(VII) Proceeds of Property — (A) In General. A statutory lien upon a tenant's property does not extend to the proceeds arising from the voluntary sale of such property;[53] but if the property of the tenant is taken into the custody of the law and converted into money the lien will attach to such proceeds.[54] A surrender of the tenant to his landlord extinguishing the claim for rent, however, after the levy has been made by an execution creditor on the goods found on the premises, and before the sale of the same, will destroy the landlord's right in the proceeds of the sale of such goods.[55]

(B) Proceeds of Insurance Policy. A landlord's lien for rent will not, on the destruction of the goods of the tenant, attach to the insurance money.[56]

(VIII) Effect of Removal or Sale. In some jurisdictions a landlord's lien on agricultural products,[57] and the chattels of his tenant,[58] is not affected by their removal from the premises, but may be enforced so long as the property can be found and identified, provided it has not passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value, without notice of the lien.[59] In others such a lien ceases upon the removal of the property from the premises.[60] If the landlord consents to the removal he of course waives his lien.[61] It is sometimes provided by statute that a landlord shall have a lien on the crops and movable effects of his tenant while they remain on the premises, and for a stated time after their removal;[62] and this, without regard to the manner of the removal, whether fraudulent or otherwise.[63] Such a statute extends only to the property of the lessee.[64]

d. Priorities Between Landlord's Lien and Other Liens or Claims — (i) In General. The statutory lien in favor of the landlord is superior to other junior liens, and may be enforced against all but prior liens and bona fide purchasers without notice.[65] It is likewise superior to any agreement between the parties.[66] If the statute is silent as to persons against whom the lien is enforceable the principles of the common law will apply.[67]

(ii) Claim of Third Person For Advances. The lien of a landlord for rent is superior to the lien of a stranger who advances money for supplies to the tenant,[68] notwithstanding the priority of the latter in time,[69] unless the

(IV) Vendor's Lien For Goods Sold—(A) In General. The lien of a landlord for rent upon property belonging to the tenant upon the leased premises is under some statutes superior to that of the vendor of such property for the price remaining unpaid.[73]

(B) In Case of Conditional Sale. Where the instrument of sale of goods to a tenant provides that the vendor shall retain title until the purchase-money is paid, it is a conditional sale, and the landlord can only subject the goods to his lien by paying the purchase-money due or keeping good a tender thereof.[74]

(VII) Lien of Attachment. A landlord's statutory lien for rent takes precedence of a lien by attachment.[79]

(VIII) Lien of Judgment or Execution— (A) In General. A landlord's lien for rent is paramount to the lien of an execution.[80] In those jurisdictions where the landlord has no lien upon the personal property of his tenant for rent before the actual levy of a distress warrant, he is not entitled to claim against a prior levy under execution.[81]

(B) Necessity and Sufficiency of Notice. Where the goods of a tenant are levied on and sold, it is necessary in order to sustain a claim by the landlord upon the fund in the sheriff's hands for rent due that the sheriff should have notice thereof.[82] Such notice need not be given in writing, but is sufficient if the sheriff is in any way apprised of it, and of the amount of the claim.[83] The notice is in the nature of legal process, and the landlord should state facts enough to show that he is entitled to a preference over the execution creditor.[84] Thus the notice must be from the landlord,[85] or his agent,[86] and must show that he was landlord,[87] that defendant in execution was his tenant and the money is due from him as such,[88] for the rent of the demised premises,[89] and that it was payable before the levy was made.[90] The notice should also be accompanied by an affidavit showing the amount of rent claimed to be due,[91] but it need not necessarily be stated with absolute precision.[92]

(IX) Lien of Mortgage— (A) Landlord's Lien Claimed For Rent— (1) In General. A landlord's statutory lien for rent on chattels of his tenant on the premises has priority over the lien of a mortgage on such chattels given after they are placed on the premises.[93] So also a lien for rent has precedence over a mortgage of the crop grown on the demised premises.[94] A landlord's lien is postponed, however, to a mortgage existing upon the property of the tenant before it is brought upon the premises, or before the rent contract is entered into.[95]

(2) When No Rent Due. Under a statute providing that a landlord's lien shall attach only by reason of rent due or such as is accruing, the lien of a chattel mortgage is superior to that of the landlord for his rent, if at the time the mortgage is executed the rent has been paid in full;[96] but where it is provided that the lien shall attach for rent to become due during the term of the lease, the lien is not defeated by a chattel mortgage on the tenant's property, although at the time of its execution all accrued rents have been paid.[97]

(3) Effect of Renewal of Tenancy. A valid mortgage lien created during one term of a lease is superior to a landlord's lien existing during a second term of lease to the same tenant, that had not begun or been contracted for when the mortgage was executed;[98] but the execution of a new lease covering the unexpired term of the old lease will not postpone the landlord's lien to a chattel mortgage on the goods on the premises, although it was executed before the change in the lease.[99]

(B) Landlord's Lien Claimed For Advances. A landlord's lien for advances on the crop grown on the rented lands is superior to a chattel mortgage on the crop executed by the tenant to a third person.[1]

e. Rights and Remedies of Creditors of Tenant — (I) In General. A crop grown on the demised premises is not, without payment of the rent, subject to process of law at the suit of the creditor of the tenant, during the life of the landlord's lien.[2] A landlord having a lien on property for his rent cannot apply any part of the property to a debt which is not a lien upon it, to the prejudice of a junior lienor of the same property, but must apply it only to his lien debt, leaving the residue to the debt of the junior lienor.[3] But a creditor who has no lien at the time the landlord makes the appropriation cannot complain.[4] While a landlord must refrain from an active injury to a junior encumbrancer, he is under no obligation to collect his debt, or to husband the fund so as to make it cover both debts.[5] A tenant's agreement with a creditor to deliver him a certain part of the crop in payment of his debt will not affect the landlord's lien upon such crop,[6] and even if the landlord's lien is inferior to the creditor's special lien for work done in the making of such crop, the latter cannot assert his lien by bringing an ordinary suit at law for the value of so much of the crop as would equal the amount due the laborer by the tenant.[7] If, however, the landlord assents to the agreement, and thereafter appropriates the crop to his own use, he will be liable to the creditor therefor,[8] although the landlord has a lien prior to that created by a deed of trust executed by the tenant for money loaned, and also the right to the possession of the property by stipulation of the parties, unless such use is necessary to its preservation, without accounting to the creditor for such use.[9]

(II) Right to Surplus. Where a tenant turns over the crop to the landlord in payment of the rent, and the value of the crop exceeds the amount of rent then due, the mortgagee of the crop or other creditor, in an appropriate action to redeem from such lien, is entitled to a decree for such excess;[10] but where a tenant turns over to the landlord merely a part of the crop in payment of the rent the mortgagee cannot have relief in an action at law.[11] Where a tenant after obtaining advances which have a crop lien under the statute abandons the crop, it is proper for the landlord, although not his duty, to allow the advancer, in order to save himself harmless, to enter and finish the cultivation and gather the crop, which in that event after proper rent is paid goes to such advancer.[12] If, however, the advancer fails to avail himself of such permission, he relinquishes to the landlord the ownership of the crops, and has no right to have them attached afterward as the property of the tenant.[13]

f. Removal or Transfer of Property Subject to Lien — (I) Civil Liability — (A) Of Purchaser With Notice. A landlord's lien upon the property of his tenant on the premises takes precedence of the claim of a purchaser of such property with notice of the rent claimed.[14]

Previous sales to same purchaser. — To show that one had purchased from a tenant a crops knowing that they were raised on leased land is chargeable with notice of the landlord's lien thereon;[19] and this too regardless of his knowledge as to whether the amount claimed by the landlord was for the rent due from the tenant for the year in which the crop purchased was grown.[20] It has even been held that knowledge that the vendor of crops was a tenant was sufficient to put the purchaser on inquiry as to whether such crops were encumbered with a landlord's lien;[21] but the contrary has also been held where it was not also shown that the purchaser knew the crop to have been grown on the demised premises.[22] So the fact that property other than crops purchased of a tenant is upon the leased premises is constructive notice of the landlord's lien.[23]

(c) Consent to or Ratification of Sale. If the sale is made by the tenant at a time when he was authorized to sell by the landlord, no right of the latter is violated thereby, and no cause of action arises against the purchaser.[24] The landlord's consent is, however, without consideration, and may be revoked at any crop subject to a landlord's lien, with notice, evidence that, during the preceding year the tenant had sold the crop from the same premises to the same purchaser and given an order on him for the rent, which specified that it was for rent of the place in question, is admissible. Evidence that the purchaser knew the name of the rented place is admissible as tending to show knowledge of facts on his part which would put him on inquiry as to the seller's title. Foxworth v. Brown, 114 Ala. 299, 21 So. 512, 120 Ala. 59, 24 So. 1.

time before it has been acted on,[25] and the landlord can recover the amount of his lien from the purchaser who with knowledge of the revocation pays the tenant for the property.[26] Where property on which a landlord has a lien for rent is converted the landlord's failure to repudiate the act is not a ratification.[27]

(D) Rights of Purchaser Against Tenant. If rent is actually due and in arrear at the time of the sale by the tenant, he is liable to the purchaser on his implied warranty of title;[28] but if the rent is not due and in arrear at the time of the sale, the purchaser cannot recover upon a breach of implied warranty of title, but may maintain an action against the seller for money paid out and expended for his use, and recover the amount he was compelled to pay for the benefit of the seller in discharging the lien for rent.[29]

(E) Injunction[30] to Restrain Sale and Removal.[31] A landlord is entitled to an injunction to restrain the sale or removal of property from the demised premises by the tenant or his assignee if necessary for the protection of his lien.[32] Thus an injunction will be granted at the instance of a landlord for such a purpose when it appears that the tenant is insolvent,[33] but not as a rule if the tenant is solvent.[34] Where, however, it is held that a landlord's lien exists for all the rent to accrue during the term of the lease as well as the rent accrued the landlord is entitled to an injunction, although the tenant is not insolvent, since, the rent not being due, he has no remedy at law for the protection of his lien.[35] Injunction is also the proper remedy to enforce a landlord's lien upon property found upon the rented premises as against execution creditors of the tenant who are endeavoring to sell it to satisfy their debts.[36]

(F) Remedies of Landlord For Conversion of Tenant's Property—(1) IN GENERAL. Any person who knowingly by purchase or otherwise deprives the landlord of the opportunity of enforcing his lien is guilty of a tort, and the land-

The principle involved is the same as that which authorizes a court of equity, at the suit of a mortgagee, to enjoin the commission of waste by the mortgagor. Carson v. Electric Light, etc., Co., 85 Iowa 44, 51 N. W. 1144; Garner v. Cutting, 32 Iowa 547.

Rule applied according to equities of case.—This rule is not designed to enable the landlord to do more than to protect the security which the law gives him. He is not permitted to interfere unnecessarily with the business and property of his tenant, nor to use the power which the law gives him in an unreasonable or arbitrary manner. So long as the tenant neither does nor threatens to do any act which will materially affect his power to collect the rent for which the lease provides, he is not permitted to interfere with the use of the property by the tenant. Carson v. Electric Light, etc., Co., 85 Iowa 44, 51 N. W. 1144.

After sale of property lessor cannot enjoin.—The fact that attaching creditors of the lessee have no right to property on which the lessor claims a lien, it having been sold to third parties previously to their attachment, will not avail the lessor to enjoin its removal. lord has a right of action for the damage sustained.[37] Case is a proper form of action to enforce this liability,[38] but it must appear that the property or its proceeds have been disposed of so that the lien cannot be enforced against either.[39] If the purchaser has no notice of the lien case does not lie.[40] With regard to the form of action it is also held that a landlord has by virtue of his lien no such title to the property or right to the possession thereof as will enable him to maintain trespass,[41]

What constitutes a conversion.— It is a conversion for the tenant to remove the property subject to the lien without the landlord's consent; and the party receiving it with knowledge of the lien, whether handling it as his own property, or that of the tenant, is also guilty of conversion. Mensing v. Cardwell, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 16, 75 N. W. 347.

Trespass.— The attempt of a lessee or his vendee to forcibly remove from the leased premises property subject to the lessor's lien is a trespass sounding in damages. Cooper v. Cappel, 29 La. Ann. 213.

Claim and delivery.— Under N. C. Code, § 1754, giving the landlord an action of claim and delivery if the crop or any part thereof shall be removed from the land without the consent of the lessor, the landlord may maintain an action for a certain part only of the crop, although all of it has been delivered to a third person. Boone v. Darden, 109 N. C. 74, 13 S. E. 728.

"Factor" not "purchaser."— A landlord cannot recover of the factor or commission merchant of his tenant, who sells the tenant's cotton and by his consent appropriates the proceeds to the payment of a debt due the factor, the latter not being a "purchaser." Armstrong v. Walker, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 156.

A creditor of a tenant who attaches crops, subject to a landlord's lien, purchases the same at the sale, and transfers his bid to a third person, assumes such control of the property as amounts to a conversion and renders him equally liable with the assignee to the landlord for the amount of his lien for rent. Mead v. Thompson, 78 Ill. 62.

Liability of mortgagee.—When the holder of a mortgage on crops, executed by a tenant, takes possession with notice of the landlord's statutory lien, the landlord may pursue the crops by attachment, so long as they remain unconverted and capable of being seized. Hudson v. Vaughan, 57 Ala. 609. A conversion of the crops rendering attachment unavailing is a tort for which the landlord may maintain an action on the case against the mortgagee, recovering to the extent of the amount due him, that is less than the amount of the crop converted; or if greater, to the extent of the value of such crop. Hudson v. Vaughan, 57 Ala. 609; Shepherd v. Taylor, 105 Ala. 507, 17 So. 88.

Liability of execution creditor.—An action on the case will not lie by a landlord against plaintiff in execution, or against any other person, for advising, procuring, or commanding the sheriff to sell and remove the goods of a tenant whose rent is unpaid. trover,[42] replevin,[43] or detinue,[44] against a purchaser thereof for its recovery. Nor as a general rule can an action for money had and received be maintained by a landlord against one who has acquired his tenant's crop with notice of the landlord's lien.[45]

(2) Extent of Recovery. A landlord in actions of this character cannot recover more than the amount of his demand existing at the time of trial;[46] and defendant upon appropriate pleas has the right to show payment in whole or in part of the landlord's debt, and thereby defeat or reduce pro tanto, as the case may be, the extent of recovery.[47]

(3) Time to Sue and Limitations.[48] An action may be maintained by a landlord against a purchaser of a crop from the tenant before judgment is recovered against the tenant for rent, or even before the rent has become due;[49] and it is not barred by failure to bring the suit during the life of the lien.[50]

(4) Defenses. In an action for the conversion of property subject to a landlord's lien, the fact that the landlord neglected to exhaust other property of the tenant on which he had a lien is no defense, where, after giving credit for the value of this property, there is still a balance due, greater than the amount of the landlord's recovery.[51] Nor is it a defense that defendant did not intend to injure the landlord.[52]

(5) Parties.[53] In an action for the conversion of the crops of plaintiff's tenant, on which plaintiff had a lien, the tenants are not necessary parties, where their cause of action is barred by limitation.[54] A transferee of a note given for rent may sue the purchaser of the crop for its value, to the extent of the unpaid rent.[55]

(6) Pleading.[56] If all the substantial facts necessary to constitute a cause of action by a landlord for conversion of his tenant's property are alleged in the complaint, either expressly or inferentially, it will be sufficient.[57] If the existence of a lien is averred as a conclusion of law instead of a statement of the facts upon which the lien arose, this infirmity, no demurrer being interposed, is waived by a plea of not guilty.[58] A petition to recover for the conversion of property belonging to the tenant is not demurrable for failure to allege that the landlord's claim had been adjudicated and his lien established.[59] A plea of payment of the rent, merely alleging that the landlord had attached other property of the tenant, without alleging the value of the property, or that anything could be realized from the attachment, is demurrable.[60]

(7) Evidence.[61] In an action by a landlord for the conversion of his tenant's crops defendant cannot question the landlord's title to the land;[62] nor can he show that he had a mortgage on the crop if he knew of the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant.[63] So evidence contradicting the express terms of the rent note is inadmissible.[64] Evidence of the sale of other property by the tenant, of which fact the landlord had no notice, or which was covered by a different lien from that relied on, is likewise inadmissible.[65] Even if the landlord knew that the tenant had sold to defendant property in previous years, this fact is insufficient to estop plaintiff from asserting his lien, where defendant, when purchasing the crop previously sold, had no knowledge where it had been raised or that it had been grown on leased land, and it appeared that the landlord had not relied on the tenant's personal responsibility.[66] In an action by the assignee of a rent note against one purchasing the crop, within three months of the maturity of the rent, to recover the value of such crop, parol evidence of the true date of the note is admissible.[67]

(8) Trial[68] — Instructions. Instructions withdrawing from the jury material issues,[69] or failing to present all the law of the case,[70] are improper and should not be given.

(II) Penalties[71] and Actions Therefor. It is sometimes provided by statute[72] that any tenant who removes his goods from any demised premises, either before or after any rent became due, for the purpose of avoiding the payment of such rent, and every person who knowingly assists such tenant in such removal, or in concealing any goods so removed, shall forfeit to the landlord, his heirs or assigns, double the value of the goods so removed or concealed.[73]

(III) Criminal Responsibility[74] — (A) In General. In some states it is made a misdemeanor for any person to remove property of the tenant from the demised premises without first discharging all liens of the landlord thereon.[75] The intent of the person in making the removal is immaterial,[76] unless the statute expressly requires an intent to defraud.[77]

(B) Complaint,[78] Indictment, or Information.[79] The offense being a statutory one, the indictment or information should employ, as nearly as may be, the very words of the statute, or words that certainly imply in substance the same thing.[80] It is not necessary to charge specifically that the landlord had a lien

Property of strangers.— The penalty given by statute for the removal of goods of the tenant cannot be recovered where they belong to a stranger, even though while on the premises they were liable to distress. Coles v. Marquand, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 447; Strong v. Stebbins, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 210.

An action lies against two or more jointly, the offense being in its nature one and inseparable; but in such case only one penalty is imposed on all the defendants and not each of them. Conley v. Palmer, 2 N. Y. 182 [affirming 4 Den. 374]; Warren v. Doolittle, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 678.

Advising removal.—A third person does not incur the penalty by merely advising the removal of tenant's goods. There must be some physical aid by himself or his servants. Crafts v. Plumb, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 143; Strong v. Stebbins, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 210.

State v. Crowder, 97 N. C. 432, 1 S. E. 690.

Record of lien.— To make the removal of property subject to a landlord's lien beyond the limits of the state or county a crime, the lien must be recorded. Grace v. State, 40 Ark. 97.

State v. Williams, 106 N. C. 646, 10 S. E. 901.

Defenses.— On a prosecution for removing crops without having satisfied liens or having given five days' notice of such removal, it is no defense that defendant had been damaged by a failure of the landlord to comply with the contract, and that such damage amounted to more than the rents and advancements (State v. Bell, 136 N. C. 674, 49 S. E. 163 [overruling State v. Neal, 129 N. C. 692, 40 S. Intent to defraud.—Where an intent to defraud is made an essential element of the offense, an indictment failing to aver such intent is fatally defective. Edwards v. State, (Miss. 1891) 8 So. 464.

Omission of five days' notice.— Under the statute making it a misdemeanor to remove a crop "without the consent of the lessor or his assigns, and without giving him or his agent five days' notice of such intended removal, and before satisfying all the liens held by the lessor or his assigns," the omission of the five days' notice is an essential element of the offense, and must be charged in the indictment. (III) Implied Waiver—(A) In General. An express agreement is not necessary to a waiver of a lien for rent, but it may be waived by acts indicating an intention to waive it.[92]

(B) By Taking Other Security. A landlord does not waive his lien for rent upon his tenant's property by the acceptance of personal security for the rent, where there is no evidence of an intention to treat the original claim as discharged by the acceptance of the new obligation.[93] At most it is only a presumptive discharge thereof, subject to be overcome by other proof.[94] Thus a lien of a landlord on the goods of his tenant for the rent is not waived by his taking a note,[95]

Release of seizure on bond given.—A seizure of the property of a tenant by the landlord, and a release of such seizure by reason of a bond given by the tenant, does not impair the privilege in favor of the landlord. Harrison v. Jenks, 23 La. Ann. 707.

As against third persons.—Where a landlord's agent takes in his own name a trust deed on a crop to be raised by the tenant on the leased premises as security for supplies to be furnished, the landlord as against third persons must confine himself to the security afforded by the deed of trust. Stipulation that security shall not affect lien.—A deed of trust taken by a landlord to secure the rent of demised premises, stipulating that it should not affect the landlord's statutory lien on the crops grown on the premises, does not create a mortgage lien on the crops in favor of the landlord, but merely avoids any inference that in taking other security the landlord intended to relinquish the statutory security. or draft[96] therefor. Nor does a landlord lose his statutory lien merely by accepting a mortgage upon his tenant's chattels,[97] or upon the crop grown upon the premises.[98]

(c) By Authorizing or Permitting Sale of Property. A landlord by consenting that his tenant's property be removed from the premises does not waive his lien for rent. Much must depend on the purpose for which the consent is given.[99] If the landlord authorizes,[1] or permits or acquiesces in,[2] the removal of property from the rented premises, by the tenant or any one else, for the purpose of sale in open market, he thereby waives his landlord's lien, regardless of whether there is any consideration for the waiver,[3] or whether the purchaser acted on the knowledge of the waiver.[4] So also a landlord may ratify the sale by receiving money from his tenant, knowing that it was part of the proceeds of the sale of the property on which he has a lien, and thus estop himself to assert his lien as against the purchasers.[5] This will not be the case, however, unless the landlord consented or was a party to the transaction.[6]

(d) By Consent to Subletting. The consent of the landlord to a subletting of the leased premises is not a waiver on his part of his lien for rent upon the crops grown by the subtenant.[7]

(e) By Taking Personal Judgment. Where a landlord sues to recover rent, and for the enforcement of his lien on the property of the tenant, and takes a judgment merely for the rent due, and does not insist on the foreclosure of his lien, and no foreclosure is adjudged, he waives and abandons it.[8] So also if the landlord brings an action for rent, and attaches the property, he thereby waives his lien, since the attachment is inconsistent with the enforcement of his lien.[9]

In those jurisdictions where a landlord's lien does not depend on the institution of proceedings to enforce it, an abandonment of such proceedings once begun is not a waiver of the lien.[10] It is otherwise where the lien is dependent on the levy of a distress warrant to enforce it.[11]

(iv) Procedure to Establish Waiver. A waiver of a landlord's lien cannot be proved unless it has been pleaded,[12] and the burden of proving such waiver is on one claiming against the lien.[13] Where all of the facts tending to establish waiver are undisputed, their legal sufficiency for that purpose should be determined by the court.[14]

(v) Operation and Effect of Waiver. A waiver of a lien in favor of one is not a waiver in favor of another.[15] Nor is a waiver of a lien for the current year a waiver of a lien in favor of an antecedent debt of the tenant.[16] If the waiver is conditional, the performance of the condition is necessary to render the waiver effective.[17]

(vi) Loss of Lien—(a) In General. The landlord's statutory lien is a paramount lien of which every person must take notice, and can be lost as a general rule only by waiver or by failure to enforce it at the proper time.[18] A landlord's lien for supplies is not lost by failure to enforce it in the manner prescribed for the enforcement of a lien for rent.[19]

(b) By Delay in Enforcement. If a landlord fails to institute proceedings to enforce his lien within the time limited by the statute the lien is gone.[20] The institution of distress proceedings, however, is not a necessary prerequisite to a foreclosure of the landlord's lien. The lien is preserved by the bringing of the suit to foreclose, if brought in time, and this once commenced will prevent any loss of the lien by the expiration of the time limited for its continuance.[21] Mere

By death of tenant and insolvency of estate.—A landlord's lien is not created by the levy of an attachment, but grows out of the contract, and if the tenant dies after the levy of an attachment, and his estate is declared insolvent, the lien of the attachment is not thereby dissolved or destroyed. McDonald v. Morrison, 50 Ala. 30.

After vacation of premises.—Delay of more than thirty days after the removal of the tenant before the landlord begins proceedings to foreclose his lien on the tenant's property for the rent due is a waiver of lien as against a purchaser of the property. Jenkins v. Patton, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 21 S. W. 693. delay in making a sale of property distrained does not destroy the lien for the rent, where there is no collusion between landlord and tenant.[22]

(c) By Transfer of Reversion. A conveyance of the premises extinguishes the grantor's lien for unpaid rent.[23] Nor has the landlord any claim for advances made to the tenant after such conveyance.[24]

(d) By Destruction of Property. The lien of a landlord for rent upon the goods of his tenant is lost by their destruction.[25]

(vii) Merger of Lien. A landlord's lien is extinguished by his purchase of the property upon which the lien exists, but he acquires an absolute title to an undivided interest in such property equal to the amount of his lien.[26]

(viii) Discharge of Lien. A landlord's lien is not released by refusal to accept a tender of the rent;[27] and to make a plea of such tender good the money must be paid into court.[28] Nor will the fact that a tenant replevies property taken under a distress warrant and gives bond for the satisfaction of the judgment release the landlord's statutory lien.[29] After the lien has once been satisfied, it cannot be renewed by agreement.[30]

h. Enforcement of Lien — (i) Remedies of Landlord — (a) In General. The statutory lien of a landlord, without other authority, does not entitle him to seize and appropriate the property without legal process.[31] To enforce the lien the landlord should proceed to foreclose the same in a direct proceeding therefor,[32] or pursue the remedy which may be provided by statute.[33]

(b) Distress.[34] In some states it is provided by statute that a landlord's lien may be enforced by distress.[35]

(c) Bill in Equity.[36] There are many cases in which judicial interference for the enforcement of a landlord's lien is necessary, or it will be unavailing. In these cases, and in cases in which the statutory remedy is inadequate, a court of equity, in the exercise of its general jurisdiction to enforce liens, or charges or trusts for the payment of debts, may grant appropriate relief.[37]

(d) Garnishment.[38] Where an assignee of a tenant converts into money property upon which the landlord had a lien at the time of the assignment, and the landlord seeks to enforce his lien by attachment against the tenant, such money in the hands of the assignee may be reached by process of garnishment.[39]

(e) Claim and Delivery. Sometimes a landlord may enforce his lien by the action of claim and delivery to recover possession of crops, where his right of possession under the statute is denied, or he may resort to any other appropriate remedy.[40] This action lies not only when the crops are removed from the land leased, but also where the tenant refuses possession, although still keeping his crop on the land.[41]

(f) Summary Remedies.[42] In some states the lien of a lessor on chattels on the premises for the rent due at the time of their seizure under attachment or execution may be enforced by motion to the court to which the process is returnable to direct an application of so much of the proceeds of the sale as may be necessary to discharge it.[43] It is not necessary in order to entitle the landlord to the remedy by motion that the goods should be removed from the premises.[44] Where a tenant or a purchaser from him is about to remove and sell property which is subject to a landlord's lien, a warrant may issue for the enforcement of the lien, although such removal and sale is without any fraudulent intent.[45] The affidavit in such a warrant must state the facts on which the belief is founded, and these facts must be of a character which if true would prima facie warrant the belief.[46]

(ii) Persons Entitled to Enforce. Statutory provisions giving a landlord a lien for rent, and a remedy for its collection, authorize the remedy in favor of the landlord alone,[47] and it will not lie in favor of the assignee or transferee of the debt,[48] unless the statute so provides.[49] So also the statute contemplates only the Tenants in common.— Under a statute giving the landlord's lien to "all persons leasing or renting lands," a tenant in common, who rents his half of the premises to his cotenant, is entitled to a lien on the tenant's goods for his rent. Grabfelder v. Gazetti, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 436.

Mortgagees.—After default in the conditions of a mortgage, the mortgagee can by parol contract become landlord of the mortgagor, so as to avail himself of the landlord's lien (Ford v. Green, 121 N. C. 70, 28 S. E. 132; Jones v. Jones, 117 N. C. 254, 23 S. E. 214; Taylor v. Taylor, 112 N. C. 27, 16 S. (III) Time to Sue and Limitations.[52] In order to enforce a landlord's lien against the property itself, suit must be brought during the life of the lien, the length of which varies in different jurisdictions.[53]

(IV) Jurisdiction[54] and Venue.[55] The courts have jurisdiction to enforce a lien or privilege on property within their jurisdiction, notwithstanding the domicile of the debtor or owner be elsewhere.[56] An action against a tenant to foreclose a landlord's lien and against third persons for conversion of property subject to the lien may be maintained in the county of the tenant's domicile, although the other parties are domiciled in another county.[57] An action by a landlord for possession of a crop is not an action on contract, and he may sue to recover the property in a court that would not have jurisdiction of an action on contract.[58]

(V) Parties.[59] All persons claiming an interest in property on which a landlord's lien is sought to be foreclosed should be made parties, even though one's claim be not sufficient of itself to give the court jurisdiction.[60] Where a rent con-in favor of the landlord arises in favor of the transferee of the rent contract upon the maturity of the crops, in the same manner as it would have done in favor of the landlord if no transfer had been made. Camp v. West, 113 Ga. 304, 38 S. E. 822.

tract is made with an agent in his individual name, although his agency be known, he may maintain an action to enforce the landlord's lien in his own name.[61] It is not necessary, however, that such suit should be in his own name, and the real party in interest may therefore be joined, either originally, or after the institution thereof.[62] In an action to foreclose a lien on certain goods, the purchasers of such goods are proper parties;[63] but when the landlord seeks to enforce his lien for rent against a purchaser from the tenant, the tenant is not a necessary party.[64] So where a grantee of the reversion in leased premises sues to enforce the lien for the payment of his rent, he is not obliged to make his grantor a party to the suit.[65] Where it is provided that all proceedings in attachment issued under the Landlord and Tenant Act shall be the same as provided by law in case of suits by attachment, third persons interested in the property attached may intervene.[66]

(VI) Pleading[67] — (A) Necessary Allegations. A petition to foreclose a landlord's lien for rent should allege the renting of property of the character mentioned in the statute,[68] a contract by defendant to pay plaintiff,[69] that plaintiff has a lien on defendant's crop,[70] to whom the contract was due or the land rented,[71] that there was a crop grown on the land thus rented,[72] when the lease took effect and when the lessee took possession,[73] and should describe the land.[74] The property subject to the lien should also be described;[75] but if the landlord has not such access to the property as to enable him to describe it specifically, a general description is sufficient.[76] If the lien sought to be foreclosed is special, the landlord must allege a demand for the rent and a refusal to pay it.[77]

(B) Unnecessary Allegations. In an action to foreclose a landlord's lien, an allegation of ownership in the debtor of the property covered by the lien is not necessary.[78] In an action to foreclose a landlord's lien joined with an action against a junior mortgagee, an allegation that the mortgagee is asserting title to property subject to the lien is sufficient, without an averment that such mortgage is valid.[79]

(VII) Joinder of Actions[80] or Counts.[81] An action against a tenant to foreclose a landlord's lien is properly joined with an action against others for conversion of property subject to the lien.[82] A landlord's claims for rent and for advances to the tenant, being of kindred character, may be united in one count, or by separate counts in the same complaint.[83]

the landlord's lien is erroneous.[87] So also if the verdict fails to show that the property sought to be subjected to a landlord's lien was so situated as to be subject thereto, a judgment subjecting the property to the lien is erroneous.[88] But where no issue as to the lien is presented to the jury, but they find for the landlord as to the rent, the court may properly recognize the lien in the judgment, and direct a special execution to issue to satisfy it.[89] Where a landlord forecloses his lien and the execution is levied upon the crop of the tenant, who files a counter-affidavit denying the existence of the lien, but no replevy bond is filed, a general judgment cannot be granted in the landlord's favor; the only proper judgment is one establishing the lien and the amount thereof.[90]

(IX) Distribution of Proceeds. To enforce his lien, a landlord must have the thing subject to the lien sold in the manner provided by law, and if any conflict arises from adverse claims to the proceeds of the sale, distribution must be made pursuant to the statute prescribing the order in which privileged creditors are to be paid.[91]

(X) Costs and Attorney's Fees.[92] A landlord is entitled to costs in an action brought by him to enforce by attachment his lien for rent.[93] So a stipulation in a lease that the tenant shall be taxed with attorney's fees in case of his violation of the lease entitles the landlord to recover attorney's fees in an action to enforce his lien.[94]

E. Distress — 1. Nature and Scope of Remedy — a. Nature of Remedy. In its origin distress was a taking of the personal chattels of another into possession as a pledge of the performance of a duty, and this was for the purpose of compelling the tenant to perform those services which were the consideration of his enjoyment of the land; but in modern times the policy of the law respecting distresses has been changed and a distress for rent is now no more than a summary method of seizing and selling the tenant's property to satisfy the rent which he owes.[95] As a general rule the remedy by distress is not considered an action prosecuted by one party against another to which of necessity there must be a plaintiff and a defendant, but is a proceeding in rem given by the common law to the landlord whereby he seizes and holds the property found on the premises, until the tenant redeems the property by payment of the rent.[96]

b. Scope of Remedy. The right of distress is incident only to that which is strictly rent, and cannot be extended to a breach of other covenants or conditions of the lease.[97] It is not necessary that rent should be reserved eo nomine; it is enough if it appear to be for the use and occupation of lands or houses, although not denominated rent.[98] Where personalty on the premises is leased with the premises by one contract, the whole sum is rent and collectable by distress,[99] but the purchase-price of property consumed in the use is not rent and cannot be collected by distress.[1]

2. Right to Distrain — a. In General. While the common-law right of distress for rent exists in many states,[2] in several it is considered a violation of the condition and wants of the people, and repugnant to the genius and spirit of their institutions, and is not in force.[3] In other states it has been abolished by statute.[4] demise; in other words, the relation of landlord and tenant must exist;[5] but the fact that the landlord permits another than the tenant to use and occupy the premises will not prevent him from distraining for the rent unpaid.[6] Where a party enters into possession of land under an agreement for a lease at a given rent, the landlord cannot distrain for non-payment; there must be an actual demise,[7] but it need not necessarily be by a formal lease. sary, however, that there should be a fixed and certain amount of rent due; but it is sufficient that the rent be capable of being made fixed and certain by calculation. The maxim "Id certum est quod certum reddi potest" applies.[12]

(II) Medium of Payment. To give a right to the remedy of distress it is not necessary that rent should be reserved in money. Rent payable in anything susceptible of valuation is a subject of distress.[13] Thus where rent is payable in services,[14] improvements,[15] or in specific produce,[16] the landlord has the right to distrain, subject only to the rule as previously stated that the value thereof must be fixed and certain or capable of being made so by calculation.[17]

d. As Affected by Time of Accrual of Rent. As a general rule distress for rent cannot be made before the rent is due;[18] and, if it is made before, the distrainor is a trespasser, and the defect will not be cured, although the proceedings

Two reasons for this certainty are given in the books: (1) That as at common law, goods taken by distress could not be sold, but were retained as pledges for payment of money or performance of services, the tenant must know the amount to be rendered, otherwise he could not tender payment or performance in discharge of the pledges taken for rent; (2) to enable the landlord to recover damages before the jury for non-payment or non-performance by the tenant. of appraisement and sale take place after the rent becomes due.[19] Where, by the terms of the lease or contract of renting, the rent becomes due before the expiration of the term, the landlord is authorized to distrain when it is due and is under no obligation to wait until the expiration of the term;[20] and this is true, although the landlord knows that an execution is about to be put in at the suit of the judgment creditor.[21]

e. Removal of Property as Giving Right of Immediate Distress. It is sometimes provided by statute that a tenant removing or attempting to remove from the premises any portion of the crops before the rent is due, without his landlord's consent, is subject to distress immediately, no matter what may be the purpose or intent of such removal.[22] The fact that the tenant still has enough of the crops on the premises set apart to pay the rent will not defeat the landlord's right to the distress warrant;[23] the question whether the lessor is sufficiently secured by that which is left being for him to determine.[24] Nor will it affect

The fact that the landlord and tenant have agreed in writing as to the method of dividing the crop for the purpose of paying the rent does not preclude the landlord from having a distress warrant, if he finds the property is being removed from the premises for the purpose of evading payment of rent. Tucker v. Hasson, 32 Tex. 536.

