A. In General. Various statutes have been enacted making provision for legal holidays and designating the effect thereof in suspending business.³ Where a holiday designated by statute falls on Sunday, the following Monday is not a holiday⁴ in the absence of express statutory provision to that effect.⁵ A legal holiday—other than Sunday—has effect as a holiday only as to those acts and transactions which are designated in the statute, establishing the day.⁶ Accordingly it is held that with the exception of matters concerning which the statute provides that the day shall be treated as Sunday, any act done on that day is as effective as if done on any other day.⁷ Moreover statutes having for their object the suspension of business are sometimes construed as permissive and not mandatory as to acts falling within the terms of the statute.⁸

B. On Private Acts and Transactions. As a general rule there are no compulsory holidays having the effect of suspending the transaction of private business in the absence of statutory provision to that effect.⁹ Thus a statutory provision designating a day as a legal holiday, and prohibiting the execution of any writ, process, warrant, or judgment thereon,¹⁰ or a provision that any given holiday shall be considered as Sunday in the transaction of business in the public offices of the state or of the counties of the state,¹¹ does not prevent the transaction of private business on that day. So where a statute enumerates the private acts which may not be performed on designated holidays, the performance of other acts is legal and valid.¹²

C. On Judicial Proceedings—1. IN GENERAL. The general rule is that the courts may sit and transact judicial business on a legal holiday unless expressly prohibited by statute.¹³ In some jurisdictions, however, the transaction of judicial business on legal holidays is, subject to prescribed qualifications in some cases, expressly forbidden by statute or by constitution.¹⁴ But although the transaction

In New York a statute declaring that holidays shall be considered as Sundays for all purposes relating to the transaction of business "in public offices" is held not to have the effect of rendering a holiday a non-judicial day (Carey v. Reilly, 20 Misc. 610, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 449; Didsbury v. Van Tassell, 56 Hun 423, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 32, 18 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 372; Berthold v. Wallach, 14 Misc. 55, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 208). But by express statute no court can be opened within the state on the day of a general election except for certain designated purposes (People v. Donovan, 135 N. Y. 76, 31 N. E. 1009 [reversing 63 Hun 512, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 501]; Redfield v. Florence, 2 E. D. Smith 339; In re Election Law, 7 Hill 194).

61 Ohio St. 444, 56 N. E. 276, 48 L. R. A. 459 (holding that the provision of Ohio Rev. St. § 4446-2, that the "first Monday in September, of each and every year, shall be known as Labor Day; and for all purposes whatever considered as the first day of the week" does not invalidate an indictment returned by a grand jury impaneled and sworn on labor day, since Rev. St. § 457, provides for the manner in which the times of holding terms of court shall be designated and does not in any way restrict the judges as to the days which they may fix for the commencement of terms); Webb v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 989 (holding that an indictment found by a grand jury impaneled on February 22 is not invalid under a statute designating that day as a holiday and requiring all public offices to be closed on that day). See also State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217, 49 S. W. 1007; Sugar Pine Lumber Co. v. Garrett, 28 Ore. 168, 42 Pac. 129.

A writ of error will not be quashed because it was issued on Christmas day in the absence of a statute making that day a dies non juridicus. Starke v. Marshall, 3 Ala. 44.

Depositions may be taken on a legal holiday (Matter of Green, 86 Mo. App. 216, general election day); unless prohibited by statute (Wilson v. Bayley, 42 N. J. L. 132, holding that the presence of defendant before a commissioner on a holiday for the purpose of having his deposition taken, accompanied by his objection to such proceeding, did not operate as a waiver of any of his rights). In Green v. Walker, 73 Wis. 548, 41 N. W. 534, it was held that a deposition taken in another state on a day made a legal holiday by the laws of Wisconsin was not inadmissible. In Rogers v. Brooks, 30 Ark. 612, it was held that the fourth of July was not a legal holiday, and a deposition taken on that day was valid.

of judicial business on holidays is expressly forbidden by statute, acts of a ministerial character performed on those days may be lawful.¹⁵ Nor is a statute prohibiting the transaction of judicial business by the courts on legal holidays applicable to official acts of a judicial nature other than those performed by the courts.¹⁶ So the statutory designation of a day as a holiday for commercial purposes does not prohibit the transaction of judicial business on that day.¹⁷ So judicial acts are not invalidated by a statute which is permissive and not mandatory.¹⁸

2. ISSUANCE AND SERVICE OF PROCESS OR NOTICES. Under express statute in some jurisdictions the service of civil process on legal holidays has been held to be invalid.¹⁹ But the issuance of a summons or process is a ministerial act, and is not prohibited where the statute merely forbids judicial proceedings on legal holidays.²⁰

Nevada.—State v. Atherton, 19 Nev. 332, 10 Pac. 901.

Order of adjournment.—Under a statute prohibiting the transaction of judicial business on a legal holiday it has been held that where a case in a justice's court is adjourned to a day subsequently proclaimed as thanksgiving day, a judgment rendered the following day, pursuant to an adjournment had on thanksgiving day, is void. Milwaukee Harvester Co. v. Teasdale, 91 Wis. 59, 64 N. W. 422. Under a similar statute, however, it has been held that while an order of adjournment on a legal holiday, continuing a case which had been fixed by agreement for that day, is a nullity (Moore v. Herron, 17 Nebr. 697, 703, 24 N. W. 425, 451. See also State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217, 49 S. W. 1007); yet the court does not thereby lose jurisdiction, as all business undisposed of would be continued until the next term (Moore v. Herron, supra). See also Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173; Strowbridge v. Miller, 4 Nebr. (Unoff.) 449, 94 N. W. 825 [following State v. King, 23 Nebr. 540, 37 N. W. 310], holding that where a cause is continued to a legal holiday on which the court is prohibited from transacting business, the continuance will extend to the first day thereafter on which the court may legally transact business. In Jones v. State, 14 Ohio Cir. Ct. 35, 7 Ohio Cir. Dec. 305, it was held that when a court by mistake or inadvertence adjourns its term to a day which is a legal holiday, such term does not therefore lapse or come to an end, but the court may on such legal holiday adjourn to the following day, when it may legally proceed with the transaction of its business.

A resolution of intention relating to a street assessment has been held not to be published according to law where publication was omitted on the 22d of February, that day not being a non-judicial day as the law in California stood in 1876. McVerry v. Boyd, 57 Cal. 406.

15. State v. Thomas, 61 Ohio St. 444, 56 Atl. 276, 48 L. R. A. 459; Green v. Walker, 73 Wis. 548, 41 N. W. 534, holding that the taking of a deposition is a ministerial act and does not come within a statutory prohibition against the performance of judicial acts on legal holidays. See also Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

Service of a statement for a new trial has been held not to be a judicial but a ministerial act, and hence does not come within a constitutional inhibition against the transaction of "judicial business" on legal holidays. Sacramento County Reclamation Dist. No. 535 v. Hamilton, 112 Cal. 603, 44 Pac. 1074.

The mere receiving of a verdict is a ministerial and not a judicial act and may, it is held, be performed on thanksgiving day. State v. Atkinson, 104 La. 570, 29 So. 279.

The entry of an appeal is it is held a ministerial act and may take place on labor day. Worthington v. Hobensack, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 65.

A sheriff's sale is not a judicial act within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the transaction of business by the courts on legal holidays. King v. Platt, 37 N. Y. 155. So where a sale is advertised to take place on a day subsequently designated by statute as a holiday, the act of the sheriff in adjourning the sale on that date is not a judicial act. White v. Zust, 28 N. J. Eq. 107.

16. Spalding v. Bernhard, 76 Wis. 368, 44 N. W. 643, 20 Am. St. Rep. 75, 7 L. R. A. 423, holding that an assignment for the benefit of creditors was not rendered invalid because the assignee's bond was approved by a court commissioner on a legal holiday, although such approval be deemed a judicial act.

17. Belmont Coal, etc., Co. v. Smith, 74 Ala. 206.

18. Elrod v. Gray Lumber Co., 92 Tenn. 476, 22 S. W. 2; Pender v. State, 12 Tex. App. 496.

19. Swinney v. Johnson, 18 Ark. 534 (service on fourth of July); Gladwin v. Lewis, 6 Conn. 49, 16 Am. Dec. 33 (service on thanksgiving day); Paul v. Bruce, 9 Bush (Ky.) 317; Stephens v. Hume, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 5 (holding, however, that a notice to the sheriff for failing to return execution is not a process within the meaning of a statute forbidding service of process on the day of an election); Boone v. Gleason, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 1001 (holding, however, that the statute had no application to the notice to be given by a city engineer as to the time and place of inspection of city improvements); Decker v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 92 Mo. App. 50 (service of writ of garnishment).

So it has been held that notice to produce papers at a trial²¹ or notice of an election contest as the foundation of a suit is not invalid, although given on a non-judicial day.²² And as a general rule the service of legal process may be made on a legal holiday in the absence of express statute making the day in question a dies non for the purpose of serving process.²³ So in the absence of statute to the contrary summons or process may be made returnable on a legal holiday.²⁴ Nor is a writ made returnable on a legal holiday invalidated merely because on that day the court is precluded from transacting business.²⁵

3. TRIAL OF CAUSES. The trial or hearing of causes on a legal holiday is sometimes expressly prohibited by statute;²⁶ and where the court is without authority to hear causes and render judgment on a legal holiday, an appeal from a trial had on such a day does not waive the objection to the trial.²⁷ The mere statutory declaration, however, that a particular day is a legal holiday does not make it a dies non juridicus, so as to prevent the trial of causes on that day.²⁸

In New York the rule of the text has been applied to the service of papers on half holidays — Saturday afternoons (People v. Oswego, 50 Hun 105, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 751, 15 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 379; Nichols v. Kelsey, 20 Abb. N. Cas. 14, 13 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 154, 2 N. Y. City Ct. 410), on Christmas day (Didsburg v. Van Tassel, 56 Hun 423, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 32, 18 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 372), on Lincoln's birthday (Matter of Bornemann, 6 N. Y. App. Div. 524, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 686), and on the fourth day of July (Slater v. Jackson, 25 Misc. 783, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 581). But the service of summons on an elector on election day has been held invalid under the express terms of statute. Bierce v. Smith, 2 Abb. Pr. 411; Meeks v. Noxon, 1 Abb. Pr. 280, 11 How. Pr. 189.

24. Gehring v. Pfrommer, 1 Marv. (Del.) 336, 40 Atl. 1124. Compare Doles v. Powell, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 207, holding that a person is not bound to attend and choose arbitrators on a holiday, and hence that a selection made in his absence is void on the ground that the right of a citizen to be free from the obligation of ordinary compulsory legal process is an incident of a day created a holiday.

W. 825 [following Ostertag v. Galbraith, 23 Nebr. 730, 37 N. W. 637] (holding that where a summons is returnable on a legal holiday on which the court is precluded from transacting business the summons is not void, but the return-day will be the first day thereafter on which the court may legally transact business).

26. Davidson v. Munsey, 27 Utah 817, 74 Pac. 431; Lampe v. Manning, 38 Wis. 673.

In Massachusetts under a statute providing that courts shall always be opened except on Sundays and legal holidays, but permitting the entering or continuance of cases and instruction or discharge of the jury on such days, the court may instruct the jury on a legal holiday. McCoy v. Jordan, 184 Mass. 575, 69 N. E. 358.

In Minnesota under a statute declaring the 22d of February a legal holiday and forbidding the transaction of public business thereon "except in case of necessity," it has been held that the decision of the trial court as to the necessity of continuing the trial of an indictment begun before, but continued and concluded on the 22d of February, was final and that the trial was not void. State v. Sorenson, 32 Minn. 118, 19 N. W. 738.

Moore, 104 N. C. 743, 10 S. E. 183, 17 Am. St. art. 1184); Foster v. Toronto R. Co., 31 Ont. L. See also Anderson v. Folger, 11 La. Ann. 269 (holding that election day is not dies non juridicus, and causes may

4. RENDITION AND ENTRY OF JUDGMENTS. In the absence of statute it is the general rule that a judgment rendered on a legal holiday is valid.²⁹ Under statute in some jurisdictions, however, forbidding the transaction of judicial business on holidays a judgment rendered on a legal holiday has been held to be void.³⁰ But it has been held that the act of a clerk of court in filing the docket transcript of a judgment is a ministerial act and not a judicial act within the meaning of a statute of this character.³¹ Where the statute suspending business and transactions generally on legal holidays is permissive merely and not mandatory, a judgment is not void by reason of having been rendered on a legal holiday.³²

D. On Official Acts. As in the case of other transactions the validity vel non of official acts performed on a legal holiday depends on the terms of the statute. The mere designation of a day as a holiday does not invalidate a sheriff's sale,³³ or an order adjourning the sale³⁴ made on such day. Indeed statutes having for their object the suspension of official transactions on holidays will be construed as prohibiting only such acts as are in express terms or by clear implication prescribed.³⁵ Thus a prohibition against the transaction of public business in the public offices of the state or the counties of the state on a legal holiday has been held not to apply to municipal legislation,³⁶ or to the making of a return by surveyors of a public road.³⁷

HOME.⁴ DOMICILE,⁵ q. v.; DWELLING-HOUSE,⁶ q. v.; dwelling-place;⁷ house or place in which one resides;⁸ some permanent abode or residence where the person residing intends to remain;⁹ place of abode;¹⁰ place of constant¹¹ or permanent residence;¹² the place where one and his family habitually dwell, which they may leave for temporary purposes, and to which they return when the occasion for absence no longer exists;¹³ the place where one keeps his effects, his chest, etc.;¹⁴ the place where one permanently resides, and to which he intends to return when away from it;¹⁵ the place where a person turns for social life, where his family, if he has one, usually dwells, and to which his mind turns when away, and where he has the present purpose of returning and remaining;¹⁶ residence.¹⁷ The term being a relative one,¹⁸ its meaning must often necessarily depend on the context. (See, generally, DOMICILE; HOMESTEADS.)

4. Distinguished from "settlement" in Phillips v. Kingfield, 19 Me. 375, 381, 36 Am. Dec. 760; Jefferson v. Washington, 19 Me. 293, 300; Exeter v. Brighton, 15 Me. 58, 60.

5. See 14 Cyc. 834. The idea of a right to be and remain in a particular place is inseparable from the conception of home or domicile. Berlin v. Worcester, 50 Vt. 23 [quoted in Jericho v. Burlington, 66 Vt. 529, 553, 29 Atl. 801].

St. Rep. 810, where it is said that within the meaning of a contract, one of the provisions of which was that one of the contracting parties should make his home in a certain place, "home" means the place where a person abides, not for any fixed period, but with the intention of remaining until some event not yet in view shall make it desirable or necessary to give it up.

18. The word "home" suggests relations differing in breadth and strength, though not in kind, when applied, on the one hand, to a farmer who has resided since his birth, and expects to reside until his death, on the same spot, and, on the other hand, to the clergyman, whose home may change in two years, or to the railroad laborer, whose home may change in two months. Langhammer v. Munter, 80 Md. 518, 31 Atl. 300, 301, 27 L. R. A. 330. The existence of a home is a question depending upon fact and intention, and the term may be applicable to a particular spot or to a whole country. A person who wanders from country to country, with no intention of remaining fixedly anywhere, acquires no new home. On the other hand, one who confines his wanderings to a particular country or locality, but declines to fix himself upon some particular spot, can very properly be said to have a home in that country or locality. Home, domicile, or residence may therefore include a spot or a wide area. Each of these words may be applied either to a house, a precinct, a ward, a county, or a state. Langhammer v. Munter, 80 Md. 518, 31 Atl. 300, 301, 27 L. R. A. 330. A person's home may be in his own house or his hired lodgings. Brentwood School Dist. No. 2 v. Pollard, 55 N. H. 503.

As implying maintenance and support see Willett v. Carroll, 13 Md. 459, 468; Clough v. Clough, 71 N. H. 412, 52 Atl. 449; Lyon v. Lyon, 65 N. Y. 339, 340. But see Nelson v. Nelson, 19 Ohio 282, 284; Kennedy's Appeal, 81* Pa. St. 163, 165. In Willett v. Carroll, supra, it is said: "The word 'home,' not only in its true etymology, but in its ordinary acceptation, means something more genial than a mere privilege to perambulate a dreary room." And compare In re Denfield, 156 Mass. 265, 266, 30 N. E. 1018,

"[The homestead] is the place of a home or house—that part of a man's landed property which is about and contiguous to his dwelling house. A homestead necessarily includes the idea of a house for a residence, or mansion house. The dwelling may be a splendid mansion, a cabin, or tent. If there be either, it is under the protection of the law, but there must be a home residence before it, and the land on which it is situated, can be claimed as a homestead." Tillar v. Bass, 57 Ark.

connected therewith which may be used and is used for the more perfect enjoyment of the home, such as outhouses for servants or stock, or property, gardens, yards, or lands to the extent allowed by the statute.² It sometimes is made to include the premises on which the owner conducts his usual business.³

II. NATURE, ACQUISITION, AND EXTENT.

A. Nature, Creation, and Duration of Estate or Right in General—

1. ORIGIN OF HOMESTEAD RIGHT AND PURPOSE OF HOMESTEAD LAWS. By virtue of constitutional and statutory provisions the homestead in most states is exempted by law from liability for debts of the owner.⁴ Where such is the case, the constitutional and statutory provisions are not declaratory of the common law, although originally no real estate could be reached by execution for the payment of debts.⁵ Homestead laws are enacted as a matter of public policy in the interest of humanity.⁶ Their object is to provide a home for each citizen of the government, where his family may be sheltered and live beyond the reach of financial misfortune,⁷

"A homestead consists of the dwelling-house in which the claimant resides, and the land on which the same is situated, selected as provided in the Civil Code." Civ. Code, § 1237. Skinner v. Hall, 69 Cal. 195, 198, 10 Pac. 406; Ham v. Santa Rosa Bank, 62 Cal. 125, 134, 45 Am. Rep. 654; Grange v. Gough, (Cal. 1884) 4 Pac. 1177, 1178.

"A man's homestead must be his place of residence; the place where he lives; the place where he usually sleeps and eats; where he surrounds himself with the ordinary insignia of home, and where he may enjoy its immunities and privacy." Philleo v. Smalley, 23 Tex. 499, 502.

"A homestead is an artificial estate in land, devised to protect the possession of the owner against the claims of creditors while the land is occupied as a home." Buckingham v. Buckingham, 81 Mich. 89, 92, 45 N. W. 504.

Distinguished from dower.—"Dower and homestead rights are different in character; dower is a life estate that, after assignment, may be sold and conveyed as other estates. The homestead is not such a right as can be used in any manner other than as provided by the constitution." Horton v. Hilliard, 58 Ark. 298, 302, 24 S. W. 242.

A homestead is not a conveyance. It possesses none of the essential requisites of a conveyance. There is neither grantor, nor grantee, nor consideration in a declaration of homestead. There is no transfer of, or change in, the title. It is the act of the owner of the property, whereby such owner secures a right or privilege given him by the statute, and which is in derogation of the common law and common right, and which can only be secured by a substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute, conditions precedent to the investiture of the property with the exceptional character contemplated." Historical note.—Homestead laws are strictly of American origin. The earliest statute of this kind was that enacted by the republic of Texas, Jan. 26, 1839 (1 Paschal Dig. Laws Tex. art. 3798). The first constitutional guaranty of homestead exemption was that of the constitution of Texas, in 1845, which was followed by Vermont in 1849. Since the latter date, nearly every state and territory in the Union (excepting Delaware, Indiana, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island) has adopted similar laws, which recognize the general right of homestead, but differ radically in their details. For a discussion of the development of homestead law see Barney v. Leeds, 51 N. H. 253, 261.

A homestead law is a beneficent provision for the protection and maintenance of the wife and children against the neglect and improvidence of the father and husband. Hughes v. Hodges, 102 N. C. 236, 9 S. E. 437.

"The conservation of family homes is the purpose of homestead legislation. The policy of the state is to foster families as the factors of society, and thus promote the general welfare. To save them from disintegration and secure their permanency, the legislator seeks to protect their homes from forced sales so far and to inculcate in individuals those feelings of independence which are essential to the maintenance of free institutions.⁸ Furthermore, the state is concerned that the citizen shall not be divested of means of support and reduced to pauperism.⁹

2. NATURE OF INTEREST CREATED¹⁰ — a. In General. The homestead interest is purely statutory, nothing like it being known at common law.¹¹ "A special or particular interest in real estate created by statute, and the character of the interest thus acquired has a marked variance in the different states."¹² In some jurisdictions the view is taken that the homestead interest is not an estate at all, but merely an exemption;¹³ in others, it has been variously characterized as a "fee,"¹⁴ a "freehold estate,"¹⁵ or a "life-estate."¹⁶

b. Interest of Wife or Children During Life of Person Acquiring Homestead.¹⁷ The wife and children of the owner of a homestead have no estate or vested interest in the property during his lifetime.¹⁸ And laws forbidding a husband to

. . . Families are the units of society, indispensable factors of civilization, the basis of the commonwealth. Upon their permanency, in any community, depends the success of schools, churches, public libraries, and good institutions of every kind. The sentiment of patriotism and independence, the spirit of free citizenship, the feeling of interest in public affairs, are cultivated and fostered more readily when the citizen lives permanently in his own castle with a sense of its protection and durability." South Carolina.—Ex p. Ray, 20 S. C. 246; Bull v. Roe, 13 S. C. 355.

A homestead right is a "determinable exemption" on the payment of the owner's debts, in respect to the particular property allotted to him. Jones v. Britton, 102 N. C. 166, 9 S. E. 554, 4 L. R. A. 178. It is a quality annexed to land, whereby an estate is exempt from sale under execution for debt, and is not a personal trust. Thomas v. Fulford, 117 N. C. 667, 23 S. E. 635.

14. Hirsch v. Prescott, 89 Fed. 52.

In Alabama it is said that, when a homestead exemption has been legally claimed and allotted, the title to it is legal, and may be asserted or defended successfully in a court of law; consequently the owner cannot come into equity to assert or protect it, without showing special circumstances for the interposition of equity. sell or encumber the homestead without the wife joining do not give her an estate but a mere veto power over his right to convey or mortgage.¹⁹ Their occupation and enjoyment of it are merely incidental to their membership in the family. Their rights as owners become fixed at the death of the homesteader, and the nature and extent thereof are determined by the law in force when such rights devolve.²⁰

3. CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS²¹ — a. In General. Each state has a right incident to its sovereignty to pass homestead exemption laws in the absence of federal action to the contrary. While it is competent for congress to declare whether these exemptions shall exist or not, its silence is construed as permission for the enactment of state legislation.²² If the state constitution itself provides that property not exceeding a certain value or extent may be claimed as a homestead, a law enlarging the exemption is not necessarily void,²³ but becomes invalid only in the event that it contravenes the inhibition of the federal constitution against impairing the obligation of contracts.²⁴ Whether a prior homestead law is repealed in whole or in part by a subsequent statute or constitutional provision is determined by ascertaining if there is a necessary inconsistency between them.²⁵

b. Construction. Homestead laws are remedial in their nature and, according to the weight of authority, must be liberally construed in favor of the debtor.²⁶ Public policy, however, does not require a strained but a natural construction of Minor children of the homesteader cannot enjoin him from applying for leave to sell the homestead, on the ground that he is a drunkard, has married a second wife who has alienated his affections from the petitioners, is wasting the property, and threatens to deprive the children of all interest therein. Barfield v. Barfield, 72 Ga. 668.

Where a homestead is sold and proceeds reinvested in other property "for the use of my husband, myself, and our children as a homestead, in place of our late homestead," the wife and children have no vested interest, but only such rights as are incident to their relationship with the head of the family. Watson v. Neal, 38 S. C. 90, 16 S. E. 833.

Right to proceeds of sale.—A wife owns the proceeds from a sale of the homestead, where her signature to the deed of conveyance is secured by her husband's agreement that the avails shall be hers. Keyes v. Rines, 37 Vt. 260, 86 Am. Dec. 707.

c. Self-Executing Provisions in Constitutions and Statutes. A constitution providing for or impliedly anticipating action by the legislature in securing an exemption of homestead is not self-executing;²⁸ but if it clearly provides for the extent and value of the homestead, no legislation is required to render it operative.²⁹

d. Retroactive Operation.³⁰ Homestead laws have been held to apply to property acquired both before or after their passage,³¹ and when rights in specific property have once been secured by the homesteader under an existing law, they cannot be subsequently divested by the legislature.³² So on the other hand constitutional³³ or statutory provisions³⁴ granting or increasing a homestead exemption are not operative as to liabilities existing before its adoption.

e. Effect of Change or Repeal of Homestead Exemption. The laws in force when a debt is contracted have been held to constitute terms of the obligation, and a repeal of such statutes cannot affect the previous right of exemption.³⁵ Repealing laws frequently preserve homestead rights previously existing, whether accruing or accrued. In such cases the repeal does not affect the debtor's privileges arising under prior statutes.³⁶

4. WHAT LAW GOVERNS RIGHT.³⁷ The value and extent of the exemption as against creditors is determined by the law in force when the debt was created or contract entered into, as otherwise their obligation would be impaired, in violation of the state and federal constitutions.³⁸ Since the rights of the widow and children of a homesteader are not vested until his death, the law in force at the

5. RIGHT AS AFFECTED BY CHANGE IN FORM OF DEBT OR NEW PROMISE.⁴¹ An alteration in the mere form of the debt will not as a rule enable the debtor to claim a homestead privilege, if such right did not exist when the original obligation was created.⁴² But if the former debt is extinguished and the new obligation can properly be considered an original undertaking and not a renewal, the homestead exemption can be claimed as against the latter.⁴³

6. RIGHT AS AFFECTED BY OWNERSHIP OF OTHER PROPERTY.⁴⁴ The possession of other real or personal property by a debtor does not necessarily prevent his claiming a homestead; an exemption of personalty may be supplemented by a homestead of realty.⁴⁵ But if the homestead claimant already resides on a home-

Illustration.—A mortgagee in possession at the date of the passage of a homestead law subsequently discharged his mortgage, and as a part of the same transaction took a new mortgage for the same amount and delivered possession of the premises. It was held that no estate of homestead was acquired as against the subsequent renewal mortgage. Burns v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 426.

43. Thus if A, after the passage of a homestead law, pays off an obligation owed by B to C, and created prior to such enactment, B may claim a homestead exemption as against A. Kirkland v. Burton, 2 Ky. L. Rep. 319. And see Arnold v. Estis, 92 N. C. 162; Fralley v. Kelly, 88 N. C. 227, 43 Am. Rep. 743; Martin v. Meredith, 71 N. C. 214; Compton v. Patterson, 28 S. C. 115, 5 S. Acquisition of other property after selection of homestead.—If the homesteader, after designating a homestead of the statutory value, acquires adjoining property, he may select such a portion of the whole as does not exceed the limit fixed by law, and the excess is subject to creditors' claims. Fitzhugh v. Connor, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 277, 74 S. W. 83.

7. EXISTENCE OF MORE THAN ONE HOMESTEAD. Generally two separate homesteads cannot be claimed for the same family.⁴⁷ Nor can the claimant retain the option of choosing between two homes, when either is seized by creditors.⁴⁸ But where the first has ceased to be exempt because of the invalidity of the statute securing it,⁴⁹ or has become liable for the owner's debts by dissolution of the family, and the owner has remarried,⁵⁰ a second homestead may be obtained by him. And if a widow to whom a homestead has been set apart out of her deceased husband's estate afterward marries, she may claim a second homestead out of her second husband's property.⁵¹ An exemption secured by bankruptcy proceedings will not interfere with the bankrupt claiming a homestead, as the former is for his own benefit, and the latter for the benefit of his family.⁵²

8. DURATION AND TERMINATION.⁵³ The homestead privilege does not terminate upon the death of the head of the family, if the property continues to be used by those members who are beneficiaries under his declaration;⁵⁴ but such property may lose its character as a homestead by dissolution of the owner's family. Such dissolution need not involve the death of all members of the immediate family, but may occur when minor members attain majority,⁵⁵ or even where the owner of a homestead dies, leaving descendants, if the latter are not constituent members of his family.⁵⁶ The original family may be enlarged by the subsequent marriage of the debtor; in which event the second wife and the children of the second marriage may continue to enjoy the homestead after the debtor's death, although all the original members have withdrawn from the family or have attained majority.⁵⁷ If the homestead exemption attaches to any estate less than a fee, it will not last beyond the termination of such estate.⁵⁸ Nor can an estate of homestead be created where a remainder-man occupies the land in which he has a future vested interest, but such occupancy is at the sufferance of the particular tenant.⁵⁹

B. Persons Entitled — 1. FAMILY AND HEAD OF FAMILY — a. Family Relation in General. Under the exemption laws a homestead can only be reserved to a family.⁶⁰ Homesteads are most frequently secured to the head of a "family." What constitutes the relationship will vary according to circumstances. It generally embraces a collective body of persons, consisting of parents or children, or other relatives, domestics, or servants, residing together in one house or upon the same premises.⁶¹ But in any event a person to be a member of a family must be a member in good faith.⁶² The family may be composed of a brother and sister,⁶³ a husband and wife,⁶⁴ a father or grandfather and his children or grandchildren,⁶⁵ a son and his mother and sister,⁶⁶ a father-in-law and his dependent daughter-in-law,⁶⁷ an unmarried man and his illegitimate offspring,⁶⁸ an unmarried woman and her adopted child,⁶⁹ a husband and his children, deserted by the wife and mother,⁷⁰ a widower and his adopted daughter and her husband,⁷¹ a divorced man living with his minor unmarried son,⁷² a son living with his widowed mother and supporting her,⁷³ a widow living with and supporting the children of her deceased husband by a former wife.⁷⁴ On the contrary a "family" does not consist of but one person,⁷⁵ nor of a man and a woman unlawfully married,⁷⁶ nor of persons lawfully residing together, but without being related or in any wise connected.⁷⁷ her,⁹¹ or though she contributes to the family support.⁹² Nor can she claim a homestead exemption though living apart from her husband, if she has no children dependent upon her for support.⁹³ It has been held, however, that where a married woman owns separate property, upon which she lives, she is entitled to the exemption, notwithstanding the fact that she lives with her husband.⁹⁴ So upon securing a divorce from him for his fault (if the children are committed to her custody),⁹⁵ or upon his desertion of the family,⁹⁶ she may claim the benefit of homestead laws. It has also been held that, where a married woman is engaged in business in her own name and for her separate use, and becomes bankrupt, she may claim a homestead exemption in real property owned and occupied by her as a residencee, although her husband is living.⁹⁷

(v) UNMARRIED PERSONS. The fact that the person claiming a homestead is unmarried does not necessarily deprive him of the exemption,⁵ and under some statutes an unmarried person is given the same homestead privileges as those who are married.⁶ But usually the homestead privilege is not extended to him.⁷

Childless widow.—Under the statutes of Missouri "head of a family" is construed to include a wife whose husband had occupied the premises as a homestead until forced to leave, about the close of the Civil war, by the disturbed condition of the country, when they removed to another state, where he shortly afterward died; the wife, who had no children, then returning to the homestead and residing thereon, keeping house with her brother. *Leake v. his relatives, occupying a house as a residence.⁹ A widower, residing on land with only one servant may be a housekeeper,¹⁰ and so may a married woman living with her husband,¹¹ or a married woman living with her minor son, apart from her husband but undivorced from him,¹² or a bachelor occupying a house with two sisters dependent upon him.¹³

3. GUARDIANS AND MINORS. The right to a homestead has sometimes been bestowed by statute upon guardians of minors¹⁴ or upon the minors themselves.¹⁵

4. CITIZENSHIP AND RESIDENCE AS AFFECTING RIGHT.¹⁶ Homestead laws exist for the benefit of residents of the state, whether entitled to the political and civil rights of citizenship or not.¹⁷ A non-resident cannot claim the exemption, unless the statute clearly bestows the right upon him.¹⁸ Residence, under the homestead laws, requires actual presence within the state;¹⁹ but it does not involve an intention to remain permanently within the jurisdiction, provided the debtor actually occupies the premises as his home.²⁰ The actual personal presence of the debtor's family as residents with him upon the land is not necessary, as his domicile is ordinarily deemed to be theirs;²¹ but if he leaves his family in another state with no intention of bringing them to him, he is not the head of a family within the meaning of the homestead laws.²² Nor is he such if the future removal of his family into the state of his residence is wholly uncertain.²³

C. Acquisition and Establishment — 1. INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT. A debtor and his family, by residing upon premises, usually impress them with the character of a homestead.²⁴ The mode in which the right can be asserted is generally prescribed by statute and is exclusive of all other methods of selection.²⁵

2. INTENT IN ACQUISITION AND OCCUPANCY. If the intention of the debtor when he occupies land as a homestead is not only to make it his present home, but also to prevent creditors from collecting their debts by subjecting the property thereto, the exemption may nevertheless be secured;²⁶ but in the absence of good faith upon the debtor's part in respect to the occupancy of the property no homestead can be obtained by him.²⁷

3. NECESSITY OF OCCUPANCY — a. Necessity of Actual Occupancy. The purpose of homestead laws being to secure to the family their usual place of residence, actual occupancy of the premises by them at the time of levy or sale is generally required.²⁸ The part occupied may include not only the land upon which the Conveyance to wife to defeat claims of creditors.—When a conveyance to the wife is made or caused to be made by the husband for the purpose of placing the home beyond the reach of his creditors, the wife is not precluded thereby from claiming the benefit of the homestead statute even as against such creditors. Orr v. Shraft, 22 Mich. 260; Edmonson v. Meacham, 50 Miss. 34. And see Backer v. Meyer, 43 Fed. 702, where homestead property purchased by an insolvent and placed in his wife's name could be exempted by her.

Constitutionality of statute.—The statute which declares that an applicant for an exemption must make a full and fair disclosure of everything which he has, and that if he is guilty of a fraud in failing to do so, he shall not be entitled to an exemption, is not in violation of the constitutional provision granting the right of exemption. *McNally v. See 25 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homesteads," § 41.

Cultivation of land not actually occupied.—Where a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres in the country or half an acre in a city or town is given by law, the resident in a town cannot claim as exempt lands which are in the country and are cultivated, but residence stands, but also that which is about and contiguous to the dwelling-house;²⁹ but it will not embrace buildings and portions of the land rented to tenants,³⁰ nor tracts entirely separate from the legal subdivision upon which the dwelling-house is located, even though the intervening land belong to the debtor,³¹ nor uninclosed lots of a subdivided block contiguous to an uninclosed lot occupied by the owner of the block.³² In some jurisdictions the homestead laws do not require, expressly or by implication, that there shall be actual residence upon the land; in which case any property of the debtor may be claimed, whether he reside upon it or not.³³

b. Sufficiency of Mere Intent to Occupy. In order to assert a homestead right in land, a mere intention to occupy it at some future time is never sufficient. Such intent should be evidenced by unmistakable acts showing an intention to carry out such design, and must usually be followed by actual occupancy within a reasonable time;³⁴ nevertheless in some states a homestead may be created by are not actually occupied by him. Oliver v. Showden, 18 Fla. 823, 43 Am. Rep. 338.

Change of residence to another part of tract.—The owner of a tract of land cannot after seizure change his residence to another and less valuable part of the tract to evade the restriction of the homestead law as to the value of the property to be claimed as exempt. Todd v. Gordy, 28 La. Ann. 666.

Residence on one tract and cultivation on another.—Where a wife owned a tract of land joining another owned by her husband, and the whole was used and cultivated by them as one farm, the husband could claim a homestead in the part owned by him separately, although the actual residence was upon the wife's tract. *Mason v. intention prior to actual occupancy,³⁵ when it appears that the owner is entitled to the exemption as the head of the family, and that this intention has been manifested by such acts as amount to reasonably sufficient notice of that intention, the purpose of the law being to require such open evidence of this intention as will prevent the use of this right as a shield for fraud.³⁶ "The placing upon the premises of unhewn logs for the purpose of erecting thereon the humblest cabin, with a bona fide intention to occupy as soon as the cabin can be built, secures the right."³⁷ So also where intended improvements and occupancy are prevented by litigation,³⁸ or the intended occupation is interrupted by illness in the claimant's family, and the intent to occupy is evidenced by some act tending to show such intent,³⁹ there may still be a claim of homestead, and such is the case where land is purchased as a residence to be occupied by the claimant as soon as an outstanding tenancy ends, where he subsequently carries out his intention.⁴⁰

e. Effect of Occupancy of Other Property. If the debtor actually occupies other land than that claimed as a homestead, he is thereby prevented from exempting the latter,⁴¹ although it is used openly and notoriously as a means of support for the debtor's family.⁴² Mere ownership of other property, however, will not prevent acquisition of a homestead in a given tract.⁴⁵

See 25 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homesteads," § 42. Applications of rule.—Thus where a debtor, residing on one lot, intends to make an adjoining lot his homestead and begins building a kitchen thereon, but sells the first lot before commencing such building, no homestead can be claimed in the lot sold. Groscholz v. Newman, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 481, 22 L. ed. 471. Making a contract with a builder to erect a residence on a vacant lot, securing estimates and specifications and placing building material on the land, will not enable the owner to claim it as a homestead. Drucker v. Rosenstein, 19 Fla. 191. A mere verbal promise by a husband to a wife to return to another state and occupy a certain house and lot as a homestead does not secure to her any homestead rights. Greenman v. Greenman, 107 Ill. 404. Erecting a dwelling-house upon land will not enable the owner to claim it as exempt before actual occupancy. Hansford v. Holdam, 11 Bush (Ky.) 210; *Lee v. aid in the perpetration of a fraud upon creditors.⁴⁴ Merely commencing to build a dwelling-house upon the land,⁴⁵ or occasionally using the house as a lodging place,⁴⁶ or for temporary residence,⁴⁷ will not fulfil the requirements of the statutes. But the term "actual occupancy" is not to be understood as requiring constant personal presence, so as to make a man's residence his prison, or that a temporary absence, enforced by some casualty, or for the purposes of business or pleasure, would constitute a removal, ceasing to occupy, or an abandonment.⁴⁸ Occupancy may be of separate buildings upon the same tract,⁴⁹ and land, being part of a homestead, is not necessarily excluded from the exemption because uninclosed and uncultivated.⁵⁰

b. Occupancy of a Portion of the Premises. Where the premises consist of a double house, each half being a distinct tenement, the owner, who occupies but one part, cannot claim the whole as exempt,⁵¹ although the yard be used in common.⁵² But if the owner rents a portion of a single tenement to a tenant, and himself occupies the remainder, he may claim exemption as to the entire premises.⁵³ The person claiming a homestead must be a "householder" if the statute so requires,⁵⁴ and have a family residing with him consisting of a person or persons whom he is under some legal or moral obligation to support,⁵⁵ especially if he retains control of the rented portion so far as consistent with the purposes of the tenancy.⁵⁶

c. Occupancy by Tenant. The occupancy contemplated by the homestead laws is personal and not by a tenant, where the portion rented is a distinct and separate part of the entire tract.⁵⁷ So a piece of land which has a dwelling-house upon it occupied by a tenant, but upon which the owner never resided, is not a homestead, although he had no other dwelling-house and may have contemplated living upon the premises at a future time.⁵³ If, however, occupation of a part of the premises be by a mere license, the owner may claim the whole as exempt,⁵⁹ and in one jurisdiction at least it is held that if a house and the whole lot upon which it stands are adapted to use as a homestead, and are actually used as such at the time of the dedication, the subsequent erection of an additional dwelling upon the lot for whatever purpose used will not vitiate and affect the homestead as an entirety or render any part of it subject to seizure and sale under execution, unless the second house increases the value of the homestead beyond the statutory limit.⁶⁰

d. Making Improvements Preparatory to Occupancy. If land is purchased with the specific intention of making it a homestead, and in pursuance of such intention the purchaser makes improvements thereon preparatory to occupancy, he may claim the land as exempt, even before his actual residence commences,⁶¹ and where the statute requires that it be used "as a home," constructive possession, or fencing and improving, will not be sufficient.⁶²

e. Time of Occupancy. The time at which premises must possess a homestead character in order to secure exemption is held to be the time at which the creditor seeks to enforce his claim against them;⁶³ and if the statute subjects land to the payment of debts which were contracted before improvements are placed thereon, a debtor may exempt his homestead, where he improves it before contracting the debt, although he first occupies it subsequently thereto.⁶⁴

f. Continuity of Occupancy. Continuous and actual occupation of land claimed as exempt is unnecessary, provided the homestead character has once attached thereto. Brief temporary absences will not affect the right,⁶⁵ although a short residence for the purpose of securing the land as a homestead, but abandoned before seizure on execution, will not avail.⁶⁶

5. PURPOSE OF OCCUPANCY AND USE OF PROPERTY⁶⁷ — a. In General. The purposes for which land may be used, in order to constitute it a homestead, depend principally upon the particular terms employed by the statutes. It has been held that the character of the building, not its mode of occupation for the time being, determines whether it is a dwelling-house.⁶⁸ Not infrequently, where the homestead law imposes no restriction upon the uses to which the home lot may be put, it is enough to render it exempt that it is used as the residence of a debtor,⁶⁹ even though there be no intention, during all the time of occupancy, to dedicate it to the purposes of a homestead.⁷⁰ The occupancy must be by such a person as the statute contemplates.⁷¹

b. Use as Appurtenant to Residence. Land which is used by a debtor and his family for purposes immediately connected with their residence may be claimed as part of the homestead. What uses are to be deemed appurtenant to the actual residence will vary according to circumstances. A garden is usually held to be such,⁷² unless its use is merely occasional and incidental and not primarily for securing products for home consumption.⁷³ So also is a lot used for general

c. Use For Hotel. The authorities are divided upon the question whether a homestead can be claimed in premises used as a hotel, but the weight of opinion is in favor of such exemption.⁷⁶

d. Use For Business Purpose. Where a portion of the premises is devoted to business purposes and the remainder is used as a residence, the decisions are not uniform as to whether all or none of the premises should be exempt, or only the residential portion. Some courts interpret exemption laws as designed not merely to afford a shelter to the debtor and his family, but to give them the full benefit of the entire tract exempted, to be used as the debtor deems best, for occupancy, cultivation, erection of buildings, either to conduct his own business or to derive income by way of rental. According to this view the use of a part of the land

Sharing in the profits of a hotel conducted by another will not enable the owner who does not reside therein to claim it as a homestead. May v. International L. & T. Co., 92 Fed. 445, 34 C. C. A. 448.

Previous use as hotel.—Where it appears that a property-owner at the time of filing a declaration of homestead was, with his family, using the place as a home, and that it was at that time being used for no other purpose, proof of previous use for hotel and other purposes is unavailing to prevent the property being impressed with the character of a homestead. Lima v. San Luis Obispo County Bank, 142 Cal. 245, 75 Pac. 846.

for business purposes does not invalidate the homestead claim.⁷⁷ The same rule has been applied where part of a building is used for family purposes and part for the conduct of business.⁷⁸ In some jurisdictions, however, the use of the premises must be for family purposes exclusively, and so much of the property as is used for business purposes is not exempt.⁷⁹

e. Illegitimate Use. The occupant of premises, used by him for unlawful purposes, cannot claim them as a homestead, although he resides thereon or conducts a legitimate business subsidiary to the main illegitimate one.⁸⁰ Failure to pay a license required by law before engaging in business otherwise legitimate does not render the business itself unlawful, and hence will not affect homestead rights in the premises used for conducting it.⁸¹

f. Business Homestead. Under the Texas constitution and statutes, the place in which the head of a family exercises his calling or business is exempt from liabilities for debts.⁸² But to secure such immunity, the occupation must be in good faith.⁸³ There need not be actual occupancy if there be a bona fide intention to occupy the business residence accompanied by acts amounting to a reasonable notice of such purpose.⁸⁴ The constitution has no application except to urban property.⁸⁵

6. SELECTION AND DEDICATION IN GENERAL — a. Right and Manner of Selection and Necessity Therefor. Where constitutional or statutory provisions give the owner of land the right to make the selection of homestead and provide that the appraisers shall lay off such portion as he may select, he must be given an opportunity to exercise this right in proceedings for the allotment of homestead;⁸⁶ but this right of selection may be waived, and in such case it becomes the duty of the court in order to prevent further litigation to set off a homestead to him.⁸⁷ In most jurisdictions, no formal act of selection by the claimant is necessary to vest in him the right of homestead. Occupying premises as a home will ordinarily raise the inference of selection and be sufficient, especially if the premises are within the statutory limits of extent and value.⁸⁸ So the situation of part of

The employment of numerous laborers on the business premises and the use of large and expensive machinery thereon does not prevent a homestead exemption in the building and in such machinery as is necessary for the business and is a part of the realty. Willis v. Morris, 66 Tex. 628, 1 S. W. 799, 59 Am. Rep. 634.

Where a building was an entirety, occupancy sufficient to exempt any part of it as a business homestead operated to exempt the whole (Billings v. Matlage, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 82 S. W. 805); but the use of an insignificant part of a building by a firm for business purposes does not render the premises a business homestead where the main portion is rented out to tenants (Van Slyke v. Barrett, (Tex. 1891) 16 S. W. 902).

What is not a bona fide occupation.—Where the owner of a two-story building leased the lower floor (reserving space "for safe and office") and the front room of the second floor; stored hardware in a rear room on the second floor, from which he made occasional sales; and followed the business of a cattle-dealer, but made said building his headquarters and lounging place, he could not claim it as a business homestead. Houston v. Newsome, 82 Tex. 75, 17 S. W. 603. And see King v. C. M. Hapgood Shoe Co., 21 Tex. Civ. App. 217, 51 S. W. 532.

Renting portions of premises.—Where the owner of a one-story brick business house, and who had no other business than that of postmaster, kept the post-office in the building, using a part of it for that purpose and renting the remainder to other parties, it was held that the building was exempt as his place of business. Brennan v. Fuller, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 509, 37 S. W. 641. A two-story house was built upon a lot used as homestead. The cellar, the upper story, and over two thirds of the first floor were in actual use in homestead purposes; the front part of the first floor, divided into two small rooms, was leased to tenants. It was held that the two small rooms could not become subject to execution and thus be detached from the house, which was exempt as part of the homestead lots. Forsgard v. Ford, 87 Tex. 185, 27 S. W. 57, 25 L. R. A. 155.

The erection of a building adjoining a business house for the purpose of being leased is a designation of such addition to the other uses inconsistent with its exemption as the place of business. Hargadene v. Whitfield, 71 Tex. 482, 9 S. W. 475.

Whether a house built to replace a business homestead which has been burned is to be considered a homestead depends on the owner's intention to so occupy it in the future. Kahler v. Carruthers, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 216, 45 S. W. 160.

a tract may give adequate notice of intention to claim it as portion of a homestead,⁸⁹ and where the owner of a tract sells a part and retains the balance which is sufficient in value and extent to constitute a homestead, the owner thereby elects to treat the part retained as a homestead.⁹⁰ There must, however, be a present bona fide intention to dedicate the land to the purposes of a home, coupled with acts sufficient to imply notice of such intention.⁹¹ So it has been held that where real estate not used as a homestead may become exempt by selection, such selection cannot be made after the sale of the property.⁹²

b. Entry on Record of Title. If the statute requires that before any person shall be entitled to claim a homestead exemption he shall enter of record the word "homestead" on the margin of his recorded title, the requirement must be strictly performed, as the provision exists for the protection of the public, and is mandatory. A creditor's actual notice that the premises are occupied as a residence is, in the absence of such entry, immaterial.⁹³

c. Declaration or Certificate⁹⁴—(I) NECESSITY. A written declaration or certificate of intention to claim a homestead is frequently provided for by homestead laws, and becomes a necessary prerequisite to the exemption under statutes of this character.⁹⁵

Where no declaration was required under an earlier law, a subsequent exaction of such declaration will not affect rights acquired under the former statute. Garnier v. Joffron, 39 La. Ann. 884, 2 So. 797.

Joinder of wife in declaration.—In California it has been held that, although the wife is not required to join with the husband in a declaration of homestead upon declaration should be strictly complied with,⁹⁶ but a declaration which follows the statute will be sufficient.⁹⁷ Where the actual cash value of the premises must be stated, its omission renders the declaration void, as it constitutes no notice to creditors who might desire to contest the claim for exemption,⁹⁸ although an overestimate of such value will not have such an effect.⁹⁹ Nor need the estimate be absolutely definite, if it computes the value with reasonable certainty.¹ The land itself must be clearly identified, but a description sufficient in a deed will be proper in a declaration of homestead.² If the statute requires the declaration by a wife to show that her husband has not already made it, and that she claims the homestead for their joint benefit, a failure to state these facts renders the declaration invalid.³ A statement that the declarant is the head of the family is sufficient, without stating the facts showing such relationship.⁴ The necessity of alleging residence is not complied with by alleging that the declarant was in possession of the premises.⁵ It has been held that if the statutory exemption relates to debts contracted after a fixed date, the certificate should show that immunity is sought from such debts as the statute covers.⁶ It has also been held that the declaration should state that debts created after a specified date are exempted against, and the amount of land claimed as protected against such liabilities,⁷ and should specify what part is claimed out of a larger tract than the statute exempts.⁸

(III) ACKNOWLEDGMENT, FILING, AND RECORDING. An acknowledgment of the declaration or certificate is sometimes required in the same manner as grants of real property. Where such is the case, it must appear upon the face of the declaration that the statute has been complied with.⁹ Statutory provisions as to filing the declaration must be strictly complied with,¹⁰ and the declaration must be recorded, if the statute so stipulates.¹¹ Where the land is located in different community property, her doing so does not affect its validity. Simonson v. Burr, 121 Cal. 582, 54 Pac. 87.

Such record is notice to all the world of counties, the declaration may be executed in duplicate and recorded in each county.¹²

(iv) CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION. A declaration may be insufficient as to a portion of the land designated as a homestead, yet valid as to another which is properly claimed.¹³ When once it is duly executed and filed and is not contested as allowed by law, it protects the property from forced sale, under an execution thereafter issued, except for debts not exempted by the homestead statute.¹⁴ If it seeks to exempt land not capable of being claimed as a homestead, the filing for record of such a declaration will not destroy the right of exemption as to other property actually occupied as a residence, and which could have been claimed; at least as against parties with notice of such occupancy.¹⁵

7. PROCEEDINGS FOR ALLOTMENT — a. Necessity, Form, and Requisites of Application — (i) IN GENERAL. Whether or not an allotment of the homestead is indispensable depends upon the provisions of the particular statute involved. Mere occupancy of land as a home will in some jurisdictions exempt it from liability for debts,¹⁶ while in others the homestead must be actually set off to the debtor and his family.¹⁷ The formal application, when required, must show either expressly¹⁸ or by natural implication,¹⁹ that the capacity in which the claimant asserts his right is one entitling him to a homestead exemption, as wife, head of a family, guardian or trustee of minor children, etc.;²⁰ but an averment in terms of ownership is unnecessary.²¹ The property should be adequately described.²² Residence is sufficiently stated by describing the applicant as being "of said county."²³ The application may be signed by an attorney if sworn to by the debtor.²⁴ Should the facts disclosed upon the hearing of his application differ from those alleged, amendments may be made at any time, with the permission of the officer passing upon the application.²⁵

No amendment will be allowed to give vitality to a void declaration of homestead made by a person not entitled to an exemption. Bennett v. Georgia Trust Co., 106 Ga. 578, 32 S. E. 625.

(ii) APPLICATION BY WIFE. In some jurisdictions the wife may make application for homestead if the husband fails or refuses to do so.²⁶ In Georgia the debtor's wife in making the application must state out of whose property the homestead is to be carved,²⁷ and that the husband has refused to make application.²⁸ In Idaho the wife's application if the husband be living should state that the husband has not made such declaration and that she therefore makes application for their joint benefit.²⁹

b. Hearing and Determination of Application — (i) IN GENERAL. Upon the hearing of an application for homestead, no question of title can be adjudicated.³⁰ Nor can the ordinary, before whom the proceeding is brought, determine priorities of lienholders without making such lienors parties thereto.³¹ The husband of the claimant will be deemed to have assented to setting aside the homestead, where he fails to object to his wife's petition.³² But a homestead in a man's own lands cannot be thrust upon him if he objects by plea.³³ If a first application is denied, upon the hearing of a second the claimant may show that new homestead rights have accrued since the former adjudication, which prevent its being a bar.³⁴ A receiver may be appointed upon the hearing of the application for a homestead, but cannot be delayed until final adjudication.³⁵

(ii) NOTICE. Creditors must be given an opportunity to present objections to the application, or they will not be concluded by its approval.³⁶ The debtor also must have due notice of proceedings by his creditors to determine the homestead, but no time to answer need be given him after the date fixed for the hearing.³⁷

(iii) APPRAISAL. If the debtor acquiesces in the amount of an appraisal of the homestead, he cannot object to it thereafter,³⁸ and no valuation of the land can be demanded by the debtor where he and his creditor agree to the setting apart of a specified number of acres as an additional homestead.³⁹ When an appraisement has been made, all presumptions are indulged in favor of the regularity of the appraisers' appointment and qualifications.⁴⁰

Limitation of rule.—The averment that the exemption is sought from the husband's property was held not indispensable where the wife applied for a homestead for herself and her children, on the ground that her husband had refused to apply, and the husband resided on the land when the surveyor entered, and, although knowing of the wife's application, made no objection to its allowance, it appearing that he had no creditors either at the time the application was granted or at his death. *Linch v. c. Survey and Return. It is sometimes provided by homestead acts that before the application can be granted the land must be surveyed. Under such statutes if the homestead is set apart before the return made by the surveyor the proceeding secures no exemption to the claimant.⁴¹ The surveyor's return should be verified if this is required by statute.⁴² Clerical errors in the affidavit will not vitiate it.⁴³

d. Setting Apart. The setting apart of a homestead is not necessary in order to vest title in the claimant, but to ascertain the quantity of land exempt, and thus determine the excess which may be liable for debts.⁴⁴ Only so much land should be set apart as exempt as is permitted by law, whether there be opposition to the petition or not.⁴⁵ The assignment may be of unencumbered rather than encumbered land, although the latter contains the debtor's dwelling-house,⁴⁶ and if it be taken from different parcels of farming land, the several tracts should be thrown together if practicable.⁴⁷ The fact that the assignment could have been made more conveniently for the homesteader is no ground for setting aside the allotment.⁴⁸ Nor does the fact that the commissioners' report leaves blank the date of the allotment furnish ground of exception to the report where defendant knew where it was made and was requested to be present.⁴⁹ Any description of the land set apart is sufficient which will enable it to be located, even though the boundaries are not given as accurately as possible.⁵⁰

e. Conclusiveness and Effect of Allotment. A liberal presumption is indulged in favor of the regularity of homestead proceedings, and the judgment of the officer allowing the exemption cannot ordinarily be collaterally attacked by objecting to the description contained in the debtor's schedule of property,⁵¹ or to the want of regularity in the petition or in the acts of the surveyor who laid off the homestead.⁵²

f. Reallotment. No reallotment of homestead is allowable where no fraud or want of jurisdiction appears and there is no specific statutory provision sanctioning it, even though the premises have, since the original allotment, increased in value above the limit fixed by the Homestead Act.⁵³ Nor can the debtor, after acceptance of the homestead, have a reallotment upon the ground that the premises have depreciated since the final appraisalment.⁵⁴ So the debtor cannot claim a right to a reallocation upon the ground of irregularity in the former proceedings, where he has enjoyed the benefits secured by them for a considerable period of time.⁵⁵ Nor when, after the first allotment, third parties have acted in good faith with reference thereto, and would be damaged by a reallocation.⁵⁶

g. Review. Upon appeal from the officer making the original allotment, the entire case is brought before the appellate tribunal, and either party may raise any objection or make any motion or amendment which would be permissible in appealed cases.⁵⁷ The question of value has been held triable de novo upon appeal,⁵⁸ as is also the fact whether the claimant is in good faith the head of a family, and whether the alleged members are legitimately such.⁵⁹ One complaining of the allotment of a part of premises as a homestead should not move for a new trial, but appeal from the judgment confirming the commissioners' report.⁶⁰

8. TIME OF ACQUISITION OF HOMESTEAD— a. In General. The exact time at which the exemption attaches to premises depends upon what is sufficient to constitute a homestead in the particular jurisdiction. Generally, whenever the property is dedicated in the manner prescribed or contemplated by law, it is exempt; even though it be after levy, provided it is before forced sale.⁶¹ Where the filing and recording of a declaration is necessary, the homestead character dates from the due performance of these acts.⁶² And where mere occupation of the land is sufficient, it will be deemed to have begun when the household furniture is moved into the house with an intent to equip it as the owner's home.⁶³ Even intended occupancy, if clearly evidenced by acts of the owner, may impress

§ 473, to vacate or modify an order in probate setting apart a homestead. Cahill v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 145 Cal. 42, 78 Pac. 467. An appeal to the superior court from a judgment of an ordinary, on an application to set aside a homestead, lies only where the objections interposed by creditors of the applicant are those provided for by Civ. this character upon the premises,⁶⁴ especially where the land is purchased for a homestead.⁶⁵

b. Acquisition of Title. If the householder be actually occupying the premises as his home, when he acquires title thereto, his right of exemption usually arises at the moment title vests;⁶⁶ but if he merely holds a bond for a deed and is not in possession the estate of homestead does not relate to the date of the bond, but begins when the deed is delivered.⁶⁷

c. Occupancy of Premises and Record of Title. It is not always necessary that occupation follow immediately after acquisition of title, but the premises become a homestead if purchased for that purpose and are occupied within a reasonable time.⁶⁸ Under some homestead laws, where the premises are acquired by deed, such deed must be registered in order to give a homestead character to the land,⁶⁹ and if the record is made before forced sale, the homestead is exempt,⁷⁰ especially where followed by actual occupation.⁷¹

9. CHANGE OF HOMESTEAD — a. In General. A change of homestead is permitted under some homestead acts, and upon sale of the premises their proceeds may be reinvested in a new homestead, which thereupon becomes exempt as was the former.⁷² But if the homestead has once been designated or set apart, a change cannot be effected if this would work a fraud upon the rights of third parties, as by invalidating security taken upon land which was not exempt when the security was given;⁷³ nor can the head of a family designate as his homestead a tract wholly disconnected from the actual residence and not used for homestead purposes and thereby renounce the real home place.⁷⁴ But recitals in the declaration of home-

74. Recitals held insufficient.—A mortgage of premises, stating "the residence" is located upon them, does not describe a homestead. Goodloe v. Dean, 81 Ala. 479, 8 So. 197. So reference contained in a deed, to a "garden" upon the land is not a sufficient description of a homestead. McLane v. Pas-

stead are not proof of the facts recited.⁷⁵ Value may be inquired into, where exceptions to the report of commissioners have been filed.⁷⁶

b. Right to Additional Homestead. Unless the homestead laws provide for the taking of an additional homestead, a second selection is not permitted;⁷⁷ nor in any event will a debtor be allowed to secure a new exemption by assailing the validity of a former one, where he has squandered the property previously set off to him.⁷⁸

10. EVIDENCE OF ACQUISITION AND ESTABLISHMENT — a. Admissibility of Evidence. Citizenship, ownership of land, and residence usually involve the question of intention upon the part of one who claims homestead rights. Hence they may be determined by the actions⁷⁹ and declarations⁸⁰ of the claimant and the circumstances under which the occupation of the land occurs.⁸¹

b. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. The burden of proof is upon the party claiming that certain premises constitute and were duly set apart as a homestead.⁸² It is to be presumed, however, in favor of such claim, that the court which took cognizance of the original proceedings had jurisdiction, where the homestead rights are collaterally attacked after the lapse of a considerable time.⁸³ Likewise it will be presumed in favor of the claimant that all of the building occupied as a home constitutes the homestead, unless it be proved that a portion of it has not that legal character;⁸⁴ and that the legal subdivision of land, on which the dwelling-house stands, and which equals the statutory measure of the homestead right, has been selected by the owner as his homestead.⁸⁵ It will also be presumed that the husband of the claimant consents to her application where only his creditors object.⁸⁶

c. Weight and Sufficiency. Aside from such presumptions, the evidence sufficient to establish a homestead may consist of the declarations of the claimant, indicating his intention when purchasing or occupying the land;⁸⁷ but they are not conclusive for or against the claim of homestead.⁸⁸ So the actual use of premises for the convenience of his family,⁸⁹ or his acts indicating an intention to constitute it his domestic or business homestead,⁹⁰ may be sufficient evidence to establish a homestead. The homestead character may also be shown by recitals in deeds or mortgages of the land, if such references are sufficiently clear.⁹¹ Leasing the original premises may indicate an intention to change the homestead.⁹²

A short residence upon land may or may not be enough to constitute it a homestead,

D. Property Constituting Homestead⁹³—1. NATURE AND CHARACTER—a. In General. The right of homestead is incidental to an interest in land rather than to buildings located thereon and considered apart from the soil;⁹⁴ but it attaches to the structure erected upon premises which are exempt and to fixtures firmly annexed to the realty.⁹⁵ It does not attach to chattels not affixed to the freehold.⁹⁶

b. Rural or Urban Homestead. Homestead statutes ordinarily provide for exemption of limited tracts within an incorporated town or city, or unincorporated village, and of more extensive parcels outside such limits. The latter, as rural property, may include lands situated on the outskirts of the town or city, if not within its proper boundaries,⁹⁷ especially if not laid off into blocks and streets and if used for agricultural purposes.⁹⁸ But the platting of land, situated outside of a municipality for partition only, will not render it urban property;⁹⁹ nor will the platting of such land by the owner into lots and blocks change its character where there is no dedication and acceptance or incorporation.¹ Neither will the division of land (located within the municipal limits) for rural or agricultural purposes only render it urban property.² Where the portion of land actually resided upon is without the town or city, but another part of the same tract is within the municipal limits, only the portion resided upon is exempt;³ and if the residential lot is within and the owner's adjoining tract without, the corporate limits, it is held the former only is exempt.⁴ Land is deemed to be urban when it lies within the boundaries of the village, town, or city, and is laid off into separate lots and blocks;⁵ but laying off into blocks and lots is necessary to give the property this character.⁶

c. Necessity of Use For Residential Purposes. The object of homestead exemption being to encourage citizens in acquiring their own homes, it is generally required that the premises claimed as exempt shall be used for residential purposes.⁷ Hence, where the debtor owns premises which include his dwelling and a business block, he cannot reject part of the dwelling in order to include the block.⁸ And a church pew cannot be claimed as exempt by the head of a family which occupies it;⁹ but it makes no difference who holds the title to the land, whether the husband or the wife, provided it be the family residence.¹⁰

d. Manner of Acquisition as Affecting Right to Homestead. Where the title to homestead property has its inception in fraud, the offending party can acquire no rights therein, paramount to those of persons whom he has defrauded.¹¹ Hence there is no exemption secured for land wrongfully purchased by a guardian with his ward's funds,¹² by a partner with misappropriated assets of the firm,¹³ by an administrator who fraudulently misapplies moneys of the estate,¹⁴ or by an insolvent debtor who, to avoid creditors then pressing him, exchanges personal property for real estate and claims the latter as exempt.¹⁵ But if the debtor, knowing his insolvency, merely buys real estate with proceeds of non-exempt assets, he may still claim his exemption.¹⁶ And if one has been in adverse possession of land for the statutory period of limitation, he acquires such a title as will support the homestead claim.¹⁷

2. AMOUNT AND EXTENT¹⁸—a. In General. The extent of the homestead is usually fixed by statute, although the quantity differs widely in the various states. The amount specified cannot be exceeded,¹⁹ but it is frequently made to vary according to the value of the tract,²⁰ or the number of the children of the debtor.²¹ If more land than is allowed by law is occupied and claimed as a homestead, this fact does not render the whole tract subject to execution, but the excess, if severable, may be sold.²²

b. In City, Town, or Village. Where a town or city lot is exempted, it has been held to embrace the actual lot or parcel of ground on which the debtor resides, whether including one or more lots according to the recorded plat and survey.²³ The proper extent of the lot may be determined by comparison with other platted portions of the town or city.²⁴ In ascertaining the quantity of homestead land, portions of the tract dedicated for use as public highways are not included, although the fee remains in the debtor.²⁵

c. Effect of Incorporation or Extension of City, Town, or Village. Where a rural homestead has been properly obtained and thereafter the limits of a neighboring city, town, or village are extended without the owner's consent so as to include it, the owner's right of homestead is not reduced from that of a rural to that of an urban homestead, where the land so claimed continues to be used for rural purposes,²⁶ unless the character of the property becomes or is changed either by the owner or the city or town from a rural to an urban property,²⁷ as by its being platted into town lots or blocks.²⁸ But the mere laying out or platting of

3. VALUE ³⁰—a. In General. Constitutional or statutory provisions fixing the value of homesteads generally are construed to apply alike to those which are rural or urban,³¹ and the exemption within the limits of the value specified is complete, unless the maximum quantity of land is indicated by the homestead law.³² If the lot on which the homestead is located equals or exceeds in value the sum allowed by statute, an adjoining lot, used in connection with the former, cannot be included in the exemption,³³ nor can two half lots be claimed by the debtor, where one of them exceeds in value the sum exempted by law.³⁴

b. Property in Excess of Statutory Value. Where the premises occupied as a homestead exceed the statutory value, exemption can be claimed only to such value, and all the excess is subject to levy and sale on execution;³⁵ and no exemption can be claimed in severable parts of the tract or lot occupied as a homestead, but which are in excess of the value allowed by statute.³⁶ If the property is subject to division it may be reduced in quantity so as to bring it within the required value, provided it can be so reduced as to leave a homestead consisting of the

A plat by a county auditor for taxation is not a city plat so as to render applicable the limitation of a city homestead. Foster v. Rice, 125 Iowa 190, 101 N. W. 771; Parrott v. Thiel, 117 Iowa 392, 90 N. W. 745.

