I. DEFINITION AND GENERAL NATURE.

A judicial sale is one made under the process of a court having competent authority to order it, by an officer legally appointed and commissioned to sell;[1] one made by a court of competent jurisdiction, in a pending cause through its authorized agent.[2] A sale under an order or decree of court is a judicial act. The court is the vendor, and the officer conducting the sale is the mere agent of the court. The sale is a transaction between the court and the purchaser.[3] A sale is not a judicial sale, properly speaking, unless it is one made on an order of the court and subject to confirmation by the court.[4] Proceedings for judicial sales are ordinarily in rem.[5]

II. JURISDICTION AND POWERS OF COURTS.

In order that a judicial sale may be validly made it is necessary that the court by which it was ordered shall have had the general power to decree a sale, and that in a particular case the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter shall have been acquired in a proper manner.[6] A court having jurisdiction to decree a

Where land lies in two counties the court which first assumes jurisdiction under the Pennsylvania act of June 13, 1840, and whose mesne or final process has made the first judicial sale has all the incidental powers necessary to accomplish its purpose.[7] The power of a court of chancery to sell the subject of litigation rests on the same foundation as the like power of maritime courts.[8] Where a sale is made by order of a court of limited jurisdiction the proceedings must show on their face that the prerequisites of the law have been strictly complied with.[9] A statute authorizing the courts to order a sale of property owned by two or more persons when a sale will promote the interests of the owners does not give them power to order a sale of property owned solely by an individual for the purpose of paying debts.[10] In Maryland the statute gives the court power to order a sale before final decree where it is satisfied that at the final hearing a sale would be ordered,[11] and in Virginia also the courts have ordered sales by interlocutory decree.[12]

III. WHAT MAY BE SOLD.

In general any legal interest in property, either real or personal, may be sold.[13] But an equitable title should not be decreed to be sold; if a sale be proper the court should first direct the legal title to be perfected and then decree a sale of that.[14] Where, in a suit to sell a debtor's land, it appears that one of the tracts of land charged with the liens of the several judgments against such debtor is also charged with a specific lien exceeding in amount the value thereof, having priority over all other liens thereon, the court may properly decree the sale of other lands of the debtor, without decreeing a sale of the tract charged with such specific lien.[15] Where land is to be sold for the payment of debts or claims only so much as is necessary for that purpose should be sold, and it is error to order a sale of the whole unless this is necessary to pay the debt, or the property is indivisible so that less than the whole cannot be sold without injury.[16] A sale of actual seizure of the land, is not entitled to exclusive control thereof until sale and distribution of the proceeds, but another court may assume jurisdiction of proceedings for sale under another claim. Miller v. Lash, 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 292.

Satisfaction of debt while proceedings pending.— The fact that pending a suit to subject land to the payment of a judgment the judgment is satisfied of record does not deprive the court of further jurisdiction so as to render a decree of sale void. Oliver v. Riley, 92 Iowa 23, 60 N. W. 80.

Security on interlocutory decree.— It is not error in an interlocutory decree for the sale of land to fail to require bond and security from plaintiff as prescribed by law, to perform the future orders of the court, but it is a sufficient compliance with the law if this is done in the final decree. more land than the decree directs to be sold is void,[17] as is also a sale of the undivided half of a lot under an order directing the sale of the lot.[18]

IV. When Lease Proper.

An estate ordered to be sold is under the protection of the court, and may be rented until a sale can be effected;[19] and under the statutes in some jurisdictions the property must be leased instead of being sold if the rents and profits will discharge the liens within a time limited by law.[20]

V. Prerequisites of Sale.

A. Ascertainment of Debts and Liens. In some states, before a judicial sale of land to satisfy encumbrances thereon is had, the debts and liens binding it, their amounts and priorities must be ascertained,[21] and a time given to the debtor Indivisibility must appear by verified pleading or proof.— Holland v. Holman, 50 S. W. 1102, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 105.

In the case of a decree against two joint and several obligors and for the sale of their land to satisfy the decree, it should direct a sale of sufficient of the land of each to satisfy one half of the decree, if practicable, with power to sell sufficient afterward to make up any deficiency, or to sell the whole in the first instance, if it appears to be absolutely necessary. Hoye v. Penn, 1 Bland (Md.) 28.

It is the debtor's duty to see to the parceling out of the land directed to be sold, and if he considers that too much is offered he should urge the objection at the time of settling the advertisement, and it should be stated in the advertisement that the unsold lots will be withdrawn from sale when the debt is realized, if that course is intended to be taken. Beaty v. Radenhurst, 3 Ch. Chamb. (U. C.) 344.

18. Wheatley v. Tutt, 4 Kan. 195.

19. Williams' Case, 3 Bland (Md.) 186.

If the time of year is not propitious for an advantageous sale of farm lands, the court may order them to be leased until a time when it is desirable to have the sale, the rents to be applied to the payment of the debts. Roe v. Wilmot, 51 Iowa 689, 2 N. W. 539.

20. Etter v. Scott, 90 Va. 762, 19 S. E. 776; Kennerly v. Swartz, 83 Va. 704, 3 S. E. 348; Muse v. Friedenwald, 77 Va. 57; Dunfee v. Childs, 45 W. Va. 155, 30 S. E. 102; Coal River Nav. Co. v. Webb, 3 W. Va. 438; Conaway v. Odbert, 2 W. Va. 25.

Even in the absence of statute by the practice of Virginia, which was adopted in West Virginia, the courts, in enforcing judgment liens on land, uniformly held that it would be improper to decree the sale of real estate when the debtor asked that it might be rented and it appeared that the rents and profits of the estate would pay the lien in a reasonable time, and what was a reasonable time was left to the sound legal discretion of the courts, which discretion was reviewable by the appellate court. Rose v. Brown, 11 W. Va. 122 [followed in Hill v. Morehead, 20 W. Va. 429].

A decree for leasing may be set aside if it subsequently appears that the rents will be inadequate to pay all the judgment liens in five years, and an order of sale entered in its stead. Kennerly v. Swartz, 83 Va. 704, 3 S. E. 348.

21. Lewis v. Baker, 1 Head (Tenn.) 385 (exact amount due must be ascertained and stated in decree); Sims v. Tyrer, 9 Va. 14, 30 S. E. 443; Bristol Iron, etc., Co. v. Caldwell, (Va. 1897) 27 S. E. 838; Redd v. Dyer, 83 Va. 331, 2 S. E. 283, 5 Am. St. Rep. 272; Adkins v. Edwards, 83 Va. 300, 2 S. E. 435; Effinger v. Kenney, 79 Va. 551; Moran v. Brent, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 104; Lough v. Michael, 37 W. Va. 679, 17 S. E. 181, 470; Hull v. Hull, 35 W. Va. 155, 13 S. E. 49, 29 Am. St. Rep. 800; McCleary v. Grantham, 29 W. Va. 301, 11 S. E. 949; Payne v. Webb, 23 W. Va. 558; Trimble v. Herold, 20 W. Va. 602; Beard v. Arbuckle, 19 W. Va. 135; Scott v. Ludington, 14 W. Va. 387; Wiley v. Mahood, 10 W. Va. 206; White v. Drew, 9 W. Va. 695.

Resale.— Although a decree of sale is made which, from the facts then appearing, is proper, and a sale is made thereunder, it is nevertheless error for the court by a subsequent decree which sets aside such sale to order a resale of the lands if the facts then appearing in the cause show the existence of liens, the amounts and priorities of which have not been ascertained and fixed. In such case the court should set aside the former decree of sale and refer the cause to a commissioner, or otherwise determine the priorities and amounts of the liens before ordering the resale. Payne v. Webb, 23 W. Va. 558.

Effect of partial payment.— If the amount of a lien has been fixed a partial payment does not require the ascertainment of the balance due. Schmertz v. Hammond, 51 W. Va. 408, 41 S. E. 184.

The lienholder's assent to a sale does not cure an omission to make such determination of an existing lien. Beard v. Arbuckle, 19 W. Va. 135.

A decree which simply confirms a commissioner's report of debts and directs a sale of lands therefor in default of payment, al-within which he can make payment of his indebtedness and thus avoid having his property sold therefor.[22]

B. Settlement of Conflicting Claims and Equities. Where there are conflicting claims to property, and the equities of the respective parties necessarily depend upon the facts which may be proven on the trial, it is right and proper that the same should be definitely settled by the decree of the court before the property is sold.[23]

C. Levy on Property. When there is a decree establishing a lien upon certain property and directing its sale for the payment thereof, there is no necessity for a levy on the property.[24]

VI. ORDER OR DECREE OF SALE.

A. Necessity. There can be no valid judicial sale without an order or decree directing the same.[25] A sale of land other than that which is directed by the though that report specifies the debts and priorities, is erroneous, because the decree does not itself adjudicate and declare what debts are to be paid, and fix their order and priority as to the lands to be sold therefor. Hull v. Hull, 35 W. Va. 155, 13 S. E. 49, 29 Am. St. Rep. 800.

Where it is necessary to sell all of a debtor's lands to meet his debts, he is not prejudiced by the commissioner's failure to settle the liens and their priorities on each parcel of land as directed. White v. Drew, 9 W. Va. 695.

Amendment in appellate court.— Where, in a suit to sell a debtor's land, there has been a commissioner's report, showing the lands owned by the debtor, and the nature and priorities of the liens thereon, which has been confirmed, and there is entered a decree that "the lands of said debtor, in said report named [shall] all be severally sold to pay the liens on the same in the order of their priority, as set out in said report," without any further statement specifying the sums to be paid to the several creditors, the parcels of land on which they are chargeable, and the order of priority in which the proceeds of the sales of the several parcels of land shall be applied, but from the commissioner's report, and the face of the decree, it can be safely amended, it will be so amended in the appellate court, and, when so amended, will be affirmed. McCleary v. Grantham, 29 W. Va. 301, 11 S. E. 949.

Curing error of premature decree.— A decree ordering the register to ascertain the amount due plaintiffs on a note, and at the same time directing that, upon a failure to pay the amount so ascertained, defendants' land shall be sold therefor, will not be reversed, as having prematurely ordered a sale before the amount due had been ascertained, where it appears that, after the report of the register, another decree was made, ordering the register to sell the land as directed in the former decree. Simmons v. Jones, 84 Ala. 354, 3 So. 895.

Failure to take further account of liens as ordered.— After the commissioner's report ascertaining liens had been confirmed without exception, and a sale ordered to satisfy the same, a further account of outstanding liens was directed. The report of the sale, afterward made, showed that the land sold for an unusually high price, and was confirmed without objection from any creditor, but no distribution was ordered. The amount of liens reported greatly exceeded the price for which the land sold. It was held that the sale was properly confirmed without a further account of liens. Utterbach v. Mehlenger, 86 Va. 62, 9 S. E. 479.

Compliance with this requirement may be waived by parties.— Parsons v. Thornburg, 17 W. Va. 356. Thus a debtor, part of whose lands are sold under a decree with his consent, has no right to object that the liens and priorities on each parcel of the land were not determined by the commissioner as directed by the decree. White v. Drew, 9 W. Va. 695.

Right of purchaser to object.— The error in decreeing a sale without ordering an account of liens to be taken is waived so far as the purchaser is concerned by his contract of purchase, and the objection cannot be raised by him for the first time in the appellate court after a resale of the property has been ordered because of his failure to comply with his bid. Redd v. Dyer, 83 Va. 331, 2 S. E. 283, 5 Am. St. Rep. 272.

decree of the court to be sold is utterly null and void and no title to the property passes thereby.[26]

B. Form and Contents. The order or decree must conform to the general requirements of law respecting the form of orders, decrees, and judgments of courts.[27] It must describe the property to be sold,[28] and specify in certain and precise language the duties to be performed by the court's officer.[29] When a sale of land is ordered to pay a debt, the exact amount due should be stated in the decree.[30]

C. Effect. Unlike a judgment at law on which execution issues, the decree

27. Ingram v. Kirby, 19 N. C. 21.

An entry on the trial docket of the court at the foot of the case of "order of sale" is not such a judgment as the law requires to be shown. Ingram v. Kirby, 19 N. C. 21.

An order of sale issued without the seal of the court is void, and the court has no power, after a sale is made thereunder, to allow the process to be amended by attaching the seal. Gordon v. Bodwell, 59 Kan. 51, 51 Pac. 906, 68 Am. St. Rep. 341.

Description should be certain and specific. — Ross v. Adams, 13 Bush (Ky.) 370.

A decree for the sale of land should give the boundaries, a mere reference to the deed and to the book in which it is recorded not being sufficient. Terry v. Swinford, 41 S. W. 553, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 712.

A decree in which the land is erroneously described does not affect the title or warrant a sale. Boggs v. Douglass, 89 Iowa 150, 56 N. W. 412.

Error as to county in which land located.— Where an order for the sale of land spoke of the land as in a different county from that in which it really was, but the mistake did not render it impossible to ascertain its locality through the description given, it was held that the order was not void. Lindsay v. Jaffray, 55 Tex. 626.

Direction as to advertisement.— It is sufficient for the judgment to direct the commissioner to advertise the sale "as sheriffs are required to do before selling land under execution," since the sheriff's duties in such case are specifically prescribed by statute. Barnes v. Jackson, 85 Ky. 407, 3 S. W. 601, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 33.

A direction to convey will be implied from a direction to sell and take security for the purchase-price. Peake v. Young, 40 S. C. 41, 18 S. E. 237.

Direction as to time of conveyance.— Although the court cannot direct a deed to be made until six months after a judicial sale, a judgment directing a sale cannot be questioned by the debtor because it directs that after the confirmation the receiver shall forthwith execute a deed, as it will not be assumed that the receiver will do so before the time authorized by law. Woodbury v. Nevada Southern R. Co., 120 Cal. 463, 52 Pac. 730.

30. Lewis v. Baker, 1 Head (Tenn.) 385.

Specifying amount of partial payment.— Where a decree of sale authorizes payment to a judgment creditor of money in the hands of a receiver in another court as a partial payment, there is no error in failing to ascertain the amount of such money in the decree. Schmertz v. Hammond, 51 W. Va. 408, 41 S. E. 184.

of a court of chancery is itself the authority of the officer to sell.[31] A decree fixing the rights of parties and ordering a sale is binding, while proceedings to reverse it are pending, although the sale is suspended during such proceedings.[32] An appraisement and sale under a second decree of sale in a suit to marshal liens, the first not having been vacated or set aside, is irregular.[33]

D. Validity. An order of sale made without the notice required by statute has been held void.[34] A direction that a conveyance be made without taking steps required by law renders the decree fatally erroneous.[35]

E. Recalling Order of Sale. The court may recall an order of sale issued under a decree in a case still on the docket in term-time.[36]

F. Collateral Attack. An order or decree for the sale of property is subject to collateral attack where it was made without jurisdiction,[37] but where the court had jurisdiction the order or decree is not subject to collateral attack.[38]

VII. INJUNCTION AGAINST OR STAY OF SALE.

A court of chancery may by injunction restrain the execution of a decree of sale.[39] A stay of a sale will not be granted upon an allegation that a third person is in possession of the land and an action of unlawful detainer is pending against him, which facts will cause the sale to be at a sacrifice, where the possession and suit appear to be a mere contrivance to secure delay.[40] A sale by a master under a decree, after an order staying the sale, but without notice of the order, is valid and effectual and will carry title to a bona fide purchaser.[41]

VIII. OFFICER TO SELL.

A. In General. The court ordering a judicial sale has power to appoint a person to make the sale,[42] and the sale should be conducted by or under the immediate direction of the person appointed for the purpose in the order or decree.[43]

B. Who May Be Appointed. While it is proper and usual to appoint an officer of the court to make the sale,[44] the court may appoint any person it sees fit, even though such person be not an officer.[45] Any competent person may as a rule be appointed to make the sale;[46] but the court should not appoint a person under disability,[47] a non-resident,[48] a person who is interested in the suit or the property,[49] or a person holding an office incompatible with the trust of selling,[50] and a sale made by a person who should not have been appointed is voidable,[51] even though no fraud or actual bad faith be shown.[52]

C. Bond and Oath. Under some statutes it is required that the person appointed to make the sale shall give a bond,[53] and take a prescribed

Effect of sale by agent.— The fact that a sale under a decree of court is conducted by an agent of the commissioner authorized by the decree to make it, and in the absence of the commissioner, is not such an irregularity as impairs the jurisdiction of the court, although it vitiates the sale and authorizes the parties interested to have it set aside, if no rights of innocent purchasers have intervened. Violation of statute.— A direction in a judgment of foreclosure that the sale should be made by a referee instead of a sheriff, as provided by N. Y. Plaintiff cannot waive bond.— Neeley v. Ruleys, 26 W. Va. 686.

Effect of failure to require security.— Where the decree ordering a sale of land directs the commissioner to give bond and fixes the penalty of the bond, failure to require security is not reversible error, although Va. Acts (1883–1884), p. 213, provide that the commissioner shall give bond and personal security to be approved by the clerk. Cooper v. Daugherty, 85 Va. 343, 7 S. E. 387.

oath,[54] and even in the absence of statute the court has power to require a bond[55] or oath.[56] The sufficiency of a bond is a matter for the court.[57] And if the sale is ratified by the court the fact that the directions of the decree or the requirements of the law were not fully carried out, none of the interested parties having been injured, is not ground for vacating the sale.[58] If an oath is required, it must be presumed in the absence of any showing to the contrary that one was taken.[59] In the absence of any statute so providing or of any requirement to that effect in the order or decree, it is not necessary in order that the sale may be valid that any bond or security should be given,[60] or any oath taken.[61]

D. Removal. Where special commissioners are appointed to sell lands, and an unusual delay occurs on their part in carrying out the decree and making their report, the court will ordinarily award a rule against them, requiring them to account for the delay, before removing them and appointing other commissioners to execute the decree.[62]

E. Powers and Duties. An order or decree for the sale of property is a sufficient warrant of authority to the officer to sell,[63] and it has been held that

A sale cannot be set aside under W. Va. Code, c. 132, § 1, because the commissioners failed to give bond before making it. Sommerville v. Sommerville, 26 W. Va. 479.

Duty of purchaser.— The statute being imperative that a bond shall be given, it is the duty of the purchaser to see that the bond has been given before he pays his money to the commissioner; otherwise he pays at his own risk. Hess v. Rader, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 746.

Before whom bond given.— A decree directing a commissioner for the sale of land to give bond before the clerk of any court other than the one making the decree is erroneous, as contrary to Va. Code, § 3398; but, the decree being interlocutory, the appellate court will amend it without reversing, and order the bond to be given before the clerk of the proper court. Southwest Virginia Mineral Land Co. v. Chase, 95 Va. 50, 27 S. E. 826.

Liability on bond.— In a decree for sale of land, part cash and part credit, the special commissioner must, under W. Va. Code (1887), c. 132, § 1, give a bond conditioned to faithfully discharge his duties and pay over all money which may come to him by virtue of his office, and such bond binds the principal and sureties for moneys received by the commissioner, whether from the cash or deferred payments. Conditional order.— An order that a sheriff sell personal property, and, in case that proves insufficient to satisfy a judgment then to sell real estate, but with a condition that plaintiff is not to have the benefit of the order until he shall give bond, without evidence that the personal property was sold or was insufficient to satisfy the judgment, or that the bond was given, does not prove authority to the sheriff to sell the real estate, or at all sustain such a sale. Houston v. McCluney, 8 W. Va. 135.

A decree in the supreme court that the sheriff shall sell certain lands upon receiving an order for that purpose, which is sent by mandate to the common pleas for execution, gives the sheriff no authority to sell the property in question merely upon receiving from the clerk a certified copy of this decree without any order thereon. Rhonemus v. Corwin, 9 Ohio St. 366.

commissioners of the chancery court may under the order of court sell land lying out of their own district.[64] The officer must sell according to the order or decree;[65] but where a sale of land in satisfaction of a judgment is decreed in equity, the commissioner has discretionary power, subject to revision by the court, to determine what part of the land shall be sold to satisfy the judgment, where the whole is not needed.[66] After the sale has been ratified the trustee who made the sale cannot be allowed in any manner, of himself and without the previous authority of the court, to compromise or abandon any right in relation to the sale so made, or to relinquish the bond, bill, or note taken for the purchase-money, or to dispose of the property or purchase-money to any one or upon any ground whatever.[67] A master or commissioner in chancery has no authority to sell after the expiration of his office, although the property has been advertised by him before that time.[68]

F. Liabilities. Where a master in chancery sold land under a decree of court, giving no directions as to terms and security, and took a bond of the purchaser, and a mortgage of the land sold, he was not liable for a loss by the insolvency of the purchaser and a depreciation of the land.[69]

G. Compensation. The person making the sale is usually allowed compensation for his services in the form of a commission;[70] but it has been held that a court commissioner is not entitled to a commission for selling lands where the creditor was the purchaser, the commissioner not having received the purchase-money or disbursed it.[71]

Von Hoven's Succession, 48 La. Ann. 620, 19 So. 766. A referee appointed "to sell real property, pursuant to a judgment in an action" other than a foreclosure suit upon a mortgage, is entitled to sheriff's fees; that is, two and one-half per cent of the proceeds not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars, and one per cent upon the residue. An actual appraisement is necessary in cases to which the statute applies, and its

B. Who May Act as Appraisers. It is ordinarily required that the appraisers should be freeholders[77] who are disinterested.[78]

C. Qualification of Appraisers. It is ordinarily required that the appraisers shall be sworn.[79]

D. Proceedings in Appraisement. The duty of the appraisers is to appraise the value of the property and deduct the liens thereon.[80] The appraisement must be upon such actual view as will enable the appraisers to judge fairly of the value of the land and improvements upon it.[81] Notice to the debtor of place cannot be supplied by evidence after the sale that the property in fact sold for a fair price, or more than two thirds of any appraised value which could fairly have been placed upon it. Graves v. Long, 87 Ky. 441, 9 S. W. 297.

Agreement for sale without appraisement — Presumption.— Where a judgment and sale without appraisement was made upon an agreement waiving the benefit of the appraisement laws, it was presumed on appeal that the consideration arose after the taking effect of Ind. Act (1843), §§ 3, 4, authorizing such agreements. Lemasters v. Johnson, 12 Ind. 385.

How objection available.— An objection based on the lack of an appraisal must be made on exception to the sale and cannot be pleaded as a defense by a purchaser in an action to recover the amount of the deficiency on a resale. Tyler v. Guthrie, 33 S. W. 934, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1193.

E. Effect and Sufficiency of Appraisement. The valuation placed by appraisers upon real estate is final and conclusive unless it be overthrown and set aside because the appraisers were not legally qualified, because they acted fraudulently in making the appraisement, or for some other equally potent reason.[84]

F. Attack on and Setting Aside Appraisement. An objection to the appraisement as being too high or too low must be made by motion to vacate the appraisement[85] before the sale is made.[86] The appraisement cannot be successfully attacked after the sale except on the ground of fraud.[87] Where no attack has been made on an appraisement of property for the purpose of a judicial sale, an order setting aside such appraisement is unauthorized.[88] Defendant cannot complain of errors in the appraisement which do not prejudice him.[89] The Failure to deduct liens.— A statutory provision for the deduction of prior liens in appraising lands for judicial sale is solely for the creditor's benefit, so that the failure to observe the law in that regard cannot be urged by the debtor as a ground for vacating valuation placed on property for purposes of judicial sale by legally qualified appraisers will not be set aside because other persons differ in opinion as to the value of such property,[90] or because the appraisers afterward become dissatisfied with their valuation, unless it appears that they acted under some mistake.[91] Where, in a suit to subject certain land to the payment of liens, the commissioner sold the exact quantity of land described in the judgment, which followed the description set out in the mortgage, a motion, unaccompanied by a tender of the debts which the land was sold to pay, to set aside the sale on the ground that the appraisers had failed to appraise the entire lot, which was in fact larger than that sold, was properly denied.[92]

X. NOTICE OF SALE.[93]

A. Requirement. The aim of the law being to secure the best price that can be fairly obtained for the property,[94] it is universally required that a judicial sale shall be preceded by notice thereof,[95] given according to the provisions of the statute[96] or the directions of the court;[97] and it is the duty of the officer in giving notice to follow the directions of the decree or statute in their spirit and meaning.[98] It is not necessary to give the debtor any notice other than the general public notice, unless required by statute.[99]

Act Cong. March 2, 1867, § 7 (14 St. 466) prescribing the manner in which the advertising for the departments of the United States government shall be done, applies only to such advertisements as are published in behalf of the government and paid for out of the federal treasury, and does not affect advertisements for sales of lands under judicial process in suits between individuals. Necessity for explicit directions.— Where the statute requires such notice as the court shall direct the order of sale should state explicitly what notice is to be given. Meyer v. Covington, 103 Ky. 546, 45 S. W. 769, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 239, holding that an order directing sale to be made after advertising "in both modes mentioned in rule 40 of this court" is not sufficient, as the commissioner should not be required to look beyond the order for directions.

Notice sufficiently complying with directions.— A decree for the sale of land to pay debts directed the trustees appointed therefor to give at least three weeks' previous notice of the sale by advertisement in the newspapers printed in a certain place, "and such other notice as they should think proper." The trustees offered the land for sale by advertisement in various places besides the one specified, but failed to receive a bid. It was then offered a second time and sold, but no notice was given, except in the newspapers before mentioned. It was held that the notice was sufficient, and the sale valid. B. How Notice Given. Notice of the sale is usually given by publishing the same in one or more newspapers;[1] and, in some states, by posting copies of the notice in conspicuous places[2] in the neighborhood of the land.[3] Actual personal notice of the time of the sale to persons interested is not necessary.[4]

C. Duration of Publication. The length of time before the sale during which the notice must be published is regulated by statutes varying somewhat in the different jurisdictions,[5] or prescribed by the order of sale.[6] Publication for Circulation of paper.— That the paper in which the notice was published was not of general circulation in the county is ground for refusing to confirm the sale. Craig v. Fox, 16 Ohio 563. But it is not ground for vacation of a judicial sale that the newspaper containing the sale notice, although circulated to all the subscribers, failed to reach publishers of other papers to whom it was sent in exchange. Posting not in compliance with directions. — Where the commissioner was directed to advertise the sale of land at the court-house door and two other places in the county of Henderson, and he posted notices at the court-house door and at two other places in the city of Henderson, which was in the county of Henderson, this was held not to be a compliance with the spirit and meaning of the directions. Vanbussum v. Maloney, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 550.

Posting unnecessary where notice published in newspaper printed in county.— Parrat v. Neligh, 7 Nebr. 456.

The Illinois statute requiring notices of an execution sale to be posted (Rev. St. c. 77, § 14) does not apply to a sale under a decree in chancery by a master, but the court may prescribe notice without complying with such condition, provided the notice is reasonable. Springer v. Law, 185 Ill. 542, 57 N. E. 435, 76 Am. St. Rep. 57; Crosby v. Kiest, 135 Ill. 458, 26 N. E. 589.

3. Wilson v. Ford, 190 Ill. 614, 60 N. E. 876, holding that where the order directing a sale of land required notices of the sale to be posted in five public places in the neighborhood of the land, and one of the notices was posted at the court-house, eighteen miles from the land, and the others were posted in post-offices from five to twenty miles away from the land, but there was a village and post-office within a mile and a half of the land, and no notice was posted there, and witnesses living near the land testified that they had never seen any notices, although they were looking for them, the posting of the notices did not comply with the order, and the sale must be set aside.

4. Crumpton v. Baldwin, 42 Ill. 165, where a decree of foreclosure was obtained by the assignee of a mortgage and the master in chancery agreed to give the assignor, the original mortgagee, actual personal notice of the day of sale, but failed to do so, in consequence of which the land sold for less than the debt, and it was held that this furnished no ground for setting aside the sale.

5. See Cuyler v. Tate, 67 Nebr. 317, 93 N. W. 675, thirty days.

Issuance of paper in advance of usual time. — Where notice of the time and place of sale is advertised for thirty days before the day of sale in a weekly newspaper, it is no objection that the first number containing the notice was printed and published in advance of the day of the week on which the publication was usually made. Wilson v. Scott, 29 Ohio St. 636.

Notice of resale.— La. Civ. Code, § 2584, provides that in all cases of judicial sales, if the purchaser does not pay the price at the time required, the seller may at the end of ten days after the customary notice again expose the property for sale. It was held that the ten days refer exclusively to the duration of the advertisement, and not to the period at which it is commenced; and hence the fact that the advertisement of resale was published more than ten days cannot affect the sale. Duncan v. Armant, 3 La. Ann. 84, holding also that the second sale need not be advertised more than ten days, provided the customary notice is given within that time.

the full time required is requisite to the validity of the sale,[7] and if it be not made for such time the sale will be set aside;[8] but where the required time intervenes between the date of the first publication and the date of sale, the notice is sufficient.[9] It has been held that a requirement that notice should be published weekly for a certain number of weeks before the sale means that seven times that number of days must elapse between the first publication and the day of sale;[10] but there is also authority for the view that such a requirement is satisfied by making the specific number of publications at weekly intervals before the sale.[11] Where notice is required for a certain number of days Sundays and holidays are to be counted.[12]

D. Number of Insertions. Unless expressly required, daily insertions of the notice are not necessary, but a publication thereof once a week for the required time is held sufficient.[13] Where the statute requires notice for at least a specific number of days before the sale a single notice published that length of time before the sale is not sufficient, but the notice must be published in each successive issue of the paper up to the day of sale.[14] Under a requirement of a notice to be published "at least once a week" for several successive weeks not more than seven days should elapse between any two successive publications.[15]

E. Contents of Notice. The notice, being designed for the information of the general public, should describe the property in a reasonably accurate manner,[16]

Discretion of court.— The court may require a longer notice (Reynolds v. Wilson, 15 Ill. 394, 60 Am. Dec. 753) but not a shorter one (Havens v. Sherman, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 636) than is prescribed by statute. And giving a longer notice than is required does not invalidate the sale. Taylor v. Reid, 103 Ill. 349; Tooke v. Newman, 75 Ill. 215.

The court may allow counsel to designate the time of notice, without limiting it, taking care that it be reasonable and fair. Guise v. Middleton, Sm. & M. Ch. (Miss.) 89.

giving the boundaries,[17] and should state any important facts with reference to rights or easements appurtenant to the property[18] or improvements thereon[19] which may affect its value. But it would appear that an omission to designate an easement to which the property is subject, the existence of which is ascertainable by recourse to the public records and by actual measurement, will not avoid the sale.[20] A notice which certainly identifies the property to be sold is not vitiated by deficiencies[21] or even inaccuracies[22] in the description where these are not of a character to mislead any one.[23] The notice should state the time and place of the sale,[24] and, although it has been held not necessary,[25] it is the better and more usual practice to state the terms of sale in the notice.[26] The amount of the debt for which the land is to be sold should also be stated.[27] It has been said to be sufficient to insert the short style of the cause.[28]

G. Effect of Failure to Give Proper Notice. The fact that proper notice of a judicial sale has not been given is always a sufficient ground for refusing to confirm or setting aside the sale;[30] but according to the weight of authority it is a mere irregularity which renders the sale voidable only and not void.[31] By appointing an appraiser, the debtor cures any defect in the advertisement of a judicial sale.[32]

XI. CONDUCT OF SALE.

A. In General. Directions as to the conduct of a judicial sale are given by general statutes covering the subject,[33] or by the order or decree of sale in the particular case,[34] and the sale must be conducted according to such directions.[35] It notice of an adjournment is required only in case the adjournment is for a period exceeding one week. Hewitt v. Montclair R. Co., 25 N. J. Eq. 392. See also Allen v. Cole, 9 N. J. Eq. 286, 59 Am. Dec. 416.

In New Jersey, Act Feb. 16, 1891 (Pub. Laws 24), provides that judicial sales of land shall be confirmed notwithstanding irregularity in the publication of the notice of sale, when the officer making the sale certifies under oath that the sale was otherwise regular, and for a fair price, and the court is satisfied that the interests of the parties were not injuriously affected by the irregularity. This act is not a mere validating act relating to past sales only, but relates to future sales. It was not repealed by Act June 14, 1898 (Pub. Laws 535). Polhemus v. Priscilla, (N. J. Ch. 1903) 54 Atl. 141.

Error must be material.— Error in a notice of a judicial sale, to be fatal, must be one in a material particular, and of a character to produce injury. Dana v. Farrington, 4 Minn. 433. Unimportant and harmless variations from the directions of the decree are not ground for setting aside the sale as against innocent purchasers, where the precautions ordered to safeguard the interests of the parties have been taken, or where their omission has been immaterial. is not, however, enough that the officer make even a literal compliance with the terms of the decree or the statute governing judicial sales, but he must conduct the sale in a manner fair and just to all, and especially to the debtor.[36] The sale must also be conducted in accordance with the announcements contained in the notice of sale.[37] In matters not regulated by statute or the decree, the sale is in general under the control of the officer conducting it, and he has considerable discretion in the actual conduct of the sale, which he must, however, exercise with a due regard to the rights of the parties.[38] The officer who makes a judicial sale of personalty which is mixed with other personalty of the same kind must separate what he sells from the mass, or the title will not pass.[39]

B. Public or Private Sale. A judicial sale is generally required to be made at public auction,[40] unless the officer is expressly authorized to dispose of the property at private sale.[41] When a public sale is required, a private sale is at least voidable, and according to some authorities void.[42]

C. Time of Sale — 1. In General. The time of sale is sometimes fixed by statute[43] or by the decree,[44] in which case such directions must be complied with;[45] but it is also frequently left to the discretion of the officer selling.[46] It is not

That the order of court did not require a public sale is immaterial, where the statute requires the sale to be public. Hutchinson v. Cassidy, 46 Mo. 431.

In Maryland it is held that, although a trustee appointed to sell property is directed by the decree to make a public sale, yet if he makes an effort to do so but a public sale on the terms prescribed is impossible, and if satisfactory reasons for a private sale exist, as that a better price than that offered at public sale is obtained, and no objection sufficient to outweigh the reasons for deviating from the terms of the decree are made, he may sell at private sale, and his conduct will not be considered a substantial deviation from the decree, but only one offered from necessity. But he must first make an effort to sell in accordance with the decree. Cunningham v. Schley, 6 Gill (Md.) 207; Gibbs v. Cunningham, 1 Md. Improper direction.— It is not proper to direct that the sale shall be made "on some day fixed by law for judicial sales," where there are no such days fixed by law. But perhaps this may not be fatal to the decree. McClaskey v. O'Brien, 16 W. Va. 791.

A sale before the time fixed by the decree may be allowed under special circumstances. See Porte v. Irwin, 8 Ont. Pr. 40.

46. Myers v. James, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 370, holding that the fixing of the day of sale is so much a matter within the discretion of the necessary that the sale should be on a court day,[47] but it may be made in vacation.[48] A sale on election day is not void,[49] but may be set aside if otherwise oppressive.[50] The sale may be made after the time limited for the return.[51] If the sale is one that can be made in parcels, different parcels may be sold from time to time until all are sold.[52] A sale should not be made while it remains uncertain whether it will be necessary.[53] A second sale will not be permitted within the time allowed for redemption from a previous sale.[54]

2. Adjournment or Postponement. The officer appointed to sell has discretionary power, subject to the control of the court, and it is his duty to adjourn a sale whenever a reasonably advantageous price cannot be had and an adjournment is necessary to prevent a sacrifice of the property;[55] and where the interests of the parties require it the court will postpone the sale.[56]

D. Place of Sale. The statutes sometimes contain a general provision as to the place where judicial sales shall be held,[57] and in the absence of some such provision sale should be made at the place designated in the order or decree of sale.[58] But if the sale is actually had at a proper place, it is not invalid because the decree did not designate the place of sale.[59] The sale should of course be held at the place specified in the notices of sale.[60] The most usual places of sale are at officer that his discretion can only be controlled in a clear case of its abuse.

Waiver of objections to day set.— Where property is offered for sale under a decree on a Saturday, the Sabbath of a party interested, who is thereby prevented from making arrangements to purchase the same, and he knew of the day fixed for several weeks before the sale took place, it was his duty to have applied to the trustee to change the day. Omitting to do this his failure must be regarded as a waiver of all objection to the day of sale as being his Sabbath, and he must abide the consequences of his omission. E. Sale in Gross or in Parcels. Whether land sold at judicial sale shall be offered in gross or in parcels is a matter regulated by statute in some states,[64] and in cases not provided for by mandatory statute the court has power to direct how the sale shall be made,[65] and may order that the property be sold either as a whole,[66] or in parcels.[67] It is sometimes even left to the discretion of the officer making the sale whether he will sell in gross or in parcels.[68] The most usual method, however, where the property to be sold is susceptible of division[69] is to offer it in Personal property.— There is no rule which requires that at judicial sales each article of personal property should in all cases be sold separately. The general rule is that unless the value of the articles, or a considerable part of it, consists in their constituting one establishment, and where there would naturally be purchasers to bid on them separately, they should be sold separately; but where their value, as constituting a whole establishment, is greater than if separated, and the articles when separated would not excite competition, they should be sold as a whole. Mays v. Carman, 66 S. W. 1019, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2216. In the absence of evidence it will not be inferred that land de-parcels,[70] for the reason that it is to be supposed that the highest price will be realized by selling in this manner,[71] and, when the property is sold to pay debts, for the further reason that offering the land in this manner makes it possible to sell no more than is necessary for this purpose.[72] But if a sale as a whole would be more advantageous it may properly be so made.[73] The property is sometimes offered first in parcels and then as a whole, and the highest offer obtained accepted,[74] and when the property is offered in parcels but no bidders are found it may properly be offered en masse.[75] The sale must in this as in other respects be in accordance with the advertisement or notice thereof.[76] The mere fact that property at public sale is sold in gross is not per se sufficient to avoid the sale. There must be some attendant fraud, unfair dealing, or abuse of confidence, in order to obtain the aid of a court of equity to divest title so acquired.[77] The purchaser at a judicial sale of real property cannot raise the question that two lots were sold together as a defense to a motion to compel him to take title.[78]

F. Order of Selling. If the original debtor has conveyed part of his land, the several parts should be sold in the inverse order of alienation,[79] but it is too late after confirmation to raise the objection that the land was not sold in such order.[80] Where a particular order for selling is indicated in a decree for the sale of land, a departure from such order by the commissioner, not excepted to before confirmation, will not render such sale invalid as to bona fide purchasers, in the absence of fraud.[81]

G. Withdrawal of Property From Sale. It has been held that the officer or commissioner conducting the sale has the discretionary right, subject to the control of the court, to withdraw property temporarily from sale after it has been offered and even after a bid has been received and cried, where he sees that to proceed with the sale would result in a sacrifice of the property.[82] But in Canada a solicitor having the conduct of a sale cannot withdraw the property after a bid has been made.[83]

H. Terms and Conditions of Sale. In some states the terms of a judicial sale are fixed by statute either absolutely[84] or by fixing certain limits within which the court may exercise its discretion,[85] and when this is the case the sale must be on the terms so provided.[86] In the absence of statutory direction the terms of sale are entirely within the discretion of the court.[87] The sale should be on the terms prescribed in the decree,[88] although it has been held that a slight departure therefrom will not necessarily invalidate the sale if no injury has by an order directing the purchaser to complete the sale.

The terms cannot be changed by agreement of parties or counsel unless incorporated into resulted therefrom.[89] So far as the officer's action is not controlled by the decree, he has considerable discretion as to the terms to be imposed.[90] The terms and conditions announced at the sale are binding upon the purchaser,[91] and he is chargeable with notice of the terms embraced in the order of sale.[92] Usually a credit for a certain time is allowed.[93] In Canada it has been held that where the title or the proof of it is involved in no difficulty, a condition of sale that "the vendor is not to be bound to give any evidence of title or any title-deeds or copies thereof, other than such as are in his possession, or procure any abstract," was very objectionable, and should not be sanctioned by masters even by consent.[94]

I. Bidding — 1. In General. The rule that a bid at an auction sale is merely an offer that may be withdrawn at any time before it is accepted by striking off the property to the bidder[95] applies to judicial sales.[96] Neither does the bidder acquire any rights by his bid until it is accepted.[97] A bid may be made by an agent[98] or sent in by letter.[99] Ordinarily a bidder may not put in an upset bid.[1] A bid not in conformity with the requirements of the decree or the law need not be entertained.[2] To prevent a person from baffling the court by becoming the highest bidder at a sale under a decree when he is wholly unable to comply with his contract, the court may direct that the bid of such person shall not be received, and that the trustee report the two highest bidders, so that, in case the highest bidder fails to comply with the terms of sale, the next highest bidder shall be received and considered as the purchaser.[3] Where the commissioner refused to accept the bid of the debtor, but subsequently the chancellor granted him the privilege of giving bond, and taking the property at his bid, which he failed to do, exceptions to the commissioner's report were properly overruled, as the debtor had the full benefit of his offer.[4]

2. Puffing. The employment of puffers to enhance the bids is a fraud on honest bidders, and a genuine buyer who has been injuriously affected thereby will be relieved from his purchase.[5] But it has been held that the fact of a puffer having bid at a sale will not avoid the sale if after the bid by the puffer there is a bona fide bid before the bid at which the property is knocked down.[6]

3. Mistakes and Devices Preventing Attendance or Bidding at Sale. Any agreement, the object and effect of which is to chill the sale and stifle competition, is illegal, and no party to the agreement can derive a benefit from the sale,[7] for the law does not tolerate any influence likely to prevent competition at judicial sales.[8] The same rule applies when bidders are kept from attending or bidding by misinformation purposely or mistakenly given.[9] A sale tainted with such fraud will be set aside, even after confirmation and delivery of the deed to the purchaser.[10] An agreement between two or more to purchase

4. Withdrawal of Bids. Who May Purchase.[13] No person can become a purchaser at a judicial sale who has a duty to perform in reference thereto which is inconsistent with the character of purchaser,[14] or who is so connected with the sale that his individual interest as a purchaser might be inconsistent with his duty.[15] Thus the person who sells at a judicial sale may not become the purchaser,[16] either directly[17] or indirectly.[18] Neither can the judge who ordered the sale become the purchaser or be interested as a purchaser;[19] and under some statutes an appraiser of the property sold is prohibited from becoming the purchaser.[20] However, a purchase by a prohibited person renders the sale not void, but voidable only.[21] In the United States either party to the suit may become the purchaser,[22] and if a judicial sale of corporate property occurs in the course of litigation between stock-holders, they stand in no such fiduciary relation to the property as to prevent them from becoming purchasers either for themselves or for others.[23] But an attorney who becomes a purchaser at a judicial sale made for the benefit of his client is not a bona fide purchaser without notice.[24] In England and Canada neither a party to the suit[25] nor his solicitor[26] can become the purchaser unless he has previously obtained leave of court to bid.[27]

2. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PURCHASERS. A purchaser at a judicial sale becomes from the time of his purchase in effect a party to the action so far as to be subject to the jurisdiction of the court[28] and entitled to notice in subsequent proceedings relative to the sale.[29] A bidder becomes a purchaser when the officer announces the sale to him,[30] but his title is only an inchoate one. The bid is no more than an offer to buy, subject to being accepted or rejected by the court, and the purchaser's title is not complete until the sale is confirmed.[31]

3. ASSIGNMENT BY PURCHASER. A bidder to whom the property has been struck off at a judicial sale may assign his bid before the deed has been delivered, and the deed will be made directly to the assignee and pass the title to him.[32] But the assignor does not escape any of the obligations of an accepted bidder,[33] and the assignee takes the same interest that his assignor had and stands in his shoes and is subject to whatever may be ordered against the original bidder and to whatever defenses may be interposed against the latter.[34] court may refuse to confirm the sale until satisfactory security is given,[36] or may set the sale aside on exceptions.[37] It has been held that an officer selling property at judicial sale need not take security unless required to do so by statute or the decree.[38]

XII. REPORT OF SALE.

A. Necessity. A commissioner appointed by decree of court to make a sale of property is required to make a report of his proceedings under the decree by which he is appointed to the court from which he derives his authority, as a basis for the further action of the court.[39]

B. Contents. The report should show a compliance with all the requirements of law and of the decree with respect to the matters preliminary to the sale and the conduct of the sale itself, and fully inform the court as to what has been done. Thus it must show that notice of the sale was given,[40] the price received,[41] how much and what land was sold,[42] whether separate tracts were sold together or not and what each tract brought;[43] and in a proper case that the officer offered to sell less than the whole tract to pay the debt.[44] But an immaterial mistake or irregularity in the form of the report or in a recital contained in it does not affect the validity of the sale, where the sale itself was properly conducted.[45] A return that property was sold at public auction implies that it was disposed of to the highest bidder.[46] Where the sale is reported by three commissioners and one of them makes and signs an addendum to their report, such addendum is no part of the report or of the record; and a vendee of the purchaser is not affected by anything in such addendum, although notified of the suit and the proceedings.[47]

C. How Far Conclusive. The report is not absolutely conclusive, but it is evidence, and in the absence of proof to the contrary, it is presumed that the statements of the report are true.[48]

D. Amendment and Correction. If the report is in any way imperfect the officer may be required to make a further report, and if, after he has made his report, he discovers any material error, omission, or ambiguity in the report, he may by leave of the court file an amended or supplemental report, and it is his duty to do so.[49]

XIII. CONFIRMATION.

A. In General. Confirmation is the formal expression of the judicial sanction of the sale and is therefore necessary for its completion. Before confirmation the sale is not in a technical and legal sense a sale. The accepted bidder is merely a preferred proposer, and to divest the former owner's title and render valid the deed to the purchaser the sale must be confirmed.[50] The sale must be confirmed without change of its terms or confirmation must be refused. The court has no power to modify the terms of the sale and confirm the sale as modified.[51] Jurisdiction to confirm a judicial sale resides in the court by which the sale was ordered.[52] An order confirming a commissioner's sale of land made by a person acting, by agreement of parties, as special judge, is utterly void.[53]

B. Loss Pending Confirmation. The risk of loss pending confirmation is upon the vendor. If the property is accidentally destroyed after the sale and before confirmation, the purchaser will not be compelled to complete.[54]

C. Considerations Governing Confirmation or Refusal to Confirm. Whether the sale should be confirmed is a matter within the sound equitable discretion of the court;[55] but it is a discretion that must be exercised reasonably and not arbitrarily, and if abused is subject to review on appeal.[56] The sale must appear to be in all essential respects fair and proper, or it will not be confirmed,[57] and the simple fact that confirmation would sacrifice the interests of those entitled to the protection of the court is sufficient ground for a refusal to confirm.[58] The court will not, however, be astute to find objections,[59] and if there is no evidence of unfairness, deception, or impropriety the sale is properly confirmed.[60] Even though there have been irregularities, if the court can give a good title and it is to the interest of the parties to confirm the sale, it will be confirmed, and the purchaser compelled to complete his purchase.[61] Mere lapse of time will not prevent confirmation.[62] It is not a matter of course to open the biddings upon an offer of a larger bid.[63]

D. Proceedings For Confirmation. Any interested party may move for confirmation,[64] and all parties interested are entitled to a hearing.[65] In the absence of regulation by rule of court or statute, it seems the better practice to give reasonable notice to the solicitors in the cause of a motion to confirm the sale, and upon proof of such notice to move for a decree nisi to be entered, to the effect that the sale will be confirmed unless cause be shown to the contrary within a stated time.[66] Confirmation may not be opposed by persons who are not parties to the proceedings under which the property was sold and who do not claim any interest in the proceeds of the sale,[67] but a judgment creditor has such an interest in the property that he may object to the confirmation of a sale of land against which his judgment is a lien.[68] Where the confirmation of a sale is opposed on the ground of there having been an unnecessary number of lots sold, the purchaser should be notified.[69] Confirmation may be postponed upon a petition making out a proper case and the proceedings suspended until the adjudication of the matters set up in the petition.[70] The general rule is that all objections of fact to the report of the officer must be supported by preponderating evidence sufficient to set aside the report.[71] On appeal from the order of confirmation, the appellate court will not consider objections to the confirmation that were not raised in the court below,[72] and if the evidence is conflicting the finding of the trial court will not be disturbed.[73] On affirmance of an order confirming a judicial sale, the appellate court may allow interest and damages for the detention of the property, payable out of the proceeds of the sale, without requiring the appellee to first proceed against the sureties on the appeal bond.[74]

E. Waiver of Objections. of jurisdiction or fraud.[79] As the contract is then complete,[80] the sale will not be set aside except for the same reasons for which equity would set aside a sale between individuals;[81] but relief will be given when such reasons do exist, as for example where there has been fraud or mutual mistake;[82] and confirmation does not validate a sale that is void from lack of jurisdiction or otherwise.[83] Some courts hold that confirmation will not validate acts of the officer for which he is given no authority by the decree,[84] while others have taken the view that confirmation makes valid any acts which the court might originally have empowered the officer to perform.[85] The report of a judicial sale and the decree confirming the sale are prima facie evidence that the land was actually sold.[86]

G. Ratification by Acquiescence. Acquiescence for a long time in the fact of the sale and treating it as valid may perfect the title of the purchaser.[87]

B. Grounds For Vacating[90] — 1. In General. The court has much discretion as to the sufficiency of the grounds for setting aside the sale.[91] It will not as a rule set aside the sale for mere informalities or irregularities,[92] slight, trivial, and immaterial defects in the proceedings,[93] or causes which the parties in interest might with a reasonable degree of diligence have avoided.[94] Neither is it a sufficient cause for vacating a judicial sale that only a few bidders were present.[95]

2. Defective Notice. A sale may be set aside because of defective advertisement, if the price realized was thereby lessened.[96]

3. Misconduct of Officer. Misconduct of the officer who sells, prejudicial to the interested parties, is ground for vacating the sale.[97]

Erroneous or Invalid Decree.[98] Where the court has jurisdiction to order the sale,[99] and the sale is regularly made in accordance with the decree and completed by confirmation and conveyance, it will not be set aside for errors in the decree or because of the invalidity and subsequent reversal of the decree.[1]

5. Inadequate Price. Inadequacy of the price obtained on the sale, standing alone, is not sufficient ground for setting aside a sale, unless the inadequacy is so great as in itself to raise a presumption of fraud, or to shock the conscience of the court;[2] but when in connection with the inadequacy of price there are other circumstances having a tendency to cause such inadequacy, or any apparent unfair-

is ground for vacating the sale (Speed v. Smith, 4 Md. Ch. 299; Howe's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. 267, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 574), but an honest statement by the commissioner of the condition of the title showing that litigation affecting the title was pending in another court was no objection to the sale (Fidelity Ins., etc., Co. v. Roanoke Iron Co., 84 Fed. 752).

even after it has been confirmed.[4] It is not a sufficient ground for setting aside a judicial sale that the purchaser did not communicate to the vendee facts affecting the value of the property known to the purchaser but unknown to the vendor;[5] but the sale should be set aside where the purchaser has made false representations in regard to matters known to him and enhancing the value of the property,[6] and the same is true where the purchaser by fraudulent statements made at the time of the sale prevented bidding and obtained the property at a very inadequate price.[7] When it is sought to vacate a sale on the ground of fraud the burden of proof rests upon the one alleging fraud and the proof must be clear and convincing.[8] Where, in an action to set aside a judicial sale on the ground of fraud, the validity of the sale was sustained, but the purchasers were required to account for the difference between the price they bid for the land and the enhanced price at which they had sold it, they were not liable for rent.[9] mistake must, however, be one caused by someone connected with the sale,[11] and the sale will not be set aside unless the mistake was an injurious one.[12] A mistake of law[13] or one due to the negligence of the party complaining[14] does not furnish sufficient ground for setting aside the sale.

8. Advance on Bid. Under the old English practice, after the sale and at any time before the sale was absolutely confirmed, the court would open the biddings, that is, allow a person to offer a larger price than the property was originally sold for, and upon such offer being made, and a proportionate deposit paid in, direct a resale of the property.[15] This practice has been substantially adopted in some states in this country;[16] but it has been widely condemned as making judicial sales unstable and tending to chill the bidding, and the American courts have generally refused to adopt it, and have held that there must be some further reason arising out of the circumstances of the sale sufficient to cause a refusal of Confirming sale at advanced bid.— A court of chancery, upon the master's reporting a subsequent written bid in advance of the highest at the sale, may decree that the advanced bid be confirmed, and that, if the bidder fails to comply with the terms, the land be resold, and be charged with the deficit thereon, if any. Allen v. East, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 308. See also Harrison v. Patterson, 1 Ch. Chamb. (U. C.) 363, holding that the court will in a proper case and upon conditions substitute a proposed purchaser at an increased price for a party who has purchased property at a sale under a decree, instead of opening the biddings generally and directing a resale, giving the present purchaser the option to take at the increased price.

The rule applies to sales of personalty as well as to sales of realty. Blackburn v. Selma R. Co., 3 Fed. 689.

D. Proceedings — 1. Motion to Vacate. Before confirmation a judicial sale may be vacated on motion made in the original cause;[22] and in some jurisdictions the same remedy is available even after confirmation and delivery of the deed.[23] The purchaser is entitled to notice of the motion to vacate.[24] It is not necessary on an application to vacate a sale to ask that the biddings be begun at an advance on the reported price.[25] A motion to vacate a judicial sale must be made seasonably, as if it is unreasonably delayed acquiescence in the sale will be presumed.[26]

2. Action to Vacate. After confirmation a judicial sale may be vacated by an original bill or action to vacate,[27] and by some courts this is held to be the only proper remedy.[28] An action to vacate a judicial sale is not barred by the refusal of the court to vacate it on motion.[29] The action must be brought within what is under the circumstances of the case a reasonable time;[30] and all parties to the original proceeding and all those who claim a present interest in the property

The power of the court to order a resale as against the purchaser springs from the general power of the court to enforce its decrees against parties. For the purchaser is regarded as a party, and the resale is a means of enforcing the decree. When the purchaser fails to pay a part or the whole of the purchase-price the resale is regarded as the enforcement of an equitable lien on the land for the amount due. See Dean v. Gritton, 15 S. W. 1061, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 99; Anderson v. Foulke, 2 Harr. & G. (Md.) 346; Clarkson v. Read, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 288.

B. Necessity For Order. No order of resale is necessary when there has not been a sale that the court could enforce, but the officer may proceed to sell on a new advertisement under the decree.[35] Thus where the sale has proved abortive for want of bidders, the property may be advertised and put up for sale again without further order;[36] or if the purchaser, at once upon the property being struck off to him, wrongfully refuses to comply with the terms of the sale, the officer may offer the property for sale again, without an order for the resale.[37]

C. Notice of Resale. It has been held that the defaulting purchaser is entitled to notice of the resale, especially if it is sought to hold him liable for a deficiency that may occur on the resale.[38] But it has also been asserted that the purchaser is not entitled to notice, because he has by his purchase become a party to the suit and continues in court for all purposes of the action.[39] A defendant who has appeared in the suit and who has an interest in the property is entitled to notice.[40]

If the same person purchases at the resale for a lower price he is nevertheless liable for the deficiency. Shirley v. Shewmaker, 63 S. W. 11, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 452.

