Sufficiency of declaration for failure to return conviction.— Spillane v. Wilton, 4 U. C. C. P. 236; Drake v. Preston, 34 U. C. Q. B. 257; Keenahan v. Egleson, 22 U. C. Q. B. 626; O'Reilly v. Allen, 11 U. C. Q. B. 411. A declaration charging that the return was not made to the ensuing quarter sessions of the peace was held bad, as the statute required a return to the next ensuing general quarter sessions. Metcalf v. Reeve, 9 U. C. Q. B. 263. It has also been held that defendant, having actually convicted and imposed a fine, could not except to the declaration on the ground that it did not show that he had jurisdiction to convict, it not being necessary, in averring a conviction, to show that the complainant prayed the justice to proceed summarily. Bagley v. Curtis, 15 U. C. C. P. 366.

Plea or answer.— The effect of Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, § 1, was to require justices of the peace, where more than one took part in a conviction, to make an immediate return thereof to the clerk of the peace; and therefore where, to a declaration alleging a conviction by defendants, two justices of the peace, and their failure to make an immediate return thereof as required, defendants pleaded that before action they duly made the return of the said convictions required by law to be made by them, it was held that the plea was bad, as the return therein set up was not a compliance with the statute. Atwood v. Rosser, 30 U. C. C. P. 628.

63. See, generally, PENALTIES; PLEADING.

Taking illegal fees.— Where it was alleged that the defendant magistrate was entitled to receive the sum of $1.58 for the copies of the case, and for the certificate ten cents, and it appeared in evidence that he was entitled to receive $2.02½, it was held that the variance was immaterial, it being averred and proved that he demanded and received a greater sum than he was by law entitled to receive, and the penalty not being graduated by the amount of the excess taken. Fowler v. Tuttle, 24 N. H. 9.

64. See, generally, EVIDENCE; PENALTIES.

Burden of showing mistake.— Where, in an action against a magistrate for taking illegal fees, the defendant may have acted under some mistake or misapprehension, the burden of proof is on him to show it. Fowler v. Tuttle, 24 N. H. 9. Compare supra, II, E, 1, note 52.

As to notice of action.— In an action by a father against a justice of the peace for marrying his minor daughter without his consent, where a witness testifies that he heard plaintiff read a notice of action against defendant in the latter's presence, but cannot say when it was or that a paper offered in evidence was the notice read, the proof of notice within the required period fails. Minor v. Neal, 1 Pa. St. 403.

65. See, generally, PENALTIES; TRIAL.

Failure to make return of conviction.— In an action against justices of the peace to recover a penalty for not making an immediate return of a conviction as required by Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, it was held a question for the jury whether, under the circumstances of any particular case, the return made was immediate, and that in a qui tam action the jury's finding for defendant should not be disturbed. Longeway v. Avison, 8 Ont. 357. See also McLellan v. Brown, 12 U. C. C. P. 542, where it was also held that it was proper for the court to instruct the jury that the word "immediate" should be construed to mean within a reasonable time.

66. The plaintiff may be nonsuited in a qui tam action to recover a penalty for failure to return a conviction. Ranney v. Jones, 21 U. C. Q. B. 370. See, generally, DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT; PENALTIES.

67. Kennedy v. Raught, 6 Minn. 235, action for penalty for neglect to post up fee bill. See, generally, PENALTIES.

68. See King v. Reading, 5 Harr. (Del.) 399, where the court expressed such an opinion in a case where it was charged in an affidavit that a justice had refused a party an appeal in a case in which he was entitled to it, and had refused to give him a transcript of his record, although it had been duly applied for, and the fee therefor tendered; but where it was held that, as the justice denied the alleged facts on oath, the court would dismiss the attachment and remit the party to his action at law or indictment.

misconduct or neglect in the execution of his office, as in the case of failure to return recognizances, etc.[69]

III. Civil Jurisdiction and Authority.

A. In General — 1. Nature and Scope of Jurisdiction.[70] The civil jurisdiction of justices of the peace is of purely statutory origin, and the statutes conferring jurisdiction will not be aided or extended by inference or implication beyond their express terms.[71] Courts of justices of the peace being courts of inferior and peace is concurrent with that of the higher courts of original jurisdiction;[82] and the fact that their jurisdiction may be extended to cases originally cognizable in other courts exclusively will not take away the jurisdiction of the latter.[83]

4. Election of Remedy as Affecting Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace may depend upon the form of remedy adopted by plaintiff. Thus, where they are concurrent remedies, plaintiff may confer jurisdiction on a justice by suing in debt rather than in covenant.[84] But where the amount involved is exclusively within the justice's jurisdiction, debt must be brought, as plaintiff cannot elect to bring covenant so as to oust the justice of his jurisdiction.[85] Where a cause of action sounds in both tort and contract and it is permissible to waive the tort and sue on the implied contract, an action may be brought in the latter form before a justice of the peace, although he would have

Test of whether title involved.— "Whether the title to land is concerned depends upon the declaration, — that is, whether to prove its allegations will require plaintiff to prove title to land, — and does not depend upon the plea, nor the course of trial." Heath v. Robinson, 75 Vt. 133, 134, 53 Atl. 995. See also Reynolds v. Maynard, (Mich. 1904) 100 N. W. 174; Dano v. Sessions, 63 Vt. 405, 21 Atl. 922. "Where the plaintiff, in order to sustain his case, is compelled, in the first instance, to prove certain facts, or to disprove them, and those facts, or either of them, is title to lands or tenements, the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is excluded, except in trespass; but, where it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to introduce such proof the defendant can not, by its introduction, take away the jurisdiction." Bridgmans v. Wells, 13 Ohio 43, 46 [adopted in Bowers v. Pomeroy, 21 Ohio St. 184].

A mere issue of title made by the pleadings is not of itself sufficient, under the statute, to oust the court of jurisdiction. It must appear from the evidence offered or given on the trial, that the title to land is in fact in question, and is disputed by the other party. An issue of title may be made by the answer, and afterward waived, and no evidence offered or given upon the subject whatever. In such case the question of title could not in any sense come in issue, or be determined by the justice. Malarkey v. O'Leary, 34 Oreg. 493, 56 Pac. 521.

Incidental proof of title.— In all cases where deeds or paper evidences of title to real estate are introduced before a justice of the peace, he is entitled to consider the purpose for which they are introduced. If they are merely introduced incidentally to establish some collateral fact not involving any title to or interest in lands, he is to receive them like other evidence. Main v. Cooper, 25 N. Y. 180 [followed in Nichols v. Bain, 42 Barb. 353, 27 How. Pr. 286]. See also Lorins v. Abbott, 49 Nebr. 214, 68 N. W. 486 [citing Galligher v. Connell, 23 Nebr. 391, 36 N. W. 566]. "A party may for the purpose of identifying and proving title to personal property, show that it was taken from off certain lands and that he was the owner thereof, but this does not bring the matter of title to lands in question. It would not follow in such a case that any controversy whatever would arise concerning the title to the land, or that as between the parties the jury would have to pass upon a question of conflicting titles." Hart v. Hart, 48 Mich. 175, 176, 12 N. W. 33.

Fraudulent conveyances.— In Mississippi it was held not unconstitutional for the legislature to confer upon justices of the peace jurisdiction to try and determine the issue whether a conveyance is fraudulent as to creditors. Smith v. Newlon, 62 Miss. 230.

An issue whether land is exempt from levy and sale under an execution as a homestead does not bring the title of the land in question. Moore v. O'Barr, 87 Ga. 205, 13 S. E. 464.

Replevin for a deed will not be dismissed as involving title to real estate, where there is no evidence that the deed was held as an escrow, but merely that it was deposited on bailment depositum. Pasterfield v. Sawyer, 133 N. C. 42, 45 S. E. 524.

Establishment of plaintiff's title by defendant.— In an action for disturbing a right of way, defendant having established plaintiff's title by his own evidence, and having answered by a general denial, the title to real estate cannot be said to come in question, so as to oust a justice's court of jurisdiction. Hastings v. Glenn, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 402.

land; and if the possession is constructive merely, and can only be shown by production of title, the justice has no jurisdiction.[21]

b. Actions on Land Contracts and Leases[22]— (i) In General. Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction of real contracts, or those to which the title to land is drawn in question,[23] but where it is unnecessary for the plaintiff in the first instance to introduce proof of title in order to make out his cause of action they may have jurisdiction.[24] Thus in case of a sale of land a justice may have jurisdiction of an action by the vendor to recover purchase-money due[25] or by the vendee to recover back purchase-money paid.[26]

An action on a covenant against encumbrances or for quiet enjoyment does not necessarily involve the title to realty. Holmes v. Seaman, (Nebr. 1904) 100 N. W. 417; Dafoe v. Keplinger, (Nebr. 1901) 95 N. W. 674; Campbell v. McClure, 45 Nebr. 608, 63 N. W. 920. Contra, Hastings v. Webber, 2 Vt. 407.

In ejectment the pendency of a proceeding brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant before a justice of the peace, under the Landlord and Tenant Act, cannot be pleaded in bar, the justice having no jurisdiction of the question of title. Campbell v. Potts, 119 N. C. 530, 26 S. E. 50.

When statute inapplicable.— Where a statute gives justices of the peace jurisdiction of forcible entry and detainer proceedings in cases where persons shall wilfully without force hold over after termination of the time the premises were let, it applies only to cases in which plaintiff has been in lawful possession and in which the defendant and those under whom he claims peaceably obtain that possession and hold over after a demand made in writing; consequently a justice has no jurisdiction of forcible entry and detainer proceedings against one who did not obtain possession of the premises from the plaintiff, but who had lawful possession of the premises and by his deed of trust agreed to be dispossessed if he should not on a certain day pay a certain sum of money. Blount v. Winright, 7 Mo. 50.

Mo. Rev. St. (1879) § 2931, expressly directs that where in an action against a tenant in possession, commenced before a justice, defendant makes a motion on affidavit, setting forth plea of title in and payment of rent to a third party as landlord, the case shall be transferred to the circuit court. d. Actions For Obstructing Highways,[36] Watercourses,[37] and Easements.[38] In actions for obstructing highways, watercourses, and easements the title to land is as a rule only incidentally involved, and such actions are consequently within the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.[39] But where defendant denies the existence of the highway and asserts a freehold in himself the jurisdiction of the justice is ousted.[40]

e. Actions Respecting Boundaries[41] and Division Fences.[42] The title to land is usually so involved in actions concerning boundaries and division fences as to oust the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.[43]

In Pennsylvania a magistrate's court has no jurisdiction over a proceeding in form by a landlord against his tenant, under the act of April 3, 1830, to obtain possession of the premises for non-payment of rent, where the defense pleaded is title to the land in the tenant by parol purchase of the landlord's title. In New York, to authorize a justice of the peace to issue a summons in summary proceedings for the possession of lands, under 2 Rev. Intervention and assertion of title by third person.— Where, in an action to recover possession from a tenant, defendant does not file a written answer, but a third person is admitted as a defendant and files an answer, verified by affidavit, alleging that he is the owner of the land and entitled to possession thereof, etc., if such third person is properly admitted and plaintiff makes no objection thereto, the title to the land is "put in issue by plea supported by affidavit," and the justice should certify the cause to the circuit court. Ribbler v. Walker, 69 Ind. 362. But compare Daly v. Barrett, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 350, where it was held that an affidavit of a third person that he claims a reversion cannot oust the justice of jurisdiction, and that as between landlord and tenant, no other title can come into question, but a person claiming title against the landlord must bring a direct proceeding to determine his rights.

Removal of croppers.— Where a person is occupying buildings on a farm which he is cultivating under a contract with the owner for a share of the crops, a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to remove him by proceedings under the Landlord and Tenant Act, § 11, conferring on justices jurisdiction to remove tenants holding over their terms or for non-payment of rent. C. Character of Parties — 1. Corporations[61] — a. In General. Under the earlier statutes corporations might sue,[62] but could not be sued,[63] before a justice of the peace. At the present day jurisdiction is very generally given justices of the peace to entertain suits by or against corporations, whether domestic[64] or foreign.[65]

b. Public Corporations.[66] A public corporation may sue,[67] but it has been held that it cannot be sued,[68] before a justice of the peace.

2. Public Officers.[69] Under the constitutions and statutes of some states justices of the peace have jurisdiction over public officers,[70] but in other states they Consent as conferring jurisdiction generally see infra, III, M.

Limited consent.— Where the parties to a note for two hundred and twenty-five dollars agree therein that judgment may be taken have been the intention of the legislature.[88] The fact that the sum claimed exceeds the lower limit of the jurisdiction of a superior court will not divest a justice of jurisdiction and render him incompetent to decide a case before him.[89] Where a case is of such a character that by statute it should be tried before a justice of the peace, but the amount involved is greater than the constitutional limit of the jurisdiction of justices, the constitution of course controls, and a justice has no jurisdiction.[90] In an action or other proceeding for the recovery of the possession of realty the special jurisdiction conferred upon justices of the peace to determine the right of possession is in most jurisdictions unrestricted by the amount or value in controversy or by the value of the property.[91]

2. Determination of Amount or Value — a. In General. As a general proposition, the amount claimed, or in controversy,[92] in an action before a justice of the peace, is the test by which his jurisdiction is to be determined,[93] and this is true, although the items of recovery may in the aggregate exceed the jurisdictional on it before any justice of a particular county, a judgment on such note, rendered by a justice of another county, is void, even though the note was payable there. Brown v. Davis, 59 Iowa 641, 13 N. W. 861.

Sufficiency of consent. — A stipulation in each of two notes, neither of which exceeded one hundred dollars, giving a justice jurisdiction in an action on the note to an amount not exceeding three hundred dollars, did not give a justice jurisdiction of an action on the two notes aggregating over one hundred dollars, under the statute giving a justice jurisdiction in actions for more than one hundred dollars by consent, where the amount claimed is not more than three hundred dollars. Consent jurisdiction.— Where, by stipulation, a justice had jurisdiction to the extent of three hundred dollars, and the judgment claimed did not exceed that sum, jurisdiction attached, and could not be ousted by an error of the justice in taxing the fees so as to make the aggregate exceed three hundred dollars. Reed v. Shum, 63 Iowa 378, 19 N. W. 254. See also Wedgewood v. Parr, 112 Iowa 514, 84 N. W. 528.

Effect of joinder or consolidation.— Where two causes of action are joined in one complaint or where two suits against the same defendant are consolidated, if jurisdiction as to one of the causes of action is conferred without regard to the amount involved, and the amount claimed in the other does not exceed the jurisdictional limit, the amount involved in the former cannot be added to that claimed in the latter, in order to oust the justice of jurisdiction. Fenton v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 72 Mo. 259.

In a trial of right of property, the value of the property, as alleged in the affidavit of claim and given in the bond taken by the constable who made the levy, being within the jurisdictional limit, is sufficient to show that the justice had jurisdiction; and it is immaterial that the constable failed to indorse the value of the goods on the bond, as required by Tex. Rev. St. art. 4826. Leman v. Borden, 83 Tex. 620, 19 S. W. 160.

Effect of bill of particulars.— Since the amount of recovery in a civil action before a justice demanded by the summons is the test of the amount in controversy, on the question of jurisdiction, where a summons of a justice in a civil action for the recovery of money for the breach of contract demands judgment for three hundred dollars, which is within the justice's jurisdiction, the fact that plaintiff files two bills of particulars on different causes of action, aggregating more than three hundred dollars, is not cause for dismissing the action before trial for want of jurisdiction. See also Moran v. Murphy, 49 Iowa 68, where a petition claiming one hundred dollars was held to con-declaration, complaint, or statement, each stating the same cause of action in somewhat different phraseology, or upon a different theory of recovery, and each claiming an amount within the jurisdictional limit, an objection that the aggregate amount claimed is beyond the justice's jurisdiction is without merit,[98] even though the counts are not stated in the alternative.[99] On the other hand if the ad damnum in one of the counts exceeds the jurisdictional limit, the justice cannot take cognizance of the action.[1] The fact that any part of the amount demanded cannot be recovered will not give the justice of the peace jurisdiction, since he is without jurisdiction so to determine.[2]

b. Particular Actions and Proceedings — (i) Actions on Bills and Notes.[3] In some states the amount claimed to be due by plaintiff is held to be the criterion of the amount in controversy in an action on a bill or note,[4] but in others the rule is that the jurisdiction is to be determined by the face of the note,[5] unless it has been reduced by credits or payments indorsed thereon.[6] In an action by an assignee against his assignor, while the amount of the note is prima facie the price paid for the assignment, the actual amount paid may be shown to determine the measure of damages; and therefore, although the face of the note exceeds the jurisdictional limit, if the ad damnum is within the jurisdiction, the action will not be dismissed, since the justice cannot know until after the close of the evidence whether the claim is cognizable by him.[7] Conversely, such an action will not be regarded as on the note for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to a justice, when the amount sought to be recovered exceeds his jurisdiction in other actions of assumpsit.[8]

(ii) Actions on Bonds.[9] In actions on bonds the amount claimed, and not the penalty, determines the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the greater number of the states.[10] It has been held, however, that where the action is an action of debt, a justice has no jurisdiction if the penalty exceeds the jurisdic-

fer jurisdiction, although the notice stated that unless defendants appeared judgment would be rendered for the full amount of the claim, which exceeded the jurisdictional limit. But see Richmond Second Nat. Bank v. Hutton, 81 Ind. 101, to the effect that, although the complaint prays for an amount beyond the jurisdiction of the justice, if it clearly appears from the bill of particulars that only an amount within his jurisdiction can be recovered he may take jurisdiction.

Effect of amendment.— Where, after summons was issued on a complaint claiming damages in the sum of three hundred dollars for breach of a contract of lease, an amended complaint was filed containing a bill of particulars of items of charge to the amount of three hundred dollars, the justice had jurisdiction, as the amended complaint was either a restatement of the cause of action contained in the original complaint, or a statement of the same ground of action based on a different theory of recovery, in either of which events the amount involved did not exceed three hundred dollars. A liquidated account, within the meaning of the statute giving jurisdiction to magistrates of liquidated accounts, is one in which the balance is stated, leaving no necessity for extrinsic evidence. Midgett v. Watson, 29 N. C. 143. See also State v. Alexander, 11 N. C. 182.

The account sued upon and the specific items claimed, and not the amount named in the prayer for judgment, should be taken as showing the "debt or balance" sued for. Stephenson v. Porter, 45 Mo. 358. See also Musick v. Chamlin, 22 Mo. 175; Buckner v. Armour, 1 Mo. 534.

Error in computation. — Where the account is footed up as amounting to a sum within the jurisdictional limit, a justice has jurisdiction, although a correct footing would show a sum beyond the limit. Mitchell v. Smith, 24 Ind. 252.

In Illinois a justice of the peace has no power to investigate an account whose items exceed the jurisdictional limit, although it may be reduced by credits to a less sum (Blue v. Weir, 1 Ill. 372; Clark v. Cornelius, 1 Ill. 46), unless defendant admits a balance due within the limit, which he promises to pay (Mauver v. Derrick, 1 Ill. 197).

(iv) Proceedings to Recover Rent.[20] In an ordinary action to recover rent the jurisdiction of justices of the peace is determined, in the absence of a special statute to the contrary, by the amount claimed.[21]

(v) Enforcement of Liens.[22] In suits to enforce liens on personal property, the value of the property determines the jurisdiction of the court.[23]

(vi) Actions to Recover Personal Property.[24] In actions to recover personal property the jurisdiction of justices of the peace is dependent upon the value of the property,[25] which has been variously held to be determined by its real value, irrespective of the pleading or appraisement,[26] by the affidavit in

See also Ball v. Sledge, 82 Miss. 749, 35 So. 447; Darling v. Conklin, 42 Wis. 478, holding that a justice's jurisdiction rests on the affidavit, independently of the value of the chattels in fact, until his judgment determines their value; and that where the affidavit fails to state the value of the property, or states it over the jurisdictional limit, the justice has no jurisdiction, whatever its actual value may be.

In Michigan the value is determined by the allegation of the affidavit or writ. Burt v. Addison, 74 Mich. 730, 42 N. W. 278 (writ); Chilson v. Jennison, 60 Mich. 235, 26 N. In Minnesota where the affidavit and complaint in replevin in a justice's court state the value of the property at one hundred dollars or less, the justice acquires jurisdiction to proceed and dispose of the case on the merits, although the value is in fact more than one hundred dollars, unless defendant, as he may do, pleads and proves, in bar to the jurisdiction, the fact that the value exceeds the jurisdictional limit. Tennessee.— Plaintiff may fix whatever value he pleases on the property, and so bring it within the jurisdiction of a justice, but he will be bound by his own valuation. Gray v. Jones, 1 Head 542.

Texas.— The jurisdiction will be determined by the value placed on the chattels by plaintiff, unless it appears that the value has been fraudulently understated to give jurisdiction. In doubtful cases all intendments will be in favor of the jurisdiction Dwyer v. Bassett, 63 Tex. 274; Graham v. Roder, 5 Tex. 141. It will not be defeated even if on the trial it should appear that the property was worth more than the limit of value. The alternative recovery would, however, be limited by the value claimed. Fictitious appraisement.— The return by the constable of the certificate of the appraisers is only prima facie evidence that the property has in fact been appraised as therein set forth, and may be contradicted by testimony that the appraisement was in fact fictitious, and that the valuation of the property was falsely placed within the justice's jurisdiction. and the damages claimed for its detention.[30] In Canada a justice has jurisdiction in cases of poundage if the amount required to obtain the release of the cattle does not exceed the jurisdictional limit, although their value does.[31] It is the value of the property at the time suit is brought that determines the jurisdiction, and a subsequent enhancement beyond the jurisdictional limit will not oust the justice of jurisdiction.[32]

f. Punitive Statutory Damages.[50] Where a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action in all other respects, the fact that he may by statute give double or treble damages, which will reach an amount in excess of his jurisdiction, will not prevent his taking cognizance of the case.[51] different claims,[54] nor to actions brought upon one or more instalments of a debt, payable in instalments, where the amount sued for is within the justice's jurisdiction, and the remaining instalments are not yet due;[55] and where the items of an account are incurred under different contracts, an action may be brought on each item before a justice, the separate items being less than the jurisdictional limit.[56] But it has also been asserted that where several demands for damages for torts, each being for less than the statutory limit, but the aggregate exceeding such limit, are joined in one action a justice of the peace has jurisdiction.[57] It has been held that where a declaration in a suit before a justice contains several counts, each having its own conclusion, and the aggregate amount demanded exceeds the jurisdictional limit, the suit must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.[58]

(II) Bills and Notes.[59] The holder of several bills or notes made or accepted by the same party may elect to bring a separate action on each before a justice of the peace, and the fact that their aggregate amount exceeds the jurisdictional limit will not oust the justice of jurisdiction;[60] but where the notes were given in the same transaction, as where an entire claim is divided, and several notes are given, each for less than the jurisdictional limit, and all are due, the better opinion seems to be that a justice of the peace cannot entertain jurisdiction of separate actions on the notes, if in the aggregate they exceed the limit.[61] In

Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2863, where plaintiff and defendant presented accounts largely in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, but which were reduced by the justice's findings on either side to amounts the total of which was within the jurisdictional limit, it was held that the existence of credits on either side was a question of fact for the justice, and that having found them to exist, and to reduce the claim of each to sums whereof the total was less than four hundred dollars, he had properly taken jurisdiction of the cause. relief sought. Thus in Illinois they have no jurisdiction of actions in the form of trespass or case,[78] but only of actions of debt or assumpsit;[79] in Indiana an action to recover the possession of real estate can be brought before a justice only under prescribed circumstances;[80] in Kentucky the jurisdiction has been excluded where a party had a right to a trial by jury;[81] while in South Carolina justices of the quorum, as commissioners of special bail, were given jurisdiction to carry into execution the Prison Bounds Act.[82] Where jurisdiction is conferred over "all civil cases," special proceedings are included.[83]

2. Equitable Jurisdiction and Relief[84] — a. In General. Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction to administer equitable relief, either in those states which still retain the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity or in those in which the distinction has been abolished,[85] unless such jurisdiction is expressly granted by statute.[86] They may, however, where they otherwise have jurisdiction of a case, apply equitable principles in its determination, although they cannot exercise the extraordinary jurisdiction of a chancellor.[87]

3. Set-Offs and Counter-Claims[2] — a. In General. In most of the states justices of the peace are given jurisdiction of set-offs and counter-claims,[3] where they are of such a character as to be within the jurisdiction of a justice if sued upon directly.[4]

b. Amount or Value as Affecting Jurisdiction.[5] A justice of the peace has as a rule no jurisdiction of a set-off or counter-claim which exceeds in amount his jurisdictional limit.[6] But a defendant cannot oust a justice of his jurisdiction by

In North Carolina the constitutional provision restricting the jurisdiction of justices contemplates their adjudication on claims within the required limits, and it is not allowable for a defendant to set up a counter-claim for so much as will extinguish plaintiff's claim and permit defendant to recover a balance within the limit; in such case the remission must be absolute of all in excess of the jurisdiction. Derr v. Stubbs, 83 N. C. 539. See also McClenahan v. Cotton, 83 N. C. 332.

In Ohio defendant may withhold the amount of his claim in excess of the jurisdiction, and make it the subject of a subsequent action. But this does not relate to unliqui-

4. Attachment[10] and Garnishment.[11] The jurisdiction of justices of the peace in attachment proceedings is strictly limited to the powers conferred by the statutes creating it, and as a rule is determined by the amount in controversy in the principal action,[12] and the same is true of their jurisdiction in garnishment pro-dated damages, and where such is the nature of the claim, the whole excess must be remitted, or the justice is without jurisdiction to act on the claim. Woolever v. Stewart, 36 Ohio St. 146, 38 Am. Rep. 569.

In Texas the earlier cases are in accord with the text (Dolby v. Murphy, 25 Tex. 354; Mulhall v. Teller, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1162), but the later cases refuse to allow the counter-claim under such circumstances (Rylie v. Elam, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 79 S. W. 326 [citing Gimbel v. Gomprecht, 89 Tex. 497, 35 S. 12. Alabama.— See Solomon v. Ross, 49 Ala. 198. A mayor (Bain v. Mitchell, 82 Ala. 304, 2 So. 706) or notary (Rice v. Watts, 71 Ala. 593; Griffin v. Appleby, 69 Ala. 409) having the powers of a justice of the peace may issue an attachment within the jurisdictional limit. Code, § 3606, requiring suits before a justice of the peace to be brought in the precinct of defendant's permanent residence, does not apply to actions commenced by attachment, as they are in their nature proceedings in rem. Atkinson v. Wiggins, 69 Ala. 190.

Arkansas.— Merriman v. Sarlo, 63 Ark. 151, 37 S. W. 879 (authority not limited to the case of non-resident debtors); Jones v. Buzzard, 2 Ark. 415 (attachment may issue although defendant is a non-resident and without the jurisdiction of the justice). But see Lemay v. Williams, 32 Ark. 166, right of attachment on personal property by mortgagee cannot be asserted before a justice.

District of Columbia.— Justices have jurisdiction to issue attachments for rent. Gross v. Goldsmith, 4 Mackey 126.

Florida.— McGehee v. Wilkins, 31 Fla. 83, 12 So. 228.

Georgia.— The act of March 5, 1856, gave jurisdiction in suits by attachment as well as in others. Barrett v. Black, 25 Ga. 151. The code allows any justice of the peace in the county to issue attachments. A justice's jurisdiction is not limited in the issuance of distress warrants or attachments. Illinois.— If the nature and amount of the claim is within the jurisdiction, a justice can entertain a suit begun by attachment against a steamboat as well as if begun by ordinary summons. The Delta v. Walker, 24 Ill. 233.

Indiana.— An action against a resident, unless commenced by capias, must be brought in the township of defendant's residence, and the fact that an attachment has issued and property been seized in the township where the suit is brought does not take the case out of the rule. Wilkinson v. Moore, 79 Ind. 397; Michael v. Thomas, 24 Ind. 72.

Iowa.— Under Code (1873), § 3511, a justice has jurisdiction of an action commenced by attachment of property within the township, although defendant is a non-resident of, and is not found within, the state, and is not personally served with notice. Anderson v. Union Pac. R. Co., 77 Iowa 445, 42 N. W. 366. But the fact that an attachment is issued does not give jurisdiction of an action for recovery of money against a resident of another county. Gates v. Wagner, 46 Iowa 355.

Missouri.—See Abernathy v. Moore, 83 Mo. 65; Rocheport Bank v. Doak, 75 Mo. App. 332. The jurisdiction is confined to causes where the property is in the justice's township or an adjoining township, or in defendant's township or an adjoining township. Belshe v. Lamp, 91 Mo. App. 477. Compare Harris v. Meredith, 106 Mo. App. 586, 81 S. W. 203, where it was held that a proceeding to reach money in bank is properly commenced in the township where the cashier is found, although the money is in another township. Where the attached effects were in the city of St. Louis and the justice before whom the action was brought had jurisdiction coextensive with that city, it was held that he had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Hasler v. Schopp, 70 Mo. App. 469.

Ohio.— A domestic corporation may be proceeded against by attachment, under Swan & C. St. p. 776, in a county where it has no office or place of business, on the ground of Non-resident of county.— There is no jurisdiction, under Rev. St. p. 228, to issue an attachment against a debtor who is a resident of another county and merely passing through the county where the suit is brought. Dudley v. Staples, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 196.

A justice of the peace in Alaska, under the laws of Oregon in force there, was held without jurisdiction to render a judgment in attachment upon a note payable in Victoria, B. C. Moody v. Skagway First Bank, 1 Alaska 104.

13. Alabama.— A justice has authority to issue a garnishment on a judgment rendered by him. Gould v. Meyer, 36 Ala. 565.

Colorado.— Welsh v. Noyes, 10 Colo. 133, 14 Pac. 317 (jurisdiction to try issue raised by answer in garnishee process setting forth that garnishees hold property by virtue of a chattel mortgage, to which a traverse is made alleging fraud and delay of creditors, and charging garnishees with knowledge of and participation in the fraud); Fisher v. Hervey, 6 Colo. 16 (construing Act, Feb. 21, 1879, to extend to judgments rendered before its passage).

Georgia.— A justice's court has no jurisdiction to garnish a judgment against a third person in favor of a debtor, against whom a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in garnishment has been rendered in the superior court. Durden v. Belt, 61 Ga. 545.

Maine.— One summoned as a trustee in a process of foreign attachment is "a defendant" within St. (1827) c. 359, which provides that where there are two or more defendants living in different counties, a justice's suit may be maintained against them all in the county in which either lives. Boynton v. Fly, 12 Me. 17.

Michigan.— Under Comp. Laws (1897), § 1014, a justice has jurisdiction of garnishment proceedings against a foreign corporation. Grinnell v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 19, 86 N. W. 435.

New Jersey.— On a justice's judgment in attachment proceedings lawfully instituted before him, he has jurisdiction by scire facias against a garnishee who resides within the limits of a city in which a district court is established. This is not, within Rev. p. 1302, § 6, a case "arising under the District Court act." New York, etc., R. Co. v. Cookson, 45 N. J. L. 302, 46 N. J. L. 208.

Pennsylvania.— Strouse v. Lawrence, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 131 (holding that a justice has jurisdiction to try the truth of a garnishee's answer); Hintermeister v. Ithaca Organ, etc., Co., 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 268 (holding that Act (1845), § 1, does not enlarge the jurisdiction under the act of March 20, 1810.

Tennessee.— A justice who has rendered judgment against a defendant has power to sequestrate his debts by garnishment to the amount of the judgment. Cheairs v. Slaten, 3 Humphr. 101. But see Seawell v. Murphy, Cooke 478, construing the act of 1794 (1 Haywood Rev. p. 194), section 56, and holding it inapplicable to justices of the peace.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Justices of the Peace," § 178.

Interest in decedent's estate.— A justice does not have jurisdiction to attach an interest in a decedent's estate. McCall v. Lungren, 16 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 318.

Determining right of exemption.— A justice has no jurisdiction in a case of garnishment to determine the right of defendant to hold the garnishment debt exempt from execution. Eisenberg v. Northwestern Turn., etc., Assoc., 70 Mo. App. 436 [following State v. Barnett, 96 Mo. 133, 8 S. W. 767; State v. Barada, 57 Mo. 562].

14. Benedict v. Bray, 2 Cal. 251, 56 Am. Dec. 332; Walker v. Wynne, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 62. Justices of the peace, however, are sometimes given the power to issue attachments returnable to the circuit court, even in cases for amounts beyond their jurisdiction. Gal-plaintiff may release the excess and thus bring the case within his jurisdiction.[15] A justice cannot issue an attachment returnable before another court or justice,[16] unless the authority to do so is expressly conferred;[17] and generally a justice has no authority to issue an attachment returnable into a court of another county than that for which he was appointed.[18] A justice may be given jurisdiction to issue attachments upon land;[19] but in some states such jurisdiction has not been conferred.[20]

5. Proceedings to Recover Personal Property.[21] The statutes in some states confer jurisdiction on justices of the peace in actions and proceedings to recover the possession of personal property;[22] but unless specifically conferred there is no such jurisdiction.[23] Under some circumstances, where the property has not been replevied, the action may proceed as an action for damages.[24]

6. Summary Proceedings Against Officers and Their Sureties.[25] Summary proceedings before justices of the peace against sheriffs and constables and their sureties are not warranted,[26] save where there is express statutory authority therefor.[27]

7. Summary Remedies by Surety Against Principal or Cosurety.[28] A summary remedy is sometimes given a surety before a justice of the peace against his principal[29] or cosurety.[30]

8. Mandamus.[31] Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction of mandamus proceedings.[32]

F. Territorial Extent of Jurisdiction.[33] The territorial extent of the civil jurisdiction of justices of the peace is determined by the constitutions and statutes of the various states. In a number of states their jurisdiction is coextensive with, and limited to, their respective counties;[34] but in others it is confined to their respective townships, districts, wards, precincts, or hun-is commenced before a justice by a resident of the county against a non-resident, and defendant is properly served in the county where the action is commenced, but the property is not obtained, and has never been wrongfully detained in that county, but has been and is wrongfully detained in the county in which defendant resides, the court has jurisdiction to determine the case as one for damages only under Comp. Laws, § 4622, providing for such trial when the property has not been taken. Huckell v. McCoy, 38 Kan. 53, 15 Pac. 870.

Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2933, providing that "where the summons [in replevin] has been personally served upon the defendant, or where he appears, the justice must proceed to hear and determine the action, although the plaintiff has not required the chattel to be replevied," a justice has jurisdiction of an action to recover a chattel, and the final judgment, under section 1730, must award plaintiff the sum fixed as the value of the chattel, under section 1726, to be paid by defendant if possession is not delivered to plaintiff. over the subject-matter and over one or more of the defendants, a justice of the peace may issue process against the other defendants to be served in other counties.[40]

G. Ancillary and Incidental Jurisdiction. A justice of the peace who has obtained jurisdiction of the principal matter of an action has incidental jurisdiction of every question necessary to its proper determination, although such question may in itself alone be without his jurisdiction.[41] Thus a justice having jurisdiction of the principal action has also jurisdiction to try an interplea or other proceeding brought to determine the right of property levied on or replevied regardless of its value.[42]

jurisdictional requirement.[44] Where he acts within the scope of his jurisdiction, mere errors and irregularities in its exercise, to correct which appeal will lie in proper cases, will not divest a jurisdiction already attached.[45]

2. Absence or Delay of Justice. Generally, unless a cause is tried within a reasonable time[46] after the appointed hour, or that to which the cause has been regularly adjourned, the omission amounts to a discontinuance,[47] unless a continuance is had as provided by law.[48] But if the justice is engaged at the hour in trying another cause, this is a good reason for delay, and he may proceed as soon as possible after his other official engagements are disposed of.[49] So too where he is prevented by an act of God from being present at the time fixed, he will not lose jurisdiction, but may fix another time for the trial.[50]

3. Absence or Delay of Plaintiff. The failure of plaintiff to appear at the time fixed for trial, or that to which the case has been continued, or within a reasonable time thereafter, will operate as a discontinuance of the action;[51] and

Where there is an oral agreement for a continuance in consequence of which the parties fail to appear, the justice does not lose a discontinuance will also result from plaintiff's failure to prosecute the suit for an unreasonable time.[52]

4. Continuances or Adjournments[53] — a. In General. As a general rule any unauthorized continuance or adjournment of a cause will oust a justice of the peace of jurisdiction to take any further action in it;[54] but a continuance or adjournment which is within the powers of the justice and proper under the circumstances will not divest him of jurisdiction.[55]

b. For Indefinite Period. Where a justice of the peace continues a cause indefinitely, he as a rule loses jurisdiction, and any judgment subsequently rendered by him in such case is void;[56] but where jurisdiction has been obtained, and the parties have appeared on the return-day, and, to suit their own convenience, have mutually agreed to let the trial stand over to a day thereafter to be fixed, and such date has thereafter been named by the justice, and due notice given the parties, the court does not thereby lose jurisdiction to proceed with the case.[57]

c. Insufficient Entries of Adjournments. Under some statutes the time and place to which a case is adjourned or continued must be entered at the time of the action in the justice's docket, and if this is not done the case will stand discon-

tinued.[58] It is not essential that the docket should show the cause of adjournment, but where the cause is given, and it is insufficient, jurisdiction will be lost.[59] Where defendant has failed to appear, and the justice adjourns the case, but omits to state in his docket on whose motion adjournment was had, he does not thereby lose jurisdiction.[60]

d. Estoppel to Object.[61] A party who with knowledge of the facts applies for or consents to an irregular continuance or adjournment is estopped afterward to insist, to the prejudice of the other party, that the action was thereby discontinued.[62]

5. Restoration of Jurisdiction. It has been laid down as a general rule that when the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace has once been divested, it cannot be restored;[63] but this is at least subject to modifications where defendant voluntarily appears.[64]

I. Disqualification to Act — 1. In General. The causes which will disqualify a justice of the peace from trying a civil action are usually pointed out by the statutes,[65] and are exclusive of all others[66] except those operative at common the cause is out of court, and the justice cannot fix a day and give notice thereof to defendant.

Collateral attack on judgment see infra, IV, O, 7, b, (IV).

Under the Connecticut statutes no one can act as justice of the peace in the trial of any civil action which shall have been brought, or in which the writ or declaration shall have been filled up, by his partner, or by any one occupying the same office or apartment with him. A judgment passed by a justice so disqualified is void. The disqualification may be removed by agreement of the parties to the suit made in writing in court, but not otherwise. Keeler v. Stead, 56 Conn. 501, 16 Atl. 552, 7 Am. St. Rep. 320.

Statutory disqualification of tavern keepers or inhabitants of inns see Rice v. Milks, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 337; Parmelee v. Thompson, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 77; Clayton v. Per Dun, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 218; Low v. Rice, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 409; Schermerhorn v. Tripp, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 108.

66. Having served as juror in an action between the same parties and for the same cause of action, wherein a verdict was rendered for the plaintiff, does not disqualify a justice from trying a cause and rendering judgment therein. Travis v. Jenkins, 30 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 152.

Having acted as arbitrator between the same parties and in reference to the subject-matter of the suit, and having formed an opinion and expressed it to his associate ar-law.[67] Where the justice knows the fact of his disqualification, he should act on his own knowledge, and decline to take cognizance of the case further than to transmit it to some qualified justice, even though he first ascertains the fact after issue joined.[68]

2. INTEREST. Both at common law and by statute any direct pecuniary interest, however minute, in the result of the action or other proceeding disqualifies a justice of the peace;[69] the only exception being where it is necessary for the justice to act in order to prevent a failure of justice.[70] As a general rule the interest of a justice as a citizen or taxpayer in the result of an action or other proceeding does not disqualify him.[71]

3. RELATIONSHIP. At common law it was no disqualification in a justice of the peace to try a cause that he was related in any of the degrees of consanguinity bitrators, will not disqualify a justice. Batchelder v. Nourse, 35 Vt. 642.

Having been a member of a town council by which an ordinance was passed does not disqualify a justice from hearing a case contesting its validity. Alexandria v. Williams, 35 La. Ann. 329.

The fact that a justice has declined to act at the first trial of a case, after objection, will not disqualify him from acting at a second trial, when he is not in fact disqualified. Vaughn v. Strickland, 108 Ga. 659, 34 S. E. 192.

A statute which disqualifies a judge to sit in a cause to which he is a party extends to justices of the peace. Baldwin v. McArthur, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 414.

Interest must be direct and substantial.— See Fuller v. Davis, 73 Me. 556; Ayer v. Woodman, 24 Me. 196; Russell v. Perry, 16 N. H. 100; Com. v. Fenstermacher, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 424.

Pecuniary interest.— "The interest in a cause which of itself disqualifies a judge from acting therein is a pecuniary one — similar to the interest which a party in a civil action has in it." Clyma v. Kennedy, 64 Conn. 310, 318, 29 Atl. 539, 42 Am. St. Rep. 194.

Nominal plaintiff.— Where a suit for the recovery of a penalty is brought in the name of the burgess to the use of the borough, and before a justice who is also the burgess, the fact that the burgess is the nominal plaintiff in the suit will not prevent his hearing the case in his capacity of justice. Morgan v. Fisher, 1 Just. L. Rep. (Pa.) 108.

Disqualified justice cannot continue cause. — See Howe v. Hosford, 8 Vt. 220.

If the justice is interested when the plea of interest is filed, it is sufficient to disqualify him, although he may have had no interest when the warrant issued. Howes v. Mikesell, 81 Mich. 51, 45 N. W. 378; Clark v. Mikesell, 81 Mich. 45, 45 N. W. 377.

Maine.— State v. Craig, 80 Me. 85, 13 Atl. 129, action for a penalty. But see Norridgewock v. Sawtelle, 72 Me. 484, holding that upon a poor debtor's disclosure on an execution in favor of the inhabitants of a town, a justice who is one of such inhabitants is not disinterested, as required by Rev. St. c. 113, § 28.

Massachusetts.— Hall v. Kent, 11 Gray 467, an action for penalty for obstructing streets. But see Clark v. Lamb, 2 Allen 396, holding or was of affinity to either of the parties,[72] but under the statutes of most of the states relationship within the nearer degrees of consanguinity and affinity operates as a disqualification.[73] It has been held that the fact that a justice was so dis-that prior to Gen. St. c. 122, § 13, a magistrate had no jurisdiction of an action made returnable before him, in which the inhabitants of his town were summoned as trustees of defendant.

Waters v. Day, 10 Vt. 487; State v. Batchelder, 6 Vt. 479. But it has been laid down that in a civil case a justice is without jurisdiction if any part of the debt or avails of the action will go into the treasury of his town. Waters v. Day, 10 Vt. 487, holding that the action qui tam is a civil action. See also Jericho v. Underhill, 64 Vt. 362, 24 Atl. 251; Pierce v. Butler, 16 Vt. 101. It is against public policy for a justice to try a case over the objection of one of the parties where the other is related to him. Sample v. Shidel, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 357.