It is not necessary that land should have been originally surveyed or platted by the city to constitute it urban property, but it is sufficient that the land is recognized as a part of the plat or plan, and it is unimportant that the lots of which it is composed do not conform to the dimensions or shape of lots generally in the platted part of the city where its use, controlled by the city and surroundings, impress the property with the urban character; and hence a contention, in a suit by the owner to enjoin the sale of such property on execution, that such lot constituted a part of a rural homestead is untenable. dwelling-house with the outbuildings and appurtenances necessary to its ordinary use as such.³⁷ But where the property has been reduced as far as it is possible and still exceeds the statutory value, in some jurisdictions, no exemption can be claimed;³⁸ but in other jurisdictions the premises can be sold only upon paying to the owner the amount of his statutory exemption,³⁹ or the whole premises may be sold and the proceeds distributed in the manner prescribed by statute.⁴⁰

c. Effect of Increase or Depreciation in Value. An increase in the value of a homestead, occurring after the latter is set apart, will in some jurisdictions operate to deprive the owner of his exemption in the excess, where such increase renders the premises of greater value than is protected by the statute,⁴¹ although the contrary doctrine is maintained in other states.⁴² Hence, under the former doctrine, where the debtor, after securing the allotment of a homestead, erects buildings thereon, greatly increasing its value, beyond the constitutional limit, he cannot claim the whole as exempt.⁴³ Nor can the owner of a homestead of the maximum value buy adjacent lots and thereby increase his exemption.⁴⁴ But if the homestead, when set apart, is of less value than the maximum allowed by law, other land may be added to it and become exempt if the statutory limit is not thus exceeded.⁴⁵ But this is not permitted, if in the meantime the original homestead tract has appreciated in value to the constitutional limit of exemption.⁴⁶

d. Determination of Value. The exemption is determined by the value at the time the homestead claim is tried, rather than at the time of levy and filing of the exemption claim.⁴⁷ In ascertaining the value of premises claimed as a homestead, legal encumbrances are to be deducted.⁴⁸ If there be improvements upon the land, their value is to be considered, as the homestead statutes do not contemplate an exemption of land to the maximum value and also the buildings thereon.⁴⁹ If the premises be held by husband and wife, as tenants in common, the interests of both will be considered in arriving at the value of the husband's exemption; ⁵⁰ according to some decisions, where the right of the debtor in his lands is only a life-estate, the market value of the fee simple is estimated in setting aside the homestead and not merely the value of the life-estate; ⁵¹ others, however, hold that the exemption is determined not from the value of the fee-simple title but from the value of the claimant's interest in the premises.⁵²

4. FORM AND PHYSICAL CHARACTERISTICS — a. In General. As homestead statutes usually exempt the lot of ground, with the buildings thereon, occupied by the debtor as a residence, no claim can be made if the land is unimproved,⁵³ although the claimant has made preparations for building and has filed and recorded a statement claiming the land as a homestead.⁵⁴ And in no case will the debtor be permitted to select the homestead in an arbitrary manner, without benefit to himself and occasioning loss to his creditors.⁵⁵ "A homestead cannot be laid off in an arbitrary, capricious, and unreasonable shape, where it is practicable to do otherwise."⁵⁶

b. Government Subdivisions. The debtor is not required to select his homestead with reference to governmental or legal surveys, but may claim the quantity allowed by law, from such portion of the tract as includes his dwelling, provided the selected portion is of a reasonable shape.⁵⁷ The government surveys are not of controlling importance.⁵⁸ exceeding in extent and value the limit fixed by constitutional or statutory provisions may be selected as a homestead;⁵⁹ but there is a divergence of view as to whether the homestead may consist of separate parcels of land. In some jurisdictions it is well settled that the exempted premises must comprise contiguous tracts,⁶⁰ and it is immaterial that the ownership of one of them may be convenient for the proeuring of articles such as fuel and timber essential to the enjoyment of the other upon which the dwelling is situated.⁶¹ In others the view is taken that several tracts or lots may be so connected in their particular use and appropriation as to be exempted as a homestead, although they are not contiguous.⁶² If the parcels are not used in connection with each other, it is obvious that they cannot both constitute the homestead,⁶³ and in any event a capricious and

W. 143), they may be claimed as a single homestead. And a small piece of land on which hay is cut for a cow, kept at the house where a man lives, may be regarded as a part of his homestead, although the land is separate from the house, and a mile distant, providing that the house and the land together do not exceed five hundred dollars in value, and the land is used in connection with the house to furnish necessary feed for the cow. *Buxton v. W. 905], business homestead, holding that if the lots are separate, a mere intent, unaccompanied by acts, to occupy the distant tract, will not make it part of the homestead.

unwarrantable selection of non-contiguous tracts is not permitted. The selection must be reasonable and not purely arbitrary.⁶⁴

(II) URBAN HOMESTEAD. When a homestead is claimed in a city or town, two or more adjoining lots, as designated in the plat of the city, may be exempt, if occupied as a homestead and not exceeding the value prescribed by statute;⁶⁵ and in some jurisdictions the rule has sometimes been extended to include parcels not contiguous or separated from the home lot by streets and alleys, if used in connection with the homestead.⁶⁶ If not used in connection with the residence lot, the separate parcel is not a portion of the homestead.⁶⁷ And on the other hand if the residence is urban distant rural land cannot be included in the exemption.⁶⁸ Where homestead privileges attach to business premises, the urban homestead may include the family residence and contiguous or distant lots used by the head of the family for business purposes.⁶⁹ But if the debtor resides at a homestead outside the town he cannot exempt his place of business within the town, not contiguous to the rural property.⁷⁰

d. Part of Lot, Tract, or Building. If a portion of the lot, tract, or building is devoted to other than homestead purposes, such portion may thereby lose its homestead character;⁷¹ but the use to which the property is put need be only partially and not exclusively a residential one to render it exempt.⁷²

e. Appurtenances. A homestead includes not only the dwelling-house but also those appurtenances which are necessary or convenient for family use.⁷³

Such appurtenances may consist of separate buildings,⁷⁴ stables and outhouses,⁷⁵ parcels of land conveniently used in connection with the dwelling,⁷⁶ fixtures firmly annexed to the soil,⁷⁷ easements,⁷⁸ and a family orchard.⁷⁹ They will not include a building used for a storehouse and an occasional working place,⁸⁰ woodland not adjoining the home tract from which the debtor obtains fuel,⁸¹ a grist-mill, not inclosed with the main homestead,⁸² nor a stable used in carrying on the business of a hotel where the homestead is established in the hotel.⁸³

f. Improvements, Additions, and Materials Therefor. The claimant may not ordinarily purchase lots distinct from the homestead tract, from fear of their being used for purposes detrimental to his homestead, and thus render them exempt; but he may so purchase a fraction of the lot on which the homestead is located;⁸⁴ so he cannot build an unnecessary addition to his residence and claim it and the ground upon which it stands as a part of his homestead, where such addition is practically an independent structure and might be detached without interfering with the use of the homestead.⁸⁵ If he purchases materials designed to be used in erecting or repairing his dwelling-house, these are exempt if the residence itself would be.⁸⁶ If the statute gives an exemption of a stated amount, excluding improvements, the homestead may be increased in value to an unlimited extent by subsequent improvements.⁸⁷ An addition to the homestead, purchased partly with profits from the homestead itself and partly with other funds, may be equitably apportioned so as to exempt the part represented by the former funds.⁸⁸

5. RENTS AND PROFITS, PRODUCTS AND PROCEEDS OF HOMESTEAD — a. Rents and Profits. Rents and profits arising from the homestead estate, so long as it retains its character as such, are held to be exempt, inasmuch as the right of the homesteader is not limited to mere occupancy, but extends to using the premises for profit as well as residence.⁸⁹ Thus the exemption has been held to apply to rent

c. Proceeds of Voluntary Sale, Exchange, or Mortgage — (1) SALE. There is a great diversity of holding in respect to the effect of a voluntary sale of the homestead and in respect to the proceeds of the sale, and this is in a large measure due to the difference in the wording of the statutes. tary sale are exempt under all circumstances; the exemption is in no way dependent upon the vendor continuing to be a housekeeper, nor upon his intention to acquire another homestead, nor upon the intent with which he keeps the proceeds.² Under the statutes of many states if the sale is made for the bona fide purpose of purchasing another homestead, the proceeds, whether moneys paid or due the debtor, are protected from the claims of creditors, at least for a reasonable time after the sale.³ Under these statutes the money arising from the sale of a homestead is not exempt unless the sale was in pursuance of a design to purchase another homestead.⁴ And as the matter of intention lies peculiarly within the knowledge of the debtor, the burden of proof of intent to reinvest in another homestead is on him.⁵ This intent should be formed at or before the time of the sale.⁶ Some of the statutes fix the period within which investment in a new homestead must be made.⁷ If no term is fixed by statute for reinvestment, a reasonable time will be allowed;⁸ and what will be a reasonable time must depend upon the facts of each particular case.⁹ Where the statute authorizes an entire

In Kentucky the decisions are apparently in conflict. To the extent that proceeds of a sale made with intent to reinvest in another homestead are exempt, the decisions agree (Cooper v. Arnett, 95 Ky. 603, 26 S. W. 811, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 145; Lee v. Hughes, 77 S. W. 386, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1201); and some decisions hold that the proceeds to be exempt must be invested in another homestead, or in other exempt property (Lear v. Totten, 14 Bush 101. And see Fitch v. Duckwell, 78 S. W. 185, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1535, holding that a homestead may not be sold, the proceeds invested in personalty and used in trading for a definite time and then invested in another homestead, exempt from antecedent debts). Other decisions seem to hold without qualification that the proceeds of a voluntary conveyance of a homestead are exempt (Morrow v. Bailey, 109 Ky. 359, 59 S. W. 2, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 861, 95 Am. St. Rep. 382; Huntington Bank v. Bowers, 58 S. W. 418, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 497; Maynard v. May, 11 S. W. 806, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 166; King v. Tompkins, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 29. See also Lee v. Hughes, 77 S. Gravitt*, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 534).

change of homestead by the owner, the exemption is not lost because of the debtor's intention to invest the proceeds in another state.¹⁰ Under the statutes of one state, proceeds of the sale of a homestead are protected absolutely for a certain period after the sale.¹¹ No condition attaches to this exemption, not even that the sale should be made for the purpose of investing in another homestead.¹² The statutes do not apply where the conveyance is in effect a gift, although for an expressed consideration and there are no proceeds to be exempted.¹³

(ii) MORTGAGE. Money received by the wife as proceeds of a mortgage upon a homestead cannot be reached by the husband's creditors.¹⁴

(iii) EXCHANGE. Where an exchange of real estate is made, and either of the parties is entitled to a homestead in the property, the same right attaches to the premises received in exchange,¹⁵ and the death of the homesteader before carrying out his intention to occupy the new home does not prevent the homestead right from attaching.¹⁶ But where the debtor removes from the homestead upon other land which he intends buying, and exchanges the original homestead for a house and lot which he proposes to use in raising money to pay for the homestead, the latter house and lot are not exempt.¹⁷

d. Proceeds of Involuntary Conversion. The right of homestead exemption attaches to proceeds arising from an involuntary disposition or conversion of the homestead property;¹⁸ including a judgment for damages to the land,¹⁹ such as damages for a right of way over the homestead²⁰ or proceeds of a sale on partition.²¹ The surplus proceeds arising from a forced sale are exempt from seiz-

Investment in a new homestead eight months after the sale of the prior homestead, and the fact that the husband dies during the meantime, does not take away the exempt character of the proceeds so as to deprive the widow of investing the same in a house for herself and children. *Schuttloffel v. W. 45, holding that a statute which provides that the exemption of a debtor's homestead shall not be impaired by a sale thereof, but "shall extend to proceeds derived from such sale, while held with the intention to procure another homestead therewith, for a period not exceeding two years," does not require, as a condition of such exemption, that the debtor shall continue to reside in this state during the two years, nor that he shall intend to procure another homestead in this state.

ure by creditors,²² provided, under some statutes, the debtor intends to use such surplus in redeeming the homestead or in purchasing another.²³ Without such intention he is only entitled to the claim under the statute exempting personalty.²⁴

e. Proceeds of Insurance. Since the homestead statutes are to be liberally construed, it follows that funds realized from the insurance of the exempt premises are themselves exempt, as they do not represent a mere personal contract of indemnity, but the homestead itself.²⁵ And an assignment of the policy for the purpose of collection and under an agreement that the assignee should apply part of the sum collected on a debt due from the insured does not destroy the exempt character of the balance.²⁶

f. Property Purchased With Proceeds of Sale — (1) IN GENERAL. The owner of a homestead may, under some statutes, sell it, reinvesting the proceeds in a new residence; and the statutory exemption will thereupon attach to the last in the same degree that it did to the first homestead.²⁷ Nor will the debtor's

Lot purchased during time when proceeds exempt.—Where a statute protects the proceeds of a sale for a limited period, and the same are during that period invested in a privilege be defeated even though the new homestead be taken in the name of his wife,²³ or in the joint names of wife and husband.²⁹ If, however, the proceeds are invested in property which is subject to execution they are not protected,³⁰ for this would virtually enlarge the exemption given by law.³¹ So they are not protected if derived from land owned merely in connection with the old homestead tract,³² nor where they are put to some intervening use before investment thereof in a new homestead.³³ It has also been held that property purchased with money borrowed on security of a homestead is not exempt as a homestead, within statutes permitting change of homestead by a sale and reinvestment.³⁴

(II) PROPERTY PURCHASED WITH PROCEEDS OF HOMESTEAD SOLD IN A FOREIGN STATE. If a homestead be sold and the proceeds invested in a home located in another state, and thereafter the latter homestead is also sold and the proceeds reinvested in the first state, the last residence is not exempt as to debts contracted prior to its purchase, since the fund loses its distinctive character when carried beyond the first state and invested in another jurisdiction.³⁵

6. OWNERSHIP, ESTATE, AND INTEREST IN PROPERTY³⁶ — a. In General. The homestead acts usually extend the right of exemption to the owner of the premises. Yet the purpose of the law is not to make the homestead privilege depend upon absolute ownership, but rather upon occupancy, coupled with some right or estate of the debtor in the property.³⁷ The title or tenure by which the land is held is usually deemed unimportant in contests between the claimant and his creditors.³⁸ While according to the weight of authority there must be an interest in the land and not a mere possession,³⁹ the title or interest may be either legal or equitable,⁴⁰ and its extent is immaterial, whether for years, for life, or in fee,⁴¹ for the law lot, it may be selected as a homestead, although not resided upon at the time of the levy thereon. Prugh v. Portsmouth Sav. Bank, 48 Nebr. 414, 67 N. W. 309.

protects every estate which could be seized and sold on execution, if the premises were not occupied as a homestead.⁴² So it is not necessary that the interest be assignable,⁴³ nor is it necessary that the debtor be the sole owner of the premises.⁴⁴

b. Sufficiency of Mere Possession of Property. Occupancy of premises by a debtor, although he claims them as a homestead, will give him no rights as against either the holder of a paramount title, or one who would otherwise be entitled to possession.⁴⁵ So according to the weight of authority such occupancy gives him no right of homestead as against creditors,⁴⁶ although the contrary view is maintained in some jurisdictions.⁴⁷ No ease, however, has gone to the extent of holding that a homestead right even inchoately can attach to premises in which the occupant neither owned nor claimed to own any right or interest.⁴⁸

c. Property Held Under Contract to Purchase. As against creditors other than the vendor, the homestead exemption extends to lands agreed to be purchased by the debtor, and which are in his use and occupation as a residence, although the contract provides that the legal title shall remain in the vendor until the purchase-money is fully paid, and the purchaser has not yet paid the entire amount due.⁴⁹ This right cannot be defeated by creditors paying the balance due to the vendor;⁵⁰ but it may be lost by a forfeiture of the vendee's rights under the contract of purchase and ejectment for failure to make the several payments stipulated in the agreement,⁵¹ or by an abandonment of the contract of purchase.⁵²

d. Property Held by Different Titles. The circumstance that various portions of the premises are held under different titles will not prevent the acquisition of a homestead in the entire tract.⁵³ Hence if a part of the land is owned in fee and another part is held under a lease,⁵⁴ if part is owned in fee and part is held under contract of purchase,⁵⁵ if part is owned by the husband and the rest by his wife, where the statute allows a homestead to be claimed in the land of either,⁵⁶ or if the equitable interest is in the husband and the wife holds the legal title,⁵⁷ the exemption may attach to the entire tract.

e. Future or Contingent Estates. The interest in land sufficient to carry with it the privilege of exemption must be such as involves a present right of occupancy. Future estates therefore, whether vested or contingent, will not support the claim;⁵⁸ yet when the particular estate is determined, and the remainder-man is entitled to immediate possession, he may claim his homestead ing homestead rights in property held jointly or in common. In many jurisdictions a cotenant may acquire a homestead in premises actually occupied by him as a place of residence, since the policy of the exemption law, liberally construed, is deemed to be to protect the debtor and his family in their possession of a home, irrespective of the character or extent of the estate owned by the debtor, provided he be not a mere intruder.⁷⁰ This doctrine is held especially applicable where the tenants in common are husband and wife.⁷¹ As between the respective cotenants, neither can obtain a paramount right to the premises by occupying and claiming them as a homestead.⁷²

(II) VIEW THAT HOMESTEAD CANNOT BE ACQUIRED. In some jurisdictions the exemption contemplated is of property to which the debtor has an exclusive right, and which could be set off to him by ascertained boundaries, and a cotenant has no right to homestead in property held jointly or in common.⁷³ It has been held that this is so even in case of a tenant holding and claiming the entire estate.⁷⁴ On partition of the premises the debtor cannot claim a homestead in the part assigned to him in severalty, unless he resided upon it after such partition; his prior occupancy being insufficient to give him the exemption.⁷⁵

i. Partnership Property. By the decided weight of authority a homestead right cannot be claimed in partnership property as against firm creditors or other partners until all the firm debts have been paid,⁷⁶ and thus it has been held especially true after the property has been seized or assigned to satisfy firm debts.⁷⁷ In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that a homestead may be lawfully assigned to a partner out of partnership property even as against firm creditors.⁷⁸ In one jurisdiction it has been held that where a firm dissolves and all the firm interests and liabilities are acquired by a single member, he is entitled

j. Property in Which Wife Has Title, or Wife's Separate Estate. A husband is entitled to homestead in property, title to which is in his wife's name, but for which he has paid,⁸⁰ especially where she executes an agreement to hold the land subject to his disposal.⁸¹ So in many jurisdictions it is held that the husband is entitled to a homestead in the wife's separate property if it be the family residence and conforms in other respects to the requirements prescribed by statute.⁸² In other jurisdictions, however, the contrary view is maintained.⁸³ So under the statutes of some states, the wife is entitled to a homestead in her separate property;⁸⁴ but in other jurisdictions her right to homestead is denied.⁸⁵

Adjoining tracts owned separately by husband and wife.—In Alabama where the family homestead is on the land of the wife, less in quantity than is allowed by statute, the husband cannot assert a right of homestead in an adjoining tract belonging to himself, part of which he cultivates, the two tracts together containing more than the statutory limit. Beard v. Johnson, 87 Ala. 729, 6 So. 383, based on the view that there cannot be at one and the same time two separate valid homestead claims, one by the husband and the other by the wife. But in Mississippi it has been held that exemption may consist of two adjoining tracts, one of which is owned by the husband and the other by the wife, if occupied by them as a homestead, and not exceeding the statutory limit as to value. Powers v. Sample, 69 Miss. 67, 12 So. 337.

partly from the wife's separate property;⁸⁷ and where a homestead on community property has been once lawfully claimed, it continues as such though the children have attained their majority and left the parental roof,⁸⁸ and in case of a divorce may be partitioned or set apart to one of the parties as common property.⁸⁹ If a declaration of homestead from community property is filed subsequently to a mortgage thereof it is subject to the mortgage,⁹⁰ unless because of error in description the homestead property is not covered thereby.⁹¹

1. Property Acquired by Adverse Possession. Where title to property has been acquired by adverse possession the owner is entitled to a homestead in the property the same as if title had been acquired by deed,⁹² but no homestead rights can attach to property which has not been adversely held for the statutory period, in jurisdictions where possession gives no right of homestead.⁹³

m. Property Held in Trust. Where a party holds a mere naked legal title in land in trust for another he has no interest therein in which the right to a homestead will attach,⁹⁴ especially where the cestui que trust is in the actual possession thereof.⁹⁵ So in case of a resulting trust, where the nominal grantee holds land for the use of the real owner, it is impossible for the trustee to acquire any homestead rights unencumbered by the trust.⁹⁶ But inasmuch as an equitable title to property may be sufficient on which to base a homestead right in the owner thereof, a cestui que trust who occupies his property is entitled to a homestead therein.⁹⁷

n. Equitable Estates and Interests—(1) IN GENERAL. Any equitable ownership or title, together with possession and occupancy as a home, is sufficient on which to base a homestead exemption.⁹⁸

Selection by husband after wife's death.—Under a statute permitting either the husband or wife to claim a homestead in the community property while both are living, and vesting it in the survivor on the death of either, it is the spirit and intention of the law that a husband may, after his wife's death, select a homestead from the community property for the benefit of himself and family. In re Feas, 30 Wash. 51, 70 Pac. 270.

E. Liabilities Enforceable Against the Homestead²—1. IN GENERAL. Homestead laws sometimes provide that certain classes of claims are enforceable against the homestead. These are frequently determined either by the time when³ or the manner in which they are contracted.⁴ Independently of such exceptions, if the claim be one which is peculiarly a just charge against the homestead, it is sometimes allowed to be enforced;⁵ but the exemption will as a rule apply to all debts not excepted by the statute.⁶ Since the general policy of the law is to exempt the homestead, exemption is the rule; liability the exception.⁷ And where the constitution provides for exemption from all debts, a statute excluding specified classes of debts is invalid.⁸

2. PREEXISTING LIABILITIES AND LIENS—a. Liabilities Existing Before Acquisition of Property—(i) IN GENERAL. According to the weight of authority, the homestead exemptions cannot be claimed as against debts or liens existing before the property was acquired.⁹ Especially is this the case where the liability is for

Rep. 62, holding that the right to the homestead exemption exists where the property was purchased by the debtor before the creation of the debt to which it is sought to subject it; and only such buildings or improvements can be subjected as were put upon it subsequent to the creation of the debt.

Tearing down an old building and erecting a new one, using a part of the old materials, is an "improvement," and debts contracted prior thereto are collectable as against the homestead upon which such erection was liability for debts contracted before they were made.¹⁴ And the same is the case where a building is erected under an agreement between the homesteader and the person building it that the latter could remove it at any time.¹⁵

(iii) PROPERTY ACQUIRED BY MARRIAGE, GIFT, DESCENT, OR DEVISE. A debtor is under some statutes entitled to hold property acquired by descent or devise, and occupied by him as a homestead, free from his debts whether contracted prior or subsequent to its acquisition,¹⁶ and a homestead acquired by a debtor through marriage has been held to be protected against his debts, contracted before or after it was obtained.¹⁷

(iv) DEBTS AND LIENS PRIOR TO CHANGE OF HOMESTEAD. If a debtor may, under the homestead statute, exchange his homestead for another, the latter is not subject to general debts existing prior to its acquisition, if it be purchased with proceeds from the sale of the former homestead.¹⁸ The rule, however, has no application in respect of a homestead purchased with the proceeds of a prior homestead where such proceeds have been subjected to an intervening use,¹⁹ nor to a homestead purchased in another state.²⁰ Likewise the homestead will be liable for purchase-money unpaid upon the former homestead.²¹ And it has been held that if the debtor owns two parcels of land, one of which he claims as a homestead, but subsequently removes to the other, which he thereafter occupies as his home, the latter is not exempt from debts chargeable against it before it became a homestead.²²

(v) CHANGE OF FORM OF LIABILITY. A mere change in the form of a preëxisting liability will not enable the debtor to secure an exemption in land acquired before such change occurred;²³ but if a new obligation is created, an exemption may be claimed against it, in land then occupied as a homestead.²⁴

b. Liabilities Existing Before Establishment of Homestead—(i) IN GENERAL. The weight of authority is to the effect that a lien or liability chargeable against property before a homestead therein has been formally established will not be defeated by the debtor subsequently claiming that the premises are his home. This has been held both where the land has been subjected to a specific lien,²⁵ and where there is a general obligation existing prior to establishment of the homestead right.²⁶

(ii) BEFORE OCCUPANCY. Occupancy being usually required before the homestead privilege attaches,²⁷ if the premises are not actually resided upon at the time of levy they cannot be claimed as exempt.²⁸ This rule has been applied when the judgment creditor commences proceedings to subject the land to his debt,²⁹ or when the land is subject to the lien of a judgment,³⁰ mortgage,³¹ or other lien,³² prior to occupancy, or where a general claim exists in favor of a creditor before residence has begun.³³

(iii) MORTGAGE OR CONVEYANCE AS SECURITY, BEFORE ESTABLISHMENT. A debtor, by executing a mortgage upon real estate in which he has previously established no homestead rights, thereby prevents the assertion of such rights as against the mortgagee,³⁴ whether there be in the mortgage an express waiver of homestead privileges³⁵ or not.³⁶ Even though the mortgage be executed after the premises become a homestead, if it does not create a new, but only changes the form of a prior lien, no exemption exists.³⁷ A conveyance in trust to secure a debt is governed by the same rules as is a mortgage.³⁸

(iv) BEFORE DEBTOR HAS ACQUIRED PERSONAL STATUS ENTITLING HIM TO CLAIM. According to the weight of authority no homestead can be claimed if, at the time a lien attaches to the land, the debtor was not entitled to an exemption because he had not acquired the personal status giving him the privilege;³⁹ but this rule is not universally followed and the contrary view is maintained in some jurisdictions.⁴⁰

(v) BEFORE FILING OF DECLARATION OR CERTIFICATE. In jurisdictions where the filing and recording of a declaration of homestead is required, the exemption may be claimed, provided the declaration is registered prior to the attachment of the lien in question;⁴¹ but if the attachment of the lien antedated the filing of the declaration of exemption the premises may be sold to discharge the lien;⁴² and the same rule obtains as to debts contracted before registry of the declaration, although no judgment was rendered until thereafter.⁴³

(vi) BEFORE SELECTION OR SETTING APART. When premises have become encumbered by liens before they are set off or selected by the debtor as his homestead, their subsequent assignment to him under the homestead statutes will not defeat the liens,⁴⁴ and in one jurisdiction the allotment must be made before the debt is contracted or there can be no exemption.⁴⁵

3. PURCHASE-MONEY AND LIEN OR MORTGAGE THEREFOR⁴⁶—a. conveyance of land be the purchaser's agreement to pay a debt of the vendor to a third person, the latter may enforce his rights in preference to the homestead claim.⁵³ And it has been held that if, after sale of the property, the vendor transfers his claim for purchase-money to a third party, such assignee may satisfy his debt out of the land, although it be claimed as a homestead.⁵⁴

b. Purchase-Price of Other Property. If the homestead consists of a number of parcels of land, and the purchase-price of one is not paid, that part alone is subject to the debt.⁵⁵ But if the debtor has paid a part of the purchase-money for the entire tract and a part of the purchase-price remains unpaid, no homestead in any parcel of the premises can be claimed as against the vendor until full payment is made for the whole.⁵⁶

c. Money Borrowed to Pay Purchase-Price. There is a difference of opinion as to whether a homestead is subject to a debt incurred by procuring money for its purchase. It is held in many jurisdictions that under the doctrine of subrogation the lender acquires the rights of the vendor when he advances money to the debtor specifically for the purchase of the premises;⁵⁷ but the money must be borrowed for that purpose. The mere fact that borrowed money is subsequently can be enforced against the homestead but not a purchase-money mortgage, which is not recorded before filing a declaration of homestead); *Thurston v. invested in a homestead will not give the lender any lien on the premises.⁵⁸ In other jurisdictions the courts construe the term "purchase-money" strictly, applying it only to the original obligation owing to the vendor and created by the purchase.⁵⁹

d. Payments Made by Third Person in Behalf of Debtor. Where a third person, at the instance of a purchaser of land, pays the contract price directly to the vendor, the debt thereby created is deemed to be for purchase-money, and no homestead rights of the vendee will take precedence over it.⁶⁰

e. Change in Form of Debt or Taking of Security. Land which has become subject to the payment of purchase-money continues chargeable therewith, although the original indebtedness is repeatedly changed in form, provided it can be traced.⁶¹ Hence if the original debt is evidenced by a note secured by indorsements⁶² or by mortgage,⁶³ or has been renewed by other notes, although for a different amount,⁶⁴ or with a different rate of interest,⁶⁵ or if the original or renewal note has been reduced to judgment,⁶⁶ the homestead remains liable for the payment of the purchase-money so evidenced. Where an overdraft on a bank has been canceled by a drawer who has deposited in his own name money held by him as treasurer of a school-district, but the depositor gives a note afterward for the money received thereby, the bank cannot enforce a judgment thereon against the depositor's homestead, purchased with money procured by the overdraft on the ground that the debt was contracted by the purchase-money.⁶⁷

vision of homestead laws is that no exemption can be secured against debts created in the improvement of the homestead,⁶⁵ such as debts or obligations incurred in the erection of buildings and other improvements of a substantial nature, upon the premises.⁷⁰ But it has been held that provisions of this nature ought to be strictly construed;⁷¹ and if the homestead laws contain no exceptions in favor of debts created in making improvements, the courts can make none.⁷² If the party furnishing the improvement agrees to consider it as personalty, although annexed to the homestead realty, he cannot subject the latter to his claim for the price.⁷³

b. Wages and Materials. In most jurisdictions it is also provided that a mechanic, laborer, or materialman shall have a lien upon the homestead for labor and materials furnished in improving it, provided he has perfected his obligation or lien in accordance with the statutory requirements,⁷⁴ unless the work be done

Reason for rule.—The purpose of the exception making a homestead liable for debts for the improvements, although not for debts generally, is that those who have furnished the materials and performed the labor may have their remedy upon the property they have in part created and enhanced by the construal of their labor and property. *Lewton v. or the materials furnished on the personal security of the debtor alone,⁷⁵ and the same liability has been enforced where there is such a debt unsecured by any lien,⁷⁶ although the contrary rule obtains in some states.⁷⁷ In some jurisdictions, where there is no mechanic's or materialman's lien, the debt must be created by a written contract,⁷⁸ and in others the debt must be within a specified amount.⁷⁹

c. Loans and Advances Used in Removing Encumbrances. Under the homestead laws of some states a loan or advance made to discharge the homestead from enforceable liens or encumbrances may be charged against the premises where the money is actually expended for that purpose.⁸⁰ But the mere fact that borrowed money was so used will not subrogate the lender to the rights of the encumbrancer, unless the funds were loaned for the discharge of the lien.⁸¹

the owner may convey the homestead property free from any lien against it on account of such judgment.⁹¹ In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that the judgment is a lien upon the property, but that there is no right of sale or enforcement as long as the property is owned and occupied as a homestead.⁹² But where the property is abandoned as a homestead whether by conveyance or otherwise, a judgment attaches if it did not previously do so, and becomes enforceable and takes precedence over subsequent encumbrances.⁹³

c. Judgments For Torts. Statutes frequently forbid a voluntary conveyance of the homestead, and are construed so as to prevent an involuntary alienation as well. Hence in some jurisdictions a homestead cannot be sold to satisfy a judgment in tort.⁹⁷ In other jurisdictions, owing perhaps to a difference in the wording of the constitutional and statutory provisions, a homestead exemption cannot be claimed when the judgment is for a tort.⁹⁸

7. MISCELLANEOUS CLAIMS ENFORCEABLE AGAINST HOMESTEAD — a. Debts Due For Necessaries. If the homestead acts subject the property to debts due for necessities, the latter are construed to include such supplies and services as were furnished the family in connection with the enjoyment of the premises, or the support of the family while residing thereon.⁹⁹ The term will not include the rent of a house and lot wholly disconnected from the homestead.¹ Nor a debt due a physician for services rendered a minor child of the homesteader.²

b. Expenses of Last Illness and Funeral. In the absence of a statute so providing, the expenses of the funeral and last illness of the owner of a homestead are not charges against the estate.³

c. Debts Incurred in a Fiduciary Capacity. Under the constitutional provisions of some states debts owing by agents, trustees, and other fiduciaries are enforceable against the homestead of the debtor;⁴ but if the debt has not been incurred while the debtor is acting in his fiduciary relation, it is not privileged.⁵

Use of ward's money to purchase land.—Independently of any special provision, it has been held that where a guardian has used his ward's money in paying for land occupied as a homestead, the ward's claim will be superior to the guardian's homestead right. *Gordon v. 5. Sanders v. Sanders, 56 Ark. 585, 20 S. W. 517.

d. Debts Contracted Through False Representations. The debtor who has rendered himself liable for the payment of money obtained by his fraudulent representations, or who has subjected himself to an action for fraud in the sale of property, cannot claim a homestead exemption acquired after the liability accrued as against such liability.⁶ Likewise the owner of land, making a colorable transfer to a grantee who obtains a loan secured by mortgage on the premises, is estopped to set up a homestead claim against the mortgage, the mortgagee not knowing the conveyance was simulated.⁷

e. Liabilities Enforceable Against Business Homestead. A business homestead is exempt from sale to pay debts incurred in the purchase of merchandise.⁸

8. PROCEEDINGS FOR ENFORCEMENT OF CLAIMS — a. In General. A creditor whose debt is collectable from the homestead must proceed to its enforcement according to the homestead law⁹ and the general statutes supplementary thereto.¹⁰ An execution sale upon a judgment rendered for an exempted debt passes no title.¹¹

b. Waiver or Forfeiture of Right to Enforce. The creditor whose claim is a lien against the home property waives his rights against it by agreeing to a reservation of the exemption by his debtor and participating in the proceeds from this or other of the debtor's property,¹² and a waiver may likewise occur where the creditor long neglects to pursue his remedy against the land and permits it to be set apart to the family of the debtor after the latter's death.¹³ But mere lapse of time short of the statutory period of limitation will not cause a forfeiture of the creditor's rights against the homestead.¹⁴ A mortgagee forfeits his rights under a sale of the homestead so long as he does not account for the surplus proceeds after discharging his mortgage debt.¹⁵ No waiver results from failure to reach or participate in the proceeds of other property belonging to the debtor.¹⁶

c. Conditions Precedent. Under certain of the homestead acts all non-exempt property of the debtor, both real and personal, must be exhausted before the homestead can be sold,¹⁷ but this is not necessary unless the statutes require

See 25 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homestead," § 167. Sale of both exempt and non-exempt property.—Where a debt is secured by a pledge of personalty and a mortgage of the homestead, upon foreclosure of the latter the court may, in the same suit, order the sale first of the property pledged and then a sale of the homestead. Blake v. McCosh, 91 Iowa 544, it.¹⁸ The other property thus referred to means such as still belongs to the debtor at the time of enforcing the claim, not that which he has conveyed away;¹⁹ and if a mortgaged homestead is conveyed to a third party by the debtor, who is also the mortgagor, it may be reached in the first instance by the mortgagee without exhausting other property which the debtor retains.²⁰ So if several tracts are mortgaged, and none of them was then the homestead, but one is afterward selected as such, the mortgagee need not exhaust those which are non-homestead lands before resorting to the home tract.²¹ If the debtor seeks to restrain the sale of the homestead upon the statutory grounds mentioned, he must show actual ownership of non-exempt property.²²

d. Jurisdiction. Where the homestead is subject to sale on final process, equity will not entertain an action to set aside a homestead allotment and to enforce a judgment against it, since the legal remedy is adequate.²³ Nor will equity interfere to set aside a decree of foreclosure against a homestead, where no objection to the enforcement of the mortgage is made in the foreclosure suit and no homestead rights appear therein.²⁴ The probate court has no jurisdiction over the homestead; hence a creditor holding a non-exempt claim may sue on it in a court of ordinary jurisdiction.²⁵

e. Parties. While it is held that the wife may intervene to protect her interest if the homestead is about to be taken on execution,²⁶ the authorities differ as to the necessity of making her a party to a proceeding to subject the homestead to a claim. Thus she has been held a necessary party upon foreclosure of a mortgage,²⁷ although the contrary view has also been maintained.²⁸ So she has been held a necessary party to a petition for partition, by cotenants of the husband to divide the estate and have certain claims of her husband made liens against the homestead,²⁹ and to an action to dissolve a partnership involving the question whether certain property is the homestead of one partner or partnership property.³⁰ On the other hand it is held that the wife need not be made a party to a suit in which the property claimed as homestead is attacked,³¹ nor to a bill by defendant against her husband to subject land claimed by him as his homestead to sale under execution.³²

f. Pleading. A creditor must allege and prove facts sufficient to entitle him to reach his debtor's homestead, stating the grounds of his claim, how the property is liable, and who are the parties interested as homesteaders.³³ If plaintiff relies upon an exception contained in the exemption law he must specially plead it,³⁴ and if the debtor bases his defense upon the general immunities granted by the Homestead Act, the creditor must reply with facts depriving defendant of its benefit.³⁵ Evidence of the homestead right is admissible under the general denial.³⁶ Where a bill to subject lands to a debt is taken pro confesso, the debtor may still claim his exemption, if the bill does not allege freedom from exemption.³⁷

g. Evidence. Where in an action to subject a homestead to a debt defendant seeks to take advantage of his homestead exemption, the burden of proof is upon him to show that the case is within the provisions of the statute giving him such right,³⁸ and he ordinarily makes out a prima facie defense under the statute by proof that he is a homesteader, the head of a family, owning and occupying as a residence the premises in question, at the time judgment was rendered against him, or the lien was acquired, and that the homestead right has not been released.³⁹ But when he has shown that he is prima facie entitled to the benefits of the statute, it is then incumbent upon the creditor or other person denying the homestead right to rebut such prima facie case by showing that the debt is one against which no exemption exists.⁴⁰

h. Judgment and Enforcement Thereof. A homestead liable to sale for claims against which no exemption exists may in some jurisdictions be sold unconditionally on general execution,⁴¹ although there is no evidence of record that the debt is within the exceptions contained in the statute.⁴² In other states the judgment⁴³ or the execution⁴⁴ should indicate that the debt is one against which no exemption exists. If the judgment includes both exempt and non-exempt claims, it must stand as a charge against the homestead only as to the latter.⁴⁵ In some jurisdictions if land including the homestead is sought to be sold on execution the writ must direct that other property also subject to sale shall be first disposed of.⁴⁶ An affidavit required by statute to be placed in the sheriff's hands before levy, specifying that the debtor's property is not exempt, is dispensed with where the verdict shows there is no exemption as to the premises in question and the judgment and execution direct their sale to satisfy the lien.⁴⁷ After recovery the enforcement of the judgment cannot be interfered with by a mere affidavit of illegality filed by the debtor's wife,⁴⁸ or by an affidavit filed by the debtor that to the best of his knowledge and belief he had paid the debt sought to be enforced.⁴⁹ A sheriff's sale, to satisfy a non-exempt debt, is not open to attack because the homestead was not platted by the sheriff before being sold.⁵⁰

If the judgment creditor could not proceed against the homestead during the debtor's life, he cannot proceed by execution against the debtor's heirs.⁵¹ The statute of limitations does not run against a judgment recovered against the owner of a homestead after there has been an actual allotment of homestead.⁵²

i. Application of Proceeds—(i) IN GENERAL. The rights of a debtor in the surplus proceeds of a sale of homestead property sold to satisfy liens existing prior to its acquisition must be determined upon the state of facts existing at the time the fund was finally disposed of.⁵³ If certain debts are charges against the homestead while others are not, the former share pro rata with all other debts in the surplus remaining after deducting the statutory exemption, and so far as concerns the unpaid balance of the non-exempt claims, they may come against the proceeds which represent the exemption.⁵⁴ But such part of the proceeds as remains after satisfying non-exempt claims will not be subject to general debts which are unenforceable against the homestead, if the debtor intends to use such surplus in redeeming his homestead or purchasing another.⁵⁵ Debts contracted before the enactment of the homestead law take precedence in distribution of proceeds over debts contracted after such enactment, although reduced to judgment before judgment is recovered on the old debts.⁵⁶

(ii) ALLOWANCES TO DEBTOR. Where it appears that the homestead premises are in excess of the statutory amount, that they are chargeable with the debt in question, and that it is impracticable to divide them so as to assign the homestead in the land itself, the sale of the whole tract may be ordered and an allowance of the statutory amount in lieu of homestead made to the owner out of the proceeds, irrespective of the rights of creditors whose claims are subject to the homestead exemption;⁵⁷ but after paying such of his debts as have precedence over his

In North Carolina the debtor may elect to have the fund, arising from sale of the excess of his land over the exemption, applied to payment of a homestead mortgage, in preference to prior judgments which, although constituting a lien upon it, do not subject it to sale. *Leak v. be invested under direction of court, and upon termination of the homestead right, will be applied on the judgment; the remainder of said amount, with accruing interest, being applied upon the mortgage debt. Vanstory v. Thornton, 112 N. C. 196, 17 S. E. 566, 34 Am. St. Rep. 483.

If different persons hold liens on different parts of the property and the whole is sold because indivisible, one part cannot be made to bear the entire burden which the homestead was under, but such burden must be homestead exemption.⁵⁸ The proceeds allotted in lieu of the homestead are subject to the same liabilities⁵⁹ and are usually protected to the same extent as was the original home tract.⁶⁰

(III) INVESTMENT OF PROCEEDS. In some jurisdictions the proceeds realized from the sale of a homestead may be reinvested under order of court in another homestead for the benefit of the debtor and his family, where it appears that he is insolvent,⁶¹ or in case of his death, for his widow and children.⁶² In North Carolina where a judgment debtor mortgages all of his lands, including his homestead, the homestead right passes to the mortgagee, and if all the property is afterward sold under the judgment that portion of the proceeds representing the homestead exemption will be invested under the direction of the court until the termination of the homestead right and the interest thereon applied to the mortgage.⁶³

III. TRANSFER OR ENCUMBRANCE.⁶⁴

A. Power to Transfer and Encumber—1. IN GENERAL. Where there is neither constitutional nor statutory prohibition, as incident to the right of ownership, the owner of the homestead may sell or encumber it; and such sale or encumbrance will be as valid as if the property had not been set apart as a homestead.⁶⁵ The power of alienation is not derived from the constitution or statute

relating to alienation of homesteads. It is an incident of the ownership of the property independent of the homestead law, and the directions and prohibitions of the constitution or statutes as to the alienation are mere restrictions upon this antecedent power.⁶⁶ So he may sell undivided portions of his homestead and claim an exemption in the undivided residue, as against all persons except his cotenants,⁶⁷ and he may exchange his homestead for another.⁶⁸ And it has been said that he may even give away the homestead and his creditors will not be prejudiced.⁶⁹ A restraint is, however, usually imposed by requiring both husband and wife to join in the execution of a deed or mortgage.⁷⁰ Some statutes also require an order of court before conveying a homestead and such order is a condition precedent to a valid conveyance.⁷¹ So under some homestead statutes it is not within the power of husband and wife to release their homestead rights, where there are minor children living.⁷² If restrictions of the character under consideration are complied with a valid conveyance may be made.⁷³ And the manner in which the homestead property was acquired is immaterial where the statutory method of alienation is followed.⁷⁴

2. CONVEYANCE SUBJECT TO HOMESTEAD RIGHT. A conveyance of land subject to the right of homestead therein is valid and carries with it the estate of the grantor, subject only to the homestead right.⁷⁵ So a conveyance by the husband alone, not expressed to be subject to the homestead right, vests the estate in the vendee, subject only to the use and occupation by the husband and wife until another homestead is acquired,⁷⁶ or until the character of the premises as a homestead is otherwise gone.⁷⁷

3. CREATION OF LIEN. Whether or not a lien may be given on homestead property and the circumstances under which it may be given depend upon the consti-

In Illinois a homestead right is an estate capable of being conveyed by the owner separately from the fee. Lorimer v. Marshall, 44 Ill. App. 645. But where the homestead has not been set off or assigned, it is not such an interest in land as is alienable separately from the fee. Lagger v. Mutual Union Loan, etc., Assoc., 146 Ill. 283, 33 N. E. 946. And therefore a husband or wife cannot convey, by deed to a third person, his or her estate of homestead in premises, the fee of which is in the heirs, before the homestead has been assigned or set off, so as to vest such third person, grantee in the deed, with the right to have the homestead set off and assigned to him. Best v. Jenks, 123 Ill. 447, 15 N. E. 173.

tutional and statutory provisions.⁷³ Where a lien may be given it may be created, among other methods, by renewal of a note which is chargeable against part of the premises, and an extension of the former lien so as to cover the entire tract,⁷⁹ or by contracting with a third party that the latter shall pay for labor and materials necessary in the erection of a dwelling-house;⁸⁰ but not by payments made by a third person in satisfaction of a lien not given to secure the original purchase-money,⁸¹ nor does a mortgage lien result from an assignment of purchase-money notes, by a vendor who has reserved a lien therefor.⁸²

B. Construction and Operation of Constitutional and Statutory Provisions. In case of conflict between a constitutional provision securing homestead rights and a statute upon the same subject the constitution controls, whether the statute enlarges or diminishes those rights.⁸³ As between different statutes repeals by implication are not favored;⁸⁴ nor will a subsequent statute ordinarily be deemed retroactive,⁸⁵ although curative acts may be passed validating conveyances of homesteads which were formally defective when executed.⁸⁶ If the statute does not point out the method of setting apart a homestead during the lives of husband and wife, upon the death of either, the probate court may adopt its own method, conforming to the general purposes of the Homestead Act.⁸⁷

C. What Law Governs. The right of alienation or encumbrance is governed by the law in force when the property was acquired, since vested rights of ownership cannot be destroyed by legislative or constitutional provisions.⁸⁸ The owner may, however, voluntarily dedicate the property to the purposes of a homestead after the restrictions of the constitutional or statutory provisions have become effective.⁸⁹ And if the homestead rights under a prior law have been lost by abandonment, they can only be gained anew under the law in force when the attempted acquisition occurs; and a mortgage executed after such abandonment and before the new acquisition is valid.⁹⁰

Signature of concubine.—A grantor's conveyance of the homestead is not invalidated by failure to secure the signature of a woman with whom he lived upon the premises but who was not his lawful wife. Goodwin v. Goodwin, 113 Iowa 319, 85 N. W. 31.

In New Hampshire the husband may sell or mortgage the homestead subject to the home-knowledge⁹⁴ or the conveyance is only conditional,⁹⁵ or though the wife does not reside upon the premises at the time of the conveyance.⁹⁶ Nor is a conveyance invalid for non-compliance with the requirements enforceable as an agreement to convey.⁹⁷ So under the constitutional and statutory provisions of most jurisdictions, husband and wife must join in the execution of an agreement to convey the homestead,⁹⁸ or to exchange it,⁹⁹ although it has been held that a written contract to convey the homestead at a future time is binding upon the head of the family who alone executes it, to the extent of giving a right of action for damages upon breach,¹ and according to some decisions for specific performance where the homestead as such has been abandoned.² So under the statutory provisions of most jurisdictions it is held that both husband and wife must join in a mortgage thereof,³

Compare Jenkins v. Harrison, 66 Ala. 345, holding that the constitutional provision which declares that a "mortgage, or other alienation of the homestead," by a married man, "shall not be valid, without the voluntary signature and assent of the wife" (art. 10, § 2), applies only to instruments which are perfected by delivery, and operative as conveyances; and though an instrument which is duly signed, sealed, and acknowledged as a deed, but defective and inoperative as a deed for want of delivery, may be enforced in equity, as against the husband or his heirs, as a contract to convey, it cannot be so enforced as to the homestead.

An oral contract made by a husband alone for the sale of the homestead of himself and wife is absolutely void, and a ratification by the wife subsequent to the levy of an attachment will not affect the rights of the attaching creditors. Stickley v. Widle, 122 Iowa 400, 98 N. W. 135.

Where a married woman held a separate interest in land occupied by her and her husband as a homestead at the date of the making of a contract for the sale thereof jointly with her husband, such contract was not binding either on her or her heirs as to her separate interest in the property. Ley v. Hahn, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 208, 81 S. W. 354.

Reservation in contract of right to use property.—A contract to convey property embraced in a homestead which reserved to the homestead claimants the right of use until the death of the parties or until abandonment is an encumbrance of the title within the meaning of Comp. St. (1903) c. 36, § 4, requiring it to be signed and acknowledged by the wife. Teske v. Dittberner, (Nebr. 1903) 98 N. W. 57 [modifying 65 Nebr. 167, 91 N. W. 181, 101 Am. St. Rep. 614].

In Tennessee, previous to the constitution of 1807, the husband could convey a valid title to a homestead without the wife's concurrence, even after a declaration of intent to claim the homestead, unless it had been actually laid off (Kincaid v. Buren, 9 Lea 553; *Kennedy v. need not join to render the conveyance valid,⁸ especially after the family is dissolved,⁹ and if no homestead rights attach until the land is paid for, a husband's release or encumbrance of the property prior to payment is valid without the wife's signature.¹⁰ But if recording the homestead mortgage is essential to its validity, and this is not done until after a declaration of homestead is filed, the prior mortgage is not good unless executed by both spouses;¹¹ nor will a husband's mortgage destroy the homestead right, if executed after that right attaches upon his marriage, although the debt it secures was contracted while he was single.¹²

Deed executed under fraudulent claim that it is for purchase-money.—A husband's conveyance of the homestead, his wife not joining, will pass no title as against her homestead rights, where the deed is made under a fraudulent claim that it is necessary for payment of purchase-money, the grantee taking with notice of the fraud. *Morris v. cuted by both spouses.¹⁷ So where tenants in common obtained title simultaneously, consent of defendant's wife to partition was unnecessary as defendant's right of homestead was subject to plaintiff's right of partition.¹⁸ But if the husband seeks to bind the homestead by a new contract or encumbrance relating to but not constituting or securing the former enforceable debt, the wife is a necessary party to its execution.¹⁹

(iv) CONVEYANCES AFTER SEPARATION OR ABANDONMENT. As a general rule neither spouse can mortgage or convey the home tract without the other's consent, even though they are not living together at the time;²⁰ and even where the homestead statute requires the wife's signature only when she is living with the husband, his sole deed is invalid if he has driven her from home without cause, and will not permit her to return.²¹ Where the homestead is the separate property of the wife and the husband abandons her without cause, it has been held that she may convey it without his joining in the deed;²² but under a statute which provides that the conveyance of the homestead where it is the wife's property shall not be binding unless signed by the owner and the husband if he be living with the wife, the husband will be considered as living with her, unless he has left her with a settled determination never to return.²³

(v) CONVEYANCE AFTER TERMINATION OF HOMESTEAD. After the premises are abandoned as a homestead, they may then be conveyed or encumbered without the wife's joinder or consent.²⁴

(vi) ASSIGNMENT OR CANCELLATION OF CONTRACT OF PURCHASE OR LEASE. Where land is held under a contract of purchase and is occupied as a homestead, rights existing under the contract cannot be assigned unless both husband and wife join in the assignment,²⁵ unless the assignment be to one who has furnished the homesteader with all moneys which have been paid upon the purchase-price;²⁶ nor will a cancellation and surrender of a contract for purchase of a homestead be sustained, which is not executed by both spouses,²⁷ nor a renunciation of title by the husband alone, where he has practically paid the purchase-price of the property.²⁸ So it has been held that the wife must join in an assignment or surrender of a lease under which the husband occupies the premises as a homestead.²⁹

(VII) CONVEYANCE OF REVERSIONARY INTEREST. A conveyance of such future interest in homestead premises as may arise after the homestead has terminated, where such conveyance is permissible, is not within the requirement of the statute that the wife shall join in a deed of the land.³⁰ But a conveyance by the husband alone, reserving the use of the property conveyed to himself and wife during their lives, is invalid if it gives the grantee any present rights in the property which amount to an encroachment upon the wife's homestead privilege.³¹

(VIII) LEASE. In one decision it is held, without qualification, that the husband may lease the homestead without the wife's consent.³² But according to the weight of authority the husband cannot lease and transfer possession of the homestead without the wife's consent if its use and enjoyment as a place of residence will be thereby interfered with.³³ If, however, a lease will not interfere with the use or enjoyment of the premises as a homestead, the wife's consent is not necessary to the validity of the lease.³⁴ And the husband may of course lease premises in which no homestead has been selected, without his wife's joining in the lease.³⁵

(IX) GRANT OF EASEMENT. According to some decisions the husband without the concurrence of his wife may grant a right of way over the homestead, provided that it does not materially interfere with the use of the premises as a home, and this rule has been applied in respect of railroad rights of way³⁶

Application of rule.—A lease with the right to excavate for oil and minerals necessitating the construction of houses over the wells for machinery and other purposes, and a right of way to reach the wells and carry the product from them contemplates such an occupancy as interferes with the use of the homestead, and the joint consent of the husband and wife is necessary to its validity. *Palmer Oil, etc., Co. v. and streets.³⁷ Other decisions take the view that no right of way over homestead property can be granted except by the joint deed of husband and wife.³⁸ And it has been held that a husband alone cannot contract with a railway company empowering it to use water from a spring located on his homestead, and to enter on the homestead to erect necessary pumping works.³⁹

(x) *CONVEYANCE BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE.*⁴⁰ In jurisdictions requiring conveyances or mortgages of homestead property to be executed by both husband and wife, the husband may make a valid conveyance,⁴¹ or according to some decisions, mortgage⁴² of the homestead premises to his wife, without her joining.

(xi) CONVEYANCE BY UNMARRIED DEBTOR. In construing statutes forbidding the encumbering of a homestead without the consent of each spouse, it is held that they do not restrain the powers of alienation possessed by unmarried

Smith*, 159 Ill. 93, 42 N. E. 306, semble.

Reason for rule.—"The policy of those statutes which restrain the alienation of the homestead without the wife joining in the deed is to protect the wife, and to enable her to protect the family, in the possession and enjoyment of a homestead, after one has been acquired by the husband. They are not intended to interpose obstacles in the way of a conveyance of the homestead to the wife, or to the wife and children, with the consent and approval of the wife, whatever may be the form of such conveyance." Thompson Homest. & Exempt. § 473. To require a deed from the wife to herself "would be senseless." Lynch v. Doran, 95 Mich. 395, 54 N. W. 882.

Subsequent loss of homestead character.—A homestead conveyed by a husband to his wife does not become liable for his then existing debts by subsequently losing its homestead character. Bladen Bank v. David, 53 Nebr. 608, 74 N. W. 42.

(XII) AGREEMENT REMOVING BAR OF THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. If a debt is enforceable against the homesteader, it has been considered that a promise by the husband alone will extend the running of the statute of limitations, if made before the debt is barred;⁴⁶ and the same rule has been applied even where the bar of the statute has already attached.⁴⁷

(XIII) MISCELLANEOUS. The consent or joinder of the wife is essential to an agreement for the extension of a mortgage lien,⁴⁸ or for the giving of an option on the homestead,⁴⁹ and the same is held respecting a sale of timber growing upon the homestead,⁵⁰ the creation of a lien for materials purchased in improving the homestead,⁵¹ a chattel mortgage given on improvements erected upon the homestead,⁵² an agreement to arbitrate differences arising on a partition of land where one of the parcels was occupied as a homestead after partition,⁵³ or a disclaimer of water-rights appurtenant to the homestead.⁵⁴ On the other hand it has been held that the joinder of the wife is not required where the premises are purchased by the husband in his own name to defraud his creditors,⁵⁵ where the right conveyed is a mere license of which the wife has knowledge and to which she makes no objection,⁵⁶ where the property, although occupied as a homestead, is above the statutory value,⁵⁷ where the part conveyed is a portion of the homestead tract, but enough remains to satisfy all homestead demands,⁵⁸ where the husband contracts to deliver fruit to be grown upon the premises,⁵⁹ where the

A husband may, without his wife's joining in the conveyance, make a valid mortgage of part of the farm on which he is living, provided he retains a sufficiency of land with the improvements thereon in which he is living to constitute a homestead exemption. Hildebrand v. Taylor, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 659.

59. Dickey v. Waldo, 97 Mich. 255, 56 N. W. 608, 23 L. R. A. 449. This does not interfere with the homestead right so as to husband disposes of proceeds of the land realized from an involuntary alienation,⁶⁰ where the husband waives the exemption from garnishment of money derived from an insurance policy upon the homestead,⁶¹ where one homestead is exchanged for another,⁶² where the homestead is conveyed by the husband to a trustee for the benefit of his wife and children,⁶³ although merely reserving in the deed a life-interest in the property for the benefit of the wife does not dispense with the necessity for her signature to the conveyance.⁶⁴ So statutes requiring the wife's consent to an alienation of the homestead do not apply to a descent of the land on the husband's death.⁶⁵ And where a debtor mortgages the homestead, his wife consenting, and he also pledges an insurance policy to secure the same debt, agreeing that the pledgee may pay the insurance premiums and add them to the original debts, the wife need not consent to the latter agreement, as it operates to relieve the homestead and not to burden it.⁶⁶

b. Consideration For Consent. In order to render valid a conveyance of the homestead in which both husband and wife join, there need be no consideration proceeding to the wife;⁶⁷ but if the wife does not join, and the husband assumes to convey the use of the homestead to one who is to support the wife in consideration of the conveyance, the wife is not bound by the contract where no support is given to her.⁶⁸

In Kansas the joint consent required need not necessarily be expressed in writing, to satisfy the constitutional requirements (Sullivan v. Wichita, 64 Kan. 539, 68 Pac. 55; Matney v. Linn, 59 Kan. 613, 54 Pac. 668; Dudley v. Shaw, 44 Kan. 683, 24 Pac. 1114; Pilcher v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 38 Kan. 516, 16 Pac. 945, 5 Am. St. Rep. 770), but may be evidenced by acts in pais showing a concurrence between them in point of time and intent to alienate (Sullivan v. Wichita, supra). Notwithstanding the consent must be a joint one. They must both give consent at the same time. Consequently where a wife, prior to the execution of a deed of the homestead by her husband, expressed her willingness to join therein, but did not, because it was stated by her husband that it was not necessary for her to do so, and after execution and delivery of the deed by her husband, expressed herself as being satisfied with it, a "joint consent" of husband and wife is not shown. Durand v. Higgins, 67 Kan. 110, 72 Pac. 567.

Evidence admissible to show consent.—Acquiescence of a wife in the possession of a tenant on homestead property, her failure to object to his cultivating the land and planting a crop thereon, and her friendly relations with him for several months after he had, with her knowledge, entered under a lease for a term of years, signed by the husband alone, and the validity of which was later attacked for lack of consent on her part, may be shown to support the claim that the wife consented to the lease jointly with her husband before and at the time of its execution. Johnson v. Samuelson, 69 Kan. 263, 76 Pac. 867.

Validity as testamentary disposition.—An oral agreement by parents that their son should become vested with title to the homestead in return for his conducting the business of his parents and supporting them is valid as a testamentary disposition of the homestead, and not a conveyance inter vivos. Teske v. Dittberner, 65 Nebr. 167, 91 N. W. 181, 101 Am. St. Rep. 614 [modifying 65 Nebr. 607, 88 N. W. 658].

in a foreclosure suit agreeing to the reformation of a mortgage sought to be corrected for a mutual mistake in omitting the homestead.⁷¹ In some jurisdictions, subject to certain limitations,⁷² it is essential that the wife should join in the granting clause of the instrument to render it effective;⁷³ and under the statutes of one state the conveyance must contain an express release by the wife of her homestead rights and in the absence thereof no right of possession is given thereby.⁷⁴ In others the name of the wife need not appear in the body of the instrument, but it will be sufficient that it be signed by her.⁷⁵ So in one jurisdiction it is held that the wife need not join in the conveyance, and that no form being prescribed for the manner of her giving consent, it is sufficient that it be in writing and signed with no more formality than is necessary in ordinary contracts concerning land.⁷⁶

(II) EXECUTION UNDER POWER OF ATTORNEY OR BY HUSBAND AS AGENT. Ordinarily the consent required by statute cannot be given by an attorney in fact,⁷⁷ and consequently the husband cannot consent for his wife by signing her name, although he be expressly or impliedly authorized so to do.⁷⁸ Under some statutes, however, the wife may alien her rights under a power of attorney.⁷⁹

(III) JOINDER BY SEPARATE INSTRUMENTS OR SEPARATE EXECUTION OF SAME INSTRUMENTS. Since a homestead can be conveyed or encumbered only by the

In Davis v. Jenkins, 93 Ky. 353, 20 S. W. 283, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 342, 40 Am. St. Rep. 197, it was held that the wife is barred, although her name does not appear in the granting clause, if she joins in the execution, and in the body of the instrument purports to waive her homestead rights. In Hays v. Froman, 103 Ky. 350, 45 S. W. 87, 20 Ky. L. joint conveyance or joint consent of the husband and wife,⁸⁰ it follows that it cannot be conveyed or encumbered by their separate and independent instruments.⁸¹ In those jurisdictions in which the joint consent must be concurrent a conveyance or encumbrance executed by the husband or wife alone cannot be subsequently assented to or ratified by the other, either by a separate execution of the former instrument or by an execution of a separate instrument, so as to release or bar his or her interest in the homestead.⁸² In some jurisdictions, however, the joint consent need not be contemporaneous, and an instrument executed by one may be subsequently assented to and ratified by the other.⁸³

(IV) EFFECT OF JOINDER FOR RELEASE OF DOWER. If the husband alone assumes to grant or mortgage the premises, but both he and his wife join in signing and acknowledging the instrument, the homestead right is not defeated, if the wife signs merely to relinquish her dower right; this fact appearing either by the instrument itself or by her acknowledgment.⁸⁴ And it has been decided that, although the body of the instrument contains a formal release of the homestead right, the latter is not affected if the wife in her acknowledgment only assumes to release her dower.⁸⁵

Moore, 67 Miss. 136, 7 So. 221 (holding that a subsequent conveyance by the wife of her interest in the homestead to a mortgagee, without her husband's consent, imports no validity to the mortgage previously made by the husband alone).

A ratification of such attempt at conveyance can be made only by the execution of a joint instrument in substantial compliance with the statute. Alvis v. Alvis, 123 Iowa 546, 99 N. W. 166. (v) EFFECT OF FRAUD AND DURESS. Even if the wife signs the document under a mistake as to its scope and effect, due to misrepresentations of the husband or of a third party, the contract is binding in the absence of fraud upon the part of the grantee or mortgagee.⁸⁶ But if he was a party to the fraud it is not.⁸⁷ So if the wife is subjected to duress, she will not be bound;⁸⁸ but if there was no coercion exercised to procure her signature, her act is in law deemed voluntary notwithstanding she signed the instrument reluctantly and after great hesitation.⁸⁹

(vi) EFFECT OF INSANITY. If the husband or wife is insane when the joint conveyance or mortgage is executed the conveyance is invalid.⁹⁰

2. CONSENT OF COURT.⁹¹ Sometimes a statute requires the consent of the ordinary, judge, or other officer, to the alienation of a homestead, and where such is the case the consent is a condition precedent to the passing of title,⁹² even though the conveyance be by the husband to his wife who is the sole beneficiary of the homestead.⁹³ The petition for sale should state the value of the property.⁹⁴ If the officer consents, his decision upon the sufficiency of the price paid is final.⁹⁵ No confirmation of the sale is necessary.⁹⁶

3. RESTRICTION IN RESPECT OF CHARACTER OF DEBTS FOR WHICH HOMESTEAD ENCUMBERED. As shown in a preceding section, there is no limitation on the right of the owner of a homestead to mortgage it, unless such limitation is imposed by statutory or organic provision,⁹⁷ while in another it is shown that the consent or joinder of the wife is in most jurisdictions essential to a valid mortgage.⁹⁸ So in some jurisdictions no mortgage of a home tract is permissible except for designated purposes;⁹⁹ the most common debts designated being those for purchase-money,¹ or for improvements.² Whether the instrument is an absolute deed or a mere security does not depend upon the form of the instrument, but upon the intention of the parties thereto.³ Hence a conveyance of a homestead for an existing debt as the price, repurchase by the debtor, and retention of a vendor's lien by the creditor, constitute the giving of a mortgage,⁴ as does a debtor's deed with contract for reconveyance on payment of the debt and interest,⁵ or a debtor's conveyance, the execution of a notice for the purchase-money secured by trust deed, and indorsement of the note by the debtor to a third party,⁶ and an equitable mortgage was held to result from an assignment of a contract to purchase by the homesteader to his creditor, where the former thereafter completed his payments and fraudulently took a conveyance of the land to himself.⁷ On the other hand it has been held that a deed conveying the homestead but subject to a condition subsequent is not a mortgage.⁸

E. Form and Requisites of Instrument,⁹ Acknowledgment, and Record

— 1. FORM AND REQUISITES OF INSTRUMENT — a. In General. If the deed is formally executed, purports to pass the interest of the husband and wife in the premises, and the consideration is adequate, a fee simple will be conveyed.¹⁰ A mortgage must generally be executed with the formalities required of a deed;¹¹ hence an

Power of sale on default.—In Texas the mortgage by husband and wife, to be valid, must give the mortgagee power to sell on default of payment. Stewart v. Mackey, 16 Tex. 56, 67 Am. Dec. 609. In another state it has been held that a mortgage of land oral agreement to encumber the land will not subject it to any lien;¹² but if the homestead as such has been abandoned, the formalities prescribed by the statute are not essential.¹³

b. Description of Premises. A deed or mortgage need not refer to the premises as a homestead if they are otherwise sufficiently described;¹⁴ but it will be sufficient if in the ordinary form for such conveyance, and purporting to convey the whole of the right, title, and interest of the husband and wife.¹⁵ If the description of the land is erroneous it may be reformed.¹⁶

c. Necessity and Sufficiency of Release of Homestead. The rule varies in different states, concerning the necessity for a formal and express waiver of the homestead right, in deeds or mortgages. Where this is required¹⁷ it will not be sufficient to append merely the officer's certificate of acknowledgment,¹⁸ or to release "every claim, interest and estate, of whatever description, at law, or in equity."¹⁹ Nor will the insertion of general covenants operate as a release or waiver.²⁰ However, it has been held that an express waiver results from inserting the words, "We jointly relinquish our right of homestead or dower in our landed estate,"²¹ or by using the phrase, "bargain, sell and convey" the homestead property.²² In other jurisdictions no express release is required.²³

2. ACKNOWLEDGMENT²⁴ — a. Necessity. Failure on the part of husband or wife to acknowledge an instrument intended to convey or encumber the home place will in most jurisdictions render the same absolutely void,²⁵ although under some which conveys the property generally, and in the conditional part empowers the mortgagee "to take possession of said property, reserving alone the amount of land which the law exempts as a homestead," and to sell the same, does not convey the homestead nor authorize a decree of foreclosure against it. *Ray v. exemption laws no such acknowledgment is required.²⁶ If witnesses to the acknowledgment are required by statute, this provision must be strictly complied with.²⁷

b. Time of Acknowledgment. While the conveyance of a homestead may be acknowledged by a wife upon a date subsequent to the signing of the document, and the instrument is thereby rendered binding from the latter date,²⁸ such acknowledgment will not operate to affect the title of the husband's heirs, where he has died before the wife's acknowledgment was taken,²⁹ or the rights of those who purchase the land on execution sale, prior to the acknowledgment.³⁰ If the mortgage releasing the homestead right is corrected by a court of equity in its description of the premises no further acknowledgment by the wife is necessary.³¹

e. Mode of Taking Acknowledgment. A privy examination of the wife is sometimes, by statute, made a prerequisite to the validity of a deed or mortgage of the homestead interest, executed by husband and wife,³² although it has been held that such examination is not necessary when the property is the wife's separate estate.³³ In the absence of this statutory regulation, no private examination of the wife need be had, if she join with her husband in the execution of the instrument and acknowledge it as conveyances of land are properly acknowledged.³⁴ Nor is it necessary that the wife acknowledge the execution of a conveyance or mortgage in the absence of her husband, provided that there was no compulsion nor undue influence exerted upon her at the time.³⁵ However, ignorance on the part of the wife, combined with solicitation by the husband and the grantee in the conveyance, will invalidate her acknowledgment made in her husband's presence.³⁶ Her acknowledgment must be before the proper officer, acting within his jurisdiction,³⁷ although the mere fact that the officer taking her acknowledgment to a mortgage of the residence property was employed by the husband to negotiate the loan thereby secured will not make the mortgage invalid.³⁸ It has been held that no explanation of the contents of the document by an interpreter to the wife is necessary, if it is written in a language which she understands.³⁹

d. Form, Requisites, and Effect of Certificate. Various forms of certificates of acknowledgment are prescribed by statute, some requiring that the officer certify to the identity of the grantor's wife,⁴⁰ her privy examination, and an acknowledgment on her part that she signed of her own free will and accord, without fear, constraint, or persuasion of the husband,⁴¹ and without threats made by him.⁴² Others require the certifying officer to state in his certificate that he fully informed the wife of her rights under the homestead law,⁴³ and of the contents of the instrument.⁴⁴ In addition to such specific allegations, the certificate is sometimes required to show a distinct acknowledgment of a release on all homestead rights,⁴⁵ and it has been held that an omission in this respect is not cured by an express release in the body of the deed or mortgage.⁴⁶ When the certificate of acknowledgment is in proper form, parol evidence is inadmissible in the absence of fraud or imposition to show that it was untrue in fact,⁴⁷ as for instance that the wife was not examined separate and apart from her husband,⁴⁸ or that the name signed to the instrument is not her true name.⁴⁹ Such certificate is conclusive of the facts therein recited.⁵⁰

e. Correcting or Supplying Acknowledgment. A correction of a defective certificate of acknowledgment has sometimes been allowed, in which event it has been held that the instrument as corrected relates to the time of original delivery;⁵¹ but such reformation of the certificate will not be made by a court of equity,⁵² nor will intervening rights of third persons be adversely affected thereby.⁵³ A healing act may validate a defective acknowledgment.⁵⁴

3. RECORD. The general rules applicable to the recording of deeds and mortgages govern in case of homesteads.⁵⁵ Hence delay in recording the mortgage will not give the wife of a homesteader a right to repudiate it, after joining in

Rule in Wisconsin.—The disability of the husband, under the Wisconsin statute which provides that no alienation by a married man of his homestead shall be valid or of any effect, without the signature of the wife, extends only to such alienation of the land as interferes with its use as a homestead, and a deed executed by him alone will convey an equitable interest entitling the grantee to the legal title when the homestead right ceases (Jerdee v. Furbush, 115 Wis. 277, 91 N. W. 661, 95 Am. St. Rep. 904. To the same effect see Ferguson v. Mason, 60 Wis. 377, 19 N. W. 420; Conrad v. Schwamb, 53 Wis. 372, 10 N. W. 395); but the earlier decisions in this state do not seem to be in accord with this validity or invalidity which cannot in any way be affected by subsequent events.⁵⁹ The rule is, however, subject under some statutes to the limitation that the title, which remains in the grantor because of the insufficiency of the conveyance, will pass to the grantee if possession thereof is abandoned by the grantor pursuant to the conveyance,⁶⁰ although mere abandonment not pursuant to the conveyance and for the express purpose of giving effect thereto has no such effect.⁶¹ In a number of jurisdictions the rules stated do not obtain. Although the wife does not join in a deed or mortgage of the homestead, it will become operative when for any cause the homestead terminates.⁶²

(II) ON DIVORCE. The same diversity of view exists respecting the effect upon instruments not joined in by both husband and wife of a subsequent divorce of the homesteader and his wife. According to the weight of authority such divorce will not give force to the void conveyance or encumbrance,⁶³ but the Rule in Texas.—The decisions of this state relating to the question under consideration are not harmonious. In Rogers v. Renshaw, 37 Tex. 625 (an action by the surviving wife to recover homestead property conveyed by the husband without her consent), it was said: "The Constitution and laws of this State absolutely forbid the alienation of the homestead by the husband, without the consent of the wife. . . . The sale by . . . was therefore an absolute nullity, and conveyed appellants no rights whatever." In Murphy v. Coffey, 33 Tex. 508, it was held that such a sale was a nullity and did not preclude the husband from recovering the property so conveyed. In Stallings v. Hul-lum, 89 Tex. 431, 35 S. W. 2, it was held that the alienation of a homestead by the husband without the wife's consent is void in so far as it in any manner affects her interests. In Marler v. Handy, 88 Tex. 421, 31 S. W. 636; Anderson v. Carter, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 240, 69 S. W. 78; Colonial, etc., Mortg. Co. v. Thetford, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 152, 66 S. W. 103; Shields v. Aultman, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 345, 50 S. W. 219, it was held that if the homestead is abandoned, the deed becomes operative and effective as a conveyance of the property. In Ley v. Hahn, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 208, 81 S. W. 354, it was held that, where a husband and wife join in a contract for the sale of their community homestead, but the deed executed was void by reason of the wife's incapacity, on her death the purchaser in the contract acquired the husband's interest in the property and the additional life-interest of the husband and the portion owned by the wife in her separate right.

contrary view also finds support in a comparatively recent decision of the supreme court of Vermont.⁶⁴

(III) *ESTOPPEL TO ASSERT INVALIDITY*⁶⁵—(A) In General. Facts existing at the time a defective conveyance is executed or lien created may estop those who might otherwise claim a homestead in the premises from asserting their rights. Accordingly an estoppel is created against the wife of a homesteader and in favor of an innocent mortgagee, by her acknowledgment, regular in form, although her consent to the execution of the instrument was procured by fraud;⁶⁶ by her affidavit that the money, to secure which a mortgage is given upon the homestead, is to be used in paying the purchase-price,⁶⁷ by her surrendering possession of the homestead attempted to be conveyed, permitting the grantee to contract with third parties respecting the land and to improve it;⁶⁸ by her uniting with her husband in conveying the homestead tract remaining after a surplus portion of her husband's land has been levied on and sold;⁶⁹ by her reciting in the deed, made under an order of court requiring a cash sale, that the consideration has been paid,⁷⁰ or by her joining with her husband in a subsequent valid mortgage, where previously a defective one had been executed by him alone.⁷¹ Likewise both husband and wife are estopped if they convey jointly and surrender possession of the premises;⁷² if they convey by deed absolute, subsequently disavowing all interest in the land and permitting their grantee to mortgage it to an innocent third party,⁷³ if they pretend to sell and negotiate the purchase-money notes,⁷⁴ or if they mortgage one of two tracts of land, residing at the time upon the parcel not encumbered.⁷⁵ So the homesteader cannot deny that the mortgage is given for purchase-money, if he has declared that such was its character, when he executed it,⁷⁶ nor question the validity of a conveyance executed by himself and a woman erroneously supposed by him to be his lawful wife, where he subsequently secures a divorce from his lawful wife and the latter dies, leaving no children of the marriage,⁷⁷ and if he executes a defective mortgage and conveys the encumbered homestead to one who assumes the mortgage debt, the latter cannot repudiate the lien;⁷⁸ no estoppel arises against the wife from a recital in a valid contract, executed by both spouses, of a prior but invalid lease executed by the husband alone,⁷⁹ nor by a surrender of the premises to the vendee by husband and wife, when the wife knows nothing of the contract of sale and did not join therein,⁸⁰ nor by husband and wife giving an option for the sale of land, subsequently claimed as a homestead.⁸¹ So the husband is not estopped by his false representation that his wife's acknowledgment was taken before the proper officer;⁸² and his participation in the execution of a deed as an individual will not estop him, in a representative capacity, from denying its validity as to beneficiaries of the homestead.⁸³ Where the deed or mortgage contains general covenants of title, these, it has been decided, will estop neither the homesteader⁸⁴ nor his wife⁸⁵ from asserting homestead rights; and if the statutory requirements of signature and acknowledgment are wanting, they cannot be supplied by estoppel.⁸⁶

(B) Non-Joinder of Husband or Wife in Conveyance. On the principle that estoppel will not supply the want of power or make valid an act prohibited by express provision of law,⁸⁷ it is held in jurisdictions where a conveyance of the homestead is void without the joinder of husband and wife that the husband is not estopped by a deed,⁸⁸ although founded upon a valuable consideration,⁸⁹ nor by a mortgage of the homestead⁹⁰ in which the wife does not join, and that the wife is likewise not estopped by a conveyance or encumbrance of the homestead in which she did not join.⁹¹ It has also been held that no estoppel results against the wife from her executing a mortgage of the premises without her husband joining.⁹² The general doctrine has been held subject to the limitation that the homesteader cannot question the validity of his deed because of non-joinder of his wife, if he states at the time of its execution that he has no wife,⁹³ unless the advantage from his wrong will accrue at least in part to some person other than himself protected by the homestead law.⁹⁴

(c) Estoppel by Recital That Property Is Not a Homestead. If the premises are openly and obviously used for residential purposes when the instrument in question is executed, a recital therein that the property is not a homestead,⁹⁵ or an affidavit to that effect made to secure a loan,⁹⁶ will not estop the party so representing from claiming the statutory exemption. So where the statute absolutely forbids the encumbering of the homestead, no estoppel arises from the owner's declaration that it is not his homestead;⁹⁷ and it has been held that a recital in an instrument other than that now relied upon to the effect that no homestead exists in the property will not be binding upon the homesteader who seeks to avoid the present instrument.⁹⁸ Where no such peculiar circumstances appear, a statement by the homesteader or a recital in his deed or affidavit that the premises are not a homestead will prevent homestead rights from being asserted by him.⁹⁹

(d) Estoppel of Wife by Acts of Husband. Usually the wife is not estopped by the acts of her husband in conveying the homestead or subjecting it to liability. Hence, if the husband represents to a mortgagee or grantee that no homestead rights exist in the property;¹ or permits a judgment in ejectment for the premises to go against him in a suit to which the wife was not made a party;² or recognizes and confirms a sale of the homestead, voidable for the fraud of the grantee;³ or leases the homestead premises from the mortgagee;⁴ or relinquishes the right to redeem from a mortgage;⁵ or recites in his deed that the consideration is the cancellation of purchase-money notes;⁶ or attempts to correct an erroneous description of the premises by pointing out the true boundaries;⁷ or reserves a fraudulent vendor's lien upon the homestead conveyed to him;⁸ or acquires another domicile and homestead against the wife's consent;⁹ or engages in any conduct which would estop him were he alone concerned, but in which his wife does not participate,¹⁰ the latter's rights remain unaffected. But if the husband acts as her authorized agent,¹¹ or if she participates with him in an attempted fraud upon innocent parties,¹² or by her actions acquiesces in an abandonment of premises by him as a homestead,¹³ she is estopped to claim an exemption. Where she is permitted to recover back the homestead conveyed with her consent, the property is subject to the whole amount of purchase-money paid, if the purchaser acted in good faith and was ignorant of all defects in the conveyance.¹⁴

b. Conveyances Prohibited by Constitution and Statute. Where the constitution and statutes prohibit absolutely a mortgage of a homestead, a mortgage thereof, whether executed by husband and wife or by the husband alone, is void, and the termination of the homestead in any manner does not operate to give any validity to the instrument.¹⁵ The fact that the mortgagors had formed the intention of abandoning the homestead at the time of giving the mortgage does not alter the rule.¹⁶

2. OPERATION AND EFFECT AS TO LAND CONVEYED IN EXCESS OF HOMESTEAD. The view is sustained by the majority of the courts that a deed covering the homestead and other lands, or covering a single tract whose value exceeds the statutory exemption, although it be invalid as to the homestead, may yet be sufficient to convey or encumber that portion of the property which is in excess of the statutory exemption.¹⁷

(II) AS AFFECTED BY GOOD FAITH AND NOTICE—(A) In General. While the purchaser of homestead premises takes them encumbered with homestead rights known by him to have already attached,²⁶ one who becomes a purchaser or mortgagee of homestead property, under circumstances giving him neither actual nor constructive notice of its real character, as a general rule takes free from homestead claims;²⁷ and even a purchaser at foreclosure sale, who has notice of the homestead character of the mortgaged premises, is protected if the mortgagors were estopped from asserting the exemption against the mortgagee.²⁸ But purchasers and mortgagees are bound to make search for such facts as might reasonably be ascertained by them,²⁹ and are not protected by their ignorance of a law which forbids encumbering the homestead³⁰ or which requires certain formalities in its transfer.³¹

(B) Facts Constituting Notice. Hence if the premises are actually occupied by the debtor and his family as a homestead when mortgaged or conveyed, the mortgagee or transferee takes with notice of their true character.³² So also a recital in a deed, made to the debtor and his wife, that the premises are purchased with the proceeds from a sale of the former homestead gives notice to parties claiming under such deed;³³ and one who takes "subject to the homestead" rights obtains title to the entire tract, less the statutory exemption.³⁴ Under statutes forbidding pretended sales of the homestead, accompanied by conditions of defeasance, the vendee is chargeable with knowledge of the real nature of the transaction if he knows or may reasonably infer that the purpose of the apparent sale is to use the homestead as a security in raising money.³⁵ Where the statute requires a creditor to file an affidavit stating that the homestead exceeds a given value before he may sell on execution, a purchaser at such sale is chargeable with notice whether the affidavit has or has not been filed.³⁶ If the purchaser places improvements on the premises, knowing the homestead rights of a widow therein, the improvements inure to the benefit of her estate.³⁷

b. As Against Third Persons—(1) RIGHTS AS AGAINST OUTSTANDING JUDGMENTS AND CLAIMS AGAINST HOMESTEAD.³⁸ By the weight of authority the exempt character of homestead property, existing at the time of sale, runs with its transfer; and while in the hands of a purchaser no claim can be asserted against it which could not be enforced during the time the debtor occupied it as a residence.³⁹ The rule has even been extended to transfers by the homesteader for a nominal consideration,⁴⁰ or upon no consideration whatever,⁴¹ or even where the vendor has afterward removed from the state.⁴² In accordance with the principles stated, if a judgment exists against the homesteader at the time of his conveyance of the homestead land, it cannot be enforced as a lien against the property in the hands of a bona fide purchaser.⁴³ So such property is not subject to

The debtor's reversionary interest in the homestead, to arise after the homestead right has terminated, is not subject to sale in the hands of a purchaser during the existence of the homestead estate, where the sale is made for the purpose of reinvesting the proceeds in another home. Stephenson v. Eberhart, 79 Ga. 116, 3 S. E. 641. In Wisconsin the purchaser, although protected in respect to prior invalid deeds, must select the homestead and notify the prior grantee, before suing in ejectment. Kent v. Agard, 22 Wis. 150.