What constitutes removal or sale.— Carrying cotton to the gin for the purpose of being baled, and then returning it to the premises, thereby subjecting it to the control of the landlord, and the mere use by the tenant of a reasonable amount of feed produced upon the premises for the purpose of feeding the stock used in producing the crop, is not such a removal or appropriation of the products produced upon the rented premises as will justify the issuance or levy of a distress warrant. But the removal of cotton and the sale of the same, the proceeds of which are appropriated and used by the tenant in part for his individual purposes, and in part for paying off hands who assisted in picking the cotton, such appropriation being without the consent of the landlord, constitutes a wrongful and unauthorized removal, within the meaning of the law. Riggs v. Gray, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 268, 72 S. W. 101. Under Ill. Rev. St. c. 80, § 34, providing that if a tenant, without the consent of his landlord, shall sell or remove such part or portion of the crops raised thereon as shall endanger the landlord's lien, the landlord may institute proceedings by distress before the rent is due, the sale contemplated is an absolute sale, which carries with it the immediate right of possession and removal from the demised premises and one in which such right of removal is, or is about to be, effected. Hill v. Coats, 109 Ill. App. 266. A distress warrant is sued out with probable cause, where the tenant is removing cotton from the rented premises, has sold some of it, and is about to sell more when the warrant is issued. Neinast v. Doeckle, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 219.

the landlord's right if the tenant gives notice that he intends to leave; he cannot by such means deprive the landlord of his right to distress.[25] The right to distrain for rent before maturity, being conferred by statute, must be strictly construed,[26] and the landlord cannot distrain for rent before due, unless he makes affidavit that the tenant is seeking to remove his goods.[27] The time of distraining may also be enlarged by agreement of the parties.[28]

f. Effect of Taking Security For Rent. The execution of a promissory note for rent due, and a chattel mortgage to secure its payment, does not operate as a waiver of the right to enforce payment by distress.[29] It merely suspends the remedy by distress until it becomes due,[30] after which date the landlord may distrain, even though he has negotiated the note, provided he takes it up at maturity.[31] So the right to distrain for rent is not lost by acceptance of an order on a third person, who holds no funds of the makers,[32] or by reserving in the lease a lien on all the tenant's property for the rent.[33] But where a landlord substitutes for crops already due for rent the promissory note of his tenant, he has no right to distrain for such note.[34]

g. Effect of Renewal or Extension of Lease. Where the holding over is not under the old tenancy, but under a new and distinct demise, commencing at the expiration of the first, the landlord cannot distrain under the new tenancy for arrears of rent due in respect of the old tenancy.[35] So the property of a tenant, holding by a renewed lease, is not subject to be distrained by the landlord after the payment of arrears of rent for the previous year, at least if a third person has acquired an interest in the property.[36]

h. Effect of Termination of Relation — (i) At Common Law. At the common law distress for rent could not be made after the termination of the relation of landlord and tenant.[37]

the whole premises, to entitle the landlord to distrain.[46] A surrender of demised premises, after a distress for rent due, will not render the distress unlawful;[47] nor is it a defense that the relation of landlord and tenant ceased before the warrant was sued out, if such relation existed when the obligation for rent was incurred.[48]

i. Effect of Death of Tenant. If a tenant dies intestate, leaving an unexpired term, there is not, before the appointment of an administrator, any person representing the decedent between whom and the lessor privity of estate can be said to exist, and hence the right of distraint must at least be suspended.[49] Nor is the deceased tenant's insolvency a ground for distraint.[50] If, however, a tenant dies, leaving an unexpired term, which passes to his executor or administrator, the requisite privity between the lessor and such personal representative exists, and the goods in his hands remaining on the demised premises may be distrained for rent accrued, either before or after the death of the tenant.[51] But if the tenancy were at will, and so terminated by the death of the tenant, the right to distress at common law was gone, and was not preserved by the statute of Anne.[52] A landlord, by accepting administration of his tenant's estate, waives his right to distrain.[53]

j. Right of Lessee to Distrain Against Assignee or Subtenant. A lessee for years, who transfers all his interest to a third person, whether by words of lease or assignment, and with a reservation of rent, cannot distrain for the rent when due unless the instrument by which the transfer is effected contains an express power of distress;[54] but if the lease is from year to year the rule is otherwise.[55]

3. Extinguishment of Right to Distrain — a. By Agreement. Distress is not such an inseparable incident of rent as not to be capable of suspension, and an agreement by a landlord not to distrain may be enforced.[56] An intention to take

The technical reason seems to be the want of privity of estate between them; but a more practical reason is found in the circumstance that if allowed the landlord might be deprived of the means of distress. away the right of distress should, however, be clearly shown,[57] and if the condition on which the agreement hinged is not performed, the right to distrain is not relinquished.[58]

b. By Eviction — (I) By Landlord. If a landlord evicts his tenant from the whole or a part of the premises he cannot distrain for rent.[59]

(II) By Title Paramount. So after total eviction by title paramount a landlord has no right to distrain.[60] In cases in which the lessor has made a prior lease of part of the demised premises, this distinction seems to exist: Where the later lessee does not receive possession of such premises, because of the adverse possession thereof by the former lessee, then the second lease as to such part is void, and the lessor cannot distrain for a proportion of the rent, although he may recover the value of the remainder of the premises, in an action for use and occupation;[61] but where the second lessee receives possession under the lease to him of the whole demised premises, and a part thereof is afterward recovered of him by the first lessee or his assigns, it will be considered as recovered under title paramount, and the rent will be apportioned, and the portion due for the balance of the premises remaining in the occupancy of the second lessee may be distrained for.[62]

c. By Tender of Rent. A tender of rent before a distress for rent is sued out is a defense,[63] unless there has been a subsequent demand and refusal.[64] Where the rent is payable on the land, it is a good defense for the tenant that he was ready on the land to pay, but the lessor was not there to receive the rent.[65] But a personal tender of rent, although it be not on the land, is good, and renders a

Agreement to accept certain sum in full.— A parol assignee of a tenant is liable only during the time he continues upon the premises; and hence a promise by the landlord, in order to secure his continued tenancy, in consideration of his remaining in possession, that he would accept a certain sum paid by him in full of the accrued rent, is binding, and he cannot thereafter distrain for the sum so released. subsequent distress unlawful.[66] At common law, after a distress for rent had been impounded, tender of the rent and charges was too late;[67] but under the statute[68] a tender of the rent due, within five days after the distress has been impounded, is a good tender,[69] and an action lies against the lessor for selling the distress after such tender.[70]

d. By Breach of Covenants by Landlord. A landlord cannot distrain under the terms of a lease for rent where he has failed after notice to comply with his covenants,[71] unless the tenant enters into the occupancy of the premises.[72] If the tenant abandons the contract or subsequently accepts the premises under a new and different agreement, the lessor cannot distrain for rent under the first contract.[73]

e. By Recovery of Judgment. A recovery on a covenant for the payment of rent is not without actual satisfaction an extinguishment of the rent; and the lessor may notwithstanding such recovery distrain for the rent in arrears.[74]

f. By Statute of Limitations.[75] It has been said that there is no fixed period after which one may not distrain for rent in arrear,[76] This was the law of England until the statute[77] which fixed the period after which one may not distrain for rent in arrear as twenty years. The twenty years begins to run from the last payment of the rent.[78]

g. By Payment, Accord and Satisfaction, or Release. Since a landlord's right to distrain for rent depends upon his right to maintain an action therefor, if the rent has been paid, or there has been an accord and satisfaction, or a release, the right of distress is gone.[79]

4. Injunction[80] Restraining Distress. As a general rule an injunction to prevent a distraint for rent by a landlord will not be granted as plaintiff has a complete remedy at law.[81] But where the tenant has no adequate remedy at law, a court of chancery has jurisdiction to restrain a distress.[82] Under the English Supreme Court Judicature Act of 1873, an injunction will be granted only upon

5. Set-Off and Counter-Claim[84] — a. In General. The policy of the common law was not to permit a set-off against a distress for rent, and courts of equity followed the law, and refused to relieve against the rule of law where the claim to set-off was founded on a legal demand.[85] In some jurisdictions this rule has been changed.[86] A distress warrant is of course not subject to be reduced by a set-off in no way connected with the rent contracted on the demised premises;[87] but a tenant may show that the landlord has violated the rent contract, and reduce the rent by so much as the damages occasioned thereby amount to.[88] Where the distress is for the rent of a particular period, the tenant cannot deduct damages resulting from the landlord's breach of covenant which accrued during previous periods;[89] but he may prove payment on account of rent for previous periods, and not merely such overpayments as refer to the present period.[90]

b. Ancillary Proceedings to Determine Set-Off. In Pennsylvania, under the act providing for defalcation of a tenant's claim against a landlord's claim for rent, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to determine the amount in arrears, but simply what amount of the tenant's claim against the landlord should be deducted from or set off against the rent.[91] If the claim of the tenant, as found by the justice, amounts to less than the rent, the landlord may submit and proceed for the collection of the balance; or if the claim is equal to the rent the rent is paid by

In Illinois, by statute, a tenant has the right to avail himself of any set-off which would be proper if the suit was for rent in any other form of action (Cox v. Jordan, 86 Ill. 560, holding that the statute giving the tenant subject to a distress for rent the right to avail himself of a set-off is intended to apply only to cases where, upon a fair adjustment of all counter-claims other than rent the landlord will be indebted to the tenant, and in such case gives the tenant the benefit of his claim on such balance. Accordingly, after defendant's plea of set-off, the landlord may plead a set-off in replication; but he cannot recover for any excess of his set-off over that of the tenant), but it must be such that the tenant can maintain an independent suit on it (Crate v. Kohlsaat, 44 Ill. App. 460). Claims of every nature may be considered and allowed to the extent of defeating the levy (Lindley v. Miller, 67 Ill. 244), or even of a final balance and judgment against the landlord (Kellogg v. Boehme, 71 Ill. the set-off and the distraint can proceed no further.[92] The landlord, if dissatisfied with the decision of the justice, may appeal therefrom.[93] If the tenant is dissatisfied with his findings he cannot appeal, but must pursue his remedy by replevin.[94]

6. Persons Entitled to Distrain — a. Guardian. A guardian may distrain in the rights of his ward for all arrears of rent owing the latter.[95]

b. Husband and Wife. A husband may distrain for rent due his wife,[96] and a widow may distrain for her dower.[97]

c. Tenants in Common. A tenant in common may distrain for his share of the rent,[98] and if he demises his share to his companion, he may distrain the goods and chattels of such companion.[99] While tenants in common should distrain severally, their joinder may properly be regarded as an irregularity in the manner of procedure, governed by the statute of 11 Geo. II.[1] One tenant in common may distrain upon the other.[2]

d. Joint Tenants. One joint tenant may distrain for the whole rent, but must avow in his own right, and as bailiff to the rest;[3] or he may, without the assent of his fellows, appoint a bailiff to distrain for rent due to all the joint tenants.[4] So one of two joint tenants may demise his part to the other, with the usual incidents of a reversion and a right to distrain.[5]

e. Assignees. The assignment of a lease by the lessor gives to the assignee the same right to distrain for rent that the lessor had previous to the assignment.[6] But to confer upon the assignee such right, the lease of the land should be included in the assignment. Mere assignment of the rent unpaid does not carry the right to distrain.[7]

Jurisdiction and power of appellate court.— On appeal by the landlord from proceedings before a justice of the peace, the jurisdiction and power of the court of common pleas are limited to those of the justice, and the court cannot therefore enter judgment or issue execution to enforce its position. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a holder of a rent note payable to the owner of the demised premises, or bearer, is presumed to be a landlord, and as such entitled to issue out a distress warrant for rent, although he does not own the premises. Scott v. Berry, 46 Ga. 394.

court of chancery to collect the rents creates the relation of landlord and tenant between the tenant and such receiver, so that the latter is entitled to distrain,[8] and no special authority from the court is necessary for that purpose.[9] But such attornment does not inure to enable a person who is found ultimately to have the legal title to the land to treat the tenant as his tenant and to distrain for rent.[10]

g. Purchasers. One who purchases land in the possession of a tenant, under a lease from the former owner, cannot issue a distress warrant for rent accruing after he acquires title.[11] But a purchaser at an execution sale will be entitled to distrain where the tenant prepays the rent with the intent to prevent him from obtaining his proportion.[12]

h. Mortgagees — (I) Tenant of Mortgagor — (A) Under Lease Prior to Mortgage. A tenant under a lease prior to a mortgage may be sued or distrained upon by the mortgagee for rent after notice not to pay it to the landlord.[13] After a mortgage of the premises without notice to the lessee, payment by the lessee of a sum of money to the lessor for rent not then due will not discharge the lessee from his obligation to pay the rent on the proper rent day to the mortgagee who gives the tenant proper notice to do so.[14] If a lessor, after mortgaging his reversion, is permitted by the mortgagee to continue in the receipt of the rent incident to that reversion, he, during such permission, is presumptione juris authorized, if it should become necessary, to realize the rent by distress, and to distrain for it in the name of the mortgagee and as his bailiff.[15] Since the English Judicature Act, however, although it may be necessary to justify the distress as bailiff of the mortgagee, it is not necessary that the distress should be made in the mortgagee's name.[16]

(B) Under Lease Subsequent to Mortgage. When the lease is subsequent to the mortgage, the mortgagee cannot distrain by mere force of the fee being vested in him by the mortgage.[17]

(II) Mortgagor as Tenant. If a mortgage contains a clause under which the mortgagor attorns and becomes tenant to the mortgagee at a certain rent, the relation of landlord and tenant is created, and upon failure to pay the rent the mortgagee is entitled to distrain,[18] even the goods of a stranger.[19] A mortgagee cannot, however, distrain upon his mortgagor, qua mortgagee simply; the relation of landlord and tenant must be created between them.[20]

i. Executors and Administrators — (I) At Common Law. At common law neither the heirs, executors, nor administrators of a man seized and entitled to rents had any remedy for the arrearages incurred in the lifetime of the owner of such rents.[21]

(II) Under Statute. To remedy this a statute[22] was passed which provided that the executors and administrators of tenants in fee-simple, tenants in fee tail, and tenants for term of lives, of rents services, rent charges, rents secks, or fee farms might distrain for arrears of rent.

7. Persons Who May Be Distrained Against. By the common law and the English statute[23] the remedy by distress was confined to the lessor himself and his representatives against the tenant in tail, in fee, or for life, and his representatives, but did not extend to the executors of tenants for years.[24] But when the proceeding by distress is commenced against a tenant in his lifetime, it may be continued against his administrator.[25]

8. What Amounts to Distress. As a general rule to render a distress complete there must be a seizure of the property distrained upon; but a very slight act is sufficient to constitute a seizure in contemplation of law; it need not be an actual seizure.[26] Thus if the landlord declares certain goods which he names shall not be removed,[27] or if he goes on the premises where the tenant's goods are, makes an inventory of them, puts up a notice of distress, and serves the notice on the tenant, such acts have been held a sufficient seizure to constitute a distress.[28]

9. Care of Property Distrained — a. Degree of Care. A person taking and holding goods as a distress is bound to use such reasonable care as a prudent and reasonable man would use in regard to his own property of like character;[29] but he is not bound to exercise extraordinary care of them.[30]

b. Right to Use. The distrainor has no right to use the property,[31] except in a case of necessity, and for the benefit of the owner.[32]

c. Proof of Negligence. Where the property distrained is injured or damaged while in custody of the landlord or his bailiff or agent, the burden is on him to rebut the presumption of negligence;[33] but the jury are to judge and determine from the evidence whether such injury or damage was occasioned by the negligence of the landlord, his bailiff or agent.[34]

10. Abandonment and Retaking. Since the statute of 11 Geo. II,[35] the landlord has been permitted to impound or otherwise secure the goods upon the premises, and quitting the premises without leaving any one in possession does not necessarily constitute abandonment.[36] So if the distrainor permits the goods to be removed from the premises with the intention that they shall be returned,[37] or if one in possession of distrained goods quits the premises with the intention of returning there is no abandonment,[38] and he is justified in using force if necessary for the purpose of reëntering.[39]

11. Rescue and Pound-Breach. By the common law rescue and pound-breach were not only civil injuries for which an action would lie,[40] but were also indictable offenses, although there was no actual breach of the peace.[41] The landlord had the right to take the goods wherever he could find them and impound them again,[42] provided that this was done without a breach of the peace, and upon fresh pursuit.[43] If, however, goods are wrongfully distrained, the owner is entitled to rescue them before they are impounded; but if they be once impounded, even though they have been taken without cause, the owner may not break the pound to get them out, for they are in the custody of the law.[44] By an English statute[45] an action for treble damages and costs for pound-breach and rescue was given.[46]

12. Second Distress — a. For Same Rent. The law is well settled that when a landlord has levied a distress, and taken thereunder property of sufficient value to satisfy the rent then due, he cannot, without the consent of his tenant or other lawful cause, abandon his proceedings, and then levy a second distress for the same rent, upon the same or any other property of his tenant.[47] If he does so he may be sued in trespass, trover, or case.[48] The abandonment must, however, have been a voluntary one,[49] and where the landlord withdraws the distress at the request of the tenant, and for his accommodation, it is not a voluntary abandonment, and he is not precluded from making a second distress.[50] A second distress may also be supported when the landlord is induced to withdraw the first in consequence of the fraud of the tenant,[51] or has been prevented from realizing the fruits thereof by the tortious conduct of the distrainee.[52] If the landlord through mistake fails to seize sufficient property at first to satisfy the distress, he is at liberty to make a second seizure.[53]

b. For Subsequent Rent. A landlord may, upon a second distress for rent subsequently due, seize the same goods which were seized in the former distress, and which were replevied,[54] and this, although the legality of the former distress is still in question.[55]

13. Property Subject to Distress — a. Property of Third Persons — (i) In General. As a general rule the property of a third person upon demised premises may be taken under a distress warrant for rent as well as the property of the tenant himself,[56] unless it be such as is especially exempted by the common law or by statute.[57] This is true even after the landlord has information that the property is not that of the tenant, provided the tenant has that sort of possession or use which indicates ownership.[58] After removal from the premises, however, the goods of a stranger are not liable to distress.[59] Thus the goods of a stranger, if placed on the pavement in front of the demised premises, are severed from such premises, and cannot subsequently be levied on under a distress warrant.[60] In some states the right to distrain upon property of a third person has been taken away by statute.[61] Under such statutes a landlord is liable to the owner for the value of the property temporarily in the tenant's possession but belonging to another, taken under a distress warrant against the tenant.[62]

(II) PROPERTY OF WIFE OF TENANT. The goods of a tenant's wife, found on the demised premises, are liable to distress for rent in arrear, although they are her separate property. The Married Women's Acts do not affect the law of landlord and tenant.[63] But after their removal from the premises the law is otherwise.[64]

(III) PROPERTY OF SUBTENANT OR ASSIGNEE OF LEASE. At common law the goods of a subtenant found upon the rented premises could be distrained for rent, not because there existed either privity of contract or estate between the landlord and subtenant, but upon the same ground that would authorize the goods of a stranger to be distrained if found on the premises.[65] And this is true even though the tenant has goods on the premises sufficient to satisfy the landlord's demand,[66] or the sublessee has paid his rent to his immediate lessor.[67] If a sublessee holds over after the expiration of a term without authority from the landlord, his goods are liable to distress for rent due from the lessee before as well as after the expiration of the term.[68] So too after the decease of a tenant the landlord may distrain the property of a subtenant on the premises, for the rent which accrued previously to the principal tenant's decease, not exceeding in amount the rent of one year.[69] But under the statutes of some states the subtenant's goods are not subject to distraint for rent due by the lessee.[70] The liabilities of an assignee of a lease are the same as those of the lessee, and his goods are to the same extent liable to distress.[71] But in proceeding against the original tenant, the landlord

The Ontario Landlord and Tenant Act exempts from distress for rent the property of all persons except the tenant or person liable. The word "tenant" includes a subtenant, assignees of the tenant, and any person in actual occupation under or with consent of the tenant. Under this statute a person let into possession by an agent of an assignee of a tenant, for the purpose of exhibiting the premises, is not in occupation "under" the said assignee, and his goods are not liable to distress. Farwell v. Jameson, 26 Can. Sup. Ct. 588.

71. Jones v. Gundrim, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.)

cannot distrain the goods of such tenant's assignee, although they formerly belonged to the tenant.[72]

b. Goods Not on Premises — (I) In General. At common law a landlord could not make a distress off the demised premises.[73] This rule has been changed by statute in some states so that now a distress warrant may be levied on the tenant's property wherever it can be found in the county.[74] This right exists, however, only during the continuance of the lease,[75] and the goods distrained must have been at some time upon the demised premises.[76]

(II) After Fraudulent Removal or Sale — (A) In General. Even in a case of a clandestine and fraudulent removal of goods from the demised premises by the tenant for the purpose of avoiding a distress, the landlord was without remedy at common law. The provision in the statute 8 Anne [77] was the first to give the landlord any redress in such a case, by empowering him to follow and distrain the goods within five days after their removal. This provision was afterward enlarged by statute 11 Geo. II [78] by extending the time in which the removed goods may be followed and distrained to thirty days.[79] The removal contemplated is a removal by the tenant, or by someone in privity with him;[80] and in the absence of special agreement can only be exercised when it is fraudulent or clandestine.[81] Although a removal is not clandestine, yet if it is fraudulent the landlord is justified in distraining.[82] The mere removal of goods by the tenant from the demised premises

South Carolina.— As 11 Geo. II, c. 19, § 1, allowing a landlord thirty days to distrain for goods fraudulently removed, is inconsistent with 8 Anne, c. 14, § 2, allowing him but five days, which has been expressly adopted in South Carolina, the latter must prevail. Rogers v. Brown, 1 Speers 283.

A tenant who remains in possession, although having removed part of his goods, is not within the statute which provides for the sale of goods distrained for rent where a tenant, with intent to defraud, removes from the premises, etc. Freytag v. Anderson, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 73.

In a few states the words "clandestine or fraudulent" are omitted from the statutes and consequently it is immaterial whether or not the removal is fraudulent or clandestine. Stamps v. Gilman, 43 Miss. 456; Weiss v. Jahn, 37 N. J. L. 93; Wades v. Figgatt, 75 Va. 575.

Removal from sight unnecessary.— It is not necessary to show, in proof of concealment of cattle, that they were withdrawn from sight; if they have been removed to a neighbor's field, so as to cause difficulty to the landlord in finding them, it is sufficient. Stanley v. Wharton, 10 Price 138, 9 Price 301, 23 Rev. Rep. 683.

82. Jenkins v. Calvert, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,263, 3 Cranch C. C. 216 (holding further that a tenant's removal of his goods before the expiration of the term, without the knowledge of the landlord, and without paying the rent, is a fact from which the jury may infer that the removal was fraudulent as to the

when rent is in arrear is not of itself fraudulent as against the landlord; to justify the landlord in pursuing them he must show that they were removed with a view to elude a distress.[83] Thus a notorious removal in the daytime, without notice to the landlord, is not per se a clandestine removal or evidence of fraud;[84] but a removal in the night is in itself clandestine, and sufficient evidence of fraud.[85] Whether or not a removal is fraudulent, within the statute, is a question for the jury.[86] Although it is admitted at the trial by the tenant that the removal was to avoid a distress,[87] the burden of showing a removal with intent to defraud is upon the landlord.[88]

(B) Necessity That Rent Be Due. Under the English statutes and most of those in the United States goods can only be followed by the landlord where the removal takes place after the rent becomes due.[89] But in some states it is immaterial whether the removal takes place before or after the rent becomes due.[90]

(C) Tenant's Goods Only Liable. The statutes authorizing the distraining of goods removed apply to goods of the tenant only and not to those of a stranger,[91] even though they are leased by the tenant.[92] Therefore goods of an undertenant,[93] or a bona fide purchaser,[94] or goods taken by a creditor with the assent of the tenant in payment of a bona fide debt, cannot be pursued after removal from the premises.[95]

(D) Effect of Termination of Tenancy. The statutes apply only to those cases where there is a reversion or an interest vested in the lessor at the expiration of the lease;[96] therefore a landlord has no right to follow the goods of a tenant who has removed them after the tenancy has expired by reason of the landlord having conveyed away his reversion.[97] It is also necessary in order to justify a distress after removal that the tenant shall retain possession of the premises either rightfully or wrongfully.[98]

c. Exemptions by Common Law and Statute — (I) Choses in Action. Distress applies to nothing but tangible property capable of seizure and sale. Therefore choses in action are not distrainable.[99]

(II) Land and Fixtures. A distress warrant cannot be levied on land.[1] Personal property alone is distrainable,[2] and therefore fixtures which the landlord has no right to remove from the freehold cannot be distrained because they savor of the realty, and it is impossible to restore them in the same plight they were when seized;[3] but fixtures slightly attached, which the tenant may remove at his pleasure during the term, and which may be removed without destroying their character or injuring them, may be distrained.[4] Where a lease stipulates that improvements erected may be removed at the end of the term, what would otherwise become a fixture remains personal property liable to distress.[5] The mere distraining and sale of fixtures affords no ground of action, as such sale is a nullity.[6]

(III) Growing Crops. While growing crops were not subject to distress at common law, they were made so by the statute of 11 Geo. II[7] which is in force in some of the United States.[8] The crops cannot be sold until after appraisement, which cannot be made until they are ripe.[9] Consequently no action lies for selling a crop before it is ripe, since the sale is absolutely void;[10] but if the sale is followed up by cutting the crops and carrying them away the tenant is entitled to recover the amount of his actual damage.[11] Where growing crops are taken in execution and sold, but are permitted to remain on the premises a reasonable time for the purpose of being reaped, they are not distrainable by the landlord for rent accruing subsequent to the taking in execution.[12] Similar statutes have been passed in several of the United States.[13] Trees growing in a nurseryman's grounds are not distrainable for rent under a statute permitting a distraint upon products growing on the demised estate.[14]

(iv) Beasts of the Plow and Sheep. A landlord is authorized to distrain beasts of the plow[15] and sheep[16] only where there is no other sufficient distress on the premises at the time. But if there were reasonable grounds for supposing that it was necessary to take them, the distress will not be rendered illegal by the fact that as it turns out after the sale there would have been sufficient to satisfy the rent without taking them.[17] Where, however, a distress is given in the nature of an execution, as for poor rates, beasts of the plow may be distrained, although there is sufficient other distress.[18] By the English Agriculture Holdings Act,[19] "live stock taken in by the tenant to be fed at a fair price" are protected from distress.[20] The "fair price" agreed to be paid may include agreements for barter as well as for payment in cash.[21] By the English rule stray cattle are distrainable when they have been levant et couchant upon the land.[22] While this rule may not apply to conditions in this country, yet when cattle of a third person have been put upon demised premises with the consent of their owner they are liable to distress.[23]

(v) Animals Feræ Naturæ. Animals feræ naturæ are not distrainable,[24] but if confined so that one may have property in them they may be distrained.[25]

(vi) Implements of Trade or Profession. Implements of trade are privileged from distress, if they be in actual use at the time, or if there be other sufficient distress on the premises. But if they be not in actual use, or if there be no other sufficient distress on the premises, then they may be distrained for rent.[26]

Public market.— Goods bought for the purpose of making a profit, by sale on the prem-

person permitted to be placed on the demised premises purely as matter of favor, and without hope of reward, are not exempt within this principle.[32]

(B) As Auctioneer. The goods of a third person, on the premises of an auctioneer for the purpose of sale, are not liable to distress for rent,[33] even though the auctioneer may have made advances thereon, for which he may have a lien.[34] Goods sent to an auctioneer to be sold in a room hired by him from one who has no authority to let are privileged from distress while they are in that room for the purpose of being sold at auction,[35] and the fact of such room never having been used as an auction room before, and only being hired for the occasion, is immaterial as regards the privilege of the goods from distress.[36] So goods deposited in an open yard belonging to the premises in the occupation of an auctioneer, for the purpose of being sold at public auction, are privileged from distress.[37] This privilege of distress is confined to goods on the premises of an auctioneer, and does not extend to goods sold on the premises of the owner.[38]

(C) As Factor or Commission Merchant. The goods of a principal in the store of his commission merchant for sale are not liable to distress for rent due by the latter to the landlord of the premises.[39] And the landlord, if he knows that the goods are so owned, and has them sold under distress, is liable to the owner in trespass.[40] This rule does not apply where a retail dealer receives goods for which he agrees to pay, after they are sold, the invoice price at which the seller sells the same goods to others, the purchaser to retain all he gets for the goods over and above the invoice price, as his commission.[41]

(D) As Warehouseman. Goods of which a warehouseman has custody in the way of trade cannot be legally distrained for arrears of his rent.[42]

(E) For Purpose of Manufacture. All goods sent to a tradesman to be wrought upon in the way of his trade are during the time they remain in his custody protected from distress,[43] but this privilege does not extend to the machinery

By the laws of New Brunswick, being in that respect the same as those of England, a common warehouse, in the sense in which the word is used in relation to distress for rent in arrear, is a building, or an apartment in one, used and appropriated by the occupant, not for the deposit and safe-keeping for the selling of his own goods, but for the purpose of storing goods of others placed there in the regular course of commercial dealing and trade, to be again removed or reshipped. (F) Under Contract of Hiring. As a general rule property in possession of a tenant under a contract of hiring is subject to the landlord's right of distress for rent.[45] In some states it is provided by statute that all organs, pianos, and melodeons hired by a tenant shall be exempt from execution and distress from rent, provided the owner, or his agent, or the person hiring the same shall give notice to the landlord that the instrument is leased or hired.[46]

(X) Property of Guest of Hotel or Boarding-House.[47] It has been held broadly that the goods of a boarder are not liable to be distrained for rent due by the keeper of a boarding-house,[48] although such property is not in his possession, but in the possession and actual use of the tenant by his permission, and without the consent of the landlord;[49] but the better rule seems to be that the goods of a boarder in a boarding-house are exempt from distress for rent only to the extent of such articles as are in his use as a boarder.[50] Goods deposited with a tavern-keeper for safe-keeping are not protected from distress unless the deposit was made by a guest at the tavern.[51]

(XI) Property Subject to Mortgage or Other Security. In some jurisdictions a landlord cannot distrain goods of his tenant subject to a bona fide mortgage to another person, even though the goods remain in the possession of the tenant.[52] In others it is held that a tenant mortgaging chattels has such an interest in them as may be levied upon under a distress warrant.[53] While in still other jurisdictions goods mortgaged by a tenant to a stranger and left in the tenant's possession on the premises may be distrained upon the principle that a stranger's goods are subject to distress if found on the demised premises.[54] Goods conveyed by a tenant by a deed of trust to a trustee for payment of debts, but allowed to remain in possession of the tenant on the premises are subject to distress;[55] but goods conveyed by the tenant to secure the payment of an accommodation note, made by the landlord and indorsed by a third person, are not subject to distress while the third person remains liable as indorser.[56]

(XII) PROPERTY IN CUSTODY OF THE LAW—(A) In General. It is well settled that property in the custody of the law cannot be distrained for rent.[57] Thus the landlord cannot distrain goods for rent which have been previously levied upon on an execution,[58] or attachment.[59] At common law, in order to place a tenant's goods in custodia legis, by an execution and levy, the sheriff was obliged not only to take but also to keep actual possession of the goods, and if he relinquished possession by withdrawing from the premises without leaving a person in charge the goods were no longer considered to be in the custody of the law and might be distrained.[60] But in some states it is held that property of a tenant taken into an officer's custody is not liable to distress by the landlord, although it is permitted by the officer to remain on the leased premises.[61] After a sale of the goods by the officer having them in custody, they again become liable to distress,[62] but a reasonable time after the sale is allowed a purchaser in which to remove them.[63] What is a reasonable time for removal is a question of law when there is no dispute about the facts.[64]

Right to rule — New Jersey.— A landlord who is entitled to have his arrears of rent paid before the removal or sale of goods levied on will be allowed a rule that the proceeds of the sale under execution be applied to pay his rent. Fischel v. Keer, 45 N. J. L. 507.

A constable is within the provisions of the statute requiring sheriffs to pay rent before him notice.[67] It was formerly held that this notice must be given to the sheriff before the goods were removed;[68] but later this doctrine was overruled, and notice after the removal of the goods was held sufficient, provided it was given before the sheriff had actually paid over the money.[69]

(3) To Whom Preference Given. Some cases hold that the statute applies only between a landlord and his immediate lessee and not as between landlord and subtenant.[70] Others hold that it extends also to the case of landlord and subtenant.[71]

(4) Upon What Property Operative. In some jurisdictions the landlord is entitled to his preference whether the goods levied on under execution belong to the tenant or any other person;[72] in others only when they are the property of the tenant.[73]

(5) Extent of Preference. A landlord's claim for rent out of the proceeds of an execution is coextensive with his right of distress, and only the sum due for rent which can be collected by distress can be demanded.[74] He is entitled to a preferred claim for rent up to the time the goods are taken in execution, although it be in the middle of the term, but not up to the time of sale.[75] Where a levy is made under a number of executions, and the proceeds of the sale are not sufficient to satisfy all of them, a landlord's claim on the proceeds for rent will be reckoned up to the date of the levy made under that execution which was the last to participate in the fund.[76] When the levy of a second execution is made pending the first, the landlord is entitled to be paid his rent out of the proceeds up to the date of the second, instead of the first, levy.[77] The landlord is not confined, in his claim for rent, to the rent for the last year, or that immediately preceding the levy, the removal of goods taken in execution on demised premises. Ungles v. Graves, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 191.

so that no more than one year's rent be received;[78] and it is immaterial if the time for which the rent is claimed is included in two successive leases.[79]

(XIII) PROPERTY IN CUSTODY OF RECEIVER OR ASSIGNEE IN INSOLVENCY. In some jurisdictions the goods of a lessee found upon the demised premises are liable to be distrained for rent, although the tenant had, previous to the rent becoming due, made an assignment of them to an assignee for the benefit of creditors.[80] In others it is held that where a tenant applies for the benefit of insolvent laws, his property comes under the custody of the law, for the benefit of his creditors, and is not subject to distress for rent.[81] So also after a receiver has been appointed and has taken the rightful possession of the property, it is in custodia legis and cannot be distrained upon without the permission of the court by whom the receiver was appointed.[82] The mere appointment of a receiver, however, is not sufficient to place the property in custodia legis. Actual possession is necessary to accomplish this.[83] If the receiver accepts the term held by the debtor, the goods on the premises will remain liable to distress.[84]

14. PROCEEDINGS TO DISTRAIN — a. In General — (I) DEMAND AS CONDITION PRECEDENT. Except in cases of special liens for rent on crops made on land rented,[85] a landlord may distrain for rent without any previous demand for payment from the tenant.[86] To this general rule there are several exceptions. Thus, where rent is payable at a place off the land, or distress is authorized in case the rent is in arrears after being lawfully demanded at such place;[87] or where the lease stipulates for the payment of rent at certain periods of time, or at any time the same becomes due,[88] the lessor cannot distrain without a previous demand of the rent. So also, where the tenant contracts to pay rent in certain commodities, according to order, a demand is necessary before the rent can be distrained for.[89]

(II) JURISDICTION AND VENUE. Where a tenant leaves the state, a court of the county in which the property levied upon is situated has jurisdiction of a proceeding to distrain.[90]

(III) APPEARANCE. A proceeding by distress stands like any other case upon the docket; and if defendant fails to appear in the time prescribed by the rules of the court he may be defaulted the same as in an ordinary action.[91]

b. Affidavit and Other Pleadings — (I) Necessity and Sufficiency of Affidavit — (A) In General. As a condition precedent to the issuance of a warrant, it is generally required by statute that the petitioner therefor make affidavit to certain facts. The facts differ in different jurisdictions, but the statute must be substantially complied with.[92] The affidavit for a distress warrant should state for what reason the warrant is demanded,[93] even if the statute which prescribes the requisites of an affidavit contains no provision that the ground for the writ should be stated in the affidavit.[94] Where the grounds relied on are stated, it precludes the assumption that any other ground was relied on.[95] If the affidavit purports merely to give the legal effect of the contract between the parties without setting out the contract in haec verba, it should, if it is claimed that the contract amounts to a demise, allege that fact.[96] Where the proceeding is by the assignee of the landlord, the affidavit must set forth the contract of rent and the assignment of the lien, and must aver that there has been a demand for payment and a refusal, or give some excuse for the omission.[97] Unnecessary averments in an affidavit for a distress warrant are surplusage and do not vitiate it if it be sufficient in other respects.[98]

(B) Statement of Amount Due and Time of Accrual. The affidavit should contain a statement that the rent is due,[99] the time when it became due,[1] the time for or during which it accrued,[2] and the amount thereof.[3] It is sufficient to

(c) Description of Premises. It is not necessary in an affidavit to procure a distress warrant to specify the particular premises out of which the rent issues,[5] but the county in which the leased property is located should be stated.[6]

(d) Amendment. Under the Georgia code[7] an affidavit for a distress warrant is amendable to the same extent and with the same consequences as in the case of ordinary declarations, and this right of amendment includes the supplying of vital and necessary averments omitted from the original affidavit,[8] but does not extend to adding a new and distinct cause of action.[9] Where the amendment of an affidavit has been properly allowed it is proper to allow the warrant to be amended so as to conform to the affidavit.[10] In Texas also an immaterial mistake in an affidavit for a distress warrant may be corrected by amendment,[11] but in Mississippi the affidavit on which a distress warrant issues cannot be amended.[12]

(ii) Persons Who May Make Affidavit. In some jurisdictions the affidavit required by the statute must be made by the person to whom the rent is due;[13] in others it may be made by either the landlord or his agent.[14]

(iii) Persons Who May Take Affidavit. The affidavit required for a distress warrant must be made before an officer possessing a general authority to administer oaths.[15] A justice of the peace has been held not such an officer.[16]

(iv) Counter-Affidavit. A distress warrant issued on an affidavit alleging that the rent distrained for is due and unpaid is sufficiently met by a counter-affidavit alleging that the sum distrained for under the warrant issued was not due at the time of issuing said warrant.[17] While such a denial fully meets the requirements of the statute,[18] defendant may set forth special matters of defense showing how and why the general denial is true.[19] With or without such special allegations he is entitled to support his defense by competent evidence.[20] Where after levy the progress of a distress warrant is arrested by a counter-affidavit denying that the sum distrained for is due, the warrant becomes mesne process, and the proceeding is converted into a suit for rent,[21] in which the form of the verdict or judgment is general and is for the amount found to be due;[22] and an action will not lie for the rent claimed while the proceeding is pending, unless the distress warrant is so defective that no recovery may be had thereon.[23] Where the counter-affidavit to a distress warrant has been dismissed on plaintiff's motion, the case passes out of the jurisdiction of the court, and is remanded to the sheriff by operation of law,[24] and the court cannot proceed to dismiss the warrant for insufficiency in plaintiff's affidavit.[25] After the counter-affidavit has been dismissed, a second one cannot be filed.[26]

(v) Petition or Declaration—(a) Necessity and Sufficiency. In those jurisdictions where a distress proceeding is not considered an original action it is not required to be tried on pleadings and a declaration is unnecessary.[27] Where, however, the proceeding is made an action, a petition or declaration is necessary.[28] A petition which states that the rent is due, but which shows upon its face that it is not due is insufficient.[29]

(b) Time of Filing. The petition is required to be filed on or before the appearance day of the first term of court after the issuance of the distress warrant,[30] and this requirement must be strictly complied with.[31] If the petition is not filed as required by statute, the tenant may move the dismissal of the case.[32] If, however, the petition is filed before the case is dismissed, the court may exercise jurisdiction and render judgment.[33]

(vi) Plea. A plea traversing a distress warrant is not strictly a plea in abatement, but a traverse merely of the warrant.[34] Where an affidavit of claim is filed with the declaration, defendant is bound to file with his plea an affidavit of merits.[35] Where the landlord has a right to distrain goods for thirty days after their removal from the premises, the question whether a distress was in the time limited may be raised by a plea of "hors de son fee,"[36] particularly where the landlord goes to the trial upon the merits.

(VII) ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE. A material variance between the pleadings and the proof is fatal.[37] So a variance between a distress warrant and a lease upon which it is issued, when offered in evidence, is fatal.[38] Evidence not based upon the allegations of the warrant is inadmissible.[39] A plea of set-off admits the justice of plaintiff's demand, and evidence inconsistent therewith is inadmissible.[40]

c. Issuance, Service, and Return of Warrant — (I) AUTHORITY TO ISSUE WARRANT. Any justice of the peace of the county in which the tenant resides may issue a distress warrant for the collection of rent.[41] The fact that the magistrate issuing such warrant is related to plaintiff will not render it void since the act is purely ministerial.[42] Where the petition and bond for a distress warrant are filed before one justice, another justice of the same county has no jurisdiction to issue a warrant thereon.[43]

(II) BOND FOR WARRANT. A bond and security is necessary to support a distress for rent as other process of attachment.[44] Where it is required that the bond shall be conditioned to pay damages in case the warrant "is illegally and unjustly" sued out, a bond conditioned to pay damages in case the warrant is wrongfully[45] or illegally[46] sued out is insufficient. The bond need not be signed by the principal, where his name is stated in the body of the bond.[47]

(III) FORM AND CONTENTS OF WARRANT. A warrant is a writ and should run in the name of the state,[48] and in favor of the principal.[49] It must be in writing,[50] but the law requires no set form of words. It is sufficient if the authority of the landlord appear.[51] It need not be subscribed in the name of the principal, but if signed by an agent in his own name as agent for his principal it is a good execution of his authority.[52] And it has been held that if the person signing the warrant is in fact the agent of the landlord, the warrant is a sufficient authority to the constable, although not signed in terms as agent or for the landlord by name.[53] The warrant must disclose that the tenant resides or has property in the county of its issuance, since a showing of one of these facts is necessary to the justice's jurisdiction.[54] The premises need not be described in a distress warrant,[55] at least not with the particularity necessary to a conveyance of the premises.[56] Nor is it necessary to specify the day on which the next term of the justice's court to which the warrant is made returnable is to be held, when this is fixed by statute;[57] the reasons why rent is due as set forth in the affidavit;[58] or the year for which the rent is due.[59] Where the rent is payable in specific articles, a warrant is not vitiated by the use of the term "damages" instead of "rent,"[60] and if the value of the specifics is subject to fluctuation, the statement in the warrant of the amount of the specific article due and that it is supposed to be of a particular value is sufficient.[61]

(IV) SERVICE OR LEVY OF WARRANT—(A) Manner of Service—(1) BY ENTRY THROUGH DOOR. Under a warrant of distress, a landlord has no power at common law to break open the outer door of any building,[62] or to unlock it with a key in his possession;[63] but he may open it in the ordinary way in which other persons using the building are accustomed to open it.[64] A forcible reëntry by breaking the outer door is permissible, however, after the landlord has once obtained peaceable possession of the premises and been forcibly put out of them.[65]

(2) BY ENTRY THROUGH WINDOW. An entry to make a distress through an open window,[66] or by further opening a window which is partly open,[67] is lawful. But an entry by forcibly breaking in a window,[68] by opening a window which is fastened by means of a hasp,[69] or which is shut but not fastened,[70] is unlawful, rendering the landlord a trespasser.