Rule applies to judgment by confession or default.— Dawson v. Wells, 3 Ind. 398 [overruling Eastwood v. Buel, 1 Ind. 434, Smith 376]; Hill v. Wait, 5 Vt. 124.

The word "kin," as used in Wis. Rev. St. c. 120, § 48, includes both relations by blood and by marriage. Hibbard v. Odell, 16 Wis. 633.

What constitutes affinity.— "A husband is related by affinity to the blood relations of his wife, and the wife by affinity to the blood relations of her husband, but not otherwise by affinity." Consequently a justice is not disqualified where one of the parties married a cousin of the justice's wife; the party and the justice not being otherwise related. Blalock v. Waldrup, 84 Ga. 145, 10 S. E. 622, 20 Am. St. Rep. 350. See also Higbe v. Leonard, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 186, in which a brother of the justice was the husband of the plaintiff's sister.

Relationship by affinity ceases with the dissolution of the marriage creating it, except so far as the children of such marriage are concerned. Trout v. Drawhorn, 57 Ind. 570. Compare Pegues v. Baker, 110 Ala. 251, 17 So. 943; Carman v. Newell, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 25, to the effect that for the relationship to cease there must be no surviving children of the marriage. And see Spear v. Robinson, 29 Me. 531, holding that a justice who had married a sister of one of the plaintiffs was disqualified whether his wife was living at the time of the suit or not.

Relationship to a corporator and stockholder does not disqualify in a suit against a corporation. Searsburgh Turnpike Co. v. Cutler, 6 Vt. 315. Contra, Place v. Butternuts, etc., Mfg. Co., 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 503.

Poor debtor's oath.— The fact that one of the magistrates selected to administer a poor debtor's oath is a brother of the poor debtor will not disqualify him to act. Allen v. Bruce, 12 N. H. 418. See also Downer v. Hollister, 14 N. H. 122, 40 Am. Dec. 175, holding that a brother to a surety in a poor qualified renders his judgment void,[74] but there is also authority for the view that such judgment is voidable only and not void.[75]

4. Counsel or Agent For Parties. A justice of the peace who is or has been counsel or agent of one of the parties to a case is disqualified to try it.[76] But his attorneyship or agency must be clearly shown,[77] and the mere fact that the justice has received the claim for collection and has notified defendant that suit will be brought unless it is settled is not alone sufficient to disqualify him.[78] A justice is, however, disqualified to try an action on a note which has been indorsed to him for collection,[79] or where he has received a note for collection upon an agreement that, if suit is brought, he is not to receive his costs, "unless he can make them out of the defendant."[80]

J. Powers After Expiration of Term. Purely ministerial duties may generally be performed by a justice of the peace after the expiration of his term of office,[81] debtor's bond may act as a magistrate in discharging the debtor. Compare Gear v. Smith, 9 N. H. 63.

Remote relationship does not disqualify.— Brady v. Richardson, 18 Ind. 1, fifth cousin.

Counsel in former suit for same matters.— Where the justice who rendered the judgment had been counsel for plaintiff in a suit before another justice for the same matters declared for before himself, but on application refused to dismiss the action, the judgment should be reversed. Carrington v. Andrews, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 348. See also Harrison v. Lokey, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 404, 63 S. W. 1030.

Retainer for suit in another court.— Where a justice, two days after a summons issued by him, accepted a retainer to bring another suit for plaintiff in the supreme court, the judgment entered by the justice for plaintiff in the original suit should be set aside, although there was probably no corrupt intent in accepting the retainer. Hubbell v. Harbeck, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 147, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 243.

See also Regle v. Nugent, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 297; Singley v. Fisher, 2 Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 168; Koch v. Shimer, 1 Lehigh Val. L. Rep. (Pa.) 77.

but it is otherwise as to judicial duties,[82] unless he is given express statutory authority to perform them.[83]

K. Powers of Successor Over Proceedings Before Former Justice. As a general rule when a justice goes out of office, his docket and official papers are required to be transferred to his successor, who is authorized to complete all unfinished business.[84]

L. Powers Over Proceedings Within Jurisdiction of Other Justices. Ordinarily one justice has no authority to take cognizance of proceedings within the jurisdiction of another justice,[85] but in many states other justices, usually the nearest, are given jurisdiction over proceedings within the jurisdiction of a justice who has resigned or is disqualified, absent, or otherwise disabled.[86] These statutes are to be strictly construed, and will not be extended to cases not clearly

New York.— See People v. Ulster County, 32 Barb. 473, as to what constitutes a "disability" within 3 Rev. St. (5th ed.) p. 475, § 25, which authorizes another justice to act in place of one disabled.

Ohio.— Where a justice resigns pending an action, and his official papers and docket are placed in the hands of the sole remaining justice in the township, the latter has authority, under Swan & C. St. p. 806, § 208, to try the case and render judgment. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Fleming, 30 Ohio St. 480.

Pennsylvania.— Any justice has jurisdiction, on the delivery of the transcript to him, to recover the amount of a judgment rendered by another justice, who has resigned, but retains his docket. Ingle v. Homman, 1 Watts & S. 414. See also McGarry v. Douredoure, 6 Phila. 332.

N. Waiver and Cure of Objections to Jurisdiction—1. In General. As a rule jurisdiction of the subject-matter cannot be waived,[91] and the want of such jurisdiction will not be cured by verdict, when properly presented by plea in abatement.[92] But where a defendant appears and goes to trial on the merits, he waives all objections to the jurisdiction of the person.[93] If, however, a statute expressly declares that a justice shall have no jurisdiction of a cause if defendant be not proceeded against as the law prescribes, this strips the justice of all

Pleading over.— Where a justice disregards a plea to the jurisdiction, and defendant then pleads to the merits, he thereby waives all question of jurisdiction. Storm v. Worland, 19 Ind. 203. See also Ovid Tp. v. Haire, 133 Mich. 353, 94 N. W. 1060. But see Allen v. Stone, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 60.

Change of venue.— Where a person not a justice assumes the functions of one, and issues a writ of replevin, he is a trespasser; but if defendant procures a change of venue to a person who is a justice, and proceeds to trial before him, he thereby confers jurisdiction, both as to the person and the subject-matter. Graves v. Shoefelt, 60 Ill. 462.

Objection on specific grounds.—Where a defendant specially appears before a justice, and moves to dismiss for want of jurisdiction of the person, on specific grounds, he waives the right, on appeal, to urge any grounds not presented to the justice. official authority, and he has no more power to accept a waiver, and thus acquire jurisdiction, than a private individual would have.[94]

2. Where Title to Land Is Involved. The decisions in the different states vary considerably as to the time and manner of raising an objection that the title to land is involved and what will constitute a waiver of such objection.[95]

3. Objection to Place of Bringing Suit. By appearing and going to trial without objecting to the place of bringing suit, a defendant waives the objection that it has been brought in the wrong place,[96] and in some states it is held that he waives the objection if, after service of process, he fails to appear and plead to the jurisdiction.[97]

4. Disqualification of Justice. The disqualification of a justice of the peace for any cause may be waived.[98] But while an objection that a justice is disqualified should be taken at the earliest practical moment after his incompetency becomes known to the party objecting,[99] it is not necessary that it should be made to appear before joining issue.[1]

New York.— Under the code of procedure, a defendant in a justice's court who would interpose a plea of title is not absolutely required to do so at the time of joining issue, as under the Revised Statutes; but this, like any other defense, may be interposed by amendment at any time before trial, when substantial justice will be promoted thereby. Pennsylvania.— Under the act of March 22, 1814, requiring an affidavit that title to land would come in question to be made, in order to oust the jurisdiction of the magistrate, "before the trial of the action," it is not essential that the affidavit be made before any witnesses are examined; a reasonable and liberal intendment is to be made in favor of the statutory right of defendant. Vermont.— The defect may be taken advantage of at any time during the pendency of the action. Thayer v. Montgomery, 26 Vt. 491.

Holbrook v. Sacramento County Super. Ct., 106 Cal. 589, 39 Pac. 936.

Objection to transfer to proper justice.— Where a writ in replevin was returned to the justice of the wrong district, and plaintiff, on the jurisdiction being questioned by plea in abatement, simply moved to transfer the cause to a competent justice, defendant waived his plea and objection to the jurisdiction by objecting to the transfer. O. Jurisdiction to Be Shown by Record — 1. In General. It should appear affirmatively upon the face of the record of the proceedings of a justice of the peace that he had jurisdiction,[2] not only of the person but also of the subject-matter.[3] Every jurisdictional fact as to the issuance, service, and return of process or notice, and as to the appearance of the parties, must appear from the rec-such defense, and he filed no plea to the jurisdiction.

justice waited the required time after the time fixed in the summons before proceeding with the cause in the absence of defendant.[10]

2. PLEADING JURISDICTIONAL FACTS. All the facts essential to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace should as a rule be set out in the declaration, statement, or complaint.[11] Similarly, where a defendant justifies under the process or judgment of a justice of the peace, he must plead the facts which conferred jurisdiction.[12]

P. Determination of Questions of Jurisdiction — 1. IN GENERAL. The determination of questions of jurisdiction is primarily for the justice of the peace before whom the action or other proceeding is instituted,[13] and his decision, although reviewable,[14] is conclusive against collateral attack.[15] Where his lack of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of the record, it is the duty of the justice to refuse to entertain the action or proceeding;[16] but a mere affidavit or plea of title does not oust the jurisdiction;[17] and generally, if the defect or objection urged is for matters dehors the record, the justice may hear evidence for the purpose of determining whether he has jurisdiction to try and decide the cause on its merits.[18] The effect of a decision adverse to his jurisdiction is to deprive the justice of all further power over the cause, beyond rendering a judgment of dismissal or nonsuit, or in abatement,[19] or for costs,[20] unless he is required by statute to transfer it to the court or justice having jurisdiction.[21] On appeal the court may look to the justice's transcript, as well as plaintiff's statement, in determining the question of the justice's jurisdiction,[22] and if necessary it will call in the aid of affidavits to ascertain whether he has exceeded his jurisdiction.[23]

2. MODE AND SUFFICIENCY OF OBJECTIONS. When the lack of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record, it may be taken advantage of by a motion to dismiss,[24] but when it does not so appear, it must as a rule be taken advantage of by plea in abatement or answer, setting out the facts which show the want of jurisdiction.[25] In some states, however, a motion to dismiss is also available where the want of jurisdiction appears from the evidence.[26] A plea in abatement or an answer in an action before a justice of the peace alleging want of jurisdiction must distinctly state facts which if true necessarily divest the justice of jurisdiction;[27]

Q. Acts and Proceedings Without Jurisdiction. All acts and proceedings of a justice of the peace without or beyond his jurisdiction are coram non judice and void.[31]

IV. PROCEDURE IN CIVIL CASES.

A. In General [32] — 1. Mode of Procedure. In proceedings before a justice of the peace, matters of mere form are dispensed with,[33] and the same technicality is not required as in suits in a court of record.[34] The real object being to obtain substantial justice, great liberality is indulged with respect to these proceed-

Nebraska.— A defendant who appears specially in a case for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction over his person must specifically point out the defect which it is claimed prevents the court from acquiring jurisdiction. New York.— An answer alleging that defendants were "owners in fee" of the premises at the time of the trespass sued for is sufficient. Manfredi v. Wiederman, 14 Misc. 342, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 680.

A plea of title, although insufficiently set forth, is sufficient to take the cause from the justice. Riggs v. Woodruff, 2 Root (Conn.) 35.

A plea answering both counts of a declaration, only one of which is for a matter of which the justice has no jurisdiction, is bad. Rich v. Hogeboom, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 453.

Disclaimer after plea.— Although defendant gave the justice a paper stating that the place where the trespass was alleged was his freehold and soil, still if, on being asked by the justice on what ground he claimed the land, he said that he did not own it, the justice was not bound to consider that he claimed the ownership of the premises or of a right of way over them. Substantial accuracy is all that can be or will be required in proceedings before justices ings;[35] but so far as practicable the practice is made to conform to that in the higher courts.[36]

2. Form of Action. Common-law forms of action, in so far as justices' courts are concerned, are disregarded in most jurisdictions.[37] If a justice has jurisdiction, it is immaterial what form of action may be specified in the summons,[38] since the form or name of the action is whatever the evidence shows it to be.[39]

3. Joinder of Causes of Action. As a rule a plaintiff in an action before a justice of the peace may join as many causes of action as he may have,[40] save that a cause of action in contract cannot be joined with one in tort.[41] A misjoinder of causes of action is not of itself jurisdictional,[42] nor is it ground for demurrer, or a "defense" in the sense that it must be alleged in the answer,[43] and an action will not be dismissed for that reason.[44] The objection should be made at the time of pleading,[45] and plaintiff should be required to elect, before proceeding to trial, which cause he will prosecute.[46]

several actions against the same defendant,[47] unless consolidation is required by statute.[48] But on the other hand, where the record shows that witnesses were examined in each of several cases against the same defendant, and separate judgments were rendered in each, the fact that the justice tried them together is no ground for reversal.[49] Where several cases are consolidated, and the justice has jurisdiction of one of them only, his jurisdiction is restricted to that one, although they were consolidated on motion of defendant, who pleaded to and defended the consolidated suit.[50]

5. Commencement of Action or Other Proceeding. It is a settled rule that the cause of action must exist at the commencement of the suit.[51] The action is as a rule commenced at the issuance of process,[52] although in replevin it is commenced by filing the petition or complaint with the justice.[53]

6. Time For Taking Proceedings or Holding Court. In some of the states the time for holding justices' courts is regulated by statute.[54] Where a case is properly in court, it is competent for the justice to order it to stand open for trial for a reasonable time,[55] and in most of the states it is either provided by statute or sanctioned by usage that a case shall be held open for at least one hour after the time fixed for trial, to give the parties an opportunity to appear.[56] On the other hand, where a defendant has been served with summons to appear at a certain

dictions actions of tort should be brought where the tort was committed.[71] Non-residents found within the jurisdiction may be sued where found, if the justice otherwise has jurisdiction.[72]

2. Change of Venue — a. In General. Where a justice of the peace is interested[73] or prejudiced,[74] or is a material witness,[75] or near of kin to one of the parties,[76] or where there is no justice qualified to try the suit in the proper precinct,[77] the statutes provide that upon proper application by either party the justice shall grant him a change of venue to the next nearest justice qualified to hear the cause.[78] In New York, if the term of office of a justice is about to expire, or he is about to remove from the town or city, before judgment is rendered in an action, he must previously make a written order reciting the fact, and directing the action to be continued before another justice.[79] The right to a change of venue in actions before justices of the peace is strictissimi juris and dependent solely upon statutory authority;[80] and in granting or refusing to grant a change the justice acts ministerially,[81] although he has power to pass upon the sufficiency of the affidavit,[82] and exercises judicial discretion in determining to what justice he will send the cause.[83] A change of venue obtained by a gar-

An erroneous exercise of discretion, or an erroneous exercise of judgment as to the disqualification of other justices, will not de-nishee will not affect the jurisdiction of the justice in the principal case, as to which there is no change.[84]

b. Time of Application. An application for a change of venue should be made before the commencement of the trial,[85] and the change of venue may be granted before the return-day of the summons, where both parties appear.[86]

c. Procedure. A party desiring a change of venue must make an affidavit setting out the facts which entitle him to a change,[87] and pay costs.[88] The affidavit must be made by the party himself,[89] and where there are several joint parties all must join in the affidavit.[90] Defendant may set up a well founded objection disqualifying the nearest or any other justice in the county,[91] but plaintiff cannot show prejudice in the nearest justice in order to prevent defendant from procuring a change of venue.[92] When the proper affidavit is filed and the costs paid, it is the duty of the justice to transfer the papers in the cause to the nearest qualified justice, naming him,[93] and enter an order on his docket showing feat the jurisdiction of the one to whom the cause is sent. Reed v. Marple, 7 Kan. App. 170, 53 Pac. 674.

what he has done.[94] An order granting a change of venue, made on an ex parte hearing and before the return-day of the summons, is void;[95] but where, after change of venue, a party appears, and without objection participates in the trial, he waives all irregularities in securing the change.[96] Consent to a continuance after a plea of privilege to be sued in the county of one's residence is filed is not a waiver of the plea.[97]

d. Jurisdiction and Proceedings After Change. A change of venue divests the justice making the transfer of all further jurisdiction over the proceedings,[98] and invests the justice to whom the transfer is made with jurisdiction, which cannot be questioned by the party securing the change and appearing,[99] unless such justice is disqualified to act,[1] or the proceedings for removal are void,[2] or defendant has failed to comply with the conditions on which the change was granted.[3] After change of venue the justice to whom the cause is transferred must proceed to hear it in accordance with the terms of the order of transfer.[4] He may dismiss all proceedings had before the first justice if he was disqualified to act,[5] but he cannot set aside and reverse any order which such justice was qualified to make.[6]

e. Second or Subsequent Change. In some jurisdictions where the venue of an action has been once changed, a further change may be ordered for good cause shown,[7] and the fact that defendant has procured a change of venue will not preclude plaintiff from thereafter procuring another change.[8]

3. Removal of Cause to Court of Record — a. In General. N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2951, 2952, provides that an action must be discontinued where defendant files an affidavit showing that the title to land will come in question, and delivers to the justice an undertaking, with one or more sureties, "approved by the justice," conditioned that defendant will admit service in a new action brought by plaintiff in the proper court. See Kohlbrenner v. Elsheimer, 19 Hun 88; Barnard v. Clark, 33 Misc. 330, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 624; Harding v. Ellston, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 549; Wiggins v. Tallmadge, 7 How. Under Minn. Gen. St. (1894) § 4991, requiring justices to certify causes to the district court, where it appears from the evidence that the title to real estate is involved, the justice cannot certify the same until the title comes in issue, and the fact that the plead-

in replevin, the appraised value of the property exceeds the justice's jurisdiction,[13] and in certain other specified cases.[14] The manner prescribed by the statute in which a cause may be removed to a court of record must be complied with, in order to give the court jurisdiction,[15] and if the justice did not primarily have jurisdiction, his certification of the cause does not confer jurisdiction.[16] One of several defendants cannot defeat the right of his co-defendants to remove a case by certiorari on the ground of concurrent jurisdiction, by refusing to join in the application for the writ.[17]

b. Proceedings After Removal. Where a suit instituted before a justice of the peace is removed to a court of record, it becomes a case pending in that court as fully to all intents and purposes as if it had been originally instituted therein.[18]

ings show such issue is not material. Sorenson v. Torvestad, 94 Minn. 410, 103 N. W. 15, holding further that the improper certification of a cause to the district court by a justice ousts both courts of jurisdiction, and the only order the district court can make in such case is one of dismissal.

Where the action is held for trial by the justice, although the answer shows that the title to land is involved, and judgment is rendered, and defendant appeals, the district court has jurisdiction as though the case had been certified by the justice. But see Belding v. Sloan, 65 Ark. 175, 45 S. W. 245, to the effect that under the Arkansas act of 1875, page 123, section 22, the cause must be tried in the common pleas upon its merits, as though still in the justice's court, and that no set-off can be filed which was not filed or offered before the justice.

What sufficient to give jurisdiction.— The docket entry of a justice of the certificate and return to the district court of a cause, the pleadings showing that the title to land may be involved, and the cause otherwise

The defendant is estopped to deny the ground on which he obtained the removal,[19] or to insist that the justice had jurisdiction.[20] Such suits are, however, regarded as arising in the justice's court.[21] Where a justice has jurisdiction to hear and determine a case, and improperly certifies it to a court of record, that court acquires no jurisdiction, and should remand the case to the justice's court on motion.[22]

c. Amendments to Pleadings and Repleading. A plaintiff may new assign on the removal of an action brought before a justice of the peace to a court of record,[23] or he may so amend his declaration or complaint as to perfect it by making it more definite and certain.[24] Although the justice's jurisdiction is ousted by a plea of title before a reply is put in, the necessity for a reply when a new suit is instituted in a court of record is not thereby obviated.[25] In such an Extent of jurisdiction.— Where an action for less than three hundred dollars was before a justice, who decided that title to land was involved, and certified the pleadings to the district court, that court, having found against plaintiff on the two causes pleaded, had no jurisdiction to find for him on a cause not pleaded, in which the title to land was not involved, and which was exclusively within the justice's jurisdiction. Union Ditch Co. v. Leete, 24 Nev. 345, 54 Pac. 724.

When cause triable.— Under Mo. Rev. St. § 2931, an action of landlord's summons, certified to the circuit court on the ground that it involves title to land, is triable at the return-term. Anselm v. Groby, 26 Mo. App. 126.

Right to jury trial.— If a suit in a justice's court, in which defendant is entitled to the general issue, is certified to the probate court, the trial in the latter court should be by jury, although defendant fails to appear there. Owen v. Moore, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 79.

Change of venue.—Where defendant asks to have the cause transferred to the superior court of the county where he is sued, there is no authority, upon the transfer being made, to transfer the cause to another county for trial. Time of objection.—Where a cause is certified to the district court on the ground that title to land is involved, and it does not in fact so appear on the trial before the justice, the objection should be seasonably brought to the attention of the district court by an affidavit and motion for a further return, showing what the evidence on the question of title was; and in the absence of such motion the judgment of the district court will not be disturbed. action where defendant has interposed a special plea of title, which is not such as to form an issue between the parties, plaintiff may demur to such plea.[26] On the other hand, where a defendant has interposed a plea of title and caused the removal of the action to a court of record, he will be confined to such plea in that court,[27] unless plaintiff enlarges his demand beyond what he demanded before the justice.[28] Where the grounds of an attachment in the justice's court are put in issue by plea in abatement, and the case is transferred to the court of chancery for equitable relief, the plea is transferred to the chancery court, and it is not necessary to file a new plea there.[29] Where the pleadings vary from what they were before the justice, and the parties acquiesce in such variance, the cause will be treated as an original action in the court to which it was removed.[30]

C. Limitations of Actions.[31] The statute of limitations may be pleaded in a suit before a justice of the peace,[32] although it is not necessary that it should be, since it may be availed of under the general issue,[33] or by objecting to evidence introduced on the trial for the purpose of proving a claim barred by the statute.[34] So too limitations need not be pleaded where no formal pleadings are required.[35] An action is commenced before a justice, so as to stop the running of the statute, when process is issued with the intent that it shall be served.[36] The limitation applicable in a given case is determined by the limitation which would be applicable if the case were of such a character as to force the parties into a court of record.[37]

Scope of rule.— The rule that the answer of defendant must be the same that he made before the justice does not require him to use the identical words in his answer in the supreme court that he used in the justice's court, but only the same substantial defense; and he may abandon part of his defense before the justice when he comes to answer in the supreme court, and the defense will be the same within the meaning of the statute N. D. Parties — 1. In General. The general rules of law as to parties to actions[38] govern in actions brought before justices of the peace as in actions brought in courts of record.[39]

2. New Parties and Change of Parties.[40] As a general proposition a justice of the peace cannot permit an amendment which changes the parties to an action,[41] if the change of parties would have the effect to introduce a new cause of action, not contained in the original declaration or complaint.[42] He may, however, amend by striking out the name of a joint plaintiff,[43] but not, it seems, of a joint defendant.[44] Where suit is brought against one in his private and individual capacity, the justice may, before hearing, so amend as to show the action to be against defendant in a representative capacity.[45] A party sued before a justice of the peace may interplead adverse claimants.[46]

3. Defects and Objections, Amendment, Waiver, and Cure. Proceedings before a justice of the peace need not be formal, and where the pleadings offered will enable the justice to decide the case according to the right of the matter, mere formal defects as to parties will be disregarded,[47] or such defects may be cured by amendment.[48] The proper mode of taking objection for misnomer or other defect of parties is by plea in abatement,[49] motion,[50] or, in New York, by answer, where the defect does not appear on the face of the complaint.[51] A defect in a complaint as to the christian name of plaintiff will be cured by a written answer setting out the full names of all the parties;[52] and where no objection is made at the time to a change in the name of plaintiff in a suit before a justice, it is a waiver of the irregularity, and defendant cannot, after judgment, take advantage of it.[53] But a defendant, by consenting to a subsequent motion to amend a complaint, or by going to trial, does not waive an objection that the justice has restored as co-plaintiff in an action of tort one whose name he had previously stricken out.[54] Questions as to the description or misjoinder of the parties are concluded by the judgment.[55] actual notice of the pendency of the proceedings.[59] So too a defendant is entitled to notice of the time of hearing where a cause has been continued without day,[60] where it has been adjourned on an adjourned day in his absence and without his consent,[61] or where, in the absence of the justice, he has left the place of hearing after the expiration of an hour from the time set for hearing;[62] but neither party is entitled to notice when a case is suspended to give an opportunity for a settlement, which is attempted, but fails.[63] In some jurisdictions provision is made for both a "long" and a "short" summons. The former is the regular form of process,[64] and a "short summons" can only be issued where expressly authorized by statute,[65] or where defendant cannot be proceeded against by "long summons" or warrant.[66]

b. Issuance. The authority of a justice of the peace to issue a summons on the request of plaintiff is as ample as to issue a warrant or attachment on a special application and proof required by law.[67] Where a summons is not served, and the return-day passes, the justice has a right to treat the original summons as a nullity, and issue another.[68] So too if a summons regularly issued is returned unexecuted as to defendant or a part of the defendants, plaintiff may in some jurisdictions have a series of alias and pluries writs until personal service is secured.[69]

Time of issuance.— A justice need not wait an hour for the appearance of defendant served before issuing an alias summons. Brown v. Knop, 137 Mich. 234, 100 N. W. 466, 101 N. W. 227.

A "short summons," being an extraordinary process, can only issue on proper preliminary proof;[70] and similarly a justice should be satisfied by affidavit or otherwise of the necessity for so doing, before issuing a summons returnable forthwith,[71] or within a shorter time than is regularly required.[72] It is the duty of the constable to indicate by a memorandum the date when the summons from a justice was received by him for service;[73] but when this is omitted, evidence aliunde is admissible to show when the writ was in fact delivered to the constable.[74]

c. Requisites and Validity — (I) In General. The summons in an action commenced before a justice of the peace should follow the prescribed statutory form,[75] it should run in the name of the state,[76] be directed to the constable of the proper township or district,[77] or to a special constable by name;[78] and should contain the names of all the parties,[79] state the amount of plaintiff's demand,[80]

Where an alias is defective, the justice loses jurisdiction to render judgment against defendant served with the original writ by adjourning the case to the return-day of the defective writ, and never acquires jurisdiction to render judgment against defendant served with the alias. (II) Statement as to Nature, Form, and Cause of Action. In an action before a justice of the peace the cause of action must be stated in the summons with sufficient certainty to apprise defendant of the character of plaintiff's demand.[91] The summons must show a cause of action within the justice's

2. SERVICE — a. In General. Service of process issuing from a justice's court must be made the required statutory time before the time of appearance,[7] in computing which the day of service is to be excluded, but that of appearance included.[8] The mode of service is wholly dependent upon statute,[9] and if service be not made according to law a judgment based thereon will be reversed.[10] Under some statutes service may be had by producing the original summons to defendant and informing him of its contents,[11] while under others a copy of the summons must be left with defendant,[12] or with some adult member of his family see Kidder v. Prescott, 24 N. H. 263, holding that a writ signed by the justice's authority but not in his presence was invalid.

stated therein,[26] and may be impeached by defendant.[27] The justice cannot certify of his own knowledge as to the day when the summons was issued, but the fact must be proved by competent evidence.[28] So too the certificate of a justice on certiorari that he delivered the summons to a constable on a certain day does not show that he had legal evidence before him that the suit was commenced on that day.[29]

(II) Form and Requisites. The return of process issued from a justice's court must affirmatively show everything necessary to constitute a valid service, and must respond to the mandate of the writ.[30] It should be signed by the officer

Presumption as to service.— Where a summons showed a return, "Served by copy," and there was nothing to show that service by copy was not made in the manner prescribed by law, the presumption is that the service was so made, although the docket shows service by leaving the copy at defendant's place of business. who made the service,[31] must be free from ambiguity,[32] and in some jurisdictions must be made on oath or affirmation.[33] Where actual personal service is had, a return "personally served," and stating the time of service, is sufficient;[34] but in case of substituted or constructive service, the return should show the facts which authorize such service,[35] and that the statutory requirements as to the manner of service have been complied with.[36] The return of service of summons on a corporation must show the manner of service, so that it shall appear that personal service was had on the proper officer or agent,[37] naming him.[38] Where a summons is issued against several defendants, a return showing proper service on one is sufficient, without negative additions explaining why it was not served on the others.[39]

larities in process issued from a justice's court or in its service or return do not render the writ void, but voidable;[42] and defendant, in order to avail himself of them, must appear before the justice and there make objection.[43] Defects which go to the jurisdiction over the subject-matter cannot be cured,[44] but those which go only to the jurisdiction over the person are subject to waiver by the party.[45] Such waiver may be made by defendant's appearing[46] and obtaining a continuance,[47] by his objecting to the sufficiency of the declaration,[48] by his pleading to the merits and going to trial,[49] or by his taking an appeal from the justice's judgment.[50] Defects and irregularities may also be cured by a written acceptance of service;[51] and where the justice overrules a motion to dismiss for want of sufficient service, but continues the cause, the continuance gives defendant sufficient notice of the pendency of the suit, and he is bound to take notice of the subsequent action of the court therein,[52] and is not entitled, on appeal from a judgment by default, to have the case dismissed on renewal of his motion.[53]

general.[63] But the mere corporal presence of defendant or his agent at the time and place of trial is not sufficient to constitute an appearance;[64] and where defendant in a civil action is brought before the justice under warrant of arrest, he does not voluntarily appear to the action.[65]

b. Operation and Effect — (i) In General. A special appearance for the purpose of contesting the jurisdiction of the justice, and restricted to that purpose, does not give the justice jurisdiction over the person of defendant,[66] or authorize the consideration of any other questions.[67] But by a general appearance defendant waives all objections to the justice's jurisdiction over his person and no such question can be subsequently raised;[68] and where, after special appearance and the denial of a motion to dismiss on the ground that the justice had no jurisdiction, a defendant appears generally, without further objection or saving an exception, he thereby confers jurisdiction upon both the justice and the

But see Nelson v. Campbell, 1 Wash. 261, 24 Pac. 539, in which defendant appeared and asked for a continuance for one day, which was granted, and on the next day he appeared specially and objected to the jurisdiction, and it was held that his appearance had not conferred jurisdiction.

Where a justice had lost jurisdiction, but defendant, having been arrested and brought appellate court.[69] Where, however, the justice has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, a general appearance by defendant cannot confer jurisdiction upon him;[70] and the same is true where the justice is forbidden by law to act,[71] but not where he is merely disqualified by reason of interest[72] or relationship to one of the parties.[73] Where a cause is discontinued by reason of the absence of the justice, the appearance of the parties before another justice cannot confer jurisdiction upon him, unless it appears by the return that the first justice was absent from or unable to attend at his usual place of holding court.[74]

(II) Waiver of Defects — (A) In General. Where the justice has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, a general appearance by the parties without objection is a waiver of defects and irregularities in the proceedings;[75] but illegality in the justice's proceedings is not waived by special appearance to object to the jurisdiction, nor by answer and defense after the objection is overruled.[76]

(B) Objection to Jurisdiction Over Amount Involved. A justice of the peace does not acquire jurisdiction of an action, in which a greater sum is claimed than he has jurisdiction of, by defendant's making a general appearance.[77] But where an attachment is issued by a justice for an amount in excess of his jurisdiction, and defendant appears and makes a defense on the merits, the rest of the proceedings will be allowed to stand, although the attachment will be quashed.[78]

(C) Objection to Place of Bringing Suit. In some jurisdictions a defendant by appearing generally waives any objection to the place of bringing suit,[79] and the same is true where he appears specially to object to the jurisdiction on the

(E) Irregular Adjournments. Where a case is illegally or irregularly continued, an appearance by defendant at the time and place of trial for the purpose of protesting against such continuance is no waiver of the irregularity.[85] But, even though a justice has lost jurisdiction of a cause by irregularly continuing it, a subsequent general appearance waives the irregularity and reinstates the cause.[86] Where, however, objection is made in due time, but overruled, a defendant does not waive it by subsequently appearing and defending on the merits.[87]

c. Withdrawal, Striking Out, and Failure to Appear. A justice of the peace cannot render judgment based alone on defendant's failure to appear, but must proceed to hear plaintiff's proofs and determine the cause as though issue were joined.[88] On the other hand the non-appearance of plaintiff or his authorized agent in a suit on a specialty is no ground for reversing a judgment in his favor.[89] Where defendant withdraws his appearance, the justice is not ousted of jurisdic-

unauthorized attorney will not conclude his pretended principal.[96] In an action concerning the property of a married woman the justice may appoint a next friend.[97]

3. Arrest and Bail. In some jurisdictions the appearance of a defendant to an action may under prescribed circumstances be secured by warrant of arrest;[98] but to authorize such process the existence of the facts and circumstances under which it may issue must be shown by oath or affidavit.[99] To be sufficient the warrant should name the parties,[1] and state a cause of action within the justice's jurisdiction, both as to nature and amount of the demand;[2] and where it issues under a penal statute, the omission of a reference to the statute will be fatal, even after verdict.[3] The warrant should command the officer to take defendant and bring him forthwith before the justice,[4] and may be served by a special constable appointed for the purpose.[5] A seal is not required.[6] As in actions in courts of record, a defendant arrested on a warrant issued by a justice of the peace is entitled to be discharged on giving a sufficient bond,[7] and justices can issue scire facias on recognizances of special bail taken before them, and give judgment for execution.[8]

error of the justice in regard thereto is not cause for reversal, if the case was properly decided on the merits.[11] The grounds on which an attachment may be sued out are as a rule the same in a justice's court as in a court of record,[12] the most usual being that the debtor has departed or is about to depart from the state,[13] or from the county where he last resided, with intent to defraud his creditors or to avoid the service of any civil process, or that such debtor keeps himself concealed with like intent,[14] or that he is about to remove, assign, dispose of, or secrete any of his property (or has done so), with intent to defraud his creditors.[15] In some states a justice of the peace is not authorized to issue an attachment upon a claim before it is due.[16] In Minnesota an attachment may be issued in an action on contract in which the damages claimed are unliquidated.[17] In Pennsylvania attachment is an original process, and cannot issue, after a summons and judgment for the same debt, and an appeal therefrom.[18]

2. Property Subject to Attachment. Only goods and chattels, including money and bank-notes, are as a rule subject to attachment,[19] and where property has been levied upon by one constable it cannot be attached by another.[20]

levy as to authorize the seizure of property otherwise exempt, and the amendment will relate back to the date of the original levy;[31] and in Alabama a plaintiff who has sued out an attachment in a justice's court for a sum exceeding the jurisdiction of the justice should be permitted to amend by filing a new affidavit for a sum within the justice's jurisdiction.[32] Unless it is so required by the statute the affidavit need not be made before the justice who issues the attachment.[33]

4. Attachment Bond. The statutes generally require the execution of a bond by plaintiff as a prerequisite to the issuance of a writ of attachment,[34] but under some statutes no bond is required.[35] When a bond is required, it must be taken by the justice,[36] must be under seal,[37] must be entirely filled up when filed,[38] and must comply, substantially at least, with the statutory requirements as to its conditions and obligations.[39] But irregularities in the form of the condition or in the number of sureties will not avoid a judgment subsequently rendered;[40] and where the bond is taken by the justice as sufficient for the purpose for which it is given, his approval of the bond is sufficient as against third persons.[41] A justice of the peace has authority to allow an amended undertaking in attachment to be filed nunc pro tunc.[42]

Under Wyo. Rev. St. (1899) § 4478, where a writ of attachment in a civil action before a justice of the peace is issued at the commencement of the action, it is required to contain the substance of a summons, in which case no summons is necessary, but, if issued after the summons, the writ must be made returnable at the same time as the summons. The Alabama statute of 1836, requiring that process issued from the clerk's office of any court shall be ent person,[50] directing him to attach goods of defendant to satisfy the sum claimed, stating it;[51] must require defendant to answer plaintiff;[52] and must be made returnable at a specified time and place.[53] Generally the writ should be made returnable before the justice who issued it;[54] but may sometimes be made returnable before another justice or court.[55] Writs of attachment may be amended by leave of the justice.[56] In some jurisdictions the writ of attachment may be issued either before or after the commencement of the action,[57] while in others it can only be issued at or after the commencement of the action.[58]

6. LEVY. An attachment issued from a justice's court must be directed for service to the regular officer designated by statute, and the levy cannot be made or the summons served by a special officer appointed for the purpose.[59] In order that the justice may obtain jurisdiction, the attachment properly issued must be levied on the property of defendant in the mode prescribed by law.[60]

the dismissal of the suit or the abatement of the writ,[70] or by the creditor's taking judgment, by agreement with the debtor, on a day other than that set in his writ.[71] Where property is sold under a prior attachment, the lien of a subsequent attachment, levied by the same officer, on the same property, is transferred, by operation of law, to any surplus money in the hands of the officer.[72] If a writ is prematurely served, the officer acquires no right to the property attached as against a subsequent attachment, even though defendant made no objection to the seizure;[73] but in Massachusetts an attaching creditor in an action before a justice cannot, by petition, dispute the validity of a prior attachment in an action in a higher court.[74] A person having a claim bearing a privilege on property attached by another in a justice's court has a priority over the latter, which may be enforced by proper proceedings.[75]

9. Custody and Disposition of Property. The general rules of law as to the custody and disposition of attached property are as a rule applicable to attachment proceedings before justices of the peace.[76] The justice cannot order the delivery of the property attached to plaintiff,[77] but it may be delivered to defendant upon his executing a forthcoming bond conformable to the statutes;[78] and in case of perishable property the justice is authorized to order its sale.[79]

10. Proceedings to Support or Enforce — a. In General. In an attachment before a justice of the peace, where there is no personal service upon defendant, or levy upon his property and notice as required by law, the justice has no jurisdiction, and any judgment rendered is a nullity.[80] in attachment proceedings that defendant shall be served with notice, either personally,[83] or, where this is impossible, by substituted service.[84]

(II) Form and Requisites. A summons returnable in less than the time required by statute is defective.[85] A judgment, rendered on service by publication, is not subject to collateral attack because the citation of publication, otherwise sufficient, makes no mention of the attachment proceedings.[86] Where the original notice is returned "Not found," a defect therein will not affect the jurisdiction over the property.[87]

(III) Mode and Sufficiency of Service. Questions as to the mode and sufficiency of service on the attachment defendant are governed by the same principles that control the service of process in other proceedings.[88] Where the Service out of county.— In an action commenced by attaching personal property of defendant, who resides in another county, the summons may be served upon him personally in the county of his residence, and such service gives the justice jurisdiction to render judgment at least to the extent of the property attached. Flohrs v. Forsyth, 78 Minn. 87, 80 N. W. 852.

Effect of personal service where no property is seized.—Where, in an action brought in the county, but not in the township of defendant's residence, the summons is accompanied by an order of attachment, and is duly served, the justice obtains jurisdiction over defendant's person, and may proceed to judgment against him, although no property is seized or held under the attachment. Kelly v. Flanagan, 20 Ohio Cir. Ct. 391, 11 Ohio Cir. Dec. 111.

A return on an order of publication which does not show that the notice was posted at and for the required time is insufficient to give jurisdiction. McCloon v. Beattie, 46 Mo. 391.