56. Parks v. Barnett, 104 Ala. 438, 16 So. 136; Garlock v. Baker, 46 Iowa 334; Wea Gas, etc., Co. v. Franklin Land Co., 54 Kan. 533, 38 Pac. 790, 45 Am. St. Rep. 297. A, owning an undivided half of certain land, bought the other half and mortgaged the whole to secure the purchase-price, his wife subsequent to a transfer of possession to one who purchased at a sale under a trust deed containing no release of homestead rights,⁵⁷ or pays only a nominal consideration and seeks to perpetrate a fraud upon the prior grantee;⁵⁸ or if the premises were abandoned by the grantor as a homestead at the time of the prior conveyance, and possession was in the first grantee when the second grantee obtained a deed, founded upon an inadequate consideration.⁵⁹ Similarly a mortgagee takes free from prior defective conveyances,⁶⁰ but not if the mortgagor executes a first mortgage containing no release of homestead and afterward a second containing such release and then abandons the premises.⁶¹

c. Effect of Adverse Possession as Against Homesteaders and Third Persons.⁶²

The homestead may be lost by peaceable, continuous, adverse possession for the statutory period;⁶³ but title cannot be gained by lapse of time where the occupant apparently holds under a recorded lease, but in reality under an unrecorded deed, of which the homestead claimant is ignorant.⁶⁴ As against the creditors of the homesteader, the purchaser under an invalid deed cannot begin to acquire any rights until the homestead interest terminates.⁶⁵ In computing the statutory period, the possession of the homesteader's wife, under order of court setting apart a homestead, cannot be tacked to the subsequent possession of a purchaser, in order to bar the rights of a creditor whose claim was enforceable against the original homestead.⁶⁶

d. Remedies and Proceedings For Enforcement of Rights⁶⁷ — (1) IN GENERAL.

As a rule specific performance of an agreement to convey the homestead entered into by the husband or wife alone will not be decreed,⁶⁸ unless the parties, entitled to assert the invalidity of the contract, fail to do so by the pleadings.⁶⁹ Nor can damages be recovered against the husband or wife for breach of such an agreement.⁷⁰ Where the premises have been actually conveyed by the husband only, the court may order the property sold and a specified portion of the proceeds not joining in the mortgage. Later, he and his wife deeded an undivided half to B. It was held that it would be presumed that the half conveyed to B was that as to which the mortgage was ineffectual because of non-joinder of the wife. Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 Mich. 298.

A parol agreement made by the husband to devise property embraced within a homestead, like an agreement to convey the reversionary estate, is in conflict with the provisions of the Homestead Act, and is not specifically enforceable, even though substantial performance of the contract by the promisee may have taken place. Teske v. Dittberner, (Nebr. 1903) 98 N. W. 57.

70. Barnett v. Mendenhall, 42 Iowa 296 [explaining Yost v. Devault, 9 Iowa 60]. And see Cross v. Everts, 28 Tex. 523, holding that a refusal by a wife to fulfil a void promise to convey her homestead which the promisee knew that she had the right to retract at any time is not a fraud for which an action of damages will lie against her. Compare Fred W. Wolf Co. v. Galbraith, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 505, 80 S. W. 648, holding that although a lien cannot be created on a homestead, on improvements, unless signed by the

held for the wife's benefit, being the statutory valuation of a homestead.⁷¹ If the grantee has obtained title by a valid conveyance, he may, to prevent a cloud upon his title, enjoin a sale of the premises under a judgment rendered against his grantor.⁷² If he has purchased an undivided interest in the homestead, he may, it is held, compel partition.⁷³ If one in possession of a tract conveyed to him by the homesteader and which includes the home place and other land is ousted by an execution creditor of the grantor, the creditor cannot recover rent for the entire tract from the occupying grantee, but only such an amount as is proportionate to the excess of the land over the homestead exemption.⁷⁴ In case of a mortgage upon the premises, executed by the husband alone, the heir of the mortgagor may maintain ejectment against one who holds under a sale on foreclosure.⁷⁵ If the mortgage is duly executed by both spouses, the mortgagee may foreclose, even after the mortgagor's death,⁷⁶ but he can obtain no personal judgment against the wife if she did not execute the mortgage note;⁷⁷ nor can a receiver for the premises be appointed if the mortgagor is entitled to hold the tract for a homestead.⁷⁸ Nor can the mortgagee eject the occupant of the homestead if a "forced sale" of the premises is forbidden by a statute in force at the date of execution of the mortgage.⁷⁹ An allotment of homestead will be made under orders of court, where the mortgage of an entire tract does not cover the homestead portion;⁸⁰ and the court may order commissioners to set off the exemption in as compact a form as possible, including the dwelling-house.⁸¹ If the mortgage contains no reservation of homestead rights, it has been held that the foreclosure sale will not be enjoined to allow an allotment, as the debtor is entitled to the excess of the proceeds over the amount of the debt, free from claims of creditors.⁸² In case a homestead is sold and part of the proceeds invested in another, upon which a mortgage is given to secure the balance of the price, the mortgagee on foreclosure, it seems, may sell only such a fractional interest in the premises as represents the unpaid balance together with the debtor's reversion in the rest of the land.⁸³

(ii) PARTIES' PLEADINGS AND EVIDENCE. To conclude the homestead rights of husband and wife in mortgaged premises, both must be joined as defendants to a bill to foreclose the mortgage,⁸⁴ whether the mortgage was executed by

wife, a contract for the sale of machinery, whereby the purchaser agrees to give a mechanic's lien on the premises on which the machinery is to be situated, and which premises constitute the homestead, is not invalid because not signed by the purchaser's wife. The contract may be valid, although the vendor is unable to comply with his contract. For his failure in this respect he may be liable for the damages.

Restoration of consideration.—Where a husband agreed to convey a homestead, and received the full consideration therefor, without his wife's concurrence, and failed to make such conveyance, such consideration may be recovered back, although such contract was void because not concurred in and signed by the wife, as a judgment therefor is for the return of money obtained by a false pretense, rather than for damages for the breach of a contract to convey a homestead. *De Kalb v. both⁸⁵ or by the husband⁸⁶ or wife⁸⁷ alone. Likewise a second wife who marries the homesteader after he has executed a mortgage upon the homestead in which the first wife did not join is a necessary party to the foreclosure proceeding to bar her interest.⁸⁸ If the wife is not thus joined, to answer to her rights, she may intervene and litigate the question of homestead;⁸⁹ and if the property is sold under a foreclosure, subject to the homestead privilege, the wife is not bound by a subsequent judgment in ejectment, to which latter action she was not a party.⁹⁰ An allegation by a mortgagee that the premises in suit were conveyed to him sufficiently shows that the grantor's homestead was released.⁹¹ If suit is brought to foreclose a mortgage of homestead premises in which the wife did not join, a sale of so much thereof as is in excess of the statutory limitation as to value will not be decreed, unless the value of the property is alleged by plaintiff, or put in issue by proper pleadings.⁹² If the purchaser of a homestead seeks to enjoin a sale thereof, on execution of a judgment against the grantor, rendered while he was in possession, the complaint need not show that the premises were the grantor's homestead at the time of the execution and levy.⁹³ Where a mortgagee, having no lien upon the homestead proper, claims a right to come against the excess of the residence premises over the statutory limit, the burden of proof is upon him to show such excess.⁹⁴ In an action of ejectment by a grantee of premises including a homestead, evidence of the value of the portion claimed as exempt is admissible to determine if it exceeds the statutory limit.⁹⁵

a. Owners of Homestead. The wife may unite with her husband to set aside a conveyance,⁹⁷ or mortgage of homestead premises⁹⁸ in which she did not join, and her death pending such suit does not affect its further maintenance where a child survives and is made a party thereto.⁹⁹ As a general rule during the husband's lifetime she is forbidden to sue alone, to set aside a conveyance of the homestead, as she is held to possess no property right therein, but a mere veto upon the husband's power of alienation.¹ She may, however, assert her homestead rights in case the husband has deserted her,² or refuses to join in seeking the relief sought³ or after his death,⁴ or where by the fraud of her husband and the grantor she has been induced to join in the deed, believing it to be a mortgage⁵ or if she states facts sufficient for the recovery of alimony and the bill prays general relief,⁶ or where a creditor is wrongfully attempting to subject the homestead to the payment of his claim;⁷ and she may intervene in the husband's suit to recover back the homestead exchanged by him for other land;⁸ or defend against the enforcement of a claim founded upon a note, by showing usury;⁹ or intervene in an action brought against the husband for specific performance of a contract to convey the homestead, and thus protect her interests.¹⁰ She cannot, however, as an intervener in a foreclosure suit, question by demurrer an alleged assignment of the mortgage to the present plaintiff from the original mortgagee, as she has no interest in the validity of the assignment.¹¹ Where residence land is claimed as the wife's, both she and her husband, occupying it, should be joined as defendants in a suit in ejectment to test the validity of a conveyance to her.¹² She is not a necessary party, if she has joined in a mortgage to release dower and homestead rights, and the husband seeks to enjoin a sale under the mortgage.¹³ The husband may not impeach his deed of the homestead to the wife, upon the ground of informality, where he has deserted her since its execution.¹⁴

b. Other Persons. If the conveyance is rendered absolutely void by the irregularity in execution, any one may impeach it who has an interest in the property.¹⁵ Heirs of the homesteader cannot contest the validity of a contract of sale entered into by their ancestor by alleging that the property constituted his homestead, where the vendee has been placed in possession by the ancestor and has paid the purchase-price;¹⁶ but they may refuse to complete the sale if the vendor dies before conveyance or abandonment of the homestead pursuant to contract;¹⁷ nor can they assert a claim of homestead which will be paramount to the right of one who holds a purchase-money mortgage.¹⁸ But if a transfer of the homestead title has been ordered by the court in performance of an oral contract of sale, entered into by the ancestor, the heirs may sue to revise the order, when the quantity of land specified therein was erroneous.¹⁹ A grantee of the premises may not maintain an action to annul a prior conveyance, where he secures the property for a nominal consideration and for a fraudulent purpose,²⁰ nor can a grantee question the regularity of a prior mortgage, where the amount of the mortgage debt was deducted from the purchase-price, and assumed by the grantee.²¹ Creditors of the exemptioner cannot question the validity of a voidable mortgage of the homestead executed by him, where he waives the irregularity by failing to claim his exemption.²²

2. NATURE AND FORM OF ACTION.²³ The action, maintainable by the wife, may be a bill quia timet, filed by her next friend, for the removal of a cloud upon her title and for the confirmation of her homestead rights in the property.²⁴ If her husband has attempted wrongfully to assign away her rights, she may remain in possession of the premises and defend against ejectment.²⁵

3. LIMITATIONS AND TIME TO SUE. It has been held that the statute of limitations begins to run against a wife who is entitled to assert the invalidity of a homestead conveyance, from the time of transfer, and her coverture continuing after such time will not suspend the running of the statute.²⁶

4. PLEADING. The complaint to recover a homestead alleged to have been improperly conveyed should aver occupancy of the premises as a homestead at the time of the conveyance or that they were once the homestead and had not been previously abandoned;²⁷ but it is not necessary to allege that no new homestead has since been acquired, nor that the complainant has no homestead at the time of filing suit.²⁸ If the bill or complaint states facts entitling the homesteader and his wife to substantial relief, mere technical errors in pleading will be ignored.²⁹

5. EVIDENCE. The burden of proof is upon the claimant of a homestead seeking to avoid a conveyance or encumbrance thereof to show that the premises were used as a residence when the deed or mortgage was executed.³⁰ If the validity of the mortgage is questioned for non-joinder of the wife, the husband must prove not only occupancy of the land as a homestead but also that he had a wife living when the instrument was executed.³¹ Likewise where the statute forbids mortgaging the premises for general purposes, a trust deed cannot be avoided by proof of the homestead character of premises at the time of executing the deed, but it must be shown not to have been given for any of the claims excepted from the statutory prohibition.³² If the owner attempts to avoid a lien created by him, alleging that the homestead was free from prior equities and encumbrances and that the lien was not a substitution for them, he must prove that the former have actually ceased to exist, and mere evidence of lapse of time sufficient to outlaw them is not sufficient.³³ In determining as to the validity of a deed of the property, the previous declaration of homestead is admissible in evidence.³⁴ The wife may disprove her consent to the instrument by showing that it was obtained from her by fraud.³⁵ But it has been held that the certificate of an officer who takes a wife's acknowledgment is conclusive as to his reading and explaining the instrument to her, in the absence of clear proof of fraud or mistake;³⁶ and her signing the deed may be proved by the certificate of the officer, together with circumstances showing that she subsequently acknowledged the grantee's title by paying rent and abandoning the premises to him.³⁷ Should the wife rely upon the fact that fraud has been practised upon her by the husband in behalf of the grantee or mortgagee, the latter may show, by affidavits, that he acted in good faith and for a valuable consideration; and if no counter affidavits are presented, such purchaser may proceed to assert his claim against the homestead, and to that end may obtain a dissolution of an injunction against him.³⁸ Where the deed is ineffectual to convey the homestead but may pass the excess above the statutory amount, the fact that such excess existed can be ascertained by proof of the consideration agreed to be paid by a grantee who received his deed several months after the execution of the deed in question, and by proof of the value at the time of trial.³⁹ A defective deed improperly acknowledged by the wife may be introduced in evidence where there is proof of possession taken under it.⁴⁰

6. NATURE AND CONDITIONS OF RELIEF — a. In General. Where betterments have been placed upon the homestead premises by one from whom the homesteader recovers them, they should be taken into consideration in the judgment rendered against the wrongful occupant.⁴¹ If the wife of a homesteader procures the cancellation of an agreement between an unpaid vendor, the husband and a third party, whereby a previous conveyance to the husband is replaced by one to the third party, thus defeating the wife's rights in the premises as a homestead, the relief granted to her will not defeat the rights of the unpaid vendor to his lien against the land for purchase-money.⁴²

b. Recovery and Application of Mesne Profits. One who obtains possession of a homestead under an invalid conveyance may be required to account for mesne profits received by him;⁴³ but if the beneficiaries of the homestead have enjoyed the proceeds of the conveyance, such proceeds may be set off against the claim for profits.⁴⁴

c. Restoration of Consideration. According to one decision, it is held that a deed of homestead in which the owner's wife does not join is absolutely void and entitled the grantee to a return of the consideration.⁴⁵ So it has been held that where husband and wife seek to rescind a deed of homestead premises duly executed by them, on the ground of the husband's incapacity, restoration of the purchase-price is a condition of the rescission, and if not made within the time fixed by the court the land should be sold to satisfy such sum.⁴⁶ If the wife alone seeks to recover a homestead conveyed by her and her husband, and grounds for recovery exist, she is not bound to restore the purchase-price when she is not shown to have received any of it,⁴⁷ and where a husband, after mortgaging premises, files a declaration thereon, and the wife is not made a party to a foreclosure of the mortgage, it is no defense to an action of ejectment by the wife against the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, that the mortgagor had not paid the mortgage debt.⁴⁸ It has also been held that even in equity, to establish or assert a homestead right in opposition to a deed void for usury, neither payment nor tender of the debt which the deed was made to secure is necessary.⁴⁹ If the debtor had but an equitable title, and executed an informal mortgage on the homestead to secure the repayment of the purchase-money advanced for him, and the mortgagee afterward acquired the legal title, a court of equity will not cancel the mortgage and decree a divestiture of the legal title, without requiring the repayment of the purchase-money so advanced.⁵⁰ So if an equity of redemption be

IV. DEVISE OR TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITION.

A. In General. According to the weight of authority the homesteader cannot, by will, deprive the surviving spouse and children of the homestead estate bestowed upon them by statute,⁵² even though the homestead is the only property owned by the decedent at his death, and he expressly directs his executor to sell the whole property and distribute the proceeds in pecuniary bequests.⁵³ Under some statutes the owner of a homestead may dispose of it by will, free from lia-

Rule in Florida.—Under the constitution of 1868 the homestead was in no event subject to testamentary disposition, and although the homesteader might have left a will as to his homestead, he died intestate in respect thereof. Scull v. Beatty, 27 Fla. 426, 9 So. 4; Wilson v. Fridenberg, 21 Fla. 386; Brokaw v. McDougall, 20 Fla. 212; Wilson v. Fridenberg, 19 Fla. 461. Under the constitution of 1885, the homesteader is prohibited from devising the homestead if he leaves children surviving him. Palmer v. Palmer, (Fla. 1904) 35 So. 983; Caro v. Caro, (Fla. 1903) 34 So. 309; De Cottes v. Clarkson, 43 Fla. 1, 29 So. 442; Walker v. Redding, 40 Fla. 124, 23 So. 565. The word "children" as used in the constitutional provision is not restricted to minor children (De Cottes v. Clarkson, 43 Fla. 1, 29 So. 442); and it has been held that if the homestead cannot be diverted from inuring to the widow and heirs by the direct provision of a will, it cannot be indirectly diverted by the provision of a will disposing legally of other property outside of the homestead (Palmer v. Palmer, (Fla. 1904) 35 So. 983). Where, however, the holder of the homestead is without children he or she, as the case may be, can dispose of the homestead by will, subject, however, where such disposition is made by the husband, to the widow's right to dower therein as provided for by statute. Purnell v. Reed, 32 Fla. 339, 13 So. 874, 21 L. R. A. 839.

In Kansas, where a husband and wife occupy a piece of land as their homestead, she owning the same, and the legal title thereto being in her name, and she having no children, she can, by will, and without the consent of her husband, devise a one-half interest in the land or any less interest therein, to a third person, so that after her death such third person can take the interest attempted to be devised. Vining v. Willis, 40 Kan. 609, 20 Pac. 232.

In South Carolina the husband may devise his homestead set apart to him in his lifetime. Bostick v. Chovin, 55 S. C. 427, 33 S. E. 508. But where no homestead has been set apart to him, he cannot defeat his widow's right of homestead or exemption by devise or bequest. Hendrix v. Seaborn, 25 S. C. 481, 60 Am. Rep. 520.

In Utah, while a statute, in terms, gives, absolutely, property in the homestead and exempt personalty to the surviving husband or wife, yet by other terms of that section this power is limited, and the husband may by will dispose of the estate in excess of the homestead limit. In re Little, 22 Utah 204, 61 Pac. 899.

If the surviving spouse consents in writing, the homestead may be disposed of by will. Radl v. Radl, 72 Minn. 81, 75 N. W. 111.

Death of wife before husband.—If the non-assenting spouse, living when the will was executed, dies before the testator, the statute forbidding a devise of the homestead does not apply. Penstock v. Wentworth, 75 Minn. 2, 77 N. W. 420.

bility for his debts,⁵⁴ and may charge the premises with payment of debts and legacies,⁵⁵ and expenses of administration subject, however, under some of these statutes to the widow's right of exemption if she elects to assert it;⁵⁶ but a mere devise of the homestead, although permitted by statute, will not, in the absence of such special provision, have this effect;⁵⁷ nor will a general direction of the decedent's will to pay his just debts.⁵⁸ Where a testator directs that after his debts are paid a certain sum shall go to his son, the legatee is entitled to such legacy out of the surplus remaining after the foreclosure of a mortgage on the homestead, as against a general creditor.⁵⁹

B. To Husband or Wife and Children. Under some statutes the husband may devise the homestead to the wife,⁶⁰ or to the wife and children,⁶¹ and the creditors have no right to complain.⁶² But it has been held that a husband cannot claim a homestead in land devised by his wife, as against a debt owed by her.⁶³

The use of merely formal phrases will not make a devise of the homestead subject to the payment of the testator's debts; to do so the language must be unequivocal and imperative. Cross v. Benson, 68 Kan. 495, 75 Pac. 558, 64 L. R. A. 560.

b. Extent and Limits of Rule — (1) OCCUPANCY BY HEAD OF FAMILY. Inasmuch as the purpose of the homestead laws is to secure to the family their usual place of residence, actual occupancy of the premises is in general necessary to confer the benefit of the exemption;⁷² and therefore the widow has no homestead right in property of which her husband dies seized, and which he had not occupied as a homestead.⁷³ But under statutes which do not make occupancy

In Louisiana a homestead act which exempts one hundred and sixty acres of land from seizure and sale is in favor of a debtor who owns the land, and who has a family dependent upon him for support. The benefit it confers is strictly personal. It is in derogation of common right and does not descend to the debtor in favor of his widow or children. Briant v. Lyons, 29 La. Ann. 64; Burnett v. Walker, 23 La. Ann. 335. There is, however, a statute which gives a homestead to the value of one thousand dollars to a widow "in necessitous circumstances" (Duplain's Succession, 113 La. 786, 37 So. 755; Christie's Succession, 20 La. Ann. 383, 96 Am. Dec. 411); and the fact that the widow had been the concubine of her deceased husband does not impair her claim to this exemption (Sabalot v. Populus, 31 La. Ann. 854).

Where the homestead is secured to the surviving "wife," the surviving "widow" is meant. Coughanour v. Hoffman, 2 Ida. (Hasb.) 290, 13 Pac. 231.

Absence of occupancy by wife.—Where the wife of a mortgagor, who did not join in the mortgage, had not lived on the mortgaged property prior to the execution of the mortgage, she was not entitled to homestead therein as against the mortgagee, who was ignorant of her marriage. Hall v. Marshall, (Mich. 1905) 102 N. W. 658.

necessary to the acquisition of homestead rights, it is not necessary either to acquisition or exemption of a widow's homestead right that there should have been actual occupancy of the land.⁷⁴

(ii) RESIDENCE WITHIN THE STATE OF HUSBAND OR SURVIVING WIFE. If the husband was a non-resident, there is no homestead right in favor of the widow.⁷⁵ The constitutional and statutory provisions in regard to homestead exemptions are intended for the benefit only of residents and their families.⁷⁶ So to secure the immunities bestowed by statute, the widow must have been a resident of the state at the time of her husband's death.⁷⁷ But mere temporary absence of the wife from the state of her residence will not forfeit her homestead rights.⁷⁸

(iii) INDEBTEDNESS OR INSOLVENCY OF ESTATE. Under the provisions in some states to entitle the widow to homestead, the estate must be indebted,⁷⁹ and in some it must be insolvent.⁸⁰ But unless the provisions contain limitations of this character the widow's right to the exemption by survivorship is held to exist whether the husband's estate is indebted or not.⁸¹ So the fact that the estate is insolvent does not take away the widow's right to homestead,⁸² even though the property to be set apart as homestead constitutes the entire estate of the decedent.⁸³

(iv) PROPERTY IN EXCESS OF CERTAIN AMOUNT OVER INDEBTEDNESS. Under some statutes, no homestead right is permitted in the estate of a deceased person, assets of which, over and above all debts due and charges of administration, shall exceed a specified amount. In applying the provisions thereof, it has been held that the personal property which is assigned by the probate court to the widow, and likewise the widow's dower, are not to be reckoned among the assets.⁸⁴

(v) INTESTACY OF HUSBAND. In one state the exemption is continued in favor of the surviving wife only in case the husband died intestate.⁸⁵

(vi) ABSENCE OR EXISTENCE OF CHILDREN—(A) In General. By the prevailing rule the existence of children surviving the husband is not necessary to invest the widow with homestead rights,⁸⁶ even though the statute secures the right of succession expressly to the surviving wife and children.⁸⁷

(B) Existence of Minor Children. Under some statutes the widow is not entitled to an assignment of homestead out of her husband's estate if all the children have arrived at full age.⁸⁸

(vii) CONTINUANCE OF EXISTENCE OF MARRIAGE RELATION. The right of the widow in the homestead rests upon the marriage relationship.⁸⁹ But it is held in a number of states that if the wife abandons her husband without just cause, she thereby forfeits her rights, as survivor, in the residence property;⁹⁰ especially if she be guilty of conjugal infidelity.⁹¹ In other states abandonment of the husband by the wife,⁹² or of the wife by the husband,⁹³ although coupled with conjugal infidelity,⁹⁴ does not forfeit the survivor's homestead rights. The mere fact that the wife does not reside with her husband at the time of his death may not deprive her of homestead rights.⁹⁵ And if she be driven from home by his cruelty⁹⁶ or a voluntary separation is agreed upon by both parties⁹⁷ and a

Reasons on which conflicting views are based.—Where the wife voluntarily and without cause abandons her home and her husband, she is no longer within the spirit and provisions of the constitution and the statutes; and when there is added to this the offense of an adulterous separation, then by all rules of public policy and good morals she has excluded herself from the society, family circle, and home of her husband, and has placed herself beyond the pale of the homestead laws. Freeman v. Freeman, 111 Tenn. 151, 76 S. W. 825. In support of the opposite view it has been said that she cannot be debarred of the homestead right, without reading into the constitution an exception that does not exist to the effect that if the wife abandons her husband and is guilty of immoral conduct she shall forfeit her homestead right; that the wife, although living separate, might have returned to her duty at any time; and that the husband owes her protection and support so long as the marital relation exists. division of their property is effected,⁹⁸ or if a limited divorce a mensa et thoro is obtained⁹⁹ the wife retains her privileges under the law as a survivor. A person not the wife of a decedent can claim no homestead rights as against the lawful spouse and the legitimate children,¹ and if a wife, although she acts in good faith, believing her former husband is dead, remarries, and the first husband thereafter dies, she can claim no homestead rights in his property until the second marriage is annulled.²

(viii) EFFECT OF POSSESSION OF OTHER PROPERTY. The fact that a widow owns property other than the homestead will not usually defeat her claim to the latter, whether such property be her separate estate³ or was obtained through her husband.⁴ But if the husband conveys the home place to the wife as a gift, to be held as a residence, she is not entitled to an allowance out of his estate in lieu of a homestead after his death.⁵

(ix) EFFECT OF INSANITY OF WIFE. The fact that the wife was insane and confined in an asylum after her husband's death does not in any way affect her homestead rights.⁶

(x) EXISTENCE OF DOWER OR OTHER INTEREST IN PROPERTY. There is a sharp conflict upon the question whether the widow of a homesteader may claim both dower and homestead. In some states she is entitled to both,⁷ while in others it is held that she cannot claim both dower and homestead.⁸ So under the

In North Carolina the acceptance of a homestead laid off in the lifetime of the husband by a widow is no bar to her right of dower in the other lands of her husband outside of such homestead. McAfee v. Bettis, 72 N. C. 28. But upon the death of a man seized in fee of land, leaving a widow and minor children, without having had a homestead laid off, the double rights of dower and homestead do not attach together simul et simul, either in the widow or widow and children, but dower having been assigned to the widow, the children are only entitled to a homestead sub modo, i. e., a present interest of the enjoyment of which is postponed until after the death of the dowress. Graves v. Hines, 108 N. C. 262, 13 S. E. 15; Watts v. Leggett, 66 N. C. 197. And see Gregory v. Ellis, 86 N. C. 579; McAfee v. Bettis, 72 N. C. 28.

statutes of some states the widow is entitled to dower unless her interest in the homestead shall equal or exceed one-third interest therein, for and during her natural life, in which event she is not entitled to dower in addition to homestead.⁹

c. Waiver, Release, or Bar¹⁰—(i) IN GENERAL. The widow's homestead interest is not barred by an antenuptial contract by which she renounces her homestead claim;¹¹ by taking other parties to reside with her;¹² by an agreement between herself, her husband and the latter's heirs by which she consents to the sale of the homestead and payment to her of a child's share;¹³ by her contract of release of all claim in the homestead, in consideration of a payment to her of part of the purchase-money, where such part is reinvested in a new home instead;¹⁴ by her failure to object to the sale of decedent's personalty by the administrator;¹⁵ by her release as to part of an entire tract, where the portion occupied by the dwelling is not included in such waiver;¹⁶ by her failure promptly to select her exempt estate;¹⁷ by her execution of a rent note to a child to whom, jointly with herself, the husband's vendor had conveyed the homestead premises against her protest;¹⁸ by her failure to object to her husband transacting his business at a business homestead in the name of another;¹⁹ by her becoming his executrix,²⁰ or executrix and residuary legatee;²¹ or by her obtaining an unsatisfied money judgment for a year's support.²² So it has been held that her request to a third party to buy the decedent's land will not estop her from afterward claiming a homestead therein.²³ So her consent to the sale of the deceased husband's property,²⁴ her purchase and residence upon other premises as a homestead, and subsequent sale thereof, where her right in the husband's property is held jointly with the children,²⁵ or an invalid judicial sale of the home property,²⁶ will not necessarily be subservient to the homestead while it continues, and may be asserted on the extinguishment of homestead.

estop her from asserting her rights to the residence property.²⁷ On the other hand the widow waives her right to homestead by joining with the husband in conveying the homestead to minor children.²⁸ And a sale under the widow's mortgage of a community homestead divests her of her right of occupancy.²⁹ If she stands by and permits a sale of the residence estate in a suit to which she is a party and then removes from the premises she cannot afterward set up her right as against the purchaser.³⁰ So by taking a lease of the homestead tract from the heirs, conveying back to them, canceling the lease, and accepting other provisions for her support;³¹ by abandoning the homestead during her husband's lifetime;³² by her release of all rights in the homestead after her husband's death, and her acquiescence in such release for a long period of time;³³ or by failing to raise an issue concerning her homestead rights, in a proceeding instituted by her for partition of community property after the husband's death,³⁴ she will in each instance bar all claims by her to a homestead by survivorship. And she waives her rights to rents and profits by failing to object to an administrator cultivating the home place for the benefit of the estate, where the proceeds from such cultivation are not misapplied.³⁵

(II) ELECTION TO TAKE UNDER THE WILL. If the testator devises a portion of his estate to his widow in lieu of what the law may give her, and she accepts it, her statutory rights of homestead are thereby destroyed;³⁶ but not if the gift in lieu of the homestead is not accepted by her.³⁷

(III) ELECTION BETWEEN DOWER AND YEAR'S SUPPORT. Where a husband, as the head of a family, has a homestead set apart for himself and wife and afterward dies, his widow may elect either to allow the homestead to remain for her benefit, as the sole beneficiary, or to take a year's support out of the homestead property.³⁸

(IV) ACCEPTANCE OR CLAIM OF DOWER. In jurisdictions where both dower and the homestead may be assigned to the widow, an allotment of the former does not extinguish her right to the latter,³⁹ unless the assignment of homestead is rendered impracticable by her own acts,⁴⁰ although such an assignment necessarily constitutes a waiver of dower in states where both cannot exist.⁴¹

(v) REMARriage. In perhaps a majority of jurisdictions a widow by remarrying does not lose her estate by survivorship,⁴² nor does she thereby destroy the rights of the decedent's family in his homestead.⁴³ In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that the widow may retain her homestead privileges only during widowhood.⁴⁴

(vi) ALIENATION. Under the statutes of some states alienation by a widow has been held not to constitute an abandonment by her of the exempt character of the property,⁴⁵ especially if she conveys her interest subject to the homestead⁴⁶ or conveys an undivided interest, retaining the possession, use, and profits of the land.⁴⁷ But under the statutes of other states her homestead rights are lost to her by alienation.⁴⁸

this is that if the property should be subjected to the payment of debts, the exemption would be deprived of the features which recommend it to favor.⁵⁰ Nevertheless minor children are generally those contemplated by the homestead enactments as beneficiaries of the homestead and an adult cannot claim its benefits,⁵¹ although the rule is otherwise under some statutes.⁵² Until their interest is legally terminated, minor children are protected in the enjoyment of the homestead;⁵³ nor can their rights be imperiled by order of court vesting title in the widow,⁵⁴ nor by a sale of the premises.⁵⁵

b. Extent and Limits of Rules. Under some statutes the children are not entitled to the exemption unless the father dies intestate,⁵⁶ and under others the children's right of homestead is dependent upon the indebtedness⁵⁷ or insolvency⁵⁸ of the estate; but this is not so where the statutes contain no such limitation.⁵⁹ Their rights are not affected by the fact that they own other property besides the homestead,⁶⁰ nor by the fact that their parents did not apply for a homestead,⁶¹ nor by a devise made to them by the testator;⁶² and a child in ventre sa mere at the time of its father's death may claim as may a child which was then in esse.⁶³ So a divorce of the parents, after a division of their property has been agreed upon, has been deemed ineffectual to deprive the children of the use of their father's homestead after his death, although they are then in the lawful custody of their mother.⁶⁴

Under the statutes of Illinois the surviving spouse may defeat the homestead rights of the children by abandonment of the homestead premises (Kloss v. Wylezalek, 207 Ill. 328, 69 N. E. 863; Lagger v. Mutual Union Loan, etc., Assoc., 146 Ill. 285, 33 N. E. 946; Shepard v. Brewer, 65 Ill. 383; Buck v. Conlogue, 49 Ill. 391), or by a conveyance of the premises, and delivery of possession pursuant to the conveyance (but see Rev. St. (1874) c. 52, § 4), or by a release or consent to the sale of the homestead interest under order of court (Robb v. Howell, 180 Ill. 177, 54 N. E. 324; Hayack v. Will, 169 Ill. 145, 48 N. E. 292. For rule under former statutes see Miller v. Marekle, 27 Ill. 402; Kingman v. Higgins, 100 Ill. 319). Nevertheless, to make a release valid as against the children, an order of court is necessary as well when the children are occupying it jointly, as when they are occupying it alone (Lagger v. Mutual Union Loan, etc., Assoc., 146 Ill. 283, 33 N. E. 946); and the rules stated have no application where the surviving spouse stands in the relation of step-parent to the children of the deceased, the reason being that a step-parent is under no obligation to support the children of the deceased spouse, and has no power or control over them (Hayack v. Will, 169 Ill. 145, 48 N. E. 292; Kingman v. Higgins, 100 Ill. 319). A mortgage of the premises by the surviving spouse and a sale thereunder does not affect the homestead rights of the children. Loeb v. McMahon, 89 Ill. 487.

the homestead, as such, by virtue of the homestead right of the deceased parent (Shannon v. Gray, 59 Tex. 251; Kilgore v. Graves, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 409), and the surviving spouse may sell or mortgage it, if it be separate property (Brewer v. Wall, 23 Tex. 585, 76 Am. Dec. 76). If, however, the property belongs to the community, the interest of a deceased spouse passes by operation of law to her heirs, and the surviving spouse cannot impair their rights by a conveyance (Bell v. Schwartz, 56 Tex. 353. And see HUSBAND AND WIFE), or by abandonment (Craddock v. Edwards, 81 Tex. 609, 17 S. W. 228).

property,⁷¹ a release of homestead rights,⁷² or making permanent improvements and charging the children's interests therewith;⁷³ nor will the beneficiaries be affected by a widow's election to take a child's share of the husband's estate in lieu of dower.⁷⁴ If the homestead has been disposed of by the husband in his wife's lifetime but without her consent, the heirs retain an interest in the property after the husband's death.⁷⁵ The surviving child is likewise protected from the effects of an antenuptial contract made by his parents,⁷⁶ or a devise of the homestead by the widow.⁷⁷ And their rights are not affected by the act of a guardian in renting the premises to a third person,⁷⁸ or by the failure of a guardian ad litem to assert their rights by answer in an administrator's proceeding to sell the decedent's real estate.⁷⁹

d. Rights as Affected by Their Own Acts. During minority the children are incapable of waiving or abandoning their homestead rights by any act or declaration.⁸⁰ They do not waive their rights by a temporary absence from the state;⁸¹ nor are they barred by mere absence from the home place,⁸² nor by removal from the premises,⁸³ nor by paying rent to the widow in ignorance of their rights;⁸⁴ neither are they barred by delaying, while minors, to assert a claim during the continuance of the widow's right or after its termination,⁸⁵ although lapse of time after the children have arrived at full age may prevent them from attacking a sale of the premises made under order of court by the surviving parent.⁸⁶

e. Enforcement and Protection of Rights—(i) IN GENERAL. If the interests of the children are subject to a lien previously existing against the homestead, so much of the premises should be sold as is not claimed by them as a residence, in order to exonerate the homestead for their benefit.⁸⁷ If the property in which an exemption is asserted is to be partitioned, the homestead portion will be assigned to a surviving child of the homesteader, in preference to surviving grandchildren unless such an assignment will result in such portion going to the creditors of the child, in which event the grandchildren are preferred to the surviving child.⁸⁸ It has been held that minor children work out their rights independently of the surviving parent,⁸⁹ and hence as heirs they may sue for a trespass to the homestead,⁹⁰ although it also held that they possess no right to vindicate by suit a mere privilege of homestead as if it were a property interest;⁹¹ nor do they possess such an interest in community property as enables them to redeem from a foreclosure sale, where the law vests the whole title to such property in the surviving spouse.⁹² On the death of the head of a family, the heirs are necessary parties to proceedings affecting the homestead.⁹³ If a child asks that a foreclosure sale of an encumbered homestead, made to the widow, be set aside and title to one half decreed in him, the relief will not be granted unless such child contributes ratably to the payment of the encumbrance, which was discharged by the widow's purchase;⁹⁴ and if the child sues after he is of age, having never been in possession of the property, and the premises were not a homestead when the debt in question was contracted nor thereafter, he cannot object to their sale on execution.⁹⁵ The children's right of possession rests upon the order of the probate court in some states.⁹⁶ A conveyance of a child's interest in the deceased parent's estate does not make his grantee a tenant in common with the surviving parent, and entitled as such to share possession of the home property.⁹⁷ The guardian of minor children is usually the custodian of their interests⁹⁸ and so entitled to assert their rights in the homestead of a deceased parent.⁹⁹ To this end the court will arrest proceedings to partition a homestead among heirs until the interests of a minor are duly investigated and presented by his guardian;¹ but the latter is not entitled, in behalf of his ward, to claim a sum ordered by the court to be paid by an administrator to the widow in lieu of homestead.²

(II) RENTS AND PROFITS. The surviving children may usually claim a portion of the rents and profits derived from the homestead by the surviving parent,³ by one occupying under him,⁴ or against a purchaser of the premises.⁵ If rents fall due after the father's death, they may be claimed by the children,⁶ and if a child attains majority before obtaining a decree for his proportion of rents and

Order of court as prerequisite.—Where an order of court is required to authorize the guardian and his ward to occupy the premises as a homestead, a renting of the land by the guardian without authority therefor, and his collection of rents and accounting for them in a report confirmed by the probate court will not be the equivalent of such order. *Gaines v. However, the children are not entitled to the entire amount of rent received by the survivor (Carr v. Carr, 177 Ill. 454, 52 N. profits, he may recover such portion as should have been paid to him during his minority.⁷

f. Miscellaneous. The homestead rights of children after the mother's death have been held paramount to the father's curtesy during their minority.⁸ But it has been held that if the husband predecease the wife, the children take subject to the rights of the latter, whether of homestead or of dower,⁹ although such is not the result where the children are entitled to lands as tenants in common, as beneficiaries under a trust.¹⁰ No distinct or independent right of occupancy exists in favor of the minor children as against the surviving spouse,¹¹ although if both widow and children survive the homestead should not be assigned to the widow alone.¹² Minor children have no homestead rights in any particular portion of the property of their deceased parent until it is set apart to them by order of court.¹³

3. SURVIVING HUSBAND.¹⁴ Under the statutes of many states, the right of homestead survives in favor of the husband on the death of the wife,¹⁵ although under some statutes which secure a homestead by succession to the widow the surviving husband is not thus included.¹⁶ Where the former rule prevails, his right of survivorship is held to exist even though no children of the marriage are living,¹⁷ or though they have removed from the homestead upon which he still resides,¹⁸ or have attained their majority,¹⁹ or though he is not a housekeeper with a family,²⁰

Widowed daughter.—It has been held that the return of a daughter, who has been married and become a widow, to her mother's homestead does not restore her as a part of the family (Roco v. Green, 50 Tex. 483; Trammell v. Neal, 1 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 51); but it has also been held that a widowed daughter who returns to her father's home and is domiciled there as a member of his family, when he dies, is entitled to hold her father's homestead exempt from the claims of his creditors (Childers v. Henderson, 76 Tex. 664, 13 S. W. 481).

Grandchildren.—A minor child who resides with his grandparents under such circumstances that he becomes in fact dependent upon them, and they become morally responsible for his nurture, becomes a member of their family within the meaning of the homestead law (Cross v. Benson, 68 Kan. 495, 75 Pac. 558, 64 L. R. A. 560. And see Clark v. Goins, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. 703); but where a minor grandchild whose parents are living and able to support it, with their consent lives for several years with its grandmother as a companion, the arrangement being terminable at the will of either of the parties, it is not such constituent of the family of the grandmother as that, upon the death of the latter intestate and insolvent, it can claim the homestead as against creditors of the estate (Phillips v. Price, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 408, 34 S. W. 784). The grandson of a divorced wife is not entitled to a continuance of the homestead. Schwarzhoff v. Necker, 1 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 325.

A dependent child in no wise related to the decedent and not adopted by him is not a constituent of the family. McMillan v. Hen-

B. What Law Governs. The laws in force at the time of the homesteader's death are controlling in respect of the exemptions in favor of the widow and children.³² Subsequent legislation will not enlarge or diminish their rights in this respect.³³ The proportional interests of the widow and minor children, it has been held, are determined by the law in force when the order of court is made, setting apart a probate homestead to their use.³⁴ If the creditor of a deceased debtor claims that the homestead exceeds in value the statutory amount, its worth at the time of decedent's death will govern.³⁵

C. Retroactive Operation of Statutes. A statute exempting a decedent's homestead estate in the hands of a surviving husband, wife, or children will not be construed to apply to debts contracted prior to its enactment,³⁶ although it has been held not to give it a retrospective operation to regard such debts as barred, provided the debtor died after the law went into effect but at the time the liabilities were incurred a general homestead exemption statute was in force.³⁷ If land is acquired by a married woman and before birth of issue a law is passed giving minor children a right to the homestead of their deceased mother, superior to the husband's estate of curtesy, such law is deemed valid, as to issue subsequently born, as against the surviving husband.³⁸

D. Claims Over Which Survivor's Interest Takes Precedence — 1. DEBTS OF DECEDENT — a. Debts Not Enforceable. The exemption secured to survivors of the debtor is essentially the same as that possessed by him. Hence upon his death the survivors hold the homestead free from all ordinary claims against the estate,³⁹ and may have it laid off to them precisely as it would have been upon application of the debtor.⁴⁰ As the residence property continues exempt, it does not become assets in the hands of the administrator⁴¹ nor subject to his control.⁴² Even debts accruing in the course of administration are non-enforceable against the home place.⁴³

b. Debts Against Which Exemption Cannot Be Claimed—(i) IN GENERAL. See 25 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homestead," § 256. Allotment subject to lien.—In some states it has been decided that the widow's right to an allotment of homestead cannot be denied because of the existence of a judgment lien or mortgage on the premises, which, on enforcement, would be superior to the home-rights of the children;⁵⁴ but the debt should be satisfied if possible out of the rest of the mortgagor's estate, before resort is had to the homestead;⁵⁵ and if the administrator of the husband satisfies the mortgage from assets of the estate, the widow has a right to claim a homestead in the premises without making contribution.⁵⁶ The holder of an enforceable mortgage must pursue his remedy by foreclosure, and not ask the probate court to order, at the time of allotting the homestead, that it be taken subject to the mortgage lien.⁵⁷

2. DEBTS OF SURVIVOR. Where a homestead has vested in the surviving husband or wife, it is not only exempt from the debts of the deceased spouse, but also from the debts of the survivor, whether the latter obligations were incurred prior or subsequent to the death.⁵⁸ If the distributive share in the deceased husband's estate is set apart to the widow in lieu of a homestead, her creditors cannot reach it.⁵⁹ Where a widow has her distributive share of the husband's estate set apart to her out of the homestead, it is not liable for her debts contracted before the husband's death.⁶⁰

3. RIGHTS OF HEIRS AND REMAINDER-MEN. Under the constitutional and statutory provisions of some states the rights of a widow obtained in the homestead by survivorship are paramount not only to those of the husband's creditors but of his heirs as well;⁶¹ thus while the provisions in other states limit and restrict the right in some states her rights are superior to those of the heirs only in case the estate is insolvent,⁶² or if she would be entitled to dower in the premises,⁶³ or if stead claim, since it would still remain subject to the lien notwithstanding the allotment. Jackson v. Sheffield, 107 Ala. 358, 18 So. 106; Norris v. Moulton, 34 N. H. 392.

Rights as against purchaser of equity of redemption.—If the land be sold under a valid mortgage executed by the husband and the equity of redemption is afterward sold by the administrator of the mortgagor, the purchaser at the latter sale cannot buy in the title sold on foreclosure and bar the widow; but the latter may avail herself of her homestead right in the equity of redemption by contributing to the purchase of the title acquired on foreclosure. Montague v. Selb, 106 Ill. 49; Selb v. Montague, 102 Ill. 446.

An heir of real estate, liable to sale for debts of the deceased, who gives bond to the executor for payment of all debts against the estate and who, in performance of such obligation, takes an assignment of a mortgage constituting a valid lien against such property, cannot by foreclosure defeat the widow's right of homestead therein, assigned to her with his assent. *King v. county court, in administration proceedings, set apart the land described therein to the grantor's minor children as a homestead, and the holder of the debt secured made no effort to enforce his lien in such proceedings, he could not thereafter enforce his lien against the land.

the estate is indebted⁶⁴ or if the husband died intestate.⁶⁵ So the rights of minor children are generally held to take precedence over the claims of the heirs.⁶⁶ The widow is under no obligation to insure or to apply money received therefrom to rebuilding so that the heir may not be deprived of his inheritance.⁶⁷ But on the other hand she must not make such use of the property as will injure the value of the freehold.⁶⁸ The widow and remainder-man cannot have a right of homestead in the same land at the same time and her right to possession as against him is exclusive.⁶⁹

E. Extent and Quantity of Estate or Interest — 1. OF WIFE. The privilege of the widow to continue in possession after her husband's death is distinct from her rights as heir.⁷⁰ There is a diversity of holding as to the nature of the estate or interest which is transmitted to the surviving wife, due to a difference in the provisions of the various statutes. Under some statutes the wife takes a fee-simple title,⁷¹ the rule applying equally to property which was the husband's alone or which was a community homestead.⁷² By other homestead laws she is given a life-estate.⁷³ Under others, she has a conditional estate for life, which is characterized as a mere right of occupancy.⁷⁴ So under some statutes she has a mere right of occupancy terminable on remarriage.⁷⁵ And by the constitutional provisions of another state, on the death of the husband the homestead descends and vests as other real property of deceased.⁷⁶ If her right be a life-estate and she inherits a share from one of the decedent's children, such share does not merge in her life-estate and may be reached by her creditors.⁷⁷ The interest carries with it those rights usually accompanying a lawful possession.⁷⁸ She has such an interest as will enable her to maintain trespass against one who wrongfully enters upon the premises,⁷⁹ or to claim the rents and profits arising from the property.⁸⁰

Missouri.—The statutes in this state seem to have been subject to frequent change. Estate analogous to dower.—"The homestead estate of the surviving wife is, by the authorities, quite generally regarded as analogous to the right of dower, which the wife possesses in the lands which her husband died seized of." McLain v. Maricle, 60 Nebr. 353, 358, 83 N. W. 85.

2. OF HUSBAND. There is a diversity of holding as respects the estate or interest which passes to the surviving husband, due to a difference in the provisions of the statutes; hence it has been variously held that he takes a life-estate,⁸¹ a fee-simple title (in a homestead selected by him from a separate property or from the community property),⁸² and in one jurisdiction it is held that the right of the survivor of a community is merely a personal right, and not an estate in land which can be assigned or conveyed.⁸³

3. OF CHILDREN. As shown in a subsequent section the right of surviving children is ordinarily not an estate but an interest which terminates on majority.⁸⁴

F. Property Subject to Appropriation, Nature, Amount, and Extent

— 1. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO APPROPRIATION — a. In General. On the death of a homesteader, his family take such homestead as he left;⁸⁵ and as a rule the surviving spouse or children can claim as a homestead only such property as could have been selected by the deceased.⁸⁶ Hence if the latter's homestead right in specific real estate has been lost by his removal and failure to claim the premises as exempt,⁸⁷ or by otherwise abandoning them,⁸⁸ or if the exemption is asserted in proceeds from a sale under a trust deed executed by both spouses, the widow will not be protected.⁸⁹ Nor can she secure an allotment in the husband's separate property which was never selected by him as a residence and was properly disposed of by his will.⁹⁰ She may obtain, by right of survivorship, a homestead in realty purchased by the husband for a home,⁹¹ or occupied as a residence by the family and conveyed by the husband to the wife to avoid creditors, although never formally designated by him as a homestead;⁹² or in property devised by the husband to her for life and in trust for the minor children⁹³ or in property rented in part to tenants;⁹⁴ or she may, with her minor children, hold land set off to the husband during the lifetime of his former wife.⁹⁵ She may enjoy the rents and profits accruing from the homestead from the time of her husband's death until her election between the homestead and a distributive share.⁹⁶ Minor children continue to enjoy the homestead, whether the land belonged to their deceased father or mother,⁹⁷ although if the property belonged to both parents, and a second wife obtains the husband's one half as alimony, the children of the first marriage are held not to be entitled thereto as a homestead;⁹⁸ and if surviving children have a homestead fixed and determined during the lifetime of their deceased parent upon community property, they cannot secure an exemption in his separate estate.⁹⁹

b. Use as Family Residence. Ordinarily the property set apart to survivors must have been used by the decedent as a place of residence at his death,¹ although it has been held that if he had only a life-estate in the portion on which the dwelling stood, the widow may claim a homestead in the remaining portion of the tract, owned by him in fee.²

c. Property Not Claimed During Life of Decedent. Under some homestead statutes, the property claimed by a survivor must have been impressed with the homestead character during decedent's lifetime,³ but under others this is unnecessary.⁴

2. NATURE OF ESTATE, OWNERSHIP, OR INTEREST. The interest of the decedent need not have been a fee simple,⁵ although it has been held that homestead can be claimed only in property of which he died seized;⁶ and he should have had such an interest as could ordinarily be sold by his personal representative for the payment of debts.⁷ If the decedent was a tenant in common, his surviving children and his widow obtain rights of exemption in the property.⁸ So an equitable title acquired under a contract to purchase,⁹ or the equity of redemption of mortgaged premises,¹⁰ will support a survivor's claim. A homestead is allowed to the widow in property conveyed by the deceased husband without his wife's consent,¹¹ or to a second wife and her child in the husband's moiety of community property which was a homestead under the first marriage, subject to the right of partition by the heirs of the first wife.¹² No homestead, it has been held, can be claimed by a survivor in leasehold property,¹³ or partnership property,¹⁴ at least while firm debts remain unpaid,¹⁵ or in property which decedent conveyed reserving a mere right of occupancy.¹⁶ If the property be held in trust,¹⁷ or adversely,¹⁸ or has been sold on execution before the death of the homesteader,¹⁹ or if the deceased debtor be a tenant at will,²⁰ or his estate is a remainder expectant upon the death of his mother,²¹ or the property is transmitted by inheritance to the children of a former wife,²² the widow obtains no homestead therein.²³

3. ALLOWANCE IN LIEU OF HOMESTEAD. Statutes in some states provide for an allowance in lieu of homestead under certain circumstances varying according to the provisions of the statute,²⁴ as for instance where the residence premises have been sold under legal process during the life of the owner or by his personal representatives after his death;²⁵ where the debtor leaves no homestead;²⁶ where no complete homestead can be assigned;²⁷ where decedent has converted the homestead into money for reinvestment in a home, but dies before effectuating his purpose;²⁸ or where he leaves a homestead which is non-exempt from payment of his debts.²⁹ Where such allowance is permitted, it should be made out of the debtor's entire estate rather than out of any specific property.³⁰ The widow is not ordinarily entitled to have the homestead sold and an allowance made to her in lieu thereof;³¹ nor can she claim an extensive tract of unencumbered land, being non-exempt assets of her husband's estate, instead of a smaller portion of the homestead encumbered by a mortgage, over which her right of exemption is not paramount.³²

4. VALUE, TERRITORIAL EXTENT, AND QUANTITY OF INTEREST.³³ The value of a survivor's homestead is frequently limited by statute,³⁴ although such restriction is not always imposed.³⁵ In determining the amount thus exempt, it has been held that the value at the debtor's death will control and not the value when the homestead was acquired,³⁶ although the contrary view also finds support.³⁷ If the premises are subject to a mortgage, the survivor's estate is valued as though no mortgage existed;³⁸ but if the property is worth more than both the statutory amount of exemption and the mortgage, and is sold to pay debts of the decedent, the survivor's homestead interest need not contribute to discharging the mortgage.³⁹ In ascertaining the widow's interest in the debtor's homestead, it is permitted to estimate what interest she has in the premises as owner in her own right,⁴⁰ and as between her and the minor children, the value of her life-interest in the homestead as well as of their rights must be taken into account;⁴¹ although her interest is not to be considered lessened by the fact that the children may also occupy the premises during their minority.⁴² Her rights in the homestead do not depend upon the amount paid from her separate estate in improvements or the discharge of encumbrances on the property.⁴³ Where the homestead is sold, infant children may, in the discretion of the court, be given the interest on the amount exempted, or the present cash value of their estate, or a reinvestment of the fund in a homestead for their benefit may be directed.⁴⁴ In extent the privilege of survivorship is limited to one homestead for all,⁴⁵ and of the statutory quantity.⁴⁶ If there is an excess above the size fixed by statute, and the property is sold by an administrator, but is subject to homestead exemption, the purchaser obtains title to the excess.⁴⁷ If the husband and wife own contiguous tracts, both occupied as a homestead, with the dwelling on the latter's land, she may have a homestead right in the husband's tract upon his death.⁴⁸ If a decedent was a tenant in common, the survivors are entitled to a full homestead right in his share of the land.⁴⁹

G. Duration and Termination of Right—1. AS AFFECTED BY OCCUPANCY OR THE ABSENCE THEREOF. In most jurisdictions the exempt character of the decedent's homestead continues only so long as it is occupied by the surviving spouse,⁵⁰ although in others such continued residence is not required.⁵¹ It has been held that the occupancy required need not be actual and personal residence upon the premises.⁵² Hence a guardian⁵³ or a guardian's tenant⁵⁴ may occupy for the ward, or a tenant for the widow and children;⁵⁵ or the premises may be cultivated by a child who resides elsewhere,⁵⁶ or may, as it has been held, be used by the beneficiary merely for storage of furniture;⁵⁷ but an unexecuted intention to occupy will not prolong the exemption.⁵⁸

If a widow remarries and the second husband has a homestead, she cannot, by her tenant, retain an estate of homestead unas-

2. ABANDONMENT AS TERMINATING WIDOW'S INTEREST.⁵⁹ An abandonment of the premises sufficient to deprive survivors of the right to a homestead is not effected by a mere temporary absence,⁶⁰ although a permanent removal will in most states occasion a loss of a widow's rights.⁶¹ If, however, she surrenders the premises under duress and in ignorance of her rights, there is no destruction of the homestead privilege.⁶²

6. MISCELLANEOUS. A surviving husband's estate of homestead is not destroyed by merger in a mortgage estate assigned to him by the holder of the mortgage security upon the premises.⁶⁹ Under the statutes of one state a widow's estate for life in the homestead terminates by way of merger when the premises are set apart to her as a year's support.⁷⁰

H. Proceedings For Selection and Allotment—1. ASSERTION AND PROTECTION OF RIGHT IN GENERAL. Statutes prescribing a method for setting aside the homestead of a debtor during his life do not exclude other methods for setting apart the homestead of the widow after his death,⁷¹ aside from proceedings by application or petition for homestead, which is considered in a subsequent section.⁷² Homestead rights of a widow may be asserted, according to the terms of the special statute involved, by her answer to a petition of heirs for partition,⁷³ by her return of a proper schedule of the decedent's property and record thereof,⁷⁴ by a bill in equity to have the homestead ascertained and set off to her,⁷⁵ by bill in equity for subrogation to the rights of decedent who died pending an appeal in proceedings in which he had appealed for a homestead,⁷⁶ by applying to the court, ordering a sale of the decedent's lands, for payment of debts, and securing an allotment by the decree of sale.⁷⁷ And where a survivor refuses to surrender possession of premises claimed by him as a homestead and sold under a decree of court, his rights may be determined on confirmation of a report of sale of the premises.⁷⁸ The exemption, it has been held, cannot be secured in an ejectment suit brought by the heirs,⁷⁹ nor by a defense to an action brought to set aside a conveyance made by the decedent, to his minor children as in fraud of creditors.⁸⁰

Since the survivors as beneficiaries of the homestead are not represented by the executor or administrator of the deceased,⁸¹ their interests are not barred by a decree of sale made by the probate court on petition of such personal representative,⁸² nor by his sale, whether unconfirmed by the court⁸³ or finally consummated and approved.⁸⁴ The purchaser at the administrator's sale buys at his peril, at least where the widow has previously filed her petition for allotment,⁸⁵ and if the sale proceeds without her intervention, although she is enabled to intervene by statute, she may obtain a right of allotment from the avails of sale.⁸⁶ The purchaser of the premises at such vendue, if they exceed the statutory valuation, may, it is held, become a tenant in common with the survivors who continue to own a homestead estate therein,⁸⁷ since the sale is presumed to have been made subject to the homestead right.⁸⁸ Minors may assert their rights by application for allotment, at any time before administration of the estate has been closed;⁸⁹ but the probate court is sometimes given a discretion to allow or refuse an allotment to them, where the widow has sold her interest in the property, and it is impracticable for the minors to live together and the income on their shares is adequate for their support.⁹⁰

2. NECESSITY FOR ALLOTMENT. In a number of states, where the area and value of a homestead which was occupied by decedent on his death does not exceed the limit allowed by law as exempt, and the homestead is not a part of a larger tract of land, no selection and setting apart thereof to the survivors is necessary to invest them with the homestead right in such property;⁹¹ but all that is necessary is that the claim should be asserted or made known before the personal representative acquires dominion over it for the purposes of administration, or some creditor procures its sale before the payment of debts.⁹² Where, however, the tract consists of a larger area, or is of greater value than can be claimed as exempt, selection and allotment of homestead to the survivors is necessary.⁹³

Applications of rule.—An allotment is held unnecessary to enable a survivor to defend a suit brought by one who claims title under the deceased spouse (Parks v. Reilly, 5 Allen (Mass.) 77); to empower a minor to freely use the homestead until he becomes of age (Ring v. Smith, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1115); or to enable the widow and heirs to maintain an action to remove a cloud upon their title (Sossaman v. Powell, 21 Tex. 664). And if the surviving spouse continues to occupy the premises, he may be chargeable with taxes and repairs, although there has been no allotment of homestead to him, Wilson v. Proctor, 28 Minn. 13, 8 N. W. 830.

In California, if there has been no homestead created during the existence of a community, by compliance with a homestead act, the widow can acquire no homestead interest in the property until an order of court has been made setting it apart to her. In re Poland, 43 Cal. 640. And see In re Lahiff, 86 Cal. 151, 24 Pac. 850; In re Davis, 69 Cal. 458, 10 Pac. 671.

94. See, generally, COURTS.

vivorship is usually vested in courts of probate jurisdiction,⁹⁵ although in some states and under some circumstances these questions may be determined by courts of chancery.⁹⁶ The circuit court is denied jurisdiction over a dispute respecting title to land, where a conveyance by a deceased husband is attacked;⁹⁷ while a superior court sitting as an ordinary court of law,⁹⁸ or a common pleas court,⁹⁹ has been held to have no jurisdiction over the assignment of homestead. So it has been held that a district court has no jurisdiction to determine whether a widow's claim for an allowance in lieu of homestead is superior to a tax lien.¹

4. NOTICE. Usually all parties interested as owners of the fee or beneficiaries of the homestead should be given notice of a proceeding affecting their rights,² although it has been held that creditors need receive no such notice.³

95. Alabama.—In this state the probate court was formerly denied jurisdiction over questions of homestead. Cochran v. Sorrell, 74 Ala. 310; Keel v. Larkin, 72 Ala. 493; Farley v. Riordan, 72 Ala. 128; Baker v. Keith, 72 Ala. 121; Kelly v. Garrett, 67 Ala. 304; David v. David, 56 Ala. 49; Pettus v. McKinney, 56 Ala. 41. Under the present statute when the property owned by a decedent at the time of his death "does not exceed in amount and value the exemptions allowed in favor of his widow and minor children," the homestead may be allotted to the widow, on her application, to the probate court, before administration granted; but, if her petition shows that the homestead tract contains more than one hundred and sixty acres an allotment of that quantity to her, out of the tract, is void for want of jurisdiction in the probate court to make the order. James v. Clark, 89 Ala. 606, 7 So. 161.

California.—In re Firth, 145 Cal. 236, 78 Pac. 643; Kearney v. Kearney, 72 Cal. 591, 15 Pac. 769; In re Smith, 51 Cal. 563; Mawson v. Mawson, 50 Cal. 539. However, the probate court, in a proceeding merely to set aside a homestead to the surviving wife, has no jurisdiction to adjudicate the question in whom the remainder vests (In re Firth, supra); and it cannot adjudicate respecting mortgages executed prior to filing the declaration of homestead (Chalmers v. Stockton Bldg., etc., Soc., 64 Cal. 77, 28 Pac. 59, superior court sitting as a probate court); nor can it deal with the homestead as assets of the estate (In re Tompkins, 12 Cal. 114). So a probate homestead in community property cannot be claimed by the widow pending administration, as it is subject to decedent's debts. In re Still, 117 Cal. 509, 49 Pac. 463.

Missouri.—Whitehead v. Lapp, 69 Mo. 415; Brown v. Brown, 68 Mo. 388; Brown v. Stratton, 8 Cent. L. J. 46.

Nebraska.—Tyson v. Tyson, (1904) 98 N. W. 1076 (holding that in order to oust the county court of jurisdiction to assign homestead to a widow, the right must be disputed by an issue of fact which, if established, would defeat the claim; and such issue must be one which the county court has no jurisdiction to try); Guthman v. Guthman, 18 Nebr. 98, 24 N. W. 435.

New Hampshire.—Norris v. Moulton, 34 N. H. 392.

It is otherwise in some states. In Arkansas the probate court, being without jurisdiction to try title to land, cannot entertain a suit by a widow against the heirs of her deceased husband to recover her homestead, of which the heirs are in possession, holding it adversely to her homestead claim. James v. James, (Ark. 1904) 80 S. W. 148. In Massachusetts the probate court has no jurisdiction to set out a homestead where the claimant's right is disputed by the heirs or devisees. Mercier v. Chace, 9 Allen (Mass.) 242; Woodward v. Lincoln, 9 Allen (Mass.) 239; Lazell v. Lazell, 8 Allen (Mass.) 575.

96. Wardell v. Wardell, (Nebr. 1904) 99 N. W. 674 (holding that when a husband dies who is the owner of land occupied as a homestead exceeding the value of two thousand dollars and so situated that the dwelling-house and the grounds on which it stands, to the value of the exemption, cannot be set aside, equity has jurisdiction, on application of the administrator, to sell the whole tract to pay debts, and out of the proceeds of the sale to direct investment of two thousand dollars during the life of the widow, the interest to be paid to her for life, and on her death the principal to descend as in case of other exemptions); Lindsey v. Brewer, 60 Vt. 627, 15 Atl. 329; Chaplin v. Sawyer, 35 Vt. 286.

5. PARTIES. To proceedings by the widow for homestead the administrator should be made a party.⁴ Minor children may be joined, but they are not necessary parties.⁵

6. PETITION OR APPLICATION. The survivor need not precede the filing of a petition for homestead by a demand of homestead, nor need she then be in possession of any part of the premises.⁶ An assignment of homestead cannot be obtained on a verbal request to the court, a petition or other application being usually required.⁷ The petition for allotment must contain all the averments required by statute or the court acquires no jurisdiction of the proceeding.⁸ These averments vary according to the provisions of the particular statutes under which the proceeding is brought.⁹ The petition will not be dismissed for mere irregularities which are amendable, but the court should direct that the proper amendments be made.¹⁰

7. CONTEST AND DETERMINATION OF CLAIM. Under some statutes it is the absolute duty of a probate court to grant the application for a homestead, for the use of a widow or minors, when none has been selected by the deceased,¹¹ and in such proceedings no question regarding title to the land can be litigated.¹² Elsewhere any person having an interest adverse to the applicant may contest the claim of homestead in the court where application is made.¹³ The objecting party should, it is held, present his objections to the assignment of homestead and not delay until the premises are sold subject to the exemption;¹⁴ but exceptions by creditors have been allowed to be filed after a return of the appraisers appointed to lay off the homestead.¹⁵ The objections should contain statements of fact and not conclusions respecting the excess in statutory value of the premises and the impossibility of carving a homestead from them;¹⁶ and they should be written in language readily comprehended.¹⁷ Questions relating to evidence are considered in the notes.¹⁸

Limitations of rule.—If an inferior court proceeds to act on the question of homestead exemption but refuses to allow it to minors, on certiorari the objection cannot be raised that no formal application was addressed to the lower court. Connell v. Chandler, 11 Tex. 249. And it has been held that the allowance may be made in compliance with a petition filed by heirs for partition of the property and alleging the homestead rights of the widow. *Schaefer v. 9. Under the Alabama statute in an application by a widow for a homestead exemption before administration, an averment that the real property owned by the decedent at the time of his death does not exceed in amount and value the exemptions allowed in favor of the widow and minor child, or children, or either, is jurisdictional; without it the proceedings are void. Brooks v. Johns, 119 Ala. 412, 24 So. 345.

In Texas if the widow herself petitions for an assignment, her application should show that she acquired an interest in the property as survivor of her husband, the homesteader. Ramey v. Allison, 64 Tex. 697.

The objection may be a plea filed by a creditor to a claim by the survivor, and setting up facts sufficient to bar her right. Tiebout v. Millican, 61 Tex. 514.

18. Burden of proof is upon the survivor as to the existence and extent of the homestead claimed. In re Delaney, 37 Cal. 176; McLane v. Paschal, 47 Tex. 365; McLane v. Paschal, 74 Tex. 20, 11 S. W. 837. And if the heirs of a decedent attempt to protect the decedent's property from levy and sale on the ground that it is exempt as a residence, they must prove themselves members of his family or that they claim under his allotment of homestead. Pierce v. De Graffenreid, 43 Ga. 392.

Presumptions.—The fact that an ancestor

8. ORDER OR DECREE. A description of the land must be given in the order setting apart the homestead or in other papers in the proceeding or the order will be void,¹⁹ and the parties must be identified in the order setting apart the homestead, but this may be done by referring to them as the "family" of the decedent.²⁰ It has been held no objection to allowance of homestead that the order fails to define the boundary and extent of the premises necessary to reach the sum allowed by statute, and to find whether they can be divided.²¹ The order should not determine where the property shall vest on the termination of the homestead.²² It should not direct a sale of the remainder in the homestead to pay a balance of purchase-money, but ought to provide for a sale of a part of the premises for that purpose,²³ nor can the court, if acting as a probate tribunal, decree that the homestead shall be subject to a certain mortgage,²⁴ nor that the return of appraisers, assigning the homestead, shall be set aside unless a specified judgment against the decedent is paid within a given time.²⁵ Mere surplusage in the order will not vitiate it.²⁶ The recording of the order setting apart a homestead is not necessary unless there is some statute requiring it.²⁷

9. METHOD OF ALLOTMENT AND SETTING APART. The manner of allotment prescribed in certain homestead laws is by appraisal.²⁸ Where the statute provides that the court must select and set apart a homestead, it is not bound by the wishes of the applicant but may in its discretion set apart property other than that which the petitioner asks to be set apart.²⁹ If the allotment be money in lieu of a homestead, the survivor should be given merely the income, where the homestead is a life-interest only;³⁰ and if the premises themselves are assigned, the value of improvements thereon, as well as of the land itself, must be considered in determining a survivor's exemption.³¹ If the allotment proceedings are formally defective, through mere irregularities of procedure, this will not vitiate the assignment of the homestead.³²

10. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF ASSIGNMENT OF HOMESTEAD — a. In General. The setting apart of a homestead is generally conclusive upon parties in interest unless appealed from.³³ It has accordingly been held in applying the doctrine stated claimed a homestead during his life raises no presumption that he died in debt. Barker v. Jenkins, 84 Va. 895, 6 S. E. 459.

Admissibility.—In ascertaining the value of the premises at the death of the homesteader, an assessment list for a given year or the value during the year succeeding his death is not admissible. McLane v. Paschal, 74 Tex. 20, 11 S. W. 837. A declaration in the decedent's will that his father paid the purchase-money has been received to disprove the rights of survivors (Shepherd v. White, 11 Tex. 346), and the creditor may in general introduce evidence to show that the premises were not a homestead or were wholly or in part subject to his debt (McLane v. Paschal, 62 Tex. 102).

The fact that an administrator did not publish notice of his appointment did not affect the conclusiveness of an order of the county that creditors³⁴ and heirs³⁵ are concluded thereby. The widow, after acquiescence, is likewise prevented from disputing the allotment made to her.³⁶ If common property, descending one half to the surviving spouse and one half to the children, is set apart to the widow as owner of the fee, she cannot deny a trusteeship of the children's half interest.³⁷ Purchasers of homesteads, buying at a sheriff's sale and subject to an assignment of homestead already made, are bound thereby;³⁸ but where the order of court setting apart community property to a widow as a probate homestead was passed prior to a mortgage thereon being executed by the widow, but not entered until after the date of the mortgage, the validity of the mortgage is not affected.³⁹ It has been held in some jurisdictions that the setting off of the residence property to a survivor does not adjudicate title in the premises, but only withdraws them from administration,⁴⁰ and protects them from creditors,⁴¹ while it is elsewhere held that the assignment vests title in the homestead beneficiaries.⁴² Liens existing against the property remain unaffected by setting it apart as a homestead.⁴³ If the judgment recites the names of decedent's children and sets a homestead apart for the widow, it does not thereby adjudicate the children's interests nor that they are minors;⁴⁴ nor does a setting apart determine that the widow may claim a distributive share in the homestead premises to be enjoyed by her in severalty.⁴⁵ If she and the children are denied a homestead in land held by the deceased under a contract to purchase, they may renew their application after the purchase-price has been fully paid.⁴⁶

b. Collateral Attack. If a court of competent jurisdiction adjudicates homestead rights, its judgment is not open to collateral attack,⁴⁷ even though it is based court setting apart property covered by a trust deed to the children of decedent as their homestead, since all parties interested in the estate were required to take notice of the administration proceedings regularly begun, and the administrator's failure only rendered him liable for any damages occasioned a creditor thereby, as provided by Rev. St. (1895) art. 2067. Tibold v. Palms, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 318, 78 S. W. 726 [affirmed in (Tex. 1904) 79 S. W. 23].

Applications of rule.—No objection can be made by way of collateral attack that the record of proceedings to set aside the homestead does not show by averment that commissioners were citizens of good standing. Smith v. Boutwell, 101 Ala. 373, 13 So. 568. So where the pleadings in a cause attacking the validity of an order of court setting apart a probate homestead to a widow out of the real estate possessed by her husband at his death laid no foundation for a direct attack on the order, the fact that the husband had in his lifetime selected a homestead, which at his death had not been abandoned, upon a law subsequently declared unconstitutional.⁴⁸ But if the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject-matter, its decree may be questioned in a collateral proceeding, as is the case with other decrees.⁴⁹

11. VACATING AND SETTING ASIDE ALLOTMENT. An order prematurely confirming a report of homestead commissioners may be set aside on motion,⁵⁰ and if it has been obtained by the fraud of a homestead applicant it may be annulled.⁵¹ Where an allotment has been irregularly made under an order not absolutely void, a subsequent order setting aside the former cannot be collaterally attacked, if the court which sets it aside acts within its jurisdiction.⁵²

12. REVIEW — a. Appeal. An appeal lies from an order or decree allowing and setting apart a homestead,⁵³ although it must be taken within the time limited by statute⁵⁴ or it will be dismissed.⁵⁵ Such order is not reviewable on appeal from a subsequent order.⁵⁶ An interlocutory order of a probate court which sets aside its own proceedings on the widow's petition for a homestead is not appealable.⁵⁷ If the question of domicile is decided in the lower court and such finding is supported by the evidence it will not be disturbed on appeal,⁵⁸ nor will a reversal be ordered for error in findings of facts by commissioners, when the statute makes final the acceptance of their report by the trial court.⁵⁹ The reviewing court will not assume that a widow is not the head of a family where it is only shown that she has no children,⁶⁰ nor will an allowance to minors in lieu of a homestead be disturbed, if it is not shown that such allowance is insufficient for their support;⁶¹ nor an appraisal by commissioners, fixing the value of a widow's interest in the homestead at the full appraised value of the land;⁶² nor a refusal to allot a homestead to a minor within a few days of his majority, where it is not shown that the use for that period would have been beneficial to him;⁶³ and as a rule errors not appearing upon the face of the judgment-roll are disregarded.⁶⁴ On appeal a proper selection by the widow or commissioners will be presumed where there has been an allotment, occupancy by the widow, and no exceptions filed to the commissioners' report.⁶⁵ The time when debts of the decedent were contracted may, on appeal to an intermediate court, be shown by other evidence than the commissioners' report.⁶⁶

b. Certiorari. Notwithstanding the probate court's want of jurisdiction to sell a homestead during the minority of the children, it is not error on certiorari to refuse to quash an order confirming a sale of decedent's property, on the ground that part of the lands constitute the homestead of the deceased, and that the sale is immaterial. Otto v. Long, 144 Cal. 144, 77 Pac. 885.

