80. Chicago Typothetæ v. Franklin Union No. 4, (Ill. App. Unreported) [affirmed in 220 Ill. 355, 77 N. E. 176], where Smith, P. J., said: "It is idle to talk of picketing for lawful purposes. Men do not form picket lines for the purpose of conversation and lawful persuasion. . . . In imagination and in theory a peaceable picket line may be possible, but in fact a picket line is never peaceable. It is always a formation of actual warfare and quite inconsistent with everything not related to force and violence. Its use is a form of unlawful coercion." In Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Gee, 139 Fed. 582, 584, McPherson, J., said: "There is and can be no such thing as peaceful picketing, any more than there can be chaste vulgarity, or peaceful mobbing, or lawful lynching." There was a near approach to the same rule in the case of Franklin Union No. 4 v. People, 220 Ill. 355, 379, 77 N. E. 176, where Hand, J., said: "The citizen, when engaged in lawful pursuits, must be accorded the right to walk the public streets of our cities and our country highways in absolute security and to go to and return from his home and place of business or employment without being interfered with. To follow him, to spy after him, to stop him and threaten him, to put him in fear, to intimidate him or to coerce him are alike unlawful. Intimidation and coercion are relative terms. What would put in fear a timid girl or weak woman or man might not terrorize the strong and resolute. All are alike entitled to the protection of the law." Eq. 759, 765, 53 Atl. 230, it was said: "A large part of what is most valuable in modern life seems to depend more or less directly upon 'probable expectancies.' When they fail, civilization, as at present organized, may go down. As social and industrial life develops and grows more complex these 'probable expectancies' are bound to increase. It would seem to be inevitable that courts of law, as our system of jurisprudence is evolved to meet the growing wants of an increasing complex social order, will discover, define and protect from undue interference more of these 'probable expectancies.'" shall have some established business which may be injured in order to enable him to maintain the bill.[88]

6. Interference With Contractual Relations.[89] Under the general rule that where persons, for the purpose of inflicting injury on another, attempt to induce others to violate a contract to render services, equity will interfere by injunction, if the damage is irreparable,[90] labor unions or their members may be enjoined under such circumstances.[91]

7. Trespass.[92] An injunction may be granted to restrain labor unions and members thereof from entering upon complainant's mines, or interfering with the working thereof, or by force, threats, or intimidation, preventing complainant's employees from working the mines, where the threatened acts are such that their frequent occurrence may be expected, and defendants are insolvent.[93]

C. Punishment For Violation of Injunction — 1. What Constitutes a Violation. Acts of strikers in coercing, intimidating, and beating relator's employee was held to be a violation of a strike injunction sufficient to sustain a judgment for contempt against persons guilty thereof.[94] If the striking employees of a railroad company in unlawfully obstructing the latter's business and the operation of its trains also obstruct the operation of cars and engines in the custody of a receiver of another railroad, they are guilty of a contempt of the court by which the receiver was appointed.[95]

The rule that a trespass cannot be enjoined unless on realty, and where the damage is irreparable, and after the right or title involved has been established at law, does not apply to such a case, as no title to realty is involved, and the acts complained of are not a direct trespass to realty, but only indirectly affect the enjoyment of property and other rights. 2. Who May Be Punished. Officers and members of a labor organization who resort to unlawful means for the enforcement of their demands and continue to do so in violation of an injunction will be punished for contempt,[96] although not parties to the injunction proceedings.[97] An incorporated labor union may likewise be punishable by fine for the violation of an injunction issued against it.[98]

3. Contempt Proceedings[99] — a. Nature of Proceedings. Where a strike injunction was issued to protect private rights, proceedings to punish certain strikers for contempt thereunder are of a civil nature and not criminal.[1] Although the same act constitute a contempt and a crime, the contempt may be tried and punished by the court.[2]

b. Defenses. In proceedings for contempt in violating a strike injunction, defendants could not collaterally attack a bill on which the injunction was granted.[3] Nor is the fact that the terms of a strike injunction were broader than the allegations of the bill a defense in a proceeding to punish for contempt in violating the injunction.[4] The contempt proceedings not being in their nature criminal, sworn answers of strikers are insufficient to purge them of contempt for violating an injunction issued to protect private rights.[5] It is no defense for a union to say that it advised its members to obey the law and avoid resort to violence.[6]

c. Right to Bill of Particulars. In contempt proceedings for violation of a strike injunction, defendants are not entitled to a bill of particulars specifying the acts charged to constitute the contempt;[7] the allegations need not be made with all the particularity required in indictments, it being sufficient to set out the particular respects in which the injunction has been violated.[8]

d. Amount of Fine. A fine of one thousand dollars imposed upon a labor union for flagrant and repeated violations of an injunction restraining it from interfering with non-union employees and their employers was not considered excessive.[9]

I. Creation and Existence of Relation.

A. Definitions. The relation of landlord and tenant may be defined in general terms as that which arises from a contract by which one person occupies the property of another with his permission, and in subordination to his rights,[1] the

The "relation of landlord and tenant," strictly so called, is merely the relation which exists between two parties for the possession of lands or tenements by one in consideration of a certain rent to be paid therefor to the other. Bentley v. Adams, 92 Wis. 386, 66

occupant being known as the tenant,[2] and the person in subordination to whom he occupies as the landlord.[3] It is essential to the relation that the occupancy be both permissive and subordinate,[4] and liability as between landlord and tenant rests upon privity, both of estate and of contract.[5]

B. Essentials of Relation — 1. Contract. To create the relation of landlord and tenant there must be a valid contract between the parties, either express or implied,[6] which for its validity depends on the same principles as other contracts,[7] such as the presence of a sufficient legal consideration,[8] and which involves mere rights of property.[9]

2. Reservation of Rent. While the reservation of a rent is made an essential to a lease by many of the definitions,[10] it is well settled that the relation of landlord's entire term being an assignment rather than a lease.[19] Hence a taking and holding in perpetuity is contradictory of the relation of landlord and tenant.[20]

C. Subject-Matter. While a subject-matter susceptible of grant, no less than capable parties, is indispensable to the relation of landlord and tenant,[21] it may consist of anything corporeal or incorporeal, lying in livery or in grant,[22] for example, not only of lands and houses, but of commons,[23] ways,[24] fisheries,[25] franchises,[26] estovers,[27] annuities,[28] or other incorporeal hereditaments.[29] A mere personal right is not subject to demise.[30] In some cases the parties to a letting of personal property are spoken of as landlord and tenant;[31] but such a transaction is strictly speaking a bailment.[32] be that of tenant[40] and the servant subjected to the duties and liabilities of such relation.

3. Purchaser.[41] Where an instrument purports to grant property, without other words to control its meaning, it cannot be construed as a lease.[42] But the fact that a lease contains a condition whereby it may become an absolute sale does not prevent its operating as a lease, prior to the fulfilment of such condition;[43] and the same is true where the lease contains a conditional gift of the premises.[44] Where, however, the intent of the parties is obviously to the contrary, an instrument will not be considered as a lease, although it contains words of demise.[45] And where money reserved as rent is clearly intended to take the place of interest on purchase-money, the contract will be held to evidence a sale.[46] Where under the agreement the entry may, at the option of the tenant, be either as lessee or as vendee, it will be held to have been as lessee, in the absence of notice of an election to purchase.[47] A lease of personalty giving the lessee a right to purchase such personalty is, until the exercise of the right, to be regarded as a lease, and not as a sale,[48] unless, according to the weight of authority, the contract is such that the rent reserved is obviously intended to take the place of instalments of purchase-money, the intention being to reserve title in the seller until complete payment, in which case the transaction will be regarded as a sale.[49]

4. Trustee. The relation of landlord and tenant does not exist where lands are occupied by one as trustee;[50] hence a parent who has the occupancy of premises in trust for a child does not become the tenant of such child.[51]

business or manufacturing plant, under an agreement which involves the payment of a portion of the profits to the owner, the question of whether a partnership or a tenancy results may arise.[53] In case the owner is entitled merely to compensation measured by a portion of the profits, he is not to be regarded as a partner;[54] nor is he where there is no agreement by which he is to share losses,[55] or where he reserves no control over the premises.[56]

E. Tenancy Implied From or Incident to Relations of Parties — 1. In General. The relationship of landlord and tenant may be implied from circumstances authorizing an inference that the parties intend to assume such relation toward each other.[57] Where a lease is presumed, by statute in some jurisdictions nothing more than a tenancy from year to year will be presumed in the absence of any evidence of the duration of the term demised.[58]

2. Growing Out of Occupancy — a. General Rules. While the mere occupancy of the property of another is not in itself sufficient to create a tenancy,[59] a presumption of a tenancy arises where an entry and occupancy is with the permission of the owner,[60] and the entry is in recognition of and not adverse or hostile to the

Where a lease has been terminated by the divesting of the title during the term, the relationship of landlord and tenant will not be created anew by occupancy of the tenant, although both the landlord and tenant believe that the lease remains in force. O'Brien v. Ball, 119 Mass. 28.

The fact that a county officer entitled to the possession and use of an office in a county building attends to private business while in such possession does not make him a tenant of the county, and raises no implied promise to pay rent. Where a demand for rent is resisted no tenancy is implied. Preston v. Hawley, 101 N. Y. 586, 5 N. E. 770.

A mere trespasser cannot by his own wrongful act of entry create the relation of landlord and tenant. Krug v. Davis, 101 Ind. 75.

The burden of proof rests upon the owner of land to show that a person who at first entered upon the land as a trespasser afterward became a tenant. The presumption is that he continued to hold the land in the same character as he first held it. Dixon v. Ahern, 19 Nev. 422, 14 Pac. 598.

Entry under holder of option.— One who for the purpose of prospecting for minerals enters upon land under one holding an option of purchase does not become the tenant of the owner in case he remains upon the land after the expiration of the option. Henry v. Perry, 110 Ga. 630, 36 S. E. 87, holding such person a mere trespasser.

Where the entry is under one holding adversely, the occupant does not become a tenant. Sims v. Price, 123 Ga. 97, 50 S. E. 961, so holding under Civ. Code (1895), § 3116.

the occupation, irrespective of the lease.[68] But it has been held, in a summary proceeding to dispossess a tenant, that plaintiff cannot, after failure to prove the formal execution of a written lease, rely upon parol proof of possession and payment of rent.[69]

c. Under Agreement For Lease. While a mere agreement to give a lease at a future date does not create the relation of landlord and tenant,[70] a tenancy is nevertheless created where the owner permits another to go into possession of the premises under such an agreement.[71] One who enters upon premises in possession of a tenant with the understanding that he is to receive an assignment of the lease is not, upon the refusal of the owner to consent to the assignment, to be regarded as the tenant of the lessee.[72]

Parol agreement.— A vendee may by parol agreement with the vendor, in consideration of rescinding a contract of purchase, become the tenant of the latter as to the land, without surrendering possession, provided no rights have intervened that would be defeated by such rescission; but the vendor must show an unconditional surrender by the vendee of his rights (Taylor v. Taylor, 112 N. C. 27, 16 S. E. 924; Durant v. Taylor, 89 N. C. 351; Riley v. Jordan, 75 N. C. 180); and the acts or conduct relied upon as evidence of abandonment must be unequivocal and inconsistent with the contract (Taylor v. Taylor, supra, holding that declarations of the vendee that he has agreed to pay rent were not evidence of abandonment to be submitted to the jury, where it appeared that he still held the bond for a conveyance and that the notes given therefor were held by the payee, and tnat after the declarations he had refused to surrender the bond or the notes as a condition to renting the premises for another year).

tenant of the vendor, upon a mere repudiation of the contract of sale and cancellation of the deed, where there is no reconveyance to the vendor.[85]

e. By Vendor After Sale. Where a conveyance of land reserves the right of possession in the grantor for a specified period, the vendor, during such term, is not the tenant of the vendee.[86] After the expiration of such period he becomes a tenant at sufferance,[87] the presumption being that he is in possession rightfully and as tenant of the grantee.[88]

f. After Execution or Judicial Sale. By the weight of authority there is no implied promise on the part of a judgment debtor, whose land has been sold under execution, to hold as a tenant of the purchaser in case he remains in possession,[89] although by some decisions it is held that the possessor of the land at the time of an execution or judicial sale is a quasi-tenant of the purchaser.[90] The purchaser of crops on execution against the tenant does not become the tenant of the landlord.[91]

g. Under Agreement to Support Owner. Agreements between the owner of land and children or other relations by which they are to have the enjoyment of the premises in consideration of care and support of the owner are not usually regarded as creating the relation of landlord and tenant,[92] unless the intent to create such relation is shown by the agreement.[93]

h. By Tenant in Common. The mere occupancy of the entire estate, or of more than his share, by a cotenant, will not render him the tenant of the other cotenants;[94] but the relation of landlord and tenant may arise between tenants in common by express contract.[95] An agreement settling controversies as to the mode of enjoyment of the estate is not, however, sufficient.[96] The lessee of one tenant in common is not liable to another tenant in common to whom he has not attorned.[97]

3. From Payment or Acceptance of Rent. Where a person in the possession of land pays rent to one claiming as owner, a presumption of the relation of landlord and tenant arises,[98] which, however, may be overcome by a showing that the payment was by mistake,[99] or by other circumstances proving it not to have been in recognition of the relation.[1] Conversely an acceptance of rent by the owner is prima facie proof that the occupant is his tenant,[2] which, however, may be rebutted by proof of other facts and circumstances.[3] The acceptance of rent from the assignee of an unexpired term does not create a new term by implication.[4]

Where the theory is followed that a mortgage passes the legal title to the mortgagee, the status of the mortgagor in possession is in the nature of that of a tenant at will or by sufferance to the mortgagee,[5] and the mortgagee is regarded as becoming the landlord of tenants holding under leases from the mortgagor prior to the mortgage,[6] an attornment under statutory modifications of the early common-law rule[7] being unnecessary;[8] although the tenant is protected in any payment of rent to the mortgagor, made before notice of the mortgagee's rights.[9] A lease executed after the mortgage by the mortgagor in possession, without privity of the mortgagee, does not render the lessee the tenant of the mortgagee,[10] unless the tenant has attorned to the mortgagee;[11] nor does the purchaser on foreclosure[12] or mortgagee's[13] sale become the landlord of the tenants of the mortgagor.[14]

agreement of this kind being frequently inserted by what is termed an attornment clause in the mortgage,[21] it being necessary to the validity of such clauses that they reserve a fixed rental[22] which is such an amount as to evidence that it is not a sham for the purpose of securing the mortgagee additional advantages over other creditors, but is a bona fide reservation of rent.[23] Agreements in mortgages by which the mortgagor is to become the tenant at will of the purchaser after sale thereunder are also regarded as valid,[24] and a constructive entry will be deemed to have been made by the purchaser at the time of his acquisition of title.[25] The parties to a trust deed, as in the case of mortgages, may agree that the grantor shall become the tenant of the grantee or trustee,[26] or the grantor may agree that one placed in possession by the trustee shall be regarded as the trustee's tenant.[27] Similarly by agreement of the parties, one entering under a mortgagee in possession may be regarded as his tenant,[28] or a lease made by the mortgagee out of possession may render the lessee the tenant of the mortgagor.[29]

F. Arising From Transfer or Devolution of Reversion and Attornment

— 1. Attornment — a. In General. The relation of landlord and tenant may arise from attornment,[30] which is the term applied to the consent of the tenant to hold under a transferee of the reversion.[31]

b. Necessity. Under the feudal system an attornment was essential to the validity of a grant of a reversion,[32] but this rule was altered by an early English statute[33] and has apparently never been regarded as a part of the law of the United States,[34] express statutory provision in many of the states making an attornment unnecessary to constitute the tenant a tenant of the transferee of the reversion.[35] An assignment of the lease is not sufficient to create the relationship of landlord and tenant, entitling the transferee to recover rent, without an attornment.[36]

c. Sufficiency. Any act of the tenant by which he recognizes a change of the person to whom the rent is due is an attornment.[37] It is not necessary that the agreement to attorn should express a payment of rent,[38] but payment of rent is a sufficient attornment,[39] as is a promise to pay rent,[40] the taking of a lease,[41] or a promise to surrender the possession.[42] Conversely, where the tenant is dealt with by the vendee as his tenant, his possession becomes that of the vendee.[43]

d. Effect. After an attornment the tenant holds upon the same terms as under his former landlord,[44] a new tenancy arising only when the time and conditions in the original lease are departed from.[45] But the possession of the tenant is that of the new owner.[46] Although the tenant has attorned to the transferee of the reversion, the transferee, by his acts, may be estopped from asserting that the possession of the tenant is not that of the original landlord.[47]

2. On Death of Reversioner.[48] Upon the death of the landlord his tenant continues in the same relation to those who are by law entitled to succeed to the rights of the deceased, until his disclaimer of such relation is made known to them.[49] And such relation cannot be altered by a collusive attornment to a stranger to the title.[50] Where, upon the death of the landlord, the tenant abandons the premises, his reëntry under one who has taken possession of the premises as owner does not render him the tenant of the original landlord or his representative.[51] parties on the subject.[59] So evidence of a demand for rent,[60] or the payment of rent,[61] is admissible. Where defendant claims to be holding under a lease from another, plaintiff is entitled to introduce such evidence as may legitimately tend to discredit the lease, or to indicate a doubt on the part of defendant as to its authenticity.[62] In the absence of fraud, surprise, or mistake, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that a lease was in fact a mortgage.[63]

II. LEASES AND AGREEMENTS.

A. Requisites and Validity — 1. In General — a. Nature of Contract. The contract by which the relation of landlord and tenant is created is usually known as a lease,[64] which according to a commonly accepted definition is a species of contract for the possession and profits of land and tenements, either for life, or for a certain period of time, or during the pleasure of the parties.[65] No particular Statutory definitions.— A lease is defined by La. Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2669 (2639) to be a contract by which one party gives to the other the enjoyment of a thing at a fixed price. Viterbo v. Friedlander, 120 U. S. 707, 7 S. Ct. 962, 30 L. ed. 776. See also Walker v. Dohan, 39 La. Ann. 743, 2 So. 381.

Technical and ordinary meaning.— A lease, when we mean thereby the instrument, is in legal language an indenture of lease or a deed, and therefore authors treat of leases under the common or general title of deeds. But in common parlance, where it is said "a man has a lease for property," nothing more is meant than that he has a term or an estate for years in the premises, which may be by deed or a writing not under seal. A lease is a sale and conveyance of the property leased, which only differs from what is commonly called a "deed" in being limited to a term certain, and leaving a reversionary interest in the grantor. Wien v. Simpson, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 158. A lease is personal property. It bargains away a temporary possession, and does not dispose of any fee or title. A lease is held therefore not to be a conveyance of property within a statute prohibiting conveyances of realty by a married woman without the joinder of her husband as grantor. Heal v. Niagara Oil Co., 150 Ind. 483, 50 N. E. 482; Perkins v. Morse, 78 Me. 17, 2 Atl. 130, 57 Am. Rep. 780. A lease from a married woman is a grant or instrument, within the meaning of Cal. Code, § 1093, providing that no estate in the real property of a married woman passes by any grant purporting to be executed or acknowledged by her, unless the grant or instrument is acknowledged by her in a certain manner. Carlton v. Williams, 77 Cal. 89, 19 Pac. 185, 11 Am. St. Rep. 243. A lease is a conveyance or grant. Milliken v. Faulk, 111 Ala. 658, 660, 20 So. 594 [citing Bouvier L. Dict.; 2 Rapalje L. Dict. "Lease"].

"To lease is to let; to farm out; to rent." Atlanta, etc., Air-Line R. Co. v. Harrison, 76 Ga. 757.

A lease for a term of years is a chattel interest, with an implied covenant that the lessor will protect the lessee in the quiet enjoyment of the premises for the term of the lease. Edwards v. Perkins, 7 Oreg. 149.

Demise distinguished.— The general signification of the word "demise" is that it is a conveyance in fee for life or for years. It denotes something more than a mere letting or a lease — as for instance a grant. It would seem that it means more to the lessee than a mere letting by the landlord, or the mere taking by the lessee, generally embraced in the mere terms "to lease" or "to let." These latter words, it would appear, can have relation only to the mere term. A "demise" embraces a fee, and it seems particularly designed for use to import to the agreement between a landlord and tenant implied covenants on the part of the lessor of good right and title to make the lease, and an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. Mershon v. Williams, 63 N. J. L. 398, 44 Atl. 211.

The word "leased" may be used in two senses.— It is said that a landlord leased his lands to his tenant, and with almost equal propriety it may be said that the tenant leased an estate from his landlord. Zink v. Grant, 25 Ohio St. 352, 354. But see Gray v. La Fayette County, 65 Wis. 567, 27 N. W. 311, holding that it is hardly accurate to say that the act of leasing may be done by the lessee. It is not of the same meaning as "rented," for the word "rented" refers as well to the act of the lessee as to that of a lessor.

Usufruct and lease distinguished.— A usufruct and a lease are materially different; the former is a real right, a species of ownership, usually for life, with the obligation to pay for repairs and taxes, and may be mortgaged or transferred at pleasure. The latter is a right strictly personal, giving only the use of property, without legal possession or any proprietary interest. La. Civ. Code, art. 591. Hoffman v. Laurans, 18 La. 70.

An agreement to pay a certain sum for the past enjoyment of a thing which has not been under any contract of lease, express or implied, is not a lease. Balfour v. Balfour, 33 La. Ann. 297.

Lands let to lease.— Lands conveyed only for life, for years, or at will. Wright v. Hardy, 76 Miss. 524, 534, 24 So. 697 [citing 2 Blackstone Comm. *316, 317].

written lease not under seal.[67] The power to lease, like any other power, may be implied by the general authority granted to an agent, and the recognition of his acts by his principal.[68] A lease for a period longer than is authorized by the agent's power has been held good pro tanto to the extent of the power.[69] In England a tenant for life or from year to year may make a lease for twenty-one years.[70]

c. Offer and Acceptance. Where a landlord offers to lease premises on certain specified terms, and such offer is unconditionally accepted, and a tender of performance of prerequisite conditions made, the contract of lease is complete and binding on both parties.[71] Where the offer of the landlord is neither accepted nor declined in terms, but the tenant proceeds to occupy and use the premises, such action on the part of the tenant will be construed as an acceptance of the terms of lease previously offered.[72] However, where there is no unqualified acceptance of the offer made by the owner of the land, there is no completed contract, and counter offers and modifications of the original offer upon the part of the other party to the negotiations, unaccepted by the landowner, will not constitute the transaction a lease.[73]

d. Necessity and Sufficiency of Consideration. A lease or an agreement for a lease must be supported by a sufficient consideration in order to be valid.[74] The demise of a leasehold estate is a sufficient consideration for the lessee's undertaking to pay rent;[75] and conversely payment of rent is a sufficient consideration for the demise.[76]

e. Lease or Agreement For. Where an agreement for a lease has been reduced to writing, and even though it contains a stipulation that a formal lease in writing shall be subsequently executed, the question has frequently arisen whether the written agreement operates as a lease in præsenti, or only as an agreement for a lease in futuro. The general rule is that effect will be given to the instrument according to the intention of the parties, to be ascertained from all the terms of the instrument itself, considered in the light of the surrounding circumstances.[77] applied in ascertaining the intention of the parties to a verbal agreement for a lease. In each case the object is to ascertain whether the parties intended a lease in præsenti, or an agreement for a lease in futuro; and the delivery of the possession becomes material only in so far as it may tend to throw light on the intention of the parties, and thus enable the court properly to construe the agreement.[81] In England, under the Judicature Acts, a tenant in possession under an executory agreement for a lease is treated by the courts as in all respects in the same position as if he held under a lease made pursuant to the terms of the agreement.[82]

f. Agreement For Lease — (I) In General. An agreement for a lease vests no estate in the proposed lessee, although an action for its breach may be maintained by the other party against the one in default.[83] A verbal agreement to give a lease is not binding unless all the terms of the lease are settled, so that no essential matters are left open for consideration.[84]

(II) Performance or Breach. An agreement to execute a lease for a given period, at a stated rental, payable in specified instalments, is not broken by a refusal to execute a lease which imposes terms and conditions not imposed by law, and of which no mention was made in the agreement.[85] The general rule is that where the lessor contracts to give a lease, it is his duty, and not that of the lessee, to make and tender the conveyance.[86]

(III) Measure of Damages. The measure of damages sustained by the owner in an action on a breach of agreement for a lease is the difference between the contract price of the premises as agreed upon and the amount plaintiff was able to realize upon the property after the breach of agreement.[87] In some jurisdictions the measure of damages of the prospective lessee for the owner's breach of agreement to perfect a lease is held to be the difference between the rent agreed on and the actual rental value of the premises.[88] While in other jurisdictions it is held that where the lessor was unable to carry out his part of the agreement, the rule or measure of damages for the breach of a contract to lease is the same as for a breach of a contract to sell land, and that only actual damages can be recovered, and not the value of the bargain.[89]

See, however, Garsed v. Turner, 71 Pa. statute.[90] In some jurisdictions a parol contract for the lease of land for a year, to commence in futuro, although void under the statute of frauds, creates the relation of landlord and tenant, where followed by use and occupation.[91]

b. Form and Contents. To make a good lease, and thus create the relation of landlord and tenant, no particular words are necessary, but it is indispensable that it should appear to have been the intention of one party to dispossess himself of the premises, and of the other to enter and occupy as the former himself had the right to do pursuant to the agreement between them.[92] A memorandum expressing the consent of the owner that another shall have immediate possession of premises, and shall continue to occupy them at a specified rent and for a definite term, is a sufficient lease.[93] In general, any agreement under which one person obtains the right of enjoyment to property of another, with his consent, and in subordination to his right, may create the relation of landlord and tenant.[94] As between parties, an agreement may be a lease, while as to third persons it may be construed as a building contract.[95] Where an instrument has the effect of giving the holder an exclusive right of occupation of the land, although subject

c. Recitals as to Term. It is generally held to be essential to the validity of a lease that it prescribe with reasonable certainty the date of commencement and the duration of term of the lease.[97]

d. Description of Property. The lease should likewise contain a sufficiently accurate description of the property demised as to clearly indicate just what property is intended to be covered by the lease;[98] although a technical misdescription will not invalidate the lease where the description is sufficiently definite to identify the property intended to be demised.[99]

e. Description of Parties. It has been held that a person whose name is not mentioned in the body of a lease is not a party thereto nor bound thereby, although he signs and acknowledges it as his deed.[1]

f. Incorporation of Terms of Prior Lease. The parties to a lease may adopt as a part thereof, by mere reference, the terms of a prior lease between one of them and a third person, if its terms are known to both.[2]

3. Execution, Delivery, and Acceptance — a. Execution. The formalities prescribed by statute in the execution of leases should be substantially followed,[3] and unless the contract or agreement, in whatever shape it may be, is signed by both parties thereto, it may not operate as a valid lease for want of mutuality.[4] In several jurisdictions, however, by usage or custom a lease may be executed by

b. Seal. The general rule at present, both in the United States and in England, is that it is not necessary to the validity of a lease that it be under seal.[9] There are, however, some early English cases to the effect that all leases for more than three years must be by deed.[10]

c. Necessity of Stamp. Under statutes requiring leases or agreements to lease to have a revenue stamp affixed, the omission to stamp the lease or agreement previously to its execution does not vitiate the instrument;[11] but until a proper stamp is affixed it cannot be received in evidence.[12]

d. Acknowledgment and Attestation. In practically every jurisdiction it is provided by statute that every lease of land for a term in excess of a period specified by the statute is invalid as to third parties unless such lease is duly acknowledged by the parties thereto.[13] However, under these statutes, the general

A lease for a term not exceeding three years need not be executed in the presence of two witnesses, as required by Minn. Comp. St. c. 35, § 8, of "deeds" of land or any interest in land, as they are taken out of the operation thereof by section 30, which provides that "conveyances," as used in the chapter, shall not be construed to embrace rule is that a lease duly signed by the parties, but not witnessed or acknowledged, as required by the statute, will nevertheless be valid and binding as between the parties thereto, and third persons having actual notice of its existence.[14] Although in at least two jurisdictions it is held that a lease which is not properly attested and acknowledged, as prescribed by the statute, is invalid, even as between the parties thereto, and third persons with actual knowledge of its execution.[15]

e. Delivery and Acceptance. The general rule is that a lease takes effect so as to vest the estate or interest to be conveyed only from its delivery, and not from its date, or the time the signatures were affixed to it;[16] and there can be no delivery without an acceptance, express or implied.[17] While delivery, in the popular acceptation of the term, implies a manual transfer of possession from one person to another, yet, where the lessee by formal assent or unequivocal acts, such as entering into possession, treats the instrument as in his possession, it is sufficient to constitute a delivery.[18] The delivery is complete where the lessor

A lease of chattels for a specified rent, with an agreement that they should be the property of the lessee upon payment of the rent for a specified period, is not, under the New York statute, a chattel mortgage, nor an agreement intended to operate as such, requiring filing to give it validity as against subsequent purchasers. Neidig v. Eifler, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 353.

In New Jersey, prior to 1898 (Pub. interest therein purported to be conveyed, even though it is not recorded as required by statute.[22]

b. Sufficiency of. Under the various recording statutes, where a duly acknowledged lease is delivered to the proper county officer for recording, it is notice to everybody of the existence of the lease, and a subsequent bona fide encumbrancer or purchaser takes subject to the lease, and is chargeable with notice of its existence, although as a matter of fact the officer failed to record it.[23]

5. Validity — a. Undue Influence and Duress. A lease effected by means of imposition or undue influence brought to bear upon one of the parties thereto is at least voidable, but the mere fact of advanced age and infirmity is not alone sufficient ground on which to predicate and presume undue influence.[24] A lease made by a party under duress is not absolutely void, but is voidable at his instance when he again becomes a free agent.[25]

b. Fraud and Mistake. The rule is elementary that fraud or deceit in the making of a lease will avoid the same;[26] and fraud sufficient to vitiate the agree-

Confidential relations.— The relationship of father and son will not of itself invalidate a lease by the former as agent or trustee to the latter or authorize the disaffirmance of the transaction by the principal or cestui que trust. The fact of relationship is a material one in determining the question whether there was fraud in fact in the transaction, but it does not per se constitute fraud in law or bring the case within the rule prohibiting an agent or trustee from dealing with the subject-matter of the agency or trust for his own benefit. ment may be shown by parol evidence.[27] However, in order to vitiate the lease the execution of the instrument must not only have been procured by fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation, but the party executing it must have been free from negligence in affixing his signature thereto.[28] Mere promissory statements and opinions of the lessor on which the lessee has no right to rely are insufficient to sustain a charge of false representations in procuring the lease.[29] It is the duty of a lessee, upon discovering that representations which induced him to execute the lease were fraudulent, to rescind the lease, if he desires to escape its obligations; failure to do so amounts to an election to continue the same in force, and to abide by its covenants.[30] The question as to whether there was fraud in the transaction is usually one of fact for the jury.[31] Under certain conditions the concealment by a party to the lease of material facts affecting the premises may be ground for avoiding the same.[32]

edge and intention of the lessor that the demised premises are to be used for immoral or illegal purposes is unenforceable and invalid.[33] Where, however, the lessor in good faith leases his premises without any knowledge that they are to be used for unlawful or immoral purposes, the fact that they are subsequently so used, without collusion or assent on his part, will not vitiate the lease, or impair his right to enforce any of the covenants therein contained.[34] Some of the cases go to the length of holding that actual knowledge on the part of the lessor of the illegality of the object of the lease will not invalidate it where there was no collusion or participation in the illegal act on his part.[35]

d. Limitation of Term. Where an estate is created vesting in possession, and there are annexed to it restraints and limitations not allowed by law, only the restraints and limitations are void.[36] The rule that prevails in respect to powers to lease is analogous, which is that when there is an affirmative power to lease, restrained by a negative limitation, such as not to exceed a prescribed number of years, the lease, although for a term exceeding the prescribed limit, will stand good for the time authorized by the power.[37] In several jurisdictions, by constitutional or statutory provisions, no lease or grant of agricultural land, for a longer period than the statute specifies, in which shall be reserved any rent or service of any kind, is valid;[38] and under such provisions it has been held that a lease of such lands for a longer period than twelve years is void, even as to the twelve years.[39]

6. Estoppel, Waiver, and Ratification — a. Of Lessee. A lessee, by the acceptance of the lease, is estopped to deny the lessor's power to execute it.[40] Where a lessee has entered under his lease and occupied and enjoyed the premises, he and his assignees are alike estopped to repudiate the lease on the ground of its invalidity.[41] The mere possession of demised premises will not estop the lessee from setting up fraud in the procurement of the lessee in an action on the lease,

Compare Schenck v. Stumpf, 6 Mo. App. 381, holding that the fact that one's co-lessees entered under a void lease and occupied according to its terms does not estop him to dispute its validity. In this case the lease was void, being executed by a married woman after the death of the trustee to whom the land had been conveyed for her separate use, and it was held that she not being estopped

if possession is surrendered as soon as the fraud is discovered.[42] The rule is otherwise, however, where the lessee upon discovery of the fraud fails to rescind, or attempt to rescind, the lease, but continues to occupy and enjoy the premises.[43] The mere payment of rent by the lessee as it falls due will not estop him from setting up fraud in the procurement or execution of the lease, provided he seeks to avoid the same immediately upon discovery of the fraud.[44]

b. Of Lessor. Where a lessor has no title to the property which is the subject-matter of the lease, yet his lease will still operate by way of estoppel if he afterward acquires title to such property at any time before the expiration of the term.[45] However, a lessor is not estopped from setting up the invalidity of a lease procured by fraud because he accepted rent under it without knowledge of the fraud.[46]

c. Ratification of Defective or Invalid Lease. Occupation of the premises by the lessee, and payment of rent according to the terms of the lease, is usually held to be a ratification by the lessee of an invalid lease.[47] Likewise acquiescence in the occupancy of the premises by the lessee, and acceptance of rent from him, will as a rule amount to a ratification of the lease by the lessor.[48] In some juris-thereby, neither was the lessee; estoppels being mutual.

stances attending its execution, and the acts of the parties subsequent thereto, may be scrutinized in ascertaining such intention.[64] Effect should be given to both the written and printed provisions of the lease, if consistent with each other;[65] but where there is an irreconcilable conflict between the written and printed clause of a lease, the former will prevail.[66]

b. What Law Governs. The rules as to conflict of laws applicable to contracts generally apply to leases and the construction thereof.[67]

c. Leases and Written Contracts in General. In construing a written lease the general rule is that the words employed are to be interpreted in the ordinary and popular sense,[68] unless the context clearly shows that it was the intention of the parties that they should be understood in a different sense.[69] There is a familiar canon of construction that all contracts, including leases of every description, shall be most strongly construed against the grantor, and that if there be any doubt and uncertainty as to the meaning of any such lease, it shall be construed most strongly in favor of the grantee.[70] Leases are not necessarily to be construed

Question for court.— The question whether or not an agreement between the parties is a valid lease for more than three years, or merely a lease at will, is one of law for the court, as the lease for more than three years could not exist without a writing; and the force and effect, as well as the interpretation and construction thereof, is for the court and not for the jury. Pierce v. Hedden, 105 La. 294, 29 So. 734.

according to their strict letter, and this is especially so when such construction would defeat the manifest intent of the parties as gathered from the whole instrument.[71]

d. Construing Instruments Together. It is proper, and in many cases necessary, to construe the lease in connection with, and in the light of, the previous agreement which was its foundation, in order to arrive at and give effect to the actual intention and agreement of the parties.[72] Where two instruments, such as two leases,[73] or a lease and a mortgage relating to the same subject-matter, and between the same parties, are executed at the same time, they must be construed together.[74]

e. Practical Construction of Parties. Where there is uncertainty or ambiguity as to the meaning of any provisions of the lease, the practical construction put upon such provision by the parties to the lease should be given due weight by the court in construing the lease.[75]

f. Evidence in Aid of Construction. As a general rule, if the description of the property in a lease is ambiguous or doubtful, parol evidence of the practical construction given by the parties, by acts of occupancy, etc., is admissible for the purpose of identifying the property, and in aid of the interpretation of the lease.[76] Where, however, no ambiguity is found in the lease, the court in its construction cannot indulge in conjecture or resort to parol evidence, but the language of the instrument itself must control its construction.[77] It has been held in some jurisdictions that in respect to matters upon which the parties are silent, the lease may be fairly open to explanation by the general usage and customs of the country or district where the property lies.[78]

2. Parties to Lease or Agreement. The rule is well settled that an agent executing the lease makes himself liable if he contracts in his own name and without disclosing the name of his principal, even though the other party to the lease knew that he was acting as agent, if the name of the principal is not disclosed;[79] nor can such undisclosed principal enforce any of the covenants of such lease.[80] Where a party signs his name to an instrument, with the addition of the word "president" or "agent," the additional word is merely descriptive, and does not relieve him from personal liability thereon.[81] Likewise the covenants in a lease can only be enforced against the party who on the face of the lease appears to be the covenantor, although in fact he acts for another.[82] Where several persons become bound for the payment of rent, in contemplation of law, the lease is to all, where there is nothing in the body of the instrument to negative that conclusion, and the occupancy of one is the occupancy of all.[83]

3. Covenants and Conditions — a. Whether Express or Implied Covenant. All covenants between a lessor and his lessee are either covenants in law, that is, implied covenants, or express covenants.[84] An express covenant is a covenant explicitly stated in words.[85] Any words that amount to or import an agreement are sufficient to constitute a covenant; no precise or technical language is required by law.[86] An implied covenant has been defined to be such a covenant as is inferred or imputed in law from the words used.[87]

b. Dependent or Independent Covenants. Covenants are to be construed as dependent or independent according to the intention of the parties and the good sense of the case. Technical words should give way to such intention.[88] Some of the cases, however, lay down the rule that covenants in a lease will be considered and held as dependent conditions, to be performed by the respective parties, unless it fairly appears from the nature of the covenants they intended them to be independent.[89]

c. Covenant Not to Assign. According to the weight of authority an agreement to accept a lease of premises to contain all the usual covenants and provisos does not invalidate a covenant against assignment and cannot be enforced where the lease as drawn up contains such a covenant.[90]

d. Covenants Running With the Land. Covenants in leases extending to a thing in esse, parcel of the demise, and which directly touch or concern the thing demised, run with the land, and bind the assignee, although he be not named.[91]

"Implied covenants depend for their existence on the intendment and construction of law. There are some words which do not of themselves import an express covenant; yet, being made use of in certain contracts, have a similar operation and are called covenants in law, and are as effectually binding on the parties as if expressed in the most unequivocal terms. There may be implied covenants in a deed in which there are express covenants, but there can be none contradictory to or inconsistent with or repugnant to express covenants." power of reëntry for the breach of a covenant be added to such covenant, it has the force of a condition.[6] Where the stipulation in the lease contains no reëntry clause, it is not construed as a condition, but as a covenant the breach of which gives the lessor a right of action for damages only.[7]

4. Liability For Breach — a. Liability of Lessor — (i) In General. Upon a breach on the part of the lessor of a covenant or condition in a lease, a cause of action arises in favor of the lessee, and in such action he is entitled to recover the damages sustained by him by reason of such breach.[8] Although a lessee has assigned his lease for the remainder of the term, he may still sue for damages accruing to him from a breach occurring while he held the lease.[9] However, after the breach of contract by the lessor, the lessee's right of action may be waived or released by a new parol contract in relation to the same subject-matter, or by any valid parol executed contract.[10]

Suppl. 1117], where defendant agreed that, if plaintiffs would take a lease of certain lofts in defendant's building, he would put out of another loft tenants whose presence would prevent plaintiffs obtaining adequate fire insurance. Plaintiffs took a lease and entered into possession.

(II) Damages. The measure of the lessee's damages for the breach of a covenant in a lease is usually the difference between the market rental value of the premises and the rent agreed to be paid for the same.[11] The lessee is likewise entitled to recover such damages as result as an immediate consequence of the breach, such as injury to crops, goods, machinery, furniture, etc., together with any necessary expenditure of time or money.[12] Damages for loss of probable profits of business in which the lessee may be engaged on the leased premises are too remote and speculative to be recovered in an action on a covenant in a lease.[13]

b. Liability of Lessee — (I) In General. Upon the breach of a covenant in a lease by a lessee, a cause of action at once accrues to the lessor for the recovery of all damages sustained by reason of such breach,[14] and the fact that the lessor

Defendant failed to put out the other tenants, but plaintiffs remained in occupancy of the loft, although unable to obtain sufficient insurance, owing to the other tenancy, and it was held that, by remaining in the premises after knowledge that the objectionable tenancy had not been terminated as agreed, plaintiff did not waive the right to recover from the landlord damages incurred by reason of inadequate insurance.

See also People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11; Farr v. Griffith, 9 Utah 416, 35 Pac. 506, holding that where a person who has leased a pond for the purpose of harvesting ice fails to supply it with a sufficient quantity of water, according to agreement, the measure of the lessee's damages is the value of the ice he failed to put up because the lessor did not supply sufficient water, less the cost of putting it up. But see Dye v. Wagner, 49 Iowa 458, where a lessor contracted to furnish certain power to his lessee, and it was held that the latter was not entitled to recover as damages the difference between the value of the unexpired term of the lease and the rent agreed to be paid on failure of the lessor for one day to furnish the stipulated power, where no demand for the same was made by the lessor after such day.

Mitigation of damages.— Where a lessee, relying on a breach of some of lessee's covenants as a defense to an action on his covenant to pay for a building erected on the leased premises by the lessee, introduced no evidence to show what damages he sustained by such breach, the trial court did not err in making no allowance therefor. could compel the lessee by injunction to fulfil the covenants of the lease does not deprive him of his remedy at law for their violation.[15] The lessor may, however, by express agreement or by acquiescence, waive the breach, and thus be estopped to claim damages resulting therefrom.[16]

(II) DAMAGES. Where a lessee repudiates or abandons his lease, the measure of the lessor's damages for the breach of contract is the difference between the rent stipulated in the lease and the sum for which the premises are rented to other parties for the remainder of the term;[17] and where, through no fault of the lessor, the premises remain vacant during the remainder of the term, the lessor is entitled to recover as damages the amount of rent reserved for the unexpired portion of the lease.[18]

A purchaser of land, before payment of the price, where entitled to the profits of the income thereof in the meantime, has a right to lease it to another. Fitch v. Windram, 184 Mass. 68, 67 N. E. 965.

In Louisiana, by statute, the lease of another's property is valid in so far as the

but where the lessor has neither title nor possession the lease is of no effect.[21] The relation of landlord and tenant does not depend upon the landlord's title, but upon the agreement between the parties followed by the possession of the premises by the tenant under such agreement.[22] It is immaterial that the land was in the possession of a third person claiming title, at the time the lease was made, where the lessee obtains possession under the lease.[23]

B. Possession of Tenant as Possession of Landlord. The possession of the demised premises by the lessee is for many purposes considered to be the possession of the lessor,[24] until the tenancy is expressly repudiated and notice thereof given to the landlord.[25] This rule is most often applied in connection with a claim of title by adverse possession.[26] It is also applied in connection with constructive notice, it being held that possession by a tenant is constructive notice, as to third persons, of the title of the landlord.[27]

C. Rights and Powers in General — 1. Authority and Control Over Leased Premises. In the absence of a statute or an express agreement,[28] the general rule is that the landlord has no right to enter the premises leased by him, except to prevent waste,[29] or to perform acts to save himself from liability for negligence in tenant is concerned. Dennistoun v. Walton, 8 Rob. 211.

Extent of possession.—Where the lessee is not restricted by certain bounds his possession is considered to be to the extent of the property of the landlord, of which he is in possession (Lee v. McDaniel, 1 A. Search for stolen goods.— The right of a landlord to enter and terminate a lease at will will not justify an illegal search for stolen goods. Such acts make him a tres-connection with the premises;[30] but a mere trespasser cannot complain that the lessor illegally interfered with the lessee's possession, where the latter makes no objection.[31]

2. Actions Against Third Persons. For an injury to the possession as distinguished from the freehold, the right of action is in the tenant, and the landlord cannot sue.[32] On the other hand, where the injury is to the freehold the landlord may sue, although his tenant is in possession.[33] An action will lie at the suit of a landlord against one who, by disturbing or threatening his tenants, causes them to abandon the premises.[34]

3. Right to Defend Action Against Lessee. Generally the landlord may defend an action brought against the tenant relating to the title to the demised premises,[35] such as an action of ejectment,[36] or an action of trespass to try title.[37]

D. Transfer of Reversion — 1. To Tenant.[38] The purchase by the lessee of the interest of the lessor, during the existence of the lease, merges the two estates.[39]

The landlord cannot recover for a diversion of water where no damage to his interest is shown. Moody v. King, 74 Me. 497. At common law the assignee of a reversion could not maintain an action upon a covenant contained in a lease, against the lessee, although the covenant might run with the land. To remedy this the statute of 32 Hen. VIII, c. 34, was enacted, which gave generally to the assignee of the reversion the same right of action that the lessor had, upon the covenants in the lease. But this statute did not extend to mere personal and collateral covenants, but embraced those only which touched and concerned the thing demised. In Ohio the English statute is not in force, but an assignee of the reversion may sue on the covenants in the lease, where the covenants are specially assigned, whether they inhere in the land or are merely collateral. term, where the lessee was required by the purchaser to surrender the premises notwithstanding the land was sold subject to the lease.[64]

(III) As Between Grantor and Grantee.[65] Where a condition inserted in the lease is not intended for the benefit of the lessor as owner of the reversion in the property leased, it does not pass to the grantee of the reversion, but remains in the grantor.[66] On the other hand, where the covenant or condition is intended for the benefit of the reversion, the rights thereunder pass to the grantee.[67] If the grantee covenants to perform all the conditions of the lease and to indemnify the grantor against it, such covenant inures to the benefit of the assignee of such grantor.[68] If a lease has been agreed on before a sale of the land, but the terms have not been fixed, the grantor has no authority after the sale to sign a proper memorandum of the contract for a lease.[69] If the grantor collects rent after the tenant is notified of the transfer, the grantee may sue the grantor to recover the sum paid notwithstanding he could have sued the tenant therefor.[70]

2. Mode and Sufficiency. The assignment need not be in any particular form.[74] It may be by parol,[75] by delivery of a rent note,[76] by appropriate words in a mortgage,[77] or by the appointment of a creditor to collect the rents and apply them on the lessor's debt.[78] There may be an assignment of the rent due without an assignment of the lease.[79] A lease under seal may be assigned by an instrument not under seal.[80] Notice of the assignment should be given the lessee; and knowledge obtained by the sublessee in possession of the premises is not notice to the lessee where at the time he obtained it he was not acting as agent of the lessee.[81] An assignment need not be recorded;[82] but if a mortgage which contains an assignment of rents is indexed and recorded only as a land mortgage, it is not constructive notice of the assignment to third persons.[83]

3. Operation and Effect.[84] Where the rent is assigned the relation of landlord and tenant is established between the assignee and the lessee.[85] The assignee, however, has no right of ownership or right of possession,[86] and no interest beyond

West Virginia.— Johnson v. Chapman, 43 W. Va. 639, 28 S. E. 744, holding that the landlord has a cause of action for injuries by which the rental value of the property is diminished or destroyed, in the absence of a showing that the lessee covenanted to repair.

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 136.

Actions by both landlord and tenant.—A tenant and landlord may both maintain actions at the same time for injuries done to an estate — the tenant for the interruption of his possession and the diminution of his profits; and the landlord for the more permanent injury to his property. George v. Fisk, 32 N. H. 32; Halsey v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 45 N. J. L. 26.

Effect of provisions in the lease.—Where the lease stipulates against the lessee's removing any dirt from the land, and also that the land shall be delivered up at the end of the term in as good condition as when received, the lessors cannot sue during the term for damages to the land by the conute in some states[97] to the effect that the owner of the reversion may sue for an injury to the inheritance notwithstanding an intervening estate for years.

(II) FORM OF ACTION. A qualification of the rule forbidding an owner out of possession to maintain trespass permits a landlord, while the tenant is in possession, to maintain trespass for permanent injuries to the freehold affecting its value;[98] but this remedy extends only to acts of trespass and not to acts done by lawful authority of the tenant.[99] The common-law remedy for injuries to the reversion is an action on the case.[1] Trespass quare clausum fregit cannot be maintained by the landlord except where the tenancy is one at will.[2]

b. What Constitutes Injury to Reversion. An injury to the reversion for which the landlord may sue may consist inter alia in the removal or destruction of a fence,[3] the flooding of lands,[4] the diversion of a natural watercourse,[5] the cutting of timber,[6] the burning of standing timber,[7] or like acts.[8]

c. Pleading.[9] It has been held that plaintiff must allege that the injury for which he sues is an injury to the reversion,[10] although the better rule seems to be that it is not necessary to state formally and explicitly that the reversion was injured where the facts pleaded as a cause of action are of such a nature as necessarily to work such injury.[11] The title and interest of the reversioner in the Effect of covenants in lease.—A covenant in a lease that the lessee should return the premises in as good condition and repair as they were in when he took possession does not preclude the lessor's recovery for injuries to the inheritance in tearing down a line fence and closing a right of way; the covenant not covering such injuries, and the lessor being in actual possession and use of the right of way under a reservation in the lease. property should be stated as facts and not as conclusions, the usual rule of pleading being applicable.[12]

2. By Tenant — a. Liability. The question as to the liability of a tenant for injuries to the demised premises by his acts or negligence is so interwoven with the question of waste which is treated elsewhere in this work[13] that no more will be attempted in this connection than to lay down a few general rules, independent of the law of waste. Of course it is the duty of the tenant to so use the leased property as not unnecessarily to injure it.[14] A tenant is liable, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, for causing a permanent injury to the demised premises over and above the ordinary wear and tear, when such injury is caused by his wrongful act or negligence.[15] The measure of care which a tenant must use to avoid responsibility is that which a person of ordinary prudence and caution would use if his own interests were to be affected and the whole risk was his own.[16] A tenant is not liable for such wear and tear as is incident to the business conducted on the premises,[17] nor is he liable for injury to, or destruction of, the premises by fire, where he has not been negligent.[18] The liability of the tenant extends to the acts of his servants[19] and business associates.[20] The right to sue for injuries committed by the tenant or those for whose acts he is liable is not waived by the subsequent acceptance of rent,[21] nor by the execution of a new lease,[22] nor by the acceptance of a certain sum in consideration of the surrender of the lease.[23] But an agreement to stop the litigation for injuries and surrender the lease is based on a sufficient consideration to preclude the right to afterward recover damages.[24]

b. Injunction.[25] A landlord may enjoin his tenant from acts causing an injury to the reversion,[26] where such injury will probably be irreparable, or cannot be compensated in damages recoverable in an action at law.[27]

c. Trial.[28] The question of due care on the part of the tenant must be submitted to the jury,[29] by appropriate instructions.[30]

d. Criminal Responsibility.[31] In some states the statutes expressly make acts of the tenant wilfully injuring or damaging the demised premises an indictable offense.[32] Independent of statute, the common-law rule was that a tenant could not be guilty of arson in burning the leased buildings in his possession.[33]

3. Damages.[34] Ordinarily the measure of damages for injuries to the premises while in the possession of the tenant is the depreciation in the market value of the reversion.[35] The cost of restoration does not necessarily govern the amount of damages where the alterations made by the tenant are in fact a benefit to the premises.[36] The tenant may be allowed, in mitigation of damages for the cutting of timber, the value of firewood and timber furnished by him for the farm from other premises.[37] Evidence of damages to the property as a whole is competent to show damage to the reversion;[38] but evidence as to like injuries inflicted after the suit was brought is not admissible as a means of measuring damages for injuries sustained thereby prior to that time.[39]

The sale of leased land during the term, the lessee not having been disturbed in his possession, is no defense to an action on a promissory note given for the rent to the lessor. Life v. Secrest, 1 Ind. 512.

Want of title in fee in the landlord is no bar to an action on a lease, where the tenant has not been evicted. Pence v. Williams, 14 Ind. App. 86, 42 N. E. 494; Crampton v. Van Ness, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,348, 4 Cranch C. C. 350.

Feudal origin.— The principle of estoppel of the tenant to deny the title of the landlord is of feudal origin. By the policy of that system the vassal, or tenant, after having received investiture, or livery of seizin, and vowed fidelity and homage to his lord, was not permitted to question the lord's title so long as that relation existed. He could not do so without breaking the faith which he had pledged. And though the feudal reasons of the rule have ceased, yet reasons of general policy have caused the rule to be preserved in its original vigor, wherever the relation of landlord and tenant exists by positive contract. Vance v. Johnson, 10 Humphr. (Tenn) 214; 1 Greenleaf Ev. § 25.

The fidelity required of a tenant to his landlord "is not merely a shadow and remnant of the ancient feudal fealty, but is essentially connected with the observance of good faith in contract, and the maintenance of that confidence and trust which is essential to a wholesome state of society. But while the principle is thus highly valued, care must be taken that it is not permitted tenancy,[42] before a surrender of possession to the landlord.[43] The rule rests on the ground of an equitable and not a technical estoppel,[44] is based upon considerations of public policy,[45] and will not be applied where its allowance would contravene the public policy expressed in a positive statute.[46] The estoppel is mutual in its operation;[47] it extends to the landlord who cannot allege that he had no title at the time of the demise.[48]

2. To What Tenancies Applicable.[49] The estoppel to deny title applies not only to tenancies for a definite term of years, but also to a tenancy by sufferance or at will,[50] or a tenancy created by the tenant holding over after his lease has expired.[51] The estoppel also extends to a tenancy under the lessee, it being held that a subtenant is estopped to deny the title of his immediate landlord.[52]

Furthermore the estoppel applies to a tenant of personal property as well as to a a tenant of real property;[53] and to a tenancy under a municipal corporation as well as under any other landlord.[54]

3. Possession as Basis of Estoppel — a. Necessity For — (I) In General. The foundation of the estoppel is the occupation of the premises by the permission of the landlord.[55] The estoppel is in pais and does not depend upon the lease but is founded upon the possession, and is as operative after the conclusion of the lease as before, and until that possession is ended.[56] A lessee who never takes possession under the lease is not estopped to deny the landlord's title.[57]

(II) Possession as Tenant.[58] Before an estoppel will arise in favor of the landlord as against the tenant there must be a tenancy in fact,[59] created by contract and not by operation of law.[60]

b. Possession as Admission of Title. Possession of itself creates no estoppel.[61] There must be an express or implied admission of title in the landlord,[62] which may be evidenced by the mere acceptance of the lease and going into possession thereunder,[63] or by written or oral acknowledgments that the tenant holds the tenant's title. Sexton v. Carley, 147 Ill. 269, 35 N. E. 471 [affirming 47 Ill. App. 316].

under the landlord.[64] No estoppel results where there is merely a conditional admission of title,[65] nor where the alleged tenant notifies his landlord before he takes possession that he will not take possession under him.[66] So there is no admission of title so as to create an estoppel where the tenant is already in possession asserting title in himself, and it is distinctly agreed that he is not to waive his right to do so by the agreement to pay rent.[67]

By such acceptance the lessor as effectually recognizes the title and possession of the lessor as if he had entered and taken posses-

such a lessee to deny his landlord's title there must be proof of fraud, unfairness, mistake, or misapprehension of fact;[69] and the mere fact that the tenant has a better title than his landlord does not of itself raise the presumption that the lease was a fraud or accepted by mistake.[70]

4. Validity of Lease — a. Void Lease.[71] So long as the tenant retains possession and is not disturbed in his possession, it is immaterial to him that the lease itself, under which he holds, is void, provided there has been no fraud or mistake inducing him to become the tenant.[72] The fact that the lease is void does not affect the rule that a tenant is estopped to deny his landlord's title,[73] except sion under and by virtue of the lease itself. Locke v. Frasher, 79 Va. 409.

In California the rule stated above in the text does not prevail, but it is held that if the tenant was in possession at the time of the lease he may deny his landlord's title (Davidson v. Ellmaker, 84 Cal. 21, 23 Pac. 1026; Peralta v. Ginochio, 47 Cal. 459; Franklin v. Merida, 35 Cal. 558, 95 Am. Dec. 129; Tewksbury v. Magraff, 33 Cal. 237); and it has been held that the rule is not changed by a clause in the lease whereby the lessee waives and renounces all title of any kind to the premises, other than the leasehold interest created in the lease, on the theory that the words "waive and renounce" are not words of conveyance (Davis v. McGrew, 82 Cal. 135, 23 Pac. 41). But the acceptance of such a lease, while not of itself working an estoppel, is prima facie evidence against the lessee, so as to compel him to show affirmatively a paramount title in himself or those under whom he claims (Peralta v. Ginochio, 47 Cal. 459); although if the acceptance of the lease is induced by fraud or imposition it is not prima facie evidence of the lessor's title (Johnson v. Chely, 43 Cal. 299). Furthermore the lessee cannot attack the title in actions where title is not involved, as in an action for unlawful detainer, in the absence of a showing of fraud or mistake (Mason v. Wolff, 40 Cal. 246). And where a debtor executes to a creditor a deed of certain property and retains possession under a lease from him, the deed and lease providing for a reconveyance to the tenant on his payment of the rent and the secured debt, he is estopped to deny such landlord's title in an action brought to recover the rent (Knowles v. Murphy, 107 Cal. 107, 40 Pac. 111).