A return of substituted service will not give the justice jurisdiction to proceed in attachment, if it does not appear that diligent attachment defendant is a corporation, service is usually had upon some officer or agent designated by statute.[89]

(IV) Effect of Failure to Give Notice. Failure to give the prescribed notice renders the proceedings erroneous;[90] and indeed the weight of authority is to the effect that a judgment rendered without the notice prescribed by law against a defendant who has not appeared is absolutely void and open to collateral attack.[91] But an attachment, regularly issued at the time of the issuance of the first summons, is not vitiated by failure to serve the first summons and the issuance of the second one.[92]

c. Appearance — (I) Right to Appear. In New Jersey it is absolutely necessary that defendant, in order to enter his appearance, file a bond to plaintiff.[93]

(II) Appearance to Contest Attachment. A special appearance for the purpose of contesting the attachment proceedings, and limited to that purpose, will not, in most jurisdictions, be deemed an appearance for all purposes;[94] but in others such an appearance is regarded as general.[95]

(III) Effect of General Appearance. When there is a general affirmance the justice acquires jurisdiction of the person, and want of service, or defects or irregularities therein, or in the return, are waived.[96] Where neither party actually appears, a written request by plaintiff to continue the case is sufficient to give the justice jurisdiction to grant the continuance.[97]

d. Pleadings. In some jurisdictions no declaration or complaint need be filed in an attachment suit in a justice's court;[98] while in others an attachment affidavit which contains the requisites of both an affidavit and a declaration or complaint will dispense with the necessity of filing the latter.[99] Where the defendant, in an action by attachment commenced before a justice of the peace, fails to file a plea in abatement, either before the justice or on appeal, it is a confession of the grounds alleged for the attachment.[1]

e. Time of Trial. Where the proceedings are regular, the justice must on their return proceed to hear the cause as on any other process.[2]

f. Judgment — (i) In General. Where no jurisdiction has been acquired over defendant's person, either by service of process or appearance, the judgment should be rendered only against the attached property;[3] although in some jurisdictions a judgment personal in form may be rendered, the operation of which, however, is limited to the property seized.[4] To authorize a judgment where there is no personal jurisdiction, it must be shown that all statutory requirements have been fully complied with.[5]

(ii) Amount of Recovery. The fact that a justice who has obtained no jurisdiction of defendant's person renders judgment for a larger sum than that demanded in the attachment affidavit will not render the judgment void,[6] although such a judgment is usually regarded as erroneous.[7]

(iii) Time of Entry. The statute sometimes requires the justice to enter judgment within a certain time after submission of the cause.[8] But it has been held that, although a statute requires that judgment be entered immediately after the close of the trial, it is permissible for the justice to take the case under advisement for a reasonable time.[9] In some jurisdictions it is not permissible to enter a default judgment against an attachment defendant who has not been personally served until a specified time after the execution of the writ.[10]

(iv) Setting Aside. A justice may set aside a judgment, void for want of service of summons, retain the custody of the attached property, issue a new summons in the action, and on due service thereof again proceed to judgment.[11]

(v) Death of Defendant. In Missouri it is the duty of a justice of the peace in case of the death of defendant pending an attachment suit to proceed to final judgment.[12]

Postponement pending another attachment. —In Missouri, where property which has been seized by attachment from a justice's court is likewise levied on by attachment from the circuit court, the statute authorizes the continuance of the cause to await the determination of the suit in the circuit court, and an irregularity of the justice in indefinitely postponing the case will not vitiate a judgment afterward rendered by him where no prejudice seems to have resulted. g. Execution. The justice has no right or power to issue a general execution, unless plaintiff gives notice as required by law, or unless defendant has given bond and security, or has appeared and made defense. Otherwise the justice can only issue execution against the property attached.[13]

11. Dissolution, Vacating, and Quashing — a. Grounds. Mere clerical[14] or nonprejudicial[15] errors and irregularities in the proceedings do not warrant the dissolution of an attachment; but where the defect is in matter of substance the attachment will be dissolved.[16] A justice may discharge an attachment made under his order, on the ground that the facts stated in the attachment affidavit are not true.[17] But an attachment should not be quashed for a variance between the affidavit for the attachment and the affidavit to the itemized account filed by plaintiff, where there is no variance between plaintiff's cause of action as entered on the docket and the affidavit for attachment.[18]

b. Proceedings — (i) Vacation by Justice Ex Mero Motu. It is within the power of the justice, and in New York it is his duty,[19] to discharge an attachment on his own motion, if he deems the papers on which it was granted insufficient to authorize it.[20]

(ii) Motion to Discharge. Reasonable notice of a motion to discharge an attachment should be given plaintiff by defendant.[21] Where the motion is based on evidence outside of the record it should be supported by affidavit;[22] and plaintiff may file counter-affidavits in opposition to the motion.[23] Where the averments of the affidavit for attachment are traversed by defendant's affidavit, the burden is on plaintiff to maintain the truth of his averments by other evidence, and where no such additional evidence is offered the attachment should be discharged.[24]

c. Effect. Where an attachment is merely ancillary to the main action, its dissolution does not affect the action, which may proceed to judgment, provided the justice has jurisdiction of both the person and the subject-matter.[25] But

Laws (1897), p. 113, § 2, requires that on the return-day of the summons, which shall not be more than ten days from its issuance, the justice shall continue the hearing twenty days, was properly denied, since the statute was intended for the benefit of defendant's creditors other than plaintiff, and a failure to comply with it could not prejudice defendant.

where the action is commenced by attachment, and the attachment is the basis of the jurisdiction, its dissolution will abate the main action.[26] The dissolution of an attachment destroys the lien on the property,[27] except where by statute the lien is preserved until an appeal can be taken.[28] Where an attachment is discharged, but judgment is rendered for plaintiff, who brings suit on the judgment and sues out a second attachment, the order discharging the first attachment does not conclude him as to any questions of fact, and he is entitled to a decision on the merits of a motion to discharge the second attachment.[29]

d. Ipso Facto Dissolution. An attachment is dissolved by the dismissal of the action,[30] a verdict[31] or a judgment[32] for defendant upon the merits, or an illegal exchange of justices by agreement of the parties.[33]

12. Claims of Third Persons[34]—a. Right to Intervene. The right of a claimant of attached property to intervene and assert his claim in the attachment proceedings is purely statutory, and consequently both the right to intervene and the mode of procedure are determined by the statutes in the particular jurisdiction.[35] Where intervention is provided for, any person claiming title to or interest in attached property may interpose his claim in the case.[36] Generally claimants must assert their rights to property seized under attachment issued by a justice of the peace before the trial of the main action.[37]

b. Forthcoming Bond. An intervener before a justice of the peace, claiming property attached, cannot, by giving a forthcoming bond, become repossessed of the property pending a determination of the intervention proceeding,[38] unless, as is sometimes the case, there is statutory provision therefor.[39]

St. pt. 3, tit. 4, § 31, to perfect his right to have the property restored to his possession, he must give a bond, as required

ticular jurisdiction.[40] An officer executing an attachment issued by a justice of the peace has no authority to impanel a jury to inquire into the right of property attached,[41] unless such authority is given him by the statute, and then only in accordance with the statute.[42]

(II) Jurisdiction. While it is the general rule that the right of property must be tried in a court which has jurisdiction of the amount at which the attached property is valued,[43] yet, where the amount originally sued for is within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, he will have jurisdiction, although the value of the property attached is in excess of his jurisdictional limit.[44] Where, however, the intervention proceedings are equitable in their nature, they are without the jurisdiction of a justice,[45] and in some states a bill in equity is provided for on interpleader in foreign attachment, and the court of equity is empowered to take entire jurisdiction of the matter pending at law.[46] In North Carolina an early statute provided for the removal of claim cases to the county court, where the intervention of a jury might become necessary to determine the right.[47]

(III) Judgment. In intervention proceedings there must be a valid judgment,[48] which must conform to the verdict,[49] and be in accordance with statutory requirements.[50]

See also Butler v. Wilson, 10 Ark. 313, where an action on a bond given by defendant in an attachment to procure a release of the property attached was defeated because the justice's transcript of the attachment suit did not show certain jurisdictional facts, as that plaintiff's cause of action was filed with the justice before the writ of attachment issued, or that a proper affidavit was filed, etc.

b. Discharge of Liability. An attachment bond is not discharged by the recovery of a judgment by the obligor before the justice, which is reversed on appeal.[54]

c. Enforcement of Liability — (I) Right to Sue. Where a forthcoming or claimant's bond is payable to plaintiff his right to sue is clear;[55] but where it is taken to the officer as obligee, plaintiff has no cause of action, either by motion or suit, until the bond is duly assigned to him,[56] except where, as the real party in interest, he is authorized by statute to sue in his own name.[57]

(II) Election of Remedies. Where a defendant was erroneously sued by long instead of short attachment, and plaintiff made default, it was held that defendant might either treat the process as void and recover damages in trespass, or waive the irregularity and sue on the attachment bond.[58]

(III) Evidence. In an action on a claim bond the attachment plaintiff need not show that the justice had jurisdiction to issue the attachment;[59] and where he is sued on his attachment bond, he may, under the plea of non est factum, prove in mitigation of damages that the property was sold by the constable, and a portion of it applied to the payment of an execution issued in another suit.[60]

(IV) Damages. Where a judgment in favor of the attachment plaintiff is reversed on appeal, the attachment defendant is entitled to recover, in an action upon the attachment bond, as part of his damages, the costs incurred by him in the higher court.[61]

14. Wrongful Attachment — a. Liability. An attachment before a justice of the peace which is merely irregular or voidable will protect the attachment plaintiff until set aside,[62] but after it is set aside it affords no protection;[63] and where an attachment is void, the attachment plaintiff is a trespasser ab initio and liable to defendant in damages, and there is no necessity that it be set aside before action is brought.[64]

b. Enforcement of Liability — (I) Pleadings — (A) Declaration, Petition, or Complaint. Where a final termination of the original action and attachment proceedings is essential to a cause of action for a wrongful attachment, the fact must be averred in the declaration, petition, or complaint;[65] and where an action is brought for wrongfully and vexatiously suing out an attachment before a justice in a foreign state, the declaration must show that the justice had authority by the laws of such state to issue attachments, and must contain averments connecting defendant with the levy.[66]

(B) Plea of Justification. Facts on which jurisdiction depends must be set forth in a plea of justification under an attachment, where it is necessary to show jurisdiction. General averments that the party complied with the statute and that the proceedings were according to its requirements will not answer.[67]

(II) Defenses. An attachment issued by a justice having jurisdiction, the recitals of which, and of the attachment bond, authorize the process, is a good justification in an action of trespass against plaintiff therein, nothing appearing upon the face of the proceedings or from the proof to invalidate it, although it appears that the attachment was issued and executed without cause, and was afterward discontinued, and the property restored.[68]

(III) EVIDENCE. Questions as to the burden of proof and the admissibility and weight and sufficiency of evidence in actions for wrongful attachment will be found exhaustively treated in another portion of this work.[69]

(IV) DAMAGES. Where an attachment is wrongfully sued out, but no actual damages have resulted, the attachment defendant is only entitled to nominal damages.[70]

H. Garnishment[71] — 1. WHEN PROCESS MAY ISSUE. The process of garnishment in aid of an attachment or execution can only issue by a justice of the peace in such cases as are provided for by statute;[72] but generally speaking garnishment proceedings may be maintained in all cases where an ordinary suit at law would lie against the garnishee in favor of the attachment or judgment debtor.[73] It is necessary, in some states, to the validity of such proceedings that a valid attachment shall have been issued,[74] or that a valid judgment shall have been rendered,[75] and an authorized execution issued and returned unsatisfied.[76] But in Pennsylvania, where the judgment exceeds one hundred dollars, an attachment execution, as garnishment is called in that state, may issue without a return of nulla bona previously made.[77]

2. WHO MAY BE GARNISHED.[78] The statutes of most of the states provide comprehensively that any person indebted to or having in his possession or under his control property, money, or effects of the principal debtor is subject to garnishment.[79]

3. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO GARNISHMENT.[80] The garnishment statutes are as a rule limited in their operations to debts due from the garnishee to the principal debtor, and to personal property in the possession, or under control, of the garnishee, which may be seized and sold under execution.[81]

4. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE — a. Affidavit.[82] In some jurisdictions the creditor must, as a prerequisite to the issuance of a summons in garnishment, file an affidavit, stating the facts which under the statutes entitle him to the process.[83] The affidavit must substantially conform to the statute, or the justice will acquire no jurisdiction;[84] and, where the garnishment is issued in aid of an execution, it must show the judgment on which the proceedings are based, the amount thereof, and execution issued thereon and returned unsatisfied.[85]

b. Writ or Summons.[86] In order that a justice of the peace may obtain jurisdiction in garnishment proceedings, the garnishee must be summoned to appear and answer at the time and place fixed by law.[87] The writ or summons must conform to the statutory requirements,[88] must be issued by the justice having juris-

Where a statute requires written notice, a verbal notice to appear and answer is insufficient. Thus where it appeared that the officer read the execution to the garnishee's agent, and verbally told him to appear and diction of the original suit,[89] and must be directed to, and served by, the officer or officers authorized by law to serve it.[90] A valid service of the process is essential to the justice's jurisdiction.[91]

c. Notice. Where so required by statute, notice must be served upon the principal defendant, either personally or by publication;[92] and such notice must comply with the requirements of the statute,[93] and the record of the justice must show such compliance.[94] When service on the defendant in an attachment execution is dispensed with when he resides out of the county, or service cannot be made, these facts must be shown in the return, in order to warrant a judgment by default.[95]

d. Appearance.[96] By appearing and answering a garnishee waives defects and irregularities in the proceedings against himself;[97] but he cannot waive objections to defects in the proceedings against the principal defendant,[98] or any of the statutory requirements essential to the justice's jurisdiction over the subject-matter.[99] The principal defendant may appear in the garnishment proceedings for the purpose of contesting the jurisdiction without submitting himself generally to the jurisdiction of the justice.[1]

5. Lien of Garnishment and Liability of Garnishee.[2] A debt due from another is as much property, and as effectually attached, when the person owing it has been summoned as a garnishee, as is any visible property upon which an attachment may have been levied;[3] but the garnishee's liability is limited to debts or property for which he would otherwise be liable to the principal defendant,[4] and judgment against him should only be for the amount of such defendant's liability to the plaintiff.[5]

6. Custody and Disposition of Property. Under some statutes, the property must be seized by the officer, or a forthcoming bond must be taken from the garnishee, and an order by the justice that the garnishee shall retain possession of the property until the final disposition of the case gives the justice no jurisdiction to render judgment against a non-resident defendant.[6]

7. Proceedings to Support or Enforce[7] — a. In General. Proceedings to support or enforce garnishment are in the nature of an original action.[8] When properly summoned the garnishee must appear in person and make a written disclosure,[9] or submit to an oral examination.[10] To warrant a judgment the disclosure must be explicit in its admissions;[11] but if the facts disclosed clearly show an indebtedness to the principal defendant which is subject to garnishment, judgment should go against the garnishee, although he denies such indebtedness.[12] In such proceedings the garnishee is entitled to interpose any set-off or defense he

"The proper proceeding, after a garnishee has either failed to answer, or answered unsatisfactorily, is for the plaintiff to file his complaint, and upon that to cause summons to be issued on the garnishee, and thus institute a regular suit against him, on the basis of the judgment against the defendant in the original suit and the allegations and interrogatories of the plaintiff and the garnishee's answer thereto." may have;[13] but he is not required to question the jurisdictional legality or the regularity of the proceedings as to the principal defendant, where the latter is personally present in court,[14] and he cannot contest the validity of the judgment or execution upon which the garnishment proceedings are based.[15] The principal defendant may also defend the garnishment proceedings, on the ground that the indebtedness of the garnishee to him is not liable to attachment.[16] Whether or not costs will be allowed to garnishees is wholly dependent upon the statutes.[17]

b. Judgment Against Garnishee[18] — (i) In General. A judgment against the principal defendant is as a rule prerequisite to a judgment against the garnishee, and that there is such a judgment must be shown by the record.[19] But the reverse is true where an action has been commenced against a non-resident, based on an attachment against a garnishee, in which case judgment cannot be rendered against defendant by default, until after judgment against the garnishee.[20] The judgment against the garnishee should be rendered on return-day, unless there is a regular adjournment;[21] but the justice's failure to enter an adjournment of the garnishment proceedings in his docket will not affect a judgment subsequently rendered.[22] In some jurisdictions no judgment can be rendered against a garnishee;[23] and where this is the case an order of the justice that the garnishee shall pay money into court is not a final determination of plaintiff's right to the money, but is in effect merely an assignment of the claim from the debtor to the creditor.[24]

19. The true rule is that, in a garnishment proceeding under an attachment or summons, the record in such proceeding and in the principal suit are to be read together; and it is sufficient if the whole record shows that a judgment has been rendered against the principal defendant. (II) Form and Contents of Judgment. The judgment against the garnishee should state for what reason it is entered — whether for neglect or refusal to answer, in default of appearance, upon answer, or upon a verdict; and in all but the first case judgment should be entered specially.[25] Where the justice finds that the garnishee has property of defendant subject to be delivered at a future time, the judgment should first direct a delivery to the court at such time for plaintiff's benefit, and on the garnishee's failure so to deliver it judgment should go against him for its value.[26] So too money absolutely and unconditionally due from the garnishee to defendant may be ordered to be paid into court.[27]

(III) Amount of Judgment. In Minnesota a judgment cannot be rendered against a garnishee for less than ten dollars.[28]

(IV) Judgment by Default.[29] Judgment by default may be rendered against a garnishee who fails to answer.[30] In some jurisdictions, however, the default judgment is only conditional, and before final judgment scire facias must issue commanding the garnishee to appear on the return-day of the writ, and show cause why the conditional judgment should not be made final and conclusive;[31] while in those jurisdictions in which no judgment can be given against a garnishee, his default renders him liable to satisfy the judgment that plaintiff may recover, to be recovered by action.[32] A justice of the peace may set aside a judgment by default and grant a new trial in a garnishment proceeding as in other cases;[33] but a garnishee cannot defeat such a judgment, rendered after judgment against the principal defendant, by entering an appeal to a jury, and then filing an answer denying indebtedness.[34]

(V) Judgment Upon Answer. Unless the answer of a garnishee is traversed or denied, the judgment must depend upon its legal import.[35] Although one answer might authorize more than one judgment, it would be irregular, if not erroneous, to render but one judgment on two or more executions returned nulla bona, notwithstanding they might be at the instance of the same plaintiff against the same defendant.[36]

(VI) Reopening Judgment. After entry of judgment against the garnishee, the justice cannot, either of his own motion or by agreement of the parties, reopen the case, and adjourn the action to a future day.[37]

(VII) Enforcement of Judgment. Personal property delivered into court by a garnishee, under the order of a justice of the peace, must be sold in the township where the notice was served upon the garnishee, as the property is constructively seized where the notice is served.[38]

(VIII) INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.[39] A court of equity will enjoin the enforcement of a judgment against a garnishee where it is void,[40] or where it would be against good conscience to execute it, and the garnishee has not been guilty of laches, but has been deprived of his rights through some fraud or accident.[41]

(IX) FORCE AND EFFECT OF JUDGMENT. A judgment of a justice of the peace against a garnishee in a case within his jurisdiction, although erroneous, cannot be avoided collaterally, but may be enforced until reversed.[42] Such a judgment, however, is not res judicata or binding on the principal defendant, except as to the property or money which the garnishee has been compelled to deliver up;[43] and even as to such property or money the garnishee will not be protected, if he has wilfully or negligently suffered judgment without making known any exemption rights which the principal defendant may have had.[44] Where the garnishment proceedings are void, a judgment against the garnishee cannot have the effect to release him from liability to defendant.[45]

8. DISSOLUTION AND DISCHARGE[46] — a. In General. A garnishee will be discharged where no liability subject to be garnished is shown,[47] where plaintiff fails to recover judgment against defendant,[48] or where a final judgment has been rendered against himself.[49]

b. Effect of Payment. The statutes of some states provide that a garnishee may exonerate himself from liability by paying over to the justice or constable the money due from him to the principal debtor;[50] and generally a payment bona fide made by a garnishee will protect him, although the proceedings are irregular or erroneous, if they are not void.[51] Where payment is pleaded as a defense, the answer must show that the demand set forth in the complaint and that passed on in the garnishment proceeding were identical.[52]

9. CLAIMS OF THIRD PERSONS.[53] The rights of third persons in the property or money attached in garnishment proceedings are usually protected by the statutes.[54] An appeal will lie from the decision of a justice of the peace on an

49. interplea,[55] and where a claimant goes to trial on plaintiff's traverse of the garnishee's answer, and then sues out a certiorari to review the justice's decision, he waives any formal objections to the traverse.[56] In such proceedings the burden is on the claimant to establish his claim.[57] The claimant of a fund brought into court by a summons of garnishment issued on a judgment which is not void, but merely voidable, cannot question the validity of the judgment, when it is acquiesced in by the party against whom it was rendered.[58]

10. Liabilities on Bonds and Undertakings. Where a bond is given to discharge garnishment proceedings, and is conditioned to pay any judgment which may be rendered against the garnishee on final hearing, it will bind the obligors to pay any final judgment rendered against him on appeal;[59] and where sureties have voluntarily given a bond in consideration of the discharge of a garnishee or trustee, they cannot object that the justice who took the bond and discharged the garnishee or trustee had lost jurisdiction of the action by reason of the pendency of an appeal.[60]

I. Pleading[61] — 1. In General. While pleadings are essential to the formation of the issues to be tried,[62] no formal pleadings are necessary, and technical rules will not be enforced in suits before justices of the peace.[63] In some states viding for interpleas where money, effects, or credits are attached, is applicable to garnishment proceedings commenced before a justice of the peace. Clark v. Wiss, 34 Kan. 553, 9 Pac. 281.

In Michigan Comp. Laws (1897), § 1017, provides that proceedings in garnishment shall be adjourned for not less than ten nor more than thirty days after the return-day of the summons, for the purpose of giving notice to claimants. An adjournment for more than thirty days divests the justice of jurisdiction. Hagen v. Johnson, 126 Mich. 695, 86 N. W. 143. Under 3 Howell Annot. "The only pleadings in a justice's court are: 1. The plaintiff's complaint. 2. The defendant's answer. 3. The defendant's de-

the pleadings may be oral,[64] but in such case there must be an entry by the justice on his docket showing the substance of the pleading.[65] But whether oral or written, the pleadings in justices' courts will be treated with great liberality,[66] the only distinction between the two modes being that written pleadings are treated with somewhat more strictness than oral.[67]

designed to reach must be taken advantage of by motion.[88] Pleas or motions in abatement and dilatory defenses must be entered or made at the earliest opportunity.[89]

c. Set-Off and Counter-Claim. In most jurisdictions a set-off or counter-claim, to be available to defendant in an action before a justice of the peace, must be pleaded, and the plea, whether verbal or written, must show the nature of the set-off or counter-claim relied on.[90]

4. Reply. No reply is necessary in an action in a justice's court.[91]

5. Demurrer or Motion, Amendments, and Pleas Puis Darrein Continuance — a. Demurrer or Motion. In some jurisdictions there is no demurrer to a defective complaint or bill of particulars, the remedy being by motion to dismiss, strike out, or make more definite.[92] In other jurisdictions, however, where a pleading is not sufficiently explicit to be understood, or where it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or counter-claim, the proper mode of raising the objection is by demurrer;[93] and in Michigan an objection to a complaint for want of fulness can only be made by demurrer where the complaint states a sufficient cause of action and defendant has not been misled.[94] The filing of a demurrer to a verified complaint is not an admission of service of the complaint, where the demurrer is not signed by defendant, but by his attorney;[95] and generally, where defendant's demurrer to a verified complaint is overruled, the justice cannot enter judgment for plaintiff without further proof of his claim.[96]

Amendment taking away right of appeal.— A justice may allow an amendment to a complaint by reducing the amount of damages claimed below the amount necessary to give a right to a new trial in the county court. Jaycox v. Pinney, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 344.

An adjournment taken by consent, because of the allowance of an amendment after a witness is sworn, is not within Wis. Rev. St. § 3626, subd. 11, providing that no amendment shall be allowed after a witness is sworn when an adjournment will be thereby made necessary, and will not oust the justice of jurisdiction. State v. Daubner, 111 Wis. 671, 87 N. W. 802.

Construction.—Where, in trover, defendant denied the complaint, and afterward filed an amended answer setting up matters of justification, but containing no denial, it was held that, since defendant evidently intended the amended answer to be in addition to the denial, it would be so considered, and all

ment.[98] While the allowance of amendments is said to be within the discretion of the justice,[99] a sound judicial discretion is meant, and it is error to refuse to allow an amendment in a proper case.[1] Where a demurrer to a judgment is sustained, it is the duty of the justice to order the pleading to be amended, and he cannot pronounce judgment on the demurrer without such order.[2]

(II) Bringing Cause Within Justice's Jurisdiction. A justice of the peace may permit a plaintiff to amend his pleading so as to bring the cause within the jurisdiction of the court.[3] Such an amendment is in effect the institution of a new suit.[4]

(III) New or Different Cause of Action. A justice of the peace has no power to allow an amendment which introduces a new or different cause of action.[5] But an amendment which merely changes the form of action, as from tort to contract, is not open to this objection;[6] and where a statute provides for the joinder in one action of as many causes of action as plaintiff may have, he may amend by setting up additional causes of action.[7]

(IV) Notice. Under the rule that, when a party is summoned, or enters his appearance, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, he must take notice of all proceedings in the cause, no formal notice of the filing of an amended statement need be given defendant.[8]

c. Pleas Puis Darrein Continuance. A plea puis darrein continuance may be received in a justice's court,[9] and such a plea in abatement is the proper if not the only effectual mode of taking advantage of an agreement to submit the cause to arbitration, made after issue joined.[10]

6. Signature and Verification. Except in the case of pleas denying the execution of the instrument on which suit is brought,[11] or in case of a plea or answer to a verified declaration or complaint,[12] pleadings before justices of the peace need not as a rule be signed[13] or verified.[14] Where, however, a pleading is required to be signed and verified, it may be done by the party's agent,[15] and a pleading will be considered sufficiently verified, if the justice's certificate states that it has been sworn to before him.[16] A verification to the effect that the affiant believes the pleading to be true is sufficient;[17] and since a justice is not required to use a seal in proceedings before himself a pleading is not rendered insufficient by reason of the absence of a seal from the jurat.[18] A justice may allow a pleading to be verified by way of amendment after it has been filed.[19]

7. Filing Bill of Particulars or Written Instrument — a. Bill of Particulars. In many jurisdictions the plaintiff in an action before a justice of the peace is required to furnish a bill of particulars setting out his cause of action. Technical precision is not required in the statement of the cause of action in a bill of particulars, but the most liberal construction will be given it, and if it is sufficient to apprise defendant of the claim against him it will be upheld.[20] The defendant, however, need not give a bill of particulars of his set-off or counter-claim,[21] unless required to do so by plaintiff.[22] In some states a justice may order a party to give a bill of particulars, and if he refuses to give one when so ordered he is precluded from giving evidence as to the subject in regard to which it was demanded;[23] but where a complaint sufficiently informs defendant of the cause of action, and it does not appear that a refusal to require plaintiff to file a bill of particulars in any manner injured defendant, such a refusal does not constitute error.[24]

b. Filing Written Instrument.[25] In some jurisdictions the instrument or account upon which the action is founded must be filed with the justice before or at the time of the issuance of the summons as a condition to his jurisdiction.[26] The lodgment of the instrument with the justice, although it is not marked filed by him, is a sufficient filing of the same within the meaning of the statutes to confer jurisdiction over the subject-matter;[27] and the mere temporary withdrawal of the instrument by plaintiff will not deprive the justice of the jurisdiction which has already attached.[28]

8. ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE — a. Matters to Be Proved. On the trial of an action before a justice of the peace, the general issue need not be formally pleaded,[29] and defendant has a right to insist upon the proof of every material fact necessary to plaintiff's recovery.[30] But unless denied plaintiff need not prove the character in which he sues,[31] nor need a plaintiff firm prove the partnership and the names of the partners,[32] or a corporation plaintiff its corporate existence.[33] So too plaintiff is not required to prove the execution, indorsement, or assignment of the instrument sued on, unless it is denied on oath,[34] nor need he prove the correctness of a verified account which is not met by a bill of particulars or verified denial;[35] nor, "in the first instance," that defendants sued jointly are jointly liable, where they fail to deny their joint liability by affidavit.[36] Where a defendant pleads a set-off, he admits plaintiff's demand,[37] and where he pleads payment he admits the making and performance of the contract sued on.[38] All new matter in the plea or answer is presumed to be denied,[39] except in cases where a set-off or counter-claim is interposed.[40]

b. Evidence Admissible Under Pleadings and Without Plea — (I) IN GENERAL. Since plaintiff's pleading need do no more than apprise defendant of the nature of the claim against him and set out enough facts to bar another suit for the same cause of action,[41] plaintiff is entitled, where his pleading meets these requirements, to prove all the facts necessary to a recovery, even though not pleaded.[42] A

Rhode Island.— Carroll v. Rigney, 15 R. I. 81, 23 Atl. 46, holding that a tenant sued in trespass for damages to the premises may, under the general issue, controvert his land-give notice of special matter to be proved;[46] while in others he must deny under oath the execution or assignment of the instrument in suit[47] or the correctness of a verified account.[48] Where defendant desires to prove the pendency of another suit before another justice for the same cause of action,[49] or relies upon a former trial and judgment,[50] he must plead specially or give notice at the time of joining issue. So too in actions of trespass, unless defendant files a plea of title and has the cause removed to a court of record, he cannot justify by showing legal title in himself or a third person, under whose authority he claims to have acted.[51]

(III) SET-OFF OR COUNTER-CLAIM. As a rule in a suit before a justice of the peace defendant cannot prove a set-off or counter-claim unless he has pleaded it.[52] The set-off may be pleaded or notice thereof given in general terms, unless plaintiff requires a specification of its nature,[53] or unless, where it is based upon a written instrument, plaintiff requests its exhibition.[54] Where defendant in his answer alleges a set-off, and no reply is interposed, evidence to contradict the set-off is inadmissible.[55]

Right to contest validity of instrument.— Under Mich. Comp. Laws (1897), §§ 767, 826, 828, defendant in an action on a stock-subscription agreement is not entitled to prove that his signature was conditional on his right to withdraw if he desired, and that he elected to do so, unless he has given notice under oath of his intention to deny the validity of the agreement. pleading may be cured by the allegations and admissions in defendant's,[63] and as a rule defects and irregularities in the pleading of either party are cured by verdict[64] or judgment,[65] and are also curable by stipulation.[66] Where the cause of action is insufficiently stated, plaintiff may be compelled to make it more specific,[67] and where two causes of action are alleged, the one sufficiently, the other defectively, the justice may proceed to judgment on the one sufficiently stated.[68]

J. Stipulations. The parties to an action in a justice's court may be bound by stipulations as to the course and conduct of the trial to the same extent and with the same effect as parties to actions in courts of record.[69] not an arbitrator with power to divide damages in doubtful cases, but is bound to decide according to the weight of the evidence;[73] and he cannot act on his own knowledge of a fact as evidence in the case before him.[74]

b. Burden of Proof. As in other courts the burden of proof is upon the party having the affirmative of the issue;[75] and in an action on a promissory note the filing of a plea of want of consideration, verified by affidavit, does not shift the burden of proof from defendant to plaintiff.[76]

c. Admissibility. The general rules of law governing the admissibility of evidence apply to actions before justices of the peace.[77] In actions of trespass, however, no evidence is admissible involving the question of title,[78] unless it is introduced, not to show title, but to explain testimony.[79] In some jurisdictions it is provided that where the instrument in suit is filed with the justice, it shall be received in evidence without proof of its execution, unless its execution has been denied under oath;[80] but that it may be so received such filing is necessary.[81] Where a defendant desires to introduce a set-off as a defense merely, he may do so, although it exceeds in amount the justice's jurisdictional limit.[82]

d. Sufficiency. While the rules of pleading as applied to justices' courts are extremely liberal, a cause of action must be as fully proved in those courts as in any other.[83]

2. Witnesses[84] — a. In General. A justice of the peace may compel the attendance of witnesses by subpœna,[85] and where a witness who has been duly summoned refuses to appear or to testify, he is not only liable to be punished by the justice for contempt,[86] but may be sued civilly by the party injured.[87] On the other hand the party calling a witness and not the justice is responsible for his fees.[88] The rules as to the examination and cross-examination of witnesses in justices' courts are the same as in courts of record.[89]

Georgia.— Plaintiff is allowed to prove his account, not exceeding a fixed amount, upon written oath that he has no other evidence (Shirley v. Price, 30 Ga. 328), and an account which exceeds the limit may be brought within the statute by payments (Nichols v. McAbee, 30 Ga. 8).

Illinois.— Plaintiff may testify upon making affidavit that he has a claim or demand against defendant, and that he has no witness or other legal testimony to support it (Lee v. Quirk, 20 Ill. 392); and a party may avail himself of the oath of the adverse party, and, in case he refuses to be sworn, or being sworn, refuses to testify, the party calling him may be sworn as a witness in his own behalf. If the adverse party elects to become a witness, he must testify fairly and fully, so far as he may be questioned. If he does not so testify, the court may properly hold this to be a refusal to testify, and allow the party calling him to become a witness (Pickering v. Misner, 11 Ill. 597). See also Carver v. Crocker, 2 Ill. 265. And see Arnold v. Johnson, 2 Ill. 196, to the effect that the assignor of a note is not the adverse party within the statute.

Indiana.— Under Rev. Code (1831), p. 304, in all trials in actions of debt or assumpsit, it was lawful for plaintiff, if defendant denied the debt, to require him to answer on oath to such charge; and whenever defendant alleged matter of payment or set-off, or any other plea in defense or bar, he might in like manner require plaintiff to answer on oath; and on refusal of either party to answer, the justice might enter judgment as confessed. Sherry v. Martin, 5 Blackf. 156; Hubble v. Hubble, 3 Blackf. 205.

Michigan.— Where defendant admitted the debts charged against him on plaintiff's books, plaintiff could be sworn as a witness to prove his account, under Rev. St. c. 93, § 5, providing that where, in an action on a book-account, a party should make oath that there was no disinterested witness who knew the facts, he might produce in court the book containing the account, and be examined in relation thereto. Morse v. Congdon, 3 Mich. 549.

Missouri.— Rev. St. (1835) p. 361, allowed a party to call upon the adverse party to testify, and in case of his refusal to give his own testimony. Under this statute he was required to call on all the adverse parties, and his testimony was available against those who refused to testify. Grigg v. Bodrio, 9 Mo. 223. But one defendant on a joint and several contract could not be allowed to testify against his co-defendants without their consent (Levy v. Hawley, 8 Mo. 510); and a defendant so called was not entitled to testify as to a set-off (Musick v. Musick, 7 Mo. 495).

New York.— The general statute (Code, § 399, cl. 3), requiring ten days' notice of the intended examination of an assignor of a chose in action to be given the adverse party, applies to justices' courts. North Carolina.— Where an account is reduced by credits in order to bring it within the justice's jurisdiction, plaintiff cannot prove it under the book debt law, by his own oath, since under that law he has to swear that the account sued on contains a true account of all the dealings. Waldo v. Jolly, 49 N. C. 173.

South Carolina.— The act of 1747 (Pub. Laws, p. 214) authorized a justice to swear the parties, and if defendant did not offer to deny the debt on oath, the oath of plaintiff was sufficient to prove it. Cohen v. Saddler, 2 McCord 239.

Texas.— Where plaintiff swore that he knew of no one but A by whom he could prove his account, and it appeared by the unsworn statement of the sheriff that A was then and almost always too drunk to get to the court-house, it was held that plaintiff had not established his right under the statute to prove his account. 3. Affidavits[92] and Depositions.[93] An affidavit taken before one justice cannot be read to prove a notice in a cause pending before another justice;[94] and where, on an application by defendant for a continuance, plaintiff, a non-resident, asks that his deposition and that of one of his witnesses be taken, the justice cannot, on the subsequent trial, consider such depositions, unless they are offered in evidence.[95] In Iowa a justice of the peace is empowered, on the application of a person desirous of obtaining the affidavit of another, to require the appearance of the latter before him by subpœna, and may commit him for contempt if he refuses to appear or to answer.[96]

L. Dismissal and Nonsuit[97] — 1. Voluntary. The plaintiff in an action before a justice of the peace has the right to discontinue his case as to any or all of the defendants at any time before verdict or judgment,[98] provided the adverse party will not be injured thereby.[99]

2. Involuntary — a. Power to Dismiss or Nonsuit. A justice of the peace has no power to enter a judgment of dismissal or nonsuit after issue joined and trial on the merits,[1] or even after evidence has been given on the part of plaintiff pertinent to the issue.[2] In some states a justice cannot render a judgment of nonsuit against a plaintiff who has appeared, without his consent;[3] and in Georgia the presiding justice has no power to grant a nonsuit, on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, where an appealed case is on trial before a jury.[4]

b. Grounds. The most usual ground for an involuntary dismissal or nonsuit is plaintiff's failure to appear and prosecute his action.[5] A judgment of dismissal or nonsuit may also be entered for want of valid service of process;[6] or where the action is brought in the wrong county,[7] where it appears that the right of action is not in the plaintiff,[8] where defendant has a constitutional right to and demands a jury,[9] or where it is shown by affidavit that the justice before whom the action is brought is a necessary and material witness for defendant.[10] On the other hand it has been held no ground for dismissal or nonsuit that the title to land is involved;[11] that plaintiff has been nonsuited in a former suit, or that the costs in such suit are unpaid;[12] that the venire is not returned at the time appointed for trial;[13] that the justice, thinking himself disqualified, called on a justice to try the cause who was without jurisdiction;[14] that the suit is not seasonably entered;[15] that there is a non-joinder of parties;[16] or that a complaint to recover possession of a mining claim improperly contains an allegation of an injury done and a prayer for damages.[17] because of the absence of plaintiff at the time of hearing should be made at that time,[18] and a motion to dismiss because of defects in the writ must be made on the return-day.[19]

(II) Sufficiency of Motion. A motion to dismiss must point out the defect for which a dismissal is asked,[20] and must not involve the merits of the case.[21]

(III) Evidence. On motion to dismiss on the ground that the summons was issued in blank, it is error to exclude the testimony of the managing clerk of plaintiff's attorneys that before bringing the action they received such a summons from the justice.[22]

d. Effect. Proving an account in a justice's court, previous to a nonsuit, will not dispense with proof of the same account in a subsequent action founded on it in the same court.[23]

e. Reinstatement. A justice may, after announcing the dismissal of a case, but before the entry of the order, reinstate it;[24] but he has no power to do so after entering an order of dismissal.[25]

M. Continuance and Adjournment[26]— 1. In General. The whole subject of continuances and adjournments in civil cases before justices of the peace is regulated by statute, and it has been held that unless authority is so given a justice has no jurisdiction to grant a continuance.[27] In some states a justice is authorized to continue a case of his own motion, where his own convenience or the exigencies of the case require it;[28] but such a continuance must be to a day certain, not exceeding the period fixed by statute.[29] A statement made by a magistrate, when not actually presiding in court, as to whether or not a given case will be called that day is not such a judicial act on his part as to justify the person asking the question in shaping his conduct upon the answer, and if he relies upon it he must take the consequences.[30]

2. Right to Continuance and Discretion of Court. The continuance of a case is usually a matter within the discretion of the justice;[31] but this discretion is a sound judicial discretion,[32] and where a party clearly brings himself within the terms of the statute allowing a continuance it is error to refuse it.[33] In some jurisdictions a continuance is granted as a matter of right to either party on the return-day,[34] or when the pleadings are closed.[35] If on an application for continuance the adverse party will admit the matters expected to be proved by the absent witness, and such admission is accepted, the movant is precluded from asking for a second adjournment to enable him to prove the testimony of the same witness.[36]

3. CONDITION OF CAUSE. The stage of the proceedings at which a continuance or adjournment may be had is regulated by the statutes of the various states.[37]

4. GROUNDS. It is good ground for a continuance in a justice's court that the party cannot safely proceed to trial for want of some material testimony or wit-

Maine.—A justice has no power to continue a cause before the time at which the writ is returnable (Martin v. Fales, 18 Me. 23, 36 Am. Dec. 693), and under the statute authorizing one justice to continue once a cause brought before another justice, the continuance may be ordered on the return-day, or any day of adjournment (Tyler v. Beal, 31 Me. 336. Compare Spencer v. Perry, 17 Me. 413).

Michigan.— A justice can only adjourn a cause on his own motion on the return-day of the writ (Stadler v. Moors, 9 Mich. 264), and then only when the writ is actually returned (Harbour v. Eldred, 107 Mich. 95, 64 N. W. 1054).