A mistake of such applicant as to the extent of his rights is not equivalent to fraud. Wickersham v. Comerford, 104 Cal. 494, 38 Pac. 101.

In California it was held that a petition to vacate an order of allotment alleging that the premises were the deceased husband's separate estate, unoccupied by him as a residence, and that the widow, not being the head of a family, obtained the allotment without notice to non-resident heirs, did not entitle the petitioner to the relief prayed. In re Burns, 54 Cal. 223.

Reassignment.—An intermediate court does not err in refusing to order a reassignment was made during the minority of his child.⁶⁷ No particular description of the property is necessary on certiorari from proceedings in which the probate court failed to set apart a homestead for minors and order a sale of the land.⁶⁸ On certiorari to a district court from an order of the probate court setting apart a homestead, a decree of the county court recognizing a rent contract as superior to the homestead claim cannot be pleaded in bar.⁶⁹

I. Transfer or Encumbrance⁷⁰—1. BY SURVIVING WIFE. Under some statutes the widow's right of homestead exemption giving a right to remain in the occupancy of the homestead during her life she cannot convey or encumber it.⁷¹ Under other statutes, however, it is held that the surviving widow may convey or encumber her interest in the homestead,⁷² especially where she owns the property in her own right and not as widow;⁷³ or it may be sold under an order of court.⁷⁴ It has also been held in some jurisdictions that the widow cannot convey her homestead interest before it has been assigned according to law,⁷⁵ although in of a single homestead to several children of the decedent, where the only question before it is whether several homesteads could be allotted to the children respectively. Carolina Nat. Bank v. Senn, 25 S. C. 572.

W. 559, in which it was said that in such case the circuit court having proceeded by certiorari no guide enabling it to separate the lands which the probate court had power to sell from those constituting the homestead, the heir will be left to his action at law for possession of the latter.

In Louisiana it is held that the waiver or renunciation of the homestead claim, it being a provision of law in favor of the destitute, is against public policy; and a conveyance of the homestead by the widow without consideration is void. Comeau v. Miller, 46 La. Ann. 1324, 16 So. 172.

72. California.—Subject to the right of occupancy of the minor children, if any. Hodge v. Norton, 133 Cal. 99, 65 Pac. 123; Hoppe v. Hoppe, (1894) 36 Pac. 389, 104 Cal. 94, 37 Pac. 894; McHarry v. Stewart, (1893) 35 Pac. 141; Herrold v. Reen, 58 Cal. 443. Foreclosure of the widow's mortgage may be had only after the youngest child becomes of age. Hoppe v. Hoppe, supra. The right to a probate homestead as distinguished from one established by declaration is not the subject of an absolute sale as a distinct estate. In re Moore, 57 Cal. 437. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1474, a wife succeeding to a homestead right by the death of her husband may dispose of the property by will free from any claim of the creditors of either herself or husband. In re Fath, 132 Cal. 609, 64 Pac. 995.

Kansas.—Dayton v. Donart, 22 Kan. 256, holding that if the property or any interest therein is sold while the property is still occupied as a homestead by the widow and any one or more of the minor children, title to such property or interest passes to the purchaser free from all debts except prior encumbrances given by the intestate and wife, and taxes, and debts for purchase-money and improvements, although the property may afterward be abandoned as a homestead by the widow and her children.

Where a deed of trust is executed by a widow upon a homestead in which she has a community interest, a sale thereunder gives to the purchaser an equal estate and equal possessory rights with the surviving children. Grothaus v. De Lopez, 57 Tex. 670. If the widow and an adult son mortgage the homestead, their interest may be sold on foreclosure, subject to rights of occupancy in the widow and minor children. Harle v. Richards, 78 Tex. 80, 14 S. W. 257.

See 25 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homestead," § 257.

In Michigan it has been held that if the widow acquires title to the homestead not under the statute but by purchase from the administrator and afterward sells and abandons it, when the children become of age, no question can arise as to the validity of her conveyance. Drake v. Kinsell, 38 Mich. 232.

2. BY SURVIVING HUSBAND. According to some decisions the surviving husband may mortgage or convey his interest in the homestead acquired by succession,⁷⁷ especially if the interest thus disposed of be his community estate,⁷⁸ or if he is the only remaining constituent of the family;⁷⁹ although the contrary view is also entertained.⁸⁰ And he may sell the homestead to reimburse himself for payment of community debts from the proceeds.⁸¹

3. BY SURVIVING CHILD. An heir of a homesteader may, even during the lifetime of the surviving spouse, convey his vested remainder in the homestead, where such surviving spouse is given only a life-estate.⁸²

J. Partition. The general policy of homestead statutes protects the home property from dismemberment after the owner's death, in order to secure its full enjoyment to the widow and children. Hence it has been held that a child, whether an adult⁸³ or a minor,⁸⁴ cannot secure partition of the residence property during the life and occupancy of the widow, at least while any child remains under age;⁸⁵ and the fact that all the children, being minors, have removed from the homestead has been deemed immaterial.⁸⁶ Likewise if the premises are in the possession of the surviving wife or are being used by the guardian of minors for their benefit, the heirs cannot secure a division,⁸⁷ and this rule applies equally to devisees of the homestead.⁸⁸ If, however, the widow remarries and then abandons or conveys the homestead, the heirs, whose rights were suspended during her occupancy, may, it seems, partition the land.⁸⁹ And if on the death of the widow the children are all adults a partition is permissible.⁹⁰ In a division of the estate, where the homestead and other lands are involved, the widow's rights in the former are saved, whenever justice will permit.⁹¹ The same protection is usually extended to the interests which minor children have in the homestead, such not being deemed the subject of partition,⁹² nor can their reversionary rights therein be partitioned or sold for partition,⁹³ although a division of a decedent's estate, including the homestead, was upheld, where the rights of minor children to use it were not impinged upon.⁹⁴

K. Enforcement of Claims After Termination of Homestead. Administrator's sale.—A homestead of less value than two thousand dollars cannot be disposed of at an administrator's sale, either to discharge encumbrances thereon or to pay debts of the decedent, and a license purporting to authorize such a sale is absolutely void. Bixby v. Jewell, (Nebr. 1904) 101 N. W.

if made subject to the rights of occupancy by survivors, such sale becoming effective when the exemption terminates.¹ After the exemption ceases, it is held under some statutes that the unsatisfied claim of a creditor of the decedent must be presented and allowed as are other claims against the estate.²

L. Course of Descent of Homestead—1. IN GENERAL. The course of descent of homestead property depends upon special constitutional and statutory provisions³ under which the heirs of the homesteader usually take the fee,⁴ but subject to such rights as the law secures to other members of the decedent's family.⁵ The enactments of some states provide that on the death or marriage of a widow the fee descends to her heirs,⁶ or to the heirs of the deceased husband,⁷ and it is sometimes provided that if the surviving wife dies without children, the homestead reverts to the estate of the original homesteader for distribution.⁸ It has been held that a statute giving a qualified preference to children of the whole blood over those of the half blood does not apply to a homestead allotted to a widow out of her deceased husband's estate, so as to exclude her children by a former marriage from sharing in it on her subsequent death intestate.⁹

2. TRANSMISSION OF HOMESTEAD TO SURVIVOR OR TO HEIRS OF COMMUNITY. There is a difference in statutes prescribing the course of descent where the homestead is community property. Under some provisions, where a declaration of homestead is filed upon the death of either spouse, the whole title vests in the survivor and not in the children or heirs.¹⁰ Under other enactments the survivor and minor children take the community estate equally,¹¹ the interest of the decedent passing to his children or heirs and the surviving spouse continuing to own his or her former moiety,¹² but with a right of occupancy which cannot be interfered with by the children or heirs.¹³ Where both the surviving spouse and heirs or children thus hold title, the death of the former passes his or her interest to the heirs of such spouse.¹⁴

3. HOMESTEAD IN SEPARATE PROPERTY OF HUSBAND OR WIFE. Where a homestead is selected from the separate property of the husband or wife, it descends in accordance with the special statutory provisions on that subject.¹⁵ Property will not be considered as the separate estate of the wife merely because her husband, who owned it separately, conveyed it to her after she had selected it as a homestead.¹⁶ In California if a homestead is established in the separate property of husband or wife, and such separate owner dies, the surviving spouse takes the entire estate if there are no minor children; ¹⁷ but if there are minor children also surviving, the husband or wife takes only a fractional part thereof and the children take the residue.¹⁸

wife,²³ will not necessarily dissolve the family and release the homestead, where the deserted spouse continues to occupy the premises; and the voluntary separation of the parties has been held not to deprive the wife of her right of occupancy in the premises,²⁴ unless a contract has been entered into by both spouses dividing the property.²⁵

b. Divorce.²⁶ It has frequently been held that in the absence of contrary provisions inserted in the decree, a divorce destroys a wife's rights to the homestead, whether she be plaintiff or defendant in the proceedings;²⁷ but if after divorce she continues to occupy the premises as a home for herself or herself and a minor child,²⁸ or if the land was her separate property,²⁹ or if the decree for divorce secures the enjoyment of the premises to her,³⁰ or if she is abandoned by the husband, who procures a divorce by publication and without her knowledge,³¹ the homestead continues exempt. Similarly it has been held that the husband, being the head of a family, is not deprived of his homestead privileges by the granting of a divorce, where he continues thereafter to occupy the land.³² If the divorce stead of the husband because of the destruction of the dwelling-house is too short a time to raise any presumption of abandonment of the homestead. Newton v. Russian, (Ark. 1905) 85 S. W. 407.

c. Death. Once an estate of homestead is acquired, it is not necessarily destroyed by the death of the claimant's wife or family,³⁶ especially where the debtor continues to reside upon the premises,³⁷ and has dependents who make their home with him.³⁸

B. Removal From Homestead³⁹—1. ABSENCE FROM HOMESTEAD— a. In General. Removal of a debtor and his family from a homestead without an intention to return will destroy the right of exemption,⁴⁰ although a new home-poverty,⁴⁷ if there is an intention of returning as soon as circumstances will permit.⁴⁸ A surrender of the premises under decree of court is not an abandonment.⁴⁹

c. Absence For Business Purposes. A removal from the homestead for temporary business purposes will not debar the debtor from his exemption if he continually purposes to return.⁵⁰ Hence such absence to engage in trade,⁵¹ or to seek work elsewhere,⁵² to raise crops during several seasons on the land of another,⁵³ to dispose of a stock of goods owned by the wife,⁵⁴ to hold an official position,⁵⁵ or to secure a more convenient location for the practice of medicine,⁵⁶ will not forfeit the homestead.

d. Absence For Education of Children. If the debtor removes from the home property for the purpose of obtaining better educational facilities for his children, his absence is not regarded as an abandonment, if the removal is not to be permanent.⁵⁷

e. Absence on Account of Health. Where the state of the debtor's health renders it necessary or advisable for him to remove temporarily from his home, the property remains exempt despite such absence.⁵⁸

f. Filing Claim or Notice on Removal.⁵⁹ Under some exemption laws, absence from the homestead beyond a given period does not work an abandonment if a claim of homestead or notice of removal is filed prior thereto;⁶⁰ and it has been held that a debt contracted during such period cannot attach to the premises even if the notice of removal is not filed until after the time specified has expired.⁶¹ Where the law directs this notice, it will be too late if filed after levy,⁶² or after there has been an apparent abandonment for several years and another place has in the meantime been occupied as a residence.⁶³ Failure to file the claim of exemption, taken in connection with other facts, may show an intent to abandon.⁶⁴

2. INTENT TO RETURN — a. In General. A temporary absence from the homestead will not forfeit the right of exemption where there is a constant and abiding intent to return.⁶⁵ But if the absence is prolonged, it may, if there is no evidence of a fixed intention to return, constitute an abandonment,⁶⁶ as does a purpose to abandon, conceived after leaving the homestead for a temporary absence.⁶⁷

b. Contingent Intent to Return. Where there is no present intention of returning existing at the time of removal, but a mere possible, or at most a probable, future purpose contingent upon the happening or not happening of a certain event, a removal from a homestead constitutes an abandonment thereof.⁶⁸ It has been held that a homestead is not lost where a return is intended when the city in which it is situated attains a certain population,⁶⁹ or if the debtor fails to find a new home,⁷⁰ or when the children of the homesteader shall marry.⁷¹

3. ACTS CONSTITUTING ABANDONMENT⁷²—a. In General. Abandonment of a homestead is almost entirely a question of intent and does not therefore depend upon the homesteader's doing or not doing particular acts.⁷³ This intent is, however, to be determined from the facts and circumstances accompanying the removal or absence from the homestead, as well as from the express declarations of the homesteader on that subject.⁷⁴ Thus a loss of homestead rights has been held to follow where the homesteader contracted to sell his home, and leased it, determining upon another place of residence, but left part of his furniture upon the homestead property and fed his stock there;⁷⁵ where he deserted his family, removed from the state, declared his intent not to live with his wife thereafter, and claimed a residence elsewhere, and the wife removed to another county;⁷⁶ where he removed from the state and upon his return after a long absence rented his former homestead;⁷⁷ where he emigrated from the state, leaving part of his personal property in his former dwelling, but returned several times a year for supplies and to look after his property;⁷⁸ where he removed from the state, having sold part of his personal effects at auction, and his mother remained in charge of the premises;⁷⁹ where he left the premises, engaged in various occupations elsewhere, and finally removed from the state;⁸⁰ where he built and removed to a new home in the same city, leaving a few old books and a desk in his former dwelling, and kept beehives on the premises;⁸¹ and where an employee removed out of the state at the direction of his employer and did not return after his discharge.⁸² But it has been held that no abandonment was occasioned where the former residence tract was used in connection with a neighboring one to which the family of the homesteader removed;⁸³ where the owner moved from a town-house to a country residence, leaving part of his personal effects in the former and intending to return;⁸⁴ where he removed from a farm homestead to a town, leaving most of his household goods at the former, and considered it his home;⁸⁵ where he left his residence for that of his son, selling his personalty, but soon afterward made arrangements to return to his former home and there reside;⁸⁶ where the family withdrew from their homestead solely through fear of war;⁸⁷ where the husband and wife left the dwelling, removed their furniture and went out to work separately, the wife returning from time to time to care for the property;⁸⁸ where the head of a family purchased a lot for a home but converted the outbuildings into dwellings, fenced them off from his residence, rented and attempted to sell them and have them removed;⁸⁹ or where the owner stored his personal property in his dwelling, and slept there part of the time but took his meals elsewhere.⁹⁰ A prolonged absence from a homestead does not raise a conclusive presumption that it has been abandoned;⁹¹ but where such absence is continued for a number of years, and there is no circumstance or act which shows an intention to return and occupy the homestead, the length of the absence may become a controlling circumstance.⁹²

b. Removal and Conveyance.⁹³ If the homesteader and his family removes from the premises and he afterward conveys them by a valid and absolute deed,⁹⁴ or if there is a sale followed by a removal,⁹⁵ a loss of homestead rights will usually result. But if the removal follows a conveyance void by statute because not joined in by the wife,⁹⁶ or if the premises are rented out by the debtor and a temporary removal thereupon occurs,⁹⁷ the homestead is not deemed abandoned.

c. Offer or Desire to Sell. A publicly declared intention to move away and sell,⁹⁸ a willingness to convey, followed by a removal,⁹⁹ a removal with an intention to acquire a new home if the former one can be sold,¹ an offer to sell by an owner temporarily residing away from the home premises,² or an unexecuted intention to sell and reinvest the proceeds in another home³ does not show an abandonment.

d. Necessity For Actual Relinquishment of Possession. An unperformed intention to remove from the premises will not constitute an abandonment; there must be an intention to change the residence and an actual change.⁴

e. Abandonment of a Business Homestead. A business homestead may be abandoned and the exemption lost by the discontinuance of the business of the homesteader upon the premises;⁵ and an intention entertained after abandonment to again use the property for business purposes as soon as the owner is able will not render them exempt.⁶ But it has been held that renting out the larger part of a business house, retaining a small portion as an office,⁷ temporarily quitting business on account of illness, leasing the premises but with the intent to reëngage in trade as soon as restored in health,⁸ leasing the premises for a few months, and going out to personal service but with the intent to return to them at the end of that time,⁹ or interrupting the conduct of the debtor's business by performing the duties of a public officer¹⁰ will not cause a loss of the homestead. But leasing the premises for several years, with an option of renewal, where there is only an indefinite intention to resume the business on the land will constitute an abandonment.¹¹

one homestead purpose to another does not constitute an abandonment.²³ Where, however, there is a fixed intention carried into execution, to no longer use, for the purposes of a home or as a place to exercise the calling or business of the head of a family, a portion of the property, but to appropriate the same to other uses,²⁴ as where a person owning a block in a city upon which his home stands erects thereon solely for the purpose of renting them to others buildings to be used for mercantile or other purposes, and so uses them,²⁵ there is an abandonment. The homestead exemption will not be destroyed by the erection on the land occupied by the debtor and his family of some structure useful to him in his business or calling.²⁶ A business homestead is not abandoned in part by tearing down a portion of the building standing on it, for the purpose of erecting a new building, which new building is immediately erected, and before it is finished and occupied is used in connection with the old one.²⁷ An easement may be created on or through land, without in any manner affecting its character as a homestead.²⁸

C. Declaration of Abandonment, Conveyance, or Lease — 1. DECLARATION OR NOTICE OF ABANDONMENT. Where it is provided by statute that a homestead can be abandoned only by a declaration of abandonment, signed, acknowledged, and recorded, or by a grant thereof,²⁹ a removal from the premises,³⁰ or the execution of a mortgage³¹ will not destroy their exempt character; and in the absence of such declaration or grant no other premises than the original homestead can be claimed as exempt.³²

2. SALE AND CONVEYANCE³³ — a. In General. A valid conveyance of the premises occupied as a home usually constitutes an abandonment of the exemption,³⁴

especially when the sale has been followed by a surrender of possession to the grantee;³⁵ and if that part of a tract is sold which contains the home and buildings occupied by the family, the portion remaining is no longer impressed with the statutory privilege.³⁶ Where a statute bars the homestead right if the property be aliened or mortgaged, a specific devise in fee will defeat it.³⁷ But no loss of exemption occurs upon a mere assignment in trust for the assignor,³⁸ nor by an attempted conveyance, reseinded before consummation,³⁹ nor by the conveyance of community property by a surviving husband to his children,⁴⁰ nor the execution of a deed of the homestead by parents to their son to induce him to live with them on the place and to secure his assistance in maintaining them upon the premises;⁴¹ and if the grantor's conveyance fails as to part of the interest sought to be conveyed, he may afterward declare a homestead in that portion.⁴² If the abandonment by sale has been effectual, no interest remains in the grantor which can be levied upon.⁴³ A loss of homestead rights results from a purchase by the sole beneficiary of a homestead estate of the absolute title to the reversionary interest in the property out of which the homestead estate was carved, when it does not appear that it was the intention of such beneficiary to keep the two estates separate;⁴⁴ but a remainder-man may acquire the dower interest upon which his estate is expectant, even after levy of execution, and not lose his homestead rights.⁴⁵ The cancellation, by agreement of parties, of a deed made by husband and wife, which had conveyed the absolute title to the homestead, and had declared the amount of unpaid purchase-money, without express reservation of a vendor's lien, cannot reinvest the husband and wife with such homestead rights in the land as will prevent it from being subjected to forced sale to satisfy notes for the unpaid purchase-money in the hands of one who acquired them before cancellation of the deed.⁴⁶ It has been held that a vendor who conveys a homestead thereupon loses the homestead right, although the title is subsequently acquired, and that in an attempt to reassert the homestead right such a vendor

Invalid deed.—The execution of a deed, although invalid, may with other circumstances constitute an abandonment. Shepard v. Brewer, 65 Ill. 383.

If the deed is defective because the wife does not join, but a new homestead is subsequently acquired, the former homestead is lost. Horn v. Tufts, 39 N. H. 478.

Mortgage of homestead.—A homesteader does not lose his right, as such, as to third parties, by mortgaging his homestead; but so long as he occupies it as such with his family, it is exempt from attachment and sale under execution. Worley v. Hicks, 161 Mo. 340, 61 S. W. 818. And see Burton v. Look, 162 Mo. 502, 63 S. W. 112.

will not be heard to say that such conveyances were made and executed without consideration and void.⁴⁷

b. Conveyance to Wife or For Her Benefit. Homestead rights are not lost by reason of a conveyance of the homestead property by the husband to the wife,⁴⁸ and where the homestead is conveyed to a third person, under an agreement that it shall be immediately reconveyed to the wife, which is done, the homestead rights are not affected.⁴⁹

3. LEASE — a. In General. The mere act of leasing or renting out the homestead temporarily does not necessarily constitute an abandonment;⁵⁰ but where the homestead is permanently rented the homestead rights are lost,⁵¹ and the fact of renting or leasing the homestead in connection with other circumstances may show an abandonment.⁵² Thus a loss of homestead rights may result from a change of residence and renting the premises,⁵³ from leasing them without filing a claim of homestead as required by statute,⁵⁴ from leasing them to one who agrees to support the lessor's infant child,⁵⁵ from a surrender of possession by a mortgagor to a mortgagee under a lease annally renewable,⁵⁶ from a removal and leasing after the death of the homesteader's wife,⁵⁷ from detaching land adjoining the owner's residence, improving and renting it, after wholly discontinuing its use for homestead purposes,⁵³ or from leasing the premises for a term of several years, in consideration of the lessee erecting structures thereon which unfit the land for residence purposes, and giving the lessee a preference in re-renting.⁵⁹ On the other hand permitting a tenant at sufferance to hold rent free;⁶⁰ leasing the home tract to a daughter of the lessor, reserving a home for the latter and providing for his support;⁶¹ renting houses upon part of the property, and continuing to use the rented portion for purposes connected with the homestead;⁶² or leasing the homestead and permitting the lessee to mine coal thereon⁶³ does not destroy the homestead rights. Where the homestead is rented or leased for such a length of time or under such circumstances as to constitute an abandonment it commences from the time possession is surrendered to the tenant or lessee, although the term does not begin until a later date.⁶⁴

b. Lease of Portion of Premises. A temporary leasing of a portion of the homestead premises does not deprive such portion of its homestead character,⁶⁵ whether the portion rented be a part of the dwelling-house,⁶⁶ or a separate building and the land it occupies;⁶⁷ but the renting of a house located upon the debtor's homestead may under some circumstances amount to an abandonment of the rented portion.⁶⁸

It has been held, however, that the homestead right cannot be waived by contract in advance of the occasion of asserting such right; such a contract of waiver being against public policy.⁷¹ As a general rule a husband cannot waive the homestead rights of his wife,⁷² nor does the waiver of such rights by one entitled to enjoy the same affect the interest of any other equally entitled thereto.⁷³

2. CONTRACTS WAIVING RIGHT⁷⁴—a. In General. A waiver of homestead rights must be supported by an adequate consideration,⁷⁵ and must comply with the statutory requirements on the subject.⁷⁶ It is sometimes required that such contracts shall be in writing⁷⁷ and evidenced by a separate instrument.⁷⁸ In some jurisdictions, however, the contract creating the debt may contain the waiver.⁷⁹ A waiver results from an order by the mortgagor of a homestead to the mortgagee, accepted by the latter, to pay to a creditor of the former the balance of the proceeds of an insurance policy on a homestead dwelling destroyed by fire, Stipulation in decree.—It is against the policy as well as the terms of the homestead law to permit the husband to deprive the wife of her right to claim the homestead, except by removal with his family from the place. Therefore he can make no stipulation for a decree that will deprive her of such right. If it can be done by decree, she must herself consent to it. Allen v. Hawley, 66 Ill. 164.

Waiver in note.—“When one owes a valid and binding debt and gives therefor a promissory note containing a waiver of homestead and exemption, a homestead subsequently set apart to him and his family is, so far as this note is concerned, a nullity. . . . If the homestead is set apart after the execution of the waiver note, and then, after the homestead has been set apart, the head of the family renews the note by giving several renewal notes to the same payee, aggregating the same amount, with no additional security and containing the same waiver, this does not amount to a novation of the contract, and the waivers in the renewal notes relate back to the time of the execution of the original note.” Hughey v. Peacock, 115 Ga. 735, 736, 42 S. E. 44. While the head of a family to whom a homestead has been set apart has no power to waive the homestead so as to subject the homestead estate to the payment of debts for which it would not be otherwise liable, the mere insertion of such waiver in a promissory note made by the head of the family does not invalidate the note and render the same void as being contrary to the policy of the law. Tanner v. Mutual Ben. Bldg. Assoc., 95 Ga. 528, 20 S. E. 499. The waiver of the homestead exemption in the body of a non-negotiable note is only a waiver as to the particular obligation expressed in the body of the note, and not as to the implied obligation growing out of an assignment of the note, and, as against the liability of the assignor to the assignee, the former may claim the benefit of the exemption, although the note declares that “the drawer and endorsers each hereby waive the benefit of our homestead ex-remaining after the satisfaction of the mortgage debt.⁸⁰ A waiver of the right of homestead, made as a part of a usurious contract, is void.⁸¹ Unless, however, the usury appears on the face of the instrument, it is too late for a debtor after a judgment of foreclosure to attack as being void, because of usury in the debt secured by a mortgage, a waiver of homestead duly made therein.⁸²

b. Joinder of Husband and Wife.⁸³ It is generally required that such a waiver shall be executed by both the husband and the wife,⁸⁴ and shall be duly acknowledged and recorded.⁸⁵

3. MORTGAGE AS WAIVER OF RIGHT.⁸⁶ Homestead rights may be waived by inserting in a mortgage upon property to which such rights attach a provision expressly releasing such rights,⁸⁷ and according to some of the decisions such a provision is necessary to effect this result;⁸⁸ but according to others an express waiver is not necessary.⁸⁹ The execution of a deed of conveyance, absolute on its face but in fact intended only as a mortgage, does not deprive the grantors of their homestead rights,⁹⁰ except as against innocent purchasers.⁹¹

4. CONSENT TO LEVY AND SALE.⁹² Failure on the part of a homesteader to object to a sale of established homestead property will not generally amount to a waiver of the right,⁹³ nor will his acquiescence in an illegal execution sale, where such acquiescence is based upon a contract for maintenance made, and later repudiated, by the purchaser,⁹⁴ nor his neglect to demand an exemption where the writ of execution could be levied upon lands other than the homestead,⁹⁵ nor a delay in applying for the surplus from a valid sale until after confirmation,⁹⁶ bar a subsequent assertion of homestead rights. But where the owner of a homestead who has ceased to occupy the premises for a number of years directs the sheriff to levy thereon,⁹⁷ or where he executes a written surrender of the premises to the sheriff, removes therefrom, and remains away for a number of years without asserting his rights,⁹⁸ he cannot afterward claim the premises as a homestead.

5. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF WAIVER — a. In General. It has been held that a valid waiver or abandonment of homestead rights enables the husband to convey the property in which such right had existed without the joinder of his wife,⁹⁹ removes the inhibition against encumbering,¹ leaves the premises subject to sale upon execution,² and enables a judgment debtor to sell the homestead property to the judgment creditor for a fair valuation, even though no order of court empowering such transfer is obtained.³ After abandonment a creditor's claim under an attachment made subsequent thereto will prevail over a grantee's claim under a deed made after the attachment.⁴ If the waiver is express, it operates as to all homestead rights which then exist or may thereafter arise by the debtor becoming the head of a family.⁵ Whenever there is an abandonment the right to the homestead exemption terminates, although mortgaged.⁶ A homestead exemption right vested in the widow and children of an intestate is like any other homestead right, and when it is abandoned as a homestead, if not previously sold, it becomes liable for the intestate's debts as well as for the occupant's own debts.⁷ If, however, the property or any interest therein is sold and conveyed while the property is still occupied as a homestead by the widow or any of the children, the title to such property or interest passes to the purchaser free from all debts except prior encumbrances given by the intestate and his wife, or grantor and wife or husband, and taxes and debts for purchase-money and improvements, although the property may afterward be abandoned as a homestead by the widow and children.⁸ A waiver does not apply to property subsequently inherited as a share in the homestead of a deceased parent,⁹ nor to the surplus remaining after foreclosure sale of the land and satisfaction of a mortgage containing the waiver,¹⁰ nor does an abandonment of a homestead relate back and validate a void sale thereof under execution.¹¹ A judgment may be set off against another, although the latter was entered on a note containing a waiver of homestead.¹² A purchaser at a sheriff's sale may contend against the debtor's claim of homestead in the purchased property on the same grounds that the execution creditor could have urged, as for instance a waiver by contract with the execution creditor.¹³

b. As to Other Creditors.¹⁴ A mortgage or other encumbrance upon the homestead in favor of one creditor does not operate as a waiver of the exemption as to other creditors.¹⁵ Hence, as against general creditors, the homesteader is entitled to the surplus arising upon a sale of the homestead, made in satisfaction of a privileged claim,¹⁶ although such surplus is held to be thus protected as against a prior mortgagee whose mortgage is defective because of a mutual mistake in the description of the premises,¹⁷ nor against an execution creditor, under whose judgment, as well as under another independent lien, the premises were sold, and whose judgment would be partly unpaid if the surplus remaining after satisfying the other lien were returned to the debtor.¹⁸ If a lien exists against the homestead, but is subject to the exemption, and subsequently another lien is created with waiver of homestead rights, the former retains its priority of enforcement over the latter, upon a termination of the exemption privilege.¹⁹ If the homestead has been sold to satisfy a privileged debt, a non-privileged lienholder who redeems may then subject the land to his debt, as he is subrogated to the rights of the purchaser from whom he has redeemed;²⁰ but a non-privileged creditor of the husband is not subrogated to the rights of a mortgagee of the homestead, where the property belongs to the wife who mortgages it for the husband's debt and the husband afterward pays the mortgage debt from his own funds.²¹ Where the owner of a judgment which is a lien on all the lands of a debtor except his homestead, after junior judgment liens have arisen in favor of other creditors, takes a mortgage on the homestead, the lien of his judgment is not merged in the mortgage lien.²²

c. Right to Compel Creditor With Waiver to Resort First to Homestead. If one creditor may at his election resort to either the homestead or other property to satisfy his demand and another creditor can reach only the non-homestead land, the latter cannot compel the former to first resort to the homestead premises,²³ a mortgagee of non-exempt land cannot compel a mortgagee of both homestead and non-exempt property to go against the homestead exclusively,²⁴ nor can a judgment creditor whose judgment binds land other than the homestead put a mortgagee of both tracts to his election of the homestead as his security;²⁵ and the same rule has been applied as between a general creditor of a partnership and a firm creditor who holds a mortgage on one partner's homestead.²⁶ If the creditor holding a mortgage on both the home tract and other property of his debtor buys the homestead, he may insist on the other property being sold to satisfy his claim, although to the exclusion of the junior lienors;²⁷ but the junior lienholder, against whose debt the homestead is privileged, cannot buy a prior mortgage enforceable against the homestead and subject the latter to a sale in satisfaction of both.²⁸ If the homestead is sold by the owners after they have executed a mortgage thereon, it may be reached in the first instance to discharge the mortgage, although other property of the original debtor might also be sold for that purpose.²⁹ And where the homestead premises are unauthorizedly sold to satisfy a judgment creditor and the exemption is paid as a fund into court, a mortgagee of the land cannot be compelled to go against such fund rather than against the judgment creditor whose debt was thus irregularly paid.³⁰

E. Estoppel to Claim Homestead³¹ — 1. IN GENERAL. A homesteader may be estopped from asserting his claim to an exemption by recitals contained in his mortgage³² or trust deed;³³ by the covenants of his deed;³⁴ by executing a trust deed, mortgage, or absolute conveyance of premises not then designated or resided upon as a homestead, but afterward claimed by the debtor as such;³⁵ by having previously claimed a homestead in other property;³⁶ by consenting to a judgment upon a purchase-money debt;³⁷ by permitting another party to take title and, as the latter's attorney, creating a lien upon the property by a trust deed;³⁸ by disclaiming homestead rights;³⁹ by acting in such a manner as to induce the belief that all claim to a homestead has been abandoned;⁴⁰ by representations made to a lender of money that the same was borrowed to pay for the premises in question;⁴¹ by a fraudulent concealment of a declaration of homestead, whereby advances were obtained;⁴² or by borrowing money to pay for the premises and conveying them to the lender as security.⁴³ One who pleads that land was occupied at a certain time by himself and family as a homestead, such claim having reference to the complete title to land, and not to an undivided fractional interest therein, is estopped to assert that such tract was at the same time the homestead of another.⁴⁴ The admission by one as a witness in another action that a homestead had not been abandoned at a certain date does not estop him from claiming that it had been abandoned at a subsequent date, prior to the levying of the attachment under which he now claims.⁴⁵ Where a wife joins with her husband in a deed of trust of a homestead, she is estopped to deny that the same was binding on her, in that it contains no clause conveying her homestead interest.⁴⁶ And it has been held that a husband and his grantee are estopped to claim that the property is exempt as against the wife who purchased it under an execution upon a judgment recovered by her for alimony, where the husband had previously conveyed to the grantee without the wife's consent.⁴⁷ Where a married man is in actual possession of property, using the same as a home, no representations of himself or his wife will defeat the exemption, it being held that those dealing with them cannot ignore the notice conveyed by its actual use as such;⁴⁸ but where persons claiming a homestead are not in actual possession, subjecting the property to homestead use, representations amounting to fraud will estop them from setting up the claim as against persons acting on such representations in ignorance of the homestead claim.⁴⁹ No estoppel results from failure to litigate the question of homestead exemption in a proceeding before a court having his declarations;⁶⁷ that neither the husband nor the wife is estopped from asserting his or her homestead rights by the acts⁶⁸ or fraudulent declarations⁶⁹ of the husband alone; and that the wife is not estopped from claiming a homestead by the fact that the husband has taken a lease of the premises,⁷⁰ where it does not appear that she ever consented to her husband's taking such lease;⁷¹ but that she is estopped by his admissions made in the course of judicial proceedings, respecting his own property, claimed by her as a homestead;⁷² by his fraudulent representations concerning the ownership of community property;⁷³ by his declarations, while in possession of land, respecting his acquisition of it and by his arrangements for obtaining title.⁷⁴

3. ESTOPPEL BY RECOGNITION OF SUPERIOR TITLE. Where, after a judicial sale of lands, one who is entitled to a homestead therein accepts a lease from the purchaser, he is not estopped from claiming his homestead;⁷⁵ nor is the claimant of a homestead exemption estopped by the fact that, when the property descended to him from an ancestor, he was occupying as the latter's tenant;⁷⁶ nor can the statutory requirement of joinder by a wife in the husband's conveyance be obviated by the husband acknowledging himself as the tenant of another.⁷⁷ A homesteader's vendee entitled to hold property as exempt does not lose this right by so far recognizing the validity of a sale under execution issued against his vendor as to attorn to the purchaser.⁷⁸ Where a bankrupt occupied certain real estate as a homestead under a contract to purchase, the fact that after bankruptcy proceedings were begun he accepted a lease of the land from the owner did not change his rights under the contract nor constitute an abandonment of the homestead rights of himself and wife in the land.⁷⁹ Where, however, one in possession of premises which he has conveyed by a deed which does not effectually release his homestead accepts a lease from the grantee, he waives his homestead rights.⁸⁰

4. ESTOPPEL BY FAILURE TO CLAIM BEFORE JUDGMENT OR DECREE. One who is a party to a suit in which the right of homestead is available as a defense must interpose it, and if he fails to do so the judgment or decree rendered in such suit will bar his subsequent assertion of it.⁸¹ Where an action is brought by a creditor to have a conveyance of real property set aside as fraudulent, and to subject such property to the payment of his debt, if the property is exempt under the homestead laws, such exemption should be set up in the pending suit, and if this is not done a judgment setting aside the conveyance and ordering a sale under execution will cut off this defense.⁸²

F. Forfeiture — 1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE. Whether or not a homestead exemption is forfeited by a fraudulent conveyance is fully discussed elsewhere in this work.⁸³

2. MISCELLANEOUS ACTS. The right of a homestead claimant is not affected by the fact that he also asserts an unfounded claim as absolute owner of the premises,⁸⁴ or that he commits perjury in swearing to a false schedule when making a claim for a homestead exemption.⁸⁵

G. Evidence — 1. ADMISSIBILITY. For the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the homesteader, which is the matter primarily involved when the question of the abandonment of a homestead arises, the declarations of the homesteader⁸⁶ or of his wife⁸⁷ are admissible, and so is a note containing a waiver of homestead.⁸⁸ Evidence of the homesteader's prolonged absence from the premises,⁸⁹ of the conveyance of the premises to a third person,⁹⁰ of the conduct of the homesteader after a sale of his homestead,⁹¹ or his removal therefrom,⁹² that he took legal advice as to the effect of removal,⁹³ that he left his family in possession,⁹⁴ or that a deed was, by agreement, to operate only as a mortgage,⁹⁵ is admissible. When the husband and wife are in accord evidence of the intention of the wife in regard to the selection of a homestead is admissible as pointing to the intention of the husband.⁹⁶ A deserted wife may introduce evidence that she has given her husband no cause to abandon her, as showing that she had not forfeited her rights in the homestead estate.⁹⁷ The homesteader may testify as to his intention in leaving the homestead property;⁹⁸ but mere opinions and hearsay statements of third parties respecting his intention are inadmissible.⁹⁹

2. BURDEN OF PROOF AND PRESUMPTIONS. The burden of proving a waiver or loss of homestead rights is upon the party asserting such waiver or loss;¹ but where the owner leaves his homestead it is incumbent upon him to prove an intention to return,² since a removal is ordinarily prima facie evidence of an abandonment.³ If the homesteader removes with his family, the consent of his wife will be presumed.⁴ If a husband deserts his family without cause, leaving them in possession of the homestead, it will be presumed that his desertion is temporary only and not an abandonment.⁵ It will be presumed that the facts which establish a homestead right continue until the contrary is shown.⁶

3. WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.⁷ If the evidence respecting the debtor's intention to abandon his residence is conflicting, it is not error to refuse to find abandonment as a fact;⁸ and a finding upon disputed evidence as to the debtor's intent in leaving the premises that there was no abandonment will not be disturbed.⁹ A removal, even though accompanied by circumstances which would seem to indicate an intention not to return,¹⁰ or an absence from the homestead for a number of years,¹¹ is not conclusive proof of abandonment; but abandonment is shown by proof that the homesteader has rented the premises for many years and that the rent is necessary for the support of his family.¹² It is sufficiently shown that a removal was merely temporary, where it appears from the evidence that the homesteader expected to return in a short while, but was prevented from so doing by unforeseen events, and that he repeatedly expressed a purpose to return.¹³ If the lien which is sought to be enforced attached to the homestead property during actual occupancy, it will require stronger and clearer proof of abandonment than where it attached while the premises were temporarily unoccupied.¹⁴

VII. PROTECTION AND ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHTS.

A. Process or Other Proceedings Against Which Exemption May Be Allowed — 1. IN GENERAL. The homestead when exempt is protected generally from all process or other judicial proceedings issuing from courts of law or equity which seek to appropriate the property to the payment of debts.¹⁵ If the proceeding be one in partition, a tenant in common cannot defeat the rights of another tenant by claiming homestead in the premises;¹⁶ but if the premises are sold upon partition, the debtor may assert his exemption in the proceeds of sale as against a creditor attempting to enforce his lien thereon.¹⁷

2. LEVY OF ATTACHMENT OR EXECUTION. The residence property is exempt from levy of an attachment,¹⁸ even when based upon a mortgage debt enforceable against it by foreclosure;¹⁹ and if the writ has been wrongfully levied upon the property constituting a homestead, a wife of the debtor has been accorded damages for the seizure.²⁰ The same immunity exists against the levy of an execution,²¹ the privilege extending to an increase in the value of premises over the statutory amount, by the erection of buildings, where such additions could be reached by proper proceedings in equity.²²

3. JUDICIAL SALES IN GENERAL. A sale of the homestead made by a sheriff²³ or a special commissioner²⁴ in a proceeding at law or under a decree²⁵ has been considered void, if in disregard of the exemption; but the probate court sometimes has authority to license a sale for the benefit of the family.²⁶

4. FORECLOSURE PROCEEDINGS.²⁷ In jurisdictions where the execution of a mortgage upon the home tract is not in itself an implied release of the exemption, there can be no sale on foreclosure of the instrument, if the same was given for a non-privileged debt,²⁹ and if the property is sold under a decree the proceeds are exempt;²⁹ but in other jurisdictions a foreclosure sale is not regarded as a forced sale against which the property is protected.³⁰ If a power of sale is contained in the instrument itself, it seems the property, although a homestead, may be sold thereunder;³¹ and if there has been a release of the homestead right by a mortgage which covered the residence and other property, the latter need not be first sold on foreclosure if the residence tract was not such when the instrument was executed or if the mortgage was given to secure the price.³²

B. Establishment of Right—1. IN GENERAL—a. What Law Governs. It has been variously held in different jurisdictions that the law in force when the exemption is claimed determines the rights of an exemptioner,³³ that the mode of selection is that provided by the law in force when the homestead was acquired,³⁴ and that the facts existing when the execution or other process attaches must be considered in ascertaining the extent of the debtor's rights.³⁵ A statute permitting the wife of an execution debtor to tender the debt to the creditor and thus obtain his right and title under the levy is not retrospective in operation.³⁶

b. Duties of Officer Making Levy. The debtor under some statutes must be given an opportunity to select his homestead when the property subject thereto is sought to be taken under judicial process;³⁷ and if he applies to the sheriff to set apart the quantity exempt, the officer must do so.³⁸ Even where the debtor and his wife neglect to select their homestead, it is in some states incumbent upon the officer to set it off for them.³⁹ The expenses of such official selection are payable by the debtor.⁴⁰ If defendant in execution is not entitled to a home-

Effect of subsequent incapacity of homesteader.—If a selection has been duly made under a former statute and the method of choice has been afterward changed, there is no loss of homestead rights by failing to follow the new requirements if the homesteader is then mentally incapable of so doing. Anderson v. Stadlmann, 17 Wash. 433, 49 Pac. 1070.

Right of election as to mode of selection.—If a statute provides a method of selection of a homestead at the time a debt is contracted, and afterward a broader and more liberal system is prescribed by law, the debtor may adopt either method he desires, but not both. Connally v. Hardwick, 61 Ga. 501.

However, if the judgment upon which the homestead premises are sold gives the debtor a right to designate his exemption, the fact that it was not designated before levy of an attachment for the debt will not justify setting aside the levy. Parker v. Coop, 60 Tex. 111.

The officer's failure so to do invalidates a sale of the property on execution. White v. Rowley, 46 Iowa 680; Gray v. Baird, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 212. See, however, Newman v. Franklin, 69 Iowa 244, 28 N. W. 579.

stead in the land levied on, the sheriff is not obliged to notify him of his homestead rights.⁴¹

2. CLAIM OF HOMESTEAD⁴²—a. Necessity of Claim. The homestead laws of certain jurisdictions contemplate a definite assertion by the debtor of his right of exemption,⁴³ while in other states no such action is required upon the debtor's part,⁴⁴ and hence his failure to notify a purchaser at the execution sale that the premises are exempt will not prevent their recovery by him.⁴⁵

b. Persons Who May Make Claim.⁴⁶ The wife of the head of a family has such an interest in the homestead as enables her to intervene and claim the property as exempt or institute an independent action therefor.⁴⁷

c. Time For Making Claim. The statutes of the different states are not in accord as to the proper time for making a claim of homestead. In some states the claim must be asserted before a sale under judicial process is made⁴³ or Payment as prerequisite to selection.—The expenses should usually be tendered or paid before the sheriff can be compelled to act. Vannoy v. Haymore, 71 N. C. 128; King v. McCarley, 32 S. C. 264, 10 S. E. 1075.

d. Form and Requisites of Claim. The bringing of an injunction proceeding by the debtor against the levying officer is a sufficient notice of claim;⁵² but a personal notice to the officer or to plaintiff in the execution of the homestead right in the land has been held to be insufficient.⁵³ The claim should identify the land, although it need not fully describe it.⁵⁴ It should show that the premises are a homestead;⁵⁵ that the claimant has a family;⁵⁶ and the time of contracting the debt sought to be enforced;⁵⁷ but the debtor need not allege facts showing that the debt in question is not privileged by law from exemption.⁵⁸ An affidavit made after levy averring ownership and occupancy of the land at the date of the affidavit is insufficient.⁵⁹

e. Filing of Claim. If the statute requires a claim of exemption to be filed with the officer who makes the levy, it is not enough to hand it to him, he thereupon returning it to the debtor, who files it in court for registration.⁶⁰

In other states a contrary rule prevails (Zander v. Scott, 165 Ill. 51, 46 N. E. 2; Imhoff v. Lipe, 162 Ill. 282, 44 N. E. 493; Commercial Bank, etc., Co. v. Tacker, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1899) 52 S. W. 714), and the claim may be made even upon the day of sale (Tumlinson v. Swinney, 22 Ark. 400, 76 Am. Dec. 432. And see Chance v. Norris, 143 Mo. 235, 44 S. W. 1116).

Failure of officer to notify debtor of his rights.—If it is incumbent on the officer levying the execution to inform the debtor of his right to select a homestead from the land levied on, and the officer, failing to do so, proceeds to sell the land without allotment of homestead, the debtor may assert his claim as soon as he learns of the levy. Stinson v. Call, 163 Mo. 323, 63 S. W. 729.

Failure of the debtor to assert his rights does not deprive him of his interest in the proceeds of sale remaining in the hands of the sheriff (Ragland v. Moore, 51 Ga. 476. Contra, Casebolt v. Donaldson, 67 Mo. 308);

but he must make timely claim to funds to which he is entitled in lieu of a homestead before they are paid over to third parties under order of court (Kerruish v. Meyers, 21 Ohio Cir. Ct. 434, 11 Ohio Cir. Dec. 666). A claim of homestead made in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance after an appellate court has remanded the original suit to the lower court for further proceedings is timely. Rosenbaum v. 3. DETERMINATION AND ALLOTMENT⁶¹ — a. Contest and Determination of Claim⁶² — (i) IN GENERAL. A contest of the homestead claim must be made by exceptions or otherwise within the time limited by statute.⁶³ The officer making a seizure of the property cannot try the questions presented by such contest;⁶⁴ nor can they be presented on a motion by such officer to a court whose instructions he requests;⁶⁵ nor by a rule against him upon his refusal to sell under a levy.⁶⁶ The court trying the contest has large discretionary powers in directing the framing of an issue, and may admit any evidence properly relating to the validity of the exemption claim at the time the lien in question attached.⁶⁷ The burden of proof is by statute in some states on the levying creditor.⁶⁸ The lien is not destroyed during the proceedings, but no sale of the property is permitted until their termination.⁶⁹

(ii) NOTICE. A homestead claimant is entitled to notice of a contest of his claim.⁷⁰ So the creditor against whose debt the exemption is asserted has a similar right to be notified of the application for an allotment,⁷¹ and general creditors are sometimes given the same right by statute.⁷²

b. Allotment.⁷³ Either the creditor or debtor may ask for an allotment of homestead when the premises are levied on and their value is disputed,⁷⁴ and in case no designation is made by the debtor, the officer may set apart the homestead for him.⁷⁵ A sale on execution without setting apart the exempt property is irregular, if not absolutely void,⁷⁶ even though part of the proceeds are paid into court as the value of the homestead;⁷⁷ but if a homestead has been set apart under one execution, no allotment is necessary on alias executions issued upon the same judgment.⁷⁸

c. Appraisal, Survey, and Setting Apart⁷⁹—(i) IN GENERAL. An appraisal is usually a prerequisite to a sale of land in which a homestead exemption is claimed.⁸⁰ It is usually made by householders and residents of the county who are summoned by the sheriff and who, after being sworn to properly discharge their duties as appraisers, set off the exemption so as to include the dwelling-house and its appurtenances.⁸¹ In setting out the homestead, it should be carved only from the tract levied upon,⁸² and it may be subjected to a perpetual easement for passage to and from the residue of the tract, if this can be done without injury to the homestead right.⁸³ Encumbrances existing against the land when the debt in question is reduced to judgment should be taken into account in setting apart the homestead.⁸⁴ If the homestead claimant is a life-tenant of the whole tract, an amount may be set off to which the fee-simple title is equal to the statutory exemption.⁸⁵ In some states a survey and plat are necessary steps in the allotment.⁸⁵

Washington.—Whitworth v. McKee, 32 Wash. 83, 72 Pac. 1046.

United States.—Kerr v. South Park Com'rs, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,733, 8 Biss. 276.

An allotment is not required where the premises are within the limits fixed by statute (Rogers v. Hawkins, 20 Ga. 200), or where the tract sold is not the residence property (Gardner v. Eberhart, 82 Ill. 316; Linton v. Quimby, 57 Ill. 271), or the debtor is not entitled to a homestead in the premises (Davidson v. Dishman, 59 S. W. 326, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 940), or where the sale is made to preserve a valid encumbrance on the premises, the rights of the debtor in the proceeds being also protected (Hinson v. Adrian, 92 N. C. 121); nor is it objectionable not to set off a homestead to a tenant in common in such portion of the tract as is sold on execution where he continues to occupy the residue of the tract and the latter exceeds in value the statutory exemption (Miller v. McAlister, 197 Ill. 72, 64 N. E. 254).

80. Barrett v. Sims, 59 Cal. 615; Gary v. Eastabrook, 6 Cal. 457 (value must be exactly determined); Vogler v. Montgomery, 54 Mo. 577; Chamberlain Banking House v. Zutavern, 59 Nebr. 623, 81 N. W. 858.

Under the Missouri statute, providing for appraisers to set off the homestead when an execution is levied upon the property, no such appointment is allowed when a writ of attachment is levied. State v. Mason, 15 Mo. App. 141.

The creditor must apply for appraisement where the debtor has duly claimed his homestead. Chamberlain Banking House v. Zutavern, 59 Nebr. 623, 81 N. W. 858; Quigley v. McEvony, 41 Nebr. 73, 59 N. W. 767. And see Union Stock Yards Nat. Bank v. Smout, 62 Nebr. 227, 87 N. W. 14.

An appraisal is unnecessary where the debtor's demand is manifestly unfounded. Shindler v. Givens, 63 Mo. 394.

Practice.—Where a creditor files a petition for the appointment of appraisers, it is not error to allow the homestead claimant to file an answer and contest the question whether the value of the homestead exceeds the amount of the exemption before appraisers are appointed, and if the value does not exceed the exemption a refusal to appoint them is proper. France v. Hohnbaum, (Nebr. 1905) 102 N. W. 75.

81. Newman v. Willitts, 78 Ill. 397. And see Pittsfield Bank v. Howk, 4 Allen (Mass.) 347.

A master commissioner appointed by the court is sometimes empowered to make the appraisement and set off the homestead. Quinn v. People, 146 Ill. 275, 34 N. E. 148; Riley v. Smith, 5 S. W. 869, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 615.

83. Schaeffer v. Beldsmeier, 9 Mo. App. 438.

84. Meyer v. Nickerson, 101 Mo. 184, 14 S. W. 188; Murphy v. Wilson, 84 Mo. App. 178, holding, however, that the failure so to do does not deprive the debtor of his right to have them considered when his exemption is subsequently disputed.

85. Kerns v. Linden, 23 Ohio Cir. Ct. 162.

86. White v. Rowley, 46 Iowa 680, holding that where a judgment debtor has failed to select and plat his homestead, it is the duty of the officer holding an execution to cause the same to be done before selling any portion of the premises of which the homestead is a part, and that the failure to do so will render the sale invalid even though the government subdivision of forty acres on which the house is situated be not sold.

A survey and plat are not necessary where the land claimed as exempt is not urban and contains less than the quantity allowed by law. Piedmont Nat. Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Bryant, 115 Ga. 417, 41 S. E. 661. And see Connally v. Hardwick, 61 Ga. 501.

(ii) *SELECTION, APPOINTMENT, AND COMPETENCY OF APPRAISERS.*⁸⁷ The officer selecting appraisers represents all parties in interest and need not consult the debtor respecting the appointment,⁸⁸ although he may designate persons agreed upon by both parties to the suit.⁸⁹ They must be duly sworn⁹⁰ by any officer competent to administer oaths, although not necessarily by the one who summons them.⁹¹ They must stand neutral between the parties in interest.⁹² They should generally be freeholders of the community and familiar with the property, and, if it is farming land, with agriculture.⁹³ In case of vacancy caused by the absence of one of the appraisers, the court may appoint another without further notice.⁹⁴

(iii) REPORT AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON. The appraisers or a majority of them⁹⁵ report their action to the court, who thereupon confirms it or orders a recommittal.⁹⁶ An approval may be shown by an order that the report be received and recorded, where no exceptions have been filed.⁹⁷ The court in passing upon a report need not hear evidence showing an unwise division of the land, where the facts sought to be proved would not warrant a recommittal of the report.⁹⁸ Either party may, in case an appraiser is incompetent or disqualified, move the court to set aside the report.⁹⁹ In some states the report of appraisers should set apart the personal property of the debtor which is exempt.¹

(iv) REAPPRAISEMENT AND VACATING APPRAISEMENT. The report of appraisers is not conclusive on the question of value as against a direct proceeding for a revaluation,² although such proceeding must be based upon fraud, corruption, or a material and prejudicial irregularity on the part of the appraisers,³ rather than upon their mistaken judgment of value.⁴ But a new allotment will be directed where appraisers set off two tracts of the statutory size instead of one,⁵ and an allotment will be regarded void if wholly uncertain.⁶ The applicant

The officer is relieved from the duty of plating and recording the plat before sale if the husband and wife serve a written notice on him after levy, describing therein the homestead premises. Ackerman v. Hendricks, 117 Iowa 106, 90 N. W. 522; Smith v. De Kock, 81 Iowa 535, 46 N. W. 1056.

Iowa Code (1873), § 2002, providing for a determination of the boundaries of a homestead by referees, is inapplicable to levies upon land where the sheriff claims no part is subject to the exemption. McCrackin v. Weitzell, 70 Iowa 723, 29 N. W. 624.

must allege facts sufficient to bring him within the scope of the statute permitting a vacation of appraisements,⁷ and must file his application for a reassessment before the sheriff's sale of the excess.⁸ If a reappraisal is ordered, the new appraisers may be appointed by the court at the suggestion of the judgment creditor and without notice to the debtor.⁹

(v) DEFECTS, OBJECTIONS, AND WAIVER. It is not a fatal irregularity that the attorney of the creditor wrote the summons to appraisers and their report;¹⁰ and even if an appraisal is defective, it will not invalidate a prior levy.¹¹ Exceptions to the appraisers' report should set out the facts which are their basis,¹² and irregularities may be waived by long acquiescence in the appraisal and allotment,¹³ or by failure to question the competency of appraisers before they enter upon their duties;¹⁴ but no such result follows from a creditor's acceptance of proceeds from the sale of all his debtor's property, excluding the homestead;¹⁵ nor from a purchaser at the execution sale receiving a sheriff's deed in which the officer describes the land as the debtor's homestead.¹⁶ Exceptions to the report of appraisers may be filed in an action wherein a judgment has been rendered against the debtor by a creditor who has a suit then pending.¹⁷ If a dissatisfied party has filed exceptions to the report of the appraisers and the same have been placed upon the court calendar a reasonable time before the commencement of the next term, no notice of such filing need be given to the adversary.¹⁸ Ordinarily exceptions must be filed, personal service on the adverse party being insufficient.¹⁹

(vi) REVIEW. Certiorari lies from the report of the appraisers to the circuit court,²⁰ but no appeal lies from the decision of an ordinary sustaining a demurrer to an application for homestead.²¹ The application for review should be made before the sheriff's sale of the excess over the statutory limit,²² and it must strictly follow the provisions of the statute permitting such review.²³ As the duty of appraisers is confined to determining value and allotting homestead bounds, these are the only questions presented to the upper court for review, and the equities of parties will not be adjudicated by it;²⁴ nor will the upper court consider an exception to the report in the absence of facts in the record supporting the objection.²⁵

d. Operation and Effect of Allotment or Appraisal²⁶—(i) IN GENERAL. Setting apart the homestead does not of itself discharge the property from liability for debts where a return and record of the allotment proceedings are required;²⁷

nor does the allotment, when completed, determine title or create the exemption; it is only a method of designating the homestead and ascertaining the excess.²⁸ The debtor, failing to except to or appeal from the assignment, is estopped from questioning it;²⁹ nor can a creditor levy an execution thereafter against the land or demand a reassignment of homestead,³⁰ unless the allotment proceedings were under a void statute³¹ or the conditions existing when they were had have since changed.³² Likewise a purchaser at a sheriff's sale is bound by a prior assignment where he buys subject thereto.³³

Illustrations.—Hence, having received in lieu of a homestead money realized from a forced sale of his residence, he cannot become the purchaser of the latter and afterward claim it as exempt (Whitesides v. Cushenberry, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 590), nor can he, after having certain lands set off to him, sell them and remove to others, and claim the latter as exempt (Richie v. Duke, 70 Miss. 66, 12 So. 208).

In North Carolina the court has no power to order a sale of the homestead and a division of proceeds where it exceeds in value the statutory limit. Campbell v. White, 95 N. C. 491.

Sale on setting aside fraudulent conveyance.—On setting aside a fraudulent conveyance of property including the homestead by the debtor to his wife the property should be sold and one thousand dollars of the proceeds set apart to the wife, or, if she desires it, so much of the homestead as is of the value of one thousand dollars should be allotted to her, and the remainder sold to pay plaintiff's debt. McAdams v. Mitchell, 10 S. W. 812, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 856. On decreeing a conveyance fraudulent, it is not necessary that the decree should dispose of the homestead rights of the grantor, since the sheriff on enforcement of the execution will deal with the homestead in accordance with the statute. Mitchell v. Sawyer, 115 Ill. 650, 5 N. E. 109. A decree which sets aside a conveyance of the debtor to his wife of a tract of land including their homestead as fraudulent, and directs the sheriff to sell the land under an execution in his hands issued on a judgment previously entered against the debtor is not open to the objection of ordering a sale of the homestead. Ammondson v. Ryan, 111 Ill. 506.

the creditor.³⁹ The order of sale should specify the portion of lands exempt,⁴⁰ and if the entire property is sold, the terms of sale should be cash to the amount of the homestead exemption.⁴¹ If a debtor succeeds in securing an allotment of homestead to which he is not entitled, it may be levied on and sold.⁴²

b. Sale of Property Subject to Homestead. Under some statutes no sale of the residence property can be made subject to the homestead right,⁴³ while elsewhere such sale is allowed.⁴⁴

c. Retaining Property Beyond Exemption on Payment of Excess. A debtor is sometimes permitted by statute to pay the excess in value over the statutory limit for exemption and retain the premises, provided that such payment is made within a time fixed by law;⁴⁵ or, if he continues to occupy the whole of indivisible premises which exceed the homestead exemption, where he pays rent for the excess, which begins to run from the time an order of sale of the premises was issued.⁴⁶

nor the right of possession.⁴⁸ But his title may be rendered good by acts of the owner which work an estoppel,⁴⁹ or, in case of a sale of the premises under two foreclosures in the same suit, where one of the liens is enforceable against the land.⁵⁰ Nor is his title defeated by the fact that a sale of the homestead was made in connection with other lands without inquiring, as the statute directed, whether it could be sold separately, unless such irregularity injured the party questioning the sale.⁵¹ The purchaser at an execution sale from whom the execution debtor recovers the property after the former has paid the price is entitled to receive back the amount so paid with interest;⁵² and if he has purchased at a forced sale invalid because the execution was not a lien on the property, but there was, in the sheriff's office at the time the execution was improperly levied, another writ of the same nature which was a lien on the homestead, although not levied and not known to such purchaser to exist, the homestead will pass to the latter;⁵³ and he may in general raise the same objections to the claim of homestead by the debtor as could the creditor under whose judgment he has acquired title to the premises.⁵⁴ He cannot be forced to accept, in full satisfaction of any supposed liability of the debtor, the latter's deed releasing homestead rights in the land purchased;⁵⁵ nor is he rendered a tenant in common with a debtor to whom upper stories of the family residence are allotted as exempt, where the purchaser buys the lower stories at the execution sale.⁵⁶ On a sale under execution of the debtor's interest in lands held by him as a tenant in common, the purchaser takes the remainder of the debtor's share in the land left after allotting to him a homestead in the premises.⁵⁷

(II) FAILURE TO ALLOT HOMESTEAD, AND DEFECTIVE ALLOTMENT. Where sale on execution is made of home premises without the allotment of an exemption, it has been held that a purchaser obtains title to the excess,⁵⁸ and is to be deemed in lawful possession, especially when the debtor has only an unlocated right of homestead dependent upon there being a remainder existing after payment of encumbrances against the property.⁵⁹ He is not entitled to possession and mesne profits where he buys an unascertained excess, and no appraisalment has been made.⁶⁰

no allotment was previously made; ⁶¹ and when the homestead interest terminates, he secures full rights of ownership. ⁶² In the meantime he takes in subservience to the exemption, although the debt upon which the judicial sale is based was one enforceable against the premises. ⁶³ He is not entitled to compensation for improvements erected by him on the land before his complete rights as owner mature, ⁶⁴ and if he buys the undivided interest of the debtor subject to the homestead, the latter may be set off from the portion allotted to such purchaser upon partition. ⁶⁵ The purchaser of property subject to a mortgaged homestead right can redeem the property only in the manner prescribed by statute. ⁶⁶

C. Proceedings For Enforcement of Right—1. RIGHT OF ACTION FOR DENIAL AND INFRINGEMENT OF RIGHT AND DEFENSES THERETO. Fraud in the sale of a debtor's homestead gives ground for vacating the decree under which such sale occurred, ⁶⁷ and is an available defense in an action of ejectment brought against the debtor by the fraudulent purchaser. ⁶⁸ And if an execution sale was for any reason improperly made, an action will usually lie in behalf of the debtor to remove the cloud thereby cast upon his right, even though the sale conveyed no title. ⁶⁹ The homesteader, however, cannot maintain an action against the sheriff and his sureties for an unlawful levy and sale of the premises, ⁷⁰ since no injury can usually be shown; nor will a court of equity interpose its relief unless plaintiff shows that his homestead rights were damaged by the acts of which he complains. ⁷¹

2. MOTIONS AND OTHER SUMMARY REMEDIES. In some jurisdictions the homestead exemption may be presented by a motion to set aside the sale on execution or decree, ⁷² while in other states it must be brought before the court by a direct action ⁷³ or by appeal. ⁷⁴ A rule against the sheriff to show cause why he should not levy on and sell the homestead has been held to raise the question of a debtor's rights in the property sold, where there is no serious dispute upon any question of law or fact; ⁷⁵ but it has been held in some states that the homestead right

Purchase of mortgaged homestead.—An execution purchaser of homestead property, a mortgage on which had been foreclosed, cannot, on redemption from foreclosure, enforce his claim against the homestead by paying the homesteaders the value thereof or having the same set off to them, under a bill against the homesteaders praying specifically for contribution or in default thereof subrogation to the mortgagee's rights and for general relief, where he failed to accept the homesteaders' offer to release their claim on payment to them of the value of the homestead. *Butler v. cannot be presented by resistance to a motion to confirm a sheriff's sale of the premises.⁷⁶

3. NATURE AND FORM OF ACTION—a. In General. The question of homestead exemption may be raised in an ejectment suit brought by⁷⁷ or against⁷⁸ the debtor, except where courts of equity are vested with exclusive jurisdiction over matters of homestead right;⁷⁹ and a wife who has been ousted from her possession of the premises after an abandonment by the husband may assert their rights by a bill in equity.⁸⁰ In some states an action of claim is a proper remedy to contest a levy upon and sale of the homestead.⁸¹ The fraudulent grantee of a homestead cannot maintain trespass against a creditor of the fraudulent grantor who seizes it on execution.⁸²

b. Injunction.⁸³ Since a judicial sale, although invalid, casts a cloud upon the debtor's title to the homestead so disposed of, an injunction will lie against an unauthorized levy of execution or a sale of the exempt premises;⁸⁴ and the same remedy is available against an eviction by one who purchases at a sheriff's sale, where the levy of execution is made subject to the homestead interest,⁸⁵ or against one who buys pending an application by the judgment debtor for his exemption,⁸⁶ or against the foreclosure of a mortgage on the home tract,⁸⁷ or a sale under a power therein contained.⁸⁸ Likewise a purchaser from a homesteader may enjoin a sale of the premises to satisfy a judgment against the grantor while he owned and occupied them.⁸⁹ But the court will not determine the homestead right upon affidavits filed on a motion for a temporary injunction to restrain a levy;⁹⁰ nor will the injunction issue where the applicant has an adequate remedy at law by protecting his homestead under the statute of exemptions.⁹¹

4. JURISDICTION.⁹² In general, the powers of a court over the homestead are such only as the parties to the pending suit might exercise in the absence of judicial proceedings.⁹³ Under some homestead laws the county, common pleas, or circuit court has no original jurisdiction to set off or appraise the homestead.⁹⁴

5. TIME TO SUE AND LIMITATIONS.⁹⁵ If the statute limits the time within which a sale of the homestead may be questioned through legal proceedings, it applies to minors and married women as well as to other claimants,⁹⁶ and to sales made in good or bad faith;⁹⁷ and if the statutory period expires, the homestead right may be lost by the adverse possession of a wrongful occupant.⁹⁸ Injunction will not issue in a case where he has been guilty of laches in protecting his homestead rights.⁹⁹ Limitations do not run against a creditor as to a homestead until it has ceased to be such.¹

6. PARTIES.² The wife and minor children of the debtor may maintain an action as beneficiaries of the exemption to recover or defend the homestead,³ especially when the husband refuses to join in the suit⁴ or has abandoned his family;⁵ but the wife has been denied the right to recover damages from a sale of the homestead.⁶ The wife is deemed a necessary party to a suit brought to protect the property from unauthorized sale,⁷ or to determine the question whether the premises are a homestead,⁸ although she has been considered not a necessary defendant unless she has a defense arising from her homestead interest which would defeat the action.⁹ The execution creditor is not a necessary party to a suit to enjoin a levy, at least after answer and trial without objection made because of such non-joinder;¹⁰ but attaching creditors should be made parties to a proceeding by the debtor to require payment to him, in lieu of a homestead, of funds held by a sheriff after sale of the premises.¹¹ The sheriff is not a necessary party defendant to a bill seeking a homestead allotment and to enjoin a sale ordered by the upper court.¹²

7. PLEADING¹³—a. Sufficiency. The pleading in which a debtor asserts a homestead right must set forth facts establishing the right and not merely allege in general terms that such right exists.¹⁴ Hence all statutory requirements for

Wilson*, 164 Ill. 544, 46 N. E. 58 [affirming 65 Ill. App. 362]; Meyer v. Pfeiffer, 50 Ill. 485; Anderson v. McKay, 30 Tex. 186 (holding that if he claims that the premises were destined for a homestead and therefore privileged from forced sale, he the exemption must be averred,¹⁵ and that they continued to the time of levy and sale.¹⁶ More particularly the debtor must show that he is a member of that class of persons for whose benefit the exemption exists,¹⁷ that he owns the property,¹⁸ that the premises have been occupied under such circumstances that a homestead has actually been acquired;¹⁹ and that its value does not exceed the statutory limitation.²⁰ The debtor need not set out the boundaries of his homestead when he defends against a purchaser of an entire divisible tract who bought at execution sale;²¹ but if he claims as a tenant in common, he should designate what part of the property is claimed as a homestead.²² It is unnecessary for the debtor should state how and when they were so intended).

Description as homestead.—The debtor may properly refer to the exempt property as a "homestead," although it is a part of a larger tract and has not been laid off nor surveyed (Gibbs v. Mayes, 2 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 215); and descriptions have been held sufficient which state that the debtor and his family occupied, used, and cultivated the land for their support, having their dwelling and outbuildings thereon (Gentry v. Bowser, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 388, 21 S. W. 569. And see Davis v. Wetherell, 13 Allen (Mass.) 60, 90 Am. Dec. 177), or that the debtor and his family lived a short distance from the premises in controversy on another's land, but notoriously used the former for family purposes and as a place of business (Stark v. Ingram, 2 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 630); and a petition to enjoin an execution sale is sufficient, on an objection made to the introduction of evidence, which alleges an attempt to subject the home tract to a lien and that the property exempt from forced sale and the execution void as affecting the same (Mullins v. Looke, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 138, 27 S. W. 926). So the fact that a "dwelling" is situated on premises is sufficiently averred by stating that a building is located on land owned by the debtor in fee, and constituting his residence and homestead. Lozzo v. Sutherland, 38 Mich. 168.

He need not name in specific terms the statute under which he acquires his rights, if he alleges the essentials for exemption which it prescribes. Hebert v. Mayer, 47 La. Ann. 563, 17 So. 131.

A petition is sufficient to show a homestead exemption which alleges that petitioner was a housekeeper with a family at the time of the conveyance in question, a resident of the state; that he used and occupied the premises as a homestead for himself and family; that the property was of less value than the statutory exemption; and that he had used it as a homestead up to the time of such conveyance. *McMillan v. However, he need not declare of whom his family consists (Gentry v. Bowser, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 388, 21 S. W. 569); nor by what authority he occupies the homestead land (Redmon v. Citizens' Bank, 39 S. W. 432, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 137); nor aver in exact words that he was a bona fide housekeeper with a family at the time of levy, where his occupancy and its character otherwise appear (Crouch v. Meguiar-Harris Co., 42 S. W. 91, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 819).

App. 335, 58 Pac. 283 [reversed on another ground in 61 Kan. 775, 60 Pac. 1048], holding that an allegation of intention to acquire a title is not equivalent to an averment of ownership. See, however, Elliott v. Bristow, 185 Mo. 15, 84 S. W. 48, where ownership was presumed on demurrer.