(3) BY CLIMBING OVER FENCE OR WALL. The landlord may distrain for rent by climbing over a wall or fence and gaining access to a house by an open door or window.[71]

(4) BY BREAKING THROUGH CEILING. A landlord who occupies an apartment over the demised premises, from which it is divided only by a board floor without any ceiling, may distrain for rent by taking up the floor of his own apartment and entering through the aperture.[72]

(5) BY CALLING IN POLICE OFFICER. In making a distress for rent, circumstances may occur which may require the presence of a police officer. But to justify the landlord in calling him in, it must be shown that his presence was rendered necessary, either by threats or resistance or by apprehension of violence.[73]

pay it;[74] neither should it be made on Sunday,[75] or during the night.[76] This latter rule must be taken to mean not merely that a distress must not be taken in the dark,[77] but that it must be between sunrise and sunset.[78]

(c) Persons Entitled to Serve—(1) At Common Law. At common law a landlord could distrain in person,[79] or employ a bailiff or agent to distrain for him.[80] Some cases hold that the distress, when made by a bailiff, should be in the name of the landlord.[81] In other cases it is held that, although one having authority to distrain for another says at the time that he distrains for rent due himself, he may nevertheless justify as bailiff of another.[82]

(2) By Statute. By statute now in some states the distress must be made by a constable or sheriff.[83] When the warrant is directed to the sheriff, that officer may execute the warrant by his deputy, whose acts will be regarded as those of the sheriff himself.[84]

(d) Effect of Levy. The levy of a distress warrant does not have the effect prima facie of satisfying the debt.[85]

(v) Impounding Distress. The distinction between a distress and the impounding is a distinction which affects the substantial rights of the parties.[86]

If there be anything wrongful in the distress, the tenant may rightfully rescue the goods before the impounding, but if the distress be once impounded, the goods cannot be taken, although the distress was without cause. Exch. 180, 6 M. & W. 564.

Before the statute of 11 Geo. II[87] a distress could only be impounded by removing it off the premises.[88] That statute does not relieve the landlord from the necessity of impounding or otherwise securing the distress to effectually protect his rights; it only empowers him to turn any part of the premises upon which the distress is taken into a pound for securing the distress.[89] To constitute an impounding the place where the goods are impounded need not be locked;[90] neither is it necessary that the landlord should retain actual possession of the goods.[91] Thus where with the consent of the tenant the person distraining makes an inventory of part of the goods distrained, serves it, together with notice of the distress, on the tenant, and leaves a man in possession of the premises, but does not disturb, lock up, or remove any of the goods, the distress is sufficiently impounded.[92] A party distraining in a dwelling-house must not take the whole of it in which to place the goods, but should select one room for that purpose, or remove them out of the house;[93] and the distrainor must show that the house, or that part of it of which the doors are locked, is the most fit and convenient place for securing the distress.[94]

(VI) NOTICE OR CITATION TO TENANT. In some jurisdictions notice of the distress with the cause of the taking must be given the tenant, against whom a distress warrant has issued.[95]

(VII) BOND TO RELEASE LEVY—(A) In General. Where a tenant disputes the claim of his landlord, he may secure the release of the property distrained by giving a proper bond.[96] Such a bond should cover the whole condemnation money, even if but a part of the property levied upon is sought to be released,[97] and should include the officer's fees.[98] A replevy bond in distress proceedings is an unconditional obligation to pay the judgment, etc., irrespective of the validity of the proceedings,[99] and its validity is not affected by the fact that too great an amount of rent is distrained for.[1] The bond should be executed by the tenant in possession or by the owner of the property,[2] and may be made payable either to the officer,[3] or to plaintiff in the proceeding.[4] The bond should be made returnable to the court to which the officer levying the distress belongs, or to the court of that county in which the land lies.[5] Where an officer levying a distress warrant surrenders the property on an insufficient bond, he may peaceably retake possession of and sell the property to satisfy the distress, although the warrant, he having returned it, is not in his hands;[6] but if goods taken on a distress warrant be replevied without an objection to the bond, and the time limited by law to replevy be expired, they cannot be retaken by virtue of the warrant on the ground that the surety is insufficient.[7]

(B) Effect of Release. Where property distrained is released by giving bond, as provided by statute, the specific lien on the property seized is at an end,[8] and it is liable to any other distress or encumbrance, or may be sold by defendant.[9] The distrainor has no remedy left except upon the replevin bond.[10]

(VIII) Claim of Exemption. A subtenant or assignee of the original tenant who has never been recognized by the landlord cannot claim exemption on a distress levy on his goods, where the process is in the name of the original lessee.[11] The original tenant may make such claim to protect the goods of his subtenant or a stranger, but neither of the latter parties is within the letter or the spirit of the law.[12] A demand of exemption should be made promptly, before the landlord takes any steps involving costs.[13]

(IX) Claims of Third Persons. It is provided by statute in some states that where goods in the possession of a tenant are distrained for rent, a person claiming them may interpose his claim and have a trial of the right of property.[14] This right must be maintained through replevin,[15] and the claimant is not entitled after the sale to bring an action of trespass.[16] In order to warrant an intervention, a claimant must have an interest in the subject-matter of the landlord's suit, that is, the debt due the landlord.[17] The amount of such indebtedness as against a claimant is concluded by the judgment of the landlord against the tenant.[18] On the trial of an issue arising under a claim interposed to the levy of a distress warrant, plaintiff, in order to make a prima facie case entitling him to subject the property levied upon, must show that the property belonged to defendant;[19] but he is not entitled to show that the warrant was unlawfully or improperly issued.[20] Where, however, the levy is defeated by the annulment of the distress proceeding, and this fact is shown, the claimant is entitled to have the proceeding abated or dismissed.[21] A claim of property operates as a release of damages by the claimant, both against the officer who levied upon the property and the landlord.[22] Where the claimant goes to trial without objection to the jurisdiction, he waives objection;[23] and the fact that the distress warrant is returnable to another district does not entitle him to have the levy dismissed.[24] Where the facts show that the claimant has abandoned his claim, it should be dismissed.[25]

(x) Return of Warrant. At common law a distress warrant, not being judicial process, need not be made returnable before the justice or court.[26] In some states the warrant by statute operates as a declaration in an action, and the law imposes upon the officer executing the warrant the duty of returning it to the proper court,[27] but imposes no obligation upon the justice issuing it to embody this mandate in the warrant itself.[28] Before the officer is authorized to return the papers, and the court to try the issue, the party distrained must replevy the property by making oath that the sum distrained is not due, and by giving security

In Georgia, at the monthly session of the county court, it has jurisdiction of issues on distress warrants where the amount does not exceed one hundred dollars, and at its quarterly session it has jurisdiction where the amount is in excess of that sum and not more than three hundred dollars. Therefore where a justice of the peace issues a distress warrant for two hundred and thirty-five dollars, returnable to the next term of the county court, it is properly returned to the next quarterly session, although a monthly term intervenes. Rivers v. Hood, 72 Ga. 194.

for the eventual condemnation money.[29] Parol evidence will not be admitted to contradict or explain the return of an officer on a warrant of a distress.[30]

d. Hearing and Determination — (I) Powers of Justice and Scope of Inquiry. A distress warrant, in resistance to which no written defense of any kind has been interposed, presents nothing for trial by any court; the warrant alone forming no issue for adjudication.[31] Justices of the peace who issue distress warrants for rent alleged to be due in arrear have no judicial power, on the return of the warrant and replevy bond taken under it, to go behind the warrant and determine whether the rent is due or not;[32] but their authority is confined to determining what amount the tenant is entitled to set off against the landlord's claim for rent.[33]

(II) Evidence. After issue made by the counter-affidavit of defendant, it is incumbent on the landlord to prove that the rent had matured before the distress warrant issued.[34] The distress warrant is not of itself prima facie evidence of the indebtedness.[35] Any competent evidence to show that the rent is not due is admissible on behalf of the tenant.[36] If the tenant fails to obtain possession of any portion of the premises he may show that fact.[37] On an issue as to whether the tenant was about to remove the property from the premises any competent evidence to prove that fact is admissible.[38] Mere intention to remove property from the premises, accompanied by no overt act, must be proven by clear preponderance of evidence.[39] Incompetent and immaterial evidence, outside the issues as made, is inadmissible.[40]

(III) Amount of Recovery. In an action of distress for rent a landlord cannot recover a larger sum than that claimed in the warrant,[41] and he must show himself entitled to that sum or the warrant will not be sustained.[42] Nor can he recover in addition to the amount due for rent a claim on any other account.[43] A tenant can of course reduce the amount by proving payment of part.[44] Under a statute allowing double damages to the landlord, where the tenant releases on bond goods distrained for rent found to be justly due, and in arrear, the double recovery cannot be had where only a part of the rent distrained for is found to be due.[45]

(IV) Questions For Jury. It is within the province of the jury to determine questions of fact presented on the trial of a distress for rent.[46]

(v) Instructions. The right of a landlord to recover rent does not depend on the legality of a distress warrant issued in the cause, and it is error to direct the jury to find for defendant if the grounds stated in the affidavit for the distress warrant are untrue.[47] Instructions not based upon the evidence[48] or the pleadings[49] should not be given. An instruction covered by a charge already given is properly refused.[50]

(vi) Verdict and Findings. Verdicts in distress proceedings should receive a reasonable construction and are not to be avoided unless from necessity.[51] A verdict contrary to the evidence, however, cannot be sustained.[52]

(vii) Adjudication. In some states a justice has no authority to enter any judgment in distress proceedings.[53] In others the practice in cases of distress for rent in justices' courts is the same as in cases of attachment; if plaintiff succeeds, judgment is to be given in his favor for the amount of rent due him; and if defendant has been served with process or appears in the action, such judgment is to have the same force and effect as in suits commenced by summons.[54] Where the property seized under the distress warrant has been replevied by defendant, the landlord, on recovery in the suit, is entitled to judgment on the replevy bond for the amount of rent found to be due him, interest thereon, and costs, or for the value of the property replevied, according to the terms of such bond.[55] No judgment, however, can be taken on a rent contract not due at the date of judgment.[56]

(viii) Execution. Where the court has authority to render judgment and award execution, it may take bail for the stay of execution, and issue scire facias thereon as in other cases.[57]

(ix) Costs. The same method of defraying expenses in distress proceedings is pursued as in attachment cases.[58]

e. Sale or Other Disposition of Property — (i) Appraisement — (a) Necessity and Sufficiency. At common law the landlord had no right to sell property taken under a distress, but was obliged to keep the same as a pledge until it was redeemed by the tenant.[59] Under statutes permitting sale it is commonly provided that five full days must elapse after the day on which notice of the distress is given before an appraisal of the goods can be made or notice of sale given,[60] and the days must be calculated inclusively of the last and exclusively of the day of taking.[61] After the expiration of the five days from the time of distress, a reasonable time is allowed the landlord for appraising and selling the goods distrained.[62] The statute of William and Mary providing for a sale is permissive and not compulsory, and therefore no action lies for not selling;[63] but when a landlord distrains and does not sell the goods, he cannot bring an action for the rent so long as he holds the distress, although it is insufficient to satisfy the rent,[64] and the tenant may still replevy the goods.[65] When goods have been sold under a distress and the proceeds are insufficient to satisfy the rent due, the landlord has a remedy by action or counter-claim for the balance.[66] Under the statute, goods seized under a distress should be appraised by two sworn appraisers.[67] They must be indiffer-

Two reputable freeholders.—Under the stat-

ent persons who are reasonably competent, but need not be professional appraisers.[68] The appraisers must be sworn before the constable of the parish where the distress is taken.[69] The constable who swears the appraisers must attend with the appraisers at the time of the appraisement, and must swear them before they make it.[70] The tenant to save expense may waive appraisement,[71] when the goods distrained belong to him,[72] and cannot thereafter complain of what was done as irregular;[73] but a bailee of property distrained for rent has no implied authority to waive appraisement in behalf of the owner.[74]

(B) Effect of Failure to Appraise or Irregular Appraisement. As the right to sell did not exist at common law but was given by statute, it must be exercised, if at all, on the terms which the statute imposes. The courts have no power to dispense with any one of these.[75] For this reason it was held in England under the statute of William and Mary[76] that a failure to comply with the statutory formalities in any particular rendered the landlord and his bailiff trespassers ab initio and liable to the owner of the goods seized for their full value, regardless of the rent due. The inconvenience and injustice resulting to landlords from the application of this legal principle was relieved against by the statute of 11 Geo. II,[77] which provided that the landlord, his bailiff or agent, should not become a trespasser ab initio by reason of any irregularity or tortious act in the disposition of a distress seized, but that for any injury sustained by the tenant or owner of the goods, by reason of such irregularity or tortious act, such tenant or owner should recover the actual damage sustained and no more.[78] In some jurisdictions the principle of this statute has not been adopted. A failure therefore to make an appraisement of the goods or the making of it before the lapse of five full days after the seizure is a failure to follow the statutory requirements on which the right to sell is given, and a sale made under such circumstances, not being under the protection of the act, is unauthorized and void.[79] The measure of damages where a distress is sold without previous appraisement is the real value of the goods sold minus the rent due.[80]

(II) NOTICE OF DISTRESS AND SALE. Before an appraisement can be lawfully utes of some states the two appraisers must be reputable freeholders. Curtis v. Bradley, 75 Ill. 180; Snyder v. Boring, 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 196.

made, notice of the distress with the cause of taking, and an inventory of the goods, must be left at the mansion house or other most notorious place on the premises charged with the rent distrained for.[81] This notice should be in writing,[82] and be sufficient to inform the tenant or the owner what goods are taken, and the amount of rent in arrear.[83] In Pennsylvania six days' public notice of sale is also required,[84] but it is not essential that the sale take place on the day fixed by the notice.[85]

(III) Manner of Sale. The manner of sale in such cases is not prescribed by the statute. If the goods be prepared and offered for sale, and the sale be fairly conducted at public auction, the price realized will be presumed to be the best that can be gotten, and the landlord will not be responsible.[86] But it is well settled that an action will lie against a landlord for improper management of the property, and an improper offering of it for sale, so that it did not sell for the best price.[87] What will constitute such mismanagement as will make the distrainor liable must depend upon the circumstances of each case, and the character of the property seized and sold.[88]

(IV) Validity, Operation, and Effect of Sale. A private person levying a distress warrant has no right to sell the property; the law requires the sale to be made by a public officer.[89] The money is payable to him, to be applied according to law, and he is responsible under his official bond for such disposition of it.[90] In establishing title to personal property acquired by sale on a distress warrant, all conditions precedent must be made to appear,[91] but the loss of the papers on which the distress is made after the distress and before the sale will not affect the title of the purchaser.[92] After the sale has been advertised, a reasonable adjournment thereof may be lawfully made, by public announcement, without further advertising,[93] and such an adjournment will not postpone the distress to an intervening execution.[94]

(v) Right to Surplus. By the statute of William and Mary[95] and some statutes in this country, it is provided that the proceeds of the sale, after payment of the rent and reasonable charges, shall be left in the hands of the sheriff, under sheriff, or constable, for the use of the owner.[96] Notwithstanding this statute, it is the practice to pay over such surplus to the tenant and not to the sheriff, and therefore inability to find the tenant is a sufficient excuse for not paying it over.[97] If the landlord fails to leave the overplus in the hands of the sheriff, he is not liable to the tenant in an action for money had and received; the proper remedy being an action on the case for failure to comply with the statute.[98] Before action is brought for such overplus, a demand must be made therefor under statute 27 Geo. II.[99] The bringing of the action is not a sufficient demand, and a tender does not dispense with proof of it.[1] If any goods remain unsold, the bailiff is not obliged to deliver them to the right owner. He may restore them to the premises from which he removed them, and may leave any stranger who claims them to enforce his right against the tenant.[2]

(vi) Right of Owner of Property Distrained Over Against Tenant. The tenant on whose premises the goods of a stranger are distrained for rent is liable over to such stranger,[3] who may buy them in at the sale and maintain an action for money paid against such tenant,[4] and his cotenant, their joint property being benefited by the payment of the rent.[5]

f. Defects, Objections, and Waiver Thereof — (i) Defects and Objections. Immaterial[6] or clerical[7] defects do not affect the validity of the proceedings; but where the defect is not a mere irregularity, but one that renders the whole proceeding void, the levy should be dismissed.[8] The account, affidavit, and warrant must be read together, as parts of an entire proceeding, and a defect or omission in one part may be cured by reference to the others.[9] Objection to the jurisdiction of the court should be raised by motion to dismiss the levy or to quash the warrant.[10] Objection that the petition does not sufficiently set out the items of account can only be raised by exception to the petition.[11]

ing goods under a landlord's warrant acts merely as the agent of the landlord and not as an officer of the law; and hence the presumption that he has complied with all preliminary steps necessary to his authority to act does not apply.[12]

(III) Waiver of Defects and Irregularities. Any irregularity in making a distress is waived by entering into a replevin bond.[13]

g. Liability on Bonds — (I) On Bond For Warrant. Under a statute providing for a bond to be given by a landlord suing out a distress warrant, conditioned to pay such damages as the tenant may sustain in case the warrant has been "illegally and unjustly sued out," the illegality and injustice must have concurred to make the landlord liable,[14] and where the writ is merely illegally issued, no damages upon the bond can be recovered.[15] Defendant is not restricted to a suit on the bond, but may claim damages in reconvention.[16]

(II) On Replevin or Forthcoming Bond — (A) In General. It is provided by statute in many states that a defense to the levy of a distress warrant may be entered on giving security for the eventual condemnation money.[17] A replevin bond is not a security for the debt sued on, but for the forthcoming of the property levied on, or its value.[18] If the property be abandoned by plaintiff, or if he takes no judgment of foreclosure upon it, then the sureties are released.[19] If the statutory conditions of a bond are departed from, but the departure makes it less onerous, the bond may still be enforced.[20] So the fact that the warrant is for more rent than is due will not prevent recovery on the bond.[21] Under a statute permitting a claimant of property levied upon to have a trial of the right of property, upon furnishing a bond, failure to establish his right to the property renders the sureties liable.[22] Quashing a distress warrant quashes the levy thereunder and discharges the sureties on a claimant's[23] or a replevin[24] bond. A replevin or forthcoming bond should carry interest,[25] from the date of the bond,[26] but it does not secure costs.[27]

(B) Summary Proceedings to Enforce. In some states the landlord may proceed on the bond when forfeited, either by regular action, or under the statute in a more summary way by motion.[28] Motion for judgment under such a statute can only be made by the person to whom the bond is made payable, unless by virtue of an assignment.[29] To entitle the landlord to the benefit of the statutory proceedings by motion, he must proceed regularly, according to the directions of the statute,[30] and must prove the contract of rent on which the distress was sued out.[31] A defendant in a distress warrant who executes a bond thereby admits that he is either tenant, assignee, or under-tenant, and cannot, in a motion for judgment thereon, rely upon a defense which denies that character.[32] Objection that the notice given on a bond executed to release a distress for rent for a trial before a justice was defective comes too late when first raised on appeal.[33] Judgment on a claimant's bond may be recovered on a cross bill in the action on which the bond was given, without causing citation to be served on either the principal or surety to the bond, or notice to the surety.[34]

(III) ACTIONS. An action against principal and surety on a forthcoming bond is maintainable without advertisement of the property for sale, and without proving that any personal demand therefor has before suit been made upon defendants, where it appears that it is physically impossible for them to produce the property in response to any such advertisement or demand.[35] In such an action plaintiff must prove the contract of rent for which distress was sued out,[36] and the tenant may plead and show in defense that the distress was for rent not due at the time of suing out the distress warrant mentioned in the bond.[37] A payment of the debt may always be shown, and the fact that a claim is interposed and withdrawn will not prevent such proof.[38] It is otherwise, however, if the claim has been tried, and a judgment rendered finding the property subject. In such case defendants will be estopped.[39] If the rent due be more than the value of the goods distrained, then the value of the goods is the measure of damages in an action on a forthcoming bond;[40] but if the value of the goods be more than the rent in arrear then the rent due is the true measure.[41] Where the suit is on behalf of a special owner against the general owner, the measure of damages is not the whole value of the property, but only the value of the interest of the special owner therein.[42] are usually concurrent remedies and the injured party may adopt the one which he may find the most appropriate.

(II) After Tender of Rent Due.[47] Case lies as well as trespass for a distress made after tender of the rent due.[48] Where the tender is made after distress taken, but before it is impounded or removed, the tenant may maintain replevin,[49] or trespass for a subsequent removal;[50] but a landlord who accepts the rent in arrear after a lawful distress and impounding cannot be treated as a trespasser merely because he retains possession of the goods distrained, although his refusal to deliver them up may amount to a conversion, sufficient to make him liable in an action of trover.[51]

(III) Where No Rent Due—(A) Common-Law Liability. A distress when no rent is due is wholly without authority, and the landlord is a trespasser ab initio.[52] For such an illegal distress an action of trespass lies; the party suing, however, is not confined to this remedy, but may waive the trespass and bring case.[53]

(B) Statutory Action For Double Damages. In some states, however, a statutory action is now given where a distress is made before the rent falls due to recover double the value of the property distrained. It is a condition precedent to the right to recover under such a statute that the rent shall not be due;[54] and the action will not lie if at the time of distraining there is any rent due, although the distress be for more than is due, or even though there be no right to distrain for the rent due.[55] In some jurisdictions it is also necessary that a sale shall take place under the distress before the rent falls due;[56] in others this is not required,[57] and double damages are recoverable, although the owner of the property distrained has regained possession thereof.[58] An action to recover double the value of the goods distrained can only be maintained by the tenant, and not by a stranger whose goods have been distrained instead of the tenant's.[59] The persons subject to the penalty differ in different jurisdictions. In some the "person or persons distraining" are made liable to the action, and not to the "person or persons in whose name the distress shall be made."[60] In others the statute applies to the landlord alone and not to the officer acting under the warrant.[61] To authorize the recovery of double damages, the petition must declare under the statute,[62] or conclude to the damage of plaintiff contrary to the form of the statute.[63] Since this remedy is merely cumulative, however, the tenant is not restricted to this measure of damages, but may pursue his common-law right.[64] It would seem, however, that an action under the statute cannot properly be joined with an action of trover.[65]

(iv) For More Rent Than Due. Distraining for more rent than is due is not actionable,[66] unless the goods seized are excessive in regard to the sum really due;[67] and the fact that the distress is maliciously made is immaterial.[68] The tenant's course is to tender the amount really due, and, if the landlord refuses to accept that sum, to replevy the goods and try the disputed question of amount in an action of replevin.[69]

Although the sale does not realize the rent due, an action will lie for an excessive distress. Smith v. Ashforth, 29 L. J. Exch. 259.

Growing crops.— An action on the case lies for an excessive distress where the excess consists wholly in taking growing crops, the probable produce of which is capable of being estimated at the time of seizure. Piggott v. Bertles, 2 Gale 18, 5 L. J. Exch. 193, 1 M. & W. 441, 1 Tyrw. & G. 729.

Necessity of averment as to sale.— Where, in an action for excessive distress, there is no averment that the goods have been sold, or even that they have been detained, plaintiff cannot show that the goods were sold much under their value. Thompson v. Wood, 4 Q. B. 493, 3 G. & D. 518, 7 Jur. 303, 12 L. J. Q. B. 175, 45 E. C. L. 493.

Necessity of allegation of rent due.— In an action for excessive distress plaintiff need not allege or prove the precise amount of rent but trespass[71] or replevin[72] does not lie. No action lies for excessive distress where but one thing can be taken, although it much exceeds in value the amount of the distress.[73] The landlord is permitted to make a reasonable distress, and he is not bound to confine himself to the precise amount of rent due. To knowingly claim more rent than is due and levy for it would be wilfully and maliciously making an excessive levy; but a mere mistake in judgment as to the value of the property seized or a want of knowledge of the sum due does not render him a trespasser.[74] Express malice need not be proved.[75]

(VI) For Irregular Distress. At common law, if there was any irregularity in conducting the proceedings upon a distress for rent legally made, the parties become trespassers ab initio.[76] This rule was altered by the statute of 11 Geo. II,[77] which has been adopted in some of the United States, and which provided that when a distress was lawfully made, and any irregularity was committed in the subsequent proceedings, the party aggrieved might recover full satisfaction for the special damages sustained in an action of trespass or of trespass on the case, according to the nature of the irregularity.[78] Under the English statute it has been held that trover will not lie where goods have been irregularly sold after a legal distress,[79] but it has been held otherwise in this country.[80] It was also held in England that if a distress was regular in other respects trespass could not be maintained for an omission to appraise,[81] but case was held to lie for such irregularity.[82] Trespass lies for continuing on the premises and disturbing the tenant's possession after the time allowed by law.[83] In no case, however, can the tenant maintain a suit for an irregular distress, unless he shows that he has thereby sustained special damage.[84]

b. Estoppel of Tenant to Maintain Action. Plaintiff may waive the want of legal authority to distrain so as to prevent him from maintaining trespass.[85] The owner of the goods illegally distrained forfeits no rights by not making claim to

due. Sells v. Hoare, 1 Bing. 401, 8 E. C. L. 576, 1 C. & P. 28, 12 E. C. L. 29, 2 L. J. C. P. O. S. 56, 8 Moore C. P. 451.

c. Set-Off and Counter-Claim. In a suit by a tenant against his landlord for wrongful distress, the latter may recoup to the extent of rent unpaid,[89] although the rent may not be due.[90] So also where crops are unlawfully distrained, the distrainor may recoup the expense of harvesting them.[91] Set-off by the tenant is not allowed in an action of replevin.[92]

d. Persons Liable. For the wrong worked by an excessive or an irregular distress, both landlord and bailiff are responsible, and the tenant may maintain his action against both or either of them.[93] Where the seizing of goods as a distress is illegal, the officer or agent who executes the warrant is of course liable to the party injured;[94] but in the case of an illegal distress there is some difference of opinion as to the landlord's responsibility. In some states the landlord is held responsible for the wrongful acts of his agent, even though they be wilful or reckless, if the act done be within the scope of his employment.[95] In others of the United States and England, the tenant's remedy is held to be against the bailiff only, unless the landlord has no right to distrain, or unless the illegal act complained of is specifically directed by the landlord, or subsequently adopted and approved.[96]

e. Measure of Damages — (i) When Distress Wrongful Ab Initio. Where, in an action for an illegal distress, the landlord is a trespasser ab initio so as to make his possession of the goods wholly wrongful, the measure of damages is the full value of the goods seized,[97] with interest thereon to the time of trial.[98]

(ii) When Merely Irregular. Where a distress is originally lawful, but the subsequent proceedings are irregular in some particular, the tenant can only recover the actual damage sustained.[99] In such a case the measure of damages is the fair market value of the goods distrained less the amount of rent due.[1] It has been held, however, that nominal damages may be recovered, although no actual damage is proved.[2]

(iii) When Excessive. In an action for an excessive distress, the measure of damages is not the value of the property seized, but the inconvenience and expense which the tenant sustains in being deprived of the management of such property, or which he is put to in procuring sureties to a larger amount than ceedings from the landlord. Moulton v. Norton, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 286.

IX. TERMINATION OF TENANCY.

A. Notice to Quit — 1. Necessity. A notice to quit is not, in the absence of contractual or statutory provision, necessary to the termination of a term for years;[6] but such a notice is as a rule requisite in the case of tenancies from year to year,[7] from month to month,[8] or from week to week;[9] or in the case of tenancies at will[10] or at sufferance.[11] The necessity and sufficiency of a notice to quit as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action[12] or summary proceeding[13] to recover possession of the premises is elsewhere treated.

2. Persons Who May Give Notice. Notice to quit must in general be given by the lessor,[14] or by an agent of the owner or lessor who has authority to let the premises or special authority to give the notice.[15] It has been held to be sufficient if the authority of the agent be subsequently recognized by the landlord,[16] although the better rule seems to be that the agent should have authority at the time the notice begins to operate, and that a subsequent recognition by the landlord is not sufficient.[17] A general agent may give a notice to quit in his own name,[18] but it is otherwise if the agent has but a special or limited authority.[19] If there are several lessors or joint tenants a notice to quit must be signed by all at the time it is served if given by one of them,[20] unless such joint lessors are partners, in which case a notice to quit in the names of all signed by one only is valid.[21] After a mortgage of the reversion, where a mortgage is regarded as passing the legal estate, a notice to quit may be signed by the mortgagee.[22] A mortgagor who has a general authority from the mortgagee to determine tenancies may sign a notice to quit in his own name;[23] but the mere fact that he remains in possession after default, receiving the rents and giving receipts in his own name, will not authorize him to do this.[24]

3. Persons to Whom Notice Should Be Given. A notice to quit served on the original lessee binds the under-tenants,[25] particularly when they have acquired possession after service of the notice.[26] A notice to one of two tenants in common is sufficient to determine the tenancy as to both.[27] If a tenant leaves the premises and another takes possession, it may be presumed that he came in as assignee, and notice may be properly given to him.[28]

4. Sufficiency.[29] At common law notice to a tenant to quit, unless otherwise stipulated by agreement of the parties, was sufficient if verbal.[30] It has been said, however, that notice to quit should be given in writing when the lease itself is written,[31] and it is now frequently provided by statute that the notice given shall be in writing.[32] In construing a notice to quit the court will look to the intention of the parties, and if doubtful language is used they will give it a sensible meaning if possible.[33] A notice to quit must be such as the tenant may act upon in safety; that is, one which is in fact, and which the tenant has reason to believe to be, binding on the landlord.[34] Such a notice is good if upon the whole it is intelligible and so certain that the tenant cannot reasonably misunderstand it.[35] The notice must fix a time for the tenant to quit[36] and also describe the premises with such certainty that the tenant cannot be misled.[37] It is not necessary that the notice should be directed to the tenant in possession, if proved to have been delivered to him at the proper time;[38] nor is it invalidated by a mistake in the christian name of the tenant, if his family on receiving it understand it to be intended for him,[39] or the tenant keeps it and does not send it back.[40] If premises are leased together a notice to quit part thereof is bad.[41]

5. Service. Service of notice to quit may be made by any one authorized by the lessor to serve it.[42] It should be served upon the tenant personally when that can be conveniently done;[43] if it cannot, it may be served upon one whose duty it is to give it to him.[44] Thus if personal service on the tenant himself cannot be effected it is held that the notice may be left with the wife,[45] servant,[46]

or agent[47] of the tenant at his usual place of residence, whether on the demised premises or not.[48] In England it is held that the contents of the notice should be explained to the servant with whom it is left,[49] but no such rule seems to obtain in America.[50] The notice cannot be given by leaving it at the tenant's place of business in his absence instead of at his residence.[51] It has been said that any manner of service will suffice if it clearly appears that the notice reached the party for whom it was intended within the time provided by the statute.[52] Hence service of a notice by mail, postage prepaid, has been held sufficient;[53] but if there is no evidence that the letter was stamped, there is no prima facie evidence of service.[54] It is sometimes provided by statute that a notice to terminate a lease may be served by posting it on the premises in case no one is in actual possession.[55] If the tenant is a corporation, a notice served on its officers is sufficient.[56] A notice to quit is good, although given on Sunday.[57]

6. Proof. Service of notice to quit may be shown by any one having knowledge of the fact;[58] by the return of the one making the service, indorsed on the notice[59] or on the duplicate;[60] by an admission of the tenant that he received such notice;[61] or by other evidence showing that it came into his hands within the time prescribed by statute.[62] Notice to quit may be proved, it has been held, by a duplicate or examined copy without any notice having been given to produce the original.[63]

the landlord by the subsequent acceptance [66] or recovery [67] of rent accruing after the expiration of the notice, but not by the subsequent acceptance of rent accruing prior to the time for the termination of the tenancy.[68] Nor is a demand of rent,[69] or the mere acceptance of rent by a landlord for occupation subsequent to the time when the tenant ought to have quit according to the notice given him for that purpose, a waiver of such notice, but matter of evidence only, to be left to the jury under the circumstances of the case.[70] The question of waiver of notice to quit is always in part a question of intent.[71] If there is any doubt as to such intent, it is a matter of fact to be left to the jury.[72] The giving by a landlord to a tenant of notice to quit, after the expiration of a prior notice, is a waiver of the first,[73] except where a suit based on the first notice has been commenced when the second notice is given, and its prosecution is thereafter continued.[74]

(II) Right to Notice. A landlord may also waive his right to a notice of intention to quit,[75] as when he accepts another person as tenant in the place of the former tenant and receives rent from him,[76] or accepts the possession of the leased premises without objection,[77] or consents to an abandonment thereof.[78] So if the tenant informs the landlord that he will remain but for a short time after the term and pay rent at the old rate, and the landlord acquiesces, the tenant is not required to give notice of his intention to quit.[79]

b. By Tenant. Notice being for the protection of the tenant may be waived by him,[80] and if he does so and goes out of possession he has no right to go back on the premises.[81] Thus a tenant waives notice to quit by disclaiming the relation of landlord and tenant,[82] or by disclaiming any right to the premises under certain circumstances.[83] No continuance of the tenancy is necessarily implied from the mere fact of a tenant continuing in possession after the expiration of a notice to quit given by such tenant.[84] It is for the jury to decide whether or not the tenant, by remaining in possession, intends to waive the notice and continue the tenancy.[85] Nor will the fact that the tenant leaves the premises in an untenantable condition have this effect.[86]

c. Defects in Notice. If either the landlord or tenant waives any objection to the informality of a notice served upon him by the other, or by his words and conduct leads the latter reasonably and properly to understand that he waives such informality, he cannot afterward object that the notice is insufficient.[87] Such a waiver may be evidenced by express agreement or by declarations and conduct from which a fair implication of it arises.[88] It has been said that when an insufficient notice to quit has been given the mere aquiescence of the party receiving it cannot have the effect of putting an end to the tenancy;[89] but it is usually held that such acquiescence and failure to object to the sufficiency of a notice amounts to a waiver of a regular notice.[90] It is for the jury to say whether the fair inference from all the evidence is that the informality was waived.[91]

lord.[9] No notice to quit is necessary even though the lease is a parol one,[10] and void by the statute of frauds.[11] So, where the expiration of the lease depends on the happening of a collateral event, no notice to quit is necessary on the happening of such event.[12]

(B) Dependent on Provisions in Lease. Where the lease is determinable at the option of the lessor or of the lessee or both, before the expiration of the term, a notice to quit, or a notice of an intention to quit, is necessary to evidence the exercise of such option.[13] For instance the lease often provides for a fixed term, with the privilege of holding over for a definite time on condition that notice be given.[14]

vested,[16] applies to a notice of intention to quit, which is given pursuant to provisions in the lease therefor, where the tenancy is terminated before the end of the term.[17]

(iv) SUFFICIENCY. The notice to quit must be precise and definite as to the time when the surrender is required to be made.[18] Where the lessor is given power to terminate the lease for certain purposes, as where he desires to sell, the notice to quit must state the ground for terminating the lease.[19] Acts of the landlord done with knowledge of the lessee may be equivalent to a formal notice.[20] The sufficiency of notice, as provided for in particular leases, is governed by the terms of the particular lease.[21]

2. OPTION OF PARTIES. It is often provided in a lease for a year or years that it may be terminated at the option of one or both of the parties to the lease, before the expiration of the term. Whether the option may be exercised by either of the parties,[22] or solely by the lessor,[23] or the lessee,[24] or only by the joint assent of both lessor and lessee,[25] depends on the terms of the particular lease. Whether the lease is terminated by the lessor,[26] or by the lessee,[27] there must be a strict compliance with the provisions in the lease in regard thereto by the party seeking

3. Death of Party to Lease. An ordinary lease is not terminated by the death of either the lessor[30] or the lessee.[31]

4. Termination of Landlord's Estate — a. In General. As a general rule the lease is terminated by the expiration of the lessor's estate.[32] For instance the tenant may terminate the tenancy by delivering up possession where the estate of the lessor has been extinguished by a forfeiture to the state for non-payment of taxes.[33]

b. Sale by Landlord to Third Person. A voluntary sale of the premises by the landlord, while terminating the relation of landlord and tenant as between the original lessor and the tenant,[34] does not terminate the lease, unless there is a provision in the lease to that effect.[35] The tenancy is terminated by the sale if the lease provides that the tenant shall surrender possession on the landlord's compliance with certain terms, such as the giving of a specified notice to the tenant,[36] the payment of a stipulated sum as damages,[37] the payment of a reasonable valuation for the unexpired term,[38] or a repayment to the tenant of all sums paid as rent,[39] if there is a compliance with such conditions.

c. Sale by Operation of Law — (i) Mortgage Foreclosure Sale. A sale of the demised premises, on the foreclosure of a mortgage antedating the lease, terminates the lease,[40] although it has been held that the purchaser at the sale once on sale of the property after the expiration of the three years, and not that, if the property was sold within the three-year period, the lease should expire at the end thereof.

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 300.

A colorable sale, without intending to make a valid legal transfer of the title for a good consideration, will not terminate the lease, although it provides therefor on a sale of the premises. Ela v. Bankes, 37 Wis. 89.

36. Ronginsky v. Grantz, 39 Misc. (N. Y.) 347, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 839 (holding that the term ended as soon as the lessor sold the premises and notified the tenant, and paid the sum fixed by the lease); Matthews v. Lloyd, 36 U. C. Q. B. 381.

What constitutes sale.— Where a husband and wife executed a lease, and the husband subsequently conveyed a life-estate to her with remainder to others, and she conveyed her life-estate, there was a sale within the meaning of the lease. Aydlett v. Neal, 114 N. C. 7, 18 S. E. 973; Aydlett v. Pendleton, 114 N. C. 1, 18 S. E. 971.

Sufficiency of notice and service.— In the absence of any provision in the contract as to the particular form of the notice, any notice which will distinctly inform the tenant that the sale has been made is a "proper notice." Millan v. Kephart, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 1. A notice by the purchaser that he had bought the land and that the lease was ended, and demanding possession, was sufficient, although it did not expressly require the removal of a building erected by the lessee. Aydlett v. Neal, 114 N. C. 7, 18 S. E. 973; Aydlett v. Pendleton, 114 N. C. 1, 18 S. E. 971. Where the lease provided for a thirty days' notice in writing, service by mail is sufficient. Bloom v. Wanner, 77 S. W. 930, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1646.