Consideration for lease.—A parol promise by one in possession of land to pay rent to one out of possession who has neither title nor right of possession is void for want of consideration, and cannot be invoked as an estoppel in favor of a landlord, as against a tenant. where the lease is void as against public policy.[74] It has been held, however, on the ground that estoppels must be mutual that if the lessor has no authority to contract,[75] as where the lessor is a married woman and her lease is void,[76] or where the lease is void because executed by an infant or in his behalf,[77] the lessee is not estopped.

b. Voidable Lease. Inasmuch as the estoppel to deny title is based on an admission of title shown by the tenant in accepting or retaining possession as tenant, it follows that if the relationship of landlord and tenant was induced by fraud, duress, misrepresentation, or mistake, the tenant is not estopped to deny what he would not have admitted in the absence of fraud or mistake.[78] Especially is this true where the tenant was in possession of the land at the time he accepted Contra.— People v. Howlett, 76 N. Y. 574, holding that where a lease was void because executed in pursuance of a usurious agreement, a tenant was not estopped to dispute his landlord's title. This case is distinguished in Barnes v. Gilmore, 6 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 286, which holds that where a grantor becomes the tenant of his grantee, he cannot set up the invalidity of his deed as having been given to secure a usurious loan, the rule being different where the deed is void and where the lease is void.

E. 1066, holding that where a mortgagor, after a foreclosure sale of the property, leased the property of the foreclosure purchaser under the supposition that the lease contained a stipulation under which the property should belong to him if he made certain payments in addition to the rent, but the stipulation was omitted through the landlord's fraud, the fraud did not so relate to the character of the instrument nor the title as to prevent the lease working an estoppel.

Mistake of law.—Where both parties acted under a mutual mistake as to the law in regard to the title of the lessor, at the time of the acceptance of the lease, the lessee is not estopped. Tewksbury v. Magraff, 33 Cal. 237; Lakin v. Dolly, 53 Fed. 333.

Ignorance of the interest of a cestui que trust, the lease being made by a trustee, does not prevent the application of the estoppel. Baker v. Nall, 59 Mo. 265.

What constitutes duress.— Mere threats of injury to property without a power over it which would enable the person so threatening to carry out his threats do not in themselves constitute duress. Mineral R., etc., Co. v. Flaherty, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 236.

Lease from receiver.—Where a tenant in the lease.[79] But evidence of such fraud or duress or mistake must be introduced before the tenant can show title in himself or in a third person.[80] The fraud or mistake must be such as would justify a court of equity in setting aside the lease;[81] and the fraud must relate to the lease itself and not to prior transactions between the parties.[82]

5. Existence and Validity of Title of Landlord — a. Absence of Title. It is no objection to the estoppel to deny title that the landlord had no title at the time the relationship was created.[83] The fact that the property leased by a private person is public property does not prevent the operation of the estoppel,[84] although possession takes a lease from a receiver who in fact has no authority because of failure to give a bond, the tenant is not estopped to show want of title of the lessor. Phillips v. Smoot, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 478.

it has been held that where the lands cannot be lawfully settled on no estoppel arises.[85]

b. Validity of Title. So long as the title of the landlord is the same as it was at the time the tenancy was created, and the tenant is not disturbed in his possession, it is immaterial whether the title of the landlord was a valid one, in so far as the estoppel of the tenant to attack it is concerned.[86]

6. Actions in Which Estoppel May Be Asserted — a. In General. The estoppel may be enforced both by courts of equity and by courts of law.[87] It can be asserted ordinarily only in actions involving the use or possession of the land,[88] and not in actions in which the title itself is put in issue, such as actions of trespass to try title and for partition.[89] The estoppel cannot be urged in actions not between the landlord and tenant or those claiming under them.[90]

b. Action For Rent. The estoppel may be asserted in an action for rent,[91] whether the action be brought upon the lease or upon a note given for rent,[92] or upon a bond.[93]

c. Action For Use and Occupation. A tenant cannot dispute the landlord's title in an action for use and occupation.[94]

d. Ejectment. An action of ejectment being one merely to recover possession, it follows that a tenant in such an action is estopped to deny his landlord's title.[95] However, a tenant may show that the landlord has no greater right than that of possession where the landlord claims the title to the fee in such an action.[96]

e. Unlawful Detainer. The tenant is estopped to deny title in actions of unlawful detainer to recover possession.[97] It has been held that the estoppel Vendor who becomes tenant. — A vendor who after the conveyance has leased the lands from the vendee cannot while in possession dispute the vendee's title. Williams v. Wait, 2 S. D. 210, 49 N. W. 209, 38 Am. St. Rep. 768. This rule applies, although the deed and lease are both executed merely as security for a debt (Knowles v. Murphy, 107 Cal. 107, 40 Pac. 111), or although the conveyance from the vendor to the vendee is void (Vancleave v. Wilson, 73 Ala. 387). This estoppel does not, however, prevent the tenant from showing that the conveyance of the landlord is only intended to operate as a mortgage, or that it was made upon specified trusts (Smith v. Smith, 81 Tex. 45, 16 S. W. 637), nor is the vendor estopped, where the agreement to pay rent is expressly specified to be without prejudice to his rights pending a suit to have the conveyance set aside (Sartwell v. Young, 126 Mich. 304, 85 N. W. 729). Where the grantor refuses to deliver possession to the purchaser after the execution of a deed, and accepts an alleged lease from the latter, he is not estopped where it is merely an agreement for a kind of joint possession of the premises by the parties until their controversy is settled. Stevenson v. Campbell, 185 Ill. 527, 57 N. E. 414.

A tenant in common, in possession under his own title, is not estopped, by paying rent for the other moiety to the complainant whom he supposed had title to it, from disputing the complainant's title when sued in equity for rent and for partition. Shearer v. Winston, 33 Miss. 149. And a tenant in common is not estopped by his cotenant's attornment. Sulphine v. Dunbar, 55 Miss. 255.

Mortgagor as lessee.— The mortgagor who becomes the tenant of the purchaser at the foreclosure sale cannot deny his landlord's title (Buchanan v. Larkin, 116 Ala. 431, 22 So. 543); but if a mortgagor takes a lease from the mortgagee in possession he is not, after surrendering the possession, estopped from setting up his right to redeem (Atkinson v. Morrissy, 3 Oreg. 332).

8. Persons as to Whom Tenant Is Estopped — a. In General. While the tenant is not estopped as against a stranger,[14] he is estopped not only against his landlord but as against any other person who has succeeded to the rights of the landlord,[15] so long as such tenant holds the possession derived originally from his landlord.[16] It follows that a tenant cannot deny the title of his landlord's assignee,[17] nor of the grantee of the demised premises.[18] This estoppel, however, extends only to a denial of what has once been admitted, that is the original landlord's title, and does not preclude the necessity of the assignee or grantee showing his derivative title, nor prevent the tenant from attacking the validity of the transfer from the original landlord.[19]

b. Heirs, Executors, and Administrators. The estoppel may be asserted by the heirs of the landlord, after his death, where the tenants remain in possession.[20] So where the tenant is sued by an executor or administrator advantage may be taken by him of the tenant's estoppel to deny the title of the deceased landlord.[21] Especially is this true where the tenant has attorned to the personal representative.[22] And where the lease has been taken directly from the executor or administrator he may rely on the estoppel.[23]

c. Purchaser at Execution or Judicial Sale. The estoppel may be relied on by a purchaser of the landlord's title at a judicial sale,[24] especially where the tenant recognizes the title of the purchaser by paying rent to him.[25] So where one takes a lease from such a purchaser he cannot dispute his title.[26]

9. Duration of Estoppel — a. Termination of Landlord's Estate. The estoppel to deny title relates to the title as it existed when the tenancy commenced, and hence the estoppel does not operate to prevent the tenant showing that his landlord's title has terminated or expired since the relation arose.[27] In other words the estoppel is then at an end. This is true, however, only in a qualified sense. The estoppel is terminated in so far as the landlord is concerned, but still exists, while the tenant continues in the possession given him by the original landlord, as against the person succeeding to the landlord's title, where he is one other than the tenant himself.[28]

b. Surrender of Possession — (i) Necessity.[29] A tenant cannot deny his landlord's title until he is discharged from the estoppel arising out of his lease and possession by a yielding up of possession to his lessor.[30] A surrender is neces-

In an action for rent a tenant cannot resist payment on the ground of a purchase by him of a superior outstanding title before it no longer exists,[36] or where the tenant has been actually or constructively evicted.[37]

(II) Sufficiency. Nothing less than an actual surrender of the premises is sufficient to terminate the estoppel.[38] It is not sufficient for the tenant to merely notify the landlord before the expiration of the term that he claims as owner and will hold no longer as tenant.[39] So the mere abandonment of the premises, without notice to the landlord, where there is a subsequent reëntry under another title, is not sufficient as a surrender.[40] There must be an actual surrender and not a mere notice terminating the tenancy.[41] The mere surrender of the written lease, or an offer to surrender it, is not equivalent to a surrender of the premises.[42] A surrender, on the termination of the lease, of part of the leased premises, does not entitle the tenant to dispute the title of the landlord as to any part of the premises.[43]

(III) Effect. The surrender of possession by the tenant to the landlord terminates the estoppel.[44] After the tenancy has been thus terminated, the tenant may assert a paramount title,[45] whether acquired before the relation of landlord and tenant was entered into,[46] or during the tenancy.[47]

c. Eviction by Title Paramount. The estoppel is terminated by the eviction of the tenant by title paramount,[48] or by acts amounting to an ouster which authorize the tenant to attorn to the holder of the paramount title[49] as if actually evicted.

10. Matters as to Which Tenant Estopped — a. In General. Before surrender of possession, the tenant cannot set up an inconsistent title in himself acquired from a third person,[50] nor title in a third person.[51] He is estopped to claim that the landlord had no title,[52] or an invalid title,[53] at the time of the creation of the tenancy. He may, however, set up fraud or mistake in accepting the lease,[54] or deny that the relationship of landlord and tenant ever existed,[55] or show that the tenancy has been determined.[56] So he may show that the estoppel is at an end by reason of his surrender of the premises,[57] an actual or constructive eviction by paramount title,[58] or the termination of the landlord's estate.[59] The estoppel extends only to those facts which the tenant is deemed to have admitted by going into, or retaining, possession as a tenant of another.[60] The estoppel precludes the lessee, while in possession, from suing to compel the lessor to specifically perform his contract to convey the demised premises to the tenant.[61]

b. To Show Character and Extent of Landlord's Title — (I) Nature of Interest Immaterial. The character of the landlord's title is generally immaterial, and hence the tenant is estopped to show that his landlord is not the sole owner of the demised property,[62] that he has only a dower interest,[63] that the lessor is a mere trustee,[64] or that his only title is a tax title.[65] Where the lease is made by one as agent, without stating for whom or for what, the tenant cannot show that the agency has been revoked.[66]

(II) Denial of Title Greater Than Necessary to Support Lease. It has been held that a tenant is not estopped to deny that the landlord had no greater estate than is necessary to support the lease.[67]

(III) Denial of Title as to Part of Property. The estoppel to deny title does not extend to property owned by the landlord but not included in the tenancy;[68] but the tenant is estopped to deny the title of his landlord to a part of the leased property.[69]

c. To Interplead Landlord.[70] Except where it arises on an act of the landlord subsequent to the lease,[71] a bill of interpleader cannot be filed by a tenant against his landlord, since it is in effect a dispute of his landlord's title.[72]

d. To Deny Title at Time Tenancy Created. Inasmuch as the tenant is only estopped to deny what he has once admitted, the estoppel merely precludes the tenant from disputing the title of the landlord at the time when the lease was made and possession given, or when the relation arose.[73]

v. New York, etc., R. Co., 7 N. Y. St. 814. Adverse title.— The right of a tenant to show that the title of the landlord has expired does not permit him to show a latent defect in the line of the landlord's title, which would raise an outstanding title under which the tenant does not claim to hold, and to which he has not attorned. Howell v. Ashmore, 22 N. J. L. 261.

Independent title.—Where a landlord's title has expired or been extinguished, the tenant cannot in any proceedings defeat the title of his landlord by an independent title. The title alleged by way of defense must be connected with the title of the lessor or it must be shown that the title of the lessor has been divested by an act of his own or by descent from him. lord.[76] There is no estoppel after the landlord's title has expired, although the tenant pays rent thereafter to the landlord with knowledge thereof.[77]

(II) By Act of Landlord. The tenant is not estopped to show that the landlord conveyed his interest in the land, after the creation of the tenancy and before the commencement of the action against the tenant,[78] especially where the tenant has attorned to the purchaser.[79]

(III) By Operation of Law. A tenant may show that the title of his landlord under which he entered has passed by operation of law to a third person,[80] and that he holds under the new owner.[81]

(IV) Title Reverted to State. There is an apparent exception to the rule that the tenant is not estopped to show the termination of the landlord's title where the landlord's title has reverted to the state.[82]

11. Attornment to Third Person[1] — a. General Rule. Subject to a few exceptions to be hereafter noticed,[2] the general rule is that a tenant, without surrendering possession to his original landlord, cannot attorn to a stranger, and that such attornment is void and in no way affects the possession of the landlord.[3] In many states this rule with its exceptions is reiterated by statute.[4] In other words a tenant in possession under one title can make no valid attornment to one not in privity with that title,[5] although the attornee is the owner of the land,[6] or has other paramount title.[7]

Persons holding under tenant.— A tenant or quasi-tenant, or one who has entered under either, cannot legally attorn to a stranger. Chambers v. Pleak, 6 Dana (Ky.) 426, 32 Am. Dec. 78. After a sale of land in possession of the tenant, he becomes the tenant of the vendee, as do all others coming into possession under him; and an attornment by them to a stranger is illegal. Breeding v. Taylor, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 477.

Tenant in common.— One in possession as tenant in common, in privity and full recognition of the title of the undivided interest not owned by himself, as belonging to someone else, is bound to account to the latter, and a promise to pay rent to another, made by such tenant in possession on the assumption that said promisee had such outstanding interest, cannot be enforced without proof that he held such title; for if he had no title the attornment would be void and the promise without consideration. Fuller v. Sweet, 30 Mich. 237, 18 Am. Rep. 122.

b. Consent of Landlord. An attornment is valid where made with the landlord's consent,[8] as where he acquiesces in the payment of rent by his tenant to a third person.[9]

c. Attornment to One in Privity With Landlord's Title — (i) Validity in General. A tenant may attorn to a person in privity with his landlord's title, such as a grantee of the property,[10] or the remainder-man or reversioner.[11]

(ii) To Mortgagee After Forfeiture of Mortgage. Both by statute,[12] and at common law,[13] a tenant of a mortgagor may attorn to the mortgagee after the mortgage has become forfeited. However, in states where the title is in the mortgagor until a sale under foreclosure,[14] or until the expiration of the time to redeem after the sale,[15] the tenant cannot attorn immediately after condition broken, nor until the sale or the expiration of the time to redeem.

(iii) To Purchaser at Judicial or Execution Sale. A tenant may attorn to the purchaser of his landlord's interest at an execution sale,[16] or at a foreclosure sale.[17]

(iv) To Purchaser at Tax-Sale. It has been held that a tenant may attorn, on demand, to the holder of a paramount tax title acquired during the existence of the tenancy,[18] although there are authorities to the contrary.[19]

Without defending his possession or giving his landlord notice that it is attacked, a tenant, when proceeded against as an intruder, cannot treat himself as evicted and attorn to another. Williams v. McMichael, 64 Ga. 445.

Tenant of vendee.— The tenant of a purchaser who took possession under a bond for title could not, until the purchaser was legally evicted by the vendor, attorn to the vendor on the purchaser's failure to pay the price at maturity, without first surrendering to the purchaser. Broxton v. Ennis, 96 Ga. 792, 22 S. E. 945.

Dec. 451; Jackson v. Welden, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 283.

The burden of proving title, where the landlord consents to an attornment, is on the landlord, as if the action were against a stranger holding adversely. Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 123, 15 Am. Dec. 451.

It is not sufficient for the tenant to show that the landlord has acknowledged by parol that the title was in another. Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 123, 15 Am. Dec. 451.

But in Alabama the attornment by a tenant to the purchaser at the foreclosure sale of a mortgage executed by his landlord prior to the execution of the lease is no defense in an action by the landlord against the tenant for unlawful detainer. Davis v. Pou, 108 Ala. 443, 19 So. 362; Pugh v. Davis, 103 Ala. 316, 18 So. 8, 49 Am. St. Rep. 30.

In Missouri the tenant may not only attorn to a purchaser under foreclosure, without the landlord's consent, but must attorn on exhibition of the purchaser's deed; and if after such attornment the landlord enter the premises without the purchaser's consent he is guilty of forcible entry and detainer. Holden Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Wann, 43 Mo. App. 640. And under a statute expressly providing that a tenant may attorn to a purchaser at a sale under a deed of trust, the lessee of a purchaser at a sale under a second deed of trust may lawfully attorn to the purchaser at a subsequent sale under the prior deed of trust. Freeman v. Moffitt, 119 Mo. 280, 25 S. W. 87. But the statute refers only to a deed of trust given by the landlord or one claiming under him. Pierce v. Rollins, 60 Mo. App. 497.

18. Jenkinson v. Winans, 109 Mich. 524, 67 N. W. 549.

Voidable tax deed.— A tenant of an owner of the fee-simple title to real estate may attorn to the holder of a tax deed regular on its face, but voidable, for the reason that illegal taxes were included in the amount of the expressed consideration stated therein. Sheaff v. Husted, 60 Kan. 770, 57 Pac. 976.

19. See Fowler v. Simpson, 79 Tex. 611, 15 S. W. 682, 23 Am. St. Rep. 370, holding that, conceding that the tenant may attorn to the holder of title under a tax-sale, that he cannot attorn to the holder of a deed made by a tax-collector.

d. After Judicial Determination as to Title. Where a judgment of eviction has been obtained,[20] even though there has been no actual eviction,[21] the tenant may attorn to the paramount title while the judgment is in force.[22] This rule does not apply, however, where the lease is taken after the judgment.[23]

e. Effect — (i) Void Attornment. Although there are some authorities which seem to hold that where the attornment is void as to the original landlord, the tenant is not estopped as against the person to whom he has attorned,[24] the better rule would seem to be that the estoppel extends to both landlords on the ground that, although the attornment is void as between the original landlord and tenant, it is not necessarily void between the tenant and the person to whom he attorned, in the absence of fraud or mistake as to the title of the attornee.[25]

(ii) Fraud or Mistake. If a tenant in possession under one landlord attorns to another through mistake or misapprehension of the facts, or misrepresentations as to the title, he is not estopped to deny the title of the landlord to whom he has attorned.[26]

In New York, under a statute providing that an attornment by a tenant to a stranger is void, it is held that a purchaser at a tax-sale is a stranger within the statute and not in privity with the landlord's title. Notice to landlord of suit.— A tenant who fails to comply with the statutory requirement to notify his landlord of a suit in ejectment will not be permitted, after judgment against himself therein, to attorn to plaintiff. Wheelock v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 309; Love v. Emerson, 48 Ill. 160.

Necessity for appeal.— After judgment for the possession of the premises, the tenant may attorn without appealing from the judgment. Pacific Express Co. v. Haven, 41 La. Ann. 811, 6 So. 650.

Effect of reversal of judgment.— The attornment remains valid, although the judgment is reversed on appeal, if not suspended by supersedeas; but if the conveyance made to the attornee is set aside, the original landlord will be entitled to the money paid by the tenant to the attornee for rent. McMurtry v. Adams, 3 Bush (Ky.) 70.

Whether the attornment was in good faith is a question for the jury, where, after a decree showing the title not to be in the lessor, but without a decree of ouster, the lessee attorned to the paramount title under threat of dispossession. IV. Terms For Years.[28]

A. Nature and Extent — 1. Nature.[29] Estates for years embrace all terms limited to endure for a definite and ascertained period, however short or long this period may be; that is to say, they embrace terms for a fixed number of weeks or months, or for a single year, as well as for any definite number of years, however great.[30] At common law terms for years, however long, are but chattel interests and not real property.[31]

2. Creation and Validity.[32] At common law a term for years, however long, being only a chattel interest, might be created by mere oral agreement;[33] but since the enactment of the statutes of frauds[34] all leases for a term exceeding a certain number of years, usually three, are required to be reduced to writing and signed by the parties; otherwise an estate for years is not created.[35] If an intention to grant a term for years is apparent, no set form is necessary to create the estate.[36] To create an estate for years the lease must be certain or capable of being made certain as to the beginning, duration, and termination of the term.[37] A lease for a term to commence in futuro is valid.[38]

33. Moring v. Ward, 50 N. C. 272, holding, however, that entry was required to execute the contract and vest an estate as a term for years.

3. Commencement, Continuance, and Termination[39] — a. Commencement. The time of commencement of the term depends primarily upon the terms of the lease, and secondarily upon the circumstances surrounding the transaction.[40]

C. 272; Berridge v. Glassey, 112 Pa. St. 442, 455, 3 Atl. 583, 56 Am. Rep. 322 (holding that a grant to a man and his heirs for a term of years, reserving rent, is a lease for the term). See also supra, II, A, 2. See, however, Duxbury v. Sandiford, 78 L. T. Rep. N. S. 230, holding that there must be words of demise.

37. Gwynne v. Mainstone, 3 C. & P. 302, 14 E. C. L. 579 (holding that a lease providing that the lessee shall pay certain specified rents, varying in amount, at the end of every three years up to a specified date, and that from and after that date "he shall pay the clear annual rent of 9*l.* till the end of the lease," but which does not mention any time at which the lease is to determine, is good only for the time previous to the date at which the 9*l.* is to commence); Reeve v. Thompson, 14 Ont. 499. And see Collier v. Hyatt, 110 Ga. 317, 35 S. E. 271. See also Specific Performance.

Commencement or termination dependent on collateral event.— A lease of a room in a building in process of erection for a certain term from the completion of the building is a valid lease in præsenti for a term to commence in futuro; and the necessary element of certainty in the commencement of the term is satisfied by the completion of the building and the occupancy of the room and payment of rent at the stipulated rate from an agreed time by the lessee (Hammond v. Barton, 93 Wis. 183, 67 N. W. 412 [following Colclough v. Carpeles, 89 Wis. 239, 61 N. W. 836]); and the fact that there was something unsatisfactory about the manner of completion of the building, and something to be fixed by the lessor, did not affect the validity of the lease (Hammond v. Barton, supra). It is not essential that the precise date of termination be predetermined; the duration of the tenancy may be fixed by such collateral and extraneous circumstances as the agreement itself provides. Harley v. O'Donnell, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 56. See, however, Reeve v. Thompson, 14 Ont. 499, holding that a lease for a term to continue during the occupation of the premises by a third person then in possession as a tenant from year to year does not create a term for years, owing to the uncertainty of the termination thereof.

Options as to continuance or termination of tenancy.— A lease for eight years provided that all buildings which the lessee should erect should be appraised at the end of the term, and the appraised value be paid by the lessor, or that the lessor might allow the lessee to retain the premises until said sum was realized by the lessee at the rent stipulated, or might, at any time after part of the sum had been liquidated, pay the balance and resume possession. It was held that the provision concerning the holding after the expiration of eight years created a tenancy for years, there being sufficient certainty as to the beginning, continuance, and termination of the term. Flagg v. Dow, 99 Mass. 18. A lease for seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years, as the lessee shall think proper, is a good lease for seven years, whatever it may be for the fourteen or twenty-one years. Ferguson v. Cornish, 2 Burr. 1032, 3 T. R. 463 note. A lease made in 1785 for three, six, or nine years, determinable in 1788, 1791, 1794, is a lease for nine years, determinable at the end of three or six years by either of the parties on giving reasonable notice to quit. Goodright v. Richardson, 3 T. R. 462.

39. Certainty as to commencement, continuance, and duration of term as essential to creation of term for years see supra, IV, A, 2.

40. Carmichael v. Brown, 97 Ga. 486, 25 S. E. 357 (holding that a lease of all the "pine timber" on a given acre of land, "for the purpose of manufacturing spirits of turpentine," etc., "for the full term of three years from the time boxes are cut," does not necessarily mean that the term of the lease will expire at the end of three years from the date the first trees are boxed, the words "from the time boxes are cut" being ambiguous, and requiring extraneous evidence in explanation

Accordingly the lease may as to its commencement operate prospectively[41] or retrospectively[42] from the execution of the lease, according to the intention of the parties and the language employed by them. If the lease is "from" a certain day, the word "from" is inclusive[43] or exclusive[44] according to the context and subject-matter; and the court will construe the lease so as to effectuate the intention of the parties.[45] A lease from a blank date in a certain year runs from the last day of the year specified.[46] If the landlord at different times grants two leases of the same premises to different persons, and the terms overlap, the second lease takes effect on the expiration of the first for as many years as then remain of the second term.[47]

b. Continuance and Termination.[48] The duration of a term, as in the case of its commencement, is governed primarily by the provisions of the lease;[49] but if the duration is not definitely expressed in the lease resort may be had to collateral or extrinsic circumstances.[50] Thus where a lease is ambiguous as to the length of the term, the construction placed upon it by the acts of the parties will, if in itself admissible, be adopted as the true intent thereof.[51] The duration of the term may be ascertained by reference to the covenant as to rent,[52] or to the amount of rent paid thereunder.[53] A lease for a year is not converted into a tenancy from month to month by the fact that receipts for rent paid thereunder recite that the letting is for one month only.[54] Leases of doubtful duration must be construed favorably to the tenant.[55] Thus if it is left doubtful on which of two days the lease is to terminate, the lessee may elect on which of the two days it shall end.[56] Where a lease is to run for one or more years "from" a certain day, the corresponding day in the year in which the lease terminates is to be excluded in computing the duration of the term,[57] in the absence of custom to the contrary.[58] So in the absence of custom to the contrary[59] a lease "to" a certain day ends with the expiration of that day.[60] But it has been held that a lease "to end on" a certain day continues till noon of that day.[61] It has been provided by statute that agreements for the occupation of lands or tenements in New York city which do not particularly specify the duration of the occupation shall extend to the first day of May next after possession under the agreement commences.[62] Obvious mistakes of the parties in computing the term or specifying the day of termination will be disregarded by the court.[63] A lease for a certain term which gives the lessor[64] or the lessee[65] an option to continue the tenancy for an additional term terminates with the expiration of the term first mentioned unless the option is

b. Right of Assignee. In the absence of statutory or contractual restriction, the assignee of a leasehold may assign the same.[77] A covenant on the part of the lessee not to assign the lease without the lessor's consent does not as a rule bind the lessee's assignee,[78] and this is especially true with reference to persons in whom the lessee's estate has become vested by operation of law.[79] If the lessor consents to an assignment by the lessee,[80] or if he waives the lessee's breach of condition against assigning,[81] the covenant is extinguished, in the absence of statute to the contrary,[82] and the assignee is accordingly at liberty to assign the lease. If, however, the covenant is so worded as to bind the lessee's assigns, then the assignee is precluded from assigning without the lessor's consent;[83] and the same is true

Where a lease provided that the lessee should not underlet without the lessor's consent in writing, and that the premises were to be used for the sale of certain articles only, except by the written assent of the lessor, the lessor's permission to use the premises for the sale of certain other articles was not a consent that the lessee might underlet, so long as the premises were not used for any of the purposes prohibited in the letter. Requisites and sufficiency of writing.— Written notice of termination of the tenancy given by the lessor to an assignee of the lease is a sufficient written assent to the assignment, within Mo. Rev. But the fact that a lessor received from the lessee the rent stipulated for in a lease cannot be construed as a waiver of any right of objection to a subletting of the demised premises without the consent of the lessor, when the lease especially provides that such consent must be obtained in writing. Grounds for refusing consent.— Where there is a covenant not to sublet without consent, but such consent must not be withheld except on reasonable objection, and a heavy rent is reserved by the lease, very strong ground for refusing the consent must be shown, as the refusal throws a heavy burden of rent on the lessees. Sheppard v. Hongkong, etc., Banking Corp., 20 Wkly. Rep. 459. So where a lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to assign without license, and the lessor covenanted not to withhold his license to assign unreasonably or vexatiously, it was unreasonable and vexatious in the lessor to refuse his license to assign to a person wholly unobjectionable, his object in refusing the license being avowedly his wish to get possession of the premises. In Georgia, by Civ. Code (1895), § 3115, a tenant for a term less than five years has only a usufruct in the land, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, and he cannot convey it by assignment or sublease except by the landlord's consent. Bass v. West, 110 Ga. 698, 36 S. E. 244; Willingham v. Faircloth, 52 Ga. 126; Sealy v. Kuttner, 41 Ga. 594; McBurney v. McIntyre, 38 Ga. 261.

In Kansas by Gen. St. (1905) § 4061, if the term does not exceed two years, the tenant cannot assign or transfer his term or interest without the landlord's written assent. Gano v. Prindle, 6 Kan. App. 851, 50 Pac. 110.

In Kentucky by St. (1903) § 2292, if the term is for less than two years the lessee cannot assign or transfer his term or interest without the lessor's written consent. If the term fixed by the lease is for two years or more it may be assigned. Grizzle v. Pennington, 14 Bush (Ky.) 115; Pierce v. Meadows, 86 S. W. 1127, 27 Ky. L. In Missouri, by Rev. St. (1899) § 4107, if the term does not exceed two years the tenant cannot assign or transfer his term or interest without the landlord's written assent. A lease for one year, with a promise that after that time it may be ended by six months' notice from either party, is within the statute, and cannot be assigned without the lessor's consent (B. In Texas, by Rev. St. (1895) art. 3250, the tenant cannot "rent or lease" the premises without the landlord's consent. This statute precludes subleases (Forrest v. Durnell, 86 Tex. 647, 26 S. New York.— Chautauqua Assembly v. Alling, 46 Hun 582; Jackson v. Groat, 7 Cow. 285, holding that a covenant by a lessor that if the lessee or his assigns shall be minded to sell or dispose of their interest they may do so, first giving preëmption to the lessor and paying one tenth of the purchase-money to him, provided that if this be not done, the lease shall be forfeited, is valid.

(II) Persons Entitled to Benefit of Restriction. Restrictions against assignment or subleases, whether imposed by statute or by the terms of the lease, are intended for the benefit of the lessor[7] and his assigns,[8] and if neither of these object to a breach of the restriction no one else may do so.[9] One to whom the term has been assigned in breach of the restriction cannot set up the breach in defense of an action brought against him by the lessor on the lease,[10] or in defense of an action brought against him by the lessee on obligations incident to the assignment;[11] nor can a sublessee of the assignee set up the breach in defense of an action brought against him by the assignee on the sublease.[12]

(III) What Constitutes Breach of Restriction— (A) In General. The question of what acts amount to an assignment[13] or a sublease,[14] within the meaning of restrictions against assigning or subletting, is considered in another connection. assignment does not constitute a breach of restriction against assigning.[16] A joint covenant by two lessees not to assign the term is not broken by an assignment, by one of the lessees, of his undivided interest therein;[17] and it has been held that a covenant against underletting the premises is not broken by an underletting of a part thereof.[18] A covenant not to sublet for longer than a year is broken by subletting for less than a year with the privilege of renewal where the exercise of the privilege would extend the sublease beyond a year;[19] but such a covenant is not violated by giving, during the life of a sublease for a year to one person, a second sublease for a year to another person to commence on expiration of the first sublease.[20] A covenant not to part with the premises is broken by an under-lease;[21] but a covenant not to part with the premises or the lease is not broken by a deposit of the lease as security;[22] nor is a covenant not to part with the lease or any estate or interest therein broken by granting a license to conduct a business on the premises in connection with the lessee's business.[23] However, a proviso that the lessee shall do no act whereby the premises shall become vested in another precludes a subletting of the premises.[24] A covenant not to let, set, or demise the premises, or any part, for all or any part of the term, without consent, restrains assignment.[25] A condition against subletting[26] or assignment[27] is not broken where the tenant takes another into partnership with him and lets such person into joint possession of the premises. Nor is such a condition in a lease to a partnership broken by a change in the firm by the admission or withdrawal of partners,[28] or by a dissolution of the firm and a transfer of the possession to one of the partners.[29] But the organization of a corporation by the partnership and a transfer of the lease to such corporation is a breach.[30]

In a lease covenanting that the tenant shall not "let or assign over" the said premises, or any part thereof, without license of the lessor in writing, the word "over" is annexed to the word "assign," and the covenant necessarily means that if the lessee part with the premises, even for a part of the term, his lease should be vacated. (B) Involuntary Alienation or Transfer by Operation of Law. A restriction against transfer is not as a general rule regarded as broken by an involuntary alienation or transfer by operation of law.[31] Hence unless expressly so provided by the lease[32] a transfer of the leasehold upon execution[33] or foreclosure[34] sale, or in insolvency[35] or bankruptcy proceedings,[36] or a confession of judgment,[37] does not amount to a breach of a restriction against assigning or subletting unless it appear that the proceedings were voluntary and collusive on the part of the tenant with a view to defraud the landlord of his rights.[38]

(IV) Waiver and Estoppel as to Breach of Restriction.[39] The lessor may waive a breach of the restriction against assignment or subletting, whether imposed by statute or by the terms of the lease,[40] in which event the case stands as if no restriction had been imposed or as if the lessor had given his consent to the assignment or underletting.[41] If the lessor, with notice of a breach of the

2. What Constitutes Assignment, Sublease, or Mortgage — a. What Constitutes Assignment.[54] An assignment of a term for years occurs where the lessee transfers his entire interest therein without retaining any reversionary interest.[55] If an instrument so transfers the lessee's interest, it constitutes an assignment regardless of its character and form.[56] Thus if the lessee makes an assignment of his property, including the term, for the benefit of his creditors, it constitutes a

b. What Constitutes Sublease.[62] A sublease occurs where a lessee underlets the premises or a part thereof to a third person for a period less than the lessee's term.[63] A mere permissive use of land which amounts to nothing more than a license is not a breach of a restriction against underletting;[64] nor is such a restriction violated by the lessee's putting a person in possession as his servant or agent.[65]

c. Assignment and Sublease Distinguished. There is a well defined distinction between the assignment of a term for years and a sublease or underletting.[66] Accordingly a restriction in a lease against assigning is not violated by an underletting,[67] and a restriction against underletting is not violated by an assignment.[68]

Reservation of rent.— The fact that a sublease of the entire term reserves a new rent to the original lessee does not render it a sublease (Sexton v. Chicago Storage Co., 129 Ill. 318, 21 N. And see Townsend v. Read, 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 285), or as between the parties to the orignal lease (Drake v. Lacoe, 157 Pa. St. 17, 27 Atl. 538).

Provision for reëntry by original lessee for breach of condition.— The fact that a sub-transfer.[72] And as between the parties to the original lease,[73] or as between the lessee and his transferee, if the instrument is in form a sublease it will operate as such,[74] although the lessee parts with the entire term. The distinction between an assignment and a sublease depends not upon the extent of the premises transferred but upon the quantity of interest which passes. When therefore a lessee of property for a term of years demises a part of it to another for the whole of his term, it is not an underlease but an assignment pro tanto.[75]

d. What Constitutes Mortgage.[76] A mortgage of the term may consist in an lease for the entire term authorizes the original lessee to reënter before the expiration of the term on breach of condition by the sublessee does not render it a sublease (Sexton v. Chicago Storage Co., 129 Ill. 318, 21 N. E. 920, 16 Am. St. Rep. 274 [reversing 30 Ill. App. 95]; Craig v. Summers, 47 Minn. 189, 49 N. W. 742, 15 L. R. A. 236; Stewart v. Long Island R. Co., 102 N. Y. 601, 8 N. E. 200, 55 Am. Provision for surrender of term to original lessee on expiration of term.—Although a sublease for the entire term provides for surrender to the original lessee on the expiration of the term, it is an assignment (Sexton v. Chicago Storage Co., 129 Ill. 318, 21 N. E. 920, 16 Am. St. Rep. 274 [reversing 30 Ill. App. 95.]; Stewart v. Long Island R. Co., 102 N. Y. 601, 8 N. E. 200, 55 Am. Rep. 844, where the sublease was for a period exceeding the original term. Contra, Collamer v. Kelley, 12 Iowa 319; Dunlap v. Bullard, 131 Mass. 161; Hicks v. Martin, 25 Mo. App. 359. And see Koppel v. Tilyou, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 910, 31 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 185), except as between the parties to the sublease (Collins v. Hasbrouck, 56 N. Y. 157, 15 Am. Rep. 407). Where, however, the provision is for surrender "on the last day" of the sublessee's term (Post v. Kearney, 2 N. Y. 394, 51 Am. Dec. 303 [affirming 1 Sandf. 105]), or on the expiration of the term or other sooner determination of the sublease (Ganson v. Tifft, 81 N. Y. 48), the sublease is not an assignment, since the entire original term is not parted with.

The reservation of a day generally, without stating it to be the last day of the term, is insufficient to give the instrument the character of a sublease. Jameson v. London, etc., Loan, etc., Co., 27 Can. Sup. Ct. 435 [reversing 23 Ont. App. 602].

An estate to arise in futuro cannot be tacked on to the estate of a lessee who has assigned his whole term, so as to create a reversion in him and establish the relation of landlord and tenant between him and the person to whom he has assigned his term, so far as strictly reversionary rights are concerned, or prevent that relation from existing between such person and the original landlord. It has been held, however, that where there is a right of entry given for underletting, if a person is found in the premises appearing as the tenant, it is prima facie evidence of an underletting sufficient to call upon defendant to show in what character such person was in possession, as tenant or as servant to the lessee. Assignee or under-tenant — Question for jury. — If a person comes in as an under-tenant before any lease was granted to the person of whom he took the premises, and that person afterward takes a lease, and if there is no evidence that he knew of the lease, it will be for the jury to say whether he is an under-tenant and not an assignee of the lease, although he paid to the superior landlord the rent reserved in the lease. an assignment,[85] unless the lease is under seal.[86] Where a lease is held at a full or substantial rent, and contains onerous covenants on the part of the lessee, an assignment to one who subjects himself to the performance of the covenants is not voluntary.[87] In some states mortgages of leaseholds depend wholly upon statutes for their validity as liens.[88]

(II) Delivery and Acceptance. To become effectual, an assignment of a leasehold must be delivered[89] and accepted;[90] but where a mortgage is made of leasehold premises, it is not necessary to deliver the lease itself to the mortgagee.[91]

description must be certain, or else the conveyance is not effectual[96] for that purpose.

b. Validity.[97] If a lease is invalid, an assignment of the term[98] or a sublease[99] is also ineffectual. An assignment of a lease which has terminated is inoperative.[1] An assignment is not vitiated by the assignee's failure to enter into possession of the premises,[2] or by the fact that it is to take effect in futuro.[3] If the assignee intends to use the premises for an immoral purpose and the lessee is aware of that fact the assignment is void.[4] An assignment or sublease may be avoided for fraud.[5]

4. Construction and Operation of Assignments — a. In General.[6] The assignment of a lease creates the relation of landlord and tenant between the assignee and the lessor,[7] and the rights and liabilities of those parties are such as are incident to that relation.[8] The rights of an assignee are superior to those of a person

Suppl. 886, holding that an attempt by an assignee to rescind one month after taking possession for fraudulent representations as to the length of the term was made within a reasonable time after discovering the fraud, although he was informed of the falsity of the representations soon after taking possession, if on subsequent inquiry he was told by the assignor that the representations were true, and the lease itself was not delivered to him. And see Burlock v. Cook, 20 Ill. App. 154. Rosenbaum v. Gunter, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 203. And it is no ground for the rescission of an assignment of a lease that the pendency of an action for forcible entry and detainer, brought against three of the common employees of the assignors not residing on the land, by one who claimed a superior title, was concealed from the assignee, as the assignors were not parties to the action, which was possessory in its character and did not involve title, and was not therefore concluded, although they assisted in the defense of the action. claiming under a prior contract by the lessor to assign the term.[9] The relation of landlord and tenant does not exist as between different persons to whom the lessee severally assigns different parts of the premises.[10]

b. Between Lessor and Assignor. An assignment of the term and the acceptance of the assignee as tenant discharges the lessee from all obligations arising from privity of estate, but not from those arising from privity of contract,[11] notwithstanding the assignee may have become liable by privity of estate,[12] unless there is an agreement by which a new tenancy is created.[13] The acceptance of the assignee is not in general regarded as a surrender.[14] The assignee is entitled to possession of the premises as against a receiver appointed for his assignor after the lessor's assent to the assignment.[15]

c. Between Lessor and Assignee — (I) In General. In the absence of agreement to the contrary,[16] the assignee of a lease has the same privileges that were secured to the assignor.[17] He is not, however, entitled to the benefit of other contracts outside the lease.[18] The right to the benefits of covenants of the lessor, running with the land, passes to the assignee upon assignment of the lease,[19] and the absence of a contrary agreement.[22] In case there has been an absolute assignment accepted by the landlord, the assignee need not have taken possession.[23] The rules governing the liability of an assignee apply only where the party to be charged is an assignee of the whole term,[24] or where he occupies such a position to the leasehold estate that equity would compel him to take an assignment.[25] Assignees, although in unequal proportions, of the whole of the demised premises are jointly and severally liable on all covenants and obligations of the assignors,[26] except perhaps the payment of rent.[27] The assignee is not bound at law by personal covenants of the lessee,[28] but he may be held liable in equity where he takes with notice,[29] and he is bound to take notice of the terms of the lease.[30]

(II) Breaches Prior to Assignment. The assignee is not liable for breaches occurring prior to the assignment,[31] in the absence of an agreement to the contrary.[32]

(III) Termination of Liability. The assignee cannot release himself from liability by a mere abandonment of the premises,[33] nor by a sublease;[34] but he may by an assignment,[35] although the assignment is to an irresponsible party,[36] without

Sufficiency of assignment.—A contract of even date with the assignment of a lease of land by the original lessee, by which the assignee agrees to make improvements on the premises, to be paid for by the lessee, and to reassign the lease to him, on such payment being made in full, does not amount to a present reassignment, so as to relieve the assignee of liability on the covenants of the lease. notice to the lessor[37] or for the purpose of avoiding the obligation of the lease,[38] unless the assignee has entered into privity of contract as well as of estate with the lessor.[39] Where an assignment has been taken in trust the privity of estate is dissolved where the assignee has parted with his beneficial interest and has yielded possession to the beneficial owner, and he is no longer liable upon the covenants of the lease.[40] The liability for breaches accruing while the assignee is in privity of estate continues after such privity is terminated by assignment.[41]

(iv) Assignment Against Restriction. A covenant against assignment may be waived,[42] and if waived the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the lessor and the assignee.[43] A waiver of the forfeiture attendant upon a breach

Sufficiency of agreement.—An assignment reciting that it is made in consideration "of the assumption by the assignee of all the obligations and liabilities of the assignor" is sufficient (Springer v. De Wolf, 194 Ill. 218, 62 N. E. 542, 88 Am. St. Rep. 155, 56 L. R. A. 465 [affirming 93 Ill. Co., 202 Ill. 17, 66 N. E. 850 [affirming 102 Ill. App. 294). A mere recital that the assignment is subject to the covenants and conditions of the original lease is not sufficient. Dassori v. Zarek, 71 N. Y. App. Div. 538, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 841.

Consideration.—The lessor's assent to an assignment of the lease is a sufficient consideration for covenants assumed by the assignee where such assent is essential to the validity of the assignment. Lindsley v. Joseph Schnaide Brewing Co., 59 Mo. App. 271.

Primary and secondary liability.—Where there have been several successive assignments, each one of which creates a privity of contract between the assignee and the lessor, the last grantee is bound primarily for the performance of the conditions while the lessee and the other assignees are each secondarily liable. See also Jackson v. Brownson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 227, 5 Am. Dec. 258.

After transfer of reversion.—The fact that the purchaser of the reversion has not waived a breach by the lessee of a covenant against assignments will not prevent the original lessor from waiving such breach and thereby continuing liable under his personal covenants. Carpenter v. Pocasset Mfg. Co., 180 Mass. 130, 61 N. E. 816.

of the covenant is not, however, of necessity a consent to the assignment.[44] Notwithstanding a covenant not to assign, an assignment in breach thereof passes the estate;[45] for example the assignee takes such title as will support ejectment.[46] And while holding under the assignment, the assignee cannot set up its irregularity in an action on the lease.[47] In a like manner an assignment over terminates liabilities of the assignee resting upon privity of estate, although the lease contains a covenant against assignment.[48] Where the landlord has not waived a breach of a covenant against assignment, the assignee is liable to the lessee for rent.[49]

d. Between Assignor and Assignee.[50] While it has been held by some authorities that there are no covenants implied in an assignment of a lease,[51] it would seem the better rule that unless there is a stipulation to the contrary there is an implied undertaking to make out the lessor's title to the demised premises,[52] and also the assignor's title to the lease itself.[53] Apart from any question of implied covenants, it is competent for the parties to introduce into the assignment any covenant or stipulation which they have agreed upon.[54] Where an assignee covenants to perform all the covenants in the original lease, he is liable to the lessee

54. Wetzell v. Richcreek, 53 Ohio St. 62, 40 N. E. 1004.

Covenants of warranty and indemnity.—A covenant that the assignor has good and lawful right to bargain and transfer the premises, in connection with a clause granting the right to have and to hold the premises in as ample a manner, to all intents and purposes, as the assignor might or could hold the same, is a qualified covenant limited to the acts of the assignor and does not amount to a warranty of the landlord's title. Knickerbocker v. Killmore, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 106. A covenant that the premises are free from outstanding leases will not be regarded as broken by the existence of leases not considered by the parties as being within the covenant. Pease v. Christ, 31 N. Y. 141. An agreement that the assignor will refund any charge incurred by the assignee by reason of the assignment, includes an increased rent which the assignee is compelled to pay under a new lease taken from the owner after the owner has recovered against the assignee in ejectment. Wray v. Lemon, 81* Pa. St. 273. Under a covenant to indemnify against all claims in respect to the covenants of the lease, costs properly incurred in reasonably defending an action brought for a breach of one of the covenants are recoverable as damages. Murrell v. Fysh, Cab. & E. 80.

Covenant of seizin and peaceable enjoyment.—A stipulation in a collateral agreement that the lease is in full force and effect at the time of its assignment and delivery to the assignee, and a guaranty to him of "the rights and title of said lease," amounts to an express covenant of the assignor's title to the term demised, and for in the same manner as the lessee is liable to the original lessor,[55] and a covenant by the assignee to assume the lessee's liabilities may be enforced by the lessor.[56] An assignee for valuable consideration and without notice takes free from collateral agreements by his assignors.[57] The assignee is liable to the lessee for breach of covenants running with the land,[58] although there has been an intermediate assignment;[59] and the lessee is also liable in the nature of a surety as between himself and the assignee for the performance of the same covenants.[60] A restrictive covenant in an assignment of a lease may be enforced by the covenantee against persons with constructive notice, although he has no reversion.[61] Where the lessor has waived a forfeiture, the assignee cannot assert it in order to relieve himself from liability to his assignor.[62] its quiet enjoyment by the assignee. Wetzell v. Richcreek, 53 Ohio St. 62, 40 N. E. 1004.

Agreement to refund purchase-money.—An agreement to refund a portion of a sum paid for the lessee's improvements if the lessor exercises the power of determining the lease in accordance with its terms, and if the assignee then left the premises, justifies a recovery of such sum, where the assignee does not leave the premises, although the lease is terminated, but a new lease is granted to a third person with whom the assignee continues to reside. Rideout v. Lucas, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 738.

Collateral undertaking.— An instrument of guaranty executed by the lessees and delivered to the assignee contemporaneously with the delivery of the assigned lease has been held to become a part of the contract. Wetzell v. Richcreek, 53 Ohio St. 62, 40 N. E. 1004. An assignee who at the time of the assignment orally agrees to hold part of the premises in trust for the assignor, although the deed of assignment does not mention the agreement, will be enjoined from ejecting the assignor from the part covered by the trust agreement. Booth v. Turle, L. R. 16 Eq. 182, 21 Wkly. Rep. 72. Where the assignee executed an assignment absolute in terms and gave a separate writing to surrender possession on a future day, and the assignee at the same time contracted in writing to pay a sum of money on a day before the time of such stipulated surrender, it was held that on the refusal of the assignor to surrender according to the contract the assignee might maintain ejectment for the premises without having made such payment. Strong v. Garfield, 10 Vt. 497.

Additional payment on securing extension. —An agreement by the assignee to pay the assignor an additional sum if, after the expiration of the lease a new one for five years was obtained, does not contemplate that the payment of the additional sum should depend upon the obtaining of one lease for five years, but on defendant's securing the right to occupy the premises for that time. The agreement, however, contemplates a new lease on the same terms as the existing lease and the assignee is not liable for the additional payment where he was allowed to occupy the premises for the five years but had to pay an increased rental part of the time. Right to indemnity.— In a suit by an assignor of a lease claiming from his assignee indemnity in respect of breaches of the covenants in the lease, the court will direct merely payment on account of breaches of covenant already committed, and will not make a general declaration of the assignor's right to indemnity, giving liberty to apply from time to time in case of future breach. 5. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF SUBLEASES — a. Between Lessor and Sublessee. Subtenants are charged with notice of the terms of the lease,[63] and are bound by its conditions.[64] There is, however, no privity of contract between the landlord and a subtenant.[65] Hence under-tenants are not liable to the original lessor on covenants running with the land.[66] In equity, however, the landlord has the same remedy upon covenants relating to the use of the property against a subtenant as against any other purchaser with notice.[67] Where after a surrender of the lease by the tenant a subtenant continues in possession and attorns to the landlord, he becomes the tenant of the landlord.[68] The landlord is not liable for the acts of the tenant in subletting unless he has represented him in the transaction.[69]

b. Between Lessee and Sublessee. After subletting the tenant has no right of possession during the life of the sublease.[70] A covenant in a sublease to perform the conditions of the lease is as binding upon the lessee as if the covenants were repeated in the sublease.[71] The tenant is liable to the subtenant in case of fraud.[72]

c. Sublease Against Restriction. A subtenant under a tenant who has covenanted not to sublet,[74] or where by statute subletting is expressly prohibited without consent of the landlord,[75] has in the absence of a waiver of the covenant or the statute no rights as against the lessor.[76] After a waiver of a restriction, the subtenant has a right to protect his possession against intruders.[77]

6. Construction and Operation of Mortgage — a. In General. The mortgagee of a leasehold takes it subject to all the conditions and covenants of the lease,[78] and upon the termination[79] or forfeiture[80] of the lease, the mortgage so far as it affects the reversion falls with it. The rights of an equitable mortgagee are superior to those of a subsequent assignee with notice.[81] The assignment of an original lease to a sublessee does not merge the original leasehold in the subleasehold in favor of a prior mortgagee of the latter so as to enlarge the estate subject to the mortgage.[82] But if the sublease names a higher rent than that named in the original lease, such assignment discharges the mortgagee from paying the higher rent as against one to whom the sublessee afterward assigned the original lease.[83]

covenants in the lease, although he has not taken possession.[84] Where, however, the equitable theory that a mortgage does not operate to pass the legal estate prevails, it has been held that the mortgagee is not so liable,[85] unless he has taken possession.[86] An equitable mortgage by deposit of the lease does not impose liability upon its covenants.[87] A mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of covenants running with the land,[88] although it has been held that the lessee and not the mortgagee is the real party in interest entitled to sue for a breach of the lease.[89]

e. Enforcement. The mortgage of a lease being regarded as a chattel mortgage, the mortgagee has the right to take possession upon default;[95] and after taking such possession he is accountable to the mortgagor for the rents and profits,[96] his duty being to exercise such care and diligence in respect to the property as a provident owner would exercise.[97] The mortgagee cannot, however, sell the lease at private sale.[98] A purchaser at foreclosure becomes an assignee of the lease.[99] The mortgagee cannot maintain covenant against the mortgagor where the mortgage contains no personal covenant for the repayment of the debt.[1] The mortgagor may be compelled to pay an occupation rent to the mortgagee while he remains in possession pending foreclosure, in case it is shown that the mortgagee has scanty security and the mortgagor is insolvent.[2]

cannot transfer a good title the vendees may refuse to perform and recover the money paid in part fulfilment or as security for performance.[7] Where the lease contains a restriction against alienation, a vendor is bound to obtain the lessor's consent to the assignment.[8] One who enters into an agreement for an under-lease and takes possession, there being no agreement as to covenants, is bound to accept a lease with unusual covenants contained in the original lease,[9] unless there has been a representation that there are no such covenants.[10] An agreement to take an assignment of a lease does not impose an obligation to accept a lease containing a covenant on the part of the assignee to perform the covenants and agreement of the assignor.[11] Unless explicitly made so in terms, time will not be regarded as of the essence of a contract of purchase of a leasehold.[12] Where in the absence of fraud the lessee grants an under-lease for a longer time than that of the lease, the under-lessee is not entitled to compensation in the absence of an express contract.[13]

C. Extensions, Renewals, and Options to Purchase and Sell — 1. Nature of Right to Renew in General. But see Sanborn v. Cree, 3 Colo. 149, holding that in an action on a note given in consideration of the assignment of a lease without warranty, the assignee cannot set up a defect of title; he stands like a purchaser under a quitclaim deed.

An agreement to take an assignment "without requiring the lessor's title" prevents the purchaser from inquiring into the title of the party granting the leases, and compels an acceptance of them, although granted under a void power. rules of contract law.[15] The intention of the parties must control the interpretation of the language,[16] but if there is any uncertainty in the provisions relating to renewals, the construction will be in favor of the tenant rather than in favor of the landlord.[17] If a lease is void as to the excess of a term granted beyond that authorized by law, a covenant to renew contained therein is void.[18]

2. Option and Election to Extend or Renew — a. Sufficiency and Construction of Agreement — (i) In General. Generally any contract relating to real estate must be definite in its terms in order to bind the parties so that a court of equity would enforce it by judgment for specific performance.[19] A general covenant to renew, however, is sufficiently certain because it imports a new lease like the old one upon the same terms and conditions.[20] But where the agreement for the renewal

[affirming 2 Edw. 47]; Gibbes v. Jenkins, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 130, in which cases it was held, however, that even if there is no contract provision and the renewal depends upon the mere volition of the landlord, the lessee has an interest in the renewable quality of the lease, in regard to third persons such as a court of equity considers valuable and vendible. See also Leys v. Baldwin, 2 U. C. C. P. 488 (distinguishing a covenant to renew and a contract to execute a lease containing such covenant); Watson v. Hemsworth Hospital Master, 14 Ves. 324 (holding that the circumstance of having been for a long time tenant of the land cannot amount to a positive right to remain forever in the same relation).

Damages to rental value.—Where the option is for an extension of the lease, which extension is to be perfected by the subsequent mutual agreement of the parties, the lessee has no immediate right to hold the premises and cannot recover damages to their rental value after the expiration of the original term. Pause v. Atlanta, 98 Ga. 92, 26 S. E. 489, 58 Am. St. Rep. 290.

Without consideration.—A covenant for renewal, like other contracts, must be founded upon a consideration, and a covenant gratuitously entered into subsequent to the execution of the lease will not be enforced. Oral agreement merged in written lease.—An oral agreement for a renewal is merged in the subsequent written lease. Stuebben v. Granger, 63 Mich. 306, 29 N. W. 716.

Under the statute of frauds.—Under a statute of frauds which makes leases for three years, not in writing, to have the effect of the estates at will only, there can be no term of fourteen years granted except by a lease executed and signed by the lessors. Sears v. St. John, 18 Can. Sup. Ct. 702.

18. Hart v. Hart, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 606 (holding that a covenant for renewal for twelve years in a lease of agricultural lands for a term of twelve years is in contravention of a constitutional provision that no lease of agricultural lands for a longer period than twelve years, etc., shall be valid); Moore v. Clench, 1 Ch. D. 447, 45 L. J. Ch. 80, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 13, 24 Wkly. Rep. 169.

On the other hand a covenant to renew, being independent, may fall without impairing the original grant. Hart v. Hart, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 606.

Suspension of power of alienation.—A lease providing for renewals cannot be said to be void on the ground that it is a suspension of the power of alienation for more than two lives in being, contrary to the statute against perpetuities, because to give a lease does not prevent the alienation of the property. Gomez v. Gomez, 81 Hun (N. Y.) 566, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 206.

Provisions construed — In general.— Where a written lease provided for the commencement of a term on a particular date, without fixing the duration of the term, but it was originally understood between the parties that the term was for one year, and also provided that the lessee should have the privilege of continuing the lease, if he fulfils the contract, at the same rent, it was held that the lessee was entitled to a renewal for another year. Lyons v. Osborn, 45 Kan. 650, 26 Pac. 31.

Option of renewal.— The words "with the option of renewal" are sufficiently definite to be enforced by a decree for specific performance, requiring a renewed lease for a like term, etc. Lewis v. Stephenson, 67 L. J. Q. B. 296, 78 L. T. Rep. N. S. 165. A covenant "that the party of the second part [lessee] shall have the privilege and option of renewal of this lease," etc., is a valid and operative covenant for a renewal of the original lease for another term.

contains language other than that appropriate to the general promise to renew, so that by resort to the settled rules of construction the language of the covenant and conditions of the renewal cannot be made certain, it fails for want of certainty.[21]

(II) Terms Left For Future Determination— (A) In General. A contract need not presently fix all of the terms of the new lease; it may furnish a certain and definite method for their ascertainment and determination in the future.[22]

(B) Future Arbitration, Valuation, and Appraisal. It is not uncommon to leave some of the provisions of the contract to be completed by future actions, as where the rent of the new term, or the value of the lessee's improvements, is

"Privilege" of further term.— A clause, with the "privilege of six years more at the same rent," is equivalent to a covenant to renew. Crawford v. Kastner, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 440, 63 How. Pr. 90.