19. Gentry v. Lawley, (Ala. 1904) 37 So. 829 (holding that the allegation in a bill to redeem from a mortgage sale that plaintiff was "living on said land with his family" is not sufficient as an allegation that he was occupying the land as his homestead); Symonds v. Co., 68 Mich. 602, 36 N. W. 687 (holding that such averment is not required in an action by husband and wife to protect the homestead from the interposition of a right of way secured to a railroad company by a license from the husband alone); Lindsey v. Brever, 60 Vt. 627, 15 Atl. 329 (holding that if a sale of the premises is sought because of excess in value and impossibility of severing a homestead without depreciation, such excess must be alleged by the party asking for such sale).

to allege that the debt sought to be enforced against the property is not embraced within any of the statutory exceptions;²³ but it is sometimes necessary for him to allege when the debt was contracted.²⁴ The debtor is not required to aver a notification of the officer levying on the home property, if such notice is not prescribed by law.²⁵ If the petition to enjoin a sale under decree proceeds upon the theory of fraud, the fraudulent acts must be averred;²⁶ but if it seeks to remove a cloud on the debtor's title, created by a sheriff's deed to a purchaser at execution sale, it need not state how such deed constitutes a cloud.²⁷ The debtor need not, in pleading his rights in a second homestead, allege that he sold the former one with the intention of investing in another.²⁸ Where a petition in a suit to enjoin the sale of lots on execution on the ground that they were part of plaintiff's homestead did not allege that plaintiff at the first opportunity pointed out or offered to point out personal property on which to make the levy, he cannot object that the court sustained a special exception to other allegations of his petition that the levy was unlawfully, spitefully, and wilfully made, without demand for payment or to point out a levy being made of plaintiff, when he had personal property subject to execution in the county and was personally present there all the time.²⁹ The debtor, by answer in a creditor's suit brought to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance by the debtor, may allege that the grantee held title and was the real owner; and also that the debtor occupied it as a homesteader prior to rendition of the creditor's judgment, and was entitled to an exemption therein if the property was adjudged to belong to him, such defenses not being necessarily inconsistent.³⁰ Deficiencies of description in the debtor's pleadings may be cured by averments or denials contained in the pleadings of his adversary which clearly recognize the homestead character of the property.³¹ A plea to the jurisdiction alleging the homestead character of property sought to be reached by foreclosure is not demurrable.³² In a suit to enjoin the sale of certain lots on execution on the ground that it was part of plaintiff's homestead plaintiff is the one seeking affirmative relief, and hence a contention that the answer filed by defendant is insufficient in its allegations for affirmative relief to sustain a judgment against plaintiff and foreclosing an execution lien on part of the property is without merit.³³ To claim a homestead as against a creditor's bill the right must be set up in the answer.³⁴

c. Issues, Proof, and Variance. Questions not raised by the pleadings cannot as a rule be considered.³⁶ A homestead claimant fails to raise an issue respecting his right of exemption where he does not allege his occupancy of the premises as a residence,³⁷ or does not claim a homestead by his pleading or evidence;³⁸ and one who resists the claim cannot question whether the premises exceed the value fixed by law by filing a general denial to a plea of homestead.³⁹ Neither is the issue of voluntary abandonment raised by a failure to plead it specially and pleading other special defenses together with a general denial.⁴⁰ However the issue may sometimes be involved without special reference thereto in the pleadings when it is plainly inferable from their allegations.⁴¹ If the homesteader pleads an intention to occupy the premises as a residence when the debt was contracted, he cannot prove actual occupation at that time;⁴² but evidence that premises were used in connection with the residence is admissible under an allegation that they were part of the homestead, in the absence of objection to the latter averment because too general.⁴³ An allegation of wrongful abandonment of her husband by a claimant may be negated by proof that she was driven from home by his cruelty, although such facts were not pleaded by her.⁴⁴ arising therein are, generally speaking, governed by the same rules that apply in civil actions in general. While there is a presumption that the homestead of a debtor is exempt from sale on execution,⁴⁸ the burden of proof is on the claimant to show prima facie that the premises in question are such as entitle them to this privilege.⁴⁹ Yet he need not show affirmatively that the debt against which he asserts his exemption is not privileged.⁵⁰ Similarly it is held that a purchaser at execution sale must prove the premises were subject to the debt upon which the sale is based.⁵¹ A presumption is indulged that a state of facts, once shown to exist, still continues, where they entitle the claimant to a homestead.⁵²

b. Admissibility. To prove the exempt character of property claimed as a homestead, evidence of a creditor's levy subject to the homestead estate is admissible against him;⁵³ and occupation of land as a residence by the debtor at the time and since the debt or lien was created,⁵⁴ as well as the circumstances under which a former home was sold and another purchased,⁵⁵ and the intention of the homesteader and his wife to occupy the premises in question as a home⁵⁶ is proper evidence to show the privileged character of the premises; but not proceedings in allotment which were void as against the debt in question.⁵⁷ If the issue be whether a homestead was set off to a widow as head of a family, it may be shown by parol that she paid the estate of her deceased husband the excess in value over the statutory limit of a homestead,⁵⁸ and in ascertaining the value of property claimed as exempt, evidence is admissible of improvements made thereon before and after the owner abandoned them.⁵⁹ To prove the existence of a claim of homestead, the certified copy of such claim, when required to be filed and reorded, or the original entries in the allotment proceeding are receivable.⁶⁰ If it is sought to prove that the debt in question was or was not enforceable against the homestead, its consideration, although it be a debt reduced to judgment,⁶¹ may be shown.⁶² Evidence that the debtor's wife was on friendly terms with him and accompanied him when he absconded and abandoned the homestead is not competent where the issue is the existence of a homestead right;⁶³ nor can a wife testify to her ignorance of the contents of a mortgage or mortgage application signed by her where there is no issue as to the genuineness of her signature or as to fraud in procuring it.⁶⁴ Where defendant claimed the right to hold property sued for under an alleged parol partition awarding the property to her husband as a homestead, evidence that plaintiff as executor of the will of his deceased wife under which the property had passed had taken advice of attorneys prior to his son's marriage and had been advised that he could not set apart any portion of the property of the estate to his son until his daughter arrived at the age of twenty-one is inadmissible as irrelevant.⁶⁵ Where a judgment debtor excepts to the return of the appraisers assigning him a homestead, and his exception is based upon the ground that the exemption was laid off to him in his wife's lands and not in his own, the debtor's statements, not sworn to, are incompetent evidence.⁶⁶ Evidence is admissible, on the question of notice to the lender, to show that the agent who made a loan on property subsequently claimed as a homestead was previously instructed not to lend money on homesteads and to require applicants to make affidavits as to what constituted their place of residence;⁶⁷ and evidences of indebtedness given by the homestead claimant to third persons are admissible as tending to disprove his claim that the property in question was paid for exclusively with rents and profits from a homestead.⁶⁸ A schedule of the debtor's real and personal property duly returned to the ordinary and reorded is admissible in his behalf to show the existence of his exemption;⁶⁹ and it may be shown by documentary evidence that after the homestead was set apart it was sold on execution to satisfy a judgment to which it was subject, and that the purchaser conveyed it to the debtor's wife, such evidence tending to prove loss of possession and of homestead rights.⁷⁰

c. Weight and Sufficiency. The general rules regarding the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions apply in actions involving homestead rights.⁷¹

Evidence that the debtor's wife stated that the family residence was in another state will not justify submitting the issue whether such other residence existed, where she and the debtor are shown to have been residents of the particular state when the lien was created and long prior thereto;⁷² nor is title shown to have been in them at the wife's death by proof of long occupancy of the premises up to such death and a conveyance thereof to the husband shortly after his wife's decease.⁷³ If the evidence reveals that the wife and children of the debtor temporarily occupied the land in order to prevent a sale on execution, and that they were, during such occupancy, absent on various occasions, no homestead right is thereby established;⁷⁴ but a homestead may be found to exist where the evidence shows a continuous residence by the debtor on the premises for many years.⁷⁵ A forced sale of land will not be set aside by a claim of homestead if no proof of value at the time of levy and sale is forthcoming;⁷⁶ and such value may be shown by evidence of an offer by the debtor to sell for a given amount.⁷⁷ Proof that a "homestead was filed" is not proof that a homestead was acquired,⁷⁸ but proof that the declaration of homestead was duly filed, that notice was given to the sheriff before a sale on execution that the property was the debtor's homestead, the debtor the head of a family, the property his only estate, and within the statutory limit of value is sufficient to set aside a sale of the premises on execution.⁷⁹

9. TRIAL,⁸⁰ JUDGMENT,⁸¹ AND REVIEW⁸² — a. Questions For Jury. It is for the jury to determine, as a question of fact, what were the intentions of a homesteader in removing from the family residence or his place of business, and whether during his absence the same continued to be his homestead;⁸³ whether the property-owner is estopped to claim a homestead because of disclaimer of exemption in the mortgaged property and designation of another tract, and whether the creditor as a prudent man was justified in relying upon such disclaimer;⁸⁴ whether the premises have been dedicated or occupied as a homestead;⁸⁵ whether claimant was the head of a family during his occupancy of the premises in suit;⁸⁶ whether the premises were included in a village at a particular time⁸⁷

W. 1198 (evidence in a suit to enjoin the sale of lots on execution on the ground that they were part of plaintiff's homestead was held to support a finding that other lots owned by plaintiff in connection with his homestead, which were not levied on, were of sufficient value to exhaust plaintiff's exemption); Gibbs v. Harstenstein, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 81 S. or were rural property;⁸⁸ whether a tract of land adjacent to a dwelling is embraced within the homestead of which the dwelling-house is a part;⁸⁹ and whether the homestead has been abandoned.⁹⁰ If the evidence is clear and uncontradicted that a mortgagee was ignorant the mortgaged property was a homestead at the time the debt was contracted, the court may instruct the jury to find an absence of such knowledge respecting the character of the land.⁹¹

b. Instructions.⁹² An instruction is improper if it suggests an issue not properly within the case.⁹³ So an instruction which is inapplicable to the evidence should not be given;⁹⁴ and an instruction should be refused which withdraws from the jury an issue whose determination will ascertain the homestead rights of parties to the suit.⁹⁵ A charge may be erroneous also for an omission to define terms employed in it.⁹⁶ If a charge concerning abandonment of the residence property ignores the element of an intention to return, it is erroneous;⁹⁷ and it is error to charge that there must be both abandonment and the acquisition of a new homestead before there is a loss of the statutory exemption.⁹⁸ So it is error to tell the jury that the intentions of the homesteaders respecting the future occupancy of their property are immaterial if, by representing that the premises had never been occupied as their homestead, they had obtained the loan sued for where the evidence tended to show their statements to the creditor that they intended moving upon the property to live as soon as their children completed their education.⁹⁹ The court need not inform the jury that growing crops ready to be harvested are not in themselves exempt; but when on a homestead they cannot be levied on, it having already instructed that to sustain a claim by the homesteader for damages in levying on growing crops the jury must find that the same were on the homestead land;¹ and an instruction was properly refused which stated that a second parcel of land leased by the debtor from a landlord other than the party from whom he had previously leased his residence tract must be designated as a

It is a correct statement of the law to instruct that if the homesteader had abandoned a portion of the property for use as a residence and appropriated it to other than home purposes, there was a loss of homestead rights as to such portion, unless the debtor had in good faith reappropriated it to homestead purposes prior to levy of process, and was using and occupying it with the intention of permanently making it part of his home. *Milburn Wagon Co. v. homestead as fully as the original homestead was designated.² If a plea of abandonment has been pleaded and the debtor was not in actual occupation at the time the debt was created, it is not necessary to charge expressly that the burden of proving abandonment is upon the creditor.³ The court may properly instruct that the husband alone has the right to designate a homestead, and that unless he intends to use the property as a home, it will not be impressed with that character, although the wife may have intended making it her abode;⁴ and where the facts involve a question of bona fide purchase for the value and without notice of notes which recite that they are given in part payment of land subsequently claimed as exempt from their collection, the court should instruct that a purchase of the notes prior to the makers' occupancy of the property as a homestead and prior to their manifesting an intention to so occupy, the purchaser of the notes being without notice of such intended occupancy, would render them enforceable against the property.⁵ The jury may be told that if they find the property in controversy was set off to the homesteader by partition and became his separate property, they should find it was a homestead.⁶

c Verdict and Findings. A finding that the applicant is entitled to a homestead means a homestead in the entire real estate involved in the application,⁷ and a statement of value contained in the verdict includes the value of the premises with improvements, where the further finding appears that the land with improvements would not have brought over a given amount upon certain named dates.⁸ If it be found that two parties executed a declaration of homestead "as husband and wife," such will not be equivalent to stating that they were then husband and wife, but that they represented themselves to be such in their declaration.⁹ If the subjects of rents and the proportions in which claimants of a homestead are entitled are not litigated, a verdict need not dispose of such matters, but the court may distribute the rental funds on the basis of the respective interests which the litigants have in the premises as fixed by the verdict.¹⁰ A verdict enjoining interference with the homestead by a mortgagee should not restrain the creditor from enforcing his rights after termination of the homestead.¹¹ Judgment for the exemptioner may properly be based upon findings that before levy he intended in good faith to occupy the premises as his home and had taken possession for that purpose in a reasonable time thereafter.¹²

d. Judgment and Amount of Recovery—(1) IN GENERAL. Where the debtor attempts to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment against property, including the homestead, on the ground that a lien was improperly taken by the judgment creditor against such property, his relief will be confined to the homestead premises.¹³ A decree allowing a claim of homestead should find all facts necessary under the statute for its existence;¹⁴ and where the proceeding is in equity, the court may afford complete relief to all parties before it, although such relief was not specifically prayed for by each of the respective parties.¹⁵ A judgment setting aside a homestead is not conclusive against a creditor who subsequently attempts to subject the land to his claim after the exemption ceases.¹⁶ A decision that the premises claimed were not the individual homestead of the claimant but came to him by survivorship does not determine the question of his rights therein.¹⁷ If an execution sale has been set aside and the sheriff's certificate and deed canceled in order to relieve the judgment debtor, the satisfaction of the debt will also be vacated and an alias execution be issued to collect the judgment.¹⁸ A preliminary injunction against the sale on execution of homestead property will not be dissolved until final hearing, where the creditor sets up as an affirmative defense the fact that the debt is enforceable against the property as antedating its homestead character;¹⁹ and if the debtor fails in a suit to restrain a sale of his residence premises by a trustee under a trust deed, the decree should not direct their sale by the sheriff.²⁰ Should a creditor attempt to subject his debtor's homestead to sale, it is error to adjudge the entire property to the debtor's wife as exempt upon her petition therefor, in the absence of any denial by her of the allegations of the creditor's petition.²¹ If petitioner's claim for homestead as against a liability for street improvements is denied and the case continued to fix the time and amount of his payment, the petition should not be dismissed until those facts are ascertained.²²

(ii) AMOUNT OF RECOVERY. Where damages are recovered by a homesteader who has been kept from the possession of his homestead, they are estimated from the date of levy,²³ and may include the rental value of the premises during the period recovered for,²⁴ from which should be deducted the taxes properly paid by the wrongful occupant during his possession.²⁵ But if the amount recovered is the value of the property and not merely the rents accrued, such amount cannot be offset by the taxes paid by the wrongful occupant during his possession.²⁶ Damages equal to the value of exempt crops wrongfully levied upon are recoverable by the homesteader,²⁷ and cannot be offset by a recovery against him on a note in the same action.²⁸

e. Review. The record on an appeal from a judgment determining homestead rights should show only the proceedings in the contest of those rights.²⁹ If it presents a question of fact upon conflicting proof, there will be no reversal, unless the conclusion of the lower court is flagrantly against the evidence.³⁰ If a wife appeals separately from a decree final against her homestead rights, it is no objection that her husband did not join, although he was a party defendant with his wife, the decree not being final as against him.³¹ The purchaser of property claimed by surviving minors as a homestead is a proper party with the administrator of the deceased parents' estate, on certiorari from a decree of the probate court refusing to set aside the residence as exempt and ordering a sale of the land.³² The fact that the debtor's wife did not join with her husband in the oath prescribed for poor persons on appeal by herself and husband from a judgment denying their homestead rights does not prevent either party from asserting those rights in the upper court.³³ In some states an appeal of the entire case lies from a decision sustaining a motion to dissolve an injunction against the execution sale of the homestead, if the debtor's petition seeking to protect his homestead is dismissed at the same time the injunction is dissolved.³⁴ Questions not raised below cannot be urged on appeal.³⁵ Harmless error will not work a reversal.³⁶ If there has been an appeal from homestead proceedings and the judgment in favor of the debtor has been affirmed, the creditor may not file a supplemental pleading in the lower court and reach the property by showing that the exemption has terminated.³⁷

there is such a disease known to the law as homicidal insanity; what it is, or in what it consists, no lawyer or judge has ever yet been able to explain with precision. Physicians, especially those having charge of the insane, gradually, it would seem, come to the conclusion that all wicked men are mad, and many of the judges have so far fallen into the same error as to render it possible for any man to escape the penalty which the law affixes to crime. We do not intend to be understood as expressing the opinion that in some instances human beings are not afflicted with a homicidal mania, but we do intend to say that a defence consisting exclusively of this species of insanity has frequently been made the means by which a notorious offender has escaped punishment. What, then, is that form of disease, denominated homicidal mania, which will excuse one for having committed a murder? Chief Justice Gibson calls it 'that unseen ligament pressing on the mind and drawing it to consequences which it sees but cannot avoid, and placing it under a coercion which, while its results are clearly perceived, is incapable of resistance'—'an irresistible inclination to kill.'"

I. HOMICIDE IN GENERAL.

A. Definitions and Classification — 1. HOMICIDE. Homicide is the killing of a human being¹ by a human being.² By some definitions, and in this article, it is restricted to the killing of a human being by another human being.³ It is not a technical homicide, however, unless the death occurs within a year and a day after the act charged as the cause of death.⁴ Such homicide is either felonious or non-felonious.⁵

2. NON-FELONIOUS HOMICIDE. Non-felonious homicide is either justifiable or excusable.⁶ It is justifiable (1) if it was the legal duty of the slayer so to kill, or (2) if the slayer, without being himself at fault, had a legal right so to kill.⁷ It is excusable (1) if the slayer, although himself at fault, had a legal right so to kill, or (2) if the killing was the accidental result of a lawful act done in a lawful manner.⁸ Formerly the perpetrator of an excusable homicide suffered forfeiture of goods;⁹ but such forfeitures have been abolished and the distinction is now almost obsolete.¹⁰

3. FELONIOUS HOMICIDE. Felonious homicide is the killing of a human being without legal justification or excuse,¹¹ and is either murder or manslaughter; murder being an unlawful killing with malice aforethought,¹² and manslaughter being an unlawful killing without malice aforethought.¹³ Formerly, by statute in England,¹⁴ and possibly at common law, if with malice aforethought a servant killed his master, a wife her husband, or an ecclesiastic his superior, the offense was petit treason, but such cases are now classed as murder.¹⁵ The distinction was never recognized in this country, and in some jurisdictions it has been expressly abolished by statute.¹⁶

4. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL. Assault with intent to kill is an attempt, with specific intent and present aetnal or apparent ability, to kill a human being under such circumstances that it would have been a felonious homicide had the person assaulted died therefrom.¹⁷

B. The Victim — 1. IN GENERAL. Any human being, as an infant, idiot, or lunatic,¹⁸ an Indian,¹⁹ even though a prisoner of war,²⁰ a slave,²¹ an unchaste wife,²² a "bad, quarrelsome, or brutal man,"²³ or a criminal,²⁴ even though condemned to death,²⁵ may be the subject of a felonious homicide.

2. UNBORN CHILD. A person becomes a human being at birth, so that it is homicide if he is killed thereafter. At common law it was not homicide to kill an unborn child,²⁶ even after it had quickened.²⁷ By statute, however, the killing of an unborn child, after it has quickened, is sometimes made manslaughter.²⁸ At common law the life of a child is protected from the first moment when it has an independent existence, deriving none of its power of living through any connection with its mother.²⁹ This begins when the body of the child has been completely delivered,³⁰ and an independent circulation is established,³¹ even though it is still attached to the mother by the umbilical cord,³² and not until then.³³ It is not enough that the child has breathed, since children sometimes breathe before complete delivery, and while placental circulation is still going on.³⁴ On the other hand the fact that the child has not breathed is not conclusive, as independent life may exist momentarily before perceptible breathing begins.³⁵ If the child is born alive it is still homicide, although its death was caused by injuries inflicted before its birth.³⁶

3. INJURY TO CORPSE. A person ceases to be a human being at death, and no injury to a corpse can be homicide.³⁷ The belief of a murderer that his victim is dead is immaterial.³⁸

C. The Perpetrator — 1. CAPACITY AND RESPONSIBILITY — a. Infancy and Coverture. The capacity and responsibility of infants and married women in cases of homicide are elsewhere treated.³⁹

b. Insanity — (i) IN GENERAL. Insanity does not relieve one from criminal responsibility for a homicide, unless at the time the disease has subverted the intellect or overcome the will.⁴⁰ The courts do not agree as to the test by which freedom from criminal responsibility is to be determined;⁴¹ but probably all courts would now agree that one who, by reason of mental disease at the time of his act, did not know that it was wrong, is not punishable.⁴² Many courts hold

It is manslaughter if the child dies, after complete birth, from injuries negligently inflicted upon it during birth. Senior's Case, supra. Where, by statute, it was a felony to commit an abortion, it was held to be murder if an abortion caused the child to be born alive so prematurely that it was much less capable of living and died in consequence of the exposure (Reg. v. West, 2 C. & K. 784, 2 Cox C. C. 500, 61 E. C. has been some confusion between the doctrine of irresistible impulse and moral or emotional insanity, by which is usually meant a blunting or perversion of the moral faculties as distinguished from a mental disease. Moral or emotional insanity, in the limited sense in which it is used above, is probably not a defense anywhere.⁴⁵ Mere stupidity or weakness of mind, not amounting to idiocy or insanity, does not excuse a homicide.⁴⁶ If there is no mental disease a defendant who commits a homicide in a frenzy produced by anger, jealousy, or other like passion, although he may be unable to control himself, is fully responsible for the homicide.⁴⁷ And he is criminally responsible, although some mental defect makes him more liable to yield to passion than if he were mentally sound.⁴⁸ It is sometimes held that there is no degree of insanity insufficient to justify an acquittal but sufficient to reduce the degree or grade of a homicide.⁴⁹

(II) TEMPORARY AND PARTIAL INSANITY. One who suffers from intermittent insanity is fully responsible for a homicide committed during a lucid interval.⁵⁰ If committed during an insane interval, he should be acquitted if the insanity is then of the degree that would be recognized as ground for the acquittal of a defendant if permanently insane.⁵¹ If defendant is partially insane, that is, subject to insane delusions as to certain things, but in other respects sane, he is not criminally responsible if the homicide would be excusable or justifiable in case the facts were as his delusion leads him to believe them to be;⁵² but if the homicide would not be justifiable or excusable under those circumstances, the delusion is generally held not to free him from responsibility.⁵³ Many cases apply to partial insanity the same tests applied to general insanity.⁵⁴

In Michigan People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 482, seems to deny the exemption from responsibility ordinarily given to the insane or to one who commits homicide while suffering from an attack of intermittent insanity of but brief duration. State v. Simms, 71 Mo. 538. A defendant who is suffering from a suicidal mania and intends to commit suicide is guilty of murder if she kills her children, not because of an insane impulse to do so but because she does not wish to leave them alive at her death. The insane impulse is not the proximate cause of the homicide, but is the result of reasoning about the situation that will be created by yielding to the insane impulse. People v. Quimby, 134 Mich. 625, 96 N. W. 1061. In New Hampshire, however, the rule seems to be that evidence of partial insanity, whether it appears to have any direct connection with the homicide or not, should be submitted to the jury, and they may determine, from expert testimony, whether, as a matter of fact, there was any connection between the disease and the act. Thus where defendant killed deceased because he believed that deceased was a witch, and that he had the right to kill witches, if this belief were an insane delusion it would be a defense, but if defendant was sane and had simply formed an erroneous conclusion, it would not be a defense. Hotema v. U. S., 186 U. S. 413, 22 S. Ct. 895, 46 L. ed. 1225. (II) DEGREES OF MURDER. ⁶³ It has been said that a drunken man is subject to the same legal responsibility for his acts as a sober man, and that the same inferences as to implied malice and intent to kill may be drawn from his conduct as from like conduct of a sober man. ⁶⁴ But these statements usually apply to the presumption of general criminal intent only. And when a higher degree or grade of murder requires the existence of some particular mental attitude in defendant at the time of the crime, intoxication may indicate that this mental attitude could not or did not exist, and that for want of this necessary element the crime was of a lower grade or degree. Where a homicide is murder in the first degree if the killing was intentional or was committed with deliberation and Aggravation of offense.—It is sometimes said that intoxication aggravates the crime. Aszman v. State, 123 Ind. 347, 24 N. E. 123, 8 L. R. A. 33; State v. Cross, 27 Mo. 332; People v. Eastwood, 14 N. Y. 562; People v. Fuller, 2 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 16. But these are merely general statements and the actual decisions are that intoxication does not increase either the grade or degree of the homicide. McIntyre v. People, 38 Ill. 514; Haile v. State, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 154; Ferrell v. State, 43 Tex. 503. See also CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 172. Where defendant, while intoxicated, had been carelessly flourishing a revolver and afterward, in attempting to replace it in his pocket, accidentally discharged it, it was held that the fact that he was intoxicated did not raise the grade of the homicide from manslaughter to murder. State v. Cross, 42 W. Va. 253, 24 S. E. 996.

Wisconsin.—Terrill v. State, 74 Wis. 278, 42 S. W. 243, holding that temporary insanity primarily due to an injury received in childhood, but aroused at the time of the crime by recent voluntary intoxication, was an absolute defense.

But compare State v. Wilson, 104 N. C. 868, 10 S. E. 315, holding that where defendant was affected by a blow formerly received so that when he drank liquor he became temporarily insane, and, knowing this, he voluntarily drank and became insane, and, while insane, committed a homicide, it was murder. But temporary insanity, due to recent voluntary intoxication, does not reduce the degree as a matter of law; it is simply a fact to be considered by the jury. King v. State, (Cr. App. 1901) 64 S. W. 245. Before the statute the rule in Texas was that drunkenness was not an absolute defense, nor was temporary insanity produced immediately by intoxication such, even though defendant was so drunk that he did not know what he was doing; but intoxication was to be considered to show the mental condition of the defendant at the time of the act in order to fix the degree. *Ferrell v. fact that defendant was drunk is no defense as to that degree.⁶⁶ And in so far as the distinction between the first and second degrees of murder depends, not upon the intent, but upon the manner in which the crime is committed or the attending circumstances, intoxication will not reduce the degree.⁶⁷ In any case proof of intoxication should be received with caution for the purpose of lowering the degree in case of homicide or felonious assault.⁶⁸ If the crime was planned while defendant was sober it is not reduced in degree because he was intoxicated at the time it was committed.⁶⁹ It is usually said that to reduce the grade of the crime the Contra.—In Missouri it is held that deliberation and premeditation are not affected by the voluntary intoxication of defendant, and that such intoxication does not reduce a murder from the first to the second degree (State v. Kindred, 148 Mo. 270, 49 S. W. 845; State v. Duestrow, 137 Mo. 44, 38 S. W. 554, 39 S. W. 266; State v. O'Reilly, 126 Mo. 597, 29 S. W. 577; State v. Sneed, 88 Mo. 138; State v. Hundley, 46 Mo. 414; State v. Harlow, 21 Mo. 446). Where a drunken man fired into a crowd and killed a bystander, it was held that his intoxication would not affect the intent with which he acted and would therefore not reduce the degree of the crime. State v. Miller, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 195 [affirmed in 4 Phila. 210] (holding that where murder committed in the perpetration of a robbery is in the first degree, the intoxication of defendant at the time, provided he had sufficient consciousness to understand that he was committing a robbery, will not reduce the degree).

“But mere nervous excitement does not go far enough to reduce the grade of the offense. No voluntary intoxication can have that effect unless it is accompanied by a temporary destruction of the reason. . . . If the inebriate’s memory has not been impaired, or his judgment perverted; if his physical senses, and especially his sight and hearing, have not become enfeebled or distorted; if he walks with a firm, elastic step; if he can distinguish friend from foe, and knows the difference between right and wrong, then he retains mind enough to plan and execute a murder” in the first degree. Casat v. State, 40 Ark. 511, 521.

Whether actual incapacity is necessary.—In most of the above cases it is said that actual incapacity is required, without special consideration as to whether a lesser degree of intoxication might not be sufficient to reduce the grade if, by reason of the intoxication and the circumstances attending the crime, the requisite mental element did not exist. In Wilson v. State, 60 N. J. L. 171, 37 Atl. 954, 38 Atl. 428, this question was directly considered and the decision was that there must be actual incapacity, seven judges believing that the test was whether defendant could premeditate, five that it was whether

(III) MURDER OR MANSLAUGHTER. It is generally held that mere intoxication does not reduce a homicide to manslaughter.⁷¹ In many of the cases in which the decision is based upon this rule defendant evidently intended to kill the deceased and was not so drunk that he did not know what he was about,⁷² or the homicide

he did premeditate. To the same effect see Gilmore v. State, 126 Ala. 20, 28 So. 595; People v. Odell, 1 Dak. 197, 46 N. W. 601. In Hempton v. State, 111 Wis. 127, 142, 86 N. W. 596, this reason is given for the rule: "If reason, notwithstanding the intoxication . . . be not so completely dethroned . . . but that the wrongdoer can exercise judgment, he must do so or pay the penalty of being held responsible for his acts regardless of such disturbing cause." See also Marshall v. State, 59 Ga. 154; Roberts v. People, 19 Mich. 401; State v. Hansen, 25 Oreg. 391, 35 Pac. 976, 36 Pac. 296. But under the Florida statute, which requires a premeditated design to kill the deceased or some other person in the first degree of murder, it is held that the fact that defendant was sober enough to form an intent to shoot his victim is not absolute proof of his ability to form a premeditated design to kill. Cook v. State, (1903) 35 So. 665; Garner v. State, 28 Fla. 113, 9 So. 835, 29 Am. St. Rep. 232. In a few jurisdictions the test is whether defendant did act with premeditation and deliberation. Thus a homicide may be reduced to murder in the second degree, although defendant was not incapacitated from acting with deliberation and premeditation, if the circumstances attending the killing show that he did not so act, but the purpose to kill was formed in a passion, produced by a cause operating on a mind excited by liquor. Smith v. State, 4 Nebr. 277; Cartwright v. State, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 376; Lancaster v. State, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 575; Haile v. State, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 154; Cornwell v. State, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 147. The test is occasionally stated in the conjunctive as being whether defendant could form the intent and did form it. Warner v. State, 56 N. J. L. 686, 29 Atl. 505, 44 Am. St. Rep. 415; Nevling v. Com., 98 Pa. St. 322. But in both these jurisdictions the rule requiring incapacity is now adopted, as appears from the cases above cited. In State v. Trivas, 32 La. Ann. 1086, 36 Am. Rep. 293, the test was said to be lack of capacity to form a deliberate intent or to premeditate. But in a later case, State v. Ashley, 45 La. Ann. 1036, 13 So. 738, the court quotes with approval the statement that intoxication, although not so excessive as to prevent the formation of an intent to kill deliberately and premeditatedly, may be considered with the other facts of the case to determine whether the act was premeditatedly and deliberately done. The earlier case is not cited in this opinion and appears to have been overlooked.

was premeditated and defendant drank to nerve himself to commit it.⁷³ But it has been said that the same rule applies, although defendant was so intoxicated that he did not know what he was doing, or was rendered temporarily insane by drunkenness,⁷⁴ or although the homicide would not have occurred if he had not been drunk.⁷⁵ According to the weight of authority, however, where there was legal provocation sufficient to reduce the crime to manslaughter, but it is uncertain whether defendant acted under the influence of the provocation or of prior malice, the fact that he was intoxicated at the time is admissible as tending to prove that he acted under the provocation.⁷⁶ But to reduce a homicide committed in sudden passion, upon a provocation received when defendant was intoxicated, from murder to manslaughter, the provocation must have been legally adequate to reduce the grade of the crime if defendant had been sober.⁷⁷ If there was sufficient cooling time after adequate provocation, the grade will not be reduced to manslaughter, although, because of intoxication, defendant had not recovered from his passion.⁷⁸ There is authority for the proposition that where the homicide was committed under such circumstances that it was murder if death was intended, but manslaughter if death was not intended, defendant's intoxication may be considered on the question of his intent.⁷⁹ There is also some authority that intoxication, in connection with other facts, may show lack of Johnson*, 41 Conn. 584, it is said that intoxication, coupled with provocation, may reduce a homicide to manslaughter by showing want of malice. While the opinion is not quite clear upon this point it seems to mean that it might do so, although the provocation were not adequate to mitigate the crime of a sober man.

78. Com. v. Hawkins, 3 Gray (Mass.) 463; State v. McCants, 1 Speers (S. C.) 384. Where defendant had for some time known that deceased had adulterous intercourse with defendant's wife, the homicide was held murder rather than manslaughter, although defendant was intoxicated when he committed the crime, because it was not committed under the recent provocation necessary to reduce the degree had he been sober. *State v. malice and thus reduce a homicide to manslaughter.⁸⁰ And there are decisions that drunkenness alone may reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter, if so excessive that defendant was incapable of forming or entertaining a specific intent, or of acting with premeditation or deliberation.⁸¹

(iv) ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL. Voluntary intoxication may reduce what would otherwise be felonious assault with intent to murder or kill to simple assault and battery by showing that defendant did not have the specific intent which is a necessary element in the felony,⁸² unless the rule is changed by stat-

ered as tending to show lack of intent to shoot at that time, and hence, to reduce the crime to manslaughter, although he had just made an indefinite threat to kill four people.

In Malone v. State, 49 Ga. 211, the rule that intoxication, with other circumstances, might reduce the grade to manslaughter was approved but was questioned in Marshall v. State, 59 Ga. 154, without deciding whether the rule is correct or not. The court has since said that it is sufficiently favorable to the defendant, so the point is still unsettled in this

The fact that he was intoxicated seems to have been the only circumstance affording mitigation of the grade, but the point is not discussed in the case.

ute;⁸³ but the rule does not apply where defendant was not so drunk as to be incapable of entertaining the necessary specific intent,⁸⁴ or where he formed such intent and then became voluntarily drunk and committed the offense.⁸⁵

(v) AIDING AND ABETTING. On a prosecution for aiding and abetting in the commission of a murder or assault with intent to kill, it may be shown that defendant was so drunk as to be incapable of understanding what his co-defendants were doing, for in such case he could not be guilty of aiding and abetting.⁸⁶

(vi) CONSPIRACY TO MURDER. So also on a prosecution for conspiracy to murder it may be shown that defendant was so drunk at the time the alleged conspiracy was entered into that he did not know what he was doing.⁸⁷

(vii) SELF-DEFENSE. It has been held that a homicide committed under the unjustifiable belief, due to drunkenness, that defendant's life was in danger, so that he was justified in killing the deceased, is reduced to manslaughter.⁸⁸ But there is at least one decision to the contrary.⁸⁹ Where the question is whether the homicide was committed in self-defense or of malice aforethought, and it is shown that defendant had attempted to kill deceased a short time before the final encounter, the fact that defendant was intoxicated at the latter time tends to rebut the presumption that he was acting under the influence of the intent

In cases of assault with intent to inflict great bodily harm, etc., intoxication has been considered in determining whether the specific intent existed. State v. Pasnau, 118 Iowa 501, 92 N. W. 682; State v. Garvey, 11 Minn. 154. And so upon the charge of assault with intent to wound. Cline v. State, 43 Ohio St. 332, 1 N. E. 22; Nichols v. State, 8 Ohio St. 435. In People v. Franklin, 70 Cal. 641, 11 Pac. 797, the court said that while intoxication might show lack of intent to murder, it would not disprove the intent in a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon with intent to inflict great bodily harm, but gave no reason for making the distinction.

83. Estes v. State, 55 Ga. 30 (holding that voluntary intoxication of defendant was no defense to a charge of assault with intent to murder, since the statute provided that voluntary intoxication should be no excuse, and to lower the grade of the offense because of such intoxication would be to fritter away the statute); Hernandez v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 271, 22 S. W. 972. But see to the contrary under the Illinois statute, Crosby v. People, 137 Ill. 325, 27 N. E. 49.

84. Marshall v. State, 59 Ga. 154, 156 (holding that a felonious assault is not reduced unless defendant was too drunk to act voluntarily, the court saying: "To be too drunk to form the intent to kill, he must be too drunk to form the intent to shoot"); State v. Rigley, 7 Ida. 292, 62 Pac. 679; Roberts v. People, 19 Mich. 401; *Reg. v. shown in the former encounter, and therefore his intoxication at the time of the final encounter may be considered on this question.⁹⁰

(VIII) INVOLUNTARY INTOXICATION. The rule that drunkenness does not exempt one from criminal responsibility for a homicide does not apply to involuntary intoxication, provided of course the extent of the intoxication is such as to render him incapable of understanding the nature of his act.⁹¹ But a slight degree of involuntary intoxication is no defense.⁹² Intoxication is not involuntary within this rule, because of the fact that deceased furnished defendant with intoxicating liquor or induced him to drink,⁹³ or because defendant, by reason of his previous habits, had such an appetite for drink as amounted to a disease overcoming his will and impelling him to drink.⁹⁴

(IX) DELIRIUM TREMENS OR SETTLED INSANITY. Delirium tremens or settled insanity produced by prior intoxication is treated like other insanity, and is an absolute defense in a prosecution for homicide when insanity due to any other cause and of the same degree would be a defense.⁹⁵ Such insanity must be distinguished from temporary insanity or frenzy directly caused by excessive intoxication.⁹⁶ But if such insanity actually existed it is immaterial that the defendant

Nature of such insanity.—To be an absolute defense the intoxication must have produced a fixed mental disease of some duration or permanence (Rafferty v. People, 66 Ill. 118; Cluck v. State, 40 Ind. 263; Lanergan v. People, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 266, 34 How. Pr. 390 [reversed in 39 N. Y. 39, 6 Park. Cr. 209]; *Boswell v. If the frenzy was the direct result of the intoxication, and not of disease, even though due to long and habitual drinking, it will be no defense. Longley v. Com., 99 Va. 807, 37 S. E. 339. The mental disease must be the remote effect of intoxication, not the direct effect (Ward

v. State, 19 Tex. App. 664; U. S. v. Clarke, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,811, 2 Cranch C. C. 158), lasting after the immediate effects of the intoxication have passed away (Beasley v. State, 50 Ala. 149, 20 Am. Rep. 292; State v. Hundley, 46 Mo. 414).

Degrees of murder.—In Territory v. Davis, 2 Ariz. 59, 10 Pac. 359, it was said that mental disorder, produced by prior intoxication, would reduce the grade of the crime to murder in the second degree or to manslaughter, if it was so great as to prevent the deliberation and premeditation necessary in the first degree of murder, or to prevent the formation of an intent to kill.

Illustrations.—One who went with the principal toward the scene of the crime armed with a rifle for the purpose of aiding the principal but remained one hundred and fifty yards in the rear was held to have been constructively present. State v. Chastain, 104 N. C. 900, 10 S. E. 519. And so it was held of one who was with the principal and handed him the weapon with which the crime was committed a few moments before its commission, although he had left the place three or four minutes before it was committed. State v. Douglass, 34 La. Ann. 523. And where the crime was committed near a state boundary line, it was held that an accomplice who remained across the line two or three hundred yards' distant from the scene was constructively present. Hatfield v. Com., 12 S. W. 309, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 468.

To be constructively present the accomplice must be where he may actually aid the principal if necessary. It is not enough that he is at an appointed place where the perpetrator erroneously supposes he could render aid. Com. v. Knapp, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 496, 20 Am. Dec. 491.

Accessories distinguished.—In Brennan v. People, 15 Ill. 511, one who was present aiding and abetting was called an accessory before the fact, but this was probably an oversight. Formerly those who were present aiding and abetting were called accessories at the fact and were treated as accessories, but now all present participating in the crime are treated as principals. *State v. See also CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 192.

Personal aid.—The aid must be personal. The connection is with the crime. See CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 193. Contra.—There is some authority, however, for the proposition that the doctrine of constructive homicide is restricted to felonies in which the parties are armed with deadly weapons for the purpose of killing their opponents if necessary; so that, where death accidentally occurs in a fight, those who are aiding and abetting the principals whose act directly caused the death are not criminally responsible for the homicide. C. 616; 1 Hale P. C. 437 (where it is said: "In manslaughter there can be no accessories before the fact, for it is presumed to be sudden, for if it were with advice, command, or deliberation, it is murder and not manslaughter. . . . 19. Thus it has been held that the common-law rule does not apply to one who is present aiding and abetting, and who would be guilty as a principal in the second degree at common law, but who by statute is declared to be an accessory before the fact. Freel v. State, 21 Ark. 212; People v. Newberry, 20 Cal. 439. And in some states, where statutes have abolished the distinction between principals and accessories before the fact and allow the latter to be prosecuted and punished as principals, it has been held that one who would be an accessory before the fact only at common law may be convicted of voluntary manslaughter. 3 Am. St. Rep. 320), or gives a signal that the victim has left a certain point (Dean v. State, 85 Miss. 40, 37 So. 501), or knowingly induces the victim to go where the murderer is lying in wait (Lashley v. Com., 88 Va. 400, 13 S. E. 803), or knowingly detains the victim in conversation until the murderer arrives there (State v. O'Brien, 3 Ida. 374, 29 Pac. 38), or knowingly provokes a difficulty with the victim to furnish a pretext for killing him (State v. Paxton, 126 Mo. 500, 29 S. W. 705), or furnishes a weapon a few minutes before the murder, knowing the use to which it is to be put, although not present when the murder occurs (State v. Douglass, 34 La. Ann. 523), or knowingly furnishes a weapon and stands by while the murder is committed, although refusing to do the act himself (Williamson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1897) 43 S. But one who, influenced by a woman's threats of self-destruction if the means of procuring an abortion are not furnished her, procures poison for that purpose and gives it to her, but is not present when it is taken and does not encourage her to take it, is not guilty of aiding and abetting in her death caused thereby, although he knows her purpose. *Reg. v. Where defendant was a member of a conspiracy to overthrow the existing order by force, and furnished bombs knowing that they were to be used to kill the police whenever there should be a collision between the police and the workmen, and they were so used and a policeman was killed, he was held guilty of murder, although he was not present when the definite plans were made, did not know who was to throw the bomb, or at what particular officer it would be thrown, or just when or where it would be thrown. It was held that if he was knowingly acting in one part of the common design it was sufficient. Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320.

Illustrations.—He who says or does anything calculated or intended to make it known that he would help if need be, by taking part by joining in a conspiracy to commit a homicide,²⁶ or by hiring,²⁷ instigating,²⁸ inciting,²⁹ advising,³⁰ or counseling him to commit it,³¹ or by being privy to the homi-

in a fight or by keeping off others, or by aiding the escape of the perpetrators, thereby aids and abets the crime. State v. Hildreth, 31 N. C. 440, 51 Am. Dec. 369. Where poachers on being approached by gamekeepers drew up in two lines and threatened to shoot and one of them fired and killed a gamekeeper, the others were aiding and abetting therein. Rex v. Edmeads, 3 C. & P. 390, 14 E. C. L. 625. If two persons are driving carts at a dangerous speed and are encouraging each other to drive at such dangerous speed, and one of them runs over a man and kills him, the other aids and abets the manslaughter. Reg. v. Swindall, 2 C. & K. 230, 2 Cox C. C. 141, 61 E. C. L. 230. But if two are riding fast along a highway as if racing, but there is no evidence that they are encouraging each other in so riding and one rides against a man and kills him, the other is not an aider and abettor therein. Rex v. Mastin, 6 C. & P. 396, 25 E. C. L. 492. One who takes part in a general plan to break up a dance by the use of deadly weapons, and hastens with a fellow conspirator, who actually commits the homicide, to the aid of a third member of the conspiracy, aids and abets the homicide. *Smith v. Illustration.—One who is a member of a general conspiracy to overthrow the existing order by force, and by words or pen incites others to attack the police, intending to cause an attack to be made, if such an attack is made in consequence of the incitement, aids and abets a homicide committed in the attack, although this result was produced in a manner not contemplated. Spies v. Abbott, 67 J. P. 151; Rex v. Dyson, R. & R. 389), whether the survivor has tried to carry out his agreement and failed (Reg. v. Jessop, 16 Cox C. C. 204; Reg. v. Alison, 8 C. & P. 418, 34 E. C. L. 813) or has changed his mind or only pretended to agree (Reg. v. Stormonth, 61 J. P. 729). In Missouri one who assists another in committing suicide is guilty of manslaughter. State v. Ludwig, 70 Mo. 412. Tex. Pen. Code, art. 77, providing that if any one prepares any means by which a person may injure himself, with the intent that he shall thereby be injured, he shall, by the use of such indirect means, become a principal, does not apply to cases of suicide, and does not make one who knowingly furnishes a suicide with the means of killing himself guilty of murder. Grace v. Orrick, 106 Mo. 111, 17 S. W. 176, 329. So one who goes with the principal where they are likely to meet deceased, with a common purpose to demand from him an explanation of a difficulty, and who drives and has control of the wagon in which the perpetrator stands when he shoots deceased, and who stands up in the wagon by the perpetrator while the shooting is going on, thereby aids and abets the homicide. McDonnell v. People, 168 Ill. 93, 48 N. E. 86. And one who talks with others about killing deceased, meets with them at the appointed place and goes with them, and is standing near by when they kill deceased, aids and abets the murder, although he is himself unarmed. Holtz v. State, 76 Wis. 99, 44 N. W. 1107. But one who overhears others planning to whip deceased and drive him out of town and goes along to see the fight in which deceased is killed does not aid and abet the killing. *People v. Aid after commission of homicide.—One who is present at the scene of the homicide without aiding and abetting at the time, but who aids the perpetrator on the following day, does not thereby become a principal in the second degree. State v. Kelly, 74 Iowa 589, 38 N. W. 503. But the giving of aid after the commission of the homicide may indicate that defendant was present pursuant to a mutual agreement, and countenancing the crime by his presence, and so was aiding and abetting therein. *Thomas v. even with approval of its commission, if that approval is not communicated to the perpetrator, does not constitute aiding and abetting.³⁶

(III) ACCOMPLICE MUST CONTRIBUTE TO HOMICIDE. If defendant has advised the commission of a homicide or incited it, his advice or encouragement must have contributed to the deed.³⁷ There is also authority for the proposition that it is not enough that the acts of defendant tended to aid or encourage the principal, but they must have been done for that purpose.³⁸

(IV) INTENT. The aider and abetter must either act with criminal intent,³⁹ or he must share in the intent of the principal.⁴⁰ One who aids and abets with full knowledge of the situation thereby adopts the criminal intent of his principal.⁴¹

Illustrations.—A woman who, after vainly trying to dissuade her friend from undergoing an abortion, accompanies her to the place where it is performed, but neither says nor does anything to encourage the person who performs the operation, is not an accessory in the murder, where death results from the operation. People v. Balkwell, 143 Cal. 259, 76 Pac. 1017. The mere fact that one was present when a homicide was committed, and knew that it was being committed, does not make him an aider and abetter therein, although he made no effort to prevent it (State v. Hildreth, 31 N. C. 440, 51 Am. Dec. 369), did not try to apprehend the murderer (Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713), or was the owner in charge of the premises where the crime was committed (Chapman v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 328, 65 S. W. 1098, 96 Am. St. Rep. 874).

W. 1108, supports this rule, although it was not put upon this ground by the court. So one who without the knowledge of the principal in the commission of a homicide is near at hand, hastening to his aid, but arrives too late to render assistance, does not aid and abet the homicide. Rhodes v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 332, 45 S. W. 1009. It has been held that where defendant is charged with encouraging and abetting a mob to commit a murderous assault, it must be shown that his words were addressed to or at least heard by some members of the mob. Cabbell v. State, 46 Ala. 195. But in Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320, it was said that he who enters into a conspiracy is liable for everything done pursuant to the conspiracy, by any of the other parties before or after his entry.

Possibly, however, if the acts actually did cause the homicide, defendant would be guilty of aiding and abetting, although he did not so intend them. Woolweaver v. State, 50 Ohio St. 277, 34 N. E. 352, 40 Am. St. Rep. 667. Although defendant, knowing that another who was assaulting deceased was about to kill him, held deceased's son, thereby preventing him from aiding his father, yet defendant is not guilty of aiding and abetting the homicide unless he held the son for the purpose of preventing him from aiding. *Ramon v. W. 154, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 54), or in self-defense, or the defense of another, he does not aid and abet a homicide resulting from the fight (Dosse v. Com., 16 S. W. 713, 13 Ky. L. be committed.⁴⁷ The accomplices are so liable, although the conspirator who actually committed the homicide cannot be identified.⁴⁸

(II) COMMON DESIGN TO COMMIT SOME OTHER UNLAWFUL ACT—(A) Homicide a Natural Result. There may be liability for a homicide committed in the execution of a common design, although the plan did not involve taking life.⁴⁹ It is often said that all who aid and abet the doing of an unlawful act are liable for a homicide proximately resulting therefrom, and a natural and probable consequence thereof,⁵⁰ although not contemplated by the parties,⁵¹ or even forbidden by defendant.⁵² Under this rule those who have aided and abetted in an abor-

If a conspiracy to commit a crime is formed, and that crime is committed, in general pursuance of the conspiracy, but not exactly as planned, all the conspirators are guilty. Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 52, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320. In Smith v. State, 50 Ark. 545, 8 S. W. 941, however, defendant had shot deceased pursuant to a conspiracy with a physician. This physician attended the wounded man and there was evidence that the death was wholly due to the intentional misconduct of the physician in probing the wound. The court, without, however, considering the effect of the conspiracy, assumed that defendant would not be liable if the act of the physician was the sole cause of the death. All who joined in a common design to attack deceased with a knife, but without killing him, are responsible for his death. Reg. v. Price, 8 Cox C. C. 96.

49. The liability may extend beyond the enterprise in which the conspirator is engaged to any proximate and logical consequence thereof. So that if the common design embraces the contingency of a deadly encounter, and includes a common purpose to aid therein even to the taking of life, all members of the conspiracy are liable for a homicide resulting therefrom. Pierson v. State, 99 Ala. 148, 13 So. 550. Where several persons combine to commit a crime of such a nature, or under such circumstances, as will probably result in the taking of human life, if they should be opposed in the execution of their design, it must be presumed that they understand the consequence which may be reasonably expected to follow from carrying their design into effect and to assent to the taking of human life if necessary to accomplish their purpose, so that if a homicide does occur in the prosecution of their common design, all are responsible for it. *Reeves v. in the furtherance of the common object. The distinction is sometimes made that if the common design is to commit a trespass or a minor offense, the accomplices are not liable for a homicide committed by the principal unless it was a plain and direct consequence of the design;⁶¹ but if the common design was to commit a felony, they are liable, although the homicide results collaterally therefrom.⁶²

Illustrations.—One who armed himself and went to help his brother beat deceased was held responsible if either he or his brother killed deceased in the encounter, although they did not intend to kill him unless they were themselves in danger. Irvine v. State, 104 Tenn. 132, 56 S. W. 845. In Reg. v. Caton, 12 Cox C. C. 624, it is said that one who engages in a fist-fight will be liable for the death of his opponent if caused by an unlucky blow with the fist, but that he will not be liable if his accomplice, without his knowledge or consent, strikes a blow with a knife causing death. The distinction, although not discussed by the court, seems to be that the former is a possible result of such a fight, and therefore should be contemplated by one engaging in it, and responsibility therefor assumed; but the use of a deadly weapon is not a natural result of a fist-fight, but springs from the independent malice of his accomplice. The rule laid down in People v. Carter, 96 Mich. 583, 56 N. W. 79, that one who interferes in a fight and knocks down one of the contending parties, for the purpose of assisting the other to whip him, and by so doing puts him in such position that he cannot protect himself, is responsible for his death caused by a kick inflicted by the other combatant while deceased was still in the position caused by defendant's blow, accords. So one who is present aiding and abetting a prize-fight is guilty of manslaughter if one of the fighters is killed by a blow with his fist struck by his opponent in the fight. Rex v. Murphy, 6 C. & P. 103, 25 E. C. L. 343. One who joins with another to tease and annoy deceased is responsible for his death, if caused by the other in carrying out their common design. There was some evidence in the cases that one or both of defendants threw dangerous missiles at deceased shortly before he was killed. This would bring the cases within the general rule, as the use of such missiles by one would be notice to the other that they were carrying the teasing to a point where it was dangerous to life; but the court did not rest the liability on this ground, but put it on the broad ground that they had united in a common unlawful purpose. State v. Jimmerson, 118 N. C. 1173, 24 S. E. 494; State v. Finley, 118 N. C. 1161, 24 S. E. 495.

61. State v. Shelledy, 8 Iowa 477; U. S. v. Ross, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,196, 1 Gall. 624. In Mercersmith v. State, 8 Tex. App. 211, 214, it is said that if defendant joined with the principal to commit an unlawful act, as burglary or rape, and while they were carrying out this design, the principal killed deceased within the general purview of the design, defendant is liable. But if the common undertaking was not unlawful, but they intended to have carnal intercourse with the daughter of deceased, with whom they had before had such intercourse, and while defendant was accomplishing this object the principal without his knowledge or consent shot and killed deceased, although to enable both to evade discovery and escape from the house, defendant is not liable. "It is the lawfulness or criminality of the purpose and common design which gives scope and character to acts committed in connection with its perpetration." And in People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112, 115, it is said that if the parties combined for the purpose of engaging in prostitution and one of them to avoid detection threw deceased, with whom they were engaged in illicit intercourse, out of the window without intending to kill her, to avoid detection, and without the knowledge or consent of the other, the other is not responsible for the homicide. "There can be no criminal responsibility for any thing not fairly within the common enterprise, and which might be expected to happen if occasion should arise for any one to do it."

62. People v. Olsen, 80 Cal. 122, 22 Pac. 125; State v. Shelledy, 8 Iowa 477; U. S. v. Ross, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,196, 1 Gall. 624. In Rex v. Rice, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 509, 4 Ont. L. Rep. 223, it is said that to render all liable, in addition to the plan to commit a felony there must be a design to overcome all opposition by force. In State v. Cannon, 52 S. C. 452, 30 S. E. 589, the distinction drawn was between a common design to commit a lawful act and such design to commit an unlawful act.

63. Martin v. State, 136 Ala. 32, 34 So. 205; State v. Furney, 41 Kan. 115, 21 Pac. 213, 13 Am. St. Rep. 262; Powers v. Com., 110 Ky. 386, 61 S. W. 735, 63 S. W. 976, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1807, 53 L. R. A. 245; Scott v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 536, 81 S. W. 294; Bowers v. State, 24 Tex. App. 542, 7 S. W. 247, 5 Am. St. Rep. 901. The liability of the accomplice is like that in agency, for the

is not of itself sufficient to make one liable for a homicide committed, concurrently with the execution of the common plan, by the independent act of a confederate,⁶⁴ growing out of his private malice,⁶⁵ or other cause having no connection with the common object,⁶⁶ unless the accomplice was present aiding and abetting the homicide itself.⁶⁷

(iii) INDEPENDENT ACTS. Although one may have had some difficulty or altercation with the deceased, he is not liable for a homicide committed at or about the same time, by a third person who was acting independently, without any conspiracy or common design,⁶⁸ even though the altercation brought on the fatal liability is measured by the express or implied authority. People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112. But he who "combines with another to do an unlawful act, . . . impliedly consents to the use of such means by his confederate as may be necessary or usual in the successful accomplishment of such an act. The more flagrant and vicious the act agreed to be done, the wider is the latitude of the agency impliedly conferred to execute it." Williams v. State, 81 Ala. 1, 5, 1 So. 179, 60 Am. Rep. 133. Whether the result was natural or exceptional is a question of fact for the jury. Bowers v. State, 24 Tex. App. 542, 7 S. W. 247, 5 Am. St. Rep. 901. In Rex v. Collison, 4 C. & P. 565, 19 E. C. L. 652, it is said that one who had joined with another in a common purpose to steal apples was not liable for the act of his associate in wounding a watchman, unless there was also a common purpose to resist with extreme violence if anyone interfered with them. The same rule was applied in Lamb v. People, 96 Ill. 73, where defendant engaged with others in robbing a store, and after the goods had been taken away and defendant had left the party, one of his associates killed a policeman to prevent discovery and arrest, on the ground that the commission of a homicide after the successful accomplishment of the conspiracy to steal the goods was not a probable consequence of that conspiracy. A combination to escape arrest for an offense cannot be inferred from a combination to commit the offense. People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112.

Where several men, pursuant to a conspiracy, armed themselves with weapons and engaged in a fight to carry out the objects of the conspiracy and one of them killed a bystander, who was taking no part in the fight, his associates were not responsible for the murder, if it did not happen in the prosecution of the illegal purpose. *Rex v. Illustrations.—This rule applies, although defendant had mortally wounded deceased, if the death was solely caused by the independent act of a third person. Walker v. State, 116 Ga. 537, 42 S. E. 787, 67 L. R. A. 426. A defendant who was engaged in a fight with deceased, but without deadly weapons, was not responsible when a bystander without prior concert or any connection with the original quarrel, and acting independently of defendant, suddenly engaged in the fight and killed deceased with a deadly weapon without defendant's knowledge or consent. State v. Howard, 112 N. C. 859, 17 S. E. 166. The same rule applies to one who engages in an independent fist-fight with other members of the party to which deceased belonged, when in the fight deceased was killed with a deadly weapon, but without the knowledge or consent of defendant, and without any prior conspiracy or agreement with the one who killed him. Goins v. State, 46 Ohio St. 457, 21 N. E. 476. One who aids and abets a prize-fight is not responsible if a mob breaks into the ring and beats one of the fighters, causing his death, although he would be liable had his death been caused by a blow of the other fighter in the contest. Rex v. Murphy, 6 C. & P. 103, 25 E. C. L. 343.

Perpetrator not identified.—If two or more are acting independently, and the actual perpetrator of the homicide cannot be identified, encounter,⁶⁹ and the third person interfered to aid him.⁷⁰ Those who participate on one side of a contest are not liable for a homicide committed by their opponents.⁷¹

all must be acquitted, although it is certain that one of them was guilty. People v. Woody, 45 Cal. 289; Campbell v. People, 16 Ill. 17, 61 Am. Dec. 49; State v. Goode, 132 N. C. 982, 43 S. E. 502; State v. Edwards, 126 N. C. 1051, 35 S. E. 540; Reg. v. Turner, 4 F. & F. 339.

69. Brabston v. State, 68 Miss. 208, 8 So. 326; Casey v. State, 20 Nebr. 138, 29 N. W. 264.

Contra.—Beets v. State, Meigs (Tenn.) 106, where it was said that defendant was guilty of manslaughter where he was engaged in a fight with deceased and his brother came to his aid and struck and killed deceased, although without defendant's knowledge or consent, because defendant was engaged in an unlawful act and defendant furnished the occasion for killing deceased.

70. Alabama.—Jordan v. State, 79 Ala. 9. Michigan.—People v. Elder, 100 Mich. 515, 59 N. W. 237.

Minnesota.—State v. Lucy, 41 Minn. 60, 42 N. W. 697.

Virginia.—Reynolds v. Com., 33 Gratt. 834. Washington.—State v. White, 10 Wash. 611, 39 Pac. 160, 41 Pac. 442.

Illustrations.—Thus where deceased knocked defendant down with a hammer, was upon him, and they were struggling, and a third party without defendant's knowledge or consent ordered deceased to get off and on his failure to do so shot and killed him, defendant was not liable. Turner v. State, 97 Ala. 57, 12 So. 54. So where two are at the same time, and for the same reason, trying to kill deceased, but neither knows that the other is so engaged, one is not responsible for homicide committed by the other. Quinn v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1893) 20 S. W. 1108. In Tharpe v. State, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 138, however, it seems to have been assumed that one who was engaged in a fight with deceased with intent to kill him would be guilty of murder if just as they were being separated a third person came up and killed him to assist defendant, although there was no conspiracy between defendant and the third person, unless the fight had ended when deceased was killed or the third person killed deceased to carry out his own unlawful purpose. And there is authority that one who calls another to his aid becomes liable for all that the other may do in aiding him, even though he use a deadly weapon. Reg. v. Caton, 12 Cox C. C. 624; Rex v. Whithorne, 3 C. & P. 394, 14 E. C. L. 627.

71. Thus one of a number who are resisting arrest is not liable when the marshal in shooting at them to subdue them kills a bystander. Butler v. People, 125 Ill. 641, 18 N. E. 338, 8 Am. St. Rep. 423, 1 L. R. A. 211. And a rioter is not liable for the death of a bystander caused by a shot fired by those who are suppressing the riot. Com. v. Campbell, 7 Allen (Mass.) 541, 83 Am. Dec. 705. So if several attack defendant and one of them kills an associate by a blow aimed at defendant, defendant is not liable therefor. Manier v. State, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 595. But where train-robbers forced a member of a train crew into a dangerous position, and he was there killed by a shot from those who were opposing the robbery, they were held liable therefor. Keaton v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 621, 57 S. W. 1125; Taylor v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 564, 55 S. W. 961.

Contra.—Com. v. Hare, 2 Pa. L. J. Rep. 467, 4 Pa. L. J. 257, holding that if two separate bodies of men fight with firearms in a public street, and fire at each other simultaneously, and innocent citizens are killed by the missiles so discharged, those who participate on both sides are alike chargeable with the homicide.

72. Spencer v. State, 77 Ga. 155, 3 S. E. 661, 4 Am. St. Rep. 74; Lamb v. People, 96 Ill. 73; State v. Ross, 29 Mo. 32. So where defendant had engaged in a fight with deceased but the fight had ended before deceased was killed, defendant was held not responsible for the subsequent homicide, if there was no conspiracy. Tharpe v. State, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 138; Bowman v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1892) 20 S. W. 558. Where defendant, on learning that his brother was engaged in a fight, ran to aid him, but did not reach the spot until the fight had ended and deceased was mortally wounded, he was held not an accomplice in the homicide, although after his arrival he struck deceased, provided his blow was not a contributing cause of deceased's death. Rhodes v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 332, 45 S. W. 1009.

f. Grade or Degree. All the accessories in a homicide are not necessarily guilty of the same grade or degree of the crime.⁷⁶ Thus a principal may be guilty of murder, the accessory of manslaughter,⁷⁷ if the accomplice acted without malice and without knowledge of the malice of his principal,⁷⁸ or acted upon adequate provocation.⁷⁹ But if the accomplice aided and abetted with full knowledge of the principal's malice, and without sufficient provocation,⁸⁰ or knowingly aided and abetted a felony out of which a murder naturally and probably would result, he is guilty of murder.⁸¹ Conversely the principal may be guilty of manslaughter and the accessory of murder, if the accomplice aided maliciously while the principal was acting upon adequate provocation.⁸² Like rules apply to cases of assault with intent to commit murder.⁸³

D. Defendant's Act or Omission as the Cause of Death — 1. IN GENERAL. A person may be responsible for a homicide and guilty of murder or manslaughter, according to the circumstances, in whatever manner or by whatever means the death was caused, provided it was caused by his unlawful act or omis-

76. If the accomplice entered into the commission of the offense with the same intent and purpose as the perpetrator, then his offense will be of the same degree, but he may have a different intent, and in such case will be guilty according to his intent. Red v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 667, 47 S. W. 1003, 73 Am. St. Rep. 965. See also Grimsinger v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 1, 69 S. W. 583.

Murder in the first degree.—To be guilty of murder in the first degree, one who aids and abets therein must himself have a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, or must know or believe that the principal has such intent. McCoy v. State, 40 Fla. 494, 24 So. 485. But if he shares in that intent, he is guilty of murder in the first degree. State v. Morgan, 22 Utah 162, 61 Pac. 527.

St. 251, 2 Atl. 191. See also State v. Absence, 4 Port. (Ala.) 397. In Horton v. Com., 99 Va. 848, 38 S. E. 184, one principal in the second degree was convicted of murder, another principal in the second degree of manslaughter. See supra, I, C, 2, b.

If the principal in the second degree supposed that the intent of the principal in the first degree was only to beat, not to kill, he is guilty of manslaughter only. Brown v. State, 28 Ga. 199; State v. Munchrath, 78 Iowa 268, 43 N. W. 211. But in Reg. v. Caton, 12 Cox C. C. 624, it was said that one who was called to aid another in a fist-fight and did so was not guilty of manslaughter even, if the other without his knowledge suddenly killed their opponent with a knife.

79. One who, in a heat of passion engen-

Price*, 8 Cox C. C. 96. A defendant who watches to give warning in case of interruption, while another commits murder in the first degree, knowing what the other is doing, is himself guilty of murder in the first degree. Grimsinger v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 1, 69 S. W. 583.

81. See supra, I, C, 2, e, (II), (A). If the accessory calls in the principal to his aid in an encounter, he is guilty of murder if in aiding him the principal maliciously kills his opponent. Rex v. Whithorne, 3 C. & P. 394, 14 E. C. L. 627.

The law has not confined the offence to any particular circumstances or manner of killing; but there are as many ways to commit murder, as there are to destroy a man, provided the act be done with malice, express or implied"); 4 Blackstone Comm. 196 (where it is said: "The killing may be by poisoning, striking, starving, drowning, and a thousand other forms of death, by which human nature may be overcome"). See also Nixon v. People, 3 Ill. 267, 269, 35 Am. Dec. 107; 1 Hale P. C. 431.

Exposure to danger.—One may be responsible for a homicide caused by his act in exposing a helpless child or adult to inclement weather (Pallis v. State, 123 Ala. 12, 26 So. 339, 82 Am. St. Rep. 106; Nixon v. People, 3 Ill. 267, 35 Am. Dec. 107; State v. Behm, 72 Iowa 533, 34 N. W. 319; Gibson v. Com., 106 Ky. 360, 50 S. W. 532, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1908, 90 Am. C. 431), or contagious diseases (Castell v. Bamberidge, 2 Str. 854; 1 Hale P. C. 432). And the same is true of exposure of a helpless person to other dangers. 1 Hale P. C. 431, 432. See Pallis v. State, 123 Ala. 12, 26 So. 339, 82 Am. St. Rep. 106; U. S. v. Freeman, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,162, 4 Mason 505 (compelling sick and weak sailor to go aloft); Rex v. Huggins, 2 Ld. Communication of venereal disease.—One may be criminally responsible for homicide by reason of a death caused by a venereal disease communicated by him in committing a rape. Reg. v. Greenwood, 7 Cox C. C. 404.

Fright, grief, etc., see infra, note 85.

Procuring execution of innocent person.—In England it was held that those who had caused the conviction and execution of an innocent person by perjured testimony for the purpose of obtaining a reward offered for the conviction of robbers were not legally liable for the death so caused. Rex v. Macdaniel, 1 East P. C. 333, 1 Leach C. C. 44. Although Foster approves this case (Fost. C. C. 131), both Blackstone and East say that the prosecution was not abandoned through any doubt that the facts amounted to murder, but through fear that witnesses might be deterred from testifying in capital cases if they were likely to be prosecuted for murder in case of an erroneous conviction; and East says that Lord Mansfield thought defendants were liable (4 Blackstone Comm. 196; 1 East P. C. 333).

85. The law does not take cognizance of homicide where it is claimed that death was the result of grief or fear caused by the accused, where there was no physical or corporeal injury. 1 Hale P. C. 429, where it is said: "If a man either by working upon the fancy of another, or possibly by harsh or unkind usage put another into such passion of grief or fear, that the party either die suddenly, or contract some disease, whereof he dies, tho as the circumstances of the case may be, this may be murder or manslaughter in the sight of God, yet in foro humano it cannot come under the judgment of felony, because no external act of violence was offered, whereof the common law can take notice, and secret things belong to God." See also Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 295, 322, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Reg. v. Murton, 3 F. & F. 492; 1 East P. C. c. 5, § 13, where it is said that "working upon the fancy of another, or treating him harshly or unkindly, by which he dies of fear or grief, is not such a killing as the law takes notice of."

Physical or corporeal injury resulting from fright.—A person, however, may be guilty of murder or manslaughter, according to the circumstances, if, by reason of fright intentionally and unlawfully caused by him, physical or corporeal injury and death result.

Neglect and ill-treatment of child.—One who by long-continued neglect, deprivation, and exposure or ill treatment, eventually causes the death of a child, is liable therefor. Dreessen v. State, 38 Nebr. 375, 56 N. W. 1024; Medina v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 49 S. W. 380. See also supra, notes 84, 86; infra, II, B, 6, a; III, C, 4, b, (IV), (B).

Other illustrations.—Defendant is liable for a homicide resulting therefrom where he set fire to a hotel in which deceased lived (Reddick v. Com., 33 S. W. 416, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1020); where he threw a beer glass at his wife, breaking a lamp which she was carrying and thereby setting fire to her and fatally burning her (Mayes v. People, 106 Ill. 306, 46 Am. Rep. 698); where, while fighting, defendant threw deceased and he fell upon a dagger that had been dropped by defendant and was killed thereby, although defendant had not attempted to use the dagger (People v. Goodwin, 1 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 253, 5 City Hall Rec. 11, 6 City Hall Rec. 9); where defendant struck deceased, who was lying down, a blow with his fist, which rendered him incapable of standing and walking, and in attempting to do so, deceased fell and fatally injured himself (Cunningham v. People, 195 Ill. 550, 63 N. E. 517); where deceased died from fright caused by defendant's unlawful violence and assault (Cox v. People, 80 N. Y. 500); where of the deceased himself reasonably due to defendant's unlawful conduct,⁹⁴ as in the case where a person by actual assault or threat of violence causes another to do an act resulting in death.⁹⁵ defendant assaulted a woman who at the time had an infant in her arms, and thereby so frightened the infant that it had convulsions and died (Reg. v. Towers, 12 Cox C. C. 530); where defendant negligently drove his team and wagon into collision with another wagon and the horses attached to the other wagon ran away, throwing out the occupant and causing fatal injuries (Belk v. People, 125 Ill. 584, 17 N. E. 744); and where defendant struck the horse on which deceased was riding and then rode after deceased, whereupon deceased spurred his horse which then threw and killed him (Rex v. Hickman, 5 C. & P. 151, 24 E. C. L. 499).

If defendant's act was the occasion or a condition rather than the cause of the death, he is not liable. Thus where defendant knocked deceased down with his fist, and a horse jumped on him or kicked him and thus killed him, it was held that defendant was not liable if there was no connection between his act and the act of the horse. People v. Rockwell, 39 Mich. 503. See also Com. v. Campbell, 7 Allen (Mass.) 541, 83 Am. Dec. 705; Reg. v. Bennett, Bell C. C. 1, 8 Cox C. C. 74, 4 Jur. N. S. 1088, 28 L. J. M. C. 27, 7 Wkly. Rep. 40, holding that where defendant had for years been accustomed to keep and manufacture fireworks in a house in London for sale, in violation of law, and by the supposed negligence of one of his servants in his absence there was an explosion and fire by which another's death was caused, defendant was not liable for manslaughter, as the unlawful act of keeping the fireworks was disconnected with the supposed negligence of the servants, which was the proximate cause of the death. The contrary has been held, however, in cases where the deceased was knocked down by defendant and then killed by the blow or kick of a third person with whom defendant was acting in committing an assault on the deceased. *State v. if after a collision due to negligence of the officers of a steamboat, the passengers were told that they would be safe upon the hurricane deck, but under the pressure of the circumstances in which they were placed, some of them, acting with ordinary prudence and discretion, sought to save themselves upon rafts and floats and were drowned while so doing, the officers were criminally responsible for their death, although they would have been saved had they gone upon the hurricane deck; but if, after being so warned, under the influence of excessive alarm they unnecessarily and indiscreetly took to rafts and floats, the officers were not liable).

St. Rep. 596 (holding that where a husband uses such force and violence as to cause his wife to leave the house from fear of death or great bodily harm, and she dies from exposure, he is not responsible for her death unless her fear was well grounded or reasonable, and that error of the trial court in failing thus to qualify an instruction as to manslaughter in such a case was prejudicial, it appearing that the accused was a cripple in one arm and that the deceased, his wife, was able to whip him and had done so); State v. Preslar, 48 N. C. 421 (holding that an allegation in an indictment that a husband feloniously made an assault upon his wife and violently, feloniously, and of his malice aforethought forced her to leave the house, whereby she came to her death, was not sustained by proof that after she had been beaten, and after her husband had gone to bed, she voluntarily left the house and unnecessarily remained out of doors); Reg. v. Pitts, C. & M. 284, 285, 41 E. C. 3. INTERVENING CAUSES. If a wound or other injury cause a disease, such as gangrene, empyema, erysipelas, pneumonia, or the like, from which deceased dies, he who inflicted the wound or other injury is responsible for the death.⁴ If the deceased died of fright and the fright was caused by the violence and assault of defendant, he is responsible.⁵ The same liability attaches if the injury was calculated to cause death, but the immediate cause was treatment of the injury deemed necessary by competent physicians.⁶ He who inflicted the injury is liable even though the medical or surgical treatment which was the direct cause of the death was erroneous or unskilful,⁷ or although the death was due to negligence or failure by the deceased to procure treatment or take proper care of the wound.⁸ The same is true with respect to the negligence of nurses or other

Prior mortal wound in self-defense.—Where defendant inflicted a mortal wound in self-defense and thereafter, not acting in self-defense, inflicted a second wound, which contributed to or accelerated the death, he is criminally responsible therefor; but if the second wound neither caused, accelerated, nor contributed to the death, he is not responsible for the homicide. *Rogers v. Contra.—In Coffman v. Com., 10 Bush (Ky.) 495, it was said that if the operation would not have been deemed necessary by ordinarily prudent and skilful physicians and surgeons, or if so deemed necessary it was not performed with proper skill, and death resulted from the operation and not from the injury, defendant was not liable, although the injury would have proved fatal.

In Texas this rule of the common law is changed by statute and the man who inflicted a wound is not guilty of murder if the death was caused by improper treatment by the attending surgeon. Brown v. State, 38 Tex. 482. And see infra, note 8.

the deceased was a disease resulting from a germ entering the wound, and that, if the wound had been properly treated sooner, deceased might have recovered. Bishop v. State, 73 Ark. 568, 84 S. W. 707.

In Texas this rule is changed by Pen. Code, art. 652, which exempts the person who inflicted the injury from liability, if the injury would not have been fatal under other circumstances, but owing to gross negligence or manifestly improper treatment it became fatal. Brown v. State, 38 Tex. 482; Gardner v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 572, 73 S. W. 13; Johnson v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 283, 65 S. W. 92; Franklin v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 21, 51 S. W. 951; Morgan v. State, 16 Tex. App. 593. This statute changes the common-law rule, and under the statute the person who inflicted the wound will be relieved from liability, if the gross neglect and improper treatment allow, suffer, or permit a destruction of life, as well as where they cause it. Morgan v. State, supra. Refusal to permit the amputation of a leg, although the operation is advised by the attending physician, is not such gross neglect or manifestly improper treatment as will relieve from liability the person who inflicted upon deceased the bullet wound from which gangrene resulted, causing death. Franklin v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 21, 51 S. W. 951.

was responsible for his death); State v. Hambright, 111 N. C. 707, 16 S. E. 411.