By whom notice to be given.— Where the lease was executed by husband and wife, and he subsequently conveyed a life-estate to her with remainder to others, and she conveyed her life-estate, the purchaser from her was a proper person to give notice that the lease was ended, and the failure of the remainderman to join was immaterial. Aydlett v. Neal, 114 N. C. 7, 18 S. E. 973; Aydlett v. Pendleton, 114 N. C. 1, 18 S. E. 971.

Stipulation as inuring to grantee.—A stipulation in a lease that, if a sale of the property shall be made during the continuance of the lease, the lessees will vacate and deliver up possession on thirty days' notice in writing, is a covenant which runs with the reversion and inures to the benefit of the grantee of the fee. Hadley v. Bernero, 97 Mo. App. 314, 71 S. W. 451.

Necessity for entry.— Where a lease provides that the lessor may terminate it at the end of any year by giving sixty days' notice, in case he should desire to sell, and notice is given after a sale, the lease is terminated sixty days after such notice, without an entry or any further act on the part of the lessor. Miller v. Levi, 44 N. Y. 489.

Waiver of notice.— A notice required to be given by the lease is not waived by the statements of the tenant in reply to the statement of the grantees that they intended to remove him, that he understood he had rented the place for a year, and that if they intended to remove him the sooner they started their action the better it would suit him. Mitchell v. Matheson, 23 Wash. 723, 63 Pac. 564.

37. King v. Ransom, 86 Wis. 496, 56 N. W. 1084.

Termination as optional with lessor.— A provision in a lease that in case of a sale the landlord should give the tenant sixty days' notice, and return a deposit made to secure the rent, together with five hundred dollars, to surrender the premises, was not for the benefit of the tenant, and he could not claim the stipulated sum, where the purchaser was willing to continue the lease. Suppl. 348, holding that, where the lessee was permitted to remain in possession the entire term, although there had been a sale of the premises during the term, he could not retain possession until the rent which had been paid by him during the term was refunded, where no notice to quit was given until the end of the term.

Y. Suppl. 134 (holding that where the mortgage was foreclosed, and the decree provided that the purchaser should be given possession on production of the referee's deed, the lessee was not obliged to demand from the purchaser the production of such deed before he could surrender the premises and determine his liability); Alford v. Carver, 31 Tex. Civ. App.

has the right to affirm or disaffirm the lease.[41] Where the lease was made before the mortgage, the purchaser at foreclosure sale takes as assignee of the reversion, and cannot terminate the lease.[42]

(II) EXECUTION SALE. Except where the matter is regulated by statute,[43] the general rule is that the lease is terminated, at the option of the purchaser, by a sale of the demised premises under an execution against the property of the landlord,[44] provided the judgment under which the execution was issued was rendered before the lease was made.[45] The relationship as between the original lessor and his tenant is not terminated, however, until the purchaser takes possession.[46] Furthermore the sale of a part interest in the demised premises does not dissolve the lease as to the entire premises.[47]

d. Acquisition of Landlord's Title by Tenant.[48] Where the lessee of land becomes the owner thereof in fee, the lease is terminated, and the lesser estate is merged in the greater.[49] This rule is held to be of the same general application without regard to whether the tenant acquired title by a voluntary deed of the landlord,[50]

Redemption by tenant as mortgagor.— Where the mortgagor of land sold under the mortgage leases it from the purchaser and redeems within the statutory period, but after the rent is due, such redemption is not a defense to an action for the rent. Perkerson v. Snodgrass, 85 Ala. 137, 4 So. 752.

Sale after making of second lease.— Where there is an outstanding lease for years, and the reversioner makes a second lease to a third person, to commence immediately, it is a vested estate, and will entitle the second lessee to take the rents reserved by the former lease, although his right of possession will not commence until the expiration of the first term; and after the making of the second lease, if the first lessee becomes owner of the reversion, his lease will not merge in the greater estate; but if the term of the second lease, instead of commencing immediately, be to commence on the determination of the former term, then, on the first lessee acquiring the reversion, his term will merge, and the term of the second lease commence at the same time. Logan v. Green, 39 N. C. 370.

by descent,[51] devise,[52] purchase at execution or judicial sale,[53] or by mesne conveyances.[54] So where a subtenant becomes the owner of a reversion the sublease[55] and the original lease[56] are terminated. There is no merger, however, as against prior liens, such as an attachment made while the lease was in force.[57] And the lease is not terminated by a merger where there is an intervening estate.[58]

e. Options or Agreements to Purchase. The relationship is not terminated because of the existence of an option allowing the tenant to purchase,[59] or an executory contract of sale,[60] unless the option is acted upon,[61] and the conditions are fully performed.[62] So an agreement to convey at the end of the term does not work a merger before that time.[63]

5. Acquisition of Tenant's Estate by Landlord. The reconveyance of the leasehold estate to the landlord usually terminates the lease,[64] where accompanied by a surrender of the premises to the landlord.[65] But a conveyance by the lessee to one of the lessors does not work a merger.[66] Nor can a joint lessee affect the rights of his co-lessees by conveying to his lessor.[67]

6. Eviction and Similar Acts — a. In General. An actual eviction of the tenant by title paramount or by the wrongful act of the landlord terminates the relation and absolves the tenant from liability for subsequently accruing rent.[68]

Presumptions.— The mere non-payment of rent for twenty years will not raise a presumption that the landlord's title to the land is extinguished by a conveyance to the tenant or otherwise. Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 123, 15 Am. Dec. 451. Where a lease is executed at the same time that a mortgage is given to the lessee to secure the payment of money to be paid at the expiration of the lease, it will be presumed that the mortgage was first executed, so that it will be no bar to the recovery of the rent due on the lease. landlord to repair, where he is bound to do so, whereby the premises become untenantable, authorizes the lessee to abandon the premises. Coleman v. Haight, 14 La. So the failure of the landlord to carry out his agreement to heat the rooms leased as offices authorizes the tenant to abandon the rooms. Filkins v. Steele, 124 Iowa 742, 100 N. W. 851. But an agreement on the part of the landlord, indorsed on the lease, to make certain improvements in consideration of the letting, is an independent agreement, a breach of which does not terminate the lease. Ellis v. McCormick, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 313. And a lease cannot be avoided for the landlord's failure to make repairs where such failure is caused by obstacles interposed by the tenant. Vincent v. Frelich, 50 La. Ann. 378, 23 So. 373, 69 Am. St. Rep. 436. Furthermore a landlord, after failing to use reasonable diligence to restore the premises to a tenantable condition, on notice from the tenant of his intention to abandon the premises as soon as he can make arrangements, cannot, by commencing the delayed repairs before the tenant has in fact abandoned the premises, deprive him of the right which has accrued to abandon the same. c. Injury to, or Destruction of, Building[75]— (i) Common-Law Rule. Where not controlled by statute or by express provisions in the lease, including covenants as to repairing or rebuilding, a lease of land on which there is a building is not terminated by an accidental injury to, or destruction of, the building.[76] On the other hand, where the land on which the building rests is not leased,[77] as where the lease is of a room or rooms in a building,[78] and there are no covenants to repair or rebuild, the destruction[79] of the premises terminates the lease.

(ii) Statutory Provisions. In most of the states statutes have been passed which change the common-law rule that destruction of the premises does not terminate the lease, and, while they differ to some extent, they usually provide in effect that where any building which is leased or occupied is destroyed or so injured by the elements or any other cause[80] as to be untenantable and unfit for occupancy,[81] and no express agreement to the contrary has been made in writing,[82] the

The payment of rent after the destruction of the building will not continue the tenancy beyond the time of such payment. Kerr v. Merchants' Exch. Co., 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 315.

Lease during "life of building."— A lease during the life of the building of the third story thereof with a covenant to repair is terminated when a fire subsequently destroys the demised part and renders it impracticable to rebuild the same, except by the rebuilding of other important parts not demised. Ainsworth v. Mt. Moriah Lodge, 172 Mass. 257, 52 N. E. 81.

79. See Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Shay, 37 Ill. App. 542, holding that where the walls and main floor were left intact, except a small hole in the ceiling of a portion of the building rented by defendant, there was not a destruction terminating the lease of the main floor, with the use of the elevator, although the upper stories were destroyed by fire, and the steam-heating apparatus and elevator rendered useless.

80. Meserole v. Sinn, 34 N. Y. App. Div. 33, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 1072, holding that an injury by rain soaking into the ground and running into the cellar, so as to render the premises untenantable, was within the clause "for any other cause," and that an injury to the premises themselves by a sudden action of the elements is not necessary.

81. Crown Mfg. Co. v. Gay, 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 420, 13 Cinc. L. Bul. 188, holding that where the landlord had agreed to furnish the tenant with power for manufacturing purposes, the destruction of the building from whence the power is supplied, and the temporary cutting off of the supply, do not render the leased premises "unfit for occupancy."

A partial destruction of leased premises dissolves the lease, if the premises are thereby rendered unfit for use by the lessee and several months are required for necessary repairs. Meyer v. Henderson, 49 La. Ann. 1547, 16 So. 729.

82. Roman v. Taylor, 93 N. Y. App. Div. 449, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 653 (holding that the statutory right of a lessee to surrender when the building becomes untenantable is taken away, so far as such condition is caused by fires, by a provision of the lease that the tenant shall in case of fire give notice to the landlord, who shall cause the damage to be repaired, but if the premises be so damaged that the landlord shall decide to rebuild the term shall cease); May v. Gillis, 53 N. Y. App. Div. 393, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 4 (holding that the statute is waived by the tenant covenanting in his lease to make all outside and inside repairs).

The statute does not apply where the matter is regulated by an express provision in the lease. Butler v. Kidder, 87 N. Y. 98; Roman v. Taylor, 93 N. Y. App. Div. 449, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 653.

lessee may, if the destruction or injury occurred without his fault or neglect,[83] quit and surrender[84] possession of the leasehold premises.[85] Such statutes have no retroactive effect, however, so as to apply to leases made prior to their enactment.[86]

(III) Provisions in Lease. Independent of statute the lease terminates on the destruction of the buildings, or their becoming untenantable, where it is so provided in the lease;[87] but a partial destruction of the building does not terminate a lease which provides for its termination if the premises are destroyed.[88]

83. Senac v. Pritchard, 5 La. 480, holding that the statute relates only to cases where the lessee is not in default, and cannot be extended to a case where he violates the contract.

Resumption of occupancy after repairs.— The statute does not terminate the lease of the tenant who resumes occupancy after repairs, and continues to pay rent, which is accepted by the landlord without objection. Boston Block Co. v. Buffington, 39 Minn. 385, 40 N. W. 361.

85. Viterbo v. Friedlander, 22 Fed. 422, construing Louisiana statute to cover overflow from Mississippi river of sugar cane plantation.

Extreme cases.— The Louisiana statutes do not favor abrogation, except in extreme cases; the proper remedy is indemnification pursuant thereto. Denman v. Lopez, 12 La. Ann. 823; Dussnau v. Generis, 6 La. Ann. 279.

Expense of removing débris.—Where premises are rendered untenantable by fire, and the tenant surrenders them, the expense of removing the débris occasioned by the fire falls upon the landlord. Fleischman v. Toplitz, 134 N. Y. 349, 31 N. E. 1089; Decker v. Morton, 31 N. Y. App. Div. 469, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 172.

Damage from water.— Damage to a leased apartment from water used in extinguishing a fire in another part of the building is within the provision of the lease as to rights of the tenant in case of damage to the leased premises from fire. Roman v. Taylor, 93 N. Y. App. Div. 449, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 653.

Omission of clause in lease by mistake.— Where it appears that a clause securing the tenant from payment of rent, on destruction of the premises by fire, had been agreed to by the parties, but through inadvertence omitted from a lease, such lease will, after the destruction of said premises, be ordered to be surrendered and canceled. Wood v. Hubbell, 10 N. Y. 470, Seld. 110.

Questions for jury.— Where the evidence as to damages conflicts, the question whether the premises were rendered untenantable by fire is one for the jury. Schutz v. Corn, 5 N. Y. St. 19. So where the lease provides for its termination in case the premises should be rendered untenantable by fire or other casualty, the question whether the flooding of leased premises from a sewer constitutes a casualty within the meaning of the lease is a question for the jury under proper instructions. Miland v. Meiswinkel, 82 Ill. App. 522.

By agreement the term of a lease may be continued after the destruction of the building, although the payment of rent is to cease. P. H. Snook, etc., Furniture Co. v. Steiner, 117 Ga. 363, 43 S. E. 775.

A provision for rebuilding by the lessor at his election, after destruction of the premises and notification to the lessee of his intent to rebuild, with a provision for the suspension of the rent until the rebuilding is completed, suspends the relation of lessor and lessee until the new building is ready for occupancy when the lease is renewed. P. H. Snook, etc., Furniture Co. v. Steiner, 117 Ga. 363, 43 S. E. 775.

Y.) 135, holding that a partial destruction by fire that could be repaired without rebuilding was not within the meaning of such a clause in the lease.

Damage to a leased building, different from partial destruction, gives to neither the lessor

(iv) Who May Terminate. The right to terminate the lease on a destruction of the building, while primarily for the benefit of the tenant, may, in the absence of special circumstances, be availed of by the landlord, although the tenant wishes to continue the tenancy;[89] but if the lease is of only a part of the building, and the leased premises are not injured by a fire destroying a part of the building, the lessor cannot terminate the lease, where the statute merely provides that the lessee may terminate the lease if the building is destroyed.[90]

7. Forfeiture — a. Definition. As used in this connection the word "forfeiture" refers to the right of the lessor to terminate the lease because of a breach of covenant or some other wrongful act of the lessee in connection with the demised premises. The word as used in a lease does not strictly speaking refer to any right given to the lessee to terminate the lease.[91]

b. Nature and Extent of Right in General. Forfeitures by acts of the parties to a lease, as distinguished from those decreed by a court which are not considered in this connection,[92] because of a breach of a covenant or condition or wrongful act of the tenant, are not favored by the courts;[93] and a stipulation or covenant permitting a forfeiture before the lease would otherwise terminate will be construed most strongly against the lessor.[94] But when the lease explicitly provides that the landlord may treat it as void on a breach of condition by the tenant, his election to do so dissolves the relation between him and his tenant.[95] The absence of actual loss from the acts of the lessee does not prevent a forfeit-nor the lessee the right to terminate the lease. Vincent v. Frelich, 50 La. Ann. 378, 23 So. 373, 69 Am. St. Rep. 436.

Putting up sign "to let."— Where the lessee after a fire abandons the premises, the act of the lessor in putting up a sign "to let" thereon, for the purpose of minimizing damages, does not amount to a termination of the lease. Vincent v. Frelich, 50 La. Ann. 378, 23 So. 373, 69 Am. St. Rep. 436.

Effect of failure to repair "as speedily as possible."—A tenant may surrender the premises, and thereby terminate all liability under a lease providing that, if the demised building is rendered untenantable by a partial destruction by fire, the landlord will repair it "as speedily as possible," where such a contingency occurs, and the landlord neglects to repair within a reasonable time, although the lease also provides that the rent shall cease until the repairs are all made. Bacon v. Albany Perforated Wrapping Paper Co., 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 592, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 620.

89. Gavan v. Norcross, 117 Ga. 356, 43 S. E. 771 (holding that where the lease is only for a store-room, the destruction of the building by fire terminates the tenant's interest in the land, and he has no right to damages for the landlord's refusal to permit him to occupy similar apartments in a new building); Buschman v. Wilson, 29 Md. 553; Winton v. Cornish, 5 Ohio 477 (lease of part of building); Davie v. Gay, 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 418, 13 Cinc. L. Bul. 133 (statute exempting lessee from duty to pay rent for destruction held not to give an exclusive option to the lessee). Compare Rowan v. Kelsey, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 484, holding that the tenant's interest in a lot of land in the rear of a building is not divested by a destruction of the building.

Notice as recognition of existence of lease. — Where, after a lease was terminated by destruction of the building, the landlord gave the tenant notice that his rights were forfeited for failure to pay rent, it was not a recognition by the landlord that the destruction of the building had not terminated the lease. ure,[96] although in such a case equity will generally relieve the lessee from the forfeiture.[97] Equity will never under any circumstances lend its aid to enforce a forfeiture.[98]

c. Who May Declare. The lessor,[99] or those persons who succeed to his rights,[1] are the only ones who may take advantage of a provision in a lease authorizing its forfeiture on the failure of the lessee to fulfil the covenants therein. The lessee cannot himself terminate the lease by a breach of covenant, where the lessor does not elect to take advantage thereof, since otherwise the lessee might obtain a benefit from his own wrong.[2]

d. Grounds[3] — (i) Breach of Covenant or Condition — (a) General Rule. Where the lease, or an independent agreement,[4] provides that a breach of one or more of the covenants in the lease shall work a forfeiture, the lessor may declare a forfeiture on the occurrence of the breach,[5] even though the condition

5. Christie's Appeal, 85 Pa. St. 463.

Breach by one of several tenants.—A severance of the occupation of demised premises, the rent being paid to the lessor by the respective tenants, is not a severance of the conditions of the lease, and a breach of the conditions of the lease by one of the occupants works a forfeiture of the whole lease. Clarke v. Cummings, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 339.

Abandonment of premises.— Failure of the lessee to pay rent, and his general conduct in connection with the leased premises, may be considered on the question whether there has been an abandonment of the premises, made by the lease a ground of forfeiture is a harsh one;[6] but trivial breaches of covenants have been held insufficient to work a forfeiture.[7] The forfeiture clause, while not applicable to implied covenants,[8] is usually construed as applicable to negative as well as affirmative covenants.[9] Furthermore the term "covenant" for breach of which a forfeiture may be declared has been held to include a stipulation in an unsealed agreement for a lease.[10]

(B) Necessity For Forfeiture Clause in Lease. A tenancy cannot be terminated for a breach of covenant by the lessee where there is no provision in the lease for a forfeiture or right of reëntry on the occurrence of the breach.[11] This rule applies equally well not only to a breach of covenant to pay rent,[12] but also thereof. Marshall v. Forest Oil Co., 198 Pa. St. 83, 47 Atl. 927.

Inconsistent agreements.—Where the purchaser of land leased it to the seller, and the lease provided for a yearly rent, and a retransfer to the lessee "or his assigns" on payment of a certain sum at the end of two years, a forfeiture cannot be declared under the clause against assignment which provides therefor, where the assignee tenders the sum agreed on for a retransfer, since the agreement for a retransfer and for a forfeiture are inconsistent. Shields v. Russell, 66 Hun (N. Y.) 226, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 909.

Mortgage of leasehold.—The mortgaging of the leasehold by the lessee has been held sufficient ground for forfeiture where the lease prohibits the transfer of it by the lessee under penalty of forfeiture (Becker v. Werner, 98 Pa. St. 555), especially where the lessee fails to pay the mortgage debt and the leasehold is sold under foreclosure; and it is immaterial that the lessee died before the sale under foreclosure (West Shore R. (F) Covenants to Pay Rent.[27] While a provision in a lease for a forfeiture or reëntry is necessary to authorize the lessor to terminate the tenancy, on the failure to pay rent,[28] except where the statute otherwise provides,[29] yet when the lease contains such a provision, the lessor may proceed to end the lease on the breach of such covenant,[30] notwithstanding the failure to pay was not wilful.[31] Of course the landlord cannot terminate the lease until the expiration of the whole of the day on which the rent is payable;[32] and if the lease provides that the rent shall not be payable until a certain time after it accrues, he has no right to reënter until the expiration of that time.[33] The lessee cannot rely on a set-off or counter-claim to excuse his failure to pay the rent so as to prevent a forfeiture,[34] except in a case where the lessor has expressly or impliedly agreed thereto.[35] Payment of the

A voluntary assignment by the tenant for the benefit of creditors does not affect the right of the landlord to terminate the lease for non-payment of rent. Reynolds v. Fuller, 64 Ill. App. 134.

Security for rent.— The failure to give a chattel mortgage to secure a note for rent for the year as provided for in the lease does not authorize the lessor to terminate the lease on the lessee's failure to give, on demand in November, a mortgage securing the rent note falling due the following February for the year ending in the succeeding March. Stevenson v. Brodahl, 49 Nebr. 703, 68 N. W. 1024.

Enforcement against receiver.— Where a lease provided that if rent was unpaid the lessor might reënter, and after default in the payment of rent a receiver was appointed for the lessee, the lessor was not entitled to forfeit the lease until it appeared that the receiver was unwilling or unable to pay the overdue rent. Fleming v. Fleming Hotel Co., (N. J. Ch. 1905) 61 Atl. 157.

Nominal rent.—It seems that the non-performance of a condition of a public grant to pay annually an ear of corn as rent is not a ground of forfeiture. Vermont v. Propagation of the Gospel Soc., 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,919, 1 Paine 652.

The purpose of the provision for a forfeiture for failure to pay rent is merely to secure the payment of rent, and not to create a forfeiture of the lease, where the tenant acts in good faith and promptly pays the rent when demanded, or before the landlord suffers loss or unreasonable inconvenience from such delay. Wilson v. Jones, 1 Bush (Ky.) 173.

Redemption of forfeited lease.—The payment of arrears of rent by a third person, to whom the landlord granted a new lease, will not be presumed to be in redemption of the forfeited lease, in the absence of proof that such was the intention. Boardman v. Davidson, 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 439.

Excuse for failure to pay.— A failure to pay rent upon the first day of the month when due has been held excused by the fact that the lessor resided out of the state and had no agent within it, when the rent was paid on the fifth of the month, which was the first day that the lessor was in the city where the leased premises were situated. rent,[36] or a tender of the rent due,[37] after the time when the rent is due, but before a forfeiture has been declared, precludes the right of the lessor to thereafter terminate the lease because of the failure to pay rent on the day when it was due. On the other hand a tender made before the rent is due cannot preclude the lessor's right to declare a forfeiture, where the rent is not paid on the day due.[38]

(II) STATUTORY GROUNDS — (A) In General. In many states the breach of particular covenants is made a ground of forfeiture by statute, independent of any provision in the lease therefor.[39] For instance forfeiture is often provided for in case of a breach of the agreement not to assign or sublet,[40] or a failure to pay rent.[41]

(B) Improper Use of Premises. In some states, by statute, even though there is no forfeiture clause, the lessor may terminate the lease if the lessee uses the premises for an unlawful purpose,[42] such as for the sale of intoxicating liquors,[43] gambling,[44] or a house of ill fame.[45] Furthermore a statute authorizing a forfeiture permits the original lessor to terminate the original lease, although the unlawful use of the premises is by a subtenant.[46]

(III) DISCLAIMER OF TITLE. Where a tenant repudiates the relationship and sets up an adverse title in himself or a third person, the lessor may terminate the tenancy.[47] This rule, however, is subject to the qualification that no mere parol

disclaimer of itself,[48] nor the transfer by the lessee of the premises in fee,[49] will authorize a forfeiture. Furthermore the lessor cannot declare a forfeiture, in the absence of some unequivocal act of disclaimer,[50] a mere refusal to pay rent being held not such an unequivocal disavowal.[51] In determining the sufficiency of a disclaimer, the test to be applied is whether the acts amount to a repudiation of the tenancy sufficient to start limitations running in favor of the lessee.[52] There is a ground of forfeiture where the lessee attorns,[53] or gives up possession to,[54] a stranger. So where one accepts an adverse title from a stranger and claims thereunder, the lessor may forfeit the lease.[55] The disclaimer may be waived by the lessor by his subsequent acts, such as putting in a distress for rent.[56]

(IV) Statutory Provisions. In many of the states of the United States,[74] as well as in England,[75] and Canada,[76] the procedure to terminate the lease after a breach of covenant by the lessee is fixed by statute.[77] The common-law requirements as to a demand for rent on the premises on the day the rent is due are largely dispensed with[78] by substituting a notice to quit, which takes the place of a formal demand on the premises, such as was required at common law.[79] Under the most of such statutes the notice does not terminate the lease until the lapse of a

Entry by an agent after the tenant has failed to pay rent, and the execution of a lease by him to a third person, ratified by the lessor, and affirmed by the receipt of rent, constitutes a sufficient entry for a forfeiture to put an end to the original lease. Who may object to legality of forfeiture.— A mortgagee of the leasehold premises, under a mortgage executed prior to the forfeiture, cannot, in a proceeding to subject the premises to sale for payment of the mortgage debt after the lessor has entered for condition broken, be permitted to dispossess the lessor for want of proof on his part that the steps required to work a forfeiture were legally taken, especially where the lessee himself would be estopped to question the legality of the forfeiture by reason of his acquiescence in improvements made by the lessor thereafter. Persons who must join in notice.— Where lessors are tenants in common of leased premises, a notice of forfeiture by one of them, who does not act for the others, is effective only as to his individual interest. Updegraff v. Lesem, 15 Colo. App. 297, 62 Pac. 342. It is not necessary that the wife of the lessor in a ninety-nine-year lease, who has executed the lease merely to release her dower right, should join in the notice. Gunning v. Sorg, 113 Ill. The statute of 4 Geo. II, c. 28, provided that when there was half a year's rent in arrear and no distress on the premises, when there was a right of reëntry contained in the lease, the landlord might recover possession in the mode pointed out by that statute, without any formal demand for rent. A notice substantially complying with the provisions of the statute is sufficient. Cheek v. Preston, 34 Ind. App. 343, 72 N. E. 1048. A notice is insufficient if it requires the tenant who is in arrears of rent to deliver up the premises "forthwith." Oakes v. Munroe, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 282. But a notice is not bad for demanding immediate payment if it also specifies a proper time within which forfeiture may be avoided. Howland v. White, 48 Ill. App. 236. An erroneous description of the lease may vitiate the notice. Henderson v. Carbondale Coal, etc., Co., 140 U. S. 25, 11 S. Ct. 691, 35 L. ed. 332. Sufficiency of notice in general see Henderson v. Carbondale Coal, etc., Co., 140 U. S. 25, 11 S. Ct. 691, 35 L. ed. 332.

Refusal to pay under a claim of right to the reversion, being a denial of the landlord's title, confers upon him an immediate right of reëntry, without giving the statutory notice to quit for non-payment of rent. Clark v. Everly, 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 226.

Effect of notice.— A notice from a landlord to the tenant to quit for non-payment of rent is a rescission of the contract of leasing (Stromberg v. Western Tel. Constr. Co., 86 Ill. App. 270), and terminates the relation specified number of days,[80] during which time the lessee may prevent a forfeiture by paying the arrears of rent.[81]

f. Effect.[82] The lease is terminated by a reëntry and reletting by the landlord for breach of covenants,[83] but not by a mere attempt to rent the premises to third persons where the lessees are not disturbed in their possession.[84] A reëntry for breach of covenant or condition precludes the right to recover rent which has not accrued before the reëntry,[85] but does not render the lease void ab initio.[86] If the lessee has sublet the forfeiture terminates the estate of the sublessee.[87]

g. Waiver — (i) Failure of Lessor to Enforce. The occurrence of a ground of forfeiture does not of itself work a forfeiture. A condition subsequent in a lease that upon neglect of the lessee to perform his covenants the lease shall determine and be void does not render the lease absolutely void upon a default of the lessee, but merely voidable at the election of the lessor, so that if he elects to waive the forfeiture the lessee is bound as though there had been no breach of condition.[88] So, where the statute declares that the lease is forfeited on the occurrence of certain events, it merely means that it may be forfeited by the lessor on such occurrence.[89] A fortiori, where the lease itself provides that the lease shall of landlord and tenant, especially after the tenant removes from the demised premises (Donnan v. Moore, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 65).

Hodgkins v. Price, 137 Mass. 13, holding that the fourteen days after the service of the notice to quit, within which the tenant may pay the rent, begins to run from the time of the receipt of the notice by the lessee and not from the time it is left at the lessee's dwelling-house, which is not on the demised premises.

Under the Illinois statute ten days' notice is sufficient, within which time a tenant may prevent a forfeiture by paying or tendering the arrears in rent. Chapman v. Kirby, 49 Ill. 211; Chadwick v. Parker, 44 Ill. 326.

An extension of time for the payment of the rent waives the right of forfeiture for failure to pay such rent. Lewis v. Ocean Nav., etc., Co., 125 N. Y. 341, 26 N. E. 301.

Breach of covenants as to assigning or subletting may be waived (Grovenburgh v. McKaough, 117 Mich. 555, 76 N. W. 776; Smith v. Edgewood Casino Club, 19 R. I. 628, 55 Atl. 884, 36 Atl. 128; Kansas City Elevator Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 17 Fed. 200, 3 McCrary 463. Co., 22 Mo. App. 315; Koehler v. Brady, 163 N. Y. 565, 57 N. E. 1114 [affirming 22 N. Y. App. Div. 624, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 984]; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Settegast, 79 Tex. 256, 15 S. W. 228. But see Medinah Temple Co. v. Currey, 162 Ill. 441, 44 N. E. 839, 53 Am. St. Rep. 320), or by the acceptance of a sublessee's check turned over to the lessor by the lessee, where he had knowledge of the facts (Trauerman v. Lippincott, 39 Mo. App. 478); but applying for a receiver of rent, in an action by a lessor to recover possession of the demised premises because of a breach against subletting, is not a waiver of the right to enforce a forfeiture because of such subletting (Ireland v. Nichols, 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 222). See, generally, supra, IV, B, 1, f, (IV).

Breaches of covenants as to the use and repair of the premises may be waived by oral agreement as to the violation (Moses v. Loomis, 156 Ill. 392, 40 N. E. 952, 47 Am. St. Rep. 194); but mere acquiescence (Kemp v. Sober, 15 Jur. 458, 20 L. J. Ch. 602, 1 Sim. N. S. 517, 40 Eng. Ch. 517, 61 Eng. Reprint 200; Doe v. Brindley, 5 L. J. C. P. O. S. 3, 12 Moore C. P. 37, 22 E. C. L. 625); or acts not inconsistent with the forfeiture are insufficient (Hills v. Rowland, 4 De G. M. & G. 430, 22 L. J. Ch. 964, 1 Wkly. Rep. 422, 53 Eng. Ch. 336, 43 Eng. Reprint 375; Flower v. Duncan, 13 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 242). So a forfeiture for breach of a covenant to repair may be waived by acts which recognize the lease as still in force (Doe v. Lewis, 5 A. & E. 277, 31 E. C. L. 613, 2 H. & W. 162, 5 L. J. K. B. 217, 6 N. & M. 764, 36 E. C. L. 661; Bargent v. Thompson, 4 Giffard 473, 9 Jur. N. S. 1192, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 365, 66 Eng. Reprint 792); but not by a notice given under a covenant to repair within three months, where there is also a general covenant to repair (Roe v. Paine, 2 Campb. 520. Contra, Doe v. Meux, 4 B. & C. 606, 10 E. C. L. 722, 1 C. & P. 346, 12 E. C. L. 207, 7 D. & R. 98, 4 L. J. K. B. O. S. 4, 28 Rev. Rep. 426); and an agreement to allow the tenant further time to repair suspends but does not waive the right to reënter (Doe v. Brindley, 4 B. & Ad. 84, 2 L. J. K. B. 7, 1 N. & M. 1, 24 E. C. L. 46).

Subsequent notice to quit.— A notice terminating the lease for breach of a covenant is waived by a subsequent notice to quit waiver of the forfeiture;[94] but it is generally held that the lessor does not waive a ground of forfeiture by merely remaining passive, after knowledge of the breach or a continuance thereof,[95] although a waiver may be inferred from acquiescence inducing the tenant to incur expense in connection with the demised premises.[96] The waiver may be by words or acts,[97] or even by allegations in a pleading in an action between the parties to the lease.[98] The waiver by the lessor of one ground of forfeiture is not a waiver of the breach of other independent stipulations.[99] But the assertion of one ground of forfeiture, so as to terminate the tenancy, precludes the right to rely on another ground which existed at the same time.[1]

(III) Acceptance of Rent — (A) Rent Accruing After Breach. The acceptance by a landlord of rent which accrues after the breach of a condition contained in the lease is a waiver of the right to declare a forfeiture of the lease and reënter because of such breach,[2] provided the acceptance was with full knowledge based on the breach of another covenant. Dockrill v. Schenk, 37 Ill. App. 44. So a ground of forfeiture is waived by subsesequently serving a notice to terminate the lease on another distinct ground. Frazier v. Caruthers, 44 Ill. App. 61.

use of the premises,[8] a covenant to insure the premises,[9] or a covenant to repair.[10] The breach of a covenant against subletting is not a continuing one so far as there is only one subletting,[11] but a lessor does not, by waiving his reëntry on one underletting, lose his right to reënter on a subsequent underletting.[12] A covenant against assigning the lease is not a continuing one.[13]

(D) Time of Acceptance. The acceptance of rent after a lease has been forfeited is not a waiver.[14] Thus acceptance of rent after an ejectment suit[15] or other action to enforce the forfeiture[16] has been brought, or after a reëntry,[17] is no waiver unless otherwise provided by statute. But while the acceptance of rent accruing after a breach of the lease may not restore the lease, where the landlord has avoided it by a judgment, yet it is a parol acknowledgment of the tenancy.[18]

(E) As Affected by Intention of Lessor. The effect of acceptance of rent which has subsequently accrued as a waiver cannot be changed by statements of the lessor that he does not intend to waive his right to a forfeiture.[19]

L. 178, holding that a demand for rent subsequent to the expiration of a notice to quit was not necessarily a waiver of the notice, to recover rent accruing after such date,[21] is a waiver of the right to terminate the tenancy, as well as an acceptance of rent; but it is not a waiver where the demand or action relates to rent which accrued before the ground of forfeiture existed.[22] A distress for rent, which accrued before or after the cause of forfeiture, waives the forfeiture because it affirms the existence of the tenancy,[23] and this is so, although insufficient goods were found to satisfy the demand;[24] but the distress is not a waiver of the right to forfeit for breaches of covenant occurring thereafter.[25]

(v) LAPSE OF TIME. The lapse of time after knowledge of a breach by the lessee authorizing the lessor to terminate the lease may be so great as to constitute a waiver of the right to declare a forfeiture,[26] or at least to raise a presumption of a license or other act constituting a waiver;[27] and it has been held that the lessor may waive the forfeiture by neglecting to assert his right within a reasonable time after the default,[28] and of course it must be exercised within the term.[29]

(vi) WAIVER IN PART. Where the tenant has incurred a forfeiture of the demised premises the landlord cannot enforce the forfeiture against a part and waive it as to the rest of the premises.[30]

h. Relief Against Forfeiture. Where compensation can be fully made, equity will generally relieve against a forfeiture.[31] For instance equity will relieve against a forfeiture for non-payment of rent where under the circumstances it would be inequitable, and full compensation can be made for the tenant's default[32]

on payment by the tenant of the rent due and costs and damages;[33] but relief will not ordinarily be granted against a forfeiture for the breach of other covenants in a lease,[34] in the absence of equitable circumstances, such as accident, mistake, or justifiable reliance on the conduct of the lessor.[35] Relief from a forfeiture for the non-payment of rent is not a matter of right, however, and may be refused on collateral equitable grounds,[36] such as delay in seeking relief;[37] and relief will not be granted after the term has expired by the efflux of time, even though the lease gives an option of purchase to be exercised during the term, which the lessee had attempted to exercise after the forfeiture.[38] Under some circumstances relief may be granted by a court of law as well as by a court of equity.[39]

Relief from forfeiture for breach of particular covenants in the lease see EQUITY, 16 Cyc. 79.

A judgment against the lessee, whether in an action of unlawful detainer (Abrams v. Watson, 59 Ala. 524) or in ejectment (Garner v. Hannah, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 262) does not preclude the granting of equitable relief against a forfeiture for non-payment of rent.

8. Surrender[40] — a. Definition. A surrender, as the term is used in the law of landlord and tenant, is the yielding up of the estate to the landlord, so that the leasehold interest becomes extinct by mutual agreement between the parties.[41] The rescission of a lease, when by express words, is called an express surrender or a surrender in fact;[42] and when by acts so irreconcilable to a continuance of the tenure as to imply the same thing it is called a surrender by operation of law.[43]

b. Express Surrender — (i) Sufficiency in General. An express surrender, sometimes called a surrender in fact, as distinguished from a surrender by operation of law, is usually required to be in writing.[44] No particular form of words is necessary, nor is it required that there should be a formal delivery or cancellation of the deed or instrument which created the estate to be surrendered.[45] All that is necessary is the agreement of the proper parties manifesting such an intent followed by a yielding up of possession to the lessor.[46] There must, however, be a consideration for the surrender.[47]

Seal.— The surrender need not be under seal, although the lease was under seal (Allen v. Jaquish, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 628, holding that a subsequent unsealed agreement to relinquish, upon failure to perform certain stipulations, a lease duly executed under seal for a term of years is inoperative as a defeasance, but valid as a contingent surrender); especially where the lease was not required to be under seal (Peters v. Barnes, 16 Ind. 219).

Surrender or disclaimer. — Tenants signed the following instrument: "We do hereby renounce and disclaim, and also surrender and yield up to the lessor, all right, title, interest, use, trust, term, and terms of years whatsoever; and possession of that message called B." It was held a surrender, and not a disclaimer. Doe v. Stagg, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 564, 9 L. J. C. P. 73, 7 Scott 690, 35 E. C. L. 304.

Time when surrender is effected.— A written agreement for surrender and for an arbitration of the amount to be paid for such surrender amounts to an abandonment of the lease by mutual consent, at the moment of its execution, notwithstanding the arbitration fails. Harris v. Hiscock, 91 N. Y. 340.

Signing a receipt for rent which recites that the lease is terminated and the payment received in full for all claims under it precludes the lessor, in the absence of fraud, from claiming that he thought he was signing a mere receipt and that he is bound to that extent only. Jenkins v. Clyde Coal Co., 82 Iowa 618, 48 N. W. 970.

The burden of proving an alleged agreement to surrender is on the party who alleges such agreement. Hart v. Jost, 27 Nova Scotia 243.

Evidence.— The giving of a receipt for rent, expressed to be on account, and its acceptance by the lessee, are inconsistent with a mutual agreement claimed to have been entered into at that time for a surrender of the premises. Hart v. Jost, 27 Nova Scotia 243.

46. Greider's Appeal, 5 Pa. St. 422.

Intention.— Even where there is an abandonment pursuant to a parol agreement with the lessee, it is necessary to show that the abandonment was with the intention of surrendering the term. McKenzie v. Lexington, 4 Dana (Ky.) 129.

Sufficiency.— An agreement to surrender possession to the purchaser of the fee on the payment of a certain sum is founded on a sufficient consideration to be enforceable by the tenant. Bogert v. Dean, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 259. See also Ambler v. Owen, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 145.