"Refusal."—A covenant giving the lessee "the refusal of the premises, at the expiration of this lease, for three years longer," binds the lessor to renew at the same rent. Tracy v. Albany Exch. Co., 7 N. Y. 472, 57 Am. Dec. 538; McAdoo v. Callum, 86 N. C. 419.

Agreement to lease with covenant to renew.—An agreement to execute a lease and that at the expiration of the term a further specified term would be granted would be binding, and although the original lease was not executed the agreement would still hold for the expiration of the term. But where the stipulation is not that at the end of the term the lessors will execute another lease, but that during the first term a lease will be executed which shall contain a renewal covenant, the lessee cannot at the expiration of the original term sue as for a breach of a covenant to renew. Leys v. Baldwin, 2 U. C. C. P. 488.

Commencement.— It is usual in a lease for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, to expressly stipulate that the new lease should be made to commence and take effect from the expiration of the original term. The insertion of these words, however, is not essential if other terms and provisions and the character of the instrument make the same intention appear. Boyle v. Peabody Heights Co., 46 Md. 623. The more correct construction of the term "renewal" is that which makes the renewal commence, not by way of interruption of the currency or existence of the subject while it endures, but eo instanti that the subject determines. Rickards v. Rickards, 7 Jur. 715, 12 L. J. Ch. 460, 2 Y. & Coll. 419, 21 Eng. Ch. 419, 36 Eng. Reprint 187.

21. Morrison v. Rossignol, 5 Cal. 64 (where the clause provided that the rent should be according to the value of the property, without providing who should fix such value); Gelston v. Sigmund, 27 Md. 345; Kollock v. Scribner, 98 Wis. 104, 73 N. W. 776; Price v. Assheton, 1 Y. & C. Exch. 441.

To grant a new lease is not to renew, and where a contract is of the former kind without fixing the terms of the new lease or providing a certain method for their ascertainment, it is too uncertain to be enforced. Reed v. Campbell, 43 N. J. Eq. 406, 4 Atl. 433 (where the stipulation was that the lessee should have "the first right to lease said premises for the next succeeding year or years"); Whitlock v. Duffield, Hoffm. (N. Y.) 110 [reversed on other grounds in 26 Wend. 55] (where the covenant was to grant a new lease upon said terms as the lessor should think proper and the lessee approve); Abeel v. Radcliff, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 297, 7 Am. Dec. 377.

Terms to be fixed by parties.—A covenant to make a new lease "under and subject to certain covenants, provisos, and agreements, to be decided upon at that time, between the said parties, not embodying in said agreement for a further lease, any of the conditions or agreements contained in this present lease," is void for uncertainty. Howe v. Larkin, 119 Fed. 1005, 1006. But where the covenant was that if the lessor should not abide by and pay the amount of the valuation of the lessee's improvements he should "renew the lease, or redemise the lot, at such rents, and upon such terms, as might be agreed upon between the parties," it was held that upon refusal to accept a re-demise a tender of a renewal of the lease for the same term and at the same rent was good. Rutgers v. Hunter, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 215.

Privilege of renting or continuing longer without fixing the term or the rent is void for uncertainty. Delashmutt v. Thomas, 45 Md. 140; Howard v. Tomicich, 81 Miss. 703, 33 So. 493. So in Western Transp. Co. v. Lansing, 49 N. Y. 499, it was held that a privilege given the lessee to keep the premises for such further time as he shall choose or elect, paying the same rent, created at most a tenancy from year to year terminable at the pleasure of either party by giving the necessary notice.

22. Arnot v. Alexander, 44 Mo. 25, 100 Am. Dec. 252, holding that a covenant for a renewal "provided said parties can agree upon terms, or that said lessee is willing to give as much as any other responsible party will agree to give," is no more uncertain than those in which the rent is left to be deter-left to be fixed by valuation, arbitration, or appraisal. Such stipulations bind the parties;[23] but if the arbitration provided for should in fact fail, this does not give the lessor the right to dispossess the tenant during the extended term,[24] and the lessor's delay in having the property valued, upon which valuation the new rent depends, will not preclude him from collecting the new rent for any part of the new term.[25]

b. Right Dependent Upon Conditions. The right to a renewal or extended term may be conditioned expressly upon definite contingencies, and such a provision is binding upon the parties.[26]

c. Option to Renew or Pay For Improvements. Where the lessor covenants for a renewal or to pay for improvements, the option rests with him to do one or mined by the valuation of third parties. But in Gelston v. Sigmund, 27 Md. 334, it was held that a contract to let the tenant retain possession for a certain period, upon his paying the same rent the landlord "might be able to obtain from other parties," was void for uncertainty.

23. For enforcement of such provisions see infra, IV, C, 2, f, (II).

Appraisal and arbitration distinguished.— A provision for the fixing of future rent by the selection of valuers contemplates an appraisal and not an arbitration under a statute providing that persons may submit to arbitration in a controversy existing between them at the time of the submission which might be the subject of an action, since the value of the land is not the subject of an action and there is no controversy at the time of the agreement. Wurster v. Armfield, 67 N. Y. App. Div. 158, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 609.

Ascertainment of value of rent.— Where the rent is to be fixed by arbitration, it should be based upon the value of the land at the time of the renewal (Hegan Mantel Co. v. Cook, 57 S. W. 929, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 427); and the value of buildings erected by the tenant during the first term should not be considered (In re Allen, 27 Ont. App. 536; Van Brocklin v. Brantford, 20 U. C. Q. B. 347).

Increased rent required.— Under a provision that a renewal shall be at such "increased" rent as shall be determined by arbitrators, they are bound to award an increased rent, to be based upon the rent reserved for the whole term, and not for any particular year or years of it, although the increase may be nominal. In re Geddes, 32 Ont. 262; In re Geddes, 3 Ont. L. Rep. 75.

Ascertainment of value of improvements.— Where the lease provides specifically for the method of appointing arbitrators for the ascertainment of the new rent and further provides that if a renewal is refused the lessor shall pay the value of improvements "to be ascertained by three disinterested persons . . . to be chosen as aforesaid" the value of the improvements is to be ascertained in the same manner as that of the land in fixing the rent. Brown v. Lyddy, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 451.

Costs of renewal include costs of arbitration.— Fitzsimmons v. Mostyn, [1904] App. Cas. 46, 73 L. J. K. B. 72, 89 L. T. Rep. N. S. 616, 20 T. L. R. 134, 52 Wkly. Rep. 337. But see Smith v. Fleming, 12 Ont. Pr. 657.

Not a personal right subject to defeasance. — In Werlein v. Janssen, 112 La. 31, 36 So. 216, it was held that where the lessee had the privilege at the expiration of the lease to a renewal if the lessor did not wish to occupy the property for his own purposes, there was no present right subject to defeasance.

Construction and compliance.—Where the privilege depends upon the lessor's not desiring possession of the premises for building purposes, he is not authorized to lease to a third person with covenant to build on the premises, so as to cut off the original lessee's right to the additional term. Broadway, etc., R. Co. v. Metzger, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 662, 27 Abb. N. Cas. 160. So where a tenant went upon a farm and paid a year's rent upon an agreement to demise for a year and that the tenant should have the premises from year to year as long as the farm was to be let, and was turned out at the expiration of the year, under the Landlord and Tenant Act, for holding over, and the landlord let the premises to a third person, he was liable in an action for a breach of his covenant notwithstanding the proceedings against the tenant for his removal because in those proceedings the intention of the landlord was not traversable. Walley v. Radcliff, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 22. Where, at the time of executing a lease for five years, the lessor informed the lessee that he gave no leases for ten years, a clause giving the lessee "the first privilege of a renewal" must be construed to mean that a renewal would be made to the lessee on the same terms, provided the lessor made a lease. Holloway v. Schmidt, 33 Misc. (N. Y.) 747, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 169.

the other;[27] the lessee cannot compel a renewal,[28] even though the lessee is not bound to accept either but may elect to decline the lease and lose the value of the improvements.[29] On the other hand, if the lessor elects to renew the tenant cannot require payment for improvements.[30]

d. Option to Sell or Renew. If the covenant to renew or for an additional term is made subject to an express reservation of a right in the lessor to sell the premises, the lessee's privilege is defeated by a sale in accordance with such reserved right.[31] A sale, however, which will operate to defeat the lessee's privi-

Rep. 105 (holding that where the lessor has the option to take the improvements at a valuation or grant a new lease, the valuation of improvements or renewal rent to be ascertained by an award prior to the making of the election, the instrument is a continuing one permitting either party to take the initiative, and until either does move it is valid for a further term if proceedings are taken to work out the new term in the proper way). See also infra, VII, D, 3, c, (IV).

Dependent on not reletting.—Where a lease provided that the lessor at the end of the term should pay for improvements, "provided the said premises shall not be relet to the lessee," a mere holding over by the lessee is not a "reletting" so as to relieve the lessor from the obligation to pay for improvements. Moseley v. Allen, 138 Mass. 81.

28. Hutchison v. Boulton, 3 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 391 (where the covenant was for a renewal of the term or in default for payment for improvements); Roaf v. Garden, 23 U. C. C. P. 59.

Constructions.— In Neiderstein v. Cusick, 178 N. Y. 543, 71 N. E. 100, the language of the renewal clause, so far as it related to the tenant, was not a mere covenant to take a new lease, but was a present renting; being that the said party "hereby leases the property . . . for the further term of five years," etc., and this was followed by the provision that the lessor agreed that within one year of the expiration of the lease, on a certain notice from the lessee, he would institute proceedings for leave to execute a lease for the said further term of five years. In a separate and distinct clause of the lease there was a provision for the payment by the lessor for improvements in case he could not legally give or should refuse to give the renewal lease. It was held that this independent clause in no way affected the rights of the parties under the renewal clause so-called, and that under the latter both parties were bound and there was no option in the lessor. Where the lessor elects to renew, under the provisions of the lease that the lessee might retain possession on condition that within three months a new rent should be ascertained by arbitration and that if the lessor should desire to resume possession he might do so upon paying the value of the improvements, to be ascertained as therein provided for, and that if at the end of the expiration of the next or any subsequent term no new rent should be ascertained as aforesaid, or if the lessor should not resume possession, then the lessee should continue "upon payment of the rent last ascertained to be payable," the lessor could not maintain ejectment upon the tenant's refusal to accept at a new rent fixed by arbitration after the expiration of the first term and after the time provided for such arbitration. McDonell v. Boulton, 17 U. C. Q. B. 14.

Payment as condition to right of possession.— Under a covenant by the landlord that, at the expiration of the term, unless he gives a certain notice for the purposes of renewing, he will pay the lessee the value of the buildings then standing on the premises, etc., such value to be ascertained by appraisement, the value cannot be ascertained until after the expiration of the term, and the lease contemplates an appraisement after such termination and therefore the payment of the value of improvements is not a condition precedent to the landlord's right of possession upon the expiration of the term. In re Coatsworth, 160 N. Y. 114, 54 N. E. 665. But it is otherwise under provisions requiring payment within a particular time, which upon refusal to renew entitles the tenant to compensation as provided and to a constructive renewal in default of such payment (Nudell v. Williams, 15 U. C. C. P. 348), although the time for such payment may be extended (Roaf v. Garden, 23 U. C. C. P. 59).

lege must be open and bona fide, and it would seem that the lessee must have notice.[32]

e. Exercise of Option and Election — (I) Persons By and Against Whom Right May Be Exercised — (A) In General. A covenant to renew, in the absence of a covenant to accept, confers a privilege, which is an executory contract, and until the exercise of the privilege by the party upon whom it is conferred he cannot be held for the additional term. And so a mere option or privilege to extend or continue for another term is not binding upon either party until the option is exercised by an election,[33] and the fact that a covenant of renewal is binding only upon the lessor does not deprive the lessee of electing whether he will enforce or decline the renewal.[34]

(B) Corporations. A corporation having under its charter the power to hold and convey land without restriction upon its right to lease may covenant to renew, and is liable for a breach of such covenant notwithstanding the particular lease was improperly granted.[35]

(C) Principal and Agent. A provision for renewal in a lease to an agent acting for an undisclosed principal may be enforced, notwithstanding a provision in the lease against underletting or occupancy by others than the lessee.[36]

Sufficiency of disposition to defeat option.— A contract of sale, with possession thereunder, is a sale within the meaning of a provision for renewal if the property is not sold by the lessor within the time fixed for renewing. Sutherland v. Goodnow, 108 Ill. 528, 48 Am. Rep. 560. So a conveyance to a son by way of advancement, in good faith, is a disposal of property within the meaning of the covenant to renew by the lessor "should he not dispose of" the premises during the term. Elston v. Schilling, 42 N. Y. 79. And under a privilege for a renewal unless the lessors shall sell the premises, a sale by one of two lessors of his interest will not defeat the right to renew. (E) Successors to Parties in Interest — (1) In General. Covenants to renew are not personal, and the legal successors of the lessee,[38] as well as of the lessor, are entitled to the benefits and are burdened with the duties and obligations which such covenants confer and impose upon the original parties.[39] But a covenant to renew by one holding a limited interest does not bind the estate beyond that interest,[40] and such a covenant by a life-tenant will not bind the inheritance.[41]

One renewal — Devisee of reversion.—When the owner in fee demised to hold for one life or thirty-one years, with covenant to renew, subject to like rents and covenants, his devisee for life is bound to execute one renewal only, and having executed a second it does not bind the remainder-man. Assignment after the expiration of the lease gives the assignee no right of entry under a covenant for renewal in the lease. Clason v. Rankin, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 337.

Holding adversely to the lessor's title will express reference in the assignment to the covenant of renewal, if there is no express reservation.[43]

(b) CONSENT OF LESSOR TO ASSIGNMENT. In the absence of such a restriction in the lease, the right to assign so as to confer the renewal privilege upon the assignee is not dependent upon the consent of the lessor.[44] But if the assignment of a lease is contrary to a provision therein prohibiting an assignment without the lessor's consent, the assignee acquires no rights under a covenant to renew.[45] The lessor may waive such a provision in the lease, however, and if he does so the lessee is entitled to the benefit of the covenant to renew as if the landlord had consented to the assignment.[46]

(3) AGAINST GRANTEE OR ASSIGNEE OF REVERSION. A covenant to renew runs with the land and binds a grantee or assignee of the reversion.[47]

(F) Trustees. Where land, subject to the right of another to a renewal, is deeded in trust for particular purposes, and upon a certain event to be deeded in fee, the trustee may be compelled to execute a renewal lease.[48] But such power in the trustee is confined to the life of the trust, and after the termination of the trust the trustee cannot execute a renewal lease, nor can he make such a covenant without special authority, which will entitle the lessee to demand and receive a renewal after the expiration of the trust.[49] And a covenant by a trustee to renew, in breach of his trust, will not be enforced.[50]

(G) Under Subleases — (1) IN GENERAL. A mere subletting by a lessee does not operate to renew the lease. Kemp v. Jennings, 4 Indian Terr. 64, 64 S. W. 616. But it is held that a recital in a deed of conveyance of the leasehold that the rent reserved in the original lease has become lapsed and barred because not demanded does not constitute a disaffirmance of the landlord's title so as to forfeit a covenant for renewal in the original lease, although the deed to the assignee purports to convey the fee. not affect his right to call for a renewal under a covenant with him in the original lease.[51] On the other hand, the right of the sublessee to a renewal or extension depends upon the covenant or agreement in his lease,[52] and the fact that a lessee who subleases with a covenant to renew takes a new lease at an increased rent or upon more onerous conditions than the first will not relieve him from his obligation under his contract or justify him in charging an increased rent or imposing greater burdens upon the sublessee than those contained in the first lease to the sublessor.[53]

(2) Right to Renewal Dependent Upon Renewal by Lessee. If the lessee's covenant with his subtenant is conditioned upon the former's obtaining an extension or renewal, the subtenant acquires no right unless his lessor obtains such renewal or extension.[54]

51. Piggot v. Mason, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 412, holding that a release by a sublessee of a part of the premises to the lessor is no bar to the lessee's claim for a renewal; that if the sublease gives the right to renew the surrender to the lessor gives him that right.

52. See cases cited infra, this note.

Lessee's privileges conferred on sublessee.— A lease contained a covenant for a renewal for a like term, the renewal lease to provide that at its termination the lessor might grant a new lease, or buy the buildings on the land leased. The lessee made a sublease expiring at the same time as the principal lease, and providing for a like renewal lease which should give the sublessor the option of making a second renewal lease, or of buying the buildings, and which should contain the same covenants as the first sublease, except that for renewal. The sublease, and a renewal thereof, both provided that any rights or privileges at any time granted to the principal lessee by his lessor, in regard to the renewal of the lease made by the latter, should inure to the benefit of the sublessees. It was held that the right of election in the lessee in respect to granting a third sublease was qualified by this last clause, by which the sublessees were entitled to as many terms of lease as their lessors should obtain by virtue of the covenants in the lease to him. Robinson v. Beard, 140 N. Y. 107, 35 N. E. 441.

Reliance upon renewal under lessee's option.—Where a lessee with an option to renew sublets a portion of the premises with a privilege of renewal under the original lease and the sublessee was informed by the original landlord that the renewal would be made, and relying thereon the sublessee failed to request his lessor to exercise the option, the sublessee is entitled to possession under his exercise of the option without offering to renew for the entire premises. Assignee.— The right of a sublessee to a renewal may be assigned and the assignee may enforce the right against the original lessee. Phelps v. Erhardt, 2 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 336, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 540.

Action for damages on bond to renew.— Where a lessee sublet with the privilege of renewal at the same rent, "when a new lease is given . . . by owner of the building," and gave a bond conditioned absolutely upon the giving of such renewal, and before the original term expired notified the subtenant that the rent for the renewal term would be larger, the subtenant may take a lease for the further term directly from the owner and sue him upon the bond for damages. If a lessee takes a new lease instead of an extension, his covenant to grant a renewal in the event he obtains an extension of his lease will bind him and he cannot avoid it because he took a new lease instead of an extension. Hausauer v. Dahlman, 18 N. Y. App. Div. 475, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 1088 [affirmed in 163 N. Y. 567, 57 N. E. 1111].

Right as against successor.—A lessee of a term for years with a toties quoties covenant for renewal having died intestate, his administratrix sub-demised the premises at an increased rent, with a covenant that she, her executors, administrators, and assigns, would renew to the sublessee at the same rent, as often as she should herself procure a renewal from her head landlord. Upon the death of the administratrix, administration de bonis non was obtained, and it was held that the sublessee was entitled as against the administrator de bonis non to a specific performance of the covenant for renewal. Hackett v. McNamara, Ll. & G. t. Pl. 283.

Right against assign of sublessee.—Where a lessor, himself a sublessee, covenants with his lessee to grant a new lease if he should obtain an extension of his term from the freeholder, it is personal only and does not bind his assign. The covenant is not one for rental and does not run with the land. Muller v. Trafford, [1901] 1 Ch. 54, 70 L. J. Ch. 72, 49 Wkly. Rep. 132.

(II) Time For Exercise of Election or Right to Renew. In the absence of a specific provision in a lease fixing the time for exercise of an election to renew, the option continues during the whole of the original term, or tenancy.[55] But the election must be declared within that time,[56] unless by holding over the parties may conclude themselves for another term even upon failure to exercise actively the election as required by the lease,[57] and where the lease fixes the time when the renewal shall be taken and given, such provision controls, and in the absence of a compliance therewith the right to the renewal is lost.[58]

(III) Election Confined to Terms of Lease. In the exercise of an option given in a lease, the lessee is confined strictly to the terms of the lease in respect of the scope of the privilege conferred.[59]

Election before expiration of term.— If a tenant exercises his option by notice that he does not desire to hold for another term, he cannot afterward change his mind, especially if the landlord has acted upon such election. Chandler v. McGinning, 8 Kan. App. 421, 55 Pac. 103; Grenier v. Cota, 92 Mich. 23, 52 N. W. 77. But the fact that the lessee promised to surrender at the end of the term, knowing that one of the lessors intended thereafter to use the premises and to make purchases in connection with such use, will not estop the lessee from demanding a renewal under the lease in the absence of evidence that such purchases were made. Ewing v. Miles, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 19, 33 S. W. 235. See also Hughes v. Windpfennig, 10 Ind. App. 122, 37 N. Where the rector of a religious society was lessor in a lease entitling the society to elect at the expiration of the term to make improvements or grant further term, and under the belief that the premises had depreciated in value and that the rents were high, and that it would be a hardship to compel the lessees to accept a further term, said he would lay the matter before the board of ordinance and that they would deal generously, this does not show an agreement to terminate the lease at the end of the original term. At fixed periods during term.— Under a covenant for renewals "at any time within one year after the expiration of twenty years of the said term of sixty-one years. . . . And so in like manner at the end and expiration of every twenty years," etc., it was held that the words "and so in like manner," meant that the lessee could not claim a further term of twenty years at the expiration of the last term of twenty years, having omitted to claim a further term at the end of the first and second twenty years in the lease. Rubery v. Jervoise, 1 T. R. 229, 1 Rev. Rep. 191. But under a provision in a lease for sixty-one years that the lessee might renew at the end of each and every term of fourteen years upon giving a designated notice, it was held that the lessee or those claiming under him each might renew at the expiration of the last fourteen years, although no earlier renewal had been taken. Bogg v. Midland R. Co., 36 L. J. Ch. 440, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 113.

Renewals upon falling of lives.— Under a lease for lives, renewable upon fixed terms upon the dropping out of the lives, the application must be made upon the dropping out of the particular lives as provided. Thus, if the covenant is to renew on the expiration of one life, the lessor is not bound if application is not made until two drop out. Bayley v. Leominster Corp., 3 Bro. Ch. 529, 29 Eng. (IV) Number of Elections. Under a single right conferred to elect to take an additional term, the lessee can exercise his election but once.[60]

(V) Number of Renewals—(A) In General. A covenant to renew is satisfied by one renewal,[61] unless further renewals are expressly provided for.[62]

(B) Perpetual Renewals. As already stated, a covenant to renew, without more, gives but one renewal, because otherwise a perpetuity is provided for;[63] and the rule of construction became settled at an early date that a covenant for renewal or for an additional term should not be held to create a right to repeated grants in perpetuity, unless by plain and unambiguous terms the parties have expressed such intention.[64] On the other hand while the law discourages perpeone year as an election not to extend according to the terms of the lease.

(vi) Conditions Precedent, Waiver, and Forfeiture — (a) In General. Where the right to continue the tenancy,[66] or the right of option to take a renewal is dependent upon the performance of covenants or conditions, performance of such conditions or covenants is a prerequisite to the exercise of the right to require a renewal, and a breach of dependent covenants will defeat the option.[67] The landlord is not precluded from insisting upon the forfeiture of the right to renew by failing to declare a forfeiture of the original lease or by accepting rent after Renewable forever.— A demise to hold for lives named "and renewable forever," taken in conjunction with the lessee's covenant to pay a fine on inserting a new life in the case of any that should fail was held to confer a right of renewal in perpetuity notwithstanding there was no covenant by the lessor so to renew. Clinch v. Pernette, 24 Can. Sup. Ct. 385.

Reasonable certainty of intent.— The right to a perpetual renewal will be enforced where the intention is made reasonably clear, and it was held to appear sufficiently where the original lease provided that the new lease should "contain all the covenants, etc., herein contained, including this present covenant." Tender of rental.— Where the lessor agreed to purchase improvements or in default thereof the lease should continue, and it was provided that if he should refuse to accept the rent he should purchase the improvements, if the yearly rental is tendered at the expiration of the contract, and if not so tendered the improvements should be removed and possession surrendered, the lessor need not demand the yearly rental, but in order that the tenant's right and continued possession should be preserved he must tender the rental and demand a renewal. Breach of covenant to pay taxes and assessments will defeat the right to a renewal. Behrman v. Barto, 54 Cal. 131.

Tender of solvent surety.— Under a lease renewable upon the same terms, which is secured by a solvent surety, a lessee can renew only upon tendering a surety equally solvent, and if he announces his inability to furnish any security except that which the lessor was justified in rejecting, the latter is released from his liability to renew. Piper v. Levy, 114 La. 544, 38 So. 448.

Payment of collateral debts.— Where there is a lease with a covenant for renewal, the landlord cannot insist that the tenant shall pay collateral debts as a condition for granting a renewal. Fitzgerald v. Carew, 1 Ir. Eq. 346.

Particular use of premises.— The right to renew dependent upon the lessee's undertaking to do particular things upon the premises or to use the premises in a particular manner is defeated by a failure to comply with such conditions. Swift v. Occidental Min., etc., Co., 141 Cal. 161, 74 Pac. 700; Gannett v. Albree, 103 Mass. 372; McIntosh v. St. Philip's Church, 120 N. Y. 7, 23 N. E. 984.

Covenant to repair.— Where a lease contains a proviso for reëntry in case the tenant should not observe and perform all the covenants and agreements on his part, and also a covenant by the lessee to keep in repair and by the lessor to grant a new lease in case the lessee's covenants should have been duly performed, the keeping of the premises in repair is a condition precedent to the right to call for a renewal. Bastin v. Bidwell, 18 Ch. D. 238, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 742; Finch v. Underwood, 2 Ch. D. 310, 45 L. J. Ch. 522, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 779, 24 Wkly. Rep. 657; Job v. Banister, 3 Jur. N. But it is also held that the lessor cannot refuse to renew for a breach of covenant to repair, no notice to repair having been given, or at least no notice having been given until after notice to renew, and the breach not being gross. the breach of such covenants. The right to declare a forfeiture of the lease and the right to refuse to renew are separate and distinct.[68]

(B) Payment of Rent. Where a covenant to renew is independent of the other covenants in the lease, as that for the payment of rent, the breach of the latter will not affect the right to insist upon the former.[69] It is otherwise, however, where the right to a renewal is made to depend upon the performance by the lessee of his undertaking to pay rent.[70]

(C) Payment of Fines. Under a lease for lives renewable under a covenant by the lessee, upon the fall of any life by insertion of a new life and payment of a fine, the right of renewal depends upon compliance with the requirement as to the payment of the fine.[71]

(D) Notice or Request — (1) NECESSITY — (a) IN GENERAL. Notice of election is not necessary under a lease providing for an extension, in the absence of a provision therein requiring such notice.[72] On the other hand it is held that under an agreement by the lessor to renew at the expiration of the term, the implication is that it is to be done at the request of the tenant or upon notice by him that he desires a renewal,[73] and where the option to continue or renew is expressly condi-

Effect of waiver.— If, after a forfeiture has been incurred, the landlord declares himself willing to renew, upon the condition of the tenants using expedition, this waiver does not set the matter open again ab initio, and the tenant must use the utmost diligence in taking advantage of it, otherwise his right will be barred. Townley v. Bond, 2 C. & L. 393, 4 Dr. & War. 240. Where after judgment in ejectment an arrangement was made whereby certain bills at three months, drawn by the tenant, were received by the master on the part of the landlord, who was a minor and ward of the court, in payment of the rent, with a promise that if the bills were not paid the forfeiture was to be complete, it was held that the arrangement was binding but that the bills not having been paid the court could not decree redemption. Payments made but not at times required. — The fact that rents, all of which were paid during the term, were not paid at the dates as required in the lease, will not defeat the right to an additional or continued term. Strict performance excused.— Where the lessee in a lease containing a covenant by the lessor to grant a further or renewed lease upon due and punctual payment of fines, etc., at the times appointed for such payment, assigned a part of the premises for the same term, subject to the payment of a proportional part of the fines, etc., and a third person afterward purchased of the original lessor a reversion of the premises expectant on the lease to the original lessee and subsequently purchased the original lessee's interest under the original lease, not assigned by him, on one of the gross sums of fines becoming due and being unpaid, it was held that the double character filled by the original lessee relieved his assignee from strict performance of the covenant, and that the non-payment by the latter of the proportion of the gross fine was not under the circumstances a refusal to pay for such a breach of the covenant as would deprive him of his claim to a renewed lease of the property assigned to him. Statham v. Liverpool Docks, 3 Y. & J. 565.

Payment not a condition.— Where the lease contained a covenant by the lessor for renewal for a further term upon the payment of a fine for each renewal, even though the requisition for a renewal must be made before the expiration of the term, the stipulation requires only that the fine shall be paid on the execution of the lease and not before the expiration of the term. Nicholson v. Smith, 22 Ch. Div. 640, 52 L. J. Ch. 191, 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 650, 31 Wkly. Rep. 471.

Option of extension "if so desired."— A lease for a year with the option to keep the premises three years "if so desired" requires the lessee to give notice if he should elect to hold for the additional time, but no election is necessary if he does not intend to continue. Storch v. Harvey, 45 Kan. 39, 25 Pac. 220. But Brewer v. Conger, 27 Ont. App. 10, under a covenant by the lessor to renew protioned upon a request or notice, the right cannot be enforced over the objection of a failure or omission in this regard.[74]

(b) Waiver. The provisions of a lease requiring notice from the lessee of an election or intention to renew or extend the term are for the benefit of the lessor and therefore the notice itself,[75] or any other matter going to the sufficiency thereof, may be waived,[76] and the continuance in possession with the payment by the lessee and the reception by the lessor of rent will constitute a waiver of the notice and a renewal or extension under the provision of the lease.[77] viding the lessee "should desire to take a further lease," etc., it was held that no notice of demand of the lessee was necessary; that the provision of the lease required no notice or demand.

"Whenever required."— Under a covenant that the lessor would renew at any time before the expiration of the term, and also before the expiration of every succeeding term to be granted by every future or renewed lease, whenever required by the lessee or the person interested in the term or any succeeding term, it was held that notice of intention to renew should be given before the end of the term. Nicholson v. Smith, 22 Ch. D. 640, 52 L. J. Ch. 191, 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 650, 31 Wkly. Rep. 471.

Tenant as lessor to subtenant.— The lessor being himself a tenant, under a lease for lives renewable forever, who makes a sub-demise, and covenants that every life added by his own landlord shall be also added to the sub-demise, should, on obtaining a new life in his own lease, give notice to his tenant that he is ready to renew. Withdrawal of notice terminating lease.— Where under a provision requiring notice from either party to terminate the lease, notice is given the tenant, a request by him subsequently that he be permitted to remain is sufficient evidence to bind him to a continuation of the tenancy. Supplee v. Timothy, 124 Pa. St. 375, 16 Atl. 864.

Excuse for failure — denial of covenant.— Where under a lease perpetually renewable upon certain notice before the expiration of each term, the lessee sues to compel a particular renewal, and the landlord pleads a forfeiture of the lease for breach of covenants, pending which suit the parties negotiate about a draft of a renewal, and pending which negotiations the time arrives for the giving of another notice of renewal of another term by the lessee, which he does not give, the lessee is excused from making demand for a further renewal while the lis pendens as to the existence of the former lease exists, as it would be inequitable to permit the lessor to insist upon compliance with the covenant, the existence of which he denies. Notice by lessor.— A provision requiring notice by the lessor of his intention not to build is for the lessee's benefit, under a lease entitling the lessee to a renewal in case the lessor should decide not to build, and he may waive it. Seaver v. Thompson, 189 Ill. 158, 59 N. E. 553, in which case it was held further that the right of the lessee did not depend upon notice but upon the fact of the lessor's decision not to build.

(2) SUFFICIENCY. Where notice is required it must convey information of the definite and unconditional determination[78] of the party who is entitled to the right,[79] and must be of the character and quality prescribed by the terms of the lease,[80] and given within the period limited in that instrument,[81] although as will be seen from the adjudications set out in the notes, a substantial compliance with the contract requirements in these respects is sufficient.

(3) EFFECT. Where a timely notice is given or request made for a renewal or extension under the provisions of the lease, the rights and obligations of the parties become mutually fixed.[82]

(E) Surrender of Possession. Where the lessee voluntarily surrenders the premises he cannot insist upon a right to renew.[83]

An informal notice by the secretary of a corporation, upon being advised by the lessor that the lease was about to expire on the next day, that the directors of the company "would of course renew the lease," is sufficient. Service of notice.— Under a provision requiring the lessees to "advise the owner or his agents of their intention" to continue the tenancy, the receipt of such notice is a purely mechanical act which may be delegated by the agents to a clerk, and service upon such clerk authorized by his employer to receive such notice is good. Broadway, etc., R. Co. v. Metzger, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 662, 27 Abb. N. Cas. 160.

Effect of request for change in terms.— The fact that after a lessee makes his election he requests changes to be made in the lease does not destroy the effect of the election, the lessor refusing to assent to the change, but the original lease is extended under its terms providing for the election to extend. Chamberlain v. Dunlop, 5 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 98, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 125. So where a lessee exercises his option to hold for an additional term, he cannot refuse to pay the rent stipulated in the lease because the lessor had demanded a higher rent. Jones v. James, (Tex. App. 1892) 19 S. W. 434. And on the other hand, where the lessee requests a renewal before the expiration of the lease, which the lessor refuses except on the payment of an increased rent, and the lessee afterward takes a lease at an increased rent, insisting, however, upon his right to renew under the old lease, it was held that he did not waive the lessor's covenant of renewal. Tracy v. Albany Exch. Co., 7 N. Y. 472, 57 Am. Dec. 538.

Effect upon assignee.— Upon the election by an assignee of a lease to take an extended term under an option granted in the lease, he is liable for the unexpired portion of the extended term, although he assigned the lease before the expiration of such term. An action brought before the expiration of the lease for a breach of a contract to renew made during the original term is not premature. Laroussini v. Werlein, 48 La. Ann. 13, 18 So. 704.

Where the possession is given it is held that the tenant cannot recover damages for a refusal to execute a lease. Neel v. McCreery, 17 Ohio Cir. Ct. 612, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 434. After occupancy by the tenant for the full renewal term he cannot recover damages for the lessor's refusal to execute a renewal. Hegan Mantel Co. v. Cook, 57 S. W. 929, 22 Ky. L. Civ. App. 1901) 62 S. W. 815 (holding that the landlord was liable for the difference between the rental value of the land for the renewal term and the amount which the tenant had agreed to pay for the lease). See also North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Le Grand Co., 95 Ill. After judgment in ejectment.— If a lease for lives renewable forever expires without renewal, and the landlord brings ejectment, the tenant ought not to dispute his title, but

cumstances changing the condition of the parties, and rendering an enforcement of the covenant inequitable,[87] or where the contract is accompanied with fraud.[88] These remedies are concurrent, and the party may elect which he will pursue.[89]

(II) Enforcement of Stipulations For Appraisal or Arbitration. Upon the question of the propriety of specifically enforcing such stipulations, the courts are not in entire accord except upon the general proposition that a court of equity will not decree a specific performance of an agreement to arbitrate. In some of the cases this general rule is applied to such stipulations in leases.[90] In others the courts, while recognizing the same general rule, adopt midway expedients to prevent the working of injustice and have stayed proceedings at law until the covenant should be performed.[91] But the better rule seems to be that a court of equity will secure to either party the benefit of such clauses in a lease, and that, even in the face of the rule against the specific performance of an agreement to submit to arbitration, when the arbitration has failed the court may make the appraisement itself or direct it to be done by its own officer and thereafter enforce performance of the contract upon the terms so found.[92]

(III) Relief Against Forfeiture. Courts of equity will relieve a lessee if he has lost his right to renew by fraud on the part of the lessor or by unavoidable accident on his own part; they will not assist him where his failure to renew is should give consent for judgment, and file a bill for renewal. Wallace v. Patten, 1 Ir. Eq. 338.

Payment of penalty.— Where a lease has been granted upon lives renewable forever, with a nomine pœnæ in case of the lessee's neglect to renew, equity will not decree the lessor to renew, except upon the terms of paying the penalty. Doneraile v. Chartres, 1 Ridg. App. 122.

Exercise of jurisdiction once acquired.— In Hopkins v. Gilman, 22 Wis. 476, the lessor had an option to have improvements appraised, and to pay the appraised value thereof or to renew the lease for a further time at a rental of a fixed per cent upon the appraised value of the premises, and it was held that in an action to restrain the prosecution of a suit by the lessor for possession, a judgment decreeing specific performance was improper, but that the court having obtained jurisdiction would render appropriate relief, and upon reversing the judgment the court remanded the cause with directions to ascertain the value of the improvements and permitted plaintiff to retain possession until defendant had paid for said improvements.

Suggestions after the contract is completed, as where the lessee agreed to cut the lessor's crops, and the lessor in consideration thereof agreed that the lessee could have for an extended period land which he held, and subsequently suggested that the lessee could summer fallow the land which the lessee did not do, are not a part of the consideration to renew is a covenant to grant an estate.[96] It is not a present demise (as distinguished from a covenant to extend) so as of itself and alone to continue the tenancy for the renewal period,[97] but calls for a new lease,[98] without which the tenant cannot strictly retain possession as against the lessor in a court of law, by relying merely upon the covenant to renew.[99] On the other hand, under a privilege or option to renew, it is held that by exercising the election, as by giving proper notice, the tenant must be considered as in for the extended term,[1] and while the execution of the new lease is not necessary under these decisions it may nevertheless be required by either of the parties after the election has been exercised.[2]

The term "renewal" means a renovation, a restoration of something to a former or original state — a repetition, a beginning again; it may mean each or either of these things, so far as there is any difference between them; it must, however, be a renewal, a renovation, or repetition, or restoration of the same subject, as far as it is possible to restore that subject. A renewal of a lease, for a designated additional term,[9] or a lease for a term with a privilege of continuing longer, is construed like a general renewal covenant as providing for additional holding upon the same terms as in the original lease.[10]

(B) Covenant For Further Renewals. A general covenant to renew or a covenant to renew with like terms, conditions, and covenants does not import a renewal covenant in the renewal lease. A new covenant of renewal depends upon express covenant or a stipulation clearly indicating that to be the intention of the parties.[11] And where the new lease recites that it is granted upon the same terms and covenants, it does not thereby incorporate the original covenant to renew.[12] On the other hand it seems that a covenant to renew need not be inserted in a new lease in order to entitle the lessee to a subsequent renewal provided for in the original lease.[13]

(III) CHANGE IN TERMS. A new lease is a fulfilment of a covenant to renew, although the subject-matter is not identical, as where a part of the property by mutual agreement is not included in the renewal,[14] and in the exercise of the option to renew it is competent for the parties to agree upon modifications of the original terms.[15]

where the context does not require any different interpretation to be given to it, must therefore mean the obtaining a lease as near as possible in every practicable circumstance to the existing lease — as if the subject, worn or wearing out, was to begin again. Changed condition of premises. — A lease for lives renewable forever was made of certain lands except the bogs and turf-mosses. The tenant reclaimed portions of the bog, and converted them into arable land, and afterward filed a bill for renewal, and it was held that the description of the demised premises in the renewal ought not to be in the same terms as in the original lease, but ought to be so altered that such portions of the lands as have been reclaimed from the bog should not pass thereby to the tenant. f. Implied Contracts — Holding Over — (I) Rule Permitting Presumption of Relation. Ordinarily the relation of landlord and tenant is founded upon express contract, but the relation may be presumed from the conduct of the parties toward each other.[16]

(II) Holding Over — (A) Continuance of Tenancy — (1) In General. While the inference of the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant from the holding over should be supported by the established relation of landlord and tenant previously existing,[17] a tenant holding over after the expiration of his lease continues tenant,[18] and without any other or new agreement with his landlord the law implies a continuance of the tenancy upon the same terms, and subject to the same covenants,[19] which are applicable to the new situation, as those

(2) Lessor's Option to Recognize — (a) General Rule. When a tenant under a lease for a definite term holds over his term without a new agreement, the landlord may treat him as a trespasser and turn him out, or as tenant.[21] But a tenant has no such election. If he holds over, although for a short time without any equivocal act at the time to give his holding the character of a trespass, he is not at liberty to deny that he is a tenant if the landlord chooses to hold him to that relation;[22] the tenant's intention at the time he holds over is entirely Unger v. Bamberger, 85 Ky. 11, 2 S. W. 498, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 746; Mendel v. Hall, 13 Bush (Ky.) 232. See also Irvine v. Scott, 85 Ky. 260, 3 S. W. 163, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 911, holding under this statute that the landlord was estopped by acceptance of rent and permitting the tenant to store provender sufficient to last another year. So under the statute in Minnesota providing that the holding over of possession of urban real estate will not create, by implication or otherwise, a contract for the leasing of the premises for any greater period than the shortest interval between the times of payment of rents under the terms of the expired lease, where a tenant remained in possession for six months and paid an increased rent fixed by a landlord's notice prior to the expiration of the lease, it was held that such notice and payment of rent created an express contract for another term. Stees v. Bergmeier, 91 Minn. 513, 98 N. W. 648.

Statute requiring full payment.— In Oklahoma under a statutory provision providing that a tenant shall be deemed to hold over his term when he has failed or refused to pay the rent or any part of it, it was held that a payment of a sum less than the monthly rent, after the expiration of the lease, will not operate as a renewal. Olds v. Conger, 1 Okla. 232, 32 Pac. 337.

Notice of increase of rent.— If the lessor gives notice that a continuance of tenancy must be upon certain terms the tenant holding over will be bound thereby. Despard v. Walbridge, 15 N. Y. 374. As to notice of increase in rent see infra, VIII, A, 6, c. But a notice to quit is evidence to rebut the inference arising from the tenant's holding over that the landlord acquiesces in the continuance at the rent reserved in the lease. Bachelder v. Dean, 20 N. H. 467. And if the terms proposed by the landlord are not accepted by the tenant his mere holding over will give him no right to retain possession. Canning v. Fibush, 77 Cal. 196, 19 Pac. 376; Lautman v. Miller, 158 Ind. 382, 63 N. E. 761.

Payment and receipt of rent.— The payment and receipt of rent is not conclusive of the continuance of the tenancy under the original lease, or of the character of the new tenancy as against the intention of both parties. Johnson v. Foreman, 40 Ill. App. 456; Tolle v. Orth, 75 Ind. 298, 39 Am. Rep. 147; Atlantic Nat. Bank v. Demmon, 139 Mass. 420, 1 N. E. 833; Pusey v. Presbyterian Hospital, (Nebr. 1903) 97 N. although it will not be overcome merely by the intention of the tenant,[31] and it will not conclude either party as against proof of a different agreement between the landlord and the tenant or of facts which are inconsistent with the presumption.[32]

(c) What Constitutes Holding Over — (1) In General. Whether a tenant has or has not a right to reënter to remove his goods,[33] he has no right to remain in possession for that purpose.[34]

Holding by mistake.— Where a lessee held over for a month under the mistaken impression that his term continued that long, with the assurance of the assignees of the lease that it expired at a later date, it was held that the lessee was not liable for another year's rent. Davis v. Brown, (Miss. 1900) 29 So. 172. A similar ruling was made in Campau v. Mitchell, 103 Mich. 617, 61 N. W. 890, where the lessor's agent made representations to a subtenant that the premises had been released to the original lessee which induced the subtenant to remain when he was about to move out, and it was held that the lessee could not be held as upon the holding over. A tenant cannot establish a right to renew by making an application of a payment to the rent of the new term where the landlord demanded and received such rent as in arrears on the old term, although the payment thus demanded and received was by mistake. Sizer v. Russett, 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 108. But see Wood v. Gordon, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 109.

A new contract made during the original term, although void, differing in terms from the original lease, destroys the implication of the renewal of the original lease, from an unexplained holding over. Crommelin v. Thiess, 31 Ala. 412, 70 Am. Dec. 499.

Where the parties are negotiating for a new lease and the tenant remains with the express or tacit acquiescence of the landlord pending such negotiations the landlord cannot treat him as a tenant holding over for another term. (Mass.) 43, and points out that these authorities do not support the statement inasmuch as the question therein was confined to the right of tenants whose terms depended upon an uncertainty, among them tenants at will.

Right to remove property see infra, VII, D, 6.

The mere length of time that a tenant holds over the term is not the test of liability. Sullivan v. Ringler, 59 N. Y. App. Div. 184, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 38 [affirmed in 171 N. Y. 693, 64 N. E. 1126]. And although the possession beyond the term is for a short time, it will nevertheless constitute a holding over. Oussani v. Thompson, 19 Misc. (N. Y.) 524, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 1061; Frost v. Akron Iron Co., 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 348, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 654; McCabe v. Evers, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 541. And see supra, IV, C, 3, f, (II), (A), (2), (a), for the cases cited to the proposition that it is the lessor's option to treat the holding-over tenant as tenant or trespasser.

Partial removal of property.— The litter or worthless fragments of articles which tenants may leave on the premises will not constitute a continuance of the tenancy. Gibbons v. Dayton, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 451. See also Thomas v. Frost, 29 Mich. 336. On the other hand where there is not a complete removal of property on the last day of the term, whether the leaving of articles on the premises was intended as a wrongful continuance in possession, has been held in some circumstances to be a question of fact (Excelsior Steam Power Co. v. Halsted, 5 N. Y. App. Div. 124, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 43; Frost v. Akron Iron Co., 1 N. Y. App. Div. 449, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 374; Hammond v. Eckhardt, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 113, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 508; McCabe v. Evers, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 541); or as otherwise stated it cannot be held that where the tenant does not entirely remove all his property on the last day but runs over into the next day, or where there is a clear intention to vacate, that the failure to remove all of his property on the last day is as a matter of law a holding over (Scott v. Beecher, 91

(2) After Reëntry. If the lessor accepts a surrender of the premises, even after the holding over begins, the lease is terminated,[35] and a subsequent occupation upon a reëntry without the landlord's consent is not as tenant.[36]

(3) Occupancy by Others Than Lessee. If the tenant permits a third person to occupy the premises, it is in law considered to be the tenant's occupancy and is followed by the same consequences,[37] and this rule applies to the occupancy of subtenants.[38] The holding over by an assignee of the lessee will bind such assignee as a tenant under the terms of the original lease.[39]

(4) Tenants Under Lease to More Than One. Where the lease is to two, only one of whom occupies, it is held that his holding after the expiration of the lease may be presumed to be by both unless the other gives notice that he ceases to hold.[40]

Mere difficulty in procuring the facilities for moving will not prevent the continuance from operating as a holding over. Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 287, 31 N. E. 94, 28 Am. St. Rep. 636.

Sickness of the lessee will not excuse him from vacating. Mason v. Wierengo, 113 Mich. 151, 71 N. W. 489, 67 Am. St. Rep. 461.

Involuntary continuance in possession, as where one of the lessee's family was confined to one of the rooms with a severe sickness, will not constitute a holding over (Herter v. Mullen, 159 N. Y. 28, 53 N. E. 700, 70 Am. St. Rep. 517, 44 L. R. A. 703); and where the tenant is restrained from moving by an order of the board of health officers, his possession will not be a holding over (Regan v. Fosdick, 19 Misc. (N. Y.) 489, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 1102).

The mere detention of the key or failure to deliver it at the expiration of the lease will not of itself necessarily constitute a holding over. Steen v. Scheel, 46 Nebr. 252, 64 N. Suppl. 249, where, however, it is held that the party holding over will continue for another year, the original contract coming within the provisions of 2 N. Y. Rev. St. (9th ed.) p. 1818, § 1,

(D) The New Term. Except as otherwise modified by statute,[41] and in those jurisdictions where implied tenancies from year to year are not recognized,[42] if a tenant under a lease for a year or longer, without any other agreement with his landlord in that regard, holds over his term, then, upon the theory that he becomes a tenant from year to year[43] he may be held for another year, and if he pays and the landlord accepts rent, neither can terminate the tenancy for that year before its expiration.[44] If the original term is for a period less than a year, how-that agreements for the occupation of land in New York city which do not specify the duration shall be deemed valid until the first of May next after possession commenced, a holding after the first of May being for another year. See also Buchanan v. Whitman, 151 N. Y. 253, 45 N. E. 556; James v. Pope, 19 N. Y. 324, which cases hold that a lease to partners providing for a renewal is not renewed by the holding over of one of the parties after the dissolution of the firm.

As between tenants in common, there can be no holding over of the term under the lease from one to the other, but the holding will be held to be under the tenant's title and not under the lease unless he has excluded his cotenant. Fort v. McGrath, 4 Ill. App. 233. But in Valentine v. Healey, 86 Hun (N. Y.) 259, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 246 [affirmed in 1 N. Y. App. Div. 502, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 287], it is held that where tenants in common lease to a firm of which one of them is a member, the lease providing that the rent shall be payable to each of the lessors in proportion to his interest in the property, and the lessees hold over, the possession of the cotenant who is a member of the firm is under the lease and therefore the holding over continues the tenancy for another year. See, generally, TENANCY IN COMMON.

In Kentucky, under Gen. St. p. 66, art. 4, § 1, when the term for a year or more expires on a certain day, the landlord has ninety days to bring eviction proceedings, and if he delays beyond that time the tenant holds over for another year, and if the holding is for less than ninety days, the tenant is not in for another year unless there is a contract for another term express or implied. See Irvine v. Scott, 85 Ky. 260, 3 S. W. 163, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 911; Unger v. Bamberger, 85 Ky. 11, 2 S. W. 498, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 746; Mendel v. Hall, 13 Bush (Ky.) 232.

ever, then the holding over will operate to renew the tenancy for the original period and not for a year.[45]

(E) Under Options to Extend or Renew — (1) In General. Where a lease provides that the tenant may at his option have an extension for a specified time after the expiration of the term of the lease, or may occupy for an extended term, including that specified in the lease, the mere holding over after the expiration of the specified time will constitute an election to hold for the additional or extended term.[46] The same effect is given to a holding over on an option to

Lease by tenants in common.— Where the lessors are tenants in common one of whom is a member of the firm which is the lessee, the lease providing that rent shall be payable to each of the lessors in proportion to his interest in the property, the legal effect of a hold over by the firm cannot be changed as against the rights of the lessor who is not a member of the firm, by the others giving the firm permission to remain in possession for a short time after the term upon payment of a pro rata rental for the period of such occupancy. renew for a specified additional term.[47] On the other hand such holding over will not be sufficient to continue the lease if the facts show that it was under and by virtue of other arrangements between the parties.[48]

(2) Intention. In some cases it appears that the effect of a continuance of the possession will depend upon intention and an affirmative election must be shown,[49] or circumstances other than the mere occupancy,[50] although it is also held that the holding over itself may be evidence of an intention to occupy under a privilege of extension, which may be overcome by evidence of a contrary intention.[51]

(3) Renewal and Extension Distinguished. Upon this question some of the authorities draw a distinction between a privilege of extension and a right to renew, in this, that the extension for an additional term is provided for in the lease itself and its enjoyment by continuing the possession brings the extended occupancy within the original contract, while an agreement for an option to renew implies the contemplation of some affirmative act in addition to the mere continuance of possession, by way of an additional term.[52]

4. Effect of Renewal or Extension — a. As New Lease or Continuance of Old. In point of legal operation each renewed lease is a new lease,[53] and the taking of it operates as a surrender of the old one.[54] But a renewed lease may be considered as a continuance of the original lease to some intents: that is, for the protection of legal interests carved out of it, which once created the law will not permit to be destroyed,[55] and if a trustee, mortgagee, or other person interested obtain a renewal, the renewal lease will be considered as a mere continuance of the old one and subject to its trust and limitations.[56] So the grant of a right in demised premises by one having a terminable lease with a right of renewal will not cease to have effect on the termination of the lease if there is in fact a renewal, but the renewal will be deemed to be a mere continuance of the original term for the protection and preservation of rights acquired therein.[57]

b. Under Provisions Continuing Original Terms. Where a lease is renewed under a contract expressly providing that the tenant shall hold under the original lease, and subject to its conditions and privileges, it will be deemed to be a continuance of the original lease and the rights and privileges of the parties are to be determined by the terms thereof,[58] unless in some particular which is to be governed by different provisions as indicated by the intention of the parties in the original instrument itself.[59]

c. Upon Other Covenants or Accrued Causes of Action. The taking of a new lease will not defeat a cause of action already accrued under the old lease,[60] or destroy any right or privilege reserved to either party at the expiration of the original term,[61] and a renewal lease executed in pursuance of a covenant to renew will not satisfy any of the covenants of the old lease except the covenant to renew.[62]

5. Options to Purchase or Sell — a. Nature of Contract in General. An option to purchase, being an integral part of a lease, is a substantial part of the whole contract, and is not obnoxious to the objection that there is a want of mutuality, and the agreement to pay rent or do other acts will support the option as well as the right to occupy under the lease, and bind the lessor notwithstanding the lessee is not bound to purchase,[63] and the lessor cannot withdraw his offer before the time for its acceptance has expired.[64] The interest of the lessee by reason of such an option is not a right in land,[65] and he is a purchaser only upon the due exercise of the option.[66]

b. Sufficiency and Construction of Covenant. A provision of a lease giving an option to purchase will be construed so as to effectuate the intention of the parties, when construction is necessary.[67] The provision must be complete in order to be enforceable,[68] and if no price is fixed the lessor is not bound to accept the offer to purchase.[69] If the covenant giving the option to purchase does not describe the estate to be conveyed an estate in fee-simple will be implied,[70] and if

Instruments construed as granting an option. — A lease conferring the option to purchase which contains specific covenants and stipulations relative to the obligations of the parties in the relation of lessor and lessee, or in the relation of vendor and vendee, in the event of the purchase, will be construed as a lease and an option to purchase so as to preserve the rights of the parties under the contract in either case. Gilbert v. Port, 28 Ohio St. 276. Where the contract provided that one party agreed to give to the other an option to purchase, and in their correspondence the parties treated the contract as granting an option, it was held that the instrument should be construed as granting an option regardless of the literal interpretation of the terms of the instrument. At a price others will pay. — A provision reserving the right of the lessor to sell but requiring him first to give the lessee the privilege of purchasing "upon such terms and at the same price per acre as any other person or purchaser might have offered" is sufficient and the contract is enforceable. c. Exercise of Option — (I) Necessity and Effect — (A) In General. The mere option to purchase binds only the lessor and must be accepted before a completed and enforceable contract of sale is effected. The option and the acceptance constitute the complete contract.[72]

(B) Effect as to Relation of Landlord and Tenant. When the option to purchase is duly exercised by an election to purchase, the relation of landlord and tenant ceases and that of vendor and purchaser arises. The lessor is not entitled to rent thereafter,[73] and the lessee continues to occupy as owner subject to his compliance with the contract,[74] and will be entitled to such other rights as may be said to attach to his character as vendee, in so far as the rights of the parties are not peculiarly controlled by express stipulations in the lease.[75]

Suspension of landlord's right to distrain.— A lease is not determined at law by a contract by the lessee to purchase the reversion; but in equity the landlord's right to distrain is suspended pending completion of the contract, so long as the contract is subsisting and enforceable by action for specific performance; if, however, the contract is released or abandoned, or the lessee by unreasonable delay loses his right to specific performance, the landlord may then distrain. 75. Thus where a ten-year lease provided for a conveyance of the property when all payments should be made, the lessee agreeing to keep the property insured, and being at liberty after a certain date before the expiration of the term to pay the rent reserved in one gross sum, and the lease providing that as a part of such gross payment the amount of the annual tax for each of the then unexpired years of the term should be allowed and the lessor agreeing to pay the water tax, it was held, upon the exercise of the option by the lessor to pay the rent reserved in one gross sum, that the lessor was not bound to pay the rebate of insurance for the unexpired term; that the lessee was entitled to have the amount of the tax and the water tax for the remainder of the term deducted from the gross sum. Wilbour v. Trow's Printing, etc., Co., 1 N. Y. St. 231. Where the lease provided that if the sale was made before the date fixed for the payment of the second instalment of rent, said instalment need not be paid, it was held that the lessor was entitled to recover the full instalment where the sale was completed after the date fixed for its payment. Granger v. Riggs, 118 Ga. 164, 44 S. E. 983.

Credit for insurance money.— Where the lease required the lessee to keep the premises insured and provided for the crediting of rent, paid prior to the exercise of the option on the purchase-price, but made no provision for the application of the proceeds of insurance in case of loss, and the lessee insured in the lessor's name and the latter collected the insurance money upon a loss and spent a part of it in restoring the premises, it was held that the lessee, upon exercising his option, was entitled to have the balance of the insurance money in the lessor's hands credited on the purchase-price, being entitled to it as a part and parcel of the property

(II) Confined to Precise Option Conferred. The lessee cannot exercise an option different in scope from the precise option conferred in the lease.[76]

(III) Conditions, Waiver, and Forfeiture—(A) Conditions Precedent in General. The acceptance of an option to purchase must be in accordance with the terms of the provisions granting the option, and the lessee, in order to create a completed contract of sale, must perform all conditions upon which the right to exercise the option is made to depend,[77] unless a strict performance thereof has been waived by the lessor,[78] and if the lessor refuses to perform upon the lessee's offer to exercise the option, the latter need go no further by way of perfecting his right.[79]

(B) Estoppel. If with full knowledge of the facts which should impel him to proceed to perfect the contract of sale, the lessee permits others to acquire the property and recognizes their rights, he will be estopped to claim the option thereafter.[80]

76. Hitchcock v. Page, 14 Cal. 440, holding that a lease giving the tenant the option to buy the premises gives him no right to purchase a portion of the entire property but is limited to the whole thereof.

Counter proposition.— A clause giving the lessee the right to buy the premises in a named case is not a mere option, in the nature of a first invitation, to purchase, which, being without consideration, must be accepted in the terms of the offer, and which may be held to be rejected by a counter proposition. McCormick v. Stephany, 61 N. J. Eq. 208, 48 Atl. 25. But see Tilton v. Sterling Coal, etc., Co., 28 Utah 173, 77 Pac. 758, 107 Am. The intention of the grantor, to be gathered from the instrument and the existing facts, will determine whether a particular provision amounts to a condition precedent. Frank v. Stratford-Handcock, 13 Wyo. 37, 77 Pac. 134, 67 L. R. A. 571, holding that an agreement for the letting of property on consideration of the payment of taxes as rental, and giving the lessee the privilege of purchasing, and containing certain restrictive covenants as to the use of the premises, and concluding with an agreement for the deposit of a certain amount of money for the faithful performance of the covenants and the payment of the taxes, which latter would not fall due until a short time before the expiration of the term, made the deposit mentioned a condition precedent to the exercise of the option to purchase.