"The act of killing, and the guilty intent, must concur to constitute the offense. An attempt, only, to kill with the most diabolical intent, may be moral, but cannot be legal, murder. If one man inflicts a mortal wound, of which the victim is languishing, and then a second kills the deceased by an independent act, we cannot imagine how the first can be said to have killed him, without involving the absurdity of saying that the deceased was killed twice. In such a case, the two persons could not be indicted as joint murderers, because there was no understanding, or connection between them. It is certain that the second person could be convicted of murder, if he killed with malice aforethought, and to convict the first would be assuming that he had also killed the same person at another time." State v. Scates, 50 N. C. 420, 423.

caused by defendant contributed to the death, defendant is liable, although a subsequent mortal wound inflicted independently by another also contributed thereto.¹⁴ But if, after the injury was inflicted by defendant, another cause intervened, which was the sole cause of death, defendant is not liable.¹⁵ Defendant is not liable if the injury inflicted by him was not fatal, but death was caused by a disease which was not itself caused by the injury, although the deceased had not recovered from the effects of the injury,¹⁶ unless the wound hastened the death.¹⁷

4. TIME OF DEATH. If more than a year and a day intervene between the injury and the death of the victim, the injury is not legally deemed the cause of the death, and the person who inflicted it is not criminally responsible for the homicide.¹⁸ When the death does occur within a year and a day, it relates back to the time at which the injury was inflicted,¹⁹ and the accused must be tried according to the laws in force at that time.²⁰

II. MURDER.

A. Definition — 1. AT COMMON LAW. Murder, as defined by the common law, is where a person of sound mind and discretion unlawfully kills any human being, in the peace of the sovereign, with malice aforethought, express or implied.²¹

2. UNDER STATUTORY PROVISIONS. In some jurisdictions the statutes in relation to homicide define murder as at common law, or else merely provide the punishment for murder without defining it, in which case the common-law definition applies.²² In some states, as will be seen, murder is by statute divided into degrees for the purpose of prescribing different punishments according to the circumstances of its commission.²³

B. Malice — 1. IN GENERAL. That which distinguishes murder from the other grades of homicide, both at common law and under most of the statutory definitions, is the presence of malice, or malice aforethought.²⁴

Blackstone's definition, "Any evil design in general; the dictate of a wicked, depraved and malignant heart" (4 Blackstone Comm. 199), has been followed in several cases. State v. Jones, 2 Pennew. Other definitions.—It is said that a homicide is malicious if committed under such circumstances of cruelty as manifest the thoroughly wicked heart (State v. Jarrott, 23 N. C. 76); as show cruelty of disposition and recklessness of consequences (McClain v. Com., 110 Pa. St. 263, 1 Atl. 45); or as carry with them the plain indication of a malevolent and diabolical spirit (Com. v. Green, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 289). A killing is malicious if the act causing death was reckless, wicked, or depraved, although depravity may not have been defendant's general characteristic. State v. Becker, 9 Houst. (Del.) 411, 33 Atl. 178. A corrupt and wicked motive and intention to do evil is sufficient. McAdams v. State, 25 Ark. 405. A homicide is malicious if committed "with wickedness or depravity of heart towards deceased, and the killing was determined on even a moment before the killing" (Bondurant v. State, 125 Ala. 31, 27 So. 775); or when perpetrated

from a premeditated design to effect death, or from a depraved heart, regardless of human life (People v. Divine, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 594; People v. Campbell, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 307). It has also been said that malice is a deliberate intention to kill a human being under circumstances which the law neither justifies nor excuses (Taylor v. State, 105 Ga. 746, 31 S. E. 764; Lewis v. State, 90 Ga. 95, 15 S. E. 697; Dozier v. State, 26 Ga. 156), whether it springs from hatred, ill-will, or revenge, ambition, or avarice, or a mere frenzy of drunkenness (Beck v. State, 76 Ga. 452). See also Carson v. State, 80 Ga. 170, 5 S. E. 295; and that malice is formed design on the part of defendant to take the life of deceased unlawfully, not in self-defense and without circumstances repelling the imputation of malice (Stoball v. State, 116 Ala. 454, 23 So. 162). But malice is not necessarily confined to an intention to take the life of deceased. It includes the intention to do an unlawful act which may probably result in depriving the party of life. Warren v. State, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 130; Ann v. State, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 159. Malice is the intent from which flows any unlawful and injurious act, committed without legal justification, when done on purpose and with evil intent. Lovett v. State, 30 Fla. 142, 11 So. 550, 17 L. R. A. 705. The following cases approve a definition of malice, substantially the same in all, as the intentional doing of a wrongful act toward another, without legal justification or excuse. State v. Decklotts, 19 Iowa 447; Jolly v. Com., 110 Ky. 190, 61 S. W. 49, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1622, 96 Am. St. Rep. 429; Ludwig v. Com., 60 S. W. 8, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1108; State v. Weeden, 133 Mo. 70, 34 S. W. 473; State v. Wieners, 66 Mo. 13; State v. Schoenwald, 31 Mo. 147; Spangler v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 233, 61 S. W. 314; Cain v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 210, 59 S. W. 275; Bean v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 51 S. W. 946; Powell v. State, 28 Tex. App. 393, 13 S. W. 599; Gallaher v. State, 28 Tex. App. 247, 12 S. W. 1087. In Vollmer v. State, 24 Nebr. 838, 40 N. W. 420, and Carr v. State, 23 Nebr. 749, 37 N. W. 630, the correctness of this definition was denied, and "the wicked, mischievous purpose, which characterizes the perpetration of an injurious act without lawful excuse" was substituted. But in Housh v. State, 43 Nebr. 163, 61 N. W. 571, and McVey v. State, 57 Nebr. 471, 77 N. W. 1111, the same court said: "'Malice,' in its legal sense, denotes that condition of mind which is manifested by the intentionally doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse. It means any willful or corrupt intention of the mind;" and in Davis v. State, 51 Nebr. 301, 70 N. W. 984, it was said that malice as an element in murder means a "wrongful act done intentionally without just excuse." The qualification, "without legal justification, excuse, or extenuation," is essential, as without it the definition would include an intentional killing under provocation legally sufficient to reduce the crime to manslaughter. Cribbs v. State, 86 Ala. 613, 6 So. 109. Malice includes not only anger, hatred, and revenge, but every other unlawful and unjustifiable motive. McCoy v. People, 175 Ill. 224, 51 N. E. 777; Harris v. State, 155 Ind. 265, 58 N. E. 75; State v. Hunter, 118 Iowa 686, 92 N. W. 872. This definition is criticized, however, in Nye v. People, 35 Mich. 16, on the ground that it abolishes that phase of manslaughter in which the killing is done intentionally and unlawfully but in a passion produced by lawful provocation. Malice includes all those states of mind in which a killing takes place without any cause which will in law excuse, mitigate, or justify the act. Honeycutt v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 129, 57 S. W. 806, 96 Am. St. Rep. 797, (Cr. App. 1901) 63 S. W. 639. Malice is "to vex, annoy, or injure another." Territory v. Egan, 3 Dak. 119, 13 N. W. 568. Malice "includes not only anger, hatred, revenge, which are sometimes spoken of as express malice, but also every other unlawful and unjustifiable motive. The wilful purpose of carrying out one's own determination without any regard for the rights of others is enough of itself in the meaning of the law to constitute malice. This word comprehends every unlawful motive, every wicked intent or mischievous purpose." Com. v. Gilbert, 165 Mass. 45, 49, 42 N. E. 336. "Reduced to its lowest terms, malice in murder means knowledge of such circumstances that according to common experience there is a plain and strong likelihood that death will follow the contemplated act, coupled perhaps with an implied negation of any excuse or justification." Com. v. Chance, 174 Mass. 245, 252, 54 N. E. 551, 75 Am. St. Rep. 306.

One who attempts to wreck a train, although he does not intend to kill any particular person, displays that depravity of mind and heart technically called universal malice. Presley v. State, 59 Ala. 98.

Thus one who deliberately kills another in revenge for a past offense, however heinous such offense may be, is guilty of murder, not manslaughter. Channell v. State, 109 Ga. 150, 34 S. E. 353.

Ill-will against a class is sufficient if the person killed was one of that class, although that person was not specially in the mind of defendant while he was forming the purpose to kill and deliberating and premeditating upon it. State v. Miller, 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 703, 7 Ohio N. P. 458.

Malice aforethought differs from malice, but the courts are not agreed as to the exact distinction. Tutt v. Com., 104 Ky. 299, 46 S. W. 675, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 492. In Clark v. Com., 111 Ky. 443, 63 S. W. 740, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1029, it is said that malice aforethought means premeditation to do the killing without legal excuse, and in McDaniel v. State, 8 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 401, 47 Am. Dec. 93, it is said that the phrase "premeditated design" used in the Mississippi statute means the same as malice aforethought in the common-law definition. "Premeditated design" in the New York statutes takes the place of "malice aforethought" or "malice prepense" at common law. People v. Van Brunt, 11 N. Y. St. 59. "Premeditation," "aforethought," and

"prepense" mean the same thing. Fitzgerald v. People, 37 N. Y. 413; People v. Clark, 7 N. Y. 385. It is said that on purpose and of his "own malice aforethought" means the intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse (State v. Jones, 86 Mo. 623; State v. Wieners, 66 Mo. 13), but there must be premeditation (State v. Curtis, 70 Mo. 594; U. S. v. Lewis, 111 Fed. 630). In Gilmore v. State, 126 Ala. 20, 28 So. 595, it is said that premeditation is not essential to murder in the second degree, and that malice might be present, although premeditation were excluded by passion, but the real question decided was that a killing might be malicious although committed in a sudden passion, and in Bondurant v. State, 125 Ala. 31, 27 So. 775, the same court said that the act must have been determined upon before the killing, which means that it must have been premeditated. Probably the court meant that the intent to kill need not be deliberately formed. Ford v. State, 129 Ala. 16, 30 So. 27. Under a statute defining express malice as "the deliberate intention to unlawfully take away the life of a fellow creature, which is manifested by external circumstances capable of proof," the term "express malice aforethought" includes both deliberation and premeditation. Borrego v. Territory, 8 N. M. 446, 46 Pac. 349. In People v. Borgetto, 99 Mich. 336, 58 N. W. 328, it is said that malice aforethought does not imply deliberation, but rather denotes purpose and design; it means malice existing at a time before the act, so as to be its moving cause. See also Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 299. The better view is that the killing need not be deliberate to be committed with malice aforethought. Nye v. People, 35 Mich. 16. Other cases seem to make deliberation the essential thing. U. S. v. Guiteau, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 498, 47 Am. Rep. 247, 10 Fed. 161; Nichols v. Com., 11 Bush (Ky.) 575; Johnson v. State, (Miss. 1901) 30 So. 39. A deliberate intent to kill, it has been said, must exist at the moment of killing in order to constitute malicious intent, and "malice aforethought" necessarily implies deliberation. Marzen v. People, 173 Ill. 43, 50 N. E. 249. "Malice is always presumed, when one person deliberately injures another. It is the deliberation, with which the act is performed, that gives it character. It is the opposite of an act, performed under uncontrollable passion, which prevents all deliberation or cool reflection in forming a purpose." Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 174, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320; Davison v. People, 90 Ill. 221. The Texas court has approved definitions of malice aforethought which do not seem to differ from the definitions of malice, as "the wicked and mischievous intent with which a man willfully does a wrongful act" (Cain v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 210, 59 S. W. 275), and "malice aforethought . . .

for any appreciable length of time before the killing; it is enough if it exist a moment before and at the time of the act.²⁹

4. EXPRESS AND IMPLIED MALICE. Malice is either express or implied,³⁰ express malice being where one unlawfully kills another with a sedate and deliberate mind, and formed design, without legal mitigation, excuse, or justification,³¹ and exists when one does a cruel act voluntarily and without excuse, justification or extenuation, and does not necessarily include hatred towards the person injured." Stevens v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 154, 59 S. W. 545. A late California case also seems to give to malice aforethought the usual definition of malice: "Malice aforethought, either express or implied, is manifested by the doing of an unlawful and felonious act intentionally and without legal cause or excuse. It does not imply a pre-existing hatred or enmity toward the individual injured." People v. Balkwell, 143 Cal. 259, 263, 76 Pac. 1017. It has been said that malice and malice aforethought are convertible terms (Fisher v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 151; Harrell v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 204, 45 S. W. 581), and that malice aforethought and express malice have the same meaning (Smith v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 14, 19 S. W. 252); but the Texas court restricts this interchangeable use to law writers and to judges in charges to juries, and says that it is not permissible in indictments (Cravey v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 90, 35 S. W. 658).

Statements of the rule.—If the purpose to kill was conceived but a moment before the killing it is sufficient. State v. Davis, 9 Houst. (Del.) 407, 33 Atl. 55; Cook v. State, 77 Ga. 96. Malice need not exist for any considerable length of time (Cook v. State, 77 Ga. 96; State v. Decklots, 19 Iowa 447), or for any length of time before the killing (Perry v. State, 102 Ga. 365, 30 S. E. 903; McMillan v. State, 35 Ga. 54; Green v. State, 13 Mo. 382). While malice must precede the act of killing it may not be distinguishable from that act (People v. Van Brunt, 11 N. Y. St. 59), but may be conceived at the moment the fatal stroke is given, if it precedes the act, although that follows instantly, as well as at any time before (People v. Cunningham, 6 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 398). It is immaterial how suddenly or recently before the act the determination is formed. Clark v. Com., 111 Ky. 443, 63 S. W. 740, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1029; Jolly v. Com., 110 Ky. 190, 61 S. W. 49, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1622, 96 Am. St. Rep. 429; Armstrong v. Com., 22 S. W. 750, 23 S. W. 654, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 344; Williams v. Com., 7 Ky. L. Rep. 744. If an act is cruel, that is, unnecessary and wanton, it does not matter how recently the determination to do it may have been formed before it is done. It is the cruelty and wantonness of the act, the animus of the actor, and not the length of time that a purpose to do the act may have existed, which determines its quality. Nichols v. Com., 11 Bush (Ky.) 575. Malice aforethought is not confined to homicides committed in cold blood with settled design and premeditation but extends to all cases, however sudden the occasion, where the act is done with such cruel circumstances as are the ordinary symptoms of a wicked, depraved, malignant spirit. U. S. v. Cornell, 25 Fed. Cas. Nos. 14,867, 14,868, 2 Mason 60, 91. But malice existing before the homicide must continue down to the time of the act. Green v. State, 97 Ala. 59, 12 So. 416, 15 So. 242; Clements v. State, 50 Ala. 117; Walker v. Com., 5 Ky. L. Rep. 861. In Jones v. Com., 75 Pa. St. 403, however, it was said that if defendant prepared a weapon with the undefined purpose of violence to someone, when he had ample time for reflection, but later committed a homicide without time for reflection, and when not fully conscious of his purpose, it is murder, since at common law malice exists which distinguishes it from manslaughter.

41. It is not murder to kill an officer who is seeking to arrest for felony, but without having a warrant in his possession, unless the slayer knew that he was acting under authority. Robinson v. State, 93 Ga. 77, 18 S. E. 1018, 44 Am. St. Rep. 127. But if defendant knew that he was being arrested for a felony it was immaterial that he did not know that deceased was an officer since a private person might lawfully make such an arrest. Snelling v. State, 87 Ga. 50, 13 S. E. 154. And a felon who is arrested on fresh pursuit is presumed to know the cause of his arrest and will be guilty of murder if he kills the officer making the arrest, although he has not been expressly notified of the charge against him. It is not necessary that the officer actually pursue the felon from the scene of his crime. If, immediately after the commission of the felony, the officer, upon information, goes to arrest the suspected felon, and arrests him twenty or twenty-five minutes after the commission of the felony, he is in fresh pursuit within the meaning of this rule. State v. Evans, 161 Mo. 95, 61 S. W. 590, 84 Am. St. Rep. 669. If defendant knew that the person arresting him was an officer (Rex v. Woolmer, 1 Moody C. St. Rep. 669) defendant cannot claim that he was entitled to further notice of his official character. Even though the uniformed officer did not first notify defendant of his intention to arrest him, and defendant shot and killed him, it is murder, for such notice is not necessary, and if it were, it is only in the last extremity that the right to use a deadly weapon arises under any circumstances. *People v. officer⁴⁴ has a right to use all necessary force to properly discharge his duty, and therefore such forcible acts will not reduce the grade of the crime.⁴⁵ Similar rules apply if a citizen is killed while engaged in preventing the commission of crime, or lawfully arresting the criminal.⁴⁶ Even when an attempt to arrest is illegal, the killing of the officer with malice is murder.⁴⁷ If a person voluntarily

But if defendant did not know that deceased was an officer, it is not murder, unless deceased gave some notice that he was an officer and of the intent with which he interfered in the affair. Gordon's Case, 1 East P. C. 315, 352. If an officer while trying to clear a public street, slightly pushes one who is obstructing the street, and that person, on so small a provocation, strikes the officer with a dangerous weapon and kills him, it will be murder; but if the officer, instead of a mere push, strikes a blow and knocks defendant down, the killing will be only manslaughter. Reg. v. Hagan, 8 C. & P. 167, 34 E. C. L. 670. In such case it is immaterial that defendant did not know of the ordinance under which the officer was acting. Carter v. State, 22 Fla. 553. So it seems that it is murder if, while an officer is trying to clear a saloon at night and without using excessive force is ejecting a person who refuses to go voluntarily, that person stabs him with a knife and kills him. Rex v. Hems, 7 C. & P. 312, 32 E. C. L. 630. It is murder for one to kill an officer who is endeavoring to eject him from his home pursuant to a decree, even though the slayer has no personal animosity against the officer. Smith v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 267, 81 S. W. 936. See also infra, III, B, 2, d, (III), (c).

A railroad conductor who by statute is made a police officer is not obliged to immediately eject a person who is detected in an attempt to steal a ride on his train, but may require him to come into the train and pay his fare; and if he refuses to do so and assaults the employees on the train with a deadly weapon, the conductor may arm himself and forcibly overcome his resistance. The fact that in so doing the conductor attempts a dangerous assault upon the trespasser will not reduce the homicide below the grade of murder if immediately thereafter, while he is then unarmed and doing nothing, the trespasser shoots and kills him. Griffin v. State, 113 Ga. 279, 38 S. E. 844.

44. A deputy sheriff (State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 Atl. 863) or special officer deputized by a justice of peace to serve a warrant (State v. Jones, 88 N. C. 671), or de facto officer (Bullock v. State, 65 N. J. L. 557, 47 Atl. 62, 86 Am. St. Rep. 668; State v. McMahan, 103 N. C. 379, 9 S. E. 489; Weatherford v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 530, 21 S. W. 251, 37 Am. St. Rep. 828), or person summoned to assist a United States deputy marshal in making an arrest (North Carolina v. Gosnell, 74 Fed. 734), has in this respect the same rights as the sheriff or regular officer. A city policeman has the same rights as a sheriff or constable while making an arrest

Under a statute authorizing gamekeepers to arrest poachers, it is murder if a poacher kills a gamekeeper lawfully attempting his arrest. Rex v. Whithorne, 3 C. & P. 394, 14 E. C. L. 627; Rex v. Edmeads, 3 C. & P. 390, 14 E. C. L. 625; Rex v. Ball, 1 Moody C. C. 333; Rex v. Ball, 1 Moody C. C. 330.

45. A lawful arrest, although made with a display of deadly weapons where those who were being arrested were also armed, is not such provocation as will reduce the killing of the officer to manslaughter, nor does such a case present any question of legal self-defense. State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 Atl. 863. Hence it is immaterial which side began the attack or fired the first shot. Tolbert v. State, 71 Miss. 179, 14 So. 462, 42 Am. St. Rep. 454; State v. Craft, 164 Mo. 631, 65 S. W. 280; People v. Flanigan, 174 N. Y. 356, 66 N. E. 988, 17 N. Y. Cr. 300. See also III, B, 2, d, (III), (c).

The arrest and detention of defendant must be technically legal, and if the arrest was illegal, or if the deceased was taking defendant anywhere except to the proper authorities, it will not be murder if defendant kills him. Rex v. Weir, 1 B. & C. 238, 8 E. C. L. 125; Rex v. Curran, 3 C. & P. 397, 14 E. C. L. 629.

One who intentionally and recklessly discharges firearms at a crowd of people is guilty of murder if his shot kills anyone, although he did not intend to kill. Bailey v. State, 133 Ala. 155, 32 So. 57; Brown v. Com., 17 S. W. 220, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 372; State v. Young, 50 W. Va. 96, 40 S. E. 334, 88 Am. St. Rep. 846. One who voluntarily fires a loaded pistol at another, if there are no mitigating circumstances, and kills the person whom he shot, is guilty of murder, even though he intended to wound or cripple the deceased, and not to kill him. Stovall v. State, 106 Ga. 443, 32 S. E. 586. Since the act of shooting was itself unlawful, defendant need not have been engaged in any other unlawful act at the time. Pool v. State, 87 Ga. 526, 13 S. E. 556.

One who wrecks a railroad train, although without intending the death of any person, is guilty of murder if death is caused thereby. Presley v. State, 59 Ala. 98; Davis v. State, 51 Nebr. 301, 70 N. W. 984.

Homicide in committing abortion.—Even where procuring an abortion is not a felony (see infra, II, B, 6, b), or is not a crime at all, it is murder to unintentionally cause the death of a woman in procuring an abortion, where the means employed or the circumstances are such that the act is likely to cause death or great bodily harm.

b. Homicide in Commission of Other Crime—(1) FELONY. An unintended homicide, committed by one who at the time is engaged in the commission of England.—Rex v. Grey, Kel. C. C. 64.

See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," §§ 5, 22.

Sudden affray.—If a homicide is committed with a weapon which would reasonably be presumed to cause death, even though in a sudden affray, it is murder. People v. Tuhi, 2 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 242. But compare infra, III, B, 2, d, (III), (B).

A deadly weapon has been defined as "an instrument reasonably calculated and likely to produce death or serious bodily injury from the manner in which it was used" (Hardy v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 400, 401, 37 S. W. 434); one likely to produce death or great bodily injury (People v. Leyba, 74 Cal. 407, 16 Pac. 200; People v. Franklin, 70 Cal. 641, 11 Pac. 297; People v. Rodrigo, 69 Cal. 601, 11 Pac. 481; People v. Fuqua, 58 Cal. 245); not one which would ordinarily produce death, but one from which, as it was used, death would probably result (Sylvester v. State, 72 Ala. 201). Whether an instrument is a deadly weapon often depends more upon the manner of the use than upon the intrinsic character of the thing itself (State v. Norwood, 115 N. C. 789, 20 S. E. 712, 44 Am. St. Rep. 498), or upon the subject on which it is used (State v. West, 51 N. C. 505). Thus a pin pushed down a baby's throat with intent to cause death is a deadly weapon (State v. Norwood, 115 N. C. 789, 20 S. E. 712, 44 Am. St. Rep. 498); and so is a beer-glass which is thrown at a man's head so forcibly as to fracture his skull (Griffin v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 53 S. W. 848). An oak stick forty inches long and from two to three and one-half inches in circumference (Winter v. State, 123 Ala. 1, 26 So. 949), a like stick nearly three feet long and from one and one-half to two inches in diameter (State v. West, 51 N. C. 505), an ordinary penknife (State v. Roan, 122 Iowa 136, 97 N. W. 997), or a pair of scissors (State v. Hardy, 95 Mo. 455, 8 S. W. 416) may be so used as to be deadly weapons. Whether the instrument used was a deadly weapon may be determined by the actual effects produced by its use (State v. West, 51 N. C. 505), even though there is no evidence describing the weapon (State v. Bowles, 146 Mo. 6, 47 S. W. 892, 69 Am. St. Rep. 598).

In Texas, by statute, a homicide committed under circumstances that at common law would reduce it to manslaughter is murder if committed with a bowie-knife or dagger. Isaacs v. State, 25 Tex. 174. This statute is not unconstitutional, as it does not restrict the right of citizens to bear arms for lawful purposes. Cockrum v. State, 24 Tex. 394.

Malice not implied from carrying or possession of a deadly weapon.—Malice is not implied from the mere fact that defendant was lawfully carrying a deadly weapon, as when carrying it for self-defense (State v. Walker, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 353, 8 West. L. J. 145; State v. Clark, 51 W. Va. 457, 41 S. E.

204), or even from the fact that the weapon was carried in violation of law (Alford v. State, 33 Ga. 303, 81 Am. Dec. 209). If a person who has cause to anticipate that he will be attacked arms himself for the purpose of self-defense, and subsequently kills his opponent but not in self-defense, the fact that he had armed himself will not raise the grade of the crime, but it will be murder or manslaughter in accordance with the other circumstances attending the killing. Allen v. U. S., 157 U. S. 675, 15 S. Ct. 720, 39 L. ed. 854; Thompson v. U. S., 155 U. S. 271, 15 S. Ct. 73, 39 L. ed. 146; Gourko v. U. S., 153 U. S. 183, 14 S. Ct. 806, 38 L. ed. 680. It has been held that, although defendant made threats, provoked a difficulty, and killed deceased with a fence-rail, which was a dangerous weapon, it did not follow that the killing was murder, unless he got the weapon for the purpose of killing deceased, and acted in pursuance of that purpose. King v. State, 74 Miss. 576, 21 So. 235. A person who enters into a contest with another, and who has in his possession a deadly weapon and intends to use it, is guilty of murder if in the course of the contest he actually uses it and kills his opponent; but if he did not intend to use it when he began the contest, but uses it in the heat of passion in consequence of an attack made upon him, it will be manslaughter. If he uses it to protect his own life, or to protect himself from such serious bodily harm as would give him a reasonable apprehension that his life was in actual danger, having no other means of defense, and no means of escape, retreating as far as he can, it will be justifiable homicide. Reg. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 160, 34 E. C. L. 666. But if it is shown that the weapon was provided for the purpose of killing his adversary when the occasion should arise, malice is implied. Cotton v. State, 31 Miss. 504; Com. v. Drum, 58 Pa. St. 9; Thompson v. U. S., 155 U. S. 675, 15 S. Ct. 73, 39 L. ed. 146; Gourko v. U. S., 153 U. S. 183, 14 S. Ct. 806, 38 L. ed. 689. Compare infra, III, B, 2, c, d, (III), (B).

Circumstances may disprove malice.—It is not the intention to use a deadly weapon, but the intention to kill, of which the use of the weapon is evidence, that constitutes the crime of murder. Palmore v. State, 29 Ark. 248. Hence, if some of the circumstances attending the killing are shown, they must be considered in connection with the presumption in determining whether the killing was malicious. Jordan v. State, 79 Ala. 9; State v. Earnest, 56 Kan. 31, 42 Pac. 359; People v. Curtis, 52 Mich. 616, 18 N. W. 385. Thus where defendant, while intoxicated, struck deceased once or twice with a piece of iron, which was a deadly weapon, his intoxication should be considered in determining his intent in using such a weapon. King v. State, 90 Ala. 612, 8 So. 856. If the circumstances are fully shown by the evidence, the finding as to malice should be based upon them and some other felony, is murder both at common law and under the statutes.⁵⁶ The rule applies, for example, to an unintended homicide committed by one who is at the time engaged in committing an unlawful abortion, where this is made a felony by statute.⁵⁷ It also applies to one who unintentionally commits a homicide not upon the presumption. Godwin v. State, 73 Miss. 873, 19 So. 712.

Presumption a rule of evidence.—In a few jurisdictions, this appears to be merely a rule of evidence, justifying a finding that the killing was malicious, but not requiring such a finding, even though no mitigating circumstances appear.

Iowa.—State v. Perigo, 70 Iowa 657, 28 N. W. 452; State v. Townsend, 66 Iowa 741, 24 N. W. 535. Many Iowa cases, however, state the rule as though malice would be conclusively presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary. State v. Rainsbarger, 71 Iowa 746, 31 N. W. 865; State v. Hockett, 70 Iowa 442, 30 N. W. 742; State v. Sullivan, 51 Iowa 142, 50 N. W. 572; State v. Zeibart, 40 Iowa 169; State v. Decklots, 19 Iowa 447; State v. Gillick, 7 Iowa 287. One who without either real or apparent necessity kills another is guilty of murder in the second degree, although he entered the combat without any intent to kill, especially if he takes an undue advantage, or uses a deadly weapon. State v. Murphy, 33 Iowa 270, 11 Am. Rep. 122.

Kansas.—State v. Dull, 67 Kan. 793, 74 Pac. 235; State v. Earnest, 56 Kan. 31, 42 Pac. 359; State v. Sortor, 52 Kan. 531, 34 Pac. 1036.

Kentucky.—Donnellan v. Com., 7 Bush 676.

Montana.—State v. Sloan, 22 Mont. 293, 56 Pac. 364; Territory v. Hart, 7 Mont. 489, 17 Pac. 718.

Texas.—It is not murder, although a deadly weapon was used, unless the homicide was committed in the commission of a felony, or the circumstances show an evil disposition on the part of the accused, or he intended to kill, and whether or not he had such intent is a question of fact for the jury. Fitch v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 500, 36 S. W. 584.

See also infra, VIII, A, 2, 3.

In Florida the courts are not permitted to state the rule to the jury at all, on the ground that it changes the regular presumption of innocence to that of guilt, from the single fact of the killing. Ernest v. State, 20 Fla. 383.

In the federal courts the earlier cases announce the rule as conclusive, in the absence of extenuating circumstances (North Carolina v. Gosnell, 74 Fed. 734; U. S. v. Armstrong, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,467, 2 Curt. 446), but in Allen v. U. S., 164 U. S. 492, 17 S. Ct. 154, 41 L. ed. 528, the supreme court affirmed a charge authorizing a finding of malice, because it informed the jury "not that they were bound to, but that they were at liberty to, infer . . . malice aforesaid" from the use of the deadly weapon.

389. Whenever one, in doing an act with the design of committing felony, takes the life of another, even accidentally, it is murder. People v. Olsen, 80 Cal. 122, 22 Pac. 125.

Iowa.—State v. Shelledy, 8 Iowa 477.

Maine.—If one who is in pursuit of an unlawful design, unintentionally kills another, it will be murder if the intended offense is a felony, manslaughter if it is a misdemeanor. Whether the intended offense is a felony or a misdemeanor is not to be ascertained by the common-law classification of crimes, but by the classification made by the statute. Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; State v. Smith, 32 Me. 369, 54 Am. Dec. 578.

Qualifications of rule.—The homicide must be an ordinary and probable effect of the felony in which he was engaged. People v. Olsen, 80 Cal. 122, 22 Pac. 125; Lamb v. People, 96 Ill. 73. The question has been raised whether the statement of the rule in the text as to unintended homicide is not too broad, and whether it should not be confined to unintentional homicides occurring in the commission of felonious acts dangerous to life. Reg. v. Serne, 16 Cox C. C. 311. in committing arson,⁵⁸ burglary,⁵⁹ rape,⁶⁰ or robbery,⁶¹ or who while attempting to commit suicide unintentionally kills another.⁶²

(11) MISDEMEANOR. It has been said that at common law a homicide committed in committing a misdemeanor, or in an attempt to commit one is murder; ⁶³ but this rule seems to have been restricted to cases in which the misdemeanor involved a breach of the peace,⁶⁴ or the acts of defendants were such as would naturally endanger life.⁶⁵

England.—Reg. v. Gaylor, 7 Cox C. C. 253, Dears. & B. C. C. 288.

The consent of the woman operated upon will not prevent the crime from being murder if her death ensues. State v. Lodge, 9 Houst. (Del.) 542, 33 Atl. 312; and other cases above cited.

When such killing is manslaughter see infra, III, C, 3, c, text and note 67.

Under the Ohio statutes it is not murder if the mother is unintentionally killed by the performance of an unlawful abortion upon her with intent to destroy the unborn child only, since those statutes require an intent to kill in both degrees of murder; but it is a special statutory offense. C. Degrees of Murder — 1. IN GENERAL. At common law and under the statutes in some jurisdictions there are no degrees of murder;⁶⁵ but the statutes of many states divide murder into two or more degrees. As a rule these statutes do not change the quality of the crime of murder as it was defined at common law, but merely recognize that the crime may be more or less atrocious according to conditions and circumstances, and therefore provide greater punishment in some cases than in others.⁶⁷

2. FIRST DEGREE — a. Particular Statutory Provisions. As the degrees of murder are wholly of statutory origin, the elements required in the first degree of murder vary with the different statutes, but many statutes are identical or similar in their requirements. Thus under some statutes a homicide is murder in the first degree when it is committed by the administration of poison,⁶⁸ or by (Pa.) 196; Kennedy v. Way, 7 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 54; U. S. v. Ross, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,196, 1 Gall. 624. See supra, II, B, 6, a. One who wilfully sets fire to a stack of straw close to an outhouse, in an inclosure not adjoining a dwelling-house, is not guilty of murder if a man is burnt to death either in the outhouse or by the side of the stack, unless deceased was there when the fire was started. Reg. v. Horsey, 3 F. & F. 287.

66. State v. Decklots, 19 Iowa 447; State v. Wagner, 78 Mo. 644, 47 Am. Rep. 131; Hogan v. State, 36 Wis. 226. There was no such separate crime known to the law as "riotous homicide." The only grades of murder were murder and manslaughter. State v. Jenkins, 14 Rich. (S. C.) 215, 94 Am. Dec. 132. There are no degrees of murder under the laws of the United States. U. S. v. Outerbridge, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,978, 5 Sawy. 620. The same is true in the Indian Territory where the statute of the United States relating to murder is in force. *Bias v. U. Arkansas.—Bivens v. State, 11 Ark. 455.

California.—People v. Haun, 44 Cal. 96, 97, where it is said: "In making this division the Legislature recognized the fact that some murders, comprehended within the general definition, are of a less cruel and aggravated character than others, and, therefore, deserving of less punishment. It also recognized the fact that some murders of the less aggravated class are deserving of less punishment than others of the same class, and it accordingly provided that murders of the second degree should be punished by terms of imprisonment, depending for their length upon the circumstances of each particular case. In all this, however, the Legislature did not intend to say, and did not say, that murder of the second degree should be anything less or other than murder. It did not, indeed, attempt to define murder anew, but only to draw certain lines of distinction by which it might be told in a particular case whether the crime was of such a cruel and aggravated character as to deserve the extreme penalty of the law, or of a less aggravated character, deserving a less severe punishment."

Jones*, 1 Leigh (Va.) 598.

Murder committed with extreme torture or cruelty.—Com. v. Gilbert, 165 Mass. 45, 42 N. E. 336; Com. v. Desmarteau, 16 Gray (Mass.) 1. Under this statute the murder of a girl eight years of age, in order to conceal a rape perpetrated with severe lacerations, is murder in the first degree, although she was killed by blows upon the head and face and by drowning. Com. v. Desmarteau, supra.

Premeditated design to effect death.—An unjustifiable killing, with a premeditated design to effect the deceased's death (State v. Brown, 41 Minn. 319, 43 N. W. 69), or with a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed or of any human being (Flynn v. State, 97 Wis. 44, 72 N. W. 373; Hogan v. State, 36 Wis. 226), or to effect the death of another (State v. Morgan, 22 Utah 162, 61 Pac. 527). Under such a statute a crime that is murder in the first degree cannot be murder in the second degree. Flynn v. State, 97 Wis. 44, 72 N. W. 373; Hogan v. State, 36 Wis. 226.

Design to kill another or dangerous act.—A homicide perpetrated from a premeditated design unlawfully and maliciously to effect the death of any human being, other than he who is killed; or perpetrated by any act greatly dangerous to the lives of others, if evidencing a depraved mind, regardless of human life, although without any preconceived purpose to deprive any particular person of life, is murder in the first degree in Alabama. Mitchell v. State, 60 Ala. 26; Fields v. State, 52 Ala. 348. The latter clause is restricted to cases of universal malice. This is that depravity of the human heart which determines to take life upon slight or insufficient provocation without caring who may be the victim. A homicide, committed by direct force against a particular individual, but without the intent to kill, does not fall in this class. Mitchell v. State, supra. But if the force is not intentionally directed against a particular individual, as where one fires a loaded pistol in the direction of a group of persons, but without the intent to hit any particular one or even without the intent to hit any of them, the case falls within this provision if one of them is killed thereby. Washington v. State, 60 Ala. 10, 31 Am. Rep. 28. Under this provision there may be a reckless killing which will not show the degree of depravity required in the first degree. Fields v. State, 52 Ala. 348.

Purposely and with premeditated malice.—"If any person . . . purposely and with premeditated malice . . . kill any human being." Moynihan v. State, 70 Ind. 126, 36 Am. Rep. 178; Bechtelheimer v. State, 54 Ind. 128.

Dangerous act.—Killing by an act greatly dangerous to the lives of others and evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life. State v. Morgan, 22 Utah 162, 61 Pac. 527.

State, 1 Tex. App. 159. Where defendant and the deceased were strangers to each other, and there was no former grudge existing between them, the killing arising on the spur of the moment, it was held that the crime could not be the first degree of murder. Garner v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 308, 77 S. W. 797. But if the murder was committed under a deliberately formed design, it is immaterial that the design was formed and executed in a short time. State v. Rhodes, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 476; State v. Green, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 217. If defendants killed the deceased under a design to do so deliberately formed after the beginning of the transaction which resulted in his death, it is murder in the first degree, although they did not intend to kill him at the outset. Stevens v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 154, 59 S. W. 545.

A homicide committed in procuring an abortion, without intent to kill, is not murder in the first degree, since the requisite intent is lacking, and an abortion is not one of the enumerated felonies which supply the place of an intent to kill. Ex p. Fatheree, 34 Tex. Cr. 504, 31 S. W. 403.

There may be a design formed beforehand to kill in either the first or second degree of murder. In the one case it is formed in a sedate and deliberate mind, and in the other in a mind not sedate and deliberate but ruffled by passion. Patterson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 60 S. W. 557. Thus if a woman kill her newly born child, pursuant to a design formed with a sedate and deliberate mind, whether the design was formed before or after its birth, the crime is murder in the first degree. But if the design to take its life was formed and executed when her mind, by reason of physical or mental anguish, was incapable of cool reflection, and she was not sufficiently self-possessed to consider and contemplate the consequences, but yielded to a sudden, rash impulse, it is murder in the second degree. Wallace v. State, 7 Tex. App. 570.

Deadly weapon.—Even though the murder was committed with a deadly weapon, the crime is not of the first degree unless committed with a cool and sedate mind, and formed design to kill, or to inflict without lawful authority, justification, mitigation, or excuse, serious bodily injury likely to result in death. Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 365, 32 Am. Rep. 573. Hence it will not be first degree, although committed with a deadly weapon prepared for that purpose, if defendant was not at the time capable of knowing that his act was wrongful and of controlling his will to avoid committing it. State v. Reidell, 9 Houst. (Del.) 470, 14 Atl. 550.

Intent to inflict great bodily harm.—An intent to kill is not necessary to bring a case within this statute; an intent to inflict great or serious bodily harm to the person assaulted is enough. State v. Faino, 1 Marv.

b. Intent to Kill. Under those statutes which require the killing to be "wilful," "purposed," or with "premeditated design," a specific intent to take human life is necessary to raise a murder to the first degree.⁷⁸ But under most of these statutes it is not necessary that the intent be to kill the person actually killed, and the crime is as a general rule of the first degree if with the specific intent to kill one person defendant by accident or mistake killed another,⁷⁹ or if,

Abortion.—Under such a provision it is not murder in the first degree where one wilfully administers poison to a woman, not with the intent to kill her, but intending to produce an unlawful abortion, and she is killed thereby. Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 131; Com. v. Prison Keeper, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 227.

Accomplices.—If the purpose to kill exists, it is not necessary that defendant carry out that purpose himself. He is equally guilty in the first degree if it is executed by an accomplice. Com. v. Neills, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 553.

The existence of the intent to kill is not enough to raise the crime to the first degree, the killing must be in pursuance of that intent. Williams v. State, 83 Ala. 16, 3 So. 616.

Serious bodily injury.—There is authority that one is guilty of murder in the first degree under this clause, who wilfully, deliberately, and premeditatedly inflicted upon another a serious bodily injury which probably would occasion death, although it would not necessarily do so, if the victim died. Honesty v. Com., 81 Va. 283. And in Howard v. State, 34 Ark. 433, it was said that defendant, who had beaten his wife so severely that she died the next day, could be properly convicted of murder in the first degree, although he did not feloniously intend to kill her. He was presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts, and although a specific intent did not exist in his mind, the law would imply an intent to produce that effect when it was the natural consequence of his act, where no considerable provocation appeared, or where the circumstances showed an abandoned and wicked disposition.

Contra.—Bratton v. State, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 103.

Not necessarily murder in the first degree.—Where defendant shot at a man, after a quarrel with him and unintentionally killed a child, the murder is not necessarily of the first degree, even though defendant had bought the pistol for the purpose of shooting the man. The court distinguished between the purpose of shooting him and the purpose of killing him. If defendant did not intend to kill the man before the altercation began, it might not have been murder in the first degree if he had killed him, and the crime actually committed would be of no higher degree than the one he was trying to commit. People v. Gordon, 100 Mich. 518, 59 N. W. 322.

Connection between original purpose and result.—In such a case the crime will be murder in the first degree if there is a legal connection between the original purpose and the unexpected result, but if while defendant was deliberately trying to kill A, B intervened, and defendant suddenly killed B, the new transaction bears no legal relation to the old, and the murder is of the second degree. State v. Cole, 132 N. C. 1069, 44 S. E. 391.

In Texas, under the clause of the statute requiring "express malice" to constitute murder in the first degree, it is held that the malice must be directed against the person killed, and that it is not murder in the first degree to kill one person by mistake for another, although there is a specific intent to kill the other. Ferrell v. State, 43 Tex. 503; Sparks v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 77 S. W. 811; Breedlove v. State, 26 Tex. App. 445, 9 S. W. 768; Musick v. State, 21 Tex. App. 69, 18 S. W. 95; *Clark v. Rep. 555; Dolan v. People, 64 N. Y. 485 [affirming 6 Hun 493]; People v. Cole, 2 N. Y. Cr. 108. In Buel v. People, supra, it is said that People v. Butler, 3 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 377, and the opinion of Bronson, J., in People v. Rector, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 569, have been repudiated.

Illustration.—Thus where defendant, while committing a burglary, strangled the mistress of the house, so that she died, to avoid outcry and pursuit, but without intending to kill her, it was held murder in the first degree. Cox v. People, 80 N. Y. 500 [affirming 19 Hun 430]. Since at common law a homicide committed by one engaged in the perpetration of some other felony was murder, the clause "every murder" committed in an attempt to commit a felony, includes every unlawful homicide (State v. Hopkirk, 84 Mo. 278), even though the crime would have been manslaughter, not murder, if defendant had not been engaged in the commission of a felony (Henry v. State, 51 Nebr. 149, 70 N. W. 924, 66 Am. St. Rep. 459; Hedrick v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 532, 51 S. W. 252).

Burglary.—A burglar who breaks into a dwelling is engaged in the commission of a burglary until he leaves the building, so that if, while engaged in any of the acts immediately connected with the burglary, he kills any one, it is murder under this clause. Dolan v. People, 64 N. Y. 485 [affirming 6 Hun 493]; Hedrick v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 532, 51 S. W. 252.

The "other felony" must be some felony collateral to the homicide and not those acts of personal violence to the deceased which are necessary elements of the homicide itself. Thus a homicide resulting from blows given wilfully and maliciously, and with intent to inflict great bodily harm, but without an intent to kill, is not murder in the first degree under this clause, although an assault with intent to inflict great bodily harm is a statutory felony. State v. Shock, 68 Mo. 552 [overruling on this point State v. Nueslein, 25 Mo. 111; State v. Jennings, 18 Mo. 435, and distinguishing State v. Green, 66 Mo. 631].

Contra.—Under the Ohio statute in which the word "purposely" is held to qualify all of the succeeding clauses, it is said that a murder committed in the perpetration of one of the enumerated felonies will not be in the first degree unless there was a specific intent to kill. Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 131.

Intent and attempt.—To bring a case within this clause of the statute, the attempt to perpetrate the felony must be actual, not merely constructive. Thus where defendants entered the house of deceased, in the night, to commit rape as the state claimed, or fornication as they claimed, and in a fight with deceased, the father of a girl who lived in the house, killed him, it was held that they were not guilty of murder in the first degree under this clause if they had done nothing constituting an attempt to rape, even though they intended to commit that crime. Kelly v. Com., 1 Grant (Pa.) 484. But if an attempt to commit a felony has been made, it is immaterial that the attempt was not carried beyond its initial stage. State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606, 54 Atl. 38.

Knowledge of victim.—If defendant was actually engaged in the commission of a felony, it is immaterial that his victim did not know he was so engaged. Com. v. Major, 198 Pa. St. 290, 47 Atl. 741, 82 Am. St. Rep. 803.

Thus where defendant administered morphine and chloral for the purpose of robbing deceased, but without intent to kill him, and death resulted therefrom, it was held to be murder both at common law and under the Texas statute, since a death caused even by accident or mistake in the commission of some other felony is murder, and under the statute it was murder in the first degree, since it was committed by poison. Rupe v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 477, 61 S. W. 929. But such killing must be with malice aforethought, that is, with intent to kill or do great bodily harm. If there was no such intent it is not murder at all, although the killing was committed with poison, and hence it is not murder of the first degree. Tooney v. State, 5 Tex. App. 163.

Poison.—People v. Campbell, 40 Cal. 129, 59 Cal. 243, 43 Am. Rep. 257; People v. Nichol, 34 Cal. 211; People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 17; People v. Bealoba, 17 Cal. 389; Bratton v. State, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 103. A homicide committed by the administration of poison, with a bad motive or intent, is murder in the first degree, even though there was no specific intent to kill. It must be murder in the first degree or nothing. State v. Burns, 124 Iowa 207, 99 N. W. 721; State v. Van Tassel, 103 Iowa 6, 72 N. W. 479. A murder intentionally committed by the administration of poison cannot be in the second degree. State v. Bertoch, 112 Iowa 195, 83 N. W. 967, (1899) 79 N. W. 358. The meaning of this clause of the statute is that the administration of the poison constitutes the required deliberation and premeditation, and evidences the intent to kill, if it is administered unlawfully. State v. Wells, 61 Iowa 629, 17 N. W. 90, 47 Am. Rep. 822; State v. Morgan, 22 Utah 162, 61 Pac. 527. But though the crime is murder in the first degree a conviction of murder in the second degree will be sustained. As juries often disregard evidence that a murder was wilful, deliberate, and premeditated and convict of murder in the second degree when the proof shows a murder in the first degree, so they have like power to disregard this statutory proof that the killing was wilful, deliberate, and premeditated. As the error is in the favor of defendant he cannot complain of it. State v. Lindsey, 19 Nev. 47, 5 Pac. 822, 3 Am. St. Rep. 776. Since at common law one who, while engaged in a felony, unintentionally kills another is guilty considered cases under such a clause in some of the statutes in which an intent to kill is held to be necessary.⁸⁷

c. Deliberation and Premeditation. Under the statutes requiring the killing to be "wilful, deliberate and premeditated," all of the required elements must exist.⁸⁸ Deliberate and premeditated means thought over, considered, or reflected of murder, such killing is murder in the first degree under this statute if committed by the administration of poison, although the intent is only to stupefy the victim so that he may be easily robbed. But though the crime is in the first degree, a conviction of murder in the second degree in such a case will be affirmed, under an express statutory provision to that effect. State v. Wagner, 78 Mo. 644, 47 Am. Rep. 131.

87. According to this view the use of the word "other" in this clause of the statute implies that in all cases the crime must be wilful, deliberate, and premeditated, and if any case can be supposed in which a murder was committed by poison, but was not wilful, deliberate, and premeditated, it would be of the second degree. For this reason a conviction of murder in the second degree by the administration of poison has been affirmed. State v. Dowd, 19 Conn. 388.

Under the Indiana statute, which does not contain the qualifying clause requiring wilfulness, deliberation, and premeditation, but which does require a purpose to kill in the second degree of murder, it is held that such intent is an implied requirement to justify a conviction in the first degree. A purpose to kill is necessary in the second degree, and it is not reasonable that the legislature should require such purpose in the second degree and not in the first. Further if the language of the statute were construed strictly it would apply to cases in which poison was administered innocently, as well as those in which it was administered wrongfully. Moynihan v. State, 70 Ind. 126, 36 Am. Rep. 178. Hence under this statute it is not murder in the first degree if a woman is killed by poison administered with the intent to procure her consent to sexual intercourse, but without any intent to kill her. Bechtelheimer v. State, 54 Ind. 128.

Under the Ohio statute providing "that if any person shall purposely, and of deliberate and premeditated malice . . . or by administering poison . . . kill another" he shall be guilty of murder in the first degree, the word "purposely" applies to each of the clauses following it, and an intent to kill is necessary to raise a murder committed by administering poison to the first degree. Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 131.

A statute punishing the administration of any substance known as a medicine with intent to kill does not mean that the article must be given under the pretense that it is a medicine, but it is enough that it is administered in any way, if with a felonious intent. Sarah v. State, 28 Miss. 267, 61 Am. Dec. 544.

Lying in wait.—No intent to kill is necessary if the murder was committed by lying in wait (Bratton v. State, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 103), and there is no evidence of any altercation or other circumstances affecting the degree (State v. Rose, 129 N. C. 575, 40 S. E. 83).

Malice not sufficient.—But a murder is not of the first degree merely because committed with malice aforethought, for such malice is required in all degrees of murder.

upon beforehand.⁸⁹ Hence it is not enough that the design to kill existed at the time of the killing,⁹⁰ but it must have been formed before it was put into execution.⁹¹ But if the design to kill has been deliberately formed, the murder will be of the first degree, although that design is instantly carried into effect.⁹²

If the circumstances attending the killing indicate that it was wilful, deliberate, and premeditated, and there are no mitigating circumstances, the crime is murder in the first degree. *State v. Deliberate means to weigh in the mind; to consider and examine the reasons for and against; to consider maturely; to reflect upon. Premeditate means to think on, to revolve in the mind beforehand, to contrive and design previously. Milton v. State, 6 Nebr. 136. The words deliberately and premeditatedly mean the intent to take life with a full and conscious knowledge of the purpose to do so (Jones v. Com., 75 Pa. St. 403); and the slayer must not only plan, contrive, and scheme as to the means and manner of the commission of the deed, but he must consider and weigh different means of accomplishing it (Craft v. State, 3 Kan. 450). Deliberation and malice aforethought include premeditation (State v. Taylor, 126 Mo. 531, 29 S. W. 598; State v. Reed, 117 Mo. 604, 23 S. W. 886; *State v. Deliberate means done in a cool state of blood, and not in a sudden passion, caused by a lawful or just provocation (State v. Evans, 158 Mo. 589, 59 S. W. 994; State v. David, 131 Mo. 380, 33 S. Deliberately means with cool purpose (Dale v. State, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 551); formed with deliberation in contradistinction to a sudden and rash act (Mitchell v. State, 60 Ala. 26). Premeditated means contrived or designed previously (Mitchell v. State, supra); that the design to kill was thought about before it was carried into effect (Dale v. State, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 551; Perugi v. State, 104 Wis. 230, 80 N. W. 593, 76 Am. St. Rep. 865). It is said that the deliberation and premeditation need not relate to the actual victim. If when defendant arms himself he intends to kill any one who may oppose him or try to arrest him, the deliberation and premeditation begin then, although he has no definite person in mind. People v. Sullivan, 173 N. Y. 122, 65 N. E. 989.

Contra.—A few cases say that there must be an appreciable time, sufficient for some reflection and consideration and the formation of a definite purpose, no matter how be time enough to permit the formation of a distinct purpose to kill and for some reflection and consideration,⁹⁴ and defendant must actually deliberate and premeditate upon the design.⁹⁵ Thus, although there may have been time for deliberation, if the purpose to kill was formed and immediately executed in a passion,⁹⁶ especially if the passion was aroused by a recent provocation or by mutual combat, the murder is not deliberate and premeditated.⁹⁷ If the design to kill was formed with brief, if it is sufficient for this (People v. Majone, 91 N. Y. 211), and to say that they may follow each other as two successive thoughts obliterates the distinction between the first and second degrees of murder (State v. Moody, 18 Wash. 165, 51 Pac. 356; State v. Straub, 16 Wash. 111, 47 Pac. 227; State v. Rutten, 13 Wash. 203, 43 Pac. 30).

Need not be pondered or brooded over.—The time need not be long enough for defendant to thoroughly ponder over the act and its consequences, and he need not have brooded over it. (Webb v. State, 135 Ala. 36, 33 So. 487; Daughdrill v. State, 113 Ala. 7, 21 So. 378; King v. State, 68 Ark. 572, 69 S. W. 951, 82 Am. St. Rep. 293; State v. Fairlamb, 121 Mo. 137, 25 S. W. 895).

Varies with the circumstances.—The requisite time cannot be measured by any rule other than that furnished by the circumstances of each case (People v. Brunt, 11 N. Y. St. 59), since the time necessary will vary according to the temperaments of men and the circumstances under which they are placed (Early v. State, 16 Ohio Cir. Ct. 646, 7 Ohio Cir. Dec. 592).

E. 907; Kilpatrick v. Com., 31 Pa. St. 198. To constitute deliberation and premeditation, the design to kill must precede the killing by some appreciable space of time. The act must not be done on a sudden impulse. But the time need not be long. If it is sufficient for some reflection and consideration upon the matter, for the choice to kill or not to kill, and for the formation of a definite purpose to kill, it is enough. The questions to be answered are: Was there sufficient time for reflection? Did defendant think over what he was about to do? Did he coolly form a settled purpose? State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606, 54 Atl. 38.

92 Mo. 59, 4 S. W. 422; Anthony v. State, Meigs (Tenn.) 265, 33 Am. Dec. 143. Premeditation may be but the conception of a moment, if before the killing, and not brought about by a provocation received at that time. Bivens v. State, 11 Ark. 455. If the design to kill was formed in the midst of a conflict, and executed immediately afterward, the killing is not premeditated, and consequently is not murder in the first degree. Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 231. Where defendant and deceased were engaged in a conflict when the fatal blow was struck, defendant was excited by intoxicating liquors at that time, there was no time for premeditation after the fight began, and the killing had not been premeditated before the fight began, it was not murder in the first degree. State v. Sopher, 70 Iowa 494, 30 N. W. 917.

Passion does not always reduce the crime, since a man may deliberate, may premeditate, and may intend to kill after premeditation and deliberation, although prompted and to a large extent controlled by passion at the time. People v. Tuczewitz, 149 N. Y. 240, 43 N. E. 548; People v. Jones, 99 N. Y. 667, 2 N. E. 49. Thus it is murder in the first degree, although defendant stabbed deceased in a fight in which defendant was engaged, and after defendant had been struck, in self-defense, by another, if defendant, with a deadly weapon, followed deceased who was trying to escape and killed him. The time occupied in the pursuit, although brief, was sufficient for deliberation and premeditation. People v. Johnson, 139 N. Y. 358, 34 N. E. 920. So where after a fight with deceased defendant went to the back-yard, procured an ax, and returned to the second floor of the house where deceased was, and killed him with the ax, there was sufficient time for premeditation and deliberation. Miller v. State, 106 Wis. 156, 81 N. W. 1020.

Provocation without passion.—But the degree of a deliberate killing, committed under provocation, but without passion, is not reduced. Thus where the deceased knocked defendant down, defendant got up, and after three or four minutes walked away, drew his knife, returned with it concealed, asked deceased why he hit him, and then suddenly inflicted a fatal stab, it is murder in the first degree. Com. v. Morrison, 193 Pa. St. 613, 44 Atl. 913. So one who kills his unchaste wife, not in a sudden passion upon detecting her, but wilfully, deliberately, and premeditatedly, having known of her conduct beforehand, is guilty of murder in the first degree. McNeill v. State, 102 Ala. 121, 15 deliberation and premeditation, it is immaterial that defendant was in a passion or excited when the design was carried into effect.⁹⁵ Murder committed by one engaged in the perpetration of any of the enumerated felonies,⁹⁹ or by the administration of poison,¹ will be in the first degree, although not deliberate and premeditated.

3. SECOND DEGREE — a. Particular Statutory Provisions. Under many of the statutes murder in the second degree includes all homicides that were murder at common law, except those included in the statutory definition of murder in the first degree.² But some of the statutes expressly define the second degree,³ as, for example, an unlawful killing perpetrated by any act imminently dangerous to another and evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life, although without any premeditated design to effect the death of any particular individual, or without the design to effect the death of the person killed, or any other person;⁴ a homicide perpetrated in the heat of passion without design to effect death, but in a

And if upon confession, he wilfully, deliberately, and premeditatedly kills the adulterer, it is murder in the same degree, but if he kills in a heat of passion, and without deliberation, it is murder in the second degree. State v. France, 76 Mo. 681. Under the New York statute a husband killing his wife with a premeditated design to effect her death is guilty of murder in the first degree, although the crime was committed under the provocation of finding her in the act of adultery. *Shuffin v. 3. A former Alabama statute made the killing of a slave by cruel beating or any other inhuman treatment murder in the second degree. Ex p. Howard, 30 Ala. 43.

4. Marshall v. State, 32 Fla. 462, 14 So. 92; Frank v. State, 94 Wis. 211, 68 N. W. 657; Hogan v. State, 36 Wis. 226. Under a statute defining murder in the second degree as the killing of a human being when perpetrated by any act imminently dangerous to others, and evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life, without any premeditated design to effect the death of any particular individual, defendant's act which caused the death of the deceased must have been aimed at no person in particular (Johnson v. State, 24 Fla. 162, 4 So. 535; State v. Lowe, 66 Minn. 296, 68 N. W. 1094; Darry v. People, 10 N. Y. 120, 2 Park. Cr. 606; Jewell v. Territory, 4 Okla. 53, 43 Pac. 1075), but must have endangered the lives of more than one person other than cruel and unusual manner, or by means of a dangerous weapon, unless it is committed under such circumstances as to constitute excusable or justifiable homicide, etc.;⁵ a homicide committed purposely and maliciously but without premeditation;⁶ an unpremeditated killing with a design to effect death;⁷ or a homicide perpetrated without any design to effect death, but by a person engaged in the commission of a felony.⁸ In some states murder is of the first degree if there was express malice, and of the second degree if there was implied malice.⁹

b. Intent to Kill. Under many of the statutes no intent to kill is required in the second degree of murder.¹⁰ An unintended homicide resulting from an

the defendant (Johnson v. State, 24 Fla. 162, 4 So. 535; Darry v. People, 10 N. Y. 120, 2 Park. Cr. 606). Under a similar Wisconsin statute a defendant has been held liable where, in a small room containing ten or twelve persons, he threatened one person with a loaded gun and in the altercation that ensued the gun was unintentionally discharged and a third person killed thereby. Frank v. State, 94 Wis. 211, 68 N. W. 657. Interpreting the clause in the light of the statute providing that the plural number includes the singular, the Minnesota court decided that the life of only one person need be put in jeopardy by the act of the accused. State v. Lowe, 66 Minn. 296, 68 N. W. 1094. Under a later Florida statute, amended by substituting the word "another" for "others," there may be a conviction under this clause, although there is proof that defendant intended to kill a particular person, and the life of that person only was endangered by his act. Marshall v. State, 32 Fla. 462, 14 So. 92. If there was no premeditated design to kill any person but the homicide was committed recklessly and wantonly, in a way evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life, and by an act necessarily and essentially imminently dangerous to another, without just cause or provocation, and without passion, it falls within this definition. Gavin v. State, 42 Fla. 553, 29 So. 405.

5. N. M. Comp. Laws (1897), § 1064. Where the evidence showed that the deceased violently assaulted defendant, who then and there drew his pistol and fired two shots at deceased, killing him instantly, it was held that such killing was not cruel or unusual, within the meaning of the statute. Territory v. Fewel, 5 N. M. 34, 17 Pac. 569. For other cases not coming within this statute see Sandoval v. Territory, 8 N. M. 573, 45 Pac. 1125; Territory v. Pridmore, 4 N. M. 137, 13 Pac. 96. See also infra, III, D, 1, text and note 28.

6. Bechtelheimer v. State, 54 Ind. 128.

7. State v. Brown, 41 Minn. 319, 43 N. W. 69.

8. Keefe v. People, 40 N. Y. 348 (other than arson in the first degree); Fitzgerrold v. People, 37 N. Y. 413.

9. State v. Wallace, 2 Pennw. (Del.) 402, 47 Atl. 621; Patterson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 60 S. W. 557. Under statutes requiring express malice aforesought in the first degree, and putting other murders at common law in the second degree, murders committed with implied malice are in the second degree. State v. Wallace, supra. See also State v. Faino, 1 Marv. (Del.) 492, 41 Atl. 134. See also supra, II, C, 2, a, text and note 75.

Express and implied malice.—The Texas court says that malice is implied when the fact of an unlawful killing is established, and there are no circumstances or evidence which tend to establish the existence of express malice, nor which tend to mitigate, excuse, or justify the act (Patterson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 60 S. W. 557; McGrath v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 413, 34 S. W. 127, 941; Martinez v. State, 30 Tex. App. 129, 16 S. W. 767, 28 Am. St. Rep. 895; Boyd v. State, 28 Tex. App. 137, 12 S. W. 737; Van v. State, 21 Tex. App. 676, 2 S. W. 882; Brown v. State, 4 Tex. App. 275), and when a homicide is committed without any or without considerable provocation (Jacobs v. State, 28 Tex. App. 79, 12 S. W. 408). But if the facts and circumstances of the case show such a reckless disregard of human life as necessarily includes a formed design against the life of the person slain, the killing, if it amounts to murder, would be on express malice. Burt v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 397, 40 S. W. 1000, 43 S. W. 344, 39 L. R. A. 305, 330. In express malice the intent to kill must be formed in a sedate and deliberate mind, in implied malice it is a previously formed design, but not in a sedate and deliberate mind. If the mind was sedate and deliberate when the design was formed it need to be so when it was carried into execution. Patterson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 60 S. W. 557; Harrell v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 507, 55 S. W. 824. See also supra, II, C, 2, a, text and note 75.

Killing by officer.—Under such a statute it was held to be murder in the second degree if an officer whose life was not endangered or person threatened killed a prisoner who was trying to escape, not from express malice but from a desire to prevent his escape, where another statute forbade the killing of one who was merely trying to escape arrest. Caldwell v. State, 41 Tex. 86. But see State v. O'Neil, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 468.

assault made with an intent to inflict great bodily harm upon the victim,¹¹ or in the commission of an unlawful abortion,¹² or other unlawful act dangerous to life,¹³ or in the commission of any felony other than those enumerated in the section defining murder in the first degree is murder in the second degree.¹⁴ Under statutes requiring in the first degree express malice directed against the actual victim, it is murder in the second degree to kill one person while trying to kill another.¹⁵ The absence of an intent to kill may determine that the crime is murder in the second degree rather than in the first degree.¹⁶ But some statutes expressly require an intent to kill as an element of the second degree.¹⁷

c. Absence of Deliberation. Under most of the statutes a homicide that is committed suddenly,¹⁸ with malice aforethought,¹⁹ but without deliberation, or without deliberation and premeditation,²⁰ is murder in the second degree. Thus

14. Nutt v. State, 63 Ala. 180.

15. Clark v. State, 19 Tex. App. 495. In applying this statute the court has made no distinction between cases in which the victim was accidentally killed while defendant was trying to kill some other person (Clark v. State, supra; McConnell v. State, 13 Tex.

App. 390) and those in which the victim was intentionally killed, because he was mistaken for the person whom defendant wished to kill (Sparks v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 77 S. W. 811; Breedlove v. State, 26 Tex. App. 445, 9 S. W. 768). Such a statute does not include a murder committed by one while attempting to rob another, but without any intent to kill him or inflict great bodily harm upon him. State v. Boice, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 355. Under the statute requiring deliberation and premeditation in the first degree, it has been held that where defendant, while deliberately and with premeditation trying to kill one person, did kill another who had suddenly intervened, the deliberation and premeditation involved in the original intent would not be transferred to the crime actually committed, if there was no legal relation between the two crimes. *State v. Where an insult is reasonably calculated to kindle sudden passion, and the homicide is due solely to the influence of the passion so provoked, and the slayer did not provoke the insult, the homicide is murder in the second degree. *Ex p. Illustrations.—Thus if there were threats and insults by the deceased, which without producing the heat of passion required to reduce the crime to manslaughter, prevented the killing from being deliberate, it will be murder in the second degree. State v. Hill, 69 Mo. 451. If there was provocation, but the degree of passion produced thereby was not sufficient to reduce the crime to manslaughter, yet it may prevent the mind of the slayer from being cool and sedate as it is required to be in the first degree and so reduce the degree. Young v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 69 S. W. 153. If the killing was in a passion produced by a provocation that would not stir a just and reasonable man to violence endangering life, or if there had been "cooling time," so that his passion should have subsided, but it had not done so, it is murder in the second degree. Fields v. State, 52 Ala. 348. But in Watson v. Com., 87 Va. 608, 13 S. E. 22, the rule was laid down that if defendant was acting in a heat of passion provoked by words, and there had not been sufficient cooling time, the killing was murder in the second degree; but if there had been sufficient cooling time and thereafter defendant sought the deceased with a deadly weapon for the purpose of killing him on account of the provocation, and defendant killed him wilfully, and with malice and premeditation, it was murder in the first degree. So where, although there has been provocation, the homicide was committed in a spirit of revenge, it may be murder in the second degree. Guffee v. State, 8 Tex. App. 187. If defendant used excessive violence, disproportionate to the provocation, particularly if he was not in a passion, the crime will be at least murder in the second degree. Thus where defendant repeatedly stabbed an unarmed drunken man who assaulted him, a conviction of murder in the second degree was confirmed. Fitzgerald v. State, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 99. If the killing is due to a sudden frenzy of passion the grade will be reduced to the second degree of murder, although the victim was not the person from whom the provocation was received. White v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 346, 72 S. W. 173, 63 L. R. A. 60. But where the provocation was by words only, to reduce the murder to the second degree the provocation must have come from the victim of the homicide. If the words were spoken by bystanders it is murder in the first degree. State v. Lewis, 14 Mo. App. 191.

meditated design to effect the death of any particular individual; ²⁴ or a homicide, without a design to effect death, by a person engaged in the commission of, or an attempt to commit, a felony, ²⁵ other than those enumerated in the definition of the first or second degree. ²⁶ In some states there are other provisions. ²⁷

III. MANSLAUGHTER.

A. Definition and Classification—1. IN GENERAL. Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of another without malice aforethought, either express or implied. ²³ It is distinguished from murder by the absence of malice afore-Manslaughter see infra, III, B, 2, a, d.

24. State v. Lowe, 66 Minn. 296, 68 N. W. 1094. It is held that, to sustain a charge of murder in the third degree, under this statute it is not necessary that more than one person shall or might have been put in jeopardy by the reckless acts of the accused, but it is necessary that the act shall have been committed without special design upon the particular person or persons with whose murder the accused is charged. State v. Lowe, supra. See also supra, II, C, 3, a, note 4.

25. State v. Brown, 41 Minn. 319, 43 N. W. 69; State v. Brown, 12 Minn. 538; Pliemling v. State, 46 Wis. 516, 1 N. W. 278; Hogan v. State, 36 Wis. 226.

Intent to kill.—Under such a statute no intent to effect death is necessary, but the fact that death is caused by a person in the commission of a felony is sufficient. Bonfanti v. State, 2 Minn. 123. Indeed an intentional murder does not come under this clause (Pliemling v. State, 46 Wis. 516, 1 N. W. 278; State v. Hammond, 35 Wis. 315), although it is said that murder unintentionally committed in an attempt to commit mayhem would be within its scope (State v. Hammond, supra).

Acts not constituting felony.—Where defendant recklessly fired a revolver at a stove, and a bystander was killed by a glancing shot, it was held that the crime did not fall under this clause, since it is not a felony to shoot at a stove. Terrill v. State, 74 Wis. 278, 42 N. W. 243.

Connection between felony and homicide.—Under the clause defining the third degree of murder as the killing of a human being, without any design to effect death, by a person engaged in the commission of any felony, there must be some connection between the felony and the homicide. Therefore where defendant killed a mother and her three children, possibly because he was attempting to commit rape upon the mother, it was held that while the killing of the mother might fall under this provision, that of the children would not, as it was not directly connected with the other felony, and the evidence indicated that defendant must have intended to kill the children. Pliemling v. State, 46 Wis. 516, 1 N. W. 278. So where defendant, while engaged in a felonious assault upon one person, was attacked by another, and entirely ceased his struggle with the first, but engaged in a contest with the second person and killed him, it was held that he was not liable under this provision, since there was not such a connection between the first felonious assault and the subsequent killing that it could be said that the killing occurred by reason of and as a part of the felony. Hoffman v. State, 88 Wis. 166, 59 N. W. 588.

26. Marshall v. State, 32 Fla. 462, 14 So. 92.

27. The present New Mexico statute provides that every killing of a human being by the act, procurement, or culpable negligence of another, which under the provisions of the act is not murder in the first or second degree, and which is not excusable or justifiable homicide, shall be deemed murder in the third degree. Comp. Laws (1897), § 1065. See Sandoval v. Territory, 8 N. M. 573, 45 Pac. 1125, holding that the statute did not apply where defendant was at a place where he had a right to be, with his gun by his side, when the deceased rushed upon him and seized hold of the gun, and in the struggle for possession thereof it went off and killed the deceased.

Killing in cruel and unusual manner.—In New Mexico a statute formerly declared that the killing of a human being without design to effect death, in heat of passion, but in a cruel and unusual manner, unless it be under such circumstances as to constitute justifiable or excusable homicide, shall be deemed murder in the third degree. Comp. Laws (1884), § 699; Territory v. Fewel, 5 N. M. 34, 17 Pac. 569. A later statute makes this murder in the second degree. Comp. Laws (1897), § 1064. See supra, II, C, 3, a, text and note 5.

is made manslaughter to kill an unborn child after it has quickened,³⁵ although this was no homicide at all at common law.³⁶ In some jurisdictions, manslaughter, like murder, has been divided into degrees.³⁷ A statute defining manslaughter has no application to offenses committed before it took effect.³⁸

B. Voluntary Manslaughter—1. DEFINITION. Voluntary manslaughter is the killing of another intentionally, but in a sudden heat of passion due to adequate provocation, and not with malice.³⁹

2. ELEMENTS AND NATURE OF OFFENSE—a. Sudden Passion Due to Adequate Provocation. While an intentional homicide, if neither justifiable nor excusable,⁴⁰ is normally murder,⁴¹ yet where it is committed upon a sudden heat of passion,

In Kentucky the statute, requiring that in manslaughter the act must have been committed without the intent to cause death, changes the common-law rule and creates an offense which is not a branch of manslaughter, and consequently is not included under an indictment for murder. Connor v. Com., 13 Bush 714.

In Texas manslaughter is defined by statute as "voluntary homicide committed under the immediate influence of sudden passion arising from an adequate cause, but neither justified nor excused by law." Pen. Code, art. 698. See Johnson v. State, 27 Tex. 758; Woodring v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. 419, 30 S. W. 1060; Jennings v. State, 7 Tex. App. 350; Tickle v. State, 6 Tex. App. 623; Drake v. State, 5 Tex. App. 649. What was involuntary manslaughter at common law is called "homicide by negligence." Pen. Code, art. 683. See infra, III, C, 5, b.

Killing slave.—Under a former South Carolina statute the word "manslaughter," when applied to the killing of a slave, had a restrictive sense, and was confined to such killing as occurred in sudden heat and passion. State v. Fleming, 2 Strobb. (S. C.) 464.

Under some statutes it is immaterial whether the death of the child was intended, if it would have been murder had the mother died from the operation (Williams v. State, 34 Fla. 217, 15 So. 760; Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 86); but others require an intent to destroy the child (State v. Prude, 76 Miss. 543, 24 So. 871). It has been held that such a statute does not apply to a woman who commits an abortion upon herself. State v. Prude, supra.

Statute not requiring death of woman or child.—The Kansas statute making the administration of drugs to a pregnant woman for the purpose of procuring an abortion manslaughter in the second degree was held void because it did not require the death of either woman or child, and the crime of manslaughter requires a homicide as a necessary element. See 26 Cent. Dig. tit. "Homicide," § 52 et seq.

"The true nature of manslaughter is, that it is homicide mitigated out of tenderness to the frailty of human nature. Every man, when assailed with violence or great rudeness, is inspired with a sudden impulse of anger, which puts him upon resistance before time for cool reflection; and if, during that period, he attacks his assailant with a weapon likely to endanger life, and death ensues, it is regarded as done through heat of blood or violence of anger, and not through malice, or that cold-blooded desire of revenge which more properly constitutes the feeling, emotion, or passion of malice." Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 295, 307, 52 Am. Dec. 711, per Shaw, C. J.

"It is not the character of the weapon used that determines the degree of the offense; but it is the presence or absence of malice that makes the crime manslaughter or murder. People v. Crowey, 56 Cal. 36; State v. Hoyt, 13 Minn. 132; Reg. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 160, 34 E. C. L. 666; and many other cases cited in the notes following. Poison.—While it is difficult to see how poison could be administered in a heat of passion, yet if it were, the homicide would be only manslaughter. Hasenfuss v. State, 156 Ind. 246, 59 N. E. 463.

crime.⁴³ The passion must be of such a degree as would cause an ordinary man to act upon impulse and without reflection.⁴⁴ But if it suspends the exercise of judgment, and dominates volition so as to exclude premeditation and a previously formed design, it need not entirely dethrone reason.⁴⁵

b. Intention to Kill. In voluntary manslaughter, as the term "voluntary" implies, the killing not only may but must be wilful or intentional.⁴⁶ An intention to kill may be inferred from the wilful use of a deadly weapon,⁴⁷ but if the weapon is not deadly, the intent to kill cannot be inferred, but must appear from the evidence.⁴⁸ The killing is wilful and intentional, so as to constitute voluntary as distinguished from involuntary manslaughter, where, in a heat of passion due to adequate provocation, defendant shot at one person and killed another.⁴⁹

Compare State v. Halliday, 112 La. 846, 36 So. 753, where it is said that an actual intent to take life is not a necessary ingredient either of murder or manslaughter.