New Jersey.— Before an adjournment can take place, a summons must be returned and the parties be in court, or at least plaintiff must appear (Halsey v. Whitlock, 3 N. J. L. 869), and a justice cannot adjourn a trial without the consent of the parties after it is actually commenced by going into the evidence (Parker v. Mercantile Safe-Deposit Co., 63 N. J. New York.— Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2959, 2960, providing that a justice may grant an adjournment only at the time of the return of the summons or of joining issue, an adjournment after such time, unless by consent of the parties, is unauthorized (Stoutenburg v. Humphrey, 9 N. ness;[38] that the party has been summoned as a juror in another court;[39] that he is too unwell to leave his house;[40] or that, in an attachment suit, the same property has been attached in a court of record.[41] On the other hand it has been held that a continuance should not be allowed for the purpose of perfecting service,[42] to allow a party to procure the assistance of counsel,[43] because the party's attorney would be engaged in another court on the day set for trial,[44] or because the party was prevented by stress of weather from appearing at the return of the summons.[45] A cause may, however, be continued after the trial has begun, upon sufficient grounds arising since its commencement, or coming to the applicant's knowledge since that time, and which could not, with diligence, have been ascertained before.[46]

5. Application and Procedure. While a continuance may be had by consent or agreement of the parties,[47] in the presence of the justice,[48] or by the written stipulation of counsel,[49] the usual mode of procedure is by motion, supported by the oath or affidavit[50] of the party or of his attorney.[51] The affidavit must be properly entitled, or state in its body the action in which the adjournment is asked,[52] must set out all the facts required by the statute to authorize a continuance,[53] and must show the exercise of due diligence on the part of the party or his attorney.[54] In determining the application the justice may receive affidavits or evidence in rebuttal,[55] and may cross-examine the applicant;[56] and on an application for a continuance made on appeal, the court will consider previous applications made in the justice's court in determining its sufficiency.[57] To be valid an order for a continuance must embrace all of several joint defendants,[58] and where one justice acts in the absence of another, it must be made at the place fixed for trial, within the time allowed by law for appearance, and the acting justice must then and there have the writ in his possession.[59] It is no ground of objection to a continuance that the entry is in the handwriting of plaintiff's attorney, if the continuance was granted by the justice and the entry assented to and adopted by him by his official signature.[60]

6. SECURITY. Under some statutes a defendant, as a condition to the adjournment of the case on his application, is required to give security for his appearance at the adjourned day and for the payment of the judgment or damages and costs.[61] Such a bond is not required when the cause is adjourned by consent,[62] or where plaintiff proceeds as a non-resident;[63] and it is not necessary to give a new bond on a second adjournment, unless it is required by the justice or the bail.[64] The liability of the surety becomes fixed upon the adjournment being had,[65] and, if judgment is rendered against defendant, is only discharged by payment of the debt or surrender of defendant's body in execution.[66] In an action on the bond the measure of damages is the judgment in the original action.[67]

7. TIME AND PLACE FOR APPEARANCE ON ADJOURNMENT. When an adjournment is had, it must be to a time[68] and place certain.[69] The time may be less

Office of justice.— The place designated for appearance on an adjourned day may be the office of the justice, and if he keeps no place

8. Second and Further Adjournment. A justice of the peace may order a second adjournment ex mero motu in Delaware,[75] but not in New York,[76] in which state such an adjournment can be had only on the application of defendant;[77] while in Vermont one justice cannot adjourn a case in the absence of the justice before whom it was brought on the day to which it had been previously adjourned.[78] A party desiring a second continuance must clearly and affirmatively bring himself within the terms of the statute,[79] but where he does so the justice has no right to refuse the adjournment[80] or to impose costs as a condition of granting it.[81] Such further continuance cannot be ordered before the expiration of the previous one,[82] and where the justice has once adjourned the case for the maximum limit of time at defendant's request, he cannot grant him a second adjournment.[83] Where a case has been adjourned by the justice to a particular day, and plaintiff secures defendant's consent to a further adjournment, it is the duty of plaintiff to appear before the justice and have the case adjourned.[84]

Agreement of parties.— It is entirely competent for the parties in an action in a justice's court to agree, subject to the approval of the court, as to when the pleadings shall be filed, and to what time the case shall be adjourned, without affecting the jurisdiction of the justice. 9. Renewal of Proceedings After Adjournment. After an adjournment the parties must appear within the time allowed for appearance after the hour fixed and proceed as upon the return-day of the writ.[85] But if the justice is engaged at the hour in trying another cause which occupies him until after the time allowed for appearance, it is a good reason for delay, and he may proceed as soon as possible after his other official engagements are disposed of.[86]

10. Operation and Effect.[87] A request for or a consent to an adjournment does not carry with it a consent to file pleadings after the expiration of the time fixed by statute,[88] nor is it an implied recognition of the validity of an insufficient pleading;[89] but such request will estop the party making it from taking advantage of the fact that no cause for adjournment was shown.[90] Where a justice has adjourned a cause, and entered the adjournment in his docket, he cannot afterward, without the consent of the parties, change the day of adjournment,[91] nor, where no certain day is fixed, but the time is left to the agreement of counsel, can he, without such consent, afterward appoint a time and place for trial.[92] Where a continuance is granted by one justice by reason of the absence on the return-day of the justice before whom the writ is returnable, his decision is final,[93] and the continuance constitutes a sufficient entry of the action.[94] Upon the continuance of a case the same jury may be required to attend again, although the better course is to summon a new jury at the adjourned day.[95]

11. Objections and Exceptions, Waiver, and Cure.[96] Defects in respect to an adjournment in a justice's court may as to parties be waived,[97] and a party at whose instance an adjournment has been had is estopped to question its regularity.[98] But a defense on the merits is no waiver of defendant's right to an adjournment,[99] although a judgment by confession is;[1] nor will the fact that plaintiff has his old subpœna renewed waive an unauthorized adjournment had on the motion of defendant;[2] and an irregularity in granting a second adjournment is not waived because a condition that plaintiff pay defendant's witness' fees was imposed and complied with.[3]

ing a justice of the peace has the same incidental powers as other courts in the proceedings preliminary to, and in the conduct of, the trial of a cause before him.[4] A justice must call his cases,[5] issue subpœnas,[6] swear the jury,[7] and where the trial is not held at the return of the summons he must fix the day of trial and notify the parties.[8] He cannot allow a peremptory challenge,[9] and he is not required to try an exception separately from the answer,[10] or, unless requested by one of the parties, to reduce the evidence to writing.[11] He may, by consent of the parties, consult another justice, who happens to be present, on a matter of practice,[12] and, in the absence of an express statute, the fact that a judgment is rendered by two justices of the same county sitting together will not invalidate it.[13] The right to open and close is with the party holding the affirmative of the issue, usually the plaintiff.[14] Where, before an action is finished, the term of the justice before whom it was brought expires, it is no more the duty of one party than of the other to call in a second justice.[15]

(II) Reception of Evidence. The reception of evidence at any stage of the proceedings before verdict or judgment is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the justice.[16] But the justice cannot refuse to allow defendant's witnesses to testify,[17] and he may not, after the testimony is closed, examine a witness for one party in the absence of the other,[18] or without allowing such other party to introduce evidence also if he wishes.[19] The offer of a transcript of a judgment against plaintiff and in favor of defendant on the trial will not preclude its use as a set-off when thereafter offered as such before the hearing of testimony is closed.[20]

b. By Jury — (i) In General. In many states the statutes provide for trial by jury upon the demand of either party,[21] or in some states upon the justice's own motion, if he thinks the ends of justice will be subserved thereby.[22] If neither party demand a jury the case is to be tried by the justice.[23]

(ii) Selection of Jury. A party has no right to a trial by a jury composed of men selected by a method other than the one prescribed by law.[24] The statutes are mandatory, and any material variation from the prescribed mode of selection is fatal.[25]

(iii) Custody, Conduct, and Deliberations of Jury. Upon the submission of the case, the jury is placed in the custody of a sworn officer during their deliberations,[26] and are to be kept together until they arrive at a verdict, or until every reasonable hope of their doing so has vanished.[27] The justice cannot give the jury his minutes of the trial;[28] and during their deliberations it is not only improper but reversible error for him to communicate or advise with them in the absence of the parties and without their consent,[29] or even to go into the jury room.[30] He may, however, at the request of the jury, give them further instructions upon the law of the case, if the parties are or have an opportunity to be present.[31] Misconduct on the part of the jury during their deliberations is ground for reversal;[32] but it has been held that a verdict will not be set aside on the sole ground that the constable who had charge of the jury urged them to give a verdict for the prevailing party.[33] When a jury fail to agree, it is the duty of the justice to discharge them, the effect of which is not to terminate the cause and oust the jurisdiction of the justice, but to remit the parties to the position they held before the jury was impaneled.[34]

(IV) Taking Case or Questions From Jury, and Instructions.[35] Where, in an action in a justice's court, a jury is impaneled, questions of fact are solely for their determination, and it is error for the justice to take such a question from them,[36] or to direct a verdict.[37] Where, however, there is no evidence to support a judgment for plaintiff, the justice must in some jurisdictions order a nonsuit;[38] but this cannot be done after the cause has once been submitted to the jury,[39] or where the cause is submitted to the justice, and he takes time to make up his judgment.[40] In some jurisdictions a justice has no power to instruct the jury as to the law;[41] in others it is within his discretion to instruct or not as he may see fit;[42]

while in others instructions are required upon the law.[43] Where a justice does instruct a jury, he must do so in accordance with the law, and if he gives wrong instructions it is error.[44] On the other hand, where no instructions are given, the jury become the judges of the law as well as of the facts.[45]

(v) Verdict and Findings. On the trial of an action before a justice of the peace all material issues must be submitted to the jury, unless waived,[46] and, where necessary, the jury may render a special verdict.[47] The verdict must be in writing and signed by the foreman,[48] must be sufficiently certain to support a judgment,[49] and in New York it must be rendered in the presence of plaintiff.[50] It need not, however, make a special finding upon a counter-claim, where a general finding is necessarily decisive against it,[51] and where the pleadings are oral, the debt and damages need not be distinguished.[52] Unnecessary and unauthorized matter contained in a verdict may be rejected as surplusage,[53] and where damages are improperly awarded to defendant, the justice may enter a remittitur, and give judgment for him generally.[54] So too the jury may correct their verdict at the time of returning it, and before they have dispersed or have been discharged.[55] The verdict, as soon as rendered, has in some states the effect of a judgment;[56] and conversely, where a judgment is based on a verdict, it is unnecessary for the justice to make findings of fact.[57]

c. Trial by Justice Without Jury. In those states in which provision is made for trial by jury, the neglect to demand a jury within the time prescribed by law is a waiver of the right,[58] and, even when a jury is demanded, if defendant fails to appear the justice may discharge the jury and hear the plain-tiff's proofs;[59] and similarly, where the justice has erroneously summoned a jury before defendant has appeared, and default is made, the jury may be dismissed and the cause tried by the justice.[60] Where trial by jury is dispensed with, the justice must nevertheless observe the ordinary rules of procedure.[61] He must make a general finding of facts,[62] but it need be no more specific than the verdict of a jury, of which it is a substitute, upon the same pleadings and evidence,[63] and need not be stated separately from the justice's conclusions of law.[64] Where a ruling upon the admission of evidence in effect determines the question of fact in issue, no error can be predicted upon it.[65]

so is expressly granted [70] a justice cannot set aside a verdict or judgment and grant a new trial.[71]

b. Grounds. That a verdict has been obtained by fraud, partiality, or undue means,[72] or that it is contrary to law and equity,[73] is good ground for setting it aside and granting a new trial. So too a new trial should be granted to determine whether the case was within the justice's jurisdiction, where attention is called to the fact that the property in controversy exceeds in value his jurisdictional limit for the first time by the affidavit for a new trial.[74] Whether misconduct on the part of the jurors or a party is ground for a new trial has been questioned;[75] but a justice cannot grant a new trial because of error in the rendition of judgment,[76] or because of the presence of the sheriff in the jury room, and the rendition of a compromise verdict, where he first learns of such facts afterward.[77]

O. Judgment[88] — 1. In General — a. General Nature and Essentials. While not strictly records,[89] judgments in justices' courts partake of the nature of records, and until reversed are for every purpose as conclusive between the parties as those of courts of record.[90] The test of the validity of a justice's judgment is its intelligibility,[91] and where the justice has jurisdiction, errors and irregularities for which it might be reversed will not render his judgment void;[92] nor will the validity of a judgment in his favor be affected by a verbal order of plaintiff that it be dismissed, where the order is not complied with.[93] A decision of a justice adverse to the validity of a city ordinance has no force except as to the suit in which it is rendered.[94]

(II) Parties, Debts, and Amounts For Which Judgment May Be Confessed. A justice of the peace as a general rule can render judgment only in those actions which he has jurisdiction to try,[16] and for debts due.[17] In some jurisdictions, however, a justice may render judgment by confession for a sum in excess of his ordinary jurisdiction.[18]

(III) Oath or Affidavit, and Specification of Items. In some jurisdictions a confession of judgment must be made upon oath or affidavit showing the amount due, the consideration of the indebtedness, and that the judgment is not confessed in fraud of creditors;[19] and under some statutes there must be a specification of items in addition to the oath.[20] While the omission of the oath or affidavit will render a judgment by confession void as to creditors,[21] it is nevertheless valid and binding between the parties.[22]

(IV) Appearance and Consent to Sustain Judgment. Where defendant is not brought into court by summons, the statutes require that he shall appear, in order to confess judgment.[23] It is essential to the validity of a judgment by

4. On Trial of Issues[61] — a. In General. At the conclusion of a trial before him a justice of the peace must either render judgment or continue the case to a definite time for that purpose;[62] he cannot grant a motion in arrest of judgment,[63] or, in the absence of statutory authority, award a new trial.[64] He may, however, after a mere verbal announcement of his decision, and before signing any judgment in accordance therewith, change his mind and render a different judgment.[65] The judgment must answer the issue,[66] and where the liability of defendant is limited, it must conform thereto.[67] Furthermore the judgment when rendered against defendant cannot exceed the amount claimed by plaintiff in the summons[68] rendered as soon as the verdict is received, or, as expressed in some statutes, "forthwith," or "immediately."[78] In some jurisdictions, however, the statutes have been held not to mean what they say, and it is sufficient if the judgment is rendered within a reasonable time under the circumstances of the case.[79] When a trial is commenced and pursued to judgment without an intervening continuance, all the proceedings after the commencement of the trial, including the rendition of judgment, must be treated as of the day on which the trial commenced, even where the record shows that the judgment was rendered as of the last day of the trial.[80] In all cases judgment must be rendered in open court, where the parties have an opportunity to be present.[81]

(II) Conditions Precedent. Where a justice after trial withholds his decision without taking a regular adjournment to a particular day and hour, he must notify the parties of the time at which judgment will be rendered;[82] and where an order of reference is made, the parties have a right to be heard before judgment is rendered on the report, and must have previous notice.[83] The payment

"I give judgment with the jury" is in-demand, it is erroneous for the justice, after giving judgment for the amount claimed, to specify in what kind of money it shall be paid.[89] Where a judgment is erroneous as to costs, the whole recovery is not illegal, but it may be reversed as to the costs, and affirmed as to the rest.[90]

d. Parties. A judgment for plaintiff generally,[91] or against defendant generally,[92] without stating that it is for or against the adverse party, is sufficient; and where plaintiff or defendant is a partnership or corporation, judgment may be rendered in the firm or company name, without naming the individuals who compose it.[93] A judgment against a husband and wife should give the christian name of the wife,[94] but the use of an initial letter instead of a defendant's christian name, although irregular, will not avoid a judgment.[95] By statute in some states judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of several defendants,[96] and where part of the defendants are not served, judgment may be rendered against those who are.[97] Where plaintiff at the close of the evidence discontinues the case as to one of two defendants, a judgment against both cannot stand.[98] Of course a judgment in favor of a person not a party to the record is unwarranted.[99]

direction of the justice;[6] and, in New Hampshire, where the records of a deceased justice have been lodged with the clerk of the court of common pleas, he may from the justice's minutes enter up judgment in the same manner that judgments are entered up from minutes kept by the clerk of that court.[7] In Georgia judgment may be entered on a verdict either by the plaintiff, or his attorney, or by the justice;[8] while in North Carolina a justice's judgment is admissible in evidence, although not written out in his own hand.[9]

b. Time of Entry. Where an action is tried by a justice without a jury, the clerical duty[10] of entering his judgment may in most states be performed within a reasonable time after its rendition, even where time for entry is provided by statute.[11] The same rule holds good in many states in case of trial by jury,[12] but in a few the statutes are held to be mandatory.[13] In case of judgment by default, the record should show the entry of judgment at the hour fixed in the summons, or, if at a later hour, that defendant did not appear at the proper time;[14] and where plaintiff is nonsuited, or discontinues or withdraws his action, judgment should be entered forthwith.[15] The requirement that a judgment by confession shall be entered "forthwith" is satisfied by an entry on the minutes, although it is not formally entered in the docket until some time afterward.[16] Where a justice fails to enter such a judgment as will dispose of the case as to all the parties, he may subsequently enter a judgment so disposing of it.[17] justices' judgments by the signature of the officer rendering them, but this cannot be regarded as essential to their validity,[18] unless required by statute.[19]

d. Filing Transcript in Another County. Provision is sometimes made for the filing of a transcript of a justice's judgment in other counties, upon which scire facias may issue and judgment be rendered.[20] A judgment on such transcript cannot be entered by a justice in a county in which defendant is not a resident nor found;[21] but where he has jurisdiction his judgment will not be reversed because his record does not show the cause of action, or that a summons was issued or return made, in the original proceeding.[22]

One justice cannot set aside order of another.— In re National Trust Co., 4 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 203.

Consent.— A justice may open a judgment by consent of the parties, and refer the case others he may do so where the judgment is void,[27] or where jurisdiction of the person of defendant has not been obtained;[28] while in others the power to open or vacate is regulated by statute.[29] Where a justice sets aside a judgment and grants a new trial, the judgment ceases to exist, and cannot be revived by a subsequent order of the justice vacating the order setting it aside and granting a new trial.[30]

c. Equitable Relief[31] — (I) Grounds For Relief — (A) In General. While the jurisdiction of equity to grant relief against justices' judgments is fully recognized, it is strictly exercised, and the right to relief must be clearly shown. In most jurisdictions equity will restrain the enforcement of void judgments,[32] but it will not interfere merely because of errors and irregularities which do not affect the jurisdiction.[33] It is good ground for equitable relief that judgment has been ren-to referees. Sinex v. Cooper, 4 Houst. (Del.) 447.

dered contrary to agreement;[34] and that it has been satisfied;[35] and that an appeal does not lie,[36] or has been lost without fault on the part of the party seeking relief.[37] But equity will not interfere where a party was only prevented from pleading a good legal defense because it involved plaintiff's title,[38] or merely because a debt was split so as to bring it within the justice's jurisdiction;[39] and in Illinois no injunction can be granted in any case where the judgment is for less than twenty dollars.[40]

(B) Fraud, Accident, or Mistake. Fraud, unavoidable accident, or excusable mistake is good ground for equitable relief from a justice's judgment.[41]

(II) Grounds For Refusing Relief—(A) In General. While it has been held that a party who sues in equity to set aside a judgment by default rendered without jurisdiction need not make any showing upon the merits,[42] the better established rule is that equity will not interfere with a justice's judgment unless it be made to appear that another trial might result differently.[43] In Alabama justices are authorized to hear and determine cases according to justice and equity, and a court of chancery will not interfere where the matter in dispute is less than twenty dollars.[44]

(B) Existence of Other Adequate Remedy. A court of equity will not interfere with the judgment of a justice of the peace where the party seeking relief has or has pursued an adequate remedy at law;[45] and in some states, even where the judgment of the justice of the peace is void, this rule of noninterference by a court of equity prevails.[46]

(c) Laches or Delay. That a party seeking relief in equity from a justice's judgment has been guilty of negligence, laches, or delay in protecting his rights is good ground for the refusal of relief.[47]

(III) Procedure[48] — (A) Time of Application.[49] Where the judgment sought to be relieved against is void, there is no limitation upon the time within which the application shall be made.[50]

(B) Parties.[51] Neither the justice[52] nor the officer about to levy execution[53] is a proper party to a proceeding to restrain the enforcement of a judgment. Notice to them of the injunction is sufficient.[54]

(C) Pleading. The general rules of equity pleading in suits for equitable relief against judgments apply to suits to declare void or to enjoin judgments rendered by justices of the peace.[55]

collaterally because he had no jurisdiction in the form adopted.[63] Where the jurisdiction depends upon a fact which the justice is required to ascertain and settle, his decision, if he has jurisdiction of the parties, is conclusive in a collateral proceeding.[64]

(III) Defects in Process. Mere defects and irregularities in the process, or in the service or return thereof, which do not go to the jurisdiction, do not render a judgment void, and cannot be made the basis of a collateral attack on the judgment.[65]

(IV) Disqualification of Justice. It has been held that a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace cannot be impeached collaterally on the ground that the justice was disqualified, as for example by reason of his relationship to one of the parties.[66] Elsewhere, however, the decisions are to the contrary.[67]

8. Lien, Life, Enforcement and Revival, and Satisfaction — a. Lien.[68] As a rule judgments of justices of the peace create no liens on property,[69] until a transcript is filed, as provided by statute, in a superior court;[70] but in some states, by statute, a justice's judgment operates as a lien from the date of its enrolment,[71] or a money judgment is a lien from its date on the real estate of which the debtor is possessed, or to which he shall become entitled at or after such date, but is not a lien against a purchaser without notice until it is docketed in the county court according to law.[72]

Hurd Rev. St. Ill. (1899) p. 1389, c. 119, § 27, providing that, where any property has been taken under a writ of replevin issued by a justice, and it shall appear on the trial that it exceeds in value the jurisdiction of the justice, he shall have power to order its return to defendant, authorizing the justice to determine the question of value, and it being conclusively presumed that he found the value to be within his jurisdiction. b. Life.[73] By the statutes of the various states the life of a justice's judgment is limited, and no execution can issue thereon after the period fixed, unless it has been kept alive in the manner provided by statute, or has been revived by scire facias.[74]

c. Enforcement and Revival — (I) Enforcement.[75] Besides the usual methods of enforcing judgments by action[76] or execution,[77] a justice's judgment may be enforced by scire facias,[78] or by a suit in equity.[79] Where a defendant dies after judgment against him, an execution cannot issue against his property without a scire facias to make his personal representative a party.[80]

(II) Revival.[81] Unless the issue of execution after a certain period is expressly prohibited,[82] judgments of justices of the peace which have for any cause become dormant may be revived by scire facias or other proceeding provided by statute, to the same extent that the judgments of higher courts may be.[83]

New York.— Scire facias must be brought within six years from rendition of judgment. Johnson v. Burrell, 2 Hill 238.

Pennsylvania.— Stewart v. Eisenhower, 3 Pa. Dist. 619 (to the effect that an appeal from a judgment reviving a judgment on a scire facias is not an action ex contractu, and need not be replied to by an affidavit of defense); Ford v. Sallisbury, 4 Pa. L. J. 187 (scire facias may issue after the expiration of a year and a day).

Tennessee.— Anderson v. Moore, 4 Baxt. 15 (revival where record is lost); Bryant v. Smith, 7 Coldw. 113 (circuit court has no jurisdiction); White v. Davenport, 7 Yerg. 475 (scire facias by clerk of county court to revive judgment of justice who has died or resigned must be made returnable to the clerk); Gunn v. Benson, 5 Yerg. 221 (notice unnecessary on scire facias to revive a judgment dormant for one year).

Texas.— The district court has no jurisdiction to revive a justice's judgment. Buie v. Crouch, 37 Tex. 53. In this state Rev. St. art. 1661, provides that "on the eleventh day after the rendition of any final judgment . . . it shall be the duty of the justice to issue an execution." Article 1664 declares that, "if no execution is issued within twelve months after the rendition of the judgment, the judgment shall become dormant, and no execution shall issue thereon unless such judgment be revived." Another article prescribes that a judgment in any court of record, where execution has not issued within twelve months, may be revived by scire facias or action thereon brought within ten years, and not after. Therefore, where a justice's judgment was rendered July 24, 1891, and nunc pro tunc entry thereof made August 31, 1901, it was held insufficient to authorize an execution, the nunc pro tunc entry being merely retrospective, and having the same effect as though made when judgment was originally rendered, and, no execution having been issued within twelve months from the time of such rendition, the judgment had become dormant, and, not having been revived within ten years, had become dead. Burns v. Skelton, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 453, 68 S. W. 527.

Payment after execution is invalid, unless made with the knowledge and consent of the judgment creditor. Medart v. Baker's Eureka Hot Air, etc., Mfg. Co., 51 Mo. App. 19, construing Rev. St. (1889) § 6316, which requires such consent whether the payment is made before or after execution.

In case of payment after execution issued, the justice receives the money as bailee of the debtor merely, and the creditor is not entitled to recover from the justice. Monteith v. Bissell, Wright (Ohio) 411.

Acceptance of defendant's tender.— Where, before judgment, defendant tenders and de-legal currency.[88] So too the imprisonment of the debtor on execution is a satisfaction while it continues,[89] but neither the levy of execution,[90] nor, in the absence of statutory provision, the transfer of a justice's execution to another county,[91] is a good satisfaction. A justice may, on proper motion, set off mutual judgments rendered by him,[92] or by another justice.[93] After satisfaction a motion or action will lie before the justice to have it entered,[94] and where a justice neglects or refuses to enter satisfaction an action will lie against him.[95] In the absence of statutory provisions on the subject, no presumption of satisfaction arises within twenty years,[96] and the entry of satisfaction is only prima facie evidence of the fact, and can be proved to be incorrect.[97]

9. Actions on Judgments[98] — a. In General — (i) Right of Action. Where a justice of the peace has rendered a final judgment,[99] valid upon its face,[1] and the record of which shows the issuance of summons and return of personal service,[2] the judgment creditor may maintain an action thereon, although it has been docketed in the county clerk's office.[3] Under a statute requiring that, where the parties are the same, leave of court must be obtained before action can be brought, an assignee of a justice's judgment may sue without such leave.[4]

posits with the justice a sum in full of all indebtedness to plaintiff and costs, which sum plaintiff withdraws after judgment and appeal, and receipts for "as applying on the judgment," still claiming a balance, such acceptance is a full settlement of the judgment, since plaintiff cannot accept the money, except on the terms of deposit, without defendant's consent. Judgments on mutual accounts.— Where parties having mutual accounts each commenced a separate action before a justice, and each recovered judgment, and one appealed, that one, being about to fail in his defense, cannot set off his judgment, and thus secure costs. (II) Jurisdiction. Where justices of the peace are given jurisdiction of actions on contract, they have jurisdiction of actions on judgments.[5] In some states this jurisdiction is unlimited by the amount involved,[6] while in others it is so limited.[7]

(III) Form of Remedy.[8] While the regular form of remedy is by action of debt, assumpsit will lie in some jurisdictions.[9] In Arkansas, where the record of a justice's judgment has been lost, a cumulative remedy is provided by statute, whereby the justice may, on motion of the judgment creditor and after five days' notice, render a new judgment.[10] In Delaware, where the action is before one justice on the judgment of a justice of another county, scire facias, not debt, is the proper remedy.[11]

(IV) Joinder of Parties. The general rules as to parties apply.[12] After a note has been merged into judgment, the indorser cannot be joined with the maker in an action on the judgment.[13]

(V) Defenses.[14] It is good defense to an action on a justice's judgment that execution is still available,[15] or that a writ of certiorari has been sued out, even after the commencement of the action, to remove the judgment;[16] and where the action is on a confessed judgment, defendant may defend on the ground of infancy when the judgment was confessed.[17]

b. Time to Sue and Limitations[18] — (I) Accrual of Right. The common-law right of action on a judgment accrues after the expiration of a year and a day, if no execution has been issued.[19] But in some states an action may be brought immediately upon the rendition of a judgment;[20] while in others the time at which an action may be brought is regulated by statute.[21]

c. Process. In an action on a justice's judgment, it is not necessary that the summons should state that the complaint will be on such judgment.[24]

d. Pleading — (I) Declaration, Petition, or Complaint.[25] While it is not necessary to set out the proceedings in full in pleading the judgment of a justice of the peace,[26] it is nevertheless necessary, in the absence of a statute dispensing with the requirement,[27] that the facts showing the jurisdiction of the justice over both the subject-matter and the person should be alleged in the declaration, petition, or complaint.[28] But it is not necessary to show that the justice was in commission at the time the judgment was rendered,[29] or, where the action is commenced by long summons, to allege that defendant was a resident of the county.[30] was rendered by a justice of one township, against a defendant resident in another township, the recovery of the judgment and the residence of defendant must be pleaded in bar, and not in abatement.[33] Under a plea of set-off, defendant cannot show that he paid plaintiff's claim in full before the original suit was begun.[34] A fact which is necessarily implied from the facts pleaded need not itself be averred.[35] Where the suit is on a transcript of a judgment which does not show any record of service on defendant, and the affidavit of defense sets forth that the instrument sued on is not such an instrument as entitles plaintiff to judgment, but fails to allege want of service, a supplemental affidavit may be allowed.[36]

e. Evidence[37] — (I) MATTERS TO BE PROVED. Where, in an action upon the judgment of a justice of the peace, the existence of the judgment is denied, the facts conferring jurisdiction upon the justice must be proved;[38] and where the judgment was rendered by a justice of another state, the statutes of that state must be introduced to show affirmatively that he had jurisdiction.[39]

(II) PRESUMPTION IN FAVOR OF JUDGMENT. Where the docket recites that plaintiff declared "orally in assumpsit on the common counts and specially in writing," it cannot be assumed that in declaring specially he added a count upon a cause of action not cognizable by the justice, or that even if he did judgment was rendered on such count.[40]

(III) ADMISSIBILITY. Where the docket states that the judgment was rendered on confession, the recital is neither necessary nor conclusive, and it is competent to introduce the files of the case to show the character of the writing, alleged to be a confession, on which the judgment was founded.[41]

(IV) SUFFICIENCY. To sustain an action on a justice's judgment the evidence must show the justice's jurisdiction to render the judgment,[42] and the rendition of a valid judgment.[43] Where suit is brought on the transcript of a justice's judgment, the certified transcript is prima facie evidence on which plaintiff may recover,[44] if it is sufficiently certain and definite.[45] Where defendant gives in evidence a docket entry showing that the cause was removed by certiorari on the day named to the supreme court, it is sufficient to show in rebuttal an order of the supreme court, made about the same time, dismissing from the docket of that court a cause of the same title.[46]

f. Trial and Judgment.[47] An action on a justice's judgment against joint defendants should be discontinued as to a defendant who was not served in the original action, and judgment should only be rendered against him on whom service

P. Costs[50] — 1. In General. The right to and liability for costs in actions before justices of the peace depend entirely upon the provisions of the statutes, and they cannot be allowed or imposed except as authorized by statute.[51] Generally, however, the statutes entitle the successful party in a justice's court to costs,[52] or to costs not exceeding a certain amount.[53]

2. On Dismissal or Judgment For Want of Jurisdiction. Where a defendant successfully pleads to the jurisdiction of the court he is entitled to costs;[54] but it is otherwise if the case is stricken from the docket upon motion, or by the justice on discovering his want of jurisdiction.[55]

3. Withdrawal of Suit. Plaintiff in a suit in a justice's court cannot, after the writ is returned, withdraw the suit and thereby deprive defendant of the right to a judgment for costs.[56]

4. Taxation of Costs. The taxation of costs in a justice's court, except as affected by special statutes, is governed by the general rules on the subject.[57] The taxation of costs is in no sense a judgment, and therefore a justice of the peace may tax costs on a day subsequent to that of the rendition of the judgment.[58]

peace cannot require a plaintiff, whether a resident or a non-resident, to give security for costs, and as a rule such authority has not been conferred.[60]

Q. Execution[61] — 1. In General. Upon the rendition of a judgment in his favor in a justice's court, a party is entitled to execution,[62] and, in the absence of a statute requiring that it be done, it is not necessary that the judgment contain an order directing its issuance.[63] Entry of a judgment is absolutely essential to an execution,[64] and where there is no valid judgment in existence to uphold it, an execution may be attacked collaterally as well as directly.[65] But mere errors and irregularities in a judgment, for which it might be reversed, but which do not render it void, will not invalidate an execution issued thereon, which is otherwise valid.[66]

2. Property Subject to Execution.[67] Generally speaking, any personal property of the judgment debtor is subject to execution,[68] but real property is not unless by express statutory provision.[69]

3. Issuance[70] — a. In General. A justice of the peace may, except in so far as prevented by statute, issue execution at any time during the life of the judgment,[71] even though the right of action on it has expired;[72] and, where the issu-

issue, the justice shall enter on his docket the amount of the debt, damages, and costs, a compliance with it is essential to the issuance of a valid execution;[76] but a failure by the justice to note on his docket the time of issuing execution, and to whom it was delivered, or the fact that it was issued, does not necessarily vitiate an execution actually and properly issued and delivered.[77] The issue of an execution out of a court of record upon a justice's judgment recorded in such court is a waiver of a previous writ issued by the justice.[78]

b. Issuance in or to County Other Than Where Judgment Was Rendered. Upon compliance with the statutory requirements on the subject, execution may in some states be issued on a justice's judgment in or to a county other than that in which the judgment itself was rendered;[79] and indeed by the practice

Colville v. Neal, 2 Swan 89. Where an execution was issued in H county upon a judgment rendered in said county, and returned with the officer's indorsement upon prevailing in some states a justice of the peace may issue his execution throughout the state.[80]

4. Form, Requisites, and Validity[81] — a. In General. An execution issued by a justice of the peace must conform to the prescribed statutory form if any.[82] Where no special form is prescribed, an execution which follows the form prescribed generally is sufficient.[83] The presumption is in favor of the regularity of a justice's execution,[84] and it need not show on its face all that may be necessary to give the court jurisdiction.[85] It must, however, follow the judgment or recognizance upon which it is based;[86] must be signed by the justice in his official capacity;[87] must in some jurisdictions be under seal;[88] and should have indorsed it, and was then reissued, and taken into R county, and levied on land situated therein, it was held that the sale was void, as the execution, when returned, had fulfilled its function, and was incapable of being reissued. Paine v. Hoskins, 3 Lea 284.

Texas.— An execution issued from a justice's court of one county to another county, without a certificate of the county clerk as required by Rev. St. art. 1633, is voidable but not void. Seligson v. Staples, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1070.

To whom directed.— In Ala. Code, §§ 3349, 3350, providing that when a judgment debtor removes to, or has property in, a county other than that in which the judgment of a justice was rendered, execution may be issued by the justice, and "directed to any constable of such county," and may be executed by any constable of the county to which it is sent, the quoted clause is mandatory, and an execution issued by a justice of K county, directed "To any lawful officer of said county," and sent to C county to be executed, is void. Given under my hand at the town aforesaid, the 24th day of July, 1868. Debt, $51.47. Costs, $1.50. upon it by the officer the time of its receipt.[89] On the other hand an execution is not rendered void by reason of the justice's failure to indorse on its back an account of the debt, damages, and costs, and the rate of interest on the judgment;[90] and it is no ground for reversing a judgment that the justice refused to indorse defendant's exemption from imprisonment on the execution against him.[91] The fact that an execution purports to be issued in the wrong county will not invalidate it, if in fact it was issued in the proper county,[92] nor will the fact that illegal items of cost are found in it render an execution void.[93] It is not necessary that an itemized bill of costs be issued with an execution.[94]

b. Directions For Levy and Return. A justice's execution must be directed to a duly authorized officer, usually the constable,[95] or, in default of such officer, to some person specially deputized to execute it.[96] The mandate must follow the statutory form, if any,[97] and should require the officer to make the amount of the judgment out of the goods and chattels of defendant,[98] or in default thereof out of his lands and tenements, if these are subject to execution.[99] It is not necessary that a particular day should be fixed on which the execution is to be returned,[1] but it should regularly be made returnable within the time fixed by law,[2] although where it is made returnable at a time beyond the statutory period it may be enforced within the time in which it should have been made returnable.[3] Where, upon the death or resignation of a justice, his papers are turned over to the clerk of the county court, an execution issued by him on a judgment of such justice must be made returnable to himself, and not to the county court.[4]

c. Amendment or Alteration.[5] Although a justice of the peace has power to amend an execution issued by him[6] before it is executed,[7] and may even change its direction to another township and another constable without making it void,[8] he cannot give a general authority to the constable to change dates, or to fill up or otherwise alter his process.[9]

5. Renewal and Reissue, and Alias and Pluries Writs — a. Renewal and Reissue.[10] In some states provision is made for the renewal and reissue of a justice's execution upon its return unsatisfied.[11] A formal return of nulla bona by the constable is not necessary,[12] and any memorandum in the handwriting of the justice, on any part of the execution, indicating his intention, and a redelivery to the constable is sufficient to constitute a renewal.[13] Under some statutes an execution must be renewed within the time within which a new execution can be lawfully issued,[14] but in New York an execution which has been issued and returned unsatisfied may be renewed after such time;[15] and a renewal by a justice is also authorized within six calendar months after his removal from office, which includes the expiration of his term.[16] The renewal of an execution restores it in full force in all respects,[17] and it has the same force and effect that a new writ would have.[18] But it must be made for the time prescribed by statute,[19] and a levy made after the expiration of the statutory period is unauthorized.[20] Whether an execution has been renewed before its expiration is a question of fact, of which the indorsement of the execution is not the only evidence; the justice's docket and his testimony may be considered.[21]

b. Alias and Pluries Writs.[22] Where a justice's execution duly issued is returned unsatisfied, either in whole or in part,[23] the judgment creditor may have other writs of execution issued while the judgment remains in force.[24] Mere irregularities in an alias execution will not render it void.[25]

6. Levy and Extent[26] — a. By Whom Made. While an execution on a justice's judgment is regularly levied by a constable,[27] it may in some states be levied by the sheriff.[28] In the absence of statutory authority, neither the justice nor the constable can deputize a private person to execute his final process.[29]

b. Time of Levy. The levy must be made before the return-day of the writ,[30] and during the life of the judgment.[31] The fact that a statute authorizes an execution to be levied in less than the usual time after judgment, upon the filing of the required affidavit as to the necessity of so doing, does not enlarge or abridge the writ when so issued, and it may be levied at any time before the return-day.[32]

Return without indorsement. — Where an execution which had been delivered to plaintiff's attorneys is returned without indorsement, an alias cannot issue unless it be shown either that the execution had been delivered to the officer during its life, or that the judgment had not been paid in whole or in part. 32. Sidelinger v. Freeman, 86 Ill. App. 514, where it was contended that such an execution must be levied immediately.

c. Manner of Levy. Unless some statute intervenes,[33] the same rules of law govern the levy of justices' executions as govern the levy of executions from higher courts.[34] To authorize a levy upon land or immovables, it must appear by the execution that there is no personal property of defendant subject thereto,[35] or that defendant, being in possession, pointed out such property to the officer.[36] The fact that, at the time of the levy of an execution on land, defendant owned personalty sufficient to satisfy the execution will not invalidate it, if the proper entry was made on the writ before the levy.[37]

d. Abandonment. Where an execution has been levied by a constable, he may, on being informed of the invalidity of the writ, abandon the levy.[38]

e. Death of Plaintiff. If, after fieri facias issues and before it is executed, plaintiff dies, the writ may still be executed.[39]

7. Lien.[40] Executions issued on justice's judgments are generally liens only on the personalty.[41] The lien dates in some states from the delivery of the execution to the officer,[42] in others from its teste,[43] and in others the priority of executions depends upon the time of the actual levy.[44] The duration of the lien is fixed by statute, and during its existence the officer may sell without an alias writ, although the return-day has passed.[45] The lien of an execution is destroyed by the taking of an appeal from the judgment on which it is issued,[46] and it may also be lost by the officer's failure to comply with the statute in levying or executing the writ,[47] as by a failure to make due return as required by law,[48] or to keep it alive by the regular issuance of succeeding writs.[49] So too an attachment lien is lost, where the execution issued on the judgment in the suit in which the attachment issued does not comply with the statutory requirements.[50] A person specially appointed constable is to be regarded as the deputy of the proper constable in respect to the lien of executions in the hands of the latter, and can gain no advantage over him by taking prior possession of goods in his township.[51]

Y.) 249, where it was held that if a constable levy under an execution and advertise for sale within twenty days after he has received the writ, but sells after the expiration of that time, the sale will be valid against an intermediate levy and sale on another execution, if the first sale was made before the return-day of the writ.

8. Custody and Disposition of Property. The duties of a constable or other officer as to the custody, care, and disposition of property levied on under an execution on a justice's judgment are in nowise dissimilar to those of a sheriff in the case of executions out of courts of record.[52] He is bound to keep the property levied on safely, unless it is delivered to defendant upon his giving a forthcoming bond,[53] or is left in the possession of a receiptor.[54] His interest in the property is such that he may maintain an action to recover possession of it against one who has purchased from defendant after the levy.[55]

Where defendant has been attached in an attachment execution by a creditor of plaintiff, the execution will be stayed until the determination of the attachment execution. Dorsel v. Hamilton, 1 Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 123.

The effect of a legal stay is to release a levy already made,[58] and after granting a stay the justice has no power to recall it.[59] After a stay of execution has expired, a justice is not bound to issue execution unless it is demanded.[60]

b. Security[61] — (i) In General. The statutes require that before a stay of execution shall be granted, security must be given by the judgment defendant. The requirements as to the security vary in the different states, but in all of them there must be a substantial compliance with the statutes, or the security will be invalid as a statutory obligation.[62]

(ii) Entry and Attestation. Security for the stay of execution must be entered on the justice's docket,[63] and under some statutes must be attested by the justice's signature.[64]

has been stayed, the liability of the parties and the mode of enforcing it is determined by the statutes of the different states.[66] The surety is not discharged by mere delay in issuing execution against defendant;[67] nor because plaintiff, on the return of a vendi with the property in it sold, instructs the justice not to issue another execution until further orders;[68] nor because plaintiff accepts a trust deed made by the debtor;[69] nor because plaintiff has taken a delivery bond, and proceeded on it to judgment and execution, without obtaining satisfaction;[70] nor because the judgment and execution against the principals were in their partnership names;[71] nor because the officer's return to the execution against the principal is false;[72] and he cannot object after verdict that the original warrant or the judgment thereon was unsealed.[73]

Indiana.— The mode of enforcing the surety's liability is by scire facias. Execution must first issue against the goods and chattels of defendant (Elliott v. Doughty, 7 Blackf. 199), and the scire facias must show this, and that the debt could not be collected under the execution (Varner v. Crabb, 2 Ind. 168; Elliott v. Doughty, supra. See also Thompson v. Harbison, 7 Blackf. 495), and that due diligence was used against defendant (Doughty v. Elliott, 8 Blackf. 405). Ohio.— The mode of enforcing the surety's liability is by petition on his undertaking, and the petition must show the issuance of execution after stay expired. Murphy v. Flowers, 27 Ohio St. 468. tiorari.[76] But a third person cannot take advantage of a defect which renders an execution voidable only,[77] nor can a merely voidable judgment be collaterally attacked by motion to quash the execution, or by affidavit of illegality.[78]

b. Equitable Relief.[79] Where there is no adequate remedy at law,[80] and special circumstances of hardship are made to appear,[81] equity may order a stay of execution or enjoin proceedings under an execution already issued.[82]

11. Claims of Third Persons.[83] Sometimes, by statute, a constable may summon a jury to try the right of property seized by him on execution;[84] but under the statutes of most of the states the right of property levied on under a justice's execution is triable before the justice who issued the execution,[85] provided in some jurisdictions the value of the property does not exceed his jurisdiction.[86] The claimant is required, under some statutes, to make an affidavit of claim and file a claim bond,[87] while under others he is required to file a written claim with the constable, who is thereupon to delay the sale a prescribed time, and apply to a justice for a venire to summon a jury to try the right of property.[88] The case is to be docketed as a proceeding between the claimant and the judgment plaintiff,[89] and a day fixed for trial within the time prescribed by statute.[90] The only question in issue is the right of property,[91] and no inquiry can be made into the merits of the judgment,[92] or the regularity of the proceedings on which it was based.[93] Before judgment can be rendered and execution issued against the claimant and his surety, there must have been a trial of the right of property, and then a return of the claim bond forfeited.[94]

12. Sale.[95] In order that there may be a valid sale of property of the execution defendant under a justice's execution there must be not only a valid judgment,[96]

Failure to make return of nulla bona before a transcript is filed in the circuit clerk's office, as required by statute, is an irregularity which can be taken advantage of only execution with an indorsement of his action thereon,[10] for the truth of which he is responsible;[11] but no particular form of indorsement is required,[12] and a justice may permit an amendment thereof, even after suit brought against the constable and his sureties for not duly returning an execution.[13]

14. PAYMENT, SATISFACTION, AND DISCHARGE.[14] Under some statutes any person indebted to the judgment debtor may pay to the constable the amount of his debt, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the execution, and the constable's receipt will be a sufficient discharge for the amount so paid, or directed to be credited by the judgment creditor on the execution.[15] Money paid on an execution erroneously issued by a justice of the peace may be recovered by action.[16]

15. SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.[17] In a few states provision is made for supplementary proceedings, other than garnishment,[18] in aid of justice's executions.[19]

16. EXECUTION AGAINST THE PERSON. Under the statutes of some states justices of the peace are authorized to issue executions against the person. The grounds upon which a capias ad satisfaciendum may issue are the same in justices' courts as in courts of record,[20] and the writ can now be issued only in actions of tort, and in actions of contract where there are allegations of fraud or concealment of property. The whole subject is, however, controlled by statutory provisions;[21] and in the absence of any statute upon the subject a justice of the peace has no authority to issue a capias.[22]

17. WRONGFUL EXECUTION.[23] The issuance of an execution by a justice of the peace is a ministerial act, and, in case it is issued contrary to law, he is liable to the party injured,[24] as is one who knowingly procures the issuance of a wrongful execution.[25] In an action for wrongful execution, a variance between the judgment and execution, if caused by mistake, will not deprive a party of a justification under them;[26] but where, in a plea of justification, the execution is described as returnable in ninety days, and the one produced is returnable in sixty, the variance is fatal.[27]

Failure to take an appeal waives an error of a justice in including accrued interest in reviving a judgment, and it cannot be rectified on motion to quash the execution issued thereon by the circuit court. Bauer v. Miller, 16 Mo. App. 252.