Notice.— Where the lessee was given the privilege of purchasing the fee at a fixed price at any time within five years, upon giving thirty days' notice of his intention and paying one fourth of the purchase-money, the thirty days' notice was of the essence of the contract, and a notice given two days before the expiration of the five years was too late. Mason v. Payne, 47 Mo. 517.

Performance as to part of land to be conveyed.— Under a lease providing that at any time during its term, all taxes and assessments being paid, the lessors would convey, at a specified price per acre, to the lessee, any part of the land leased containing not less than eight thousand five hundred square feet, it is not necessary, in order to entitle the lessee to a deed to any particular portion of the tract, that the taxes and assessments levied upon the whole tract should have been paid, but only those levied upon the particular portion for which a deed is asked. An extension of time in which the lessee may purchase is a waiver of the particular notice required in the original lease. Wilson v. Herbert, 76 Md. 489, 25 Atl. 685.

Waiver of forfeitures of lease.— Where the lessor waives breaches for which he could have forfeited the lease, the lessee will be entitled to exercise his option to purchase. Bell v. Wright, 31 Kan. 236, 1 Pac. 595.

Acceptance of rent after it is due waives the condition of prompt payment of rent. Mack v. Dailey, 67 Vt. 90, 30 Atl. 686.

Waiver by grantee of lessor.— A vendee of a lessor, not being a party to the lease contract, could not, by recognizing the lease after her purchase by giving notice of her right to declare it forfeited, render the lease effective, so as to make an obligation contained therein to convey the premises to the lessee binding upon the lessor. Frank v. Stratford-Handcock, 13 Wyo. 37, 77 Pac. 134, 67 L. R. A. 571.

79. Butler v. Threlkeld, 117 Iowa 116, 90 N. W. 584.

Invalid acceptance.— But such refusal on the part of the lessor will not excuse a tender of performance of other conditions where the offer of the lessee to accept is not consistent with the terms of the option conferred. (c) Breach of Independent Covenants or Conditions. Where the lease and the option to renew are independent, a breach of the conditions of the lease by the lessee, although justifying a forfeiture of the lease, will not affect the option to purchase.[81]

(d) Taking New Lease—Surrender. The taking of a new lease is not necessarily a surrender of the first lease and the option to purchase therein contained.[82]

(iv) Time to Exercise Option—(a) In General. An option in a lease to purchase the land demised is a continuing obligation on the part of the lessor which the lessee may accept at any time within the period limited,[83] or at any time within the period of the tenancy if no time for exercise of the option is otherwise prescribed,[84] and if the time is not limited within the period of the lease the existence or non-existence of the lease at the time of the election is immaterial.[85]

(b) Express Limitations as to Time. If the time within which the acts to be done in order to perfect the right to a conveyance is expressly limited and made a condition of the right, the lessee must comply with the condition in that regard, and if the option is not accepted within the time so limited it expires unless further time be granted.[86] But if the limitation as to time refers only to Computation of time see, generally, Time.

Equitable relief by way of extending the time cannot be granted, unless in cases where the jurisdiction can be invoked on the ground of fraud or mistake (Steele v. Bond, 32 Minn. 14, 18 N. W. 830); but on the other hand it is held that, although the purchase-money has not been paid in full within the prescribed time, the purchaser will be entitled to relief if full payment was prevented by the

the act of accepting the option and not to the performance of other conditions to require a conveyance, if the election is made in time it is immaterial that the other acts are performed afterward.[87]

(v) Parties Bound by and Entitled to Exercise — (a) In General. The grantee of a lessor in a lease conferring an option to purchase acquires no greater rights than those of the lessor,[88] and the option is not defeated by the death of the lessor[89] or by the death of the lessee.[90]

(b) Assignee. An option to purchase is not merely personal, and an assignment of the lease transfers the option to the assignee.[91]

conduct of the lessor (Wilkins v. Evans, 1 Md. Ch. 156). Where the assignee of a lease makes large improvements, thereby indicating an intention to purchase, and the lessor dies, and the heirs are infants or non-residents, and the administrator refuses to receive the purchase-money, a forfeiture will not be declared because the suit for performance was not brought until twenty-one days after the expiration of the lease. Page v. Hughes, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 439.

Sufficient compliance by filing bill.— Where the lessor in a lease granting an option to purchase within the term conveyed the premises to another and thereafter died, it was held that the filing of a bill for specific performance by an assignee against the administrator of the lessor alleging the readiness of the complainant to pay the stipulated sum was a sufficient compliance. It was especially proper to invoke the aid of a court of equity under these circumstances in order to procure such title as the original lessor had contracted to convey. Maughlin v. Perry, 35 Md. 352.

87. Hartman v. McAlister, 5 N. C. 207.

Default in payment of money at a stipulated time admits in general of compensation, and hence time of payment is seldom treated as of the essence of the contract unless it appears to be made so by the express agreement of the party. D'Arras v. Keyser, 26 Pa. St. 249. But payment within the time limited was held to be a condition of the contract under a provision granting an option to purchase at any time before the expiration of the lease for a fixed sum "to be paid down in cash . . . upon the demand of a deed prior to the expiration of this lease." Steele v. Bond, 32 Minn. 14, 18 N. W. 830. So also under a provision granting the option of purchasing at any time within seven years by giving three months' notice and paying a certain sum at the expiration of such notice. Ranelagh v. Melton, 2 Dr. & Sm. 278, 10 Jur. N. S. 1141, 34 L. J. Ch. 227, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 409, 13 Wkly. Rep. 150, 62 Eng. Reprint 627. And under a provision that if the lessee should be desirous at the expiration of the term of purchasing the premises, and should give to the lessor six calendar months' notice in writing of such desire, and should pay to him £2,000, the lessor would sell and convey the premises to the lessee. Weston v. Collins, 11 Jur. N. S. 190, 34 L. J. Ch. 353, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 4, 5 New Rep. 345, 13 Wkly. Rep. 510.

Rep. 339 (holding that where a lessor died, devising all his real estate to trustees who disclaimed and leaving an infant heir, a notice by the lessees of their election to purchase served on the infant and his guardian is sufficient, and the court will not refuse to enforce the contract on the ground that the infant could not give a discharge for purchase-money); Yuill v. White, 5 Terr. L. Rep. 275 (holding that a provision granting an option to purchase binds the lessor's representative, although not so expressed).

90. In re Adams, etc., Vestry, 27 Ch. D. 394, 54 L. J. Ch. 87, 51 L. T. Rep. N. S. 382, 32 Wkly. Rep. 883, holding that the option passed to the administrator as a part of the personal estate and that the administrator could not make a good title to a purchaser without the concurrence in the sale of the next of kin of the lessee. But see Henrihan v. Gallagher, 2 Grant Err. & App. (U. C.) 338 [overruling Sampson v. McArthur, 8 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 72], holding that the right to purchase goes to the heir at law of the lessee.

Conversion.— Rents until the option is made belong to the heir. From that time the conversion takes place and the purchase-money belongs to the personal representative. Townley v. Bedwell, 14 Ves. Jr. 591, 33 Eng. Reprint 648. In Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox Ch. 167, 29 Eng. Reprint 1111, under the election made the lessor was to be treated as vendor and subsequently the benefit of the agreement went to the heir of the purchaser from whose personal estate the purchase-money was withdrawn, the lessee being considered owner ab initio. But the principle of this case that the exercise of an option relates back to the date of the contract so as to affect a conversion of the property as between the real and personal representative of the party creating the option is not to be extended to affect the position of the party in whose favor the option is created. In re Adams, etc., Vestry, 27 Ch. (c) Mortgagee. An option to purchase will pass to a mortgagee of the lessee upon the theory that every kind of interest in realty may be mortgaged if it be subject to sale and assignment.[92]

d. Reservation of Option to Sell or to Renew or Extend — (i) In General. If the lessor reserves to himself the privilege of selling the premises to the lessee or of extending the term of the lease, he cannot be compelled to do either,[93] and if the covenant of the lessor is to renew the lease or sell the property to the lessee, the option to do one or the other rests with the lessor.[94]

(ii) First Privilege of Purchasing. Although the privilege of selling is reserved to the lessor,[95] if the first privilege of purchasing is conferred on the lessee, the lessor must offer the premises to the lessee before selling to others.[96] The privilege of purchasing, however, will depend upon the lessor's election to sell.[97]

V. TENANCIES FROM YEAR TO YEAR, MONTH TO MONTH, OR WEEK TO WEEK.

A. Tenancy From Year to Year — 1. Nature and Incidents of Tenancy. Tenancies from year to year are the creation of judicial decisions, based upon principles of policy and justice, out of what were ancient tenancies at will, termi-

An equitable assignee cannot exercise the option. Holroyd, etc., Breweries v. Singleton, [1899] 2 Ch. 261, 68 L. J. Ch. 622, 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 101, 47 Wkly. Rep. 662.

Option expressly personal.— Under a lease giving a lessee "but to no other person" the option of trespass, the right does not pass to an assignee. Myers v. Stone, 128 Iowa 10, 102 N. W. 507. See also Menger v. Ward, 87 Tex. 622, 30 S. W. 853, set out in the next succeeding note.

The right is not divisible and an assignee of a part cannot elect to purchase that part. Hitchcock v. Page, 14 Cal. 440.

92. Louisville Bank v. Baumeister, 87 Ky. 6, 7 S. W. 170, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 845, under a statutory provision that "any interest in or claim to real estate may be disposed of by deed or will in writing." See also Halsted v. Colvin, 51 N. J. Eq. 387, 26 Atl. 928. Contra, Conn v. Tonner, 86 Iowa 577, 53 N. W. 320, holding that a mortgage by the lessee does not pass the option because such option constitutes no interest in the land.

Where personal confidence is reposed by the lessor in the lessee, as where the privilege to purchase is partly on credit, it has been said that this consideration should take the case out of the general rule that the option is not merely a personal one, because to permit the enforcement of the option by an assignee would be to give the lessor a debtor whom he would not himself choose. Upon this theory it was held that an option to purchase, partly on credit, did not pass under a mortgage. Menger v. Ward, 87 Tex. 622, 30 S. W. 853.

Failure of lessor to elect.— Under a provision for the erection of a building by the lessee, and that at the end of the term the lessor could elect to renew the lease, or buy the building, or sell the lot at a price to be fixed by referees, where the lessor fails to elect, the lessee may elect to purchase. Coles v. Peck, 96 Ind. 333, 49 Am. Rep. 161.

Sale subject to lessee's rights.—But a stipulation reserving the right in the lessor to sell, or giving the lessee a designated notice and the privilege of purchasing at the price offered, is held to be merely enabling and not restrictive, the purpose being to protect the lessee in the enjoyment of his full term, and a sale subject to the lease without notice is not a breach of the covenant entitling the lessee to maintain an action. Callaghan v. Hawkes, 121 Mass. 298. To the same effect see Blanchard v. Ames, 60 N. H. 404. In Thuemler v. Brown, 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 117, a conveyance of a part of the demised premises subject to the rights of the lessee is held to be a breach of the contract giving the lessee the option to purchase, where the lessee duly exercises his election.

97. De Vitt v. Kaufman County, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 332, 66 S. W. 224, holding that under a lease which reserved to the lessor the right to sell the land and terminate the lease at the end of any rental year on six months' notice, and gave the lessee the privilege of buying the land at a price to be set by the lessor, and which might be offered for the land by any other party, the option to buy applied only in case the lessor elected to terminate the lease by making a sale.

nable at any time by either party without notice.[98] Such tenancies, although indeterminate as to duration until notice given, have most of the qualities and incidents of a term for years; and, when notice has been given, the term is as much fixed for a definite period as any term for years.[99] A tenant from year to year has a lease for a year certain, with a growing interest during every year thereafter, springing out of the original contract and parcel of it.[1] But, although it has many of the qualities of a term for years, the tenancy is substantially a tenancy at will, except that such will cannot be determined by either party without due notice to quit.[2] Tenancies from year to year have been abolished in some states;[3] but they will be held to still exist in the absence of any express provisions of statute abolishing them, or any provision from which such result can be claimed to be implied.[4]

2. Creation of Tenancy — a. In General. A tenancy from year to year may arise either expressly, as when land is let from year to year, or by a general parol demise, without any determinate interest, but reserving the payment of annual rent; or by implication, as when property is occupied generally under a rent payable yearly, half yearly, or quarterly; or when a tenant holds over, after the expiration of his term, without having entered into any new contract, and pays rent.[5] Such a tenancy, however, will not be created contrary to the intent of both parties, and payment of rent is merely a fact bearing on the question of intent.[6]

b. By Lease For Indefinite Term. A lease for no definite term, with an annual rent, which may be payable quarterly or monthly, is a lease from year to year.[7]

No. 10,773*a*, Deady 405, where it is said that a tenancy from year to year is a tenancy for a definite recurring period, and not at will; and during each of such periods it is a tenancy for the time or term of one year. How often it may be renewed and how long continued by such renewal depends upon the future conduct of such parties and is therefore uncertain. But for the current year, such tenants hold the premises independent of the will of their landlord. They are tenants for a term, a time certain, and not at will.

d. By Parol Lease or Contract. As a general rule a parol lease of lands for years is construed as creating only a tenancy at will,[11] unless under the saving clause of the statute of frauds it may be good for a year.[12] Such tenancy, however, will be subsequently changed into a tenancy from year to year, by payment and acceptance of the rent annually, and by other circumstances indicating that to be the intention of the parties,[13] so that the almost universal rule at present is that a parol lease for years, under which possession is taken and rent paid, creates a tenancy from year to year.[14] A similar rule applies when one enters into possession of the premises under a verbal agreement for a life-tenancy,[15] or under a parol agreement for a written lease.[16] The reservation of annual rent is the leading circumstance that turns leases for uncertain terms into leases from year to year;[17] but this rule does not apply to a parol tenancy for years, void under

District of Columbia.— Since the act of July 4, 1864, a tenancy at will cannot arise without an express contract, yet if prior thereto a tenant for years held over by consent, given expressly or constructively after the determination of the lease, this, although technically an estate at will, was a tenancy from year to year. Spalding v. Hall, 6 D. C. 123.

If one holds under successive renewals, he is a tenant for years, and not one from year to year. Biggs v. Stueler, 93 Md. 100, 48 Atl. 727.

Where a tenant from year to year leases the same premises for a single year, and holds over after the expiration of his term, his former occupancy of the premises does not inure to his benefit so as to constitute him a tenant from year to year. Brandenburg v. Reithman, 7 Colo. 323, 3 Pac. 577.

A corporation holding over after the expiration of a lease with the assent of the lessor becomes a tenant from year to year. Holding over pending treaty for lease.— If a tenant whose lease has expired is permitted to continue in possession pending a treaty for a further lease, he is not a tenant from year to year, but so strictly a tenant at will that he may be turned out of possession without notice. Doe v. Stennett, 2 Esp. 717, 5 Rev. Rep. 769.

Change by statute.— Iowa Code, § 2014, providing that any person in possession of land "with the assent at the owner is presumed to be a tenant of will until the contrary is shown," changes the common-law rule that, where a tenant for years holds over, and continues to pay rent, a tenancy from year to year is established; and, in the absence of special contract, a mere tenancy at will is thus created. holding over indicates with certainty a design to continue the relation of landlord and tenant, and a tenancy from year to year will arise.[26] Such intention should in each case be found and determined as a question of fact by the jury, and in so doing they may take into consideration the character of the property and the use to which the same is to be put, as well as the periods at which the rent is to be paid.[27] The presumption of law that a tenant who by permission of his landlord holds over is a tenant from year to year may be rebutted by proof that the holding over is in some other character or for some other purpose;[28] but proof of a contrary intention on the part of the tenant alone is not sufficient for this purpose.[29]

(II) Landlord's Right to Consider Tenant Trespasser. A landlord may treat a tenant holding over after a term as a tenant from year to year or as a trespasser, at his election.[30]

(III) Terms and Conditions of Tenancy. Where a lessee for years holds over after the expiration of his term, and becomes a tenant from year to year, the tenancy is subject to all the covenants and stipulations contained in the original lease, so far as they are applicable to the new condition of things.[31]

Circumstances may be sufficient to imply acquiescence, and if the holding over is wilful, it cannot be with assent. Grant v. White, 42 Mo. 285.

Offer and conditional acceptance do not constitute agreement for new lease.— An offer by a landlord, made after the expiration of the term of a written lease, to grant a new lease, and a conditional agreement on the part of the tenant to accept such offer, do not constitute an agreement for a new lease, preventing the application of the terms and conditions of the old lease to a tenancy from year to year, created by the tenant remaining in possession and the land-

g. Conversion of Tenancy From Month to Month Into Tenancy From Year to Year. A tenant from month to month does not become a tenant from year to year by continuing in possession for more than a year. The character of the tenancy remains unchanged.[32]

h. Conversion of Tenancy at Will Into Tenancy From Year to Year. An estate at will is converted into a tenancy from year to year by the payment of rent;[33] and the conversion is wrought, not by the length of time the tenant holds and pays rent, but by the fact that he enters and holds under a stipulation to pay annual rent, and pays accordingly.[34] This implication of law, resulting from a payment of rent under a tenancy at will, is, however, not strong enough to overcome the fact of a distinct understanding between the parties as to the nature of the tenancy.[35] Mere lapse of time, however, will not turn a tenancy at will into one from year to year.[36]

B. Tenancy From Month to Month — 1. Nature and Incidents of Tenancy. A tenancy from month to month which may be determined on notice is in the nature of a tenancy at will.[37] The tenant cannot, without the consent and agreement of his landlord, create a new tenancy or make the existing one different from that agreed upon in the original contract;[38] nor can the interest of a tenant from month to month be transferred on execution without the assent of the landlord.[39]

2. Creation of Tenancy — a. In General. To constitute a tenancy from month to month a special agreement to that effect may be made, or the tenancy may be implied from the manner in which the rent is paid.[40] Thus a lease for an indefinite term, with monthly rent reserved, creates a tenancy from month to month.[41] Such a tenancy is a continuing one, and not a new tenancy at the lord receiving rent. Gardner v. Dakota County Com'rs, 21 Minn. 33.

Agreement to reduce rent.— Where a tenant, who has taken a lease for one year, holds over after the expiration of his term, and pays the monthly rent provided in the lease, he becomes a tenant from year to year, and if he afterward induces the lessor to agree to a reduced rent, the provisions of the expired lease to remain the same in other respects, such an agreement is void for want of consideration. Goldsbrough v. Gable, 140 Ill. 269, 29 N. E. 722, 15 L. R. A. 294.

Assent to increase of rent.— Where a tenant retains the premises after notice from the landlord that he would require an increase of rent, he must be held to have assented to such increase, and to this extent the terms of the old lease do not apply. Gardner v. Dakota County Com'rs, 21 Minn. 33.

beginning of each month.[42] A tenancy for a specified period of one month is a term for years, and not a tenancy from month to month or year to year;[43] nor does the mere payment of one month's rent, with nothing further said or done, create a tenancy from month to month.[44] A tenant who enters by an implied license becomes a tenant by sufferance, and out of this relation a tenancy from month to month may arise by the monthly demand and payment of rent.[45] So also a lease creating an estate at will only may be converted into one from month to month by entry thereunder and payment of monthly rent.[46]

b. By Parol Lease or Contract. Where a party enters into possession of premises under a verbal letting, which is void under the statute of frauds, agreeing to pay rent monthly, and pays rent under the contract for a time, he becomes a tenant from month to month.[47] If the agreement is in the nature of a license or a permissive use only, a tenancy from month to month is not established.[48]

c. By Tenant Holding Over After Expiration of Term — (i) In General. A tenant, leasing premises at a stipulated price per month, who holds over with the consent of his landlord, and pays rent, thereby becomes a tenant from month to month.[49] Where there is a distinct agreement that if the tenant holds over it must be as a tenant from month to month, no contract to the contrary will be implied.[50] Where a tenant holds over without the consent of his landlord, no tenancy from month to month is created.[51] A tenant remaining in possession after the issue of a warrant of dispossession does not bear to his landlord the relation of tenant from month to month.[52]

(ii) Terms and Conditions of Tenancy. A holding over by a tenant from month to month with the assent of his landlord will, in the absence of a new lease, be presumed to be on the same terms as the prior letting.[53] A statute providing that the landlord may change the terms of the lease by giving notice in writing is mandatory, and must be strictly complied with in order to make a change effectual.[54]

C. Tenancy From Week to Week. A weekly tenancy is a reletting of the premises by the landlord at the beginning of each successive week.[55]

VI. TENANCIES AT WILL AND AT SUFFERANCE.

A. Tenancy at Will — 1. Nature and Incidents of Tenancy. An estate at will in lands is that which a tenant has by an entry made thereon under a demise to hold during the joint wills of the parties to the estate.[56] Tenancies of indeterminate duration which were anciently deemed and denominated tenancies at will are now considered as from year to year;[57] but tenancies at will may still arise by express agreement, or by implication of law arising from the voluntary acts and relations of the parties.[58] A tenant at will is in possession by right, with the consent of the landlord either express or implied,[59] and he does not begin to hold

unlawfully until the determination of his tenancy.[60] A tenant at will is the owner of the premises he occupies, until his tenancy has been terminated by notice from his landlord to vacate;[61] but he has no certain and indefeasible estate which he can assign or grant to any other person.[62] If he assigns his estate to another who enters upon the land, the latter is a disseizor and the landlord may bring trespass against him,[63] but a sublease is good between the parties thereto.[64] A tenant at will of a farm is bound to work it in a husband-like manner,[65] and whether he does so or not is a question of fact.[66] He is entitled to its annual fruits,[67] and may maintain trespass for breaking down the fence of his inclosure.[68]

2. Creation of Tenancy — a. In General. An estate at will, in the primary and technical sense of that expression, is created by grant or contract, whereby one man lets land to another to hold at the will of the lessor.[69] While generally created by express agreement, such a tenancy may arise by operation of law,[70] unless it is provided by statute that a tenancy at will cannot arise or be created without an express contract.[71] In some states no estate or interest in lands can be created or conveyed without writing, but an estate at will.[72] A tenancy at will is not created until the lessee enters.[73]

b. By Mere Permissive Occupancy. A permissive occupation of real estate, without rent reserved or paid, and without any time agreed upon to limit the occupation, is a tenancy at will,[74] and even if rent is reserved, but is not referable to a year or any aliquot part of a year, the tenancy is still one at will, and not from year to year.[75] In some states it is provided by statute that any person in possession of real estate with the assent of the owner is presumed to be a tenant at will until the contrary is shown.[76] Consent to the occupancy of land may be inferred from the actual possession for a long time without objection by the owner who has knowledge thereof.[77] Possession with the assent of the owner raises merely a presumption of a tenancy at will which may be rebutted.[78] When it is shown that the person in possession does not recognize the owner as landlord, but holds adversely, either as owner, or as the tenant of another whom he recognizes as owner, such presumption is rebutted.[79]

h. Grantor or Mortgagor Continuing in Possession After Conveyance. A grantor or mortgagor continuing in possession of the premises after the conveyance or mortgage is a tenant at will of the grantee or mortgagee.[95]

i. Mortgagor in Possession After Foreclosure. After the foreclosure of a mortgage, the mortgagor becomes a tenant at will to the mortgagee.[96]

j. Judgment Debtor Holding Over After Sale. Where a judgment debtor whose land had been sold on execution against him holds over after the sale with the consent of the purchaser, he is a tenant at will.[97]

k. Lessee Holding Over After Sale Under Execution. A lessee of lands, encumbered with a judgment lien prior to the lease, becomes a tenant at will to the sheriff's vendee, after a sale under such lien.[98]

B. Tenancy at Sufferance — 1. Nature and Incidents of Tenancy. A tenancy at sufferance arises where one comes into possession of land by a lawful title, but keeps it afterward without any title at all.[99] It differs from a tenancy at will in that a tenant at sufferance enters lawfully and holds over wrongfully without the landlord's assent or dissent, whereas the tenant at will holds over by the landlord's permission.[1] A tenant at sufferance is a wrong-doer, and in possession as a a parol lease for a longer term, which lease is invalid as to the term beyond one year, is at its inception a holding at will. See also Rogers v. Hill, 3 Indian Terr. 562, 64 S. W. 536.

The English rule required assent of the landlord, or some new agreement, express or implied, to continue the tenancy under the lease, and has been adopted in other jurisdictions. See Neumeister v. Palmer, 8 Mo. App. 491; Jones v. Shears, 4 A. & E. 832, 2 Harr. & W. 43, 5 L. J. K. B. 153, 6 N. & M. 428, 31 E. C. L. 365; Waring v. King, 11 L. J. Exch. 49, 8 M. & W. 571; Leighton v. Vanwart, 17 N. Brunsw. 489. Thus where the holding over was wrongful (that is, without the landlord's consent), and the lease was for a definite term, it was considered that the landlord could recover only for use and occupation, but if the tenancy was from year to year and the tenant held over a part, the landlord could recover for the whole year (Ibbs v. Richardson, 9 A. & E. 849, 3 Jur. 102, 8 L. J. Q. B. 126, 1 P. & D. 618, 36 E. C. L. 443); and under a parol demise good for two years, if the lessee held over into the third year, he was liable for that year's rent (Legg v. Strudwick, 2 Salk. 414); but if the tenant held over a term of a year with the landlord's consent, the parties were supposed to have renewed the old lease which was to hold for a year (Right v. Darby, 1 T. R. 159, 1 Rev. Rep. 169).

In Massachusetts while a mere continuance in possession under the old lease makes a party a tenant at sufferance, if there is a new contract shown or inferable from the dealings of the parties, the estate becomes one at will. Emmons v. Scudder, 115 Mass. 367; Edwards v. Hale, 9 Allen 462.

result of his landlord's laches or neglect,[2] and acquires no permanent rights because the latter neglects to disturb his possession.[3] A tenant at sufferance has no estate which he can assign, and if he does so to one who enters upon the land, the latter is a disseizor, and the landlord may have an action of trespass against him.[4] At common law a tenant at sufferance was not liable for the rents and profits,[5] but this rule has been changed by statute in some states.[6]

2. Creation of Tenancy — a. In General. A tenancy by sufferance arises only when a person comes into possession lawfully, but holds over wrongfully after the termination of his interest.[7] This holding over may, however, arise in a variety of instances, the most common of which is when a tenant for a term certain holds over after his term without his landlord's assent.[8] A lessee at will, holding over after the determination of his estate, is likewise a tenant at sufferance.[9] Since a tenancy at sufferance exists not by the consent, but by the laches of the owner, where there has been no laches, there can be no tenancy at sufferance.[10] Other examples of tenancies at sufferance are: Tenants at will whose estates have been determined by alienation,[11] by a demise for years,[12] or by the death of the

b. By Occupancy of Premises as Incident to Employment. Where one occupies a house as an employee, without the relation of landlord and tenant being created, the continued occupancy of the premises after the termination of the employment is sufficient to create a tenancy at sufferance.[19] In some cases, however, the duration of the holding seems to enter into the question, and it is held that a tenancy at will or by sufferance does not spring up immediately upon the termination of the service. To have that effect the subsequent occupancy must be sufficiently long to warrant an inference of consent to a different holding.[20]

2. Extent of Premises. 3. Property Included — a. In General. The general rule is that the lease of a building eo nomine is a lease of the land on which the building stands.[23] The question whether a particular place is a part of the demised premises does not depend exclusively upon the question of boundary, but also upon the question of intention, which may be determined by bringing in aid of the words of the demise such extrinsic facts explanatory of the subject and of the rights of the parties as may show the meaning of the instrument and the intention of the parties.[24] But a reservation in the lease in favor of the lessor must be so construed as to enable the lessee to conduct the business for which he leased the premises.[25] Where it is shown by the terms of the lease or by the surrounding circumstances that it was the intention of the parties that the building only, or an apartment or room therein, should pass, the lessee takes no interest in the land.[26] The lease of part of a building as a rule passes with it as incident thereto, everything necessarily used with or reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the part demised.[27] Thus, if a building consisting of several apartments is so constructed that all the occupants must enter and depart by the same hall and stairway, such hall and stairway are appurtenant to the apartments leased and become a way of necessity upon the lease of part of the building.[28] The rule is otherwise, however, if the building is so constructed that the lessee can readily use another entrance and stairway, or can construct one in his own part of the building.[29] However, a lease demising a portion of a building does not give the lessee any interest in the land, beyond that directly connected with the leased apartments, as such a lease is a letting of the apartments and not of land.[30]

b. Appurtenances.[31] The general rule is that by the lease of a building everything which belongs to it, or is used with and appurtenant to it, and which is reasonably essential to its enjoyment, passes as incident to the principal thing, and as a part of it, unless specially reserved.[32] However, it has been held that the mere presence of water mains upon the leased premises does not bind the landlord to furnish water to the tenant,[33] or the presence of machinery on the leased premises bind the lessor to furnish power therefor,[34] or the presence of an elevator in the building require the lessor to permit the use thereof by the lessee,[35] in the absence of a special stipulation to that effect.[36]

c. Use of Outside Walls. According to the weight of authority, the lease of a portion of a building for a store or other business purposes gives the lessee the exclusive right to the use of the outer walls of that portion of the building so leased by him for the purpose of posting advertisements and notices thereon.[37]

4. Condition of Premises — a. Tenantable Condition in General. It may be broadly stated that in the absence of fraud or concealment by the lessor of the condition of the property at the date of the lease, the rule of caveat emptor applies, since there is no implied warranty on the part of the landlord that the premises are tenantable, or even reasonably suitable for occupation.[38] It is held, however, that there is an implied obligation on the part of the lessor that the leased premises shall be completed and ready for occupancy at the commencement of the

The right to such space is a property right, and the owner may grant the use of it to another, who will be entitled to protection by injunction in his use of the same.

Several lessees of same building.—Where a lease of offices in a building contains no privileges or direction as to the lessee's right to place his sign in any particular locality at the entrance, he cannot, as against the other lessees, arbitrarily place his sign in a particular spot selected by him. Snyder v. Hersberg, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 200.

A provision "that the lessee may have the right to place signs upon the outer wall of said rooms" imports a privilege and not an exclusive right, and prima facie is to be exercised in reference to the condition of the premises at the time the lease was given, especially as affected by license to older tenants. term.[39] And where the lessor conceals defects in the premises which the lessee could not have discovered by reasonable diligence, it constitutes fraud; and where the lessee is compelled to remove from the premises by reason of such defects, he can recover from the lessor the rent paid in advance and the loss occasioned by such removal.[40] So notwithstanding a covenant by the tenant to keep the premises in a cleanly and healthy condition, he may abandon the same where the landlord renders the premises uninhabitable after the tenant has frequently cleaned them.[41]

b. Suitability of Premises For Purpose For Which They Were Leased. English doctrine,[51] which has been followed by some of the American courts, where there is a contract of lease and no stipulations to the contrary, there is an implied covenant on the part of the lessor that when the time comes for the lessee to take possession under the lease, according to the terms of the contract, the premises shall be open to his entry. In other words that there shall then be no impediment to his taking possession.[52] Where the lease contains express covenants to put the lessee in possession, a subsequent trespass by a third person before the lessee has entered, or continuance in possession of the premises by a tenant of the lessor, will constitute a breach of the contract for which the lessor is liable,[53] unless the lessee elects to waive full performance of the contract.[54]

(iv) Actions For Failure to Deliver Possession[55] — (a) In General. Where possession of the demised premises is withheld from the lessee, he may maintain an action of ejectment against any person, including the lessor, who so wrongfully withholds the possession from him;[56] or if possession is withheld by Title and possession of landlord see supra, III.

Where, by failure to terminate a prior tenancy, the lessor is unable to give right of entry at commencement of a lease with covenants of title and quiet enjoyment, the lessee is not bound to accept the premises on a subsequent tender; and hence, not having become a tenant, action to dispossess him will not lie. Value of bargain.— In an action by the lessee for damages for the lessor's failure to put him in the possession of the land desired, the measure of damages is what the lessee could have made by the cultivation of the land; that is, "the value of the bargain." Shoemaker v. Crawford, 82 Mo. App. 487. And see Bartram v. Hering, 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 395, holding that where the lessor, under a valid agreement, arbitrarily, and without reasonable excuse, in order to escape the effects of a bad bargain refuses to comply with his contract, the lessee is entitled not only to compensatory damages, but to damages arising from the loss of the bargain, or the money which he would have derived from the completion of the contract; but that where, through no fault of his own, the lessor is unable to carry out his contract, the lessee cannot recover the value of his bargain, and the measure of damages is limited to the consideration paid and expenses incurred.

2. Covenants For Quiet Enjoyment — a. Implied Covenants. The general rule is that the use of the word "lease" or "demise" in an instrument of lease imports a covenant for quiet enjoyment.[80] So it has been held that a covenant for quiet enjoyment is implied from the words "agrees to let"[81] or the words "grant and demise."[82] And the rule is sometimes broadly stated that a lease contains of necessity an implied covenant[83] for quiet enjoyment.[84] Nevertheless it is only for so long as the lessor has the term that the law implies a warranty of quiet enjoy-

Duration of covenant.— If the lease is for the term of three years, with the privilege of two more if the lessor does not sell the demised premises before the end of three years, and the lessor has not sold at the end of the three years, and the lessee elects to keep the premises two years more, and the lease contains a covenant for quiet enjoyment, the covenant at the time of the election becomes a covenant for the full term of five years. Levitzky v. Canning, 33 Cal. 299.

In a tenancy from year to year there is no implied covenant for quiet enjoyment against eviction by title paramount on the determination of the landlord's interest, and if on such determination the tenant is evicted by the superior landlord, he has in the absence of express agreement, no claim against his landlord for damages for such eviction by the superior landlord. Where the lessor has, at the time of giving the lease, no title to the land leased and enters into no covenant, express or implied, for quiet enjoyment, except against his own acts, his subsequently acquired title does not inure to the lessee by virtue of the lease: but the latter holds the premises as against the lessor by virtue of the latter's personal covenant, which operates by way of estoppel only to prevent his interference with the lessee's possession, and in no way binds him to protect the lessee against the foreclosure of previous liens upon the property. Burr v. Stenton, 43 N. Y. 462.

Effect of subsequent covenants.— A general covenant for quiet enjoyment in a lease is not controlled or limited by a subsequent covenant to defend the lessee's title against certain interests, unless the two covenants are inconsistent, or it expressly appears that it was intended that the second should limit

c. What Constitutes Breach of Covenant. At common law the rule was that an actual eviction or physical dispossession or some actual disturbance in the possession of the lessee was necessary to constitute a breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment.[90] Now, according to the great weight of authority, a constructive eviction is sufficient to constitute a breach of covenant, and the lessee may after a demand, or other hostile assertion of a paramount title, yield thereto, although a constructive eviction cannot be deemed to exist without a surrender of the premises.[91]

Construction of particular covenant.— In a lease of lands irrigated by a ditch maintained and owned in common by those having lands to be irrigated, each landowner being entitled to a certain part of the water in the proportion that the number of acres owned bore to the number irrigated, a covenant to defend the lessee in the peaceful and quiet possession of the premises, and every part thereof, does not require the lessor to maintain the ditch; and therefore he is not liable to the lessee for damages caused by the temporary destruction of the ditch by floods. d. Actions For Breach of Covenant. The most usual remedy for a breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment is an action of covenant,[92] in which damages are sought and recovered in proportion to the injuries sustained.[93] In a declaration in such action the covenant is sufficiently described if it be stated according to the legal effect of the instrument.[94] Special damages are not recoverable unless alleged in the complaint.[95] In an action on the covenants of title for quiet enjoyment implied in a lease by the words "grant and demise" eviction need not be alleged.[96]

8. Use of Premises — a. Mode of Use in General. Where the contract of lease is silent on the subject, the lessees have by implication the right to put the premises to such use and employment as they please, not materially different from that in which they are usually employed, to which they are adapted, and for which they were constructed.[97] The law, however, implies an obligation on the part of the lessee to use the property in a proper and tenant-like manner, without exposing the buildings to ruin or waste by acts of omission or commission, and not to put them to a use or employment materially different from that in which they are usually employed,[98] or apparently violative of the spirit and with such mesne profits as the tenant was compelled to pay to the real owner. Conger v. Weaver, 20 N. Y. 140; Kelly v. Schenectady Dutch Church, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 105; Moak v. Johnson, 1 Hill (N. Loss caused by destruction of perishable goods.— The lessee cannot recover for a loss occasioned by his purchase of a quantity of perishable goods for use in the business to be conducted on the premises shortly in advance of the commencement of his term, where the market is in the same city and he would have sustained no special loss by deferring their purchase until he had acquired possession. Friedland v. Myers, 139 N. Y. 432, 34 N. E. 1055 [affirming 19 N. Y. Suppl. 741].

Action against remainder-man and executor of lessee.— Where the tenant for life executes a lease for years, with a covenant for quiet enjoyment, an action for a breach of such covenant occasioned by the death of the life-tenant, and consequent termination of the lease prior to the expiration of the term, will not lie against the remainder-man, since no tenure and no relation exists between the remainder-man of the tenant and the life-tenant (Coakley v. Chamberlain, 38 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 483), nor will such action lie against the executor of the life-tenant and the remainder-man jointly (Coakley v. Chamberlain, supra).

Where the agreed consideration for the expired term exceeds any possible profit which the lessee can reasonably hope to derive from the use of the leased premises during such term there can be no recovery for the breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment contained in the lease. Therefore, in an action by the reversioner against the tenant for waste, the measure of damages is not necessarily the sum which it would cost to restore the property to its condition before the waste; the true measure of damages is the diminution in the value of the reversion, less a discount for immediate payment. 2. Connecticut.— Malley v. Thalheimer, 44 Conn. 41, where a lessee covenanted to use in a lease of the purposes for which the demised premises are let is often held to constitute an express covenant on the part of the tenant to use them for no other purpose.[3] Where, however, such restrictive conditions or covenants are incorporated into a lease, the general rule of interpretation is that they should be so construed as to carry into effect the intention of the parties, and when considered in connection with other parts of the instrument will tend to support rather than defeat it.[4] Such covenant, however, may be expressly waived or waived by impli-

the premises only to keep a lager beer saloon, and after the beginning of the term fitted up a restaurant thereon, at considerable expense and with no objection by the lessor, although the lessor's representative under a power of attorney knew thereof, and the covenant was deemed to have been waived in that regard.

4. Farm Leases — a. In General — (1) Cultivation of Land. A tenant of farming land under a lease which does not restrict the use he is to make of the land has a right to pasture cattle upon it and make any other reasonable and usual use of it he may see fit.[10] By a demise of farming lands a covenant is raised by implication of law that they shall be used as such; and, in the absence of express covenants in reference thereto, the law also implies covenants on the part of the lessee that no waste shall be committed, that the land shall be farmed in a husband-like manner, that the soil shall not be unnecessarily exhausted by negligent or improper tillage, and that repairs shall be made.[11]

Dissolution of injunction.— An order dissolving an injunction to restrain a lessee from committing waste by erecting a stable on the leased premises, without the consent of the lessor, was not erroneous, it providing that the stable should be removed at the expiration of the lease should the lessor so insist. Hubble v. Cole, 85 Va. 87, 7 S. E. 242.

Effect of special covenant on right to injunction.— A lessor who lets premises with full knowledge of the lessee's business, where the actual use of the premises is such only as is incidental to the business, cannot enjoin the lessee from such use on the ground of maintaining a nuisance, where there is a covenant that the lessee may pay all damages for any nuisance made or suffered on the premises. Browne v. Niles, 165 Mass. 276, 43 N. E. 90.

Mere change in the character of the neighborhood cannot defeat the right to enforce a restrictive covenant by injunction, unless there is an equity against him arising from his acts or conduct in sanctioning or knowingly permitting such change as to render it unjust for him to seek relief by injunction. Michigan.— Chapel v. Hull, 60 Mich. 167, 26 N. W. 874, where the action of the lessee in sowing all the arable lands to wheat shortly prior to the end of his term, and thus leaving the farm practically worthless for the coming season, was held to be an act of waste which a court of equity will properly enjoin.

(II) Live Stock on Premises. The general rule is that in the absence of stipulations to the contrary,[12] the natural increase of stock leased with a farm accrues to the tenant.[13] This of course is not the case if the lease is void.[14] To entitle a person to recover for the death of cattle in the tenant's possession he must show negligence on the part of the tenant.[15] If a lessee for years of a farm and stock sells part of the stock contrary to the terms of the lease, the purchaser, after the termination of the lease by agreement of the parties thereto, although within the term named therein, is liable to the lessor in trover for the stock so sold.[16]

(III) Rights of Tenant as to Use and Sale of Timber. The common-law rule obtains in practically every jurisdiction that, in the absence of express stipulation to the contrary, a tenant for life or for years may lawfully cut timber trees necessary for firewood and repairs to houses, fences, etc.,[17] even where he has agreed to make repairs at his own charge.[18] However, in the absence of express stipulations to that effect, a tenant has no right to cut and sell timber from the land, and such cutting and sale will constitute waste.[19]

(iv) Rights of Tenant as to Manure Made on Premises. The general rule is that manure made by a tenant upon leased farm lands in the ordinary course of husbandry is, in the absence of special agreement to the contrary,[20] the property of the lessor, and belongs to the farm as an incident necessary for its improvement and cultivation, and the tenant has no right to remove it from the premises or apply it to any other use.[21] However, manure made in livery stables, or in buildings unconnected with agricultural property, belongs to the tenant, unless there be a contract to the contrary;[22] and it has been held that a tenant is entitled to manure made from fodder grown elsewhere and bought by him.[23]

A mere demise of bog, as such, will not give the lessee a right to cut turf for sale, particularly where the demise is of the bog, together with other property. But if nothing but bog be demised, and it is not convertible to any other use save being cut for sale, or if it were, at the time of the demise, used by cutting it for sale, the lessee may cut turf for sale. (III) Right to Emblements or Waygoing Crop—(A) In General.[31] At common law, where land is leased for a number of years, and consequently the period of its determination is fixed, and the lease is silent as to who shall be entitled to the growing crops on the land at the end of the term, the outgoing tenant is not entitled to such crops.[32] Where, however, the lease, expressly or by implication, recognizes the right of the tenant to sow in the last year of the term, the general rule is that he has a right to harvest the waygoing crop, where the lease is silent as to who is entitled thereto,[33] and where there is an express agreement that the tenant shall have the waygoing crop he is of course entitled thereto.[34] So in several jurisdictions, by general custom, the tenant is entitled to the waygoing crop, even where such right is not stipulated in the lease.[35] Where a tenant has a right to waygoing crops, whether by reservation in the lease or otherwise, he that possession or control which prevents the tenant from gathering and removing his crop in a peaceable manner.[44]

5. Injuries to Premises — a. By Landlord. The lessor is answerable in damages to his lessee for injuries to the premises which prevent his use or occupation, or diminish the value thereof for the purposes of the lease, where such injuries arise from the culpable negligence or deliberate act of the lessor.[45] The lessor is, however, in the absence of contractual obligation, as regards his tenant, only liable for acts of misfeasance and not for acts of non-feasance.[46] And he is not liable for injuries to crops done by his or other tenants' cattle, where such injuries are the result of the tenant's non-compliance with an agreement to remove the crops before a designated time.[47] Nor was he liable for the closing of a doorway, where the use thereof was merely permissive and revocable at any time.[48]

b. By Third Person — (i) Liability of Third Person. An action will lie by a tenant for life, for years, or at will for an injury by a third person to his use or possession of the leased premises,[49] particularly where he is liable in an action

Exemption from taxation for benefit of lessor.— Where a lease to a city provided that the tenant should pay all taxes, and afterward the legislature exempted the property from taxation as long as used for certain charitable purposes, it was held that the city was still liable to pay the amount of the taxes to the landlord, the act being passed for the benefit of the charitable society and not for the city. tion of premises who has covenanted to pay taxes is liable for the taxes in proportion to his rent.[67] However, by such covenant the lessee does not obligate himself to pay taxes which may be illegal or void.[68]

(II) Taxes or Assessments Within the Covenant. The distinction between a tax and a special assessment is well recognized in law, and it is well settled that an agreement on the part of the lessee to pay the taxes on the demised property does not include a special assessment for permanent improvements to the reversion.[69] And on the other hand a stipulation in a lease that the lessee should pay all assessments whatsoever levied, etc., on the premises does not bind him to pay state, county, and municipal taxes for general purposes.[70] Some of the decisions in construing covenants in leases to pay all taxes, assessments, and duties which may be laid upon the premises during the term have held that such covenants do not include permanent improvements of an extraordinary character, which inure to the benefit of the estate in the increased value thereof, and in the increased rent which it would thereafter permanently command.[71] Yet, since the Effect of exemption from taxation. — A covenant in a lease from a city to "pay all taxes, assessments, and public dues, . . . that may hereafter be levied, charged, or assessed on the premises, or the yearly rent issuing therefrom" does not require the lessee to pay taxes on the reversionary interest of the city, as such interest is exempt by statute from taxation. liability of the lessee on the covenant in his lease depends largely upon the language of the covenant, he will be held to have obligated himself to assume every burden imposed on the demised premises where the language of the covenant is broad enough to require that interpretation. Thus, where it is stipulated that the lessee shall pay all taxes, rates, duties, and assessments whatsoever which shall be taxed, assessed, or imposed upon the demised premises during the continuance of the lease, special assessments for permanent improvements or betterments are included, even where the statute authorizing the levy of such assessment contains a clause empowering the tenant to deduct it from the rent.[72]

(III) Rent Reserved. However, a covenant in a lease binding the lessee to pay all taxes, charges, and assessments, ordinary and extraordinary, which shall be taxed, charged, imposed, or assessed on the demised premises, or any part thereof, does not bind the lessee to pay a tax imposed on rents reserved under the lease.[73]

(IV) Liability as Affected by Time of Assessment or Levy. Where, by the terms of the lease, the lessee covenants to pay all taxes or assessments on the premises during the continuance of the lease, the general rule is that he is liable for all taxes and assessments which have been duly assessed, charged, and confirmed during the term, although they may be payable thereafter;[74] but it has been held that a covenant that the lessor shall pay all taxes to be "levied" during the term does not bind him to pay taxes "assessed" during the term but which do not become due and collectable until after its expiration.[75] In the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, a covenant in a lease binding the lessee to pay all taxes during the existence of the term extends only to taxes assessed after the commencement of the lease.[76] Some of the English cases go the length of holding that under such a covenant the lessee is not liable for such assessments where the work was done before but the apportionment was made after the granting of the lease.[77]

(v) Effect of Destruction of Building. Where a lessee covenants to pay all taxes assessed during the term, he is not entitled to a proportionate return of taxes so paid by him to the lessor, even where the premises are afterward, and during the year for which the taxes are assessed, destroyed by fire, and the lease thereby terminated, no provision being made in the lease for the apportionment of taxes in any event.[78]

(vi) Liability of Assignees, Mortgagees, and Subtenants. Covenants to pay taxes run with the land, and upon an assignment of the lease by the lessee the assignee becomes liable to the landlord for all taxes which may thereafter become due and payable, under the terms of the lease, while the assignee continues in possession of the property under the assignment; his liability being supported by the privity of estate existing between himself and the lessor during that period.[79] A mortgagee of a leasehold is likewise liable on a covenant for the ute, water-rates are general and annual, and imposed for a public purpose, and from the time of their imposition they become both ordinary and yearly burdens, they constitute a lien on the property and are collectable in the same manner as ordinary taxes; and in such cases, as between the lessor and the lessee, the lessee is not bound to pay either the extra or the regular water-rate, except upon covenant, or unless there are circumstances which raise an implied promise so to do.[92] Even under such statutes, however, the lessee frequently obligates himself by a covenant in the lease to pay such rates, in whole or in part, and such covenant is as binding as any other covenant in the lease.[93] Where a lessee of a building sublets a portion to a club with which he has no connection whatever, he is not liable for the rates assessed against it;[94] and a recital in a lease that the premises "are from now on occupied and to be occupied as a lumber yard" is a covenant running with the land, and on the erection of buildings by an assignee of the lease rendering the property subject to water-rates, the assignee is liable therefor.[95]

Apportioning assessment.— Defendants had leased certain premises of plaintiff and covenanted to pay the annual water-rent imposed "according to law." The premises were a part of the building, the other portions of which were also occupied by tenants. There was only one water-meter for the building, and the evidence showed that at least one of the other tenants used more water than defendants, and it was held that as the act [Consol. Acts, §§ 330–352] authorized water-meters to be placed in such buildings and scales of rent fixed, defendants were not liable until such water-rent was lawfully assessed to the portion occupied by them. of a stipulation to the contrary.[98] However, under such statute, in the absence of an agreement to that effect, the landlord is not bound to repair patent defects in a building, of the existence of which the tenant was cognizant when he leased the premises.[99] In several jurisdictions it is provided by statute that where a leased building is intended for the occupation of human beings, the lessor must, in absence of agreement to the contrary, put the same in a condition fit for habitation, and repair subsequent dilapidations, etc. Such statutes, however, are construed as being limited in their application to property used for dwelling-house purposes, and do not apply to business property.[1] And in some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that the tenant is not liable for repairs where the demised premises are injured by accident through no fault of the tenant.[2]

(III) Covenants or Agreements as to Repairs—(A) General Rule. The tendency of modern decisions is not to imply covenants which might and ought to have been expressed, if intended, and a covenant is ordinarily not implied that the lessor will make any repairs to the demised premises.[3]

Fences.— A landlord is not liable to a tenant for rebuilding and repairing of fences,

(B) Limitation of Rule. An apparent exception to this rule is found in the case of hallways, staircases, elevators, etc., used in common by other tenants of a building, and under the control of the landlord. In such cases it is the duty of the landlord to make the necessary repairs, even in the absence of express covenants on his part to this effect,[4] and his failure to do so will render him liable for injuries resulting therefrom.[5] In some jurisdictions it is held that in the absence of contract the landlord is not liable for injuries to a tenant, caused by defects in halls or stairways used in common by several tenants, where such defects occur after the beginning of the term, and the landlord is guilty of no active misfeasance or negligence in the premises.[6] And a landlord who lets an entire tenement is not liable for injuries to the lessee, or to a subtenant of one of the tenements, through defects in a hallway or stairway used as a common entrance for several of the tenants, since he is not legally in possession of it, and is not obliged to make repairs.[7]

New Jersey.— Allen v. Fisher, 66 N. J. L. 261, 262, 49 Atl. 477, where a lease of a hotel contained a printed clause providing that the lessee was to peaceably deliver up the premises demised, at the end of the term, in the same good order and condition that he received the same, reasonable wear and tear and damage by accidental fire alone excepted. It also contained a written clause providing that "all repairs are to be made and paid for by the said tenant and lessee . . . and agreed that the said lessor shall be exempt and relieved from the making of any repairs, alterations, additions or improvements, during the continuance of this lease, the said lessee hereby covenanting to make and do the same;" and it was held that the clause which exempted the lessee from liability for damages due to reasonable wear and tear or to accidental fire, was intended to qualify not only the lessee's covenant to deliver up possession of the premises at the end of the term, but also his covenant to make under all circumstances, and, if he desires to relieve himself from certain liabilities, he must take the precaution to specifically exclude them from the operation of his covenant;[12] and such covenants run with the land and bind heirs and assigns.[13] A covenant by a lessor to repair likewise runs with the land, and the repairs and to relieve him from obligation to replace a part of the premises which had been destroyed by accidental fire.

Beneficial interest in a lease of premises, accompanied by occupation and payment of rent by a widow, a party to the lease, but whose husband, also a party, had alone entered into covenants to repair and had died before the expiration of the term, creates no contract between the widow and the lessor legally binding her to perform the covenants in the lease, nor does it create any like equitable liability, notwithstanding a declaration in the lease by the husband that he held the premises as trustee for his wife as part of her separate estate. assignee of the lessee is entitled to the benefit of all such covenants, and may sue the lessor for a breach.[14] However, a covenant forthwith to put the demised property in good and tenantable repair can only be broken once.[15] The lessee is bound by his covenant to repair, notwithstanding latent defects in the leased property at the time he took possession, in the absence of fraud or concealment on the part of the lessor in the execution of the contract.[16] As a lessor is under no general obligation to put or keep the demised premises in repair, his covenants to do so are not to be enlarged beyond their fair intent.[17] But where he expressly covenants in a lease to make certain specified repairs, such as repairing and maintaining fences on the leased premises, he will be held liable for a breach thereof.[18]

Waiver.— Where the lessor has covenanted to put the fences of a farm in good repair, and does repair them, the lessee's acceptance of the farm thereafter without objection estops him to set up a breach of this covenant. Williamson v. Miller, 55 Iowa 86, 7

A clause in a lease exempting the lessee from making repairs rendered necessary by reason of certain specified causes does not as a rule, in the absence of express covenant, obligate the landlord to make such repairs.[19] A lease stipulating that the tenant will make all necessary repairs, with certain specified exceptions, exempts the landlord from the duty of making all repairs other than those expressly excepted, and which he thereby covenants to make.[20]

(E) Nature of Repairs Included in Covenant. A covenant to keep the premises in repair is generally construed to mean and to impose on the covenantor the legal obligation to keep the premises in as good repair as when the agreement was made;[21] but does not require him to make repairs necessitating radical changes in covenant in the lease requiring the lessee to repair the premises or keep them in repair, an express stipulation binding the lessee to surrender the premises at the expiration of the term in as good order and condition as the same now are, reasonable use and wear and tear excepted, is construed to be merely the expression of an obligation which the law would imply in its absence, and does not impose upon the lessee a liability to repair or to restore in the event of a destruction of the premises, or a material part thereof, during the term, by fire or other unavoidable accident.[26] Now, however, in some jurisdictions, by statutory enactment or judicial construction, no covenant or promise by a lessee to keep and leave the demised premises in good repair will require him to rebuild if the premises are destroyed by fire or other casualty, without fault or negligence on his part, unless the language of the lease shows plainly that it was the intention of the parties that he should be so bound.[27]

A tenant in common of premises took a lease of his cotenant's interest therein. During the term of the lease he made extensive and permanent repairs, which the property required, with the knowledge and consent of the cotenant, and it was held that the co-stipulated to keep the demised premises in repairs, and fails to do so according to the terms of the lease, the tenant may, after reasonable notice to the landlord, make the repairs himself, and recover the expense thereof from the landlord,[30] or deduct the amount from the rent.[31] However, the fact that the lease authorizes the lessee to apply the rents to reimburse himself for moneys expended for necessary repairs does not deprive him of any other remedy to recover money so expended;[32] and the lessee is not bound to make such repairs himself, but may recover the damages sustained by him from the failure of the landlord to make them according to the agreement.[33]

Ann. 178, holding that a lessor has no right to make alterations during the term of the lease.

In New York city neither the landlord nor the contractor is liable to a tenant of the former for damages occasioned by the interruption of his business necessarily caused by the proper prosecution by the contractor of the work of repairing the leased premises, where the making of such repairs was required by an order of the department of buildings, whose orders the statutes make it obligatory on the owner to obey. the landlord, the latter is entitled to damages sustained by him by reason of alterations in the premises without his consent, and to an injunction to prevent the lessee from making further alterations.[43]

b. Actions — (I) Nature and Form of Remedy. Upon the breach of a covenant to make repairs, the proper remedy of the covenantee is an action on the contract.[44]

(II) Right of Action and Defenses. A landlord's covenant in a lease to make specified repairs, upon a breach thereof, becomes at once a chose in action in the tenant's favor upon which he may immediately sue;[45] and the fact that the tenant continued to occupy the leased premises,[46] or has failed to pay rent, does not bar his right of action for the lessor's breach of covenant.[47] Nor can a lessor excuse non-performance of his contract to repair by proof of the lessee's negligence and want of care. He can only be discharged from liability where he is prevented from performing his contract by act or default of the lessee.[48] The general rule is that where a tenant covenants to keep the premises in repair during the term, and at the expiration thereof to surrender them in like condition, and he omits to make the necessary repairs, the landlord's right of action accrues forthwith, and he need not wait until the end of the term.[49] But the rule is otherwise where the covenant is merely to leave the premises in good repair.[50] To sustain an action for damages caused by a breach of covenant to repair, previous demand on the covenantor is usually necessary.[51] But where the time within which the covenant was to have been performed has lapsed, the covenantor need not be put in default by a demand for performance, to entitle the covenantee to damages.[52]

(III) PLEADING.[53] In an action for breach of a covenant to repair, it is unnecessary for the complaint or petition to set out the contract in totidem verbis. It is sufficient if the agreement be stated according to its legal force and effect.[54] The time when the lease expired should be alleged,[55] but judgment for plaintiff will not be arrested for want of this allegation.[56] Although the covenant is followed by an exception in a distinct clause, the exception need not be noticed.[57] A breach of covenant by the lessee to pay for repairs made by the lessor may be pleaded by negativing the words of the covenant.[58] In an action to recover for repairs made by plaintiff which it was defendant's duty to make, it should be alleged that defendant had notice of plaintiff's making the repairs and the amount of his liability.[59]

The premises were in a bad condition and defendants covenanted to repair. After plaintiff had been in possession over a month he abandoned the premises because of a failure to make such repairs, and sued for damages. Defendants claimed that they repaired as soon as the weather would permit, and competent workmen could be employed. It appeared that in making repairs defendants would be compelled to drain the premises, and that this could be done only through a sewer, which was being constructed, and it was held that as defendants were entitled to reasonable time to repair it was for the jury to say whether they had kept their covenant and as to whether the lessee was justified in abandoning the premises.