Passion need not destroy volition.—"We nowhere find," said the North Carolina court, "that the passion which in law rebuts the imputation of malice, must be so overpowering as for the time to shut out knowledge and destroy volition. All the writers concur in representing this indulgence of the law to be a condescension to the frailty of the human frame, which, during the furor brevis, renders a man deaf to the voice of reason, so that, although the act done was intentional of death, it was not the result of malignity of heart, but imputable to human infirmity." *State v. There is also authority for the proposition that one may be guilty of voluntary manslaughter by shooting in a wanton, reckless, and careless manner, and thereby killing a person, or causing death by other acts manifestly dangerous to life;⁵⁰ but this on principle can only be on the ground of an inference of actual intent to kill, and if there was in fact no intent to kill, the killing is either murder or involuntary manslaughter.⁵¹

c. Absence of Malice.⁵² The absence of malice is essential to the crime of voluntary manslaughter, both at common law and under the statutes, this being the characteristic that distinguishes it from murder.⁵³ Therefore an intentional homicide, if not justifiable or excusable,⁵⁴ is murder and not manslaughter, although there may have been adequate provocation, if the provocation did not actually cause a sufficient degree of passion, or if the homicide was the result, not of passion, but of malice,⁵⁵ even though a violent passion was aroused by the

W. 410, holding that one who fires a shot, knowing that he cannot do so without hitting an innocent person, is guilty of a voluntary homicide, the grade of which is to be determined by the circumstances under which the shot is fired.

Under a statute defining manslaughter as the unlawful and wilful killing of another without malice, a killing done wrongfully and with evil intent by an act that a person with reasonable knowledge and ability must know would be contrary to duty, and which shows a reckless disregard for the life of another and the reckless and negligent use of means calculated to take the life of another, is a wilful killing within this definition, if the act that caused the death was done knowingly and with evil design. *Roberts v. The rule applies to one who helps another, knowing the unlawful purpose of the other. Guffee v. State, 8 Tex. App. 187, holding that where defendant's brother attacked the deceased, intending to injure him severely, and the deceased, in proper self-defense, killed defendant's brother, and defendant, provoked thereby, instantly killed the deceased, the provocation did not reduce the crime to manslaughter, if defendant was aware of his brother's unlawful purpose.

abandoned before the crime was committed.⁵⁹ The fact that defendant had the weapon ready when he provoked the encounter, and immediately killed the deceased with it, indicates prior malice.⁶⁰ But the circumstances may show that the killing was not malicious, although defendant used, and even though he had prepared, a deadly weapon.⁶¹

61. People v. Crowley, 56 Cal. 36; State v. Partlow, 90 Mo. 608, 4 S. W. 14, 59 Am. Rep. 31, holding that if defendant had no intention to kill the deceased or do him serious bodily harm at the time when he made an unlawful attack upon him, but it later became necessary to do so in self-defense, the homicide would be manslaughter in spite of the use of the deadly weapon. See also Childs v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 573, 34 S. W. 939. Whether or not the provocation and passion will reduce the grade in such cases depends upon defendant's intent when he entered into the contest. If he then intended to use a deadly weapon the crime is murder, but if he did not intend to use it when he began the contest, but later used it in the heat of passion, provoked by the attack made upon him, it is manslaughter. Reg. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 160, 34 E. C. L. 666. See also Com. v. Drum, 58 Pa. St. 9. The mere fact that defendant armed himself after a quarrel with the deceased does not necessarily prevent the subsequent killing from being reduced to manslaughter. If he armed himself from a reasonable belief that he was in danger of death or of great bodily harm at the hands of the deceased the homicide is manslaughter if it would have been manslaughter had defendant not especially armed himself, but if he armed himself to pursue his adversary, after their quarrel, to get an opportunity to kill him, it is murder. Gourko v. U. S., 153 U. S. 183, 14 S. Ct. 806, 38 L. ed. 680. Where both parties to a quarrel separated, armed themselves, and again met and immediately engaged in a fight with deadly weapons, and one killed the other, it was said that it would be murder if there had been sufficient cooling time between the two encounters, otherwise it would be manslaughter. Fitzpatrick v. State, 37 Ark. 238. It has also been held that when the weapon was prepared to be used only in case of outside interference, but was actually used in sudden passion due to adequate provocation the grade was reduced. *Ex p. The distinction between murder in the second degree and manslaughter is that if the homicide was committed under the immediate influence of sudden passion for which there was adequate cause, the homicide, if not justifiable, would be manslaughter; but if such cause did not exist, and the homicide was not justifiable then it would be murder in the second degree. Cochran v. State, 28 Tex. App. 422, 13 S. W. 651.

"The true general rule" is "that reason should, at the time of the act, be disturbed or obscured by passion to an extent which might render ordinary men, of fair average disposition, liable to act rashly or without due deliberation or reflection, and from passion, rather than judgment." Mahe v. People, 10 Mich. 212, 220, 81 Am. Dec. 781.

In Missouri the courts distinguish between the "lawful provocation" which will reduce a murder to manslaughter, and a "just provocation" which merely reduces it to murder in the second degree. State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. 207.

was no prior intent to take life.⁶⁸ This is especially true if the homicide was committed with a deadly weapon. In such cases there must be some great provocation to reduce the grade.⁶⁹ But if the provocation was legally adequate, use of a deadly weapon does not prevent the homicide from being reduced to manslaughter.⁷⁰

(II) WORDS OR GESTURES. According to the overwhelming weight of authority mere words or gestures, however offensive, insulting, or abusive, are not adequate to reduce a homicide, although committed in a passion provoked by them, from murder to manslaughter,⁷¹ especially when the homicide was intentionally

Information that deceased has committed some act that would be adequate provocation if it had been committed in defendant's presence will not reduce the grade, although the killing occurred in a passion caused by the information. Reg. v. Fisher, 8 C. & P. 182, 34 E. C. L. 679.

Provocation by words held adequate.—In construing the New York statute it has been said that the fact that the crime was committed in a heat of passion will reduce it to manslaughter whether the passion was produced by acts or words, if the provocation was naturally calculated to produce it. Wilson v. People, 4 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 619. See also State v. Grugin, 147 Mo. 39, 47 S. W. 1058, 71 Am. St. Rep. 553, 42 L. R. A. 774; Reg. v. Rothwell, 12 Cox C. C. 145. And in Kentucky the court approved the refusal by the trial judge to charge that "mere words however opprobrious or insulting, are not sufficient provocation to reduce a killing from murder to manslaughter" (Com. v. Hourigan, 89 Ky. 305, 313, 12 S. W. 550, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 509), and in this state it is manslaughter if defendant killed deceased in a heat of passion provoked by receiving apparently accurate information as to the existence of illicit relations between deceased and defendant's wife (Stott v. Com., 29 S. W. 141, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 308. See also Massie v. Com., 24 S. W. 611, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 562, 29 S. W. 871, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 790). But the use of provoking language by the deceased does not necessarily reduce the grade (Sawyers v. Com., 38 S. W. 136, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 657), especially if the language used would not reasonably provoke passion (Cotrell v. Com., 17 S. W. 149, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 305).

A statute providing that "provocation by words, threats, menaces, or contemptuous gestures, shall in no case be sufficient to free the person killing from the guilt and crime of murder" does not imply that such provocation may excuse a homicide that would otherwise be manslaughter. Jackson v. State, 45 Ga. 198.

Statutory provocation justifying an assault.—Statutes which provide that an assault may be extenuated or justified if provoked by opprobrious language used by the victim of the assault, at or near the time of its commission, do not alter the common-law rule as to homicide and if an assault made under such provocation terminates fatally, the verbal provocation does not reduce the crime to manslaughter. *Prior v. Threats may be considered.—But where the deceased had for several hours been looking for defendant with the avowed purpose of shooting him on sight, the threats should be considered to determine whether there was adequate provocation to reduce the grade. Orman v. State, 24 Tex. App. 495, 6 S. W. 544.

Contra.—In Kentucky it has been held that defamatory statements relating to defendant's wife (Stott v. Com., 29 S. W. 141, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 308), or imputing want of chastity to his wife and nieces may be sufficient provocation (Massie v. Com., 24 S. W. 611, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 562, 29 S. W. 871, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 790).

75. In Texas the statute provides that insulting words or conduct by deceased toward a female relative of the slayer is an adequate cause of passion to reduce a homicide to manslaughter, if it occurs at the first meeting of the parties after the slayer is informed of the insult; and that any female under the permanent or temporary protection of the slayer at the time of the killing shall also be included within the meaning of the term "relation." See Ex p. Jones, 31 Tex. Cr. 422, 20 S. W. 983; Richardson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 612. The statute applies to insults toward a woman to whom defendant was engaged to be married (Lane v. State, 29 Tex. App. 310, 15 S. W. 827); and toward his stepdaughter during the life of his wife (Clanton v. State, 20 Tex. App. 615). It also applies to insults to defendant's sister committed by her husband. Willis v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 75 S. W. 790. It is immaterial whether the female was present when the insulting words were used concerning her or not (Hudson v. State, 6 Tex. App. 565, 32 Am. Rep. 593), or whether she was then living or dead (Willis v. State, (Cr. App. 1903) 75 S. W. 790). The statute does not apply to an insult to any male relative however feeble, infirm, or beloved. Ex p. Jones, 31 Tex. Cr. 422, 20 S. W. 983. It has been said that the statute applies to a homicide committed by a woman in a passion produced by insulting remarks concerning her female relatives, but it does not apply to a homicide committed in such passion aroused by an insult toward herself. Moore v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 351, 26 S. W. 404. It was held in a late case that testimony of a statement made by deceased (a woman) to defendant (another woman) and to some of defendant's sisters, who were present, that they were bitches, or damn bitches, did not raise the issue of insulting conduct toward a family relative of defendant. Johnson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1905) 84 S. W. 824. If an insult is directed against the slayer, and only indirectly affects his female relatives, as where a man is called a "son of a b—h," it does not reduce the grade of the crime. Hayman v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1905) 83 S. W. 204; Driver v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 65 S. W. 528; Fitzpatrick v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 20, 38 S. W. 806; Graham v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1895) 33 S. If he was not present, but had been informed of it by others, the killing must have occurred at his first meeting with the deceased after he learned of the provocation, and while he was still affected by passion springing from that provocation (Stewart v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 499; Ex p. Jones, 31 Tex. Cr. 422, 20 S. W. 983; Norman v. State, 26 Tex. App. 221, 9 S. W. 606; Melton v. State, 24 Tex. App. 47, 5 S. W. 652; Howard v. State, 23 Tex. App. 265, 5 S. W. 231; Niland v. State, 19 Tex. App. 166; Eanes v. State, 10 Tex. App. 421; Hill v. State, 5 Tex. App. 2); and if so, it is immaterial how much time elapsed between the receipt of the information and the meeting (Jones v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 492, 26 S. W. 1082, 47 Am. St. Rep. 46; Williams v. State, 24 Tex. App. 637, 7 S. W. 333). In such cases there need be no new provocation at the time of the killing, but passion resulting from the former provocation is sufficient. Pauline v. State, 21 Tex. App. 436, 1 S. W. 453. Thus if defendant killed the deceased at their first meeting after he learned that the deceased had been criminally intimate with defendant's little sister, in a

by itself would not amount to adequate provocation, usually will not reduce the grade of the crime;⁷⁶ but under special circumstances may do so.⁷⁷ If insulting words provoke a combat in which at first there is no intent to kill, but such intent is later formed and executed in the heat of passion caused by the combat, the provocation is sufficient to reduce the grade.⁷⁸

(III) PERSONAL VIOLENCE—(A) Assault and Battery. Personal violence, as in the case of an intentional injury to defendant's person as by a blow is adequate provocation,⁷⁹ if it is of such a character or inflicted under such circum-

heat of passion due to this information, the crime would be manslaughter only. Young v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 69 S. W. 153. But if defendant had met the deceased in the intervening time, the statute would not apply to a killing at the subsequent meeting (Hardcastle v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 555, 38 S. W. 186; Bledsoe v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 120; Pickens v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 554, 21 S. W. 362), even though he made no attack at the prior meeting because he was not armed at that time (Pitts v. State, 29 Tex. App. 374, 16 S. W. 189), unless a new provocation was given at the subsequent meeting (Richardson v. State, 28 Tex. App. 216, 12 S. W. 870). Insulting language, at a subsequent meeting, would not be a sufficient new provocation to reduce the grade of the homicide. Hardcastle v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 555, 38 S. W. 186. If in such cases defendant acted under the influence of passion at the time of the killing, the fact that he showed some deliberation in the interval between the receipt of the information and the homicide does not necessarily prevent a reduction of the grade. Orman v. State, 22 Tex. App. 604, 3 S. W. 468, 58 Am. Rep. 662. Intervening meetings will not prevent the mitigation of the crime if defendant, although he had been informed of the insulting words or conduct, did not know who had given the insult, and killed deceased at the first meeting after learning that he was responsible, even though he suspected deceased at the time of the prior meetings. McAneer v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 518, 67 S. W. 117. If the insult was to a female under the temporary protection of defendant, the first meeting must occur while she is still under his protection. Ex p. Jones, 31 Tex. Cr. 422, 20 S. W. 983. Since the statute is designed to allow for the natural tendency to act rashly in a passion produced by such provocation, rather than to permit such punishment of the insult, if defendant was informed and believed that an insult had been offered, and killed deceased in a passion due to that information, it is immaterial that the information was false. Melton v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1904) 83 S. W. 822; Canister v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1904) 79 S. W. 24; Finch v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 70 S. W. 207; McAneer v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 518, 67 S. W. 117; Messer v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 97, 63 S. W. 643; Jones v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 492, 26 S. W. 1082, 47 Am. St. Rep. 46. Conversely, if an insult had been offered to defendant's wife, but it does not appear that he had knowledge of the fact at the time of the killing, he will not be protected by the statute. Gibson v. State, 23 Tex. App. 414, 5 S. W. 314. Information that the husband of defendant's sister compelled her to submit to sexual intercourse while she was sick with her menses is not an adequate provocation under this statute. Willis v. State, (Tex. Cr. 1903) 75 S. W. 790.

76. Insults and belief, or knowledge, that deceased had seduced defendant's wife (State v. Harrigan, 9 Houst. (Del.) 369, 31 Atl. 1052), or sister (State v. Hockett, 70 Iowa 442, 30 N. W. 742), or had made some preparation to attack defendant not amounting to an actual assault (Phelps v. State, 75 Ga. 571; Edwards v. State, 53 Ga. 428).

77. State v. Grugin, 147 Mo. 39, 47 S. W. 1058, 71 Am. St. Rep. 553, 42 L. R. A. 774. The refusal of defendant's wife, who had left him on account of his misconduct, to return to his home may be adequate provocation, where he believed at the time that she then was living in adultery with other men. Reg. v. Rothwell, 12 Cox C. C. 145. A slight assault coupled with words of great insult may be adequate. State v. Grugin, 147 Mo. 39, 47 S. W. 1058, 71 Am. St. Rep. 553, 42 L. R. A. 774; Reg. v. Smith, 4 F. & F. 1066; Reg. v. Sherwood, 1 C. & K. 556, 47 E. C. L. 556. So insulting words and a slight assault and battery, neither of which would be adequate provocation under the Texas statute, may, taken together, be adequate. Wadlington v. State, 19 Tex. App. 266.

78. State v. Hill, 20 N. C. 629, 34 Am. Dec. 396; Morley's Case, 6 How. St. Tr. 770, Kel. C. C. 53. But defendant's retaliation when provoked by insulting words must not be excessive. If on such provocation he makes a violent attack with a weapon upon the deceased and ultimately kills him, the grade is not reduced, although after the beginning of the attack the mutual combat became so violent that it would have been sufficient provocation, but for the excessive force originally used by the defendant. Arwood v. State, 59 Ga. 391.

80. Even a technical assault, if of a trivial nature, will not reduce the grade, where the retaliation is outrageous in its nature, and beyond all proportion to the provocation. State v. Ferguson, 2 Hill (S. C.) 619, 27 Am. Dec. 412. See also Stewart v. State, 78 Ala. 436; State v. Emory, (Del. 1904) 53 Atl. 1036; State v. Anderson, 4 Nev. 265; State v. Barfield, 30 N. C. 344; Honesty v. Com., 81 Va. 283; Rex v. Lynch, 5 C. & P. 324, 24 E. C. L. 587. Thus a blow given by a woman or a child or cripple to a man of average strength probably does not lower a homicide from murder to manslaughter. Com. v. Mosler, 4 Pa. St. 264. See also State v. Kloss, 117 Mo. 591, 23 S. W. 780; Stedman's Case, Fost. 292. A slight assault and battery are insufficient provocation to reduce a homicide to manslaughter. Wadlington v. State, 19 Tex. App. 266. See also Thompson v. State, 55 Ga. 47; State v. Scott, 26 N. C. 409, 42 Am. Dec. 148. Thus if a policeman ordered a man who was obstructing the street to move along and gave him a slight push, upon which the man killed the policeman, the provocation would not be adequate; but it would be adequate if the policeman gave him a blow and knocked him down. Reg. v. Hagan, 8 C. & P. 167, 34 E. C. L. 670. But to reduce the grade an assault need not be so violent as to put defendant in imminent danger of death (English v. State, 95 Ga. 123, 20 S. E. 651; State v. Sizemore, 52 N. C. 206), nor of such grievous bodily injury as might reasonably cause death (Williams v. State, 107 Ga. 721, 33 S. E. 648; Cook v. Com., 4 Ky. L. Rep. 31), nor produce severe pain nor bloodshed (Tickle v. State, 6 Tex. App. 623). And there is authority that the adequacy of the provocation does not depend upon the degree of violence used, but upon whether the assault, under the attending circumstances, is calculated to create, and does create, sudden heat of passion. Williams v. Com., 4 Ky. L. Rep. 3.

Where defendant's wife, who had formerly lived in adultery, but had become reconciled and returned to her husband, in a quarrel with him taunted him with her preference for her adulterer and spat in his face, and defendant instantly stabbed and killed her in sudden passion, the provocation was held adequate to reduce the crime to manslaughter. Reg. v. Smith, 4 F. & F. 1066.

81. State v. Inks, 135 Mo. 678, 37 S. W. 942. And see supra, III, B, 2, c, and cases there cited.

82. Ex p. Warrick, 73 Ala. 57; State v. Clark, 69 Kan. 576, 77 Pac. 287. Apparent imminent danger of personal violence is adequate provocation. State v. Brown, 64 Mo. 367; Childers v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 509, 27 S. W. 133. Thus where defendant had been struck by the wife of the deceased, and deceased then intervened and was about to beat defendant, the provocation was held sufficient to reduce the crime to manslaughter. State v. Roberts, 8 N. C. 349, 9 Am. Dec. 643. So if the attack was begun by the wife of the deceased and abetted by him. Byrd v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 609, 47 S. W. 721. But where, when deceased had merely taken off his coat to fight, the parties were separated by bystanders, and defendant after being released rushed back and stabbed deceased the provocation was held inadequate. State v. Overton, 77 N. C. 485. So the provocation is inadequate, where deceased threw a chair over defendant's head, without touching him or apparently intending to do so, when defendant approached deceased during a quarrel. State

(B) Mutual Combat. The excitement and heat of passion incident to a brawl or sudden combat is also sufficient to reduce a homicide to manslaughter,⁸³ especially if the deceased used a dangerous weapon,⁸⁴ and even though defendant did

Application of rule.—Thus if deceased attacked defendant with a deadly weapon, but gave up the attack and retreated, and defendant, although knowing that he was no longer in danger, in a passion produced by the attack just made upon himself, killed the deceased, still the crime would be no higher than manslaughter. Tollett v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 573; Gonzales v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 33, 29 S. W. 1091; 30 S. W. 224; West v. State, 2 Tex. App. 460. A homicide so provoked is only manslaughter, although defendant was the first to draw a deadly weapon, if he attempted to retreat, but was pursued and assaulted with a deadly weapon by the deceased. Heffington v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 315, 54 S. W. 755. If deceased reasonably seemed about to attack with a dangerous weapon the provocation is adequate. Norris v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 559, 61 S. W. 493; Gilcrease v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 619, 28 S. W. 531. But if defendant did not know that the deceased had a weapon, and the deceased made no attempt to use it, there would be no reduction of the grade. State v. McCourry, 128 N. C. 594, 38 S. E. 883. If the deceased drew a weapon, but made no attempt to use it, the provocation was not adequate to mitigate the killing. State v. Anderson, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 38. So where a guest in a public house drew a knife, and threatened to kill any one who interfered with him, but was backing toward the door in an effort to escape, and was attacking no one, and the person in charge of the house thereupon shot not first attempt to retire from the combat,⁸⁵ provided the killing was due to heat of passion aroused by the combat and not to malice.⁸⁶ But if defendant entered the combat dangerously armed and took an unfair advantage of the deceased, the homicide is not reduced to manslaughter.⁸⁷ And one who kills another in a duel, however fairly conducted, and whether formal or suddenly improvised, is guilty of murder.⁸⁸

(c) Lawful Exercise of Force. The lawful exercise of force is not such provocation as will reduce a homicide to manslaughter.⁸⁹

(d) Aggression or Provocation by Defendant. A personal injury may be adequate provocation, although provoked by defendant or received in a combat and killed him, the crime could not be manslaughter. State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. 207 [affirming 11 Mo. App. 587].

89. Rex v. Willoughby, 1 East P. C. 288.

Illustrations.—Thus where a landlord was lawfully ejecting defendant, and defendant's accomplice killed the landlord, the crime was held to be murder. Rex v. Willoughby, 1 East P. C. 288. So, if defendant provoked the violence, as by refusing to leave a public house when lawfully ordered to do so (Rex v. Hems, 7 C. & P. 312, 32 E. C. L. 630), or by resisting a lawful arrest, and the deceased used no more violence than was warranted by the circumstances, such violence will not reduce the crime to manslaughter (Rex v. Ball, 1 Moody C. C. 330, 333). But if the deceased attempted to unlawfully eject defendant by using violence without first ordering him to leave his house, and upon this provocation defendant killed the deceased it is only manslaughter. McCoy v. State, 8 Ark. 451; State v. Partlow, 90 Mo. 603, 4 S. W. 14, 59 Am. Rep. 31. If the assault was legally justifiable it will not be adequate provocation. Thus where the deceased ejected defendant from his house, when defendant immediately shot and killed the deceased, the crime will be manslaughter if the deceased used excessive force before he had first ordered defendant to leave and defendant had refused to do so, or if in case of such refusal to leave unnecessary violence was used in putting him out; but if the order to leave had been given and defendant wrongfully refused to comply, and excessive force was not used, the crime will be murder. Reg. v. Brennan, 27 Ont. 659. See also State v. Pollard, 139 Mo. 220, 40 S. W. 949 (blow given to defendant who had intruded into the house of a brother of the deceased and fired a pistol at the brother); Nelson v. State, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 518 (chastisement of a slave as provocation to him).

Interference of deceased as peacemaker.—If two are fighting, and one of them kills another who attempts to separate them, the offense is not necessarily manslaughter, rather than murder. McAllister v. Territory, 1 Wash. Terr. 360. The heat of passion aroused in mutual combat will not mitigate the killing, where defendant was trying to attack a third person, and the deceased interfered solely for the purpose of preventing the difficulty (Holmes v. State, 88 Ala. 26, 7 So. 193, 16 Am. St. Rep. 17; Rex v. Bourne, 5 C. & P. 120, 24 E. C. L. 483), using no unnecessary violence (State v. Jackson, 45 La. Ann. 1031, 13 So. 703; State v. Ferguson, 2 Hill (S. C.) 619, 27 Am. Dec. 412; Rex v. Bourne, 5 C. & P. 120, 24 E. C. L. 483). And where the deceased had interfered as a peacemaker, the fact that he was advancing toward defendant with a knife would not be adequate to reduce the grade if defendant shot and killed the deceased before he was near and before there was imminent danger, and defendant was apparently not in a violent passion. Alvarez v. State, 41 Fla. 532, 27 So. 40.

begun or provoked by him,⁹⁰ unless it was begun or provoked for the purpose of killing the deceased.⁹¹ But the fact that defendant was the aggressor or provoked the difficulty may prevent a mitigation of the crime, where the provocation would have been adequate had the first provocation come from the deceased.⁹²

(E) Injury to Relative or Friend. A violent attack upon or injury to a relative or friend in the presence of defendant, or under peculiar circumstances even in his absence but shortly before the homicide, may be adequate provocation to reduce a homicide to manslaughter, if it was not committed with malice.⁹³

Where defendant was the aggressor, whether by insult, assault, or apparent intention to attack, and the deceased did no more than prepare to resist such attack or retaliate in a manner proportioned to the provocation given him by defendant's conduct, and thereupon defendant killed him, the crime is murder, although the act of the deceased would have been adequate provocation had it not been occasioned by defendant's misconduct.

But where the quarrel arose from a lawful act of defendant, as a demand for property which he claimed the deceased had stolen from him, and where he had no intention to use violence, the fact that this demand caused deceased to give the provocation which led to the killing would not affect the adequacy of that provocation to reduce the grade. Bonnard v. State, 25 Tex. App. 173, 7 S. W. 862, 8 Am. St. Rep. 431.

Provocation by resisting lawful arrest.—Rex v. Ball, 1 Moody C. C. 330, 333.

93. Thus where the deceased has killed the brother (Young v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 442, 55 S. W. 331; Guffee v. State, 8 Tex. App. 187),

But a verbal insult and threat to kill defendant's brother is not adequate provocation where there was no attempt made to carry the threat into execution.⁹⁴ And the fact that defendant knew that deceased had killed his friend is not adequate provocation, if the killing did not take place in the presence of defendant.⁹⁵ Where one interferes in behalf of a friend and kills his assailant, the provocation is not sufficient, unless the friend was in danger.⁹⁶

or friend (Moore v. State, 26 Tex. App. 322, 9 S. W. 610) of defendant in his presence the provocation is adequate. See also Moffatt v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 257, 33 S. W. 344. An attack with a deadly weapon made upon defendant's brother is also adequate provocation. Crockett v. Com., 100 Ky. 382, 38 S. W. 674, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 835. And see Chambers v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 61, 79 S. W. 572. An assault upon defendant's young brother has been held to be adequate provocation. Collins v. U. S., 150 U. S. 62, 14 S. Ct. 9, 37 L. ed. 998. A violent assault upon defendant's wife, causing bloodshed, is adequate to provoke the husband to passion. McLaurin v. State, 64 Miss. 529, 1 So. 747. So is an assault with intent to commit a rape upon defendant's wife, if the assailant is detected in the act and immediately slain. State v. Neville, 51 N. C. 423. But not where the homicide is committed subsequently, on learning of the attempt from others. Lide v. State, 133 Ala. 43, 31 So. 953; State v. Neville, 51 N. C. 423. Where defendant claimed that shortly before the homicide he was informed of an indecent assault by deceased on his wife, it was held proper to instruct that such information was not sufficient provocation to reduce the offense to manslaughter. State v. Bone, 114 Iowa 537, 87 N. W. 507. A father provoked to strong resentment by seeing his daughter violently assaulted by her husband, although her life was not in danger, may be guilty of manslaughter only in killing the husband. Reg. v. Harrington, 10 Cox C. C. 370. And the same rule applies to a brother who has killed his sister's husband because the husband attempted to poison her. Willis v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 75 S. W. 790. There is also authority that where a father kills his daughter's husband in a sudden passion, aroused by finding his daughter and children turned out into the street by the husband, the provocation is adequate to reduce the grade; but in that case prior assaults had been repeatedly made by the husband upon his wife, to the knowledge of her father, and the husband had but a short time before tried to kill the father. Campbell v. Com., 88 Ky. 402, 11 S. W. 290, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 975, 21 Am. St. Rep. 348. A mother who sees another whipping her child has received adequate provocation. Maria v. State, 28 Tex. 698. tion and not to revenge or malice.⁹⁹ In many cases it is held or said that he must see them in the act, or that he must at least find them together under circumstances reasonably leading him to believe that they are or have been so engaged, and not kill merely upon information of past adultery.¹ But in other cases it is held that such a homicide may be reduced to manslaughter if committed in the heat of passion upon being informed of the wife's adultery, if the jury find that the circumstances were such as to reasonably cause heat of passion.² Mere suspi-

Prior suspicion or information.—It will be only manslaughter, if the husband suspected that the parties were criminally intimate and was searching for them when he discovered them engaged in adultery (State v. Chiles, 58 S. C. 47, 36 S. E. 498), or in a compromising attitude corroborative of his previous information that they had committed adultery (Canister v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 221, 79 S. W. 24).

2. Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212, 81 Am. Dec. 781 (holding that where defendant followed his wife and a man to some woods, and while following them back, in great passion, was told that they had committed adultery the day before and at once pursued the man and assaulted him, the provocation was sufficient to reduce the crime to manslaughter, if the assault had ended fatally); State v. Holme, 54 Mo. 153 (holding that if the parties are not found together, but the provocation is so recent that defendant would not naturally be able to master the passion aroused by his wife's misconduct, the grade may be reduced); Reg. v. Rothwell, 12 Cox C. C. 145 (where the wife was killed when she tauntingly informed her husband of her adultery). See also State v. Grugin, 147

(B) Other Relations. Although there is authority to the contrary,⁵ there are cases tending to show that the principles above stated apply where a father or brother kills one whom he detects in adultery or illicit intercourse with his daughter or sister,⁶ or where one kills a man detected in sexual intercourse with his betrothed,⁷ and in like cases.⁸ The mere agent of a husband for the purpose of detecting his wife's adultery cannot set up her adultery to reduce his murder of her paramour to manslaughter.⁹

(v) *ILLEGAL ARREST OR DETENTION*¹⁰—(A) In General. It has repeatedly been held that an illegal arrest or attempt to arrest is adequate provocation to reduce a homicide to manslaughter,¹¹ unless the homicide was in fact committed

Mo. 39, 47 S. W. 1058, 71 Am. St. Rep. 553, 42 L. R. A. 774. In Fry v. State, 81 Ga. 645, 8 S. E. 308, it was held that where defendant's wife, merely to irritate, vex, and insult him, told him that he was not the father of their children, and, in a sudden heat of passion provoked by her words and the animus with which they were uttered, although he had prior knowledge of her misconduct, he killed her, the crime was murder; but whether such information, if believed by him to be true, and if it was the first knowledge of her misconduct that he had, would be adequate provocation, was not passed upon by the court, since it was not necessary to the decision of the case presented.

If some time has intervened between the receipt of the information and the homicide, so that defendant's passion has had time to cool, his killing of his wife or her paramour is murder and not manslaughter. *McCarty v. But the fact that the deceased had previously been criminally intimate with defendant's sister, or that defendant had reason to believe that he had been so intimate, is not sufficient. *State v. with malice;¹² and the same is true of an illegal detention of a person by an officer or private person,¹³ or an attempt to rearrest after an escape from an illegal arrest,¹⁴ or other illegal violence by an officer acting outside of the scope of his authority.¹⁵ There is authority, however, that a mere illegal arrest or detention, in which there is no danger of violence to the person, is not adequate provocation;¹⁶ but that all the circumstances attending the homicide, taken together, must be considered to determine whether it is murder or manslaughter.¹⁷ A mere declaration of an intent to make an illegal arrest, unaccompanied by any Arrest by unauthorized person.—The provocation is adequate where an arrest is made by an unauthorized person under a warrant issued to an officer, but in the absence of the officer. Rex v. Patience, 7 C. & P. 775, 32 E. C. L. 866.

But if defendant submitted to arrest under a defective warrant, and later, without knowledge of the defect, attempted forcibly to escape and in so doing killed the officer with a deadly weapon, the crime is murder and not manslaughter. Reg. v. Allen, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 222.

Killing person who caused the arrest.—Such provocation may be adequate to mitigate the killing of the person who caused an illegal arrest to be made, if the killing occurs in a passion due to the illegal arrest, and before there has been sufficient cooling time. *Mundine v. The use of a deadly weapon in such case is not proof of malice (Jones v. State, 14 Mo. 412; Roberts v. State, 14 Mo. 138, 55 Am. Dec. 97), unless the weapon was prepared beforehand for that purpose (Rex v. Patience, 7 C. & P. 775, 32 E. C. L. 866). It has even been said that if the prisoner could not escape from arrest otherwise than by killing his assailant, the fact that he had previously armed himself with a deadly weapon to resist the attempt, and that he gave no warning to his assailant, does not make the killing malicious so as to prevent a reduction of the grade. Reg. v. Carey, 14 Cox C. C. 214; Rex v. Thompson, 1 Moody C. C. 80.

13. Rex v. Weir, 1 B. & C. 288, 8 E. C. L. 125; Rex v. Curran, 3 C. & P. 397, 14 E. C. L. 629; Rex v. Curvan, 1 Moody C. C. 132. An illegal detention, with no intent to arrest defendant, may be adequate provocation. State v. Ramsey, 50 N. C. 195, holding that where defendant, in a passion, violently struck the deceased with a gallon jug of molasses, which he happened to have in his hands, fracturing his skull and killing him, because the deceased held on to the bridle rein of the horse upon which defendant was mounted for from ten to forty-five minutes, and refused to let defendant ride on, the crime was manslaughter and not murder.

(Tenn.)* 283 (holding that while one may use reasonable force, proportionate to the injury attempted against him, to effect his escape from illegal arrest, he may not use a deadly weapon, if he has no reason to apprehend a greater injury than a mere arrest. If he has no reason to believe that he is in danger of death or great bodily harm, and with cool, deliberate malice and premeditation, kills the officer attempting to make the illegal arrest, the crime is murder).

Illustrations.—The use of unlawful violence and the display of deadly weapons to compel submission to an illegal arrest will be adequate provocation. People v. Burt, 51 Mich. 199, 16 N. W. 378. So it is adequate if an officer, with a deadly weapon drawn, and with threats to kill defendant, forcibly breaks into defendant's house, although defendant previously shot at the officer. State v. List, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 133. But if the officer, although he broke into defendant's house to make the arrest, was not armed with a dangerous weapon, and was killed by defendant while peaceably taking attempt to do so, is not adequate provocation;¹⁸ nor is a lawful arrest or detention by an officer or private person,¹⁹ or other lawful act of an officer while acting in the discharge of his duty.²⁰

(B) Provocation to Others. An illegal arrest or detention may be provocation, not only to the person arrested or detained, but also to his relatives or friends, or even to a stranger.²¹

(VI) TRESPASS UPON PROPERTY. A mere trespass upon property, real or personal, or a mere larceny is not adequate provocation to reduce an intentional homicide to manslaughter.²² But a forcible attack upon or entry into one's off his coat, the crime is murder. People v. Randall, 1 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 258, 5 City Hall. Rec. 141.

18. State v. Tabor, 95 Mo. 585, 8 S. W. 744.

Preparation to make an illegal arrest.—In Com. v. Drew, 4 Mass. 391, it was said that while defendant would be guilty of manslaughter only if, to prevent an unlawful arrest, he killed a sheriff, who was attempting to arrest defendant's fellow-servant under an execution that was then invalid, he would be guilty of murder if he killed the sheriff outside the shop in which his fellow-servant had taken refuge, the door being closed at the moment the fatal blow was struck, although the sheriff had first forcibly broken the door open with the declared intention of making the arrest, as the officer was neither making an illegal arrest nor attempting to do so when he was killed. The court's view seemed to be that the sheriff must have entered the shop to make the arrest before it would amount to an attempt.

Com.*, 80 Ky. 1; Mackabee v. Com., 78 Ky. 380. But it has been said that defendant must have known that the officer was acting under authority and intended to arrest to prevent the homicide from being reduced to manslaughter. Robinson v. State, 93 Ga. 77, 18 S. E. 1018, 44 Am. St. Rep. 127; Croom v. State, 85 Ga. 718, 11 S. E. 1035, 21 Am. St. Rep. 179; Fleetwood v. Com., 80 Ky. 1; Mockabee v. Com., 78 Ky. 380. See also supra, III, B, 2, d, (III), (c).

If, after a lawful arrest, the subsequent detention becomes illegal because the prisoner is not taken before a magistrate, a homicide in an attempt to escape will be reduced to manslaughter. Rex v. Weir, 1 B. & C. 288, 8 E. C. L. 125; Rex v. Curran, 3 C. & P. 397, 14 E. C. L. 629.

Lawful restraint by a private person is not adequate provocation to reduce the grade. Thus where the deceased interfered with defendant who was wrongfully riding off with the wife of the deceased, and defendant, provoked by repeated interference by the husband, killed him by striking him a violent blow over the head with a heavy club, it was held that the homicide was not reduced to manslaughter. State v. Craton, 28 N. C. 164.

Murder in case of lawful arrest or detention see supra, II, B, 5, a, 6, b, (II).

20. Any other lawful act of an officer, while acting in the discharge of his duty, will not serve as provocation to mitigate the homicide, if the person who killed the officer knew his official character, but if he did not know it the provocation may be adequate. Fleetwood v. Com., 80 Ky. 1; Mockabee v. Com., 78 Ky. 380, quieting disturbance. On trial for murder, where it appeared that deceased, a peace officer, was killed immediately after ordering defendant and others to leave the street, which they were using as a place of resort at a time when no legitimate business called them there, it was held that the court properly refused to charge that it was a case of manslaughter only. *People v. dwelling-house may be adequate provocation to the owner or other inmates;²³ and if a person in lawfully opposing force to force in protecting his property is assaulted or becomes engaged in sudden combat, there may be sufficient provocation.²⁴

The fact that a man who has been ordered not to approach a ship persists in doing so is not such provocation as will mitigate the grade of the homicide if the ship's sentinel shoots and kills him, unless this was necessary for the ship's safety. Rex v. Thomas [cited in 3 Russell Cr. 94].

Contra.—But there is authority that the passion provoked by the act of the deceased in tearing down and carrying away a fence belonging to defendant will reduce the grade, if the killing was due to the provocation and not to malice. State v. Matthews, 148 Mo. 185, 49 S. W. 1085, 71 Am. St. Rep. 594.

Inability to otherwise prevent trespass or larceny.—The rule applies if the homicide was intentionally committed with a deadly weapon, although the trespass or larceny could have been prevented in no other way. McDaniel v. State, 8 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 401, 47 Am. Dec. 93.

lowed by a second breaking into the house by other officers who came to arrest defendant for an assault made upon the first officer when he broke into the house, has been held to be adequate. People v. Randall, 1 Wheel. Cr. 258, 5 City Hall Rec. 141.

24. Under Tex. Pen. Code, art. 572, justifying homicide committed in the protection of property against unlawful and violent attack, when all other means have been resorted to, where defendant is in the field with his plow and oxen, and a peace officer, without exhibiting any warrant, approaches him, with three others, to take possession of the plow and oxen, and defendant kills the officer without resorting to all other means to prevent the seizure, the question whether defendant's passions were not so excited as to reduce the killing to manslaughter should be submitted to the jury, although no instruction to that effect is requested. Ledbetter v. State, 26 Tex. App. 22, 9 S. W. 60. See also Martin v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 144, 58 S. W. 112.

25. Commission by deceased of an unnatural crime with the son of defendant (Reg. v. Fisher, 8 C. & P. 182, 34 E. C. L. 679), or the rape of a minor daughter (State v. Grugin, 147 Mo. 39, 47 S. W. 1058, 71 Am. St. Rep. 553, 42 L. R. A. 774), are adequate provocation. An attempt by defendant's father-in-law to forcibly keep defendant's wife and child from leaving the father-in-law's house to live with defendant, against the wishes of the wife, is adequate provocation to mitigate the killing of the father-in-law by defendant, since it is analogous to an attempt by the husband to free his wife from illegal imprisonment. Cole v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 225, 75 S. W. 527. Where a man had entered defendant's bedroom and insulted defendant's wife, and defendant, in consequence, had warned him to leave the town, but in defiance of such warning he had seated himself at the hotel table near defendant and his wife the following morning when defendant shot at him, it was held that the provocation received the night before might have been adequate provocation to reduce the crime to manslaughter if defendant had killed his opponent, and hence might reduce

e. Provocation Must Be the Cause of the Passion. Although there may have been both heat of passion and adequate provocation, the homicide is not reduced to manslaughter unless the provocation was the cause of the passion.²⁶ If the actual provocation was not known to defendant at the time of the homicide, it will not reduce the grade.²⁷ And passion arising from some provocation other than the one given when the homicide was committed will not reduce the grade.²⁸ But if it is uncertain whether recent provocation actually produced passion, an antecedent provocation may indicate that it did by showing that defendant's mental the grade of the crime committed below that of assault with intent to murder. Biggs v. State, 29 Ga. 723, 76 Am. Dec. 630. The fact that defendant's wife was an unchaste or otherwise bad woman would not mitigate the crime of killing her below the grade of murder. Fry v. State, 81 Ga. 645, 8 S. E. 308. Interference between the husband and wife by her brother is not adequate provocation to mitigate the killing of the wife by the husband, although he acted in sudden passion aroused by the interference. U. S. v. Schneider, 21 D. C. 381. A mere breach of contract (Com. v. Daley, 2 Pa. L. J. Rep. 361, 4 Pa. L. J. 150), as by the refusal to work for another, after agreeing to do so (State v. Berkley, 109 Mo. 665, 19 S. W. 192), is not adequate provocation. Nor is the mere refusal of defendant's father-in-law to sign a note so that defendant could obtain funds to relieve his great financial distress adequate provocation for killing the father-in-law, where the latter was in no way responsible for defendant's financial condition. State v. Robertson, 178 Mo. 496, 77 S. W. 528. The fact that a young woman rejected defendant's suit is not adequate. State v. Kotovsky, 74 Mo. 247. Nor is a son's resistance to chastisement sufficient provocation to his father. Johnson v. State, 133 Ala. 38, 31 So. 951.

Under the Georgia statute it is not always necessary that there should have been an actual assault upon defendant to reduce the grade to manslaughter (Mack v. State, 63 Ga. 693), but some other provocation equal to an assault, or an attempt to commit a serious personal injury, is sufficient (Murray v. State, 85 Ga. 378, 11 S. E. 655). This must be some injury greater than a provocation by mere words but less than a felony. Buchanan v. State, 24 Ga. 282. Thus where the deceased, after vainly trying to get a weapon, was approaching defendant to fight with him, the provocation was held adequate. Ray v. State, 15 Ga. 223. Under this statute the crime is only manslaughter if committed in a sudden violent heat of passion, occasioned by very great provocation and not from the promptings of an abandoned and malignant heart, although the deceased had made no assault upon defendant. The detection of defendant's wife in adultery with deceased would be an instance of such provocation. Stokes v. State, 18 Ga. 17. See supra, III, B, 2, d. (iv).

Under the Mississippi statute providing that "the unnecessary killing of another, while resisting an attempt to commit felony, or do some other unlawful act, or after such attempt has failed and been abandoned, shall be manslaughter and not murder," the "unlawful act" must be something other than the mutual combat in the course of which the killing occurs. There must be an attempt to commit or the actual commission of some other act by the party slain. Long v. State, 52 Miss. 23.

In Texas there may be causes of provocation adequate to reduce a homicide to manslaughter, other than those particularly specified in Pen. Code, art. 497. Johnson v. State, 43 Tex. 612; Brown v. State, 38 Tex. 482; Wadlington v. State, 19 Tex. App. 266; Guffee v. State, 8 Tex. App. 187; West v. State, 2 Tex. App. 460. And the adequacy of the cause may depend upon the passion produced rather than upon the degree of pain, notwithstanding that the statute declares that an assault causing pain and bloodshed shall be deemed adequate cause. Williams v. State, 15 Tex. App. 617; Rutherford v. State, 15 Tex. App. 236.

27. Clore v. State, 26 Tex. App. 624, 10 S. W. 242, holding that where there were knife-cuts in defendant's coat after the homicide, indicating that the deceased had tried to stab him, but defendant did not know of such attempts, he cannot claim that such attempts were sufficient provocation to reduce the homicide to manslaughter.

28. Finch v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 70 S. W. 207; Honeycutt v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 63 S. W. 639; Herrington v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 63 S. W. 562; Boyett v. State, 2 Tex. App. 93. The expression, "under the immediate influence of sudden passion," in the Texas statute means "that the provocation must arise at the time of the killing, and that the passion is not the result of a former provocation. The act causing death must be caused directly by the passion arising out of the provocation then attitude toward the deceased was such that provocation from the deceased would be apt to arouse passion.²⁹ Where a deliberate purpose to kill or to do great bodily harm is ascertained, and there is a consequent unlawful act of killing, the provocation, whatever it may be, which immediately precedes the act, is to be thrown out of the case, and goes for nothing, unless it can be shown that this purpose was abandoned before the act was done.³⁰ But where a homicide has been committed, and it appears that there was an old grudge between the parties, but at the time of the homicide there was a fresh and sudden provocation given by the deceased to defendant, the law presumes that the killing was caused by such fresh provocation and not due to the old grudge.³¹

f. By Whom Provocation Must Be Given. The rule is that the provocation must be given by the person who is killed, except in those cases in which the wrong person is killed by accident or mistake.³² But it will be only manslaughter, if while trying to kill the person from whom the provocation was received, defendant killed a third person, either by accident,³³ or because he mistook the third person for the man from whom the provocation was received.³⁴

g. Cooling Time. If, before the homicide was committed, defendant's passion had cooled, or if there was sufficient time between the provocation and the killing for his passion to cool, the killing will not be attributed to the heat of passion but to malice, and will be murder,³⁵ although defendant's passion did not actually given, and it is not enough that the mind is merely agitated by passion arising from some other or previous provocation." Tickle v. State, 6 Tex. App. 623, 641.

29. Miles v. State, 18 Tex. App. 156. Thus where defendant had been surrounded by his enemies, who were pursuing him, and the events of the day had been such as tended to excite the passions beyond control, although there was no attempt by the deceased to inflict serious personal injury upon defendant at the particular time when he was killed, yet the circumstances taken together may serve as adequate provocation. *Golden v. Under the Texas statute making the test whether the passion of a man of ordinary temper would have cooled, as at common law, the grade is not reduced, although defendant was a person of more than ordinary temper. Hurst v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 378, 46 S. W. 635, 50 S. W. 719. But under the statute making the crime manslaughter when defendant after hearing of the provocation kills the deceased at their first meeting, the length of time intervening is immaterial, as the statute makes the question of mitigation depend upon whether there actually was passion at the time of the killing in such cases, not whether the passion of an ordinary person would have cooled. Hudson v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 420, 66 S. W. 668; Crews v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. 533, 31 S. W. 373; Jones v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 492, 26 S. W. 1082, 47 Am. St. Rep. 46; Orman v. State, 24 Tex. App. 495, 6 S. W. 544.

It is not necessary that the malice of defendant be shown by some act of hostility other than the killing committed or threatened between the provocation and the killing. Savary v. State, 62 Nebr. 166, 87 N. W. 34. The exercise of thought, contrivance, and design in the mode of getting the weapon, and replacing it immediately after the killing (State v. Yarborough, 39 Kan. 581, 18 Pac. 474; Rex v. Hayward, 6 C. & P. 157, 25 E. C. L. 371), or a temporary diversion of defendant's mind to some other matter, or a reasonable time between the provocation and the killing (People v. Bush, 65 Cal. 129, 3 Pac. 590; Com. v. Aiello, 180 Pa. St. 597, 36 Atl. 1079; Com. v. Green, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 289), both indicate design and malice, rather than a killing in sudden heat. If defendant premeditated the killing, made careful preparations to take the life of the deceased, and after hunting him down deliberately slew him, no question as to "cooling time" can arise and the crime is not manslaughter. Perry v. State, 102 Ga. 365, 30 S. E. 903. See also State v. Harlan, 130 Mo. 381, 32 S. W. 997.

Intoxication does not effect the adequacy of cooling time, or of the provocation. State v. McCants, 1 Speers (S. C.) 384. See supra, I, C, 1, c, (III).

38. Ferguson v. State, 49 Ind. 33.

39. See State v. Moore, 69 N. C. 267; Small v. Com., 91 Pa. St. 304; Kilpatrick v. Com., 31 Pa. St. 198; State v. McCants, 1 Speers (S. C.) 384. If defendant had time to think, and did think, in a cool state of mind, after the provocation was received, the grade will not be reduced. Jarvis v. State, 138 Ala. 17, 34 So. 1025. An interval of three days (Rockmore v. State, 93 Ga. 123, 19 S. E. 32) or twenty-four hours (State v. Elliott, 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 332, 26 Cinc. L. Bul. 116) is sufficient. So a much shorter time, as where the deceased walked two hundred and twenty-five yards after the provocation (State v. McCants, 1 Speers (S. C.) 384), or where defendant went one hundred yards (Smith v. State, 103 Ala. 4, 15 So. 843), or two hundred and fifty yards (Hawkins v. State, 25 Ga. 207, 71 Am. Dec. 166), or was gone from five to fifteen minutes (People v. Kerrigan, 147 N. Y. 210, 41 N. E. 494), and cooling time is not to be determined with reference to the temperament of each particular defendant.⁴⁰

C. Involuntary Manslaughter—1. DEFINITION. Involuntary manslaughter is the killing of another without malice and unintentionally, but in doing some unlawful act not amounting to a felony nor naturally tending to cause death or great bodily harm, or in negligently doing some act lawful in itself, or by the negligent omission to perform a legal duty.⁴¹

2. INTENT AND MALICE. To constitute involuntary manslaughter the homicide must be unintentional,⁴² and there must not be malice, either express or implied.⁴³ Malice is implied and the homicide is murder rather than manslaughter, in the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁴⁴ if a deadly weapon was used in a manner likely to cause death or serious bodily harm, and did so cause death, although the slayer did not actually intend to kill.⁴⁵ And where defendant's acts were such in each case got a weapon, returned, and killed the deceased, the interval was held sufficient for passion to have cooled. But if the effects of the provocation continue through the interval, as where combatants were separated and a moment later resumed the fight (State v. Moore, 69 N. C. 267), or defendant was assaulted and pursued into his house where he armed himself and killed his assailant, the entire transaction occupying less than fifteen minutes (Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405), the time was, under the circumstances, held not sufficient. See also State v. Norris, 2 N. C. 429, 1 Am. Dec. 564.

Killing a person not intended.—One who fires a shot, knowing that he cannot do so without hitting an innocent person, or who fires a shot intending to hit one person and hits and kills another person, is guilty of a voluntary homicide, the grade of which is to be determined by the circumstances. *Ringer v. 44. Under the Ohio statute requiring specific intent to kill in the crime of murder, a homicide unintentionally committed, although with a deadly weapon, can be no more than manslaughter. Montgomery v. State, 11 Ohio 424.

Under the New York statute a killing with a deadly weapon or by other acts dangerous to life is murder if there is intent to kill or inflict serious bodily harm and is manslaughter if there is no such intent. People v. Hammill, 2 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 223. Therefore where the officers of a steamboat increased the fires, in racing with another boat to such a degree as to cause the burning of the boat, so that deaths ensued, it was held not to be murder, but manslaughter, there being no intent to kill or do bodily harm. People v. Westchester County, 1 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 659.

45. Georgia.—Stovall v. State, 106 Ga. 443, 32 S. E. 586 (voluntarily firing a loaded pistol at another without excuse, although the intent was to wound or cripple and not to kill); Boatwright v. State, 89 Ga. 140, 15 S. E. 21 (blow mortal in its nature wilfully inflicted with an instrument likely to cause death); Williams v. State, 57 Ga. 478 (correction of a child by his father with a weapon and in a manner likely to cause death, although there was no actual intent to kill); Brown v. State, 28 Ga. 199 (voluntarily beat-that he must have known that they were likely to cause death or serious bodily harm, so that his conduct indicated that he had a wicked, depraved, and malignant spirit, amounting to legal malice, although he did not use a deadly weapon, an unintentional killing caused by such acts is murder.⁴⁶ A homicide, as has been seen, is murder and not manslaughter, if committed while engaged in the commission of some other felony,⁴⁷ or perhaps in the commission of certain high misdemeanors.⁴⁸

3. UNLAWFUL ACT— a. In General. Except as just stated,⁴⁹ it is manslaughter at common law and under the statutes of most of the states⁵⁰ if one unintentionally kills another in doing an unlawful act,⁵¹ not amounting to a felony⁵² nor naturally dangerous to life,⁵³ at least if the unlawful act is a misdemeanor and not a mere civil wrong⁵⁴ and is malum in se and not merely malum prohibitum.⁵⁵ But the death must be due to the unlawful act of defendant and not to the intervening act or negligence of a third person.⁵⁶ In determining whether a homicide was committed by a person while engaged in the commission of a misdemeanor, while he must have had an intent to commit the act which constitutes the misdemeanor, it is not necessary that he shall have intended to violate the law.⁵⁷

b. Assault and Battery and Breaches of the Peace. In accordance with the rule that it is manslaughter to unintentionally kill another in doing an unlawful act, it is well settled that if one commits an assault and battery upon another not likely to cause death,⁵⁸ and death unintentionally results either to the person assaulted or to a bystander, it is manslaughter.⁵⁹ The rule applies to a death

North Carolina.—State v. Hall, 132 N. C. 1094, 44 S. E. 553 (where defendants were engaged in an assault or other unlawful act, and a death resulted from a gun which was discharged by another than defendants, from whom they were wresting the same, or accidentally discharged while in such other person's hands); State v. Craton, 28 N. C. 164 (death from a blow over the head with a pine stick).

Pennsylvania.—Com. v. Stoops, Add. 381 (where a husband caused his wife's death by throwing her in the fire during a quarrel while he was drunk); Com. v. Lewis, Add. 279; Com. v. Biron, 4 Dall. 125, 1 L. ed. 760 (where deceased was pushed down a stairway by defendant and killed by the fall).

Wisconsin.—Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 472, 15 N. W. 827, 46 Am. Rep. 41; Rowan v. State, 30 Wis. 129, 11 Am. Rep. 559. See infra, III, C, 5, a.

United States.—U. S. v. Bevans, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 14,589, holding that a sentry was guilty of manslaughter in unintentionally killing a person for using abusive language, if he intended only to strike the deceased with his bayonet or to prick him slightly.

England.—Reg. v. Canniff, 9 C. & P. 359, 38 E. C. L. 215; Reg. v. Towers, 12 Cox C. unintentionally caused by violence of an officer in making an unlawful arrest, or excessive violence in making an arrest otherwise lawful or in preventing an escape.⁶⁰ The same is true, according to some of the cases, of an unintentional homicide committed while engaged in a riot or unlawful assembly;⁶¹ and it is true of an unintentional homicide in an affray or unlawful fighting,⁶² including prize-fighting, where such a fight is unlawful,⁶³ or in any unlawful game or sport.⁶⁴ The rule also applies where death is unintentionally caused in the correction of a child, pupil, servant, or apprentice, if the correction is immoderate, but not mani-

Wild*, 2 Lew. C. C. 214 (holding that a kick is not a justifiable mode of turning a trespasser out of one's house, and therefore, if it causes death, it is manslaughter); Rex v. Ayes, R. & R. 124.

Violence not constituting an assault.—Death caused by violence merely in play and not likely to cause death or serious injury does not make an unintentional homicide manslaughter. Reg. v. Bruce, 2 Cox C. C. 262. In this case defendant while drunk went into a shop, and in a joke seized a boy around the neck and began spinning him around until they got together into the street. The boy having at length broken away, defendant, in consequence, staggered into the road and fell against a woman who was passing, knocking her down and causing her death. The boy made no resistance to defendant's treatment of him, recognizing that it was merely done in play. It was held that there was no evidence of manslaughter.

L. 167 (where it was charged that an officer has no right to kill a person accused of misdemeanor or breach of the peace, in order to prevent his escape when arresting him, and that if he does so accidentally in trying to frighten or disable him, he is guilty of manslaughter).

New York.—Beal's Case, 6 City Hall Rec. 59 (holding that where two agree to fight, and death ensues, the survivor is guilty of manslaughter); People v. Goodwin, 1 Wheel. Cr. 253, 5 City Hall Rec. 11, 6 City Hall Rec. 9 (holding that where defendant and the deceased were fighting, and a dagger gun with which defendant was beating the deceased became unsheathed and the dagger fell on the ground, and defendant, while still fighting and in no danger of great bodily harm, threw deceased, who fell upon the dagger and was killed, the act was manslaughter).

Pennsylvania.—Com. v. Biron, 4 Dall. 125, 1 L. ed. 769.

One who is present aiding and abetting an unlawful prize-fight is guilty of manslaughter if one of the fighters is killed by blows struck in the fight. Rex v. Murphy, 6 C. & P. 103, 25 E. C. L. 343. See also supra, I, C, 2, b.

64. Reg. v. Bradshaw, 14 Cox C. C. 83. It is manslaughter to inflict wounds in rude sport thereby causing death. State v. Lewis, Add. (Pa.) 279.

Foot-ball.—If, while engaged in a friendly foot-ball game, one of the players commits an unlawful act whereby death is caused to another, he is guilty of manslaughter. In such a case it is immaterial to consider whether the act which caused the death was in accordance with the rules and practice of the game. The act would be unlawful if the person committing it intended to produce serious injury to another, or if, committing an act which he knows may produce serious injury, he is indifferent and reckless as to the consequences. Reg. v. Bradshaw, 14 Cox C. C. 83.

Sparring match.—There is nothing unlawful in sparring, unless perhaps the men fight until they are so weak that a dangerous fall is likely to be the result of the continuance of the game. Therefore, except in the latter case, death caused by an injury received during a sparring match does not amount to manslaughter. Reg. v. Young, 10 Cox C. C. 371.

All struggles in anger, whether by fighting, wrestling, or any other mode, are unlawful, and death caused by them is manslaughter at least. Reg. v. Canniff, 9 C. & P. 359, 38 E. C. L. 215.

c. Other Unlawful Acts. The rule that the unintentional killing of another in doing an unlawful act is manslaughter has also been applied to unintentional homicide in unlawfully shooting, pointing or handling firearms;⁶⁶ or in using an instrument or administering a drug to produce an abortion, where such an offense is a misdemeanor only and is not committed under such circumstances as to naturally endanger life;⁶⁷ or in attempting to escape from lawful custody after an arrest;⁶⁸ or in placing an obstruction on a railroad, where there is no intent to wreck a train and the circumstances are not such that malice can be implied;⁶⁹ or, in some states, in an attempt to commit suicide.⁷⁰ The rule has also been

The fact that a specific punishment is prescribed by statute for the offense of producing an abortion does not prevent a homicide committed in producing an abortion from being punished as manslaughter. State v. Power, 24 Wash. 34, 63 Pac. 1112, 63 L. R. A. 902.

(Del.) 539, holding that where a party places an obstruction upon a railroad track with the intention of returning to a station and informing the conductor of an accommodation train thereof, thereby hoping to secure a position on the road as a reward, and contrary to his expectation an express train comes first, and, although he tries to stop it, an accident ensues and persons are killed, he is guilty of manslaughter. Ordinarily, however, this would be murder, since the act is generally likely to result in homicide. State v. Brown, supra. See also supra, III, C, 2, text and note 46.

Statute.—In Ohio, where by statute death resulting from obstructing a railroad track is made murder or manslaughter according to the nature of the offense, death resulting from such obstruction placed maliciously, but without danger to life, is manslaughter. *State v. applied to a homicide committed by one engaged in adultery with another's wife in defense of an attack by the husband, where adultery is a misdemeanor.⁷¹ If a man, in order to have unlawful sexual connection with a woman, uses artificial means, with her consent, to make such connection practicable, and by carelessness or negligence in the operation inflicts upon her a wound which causes her death, he is guilty of manslaughter, as is another person who assists him in such operation, knowing the purpose thereof.⁷²

d. Acts Merely Mala Prohibita. The rule that a homicide committed unintentionally in doing an unlawful act is manslaughter has in some cases been applied where the act is not malum in se, but merely malum prohibitum;⁷³ but other cases require that the unlawful act must be malum in se.⁷⁴

e. Mere Civil Wrongs. There is also a conflict of authority with respect to a homicide unintentionally caused by the commission of a mere civil wrong, some of the cases holding that such a homicide is manslaughter,⁷⁵ while others hold the contrary.⁷⁶

4. NEGLIGENCE—a. In General. A homicide is manslaughter, even though committed in doing an act lawful in itself, if defendant was guilty of gross or culpable negligence, and such negligence was the cause of the death.⁷⁷ But the

But to render one liable he must have been guilty of gross or culpable negligence by omission of a duty imposed upon him personally or by disobedience of rules or other like acts or omissions, and not of mere mistake or error of judgment, and the death must have been the result of such negligence, and not solely of the intervening negligence of some other person. State v. Gregory, 2 F. & F. 153.

Under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5344 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3629], providing that "every captain, engineer, pilot or other person employed on any steamboat or vessel, by whose misconduct, negligence, or inattention to his duties . . . the life of any person is destroyed . . . shall be deemed guilty of manslaughter," destruction of life is of the essence of the offense. In re Doig, 4 Fed. 193. It is not necessary to prove malice, provided negligence is proved and a violation of the navigation laws; nor need it be proved that such negligence or violation was wilful and intentional. U. S. v. Keller, 19 Fed. 633. The offense is complete when the misconduct, negligence, or inattention in the navigation of a vessel by one of the persons named results in the loss of human life, and an indictment under the statute need not charge a criminal intent. U. S. v. Holmes, 104 Fed. 884. See also In re Charge to Grand Jury, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,253, 1 Newb. Adm. 323. But it must be shown that there was "misconduct, negligence, or inattention" in such degree and of such a character as to have produced the result set forth in the indictment, irrespective of the intention of the person charged. U. S. v. Warner, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,643, 4 McLean 463. The officers, etc., are liable for any act or omission in not properly regulating the fires or amount of steam, or any neglect of duty likely to create danger, or in not taking proper precaution, where loss of life is caused thereby. The Henry Clay, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,375. While it is not primarily the duty of the master, under the statutes and inspectors' regulations, to equip a vessel with life-preservers or fire apparatus, it is his duty before navigating to exercise care to know whether the ship has such equipment, and whether it is apparently sufficient and in accordance with law, and afterward to exercise some care respecting its maintenance, the extent of such care being dependent on his opportunities to examine the appliance

the rule also applies, of course, to homicides resulting from negligence in the management of other vessels.⁹⁴

(iii) NEGLIGENCE OF PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, AND THE LIKE. A physician, surgeon, or other similar practitioner, or a person assuming to act as such, whether licensed or not, is guilty of manslaughter if he unintentionally causes the death of a patient by gross ignorance, negligence, or inattention;⁹⁵ but a mere mistake or error of judgment or a mere want of skill, where there is not gross negligence or ignorance, will not render him liable.⁹⁶ These rules also apply to and perceive its condition; other duties, relating to the posting of station bills for the crew, and their exercise in fire drill and the use of appliances, are imposed directly upon the master by rule 5, § 15, of the inspectors' rules and regulations; and his neglect of any of such duties, whereby the life of any person is destroyed, renders him subject to indictment and prosecution for manslaughter under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5344 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3629]. U. S. v. Van Schaick, 134 Fed. 592. Every person who assumes to perform the duties of any important officer on board a steamboat is guilty of manslaughter if loss of life occurs through his ignorance or negligence in respect of his duties. U. S. v. Taylor, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,441, 5 McLean 242. The statute is not restricted in its application to vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, as was the original statute, but the word "vessel" must be construed, in accordance with its definition given in U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 3 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 4], as including "every description of water craft, or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water." U. S. v. Holmes, 104 Fed. 884.

A pilot cannot be convicted under the clause of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5344 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3629] making "every owner, inspector, or other public officer, through whose fraud, connivance," etc., the life of any person is destroyed, guilty of manslaughter. U. S. v. Holtzhauer, 40 Fed. 76.

94. Boats.—Where a man is drowned by the upsetting of a boat the waterman in charge of it would be guilty if he was grossly careless in managing the boat or in taking on board in the first instance a greater number of passengers than it was capable of carrying safely. *Reg. v. Massachusetts.—Com. v. Thompson, 6 Mass. 134, holding that if one, assuming to be a physician, however ignorant of the medical art, administers to his patient remedies which result in his death, he is not guilty of manslaughter, unless he had so much knowledge or probable information of the fatal tendency of his prescriptions as to raise a presumption of obstinate, wilful rashness; but where such person has opportunity to know of the injurious effects of his remedies, and then administers them, it would be competent for the jury to find him guilty of manslaughter, even though he might not have intended any bodily harm to his patient.

Missouri.—Rice v. State, 8 Mo. 561, holding the same as Com. v. Thompson, supra.

England.—Reg. v. Macleod, 12 Cox C. C. 534; Reg. v. Spencer, 10 Cox C. C. 525; Reg. v. Chamberlain, 10 Cox C. C. 486 (herbalist administering arsenical ointment); *Rex v. negligence on the part of nurses and attendants in hospitals or asylums and other persons occupying like positions.⁹⁷

(IV) OMISSION TO PERFORM DUTY—(A) In General. Manslaughter may be committed by mere non-feasance. Wilful failure of a person to perform a legal duty, whereby the death of another is caused, is murder;⁹⁸ but if the omission was not wilful, but was the result of gross or culpable negligence, it is involuntary manslaughter.⁹⁹ The omission must have been due to gross or culpable negligence,¹ and the death must have resulted from the neglect of a plain legal duty imposed by law or contract upon defendant personally.² Defendant must have had knowledge of the facts imposing the duty to act or he must have been grossly negligent in not ascertaining the facts.³

(B) Particular Instances. The rule that it is manslaughter to cause death by grossly negligent omission to perform a legal duty has been applied, for example, to neglect of duty on the part of persons employed or engaged in the management or operation of railroads and tramways,⁴ steamboats and other vessels,⁵

a patient, occasioned by his treatment, unless his conduct is characterized either by gross ignorance of his art, or by gross inattention to his patient's safety); *Reg. v. L. 752 (holding that if a person, bona fide and honestly exercising his best skill to cure a patient performs an operation which causes the patient's death, he is not guilty of manslaughter; and it makes no difference whether such person is a regular surgeon or not, nor whether he has had a regular medical education or not); Reg. v. Bull, 2 F. & F. 201; Reg. v. Crick, 1 F. & F. 519 (holding that where a person, not a regular practitioner, administers lobelia, a dangerous medicine, which produces death, the question for the jury is, under all the circumstances, whether he has acted so rashly and carelessly as to cause the death); *Reg. v. 97. Attendants in an insane asylum, who, while attempting, pursuant to rules, to bathe an inmate, cause his death by using more force than necessary, with criminal carelessness, but without malice, are guilty of manslaughter. *State v. To render such a person liable to conviction for manslaughter through neglect of duty there must be such a degree of culpability in his conduct as to amount to gross negligence. *Reg. v. But where an English pilot on board a foreign vessel by his own negligence failed to make the foreign sailors understand his directions, he was held guilty of manslaughter if a boat was run down by the vessel and life was in consequence lost. *Reg. v. Kentucky.—Gibson v. Com., 106 Ky. 360, 50 S. W. 532, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1908, 90 Am. St. Rep. 230, abandonment and exposure of infant.

Cox C. C. 547; Rex v. Friend, R. & R. 15. But compare Reg. v. Knights, 2 F. & F. 46, holding that a woman who knows she is to be confined, and who wilfully abstains from taking the necessary precautions to preserve the life of the child after its birth, in consequence of which the child dies, is not guilty of manslaughter.

To render defendant guilty in such cases he must have been under a legal duty, imposed either by law or contract, to care for the deceased, and a mere moral obligation is not sufficient. Reg. v. Shepherd, 9 Cox C. C. 123, 8 Jur. N. S. 418, L. & C. 147, 31 L. J. M. C. 102, 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 687, 10 Wkly. L. 668 (holding that where one has not assumed the care of his idiot brother, although they live in the same house, he is not guilty of manslaughter in allowing him to die of want). But one who undertakes the care of an infant or other helpless person, although not related to him, is chargeable with the duty to care for him, within the rule. Reg. v. Instan, [1893] 1 Q. B. 450, 17 Cox C. C. 602, 57 J. P. 282, 62 L. J. M. C. 86, 68 L. T. Rep. N. S. 420, 5 Reports 248, 41 Wkly. Rep. 369; Reg. v. Nicholls, 13 Cox C. C. 75; Reg. v. Smith, 10 Cox C. C. 82, 11 Jur. N. It is also necessary that defendant shall have been guilty of gross negligence (Reg. v. Nicholls, 13 Cox C. C. 75); and he must have had the means or ability to furnish the shelter, food, or other necessities (Reg. v. Rugg, 12 Cox C. C. 16, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 192; Reg. v. Conde, 10 Cox C. C. 547; Reg. v. Hogan, 5 Cox C. C. 255, 2 Den. C. C. 277, 15 Jur. 805, 20 L. J. M. C. 219, T. & M. 601; Rex v. Saunders, 7 C. & P. 277, 32 E. C. L. 611); and the deceased must have been unable to help himself or herself (Reg. v. Smith, 10 Cox C. C. 82, 11 Jur. N. S. 695, L. & C. 607, 34 L. J. M. C. 153, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 608, 13 Wkly. Rep. 816; Reg. v. Shepherd, 9 Cox C. C. 123, 8 Jur. N. S. 418, L. & C. 147, 31 L. J. M. C. 102, 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 687, 10 Wkly. Rep. 297; Rex v. Friend, R. & R. 15).

Religious convictions against medical assistance.—It has been held that where, from a conscientious religious conviction that God would heal the sick, and not from any intention to avoid the performance of their duty, the parents of a sick child refuse to call in medical assistance, although well able to do so, and the child consequently dies, it is not culpable homicide. Reg. v. Wagstaffe, 10 Cox C. C. 530.

have been enacted expressly defining involuntary manslaughter. Some of these are merely declaratory of the common law, but others vary to a greater or less extent from the common law.⁸

b. "Negligent Homicide" Under Texas Statute. In Texas there is no such crime as "involuntary manslaughter" eo nomine, but the statute has substituted what is termed "negligent homicide."⁹ Negligent homicide in the first degree is the killing of another by negligence and carelessness in the performance of a lawful act,¹⁰ such an act being defined as one not forbidden by the penal law and which would not give just occasion for a civil action,¹¹ it being required that there must be apparent danger of causing the death of the person killed or some other person,¹² and the degree of care and caution required to prevent one from being guilty of such homicide being defined as such as a man of ordinary prudence would use under like circumstances.¹³ The statute expressly enumerates certain examples.¹⁴ Negligent homicide in the second degree, which is made subject to the provisions with respect to such homicide in the first degree, except as otherwise provided,¹⁵ is the killing of another in the act of committing or attempting an unlawful act;¹⁶ an "unlawful act" being defined as an act constituting a mis-

8. In Arkansas a statute provides that the killing of a human being, without design to effect death, in the heat of passion, but in a cruel and unusual manner, unless under circumstances that would constitute excusable or justifiable homicide, shall be adjudged manslaughter. Sand. & H. Dig. § 1660. This statute is not applicable to a killing with a pistol, as such a manner of killing is not cruel or unusual. Tanks v. State, 71 Ark. 459, 75 S. W. 851.

In Missouri there is a like statute. Mo. Rev. St. (1899) § 1826. The words "in the heat of passion," in this statute, mean any heat of passion recognized by law, whether produced by a just cause of provocation, or a lawful, adequate, or reasonable cause. State v. Berkley, 109 Mo. 665, 19 S. W. 192.

In Ohio to convict one of manslaughter on the ground that the deceased was killed while defendant was in the commission of an unlawful act, it must appear that the alleged unlawful act was a breach of some penal statute of the state; and it is not sufficient to show that such act was a crime or offense at common law. Johnson v. State, 66 Ohio St. 59, 63 N. E. 607, 90 Am. St. Rep. 564, 61 L. R. A. 277; Weller v. State, 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. 166, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 381. Nor is it sufficient to show that the act was one of gross or culpable negligence. Johnson v. State, 66 Ohio St. 59, 63 N. E. 607, 90 Am. St. Rep. 564, 61 L. R. A. 277, death of boy from riding a bicycle at a high rate of speed. One who unintentionally shoots another by discharging firearms on his own premises is not thereby guilty of manslaughter. Martin v. State, 70 Ohio St. 219, 71 N. E. 640. Death resulting from obstructing a railroad track is made murder or manslaughter according to the nature of the offense; and death resulting from such obstruction placed maliciously, but without danger to life, is held to be manslaughter. State v. Brooks, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 407, 9 West. L. J. 100.

In Wisconsin see Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 472, 15 N. W. 827, 46 Am. Rep. 41; Rowan v. State, 30 Wis. 129, 11 Am. Rep. 559.

13. Tex. Pen. Code, art. 687. See Morris v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 313, 33 S. W. 539; Bertroug v. State, 2 Tex. App. 160, holding that where the evidence shows that defendant shot and killed deceased, that he had no intent to kill him, and that deceased was at the time of the shooting in open view of the defendant, so that by the exercise of due care defendant could have ascertained before shooting that it was deceased, he was guilty of negligent homicide in the first degree.

An omission to act is not negligence or carelessness rendering one liable unless there was a special duty resting on defendant. Anderson v. State, 27 Tex. App. 177, 11 S. W. 33, 11 Am. St. Rep. 189, 3 L. R. A. 644, brakeman not liable for negligence in operation of train.

Code, art. 688, giving as examples the throwing of timbers from a house in a public street or highway, or where a number of persons are known to be around the house, or discharging firearms on or near a public highway, other than a street in a town or city, in such a manner as would be likely to injure passers-by.