The liability of the surety on a bond for the price of land sold under a decree of court cannot be enforced, on default of payment, by a rule to show cause why decree should not be entered for the difference between such price and the amount it brought under a subsequent sale, and a decree so entered is void. Anthony v. Kasey, 83 Va. 338, 5 S. E. 176, 5 Am. St. Rep. 277.

Setting off against amount due for improvements.— In a suit to set aside a deed to A as fraudulent, the land was ordered to be sold, but the decree directed that certain allowances be made to A for permanent improvements, the amount so allowed to be a first charge on the proceeds. A became the purchaser at the sale, but failed to complete his purchase and an order was made in the usual terms directing a resale and the payment of any deficiency by A's administrator. The lands having realized on resale less than the sum bid by A at the previous sale, an order was granted allowing the amount of the deficiency on resale to be set off pro tanto against the amount found due by the report for improvements. Ontario Bank v. Sirr, 6 Ont. Pr. 277.

When the court refuses to confirm the first sale without fault in the purchaser the resale cannot be made at the purchaser's risk. Randall v. Swann, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 313.

Relief of first purchaser.— Where a person allowed himself to be reported by the trustees appointed to make a sale under a decree as the highest bidder, but without any design to delay or baffle the proceedings, and afterward declared his inability to comply with the terms of the sale he was discharged, on payment of costs, from his liability in case be maintained against him to recover such amount.[44] The first sale must, however be reported to and accepted by the court, in order to make it binding upon the purchaser thereat so as to hold him for the deficiency on the resale;[45] and in West Virginia, in order to hold the purchaser liable for the deficiency he must be served with a rule, awarded after the sale is reported, to show cause why he should not complete his purchase, or, in default, the property be sold at his expense and risk.[46]

F. Rights and Remedies of First Purchaser. If the purchaser has actually made payments and the sale is subsequently set aside for causes not arising through the fault of the purchaser, the latter will be secured for the payments made by him by a return of the money paid from the proceeds of the resale;[47] but if the sale is set aside for the fault of the first purchaser, he is only entitled to have instalments paid by him allowed as credits and not refunded.[48] If he has in fact paid the purchase-price his remedy to prevent a resale is to ask for the confirmation of the original sale and not an injunction against a resale.[49] It has been both asserted[50] and denied[51] that if on a resale because of the default of the first purchaser a price greater than the amount bid by him is realized he is entitled to the excess.

Jurisdiction.— The district court has no jurisdiction in a suit against a purchaser at judicial sale for loss on resale of the property where the difference in price and the legal costs of the second sale is under one hundred dollars. Lelar v. Gault, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 78.

Defenses.— The invalidity of the second sale because of the misconduct of the officer is a defense to an action against the first purchaser for the deficiency. Clay v. Kagelmacher, 98 Ga. 149, 26 S. E. 493. But a purchaser of property at judicial sale, who fails to comply with the terms of sale, and is sued for the "deficiency of the proceeds of the second sale," cannot set up as a reason for his non-compliance that the property, a city lot, was sold by the front foot, and that he made a mental mistake as to what his bid would amount to. Alexander v. Herring, 54 Ga. 200.

Relief under Mansfield Dig. Where the terms were cash and the purchaser refused to pay, it seems that a formal confirmation was not necessary to make him liable for the deficiency on the resale; and certainly so when he was given an opportunity in open court to have the sale confirmed to him upon his complying with the terms of sale and he refused to do so. G. Costs on Resale. Where a purchaser at a judicial sale is relieved from the purchase on account of a mistake made by him, he should be charged with the costs of the resale.[52]

XVI. COMPLETION OF PURCHASE.

A. Transfer of Title in General. While it is often said that the sale is complete on confirmation, this is not true in a technical legal sense. After confirmation the purchaser has a right to have the sale to him carried out. He has an equitable title[53] and the right to have the legal title conveyed to him;[54] but he does not acquire the legal title until the deed is executed and delivered to him.[55] Under a decree which directs land to be sold for cash, the purchaser acquires no title until he pays the amount of his bid;[56] and a decree confirming a master's sale and declaring that title be vested in the purchaser "upon the payment of the purchase-money" vests no title in such purchaser until the purchase-money is paid.[57] When the sale is made on a credit, the court will see that the money is fairly paid to those entitled before the purchaser will be invested with the title.[58] In judicial sales of personal property the title passes by delivery and a bill of sale is not necessary,[59] and it has been held that the property vests in the purchaser without actual delivery, when he complies or offers to completed one, fully complied with by him, as would be the case where a purchaser paid the cash required down and executed notes for balance, failing to pay which a sale was had for purchase-money — a wholly different case, and standing on a wholly different equity."

Deed to other than purchaser.— The right to a deed may be had and enforced by one designated by the purchaser as the person to whom the deed should be made (Gibbs v. Davies, 168 Ill. 205, 48 N. E. 120; Williams v. Harrington, 33 N. C. 616, 53 Am. Dec. 421) or by a subpurchaser (Todd v. Flournoy, 56 Ala. 99, 28 Am. Rep. 758; Voorhees v. Jackson, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 449, 9 L. ed. 490), or, when the principal is insolvent, but not otherwise, by a surety who pays the purchase-money (Dawkins v. Dawkins, 93 N. C. 283). comply with the terms of sale, or pays the purchase-money ;[60] but the purchaser of personalty does not acquire title until he pays the price.[61] A statute requiring bills of sale of personalty to be recorded does not apply to a judicial sale.[62]

B. Deed.[63] The deed should be executed by the officer or person appointed to sell,[64] and defendant whose property is sold need not join therein.[65] An officer ordered to execute a deed to the purchaser of land sold under order of court is not required to look up the purchaser and tender a conveyance to him, but merely to deliver a deed to the purchaser on demand.[66] Where confirmation is required[67] a deed made without confirmation is a nullity and passes no title.[68] Where a person's land is sold under order of court during his lifetime, the deed may be executed after his death without reviving the suit against his heirs.[69] A deed purporting to be executed pursuant to a decree of court for the sale of the land and a decree pursuant to such sale that the grantor convey to the grantee is good, although no other consideration is expressed.[70] It has been held not necessary that the deed should recite the proceedings at length;[71] and that a mistake in reciting the order of sale will not vitiate the deed where other parts thereof furnish of themselves obvious means of correcting the error;[72] but where a conveyance by a special commissioner under a sale under a decree is offered in evidence to pass title, it must be accompanied by enough of the record of the cause to show that the parties holding title affected by the deed, and also the land itself, were before the court, and that it was sold under a decree, and the sale confirmed, by the court and the commissioner authorized to make the conveyance.[73] The fact that the date of a judicial sale as stated in the sheriff's deed varies from the date stated in the return indorsed upon the order of sale does not render the sale void;[74] nor will indefiniteness and discrepancies in the description of the land invalidate the deed if enough appears to show that the land sold and conveyed was comprehended in the description contained in the petition and order of sale.[75] But the deed conveys only what is described therein.[76] Errors in the deed may be corrected when intervening rights will not be prejudiced.[77] Objections to the form of the deed must be made when the deed is tendered.[78] The deed is evidence of the purchaser's title against all the world,[79] and recitals in the deed of facts supporting the validity of the decree and of other matters affecting the validity of the conveyance are sufficient prima facie to establish the same, jurisdiction of the subject-matter being presumed.[80] A master commissioner who sells land by order of court is not precluded by a recital of payment in full in his deed to the purchaser, and a statement in his report that he has collected the entire price, from showing otherwise, and from enforcing full payment from the purchaser.[81] Where the deed to purchasers at a judicial sale provides that such sale is "subject to certain certificates of indebtedness," such purchasers, and all persons claiming under them, are estopped by the deed from denying the lien of the certificates for the whole principal and interest due upon them.[82]

C. Payment — 1. When and How to Be Made. The manner of payment is generally regulated by the decree, and any directions of the decree in that regard are controlling.[83] When the sale is for cash, payment in cash on the day of the sale is necessary to entitle the purchaser to have the sale confirmed.[84] When the payment is to be in money it cannot be made in anything else,[85] although if a creditor

Requiring payment in specie.— A resale of premises sold by a master was decreed, provided a certain sum should be bid therefor; and in pursuance of the order the premises were put up at auction and struck off to the petitioner for the sum specified in the order, whereupon the master, for the first time, in compliance with the direction of a party interested in the sale, informed the petitioner that the purchase-money must be paid in specie; and although the petitioner offered to pay the amount of his bid in current bank-bills, or by a draft upon the bank in which the money was to be deposited by the master, the premises were again put up to sale on the terms of immediate payment in specie, and, no one being able to comply with those terms, the master declared the purchases he may make payment by applying the debt due himself in payment of his bid, so far as the purchase-money would inure to him.[86] A payment by the purchaser does not discharge him from his liability unless the court has by its order directed the collection and receipt of the funds, but if payment is made to one to whom the court might have ordered it to be paid, such payment may be afterward recognized and sanctioned.[87] When the officer selling is required to give a bond the purchaser need not pay until such bond is given, and if he does so and the officer loses or misappropriates the money the purchaser must bear the loss.[88] The failure of the adjudicatee at a judicial sale to pay the price gives the vendor the right to demand the rescission of the sale, although the property may have passed from the possession of the adjudicatee.[89]

2. How Enforced. The purchaser of property sold under order of court, by becoming such, voluntarily submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court,[90] and he may be compelled to comply with his bid by summary proceedings,[91] by sale closed, and reported that the condition of the resale had not been complied with. It was held that the conduct of the master was unjustifiable and oppressive; and his report was set aside, and he was ordered to convey to the petitioner on payment by him of the amount of his bid. Payment of enough to meet prior liens.— On a judicial sale of real estate of a succession, a judgment creditor of the heir becoming the purchaser must pay to the sheriff as much of the amount of adjudication as may be required to meet judicial mortgages registered previous to his own, if such mortgagees have, by third opposition, duly claimed preference. In default thereof the sheriff must immediately resell; otherwise he will be held responsible for consequent loss. Dobard v. Bayhi, 36 La. Ann. 134.

Showing sufficient to sustain suit.— Where a commissioner who made sale of land under decree brings suit, and avers in his bill that the sale has been confirmed, and that he has been appointed commissioner to col-bid and the same is not paid at maturity, an execution against the obligors may be issued upon the bond.[97]

D. Interest on Purchase-Price. Interest runs on deferred payments from the day of sale,[98] and also of course on unpaid bids on cash sales.[99] Failure of the purchaser to obtain possession does not affect his liability for interest.[1] In Canada it has been held that where no undue delay in investigating the title is attributed to either party, interest upon purchase-money is payable only from the date of the acceptance of the title, and not from the time named in the conditions of the sale;[2] and that interest on purchase-money runs from the date when, after the acceptance of the title, the purchaser could have safely taken possession,[3] and a difficulty respecting the conveyance may justify his not taking possession.[4] When the conditions of sale stipulate for the payment of interest from the day of sale the purchaser is liable for interest from the time of his purchase, although delay for which he was in no way responsible takes place in perfecting the title, such delay not being caused by any fault of the vendors.[5]

E. Abatement of Price For Deficiency in Amount of Property.[6] When by mistake resulting from the actions of the court or the misrepresentations of its agents less land is sold than was bid for and supposed to have been sold, the purchaser will be allowed a proportionate abatement of the purchase-price when the property was sold by the quantity,[7] but not when it was sold in gross as a specific lect the sale bonds, and exhibits with his bill a decree, which, although not in express terms, authorizes him to collect the sale bonds, the bill and decree will be treated as sufficient to sustain the suit. Blair v. Core, 29 W. Va. 477, 2 S. E. 326.

If, however, such interest is much more in amount than the rents and profits, and it is clearly made out that the delay in completing the contract was occasioned by the vendor, then the court gives the vendor no interest, but leaves him in possession of the interim rents and profits. Abatement not a matter of right.— The purchaser is only entitled to be relieved from the consequences of the mistake, and if justice requires it vacating the sale will be the only relief allowed him. So held, even after confirmation, where another was ready to tract.[8] So where the quantity of land to be sold is given as a stated amount "more or less" the qualification will cover any deficiency that is not so great as to indicate fraud, and no abatement will be allowed therefor.[9] If land is sold by metes and bounds under direction of court to a person who is shown the tract offered before the sale, and he is put in possession and enjoys without controversy all the land so shown to him, the title thereto being perfect, but it turns out that the boundaries set out in the deed include land not shown to the purchaser and never held or claimed by the vendor, the court may properly require the purchaser to pay the whole of the purchase-money without any abatement for the land which was not shown to him but which the boundaries specified in the deed include, and to which his title is worthless.[10]

F. Possession — 1. Right of Purchaser. Prior to confirmation of the sale the purchaser is not entitled to possession,[11] but he is entitled to possession from the time of confirmation of the sale,[12] even though there be in the decree no express direction for the delivery of possession to him.[13] The effect of redemption statutes is sometimes to allow defendant whose property is sold to remain in possession until the expiration of the redemption period.[14] The purchaser may recover compensation for being kept out of possession after he was entitled thereto.[15]

2. Proceedings to Enforce Right to Possession. So long as the court retains control over the subject-matter and the parties it has the power to place the pur-

Thus where the advertisement of a judicial sale stated that the property was in possession of a tenant, who would permit the purchaser to obtain possession on November 1, but the purchaser was prevented by the tenant from taking possession till the month of January following, and about the middle of November the purchaser obtained a vesting order, it was held that the purchaser was entitled to compensation from the vendor for being kept out of possession, and that he had not waived his right by taking a vesting order, the failure to give possession being a breach of the representation in the advertisement, a representation on account of which it was to be assumed that the purchase-money was greater than it would otherwise have been. chaser in possession of the property.[16] The appropriate remedy is an order directing the person in possession to deliver up possession, which, if it is disobeyed, will be enforced by a writ of assistance.[17] But the authority of the court to put the purchaser in possession by an order based on the petition of the purchaser is restricted to those cases in which the parties holding the possession are either parties to the proceedings or those who go into possession pendente lite claiming title under the parties to the bill or some of them.[18] Where, on motion for a writ of assistance, there is evidence of knowledge of a judicial sale of the land, and that the motion is resisted on the ground that the sale is void, it is unnecessary to show a deed under the sale and a demand for possession.[19] Where land is sold under order of the court, and the purchaser pays part of the price and goes into possession, but fails to pay the balance according to the terms of sale, and the land is sold to another, who has his purchase confirmed, the latter purchaser has the legal and the former the equitable title, giving equity jurisdiction to determine the ownership of the land on rule to show cause why the latter purchaser should not be put into possession.[20] It has been held that the purchaser may maintain forcible entry and detainer.[21]

H. Release of Purchaser[24] — 1. In General. In general it may be said that any cause that renders it unjust or unconscientious to insist upon the performance of the contract will excuse the purchaser from completing.[25] Thus if the purchaser before paying the purchase-price discovers defects rendering the proceedings void so that the title held by the parties to the suit will not be conveyed to him, he will be excused from completing the purchase, and may successfully resist an action for the purchase-price.[26] But defects or irregularities in the proceedings which do not affect the purchaser are no ground for objection by him to the sale.[27]

2. Defects in or Failure of Title. It is a well settled principle that the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to judicial sales. The purchaser obtains just

A mistake as to the quantity of land sold is no excuse to a purchaser from completing his purchase where there has been no fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment. But where there has been fraud or concealment, or anything beyond a mere mistake, on both sides, as to the quantity, the contract will not be enforced against a purchaser who has been deceived. So, where the decree and advertisement described the land as containing one hundred and ninety-eight acres and it in fact contained only twenty-seven and three-quarter acres, the purchaser was released from his bid. Pope v. Erdman, 17 S. W. 145, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 315. And where the decree described the land as "containing about twenty acres, be the same more or less" and it actually contained less than thirteen acres, the purchaser was not compelled to complete. Encumbrances.— Where the terms of a sale by a master were that the land was sold free from encumbrances, and that all taxes and assessments thereon should be paid out of the purchase-money, it was held that the purchaser could not be compelled to take the land subject to an assessment for a street, laid out and used by the public prior to the sale, although the assessment had not been formally confirmed until afterward, it appearing that the purchaser supposed such assessment included in the terms of sale, and a resale was ordered. the title that the debtor had;[28] and it has been held that in the absence of fraud, excusable mistake, or misrepresentations respecting the title which have misled him, he will not be relieved from his purchase because the title to the property has failed, where the proceedings would pass the title if the debtor had had it.[29] But there is also authority for the view that a bona fide purchaser is entitled to a marketable title free from reasonable doubt, on the theory that the purchaser bids on the assumption that there are no undisclosed defects, and that the consideration given and received is regulated in view of the implied condition, and if there is a defect in the title the purchaser may be relieved from his purchase,[30]

The surety on notes given for land bought at a judicial sale cannot maintain a suit in equity to avoid the sale, on the ground of a defect of title. Lillard v. Puckett, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 568.

In Canada on receiving an abstract of title the purchaser has seven days to object to the completeness of the abstract, and after any question of its completeness is disposed of, and the abstract made perfect in the sense of being complete, seven days to object to the title. If, however, he takes his objections to the title in the first instance, the master will not go into the question of the perfectness of the abstract, but will confine the purchaser to the objections he has made to the title. No objections other than those specifically taken will be entertained by the master. McManus v. Little, 3 Ch. Chamb. (U. C.) 263.

Acceptance of title.— Where, after a sale under decree of the court, an abstract had not been demanded, and no steps had been taken by the purchaser, or his representatives for twenty-three months after the confirmation of the report, a reference as to title was refused, and the purchaser held to have accepted the title. Ontario Bank v. Sirr, 6 Ont. Pr. 216. A slight encroachment on adjoining property or on the street will not entitle the purchaser to be released, where for many years there has been no interference with the enjoyment of the property. But a part of the purchase-price may be reserved for

be given;[32] and if fraud has been practised upon the purchaser, or if there has been a mutual mistake, not the result of the negligence of the purchaser, the doctrine of caveat emptor does not apply, and the purchaser will be relieved from his purchase.[33] But if the sale is expressly made of only the interest of the supposed owner, the purchaser has no ground of relief if he does not receive a perfect title,[34] and a purchaser will not be relieved on account of defects in the property or the title thereto, of which he had notice and in reference to which he made his bid,[35] although purchasing with knowledge of one or more defects in the title does not require the purchaser to accept a title with defects unknown to him at the time.[36] That one purchasing at partition sale is bound, as a party, by the proceedings, and the final judgment confirming the sale, does not bar his questioning the title as a purchaser.[37]

3. Defects or Deficiencies in Property Sold.[38] Where a commissioner of the court of equity, at his sale of personal property, gives notice that there is no warranty of the soundness of the property, the rule caveat emptor applies, and the purchaser will be bound to pay, although the property should prove unsound.[39] The purchaser of a lot having a certain front cannot claim that he was deceived because he subsequently discovers that one of the side lines runs obliquely so as to make the back line considerably shorter than the front, when such back line was stated in the advertisement to be a certain number of feet "more or less," the number stated being less than the measurement of the front line.[40] Where lots were sold by special agreement in lump, and it appeared that the numbers of the lots had been given in the advertisement to sell, although transposed, the Previous tax-sale.— The fact that land sold at a chancery sale has been previously sold at a tax-sale, and bought in by the state or city, does not entitle the purchaser at the chancery sale to be relieved from his purchase, if the state or city is not proceeding upon the sale, but is treating it merely as a means of securing the taxes. Kirk v. Jones, 8 Heisk. (Tenn.) 829.

Petition for relief.— Where a purchaser of land at a chancery sale has received a deed, a petition by him alleging that within the limits of the land conveyed, "as he is informed and believes," there is a certain number of acres in adverse possession of another and in litigation, but which does not allege that the title acquired by him is invalid, shows no ground for equitable relief. sale will not be set aside, although there were three or four lots less than advertised.[41]

4. Outstanding Liens.[42] It has been held that where the terms of sale do not provide that the property be sold subject to liens, a purchaser should be released from his bid, on discovery of a mortgage not discharged of record.[43] Where the terms of sale provide that existing encumbrances will be allowed to the purchaser out of the purchase-money on his producing vouchers therefor, the existence of encumbrances which he might have thus paid off is no reason for refusing to fulfil his purchase.[44]

5. Insolvency of Purchaser. In some cases the purchaser has been discharged on his becoming insolvent and unable to complete his purchase.[45]

XVII. Effect of Sale.

A. Title and Rights of Purchaser — 1. In General. The decree and deed convey all the title had by those who are parties to the suit,[46] and all the title of those who have derived their interest from any parties to the action during the pendency thereof.[47] The deed, however, can convey only the land and interests therein which are directed by the decree to be sold,[48] and which actually are sold.[49] Easements appurtenant to the property sold pass with it to the purchaser.[50] The purchaser of land at judicial sale obtains no right to the deeds constituting the chain of title to the land in the hands of the former owner,[51] or to certified copies of registered or other documents procured at the expense of the vendor.[52] After the purchaser has obtained title to the land and paid the purchase-price, he is not affected by subsequent proceedings in the cause in which the sale was ordered.[53]

Mortgage of interest of cotenant.— Where, after the commencement of proceedings in partition, one of the cotenants, who was a defendant, mortgaged his undivided interest, the lien of the mortgage was discharged by a sale of the premises under an order in the partition proceedings, notwithstanding the provision of the Pennsylvania act of March 23, 1867, that the lien of a first mortgage should not be destroyed "by any judicial or other sale whatever," for that statute referred to such a sale as would transfer the title to the special and particular estate mortgaged. Wright v. Vickers, 81 Pa. St. 122.

When junior lien not cut off.— Where a lien junior to that foreclosed was by the appraisers erroneously treated as a senior lien, and its amount deducted from the value of the property in making the appraisement, the purchaser bidding only two thirds of the appraised value after deducting such lien, and the holder of such junior lien not being a party to the suit, such purchaser cannot be heard, in a subsequent suit to foreclose such lien, to say that it was junior to that under which he bought. Hence the holder of what was the junior lien is entitled to foreclosure, and is not compelled to redeem. Nye, etc., Co. v. Fahrenholz, 49 Nebr. 276, 68 N. W. 498, 59 Am. St. Rep. 540.

Code, § 969, taxes accruing after the sale but before confirmation should be paid out of the proceeds).

The Ohio statute providing that when real estate is sold at judicial sale the court shall order the taxes and penalties and the interest thereon against such land to be discharged out of the proceeds of sale, relates only to such taxes and penalties as stand unsatisfied on the tax duplicate, and the proceeds cannot, without the consent of defendant, be applied the land is divested by the sale;[58] but in other states tax liens are not transferred from the property to the proceeds, and the sale has no effect to relieve the property sold therefrom.[59] The court may provide for the payment of outstanding liens out of the purchase-money,[60] but in such case the purchaser cannot insist upon a discharge of the encumbrances before the purchase is completed.[61] If the property is sold subject to liens and encumbrances, tax liens are of course not divested or transferred to the proceeds;[62] and it has been held that a sale of land

The amount of a street assessment confirmed between the date of a referee's auction sale and the delivery of his deed cannot be deducted from the purchase-price of the property under a provision of the terms of sale that "all taxes and assessments, duly confirmed and payable, which at the time of their sale are liens or incumbrances on said premises, will be allowed by the referee out of the purchase money," since the "sale" referred to means the auction sale. Ascertainment of amount due.— Real estate sold under decree of court in a proceeding to which the state or other tax creditor is not a party is not thereby exonerated in the hands of the purchaser from an existing lien for unpaid taxes due thereon unless there has been, as required by the Tennessee act of 1871, chapter 68, an ascertainment by proper reference of the amount of taxes due at the date of the sale and an order directing their payment out of the proceeds realized from such sale. State v. Hill, 87 Tenn. 638, 11 S. W. 610.

In Tennessee the purchaser may look to the owner for taxes due, but cannot abate the price agreed to be paid for the benefit of creditors by unpaid taxes; nor will the fact that the decree of sale was consented to make any difference. Staunton v. Harris, 9 Heisk. 579. See also Kirk v. Jones, 8 Heisk. 829.

60. See Yost v. Porter, 80 Va. 855, holding that the court will not decree the sale of land which is encumbered for the purchase-money due without providing for the discharge of such encumbrances.

Estoppel to deny lien.— One who buys land which is subject to a mortgage at a sale under an order directing it to be sold clear and discharged of all liens, but who nevertheless pays only the amount of his bid in excess of the mortgage and accepts a deed reciting that fact and that the conveyance is subject to the payment of the mortgage debt, is estopped from denying that he took title subject to the mortgage. under a decree will not divest the lien of a stranger upon the land, although the decree provides for the payment of his encumbrance, if the amount due is not actually paid.[63] Where the creditors at whose instance a judicial sale is obtained had no notice of a lien on the property, the purchaser at such sale will not be affected by such lien even though he had notice thereof.[64] Where a purchaser has paid taxes which should have been paid out of the proceeds of sale, he is entitled to have a corresponding abatement of the purchase-money,[65] or may recover the amount so paid from the former owner in assumpsit.[66] Even though a purchaser may hold the property subject to liens thereon, he is not personally liable for the amount of such liens.[67]

3. Effect of Misapplication of Proceeds. A purchaser at a judicial sale is not bound in any case to see to the application of the purchase-money. That is under the control of the court, and the title of the purchaser is not affected, however unwise or illegal may be the disposition of the money by the court,[68] or by the officer to whom the money is paid.[69] But the purchaser is not protected in paying to an officer who has no authority to receive payment, and if payment is made to such a one and the money is lost the purchaser will be bound to pay it again.[70]

4. Right to Rents and Profits.[71] When the sale is duly confirmed the purchaser is generally held entitled to the rents and profits from the time of the sale.[72] Rent reserved, but not accrued, under a lease, passes with a conveyance

Estoppel to dispute validity of taxes.— Where realty is sold under a judgment directing sale subject to all taxes and assessments which have become liens subsequent to a certain date, the purchaser in an action against the county to compel the determination of a claim to the realty for taxes becoming liens on the premises subsequently to such date is estopped from questioning their validity. Estoppel.— Land was sold under a decree in equity, and the trustee reported to the court that he sold the same "subject to the right of the tenant to cut and secure the growing crop." The sale, as reported, was of the premises, and a purchaser thereof at judicial sale becomes entitled to such rent.[73] Where rent has been paid in advance for a term which does not expire until after the completion of the purchase, the purchaser is entitled to a pro rata portion thereof.[74]

5. Effect of Invalidity of Decree.[75] A sale made under a decree wholly void by reason of jurisdictional defects confers no title on the purchaser;[76] but if the court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter the title of a bona fide purchaser is good notwithstanding there may have been errors or irregularities in the proceedings which render the decree invalid.[77]

6. Effect of Reversal or Vacation of Decree.[78] The reversal or vacation for ratified by the court. The purchasers and the tenant were parties to the proceedings for the sale of the land. The tenant cut and sold the crop of wheat which was growing at the time of the sale, and received the money therefor. B. Rights of Grantee of Purchaser. A bona fide grantee for value from a purchaser at a judicial sale is not affected by irregularities,[83] mistakes,[84] or fraud,[85] of which he did not have notice, although the sale was liable to be set aside as to his grantor; and on the other hand a bona fide purchaser at a judicial sale can transfer to his grantee the standing and all the rights of a bona fide purchaser, although such grantee has notice of fraud sufficient to avoid the sale.[86] The purchaser's grantee is chargeable with notice of all jurisdictional defects,[87] but his title is not defeated by a subsequent reversal or vacation of the judgment for error or irregularity.[88] The first purchaser at a judicial sale cannot repudiate the title he gives his grantee.[89] A sale by the purchaser at a judicial sale to another person, who assumes the payment of the balance of the purchase-price, is not a judicial sale, although it is confirmed and entry thereof made in the record of the case pending.[90] Where a commissioner appointed by the court sells personal property on credit and the purchasers afterward resell the property and leave the state without paying their bid, the purchasers' vendees are not subject to an order to either pay the bid of their vendors or surrender the property to the commissioner, because they were not parties to the original suit, but if the vendees have no title because the bidders had none, the commissioner's remedy is by action for a surrender of the property.[91] The vendee of a purchaser of land, sold under a decree directing that a lien be reserved for the payment of the purchase-money, cannot defeat the lien by pleading the statute of limitations.[92] Where a purchaser at a judicial sale conveys the land to another, who has notice that the purchase-money was unpaid, the lien on the land in favor of the original owners still subsists against the property in the hands of such vendee.[93] Persons acquiring title through the purchasers at a judicial sale of property subject to certain receiver's certificates previously issued have no interest in the trust fund represented by the certificates, and therefore cannot resist their payment on the ground that the receiver negotiated them collusively.[94] A purchaser with notice from one who bid off lands at a judicial sale, but failed to comply with his bid and received no deed, cannot hold them as against a subsequent purchaser thereof at a resale duly ordered in the original action.[95] Where a sheriff's deed was acknowledged before the purchase-money was paid but the deed was not delivered, and, the purchase-money not having been paid, the acknowledgment was set aside, but the purchaser in the meantime procured a loan from a building association, of which he was the solicitor, on the premises in question, and, as solicitor, passed upon the title, the building association was affected with knowledge of the transaction, and had no standing to move for a decree revoking the decree in which the confirmation was set aside.[96]

XVIII. REDEMPTION.[97]

There is no general right of redemption from judicial sales, but when such right exists it is by statute,[98] and the right extends only to cases coming within the statute,[99] is governed by the statute in force at the time of the sale,[1] and must be exercised in pursuance of the statute, otherwise it will be ineffective.[2] To entitle one to redeem from a judicial sale of realty, the right must be exercised within the time prescribed;[3] but a debtor may be allowed to complete the redemption after the expiration of the time allowed therefor, where he attempted in good faith to redeem it in due time, but by mistake deposited a few dollars less than the amount due.[4] A grantee by deed from the judgment debtor after foreclosure sale is a successor in interest, and is entitled to all the rights of redemption given by the statute to his grantor, to be exercised in the same manner.[5] The court cannot bar the right of redemption when it is given by statute.[6] Although a court of equity may decree that redemption may be made in certain cases,[7] the general rule in equity is that where all the parties are before the court and a sale is made pursuant to its decree, and by an officer appointed by it for the purpose, the right of redemption will not be allowed except by command of

In addition thereto it should appear in the decree in explicit terms that the chancellor in ordering the sale intended that no right of redemption should exist. Burrow v. Henson, 2 Sneed 658.

the statute.[8] An agreement by the purchaser on the sale that he will allow the owner to redeem, even though it be oral, will be enforced.[9] Where the purchaser of an entire tract of land at a judicial sale afterward assigns an undivided interest therein there can be no legal redemption of the undivided interest thus assigned.[10] An assignment of the certificate of purchase to one entitled to redeem does not constitute a redemption or prevent redemption by others entitled to redeem.[11] A tender of money to redeem before confirmation of the sale is premature and does not authorize a decree for the redemption of the property.[12] Redemption from a judicial sale may be made in paper currency issued by authority of the United States, whether legal tender or not, unless the officer whose duty it is to receive the money objects to receiving anything but legal tender.[13] A bill to redeem which does not allege that the complainant has paid or tendered the redemption money to any one authorized to receive it is demurrable.[14] Where a bill is filed to redeem real estate sold at a chancery sale on the ground of a tender of the redemption money and refusal, the bill should tender the money; and it should appear to the court, before any decree for redemption is made, that the money has been paid into court subject to the order of defendant.[15] A chancery court has no power to vest the title in a complainant who has filed his bill for the redemption of land from a chancery sale, on the ground of tender and refusal, and order the land to be sold, if the redemption money be not paid at a given time.[16] A sale of real estate barring the equity of redemption cannot be decreed when the bill contains no application to bar redemption.[17] The failure of the holder of a subsequent lien to redeem from a sale made on a second lien on land cuts off his right to redeem from a sale made on the first lien.[18] Where the purchaser of real estate at a judicial sale was the assignee of the judgment under which the sale was made, and bid the amount of the judgment, and added to his bid the amount of several judgments in his hands for collection, but paid no cash on his bid, a grantee of the judgment debtor who was not a party to the proceedings was permitted to redeem on payment of the amount of the judgment under which the property was sold.[19] When land is redeemed the purchaser is entitled to have the purchase-money refunded,[20] and may claim the value of improvements

Fraud.— The fact that a debtor whose land was being sold under decree induced other persons not to bid against C, who had agreed to buy the land and permit him to redeem, does not preclude him from enforcing the agreement against C, as the fraud upon creditors, if any, could only be considered by way of objection to the confirmation of the report of sale. put by him on the land with the consent of the owner of the equity of redemption,[21] so far as the value of the land has been permanently enhanced by the improvements,[22] subject to account for rents and profits.[23]

XIX. EQUITABLE RELIEF.

Where grounds exist which would authorize the interposition of a court of equity in case of a private sale, it is not a sufficient reason for withholding relief that the mistake occurred and the unconscious advantage was obtained by the purchaser at a judicial sale.[24]

XX. DEFECTIVE, VOID, AND VOIDABLE SALES.

A. In General. A judgment valid upon its face is prima facie sufficient to support a judicial sale made under it,[25] for the presumption is in favor of the validity of judicial sales;[26] it is the policy of the law to sustain them, regardless of slight and minute defects, and all intendments are made in their favor.[27] Where the court possesses jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties in proceedings for a judicial sale of property, its decree cannot be held void as to a purchaser at such sale.[28] Invalidity of a judicial sale may be cured by ratification.[29]

B. Rights of Defeated Purchaser. It is generally held that when the proceedings are invalid, so that the purchaser loses the land, title to which he would have had but for the defects in the proceedings, he is entitled to recover back the purchase-money paid by him,[30] and to be reimbursed for money expended by him

Lack of jurisdiction.— Where the purchaser of land at a sale under the order of the orphans' court, which had no jurisdiction to direct such sale, goes into possession, and so remains for two years, exercising ownership by cultivation, etc., he cannot rescind the contract of sale, unless the heirs are unable or unwilling to give a good title. for taxes and on repairs and improvements that have increased the value of the land.[31] By the prevailing view, when the purchase-money paid on a judicial sale, void because of defects in the proceedings, has been applied to the discharge of debts that were liens upon the property or payable out of an estate, a bona fide purchaser will be subrogated to the rights of creditors to the payment of whose claims the purchase-money was applied; and if he has obtained possession of the property he will be entitled to retain it until he has been reimbursed, or if the owner recovers a judgment at law for its possession the defeated purchaser may maintain a bill compelling the owner to make reimbursement before he will be allowed to take possession under his judgment.[32] Where commissioners assumed

Resale not enjoined because purchase-money not refunded.— Where a party, at whose instance a sale of real estate has been set aside, fully complies with the terms imposed by the court as conditions to setting aside the sale, it is error to enjoin a resale of the property under the judgment, merely because the officer to whom the purchaser paid the amount of his bid has made an unauthorized application of a portion of the money to the payment of taxes and costs, and refuses, for that reason, to pay to the purchaser the whole sum bid on demand. The purchaser at a void judicial sale who has taken possession of the premises is liable for the rents and profits received by him and for the rental value of the property during the time of his possession, but he will be allowed on the accounting for whatever sums may be due him in respect to the property.[34]

D. Rights of Former Owner. If the proceedings are wholly void so that no title passes to the purchaser, the owner may of course recover his property from whoever is in possession.[35] When the decree is reversed but title has already passed to the purchaser so that the former owner cannot recover his property, he may recover the purchase-money from the person to whom it has been paid,[36] and such recovery may be enforced by a rule[37] or an action for damages.[38] The original owner cannot object that the purchaser will receive an invalid title because of defects in the proceedings, as he is not interested unless the defects adversely affect the bidding.[39]

E. Collateral Attack. If the court decreeing a judicial sale was without power to entertain the proceedings, the proceedings are a nullity; no rights can be based upon them, and they are subject to collateral attack in any other proceeding.[40] So too if the sale is void for any reason it may be collaterally attacked.[41] If, however, the sale is not wholly void, but only voidable, it cannot be attacked collaterally. Where the court had jurisdiction, errors and irregularities in the proceedings leading up to the order of sale or in the sale can be made a ground of attack only by some direct proceeding, either before the same court or in an appellate court.[42] In the determination of the question whether the sale is open to collateral attack, the rule is that the record is conclusive of the truth of the matters therein contained,[43] and as to all matters within the jurisdiction of the court the truth of the record cannot be disputed collaterally.[44] In support of the sale, when collaterally examined, it is presumed, so far as is consistent with the record, that all steps necessary to the regularity of the proceedings were taken.[45] It has been said in a case of collateral attack that there are but two grounds on which a judicial sale can be held invalid, either a want of jurisdiction in the court ordering it or fraud practised in effecting it.[46]

XXI. PROCEEDS.

A. In General. The officer making the sale is usually authorized to collect the proceeds,[47] including deferred payments in case of a sale on credit,[48] and in such case he is the custodian of the fund from the time of collection until confirmation of the sale,[49] and upon confirmation it is his duty to pay over the proceeds to the persons entitled thereto.[50] It is sometimes directed that the proceeds

Motion to compel payment.— A special commissioner for the sale of lands gave bond to the state for the use of ten beneficiaries named therein, and the guardian of two of them made a motion upon notice in the court appointing the special commissioner, although not in the case then pending for the sale of the lands, for the share of money due to her wards from sales made by the commissioner, there having been no decree or order of the court ascertaining the amount of shares due said wards. It was held that be brought into court,[51] and in such case the officer making the sale cannot be allowed in any manner to dispose of the proceeds without the express sanction of the court.[52] A party may apply to the court in the first instance to correct an error by the master in paying over the proceeds of a sale by him.[53] An order of the court directing that the proceeds of property sold under a decree in one cause be held subject to the orders of the court in another cause is void.[54] Under a statute providing that in a suit in equity to enforce against real estate a judgment lien no decree for the distribution of the proceeds of such real estate shall be made until a notice to all persons holding liens on the real estate of the judgment debtor be posted and published under a decree of the court, the notice is not required before a sale is ordered, but it is sufficient if it is given before the distribution of the proceeds.[55]

B. Distribution. When property is sold for the payment of debts or liens the proceeds must of course be applied to the discharge thereof.[56] The surplus, after paying a lien under which real estate is sold, belongs in equity to the next subsequent lien in the order of priority of several liens thereon.[57] Where the judgment of sale does not settle finally the priority of liens, and particularly when no issue is made as to priority, the court may, in the distribution of the proceeds, disregard the judgment, in so far as it attempts to determine the question of priority.[58] When the property of a tutrix is sold at judicial sale, and adjudicated to the heir holding the ranking mortgage, the proceeds must be attributed thereto, and any other imputation, with the consent of the adjudicatee, will not bind a third possessor of another portion of the property mortgaged, who is proceeded against in an hypothecary action.[59] It is sometimes required that taxes due shall be first paid out of the proceeds.[60] A trustee in equity for the sale of property has the motion would not lie, although had the motion been for all the beneficiaries in the bond it would have been a proper remedy, or if the share due each beneficiary had been ascertained and decreed each one might have made his separate motion for his share of the proceeds of sales against the commissioner on his bond. no right to retain the share of the proceeds awarded to a distributee, for the payment of a simple contract debt due to him by the distributee, in the absence of a special assignment or assent to such appropriation.[61] Persons who are not parties to a suit, but who have claims against property which must be sold therein, may properly be permitted to come in at any time before the proceeds of such property have been distributed.[62] Where real estate has been sold under a judgment, and the surplus, after satisfying plaintiff's claim, has been paid into court, a person who claims to be entitled to a portion of the surplus may move, at the foot of the judgment, for the appointment of a referee to determine his interest.[63] In New York the rule as to the application of payments voluntarily made does not apply to money derived from a judicial sale of property securing several debts, but such payment, being made by operation of law, is to be applied, in the absence of directions in the security, pro rata upon the debts secured, without regard to priority of date, or to the fact that other securities are held for some of the debts.[64]

C. Investment. Where real estate is sold under order of the court for the benefit of the owners the decree must provide for investment of the fund in such way as the court may deem best for the protection of all persons who have or may have remote or contingent interests.[65] In case of a sale made after the passage of an act regulating the investment of the proceeds of such sales, but under a decree made before the passage, the act controls.[66] A special commissioner for the sale of lands cannot lend out funds in his hands without an order of the court directing him to do so.[67] Where land was sold by order of a court, and the price paid to the master commissioner, and one of the parties entitled to a share of the proceeds failing to call for his share, it was, by order of the court, lent to the purchaser, who gave the master commissioner his indorsed note as security, the master commissioner acquired no lien on the land.[68]

D. Liability of Officer. A trustee under a decree for the sale of property who fails to bring into court or to account for the proceeds of sale, or the bonds and notes taken by him to secure the payment of the purchase-money, may be charged with the whole amount of the proceeds according to his report of sale.[69] A rule against a master to show cause why he has not paid over the proceeds of property sold by him cannot be sustained where there was no order of court authorizing him to make the sale, as in such case the act was done in his individual capacity.[70] In North Carolina it seems that there is no way of holding a commissioner appointed to make a judicial sale pecuniarily responsible for the money collected by him, except by an action instituted by the parties entitled to such money.[71]

XXII. COMPENSATION OF OFFICER MAKING SALE.

In some jurisdictions the compensation of the officer making the sale is regulated by statute.[72] In North Carolina commissioners appointed to sell lands under an order of the court are not entitled to a commission on the sale, but they will be allowed what is, under all the circumstances, a reasonable compensation for services, time, and expenses.[73]

Russell v. Avritt, supra.

In Tennessee under Milliken & V. Code, § 5301, subs. 62, as amended by Acts (1893), c. 4, where a clerk and master sold land under a decree, and took notes for the price, but nothing was collected by him, and his successor obtained judgment on the notes, and sold the land to satisfy the same, for cash and without redemption, the commissions should be divided between the two clerks, the second sale being but supplementary to the first. McReynolds v. Rudolph, (Ch. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 891, holding that the outgoing clerk and master should receive ten per cent of the commissions, and his successor the remainder. A clerk and master who sells land under a decree is not entitled to any fee for making a report of sale. McReynolds v. Rudolph, supra.

In New York Code Civ. Proc. § 3297, providing that the fees of a referee appointed to sell real property are the same as those allowed to a sheriff, and that commissions shall not be allowed to him on the sum bid by the party and applied on the party's demand as fixed by the judgment without being paid to the referee so appointed, except to the amount of ten dollars, a referee is not entitled to more than ten dollars for commissions, where the sum bid was paid on the judgment without passing through the hands of the referee. Kant v. Bergman, 97 N. Y. App. Div. 118, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 593. Code Civ. Proc. § 3307, subd. 11, provides that a sheriff shall receive for posting and publishing notice of sale, selling, and conveying real estate in pursuance of a judgment the same fees as for the same services on a sale of real property by virtue of an execution; but where real property is sold under a judgment in an action to foreclose a mortgage the sheriff's entire compensation cannot exceed fifty dollars. Subd. 6 provides that for receiving an execution against property entered in his books searching for property, and postage on the return when made through the post-office, the sheriff shall receive fifty cents. Under these provisions a referee appointed to sell real estate is entitled only to the fees specified by subd. 11, which impliedly excludes a fee of fifty cents for receiving a judgment under subd. 6. Kant v. Bergman, 97 N. Y. App. Div. 118, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 593. The fees of a referee in New York city for selling real property are governed by N. Y. Laws (1890), c. 523, § 17, subd. 7. JUDICIAL SETTLEMENT. As applied to an account, a term which signifies a decree of a surrogate's court, whereby the account is made conclusive upon the parties to the special proceeding, either for all purposes, or for certain purposes specified in the statute.[1] (See, generally, EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.)

JUDICIAL SUBDIVISION. An organized county, or an organized county and such unorganized county or counties, or other territory or parts of the state, as are by law, attached to such organized county for judicial purposes.[2]

JUDICIAL TRIAL. A fair trial,[3] the purpose of which is to truly ascertain the material facts in issue.[4] (See, generally, JURIES; TRIAL.)

I. Definition.

A jury is a body of men who are sworn to declare the facts of a case as they are proven from the evidence placed before them.[1]

II. Classes and Constitution of Juries.[2]

A. Classes — 1. Petit or Traverse Jury. A petit or traverse jury is a jury

1. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in State v. Voorhies, 12 Wash. 53, 55, 40 Pac. 620].

Other definitions are: "A body of men summoned and sworn to decide upon the facts in issue at the trial." Hunnel v. State, 86 Ind. 431, 434 [citing Abbott L. Dict.].

"A body of twelve citizens, duly qualified to serve on juries, empanelled and sworn to try one or more issues of facts submitted to them, and to give a judgment respecting the same called a verdict." State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436, 446; Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 22, 28.

"A tribunal of twelve men, presided over by a court, and hearing the allegations, evidence, and arguments of the parties." Lamb v. Lane, 4 Ohio St. 167, 179.

2. Coroner's jury see Coroners, 9 Cyc. 987.

Grand jury see Grand Juries.

Jury of matrons see Criminal Law, 12 Cyc. 772.

Sheriff's jury: To determine claims of third persons in execution see Executions, 17 Cyc. 1209. To assess damages on writ of inquiry see Damages, 13 Cyc. 225.

who try the question in issue and pass finally upon the truth of the facts in dispute. The term "jury" is ordinarily applied to this body distinctively.[3]

2. Mixed Jury. A mixed jury is a jury composed partly of white men and partly of negroes,[4] or one consisting partly of citizens and partly of aliens.[5]

3. Foreign Jury. A foreign jury is one drawn from a county other than that in which issue is joined.[6] A foreign jury is properly granted where it appears that on account of local prejudice or other cause a fair and impartial jury cannot be obtained in the county where the action is pending,[7] and in some jurisdictions there are express statutory provisions to this effect.[8] In allowing such juries much must necessarily be left to the discretion of the trial judge.[9] An order for a foreign jury should not be made until an effort has been made to obtain an impartial jury from the regular venire,[10] and the application should be denied where it does not appear essential in order to secure a fair and impartial trial.[11]

4. Jury De Medietate Linguae. A jury de medietate linguae is one composed half of aliens and half of denizens.[12] In England this jury was first allowed by statute[13] in cases where one of the parties was a foreign merchant,[14] and by a later statute[15] in both civil and criminal cases where the party demanding it was an alien born;[16] but the right has now been abolished by statute.[17] In this country the right to such a jury has been recognized in a few cases,[18] and in one state at

3. Bouvier L. Dict.

A petit jury is otherwise defined as follows: "The ordinary jury of twelve men for the trial of a civil or criminal action. So called to distinguish it from the grand jury." Black L. Dict.

"A body of twelve men, who are sworn to try the facts of a case, as they are presented in the evidence placed before them." Cooley Const. Lim. 319 [quoted in Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 585, 593, 21 N. E. 563, 15 Am. St. Rep. 153].

A trial jury is "a body of twelve men, possessing the requisite qualifications, duly summoned, and sworn to well and truly try the questions of fact submitted to them by the court, and a true verdict render, according to the law and the evidence." People v. Hopt, 3 Utah 396, 401, 4 Pac. 250.

least by express statutory provision.[19] In others the right is not recognized,[20] and it is impliedly denied where foreigners are disqualified by statute from serving as jurors.[21] In Canada an alien cannot demand a jury de medietate linguae,[22] but both the French and English languages are officially recognized and defendant is entitled to a jury of at least one half of persons skilled in the language of the defense.[23]

6. Special or Struck Jury — a. Definition and Nature. A special jury is a jury ordered by the court, on the motion of either party, in cases of unusual importance or intricacy.[25] A struck jury is a special jury,[26] and is so called because constituted by striking out a number of names from a prepared list.[27] Special juries were familiar in the administration of justice from the earliest period of the common law,[28] and were originally introduced in trials where the causes were of too great nicety for the discussion of ordinary freeholders.[29]

special jury is a matter of absolute right if demanded,[33] but at common law[34] and under some of the statutes[35] the right is not absolute but is within the discretion of the court. In New York the statute provides for the granting of a struck jury in cases where it shall appear to the court that it is essential to a fair and impartial trial or that the importance or intricacy of the case requires such a jury.[36] A special jury is proper where an intelligent understanding of the facts involved necessitates having persons possessed of a particular skill or knowledge with respect to such matters,[37] but should be denied where no such facts are in dispute and the case turns upon a mere question of law,[38] or where no reason appears why the case could not be properly disposed of by a jury selected in the ordinary way.[39]

The right is absolute in all cases to which

B. Constitution of Juries — 1. In General. Trial by jury means something more than a trial by twelve men;[42] the term imports a trial by twelve men possessing the requisite qualifications for jury duty, impartial between the parties, living within the jurisdictional limits of the court, drawn and selected by impartial and disinterested officers, duly impaneled under the direction of a competent court and sworn to render an impartial verdict according to the law and the evidence;[43] and proceeding in their deliberations in the presence and under the superintendence of a judge empowered to instruct them on the law and to advise them on the facts, and except on acquittal of a criminal charge, to set aside their verdict if in his opinion it is against the law and the evidence.[44] But a party has no right to insist that persons of his particular religious faith shall be upon the jury,[45] nor has a negro any constitutional right to demand that the jury summoned to try him shall consist in part of persons of his own race,[46] his only right being that in the selection of the jury persons of his race shall not be discriminated against or excluded on that account.[47]

2. Number of Jurors. The term "jury" when used without any qualification, addition, or prefix imports a body of twelve men.[48] This was the meaning of the term at common law,[49] and constitutional provisions guaranteeing or preserving the right to trial by jury have uniformly been construed as contemplating a jury of this number.[50] In some jurisdictions the constitutions expressly provide that

A jury properly speaking is an appendage of a court, a tribunal auxiliary to the administration of justice in a court, implying a presiding law tribunal, the conjunction of the two being the peculiar and valuable feature of the jury trial; from which it follows that a mere commission, although composed of twelve men, cannot properly be regarded as a jury. "Trial by jury as heretofore used."—A constitutional provision preserving the right of trial by jury "as heretofore used" contemplates a common-law jury of twelve in all classes of cases tried by such a jury prior to the adoption of the constitution (People v. Kennedy, 2 Park. of the county or district,[58] it is held that the right is secured by provisions which merely guarantee in general terms the right to a jury trial.[59] The right, however, is one which may be waived,[60] and is waived where defendant himself applies for or consents to a change of venue.[61] Ordinarily the jury should also be selected from the whole body of the county or district and not from any particular part.[62]

III. RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY.

A. Origin and Development. Trial by jury is of ancient and somewhat doubtful origin,[63] it being as now practised the result of long process of development, during which the nature and functions of the jury have been materially changed;[64] although previously regarded as a right,[65] it was in England first

The reason of this rule at common law was that jurors selected from the immediate neighborhood were supposed to be more intimately acquainted with the merits of the case and better able to do justice between the parties. The chief object of these provisions is that the accused may have the benefit of his own good character and standing with his neighbors, if these he has preserved, and also of such knowledge as the jury may possess of the witnesses who give evidence before them. Olive v. State, 11 Nebr. 1, 7 N. W. 444. See also State v. Cutshall, 110 N. C. 538, 15 S. E. 261, 16 L. R. A. 130.

The term "district" in constitutional provisions guaranteeing a trial by a jury of the county or district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed means that portion of territory or division of the state over which a court at any particular sitting may exercise jurisdiction (Olive v. State, 11 Nebr. 1, 7 N. W. 444); but ordinarily it means no more than the term "county" and cannot be applied to the judicial circuits into which a state is divided (Weyrich v. People, 89 Ill. 90; Armstrong v. State, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 338).

In the district courts of the United States there is no right to a trial by a jury of the particular county of the district in which the offense is alleged to have been committed. Beery v. U. S., 2 Colo. 186; U. S. v. Mays, 1 Ida. 763; U. S. v. Chaires, 40 Fed. 820.