(v) DAMAGES.[64] The general rule is that, on a breach of covenant by the landlord to make repairs, the measure of damages to which the lessee is entitled is the difference between the rental value of the premises as they were and what it would have been if the premises had been put and kept in repair, taking into consideration the purposes for which they were to be used.[65] In many cases the measure of damages for breach of the landlord's agreement to keep the demised premises in repair has been held to be expenses of making the repairs, and the value of the use of the premises during the time the tenant was deprived thereof by the landlord's default.[66] However, a tenant cannot recover of the landlord as damages for breach of covenant to repair profits which he might have made, or remote, contingent, or speculative damages, or such as might have been avoided by the lessee if he had made the repairs himself and charged their cost to the lessor.[67] In a few cases it has been held that the true measure of damages in such actions is the sum necessary to place the premises in that state of repair in which they were to be put according to the agreement, and not the detriment which the lessee suffered by their remaining out of repair during the term;[68] and that it is the duty of the covenantee, being in the care and use of the property, to take such measures in the matter of repairs as to reduce the damage to a minimum.[69] A lessee, knowing that his property if left upon the premises will be exposed to injury by failure of the lessor to repair, has no right to take the hazard, and if he does, and his property is injured, he cannot recover of his lessor therefor.[70] In an

d. Measure of Damages For Breach. In some jurisdictions the rule is that the measure of damages for breach of a covenant by a tenant to insure is the loss sustained by the landlord, not exceeding the amount of the policy which the tenant covenanted to procure.[78] In at least one jurisdiction, however, it is held

The lessee procured policies on all the property on the premises payable to himself and the lessor as interest might appear. Under these policies the buildings of the lessor were insured for four thousand one hundred and sixty-six dollars and seventy-six cents, and the machinery of the lessee contained in them for three thousand three hundred and thirty-three dollars and twenty-six cents, and it was held that this fulfilled the agreement of the lease, and that, one of the buildings having been destroyed by fire, the lessor was only entitled to receive the insurance placed on it, although it was not insured to its value.

Waiver.— Where a tenant under a lease containing a covenant to insure had in consequence of his agent's embezzlement failed to pay a premium and so the premises were left for the time uninsured, but the landlord had on discovering this afterward paid the premium and allowed the tenant to repay him, it was held that this was such a waiver of the forfeiture under the covenant as to bring the tenant within the exception of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, § 6, and preclude him from obtaining relief under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, § 2. that the measure of damages for breach of a covenant by a lessee to keep the demised premises insured for the benefit of the lessor is the cost in effecting the insurance, and not the amount of the insurance.[79]

3. Improvements by Tenant — a. Covenant to Make. Where the lessee covenants to make certain improvements on the demised premises, but the lease contains no stipulation as to the time within which such improvements are to be made, the lessee has the whole term within which to comply with such covenant.[80] Where the lease provides for the erection of buildings of a certain specified character by the lessee, and that the lessor should pay the value thereof at the end of the term, the buildings erected must conform to the specifications in the lease to enable the lessee to enforce the terms of recovery as to payment for such buildings.[81]

Ownership of and Right of Removal — (i) In General. The general rule is, in the absence of express stipulations to the contrary, that improvements made by a tenant on the demised premises in furtherance of the purpose of the lease may be removed by him before or at the expiration of the term, provided he leaves

Waiver of objection.— A lease stipulated that if the lessee erected a certain building upon the premises the lessor would at the expiration of the term pay the lessee the value thereof affixed by appraisers chosen by the parties. Appraisers were chosen, who made a valuation. The lessor refused to pay the appraised value, and the lessee brought suit the premises in as good condition as when he received them.[82] And where the tenant is given the right to make improvements and remove them during the term, the right to remove includes the right to do such damage to the freehold as such removal will naturally cause, and the tenant is only liable for such damages as are unnecessarily or wantonly caused by him.[83] The lessee's interest in such improvements is such that he may mortgage the same.[84]

(II) NATURE OF IMPROVEMENTS. Where the lease provides that all improvements made by the tenant shall at the expiration of the term become the property of the lessor, the improvements are not confined to merely such property as the law designates as improvements, and embrace all additions, erections, or alterations made by the tenant during the term.[85]

(III) CONDITION PRECEDENT. Where the lease provides that the lessee may at the end of the term remove all improvements placed upon the demised premises by him, all covenants in the lease on the part of the lessee being complied with, performance of such covenants is a condition precedent to the right of such removal, and the mere tender of performance at the end of the term is insufficient.[86]

(iv) Forfeiture or Waiver of Right. In some jurisdictions, where the lease contains a stipulation that any improvements put upon the premises during the term shall become the property of the tenant at the expiration thereof, a subsequent acceptance by the tenant of another lease, without any reservation of his right to remove the improvements, deprives him of such right.[87] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that where the lessee reserves to himself the right to remove any improvements put upon the premises by himself at the end of the term he does not lose such right by a renewal of the lease, or by taking a lease from a subsequent purchaser of the premises, which fails to specifically reserve the improvements.[88] A tenant cannot remove improvements made by him on the premises after a forfeiture, or reëntry for covenant broken.[89]

(v) Time of Removal. Where by express covenant, or by construction of law, the tenant is entitled to remove the improvements made by him at the end of the term, he is entitled to a reasonable time after the expiration of the term during which to remove such improvements, and to the right of ingress and egress for that purpose, although he cannot for that reason retain possession of the property.[90]

some jurisdictions it is held that, in the absence of reservation in the lease of the right to retain possession of the leased premises as security for the performance of the lessor's covenant to pay for improvements, the lessee has no right to retain possession of the premises after the expiration of the lease, and that his remedy is by action on the lease.[1] A landlord cannot escape liability under a covenant to pay for improvements made by the tenant by a conveyance of the reversion to a third person;[2] nor can he avoid the obligation by declaring a forfeiture of the lease for non-payment of rent or for other cause.[3]

(III) Lien For Value of Improvements. The general rule is that a covenant by the landlord to pay for improvements put upon the demised premises by the tenant gives the latter no lien upon the premises for the value of such improvements, in the absence of a stipulation that the tenant shall have such lien.[4] It has been held, however, in some jurisdictions that a lease which requires the tenant to erect certain buildings, the value of which is to be paid him by the lessor on the termination of the lease, gives the tenant an ownership in the premises to the extent of the value of the buildings so erected by him, and an equitable lien for such value on the whole premises.[5] A stipulation in a lease for a lien by the lessee on improvements made by him passes to an assignee of the lease.[6]

(iv) Option to Make or Renew Lease. Where by the terms of the lease the lessor has the option to renew the lease or pay for improvements, the lessee is not entitled to the value of improvements made on the property after the lessor has exercised his option by a renewal of the lease,[7] and he may waive his claim for the value of the improvements.[8] The lessor must, however, exercise his option on the day the term expires or he will lose his right to enforce a renewal of the lease and become bound for the value of the improvements.[9] Nor can he escape liability by extending the term for one day.[10] Where the lessee covenants to make certain improvements on the demised premises, and the lessor agrees either to pay for them at the end of the term or renew the lease, the improvements at the end of the renewal term to belong to the lessor, the title to such improvements vests at once in the lessor, although subject to all the lessee's rights under the lease.[11]

(v) Rights of Assignee of Lessee. The general rule is that a covenant by the lessor to pay the lessee the value of all improvements made upon the demised premises during the term runs with the land, and an action on such a covenant may be maintained by the assignee of the lessee.[12]

Arbitration to determine value.—Where the lease contained a covenant that the lessor should renew at a rent to be fixed by umpires or that at his option he should instead of renewing pay for the building at a price to be similarly fixed, it was held that the election of the lessor to take the buildings bound him, and that the lessee was entitled to the benefit of the findings of the umpires. (VI) Rights and Liabilities of Assignee of Reversion. The decisions are not harmonious upon the question as to whether a covenant on the part of the landlord to pay for improvements made by the lessee is binding upon the assignees of the lessor where they are not named in the covenant, some of the cases holding that such covenants run with the land, and bind the lessor's assignees;[13] while another line of decisions hold that such covenants, relating as they do to a thing not in esse, do not run with the land, or bind the assignee, unless he be named in the covenant.[14]

(VII) Upon Termination of Tenancy by Sale of Premises. Where the lease stipulates that the lessor shall pay for improvements put upon the premises by the lessee during the term, provided the premises are sold during the term, such covenant contemplates a perfected sale during the term,[15] and where the sale is not thus perfected, or the possession of the lessee is not disturbed, the latter is not entitled to the value of the improvements under such covenants.[16]

(VIII) Appraisement. The general rule is that if a lease contains an agreement for the submission of the question of the value of the improvements made by the lessee to third parties as appraisers, such agreement, although binding upon the parties, is not a submission to arbitration, nor subject to the same rules, such as requiring the appraisers to be sworn and the giving of due notice of the hearing to the parties.[17] There are, however, decisions to the effect that unless the agreement to submit the question of the value of the improvements to appraisers expressly shows that the parties intended that the appraisers should decide the questions in dispute without the aid or presence of the parties, or it is evident that such was the intention, as where the matter is one merely of appraisal, there no notice given of a previous assignment of the lease by the lessee to the complainant for the tenant of the lessee's wife, and it was held that a bill filed by the complainant more than a year after the expiration of the lease, for the value of the improvements, could not be maintained.

must be a hearing, and the appraisers must give both parties notice of time and place of meeting.[18] Where, however, the lessor refuses to appoint an appraiser, according to the agreement, the lessee cannot have an ex parte appraisement made, but must resort to his action on the covenant, and have his damages ascertained by a jury.[19]

d. Action For Breach of Covenant — (i) Right and Nature of. The general rule is that the remedy of a covenantee on a breach of a covenant to make improvements is an action at law;[20] although it has been held that where a lessee covenants to make certain improvements, upon a breach thereof, equity will compel him either to make the improvements, or to pay the value thereof.[21]

(ii) Pleading.[22] In an action for breach of a covenant to make improvements, if the liability of defendant depends upon the performance of a prior covenant or condition on the part of plaintiff, the performance or tender of performance of such condition must be averred.[23]

(iii) Damages.[24] The general rule is that upon a lessee's breach of covenant to make improvements, a lessor can recover only what it would cost to make them, and the difference in the rental value of the land until they could be made after the expiration of the term,[25] although in some jurisdictions it has been held that the proper compensation to be paid for improvements made by a tenant on the leased premises is their actual cost.[26] Where the lessor covenants to pay the lessee the cash value of the improvements on the premises at the expiration of the term, the measure of the lessee's damages for breach of covenant is the value of the improvements at the time of the expiration of the lease, and not their value when made.[27]

4. Improvements by Landlord — a. In General. In the absence of express stipulation or agreement to that effect the tenant is not liable to the landlord for permanent improvements upon the demised premises made by the latter.[28] Where the lessor agrees to make certain improvements, but fails to do so, the lessee is not bound to make them and look to the lessor for reimbursement; but he may recoup the difference between the rental value of the property with and without the stipulated improvements.[29] Where by the terms of the lease the lessor stipulates to make certain improvements prior to the occupancy of the lessee, a notice by the lessee that he will not comply with the terms of the lease, and take possession of the property, is sufficient to absolve the lessor from his obligation to make such improvements.[30]

b. Actions For Breach of Covenant. In an action for breach of covenant on the part of the lessor to make specified improvements, the measure of damages to the lessee is the difference between the rental value of the premises with the improvements and its rental value without them.[31]

5. Condition of Premises at Termination of Tenancy — a. In General. Independently of express covenant, the law imposes upon the lessee an obligation to so treat the premises that no substantial injury be done thereto during his occupancy, and that the property be restored to the landlord at the end of the term unimpaired by the negligence of the tenant.[32]

b. Covenants in Relation Thereto. A covenant to surrender the premises at the expiration of the term in as good condition as the reasonable wear and tear thereof will permit, damages by the elements excepted, does not protect the tenant from liability for waste resulting from accidents occurring without his fault.[33] Where a lease permits the lessee to make such alterations as are requisite to his business, but stipulates that the lessee shall surrender the premises at the end of the term in as good state and condition as reasonable use and wear thereof will permit, where such alterations injuriously affect the condition of the premises, it is the duty of the lessee to restore the premises to their former condition in respect to the changes so made.[34] A covenant to surrender the premises in as good condition as when granted, usual wear and tear excepted, only requires the tenant to leave the premises in as good condition as when he received them, and does not require him to repair injuries caused by a former tenant.[35]

c. Performance or Breach of Covenant. Where a tenant covenants to leave the demised premises in good repair at the expiration of the term, there is no breach of such covenant until the end of the term, and no right of action accrues to the landlord prior to that time.[36]

d. Persons By and Against Whom Covenants May Be Enforced. A covenant on the part of the tenant to surrender the premises at the expiration of the term in as good condition as when received, or to surrender certain personal property on the premises at the end of the term, is binding on the tenant's assignee,[37] and inures to the benefit of the assignee of the reversion.[38]

e. Actions For Breach of Covenant — (i) NATURE OF. An action for breach of covenant is an action upon the covenant and not an action in tort.[39]

(ii) EVIDENCE.[40] In an action on a breach of covenant to surrender the premises in good repair, the only question is as to the condition of the premises when surrendered, and whether the tenant has complied with his contract; hence evidence is not admissible to prove the condition of the premises when leased.[41] In an action by a landlord for breach of his tenant's contract to return the premises in as good repair as received, evidence tending to show the difference between the value of the premises as received by the lessees and their value at the expiration of the lease is admissible, and is sufficient to take the question of damages to the jury.[42]

New leases.— Plaintiff leased a building to defendant, to be surrendered in the same condition as at the time of the lease, reasonable wear and tear excepted. New leases were made from time to time, the tenancy extending over seven years, and it was held that there was no waiver of the right of action for the breach of this covenant by making the consecutive leases, and the question of the breach should relate to the final and actual surrender, and not to the technical surrenders during the tenancy. (III) Damages.[43] In an action by the lessor for breach of covenant in a lease to deliver up the premises in as good condition as they were in at the inception of the lease, the measure of damages is the amount required to restore the premises to the condition they were in at the beginning of the lease, due allowance being made for reasonable use and wear.[44]

(IV) Trial.[45] As to whether the injury to the demised premises was caused by reasonable use and wear thereof is a question for the jury.[46]

6. Property of Tenant on Premises at Termination of Lease — a. Rights as to. A tenant has a reasonable time after the termination of the tenancy to remove all personal property belonging to him from the premises, and is entitled to free ingress and egress for that purpose.[47] Where the landlord prevents an outgoing tenant from removing personal property belonging to the tenant, the latter may treat such conduct as a conversion by the landlord, and sue for the value of the property.[48]

b. Care of. Where a tenancy has been legally terminated, the landlord, or one entitled to the possession of the premises, may, after reasonable opportunity has been given the tenant to remove his goods, and he neglects to do so, remove such property from the premises, if he exercises such care in so doing as the nature of the property demands, and leaves it in such a condition that the owner by reasonable diligence can take it uninjured.[49]

Burden of proof as to waiver.— Where the lessor of land, who has also mortgaged it to the lessee, takes it back at the end of the term in a condition inferior to that required by the lease, without any claim for damages, there is a presumption of undue influence, arising from their relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, which puts on the lessee the burden of proving that the land was accepted as a compliance with the lease, and without any such influence. b. Failure to Repair — (I) General Rule. Since as a general rule there must be some actual negligence or misfeasance to support an action in tort, a tenant cannot recover from a landlord for personal injuries caused by his failure to make repairs on the demised premises which he had covenanted to make;[52] some of the cases holding that the landlord must have had due notice of the defects calling for repairs in order to render him liable on the ground of negligence.[53] Where repairs are voluntarily made by the landlord, such fact is not an admission of liability on the part of the landlord to make repairs generally and to keep the premises in repair.[54]

(II) Portions of Premises in Landlord's Control. The rule relieving the landlord, in the absence of a special agreement, from making ordinary repairs during the term, does not release him from liability in cases of injuries resulting from his failure to keep in proper repair such portions of a house as are not leased to any particular tenant, but are retained in the control of the landlord

Witty v. Matthews, 52 N. Y. 512. Where such agreement has been made, the measure of damages for the breach of the contract is the expense of doing the work which the landlord agreed to do, but did not. A contract to repair does not contemplate that, as damages for the failure to keep it, any personal injuries shall grow out of the defective condition of the premises; because the duty of the tenant, if the landlord fails to keep his contract to repair, is to perform the work himself, and recover the cost in an action for that purpose, or upon a counter-claim in an action for the rent, or, if the premises are made untenantable by reason of the breach of the contract, the tenant may move out, and defend in an action for the rent as upon an eviction. for the common use of several tenants.[55] Although in several jurisdictions it is held that the same rule applies in the lease of a portion of a building as in the lease of the whole, and a lessee cannot fix the liability to repair portions of the building not leased upon his lessor by some supposed implied covenant to that effect, when he had it in his power to create this covenant expressly in the written contract, and failed to do so.[56] However, the general rule is that in the absence of statute[57] the owner of a tenement is under no legal obligation to keep lights in the hallways of the tenement, and that the absence of lights does not prove negligence.[58]

some cases it has been held that a landlord failing to exercise due care in keeping the demised premises safe, where it is his duty to do so, is liable to a tenant injured by reason of a defect in the premises, although the landlord had no actual knowledge of the defect.[71]

h. Contributory Negligence of Injured Party — (i) In General. A landlord is not liable for injuries sustained by a tenant or occupant of the leased premises for failure to make necessary repairs where such injury is due to contributory negligence on the part of such tenant or occupant.[72] Thus, if a tenant by ordinary care could have avoided the consequences to himself caused by the landlord's negligence, he is not entitled to recover.[73]

(ii) Knowledge of Defective Condition of Premises. The general rule is that where a tenant has knowledge of the defective condition of the premises, and continues thereafter to use or occupy the same, he is presumed to assume the risk, and in case of injury resulting from such defects he is held to be guilty of contributory negligence, and hence cannot recover therefor.[74] However, mere knowledge of the defective condition of the premises is not conclusive evidence of contributory negligence as a matter of law.[75]

i. Injuries Due to Negligence of Cotenant — (i) In General. A landlord is not liable for injuries to a tenant resulting from the negligence or misfeasance of a cotenant, where he is guilty of no negligence or omission of duty.[76] However, if injury results to a tenant from the negligence of the landlord, either in constructing the building or in maintaining repairs on the premises, where it is his duty to do so, he is liable, and cannot divest himself of such liability by letting the portion of the premises upon which the nuisance or other cause of injury exists.[77]

(ii) Liability of Cotenant. As between different tenants under a common landlord, the question of liability for injuries from the condition of the premises is always one of negligence in the use of the premises; and this negligence may consist in the careless use of a well constructed apparatus, or the use of apparatus which the tenant had reason to know was unfit for use;[78] and it is no objection to a recovery by a tenant against his cotenant that a recovery may be had for the same wrong against the landlord.[79]

j. Actions — (I) Pleading.[80] In an action by a tenant against a landlord for injury to his person or property by reason of breach of contract or duty, the complaint should clearly and specifically set forth the breach complained of.[81] And, applying the well recognized rule that a pleading is to be construed most strongly against the pleader, and that no intendments can be indulged in its aid, a failure to aver in the petition or complaint the facts showing negligence on the part of defendant must be construed as implying that they do not exist, and renders the petition or complaint bad on demurrer.[82] The complaint should likewise sufficiently allege knowledge or notice of the defective condition of the premises on the part of defendant.[83]

(II) Evidence.[84] In an action for damages for injuries caused to the person or property of a tenant, any evidence is admissible which tends to show the defective condition of the property at the time of the injury,[85] or which has a bearing upon the question of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.[86] In an action by a tenant for injuries sustained, the burden of proof is upon him to show negligence on the part of defendant, and an absence of contributory negligence on his part.[87]

2. INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS — a. Duties of Landlord and Tenant to Third Persons. The general rule is that where there is neither privity of estate nor privity of contract the landlord is not liable for injuries sustained by third persons, unless by invitation, express or implied, he induces them to come upon the premises. In such cases the liability of the landlord is not contractual, but based upon some breach of duty. It must be shown that he has done or omitted to do some act which from his legal relations to the property constituted a breach of lord has covenanted to repair his agreement does not inure to the benefit of a stranger, and no action will lie in tort for a breach of the contract.[97] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that, while the landlord's liability does not rest upon contract but upon negligence, the contract to repair being a mere matter of inducement, from which arises his affirmative duty to exercise care as to the condition of the leased premises, if his negligence in making or failing to make repairs results in an unsafe condition of the premises, he is liable for injuries caused thereby to persons lawfully upon the premises who are not guilty of contributory negligence on their part.[98] If a third party goes upon premises without invitation, express or implied, the owner or occupant thereof is under no duty to look out for his safety, and if he be injured while there without lawful right, or as a bare licensee, no recovery can be had.[99]

d. Injuries Due to Negligent Acts or Omissions of Tenant or Cotenant. The lessor is not liable for injuries to a third person, or to his property, due to the negligence of the lessee, or his servants or agents, or to the defective condition of the premises occurring after the beginning of the lease, where such lessee is in absolute control of the property,[1] nor is a tenant responsible for the negligence of a cotenant, where he is entirely free from negligence.[2]

see or a third person,[3] unless the lessor still retains control of the property, or the injuries were due to some defect in the property existing at the commencement of the lease.[4]

f. Liability as Dependent on Knowledge or Notice of Defects. A lessor is not liable to third persons for injuries caused by the defective condition of the leased premises, unless he had knowledge or notice, actual or constructive, thereof.[5]

F. Eviction — 1. What Constitutes — a. In General. The general rule is that in order to constitute an eviction there must be not a trespass merely by the landlord, but something of a permanent character to deprive, and that does deprive, the tenant of the use of the demised premises, or of some part thereof.[6] However, it is unnecessary that there should be manual or physical expulsion or exclusion from the demised premises, or any part thereof, to constitute eviction.[7]

An eviction may be actual where there is a physical expulsion, or it may be constructive, which, although an eviction at law, does not deprive the tenant of actual occupancy.[8]

b. Prior Possession of Tenant. One cannot be evicted from premises of which he has never had possession, either actual or constructive, since there can be no technical eviction from premises without an antecedent possession by the tenant.[9]

c. Necessity of Abandonment by Tenant. There can be no constructive eviction without a surrender of possession of the premises by the tenant.[10]

d. Voluntary Surrender by Tenant. Where the tenant, not under compulsion but voluntarily, abandons the premises, there is no eviction.[11]

e. Acts or Omissions of Landlord — (i) In General. Any wrongful act of the landlord, either of commission or omission, which results in a substantial interference with the tenant's right of possession or enjoyment in whole or in part, may amount to an eviction;[12] although such acts must clearly indicate an intention on the part of the lessor that the lessee shall no longer continue to hold or enjoy the premises;[13] and an act of the lessor amounting to a mere trespass, and not interfering with the substantial enjoyment of the demised premises by the lessee, is not equivalent to an eviction.[14] Non-performance on the part of the

Any interference with the person of the tenant by the landlord, although on the de-

lessor of conditions precedent, if pleaded and proved, may be a complete defense to an action for rent, but cannot be considered in law an eviction.[15]

(II) Interference With Beneficial Use or Enjoyment of Premises. In some jurisdictions it is held that when the lessor creates or permits a nuisance in the vicinity of the demised premises,[16] or is guilty of acts that preclude the tenant from the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, in consequence of which he abandons possession, such acts amount to an eviction.[17]

(III) Failure of Landlord to Repair. The general rule is that failure of the lessor to make repairs on demised premises, even where he has covenanted to do so, will not amount to an eviction;[18] although in some cases, where the want of repair is so great as to render the premises untenantable, it has been held that such defects do not come under the head of ordinary repairs, and that the lessor's failure upon request to render the premises fit for occupancy

mised premises, is a trespass and not an eviction. Vatel v. Herner, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 149.

g. Assertion Of and Entry Under Title Paramount. Where a third party establishes a title to the demised premises superior to that of the lessor and takes possession by virtue of such title, the lessee is evicted by what is termed title paramount.[26] The mere existence of an outstanding title which is paramount to that of his landlord is no defense by a tenant to an action for rent, since there must be an ouster or disturbance by means of it to amount to an eviction.[27] However, since actual ouster is not necessary in order to constitute an eviction,[28] if a lessee, to prevent being actually expelled from the demised premises, yields possession thereof, and attorns in good faith to one who has a title paramount to that of the lessee and his lessor, and also a right to immediate possession, this is equivalent to an actual ouster.[29]

Tenant from year to year under parol lease.— Since one who makes a lease of land does not ipso facto covenant that his title to the property demised is good, a tenant from year to year under parol lease, who is evicted in consequence of the failure of his lessor's title, cannot maintain an action against the latter for breach of the lease. Gano v. Vanderveer, 34 N. J. L. 293.

Tenant in wrongful possession.— Where, in an action by the tenant against his landlord for wrongful eviction from the premises, it appears that the tenant was wrongfully in possession, his lease having expired at the time of the eviction, he cannot recover damages for being kept out of possession of the property. Randall v. Rosenthal, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. 822.

Assignee of lease.— The landlord is liable to the assignee of his lease for damages through an eviction under paramount title wherever he would have been similarly liable to the original lessee. McClenahan v. Gwynn, 3 Munf. (Va.) 556.

b. Defenses. It is no defense to an action by a tenant against the landlord to recover damages for eviction from the demised premises that the premises are being used for an unlawful purpose;[33] nor in such action can defendant show that plaintiff took a new lease from the paramount owner at a higher rate and sold it at a profit,[34] or that the lessee might have obtained other premises on more advantageous terms.[35]

c. Pleading.[36] In an action by a tenant against a landlord for damages for eviction by a third person by title paramount, the declaration or complaint should allege that such third party had lawful title, superior to that of the landlord at the time the lease was made, and identify the holder of such title.[37]

d. Evidence.[38] Any evidence bearing upon or tending to prove the eviction,[39] or bearing upon the question of the damages suffered by plaintiff, is admissible;[40] and the question as to whether the acts of the landlord amounted to an eviction is one of fact for the jury.[41] Thus, where a lessee conducts an established business on the leased premises, the loss of profits occasioned by an eviction, if ascertainable with a reasonable degree of certainty, may be considered in estimating damages therefrom.[42]

e. Damages[43] — (i) General Rule. The general rule is that the measure of the tenant's damages in case of eviction is the difference between the actual rental value of the demised premises, that is, the value of the use of the premises, and the rent reserved, estimated for the term of the lease,[44] together with other damages naturally resulting from the breach.[45]

(ii) Treble Damages. Under a statute entitling to treble damages a lessee successful in an action for illegal eviction, the proper practice is for the jury to find single damages, and for the court to treble them in a proper case.[46]

(iii) Exemplary Damages. In an action by a tenant against his landlord for eviction the damages should be merely compensatory, in the absence of any circumstances of oppression or aggravation.[47] However, where the eviction is accompanied by circumstances of aggravation, rendering it impossible to apply any fixed rule of law, the jury may give exemplary damages, to be graduated

VIII. RENT AND ADVANCES.

A. Rights and Liabilities — 1. In General — a. Nature of Rent. Rent as an incorporeal hereditament has been defined to be a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal.[49] If personal chattels are leased with the land, the rent issues out of the land only.[50] It has been held, however, that rent may issue, not only from lands and tenements corporeal, but also from the personal property necessary for their proper enjoyment.[51] By common usage the word "rent" may include the compensation to be paid for the occupation of land by a tenant, whether he holds under a written lease or at will or at sufferance,[52] and whether the amount to be paid has been defined by the agreement of the parties, or has been left indefinite.[53] Rent may be rendered in services, in goods, or in money,[54] and a stipulation in a lease that it shall be applied to a special purpose does not change its character as rent.[55]

b. Liability For Rent in General.[56] As a general rule rent does not accrue to the lessor as a debt until the lessee has enjoyed the use of the land.[57] Liability for rent, however, does not always depend upon the actual occupation of the premises during the time for which recovery is sought; legal possession, under the power given by the landlord, is sufficient,[58] unless the tenant enters under a

In such cases the personal property is really a part of the consideration of the rent, and it is only by a fictitious accommodation of the case to the defective definition, that it can be said that the rent issues exclusively out of the land.

c. Covenants and Agreements to Pay Rent — (I) In General. A covenant for the payment of rent, whether it be made by the grantee of lands in fee, reserving rent to the grantor,[64] or by a lessee for a term, belongs to that class of covenants which are annexed to and run with the land. The land itself is the principal debtor, and the covenant to pay rent is the incident. It follows the land upon which it is chargeable into the hands of the assignee.[65] A mere personal covenant, however, is not binding upon the assignee and does not run with the land.[66] A covenant to pay rent at the end of the year is dependent upon the right to occupy the land.[67]

(II) The Necessity of Consideration. A promise to pay rent like any other agreement requires a consideration to support it.[68] The demise itself,[69] or the right to occupy premises under a valid agreement of letting,[70] or the agreement for quiet enjoyment, implied in the fact of the demise,[71] constitutes a sufficient consideration for the agreement to pay rent. A promise to pay rent to one other than the lessor and who has no title is void for want of consideration.[72]

(III) Construction. In construing covenants to pay rent the rules governing the construction of contracts generally apply. The court will look to the intent of the parties and give effect to it if possible.[73] There is a conflict of authority

therefore where one, without the owner's consent, either express or implied, enters upon property, a mere trespasser, under claim of title in himself, no contract to pay for the use can be implied.[80] So where one enters on land under a contract to purchase, no liability for rent can be implied while the contract remains open,[81] or on the failure of the vendor to complete the contract,[82] or when the contract is rescinded by mutual agreement;[83] if, however, the contract fails through the fault of the vendee, he will be held liable for rent.[84] Where the use and occupation of real estate is under such circumstances as to show no expectation of rent by either party, no contract to pay rent will be implied;[85] thus occupancy of premises on the invitation of another,[86] or as caretaker,[87] raises no implied agreement to pay rent; but where the occupation is by the permission of the landlord an implied undertaking to pay rent may be inferred from slight circumstances.[88] The fact that the parties are related may be considered, but it is not sufficient to raise the presumption that the tenant was to have the premises rent free.[89]

may be rebutted.[92] Where the lease contains an express covenant to pay rent for such time as the lessee holds over the implied promise will yield.[93]

(II) What Constitutes Holding Over Affecting Liability For Rent — (A) In General. While it has been held that in the absence of qualifying circumstances implying consent to a holding under some new arrangement, the holding over is a legal trespass, and does not depend on the intention of the tenant; and that it is a wrongful holding, whatever the cause, although not culpable in a moral sense, and the rights of a landlord are definitely fixed by law;[94] the better rule, however, seems to be that the tenant must have been either deliberately or negligently at fault,[95] and where the holding over is unavoidable in the strictest sense no implied liability for rent will arise.[96] Where the property of the tenant is permitted to remain upon the premises in the same condition as before the expiration of the term, a holding over is implied.[97] But it is otherwise where there is a clear intent to surrender possession, accompanied by the removal of a great bulk of the property.[98] The duration of the holding over is not the test of liability.[99] A mere temporary absence and return will not avoid the effect of holding over.[1]

(B) Pending Payment For Improvements. A tenant in possession at the expiration of a lease who has made authorized improvements which the landlord has engaged to purchase at the expiration of the time may retain his possession until such purchase may be performed; but not without meanwhile being chargeable for rent;[2] but occupancy for the removal of improvements under the terms of the lease is not a holding subjecting one to liability for rent.[3]

(C) By Subtenant. Where a tenant of a lessee holds over after the end of the lease, the lessee is liable for rent in the same manner as if he had remained personally in possession.[4]

(D) Under Agreement For Lease. Where a tenant holds over his term on the landlord's promise to give him a lease, and quits the premises on his refusal to do so, there is no implied agreement for rent during the period of occupation.[5]

e. Release From Liability — (I) In General. Nothing but a surrender,[6] a release, or an eviction[7] can in whole or in part absolve a tenant from the obligation of his covenant to pay rent.[8] A release of liability for rent may be express or implied from the conduct of the parties.[9] If the release is express no particular words or phrases are necessary; any words which show the intention of the parties are sufficient.[10] If the lease is parol a verbal agreement to release the tenant is effectual to defeat an action for the rent.[11]

tenant, cannot afterward charge the original tenant for rent accruing subsequently to such change.[12] An agreement to release the original lessee and accept another tenant in his stead need not be express, but may be inferred from the conduct of the parties.[13]

2. Deposits and Other Security For Rent[14] — a. In General. It is often provided in the lease that the tenant shall furnish security for the payment of the rent.[15] If the security offered is adequate, it makes no difference whether it is personal or real security.[16] The renewal of a lease operates as a renewal of the agreement regarding the security.[17]

b. Forfeiture of Deposit. Where money is deposited as liquidated damages, or as security for the covenants of the lease generally, the landlord, after dispossessing the tenant for a breach of the lease, is entitled to retain the deposit:[18] and this, notwithstanding a statute which provides that the issue of a warrant in summary proceedings cancels all further rights and obligations under the lease.[19] The retention of the deposit by the landlord does not deprive him of his right to also recover for rent due upon the covenants of the lease during the period of the occupancy.[20] Where a tenant deposits money as security for the payment of rent and the performance of the covenants of the lease, and is dispossessed during the term for failing to pay rent, the deposit is not forfeited; the tenant is entitled to recover the balance remaining after deducting therefrom the amount of damages suffered by the landlord from the breaches of covenants on his part prior to the dispossession.[21] Even in some cases where the lease recites that the deposit is made as liquidated damages, the tenant has been held to be entitled to the surplus.[22]

c. Recovery of Deposit — (I) In General. Where money is deposited by one as a pledge of good faith in the making of a lease, he is entitled to recover it when upon inspection he refuses to execute the lease.[23] So also when a lease is annulled by the act of the landlord,[24] or the deposit is made to secure the payment of specific rent which never accrues.[25]

(II) Actions. When a tenant becomes entitled to the return of a deposit made as security for the rent, he may bring an action of conversion,[26] or he may disregard the conversion, and recover upon proof of the deposit, the breach of the covenants of the lease, and the refusal of the landlord to pay over the money.[27] In an action to recover such a deposit, the burden is on the tenant, as part of his affirmative case, to give prima facie proof of performance of his covenants.[28] A breach of covenant by the tenant resulting in damage to the landlord, to be available as a defense to such an action, must be pleaded as a counter-claim.[29]

d. Mortgages to Secure. As security for the payment of rent mortgages on real or personal property are often given.[30] Crops to be grown on leased premises are a proper subject of such a mortgage.[31] If the mortgage is of personal property the fact that the landlord takes possession of the property on its abandonment by the tenant does not operate as a satisfaction of the mortgage deed.[32] Where the mortgage is given to secure the rent payable under the lease, it does not cover rent due for use and occupation if the tenant holds over after the destruction of the premises.[33] Where a lease of personal property is secured by mortgage, the lessor may upon default in payment of rent, at his option, retake the property, or procure a judgment on the mortgage, but an election to pursue the latter remedy precludes the lessor from maintaining replevin.[34] into possession,[36] the landlord may let the premises lie idle and recover rent for the whole term,[37] or may put an end to the contract of lease by reëntry.[38] The lessor, however, must show that he has performed his part, and that the premises are ready for occupancy.[39] The taking of possession by one of two lessees is in law a possession by both.[40] And where the lessee undertakes to procure possession from a former tenant, and agrees with him that he may remain in possession after the expiration of his lease, the possession of the former tenant is the possession of the lessee, and he is liable for use and occupation, although he afterward refused to take possession.[41]

b. Failure of Lessor to Deliver Possession[42] — (I) In General. Delivery of possession of the demised premises by the lessor to the lessee is necessary to the obligation to the latter to pay rent;[43] and the rule is the same whether the lessor refuses or is unable to give possession.[44] The existence and breach of an oral condition that a lease was not to take effect unless possession was delivered a certain time before the commencement of the term may be proved by parol.[45]

(II) Of Part of Premises. Where a contract of lease is entire, if the lessor refuses to deliver possession of a portion of the premises he is estopped from collecting any part of the rent agreed upon after demand by the lessee for the possession of such portion of the premises,[46] although the lessee retains possession of a portion of the premises after such demand and refusal, unless he waives complete performance of the contract.[47] The act of a landlord in continuing in possession of a small portion of the demised premises for a brief period after the expiration of the time fixed by the lease for his giving possession of it without any intent to keep the tenant out of possession will not exonerate the tenant from payment of rent.[48]

36. Slight facts tending to show a dealing with the demised premises by the tenant are sufficient to prove the taking possession by him. Smith v. Barber, 96 N. Y. App. Div. 236, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 317.

(III) Premises in Occupation of Third Person. Where a lessee does not and cannot enter under his lease because debarred from doing so by the occupancy of the premises by another tenant with superior right, the former is not liable for rent.[49] The occupancy of another, however, at the time of the letting, or afterward, is no answer by a lessee to a demand for rent unless the tenant is in possession under a title paramount to that of the lessor.[50] So also if at the time of taking a lease lessee knew that there was a tenant in possession, and tried to eject him, and failing in this, finally assigned his lease to such tenant, he cannot set up against a suit for the rent that he was never let into possession.[51] Where the landlord is unable to give possession of all the demised premises, the incoming tenant is not bound to enter a portion thereof, which would be of no use to him for the purpose for which the lease was made;[52] but he is put to his election, on the date when the term begins, either to notify the landlord of the termination and cancellation of the lease, or to waive his right to obtain complete possession of all the premises on that date.[53]

(IV) As Defense Against Assignee of Lessor. In an action for rent by the assignee of the lessor against the lessee, it is only an exclusion from the occupancy since the assignment that can be set up as defense.[54]

c. Disturbance of Possession of Tenant. When a tenant is deprived of the use and enjoyment of the property by the acts of the landlord, the obligation to pay rent ceases.[55] If a tenant takes a lease with knowledge that the demised premises are subject to a permanent servitude, he is liable for the rent, although in consequence thereof he is deprived of the beneficial use of a part of the premises.[56] to the full extent secured by the lease authorizes the tenant to abandon the premises, and exonerates him from the payment of rent.[57] It is not enough, however, to justify a tenant's abandonment of the demised premises and release from liability for rent that at some time during the period of his occupancy he was deprived of their beneficial enjoyment by the wrongful act of the landlord, but it should appear that the deprivation was persisted in and continued at the time of the abandonment.[58] Nor is it enough that the lessee apprehends a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment.[59] Nevertheless such acts of the lessor will not excuse payment of rent if the tenant remains in possession of the premises.[60]

e. Objectionable Occupancy of Other Portion of Premises. The rule has been laid down that the mere fact that the lessor rents premises to a tenant who carries on a business incompatible with the convenient occupation of adjoining premises also rented by the same landlord does not amount to an eviction, and, in the absence of a provision to that effect in the lease, does not relieve the tenant who suffers from the nuisance, from the obligation of paying rent under his lease.[61] There are decisions, however, to the effect that such conduct on the part of the landlord constitutes a constructive eviction,[62] especially where a landlord lets apartments in his building as a dwelling, and then knowingly permits another part to be used for purposes which render the tenant's apartments unfit for occupancy by a respectable family, when he has legal power to prevent such use, and for that reason the tenant moves away.[63]

f. Entry to Make Repairs — (i) In General. How far the entry of the landlord to make repairs will work an eviction must depend to some extent upon the circumstances of each particular case.[64]

(ii) Ordinary Repairs or Repairs For Convenience of Tenant. Where the landlord is bound by the lease to make repairs, and the repairs are merely such as are required by ordinary wear and tear, no difficulty is likely to arise. And where he is not bound to do so, but makes repairs for the benefit of the property and the convenience of the tenant, the same rule will apply, since tenants are more willing as a general rule to have the property put in order than landlords are to incur the expenditure.[65]

(iii) Extraordinary Repairs. Where, however, the repairs are not ordinary, but are of a character to deprive the tenant of all beneficial enjoyment of the premises, or at least seriously interrupt it while the repairs are in progress, a question of a different character is presented. In such a case it is usually held that an entry to make repairs amounts to an eviction and suspends the rent.[66] In all cases, however, to be relieved of liability for rent the tenant must quit possession.[67]

(iv) With Consent of Tenant. Where the entry of the landlord is with the consent of the tenant express or implied, there is no eviction, and the tenant is not relieved from liability for rent.[68] Some cases hold, however, that, while an entry to make repairs with the consent of the landlord does not constitute an eviction, it amounts to a rescission of the lease, and the rent is suspended.[69]

g. Effect of Existence of War. Where a tenant is deprived of the beneficial use and enjoyment of the premises by the casualties of war he is relieved from liability for rent;[70] but to complete the defense, the tenant must show that he rescinded the contract by a surrender, or an offer of surrender, of all benefits therein which remain to him.[71]

h. Effect of Legal Restrictions on Use of Premises. Lessees are not released from liability for rent by city ordinances restricting uses of the leased property, since they are not thereby deprived of the beneficial use of the premises.[72]

i. Assertion of Title Paramount.[73] The mere fact that a title to leased premises is adjudged to be in parties who are strangers to the lease is no defense to an action for rent.[74] Where, however, the lessee is disturbed in his occupation by a party having a title paramount to that of his lessor, so that he cannot legally continue his occupation under the lessor, without rendering himself liable as a trespasser to the other party, he may yield the possession, and take a new lease under him, or he may abandon possession; in either case he will thereafter not be liable to pay rent to the original lessor. Such an entry and disturbance are equivalent to an ouster.[75]

j. Termination of Tenancy. A landlord who terminates a tenancy, under a written lease, between the stated periods when the rent is regularly payable, cannot maintain an action for rent under the lease, or an action of assumpsit for use and occupation of the premises after the last rent day prior to termination of the tenancy.[76] The same rule applies to a similar termination of a parol demise.[77] But dispossession of a tenant by summary proceedings for non-payment of rent due, and during the term for which it is payable in advance, is not a waiver of the right to sue for such rent.[78]

k. Appropriation of Premises to Public Use. Under perhaps the better rule, a tenant's liability for rent is not affected by condemnation of part of the leased premises.[79] A different rule has been adopted, however, in some jurisdictions,

The theory upon which these cases proceed is that a taking under eminent domain is not a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and does not technically amount to an eviction. Corrigan v. Chicago, 144 Ill. 537, 33 N. E. 746, 21 L. R. A. 212; Stubbings v. Evanston, 136 Ill. 37, 26 N. E. 577, 29 Am. St. Rep. 300, 11 L. R. A. 839; Patterson v. Boston, 20 Pick. The lessee takes his term just as every other owner of real estate takes title subject to the right and power of the public to take it or a part of it for public use, whenever the public necessity and convenience require it. Such a right is no encumbrance; such a taking is no breach of the covenant of the lessor for quiet enjoyment. The lessee holds and enjoys exactly what was granted him as a consideration for the reserved rent; which is the whole use and beneficial enjoyment of the estate leased, subject to the sovereign right of eminent domain on the part of the public. If he has suffered any loss or diminution in the actual enjoyment of its use, it is not by the act by sufferance of the landlord, but it is by the act of the public, against whom the law has provided him an ample remedy. If he is compelled to pay full compensation for the estate actually diminished in value, this is an element in computing the compensation that he is to receive from the public. In this view it becomes unimportant whether the taking for public use diminished leased premises, little or much, in quantity or value; all this will be taken into consideration in assessing the damages which lessee may sustain. Corrigan v. Chicago, 144 Ill. 537, 33 N. E. 746, 21 L. R. A. 212; Stubbings v. Evanston, 136 namely, that as to the part of the leased premises appropriated to public use the rent is extinguished.[80] Where the estate of both landlord and tenant in the entire premises is extinguished by condemnation, the obligation to pay rent ceases.[81]

1. Eviction[82] — (I) IN GENERAL. There are some dicta in the books that an eviction must be by process of law, in order to release a tenant from obligation to pay rent,[83] but there seems to be no reason for this rule and it is not now considered necessary.[84] An actual eviction[85] of a tenant during the term is of course a good defense to an action for rent.[86] A tenant's liability to pay rent is not dis-

A. 212, where it is said that while condemnation proceedings may not amount to a technical eviction, where the entire tract of land is taken, the effect is to abrogate the relation of landlord and tenant. By virtue of such proceeding, whatever title the tenant has in the land passes to the state or corporation in whose behalf the right of eminent domain is exercised, and precisely the same is true of the landlord's estate or interest. The effect is an absolute extinguishment of the right and title of both in or control over the subject of the demise. It is in effect eviction by paramount right, and has all the force of eviction by a paramount title, coupled with a conveyance by the owners of their respective interests.

Forbidding a tenant to under-let the premises, is no bar to action for rent, although the ence by the landlord with the tenant's enjoyment of the premises which do not amount to an eviction, but which may be either acts of trespass or eviction, according to the intention with which they are done. If those acts amount to a clear indication on the landlord's part that the tenant shall no longer continue to hold the premises they constitute an eviction.[90] The question of eviction therefore depends upon all the circumstances of the case and is to be determined by the jury.[91] In order that a constructive eviction[92] may relieve from rent, however, there must be an abandonment of the premises.[93] A tenant is not justified in abandoning premises where the facts constituting the alleged eviction have ceased for some time before the abandonment.[94] In case of an abandonment without the fault of the landlord or in consequence of his acts, he may reënter and again rent the premises and credit the lessee with the proceeds, and his so taking possession does not relieve from the payment of rent.[95] If the tenant returns after the eviction and occupies the premises the right to the rent is restored.[96] Where a tenant voluntarily yields possession of the premises there is no eviction.[97]

(II) From Part of Premises. If a lessor enters and evicts a tenant wrongfully from a part of the demised premises, the eviction operates as a suspension of the entire rent until possession shall be regained.[98] And this is the general rule, although the tenant remains in possession of the remainder to the end of the term.[99] It has been held, however, that in such a case a tenant is liable upon a quantum meruit.[1] A payment of rent after the wrongful entry by the landlord on the part of the premises, and while the tenant is kept out of that portion, is not a waiver of the tenant's right to withhold the rent until possession is restored.[2] If the acts are done by the lessor with the consent of the lessee they do not constitute an eviction.[3]

(III) Liability as Affected by Time Rent Accrues. To render an eviction of a tenant a valid defense against the landlord's claim for rent, it must take place before the rent falls due. In other words eviction of a tenant is no defense to an action for rent due at the time of eviction.[4] The rule is the same, releasing the tenant from liability if the premises become untenantable.[9] If the landlord has falsely represented to the lessor that the premises are tenantable, and after learning that they are not, the tenant has vacated them, the lessor cannot recover rent.[10]

(II) Defective Plumbing and Drainage. A tenant cannot abandon demised premises and avoid payment of rent on the ground that after he took possession he discovered that the house was permeated with sewer gas owing to defective plumbing, unless provision is made therefor in the lease;[11] but if the landlord falsely represents that the house is in good condition,[12] or fraudulently conceals from the tenant his knowledge of the dangerous condition of the drains,[13] or if the premises are rendered untenantable through affirmative acts of the landlord, the tenant is entitled to abandon the premises and refuse to pay the rent.[14] A statute relieving tenants from payment of rent where the premises have been injured by the elements so as to become untenantable[15] does not relieve a tenant from paying rent because the plumbing is found to be defective.[16]

(III) Unhealthful and Infected Premises. In the absence of an express covenant a lessor cannot be understood to undertake that the premises embraced in the lease will remain free from infectious diseases during the term,[17] and consequently it is no defense to a suit for rent of a dwelling-house that it is, and at the time of the letting was, unhealthy, noisome, and unsuitable for a dwelling, if no fraudulent representation or concealment on the part of the lessor be shown.[18]

(IV) Failure to Heat Premises. Failure of the landlord to comply with the provisions of the lease in relation to heating the premises is a defense to an action for the rent;[19] and to maintain such defense the tenant need show only a breach of such provision and not that he was obliged to vacate the premises.[20] Where rent is payable each month in advance, it is no defense to an action therefor that the lessor was to furnish heat throughout the month, and that the lessee could not be compelled to pay rent for that month unless he knew that the lessor would perform his covenant;[21] but if the tenant is compelled by lack of heat to abandon the premises he is not thereafter liable for rent.[22]

(v) For Lack of Repairs. Where it is the duty of the lessor to make repairs, a tenant is not entitled to abandon the premises, so as to relieve himself from liability for rent, without first putting the lessor in default by affording him an opportunity to remedy the defect.[23] If, however, the landlord fails to repair after notice, the tenant may abandon the premises, and is not liable for rent thereafter.[24] If the lease contains a covenant by the tenant to repair, and the premises become untenantable by his own fault, he is not exonerated from the payment of rent.[25]

Such a statutory provision, however, applies only to cases where the injury rendering the building untenantable occurs after the execution of the lease,[28] during the lessee's actual occupancy;[29] and possession of the premises must be surrendered within a reasonable time.[30]

(III) Destruction by Order of Public Authorities. As no warranty results by implication of law that land leased shall remain in the same condition, the lessee cannot refuse payment of the rent on the ground that after the execution of the lease the premises were destroyed, or their use rendered inconvenient, by an act done in the lawful exercise of the authority of a public corporation.[35]

(IV) Effect of Provisions as to Rebuilding. A provision in a lease relieving the lessee from his agreement to rebuild the leased premises if destroyed by unavoidable accident does not relieve him from the payment of rent upon the happening of that event.[36] But where under the lease the landlord has the option to rebuild, which he elects not to do, the tenant is relieved from the obligation to pay rent, and is no longer entitled to possession of the vacant premises.[37]

(V) Statutory Provisions—(A) In General. In many states the rule has been now modified by statute so as to discharge the tenant from rent or allow the reduction thereof when the premises are accidentally destroyed without fault of the lessee.[38] Where the parties have provided by a covenant against the contingency of the destruction of the premises by fire, such covenant furnishes the measure of defendant's exemption from liability, and the statutes have no application.[39]

(B) Nature and Extent of Injury. Statutes relieving a tenant from payment of rent where the premises are destroyed or so injured as to be untenantable apply only to destruction or injury resulting from sudden and unexpected action of the elements, or other cause, and not to gradual decay.[40] The destruction contemplated is such as permanently unfits the premises for occupancy;[41]

such an injury as cannot be repaired, but necessitates the rebuilding of the premises.[42]

(VI) Time of Destruction. A destruction of premises by fire between the making of the lease and the commencement of the term discharges the tenant from his obligation to pay rent;[43] but where the premises are destroyed during the day on which an instalment of rent is payable, the tenant remains liable for the rent, since it was due when the day commenced, and before the building was destroyed.[44] Under the same principle, where the rent is required to be paid in advance, a proportion of the rent cannot be recovered back when the premises are destroyed before the end of the term for which it was paid.[45]

(VII) Occupation After Destruction. After the termination of a lease by fire the tenant is liable for the reasonable value of the use and occupation of the premises which he continues to occupy for his own purposes.[46]

c. Failure of Landlord to Repair or Make Improvements. A tenant under a lease containing no covenant to repair cannot successfully defend an action for rent by showing that the premises are out of repair.[47] Where the lease contains a covenant by the landlord to deliver the premises in good condition and repair, and to make the alterations and repairs required during the term, such a covenant, and the covenant by the lessee to pay rent, are usually considered as independent covenants;[48] and the tenant, having entered upon the demised premises under the lease and continued in possession, is bound to pay the rent reserved, and cannot defend on the ground that the covenant on the part of the lessor to put the premises in repair, or to make the changes and alterations required, has not been performed.[49] The tenant may, however, set up a claim for damages for breach of Repudiation of lease by tenant before time for repairs.— The landlord need not, as a condition precedent to recover rent under a lease, make repairs which he covenanted to make before the commencement of the term, where the tenant, before the landlord was in default as to the repairs, repudiated the lease. election whether he will retain possession under his lease or surrender it to his lessor.[54] And he must surrender the whole of the premises.[55]

e. Revival of Liability by Putting Premises in Tenantable Condition. It is sometimes provided that if, after leased premises have been destroyed, they again become fit for occupancy during the continuance of the lease, the tenant shall then pay the rent and may again occupy. This obligation to again pay the rent is not a new statutory obligation but a contract obligation revived by statute.[56] The restoration or refitting of the premises must, however, be done within a reasonable time.[57]

f. Estoppel to Plead and Waiver of Defenses.[58] If a landlord covenants to repair before the term commences, the tenant may refuse to enter upon the term until the repairs are made; but by entering upon the term and receiving possession he waives the breach of such covenant, and cannot thereafter abandon the lease and refuse to pay rent.[59] If, however, the tenant enters before the time stipulated for the repairs to be made, there is no waiver on his part, and rent is not recoverable if he elects to abandon the contract.[60] But if the tenant remains in possession after failure of the landlord to repair, or after the premises have become so untenantable as to justify abandonment, he thereby waives his right to set up such defenses to an action for the rent.[61]

5. Cancellation, Surrender, and Abandonment — a. Cancellation of Lease.[62] After the cancellation of a lease liability for rent thereunder is extinguished.[63]

The fact that the lessor allows the lessee a credit or reduction of rent for six months, after which the lessee pays the rent reserved and continues in possession according to the lease without a new agreement, does not constitute an abandonment of the lease, so as to preclude the lessor from recovering rent accrued, or an action of covenant. contract, and in the event of such reëntry he is entitled to recover only for the rent then due.[79]

(B) Liability of Tenant For Deficiency of Rent—(1) General Rule Stated. While the English cases hold that a reëntry and reletting of abandoned premises by the landlord create a surrender by operation of law, and release a tenant from payment of subsequently accruing rent;[80] the American cases generally assert the contrary doctrine, namely, that, where a tenant repudiates the lease and abandons the demised premises, and the lessor enters and relets the property crediting the tenant with the proceeds, such re-renting does not relieve the tenant from the payment of rent under the covenants of the lease.[81]

(2) Provisions Inserted in Lease. Frequently a provision is inserted in the lease to the effect that in case of vacation of the premises the landlord may relet the same as agent of the tenant, and apply the rent so received on the rent due, the tenant to make good any deficiency.[82] Under such a provision the tenant, after abandonment and reëntry by the landlord, is no longer liable for rent as such, but only on the covenant,[83] and the landlord is not entitled to be allowed for improvements made upon the premises before leasing them the second time.[84] If the rent from the second tenant is not collected by any neglect of the landlord the original tenant is relieved to that extent.[85]

6. Amount and Time of Accrual — a. Amount In General. The general rules governing the interpretation of written contracts[86] apply in determining the amount of rent reserved in a lease, chief of which is that the intention of the

In New York a rule similar to the English rule has been enunciated, namely, that reletting the premises will operate as an acceptance of a surrender of the premises, unless there is an agreement, express or implied, that such reletting may be made (Gray v. Kaufman Dairy, etc., Co., 162 N. parties, to be derived from the whole instrument, shall govern.[87] Where the sum named is certain it must govern, unless a mistake in the estimate is shown, which may be done by parol evidence.[88] If a tenancy is without stipulation as to the amount of rent, the landlord can recover a fair consideration for the use and occupation of the premises.[89] The value of the rent can only be ascertained according to the circumstances of each case by the opinion of witnesses competent to judge and acquainted with the land.[90] An agreement to accept nominal rent is waived by the lessee's paying full rent and remaining in possession.[91]

b. Increase or Reduction of Amount — (i) In General. While the rate of rent reserved in a lease may be changed by a proper agreement on a sufficient consideration, it is well settled that the terms of a lease under seal cannot be modified by parol so as to change the amount of rent to be paid for the unexpired term.[92] It is often provided in the lease itself that the lessor if dissatisfied with the rent agreed upon may give the lessee notice and claim an increase.[93] The mere fact that the lessee makes the premises more valuable by cultivation,[94] or that improvements on the land are subsequently purchased by the lessor,[95] will not entitle him to recover additional rent.