15. Tex. Pen. Code, art. 692.

16. Tex. Pen. Code, art. 693. See Brittain v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 406, 37 S. W. 758; Richards v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 38, 30 S. W. 805; Robins v. State, 9 Tex. App. 666, 671. Three elements concur to constitute negligent homicide of the second degree: (1) The killdemeanor or giving just occasion for a civil action,¹⁷ and killing in committing or attempting a felony being expressly excluded.¹⁸ To constitute homicide by negligence, in either the first or second degree, there must be no apparent intention to kill,¹⁹ and the homicide must be the consequence of the act done or attempted to be done.²⁰

D. Degrees of Manslaughter²¹—1. FIRST AND SECOND DEGREES. In a number of states manslaughter, like murder,²² has been divided by statute into two or more degrees, according to the circumstances under which it was committed, the statutes varying in the different states. Thus there are statutes making manslaughter when voluntary, manslaughter in the first degree, and when involuntary, manslaughter in the second degree.²³ Other statutes make it manslaughter in the first degree where the killing is, without a design to effect death, by the act, procurement, or culpable negligence of another, while such other is engaged in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any crime or misdemeanor not amounting to a felony; in cases where such killing would be murder at common law;²⁴ where a homicide is committed without a design to effect death, in ing must have occurred in the performance of an illegal act. (2) There must have been an apparent danger of causing the death of the person killed or some other. (3) There must have been no apparent intention to kill, and the homicide must have been the consequence of the act done or attempted to be done. Howard v. State, 25 Tex. App. 686, 8 S. W. 929.

17. Tex. Pen. Code, art. 694. See Lax v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 65 S. W. 88 (causing death by throwing stick at another); Reddick v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 47 S. W. 993 (firing pistol toward another merely to scare him); Brittain v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 406, 37 S. W. 758 (homicide by accidental discharge of pistol which was carried on the person in violation of a penal statute); Howard v. State, 25 Tex. App. 686, 8 S. W. 929 (unintentional killing by discharge of pistol).

18. Tex. Pen. Code, art. 695. See Richards v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 38, 30 S. W. 805; Clark v. State, 19 Tex. App. 495.

21. Negligent homicide under Texas statute see supra, III, C, 5, b.

23. See Dennis v. State, 112 Ala. 64, 20 So. 925. Under Ala. Code, § 4301, defining manslaughter in the first degree as manslaughter by voluntarily taking life, there must be either a positive intention to kill, or an act of violence from which ordinarily in the usual course of events death or great bodily harm may result. Harrington v. State, 83 Ala. 9, 3 So. 425. If one intentionally does an act calculated to take life, and death is unintentionally produced, the homicide is manslaughter in the first degree. Lewis v. State, 96 Ala. 6, 11 So. 259, 38 Am. St. Rep. 75. See also Thayer v. State, 138

Ala. 39, 35 So. 406; White v. State, 84 Ala. 421, 4 So. 598; McManus v. State, 36 Ala. 285. Death caused by a blow intentionally given with a deadly instrument, unless shown to have been given in self-defense, can never be less than manslaughter in the first degree. Collier v. State, 69 Ala. 247. See also Ferguson v. State, 134 Ala. 63, 32 So. 760, 92 Am. St. Rep. 17. And death caused by striking one with a deadly weapon unlawfully aimed at another, without legal excuse, cannot be less than manslaughter in the first degree, and may be murder. Wills v. State, 74 Ala. 21.

Provocation.—If an act amounting to manslaughter be voluntarily committed, the statute, without regard to the circumstances of provocation, fixes the grade of the offense, and pronounces it manslaughter in the first degree. Oliver v. State, 17 Ala. 587.

Unlawful and without malice.—Manslaughter in the first degree is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice; that is, as the unpremeditated result of passion-heated blood caused by a sudden sufficient provocation. Thomas v. State, 139 Ala. 80, 36 So. 734. A charge that "manslaughter in the first degree is the voluntary depriving a human being of life" is erroneous, in that it omits the important qualifying clauses, "unlawful" and "without malice." Hornsby v. State, 94 Ala. 55, 10 So. 522.

Second degree.—Where the evidence in a trial for murder shows that the killing was voluntary and intentional, a request to charge that defendant might be found guilty of manslaughter in the second degree is properly refused. King v. State, 71 Ala. 1. Negligence is an element of manslaughter in the second degree only when the act causing death is not per se unlawful, but is negligently done. Hence it does not enter into the offense of shooting another with a pistol without malice or intent to kill. Benjamin v. State, 121 Ala. 26, 25 So. 917.

24. See State v. Blunt, 91 Mo. 503, 4 S. W. 394; State v. Sloan, 47 Mo. 604; People v. Martin, 33 N. Y. App. Div. 282, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 745. It was at first held in New York the heat of passion, by means of a dangerous weapon or in a cruel or unusual manner;²⁵ or where one deliberately assists another in committing suicide.²⁶ In some states homicide in producing or attempting to produce an abortion is manslaughter in the first or second degree.²⁷ Some statutes make it manslaughter in the second degree, where the killing is without a design to effect death, in a heat of passion, but in a cruel or unusual manner;²⁵ where it is committed in com-that a case is not within this statute as manslaughter in the first degree unless defendant was engaged in committing or attempting a crime or misdemeanor other than the act which caused the death, and that the statute therefore does not apply to a homicide unintentionally caused in committing an assault and battery on the deceased. People v. Rector, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 569. And see People v. Skeelvan, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 217; People v. Butler, 3 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 377. This construction was also placed upon such a statute in Missouri, the court following the New York cases above cited. State v. Downs, 91 Mo. 19, 3 S. W. 219; State v. Sloan, 47 Mo. 604. The New York cases, however, have been overruled, and it is now held in that state as well as in other states that such a statute includes assault and battery as one of the acts in the commission of which a person, if he kills, is guilty of manslaughter in the first degree. State v. Spendlove, 47 Kan. 160, 28 Pac. 994; People v. McKeon, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 449 [citing Buel v. People, 78 N. Y. 492, 34 Am. Rep. 555]; Boyle v. State, 57 Wis. 472, 15 N. W. 827, 46 Am. Rep. 41; Rowan v. State, 30 Wis. 129, 11 Am. Rep. 559. By the very terms of the statute the killing of a human being, without a design to effect death, by one engaged in perpetrating a crime or misdemeanor not amounting to felony, does not constitute manslaughter in the first degree in any case except where such killing would be murder at common law. Rowan v. State, 30 Wis. 129, 11 Am. Rep. 559. Where a homicide occurs during the commission of assault and battery on deceased without design to effect death, under such circumstances that the killing would have been murder at common law, the fact that one of defendant's companions in the affray stabbed deceased in a vital part of the body will not prevent a conviction of manslaughter in the first degree instead of murder. Hayes v. State, 112 Wis. 304, 87 N. W. 1076.

25. See People v. Webster, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 11, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 634. Under such a statute a conviction may properly be had on testimony that deceased and defendant had a struggle on the sidewalk; that deceased had hold of defendant, and struck him, without having any weapon; and that defendant returned the blows by shooting deceased. People v. Kennedy, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 267. Compare, under the earlier statute, People v. Pearce, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 76.

26. State v. Ludwig, 70 Mo. 412.

27. In New York it is manslaughter in the first degree for a person to wilfully kill an unborn quick child by an injury committed upon the person of the mother, or to cause the death of the mother or of a quick child by supplying, administering, or prescribing, etc., any drug, etc., or using an instrument or other means with intent to procure a miscarriage, unless the same is necessary to preserve the woman's life. N. Y. Pen. Code, §§ 190, 191. See Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 86; Lohman v. People, 1 N. Y. 379, 49 Am. Dec. 340; People v. McGonegal, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 147. And it is manslaughter in the second degree for a woman quick with child to take, use, or submit to the use of any drug, instrument, etc., with intent to produce her miscarriage, unless necessary to preserve her life, or the life of the child, and thereby cause the death of the child. N. Y. Pen. Code, § 194. The wilful killing of an unborn child is not manslaughter, except as rendered so by statute, or when (the child being quick) its death is caused by an injury to the mother which would be murder in case of her death. Laws (1869), c. 631, makes it manslaughter in the second degree to cause the death of the child, in an attempt to procure a miscarriage, provided the child has quickened; and this must be alleged in the indictment and proved on the trial. Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 86.

In Wisconsin the offense of using instruments upon or administering drugs to a pregnant woman, with her consent, for the purpose of producing an abortion, is manslaughter in the second degree, if the woman's death is caused thereby, although at the common law it was murder. State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 299. Under the statute making it manslaughter in the second degree, in case of the death of either child or mother, to employ any instrument or other means with intent to destroy a child in the womb of its mother, unless the operation is necessary to preserve the life of the mother, or has been advised by two physicians to be necessary for that purpose, the fact that one of the defendants, who was a physician, thought that the operation was necessary to save the life of the mother, is no defense to an indictment where the evidence shows that it was in fact unnecessary. Hatchard v. State, 79 Wis. 357, 48 N. W. 380.

The burden is on defendant to show that the act was necessary to save the woman's life. People v. McGonegal, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 147.

28. Under such a statute, where, on trial for murder, the evidence shows that the fatal blow was struck by defendant in the heat of passion, in the course of an altercation between him and the deceased, refusal to charge the jury as to manslaughter in the second degree is error. State v. Gassert, 65 Mo. 352 [reversing 4 Mo. App. 44]. But where, on a trial for murder, the evidence showed that mitting or attempting to commit a trespass or other invasion of a private right, either of the person killed or of another, not amounting to a crime;²⁹ where it is committed by any act, procurement, or culpable negligence not constituting murder or manslaughter in the first degree;³⁰ or where it is unnecessarily committed while resisting an attempt by deceased to commit any felony, or to do any other unlawful act, or after such attempt has failed.³¹

2. THIRD DEGREE. There are statutes in some states making it manslaughter in the third degree, in the absence of justification or excuse, to kill another in the heat of passion, without a design to effect death, by a dangerous weapon;³² defendant and deceased had a quarrel, and that deceased was advancing on defendant in a threatening manner, with a stone in his hand, when defendant shot him, it was held that an instruction on manslaughter in the second degree, based on the theory that the killing was without design to effect death, "but in a cruel or unusual manner," was improper, but that an instruction on manslaughter in the fourth degree should have been given. State v. Stiltz, 97 Mo. 20, 10 S. W. 614.

29. N. Y. Pen. Code, § 193.

30. N. Y. Pen. Code, § 193. See People v. Welch, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 474, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 694 [affirmed in 141 N. Y. 266, 36 N. E. 328, 38 Am. St. Rep. 793, 24 L. R. A. 117], negligence of pilot in charge of a steam tug. Where a policeman, with nothing to show that he was such, at night calls on a passer-by to stop, and, when the latter starts to run, shoots him, he is guilty of manslaughter in the second degree. People v. McCarthy, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 491. Under Okla. St. (1893) § 2090, every killing of a human being by culpable negligence which under the chapter on homicide is not murder or manslaughter in the first degree, or excusable or justifiable homicide, is manslaughter in the second degree. Barker v. Territory, (Okla. 1904) 78 Pac. 81.

31. Under this statute it was held that where deceased was resisting defendant, an officer legally authorized to arrest him, he was doing an unlawful act, and defendant was guilty of no crime if he shot him necessarily; but, if unnecessarily, he was guilty of manslaughter in the second degree. Doherty v. State, 84 Wis. 152, 53 N. W. 1120. Compare, however, State v. Rose, 142 Mo. 418, 44 S. W. 329, referred to infra, note 35. To bring a case within this statute there must be evidence that the homicide was unnecessarily committed. Perugi v. State, 104 Wis. 230, 80 N. W. 593, 76 Am. St. Rep. 865. Such statute does not apply where defendant, in resisting what was claimed to be a civil trespass on his land or cattle, or both, struck deceased on the head and neck with an ax, thereby causing his death, there being no pretense that the weapon was used without a design to cause death. State v. Hoyt, 13 Minn. 132. If A intentionally kills B while resisting an assault by B, the offense is not manslaughter in the second degree, although a statute defines manslaughter in the second degree to be the unnecessary killing of another while resisting an attempt by such other person to commit a felony, or do some other unlawful act after such attempt shall have failed. State v. Edwards, 70 Mo. 480.

32. See Andrews v. State, 21 Fla. 598; State v. Talmage, 107 Mo. 543, 17 S. W. 990; State v. McKinzie, 102 Mo. 620, 15 S. W. 149; State v. Wilson, 98 Mo. 440, 11 S. W. 985; State v. Elliott, 98 Mo. 150, 11 S. W. 566; People v. Schryver, 42 N. Y. 1, 1 Am. Rep. 480; Terrill v. State, 95 Wis. 276, 70 N. W. 356; Perkins v. State, 78 Wis. 551, 47 N. W. 827. Such a statute does not apply where a defendant testifies that he was not angry at deceased, and had no hard feelings toward him on the night he killed him, as it only applies in case of killing in the heat of passion. Perugi v. State, 104 Wis. 230, 80 N. W. 593, 76 Am. St. Rep. 865. It applies where it appears that defendant and deceased engaged in a sudden quarrel, when defendant, who had a hoe in his hand, with which he had been working when the quarrel began, turned it round and struck deceased with the handle, instead of the blade, and deceased, at the time, had a shovel in his hand. State v. Wilson, 98 Mo. 440, 11 S. W. 985. There can be no such thing as manslaughter in the third degree when the homicide is intentional. State v. Robertson, 178 Mo. 496, 77 S. W. 528; State v. Edwards, 70 Mo. 480. The statute does not apply therefore where it appears that defendant was attacked by deceased, who accused him of having lied about him, and that defendant, being knocked over against a window and repeatedly struck, drew a dirk knife, and stabbed deceased twice, one of the wounds proving fatal. State v. Watson, 95 Mo. 411, 8 S. W. 383. Defendant could not be convicted of manslaughter in the third degree where the proof showed that he shot deceased either in self-defense or with intent to kill, and there was no pretense that he shot "without a design to effect death." State v. Pettit, 119 Mo. 410, 24 S. W. 1014. An instruction, under Mo. Rev. St. (1889) § 3471, declaring the killing of another in a heat of passion "without a design to effect death," to be manslaughter in the third degree, is not called for, where defendant, worsted in a quarrel of his own seeking, in which he was the manifest aggressor, rose with the exclamation, "I will fix him anyhow!" went to his house, got a revolver, returned making threats, shot toward the window from which he heard deceased promise his mother he would not fight, and, on hearing a scream, exclaimed, "I got him anyhow," and, when or where the homicide is involuntarily committed by the act or culpable negligence of another while engaged in committing or attempting a trespass or other injury to private rights or property.³³

3. FOURTH DEGREE. There are statutes making it manslaughter in the fourth degree where the killing is involuntary, by any weapon or means neither cruel nor unusual, in the heat of passion, in cases other than such as are declared justifiable or excusable.³⁴ Under some statutes manslaughter in the fourth degree includes every other killing of a human being by the act, procurement, or culpable negligence of another, which would be manslaughter at common law, and which is not justifiable or excusable, or elsewhere declared to be manslaughter in some other degree.³⁵

IV. ATTEMPTS AND SOLICITATION.

A. Attempts—1. IN GENERAL. The common-law doctrine that an attempt to commit any felony is a misdemeanor applies of course to an attempt to murder taken to his bed, said he was sorry he had not killed him. State v. Barutio, 148 Mo. 249, 49 S. W. 1004. A charge that if accused intentionally and feloniously struck deceased with a dangerous weapon, in the heat of passion, without design to effect his death, so that he died, he was guilty of manslaughter in the third degree, unless the killing was justifiable, correctly defined manslaughter in the third degree. State v. Lane, 158 Mo. 572, 59 S. W. 965.

33. See State v. Nash, 63 Kan. 879, 64 Pac. 1025.

34. See State v. Hermann, 117 Mo. 629, 23 S. W. 1071; State v. Elliott, 98 Mo. 150, 11 S. W. 566; State v. Jones, 79 Mo. 441; Terrill v. State, 95 Wis. 276, 70 N. W. 356. Such statute only applies to a killing in the heat of passion. Perugi v. State, 104 Wis. 230, 80 N. W. 593, 76 Am. St. Rep. 865, referred to supra, note 32. Where defendant, on the night of the first difficulty between himself and deceased, and two weeks before the last difficulty, made threats of revenge, repeated at least twice afterward, and down almost to the night of the crime, and on that night refused to loan his pistol, saying that he "might want to use it" himself, it was held not error to refuse to instruct the jury as to manslaughter in the fourth degree. State v. Dettmer, 124 Mo. 426, 27 S. W. 1117. And the involuntary killing must be without a cruel or unusual weapon, and without any cruel or unusual means. Keenan v. State, 8 Wis. 132. As the jury might consider a hoe handle not a dangerous weapon, they should be instructed on manslaughter in the fourth degree, which is "the involuntary killing of another by a weapon, or by means neither cruel nor unusual, in the heat of passion." State v. Wilson, 98 Mo. 440, 11 S. W. 985. The homicide must be unintentional. State v. Edwards, 70 Mo. 480. A conviction under such a statute is warranted where deceased applied an opprobrious epithet to defendant, who was standing behind the bar of his saloon, and defendant then started for deceased, when they clinched, and deceased got his arm around defendant's neck, and beat him in the face, or on the head, with the fist of his other hand, and after struggling in this position for a while, defendant pulled his revolver from his breast pocket, held it close to deceased, and, without taking aim, fired the fatal shot, defendant testifying that when he shot he was strangled and nearly insensible. Schleet v. State, 75 Wis. 486, 44 N. W. 509. But where, in a prosecution for homicide, the state contended that defendant either struck deceased with a lamp intentionally, or struck the lamp with his cane intentionally, and thus caused a fire, which resulted in deceased's death, while defendant contended that he hit the lamp accidentally when throwing up his hands, under the belief that deceased was throwing the lamp at him, it was held that the court was justified in refusing to charge on manslaughter in the fourth degree under such a statute. Bliss v. State, 117 Wis. 596, 94 N. W. 325.

35. See State v. Hermann, 117 Mo. 629, 23 S. W. 1071; State v. Jones, 79 Mo. 441; Bliss v. State, 117 Wis. 596, 94 N. W. 325. Such provision has been held to apply where a police officer shot deceased while resisting arrest, and used more force than was reasonably necessary to accomplish the arrest, or where, immediately after deceased ceased to resist, the officer, in the heat of passion, engendered by deceased's striking him, shot him intentionally, but without malice. State v. Rose, 142 Mo. 418, 44 S. W. 329. The unintentional killing of a person through the negligent handling of a pistol in a way indicating reckless disregard of human life is manslaughter in the fourth degree. State v. Grote, 109 Mo. 345, 19 S. W. 93. One who brandishes a loaded and self-cocking revolver in a room where there are other persons, and accidentally kills one of them, is guilty of manslaughter in the fourth degree as it indicates carelessness or recklessness incompatible with a proper regard for human life. State v. Emery, 78 Mo. 77, 47 Am. Rep. 92. See also State v. Morrison, 104 Mo. 638, 16 S. W. 492. The fact that it could not reasonably have occurred to defendant, or did not occur to him, that the death of deceased was a reasonable or probable result of blows inflicted by him, does not prevent a conviction of manslaughter in the fourth degree. Baker v. State, 30 Fla. 41, 11 So. 492.

2. ELEMENTS OF ATTEMPT.³⁷ To constitute an attempt to murder there must be a specific intent to kill,³⁸ and the attempt must have been made with such intent or under such circumstances that, if consummated, the homicide would have been murder, or murder of the particular degree charged to have been attempted.³⁹ It is also necessary that there shall be an overt act, as distinguished from mere threats or preparation, in pursuance of such intent,⁴⁰ and a present ability or, according

B. Solicitation. According to the weight of authority merely to solicit another to commit murder is not an attempt to murder, as there is no overt act,⁴² but such solicitation is in itself a misdemeanor at common law.⁴³ In some jurisdictions it is punished by statute.⁴⁴

V. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO MURDER OR KILL.

A. Assault With Intent to Murder—1. DEFINITION AND NATURE OF OFFENSE. An intentional attempt by violence, with present ability, or in some jurisdictions

Poison.—The mere procuring of poison and delivering of the same to a person and soliciting him to place it in the spring or drink of a certain party is not an attempt to administer poison. Stabler v. Com., 95 Pa. St. 318, 40 Am. Rep. 653; Hicks v. Com., 86 Va. 223, 9 S. E. 1024, 19 Am. St. Rep. 891; Reg. v. Williams, 1 C. & K. 589, 1 Den. C. C. 39, 47 E. C. L. 589. But putting poison at a place where it is likely to be found and taken with intent to murder is such an attempt. Reg. v. Dale, 6 Cox C. C. 14.

"Administering" poison within the meaning of a statute requires that the poison be taken into the stomach. Rex v. Cadman, Car. C. L. 237, 1 Moody C. C. 114. Where one puts poison in food or drink that another may take it, which the other does, this is causing the poison to be taken. Rex v. Harley, 4 C. & P. 369, 19 E. C. L. 558.

Attempt "by means not constituting an assault."—A person who places a string, with an explosive bomb attached to it, across a driveway, with the intent that some person, by driving over it, shall explode the bomb, and be killed thereby, is guilty under Wis. Rev. St. § 4374, providing that "any person who shall attempt to commit the crime of murder by poisoning, drowning, or strangling another person, or by any means not constituting an assault with intent to murder, shall be punished," etc. *Jambor v. a certain person is lying, is guilty of an attempt to murder, although the party whose life it is intended to take is not in fact where the person firing the pistol believes him to be.

44. See Reg. v. Fox, 19 Wkly. Rep. 109, holding that writing and posting a letter addressed to another, soliciting him to commit murder, is not within such a statute, where the letter falls into the hands of a third person and never reaches the person to whom it is addressed.

Publication in newspaper.—Encouraging or endeavoring to persuade a person to murder, punished by a statute (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, § 4) may be committed by publication of an article in a newspaper with intent that it shall have such effect. Reg. v. Most, 7 Q. B. D. 244, 14 Cox C. C. 583, 45 J. P. 696, 50 L. J. M. C. 113, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 823, apparent ability, and without legal excuse or provocation, to do an injury to the person of another, accompanied by facts and circumstances indicative of an intent to take life, constitutes the offense of assault with intent to murder.⁴⁵ An attempt to commit murder and an assault with intent to murder are substantially the same.⁴⁶ But there is no such offense as an attempt to commit an assault with intent to murder.⁴⁷

2. WHETHER A MISDEMEANOR OR A FELONY. An assault with intent to murder is a high crime and misdemeanor at common law,⁴⁸ but in many states it is made a felony by statute.⁴⁹ The fact, however, that it is converted into a felony by statute does not by any means make it a statutory offense. The elements of the crime remain the same notwithstanding its atrocity has been increased.⁵⁰

3. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE — a. Attempt or Overt Act. Referring to the definition given above,⁵¹ it will be seen that the first element of the offense of assault with intent to murder is the attempt,⁵² and for this it is necessary that there shall be, in addition to the requisite intent, an overt act in pursuance of such intent, as distinguished from the mere intent and also from mere threats, however violent and abusive, or mere preparations not going far enough to constitute an attempt.⁵³ But to constitute a felonious assault with a gun or pistol, the pistol

Bernard*, 125 Mich. 550, 84 N. W. 1092, 65 L. R. A. 559. A charge that "an assault becomes and is an assault with intent to murder when it is committed with a deadly weapon and with intent to kill the person assaulted, done unlawfully and intentionally and with malice aforethought, and under such circumstances that, had death resulted therefrom to the person assaulted, the killing would be murder," is sufficiently explicit, and correctly defines an assault with intent to murder. Alvarez v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 58 S. W. 1013. See also Wagner v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 255, 33 S. W. 124. Compare Ponton v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 597, 34 S. W. 950.

Secret assault.—To constitute a secret and malicious assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, under Laws (1887), c. 32, the assault need not be made in such a manner as tends to conceal from the public the identity of the assailant; but it is sufficient if it is maliciously made, with a deadly weapon, with intent to kill, and in such a manner as to prevent the person assailed from seeing the assailant or repelling the attack. State v. Jennings, 104 N. C. 774, 10 S. E. 249. One who stands facing another, or walks up in front of him, and, drawing a pistol from his hip pocket, shoots him without warning, does not commit the offense defined by N. C. Acts (1887), c. 32, § 1, providing that any person who shall maliciously commit an assault and battery with any deadly weapon upon another, by waylaying or otherwise, in a secret manner, with intent to kill such other person, shall be guilty of a felony. State v. Patton, 115 N. C. 753, 20 S. E. 538. The statute includes, in addition to those accompanied by waylaying, every other assault committed in a secret manner. State v. Shade, 115 N. C. 757, 20 S. E. 537. To constitute the statutory secret assault with intent to kill, the person assaulted must have been unconscious of the presence as well as of the purpose of his adversary. State v. King, 120 N. Attempt to murder see supra, IV, A.

53. Davis v. State, 25 Fla. 272, 5 So. 803 (holding that a conviction of assault with intent to murder was not sustained by evidence that defendant presented his gun within carrying distance, where it did not appear that he fired the gun, or attempted to fire, or that the gun was loaded); Burton v. State, 109 Ga. 134, 34 S. E. 286 (holding that one cannot be convicted of assault with intent to murder, alleged to have been com-need not be discharged, if there is an intent to kill,⁵⁴ and actual injury is not necessary.⁵⁵

b. Present Ability to Kill. It has been said, and sometimes held, that it is essential that the accused shall have had, at the time of the act, the ability to inflict the injury which he is charged with attempting.⁵⁶ According to other decisions, however, it is sufficient if there was an apparent ability to inflict the injury, although, for some reason unknown to the accused, the injury could not be inflicted in the manner attempted.⁵⁷ In some states statutes defining an assault mitted with a pistol, on proof that he drew the weapon from his hip pocket, but, because of its being caught in the lining of his coat, did not make any actual attempt to inflict with the pistol an injury on the person alleged to have been assaulted; Mulligan v. People, 5 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 105 (holding that the pointing of an uncocked revolver at a person was not an attempt to discharge the weapon, within the meaning of a statute punishing an attempt to discharge any kind of firearms with intent to kill); Evans v. State, 1 Humphr. (Tenn.) 394 (holding that where defendant, after threatening another's life, went to his house in the night and called for him, but, on being recognized, fled, there was no assault with intent to murder). See also Lawson v. State, 30 Ala. 14 (drawing of pistol without presenting or cocking it not an assault); People v. Lilley, 43 Mich. 521, 5 N. W. 982 (holding that where an act is done with intent to commit an assault with intent to kill, but the intent is voluntarily abandoned, or is prevented while the distance between the parties is too great to permit an actual assault, there can be no conviction as for an assault); Reg. v. Brown, 10 Q. B. D. 381, 15 Cox C. C. 199, 47 J. P. 327, 52 L. J. M. C. 49, 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 270, 31 Wkly. Rep. 460. 56. Alabama.—Chapman v. State, 78 Ala. 463, 56 Am. Rep. 42, presenting unloaded gun within shooting distance not an assault. Compare the cases cited in the note following.

Indiana.—State v. Swails, 8 Ind. 524, 65 Am. Dec. 772. Compare State v. Kunkle, 32 Ind. 220, referred to in the note following.

Michigan.—People v. Lilley, 43 Mich. 521, 5 N. W. 982.

Mississippi.—Vaughan v. State, 3 Sm. & M. 553. Defendant was held not guilty of shooting with intent to kill D, where, when he shot, he did not and could not see him, a horse being between them. Lott v. State, 83 Miss. 609, 36 So. 11.

Nevada.—State v. Marks, 15 Nev. 33; State v. Napper, 6 Nev. 113, attempt to discharge unloaded pistol.

Ohio.—Fastbinder v. State, 42 Ohio St. 341.

Oregon.—State v. Godfrey, 17 Oreg. 300, 20 Pac. 625, 11 Am. St. Rep. 830, pointing unloaded gun.

Texas.—Smith v. State, 32 Tex. 593; Robinson v. State, 31 Tex. 170; Jarnigan v. State, 6 Tex. App. 465. It is otherwise under the later statute. See Kief v. State, 10 Tex. App. 286.

England.—Reg. v. Gamble, 10 Cox C. C. 545 (attempt to shoot with unprimed pistol); Rex v. Lovel, 2 M. & Rob. 39 (holding that the fact of firing a gun into a room of A's house, with intent to shoot A, the prisoner supposing him to be in the room, would not support a charge of shooting at A, if he was not shown to be in the room, or within reach of the shot).

Attempt to discharge loaded firearms.—In order to constitute the offense of attempting to discharge loaded firearms, within 43 Geo. III, c. 58, they must have been so loaded as to be capable of doing the mischief intended. Whitley's Case, 1 Lew. C. C. 123; Rex v. Carr, R. & R. 280. Where on an indictment under this statute for maliciously shooting at a person, it appeared that the instrument was fired so near, and in such a direction, as to be likely to kill or do other grievous bodily harm to such person, and with an intent that it should do so, the ease was held to be within the act, although the instrument was loaded with powder and paper only. Rex v. Kitchen, R. & R. 71. But where, although a pistol was loaded with gunpowder and ball, its touch-hole was plugged, so that it could not by possibility be fired, this was held not to be loaded arms, within 9 Geo. IV, c. 31, §§ 11, 12. Rex v. Harris, 5 C. & P. 159, 24 E. C. L. 503. See also Reg. v. Lewis, 2 C. & P. 523, 38 E. C. L. 308, where a gun was loaded but the flint had dropped out. And see infra, note 61.

57. Alabama.—Christian v. State, 133 Ala. 109, 32 So. 64 (holding that, on a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, an instruction that unless the gun used by defendant, loaded with No. 6 shot, fired at the distance of twenty steps, was capable of producing death, they could not find defendant guilty, was properly refused, as an apparent adaptation of the means to the criminal design, rather than actual potency of the weapon, was all that was requisite to guilt); Mullen v. State, 45 Ala. 43, 6 Am. Rep. 691 (absence of cap from loaded gun).

California.—People v. Lee Kong, 95 Cal. 666, 30 Pac. 800, 29 Am. St. Rep. 165, 17 L. R. A. 626, where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, it appeared that defendant, the keeper of a gambling hall, shot at a hole in the roof, which he knew had as an unlawful attempt, "coupled with present ability," to commit an injury upon the person of another, have been construed as requiring an actual present ability.⁵⁸ In all jurisdictions there must be at least an apparent present ability to inflict the injury.⁵⁹

c. Extent of Injury. It does not follow from the fact that the wounds and injuries received by the person assaulted and beaten are not such as would usually and probably prove fatal that the assault was not made in a manner likely to produce death or was not made with intent to kill or murder. The manner of an assault should not be confounded with its results.⁶⁰ Indeed it is not necessary that any bodily injury should have resulted where all the elements of murder were present had death ensued.⁶¹ Thus where the intent to commit murder exists, to shoot at a man and miss him completes the offense.⁶² But the placing of poison within reach of an intended victim does not complete the offense unless the poison is actually taken.⁶³ And it has been held that where poison is actually been made by a policeman for the purpose of watching the premises, and at which he supposed the policeman then was, and the ball went through the roof at that point, but the policeman was then on the roof at another point, and so escaped injury; and it was held that this constituted an assault, under Pen. Code, § 240, defining an assault as "an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability, to commit a violent injury upon the person of another," and that a conviction of assault with intent to kill was warranted.

Indiana.—Kunkle v. State, 32 Ind. 220 [disapproving State v. Swails, 8 Ind. 524, 65 Am. Dec. 772, in so far as it lays down the broad proposition that, to constitute an assault and battery with intent to commit a felony, the intent and the present ability must necessarily be conjoined].

Attempt to discharge loaded arm.—Upon an indictment for attempting to discharge a loaded arm with intent to murder, the evidence of the prosecution was that the prisoner had pointed at the prosecutor a revolver loaded in some but not all of its chambers with ball cartridges, saying that he would shoot him; the prisoner then pulled the trigger of the revolver, but the hammer fell upon a chamber which contained an empty cartridge-case. It was held that the revolver was a loaded arm within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, § 14, and that the prisoner could upon the evidence be convicted of attempting to discharge a loaded arm with intent to murder the prosecutor. Reg. v. Jackson, 17 Cox C. C. 104. See also supra, note 56.

63. The act of maliciously putting poison administered it must be shown that it endangered life.⁶⁴ But where it is shown that a dangerous poison was actually administered with intent to take life the offense is complete.⁶⁵

d. Malice Aforethought. Another essential ingredient of assault with intent to murder is malice aforethought.⁶⁶ But in most jurisdictions it is not essential that the accused shall have acted with deliberation and premeditation.⁶⁷

e. Specific Intent to Kill—(1) IN GENERAL. An actual specific intent to take human life is an essential ingredient of the offense of assault with intent to commit murder, and the intent must exist at the time of the act charged.⁶⁸

into a well, with the intent to kill another, is not an assault with intent to murder, if the person whose death was intended never drank of the water after the poison was put in. Peebles v. State, 101 Ga. 585, 28 S. E. 920. Under Fla. Acts (1865), p. 23, § 4, providing that, if any person shall "administer" poison with intent to kill, etc., the offense is not complete unless the poison is actually taken by the intended victim. Placing it in a receptacle from which the victim is expected to drink is not sufficient. Sumpster v. State, 11 Fla. 247.

65. Johnson v. State, 92 Ga. 36, 17 S. E. 974 (holding that where one puts a deadly poison into coffee with the intent that it be drunk by another, and the latter, without knowing of the poison, actually drinks of the coffee, the poison is "administered" to him by the accused, and in so doing the latter commits an assault); State v. Glover, 27 S. C. 602, 4 S. E. 564; Rex v. Harley, 4 C. & P. 369, 19 E. C. L. 558. Administering unbroken cocculus indicus berries to an infant was held to be administering poison within 7 Wm. IV & 1 Vict. c. 85, § 2, although it was proved that the berries were not poisonous till the exterior or pod was broken, and that by reason of the weakness of the infant's digestive organs the berries were innocuous. Reg. v. Cluderoy, 2 C. & K. 907, 4 Cox C. C. 84, 1 Den. C. C. 515, 14 Jur. 71, 19 L. J. M. C. 119, T. & M. 219, 61 E. C. L. 907.

Infernal machines.—Where a husband, who sent, addressed to himself, at his wife's home, a box containing dynamite, with the expectation that she would receive and open it, and that her death would result, it was held that he was guilty of assault with intent to commit murder, and that a contention that it could not be presumed that he contemplated that she would, without authority and unlawfully, interfere with it, as it was plainly addressed to himself, and that hence there was no basis on which to predicate criminal intent, was of no merit. State v. Hoot, 120 Iowa 238, 94 N. W. 564, 98 Am. St. Rep. 652. But where defendant sent a tin box to another, containing three pounds of gunpowder and two detonators, which were intended to ignite the gunpowder when any person opened the box, and so destroy the person who opened it, it was held that this was not an attempt to discharge loaded arms at the other, within 9 Geo. App. 1898) 47 S. W. 371. Evidence that defendant presented his gun at F in carrying distance, but which does not show that usual and ordinary course of things death or great bodily harm may result, for every sane man is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his act.⁷¹ Where, however, no injury results from the act, the intent is to be gathered from all the acts, threats, and circumstances attendant upon the occurrence upon which the charge is predicated.⁷² The intent of the accused is a question of fact to be determined by the jury upon consideration of all the evidence in the case.⁷³

(b) Nature of Weapon or Means Used. Where the nature of a weapon is such that all persons of ordinary intelligence are presumed to know its dangerous and deadly character it will be deemed a deadly weapon as a matter of law.⁷⁴ In other cases this is a question of fact to be determined upon the evidence in the case. Thus whether or not a stick or club is a deadly weapon depends upon its size and the manner of using it;⁷⁵ and the same is true of a stone,⁷⁶ a pocket-knife,⁷⁷ or a bottle.⁷⁸ Where the weapon used was manifestly not of a deadly character and there was nothing in the manner of its use to indicate an intention to take life a conviction of assault with intent to murder cannot be sustained.⁷⁹

he fired the gun or attempted to fire it, nor that the gun was loaded, will not sustain a conviction of assault with intent to murder. Davis v. State, 25 Fla. 272, 5 So. 803. And an assault with a knife closed, and which the assailant does not attempt to open, is not an assault with intent to commit murder, as such an instrument is not a weapon likely to produce death. Madden v. State, 58 Ga. 563. One who calls another a liar, and picks up his gun, is not conclusively guilty of an assault with intent to murder. Stevens v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 550, 43 S. W. 1005.

Throwing one from train.—An intent to kill may be inferred from the fact that defendant threw the prosecutor from a rapidly moving train in a manner reasonably calculated to destroy life. Anderson v. State, 147 Ind. 445, 46 N. E. 901.

A knife which would make a wound five and one-half inches deep is a deadly weapon. State v. Warren, 1 Marv. (Del.) 487, 41 Atl. 190.

"A large piece of timber" is a dangerous weapon, within the meaning of La. Acts, Nos. 43 and 44 of 1890, making it a crime for any one to "shoot, stab, cut, strike, or thrust any person with a dangerous weapon, with intent to commit murder," or "with intent to kill." State v. Alfred, 44 La. Ann. 582, 10 So. 887.

A verdict of assault with intent to murder is not contrary to evidence, by reason of the assault being proved to have been committed with a stick. Tatum v. State, 59 Ga. 638. Where the accused took a hand in a fight well under way, by giving one of the parties a piece of stove wood, twenty inches long, four inches wide, and weighing five or six pounds, and urging him to "go for him" (meaning his antagonist), which the other proceeded to do, fracturing his skull, it was held that the stick was a deadly weapon, and hence a charge on simple assault was properly refused. Henry v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 49 S. W. 96.

76. Cosby v. Com., 115 Ky. 221, 72 S. W. 1089, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2050; State v. Dincen, 10 Minn. 407.

79. Bartell v. State, 40 Nebr. 232, 58 N. W. 716, buggy whip.

But the intent with which the assault was made is the gist of the offense, and it is by no means essential that it shall have been made with a deadly weapon,⁸⁰ or indeed that any weapon at all shall have been used.⁸¹

f. Murder Had Death Ensued—(1) AN ESSENTIAL ELEMENT. The assault must have been made under circumstances which would have made the act murder had death ensued. The act must have been done with malice aforethought and with the specific intent to murder the person assaulted. A general felonious intent or a specific design to commit another felony will not suffice.⁸²

(1) NOT A CRITERION IN ALL CASES. But it does not follow in every case where the act would have been murder had death ensued that the assault was Illustrations.—Where it was in evidence that the person assaulted had been appointed by a constable to arrest defendant, that he went to his house, and, not telling him of his appointment, or that he had a warrant, tried to arrest him, and that defendant went into his house, and when the deputy attempted to enter, pistol in hand, shot him, it was held that, as it would not have been murder if he had died from his wounds, defendant should not have been convicted of assault with intent to murder. Davis v. State, 79 Ga. 767, 4 S. E. 318. Since in general the killing of an officer or other person to prevent an illegal arrest is not murder, but manslaughter, shooting at him for the same purpose, without killing him, is prima facie not an assault with intent to murder. Thomas v. State, 91 Ga. 204, 18 S. E. 305. Since, if a person, arrested by a peace officer without a warrant on suspicion of a crime less than felony, kills the officer, it is not murder, but at most only manslaughter, an assault upon such officer will not support an indictment alleging an assault with intent to murder. Com. v. McLaughlin, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 615. In a prosecution for maliciously shooting with intent to wound or kill, it is error to charge that defendant should be found guilty of such felony if he might have been properly convicted of manslaughter had death resulted from the shooting. Cline v. State, 43 Ohio St. 332, 1 N. E. 22. Where one, armed with a pistol, provoked another, unarmed, to engage in a sudden encounter, begun with fist-cuffs, and ended by the assailant shooting his unarmed adversary, it sufficiently shows an assault with intent to commit murder, where death did not ensue. Bingham v. State, 6 Tex. App. 169.

made with specific intent to murder, for an act resulting in death is sometimes murder where there was no actual intention to kill.⁸³

g. Intent to Kill One Other Than Person Injured. Upon principle where an offense consists of an act with a particular intent, which act and intent constitute an attempt to commit a higher offense than that accomplished, proof of the particular intent is as necessary as that of the act. Accordingly it is held in many jurisdictions that if the intent was to murder a person other than the person injured, the accused cannot be convicted of assault with intent to murder the latter, proof of a general felonious intent not being sufficient to sustain the indictment, although it might do so in a case of actual murder.⁸⁴ But where the accused intending to murder a certain person assaults another on the supposition that he is the intended victim he may be convicted of assault with intent to murder the person injured.⁸⁵ And it has been held in some states that where a man deliberately shoots at one person but misses him and wounds another, he may be convicted of assault with intent to murder the person injured, the malice being carried over to the victim by implication.⁸⁶

h. Indiscriminate Assault Upon a Crowd. Where a man fires into a crowd indiscriminately with intent to kill someone it is an assault with intent to kill each of them.⁸⁷

i. Setting Spring-Guns. The setting of spring-guns and other deadly machines is indictable as a nuisance if the public are thereby subjected to danger;⁸⁸ but it has been held that it is not punishable as assault with intent to murder where there was no specific intent to kill the person actually injured.⁸⁹

j. Resisting an Officer. One who resists and attempts to kill an officer lawfully in the act of arresting him may be convicted of assault with intent to murder.⁹⁰ But no one is obliged to submit to an illegal arrest, and the fact that the person assaulted had no lawful authority to make the arrest will mitigate the offense or may even excuse the assault.⁹¹ It has been held, however, that where there is no reasonable cause to apprehend any worse treatment than a legal arrest should subject a person to, it is the duty of a person to submit to an illegal arrest and seek his redress from the law.⁹² But where the person attempting to make the arrest so conducts himself as to put the prisoner's life in danger he may repel force with force.⁹³

B. Assault With Intent to Kill or Commit Manslaughter — 1. IN GENERAL. At common law there is no such offense as assault with intent merely to kill or commit manslaughter.⁹⁴ But by statute in many jurisdictions it is made a distinct offense to commit an assault with intent to kill, or with intent to commit manslaughter or murder in the second degree.⁹⁵ Under a statute punishing an assault with intent to murder a named person with a rock tended merely to make a case of the statutory offense or "rocking a train," as defined in Ga. Pen. Code (1895), § 511, it was held error, on conviction under the indictment, not to grant a new trial. Bray v. State, 118 Ga. 786, 45 S. E. 597.

with intent to commit any felony, there may be an indictment for assault with intent to commit manslaughter.⁹⁶

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES THE STATUTORY OFFENSE. To constitute the minor statutory offense of assault with intent to kill or to commit manslaughter, the assault must have been made under circumstances which would have made the act manslaughter, or murder in the second degree, if death had ensued.⁹⁷ This offense lacks the element of malice necessary to constitute assault with intent to murder, but the intent to take life is essential to this as to the higher offense. That is, there must be an attempt to kill in sudden heat and passion or under circumstances which show a want of previous malice.⁹⁸

C. Accessaries, Aiders, and Abettors. Where assault with intent to commit murder is made a felony by statute it is an offense to which there may be accessaries.⁹⁹ But where the assault charged is only a misdemeanor all parties implicated are guilty as principals.¹ A person who purposely and feloniously is present and aids and abets another in the commission of an assault with intent to murder is guilty as a principal. Where the parties have a common design whatever act any of them does in furtherance of that design is the act of all and all are equally guilty.² Where a number of persons conspire to commit murder, and in execu-

New York.—On a trial for an assault with intent to kill, an instruction to the jury that if W (the man assaulted) made the first assault, and defendant then, having a knife in his hand, stabbed W under such circumstances as would have constituted manslaughter, if W had died, he could not be convicted of assault with intent to kill, is erroneous, for such killing might have been manslaughter in the second degree. Rumsey v. People, 19 N. Y. 41.

To constitute the crime of malicious shooting with intent to kill, malice must exist, and the case must be such that if death ensues the killing would be murder; but if the case be such that it would not be murder if death ensues—that is, if the wounding be not in self-defense, but done in a sudden fray, or in sudden heat and passion, without previous malice, it would be a misdemeanor, and, if death ensue, would be punishable as manslaughter. Rapp v. Com., 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 614.

99. Hughes v. State, 12 Ala. 458. On a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, where there is evidence that defendant was an accessory, it was error to instruct that, if defendant was present, and "ready" to aid or abet the principal in the assault, he is guilty as principal. Elmore v. State, 110 Ala. 63, 20 So. 323.

Intent.—The aider and abetter must, as a rule, either act himself with a specific intent to kill or know of such an intent on the part of the principal. Tanner v. State, 92 Ala. 1, 9 So. 613; State v. White, 67 S. C. 320, 45 S. E. 210; Henry v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 50 S. W. 399, 49 S. W. 96; Lyons v. State, 30 Tex. App. 642, 18 S. W. 416; Reg. v. Cruse, 8 C. & P. 541, 2 Moody C. C. 53, 34 E. C. L. 881. There is authority, however, that one who engages in a felony, as in a burglary, for example, thereby becomes liable for an assault with intent to commit murder committed by his accomplice, although he may not himself have actually tion of their common purpose a felonious assault is made by some of them upon the intended victim all are guilty of assault with intent to commit murder.³ And where parties enter into a conspiracy to commit another offense and in the execution of their common design one of them makes an assault with intent to murder they are all equally guilty of the felonious assault.⁴

D. Defenses—1. SUDDEN HEAT AND PASSION UNDER PROVOCATION. Sudden heat and passion upon adequate provocation will deprive an assault of its felonious character, and where the provocation is great may amount to a complete justification.⁵ But there must have been a reasonable cause for the exhibition of temper.⁶ The exercise of a legal right, no matter how offensive, will not be had the specific intent to kill, on the ground that by engaging in the conspiracy to commit the felony he becomes responsible for the acts of each of his associates. McMahon v. People, 189 Ill. 222, 59 N. E. 584; Hamilton v. People, 113 Ill. 34, 55 Am. Rep. 390.

Parties liable for different grades or degrees of offense.—Since, to be guilty of an assault with intent to commit murder, the accessory or aider and abetter must have the specific intent to kill or know that the principal has such intent (see supra, this note), the parties to an assault may be guilty of different grades or degrees of the offense. Thus, if one aids or encourages an assault without any malice or intent to kill, and without knowledge of the principal's intent to kill, he is guilty of simple assault and battery or aggravated assault only, according to the circumstances, although the principal may be guilty of assault, with intent to murder. Lyons v. State, 30 Tex. App. 642, 18 S. W. 416. See also supra, I, C, 2, f.

The marshal of an incorporated town may arrest disorderly persons, and may deputize or call to his assistance any citizen to aid him in so doing, and if resistance is made in concert, and one, with the consent and approbation of the others, attempts to kill the marshal or his assistant by using a weapon likely to produce death, they are all guilty as principals of an assault with intent to kill. *Bohannon v. Where defendant was informed that prosecuting witness was intimate with his wife, and went in search of the couple, and found them in an attitude corroborative of his previous information, and, in such a state of rage as to be incapable of cool reflection, shot at prosecuting witness, the highest offense of which he would be guilty in case of prosecuting witness' death would be manslaughter, or, failing to kill him, aggravated assault. Canister v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 221, 79 S. W. 24. Where one shoots to kill because of an insult to his sister, in order to reduce the offense to aggravated assault the assault must not only have been the actuating cause, but defendant's mind must have been excited and incapable of cool reflection. *Jones v. Texas.—Ayres v. State, (Cr. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 396; Fischel v. State, (Cr. App. 1890) 14 S. W. 391. An assault on defendant, causing pain or bloodshed, is not adequate provocation per se to reduce an assault which would otherwise be an assault with intent to murder to an aggravated as-deemed provocation for an assault.⁷ Passion aroused by mere abusive language is not sufficient to reduce a felonious assault to simple assault;⁸ and a fit of anger will not excuse defendant if he was himself the aggressor.⁹ And this defense will not avail where it appears that the accused had sufficient cooling time to regain his equanimity before making the assault.¹⁰ One on whom another is making a mere assault with the fist without intending to do great bodily harm, and who is not deceived as to the character of the assault, is not justified in taking life or in using a deadly weapon in self-defense.¹¹ But if the accused acted under the smart of an unexpected assault, he cannot be convicted of assault with intent to murder, although he may be convicted of simple assault, or at most aggravated assault.¹²

2. INTOXICATION. While intoxication as a rule does not excuse crime, yet if the accused was at the time of the act so drunk as to be incapable of forming the specific intent to kill, he cannot be guilty of assault with intent to commit murder.¹³ And drunkenness, although not so excessive as to render the accused utterly incapable of forming a deliberate purpose, may have produced a state of mind unfavorable to premeditation, and this should be taken into consideration by the jury.¹⁴ But it has been held that drunkenness which does not amount to insanity is no defense, so as to entitle defendant to an entire acquittal.¹⁵ And it has even been held that drunkenness will not mitigate an assault with intent to murder to aggravated assault.¹⁶

3. SELF-DEFENSE — a. In General. If the accused with good reason believed that the person assaulted was about to take his life or to do him great bodily harm he should be acquitted.¹⁷ If the homicide would have been excusable had death ensued the unsuccessful attempt to kill is also excusable.¹⁸ A reasonable conclusion under the circumstances that the accused was in immediate danger of death or great bodily harm, although in fact no such danger existed, will be sufficient to eliminate the elements of malice and felonious intent, the appearance and not the reality of danger being the test.¹⁹ But if the assault is not felonious and there is no reason for a belief on the part of the person assaulted that the danger is actual and imminent, he is not justified in using a deadly weapon in a deadly manner.²⁰ Mere threats to take the life of the accused will not justify an assault of a deadly nature. The person assaulted must in some manner have manifested his immediate intention of executing the threats.²¹ And the bare fear that a man intends to commit murder or other atrocious felony, however well grounded, unaccompanied by any overt act indicative of such intention, will not warrant the killing or attempting to kill the party by way of prevention. There must be some overt act indicative of imminent danger at the time.²²

b. Duty to Retreat. In order to justify the act on the ground of self-defense the accused must as a rule have employed all means within his power and consistent with his safety to avoid the danger and avert the necessity for taking life.²³ Therefore it is as a general rule the duty of a person assaulted to retreat before resorting to deadly measures in his defense, unless retreat would increase his peril, or he has a reasonable apprehension that it would do so.²⁴ But a person assaulted in a place where he has a right to be may stand his ground and repel force with force even to the taking of his assailant's life, if necessary in order to preserve his own or protect himself from great bodily harm.²⁵

c. Where Accused Was the Aggressor. One who provokes a combat by assaulting another without provocation cannot as a rule avail himself of the excuse of self-defense, unless he first withdraws from the contest which he has brought on.²⁶ But if the accused acted without felonious intent, the mere fact that he brought on the difficulty does not necessarily preclude him from justifying on the ground of self-defense where he was afterward compelled to act in self-defense.²⁷

Mutual combat.—Where, on trial of a person for wilfully and maliciously shooting and wounding another with intent to kill him, the testimony shows a mutual combat, in which both parties were anxious to engage, it is error to give instructions which make the guilt of defendant depend on whether or not he brought on the altercation. *Watson v. force by force in defense of his habitation or property against one who manifestly intends, by violence or surprise, to commit a felony against either; and if in making such defense, he takes or endangers the life of the felonious aggressor, the act is justifiable.²⁹ And the owner may use such reasonable force as is necessary to prevent the injury or destruction of his property or to defend or regain possession thereof, short of the use of a deadly weapon, and what is such reasonable force is a question of fact for the jury.³⁰

5. PROTECTION OF RELATION OR FRIEND. One who has good reason to believe and does believe that he is resisting a felonious assault on a friend is not guilty of assault with intent to murder.³¹ And a fortiori one may lawfully use sufficient force to repel an assault upon a relative or a member of his family even to the taking of life, if that be necessary, and he is entitled to the same defenses as if he had been the person assaulted,³² but to no other or greater defenses.³³

VI. JUSTIFIABLE OR EXCUSABLE HOMICIDE.

The owner of a dwelling has a right to protect it against a peace-disturbing, profane intruder, even, if necessary, to the taking of life, and therefore has a right to draw his knife, and hold it in his hand, ready for use, as he goes toward the intruder, and orders him from the house. State v. Raper, 141 Mo. 327, 42 S. W. 935.

A small steam launch, run as a public conveyance, having seats extending around it, and no sleeping or living apartments, is not a house or castle which may be defended against entry by an officer to the extent of taking his life, merely because the boat is moored to a dock and used as a sleeping berth by the owner. *People v. Parent and child.—Com. v. Malone, 114 Mass. 295; Crowder v. State, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 669. It is no defense to an indictment for a felonious assault that defendant was led to commit the assault by information brought to him by others that the person he assaulted was about to kill his son, when such was not the fact. It was his business, when he came on the scene, to judge from what he saw whether such was the fact. State v. Hays, 67 Mo. 692.

33. The right of one to defend his brother is no greater than the brother's right to defend himself, and where one brother provokes a difficulty resulting in an assault by another, the latter cannot be acquitted on the ground that he acted in defense of his brother. State v. Melton, 102 Mo. 683, 15 S. W. 139. So, if a father was in fault by beginning a combat, before the son can be excused for an assault in defense of the father, it should appear that the father had abandoned or offered to abandon the combat, provided he had time and the ferocity of his adversary would permit. State v.

slayer, not being himself at fault, had a legal right to so kill.³⁴ Excusable homicide is where the slayer, although himself at fault, had the legal right so to kill, or where the killing was the accidental result of a lawful act done in a lawful manner.³⁵ In some jurisdictions justifiable and excusable homicide are defined by statute.³⁶ Formerly the perpetrator of an excusable homicide suffered forfeiture of his goods,³⁷ while in case of justifiable homicide he forfeited nothing;³⁸ but such forfeitures have been abolished and this distinction is now regarded as obsolete,³⁹ and generally now, whether the homicide be justifiable or excusable, there must be an entire acquittal.⁴⁰

2. JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE. Homicide may be justifiable because it is committed by an officer in the execution of a legal sentence;⁴¹ because it is committed to prevent the commission of felony,⁴² to suppress a riot,⁴³ to effect an arrest of a felon, or to prevent his escape;⁴⁴ or because it is committed in necessary self-defense,⁴⁵ or in defense of habitation,⁴⁶ of property,⁴⁷ or of another's person.⁴⁸ Under some statutes homicide is justifiable when committed by any one in a sudden heat of passion caused by the attempt of another to rape or otherwise defile his wife, daughter, sister, mother, or other family relation, or when the defilement has actually been committed.⁴⁹ But homicide is not justified by a mistake of law as to the slayer's right to take life,⁵⁰ nor by any kind of provocation unaccompanied with acts of violence,⁵¹ especially where the provocation is past and defendant's heat of passion has had time to cool.⁵² Nor is a homicide justified

Excusable homicide has also been defined as that not properly justifiable, but allowable under certain circumstances; for example, defense of one's own person, or that of some member of his household, as wife, children, servant (State v. Walker, 9 Houst. (Del.) 464, 33 Atl. 227), or as that which takes place under such circumstances of accident or necessity that the party cannot be strictly said to have committed the act wilfully and intentionally (*Williamson v. by the mere fact that a reward has been offered by officers of the state for the killing of the deceased.⁵³

3. EXCUSABLE HOMICIDE. Excusable homicide is committed either by misadventure or accident,⁵⁴ or in self-defense upon a sudden affray.⁵⁵ A homicide is not excusable where it was committed under a mistake of law as to one's right to take life.⁵⁶

B. Exercise of Authority or Duty — 1. IN GENERAL. Where a public officer, or one acting under his authority, in the exercise of his duty as such, takes another's life by unavoidable necessity without any will, intention, desire, negligence, or inadvertence on his part and therefore without blame;⁵⁷ as where an officer in due execution of his office kills a person who assails or resists him;⁵⁸ or where an officer in punishing a criminal within bounds of moderation and within the limits of the law, unfortunately kills him,⁵⁹ the homicide is justifiable or excusable; but not where it is committed in excess of such officer's authority or duty.⁶⁰

2. EXECUTION OF CRIMINAL. Where a sheriff or other proper officer hangs or otherwise executes a prisoner in pursuance of the sentence of a competent court and in strict conformity therewith, the homicide is justifiable.⁶¹

3. MAKING ARREST AND PREVENTING ESCAPE — a. In General. An officer of the law or other person authorized to make an arrest⁶² who uses proper means in making the arrest or preventing the prisoner's escape and is resisted may repel force with force and is under no duty to retreat, and if the person resisting is unavoidably killed in the struggle, the homicide is justifiable;⁶³ but he is not justified in using unnecessary force or resorting to the use of firearms or other dangerous weapons where with diligence and caution the prisoner can be otherwise arrested and detained.⁶⁴ If the original difficulty is brought on by the officer the fact that he is an officer, and in the course of the difficulty attempts to arrest his adversary, will not justify the killing.⁶⁵

b. In Case of Felony. Homicide committed by a public officer or private citizen while attempting in a lawful manner to arrest or prevent the escape of a felon, whether in fleeing from arrest or in attempting to escape after he has been taken, is justifiable where otherwise the arrest cannot be made or the escape prevented.⁶⁶ If the arrest was made without a warrant, to justify the homicide the felony must either have been committed in the view or presence of the person making the arrest,⁶⁷ or he must have had reasonable cause to believe and must in good faith have believed that the deceased had committed a felony and was trying to escape.⁶⁸ Some authorities hold that in such a case the killing cannot be justified without proof of guilt, however reasonable the grounds of belief.⁶⁹ Although there must be a necessity for the killing,⁷⁰ the authorities are not in harmony as to the degree of necessity required. Degree of intelligence and belief.—The rule established in civil cases for malicious prosecution or false imprisonment to the effect that there must be such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe or entertain an honest and strong suspicion of guilt does not apply to one who has committed homicide in attempting to arrest a felon, since the degree of intelligence evidenced by the defendant must be an important element in determining his guilt and it is not reasonable that the same rule should be applied to persons of different grades of intelligence. *People v. necessity has been held sufficient; but on the other hand an absolute necessity has been required.⁷³

c. In Case of Misdemeanor. Although it has been held that a homicide committed by an officer in making an arrest or preventing an escape in cases of misdemeanor is justified if the killing is necessary in order to effect the arrest or prevent the escape,⁷⁴ the weight of authority, while admitting that the officer is never required to retreat and may meet force with force, holds that in arresting for a misdemeanor or breach of the peace only as well as in preventing the escape of a person after being arrested therefor, life may not be taken even though necessary to make the arrest or prevent the escape,⁷⁵ unless the offender by the use of a deadly weapon or otherwise resists to such an extent that the officer cannot make the arrest without subjecting himself to the danger of great bodily harm or loss of life,⁷⁶ or unless the killing is done in self-defense.⁷⁷ But it has been held that flagrant misdemeanors do not fall within this rule, as where a dangerous wound has been inflicted or a riot exists, for the presumption is very great that the offense will turn out to be a felony.⁷⁸

d. Killing Rescuer. Where it is necessary in order to prevent an escape an officer may also be justified in killing a person who attempts to rescue his prisoner.⁷⁹

E. 460, holding that where an officer arresting a person under such circumstances that it is his duty to take him immediately before the mayor, proceeds to take him to the lock-up instead, he will be justified in killing a person who attempts to rescue his prisoner only where he was acting, in making the arrest in that manner, according to his sense of right, and not merely under a pretext of duty.

e. Preventing Escape of or Rearresting Convict. Where a convict tries to escape, or where the circumstances are such as to lead his guard, as a reasonable man, honestly to conclude that the convict is trying to escape and that it is necessary for him to shoot and kill in order to prevent the escape, it is justifiable homicide.⁸⁰ But this right does not extend to an officer attempting to rearrest an escaped convict; he has only such authority as belongs to an ordinary officer in making an arrest.⁸¹

f. Arrest of Striking Miners. Where a public officer and his posse attempt to arrest the leaders of a marching body of men who have banded themselves together and gone forth armed for the purpose, as he believes on reasonable grounds, of intimidating and injuring miners at work in certain mines, he has a right to use such force as reasonably appears to be necessary to make the arrest, even to the extent of killing, and the homicide will be justifiable.⁸²

4. KILLING BY SOLDIER. A homicide committed by a soldier without malice in the performance of his duty,⁸³ as where he kills an alien enemy in the heat and exercise of war,⁸⁴ or kills under the order of a superior officer,⁸⁵ is justifiable, unless the order is manifestly beyond the scope of the officer's authority and the soldier must know as a man of ordinary understanding that the act is illegal.⁸⁶

5. SUPPRESSION OF RIOT OR AFFRAY. A public officer, or even a private citizen, will be justified in committing a homicide where it is necessary in order to suppress a riot or affray and preserve the peace.⁸⁷

6. PREVENTION OF OFFENSES — a. Felonies. A homicide is justifiable when committed by necessity and in good faith in order to prevent a felony attempted by force or surprise, such as murder, robbery, burglary, arson, rape, sodomy, and the necessity of killing a rescuer, but the jury must determine the existence or absence of the necessity. State v. Bland, 97 N. C. 438, 2 S. E. 460.

A naval officer in command of a ship has no authority to direct a sentry on duty aboard the vessel to run through the body any man who shall abuse the sentry by words alone, however opprobrious, and if any such order should be given it would be unlawful and could not justify or excuse a homicide committed by the sentry under such circumstances. *U. Excusable homicide in self-defense closely borders on manslaughter, as in both cases it is supposed that passion has kindled and that blows have passed between the parties, but the difference lies in this, that in manslaughter it must appear either that the parties were in mutual combat when the mortal stroke was given or that the slayer was not in immediate danger of death, and in homicide in self-defense it must appear either that the slayer had not begun to fight or that having begun he endeavored to decline any further struggle and afterward being closely pressed by his antagonist he killed him to avoid his own destruction. *State v. 2. NATURE AND PURPOSE OF ATTACK — a. In General. To justify or excuse a homicide as in self-defense the attack upon the slayer must be of a felonious nature; it must be of such a nature as to apparently indicate that if carried out it will result in death or great bodily harm. ³ The killing is not justifiable or excusable if the attack is merely an indignity to the person, ⁴ or is a simple assault and battery from which great bodily harm cannot be reasonably apprehended, ⁵ or is a mere trespass,⁶ unless it is accompanied by acts indicating imminent danger of great bodily harm or felony and produces in the mind of the accused a reasonable belief of such danger,⁷ or if it is some other act less than a felony.⁸ And this is true, although the peril could not be escaped by retreat or the danger would have been thereby increased.⁹ But it is not necessary that the accused shall wait until he is actually set upon or attacked before he defends.¹⁰

b. Nature of Means or Weapon Used. An assault or attack with a dangerous or deadly weapon will almost invariably justify the killing of the assailant in self-defense,¹¹ except where it is manifest that the weapon cannot or will not be used for the purpose of killing or inflicting great bodily harm; and in case of an assault with a weapon not essentially deadly in its character, although it may become such in its use, killing the assailant is not justifiable unless there is reason for the person attacked to believe himself to be in danger of death or great bodily harm.¹²

3. RESISTANCE OF ARREST — a. Killing in Self-Defense by Officer. Where a public officer or other person having legal authority to make an arrest is lawfully engaged in an attempt to arrest and is resisted by the party to be arrested in such a manner that he believes, upon reasonable grounds, that he is about to be killed or to receive great bodily harm, he is not obliged to retreat but may stand his ground and, if it is necessary in self-defense, he is justified in taking the life of such party;¹³

The mere fact that defendant had a dangerous weapon and used it does not take away the right of self-defense if without that fact the right would have existed. Fouth v. State, 95 Tenn. 711, 34 S. W. 423, 45 L. R. A. 687. The mere drawing of a pistol by one who begins a quarrel will not deprive him of the right to use it in self-defense unless he draws it with the intent to attack the adversary's life, or under circumstances calculated to excite in the adversary a reasonable fear that an immediate attack upon him is intended, if his adversary afterward upon the intent with which the difficulty was brought on.³¹ As a general rule, however, any wrongful or unlawful act of the accused which is reasonably calculated to lead to an affray or deadly conflict, and which provokes the difficulty, is an act of aggression or provocation which deprives him of the right of self-defense,³² although he does not strike the first blow.³³ So one is the aggressor where he provokes another into a quarrel causing a fatal affray,³⁴ or commences an assault upon the other.³⁵ The act of provocation must have been committed at the time the homicide occurred,³⁶ and must have related to the assault in the resistance of which the assailant was killed.³⁷

(11) INTENT OF PERSON BRINGING ON DIFFICULTY. It is well settled that where a person wilfully and intentionally brings on a difficulty whether by words or otherwise, for the purpose of obtaining an opportunity to kill another or inflict great bodily harm upon him or to wreak malice upon him, he cannot justify or excuse the homicide on the ground of self-defense, however necessary the killing to save himself from death or great bodily harm.³⁸ But the right of self-draws a pistol and shoots first. Fussell v. State, 94 Ga. 78, 19 S. E. 891.

To bar a person's right to use a deadly weapon in self-defense, he must have been the originator of the difficulty, must have en-defense will not be impaired by the fact that the accused has malice against the deceased or that there is a mere intention or preparation to kill the deceased or inflict great bodily harm upon him, unaccompanied by overt acts indicative of the wrongful purpose, and calculated to provoke the difficulty;³⁹ nor by doing acts or merely seeking a meeting with deceased in a peaceable and lawful manner, without any intention of provoking a difficulty, although the meeting results in the killing.⁴⁰ In some jurisdictions, to entirely preclude an aggressor from the right of self-defense he must have provoked the difficulty with a felonious intent — that is, with an intent of killing the deceased or inflicting great bodily harm upon him — and in such case he would be guilty of murder.⁴¹ In these jurisdictions if he provokes the difficulty with any intent other than felonious, as where he intends only an ordinary battery, he has what is called an imperfect right of self-defense — that is, he is not entirely justified or excused in killing to save himself from death or great bodily harm, but the homicide is reduced to some grade less than murder, such as manslaughter;⁴² or, although he provokes the combat tered it armed, and must have brought it on intending if necessary to use his weapon to overcome his adversary. Prine v. State, 73 Miss. 838, 19 So. 711.

Stating that a revolver held by accused was not loaded, thus leading deceased to make an assault upon him, will not preclude setting up self-defense unless the purpose in making such statement was to create an occasion or excuse for taking the life of deceased. *State v. or produces the occasion by his own wrongful acts, yet, if those acts are not clearly calculated or intended to have such effect, his right of self-defense will not be thereby compromised.⁴³

(III) ABUSIVE OR INSULTING LANGUAGE. Mere words, however abusive or opprobrious, do not amount to such provocation as will preclude the one speaking them from killing in self-defense,⁴⁴ unless he used that means of bringing on the difficulty for the purpose of affording him an opportunity to kill the deceased or to do him great bodily harm.⁴⁵

(IV) TRESPASS OR RESISTANCE THEREOF. A mere trespass on the property of another is not such an act of aggression or provocation as will preclude the trespasser from killing in self-defense,⁴⁶ unless he knows at the time that the trespass will provoke a violent conflict with the owner,⁴⁷ or unless he trespasses in a violent, menacing, or aggressive manner, and the force used by the owner is no more than is necessary to eject him.⁴⁸ Resistance to a trespasser is likewise not such an act of aggression,⁴⁹ unless the resistance used is excessive and not warranted by the force used by the trespasser.⁵⁰

husband, that if the paramour when caught in the act or just after it is over kills the husband in order to save himself from death or great bodily harm, he cannot invoke the doctrine of self-defense as a justification or excuse,⁵¹ except where the husband attempts to kill him in vengeance for past wrongs, as where, knowing of his wife's infidelity, he deliberately lays a trap for her paramour in order to kill him if caught in the act.⁵²

d. Killing of Wife or Her Paramour by Husband. The doctrine as to aggression in respect generally to that of self-defense should be relaxed where a husband kills his wife or her paramour in self-defense in a struggle ensuing from his attack upon her and her paramour in or immediately after the act of adultery.⁵³ But mere insulting conduct toward the wife will not justify the husband in killing in self-defense.⁵⁴

e. Exercise of Legal Right as Provocation. The exercise of a legal right in a lawful manner is not such an act of provocation as will deprive the person exercising the same of his right of self-defense,⁵⁵ although having reason to believe that it will result in a struggle or conflict he arms or otherwise prepares himself accordingly;⁵⁶ or although by exercising such right he puts himself in the way of being attacked;⁵⁷ or even though he strikes the first blow, if this is necessary to secure his personal safety.⁵⁸

5. WITHDRAWAL AFTER AGGRESSION — a. In General. Where one who has provoked a combat abandons or withdraws from the same in good faith, and not merely for the purpose of gaining advantage, and by his conduct clearly shows his desire to decline any further struggle, his right of self-defense is restored, and if thereafter he is pursued by his adversary, he is justified or excused in killing

Renewal of contest see infra, VI, C, 11.

Missouri.—State v. Vaughan, 141 Mo. 514, 42 S. W. 1080, holding that one who voluntarily enters into a combat with another may nevertheless avail himself of the right of self-defense if he has not a felonious design in bringing on the trouble, and if on abandoning the conflict in good faith he is pursued by his antagonist so that he has to take his life to save his own.

The abandonment or withdrawal must be something more than a mere mental determination to quit even though accompanied with a retrograde movement. It should apprise the other party that the assailant has quit the fight and has relieved him of the necessity for defense which had been imposed upon him by the assailant's conduct. State v. Dillon, 74 Iowa 653, 38 N. W. 525 (holding that the withdrawal is sufficient if defendant gives his adversary reasonable ground for thinking he has withdrawn); Hellard v. Com., 84 S. W. 329, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 115 (holding that one who retreats but continues shooting when he does so is not entitled to claim an abandonment of the fight merely because he retreated).

In Colorado the right to kill in necessary self-defense is not limited to cases where the assailant intends to commit a crime of the grade of felony. Ritchey v. People, 23 Colo. 314, 47 Pac. 272, 384.

The terms "great bodily harm," "serious bodily injury," or "great personal injury" are substantially equivalent within the above rule (Lawlor v. People, 74 Ill. 228; Green v. State, 28 Miss. 687. See State v. Rose, 92 Mo. 201, 4 S. W. 733) and the words "enormous injury," "enormous bodily injury," and "dreadful injury" are equivalent to "great bodily injury" (State *v. But it need not be such bodily harm as would give the accused a reasonable apprehension that his own life was in imminent danger (Greer v. State, 6 Baxt (Tenn.) 629); nor does the rule require that the danger should be of "the most serious bodily harm" (Reins v. State, 30 Ill. 256), or of "enormous bodily harm" (McDonald *v. (11) APPARENT DANGER. It is not necessary that the slayer shall have been in actual danger of death or great bodily harm before he killed in self-defense; it is sufficient if he in good faith and reasonably believed himself to be in such peril at the time, although it afterward appears that he was mistaken.⁸⁷ But this

Character and habits of deceased as grounds for apprehension see infra, VIII, B, 5, 15, d, (ii).

What constitutes such an overt act as will justify a homicide in self-defense is a question for the jury for which no general rule can be laid down. Each case depends on its own circumstances. Jackson v. State, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 452. But in determining whether or not defendant had reasonable grounds to believe that deceased, at the time he was killed, was then and there about to shoot and kill or do defendant great bodily harm, the jury are not confined to the facts and circumstances proven to have transpired and existing at the time of the killing, but they may and should take into consideration all the proof in the case. Lightfoot v. Com., 80 Ky. 516.

Striking with the hand or fist does not raise reasonable grounds for the assailed to believe that he is in immediate danger of life or great bodily harm, unless there is also evidence that deceased had previously assaulted him with a deadly weapon, and had repeatedly threatened the assailed and shown feelings of intense hostility against him. Davis v. People, 88 Ill. 350; Byrne v. Com., 28 S. W. 481, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 416.

A mere threatening gesture as though to draw or use a pistol or other deadly weapon does not raise an apprehension sufficient to justify or excuse killing in self-defense (People v. Griner, 124 Cal. 19, 56 Pac. 625; Bailey v. State, 70 Ga. 617; Guice v. State, 60 Miss. 714; State v. Elliott, 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 332, 26 Cinc. L. Bul. 116; State v. Bodie, 33 S. C. 117, 11 S. E. 624, merely presenting gun at defendant), except where it is connected with other circumstances such as previous threats or angry words indicating an intention to kill, or do great bodily harm to accused (De Arman v. State, 71 Ala. 351; Bailey v. State, 70 Ga. 617; State v. Donahoe, 78 Iowa 486, 43 N. W. 297; Newman v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 70 S. W. 951; Tillery v. State, 24 Tex. App. 251, 5 S. W. 842, 5 Am. St. Rep. 882).

Defendant need not be able to distinguish between felonies and misdemeanors, but should be guided only by reasonable appre-

necessary for him to kill in order to save himself from death or great bodily harm.⁹¹ In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that the circumstances must be viewed from the standpoint of defendant alone, and that he will be justified or excused in killing if they were sufficient to induce in him an honest and reasonable belief that he was in such danger.⁹²

(b) Threats as Ground For Apprehension. The fact that deceased made threats against defendant does not excuse the killing as in self-defense unless such threats were communicated to defendant,⁹³ were threats of death or great bodily harm,⁹⁴ and were followed by some overt act or demonstration indicating an impending purpose, real or apparent, to put them into execution.⁹⁵ But where the threats

That the person whose life is threatened does not avail himself of the protection of the law does not deprive him of the right of self-defense, but it might be considered by the jury for the purpose of determining the true relations between the parties, and to show the truth or falsity of the claim that accused had cause to fear, and did fear, that his assailant would kill him. State v. Martin, 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 778.

The presence of bystanders does not so generally operate to prevent the excesses of sudden violence as to raise a legal presumption that such bystanders would give any considerable confidence to a party assailed who killed his assailant in self-defense. Brownell v. People, 38 Mich. 732.