A jury need not be taken from the particular municipality where the offense is committed, although it is a statutory offense that can be committed only in a particular municipality, but may be selected from the whole county of which such municipality is a part. guaranteed as such by the Magna Charta.[66] It was introduced into this country by the English colonists who considered it a right under the English law,[67] and has, since the organization of our government, been incorporated in the form of express guaranties in all of the constitutions, both state and federal.[68] It is a right which has always been very highly esteemed and carefully guarded against infringement,[69] particularly in criminal cases.[70]

B. Constitutional Provisions[71] — 1. Terms of Provisions. The provisions of the various state constitutions are somewhat differently worded but may be divided into three classes as follows: In some it is merely provided that the right of trial by jury shall be inviolate;[72] in others that the right shall remain inviolate;[73] and in others that the right as heretofore used or enjoyed shall remain inviolate.[74]

2. Construction and Application. The provisions of the state constitutions, however worded, are uniformly construed as not conferring a right to a trial by jury in all classes of cases;[75] but merely as guaranteeing the continuance of the right unchanged as it existed either at common law or by statute in the particular state at the time of the adoption of the constitution.[76] In cases where the right existed prior to the constitution, it cannot be denied,[77] and this applies to cases of a similar character arising under statutes enacted subsequently to the adoption of the constitution.[78] There were, however, prior to the constitutions certain classes of cases which were triable without a jury;[79] and all cases previously triable without a jury may still be so tried;[80] and it is furthermore competent for the legislature to provide for a trial without a jury in cases similar to those in which such a trial was in use prior to the constitution.[81]

3. Application of Federal Constitution. The provisions of the federal constitution apply only to the federal courts,[82] and to common-law actions as distinguished from equity and admiralty.[83] The provisions do not prohibit the several states from regulating and restricting the right of trial by jury in the state courts as they may deem proper.[84] A trial by jury in a state court is not a privilege or immunity which the states are forbidden to abridge,[85] nor does the provision that a person cannot be deprived of his property without due process of law imply that all trials in state courts must be by a jury.[86] This requirement is met if the trial is had according to the settled course of judicial proceedings as regulated by the law of the state.[87]

C. Persons Entitled. The constitutional provisions guaranteeing the right of trial by jury do not extend the right to any class of persons not so entitled prior to the adoption of the constitutions,[88] nor do they confer upon municipal corporations the right to claim a jury trial;[89] but the legislature may extend the right to cases where it could not otherwise be claimed.[90] A person who is made a party by a petition of intervention has the same right to demand a jury trial as the original plaintiff or defendant.[91]

D. Right in Particular Courts — 1. In General. A trial by jury may be had in all courts of record proceeding according to the course of the common law;[92] but the constitutional provisions preserving the right of trial by jury do not affect those tribunals which at the time the provisions were adopted were accustomed to proceed without the intervention of a jury;[93] and a jury trial cannot be had unless by a jury of less than twelve in justices' and similar inferior courts,[94] except where a trial by a common-law jury in such courts is provided for by statute;[95] nor can a jury trial be had before a board of arbitration or other body not constituting a court within the constitutional and common-law sense of such a tribunal.[96]

2. Probate Courts.[97] A trial by jury cannot be had in a probate court unless expressly authorized by statute,[98] since such courts having always proceeded without the intervention of a jury are not within the application of the constitutional provisions relating to jury trial;[99] but in some jurisdictions the right to a jury trial has been conferred by statute.[1]

3. Military Tribunals.[2] It was not the intention of the constitutions to deprive the legislature of the power of constituting military tribunals for the trial of military offenses,[3] and a jury trial cannot be demanded in a trial by a court-martial for a military offense.[4]

4. Courts Within Application of Federal Constitution. The provisions of the federal constitution with regard to trial by jury have no application to trials or proceedings in the state courts, but relate only to proceedings in the courts of the United States,[5] which, however, include the courts of the District of Columbia[6] and of the territories.[7] The provisions do not apply to trials of American citizens before consular tribunals of the United States for offenses committed in a foreign country.[8] On the removal of cases from state to federal courts the parties have the same rights as to trial by jury as in cases brought originally in those courts.[9]

E. Right in Particular Actions or Proceedings[10] — 1. In Civil Actions Generally — a. b. Constitutional Provisions. In addition to the general constitutional provisions previously stated,[22] there are in some jurisdictions constitutional provisions providing for a jury trial in "all civil cases,"[23] or in "all cases at law without regard to the amount in controversy."[24] These provisions do not extend the right to all cases which are not criminal;[25] but merely guarantee the continuance of the right as it previously existed in what were regarded as civil actions and triable by jury at the time of the adoption of the constitution.[26]

c. Statutory Provisions. Since the constitutional guaranties relating to jury trial are merely restrictive,[27] the legislature may provide for a jury trial in cases where it could not otherwise be claimed as a constitutional right;[28] and in many jurisdictions there are statutes providing expressly in what actions or with regard to what issues a jury trial may be demanded as a matter of right.[29] In cases where the right to a jury trial is governed by statutory provision the right is determined by the law in force when the action is commenced, and is not affected by a subsequent change in the statute.[30]

d. Amount or Value in Controversy. The federal constitution provides for a trial by jury where the value in controversy is over twenty dollars,[31] but the provision applies only to actions at common law as distinguished from suits in equity and admiralty,[32] and has no application to actions in state courts.[33] There are also in a number of the states constitutional or statutory provisions regulating the right of trial by jury according to the amount in controversy, the amounts varying in the different jurisdictions.[34]

States plaintiff has no right to a trial by jury, such suits not being suits at common law within the provision of the federal constitution;[58] and this rule applies to the trial of any set-off or counter-claim which the government may set up in an action brought against it.[59]

2. Equitable Actions and Proceedings[60] — a. In General. In the absence of express constitutional or statutory provision there is no right to a jury trial in suits in equity.[61] It has always been the province of the court in equity to determine issues of fact as well as of law,[62] and while the court may submit questions of fact to the jury, this is purely a matter of discretion,[63] and the verdict in such cases is merely advisory.[64] The court may also without the intervention of a jury make such orders and decrees as may be necessary to carry its judgment into effect.[65] Even where the formal distinctions between law and equity have been

In Indiana the statute of 1881 expressly provides that in case of the joinder of actions which were formerly of exclusive equitable jurisdiction with causes of action which were formerly designated as actions at law and were triable by a jury, the former shall equitable one.[76] The rights of plaintiff and defendant with regard to a jury trial in such case are not, however, always the same,[77] for while it is held that plaintiff by voluntarily joining a legal with an equitable cause of action thereby waives the right to have either tried by a jury,[78] it is well settled that he cannot by such action deprive defendant of his right to have the purely legal issues in the case tried by a jury.[79] Where, however, in such a case, defendant's motion is to submit the entire case to a jury, a denial of the motion is not error.[80]

d. Interpleader and Intervention. An intervention merely adds new parties for the purpose of determining all conflicting claims to the matter in controversy and does not affect the nature of the action, so that plaintiff in an action at law is not deprived of his right to a jury trial by an intervention praying for equitable relief;[81] while on the other hand if the case is properly triable by jury a jury may be demanded by the intervener, although it has not been demanded by either of the original parties;[82] but on a bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader the proceeding is purely equitable and neither party is entitled to a jury as a matter of right,[83] and an action at law becomes by interpleader proceedings an equitable action in which neither party can demand a jury trial.[84] The court may, however, as in other equity cases, direct an issue to the jury.[85]

e. Accounting and Settlement. While courts of equity have jurisdiction of matters of account the jurisdiction is not exercised where there is an adequate remedy at law and the case presents no special ground of equitable jurisdiction.[86] The right to a jury trial in such cases depends upon whether the case is properly one of equitable cognizance.[87] The case is of equitable cognizance and triable without a jury where it involves the examination and settlement of mutual

f. Establishment and Foreclosure of Liens. Suits to enforce liens are of an equitable nature and are not of right triable by jury.[96] This rule applies to vendors' liens,[97] mechanics' liens,[98] attorneys' liens,[99] liens for taxes,[1] or assessments for public improvements,[2] and liens upon property held in pledge.[3]

g. Foreclosure of Mortgages. Suits to foreclose mortgages are equitable and are triable by the court without a jury.[4] Where suit is brought both to recover

In Vermont an action on a book-account was by statute triable without a jury prior to the adoption of the constitution and consequently there is no constitutional right to a jury trial in such cases. Hall v. Armstrong, 65 Vt. 421, 26 Atl. 592, 20 L. R. A. 366.

But if it appears from an inspection of the complaint that no lien existed or could exist at the time the suit was commenced, but that it is an action only to recover on contract, a jury trial may be demanded, although the action is in form to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Johnson v. Alexander, 23 N. Y. App. Div. 538, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 541.

In Iowa the code expressly provides that "the action for mechanic's lien shall be prosecuted by equitable proceedings," and there is no right to a jury trial in such actions. Frost v. Clark, 82 Iowa 298, 48 N. W. 82.

The New York Mechanic's Lien Law of 1885 providing that the procedure "shall be the same as in actions for the foreclosure of mortgages upon real property," there being no right to a jury trial in such actions, is not unconstitutional (Schillinger Fire-Proof Cement, etc., Co. v. Arnott, 152 N. Y. 584, 46 N. E. 956 [affirming 86 Hun 182, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 343]; Riggs v. Shannon, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 939, 21 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 434, 27 Abb. N. Cas. 456); and the further provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 3412, that, although the lienor fails to establish a valid lien, he may recover a personal judgment in the action for the amount due him is not unconstitutional, since defendant may preserve his right to a jury trial by a motion made at the proper time to have the issue settled for trial by jury or by trying the issue as to the validity of the lien with the understanding that if the lien be declared invalid an interlocutory judgment to that effect shall be entered and the issues upon which the personal judgment depends be sent to the trial term (Steuerwald v. Gill, 85 N. In Kentucky under the statute providing that "in an equitable action . . . either party may, by motion, have the case transferred to the ordinary docket for the trial of any issue concerning which he is entitled to a jury trial," if in an action to enforce an attorney's lien the alleged value of his services is denied the issue as to the value of the services must be first submitted to the jury. but in others a distinction is made between issues arising in such actions which are of a legal nature and those which are purely equitable,[23] it being held that as to the former a jury is a matter of right[24] but not as to the latter.[25]

m. Winding Up Insolvent Corporations and Receiverships.[26] Proceedings for winding up and settling the affairs of insolvent corporations belong to the jurisdiction of equity and there is no right to a jury trial in such proceedings,[27] and being of this nature it is no infringement of the right of trial by jury to order a compulsory reference.[28] So also where a receiver has been appointed the appointment draws into the jurisdiction of equity all litigation concerning the receivership, and the parties to actions by or against the receiver cannot claim a jury trial as a matter of right.[29] In the absence of statute the receiver cannot sue or be sued in any court without the consent of the court appointing him and this court may determine where and in what manner the action shall be brought;[30] but in an action by a receiver where the only relief sought is a money judgment and there are no equitable rights to be adjusted, defendant cannot object to a jury trial where the court so directs.[31]

n. Partition. Although the jurisdiction of equity is not exclusive,[32] partition has always been a subject of equity jurisdiction,[33] especially where the case involves the settlement of questions peculiarly cognizable in courts of equity,[34] and such suits are triable by the court without a jury,[35] unless otherwise provided by statute.[36] In some jurisdictions it is now held that the court may without the intervention of the jury try questions of title as well as other issues;[37] but under the chancery practice a bill for partition would not be entertained where the title to the property was doubtful or disputed;[38] and it is held in most jurisdictions that in actions for partition if the title to the property is disputed the question of title must be submitted to a jury,[39] but this rule is held not to apply to other questions such as advancements and allowances for improvements.[40]

Corporate acts and proceedings.— There is no right to a jury trial in a suit to enjoin an insolvent insurance company from doing business and to dissolve the company (Ward v. Farwell, 97 Ill. 593), or in a suit by stockholders of a corporation to enjoin its trustees from paying over money, voted to themselves (MacNaughton v. Osgood, 114 N. To enforce building regulations.— A statute is not unconstitutional which gives the court of equity power to enjoin the use and right is given by statute.[42] The court may also without the intervention of a jury punish the violation of an injunction as a contempt,[43] even where the act constituting the violation is also a criminal offense.[44]

(II) To Abate Nuisances. Courts of equity have jurisdiction to restrain by means of injunction the maintenance of a nuisance and such cases are triable without a jury.[45] It is also competent for the legislature to declare buildings used for certain illegal purposes to be nuisances and abatable in equity without a jury trial,[46] even where the maintenance of the nuisance is also a criminal offense,[47] and although defendant may thereby be deprived of the use of his property, such proceedings are due process at law.[48]

If the title to the land appears doubtful, and the doubt arises from questions of fact, an issue to a jury is the best method of ascertaining the truth of such facts. Seymour v. De Lancey, Hopk. (N. Y.) 436, 14 Am. Dec. 552.

are still triable by the court without a jury under the codes of procedure.[54] Where, however, specific performance cannot be decreed, the court cannot proceed to adjudicate upon the question of damages resulting from the breach of contract which is a strictly legal claim and triable by jury.[55]

q. Opening or Setting Aside Judgments or Decrees. A suit to set aside a judgment or decree on the ground of fraud or collusion is for equitable relief and is triable by the court without a jury;[56] but a proceeding to revive a dormant judgment is in the nature of a civil action, and where defendant pleads facts amounting to payment or satisfaction and issue is joined on such plea a jury trial may be demanded.[57]

r. Enforcement of Judgments or Awards. A jury trial may be claimed as a matter of right in an action upon a common-law award,[58] but not in proceedings to enforce performance of an award in a statutory arbitration.[59]

s. Property Rights of Married Women. A suit to subject the separate estate of a married woman to the payment of debts contracted by her is an equitable proceeding and triable by the court without a jury,[60] unless by statute a judgment may be entered and enforced against a married woman in the same manner as if she were single, in which case an action for the recovery of a money judgment is triable by jury;[61] and a married woman who is the owner of personal property of which by statute she has the full legal title and absolute control may sue at law for its conversion and the case is triable by jury.[62]

t. Assessment of Damages in Equity. The general rule is that damages as such will not be ascertained in equity.[63] If, however, a suit is properly instituted for equitable relief the court may, without the intervention of a jury, dispose of the entire case and assess such damages as are incidental to the equitable relief granted;[64] but the court cannot assess damages where the complaint states no

The New York statute of 1891, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 970, and providing for submitting issues to a jury "where one or more questions arise on the pleadings as to the value of property, or as to the damages which a party may be entitled to recover" does not apply to equitable actions where the damages are merely incidental to the granting of the equitable relief. Livingston v. Manhattan R. Co., 131 N. Y. 600, 30 N. E. 189; Shepard v. Manhattan R. Co., 131 N. Y. 215, 30 N. E. 187. Compare Eggers v. Manhattan R. Co., 18 N. Y. Suppl. 181, 21 N. Y. Civ. ground for a specific decree in equity,[65] where the equitable relief demanded cannot be granted,[66] or where, notwithstanding the complaint contains a prayer for some equitable relief, the case is primarily an action for the recovery of damages.[67]

3. Particular Pleas and Defenses — a. In General. The right to a jury trial is ordinarily determined by the cause of action stated and not by the defense interposed thereto.[68] Generally speaking, whenever in an action at law a defense is interposed which raises a disputed question of fact, a jury trial is a matter of right;[69] and conversely a jury trial may be denied wherever the answer raises only an issue of law,[70] or where it does not constitute any proper defense to the cause of action stated in the complaint.[71]

b. Equitable Defense to Legal Action. The interposition of an equitable defense to a legal cause of action does not convert the case into suit in equity so as to deprive plaintiff of his right to a jury trial,[72] nor does defendant by setting up an equitable defense lose his right to have any legal issues arising upon plaintiff's claim tried by jury.[73] This rule, however, applies only to mere matters of equitable defense,[74] for if the answer contains not merely a technical defense but an independent equitable cause of action constituting a cross demand in favor of defendant, the effect of which, if established, would extinguish plaintiff's cause

Although as to one defendant the suit is substantially one for damages, yet if as against the other defendants it was properly brought in equity, and the relation of this defendant to the subject-matter of the suit is such as to make him a proper party defendant, he cannot demand a jury trial. Examination of long account — compulsory reference.— If the cause of action disclosed by the complaint is triable by jury, the fact that the answer or counter-claim involves the examination of a long account does not make the entire case referable. of action, the issue taken thereon is triable by the court and not of right by a jury,[75] and this is so whether issue is taken on the averments of the complaint or not.[76] The issues arising on the cross demand should be determined by the court in the first instance, since if established they dispose of the entire controversy;[77] but if not established,[78] or if insufficient entirely to defeat plaintiff's cause of action,[79] the issues arising on the original complaint should be submitted to a jury if a jury trial is demanded.

c. Legal Defense to Equitable Action. The fact that defendant sets up a legal defense to an equitable cause of action does not change the character of the proceedings or entitle him to demand a jury trial.[80]

d. Plea of Nul Tiel Record. A plea of nul tiel record is triable only by an inspection of the record itself which is to be made by the court and there is no right to a jury trial,[81] except where the record of a foreign court is denied by this plea and the existence of the record to be inspected must first be established by

In New York it has been held that the issue arising upon a plea of nul tiel record is a question of fact triable by jury within the application of a statute providing that "all issues of fact joined in any court proceeding according to the course of common law shall be tried by a jury except where a reference shall be ordered." proof which it may be necessary to submit to a jury, in which case a jury trial of the issue may be demanded.[82]

e. Payment. In an action at law a plea of payment raises an issue of fact which is triable by jury,[83] but does not in an equitable action entitle defendant to demand a jury.[84]

f. Statute of Limitations. In an action at law a plea of the statute of limitations raises an issue triable by jury,[85] but it may be interposed in equity as well as in an action at law without changing the character of the action and does not entitle defendant to a jury trial.[86]

g. Fraud. While actual fraud is a question of fact, it does not follow that it must always be determined by jury.[87] Both courts of law and courts of equity have in proper cases jurisdiction of fraud,[88] and where the facts constituting the fraud and the relief sought are cognizable in a court of law, the parties are entitled to a jury trial;[89] but where the case made by the pleadings involves the application of the doctrines of equity and the granting of relief which can be obtained only in a court of equity, the parties are not entitled to a jury trial.[90] So where fraud is pleaded as a defense in an action at law the issue is triable by the jury,[91] and in a suit in equity by the court.[92]

h. Counter-Claim. In the absence of statute a defendant who pleads a counter-claim in an equitable action is not entitled to a jury trial of the issues arising thereon,[93] notwithstanding the cross demand constitutes an independent cause of action upon which a separate action might have been brought and a jury trial demanded.[94]

j. Plea in Bar to Indictment. Where defendant pleads a former conviction, acquittal, or pardon in bar to an indictment, a jury trial may be demanded.[97]

4. Civil Proceedings Other Than Actions[98] — a. In General. The right to trial by jury, unless extended by statute, applies only to actions according to the course of the common law and not to special proceedings of a summary character.[99] The right is also confined to proceedings in courts of justice and does not apply to proceedings taken by corporations for the removal of members for offenses against the corporation.[1] The legislature cannot, however, authorize a summary pro-

In New York, Code Civ. Proc. § 974, provides that where defendant interposes a counter-claim demanding an affirmative judgment against plaintiff, the issues of fact arising thereon are triable in the same manner as in an action by defendant against plaintiff for the cause of action stated in the counter-claim and demanding the same judgment (Herb v. Metropolitan Hospital, etc., 80 N. Y. App. Div. 145, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 552; Roslyn Heights Land, etc., Co. v. Burrowes, 76 Hun 62, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 622); but the provision applies only where the counter-claim sets up matter for which a separate action might have been maintained (City Real Estate Co. v. Foster, 44 N. Y. App. Div. 114, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 577. See also Cook v. Jenkins, 79 N. Y. 575); and where the claim is not for one of the causes of action specified in section 968, an application must, under section 970, be made for an order directing the issues to be stated for trial (Mackellar v. Rogers, 109 N. Y. 468, 17 N. E. 350 [affirming 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 468]); but if such application be properly made a jury trial cannot be denied (Deeves v. Metropolitan Realty Co., 6 Misc. 91, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 23 [affirmed in 141 N. Y. 587, 36 N. E. 739]); the right of defendant to a jury trial, however, is subject to the right of plaintiff to have the issues referred, if the trial would require the examination of a long account (Roslyn Heights Land, etc., Co. v. Burrowes, 22 N. Y. App. Div. 540, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 15); and also where defendant joins with his legal demand equitable defenses to defeat the equitable complaint, he waives the right to a jury trial (Guaranty Trust Co. v. Robinson, 31 Misc. 277, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 366).

Under a Kentucky statute where the equitable right depends upon the legal issues raised by defendant's counter-claim he is entitled as a matter of right on motion to have such legal issues transferred to the ordinary docket and tried by a jury. cedure in controversies properly triable by jury at common law or according to the practice of the particular jurisdiction prior to the adoption of the constitution.[2]

b. Quo Warranto. The authorities are conflicting as to whether there is any constitutional right to have issues of fact submitted to a jury in quo warranto proceedings or proceedings in the nature of quo warranto.[3] In some jurisdictions it is held that a jury trial in such cases is a constitutional right,[4] while in others it is held that the facts may be determined by the court without the intervention of a jury.[5] In others a distinction is made between proceedings to try title to a public office and proceedings affecting a charter, franchise, or other property right, it being held that a jury trial is a right in the latter but not in the former.[6] It is competent, however, for the court to refer questions of fact to a jury for determination.[7] Where jurisdiction of the proceeding is vested in the supreme court by the constitution of the state, it is held to be a constitutional recognition that the facts shall be determined by the court without the intervention of a jury.[8]

c. Mandamus.[9] At common law there was no right to a jury trial of issues of fact in mandamus proceedings;[10] but in England it was provided by the statute of Anne that an issue might be joined on the return to an alternative writ, which was triable by jury.[11] In this country it has been held in a few jurisdictions that a jury trial in such cases is a constitutional right,[12] but in most of the states the

Where the application is made in vacation if a jury is demanded the proceeding should either be dismissed or adjourned to a term right to a jury trial is denied.[13] There are, however, in some of the states statutes expressly providing for a jury trial,[14] or providing that the court may in its discretion submit issues of fact to a jury.[15]

d. Habeas Corpus. A petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus is not entitled to a jury to try issues of fact.[16]

f. Enforcement of Health Regulations. The control of questions relating to public health were ordinarily before the adoption of the constitutions vested in boards or officers who were authorized to proceed in a summary manner without the intervention of a jury.[18] It is therefore competent for the legislature to invest boards of health with jurisdiction to proceed summarily in the abatement of nuisances calculated to endanger the public health,[19] and in the isolation of persons affected with or exposed to contagious or infectious diseases.[20]

except where a jury trial is provided for by statute;[23] but the court may for its own satisfaction submit issues to a jury whose verdict will be merely advisory.[24] Statutes have also been held constitutional which provide a summary procedure in probate courts for compelling a representative to account,[25] and for compelling a discovery of property of the estate in the hands of other persons;[26] but a statute providing for a summary trial and rendition of judgment against persons alleged to have concealed, embezzled, or carried away property of the estate has been held to be constitutional only so far as it applies to cases where defendant does not controvert the truth of the complaint.[27] Where probate courts are by statute given jurisdiction to try disputed claims against the estate,[28] the trial is also without a jury[29] unless otherwise provided by statute.[30]

h. Probate and Contest of Wills.[31] The probate of a will was not a case triable by jury at common law,[32] and while the right to a jury to try issues of fact in such proceedings has in some cases been conferred by statute,[33] it is held in most jurisdictions that where the probate of a will is contested in a probate court a jury trial cannot be demanded as a matter of right,[34] and that if one has been granted the court may set aside the jury's finding of fact.[35] Such proceedings, however, are to be distinguished from direct actions in a court of general jurisdiction to contest or set aside a will in which a jury trial may ordinarily be demanded.[36] constitution, the legislature may without violating the right to trial by jury provide a summary mode of procedure for the removal of public officers for incompetency or misconduct in office,[55] and in some of the states the constitutions expressly provide that certain officers may be removed summarily,[56] or in such manner as the legislature may provide;[57] but in any case for which the legislature has expressly provided a jury trial it cannot be denied.[58] A summary proceeding is also permissible against defaulting tax-collectors or other collectors of public revenue to compel the payment into the public treasury of moneys collected by them,[59] such having been the practice both in England and in this country prior to the adoption of the constitutions;[60] but this summary mode of trial cannot be extended to persons who are merely indebted to the state or county in a private or non-official capacity,[61] and even in the case of official collectors if the legislature has provided for a trial by jury it cannot be denied.[62]

o. Enforcement of Bonds and Recognizances. It has been stated as a general rule that in the enforcement of bonds, except appeal-bonds, recognizances and the like, where the breach is known to the court as a matter of record, a jury trial may be demanded.[63] It has been held, however, that the right of trial by jury is not infringed by statutes providing for the summary enforcement of bonds given in judicial proceedings,[64] bonds declared by statute to have upon forfeiture the force and effect of judgments,[65] and bonds of defaulting tax-collectors or other collectors of the public revenue.[66] It has also been held that statutory proceedings are constitutional which provide for the rendition of a judgment on motion against a sheriff and the sureties on his bond for failure to return an execution,[67] or allow sureties to recover judgment on motion against their principal for money paid for the principal.[68]

s. Disbarment and Other Proceedings Against Attorneys.[81] There is no constitutional right to a jury trial in proceedings to disbar an attorney,[82] nor, unless so provided by statute,[83] can a jury trial be demanded in a summary proceeding to compel an attorney to pay over money collected for a client,[84] even where the attorney claims a lien upon the fund in question.[85] license,[93] or for making false and fraudulent returns of property for taxation or failing to pay taxes when due.[94] Statutes are also constitutional which provide for a summary seizure and confiscation of gambling implements and devices,[95] or intoxicating liquors kept for sale contrary to the law;[96] but municipal ordinances authorizing the seizure and sale of stock found running at large, without allowing the owner a jury trial, have been held to be unconstitutional.[97]

5. Particular Proceedings in Civil Actions — a. Supplementary Proceedings. A jury trial cannot ordinarily be demanded in proceedings supplementary to execution,[98] such proceedings not being actions at law but special statutory proceedings in the nature of a creditor's bill in equity;[99] nor is the enforcement of orders made in such proceedings by attachment and imprisonment, as for contempt, a violation of the right to a trial by jury.[1] Where, however, conflicting claims to the property in question on the part of third persons not parties to the original judgment may be tried and determined in the proceeding, it has been held that the proceeding where such rights are involved is in the nature of a civil action in which the jury trial may be demanded.[2]

b. Attachment. In proceedings to dissolve, quash, or vacate an attachment, where the proceeding is by motion or rule to show cause, there is no right to a jury trial;[3] but the issue on a plea in abatement or traverse of the grounds of attachment is triable by jury.[4] It is provided by statute in some states that conflicting claims of third persons to the property attached are triable by jury,[5] but in the absence of statutory provision it has been held on an interplea alleging title to land taken on attachment that the proceeding was in the nature of an action to quiet title and that a jury trial could not be demanded.[6]

c. Garnishment.[7] In some of the decisions it has been held that a jury may be demanded as a matter of right in garnishment proceedings;[8] but in others the

In Iowa the statute provides that in the event of the answer of a garnishee being controverted an issue may be joined which right has been expressly denied,[9] on the ground that the proceeding is essentially in the nature of a creditor's bill in equity.[10] So also in proceedings by a foreign attachment or trustee process, it has been held that a jury trial could not be demanded,[11] except where it was so provided by statute.[12]

d. Rights of Occupying Claimants. Statutes providing for an assessment by commissioners of damages for the value of the improvements upon the ouster of occupying claimants are not unconstitutional as infringing the right of trial by jury,[13] unless the right to such trial is expressly guaranteed in all civil cases where the value in controversy exceeds a certain amount.[14] The fact that by reason of such provisions the statutory mode of assessment cannot be followed does not affect the right to the value of such improvements.[15]

e. Compensation and Lien of Attorneys. An attorney's lien for services may be enforced by a motion in the original action as well as by a direct action,[16] and the amount may ordinarily be determined by the court[17] or by a reference without the intervention of a jury.[18] But the court cannot enforce by a summary order a compromise stipulation by which one party agrees to discharge the lien of the attorney of the other,[19] and also where it is provided by statute that in an action for damages plaintiff if successful may recover a reasonable attorney's fee, the amount of such fee must be determined by a jury.[20]

f. Enforcement of Bonds Given in Judicial Proceedings. Statutes are not unconstitutional as being in derogation of the right of trial by jury which provide for a summary enforcement of bonds given in the course of judicial proceedings, such as appeal-bonds, attachment, replevin, injunction bonds, and the like.[21]

g. Proceedings Against Sheriffs and Constables. In some jurisdictions the statutes provide for summary proceedings against sheriffs and constables or their sureties for failure of the former to return or levy executions or to pay over money collected thereunder.[22] Such proceedings, although without a jury, have been held to be constitutional when against the officer alone,[23] on the ground that the proceeding is in the nature of a punishment for contempt.[24] It has also been held that they were constitutional as to proceedings against the sureties,[25] but in other cases where the sureties were made parties it has been held that a jury trial could not be denied.[26]

h. Trial of Exceptions to Auditor's Report. Under a statute authorizing a reference to an auditor, the parties have a constitutional right to a jury trial upon exceptions of fact to the auditor's report if the action is one at law;[27] but if the action is equitable the court may overrule the exceptions and enter judgment without submitting the exceptions to the jury.[28]

In Kentucky the contrary has been expressly held (Gullion v. Bowlware, Ky. Dec. 76, 2 Am. Dec. 708); but in a later case, although following the former decision, the court expresses a doubt as to its correctness (Hughes v. Hughes, 4 T. B. Mon. 42).

In Alabama the code provides that in a statutory proceeding by motion against a sheriff for failure to collect money under an execution "the court must hear and determine the motion, and render judgment upon the evidence, without a jury, unless an issue is tendered, and a jury trial demanded." E. 958; Hearn v. Laird, 103 Ga. 271, 29 S. E. 973), which acts are not unconstitutional since there is no constitutional right to a jury trial in equitable actions (Hearn v. Laird, supra).

In Alabama the court may render a judgment final by default without the intervention of a jury where the action is on an "instrument of writing ascertaining the plaintiff's demand" (Wood v. Winship Mach. Co., 83 Ala. 424, 3 So. 757, 3 Am. St. Rep. 754; Burns v. Howard, 68 Ala. 352; McKenzie v. Clanton, 33 Ala. 528); but not in actions which are not on written instruments (Warwick v. Brooks, 67 Ala. 252; Porter v. Burleson, 38 Ala. 343; Connoly v. Alabama, etc., R. Co., 29 Ala. 373); or where the writing does not furnish all the data necessary to ascertain the amount (Martin v. Woodall, 1 Stew. & P. 244).

In Arkansas it is provided that where an interlocutory judgment is rendered by default or upon demurrer in any suit founded upon any instrument of writing and the demand is ascertained by such instrument, the court shall assess the damages and render final judgment thereon, and in all other cases the assessment shall be by a jury. Wallace v. Henry, 5 Ark. 105.

In Georgia the constitution provides that "the court shall render judgment without the intervention of a jury in all civil cases founded on unconditional contracts in writing where an issuable defense is not filed under oath or affirmation (Stansell v. Corley, 81 Ga. 453, 3 S. E. 868; Craig v. Herring, 80 Ga. 709, 6 S. E. 283; Tift v. Keaton, 78 Ga. 235, 2 S. Co., 55 Ga. 475); but the provision is not retroactive (Walker v. Bivins, 57 Ga. 322; Birdsong v. Woodward, 57 Ga. 354); nor does it apply to cases where an issuable defense is filed (Erambert v. Scarborough, 46 Ga. 398); or where the contract sued on is not unconditional (Howard v. Wellham, 114 Ga. 934, 41 S. of the state in which the court is held [39] with regard to the assessment of damages in such cases.

6. Criminal Prosecutions and Proceedings — a. Constitutional Provisions. In many of the constitutions there are in addition to the general provisions previously stated [40] express provisions with regard to the right to trial by jury in criminal cases.[41] The federal constitution provides that the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury,[42] and by the sixth amendment it is declared that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed.[43] Some of the state constitutions provide generally that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right to a speedy public trial by an impartial jury;[44] while in others the right is guaranteed only in prosecutions on indictment, presentment, or information;[45] and in a few a larger amount would be due thereon (Knox v. Yow, 91 Ga. 367, 17 S. E. 654).

In Louisiana Code Civ. Proc. art. 313, relating to assessment of damages in the case of default is construed as requiring an assessment by jury only where the amount is uncertain or a matter of opinion. Brander v. Goodin, 6 La. Ann. 521.

In Maryland the act of 1864 provides that the court may assess the damages on a judgment by default. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Hoeske, 32 Md. 317, holding, however, that this provision applies only where defendant is not in court and is in default, and not where he pleads and his plea is stricken out for want of proper verification.

No. 11,593, 14 Blatchf. 133, 43 Conn. 596, where the court said: "The practice of the United States courts, in the different circuits, has not been uniform. The more common method has been to assess damages by a jury, upon a writ of inquiry, but it is believed that the practice has conformed to the usages of the state in which the circuit court was held."

there are no provisions relating expressly to criminal cases.[46] The Massachusetts constitution provides that the legislature shall not make any law that shall subject any person to a capital or infamous punishment, excepting for the government of the army and navy, without trial by jury.[47] The constitutional provisions guaranteeing a trial by jury in all criminal prosecutions are applied according to the principles which at common law determined whether the accused in a given class of cases was entitled to be tried by a jury,[48] and are not to be construed as relating only to felonies or to offenses punishable by confinement in the penitentiary.[49] Where the guaranty relates only to cases on indictment or information the accused is not entitled to a jury trial in any other case unless the right is secured by some other clause of the constitution;[50] while in cases governed only by the general provisions that the right to trial by jury or the right as before used shall remain inviolate, the question is determined according to the practice prior to the adoption of the constitution.[51]

b. Statutory Offenses. There are few cases in which it has been held that the constitutional provisions relating to trial by jury do not apply to new offenses created by statute since the adoption of the constitutions,[52] but this doctrine has been expressly disapproved in other jurisdictions;[53] and what is apprehended to be the sounder rule and supported by the weight of authority is that the right should be determined according to the class of cases to which the particular offense belongs.[54] If the statutory offense belongs to a class of cases previously triable by jury the constitutional provisions apply,[55] but if it belongs to a class previously triable without a jury a jury trial may be denied.[56] Under this rule the legislature may add new cases to certain classes of offenses previously triable without a jury, such as vagrancy,[57] or disorderly conduct,[58] provided the act constituting the offense is of a similar character, grade, or class; but cannot by merely changing the name of an offense make an act triable in a summary manner which was indictable at common law,[59] or triable by jury prior to the constitution.[60]

c. Minor Offenses — (I) In General. There was prior to the adoption of the various constitutions a large class of minor or petty offenses which had been made punishable in a summary manner before justices and other inferior officers, and to these cases the constitutional provisions relating to trial by jury do not apply.[61] To this class of offenses belong violations of Sunday laws,[62] vagrancy,[63] disorderly conduct,[64] drunkenness,[65] disturbance of religious meetings,[66] violations of municipal ordinances,[67] and generally such new cases falling within these classes or such new offenses of a similar character as the legislature may from time to time create.[68] There is necessarily, however, much lack of uniformity in the different jurisdictions as to the particular offenses which may be punished summarily owing to the difference in the practice prior to the adoption of the several constitutions.[69] As this summary mode of trial is in derogation of the common law it should be carefully guarded against extension to cases to which the constitutional provisions were intended to apply.[70] In some of the states the constitu-

7. Right on Appeal or Other Proceedings For Review [98] — a. In General. In controversies to which the constitutional right of trial by jury applies, if a trial is provided for in the first instance, without a jury with a right of appeal to a court of ordinary jurisdiction, the parties have a right to demand a jury upon the appeal;[99] but in proceedings not within the application of the constitutional provisions the fact that an appeal is allowed does not entitle the parties to demand a jury,[1] unless the statute so provides,[2] or in other words no constitutional objection can be sustained to the denial of a jury trial on appeal in any case where the appeal itself might be denied.[3] Supreme courts ordinarily exercise only appellate jurisdiction and are without authority to impanel a jury.[4]

b. Appeals From Justices of the Peace. On an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to a court of ordinary jurisdiction the case is tried de novo,[5] and the right to a jury trial is determined according to the nature of the controversy as if the action had originated in that court.[6]

c. Appeals From Probate Courts. While in some states it is provided that on an appeal from a judgment or decree of a probate court the court may submit issues of fact to a jury,[7] there is no absolute right to a jury trial on such appeals,[8]

The United States statute (Act Cong. March 3, 1865) provides that issues of fact in civil actions in any circuit court of the United States may be tried and determined by the court without the intervention of a jury whenever the parties or attorneys of record file a stipulation in writing with the clerk of the court waiving a jury (Flanders v. Tweed, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 425, 19 L. ed. 678, 680; Norris v. Jackson, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 125, 19 L. ed. 608); but this provision applies exclusively to the circuit courts and not to district courts (Cunkee v. Heald, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 485; Blair v. Allen, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,483, 3 Dill. 101).

Waiver "with the assent of the court."— In a few jurisdictions the statutes provide that in certain cases the parties may waive a jury trial and in others that they may do so "with the assent of the court" (Leahy v. Dunlap, 6 Colo. 552; Baker v. Daily, 6 Nebr. 464); but the assent of the court will be presumed from the fact that it proceeded to try the case (Baker v. Daily, supra).

In Kansas the waiver of a jury trial in felony cases is expressly prohibited by stat-jury is an essential part of the court having jurisdiction to try the offense charged;[18] but the authorities show a radical difference of opinion by the different courts as to the grounds upon which the rule is based.[19] A few of the decisions are based in whole or in part upon grounds of public policy,[20] and others were decided under constitutional provisions which were in terms mandatory;[21] but most of the constitutions merely provide that the accused shall enjoy the right to a jury trial,[22] and most of the decisions seem to be based not upon the question of whether the constitutional provisions may be waived, but upon the ground that the court is without jurisdiction, which cannot be conferred by consent, to proceed without a jury in the absence of statutory authority,[23] or where the statutes expressly provide that the trial shall be conducted according to the course of the common law,[24] or that issues of fact must be submitted to a jury.[25] Accordingly it is uniformly held that where the legislature so provides a jury trial may be waived and the case tried by the court,[26] and under such provisions expressly

The weight of authority seems to be that in the absence of express statutory authority no accused person can waive the right of trial by jury in a criminal case, it being maintained that nothing can be waived which is jurisdictional or fundamental or the ob-authorizing a trial by the court, no distinction as to the right of waiver is made between prosecutions for felonies and for lesser offenses.[27]

b. In Trials For Misdemeanors and Minor Offenses. In some cases it is held that the rule that a jury trial cannot be waived in criminal cases applies to trials for misdemeanors as well as felonies,[28] but in others it is held that in trials for misdemeanors a jury trial may be waived.[29] In a few states there is a distinction based upon statutory provisions which in terms permit a waiver in the case of misdemeanors[30] or in trials before justices or in certain courts of inferior jurisdiction.[31]

3. Right to Waive Legal Number of Jurors — a. In Civil Cases. In a civil action the parties may waive a trial by a jury of twelve men as contemplated by the constitution,[32] or the number provided for by statute in particular servance of which is required by public policy; but if authorized by statute the right to such trial may be waived. Belt v. U. S., 4 App. Cas. (D. C.) 25.

Where the constitution does not expressly require that the trial shall be by jury but merely gives defendant a right to a jury trial, this right may be waived in criminal as well as civil cases; and a trial by the court without a jury may be authorized by statute. cases;[33] and such waiver will be implied from a failure to object to a jury of a different number,[34] unless the party was ignorant of the defect.[35] The parties may consent to a trial by a number greater as well as less than twelve jurors,[36] and the right of waiver applies to civil proceedings of a quasi-criminal character.[37] The right to waive the legal number of jurors has in some cases been expressly recognized by statute.[38] In the absence of any waiver express or implied it is a fatal defect that the verdict was rendered by a jury of less than the proper number.[39]

b. In Criminal Cases. The authorities are conflicting as to whether the common-law number of twelve jurors can be waived in a criminal case,[40] it having been held as a general rule in some cases without express reference to different classes of crime that it could not,[41] and in others that it could.[42] Other cases

40. See State v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa 578, 2 N. W. 275, 33 Am. Rep. 148, where the conflicting authorities are reviewed and discussed.

Reasons for conflict.— In support of the view that a waiver should not be allowed it has been said that the constitution contemplates a jury of twelve men and that a waiver would allow the parties to create a new tribunal unknown to the law, which would be a dangerous practice and contrary to public policy (Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351; State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470; Territory v. Ortiz, 8 N. M. 154, 42 Pac. 87; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, 7 Abb. Pr. 271); and furthermore that the principle, if recognized, would permit a waiver of any number or all of the jury (State v. Mansfield, supra; Cancemi v. People, supra); but in other cases it is expressly denied that such a procedure is contrary to public policy (State v. Kaufman, 51 Iowa 578, 2 N. W. 275, 33 Am. Rep. 148; State v. Sackett, 39 Minn. 69, 38 N. W. 773); and the argument that any number of jurors might be waived is answered by the statement that the whole matter is under the control of the court, who would protect against any abuse in this regard (Com. v. Dailey, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 80; State v. Sackett, supra).

merely hold that the number of jurors cannot be waived in trials for felonies,[43] or that it may in trials for misdemeanors;[44] while in others it has been expressly held that the number may be waived even in trials for felonies,[45] and also where because of statutory provisions defendant cannot entirely waive a trial by jury.[46] In a few jurisdictions there are statutes authorizing a trial by less than twelve jurors in certain cases if this number is waived, and such provisions are constitutional,[47] and where a statute authorizes a waiver of a jury trial defendant may waive the right to a full jury of twelve men.[48]

4. Right to Waive Special or Struck Jury. The right to a special or struck jury may be waived by a party entitled thereto.[49]

B. Necessity For Waiver. In cases where it is provided that the trial shall be by jury unless a jury is waived, the court has no authority, in the absence of any waiver, to try the case,[50] even where no evidence is introduced and the case is tried on the pleadings,[51] or on a written stipulation of the parties.[52] A party who has demanded a jury trial cannot be deprived of his right by the refusal of an officer to serve the summons on the persons selected as jurors,[53] or by an error of the clerk having charge of the record.[54]

C. How Jury May Be Waived — 1. In General. The general rule is that the right to a jury trial may be waived by any conduct or acquiescence inconsistent with an intention or expectation to insist upon it,[55] but it will not be presumed that the party intends to waive a constitutional right and he should not be concluded by his conduct where it is not inconsistent with such an intention.[56] If,

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Jury," § 180.

Thus a jury trial is not waived by plaintiff's admission of the facts upon which a motion to dismiss is founded (Moore v. Helms, 74 Ala. 368), by obtaining leave to

however, a party, although expressly demanding a jury trial, by his own acts prevents it, he will not be allowed to draw any advantage from his own misconduct and cannot complain that the court proceeded to try the case without a jury.[57]

2. STATUTORY PROVISIONS. In most jurisdictions it is provided by statute that a jury trial may be waived in three ways, as follows: (1) By failing to appear at the trial; (2) by written consent, in person or by attorney, filed with the clerk; and (3) by oral consent in open court entered on the record.[58] In some jurisdictions it is held that these provisions are exclusive and that the jury trial cannot be waived in any other way,[59] while in others it is expressly held that such pro-

answer to the merits after a plea in abatement is overruled, although at the time the jury for the term may have been discharged (Tricou v. Bayon, 4 Mart. (La.) 169), or by a party procuring the discharge of a jury on the ground that it was not a legal jury, although the discharge was erroneous (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Everheart, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 468, 32 S. W. 90). Participation in the proceedings under a probate court for the probate of a will, without demanding a jury, is not a waiver of the right to a jury to try title to the land devised (Corley v. McElmeel, 149 N. Y. 228, 43 N. E. 628 [affirming 87 Hun 23, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 862]), and in proceedings for laying out a road, where a party is entitled to a jury to review the demand of the commissioners, either as to the location or the assessment of damages, his acquiescence in the location is not a waiver of the right to a jury as to the damages (In re Endicott, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 339); nor is the failure of a party to see that the venire is served after a jury has been demanded in a justice's court a waiver of the right to a jury, since it is not the duty of a party to see to such service (Morelander v. Hays, 2 N. J. L. 161), unless the party voluntarily agrees to do so and fails to comply with his agreement (Daniels v. Scott, 12 N. J. L. 27; Coon v. Snyder, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 384).

Where a justice of the peace is not able to certify positively that no jury was demanded at the time provided by statute, a jury trial should be allowed. Pontiac, etc., Plank-Road Co. v. Hopkinson, 69 Mich. 10, 36 N. W. 797.

57. Daniels v. Scott, 12 N. J. L. 27; Coon v. Snyder, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 384.

Where a juror is taken sick on a trial before a justice and a party refuses to proceed with five jurors or to have a talesman called or to have a new venire issued, but insists upon a full jury at a future day, his conduct will be held to constitute a waiver of his right to a jury trial. Babcock v. Hill, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 52.

In an action where a county was a party defendant and challenged every juror on the ground of interest in the controversy and stated that every other juror from that county would be challenged, and also refused a change of venue, it was held that since a jury was demanded in a way that made it impossible for the court to grant it it was not error for the court to try the case without a jury. In New York Code Civ. Proc. § 1009, provides in addition to the three modes of waiver stated in the text that a jury trial may be waived "by moving the trial of the action without a jury, or if the adverse party so moves it by failing to claim a trial by jury, before the production of any evidence upon the trial." visions are not exclusive.[60] It is in some jurisdictions provided that the waiver must be by written stipulation.[61]

Estoppel to deny regularity of waiver.— It has been held even in jurisdictions above mentioned that while the other party might object, the party at whose instance a case is withdrawn from the jury and submitted to the court cannot afterward object that the waiver was not in the manner prescribed by statute (Stepp v. National Life, etc., Assoc., 37 S. C. 417, 16 S. E. 134); and that a party who, in order to secure a delay, consents to a waiver proposed by the other party, is estopped after receiving the benefit of his agreement to object that his consent thereto was not entered on the minutes as prescribed by statute (Hawes v. Clark, 84 Cal. 272, 24 Pac. 116).

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Jury," § 188.

The reason for this rule is that a party will not be permitted to proceed without objection before the referee, taking the chance of a favorable decision and then if the decision be unfavorable insist that the trial should have been by jury. Garrity v. Hamburger Co., (Ill. 1891) 28 N. E. 743, 139 Ill. 499, 27 N. E. 111; Chase v. Chase, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 268; Averill Coal, etc., Co. v. Verner, 22 Ohio St. 372.

Although a jury trial has been demanded and the demand overruled, if the party subsequently expressly consents to the appointment of a referee, he will be held to have abandoned his original demand and have waived the right to insist upon the error in originally denying a jury trial. Smith v. Burlingham, 44 Kan. 487, 24 Pac. 947.

Consenting to a reference to take testimony and report the same to the court is a waiver of the right to a jury trial under a statute providing that "when the reference is to report the facts, the report shall have the effect of a special verdict." Griffith v. Cromley, 58 S. C. 448, 36 S. E. 738.

Where a referee fails to find upon all the issues on a reference by consent and the case is reversed on this ground and sent back to the same referee with directions to make findings on these issues, the hearing to be but will be implied from acquiescence, as by failing to object to the appointment of the referee[68] or by participating without objection in the proceedings before him;[69] but where the reference is not general and the case is referred only in part and is an action at law, either party is still entitled to demand a jury trial as to such issues as were not referred.[70]

6. Invoking or Submitting to Jurisdiction of Equity. A jury trial is waived by a party directly invoking the jurisdiction of equity,[71] or by stating in his complaint a cause of action of a distinctly equitable character,[72] although upon the evidence he may be entitled to either legal or equitable relief;[73] and by joining with an equitable cause of action a legal cause of action as to which a jury trial could be demanded if sued on alone, he waives the right to a jury trial as to either cause of action.[74] Defendant, while he cannot by such action on the part upon the testimony already taken, the original waiver holds good and a jury trial cannot be demanded. Park v. Mighell, 7 Wash. 304, 35 Pac. 63. See also State v. Pacific Guano Co., 28 S. C. 63, 5 S. E. 167, where the same rule was applied in a case where the parties agreed that the trial should be by the court upon testimony taken and reported by a referee.

In New Hampshire under the reference law of 1874, it is held that merely consenting to a reference is not a waiver of the right to a jury trial provided for in that act (Smith v. Fellows, 58 N. H. 169); but the parties may expressly stipulate to waive a jury trial and will be bound by such agreement (Marsh v. Brown, 57 N. H. 173); and a stipulation that the report shall be final and that judgment shall be entered thereon as of the term at which the case was referred will be construed as such a waiver (Carroll v. Locke, 58 N. H. 163).

Compulsory reference — North Carolina. The code of civil procedure which authorizes compulsory references in certain cases, expressly provides that such reference shall not deprive either party of his right to a trial of the issues of fact arising on the pleadings by a jury (Carr v. Askew, 94 N. C. 194. See also Wilson v. Featherstone, 120 N. C. 446, 27 S. E. 124); but this right applies only to issues of fact raised by the pleadings (Keystone Driller Co. v. Worth, 117 N. C. 515, 23 S. E. 427); and to secure it a party must, by exceptions made in apt time, distinctly designate the controverted facts that he demands shall be so determined (Taylor v. Smith, 118 N. C. 127, 24 S. E. 792; Yelverton v. Coley, 101 N. C. 248, 7 S. E. 672); if no objection or opposition is made to the order of reference it will be deemed a reference by consent and a waiver of the right (Kerr v. Hicks, 129 N. C. 141, 39 S. E. 797; Grant v. Hughes, 96 N. C. 177, 2 S. E. 339); but where an order for a reference by consent is stricken out without objection and at the next term the case is again referred against the exception of the party, it will be deemed compulsory reference (McDaniel v. Scurlock, 115 N. C. 295, 20 S. E. 451).

St. c. 35, § 3, to recover threefold the amount of usurious interest paid to defendant, does not thereby waive his right to a jury trial.

A party who elects to intervene in a suit in equity and assert a right which might have been enforced by an action at law cannot complain that it was determined without the intervention of the jury. Furrer v. Ferris, 145 U. S. 132, 12 S. Ct. 821, 36 L. ed. 649; Flippin v. Kimball, 87 Fed. 258, 31 C. C. A. 282.

Not a waiver of legal cause of action. Where, on motion of plaintiff, the court erroneously proceeds to try without a jury a case which should be tried by one, it will not operate as a waiver of any right of recovery upon strictly legal grounds, and plaintiff, on failing to show he is entitled to equitable relief, may still have his claim tried by a jury. of plaintiff be deprived of his right to a jury trial,[75] will be held to have waived the right where he allows the trial to proceed as a suit in equity without objection,[76] or where in an action where the complaint contains allegations appropriate to both legal and equitable relief, he answers and goes to trial without asking to compel plaintiff to elect or amend.[77]

7. Failure to Appear or Participate in Trial. The failure to appear at the trial is a waiver of the right to a trial by jury,[78] it being in a number of jurisdictions expressly so provided by statute,[79] and the mere filing of an answer is not an appearance within the application of this rule.[80] So also if a party refuses to take part in the trial he will be deemed to be absent and cannot object that the trial is without a jury.[81] Where, however, a party has demanded a jury trial the mere fact that he is absent when his case is reached and called for trial is not a waiver or forfeiture of his right,[82] nor does the fact that one party is absent affect the right of the other party to demand a jury.[83]

expressly provided by statute that the failure to demand a jury shall be deemed a waiver,[95] or that the trial shall be without a jury unless a jury is demanded;[96] and a statute which provides that the trial shall be by jury if demanded impliedly authorizes a trial without a jury if no demand is made.[97]

(II) In Criminal Cases. In criminal cases where a jury trial may be waived,[98] it may be waived as in a civil case by failing to make a demand therefor and going to trial before the court without objection.[99]

(III) For Special or Struck Jury. In cases where the parties are entitled to a special or struck jury the court need not order it of its own motion but the parties must make a demand therefor,[1] nor has the court any right, in the absence of a demand, to order a special jury against the objection of one of the parties.[2]

b. Excuses For Failure to Make Demand. It is no excuse for failing to demand a jury trial that the party failed to do so because he thought his notice of demand for a jury had not been filed,[3] nor is his ignorance of the law as to the time within which such demand must be made any excuse for failure to make the demand within the time prescribed;[4] but it is a sufficient excuse for failing to demand a jury that the court had no authority to impanel a jury,[5] or for failing to demand a jury on the first day of the term that there was at the time no judge competent to receive the demand and enter the order.[6]

that a party desiring a jury trial must file a notice to the effect that a jury will be demanded a certain number of days before the commencement of the term at which the case is to be tried[7] or before the parties are at issue or within a certain time thereafter,[8] and a failure to do so is a waiver of the right to a jury trial.[9] A party failing to file the notice also takes the risk of any amendment that may thereafter be allowed by the court.[10] The party applying for special or struck jury need not give any notice of such application to the adverse party unless required to do so by a statute or rule of court.[11]

d. Time For Making Demand — (i) In General. Where the time for demanding a jury trial is regulated by statute the right to a jury is lost if not demanded within the time prescribed.[12] In some cases it is provided that a jury must be demanded when causes are assigned for trial,[13] with the last pleading,[14] at or before the time of joining issue,[15] after issue is joined and before an inquiry case where it appears that the delay was without any fault on the part of the party making the demand;[25] but a demand is too late after the jury for the term has been discharged,[26] or after the trial before the court has been commenced,[27] or where the delay is such that to grant the demand would prejudice the adverse party or interfere with the ordinary business of the court;[28] and where, on a trial before a justice, a party has a right to demand a jury of twelve instead of six, it is too late to demand a jury of this number after the venire for six has been issued.[29] In the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary, it is not too late to demand a jury on the day of trial.[30]

impaneled,[35] or even after its organization had been begun.[36] It has also been held that placing a case on the calendar to be tried by a general jury fixes the status of the case which will not be changed except by the consent of both parties.[37]

(III) For Submission of Particular Issues to Jury. In an equitable action where the granting of issues to a jury is not an absolute right but discretionary with the court, an application for a jury is properly denied when made before the evidence is in, so that the court cannot tell whether the case will be proper for a jury;[38] but where the case may involve questions which the parties will have a right to have submitted to a jury, a premature demand for a jury should not be denied absolutely, but with leave to renew.[39] The demand must, however, be made before the trial by the court is begun,[40] or where the issue is to be tried by a master or referee before the case is referred;[41] and while the court may in its discretion order an issue after the coming in of the report,[42] it should not be done except for special reasons and never merely because the party is dissatisfied with the report.[43]

e. Form and Sufficiency of Demand — (I) In General. If the manner for making the demand for a jury trial is prescribed by statute, the party cannot insist upon a jury trial unless the demand is made in the manner prescribed.[44] The demand for a jury trial must be a specific demand,[45] and should be made directly to the court and not to the clerk or by a mere entry upon the minutes.[46] The demand need not be in writing[47] unless the statute so requires,[48] and need not be made by the party personally but may be made by an attorney in the party's absence;[49] but if made in the absence of the adverse party it should be called to his attention before the trial.[50] If the right to a jury is conditional the demand must show the existence of the condition entitling him to make the demand;[51] and where only part of the issues in the case are triable by jury the demand must specify the particular issues which the party desires to have so tried,[52] and a general demand for a jury trial of all the issues is properly denied.[53] Where a party does not make a general demand for a jury trial but bases his demand upon a particular ground which does not entitle him to a jury, it is not error to deny the demand.[54]

In Maryland under Baltimore city supreme bench, rule 50, requiring that a party desiring a jury trial shall file a written election for such trial, the demand must be evidenced by a separate writing and cannot be embodied in the pleadings (Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Nugent, 86 Md. 349, 38 Atl. 779, 39 L. R. A. 161); but an indorsement on the outside cover of a pleading which consisted of a separate sheet notifying the clerk to mark the case for a jury is sufficient (Condon v. Gore, 89 Md. 230, 42 Atl. 900).