(II) Conditions Precedent. A condition precedent to an increased or diminished liability must be exactly performed or fulfilled before the liability contingent thereon can be enforced.[96] But such a covenant applies only to rent to accrue during the remainder of the term.[97]

(III) Necessity of Consideration. A parol executory agreement, without any new consideration, to change the rent secured to be paid by a lease, is a mere nudum pactum, and not binding on the lessor;[98] nor will the agreement, so far as executory, become binding upon acceptance of payments at the changed rate.[99] But in so far as the agreement has been executed, as to the payments which have fallen due and been paid, and accepted in full as per the agreement, the rule has no application.[1]

(IV) Not a Surrender. An increase or reduction of the rent by a valid agreement between the parties does not amount to a surrender of the existing lease, and the granting of a new one; the new agreement in such case is virtually incorporated into and made a part of the antecedent agreement, and the two constitute the lease for the unexpired term.[2] that the landlord consents to such holding, the rate of rent fixed by the lease is not conclusive, but the tenant is liable for the use and occupation of the premises, according to the value thereof.[4]

(II) After Notice of Increase of Rent. A notice by a landlord to a tenant that if he continues to occupy the premises beyond the present term he must pay an increased rent, naming the sum, will not bind the tenant, although he holds over, unless the tenant expressly or impliedly consents to such increase of rent.[5] Such assent will be implied, however, where a tenant, holding over after his lease, remains in possession after notice from the landlord that a greater rent than that stipulated in the lease will be required, and to that extent the old lease will not apply.[6] And this is true, although the tenant objects to the new condition.[7] But when the tenant protests against the increase and explicitly refuses to pay it, he cannot be held liable therefor merely by the act of holding over, since no new agreement can be implied.[8] The notice of such increase of rent required to be given the tenant should be in writing,[9] and served before the commencement of a new term.[10] Acceptance of rent at the original rate operates as a waiver of the notice in respect to the increase.[11]

d. Appraisement and Reappraisement — (I) In General. Covenants to change the value of rentals from time to time run with the land.[12] Under a lease providing for the appointment of arbitrators to appraise the rental value of an estate, a tenant is entitled to such a reference before he can be sued for a merely reasonable rent.[13] But after the attempt to fix the rental value of the premises has failed without the fault of the lessor, the lessee is liable for the reasonable value of the premises.[14]

(II) Appraisers and Their Appointment. The appraisers or arbitrators should be impartial persons.[15] When no time is stated for their appointment a reasonable time before the lease expires will be implied.[16] An appointment of arbitrators once made is irrevocable.[17]

(III) Effect of Delay or Failure to Make Appraisement — (A) In General. On a renewal of a lease, the delay of the landlord to have the property revalued does not deprive him of the right to collect rent for the whole of the new term upon the basis of the new valuation which was finally made as of the date of the beginning of the new term,[18] nor does a tenant waive his right to a revaluation by failure to call for it promptly at the beginning of any period.[19]

(B) Relief in Equity or at Law. While a court of equity will not specifically enforce a contract for arbitration by compelling the appointment of arbitrators or by compelling them to act when appointed,[20] still, where the rights of the parties are made to depend on appraisal of the property, and the appraisal provided for in the contract has failed without the negligence of the party complaining, courts, both of equity and of law, will interfere to prevent a failure of justice by hearing evidence and making the appraisement themselves.[21] The failure of appraisers to agree,[22] however, or the fact that their valuations are excessive,[23] is no ground for relief in equity. A party has no right to resort to an action at law if there has been a tender of readiness to proceed in the arbitration by the adverse party.[24]

(IV) THE AWARD. What is to be taken into consideration in determining the value of demised premises depends entirely upon the provisions of the lease.[25] An award is presumed, unless fraud or mistake is shown,[26] to be the result of the honest exercise of their judgment by the appraisers.[27] An award by less than the full number has been held not to be binding.[28] If the lease provides that the award shall be indorsed on the lease, an award made on a separate paper and annexed to the lease is insufficient.[29]

e. Time of Accrual — (I) IN ABSENCE OF AGREEMENT — (A) In General. In general rent does not accrue as a debt until the tenant has enjoyed the use of the land for the period for which it is payable. Consequently, in the absence of some agreement or understanding between the parties to the contrary, rent is not due until the expiration of the term; and this is true whether the rent is reserved in gross, or on annual, quarterly, or monthly payments.[30]

(B) Rents Payable in Crops. While it has been held that the fact that the rent is payable in crops does not affect the rule that in the absence of any contract in regard to it the rent is not due until the end of the term,[31] there are also decisions to the effect that where rent is to be paid in the products of the soil, and no time is fixed for the payment, the rent becomes payable in a reasonable time after the crop is gathered.[32]

(II) Agreement to Pay at Particular Time. The lease may of course provide for payment at a particular time.[33] Thus the parties may agree that the rent shall be paid in advance,[34] when the premises are ready for occupancy,[35] or on the happening of any other contingency.[36] So also it may be provided when rent is payable in instalments that the entire rent shall be immediately due, and payable on default in any payment due,[37] or upon the removal, or attempt at removal, of the goods from the premises.[38]

ing over, rent is payable at the same intervals of time as under the original holding.[40]

(v) What Law Governs. The time of payment of rent for leased premises is determined by the laws and customs of the state where the premises are situated, where the contract is to be performed, and the landlord lives, in the absence of any express agreement to the contrary.[41]

7. Persons Entitled to Rent — a. In General. Rent belongs to the owner of the soil, or the persons entitled to the possession of the premises leased.[42] Rent as such cannot be recovered by one who has not succeeded to the legal title of the lessor, or between whom and the lessee the conventional relation of landlord and tenant does not exist.[43] Rent falling due after the landlord's death goes to the heir as an incident of the reversion.[44] If the title to the land is in dispute, the one entitled to the rent thereof is the one in possession, or who is able to put the tenant in possession.[45]

leased lands are sold pending the term, as when the whole thereof is disposed of.[47] The defense thus arising in favor of the lessee against an action by the lessor for rent falling due after the assignment of the reversion does not depend upon eviction or ouster by the assignee, but is complete without it.[48]

(b) Statutory Provisions. In some states it is provided by statute that the grantee of demised premises is invested with the right to employ all legal remedies for the recovery of rent that the grantor might have employed.[49] Such a statute applies to estates for life or for years only, and not to estates in fee.[50]

Sale under order of orphan's court.— Under a statute which provides that purchasers of land sold under order of the orphan's court shall, after confirmation of the sale and execution of the deed, have a right to the possession of the land purchased, it is no defense to an action for rent accruing after such a sale has been confirmed, but before the deed was given therefor, that such rent has been paid to the purchaser, since he had, when such rent accrued, no right to the possession. Strange v. Austin, 134 Pa. St. 96, 19 Atl. 492.

there is an absolute conveyance of the reversion or whether the conveyance is by way of mortgage.[53] If the lease is prior to the mortgage, the mortgagee is an assignee of the reversion and in that character entitled to all the rents, excepting only such as may have been paid by the lessee before notice of the assignment;[54] but when the lease is subsequent to the mortgage, there is no privity between the mortgagee and the lessee, and no right in him to demand the rent reserved by the lease.[55]

(c) Necessity of Attornment. At common law a lease was not assignable so as to invest the assignee with the legal title to the rent. A tenant neither owed fealty nor rent to the assignee until he had assented to the assignment by attorning to the purchaser.[56] But this principle was inconvenient, and a great clog upon transfers, as tenants would sometimes unreasonably refuse to attorn. To remedy this a statute[57] was passed which made assignments of reversions valid in all cases without attornment.[58] This statute has been held expressly or in effect to be in force in this country.[59] And even where such statute is not in force, since the title of the assignee is complete without attornment, it is held, on the ground of universal equity, that he is entitled to all arrears of rent that accrue after the conveyance.[60]

(d) Necessity of Notice to Tenant. Notice of the assignment of the reversion is necessary to enable the assignee to collect the subsequently accruing rent, and a tenant who has paid the rent in good faith to the lessor before such notice will be protected,[61] for if the assignee of a reversion lies by and suffers the lessee to pay rent to the lessor as it falls due he will not be permitted to complain of such act.[62]

(E) Reservation of Rent. Although the general rule is that the rent is incident to the reversion and passes with it, yet the lessor may sever the rent from the reversion by expressly reserving it,[63] or he may grant the rent alone, in which case a subsequent grant of the reversion does not pass the rent.[64]

(F) Right of Transferee Against Tenant Holding Over. When a tenant holds over by consent the obligation to pay rent continues as under the lease and he is not liable for rent to one who has become the holder of the legal title but with whom he is in privity neither of contract or estate.[65]

(II) Lease of Reversion. Where there is an outstanding lease for years, and the reversioner makes a second lease to a third person, to commence immediately, it is a vested estate, and will entitle the second lessee to take the rents reserved by the former lease.[66]

(III) Assignment of Lease by Lessor. The legal title to rents to accrue passes by the assignment of the lease, and the assignee has the right to institute all proper proceedings for enforcing payment thereon.[67] Rent due before the assignment of the lease belongs to the landlord and not to the assignee.[68]

(IV) Transfer of Rent as Security. An order by a landlord on his tenant, in favor of a creditor of the landlord, to pay to the creditor the rent as it becomes due, which order is subsequently accepted by the tenant, creates a liability by the tenant in favor of the creditor, which can be enforced by an action in the creditor's name;[69] but the landlord may at any time pay the balance of the debt and regain the title to the rent.[70]

(v) Right to Rent as Between Assignee of Rent and Grantee of Reversion. Where a note for rent is assigned prior to the conveyance of the reversion, the assignee of the note and not the grantee of the reversion is entitled to the rent;[71] but a transfer of the note after the grant of the reversion is subject to the rule that the rent passes to the owner as an incident of the reversion.[72]

c. Subleases — (i) Persons Entitled to Rent Under Sublease. A lessee of lands who executes a sublease is entitled to the rent accruing thereunder, and the lessee cannot attorn or surrender to the original landlord and thereby acquire a title under which to dispute such right.[73] Where the rent is payable in advance on a certain day, the sublessor's rights thereto are not affected by a technical merger of his estate in that of his lessor.[74] A tenant cannot, however, sublet for a longer time than his own term; at the end of such term the sublessee ceases to be his tenant, and no longer owes him rent.[75] Where a lessee, after subletting and reserving a rent, assigns all his "right, title and interest" in the lease, with the purpose of putting the assignee in his place and stead, such transfer carries all the interest in rents already accrued as well as rents thereafter to accrue.[76]

(ii) Rights of Original Landlord. In the absence of modification by statute, the common law gave the lessor no right of action on any of the covenants of the original lease against the subtenant or under-lessee of his lessee, because there was no privity of contract between the lessor and the sublessee and because there was no privity of estate.[77] To support an action by the lessor there must be, not an under-letting, but an assignment of the whole estate of the lessee.[78] Where a lessee transfers the term, reserving the rent to himself, such transfer is, as between the lessor and the sublessee, an assignment, giving the lessor an action for rent against the sublessee.[79] So also where the lessor, in consideration of the lessee's assigning him certain under-leases, accepts a surrender of the original lease, he may maintain an action against the sublessee for the rent accruing after such assignment.[80] Where a lessee is insolvent, the rents which accrue on a sub-lease are not subject to distribution among the creditors, until the claim of the original landlord for rent has been extinguished.[81]

One not in possession and having no right to possession is not liable for rent. Sibley v. Walton, 2 Ohio Cir. Ct. 69, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 367.

Mere possession of premises leased to another under written covenants cannot impose the burden of those covenants on the possessor.[83]

(II) After Attachment of Tenant's Property. Where creditors attach a tenant's merchandise, and it remains in the store until the sale, the tenant is liable for rent during the entire period of occupancy.[84]

(III) After Tenant's Death. The death of a tenant does not release his estate from obligation to pay rent under the lease.[85]

(IV) Agents, Trustees, Etc. One in possession of land as the agent of another cannot be held personally liable for the rent,[86] unless he remains in possession after personal notice that if he does so he will be charged a certain rent.[87] If a person accountable for the rents and profits of a building occupies it himself instead of renting it he will be liable for rent.[88] So also if one executes a lease as a private individual and personally covenants to pay the rent, although he is described in the lease as "trustee."[89] The fact that the lessee takes a lease for an unnamed principal, but in his own name, will not render the unnamed principal liable for rent.[90]

(V) Mortgagees in Possession. Where a mortgagee of a stock of goods in a leased store takes possession of the goods and occupies the building for the purpose of sale, he is bound to pay the rent after he takes possession.[91] But it is otherwise if the mortgagee merely places an agent in the store to receive the cash from the sales and apply it on his indebtedness.[92]

(VI) Joint Lessees. Where there are several joint lessees, judgment for rent may be had against any one of them.[93] If under a joint lease all enter and enjoy, although only one signs, all are liable for the rent.[94] So also the occupation of one is sufficient to make all liable for the rent.[95]

b. After Transfer of Lease — (I) Liability of Lessee After Assignment — (A) Express Covenant to Pay Rent. The assignment of a lease does not annul the lessee's obligation on his express covenant to pay rent, even though the lessor has assented to such assignment, and collected rent from the assignee,[96]

Liability not affected by demise of other premises to assignee.— When a lease is assigned upon the express condition that the assignor shall remain liable for the prompt payment of the rent, the fact that the landlord demises other premises to the assignee of the lease shortly afterward does not affect the liability of the assignor under the provisions of the assignment. Assignee of invalid lease.—While one occupying the premises as assignee of an invalid lease is liable to pay rent according to its provisions, this liability is not on the covenant therefor, but on the implied contract. Poor v. Scanlan, 8 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 275, 7 Cinc. L. Bul. 15.

No liability on parol promise of assignor.— The assignee of a lease is not liable to the lessor for rent accruing to him under a parol promise from the assignor, since it is a mere personal or collateral covenant. Coit v. Braunsdorf, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 74.

Effect of covenant that deed free from encumbrances.—A covenant in a deed of a lessee conveying his interest in the leasehold that it is free from all encumbrances except those imposed in the lease itself, does not create a personal obligation on the part of the grantee to perform the covenants of the lessee in the lease. St. Louis Consol. Coal Co. v. Peers, 166 Ill. 361, 46 N. E. 1105, 38 L. R. A. 624 [reversing 59 Ill. App. 595].

ferred that a privity of estate is created between the original lessor and the assignee, such assignee is not liable to the lessor for rent.[5] The fact that the lessor gives a release to the lessee of all demands will not bar an action against the assignee for the rent accruing subsequently to the assignment.[6] Nothing but an agreement, express or implied, binding in law, will relieve the assignee from such liability.[7]

(B) Necessity of Possession by Assignee. The assignee of a lease becomes liable for rent by reason of privity of estate, and not by reason of his occupancy of the premises.[8] But where assignees of a lease have taken possession thereunder, they cannot, by mere abandonment of the premises, escape their liabilities, without a tender or a formal reassignment of the lease.[9]

(C) Extent of Liability — (1) IN GENERAL. The assignee being liable solely in the privity of estate is liable only for rent maturing while he holds the estate as assignee, and not for that which matured before he became assignee or after he ceased to be such,[10] even though it was payable in advance for a period in which the assignment was made.[11]

(2) WHEN PART OF PREMISES ASSIGNED. One who acquires by assignment the lessee's entire interest in a distinct part of leased land is as to such part in privity of estate with the lessor and liable to him for a proportionate share of the rent; but such assignee is not in privity of estate with the lessor as to the portion of the land not covered by the assignment and is therefore not liable for the entire rent reserved in the lease.[12]

(D) Liability as Depending on Form of Transfer — (1) ASSIGNMENT OF RIGHT OF OCCUPANCY. If the assignment is of the right of occupancy alone and not of the lease the assignee is not liable for the rent.[13]

(2) EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENTS. The equitable assignee of a lease, in possession of the premises, is liable for the rent during occupancy.[14]

(3) INVALID ASSIGNMENT. Although the transfer of a lease is invalid, the transferee is nevertheless liable for the rent if he agrees to assume the lease and pay the rent and occupies under the agreement.[15] This rule is particularly applicable in the case of parol assignments void under the statute of frauds.[16]

(4) ASSIGNMENT BY WAY OF MORTGAGE. In jurisdictions holding that a mortgage vests in the mortgagee the whole legal estate, a mortgagee of a leasehold is liable on the covenant for the payment of rent, although he does not take possession under the mortgage.[17] But where a mortgage is considered a mere security for the debt, such a mortgagee is not liable to the lessor for the rent of the demised premises unless he enters into possession.[18]

(5) INVOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT. A judicial sale of a lease imposes on the purchaser the obligation of paying to the lessor the rent accruing after the sale according to the terms of the lease,[19] and this is true whether or not the purchaser enters into possession.[20]

(6) PRESUMPTIVE ASSIGNMENT. Where a third party is in possession of leased premises under the lessee, the law presumes that the lease has been assigned by the lessee to such third party;[21] but it is competent for him to show that he is not an assignee but only an under-tenant.[22]

(7) ASSIGNMENT OF PAID-UP LEASE. A paid-up non-assignable lease has been held not to be forfeited by the mere fact of assignment by the lease, in the absence of a condition to that effect in the lease; and, if the lessor makes no objection to the occupancy of the assignee, he cannot collect rent from him for the unexpired term.[23]

(E) Effect of Reassignment — (1) In General. An assignee of a lease, in the absence of any restraint in the instrument, can reassign to whomsoever he chooses, and relieve himself from responsibility;[24] but to work such an effect the privity of estate must be absolutely destroyed.[25]

(2) Liability For Accrued Rent. An assignee of a lease who takes possession of the leased premises is not released from liability for rent accruing during his possession by the fact that he afterward reassigns his lease to a third person.[26] It has been held, however, that an assignee is not liable at law after he has assigned over,[27] but that equity will give relief as to such antecedent rent.[28]

(3) Necessity of Consent of Lessor. The lessor need not assent to the reassignment or recognize the assignee as his tenant,[29] but acceptance of the assignment by the second assignee, either express or implied, is requisite to its validity.[30]

(4) Necessity of Entry by Second Assignee. It is not necessary that the second assignee should make an actual entry into possession of the demised premises in order to release the assignor from liability for rent,[31] except in the case of an assignment without deed, as of a chattel interest only, which requires some act of entry or change of actual possession to complete its operation and divest the assignor of the responsibility which arises from the holding of the estate.[32]

(5) Express Agreement by Assignee to Remain Bound. The assignee may, by contract between himself and the lessor, bind himself to the full performance of all the covenants of the lease, irrespective of the fact whether he parts with the title thereafter by a further assignment.[33] It is necessary, however, that

A merely colorable or fictitious assignment, which does not accomplish an actual transfer of the interest of the assignor in the demised premises, but leaves him in the rightful possession and enjoyment thereof, is a nullity. Tate v. McCormick, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 218, holding that the mere fact that the assignor continues in possession after the alleged assignment does not estop fraud nor render him liable for subsequent rent.

But if the assignment is actual, it is immaterial that it is made solely for the purpose of ridding the assignor of liability. Such fact does not impeach the validity of the assignment. such a promise by the assignee be supported by a new consideration or it will be void.[34]

c. In Case of Subleases — (I) Liability of Lessee After Subletting. The fact that a lessee sublets the premises does not affect his liability to the lessor for the rent,[35] unless the subtenant is accepted by the landlord as his immediate tenant, in which case the original lessee is discharged from liability from rent accruing subsequent to such acceptance.[36] A mere agreement, however, to pay rent to the lessor,[37] or the mere acceptance of rent by the landlord from a subtenant,[38] is not of itself sufficient to relieve the lessee from liability for future rent. If a lessee by reason of his subtenant's refusal to go out fails to deliver possession at the end of his term he will remain liable for the rent during the subtenant's occupancy.[39]

(II) Liability of Sublessee — (A) To Lessor — (1) In General. Between the lessor and the under-tenant of the original lessee there is neither privity of estate nor privity of contract. The lessor therefor cannot sue the under-tenant upon the lessee's covenant to pay rent,[40] unless the under-tenant has assumed the lease;[41] but before the landlord can sue the under-tenant on his contract for rent it must be transferred or assigned by the tenant to the landlord so as to make the latter the party really interested.[42] Nor can an action be maintained for the use and occupation of the premises unless there is an agreement for the use of the premises, express or implied, between the lessor and the sublessee.[43]

(2) Statutory Provisions. In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that a subtenant shall be a tenant of the lessor and liable to him for rent.[44] render of the leasehold from the lessee cannot thereafter recover rent from the subtenant because neither privity of contract nor estate exists between the original lessee and the sublessee.[45]

(4) Extent of Liability. It has been held that a subtenant can be made liable to the original lessor in an action for use and occupation, or for rent, only for the time during which the occupancy of the premises by the subtenant continued.[46]

(B) To Lessee. A lessee who sublets the premises, being liable to the landlord as surety for the rent, may pay it before it is due, and have a cause of action against the sublessee when it is due.[47]

9. Apportionment and Abatement — a. In General. Apportionment of rent is defined as a division or partition of a rent, or a making of it into parts. This may be by the act of the law or the act of the parties.[48] Apportionment is for the benefit of the owners of the rent or the reversioners. Ordinarily it is against the interest of tenants, and the omission to apportion is not a matter of which they can complain.[49] This right of apportionment forms an exception to the rule that an entire contract cannot be apportioned.[50] Of course services to be rendered by the lessee in payment of the rent are indivisible and cannot be apportioned.[51]

b. As to Estate of Lessor or Those Claiming Under Him — (I) In General. Where lands held under lease are severed by the conveyance of a portion thereof to a stranger, the rent will be apportioned among the several owners of the reversion,[52]

Under the law of Georgia, a subtenant becomes the tenant of the lessor at the election of the latter (McConnell v. East Point Land Co., 100 Ga. 129, 28 S. E. 80), but some affirmative action must be had by the landlord showing his election to treat the subtenant as his tenant (Hudson v. Stewart, 110 Ga. 37, 35 S. E. 178).

But if the subtenant attorns to the original lessee, he thereby becomes liable to the landlord for rent for the full term of the lease. McDonald v. May, 96 Mo. App. 236, 69 S. W. 1059. See also Hessel v. Johnson, 129 Pa. St. 173, 18 Atl. 754, 15 Am. St. Rep. 716, 5 L. R. A. 851.

"It was, at one time, supposed by some that a rent-service incident to a reversion was lost by a grant of part of the reversion, and could not be apportioned. But this is not the law. A reversion is a thing in its nature severable, and the owner has an undoubted right to dispose of the whole, or any part of it, according to his necessities or convenience; and the rent, as incident to it, being a retribution for the land, may be divided and ought to be paid to those who are to have the land on the expiration of the lease. The accommodation of mankind requires that the rent shall be apportioned wherever there has been, either by act of the law, or by act of the party, a division made of the land out of which it issues; because without this privilege a man who can only dispose of his real estate to advantage by dividing it, might be forced to sacrifice it; and the heirs of a decedent might be seriously injured if they could not divide the inheritance without losing their remedies for the rents." Reed v. Ward, 22 Pa. St. 144, 149, per Lewis J.

Apportionment of rent does not mean abatement of it, because, although rent may be apportioned, the tenant still remains liable to pay the whole of it, but in different parts to different persons, except where he has purchased or acquired the reversion of part of the demised premises. and the consent of the tenant is not essential to such apportionment.[53] A reversioner may sue for the rent, although it is due by reason of privity of contract and not privity of estate.[54] So on the death of a lessor the rent must be apportioned among the heirs on whom the estate is cast.[55] After rent has been apportioned the tenant is liable to separate actions and distresses.[56]

(II) As to Successive Owners. At common law the landlord or owner of the premises at the time the rent became payable collected and received the same, and the landlord or owner of the property during a part of the period such rent was earned, but not sustaining toward it either relation at the date the rent was payable according to the terms of the lease, had no redress against the party receiving the payment, except by special agreement.[57] By statute it is now frequently provided that where the estate or interest of the party previously receiving the rent terminates intermediate two periods fixed by the lease for its payment, then such rent shall be apportioned.[58]

(III) Basis of Apportionment. The apportionment of rent reserved in a lease or grant among several assignees of the lessee must be according to the value of the several parts held by each, and not according to the quantity or number of acres;[59] but if there is no proof of the relative value, the premises will be presumed to be of equal value, and the rent should be apportioned according to the quantity of land.[60]

c. As to Time. It is well settled both in law and in equity that a contract for the payment of rent at the end of each quarter or month is not apportionable in respect of time,[61] in the absence of a provision made for such an apportionment by statute,[62] or an express agreement in the lease to that effect.[63] The objection is stronger against the lessor where he puts an end to the lease by his own act without necessity.[64]

d. As to Extent of Premises Held by Lessee. A landlord who does not give his tenant possession of the whole of the demised premises cannot apportion the rent according to what the tenant does occupy and distrain for that portion.[65] But if the lessee surrenders a part of the land to the lessor, the rent for the remainder is apportioned.[66] Where the estate out of which the rent issues is assigned to two or more the rent should be apportioned according to their several holdings.[67]

But an eviction by the grantee of the lessor without the lessor's agency or procurement does not debar the lessor from recovering rent for that portion of the premises remaining in his possession.[70]

(B) By Title Paramount. Eviction by another under title paramount if of the whole of the demised premises suspends the whole rent;[71] if of a part it entitles the lessee to an apportionment.[72] But rent cannot properly be apportioned unless at some period the tenant has been subject to the entire rent by virtue of the demise.[73]

(II) Appropriation of Part of Premises to Public Use. It is held in some jurisdictions that the condemnation and appropriation to public use of a part of leased premises extinguishes a ratable proportion of the rent,[74] even though the part left is more valuable than the whole premises were before,[75] but the contrary is held in many states.[76]

ever, that where a change in the condition of the premises or some other circumstance renders them less valuable there may be a reduction in the rent.[78] Thus a tenant's liability for rent is subject to a deduction of any damages he may sustain by reason of his lessor's failure to repair, if such failure was the latter's fault;[79] but where the lessee is empowered by the lease to make all necessary repairs, and to deduct the expense from the rent, he cannot claim a deduction from the rent on account of the premises becoming untenantable.[80]

(II) INJURY TO OR DESTRUCTION OF PREMISES. The general doctrine of the common law was that upon a covenant in a lease of land and buildings for a term of years to pay rent, the rent could be recovered even after a destruction of the building by accidental fire.[81] This contingency is now usually provided for in the lease.[82] Thus it is customary to insert in leases a stipulation providing for an abatement of rent in case the premises or any part thereof shall be destroyed or damaged by fire, or any other unavoidable casualty, so that the same shall be thereby rendered unfit for use or habitation.[83] So it is provided by statute in some states that where leased property is partly destroyed by fire, the tenant has the right to demand a diminution of the rent.[84]

A clause in a lease, providing for an apportionment of rent in the event of a partial occupancy in consequence of injury to the premises, has no application where, because of such injury, the premises are wholly untenantable and wholly unoccupied. Where the common-law rule has not even been limited by statute, in a few instances its applicability to real estate contracts has been questioned, and the rule formulated as follows: Where a substantial portion of leased premises is destroyed without the fault of the lessee, he is entitled to an apportionment of the rent accruing thereafter, in the absence of an express assumption by him of the risk of such destruction. Whitaker v. Hawley, 25 Kan. 674, 37 Am. Rep. 277; Wattles v. South Omaha Ice, etc., Co., 50 Nebr. 251, 69 N. W. 785, 61 Am. St. Rep. 554, 36 L. R. A. 424; Cutler v. Potts, 3 N. C. 26, 60; Ripley v. Wightman, 4 McCord (S. C.) 447.

85. Baker v. Pratt, 15 Ill. 568. A lessee who has assigned his interest in the lease to his cotenant cannot, by afterward paying the rent to the end of the term, and taking an assignment to himself of the interest of

to any third person without the landlord's direction and consent can satisfy the landlord's claim,[86] unless such payment is made in reliance on the landlord's admission that such party is entitled thereto.[87] If, however, leased property is seized by some paramount authority, and the lessee compelled to pay rent to another under a new lease, such payment discharges his liability to the owner of the property.[88] So also payment made to a levying officer in whose hands a distress warrant has been placed will discharge the tenant.[89]

b. By Under-Tenant. An under-tenant exposed to distress or ejectment for rent due the landlord may in default of payment by the intermediate tenant pay the same, and thus discharge his own rent or obligation to his immediate landlord,[90] and it is not necessary that the head landlord should distrain or even demand the money, or commence or threaten suit.[91] But a subtenant who, on entry of the landlord to determine his, the subtenant's, lessor's estate for nonpayment of rent, attorns to such landlord and pays him rent, will still be liable to his lessor for such rent, if the forfeiture is remitted.[92]

c. Pending Action Against Lessor to Recover Possession or Determine Title. A tenant who leases real estate from the apparent legal owner, to whom he pays the rent in full, is not liable to another for rent accruing prior to a decree confirming the title in such other, where he is not made a party to the proceedings which were commenced before but not decided until after the expiration of the tenancy and full payment of the rent;[93] but for the rent accruing after the decree the tenant is liable notwithstanding payment to his lessor.[94]

d. In Advance — (I) IN GENERAL. The payment of rent in advance is a valid payment and a good discharge pro tanto from the claim of the lessor, to whom payment is made, and a good bar to the claim of his assignee.[95] A promise by the lessee, after the lease is signed, to pay rent in advance, contrary to the terms in the lease, requires a new consideration to support it.[96]

(II) AS CONDITION PRECEDENT. Where payment of rent in advance is a condition precedent, failure of the tenant to so pay it justifies the landlord in considering the agreement at an end.[97]

(III) TENANT HAS WHOLE OF FIRST DAY. Where rent is made payable quarterly or at other stated intervals in advance, the tenant has the whole of the first day of each succeeding quarter or other interval of time in which to make the payment.[98]

(IV) INTEREST ON PAYMENTS. A lessee is entitled to interest on advance the lessor, recover on the lease, from his cotenant, or a tenant of his cotenant, the amount of rent so paid by him, as by such payment all obligations under the lease are discharged. Holman v. De Lin-River-Finley Co., 30 Oreg. 428, 47 Pac. 708.

e. Medium of Payment — (i) In General. While payment of rent is usually made in money,[1] it may be made in any manner that the parties may mutually agree upon.[2]

(ii) By Care and Maintenance. It may be agreed that one may occupy land in consideration of furnishing a home for another. In such a case, so long as the lessee complies with the terms of the agreement, no money judgment can be taken against him;[3] and such care and maintenance of the lessor will operate as a satisfaction of the rent during the entire term of the lease, even though the lessee dies before its expiration.[4]

(iii) In Labor. Where a lease provides that the rent may be paid in labor, or that the lessee shall be entitled to credit for certain work to be performed by him during the term, he is entitled to credit for all labor performed by him during the term, whether before or after the date fixed for payment of the rent.[5]

(iv) By Making Repairs. Repairs made by stipulation and agreement are matters which the landlord is bound to allow on the rent account, and he cannot authorize and direct repairs to be made by a tenant and then compel the payment of the full amount of rent without settlement.[6] If certain repairs among others are specified, but not made, the expense of making them must be deducted from the amount claimed for repairs made.[7] If the amount allowed for repairs exceeds the amount of rent due at that time liability for rent is totally extinguished.[8]

(v) By Bond, Note, or Draft. The giving of a note, bond, or draft by a lessee to his lessor for the amount of the rent stipulated in the lease, and payable at the time the rent is payable, is not of itself payment of the rent,[9] whether it is reserved by deed or parol;[10] and the negotiability of the note makes no difference, so long as in fact it has not been negotiated.[11] But if by express agreement a note is received as payment, it satisfies the original contract and the lessor must take his remedy upon it.[12] If he would have judgment for the rent due under the lease he must surrender the notes for cancellation.[13] So if the landlord takes the note of a third person for the amount of rent due from his tenant, and gives time for payment to the third person until he fails, the rent is extinguished.[14]

(vi) In Crops or Goods. The lessor of premises may of course agree to receive crops or goods instead of money in payment of the rent.[15] Where the rent of a farm is payable in products of the soil raised upon it, division and delivery are essential to vest the title to such crops in the landlord.[16] An agreement for commutation of the rent payable in specific articles is not to be presumed from a course of dealing which is quite as consistent with a substantial and satisfactory performance of the original contract by paying from time to time the equivalent in money of the articles stipulated to be delivered.[17]

(vii) By Mutual Account. A mutual account does not constitute a payment or satisfaction of rent unless the lessor agrees that it shall have that effect.[18]

f. Place of Payment. Where no place is appointed for payment, rent issuing out of land is payable on the land.[19]

g. Tender — (i) In General. Tender of rent must be made by one in privity of contract with the lessor.[20] Suspension of rent by eviction renders a tender unnecessary.[21] Where a lease provides for the payment of rent to be made in specific articles at an agreed price, and the tenant tenders the articles, the rent is extinguished, notwithstanding the real value is much greater or less than that agreed upon.[22]

(ii) Time of Tender. A tender of payment of rent before[23] or after[24] the day of its falling due is not a sufficient legal tender. If, however, the rent day fixed by the lease falls on Sunday, a tender of rent on the following day is sufficient.[25]

(iii) Place of Tender. Where rent is payable either in money or kind, and the lease is silent as to the place of payment, a tender of the rent by the lessee upon the land is good; and it is not required of the lessee to make the tender to the lessor personally.[26]

h. Effect of Receipt — (i) In General. The lessee on paying rent has the right to require from the lessor a receipt, signed by his own hand, or by a person specially authorized by him.[27] If a lessor negligently signs a receipt without reading it, in the absence of fraud, he is bound by its provisions.[28]

(ii) As Presumption of Payment. A written receipt not under seal is not conclusive of payment but is always open to explanation and contradiction by parol evidence.[29] But a receipt expressed to be in full is strongly presumptive evidence of payment of all former arrears.[30] So a receipt for rent for a particular month or year is presumptive evidence that the rent which previously accrued has been paid.[31] A receipt for a specific sum does not afford the presumption that a different sum due on another instrument was paid at the same time.[32]

i. Application of Payments — (i) In General. Payments made by a tenant to his landlord on account of rent generally will, in the absence of any direction by the tenant or any agreement of the parties, be applied to the extinguishment of the rents first accrued.[33] A landlord receiving a payment of rent from two joint lessees cannot, without the consent of both, apply it to the payment of an individual debt of one of them, leaving the rent unpaid,[34] and if he does so, and subsequently sues for the rent, the other lessee may in such suit have the payment credited to the rent.[35]

(ii) To Rent or Advances. Where a tenant indebted for rent and advances makes a general payment without directing its application the landlord may apply it to either portion of the debt.[36]

j. Recovery of Payments — (i) In General. Rent paid under coercion or duress may be recovered, but the coercion or duress which will render a payment involuntary must in general consist of some actual or threatened exercise of power possessed or believed to be possessed by the lessor over the person or property of the lessee, from which the latter has no other immediate relief than by making payment.[37] So a payment made by a tenant in ignorance of the fact that he had been evicted,[38] or that the lessor has no title to a part of the leased property,[39] may be recovered, unless he has enjoyed the full term of the lease without being interrupted or obliged to attorn.[40]

(ii) Rent Paid in Advance. It is held in some cases, on the theory that there has been a failure of consideration through loss of enjoyment of the premises, that when rent is paid in advance and the premises are destroyed by fire,[41] or sold by the lessor,[42] the lessee can recover the money paid for that portion of the rental period remaining after the destruction or sale of the premises. Other cases hold that under such circumstances a proportionate part of the rent cannot be recovered,[43] and a covenant in the lease to deduct rent proportionally in case of a partial destruction cannot be stretched into a covenant to refund rent already paid.[44] If after rent is paid in advance, and the premises are destroyed by fire, the lessors rebuild and lease the same to other persons, the lessee is entitled to recover back from the lessor rent paid by him for that portion of the term which is subsequent to the second lease,[45] unless the second lease occurs after the tenant has commenced his action to recover the rent, in which case the rights of the parties must be adjudicated as they existed at the commencement of the action.[46] If a tenant pays part of a monthly advance payment with an agreement to pay the balance on the fifteenth of the month and fails to do so and is evicted, he cannot recover any portion of the payment made.[47]

(III) Overpayment. If a tenant occupies the premises during the entire term of the lease, but is compelled to pay therefor more than the stipulated rent, he is entitled to recover the difference between the amount paid and that which he agreed to pay under the lease.[48]

11. Penalties or Double Rent — a. Liability of Tenant Holding Over. In England it is provided by statute[49] that a tenant holding over after the expiration of his term, or after he has given notice of his intention to quit, shall be liable for the penalty of double rent. These statutes have expressly or in effect been reënacted in many of the United States.[50] The English statutes fix the penalty at double the rent, "so long as the tenant continues to hold over." Under this language the penalty ceases whenever the possession is restored to the landlord.[51] In one jurisdiction at least it is provided that a tenant holding over is liable for double the amount of annual rent agreed to be paid under the contract. Under such language, the tenant is liable for double the agreed rent for the whole year, although the holding over is only for a few days.[52] These statutes are penal and time for which he pays for it. . . . What difference can there be in principle, so far as fixing liability is concerned, whether the contract is to pay the rent monthly in advance or monthly at the end of the month? . . . The contract in one instance is as positive and binding as in the other, and the liability to pay at the end of the month is as much fixed by such contract as the liability to pay in advance is fixed by the contract, and the same reasoning that would prevent the recovery of the money paid in advance would compel the payment of the money under the other contract at the end of the month after the destruction of the building."

to be construed strictly[53] and their application will not be extended beyond the cases provided for.

b. What Constitutes Holding Over. A tenant holding over after his term has expired is not within the penalty imposed by the statute, unless he holds over wilfully and contumaciously and with a consciousness that he has no right to do so.[54] The mere fact that removal will subject the tenant to great inconvenience and damage is not sufficient to relieve him from the penalty of double rent;[55] but where he is prevented by the act of the law from moving out he is not liable.[56] The tenant is liable none the less because the holding over was by one who came into possession under him.[57]

c. To What Tenancies Statutes Applicable. The statute 4 Geo. II[58] applies to tenants for "life, lives or years,"[59] and therefore an action does not lie against a weekly tenant,[60] or it seems against a quarterly tenant.[61] The statute of 11 Geo. II[62] applies only to tenancies for an indefinite period, where the tenant has the right of determining his tenancy by notice,[63] and when he has actually given a valid notice sufficient to determine it.[64]

d. To What Persons Statutes Applicable. The statute only applies to tenants and those claiming under or in collusion with them.[65]

But see Beynroth v. Mandeville, 5 Bush (Ky.) 584, holding that the statute allowing double rent is not so much penal as compensatory, not so much to punish a delinquent tenant as to indemnify a disappointed landlord for the vexation and losses resulting from a tortious detention of that which it may be often very important otherwise to dispose of, and also from expensive litigation.

As a question of morals, he may be much less to blame in one case than in the other, but the statute, so far as the damages are concerned, makes no difference between them.

e. Waiver of Double Rent. Acceptance of single rent is a waiver of double value;[66] but a voluntary agreement by the lessor that the tenant may retain the premises for a certain time after the expiration of the term does not have that effect in case the tenant holds over after that time.[67] It is not necessary, in order that the tenant may avail himself of a waiver of the double rent on the part of the landlord, that such waiver should be specially pleaded.[68]

f. To Whom Remedy Given. The remedy afforded by the statute of 4 Geo. II for double value is given only to the lessor, to the landlord, or to the person entitled to the reversion,[69] and not to one to whom the landlord has granted a fresh lease to commence from the expiration of the former term.[70]

g. Necessity of Notice to Quit and Demand of Possession. To recover the penalty of double rent for wilful holding over after the expiration of the tenancy, a demand in writing for possession is essential,[71] and recovery will not go back to a period anterior to such demand;[72] but notice need not be given the tenant that double rent will be claimed.[73] Notice to quit may be given previously to the expiration of the lease,[74] or afterward, if the landlord has not in the meantime done any act to recognize the continuation of the tenancy.[75] Notice is required to be given by the lessor or reversioner or his or their agent or agents thereunto lawfully authorized.[76]

forfeiture on non-payment of rent and sell the improvements to pay therefor;[83] and where the landlord has distrained and sold for a part of the rent due, he may recover the residue by action.[84] An action for rent is a personal not a real action.[85]

2. GROUNDS. To sustain an action for rent the relation of landlord and tenant must have existed between the parties[86] by agreement, express or implied;[87] but it is not necessary that defendant should have occupied the premises under the lease,[88] or that plaintiff should have held title to the premises.[89]

3. CONDITIONS PRECEDENT — a. In General. The landlord may recover rent without first resorting to a lien given him by the lease on the tenant's property;[90] but to entitle him to recover, the conditions upon which the rent becomes payable must exist.[91]

Adequate remedy at law.— If tenants have paid rent to one who has no right to receive it, they may be compelled to pay by a suit at law or by distraining their property; and hence chancery will give no remedy. Merrell v. Atkin, 29 Ill. 469. Where a landlord has a remedy by distress, equity will not interfere to assist him, unless some fraud is proved. Doneraile v. Chartres, 1 Ridg. App. 135. Where a receiver for the lessor has been appointed, and the lessee has attorned to him, and afterward he sells and gives up possession of the property to the purchaser, the court will not make an order upon the tenant to pay rent in arrear to the receiver, the latter's remedy being by action at law. See, however, Thrale v. Cornwall, 1 Wils. C. premises before the expiration of his term and notifies the landlord that he will not abide by the rent contract, the landlord has no right of action for the rent until it falls due under the contract.[1] Where by the terms of a lease payments are to be made in monthly instalments, the lessor is not required to wait until the expiration of any particular year or time longer than a month before bringing suit.[2] No action to recover rent upon a lease from year to year which fixes no time for the payment of the rent can be maintained until the close of the year.[3] A tenant has until the last minute of the day on which rent falls due to make payment, and no action or other legal proceedings for the rent can be maintained until the next day.[4]

New Jersey.—Wagoner v. Watts, 44 N. J. L. 126 (holding that, although an action on a lease, actually under seal but not required to be, will be barred in six years, an action on an agreement under seal, indorsed on the lease, by which defendant covenants to pay the rent in case of the tenant's default, will not be barred in that time); Woolley v. Osborne, 39 N. J. Eq. 54 (holding that in a suit by assignee for creditors of a tenant against a receiver of the property of the landlord for an account of transactions between the landlord and tenant, where it appears that there was a mutual account between the parties, and subsisting debts on either side, and an implied agreement for a set-off, the statute of limitations is no defense).

New York.— Bailey v. Jackson, 16 Johns. 210, 8 Am. Dec. 309, holding that an action for rent reserved by an indenture of lease is not within the statute of limitations.

Pennsylvania.— McClure v. McClure, 1 Grant 222, holding that plaintiff claiming for several years' rent is entitled to recover for all falling due within six years before suit brought, although this allows a recovery for an occupation commencing nearly seven years before.

Tennessee.— Tisdale v. Munroe, 3 Yerg. 320.

Texas.— Roller v. Zundelowitz, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 165, 73 S. W. 1070 (holding that where a lease for three years provided that at the end of the term the lessee should have the refusal of an extension at the current market rates at that time, and at the expiration of the lease the lessee held over for another term of three years on the same terms, a subsequent holding over on the termination of the second period was not under the written contract, but by virtue of an implied contract, and hence an action for rent accrued

6. Enjoining or Staying Action. An action to collect rent may be stayed or enjoined in a proper case.[7]

7. Defenses[8] — a. In General. Want of title in the landlord is no defense to an action for rent where the tenant, with knowledge of the facts, acknowledges title in the landlord and attorns to him;[9] and the landlord's breach of an independent covenant, while available as the basis of a counter-claim, does not constithereunder was subject to the two-year statute of limitations); Minor v. Kilgore, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 38 S. W. 539 (holding that under limitations which bar an action for rent after two years, where a tenant paying annual rent is in arrears for two years' rent, and more than two years have elapsed since the first year's rent became due, the remedy as to that year is barred).

United States.— Ruppel v. Patterson, 1 Fed. 220, holding that in a suit between the assignor and assignee of a leasehold for rent accruing and paid by the assignor subsequent to the assignment, the statute of limitations begins to run in favor of the assignee from the time the assignor paid the accrued rent, and not from the time the assignee made default in the payment of the same.

Canada.— Ouimet v. Robillard, 5 Montreal Leg. N. 8.

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 878.

Payment of rent by subtenant as suspending limitation of action for rent due from tenant see Limitations of Actions.

7. Tscheider v. Biddle, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,210, 4 Dill. 58, holding that where the lessor will not comply with his covenant of renewal on a valuation, but acts in bad faith to prevent an appraisal, the unexecuted covenant for renewal does not at law prevent his suing for use and occupation; and hence the lessee will be allowed to come into equity to restrain such action.

However, the fact that a lessor has removed to another state is no ground for injunction to stay a suit for rent in order to enable defendant to set off damages caused by an eviction. Tone v. Brace, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 597. So where it was stipulated by a lease that the lessees should be at liberty to retain a rent of £1,100 a year, or any part thereof, upon giving the lessor a bond to pay whatever they so retained at the end of seventeen years with interest, and the lessees omitted to pay the rent or give a bond, and the lessor sued for the rent, the court refused to stay proceedings on an affidavit that since the commencement of the suit the lessees had executed and tendered to the lessor a bond for the amount retained and to be retained. Jones v. Winkfild, 10 Bing. 308, 3 More. & S. 846, 25 E. C. L. 149. And it has been said that it is only in a strong case if at all that the court will grant an injunction to restrain proceedings for non-payment of rent. Clancy v. Roberts, 1 Ir. Eq. 21.

Adequate remedy at law.— Equity will not restrain an action for rent and cancel the lease on the ground that the same is void because the property was leased for a gambling house, since there is an adequate remedy at law by defense to the action. And the fact that the lease is under seal does not warrant the interference of equity. Slater v. Schwegler, (N. J. Ch. 1903) 54 Atl. 937. So where the landlord sues for rent, the tenant cannot maintain a separate suit to compel the landlord to specifically perform a covenant in the lease, and during the pendency of the action enjoin him from collecting any rent, since if the landlord has failed to perform his agreement, the tenant, when called on to pay the rent, may set up a breach of the lease as a defense, and set off his damages. tute a defense, where the lessee is in possession.[10] It has been held that failure of consideration is a good defense to an action on a rent note,[11] but not to an action for rent on a lease.[12] It is no defense to an action for rent that the lessor refused to consent in writing to the subletting of the premises, where the lease reserved control of the matter of subletting in the lessor;[13] that the tenant offered to perform a covenant to pay rent on condition that the lessor should abate the rent which accrued while the tenant was deprived of the use of the premises by the violence of war;[14] or that the landlord distrained goods to the full value of the rent, where he sold them for a less sum.[15] A temporary restraining order prohibiting defendant from paying certain rents is no defense to an action for the rents after its dissolution;[16] and to an action of covenant for rent by a tenant against a subtenant, defendant cannot plead that plaintiff has not paid the rent to the original landlord according to his covenant.[17] It was held to be a good defense to an action brought for rent pending the Civil war that plaintiff was an officer in the Confederate army.[18] An oral agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee of a term of years that the former shall receive the rent cannot be shown in defense of an action by the mortgagee to recover it;[19] but in an action for rent by an execution creditor against a tenant in possession under the

St. 109, 29 Atl. 757 (holding that representations by plaintiff, not a covenant of the lease, of what would be done by him in regard to other premises than those leased, and not alleged to be either false or fraudulent, constitute no defense, although not fulfilled); Jackson v. Farrell, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 31 (holding that the non-performance by the landlord of a covenant to move a building cannot be set up as a defense for non-payment of rent). And see Meredith Mechanic Assoc. v. American Twist Drill Co., 66 N. See, however, Rand v. Wickham, 60 Mo. App. 44 (holding that it may be shown in defense, where the lessee has not entered into possession, that the lease was made on condition that the premises adjacent to those leased should be let to the lessee); Peck v. Trumbull, 12 Nebr. 133, 10 N. W. 245 (where the lessee agreed to hire a building to be finished off and furnished by the lessor, and refused to take the property on the lessor's refusal to finish and furnish, and it was held that an action on the lease for rent was not maintainable).

11. Andrews v. Woodcock, 14 Iowa 397; Crockett v. Althouse, 35 Mo. App. 404, holding that where, on a lease for five years at a specified rent per year, the lessees gave their five notes, each for the amount of the rent for a year, and after they had occupied the premises about a year they discovered that the lease was wholly void, and gave up possession, they could not be held liable on the note first becoming due, as representing the first year's rent.

12. Dunbar v. Bonesteel, 4 Ill. 32, holding that a lease, although in part for the payment of money or for the performance of covenant, is not such an instrument in writing as is contemplated by the Illinois statute of 1837, allowing an obligee or payee of a "note, bond, bill, or other instrument in writing" to plead the want or failure of consideration in law.

Ann. 1809, 28 So. 319 (holding that where a suit for rent is brought before the expiration of the lease on the theory that the last month's rent has become constructively due under the terms of the lease by reason of default with respect to previous months, a judgment rejecting the demand on the theory that there has been no such default does not of necessity conclude the lessor with respect to the last month's rent, thereafter actually falling due); Burckle v. Shannon, 7 Misc. (N. Y.) 309, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 899 (holding that where defendant in an action for rent pleads eviction and a former adjudication, a record which showed that the tenant theretofore sued the landlord for damages because of defects in the premises, that the landlord counter-claimed for rent, and that the trial resulted in a judgment for the tenant for a certain sum over the amount claimed for rent, does not prove an eviction); Taylor v. Hortop, 33 U. 24. Alabama.— Caldwell v. Smith, 77 Ala. 157, holding that where a mortgagor who remained in possession after the sale denied his tenancy under a subpurchaser at the mortgage sale when sued by him for rents, and obtained judgment, he cannot, in an action by the original purchaser, allege that he held possession as tenant under the subpurchaser.

Connecticut.— Reed v. Reynolds, 37 Conn. 469, holding that where the lessee consented to a joint occupancy of the premises with the lessor, he cannot set up such occupancy as a defense against the payment of rent.

Iowa.— Bower v. Stewart, 30 Iowa 579, holding that an admission by a tenant of rent due from him to his landlord, upon the strength of which a third person purchases and receives an assignment of the claim from the landlord, estops the tenant from denying such indebtedness in a suit against him therefor by the assignee.

Kentucky.— Parrish v. Ross, 95 Ky. 318, 25 S. W. 266, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 682, where plaintiff sued to recover a life-estate in one third of a tract of land, and judgment was rendered awarding one third of the land to each of the two defendants but denying plaintiff any relief, and on appeal a third of the land was awarded to plaintiff, and pending the appeal two thirds of the land was allotted to defendants as required by the judgment, and the court rented the other third to them, and bonds were taken for the rent, and it was held that defendants could not resist payment of the rent on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to rent the land.

United States.— Scott v. Hawsman, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,532, 2 McLean 180, holding that where one has enjoyed the premises under a parol lease, but has disclaimed the lease and refused to perform its conditions, he cannot defeat an action for use and occupation by showing that under the lease the amount of the second year's rent was to be fixed by a third person, which had not been done.

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 882.

8. Recoupment, Set-Off, and Counter-Claim[29] — a. In General. A lessee when sued for the rent may interpose a claim by way of recoupment, set-off, or counter-claim.[30] Thus the lessee may in a proper case recoup, set-off, or counter-claim damages resulting from the landlord's breach of covenant,[31] or other agreement

Y. App. 203, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 274 (holding that a claim by a lessee against the lessor for retaining possession of part of the premises may be set off against the rent); McKesson v. Mendenhall, 64 N. C. 286 (holding that the lessees may set up by way of counter-claim the fact that the lessor had no power to demise, and that the real owners have sued one of the lessees for use and occupation); Thymeus v. Beautrong, 9 Rev. Exch. 85 (holding that the rule that where the tenant is compelled, in order to protect himself in the enjoyment of the premises, to make payments which ought as between himself and his landlord to have been made by the latter, he is considered as having been authorized to do so by the landlord so as to apply his rent due or accruing due did not apply); Forbes v. Elderfield, 4 Wkly. Rep. 15.

Action between successive lessees.—Where plaintiffs' lessees had not attorned to defendants' subsequent lessees, as landlords, defendants could not sue them for rent in their own names, and hence their claim cannot be pleaded in set-off. Moshassuck Encampment No. 2 v. Arnold, 25 R. I. 65, 54 Atl. 771.

Action by lessor against sublessee.—Where a sublessee under an agreement to pay rent to the lessor was sued for the rent by the lessee, he could not set off an account against the lessee, as this would enable him to take advantage of his own breach of duty in not paying to the lessor. Brett v. Sayle, 60 Miss. 192.

Action by purchaser of premises.—A tenant from year to year having the right to set off against the rent indebtedness of the lessor to him cannot, as against one who purchases the property at a sale under a trust deed given by the lessor, set off indebtedness of the lessor contracted after the lessee had notice of the trust deed. Strousse v. Clear Creek County Bank, 9 Colo. App. 478, 49 Pac. 260. So where the premises are attached by a creditor of the lessor and sold on execution, the lessee has no right to set off against the purchaser's claim for rent a debt contracted by the lessor to the lessee since the attachment. Buffum v. Deane, 4 Gray (Mass.) 385. And where plaintiff became the grantee of premises occupied by defendants as lessees under an unsealed and unexpired lease, they cannot set off against rent accruing subsequent to their assent to occupy as tenants of plaintiff a debt due to them prior thereto from their lessor. Set-off against trustee and beneficiary.— If the landlord is a trustee, a debt due from him individually cannot be set off against the rent. Pratt v. Keith, 10 Jur. N. S. 305, 33 L. J. Time of accrual of claim.— In an action of covenant for rent, defendants cannot recoup for damages sustained by reason of a breach of covenant on the part of plaintiff after the commencement of the suit. d. Damages From Lessor's Failure to Repair.[40] Damages sustained by a lessee because of the lessor's failure to make promised repairs may as a rule be recouped, set off, or counter-claimed in an action for rent.[41]

e. Claims For Improvements and Repairs by Lessee. The value of improvements made by the lessee may be recouped, set off, or counter-claimed in an action for rent, where the lessor has agreed to give credit for them.[42] So the cost of repairs made by the lessee may be recouped, set off, or counter-claimed against

See, however, Powers v. Daily, 106 Mich. 61, 63 N. W. 979 (holding that a lessee cannot recoup damages for the lessor's injury to business during the occupation thereof by persons to whom the lessee sold his business and who were to pay therefor by turning over the profits after deducting a portion thereof, and who conducted the business in their own name); Blythe v. Pratt, 62 Miss. 707 (where a landowner, having leased for a term of years, gave a license to a railroad company to construct a road through the premises, and subsequently conveyed a right of way with warranty of title, and it was held in a suit for the rent that the lessee was not entitled to set off damages for the company's entry, as the license and grant were in subordination to the lease and did not exempt the company from liability to the lessee); Willis v. Branch, 94 N. C. 142 (holding that where plaintiff leased a house from defendant and agreed to pay a certain sum as rent, and defendant afterward entered and tore out fixtures and damaged furniture, the damages did not constitute a set-off against the rent).

Trespass by lessor's cattle.— In a suit for rent, defendant cannot recoup damages arising out of the fact that plaintiff took down a fence and let in his stock on defendant's crop, since such damages do not arise out of the contract of rent. Brown v. Alfriend, 61 Ga. 12; Hulme v. Brown, 3 Heisk. Amount of damages.— In an action for rent under a lease which by its terms is not assignable, where the lessee was evicted before the expiration of the term, and both parties agree that the value of the unexpired term shall be set off against the claim for rent, the fact that the lease is not assignable should be considered in the estimation of such value. See, however, Phillips v. Sun Dyeing, etc., Co., 10 R. I. 458, holding that where the lease contained no covenant on the part of the lessor to repair, his liability on a promise to that effect, made outside the lease, could not be recouped in an action for rent, but the remedy of the lessee is in a separate action.

Negligence in making repairs.—Where a lessor, in the absence of a stipulation to repair, nevertheless at the tenant's request gratuitously undertakes to make repairs, but does it in such an unworkmanlike manner that damage thereafter results to the tenant, such damages may be counter-claimed in an action to recover past-due rents. Res judicata.—Where a lease stipulating for the payment of rent quarterly contained an agreement that the lessor should keep the building, during the continuance of the lease or any renewal thereof, in good order and repair, the lessee, in a suit for breach of the covenant for payment of rent, was entitled to set up a counter-claim for damages for a breach of the covenant to repair, although in a former action to recover rent for a former period he had recovered damages on a similar counter-claim. the rent where the lessor agreed to make repairs and failed to do so,[43] or where he has agreed to give the lessee credit for making repairs;[44] and where the lessor has agreed to repair and failed to do so, the lessee may recoup an increased sum paid as rent in consideration of the repairs.[45]

9. Parties[46] — a. Plaintiffs[47] — (i) In General. A lessor who holds the premises as trustee may sue for rent in his own name[48] as trustee;[49] and upon a lease by tenants in common, the survivor may sue for the whole rent, although the reservation is to the lessors according to their respective interests.[50] So a lessor who lets the property as agent for the owner may maintain an action for the rent.[51] It has been held that where rent is by the terms of a lease made payable to a third person, the latter may, without assignment, sue to collect it.[52] The lessor cannot sue in his own name for rents accruing after he parts with his interest in the reversion.[53] A lessor may maintain an action in his own name and for his own benefit against the assignee of the lessee, where the assignee has assumed and agreed to perform all the covenants of the lease;[54] and a lessee may maintain an action in his own name against his sublessee on the latter's covenant to pay rental to him.[55]

(Pa.) 473 (holding that where the lessor is named as agent for the owner, an action on the lease is properly brought in his name as agent). See Manette v. Simpson, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 448, holding that where plaintiff, by writing under seal, leased to defendant a farm "now owned by W," a third person, the rent to be paid to the "party of the first part" (plaintiff) at certain times, such lease did not show on its face that plaintiff acted as agent for W, and an action for the rent reserved was maintainable in plaintiff's name, although the relation of principal and agent did in fact exist.

Action by principal.—A person having oral authority from the owner to lease certain premises executed in his own name, adding the word "agent," a lease under seal, describing himself therein as "agent and party of the first part," but not stating the principal. It was held that without proof of an assignment or a recognition by the lessee of the owner's rights, the owner was not the "real party in interest," who, within N. Y. Code, § 111, could maintain in his own name an action founded solely on the lease. Schaefer v. Henkel, 75 N. Y. 378, 7 Abb. N. Cas. 1. (II) Joinder. Coöwners of the premises may join in an action for rent,[56] and ordinarily it is necessary that all should so join.[57] It has been held that a stranger to the lease cannot join with the lessor in an action for rent, although the rent is payable to him.[58]

(III) Action by Assignee of Lease or Reversion.[59] Where the reversion is also assigned to him, the assignee of a lease may generally sue at law in his own name for rent falling due after the assignment;[60] and he is allowed to sue at law in his own name in many states even where the reversion is not assigned or granted.[61] So the assignee or grantee of the reversion may sue at law in his own

If a lessee covenants with several lessors jointly that he will pay to each lessor severally a specified proportion of the rent, although the covenant is in terms joint, the interest of each lessor is several, and each may maintain a separate action for his part of the rent. Action by lessee of reversion.—Where the owner of land leases it subject to a lease of a part thereof to another for a shorter term; the second lessee to collect rent from the first "for so much of the term as has not elapsed," the second lessee may sue for the rent subsequently accruing in his own name. Harmon v. Flanagan, 123 Mass. 288.