(II) AGREEMENT TO SURRENDER. The surrender may be conditional, to take effect in futuro.[48] But a mere agreement for a surrender where not executed does not operate as a surrender,[49] although the terms of a surrender may be settled in advance by parol so as to be enforceable after the execution of the surrender.[50]

(III) DESTRUCTION OR SURRENDER OF WRITTEN LEASE. The mere surrender of the lease as a document, or the destruction of the lease as a paper, by the consent of the parties, does not constitute a surrender so as to terminate the relationship,[51] since the cancellation of the lease may be evidence of the surrender, but it is not itself a surrender.[52] But such fact is a strong circumstance to be considered in determining whether there has been a surrender by operation of law.[53] On the other hand, the cancellation of the lease by consent, before possession is taken thereunder, is effectual as a surrender, because the lessee has no actual possession to surrender.[54]

c. Surrender by Operation of Law — (I) WHAT CONSTITUTES IN GENERAL. While the definitions of what constitutes a surrender by operation of law differ somewhat in the language used, the rule may safely be said to be that a surrender is created by operation of law when the parties to a lease do some act so inconsistent with the subsisting relation of landlord and tenant as to imply that they have both agreed to consider the surrender as made.[55] It has been said that the Breach of agreement.—An agreement by a tenant to surrender at some time in the future does not, if broken, give the landlord authority to enforce the agreement by summary proceedings, but he must resort to his action for damages. Fish v. Thompson, 129 Mich. 313, 88 N. W. 896.

Y.) 251, holding that a parol declaration by the landlord that on payment of rent to a certain date he would release the tenant is insufficient to show a surrender of a written lease, although payment was made as stipulated.

Another definition of a surrender by operation of law is where the owner of a particular estate has been a party to some act, the validity of which he is by law afterward es-surrender operates by way of estoppel independently of the intention of the parties,[56] but it has been held in many cases that there was no surrender where the parties did not intend a surrender.[57] A term created by deed may be surrendered by operation of law as well as one created by parol.[58] If a lease is surrendered conditionally, of course the surrender does not take effect unless the condition is performed.[59] There is no surrender by operation of law, where the lessor does nothing inconsistent with the continuance of the term in one of the lessees.[60] A surrender of a lease by operation of law is expressly excepted from the statute of frauds.[61]

(II) Sale to Lessee or Transfer of Lease to Lessor. A transfer of the demised premises by the lessor to the lessee constitutes a surrender.[62] So where a lessee in possession agrees to purchase on a certain day,[63] or actually does pur-topped from disputing, and which would not be valid if his particular estate had continued to exist. Nelson v. Thompson, 23 Minn. 508; Lyon v. Reed, 8 Jur. 762, 13 L. J. Exch. 377, 13 M. & W. 285; Acheson v. McMurray, 41 U. C. Q. B. 484.

The mutual and voluntary action of the parties is necessary to constitute a surrender. Wray-Austin Machinery Co. v. Flower, 140 Mich. 452, 103 N. W. 873.

If the lessor takes unqualified possession of demised premises and deals with them in a way wholly inconsistent with the continuance of an already existing and unexpired term there is a surrender by operation of law. Nelson v. Thompson, 23 Minn. 508.

Agreement may be inferred.— To effect a surrender by operation of law the agreement that the lease shall terminate need not be express but may be inferred from the conduct of the parties. Martin v. Stearns, 52 Iowa 345, 3 N. W. 92; Bedford v. Terhune, 30 N. Y. 453, 86 Am. Dec. 394. The surrender may be shown by circumstances, such as the conversation, acts and conduct of the parties. Churchill v. Lammers, 60 Mo. App. 244. But where acts are relied on as evincing the understanding, they should be such as are not easily referable to a different intention. Martin v. Stearns, 52 Iowa 345, 3 N. W. 92; Griffith v. Hodges, 1 C. & P. 419, 12 E. C. L. 246.

Pleading.— The mere allegation "of a surrender of a term of years to the defendant by the plaintiff" obliges the defendant to prove an actual surrender. A surrender by operation of law must be so pleaded. McNeil v. Train, 5 U. C. Q. B. 91.

It is only when the minds of the parties to a lease concur in the common intent of relinquishing the relation of landlord and tenant, and where they execute this intent by acts which are tantamount to a stipulation to put an end thereto, that a surrender by operation of law arises. Question for jury.— Generally, the question as to whether there is a surrender by operation of law, as depending on the intention of the parties, is one of fact for the jury. Whether a surrender was accepted by certain acts which might amount to taking exclusive possession by the lessor, or whether such acts were done under a provision in the lease allowing the lessor to enter to make repairs for the safety or preservation of the premises, is a question for the jury. chase and pay a part of the price, and thereafter no rent is demanded until a refusal to pay the balance,[64] there is a surrender of the lease; but it is otherwise where there is a mere unexecuted agreement to sell, the conditions of which are not performed.[65] A sale of the lease to the lessor does not operate as a surrender of the term so as to extinguish the rent due.[66] An assignment of a lease by the lessee to the lessor to secure debts to mature before the end of the term is not a surrender of the lease.[67]

(III) NEW LEASE TO ORIGINAL TENANT. The acceptance by the tenant of a new lease from the lessor during the term of the first lease constitutes a surrender by operation of law,[68] unless the surrender would be contrary to the intention of the parties;[69] and it is immaterial whether there was any actual surrender of the old lease.[70] However, mere negotiations for a written lease do not constitute a surrender of a parol lease.[71] The new lease, to work a surrender, must be a valid one,[72] sufficient to pass an interest according to the contract and intention

Reason for rule.— As far as the landlord is concerned, he has created an estate in the new tenant which he is estopped from disputing with him, which is inconsistent with the continuance of defendant's term. As far as the tenant is concerned he has been an active party in the transaction, not merely by consenting to the creation of the new relation between the landlord and new tenant, but by giving up possession, and so enabling the new tenant to enter. Nickells v. Atherstone, 10 Q. B. 944, 11 Jur. 778, 16 L. J. Q. B. 371, 59 E. C. L. 944.

Where the intention of both parties to the original lease was that such acts should not have the effect of terminating the lease, there is no surrender by operation of law. Bourdereaux v. Walker, 78 Ill. App. 63. See also Holman v. De Lin-River Finley Co., 30 Oreg. 428, 47 Pac. 708.

Giving up possession.— There is not a surrender of the existing lease unless the existing tenant gives up possession to the new tenant, at or about the time of the grant of the new lease. Wallis v. Hands, [1893] 2 Ch. 75, 62 L. J. Ch. 586, 68 L. T. Rep. N. S. 428, 3 Reports 351, 41 Wkly. Rep. 471.

Surrender inferred.—The surrender of premises by the tenant and their discharge by the landlord, and the acceptance of a third person as tenant, need not be proved directly by evidence of an agreement, but may be inferred from acts of parties or circumstances inconsistent with any other conclusion. Colton v. Gorham, 72 Iowa 324, 33 N. W. 76.

Conditional surrender.— A surrender by operation of law by substitution of tenants may be conditioned on the payment of rent by the new lessee so that if he does not pay the rent there will be no surrender. Whitney v. Meyers, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 266.

Payment by a direction of landlord.— The substitution of a sublessee as lessee by direction of the landlord who forbids him to pay any more rent to the original lessee, and tells him that he has taken the place off the lessee's hands, where he afterward collects all the rents of the subtenants, constitutes a surrender. Bailey v. Delaplaine, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 5.

But the lease of adjoining land to an assignee of the original lease is not a surrender, although the assignee moves the partition so as to include the original demise, where the bills for the rent of the part originally leased are made out to the original lessee and his assignee is not recognized. Apple-receive the most favorable construction, and, unless they are absolutely incompatible with a continued existence of the lease, they should not be held to be so.[87] But the mere act of the lessor in accepting rent from the assignee or sublessee,[88] or consenting to the assignment and accepting the rent from the assignee,[89] does not constitute a surrender.

(v) Abandonment and Resumption of Possession—(a) General Rule. An abandonment of the premises by the tenant and an acceptance of the surrender by a resumption of possession by the landlord constitute a surrender by operation of law.[90] But a surrender cannot be implied by operation of law when the tenant still retains possession, as tenant, of the leased premises, or any material portion of the same.[91]

(b) What Constitutes Surrender by Tenant. There is an abandonment of the premises where there is such a relinquishment as justifies an immediate resumption of possession by the landlord.[92] There must be a real or symbolical delivery

Acceptance of rent as evidence.— Receipts for rent received by a landlord from a third party are evidence of a surrender by operation of law, putting an end to the liability of a former tenant. Laurance v. Faux, 2 F. & F. 435.

Acceptance of rent from receiver.— Bankruptcy proceedings against the lessee, and the subsequent payment of rent by his receiver, without taking a new lease, does not release the original lessor so as to enable him to escape liability for rent after an order of court requiring of the receiver to turn the property over to the lessee. Woodworth v. Harding, 75 N. Y. App. Div. 54, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 969.

Transfer of partner's interest.— The sale by one lessee to the other, or to a third person, and the formation of a new partnership or a corporation, and the receipt by the lessor of rent from the new firm or corporation, as tenants, does not amount to a surrender and acceptance. W. 716; Zigler v. McClellan, 15 Oreg. 499, 16 Pac. 179.

Acts showing surrender.— Intrusting the premises to the care of an agent of the lessor and stating an intention to vacate shows a surrender. Rogers v. Babcock, 139 Mich. 94, 102 N. W. 636. So a statement by the lessee that he does not intend to retain the premises longer and that the lessor can do as he pleases with them is sufficient to

of the possession of the entire building.[93] There is no surrender by the lessee where he keeps the key and leaves a portion of his goods on the premises,[94] nor where he merely surrenders the key to the lessor for a temporary purpose.[95]

(c) Necessity For Acceptance. To constitute a surrender by operation of law, there must not only be an abandonment by the tenant, but also an acceptance thereof by the landlord as a surrender.[96] It follows that a mere giving of the keys to the landlord does not of itself show a surrender.[97]

(d) What Constitutes Acceptance — (1) In General. An express agreement to accept the premises need not be shown, but the landlord's consent may be implied from circumstances and from the acts of the parties.[98] There must, however, be some unequivocal act on the part of the landlord which unmistakably evinces an intention on his part to terminate the lease and the relationship of landlord and tenant.[99] The advertising of the premises for sale with an offer of immediate possession to the purchaser does not show an acceptance of the surrender,[1] nor does the allowing third persons to occupy the premises temporarily show the lessee's consent to a termination of the tenancy. Browder v. Phinney, 37 Wash. 70, 79 Pac. 598. So where the lessee before leaving the country told the lessor to take charge of the crop and pay himself the rent there was a surrender. Shahan v. Herzberg, 73 Ala. 59. The original tenant has no right to possession where, after requesting the lessor to cancel the lease on the destruction of the building, and after giving up possession, the lessor rebuilt and leased to third persons, the original lessee remaining silent, since the acts of the lessor must be deemed to have been with the lessee's assent. Wood v. Walbridge, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 136. So if the tenant tells his landlord that he may rent the building, as their "agreement is at an end," and if, relying thereon, a second tenant acquires rights, the first tenant cannot claim possession. Com. v. Conway, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 509.

without rent after the abandonment.[2] But where the landlord tells the tenant to quit, and he does so, and the lessor takes possession, there is an accepted surrender.[3] So permission given the tenant by the landlord to leave property on the premises after notice of the tenant's departure is evidence of an acceptance.[4]

(2) Actual Possession. After an abandonment of the premises by the lessee, the lessor may reënter and take possession for certain purposes without such acts constituting an acceptance of the surrender.[5] There is no acceptance where he reënters merely to protect the property from waste and injuries by trespassers,[6] to make necessary repairs,[7] or to clean the premises.[8] But where the landlord makes alterations beyond the necessity for the preservation of the demised premises, there is an acceptance.[9] An absolute and unqualified taking of possession, however, shows an acceptance,[10] unless the landlord indicates to the tenant his purpose to hold him liable for the rent,[11] or unless the reëntry is in pursuance of an express provision of the lease authorizing the landlord to reënter upon the premises becoming vacant, and to relet them, and to apply the rent to the expenses of reëntering and reletting and to the rent due.[12]

(3) Acceptance of Keys. Evidence of the acceptance of the key by the landlord is admissible to show a surrender.[13] But the acceptance is not of itself ordinarily sufficient to show an acceptance of the surrender,[14] unless other facts tend to show that the intention of the landlord was to accept the surrender.[15] At any event the acceptance of the key does not show an acceptance of the surrender where the landlord manifests a clear intention to hold the tenant for the rent.[16]

(4) Retention of Keys. The mere retention of keys, delivered to the landlord by mail or otherwise, does not show an acceptance of the surrender,[17] especially where the landlord has previously refused to accept the keys,[18] or where he notifies the tenant that he will rent the premises on the latter's account,[19] or will hold him for the rent.[20] But the retention of the keys in connection with other acts may show an acceptance of the surrender.[21]

(5) Attempt to Relet. The landlord's attempt to relet after an abandonment does not of itself show an acceptance of the surrender.[22]

(6) Reletting. Whether a reletting shows an acceptance of the surrender depends on whether the landlord relets on the account of the tenant or on his own account.[23] There is no acceptance of the surrender where the reletting is pursuant to a provision of the lease authorizing the reletting on the lessee's account, where the premises become vacant,[24] where the landlord informs the original tenant that he will hold him responsible for the rent,[25] or where other

The fact that the landlord objects to the removal does not prevent an acceptance of the surrender, where he thereafter accepts the keys, takes possession, repairs and remodels the building, and orders the tenants to remove their signs from the building. In Maryland, it is held that the reletting is sufficient to show an acceptance only where, taking into consideration all the circumstances, such act is of a character to show that the landlord has resumed possession, to the exclusion of the tenant, with the intention of releasing him from liability under the lease. contrary rule seems to prevail in some states, and the tenant is not thereby released from liability upon the lease.[28]

d. Who May Surrender. The surrender should be made by the owner of the leasehold interest, or by someone authorized to act in his behalf.[29] Ordinarily one of several co-lessees cannot surrender the premises without the consent of the other lessees so as to affect them.[30] Nor can a sublessee or assignee of the lease ordinarily surrender the term to the original lessor so as to affect the original lessee.[31]

e. To Whom Surrender to Be Made. A surrender must be made to the lessor or to the party who has an immediate estate in the reversion.[32] It may be made to a person who has succeeded to the rights of the lessor,[33] or to an agent or other person who represents the lessor.[34] It is sufficient to surrender to one of joint lessors.[35]

f. Effect — (i) In General. In so far as the rights and liabilities of the lessor and the lessee are concerned, they are determined by an express surrender or surrender by operation at law;[36] and thereafter the lessee is not liable for subsequently accruing rent,[37] nor can a distress for rent be levied.[38] But the rights of third persons which have accrued before the surrender cannot be injured by it;[39] and hence it has no effect as against an assignee of the lease, or a sublessee, or anyone holding under the lessee, unless he has consented thereto,[40] or unless the surrender is in accordance with terms expressed in the lease.[41] So where a sublessee surrenders to the lessee, without the original lessor's consent, he is not absolved from liability under a contract with the original lessor.[42] Where a tenancy has been determined by a surrender, the court has no authority to reinstate the lease, in the absence of fraud or collusion or other special circumstances.[43]

(ii) Surrender of Part of Premises. A surrender of a part of the leased premises does not terminate the lease as to the remainder.[44] So the acquiescence

C. Tenancies From Year to Year — 1. By Death of Tenant. A tenancy from year to year is not determined by the death of the tenant, but vests in his personal representatives.[46]

2. By Destruction of the Premises. A tenancy from year to year is not determined by the destruction of the premises by fire, if the damage can be repaired without rebuilding, even though the fire renders them temporarily uninhabitable.[47]

3. By Continued Non-Payment of Rent. The non-payment of rent for a number of years, no demand being proved to have been made, is some evidence, although slight, of the determination of a tenancy from year to year.[48]

(c) When Notice Not Necessary. Where the tenant disclaims to hold as such, no notice to quit is necessary.[56] Where, after the commencement of a tenancy from year to year, there is an express lease for a certain time and an agreement to quit at the end of that time, no notice is necessary in order to terminate the tenancy after such time.[57] In some cases a distinction seems to have been made between those tenancies from year to year arising from leases for indefinite terms, and those arising from a holding over by the tenant after the expiration of a lease for a specified term. Thus it has been held that a tenant who occupies demised premises for several years after the termination of his lease creates each year a new term expiring at the close of the current year, and requiring no notice for its determination.[58] A tenant of mortgaged premises holding under the mortgagor by lease subsequent to the mortgage, as tenant from year to year, is not entitled to notice to quit in ejectment by the mortgagee.[59]

(II) By Tenant. In most jurisdictions a tenant from year to year cannot quit at pleasure, without notice, but the right to notice is reciprocal,[60] unless the necessity of notice by the tenant has been removed by statute.[61] In some cases, however, an exception is made where the tenancy having arisen from a holding after the expiration of a definite term is regarded as a new holding for a definite term and not in the restricted sense a tenancy from year to year,[62] it being held enough that he surrenders the keys and possession.[63] If notice is required it is a question for the jury whether that given is sufficient.[64]

b. Time When Notice Takes Effect — (I) In General. A tenancy from year to year is terminable by notice to quit only at the expiration of a current year.[65] It is determinable at the end of the first as well as any subsequent year, unless in creating such tenancy the parties use words showing that they contemplate a tenancy for two years at least.[66] Statements in a landlord's notice to quit as to the termination of a tenancy are conclusive on the landlord's grantee.[67]

(II) As Affected by Different Times of Entry. Where the incoming tenant enters upon different parts of the demised premises at different times, half a year's notice with reference to the substantial time of entry is sufficient.[68] It is a question of fact for the jury which is the principal and which the accessorial subject of the demise in order to determine whether the notice to quit the whole was given in time.[69]

or to some person on his behalf;[72] when the landlord resumes possession of the premises with the assent of the tenant;[73] when the tenant takes a new lease of the same premises from the reversioner;[74] or when by the consent of both parties another person becomes tenant of the premises and the landlord collects rent from him.[75] An agreement to purchase when the purchaser is not let into possession is not a surrender by operation of law.[76] Nor will an insufficient notice to quit, accepted by the landlord, have this effect.[77] When a tenant makes an unequivocal surrender of the premises, the leaving of fixtures and worthless articles upon the premises cannot be construed as an intention to retain possession, or a continuance of the tenancy;[78] but mere notice of intention to quit does not rebut the presumption of a continuance of the tenancy arising from the fact of the tenant remaining in possession.[79] The abandonment of the premises by a tenant non animo revertendi remits the landlord to the possession, and he may defend it against all intrusion.[80]

thereby revived.[83] A mere transfer of title does not in any way change, modify, or affect the lease.[84]

2. By Notice to Quit — a. Necessity and Length. Where a lease is from month to month, it does not terminate by the mere lapse of time, and neither party can terminate it without notice to the other in advance for the time required by law.[85] In cases of tenancies for periods running less than a year, the general rule is that notice must be regulated by the letting, and must be equivalent to a period.[86] Thus in the absence of any provision of statute or contract regarding it a tenancy from month to month is terminable by a month's notice to quit,[87] such a notice being in some jurisdictions prescribed by statute.[88] Statutes in other jurisdictions, however, provide for a notice of shorter period.[89] Where the tenancy is for a month as distinguished from one from month to month the tenant is not entitled to notice to quit.[90]

b. Time When Notice Takes Effect. Notice to terminate a tenancy from month to month must be to quit on one of the recurring periods of the letting;[91] and when a month's notice is required it should be served on a corresponding date in the preceding month;[92] and it may properly be to quit on the first day of the succeeding month.[93]

3. By Surrender and Abandonment. A tenant from month to month being entitled to notice to quit must give the same notice if he desires to terminate the relation of landlord and tenant; the rights of the parties in this respect being equal.[94] The notice in the absence of contrary statutory provision may be verbal.[95] If the premises are owned by two persons, notice must be served on each of them.[96] An abandonment by the tenant, acquiesced in by the landlord, dispenses with the necessity for notice by the tenant.[97] The fact that a tenant remains in possession from month to month after he becomes aware of a continuing nuisance amounting to a constructive eviction does not waive his right to terminate the lease for subsequent and increased defects which render the premises untenantable.[98]

3. By Death of Lessor or Lessee. A tenancy at will is determined, by implication of law, upon the death of either the lessor[9] or the lessee.[10]

4. Disclaimer of Title and Other Wrongful Acts of Tenant. As has been seen a tenancy at will may always be determined by any act or declaration of the tenant inconsistent with the continued voluntary relation of landlord and tenant:[11] As by denying his landlord's title, so as to render unnecessary a notice to quit;[12] by committing waste;[13] by assignment,[14] or executing a mortgage in fee of the premises;[15] by receiving a deed from a stranger and causing it to be placed upon record;[16] or by assenting to an extent upon the land as his property.[17] The rule that assignment of the premises determines a tenancy at will is, however, subject to the qualification that a tenant at will cannot determine his tenancy by transferring his interest to a third party without notice to the landlord.[18]

Sanford v. Harvey, 11 Cush. 93; Prescott v. Elm, 7 Cush. 346. Prior to this statute the right of a tenant at will to notice was regarded as doubtful and in any event reason-that in all cases of neglect or refusal to pay the rent due on a lease at will, a shorter notice — the time of which varies in different jurisdictions — shall be sufficient to terminate such lease.[29] By an agreement of the parties, the length of time required for the notice may be varied, and it may be limited to end on a particular day or time.[30] The rights of tenants at will in respect to notice are determined by the statutes in force at the time the question arises.[31] Where one occupies premises under a mere license,[32] or under a conditional limitation,[33] no notice is necessary. So also a tenant at will has no right to notice after he has able notice to be determined as a matter of law under the circumstances of each case was sufficient. Coffin v. Lunt, 2 Pick. 70; Ellis v. Paige, 1 Pick. 43; Rising v. Stannard, 17 Mass. 282. And see Howard v. Merriam, 5 Cush. 563.

32. Doyle v. Gibbs, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 180, holding that a person occupying a house under a contract to pay rent until his wife recovers from a sickness is not entitled to notice to quit, as he holds under a mere license.

33. Clark v. Rhoads, 79 Ind. 342; Ashley v. Warner, 11 Gray (Mass.) 43 (holding that an estate at will left on a conditional limitation is determined by the happening of the contingency, and no notice is necessary); People v. Schackno, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 551. Compare Shaw v. Hoffman, 25 Mich. 162, holding that a lease for five years containing a clause whereby the lessor agrees to give up the lease if the lessor or his heirs or assigns should conclude to build on the premises does not create a tenancy at will strictly, but rather a tenancy upon condition, and the lessee is entitled to reasonable notice of the les-determined the will by an act of voluntary waste.[34] A written notice to terminate a tenancy at will was not required at common law and is not now necessary except when the statute so requires.[35]

c. Time When Notice Takes Effect. In some jurisdictions it is held that the notice to quit must terminate at the expiration of an interval of rent payment,[36] although an exception is made to this requirement, so far as a termination by the landlord is concerned. His notice to the tenant may be without any respect to any pay-day, if when the notice expires the tenant shall be in any arrears of paying his rent.[37] So it is also held in some states that the day on which a tenancy is to be terminated by the notice should be truly stated,[38] while in others this need not be done.[39] But if a day is unnecessarily named, it will not vitiate the notice, although the day specified is one on which the tenancy cannot legally be terminated. It will take effect at the end of the required period of notice.[40]

7. By Surrender and Abandonment. A tenancy is not terminated by the mere act of the tenant in vacating the premises, where the landlord does not accept the surrender, but there must also be a proper legal notice given by the tenant of his intention to terminate the tenancy.[41] It is perfectly proper, however, for parties to a tenancy at will to abandon the original agreement without resorting to the statutory method of terminating the tenancy.[42] Thus an agreement between a landlord and his tenant at will for a termination of the tenancy by a surrender by the tenant and acceptance thereof by the landlord on a day earlier than the date on which the tenancy could be terminated by either party without the consent of the other is valid; the reciprocal surrender of rights constituting a consideration on each side.[43] Abandonment by a tenant at will is an abandonment to his landlord.[44]

G. Tenancies at Sufferance — 1. In General. Where notice is unnecessary to terminate a tenancy at sufferance, the owner of the fee may enter at any time,

X. Reëntry and Recovery of Possession by Landlord.

A. Reëntry — 1. When Reëntry May Be Made — a. In General. At common law the landlord, upon the expiration of the tenant's right to occupy the premises, might reënter,[50] if he did so without breach of the peace;[51] he might bring ejectment;[52] or in case the tenant had bound himself to quit and surrender up the possession at a definite and fixed period, he might sue him upon his covenant for damages.[53] In a like manner the landlord had a right of reëntry upon the forfeiture of the lease,[54] or where the tenant disavowed his tenancy;[55] and in general the common law gave a right of reëntry as a concurrent remedy wherever eject-ment might be maintained.[56] Until the expiration or termination of the term the landlord has no right of reëntry.[57] A landlord's entry will not be enjoined in a case where the tenant's title to the possession is doubtful.[58]

b. Statutory Provisions. By statute in some states the landlord may reënter upon default by the tenant in any of the terms of the lease, although a right of reëntry is not expressly reserved.[59] The legislature, without impairing the contract between the parties, may alter the common-law proceeding for reëntry or prescribe an additional mode of reëntry applicable to leases in which the common-law right of reëntry is reserved.[60] A statute providing for the termination of tenancies at sufferance by a notice to quit of thirty days does not impair the landlord's common-law right to oust a tenant or bring ejectment upon the expiration of the lease.[61]

c. After Abandonment by Tenant. After surrender of the lease the landlord may enter without notice.[62] The question of whether a lease has been abandoned so as to confer a right of reëntry is one of fact to be determined from the acts and intentions of the parties.[63]

d. On Breach of Covenant or Condition — (i) General Rules. The landlord has no right of reëntry for breach of covenant unless there is a stipulation in the lease that it shall work a forfeiture or termination of the tenant's interest,[64] or unless a right of reëntry is expressly conferred,[65] the landlord's remedy upon covenant broken being in general an action upon the covenant.[66] Hence an entry cannot be made for a mere breach of covenant to pay rent,[67] or to surrender the premises upon certain contingencies,[68] or not to assign.[69] Conditions of forfeiture for breach of condition should be strictly construed;[70] a breach of a condition subsequent does not work a forfeiture by mere operation of law, without some act on the part of the lessor claiming it.[71] To support a reëntry under the pro-

Presumption of forfeiture.— Where a lease provides that on default by the lessee the lessor may determine the lease, if the lessor resumes possession, it will be presumed that it was in pursuance of his right to terminate the lease. McKnight v. Kreutz, 51 Pa. St. 232. The lapse of nine years does not raise a presumption of reëntry for non-payment of visions of a lease the landlord must show a strict compliance therewith.[72] So a lessor who has reëntered for other reasons cannot justify his reëntry by assigning a breach which he did not act upon or claim at the time.[73]

(II) Non-Payment of Rent. In the absence of a provision to such effect in the lease, non-payment of rent does not as a general rule work a forfeiture,[74] and hence confers no right of reëntry.[75] Under an express provision in the lease, however, the landlord may reënter for non-payment of rent,[76] a demand having been made before entry,[77] unless the lease expressly dispenses with the necessity thereof.[78]

(III) Non-Payment of Taxes. Where the lease so provides a reëntry may be made for a breach of a covenant to pay taxes.[79] In case the taxes are of necessity apportioned among several tenants, the reëntry cannot be made until there has been an apportionment fixing the liabilities of each tenant.[80]

2. Persons Entitled to Reënter. A right of reëntry cannot be reserved in a stranger to the legal estate[81] and must be exercised by the person entitled to the

J. L. 191 (holding that where a lease provided that a reëntry might be made in case rent should remain in arrear for the space of twelve months and no sufficient distress to satisfy the same should be found upon the premises, the landlord was bound to show the want of sufficient distress upon the premises or excuse for not attempting to make a distress). Lease executed after mortgage.— Where a mortgagee demised and the executrix of the mortgagor demised and confirmed, and a power of reëntry was reserved to them, or possession.[82] So where a lessee sublets the leased premises for the entire term of his lease, he has no right of entry upon the expiration of the term,[83] although he may enter for breach of covenant or condition.[84] While a mere right of entry for forfeiture is not assignable,[85] and prior to the statute of Henry VIII,[86] the assignee of a reversion could not enter for conditions broken,[87] such statute and statutes in several of the states provide that the assignee or grantees of a reversion may take the same advantages of conditions and covenants in the lease as their grantors or assignors themselves had,[88] and notice need not have been given the tenant of the assignment.[89]

3. REËNTRY BY FORCE — a. In General. The rule supported apparently by the weight of authority is that where the landlord has become entitled to immediate possession of the premises through the expiration of the term or otherwise he may take such possession by force without incurring civil liability in case no more force than is reasonably necessary is employed,[90] and although he may be subject either of them, the reëntry inured to revest the estate in the mortgagee, and a count in ejectment laying the demise jointly in the mortgagor and mortgagee was not sustainable. Doe v. Adams, 2 Cromp. & J. 232, 1 L. J. Exch. 105, 2 Tyrw. 289.

Expulsion without entry. — It has been held that where the landlord in place of entering upon the premises tore down adjoining premises so that it became unsafe for the tenant to remain longer in the demised premises, obliging him to vacate and remove his goods, the landlord was not a trespasser or to punishment criminally, under statutes relating to forcible entry and detainer.[91] Hence an action of trespass quare clausum fregit will not lie in behalf of the tenant,[92] nor an action of trespass vi et armis for violence done to his person.[93] The conferring of a right upon the landlord to take forcible possession of the premises is not, however, conducive to public order, and in some cases it has been held that the force employed must stop short of personal violence,[94] while other cases go to the extent of holding the landlord liable to the tenant in damages in any case of a forcible retaking of possession,[95] these decisions being based in some to authorize the employment of force as against an attempt by the tenant to reënter.[3]

e. Effect of Statutes as to Forcible Entries. Where, by statute, a forcible entry upon realty is made unlawful, it is held in some states that such an entry by the landlord imposes upon him a liability in damages,[4] although a breach of the peace is not committed,[5] and although the tenant's possession is wrongful,[6] or although the landlord is justified in avoiding the lease.[7] In case the entry is accompanied by wrong to the person or property of the tenant, such damages as are reasonable under the circumstances may be recovered. Where there is no such wrong the landlord is liable in nominal damages only.[8] So likewise where the landlord has made a forcible entry trespass may lie against him if he expels his tenant by force.[9] The fact that the entry is against the will of the tenant will not in itself render it forcible;[10] and it has been held that an entry made in the absence of the tenant is not forcible within the meaning of a particular statute.[11] But on the other hand it has been held that, where obstructions placed over openings in the building had to be removed, the entry was not peaceable and without force.[12]

f. Effect of Provisions For Summary Remedies. Statutes providing summary remedies by which the landlord may speedily regain possession of the premises in case they are wrongfully withheld by the tenant are in some jurisdictions held to be exclusive of the right of the landlord to make a forcible entry,[13] even though the lease contains a provision permitting the landlord to reënter by force;[14] and where such statutes exist the landlord may be held liable in damages for such an entry.[15]

g. Effect of Covenants in Lease. The right to make a forcible entry may be conferred by express provision in the lease, and in such case it has been held that an entry in which no more than necessary force is employed, will not render the landlord liable in damages notwithstanding the existence of statutes punishing forcible entries.[16] Summary proceedings provided by statute are, however, held to be exclusive of a forcible entry, even under express provisions of the lease.[17]

4. Sufficiency of Reëntry. An entry in order to revest possession must not be merely casual, but with the intention of claiming and for the purpose of taking possession,[18] a successful ouster is not essential;[19] but it is sufficient that there be a demand at such a time and place that if complied with possession would be at once secured.[20] The landlord's entry to make repairs[21] or his denial of the tenant's right to harvest his crop[22] does not establish a reëntry.

5. Waiver of Right to Reënter.[23] A provision in the lease for a reëntry without process of law is not waived by the prosecution of an action of forcible detainer against the tenant,[24] nor by the recovery of a judgment in forcible entry.[25] Nor is a right of reëntry forfeited by an artifice practised by the landlord in inducing the tenant and his family to leave the premises in order that he may take peaceable possession.[26] A right of reëntry for non-payment of rent and taxes is, however, waived by the bringing of a suit for equitable relief in the nature of a strict foreclosure of an equitable lien therefor.[27] Where the landlord and the tenant enter into an agreement permitting the tenant to use the premises for an unlawful purpose, the landlord is not entitled to treat the lease as void and eject the person placed in charge of the premises by the lessee.[28]

6. Damages For Wrongful Reëntry. In case the landlord enters without right he is liable to the tenant for such damages as may be occasioned by his reëntry;[29] and in a proper case exemplary damages may be awarded.[30] Although the entry may have been rightful in its inception, the landlord is liable for unnecessary injury.[31] An action for such damages cannot be maintained by one whose only interest in the lease is under an executory agreement for an assignment of part.[32] A husband and wife may sue jointly on a joint lease.[33]

After termination of landlord's title. — A conveyance by a landlord to a stranger, or a sale of the premises under execution against the landlord, and attornment by the tenant to the grantee or vendee, will defeat a recovery by the landlord in ejectment against the tenant. Franklin v. Palmer, 50 Ill. 202.

46. See Holliday v. Chism, 25 Ind. App. 1, 57 N. E. 563, holding that the grantor of leased premises, who had sold the same, agreeing that he would secure possession for the grantee at the termination of the lease, the date of which was fixed, and that until such tain ejectment the landlord need not establish title other than by showing the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant.[47] It is essential to the action of ejectment that the tenant be in possession.[48] An action upon the covenants of the lease may, however, be maintained to a judgment barring defendant from possession.[49]

3. Defenses. In defense to an action to recover possession the tenant may show the absence of a right of possession in the landlord by virtue of a valid subsisting lease,[50] or facts preventing a forfeiture;[51] or by waiver of an asserted forfeiture;[52] or he may show that the landlord's title has terminated.[53] A defendant corporation will not, however, be permitted to assert that the lease under which it has possession was taken by an agent without authority.[54]

4. Conditions Precedent — a. Demand of Rent. Where the right to maintain an action to recover possession of the premises is based upon non-payment of rent, a demand must be made therefor before the action is brought,[55] unless the necessity therefor has been removed by statute,[56] or unless the lease provides that possession was secured the tenant should be considered as the tenant of the grantor, could not maintain an action against the tenant after the expiration of the term, since the grantee was not the real party in interest.

And see Fisher v. Slattery, 75 Cal. 325, 17 Pac. 235; Goodbub v. Scheller, 3 Ind. App. 318, 29 N. E. 610, holding that the tenant's testimony that he had had possession for seven years, and had refused to surrender the place because he had been told that he might hold it as long as he wanted it, if he would pay as much rent as any one else, sufficiently showed the tenant's possession.

49. Ward v. Terry, 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 330, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 569, holding that where in an action on a lease for rent defendant at the trial interposes a general denial, claims title under a deed from a third party, produces an unrecorded deed showing conveyance of the property to his wife by him, and testifies that she is in possession and plaintiffs make out a prima facie case, they are entitled to judgment for the rent, and barring defendant from possession, although no judgment can be rendered barring the rights of the wife.

50. See Whittemore v. Smith, 50 Conn. 376, holding that in a suit by a transferee of the reversion, before termination of the lease, the tenant might show that plaintiff knew of the existence and contents of the lease, although it was not recorded.

Statutes obviating necessity of demand.— St. 4 Geo. II, c. 28, provided that ejectment the tenancy shall be determined without demand.[57] Where a forfeiture has been waived a demand must be made after a new breach.[58] In case the tenant denies the holding a formal demand is waived.[59]

b. Notice to Quit or Demand For Possession — (i) Necessity. An action in the nature of ejectment will not as a general rule lie against a tenant without a prior notice to quit,[60] and this is true of tenancies from year to year,[61] or at

might be maintained without reëntry or demand where half a year's rent was due and in arrears and no sufficient distress was to be found on the demised premises countervailing the arrears then due. This statute has been followed in some jurisdictions in the United States (see Connor v. Bradley, 1 How. (U. S.) 211, 11 L. ed. 105 [reversing 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,774, 5 Cranch C. C. 615], holding that it must be shown that there was no sufficient distress on the premises on some day or period between the time at which the rent fell due and the day of the demise; and, if the time when, according to the proofs, there was not a sufficient distress on the premises be subsequent to the day of the demise, it is insufficient), and is practically reënacted by statute in certain of the states (see Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Assoc. v. Sanders, 68 N. J. L. 631, 54 Atl. 448, holding that where there is a provision in the lease that on non-performance of the covenant by the lessee the term shall be at an end ejectment will lie, without proving that there was no sufficient distress on the premises, as required by the Landlord and Tenant Act, § 7 (2 Gen. St. p. 1916), where there is a mere right of reëntry for non-payment of rent; Tyler v. Heidorn, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 439; New York v. Campbell, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 156, holding that where the demised premises appear from the complaint to be "a water lot, vacant ground, and soil under water," an allegation that there are not goods and chattels enough on the premises to satisfy the rent is not necessary; First Incorporated Presb. Congregation v. Williams, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 147, holding that defendant is concluded by his admission on the service of the declaration in ejectment that there was not sufficient property on the premises liable to distress to countervail the arrears of rent; Jackson v. Wyckoff, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 53), and in Canada (see Doe v. Roe, 16 N. Brunsw. 470, holding, however, that the landlord's right of reëntry was not limited to cases where there was not enough distress to satisfy a half year's rent). Under these statutes, when ejectment is not based on lack of sufficient distraint, a common-law demand must be proved (Conner v. Bradley, 1 How. (U. S.) 211, 11 L. ed. 105 [reversing 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,774, 5 Cranch C. C. 615]), or such a demand as is fixed by statute (see Van Rensselaer v. Slingerland, 26 N. Y. 580; Martin v. Rector, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 371), unless the lease expressly provides for reëntry without formal demand (Campbell v. Baxter, 15 U. C. C. P. 42; McDonald v. Peck, 17 U. C. Q. B. 270). In New York upon the abolition of distress for rent it was provided that in case a right of reëntry was reserved, where six months' rent was in arrears, the landlord might maintain an action to recover the premises without demand or reëntry. See Martin v. Rector, 118 N. Y. 476, 23 N. E. 893, construing a lease to reserve a right of reëntry for non-payment of rent distinct from a right to enter on a failure of distress.

fee from a stranger to his landlord's title,[71] or has made a conveyance of the land in fee.[72]

(II) SUFFICIENCY.[73] As a general rule a notice to quit is sufficient if the tenant is informed either directly or by necessary implication that he is required to quit the demanded premises.[74] It should, however, be absolute.[75] Notice is properly given to the immediate lessee, although another person is in possession of the premises.[76]

81. See, generally, PLEADING. See also Houssiere-Latreille Oil Co. v. Jennings-Heywood Oil Syndicate, 115 La. 107, 38 So. 932, holding that the question of sufficiency of consideration for a lease could not be raised in an action by the lessor exclusively for possession, nor could the question of defendant's title.

Under the general issue defendant, in a writ of entry, is not entitled to deny his possession (Washington Bank v. Brown, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 293), nor in ejectment can he dispute the corporate capacity in which plaintiff sued, or take advantage of the informality of the lease under which he entered (Caledonia County Grammar School v. Burt, 11 Vt. 632).