(II) Allegations in and Verification of Pleading. The statutes in some cases provide that the demand for a jury must be indorsed upon the summons[55] or made in the pleadings,[56] and if not so made a jury cannot be claimed as a matter of right,[57] unless from the nature of the case the statute could not be complied with.[58] The court may in its discretion allow an amended pleading to be filed, including a demand for a jury where it would not delay the trial or prejudice the adverse party;[59] but it is proper to refuse to do so where at the time of the application the jury for the term has been discharged and the trial would thereby be delayed.[60] In Louisiana it is further provided with regard to certain causes of action that defendant to obtain a jury must also make affidavit as to the truth of the allegations in his answer or the character of his defense.[61]

Where an exception to a referee's report reserving a jury trial fails to specifically demand the right on an issue of fact raised by the pleadings and passed on by the referee in the findings excepted to and to specify the precise issue on which the testimony will be offered, the right to a jury trial will be forfeited. Co. v. Martin, 85 Tenn. 134, 2 S. It is sufficient for a party who is sued on a promissory note to obtain a trial by jury to swear that all the allegations in his answer are true, where want or failure of consideration is substantially set forth in the answer (Frellson v. McDonald, 15 La. f. Effect of Demand — (I) In General. Where a case is triable by jury as a matter of right, it is reversible error for the court to try it without a jury where a demand for a jury trial has been properly made.[62] But on the other hand if a case is properly triable without a jury the court should exercise its discretion as to whether the case is proper for a jury, and should not allow a jury trial merely to relieve himself of the responsibility, where the law contemplates that the duty shall be discharged by himself.[63]

(II) Effect of Demand at Previous Trial or Term. A demand for a jury has reference only to the time and term of court at which it is made,[64] and to entitle a party to a jury trial he must make a new demand therefor on a new trial,[65] or at another term where the case is not tried but continued after demand,[66] or dismissed on motion and subsequently reinstated.[67]

11. Failure to Advance or Deposit Jury-Fee. Where it is provided by statute or a rule of court that a party desiring a jury trial shall advance or deposit a jury-fee, his failure or refusal to do so is a waiver of the right to a jury trial, and the court may try the case without a jury,[68] unless the requirement is obviated by demand for a jury that the jury-fee should be paid at the same time,[79] nor will it affect the validity of the judgment that the court allowed a jury trial without requiring the prepayment of any jury-fee whatever.[80]

12. Waiver in Criminal Cases.[81] To sustain a conviction by the court without a jury it must clearly and affirmatively appear that defendant expressly waived his right to a jury trial,[82] unless the conviction is under a statute providing that unless a jury is demanded the court shall proceed to try the case.[83] The waiver should be by defendant personally or with his knowledge and consent,[84] but need not be in writing,[85] except in cases where the statute so provides.[86]

13. Waiver at Trial De Novo on Appeal. Where the right to a jury on a trial de novo on appeal is secured by constitutional or statutory provisions, the right will be waived by failing to appeal within the time prescribed by statute,[87] or by failing to demand a jury on the trial de novo and submitting the case without objection to the court;[88] but a waiver of a jury on the former trial is not a waiver of the right to a jury on the trial of the appeal,[89] unless the right on appeal is expressly given only in cases where a demand upon the former trial was made;[90] and if the appeal is regularly taken within the time prescribed and a jury demanded a waiver will not be presumed and a jury cannot be denied on the ground of the previous conduct of the parties unless in a very clear case.[91] An express waiver of the jury trial upon a trial de novo in a court where a jury could have been demanded cures any error in refusing a jury of the proper number on the former trial.[92]

D. Record of Waiver. Where a jury trial is waived it is the better practice either to require the parties to sign a written stipulation to that effect or to let the record show an express waiver, but it is not absolutely necessary.[93] It is sufficient

if the record states that neither party demanded a jury,[94] and in the absence of an affirmative showing in the bill of exceptions that a jury was demanded and refused, a judgment will not be reversed because the record fails to show an express waiver.[95] Even under the statutes providing for a waiver by consent entered on the record, the record need not expressly state that the parties consented to waive a jury trial; but it is sufficient if it shows conduct on the part of the party equivalent to such consent,[96] as where it shows that they submitted the case to the determination of the court,[97] or a referee.[98] Where the statute requires a record of the waiver to be entered the record may be amended and the entry made nunc pro tunc from the judge's notes.[99]

E. Operation and Effect of Waiver — 1. In Civil Cases Generally. The waiver of a jury trial in effect substitutes the court in the place of a jury and submits all questions of fact to the determination of the presiding judge.[1] The waiver makes it immaterial whether the cause of action was legal or equitable[2] or what kind of relief may be awarded on the trial,[3] and is a waiver of any irregularity in originally placing the case upon the wrong calendar.[4] Where the parties have expressly consented to waive a jury trial neither can thereafter withdraw such consent,[5] although it has been held that the court may in its discretion permit it,[6]

It is discretionary with the court to discharge an agreement waiving a trial by jury and no exception lies to a refusal to do so. Dennie v. Williams, 135 Mass. 28.

After the evidence is all in it is not error to refuse a motion for a jury trial where an order has been entered by stipulation for a

or may disregard the waiver and submit the case to a jury.[7] The waiver of a jury when the case is called for trial is a waiver only as to the issues then formed and does not apply to new and different issues that may thereafter be formed under amended pleadings,[8] but mere formal amendments that do not materially change the issues will not entitle a party to demand a jury.[9] So also where a case is by consent submitted to the court after evidence is introduced and each party has rested his case, the waiver applies only to the evidence as it then stands, and it is error to allow one party to introduce new evidence and deny the other a jury trial as to the new facts put in issue.[10] While an express agreement to waive a jury trial does not apply to a second trial,[11] it is not restricted to a trial before the judge sitting at the time of the waiver but applies to whatever judge is on the bench at the time the case comes to trial,[12] and where the case is not tried but continued such waiver holds good for the term at which the case is tried,[13] unless the issues have in the meanwhile been changed by amendment.[14] But where after a stipulation to try a case by the court it is by consent consolidated with another case between the same parties, the stipulation is not binding upon the parties.[15] The fact that a jury trial has been waived does not prevent the court from submitting issues of fact to the jury.[16] Where a jury trial has been waived on the trial an appellate court may on appeal not only reverse but may render final judgment without remanding the case for a new trial where it can be ascertained from the facts found what judgment ought to have been rendered.[17]

2. In Criminal Cases. In cases where a jury trial may be waived in a criminal case, a waiver once voluntarily made cannot afterward be withdrawn on the trial,[18] nor can defendant after conviction insist that he had no right to consent jury trial by the court without a jury. Brownell Imp. Co. v. Critchfield, 197 Ill. 61, 64 N. E. 332 [affirming 96 Ill. App. 86.]

But see People v. Molinet, 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 301, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 1114, holding that under a statute providing that defendant might demand a jury before the hearing of any testimony, a waiver at the time of arraignment is not necessary and if made will not deprive defendant of the right to demand a jury on the trial before the hearing of any testimony.

If application is seasonably made so that permitting the withdrawal of a waiver would not prejudice the state or delay or impede the cause of justice, the court should allow it (Cain v. State, 102 Ga. 610, 29 S. E. 426; Butler v. State, 97 Ga. 404, 23 S. to such waiver.[19] This rule applies, however, only to the particular trial at which the waiver is made,[20] and on a new trial the waiver may be withdrawn and a jury trial demanded,[21] provided the application therefor is seasonably made.[22] The waiver of a jury trial does not prevent the court from submitting the case to a jury,[23] unless the statute gives defendant the right to select the mode of trial.[24] Where a jury trial may be and is waived the finding of the court has the force and effect of a verdict.[25]

3. Effect on Right to Jury at Subsequent Trial. The waiver of a jury on one trial is expended by that trial and does not affect the right of either party to demand a jury upon a second trial after the case is remanded from an appellate court.[26] The same rule applies where the first trial is before a referee instead of by the court.[27]

4. Effect of Waiver After Demand. The right to a jury trial once acquired inures to the benefit of both parties and cannot thereafter be waived except by mutual consent, whether awarded at the instance of one party only[28] or by the

It is not necessary for both parties to demand a jury in order to secure the rights of both thereto, and one party cannot deprive the other of the right by demanding a jury and subsequently waiving a jury trial after the time for demanding a jury has expired. Sherwood v. New York Tel. Co., 46 Misc. (N. Y.) 102, 91 N. Y. Suppl. 387.

But if no objection is made by the other party at the time a demand for a jury is withdrawn by the party who made such a demand the right to object to the withdrawal will be held to be waived. Knight v. Farrell, 113 Ala. 258, 20 So. 974; Taylor v. Sledge, 108 Tenn. 719, 69 S. W. 266.

In Texas it is provided by statute that when one party has applied for a jury trial he shall not be permitted to withdraw such court of its own motion.[29] After a party has demanded a struck jury and appeared for the purpose of striking the jury he cannot after examining the list of jurors withdraw his demand and insist on a trial of the regular panel.[30]

F. Effect of Participation in Proceedings After Grant or Refusal of Jury. In a case where a jury trial may be demanded as a right and such demand has been made and refused, the error is not waived by the party subsequently appearing and participating in the trial before the court,[31] or before the referee where the case is referred;[32] nor is the error in denying a demand for a jury of twelve waived by participating in the trial before a jury of a different number.[33] Conversely, where the court has erroneously decided that the case is one at law and submitted it to the jury the party objecting does not waive any right by going to trial before the jury.[34] If, however, the demand for a jury is not expressly denied but the court reserves its decision on the demand, the right is waived by the party failing to insist on a ruling on the question reserved and proceeding without objection to the completion of the trial before the court,[35] and if demanded by only one party and denied the error is not available to the other party if he subsequently participates in the proceedings without objection to such denial.[36]

G. Objection to Submitting Case to Jury. In a case not of right triable by jury a party cannot complain that the case was so tried if he did not object to that mode of trial,[37] or if he failed to object until after a jury was sworn and impaneled to try the case;[38] and even where the party has an absolute right to have certain issues tried by the court, the right may be waived and is waived by proceeding to trial before the jury without any protest or objection.[39] So also where only part of the issues are triable by the court, it is not error to overrule an objection to a jury trial which is made to the entire case.[40]

V. Denial or Infringement of Right.

A. In General. The right of trial by a jury is one which should be carefully guarded against infringement;[41] and the constitutional provisions are uniformly construed to the effect that it cannot be denied in cases where it existed at the time of the adoption of the constitution or in similar classes of cases arising under statutes subsequently enacted;[42] nor can the exercise of the right be made subject to such conditions and restrictions as unreasonably to impair it.[43] Also a denial of any one of the essential elements or incidents of a jury trial is a denial of the right to that mode of trial.[44] On the other hand, it is competent for the legislature to make any reasonable regulations and conditions as to how the right shall be exercised so long as it is not denied or materially impaired.[45] It is in

A trial by jury means a trial by a body of twelve men, described as upright, well qualified, and lawful men, disinterested and impartial, not of kin, nor personal dependents of either of the parties, having their homes within the jurisdictional limits of the court, drawn and selected by officers free from all bias in favor of or against either party, duly impaneled under the direction of a competent court, sworn to render a true verdict according to the law and the evidence given them, who, after hearing the parties and their evidence, and receiving the instructions of the court relative to the law involved in the trial, and deliberating, when necessary, apart from all extraneous influences, must return their unanimous verdict upon the issue submitted to them. In re Opinion of Justices, 41 N. some cases difficult to draw the line between legislative acts which merely regulate and which, under the pretense of regulating, materially impair the right,[46] and it has been said that no definite rule can be laid down on this question but that each case must be determined upon its own circumstances,[47] the chief considerations being the conditions existing at the time of the adoption of the constitutions[48] and the reasonableness under the existing conditions of the particular restriction or qualification.[49] Where a party has claimed his constitutional right to a jury trial and it has been denied, the judgment will be reversed notwithstanding it appears that the case was fairly tried by the court and full and ample justice done with reference to the merits.[50]

B. Practice and Procedure — 1. In Civil Cases — a. In General. The legislature may make any reasonable regulations as to the practice and procedure in civil cases so long as the right to a jury trial is not materially impaired.[51]

The great purpose of the constitution in preserving the right of trial by jury inviolate was not to contract the power to furnish modes of civil procedure in courts of justice, but to secure the right of trial by jury in its accustomed form before the rights of person or property should be finally decided. The right of trial is secured and the trial itself protected from innovations which might destroy its utility, but beyond this point there is no limitation upon the legislative power in constructing modes of redress for civil wrongs and regulating their provisions. Haines v. Levin, 51 Pa. St. 412.

A statute providing a summary proceeding by warrant of distress for securing rents is not unconstitutional, since the tenant may have the matters in dispute tried by a jury on his replevying the property and tendering an issue. Blanchard v. Raines, 20 Fla. 467.

The mere failure to provide for a jury trial in an act creating a particular cause of action does not render the act unconstitutional, as the right exists in all proper cases without express grant. Briggs v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 111 Mo. 168, 20 S. W. 32.

But an amendment of the statutes taking effect before trial does not affect the right to a jury trial acquired by a compliance with the former statute prior to the time when jury trial will be demanded;[59] but the court cannot make any rules to this effect which are in contravention of the express provisions of the statute.[60]

d. Costs and Jury-Fees.[61] The constitutions in guaranteeing the right of trial by jury do not guarantee the right to litigate without expense,[62] but merely protect the parties against the imposition of terms so unreasonable as materially to impair the right;[63] and it is no infringement of the right to require as a condition of obtaining a jury trial the payment or deposit of a jury-fee[64] or the giving of a bond for costs;[65] and it has also been held that statutes providing that the jury-fees shall be taxed as a part of the costs against the losing party are not unconstitutional.[66]

purely legal cause of action against the consent of the parties is an infringement of the right of trial by jury,[69] even where it involves the examination of a long account;[70] and statutes providing generally for a compulsory reference in any action or in any action involving the examination of a long account are to be construed in connection with the constitutional provisions and limited in their operation to cases of equitable cognizance,[71] or to the particular cases in which a reference was authorized prior to the constitution.[72] of authority as to whether the legislature may alter the law in force at the time of the adoption of the constitution as to the amount in controversy which will entitle a party to appeal from the judgment of a justice to a jury, it having been held that the amount cannot be increased,[80] while other cases hold that the legislature may within reasonable limits increase the amount, although the effect will be to deny the right of appeal in certain cases where it previously existed.[81] Where the constitution guarantees the right to a jury trial, where the amount in controversy is over a certain amount, a statute allowing an appeal only when the the judgment rendered is over this amount, regardless of the amount in controversy, is unconstitutional.[82] Where the conditions for exercising the right of appeal are regulated by statute the court cannot impose any other and harder conditions than the statute prescribes.[83]

g. Splitting up Single Cause of Action. Defendant cannot be deprived of the right to a jury trial by plaintiff splitting up a single indebtedness into several amounts within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.[84]

2. In Criminal Cases — a. In General. While the legislature cannot take away the right of trial by jury in criminal cases or impose such conditions upon its exercise as unreasonably or unnecessarily to impair it,[85] it may make any regulations as to the practice and procedure in such cases which will not operate to prevent a fair and impartial trial.[86] An act is not unconstitutional which merely confers upon the court jurisdiction to try criminal cases without a jury where no jury is demanded;[87] but it has been held that an act requiring that defendant, in order to secure a jury trial, must make a formal affirmative demand therefor, is an infringement of the right of trial by jury.[88] It is no infringment of defendant's rights to permit a juror to be examined as a witness[89] or to act as an interpreter;[90] and since the assessment of punishment or fixing the term of imprisonment was not within the province of the jury at common law, the legislature may change the practice notwithstanding at the time of the adoption of the constitution this was by statute within the province of the jury.[91]

b. Requirement or Denial of Bail. A statute is not unconstitutional as infringing the right of trial by jury which requires defendant on demanding the jury trial to give bail for his appearance at a jury term of the court in which he is arraigned,[92] or which authorizes a magistrate or police justice to require defendant to give bail to appear before a higher court if in his opinion the punishment which he is authorized to assess is inadequate;[93] but a law is unconstitutional which deprives defendant, on being arraigned before a magistrate, of the right to elect to be tried before a higher court having a constitutional jury and give bail for his appearance in that court in any case where such right existed at the time of the adoption of the constitution.[94]

c. Restrictions on Right of Appeal. Where the right of trial by jury in criminal cases is secured by allowing an appeal to a court where a jury trial can be had, the right of appeal cannot be restricted by conditions which materially impair the right;[95] but the legislature may regulate how the appeal shall be taken and prescribe any conditions so long as they are reasonable,[96] and a failure to comply with such a regulation is a waiver of the right to a jury trial.[97] It is not an unreasonable restriction on the right of appeal to require defendant to give a recognizance for his appearance in the appellate court,[98] or to pay the necessary fees for taking and perfecting the appeal,[99] to procure at his own expense copies of the proceedings necessary for taking the appeal,[1] to pay the accrued costs,[2] or to give a bond for such costs as may be adjudged against him;[3] but it is an unreasonable restriction to require him to also give a bond conditioned for the payment of whatever judgment may finally be rendered against him in the appellate court,[4] or to give a bond not to further violate, pending the appeal, the law under which he is accused,[5] and a provision that if the conviction is sustained the penalty shall be increased is also unconstitutional.[6]

C. Extending Jurisdiction of Particular Courts — 1. Justices' and Other Inferior Courts. The legislature cannot extend the jurisdiction of justices or other inferior courts not having a jury of twelve so as to include causes of action or amounts in controversy which prior to the adoption of the constitution were of right triable by common-law jury,[7] or so as to authorize the trial, without

2. COURTS OF EQUITY. The legislature cannot convert a legal into an equitable cause of action,[11] or confer upon courts of equity jurisdiction of purely legal controversies which otherwise would be properly cognizable only in courts of law.[12] It has been held that an act which merely confers jurisdiction in such cases upon courts of equity but does not expressly deny the right to a jury is not unconstitutional,[13] but this doctrine has been expressly disapproved,[14] and the cases supporting the general rule previously stated do not recognize such a distinction.[15] An act is not unconstitutional, however, if in conferring jurisdiction upon a court of equity it makes express provision securing the right to a jury if either party shall demand it,[16] and it is not an infringement of the right of trial by jury for the court, in a case properly cognizable in equity, to retain jurisdiction for the purpose of affording complete relief, although in so doing it becomes necessary to determine questions of purely legal cognizance.[17] Neither do the consti-

The New York constitution, as amended in 1870, provides that "Courts of Special Sessions shall have such jurisdiction of offences of the grade of misdemeanors as may be prescribed by law," and under this provision an act is not unconstitutional which confers upon such courts jurisdiction of misdemeanors which were formerly triable by a jury of twelve men (Devine v. People, 20 Hun 98. See also People v. Wolf, 24 Misc. 94, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 296, 13 N. Y. Cr. 261; People v. Levy, 24 Misc. 469, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 643, 13 N. Y. Y. Suppl. 1088; People v. Levy, supra); the term "reasonable" being construed as applying to cases where there are exceptional features in the case making it proper that the action should be tried by a jury rather than by a justice of the special sessions (People v. Cornyn, supra).

tutional provisions affect the right of the court to proceed without a jury in any case of which jurisdiction was conferred by statute prior to the adoption of the constitution.[18] It has also been held that the legislature cannot so change the system by jurisprudence as to confer upon juries the sole power of determining purely equitable controversies;[19] but an act is not unconstitutional which does not deprive a court of equity of jurisdiction of any cause of action previously cognizable in equity, but merely provides that in such actions certain issues of fact arising on the pleadings shall be submitted to a jury.[20]

D. Reëxamination or Review of Facts Tried by a Jury. The seventh amendment of the federal constitution provides that no fact once tried by a jury shall be otherwise reëxaminable in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.[21] This provision not only prevents the retrial by a jury in a United States circuit court of facts tried by a jury in a district court,[22] but also deprives congress of the power to authorize a reëxamination in any federal court of facts which have been tried and determined by a jury in a state court.[23]

matter of right, that trial by a jury of twelve must always be had in the first instance.[36]

2. Decrease in Number Pending Trial. The court has no right to excuse a juror during the trial on account of sickness and proceed with less than the legal number,[37] and although a juror was not excused the verdict will be considered as a verdict of only eleven men if a juror was too sick to deliberate,[38] or became insane before the verdict was rendered.[39] Statutes authorizing less than the legal number of jurors to render a verdict where the number is reduced during the trial by death, sickness, or other cause are unconstitutional;[40] and even where the constitution provides that the legislature may authorize a trial by a less number than twelve, it cannot delegate to the court the power of excusing jurors in such cases.[41] Permitting one of the jurors to be placed on the witness' stand and examined is not, however, objectionable as reducing the number of jurors.[42]

3. Jury of More Than Twelve. A jury consisting of more than twelve men is not a legal constitutional jury,[43] and a trial by such a jury is erroneous and no valid judgment can be rendered on the verdict in either civil[44] or criminal cases,[45] unless the objection was waived by the parties.[46] If, however, a juror improperly included in the panel can be identified he may be excluded by the court if this is done before the jurors have had an opportunity to converse among themselves, and the trial may proceed with the remaining legal number.[47]

4. Concurrence of Less Than Whole Number. It is an essential attribute of a valid jury trial that the members constituting the jury shall be unanimous in the verdict rendered,[48] and any juror may dissent from a verdict to which he has previously agreed at any time before it is recorded,[49] whether the verdict be written or oral or whether the jury be polled or not.[50] It follows that any legislation

In trials before justices and other inferior courts not of record and not proceeding according to the course of the common law, the number of jurors may, in cases where a jury of twelve was not a right prior to the constitution, be reduced by the legislature. authorizing a verdict by less than the whole number of jurors in any case where a jury trial is a matter of right is unconstitutional,[51] unless such legislation is expressly authorized by a constitutional provision.[52] This rule does not, however, apply to cases of an equitable nature[53] or other proceedings where there is no constitutional right to a jury trial.[54] In Canada in the province of Manitoba it is provided by statute that in civil cases nine jurors concurring may render a verdict.[55]

The preliminary proceedings for procuring a jury are not properly speaking a part of the trial,[56] and it is not necessary in order to preserve the right of trial by jury inviolate to continue the particular method of selecting jurors in force at the time the constitution was adopted.[57] On the contrary the legislature has full power to regulate

Y. 190); but in Florida where the constitution expressly provides that in such proceedings the compensation shall be assessed by a jury of twelve men in a court of competent jurisdiction, it has been held that a statute authorizing a majority of the jury to determine all matters before them was unconstitutional and void (Jacksonville, etc., R. and change the method of selecting jurors so long as the essential elements of the jury trial are preserved,[58] and it is not an essential element that the selection of the persons to compose the panel shall be made by lot.[59] The legislature may increase or decrease the number of the panel from which the trial jury is to be selected,[60] may change the law as to the persons or officers by whom the list of jurors is to be selected,[61] and prescribe the qualifications of such persons or officers.[62] Statutes providing that either party may demand a special or struck jury are not in violation of the constitutional provisions that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate,[63] since a trial by such a jury preserves all of the essential requisites of a jury trial.[64] While the legislature may provide how the jury shall be selected, the parties, after such provision is made, have a right to insist that the law as established shall be substantially complied with.[65]

duty.[67] But the legislature cannot pass any law as to the qualification of jurors which would prevent the procurement of a fair and impartial jury.[68] A party has a constitutional right to object to being tried by jurors having any disability that would prevent a fair and impartial trial, although the particular disability is not made a disqualification by statute;[69] and a trial before a jury, all or part of whom cannot speak or understand the English language, where the proceedings are conducted in English, is an infringement of this right.[70]

3. Competency For Trial of Cause. While an impartial jury is a constitutional right[71] which the legislature cannot impair,[72] it may, so long as this requirement is not infringed, provide as to the competency of jurors in particular cases.[73] The legislature may provide that a juror shall not be rendered incompetent by reason of having formed an opinion based upon rumor or newspaper reports, provided he states on oath that he believes that he can render an impartial verdict according to the law and the evidence, and the court is satisfied of the truth of his statement,[74] and the same rule has been followed in the absence of statute and held to be no infringement of the right to an impartial jury;[75] but there are cases where by reason of a juror's relation to the case he should be held incompetent, although he states that he can render an impartial verdict.[76] The legislature may also provide that a remote or insignificant pecuniary interest shall not

In condemnation proceedings it is not necessary that the jurors should be taken from the township where the land lies (Convers v. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co., 18 Mich. 459), or that any of them should be taken from that township (Shattuck v. Stoneham Branch R. expressly so requires;[92] but the court cannot direct that in selecting the jury persons of a certain township or part of the county shall be excluded.[93] The legislature may create judicial districts comprising less than the whole county and provide that the jury be selected from that portion of the county only over which the court has jurisdiction,[94] or that the jurors for city courts shall be summoned from the city and not from the whole body of the county,[95] or may create trial districts including more territory than a single county, provided provision is made by which jurors can be called from the whole body of such district;[96] but the territory over which a court is given jurisdiction must be coextensive with and cannot be extended beyond that from which the jurors to serve in such court are to be selected.[97]

5. EXAMINATION. The right to a fair trial by an impartial jury is not impaired by a statute prescribing what questions may be asked a juror on his voir dire to test his impartiality, where the accused is allowed to offer evidence before the judge to show that any of the answers are untrue.[98]

6. CHALLENGES AND OBJECTIONS. The question of challenges and objections to jurors is within the regulation and control of the legislature,[99] subject only to the qualification that the law cannot be such as to defeat or materially impair the right to a jury trial.[1] The legislature may accordingly extend the right of peremptory challenges to civil cases,[2] allow the state peremptory challenges in criminal cases,[3] reduce the number of peremptory challenges previously allowed,[4]

Report of referee or auditor as prima facie evidence.— The cases are conflicting as to whether statutes making the report of a referee or auditor prima facie evidence of the matters contained therein are constitutional, it having been held in some cases that they were (Holmes v. Hunt, 122 Mass. 505, 23 Am. Rep. 424; Plimpton v. Somerset, 33 Vt. 283); it being argued in support of the latter view that the report being in the nature of a judgment is calculated to unduly influence the jury, and furthermore that it deprives the party against whom the report is made of the benefit of having the jury hear the evidence and observe the conduct of the witnesses upon whose testimony the report was based (Plimpton v. Somerset, supra. jury;[27] and it is not competent for the legislature to create presumptions of guilt from facts which are not only consistent with innocence, but which are not even a constituent part of the crime of which defendant is accused.[28] The court cannot, without the consent of the parties, substitute itself for the jury and pass upon the effect of evidence and find the facts involved inthe issue;[29] but where there is a species of evidence which by the known and established rules of law is conclusive, it is the duty of the court to pronounce it so.[30] Since an ultimate right of trial by jury remains it is no infringement of such right for the court to set aside a verdict as against the weight of evidence.[31] Statutes have also been held to be constitutional which authorize an appellate court to review cases upon the facts and to award new trials upon the ground that the verdict is excessive or against the weight of evidence,[32] or to reverse an order of the trial court denying a motion for a new trial based on such grounds,[33] or to suggest to an appellee the amount to which it deems a judgment to be excessive where it is not reversible on other grounds and to affirm the judgment upon the filing of a remittitur;[34] and in Illinois an appellate court may review judgments upon the facts and reverse and enter final judgment without remanding,[35] but this practice was authorized in that jurisdiction prior to the adoption of the constitution.[36]

A contrary rule prevails in the United States courts, it being held that in these courts the court cannot in any case direct a nonsuit against plaintiff's consent (Schuchardt v. Allens, 1 Wall. (U. tutional;[41] and if the action is of a purely equitable character, there being no constitutional right to a jury trial in such cases, the court may direct a verdict, although the evidence is conflicting.[42] In a criminal case, however, where defendant pleads not guilty and demands a jury he has an absolute right to a jury trial, and the court cannot direct a verdict of conviction no matter what the state of the evidence may be.[43]

H. Effect of Provision For Other Remedy — 1. In General. An act is not unconstitutional which authorizes a trial without a jury or before a jury of less than twelve men, where it merely provides a choice of remedies which neither party is compelled to resort to.[44]

2. Appeal to Court Where Jury May Be Had — a. In Civil Cases. The constitutional guarantee of a trial by jury does not mean that a party is always entitled to a jury trial in the first instance, but the right is secured if there is a right of appeal without any unreasonable restrictions to a court in which a jury trial can be had,[45] and where such right of appeal is secured a statute is not unconstitutional which provides for a trial in the first instance without a jury or before a jury of less than twelve.[46] Accordingly a statute is not unconstitutional which increases the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace so as to include an amount not cognizable by the justice at the time of the adoption of the constitution, provided such an appeal is allowed.[47] A statute, however, is unconstitutional as impairing the right to trial by jury if the right of appeal is unreasonably restricted,[48] or if the only appeal allowed is directly to an appellate court not having a jury,[49] or to a court where the constitutional number of twelve jurors cannot be had.[50]

b. In Condemnation Proceedings. is capital or infamous.[56] To secure the right of trial by jury the appeal allowed must be to the court in which a trial by jury can be had.[57]

VI. Qualifications of Jurors and Exemptions.

A. Qualifications — 1. In General. In most jurisdictions the qualifications of jurors are expressly prescribed by statute,[58] and a statute prescribing the qualifications of jurors may be made applicable to cases pending at the time of its enactment.[59] Where a statute specifies certain qualifications it necessarily excludes all persons who do not possess the qualifications specified;[60] but a statute providing that certain classes of persons shall not be capable of serving on juries does not mean that all persons except such as are expressly excluded are qualified to serve.[61] In the absence of statute a person is not disqualified as a juror because he is the holder of public office,[62] or because of race or color.[63] Women were not at common law qualified to serve as jurors,[64] except in the case of writs de ventre inspiciendo.[65] It will be presumed that persons selected as jurors are qualified, and the burden of proving the existence of a disqualification is upon the party alleging it.[66]

2. Physical Capacity. A person is not qualified to sit on a jury who is physi-

3. Age. In some jurisdictions a juror is disqualified if under twenty-one,[70] or over a certain age;[71] but being over the age at which the juror may claim an exemption is not a disqualification if this is under the age prescribed as a disqualification by the statute.[72]

4. Intelligence and Education. In the absence of constitutional or statutory provision a juror is not necessarily disqualified merely because he is ignorant,[73] or lacking in education,[74] or unfamiliar with the meaning of legal terms and expressions;[75] and while it is in some states provided that jurors shall be "intelligent" persons,[76] the statutes do not attempt to prescribe the requisite degree of intelligence,[77] which must necessarily vary in different cases according to the nature and difficulty of the matters to be considered,[78] and is always to be determined by the court in the exercise of a sound discretion.[79] Inability to read and write is not a disqualification to act as a juror,[80]

5. KNOWLEDGE OF LANGUAGE. While in some states there are statutes making ignorance of the English language a disqualification for jury duty,[82] it is held in most jurisdictions to be a disqualification whether expressly so provided or not,[83] and the court may of its own motion reject a juror for this cause, although the juror was not objected to by the parties.[84] Whether a juror has a sufficient knowledge of English to render him competent is a question for the determination of the trial judge.[85] In Canada where the French language as well as English is officially recognized, ignorance of English is not a disqualification or ground of challenge.[86]

In Colorado the contrary has been held on the ground that in many counties of that state it would be practically impossible to obtain an English-speaking jury, and that the right to a fair and impartial trial can be preserved by the use of an interpreter (Trinidad v. Simpson, 5 Colo. 65); and since the above decision it has been expressly provided by statute that a juror otherwise qualified shall not be subject to challenge because he speaks the Spanish or Mexican language and is not able to understand English (In re Allison, 13 Colo. 525, 22 Pac. 820, 16 Am. jurisdictions a juror is disqualified if he has been convicted of certain crimes,[89] is at the time under indictment,[90] or has within a certain time been indicted for an offense of the same character as that charged against the accused.[91] The disqualification applies, although the conviction was prior to the enactment of the provisions making it a disqualification;[92] but unless the statute so provides a conviction in one state does not disqualify a person to serve as a juror in another.[93] An absolute pardon removes the disqualification to act as a juror imposed by statutes providing that persons convicted of certain crimes shall be disqualified.[94]

7. Bigamist or Polygamist. Under the United States statutes a bigamist or polygamist is disqualified as a juror and subject to challenge in any prosecution for bigamy or polygamy,[95] and under a statute requiring jurors to be electors and providing that electors must not be members of any organization which teaches its adherents to commit the crimes of bigamy or polygamy, a member of the Mormon church cannot be a juror;[96] but a polygamist is not disqualified as a juror under a statute providing that no polygamist shall be entitled to vote or hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument.[97]

but the legislature of one state may provide that persons residing for a part of the time in that state, although actually domiciled elsewhere, shall be deemed to be residents for the purpose of jury duty and compel them to serve.[13]

11. Property Qualifications — a. In General. In England a property qualification for jury duty was required by statute at a very early date,[14] and similar statutes have from time to time been enacted in many of the states in this country.[15] The statutes usually relate only to the ownership of real property,[16] but in some cases require the ownership of personal property of a certain value.[17] A number of the older statutes have been repealed and there has been a growing tendency to do away with the property qualifications formerly required, so that for the present law in any jurisdiction the statutes should be consulted.[18] Where a property qualification is required it must exist at the time of the trial and it is not sufficient that the juror was qualified at the time the jury-list was made out.[19]

b. Ownership or Occupancy of Real Estate. In England it was required by an early statute that jurors should be freeholders,[20] and in this country statutes have been enacted in a number of jurisdictions requiring as necessary qualifications for service that a juror must be an owner of real estate,[21] a freeholder,[22] or a

He need not be a father or a husband, but he must occupy the position toward others of head or chief of a domestic establishment. Nelson v. State, 57 Miss. 286, 34 Am. Rep. 444.

In Louisiana the act of 1805 provided that a juror must be a "housekeeper" (Parmele's Case, 2 Mart. 313); but it seems that this requirement was dispensed with by the act of 1831 (see Rondeau v. New Orleans Imp., etc., Co., 15 La. 160, as cited in Hennen Dig. La. p. 770).

Dec. 246; Carpenter v. Dame, 10 Ind. 125), but under this statute a juror is qualified if either a householder or freeholder (Lamphier v. State, 70 Ind. 317).

In Tennessee the act of 1835 provides that jurors shall be either freeholders, owners of an occupancy, or householders. State v. Bryant, 10 Yerg. 527.

In Texas it was held that the statute of 1856 requiring jurors to be freeholders or householders was superseded by the constitution of 1869–1870, which provided that all qualified voters should be qualified to sit as jurors (Wilson v. State, 35 Tex. 365; Maloy v. State, 33 Tex. 599); but this qualification is expressly required by the later statute of 1876 (Lester v. State, 2 Tex. App. 432).

What constitutes a householder.—A householder is one who is the head or master of a family; a person who occupies a house and has charge of and provides for a family therein. Lane v. State, 29 Tex. App. 310, 5 S. W. 827. The term implies the idea of a domestic establishment — the management of a household, and means something more than the mere occupancy of a room or house. Aaron v. State, 37 Ala. 106. A person who merely rents land is not a freeholder or householder within the meaning of the statute (Iverson v. State, 52 Ala. 170); but a man who resides with his wife and family whom he supports is a householder, although the title to the property is in his wife's name (Sylvester v. State, 72 Ala. 201); and a person living with his sister and her children in a part of the house used by him as a store, he paying the rent and furnishing the supplies, is a householder and a competent juror (Hall v. State, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 522).

25. Proffatt Jury Tr. § 115.

In Connecticut it was formerly necessary that a juror should be a freeholder (State v. Doan, 2 Root 451); but this qualification was dispensed with by the act of 1837 (Ladd v. Prentice, 14 Conn. 109).

In Illinois jurors were required to be freeholders until the act of 1827 which omitted this qualification. Kerwin v. People, 96 Ill. 206.

In Mississippi jurors were formerly required to be freeholders or householders (Byrd v. State, 1 How. 163), but the constitution now provides that no property qualification shall be required (Nelson v. State, 57 Miss. 286, 34 Am. Rep. 444, holding, however, that the requirement that a juror shall be a "householder" refers merely to his civil status and is not a property qualification).

The failure of an assessor to enter the name on the assessment roll of a person who has been duly assessed and whose name should have been entered does not disqualify such person as a juror. State v. Lowe, 56 Kan. 594, 44 Pac. 20.

The fact that the property is assessed in the name of another person by mistake does not disqualify a juror if he is the owner of the property and pays the taxes thereon. U. S. v. Hackett, 29 Fed. 848.

If it is not the juror's fault that he was not assessed and if he is the owner of taxable property and ready and willing to pay his taxes if allowed to do so, he is not disqualified. U. S. v. Reynolds, 1 Utah 226.

Time of payment under North Carolina statute.— Under the North Carolina statute the juror is qualified if he has paid his taxes for the year preceding the time when his name was placed on the jury-list, although he may not have paid his taxes for the year preceding the time of the trial (State v. Gardner, 104 N. C. 739, 10 S. E. 146; Sellers v. Sellers, 98 N. C. 13, 3 S. E. 917. See also State v. Davis, 109 N. C. 780, 14 S. Jurors summoned on a special venire are not within the application of the North Carolina statute requiring the payment of taxes; the only requirement prescribed for such jurors being that they shall be freeholders of the county. State v. Kilgore, 93 N. C. 533; State v. Carland, 90 N. C. 668.

Time of payment.— It is held under the Florida statute that the non-payment of a capitation tax which has been assessed but which is not due and payable does not disqualify a juror (Smith v. State, 29 Fla. 408, 10 So. 894), and that the disqualification for non-payment does not attach until after the time has elapsed during which the taxpayer is allowed to pay his taxes without coercion (Collins v. State, 31 Fla. 574, 12 So. 906).

Under the Texas statute the court may dispense with the requirement of the payment of poll-taxes if the requisite number of jurors who have paid their poll-taxes cannot be found within the county (San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Lester, (Civ. App. 1904) 84 S. W. 401), but not otherwise (Taylor v. State, (Cr. App. 1904) 81 S. W. 933).

U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 812 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 627], which provides that no person shall be summoned as a juror more than once in two years, does not contemplate that twenty-four months must elapse between the close of the term at which a juror is summoned and served and the beginning of the next term at which he is competent to serve. U. S. v. Reeves, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,139, 3 Woods 199.

In Texas a juror is not disqualified unless his prior service within the prescribed time was for as much as six days (Monk v. State, 27 Tex. App. 450, 11 S. W. 460; Thompson v. State, 19 Tex. App. 593; Welsh v. State, 3 Tex. App. 413), and the statute does not apply to the criminal cases (Hunter v. State, 30 Tex. App. 314, 17 S. W. 414).

The object of these statutes is to get rid of an objectionable class of persons known as professional jurors. Bissell v. Ryan, 23 Ill. 566; Burden v. People, 26 Mich. 162.

To constitute serving as a juror the juror must have actually sat in the trial of a case and not merely have been summoned (State v. Lowe, 56 Kan. 594, 44 Pac. 20; State v. Thorne, 81 N. In Illinois it was formerly a ground of challenge to any juror that he had been sworn as a juror at any term within a year (see Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 392; Bissell v. Ryan, 23 Ill. 517); but under the act of 1874 the right of challenge was restricted to a juror who is "not of the regular panel" (Mueller v. Rebhan, 94 Ill. 142. B. Exemptions — 1. Grounds. There are in probably all of the states certain classes of persons who are exempt by statute from serving on juries.[42] These exemptions usually include public officers of the state or United States,[43] judges and officers of the court,[44] attorneys,[45] sheriffs,[46] constables,[47] coroners,[48] physicians,[49] ministers,[50] postmasters,[51] members of fire companies,[52] military companies,[53]

Honorary members.— In Georgia honorary members of military companies are not exempt from jury duty (Stewart v. State, 23 Ga. 181), but under the Maryland statute an honorary member is exempt from one year from the date of his certificate of membership, provided the same be filed with the clerk persons over a certain age,[54] persons having previously served as jurors within a certain time,[55] or constituting the standing grand jury of a county for the year,[56] and such others as the statutes of the particular state may provide for.[57]

2. NATURE OF EXEMPTION. An exemption from jury duty is not a disqualification to act as a juror but is a mere personal privilege which the juror may claim or waive,[58] and if he does not claim his privilege the parties have no right to object to him on this account.[59] The fact that jurors who are exempt are summoned on the panel is no ground for a challenge to the array,[60] or a motion to

quash the venire;[61] nor is the exemption any ground of challenge to a particular juror.[62] Neither does the fact that jurors who are exempt but otherwise qualified served upon the jury in any way affect the validity of the proceedings,[63] or furnish any ground for setting aside the verdict,[64] granting a new trial,[65] or arresting judgment.[66] A person who is exempt by law from serving on juries cannot be required to serve on a special venire,[67] but may be required to serve as a talesman.[68]

3. Evidence of Exemption. The question whether a person drawn as a juror comes within an exemption is for the determination of the court,[69] and in its determination the usual practice is to examine the person claiming it on his voir dire and to receive his own statement as prima facie evidence which if not controverted is usually regarded as sufficient to justify his discharge;[70] but the person claiming the exemption must show all the facts necessary to bring him within the provisions of the statute.[71]

persons have been exempt from jury duty the exemption continues and they cannot be required to serve until it is so revoked.[74]

C. Who May Raise Question of Qualification or Exemption. Objections which go to the fitness of jurors to serve may be urged by the parties to be affected by their finding but those which are matter of privilege or exemption can be urged only by the juror himself.[75] A juror cannot himself insist upon a disqualification as a ground of exemption,[76] nor can the parties object to a juror on the ground that he is exempt if he is otherwise qualified;[77] but the court may of its own motion reject a juror who is not qualified, although not challenged or objected to by either party.[78] Disqualification for disloyalty, under the federal statute,[79] inures to the benefit of all parties in all cases,[80] but the right of tendering the oath prescribed[81] is limited to the district attorney.[82]

VII. THE JURY-LIST.

A. In General. The first step in the organization of a jury is the selection from the general public of the names of those from whom the panel for a particular term or terms of court is to be drawn.[83]

B. At Common Law. At common law there was no prior selection of a jury-list by persons other than the summoning officer, but the sheriff or other officer selected as he summoned.[84] The practice led to many abuses,[85] and has now to a considerable extent been modified by statute in England,[86] and practically done away with in this country.[87]

C. Under Statutory Provisions. Under the statutes in this country the selection of jurors is taken out of the hands of the summoning officer and vested in certain boards or officers who select and prepare at certain intervals a general jury-list from which the panels for particular terms of court are drawn,[88] the object being as far as possible to obviate the possibility of packing juries or selecting them with reference to particular cases,[89] and also to equalize the burden of serving on juries among all the persons of the county qualified therefor.[90] A similar system is in force in Canada.[91] In some jurisdictions the statutes provide that the selection of the jury-list shall be made by the county commissioners,[92]

The provision that the court may appoint commissioners is not mandatory and the court may, instead of appointing commission-selected,[3] or it may make a special provision as to the selection of the jury-list in particular counties.[4] In the federal courts under the act of 1879 the list is made up by a jury commissioner appointed by the court acting with the clerk of the court.[5]

D. Jury Commissioners — 1. Appointment. Jury commissioners are ordinarily appointed by the court,[6] and are not judicial officers within the application of a constitutional provision requiring that judicial officers shall be elected;[7] but in one jurisdiction at least it is provided by statute that they shall be elected by the qualified voters of the county in the manner provided for the election of county officers.[8] The statutes fixing the time for the appointment of jury commissioners are merely directory.[9]

The New York statute of 1901 providing for the appointment of a commissioner of jurors in each county of the state having a population of one million or more, who shall be appointed by the justices of the appellate division of the supreme court, is constitutional as to the county of New York, since as to this county it creates a new office after the adoption of the constitution which may be filled in such manner as the legislature shall direct (Allison v. Welde, 172 N. Y. 421, 65 N. E. 263); but is unconstitutional as to the county of Kings, since the office of jury commissioner in that county was, at the time of the adoption of the present constitution, a county office, and the statute changes the power of appointment from a county to a state authority (In re Brenner, 170 N. Y. 185, 63 N. E. 133 [affirming 67 N. Y. App. Div. 375, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 689 (reversing 35 Misc. 212, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 744)]).

In Georgia the jury commissioners must be discreet persons and not county officers. McLain v. State, 71 Ga. 279, holding, however, that a county school commissioner is not a county officer within the application of the statute, and that an appointment to that office is not a disqualification to act as a jury commissioner.

tory.[11] Where the jury commissioners are required to take an oath before entering upon the discharge of their duties, they are not qualified to act until they have done so,[12] and where the clerk is ex officio a member of the commission it has been held that his oath of office as clerk is not sufficient;[13] but on the contrary it has been held that where the judge is ex officio a member of the commission his oath of office is sufficient and that he need not take the oath prescribed for the jury commissioners.[14] A jury commissioner is disqualified to serve in selecting jurors for a murder trial where he is a near relative of deceased,[15] or in a criminal case where he has previously taken an active part in securing defendant's arrest;[16] but in the absence of a showing of any unfairness or partiality it is no ground of challenge to the array that a jury commissioner has an action pending which will be determined by a jury drawn from the list selected by him,[17] nor is such an interest as the members of a municipality may have in a prosecution for an offense against its property sufficient to disqualify the officers of the municipality to act in making up the jury-list.[18] So also it has been held that on a trial for arson the fact that the owner of the burned building was a member of the jury commission was not ground for quashing the venire in the absence of a showing that he actually participated in drawing the jury for that particular trial.[19]

3. Term of Office. The term of office of jury commissioners is regulated by statute and varies in different jurisdictions.[20] In some a new commission is appointed at each term of court to select jurors for the succeeding term,[21] in others they hold office at the will of the court appointing them;[22] while in others

In Louisiana the statute provides that no person holding any office under the state or any parish or municipality therein shall be competent to hold the office of jury commissioner (State v. Fuselier, 51 La. Ann. 1317, 26 So. 264); but it is held that a person by accepting the office of jury commissioner and qualifying as such thereby vacates any other office previously held incompatible therewith and becomes a competent jury commissioner (State v. Fuselier, supra; State v. Scott, 110 La. 369, 34 So. 479).

In Texas, although the statute provides that jury commissioners shall have no suit in court requiring the intervention of a jury, it is held that the fact that one of the commissioners was interested in a pending suit is not ground for challenge to the array. Whittle v. State, (Cr. App. 1902) 66 S. W. 771.

In federal courts.— Acts of congress of 1879 provide that the court shall appoint a jury commissioner who shall be a citizen of good standing and shall reside in the district in which the court is held and who shall be a well known member of the principal political party in the district opposing that to which the clerk belongs. they are appointed to serve for a definite length of time;[23] but a commissioner whose term of office has expired may act until his successor is duly appointed and qualified,[24] and if a vacancy occurs during the term of office the court may appoint a successor for the unexpired term.[25]

4. COMPENSATION. Jury commissioners are entitled to compensation for their services in making up the jury-list, the amount of which is regulated by statute.[26]

E. Preparation of List — 1. IN GENERAL. While the statutes vary as to certain details the essential steps in making up the jury-list consist in: (1) A selection by the proper officers of a list of names of those persons within the county qualified to serve as jurors; (2) the signing, certification, and return of this list to the clerk of the court, to be filed or recorded by him; and (3) the copying of the names contained on the list upon separate slips or ballots which are deposited in the jury box or wheel from which the panel is subsequently to be drawn.[27] Until all of these steps have been completed a jury panel cannot legally be drawn from the box.[28]

2. WHO MAY OR MUST ACT — a. In General. The jury commissioners appointed to make the selection cannot delegate that duty to any other person but must themselves make the selection,[29] and they cannot by subsequently ratifying a selection made by some other person render the selection valid.[30] A majority, however, of the commissioners are competent to act,[31] even where the absent member is the judge[32] or clerk,[33] who in some jurisdictions are members of the jury commission.

b. De Facto Officer. The selection of a jury-list by a de facto jury commissioner is as regular as a selection by a commissioner de jure,[34] and is no ground for a challenge to the array.[35] It is not competent in this collateral manner to question the commissioner's title to his office,[36] or the validity of the law under which he was appointed.[37]

3. Selection of Names — a. In General. The commissioners in selecting the names to compose the jury-list have full power to decide as to who are fit to serve as jurors or whether certain persons possess the qualifications prescribed by the statutes,[38] and in the absence of any showing of fraud or corruption their decision will not be interfered with;[39] but the list must be selected without distinction from all the persons of the county qualified to serve as jurors,[40] and where the statute specifically prescribes the class of persons from whom the list is to be selected, a failure to select the list from this class is a fatal irregularity.[41] It does not invalidate the list or furnish any ground of challenge to the array that the commissioners by accident and without fraudulent design returned on the list more than the proper number of names,[42] or that some of the names were of persons disqualified[43] or exempt from jury duty.[44] The fact that the commissioners occupied an unnecessarily long time in preparing the list does not affect its validity,[45] but merely renders them liable to punishment for failing to exercise due diligence.[46] Where the list is made out in the first instance by the selectmen and then reported to a meeting of the town, the town may adopt it in whole or only in part and substitute other names in the place of those rejected.[47] In the federal courts the list is selected by the commissioner and the clerk, each selecting alternately the name of a person having the prescribed qualifications until a list of not less than three hundred is made up.[48]

b. Time and Place of Selection. The statutes prescribing the time for selecting the jury-list are held to be merely directory, and if the list is at a later date properly selected and returned the delay furnishes no ground of objection to the panel.[49] Under the Louisiana statute the place of meeting for selecting the jury-list may be at any convenient point within the parish which the clerk may designate.[50]

State v. Potts, 100 N. C. 457, 6 S. E. 657.

Additional boxes for jurors of city or town.— In New York the statute of 1861 required an additional box to be provided, containing the names of jurors residing in the city or town where the courts were to be held, from which jurors were to be drawn to supply deficiencies in the regular panel (People v. McGeery, 6 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 653; Gardiner v. People, 6 Park. Cr. (N. In federal courts under the jury law of 1879, requiring that in districts where there is a clerk for each place of holding United States courts there shall be as many jury boxes as there are clerks, it has been held that in a district where there was but one clerk of the circuit court but that court was held in three places in each of which there was a clerk of the district court, the circuit court should use three jury-boxes instead of one, all being supplied with names by the clerk of the circuit court in conjunction with the general jury commissioner. 2. Form and Requisites of Ballots. Some of the statutes provide that the separate slips or ballots on which the names are written shall state the juror's residence,[61] or his occupation,[62] and that the slips on being put into the jury wheel or box shall be rolled up or folded.[63] It is a material irregularity and ground for challenge to the array that the ballots were not rolled or folded,[64] but not that a few of the ballots did not show the juror's residence [65] or that some of the jurors were designated by their initials instead of by their christian names.[66]

3. Custody and Fastenings. After the names are placed in the jury-box or wheel it should be locked and sealed,[67] and as an additional precaution it is sometimes required that the box and the key shall be kept in the custody of different officers.[68] Where the statute provides that the box shall be kept in the custody of the commissioners it is sufficient if it is kept in a vault of one of the public offices where only they have access to it [69] or it may by consent of all the commissioners be kept by one of them at his home.[70] Any neglect of duty as to the proper fastenings, care, and custody of the box is highly reprehensible,[71] and is sometimes made the subject of a heavy penalty.[72] It has been held to be a ground of challenge to the array that the jury-box was not sealed,[73] that it did not have the proper number of seals,[74] or that the key and the box were not kept in the custody of the separate officers as required by law,[75] although there was no evidence of the box having been tampered with;[76] while on the other hand it has been held that the fact that the box was not kept locked is no ground of challenge to the array in the absence of any showing of fraud or prejudice to the parties.[77]

G. Correction and Revision of List. It is the duty of the commissioners to revise the jury-list as often as is required by the statute,[78] but a failure to do so is not ground for challenging the array or quashing a venire drawn from the original list.[79] In some cases the statutes provide that the jury-box must be exhausted before another box is filled,[80] while in others it is provided that a new list shall be made annually which entirely supersedes the old list, and any names remaining in the box from the preceding year are not carried forward but taken out and destroyed.[81] In Louisiana the list of names in the box must be supplemented every six months or oftener if the court so directs so as to bring the number of names in the box up to three hundred.[82] When a panel has been quashed and a new selection ordered because of irregularities in the making up of the list or custody of the jury-box, the commissioners should not undertake to purge the list already in the box and select the new list entirely therefrom,[83] but should make the selection from all of the qualified jurors of the county, in which selection, however, the names of persons on the original list should not be absolutely excluded.[84]

H. Errors and Irregularities — 1. Presumptions. In the absence of evidence to the contrary it will be presumed that the proceedings in selecting and making up the jury-list were regular and that the statutes were complied with.[85]

2. Effect. The statutory provisions with regard to making up the jury-list are ordinarily held to be merely directory,[86] and errors and irregularities in failing to comply strictly with their provisions which are not prejudicial to the parties do not invalidate the list or furnish any ground for challenging the array;[87] but a substantial compliance with the law is necessary,[88] and a disregard of the material provisions which make up the essential features of the system and are designed to secure and preserve a fair and impartial trial is not a mere irregularity and is ground for challenging the array,[89] even though it does not affirmatively appear that any injury has resulted therefrom.[90] Where it appears that the jury list is invalid, the court may of its own motion declare it to be so,[91] and may require the commissioners to make out a new list.[92]

directory,[94] but which as to their material provisions, designed for securing a fair and impartial jury, must be substantially complied with.[95] The proceeding as conducted in most jurisdictions consists in a drawing from the box or wheel by the proper officers of a sufficient number of names to make up the panel, a record of the proceedings being kept which is afterward signed and filed in the office of the clerk, and the making of a list of the names drawn which is signed and certified and delivered to the sheriff.[96] If in drawing the jury the names of persons are drawn who are dead or have removed from the county, these names should be excluded and others drawn to complete the panel,[97] and it has been held that the same course should be pursued as to persons disqualified.[98] Where at the time for drawing the jury a new list has been prepared but not filed, the jury is properly drawn from the last list filed.[99] In the absence of statute the drawing need not be public,[1] nor have the parties or their attorneys any right to be present.[2] The most important requirement is that the panel shall be drawn and not arbitrarily selected, and any act of this character on the part of the clerk or other officers is ground for challenge to the array.[3]

b. Who May or Must Act. In most jurisdictions the drawing of the jury panel is done by the clerk,[4] and in the absence of the regular clerk the deputy

In North Carolina the names are drawn from the box by a child not over ten years of age under the supervision of the county commissioners. If the commissioners fail to act the panel is drawn by the sheriff and the clerk may act.[5] In one jurisdiction at least the panel may be drawn by the clerk alone without the presence or assistance of any other officer,[6] but in most jurisdictions the drawing must be in the presence of or with the assistance of certain other officers.[7] Ordinarily a majority of those required to be present are authorized to act,[8] but the clerk is a necessary member of that majority.[9] If those officers are present which the statute requires, the presence of some other officer not by law required to be present will not invalidate the drawing;[10] but the rule is otherwise if this officer is an interested party and participates in the proceedings.[11] Where the panel is drawn by jury commissioners a de facto jury commissioner is competent to act.[12] In proceedings where the sheriff selects as well as summons the jury the duty cannot be delegated to a deputy.[13]

c. Notice of Drawing. Where the statutes require that notice of the drawing shall be given,[14] it is not necessary, if a public notice is required, to give notice by publication in a newspaper but any public notice is sufficient;[15] and if the officers required to be notified are actually present at the drawing the fact that no notice was given them is immaterial.[16]

d. Time and Place. The drawing of the jury is usually required to be made a certain number of days before the term at which they are to serve,[17] or upon the order of the court.[18] Under other statutes the panel for each term is drawn at the preceding term,[19] and under others not until the sitting of the court.[20] Where the drawing is required to be at least a certain number of days before the term it is a ground of challenge to the array if made within a less time;[21] but they need not be drawn exactly that number of days before the term, and it is no ground of challenge to the array if they are drawn more than this number of days before the term.[22] Where the statute requires the drawing to be in the clerk's office it is a sufficient compliance where the drawing is in an adjoining room opening into and constituting a part of the main office.[23]

e. Size of Panel. The statutes usually prescribe a particular number of jurors to be drawn on the panel[24] or provide that a certain number shall be drawn unless the court otherwise orders.[25] It is a ground of challenge to the array if the panel consists of less than the number prescribed by statute,[26] but not where it is larger than the statute requires;[27] but in the absence of statute the sheriff has no authority to add to the number regularly drawn.[28] If between the time of selecting the panel and the beginning of the trial the law be changed so as to require a larger panel the parties have the right to demand the larger panel.[29]

any statutory provision to the contrary the panels for the grand and petit juries may be drawn at the same time.[30] So also two sets of jurors for two different courts may be drawn at the same time if they are kept separate and a distinct panel of each is given to the sheriff;[31] but if the clerk merely draws the number necessary for both courts and then selects from this list the jurors for each court it is ground for challenging the array.[32]

g. Record and Certification of List Drawn. The list drawn to constitute a panel should be signed and certified,[33] which in the absence of the clerk may be done by the deputy clerk.[34] The statutes also in some cases require that the list drawn shall be filed in the clerk's office subject to inspection[35] or published,[36] or that the clerk shall make and keep a record of the names drawn.[37]

h. Interference With Drawing or Selection. Any participation or interference by one of the parties in the drawing or selection of the jury panel is ground for challenge to the array;[38] and where the officer selects as well as summons the panel, as under the English practice, it is also ground for challenge to the array if any jurors are selected upon the nomination or request of a party or his counsel.[39] proper,[44] but that if the jury was properly drawn and was summoned, the fact that no writ was issued did not affect the validity of the proceedings.[45] In most jurisdictions the writ has been expressly abolished,[46] or it is held that it is not necessary but that any order or direction to the sheriff is sufficient,[47] for under the statutory system of summoning jurors, where the sheriff summons from a list furnished by the clerk and acts merely in a ministerial capacity, the absence of a writ of venire facias cannot operate to the prejudice of the parties.[48] Although the term "venire facias" is still used in some jurisdictions it does not contemplate the common-law writ but merely process.[49] In many of the states when the drawing is concluded the clerk merely makes a copy of the names of the jurors drawn which he delivers to the sheriff and which per se constitutes the order and authority of the sheriff to summon.[50] In Virginia a venire facias is indispensable for summoning a jury in a felony case,[51] and a failure of the record in such cases to show that there was a venire facias is a fatal defect;[52] and while the statute provides that no irregularity in any writ of venire facias shall be sufficient to set aside a verdict unless the party making the objection was injured by the irregularity or unless the objection was made before the swearing of the jury,[53] this provision applies only to irregularities in the writ and not to cases where no writ was issued.[54]

d. Contents and Requisites of Writ — (i) In General. The ordinary form of a writ of venire facias is an order to the sheriff that on a certain day he cause to come before the court a certain number of good and lawful men of the county to act as jurors.[56] The writ should be issued in the name of the state,[57] and directed to the sheriff of the county,[58] and in the absence of statute may be made returnable at such time as the court may direct.[59] A venire for a petty jury should not contain a panel for a grand jury also; they are distinct bodies and should be separately summoned.[60] The writ need not set out the qualifications of the jurors,[61] a direction to summon good and lawful men being sufficient;[62] nor is it necessary or proper that the writ should go into details as to how the sheriff should proceed in the performance of his duty.[63] It is not necessary that the officers who drew the jury should certify on the venire as to what names were drawn,[64] or that the names of the jurors to be summoned should be embodied in the writ.[65] The venire need not refer to the order of court under which it was issued,[66] or to any special pleas or issues to be decided,[67] and in a joint action against two defendants where only one has pleaded and joined issue the venire need not mention the other defendant.[68] Mere irregularities or technical defects in the form of the venire are immaterial and furnish no ground for quashing the

In New Jersey under a statute providing that a justice should not issue jury process until appearance of defendant, it has been held ground for reversal where the venire was issued before his appearance (Sutton v. Coleman, 2 N. J. L. 501).