Accepting a modified judgment and remitting an excess in the verdict waives any irregularity and delay in the rendition and but a defendant who does not appear waives nothing;[30] and where a party raises an objection in due time, he does not waive it by pleading or going to trial.[31] If neither the declaration nor the evidence shows a cause of action, a judgment against defendant cannot be sustained, although he moved to nonsuit on an untenable ground;[32] and where a justice examines a party as a witness de bene esse, it is an error which is not cured by a statement in his return that he afterward disregarded the evidence as improper.[33]

S. Records and Dockets[34] — 1. In General. Justices of the peace are very generally required to keep dockets, in which they are to enter a record of proceedings had before them,[35] and which are open to the inspection of any parties interested.[36] The matters to be entered and the form of entries are more or less definitely prescribed by statute; but, owing to the recognized inexpertness and lack of learning in justices as a class, technical precision and accuracy in the form of their entries are neither expected nor required.[37] Original papers cannot be taken from the files of a justice and used in a higher court, without a rule, regularly entered, showing when and why they were taken.[38]

2. Time For Entries, Publicity, and Notice. A justice of the peace should regularly make the entries in his docket contemporaneously with the acts to which they refer, but that they are not so made is not ground for reversal.[39] In the case of an action for a penalty, judgment must be entered publicly, or after notice to defendant.[40]

3. Matters to Be Entered and Sufficiency of Entries — a. In General. The entries upon the docket of a justice of the peace are in the nature of minutes of a court of record, and every fact transpiring in connection with cases tried in his court essential to the validity or regularity of the judgment rendered should be entered upon the docket.[41] As has been previously stated,[42] the greatest liberality of construction will be shown in order to uphold justices' proceedings, and it is generally enough if, by the entries on their dockets and the process they issue, their jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person is disclosed, together with a final disposition of the case.[43]

b. Names of Parties and Residence of Defendant. The names of the parties must be entered upon the justice's docket,[44] and in some jurisdictions the record must set out the residence of defendant.[45]

c. Cause of Action and Grounds of Defense. The record of justices of the peace must show the cause of action, the demand of the plaintiff, and the nature of the claim on which the particular action is founded so as to prevent a second suit for the same cause of action.[46] It is not necessary that the cause of action be set out in full,[47] but in penal actions the substance at least of the acts committed by defendant should be alleged,[48] and the act or ordinance violated should either be set out in full or referred to specifically and definitely.[49] In some jurisdictions the docket should also set out the grounds of defense.[50]

d. Time and Publicity of Proceedings. The docket of a justice of the peace should show the time of the commencement of the action,[51] the time fixed for trial,[52] and the date of the judgment;[53] but it need not show specifically the time of calling the case,[54] nor the hour at which judgment was rendered.[55] If the proceedings are otherwise regular, it is not reversible error that the justice fails to state that his judgment was rendered publicly.[56]

e. Process. The date of the issuance of process and the time of its return, and notice of the time of trial and its return, must be entered on a justice's docket,[57] and where the summons is made returnable forthwith, the record must show that the justice was satisfied, by the oath of plaintiff or otherwise, that there was danger of the latter's losing the benefit of his process by delay.[58] So also where a special constable is appointed to serve process, his appointment must be noted on the record.[59] It is not necessary that the summons and the officer's return be copied in the record at length.[60]

g. Evidence and Rulings Thereon. The record of a justice of the peace must show affirmatively that his judgment was based upon a hearing of allegations and proofs,[65] and in some jurisdictions the kind of evidence, whether written or parol, on which plaintiff's claim was founded, must be stated.[66] It is not necessary, however, for a justice to enter the evidence itself, whether documentary or parol, on his docket,[67] except, in some jurisdictions, in jury trials,[68] or where the action is for the recovery of a penalty, in which latter case the record must disclose some evidence of the acts constituting the offense.[69] A justice is not required to note on his docket motions to reject evidence.[70]

h. Adjournments. Except in the case of an adjournment from day to day,[71] an adjournment or continuance of a case must be entered on the docket, and the entry must show at whose instance, and the time and place to which, the case was adjourned.[72] But it is not essential that the docket should show the cause of adjournment, for in the absence of any statement in the docket as to the cause, it will be presumed that the proper cause was shown or consent given.[73] Where, however, the cause is given, no such presumption can be entertained, and if the

Where there is a second adjournment without application from either party the cause should be shown. Deputy v. Betts, 4 Harr. (Del.) 352; Mousely v. Allmond, 4 Harr. (Del.) 92.

In Vermont the cause need not be stated by the second justice where it cannot be certainly known. It is sufficient if he states the cause be insufficient, jurisdiction will be lost.[74] In case of an adjournment by referees for consideration, the record must show the adjournment.[75]

i. Witnesses and Jurors. The names of all witnesses and jurors should be entered on the justice's docket,[76] and the fact that they were sworn or affirmed.[77]

j. Reference. Where a reference is made, the justice's docket must show the existence of the conditions authorizing it,[78] and that both the justice and the referees acted in conformity with the statute.[79] The report of the referees must also be entered,[80] although this need not be done in extenso;[81] and in some jurisdictions the record must affirmatively show that the justice heard the proofs and allegations, although both parties appeared.[82]

k. Fees and Costs. The statutes very generally require that justices shall enter the fees and costs of an action separately in their dockets.[83] But these statutes are merely directory, and a failure to comply with their terms will not affect a judgment or execution.[84]

4. Signature and Verification. A justice's docket need not be verified by his signature;[85] and even where a statute requires the justice to certify that the amounts appearing to be due have not been paid, to his knowledge, his failure to do so will not affect the validity of judgments therein;[86] and the same is true in case of the failure of a justice to certify his docket to his successor or some other justice upon his office becoming vacant.[87]

5. Operation and Effect. A justice's docket is evidence of matter required to be stated therein,[88] but not of other matter.[89] In some states the docket of the justice is given conclusive effect,[90] while in others it is merely prima facie absence of the first justice generally. Holland v. Osgood, 8 Vt. 276.

evidence,[91] and, where necessary, it may be aided by evidence aliunde.[92] Where a case has been appealed, the justice's judgment may be shown by the record of the appellate court without the necessity of resorting to the justice's docket.[93]

6. Defects and Irregularities. The statutes prescribing the matters to be entered in a justice's docket are directory, and defects and irregularities in the entries, or a failure to enter some required matter, will not affect the validity of a judgment.[94]

7. Amendment. Although there are decisions to the contrary,[95] the weight of authority is to the effect that, after entry of judgment, the power of a justice over his docket ceases, and he cannot thereafter amend it.[96]

Appeal is the most usual mode of review of decisions of justices of the peace,[1] and upon an appeal the case is generally triable de novo in the appellate court.[2] In some states, however, a writ of error will lie, and whether in a given case appeal, error, or certiorari is the appropriate remedy is wholly dependent on statute.[3] The practice in an appeal from a justice's judgment is governed by the Iowa.— A writ of error, and not an appeal, is the proper remedy for a party aggrieved by a decision on a question of law. Belding v. Torrence, 39 Iowa 516; Leftwick v. Thornton, 18 Iowa 56. Upon questions of fact appeal is the proper remedy (Lane v. Goldsmith, 23 Iowa 240; Miller v. O'Neal, 9 Iowa 446), although, if the judgment is final, whether the errors be of law or fact, the party may, at his election, bring error or appeal (Griffin v. Moss, 3 Iowa 261). Appeal to, and not writ of error from, the district court is the remedy of one aggrieved by a justice's judgment, where the justice made no ruling except to enter judgment after trial upon the merits. Simmons v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 128 Iowa 306, 103 N. W. 954.

Louisiana.— Where a justice illegally acts as a police magistrate, and imposes a penalty, the remedy is to invoke the supervisory jurisdiction of the supreme court, and not by appeal (State v. Carreau, 45 La. Ann. 1446), and in no case can a party appeal to both the district or parish court and the supreme court (State v. Orleans Third Justice of Peace, 27 La. Ann. 669, 14 So. 292.

Maryland.— The appropriate remedy in forcible entry and detainer is by appeal. Roth v. State, 89 Md. 524, 43 Atl. 769.

New York.— For errors on the trial of a cause the remedy is by appeal. In all other cases the remedy is by certiorari. People v. Schoharie C. Pl., 2 Wend. 260.

North Carolina.— See Grissett v. Smith, 61 N. C. 164, holding that no appeal lay from erroneous proceedings in forcible entry and detainer, but the remedy was by writ of recordari or of false judgment, Rev. is rendered on appeal for an amount in excess of such jurisdiction, the appellate court may, on remittitur by plaintiff, render judgment for an amount within the justice's jurisdiction.[10]

(III) Waiver of Objections and Consent to Jurisdiction. While it has been held that, where the justice of the peace had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action, the parties cannot confer jurisdiction on the appellate court by consent,[11] the better view seems to be that where the appellate court has original as well as appellate jurisdiction of the cause,[12] jurisdiction of both the subject-matter and the person may be conferred upon it by waiver or consent.[13] But a general instead of a special appearance by an appellee on a motion to dismiss the appeal will not confer general jurisdiction on the appellate court, if no more is asked than a mere dismissal.[14]

(IV) Determination of Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of an appellate court is determinable by itself,[15] and in the cause appealed.[16] The justice's jurisdiction should affirmatively appear,[17] and it is proper for the appellate court to look to the whole record to determine whether it has jurisdiction.[18] The question of want of jurisdiction may be raised by motion to dismiss the proceedings,[19] or by objecting at the trial to the introduction of any evidence on behalf of plaintiff.[20]

Where on appeal the parties are allowed to amend their pleadings so that either can prove an amount in excess of the justice's jurisdiction, this does not show that such proof was made on the trial below, and that the justice had no jurisdiction.[21]

2. Decisions Reviewable — a. In General. Beyond the broad statement that the decisions of justices of the peace are nearly always, within certain limitations as to the amount involved,[22] reviewable by some higher court, it is impossible to lay down any general rule as to what decisions are subject to review and what are not. The whole subject is entirely dependent upon constitutional and statutory enactments, and these vary materially, not only in the different states, but at different times in the same state.[23]

Ohio.— Martin v. Armstrong, 12 Ohio St. 548 (appeal from judgment in replevin on verdict of jury); Wright v. Munger, 5 Ohio 441 (appeal in suit to recover militia fines).

Pennsylvania.—Sott v. Kelso, 4 Watts & S. 278 (appeal in scire facias against constable); Com. v. Bennett, 16 Serg. & R. 243 (appeal in suit to recover penalty for neglecting to serve notice under arbitration act of 1810); Guilky v. Gillingham, 3 Serg. & R. 93 (appeal from judgment upon scire facias on a judgment); Carlisle Borough v. Lifter, 4 Pa. Dist. 230 (appeal in suit for penalty under borough ordinance); Watson

b. Amount or Value in Controversy — (I) In General. Under the constitutions and statutes of many of the states the right of appeal from justices' judgments in certain cases is restricted to actions in which the amount claimed or in controversy or the value of the property in dispute exceeds a specified sum.[24] Where an appeal is unauthorized because the amount recovered is less than the jurisdictional limit, the filing of a declaration by plaintiff in the appellate court will not confer jurisdiction of the appeal on that court;[25] but, on the other hand, where the right of appeal actually exists and the pleadings are in writing, it cannot be taken away by the justice's failure to enter the amount claimed on his docket.[26]

(II) Determination of Jurisdiction — (A) Amount Claimed or in Controversy. In most of the states the amount actually claimed or in controversy, or the value of the property in dispute, is the criterion by which the jurisdiction of the appellate court is to be determined, irrespective of the verdict or judgment in the justice's court.[27]

v. Wehrly, 2 Pa. Dist. 530 (appeal from judgment on scire facias to revive judgment); Scott Tp. Poor Dist.'s Appeal, 9 Pa. Co. (D) Effect of Set-Off or Counter-Claim. A set-off or counter-claim, filed in good faith, and not merely for the purpose of obtaining an appeal,[30] if of sufficient amount, will in most jurisdictions be considered as the amount in controversy, so as to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court, where the amount claimed by plaintiff is insufficient to do so.[31] But where a set-off or counter-claim is filed which has no connection with the action, and which is disregarded by the justice, and is not involved in the judgment, it cannot be made the basis of an appeal;[32] and the same is true where a defendant neglects to comply with an order of the justice to make his counter-claim more definite and certain, and it is consequently not considered.[33] A defendant will not be permitted to increase the sum demanded by him in the justice's court so as to confer appellate jurisdiction;[34] nor can plaintiff's demand and defendant's counter-claim be added together for the purpose, but either must of itself exceed the jurisdictional minimum.[35]

(E) Waiver and Consent to Jurisdiction. While it has been held that an objection to an appeal because the sum involved is below the statutory minimum is waived by delaying to raise it until after trial and judgment,[36] the view more conformable to authority would seem to be that consent cannot confer jurisdiction on the appellate court over the subject-matter,[37] unless that court has original as well as appellate jurisdiction.[38]

That a set-off was not maintainable in whole or in part, and that the justice refused to note it on his docket, is not sufficient proof of the bad faith of defendant in filing it, and the appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that the set-off was filed merely for the purpose of enabling defendant to appeal. appeals from the judgment of a justice of the peace to show affirmatively that the appellate court has jurisdiction.[39] The amount in controversy is to be determined by the pleadings filed in the case,[40] from the justice's docket,[41] or from the record on appeal.[42] In replevin the matter in demand is the property itself together with the damages for its taking and detention,[43] while in a proceeding to establish a lien on property, the value of the property determines the amount in controversy, irrespective of the amount of the debt.[44] Where an action is brought for a certain sum, and a portion of the amount claimed is admitted to be due, and tender thereof is made, the difference between the amount claimed and that tendered is the amount in controversy, for the purposes of appeal.[45] A plea in abatement to an appeal need not allege that the judgment rendered was for less than the statutory minimum, but is sufficient if it alleges that it was for a specified sum within that amount.[46]

(B) Interest and Costs as Part of Amount. While interest may be included in several states to bring the amount in controversy above the statutory minimum,[47] costs are not to be computed as a part of the matter in controversy in determining the right of appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace.[48]

(C) Reductions and Remissions of Amount, and Indorsements. In some states it is held that the right of appeal from a justice's judgment is so fixed by the amount claimed in the pleadings or bill of particulars that it cannot be taken away by reductions or remissions made by plaintiff, whatever his purpose may be;[49] while in others the amount of plaintiff's demand may be reduced[50] or he may remit a part of his recovery before appeal,[51] so as to deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction. After appeal neither party can reduce or waive his claim[52] or enter a remittitur, so as either to give or defeat jurisdiction.[53] If the face of a note exceeds the appealable minimum, it cannot be reduced by indorsements below that amount, so as to deprive defendant of his right of appeal,[54] at all events after the trial before the justice.[55]

c. Finality of Determination — (I) In General. Until the rendition of final judgment by a justice of the peace no appeal lies.[56] Except that justice's judgments are construed more liberally, there is no difference in principle as to what constitutes a final judgment in their courts and what constitutes one in a court of record,[57] and a judgment will be regarded as final within the meaning of the statutes relating to appeals, where all the issues of law and fact necessary to be determined were determined, and the case completely disposed of, so far as the

be taken from the new judgment, and not from the order setting aside the granting of a new trial;[64] and where a judgment is a nullity, and after notice to defendant plaintiff appears and another judgment is rendered, an appeal is properly taken from the latter.[65] So too a defendant who has superseded a judgment against him by confessing a new judgment and obtaining a stay cannot prosecute an appeal from the original judgment.[66] Where, in Texas, judgment is rendered for plaintiff against both the defendant and an intervener, and also one for the defendant against the intervener on a counter-claim, the intervener cannot appeal from the latter judgment alone.[67]

(v) Judgments After Appearance, and on Verdict or Award. In some jurisdictions a defendant who has appeared generally may appeal from a judgment against him, although he was not present at the trial, and did not contest the case on the merits.[76] In a few jurisdictions no appeal lies from a justice's judgment rendered upon the verdict of a jury,[77] and in Iowa the same is true of a judgment entered upon an award;[78] but in other states an appeal lies both in the former[79] and in the latter case.[80]

(vi) Judgments of Nonsuit or Dismissal. As has been previously stated,[81] judgments of nonsuit or dismissal are very generally regarded as final judgments, from which the party aggrieved may appeal.[82]

(vii) Questions of Fact or Law. Under some statutes an appeal lies from a judgment or order of a justice of the peace which is in effect final, whether it be upon matter of law or fact;[83] under others an appeal only lies on questions of law;[84] and under others questions of law are to be reviewed on error and not by appeal.[85]

appealable in most jurisdictions.[87] But error does not lie from a ruling of a justice of the peace refusing to vacate and discharge an attachment or garnishment process,[88] and the action of a justice in ordering a garnishee to pay money into court is not reviewable either by petition in error[89] or by appeal.[90] Where property has been seized on attachment, an appeal does not lie from the order or judgment of a justice in proceedings instituted to try the right of property therein.[91]

appealed from will not warrant the quashing of the proceedings;[93] and the failure of a justice to enter up a formal judgment on a verdict will not prevent an appeal, since the effect of a judgment will be given the verdict as soon as it is entered on the docket.[94]

3. Right of Review — a. In General. An appeal is purely a statutory privilege, and is not a matter of right. It is only by complying with the statutory requirements that one becomes entitled to the privilege of an appeal.[95] The privilege is, however, to be favored,[96] and the fact that the losing party may under some circumstances have the case reviewed by certiorari will not deprive him of a right of appeal given by statute.[97] A defendant against whom a judgment has been legally rendered cannot pay so much of the judgment as he admits to be due, and appeal as to the remainder, since otherwise the cause of action would not be the same in the appellate as in the justice's court.[98]

b. Persons Entitled — (I) In General. Generally speaking every person against whom a justice of the peace renders an appealable judgment is entitled to an appeal.[99] But one who was not a party to a judgment cannot appeal therefrom,[1] and where defendant has entered bail for an appeal, an appeal subsequently taken by plaintiff is properly dismissed.[2]

(II) In Attachment, Garnishment, and Replevin Proceedings. A garnishee may appeal from a judgment charging him,[3] as may an assignee for the benefit of creditors from a judgment against a trustee on an attachment against his assignor.[4] The claimant of property levied on under an attachment may appeal from an adverse judgment on his interplea,[5] and the claimant and holder of property, as disclosed by a garnishee in his answer, may appeal from a judgment charging the garnishee.[6] So too where a justice has jurisdiction, and renders judgment in favor of a garnishee, the defendant in the original attachment proceeding may appeal therefrom.[7] But a surety in replevin cannot prosecute an appeal in his own name to retry the issues made and determined between his principal and the defendant,[8] and where an attachment is levied on mortgaged property in the possession of one summoned as garnishee, and the mortgagee intervenes and obtains an order discharging the attachment so far as the mortgaged property is concerned, he cannot assign for error a further order requiring the garnishee to pay a sum of money into court.[9] To enable the owner or consignee of a vessel which has been attached to take an appeal from the justice's judgment, he must make himself a party defendant to the suit before the justice.[10]

c. Waiver of Right. A party may waive his right of appeal, as by pleading to the merits after an adverse judgment on his plea in abatement,[11] or by an agreement entered upon the justice's docket.[12] So too a party executing a promissory note may therein waive his right of appeal,[13] so far at least as regards any defenses in existence at the time of the execution of the note;[14] and the action of the justice in entering judgment on such a note in proceedings otherwise regular will be final.[15]

d. Loss of Right. A party who has obtained a stay of execution cannot thereafter appeal,[16] and where a party appears by counsel, and before judgment obtains permission on his own motion to withdraw, and does withdraw his appearance, he will be considered as having had an opportunity to appeal, and a writ of error will not lie.[17] So too a party who has prosecuted a certiorari cannot afterward have an appeal.[18] On the other hand the payment of costs by plaintiff,[19] or the payment into court by defendant of the amount of the judgment,[20] will not deprive plaintiff of his right of appeal; nor can a judgment creditor deprive the debtor of his right to an appeal or writ of error by filing a transcript of his judgment in the circuit court within the time allowed for such appeal.[21]

ings,[26] can be objected to for the first time on appeal or error; and objections to plaintiff's right to maintain the action,[27] or to the evidence introduced on the trial,[28] must be made in the justice's court, or they cannot be considered on appeal. But the fact that plaintiff does not move that a verdict be directed in his favor does not constitute a waiver of his right to insist on appeal that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence.[29]

b. Acts Without Jurisdiction. It cannot be objected for the first time on appeal that the justice had no jurisdiction over defendant's person,[30] or that the action was not brought in the proper place;[31] but the rule is well settled in most jurisdictions that an objection to the jurisdiction over the subject-matter cannot be waived, and may be made for the first time in the appellate court.[32] But where there is no complaint, and it does not appear in the summons that the amount in

Objection that title to land is involved.— In Pennsylvania a justice has authority to try actions of trespass for injuries to real controversy is beyond the justice's jurisdiction, an objection on that ground cannot be made on appeal;[33] and after trial on the merits defendant cannot on appeal raise the question of jurisdiction because the complaint did not affirmatively show that the premises in question were situated in the justice's precinct.[34] So too an objection to the jurisdiction is too late, where it is made for the first time in the supreme court after a general appeal to the circuit court, which defendant contended had jurisdiction, and which tried the case on the merits.[35]

c. Motions For New Trial and to Set Aside Default. A motion for a new trial is not generally a condition precedent to the right to appeal from a justice's judgment,[36] but under some statutes such a motion is necessary on an appeal to review an exclusion of evidence,[37] or on a petition in error to review an action tried by a jury;[38] while under others the overruling of a motion for a new trial is a prerequisite to an appeal.[39] Where a defendant has suffered judgment by default, he must make a motion within the time prescribed by statute to have it set aside, or his appeal will be dismissed.[40]

5. Parties — a. In General. Only the persons who were parties to the judgment need be brought before the appellate court;[41] but if one of two joint debtors is summoned, and he alone appears and makes defense in the name of both, he may appeal in the name of both, without summons and severance, if it does not appear that his co-defendant refuses to join in the appeal.[42] The pendente lite purchaser of a judgment may continue to prosecute the claim in the name of his assignor, when appealed by defendant;[43] but a stakeholder in arbitration proceedings is not bound to appeal from a judgment against him, although he must allow a party interested to use his name in an appeal, upon indemnity being given.[44] Where the action must be tried de novo and the adverse parties be summoned to answer, an indorsement by an attorney on the appeal-bond that one of the parties enters his appearance, does not make him a party.[45]

b. Appeal by One or More of Several Parties — (I) In General. An appeal may in most jurisdictions be taken by one or more of several parties against whom judgment has been rendered in a justice's court, without joining his co-parties.[46]

(II) Effect. In Illinois, where one of several defendants appeals, the case should be docketed against the appellant only;[47] but in Kentucky an appeal by one defendant brings all the other defendants into the appellate court,[48] and the same is true in Nebraska where the interests of the several defendants are inseparably connected.[49] Where judgment has been rendered against a defendant and his sureties on a bond, an appeal by him inures to the benefit of the sureties, although they do not join therein.[50] Where an action has been dismissed as to one defendant, an appeal by his co-defendant does not vacate the judgment of dismissal and bring the former into the appellate court.[51]

c. Intervention of Parties. As a general rule one not a party to the action in the justice's court cannot intervene and become a party upon appeal from the judgment rendered therein;[52] and where a garnishee appeals from the justice's judgment against him, it is error for the appellate court to allow the principal defendant to intervene as a party in the garnishment proceedings.[53] But in Tennessee one who appeals from a judgment, and appears in the appellate court, in an action to which he is not a party, makes himself a party for the purpose of a trial de novo, and the appeal should not be dismissed when the successful party makes no motion to dismiss;[54] and in Alabama, in an action governed by the general rules applicable to ejectment, or the corresponding statutory action, a landlord may intervene and appeal from a judgment against his tenant."[55]

d. Death of Party. Where a party dies pending an appeal, and the cause of action survives, the action may be revived by or against his personal representative, on compliance with the statutory requirements.[56]

6. Requisites and Proceedings For Transfer of Cause — a. Co., 72 Mo. 326 (a petition for review of a judgment in attachment, rendered on publication of notice without service or appearance, must be served on plaintiff personally); Cochran v. Bird, 2 Mo. 141 (a party who does not enter his recognizance until after the day of trial does not "pray for an appeal" on such day, within a statute requiring written notice of appeal after such day, if no appeal is prayed for on that day).

New Jersey.— Bennet v. Kite, 9 N. J. L. 106, holding that an indorsement on the back of the transcript, made the day after the certificate bears date, to the effect "that the defendant appeared and filed an affidavit, and produced bond, and demanded an appeal," is not evidence of the demanding of the appeal.

New York.— The affidavit for allowance of an appeal on the ground of newly discovered evidence must set forth not only the testimony and proceedings before the justice but the substance of the newly discovered evidence. People v. Saratoga C. Pl., 18 Wend. 596.

Pennsylvania.— An appeal is properly refused when the petition shows no better reason than that appellant is dissatisfied with the result, and that two of his witnesses were in adjoining states at the time of the hearing. Thompson v. Preston, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 154. See also Com. v. Menjou, 174 Pa. St. 25, 34 Atl. 301, in which it was held that the common pleas properly refused to allow an appeal where the petition did not account for the petitioner's non-appearance at the trial.

And see Tichenor v. Hewson, 14 N. J. L. 26, where it is held that in granting or refusing an appeal a justice acts judicially, and is to decide whether an appeal lies, whether it is claimed in due time, and as to the form of the appeal-bond.

The mere insufficiency of the recognizance offered is not ground for refusing an appeal, without showing a refusal of those to be bound to enter into a sufficient recognizance. Levy v. Inglish, 4 Ark. 65. Compare Moulder v. Anderson, 63 Mo. App. 34, construing Rev. St. § 6340, providing that no appeal allowed by a justice shall be dismissed for want of affidavit or recognizance, and holding that it does not apply where no appeal was allowed, and the record shows that, although an appeal was prayed, the justice merely certified to the record, without allowing the appeal.

61. A justice, having in his possession the docket of another justice, of whom he is not the successor, cannot grant an appeal from entered in the name of the proper party,[62] and be made returnable as required by law.[63] The entry of the allowance of an appeal on the justice's docket is not essential to its validity,[64] and it is not necessary that an officer allowing an appeal shall add the title of his office to his signature.[65] If a justice refuses to permit bail to be entered for an appeal, he thereby denies the appeal itself.[66]

b. Time For Taking Proceedings — (i) In General. Proceedings for an appeal or writ of error must be taken in the time prescribed by law, and when not so taken the appellate court acquires no jurisdiction.[67] Conversely an appeal from an order denying a new trial before the order is entered is ineffectual.[68]

(II) Commencement of Period of Limitation. The time within which an appeal or writ of error may be prosecuted to a justice's judgment begins to run, in many jurisdictions, from the date of the rendition and entry of judgment,[69] or from notice thereof, where notice is required.[70] In some states, however, the time does not begin to run until the final action of the justice in respect to the judgment has been had.[71]

(III) Waiver of Objections to Delay. An objection that an appeal has been taken after the time allowed by law is waived by a general appearance of the appellee, without raising the objection.[72]

72. Connecticut.— Spencer v. Broughton, 77 Conn. 38, 58 Atl. 236.

(iv) Extension of Time. The appellate court cannot extend the time fixed by law within which an appeal from a justice's judgment must be taken;[73] nor can a justice, after the expiration of the time fixed, by granting, without plaintiff's consent, a rule to show cause why the judgment should not be opened, secure to the defendant another like period from the decision on the rule, in which to appeal.[74]

(v) Relief in Case of Failure to Proceed in Time—(a) In General. Under the statutes of some of the states an appeal may be allowed from a justice's judgment by the appellate court after the expiration of the regular time for appeal, where the appellant brings himself within the terms of the statute.[75] An application for leave to appeal is a special proceeding materially affecting legal rights; and the court can obtain jurisdiction only by personal service of the notice required on the adverse party.[76]

(b) Grounds—(1) In General. As expressed in the statutes, an appeal may be allowed for good cause shown, or where the appellant was prevented from taking his appeal in time by circumstances not under his control, or by the improper conduct of the justice or of the appellee; and no more definite statement is possible, since each case necessarily depends upon its special facts and circumstances.[77]

(2) Absence or Fault of Justice. If, without fault on his part, a party desiring to appeal from a justice's judgment is prevented from doing so by reason of the absence of the justice,[78] or by reason of some act or omission of his,[79] an appeal may be allowed after the time prescribed by law; but if the court finds, on sufficient evidence, that the failure to enter the appeal in time was due to the party's lack of diligence, the appellate court will not interfere.[80]

(B) Who May Make and Take Affidavit. The affidavit may usually be made by an attorney for the appellant or plaintiff in error,[90] and under some statutes it is not necessary that it be sworn to before the justice from whom the appeal is taken.[91] In Pennsylvania the president of a school board may make the affidavit and take an appeal without the authority of the board.[92]

(IV) Contents and Sufficiency. The statutes of the various jurisdictions determine the necessary allegations of an affidavit for appeal, and to be sufficient such affidavit must comply substantially at least with the statutory requirements.[93] But if it does this,[94] and sufficiently identifies the parties[95] and the judgment appealed from,[96] it is sufficient. Where the affidavit is general, and relates only to the merits, matters connected with process, or any question arising upon it, cannot be corrected by a retrial on the merits in the appellate court.[97]

a prerequisite to an appeal,[6] although the justice may refuse to send up the transcript until they are paid.[7] If, however, the justice does send up the transcript, he waives payment, and the fact that his fees have not been paid is no ground for dismissing the appeal.[8] The failure of an appellant to pay the docket or filing fee, where required, is a failure to prosecute his appeal, and ground for dismissal;[9] or the appellee, on paying the fee and filing the transcript, or having the case docketed, as the statute may require, may obtain a judgment of affirmance.[10] But where the clerk dockets the case within the prescribed time, without payment of the fee, its subsequent payment by the appellee does not entitle him to an affirmance.[11]

Sufficiency of affidavit.—An affidavit which merely states that the party is unable to pay costs is insufficient. It must state that his inability arises from poverty. Miller v. Raub, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 209; Finney v. Tammany, 10 Kulp (Pa.) 304; Parr v. Sharretts, 14 York Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 183.

Necessity of security.— The Pennsylvania act of June 24, 1885, requiring appellant to pay costs before the making of the transcript, except where he makes an affidavit of poverty, does not permit one who makes such affidavit to appeal without giving security for costs as required by the Pennsylvania act of March 20, 1845. Marr v. Taylor, 5 Pa. Dist. 646.

Falsity of affidavit.— The justice may not

lee, and, on his failure to obey the order, dismiss the appeal.[14] If a party exempt from the payment of costs is prevented by the magistrate's demand for costs from perfecting his appeal, an appeal nunc pro tunc will be allowed.[15]

(III) Time For Payment and Excusing Failure to Pay in Time. While a justice is not entitled to his fees on appeal in advance,[16] statutory requirements and rules of court as to the time for the payment of costs, or of filing, docket, or jury fees must be complied with.[17] But where payment has not been made in time, the court may, for good cause shown, as that the omission was due to mistake or excusable neglect, permit payment to be made nunc pro tunc,[18] and in a proper case will set aside an affirmance obtained by the appellee.[19]

(IV) Costs and Fees Included. The costs and fees required to be paid by an appellant or plaintiff in error in order to perfect his appeal or writ are regulated by statutes and rules of court, which must be looked to in the different jurisdictions for a determination of the question.[20] Under some statutes a justice is refuse to allow appeal and to deliver the transcript because the affidavit is false, since it is not the fact of defendant's poverty, but the making of the affidavit, which entitles him to a transcript without payment of costs. Com. v. Greby, 10 Kulp (Pa.) 207. See also Simrell v. Hall, Wilcox (Pa.) 164, to the effect that an appeal in forma pauperis will not be stricken off for falsity in the affidavit. Michigan.— The costs of judgment, which Howell Annot. St. § 7003, requires appellant to pay to the justice within five days, include jury-fees. Swarthout v. McKnight, 99 Mich. 347, 58 N. W. 315.

Minnesota.— Fees of appellant's witnesses are not taxable as costs under the judgment. Trigg v. Larson, 10 Minn. 220.

Missouri.— A jury-fee must be paid on filing a transcript from a justice, the law of 1847 not having been repealed by Rev. St. (1855) p. 913, §§ 27-29, nor by the act of March 3, 1857, § 21. Bailey v. Lubke, 8 Mo. App. 57.

New Jersey.— See Carpenter v. Titus, 9 N. J. L. 90, where a rule of the common pleas requiring appellant, upon the return of the papers, and prior to the entry of the appeal, to pay the clerk one dollar, was held illegal.

New York.—Kenney v. Livery Stable Keeper's Assoc., 89 Hun 190, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 8 (costs of the action, under Code Civ. Proc. § 3047, include an allowance, under § 3129, to the prevailing party in a justice's court of Brooklyn of twelve dollars); Van Bussum v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 16 Misc. 40, 37 N. Y. Pennsylvania.— Under the act of June 24, 1885, it is the duty of the justice to demand bound to send up his transcript or return, whether his fees therefor have been paid or not;[21] under others the payment of such fees is a condition precedent to the right to maintain the appeal;[22] while under others the justice may require payment before making return or allowing the transcript to go out of his possession,[23] or make his return without such payment.[24] In Ohio on demand, and the tender of the proper fee, a justice is bound to give a transcript to the appellant, and cannot insist that the costs be first paid.[25]

(v) Sufficiency of Payment or Tender, and Evidence of Payment. As in all other questions relating to fees and costs on appeals from justices of the peace, the sufficiency of the payment or tender made, and the evidence required or sufficient to show payment, are controlled by the statutes of the various states.[26]

e. Bonds or Other Securities — (i) Necessity. The execution and filing of an appeal-bond, recognizance, or other security is generally a condition precedent to an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace,[27] and cannot be waived of the appellant all the costs of the action. Carbaugh v. Sanders, 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 361, 9 Pa. Dist. 13 (costs of plaintiff's witnesses included); Sunday v. Snayberger, 4 Pa. (II) Nature of Security Required. The nature of the security required to be given upon an appeal from a justice's judgment is controlled by the various state statutes, whose requirements must be observed.[30] Where a bond or recognizance is required by the statute, a deposit of money in lieu thereof is insufficient,[31] but in some jurisdictions a deposit is permitted by statute.[32]

(III) Who Required to Give Security and Appeals In Forma Pauperis. The general rule is that any party desiring to appeal from or prosecute a writ of error to a judgment of a justice of the peace must give the required security.[33] But under some statutes certain classes of persons are exempted from the necessity of giving security,[34] and in at least one state a person unable to give a bond through poverty may be allowed to appeal upon making the affidavit required by statute.[35] In Texas it is not necessary for the appellant to give a bond where no judgment is rendered against him, except for costs,[36] and a plaintiff may appeal from a judgment in his favor for only a part of his claim, without giving bond.[37]

(IV) Parties—(A) Obligors. The appellant, his agent, or attorney usually gives bond or enters into a recognizance on appeal,[38] but under some statutes it is

Bond in individual name of partner.—Where plaintiff's affidavit for a writ of sequestration against the firm of M. & Co. stated that M was a member of the firm, but that the other partners were unknown, it is proper for M, on appeal from a judgment for only necessary for the surety or sureties to sign the undertaking.[39] Although, in a bond on appeal from a joint judgment against two persons, one of them fails to bind himself to pay such judgment as may be rendered on appeal against the two jointly, the bond is good as to the other;[40] and where an appeal is prayed for by one of two defendants, but the recognizance is entered into by both, the appeal is well taken.[41]

(B) Obligees. An appeal-bond or recognizance must as a rule[42] be made payable to all parties to the judgment whose interests are adverse to those of the appellant.[43] But in Kansas and Ohio a bond which is good in all other respects, and shows the parties to the judgment, will be upheld, although the obligee is not specially named in it.[44]

(C) Sureties—(1) IN GENERAL. An undertaking on appeal which is signed only by the applicants is insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court,[45] and where a statute requires two or more sureties, an undertaking with one only is bad.[46] As a rule any person not a party to the appeal is a competent surety on the appeal-bond,[47] but in some jurisdictions attorneys are disqualified by statute or rules of court.[48]

(2) JUSTIFICATION OF SURETIES. The justice from whose judgment an appeal is taken may require the persons offered as sureties to justify,[49] and where the appellee is dissatisfied with the sureties upon the appeal-bond or other security, he may file exceptions to their sufficiency within the time prescribed by law, and unless they justify in the time and manner required,[50] or unless the appellant gives other sufficient sureties, the appeal is ineffectual for any purpose.[51] Notice

(B) Amount of Bond or Security. The amount in which an undertaking on appeal shall be given is usually fixed by statute, and an appeal will be dismissed where the bond or other security does not conform to the statutory requirements in this respect.[87] But where a statute does not specify any particular sum or penalty, a bond is sufficient which does not specify the sum;[88] and where the bond is required to be conditioned that the appellant will prosecute his appeal with effect or pay all costs adjudged against him the sureties cannot limit their liability by giving bond in a specified sum, and such a bond is defective.[89] On the other hand, a party cannot be deprived of his right of appeal by the justice's arbitrarily or ignorantly demanding a bond in a greater penalty than that authorized by the statute, and refusing to approve a proper bond tendered in due time.[90]

Mandamus will not lie to compel a justice to approve an appeal-bond after expiration of the time for appeal, when it has been tendered without any justification by the sureties, and the justice objects to their sufficiency, even though they possess the requisite qualifica-

If a justice erroneously rejects an undertaking offered in due time, he may correct the mistake by receiving it afterward, and the appeal will be good;[99] but where he has accepted an appeal-bond, and it is found to be in too small a sum, he cannot recall his acceptance and demand another bond.[1]

(B) Acts Constituting Approval and Necessity of Indorsement. An entry on an undertaking on appeal that it is approved is not a judicial but a clerical act, and the omission to make the entry will not affect the validity of the undertaking.[2] It is sufficient if the record shows that the justice received the undertaking and allowed the appeal,[3] and his approval may be inferred from his filing the undertaking in proper time,[4] or from his retaining it in his custody after examining it and expressing himself as satisfied.[5] Where it does not appear from the record that an appeal-bond was filed with the justice, or approved by him, parol evidence is admissible to show the facts.[6]

(C) Effect of Approval. The approval of an appeal bond or recognizance by the justice determines the sufficiency of the sureties;[7] and even if the undertaking is defective the appeal is nevertheless taken, and it is the duty of the adverse party to follow the case to the appellate court.[8]

(VIII) Amendment and New Security—(A) In General. At any time prior to the expiration of the time limited for appeal defects in a bond or undertaking may be cured by amendment in the justice's court or by filing a new bond or undertaking.[9] And where an appellate court has acquired jurisdiction of a case on appeal from a justice's court, it may allow or require the appellant to amend a defective bond or recognizance, or to give a new undertaking.[10] But court acquires no jurisdiction, and, in the absence of statutory authority,[12] it cannot allow an undertaking to be filed nunc pro tunc.[13]

(B) Procedure. An objection to an appeal-bond or other security may be taken by plea in abatement;[14] but the more usual practice is to move for a rule or order against the appellant to compel him to amend or renew the undertaking, and if it is adjudged informal or otherwise insufficient, it is the duty of the court to enter a rule that, unless the appellant files a sufficient undertaking by a day named, the appeal will be dismissed.[15] Where an appellant is adjudged to furnish additional security on an ex parte hearing, he must have due notice thereof, or his failure to furnish it will not be ground for dismissal;[16] and where the sufficiency of the sureties on appellant's undertaking is excepted to, and he files a new undertaking, he must give notice thereof, or his appeal will be dismissed.[17] After an appeal has been dismissed for want of sufficient security, it is proper to refuse an application to amend, so long as the judgment of dismissal stands.[18]

(IX) Waiver of Defects or of Delay in Filing. By appearing generally and pleading, or obtaining a continuance, or going to trial, without timely objection, an appellee waives any defects in the appeal-bond or recognizance, or the failure to file it within the required time,[19] provided the defects are not such as affirmatively show due service, the presumption is that there was none, and the burden to prove that fact is on the appellant, in case objection is made.[38] A slight variance between the notice of appeal served on the justice and the copy served on the appellee is not ground for dismissing the appeal.[39] The return of a constable upon service of notice of appeal need not be sworn to.[40]

(B) On Whom Service Must or May Be Made. In some jurisdictions the notice of appeal must be served personally upon the justice and the appellee, if they are within the county,[41] and substituted service can only be had where the justice or appellee is absent,[42] or where the appellee is a non-resident of the county;[43] but in other jurisdictions, service of notice of appeal may be made on the attorney or agent of the adverse party.[44] Service of notice of appeal on one partner is notice to both,[45] and where the appellee is a corporation, service may be made on the manager.[46] The attorney who represented the appellee before the justice is not entitled to notice of appeal,[47] and after the appellee's death and before the appointment of an administrator, there is no person on whom service can be made.[48] In New York, where a notice of appeal, specifying the particulars in which the judgment should have been more favorable to the appellant, is served upon the respondent, the latter's offer of acceptance of appellant's terms must be served not only on appellant, but also upon the justice.[49]

St. (1879) § 3055, if appellee does not reside in the county, "and has no agent in the suit therein, within the knowledge of the justice," notice of appeal may be served by leaving a copy with the justice. If the justice knows that appellee has an attorney attending to his interests in the suit, notice left with the justice is insufficient. Southard v. Nelson, 43 Mo. App. 210.

In New York service on an attorney or agent can only be had when the appellee is a non-resident of the county (Duffy v. Morgan, 2 Sandf. 631; Andrews v. Snyder, 6 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 333; Schermerhorn v. Golief, Code Rep. N. S. 290), and such attorney or agent is a resident (Lake v. Kels, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. 37). Compare Bennett v. Kenyon, 5 N. Y. St. 496.

Under S. C. Code, § 360, service of notice of appeal cannot be made on an agent of a non-resident of the county, if such agent is also a non-resident. Sheldon v. Pearson, 42 S. C. 111, 20 S. E. 26.

These statutes are mandatory, and must be complied with, unless their requirements are waived by the appellee.[50]

(III) Requisites and Sufficiency—(A) In General. Where notice of appeal is not given at the trial,[51] it must be in writing and signed by the person giving it,[52] and must show that it is given by or on behalf of the appellant, or by someone authorized by him.[53] The notice must be definite and certain,[54] must

50. Idaho.— To effectuate an appeal the notice must be filed with the justice, a copy served on the adverse party, and the undertaking filed, within thirty days from the rendition of judgment; but the order in which these things are done is not material. Salt Lake Brewing Co. v. Gillman, 2 Ida. (Hasb.) 195, 10 Pac. 32.

Iowa.— Under Code (1873), § 4691, notice of appeal by a prosecuting witness must be given at the time judgment is rendered. State v. Knapf, 61 Iowa 522, 16 N. W. 590.

Louisiana.— Appellant has until the regular term of the district court to make service. State v. Voorhies, 49 La. Ann. 1562, 22 So. 880.

Missouri.— See Priest v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 85 Mo. 521; Dooley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 83 Mo. 103; Davis v. Schields, 14 Mo. App. 397, construing Rev. St. §§ 3056, 3057. And see Evans v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 58 Mo. App. 427, to the effect that where a change of venue is taken at the first term after an appeal, the first succeeding term of the court to which the venue is changed constitutes the second term of the appellate court for the purpose of notice of the appeal.

New York.— Notice may be served as soon as judgment is rendered (Griswold v. Van Deusen, 2 E. D. Smith 178), and, under the amendment of 1851, must be served in twenty days (Thomas v. Thomas, 18 Hun 481). See also Tullock v. Bradshaw, 1 Code Rep. 53, construing Code, tit. 9, c. 5, § 303.

Ohio.— Rev. St. § 6494, relating to appeals from an order of a justice overruling a motion to dissolve an attachment on giving notice of appeal, is sufficiently complied with if notice is given within ten days, as provided by section 6584, relating to appeals generally from justices. Bernard v. Schwartz, 22 Ohio Cir. Ct. 147, 12 Ohio Cir. Dec. 183.