Evidence of non-payment of rent may be admitted to show plaintiff's right to immediate possession, without an averment of a demand of rent, where by statute an action may be maintained without demand in case rent is six months in arrear and the lessor has a subsisting right to reënter. Church v. Hempsted, 27 N. Y. App. Div. 412, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 325, 27 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 230.

actions generally.[82] Further proceedings upon a writ of entry to enforce a forfeiture for non-payment of rent may be stayed upon payment of rent and costs.[83]

8. Appointment of Receiver. A receiver may be appointed in an action to enforce a right of reëntry upon non-payment of rent, where there is a lien for such rent and it is averred that defendant in possession is doing great injury to the premises.[84]

9. Evidence. Where defendant is shown to have been in possession he has the burden of proving a surrender of such possession.[85] He has also the burden of proving a consent to a breach of conditions in the lease.[86] The rules governing the admissibility and sufficiency of evidence are those applicable to civil actions in general.[87] Under a statute requiring that when a contract involves more than five hundred dollars, it must be proved by at least one credible witness and corroborating circumstances, the testimony of the lessee alone is not sufficient to establish a renewal of the lease.[88]

10. Judgment and Enforcement Thereof.[89] A judgment by confession may be entered against the tenant where the lease so provides.[90] Upon a motion to set aside a judgment in ejectment the rights of strangers to the record cannot be adjudicated.[91] The judgment will not be set aside on motion on the ground that notice of intention to reënter had not been given, where it may be supported upon breaches of covenant alleged, as to which notice was unnecessary.[92] A writ of possession will not issue to enforce the judgment against personal property.[93]

11. Redemption. In the absence of statute defendant cannot redeem from a judgment in ejectment based upon non-payment of rent,[94] but by statute such a redemption provided for to be exercised within a certain time and upon certain terms.[95]

12. Review. The necessity[96] or insufficiency[97] of a notice to quit cannot be urged for the first time on appeal. Unless statutes provide to the contrary a judgment for the possession of the premises is appealable,[98] upon the giving of such security as may be required by the local practice.[99] Upon reversal of a judgment for plaintiff the court may in its discretion award a writ of restitution.[1]

13. Costs. Under the provisions of some statutes defendant in ejectment may be required to secure costs.[2] Where it appears that defendant has been wrongfully deprived of the possession by a writ of sequestration, he may be allowed costs, although he has allowed plaintiff to recover a judgment for possession.[3]

C. Statutory Dispossession Proceedings — 1. Nature and Scope — a. In General. The necessity to which the landlord was subjected at common law of bringing an action of ejectment with its attendant delays against an overholding tenant is now removed by statutes providing summary proceedings,[4] which are closely analogous in nature, although variously termed in the various jurisdictions ejectment,[5] justice ejectment,[6] summary process,[7] unlawful detainer, or landlord and tenant proceedings. These statutes being in derogation of the common law must be strictly construed.[8] They are applicable only to cases which come fully within their provisions,[9] and the proceedings must be conducted in strict accordance with the provisions of the law.[10] They are regarded as affording a merely cumulative remedy which may be maintained, although a right of reëntry is reserved in the lease,[11] and do not bar the landlord's right peaceably to reënter without process,[12] or maintain other actions for possession,[13] or for rent,[14] or for use and occupation.[15] But where a summary remedy is provided in case of non-payment of rent, it has been held to supersede a distress therefor.[16] Since such statutes providing summary methods of procedure go merely to the remedy, they have been held applicable to leases entered into before their passage upon which action was afterward brought,[17] although it has been held that a right to recover possession in unlawful detainer proceedings is not affected as to existing leases by the repeal of the statute.[18] In some jurisdictions these proceedings are regarded as special proceedings, and not as actions in the restricted sense of that term.[19] A summary proceeding cannot by the introduction of new issues be changed by defendant to an ordinary one.[20]

b. Necessity That Relation of Landlord and Tenant Exist. The existence of the relation of landlord and tenant is as a general rule essential to the pursuit of a summary proceeding for the recovery of demised premises, whether such proceeding is an action for unlawful detainer,[21] or is one which is otherwise known under the particular statute invoked.[22] In some jurisdictions it is not sufficient that the relation of landlord and tenant has been created by operation of law,

The presumption is that persons in possession during the terms of a lease hold under the lease rather than in hostility to the landlord's title. Weinhaner v. Eastern Brewing Co., 85 N. Y. Suppl. 354. But the presumption has to do with the general relation of the parties to the title as otherwise affected by a hostile possession and does not extend to the implication of a contract defining the tenancy by the terms of a lease to which the tenant has not become a party by assignment or otherwise. Weinhaner v. Eastern Brewing Co., supra.

Steinback v. Krone, 36 Cal. 303 (holding that if a tenant is evicted after notice to his landlord of the threatened invasion by an adverse title, his tenancy ceases, and he is at liberty to take a lease from the successful plaintiff in ejectment, and an action of forcible entry cannot be maintained against such tenant by the first landlord); Wheelock v. Warschauer, 34 Cal. 265 (holding that where the tenant was evicted by title paramount, and the landlord defended the action, and after the eviction appealed, the taking of the appeal did not restore the relation of landlord and tenant, which had been destroyed by the eviction, so as to enable the landlord has reëntered after delivering up his possession to the landlord after the expiration of the lease;[37] but a mere agreement that the lease shall be canceled, there being no surrender of the possession, will not prevent the maintenance of the action.[38] A relation of landlord and tenant sufficient for this purpose may exist, although the lease is not enforceable.[39]

c. Determination of Questions of Title. The right to possession alone is ordinarily involved in summary proceedings under Landlord and Tenant Acts, and questions of title cannot be adjudicated.[40]

d. Recovery of Money Judgments, Damages, or Rent.[41] Under many of the statutes summary proceedings are purely for the recovery of possession and there can be no recovery of rent,[42] damages,[43] or mesne profits;[44] nor can there be an adjustment of accounts between plaintiff and defendant,[45] or a determination of to commence an action against the tenant for holding over, if such action was commenced before a reversal of judgment).

See Middlebury College v. Lawton, 23 Vt. 688, holding that in a proceeding under the statute of 1842, brought by a landlord to recover possession of the premises from a tenant who holds over his term, the landlord is entitled to recover all the rent due at the time of the rendition of the judgment, as well as the rent which accrued under the lease as the subsequent rent. See also cases more specifically cited in the following notes.

The rent due at the time of trial may be awarded. Nolan v. Hentig, 138 Cal. 281, 71 Pac. 440; Ellis v. Fitzpatrick, 3 Indian Terr. 656, 64 S. W. 567; Leahy v. Lubman, 67 Mo. Interest upon instalments of rents from the date at which they became due may be recovered. Lane v. Ruhl, 103 Mich. 38, 61 N. W. 347.

On retention of possession by defendant, under some statutes, the court is without authority to render judgment for damages except where defendant has given a bond to retain the possession after a writ of possession for the lands and premises has issued. See Fallon v. Murray, 4 Indian Terr. 86, 64 S. W. 753, holding that where the parties had treated the case as though the statutory bonds had been given, it was not improper to instruct the jury to find damages for plaintiff.

Exemplary damages.—On an action brought under Pub. St. c. 246, for the recovery of land from a tenant, exemplary damages are recoverable if defendant files a plea of title or appeals. Woodbury v. Butler, 67 N. H. 545, 38 Atl. 379.

Against separate defendants.— In a proceeding under the statute of 1842, brought by a landlord to recover the possession of premises from a tenant who holds over after his term, if several are joined as defendants, who hold by several and distinct possessions different parts of the premises, and who sever in their defenses, separate damages may be awarded against them. Middlebury College v. Lawton, 23 Vt. 688.

Where subtenant is in possession.— In a proceeding against a tenant and a subtenant for possession, a judgment for possession should be entered against both tenants, and a judgment for double rent against the original tenant only. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 123 Ga. 470, 51 S. E. 418.

Soc. v. Walker, 18 Vt. 600, holding that the rent which defendant had stipulated to pay might be considered.

Other elements of damage.— A bonus offered by another lessee for a long lease, the rental during the detention that such other lessee has engaged to pay, the attorney's fees paid by the lessor in getting possession of the property, and compensation for whatever advantages have been lost by the lessee's withholding possession, are proper elements of damage. Harvey v. Pflug, 37 La. Ann. 904.

Damages to adjacent property due to defendants holding over are not recoverable. Kower v. Gluck, 33 Cal. 401.

Amount of damages.— Fifty dollars is not excessive where premises were detained for fifty days, and the rents and profits were thirty dollars per month. Taylor v. Terry, 71 Cal. 46, 11 Pac. 813. Two hundred dollars is not excessive where there was four months' detention, and the premises had been rented for six hundred dollars a year. Pence v. Williams, 14 Ind. App. 86, 42 N. E. 494.

specifically pleaded.[51] A judgment for rents due is not improperly termed a judgment for damages.[52]

2. Right of Action — a. In General. Summary proceedings will not lie while defendant is entitled to present possession,[53] but they may be maintained, although the tenant has a right of possession in futuro.[54] The right of action must exist at the time the proceeding is begun.[55]

b. Contracts With Reference to Right. Statutory provisions for summary proceedings for restitution confer such right independent of any contract right for reëntry,[56] and the parties to the lease it would seem have no power to agree that summary proceedings may be resorted to on other than grounds provided by the statute,[57] but they may contract against the institution of such proceedings.[58]

c. Waiver. The right to bring summary proceedings may be waived.[59]

d. Abatement. Where plaintiff had a legal cause of action at the time the proceeding was commenced, it may be maintained, although pending the action his title terminates.[60]

3. Property Which May Be Recovered. A statutory provision for the recovery of "tenements" is sufficiently broad to cover land, corporeal hereditaments, or anything of a permanent nature which may be held.[61]

Y.) 483, holding that an agreement entered into between a landlord and his tenant for the purpose of getting rid of an obnoxious subtenant that the tenant should make default of payment of rent in order to enable the landlord to institute proceedings ostensibly to eject both the tenant and subtenant but in fact to eject the latter only, and that they should have no effect against the tenant himself, is not valid, so as to entitle the tenant to restrain the landlord from terminating his lease, and recovering possession of the premises upon default of payment, and the issue of a warrant of dispossession.

and other summary remedies being generally, under the statutes, actions merely for the possession of the property,[63] are properly brought in the name of the party entitled to possession,[64] and as a rule must be.[65] It is not necessary that plaintiff be the owner of the premises.[66] So the action may be brought by a tenant for years entitled to the possession,[67] or by a life-tenant.[68] Plaintiff or plaintiffs must represent the entire interest.[69] Actions cannot be brought by one tenant in common against another to recover possession of an undivided part of the estate.[70]

b. Joint Lessors. Where the owners in severalty of separate tracts of land jointly lease them, one of such owners may as landlord sue to dispossess the tenant from his tract,[71] and the lessors may sue jointly for the entire premises.[72]

c. Agents. By express provision of the statutes in some jurisdictions a summary proceeding may be maintained by an agent of the landlord,[73] and in the absence of such a provision, where the tenant is in fact the tenant of an agent of the owner who has been placed in charge of the premises, the agent may recover the possession.[74]

After a transfer of the reversion the original landlord cannot sue for the possession,[80] although he may have covenanted to deliver possession to his grantee,[81] unless under the circumstances he has a right to possession as where the sale remains executory or there has been an agreement by which the possession remains in the landlord.[82] A grantee[83] or an assignee[84] of the reversion may, under the statutes generally, maintain an action. And an action may likewise be maintained by a purchaser of the reversion upon foreclosure of a mortgage,[85] at sheriff's sale,[86] or on foreclosure of a mechanic's lien.[87] It has also been held that a mortgagee may bring an action against an overholding tenant,[88] or that where he has gone into possession he may proceed for non-payment of rent.[89] Where, pending proceedings, plaintiff sells and the vendee treats the tenant as if he had attorned, neither may carry on the suit.[90] Under some statutes a grantee of the owner after forfeiture cannot maintain an action.[91] Under other statutes a subsequent grantee has the same right as his grantor.[92]

g. After Lease to Third Person. While it has been held that the landlord, after having executed a valid lease to a third person, has no longer a right of possession enabling him to maintain an action to recover possession from a former tenant,[93] the better rule would appear to be that he has such an interest in the possession as will enable him to sue.[94] The action may also be maintained in such a case by the lessee whose term immediately follows.[95]

by a conditional limitation as distinguished from a termination of the lease upon a breach of condition.[19]

(II) Under Unlawful Detainer Acts. The remedy by action of unlawful detainer is usually extended to cases in which the tenant holds over contrary to the provisions of his lease[20] after demand,[21] whether the tenant holds by force or not.[22] Although there may be no positive refusal to comply with the demand,[23] there must be at least a constructive refusal,[24] which may be at or after the termination of the lease.[25]

c. Holding Contrary to Provisions of Lease. W. 564 (holding that the landlord had a right to resume possession upon an offer to pay for labor and crops under a lease of a farm for three years, which stipulated that if the farm was sold for a certain sum the tenant should surrender possession on being reimbursed for his labor and crops, and that if the landlord did not return to the farm and himself occupy the tenant could continue in possession); Marvin v. Hartz, 130 Mich. 26, 89 N. W. 557 (holding that where the lessee assigns without consent of his lessor the assignee holds contrary to the lease, and that an action may be maintained).

the landlord has a right of reëntry because of breach of the conditions or covenants of the lease, it is usually held that he may bring an action of unlawful detainer;[27] but the mere breach of a covenant does not give such right unless it works a forfeiture or gives a right of reëntry,[28] nor does the commission of waste.[29] Under some statutes, however, waste is a specific ground of action.[30] It is enough that the tenant holds contrary to the conditions of his lease; the possession need not be maintained by force and strong hand.[31]

d. Non-Payment of Rent. Where by statute a summary remedy is afforded only in case of the termination of the tenant's estate by stipulation in the lease or expiration of his term, such a proceeding cannot be maintained for non-payment of rent in the absence of a condition of forfeiture in the lease.[32] But the non-payment of rent in accordance with the terms of the lease is, under the various landlord and tenant statutes, usually made a ground upon which summary[33]

27. Jones v. Durrer, 96 Cal. 95, 30 Pac. 1027; Preston v. Stover, (Nebr. 1903) 97 N. W. 812; Lent v. Curtis, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. 592 (holding that a lessor of land may proceed to recover possession of the demised premises by forcible detainer, notwithstanding any claim which the lessee or a trustee for his creditors may have under a provision in the lease by which the lessor agrees to purchase a building which lessee has erected on the land, and need not go into a court of equity to have such a claim adjudicated before seeking to recover possession of the premises); Thompson v. Ackerman, 21 Ohio Cir. Ct. 740, 12 Ohio Cir. Dec. 456.

For example the action will lie where a tenant forfeits his rights to the demised premises by using the premises for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors (Justice v. Lowe, 26 Ohio St. 372), or for the failure of the lessee of a distillery warehouse to comply with an agreement that, as the whisky came out of bond, he would collect the state and county taxes thereon, and pay the same to the person entitled thereto, and that, if he failed to do so, he would at once surrender possession of the premises to the lessor without notice (Walker v. Dowling, 68 S. W. 135, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 179). But as an existing unexpired lease is not forfeited by operation of law by the use of the premises for purposes of prostitution, the statute only giving an option to avoid it, the lease is still subsisting, and the landlord has only a right to enter and proceed by ejectment, and hence cannot recover possession by forcible entry and detainer. Y.) 632, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 106 (holding that where rent is payable in advance in two instalments, one on the second and the other on the fifteenth of each month, a summary proceeding for non-payment of rent, brought on the fifteenth, is not premature, where the first instalment is due and unpaid); Cochran v. Reich, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 623, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 443 (holding that where summary proceedings for the removal of a tenant are taken under a lease providing for the payment both of rent and of water-rents as part of rent reserved, and any amount for either is found to be due, the landlord is entitled to a final order); Belding v. Blum, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 178.

Other payments under lease.— Where, in a proceeding for recovery of possession of premises for non-payment of rent, under Rev. St. (1899) §§ 4131–4133, the sum demanded is part for rent and part for other claims, the action cannot be maintained, although the payment for both is provided for in the lease of the premises in a lump sum. Welch v. Ashby, 88 Mo. App. 400.

Payments in lieu of rent.— Where a lease provided that the tenant should make certain improvements and alterations within six months, and, if the same be not then made or commenced, he should pay the landlord the sum of two thousand four hundred dollars (an amount equal to six months' rent), such payment not being shown to be for rent, a

or unlawful detainer[34] proceedings may be instituted, the proper notice or demand having been given,[35] and although the lease contains no clause of reëntry[36] or forfeiture,[37] or although there is a provision for its termination upon notice,[38] and the tenant need not actually withhold possession by force.[39]

e. Unlawful Use of Premises. Under the statutes of some states summary proceedings may be maintained where the premises are used for an unlawful purpose,[40] and the illegal use need not have continued until the action was begun.[41]

f. Removal From Premises. By some statutes a summary remedy is provided where the tenant has removed from the premises.[42]

7. Defenses — a. In General. As a general rule defendant may establish in defense to a summary proceeding any matter which shows that his occupancy is rightful.[43] For example he may show that he is holding under a valid and unex-failure of the tenant to perform the covenant or make such payment did not warrant the maintenance of summary proceedings to recover possession. Sipp v. Reich, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 960.

Furnished house.— The fact that furniture is embraced in a demise of land does not deprive the landlord of the summary remedy furnished by the statute against tenants who fail to pay rent, or who hold over after the expiration of the term for which the premises were hired. The rent issues out of the land and not out of the furniture which is a mere incident of the demise. Armstrong v. Cummings, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 331; Swigley v. Jones, 1 N. Y. City Ct. 127.

Sufficiency of showing.— In proceedings to dispossess a tenant on the ground that she kept a house of ill fame, evidence that she kept an intelligence office on the second floor, and that her customers gathered in a hallway common to the whole building, and were guilty of improper conduct without her knowledge, shows no grounds entitling the landlord to recover possession. II, c. 19, § 16, to recover the possession, although he knew where the tenant then was, and although the justices found a servant of the tenant on the premises when they first went to view the same).

The fact that defendant owns the building which he occupies gives him no right to withhold possession of the leased land on which it stands. Lloyd v. Secord, 61 Minn. 448, 63 N. W. 1099.

Preference as to purchase.— An agreement in the lease whereby, in the event of sale, the tenant has the first privilege of purchase is no defense where the premises have not been sold, since such option does not alter de-

pired lease,[44] that he is entitled to an extension of the lease under which he entered,[45] or that his continuance in possession is under a new agreement.[46] A new lease which is void is no defense,[47] nor is the good faith of the tenant in holding over.[48]

b. Non-Existence of Relation of Landlord and Tenant. Defendant may show that a relationship of landlord and tenant such as will sustain the proceeding does not exist.[49]

c. Invalidity of Lease. The tenant cannot set up the invalidity of the lease,[50] for example, that the premises were rented for an immoral purpose,[51] as a defense.

d. Entry Under Third Person. It is not as a general rule material whether the tenant received possession of the demised premises from his landlord or became tenant after obtaining possession.[52]

e. Denial of Title. The general rule that the tenant is estopped to deny the landlord's title operates to prevent his contesting the validity of such title in dispossession proceedings,[53] and apart from this the usual rule is that questions of title cannot be litigated.[54]

f. Payment or Tender of Rent. In actions based upon non-payment of rent, matter showing a discharge of the liability for rent,[55] or a lawful and sufficient fendant's situation as a tenant. Brauchle v. Nothhelfer, 107 Wis. 457, 83 N. W. 653.

A claim for compensation for improvements is not in itself a defense (Elliott v. Round Mountain Coal, etc., Co., 108 Ala. 640, 18 So. 689), nor is an agreement to pay for improvements where defendant has refused to accept the payment tendered or to surrender possession (Fraer v. Washington, 125 Fed. 280, 60 C. Suppl. 870 (holding that where a landlord accepted part cash and a non-negotiable note in payment of rent due and to become due to the note's maturity, giving a receipt for such rent under an agreement to accept such payment if he could get the note cashed, he was not entitled on tendering a return of the note to dispossess the tenant before the note's maturity, where it did not appear whether he could get it cashed or whether he had made any effort to do so); Collender v. Smith, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 612, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 1130 (holding that payment by an assignee of all rent accruing since his tenancy was not a defense where prior rent remained unpaid).

Acceptance of payment after notice.— The excuse for its non-payment,[56] or a tender of the full amount before suit brought,[57] furnishes a good defense. Some statutes provide that upon a tender of the rent due and payment of costs, defendant may have a judgment.[58] But a statute providing that an action of unlawful detainer on account of non-payment of rent shall abate on a tender of the rent due has no application to an action to recover possession unlawfully held by the tenant after the expiration of the term.[59] A tender before judgment, under these statutes, is not sufficient without a deposit of the money in court to await the final order.[60] When the statute provides a time within which payment may be made after demand of possession, it is held that a tender of the rent after the expiration of such period is insufficient.[61] Where a tender to the justice is provided for, a tender for the first time on appeal from his decision is not sufficient.[62] An action by the grantee of the reversion for non-payment of rent cannot be defeated by a payment of rent by the tenant to the original landlord, with notice of plaintiff's rights.[63] Under a statute providing for the retention of possession upon the giving of security for rent, a subtenant is entitled to give such security.[64]

g. Breach of Covenant or Eviction by Lessor. As a general rule a breach of covenant by the lessor constitutes no defense to an action for the recovery of possession.[65] A partial eviction is, however, a defense to proceedings based upon landlord's right to commence, on the expiration of a notice to quit for non-payment of rent, an action under Rev. St. c. 104, to recover possession of premises leased at will, is not barred by payment of the rent on the day after the giving of the notice, although before the commencement of the action, if the landlord, when receiving payment, expressly reserves his rights under the notice. 56. Wilcoxen v. Hybarger, 1 Indian Terr. 138, 38 S. W. 669.

Taking of security postponing payment of past-due instalments of rent upon a lease and securing payment of subsequent instalments as have matured does not bar proceedings on default in payment of subsequently accrued instalments (People v. McAdam, 50 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 19); nor does a deposit of security for payment of the last month's rent, under a lease for a year, payable monthly and in advance on the first of each month, bar proceedings for any default which may be made before that month arrives (Brainard v. Hudson, 1 N. Y. City Ct. 448).

The garnishment of the tenant as a debtor of the landlord is a bar to proceedings for the recovery of possession for non-payment of rent during the pendency of the garnishment. O'Connor v. White, 124 Mich. 22, 82 N. W. 664, so holding, although the tenant informed such creditor of his indebtedness to the landlord, and acted in collusion with the creditor.

Pendency of an appeal from a judgment for the landlord in an action for rent, with an undertaking effectual as a stay, is not a bar to a summary proceeding. Durant Land Imp. Co. v. Thomson-Houston Electric Co., 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 182, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 764, 23 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 29.

h. Equitable Defenses. The general rule is that an equitable defense cannot be asserted in a proceeding to recover possession of the demised premises.[69] But the prosecution of such an action may be enjoined to permit defendant to establish such equities in a proper proceeding.[70] By some statutes, however, the interposition of an equitable defense is permitted,[71] although the court is given no power to grant equitable relief.[72]

Suppl. 703, holding that a defense to a summary proceeding to remove a tenant that the landlord's interest was not that of owner but of an equitable mortgagee, and that the tenant, a former owner of the fee, was entitled to a conveyance on the payment of a certain sum by way of redemption, is not cognizable in the municipal court, since its jurisdiction to entertain equitable defenses is limited to cases where the defense is of a nature cognizable in a court of law, and not calling for the exercise of jurisdiction peculiar to a court of equity.

The defense must be germane to the issues. — Patrick v. Cobb, 122 Ga. 80, 49 S. E. 806, holding that a counter-affidavit, setting up that the deed under which plaintiff claims title from defendant is void and praying for cancellation of the same, is not allowable.

i. Inconsistent Defenses. A defendant is not permitted to rely upon inconsistent defenses.[73]

8. Set-Off and Counter-Claim. The interposition of a set-off or counter-claim is usually not permissible in an action for unlawful detainer,[74] or summary proceeding.[75] For example the tenant cannot assert a claim for damages from breach of the lessor's covenants.[76] By statute, however, it is in some jurisdictions provided that a counter-claim may be interposed in a summary proceeding, in the same manner as if the claim for rent in such proceeding was the subject of the action.[77]

9. Conditions Precedent — a. In General. In the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, an action for unlawful detainer will not lie until the tenancy has been terminated or forfeited in the manner prescribed by the common law, or by statutes of general application,[78] and the same is true of other summary proceedings.[79] An actual entry upon the premises is not a condition prece-

b. Demand of Rent. Where a summary proceeding is based upon non-payment of rent, a demand for such rent is usually made a condition precedent by statute.[82] Where there are joint lessors the demand may be made by any one of them;[83] and where there are joint lessees the demand may be made upon either.[84] Where the tenant has the option of paying the rent and avoiding dispossession, it is necessary that the demand state the exact amount of rent due.[85] Under some statutes relating to unlawful detainer a demand of rent is unnecessary where the tenant holds over after rent has become due.[86] But it is in general provided that a demand for rent must be made in such case, the time and sufficiency thereof being specifically prescribed.[87] Under these statutes it has been held sufficient that a demand for rent be made at the time of demand for possession.[88] A demand of rent when due, in addition to a notice to quit for non-payment of of rent, has been held unnecessary.[89] The statutory demand may be waived by express agreement in the lease.[90] Where the demand is by a purchaser of the reversion it must, under the statutes of some states, be accompanied by an exhibition of the purchaser's title deeds.[91]

c. Notice to Quit or Demand of Possession — (I) Nature and Necessity — (A) In General. The necessity of a demand for possession other than that required to terminate the tenancy[92] is a matter governed entirely by the statute under which the proceedings are maintained.[93] Under some statutes such a notice is a condition precedent and must be given;[94] but as a general rule no distinct statutory notice is required where the tenancy has been otherwise terminated,[95] where the tenant is holding without right,[96] or where he has announced his intention to quit the premises.[97] The tenant by merely holding over a brief period after the expiration of his term does not become entitled to a notice to quit, as demanded by a new tenancy.[98] Where demand has been made upon the tenant, an additional demand need not be made upon a receiver of the tenant's interest, who is subsequently appointed.[99]

(B) In Unlawful Detainer Proceedings. It is, under many statutes, essential that a notice to quit or demand for possession be made before an action of unlawful detainer may be begun.[1] Under some the demand necessary to render retention of the premises after expiration of the possessory right an unlawful detainer is distinct from that which is necessary to terminate the lease or tenancy,[2]

and must be shown in addition thereto,[3] it being necessary that the demand rendering the detention unlawful be made after the tenant has commenced to hold over.[4] In other jurisdictions, however, the demand incident to unlawful detainer proceedings may be made before expiration of the term,[5] the day at which the tenant is to quit being fixed thereat or thereafter.[6] In many jurisdictions no demand is required in the particular case of a tenant holding after expiration of a definite term.[7] And in any event a notice to terminate the tenancy is not necessary in addition to the demand under the statute.[8] Where the statute provides that the tenant shall be guilty of an unlawful detainer in case of continuance in possession after failure to perform covenants, notice requiring the performance of such covenants or the possession of the property having been served on him, a demand for possession must be made, although the covenants are incapable of future performance.[9] But a demand for performance of the covenants is unnecessary.[10] In case the landlord serves a notice to quit, as required in the case of a tenancy of a particular character, he is not by such fact precluded from repudiating the notice and asserting the true nature of the tenancy.[11]

(c) After Disclaimer of Relation or Denial of Title. Where the tenant disclaims the relation of landlord and tenant[12] or denies the title of his landlord[13] proof of a demand of possession or notice to quit is as a general rule unnecessary. But under some statutes a demand for possession must be made, although defendant claims adversely.[14]

(D) Waiver. In some jurisdictions it is held that the statutory notice or demand cannot be waived.[15] In others, however, the parties to the lease may stipulate for a shorter notice than that required by statute,[16] or waive all notice.[17] The waiver must, however, be full, absolute, and direct,[18] and in some states must be expressly found by the inquisition,[19] or must appear of record.[20] Objections to the sufficiency of demand, it has been held, are waived if not taken as a preliminary objection in the proceedings.[21]

(II) WHO MAY GIVE NOTICE. Notice by a stranger to the title is insufficient,[22] although after a sale of the premises, possession to be given at the end of the term, the lessor has still such an interest as will support a notice to quit on the final day.[23] As a general rule it is held sufficient that the notice be signed by the landlord by attorney,[24] or by agent,[25] or that the notice be given by an agent.[26] But while express authority need not be established,[27] it is necessary that authority exist at the time of demand, and a subsequent ratification by the landlord will not be equivalent to prior authority to make the demand.[28]

(III) SUFFICIENCY—(A) In General.[29] A verbal notice is under some statutes sufficient.[30] Where a form of demand is prescribed by the statute it should be followed,[31] although a substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient,[32] and the demand will not be invalidated by a patent mistake of such nature as not to be misleading.[33] While as a general rule it would seem that the notice to quit need not set out the reasons for which the tenancy is terminated,[34] where the demand is based upon a breach of condition it is held under some statutes that it must be sufficient to enable the tenant to correct the acts which he has done, or supply the omission.[35] The notice may allow the tenant the privilege of remaining in case he complies with certain conditions.[36]

(B) Length. The length of notice is a matter purely of statutory regulation.[37] Where the notice required by statute must be given a certain length of time before the action is begun, it has been held that a notice given at such time is sufficient, although the time specified in the notice is shorter.[38] Under some statutes notice must be complete at the expiration of the term,[39] while under others the time fixed by the notice to quit may be after the expiration of the lease by its own limitation.[40]

not fatal where it is not of such nature as to render the notice misleading or uncertain.[43]

(iv) Service. In the absence of statutory provisions as to the manner of service, a notice to quit may be served as in other cases.[44] Where the statute provides that demand shall be made in writing for the possession, a written copy of such demand must be left with the tenant.[45] Service may be properly made on the tenant's wife living with him on the premises,[46] upon one of joint tenants,[47] or upon an assignee of the whole term in possession.[48] Since a demand for possession must be established as any other disputed fact in a case, it must be established by the best evidence,[49] and like other facts may be established by parol.[50]

(v) Waiver of Notice Already Given. The giving of a second notice may be regarded as a waiver of one already given.[51] Notice is not waived by the fact that the tenant is allowed to remain upon the premises for some time after it is given, where no act is done which indicates a renewal of the lease.[52]

10. Jurisdiction. Statutes providing for summary proceedings usually confer jurisdiction of such proceedings upon courts of limited and inferior jurisdiction,[53] such as county courts,[54] city courts,[55] or those of justices of the peace,[56] or magistrates,[57] and under some statutes the jurisdiction of such courts is exclusive.[58] The necessary jurisdiction must appear affirmatively on the face of the record;[59] but jurisdiction is not ousted by matters occurring after the action is brought.[60] A court of limited jurisdiction having no power to try questions of title to realty is not divested of jurisdiction simply because defendant pleads title;[61] if the proof brings the case within the terms of the statute the court retains jurisdic-

the notice and renewal of the tenancy, precluding the landlord from maintaining an action on that notice.

In case the tenant has repudiated his tenancy, it is not necessary to serve a new notice to quit, although a considerable time is permitted to elapse before the action is begun. Douglass v. Anderson, 32 Kan. 350, 4 Pac. 257, 32 Kan. 353, 4 Pac. 283.

Territorial jurisdiction.— A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of summary proceedings to obtain possession of demised premises within the city and county of New York, although neither of the parties resided, and the premises are not situated, within the district for which he was elected. Carlisle v. McCall, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 399.

Effect of joining distinct remedies.— Where a landlord brought suit in a justice's court to recover possession, and for rent due, as authorized by Rev. St. (1899) § 4131, the fact that plaintiff obtained in such action a landlord's attachment, under section 4123, on a summons not returnable in less than ten days, as required in actions by attachment by section 3862, did not deprive the justice of jurisdiction to render judgment for the rent due and for possession. 57. Keller v. Pagan, 54 S. C. 255, 32 S. E. 353, holding that under Rev. St. (1893) § 1937, which vests in two magistrates jurisdiction to eject a tenant holding over under a lease of "lands and tenements," on application of the landlord, without previous demand for possession; and section 1939 which vests a single magistrate with jurisdiction where the lease is of "houses and tenements," and the landlord has demanded and been refused possession, a single magistrate may eject a tenant of "lands."

III, c. 52, and varied as to its mode of execution by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, § 13, is not by any of the provisions of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, or by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, § 34, vested in the lord mayor or one aldermau sitting in the justice's room at the mansion house or guild hall, so as to enable them to exercise the power in the same manner as police magistrates sitting in one of the metropolitan police courts may, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, § 13, exercise it. W. 90, holding that where a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of summary proceedings to recover possession of land, where no circuit court commissioner resides in the township, the affidavit instituting the proceeding need not in the absence of statute state that no commissioner resides therein.

Amount in controversy.— In summary proceedings by a landlord to eject a tenant after the expiration of his lease, brought in the district court under Rev. St. § 2156, giving that court jurisdiction where the monthly rent exceeds one hundred dollars, it may be shown on the trial that the rent is sufficient to give jurisdiction. W. 549, holding that a court commissioner has no jurisdiction of an action against a tenant

tion.[62] As a general rule jurisdiction being conferred on inferior courts with no equitable jurisdiction the court possesses no power to try equitable issues.[63] A grant of jurisdiction of actions against tenants and others to recover premises let is sufficiently broad to include actions against tenants at sufferance.[64]

11. Time to Sue and Limitations. An action to recover possession cannot be begun until the expiration of the tenant's right of occupancy,[65] which is not until the expiration of the time fixed in a demand of possession, where such demand is made a condition precedent by the statute.[66] But unless there is a contrary provision in the statute, the action may be brought at any time thereafter.[67] By statute, however, it is usually provided that the proceeding may be barred by the lapse of a specified time after the cause of action accrues.[68] Such a period does not begin to run, however, before the expiration or the termination of the lease,[69] or while the relation of landlord and tenant continues.[70] It has been held also that the action must be begun within the period of limitations, the service of a notice to quit not being sufficient to interrupt such period.[71] Under some statutes where the tenant has been in quiet possession for a specified time the action will not lie against him until the termination of his estate.[72]

And see Schreiber v. Goldsmith, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 45, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 236, holding that the fact that a landlord has conveyed the premises occupied by a tenant to the latter, subject to the life-estate of the landlord, does not divest the municipal court of jurisdiction of a summary proceeding to remove the tenant, on the ground that the court has no equitable power to pass on the effect of the deed.

12. Parties — a. Plaintiffs. Two persons entitled to a restitution of distinct possessory interests cannot join.[73] Joint lessors may, however, join.[74]

b. Defendants — (I) In General. As a general rule all persons who are in possession under the tenant may be joined with him as defendants.[75] It is proper to join the tenant with those in possession under him, although the tenant has relinquished the entire possession to them;[76] but it is not necessary that he be joined.[77] The tenant's grantee in fee may be joined with the tenant.[78] The mortgagee of the term is not a necessary defendant.[79]

(II) Subtenants. Subtenants placed in possession by the tenant with the consent of the lessor are not necessary parties,[80] unless a judgment is sought against them.[81]

c. Intervention. Under some statutes a person claiming possession may intervene and file an answer,[82] but an intervention is not permitted unless provided for by statute.[83]

13. Process or Precept. Dispossession proceeding being special statutory proceedings of a summary nature, the methods prescribed by statute by which jurisdiction is to be obtained must be strictly pursued;[84] and where provision is made as to the nature and service of process, other statutes relating to process are inapplicable.[85] For example a process in the ordinary form for debt is not suffi-

21. Eveleth v. Gill, 97 Me. 315, 54 Atl. 756, holding that a mere general statement that defendant had lawful entry into the lands and tenements of plaintiff, and that his estate in the premises was determined on a given date, was not sufficient to support a complaint based upon a statute permitting the owner to maintain forcible entry and detainer to eject a lawful tenant because of his using the premises for any purpose denominated a common nuisance.

App. 318, 77 S. W. 151; Chung Yow v. Hop Chong, 11 Oreg. 220, 4 Pac. 326 (holding that the complaint need not aver service of notice to quit).

23. See, generally, PLEADING.

Surplusage.— Where the terms of the lease are alleged, also the period during which defendants have been in default in the payment of rent prior to the date of demand, an averment that the amount in default covered a period which extended beyond the date at which the demand was made, or beyond the date when the last instalment accrued, may be rejected as surplusage. Knowles v. Murphy, 107 Cal. 107, 40 Pac. 111. Inclusion of personal property in an affidavit to dispossess a tenant holding over may be regarded as surplusage, and does not vitiate the entire aver matters of evidence,[24] or legal conclusions from the facts alleged,[25] or to negative matters of defense.[26] A demand of relief to which plaintiff is not entitled will not vitiate his complaint.[27]

(B) Relationship of Landlord and Tenant. Since summary proceedings are usually based upon statutes making the relationship of landlord and tenant an essential to the right of action, the existence of such relation must as a rule be shown by the complaint.[28] But such a showing is not required in proceedings proceeding. Du Bignon v. Tufts, 66 Ga. 59. An allegation that a party occupied premises under a verbal lease from month to month, which began and ended on the first day of each month, is not objectionable because such a tenancy cannot begin and end on the first of each month, but amounts to an averment of a month to month tenancy, beginning on the first of each month, the allegation as to the ending being treated as surplusage. Harris v. Halverson, 23 Wash. 779, 63 Pac. 549.

An amendment as to the date of termination of the lease may be allowed in the discretion of the court where it appears that all parties were mistaken as to the date. Earl Orchard Co. v. Fava, 138 Cal. 76, 70 Pac. 1073, so holding, although the amendment was allowed after the objection was urged by motion for a nonsuit. Where the facts showing the relation of landlord and tenant, and the existence of a lease and its terms appear only inferentially and not particularly, the landlord may amend his affidavit under Rev. Code (1892), § 717. Bowles v. Dean, 84 Miss. 376, 36 So. 391.