In Pennsylvania under the statute of 1836 providing for trials in the supreme court, it was held that criminal cases pending in the supreme court ought to be brought to issue before issuing process to summon jurors to try them (Com. v. Simpson, 2 Grant 438); but the act of 1876 provides that each venire shall issue at least thirty days before the first day on which the jurors to be summoned under it shall be called to attend (see Stamey v. Barkley, 211 Pa. Where there has been a change of venue the jury should be summoned by the sheriff of the county where the trial is to be had. Vance v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 162.

In territorial courts where no provision has been made by the territorial legislature for summoning jurors in cases where the United States is a party or where the case arises under the constitution or laws of the United States, the court has common-law act;[75] and it has been held to be reversible error where in the absence of any suggestion of such disqualification the venire was directed to and executed by an officer other than the sheriff.[76] The deputy sheriff may, however, act in the place of the sheriff.[77] In justices' courts where the jury is summoned by a constable it must be done by the constable of the township where the trial is to be held,[78] and it is reversible error to deliver a venire to a deputy sheriff for service instead of to the constable if objection to such action is duly made.[79]

(II) Bias or Interest of Officer as Disqualification. It is essential to the fair and impartial administration of justice that the jury shall be selected and summoned by officers having no interest in the matters to be decided by them.[80] An officer is not qualified to act in summoning a jury if he is a party to the action,[81] a relative,[82] an attorney of one of the parties,[83] or if he is interested in the event of the action, although not a party of record;[84] but a very remote or contingent interest will not disqualify.[85] Where a jury is summoned by an officer who is disqualified for such reasons as above stated, it is ground for challenge to the array,[86] and this rule applies even under the statutory system of procuring power to issue the venire to the marshal of the United States. U. S. v. Kuntze, 2 Ida. (Hasb.) 480, 21 Pac. 407.

In Kings county, New York, the act of 1858 provided that jurors for Kings county should thereafter be summoned by the commissioner of jurors and that the method of summoning provided in the act should be exclusive. Kenny v. People, 31 N. Y. 330.

A de facto deputy sheriff may act in summoning the jury. State v. McGraw, 35 S. C. 283, 14 S. E. 630.

The sheriff may direct bailiffs to summon a jury as they then become his deputies for that purpose (Conner v. State, 25 Ga. 515, 71 Am. Dec. 184; McGuffie v. State, 17 Ga. 497); but it has been held that a deputy sheriff could not delegate his duty in summoning juries to a constable (McMasters v. Carothers, 1 Pa. St. 324).

In a proceeding where the sheriff selects as well as summons the jury, the act is in its nature judicial, requiring judgment and discretion, and cannot be delegated by him to a deputy. Ayers v. Novinger, 8 Pa. St. 412; McMullen v. Orr, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 342.

The deputies need not be formally appointed in writing by the sheriff to summon jurors (Gillum v. State, 62 Miss. 547), nor is it necessary that there should be any indorsement of such appointment on the writ (State v. Toland, 36 S. C. 515, 15 S. E. 599).

Right to opportunity to object to officer.— Where a statute provides that a justice issuing a venire shall deliver it to a constable who is disinterested between the parties "and against whom no reasonable objection shall have been made by either party," it implies that the parties must be given an opportunity to object, and if the venire is issued at the request of one party in the absence of and without notice to the other it is ground for setting aside the panel so summoned. jurors where the sheriff does not select the panel but summons from a list drawn by other officers, for it would still be possible for him to gain an advantage by neglecting to summon such of the jurors drawn as he might consider unfavorable to his interests.[87] It is not, however, necessarily a ground of challenge that the officer who summoned the jury is a witness,[88] a relative of the prosecuting attorney,[89] a relative of a person who is security for costs,[90] or that he furnished the information on which the warrant of arrest was issued;[91] nor is it a ground for challenge to the array that the clerk who had nothing to do with drawing the jury but who issued the venire to the officer is a party[92] or an attorney of one of the parties.[93] A party who expressly consents that the jury may be summoned by an officer, who if objected to would be disqualified, cannot afterward challenge the array on this ground.[94]

(III) Appointment of Substitute For Disqualified Officer. If the sheriff is disqualified to act the jury should be summoned by the coroner[95] or by such other disinterested person as the court may appoint.[96] The court may properly appoint an elisor if there is no coroner[97] or if the coroner is also disqualified,[98] but in a case where the sheriff is disqualified it is error for the court to appoint one of his deputies to summon the jury.[99] The appointment of some other person to act where the sheriff is disqualified may be made at the instance of either party[1] or by the court of its own motion.[2] The court may base its decision as to the sheriff's interest or prejudice upon ex parte affidavits,[3] but is not bound to take the affidavit of a party that the sheriff is prejudiced against him as conclusive, and his discretion in ruling such a motion unless clearly abused will not be interfered with.[4]

f. Service of Writ or Process. The statutes in some cases provide how the writ or process shall be served upon the individual jurors;[5] but a failure to comply with such provisions is available only to the juror in proceedings against him for non-attendance, and does not affect his competency, and if he was regularly drawn and attends, the parties cannot object to the irregularity;[6] but the rule is otherwise where the jurors were not legally summoned and in consequence failed to attend.[7]

g. Return — (I) In General. Statutory provisions as to the time for returning the venire or other process are merely directory,[8] and irregularities in this regard if not prejudicial are not ground for challenge to the array.[9] So also grammatical errors or mere technical irregularities in the form of the return are immaterial,[10] it being sufficient if the meaning is clear and it appears that the proceedings were according to law.[11] In a proceeding where the officer selects the jury and is required by law to summon persons having certain qualifications his return must show that the persons summoned have the qualifications prescribed;[12] and where a precept issues to the sheriff and commissioners to draw a jury the return must show that the jurors summoned were previously drawn as directed.[13]

(II) Amendment of Return.[14] Irregularities and omissions in the sheriff's return to a venire may if objected to be cured by an amendment,[15] which may properly be allowed at any time during the term;[16] and such amendments are admissible in criminal as well as civil cases.[17]

b. Effect — (i) In General. Irregularities in drawing the jury panel, unless of a character prejudicial to the parties, are immaterial and furnish no ground for a challenge to the array,[21] or for arresting judgment or awarding a new trial;[22] but any substantial and material departure from the methods prescribed by statute, such as would probably produce a change in the panel or present a list of names different from that which would be produced by compliance with the law, is ground for challenge to the array.[23] The same rule applies to the summoning of the jury and mere irregularities are not material,[24] for if the jurors are regularly drawn and appear, their competency is not affected by the fact that they were not regularly summoned,[25] or that they appeared without any summons whatever.[26] Objections on account of irregularities in drawing or summoning the jury should be made before the jury is impaneled and sworn,[27] and if not so made are not ordinarily available after verdict on a motion in arrest or for a new trial.[28]

(II) Summoning Jurors Not Drawn. It is not ground for challenge to the array that through a mistake as to the identity of a juror a different person is summoned from the one drawn,[29] and this juror may be excused and the one who was drawn summoned and placed upon the panel;[30] but it is reversible error to compel a party against his consent to accept as one of the panel a juror who was not drawn.[31]

(III) Mistakes in Names of Jurors. It is no ground for challenge to the array or for quashing the venire that the name of a juror was not correctly stated on the panel,[32] or on the list served upon defendant in a criminal case,[33] where the parties have not been misled;[34] or that the initials of the juror's christian name instead of his full name were used;[35] nor, in the absence of any doubt as to the identity of the jurors as the ones summoned, is a variance between the names as sworn and as they appeared on the panel any ground for an arrest of judgment or new trial.[36]

B. Special Venires — 1. Grounds For Ordering — a. No Regular Panel in Attendance. Where for any reason there is no regular panel in attendance and there are cases to be tried which require the intervention of a jury, the court has power to order a special venire.[37] This is a common-law power,[38] but there are in withstanding there was not a full regular panel in attendance in the first instance.[63] Where one special venire for additional jurors is exhausted without obtaining a jury the court may order another, but all the jurors of each venire should be exhausted before recourse is had to the next.[64]

(iv) Summoning in Advance. The court may order a special venire for additional jurors to be summoned in advance in anticipation of the exhaustion of the regular panel,[65] but it is error to require the selection of a jury from such a venire where the original panel has been neither exhausted nor discharged.[66]

f. In Criminal Cases. The statutes in some jurisdictions provide that a special venire may be demanded for the trial of capital felonies,[67] but these statutes do not apply where in the particular case the death penalty could not be inflicted,[68] although if defendant demands a special venire in such cases and the court grants it it is not an error of which he can complain.[69] In North Carolina the granting of a special venire in a capital case is within the discretion of the court.[70]

2. Application and Order. A party need not request an order for a special venire for additional jurors until the regular panel has been called and the list of competent jurors exhausted,[71] and the court may order such a venire of its own

Special venire at special term.— Under the Alabama statute if a special term is called for the disposal of business generally, at which a capital case is to be tried, the special venire must include the regular jury as at regular terms, but if called only for the trial of a capital case a special venire of fifty jurors is to be summoned and if this be exhausted the jury is to be completed from talesmen. Ward v. State, 78 Ala. 441; Marton v. State, 77 Ala. 1.

Where several capital cases stand for trial the court must, under the present Alabama statute, draw a separate venire for each case. So a special venire cannot be demanded on a second trial for murder where defendant previously had been convicted of murder in the second degree, which is not a capital offense, if the previous conviction is pleaded as an acquittal of murder in the first degree (Jackson v. State, 78 Ala. 471; De Arman v. State, 77 Ala. 10); and where the statute provides that defendants under a certain age shall not be punishable by death, a special venire cannot be demanded where the prosecuting attorney admits that defendant is under that age (Walker v. State, 28 Tex. App. 503, 13 S. W. 860); but if defendant does not on the second trial plead his former conviction of murder in the second degree as an acquittal of murder in the first degree it is error not to summon a special venire (Linnehan v. State, 116 Ala. 471, 22 So. 662).

The prosecuting attorney cannot waive capital punishment where the statute provides that the jury shall determine the degree of the offense and the punishment to be inflicted, and such waiver cannot deprive defendant of his right to a special venire in a case where capital punishment might be inflicted. motion without any formal application therefor.[72] Where the statute provides that the judge shall enter an order on the minutes for the drawing of additional jurors it need not be written by the court in person but may be entered by the clerk.[73]

3. DRAWING OR SELECTION — a. In Criminal Cases. Special venires for the trial of criminal cases are in some jurisdictions drawn from the jury-box,[74] and in others are selected by the court[75] or by the sheriff.[76] It is not necessary that defendant should be present when the order for the special venire is made,[77] or when the jury is drawn,[78] although it is said to be the safer and better practice.[79] Where the venire is selected by the sheriff from the body of the county the only limitation upon his mode of selection is that he shall act impartially.[80]

b. Additional Jurors. The method of drawing or selecting additional jurors to supply a deficiency of those of the regular panel is regulated by the statutes.[81] In some cases the statutes provide for the drawing of such jurors from the jury-box,[82] or from a special box containing the names of jurors residing in the vicinity of the court;[83] but if in drawing such jurors the names in the jury-box are exhausted without completing the jury, the court may order additional jurors to be summoned from the body of the county.[84] In some cases the additional jurors are selected by the sheriff either from the bystanders or from the body of the county as the statute may direct,[85] while some of the statutes expressly make it discretionary with the court whether they shall be drawn from the jury-box or elected by the sheriff in this manner.[86] In other jurisdictions the additional jurors are not drawn but are either selected by the sheriff or summoned from a list furnished by the court.[87] A few of the statutes make a distinction between additional jurors to supply vacancies in the regular panel and those ordered to complete a trial jury after the regular panel has become exhausted, and provide that the former shall be drawn and the latter summoned by the sheriff.[88] Where the jurors are selected by the sheriff the court may direct him to summon only good and lawful men,[89] but cannot in any way control the sheriff as to what persons shall be selected[90] or direct him to discriminate for or against any class of citizens eligible for jury duty.[91]

scribes a maximum and a minimum limit to the number the court cannot disregard such limits;[93] but within the prescribed limits may determine and direct the number to be summoned,[94] and if the court directs a certain number and the clerk issues the venire for a less number it is ground for quashing the venire.[95] It is discretionary with the court as to the number to be summoned on a special venire where no regular jury has been drawn and summoned,[96] or where additional jurors are summoned to supply a deficiency in the regular panel.[97]

4. QUALIFICATIONS OF SPECIAL VENIREMEN.[98] A juror is not disqualified to serve on a special venire by having been a member of the original panel which was quashed or set aside merely because of some irregularity in drawing or summoning them.[99] In North Carolina special veniremen are only required to be freeholders,[1] and need not have paid their taxes as in the case of regular jurors,[2] and are not disqualified by reason of prior service as jurors within two years, as in the case of talesmen.[3]

5. FORM AND REQUISITES OF VENIRE. A special venire need not be entitled as of the case pending,[4] or show for what particular case it is ordered,[5] although it is not error for the court to specify the case or cases to be tried;[6] and where the jurors are to be selected from the body of the county it is only necessary to specify the number to be summoned.[7] The venire should be addressed to the sheriff,[8] but a substantial compliance with the forms prescribed by statute is sufficient,[9] and formal defects may be amended.[10] Where a case is continued a special venire may be ordered returnable to the term to which the case is continued.[11] The Alabama statute provides that special venires in capital cases shall include those summoned on the regular juries for the week,[12] but is construed as including only those summoned who have appeared and who constitute the regular jurors in fact.[13]

6. Summoning Venire — a. In General. Special venires, as in the case of regular juries, are to be summoned by the sheriff unless he is disqualified,[14] and usually the general provisions apply as to the grounds of disqualification,[15] and the appointment of substitutes.[16] In a few jurisdictions the statutes provide that a challenge to the panel may be made on account of any bias of the summoning officer which would be a ground of challenge to a juror;[17] but it is held not to be proper for the court of its own motion and against defendant's objection to examine the sheriff as to his bias.[18] The sheriff is disqualified if he is the prosecuting witness in the case,[19] but not merely because he has been subpœnaed as a witness [20] or because he has some knowledge of the facts and is liable to be called as a witness where no actual bias or prejudice is shown.[21] Where the statute requires a special oath to be administered where jurors not regularly drawn are to be summoned, a failure to administer such oath, if excepted to, is ground for reversal.[22] The sheriff must exercise diligence to find and serve all of the jurors named in the venire;[23] but if in the exercise of due diligence he is unable to do so the fact that all were not summoned is not ground for challenge to the array,[24]

A sheriff is not disqualified to summon a special venire, where he testifies that he has no actual bias against defendant, because he was examined as a witness for the state upon the preliminary examination of defendant (People v. Slater, 119 Cal. 620, 51 Pac. 957), or because he heard a former trial at which defendant was convicted (State v. Hall, (S. or for awarding a new trial.[25] A failure to summon the jurors in the manner provided by statute is immaterial if they appear,[26] but otherwise if in consequence of such failure they do not.[27]

b. Return of Officer — (i) In General. The return of the sheriff on a special venire should show what jurors were summoned,[28] the manner in which they were served,[29] and if any of the list furnished were not summoned the reasons for his failing to do so,[30] and the diligence used by him in his efforts to summon them;[31] but omissions of this character may be cured by amendment.[32] Where a list of those summoned on a special venire is required to be served on defendant, it is error for the court to begin to impanel the jury before the sheriff has made his return, since the return is the only authentic evidence as to who have been summoned;[33] but a failure to make the return at the time the writ was returnable is no ground of objection if the list was in fact served upon defendant the proper length of time before the trial,[34] and in the absence of such requirement it is no ground of challenge to a special venire that the return was not made until after the trial was begun.[35]

(ii) Amendment of Return. The court may permit the sheriff to amend his return to a special venire.[36]

7. Errors and Irregularities — a. Presumptions. Where a special venire has been ordered it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the circumstances authorizing the order existed,[37] that such order as the law requires was made and entered,[38] and that the proceedings thereunder in drawing, selecting, and summoning the jurors were regular.[39]

b. Effect. The statutory provisions as to selecting and summoning special venires are ordinarily held to be directory only,[40] and mere irregularities or failures strictly to comply therewith are not material unless shown to be actually prejudicial.[41] Such irregularities are not ground for challenge to the array or for quashing the venire,[42] and it is too late, on a motion for a new trial, to object to an irregularity to which no exception was previously taken.[43] Those provisions of the statutes, however, which constitute the essential features of the system must be substantially complied with and no material departure therefrom is permissible.[44]

c. Amendment of Record. Where it is necessary to make an entry on the minutes of the order or any of the proceedings in procuring a special venire, it is within the power of the court to correct the record in accordance with the facts,[45] which may be done after the return of the venire.[46]

C. Talesmen — 1. When Proper — a. In General. Where a sufficient number of jurors of the regular panel fail to appear or the number is subsequently reduced by challenges or otherwise so that a full jury cannot be obtained, the court may order a sufficient number to be summoned forthwith from the bystanders or others as the statute may direct, in order to make up the deficiency.[47] Those summoned in this manner are sometimes known as a tales de circumstantibus, or

Interrogating juror as to bias or opinion.— The sheriff ought not to interrogate jurors as to their opinions or bias when summoning them on a special venire, but the fact that he did so is not ground for a challenge to the panel under a statute providing that such a challenge "can be founded only on a material departure from the forms prescribed by law in respect to the drawing and return of the jury." obtained from jurors regularly selected and drawn than from those hastily selected by the sheriff,[57] and they should not be resorted to until the regular panel is exhausted.[58] It has accordingly been held not to be error where separate regular panels have been drawn and summoned to take jurors from one panel to supply a deficiency in the other instead of calling talesmen,[59] but the court is not obliged to do so;[60] and it has been held erroneous where there was a deficiency of jurors to transfer jurors from another court,[61] or from another division or department of the same court.[62] Nor is it necessary for the court before summoning talesmen to have the absent members of the regular panel called at the court-house door[63] or to send an officer after them[64] unless it is so provided by statute,[65] and even where an attachment has been issued for absent jurors the court is not obliged to delay the trial to await the return of the attachment.[66] Talesmen can be taken from the bystanders only for the trial of a particular case and not for the term,[67] and if the occasion for talesmen recurs they must be summoned and sworn again as before.[68]

where none are drawn or summoned or none of those summoned appear;[71] but if any number of regular jurors, however small, is present the jury may be completed from talesmen;[72] and if in selecting the trial jury the entire regular panel is exhausted without obtaining a single juror a jury may be made up entirely of talesmen.[73] It has been held in some states that the jury might be made up entirely of talesmen where all of the regular panel had been discharged,[74] or were engaged on another case,[75] or a challenge to the array had been sustained;[76] but the right to make up an entire jury from talesmen in such cases has been expressly denied,[77] and it seems to be the usual practice in such cases to issue a new venire.[78]

d. Summoning in Advance. In order to avoid delay the court may properly, in anticipation of a deficiency in the regular panel, order additional jurors to be summoned in advance to be called as talesmen if needed,[79] and it is not unusual in practice or improper for the sheriff to summon such jurors of his own motion;[80] but such jurors are not to be resorted to until the regular panel is exhausted.[81]

2. Courts That May Call Talesmen. The power of ordering talesmen to complete a jury is incident to all courts of record and essential to their proceed-

The practice is to be commended, for it tends to expedite the business of the court and is in no way calculated to prejudice the parties, but on the contrary is better calculated to secure an impartial jury than summoning talesmen from bystanders at the time of the trial (Bird v. State, 14 Ga. 43), and the trial court should be allowed a large measure of discretion in such matters (Mabry v. State, 50 Ark. 492, 8 S. ings;[82] but it has been held that a justice cannot order the summoning of talesmen,[83] except where such power is conferred by statute.[84]

3. Qualifications. Tales jurors are ordinarily required to have the same qualifications as regular jurors,[85] and are subject to the same challenges;[86] but in one jurisdiction at least they must not only have all the qualifications of regular jurors,[87] but in addition must also be freeholders.[88] Whether, however, a talesman is qualified is to be determined as of the time when he is called upon to serve,[89] and if he is otherwise qualified at the time, it is not necessary that his name should be in the jury-box,[90] or on the jury-list.[91] Statutes making prior service as a juror within a certain period a ground of challenge ordinarily apply to jurors called as talesmen.[92] The fact that a person called as a talesman is on the grand jury-list does not render him subject to challenge where he was not a member of the panel which found the indictment.[93]

4. Order For Summoning. It is not necessary for the court to issue a formal venire facias for the summoning of talesmen,[94] nor is it necessary for the sheriff or other officer to make and sign a written return.[95] The order for summoning talesmen may be made either orally[96] or in writing.[97] The order is not a part of the trial and may in a criminal case be made in defendant's absence,[98] or by a single judge, although two judges are required by law to be present at the trial.[99] The order need not be entered of record,[1] and need not be made returnable on the same day that it is issued.[2] Where the statute provides that talesmen may be summoned either from the bystanders or from the county at large, the court may make the order in the alternative form in the language of the statute.[3]

which is still the practice unless modified by statute,[5] and were taken from the bystanders or persons actually present.[6] They need not, however, be taken from persons accidentally present, but may be from persons whose presence the court or sheriff has taken previous means to obtain,[7] nor is it necessary that they should have been actually present at the time the order for summoning talesmen was made;[8] and if a jury cannot be completed from the bystanders recourse may be had to other persons not within the presence of the court.[9] The former system was found to be objectionable as encouraging the attendance of a class of persons commonly known as "professional jurors," who attended for the express purpose of getting themselves selected as talesmen, and in some jurisdictions statutes have been enacted with a view to correcting this evil.[10] Thus in some jurisdictions the range of selection is extended so as not to be confined to bystanders,[11] while in others bystanders are expressly excluded.[12] In Texas the statute provides that they shall not be selected from persons within the court-house or yard if they can be had elsewhere.[13] In other jurisdictions the selection is taken out of the hands of the sheriff, and if either party so demands the selection of the persons to be summoned must be made by the court[14] or the talesmen are drawn from the general jury-list,[15] or from a special tales box containing the names of qualified persons residing in the vicinity of the different courts.[16]

6. Number to Be Summoned. In the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary the number of persons to be summoned as talesmen is within the discretion of the court,[17] or of the sheriff in case the court makes no direction as to the number.[18] The court may order only so many as with those already sworn will be sufficient to complete the number necessary for a trial jury,[19] or on the contrary may order a number larger than the original panel.[20] If the jury is not completed from the talesmen first summoned the court may make such successive orders as may be necessary to complete the jury.[21]

7. Summoning — a. Who May Summon. Talesmen should properly be summoned by the sheriff unless he is absent or disqualified.[22] In case of absence or disqualification the statutes in some cases provide that they shall be summoned by some other attending officer,[23] the coroner,[24] or some suitable person to be appointed by the court.[25] The sheriff should not be allowed to summon talesmen in an action where one of his deputies is a party,[26] but it is not sufficient to disqualify the sheriff that defendant was in his custody on a particular charge and that the sheriff made the affidavit upon which he was thereafter held for a different offense;[27] nor is the mere fact that the officer who summoned talesmen was afterward called as a witness for the successful party assignable as error.[28]

The number which should be summoned depends largely upon the state of public sentiment and other like circumstances of which the trial court is the best judge (People v. Colt, 3 Hill (N. been once sworn with reference to summoning talesmen that he should be resworn whenever additional talesmen are to be summoned.[30]

8. Errors and Irregularities — a. Presumptions. Where talesmen have been ordered and impaneled in the trial of a case it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the circumstances authorizing the calling of such jurors existed,[31] and that the proceedings were in all respects regular and according to law.[32]

b. Effect. Errors and irregularities in failing to strictly comply with the statutory provisions as to the summoning of talesmen will be regarded as immaterial where no actual prejudice is shown;[33] but the court cannot disregard the provisions of the statutes and adopt an entirely different method from that prescribed for selecting and summoning such jurors.[34]

IX. THE TRIAL JURY.

A. Ordinary Juries — 1. Drawing or Selection of Jury — a. Drawing Jury. A trial jury is ordinarily selected by placing the names of those composing the panel for the term or trial in a box and drawing them out one at a time until a sufficient number for a jury is obtained,[35] which must be done in open court[36] and by the particular officer designated by statute,[37] and in criminal cases in the presence of defendant.[38] The names of additional jurors summoned for the term

All of the names must be put in the box from which the jury is drawn and a failure to do so is error (Brazier v. State, 44 Ala. 387), unless the names of those omitted are those of jurors who could not be found and were therefore not summoned (Sanders v. State, (Ala. 1902) 32 So. 654), which should not be put in the box, but the fact that they are put in is not a material irregularity where they were not in attendance and none of them were put upon defendant. (Kimbrell v. State, 130 Ala. 40, 30 So. 454).

If the name has been inadvertently omitted it may be placed in the box after some of the jurors have been drawn. Stone v. State, 137 Ala. 1, 34 So. 629; State v. Campbell, 35 S. C. 28, 14 S. E. 292.

In a justice's court where the jury is composed of six persons only six names must be drawn in the first instance, who if not challenged are sworn, and if any are challenged then only are others to be drawn. It is error in such a case to draw twelve jurors in the first instance. Becker v. Sitterly, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 38.

In Virginia in selecting jurors for the trial of capital cases a panel of twenty-four is first summoned from which a panel of sixteen qualified jurors is selected, additional jurors being summoned if necessary to make up this number, and from the panel of sixteen the accused strikes out four, leaving the remaining twelve to constitute the jury (Honesty v. Com., 81 Va. 283; Richards v. Com., 81 Va. 110); and no drawing is resorted to unless the accused fails to strike off the four, in which case a jury of twelve is selected from the panel of sixteen by lot (Honesty v. Com., supra).

to supply vacancies in the regular panel should be placed in the box and drawn in the same manner as the regular panel,[39] but this is not necessary in the case of additional jurors summoned to complete a jury in a particular case.[40] The form of box used, unless particularly designated by statute, is not material,[41] and if the statute is silent as to the manner in which jurors are to be drawn it is sufficient if the drawing is fortuitous.[42]

b. Calling Names From List. In a few jurisdictions in the case of special venires for the trial of capital cases it is the practice, instead of drawing the names from a box, to call them in order from the list of the venire summoned.[43]

c. Order of Calling Jurors. In the case of ordinary juries the first twelve drawn if present are called into the box for examination;[44] but if any juror drawn is not present the proceedings are not delayed to procure his attendance but another is drawn in his place,[45] and if the absent juror subsequently appears it is not necessary that he should be called into the box before the rest of the regular panel are drawn and exhausted.[46] Where in the case of special venires the names are not drawn but called from the list the usual practice is to call them in the order in which they stand upon the list,[47] and in Texas the statute expressly so provides;[48] but in the absence of statute it is not necessary to begin calling from the top of the list,[49] nor if a juror fails to appear when called is it necessary to delay the proceedings to procure his attendance.[50] Where jurors have been stood aside when first called and the rest of the panel exhausted the court may either have their names placed in the box and drawn again or may have them called in the order in which they were stood aside.[51]

Under the Texas statute either party has a right to demand that an attachment shall be issued for an absent special venireman (Sinclair v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 130, 32 S. W. 531; Hudson v. State, 28 Tex. App. 323, 3 S. Cr. App. 1904) 83 S. W. 393).

d. Calling Jurors Not Available When First Called. Jurors do not cease to be members of the regular panel because they do not appear and answer when first called,[52] and it is not error for the court to order their names placed in the box and drawn if before the jury is completed they appear voluntarily or otherwise,[53] or where they come in from considering another case on which they were engaged when first called,[54] although they may come in after the rest of the regular panel has been exhausted and talesmen have been summoned;[55] on the contrary, the parties have a right to insist that such jurors shall be presented before resorting to jurors not of the regular panel.[56] It is said not to be the usual practice for the court to order the names recalled to see if they are present,[57] but it is not error for the court to do so.[58]

e. Number to Be Drawn Before Parties Must Examine. The common-law practice was to present the jurors one at a time for acceptance,[59] but according to the usual practice in this country twelve jurors must be drawn and placed in the box before a party is required to examine any of the jurors.[60] Each party may then examine and challenge for cause and if such challenges are sustained the vacancies are filled by drawing additional jurors and the process repeated until twelve qualified jurors are obtained;[61] but this does not mean that the place of each juror challenged for cause must be filled before another is to be examined,[62] or that the vacancies caused by the challenges of one party must be filled before requiring the other party to examine the remaining jurors then in the box,[63]

Acceptance in panels of four.— In Illinois the statute provides that after twelve jurors are drawn and placed in the box they shall be passed upon in panels of four commencing with plaintiff, but when any one juror is challenged his place must be at once filled and another juror added to the panel of four being passed upon. After each panel of four is accepted by both parties they become a part of the jury and another panel of four is called up and the process repeated. Sterling Bridge Co. v. Pearl, 80 Ill. 251 [distinguishing Walker v. Collier, 37 Ill. 362]. unless the statute expressly provides that there shall be twelve jurors in the box before either party shall be required to examine.[64]

f. Number to Be Presented Before Making Peremptory Challenges. At common law in criminal cases the jurors were presented for challenge one at a time and peremptory challenges as well as for cause were required to be made as each juror was presented.[65] This is the rule in criminal cases in a few jurisdictions,[66] but the rule in most jurisdictions is that a party cannot be required to exercise his right of peremptory challenge until there are in the jury-box twelve competent persons unchallenged for cause;[67] and when this number is lessened by the challenges of either party the panel must again be filled to twelve before passed upon and so on until the jury is complete.[68] When, however, twelve qualified jurors

All challenges for cause must be exhausted before any peremptory challenges are required to be made. Cooley v. State, 38 Tex. 636.

The reason for the rule is that it would materially impair the value of the right of peremptory challenge to require a party to exercise it where only one or a small number of jurors is before him and he has no knowledge of what jurors will be next presented. Taylor v. Western Pac. R. Co., 45 Cal. 323; Thompson v. State, 58 Miss. 62.

In California in civil cases the rule as stated in the text is followed and twelve jurors unchallenged for cause must be presented before any peremptory challenge is required, and no juror is sworn until the jury is complete (Taylor v. Western Pac. R. Co., 45 Cal. 323); and in criminal cases twelve jurors must be first drawn and defendant may examine each separately and exhaust his challenges for cause before making any peremptory challenge, but he must then challenge peremptorily any jurors remaining unchallenged, and those not challenged peremptorily are then sworn, after which sufficient additional names are drawn to fill up the vacancies and the same process repeated until the jury becomes complete (People v. Iams, 57 Cal. 115; People v. Russell, 46 Cal. 121; People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 676. See also to same effect People v. Riley, 65 Cal. 107, 3 Pac. 413).

In Idaho the rule as stated in the text is followed in civil cases, but in criminal cases defendant may be required to exercise his right to peremptory challenge as each juror is presented and before another is called. People v. Kuok Wah Choi, 2 Ida. (Hasb.) 90, 6 Pac. 112.

In Mississippi the rule formerly was to allow a full jury of twelve before requiring peremptory challenges in all cases other than capital felonies (Thompson v. State, 58 Miss. 62), but not in capital cases (Smith v. State, 61 Miss. 754); but under the code of 1892 the right to a full jury before challenging peremptorily is granted in all cases (Gibson v. State, 70 Miss. 554, 12 So. 582).

If a party voluntarily challenges a juror peremptorily during the examination for challenges for cause, with knowledge that he is not required to do so, he cannot afterward complain that there was not at the time a full panel present. Gammons v. State, (Miss. 1905) 37 So. 609.

are presented the parties must then either accept or challenge,[69] and cannot require that the rest of the panel for the term shall be first drawn from the box,[70] or that the list of the panel shall be called over,[71] or additional jurors summoned;[72] nor need the vacancies caused by the peremptory challenges of one party be filled before requiring the other to exercise his right of challenge as to those then remaining in the box.[73] The parties should also, when a full panel is presented, be required to challenge peremptorily all of the jurors then in the box that they desire so to challenge and thereafter be restricted in their challenges to the new jurors added to supply the vacancies.[74]

2. Right to Particular Juror or Jury. The parties have no right to a trial by any particular juror or jurors,[75] but only to a trial by a competent and impartial jury,[76] and cannot therefore have the proceedings delayed to procure the attendance of any particular juror who is absent when called.[77] Nor in cases where there are two regular juries in attendance has a party any right to claim that his case shall be tried by a particular jury, but the court may in its discretion send it to either,[78] or may at any time break up such juries and rearrange them by transferring jurors from one to the other.[79]

3. Right to Jury of Original Panel. While the parties have no right to delay the proceedings where some of the regular panel fail to appear or are engaged on another case,[80] they have a right to a jury of the original panel in so far as it is practicable to procure it.[81] They therefore have a right to demand before being required to pass upon jurors not of the original panel that all of the original panel present shall be exhausted,[82] and that any jurors shall be called and pre-

Where additional jurors have been summoned in advance they should be kept separate from the regular panel until the latter is exhausted (State v. Benton, 19 N. C. 196); but the fact that this was not done is not ground for reversal where no objection was made and it appears that all of the regular jurors were in fact tendered to defendant before the jury was completed and before his peremptory challenges were exhausted (State v. Lytle, 27 N. C. 58).

sented who on the first call were stood aside[83] or who were not available when first called but come in before the jury is completed.[84] So also the court has no right to discharge the regular panel without cause and summon another for the trial of a particular case.[85]

4. Right to Full Panel to Select From — a. In General. In the absence of statute it is not essential that there should be a full panel of the number required to be drawn and summoned present to select from when the impaneling of the trial jury is begun,[86] but the court may order additional jurors to be summoned to fill vacancies in the panel.[87]

b. Failure to Summon Full Venire. It is not essential that every juror drawn upon a venire shall be summoned,[88] but only that the venire shall be issued for the proper number,[89] and that the sheriff shall exercise reasonable diligence to summon them.[90] So in the absence of any fraud or culpable neglect, it is not a ground of challenge to the array that all of the jurors were not summoned,[91] as

In Montana under a statute providing that if the panel is not full at the opening of the court or at any time during the term a sufficient number must be drawn to fill the panel, it is held that a party has a right to a full panel to select from and that if it is not full additional jurors must be drawn to fill it. In Missouri under a statute providing that in every criminal case there shall be summoned and returned a number of qualified jurors equal to the number of peremptory challenges and twelve in addition, it is held that defendant is entitled to the full panel to select from (State v. Davis, 66 Mo. 684, 27 Am. The accidental omission of a name in copying the list in consequence of which a juror is not summoned is not ground for challenge to the array. State v. Whitt, 113 N. C. 716, 18 S. E. 715.

Where it appears that jurors were dead or absent from the county when drawn it is not a ground of challenge to the array where this fact was unknown to the officers who drew the jury and it does not appear that where some of the panel have died,[92] have removed from the county,[93] or cannot be found;[94] but it is ground for challenge to the array if the failure to draw or summon a full venire is due to any improper or corrupt practices on the part of the officers charged with such duties.[95] Where any of the venire could not be found it is not necessary for the court to supply their places before the rest of the venire is exhausted.[96]

c. Summoning Disqualified, Incompetent, or Exempt Jurors. In the absence of any showing of partiality or corruption[97] it is not ground for challenge to the array that some of the jurors summoned upon the panel are disqualified,[98] or are incompetent to serve as jurors in the particular case for which they are summoned,[99] or that some of them are exempt from jury duty.[1] Objections for disqualification or incompetency are available only by way of challenge to the individual juror,[2] and an exemption is not a disqualification but a mere privilege which the juror may claim or waive.[3]

d. Full Panel Not Present Although Summoned. Where some of the jurors summoned fail to appear it is not necessary, in the absence of statute, for the court to delay the impaneling of the jury or postpone the trial,[4] nor is it necessary for the court to have other jurors summoned to fill the places of those who are absent,[5] or to issue attachments for the absent jurors.[6]

5. Effect of Errors and Irregularities. A plain disregard of the statutory provisions with regard to the formation of the trial jury or a departure therefrom by which a party is deprived of a substantial right is ground for reversal,[17] but mere irregularities are not in the absence of any showing of prejudice resulting therefrom.[18] Objections for irregularities in the mode of selecting the jury must be made at the time and if not so objected to are not available after verdict.[19]

B. Special or Struck Juries[20] — 1. Qualifications. At common law special or struck jurors were selected from the freeholders' book,[21] but in this country a freehold qualification is not necessary when not required for regular jurors.[22] Special or struck jurors must, however, in addition to those special qualifications for which they are selected for a particular case, have all of the qualifications required by statute for ordinary jurors;[23] but it has been held that they are not within the application of the statutes making prior service as a juror within a certain period a ground of challenge.[24]

In Texas in the case of a special venire for the trial of a capital case it has been held that if any of the special venire have been impaneled and are engaged upon another case the court cannot impanel the jury in their absence, but must have them brought in and passed upon or postpone the trial until they are regularly discharged from the case which they are considering (Moody v. State, (Tex. Cr. 1901) 63 S. W. 641; Thuston v. State, 18 Tex. 2. Procedure For Procuring — a. In General. The procedure for procuring a special or struck jury consists in a selection by the court or other officers of a list of qualified and competent persons from which the parties or their attorneys strike off a certain number of names and the remaining jurors constitute the panel from which the trial jury is made up.[25]

b. Selection of List. The object of a special or struck jury is to procure a jury of persons of more than ordinary ability or having qualifications peculiarly adapted to the determination of a particular controversy,[26] so that the list is not ordinarily drawn or selected by chance as in the case of regular juries but is selected by the court or some other officer in the exercise of judgment and discretion;[27] the selection being made according as the statutes may provide, by the court,[28] clerk,[29] jury commissioner,[30] or some other designated officers;[31] or in case of their absence or disqualification by some suitable disinterested person appointed by the court.[32] It is competent, however, for the legislature to change the method of selecting the jury.[33] The number to be selected is regulated by statute and varies in the different jurisdictions.[34] The presence of defendant in a criminal case at the selection of the list is not essential if he has been notified of the time and place of selection and fails to attend.[35]

c. Striking Jury — (i) Right to Full Panel to Strike From. Each party has the right to demand a list of the full number prescribed by statute before the process of striking is entered upon,[36] which must consist of persons against whom no cause of challenge can be established, and he may before striking challenge any of the list for cause,[37] and if for this or any other reason there is a deficiency in such list the court should order it to be filled to the proper number before the striking is commenced.[38] If the court discharges any of the jurors on the list after the striking is begun it is not proper merely to supply the place of the jurors discharged but a full panel should be made up and the striking begin anew.[39]

(ii) Mode of Striking. The jury is ordinarily struck by each party striking alternately from the list one name until each has struck a certain number,[40] the number being regulated by statute and varying in different jurisdictions.[41] For the purpose of striking there are always but two parties,[42] and if there are several plaintiffs or defendants they are not separately entitled to the full number but must unite in striking,[43] and if they cannot agree as to what names shall be struck the court may order each to strike one name alternately.[44] If a party fails or refuses to strike the clerk may strike for him,[45] or the court may appoint some suitable disinterested person to do so.[46] Where the statute provides that each party shall be furnished a copy of the list from which each shall strike a certain number, neither is entitled to wait until the other has struck and inspect his list before striking from his own.[47] Where the regular number of strikes has been exceeded, the court may order the last name stricken to be restored to the list.[48] A notice of the time and place of striking should be given.[49]

d. Filling Vacancies After Striking. If after the jury has been struck some of those constituting the remaining panel from which the trial jury is to be made up do not appear or the number is otherwise reduced so that a full trial jury cannot be obtained therefrom, the mode of trial is not defeated,[50] but talesmen may be called to complete the jury as in other cases.[51]

e. Summoning Panel. The general statutory provisions as to the mode of summoning petit jurors are equally applicable to struck juries,[52] and no special venire is necessary.[53]

3. Excusing Special or Struck Jurors. The court may for good cause excuse a special or struck juror from serving as in the case of ordinary jurors.[54]

4. Errors and Irregularities. The rule as to errors and irregularities is more strict in the case of special or struck juries than in the case of ordinary juries.[55] The established mode of procedure must be strictly followed,[56] and the court cannot by any rule or practice vary the express provisions of the statutes as to how the jury shall be selected.[57] The proper mode of objecting to irregularities in selecting or striking the jury is by a challenge to the array,[58] but a party may avail himself of such error on appeal if an exception was properly taken at the time, although he did not challenge the array.[59] It is ground for challenge to the array if the list was not selected from the proper source,[60] or by the proper officers,[61] or that the list included the name of a juror who was not in fact selected;[62] but it is not a sufficient ground of challenge that one of the jurors selected was exempt,[63] was dead,[64] was a non-resident of the county,[65] that the name of one was not correctly written where the parties were not misled as to his identity,[66] or that some of the panel were not summoned provided a sufficient number attend to try the case.[67] Where irregularities have occurred in the selection or striking of the jury the court may order the jury to be set aside and discharged and a new jury to be struck,[68] and if, after the striking, the panel of those to be summoned is lost the court may order a new panel to be struck from the original list.[69]

X. CONTROL OF COURT OVER JURORS.

A. Compelling Attendance — 1. Right to Attachment For Absent Jurors. In the absence of statute the court is not bound to issue attachments to compel the attendance of any of the jurors who were summoned but failed to appear,[70] or whom the sheriff in the exercise of due diligence was unable to summon.[71] Even where the issuing of attachment is authorized the application must be made as soon as the jury is called and it appears that any are absent and will not be granted if delayed until after the trial has begun,[72] and although the application is properly made the granting of an attachment is discretionary with the court where there are sufficient jurors in attendance to make up the panel.[73]

2. Punishment For Failure to Attend. A failure to appear as a juror after being duly summoned is a contempt[74] unless the juror is exempt,[75] and the statutes provide for the imposition of fines, which vary in amount in the different jurisdictions, for such default where no reasonable excuse is shown.[76] The proceedings for enforcing such fines are always summary,[77] and need not be instituted while the suit for which the juror should have appeared is pending.[78] The juror must be given an opportunity to show cause why he should not be fined,[79] and where the statute provides that he shall be present and have an opportunity of being heard the court may issue an attachment to compel his presence.[80] If the fine is not paid execution may issue against the goods and chattels of the defaulting juror,[81] but not against his person where the statute does not so provide.[82] The court may remit a fine imposed for non-attendance where it is satisfactorily shown that the juror was not in default.[83]

B. Excusing Jurors[84] — 1. Power to Excuse. It is well settled that the court may, for reasons which in the exercise of its discretion it deems sufficient, excuse jurors who have been summoned from serving,[85] although such action may necessitate the resort to talesmen or additional jurors to complete the panel,[86] and while the right is in some cases recognized by statute,[87] no express statutory authority for this purpose is necessary.[88] The court alone, however, is authorized to excuse jurors,[89] and the fact that the sheriff knows that some of the panel are sick, disqualified, or exempt is no excuse for failing to summon them;[90] nor can the sheriff, even in a proceeding where he selects as well as summons the jury, excuse a juror after he has been summoned and substitute another in his place.[91]

2. Grounds — a. In General. The court may in the exercise of its discretion excuse jurors for reasons which constitute no legal ground of disqualification or exemption;[92] but which are purely personal to the juror,[93] such as the illness of the juror,[94] illness in his family,[95] where his family is without protection and needs his presence,[96] or where his business interests would be materially injured.[97] The court may also properly excuse a juror who is a witness in another case,[98] who has a case at issue to be tried at the same term,[99] or who was not regularly summoned.[1] It does not follow, however, that because certain causes have been declared to be sufficient to justify the court in excusing jurors that the sufficiency of excuses in general must be considered a matter of law;[2] but on the contrary the reasons are so numerous that they cannot be specified beforehand or reduced to any set rule but must be left to the court to dispose of as they arise,[3] so that it is uniformly held that whether a juror shall be excused is a matter resting within the sound discretion of the court,[4] the exercise of which will not be interfered with unless it is clearly shown to have been abused to the actual prejudice of the complaining party.[5]

b. Conflicting Public Duties. The court may properly excuse a person summoned as a juror where such service might conflict with the performance of other public duties,[6] and may do so although such office or duties do not consti-

3. Application, Order, and Proceedings. Jurors should ordinarily be excused publicly in open court,[8] and an entry of the fact and the reasons therefor made upon the minutes;[9] but it has been held that the court may in its discretion excuse jurors in advance of the trial for which they are summoned,[10] even in the case of special venires for capital cases where a list of the panel is served upon defendant,[11] and in the absence of defendant[12] and without his knowledge or consent.[13] Jurors should not ordinarily be excused unless they appear and present their excuses in person and under oath,[14] except by consent of both parties;[15] but this rule is subject to exception, as where on account of sickness, bodily infirmity, or other unavoidable reason over which the juror has no control, he is unable to appear and present his excuse in person,[16] in which cases the juror may send his excuse by another and the court may pass upon it in his absence,[17] and if either party is dissatisfied or desires to test the truth of the grounds of excuse, he must apply for an attachment to have the juror brought before the court.[18] The court may excuse a juror on the ground of sickness without the testimony of

4. Liability of Excused Juror to Be Recalled. Where the juror has been excused or discharged he ceases to be a juror and cannot be recalled,[21] even as a talesman in the same panel from which he was discharged,[22] nor if he consents to serve can the parties be required to accept him as a juror.[23]

5. Presumption of Regularity. Where the court has excused jurors from attendance it will be presumed that such action was based upon sufficient grounds,[24] and that the court acted advisedly as to the facts necessarily involved.[25]

XI. Term of Service and Compensation.

A. Term of Service. Formerly, in England, the court was for many purposes presumed to be open in the presence of the judge who might carry a jury with him from county to county and keep them together until they responded to the issue;[26] but in this country where the courts are local and their terms limited by law a final adjournment for the term operates as a legal discharge of the jury and terminates their functions as such,[27] and if they do not return with a verdict before the end of the term another jury may be impaneled at the succeeding term.[28] A statutory provision that jurors shall not be allowed to serve more than a certain number of weeks in a year applies to a calendar year,[29] and a provision that they shall not serve more than a certain number of days at any one term applies to days in which the court is in session and on which the jurors could be called upon to serve.[30] Where the statute provides that no person serving for a certain length of time shall be eligible for further service during the term, only actual service for that time will disqualify.[31] The Georgia statute providing for the summoning of separate panels for different weeks where the term is for more than one week[32] does not apply to an adjourned or extra session but only to regular terms and to counties where by law the court sits more than one week.[33] A jury regularly drawn continues in existence as a lawfully selected jury for the time or term for which it was drawn notwithstanding a subsequent change in the law as to the method of drawing,[34] but such jurors have no certain term of office and may be superseded by jurors drawn under the new law.[35]

B. Compensation — 1. Right to Compensation — a. In General. Compensation for service as a juror is not a common-law right,[36] but is purely statutory, and in the absence of statute cannot be recovered;[37] and it is further competent for the legislature to require such services and expressly provide that no compensation shall be allowed.[38] Provision for such payment is, however, very generally made by statute,[39] but the general statutes relating to juror's fees do not apply to jurors in coroner's courts,[40] or upon inquisitions of lunacy.[41] A juror summoned on a special venire has the same right to compensation for the time necessarily in attendance as a member of the regular panel,[42] and as to service actually rendered there is ordinarily no distinction between regular jurors and those summoned from the bystanders;[43] but a juror has no right to compensation for attendance

Talesmen under the Tennessee statute are not entitled to compensation unless they serve for more than one day, but a talesman remaining undischarged is entitled to full pay up to the time of his discharge, although upon a court held at a time and place unauthorized by law.[44] Mandamus will lie to compel the issuance of a certificate for services as a juror,[45] and where a trial fee is allowed the jury have a right to withhold their verdict from the record until it is paid.[46]

b. What Services Compensated. A juror is entitled to his per diem allowance for all the time that he is necessarily in attendance upon the court, whether during all of this time he is actually serving as a juror or not,[47] or until discharged, although he is not called upon to serve at all.[48] It has also been held that he is entitled to full pay, although on certain days he was excused from attendance,[49] or for the time during an adjournment if he lives at a distance and is not allowed mileage;[50] but under statutes providing a certain rate per day "for attendance" upon the court, it is held that if a juror is excused from attending for a definite period he is not entitled to compensation for such period,[51] although it was too short to permit him to go to his home and return.[52]

2. Amount. Jurors are ordinarily compensated by way of a per diem allowance for the time for which they serve or are in attendance, the amount of which varies in the different jurisdictions,[53] to which is usually added an allowance for mileage,[54] and in some cases a trial fee for each case in which they are impaneled or for each verdict rendered,[55] while in New York an extra allowance may be made in trials occupying over a certain number of days.[56] The legislature has full power to determine the rate of compensation,[57] and no greater amount than that so fixed can be recovered[58] or allowed by the court.[59] The per diem allowance contemplates a day of twenty-four hours and jurors are not entitled to any additional compensation where they are not allowed to separate over night.[60]

3. Liability For Payment — a. Jury-Fees. A county is not, in the absence of statute, liable for the payment of jury-fees.[61] There are, however, in many jurisdictions, statutes imposing such liability,[62] while in others jury-fees may be taxed as costs.[63] There are also, as previously noted, statutes in some jurisdictions requiring that a party demanding a jury trial must pay a jury-fee in advance,[64] and such statutes are not unconstitutional.[65]

XII. COMPETENCY FOR TRIAL OF CAUSE.

A. In General. The term "competency" as applied to jurors and as used in the following sections relates to their fitness to act as such in a particular case as distinguished from the qualifications necessary for jury duty in general.[70] A juror may possess all the qualifications necessary for jury duty and yet by reason of interest or some particular relation to one of the parties or the subject-matter of the controversy be incompetent to serve in a particular case,[71] or he may be incompetent in one case to be tried and competent in another.[72] The causes which may render a juror incompetent are so numerous that no attempt to enumerate them could be entirely successful,[73] and the fact that certain grounds are specified by statute does not prevent the exclusion of jurors on other grounds of incompetency.[74] Competency under the statute is a question of law,[75] but in other cases is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court in the exercise of a sound discretion,[76] and its decision will not be interfered with unless clearly

The ground of these decisions is that a juror should not be required to pay his own expenses except when he is left free to select his mode of living, and that where by the exigencies of the case he is deprived of this privilege and compelled to live at the discretion of the court, such expenses become incidental to the administration of justice, and like the other incidental expenses of the court should be chargeable against the county. shown to have been abused.[77] It is the duty of the court to see that a jury of fair and impartial persons is impaneled,[78] and where it appears to the court that a juror is not such it is proper to exclude him.[79]

B. Witness in Case. While a juror may be examined as a witness,[80] it does not follow that a witness is always a competent juror;[81] and by the weight of authority either party may challenge a juror for cause who has been summoned as a witness by the other,[82] or who, although not summoned, is attending for the purpose of serving as a witness,[83] or whose name is indorsed upon an information as a witness for the state.[84] It has been held, however, that a juror is not incompetent merely because summoned as a witness if he has no knowledge of any of the material facts in issue,[85] or because he was called to testify on a motion for a change of venue;[86] nor will a party be permitted to summon persons as witnesses who have no knowledge of any of the material facts in the case and then challenge them merely because he himself has summoned them.[87]

C. Official Position. While public officials are generally exempt from jury duty,[88] they are not necessarily incompetent to serve as jurors.[89] So in an action against a city or municipal corporation a person is not incompetent as a juror surety of a person not a party on a bond given in relation to the subject-matter of the suit, the liability upon which is in no way dependent upon the result of the suit, will not render a juror incompetent.[2]

3. Stock-Holder in Corporation. A person who is a stock-holder in a corporation is incompetent to act as a juror in an action in which the corporation is a party,[3] or has any pecuniary interest,[4] or where he is a stock-holder of a corporation which owns stock in another corporation which is a party;[5] and where by statute a stock-holder is personally liable for his proportion of the debts and liabilities of the corporation contracted or incurred while a member, he is incompetent if he was a member at the time the action was commenced, although not at the time of the trial;[6] but a juror is not incompetent because he and one of the parties are both stock-holders in the same corporation, where the corporation is in no way concerned in the action,[7] and where one corporation leases its property and franchises to another the stock-holders of the lessee company are not incompetent to serve as jurors in an action against the lessor company for a liability incurred prior to the lease, where the lessee company is in no way interested in the result of the trial.[8]

4. Member of Mutual Assessment Company, Church, or Order. In an action against a mutual insurance company a member thereof liable to be assessed to pay losses incurred by the company is incompetent to act as a juror;[9] and in an action between the trustees of two churches involving the right to the possession of certain property, the members of each church are incompetent.[10] In an action against a particular lodge of a purely eleemosynary or charitable order, such as Masons or Odd Fellows, the members of the particular lodge are incompetent to act as jurors,[11] but the rule does not apply to members of other lodges of the same order.[12]

5. Contributor to Fund or Member of Society For Prosecution of Offense. A juror is not incompetent to serve on a trial for a particular offense on the ground of pecuniary interest because he has contributed to the fund for the prosecution of that class of offenses,[13] or for the prosecution of a particular offense.[14] It has been held, however, that a person is not competent as a juror on a trial for a particular offense if he is a member of, and under obligation to contribute to, a society

If the corporation is not in any event liable by reason of the result of the action, the stock-holders thereof are not incompetent. Williams v. Smith, 6 Cow. (N. 6. Interest as Resident or Taxpayer — a. In General. While the decisions are by no means uniform, the weight of authority is that in the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary, a person who is a resident and taxpayer of a city or municipal corporation is not a competent juror in an action against the municipality,[17] or in which it is directly pecuniarily interested,[18] or in an action by the municipality to recover money due it,[19] or to recover a penalty which inures to the benefit of the municipality.[20] It has also been held that the same rule

The cases are unsatisfactory on this point (Thompson & M. Jur. § 181), and seem to be based largely upon the ground that the fact of a person binding himself to pay money for such purposes raises a presumption that he is so biased with regard to the offense that he could not act impartially in the particular case (see Com. v. Moore, 143 Mass. 136, 9 N. E. 25, 58 Am. Rep. 128; Com. v. Eagan, 4 Gray (Mass.) 18; State v. Fullerton, 90 Mo. The ground of the decisions holding such persons to be incompetent as jurors is that they are directly interested because of their ultimate liability for a ratable proportion of the verdict, which increases the burden of taxation (Diveny v. Elmira, 51 N. Y. 506; Garrison v. Portland, 2 Oreg. 123); while those supporting the contrary rule hold that the interest in such cases is too slight to influence the jurors' verdict and that an application of the rule would also in many cases interfere with the administration of justice (Kemper v. Louisville, 14 Bush (Ky.) 87).

should be applied to residents and taxpayers of counties in actions where the county is a party or pecuniarily interested,[21] unless the application of the rule would result in a failure of justice, as in cases where a change of venue could not be granted.[22] There are, however, in some jurisdictions statutes providing that the corporate interest of a resident or taxpayer shall not render a juror incompetent,[23] or that residents of a county shall be competent to act as jurors in actions where the county is a party or interested,[24] and such provisions are not unconstitutional as impairing the right to a trial by an impartial jury.[25]

b. In Criminal Prosecutions and Proceedings. E. Relationship or Business Connection — 1. Relationship — a. To Party — (I) In General. A juror is incompetent and subject to challenge if he is related within the prohibited degree, to either party,[30] which is reckoned according to the rules of the civil law.[31] At common law a juror was incompetent if the relationship was within the ninth degree,[32] and this rule has been adopted in some jurisdictions,[33] while in others a closer degree of relationship is prescribed.[34] In the absence of statutory provision as to the degree of relationship, the question is to be determined by the court according to the probability of prejudice or partiality resulting therefrom;[35] and the court may, on the ground of probable prejudice, sustain a challenge to a juror, although the relationship is not within the degree prescribed by statute as rendering the juror incompetent,[36] or where

The relative of a surety for the prosecution of a suit is not a competent juror. Sehorn v. Williams, 51 N. C. 575.