Oregon.— Under Code, § 2119, an appeal is sufficient where both undertaking and notice are filed within thirty days after entry of judgment, as required by section 2118, and it is immaterial that the undertaking is filed first. Brown v. Jessup, 19 Oreg. 288, 24 Pac. 232.

South Carolina.— Under Code, §§ 359, 360, appellant shall, within five days after judgment, serve a notice, stating the grounds of appeal, on the justice and adverse party, and if the judgment is rendered on process not personally served, and defendant did not appear, he shall have five days after personal notice of the judgment to serve notice of appeal. Manuel v. Loveless, 56 S. C. 426, 35 S. E. 1, 54 S. C. 346, 32 S. E. 421. See also Foot v. Williams, 18 S. C. 601.

Texas.— Under Rev. St. art. 1639, appellant has ten days after judgment in which to file notice of appeal (Bach v. Ginacchio, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1315), but notice cannot be given after court has adjourned and in vacation, although a notice for a new trial was overruled in vacation (Williams v. Dennis, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1233).

United States.— See Kirk v. Armstrong, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,838*a*, Hempst. 283, to the effect that where an appeal is not taken on the day of trial, ten days' notice before the sitting of the next court authorized to try the same must be given to the opposite party.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Justices of the Peace," § 584.

51. A verbal notice of appeal, given by the justice in the presence of both parties at the trial, is sufficient. Richardson v. Debnam, 75 N. C. 390.

52. Where the adverse party is not present when appeal is prayed, a written notice must be given and served. Marion v. Tilley, 119 N. C. 473, 26 S. E. 26.

Indorsement on the outside of notice held sufficient signature see Burrows v. Norton, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 550.

A notice signed "J. H. B.," where the judgment was rendered against "H. B.," is insufficient, since it does not show that the appeal was taken by the party against whom judgment was rendered. Stone v. Baer, 82 Mo. App. 339.

Where the state of Ohio prosecutes an appeal notice entered on the record is proper notice of appeal, as Rev. St. § 6408, requiring a written notice to be given, does not apply to the state. Humphreys v. State, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. 238.

53. Palmer v. Peterson, 46 Wis. 401, 1 N. W. 73. Compare Rutledge v. Humboldt County Super. Ct., 67 Cal. 85, 7 Pac. 144, where it was held that the omission of the persons signing to designate themselves as attorneys for appellant will not render a motion of appeal ineffectual.

"Strict accuracy is by no means necessary. . . . Mistakes, however numerous, are immaterial if the notice yet contains enough to fairly identify the judgment, the parties, and the court, and to show that it was made by the party appealing, or some one authorized to do so, which authority need not expressly appear, it being sufficient if it be fairly inferable from the language of the notice and the manner in which it is signed." Patrick v. Baldwin, 109 Wis. 342, 344, 85 N. W. 350.

Signature of attorneys held sufficient see Igo v. Bradford, 110 Mo. App. 670, 85 S. W. 618.

54. An appeal from the "whole judgment" be from the judgment rendered,[55] and, under some statutes, must state whether the appeal is from the whole or a part of the judgment,[56] and whether it is taken on questions of law or fact, or both.[57] It must be properly entitled,[58] and where the caption and venue show that the appeal is taken from a judgment rendered in one county, by a justice in and for that county, the fact that the notice is directed to him as justice of another county is immaterial.[59] Where a notice of appeal is sufficient and regular, the appeal will not be dismissed because a new trial is demanded, and the case is not one in which the appellant is entitled to a new trial;[60] nor is a notice of appeal from a judgment in an action of forcible entry and detainer invalidated by a clause limiting the appeal to questions of law alone.[61]

(B) Description of Judgment. A notice of appeal, to be effective, must properly designate the judgment appealed from, by a sufficient description to show the applicability of the notice to the judgment, without resort to extrinsic evidence.[62] But the object of a notice of appeal is accomplished when the appellate court can ascertain from an inspection of the notice what particular judgment the appellant complains of.[63] is sufficiently definite. Price v. Van Caneghan, 5 Cal. 123.

Notice of intention to appeal is insufficient. Hempstead v. Darby, 2 Mo. 25.

55. See Clark v. Deloach Mills Mfg. Co., 110 N. C. 111, 14 S. E. 518, in which defendant attempted to appeal, not from the judgment generally, but by a limited notice of appeal in the nature of a special appearance.

56. Kirkpatrick v. Dakota Cent. R. Co., 4 Dak. 481, 33 N. W. 103, construing Justices Code, § 89, and holding that a notice that defendant "appeals from the judgment entered" is sufficient.

St. (1894) § 5068, providing that on appeal from a justice the party appealing shall serve a notice on the opposite party specifying the grounds of appeal generally, and that the appeal is taken on questions of fact alone or on questions of law alone or on questions of both fact and law, notice that defendant has appealed from the judgment of a justice "and from the whole of said judgment, and a new trial of said action is demanded," is insufficient. Notices liberally construed.—"The appellate court should construe a notice of appeal liberally, and hold that jurisdiction is conferred by its service if, by fair construction or reasonable intendment, it can ascertain therefrom that the appeal is taken from a judgment in a particular action." Allen v. Byerly, 32 Oreg. 117, 119, 48 Pac. 474. But see State v. Hammond, 92 Mo. App. 231, where it is said that great particularity is required in notices of appeal, since their function is much the same as that of an original summons.

Effect of amendment of transcript.—Where after service of a sufficient notice, the justice without rule of court filed an amended transcript which varied the amount of the judgment from that given in the original transcript, it was held that the court, in passing on the sufficiency of the notice, could not consider the amended transcript. Thomas v. Moore, 46 Mo. App. 22.

(c) Statement of Grounds of Appeal. In several states the notice of appeal is required by statute to state the grounds on which the appeal is taken.[64]

(iv) Substitutes For Notice. Neither actual knowledge of an appeal by the appellee,[65] nor the filing of an appeal-bond,[66] nor notice to the appellee of an application for a change of venue from the court to which the appeal is returnable,[67] nor a request to the justice by defendant's attorney, made before judgment, and in the presence of plaintiff, that he will in case he renders judgment against defendant make an entry that he prays an appeal,[68] will take the place of a notice of appeal. But in Ohio the filing within the time limited of a transcript of a justice's judgment in the court of common pleas by a fiduciary who has filed a bond within the state for the faithful performance of his duties appeals the case, although no notice was given the justice of his intention to appeal.[69]

(v) Defects and Amendment of Notice. Where a notice of appeal is defective, the remedy is by motion to dismiss the appeal in the appellate court;[70] but a defective notice may be amended in the appellate court,[71] unless the defect is one which goes to the jurisdiction of that court.[72]

(vi) Waiver of Want of Notice and of Defects. The voluntary appearance of the appellee,[73] or of his attorney in the action before the jus-

A notice is insufficient which merely alleges that the judgment was against law and evidence (Amsdell v. McCaffrey, 16 Hun (N. tice,[74] and taking part in the proceedings in the appellate court, waives the want of, or defects in, the notice of appeal. So too a stipulation for the trial of the case at a certain term of the appellate court is a waiver of notice,[75] and the same is true where the appellee accepts service of notice to take depositions after the appeal, appears at the taking of the depositions, objects to certain questions asked of the witness, and has the grounds of objection noted.[76] On the other hand, an admission of service of a notice of appeal, void for want of signature, does not stop the appellee from taking advantage of the defective notice,[77] and a special appearance to ask an affirmance for failure to give notice does not waive the want of notice,[78] unless upon refusal of his motion the appellee enters into the trial.[79]

g. Entry, Docketing, and Appearance — (I) Entry and Docketing — (A) In General. Until an appeal is filed in the appellate court, that court has no jurisdiction of the case,[80] and unless the appellant has the appeal entered and the case docketed, the court may dismiss the appeal,[81] or, upon the complaint of the adverse party, affirm the judgment;[82] where both parties appeal, only one cause should be docketed in the appellate court,[83] and in Texas the parties stand, not as appellant and appellee, but as plaintiff and defendant, as they stood before the justice, and the case should be so docketed.[84] Where a judge grants an appeal in vacation, the written application and proofs, as well as the bond and the order granting the appeal, should be transmitted to the clerk of the appellate court, and entered by him in the order book under the title of the case, and a copy served on the justice.[85] In Georgia it is the duty of the clerk of the appellate court to docket appeals, and if this duty is omitted at the proper time he may perform it at any time thereafter, without leave or direction from the court, and without notice to the appellant.[86]

(B) Time For Entry and Docketing. The requirements of the statutes as to the time within which an appeal from a justice's judgment shall be entered and docketed must be complied with, or the appeal will be dismissed or the judgment below affirmed upon motion of the appellee.[87] The court may, however, in the

agree that two causes pending on appeal shall be tried together, such an agreement is an appearance to both suits, and a waiver of notice of appeal.[91] In order to secure a hearing or to prevent a default, the appellee must enter his appearance in the time limited by law,[92] and the mere delivery by him to the clerk of a notice of trial does not amount to an entry of appearance.[93]

(B) Operation and Effect — (1) In General. A general appearance in the appellate court confers jurisdiction over the person, and waives defects in the process, or in its service or return, in the justice's court.[94]

(2) As Waiver of Objections to Jurisdiction Over Subject-Matter. An appellate court does not acquire jurisdiction of the subject-matter by a general appearance on appeal,[95] except in those cases where, although the justice had no jurisdiction, it has original or concurrent jurisdiction, and the case is triable de novo.[96] Where no judgment has been rendered by a justice, appearance on appeal in the appellate court will not confer jurisdiction on it.[97]

And see Jones v. Brown, 1 Pa. Dist. 675, holding void a rule of court in conflict with the Pennsylvania act of March 22, 1810, section 4, which provides that from the entry of an appeal upon the prothonotary's docket the suit shall "take grade with, and be subject to the same rules, as other actions where the parties are considered to be in court."

In Illinois, under Hurd Rev. St. § 178, an appearance by the appellee ten days before the term at which trial is demanded, or the service of summons upon him, or the equivalent of service as provided by the statute, must exist, or the court is without jurisdiction to do anything in the case, in the absence, and without the consent, of either party, except to continue it. (3) As Waiver of Objections to Proceedings For Appeal. By appearing generally on appeal, an appellee waives all defects and irregularities in the proceedings for appeal.[98] But where no appeal has in fact been taken or allowed, the appellate court acquires no jurisdiction, although the parties appear and take part in the trial.[99]

(c) Special Appearance. Any appearance by the appellee in the appellate court for a special object, such as a motion to dismiss, or to affirm for failure to prosecute, is not such an appearance as will confer jurisdiction upon the court to try the case;[1] and where a defendant has appeared specially in the justice's court, his entry on a special appeal from an adverse judgment on such appearance does not waive the objection, and confers no general jurisdiction on the appellate court.[2]

7. Effect of Appeal or Error, and Supersedeas — a. On Powers and Proceedings of Lower Court. When a case is transferred from a justice's to an appellate court by an appeal or writ of error, the powers of the lower court are in general suspended.[3] But a justice may after appeal amend his record so as to show a final judgment,[4] and where notice of appeal and the undertaking are filed after verdict, but before the entry of judgment, he has authority to enter up judgment on the verdict.[5]

b. As Waiver of Objections to Jurisdiction of Lower Court. By taking an appeal from the judgment of a justice the party appealing waives objections to the jurisdiction of the justice over his person;[6] but does not waive objections to the jurisdiction over the subject-matter,[7] unless the case is triable in the appellate court as an original action.[8]

c. As Waiver of Defects in Process and Proceedings. The taking of an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace is a waiver of defects in the original process, or in its service or return,[9] and, where the case is triable de novo on ant on one, and against him on the other, and he alone appeals, the appeal brings up the whole case, and the first cause of action is not res judicata.[13]

e. In Attachment and Garnishment Proceedings. An appeal from a judgment on the merits does not carry attachment or garnishment proceedings to the appellate court,[14] or release plaintiff from responsibility on the attachment bond;[15] and where attached property has been released by the justice as exempt, the suing out of a writ of error will not preserve the attachment lien, if no supersedeas bond is filed.[16] The giving of an appeal-bond in attachment proceedings releases the lien of the attachment,[17] and an appeal from a justice's judgment, on which an immediate execution has issued, vacates a judgment on a garnishment levied under such execution.[18] Defects and irregularities in the proceedings before the justice are cured by appeal,[19] and an objection to the jurisdiction over defendant's person, in a proceeding commenced by foreign attachment, on the ground that he was in fact a resident, is waived by his appeal from the justice's judgment;[20] but where a justice fails to acquire jurisdiction in an attachment proceeding on account of irregularities in the papers, an appearance by the defendant or garnishee on appeal will not confer jurisdiction upon the appellate court in the attachment and garnishment proceedings.[21] Where an attachment defendant does not appeal from a judgment against him, or join in a garnishee's appeal from an adverse judgment in the same proceeding, the former judgment is not vacated by the garnishee's appeal, but remains in full force and effect.[22] In Ohio an attachment defendant may prosecute a petition in error from an order overruling his motion to discharge the attachment, and a subsequent appeal by him from a judgment in the principal case will not destroy his right to have his petition in error adjudicated.[23]

g. Supersedeas or Stay of Proceedings. A duly perfected appeal operates, in most jurisdictions, to vacate or suspend the judgment appealed from;[25] but in others an appellant, in order to obtain a stay of further proceedings under the judgment, must give a supersedeas or stay bond.[26] An appeal is ineffectual to stay execution unless fully perfected,[27] and where execution has already issued, the appellant should himself, or by his attorney, serve an order recalling the execution.[28] Where an appeal has been dismissed, and an execution has issued on the judgment, a rule will be granted on the sheriff to stay proceedings under the execution, pending mandamus proceedings to compel the reinstatement of the appeal.[29] is taken and approved by the justice, even if it is defective, the appeal is taken from the judgment, and the adverse party must follow the case to the appellate court.

Iowa.— Under Code (1873), § 3584, an appeal is deemed in the circuit court by the filing of the justice's return in the office of the clerk. Goodman v. Allen, 72 Iowa 616, 34 N. W. 445.

Michigan.— The circuit court has no jurisdiction to try an appeal until a return is made to the appeal from the justice's court. People v. Allegan Cir. Judge, 29 Mich. 487.

Minnesota.— The circuit court "becomes possessed of" and acquires complete jurisdiction of an action when the appeal is perfected, and the justice's return filed. Christian v. Dorsey, 69 Minn. 346, 72 N. W. 568.

Missouri.— Jurisdiction attaches from the granting of the appeal, not from the filing of the transcript. Sullivan v. Sanders, 9 Mo. App. 75.

Nebraska.— See Fulton v. Ryan, 33 Nebr. 456, 50 N. W. 430, in which plaintiff, after recovering judgment, filed a certified transcript in the district court a few days thereafter, so as to make the judgment a lien on defendant's land. Afterward defendant gave an appeal undertaking in time, but did not file a transcript of the judgment and undertaking until the time allowed by law had expired. It was held that the district court had jurisdiction because of the transcript filed by the appellee (plaintiff), since such transcript, although imperfect, gave it jurisdiction to order a perfect one, and the subsequent filing of such a transcript by appellant had the same effect as if it had been ordered.

8. TRANSCRIPT, RECORD, RETURN, OR STATEMENT — a. Matters to Be Shown — (I) IN GENERAL. The transcript of a justice filed in the appellate court, however it may be called, must be such as to show that his proceedings have been regular and in conformity with law.[30] It should contain, in substance at least,[31] all of the proceedings before the justice;[32] but it need not show in what county the cause was tried, or that the person before whom it was tried was a justice.[33] Upon writ of error a justice must certify to all proceedings whatsoever stated in the affidavit for the writ.[34]

(II) JURISDICTION OF JUSTICE. On appeal from a justice's judgment his transcript or return must affirmatively show that he had jurisdiction.[35] But when it is said that jurisdiction of the justice over the person and the subject-matter of an action before him must affirmatively appear, and cannot be supplied by inference or presumption, reference is had only to those things which the law requires to be made matters of record.[36]

(III) PROCESS AND PARTIES. A justice's record must show the due issuance and service of process,[37] and the parties;[38] but the original summons need not be sent up with the transcript,[39] nor need a copy of it be set out in the record.[40]

(IV) Pleadings and Demands of Parties. On appeal from a justice's judgment the transcript must show the due filing of the pleadings,[41] and the cause of action.[42] Where the pleadings are in writing they must be returned with the transcript,[43] and where the complaint is required to be served on defendant, the return must state that the complaint annexed is the one served and on which judgment was rendered.[44] A judgment may not be entered for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, where the record fails to show that defendant has had written notice that the statement has been filed, and that an affidavit of defense is required.[45]

(V) Evidence. Where an action is triable de novo in the appellate court,[46] or where the papers sufficiently present the issue involved in the appeal,[47] neither the evidence nor the facts need be sent up; and where an appeal is heard only on questions of law, the justice need only send up such evidence as is objected to.[48]

In Iowa a writ of error requires a justice

In other cases, however, the evidence must be returned to the appellate court.[49]

(vi) Conduct of Trial and Judgment. The transcript or record on appeal from a justice's judgment should show all of the proceedings had upon the trial,[50] and, except where the case is triable de novo in the appellate court,[51] the judgment rendered.[52]

(vii) Proceedings For Appeal. The jurisdiction of the appellate court is as a rule determinable only from the transcript and papers certified to it by the justice,[53] and consequently the transcript or return must show that the appeal has to certify evidence offered at the trial, only for the purpose of enabling the court to judge of the correctness of his admission or rejection thereof; and where there is no bill of exceptions to the ruling of a justice, he must certify all that he remembers. Miller v. O'Neal, 9 Iowa 446.

In Wisconsin, in those appeals where a new trial is not allowed, the justice's return should state the evidence, that the court may pass upon the questions of law, substantially in the same manner as upon a return to a certiorari; and if it fails to do this, the supreme court cannot determine whether the action of the circuit court was right or not, or allow further return to be made, but must affirm the judgment below. Presence of plaintiff, or some person authorized by him, at the return of the verdict must be shown. Shove v. Raynor, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 77.

Presence of defendant at the rendition of judgment must be shown where it appears by the transcript that the justice took time to advise. Vandoren v. Vandoren, 10 N. J. L. 286.

Offer to confess judgment.— Under Iowa Code, § 3818, requiring an offer to confess judgment, after action brought, to be made in presence of plaintiff, or after notice to him, the transcript need not show expressly that plaintiff was present when such offer was made. If it appears from the record that an offer was made as contemplated, or this is the necessary inference from the language used, it is sufficient, and, if the record is silent, parol evidence is admissible to show the offer. Sloss v. Bailey, 104 Iowa 696, 74 N. W. 17. Compare State v. Ellsworth, (Nebr. 1904) 100 N. The omission of the statement of the judgment rendered, required by Ala. coming to the knowledge of the justice after trial.[58] Unless expressly required by law, bills of exception need not be spread at length upon the justice's docket, and incorporated in the transcript.[59]

(B) Making, Form, and Requisites. The transcript or return should regularly be made by the justice before whom the action was tried;[60] but where a justice dies pending an appeal, and before extending the record of the proceedings, his original minutes, containing all the material facts which the record would have contained, are admissible in evidence, and the failure to produce a copy of the whole case attested by the justice is cured by a production of a sworn copy.[61] Technical accuracy is not required in the transcript of return of a justice,[62] and it is sufficient if it sets forth the substance of the proceedings.[63] The transcript cannot be any part of the appellant's petition in error,[64] nor can the return of a justice be treated as a bill of exceptions.[65]

(II) Bill of Exceptions—(A) In General. The matters required to be entered upon the record or docket of a justice of the peace are prescribed by statute;[66] and if a party desires to preserve the rulings of the justice as to other matters for review he must take a bill of exceptions,[67] in those cases in which bills

A contradictory and ambiguous bill of exceptions may be disregarded, especially when unsustained by anything in the return. Bell v. Rowland, 9 Iowa 281.

On petition in error the bill of exceptions should set out all the pleadings filed in the of exceptions are authorized by law. Whether they are authorized will depend, of course, upon the statutes of the particular state.[68]

(B) Making and Sufficiency. A bill of exceptions must be allowed by the justice himself,[69] and must be filed during the term.[70] But a bill which shows that it has been allowed, signed, and filed by the justice is sufficient to show that it was properly filed in the office of the justice allowing it;[71] and it is no objection to a bill of exceptions that it was allowed and signed for one party in the absence of, and without notice to, the other,[72] or that it was not submitted to the adverse party before being signed by the justice.[73] In Kansas the transcript of a justice must be incorporated in the bill of exceptions, or it cannot be considered;[74] while in Ohio bills of exceptions must be entered at length on the justice's docket, and until so entered the reviewing court can take no cognizance of their contents.[75]

(III) Signing and Certifying Transcript or Bill of Exceptions. In order to be effective, both the transcript and bill of exceptions must, in nearly all jurisdictions,[76] be signed and certified to by the justice who tried the action in the manner prescribed by the statutes of the various states,[77] and in some states must be

Several judgments may be embraced in one certificate; and it is not necessary to certify further authenticated by the justice's seal.[78] While the statutory requirements as to signing and certifying transcripts or returns and bills of exceptions must be complied with, technical strictness is not required, and it is sufficient if the terms of the statute are substantially complied with.[79]

c. Filing Transcript or Record — (I) In General. An appeal is perfected when the transcript or record is filed in the appellate court, and not until then.[80] In some states it must be filed by the justice,[81] and in others by the appellant.[82] When the record has been transmitted to him, it is the duty of the clerk to mark it "Filed,"[83] but his failure to do so is no ground for dismissing the appeal.[84]

(II) Time of Filing and Effect of Delay. The time at or within which the transcript or record on appeal from a justice's judgment is to be filed is wholly regulated by statute.[85] But these statutes are for the most part directory

out of office, and also for the ascertainment of facts as to the trial below, in place of a return, if the justice is dead or out of the state, his successor has no authority to make returns for him.[5]

(c) Procedure For Amendment. An amendment of the record may be obtained by motion on notice,[6] by suggesting a diminution of the record,[7] by affidavit,[8] or the court may of its own motion award a certiorari, when the defects are apparent on the face of the record.[9] The amendment or new return may be compelled by certiorari,[10] by rule in attachment,[11] or by any other appropriate writ.[12]

(d) Time For Amendment. A reasonable time should be allowed appellants, who have taken the steps required of them, to have a defective transcript perfected;[13] and generally a transcript may be amended after motion to dismiss,[14] or even in some states after trial and judgment.[15]

(ii) Waiver of Defects. Where the transcript or record is irregular or defective, objection must be made before pleading or going to trial, or it will be held to have been waived;[16] and conversely, unless a party objects in apt time, an appeal may properly be heard and determined on an amended return.[17]

(iii) Compelling Justice to Make Return. Where an appeal has been properly taken from a justice's judgment,[18] but the justice neglects or refuses to send up the transcript or record, it is within the power of the appellate court to compel him to do so by mandamus, rule, certiorari, or other appropriate writ.[19]

(II) Questions Presented For Review. On appeal from a justice of the peace, the appellate court will not consider questions not embraced in the transcript or record;[28] and mere recitals therein of rulings which do not amount to judgments are insufficient to support assignments of error.[29]

9. Assignment of Errors. On appeal from a justice's judgment the assignment of errors must be specific,[30] and any assignment not founded on fact,[31] or which contradicts or is inconsistent with the record,[32] is untenable.

Pennsylvania.—Appellant has a right to abandon his appeal before it has been perfected by the filing of his transcript, and and where the appeal has not been perfected or the transcript sent up he may withdraw his appeal, and make application to set aside the judgment, within the time prescribed for such application.[34] But in some states it is held that where the cause is triable de novo in the appellate court, the appellant cannot dismiss his appeal over the objection of the appellee;[35] and where a defendant appeals from a judgment rendered after the justice had lost jurisdiction by an irregular adjournment, he cannot take advantage of the irregularity by a motion to nonsuit when the appeal is moved in the appellate court, but must submit to a retrial on the merits.[36]

court cannot consider the merits of the controversy,[39] nor defects and errors in the proceedings below;[40] and, where the case is triable de novo, an appeal will not be dismissed for want of process, or for defects and irregularities therein,[41] unless the defect is jurisdictional.[42] In cases where the justice is evidently responsible for the irregularities in taking an appeal and not the appellant, the proper practice is not to strike off the appeal but to grant a rule to show cause why the appellant should not perfect his appeal.[43] Where there is a ground upon which an appeal may be dismissed, and also a ground on which, if the appeal were properly perfected, the action might be dismissed, the court should dismiss the appeal and not the action.[44]

(B) Failure to Appear and Prosecute Appeal. Where a cause is triable de novo in the appellate court, an appeal should not ordinarily be dismissed for the non-appearance of the appellant;[45] but under the statutes or rules of court in some jurisdictions an appeal from a justice's judgment will be dismissed if the appellant fails to appear and prosecute his appeal within the time therein prescribed,[46]

(c) Want of Jurisdiction or Disqualification of Justice. If it appears on the face of the proceedings or from the evidence that the justice had no jurisdiction to render judgment, an appeal from his judgment may be dismissed,[48] although, where the justice never obtained jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it is proper to dismiss the action.[49] As an objection to a justice's trial of the case because of his disqualification may be waived, a motion to dismiss an appeal for such cause should be denied, where the record does not show when defendant first acquired knowledge of the facts.[50]

(II) Proceedings For Dismissal — (A) In General. The usual mode of procedure to have an appeal dismissed is by written motion,[51] on notice to the appellant.[52] The motion must state the grounds on which it is based,[53] and, where the grounds are not apparent on the face of the record, evidence is admissible in support of the motion, or to maintain the appeal,[54] but not to contradict that when a case was called it might be stricken from the docket or dismissed for want of prosecution, there was no authority for dismissing an appeal from a justice of the peace. Gottschalk v. Lembke, 61 Ill. App. 236.

the record.[55] A motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction should be determined on the case made by plaintiff, in the absence of pleading and proof to the contrary,[56] and where the motion is made on the ground that defendant's set-off was not offered in good faith, but for the purpose of securing an appeal, the court will not pass on the merits of the set-off, but only on the question of its effect.[57] Where a statute makes the transcript on appeal take the place of a declaration, and the papers have been lost, a party wishing to dismiss the appeal must first have the judgment restored;[58] and where the ground of a motion is that the appeal-bond is not for double the amount of the judgment, the court may reduce the judgment by striking therefrom an improper charge in the bill of costs.[59]

(B) Time For Dismissal or Motion to Dismiss. Unless an appeal fails to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court,[60] a motion to dismiss must be made at the earliest opportunity.[61] A premature motion to dismiss will generally be denied.[62]

c. Judgment on Dismissal. The practice in the different states varies in regard to the judgment to be rendered upon the dismissal of an appeal from a justice's court. In some the court can do no more than render a simple judgment of dismissal, with costs;[63] in others a writ of procedendo is awarded,[64] provided the court has obtained jurisdiction of the subject-matter;[65] and in others the judgment below is affirmed, if the cause is so before the court that it could regularly try it.[66] It is not necessary that the appellate court shall state on the record the reason for dismissing an appeal,[67] and such a judgment is conclusive until reversed on error or the removal of the cause to a higher court.[68] Before an order granting a motion to dismiss an "action" is reduced to writing, the court may at the same term amend both motion and order so as to provide for a dismissal of the "appeal."[69]

d. Acts Constituting Dismissal. An appellant will be deemed to have abandoned his appeal where he fails to perfect it within the prescribed time,[70] and an appeal will be considered dismissed where an order dismissing it is made during the term, although the judge fails to sign the record.[71] But where an appellant has given notice of appeal and filed his appeal-bond, the appellate court is not deprived of jurisdiction by his subsequently placing in the papers a writing abandoning his appeal and agreeing to the immediate issuance of execution, where neither the justice nor the appellee have any notice thereof;[72] and discontinuing a suit after appeal is not a discontinuance of the appeal, within a statute providing that on the discontinuance or dismissal of an appeal the justice shall proceed as if it had never been taken.[73]

e. Effect of Dismissal. The final and effectual dismissal of an appeal deprives the appellate court of all further jurisdiction of the cause,[74] and restores the judgment below as if no appeal had been taken.[75]

the appellate court should, upon good cause shown,[77] reinstate an appeal which has been dismissed.[78] The order reinstating the appeal must be made at the same term,[79] unless power to do so after the expiration of the term is conferred by statute.[80] Where an appeal has been improperly reinstated, the proceedings may be set aside in a higher court by certiorari.[81]

(III) Dismissal of Action and Nonsuit—(A) Voluntary Dismissal. A plaintiff may dismiss his action or take a nonsuit as well after as before an appeal,[86] even though judgment was recovered against him;[87] and where one of several defendants appeals, and plaintiff proceeds to trial without bringing in the others, the suit is dismissed as to them.[88]

(B) Involuntary Dismissal—(1) Grounds. Where an action commenced before a justice of the peace is appealed, it may be dismissed or plaintiff nonsuited for want of jurisdiction in the justice,[89] because plaintiff fails to appear and prosecute his appeal,[90] because of a misnomer[91] by statute in some states, because of failure to demand judgment,[92] because the justice had an interest in, and instigated, the suit,[93] or because he entirely disregarded the general course of law in the trial before him.[94] On the other hand want of jurisdiction in the appellate court is no ground for dismissing an action,[95] nor will a nonsuit be granted or the cause dismissed for an irregularity in the appeal,[96] because of an improper refusal to grant a continuance,[97] because another suit is pending for the same claim,[98] because the judgment rendered exceeds the justice's jurisdiction or the ad damnum of the writ,[99] or, in the absence of proof of the fact, because defendant alleges in his answer on appeal that the title to real property was involved.[1] Where, on an appeal by defendant, the original papers have been lost, and leave has been granted each party to substitute copies, after the lapse of a reasonable time without such substitution, a motion by defendant to dismiss the action should be denied, and a motion by plaintiff to dismiss the appeal should be granted;[2] and, in Vermont, where defendant neglects to enter his appeal, but plaintiff enters the action for an affirmance of the judgment, it is no cause for dismissing the action that defendant, more than twelve days before the term to which the appeal was taken, tendered a confession of judgment, which the justice, being then out of office, refused to accept.[3]

(2) TIME FOR DISMISSAL. On appeal from a justice of the peace an action cannot be dismissed or plaintiff nonsuited after submission to the jury;[4] and after a supplemental complaint has been filed in the appellate court, and defendant has appeared by attorney, a motion to dismiss the original complaint because it does not appear to have been properly sworn to comes too late.[5] A demurrer improperly filed in a suit before a justice may be treated, on appeal, as a motion to dismiss, if properly preserved by a bill of exceptions;[6] but a motion to dismiss for want of a cost bond, in a prosecution before a justice, is too late when made for the first time in the appellate court.[7]

(c) Effect. The dismissal of a suit on appeal from a justice's judgment annuls the judgment and abates the suit;[8] but the dismissal of sequestration proceedings on appeal does not dispose of the principal suit on the merits.[9]

(iv) DISCONTINUANCE. A trustee suit appealed from a justice of the peace and continued at the first term, without an affirmance against the principal defendant, is discontinued by the death of such defendant before the next term.[10]

(v) MOTION TO DECLARE JUDGMENT VOID. Notice must be given the adverse party of a motion, on appeal, to declare the judgment appealed from void because of the disqualification of the justice, where the disqualifying fact does not appear on the face of the record, but is sought to be shown by evidence aliunde.[11]

b. Hearing — (i) IN GENERAL. In New York when an appeal involving questions of law only is regularly noticed for argument, and placed upon the calendar, it will remain on the calendar, if not disposed of at the first term, without any further notice by either party; but it cannot be brought on for argument except by motion on eight days' notice.[12]

Doughty v. Picott, 105 N. Y. App. Div. 339, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 43.

13. Illinois.— Under Rev. St. (1893) c. 79, § 68, in case the appeal is perfected by filing the papers and transcript ten days before the commencement of the term to which the appeal is taken, the appearance of the appellee may be entered in writing, and filed among the papers in the case; and it so entered ten days before the first day of the term, the case shall stand for trial at that term. This statute applies as well to an appeal taken by filing the bond with the justice as to one

c. Continuances. Unless a continuance is required by statute,[14] a motion therefor is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, whose action will not taken by filing the bond in the appellate court. Vallens v. Hopkins, 157 Ill. 267, 41 N. E. 632 [reversing 51 Ill. App. 337]. See also Armstrong v. Crilly, 152 Ill. 646, 38 N. E. 936 [affirming 51 Ill. App. 504]; Hayward v. Ramsey, 74 Ill. 372; Hooper v. Smith, 19 Ill. 53; Van Stavern v. Sears, 35 Ill. App. 546; Ogden v. Danz, 22 Ill. App. 544.

Iowa.— Under Code (1873), § 3587, providing that appeals "must be tried when reached unless continued for cause," the court cannot, in the absence of any general rule of court regulating appeals from justices, try an appeal from a default judgment before it is reached in regular order on the docket. Harty v. D. M. & M. R. Co., 54 Iowa 327, 6 N. W. 545. See also Mediken v. Mason, 10 Iowa 406, to the effect that under Laws (1858), c. 127, an appeal could not be tried at the first term after the transcript was filed.

Kansas.— See Sawyer v. Forbes, 36 Kan. 612, 14 Pac. 148, where it was held that a respondent who appeared at an adjourned term of the term in session when the summons in error was returned, and presented his case without objection, could not object that the case did not properly stand for trial until the next regular term.

Kentucky.— The statute of 1802, requiring writs of error coram nobis to be tried at the first term, does not apply to an appeal from a justice on such writ. Breckinridge v. Coleman, 7 B. Mon. 331.

Minnesota.— Under Gen. St. (1878) c. 65, § 123, an appeal which is properly on the calendar may be heard, although thirty days have not elapsed since the justice's decision (Chesterson v. Munson, 27 Minn. 498, 8 N. W. 593), and, under Gen. St. c. 66, § 244, an appeal on questions of law alone may be brought on for hearing at any time (Rollins v. Nolting, 53 Minn. 232, 54 N. W. 1118).

Missouri.— An appeal, not taken on the same day that judgment was rendered, no notice of the appeal being given, cannot be tried at the first term, except by consent of both parties, or unless the appellee shall enter his appearance on or before the second day of such term. Blakely v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 79 Mo. 342. See also Hawley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 80 Mo. 540. Compare Knapp v. Skeele, 31 Mo. 434. And see Berry v. Union Trust Co., 75 Mo. 430, in which appellee was held to have waived the rule preventing an appeal from being tried at the first term.

New Jersey.— Under Suppl. Rev. p. 404, art. 4, § 15, the party against whom judgment was rendered has the right to have the cause go over to the next term, and does not waive it by appearing at the term to which the appeal is taken, and objecting to the trial at that time. Matthews v. Rankin, 58 N. J. L. 584, 33 Atl. 1052.

North Carolina.— Bastardy proceedings come within a rule providing that appeals in civil actions will not be tried unless docketed ten days before the term. State v. Edwards, 110 N. C. 511, 14 S. E. 741.

Rhode Island.— An appeal is to be taken to the term next to be held after ten days from the time of perfecting the appeal, not from the time of taking it. McCaffrey v. Doyle, 14 R. I. 313.

South Carolina.— That the court heard an appeal on the same day that it was docketed, where the return had been filed thirteen days before, was not ground for reversing a dismissal of the appeal, where it did not appear that appellant was surprised, and the judgment was in accordance with the justice of the case. Marshall v. Mitchell, 59 S. C. 523, 38 S. E. 158, construing Code Civ. Proc. § 368.

South Dakota.—Under Comp. Laws, § 6136, it is the duty of the clerk to enter the cause upon the calendar directly on payment of his costs, and it stands for trial as soon as reached in the regular call of causes for trial. Chandler v. Hill, 13 S. D. 176, 82 N. W. 397. See also Myers v. Mitchell, 1 S. D. 249, 46 N. W. 245, to the effect that an appeal stands for trial at an appointed term as if it were a regular one.

Tennessee.— Trial may be had at the first term, although the papers were not filed until the second day of the term. Rogers v. Hollingsworth, 95 Tenn. 357, 32 S. W. 197.

Texas.—Under Rev. St. art. 1641, an appeal cannot be tried at a term after the first day of which the transcript and papers were filed (Henson v. Martin, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 272; Cowart v. Oram, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 183), and under Sayles Civ. St. tit. 32, c. 17, and art. 1294, it should not be called for trial before appearance-day (Hadden v. Smith, (Civ. App. 1894) 28 S. W. 458).

Vermont.— An appeal from an order of removal must be taken to the next term of the court in the same county, if there is sufficient time after service of the order. Strafford v. Hartland, 2 Vt. 565.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Justices of the Peace," § 653.

14. In Illinois, under Hurd Rev. St. (1901) c. 79, § 70, where one of two defendants appeals, and the other does not, nor enter his appearance, and the process issued against him is returned not served, the cause must be continued at the first term. Counselman v. Sullivan, 101 Ill. App. 307.

In Iowa, under Code, § 4560, if notice of appeal is not given ten days before the next term, the cause stands for continuance by operation of law, unless there be a waiver or voluntary appearance. Insel v. Kennedy, 120 Iowa 234, 94 N. W. 456.

In New Jersey, when ten days' notice is given of an intention to produce new evidence, it is the duty of the court to postpone the trial of the appeal, so that the new evibe disturbed,[15] unless an abuse of discretion is shown.[16] It is no ground for refusing a continuance because of the absence of a witness that a continuance has been granted by the justice for the same cause,[17] nor, on the other hand, is a party entitled to a continuance because the justice has not filed a complete transcript,[18] or because of the absence of the justice, by whom the applicant proposes to prove its incompleteness.[19]

(c) Nature and Validity of Judgment. Where a trial de novo is provided for on appeal from a justice's judgment, it may be held irrespective of errors and irregularities in the process or trial, or of the validity of the judgment below;[24] and where the appellate court has original jurisdiction of the cause of action, and the parties voluntarily submit thereto, it may proceed to try the case as if it had originated there, although it was without the justice's jurisdiction.[25] An appeal from a judgment by default,[26] or of nonsuit,[27] is sometimes triable de novo in the appellate court; but where no appeal is taken from a justice's judgment within the prescribed time, but a motion to set it aside is thereafter made and overruled, the only question that can be raised on appeal therefrom is as to the regularity of the judgment.[28]

(II) Proceedings—(A) Summons. The statutes of several states provide for the issuance of summons from the appellate court on appeal from a justice's judgment. b. Scope of Inquiry — (I) Issues as Tried Below. As a general rule, on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace, the issues cannot be changed, as by setting up a new cause of action, but the cause must be tried in the appellate court upon the same issues that were presented in the court from which the appeal was taken.[31] The rule, however, does not apply to

In Louisiana a justice, after granting an appeal and receiving an appeal-bond, should issue citation to the appellee, directing him to appear before the appellate court within three days after service, if he resides in the place, or allowing one day more for every ten miles between the place of judgment and the appellee's residence. State v. Todd, 104 La. 241, 28 So. 886.

In Pennsylvania where plaintiff, on an appeal from a justice's judgment, has filed a statement from which a judgment may be liquidated, and has served notice of the filing of the statement, and no affidavit of defense has been filed within fifteen days after notice, judgment may be entered against defendant. Spetz v. Howard, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 420.

30. Illinois.— Under a rule of court that only actions at issue may be noticed for trial on the "short cause calendar," an appeal from a justice cannot be so noticed unless the papers were filed ten days before the term. Wisconsin.—Under Rev. St. c. 120, § 216, appeals from justices of the peace must be noticed for trial within two terms succeeding the return, unless a sufficient excuse is given for failing to do so. Howe v. Elliott, 24 Wis. 677.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Justices of the Peace," § 659.

Notice of trial is premature, when given before the justice's return is made, and the case should be stricken from the calendar. Demming v. Weston, 15 Wis. 236. But compare Gorton v. Bailey, 46 Wis. 633, 1 N. W. 217, in which both parties noticed the cause for trial before the return was filed, and it remained on the calendar over one term without objection, and it was held that such notices operated as a mutual stipulation to put the cause on the calendar, and that a motion to strike it off should be refused.

Contra.— Dickinson v. Morgenstern, 111 Ill. App. 543, where it was held that plaintiff may, on the trial in the appellate court, abandon his original cause of action, and prove any demand which he may have against defendant.

"The rule is intended to prevent the proceedings in the tribunal of original jurisdiction from degenerating into a mere farce, by requiring the parties to present the controversy fully and in good faith to that tribunal, and to prevent them from making a sham prosecution or defense in the first instance and trying the cause afterwards upon its merits in the higher court." Inglehart v. Lull, 69 Nebr. 173, 95 N. W. 25, 26.

Construction of pleadings.— In ascertaining what were the issues in the justice's court, the pleadings therein are to be construed liberally, and not according to the strict rules applicable to pleadings in courts of record. Jerome v. Rust, (S. D. 1905) 103 N. W. 26. In this case Justices Code, § 10, provided that an action in a justice's court should be commenced by summons and by voluntary appearance and pleading of the parties. The summons in the action recited that defendant was summoned to answer plaintiff, who claimed to recover possession of oats of the value of seventy-five dollars detained after demand, and there was a notice that on default plaintiff would take judgment for possession of the property or the value thereof. The oral complaint of plaintiff was for oats of the value of seventy-five dollars loaned defendant, which he had promised to pay. Judgment was demanded for the oats, or seventy-five dollars, and defendant set up a general denial and payment. It was held that, on appeal and trial de novo in the county court, the latter was justified in trying the case on the theory that plaintiff's claim was for the value of the oats.

Election between causes of action.— Where a complaint stated in a single count the cause of the action against defendant railroad, based on common-law negligence for killing plaintiff's cow, and another cause for not fencing its track, whereby the cow was permitted to stray thereon and was killed by a passing train, it was held that it was no objection that the motion to elect on which cause of action he proceeded to trial was not made in a justice's court where the action was begun, as it in no way changed the issue, and might be made in the circuit court at any time before trial. (III) Defects in Process. As a rule defects in the process, or in its service or return, are not available on appeal where the cause is triable anew in the appellate court.[34]

(IV) Jurisdiction of Justice. On a trial de novo in an appellate court the jurisdiction of the justice to render the judgment appealed from may be inquired into;[35] but the validity of a statute increasing the jurisdiction of justices does not come in question on appeal,[36] nor is the fact that a justice was disqualified because of relationship to a party ground for a plea in abatement in the appellate court.[37]

(V) Errors Waived in Appellate Court. The parties to an appeal may by agreement waive all technical objections,[38] and generally, where a party appears and goes to trial in the appellate court, he waives all defects and irregularities, and objections to the justice's jurisdiction.[39] But where the appellate Erroneous joinder of counts.— But in Hibbard v. Bell, 3 Pinn. (Wis.) 190, 3 Chandl. 206, it was held that the joinder of counts in trover or case with counts in assumpsit could not be disregarded by the court under a statute providing that the county court should give judgment according to the right of the matter, without regarding technical imperfections in proceedings before the justice not affecting the merits.