Sufficiency of showing.— For examples of complaints or affidavits held to contain a sufficient showing of the relationship see State v. Rainey, 99 Mo. App. 218, 73 S. W. 250 (where the complaint alleged that defendant had attorned to plaintiff by paying rent to him); Steffens v. Earl, 40 N. J. L. 128, 29 Am. Rep. 214 (where the affidavit averred that deponent leased the said premises to defendant, by the month, to commence on a day stated, at a monthly rental stated); People v. Lamb, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 348 (where it was averred that an amount specified was due for rent according to an agreement by which the premises were let, and that the tenant held over and continued in possession of said premises); Griffin v. Barton, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 228, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 1021 (where it was alleged that defendant was in possession as tenant under an agreement or hiring with a person from whom petitioner became the owner of the premises); Earle v. McGoldrick, 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 135, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 803 (where it was alleged that defendant was in possession under an alleged agreement or hiring with petitioner's grantor, and held over and continued in possession without the permission of "petitioner, said owner and landlord"); Thresher v. Keteltas, 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 63 (holding an affidavit which described affiant "as trustee of the estate" of G deceased, averred that deponent as trustee of the estate of G "leased said premises," and that he "now owns said premises and holds said lease as sole trustee of said estate," a sufficient showing that affiant is landlord. For examples of complaint held insufficient see Bowles v. Dean, 84 Miss. 376, 36 So. 391 (where the affidavit recited that defendant "a tenant for a part of" a year, of plaintiff, "holds over . . . after the expiration of his term, without permission of the landlord"); State v. Staiger, 52 N. J. L. 350, 19 Atl. 387 (where an affidavit alleged that T was in possession of premises owned by defendant, under an agreement between A the former owner and said T, and that the possession was continued to a certain time by consent of deponent, and still continues but without his permission); People v. Matthews, 38 N. Y. 451 [affirming 43 Barb. 168] (where by a transposition of sentences under general statutes by which the existence of the relation is not made an essential.[29]

(c) Right to Sue. It is necessary that a right to possession be shown,[30] or that plaintiff is the person authorized by statute to sue;[31] but an express averment of such facts is not necessary where they follow from the facts alleged.[32]

(d) Title. Since title is not involved in an action of this nature,[33] an allegation of title is not as a rule necessary.[34] It is sufficient that the complaint or declaration allege that the relation of landlord and tenant exists, without averring the nature of plaintiff's estate.[35]

(e) Description of Premises. It is necessary that the complaint describe the premises with reasonable certainty,[36] and under some statutes a particular descrip-

the affidavit read that the premises were leased to R by C, and were afterward purchased by M, the present landlord, for the term of one year, which term had expired and R was holding over without permission of the landlord); People v. Simpson, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 432, 23 How. I. 213, 2 Atl. 300 (where the declaration contained no express averment that the tenements sued for were the tenements let, or that defendants were tenants at will, but only that defendants were tenants by sufferance).

Description of interest. — Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2235, the petition must contain a description of the interest of the petitioner or the person whom he represents. This section has been construed and applied in the following cases: Rowland v. Dillingham, 83 N. Y. App. Div. 156, 82 N. Y. Suppl. 470; Kazis v. Loft, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 636, 80 N. Y. Sufficiency of description. — An affidavit to obtain a warrant to dispossess a tenant holding over should be sufficiently certain in the description of the land to enable the sheriff to identify the premises (Vaughan v. Vaughan, 111 Ga. 807, 35 S. E. 650, holding that a proceeding to dispossess a tenant is properly dismissed where the only description of the land is that complainant is the owner of a certain tract of land in the "21st district, G. M.," of a certain county, being a part of the tract known as the "C. B. Vaughan Land," and that he desires possession of thirty-three acres, which was apportioned to complainant from the "C. B. Vaughan estate"; Newing v. Stilwell, 67 N. J. L. 96, 50 Atl. 493); and to advise the tenant of the premises claimed (Newing v. Stilwell, supra). It would seem that a description of premises which at common law would have been good in ejectment is sufficient. Story v. Walker, 71 N. J. L. 256, 58 Atl. 349 (sustaining a description of the prem-

tion is essential.[37] A description of the property as described in the lease is usually held sufficient.[38] But where there is a mistake in the lease it is essential that the complaint describe the premises truly.[39] A faulty description may be aided by matters of which the court will take judicial notice.[40]

(F) Occupancy. The declaration or petition must name or designate the person in possession.[41]

(G) Demand or Notice and Holding Over. The making of a demand in conformity with the statute, in case such statute makes a demand, a condition precedent to the maintenance of the action must be averred,[42] and where the action is based upon holding over it must be averred that the tenancy has been determined.[43] Where the statute requires that the holding over shall be without permission of the landlord, the lack of such permission must be averred.[44] An allegation of a forcible detention is unnecessary where not a statutory element of the cause of action,[45] the Landlord and Tenant Acts being different in this respect from the usual forcible entry and detainer statutes,[46] under which an averment of force is necessary.[47]

ises demanded as "a house, lot, and premises, of which Bernard Walker is now in possession, known as 'No. 155 West Broad street,' situated in the city of Burlington, in the county of Burlington"); Newing v. Stilwell, 67 N. J. L. 96, 50 Atl. 493 (sustaining a description of the premises as "the westerly portion of the building known as 'Newing's Hotel,' situate on Broadway, Longbranch City, in the county of monmouth").

37. Beel v. Pierce, 11 Ill. 92 (holding an averment that plaintiff had rented about fifteen acres from a tract of two hundred acres insufficient); Walker v. Harper, 33 Mo. 592 (holding, however, that it was not necessary that the description show that the premises were in the ward or township in which the suit was brought).

38. Stanford Land Co. v. Steidle, 28 Wash. 72, 68 Pac. 178. And see Emerick v. Tavener, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 220, 58 Am. Dec. 217, holding that where the premises are described as in the lease defendants cannot dispute the description.

39. Gerlach v. Walsh, 41 Ill. App. 83, holding a description insufficient which described premises as upon the north side of a street running north and south.

Fictitious names.— Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2235, requiring the petition in summary proceedings to "intelligibly" designate the person or persons against whom the proceeding is instituted, and to specify who are principals or tenants, and who are undertenants or assigns, the term "John Doe and Richard Doe, undertenants" is sufficient, although the petition does not aver that the names were fictitious, and used in ignorance of the true names, where the fact that the names were fictitious is stated in the precept, and there is no pretense that the parties interested did not know for whom the precept was intended. Ash v. Purnell, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 189, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 54, 19 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 234, 26 Abb. N. Cas. 92.

But see Spear v. Lomax, 42 Ala. 576, holding that an averment that defendants refused "on demand in writing," sufficient, although it was not expressly stated that a demand was made by plaintiff.

(H) Rent Due. A complaint based upon a holding over after expiration of the term is not required to state the amount of rent reserved under the lease,[48] nor is it under some statutes where based on non-payment of rent.[49] But where the tenant is entitled to secure an abatement of the proceeding by paying the amount of rent due, the complaint should aver such amount.[50]

(III) Verification. The petition or affidavit must be verified as required by statute.[51] The verification as a general rule under the statutes may be before any officer authorized to administer oaths and affirmations.[52] An affidavit that the complaint is true in substance and fact is sufficient.[53] Under some statutes the affidavit may be made by an agent of the landlord.[54] It need not be stated in the warrant that the complaint was under oath.[55]

(IV) Objections and Waiver. A defect in form and not in substance cannot be reached by general demurrer.[56] While a jurisdictional defect in the affidavit or petition cannot be waived,[57] other objections may be waived by failure to urge them at the proper time as in other civil proceedings.[58]

Demand of less than due.— The statement by a landlord, in a proceeding for restitution of the premises and for rent under the Landlord and Tenant Act, of less than the rent due, will not prevent a recovery, even though rent accruing subsequently is demanded in a separate proceeding. Mooers v. Martin, 23 Mo. App. 654.

51. Coatsworth v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. St. 809.

Under the New York statute, it must be verified in the manner required of a petition in the supreme court (Coatsworth v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. St. 809; Marchand v. Haber, 16 Misc. 319, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 950, holding that a petition defectively verified, in that the notary's name was by oversight not signed to the jurat, did not give a justice jurisdiction; Williams v. Culhone, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 241, holding that where the verification was taken without the state, the affidavit of the authority of the officer taking such verification must be attached as in the case of other affidavits); but such provision has reference only to the form of the verification, and not to the party verifying it (Stuyvesant Real Estate Co. v. Sherman, 40 Misc. 205, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 642, holding that in proceedings by a domestic corporation, the verification might be by an agent of the corporation).

Omission of date may be disregarded as a formal error, where the jurat is otherwise proper. Griffin v. Barton, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 512, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 121.

Omission of signature.— Where the names of the petitioners were at the end of the verification, but were not signed to the petition itself, it has been held that such was not a jurisdictional defect. Chadwick v. Spargur, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 422.

Sufficiency of venue.— Where the petition is headed "State of New York, City and County of New York," and is verified before a commissioner of deeds for New York county, it is sufficient. O'Callaghan v. Hennessey, 32 Misc. (N. Y.) 760, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 670.

52. Chambers v. Shivery, 6 Pa. Dist. 101. Ct. 314, 32 L. ed. 697 [affirming 6 Mackey (D. C.) 586] (holding that where the statute required that oath to be made by the complainant in person, and did not require it in terms to be administered by the justice, or within the District, the oath might be taken anywhere before a proper officer). And see Fletcher v. Collins, 111 Ga. 253, 36 S. E. 646, holding that it was not essential that the affidavit be made before a justice of the peace of the district in which the land lay.

b. Plea, Answer, or Counter-Affidavit — (I) Time to Plead. A comparatively brief time is usually given defendant in which to answer, the matter being regulated by statute.[59]

(II) Form and Contents. In the absence of contrary statutory provisions, defendant's pleadings in summary proceedings are governed by the rules applicable to pleadings in civil cases generally,[60] and, where the proceeding is brought in an inferior court, by the rules particularly applicable to such proceedings.[61] A general denial is as a rule sufficient;[62] and under some statutes is the only answer that may be interposed, except a denial of the specific allegations of the petition.[63] But a mere general denial will not overcome a fact which is admitted by clear and necessary inference from other facts expressly stated.[64] In addition cover possession of property retained by defendant after the expiration of his lease, the latter admits that he leased the premises of plaintiffs as set forth in their petition, it is a waiver of the right to take advantage of any variance between the names of the persons stated in the petition as composing the partnership and those stated in the lease); Gibbens v. Thompson, 21 Minn. 398 (holding that a complaint defective by reason of an omission to state the place, city, or county, wherein certain described premises are situate, is cured by the failure of defendant seasonably to take the proper objection, and by his putting in an answer supplying such omission, setting up new matter, and going to trial upon the merits); Norsworthy v. Bryan, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 153 (holding that where the affidavit to remove a tenant stated that the "estate of A. B." was landlord, the tenant could not, where there was no denial, afterward take the objection that an estate could not be an actor); Bliss v. Caryell, 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 162, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 13 (holding that an alteration in the verification of the petition made before trial is waived by going to trial without objection).

59. See Pausch v. Guerrard, 67 Ga. 319 (holding that the act of 1878, allowing three days for preparing a counter-affidavit and bond in proceedings to dispossess, did not repeal the former law providing for immediate dispossession of those holding over in Savannah, which the courts had construed to mean within twenty-four hours, but requires three days' notice); Godchaux v. Baumann, 44 La. Ann. 253, 10 So. 674.

On adjournment.— Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2244, 2248, 2249, where no judge is present when the precept is returned, the tenant is not required to appear and file an answer, but the cause may be adjourned by the clerk before issue joined and the tenant allowed to file his answer at the adjourned day when the judge is present. Negative pregnant.— An allegation in a complaint that a demand of rent was made on a certain day is sufficiently placed in issue by an averment that the demand was not made on that day as alleged. Hoopes v. Meyer, 1 Nev. 433.

In actions brought in the circuit court under the Indiana statutes, all defenses are available without pleading except such as must be pleaded in civil actions before justices of the peace. Ward v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 25 Ind. App. 405, 58 N. E. 264.

62. Henderson v. Allen, 23 Cal. 519; People v. Coles, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 96, holding that an affidavit of the tenant denying generally each and every allegation in the landlord's affidavit is sufficient.

The existence of a lease is denied by a general denial. Garrie v. Schmidt, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 753, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 703, holding that an answer in summary proceedings containing a general denial, but setting up the lease as a part of a separate defense, is not as a matter of pleading an admission of the existence of the lease, so as to relieve the landlord from proof thereof.

A denial of a demand of rent which is as broad as the allegation of the demand is sufficient. McGlynn v. Moore, 25 Cal. 384.

Plea of non-tenure.— A plea that respondent "is not in possession of the premises demanded" does not amount to a plea of non-tenure at the time the complaint was filed and notice served, nor to a disclaimer, and is bad on general demurrer. Davis v. Alden, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 323.

63. Barnum v. Fitzpatrick, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 951; Barnum v. Fitzpatrick, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 934 [reversing 27 Abb. N. Cas. 334].

64. Malick v. Kellogg, 118 Wis. 405, 95 N. W. 372, holding that an allegation that no rent was due, in an answer to an action based on non-payment of rent, was not a denial of possession, an allegation of the making of a lease being admitted.

A proposed amended answer showing how defendant was induced to sign the lease, even though it be deemed evidence in the case, is not an admission of the relation of landlord and tenant. Menominee River Lumber Co. v. Philbrook, 78 Wis. 142, 47 N. W. 188.

An admission of the execution of a conveyance is an admission of the title of plaintiff. Rogers v. Hill, 3 Indian Terr. 562, 64 S. W. 536.

to a general denial, defendant may also set forth the facts upon which his defense is based;[65] and when such facts are the basis of an affirmative defense they must be set out.[66] In some jurisdictions questions of title must be raised by special plea.[67] An objection of res adjudicata must be raised by plea or answer.[68] Under some statutes defendant joins issue upon plaintiff's affidavit by a counter-affidavit.[69] And where the counter-affidavit is imperfect, no issue is formed upon which a verdict may be taken.[70] It must deny the essential allegations of the affidavit;[71] but it is sufficient if it follow a statute prescribing what it shall contain.[72]

(III) VERIFICATION. The answer or affidavit must be verified as required by statute.[73]

(IV) AMENDMENT. Under the general rule by which great precision of pleading is not required in inferior courts, defendant may amend an answer which violates a technical rule but is not misleading;[74] but a new and independent defense cannot be set up by amendment when known when the original pleading was interposed and no excuse for the failure to assert it is offered.[75]

c. Counter-Claim. A counter-claim when permitted to be interposed[76] must

A plea of tender must show full compliance with the statute authorizing such a defense. Ralph v. Lomer, 3 Wash. 401, 28 Pac. 760, holding a plea insufficient which failed to allege that tenant had offered to pay interest, or that he had the money in court.

Facts entitling defendant to an extension of his term under the provisions of the lease should be specifically pleaded. See O'Brien v. Jones, 44 Cal. 193.

A plea setting up a title adverse to plaintiff is insufficient without an averment that defendant has surrendered possession as held under the lease. Howard v. Jones, 123 Ala. 488, 26 So. 129.

Termination of landlord's title.— The statement that a third person had a month previously sued out a similar warrant against defendant for the same premises, and that plaintiff in the present proceedings had said to affiant in a conversation that he had sold the land to such person, is in the absence of any allegation that defendant held under such third person or any denial of his tenancy under plaintiff, properly struck from a counter-affidavit. Werner v. Footman, 54 Ga. 128. A plea that since the demise the premises had passed by sheriff's sale to a third person, to whom defendant had attorned, is fatally defective in not setting out that the sale was under a judgment against the landlord and passed his estate, since otherwise it did not appear that an adverse title in a stranger was pleaded. Heritage v. Wilfong, 58 Pa. St. 137. If a tenant claims the premises by contract with his landlord since the commencement of the lease, he must set out either a conveyance executed or such an equitable right to one as will sustain a bill for a specific performance in a court of chancery. Debozear v. Butler, 2 Grant (Pa.) 417. See Douglas v. Dakin, 46 Cal. 49, holding that an answer which averred that a person not a party to the suit had formerly brought an action to quiet title to the demanded premises, and that such person was at the time in actual possession of the premises, claiming title in fee, was not ambiguous or uncertain.

d. Further Pleadings. A replication setting up a common-law demand for rent to work a forfeiture must state at what time of day and where on the premises the demand was made.[78] An entry and taking possession of the premises by plaintiff pending the action, it has been held, must be pleaded puis darrein continuance.[79]

18. Issues, Proof, and Variance — a. Matters Which Must Be Proved. Minnesota.—Waggoner v. Preston, 83 Minn. 336, 86 N. W. 335, service of notice.

Missouri.— Elliott v. Abell, 39 Mo. App. 346, holding that where in an action of forcible entry and detainer, plaintiff proceeded on the ground that defendant was put in possession of the land sued for as tenant of plaintiff's immediate grantor, for a definite term, and that defendant was holding over after the expiration of such term, it was for plaintiff to show that, at the time of the conveyance to him, defendant was in possession of the land as such tenant; and a recovery for a tract including land not shown to have been so held by defendant, although he was in possession of the whole of it, could not be sustained.

New York.— Brunnings v. Bittner, 27 Misc. 798, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 364; Brien v. Romano, 27 Misc. 225, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 750 (holding that where the petition in summary proceedings sets forth the service of the statutory notice to terminate the tenancy, and the answer is a general denial except of the landlord's ownership, a final order for the landlord is reversible, where there is no evidence of the service of the notice); Brill v. Norkett, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 142 (holding that where the allegation of the petition that a certain amount of rent was due was denied by a verified answer, judgment for plaintiff, without any evidence that any rent was due, was erroneous).

Tennessee.— Levett v. Bickford, 8 Humphr. 614, rent in arrear.

Peabody v. Long Acre Square Bldg. Co., 47 Misc. (N. Y.) 629, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 507.

Agreement to vacate.— Where a lease for a fixed period is established plaintiff need not prove, in addition, an agreement to vacate the premises. Lautman v. Miller, 158 Ind. 382, 63 N. E. 761.

Execution of the lease by the landlord as well as the tenant need not be proved. Gray v. Nesbet, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 35.

Offer of lease in evidence.— In unlawful detainer, an answer that the defendant occupies, etc., under a written lease from plaintiff for a term unexpired, will not oblige plaintiff, relying in rebuttal on a breach of a clause therein, to produce the lease, if he has already made a prima facie case. defense.[83] Plaintiff is not, however, bound to prove his title,[84] for the tenant will not be permitted to dispute his landlord's title,[85] unless the lease was procured by fraud, artifice, or mistake.[86]

b. Variance. As in other actions the evidence must be confined to the issues presented by the pleadings,[87] and there can be no recovery upon proof of other grounds of action without proof of those alleged in the complaint or affidavit.[88]

New York.— Jennings v. McCarthy, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 161, demand for possession.

South Carolina.— Keller v. Pagan, 54 S. C. 255, 32 S. E. 353, holding that where a landlord seeking before a magistrate to eject his tenant alleges a demand for possession and refusal by the tenant, and the allegation is not denied, a judgment ejecting the tenant is proper, although the testimony does not show that the landlord entered and demanded possession, nor that the tenant refused a demand.

Admission connected with general denial.— If an answer contains a general denial, the allegation in a further separate defense that petitioner is the owner does not relieve petitioner from the necessity of proving the elements essential to a recovery. Fox v. Held, 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 184, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 724.

83. Drummond v. Fisher, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 142, holding that an allegation in a petition in summary proceedings for the recovery of leased premises that certain persons hold over "as assignees or undertenants" is not an admission by the landlord of the fact of an assignment of the lease, without proof of which defendants could not succeed in their defense.

Under a general denial, however, defendant may prove independent facts inconsistent with those stated in the complaint and is not confined to mere negative proof. Hamline v. Engle, 14 Ind. App. 885, 42 N. E. 760, 43 N. E. 463 (holding that in an action for wrongfully holding over, defendant might show that there had been an extension of the old lease, or that he was in possession as tenant by virtue of some new contract with the landlord); McNatt v. Grange Hall Assoc., 2 Ind. App. 341, 27 N. E. 325 (holding that an alteration of a provision in a lease requiring payment in advance may be proved without being specially pleaded); Allison v. Thompson, 1 Litt. Co. v. East River Electric Light Co., 15 Daly (N. Y.) 337, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 659, 17 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 224 (holding that the lessee could claim the benefit of a clause in the lease providing for an apportionment of rent for what time he might be deprived of the use and enjoyment of the demised premises, owing to repairs made by the lessor). But see Barnum v. Keeler, 33 Conn. 209, holding that defendant cannot introduce evidence of a breach of a covenant of the lease on the part of the complainant by which defendant has sustained damages greater than the amount of the rent claimed.

Proof of demand.— In summary proceedings, where the petition alleged a "demand," a personal demand could be established. Engel, etc., Co. v. Henry Elias Brewing Co., 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 480, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 1080 [reversing 74 N. Y. Suppl. 934].

Immaterial variance.—Where the complaint for possession of premises leased by the month, alleged termination of the lease, June 30, and that notice to quit on August 20 was served on July 24, but it was proved on trial that the lease expired July 31, and that the notice was served on August 2, the variance was immaterial. Miller v. Lampson, 66 Conn. 432, 34 Atl. 79. A deed is not inadmissible because it describes the property in different terms than the affidavit upon which the warrant of eviction was issued; it being shown by other evidence that the two descriptions embrace the same property. Thompson v. Chapman, 57 Ga. 16. A variance, as respects the time of the beginning of the tenancy, between the complaint and the demand, is immaterial. Alexander v. Wescott, 37 Mo. 103. In an action based on a lease between "John Sunderland" and defendant, such lease was admissible in evidence, although plaintiff in the action was "John P. Sunderland," on proof by one subscribing witness that the lease was signed by the person called in the suit "John P. Sunderland." Youngs v. Sunderland, 15 N. J. L. 32. Where, in summary proceedings to recover land, a person claiming to be in possession intervened, the fact that he described himself in his answer as undertenant, when in fact he claimed under a new lease to himself, was immaterial. It is essential that the nature of the tenancy should be proved as averred in the complaint or petition.[89]

19. Evidence — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. The burden of proving a controverted right of recovery is in general upon plaintiff as in other civil cases;[90] for example, of proving a proper service of a statutory notice where denied,[91] or the breach of a condition relied upon to support the action.[92] Defendant has the burden of establishing an affirmative defense.[93] In an action by the owner against one in possession of leased premises the latter will be presumed to be the assignee of the lessee unless the contrary is shown.[94] The presumption in the absence of evidence to the contrary is that a holding over by the tenant after the expiration of the term is wrongful.[95]

b. Admissibility. Evidence of title is not as a general rule admissible in summary proceedings.[96] This rule, however, does not exclude evidence tending to establish[97] or contradict[98] the relationship of landlord and tenant, or evidence tending to establish the complainant's right to possession.[99] By statute it is

Where lease has been induced by fraud.— Where a person in possession of land is by fraud induced to believe that another has a better right to it, and to take a lease from him, in an action by the landlord to recover possession, the court may order the tenant first to prove the fraud before he produces evidence of his title before the jury, or he may allow him to show title first, subject to the necessity of making the evidence competent by proof of the fraud. sometimes expressly provided that proof may be made of rights under derivative titles from the lessor.[1] The affidavit of the landlord himself has been held under some statutes not to constitute evidence upon the merits.[2] Subject to these considerations summary proceedings are governed by the rules as to the admissibility of evidence applicable to civil actions in general.[3] A notice to quit is competent evidence of the termination of the tenancy,[4] although such notice to quit was unnecessary.[5] As bearing upon the amount of damages recoverable, evidence of the rental value of a building upon the premises is admissible,[6] as is evidence of the price which the land brought at a public renting[7] and other material facts,[8] such as a lease, although it insufficiently describes the premises.[9]

c. Sufficiency. Statutory actions for recovery of possession are governed by the rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence applicable to civil actions in general.[10]

Ct. 481, 37 L. ed. 373 [affirming 37 Fed. 319], holding that evidence of the invalidity of a lease under which defendant claims, in an action of unlawful detainer, does not involve an inquiry into the merits of the title, but is a proof of a right under a derivative title within the meaning of 2 Mo. Rev. St. §§ 5, 123.

3. See EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 81.

For example, evidence of the private reasons of the tenant in purchasing furniture is admissible to establish that the lease was for a longer period than alleged by the landlord (Fratcher v. Smith, 104 Mich. 537, 62 N. W. 832), as is evidence explanatory of an assignment of a lease, where plaintiff has a right to sue as assignee (Barado-Ghio Real Estate Co. v. Heidbrink, 112 Mo. App. 429, 86 S. W. 1109). Evidence of different transactions between the parties in furtherance of an alleged conspiracy to eject defendants is admissible to show that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist. Schlaich v. Blum, 42 Misc. (N. Y.) 225, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 335. Evidence of a lease may be admitted, although plaintiff admits the invalidity of the lease and seeks to recover the possession. Lazarus v. Ludwig, 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 474, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 999. Where a payment to the agent of one claiming to be landlord, by the wife of the tenant, was shown, the tenant was entitled to show that he repudiated such payment and notified the agent. Bergman v. Roberts, 61 Pa. St. 497.

Use of premises for unlawful purpose.— The record of the tenant's conviction of an offense identical with the provisions of the statute is admissible as corroborating plaintiff's testimony. Stearns v. Hemmens, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 501, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 52, 21 Abb. N. Cas. 312. Where the petition, after setting out the facts, alleged that the premises "are now being used and occupied as a bawdy-house and house of assignation for lewd persons," etc., it was error to exclude evidence offered to show that the premises were kept as a bawdy-house continuously for over three months before proceeding was commenced, and limit the proof of what occurred there to two weeks before suit was commenced. Goelet v. Lawlor, 16 Misc. (N. Y.) 59, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 691.

Evidence contradictory to immaterial evidence is inadmissible. Ver Steeg v. Becker-Moore Paint Co., 106 Mo. App. 257, 80 S. W. 346, holding that where defendant testified that the lessor's agent refused to deliver leases which he had executed because of the cancellation of insurance on a building near by owned by the lessor, and the agent testified that he did not refuse to deliver the leases on that account, evidence that there was no difficulty in securing insurance on the neighboring building was irrelevant.

Evidence of mistake in the lease may be received for the purpose of showing that defendant's possession was rightful, although the justice has no jurisdiction to reform the lease. Lloyd v. Reynolds, 26 Nebr. 63, 41 N. W. 1072.

Evidence that the lessor made no claim to the premises during the term of the lease is prejudicial as leading the jury to believe that the claim of possession made in the action was in bad faith. McLennan v. Grant, 8 Wash. 603, 36 Pac. 682.

4. Reynolds v. Gage, 91 Ill. 125, so holding, although the lessee was a tenant at will.

5. Snideman v. Snideman, 118 Ind. 162, 20 N. E. 723; Lichty v. Clark, 10 Nebr. 472, 6 N. W. 760.

7. Spear v. Lomax, 42 Ala. 576.

8. See Barnett v. Feary, 101 Ind. 95, holding that where it was alleged that the tenant had unlawfully detained farm land during the season for seeding wheat, evidence that the land was better adapted to raising wheat than other crops was admissible.

Evidence of the crops which the land produced per acre and their value is admissible as bearing upon the cash rental value, it appearing that it was customary to rent the land on shares. Castell v. McNeely, 4 Indian Terr. 1, 64 S. W. 594.

9. Whipple v. Shewalter, 91 Ind. 114.

10. See, generally, EVIDENCE, 17 Cyc. 753.

The landlord's title is sufficiently proved by the production of a lease, unless the lease is attacked (Williams v. Wait, 2 S. D. 210, 49 N. W. 209, 39 Am. St. Rep. 768), or by proof of a conveyance to the landlord (People v.

20. Trial — a. In General. Under some statutes defendant may have a jury trial only upon timely application and the filing of a bond to secure rent and costs,[11] and the court has no power to enlarge the time for the taking of such steps.[12] It has been held that a statute authorizing the justice of the peace to certify a cause in which a verified answer has been filed to the district court for trial does not authorize the county court so to do in a similar case.[13]

b. Adjournment. An adjournment, in the absence of a statute authorizing it, operates as a discontinuance and deprives the justice or the court of further jurisdiction in the cause,[14] unless, it has been held, in a case where the adjournment is Teed, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 424, 33 How. Pr. 238). Where in summary proceedings for ejectment before a justice, it was shown that defendant was a tenant of plaintiff's mother, since deceased, and plaintiff simply swore that he owned the property, stating on cross-examination that he had a written conveyance thereof, but not producing it, he was not entitled to judgment. He should have proved the descent or devise of the land, or the conveyance thereof from heirs or devisees. Cronk v. Barlow, 4 N. Y. St. 137.

Use of premises for immoral purposes.— In summary proceedings by a landlord to recover the premises on account of their use for immoral purposes, it is sufficient to show such use, and it is not necessary to prove that the tenant had knowledge thereof with the degree of certainty required in criminal or quasi-criminal proceedings. Sullivan v. Schatzel, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 352.

Withdrawal of notice.—Where a tenant has received the three months' notice to quit required by an existing lease, and on application to the landlord procures permission to remain in determining whether there was an actual withdrawal of a notice to quit, the jury should consider all the acts and declarations of the landlord, and not merely what he stated at a particular conversation. Brown v. Montgomery, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 262.

A mistake in a lease is not sufficiently established by the evidence of the lessee as to his understanding of these terms. Yosemite Valley, etc., Grove v. Barnard, 98 Cal. 199, 32 Pac. 982.

A hiring may be established by proof of payment of rent. People v. Teed, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 424, 33 How. Pr. 238.

Damages.— An award of seventy-five dollars is supported by the evidence that defendant had rented the premises for an annual rental of one hundred and twenty-five dollars. Spann v. Torbert, 130 Ala. 541, 30 So. 389.

An agreement to make repairs is not conclusively established by the fact that it is shown that the landlord made such repairs. Mattler v. Strangmeier, 1 Ind. App. 556, 27 N. E. 985.

Miscellaneous facts.— For cases in which the evidence has been examined and held sufficient to establish particular facts see Waugh v. Ridgeway, 42 Ala. 368 (relation of landlord and tenant); Lacrabere v. Wise, (Cal. 1903) 71 Pac. 175 (agreement to pay particular sum as rent); Duffy v. Carman, 3 Ind. S. 89, so holding where on the return of precept the tenant filed a verified traverse of the return, and moved to dismiss the proceedings, and the justice, after hearing the testimony of the parties as to the service of the precept, instead of rendering his decision on the close of the evidence, adjourned the proceedings for the purpose of decision.

When authorized.— A justice has no power of his own motion to adjourn summary proceedings, except to enable a party to procure his necessary witnesses, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2248, which contains the only provision for adjournment in such cases by consent of the parties.[15] Upon a disagreement of the jury resulting in a mistrial the justice is usually authorized under the statutes to adjourn the trial to another day and issue a new venire.[16]

c. Dismissal. Where the tenant denies the alleged tenancy and asserts title in himself, the justice should not dismiss the action on the answer but should try the issue of tenancy,[17] and in case that issue is found in favor of defendant the action should be dismissed.[18] Under statutes by which the warrant of dispossession is brought into court only upon filing of a counter-affidavit the court has no jurisdiction to dismiss the warrant after dismissing the counter-affidavit.[19] Defendant is bound by an executed agreement on the part of plaintiff to dismiss in case defendant will surrender possession.[20]

d. Questions For Jury. Disputed questions of fact are to be determined by the jury where there is a jury trial,[21] under proper instructions from the court,[22] in case the court has authority to instruct the jury.[23] The reasonableness of a notice to quit given to a tenant at sufferance is a question of law where the facts are not in dispute.[24] Under some statutes the question of plaintiff's damages may be submitted to the jury at the same time as the question of his right to recover.[25]

e. Instructions. In summary proceedings where the trial is to a jury the judge may instruct the jury as to questions of law.[26] The instructions as in the case of other civil actions must not be misleading,[27] or assume facts in issue,[28]

(Kiernan v. Reming, 7 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 311, 2 How. Pr. N. S. 89), and the same rule applies in proceedings under Rev. St. p. 515, § 41 (Boller v. New York, 40 N. Y. Super. Ct. 523). See, generally, JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, ante, p. 576.

and should conform to and be limited in their scope by the issues presented by the pleadings.[29]

f. Findings. Landlord and tenant proceedings being summary, every requisite of the statute authorizing them must be substantially complied with,[30] and all of the facts essential to the jurisdiction must be clearly and positively found.[31] The findings must agree with the complaint[32] and must be consistent.[33] A special finding must establish the facts upon which plaintiff was entitled to recover, and no omission in this respect can be supplied by intendment.[34] A special finding as to when plaintiff became entitled to possession is material as showing whether the action was prematurely brought.[35]

g. Verdict. The verdict must conform to mandatory provisions of the statute.[36] It has been held that a verdict which in effect is a general verdict is sufficient.[37] Where the recovery of rent is authorized by the statute, the failure of the verdict to designate money found due as rent or damages is not material when it cannot be misleading.[38] An objection to the sufficiency of a verdict in accordance with the forms submitted to the jury is waived by a failure to object to such form when submitted.[39]

h. New Trial. The usual rules as the grounds for a motion for new trial are applicable to summary proceedings.[40]

21. Judgment — a. Necessity and Sufficiency in General. In the absence of an express provision, judgment in summary proceedings should be entered within a reasonable time after the hearing.[41] It must be such as is authorized by stat-

Termination of the term.— Under the act of March 21, 1772, it is not a sufficient finding that the inquest find a tenancy at will and the notice to quit prior to the commencement of the proceedings. Hohly v. German Reformed Soc., 2 Pa. St. 293.

Award of restitution.— It is no objection to the inquest that it assesses damages for the detention but does not award restitution of the premises, the place for that being in the justice's record and not in the inquest. McMillan v. Graham, 4 Pa. St. 140.

Power to grant.— Prior to Laws (1902), c. 580, the municipal court could not set aside a verdict and grant a new trial in summary proceedings. Benoliel v. Becker, 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 758, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 859.

41. Gibbens v. Thompson, 21 Minn. 398, holding that a delay of two days after submission was not unreasonable.

Necessity of final order.— In a summary proceeding for the removal of a tenant, an entry of "judgment for tenant" by the justice was an insufficient disposition of the proceeding without a final order in the tenant's favor and awarding him the costs of the proceeding, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2249; Municipal Court Act, § 1, subd. 12, Laws (1902), p. 1488, c. 580. Gossett v. Fox, 90 N. Y. Suppl. 477.

Sufficiency of final order.— An order for possession in summary proceedings is final, ute,[42] and must accord with the pleadings,[43] the evidence,[44] and the findings,[45] and is usually required to describe the premises with reasonable certainty.[46] In some jurisdictions the judgment must be simply for the delivery of the premises to plaintiff,[47] while in others it may also be for rent or damages.[48] A judgment may be awarded against each of defendants jointly in possession without proof of a joint lease.[49] Under some statutes a judgment may be entered on a bond given to stay a dispossessory warrant at the same time as a judgment for plaintiff for possession.[50] It has been held that justices of the peace exercise general jurisdiction in unlawful detainer proceedings and that their judgments therefor are not void, although erroneous because of improper determination of material facts.[51] The judgment in summary proceedings may be amended under a general statute permitting amendments in the furtherance of justice.[52]

b. Judgment by Default. A judgment may be entered by default.[53]

Warrant under Small Tenements Recovery Act.— In proceedings under the Small Tenements Recovery Act (1838), the magistrate

precept was returnable has no jurisdiction to issue a warrant for possession.[55] Where defendant is entitled to pay the rent and costs due and save his possession, the amount should be indorsed on the writ of possession.[56] The amount of rent found must not include rent accruing after the notice.[57] A warrant is not affected by an erroneous recital where all the essentials of a valid warrant remain after it is rejected.[58]

(II) Execution of Writ or Warrant. A writ of possession authorizes the officer to remove defendant and all those whose rights on the premises are dependent upon him, or who are in without right,[59] and he is bound to do so.[60] Where a writ of possession has not been fully executed plaintiff may have an alias writ,[61] the judgment not being satisfied until the writ has been fully executed.[62] To constitute a full execution of the writ, both defendant and his personal property must have been removed from the premises, and the real estate given to plaintiff, unless the removal of the personal property was in some way waived by defendant.[63]

(III) Injunction or Stay. While the enforcement of a judgment in summary proceedings may be enjoined in a proper case,[64] an injunction will not issue has no power to make an order for a warrant to issue, and suspend it for ten days, with an intimation that if the tenant did not go out within the ten days the warrant would issue, as the act provides that the warrant cannot be enforced within less than twenty-one days from its date. upon grounds that are available on appeal,[65] or in the proceedings themselves,[66] or where there is a remedy at law.[67] Under some statutes execution may be stayed only in cases specially provided for;[68] and a statute authorizing the stay of issuance of a warrant does not authorize a stay of its execution when issued.[69] An injunction against further proceedings upon an appeal from the judgment of a justice will not prevent the issuance of a writ of restitution where a supersedeas bond has not been given.[70]

Court to which appeal lies.— In Colorado, under an act providing that all appeals from judgments of justices of the peace, both in civil and criminal actions, shall be taken to the county court, an action of forcible entry and detainer may be taken to the county court, although prior to such statute it was to the district court. Reynolds v. Larkins, 10 Colo. 126, 14 Pac. 114. In Minnesota an appeal lies from the district court to the supreme court as in the case of other actions appealed from the justice's court to the district court. Barker v. Walbridge, 14 Minn. 469. Who may appeal.— Under the Landlord and Tenant Law (Act of March 21, 1772) there is no right of appeal given to the tenant by will lie in the absence of a statute making a provision for such a method of review.[76]

(II) Proceedings to Perfect. The provisions of the statute as to the manner in which an appeal shall be taken must be complied with.[77] The record upon appeal must disclose all the essential elements conferring jurisdiction upon the lower court.[78] Error will not, however, be presumed against the face of the record.[79] Where the record is insufficient it may be remitted for amendment.[80] On failure to deposit the rent due with the justice, as required by statute to perfect an appeal, the appellate court should dismiss the appeal and not render a judgment affirming the justice's judgment.[81]

(III) Bonds. Statutes providing for a bond in the case of an appeal in a dispossession proceeding different from that required in case of appeals from justices' judgments generally are valid,[82] and such a bond or recognizance as is prescribed by statute must be given.[83] An appeal will not be dismissed for the want of a reason of anything which he may allege to exist in the contract of lease. It is only given to third persons, or the tenant claiming by descent or purchase from the lessor after the date of the lease. The tenant cannot appeal by reason of any allegation of title existing in a third person, although created since the date of the lease. Cunningham v. Gardner, 4 Watts & S. (Pa.) 120.

From default.—Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 3064, providing that on appeal by defendant from a judgment by default a justice of the appellate court may set aside the judgment on showing that injustice has been done, which section is made applicable to the municipal court of the city of New York, the appellate court can set aside an order of such court by which defendants are dispossessed, where they show that manifest injustice was done them by the default judgment, and render a satisfactory excuse for their failure to appear. Where it is not sought to stay proceedings. — Under Laws (1894), p. 823, authorizing appeals in summary proceedings, and providing that an appeal shall stay proceedings, on the tenant giving bond to pay the landlord all damages he may sustain thereby, a party may appeal without giving bond. Carlisle v. Prior, 48 S. C. 183, 26 S. E. 244.

A defective recognizance is by statute in Missouri not ground for dismissal where the appellant or some person for him enters into a proper recognizance before the determination of a motion to dismiss the appeal, and pays such costs as have been incurred by reason of the defect. Matthews v. Gloss, 22 Mo. 169. But in Colorado it has been held that the filing of the bond is jurisdictional, and the court has no authority to permit the appellant to file a proper bond or amend the one filed. Amter v. Woods Inv. Co., 10 Colo. App. 542, 51 Pac. 1010; Getty v. Miller, 10 Colo. App. 331, 51 Pac. 166. In any event a motion to dismiss should be granted where no valid bond has been filed. Slaughter v. Crouch, 64 S. W. 968, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1214.

Extension of time.— The court should not continue the case so as to extend the time of filing a proper bond; no motion or request therefor having been made, or any notice given to the parties, or any cause shown for such action. Whitaker v. Bliss, 23 R. I. 313, 50 Atl. 266.