Relationship to a person having no interest at the time of the trial does not render a juror incompetent. Seavy v. Dearborn, 19 N. H. 351, holding that in an action against a sheriff for the wrongful act of his deputy, the father of the deputy is not incompetent where the deputy has himself been released from all liability and admitted as a witness.

tion,[47] or in an action to which a mutual insurance company is a party if related to a member of the company who is liable to be assessed for losses incurred by it.[48] The rule does not apply where the interest of the person not a party is remote and merely contingent,[49] or where the juror is related to one who is merely a witness in the case.[50] In criminal cases a juror is incompetent if related to a prosecuting witness,[51] or to a person who has voluntarily taken an active part in the prosecution,[52] or is particularly interested in the result,[53] or who is under indictment for the same offense.[54]

(II) Person Injured by Commission of Offense. In a criminal prosecution a juror is incompetent if related within the prohibited degree to the person injured by the commission of the offense,[55] and if the injury is to several persons the relatives of either are incompetent, although as to the different persons injured the offense is charged by different indictments.[56]

c. Relationship Terminated by Death. Relationship by affinity is dissolved by the death of either party to the marriage which created the affinity, provided the deceased party left no issue living;[57] but if there be living issue of the marriage the relationship by affinity is preserved and continued through the medium of such issue.[58]

d. Relationship to Attorney or Counsel. A juror is not incompetent in a crimi-

2. Business Connection or Relations — a. With Party. A person is not competent to serve as a juror in an action where there exists any business relation between him and one of the parties calculated to influence his verdict.[62] This rule applies where a party and a juror are partners in business,[63] or where there exists between them the relation of master and servant,[64] employer and employee,[65]

The fact that the party is a corporation does not affect the rule that an employee is incompetent to act as a juror (Burnett v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 16 Nebr. 332, 20 N. W. 280); but in an action against a corporation a juror is not incompetent merely because he is in the employ of a stock-holder of the corporation (Frederickton Boom Co. v. McPherson, 13 N. Brunsw. 8).

The fact that a juror was formerly an employee of one of the parties, if he is not such at the time of the trial, is not of itself sufficient to render him incompetent. East Line, etc., R. Co. v. Brinker, 68 Tex. 500, 3 S. W. 99; Swope v. Seattle, 36 Wash. 113, 78 Pac. 607.

A juror who is an employee of defendant in another suit brought by the same plaintiff, involving the same issues, is not necessarily incompetent; but the fact is sufficient to support a challenge to the favor, the effect of which is to require an investigation by the court into the question whether the juror is biased in point of fact. Calhoun v. Hannan, 87 Ala. 277, 6 So. 291.

Where a juror is clerk of a firm on intimate relations with some of the parties in interest, and which became their bondsmen upon the instrument which secured them in the possession of the property in controversy, it is not error for the court to excuse him. Hill v. Corcoran, 15 Colo. 270, 25 Pac. 171.

The employee of a company not a party to the suit but engaged in the same business as the company which is a party is not incompetent, where it does not appear that such relation would be in any way calculated to influence his judgment. landlord and tenant,[66] or attorney and client.[67] There may, however, be an existing business relation between a party and a juror of a character in no way calculated to influence the latter and which will not be a ground of challenge for cause.[68]

b. With Attorney or Counsel. A juror is incompetent if he is a deputy in the employ of the prosecuting attorney;[69] and it has also been held that a juror is incompetent if he is a client of the attorney for one of the parties,[70] but not by reason of having previously been a client, where the relation is terminated at the time of the action,[71] or because he has had business relations with the attorney,[72] boards at the attorney's house during the term of court,[73] or has an office in the rooms occupied by the attorney;[74] because he and one of the attorneys are both in the employ of the same company;[75] or because such attorney is the prosecuting counsel of the city in which the juror lives.[76]

F. Prior Services as Juror[77] — 1. Service in Same Case — a. The mere fact that a juror is indebted to a party, where it is not shown that he has been favored by the creditor or that the amount of the indebtedness and the juror's financial condition are such as to place him at the other's mercy, is not sufficient to render him incompetent (Thompson v. Douglass, 35 W. Va. 337, 13 S. E. 1015); but the parties should be allowed to question jurors as to such indebtedness to ascertain the real state of feeling between them and the party (Davis v. Panhandle Nat. Bank, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 29 S. W. 926).

The trial of a plea in bar to an indictment is not a trial of the case and the fact that a juror has served on the trial of such plea is not a ground for challenge on the trial of the accused under the indictment. Carano v. State, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. 93.

If the juror is not objected to it is not ground for an arrest of judgment that he served upon a former trial, although it would

although on the former trial no verdict was rendered,[79] as where the jury were discharged because unable to agree,[80] or because of a continuance granted after the introduction of evidence;[81] but on the contrary it has been held that a juror is not incompetent if on the former trial he did not render a verdict and it does not appear that he has formed or expressed an opinion on the merits of the case.[82]

b. Rejection at Former Trial. A juror is not incompetent because he was a member of the panel summoned at the time of a former trial if he did not sit in the trial of the case,[83] as where he was challenged by one of the parties,[84] or excused by the court,[85] or the entire panel discharged upon the granting of a change of venue.[86]

c. Member of Grand Jury Finding Indictment. One who served as a grand juror on the finding of an indictment is incompetent to serve as a petit juror on the trial of the offense,[87] or on the trial of a civil action based upon the same offense,[88] and in an action of malicious prosecution for causing plaintiff to be indicted he may challenge any juror who was on the grand jury that found the indictment.[89]

because he has previously tried a case of the same character and involving the same general considerations,[90] or where the second case is brought on different grounds to be established by different evidence;[91] but where they arise out of the same transaction and involve the same issues or are to be determined upon the same evidence the juror is incompetent;[92] and if practically the same question is to be again decided it is immaterial whether only the same or other and additional witnesses are to be examined.[93] So also if during the continuance of a case any of the jurors are impaneled and render a verdict in another case in which the same issues are involved, they are not competent to proceed with the trial of the first case.[94]

b. Offenses By Same Defendant. A juror is not incompetent because he has been one of the jury on a former trial of the same defendant for a different offense,[95] or a separate and distinct offense of the same character,[96] or because he was a member of the grand jury which found an indictment against the same defendant for a different, although similar offense;[97] but a juror who rendered verdict against defendant on an indictment is not competent in an action of trespass against the same defendant involving the same questions and relating to the same subject-matter.[98]

c. Similar Offenses by Persons Other Than Defendant. A juror is not incompetent because he has previously served upon the trial of another defendant charged with a separate and distinct offense, although of the same character;[99] and it has also been held that in the absence of any showing of prejudice a juror who has tried one co-defendant is not incompetent to try the other;[1] but on the other hand it is held that a juror is incompetent if he has served upon the trial

G. Bias or Prejudice — 1. In General. Jurors to be competent must stand indifferent, having no bias or prejudice for or against either party.[6] The juror must be indifferent both as to the person and the cause to be tried,[7] and must be so at the time of the trial.[8] Bias or prejudice may arise from such a variety of

Standing indifferent means that the mind is in a state of neutrality as respects the person and the matter to be tried; that there exists no bias for or against either party in the mind of the juror calculated to operate upon him; that he goes to the trial uncommitted and prepared to weigh the evidence in impartial scales. causes and depends so much upon the facts and circumstances of the particular cases that no definite rule can be laid down;[9] but the true inquiry in all cases is whether the juror will act with entire impartiality,[10] in deciding which, except in those cases where the law conclusively presumes bias,[11] much must be left to the discretion of the court,[12] which, unless clearly abused, will not be interfered with.[13] A juror is clearly incompetent, however, who admits that he has such a feeling with regard to one of the parties or the nature of the case as would influence his verdict,[14] or that he would be so influenced in case a certain state of facts should be developed on the trial,[15] or if he is doubtful of his ability to render an impartial verdict.[16] But a juror is not incompetent because of a feeling of prejudice against a person formerly a party to the suit but who is not such or interested therein at the time of the trial.[17]

2. Race Prejudice. A juror is incompetent if he is so prejudiced against defendant's race or nationality that he could not on this account give him a fair and impartial trial,[18] but not where he merely has a general unfavorable opinion of persons of that race or nationality which he testifies will no way influence his verdict[19]

3. Prejudice Against Party's Business or Occupation — a. In General. against a corporation engaged in a lawful business a juror is incompetent if he has such a prejudice against such corporations as would influence him in his consideration of the particular case.[21]

b. Sale of Intoxicating Liquors. The fact that a person is prejudiced against the sale of intoxicating liquors does not render him incompetent as a juror on the trial of a liquor dealer for an offense having no relation to such business;[22] nor is a juror necessarily incompetent by reason of such prejudice in a criminal prosecution for a violation of the liquor law,[23] a civil action for damages arising under such law,[24] or an action on a liquor dealer's bond;[25] or, on the other hand, because he thinks favorably of such business.[26] The question of competency in such cases depends upon whether the general prejudice against the business is of such a character as to influence the juror's decision of the particular case;[27] so if he has no prejudice against defendant personally and can, notwithstanding his prejudice against the business, give him a fair trial and render an impartial verdict according to the evidence, he is competent;[28] but if on the other hand it appears that his prejudice is such that he could not give defendant a fair and impartial trial he is incompetent.[29] So also on an appeal from a refusal of an application for a license a juror is incompetent who states that he is opposed to granting a license to any person under any circumstances,[30] or where the law requires that licenses shall be issued only to persons of good character and the juror states that he believes only an immoral man would engage in such business,[31] or considers that engaging in such business is evidence of immorality.[32] obligation for services rendered him by one of the parties;[49] and where it appears that the relations between a juror and one of the parties are of such an intimate character as would be reasonably calculated to influence his verdict it is proper to exclude him.[50] But a person is not incompetent as a juror merely because he is an intimate acquaintance[51] or on friendly relations with one of the parties,[52] because in a personal injury case he offered assistance to the injured party,[53] or in a murder case because he was the officiating clergyman at the burial of deceased.[54]

b. Personal Relations With Attorney. c. Member of Association, Church, Order, or Party. Unless pecuniarily interested[60] a person is not incompetent to act as a juror in a trial for a particular offense because he is a member of an association organized for the prosecution or prevention of such offenses;[61] nor is a juror incompetent because he and one of the parties are both members of the same religious denomination[62] or fraternal order,[63] except in actions involving the pecuniary interests of the particular congregation or lodge to which the juror belongs,[64] or in an election contest because he belongs to the opposing political party or voted against respondent;[65] but a juror who has been a member of a posse organized for defendant's capture is not competent to serve on a jury to try him.[66]

7. Interest in Another Cause Pending. In some jurisdictions it is a ground of challenge to any person called as a juror that he has a case pending for trial at the same term,[67] and it is immaterial as affecting the juror's competency whether the case is in fact tried at that term or not,[68] or that the case in which the juror is a party has been disposed of in advance of the one in which he is called upon to serve.[69] Independently of statute a juror is incompetent on the ground of bias if he is a party to or interested in another suit of the same character or involving the same controversy,[70] is under indictment for an offense of the same character,[71] or is the prosecuting witness in another case then pending against the same defendant for a similar offense;[72] but a juror is not incompetent because he has formerly had a similar suit against the same defendant,[73] or was defendant in a similar suit brought by the same plaintiff.[74]

8. INFLUENCE ON VERDICT — a. In General. There are some cases in which the law conclusively presumes bias,[75] and whenever a juror admits that he is biased he is incompetent, although he states that he can render an impartial verdict;[76] but in other cases where the juror swears positively that he is without any bias or prejudice and will render an impartial verdict according to the law and the evidence, he may be held competent, although there are circumstances which otherwise might in some degree be supposed to influence him in his consideration of the case,[77] or he may have made statements during his examination which might seem to indicate some sympathy for or prejudice against one of the parties to the action.[78]

On the trial of a negro for killing another negro a juror is not incompetent who states that he would be prejudiced in a case between a white man and a negro but who swears that he has no prejudice against defendant personally, or in cases where both defendant and the injured party are negroes (State v. Mayfield, 104 La. 173, 28 So. 997); nor is a juror incompetent on the trial of a negro who states that he would not employ a negro because he lives in a community where there is a prejudice against them but that he is personally without such prejudice and can try the case as impartially as if defendant were a white man (Hubbard v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 564, 67 S. W. 413).

b. In Cases of Evenly Balanced Testimony. By the weight of authority a juror is incompetent who admits that by reason of his feelings toward one of the parties or the nature of the case he would, if the testimony were evenly balanced, decide in favor of one side or the other.[79] This is clearly the proper rule in cases where the admitted inclination is to favor the party upon whom is the burden of proof,[80] but it has been expressly held that the same rule should be applied where the inclination is to favor the other party.[81]

H. Formation and Expression of Opinion — 1. In General. It has been well said that there is no subject which presents a greater conflict of authority,[82] or with regard to which it is more difficult to derive from the many decisions any fixed rules, than the question of the competency of jurors as affected by the formation or expression of an opinion as to the merits of the case.[83] While there is much conflict as to the nature of the opinion which will render the juror incompetent,[84] it is now well settled that the mere formation or expression of an opinion, irrespective of its source and character, is not sufficient.[85] Formerly when jurors who

This conflict is due to the nature of the subject, involving as it does the condition and operations of the human mind (Rothschild v. State, 7 Tex. App. 519), the effort of the courts to lay down general rules for a class of cases, where almost every case presents some peculiarity of circumstance (Jackson v. Com., 23 Gratt. (Va.) 919), and to the fact that jurors who had no knowledge or opinion regarding the case were formerly much easier to procure, and that a change of conditions has necessitated some relaxation of the rule laid down by the older cases (Rizzolo v. Com., 126 Pa. had not heard of a case or formed any opinion regarding it were easier to procure the rule was more strict,[86] but at this time to exclude all jurors who had heard or read of a case and consequently formed some opinion regarding it would make it extremely difficult to procure an intelligent jury in cases of any prominence,[87] and would tend to place the administration of justice in the hands of the most ignorant and least discriminating portion of the community.[88] Where the distinction between challenges for principal cause to the favor is preserved, it seems that any formation or expression of opinion as to the merits of the case may be made a ground of challenge to the favor;[89] but nothing short of an unqualified or fixed opinion is a ground of challenge for principal cause.[90] It has also been held that the formation or expression of even a fixed opinion is available as a ground of challenge only to that party against whom it was formed or expressed,[91] but on the contrary it has been held that a juror who states that he has formed an unqualified opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence is incompetent, and that it is proper to exclude any further inquiry as to the direction of the opinion.[92]

3. Character of Opinion — a. In General. Various terms have been adopted by statute or judicial decision to designate the character of the opinion which a juror must have in order to render him incompetent,[98] such as "unqualified,"[99] "fixed,"[1] "decided,"[2] "established,"[3] "fixed and deliberate,"[4] and other terms of similar import,[5] as distinguished from an opinion which is conditional, hypothetical, contingent, indefinite, or uncertain.[6] These terms are intended to convey one and the same idea,[7] which is that the opinion which should exclude a juror must be one of a fixed and determined character, deliberately formed and still entertained, and which in an undue measure shuts out a different belief,[8] or repels the presumption of innocence in a criminal case;[9] or in other words, which amounts to a prejudgment of the case,[10] or will prevent the juror from rendering a fair and impartial verdict according to the evidence as adduced at the trial.[11] While this rule is now generally recognized, its practical application is in many cases extremely difficult,[12] and the courts have not succeeded in establishing any judicial test by which the question can be determined.[13]

b. Unqualified, Fixed, or Decided Opinion. A juror who has formed an unqualified, fixed, or decided opinion as to the merits of the case, or the guilt or innocence of the accused, is incompetent,[14] regardless of the source of the information upon which it is based,[15] or if he has formed such an opinion as to any material issue involved in the case.[16]

c. Qualified or Hypothetical Opinion.[17] It is ordinarily held that a juror is not incompetent by reason of having formed a mere hypothetical opinion dependent upon the truth of the information received;[18] but this rule should be applied with caution and discrimination, since in a sense it may be said that all opinions based upon hearsay are hypothetical, being contingent upon the truth of what has been heard.[19] It also frequently happens that even intelligent jurors are

A prejudgment of the case, to render a juror incompetent, is that condition of mind which has formed a conclusion so irrevocably fixed as not to be liable to be changed or to be free to persuasion, or to be open to a different conviction upon the production of testimony or evidence which ought reasonably to produce a different conclusion. This difficulty is due largely to a lack of perception on the part of jurors as to the nature of a disqualifying opinion, and the difficulty they experience in explaining, so as to be fully understood, the exact condition of their minds (Baxter v. People, 8 Ill. 368), and to the fact that almost every case presents some peculiar circumstances making the application of any general rule difficult (Jackson v. Com., 23 Gratt. unable to distinguish between a fixed or unqualified opinion and a hypothetical one,[20] and some are so constituted that even a hypothetical opinion will exert a controlling influence upon their decision, in which case they should be excluded.[21] Such an opinion therefore while not necessarily rendering a juror incompetent is ground for investigation as to his actual indifference.[22]

d. Impressions. A mere impression in the mind of a juror not amounting to an opinion as to the merits of the case or the guilt or innocence of accused will not render him incompetent,[23] although derived from hearing or reading the evidence adduced at another trial.[24] This rule is founded both upon reason and necessity,[25] for it is not to be supposed that a mere impression will influence a juror's verdict,[26] and to exclude jurors on this ground would make it practically impossible to procure a jury of intelligent persons in cases of any prominence or notoriety.[27] Such mere impressions are usually produced from rumor or newspaper reports,[28] and where it appears that they are unaccompanied by any prejudice and the juror testifies that they will not influence his verdict he should be held competent;[29] nor does the fact that a juror states that he has formed an

e. Opinions as to Particular Matters. A juror is not incompetent if the opinion formed or expressed is not with regard to the merits of the particular case in which he is called upon to serve,[31] unless the fact about which the juror has formed an opinion is necessarily decisive of the issue in controversy.[32] So in civil cases a juror is not incompetent because he has formed and expressed an opinion as to some questions involved in the litigation,[33] unless the opinion is with regard to one of the material issues in the case.[34] In criminal cases a juror is not incompetent unless he has formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the particular defendant on trial, and as to the particular crime with which he is charged;[35] and if the juror has not formed such an opinion he is not incompetent merely because he has formed an opinion as to the guilt of a person jointly indicted with defendant,[36] or because he has a general bad opinion of defendant's character,[37] or has formed an opinion that a crime has been committed,[38] or that whoever committed the offense charged ought to be punished.[39] Nor is a juror

A juror is not incompetent on the trial of a public officer for embezzling or using public funds for his personal profit, if he has no opinion as to defendant's guilt of the offense charged, merely because he has an opinion that there is a deficiency in defendant's accounts (State v. Carrick, 16 Nev. 120), or that defendant has loaned money but has no knowledge as to whether it was his own (State v. Krug, 12 Wash. 288, 41 Pac. 126).

incompetent because he has formed an opinion as to some fact necessary to be proved to establish the offense charged, where the existence of such fact is inconsistent with the innocence of accused or equally consistent with the guilt of some other person.[40] So on a trial for homicide a juror is not incompetent merely because he believes that deceased was murdered,[41] or that he was killed and that defendant did the killing,[42] since the act may have been accidental or justifiable;[43] and it has also been held under this rule that a juror who has formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the principal felon is not incompetent to act on the trial of one charged as an accessary.[44] A juror is not incompetent because he has formed an opinion as to a fact admitted by the pleadings,[45] or which is conceded on the trial,[46] or upon a question of law to be decided by the court;[47] nor where in case of a conviction the degree of punishment is fixed by the jury, is a juror incompetent because he has formed an opinion as to the punishment to be inflicted in case of a verdict of guilty.[48]

f. Opinions Formed But Not Expressed. It seems that at common law the formation, without any expression of an opinion, did not render a juror incompetent,[49] and this rule has been adopted in some cases in this country;[50] but the sounder rule would seem to be that if the opinion is of a fixed and decided character it is immaterial whether it has been expressed or not,[51] and it will be observed that the cases do not ordinarily recognize any such distinction.[52]

The better view would seem to be that the expression of an opinion is not an essential condition of disqualification. The expression of the opinion is only an evidence of its existence, and if the juror manifests or admits the existence of an opinion amounting to prejudgment of the case he is incompetent whether he has ever expressed the opinion or not. g. Opinions Requiring Evidence to Remove. It has been held in some cases that a juror is incompetent if he has formed an opinion which it will require evidence to remove,[53] notwithstanding he states that he can disregard the opinion so formed and render an impartial verdict.[54] But on the contrary it has been expressly held that this is no certain or proper test of a juror's competency,[55] since it must necessarily be in every case where any opinion or impression is formed that some evidence will be required to remove it.[56] The proper test is whether the juror can and will, notwithstanding such opinion, render a fair and impartial verdict according to the evidence.[57] It has been held that the juror should be held incompetent if he states that he has formed an unqualified,[58] fixed,[59] or even a rather positive opinion,[60] which it will require evidence to remove; or that to remove it would take conclusive,[61] strong,[62] or considerable evidence;[63] or where such an opinion is based upon certain sources of information such as the evidence given on a former trial or conversations with parties or witnesses,[64] or where the juror seems uncertain as to whether the opinion will yield to evidence and not affect his verdict.[65] But the mere fact that some evidence may be necessary to remove an opinion is not sufficient to render a juror incompetent,[66] and by the great weight of authority if the juror testifies that, notwithstanding some evidence will be required to remove his opinion, it is of such a character that it will readily yield to evidence and not affect his verdict and the court is satisfied of the truth of his statement he is a competeut juror.[67]

4. Character and Purpose of Expressions. The mere expression of an opinion adverse to defendant does not render a juror incompetent if it is not accompanied by any malice or ill-will[68] or a fixed opinion as to defendant's guilt.[69] So a juror is not incompetent by reason of having made loose, inconsiderate, or jocular remarks indicating an opinion as to defendant's guilt, where it appears from his examination that he is in fact without prejudice and has formed no opinion,[70] or where it appears that such remarks were made solely for the purpose of avoiding jury duty,[71] or owing to the juror's embarrassment and confusion at having been peremptorily challenged.[72] If, however, the language used clearly indicates a prejudice or settled conviction as to defendant's guilt, the juror is incompetent.[73]

5. Source of Information on Which Opinion Is Based — a. In General. The opinion which will render a juror incompetent depends upon the nature and strength of the opinion and not upon its source and origin,[74] for some persons are so constituted that they will form the most positive opinions upon the most unreliable sources of information,[75] while others are so skeptical that they will accept nothing as true which is not proved by plain and direct evidence or established upon mathematical demonstration;[76] but the source of the opinion is often a material consideration in determining the actual state of the juror's mind,[77] since the opinion will generally be more or less decided according to the nature of the evidence upon which it is founded.[78]

b. Opinions Based on Rumor — (i) In General. It is ordinarily held that an opinion based solely upon common rumor will not render a juror incompetent,[79] since opinions so formed are usually no more than slight or hypothetical impressions which will readily yield to legal evidence.[80] The term "rumor," however, within the application of this rule relates to common reports of uncertain origin and which the juror has no just grounds to believe true,[81] and does not include information from what the juror believes to be a reliable and authentic source.[82] As in other cases therefore the strength and not the source of the opinion must finally determine the question of the juror's competency,[83] and if the opinion is of

(II) Qualified or Hypothetical Opinion. A hypothetical opinion based upon rumor only and entirely contingent upon the truth or falsity of such rumors, as to which the juror has no fixed belief, is not such an opinion as will render him incompetent;[88] and if the juror testifies that he is without any bias or prejudice and that this opinion will not prevent him from rendering an impartial verdict a challenge on this ground is properly overruled.[89]

(III) Opinion Requiring Evidence to Remove. It has been held that a juror is incompetent, although his opinion is based upon rumor if it would require evidence to remove it,[90] notwithstanding he states that he can render an impartial verdict.[91] But by the weight of authority if the juror testifies and it appears to the court that the opinion is of such a character that it will readily yield to evidence and that the juror can render an impartial verdict he is competent.[92]

c. Opinions Based on Newspaper Reports — (i) In General. Newspaper reports are ordinarily regarded as too unreliable to influence a fair-minded man when called upon to pass upon the merits of a case in the light of evidence given under oath;[93] and it is now a well settled rule that a juror, although he may have formed an opinion from reading such reports, is competent if he states that he is without prejudice and can try the case impartially according to the evidence and the court is satisfied that he will do so,[94] and there are now in many jurisdictions statutory provisions to this effect.[95] But a juror is incompetent, although his Reading a mere garbled statement of the evidence given before a coroner, or a reporterial comment thereon, will not render a juror incompetent if he testifies that he can render an impartial verdict. State v. Shackelford, 148 Mo. 493, 50 S. W. 105.

If it does not appear who testified, or what testimony was given before the coroner's jury, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the ruling of the trial court was erroneous in holding that a juror was competent, where he testified that he could renbefore a coroner, holding that in the latter case a juror is competent if he testifies that he can render an impartial verdict.[3]

(III) Qualified or Hypothetical Opinion. An opinion formed from reading newspaper reports which is purely hypothetical, depending upon the truth or falsity of the accounts read, is not such an opinion as will render a juror incompetent,[4] but is at most merely a ground for a challenge to the favor;[5] and if the juror upon examination testifies that he is without any bias or prejudice and can try the case fairly and impartially according to the evidence, a challenge on this ground is properly overruled.[6] But if the juror states that he believes what he has read and has formed an opinion, such opinion cannot be said to be hypothetical.[7] And if he admits that he is biased or could not be entirely indifferent by reason of such opinion he should be excluded.[8]

(IV) Opinion Requiring Evidence to Remove. It has been held that a juror is incompetent who has formed an opinion, although based upon newspaper reports which it will require evidence to remove,[9] and although the juror states that he can render an impartial verdict;[10] but by the weight of authority if the juror states and it satisfactorily appears to the court that the opinion is of such a character that it will readily yield to evidence and that the juror can render an impartial verdict he is competent.[11]

d. Opinions Based on Evidence Adduced at Trial — (I) Evidence on Preliminary Proceedings. A juror is not incompetent to sit on the trial of a case because he heard the evidence on the trial of a plea in bar to the indictment,[12] or on a preliminary investigation as to defendant's sanity.[13] Nor is a juror incompetent, provided he has formed no opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, because he has heard the evidence given on a coroner's inquest,[14] habeas corpus proceeding,[15] or on the preliminary hearing before a magistrate;[16] but he is incompetent if he has formed an opinion from hearing[17] or reading such evidence,[18] even, it has been held, although he states that he can, notwithstanding such opinion, render an impartial verdict.[19]

(II) Evidence on Former Trial. A juror is not incompetent merely because he has heard the evidence at a former trial, if he has formed no opinion therefrom as to the merits of the case or the guilt or innocence of defendant;[20] but he is incompetent if he has formed such an opinion from hearing[21] or reading such evidence,[22] and this notwithstanding the juror states that he can disregard the opinion so formed and render a fair and impartial verdict.[23]

(III) Evidence on Trial of Another Case. A juror is incompetent who has formed an opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence from hearing the evidence on the trial of another indictment against the same defendant involving the same evidence,[24] or the evidence given on the separate trial of another person indicted with defendant for the same offense,[25] or for an offense involving the same evidence,[26] notwithstanding the juror states that he can try the case impar-

The mere fact that a juror has talked with a witness does not render him incompetent if he has formed no opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence (Thomson v. People, 24 Ill. 60, 76 Am. Dec. 733), or if it does not appear that such conversation had any bearing upon the opinion formed (Wade v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 170, 32 S. W. 772, 60 Am. St. Rep. 31).

In Indiana the criminal code of 1881 provides that a juror is incompetent if he has formed an opinion "founded upon conversations with witnesses of the transaction, or reading reports of their testimony or hearing them testify" (Woods v. State, 134 Ind. 35, 33 N. E. 901; Dugle v. State, 100 Ind. 259), and an opinion formed from reading an affidavit of a witness is within the application of the statute (Woods v. State, supra); but a juror is not necessarily incompetent, under the statute, who has talked with a witness, who was not a "witness of the transaction," or where the opinion formed thereby does not relate to the gravamen of the offense, but merely to some incidental or collateral matter (Walker v. State, 102 Ind. 502, 1 N. E. 856).

evidence adduced upon the trial.[33] If the juror so testifies and it satisfactorily appears to the court that he can do so, he is competent notwithstanding he has formed an opinion as to the merits of the case,[34] and there are in a number of jurisdictions statutory provisions to this effect,[35] or which make such provision with regard to opinions based upon rumor or newspaper reports.[36] There are a variety of circumstances, however, which arise in practice, which make this question in many cases difficult to determine,[37] and much must be left to the discretion of the trial judge,[38] who must decide the question, not from isolated conditions calculated to influence his judgment.[52] So also, where the opinion is based upon certain sources of information, the law presumes that the juror will be influenced, although perhaps unconsciously, and excludes him, although he states that he can render an impartial verdict.[53]

b. Effect on Presumption of Innocence. A juror is incompetent in a criminal case if his opinion is of such a decided character that he could not give due weight to the presumption of innocence of the accused.[54] This rule does not require that the juror should be entirely without any opinion or impression as to defendant's guilt,[55] nor is he necessarily incompetent because some evidence may be required to remove the opinion or impression;[56] but he is incompetent where the opinion is so fixed that the juror states that he would not acquit unless defendant should prove himself innocent.[57]

c. Doubt as to Whether Opinion Will Influence Verdict. If the juror himself expresses any doubt or uncertainty as to whether his opinion will affect his ability to decide the case impartially according to the evidence he is incompetent;[58] and if the court has any doubt from the juror's whole examination as to his ability to

Under the New York statute which provides in substance that the fact that a juror has formed or expressed an opinion or impression shall not be a sufficient ground for challenge for actual bias, if the juror shall state under oath that he believes such opinion or impression will not influence his verdict, and that he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence, and the court is satisfied that he can do so (see People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 115), it is not necessary for the juror to state that he knows he can render an impartial verdict, but merely that he believes that he can do so (People v. Willett, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 500); nor need he make this statement literally in the words of the stat-render an impartial verdict it should decide it against the juror's competency and exclude him.[59]

I. Personal Opinions and Conscientious Scruples — 1. In General. A juror is incompetent who has such personal opinions as would influence his verdict with regard to the subject-matter of the suit,[60] or the law under which it is instituted,[61] or the defense pleaded,[62] or who has a fixed opinion as to any of the main issues involved;[63] but not by reason of opinions not affecting the merits of the case,[64] or where it appears that he is entirely willing to accept the law as laid down by the court and able to decide the case impartially according to the evidence.[65]

2. Religious Beliefs. A person who by reason of his religious belief does not consider an act as criminal which the law denominates as such is incompetent as a juror on a trial for such offense.[66]

3. Questions of Law and Particular Statutes. A person who has formed and expressed an opinion on a general principle of law is not incompetent as a juror in a case in which that principle applies,[67] or because he believes that the law under which the proceedings are instituted is a good law,[68] or that it is constitutional;[69] or, on the other hand, because he doubts the wisdom or expediency of the law, provided he is willing so long as it is in effect to enforce it;[70] but a juror is incompetent who states that he is opposed to the law under which an action is brought and admits that he is not in favor of enforcing it,[71] or who states that he has such an opinion as to its unconstitutionality that he could not convict defendant no matter what the state of the evidence might be.[72]

4. Punishment Prescribed For Offense — a. In General. A juror is incompetent who is so opposed to a particular form of punishment that it would influence ute (People v. Martell, 138 N. Y. 595, 33 N. E. 838), but they must be made in substance and under oath (People v. Casey, supra), and the declaration of the juror's belief that he can render an impartial verdict must be unequivocal (People v. McQuade, 110 N. Y. 284, 18 N. E. 156, 1 L. R. A. 273, 21 Abb. N. Cas. 417, 6 N. Y. Cr. 1 [reversing 1 N. Y. Suppl. 155]).

It is not necessary that the juror should belong to a religious denomination which entertains such scruples to render him incompetent. People v. Damon, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 351; People v. Jones, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 112.

Who may raise objection.— While the fact that a juror has conscientious scruples against capital punishment is a ground of challenge on the part of the state (Murphy v. State, 37 Ala. 142; State v. Compagnet, 48 La. Ann. 1470, 21 So. 46), and is sufficient cause for excusing a juror at his own request (see State v. Compagnet, supra), it is not a ground of challenge on the part of defendant (Murphy v. State, supra; State v. Compagnet, supra); nor is the court obliged, in the absence of any objection, to exclude a juror on this ground of its own motion (Murphy v. State, supra), although it is not error to do so (Waller v. State, 40 Ala. 325; Lewis v. State, 9 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 115).

in some cases the statutes now expressly so provide,[76] or provide that persons having such scruples shall not be permitted or compelled to serve.[77] The same rule applies, although under the statutes the jury are permitted to bring in a verdict of guilty "without capital punishment,"[78] or substitute imprisonment for the death penalty.[79] A juror is also subject to challenge who states that he is uncertain as to whether he has such conscientious scruples,[80] or who states that he has such scruples except as to a particular offense or offenses other than that with which defendant is charged.[81] A juror is not incompetent, however, who has no conscientious scruples against finding a verdict of guilt in such cases, but is merely opposed to capital punishment on principle as matter of policy,[82] unless it appears that his opinion is of such a character as would influence him in his consideration of the evidence, or hinder him in arriving at such a verdict if the evidence warrants it.[83] By the weight of authority a juror is incompetent in a capital case who states that he has conscientious scruples against finding defendant guilty of an offense punishable by death, although he further states that if satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt he would render a verdict accordingly;[84] but the rule is otherwise where a juror is merely opposed to capital

And after a juror has been accepted by both parties, upon his statement that he has no conscientious scruples against capital punishment, if he states that he misunderstood the question and answered erroneously, it is not error for the court to dismiss him and proceed with the reorganization of the jury. In Iowa and South Dakota, it is held that conscientious scruples against capital punishment is not in such cases a ground for challenge by the state (State v. Lee, 91 Iowa 499, 60 N. W. 119; State v. Garrington, 11 S. D. 178, 76 N. W. 326), but that a juror may be examined as to his scruples as a basis for a peremptory challenge (State v. Dooley, 89 Iowa 584, 57 N. W. 414; State v. Garrington, supra).

The reason of the rule applies in either case, for, if in the one case the juror's scruples would not permit him to render a verdict in accordance with the law, in the other they would not permit him to exercise the discretionary power with which he is invested and which it is essential he should exercise to carry out the spirit and intention of the law. Gross v. State, 2 Ind. 329.

Conscience and principle are essentially different and in many cases have no connection whatever. Many persons are opposed to capital punishment on grounds of public policy, because they believe society would be benefited by the adoption of some other form of punishment, and yet so long as the law provides that certain crimes shall be punishable by death, would feel no conscientious scruples in finding a verdict of guilty against one accused of such crime. punishment as a question of policy, and states that his opinion will in no way influence his verdict.[85]

5. Weight and Effect of Evidence — a. In General. A juror is incompetent who is unwilling to be governed by the established rules of evidence,[86] who would not convict on legal evidence,[87] or whose answers show that he would follow his own views regardless of the instructions of the court as to the weight and effect to be given to a certain kind of evidence under certain circumstances;[88] but a juror is not incompetent because it appears from his examination that he has erroneous views as to the law relating to the burden of proof or the weight and effect of evidence if he testifies that he has no prejudice and will follow the instructions of the court.[89] It is not competent to examine a juror as to whether he has formed or expressed an opinion as to the credibility of a witness who is to be called,[90] or how he would regard the testimony of defendant if he should go on the stand as a witness.[91]

b. Circumstantial Evidence. A juror is incompetent and subject to challenge by the state who states that he would not convict upon circumstantial evidence, however strong,[92] or who would not convict upon circumstantial evidence where the punishment would be death,[93] although having no conscientious scruples

A juror who must either violate his conscience or his oath ought never to be permitted to serve (Thompson & M. Jur. § 202), and if he has conscientious scruples against capital punishment he will naturally be influenced no matter how much he is disposed to do his duty (State v. Bowman, 80 N. C. 432).

Suicide as evidence of insanity.— In an action on an insurance policy where suicide is a defense, a juror is incompetent who believes that the fact that a man has committed suicide is conclusive evidence that he was insane at the time of the act (Boileau v. Life Ins. Co., 9 Phila. (Pa.) 218; Texas Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 2 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 160; Hiatt v. Mut. L. Ins. Co., 12 Fed. Cas. against capital punishment,[94] or any objection to a conviction on circumstantial evidence where the punishment is not capital.[95] A juror is also incompetent who states that he has conscientious scruples against finding a verdict of guilty in capital cases upon circumstantial evidence,[96] although he states that he has no such scruples where the evidence is direct.[97]

c. Testimony of Particular Classes of Persons. It is competent to examine jurors as to whether, if defendant should testify as a witness in his own behalf, they would give his testimony less weight because of his nationality,[98] or because he was engaged in certain business,[99] and also as to whether they would disregard the testimony of an accomplice,[1] or are so prejudiced against informers as to prevent them giving the testimony of such person its lawful weight;[2] and it has been held that a juror is incompetent who on the trial of a person engaged in a certain business states that he would give his testimony less weight on this account,[3] or who states that he has a strong prejudice against informers and appears uncertain as to whether he would believe such testimony even if corroborated by other witnesses.[4]

XIII. CHALLENGES AND OBJECTIONS.

A. Nature and Classification. A challenge is an exception or objection taken to the jurors summoned and returned for the trial of a cause either individually (to the polls), or collectively (to the array).[5] Challenges to jurors are divided primarily into challenges to the array and challenges to the polls.[6] Chal-

The fact that the evidence is direct does not make it erroneous to sustain a challenge to a juror who will not convict on circumstantial evidence, since it cannot be assumed that the case will not derive any support from circumstantial evidence (People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 531, 66 Pac. 794); and furthermore the juror's competency is not to be determined by the character of the evidence expected to be produced but by the standard established by law for all cases (Coleman v. State, 59 Miss. 484. Compare State v. Anderson, 52 La. Ann. 101, 26 So. 781).

lenges to the polls are further divided into challenges for cause and peremptory challenges,[7] and both challenges to the array and challenges for cause are further divided into challenges for principal cause and challenges to the favor.[8] All objections to the entire panel growing out of any error or irregularity in selecting or summoning the jury must be taken by a challenge to the array or motion to quash the venire,[9] while objections to the qualifications or competency of particular jurors or a part of the panel must be taken by a challenge to the polls.[10]

B. Order of Interposing Different Challenges. Challenges to the array should precede challenges to the polls;[11] and of challenges to the polls the challenges for cause should precede peremptory challenges,[12] or at least a party cannot require to challenge peremptorily before challenging for cause;[13] and of challenges for cause those for principal cause should precede those to the favor.[14]

C. Right to Stand Jurors Aside. The practice of allowing the prosecution to stand jurors aside originated under the English statutes,[15] which took away the crown's right of peremptory challenge and limited it to challenge for cause shown.[16] The practice is in effect a challenge for cause, without at the time assigning the cause,[17] which cannot be required until the whole panel is gone through;[18] but if the whole panel is gone through without obtaining a full jury those stood aside are then recalled and if not challenged are sworn.[19] The right exists in trials for mis-

Until the panel is gone through and exhausted a juror stood aside cannot be recalled, and when recalled the state may challenge him for cause with as much effect as in the first instance. Jewell v. Com., 22 Pa. St. 94.

The order in which the jurors are recalled should be the same as that in which they are stood aside, and it is not error for the court to refuse to allow them to be recalled in a different order. Com. v. Eisenhower, 181 Pa. St. 470, 37 Atl. 521, 59 Am. St. Rep. 670.

The fact that a juror is not recalled and the challenge passed upon and a talesman called in his place is not error where the parties had knowledge of the fact and made no objection. State v. Lytle, 27 N. C. 58.

demeanors as well as felonies,[20] and applies to jurors called to supply vacancies as well as those of the original panel;[21] but the right can be claimed only by the prosecution and not by defendant.[22] The practice has been recognized in a number of jurisdictions in this country,[23] and in Canada.[24] It has been held in some jurisdictions that the right to stand jurors aside is not affected by the statutes giving the state the right of peremptory challenge,[25] but in others the contrary is held,[26] and in one jurisdiction at least the privilege has been expressly abolished by a recent statute.[27]

D. Rejection or Discharge on Court's Own Motion — 1. In General — a. Power of Court. It is well settled that the court may of its own motion reject or discharge from the panel a juror who is disqualified, unfit, or incompetent to serve as such, although not challenged or objected to by either party,[28] at any

In the federal courts the right to stand jurors aside was formerly recognized (see U. S. v. Douglass, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,989, 2 Blatchf. 207), but is denied since the statute conferring the right of peremptory challenge (U. S. v. Butler, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,700, 1 Hughes 457).

The number which may be stood aside is not unlimited, but rests in the sound discretion of the court and may be restricted if the state carries the privilege to an unwarrantable and needless extent. State v. Sloan, 97 N. C. 499, 2 S. E. 666.

The time for standing jurors aside should not be more restricted than right of challenge (Com. v. Noonan, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 372), and may be exercised after the juror has been examined as to his competency (Com. v. Mayland, 29 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 150), and after a full panel of twelve has been called and seated in the box (Com. v. Noonan, supra).

The original reason for allowing the privilege of standing jurors aside was because the state had no right of peremptory challenge and the practice should cease with the reason upon which it was based, otherwise the state would not only be accorded an unfair advantage but a privilege that might easily result in abuses which it would be difficult for the court to detect. ing a juror manifestly disqualified or incompetent which is discovered after he is sworn,[54] although previously existing,[55] or generally wherever from any cause such a necessity exists as to make it appear that the ends of justice would otherwise be defeated.[56] It has been held that the court may reject a juror after being sworn upon the ground that he is an alien,[57] related to one of the parties,[58] a member of the grand jury which found the indictment,[59] that he has formed and expressed an opinion as to the merits of the case,[60] or in a capital case because he is conscientiously opposed to capital punishment.[61] A juror may also be discharged after being sworn on the ground of intoxication,[62] sickness,[63] or where, by reason of the sickness or death of a member of his family, the court is of the opinion that the knowledge of such fact will incapacitate him from properly discharging his duties as a juror.[64]

3. Effect of Discharge on Insufficient Grounds. It has been held to be reversible error for the court of its own motion and against the direct objection of one of the parties to exclude a juror without good cause,[65] or for a cause which merely affords a ground of challenge which the parties may waive and which if waived would not affect the juror's competency;[66] but on the contrary it has been held that it is not reversible error to exclude a juror for an insufficient cause if an impartial and unobjectionable jury is afterward obtained,[67] particularly where

A distinction is to be made between matters of disqualification for jury duty in general, and a mere matter of challenge by the parties which imputes no absolute want of capacity to serve as a juror. Montague v. Com., 10 Gratt. (Va.) 767.

A juror cannot challenge himself and the court will not discharge him on his own request for an objection which the law allows a party to make for his own benefit where he refuses to do so. Bickham v. Pissant, 1 N. J. L. 254.

the excepting party has not exhausted the peremptory challenges to which he is entitled.[68]

E. Waiver of Challenge or Objection and Harmless Error — 1. In General. Since a jury trial itself may be waived it follows that the parties may waive any lesser right or privilege incident to this mode of trial,[69] whether given by the common law or by statute;[70] and where such waiver has been made the parties will be bound thereby and the action of the court founded thereon cannot be assigned as error.[71] They may waive an objection to the whole panel which would furnish ground for a challenge to the array,[72] or objections to the individual jurors which would furnish ground for a challenge for cause,[73] or any irregularity in the selection and formation of the jury.[74] Such waiver need not be express but will be held to follow a failure to interpose a known ground of challenge or objection,[75] a failure to exercise due diligence to discover those not known,[76] acquiescence in or failure to object to the action or rulings of the court,[77] to interpose challenges or objections on different grounds at the proper time and in the proper order,[78] or by refusing to take advantage of a means or opportunity afforded by the court for excluding an objectionable juror or effectually correcting the error or irregularity complained of.[79] Nor can a party assign as error a ruling of the court in impaneling the jury which was made at his own request.[80]

2. Failure to Challenge or Object — a. Competency and Qualifications of Jurors. An objection to a juror which is a good cause of challenge must be made in time or will be considered as waived.[81] It is well settled that a failure to challenge or object operates as a conclusive waiver if the ground of objection is known legal age for jury duty,[91] prejudiced or pecuniarily interested,[92] related to one of the parties,[93] that he was a member of the grand jury that found the indictment,[94] or had formed or expressed an opinion with regard to the merits of the case.[95] This rule is based upon the ground that it is the duty of the parties to ascertain by proper examination at the time the jury is impaneled the existence of any grounds of objection to the jurors, and that failing to do so they should be precluded from thereafter raising any objection which might have been so discovered,[96] and therefore an exception to the rule should be made in cases where the juror was in fact duly examined and testified falsely,[97] or where his answers were such as reasonably to mislead the examining party and prevent a specific inquiry as to the particular ground of objection subsequently discovered.[98]

c. Impaneling, Examining, and Excusing Jurors. A party by failing to challenge or object waives any irregularity in the impaneling of a jury.[4] This rule applies to objections based on rulings of the court as to the competency of jurors,[5] the conduct of their examination,[6] a failure of the court to examine,[7] the extent and sufficiency of such examination,[8] failure to swear jurors before examining them,[9] the allowance on such examination of improper questions,[10] or the exclusion of proper questions.[11] So also by failing to object at the time a party waives any objection to the action of the court in excusing jurors,[12] or to its action in reject-

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Jury," § 515.

It is not the duty of the court of its own motion, in the absence of statute, to examine jurors as to their qualifications, and if the particular ground of objection afterward relied on,[18] or if the juror fails to answer any question asked and he does not challenge or insist upon an answer,[19] or if the juror's answer is not clear and he fails to procure a definite statement.[20] The rule applies to jurors summoned on a special venire as well as those of the regular panel,[21] and extends to each and every element that goes to constitute a qualified juror except such as the court is expressly required by statute to ascertain of its own motion.[22]

4. Passing or Tender of Juror. It has been held that a party waives the right to challenge a juror for cause after he has been examined, tendered to, and accepted by the other party;[23] but it is well settled that the court may in its discretion allow a challenge to be made to a juror after being tendered to the other party in case a good cause for the juror's exclusion is afterward shown.[24]

5. Acceptance of Juror or Jury. A party who accepts a juror with knowl-parties fail to examine or to request the court to do so they waive the right to object to disqualifications subsequently discovered. Skinner v. State, 53 Miss. 399; State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619.

A party is not precluded from moving to examine jurors by a direction of the court for all persons interested in the action to leave their seats, and if no inquiry is made as to their qualifications the right to object is waived. Daniels v. Lowell, 139 Mass. 56, 29 N. E. 222.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Jury," § 515.

Although failure to examine is due to a mistake of fact not induced by the juror himself or by the adverse party, a party cannot object after verdict to the incompetency of a juror which might have been so discovered. Morse v. Montana Ore-Purchasing Co., 105 Fed. 337.

A refusal to allow jurors to be examined after they are sworn as to certain grounds of challenge is not error where no good excuse is given for failure to ask such questions when the jurors were examined upon their voir dire. Ferrell v. State, 45 Fla. 26, 34 So. 220.

Where a juror states that he has formed and expressed an opinion on his voir dire examination but that he can render a fair and impartial verdict, an objection on this ground is waived if the parties do not examine him or make any attempt to ascertain the nature of such expression or the strength of such opinion and permit the juror to be sworn without objection. Schneider v. State, 2 Ohio Cir. Ct. 420, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 565; Kirk v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 440.