What law governs.—Where demised premises were located in Ohio, and the lessor and the lessee resided there at the time of the execution of the lease and at the time of their death, the contract of lease is an Ohio contract, and the right of a legatee and devisee of the lessor to sue an administrator of the lessee for rents in his own name is determinable by the law of Ohio. b. Defendants.[65] The assignor of rents reserved in a lease is not a necessary party defendant in an action by the assignee against the lessee;[66] but where the assignee of a leasehold is sued for rent, his assignor ought to be made a party defendant.[67] In an action against an assignee of a portion of a leasehold for the recovery of rent, the owners of the other lots are not necessary parties;[68] and where the assignee of a leasehold has divided his interest in the lease into a great number of shares, it is not necessary to make all the sharers parties defendant in a suit for rent.[69] In an action for the rent of a right of way over land over which plaintiff has quitclaimed a right of way to another person, neither right being exclusive, such grantee is not a necessary party;[70] and a mere stakeholder to whom the rents have been paid need not be joined as a defendant.[71] In an action of covenant for arrears of rent against the heirs of the covenantor, it is not necessary to join the widow.[72] Where, after plaintiff rented land to defendant, other persons bought it from a source other than that from which plaintiff claims title, and defendant attorned to them, with the consent, as claimed by defendant, of plaintiff, such persons are not necessary parties;[73] but where a lessee has taken independent leases from two adverse claimants, neither is a proper party defendant in an action by the other on his lease.[74] Joint lessees may be sued jointly for rent;[75] but a joint action by a lessor against two subtenants of his lessee who did not occupy jointly cannot be sustained.[76] A guarantor or surety of a lessee by collateral undertaking cannot be jointly sued with him,[77] in the absence of statute authorizing a contrary practice.[78]

a given term[83] at a certain rent which defendant promised to pay[84] and which has become due[85] and remains unpaid.[86] Ordinarily it need not show the lessor's title or interest in the premises,[87] or that defendant occupied or enjoyed the (N. Y.) 135, 45 Am. Dec. 451, holding that the premises leased need not be described, but may be referred to as "certain premises particularly described in said indenture."

Sufficiency of description.—A count describing assigned premises as being "the said demised premises or some part thereof" is bad as being in the alternative. And in an action by the lessor against the assignee of his lessee, where the assignment was of part of the premises only, a count stating that a certain sum was due for "the said demised premises" is bad; but where the assigned premises were described as "seventy acres of the southerly side of the demised premises" it was sufficient. Van Rensselaer v. Bradley, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 135, 45 Am. Dec. 451. A complaint alleging that defendant leased the "premises known as the northeast corner of Ross Island, situated in the county of Multnomah, State of Oregon, for a floating-house or beer garden," sufficiently describes premises consisting of a floating-house anchored to piles driven in the river bed fifty-five feet from said island, between the shore and the river channel. Kiernan v. Terry, 26 Oreg. 494, 38 Pac. 671.

Commencement of term.— In an action on a parol contract for the recovery of rent, the time of the commencement of the term must be stated. Pendill v. Neuberger, 64 Mich. 220, 31 N. W. 177.

Presumption as to term.— In the absence of allegations to the contrary, the presumption is that the tenant occupied the premises as tenant from year to year. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Indianapolis First Nat. Bank, 134 Ind. 127, 33 N. E. 679.

Additional term.—Where defendant leased premises for ten years at fifty dollars per year, with the right to continue the same for an additional period of ten years on the same terms, except that the rent for the second period should be one hundred and fifty dollars per year, a complaint, in an action for the first year's rent of the second period, merely alleging that defendant continued to hold the premises after the first period had expired, without averments showing that such possession was continued under the terms of the lease, was sufficient. Crystal Ice Co. v. Morris, 160 Ind. 651, 67 N. E. 502 [reversing (App. 1901) 59 N. E. 336]. However, an averment that defendant "elected to continue in the occupancy of the premises" mentioned in a written lease for an additional term "upon the terms and provisions therein mentioned" is a sufficient allegation that the lessee elected to hold for the additional term. Allegation as to consideration for promise. — An allegation that under the lease defendant took and retains possession of the premises is a sufficient statement of the consideration of the promise to pay for the same. Ramsey v. Johnson, 7 Wyo. 392, 52 Pac. 1084.

85. Elmer v. Sand Creek Tp., 38 Ind. 56.

Presumption as to time of payment.— In the absence of allegations to the contrary, the presumption is that defendant occupied the premises as tenant from year to year, with rent payable annually at the end of each year. E. 724, holding that in an action for the second year's rent due under a lease, an allegation that the "agreed advance payment of rental for the first year was duly paid by said defendants at the time said lease was executed" does not vitiate the complaint, although the lease itself, which was made a part of the complaint, showed by its terms that no rent was due for the first year.

Y.) 298 (holding that in an action for use and occupation brought after the death of the lessor by the receiver of his estate, where the complaint alleged the original lease, the holding over by the tenant "on the same terms and conditions," and the appointment of the receiver, no averment was necessary as to who held the fee); Havemeyer v. Switzer, 15 Misc. L. 433, holding that a declaration at the suit of the executor of a termor for a breach of covenant after the death of the termor should state the interest and title of the latter in the premises.

premises.[88] A complaint which declares on an express agreement to pay rent need not allege the performance by plaintiff of any conditions except such as are required by the contract as pleaded;[89] and a general allegation of performance is sufficient in some states.[90] In an action by the assignee of a lease or the reversion the declaration or complaint should allege the assignment to plaintiff,[91] and it may properly allege a subsequent attornment to him.[92] A declaration for rent by the assignee of a reversion for the life of a third person against the assignee of the term must aver that the cestui que vie was living when the rent accrued due.[93] To charge defendant for rent as assignee of a lessee, plaintiff should allege the assignment,[94] and that defendant entered and held possession by virtue thereof.[95] In an action against the assignee of a part of the premises for rent, plaintiff may declare against him as assignee of a specified part, or he may declare for the whole and leave defendant to take issue on the assignment by plea and show that he is liable for only a proportion.[96] The declaration or complaint in an action for rent may be amended in a proper case the same as in other actions;[97] and it has been held that where an action is brought on a written lease for a month's rent

Under some forms of lease, however, the complaint must aver that defendant enjoyed the premises, or that the lessor tendered him the enjoyment thereof (Mulford v. Young, 6 Ohio 294), or that defendant had permission to enjoy the same (Thompson v. Gray, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 60).

And see Baldwin v. Walker, 21 Conn. 168, holding that where an owner of land leased it with a factory thereon containing machinery, fixtures, and appurtenances, and thereafter assigned the reversion, it was proper for the assignee, in his declaration for rent, to allege an assignment to him of the machinery. See, however, Peckham v. Leary, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 494, holding that where plaintiff became the grantee of premises occupied by defendants as lessees under an unsealed and unexpired lease at a specified sum per annum, and became such owner and assignee of such lease with defendants' assent, and without objection defendants continued to occupy the premises after notice of such facts and that plaintiff was their landlord, the latter may recover for subsequently accruing rent on a complaint which merely states that he is the owner of the premises, and that defendants occupied them at their request and by his permission, and that the use of them is worth a stated sum, although he can recover only at the rate specified in the lease under which defendants entered.

Assignment and lease as exhibits.—Where the premises have been assigned to the person for whose use the action is brought by the lessor, plaintiff need not annex to his petition a copy of the assignment, but must annex a copy of the lease. McLott v. Savery, 11 Iowa 323.

Presumption of continuance of ownership.— Where an assignment of the rent is duly alleged, no averment is needed that after plaintiff became assignee of the rent he continued to be so until action brought, that being the presumption in the absence of proof to the contrary. due and unpaid and for a landlord's lien for rent to become due, plaintiff may ask judgment, by supplemental complaint, for rent falling due after the commencement of the suit.[98]

b. Plea, Answer, or Affidavit of Defense — (i) In General. Where the liability of a defendant for rent is predicated on his privity of estate and not on contract, the plea of non est factum is bad.[99] In an action against an assignee of a lease for rent, an affidavit of defense averring an agreement by the assignee with the lessor that the assignee should have the option of becoming a tenant but that he never exercised it, with a denial that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed, is sufficient to take the case to the jury.[1] Riens in arrere is a good plea to an action of debt for rent.[2] Where a statement of claim avers that defendant contracted with plaintiff for the rental of realty by a verbal contract at a certain rate per month, and avers an indebtedness for one month's rent, an affidavit of defense is insufficient which merely denies that defendant owed the rent as charged, and does not specifically deny the making of the verbal contract, or aver that defendant surrendered the lease and that the same was accepted by plaintiff, or that defendant has paid the rent.[3] An answer alleging that during his term defendant found that the lease was invalid because made by plaintiff, a married man, on community property, without joinder of his wife, and that he notified plaintiff that owing to this defect he would no longer occupy under the lease and was ready to surrender or pay a reasonable rental from month to month, is bad in failing to allege that before election to rescind he demanded of plaintiff and his wife a new lease on the same terms.[4] Where the defense is want of title in plaintiff, the plea should aver that plaintiff had no title, and that the lessee did not enter on the premises, or that, if he entered, he was evicted by title paramount,[5] or that he had surrendered the lease.[6] In an action for non-payment of rent by an assignee of the lessor against the lessee, where the declaration alleges that the lessor was possessed for the remainder of the term and that he demised the same to defendant, a plea that the lessor was not at the time of making the indenture possessed for the residue of the term as alleged is good on general demurrer.[7] So a plea to an action of covenant for rent against the assignee of a lease that all the estate of the lessee did not come to and vest in defendant as plaintiff alleges is good.[8] An answer setting up a tender and general denial does not admit that defendant used the premises described during all the time named or that he used them at any time.[9]

Attornment. — To a counter-claim for rent under a lease, a reply alleging that a third person was the owner of the premises, and that plaintiffs were compelled to and did attorn to him is sufficient, as against an objection first raised at the trial, notwithstanding that an attornment is not valid unless made with the privity or consent of the landlord, or unless the tenant attorns to one having a superior title under circumstances placing him in the same position as if he had gone out of possession and had come in again under a new landlord. mere misrepresentations by the lessor are not sufficient.[11] An answer setting up that the lease was induced by fraud, but failing to deny the allegation of the complaint that defendants entered into possession and have ever since been in possession, is demurrable.[12]

(B) Eviction. A plea or answer setting up an eviction of defendant by a stranger must allege that it was by virtue of a paramount title,[13] and that there was an actual entry by the evictor.[14] It has been held, however, that the eviction need not be expressly alleged.[15] Although the complaint alleges that defendant is still occupying and using the premises, an answer setting up a constructive eviction by the bringing of a prior action by plaintiff to recover possession, whereupon both defendant and his sublessee vacated and surrendered the keys, and averring that by reason of such eviction defendant is not liable for rent after that time, is good on demurrer.[16]

(C) Termination of Tenancy. A plea alleging that the premises were leased upon false representations of the lessor as to their condition, on the discovery of the falsity of which possession was returned to and accepted by the lessor, is bad in not alleging at what time defendant rescinded.[17] A plea of reëntry for nonpayment of previously accrued rents must allege that the lessor made a demand for the rent on his reëntry.[18] A plea or answer setting up a surrender and acceptance of the premises before accrual of the rent sued for presents a good defense;[19]

13. Naglee v. Ingersoll, 7 Pa. St. 185 (holding also that it must allege that the eviction was by title existing before the demise); State University v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52 (holding that a plea to an action by the lessor against the assignee of the lessee which alleges that prior to the execution of the lease certain third persons entered into and expelled plaintiff from the premises and continued their possession to the day of the demise, and on that day held, occupied, and kept possession of the same, claiming title thereto adverse to plaintiff, but not alleging the eviction to have been by virtue of any title to the premises paramount to plaintiff's right, and not alleging that defendant or any of those under whom he claims title are in any way connected with the disseizor's title, is insufficient; and that if the plea alleges that the disseizors have continued their adverse possession until the time of pleading, excluding as well plaintiff as defendant from the premises, it will still be insufficient without an allegation of paramount title in the disseizors).

14. Naglee v. Ingersoll, 7 Pa. St. 185. See, however, Friend v. Oil Well Supply Co., 165 Pa. 19. Binswanger v. Dearden, 132 Pa. St. 229, 19 Atl. 32, holding that an affidavit of defense was sufficient to carry the case to the jury, where it alleged that three months prior to the expiration of the term defendant mailed notice of his intention not to continue the tenancy, as was required by the lease; and thereafter, in conversation with defendant, plaintiff admitted the receipt of the notice two days after it was mailed, and by his remarks induced defendant to believe but if it fails to allege that they preceded the accrual of the rent for which suit is brought,[20] or fails to deny an allegation in the complaint that defendant entered into possession and has ever since been in possession,[21] it is insufficient. A plea setting up that defendant assigned his lease and that the lessor received rent from the assignee and accepted him as tenant does not show a surrender in law so as to bar the action; but the essential averment is that the assignee was substituted in the place of the original lessee with the intent on the part of the parties to the demise to annul its obligations.[22] A plea stating that on a certain day the tenancy was terminated by the destruction of the premises without the fault of defendant is bad, as it states a mere legal conclusion and not the facts.[23]

(D) Payment.[24] Payment on account and at the request of plaintiff of certain moneys for the board of his family and for repairs made under the lease may be set up by affidavit of defense;[25] and where plaintiff claims a lump sum for rent due at a time stated without stating the time for which it is claimed, an affidavit of defense asserting that at the time named, by reason of payments on account, a smaller sum only was due, and that this had been paid by a distress on certain articles specified is sufficiently specific.[26] However, a plea that plaintiff, before action, took and detained, as a distress for the rent, goods of value sufficient to satisfy the same is bad for not showing that the rent was satisfied.[27] A plea of payment of rent by the tenant to the assignee of the lessor which does not aver that the rent sued for accrued after the assignment of the lease is bad on demurrer.[28] To an avowry for rent, a plea in bar of payment to a ground landlord or other encumbrancer amounts to a plea of riens in arrere, and should be so pleaded.[29] A plea alleging payment to the provost marshal pursuant to an order of the com-

(III) Recoupment, Set-Off, and Counter-Claim.[31] A counter-claim for damages for the landlord's failure to perform a covenant to repair is not defective for failure to allege that the tenant used diligent efforts to reduce the damages by himself making the necessary repairs;[32] but an allegation in an affidavit of defense that the tenant actually sustained a loss from the failure of the landlord to repair is too vague to support a claim for damages on account of the breach.[33] An affidavit of defense which fails to allege the difference in rental value between the property as it was and as it would have been had certain covenants by the landlord been complied with is defective.[34] In an action by a landlord against the tenant on a covenant to pay a sum equal to the rent reserved, less any sum which should be received by the landlord as rent for the premises, a defense that the premises were relet by the landlord, not in good faith for the benefit of the tenant, but rent free, in order to induce the new lessee to take a longer lease, so that thereby the landlord accepted the tenant's surrender, is properly pleaded as a matter of defense, and not as a counter-claim.[35] A counter-claim for compensation for clearing land and cultivating it is insufficient, if it fails to show the date of the contract or the time of performance.[36] An affidavit of defense which avers that a portion of the leased premises was taken by the municipal authorities under the power of eminent domain is sufficient to prevent judgment.[37] A plea setting up destruction of the leased buildings which fails to allege the amount to which defendant is entitled by reason thereof is insufficient.[38]

Sufficiency of answer.— A lease provided that the premises should be used as business offices and for no other purpose, and that on default by the lessee the lessors might take possession and relet the premises at the risk of the lessee. On the lessee's becoming insolvent, the lessors took possession, and thereafter brought an action under the lease to recover an amount equivalent to the rent reserved and accruing since they took possession. It was held that an answer was insufficient which alleged that responsible persons were ready and offered to take a lease at a rent greater than that reserved, but that plaintiff arbitrarily refused to accept them as tenants, where the answer did not allege the names of the proposed tenants, or when the offer to rent was made, or facts showing their responsibility, or that they would have used the premises for office purposes only. W. 986, 38 Am. c. Replication or Reply. Where a plea alleges that third persons entered on the premises previous to the demise, claiming title thereto adverse to the lessor, and continued in possession until the time of pleading, thereby excluding plaintiff and defendant from possession, plaintiff may properly reply in the form of a special traverse denying under an absque hoc the fact that plaintiff and defendant or either of them were excluded from the entire possession of the premises.[40] A replication that constitutes a departure from the declaration is insufficient.[41]

d. Issues, Proof, and Variance[42]— (i) Issues Presented by the Pleadings. In actions for rent, as in other cases, regard must be paid to the material issues presented by the pleadings,[43] and to those only.[44]

44. Kenner v. Weill, 48 La. Ann. 805, 19 So. 934 (holding that where a plaintiff in a reconventional demand for rent of the land in controversy sets up title and claims possession, and defendant in the demand answers, disclaiming ownership and possession, the only matter in dispute is the amount of rent claimed from defendant while in possession, although the answer alleges that title is in a third person); Lewis v. Donohue, 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 514, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 319 (holding that where the execution of the lease and the non-payment of the rent sued for are admitted, the denial of the conclusion of law that the sum is due raises no issue).

45. Livingston v. Miller, 8 N. Y. 283 (where by the terms of a lease the rent reserved was made payable at such place as the landlord should direct, and in an action for non-payment he alleged that he directed that it should be paid at a particular place, and the tenant denied the allegation, and it was held that a material issue was raised by the pleadings which plaintiff was bound to prove); Lansing v. Van Alstyne, 2 Wend. App. 522 (holding that a defendant cannot claim a constructive eviction where his plea sets up a forcible eviction).

Kentucky.— Holt v. Crume, Litt. Sel. Cas. 499, holding that where, in an action on a covenant to pay rent and deliver possession, issue is joined on the plea of no demand, evidence that if a demand had been made there would have been a refusal is improper.

Massachusetts.— Locke v. Kennedy, 171 Mass. 204, 50 N. E. 531, holding that allegations in a declaration on a lease that the lease was for a time certain, and that the rent due was for certain months from that date, are material descriptive averments which must be proved as laid.

England.—Sturgess v. Farrington, 4 Taunt. 614, where defendant pleaded that he was under-tenant of parcel of certain premises for the whole of which plaintiff, his lessor, covenanted to pay rent to the landlord paramount, and that defendant paid to the landlord paramount, under threat of distress, more rent than he owed to plaintiff, and plaintiff traversed that any rent was due from himself to the landlord paramount, and it was held that this replication was not supported by proving that plaintiff assigned his term in the residue of the premises to K, who assigned them to defendant, who covenanted to pay in discharge of plaintiff the whole rent reserved to the landlord paramount.

Canada.— Lawler v. Sutherland, 9 U. C. Q. B. 205, holding that where the declaration stated that the right and interest of the lessee in the demised premises came by assignment to and was vested in defendant, and it was in evidence that defendant was at most only under-lessee for a part of the term, a nonsuit was rightly directed.

Description of premises.—A lease describing the property as the building "which is now occupied in part by R. Seal as a grocery and by Johnson Bros., as a saloon" is not a variance from a complaint describing the property as "the building which was on the date of the demise of said property occupied by R. Seal as a grocery store." Morningstar v. Querens, 142 Ala. 186, 37 So. 825. And there is no variance between a declaration for rent stating a demise of a messuage, land, and premises, with the appurtenances, and proof of a demise of a messuage and land, together with the furniture, utensils, and implements. No variance see Bowman v. Wright, 65 Nebr. 661, 91 N. W. 580, 92 N. W. 580 (holding that evidence that the rent of certain premises was reduced for the unexpired term, and that the tenant paid such amount, which was accepted in full for a certain period, when it was again reduced, was not a substantial variance with a statement in the answer that the lease was terminated and surrendered, and that a second lease was executed and surrendered and a new arrangement entered into between the parties); Van Rensselaer v. Gallup, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 454 (holding that where, in covenant against the assignee of the lessee for non-payment of rent, the declaration alleged that all the estate of the lessee in the premises had vested in defendant by assignment, and issue was joined, the point of the issue was whether defendant was assignee of the whole of the estate of the lessee in any part of the land, and it being proved that he was lessee of the whole estate in a part only, there was no variance); Roberson v. Gill, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 326 (holding that there is no substantial variance where a lessor alleges a certain sum due for rent, and the proof shows a rental at so much an acre, which amounts to the sum sued for); Shaw v. Partridge, 17 Vt. 626 (holding that there is no variance between a declaration alleging that the land was leased to defendant and taken possession of by him under a lease reserving a rent, and evidence showing such a lease to a third person and an assignment thereof by him to defendant); Backus v. Taylor, 6 Munf. (Va.) 488 (holding that a lease stipulating to pay rent and binding the lessee to board the lessor and his wife part of the term and to return the premises uninjured is not at variance with a declaration describing so much of the agreement as related to leasing and paying rent, and charging the lessee with having broken the covenant generally, and particularly in failing to pay rent, but alleging nothing about the other stipulations); Holgate v. Kay, 1 C. & K. 341, 47 E. C. L. 341 (holding that where defendant in his plea sets forth the lease, and then avers that "he entered and was possessed" of the premises thereunder, this will not estop him from proving that when he entered he found some part of the premises in the possession of a third person under an adverse title).

Estoppel to assert variance.—Where a third person in possession under the lessee held himself out to the lessor as having acquired possession from the lessee, he cannot, when sued for the rent, take advantage of the discrepancy between the complaint and the proof, the complaint alleging that he acquired possession from the lessee and the proof showing that possession was transferred through an intermediary. Iowa.— Blackman v. Kessler, 110 Iowa 140, 81 N. W. 185, holding that where the tenant does not demand relief because of false representations by the landlord's agent, evidence that he relied on the representations in becoming a party to the lease is inadmissible.

Oregon.— Kiernan v. Terry, 26 Oreg. 494, 38 Pac. 671, holding that under a plea alleging that plaintiff had no title to the premises, and that defendant was induced through plaintiff's fraud to pay him rent as lessor, and demanding judgment against plaintiff for the amount of such payments, the lease cannot be attacked as being fraudulent in its inception.

Texas.— Greenhill v. Hunton, (Civ. App. 1902) 69 S. W. 440.

Vermont.— Pingry v. Watkins, 17 Vt. 379, where, in an action of covenant for rent brought against the assignee of the lessee, plaintiff alleged that all the estate of the lessee in the premises vested in him by assignment thereof, and that defendant entered into possession of the premises after the assignment and retained possession until the rent sued for became due, and defendant pleaded that the estate of the lessee did not vest in him as alleged, or in any manner and form as alleged, and it was held that the fact of the assignment being the only material part of the issue defendant would not be allowed to prove that he did not take possession of the premises after the assignment.

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 922.

Evidence held admissible under the pleadings see Moberly v. Peek, 67 Ala. 345; Okie v. Person, 23 App. Cas. (D. C.) 170 (holding that where the defense is eviction from a portion of the premises, a plea of set-off claiming "damage accruing to defendant for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and amount due for use and occupation by plaintiff of demised premises" is broad enough to cover any damage accruing from the eviction); Norwood v. Fairservice, Quincy (Mass.) 189; Lafferty v. Hawes, 63 Minn. 13, 65 N. W. 87 (holding that an answer alleging that while defendants were in possession plaintiff took from them the second floor of the building and leased it to another; and that at the time defendants surrendered the rest of the premises they delivered to plaintiff the key of the building, and that plaintiff accepted it, and took possession of the building, and remodeled it, and ordered defendants to remove their signs therefrom, was broad enough to admit proof of an eviction or of a surrender by operation of law); Williams v. Woodard, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 487 (holding that under a plea, in an action of covenant for rent seeking to charge defendant as assignee, alleging that defendant does not hold by assignment, evidence is admissible that the estate under the lease declared on had ceased by the death of the lessee, who held only for life, before entry by defendant); Avery v. House, 2 Ohio Cir. Ct. 246, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 468; Kneeland v. Schmidt, 78 Wis. 345, 47 N. W. 438, 11 L. R. A. 498 (holding that in an action for rent accruing after abandonment, an allegation in the answer that the lease was surrendered by mutual agreement authorizes evidence that the lessor took actual possession of the premises soon after the lessee abandoned them); Fendall v. Billy, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,725, 1 Cranch C. C. 87 (holding that in Virginia, upon the plea of "no rent arrear," the tenant may give evidence of work done and goods sold and delivered to the landlord without notice of set-off).

49. Kimball v. Cross, 136 Mass. 300.

50. Williams v. Bethany, 1 La. 315 (holding that in a suit for rent against a tenant holding premises after the expiration of a lease, an offer of possession must be specially pleaded); Daly v. Wise, 132 N. Y. 306, 30 N. E. 837, 16 L. R. A. 236 (holding that the lessee of a dwelling cannot escape liability for rent on the ground that the statement of the renting agent as to its condition amounted to a warranty, where it is not so pleaded in the answer); Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Standard Nat. Bank, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 797 (breach of condition by lessor); Harmer v. Bean, 3 C. & K. 307 (holding that defendant cannot, under a plea of never indebted, avail himself of a part payment of money obtained under a distress, or of a judgment obtained against him in a county court for part of the same rent); Newport v. Harley, 2 D. & L. 921, 10 Jur. 333, 14 L. J. Q. B. 242 (holding that under the plea of never indebted defendant may show that A had recovered judgment in ejectment for the premises, and that he had attorned and paid the rent subsequently accruing due to A to avoid being turned out of possession; but that with respect to rent previously due he cannot, under that plea, set up as a defense that he has paid it to A).

51. Alabama.—Morningstar v. Querens, 142 Ala. 186, 37 So. 825 (holding that the defense of breach of agreement by the lessor must be supported by a plea of recoupment or set-off); Murphy v. Farley, 124 Ala. 279, 27 So. 442 (holding that in an action for rent tried on the pleas of the general issue and failure of consideration, evidence of an oral agreement accompanying the lease, whereby the lessor was to make certain repairs, was inadmissible).

Michigan.— Holmes v. Wood, 88 Mich. 435, 50 N. W. 323, holding that in an action for rent on defendant's vacating the premises without giving sufficient notice, where the only plea is the general issue, and there is no notice to plaintiff of the defense that the premises were in an untenantable condition, such defense cannot be interposed.

New Hampshire.— Russell v. Fabyan, 28 N. H. 543, 61 Am. Dec. 629, holding that payment can be shown only under the general issue with a brief statement, or under a special plea of payment.

New York.— Wilbur v. Collin, 4 N. Y. App. Div. 417, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 848 (holding that defendant cannot show under a general denial that before the expiration of the lease plaintiff had conveyed the premises without reserving the rent, or that plaintiff's wife, as joint owner of the premises, was not made a party to the action); Hays v. Haffen, 31 Misc. 655, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 1111 (holding that defendant under a general denial cannot show condemnation proceedings of the premises in question).

Vermont.— State University v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52, holding that if defendant has been excluded from the premises by adverse possession existing at the time of the demise and afterward continuing, he must plead such matter specially.

England.— Waddilove v. Barnett, 2 Bing. N. Cas. 538, 4 Dowl. P. C. 347, 1 Hodges 395, 5 L. J. C. P. 145, 2 Scott 763, 29 E. C. L. 652, holding that the fact of the mortgagee of the premises having given the tenant notice to pay the rent to him may be given in evidence under the general issue, if the rent sought to be recovered accrued due after the notice, but that if the rent accrued due before the notice, this defense must be specially pleaded.

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 923.

Defenses held provable under general issue see Baker v. Fawcett, 69 Ill. App. 300 (holding that the tenant may prove that he suffered injury because the land was not tiled as the landlord represented); Hubbard v. McCormick, 33 Ill. App. 486 (holding that defendant may show payment, accord and satisfaction, and with few exceptions any other matter which wholly or partly extinguished the cause of action); Friedlander v. Cushing, 18 La. Ann. 124 (holding that defendant may prove that his lessor gave him permission to quit the premises before the end of the term); Boynton v. Bodwell, 113 Mass. 531 (holding that evidence of a waiver by the landlord of a defect in a notice of the tenant's intention to surrender is admissible); Mack v. Burt, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 28 (holding that a defense that the action was prematurely brought may be shown); Smith v. Genet, 2 N. Y. City Ct. 88 (holding that in an action for rent under a void lease the fact that the lessee abandoned the premises may be proved).

52. Alabama.— Murphy v. Farley, 124 Ala. 279, 27 So. 442.

Iowa.— Bartlett v. Gaines, 11 Iowa 95, holding that where, in an action for rent in arrear and for a lien, defendant simply denies the debt, evidence that a large portion of the rent for which suit was brought had become due more than one year prior to the commencement of the action is properly excluded.

Massachusetts.— Eddy v. Coffin, 149 Mass. 463, 21 N. E. 870, 14 Am. St. Rep. 441, holding that defendant cannot recoup the expense of moving from the demised premises under a plea that plaintiff compelled him to leave the premises by failing to keep the covenants of the lease.

New York.— Nichols v. Dusenbury, 2 N. Y. 283 (holding that a defense of breach of the landlord's agreement to repair is not available under a plea of eviction); Kettletas v. Maybee, 1 Code Rep. N. S. 363, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 360 (holding that one sued as assignee of a lease cannot, under an answer denying only its execution and assignment to him,

11. Evidence [53] — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. [54] In actions for rent, as in other cases, plaintiff bears the burden of proving every disputed fact that constitutes an element of his right to recover,[55] and the burden of proving affirmative defenses rests on defendant.[56] Ordinarily the burden of proof carries show as a defense that before suit brought he had parted with his interest in the lease and the assignment).

Texas.— Hurst v. Benson, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 227, 65 S. W. 76, holding that under a plea reconvening for damages for wrongful distress and claiming compensation for clearing the rented land, evidence that plaintiff had received cotton from defendant without paying therefor is inadmissible.

Vermont.— State University v. Joslyn, 21 Vt. 52, holding that in covenant for rent against the assignee of the lessee, it is not competent for defendant to prove, under a plea denying that the lease is the deed of the lessee, that the premises, at the time of the demise and also at the time of the assignment to defendant, were possessed by persons claiming them adversely to plaintiff, the lessor, it being conceded that there was no title to the premises paramount to plaintiff's title; nor is such evidence admissible under a plea that the estate, title, etc., of the lessee did not pass by assignment to defendant as alleged in the declaration.

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 922.

See, however, Ripley v. Wightman, 4 McCord (S. C.) 447, holding that under a plea of no rent in arrear, defendant may show that the house was rendered uninhabitable by a storm.

55. Alabama.—Pheland v. Candee, 105 Ala. 235, 16 So. 696, tenancy.

Illinois.— East v. Crow, 70 Ill. 91, terms of lease.

Michigan.— Stevens v. Beardsley, 134 Mich. 506, 96 N. W. 571.

New Mexico.— Staab v. Raynolds, 4 N. M. 222, 17 Pac. 136.

New York.— Vogel v. Hemming, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 473 (amount due); Reich v. McCrea, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 650 (damages).

United States.— Weeks v. International Trust Co., 125 Fed. 370, 60 C. C. A. 236 [reversing 116 Fed. 898], election to relet premises after breach of covenant by lessee.

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 926.

Title and authority to recover.—Where an action is brought upon a lease, not by the lessor but by those claiming to have succeeded to his rights under the lease, plaintiffs are bound to establish their derivative title. Schott v. Burton, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 173. And persons suing for rent as devisees of the lessor do not establish their title as devisees by introducing the will, although the persons named in the will as devisees bear the same name as plaintiffs. Bend v. Hoffman House, 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 729, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 1081. So a plaintiff suing for rent "as trustee" or "as assignee" cannot recover, in the absence of proof of his authority. Gibbons v. Hellwig, 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 787, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 291. In the case of a lease by an agent in his own name as agent, where the lessee went into possession and paid rent, but it does not appear that he was in possession otherwise than under the lease, the presumption is that the occupancy was under the lease. Schaefer v. Henkel, 75 N. Y. 378. However, in an action by an administrator for rent accruing during the lifetime of his intestate, it is not necessary for him to show title in his intestate. Wells v. Mason, 5 Ill. 84.

In an action for rent founded on a holding over, where the answer admits the holding over but alleges a new agreement as to the continuance of the tenancy, the burden of proof is on the landlord to establish the holding over on the old terms. Montgomery v. Willis, 45 Nebr. 434, 63 N. W. 794. Accordingly the burden is on him to show the rent prescribed in the lease. Ambrose v. Hyde, 145 Cal. 555, 79 Pac. 64. The presumption created by Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 2, that a tenant of agricultural lands who continues to occupy the premises more than sixty days after the term does so upon the same terms as the lease of the previous year, is rebuttable. Ambrose v. Hyde, supra. And see Thetford v. Tyler, 8 Q. B. 95, 10 Jur. 68, 15 L. J. Q. B. 33, 55 E. C. L. 95.

56. Georgia.— Parker v. Brown, 115 Ga. 324, 41 S. E. 613, holding that the failure of the lessor to make repairs as agreed is no defense if the lessee does not prove actual damages.

Illinois.— Skakel v. Hennessey, 57 Ill. App. 332, holding that where one rents a house, and, when sued for the rent, claims that he acted as agent for another, the burden is on him to show that fact.

Iowa.— Gatch v. Garretson, 100 Iowa 252, 69 N. W. 550, holding that the burden is on a lessee to show that the lessor failed to heat the building sufficiently to entitle him to an increase of rent, which was by the lease conditioned upon his heating the building.

Louisiana.— Berens v. Maristany, 23 La. Ann. 724, holding that the burden of showing that the notary who drew the lease made an error in computing the rent falls upon the lessee.

Michigan.— Stevens v. Beardsley, 134 Mich. 506, 96 N. W. 571, settlement of claim for rent.

New York.— Reiner v. Jones, 38 N. Y. App. Div. 441, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 423 (holding that a tenant is not entitled to deduct for expenses of repairs, where the proof does not show how much of a sum expended for repairs of two buildings was spent on the building in with it the burden of adducing evidence in support of the fact in issue;[57] but a party is relieved from this latter burden where the fact is presumed in law to exist, in which case the burden of adducing evidence of the non-existence of the fact rests on the opposite party.[58] Where a third person is in possession of the premises under the lessee, the law presumes that he has taken an assignment of the lease and assumed the obligations thereunder, and in an action against him for rent the burden is on him to prove the contrary;[59] but it cannot be presumed that defendant assigned the lease, where it is not proven that another was in possession of the entire premises.[60] In a settlement of accounts between landlord and tenant, and the mutual claims of the parties for and against each other, the party relying upon a contract, either as supporting his own demand or disproving that of the other, carries the burden of establishing it.[61]

b. Admissibility.[62] The admissibility of evidence in actions for rent is gov-suit); Hurliman v. Seckendorf, 9 Misc. 264, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 740.

North Carolina.— Gates v. Max, 125 N. C. 139, 34 S. E. 266 (transfer of rents by plaintiff); Hutchins v. Hodges, 98 N. C. 404, 4 S. E. 46 (damages from eviction).

Pennsylvania.— Bradley v. Citizens' Trust, etc., Co., 6 Pa. Dist. 217 (condition precedent to right to rent); Snyder v. Middleton, 4 Phila. 343 (eviction).

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 926.

Modification of lease.— In a suit for rent under a written lease, where the defense is a rescission of the lease by a subsequent parol agreement for less rent, the burden of proving the rescission is on defendant. Wheeler v. Baker, 59 Iowa 86, 12 N. W. 767; Staab v. Raynolds, 4 N. M. 222, 17 Pac. 136.

Termination of tenancy.— In an action for use and occupation against one who, previous to the period claimed for, was plaintiff's tenant of the premises, the burden is on defendant to prove the discontinuance of the relation. Hill v. Goolsby, 41 Ga. 289. And see Snyder v. Middleton, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 343. So where a firm occupying premises belonging to two of its members as tenants in common continues such occupation after the death of one of the owners, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the relation of landlord and tenant continues. Chapin v. Foss, 75 Ill. 280. The acceptance of a surrender is a matter of defense to an action for rent; and where the tenant fails to show the time and period of a reletting by the landlord during the term, it will not be presumed to have been made at such time as to constitute an acceptance. Isaacson v. Wolfensohn, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 555. But see Harris v. Dub, 57 Ga. 77. However, in an action for use and occupation, a lease from plaintiff to other persons being proved which had two years to run from the entry of defendant, it is incumbent on plaintiff to prove that it was surrendered so that he was at liberty to relet the premises. Bedford v. Terhune, 30 N. Y. 453, 86 Am. Dec. 394. Where lessees, when sued on the lease, allege that it was canceled by agreement with the agent of the lessor, the burden is on them to establish the allegation. Faville v. Lundvall, 106 Iowa 135, 76 N. W. 512.

The burden of proving payment of rent rests on the tenant. Montgomery v. Leuwer, 94 Minn. 133, 102 N. W. 367; Morrow v. Galbraith, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 552; Gay v. Joplin, 13 Fed. 650, 4 McCrary 459. Effect of receipt for rent see supra, VIII, A, 10, h.

58. David Stevenson Brewing Co. v. Culbertson, 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 486, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 1039 (holding that delivery of the lease at the time of its execution will be presumed, where the tenant has gone into actual possession); Rogers v. McKenzie, 73 N. C. 487 (holding that the lessee is entitled to credit on the rent for the amount of taxes paid by him, since it may fairly be presumed that the tax was paid to prevent the sale of the land for the tax and to secure the benefit of his lease; and that as the taxes were paid for the ease and benefit of the lessor, his assent thereto will be presumed); Heipley v. Green, 7 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 497 (holding that where entries are made by a lessor in a passbook containing an account for rent, and the book is returned to the lessee, it is presumed that the lessee has knowledge of the entries, and in the absence of proof to the contrary he is bound thereby). And see Eberlein v. Abel, 10 Ill. App. 626.

59. Weide v. St. Paul Boom Co., 92 Minn. 76, 99 N. W. 421; Bedford v. Terhune, 30 N. Y. 453, 86 Am. Dec. 394, 27 How. Pr. 422 [affirming 1 Daly 371]; Van Rensselaer v. Secor, 32 Barb. (N. 64. Alabama. — Anderson v. Winton, 136 Ala. 422, 34 So. 962, holding that where defendant pleaded non-liability by reason of eviction, evidence that he had sublet one of four houses included in the lease was admissible as showing that he retained possession.

Georgia.— Stewart v. Lanier House Co., 75 Ga. 582, holding that a tenant sued for rent of a hotel who seeks to recoup damages sustained by reason of the lessor's neglect to keep the hotel in repair as agreed may show that persons refused to come to the hotel, and that it had the reputation of being untenantable, and that in its then present condition it could not be run profitably.

Illinois.— Resser v. Corwin, 72 Ill. App. 625, holding that in an action by the lessor upon a lease after abandonment by the lessee, it is competent, for the purpose of showing the damages sustained by the lessor, to prove how much the premises netted him after the abandonment.

Maryland.— Finch v. Mishler, 100 Md. 458, 59 Atl. 1009, holding that in an action on a rent note given by a tenant to a mortgagee, where defendant showed that plaintiff had sold the property under its mortgage, so as to make it appear that plaintiff had violated one of the implied conditions of the note, and plaintiff then showed that the sale was made subject to the lease, and that the property, which was a summer hotel, was not sold until the end of the season, it was proper for plaintiff to show further that it was necessary to have someone take care of the property until the next spring, in order to show that defendant was not damaged by the sale.

New York.— Chamberlain v. Iba, 181 N. Y. 486, 74 N. E. 481 [reversing 87 N. Y. App. Div. 632, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 1120]; Trenkmann v. Schneider, 26 Misc. 695, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 770 [reversing 23 Misc. 336, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 232] (holding that in an action for rent under a lease providing that the premises were let to defendant "for the purpose of her business," where it was claimed by defendant that plaintiff did not supply defendant's machinery with steam, evidence was admissible to show the character of defendant's business, and its requirements as to machinery); Schloss v. Huber, 21 Misc. 28, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 921 (holding that receipts given to defendant by former landlords of the premises are admissible to show the term of the original hiring, and its continuance); Lawrence v. Mycenian Marble Co., 1 Misc. 105, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 698 (holding that where the tenant defends on the ground of eviction by reason of the deprivation of the use of a freight elevator in the premises, evidence of the landlord's previous neglect to maintain the elevator is relevant to show that its subsequent inefficiency was not casual or inadvertent); Dyett v. Pendlton, 8 Cow. 727 (holding that evidence that the lessor habitually brought company under the same roof with the demised premises, although in an apartment not demised, by which noise and disturbance were made, and that in consequence the lessee quitted the premises with his family, is proper under a plea of eviction).

Oregon.— Ladd v. Hawkes, 41 Oreg. 247, 68 Pac. 422, holding that defendant in an action for rent of a wharf, having alleged that he agreed to pay for it only so long as he occupied it, may give evidence, not only that he was not in the occupancy of it but that another was, through agreement with plaintiff.

Pennsylvania.— Harvey v. Gunzberg, 148 Pa. St. 294, 23 Atl. 1005 (holding that in an action against a tenant for rent for the last seven months of the year after the expiration of his lease, he having held over and occupied and paid the rent for the premises for five months, there is no error in the admission in evidence of a letter from plaintiff to defendant, written over a month before defendant vacated the premises, that in case he moved out he would be held for the rent for the balance of the year); Pancoast v. Coon, 6 Pa. Cas. 164, 9 Atl. 156 (holding that where one agrees verbally with the tenant and the owner of property to rent the property on the terms upon which the tenant held it, it is not error, in an action between the landlord and the later tenant, to admit in evidence the lease between the former tenant and the owner to show what those terms were.

South Carolina.— Hill v. Williams, 41 S. C. 134, 19 S. E. 290, holding that for the purpose of showing that the contract for rent between plaintiff and defendant had in legal effect been annulled, defendant claiming that he had attorned to others with the consent of plaintiff, testimony of such persons that they had bought the land since plaintiff alleged that he had rented it to defendant, rent obligations from defendant to such persons, and testimony of such persons that plaintiff knew that defendant rented from them, are competent evidence.

Texas.— Thomas v. Judy, (Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 890 (holding that a judgment in an action between T and S, declaring T to be entitled to the use and possession of certain land for life, and enjoining S from in any way interfering with the premises or tenants is admissible in an action between T and a tenant involving the right to rent in which the tenant relies on payment to S, although knowing at the time thereof of the judgment); Johnson v. Doss, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1075 (holding that where plaintiff sued defendant for the rent of land which plaintiff had purchased at execution sale otherwise not.[65] These rules apply to the admissibility of evidence with reference to the amount of rent due,[66] and with reference to the condition of the against defendant's lessor subsequent to the lease, and to prove their rights to the rent offered in evidence the judgment against defendant's lessor, execution thereon, and sale thereunder, and the sheriff's deed to them, it was error to reject such evidence on the ground that it raised a question of title, as that was not in issue).

Washington.— Earles v. Bigelow, 7 Wash. 581, 35 Pac. 390.

Wisconsin.— Colclough v. Niland, 68 Wis. 309, 32 N. W. 119, holding that in an action for rent and for repairs of a building made necessary by defendant's negligence, in which defendant counter-claimed for damages, evidence of damage caused by leakage through the cellar upon his goods, in the absence of evidence that the tenant occupying the rooms above the store through the floor of which the water passed was responsible is admissible.

United States.— Lemmon v. U. S., 106 Fed. 650, 45 C. C. A. 518.

England.— Hawkins v. Warre, 3 B. & C. 690, 5 D. & R. 512, 10 E. C. L. 313, holding that where a witness deposed that the settled draft of a lease was the final agreement between the parties, for one of whom he acted as agent, an unstamped memorandum written afterward by himself but not signed by anybody was admissible as a mere proposal to show that the settled draft was not the final agreement.

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 927.

65. Alabama.— Linam v. Jones, 134 Ala. 570, 33 So. 343 (holding that a deed showing the conveyance of land by plaintiff to a third person is properly excluded as irrelevant, it not being shown that the land conveyed was the same as that rented); Burks v. Bragg, 89 Ala. 204, 7 So. 156 (holding that in an action on a note given by a tenant for rent due, evidence as to why at the time of executing the note he made no claim for damages to his goods caused by the failure of his landlord to make repairs is immaterial, where there is no evidence that the landlord was obliged by the contract to make repairs).

Illinois.— Barnes v. Northern Trust Co., 169 Ill. 112, 48 N. E. 31 [affirming 66 Ill. App. 282], holding that on the question of a person's liability for rent under a lease, it is immaterial what motive induced him to make certain payments thereof.

Kansas.— Prosser v. Pretzel, (App. 1899) 55 Pac. 854, holding that on an issue whether a tenant was justified under the lease in abandoning the premises because of their untenantable condition, evidence that other circumstances induced him to abandon the premises is inadmissible.

Massachusetts.— Bigelow v. Collamore, 5 Cush. 226.

New York.— Smith v. Barber, 96 N. Y. App. Div. 256, 89 N. Y. Suppl. 317; Majestic Hotel Co. v. Bigelow, 50 N. Y. App. Div. 444, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 81 (holding that where plaintiff alleges that the premises were leased for a year, and defendant alleges that the tenancy was one at will, evidence of plaintiff showing his custom to charge a different rate of rental for yearly leases from that charged for monthly leases is inadmissible); Sonn v. Weissmann, 29 Misc. 622, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 78 [affirming 27 Misc. 845, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 1149]; Steinhardt v. Buel, 1 Misc. 295, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 706 [reversing 16 N. Y. Suppl. 153] (where, on the landlord's agreeing to supply additional room, the tenant agreed that he would renew his lease for another year, but nothing was said as to the amount of rent to be paid, and subsequently the tenant refused to execute a lease, and in an action for rent it was held that the agreement was incomplete and inoperative for want of an agreement as to the rent, and accordingly evidence that the landlord intended to give the additional room gratis was inadmissible to affect the tenant with liability, because such intention was not communicated to him).

Pennsylvania.— Reineman v. Blair, 96 Pa. St. 155 (holding that where a landlord and tenant made a written agreement by which the former was to be permitted to enter and make repairs necessary to render the building safe, and was to allow a stated reduction of rent to compensate the tenant for the loss from the inconvenience and damages ensuing from such repairs, the tenant cannot set up the inconvenience and loss to his business, unless the completion of the repairs had been unnecessarily delayed, and to admit evidence to prove the entire extent of the interference with his business by the repairs and the entire loss sustained by him, instead of confining the inquiry to the damages caused by the delay, is error); Newlin v. Palmer, 11 Serg. & R. 98 (holding that a receipt for rent by one claiming adversely to plaintiff is not admissible without some evidence of attornment).

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 927.

66. Alabama.— Anderson v. Winton, 136 Ala. 422, 34 So. 962 (where plaintiff rented a farm together with certain houses thereon, and thereafter in consideration of a surrender of such lease, except as to such houses and certain other property, and the payment of one hundred and forty dollars, accepted a lease of another farm from the same lessor, and it was held, in an action for rent under the second lease, that a question asked of defendant on cross-examination as to the reasonable rental value of each of the houses retained by defendant was immaterial); Simpson v. East, 124 Ala. 293, 27 So. 436 (holding that where defendant had executed premises,[67] the use of the premises by the tenant for illegal purposes,[68] the surrender of the premises by the tenant and their acceptance by the landlord,[69] and a note to plaintiff in which the amount of rent to be paid by him to plaintiff was fixed, it was proper to exclude evidence as to what the premises rented for in prior or after years).

Georgia.— Royston v. Royston, 29 Ga. 82, holding that as evidence of the fair rent of a plantation, it may be shown that during the time in question many of the neighboring lands lay idle, and that it was a common thing within stated periods to let the like lands for a year for the price of the repairs only; and that evidence of the general rent or profits of neighboring plantations is also admissible.

Iowa.—Blackman v. Kessler, 110 Iowa 140, 81 N. W. 185, holding that where the tenant's answer averring that the written lease was set aside by a verbal agreement and that he was responsible only for the reasonable value of the land is not assailed, evidence as to the reasonable value of the land is admissible.

Maine.— Sargent v. Ashe, 23 Me. 201, holding that in an action on an implied agreement a parol agreement concerning the amount of rent to be paid, made at the commencement of the occupation, is competent evidence in determining what would be a reasonable amount of rent.

Michigan.—Stevens v. Beardsley, 122 Mich. 671, 81 N. W. 921, holding that where the amount is in dispute, evidence as to what was paid by another of plaintiff's tenants who occupied property adjoining that occupied by defendant is inadmissible; but that evidence that the rent of other business houses in the city depreciated during defendant's occupancy is admissible, since, the contract price being in dispute, testimony as to value may be shown as bearing on the probabilities of the truthfulness of the parties.

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 929.

67. Wilkinson v. Clauson, 29 Minn. 91, 12 N. W. 147 (where the defense was fraud in misrepresentations by the lessor of the sufficiency of a sewer which proved insufficient on the occurrence of a heavy rain, causing damage to the lessee's goods, and it was held that evidence as to the size and manner of construction of the sewer, and the advice of an expert about it, were proper on the questions of plaintiff's good faith and due care, and that evidence as to the nature of the storm in question was proper to show how the premises were affected by it, but that evidence of subsequent storms which were not complained of was immaterial); Benkard v. Babcock, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 175, 17 Abb. Pr. 421, 27 How. Pr. 391 (holding that where defendants set up a breach of plaintiff's covenant that the premises should be free from percolation of water, it is error to allow inquiries to be put to witnesses as to the injury to the value of the premises in consequence of the dampness thereof without laying a proper foundation for such inquiries by showing a breach of the covenant during the time referred to); St. Michael's Protestant Episcopal Church v. Behrens, 13 Daly (N. Y.) 548, 10 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 181 (holding that where the defense is constructive eviction by reason of defective plumbing, it is error to exclude evidence of the effect and condition of the premises on the lessee's employees, since this tends to show whether the premises were so injured as to render them unfit for occupancy); Hays v. Moody, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 385 (holding that where defendant alleges that the premises were untenantable because of defective drainage, evidence that plaintiff repaired the drainage after the abandonment is incompetent, there being no question of negligence, and the evidence not establishing an accepted surrender).

68. Demartini v. Anderson, 127 Cal. 33, 59 Pac. 207 (holding that evidence of the reputation of a house as one of ill fame is admissible on the part of defendant to show that it was being so used with the owner's knowledge, and that the contract was illegal); Egan v. Gordon, 65 Minn. 505, 68 N. W. 103 (holding that, the defense being that the premises were leased and used for immoral purposes, and there being evidence that the lessee occupied the premises before and after the lease was executed in the same general way, evidence of the reputation of the house both before and after the execution of the lease was competent; and that evidence of acts done on the premises tending to show that the place was in fact of the character alleged was competent to prove its character, although plaintiff was absent when the acts were committed); Plath v. Kline, 18 N. Y. App. Div. 240, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 951 (holding that in an action on a renewal lease for rent, where the defense was that the letting was for an immoral purpose, evidence of the prior lease and of defendant's tenancy under it was competent on the question of plaintiff's knowledge of the use made by defendant of the premises and of his consent thereto, as bearing on his understanding or intent in that respect when the lease in suit was made, where the unlawful business was continued from and after the making of the latter).

69. Arizona.— Kastner v. Campbell, 6 Ariz. 145, 53 Pac. 586, holding that where the lessees were partners, and were defending on the ground of rescission and breach of the lessor's agreement to construct a building on the premises, evidence of a dissolution of the partnership and a removal of one partner with the knowledge of the lessor prior to the time the rent sued for accrued, and that in a controversy about the rent the lessor refused to permit the other partner to remove to a building which he had been forced to construct, is inadmissible to prove a surren-

the renewal of the tenancy on the expiration of the original term.[70] Admissions and declarations are likewise received subject to the general rules of evi-der of the lease; and that evidence offered by the lessee to prove acts on his part toward a surrender of the lease before the rent accrued, but without connecting them with reciprocal conduct or acquiescence of the lessor, is also properly excluded.

District of Columbia.— Okie v. Person, 23 App. Cas. 170, holding that in an action for two months' unpaid rent due in advance on the twentieth day of each month, where the defense is a surrender of the premises and acceptance of such surrender during the first month after the rent day under an agreement that no rent should be paid while the premises were being remodeled, evidence is admissible showing that before the execution of the lease the lessor had promised that no rent should be charged during the process of remodeling, and that after the surrender and before the expiration of the term lumber had been stored on the premises by the lessor.

Iowa.— Jenkins v. Clyde Coal Co., 82 Iowa 618, 48 N. W. 970, holding that where one, without excuse, signs, without reading it, a receipt for money due under a lease, which receipt recites that the lease is terminated and that the payment is received in full of all claims under it, he cannot, in the absence of proof of fraud, show that he thought he was signing a receipt only.

Massachusetts.— Cooley v. Collins, 186 Mass. 507, 71 N. E. 979 (holding that where defendant contends that he was not liable because either plaintiff or his grantor had accepted others as tenants and had collected rent of them as such, evidence that plaintiff and his grantor had given receipts for rent in defendant's name, and that when plaintiff collected rent from occupants he invariably made out his bills and receipts in the name of defendant, is admissible); Dix v. Atkins, 130 Mass. 171 (holding that in a suit by a landlord to recover a quarter's rent under a lease for a year providing that it should be continued or renewed for a like term by a failure to give notice of an intention to terminate it, evidence as to whether plaintiff has let the leased rooms since the quarter sued for, and of their condition, and how they have been since occupied, is immaterial, and does not tend to show that he accepted a surrender of the lease during the first quarter); Boynton v. Bodwell, 113 Mass. 531 (holding that after proof that the tenant left because of obstruction of the light by the location of a neighboring wall, evidence that at the time of the letting the landlord had said that there was no danger of such an obstruction is admissible on the question of waiver by the landlord of a defect in a notice by the tenant of his intention to surrender the premises).

Michigan.— Hill v. Robinson, 23 Mich. 24, holding that where the defense is that the tenants surrendered and abandoned the lease and premises with the assent of the landlord, evidence of the occupancy of the premises or a part of them by third persons, of the delivery of the key to the landlord, and of negotiations between the landlord and third persons for a new letting, is competent on the question of surrender in fact.

Missouri.— Huling v. Roll, 43 Mo. App. 234, holding that after the parties to a lease have done acts amounting in law to a surrender, evidence of an offer by the lessees to the lessor of a sum for their discharge from the obligations of the lease is immaterial.

Pennsylvania.— Pratt v. H. M. Richards Jewelry Co., 69 Pa. St. 53, holding that evidence that after one of several sublessees vacated the leased premises the lessee surrendered and delivered possession to the lessor, who collected rent from the other sublessees, and that the sublessee in question did not occupy the building afterward, is admissible on the question of a surrender by the sublessee and acceptance by the lessee.

See 32 Cent. Dig. tit. "Landlord and Tenant," § 932.

70. Emmons v. Scudder, 115 Mass. 367 (holding that where a tenant, after the expiration of his lease, continues in possession under an agreement for a lease of the same and additional premises, proof of his payment of the rent stipulated in the new agreement and of his underletting a tenement not included in the original lease, even though the rent therefor was paid him under protest, is evidence of an entry under the new agreement); Wall v. Hinds, 4 Gray (Mass.) 256, 64 Am. Dec. 64 (holding that under a lease which provides that the lessor may terminate it by three months' notice in writing "to the lessee," and that upon receiving such notice "the lessee, his legal representatives or assigns," by giving written notice to the lessor, may continue to hold the premises at an increased rent, which the lessee in that contingency covenants to pay, a notice in writing to the lessor from assignees of the lessee, stating their receipt of such a notice from him and their intention to hold the premises for the residue of the term at the increased rent, is admissible against the lessee in an action on his covenant for the increased rent); Mittwer v. Stremel, 69 Minn. 19, 71 N. W. 698 (holding that where there was a new agreement for tenancy, made after the expiration of the term of a lease for years of a store building, the only question between the parties being whether it was for a year or from month to month, evidence that the tenants had built up a large trade in that part of the city, that it would cost them a considerable sum to move, and that there was no other place in that locality into which they could move when the agreement was made, is irrelevant); Carter v. Collar, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 339 (holding that where a tenant under a sealed lease for a year continues in possession after its termination, the lease

dence.[71] An inoperative lease may be admitted in evidence for certain purposes,[72] and an instrument executed after suit brought is not necessarily to be excluded.[73] may be admitted in evidence, in an action of assumpsit for use and occupation, to show the terms of the new holding).