Waiver.— Where parties to an action for possession of a tenement let make an agreement by which defendant submits to a judgment for possession, without costs, it is not a waiver of all rights under the bond given as required in such action by Gen. Laws, c. 237, § 9, to pay all rent or moneys due, or which may become due pending the action, and the damages and costs awarded. Whipp v. Casey, 21 R. I. 506, 45 Atl. 93.

recognizance required in case of a removal, without trial, from the inferior to the superior court.[84]

(IV) STAY OF EXECUTION. Under some statutes a writ of error perfected by bond operates as a supersedeas of execution.[85] Under other statutes, however, it is provided that the landlord may have restitution notwithstanding an appeal from the decision of a justice.[86] An injunction cannot be granted against the enforcement of a judgment in unlawful detainer proceedings pending an appeal where no appeal has been in fact taken.[87]

(V) SCOPE OF REVIEW AND DETERMINATION. Only matters properly presented for review can be considered.[88] The judgment of the trial court will not be reversed upon a conflict of evidence where injustice does not appear,[89] nor for errors which appear to have been without prejudice[90] or which may be corrected on the appeal,[91] nor for matters occurring after the entry of the final order.[92] A defect in evidence as to a material fact will not be presumed to have been caused by the adverse party where he does not appear to have assumed such fact.[93] Under a statute authorizing an award of such additional damages and costs as have arisen in consequence of the appeal, where there is an affirmance on failure to prosecute, plaintiff is not entitled to rent accrued or intervening damages to the premises.[94]

(VI) TRIAL DE NOVO. Under some statutes dispossession proceedings are triable de novo on appeal from the decision of a justice of the peace or magistrate.[95]

Defenses.— The tenant on appeal, in proceedings under the act of Dec. 14, 1863, may set up any defense available to him in ejectment by the lessor. Livingood v. Moyer, 2 Woodw. (Pa.) 65.

Appointment of receiver.— In an action under the Landlord and Tenant Act, carried by appeal to the superior court, it is within the power of the court to appoint a receiver to collect the rents, etc., upon an affidavit by plaintiff, not controverted, that defendants entered into possession as tenants of plaintiff, held over after expiration of their term, are insolvent, and that plaintiff has no security for rents. Nesbitt v. Turrentine, 83 N. C. 535.

Objections to jury.— If, on the trial of an appeal in proceedings under the act of Dec. 14, 1863, the crier call and swear on the jury two persons who have been struck from the printed list, and the party who struck them did not object at the time, it is too late after verdict. Necessity of excuse.— A defendant who has failed to file an answer in the proceedings before the justice will not be permitted to file an answer on appeal, where there is no showing of surprise or other matters in excuse, and written pleadings are required before the justice. been rendered below.[4] Under some statutes defendant if successful may recover the damages sustained by his removal.[5] Under other statutes plaintiff if successful may recover the amount of rent due at the time of the retrial,[6] and the value of such rent should be assessed by a jury unless the statute otherwise provides.[7] The judgment should run against defendant and not include his sureties upon the appeal-bond,[8] and in some jurisdictions is not limited in amount to the sum which is within the jurisdiction of the justice.[9]

(VII) REMAND. Where a judgment for the landlord is reversed and remanded for new trial, costs to appellant to abide the event, the landlord may insist on a new trial of the issues.[10]

b. Certiorari — (I) RIGHT. While it has been held in some cases that certiorari will not lie to review a dispossession proceeding,[11] such is not the usual holding,[12] and indeed a review by certiorari is frequently provided for by statute. In some jurisdictions certiorari has been held the only method of review.[13] One who is not a party[14] or who has no interest in the subject-matter[15] is not entitled to the writ.

In Michigan, upon the trial, in cases of summary proceedings to recover the possession of premises for non-payment of rent, in the circuit on appeal it is not requisite that there should be a finding of the amount of rent due. The appeal is allowed only from the "determination or judgment" of the commissioner, and the finding of the amount due, although to be stated in the judgment, is in fact no part of it. (III) RECORD. On certiorari to review the judgment of a justice in summary proceedings all the facts necessary to give jurisdiction must appear affirmatively and positively from the record.[20] If any of these facts are left uncertain by the record the proceedings are bad.[21] The record should, however, not be scanned too nicely as to form,[22] and a specific finding of facts may be shown by reference to the complaint when it is set out and particularly states the facts.[23] The record need not set out the evidence,[24] but where the evidence is set out and appears insufficient the judgment will be reversed.[25]

(IV) EFFECT. Contrary to the usual common-law rule in other proceedings,[26] a writ of certiorari in landlord and tenant proceedings does not stay the issuance of an execution,[27] although it suspends the effect of the judgment of the justice in all collateral matters.[28] By statute, however, it is in some jurisdictions provided that upon the giving of proper security a stay may be had pending a decision upon certiorari.[29] Where the proceedings are arrested before trial by certiorari the writ has the effect of a demurrer.[30]

(V) SCOPE OF REVIEW. Upon review by certiorari only matters presented by the record may be examined,[31] it being held in some cases that only questions of the recovery of debts or demands under one hundred dollars before a justice of the peace.

Extent of liability on defendant's bonds.— A condition for the payment of damages is sufficient to cover rent accruing pending the appeal. Green v. Sternberg, 15 Mo. App. 32. A condition binding the sureties to pay "rent accruing and to accrue" imposes no liability for rent already accrued and for a period already expired. Rosenquest v. Noble, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 583, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 398. A condition to pay all rent "due and to become due" includes rent during the term of both lessees, where plaintiff's lease expires during the pendency of the appeal and he takes a new lease. Pray v. Wasdell, 146 Mass. 324, 16 N. E. 266. A bond to pay intervening rent and damages includes nothing more than the rent at the stipulated rate and interest thereon (Bartholomew v. Chapin, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 1), but the tenant is liable to pay the rent, although the buildings on the premises are meanwhile destroyed by fire and is responsible for all waste, actual and permissive, and for all losses including the destruction of the buildings, if not proved to have been caused by inevitable accident (Davis v. Alden, 2 Gray (Mass.) 309). The bailee on certiorari is liable for the rent until the final determination of the lease or plaintiff obtains possession. Wistar v. Campbell, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 359; Clapp v. Senneff, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 214.

Extent of liability on plaintiff's bonds.— The measure of damages upon a bond given by plaintiff to defendant to secure possession of the premises pending appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff is the difference between the rental value of the premises and the rent reserved from the date of the eviction to the end of the term or the termination of the lease otherwise. Small v. Clark, 97 Me. 304, 54 Atl. 758.

Subrogation.— The bailee on certiorari is entitled to subrogation and may have re-

the parties are bound to the full extent contemplated by the statute under which the bond is executed, although the provisions of such statute are not expressly incorporated therein.[41] Where by statute plaintiff is given an election between an action on the appeal-bond and an action in trespass or case for damages for the unlawful detention he cannot pursue both remedies.[42] The execution of an appeal-bond does not release the sureties upon a bond given to retain possession as against a provisional writ of restitution,[43] nor does the execution of an additional bond increasing the security.[44]

d. Restoration of Premises to Defendant. Where a writ of restitution has been executed and defendant removed from possession, the trial court has power on a proper motion after the execution of a supersedeas bond on appeal to restore defendant to possession.[45] In case defendant has been removed from possession and the judgment is reversed upon appeal, the possession should be restored to him,[46] and to effect this purpose in a proper case he may be awarded a writ of course to an interpleading surety on bail in error, but is primarily liable to plaintiff for the whole damage. Clapp v. Senneff, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 214.

Void bond.— A bond which is void as a statutory recognizance may be recovered upon as a valid common-law obligation. Watts v. Hardy, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 39.

Where bond has not been filed.— On appeal from the judgment of the magistrate in a writ of forcible entry and detainer, the entry of the appeal in the appellate court carries with it all the papers in the case, including the recognizance; and an action may be maintained upon the recognizance, although it was not actually filed in the appellate court until after the rendition of judgment in the suit, if it was so filed before the commencement of the action upon it. Hawkes v. Davenport, 5 Allen (Mass.) 390.

When liability becomes fixed.— The dismissal of an appeal operates as a final determination fixing the liabilities upon a bond. Mair's Estate, 34 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 20. But where the bond is conditioned for the payment of costs and rent on affirmance of a judgment for possession, no liability attaches where on appeal the judgment for possession is waived by consent of the landlord and the tenant is suffered to remain in possession, and the judgment taken as if on a verdict for the amount of the rent and costs only. Hazen v. Culbertson, 10 Watts (Pa.) 393.

Conclusiveness of final order.—A final order in proceedings to dispossess a tenant for nonpayment of rent does not establish the amount of the rent due, as against the sureties on an undertaking to stay the execution of the warrant, in respect to rent "accruing or to accrue" pending the stay. Rosenquest v. Noble, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 583, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 398.

Necessity of execution against principal.— Under the Michigan statutes on appeal from circuit court commissioners, failure to issue execution against the principal on the bond within thirty days after entry of judgment does not discharge the sureties. Bauer v. Wasson, 66 Mich. 256, 33 N. W. 186.

Pleading.— In an action on a recognizance to pay rents and damages, plaintiff, under a declaration that defendants have not paid such rent and the intervening rent and damages, if defendant does not demur, may recover the full value of the rent, although increased since the commencement of the suit for possession. Jackson v. Richards, 16 Gray (Mass.) 497.

Evidence.— The original lease is admissible in evidence to show what rent should be paid in a suit on an appeal-bond conditioned to pay all rent due and to become due (Clapp v. Noble, 84 Ill. 62), as is a lease made prior to the expiration of the first lease, for a year after that date, at a fixed rental (Vincent v. Defield, 105 Mich. 315, 63 N. W. 302).

41. Stults v. Zahn, 117 Ind. 297, 20 N. E. 154, holding that a bond given by defendant on an appeal to a circuit court will cover accruing rents, although it was not conditioned therefor, but simply provided that defendant would pay any judgment which should be rendered against him, and the appeal was dismissed by the circuit court without rendering any judgment.

42. Although he may be entitled to items of damages which he could not recover in an action on the bond. Schellenberg v. Frank, 139 Mich. 183, 102 N. W. 644.

Constitutionality of such statutes.— Comp. Laws (1897), c. 308, § 25, relating to proceedings to recover possession of land, and providing that, if the complainant obtains restitution of the premises, he may at his election sue and recover on the bond given by defendant on appeal to the circuit court, or bring his action against defendant under section 24 for treble damages is within the implied constitutional grant of legislative authority and is valid. 46. Pico v. Cuyas, 48 Cal. 639 (so holding, although the premises had been rented to another); Campau v. Coates, 17 Mich. 235.

Necessity of motion.— If the tenant desires restitution of the premises, a motion restitution;[47] but such a writ can issue only upon special award of the court.[48] Defendant is not entitled to restitution as a matter of right, however,[49] and it will not be awarded where justice does not so require,[50] as where the reversal is merely for irregularities;[51] where, pending the appeal, the buildings have been destroyed by fire,[52] or the term has expired;[53] or where the premises are in possession of another under a lease not yet expired.[54]

23. Redemption. By some statutes express provision is made for redemption from a judgment of dispossession.[55] Where an order permitting redemption has been granted improvidently or by mistake induced by the affirmative act of defendant it may be vacated.[56]

24. Personalty of Tenant Upon Premises. The tenant, upon being ejected from the premises in summary proceedings, has a reasonable time thereafter within should be made therefor. Boyd v. Milone, 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 734, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 785.

Sufficiency of order.— Where an order of restitution to the tenant made by the judges of assize, on appeal, under 11 Geo. II, c. 19, § 17, against an order of two magistrates giving possession to a landlord, was not directed to any person, a mandamus could not issue commanding the two justices to make restitution. Payment of rent together with interests and costs within a specified time after judgment entitles defendant under some statutes to retain the premises upon the terms of the original lease. See Bateman v. San Francisco Super. Ct., 139 Cal. 140, 72 Pac. 922 (holding that such a statute did not apply where the proceedings were not only for non-payment of rent, but for other breaches of covenant); Hunter v. Porter, 10 Ida. 72, 86, 77 Pac. 434.

Under the New York statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 2256), where the proceeding is founded upon default in the payment of rent, and the unexpired term of the lease under which the premises are held exceeds five years at the time when the warrant is issued, the lessee, his executor, administrator, or assign may, upon payment of all rent in arrear with interest and costs, become entitled to the possession of the demised premises under the lease and may hold them according to the terms of the original lease. By other sections provision is made for redemption by a creditor of the lessee (Code Civ. Proc. § 2257), and a qualification made by which the rights of the person redeeming are made subject, in a limited degree, to a lease executed since the issuance of the warrant (Code Civ. Proc. § 2258). For cases in which these provisions have been construed and applied see Flewwellin v. Lent, 91 N. Y. App. Div. 430, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 919; Witty v. Acton, 58 Hun 552, 12 N. Y. which to move away his personal property before he can be held to have voluntarily abandoned it.[57] And while the taking possession of the premises does not in itself amount to a conversion of the tenant's property by the landlord,[58] the refusal to surrender possession upon demand has such effect.[59] The landlord cannot by a mere notice create a lien for storage of personal property left by the tenant on the premises.[60]

25. Effect of Proceedings. Under some statutes it is expressly provided that the issuance of a warrant for the removal of the tenant terminates the relationship of landlord and tenant.[61]

City Ct. 309, holding that where the landlord brought summary proceedings against an absent tenant, and instead of putting the tenant's goods on the public sidewalk stored them in his cellar, he became a gratuitous bailee thereof and his subsequent refusal to give them up until the back rents and costs were paid constituted a conversion for which he was liable, the law giving him no lien on the goods for such charges.

61. See the statutes of the several states. And see also cases cited infra, this note.

Under the New York statute it is expressly provided that the issuing of a warrant for the removal of the tenant cancels the agreement for the use of the premises and annuls the relation of landlord and tenant, except that it does not prevent the recovery of any rent payable at the time the precept was issued, or the reasonable value of the use and occupation to the time when the warrant was issued for any period with respect to which the agreement does not make a special provision for the payment of rent. Code Civ. Proc. § 2253. And see Van Vleck v. White, 66 N. Y. App. Div. 14, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 1026. This statute has been held not to prevent the termination of the relation where the tenant moves out without the issuance of the warrant (Ash v. Purnell, 16 Daly 189, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 54, 19 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 234, 26 Abb. N. Cas. 92; Gallagher v. Reilly, 16 Daly 227, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 536; Baldwin v. Thibadeau, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 532, 28 Abb. N. Cas. 14, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 950); and the landlord cannot obviate such a result by notifying the tenant that he will not avail himself of the final order, but will continue to hold the tenant liable for all subsequently accruing rent (Baldwin v. Thibadeau, supra). Where the rent is payable monthly in advance, the tenant is liable for a whole month's rent, although he vacated pursuant to a warrant, after the rent was payable but before the expiration of the month. Martin v. Lee, 29 Misc. 333, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 515, 7 N. Y. Annot. Cas. 161. A warrant is regarded as issued, under this provision, when made out by the justice and delivered by him to the clerk ready for use. Ash v. Purnell, supra.

Recovery of deposits.— Where a lease provides that in case the landlord shall reënter by force or otherwise, and that upon default by the lessee the lessor may either dispossess the lessee or resort to a deposit made to secure performance of the covenants for reimbursements, the lease is not so terminated by dispossession proceedings as to prevent the landlord from retaining the deposit. Anzolone v. Paskusz, 96 N. Y. App. Div. 188, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 203.

The commencement of the proceedings does not operate as a termination of the relation, but such termination takes place on the issuance of the warrant to dispossess. Guild v. Reilly, 9 N. J. L. J. 209.

Judgment obtained by collusion.— A landlord who with the consent of his tenant has recovered the premises and thereafter collected the rents from subtenants under an agreement for the mutual advantage of the parties may be compelled in equity to fulfil such agreement and he cannot contend that the original lease has been annulled so as to restore his estate in the premises. Elverson v. Vanderpoel, 41 N. Y. Super. Ct. 257 [affirmed in 69 N. Y. 610].

Liability of officer arising from manner of executing writ of dispossession see Sheriffs and Constables, may maintain an action for damages[63] as in other cases of malicious prosecution,[64] or where the process has been used excessively,[65] or for a purpose which it was not intended by law to effect,[66] as in cases of abuse of process.[67] By statute in some jurisdictions it is provided that upon reversal or quashing of the proceedings the tenant may have an action for the recovery of the damages sustained.[68] But in the absence of statute, an entry under valid process, although the proceedings are afterward reversed and restitution awarded, will not impose liability for trespass.[69] Where the entry is under void proceedings, however, it has been held that trespass will lie.[70] One who merely hires desk room from a tenant has no interest in the premises entitling him to maintain an action for damages arising from dispossession in proceedings to which he was not made a party.[71]

b. Damages. As a general rule the measure of the tenant's damages is the difference between the contract price and the reasonable market rental value of the premises at the time the tenant is evicted,[72] and in addition he may recover such special damage as the pleading and proof show were the proximate result of the landlord's wrongful act.[73] Punitory damages can be given only where there

Sufficiency of reversal.— Where on appeal it is decided that there is no error of law for which the judgment can be reversed, but that a default entered might be opened and an order was entered, that on payment of costs the final order awarding possession should be reversed and a new trial directed, the tenant may recover damages, the new trial having resulted in his favor. c. Procedure. Actions for the recovery of damages for wrongful dispossession are subject to the rules of pleading[75] and procedure[76] applicable generally to civil actions.

XI. RENTING ON SHARES.[77]

A. Nature of Contract — 1. Whether Lease or Contract of Employment. The general rule is that one who raises a crop upon the land of another under a contract to raise the crop for a particular part of it is a mere cropper, and, where there is a joint occupation or an occupation which does not exclude the owner from possession, the contract is a mere letting on shares, and the relation of landlord and tenant is not created thereby.[78] In some jurisdictions, by statutory enact-premises, and that a sum of money in a box in the building was lost in the removal, plaintiff was entitled to recover for the destruction of the building, the loss of the money and the value of the unexpired term); Woods v. Kernan, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 215, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 654, 19 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 180 (holding that defendant may recover the value over and above the rent for the use of the premises, including the crops and fruit he might have gathered up to the time restitution was ordered); Hong Sing v. Wolf Fine, 33 Misc. (N. Y.) 608, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 1109 (holding that the loss of profits during the remainder of the term might be recovered); Wilkinson v. Stanley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 43 S. W. 606 (holding that the tenant may recover depreciation in the value of a crop, but he cannot recover the expense during the unexpired term of hauling water to supply his stock and family, although there was an abundant supply upon the place from which he was ejected); Gaertner v. Bues, 109 Wis. 165, 85 N. W. 388 (holding that remote damages, or such as accrue after possession has been restored to plaintiff, are not recoverable and that therefore an evicted tenant who accepted a receipt for his goods which had been stored in a warehouse by the officer executing a writ of dispossession, could not hold the landlord liable for subsequent damages to the goods occurring in the warehouse).

Other damages for breach of contract.— Damages for failure to supply water in accordance with the conditions of the lease may be recovered in an action for an unlawful eviction. Smith v. Eubank, 72 Ga. 280.

74. Gaertner v. Bues, 109 Wis. 165, 85 N. W. 388, holding that a defendant was not liable for the wanton and malicious manner in which an officer executed a writ of possession, unless he authorized or ratified the acts of the officer.

75. See Porter v. Johnson, 96 Ga. 145, 23 S. E. 123, holding that where the declaration alleged possession by plaintiff under a lease, and a wrongful eviction, before the expiration of the term, under a dispossessory warrant sued out by defendant, a plea admitting the suing out of the warrant and the expulsion of plaintiff at the time alleged, but averring that the proceeding was instituted without malice and on probable cause, setting out facts which constituted probable cause, was a good plea of justification, although it did not admit the existence of the lease. See, generally, PLEADING.

Damages.— A complaint in an action by a tenant for wrongful eviction by summary proceedings, alleging that by reason thereof plaintiff was deprived of his house and garden for shelter and support of his family, and was distressed in body and mind, and put to great mortification and shame and loss of employment, sufficiently alleges damages other than the loss of crops. Burwell v. Brodie, 134 N. C. 540, 47 S. E. 47. See, generally, DAMAGES, 13 Cyc. 173.

76. See, generally, TRIAL.

Questions for jury.— Where the owner of land was informed by one in possession that the latter claimed under a written lease from a prior owner, and, on learning of the invalidity of that lease, gave the tenant notice to quit, and the tenant, in a written warning to the owner not to evict him, based his claim to possession solely on the written lease, but before suing out a dispossessory warrant the owner learned of a valid oral lease made by his grantor to the tenant, whether the suing out of the warrant was without malice and on probable cause was for the jury. Porter v. Johnson, 96 Ga. 145, 23 S. E. 123. Where a warrant was issued at the suit of the landlord to dispossess his tenant, and a counter-affidavit and bond was given, but subsequently defendant relinquished possession under protest, there having been no harshness or oppression of any sort on the part of the landlord, it was error to submit to the jury the question of oppression in the eviction. Smith v. Eubanks, 72 Ga. 280.

Costs.— Where neither party is entitled to succeed to the full extent claimed by their pleadings costs may be denied. Russell v. Murray, 34 Nova Scotia 548; Rice v. Ditmars, 21 Nova Scotia 140.

ment, where one party furnishes the land and another party furnishes the labor and team to cultivate it, on stipulations express or implied to divide the crop between them in certain proportions, the relation of landlord and tenant exists between them;[79] while, where one party furnishes the land and the team to cultivate it, and the other party furnishes the labor, with stipulations express or implied to divide the crop between them in certain proportions, the agreement is held to be a contract of hire and not a lease.[80] In several jurisdictions, however, it is held that by the ordinary contract of letting land upon shares the relationship of landlord and tenant is thereby established, the tenant having as against the landlord as well as others the possession of the land and the rights growing out of that relation.[81] According to the early decisions, where the agreement to cultivate on shares was for the one crop only, the parties were to be considered as tenants in common of the crop;[82] but where the contract was for a certain term, or for more than one crop, then it should be construed as a lease.[83] Now, however, this distinction is no longer made, and the intention of the parties as expressed in the language they have used, interpreted in the light of the surrounding circumstances, controls in determining whether or not a given contract constitutes a lease.[84] Where there is a reservation in the agreement of a certain portion of the crop as rent eo nomine this necessarily constitutes a lease, and creates the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties.[85]

2. Whether Lease or Partnership. In some cases, the owner of the land gives up the entire possession, in which event it is a contract in the nature of a lease with rent payable in kind; in other cases, he continues to occupy the premises in common with the other party, or reserves to himself that right, and so a tenancy in common to that extent is created, and each is entitled to the joint possession of the crops, or the possession of one is the possession of the other, until division; or he may retain the sole possession of the land, and the other party may have the right to perform the labor and receive half the crops as compensation; or the two parties may become tenants in common of the growing crops, while no tenancy in common as such exists in the land."

between them, and where they jointly engage in the enterprise in cultivating the land, the one furnishing the land and farming utensils, and the other the labor and superintendence, sharing expenses between them, and agreeing to divide the profits, such agreement possesses every element of a partnership.[87]

B. Rights and Liabilities in General — 1. As to the Land. Where a contract to crop on shares does not create the relationship of landlord and tenant, the cropper has no such interest in the land as entitled him to maintain trespass against the owner or a third person.[88] But the rule is otherwise where the relationship of landlord and tenant is created by the contract, and in such case the tenant alone can maintain trespass during the term.[89] Where parties agree to cultivate land on shares, the cropper is entitled to ingress and egress on the property, after the maturity of the crop, for the purpose of harvesting the same and removing his share.[90] Where land is rented on shares, the share of the owner of the premises is due and payable only when the crop is harvested and ready for division.[91]

2. Cultivation, Care, and Harvesting of Crop. Where one rents land, reserving as rent a certain proportion of the crop produced thereon, or there is a letting of the land upon shares, and there is no stipulation as to the manner of cultivation, the owner of the land is bound by the agreement and can claim only his proportion of the crop actually produced, regardless of the mode of cultivation.[92] Where, however, land is rented for cultivation upon the agreement to pay a certain share of the crops, the tenant should not allow the land to lie idle, but must cultivate it with proper industry, and the landlord is entitled to demand for rent such portion of the crop raised as his share would amount to if proper industry had been bestowed in cultivating the land.[93] In the absence of express agreement or stipulation to the contrary, it is the duty of the lessee or cropper to save and gather the crop, and where he neglects to do so, and the owner of the land, in order to prevent the destruction of the crop, comes in and harvests it, he is entitled to reimbursement from the lessee or cropper for the expense of harvesting the crop.[94] Where a receiver is in possession of a crop and has a force hired to gather it, the landlord does not become liable for increasing expenses resulting from discharging the hands by telling the receiver he did not want them on his place and that they should not use water out of his spring.[95]

3. Actions by Tenant For Breach of Contract. In any event, whether the party be held to be a lessee or a cropper, a cause of action arises in his favor against the owner of the land for breach of contract in delivering possession of the land for the purpose contemplated in the agreement, or for any substantial interference with the lessee or cropper in the cultivation of the land, or harvesting of the crop.[96] The measure of plaintiff's damages in such action is as a general rule not the value of the services in cultivating and harvesting the crop, but the value of his contract or the value of his share of the contemplated crop.[97]

4. Action by Landlord For Breach of Contract. Where a tenant or cropper who contracts to cultivate a crop on shares or for a specified interest in the same fails to comply with the terms of his agreement, the owner of the land may maintain an action against him for the consequent damages.[98]

5. Actions Against Third Persons. Where land is let upon shares, the owners of crops may maintain an action against third persons for unlawful trespass upon or injury to such crops.[99] However, one joint owner cannot alone maintain such action without joining therein the other joint owners of such property, and those refusing to join in the action as plaintiffs should be made parties defendant.[1]

6. Reëntry and Recovery of Possession by Landlord. Under a lease of land on shares, containing no clause giving the lessor a right of reëntry in case the covenants are broken,[2] the lessor has no right of reëntry upon the lessee's failure to comply with his covenants,[3] although he may bring an action of forcible entry and detainer,[4] or resort to summary proceedings, where the statute gives such remedy, to recover possession of the premises.[5]

C. Rights and Liabilities as to Crops[6] — 1. Rights and Liabilities of Parties in General[7] — a. Right or Title to Crop. The title to the crops raised by one man on another man's farm depends largely if not entirely upon the contract between the two men. If the contract amounts to a lease or demise of the land by the owner to the occupier, then clearly the crops belong to the occupier, whether he pays rent in money, or in kind by a share of the crops. The occupier in such cases becomes the owner pro hac vice, and has title to the products of the farm until division.[8] In some jurisdictions where an agreement by which land is let to be cultivated for a share of the crops does not constitute a lease, but creates a tenancy in common of the crops, it is held that the owner of the land thereby impliedly reserves the right to remove his share if necessary without the consent of the occupier.[9] If the contract, however, does not amount to a lease, but is instead a contract for hiring, the occupier to carry on the farm, the owner to pay him a certain percentage of the products as compensation, then the occupier is not owner pro hac vice, but is the servant of the owner, entitled to receive the agreed percentage of the products as compensation, while the title to the products remains in the owner of the farm.[10] Of course the contract may be greatly varied and vest the title in one or the other,[11] or both, as coöwners, tenants in common, partners, or in any other mode or proportion, at the will of the parties.[12] Where by the express terms of the contract or the legal construction thereof title to the crop is vested in one of the parties thereto, the other party has nevertheless such an interest in the crop that he can sell, assign, or mortgage such interest prior to a division of the crop.[13] He cannot, however, sell any part of the crop before division,[14] and his interest therein is not subject to levy and sale under execution prior to such division.[15]

b. Tenancy in Common as to Crops. A contract to cultivate land on shares is usually regarded as constituting the parties tenants in common of the crops so raised, but not joint tenants or tenants in common of the land.[16] While an agreement to cultivate land on shares may create a tenancy in common in the crops, it is not necessarily inconsistent with the relation of landlord and tenant.[17]

c. Crops Subject to Division.[18] Where lands in possession of a tenant on shares is sold, the purchaser to become the landlord and entitled to rents and profits from the date of the sale, he is entitled to a share of the crop sown in the preceding year, but harvested after the purchase, grain sown in one year and harvested the next being of the issues and profits of the latter year.[19] But a lease by the terms of which the tenant was to furnish one-half the seed-grain and perform the work in raising the crop which was to be equally divided between the landlord and tenant does not entitle tenant to a share of wheat sown the fall before and growing at the time the lease went into effect.[20] A lease which provides that the lessee is to deliver to the lessor as rent "a certain proportion of all crops grown on the demised premises," including the present growing crop of clover seed," entitles the lessor to the annual crop of clover then growing on the farm.[21]

d. Division of Crops. The basis of division fixed upon in the agreement controls in the division of crops between the parties thereto;[22] and an agreement that the crop should be divided according to the custom prevailing among the farmers of the neighborhood in which the land is situated is valid, and will be upheld.[23] Where by the terms of the agreement the division and delivery of the landlord's portion of the crop is to be made at a specified time and place, failure on the part of the tenant to so deliver at such time and place will render him liable to the landlord for the money value of his share of the crop.[24] And where no time is fixed for the delivery to the landlord of his share of the crop, he is entitled to its delivery within a reasonable time after maturity.[25] In the absence of any special agreement requiring it, it is not necessary that both parties should be present at the division of the crop.[26]

e. Effect of Division. Upon a division of the crop, the title of the parties to the contract to their respective shares immediately vests and each of them can maintain an action of conversion for an appropriation of such share by the other or a third party.[27]

f. Rescission or Waiver. A tenant farming land on shares who abandons the land thereby rescinds the contract, and loses all right to his share of the growing crop.[28] Likewise the owner of the land may by his own acts rescind the agreement and be estopped to claim any share of the crop under the agreement.[29]

terms of agreement, or by construction of law, the title to a crop is in the lessee or cropper prior to division, he may maintain an appropriate action against the landlord or owner for an appropriation or seizure of his share prior to division.[30] A fortiori the lessee or cropper may maintain an action against the landlord where the latter seizes or withholds the share of the crop of the former which he is entitled to under the agreement.[31] Where, however, the parties are tenants in common of the crop, the taking and retention of possession thereof by either will not entitle the other to an action for conversion, unless the property be actually destroyed or converted.[32]

contract between the landlord and tenant fixes no time for the delivery to the landlord of his share of the crop, his claim can be converted into a money demand and suit maintained for the value of such share only after due demand for the delivery of the share.[36]

(II) Evidence. In an action by a landlord against his tenant to recover the rent reserved it is competent for the tenant, as is the case in other contracts,[37] to show that the written lease was subsequently modified by parol.[38] In an action by a landlord against his tenant for failure to deliver to him his proper share of the crop as per agreement, evidence is admissible on behalf of defendant to show that he was providentially prevented from harvesting the full crop, and that he was not guilty of negligence in the premises.[39] So the tenant may show in mitigation of damages that after making the lease the landlord, with his consent, had leased a part of the premises to a third person, from whom he had received rent for that part.[40] In an action by a landlord against his tenant for failure to deliver part of the crop, as required by the lease, and a modification thereof, where the answer is a general denial, the burden is on plaintiff to establish the lease, the modification, and the breach, and also that he has performed his part of the contract.[41]

(III) Damages. In an action by a landlord against his tenant for a failure to deliver the landlord's share of the crop according to contract, the measure of damages as a general rule is the value of plaintiff's share in such crop.[42] In several jurisdictions, by statute, where, by the terms of the agreement, the landlord is to receive as rent a certain portion of the crops raised, where the tenant proceeds to remove all the crop without the landlord's consent, the latter may levy attachment on the entire crop,[43] or distrain for his share.[44]

36. Johnson v. Shank, 67 Iowa 115, 24 N. W. 749; Rich v. Hobson, 112 N. C. 79, 16 S. Sufficiency of demand.— A demand upon the lessee for a proper division of the crops, made after they have been stored and before the expiration of the year, is sufficient, in case of non-compliance on the part of the lessee, to entitle the lessor to sustain account, without waiting until the crops are consumed, or disposed of, by the lessee, and then demanding an account of the avails. W. 520 (holding that where a landlord whose rent is payable in a part of the crops sues for rent and levies a distress warrant, and the jury find the landlord entitled to a certain part of the crops but do not find its value, the court has no authority to render judgment for a sum of money as the value of the landlord's portion of the crops); McBride v. Puckett, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 66 S. W. 242. See Agney v. Strohecker, 21 Ill. App. 625, holding that, although a distress warrant authorizing the bailiff to take the landlord's grain rent was an illegal and irregular way of compelling the tenant to make a division of crops according to the terms of the alleged verbal lease on shares, yet that the proceedings thereunder, and the tenant's acquiescence, amounted to a full satisfaction of the claim for rent.

crops to be raised as rent, or where land is let on shares and the relation of tenants in common is created, the landlord or owner has a lien on the whole crop for his rent or share thereof, and for advances made by him, which may be enforced in the hands of third parties.[45] Where the landlord is forced to harvest the crop himself he also has a lien for the value of the labor, as a part of the rent which the tenant agreed to pay.[46] The lien is not affected by the lessors taking the lessee's note with surety for the rent, at the time the lease was made.[47] As the statutes relating to liens have no extraterritorial effect, the lien is not enforceable against a purchaser residing in another state to whom the crop has been shipped.[48]

b. Extent of, and Priorities. The landlord's lien for rent reserved, or his share of the crop where there is a tenancy in common, is superior to that of any one else furnishing labor or supplies to the tenant;[49] and under a lease of a house and lands, the house for cash rent, and the lands for a share of the crop, the contract being entire, the landlord has a lien on the crop for the rent due him on the house.[50]

c. Offenses Against Lien Law. In some jurisdictions, by statute, it is made an indictable offense for a person to remove from the premises or sell a crop upon which the landlord has a statutory lien or claim, without the consent of such landlord;[51] and in at least one jurisdiction it is provided by statute that any laborer, renter, or share cropper, who, having contracted with another for a specified time, shall leave his employer, or the leased premises before the expiration of the contract, without the consent of his employer, and make a second contract without giving notice of the first to the second party, is guilty of a misdemeanor.[52]

the owner of the land until he is paid his share, and all advances, the lessee or cropper has no title to the crop until the owner is fully paid, and a purchaser from the lessee or cropper acquires no title to the crop before that time.[53] Where the property of the crop is in the tenant, a purchaser without notice of the lien takes it discharged of the lien.[54]

2. Purchasers at Foreclosure or Execution Sale. The purchaser of land at a foreclosure sale of a mortgage thereon only acquires the landlord's interest in crops raised on shares which were planted prior to the foreclosure.[55] A purchaser at a foreclosure or execution sale of a tenant's interest in crops raised on shares is thereby subrogated to all of such tenant's right, title, and interest in such crops, which may be enforced by appropriate action.[56]

3. Assignee of Tenant. The general rule is that the lessee of lands on shares may assign the lease or sell his share of the crop without the consent of the lessor, unless prohibited by the terms of the lease; and such assignment or sale will carry to the assignee or purchaser any option as to the terms of the division or manner of gathering the crop that the lessee would have had under the terms of the lease.[57]

4. Mortgagees. The mortgagee of a growing crop planted by a tenant, under a contract which entitles the landlord to a portion of the crop, only succeeds to the interest of the mortgagor, and where the mortgage is made by the tenant, and the mortgagee converts the whole crop to his own use, he is liable for the share of the landlord on a proper demand for its delivery.[58]

5. Actions. Where a tenant letting lands on shares sells the entire crop before any division thereof or settlement with the landowner, the owner may treat the sale as a conversion and recover therefor from the purchaser.[59] Likewise an assignee or purchaser of the tenant's interest in the crop may maintain an action against a landlord for conversion or appropriation of such tenant's share.[60]

XII. Interference With Relation by Third Persons.

A. Civil Liability. It is provided by statute in some states that one who wilfully and knowingly entices away a tenant and induces him to leave the leased premises without sufficient cause shall be liable in damages at the suit of the landlord.[61] Under such a statute, if the tenant does not have cause sufficient in law to justify him in leaving the premises, one employing him, knowing of the lease, is liable.[62] Whether the cause for which the tenant abandons the premises is sufficient is a question of law for the court, and not a question of fact for the jury.[63] Even in the absence of statute it has been held that an action lies in favor of a landlord against any person who by reason of wrongful and malicious acts causes his tenants to abandon the premises.[64]

B. Criminal Responsibility. The statutes sometimes make it an offense to entice away and employ the tenant of another.[65]

LAND-MARK. See Boundaries.

LAND-OFFICE. A term sometimes used as equivalent to "General Land Office."[1] (See, generally, Public Lands.)

LANDOWNER. One who owns real estate.[2] (See Freeholder; Land, and Cross-References Thereunder.)

LAND POOR. In common parlance, a term applied to a person who has a great deal of unproductive land and perhaps is obliged to borrow money to pay taxes, etc.[3]

LAND TENANT. The person actually in possession of land; otherwise styled the "terre-tenant."[4]

LAND WARRANT. See Public Lands.

LANE. A term which signifies simply a narrow way, which may be either public or private, and is oftener, perhaps, private than public;[5] and is often used as synonymous with "public way" or "highway."[6] (See, generally, Easements; Private Roads; Streets and Highways.)

LANGUAGE. The conveyance in which thoughts and ideas are transmitted from one to another.[7] The word is broad enough to include words written as

65. See Haney v. State, (Miss. 1905) 38 So. 284, holding a conviction cannot be had in the absence of evidence that defendant knew of the lease, that he in anywise enticed away the tenant or that he employed him after the tenant had abandoned the landlord's service.

A cropper is a laborer within the meaning of the statute making it unlawful to "entice away, knowingly employ or induce a laborer or renter who has contracted with another for a specified time, to leave his employer or the leased premises, before the expiration of his or her contract, without the consent of the employer." Ward v. State, 70 Miss. 245, 12 So. 249. The absence of the consent of the employer is a necessary ingredient of the offense and must be charged in the indictment, and proved as laid. LANOLINE. An expensive, highly finished product produced from wool-grease by an elaborate patented process of elimination and purification, by means of which many of the impurities and all of the potash of the crude wool-grease are removed.[9] (See, generally, Customs Duties.)

LANZAS. In Spanish law, a certain contribution in money paid by the grandees and other high officers in lieu of the soldiers they ought to furnish government in time of war.[10]

LAPPAGE. See Adverse Possession.[11]

LAPSE. A slip or failure.[12] In criminal proceedings, the word is used, in England, in the same sense as "abate" in ordinary procedure; i. e., to signify that the proceedings came to an end by the death of one of the parties or some other event.[13] In English ecclesiastical law, an office of trust, reposed by law in the ordinary, metropolitan, and lastly in the king; the end of which trust is to provide the church with a rector in default of the patron.[14] As used in a statute in reference to the occupation of crown lands under a license, an apt expression for the loss of any interest in land by reason of an omission to renew, or the non-performance of a condition, such as the payment of money.[15] (Lapse: Of Devise or Legacy, see Executors and Administrators; Wills.)

LAPSED. That which has failed or passed aside.[16] (Lapsed: Legacy or Devise, see Wills.)

'Lanoline' is made from wool-grease just as vaseline is made from petroleum or cheese is made from milk, but it was never known as wool-grease in commerce and no business man would have thought of sending 'Lanoline' to fill an order for wool-grease."