The mere passing of a juror over to the court or the other party for examination is not an absolute waiver of the right to challenge if good cause be afterward shown. If an objection to a juror be kept back at the proper time for an improper reason or from motives of caprice it would be proper to declare the right to challenge wholly waived and the discretionary power of the court to do so cannot be doubted, but if it appears that the juror is manifestly incompetent there is no error in allowing the challenge to be made. McFadden v. Com., 23 Pa. St. 12, 62 Am. Dec. 308.

edge of an objection to his competency waives the objection;[25] but does not by accepting a juror waive the right to challenge him at any time before he is sworn for a cause subsequently discovered,[26] where he was not guilty of any negligence in not discovering the objection before the juror was accepted.[27] If a party expressly accepts as satisfactory the jury as finally impaneled he waives any prior objection to the action of the court in overruling a challenge for cause,[28] or in sustaining a challenge for cause interposed by the adverse party on insufficient grounds,[29] or irregularity in the selection or impaneling of the jury.[30]

6. Appearance and Participation in Cause. A party by voluntarily appearing and going to trial without objection waives any irregularity in the drawing, summoning, or impaneling of the jury,[31] or objections to their competency,[32] or if after the jury has been formed the parties waive a jury trial altogether and consent to a trial by the court they waive any previous irregularity in the formation of the jury.[33] But if a challenge or objection is duly made and exception taken, a party does not by further participation in the case waive his objection to the constitution of the jury,[34] or the competency of a juror challenged,[35] or to the action of the court in erroneously discharging a juror from the panel.[36]

7. Withdrawal of Challenge. A party may withdraw a challenge to the array and if he does so and the jury is impaneled he waives the irregularity upon which the challenge was based.[37] So also if a challenge for cause to an individual juror is sustained and the challenge is afterward withdrawn and the juror impaneled, the party cannot object after verdict that he was incompetent;[38] but a challenge to an individual juror, although withdrawn, may be renewed at any time before the jury is completed and sworn.[39]

8. Failure to Challenge Peremptorily. It has been held that where a challenge for cause is improperly overruled a party is not obliged to challenge the juror peremptorily and may rely upon his exception, although he did not do so and his peremptory challenges were not exhausted;[40] but by the weight of authority such an error will not be regarded as material if the objecting party did not challenge the juror peremptorily and his peremptory challenges were not exhausted,[41] or if the record fails affirmatively to show that such challenges were exhausted,[42] it being held that a party must use all available means to exclude all objectionable jurors,[43] and that a failure to do so constitutes a waiver of his objection.[44]

9. Failure to Exhaust Peremptory Challenges. It is ordinarily held that if a competent jury is obtained without exhausting the peremptory challenges of the objecting party, he cannot avail himself of any error or irregularity in the summoning or selection of the jury,[45] or to the action of the court in refusing to sustain a challenge to the array,[46] or motion to quash the venire,[47] or in excusing jurors,[48] or rejecting and discharging jurors of its own motion for insufficient cause.[49] By the weight of authority this rule also applies to errors of the court in overruling or sustaining challenges for cause, but the authorities are not uniform on this point.[50]

10. Waiver of Challenge to the Array. An objection or exception to the whole panel should be made by a challenge to the array or motion to quash the venire at the time the panel is presented and before entering upon the organization of the jury, and if not so made will be held to be waived.[51] A challenge to the array should also precede any challenges to the polls,[52] and a party by interposing challenges to the polls waives the right to afterward challenge the array.[53] So also if a party after a challenge to the array is overruled waives all objections for cause to the jurors called and also his peremptory challenges, he waives his challenge to the array.[54]

11. Waiver of Peremptory Challenge. The right to challenge peremptorily may be waived;[55] but a party should not be precluded from exercising the right at any time before the juror is sworn unless the waiver was made intelligently and intentionally,[56] and voluntarily.[57] One party by passing or tendering a juror for examination does not waive the right to challenge the juror peremptorily if not challenged for cause by the other party.[58] If the statute expressly requires that peremptory challenges must be made to each juror when called the right is waived unless so made.[59] Where the parties are required to challenge alternately from a full panel, it is held in some cases that a party who fails to challenge in the first instance does not waive the right to challenge after the other has done so,[60] but that he loses one challenge at each time that he fails to challenge in turn.[61] Others hold that a waiver or refusal to challenge in turn is a waiver of the right to challenge any juror then presented who might have been challenged,[62] but does not affect the number of challenges,[63] which may be exercised against any juror subsequently called.[64] It is also held in some jurisdictions that no peremptory challenge can be made to a juror or panel accepted as satisfactory;[65] but the acceptance of a jury at any stage of its formation is no waiver of the right to challenge peremptorily other jurors subsequently called to complete it.[66] Where the state is allowed both to stand jurors aside and to challenge peremptorily, the fact that a juror accepted by defendant is set aside by the state is not a waiver of the right to subsequently challenge such juror peremptorily.[67]

12. Waiver of Irregularities in Special or Struck Jury. A party who participates without objection in the striking of a struck jury waives any irregularity in the action of the court in ordering a trial by such jury of its own motion,[68] or any irregularity in the selection of the list,[69] or objection to the competency of any of the jurors composing it which might have been ascertained by a proper and timely inquiry;[70] but where irregularities occur in the formation of a struck jury to which a party objects and excepts at the time, he does not waive his exception by further participation in the striking of the jury,[71] nor does a party waive an objection to an error of the court in allowing the other party a peremptory challenge in selecting a struck jury by afterward challenging peremptorily some of the panel himself.[72]

13. Effect of Erroneous Rulings on Challenges — a. In Overruling Challenge. It has been held that an exception to an error in overruling a challenge for cause is good, although the objectionable juror was excluded by a peremptory challenge and the peremptory challenges of the objecting party were not exhausted before the jury was completed.[73] The weight of authority, however, is that such an error is not material if the objectionable juror did not serve upon the trial and the legal rights of the objecting party were not prejudiced,[74] as where the juror was challenged peremptorily by the adverse party,[75] or by the party whose challenge for cause was overruled, and a jury was obtained before he had exhausted his peremptory challenges.[76] Some of the cases hold that the error is material if the objecting party exhausts his peremptory challenges before the jury is completed,[77] which, however, must affirmatively appear from the record;[78] but others make a further qualification of the rule, holding that this is not sufficient to show prejudice, but that it must further appear that the objecting party was thereafter for want of such challenge compelled to accept an objectionable person upon the jury.[79] It is also held that where the court erroneously overrules a challenge and the juror is challenged peremptorily, the error may be cured by allowing the objecting party an additional peremptory challenge,[80] and that the adverse party cannot object to such allowance.[81]

that since a party has no right to any particular juror but only to a trial by an impartial jury,[84] the error is without prejudice if an impartial and unobjectionable jury is subsequently obtained to try the case,[85] and that a party cannot claim to have been prejudiced in securing such jury where his peremptory challenges were not exhausted before the jury was completed,[86] or even where they were exhausted unless it further appears that he was forced to accept an objectionable juror on account of the court's ruling.[87]

F. Challenge to Array or Motion to Quash Venire — 1. In General. A challenge to the array is an exception to the whole panel,[88] and was at common law divided into principal challenges to the array and challenges to the favor.[89] In some jurisdictions the exception is presented by what is termed a motion to quash the venire,[90] panel,[91] or array,[92] which motions are equivalent to a challenge to the array.[93] A challenge to the array or motion to quash may be made by either party,[94] and all objections to the manner of selecting and summoning the panel must be taken in this manner or the objection will be held to be waived.[95]

2. Grounds. A challenge to the array must be based upon some ground affecting the validity of the whole panel,[96] and growing out of the proceedings in select-

Objections to individual jurors must be ing and summoning the jurors composing it.[97] At common law a challenge to the array was based upon some partiality or default on the part of the sheriff or his under officer,[98] and this was the only ground for such challenge,[99] it being the duty of the sheriff to select as well as to summon the jury.[1] Bias or interest on the part of the summoning officer is still a ground of challenge to the array,[2] as is also a material departure from the procedure prescribed by law in selecting the jury, but mere irregularities are not sufficient. The particular irregularities which are or are not sufficient ground for such challenge have been fully discussed in the preceding sections relative to the selection of the jury-list,[3] drawing and summoning the regular panel,[4] special venires,[5] and special or struck juries.[6] In some jurisdictions the statutes expressly provide as to the grounds upon which a challenge to the array may be based and such challenge can be made only upon the grounds enumerated.[7] In some cases the statutes provide that the challenge can be based only upon a material departure from the forms prescribed by law in respect to the drawing and return of the jury,[8] or either upon such material departure or an intentional omission on the part of the sheriff to summon one or more of the jurors drawn.[9]

Under the Texas statutes no challenge to the array is allowed to the panel selected by the jury commissioners (Carter v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 345, 46 S. W. 236, 48 S. 3. Time For Making. Challenges to the panel or array must proceed the challenges to the polls,[10] but are not to be made until the challenging party's case is called for trial,[11] and a full jury has appeared.[12] The challenge or motion to quash must then be promptly made,[13] or at least as soon as the facts which warrant it are known,[14] or if the time is regulated by statute, within the time so limited.[15] It has been held that the challenge or motion was in time if made after a demurrer to the indictment had been overruled and defendant pleaded not guilty, but before he had announced ready for trial,[16] or before challenges to the polls and before the return of the venire;[17] but the objection must be made before trial,[18] and is too late after the jury have been impaneled and sworn,[19] or even after the impaneling of the jury has been begun.[20] If no objection was made at the trial as to the manner of selecting or summoning the jury, it is too late to urge the

4. Form and Sufficiency. A challenge to the array must be in writing,[24] and the statutes usually expressly so provide.[25] It must also be certain and specific,[26] setting forth distinctly the grounds relied on,[27] and in what the alleged irregularity consists;[28] and where by statute only irregularities of a certain character are sufficient to sustain the challenge there must be specific allegations bringing the case within the statute.[29] In some cases the statutes require the challenge or motion to be verified,[30] and in such cases the verification must be positive, and not upon information and belief.[31]

5. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. 6. EVIDENCE. When a challenge to the array is made, the challenging party must stand ready to establish his challenge by proof of the illegality of the panel,[35] and if no evidence be produced to support it, the challenge may properly be overruled.[36] It is too late unless leave was previously given to introduce such proof after the challenge or motion has been passed upon and overruled,[37] or after the jury have been impaneled and sworn, and the trial begun.[38] The proof in support of the challenge may be made either by oral evidence or affidavits,[39] the latter being the better practice.[40] On a challenge to the array, evidence is not admissible to contradict the records of the court;[41] but the testimony of the presiding judge is admissible to supplement the record when incomplete, and show the action actually taken in selecting the jury,[42] and the regularity of the drawing may be proved by the testimony of the clerk or officers present, even though it contradicts the clerk's certificate of such drawing.[43] On a challenge based on the ground of bias of the summoning officer, he may be asked any questions which would be relevant to the question of bias on the examination of a juror.[44] It will be presumed upon appeal that the challenge was tried and determined upon legal and sufficient evidence, unless the case or bill of exceptions shows the contrary.[45]

array for a principal cause are tried by the court, and challenges to the favor by triers appointed by the court.[46] The distinction between the two classes of challenges is now generally disregarded,[47] the usual practice being for the court to try all challenges to the array,[48] and where there is a right to have triers appointed, a failure to demand them and a submission of evidence to the court is a waiver of the right.[49] A demurrer or exception to the challenge admits the facts alleged,[50] and the court passes upon its sufficiency, assuming the facts alleged to be true.[51] If, however, the challenge be denied the court proceeds to try the truth of the facts alleged;[52] but if denied and no evidence is introduced in support of the challenge it is properly overruled,[53] and if the challenge presents no legal ground of objection to the jury, it may be summarily overruled without any replication thereto being filed.[54] If the challenge be disallowed, the court proceeds to impanel the jury;[55] but if sustained, the entire panel for the term must be discharged,[56] and the trial judge after setting aside the panel for the term in one case cannot subsequently during that term in another case hold it to be good,[57] nor can the challenging party where his challenge is sustained in one case and a new jury summoned challenge the jury so summoned on the ground that the regular panel was erroneously discharged.[58] The disallowance of a challenge to the array which should have been sustained renders void the trial by a jury selected from such array,[59] but a successful challenge to the array of the regular panel does not affect the competency of a special venire previously ordered.[60]

G. Challenges For Cause — 1. Nature and Classification. A challenge for cause is a challenge to a juror for which some cause or reason is alleged.[61] At common law such challenges were divided into challenges for principal cause and to the favor,[62] the former being based upon grounds from which if shown to exist the disqualification of the juror followed as a legal conclusion, and the latter upon grounds which merely raised a suspicion of bias to be determined as a question of fact.[63] In some jurisdictions a somewhat similar classification of challenges is made by statute but under different nomenclature, the challenges being termed general or particular causes of challenge or challenges for actual or for implied bias,[64] the general causes of challenge and challenges for implied bias corresponding to what were recognized as grounds of challenge for principal cause at common law, and those for actual bias covering largely objections formerly urged upon challenges to the favor.[65] It was formerly important to observe the distinction between challenges for principal cause and to the favor in view of the different methods for trying such challenges;[66] but in most jurisdictions the distinction between the two classes is now practically disregarded,[67] the usual practice being for all challenges to be tried and determined by the court.[68]

A challenge for cause is otherwise defined as "an objection to a particular juror, which is either general, that he is disqualified from serving in any case; or particular, that he is disqualified from serving in the action on trial." People v. Fong Ah Sing, 70 Cal. 8, 11, 11 Pac. 323.

2. Right to Challenge For Cause. The right to challenge jurors for cause exists independently of any statutory provision,[69] and is an essential incident of the right to trial by jury which the legislature cannot impair,[70] and it may be exercised without limit as to number so long as the cause assigned is sufficient.[71] The right may be exercised in trials by jury in justices' courts as well as courts of ordinary jurisdiction,[72] and in condemnation proceedings where the constitution provides that the assessment shall be by jury.[73] In criminal cases the right is in no way dependent upon the nature of the offense,[74] and may be exercised by the state as well as by defendant,[75] and unlike the right of peremptory challenge may be claimed on the trial of preliminary issues as well as the final issue.[76] In the case of a struck jury the parties may challenge any of the panel for cause before striking the jury.[77] A juror cannot, however, challenge himself,[78] nor where one party has a right of challenge for a cause not available to the other can the latter object that he does not avail himself of the right.[79]

3. Grounds. A challenge for cause is based either upon the ground that the juror is lacking in the general qualifications for jury duty, and is therefore disqualified from serving in any case, or upon some particular ground rendering him unfit or incompetent to serve in the particular case on trial.[80] The particular grounds of objection falling under each class have been previously considered at length.[81] The fact that certain grounds of challenge are specified by statute does not preclude a challenge and the exclusion of a juror on other grounds,[82] for the circumstances which may authorize a challenge to the favor are infinite and incapable of successful enumeration.[83] Nor does the fact that the legislature provides that a certain ground of objection shall not be a sufficient ground of challenge for principal cause prevent a challenge for favor upon the same ground.[84]

4. Time and Order. The time to challenge jurors for cause is when they are presented for impaneling and before being sworn,[85] and if impaneled one at a time the challenge should be made when each individual juror is presented;[86] but unless expressly or impliedly waived the right may be exercised at any time before the juror is sworn.[87] A party must also prefer all of his challenges to a juror which are of the same nature and triable by the same forum at once,[88] but where differently tried a challenge for favor may be made after a challenge for principal cause has been tried and overruled.[89] After a juror is sworn and impaneled a party has no absolute right to challenge him for cause,[90] although the ground of objection was not previously known,[91] except in cases where the ground of objection originated after the juror was sworn,[92] or where the objecting party was not in fault or guilty of any lack of diligence in sooner discovering the objection.[93] The court may, however, in its discretion, allow a challenge for cause to be made after a juror is sworn.[94] The statutes in some jurisdictions provide that in criminal cases all challenges to a juror, whether peremptory of for cause, shall be first taken by the state,[95] or by defendant.[96]

favor.[1] It is not sufficient for a party merely to object that a juror is disqualified or incompetent,[2] that all of the jurors are disqualified,[3] to state that he challenges the juror,[4] or that he challenges "for cause" without stating the particular grounds.[5] If the challenge is on the ground of bias it must not only state the kind of bias, whether actual or implied,[6] but also the particular ground of bias or cause from which such bias is to be inferred.[7] Where such challenges are differently tried the challenge must show whether it is for principal cause or to the favor.[8] A challenge for cause need not be in writing,[9] but the grounds stated should be entered upon the record.[10]

7. Examination and Evidence — a. Right to Examine — (i) In General. The right to a trial by a fair and impartial jury includes the right to have the jurors sworn and examined as to their qualifications, and it is error for the court to deny this right if properly requested before the jury is sworn.[12] If, however, a juror is challenged by one party and the cause of challenge is admitted by the other, the court may exclude the juror without permitting the challenged party to examine him as to the matter alleged.[13] The right to examine is also a privilege which either party may waive.[14]

(II) Necessity For Challenge Before Examination. It is held in some jurisdictions that it is the duty of the court to examine jurors as to their competency and qualifications,[15] that neither party can claim the right to examine a juror without first interposing a challenge,[16] and that while the court may of its own motion and without any challenge not only examine but exclude a juror,[17] or may in its discretion permit a party to examine without first interposing a challenge,[18] it is purely discretionary with the court to permit such examination and its refusal to do so is not error.[19] This rule, however, has been elsewhere expressly disapproved and the action of the court in requiring a challenge to be interposed before examination held to be error,[20] but it is held that in such case no ruling of the court in the conduct of the examination can be assigned as error unless a challenge is taken at some stage of the proceedings in the court below.[21]

(III) Examination For Purpose of Peremptory Challenge. While there are a few decisions to the contrary,[22] it is held in most jurisdictions that parties have a right to question jurors on their examination not only for the purpose of showing grounds for a challenge for cause but also, within reasonable limits, to elicit such facts as will enable them intelligently to exercise their right of peremptory challenge,[23] and that it is error for the court to exclude questions which are pertinent for either purpose.[24] The nature and extent of this examination must be left largely to the discretion of the trial court,[25] which will not be interfered with unless clearly abused.[26]

(iv) Reëxamination. The court may in its discretion allow a party to reëxamine a juror after he has been once examined and accepted,[27] and if, after evidence is introduced, a juror is excused and another substituted it is error not to allow the other jurors to be reëxamined before they are resworn to try the case with the new juror;[28] but after the trial of a special plea of former conviction defendant has no right to reëxamine jurors before proceeding to trial upon the general plea of not guilty before the same jury.[29]

b. Rights and Privileges of Jurors. In the absence of statute a juror cannot be required to answer any questions the answer to which would tend to his disgrace, infamy, or self-accusation of crime,[30] and it is not error for the court to refuse to allow such questions to be asked.[31] This, however, is a privilege which the juror may waive and if he chooses to answer the questions the adverse party cannot object to his doing so,[32] but if he declines to answer the objecting party must establish his disqualification by other evidence.[33]

c. Nature and Extent of Examination — (i) In General. The extent to which parties should be allowed to go in examining jurors as to their qualifications cannot well be governed by any fixed rules.[34] The examination is conducted under the supervision and direction of the trial court,[35] and the nature and extent of the examination and what questions may or may not be answered must necessarily be left largely to the sound discretion of the court,[36] the exercise of which will not be interfered with unless clearly abused.[37] In practice considerable latitude is and generally ought to be indulged,[38] and all questions ought to be allowed which are pertinent to test the juror's competency.[39] But such examination ought not to be permitted to take an indefinitely wide range concerning merely collateral or incidental matters having some connection with the case,[40] and should be confined in some degree at least to the particular cause of challenge under investigation at the time.[41] While it is not error for the court to allow the same questions to be repeated,[42] it may properly exclude questions which have already been

Where a juror has served on a trial of a similar offense, but testifies that he has formed no opinion as to defendant's guilt or innocence, he cannot be asked if, in case the evidence should be the same as on the other trial, his mind is not made up as to de-

degrade or incriminate him,[52] a juror may be fully examined and asked any questions which are pertinent to show the existence of bias or prejudice,[53] and may be examined as to any bias with regard to the nature of the case or the subject-matter of the litigation as well as with regard to the parties personally.[54] On the trial of a person of foreign birth a juror may be asked if he has any prejudice against foreigners,[55] and on the trial of a negro if he could give him as fair and impartial a trial as if he were a white man.[56] So also on the trial of a white man for killing a negro it is competent for the prosecution to ask a juror if he could upon the same evidence return the same verdict as upon a prosecution for killing a white man.[57] A juror may also be asked if he is a member of any secret order or association by his oath or obligation to which he would be prevented from giving defendant a fair and impartial trial.[58] A juror may be asked whether in case defendant should testify in his own behalf he would give his testimony less weight by reason of any prejudice against defendant's business,[59] or his nationality,[60] or taking into consideration his interest in the case because he was under indictment for a crime;[61] but a juror cannot be examined as to the comparative credence which he would give to the testimony of persons of different races who might or might not be called as witnesses.[62] It has been held that a juror may be asked as tending to show bias or prejudice which way he would decide in case the evidence should be equally balanced,[63] but in other cases it has been held that such questions not only call for a determination of a question of law but are also purely hypothetical and inadmissible.[64]

(III) Formation and Expression of Opinion. A juror in a civil action may be asked whether he has formed or expressed an opinion as to the merits of the case,[65] and such was the rule even at common law;[66] but in criminal cases the common-law rule was that a juror could not be required to answer whether he had formed or expressed an opinion as to defendant's guilt on the ground that the answer would tend to degrade him.[67] This rule has been followed in a few cases in this country;[68] but on the contrary it has been held that the question in no way affects the honor or integrity of the juror and that it is not only permissible,[69] but that it is error for the court to refuse to allow it.[70] As it is now held in most jurisdictions that the mere formation or expression of an opinion does not, regardless of its source and character, render a juror incompetent,[71] it is competent to examine a juror fully as to the strength and character of his opinion,[72] and if based on rumor or newspaper reports to ask him if he could notwithstanding such opinion render an impartial verdict.[73] The parties may also ascertain whether a juror has been subjected to influences calculated to unfit him for the discharge of his duties,[74] and may ask him if he has read about the case,[75] or conversed with others concerning it.[76] It has been held, however, that where a juror states that which way he would find under the circumstances.

If a juror states that he has conversed with others about the case he may be asked

he has formed an opinion as to defendant's guilt, he cannot be further questioned as to whether the opinion is favorable or unfavorable to defendant,[77] nor can he be asked if in case defendant is found guilty he has made up his mind as to the degree of punishment which ought to be imposed.[78]

(iv) Personal Opinions and Conscientious Scruples. In a capital case a juror may be questioned as to whether he has any conscientious scruples against capital punishment,[79] and if he states that he has such scruples it is not error for the court to exclude him without permitting any further examination.[80] A juror may also be asked if he would convict upon circumstantial evidence.[81] He cannot be asked, however, whether he thinks the offense charged ought not to be punishable by law,[82] or ought to receive a different punishment from that which the law prescribes;[83] nor can he be questioned as to his opinions concerning matters not affecting his competency in the particular case on trial,[84] or his opinion as to the merits of certain defenses which might or might not be made.[85]

(v) Statutory Interrogations. Where certain questions are prescribed by statute to be propounded to jurors on their voir dire to test their competency, the court is not obliged to propound any other questions,[86] nor have the parties any right to do so;[87] but where these questions have been satisfactorily answered any other or further examination is entirely within the discretion of the trial court.[88] The court may vary the form of the questions so as to enable the jurors properly to understand them,[89] or may repeat the questions after being asked by counsel,[90] or may explain the meaning of the questions and examine the jurors to see if they have understood them.[91] The court may also in its discretion propound questions other than those prescribed[92] or may permit the parties to do so;[93] but such a request is properly refused in the absence of any showing as to why the jurors should be further examined.[94] The parties may of course introduce other evidence to show that the juror's answers were untrue or that he is incompetent.[95]

d. Mode and Conduct of Examination — (I) In General. In some jurisdictions the statutes provide for certain specific questions to be propounded to jurors by the court to test their qualifications,[96] and in others that the court shall, or shall upon motion of either party, examine the jurors as to their qualifications;[97] but the usual and better practice is to allow counsel to conduct the examination under the direction and supervision of the court.[98] It is held, however, in some cases that it is not error for the court to assume the exclusive conduct of the examination;[99] but in others it is held that while the court may examine the jurors to satisfy itself of their competency, it cannot deprive the parties or their counsel of the right to also examine them.[1] If accused desires to cross-examine a juror after his examination by the prosecution, he may be required to do so before the prosecution accepts or rejects the juror.[2]

(II) Swearing Jurors on Voir Dire. Jurors when examined as to their qualifications should be sworn on their voir dire,[3] and the parties cannot claim the right to examine jurors before they are sworn.[4] The jurors may be sworn collectively,[5] and the form of oath unless prescribed by statute is not material;[6] nor is it necessary, if a juror has been sworn on his voir dire by the court to answer all questions truthfully, that the oath should be readministered when the juror is sent before triers.[7]

(III) Examining Separately or Collectively. Jurors should be examined as to their qualifications separately and not collectively,[8] and it is error for the court to refuse to allow them to be examined in this manner.[9]

(IV) Form and Sufficiency of Questions. The form in which a particular question shall be put to a juror rests in the discretion of the court which will not be interfered with where no prejudice is shown.[10] The court may require the question to be changed to conform to the usual and accepted form,[11] and may refuse to allow questions which, although relating to proper subjects of inquiry, are not in legal form,[12] or which assume to sum up what a juror has already stated and do not do so fairly.[13] The court in examining jurors should be careful to so frame its questions that they could not be construed as intimating an opinion as to the merits of the case,[14] nor should counsel be allowed to make any improper statements calculated to prejudice the jury;[15] and if counsel in examining a juror makes any misstatement of the law the court may interrupt the examination and instruct the juror to the contrary.[16] The court may, however, ask a juror leading questions,[17] or permit counsel to do so.[18]

e. Evidence in Support of Challenges — (I) Presumptions and Burden of Proof. A person selected and returned as a juror is presumed to be qualified and competent to serve,[19] and the burden is upon the challenging party to show the contrary,[20] who must at least make out a prima facie case, or in criminal prosecutions such a case as leaves the juror's competency in reasonable doubt.[21] But a juror who admits having formed an opinion as to defendant's guilt is prima facie incompetent, and the burden is upon the state to show that the opinion is of such a character as not to render him incompetent.[22] So also in a criminal case where a juror is challenged as being a relative of the wife of the injured party, proof of the marriage raises the presumption of a continuance of the relationship, and the burden is upon the state to show that it was terminated by the death of the wife without issue.[23]

(II) Character and Admissibility of Evidence. On the trial of a challenge the juror may himself be sworn as a witness to prove the cause of challenge,[24]

In Alabama the code provides that certain specified causes of challenge may be proved and may be asked any questions not tending to degrade or incriminate him.[25] But the cause of challenge may be established by any other competent testimony,[26] and the parties have a right to contradict the testimony of the juror by that of other witnesses.[27] On a challenge to the favor any fact or circumstance from which bias or prejudice may justly be inferred is admissible as evidence.[28]

(III) Weight and Sufficiency. To establish the incompetency of a juror it is not sufficient merely to show facts from which a bare inference of his incompetency might be drawn,[29] and where the juror has himself been examined under oath and an attempt is afterward made to show that he has sworn falsely as to his competency, the evidence must clearly predominate in establishing this fact.[30] If the examination or evidence leaves any doubt in the mind of the court as to the juror's competency he is properly excluded;[31] but the competency of a juror is to be determined not from any particular answer but from his whole examination and all the evidence affecting it,[32] and if there is evidence, although conflicting, sufficient to support the finding of the trial court, an appellate court will not disturb it.[33]

8. Trial and Determination — a. Right to Trial. It is only where the facts alleged as the ground of challenge are denied that a trial is necessary,[34] and if one party challenges and the other admits the cause of challenge the former cannot complain of the allowance of his own exception or the latter of the reception of either by the oath of the juror or by other evidence but that others may be proved only by other testimony. Bridges v. State, 110 Ala. 15, 20 S. W. 348.

Evidence insufficient.— Proof that a juror is an acquaintance of one of the parties is not sufficient to show that he would not act impartially (Moore v. Cass, 10 Kan. 288); nor is proof of an illness accompanied by mental disorder several months prior to the trial sufficient to show that he is mentally incompetent (Com. v. Morrow, 9 Phila. his admission;[35] but if the cause of challenge is denied a party has the right to have the issue tried and witnesses on either side may be summoned and examined as on the trial of other issues.[36]

b. Mode of Trial — (i) In General. According to the practice at common law all challenges for principal cause are tried by the court and challenges to the favor by triers appointed by the court,[37] and while this practice seems still to be in force in a few jurisdictions[38] it is now the usual practice in most jurisdictions for the court to try and determine all challenges for cause of whatever nature.[39]

(ii) By Triers — (a) Right to Triers and Proceedings to Procure. It is error for the court to refuse to appoint triers in any case where they may be demanded and such demand is properly made;[40] but the right to triers may be waived,[41] and the court is competent to try a challenge to the favor,[42] and is not obliged to appoint triers of its own motion.[43] It is competent for the court to try and determine a challenge to the favor if the parties fail to make any demand for triers or any objection to a trial of the challenge by the court,[44] and in such case the findings of the court have the same effect as if made by triers.[45] So also if a party has consented to substitute the court for triers he cannot afterward revoke his consent.[46]

(b) Constitution and Organization of Tribunal. The first two jurors sworn are ordinarily the proper triers of a challenge to the favor,[47] but if several have been sworn before any challenge is made the court may assign any two of the jurors sworn to try the challenge.[48] The triers, in case the first juror called is challenged, are two indifferent persons named by the court, and if they try one man and find him indifferent he is sworn and he and the two triers try the next, and when another is found indifferent and sworn the two triers are superseded and the two jurors first sworn try the remaining challenges.[49] It is said that this order and this only can be pursued,[50] and that except by consent more than two jurors or two triers can in no case be sworn,[51] and that it is reversible error for the court to appoint a different number to try the challenge.[52] The triers must be sworn to find whether the juror is indifferent as to the issue and impartial between the parties,[53] but need not be resworn upon the submission of each challenge in a case.[54]

(c) Proceedings Before Triers. The trial of a challenge before triers is best conducted after the manner of a collateral issue before a jury,[55] and it is the better practice, although not absolutely necessary, that the examination should be conducted in the presence of the court.[56] The trial proceeds by the examination of witnesses,[57] and the juror challenged may himself be sworn on his voir dire as a witness before the triers.[58] The court instructs the triers as to the law,[59] and the instructions should be given publicly in open court in the presence of the parties,[60] but the court will not permit any argument of counsel before the triers.[61] It is the province of the court to pass upon the admissibility of evidence before the triers,[62] but its strength and effect in establishing the allegation of favor or bias is for the triers alone to determine.[63] The triers must find both as to whether the cause of challenge alleged is true in fact and also the effect it has produced upon the mind of the juror,[64] and unless they find that he is entirely impartial they after eight jurors had been sworn the challenge was submitted to all the jurors sworn.

Form of oath.— The proper form of oath in a civil case is "You shall well and truly try whether A (the juryman challenged) stands indifferent between the parties to this issue" (Anonymous, 1 Salk. 153); and in a criminal case "You shall well and truly try whether A. B. (the juror challenged) stands indifferent between the parties to this issue, so help you God" (Copenhaven v. State, 14 Ga. 22); but the oath is insufficient if the triers are sworn merely to try whether the juror is indifferent between the people and defendant "upon the issue joined," since they must not only find that the juror is indifferent as to the issue to be tried but also indifferent, impartial, and without prejudice as to the parties (Freeman v. People, 4 Den. Although the facts proved on the trial of the challenge would sustain a challenge for principal cause, yet if the challenge was to the favor and submitted to triers, they must determine the question of the juror's competency and the court cannot be called upon to rule as a matter of law that the juror is incompetent. should reject him.[65] A party may object to the admission of evidence before the triers or to the instructions of the court and make them a part of the record by a bill of exceptions.[66]

(D) Disagreement of Triers. Where the triers disagree as to the juror's competency on a challenge to the favor, it has been held that the challenge is not sustained and that the juror must be sworn;[67] but on the contrary it has been held that the challenge still remains and that it is not proper either to accept or reject the juror, but that the court should select two other jurors to retry the challenge.[68]

(III) Trial by Court. Where the court acts as the trier of all challenges, if the challenge is for principal cause it is, as formerly, only to find the truth of the facts alleged, but if to the favor must also determine whether the juror is indifferent;[69] but where a challenge to the favor is interposed after a challenge for principal cause is overruled, the evidence on each challenge need not be separately taken but the court on the trial of the latter challenge will consider all the evidence taken on both challenges,[70] and the court should make its findings cover both grounds.[71] It has been held, however, that the court need not make an express finding as to the juror's impartiality, as the fact of admitting or rejecting him necessarily implies such a finding.[72]

c. Retrial or Correction. A party has no right to demand a retrial of a challenge to a juror after the jury has been completed and sworn,[73] or even after the particular juror has been examined and adjudged competent;[74] but the court may, as previously stated, permit a challenge after a juror is sworn,[75] or on discovering that a juror was erroneously excluded may correct its error and restore him to the panel.[76]

d. Conclusiveness and Effect of Findings. The decision of the court upon a challenge for cause presents a question of law and is reviewable as such on appeal if the challenge is for principal cause,[77] or based upon a statutory ground of disqualification;[78] but a challenge for favor presents a question of fact upon which the finding of the triers is conclusive;[79] and where the court by consent or failure to demand triers acts in their place in determining a challenge to the favor, its findings are equally conclusive and not subject to review.[80] Where the court acts generally as the trier of all challenges, it has been held that the mode of trial does not entirely do away with the distinction between the two classes of challenges,[81] and that the decision of the court is not reviewable if the challenge is to the favor[82] or under the statutory classification of challenges if for actual bias;[83]

others without particular regard to the classification of challenges hold that the findings of the court upon questions of fact involved in the challenge are conclusive,[84] but that its decision as to the sufficiency of the cause alleged as a ground of challenge is reviewable.[85] Other decisions hold generally that the decision of the court is reviewable whether the challenge is for principal cause or to the favor;[86] but the decision of the trial court is entitled to great weight and will not be interfered with unless clearly erroneous,[87] especially where the juror was rejected.[88]

H. Peremptory Challenges — 1. Nature and Right — a. In General. Peremptory challenges are those made without assigning any reason, and which the court must allow,[89] and a party in exercising such right cannot be compelled to assign any reason for his action.[90] The right is not intended to enable a party to select particular jurors but merely to exclude from the panel objectionable persons whom he is unable to successfully challenge for cause,[91] or, as ordinarily expressed, the right is not to select but to reject;[92] but the right of peremptory challenge within the number allowed by law is absolute and cannot be abridged or impaired

In New York the act of 1873 making the court the trier of all challenges expressly provides that either party may except to the determination and have it reviewed as other questions arising upon the trial (Balbo v. People, 80 N. Y. 484 [affirming 19 Hun 424]); and this provision applies whether the challenge is for principal cause or to the favor (Greenfield v. People, 74 N. Y. 277 [reversing 13 Hun 242]).

Evidence considered on appeal.— Where challenges for principal cause and to the favor are differently tried, it has been held that the court on appeal cannot consider the evidence on the challenge for favor which was subsequently taken in determining whether the court properly decided a prior challenge for principal cause (Cancemi v. People, 16 N. Y. 501); but where all challenges are tried by the court and a challenge for favor is made after a challenge for principal cause, the court will consider all the evidence taken on both challenges (Greenfield v. People, 74 N. by any arbitrary rule of court as to the mode of impaneling a jury.[93] The right is a personal privilege which can only be exercised by the party himself or by his authority,[94] and includes the right to have the jurors present and confront them at the time the challenges are made,[95] and to have them sworn on their voir dire and subject them to such examination as will enable the party to exercise the right intelligently.[96]

b. In Civil Cases. At common law no peremptory challenges were allowed in civil cases,[97] and in England cannot now be claimed as a matter of right.[98] The right is therefore purely statutory and does not exist except where expressly so conferred,[99] but such provision has now been very generally made.[1] Statutes authorizing peremptory challenges in civil cases have been held to apply to proceedings before a justice to recover possession of land,[2] proceedings under the statutes of forcible entry and detainer,[3] actions to recover penalties for violation of a city ordinance,[4] and writs of inquiry to assess damages in replevin,[5] but not to the selection of a jury of view,[6] or sheriff's juries.[7]

c. In Criminal Cases — (I) Right of Defendant. At common law peremptory challenges were allowed defendant in trials for felonies,[8] but not on trials for the lesser offenses,[9] and this rule prevails in the absence of statute.[10] The right has now been very generally conferred by statute.[11] Where the right is given in the case of trials for offenses punishable in a certain manner the right exists if the offenses charged may be so punished, although the case is one where the court may impose a lighter punishment.[12] Peremptory challenges are restricted to the main issue and cannot be made on the trial of any collateral issue.[13]

(II) RIGHT OF PROSECUTION. By the early common law the crown might challenge peremptorily any number of jurors,[14] but by an early statute[15] this right was entirely abolished,[16] and under this statute grew up the practice of allowing the prosecution to stand jurors aside.[17] This statute is recognized as part of the common law of this country,[18] so that in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary the state has no right of peremptory challenge in criminal cases.[19] The right has now in most jurisdictions been expressly conferred by statute,[20] and such statutes are not unconstitutional.[21] An act conferring the right of peremptory challenge upon the state applies to prosecutions then pending as well as those commenced thereafter and is not ex post facto.[22]

d. Right as Between Co-Defendants. As the right of peremptory challenge is not to select but merely to reject,[23] defendants jointly indicted cannot, in the absence of statute, demand separate trials for the purpose of exercising the right,[24] and neither can complain that jurors whom he did not desire to exclude were peremptorily challenged by the other.[25] Each defendant is entitled to the full number of challenges to which he would be entitled if tried alone,[26] but a juror challenged by one is excluded as to all.[27] Where, however, it is provided by statute that defendants jointly indicted may elect to be tried separately and that if tried jointly they must join in their challenges, a defendant who waives his right to a separate trial cannot challenge peremptorily any juror without the consent of his co-defendant.[28]

e. Special or Struck Jury. Peremptory challenges are not ordinarily allowable in the selection of special or struck juries,[29] the process of striking being considered as taking the place of the right of peremptory challenge.[30]

In Pennsylvania the contrary has been held upon the ground that it had been the "inveterate practice" in that state to allow peremptory challenges (McDermott v. Hoffman, 70 Pa. In condemnation proceedings under a statute providing that "every party interested" in the ascertaining of compensation shall have the same right of challenge as in other civil cases, if the land consists of a single tract, although owned by several persons as tenants in common, the several defendants are considered as only one party and entitled only to the number of challenges allowed a single defendant (Illinois, etc., R. defendants who set up a common defense plead separately does not entitle them to any additional peremptory challenges,[41] the rule is otherwise where they set up separate and distinct defenses presenting different issues,[42] or where the parties on one side, although having a common cause against the other, have conflicting rights among themselves which the verdict of the jury will affect.[43]

(III) Consolidation of Actions. While a plaintiff who elects to sue several defendants jointly who might have been sued separately is not entitled to any additional peremptory challenges,[44] and several defendants jointly sued are considered as a single party,[45] yet where a statute authorizes the court without consent of the parties to consolidate separate actions and try them together,[46] and the actions are so consolidated, each defendant is entitled to the number of challenges to which he would be entitled if sued alone;[47] and a single plaintiff in such consolidated actions is also entitled to the number of peremptory challenges to which he would have been entitled if the actions had been tried separately.[48]

b. In Criminal Cases — (I) In General. At common law the number of peremptory challenges allowed defendant was arbitrarily fixed at thirty-five,[49] but by an early English statute[50] this number was reduced to twenty,[51] and in the absence of other statute this number may be claimed in cases where according to the common law the right of peremptory challenge exists.[52] The number allowed both to defendant and to the state is now generally expressly regulated by statute.[53]

The state is usually allowed a smaller number than defendant, but the policy of such discrimination is not apparent,[54] and under some of the statutes an equal number is now allowed.[55] The statute in force at the date of the trial and not that in force at the time of the commission of the offense governs the number of challenges,[56] notwithstanding the amendatory act takes effect after the prosecution is begun.[57] At common law if defendant challenged more than the number allowed in a trial for treason he was regarded as standing mute and judgment of death was pronounced,[58] and if in a trial for felony was subjected to the punishment of peine forte et dure or pressing to death;[59] but at the present time any challenges in excess of the legal number are simply overruled and disregarded.[60]

Under the Missouri revised statutes of 1899, providing that the state shall have a certain number of peremptory challenges except in all cities having a population of one hundred thousand inhabitants, in which case a different number is provided, the number is determined by the place of trial and not by the place where the offense was committed. defendant is entitled to the number of challenges corresponding to the greatest punishment that may be imposed for the offense charged.[62] Where the number of challenges is regulated by the grade of punishment, if the legislature reduces the punishment which may be imposed for the particular offense, the number of challenges is reduced accordingly;[63] and where defendant is indicted for murder in the first degree but the state elects to prosecute for murder in the second degree, he is entitled only to the number of challenges corresponding to the punishment prescribed for the lesser offense.[64] So where defendant on an indictment for murder in the first degree is convicted of murder in the second degree or manslaughter, he is acquitted of the capital charge and upon a new trial is entitled only to the number corresponding to the punishment for the lesser offense;[65] but it is held that where for a second offense defendant may be punished capitally he is entitled on a trial for a first offense to the same number of challenges as if tried for a second offense.[66]

(III) Prosecution of Joint Defendants — (A) Number Allowed Defendants. The general rule, in the absence of statute, is that where several defendants are jointly tried each may challenge peremptorily the full number of jurors to which he would be entitled if tried alone.[67] The statutes in some jurisdictions, however, are construed as giving defendants jointly only the number to which

In California the statute giving the defendant twenty peremptory challenges "if the offense charged is punishable with death or with imprisonment in the State Prison" and ten peremptory challenges on a trial for any other offense, was construed as giving a right to the greater number only in capital cases or cases in which a life sentence was in terms affixed by the legislature as the punishment of the crime and not merely where the court might impose a life sentence (People v. Clough, 59 Cal. 438); and while the correctness of this construction has been questioned (see People v. Logan, 123 Cal. 414, 56 Pac. 56), it has been uniformly followed by the later cases (People v. Sullivan, 132 Cal. 93, 64 Pac. 90; People v. Fultz, 109 Cal. 258, 4 Pac. 1040; People v. Riley, 65 Cal. 107, 3 Pac. 413); but if the statute expressly provides that the punishment shall be imprisonment for life defendant is entitled to twenty peremptory challenges (People v. O'Neil, 61 Cal. 435; People v. Harris, 61 Cal. 136).

each would be entitled upon a separate trial,[68] and statutes providing that "each party" or "either party" may challenge a certain number are so construed.[69] It seems also that where defendants may demand separate trials but fail to do so and consent to be tried jointly, they waive the right to sever in their challenges.[70]

(B) Number Allowed Prosecution. In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary the state is only entitled on a prosecution of several defendants jointly to the same number of peremptory challenges as on the trial of a single defendant;[71] but under the statutes in a few jurisdictions the state is entitled either to the same number as all of the defendants jointly,[72] or to a greater number than on the trial

St. Rep. 96); and the statute is not impossible of execution because a single defendant is allowed twenty-one peremptory challenges, and if defendant is allowed eleven he cannot complain (Gregg v. State, supra), or the court may allow one defendant eleven and the other ten (Gibson v. State, supra). Under the act of 1890 for Jefferson county each of the defendants is entitled to only five peremptory challenges (Hudson v. State, 137 Ala. 60, 34 So. 854).

In New Hampshire under the statute providing that "every person" may challenge peremptorily a certain number in capital causes but that "either party in all civil causes, and the respondent in all criminal causes, not capital" shall have a certain number, it is held that in criminal cases not capital joint defendants are only jointly entitled to the number provided. Peremptory challenges made by a co-defendant before a separate trial is demanded may be charged against the number allowed the other defendant who demands a separate trial and as to whom the trial proceeds, under a statute providing that "when several defendants are tried together the challenge of any one of the defendants shall be considered the challenge of all." of a single defendant, the number allowed being a certain number for each defendant or a certain proportion of the total number allowed defendants.[73]

(iv) Several Counts or Indictments. The fact that an indictment contains several counts does not entitle defendant to any additional peremptory challenges,[74] even though the different counts charge separate and distinct offenses which may be joined in the same indictment;[75] but the rule is otherwise where several indictments against the same defendant are not consolidated but tried together before the same jury.[76]

c. On Disability and Discharge of Juror Pending Trial. At common law where a juror became sick during the trial the practice was to declare a mistrial and begin de novo.[77] Under statutes providing that in such cases the jury need not be discharged but that a new juror may be substituted and the trial begun anew, it is held in some jurisdictions that defendant is entitled to again exercise the full number of peremptory challenges which he had in the first instance,[78] and that he may not only challenge the new juror presented but any of the original jurors already selected;[79] but in others it is held that he is entitled only to such of his peremptory challenges as he had not already exhausted in selecting the other jurors,[80] that if he has exhausted all of his challenges he cannot challenge peremptorily the substituted juror,[81] and that in case any challenges remain to him he cannot use them against any of the other jurors previously selected.[82]

d. In Federal Courts. The number of peremptory challenges allowed in the federal courts is now regulated by statute,[83] which provides that when the offense charged is treason or a capital offense defendant shall be entitled to twenty and the Under former federal statutes.— The act of 1790 expressly provided the number of peremptory challenges allowable in certain cases (U. S. v. Dow, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,990, Taney 34; U. S. v. Russel, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,209, 4 Dall. 414 note, 1 L. ed. 889 note), and by the act of 1840 the federal courts were authorized to adopt the state practice (U. S. v. Devlin, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,953, 6 Blatchf. 71); but a party could not claim the benefit of such statute as to the number of challenges unless adopted by a rule of court (U. S. v. Devlin, supra); the act of 1801 providing that offenses committed in Alexandria county, D. C., should be punishable in the same manner as by the laws of Virginia was construed as giving defendant the same number of peremptory challenges as allowed by the Virginia law (U. United States to five,[84] and on the trial of any other felony defendant ten and the United States three,[85] and in all other cases civil and criminal each party shall be entitled to three peremptory challenges.[86] The act further provides that in all cases where there are several plaintiffs or several defendants the parties on each side shall be deemed a single party for the purpose of all challenges under this section,[87] and several defendants jointly indicted and tried are held to be a single party within the meaning of this provision.[88]

e. Allowance of Additional Challenges. A party cannot claim the right to exercise any more peremptory challenges than the number allowed by law;[89] but where a party is compelled to use a peremptory challenge to exclude a juror who is incompetent and has testified falsely as to his competency, and this fact is discovered before the jury is completed, the court should allow this to be shown, and if established should allow an additional challenge.[90]

3. Time — a. In General. While the practice varies as to the number of jurors which must be presented before a party may be required to challenge peremptorily,[91] the general rule is that the right remains open and may be exercised at any time until the juror or jury is sworn.[92] This was the common-law rule,[93] and it has been said that up to this time the right is absolute and that no circumstance can bring it within the discretion of the court so long as it is confined to the number of challenges allowed by law.[94] So it has been held that in the absence of statute authorizing such practice the court cannot require parties to exercise their right of peremptory challenge as each juror is presented;[95] but where the practice prevails of first presenting a full panel of twelve before requiring any peremptory challenge,[96] it is held that the parties may, when a full panel is presented, be required to then challenge peremptorily all of such panel whom they desire to so challenge and be thereafter restricted in their challenges to jurors called to supply the vacancies caused by the challenges made.[97]

b. After Swearing. There is no right to challenge a juror peremptorily after the juror or jury as a whole has been sworn to try the case,[98] or after the ceremony of swearing is begun.[99] The statutes in some cases authorize the court to allow a peremptory challenge after a juror is sworn,[1] but it has been held that in the absence of statute the court cannot do so against the objection of the adverse party.[2]

c. After Passing or Tender of Juror. In the absence of statute the right of one party to challenge peremptorily is not waived or lost by passing a juror over to the other for examination,[3] and may be exercised at any time before the juror is accepted by the other party,[4] or, it has been held, even after acceptance.[5]

d. After Acceptance. The rule in most jurisdictions is that the right of peremptory challenge remains until the juror or jury is sworn notwithstanding a prior acceptance by the party challenging,[6] or by both parties.[7] Others hold that after acceptance there is no absolute right to challenge peremptorily,[8] but that the court Proc. § 371, providing that "a challenge must be taken when the juror appears and before he is sworn; but the court may in its discretion, for good cause, set aside a juror at any time before evidence is given in the action," the court has no authority after a juror is sworn to allow a peremptory challenge. The mere passing of a juror to the adverse party for examination does not constitute an acceptance (People v. McCarty, 48 Cal. 557; Com. v. Evans, 25 Pa. Super. In the absence of statute the order in which the peremptory challenges shall be interposed rests in the sound discretion of the court,[10] which will not be interfered with unless abused to the prejudice of the legal rights of the objecting party.[11] The court may in the absence of statute, where jurors are presented one at a time, require defendant to challenge before the state,[12] or require the state and defendant to alternate;[13] and in criminal cases, where defendant has a greater number than the state, may require him in alternating to challenge at each time such a number as will exhaust the challenges of each simultaneously,[14] or may allow the state to reserve its challenges until those of the defendant are reduced to an equal number.[15] In some jurisdictions the order of challenging is expressly regulated by statute,[16] and these statutes have usually been held to be

XIV. IMPANELING FOR TRIAL AND OATH.

A. Impaneling — 1. In General. While the term "jury panel" is used to designate the jurors drawn or selected and summoned for a particular trial or term of court from which the trial jury is to be selected,[34] the general understanding of the term "impanel" is that it covers all the steps of ascertaining who shall be the twelve men to sit as jurors for the trial of a particular case.[35] It is the act that precedes the swearing of the jury and which ascertains who are to be sworn.[36] Jurors may be said to be impaneled after they are selected and accepted by both parties for the trial of the cause,[37] although they have not been sworn.[38] Where the mode of impaneling is prescribed by statute the provisions of the statute must be complied with;[39] but in the absence of such provision all proceedings in relation to the formation of the trial jury are left to the discretion of the court,[40] which will not be interfered with if it appears that the jury which tried the case was fair and impartial.[41]

2. Appointment of Foreman. In the absence of statute it is not necessary that any foreman to the jury should be appointed,[42] he being merely the person selected

The error is not cured by a verdict assessing a punishment corresponding to the number of peremptory challenges actually allowed where the number is determined by the nature of the punishment which may be imposed for the offense charged. Fowler v. State, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 573.

Disallowing a challenge for cause cannot be construed as a refusal to allow a peremptory challenge, although it necessitates the use of a peremptory challenge which exhausts the number to which the party is entitled. Moore v. Com., 7 Bush (Ky.) 191.

A denial of a motion to determine the number of peremptory challenges to which defendant is entitled, made prior to the drawing of the jury, is not error where it does not appear that on the trial defendant was denied the number allowed by law. Clark v. State, 87 Ala. 71, 6 So. 368.

An erroneous statement as to the number of peremptory challenges made to a party by the court or clerk is not ground for reversal where the mistake is corrected before the party's peremptory challenges are exhausted and he is in fact allowed the number to which he is entitled. by the jurors themselves as their spokesman to announce their verdict,[43] and not an officer of the court or vested with any authority or control over the deliberations of the jury.[44]

3. Impaneling Persons Not Drawn or Selected. It has been held that the validity of a verdict is not affected by the fact that through an innocent mistake in the name or identity of a juror a different person is impaneled and serves upon the jury from the one drawn or selected therefor, if the person impaneled was a qualified juror;[45] but that if a person impersonates one of the regular jurors and takes his place upon the jury it is error to refuse to discharge him on discovering the substitution, although the jury have been sworn,[46] and that if not discovered until after the verdict it is ground for setting aside the verdict.[47]

4. Discharge of Accepted Jurors Before Completion of Jury. The court may, during the selection of the jury and before it is completed and sworn, excuse or discharge one of the jurors already accepted, on account of sickness,[48] or incompetency,[49] or misconduct after being accepted,[50] and may proceed to complete the jury without discharging other jurors already selected.[51] So also if one of the jurors accepted but not sworn absents himself and fails to appear after the others are selected, the court may proceed to complete the jury without him.[52]

5. Discharge or Withdrawal of Juror Pending Trial. Where, after the jury has been selected and sworn, but before the introduction of evidence, it becomes necessary to excuse or discharge a juror on account of sickness or incompetency, the court may, without discharging the entire jury, substitute another juror in the place of the one discharged and proceed with the trial,[53] it being discretionary with the court to make such substitution or to discharge the entire jury.[54] If the trial has been begun and evidence introduced the court cannot, in the absence of

In Texas on the trial of capital cases each juror is separately sworn when selected and the court cannot excuse or discharge a juror after he is sworn, although the jury is not completed, without discharging the other jurors selected and proceeding to form another jury (Rippey v. State, 29 Tex. App. 37, 14 S. W. 448; Sterling v. State, 15 Tex. App. 249; Ellison v. State, 12 Tex. In the case of a struck jury if a juror is excused on account of sickness or discharged as incompetent after the jury is struck and sworn, the proper practice is to supply the place of such juror upon the list and strike the jury anew (Cobb v. State, 45 Ga. 11; Pannell v. State, 29 Ga. 681); and it is not necessary in such case to declare a mistrial (Pannell v. State, supra); but it is error instead of restriking the jury to compel the parties to either proceed with the incompetent juror or accept in his place one of the jurors previously struck (Cobb v. State, supra).

54. People v. Brady, 72 Cal. 490, 14 Pac.

statute, except by consent, discharge a juror without discharging the entire jury.[55] The statutes in some jurisdictions, however, authorize the substitution of a juror without discharging the entire jury during the trial after the introduction of evidence,[56] and the court has authority even in the absence of statute to do so if no objection is made;[57] but in any case where such substitution is made the trial must begin de novo,[58] and counsel have the right to reopen the case,[59] and to reëxamine the witnesses previously heard.[60] Under the statutes the court is not obliged to substitute a juror for the one discharged but may discharge the entire jury and continue the case.[61] It has also been held that a juror may be substituted without discharging the entire jury where a juror absents himself after being sworn and before the introduction of evidence,[62] but that if after the introduction of evidence the entire jury must be discharged.[63] On discharging the entire jury the court need not, however, continue the case but may impanel a new jury.[64]

6. Discharge of Entire Jury Pending Trial. Where a jury has been selected and impaneled the parties are entitled to have the case tried by that jury and cannot be deprived of this right in the absence of some sufficient reason for discharging the jury;[65] but the court may discharge the entire jury and impanel another in case of evident necessity.[66] After a jury has been discharged the same jury cannot be reimpaneled in the case without the consent of the parties.[67]

7. Record. It is not necessary that the names of the jurors impaneled should be set out in the record,[68] or that the record should recite that they were good and lawful men.[69]

B. Oath — 1. Necessity. In criminal cases it is absolutely essential to the validity of the proceedings that the jury should be sworn,[70] and that this fact should affirmatively appear from the record;[71] and while mere irregularities in the swearing or form of oath may be waived by failing to object until after verdict,[72] a total failure to swear the jury cannot in any manner or under any circumstance be waived, and a conviction by an unsworn jury is a mere nullity.[73] In civil cases, however, it has been held that a failure to swear the jury is merely an irregularity which is waived if no objection is made at the time, and that in the absence of such objection the omission will not affect the validity of the verdict.[74]

2. When Administered. In the absence of statute the time of swearing jurors in chief after they have been examined and opportunity given for challenge is within the discretion of the court.[75] At common law jurors were selected one at a time and each juror was sworn as soon as he had been examined and an opportunity given for challenges,[76] and in the absence of statute this method may be adopted,[77] notwithstanding the right of peremptory challenge is thereby foreclosed,[78] but the court is not obliged to do so.[79] In some jurisdictions it is the practice not to swear any juror until a full jury is selected,[80] and this is said to be the better practice in order to allow the longest possible time for peremptory challenges.[81] In civil cases the pleadings should all be in and the issue made up before the jury is sworn.[82] In some jurisdictions in civil cases the jury may be sworn for the term, week, or day instead of for each particular case;[83] but in criminal cases the jury must be sworn for each particular case,[84] and where by agreement several cases of the same character against the same defendant are tried by one jury they must be separately sworn in each case.[85] Where a jury is impaneled for the trial of joint defendants but a separate trial is ordered, it is immaterial that they were sworn before the order was entered if sworn for the trial of one only.[86]

3. Mode of Administering. In the absence of statute a juror may be sworn by holding up his hand instead of kissing the book,[87] and it is provided in some jurisdictions that if he has conscientious scruples against taking an oath he may make a solemn affirmation in lieu thereof;[88] but a juror will not be permitted to make affirmation instead of being sworn merely as a matter of preference where the latter is not contrary to his religious convictions.[89] In the absence of statute the oath may be administered to the jury separately or collectively,[90] and a juror need not repeat the words "so help me God" after the words "so help you God" are pronounced by the clerk in administering the oath.[91]

4. Reswearing. The usual oath taken by jurors includes any issue between the parties submitted to them on the trial of the cause,[92] and jurors sworn to "try the matters at issue" may without being resworn return either a general or special verdict, or where a general verdict is rendered may be required to make special findings of fact.[93] It is not necessary that jurors should be resworn after an amendment of the pleadings which does not change the issues,[94] or which consists merely in the striking out or addition of the name of a party;[95] but it has been held that the jury should be resworn after an amendment which changes the issue,[96] or where after the jury has been sworn one of the jurors is discharged and another substituted.[97] If, after the trial is begun, it appears that the jury were not properly sworn, the court may have them resworn and proceed with the trial,[98] or may discharge them and impanel a new jury.[99] If a juror is under the impression that the oath administered to him was only for the purpose of his voir dire examination, he should be resworn in chief.[1]

5. Form and Sufficiency of Oath — a. In Civil Actions and Proceedings. The common-law form of oath in civil cases is "well and truly to try the issue between the parties, and a true verdict to give according to the evidence."[2] The term

The oath is sufficient where the jury is sworn "well and truly to try the issue joined between the parties" (Pierce v. Tate, 27 Miss. 283), or "well and truly to try and the truth to speak upon the issues joined" (Burk v. Clark, 8 Fla. 9).