60. In summary proceedings against a railroad company before a justice of the peace to recover a penalty, judgment was entered against defendant. After an appeal had been taken to the common pleas, plaintiff moved to amend the record by adding the name of a second railroad company as a party defendant. Notice of this was served upon the attorney for the appealing company, who was alleged to be also attorney for the second company. The amendment was allowed, and subsequently a rule to plead was entered and served upon the same attorney, who, however, had never entered his appearance for the company whose name had been added to the record. Judgment was subsequently entered against the companies defendant for want of a plea. Under these circumstances it was held that the amendment had been improperly allowed, and should be stricken off, and that the judgment against the second company should be reversed. surprise defendant,[73] and will not substantially change the claim or cause of action.[74]

(xv) Procedure For Amendment— (a) In General. The usual mode of procedure for allowance of amendments or new pleadings is by written [75] motion, on notice,[76] showing the nature and character of the new matter,[77] a sufficient cause for leave to amend or plead,[78] and a valid excuse for failure to amend or plead before the justice;[79] and if the party is entitled to amend, leave should not be refused because of surprise to the other party, but the amendment should be allowed, and a continuance granted.[80] Where the original notice and transcript erroneously state that when the notice was issued and served it was returnable at an hour different from that named in the record, defendant may base an application for leave to file an answer on a statement of such error, without first correcting it.[81] In determining the question of the allowance of an amendment by defendant setting up a counter-claim, affidavits tending to disprove the counter-claim should not be considered by the court.[82]

(b) Time of Pleading Anew or Amending. Where not controlled by statute,[83] or rule of court,[84] pleadings may be filed or amendments made at any time before trial,[85] and the court may, in its discretion and for good cause shown, extend the time.[86] In Pennsylvania a written notice of filing of the statement of claim on appeal must be served on defendant in like manner as summons is served.[87]

(xvi) Sufficency of Pleadings— (a) In General. Where a cause is triable de novo on appeal, the sufficiency of the pleadings are to be determined by the rules which obtain before justices of the peace, and not by the strict rules of pleading applied in the higher courts, but the statement or declaration must show a cause of action.[88]

(B) Departure. The declaration, complaint, or statement filed on appeal from a justice of the peace cannot depart from the case as tried before the justice, but there is no departure as a rule where there is no change in the original cause of action.[89] Where there is a departure in the pleadings, the proper mode of taking advantage of it is by motion to strike out, or set aside, and not by demurrer or plea in abatement.[90]

(XVIII) Demurrer on Appeal. In a few states demurrers are admissible on appeal;[95] but in others they are not contemplated by the statutes, since causes are triable de novo on the issues of fact as made up below.[96]

(XIX) Waiver of Objections. Objections to the pleadings on appeal must be taken in the appellate court[97] before pleading to the issue,[98] trial,[99] or submission to arbitration;[1] and in Tennessee matter in abatement cannot be taken advantage of unless it is pleaded in writing and verified at the first term of the court to which the appeal is taken.[2] So too, where a replevin defendant waives a bill of particulars by not requiring it in the justice's court, he cannot on appeal object that a different description of the property is given in plaintiff's petition from that given below;[3] and where a party stands upon his demurrer after it has been overruled without objecting to the rendition of judgment on his demurrer, he waives his right to a trial of the issues.[4] But the fact that plaintiff has been permitted on appeal, without objection by defendant, to amend his claim by adding new items, is no ground for overruling his objection to defendant's adding new items to his counter-claim;[5] nor is a continuance by consent after the amendment on appeal of a plea in abatement which was sustained below a waiver of the plea.[6]

porate capacity,[7] and where, in an action of account, defendant filed a set-off of a like nature, and the transcript on appeal does not show any pleadings, oral or written, but states that plaintiff did not object to defendant's bill of particulars or set-off, the set-off is properly held to be admitted by the state of the pleadings.[8] On the other hand, where the transcript shows that the parties had a full trial before the justice, plaintiff's demand cannot be taken as admitted by the appellate court;[9] and where plaintiff upon leave files a set-off to defendant's counter-claim he does not thereby admit matter in the answer not replied to, since no replication is necessary on appeal.[10]

(B) Matters to Be Proved. On appeal from a justice's judgment, plaintiff must show a right of action at the time of the commencement of the suit below,[11] and must prove the execution of the instrument upon which the suit is based, unless the return of the justice shows that it was filed with him, and that its execution was not denied on oath;[12] and where defendant pleads a tender, he will be required to prove everything necessary to constitute a good tender, including proof of the presence of the money in court.[13]

(C) Variance. Where a case is triable de novo on appeal, all formal objections are disregarded, and as a rule it is immaterial that there is a variance between the instrument put in evidence and that set out in the justice's transcript.[14]

d. Evidence — (I) Burden of Proof. On the trial de novo of a case appealed from a justice of the peace, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to establish all the facts necessary to a recovery,[15] and he cannot recover upon any less evidence than would have been necessary if he had brought the suit in the higher court in the first instance.[16] He need not, however, prove the jurisdiction of the justice where it appears from the transcript or record.[17]

(II) Evidence Admissible Generally — (A) In General. On a trial de novo on appeal, each party may, without filing new pleadings, prove any cause of action or defense and introduce any evidence which might have been proper upon the trial before the justice,[18] and defendant may further show any matter arising since the judgment below which relieves him of liability.[19] But the evidence must be confined to the issues made below,[20] and where, in trespass, defendant pleads only the general issue, evidence is inadmissible on appeal that plaintiff was not possessed of the land.[21]

(B) On Appeal by One of Two Defendants. Where suit is brought before a justice against two persons, and judgment is recovered against both, and one of them appeals, evidence showing his separate liability for the claim may be introduced on the trial.[22]

(C) Evidence of Party Given Below. Where plaintiff examines defendant before the justice he cannot on appeal be allowed to prove the declarations of defendant in testifying below.[23]

(D) Admissions Made Below. Admissions made by a party in the justice's court on his oath cannot be proved in the appellate court, where he is in court and is not examined;[24] and admissions of a defendant who has not appealed are inadmissible in evidence against his co-defendant who has.[25] An admission of record is, however, admissible.[26]

(c) Co-Defendant. Where one of two defendants appeals from a justice's judgment his co-defendant is a competent witness in his behalf.[48]

(d) Sureties on Appeal. Where competent witnesses become sureties for the appellant, their testimony is inadmissible in the appellate court, where interest disqualifies;[49] but it is the duty of the appellate court, upon being satisfied as to their materiality, to allow the substitution of other sufficient sureties, so that the first may become witnesses.[50]

(e) Justice. The justice before whom the action was tried may be examined to show what a witness testified to before him, and may refer to his minutes in order to refresh his memory.[51]

e. Mode and Conduct of Trial — (i) In General. On appeal from a justice's judgment there must be a trial de novo of the issues raised below,[52] according, in some states, to the procedure obtaining before justices,[53] while in others the mode of procedure is that of the appellate court.[54] Where several joint defendants in trespass appeal, the court should assess damages as to those who did not plead before the justice, although there is a verdict for those who pleaded to the issue.[55]

(ii) Right to Open and Close, and Statements of Counsel. The right to open and close is with the party having the affirmative of the issue, usually the plaintiff;[56] but where defendant pleads only affirmative defenses, and disclaims all benefit of the general issue, the burden is upon him, and he is entitled to open and close.[57] Since, in Texas, an action by a county judge on a county convict labor bond running in his name is necessary for the benefit of the county, it is not error to allow counsel to state on the trial on appeal to the county court that the suit is in behalf of the county;[58] nor, where the transcript, by showing judgment against the sureties only, shows that the death of the principal must have been suggested to the justice, to allow him to state that the principal is dead.[59]

(III) Instructions. On appeal from a justice of the peace it is not necessary to give any instruction not requested.[60] But the question of the jurisdiction of a justice is one of law and fact, and on appeal in an action of replevin, where the jurisdiction is limited to property which does not exceed a specified sum in value, it is proper to instruct the jury, left to find a general verdict, what the conclusion of law is, if they find that the value of the property exceeds such sum.[61]

(IV) Verdict. On appeal from a justice of the peace the verdict as a rule should not be in excess of the justice's jurisdiction;[62] but when a party receives such a verdict, he may remit the excess, and have judgment for the remainder.[63] Where, after appealing, defendant pays the debt sued for, but does not pay all the costs, plaintiff is entitled to a verdict for costs;[64] and where, on appeal in an action on a verified account, in which there was a counter-affidavit filed below, plaintiff is not present, and defendant testifies that there is nothing due, it is proper to direct a verdict for defendant.[65]

(V) Trial by the Court. A case carried up on appeal from a justice of the peace may, by consent of the parties, be tried by the court without a jury;[66] and in Missouri, when a case is so tried, no finding of fact is necessary, hypothetical instructions or declarations of law being the correct practice.[67]

(VI) Attachment Proceedings. The writ of attachment cannot issue in an action pending on an appeal by the plaintiff from a justice's judgment in his favor for a sum less than that claimed by him, since such action on appeal is not an action ex contractu to recover money.[68]

(VII) Garnishment Proceedings—(A) In General. Where a garnishee appeals from a judgment rendered against him on his answer denying indebtedness, the case stands in the appellate court as if there had been no judicial action on the contest, and plaintiff must tender an issue in writing;[69] but where the garnishee fails to appear at the hearing, the court need not order a continuance, but may submit the issues to a jury, and enter judgment against him.[70] To enable the appellate court to render judgment against an execution garnishee, the judgment and unsatisfied execution must be produced.[71]

(B) Evidence. The plaintiff may examine the garnishee anew in the appellate court for the purpose of a fuller discovery,[72] and the garnishee on his part may correct any mistake on his examination below,[73] may show that a disclosure made by him, as taken down in the minutes of the justice and signed by himself, was not the disclosure actually made,[74] and may dispute the facts recited in the justice's judgment, where his answer has not been reduced to writing and signed.[75]

The justice's transcript is not competent evidence to show an indebtedness from the garnishee,[76] but his examination before the justice is legitimate evidence against him.[77] It cannot be contradicted by the oral testimony of the justice or any one else as to what he disclosed, nor can it be supplemented so as to increase his admitted liability;[78] and where the answers have been controverted by plaintiff they cannot be considered as facts in the case.[79] Where the garnishee admitted before the justice that he had money in his hands collected for defendant, but stated that he had been informed that it had been assigned before service of the garnishment process, he is entitled to introduce evidence of such assignment on appeal;[80] and a judgment defendant may show in defense on appeal that he has been garnished on account of his indebtedness on the judgment, and has made payments thereon as garnishee.[81]

(c) Effect of Bond Discharging Garnishment Proceedings. A bond releasing garnishment proceedings in a justice's court, and binding the obligors to pay any judgment which might be rendered against defendant on the final hearing of the case, binds them to pay a final judgment rendered against defendant on an appeal by plaintiff.[82]

13. Scope and Extent of Review — a. In General — (i) Presumptions — (a) In General. It is the uniform practice of the courts in reviewing proceedings had before justices of the peace to regard them with marked indulgence and liberality in the furtherance of the ends of justice, and if possible sustain them by every reasonable and warrantable intendment.[83] Thus, in the absence of a

A short summons is an extraordinary process, and can only issue on proper preliminary proof; and, as jurisdiction is not obtained without such proof, a judgment in a justice's court is to be presumed void on appeal until the party on whom the onus is thrown supplies that proof, and a mere memorandum, "afft. short summons," on the justice's docket, is not sufficient evidence of jurisdiction. appear,[91] and where the record does not disclose a cause of action, it will be presumed on error that none was filed.[92] So too, although the law permits oral as well as written pleadings, it will not be presumed in aid of a judgment that there were any oral pleadings, where there were pleadings noted in the justice's docket, and no oral pleadings are shown.[93] But on the other hand, where the transcript fails to show that the justice noted the pleadings on his docket, the appearance in the transcript of a general denial does not raise a conclusive presumption that defendant filed no other pleading, or prevent his showing by parol what pleadings were filed.[94]

(iii) Parties Entitled to Allege Errors. Only a party affected by errors and irregularities in the proceedings before a justice of the peace will be heard to object to them,[99] and a party is estopped to allege error for which he is responsible,[1] or to allege new grounds of error after having placed the grounds for reversal on the record.[2] By pleading and going to trial without objection, a party waives an objection to the capacity in which he is sued;[3] and, if the record shows a judgment for an amount within the justice's jurisdiction, and that no more was demanded at the trial, he cannot urge on appeal that the record is defective in not showing the sum demanded.[4] So too a defendant waives his demurrer by putting in an answer after it has been overruled;[5] and where a defendant does not appear on the return-day of the summons, he is precluded from objecting in the higher court to the regularity of the proceedings.[6] But the rule that accepting the benefit of a judgment is a release of errors does not apply to an appeal from a justice's judgment by the prevailing party, where the hearing in the appellate court is de novo on the merits.[7]

(iv) Matters of Discretion. Matters within the discretion of a justice of the peace will not be reviewed by the appellate court.[8]

b. Appeals on Questions of Law and of Fact — (i) Questions of Law. In some states provision is made by the statutes for the review of proceedings had before justices of the peace upon questions of the law alone. The extent to which this may be done and the mode of procedure are of course dependent upon the terms of the statutes, and no general rules applicable in any number of jurisdictions can be laid down on the subject.[9]

Indiana.— Sargent v. Flaid, 90 Ind. 501, holding that the insufficiency of the summons will not be considered on appeal if the specific objections to it are in no way pointed out to the appellate court.
Kansas.— Hart Pioneer Nursery Co. v. Scruggs, 36 Kan. 407, 14 Pac. 145 (a ruling admitting or excluding evidence cannot be reviewed on petition in error); Rice v. Harvey, 19 Kan. 144 (petition in error will not lie to revise a judgment upon a verdict, upon alleged partiality or error in the justice's rulings).

(II) Questions of Fact—(A) In General. A finding by a justice of the peace upon a question of fact is as conclusive on an appeal as the verdict of a jury,[10] and under some statutes cannot be reviewed on error.[11]

Louisiana.— State v. King, 42 La. Ann. 77, 7 So. 72 (merits are not before court for review on appeal from a judgment on a plea to the jurisdiction); Charity Hospital v. Lammerman, 5 La. Maine.— Reed v. Tay, 32 Me. 173, to the effect that, where no error of fact has been assigned, and no fact annexed to the record has been proved, the charge will be considered as an error at law; and that a refusal to allow costs to the amount claimed, when some amount is allowed, is not error in law.

Maryland.— Bills of exceptions are not allowed on appeals from justices, and if a party desires to raise a question, he must do so before the justice by filing an affidavit, or by plea or other proper proceeding, when the case is in the appellate court. Shippler v. Broom, 62 Md. 318; Cole v. Hynes, 46 Md. 181; Herzberg v. Adams, 39 Md. 309; Mears v. Remare, 33 Md. 246.

Michigan.— If a party takes exception to the jurisdiction of the justice, he may take a special appeal. Stevens v. Harris, 99 Mich. 230, 58 N. W. 230 (objection to ruling sustaining declaration cannot be raised by special appeal); Webster v. Williams, 69 Mich. 135, 37 N. W. 675 (special appeal does not lie where no question of jurisdiction is involved); Albert v. Sutton, 28 Mich. 2 (error in admitting or rejecting evidence not reviewable by special appeal).

Minnesota.— Merriman v. Anselment, 86 Minn. 6, 89 N. W. 1125 (appeal on questions of law determined solely on the return); Neuhauser v. Banish, 84 Minn. 286, 87 N. W. 774 (where the justice excludes a material issue, the appellate court may pass on the question excluded on the evidence returned, as if it were an original issue in that court); Croonquist v. Flatner, 41 Minn. 291, 43 N. W. 9 (court can only consider evidence to determine whether the justice might find facts from it to support the judgment); Palmer v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 38 Minn. 415, 38 N. W. 100 (appellant may contend that there was no evidence to justify the judgment); Craighead v. Martin, 25 Minn. 41 (all errors apparent on the return, jurisdictional or otherwise and excepted to, where necessary, may be reviewed); Witherspoon v. Price, 17 Minn. 337 (admission of evidence will not be reviewed unless excepted to); Bennett v. Phelps, 12 Minn. 326 (no question not tried or raised below, and to the ruling on which an exception has been taken, can be reviewed, except objections to the jurisdiction, and that the complaint or answer does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or defense).

New York.— Under Code Proc. § 353, the appellate court could not reverse the judgment upon a ground not stated in the notice (Avery v. Woodbeck, 62 Barb. 557), unless the point involved a question of jurisdiction (Cole v. Bell, 48 Barb. 194). But see Forman v. Forman, 17 How. Pr. 255.

North Carolina.— The appellate court has no right to review the decision of the justice on questions of fact; but where there is no evidence his decision involves a question of law and is reviewable. McDonald v. Ingram, 124 N. C. 272, 32 S. E. 677.

Ohio.— Hirth v. Graham, 50 Ohio St. 57, 33 N. E. 90, 40 Am. St. Rep. 641, 19 L. R. A. 721 (instructions reviewable on error); Willenger v. Bramsche, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. 208, 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 731 (court may consider whether there was any evidence to sustain ruling below); Yager v. Greiss, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. 531, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 296 (bill of exceptions on question of the weight of evidence cannot be considered).

United States.— In the case of a jury trial there can be no review of the law separated from the facts. Denny v. Queen, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,807, 3 Cranch C. C. 217.

Massachusetts.— Cousins v. Cowing, 23 Pick. 208. See also Winslow v. Anderson, 4 Mass. 376, in which the court said that error would not lie, but that, in view of the fact that the mistake of bringing error was so frequently made, it would consider the case as if brought up on certiorari.

New York.— The phrase "error of fact," as used in Code Proc. § 366, had no reference to an erroneous finding of the court or jury on the evidence, but referred to errors of fact not appearing from the record or evidence, such as infancy and coverture. (B) Findings on Conflicting Evidence. In proceedings to review a judgment of a justice of the peace rendered on conflicting evidence, the judgment will not be reversed where there is evidence tending to support it,[12] unless direct authority is given the appellate court to reverse a judgment because against the weight of the evidence.[13]

(C) Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence. The judgment of a justice of the peace should not be reversed unless it clearly appears that it could not have been justified by the evidence.[14]

(D) Verdicts. Where, on a trial before a justice of the peace, there is a fair question for the jury, their decision is conclusive, although against the weight of judgment for twenty-five dollars or less, the superior court does not revise the justice's findings of facts.

13. Under N. Y. Laws (1900), p. 1277, c. 553, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 3063, a county court is authorized to reverse a judgment on appeal from a justice as against the weight of evidence and order a new trial before the same justice, or before another justice to be designated. Limitations on power.— The power granted by N. Y. Laws (1900), c. 553, is to be exercised only when the judgment is so plainly against the weight and preponderance of proof that it can be seen that the justice could not reasonably have arrived at the decision which he made. the evidence.[15] It is only when the facts of a case are undisputed, or the evidence is not conflicting and is free from reasonable doubt, that the verdict of a jury in a justice's court can be set aside as contrary to or against the evidence.[16]

(E) Hearing on Affidavits. In New York it is provided by statute[17] that where an appeal is founded upon an error of fact in the proceedings not affecting the merits of the action, and not within the knowledge of the justice, the court may determine the matter upon affidavits, or in its discretion upon examination of witnesses, or in both methods.[18]

14. Determination and Disposition of Cause — a. Judgment on Trial De Novo[19] — (I) In General. On a trial de novo the judgment of the justice is not reversed or affirmed, but a new, distinct, and independent judgment, as may be required by the merits shown on the trial, is rendered by the appellate court.[20] The jurisdiction acquired by the court is, however, appellate, and it cannot render any judgment on appeal which the justice could not have rendered.[21] On appeal

Counter-claim accruing after trial below.— Where defendant appeals from an adverse judgment, and sets up by way of counter-claim a note which was not due at the time of the trial below, and there is a finding in his favor on the note, and for plaintiff for a less amount on his cause of action, defendant is entitled to judgment for the difference, and for costs in both courts. from a judgment in attachment, the appellate court may order the proceeds of the attached property to be paid to the successful party,[22] and on an appeal by a claimant in garnishment proceedings, the court will discharge the garnishee or trustee, if it appears that he should have been discharged by the justice, although neither he nor defendant appealed from a judgment charging him.[23] In Vermont, when a trustee appeals from a judgment charging him, the same proceedings must be had in the appellate court as if the suit had originally been brought there, or, in default of prosecution of the appeal, the judgment against the trustee must be affirmed.[24] Where a defendant offers to confess judgment before the justice, the offer need not be renewed on appeal in order to make it available to the party making it on final judgment.[25]

(II) Parties. The issue on appeal cannot be tried in the names of different parties from those in which the appeal was entered;[26] but a plaintiff in an action on contract commenced before a justice of the peace against several defendants may have judgment on appeal against a part of them only;[27] and conversely, where judgment is rendered below against one of two defendants, and the action dismissed as to the other, upon appeal by him against whom judgment was rendered the action in the appellate court should proceed, and judgment may be rendered against both.[28] In a joint action of tort, where all the defendants answer, and a general verdict is rendered, judgment cannot properly be rendered against one only; but if on appeal by him all the defendants appear and defend, and the verdict is against all, judgment may be rendered against all.[29]

(III) On Default or Nonsuit. No judgment by default can be entered on appeal against an appellee who has not been given the required notice of appeal;[30] nor can an appellant have his pleas taken as confessed where he has subpœnaed the appellee, who fails to appear because of the non-payment of his witness' fees on demand therefor.[31] Since there must be a trial de novo on the merits, a plaintiff cannot take judgment final by default against defendant without proof of his claim,[32] and the nonsuit of a plaintiff on appeal does not entitle defendant to take excess has accrued since the rendition of the judgment below.[43] A plaintiff may, however, remit the excess over his claim or over the justice's jurisdiction, and take judgment for the balance.[44]

more than four days after the hearing, a perpetual stay of proceedings will be granted.[51] Where a judgment was not appealable,[52] or where the case has not been properly brought up,[53] the appellate court can enter no judgment other than one of dismissal.[54] But the failure of the appellate court to decide an appeal at the term at which it is heard does not deprive the court of jurisdiction.[55]

(II) Affirmance—(A) In General. Under some statutes, upon affirming a justice's judgment, the court must enter a new judgment;[56] but as a rule a simple affirmance of the judgment below is sufficient;[57] and, in either case, if nothing further remains to be done, the appellate court may enforce the judgment.[58] Where the appellate court has no jurisdiction of an appeal, an affirmance of the judgment below is error,[59] and the same is true where a writ of error is dismissed;[60] and an affirmance of an invalid judgment cannot impart any validity to it;[61] nor can the appellate court, upon reversing a justice's judgment setting aside a previous judgment, affirm the latter.[62] The time at which a judgment may be affirmed, and the procedure for affirmance, are wholly regulated by statute,[63] and where an affirmance is prematurely had, the judgment of the appellate court will be reversed.[64]

(B) Grounds—(1) Failure to Prosecute Appeal. In many jurisdictions provision is made by statute or rule of court for the affirmance of a justice's judgment on a proper application by the appellee, where the appellant fails to prosecute his appeal as required by law. What constitutes such failure to prosecute as to authorize an affirmance on motion depends almost wholly upon the statutes, rules, and practice in the different states.[65] In order to confer jurisdiction on the appellate court to render a judgment of affirmance for want of prosecution, the return of the justice must be in conformity with the statute, and show the proceedings had before him.[66]

(2) Error Not Shown. If error does not affirmatively appear in the proceedings before the justice, his judgment should be affirmed.[67]

(III) Modification. In some jurisdictions the appellate court is not restricted to a simple affirmance or reversal of the justice's judgment, but may correct clerical errors therein;[68] and, where the facts are not in dispute and all material matters appear on the record, may modify the judgment so as to make it conform to the law and justice of the case.[69]

(IV) Reversal — (A) In General. If a justice's judgment is erroneous, it is the duty of the appellate court to reverse it.[70] A simple judgment of reversal of a justice's judgment in favor of plaintiff has the effect of a dismissal of the action;[71] and where a judgment discharging a garnishee is reversed on appeal by plaintiff and a judgment rendered on the garnishee's disclosure, a claimant, who has had full opportunity to establish his claim, is bound by such judgment.[72] Where a justice's judgment in an action to recover chattels or their value is merely reversed on appeal, a judgment entered on the reversal to the effect that defendant is entitled to a return of the chattels, or their value if a return cannot be had, is not in accordance with the decision of the appellate court, and such judgment, and an execution issued thereon, will be set aside.[73]

(B) Grounds — (1) Jurisdictional Defects. A want of jurisdiction in the justice to render the judgment complained of is ground for reversal.[74]

(2) Prejudicial Error — (a) In General. Wherever a prejudicial and incurable error has been committed, without the fault of the party injuriously affected thereby,[75] it is ground for reversing the judgment.[76] But a judgment rendered in an action tried before a justice with a jury cannot be reversed for errors occurring at the trial, where the record does not contain the evidence introduced upon the trial, or on the hearing of the motion for a new trial.[77]

(b) Erroneous Rulings of Justice. An erroneous ruling by the justice on a material point, to the prejudice of the appellant, is ground for reversal.[78]

tion to the jurisdiction of the justice over the subject-matter.[91] Objections growing out of defects in or insufficiency of the proceedings to obtain a review of or perfect an appeal from a justice of the peace cannot ordinarily be raised for the first time on appeal from the intermediate appellate court.[92]

c. Scope and Extent of Review — (I) In General. The general principles governing the review of the proceedings of inferior courts have been exhaustively treated elsewhere in this work, and apply to the review of the proceedings of a court to which a case has been transferred from a justice of the peace by appeal or error.[93]

(II) Presumptions. On review of the proceedings of an intermediate appellate court on appeal from a justice of the peace, the higher court will make every reasonable and warrantable presumption in favor of the justice's jurisdiction,[94] the regularity of the appeal to the intermediate court,[95] and the regularity of the proceedings in that court.[96]

(III) Discretion of Lower Court. Matters within the discretion of an intermediate appellate court will not be reviewed on appeal from its judgment.[97]

(IV) Harmless Error. A judgment of an intermediate appellate court will not be reversed for harmless or non-prejudicial error.[98]

d. Determination and Disposition of Cause — (I) Dismissal of Appeal. In order to obtain a dismissal of an appeal from an intermediate to a higher court, on the ground that the suit in the intermediate court was a continuation of one brought before a justice, the affidavit must show in terms that the justice's jurisdiction was ousted by the giving of a proper undertaking.[99]

(II) Affirmance. The judgment of an intermediate appellate court, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, must be affirmed, if there is no statement or bill of exceptions or error apparent on the record;[1] and where the higher court affirms a judgment dismissing an appeal from a justice, the jurisdiction of the intermediate court over the case is at an end.[2]

(III) Reversal. The finding of an intermediate court on appeal from a justice is equivalent to a verdict, and, having been entered of record, the appellate court cannot enlarge it by intendment, but will reverse it, if it is insufficient;[3] and where the intermediate court, in a case triable de novo, refuses to pass on all the questions raised at the trial before the justice, and an appeal is taken, the judgment will be reversed, without regard to the merits of the objections.[4] So too where a judgment for plaintiff has been reversed below, the higher court on further appeal will reverse the decision of the intermediate court, if it appears that the justice had no jurisdiction of the case;[5] and if an intermediate court

Grounds of judgment below.— When an appeal is taken from a judgment of a magistrate on several grounds, and the order of the circuit court merely recites that it sustains the appeal, without stating the grounds, such order will be reversed if any of the grounds assigned were untenable. Lookout Mountain Medicine Co. v. Hare, 56 S. C. 456, 35 S. E. 130.

Void order.— When a writ of error to a justice's court was pending in a circuit court, which, under Code, § 162, had exclusive jurisdiction of such writs, it was held that, although an order of change of venue to the district court was void, yet, to prevent a failure of justice, the order would be reversed on appeal at the cost of the movers for the change. Sayles v. Deluhrey, 64 Iowa 109, 19 N. W. 883.

Allowing a remittitur.— Where, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, the circuit court awards judgment on a set-off in favor of a defendant to a larger amount than the justice had jurisdiction over, the supreme court, on appeal, will not allow a remittitur to be entered there for the excess. Crow v. Cunningham, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 255.

4. Maxon v. Reed, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 618. If the common pleas should dismiss an action appealed from the judgment of a justice of the peace, where the appeal is regularly claimed and prosecuted, or should send the parties out of court, without proceeding to try any issues of law or fact which may have been joined, and without entering a formal judgment for either party, a reversal and venire facias de novo would be awarded on error. reverses in a case in which it should modify an erroneous judgment, the appellate court will reverse its judgment, and render such judgment as it should have rendered.[6]

(iv) Remand and New Trial. Where, on appeal from a justice's court, the complaint has been amended so as to include a distinct cause of action, a new trial will be granted on further appeal, although the amount involved is small, since it affects the right, and not the amount of recovery.[7] But a higher court, on reversing a judgment rendered on appeal from a justice of the peace, will send the record back for amendment only where the error is clerical and trifling.[8]

e. Certiorari. In some states the judgment of an intermediate appellate court on an appeal from a justice of the peace may be corrected on certiorari;[9] but on such review only the decision of that court not that of the justice can be looked into,[10] although the court may inspect the transcript sent up by the justice in order to ascertain a fact that occurred before him.[11]

B. Certiorari, Recordari, and Writs of Review — 1. In General — a. Nature and Scope of Remedy. The common-law writ of certiorari is strictly a revisory remedy intended for the correction of errors of law apparent on the face of the record, and which go to the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal. It is not a substitute for an appeal, and will not reach mere error or irregularity not affecting jurisdiction.[12] But writs of certiorari, recordari, and review, issued to review proceedings before justices of the peace, are now almost wholly regulated by statute,[13] and, while they cannot take the place of an appeal or writ of error,[14]

they partake of their nature,[15] and will lie where an appeal or writ of error does not,[16] or where the right thereto has been denied or lost otherwise than by a party's own default.[17] If a judgment of a justice is void, relief may competently be obtained by writ of review.[18]

b. Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction to issue writs of certiorari, recordari, and review to justices of the peace is conferred by the constitutions and statutes of the various states, and does not exist in the absence of such authority.[19] Where the certiorari carries up the case for trial de novo, the jurisdiction of the higher court depends upon that of the justice,[20] and the court cannot upon the trial consider items not claimed below.[21]

2. Decisions and Proceedings Reviewable — a. In General. Beyond the broad statement that the proceedings must have been judicial,[22] and a final decision rendered,[23] it is impracticable to lay down any general rules as to the decisions and

Where no real fault or negligence can be imputed to the party, courts will, in view of the extension of the jurisdiction of justices, by which a new trial by jury has become a matter of greater importance to the rights and interests of the parties, rather relax than render more stringent the practice regulating the remedy by certiorari. proceedings reviewable by certiorari or recordari. The question is determined by the statutes of the various jurisdictions, and to them reference must be had.[24]

24. Alabama.— Waddle v. Dumas, 13 Ala. 412 (does not lie to judgment in tort); Gilleland v. Ware, 4 Ala. 414 (lies to quash execution); Gregg v. Hinson, 9 Port. 631 (lies to judgment in claim proceedings).

Arkansas.— St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Barnes, 35 Ark. 95, holding that a judgment rendered without evidence is not void, or so irregular as to be quashable on certiorari.

California.— Elder v. Fresno County Justices' Ct., 136 Cal. 364, 63 Pac. 1082 (lies to annul judgment rendered without the required notice of trial); History Co. v. Light, 97 Cal. 56, 31 Pac. 627 (does not lie to decision which justice had jurisdiction to render); Reagan v. San Francisco Justices' Ct., 75 Cal. 253, 17 Pac. 195 (writ of review does not lie to judgment by default where justice has jurisdiction of parties and subject-matter); Coulter v. Stark, 7 Cal. 244 (does not lie to action of justice in granting appeals and staying proceedings).

Georgia.— Conyers v. Ford, 111 Ga. 754, 36 S. E. 947 (does not lie to review question arising subsequent to the granting of petition for writ); Gassett v. Duke, 108 Ga. 816, 34 S. E. 168 (does not lie to review a verdict in void proceedings); Stephens v. Wallis, 75 Ga. 726 (does not lie to proceedings to bind over to keep the peace); Gregory v. Clark, 73 Ga. 542 (lies to correct error in proceeding to require the strengthening of a garnishment bond); Miller v. Hensley, 65 Ga. 556 (one whose appeal to a jury from a judgment not exceeding fifty dollars has been dismissed on the trial is precluded from bringing certiorari to the original judgment).

Illinois.— Yunt v. Brown, 2 Ill. 264 (certiorari only lies where appeal would lie); Rielly v. Prince, 37 Ill. App. 102 (where defendant has appeared but fails to attend the proceedings, certiorari will not lie to review the judgment).

Massachusetts.— Certiorari is the proper remedy to review proceedings on a complaint to recover a fine under the militia law. Gleason v. Sloper, 24 Pick. 181; Cousins v. Cowing, 23 Pick. 208; Ball v. Brigham, 5 Mass. 406.

Michigan.— Under Howell Annot. St. § 7031, all judgments rendered by a justice, whether issue was joined or not, may be removed to the circuit or district court by certiorari. Proper v. Conkling, 67 Mich. 244, 34 N. W. 560. See also Eldridge v. Hubbell, 119 Mich. 61, 77 N. W. 631 (lies to review action of justice in allowing a peremptory challenge); Wedel v. Green, 70 Mich. 642, 38 N. W. 638 (lies to review proceedings before justice where a transcript has been filed in the circuit court, and execution has issued).

Minnesota.— St. Paul v. The Dr. Franklin, 1 Minn. 97, to the effect that where the mayor of a town is given the ordinary powers of a justice by a statute which provides that an appeal may be taken from his judgments, his proceedings can only be reviewed by appeal.

Mississippi.— Burrow v. Sanders, 57 Miss. 211, holding that certiorari lies in a case under the Agricultural Lien Law.

Missouri.— Fry v. Armstrong, 109 Mo. App. 482, 84 S. W. 1001, holding that certiorari does not lie to correct an error in rendering judgment prematurely.

Montana.— State v. Gallatin County Justice Ct., 31 Mont. 258, 78 Pac. 498 (defendants who appear, answer, and agree to time for trial cannot bring certiorari to review the judgment, although they do not appear at the trial); State v. Votaw, 18 Mont. 279, 44 Pac. 982 (where justice issues execution against a stranger and inserts his name in the execution, he acts judicially, and certiorari lies to review his proceedings).

Nevada.— Paul v. Armstrong, 1 Nev. 82, holding that certiorari lies to review judgment by default, or on confession, where there was no answer or issue.

New Jersey.— Stokes v. Schlacter, 66 N. J. L. 247, 49 Atl. 556 (lies to review proceedings for violation of city ordinances); Bisbee v. Bowden, 55 N. J. L. 69, 25 Atl. 855 (determination of justice on trial of facts on motion to quash attachment reviewable on certiorari); Hershoff v. Beverly, 43 N. J. L. 139 (proceeding so informal that it does not apprise defendant whether it is an action of debt or an information is reviewable by certiorari); Ritter v. Kunkle, 39 N. J. L. 259 (where justice has jurisdiction, a judgment by confession is reviewable by certiorari, and other judgments by appeal; where he has no jurisdiction, appeal and certiorari are concurrent); Krumeick v. Krumeick, 14 N. J. L. 39 (error in the awarding or issuing of execution in a cause is reviewable by certiorari).

New York.— Buffalo v. Schliefer, 25 Hun 275 (proceeding to recover penalty under a city ordinance is reviewable by appeal only); People v. Perry, 16 Hun 461 (summary proceeding reviewable by appeal or certiorari); Pugsley v. Anderson, 3 Wend. 468 (certiorari does not lie to review proceedings respecting encroachments on highways). See also generally People v. Onondaga Ct. C. Pl., 4 Wend. 212; Wheeler v. Roberts, 7 Cow. 536.

North Carolina.— A writ of recordari will lie to bring up the proceedings in a case of forcible entry and detainer, although no traverse was entered before the justice. Webb v. Durham, 29 N. C. 130. An attachment wrongfully issued from a justice's court, against a citizen of the state, transiently absent, is remedied by recordari. Merrell v. McHone, 126 N. C. 528, 36 S. E. 35.

Ohio.— Hartshorn v. Wilson, 2 Ohio 27, holding that an attachment may be set aside on certiorari, where defendant was a resident at the time it issued.

b. Issues of Law or Fact. On certiorari to review proceedings had before a justice of the peace, the court is confined to questions of law,[25] and the writ will not lie where questions of fact are involved.[26] In Georgia, where there has been an appeal to a jury in the justice's court, certiorari will lie to the judgment;[27] but it is proper to refuse the petition where the evidence authorized the verdict rendered, and there was no error in the justice's rulings.[28]

c. Amount or Value in Controversy. As in the case of appeal and error,[29] the right to review the judgment of a justice of the peace on certiorari is made dependent in some jurisdictions upon the amount or value in controversy.[30]

Oregon.— Union County v. Slocum, 16 Oreg. 237, 17 Pac. 876 (writ of review lies to judgment by default for want of an answer); Kearns v. Follansby, 15 Oreg. 596, 15 Pac. 478 (writ of review does not lie to judgment on demurrer).

Pennsylvania.— Spicer v. Rees, 5 Rawle 119, 28 Am. Dec. 648 (certiorari does not lie from supreme court to justice in any civil suit or action); Frick v. Patton, 2 Rawle 20 (to the same effect); Com. v. Fourteen Hogs, 10 Serg. & R. 393 (proceedings under the act relating to swine running at large reviewable on certiorari); Adams v. Hill, 29 Leg. Int. 126 (where a judgment is transferred to the docket of a justice of another court, certiorari will lie to such justice for jurisdictional defects appearing on the face of the judgment); Masters v. Turner, 10 Phila. 482 (on the revival of an erroneous judgment against defendant and garnishee jointly, the latter may have a review by certiorari).

Tennessee.— Simmons v. Harris, 7 Baxt. 325 (certiorari does not lie to quash judgment rendered on notes not due); Jones v. Williams, 2 Swan 105 (certiorari lies to quash levy of execution on exempt property); Gunn v. Benson, 5 Yerg. 221 (certiorari does not lie to quash execution issued on a judgment which has been dormant for one year); Linebaugh v. Rinker, Peck 362 (lies to bring up execution where petition alleges payment); Elders v. Johnston, Peck 204 (lies to bring up execution improperly issued).

Texas.— Wood v. Rich, 8 Tex. 280, holding that certiorari is not proper remedy to bring up a case for a new trial, where the justice issues execution after expiration of twelve months without reviving the judgment.

Vermont.— The proceedings of justice of the peace may be reviewed by certiorari. In re Kennedy, 55 Vt. 1.

Wisconsin.— Where a justice has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties in garnishment, error in the proceedings cannot be reviewed by certiorari. Krueger v. Cone, 106 Wis. 522, 81 N. W. 984.

United States.— When the transcript of a justice contains nothing in the form of a judgment, but only the assertion that he gave one, the proceedings are a nullity, and certiorari lies to reverse them. Camp v. Price, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,347*a*, Hempst. 174.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Justices of the Peace," § 765.

Illinois.— Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Fell, 22 Ill. 333.

Michigan.— Mero v. Button, 116 Mich. 680, 75 N. W. 89; McGraw v. Schwab, 23 Mich. 13.

Pennsylvania.— House v. Ziegler, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 159.

Texas.— Clevenger v. Murray, (Civ. App. 1902) 67 S. W. 469 [following Adair v. Graham, 17 Tex. 175].

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Justices of the Peace," § 766.

A question of law only is involved where, on consideration of the entire evidence, it would be proper, if the case were on trial, for the superior court to direct a verdict, and it is error to dismiss a petition for certiorari, on the ground that it is sought to review questions of both law and fact. Dotson v. Hawes, 120 Ga. 369, 47 S. E. 900.

27. Western, etc., R. Co. v. Dyer, 70 Ga. 723. See also Goss v. Lord, 72 Ga. 206.

29. See supra, V, A, 2, b.

30. Alabama.— Certiorari does not lie to review a justice's judgment in a proceeding instituted under Clay Dig. p. 358, § 3, to recover damages, where the amount claimed does not exceed twenty dollars. Winn v. Freele, 19 Ala. 171.

District of Columbia.— Certiorari lies from the supreme court to justices in civil actions

3. Grounds, Defenses, and Right of Review — a. Grounds — (i) In General. What will and what will not be held sufficient ground for issuing a writ of certiorari, recordari, or review depends so largely upon the facts and circumstances of the individual case, that an attempted enumeration of the grounds which have been held sufficient or otherwise would be not only impracticable, but useless. As a general proposition such a writ will be granted whenever it is shown that it is necessary to the attainment of substantial justice.[31] before judgment, in all cases where the amount in controversy exceeds fifty dollars. Coleman v. Freedman, 1 MacArthur 160.

Georgia.— Where the amount involved is less than fifty dollars, certiorari does not lie (Brice v. Chapman, 95 Ga. 799, 22 S. E. 525; Blalock v. Smith, 95 Ga. 557, 22 S. E. 282; Bernstein v. Clark, 87 Ga. 148, 13 S. E. 336; Greenwood v. Boyd, etc., Furniture Factory, 86 Ga. 582, 13 S. E. 128; Central R., etc., Co. v. White, 86 Ga. 202, 12 S. E. 840; Thompson v. Dodd, 84 Ga. 264, 10 S. E. 739; Wynne v. Darden, 80 Ga. 730, 6 S. E. 470).

Mississippi.— The circuit court has jurisdiction of a cause removed from a justice's court by certiorari, although the principal sum in controversy does not exceed fifty dollars. Hurd v. Germany, 7 How. 675; Hurd v. Tombes, 7 How. 229.

Wisconsin.— Appeal not certiorari is the proper practice to review the decision of a justice in replevin, when the property recovered, or the val· and damages, exceed fifteen dollars. Dykens v. Munson, 2 Wis. 245; McCaffrey v. Nolan, 1 Wis. 361.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Justices of the Peace," § 767.

31. Grounds held sufficient.— Georgia.— Western, etc., R. Co. v. Poe, 112 Ga. 90, 37 S. E. 119 (in which plaintiff had recovered for the killing of an animal, without showing that it was in fact killed); Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Redding, 112 Ga. 62, 37 S. E. 91 (in which plaintiff recovered without showing a fact essential to recovery); Farmers' Mut. Ins. Assoc. v. Austin, 109 Ga. 689, 35 S. E. 122 (in which the jury found for defendant on evidence demanding a verdict for plaintiff); Howard v. Strickland, 54 Ga. 112 (in which the judgment was without evidence to support it).