71. Ambrose v. Hyde, 145 Cal. 555, 79 Pac. 64 (holding that conversations held between plaintiff and the wife of his assignor concerning the rent of the premises to defendant, and held by her with others who tried to rent them, none of which was in the presence of defendant, are not admissible against him); Dunn v. Jaffray, 36 Kan. 408, 13 Pac. 781 (where a firm of which plaintiff was a member leased a store-room to defendant until the premises should be sold, when the firm was to give defendant ninety days' notice of the sale, on which the tenancy was to expire, and on Aug. 24, 1880, plaintiff bought the same, and about the same time the lessors notified defendant of the sale, and on Oct. 20, 1881, plaintiff sold the lot, and the same day his grantee notified defendant to quit, and it was held, in an action by plaintiff against defendant for use and occupation prior to the last mentioned date, that evidence of the notice to quit was properly excludded, as what plaintiff's grantee said or did after he purchased the property could not affect plaintiff's rights while he owned the premises); Bigelow v. Collamore, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 226 (holding that in construing a stipulation in a lease for years that the lessee shall pay the rent reserved except in cases of unavoidable casualty, declarations of the lessor as to his understanding of the terms of the lease are not admissible); Jacobs v. Callaghan, 57 Mich. 11, 23 N. W. 454 (holding that where the tenant claims that the premises had been surrendered and accepted by plaintiff, declarations of the person in possession to third persons are admissible as showing that he held possession under defendant and not under plaintiff); Ledyard v. Morey, 54 Mich. 77, 19 N. W. 754 (holding that in an action to recover an agreed rental for the use of a right of way, evidence that the lessee told one of his own tenants that he had the right to use the premises for passage is admissible, and not open to the objection that the lease is the best evidence); Durando v. Wyman, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 597 (holding that if, pending the possession of demised premises by a third person the lessor receives from the lessee a surrender of the term, such surrender, if produced by the lessor in a subsequent action for rent against the occupant, is an admission that the lessee and not defendant was at its date the tenant of lessor); Schloss v. Huber, 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 28, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 921 (holding that conversations between the tenant and former agents through whom the hiring was done were competent to show the term of the original hiring and its continuance.

72. Crommelin v. Thiess, 31 Ala. 412, 70 Am. Dec. 499 (holding that a parol agreement for a lease for the term of one year to commence at a future day, although void as a contract under the statute of frauds, may be looked to in order to explain the subsequent holding of the premises and to show that it was not on the terms of a prior valid lease); Lemmon v. U. S., 106 Fed. 650, 45 C. C. A. 518 (holding that on the issue whether third persons in possession of leased premises during a certain term were holding under the lessee, testimony that they were holding under void leases from other persons, for which they paid the rent, and the void leases themselves, are competent evidence); De Medina v. Polson, Holt N. P. 47, 3 E. C. L. 28 (holding that recourse may be had to the original agreement, although void under the statute of frauds, to calculate the amount of the rent due where defendant entered under the agreement). And see Simpson v. East, 124 Ala. 293, 27 So. 436 (holding that where plaintiff prepared a lease describing the land and reserving certain portions, which defendant refused to sign because it contained a stipulation requiring him to execute a mortgage to secure the rent, but defendant made no objection to the reservation contained therein and subsequently executed a note for the rent, the lease was admissible to show that parts of the property were reserved, although plaintiff alleged that no reservations were to be made); Pusheck v. Frances E. Willard Nat. Temperance Hospital Assoc, 94 Ill. App. 192 (holding that in an action for rent by a lessor against a lessee holding over, a lease prepared during negotiations between the parties for a new letting of the premises, but not executed, is admissible on the question of the amount of the rent, as a part of the res gestæ.

73. Smith v. Houston, 16 Ala. 111 (holding that in assumpsit for rent of land brought for the use of B, the fact that B while sheriff and after suit brought executed the deed under which plaintiff claims does not render it inadmissible to show title in plaintiff); Baltimore City v. Peat, 93 Md. 696, 50 Atl. 152, 698 (where a lease containing a covenant to pay rent as it matured was assigned by the lessee, and the interest of the assignee was sold under a judicial decree, and thereafter the assignor paid rents on the assignee's failing to do so, and, after the commencement of suit by the assignor against the assignee to recover the rent paid by the assignor subsequent to the sale and because of the assignee's failure to pay, a deed was executed pursuant to the decree, and it was held that the fact that the deed was executed after the commencement of suit did not render it inadmissible to show the termination of the privity between the assignor and assignee by relation from the time of the sale). See, however, Walton v. Cronly, 14 Wend. (N Y.) 63, holding that a declaration of trust executed after the commencement of a suit against an as-

The service on a tenant of a written notice to quit cannot be proved by the written return and affidavit of the person making the service.[74]

c. Weight and Sufficiency. Plaintiff in an action for rent must establish his case by a preponderance of evidence.[75] The weight and sufficiency of evidence is governed by the general rules applied in civil cases generally,[76] and this applies signee of a lease, to the effect that the assignment was merely a security for the payment of money, is not admissible.

74. Hollingsworth v. Snyder, 2 Iowa 435, holding that proof must be made as at common law, and subject to the right of cross-examination.

75. East v. Crow, 70 Ill. 91 (holding that he cannot recover if the evidence is equally balanced); Vives v. Robertson, 52 La. Ann. 11, 26 So. 756.

Certainty.—To justify a recovery on a written lease, the proof in behalf of plaintiff must made his demand certain; to raise a probability is not sufficient. Jackson v. Belling, 22 La. Ann. 377.

Evidence held sufficient to support a verdict against the lessee's claim to a set-off for repairs (Roesch v. Johnson, 69 Ark. 30, 62 S. W. 416); to support a finding that defendants had an interest in the lease as principals of the actual tenant (Bettman v. Shadle, 22 Ind. App. 542, 53 N. E. 662); to justify a verdict against the lessee's claim that in case of an overflow of the land he was not to pay rent (Clay v. Martin, 23 La. Ann. 470); to warrant the jury in finding that there had been a settlement of the accounts of the parties (Stevens v. Beardsley, 134 Mich. 506, 96 N. W. 571); to support a finding that the lessor did not rebuild within a reasonable time (Lincoln Trust Co. v. Nathan, 175 Mo. 32, 74 S. W. 1007); to sustain a finding of the existence of an oral agreement of leasing for a term of years (Humphrey Hardware Co. v. Herrick, 5 Nebr. (Unoff.) 524, 99 N. W. 233); to sustain a finding that the lease was made with the intent that the premises should be used for purposes of prostitution (Ernst v. Grosby, 140 N. Y. 364, 35 N. E. 603 [affirming 21 N. Y. Suppl. 365]; to sustain a finding that one who occupied premises as agent of the holder of a lease continued to occupy them simply as agent after the execution of an assignment of the lease to him, so that the assignor continued liable for the rent (Dresner v. Fredericks, 91 N. Y. App. Div. 224, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 589); to sustain the defense that the letting was for the illegal purpose of conducting a bowling alley (Updike v. Campbell, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 570); to show when lease began (Jourgensen v. Traitel, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 33) to sustain a judgment for plaintiff as on an account stated (Treadwel v. Bruder, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 596); to support a finding that the premises were occupied under the lease by defendant through subtenants, who were not in privity of contract with plaintiff rendering defendant liable for the rent (Ely v. Winans, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 929); to sustain a finding that an elevator in the leased building was not stopped for repairs by the lessor for an unreasonable time (Ardsley Hall Co. v. Sirrett, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 792); to sustain a finding that the letting was for a year (Dixon v. Silberblatt, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 262); to sustain a finding against a counter-claim for storage of plaintiff's goods (Watson v. Raab, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 972); to sustain a finding that the letting was by the month (Lydig v. Thompson, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 709, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 436); to sustain a finding that the landlord had released the tenant from liability (People's Sav. Bank v. Alexander, 140 Pa. St. 22, 21 Atl. 248); to justify a finding that the lessee took the premises with knowledge of the state of the lessor's title and at his own risk (Kemble Coal, etc., Co. v. Scott, 90 Pa. St. 332); to show the amount due (Mensing v. Cardwell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 75 S. W. 347); to show knowledge on the part of lessee of the assignment of the lease by the lessor (Wittmann v. Watry, 45 Wis. 491); to justify a finding that defendant was substituted as tenant in place of the lessee (Darch v. McLeod, 16 U. C. Q. B. 614); or to justify a finding that rent was payable quarterly (Wilson v. McNamara, 12 U. C. Q. B. 446).

Evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that the premises were not tenantable (Field v. Surpless, 83 N. Y. App. Div. 268, 82 N. Y. Suppl. 127); to show that the tenant was to be allowed credit for repairs (Ely v. Fahy, 79 Hun (N. Y.) 65, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 667); to show the amount due (Oliver v. Moore, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 343); to show that rent was due (Sickles v. Shaw, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 836, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 978); to show that the husband of a lessee was a co-lessee (Bernstein v. Heinemann, 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 464, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 467); to show that an oral lease was not for a year, but only from month to month (Schumacher v. Waring, 7 Misc. (N. Y.) 161, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 325); to establish a lease for six months (Taylor v. Kirkover, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 42, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 1081); to show the amount or value of excess steam taken by the lessee (Goetschius v. Shapiro, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 171); to support a finding that the tenant held over without a new contract of tenancy (Bon v. Fenlon, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 858); to show that at the time of the first payment of rent defendant was acting under any legal duress (Mineral R., etc., Co. v. Flaherty, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 236); or to support a verdict for damages on a counter-claim for failure to heat the premises (Hunter v. Hathaway, 108 Wis. 620, 84 N. W. 996). Mere proof that to evidence which is adduced on issues of eviction[77] and surrender and acceptance.[78]

12. Amount of Recovery[79] — a. Rent Accruing After Institution of Action.[80] Rents accruing after the institution of the action cannot as a rule be recovered.[81]

b. Effect of Stipulation For Penalty For Non-Payment of Rent. A stipulation for a penalty for non-payment of rent does not preclude the landlord from recovering the full amount of unpaid rent, although it exceeds the penalty.[82]

c. Interest.[83] It is generally held that interest is recoverable in covenant and in debt on arrears of rent from the time it became due.[84] This rule applies to a third person furnished money to a lessee to pay his rent is not sufficient to show that the landlord has accepted the third person as his lessee. Ely v. Winans, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 929.

Where the evidence of experts as to the fair annual rent of the land is conflicting, it is competent for the master to fix the rate at the sum agreed on by the parties as rent for a certain previous year. Jenckes v. Cook, 10 R. I. 215.

77. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding of eviction see Lawrence v. Mycenian Marble Co., 1 Misc. (N. Y.) 105, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 698; Eschmann v. Atkinson, 91 N. Y. Suppl. 319.

Evidence held insufficient to show that the premises had been rendered untenantable because of fire (Bowen v. Shackter, (N. J. Sup. 1905) 60 Atl. 1111; Block v. Katz, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 778, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 865); to show a constructive eviction on account of a disagreeable odor (Diehl v. Watson, 89 N. Y. App. Div. 445, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 851); to prove that the landlord let adjoining premises, knowing that they were to be used for the purpose of prostitution (Townsend v. Gilsey, 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 59); or to show that defendant was evicted by a third person from a right of way to a river from the leased premises which was appurtenant to the lease (Baylies v. Philadelphia, etc., Coal, etc., Co., 10 N. Y. Suppl. 316). Record of a judgment held to be no evidence of defendant's having been evicted see Smith v. Pettit, 2 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 257.

78. Evidence held sufficient to warrant a finding that there had been a valid surrender of the lease (Foster v. Fleishans, 69 Mich. 543, 37 N. W. 549); to support a finding that an agent of the landlord was authorized to accept a surrender of the leased premises and that a surrender was made by the tenant and accepted by the agent (Paget v. Electrical Engineering Co., 85 Minn. 311, 88 N. W. 844); to show a surrender and acceptance, and that defendant waived the right to rent for a short period of holding over (Dobbin v. McDonald, 60 Minn. 380, 62 N. W. 437); to warrant a finding that the lease had been surrendered by the tenant and accepted by the landlord (Fleischmann Realty, etc., Co. v. Morison, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 128).

Evidence held insufficient to establish the defense that the premises had been surrendered by defendant pursuant to a notice to quit, requiring him to pay the amount of their rent due on or before the expiration of three days before the day of service thereof or surrender possession of the premises see Morris v. Dayton, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 172.

overdue instalments of rent;[85] and it applies also even though the rent is payable in property of a specific quantity.[86]

d. Attorney's Fees. If the lease provides for an attorney's fees in case suit is necessary to recover rent, the fee is properly allowed as part of the recovery.[87]

e. Damages in Addition to Rent.[88] Under the code the lessor may, in an action for rent, recover damages for a wrongful holding over pending proceedings to recover possession for default in payment of rent.[89] So in an action for rent the lessor may recover the reasonable expenses incurred by him in causing the removal from the premises of the lessee's machinery by the execution of the warrant of dispossession.[90] The measure of damages for breach of the tenant's agreement to take steam power from the lessor at an agreed compensation is not necessarily the whole amount agreed to be paid, but a just recompense for the injury sustained.[91]

However, although a lessee is bound to pay interest on instalments of rent from the time they become due where nothing has been done by the lessor to prevent the regular payment of the instalments, yet where new agreements have been made affecting the amount of rents and the time of payment, even though they are not valid and binding for want of consideration, the lessor ought not to demand interest. Ann. 67, holding, however, that a stipulation by a lessee to pay, in case the lessor has to sue, five per cent attorney's fee on the amount of the rent "to the expiration of the lease" entitles the lessor, on a decree of dissolution, to five per cent only on the rent accrued when it takes effect.

However, a provision in a lease to allow an attorney's fee for enforcing the covenants does not apply to a suit for rent on an agreement growing out of the lease and the subsequent relations of the parties (Leitch v. Boyington, 84 Ill. 179); and the fact that a lease provides for an attorney's fee if necessary to enforce the lease does not entitle the landlord to such fee in an action for the rent, where the tenant recovers on a counterclaim an amount greater than the rent due (Taylor v. Lehman, 17 Ind. Waiver.— Where the actual hiring and the actual occupancy were such questions of fact that the jury might find for plaintiff without violence to the evidence, and plaintiff might have submitted these questions to the jury but did not, and the judge was therefore obliged to decide them himself, a motion for a new trial on exceptions taken to a nonsuit ordered at the trial must be denied. Case held to be for the jury on conflicting evidence as to whether defendant consented to the landlord's turning his mules on the premises (Johnson v. Aldridge, 93 Ala. 77, 9 So. 513); as to whether plaintiff and defendant entered into an oral lease (Youell v. Kridler, 105 Mich. 344, 63 N. App. 25, 84 S. W. 216); as to whether the lease lished as a matter of law where the evidence is such that reasonable men might come to different conclusions as to the existence of the fact.[97] If, however, the evidence is legally insufficient to justify the jury in finding that a fact exists, the issue should not be submitted to them; but the court may dismiss or nonsuit, or direct a verdict, or otherwise dispose of the case without the intervention of the jury.[98] And issues not made by the pleadings,[99] or special defenses which have not been pleaded,[1] should not be submitted to the jury under any state of the evidence.

Illinois.— Goldsbrough v. Gable, 152 Ill. 594, 38 N. E. 1025, holding that in an action for rent accruing after the expiration of a lease, where there was evidence that before such expiration the landlord agreed to reduce the rent if the tenant would remain, and it appeared that for two months after the lease expired the tenant continued to pay rent at the old rate, it was error to place the first circumstance before the jury without reference to the other.

14. Judgment[4] and Enforcement Thereof.[5] Under a statute providing that judgments in suits for rent may be rendered at the first term after institution of suit, an action by the payee of a note which states on its face that it was given for rent and which is attached to the declaration is in order for judgment at the first term, although the declaration does not allege the relation of landlord and tenant.[6] As in other actions the judgment in an action for rent must conform to the pleadings.[7] A distringas will not be issued to compel specific execution of a

3. Arkansas.— Nichol v. McDonald, 69 Ark. 341, 64 S. W. 263, holding that where the defense to an action for rent of a tract of sixty acres was that plaintiff had evicted defendant from four acres, a finding that before plaintiff sold the four acres plaintiff and defendant had agreed that either one of them might make a sale of the land is an insufficient basis for a judgment for plaintiff, since the tenant might be willing to have the whole tract sold when he would not consent to the sale of a part, and because the jury failed to find whether and to what extent defendant was entitled to a reduction in the rent.

Colorado.— Wilson v. Lunt, 17 Colo. App. 48, 67 Pac. 627, holding that a finding that the requirements of the lease as to appraisement have been satisfied, except as to the manner of notice, is in effect a finding of the return of the appraisement as prescribed by the lease; and that such a finding is authorized by the statement of counsel that there is no issue about the appraisement having been made, but that the point is that a certain assignee of the original lessee was not a party to the appraisal and received no notice thereof.

Kentucky.— Holt v. Crume, Litt. Sel. Cas. 499, holding that where the covenant is to pay rent and deliver possession, but no breach is assigned in the declaration as to the nonpayment of rent, the jury can give no damages for that, whatever evidence may come before them as to the value of the rent.

Texas.— Bowen v. Hatch, (Civ. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 330, holding that a verdict in an action on rent notes, on account of which the lessor claimed a lien on stock of the lessee, finding for defendant a credit of a certain amount on the notes, without an affirmative finding in favor of plaintiff either as to the sum due or as to the existence of the lien, does not support a judgment for plaintiff for a balance due on the notes and for a foreclosure of the lien.

Virginia.— Turner v. Smith, 18 Gratt. 830, holding that a special verdict in a proceeding to recover rent due on a lease with right of distress and entry, finding the entry of the lessee on the land and the holding by him and those claiming under him for forty-five years, does not justify an inference that the original entry was under the lease.

W. 1007 (holding that where by the terms of the lease the lessee was to keep the premises insured, and if the building was destroyed by fire the lessor was to have the insurance money, but there is nothing in the pleadings in regard to the matter, plaintiff in a suit for unpaid rents cannot recover the insurance money, even though the case has been converted to one in equity by an affirmative defense set up in the answer); Jackson v. Doherty, 17 Misc. (N. Y.) 629, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 655 (holding that a bill of particulars of a counter-claim for injuries to certain property caused by negligence of the landlord does not authorize a judgment for defendant on the ground that, in consequence of the landlord's failure to keep his agreement, the difference in the value of the use of the premises as they were and as the landlord agreed to put them equaled the amount of rent sued for). See, however, Weeks v. International Trust Co., 125 Fed. 370, 60 C. C. A. 236 [reversing 116 Fed. 898], holding that the fact that the declaration in an action by a lessor against the lessee, after default by the latter in the payment of rent and reëntry by the lessor, states the cause of action as one for the recovery of rent instead of for damages for breach of covenant is immaterial, where the lease provides that in such case the lessee shall remain responsible for the rent during the term.

judgment rendered against a tenant for a portion of a crop in kind, where in consequence of the bonding and sale of the property it had become impossible to deliver it in kind.[8]

15. Review.[9] Questions of appeal and error in actions for rent are governed by the same rules that apply to other civil cases.[10] If there is any evidence to support a verdict or finding, it will not be disturbed on appeal;[11] and a judgment will not be reversed for harmless error.[12]

C. Attachment[13]— 1. In General. In many states the legislatures have given the landlord a remedy by attachment of specified property of the tenant for the purpose of enforcing his lien or otherwise collecting his rent.[14] So far as procedure goes, this remedy is usually governed by the rules applicable to attachment proceedings in general.[15] The fact that the statute gives the landlord an equitable remedy for enforcing his lien does not deprive him of the statutory right to an

Nature of remedy.— In Mississippi it has been held that an attachment for rent in arrears is not the commencement of a suit which it is designed should be tried in any of the courts of the state. It is simply a mandate in the nature of an execution for a money demand which is intended to be executed without the intervention of the court, unless the debt or demand itself be disputed by the tenant, in which case the tenant may, upon giving bond, sue out a writ of replevin and regain possession of the property. When these steps have been taken the attachment is discharged and the proceeding becomes an action of replevin subject to the forms of pleading and practice in such actions, and the legality of the attachment depends on whether there is any rent due. attachment;[16] but a landlord who distrains loses his right of action for rent and cannot have an attachment therefor.[17]

2. Persons Entitled to Remedy.[18] Primarily the remedy of attachment for rent is given to the landlord, and accordingly to justify the issuance of the writ the relation of landlord and tenant must exist.[19] The statutes authorizing attachment for rent usually apply to all landlords without distinction as to the location of their property or the purpose for which it is used;[20] and the fact that the landlord had mortgaged the premises before making the lease does not, before seizure and sale under the mortgage, deprive him of the right to attach for rent.[21]

3. Claims Enforceable — a. In General. The statutes under consideration give the remedy by attachment only for rent[22] or advances;[23] and it has been held that the landlord's claim is defeated if he includes therein any item not within the statute.[24] In some states the rent must be reserved in money as distinguished from property;[25] and it has been held that if a lease fixing the rent exists, the landlord cannot have an attachment for the reasonable value of the use and occupation of the premises.[26]

b. Rent Unaccrued. In some states the landlord may under certain circumstances attach for rent not accrued;[27] but it has been held that where an attach-

Arkansas.— Tignor v. Bradley, 32 Ark. 781, holding, however, that an attachment against the tenant's property generally, commenced before the rent is due, that is, where there is no stipulation as to rent day, before the expiration of the year, cannot be sustained.

District of Columbia.— Joyce v. Wilkenning, 1 MacArthur 567, holding that a landlord may attach for an instalment of rent, although the tenant has occupied the premises for only a part of the time during which the instalment is accruing.

Kentucky.— Poer v. Peebles, 1 B. Mon. 1, holding, however, that attachment for rent before due, where the tenant is about to remove his effects, lies only where distress lies afterward.

Louisiana.— Thomas v. Dundas, 31 La. Ann. 184; Wilcoxen v. Bowles, 1 La. Ann. 230, holding that where a lessor has good reason to believe that the lessee will remove the effects upon the premises subject to his lien, and that he may thereby be deprived of his lien, he may attach for unaccrued rent.

Missouri.— McDermott v. Dwyer, 91 Mo. App. 185, holding that an action by attachment for rent is not prematurely brought because the rent was paid up to a certain time

ment has been so issued judgment cannot be rendered against the tenant till rent accrues.[28]

4. Grounds[29] — a. In General. The statutes under consideration prescribe various grounds of attachment.[30] Thus in some states an attachment is authorized where the tenant fails to pay rent as it falls due,[31] or where there are reasonable grounds for belief, and the landlord does believe, that unless an attachment issues he will lose his rent.[32]

b. Removal or Disposal of Crops or Goods. The landlord is very generally given a right to an attachment where without his consent the tenant removes his crop or other chattels from the premises, or sells or otherwise disposes of the same, or attempts or threatens to do either.[33] The fact that the tenant in removing or and no more was due or had been demanded, where all the rent was due within a year after the action was instituted.

Virginia.— Johnson v. Garland, 9 Leigh 149, holding, however, that the lessor is not entitled to an attachment for rent not yet due, before the commencement of the term for which the rent is to be paid.

W. 1034, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1068 (holding that the sale and removal by the tenant of a considerable portion of the crop, and his refusal to apply any portion of the proceeds to the payment of the rent, were sufficient to justify the belief on the part of the landlord that he would lose his rent unless an attachment should be issued); Kassel v. Snead, 52 S. W. 1058, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 777 (holding that where the tenant threatened, in the landlord's absence from the city, to move out without paying the rent, and the stock of goods was so small that it could be moved out at night, as had been done on two previous occasions where the same tenant was apparently interested, the landlord had reasonable grounds to believe that unless an attachment issued he would lose his rent); Porter v. Sparks, 43 S. W. 220, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1211.

If the landlord consents to the removal or sale of the tenant's property he is not entitled to an attachment (Robinson v. Holt, 85 Ala. 596, 5 So. 350; Busbin v. Ware, 69 Ala. 279; Shield v. Dothard, 59 Ala. 595; De Bardeleben v. Crosby, 53 Ala. 363; Webb v. Arnold, 52 Ark. 358, 12 S. W. 707); and where a tenant is authorized by his landlord to make a sale of his crop for the purpose of paying a debt for which the landlord is surety, the failure of the tenant to devote the excess of the proceeds of the sale to the payment of rent is not a ground for attachment (Webb v. Arnold, supra).

Removal before rent accrues.— In the District of Columbia the landlord has no right to an attachment against chattels of the tenant removed from the premises before the rent is due; his remedy in such case is by judgment against the tenant and execution to be levied thereon in whosesoever hands they may be found. Wallach v. Chesley, 2 Mackey (D. C.) 209.

Removal to adjacent lands of landlord.— When the crop has been removed by the tenant without the consent of the landlord, it is ground for attachment, even though the crop is carried to other adjacent lands belonging to the landlord. Masterson v. Bentley, 60 Ala. 520.

Removal or threatened removal by tenant's mortgagee.— In Virginia where the lessee, after placing property on the premises, exe-

selling the property does not design to defeat the landlord's claim for rent does not preclude an attachment; his honest intent is immaterial.[34] The removal from the premises of a part of the crops or chattels of the tenant, or a sale thereof, does not justify an attachment unless the collection of the rent is thereby endangered;[35] and accordingly if enough is left on the premises to satisfy the rent attachment will not lie.[36] However, the question whether the rent is endangered by a removal or sale of the tenant's property is to be determined without reference to the solvency of the tenant or to his ownership of unexempt property not subject to the landlord's attachment.[37]

5. Property Subject[38] — a. In General. The property subject to a landlord's attachment consists of the crop grown by the tenant on the leased premises[39] and chattels of the tenant located on the premises and used in connection therewith.[40] His general estate is not liable.[41] The fact that the tenant's property is in an officer's hands under a distress for rent does not preclude an attachment thereof for rent not accrued.[42]

cutes a deed of trust thereon, threatened removal of such property by the trustee authorizes an attachment. Offterdinger v. Ford, 92 Va. 636, 24 S. E. 246. But in Missouri removal of the crop by the tenant's mortgagee without the knowledge or consent of the landlord or tenant affords no ground for an attachment against the tenant; and accordingly the landlord may maintain replevin against the mortgagee. Abington v. Steinberg, 86 Mo. App. 639.

Grounds of apprehension of removal. — A landlord's right of attachment accrues whenever he has reasonable ground of apprehension that the property of the tenant will be removed from the premises; he need not wait until his belief ripens into conviction. McLean v. McLean, 10 Bush (Ky.) 167. So where the lessees organized a corporation in which they held a controlling interest, and transferred to it all their stock, on which the lessor held a landlord's privilege, and their business establishment located on the leased premises, and the corporation while occupying the leased premises alleged financial embarrassment and applied for liquidation of its affairs the lessor was entitled to a provisional seizure against the lessees on the ground that they were about to remove the property from the premises. Henderson v. Meyers, 45 La. Ann. 791, 13 So. 191. And failure of the tenant to pay rent authorizes the landlord to make an affidavit for provisional seizure on the ground that he has good reason to fear that the property may be removed from the premises. Wallace v. Smith, 8 La. Ann. 374. See also supra, note 32.

Threatened sale. — In Missouri the fact that the tenant is threatening to dispose of a crop is not a cause for attachment for rent under the statute authorizing an attachment for an "attempt" to dispose of the crop. Ford v. Wycoff, 73 Mo. App. 144.

be attached to satisfy rent due from the tenant-in-chief,[43] where the latter has not made a crop or the crop made by him is insufficient to satisfy the landlord's lien.[44]

c. Property in Possession of Purchaser or Mortgagee.[45] The landlord may attach property in the hands of one who purchased from the tenant with knowledge of the landlord's lien,[46] or in the hands of a mortgagee of the tenant.[47]

6. Jurisdiction[48] and Venue.[49] A court of equity has jurisdiction of an attachment to enforce a landlord's lien for rent.[50] In some states an attachment for rent must be sued out in the county in which the tenement lies.[51]

7. Parties.[52] The assignee of a non-negotiable rent note[53] and a landlord to whose agent a rent note is made payable[54] may each sue out an attachment on those instruments respectively in his own name. While an agent may obtain and prosecute an attachment for rent, the proceedings must be carried on in the name of the landlord.[55] Where a tenant gives a note for rent, payable to the creditor of a landlord, which is afterward delivered to the latter, the creditor may properly be joined as plaintiff in an attachment to enforce the landlord's lien.[56]

8. Affidavit — a. In General. An affidavit for attachment is generally made essential by statute as the basis for the issuance of the writ.[57] The fact that the justice before whom the affidavit is made pursuant to statutory authority attaches a jurat in his capacity of notary public does not vitiate the affidavit.[58] In the absence of statute to the contrary the affidavit need not be served on the tenant.[59]

b. Sufficiency of Statements. The affidavit must state with fulness and certainty every fact essential to give the landlord the right to an attachment, so as to bring the case within the strict terms of the statute.[60] Accordingly the affidavit

(Del.) 437; Greeley v. Greeley, 12 Okla. 659, 73 Pac. 295 (holding that where the statute requires plaintiff to state that there is due a certain sum for rent of farming lands, and that plaintiff claims a lien on the crop, an affidavit stating that the claim is just and due and that plaintiff believes he ought to recover the sum named as rent is insufficient); Dougherty v. Kellum, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 643 (holding that an affidavit on which an attachment is sought for supplies furnished by a landlord to his tenant must state that an account of such supplies was kept as the articles were furnished). See, however, Cockburn v. Watkins, 76 Ala. 486; Bell v. Allen, 76 Ala. 450, both holding that an affidavit for an attachment by a landlord for advances need not set forth the amount advanced each year, the particular articles, or an itemized account.

Statement of amount due in lump sum.— A landlord's attachment affidavit against the tenant for rent and advances may state the amount due in a lump sum. Ragsdale v. Kinney, 119 Ala. 454, 24 So. 443. Contra, Dougherty v. Kellum, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 643.

Statement as to when rent was payable.— The affidavit should show when the rent was payable. Yarnall v. Haddaway, 4 Harr. (Del.) 437. See, however, Dozier v. Robinson, 82 Ala. 408, 3 So. 45, holding that if the affidavit states no time when the rent matured, and there is nothing in the record showing such time, Ala. Code (1876), § 3468, fixes the maturity of the rent on the 25th day of December of the year in which the crop is grown.

Statement of year in which rent accrued or advances were made.— Since a lien on the crops of a tenant for rent, capable of enforcement by attachment, exists only for rent of the current year, an affidavit for such attachment must show the year for which the rent accrued. De Bardeleben v. Crosby, 53 Ala. 363. Where, however, an attachment is sued out on December 30, claiming an indebtedness for advances, but not stating for what year, the implication is that the advances were made during the year just expiring; and if in fact any part was made during the preceding year, a balance remaining unpaid at the end of the year, such balance becomes a part of the advances for the next year, while the tenancy continues, and may be recovered under such affidavit; but it is the better practice to state the particular facts as they are. Gunter v. Du Bose, 77 Ala. 326.

Partial invalidity.— Where an affidavit for an attachment against the crops of a tenant in favor of his landlord for rent and advances is sufficient as to the rent but insufficient as to the advances, the averments as to the latter should be treated as surplusage, and the attachment for the former sustained. Ballard v. Stephens, 92 Ala. 618, 8 So. 416.

63. Baxley v. Segrest, 85 Ala. 183, 4 So. 865; Knowles v. Steed, 79 Ala. 427 (both holding that an affidavit for an attachment on the ground that part of the crop has been removed without the landlord's knowledge or consent must allege that it was removed from the rented premises); Fitzsimmons v. Howard, 69 Ala. 590; Bishop v. McQuerry, 13 Bush (Ky.) 417. See, however, Monday v. Elmore, 27 S. C. 126, 3 S. E. 65, holding that the requirement that the affidavit should aver that defendant has assigned, disposed of, or secreted, or is about to assign, dispose of, or secrete any part of his property with intent to defraud his creditors is satisfied by an averment that defendant had sold a portion of his crop, and has refused to pay the rent due, with intent to defeat the lien.

Negativing consent of landlord to removal of crops.— If an attachment is asked because the tenant has removed the crop, the affidavit must negative the landlord's consent to the removal. Robinson v. Holt, 85 Ala. 596, 5 So. 350; Busbin v. Ware, 69 Ala. 279; omission of these essential averments from the affidavit is fatal since they are regarded as jurisdictional.[64]

c. Amendment. An affidavit for attachment is not amendable as to jurisdictional averments,[65] in the absence of statute authorizing such amendments;[66] but it may be amended as to informalities,[67] even after the writ has been issued[68] and has been quashed for informality of the affidavit.[69]

9. Bond. In order to obtain an attachment the landlord is usually required by statute to file a bond the same as in general attachment proceedings.[70]

10. Writ.[71] An attachment for rent should be issued against the tenant's crop only, and not against his estate generally.[72] Copies of the warrant to enforce the landlord's lien need not be served on the tenant, in the absence of a statute requiring such service.[73]

11. Levy.[74] A landlord's attachment issued against the tenant's estate generally is merely voidable, and may be levied on the crop.[75] An attachment for rent running against the crops of the tenant justifies a levy on crops of an under-tenant raised on the premises;[76] but the property of the real lessee cannot be seized under a writ of provisional seizure issued in a suit against the nominal lessee, and directed solely against the property of the latter.[77] The attachment may issue to any county in the state and be levied on property there;[78] and an attachment sued out before a mayor, ex officio justice of the peace, authorizes a levy outside of the corporate limits of the town but within the county.[79] A landlord is not

Shield v. Dothard, 59 Ala. 595; De Bardeleben v. Crosby, 53 Ala. 363.

Statements on belief.— The affidavit in attachment to recover rent may, like the affidavit in the ordinary proceeding by attachment, state the grounds of attachment on belief (Audenreid v. Hull, 45 Mo. App. 202); but the grounds of belief must be set forth (Sharp v. Palmer, 31 S. C. 444, 10 S. E. 98; Baum v. Bell, 28 S. C. 201, 5 S. E. 485).

Statements in the alternative.— Under a statute authorizing a landlord to attach when the tenant is about to remove his property, is doing so, or has done so within thirty days, an affidavit for attachment embracing all the causes set out in the alternative in the language of the statute is insufficient; it should state affirmatively the facts relied on for attachment. Kleun v. Vinyard, 38 Mo. 447. However, an affidavit that the tenant has disposed of oats and castor beans, and threatens to dispose of the corn, so as to endanger a collection of the rent, means that the rent is in danger by the disposition of either the oats, beans, or corn. Ford v. Wycoff, 73 Mo. App. 144.

Waiver of objections.— Although Ala. Code, § 3693, provides that attachments shall not be quashed in the circuit court for formal defects, and that no objection can be made which was not made before the justice of the peace, yet an objection before the justice that the affidavit for an attachment by a landlord on the ground that part of the crops had been removed without his knowledge or consent did not allege that the crop was removed from the rented premises is not waived by appeal to the circuit court. entitled to attach the whole of his tenant's property for rent which is much less than the value of the property, although he has a lien thereon.[80] The landlord's right to enforce his lien by attachment is not affected by the manner in which the officer executes the order of attachment.[81] The return may be amended in a proper case.[82]

12. Release of Property on Bond. The statutes under consideration usually provide for a release of the attached property on a forthcoming bond.[83] In the absence of such a provision the property may be released on a bond given under the general attachment laws[84] or on a common-law bond.[85]

13. Vacating, Quashing, or Setting Aside.[86] It has been held that the court cannot set aside or quash an attachment because the grounds stated in the affidavit are not satisfactorily proved.[87] An under-tenant whose crop has been seized on attachment against the tenant-in-chief may move to vacate the attachment on the ground that the debt is not for rent or that the property of the tenant-in-chief is sufficient to satisfy the landlord's lien.[88] The right to vacate a warrant of seizure on account of irregularities therein is waived where defendants, having given the statutory notice to the sheriff denying the claim, have an issue made up and referred to a master to take testimony and report as to the rights of the parties;[89] but where an attachment issued before the commencement of the term for rent not yet due is levied on the goods of the lessee, and the lessee thereupon enters into a recognizance to pay the rent, he may, notwithstanding the recognizance, move the court to which the process is returned to quash the attachment for the irregularity.[90] Where defendant moves to set aside an attachment because of the insufficiency or falsity of the affidavit or because of irregularity and Formalities of bond.— A bond taken by the sheriff, under an order of court, for the release of property under seizure by a lessor, must contain all the formalities required for the execution of judicial bonds. If it is not signed by the principal, but only by the sureties, it is not binding on the principal or the sureties. Benham v. Collins, 23 La. Ann. 222. However, the bond need not recite to whom the rent is due (Robinson v. White, 7 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 39), and it may be made payable to the sheriff (Tooley v. Culbertson, 5 How. (Miss.) 267).

Estoppel by bond.— The obligor in a bond to release property attached for rent is estopped to deny that rent is due. Robinson v. White, 7 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 39. However, the bond does not estop the tenant to attack the regularity of the attachment. Johnson v. Garland, 9 Leigh (Va.) 149.

14. CONTEST OF CLAIM BY TENANT. In some states the statute provides a special remedy by which the tenant may have an issue tried to determine whether the landlord's claim is due;[92] but in the absence of statutory authority, the court cannot, on return of the attachment, examine into the merits of the landlord's claim.[93]

15. PRIORITY OF LIEN.[94] A mortgagee for value and in good faith, with forfeiture or condition broken prior to an attachment for rent, will have priority over such attachment;[95] and in some states, in a suit aided by attachment before any rent is due on a note given for the rent, the landlord has only the ordinary attachment lien, which is subordinate to the claim of one to whom the attached crop was sold before the levy.[96]

16. PLEADING. The landlord may maintain an action for rent due and for a lien without asking for an attachment in his petition, and hence the failure of the petition to show grounds for attachment is no reason for dissolving an auxiliary writ of attachment subsequently issued on a proper affidavit.[97] Where an attachment is sued out by a landlord before a justice of the peace on a claim for advances made his tenant, and on appeal to the circuit court an amended complaint is filed containing only the common counts, the variance between it and the affidavit is ground for plea in abatement.[98]

17. EVIDENCE.[99] Where the affidavit alleges that rent is past due and unpaid, the burden of proving payment is not on defendant.[1] On the trial of a plea in abatement in an attachment by a landlord on the ground that defendant is removing the crop so as to endanger collection of the rent, defendant may show the amount of the rent on the question whether he is endangering its collection;[2] and in an action by a landlord against commission merchants doing business in another state to enforce payment of the rent out of the proceeds of cotton shipped them by the tenant, evidence that defendants told the tenant to draw on them in favor of plaintiff for the rent is admissible to show their participation in the removal of the cotton.[3] As in other actions, plaintiff must establish his case by a preponderance of evidence.[4]

18. TRIAL.[5] A landlord attaching his tenant's goods on affidavit that he is about to remove them from the county is not bound to support the affidavit by proof of reasonable ground at the next term of the court.[6] An instruction that

Questions triable.— Where a tenant whose crops have been sold to satisfy a claim for rent elects to have an issue tried to determine whether the amount of the claim is due, he cannot raise questions as to the validity of the affidavit upon which the warrant was issued to effect the sale, or as to whether his crops can be sold by the assignee of his lessor. in determining whether it was the intent of the tenants to remove their corn until stopped by law, evidence of their statements as to such intent is prima facie sufficient to establish the fact that the landlord was in danger of losing his rent is erroneous as being on the weight of evidence.[7] For a tenant to give a chattel mortgage upon his interest in the crop out of which rent is to be rendered, or his feeding a portion of it to his team, is not as matter of law a disposition of the crop so as to endanger the collection of the rent; and such matters should go to the jury.[8] In proceedings to enforce a landlord's lien for advances, where the record fails to show any article advanced for which the statute does not give the landlord a lien, an error by the court in referring to the jury the question whether the landlord had a lien for any particular article advanced is without prejudice.[9]

19. Judgment.[10] Under some statutes, where crops of a tenant are seized for rent, a personal judgment cannot be rendered against the tenant in excess of the value of the property seized.[11] A general judgment in favor of plaintiff after the levy of an attachment on the crop grown by defendant during the year is not invalidated by the subsequent entry of a judgment nunc pro tunc specially against the property attached and generally against defendant, who was then in court.[12] Where an attachment for rent issued on the ground that the tenant has disposed or attempted to dispose of his crop is abated on a finding against the landlord as to that ground of attachment, and the rent is not due at the commencement of the action, the suit should be dismissed, although the landlord seeks to establish a lien, there being no danger of his losing the rent by destruction or removal of the crop and no injunction being asked on that ground.[13]

20. Costs.[14] Although the statute gives the landlord a right to no larger judgment than can be satisfied out of the property seized, yet he may have a personal judgment for whatever costs are unpaid out of the property.[15] On the other hand, although the court cannot, under the statute, quash an attachment because plaintiff does not satisfactorily prove the grounds set forth in the affidavit, yet it may in such case charge the landlord with costs.[16] A landlord procuring an attachment of the body of his tenant on the ground that he is about to leave the state must satisfy the court that he had good reason for believing this, or he will be condemned in costs on his failure to sustain the attachment on rule to quash.[17]

21. Claims of Third Persons.[18] A third person who claims title to the attached property or an interest therein may intervene in the attachment and have the right of property determined.[19] He cannot, however, replevy the property so

Petition.— An intervener in a suit by provisional seizure for rent of a stable, averring that he is the owner of the horses seized, and that he pays rent to the lessee of the stable to keep the horses there, discloses a cause of action. King v. Harper, 33 La. Ann. 496.

Burden of proof.— Plaintiff must show a valid attachment in order to recover in a statutory claim suit between him and a third attached,[20] since while the lien is being enforced the right of possession for that purpose is fixed in the landlord.

22. Wrongful Attachment.[21] If the landlord wrongfully sues out an attachment he is liable therefor in damages,[22] even though he acted without malice;[23] and it has been held that the tenant may recover for an attachment for rent not due, where it was made without probable cause, although he might have obtained a discharge of the attachment on giving bond to pay the rent when due.[24] Where the writ was sued out by a landlord to enforce his statutory lien on the crop, he may in justification prove the existence of any ground which would have authorized an attachment against the crop;[25] and although no grounds for attachment in fact existed, yet if the landlord had reasonable grounds for believing in their existence he is not liable.[26] The fact that the tenant had claims against the landlord arising out of other transactions does not render the landlord liable for suing out an attachment for rent then due.[27] If the landlord sues out an attachment maliciously he is liable for exemplary damages;[28] but the fact that the landlord by mistake procured a writ of attachment instead of a distress warrant does not authorize a recovery of exemplary damages for wrongfully suing out the attachment.[29]

D. Lien — 1. At Common Law. At common law a landlord had no lien upon the chattels or crops of his tenant merely by reason of the relationship.[30]

2. Contract Liens — a. Creation and Existence — (i) In General. Contracts of lease frequently contain provisions reserving to the lessor a lien for the rent person (Jackson v. Bain, 74 Ala. 328); but claimant must prove his ownership of the property seized (Spears v. Robinson, 71 Miss. 774, 15 So. 111).

Evidence.—The attachment is sufficient evidence of the amount of plaintiff's claim, as against a claimant of the attached property; and hence the admission of evidence of the tenant's admissions that he received the amount claimed from plaintiff is immaterial. Sloan v. Hudson, 119 Ala. 27, 24 So. 458. Proceedings in provisional seizure for rent are in the nature of a concurso, in which all parties are plaintiffs and defendants. One opponent's evidence may be used by the rest, and they are bound by that of the party opposed. One cannot use part of the evidence of another and reject the answers to his interrogatories addressed to the creditor opposed. Each opponent may introduce further evidence, but that spread on the record cannot be divided. Caffin v. Pollard, 9 Rob. (La.) 300.

upon the chattels of the tenant upon the premises, or upon the crops raised thereon. Such a lien may arise by words expressly creating it or by language impliedly having that effect.[31] The lease purporting to give a lien must, however, be a valid one,[32] and the lessor should be the absolute owner of the premises.[33]

(II) Reservation of Right to Property. The lessor may stipulate in the lease that crops grown on the premises by the lessee shall remain the property of the lessor until the rent shall be paid, and such a provision is valid not only between the parties but as to third persons.[34]

(III) Covenant For Reëntry. A covenant for reëntry to secure the arrears of rent by applying the profits to that purpose constitutes a lien on the estate charged with the rent.[35]

(IV) Provision Against Removal by Tenant. A stipulation in a lease that the lessee shall not dispose of any property upon the demised premises until the rent is paid is a mere personal covenant and is ineffective to reserve a lien.[36] It has been held, however, that such stipulation operates as a mortgage, and, if recorded, creates a lien.[37]

b. Nature of Lien. In some jurisdictions it is held that a clause in a lease giving the lessor a lien for rent on crops or other personal property of the tenant is in the nature of a chattel mortgage.[38] In other states such a clause in a lease is held to amount to nothing more than an equitable lien,[39] or perhaps more properly a declaration of trust that the property is held as security for rent.[40]

Provision held not chattel mortgage.— A provision in a lease by which a lien is reserved to the lessor upon timber to be cut

c. Property Subject to Lien — (i) In General. The property subject to a contract lien depends upon the language of the lease and the intention of the parties. As between the parties the lien covers everything it was intended to cover; as to third persons it covers only what is included in its express terms.[41] The description of the property intended to be covered by the lien must be definite and capable of being rendered certain.[42]

(ii) Future-Acquired Property. A valid lien may be acquired on property not owned by the lessee until after the execution of the lease.[43] The property intended to be covered by the lease must, however, be specified or identified in the lease, and a provision in the lease giving a lien upon any and all goods and from the leased premises, in order to secure the payment of the rent as it accrues, with the condition that the lessor shall in case of default have the right to forfeit the lease and take the timber and sell it at auction to pay the rent is not in the nature of a chattel mortgage; and no lien attaches to timber sold by the lessee to a third party, and removed by him, before the forfeiture of the lease has been declared. Buildings and improvements.— A provision in a lease giving the landlord a lien upon any and all buildings and improvements on or put upon the premises, does not give a lien on the furniture. Willard v. World's Fair Encampment Co., 59 Ill. App. 336. Machinery is not included in the term "improvements." Booth v. Oliver, 67 Mich. 664, 35 N. W. 793.

Furniture and household goods.— An agreement in the lease creating a lien upon furniture and household goods is sufficient to give a lien on all chattels which contribute to the use and convenience of the lessee, or the ornament of the house, and every article of a permanent nature which is not consumed in its enjoyment, but not on wines, liquors, and groceries. Marquam v. Sengfelder, 24 Oreg. 2, 32 Pac. 676.

Fixtures.— A stipulation in a lease providing for a lien on trade fixtures does not apply to mere furniture. Ex p. Morrow, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,850, 1 Lowell 386.

Furnishing.— A provision in a lease that the landlord shall have a lien for his rent upon the "furnishing" of the building leased is not, in the absence of evidence fixing the meaning of this term, effective as to third persons, because the term is too indefinite to cover any specific property. chattels and other property belonging to the lessee is ineffectual to create a lien on after-acquired property.[44] In a suit by the lessor to enforce such a lien, it will be presumed that the property on which the lien is claimed was acquired after the execution of the lease, in the absence of contrary evidence;[45] and the landlord who seizes property of a tenant under a provision in the lease giving him a lien on all the tenant's property has the burden of showing that the property seized was owned by the tenant at the time the lease was executed.[46]

(III) EXEMPT PROPERTY.[47] It has been held that a provision in a lease that the lessor shall have a lien for rent on the exempt property of the lessee creates a lien by contract as to such property.[48] Such a clause in a lease is in the nature of a mortgage, and is governed by the law applicable to instruments of that character.[49]

(IV) PROPERTY OF THIRD PERSONS. No agreement between the parties to a lease, creating a lien upon property on the demised premises, can bind the property of third persons placed there in ignorance of such agreement.[50] But where the lease provides that the lessor shall have a lien on buildings erected on the premises the lessor is entitled to such a lien on buildings erected on the land by a sublessee,[51] or by a third person under license from the lessee,[52] as against creditors of the party erecting the building. So also, if a lease gives the lessor a lien for rent on crops, those grown by a subtenant on the leased premises are subject thereto, if the subtenant knew that his lessor was a tenant.[53]

d. Waiver and Loss of Lien. A lien created by the express stipulation of the parties is not extinguished by the act of the lessor in taking the note of the lessee as security for the rent,[54] by a stipulation in the lease providing for the sale of the property,[55] or by the fact that the lessor consents to the removal of the property from the premises.[56] Attachment of the property subject to the lien is, however, a waiver of such lien,[57] and if the lessor unites a claim for rent with other claims and enters judgment upon them the lien is lost.[58]

e. Enforcement of Lien — (I) In General. Where under the terms of a lease the lessor's right to possession of the property depends upon the non-payment of the rent, he is not, prior to the occurrence of such event, entitled to the possession of the property;[59] but upon the non-payment of the rent he becomes entitled to possession and may maintain replevin[60] or trover[61] against the lessee or other person who wrongfully disposes of the property. The lessor cannot acquire title to the property upon default in payment of the rent, except by seizing the property or foreclosing the lien.[62] Equity has jurisdiction of a suit to enforce a provision in a lease giving the lessor a lien on the property on the premises for rent, and to obtain a sale of the property under the lien.[63]

(II) Persons Entitled to Enforce. A lien given by a lease can only be enforced by the landlord or his assignee,[64] and the assignee must be such by an express assignment.[65]

(III) Persons Against Whom Enforceable — Necessity of Recording — (A) Where Lien Regarded as Chattel Mortgage. Where a provision in a lease reserving a lien for rent is regarded as a chattel mortgage, the lease must be recorded in order that the lien shall be effective against third persons,[66] although they have actual notice of it.[67] As against the lessee, however, such a provision in a lease is enforceable, although the lease is not recorded.[68] When so recorded, the lien is good against one without actual notice, the recording operating as constructive notice.[69]

(B) Where Considered Merely an Equitable Lien. Where a clause in a lease reserving a lien is considered as creating no more than an equitable lien, it will be good against the lessee, and all persons claiming under him, either voluntarily or with notice, or in bankruptcy, although the lease is not recorded.[70] Thus such a lien is good against purchasers,[71] or mortgagees,[72] with notice, assignees in bankruptcy,[73] a naked wrong-doer,[74] subsequent judgment creditors,[75] or attaching creditors,[76] but not against bona fide purchasers or mortgagees without notice.[77]

3. Statutory Liens — a. In General — (I) Nature of Lien. By statute a landlord is frequently given a lien upon the property or crops of his tenant for the payment of the rent.[78] The landlord has not, however, by virtue of such lien merely, any title to the property, or right to the possession thereof.[79] The legal title and the right to possession remain in the tenant subject to be divested by an appropriate proceeding.[80]

The landlord's lien is an incident, attached by the statute to the relation of landlord and tenant, not having any element of a jus in re or a jus ad rem, but a simple legal right to charge the particular property with the payment of the particular debt in preference to and in priority of all other debts. There is no change of ownership — that resides in the tenant, as it would have resided in the absence of statute. Nor is there any other restraint upon the incidents of ownership, upon the tenant's unqualified right to enjoyment, than such as is necessary to preserve the lien, as the primary charge for the satisfaction of the favored debts. A landlord's lien is analogous to the lien given by law to executions in the hands of officers authorized to receive and execute them. Such an execution is a lien on property subject to be levied upon, but the officer cannot, by virtue of the lien alone, maintain replevin if another than the execution debtor has possession of the property. The tenant retains the right to mortgage the crops.— Wilkinson v. Ketler, 69 Ala. 435.

(II) Effect of Statutory Provisions. A statute giving a lien and remedy for rent and advances enters into and forms a part of the contract of lease.[81] Such a statute is constitutional since it deals with landlords as a class.[82] It will not render invalid any lien or mortgage which was valid before its passage,[83] or alter any preëxisting right.[84] A statutory provision rendering no repealing clause in an amendatory act necessary to the repeal of the original act applies to a statute creating a landlord's lien.[85] Statutes creating landlord's liens and providing means for the enforcing thereof have no retrospective operation.[86]

(III) Character of Tenancy. A landlord's lien grows only out of the contract of lease,[87] although no writing is necessary to give force to such lien.[88] The mere occupancy of property does not necessarily imply the relation of lessor and lessee, and thus give rise to the landlord's lien;[89] but an agreement to pay for the use and occupation of land eo nomine is to agree to establish the relation of landlord and tenant, and to bring with it among other incidents the right to a lien.[90] An express agreement to pay rent is not necessary, but an agreement may be implied.[91]

(IV) Necessity of Recording. The filing or recording of the contract of lease is not a prerequisite to the creation of the landlord's statutory lien.[92]

(V) Time When Lien Attaches. A landlord's statutory lien attaches as to chattels as soon as the same are brought upon the premises,[93] and as to crops from the time of commencement of their growth,[94] it being in no wise dependent upon given to landlords, but must foreclose the lien in equity, like other liens.[2] It is now provided by statute in several of the states that a landlord may assign his claim for rent, and invest the assignee with all the remedies of the landlord for its enforcement.[3]

(d) After Levy of Execution on Tenant's Goods. Where the goods of the tenant are taken in execution, his landlord has a lien only for rent due previous to the execution. He cannot claim rent which has subsequently accrued, while the goods remain on the premises in the sheriff's possession.[10]

(e) Costs and Expenses. A landlord's lien extends to and includes the costs of such legal proceedings as are necessary to recover his rents.[11]

(ii) Lien For Advances and Supplies—(a) In General. It is quite generally provided by statute, where lands are leased for agricultural purposes, that the lessor shall have a lien on all crops raised thereon for any advances made by him to aid in making the crop.[12] Whenever a tenant fails to discharge his indebtedness for advances, and continues his tenancy under the same landlord, the balance due is held to be an advance by the landlord toward making the crop of the succeeding year for which a lien will attach. To constitute a balance due on an advance, it is not requisite that the tenancy of the same land shall continue; the essential fact is the continuance and identity of the relation and not the identity of the land.[13]

(b) By and to Whom Made. As a general rule a landlord is not entitled to a lien upon his tenant's crops for supplies unless the same are furnished by the landlord himself.[14] The landlord need not furnish direct from his own stores in order to raise a lien. He may purchase for his tenant and the articles may or may not pass through his hands;[15] but he is not entitled to a lien where he merely guarantees payment for supplies furnished by a third party, and no direct indebtedness exists between himself and the tenant.[16] In one state at least the statute gives the landlord a lien on his tenant's crops for advances made by him either directly "or by another at his instance or request, or for which he became legally bound or liable at or before the time such advances were made." Under this statute, when advances are made by a third party, it is essential to the existence of the lien that he shall look to the landlord for payment, although the advances may have been made at his instance or request,[17] and that the tenant shall assent to the proceeding, or ratify it after notice.[18] To constitute a lien for advances, they must have been made to or at the instance of the tenant who made the crop.[19]

(c) What Constitutes. It is not every advance a landlord may make that comes within the statute. It must come strictly within the class of articles enumerated,[20] and be for some one or more of the purposes mentioned in the statute.[21] To constitute an advance, the landlord must furnish or cause to be furnished something not previously the property of the tenant.[22] An advancement, in the sense of the statutes, is anything of value pertinent for the purpose, to be used directly or indirectly in making or saving the crops,[23] supplied in good faith[24] to the lessee by the landlord. Many things are in their nature and adaptation per se pertinent for such purpose, and presumptively constitute advancements whenever so supplied.[25] When other things not directly so appropriate are sup-

The lien is not confined to teams, provisions, and farming implements and money with which to purchase them, but embraces everything of value for the sustenance and well being of the tenant or his family, for preparing the ground for cultivation or for cultivating, gathering, saving, handling, or preparing the crops for market. It might be difficult in many cases that might arise to say what would or would not be advancements to make or save the crop, in the sense of the statute. The tenant, acting in good faith, must be the judge of what is necessary and proper to aid him in making and saving the crop, and when the landlord has in good faith furnished supplies as required by the tenant, this will be sufficient on his part, without regard to the particular things supplied. There is a great variety of ways in which things not per se necessary to make or save the crop may incidentally serve that purpose, and the tenant alone can be the better judge in such respects. plied to the lessee, whether they constitute advancements or not depends on whether they were supplied for the purpose specified by the statute. It must appear affirmatively that they were.[26]

c. Property Subject to Lien — (i) In General. The property subject to a landlord's lien for rent depends entirely upon the wording of the statute by which the lien is given. If the lien is given upon specific property, the idea of a lien on any other property of the tenant is impliedly excluded.[27] Some statutes provide for a lien upon all the property of the tenant upon the premises,[28] or in the building leased.[29] Under a statute giving the landlord a lien on all the goods, furniture, and effects belonging to the tenant,[30] it is held that the lien does not extend to all the "effects" of the tenant, but only to such as have enjoyed the protection of the leased premises.[31] Where a statute provides that a landlord shall have a lien for rent upon all personal property "which has been used upon the premises during the term,"[32] the lien attaches upon all personal property kept by the tenant upon the leased premises in the transaction of the business for which the tenancy was created,[33] and the converse is also true that it attaches Property on premises for purposes of sale. —A landlord has a lien upon property kept upon the premises for the purposes of sale, although not used thereon for any other purpose (Thompson v. Anderson, 86 Iowa 703, 53 N. W. 418; Grant v. Whitwell, 9 Iowa 152); but not upon goods sold before the lien is enforced, where selling goods is the business for which the premises were used (The Richmond v. Cake, 1 App. Cas. The lien attaches to cattle used for the purpose of feeding and improving them in the ordinary way, and, where the premises are leased for the purpose of keeping cattle thereon for sale, to the cattle so kept; but only to such property.[34] In Louisiana the lien of a landlord for rent extends to the movable effects of the lessee which are found on the premises leased.[35]

(II) Crops. In most of the states statutes provide that the lessor of premises shall have a lien upon the agricultural products grown upon said premises for his rent.[36] Such lien extends to every part of the crop raised upon the leased premises.[37]

(III) Fixtures. A landlord's statutory lien for rent is enforceable against a building on the land whenever the rent becomes due and payable, regardless of the ownership of such building.[38]

(IV) Choses in Action. A landlord's lien is generally considered not to extend to choses in action such as notes, drafts, due bills, accounts, etc.[39]

(V) Exempt Property. Statutes creating landlord's liens for rent often expressly provide that the operation of such liens shall not extend to such property as is exempt from appropriation to the ordinary debts of the tenant by execution,[40]