In an action of ejectment an oath "truly to try the issue joined" is the usual and doubtless sufficient form, but an oath "to speak the truth of and upon the premises"

"issue" is collective,[3] and in a case where there are several issues it is sufficient merely to swear the jury to try "the issue."[4] Where the form of oath is prescribed by statute it need not be literally followed but a substantial compliance therewith is sufficient.[5] In case of a default the proper practice is to swear the jury to assess plaintiff's damages instead of to try the issues,[6] but it has been held that the latter form of oath while irregular is not ground for reversal;[7] and where there is no default but plaintiff's right to recover is put in issue by the pleadings it is error merely to swear the jury to assess the damages instead of to try the issues between the parties.[8] In actions on penal bonds where breaches are assigned the proper practice is to swear the jury to inquire into the breaches and assess the damages as to the parties in default, and to try the issues and assess the damages as those who pleaded to the action,[9] but in an action of trover it is sufficient to swear the jury "to try the issue joined" without also swearing them to assess the damages.[10] Where questions of fact are submitted to a jury in a suit in equity they should not be sworn to try the matters in issue between the parties but to try the questions submitted to them.[11] Where a case is taken by appeal from a justice's court to a higher court of ordinary jurisdiction the jury should be sworn as in other civil cases in that court.[12]

b. In Criminal Prosecutions. The form of oath at common law in criminal cases was: "You shall well and truly try, and true deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King and the prisoner at the bar, whom you shall have in charge, and a true verdict give according to evidence. So help you God,"[13] and in the absence of statute an oath substantially in this form is sufficient.[14] The is equally comprehensive and not objectionable. Mercer Academy v. Rusk, 8 W. Va. 378.

Oath sufficient.— Swearing the jury in actions on penal bonds to "try the issues joined" is equivalent to swearing them to inquire into the truth of the breaches (McLain v. Taylor, 9 Ark. 358); and conversely swearing them to try "the truth of the breaches" is equivalent to swearing them to try the issues (McCoy v. State, 22 Ark. 308); but it is essential that the oath should also in either case embrace the assessment of damages (McLain v. Taylor, supra).

juror must be sworn to render a verdict according to the evidence,[15] but not according to the law and the evidence,[16] even where the jury are considered as the judges of the law as well as of the facts.[17] In many jurisdictions the form of oath is prescribed by statute,[18] and it is fatal to the validity of a conviction if a substantially different form of oath is administered,[19] or if there is any material omission or variation from a form prescribed;[20] but an absolutely literal compliance with the statute is not necessary and if the statutory form is given in substance a slight variation will not vitiate the proceedings.[21] administered.[23] It has also been held that the record must show that the jury was sworn in civil cases,[24] except where the jury is sworn for the term or week instead of for each particular case.[25] But the record need not set out the form of oath administered,[26] and it is the better practice that it should not attempt to do so,[27] for it will always be presumed that the jury was properly sworn where the record merely states that the jury was sworn,[28] or duly sworn,[29] or sworn according to law,[30] or even where there is some additional statement as to the oath administered, provided it appears that such statement does not purport to set out the form of oath;[31] but no presumption can be indulged to contradict the express averments of the record,[32] and if it purports to set out the oath it must show that the proper form of oath was administered or the judgment cannot be sustained.[33] Where some of the jury were affirmed instead of being sworn, it need not appear of record that they had conscientious scruples against taking an oath.[34]

I. THE OFFICE IN GENERAL.

A. Definition. In American law a justice of the peace is a judicial officer of inferior rank, holding a court not of record, and having usually civil jurisdiction of a limited nature, for the trial of minor cases, to an extent prescribed by statute, and for the conservation of the peace and the preliminary hearing of criminal complaints and the commitment of offenders;[1] a judicial officer of special and limited jurisdiction, both civil and criminal.[2] In English law, justices of the peace are judges of record appointed by the crown to be justices within a certain district for the conservation of the peace, and for the execution of divers things, comprehended within their commission and within divers statutes, committed to their charge.[3]

B. Origin and History of Office. The office of justice of the peace is one of great antiquity, and the jurisdiction of justices of the peace has varied from time to time, depending either upon the terms of their commissions or particular statutes.[4] Justices of the peace were originally mere conservators of the peace, exercising no judicial functions.[5] It is said [6] that by the statute of 1 Edward III,[7] which is the first statute that ordains the assignment of justices of the peace by the king's commission,[8] "they had no other power but only to keep the peace." But gradually their powers were enlarged,[9] and they came to constitute a very important agency in the administration of local government in England.[10] They were invested with judicial powers for the first time, it seems, by the statute of 34 Edward III, c. 1, which gave them power to try felonies, but only when two 255, 258, 20 Atl. 276, 22 Am. St. Rep. 106. But in some jurisdictions this term has, in construing particular constitutional or statutory provisions, been held not to mean justices of the peace. Thus in New York it has been held that a justice of the peace does not "hold the office of justice or judge of any court" within the meaning of N. Y. Const. art. 6, § 13, prescribing the age limit of such judicial officers. People v. Mann, 97 N. Y. 530, 49 Am. Rep. 556 [reversing 32 Hun 440, and approving Dohring v. People, 2 Thomps. & C. 458]. See also infra, I, G.

Mayors, police judges, etc.— In some jurisdictions the term "justice" or "justice of the peace" will include police judges, and mayors or other officers who are ex officio justices of the peace. See infra, I, E. But the terms are not always so broad. Thus in Iowa it is held that the word "justice" in the statutes of that state is not a general term applicable alike to all courts having jurisdiction of minor offenses, but is used throughout the statutes as applicable to justices of the peace, and not to mayors, or judges of police courts, etc. State v. Jamison, 100 Iowa 342, 69 N. W. 529, holding therefore that under a statute permitting a change of venue from one justice to the next nearest justice in the township, an order changing the venue to the mayor of a town was erroneous, although a statute provided that the mayor of a city or town should have the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, etc.

"A police justice is a magistrate charged exclusively with the duties incident to the common-law office of a conservator or justice of the peace, and the prefix 'police' serves merely to distinguish them from justices having also civil jurisdiction." Wenzler v. People. 58 N. Y. 516, 530.

See also Bacon Abr. tit. "Justices of Peace" (B).

Before the statute, 1 Edw. III, c. 16, there were no justices of the peace, and they were first instituted by that statute; yet by the common law there were certain conservators of the peace, who were of two sorts: (1) Those who in respect of their offices had power to keep the peace, but were not simply called by the name of conservators of the peace, but by the name of such offices. (2) Those who were constituted for this purpose only, and were simply called by the name of conservators or wardens of the peace. Bacon Abr. tit. or more acted together, and not singly, and they then acquired the more honorable appellation of justices.[11] It does not appear that in England they ever exercised jurisdiction in civil causes.[12] While justices of the peace in the United States may be said technically to have, as a part of the common law of the different states, the powers granted such officers by the early English statutes,[13] yet their powers and duties have been so enlarged and so fully defined by the statutes of the various states that they are in effect wholly statutory;[14] and especially is this true as to the jurisdiction of justices in civil causes, which, of purely statutory origin,[15] and at first confined within narrow limits, has now grown to immense proportions.[16]

C. Nature of Office. Justices of the peace were originally county officers,[17] but at the present day their territorial jurisdiction varies according to the constitutional and statutory provisions on the subject.[18] When created by the constitution the office is a constitutional one,[19] and, whether so created or created by statute, it is considered judicial in its nature,[20] or rather both judicial and ministerial.[21] Sometimes the office is also political or legislative, as in cases where a

Introduction in America.— "The office of justice of the peace was brought here by the English colonists. From the earliest colonial period it has existed in this country. By the Code known as 'the Duke's Laws' for the government of the colony of New York, promulgated in 1665, justices of the peace were commissioned for the towns in the province, with the same powers as in England." People v. Mann, 97 N. Y. 530, 534, 49 Am. Rep. 556.

"Custom and usage, and the decisions of the higher courts, have, during all that time (since the statutes of Edward III) been giving shape and form to the law on this subject, as on all others, and though originating in statutes, the law is now to be sought not in those statutes alone, but in the books of reports and works of authority on such subjects." County commissioners have power, under Ida. Rev. St. (1887) § 1759, subds. 2, 3, to establish, abolish, and change justices' precincts in incorporated cities, and this power was not taken away by Sess. Laws (1891), p. 60, § 11. contains no limitation on the power of the legislature over the office, it may make such regulations as to the number of justices of the peace, the mode of their election, appointment, or removal, and their territorial jurisdiction as it may see fit, although the effect of such regulations may be to abolish the office in particular instances.[46] Where the power to determine the facts which will entitle a precinct to an additional justice is conferred by the legislature upon a subordinate body, which fills the position by an appointment, such body has no power to abolish the office.[47]

b. Effect of Change of Territory. The complete abolition of a justice's precinct or district,[48] or a change of boundaries by which he is placed outside of the territorial subdivision for which he was elected,[49] will vacate his office. But the division of a town does not vacate the commission of a justice for the district in which the town lies,[50] and the same is true where a borough is erected from part of a township, for which justices have been previously elected who reside in the new borough;[51] and where a new county is made out of several towns, the justices of such towns will continue to hold their offices as such in the new county.[52] Nor is a duly commissioned justice disqualified by an act creating a new township, whose territory includes that part of his township in which he resides.[53] In Canada it seems that a justice, commissioned for three united counties, will, notwithstanding a subsequent separation of the counties, continue a justice of the peace for the three counties, or at least for that in which he is resident.[54]

G. Eligibility. To be eligible to the office of justice of the peace the candidate must be of the male sex,[55] over the age of twenty-one years,[56] a citizen of the United States and of the state in which he seeks to hold office,[57] and a resident,[58] and, in some states, an elector,[59] of the territorial subdivision in which he seeks election. In England and Canada a justice of the peace must have certain property qualifications.[60] In Colorado a police magistrate must primarily be a

against him must have been done in the discharge of his functions as a justice, and with corrupt, partial, malicious, or other improper motives, and with knowledge that they were wrong.[99]

L. Title to and Possession of Office — 1. In General. When duly elected or appointed and qualified, a justice of the peace may protect his office from invasion,[1] and is entitled to the books and papers belonging thereto,[2] but not to money collected by his predecessor in office.[3] Where there are several persons in a town, each holding the office of a justice of the peace, it is not in conflict with any constitutional right that one of them should be selected by the voters of the town to exercise the powers of the office in the town, to the exclusion of the others, or that the one so selected should be vested with some superadded powers.[4] The exercise by a justice of the peace of jurisdiction outside of that conferred by the constitution is not the exercise of an office, and acts done outside such jurisdiction are void.[5]

2. Proof of Official Capacity. Ordinarily proof that a person has acted as, and exercised the office of, justice of the peace, is sufficient evidence of his being one, without producing his appointment or commission,[6] although, where his

Matter of King, 2 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 356, 365, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 420. And it was held that the act of a police justice in granting upon his own motion a further adjournment of a case which he had previously adjourned for six days was void, and offered no ground upon which defendant could base an application for removal of the justice from office. Matter of McKinney, 16 N. Y. App. Div. 63, 44 N. Y. Suppl. 1097. And in California it was held that an indictment charging a justice of the peace with misconduct in office, in taking jurisdiction of a criminal action for the sole purpose of making the acquittal of the defendant a bar to further prosecution for the same crime in an action pending in another township, which contained no averment that the justice intended to acquit the defendant, or that he acted from corrupt motives, or that he knew his acts to be unlawful, was insufficient as a basis for his removal from office. proceedings are to be used outside of his jurisdiction, it is sometimes required by statute that the county clerk shall certify that he was at the time a justice of the peace duly commissioned;[7] and it has been held that where the proceedings of a justice are pleaded in a collateral proceeding his official character must be proved.[8]

A. In General — 1. Privileges and Disabilities. The powers of a justice of the peace are statutory and cannot be extended by construction.[10] The office of justice of the peace does not disqualify the holder for other public offices not incompatible therewith or prohibited to justices by constitution or statute.[11] Nor does it of itself deprive the holder, if an attorney, of the right to practice as such;[12] but in some states the statutes have limited the right of justices to appear as attorneys.[13] Justices are sometimes prohibited by statute from purchasing judgments upon any docket in their possession.[14] But it is no defense in an action on a promissory note that plaintiff, a justice of the peace, bought it for the purpose of bringing an action thereon in the supreme court.[15]

2. Powers and Duties as Conservators of the Peace. The functions of justices as conservators of the peace have been universally retained under the constitutions and statutes of the states of the Union.[16] As conservators of the peace justices have power to arrest and commit offenders[17] or insane persons,[18] require bonds to keep the peace and be of good behavior,[19] appoint special constables,[20] order the delivery of stolen property to its owner,[21] prohibit[22] or disperse[23] public meetings, and order the removal of disorderly persons from such meetings.[24]

3. Judicial Functions and Duties.[25] The judicial functions and duties of justices of the peace are defined and limited by statute, and the powers thereby conferred must be strictly pursued.[26] It is the duty of a justice of the peace to pay over

14. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Bohman, 31 Nebr. 131, 47 N. W. 637, holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 1101, declaring that "it shall not be lawful for any justice of the peace to purchase any judgment upon any docket in his possession," prohibits the purchase by a justice of fees earned by a constable in an action, which are taxed as costs, and constitute part of the judgment.

Powers conferred upon two justices. — Where a statute confers certain powers upon or requires certain duties to be performed by any two justices quorum unus it is only necessary that one should be of the quorum. Gilbert v. Sweetser, 4 Me. 483. A statute conferring authority upon two justices to sit in criminal cases, and giving them the same powers and duties as are given to any justice sitting alone, is constitutional. Imprisonment for refusal to depose. — Under Me. St. (1833) c. 85, two justices of the peace and of the quorum have not the power to imprison a person for refusing to give his deposition in perpetuam memoriam. In re Pierce, 16 Me. 255.

The functions of judges of first instance were conferred by the Mexican law on justices in the department of California in dis-all moneys collected by him by virtue of his office,[27] and he cannot legally retain it to satisfy a debt due him in his private capacity;[28] but receipting for a note for collection does not constitute a justice a collecting agent, and he is not bound to cause a suit to be instituted in another precinct.[29]

4. Ministerial Functions and Duties. While the ministerial duties of a justice of the peace under the statutes are not of so varied a nature as at common law,[30] they are nevertheless numerous and important.[31] A justice cannot delegate any part of his official power or authority to another,[32] but it seems that he may depute another to do a specific act without vesting any discretion in him.[33]

B. Compensation — 1. In General. The compensation of justices of the peace, whether made in the form of salary or of specified fees, is entirely regulated by constitutional provisions or statutes, which are so diverse in the various states that few, if any, generally applicable rules on the subject can be laid down.[34] These statutes are to be strictly construed, and no compensation can be tricts where there were no such judges. See Mena v. Le Roy, 1 Cal. 216.

A justice cannot recover money expended for office rent and furnishings (Manchester v. Potter, 30 N. H. 409; Reynolds v. Tarrant Co., 78 Tex. 289, 14 S. W. 580), or for printing his blanks and books (In re Hempstead, 36 N. Y. App. Div. 321, 55 N. Y. Unless there is a suit, there can be no costs for the collection of a debt. Pen-

tion during his term of office is prohibited.[36] A justice of the peace has the right to demand in advance the payment of his fees for every official service rendered by him;[37] but he cannot require prepayment for services probably, but not necessarily, to be rendered in the further conduct of the cause.[38] Where a judgment removing a justice from office is reversed on appeal, the justice is entitled to his salary during the period of removal, although another has filled the vacancy and has received compensation therefor.[39]

41. Mich. Comp. Laws, § 1062, provides that the justice, in his report to the prosecuting attorney of a criminal case, shall give "an itemized statement of the officers' and the court fees and how the same were disbursed, if paid to such justice." Under this statute the justice must report the officers' fees, although not paid to him by the party arrested, and failure to comply with this statute results in the forfeiture of the justice's fees. 42. In Missouri, Laws (1891), p. 175, fixing the salary of a justice of the peace of the city of St. Louis at two thousand five hundred dollars, and requiring all fees and costs collected in his court to be paid to the city treasurer, is constitutional, and although the act contains no direct and positive provision for disposing of the fees of justices which may be collected by constables, it was clearly intended that those fees also should be paid to the city treasurer. Spaulding v. Brady, 128 Mo. 653, 31 S. W. 103. This statute does not require the payment to the city treasurer of fees received by the justice for solemnizing marriages, but he is entitled to retain such fees in addition to his salary. St. Louis v. Sommers, 148 Mo. 398, 50 S. W. 102. Mo. Rev. St. (1889) § 5031, requiring municipal officers who perform duties for the state, and whose salaries are paid by the municipality, to collect and pay over to the municipality all fees allowed by any state law for such duties performed for the state, does not apply to justices of the peace. St. Louis v. Sommers, 148 Mo. 398, 50 S. W. 102.

In Pennsylvania, the act of May 13, 1856, requiring a magistrate to pay over his receipts to the state treasurer before obtaining a warrant for his salary, was held not inconsistent with the ordinance of Nov. 21, 1855, limiting the compensation of justices or magistrates to the receipts of their respective offices; and hence police magistrates were held entitled only to the amount of fees received by them, not exceeding five hundred dollars. der an account or fee bill setting out the items of his charges as a prerequisite to their recovery.[43]

5. Actions For Fees. A justice of the peace may maintain an action to recover his fees against the party liable for them,[44] and his failure to exact prepayment, as under the statute he might do, will not defeat his right.[45]

C. Civil Liability — 1. Judicial Acts — a. What Acts Are Judicial. Owing to the fact that the clerical and judicial acts of justices of the peace are mingled together from the beginning to the end of a suit, it is difficult to separate the one from the other.[46] It may be said, however, that all acts and proceedings of a justice which require or admit of the exercise of discretion or judgment are to be held of a judicial, rather than of a ministerial, character.[47]

b. Acts Within Jurisdiction. When a justice of the peace has jurisdiction, he Sufficiency of account.— An account filed with the county clerk for allowance, which is sufficient in form and substance to be allowed in part by the county board, is sufficient to be allowed altogether, if the whole amount claimed constitutes a legal charge against the county. Such an account is not required to stand the test of a formal complaint for the recovery of money against the county. Grimm v. Jefferson County, 62 Wis. 572, 22 N. W. 857. See also Means v. Frame, 5 Dana (Ky.) 535, where it was held that a statement of the charge for a copy of his record, made by a justice at the foot of it, and signed by him, was a fee bill, within the meaning of the act of 1798.

tional laws.[49] In England a justice of the peace is civilly liable for acts done maliciously and without probable cause;[50] but in the United States the authorities are divided, it having been both asserted[51] and denied[52] that the justice may be liable where it is shown that he has acted corruptly or maliciously.

c. Acts Without Jurisdiction. The general rule is that a justice of the peace who acts in a case of which he has no jurisdiction, or who exceeds his jurisdiction, is liable in damages to any party injured.[53] A distinction has, however, been drawn in some cases between excess of jurisdiction and the clear absence of all jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and it has been held that where jurisdiction of the subject-matter has been invested by law in the justice, the manner and extent in which the jurisdiction shall be exercised are generally as much questions for his determination as any other questions involved in the case, and he is not liable for

"The true general rule with respect to the actionable responsibility of a judicial officer having the right to exercise general powers, is, that he is so responsible in any given case belonging to a class over which he has cognizance, unless such case is by complaint or other proceeding put at least colorably under his jurisdiction. Where the judge is called upon by the facts before him to decide whether his authority extends over the matter, such an act is a judicial act, and such officer is not liable in a suit to the person affected by his decision, whether such decision be right or wrong. But when no facts are present, or only such facts as have neither legal value nor color of legal value in the affair, then, in that event, for the magistrate to take jurisdiction is not in any manner the performance of a judicial act, but simply the commission of an unofficial wrong. This criterion seems a reasonable one; it protects a judge against the consequences of every error of judgment, but it leaves him answerable for the commission of wrong that is practically wilful." the real party in interest,[58] and may be against one of several justices who might be sued.[59] So too while the usual form of action is case, trespass must be brought where the facts call for it.[60] It has been held that unless actual damage is shown an action cannot be maintained;[61] but on this question there is authority to the contrary.[62]

b. Defenses. Want of malice or corrupt motive, and error of judgment as to his jurisdiction, although they may go to the jury in mitigation of damages, will not justify or excuse a justice of the peace for any act done in excess of his jurisdiction;[63] nor can he justify a failure to perform, or a neglect in the performance of, a ministerial duty by any collateral matter.[64] But a conviction by a justice of the peace having jurisdiction, valid on its face until set aside, is a complete defense to any action against him for any act of his in the prosecution in which the conviction was had,[65] although it has been held that he cannot justify in an action for an arrest under a warrant issued by him, unless before such arrest he had taken the constitutional oath of office.[66]

c. Limitations. In the absence of special statutory provision,[67] actions against justices of the peace are subject to the general statutes of limitation.[68]

d. Notice or Demand.[69] No notice or demand is necessary as a prerequisite to an action against a justice of the peace for his official acts or misconduct,[70] unless required by statute, as is the case in some jurisdictions.[71]

5. Liability on Official Bond[87]— a. In General. The requisition of an official bond from a justice of the peace does not increase his civil liability, but only renders him and his sureties liable for acts for which, without a bond, he alone would be liable.[88] A bond which has not been approved,[89] or not properly approved,[90] or one which is not required by statute,[91] may nevertheless be valid and binding as a common-law obligation. So too the official bond of a justice de facto is binding on the sureties,[92] and the validity of a bond is not impaired by the failure of the principal and sureties to acknowledge the same, if it has been accepted and approved without such acknowledgment.[93]

b. Extent of Sureties' Liability. The sureties on the official bond are liable for any neglect or misconduct on his part,[94] while acting in his official capacity,[95] provided the acts or omissions complained of related to the exercise of his ministerial rather than his judicial functions.[96] The death of a justice of the peace does not relieve his sureties from liability for a breach of the condition of his official bond.[97] Sureties are manifestly not liable for any default occurring before they became sureties, unless it is so stipulated in the bond.[98]

c. Actions on Bonds — (I) In General. The remedy against a justice and his sureties on his official bond is by action,[99] which must be joint.[1] It has been held that such an action may be brought before another justice, provided the amount of damages claimed is within the jurisdictional limit.[2] The action should be brought by the real party in interest.[3] In some of the states notice or demand is a prerequisite to bringing suit upon the official bond of a justice of the peace.[4] The right to sue a justice upon his bond for improper conduct in the discharge of the duties of his office is not waived by an appeal from his decision, but only the right to raise any question upon the erroneous rulings in that case.[5]

(II) Defenses. It is a good defense to an action on a justice's bond for the issuance of execution after a writ of certiorari had been granted that he was not legally notified of the granting of the writ;[6] but it is no defense to an action on the bond of a justice for his failure to certify up a case and make a record of his proceedings that the papers in the case had been stolen, so that the justice could not make any record of or certify up the case.[7]

(III) Limitations.[8] In the absence of special statutory provisions, actions on the official bonds of justices of the peace are subject to the same limitations as apply by general law to other similar bonds.[9]

(IV) Pleadings[10] — (A) Declaration, Petition, or Complaint. The declaration, petition, or complaint must contain sufficient allegations to show a cause of action,[11] and where there are exceptions in the statute which prescribes the duty alleged to have been neglected, such exceptions must be negatived.[12] Defendant's official character, and that his co-defendants were his bondsmen for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office, should always be averred,[13] as should also the making and approval of the bond.[14] Where the breach assigned is the failure to pay over money, it must be alleged that the money was received during the time covered by the bond,[15] that the justice has not paid over the money, and that it remains in his hands.[16] In an action in the name of the state it is not necessary that it should appear from the declaration that the relator is beneficially interested in the suit,[17] but the complaint must show a breach of some duty embraced in the covenants of the bond for which he has cause to complain.[18]

(B) Plea or Answer. A plea that the justice has not failed to discharge his duty as alleged in the declaration is good on general demurrer,[19] but a plea is insufficient which merely alleges matter which may be proved in mitigation of damages.[20]

(C) Subsequent Pleadings. In an action on a justice's bond for failure to pay over money collected, although the bond was conditioned for payment on demand, a general averment in the replication of non-payment, although often demanded, is sufficient on general demurrer.[21] In such a case where the plea was general performance, a rejoinder that the relator had recovered a judgment against the justice for the same money is bad as a departure.[22]

(V) EVIDENCE.[23] In a suit on the official bond of a justice for his refusal to account for money collected by him, evidence that he has receipted for the money is proper for the consideration of the jury in determining whether he ever received it,[24] and it will be presumed that he had power to give the receipt, and that his act was legal, until the contrary is shown.[25] In an action to recover damages on account of a justice's failure to issue execution, where it is shown that the execution debtor had certain property which might have been levied on, if not claimed as exempt, the presumption is that the debtor would not have so claimed it.[26]

(VI) DAMAGES.[27] The actual loss sustained by plaintiff is the measure of damages in an action on the official bond of a justice of the peace.[28] In a suit for the justice's failure to issue an execution, the measure of damages is prima facie the amount of the execution;[29] but this amount may be increased by reason of loss incurred by the justice's neglect,[30] or reduced by showing that a part only of the execution could have been collected.[31] Although no actual damages may have resulted from a justice's breach of duty nominal damages may be recovered.[32]

D. Criminal Responsibility — 1. In General. Justices of the peace are criminally responsible for their acts of official misconduct, when done wilfully or with corrupt motives, or for neglect of duty.[33] But before a justice can be punished for official misconduct, there must be some duty imposed by law; and it must be shown that he has wilfully neglected or failed to discharge such duty.[34]

In England it was held that a magistrate cannot be proceeded against criminally until any action pending against him shall have been discontinued.[35]

2. INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION.[36] The allegations of an indictment or information against a justice of the peace must be such as to allege every fact necessary to show an offense within the contemplation of the law, and the facts must be alleged with sufficient particularity to apprise defendant of the offense with which he is charged and to protect him against further prosecution for the same offense;[37]

nally for failing to proceed against one for carrying a pistol, unless he had information of the offense from the oath of some person or personal knowledge of it. State v. Graham, 38 Ark. 519. See also infra, note 37.

Acts not within scope of official duty.— A justice of the peace cannot be indicted for corruptly advising the sale of a judgment after he has received payment in satisfaction of it. "It is not his official duty to give any advice on such matters. A party has no right to ask it, nor rely upon it, except as he would ask the advice of a private person." State v. Coon, 14 Minn. 456.

36. See, generally, INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS.

Presentment.— In Georgia a justice cannot be arraigned on a presentment for malpractice in office. An indictment is the proper method of charging him with such offense. Hawkins v. State, 54 Ga. 653.

37. Arkansas.— State v. Lewis, 53 Ark. 340, 13 S. W. 925 (indictment for failure to apportion hands to a road district); State v. Graham, 38 Ark. 519 (holding that an indictment against a justice for failing to proceed against one for carrying a pistol must allege that he had information of the offense from the oath of some person, or that he had personal knowledge of it).

California.— People v. Ward, 85 Cal. 585, 24 Pac. 785.

Florida.— Snowden v. State, 17 Fla. 386.

Indiana.— State v. Ross, 4 Ind. 541 (rendering unlawful judgment); State v. Odell, 8 Blackf. 396 (oppression in convicting, fining, and collecting fine); State v. Boyles, 7 Blackf. 90 (failure to pay over moneys received).

Minnesota.— State v. Coon, 14 Minn. 456.

Missouri.— State v. Gardner, 2 Mo. 23; State v. Latshaw, 63 Mo. App. 496, indictment under a statute for failure to report to the clerk of the county court the amount of a fine imposed by him, and the name of the constable charged with its collection.

New York.— People v. Coon, 15 Wend. 277, corruptly discharging an offender without requiring sufficient securities for his reappearance.

North Carolina.— State v. Leigh, 20 N. C. 126, holding that an indictment against a justice for failure to issue his warrant for the arrest of a felon must charge either that the felony was committed in his presence, or that an affidavit was made of its commission, and also that the felon was in the justice's county when the refusal to issue the warrant took place.

Pennsylvania.— An indictment against a justice of the peace for refusing a copy of his proceedings, as required by statute, should allege a tender of his fee for the service. Wilson v. Com., 10 Serg. & R. 373; Com. v. Beerbrower, 3 Pa. L. J. Rep. 404.

Tennessee.— State v. Jones, 10 Humphr. 41, holding that an indictment of a justice under a statute for failure to deliver over to his successor the books and papers of his office, which shows that a period of time elapsed between the expiration of his term and the qualification of his successor, must negative the idea that defendant delivered the books and papers in the interval to the nearest justice, as he would have been authorized to do in such case under the statute; and also that such indictment must allege that the books and papers were demanded of defendant by the successor.

Texas.— Addison v. State, 41 Tex. 462, holding that an indictment against a justice of the peace for failing to report under oath the amount of money collected by him other than taxes, under the act of April, 1873, which failed to charge that he was authorized to collect money, other than taxes, for the use of the county, and that such money had come into his hands, was bad.

Virginia.— Jacobs v. Com., 2 Leigh 709; Newell v. Com., 2 Wash. 88, holding that an information against a justice of the peace for bribery in the election of a clerk must show that an election was held and that a vote was given therein.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Justices of the Peace," § 67.

Indictment must be full and specific.— People v. Coon, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 277.

Charging corruption and scienter.— The act imputed as misbehavior should be distinctly and substantially charged to have been done corruptly, and the indictment should also charge a scienter. Jacobs v. Com., 2 Leigh (Va.) 709. An indictment against a justice of the peace for a wilful misdemeanor in office should show such facts as would amount to such misdemeanor independent of the word "wilful"; and, to make this out, the indictment should charge the act to have been done knowingly and corruptly. State v. Gardner, 2 Mo. 23. See also State v. Leigh, 20 N. C. 127. Thus an indictment for refusing to issue subpœnas should charge that defendant "wilfully and corruptly refused to issue the subpœnas." Jones v. People, 3 Ill. 477. And an indictment charging and the charge must not violate the rule against duplicity.[38] Ordinarily it is sufficient if an indictment or information follows the language of the statute on which it is based in charging the offense;[39] but defendant's official character must be distinctly alleged, and it must also be alleged that the misconduct complained of was committed in the administration of his official duties.[40] Matters of defense need not be negatived.[41]

3. Evidence — a. Admissibility. Any evidence relevant to the issue, including the justice's docket and official papers,[42] is admissible upon the prosecution of a justice of the peace for official misconduct.[43] Defendant may be required to produce his docket and such official papers as may be relevant.[44]

b. Sufficiency. Proof of an illegal act committed with evil intent is generally necessary to sustain a charge of official misconduct.[45] a justice with corruptly rendering an unlawful judgment is bad, unless it alleged that he knew his decision to be contrary to law. State v. Ross, 4 Ind. 541. See also People v. Ward, 85 Cal. 585, 24 Pac. 785 (holding that an indictment which averred that a justice of the peace took jurisdiction of a prosecution for the sole purpose of making the acquittal of the accused a bar to another proceeding for the same offense, but did not allege that he intended to acquit the accused or that he acted from corrupt or partial motives, was not sufficient under Pen. Code, § 758, punishing for wilful or corrupt misconduct in office); State v. Coon, 14 Minn. 456 (holding that an indictment for corrupt failure to pay over money received in satisfaction of a judgment and for corruptly withholding knowledge that it had been paid was bad because, among other reasons, it failed to allege demand for payment or inquiry for such information).

A presentment for assuming to be a justice when not legally qualified must show wherein the want of qualification consists. Daniel v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 257.

Indictments held sufficient see the following cases:

Georgia.— Russell v. State, 57 Ga. 420, malpractice in office.

Illinois.— Wickersham v. People, 2 Ill. 128, taking up estrays and corruptly causing them to be appraised before himself.

Indiana.— Alexander v. State, 9 Ind. 337 (indictment for failure to pay over moneys received on account of fines need not state from whom the moneys were received); State v. McCormack, 2 Ind. 305 (indictment for failure to make out and file a list of fines assessed need not name the persons against whom the fines were assessed); State v. Noel, 5 Blackf. 548 (holding that an indictment for failure to pay over money received for a fine within the time prescribed by statute sufficiently showed the time when the money was received).

North Carolina.— State v. Foy, 98 N. C. 744, 3 S. E. 524, indictment for failure to furnish list of criminal prosecutions and names of persons tried need not state the names of such persons.

United States.— U. S. v. Clark, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,803, 4 Cranch C. C. 506, indictment for taking insufficient bail.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Justices of the Peace," § 67.

38. Thus where an indictment against a justice for wilfully neglecting to perform his duty, and for misbehavior in office, charged "that the defendant, having in his possession, as justice, money paid in satisfaction of a judgment recovered before him, corruptly, etc., withheld the same when the judgment creditor made inquiry about the same, and withheld knowledge that it had been paid, and neglected to pay over the money, and willfully and corruptly advised a sale of the judgment, and that afterwards he paid a portion of the money to other persons," that the indictment was bad, among other reasons, as attempting to show two or more distinct offenses. State v. Coon, 14 Minn. 456.

39. State v. Lewis, (Ark.) 2 S. W. 183 (indictment for failure to file an abstract of criminal proceedings); State v. Noel, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 548 (indictment for failure to pay over fine received).

40. Snowden v. State, 17 Fla. 386 (holding that an indictment charging a justice with malpractice in office, which did not allege that the malpractice was committed by defendant in the administration and under the color of his office, was fatally defective on motion in arrest of judgment); Hawkins v. State, 54 Ga. 653 (holding bad an indictment which charges a justice with "malpractice," without the addition of the words "in office," or which simply charges him with being drunk while presiding in his court, without setting forth wrong done by some official act or omission to act, resulting from such drunkenness). An indictment of a justice of the peace for failure to apportion hands to a road district, which alleges his appointment as apportioning justice, but fails to allege his acceptance of such appointment, is defective. State v. Lewis, 53 Ark. 340, 13 S. W. 925.

41. Crawford v. State, 155 Ind. 692, 57 N. E. 931. But compare State v. Jones, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 41, referred to supra, this section, note 37.

4. Instructions. On the prosecution of a justice of the peace the instructions are governed by general rules, and they must of course correctly state the law and conform to the evidence.[46] In a prosecution for wilful and malicious oppression, partiality, misconduct, and abuse of authority, it is error to instruct the jury that in such a case gross ignorance of the law amounts to criminal intent.[47]

5. Punishment. A fine of one thousand dollars has been held not to be an excessive punishment for assuming the powers of a justice of the peace, without having even color of title to the office.[48]

E. Statutes Imposing Penalties — 1. In General. In some jurisdictions statutes have imposed, or still impose, specific penalties upon justices of the peace for certain acts or omissions in the discharge of their official duties, to be recovered by action.[49] Thus penalties are or have been imposed for failure to make return of convictions and fines, as required by law,[50] neglecting to post up a fee bill Corrupt motive need not be proved on the trial of a justice for wilfully discharging on bail a person committed for larceny by another magistrate without notifying the district attorney. People v. Bogart, 3 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 143.

Evidence insufficient to convict of practising as attorney see State v. Bryan, 98 N. C. 644, 4 S. E. 522.

46. See, generally, Criminal Law.

Taking jurisdiction of criminal proceeding after dismissal.— On an indictment of a justice of the peace for taking jurisdiction of a criminal proceeding after it had been dismissed before another justice of the same township by order of the prosecuting attorney, and brought before a justice of another township, it was held error to instruct the jury that the district attorney had authority to dismiss a criminal prosecution before a justice of the peace, since Cal. Pen. Code, § 1385, provides that "the court may, either of its own motion or upon the application of the district attorney, and in furtherance of justice, order an action or indictment to be dismissed," and section 1386 provides that "neither the attorney-general nor the district attorney can discontinue or abandon a prosecution for a public offense, except as provided in the last section." People v. Ward, 85 Cal. 585, 24 Pac. 785.

Unlawfully and maliciously issuing warrant of arrest.— On a prosecution against a justice of the peace for unlawfully and maliciously issuing a warrant for the arrest of four persons, where it was shown that after they had been tried before two justices under a warrant issued by defendant on a certain affidavit, and two bills of indictment had been found by the grand jury, defendant, upon the same affidavit, issued another warrant against the same parties for the same offense, it was held proper to refuse an instruction that as the affiant in such affidavit swore to four distinct offenses, and the indictment covered only two of them, defendant's act in issuing the second warrant was lawful. P. 607; Brash v. Taggart, 16 U. C. C. P. 415; Bagley v. Curtis, 15 U. C. C. P. 366; McLennan v. McIntyre, 12 U. C. C. P. 546 (holding that the transmission of the conviction itself is not sufficient without a return thereof by the convicting justice); McLellan v. Brown, 12 U. C. C. P. 542; Murphy v. Harvey, 9 U. C. C. P. 528; Donogh v. Longworth, 8 U. C. C. P. 437; Drake v. Preston, 34 U. C. Q. B. 257; Ollard v. Owens, 29 U. C. Q. B. 515; Keenahan v. Egleson, 22 U. C. Q. B. 626 (holding that the law as to the return of convictions was unchanged since the statute of 4 & 5 Vict. c. 12, and a conviction made by an alderman in a city was therefore still required to be returned to the next ensuing general quarter sessions of the peace for the county, and not to the recorder's court for the city); Kelly v. Cowan, 18 U. C. Q. B. 104; Ball v. Fraser, 18 U. C. Q. B. 100; O'Reilly v. Allan, 11 U. C. Q. B. 411; Metcalf v. Reeve, 9 U. C. Q. B. 263.

Sufficiency of return.— Where defendant, a justice of the peace, committed and fined plaintiff for carrying away some cord-wood, but after the giving of notice of appeal the prosecutor, finding that the conviction was improper, went to defendant, who drew out for him a notice of discontinuance, which was served on the person acting as attorney for plaintiff before the meeting of the next court of quarter session, and defendant sent a general return to that court, including this and another conviction, but ran his pen through the entry of this conviction, leaving the writing, however, quite legible, and wrote at the end of it, "The case withdrawn by the plaintiff," it was held that there was a sufficient return within the statute of 4 & 5 Vict. c. 12. Ball v. Fraser, 18 U. C. Q. B. 100.

in their office,[51] charging excessive or illegal fees,[52] or marrying a minor child

An order for the payment of money made by a justice of the peace under the Master and Servant Act is not a conviction which it is necessary to return to the quarter sessions. Ranney v. Jones, 21 U. C. Q. B. 370.

A police magistrate acting ex officio as justice of the peace is not subject to the provisions of Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, § 1, and need not make a return as therein required to the clerk of the peace, but section 6 of chapter 77 exempts him from this duty, whether he is acting as police magistrate or ex officio as justice of the peace. Hunt v. Shaver, 22 Ont. App. 202.

Separate penalty.— It is held that the neglect of a justice of the peace to return convictions made by him, as prescribed by the statute, renders him liable to a separate penalty for each conviction not returned, and not merely to one penalty for not making a general return of such convictions. Darragh v. Paterson, 25 U. C. C. P. 529; Donogh v. Longworth, 8 U. C. C. P. 437.

The fact that no record was made of a conviction and fine does not prevent an action for the penalty for failure of the justice to return the same on other proof thereof. Donogh v. Longworth, 8 U. C. C. P. 437.

Effect of appeal.— The fact that a conviction and fine by a justice of the peace has been appealed from does not relieve him from the penalty for failure to make an immediate return thereof as required by the statute. Murphy v. Harvey, 9 U. C. C. P. 528. See also Kelly v. Cowan, 18 U. C. Q. B. 104.

Illegality of a conviction is no defense in an action against the justice for the penalty for failure to return the same, but, if on that account the fine has not been levied, a return should be made explaining the circumstances. O'Reilly v. Allan, 11 U. C. Q. B. 411.

51. Kennedy v. Raught, 6 Minn. 235. Where a statute requiring justices of the peace to set up in their office a bill of fees, which they were entitled to charge "within six months after the passage" of the act, it was held that it applied only to those justices who were in office at the time of its passage, or came into office within six months after its passage. Kennedy v. Raught, supra.

52. Kentucky.— Bristow v. Sullivan, 6 B. Mon. 143, holding that a justice of the peace was liable only for a single penalty for one fee bill in which there were several items of illegal charge.

Massachusetts.— Lincoln v. Shaw, 17 Mass. 410.

Nebraska.— Courier Printing, etc., Co. v. Leese, 65 Nebr. 581, 91 N. W. 357 (construing the statutes with respect to what were illegal fees rendering a justice liable, and also holding that the penalty provided by the statute follows, not only the taking of greater fees than those specified for services rendered, but also the taking of fees for services other than those specified in Comp. St. c. 28, § 11); Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Bohman, 28 Nebr. 251, 44 N. W. 111 (holding that, in an action to recover the penalty from a justice of the peace for taking illegal fees for making out and certifying to certain transcripts of judgments, where the testimony showed that eight of the transcripts were demanded at one time and were received together and paid for in one sum, although separately itemized in the bill, an instruction which in effect directed the jury to find that there were eight separate causes of action was properly refused).

New Hampshire.— Fowler v. Tuttle, 24 N. H. 9.

Pennsylvania.— See infra, this note.

Canada.— Parsons v. Crabbe, 31 U. C. C. P. 151, where a magistrate acting under 32 and 33 Vict. c. 20, § 37, convicted four persons for creating a disturbance thereunder and imposed upon each a fine of five dollars, but, instead of severing the costs which he had charged, imposed the full amount thereof against each defendant and received it from each, and it was held that under the circumstances of the case the charge must be deemed to have been wilfully made, so as to render him liable to the penalty imposed in such cases by Ont. Rev. St. c. 77, § 4.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Justices of the Peace," § 47. And see supra, II, B, 2.

Act of attorney as act of magistrate.— The reception of illegal fees for the copies of a case by the attorney who made them at the request of the magistrate, subsequently assented to by the magistrate, and recognized by him as being done by his authority, will be regarded as the act of the magistrate, and will subject him to the penalty in the same manner as if the fees had been received by him in person. Fowler v. Tuttle, 24 N. H. 9.

Mistake.— It seems that a justice of the peace may set up the fact that he acted under mistake or misapprehension as a defense in an action for a penalty for receiving illegal fees. Fowler v. Tuttle, 24 N. H. 9. But compare Coates v. Wallace, 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 75 (referred to infra, this note); Parsons v. Crabbe, 31 U. C. C. P. 151 (referred to supra, this note).

In Pennsylvania, prior to the act of May 23, 1893 (Pamphl. Laws 117) justices of the peace were subjected under the act of March 28, 1814, and the act of Feb. 3, 1865 (Pamphl. Laws 92) to a penalty for charging illegal or excessive fees to be recovered by action. See Bartolett v. Achey, 38 Pa. St. 273 (holding that the penalty for taking illegal fees was incurred by every charging and taking that occurred); Simmons v. Kelley, 33 Pa. St. 190 (holding that where a magistrate charged more fees than was allowed by the fee bill, he was liable for the penalty); Evans v. Harney, 17 Pa. St. 460; McConahy v. Courtney, 7 Watts 491; Curry v. Carrol, 5 Watts 477 (holding that in an action against a justice for taking illegal fees, an overcharge for one item of without the parent's consent.[53] These statutes are penal laws, although the penalty is recoverable in a civil action.[54]

2. Actions For Penalties. The proper form of action at common law to recover from a justice of the peace a statutory penalty for misconduct or neglect in the execution of his office is debt.[55] Sometimes the form of action is prescribed by the statute.[56] The jurisdiction of such actions is governed by the statutes in the particular jurisdiction.[57] A claim for two or more penalties for taking illegal fees may be included in the same notice and action.[58] Whether a prior action for the same cause operates as a bar depends on the circumstances.[59] In some jurisdictions before an action can be brought against a justice of the peace to recover the penalty for anything done by him in the execution of his office, notice of the action must be given to or demand made upon him, so as to afford an opportunity to make amends.[60] Such actions are governed, except in so far as different rules are prescribed by statute, by substantially the same rules as other actions service could not be compensated by omission to charge as much as he was entitled to charge for another item); Jackson v. Purdue, 3 Penr. & W. 519 (holding that a justice who charged an illegal fee, which was indorsed on the execution and collected by the constable, was liable for the penalty prescribed by the statute, although the money was not actually paid over to him); Coates v. Wallace, 17 Serg. & R. 75 (holding that a justice incurred the penalty of the act of March 28, 1814, for taking illegal fees, although he did so by mistake); Wallace v. Coates, 1 Ashm. 110 (holding that a justice could not escape the statutory penalty for taxing more than legal fees by showing that they were taxed on a compromise, since an agreement to pay costs could only mean legal costs, and if the justice demanded and received on such a compromise more fees than were allowed by law he was as responsible as if they were collected adversely); Clark v. Alderman, 3 Pa. L. J. Rep. 114; Watrous v. Davis, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. 161 (holding that taxation of legal fees by a justice in an action over which he had no jurisdiction was not an over charge of fees, within the act of March 28, 1814, imposing a penalty for over charge of fees). The above act of March 28, 1814, providing penalties against justices of the peace for charging illegal fees was repealed by the act of May 22, 1893, regulating the fees of justices. The latter act provides no penalty, and the only remedy for taking illegal fees is by an action to recover back the same or by an indictment to punish the justice therefor. See Irons v. Allan, 169 Pa. St. 633, 32 Atl. 655; Watrous v. Davis, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. 161; Lyons v. Means, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 608 [modifying 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 382].

53. Robinson v. English, 34 Pa. St. 324; Grimes v. Percival, 9 Pa. St. 135. A father who turns his daughter out of his house upon the world to shift for herself thereby relinquishes his paternal rights in relation to her person, absolves her from filial allegiance, and deprives himself of a right of action against a justice of the peace under the statute for marrying her without his consent. Stansbury v. Bertron, 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 362. And so it is in any other case in which a father has relinquished his parental control over his minor child. Robinson v. English, 34 Pa. St. 324. But it is no defense to such an action that the father, by reason of moral degradation, was unfit to take care of his minor child. Robinson v. English, 34 Pa. St. 324.

56. Bristow v. Sullivan, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 143 (by motion); Bagley v. Curtis, 15 U. C. C. P. 366 (by action of debt or information). See, generally, Penalties.

57. See, generally, Penalties.

A justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action against another justice to recover the penalty for demanding and receiving illegal fees. Bartolett v. Achey, 38 Pa. St. 273; McConahy v. Courtney, 7 Watts (Pa.) 491. See also infra, III, B, 5.

In Canada it was held that a penal action against a justice of the peace for not returning a conviction is founded on tort, and that for that reason it could not be brought in a division court. Corsant v. Taylor, 10 Can. L. J. N. S. 320. In Brash v. Taggart, 16 U. C. C. P. 415, it was held that a county court had jurisdiction of such an action where the penalty claimed did not exceed eighty dollars.

58. Bartolett v. Achey, 38 Pa. St. 273.

59. See, generally, Judgments. Where to a qui tam action for not returning a conviction, defendant pleaded another action for the same cause, it was held sufficient to prevent that suit from being a bar to show that it was not brought to recover the penalty, but to prevent defendant from being obliged to pay it to others, and that it was not essential to show collusion between the defendant and the plaintiff in such an action. Kelly v. Cowan, 18 U. C. Q. B. 194.

60. See supra, II, C, 4, d.

In Pennsylvania this was required. It was held that a notice to a justice of the peace that he might tender amends before suit brought must specify the nature and cir-for penalty and actions generally with respect to parties,[61] pleading,[62] vari-

cumstances of the injury to be redressed, and if it undertook to set out the title of the statute which had been violated, although unnecessarily, a variance was fatal. Stansbury v. Bertron, 7 Watts & S. 362. It was necessary that the notice of an action for a penalty for taking illegal fees should contain a sufficient reference to the case in which the illegal fees were taken and show the cause of action. Bechtel v. Hause, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 239. . Where a notice to a justice of the peace to make amends for taking illegal fees gave the location of the office of plaintiff's attorney, but failed to state the attorney's abode, it was held insufficient. Watrous v. Davis, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. 161. And it was held that a notice of action against a justice, although delivered to him by the plaintiff in person, and although plaintiff was known to him, was not sufficient unless signed by plaintiff. Grimes v. Percival, 9 Pa. St. 135. A notice is sufficient if it is sufficiently explicit to identify the injury complained of and sought to be redressed. Bartolett v. Achey, 38 Pa. St. 273. The notice need not possess the technical formality of a declaration, provided it is explicit enough to indicate the injury complained of and sought to be redressed. Robinson v. English, 34 Pa. St. 324. The notice required to be given prior to an action for the penalty for marrying a minor, without the consent of parent or guardian, need not state that there was no publication of banns, as the statute merely requires that such notice shall clearly and explicitly set forth the cause of action against the justice. Miller v. Smith, 12 Serg. & R. 145. The indorsement on the notice of the name and residence of the plaintiff's attorney is equivalent to an assertion that he is plaintiff's agent and authorized to receive amends. Bartolett v. Achey, 38 Pa. St. 273.

In Canada, while the statute requires notice of action before suit against a justice of the peace for damages by reason of anything done by him in the execution of his office (see supra, II, C, 4, d), it is held that the statute does not require such notice in an action for a penalty for acting as justice of the peace without qualification, etc. (Crabbe v. Longworth, 4 U. C. C. P. 283), or in an action against a justice of the peace to recover the penalty for not returning a conviction (Grant v. McFadden, 11 U. C. C. P. 122).

Parties injured by taking of illegal fees.— Where an employer voluntarily paid to an alderman illegal fees charged by him in a criminal proceeding against persons who were in his employ, and who committed the act in obedience to his instructions, it was held that he was the party injured, and entitled to recover the penalty for taking such fees, as the presumption was, in the absence of rebutting testimony, that he paid the fees out of his own money. Evans v. Harney, 17 Pa. St. 460.

Partners.— An action for the recovery of a penalty for taking unlawful fees cannot be maintained in the names of two persons suing as copartners. Fowler v. Tuttle, 24 N. H. 9.

Qui tam actions.— Under some statutes the action may be qui tam by any person who chooses to sue. See Bagley v. Curtis, 15 U. C. C. P. 366; and other Canadian cases cited supra, II, E, 1. And see, generally, PENALTIES. In an action against a justice of the peace in Canada for a penalty for not returning a conviction to the quarter sessions, it was held no objection to the declaration that plaintiff sued for the receiver-general, and not for the queen, inasmuch as suing for a penalty for the receiver-general, for the public uses of the province was in fact suing for the queen, and further, because a statute authorized a party to sue qui tam for the receiver-general. Bagley v. Curtis, 15 U. C. C. P. 366. It was also held in Canada that plaintiff might sue for himself only, and need not sue qui tam. Drake v. Preston, 34 U. C. Q. B. 257.

Action against one of several justices.— In Drake v. Preston, 34 U. C. Q. B. 257, it was held that an action to recover the penalty for failure to return a conviction would lie against each one of several magistrates, since, although the action was in form debt, it was in fact ex delicto.

Joint liability.— Indeed, it has been held that the justices of the peace before whom a conviction is made are not jointly liable for not returning the same, since the statute makes it the several duty of each of the justices joining in the conviction to report it to the sessions, and they cannot commit a joint offense and be subject to one penalty, because neither has transmitted it. Metcalf v. Reeve, 9 U. C. Q. B. 263. See also McLennan v. McIntyre, 12 U. C. C. P. 546.

Showing as to notice of action.— In Pennsylvania, in a suit against a justice of the peace to recover the penalty for taking illegal fees, where the previous notice to defendant of the action required by law stated the penalty to have been incurred under "the 26th section of the act of 1814, which said section is re-enacted by the act of 1821," but the declaration was upon the act of 1814, it was held that there was a fatal variance. Apple v. Rambo, 13 Pa. St. 9.

Declaration for taking illegal fees.— In an action against a justice of the peace for the penalty of Mass. St. (1795) c. 41, for receiving greater fees for copies than were allowed, it was held necessary that the declaration should allege that the money was received from him on whom the extortion was practised, and that evidence that it was paid by another person for him from whom it was alleged to have been received, if it was paid without his request or knowledge, did not support the declaration. Lincoln v. Shaw, 17 Mass. 410.

Aider by verdict.— If a declaration, although not strictly formal, sets forth a sub-ance,[63] evidence,[64] instructions and province of the court and jury,[65] and nonsuit.[66] Since a statute imposing a penalty upon a justice of the peace for neglect of official duty is a penal law, notwithstanding the fact that the penalty is recoverable in a civil action by any informer in his own name, it has been held that no appeal can be taken from a judgment of acquittal in such an action.[67]

F. Attachment For Contempt. It seems that the superior court has the power in a proper case to attach a justice of the peace for contempt if he has been guilty of any flagrant official misconduct affecting private rights,[68] or other stantial cause of action, and the defect is one that was amendable in the court below, it is cured by verdict. Robinson v. English, 34 Pa. St. 324. See, generally, PLEADING.

Limitations.— It seems that where the particular statute giving the penalty limits the time within which the action for its recovery shall be commenced, although it is usual to aver that the offense by which it was incurred was committed within such time, yet the averment is not material, and its omission will not vitiate the declaration; and where the limitation is contained in some statute other than that giving the penalty, such allegation is unnecessary, as it is a matter of defense properly coming from defendant. Fowler v. Tuttle, 24 N. H. 9.