Louisiana.—State v. Voorhies, 49 La. Ann. 1717, 23 So. 107, in which a judgment had been reversed in the district court, and new cases, claimed by defendant to be on the same cause of action, were commenced before the justice, for amounts within his exclusive jurisdiction, and it was held that the district court had power, by writs of certiorari and prohibition, to compel the justice to send up his records, in order to decide whether it had jurisdiction.

New Jersey.— Roller v. Roller, 46 N. J. L. 511, in which the justice's judgment was not docketed in the manner required by statute, and it was held that the party aggrieved might on certiorari claim judgment of the supreme court as to the validity of the docketing without waiting until his lands were sold under it.

New York.— Green v. Armstrong, 1 Den. 550, in which plaintiff declared on a "verbal contract" in a case within the statute of frauds, and defendant pleaded specially, instead of demurring, and it was held that he could take advantage of the invalidity of the contract on certiorari.

North Carolina.— Lancaster v. Brady, 49 N. C. 79 (in which the merits were clearly for the losing party, and there were circumstances tending to show fraud and collusion between the successful party and the justice, who were brothers, to deprive the other party of a fair trial and of the right to appeal, and it was held that a recordari should issue); Lassiter v. Harper, 32 N. C. 392 (in which judgment was rendered against husband and wife on a bond, after which, and before satisfaction, the husband died, and the wife was not present at the rendition of judgment, and execution was levied upon, and a sale ordered of, her land, and it was held that she was entitled to a writ of certiorari). Where a warrant has been brought against an administrator for the debt of his intestate, and the justice before whom it is returned renders a judgment against him individually, it is error, for which a recordari, in the nature of a writ of error, is a proper remedy. Hare v. Parham, 49 N. C. 412.

Pennsylvania.—Rice v. Kitzelman, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 173, to the effect that if a judgment, a transcript of which has been filed in the common pleas, was improperly entered against one of the defendants, the proper remedy is certiorari.

Texas.— McNeill v. Hallmark, 28 Tex. 157 (in which judgment was rendered on a note not due); Duncan v. Bullock, 18 Tex. 541; Reed v. Sieckenius, (Civ. App. 1901) 65 S. W. 487; Carroll v. Gilbert, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 266, 17 S. W. 1086; Lindheim v. Davis, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 108.

Wisconsin.— May v. Keep, 2 Pinn. 301, 1 Chandl. 285, to the effect that the supreme court will allow a common-law writ of certiorari, where execution has issued on a justice's judgment, returnable before the next term of the circuit court.

See 31 Cent. Dig. tit. "Justices of the Peace," § 768.

Grounds held insufficient see Aiken v. Haines, 110 Ga. 324, 35 S. E. 319; Miner v. Gose, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 73.

(II) Failure or Inability to Defend. A party who has failed or been unable to defend in the justice's court, without default or negligence on his part, may upon a proper showing be granted a writ of certiorari;[32] but it is otherwise where his failure to make defense is due to his own carelessness or laches.[33]

(III) Acts Without Jurisdiction. Certiorari or recordari is the proper remedy for a review of proceedings before a justice of the peace, where he was without jurisdiction or exceeded his jurisdiction.[34]

(IV) Errors and Irregularities. Where a justice had jurisdiction, errors and irregularities in the proceedings before him are not in most jurisdictions reviewable by certiorari.[35]

b. Defenses and Grounds of Opposition. It is no objection to the issuance of a writ of certiorari that it was sued out after the expiration of the time allowed Newly discovered evidence not ground for writ see Almand v. Maxwell, 100 Ga. 318, 27 S. E. 176.

Absence of a material witness at the trial is no ground for a writ of certiorari, unless it appears that a continuance was demanded for that cause. Robinson v. Lakey, 19 Tex. 139.

32. Heep v. Burr, 34 Ill. App. 70; West v. Williamson, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 277 (in which a continuance, ordered on the day of trial, without notice to defendant, was held to be good cause for granting a certiorari to a judgment afterward rendered in his absence, but not for quashing the execution issued on the judgment); Darling v. Neill, 15 Tex. 104; Ahrens v. Giesecke, 9 Tex. 432; Weihl v. Davy, 6 Tex. 168; Parlin, etc., Co. v. Bellows, (Tex. for taking an appeal,[36] that an appeal was taken and dismissed,[37] that the judgment has been paid,[38] that the appeal to the jury was void, unless its invalidity affirmatively appears,[39] or that defendant has waived costs on a judgment of nonsuit;[40] and any objection to the granting of the writ on account of the want of a showing of good cause supported by affidavit is waived by appearing in court and entering upon the trial without noticing or objecting to such defect.[41] But where an appeal has been entered from a judgment, the appellant cannot review the same judgment by certiorari;[42] and pending a right of appeal from a judgment of an intermediate court quashing a writ of review to a justice's judgment, certiorari will not lie to the supreme court to review the latter judgment.[43] Where the evidence was sufficient to support a verdict, there is no error in overruling a certiorari thereto.[44]

c. Right of Review — (I) In General. The writ of certiorari is not one of right, but its issuance lies in the sound discretion of the court authorized to grant it.[45] Any party to the judgment may bring certiorari,[46] but where a garnishee appeals from a judgment against him, the principal debtor cannot also bring up the garnishment proceedings by certiorari.[47]

(II) Existence of Remedy by Appeal. Where an adequate remedy by appeal exists, certiorari will not generally lie to review proceedings before a justice of the peace.[48]

asserting his rights,[67] or in pursuing other efficient remedies,[68] and if he claims to have been misled by the adverse party, it must be shown how.[69] It should show that it was attempted to make the grounds relied on available at the trial, or the reason why they were not then presented,[70] and it must negative all probable defenses.[71] Facts, and not opinions or conclusions, must be stated.[72]

(B) Setting Out Errors and Want of Jurisdiction. A petition for certiorari must set out plainly and distinctly the errors complained of;[73] and, where the writ is prayed on the ground that the justice had no jurisdiction, the want of jurisdiction must be clearly shown,[74] and some attempt to establish the plea to the jurisdiction below must be averred.[75]

(C) Setting Out Evidence. In Texas a petition for a writ of certiorari, based upon the ground that the justice has decided unjustly on the merits, must set out in substance all of the evidence, with an allegation that it has been done.[76] But in a case where this was evidently the intention of the petitioner, although without any distinct allegation that he has reported all the evidence, if the evidence reported shows the injustice of the judgment, it will be reversed;[77] nor is it necessary that the petition should set out the evidence verbatim, or give the exact contents of written documents.[78]

(D) Allegations as to Defenses. Except where certiorari is brought on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the justice,[79] the petitioner must show that he had a good cause of action or ground of defense, and that the same was properly presented to the justice, or a sufficient legal excuse must be assigned for the omission to do so.[80]

(E) Excusing Negligence or Failure to Defend. The petition for a writ of certiorari to remove a cause from a justice of the peace must negative any default or negligence on the part of the petitioner, and allege a valid excuse for his failure to defend in the justice's court.[81]

(F) Excusing Failure to Appeal. In most jurisdictions a petition for a writ of certiorari to a justice of the peace must show why the petitioner did not exercise his right of appeal.[82]

c. Payment of Fees and Costs. Payment of costs is a prerequisite, under some statutes, to the issuance of a writ of certiorari,[83] and in Georgia a party applying for a writ must produce a certificate from the justice whose judgment is complained of that all costs below have been paid,[84] while in North Carolina, before an application for recordari can be entertained, the petitioner must aver that he has paid or offered to pay the justice's fees.[85]

d. Bond or Recognizance — (I) Necessity. As a condition to the allowance of a writ of certiorari, the petitioner, his agent, or attorney,[86] must enter into a bond or recognizance, conditioned as prescribed by law.[87]

(II) Parties. In Georgia the bond must be conditioned to pay the adverse party,[88] and the surety must be different from the surety on the bond given on appeal to a jury.[89]

(III) Attestation. That a certiorari bond is attested by a commercial notary instead of by the magistrate will not invalidate the certiorari.[90]

(iv) Filing and Service. The bond must be filed within the time prescribed by law or fixed by the officer granting the writ,[91] and, where the statutes so require, must be served on the justice, together with the writ, within the prescribed time.[92]

(v) Sufficiency. A bond in substantial compliance with the statutory requirement is sufficient,[93] and a certiorari will not be dismissed because of an immaterial variance between the name of the obligor as given in the bond and as signed thereto,[94] because the bond contains a superfluous condition,[95] or because it fails to show in what county or before what justice the judgment was rendered, where the petition fully describes the court and suit, and there is no variance between the description of the judgment in the bond and the transcript.[96] Where a number of judgments between the same parties have been rendered by a justice and removed by certiorari, it is competent for the court to direct that but one bond shall be executed.[97]

(vi) Acceptance and Approval. A certiorari bond is sufficient if it shows on its face its acceptance and approval by the justice who tried the case, although there is no certificate of such acceptance and approval;[98] and where a justice files the bond and the return, his approval of the sureties is sufficiently shown.[99] So too, where the clerk receives and files the bond and issues the writ, and the judge has indorsed his approval on the bond, the approval by the clerk will be presumed;[1] and where the clerk has neglected to fill in the blank approval, and sign the same, the court will permit him formally to indorse his approval thereon afterward, as of the date of actual approval.[2] But the mere fact that the justice entered on a certiorari bond a certificate that the costs in the case had been paid is not sufficient evidence of his approval of the bond to warrant the issuance of the writ by the clerk of the court.[3] A bond to which the name of the petitioner appears to have been signed by attorney, whose authority does not, however, appear, will be considered prima facie the bond of the petitioner, after it has been approved by the proper officer.[4]

7. Issuance and Service of Writ, and Supersedeas — a. Issuance of Writ. While the removal of a cause from a justice's court by certiorari is regularly effected when the writ is executed and returned,[5] the filing of the petition, with an order allowing the writ indorsed thereon, and an approved bond, will give the court jurisdiction without the issuance of the writ;[6] and where, after the granting of a certiorari, the justice delivers a proper transcript and the original papers to the clerk of the court, the court has jurisdiction, although the clerk has issued no writ requiring the justice to do as he has done.[7] The clerk has no authority to issue a writ of certiorari until it has been formally allowed by the proper officer,[8] and where a statute requires that the writ shall issue within a prescribed time after judgment, a writ issued after that time should be dismissed.[9] On a petition for a recordari and notice served on the adverse party, he should be allowed to be heard in opposition, without having to wait until the writ is granted and returned.[10] A writ which apprises the justice that he is required to return the record is sufficient, although it contains no express mandate to that effect.[11]

b. Service of Writ, and Notice. A writ of certiorari must be served upon the justice who tried the case,[12] and notice of its issuance must be given the adverse party.[13]

c. Supersedeas or Stay of Proceedings. Where a certiorari is sued out and served on the justice, and the required bond or recognizance is entered into, further proceedings before him are stayed,[14] and where an attachment has issued, the suing out of the writ and giving bond for the payment of any judgment that may be rendered dissolves the attachment.[15] But where the writ is not served until after the officer has begun to enforce execution, the certiorari will not supersede the execution,[16] and if execution has been levied, and the judgment is affirmed on certiorari, its lien is preserved.[17]

It is the duty of the justice to make his

the duty of the plaintiff in certiorari to have the return duly made.[19] Where the justice has removed from the state, the return may be made by the party's taking from his docket a true copy of the record, annexing it to the writ, returning it to the court, and proving by competent evidence that it is a copy of the record.[20] A party waives all informalities in a justice's return to a writ sued out by him, where he goes to trial on it without objection.[21]

b. Scope and Contents of Return or Record. The original papers are not sent up in answer to a writ of certiorari,[22] but a transcript of his record, as of the date of the service of the writ,[23] which must state the cause of the action, proceedings, and judgment.[24] The evidence before the justice need not be returned,[25] unless its return is ordered by the court;[26] and generally the return need not show matters not called for by the petition.[27]

c. Sufficiency of Return or Record. While all the proceedings before the justice must be returned,[28] his return or record will be liberally construed and held sufficient if possible;[29] and even where the return is insufficient or incorrect, the writ will not be quashed or the proceedings dismissed, but the justice will be ordered to make an amended return.[30] In Georgia the magistrate may either set out the evidence, or adopt as correct the brief of evidence in the petition.[31]

e. Amendment and Further Return. Upon a proper showing of errors in, or diminution of, the record, made before the commencement of the hearing in the higher court,[34] the justice may be compelled to amend his return or make a new or further return.[35] So too the justice may be allowed to amend his return,[36] provided he does not thereby contradict his first return.[37]

writ was served, or that the papers were produced,[51] or that the account sued on did not contain the full first name of plaintiff.[52] In Wisconsin the proper practice is for the appellate court to affirm or reverse the judgment, and not dismiss the writ.[53]

(II) Time of Motion. A motion to dismiss or quash a writ of certiorari must be made at the earliest moment,[54] usually the first term.[55]

(III) Hearing on Motion. In considering a motion to dismiss proceedings to carry up a case by certiorari, the transcript should be looked to in determining the merits of the motion.[56] Counter-affidavits controverting the statements of the petition are not admissible,[57] but the papers of the justice may be read to negative its allegations.[58]

(IV) Judgment on Dismissal. Independently of statute,[59] the court should not, on dismissing a writ of certiorari, affirm the judgment below,[60] or render judgment against the petitioner and his sureties for the amount of the justice's judgment.[61] But a judgment for costs and awarding a procedendo is proper.[62]

(V) Effect of Dismissal. The quashing or dismissal of a writ of certiorari is usually equivalent to a judgment that the writ ought never to have been granted, and revives the judgment of the court below;[63] but where the writ is dismissed because of the failure of plaintiff to prosecute, such dismissal does not revive a judgment in his favor in the lower court.[64] In Georgia a certiorari from a justice is a suit, which, if dismissed, may be renewed within six months after the dismissal,[65] unless the original certiorari was void.[66]

10. Hearing — a. Scope of Review. On certiorari to review the judgment of a justice of the peace, the court will only consider objections which go to the merits,[67] merely technical and formal objections being disregarded.[68] The act

b. Mode of Review — (i) In General. The mode of review on certiorari to justices of the peace is largely dependent on statute. Under some statutes the court sits merely as a court of error,[72] while under others it reviews the case upon the merits.[73] As a rule neither parol evidence,[74] nor affidavits and depositions,[75] are admissible, the case being heard by the court on the return or record,[76] and it has no power to direct an issue to try disputed facts.[77]

(ii) Trials De Novo. In some jurisdictions the statutes provide that on certiorari to review the decision of a justice of the peace the case shall be tried de novo on the merits.[78]

c. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — (I) Presumptions. While it is generally held that no presumptions will be made in favor of a justice's jurisdiction,[79] every reasonable intendment consistent with the record will be made by the court in favor of the regularity of his proceedings.[80]

(II) Burden of Proof. Primarily the burden of proof on certiorari is upon the petitioner,[81] but it is held that his affidavit or petition is sufficient to shift the burden upon the adverse party.[82] Where, however, the justice makes affidavit to facts contradictory to those stated in the petition, the onus is cast upon the petitioner.[83]

d. Parties Entitled to Allege Error. To entitle a party to sue out a writ of certiorari, judgment must have been rendered against him,[84] by which he is injured.[85]

e. Questions Reviewable. What questions are open to review on certiorari to a justice of the peace is entirely dependent upon the statutes. In some jurisdictions only the regularity of the proceedings before the justice can be looked into;[86] in others only questions of law going to the merits of the action;[87] while in Wisconsin the only question open to review is whether the act complained of was within the justice's jurisdiction.[88]

f. Review of Evidence and Questions of Fact. Neither the evidence nor questions of fact will be reviewed on certiorari to a justice of the peace,[89] unless there is a total want of evidence to support the verdict or finding.[90]

g. Matters of Discretion and Harmless Error. On certiorari to a justice of the peace, the court will not consider matters within his discretion,[91] or error which is harmless.[92]

A judgment vacated by the justice cannot modify,[94] or reverse,[95] and where the only question before it is as to the justice's jurisdiction, it must either affirm or reverse.[96] When the right of a party to the writ depends on the facts proved or admitted before the higher court, it is the duty of that court to find and state the facts on which it proceeds to act, so that, in case of an appeal from its decision, the appellate court may know the facts.[97] In Alabama the court may, at a subsequent term, amend its judgment nunc pro tunc.[98]

f. Review of Decisions. In most jurisdictions the statutes provide for a review of a judgment on certiorari to a justice of the peace by either an appeal or writ of error.[11]

C. Liabilities on Bonds or Other Securities[12] — 1. Sufficiency of Undertaking — a. b. Unnecessary or Excessive Bond. Where a bond is given which is not required by law, or which contains more onerous conditions than are required, it can be enforced neither as a statutory nor as a common-law obligation.[21]

2. Void or Defective Appeal or Other Proceeding. Where an appeal or certiorari from or to the judgment of a justice of the peace is for any reason void or fatally defective, the weight of authority is to the effect that no liability

accrues upon the bond or other security, the reason being that in such a case there is in effect no appeal or certiorari.[22]

3. Accrual of Liability — a. In General. Liability upon an appeal or certiorari bond or recognizance accrues upon the breach of any of its conditions.[23]

b. Affirmance of Judgment. The condition of an appeal or certiorari bond is broken upon the affirmance of the judgment complained of,[24] and this is true, although the judgment of affirmance is not rendered by the immediate, but by a higher, appellate court.[25] Where two defendants against whom a joint judgment is rendered make a joint appeal, and plaintiff recovers judgment against one of them alone, the sureties on the joint bond are liable.[26]

4. Release or Discharge of Sureties. While the obligation of a surety on an appeal or certiorari bond cannot be extended beyond the strict limits of his contract,[27] yet within those limits his obligation is absolute, and as a rule nothing short of a performance of its conditions,[28] release or waiver,[29] payment,[30] or

30. A payment to the clerk of court of the amount secured by an appeal-bond does not absolve the sureties from liability, unless a discharge in bankruptcy[31] will operate to release or discharge him from liability thereon.[32]

5. EXTENT OF LIABILITY — a. In General. The undertaking of a surety upon an appeal or certiorari bond is in substance that he will satisfy any judgment against his principal which may result from a trial or from failure effectively to prosecute the appeal or certiorari.[33] His liability is limited to the penalty of his bond,[34] and in Arkansas judgment cannot be rendered against him in an amount exceeding the jurisdiction of the justice.[35]

b. On Dismissal of Appeal. On the dismissal of an appeal the sureties on the appeal-bond become liable for the judgment appealed from,[36] unless the bond is limited to the payment of the appellate judgment.[37]

c. In Claim Proceedings. Where a claimant or intervener appeals from an adverse judgment, no judgment can be rendered on the appeal-bond except for costs.[38]

6. Judgment Against Sureties on Appeal. By signing an appeal or certiorari bond the sureties submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the appellate court, which may enter up judgment against them upon the affirmance of the judgment below or the dismissal of the appeal or certiorari, or, if on trial de novo, judgment goes against the appellant.[39] Upon such a judgment execution may issue within the time and under the conditions prescribed by statute.[40]

7. Actions — a. In General. In an action on a recognizance to prosecute an appeal it must appear that the recognizance was returned to, and entered of record in, the court to which the appeal was allowed;[41] that the justice has jurisdiction of the cause in which it was taken;[42] and that it was entered into before the same justice who rendered the judgment.[43]

b. Jurisdiction. An action on a recognizance to prosecute an appeal must be brought in that court in which the record is.[44]

c. Conditions Precedent. In some jurisdictions it is a condition precedent to an action upon an appeal-bond that execution issue on the original judgment, and be returned unexecuted in whole or in part.[45]

d. Who May Sue. Where an appeal has been taken, and the judgment assigned pending the appeal, but the undertaking has not been assigned, the assignee cannot maintain an action on such undertaking.[46]

e. Defenses. Sureties on an undertaking for appeal may deny its execution, notwithstanding the justice's approval;[47] but it is no defense to an action on such an undertaking that the appeal was improperly taken,[48] that the appellate court failed to enter judgment against the sureties,[49] that an appeal is pending to a higher court,[50] that after appeal the parties agreed to refer the action,[51] that the surety misunderstood the obligation assumed by reason of the misrepresentations of the justice,[52] that the justice had no jurisdiction,[53] that the judgment debtor was not indebted to plaintiff,[54] that the bond was delivered in violation of an understanding that it was not to be delivered until the appellant should have signed it,[55] or that the party who filed the bond only intended to appeal for himself and not for his co-defendants.[56]

f. Pleading — (I) Declaration, Petition, or Complaint[57] — (A) In General. In an action on an appeal or certiorari bond or recognizance the declaration, petition, or complaint must allege the suit in the justice's court,[58] the jurisdiction of the justice,[59] the rendition of final judgment,[60] that the recognizance was entered into before the justice who rendered the judgment,[61] that it was returned to and made a record of the appellate court,[62] the conditions of the undertaking,[63] and the breaches thereof.[64] The several acts constituting the appeal need not be set out,[65] nor is it necessary to allege that execution was issued and returned unsatisfied, that notice of the dismissal of the appeal was given, that demand was made before action brought, that a delivery of the property in suit could not be had, or that appellant had refused to obey an order of the court, unless a recovery is sought on such order.[66]

(B) In Suit on Undertaking as Common-Law Obligation. In an action on an undertaking which is insufficient as a statutory undertaking, the complaint should affirmatively set out the special facts constituting the agreement on which the undertaking was given, and also allege its delivery.[67]

(II) Plea or Answer. If a surety wishes to avail himself of any deficiency in the undertaking, he must show it specially and at large;[68] and where the fact that an appeal has been taken from the decision of the upper court is alleged, the answer must state that the appeal was perfected before the action on the bond was commenced.[69]

g. Evidence — (I) Presumptions. The fact that a person's name, given in the body of an appeal-bond, is not subscribed thereto, is presumptive evidence that he did not join in the undertaking.[70]

(II) Admissibility — (A) In General. In an action on a bond or recognizance on appeal, proof of an entry of the amount of the debt and costs recovered may be admitted as a record of plaintiff's judgment;[71] and a certified copy of the judgment of the appellate court is admissible to establish the identity of the judgment affirmed with that recited in the bond, without requiring at the same time a certified copy of all proceedings in the case.[72]

(B) Under Plea of Nul Tiel Record. Upon a plea of nul tiel record the issue must be tried by inspection of the transcript and recognizance filed, and not by the docket of the justice.[73]

(III) SUFFICIENCY. In an action on an undertaking on appeal it is not necessary that the evidence should show what disposition the judgment debtor has made of his property,[74] and a constable's return to the execution against him cannot be controverted.[75]

h. Appeal and Error. On error to review the action of the court in overruling a demurrer to a petition upon an undertaking on appeal, where no defects are pointed out by plaintiff in error, and the petition apparently alleges all the substantial and essential facts, setting out a copy of the bond and the final judgment, and the officer's return to the execution showing that he can find no property whereon to levy, the judgment will be affirmed.[76]

JUSTICIARII ITINERANTES. The name used in the ancient common law to designate the justices in eyre who were sent throughout the realm to try causes, in contradistinction to the resident judges.[1]

JUSTICIARII RESIDENTES. A name used in the ancient common law to designate the justices who resided at Westminster.[2]

JUSTICIARII, TANQUAM JUSTI IN CONCRETO, JUSTICIARII DE BANCO DICTI, NUNQUAM JUDICES DE BANCO. A Latin phrase rendered "Justices, from 'justi in concreto,' called justices of the bench, never judges of the bench."[3]

JUSTIFIABLE. Rightful; warranted or sanctioned by law; that which can be shown to be sustained by law;[4] EXCUSABLE,[5] q. v. (Justifiable: Homicide, see HOMICIDE.)

JUSTIFICATION. The showing in court of a sufficient lawful reason why a party charged or accused did that for which he is called to answer;[6] the proceeding by which bail established their ability to perform the undertaking of the bond or recognizance.[7] (Justification: By Officer Acting Under Process, see SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES. The plaintiff's counsel contends that the words 'keep and manage' only convey the idea of administration, or agency . . . 'Keep is a very general term, and is variously applied. A person keeps what is his own, and retains what is not taken from him. He keeps his farm or property, and retains an office.' When Paul tells Peter he can keep his gun, or cart, or farm during a certain period, he will be understood to give Peter the use and enjoyment of the property. Portis v. State, 27 Ark. 360, 361, in which the game is described as follows: "The keeper of the game has a globe; there are put in it ninety balls, each numbered, from one to ninety, and then there are two hundred cards, with fifteen numbers on each card, five numbers in each row; then each player buys a card which contains the fifteen numbers, for which he pays the keeper of the game fifty cents, and others do likewise until several cards are sold; the roller, as he is called, turns the globe over and takes out one of the balls and calls out the number of such ball, and if any one of the players have a number on a card which they have purchased, corresponding to the number so called out, such player puts a check on such number on his card, and so on, at each call by the roller, until one of the players has five checks in a row on his card, and then he has made what they call 'keno,' and then the game stops. The globe, from which the balls are taken by the roller, sits upon a table, in one end of which is a drawer from which change is made by the collector, and chips, frequently issued in lieu of money, redeemable by the collector; and the person who collects the money from the parties who have bought cards, takes up the card that has 'kenoed' and calls its number, and if it is pegged, its number is also called by the roller. The collector then calls out the numbers on the card that are contained in the row that has 'kenoed,' and as he calls a number, the roller examines the balls that have come out, and if the numbers called out by the collector as being on the card, correspond with the balls that are out, the collector announces that 'keno is correct,' and the money that has been paid for the cards sold, is paid over to the holder of the lucky card." I. Nature and Elements of Offense.

A. Nature in General — 1. At Common Law. At common law kidnapping consists in the forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child from his or her own country and sending him or her into another country.[1] As a common-law crime, kidnapping is to be regarded as an aggravated species of false imprisonment,[2] so that in addition to the essential elements of false imprisonment,[3] to constitute the common-law offense proper, another element was necessary, viz., that of sending away the person on whom the offense was committed from his own country into another.[4]

2. By Statute. The common-law definition of the offense has been modified by statute in many states so as to include forcibly seizing and confining another or by inveiglement and enticement causing him to be sent out of the state,[5] forcibly or fraudulently carrying away or decoying another from his place of residence,[6] enticing away or detaining another for the purpose of ransom.[7] Other statutes are designed especially to punish the kidnapping of children by force or enticement.[8]

B. Specific Elements — 1. In General. It is an essential element of the offense that the taking or detention of the person who is the subject thereof shall be without lawful authority,[9] and must be accompanied by the intent to unlaw-transportation, enslavement, or involuntary service." 1 Wharton Cr. L. § 590.

The California act of 1850, denouncing the crime of kidnapping, provides that the abduction must be accompanied with a removal into another county, state, or territory, or a design to remove the kidnapped person beyond the limits of the state, was not repealed by the act of 1856, amendatory of and supplementary to the act of 1850, by virtue of which the intent to detain and conceal was made the gist of the offense. People v. Chu Quong, 15 Cal. 332.

Unlawful arrest.— Where a warrant of arrest duly issued, directed generally to any sheriff, marshal, etc., authorizing and commanding the arrest of a certain person, was put in defendant's hands for execution, his arrest of the person named therein in a county other than that for which he was deputy sheriff, and that in which the warrant was issued, will not justify his commitment on the charge of kidnapping, although his act was unlawful. Ex p. Sternes, 82 Cal. 245, 23 Pac. 38.

Rights of parents.— It is not an offense for a parent to attempt peaceably and without violence to obtain possession of his own child. Com. v. Myers, 146 Pa. St. 24, 23 Atl. 164; People v. Congdon, 77 Mich. 351, 43 N. W. 986. If the custody of the child has been awarded to the father in divorce proceedings and the mother removes and conceals the child for the purpose of evading the decree she is guilty of kidnapping, although the father has never had actual separate possession of the child. Re Lovenz, 9 Can. The phrase "without authority of law" is not synonymous with "without due process of law." People v. Camp, 66 Hun (N. Y.) 531, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 741.

Confinement under claim of insanity.— Where two reputable physicians, appointed by the county judge at the father's instance, fully detain or carry away such person.[10] But the particular purpose to be accomplished by the unlawful act is immaterial.[11]

2. Force — a. Actual Force Not Necessary. To constitute the offense of kidnapping it is not necessary that actual physical force or violence should have been employed,[12] and this was true even at common law.[13] It is essential only that the taking or detention should be against the will of the person kidnapped.[14] Falsely exciting the fears of the person who is the subject of the offense by threats, or enticement or inveiglement by false and fraudulent representations amounting substantially to a coercion of the will is sufficient.[15]

b. What Constitutes Criminal Inveiglement. In determining whether the person was coerced by fraud and inveiglement, the nature of the artifice employed and the age, education, and condition of mind must be taken into consideration.[16]

3. Consent — a. Of Person Detained or Taken Away. The offense is not com-

certify to the daughter's insanity, and their certificate is duly approved by the county judge, as prescribed by N. Y. Laws (1874), c. 446, relating to the confinement of the insane, the father, who took no steps toward her restraint and removal to the hospital before such certificate and approval were placed in his hands, cannot be convicted on proof that the daughter was in fact sane, since, to constitute the crime of kidnapping, the confinement must be "without authority of law." Intent subsequently formed.— Under Ohio Rev. St. § 6825, making the "intent unlawfully to detain or conceal" an essential element of the crime of child-stealing, the intent must accompany the act of taking the child; and it is error to instruct that if the child was taken away from the mother without her consent, and against her will, such taking was unlawful, and any intention thereafter completed the crime. One who acts on a false representation, on a device or trick which misleads him, although apparently acting with his own free will, is acting against his will, and if he goes out of the state or is sent out of the state in pursuance of that inveiglement, he is sent out of it against his will. In re Kelly, 46 Fed. 653. It will hardly be contended that the crime of kidnapping as defined by statute is committed, if the person taken away, being capable in law of consenting, goes voluntarily, without objection, in the absence of fraud or deception. But if the party has been decoyed away fraudulently, the consent having been obtained by deception, the law will regard such consent as a nullity and the act will be treated as against the will of the person decoyed away. John v. State, 6 Wyo. 203, 44 Pac. 51.

In the case of children any solicitation, promise, or allurement resorted to, for the purpose of inducing the child to leave its proper guardian, is generally regarded as constituting criminal inveiglement. People v. Congdon, 77 Mich. 351, 43 N. W. 986; Gould v. State, (Nebr. 1904) 99 N. W. 541; U. S. v. Ancarola, 1 Fed. 676, 17 Blatchf. 423.

Procuring the intoxication of a sailor with the design of getting him on shipboard without his consent, and taking him on board in that condition, is kidnapping under the New York statute. Hadden v. People, 25 N. Y. 373.

Promise of employment.— Where defendant induced a female voluntarily to take mitted if the person taken away or detained, being capable in law of consenting, goes voluntarily without objection in the absence of fraud and deception.[17] But a child of tender years is regarded as incapable of consenting.[18]

b. Of Parent or Guardian. If a child is taken away with the consent of the parent or guardian entitled to the custody, no offense is committed.[19] But the offense is committed if the parent or guardian does not consent, without regard to the consent of the child,[20] and it is not necessary that the person committing the offense should have had notice of the unwillingness of the parent or guardian to part with the child.[21]

4. Detention. Under statutes making confinement or detention elements of the offense, there must exist an actual detention,[22] or an intent to detain[23] to con-

passage for a foreign port, under pretense that he had there obtained employment for her, but intending to place her in a house of prostitution, and it appears that she would not have consented to go but for such false pretense, he is guilty of the offense. People v. De Leon, 109 N. Y. 226, 16 N. E. 46, 4 Am. St. Rep. 444 [affirming 47 Hun 308]. But inducing a person to go to a foreign country by the promise of work at a specified compensation, when the person making the promise knows that such compensation will not be obtained, is not an inveiglement. People v. Fitzpatrick, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 459, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 629, 8 N. Y. Cr. 81. The decision was based on the principle that a false representation essentially promissory in its nature cannot be the foundation of a criminal charge. Ranney v. People, 22 N. Y. 413. See 21 Cent. Dig. tit. "Kidnapping," § 4.

But see Castillo v. State, 29 Tex. App. 127, 14 S. W. 1011, where it was held that the fact that force is not an essential element of the offense if the person kidnapped is a female under fifteen years of age does not dispense with her non-consent. And see Cochran v. State, 91 Ga. 763, 18 S. E. 16, where it was held that, a female fourteen years old being competent to contract marriage, and the validity of her marriage not depending on the consent of her parents, it is not kidnapping for a man to take her away from her parents against their will, for the purpose of marrying her, where the contemplated marriage is actually consummated, and where the girl herself freely consents, and no force or fraud is used either against her or against her parents.

19. John v. State, 6 Wyo. 203, 44 Pac. 51, where a father took his child, who was of tender years, out of the state, with its consent and with the consent of its mother, who had been awarded the custody of the child in divorce proceedings.

20. Sutton v. State, 122 Ga. 158, 50 S. E. 60; Thweatt v. State, 74 Ga. 821; Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 191.

The Georgia statute (Pen. Code (1895), § 100) relating to taking or enticing away children under eighteen years of age is regarded as defining two offenses — one where the child kidnapped has a parent or guardian and the other where it has neither. In the latter case, it must be taken away against its own consent; in the former if it is taken away against the will and without the consent of the parent or guardian, irrespective of that of the child, this alone will constitute the offense. Sutton v. State, 122 Ga. 158, 50 S. E. 60.

Secrecy.— Under the New York statute, the confinement must be secret and hence one cannot be convicted of kidnapping who has had his daughter publicly committed to and confined in an insane asylum, although she is in fact sane. People v. Camp, 66 Hun (N. Y.) 531, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 741 [affirmed in 139 N. Y. 87, 34 N. E. 755].

23. Oliver v. State, 17 Ala. 587; Gould v. State, (Nebr. 1904) 99 N. W. 541. Where defendant induced two wilful girls bent on making a trip by themselves to San Francisco, to go instead to a respectable summer resort, furnishing them the means and leaving them free to act as they wished, but concealed their whereabouts from their parents, he was not guilty of the offense of enticing away a minor child with intent to detain her from her parents, in the absence of evi-stitute the offense. But the length of the detention is immaterial[24] and an actual detention for any length of time is sufficient to make the offense complete.[25]

5. PLACE TO WHICH TRANSPORTED. Transportation to a foreign country is not necessary to the completion of the offense, even at common law; but it is sufficient if the person is carried into another state.[26] An actual carrying out of the state is not essential, but the offense is complete if the person is seized with intent to carry him out of the state.[27] Under some statutes the offense is complete if the person is carried from one part of the state to another.[28]

C. Attempts.[29] The attempt to commit the offense of kidnapping is indictable.[30]

II. DEFENSES.

It is not an absolute defense that defendant was acting under a warrant regular on its face,[31] or that he is the parent of the child kidnapped.[32] Where the prosecution is for enticing or inveigling a child the fact that the child consented is no defense.[33] A conviction of simple abduction is a bar to a subsequent prosecution for kidnapping.[34]

dence showing any intent to detain. People v. Black, 147 Cal. 426, 81 Pac. 1099.

26. State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550. But see Campbell v. Rankins, 11 Me. 103, where it was held that under the Maine statute prescribing a penalty for carrying or transporting "out of this State, any person under the age of twenty-one years . . . to any parts beyond sea, without the consent of his parents, master or guardian" the carrying must be to some foreign port or place, and not merely from one state to another.

27. State v. Farrar, 41 N. H. 53; State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550; Hadden v. People, 25 N. Y. 373.

Intent essential.— In Wisconsin where the statute provides for the punishment of any person who shall without lawful authority forcibly or secretly confine or imprison another within the state, against his will, or who shall forcibly carry or send another out of the state, or from place to place within the state against his will and without lawful authority, or who shall, without such authority, forcibly seize, confine, inveigle, or kidnap another, with intent to cause such person to be secretly confined or imprisoned in the state, or to be sent or carried out of the state against his will, the intent to send out of the state is essential to constitute the offense of kidnapping; otherwise, the offense is merely false imprisonment. Smith v. State, 63 Wis. 453, 23 N. W. 879. One employed to seize and forcibly detain a child, in ignorance of the intent of his employer, which actually existed, to cause the child to be sent out of the state, is not chargeable with such intent. Com. v. Nickerson, 5 Allen (Mass.) 518.

28. Indiana.— Under the Indiana statute it is not necessary that the person seized shall be carried out of the state or out of the county. If he is unlawfully and feloniously carried away from his residence the offense is complete. State v. Sutton, 116 Ind. 527, 19 N. E. 602. And "residence" within the statute is any place where the person has a right to be, and not necessarily legal residence or domicile. Wallace v. State, 147 Ind. 621, 47 N. E. 13.

Louisiana.— An indictment for the forcible seizure and carrying of a person from one part of the state to another is supported by proof that the carrying was from one part of the city to another. State v. Backarow, 38 La. Ann. 316.

Wyoming.— The place to which the person is transported need not be out of the state or even out of the county. The gravamen of the offense is the carrying away of the person from his place of residence. John v. State, 6 Wyo. 203, 44 Pac. 51.

California.— Where defendant and others went on board a schooner moored at a wharf in Los Angeles county and by force took two sailors and carried them to the island of Santa Catalina, twenty miles from the mainland, said island being in Los Angeles county, defendant was not guilty of kidnapping under Pen. Code, § 3207, declaring that "every person who forcibly steals, takes, or arrests any person in this state, and carries him into another country, state, or county . . . is guilty of kidnap[p]ing." Ex p. Keil, 85 Cal. 309, 24 Pac. 742; Ex p. Miller, (1890) 24 Pac. 743.

III. Persons Liable.

A parent who has not parted with his right to the custody of his minor child,[35] or to whom the custody has been awarded in divorce proceedings,[36] cannot be guilty of kidnapping. One who advises or causes the commission of the offense is liable as well as the one who actually commits it,[37] and so too is one who aids and abets another in the commission of the crime.[38] And one who harbors and conceals a child kidnapped by others is guilty as principal.[39]

IV. Prosecution and Punishment.[40]

A. Indictment or Information[41] — 1. In General. The essential elements of the offense[42] must be covered by the allegations of the indictment.[43]

2. Charge in Language of Statute. It is sufficient if the allegations in the indictment pursue the language of the statute defining the offense and prescribing its essential elements.[44]

3. Negativing Consent. An indictment for taking away a child whose parents are living is sufficient if it alleges the non-consent of the parents without negativing the consent of the guardian.[45]

4. Allegation of Intent. The intent which, under the statute defining the offense, renders the taking or detention criminal must be alleged.[46] But it is not Force.— An indictment under the Louisiana statute prohibiting the forcible seizure and carrying of a person from one part of the state to another, or the imprisonment or secreting of any person, need not charge that he or she was forcibly imprisoned. State v. Backarow, 38 La. Ann. 316.

45. Pruitt v. State, 102 Ga. 688, 29 S. E. 437.

A count framed under Ga. Pen. Code (1895), § 110, charging that the accused took and enticed away a child under eighteen years of age, against its will and without its consent, is fatally defective in failing to allege that the child had no parent or guardian. Sutton v. State, 122 Ga. 158, 50 S. E. 60.

46. Smith v. State, 63 Wis. 453, 23 N. W. 879. Thus under the Indiana statute declaring that whoever kidnaps or forcibly or fraudulently carries off from his place of residence, or arrests or imprisons, any person, with intent to have such person carried away from his residence, is guilty of kidnapping, a count in an indictment charging an arrest but not alleging that it was with the intent of having the person carried away from his residence is bad, but a second count, charging that the felonious and fraudulent arrest was made with the felonious and fraudulent intention of carrying such person from his residence, is good. State v. Sutton, 116 Ind. 527, 19 N. E. 602. So too an information which charges in one count a forcible carrying away of a certain female from her place of residence, and in another a fraudulent decoying of said female from her place of resinecessary that the purpose for which the person was taken away or detained shall be alleged.[47]

5. Joinder of Counts and Duplicity.[48] A count for kidnapping a child may be joined with a count for harboring and concealing a child knowing it to have been enticed away.[49] So too kidnapping and abduction being offenses of like character, a count for kidnapping and a count for abduction may be joined in one indictment.[50] An information charging defendant and another with attempting to take and entice away two children is not objectionable as charging two offenses.[51]

B. Evidence.[52] The act of seizing a person and confining him is prima facie unlawful,[53] placing on the accused the burden of proving that the person was not detained against his will.[54] On a trial for kidnapping a child, the child may testify that she would not have gone away but for the inducements of defendant.[55] Precautions taken by the parent to prevent the decoying away of the child, and the fact that he was unwilling that it be taken away, may be put in evidence.[56] But defendant cannot show that the parent treated his family harshly.[57] Evidence tending to show the motive of defendant in his acts is, however, admissible.[58]

C. Trial. The intent of defendant in committing the acts with which he is charged is a fact to be inferred from the evidence and falls within the exclusive province of the jury.[59] It is also a question for the jury whether the name of the prosecutrix as alleged in the indictment is idem sonans with her true name as shown by the evidence.[60] An instruction as to the nature and effect of certain allurements or promises that might have been used to induce the child to go with defendant is erroneous where there was no evidence of any such promises or of fraud or flattery warranting such a reference.[61]

V. Civil Liability.

One may maintain an action for damages for his own abduction,[62] and a parent may maintain an action against one who entices away his minor child.[63] So too a dence, need not charge a felonious intention in the commission of the acts alleged. Boes v. State, 125 Ind. 205, 25 N. E. 218.

Sufficiency of evidence.— An action to recover damages for abduction is not sustained by proof that defendant, by misrepresentations, threats of a criminal prosecution, and payment of money for expenses, but without using or threatening force, induced plaintiff to go to another place and remain in concealment for a time. But where the agent of a children's aid society, being deceived by the false representations of a boy eighteen years of age, who gave a false name and pretended that he was an orphan, etc., sent the boy to a home in the west, an acguardian may maintain an action for the benefit of his minor ward who was abducted.[64] It is no defense to an action by the parent that defendant acted in ignorance of the parent's rights,[65] or that the parent's treatment of his child contributed in any degree to produce the wrong complained of.[66] In an action by a parent he may recover reasonable and proper expenses incurred in regaining possession of the child,[67] and also for mental suffering consequent on defendant's wrongful acts.[68] So too in an action by the guardian for the benefit of his minor ward who was abducted, the mental pain suffered by the child is an element of damages.[69]

This film, by an electric device, is caused to pass in a dark room or theater with great rapidity, by a set of lenses, through which, by use of a powerful electric light, the scenes which are the subject of the series of photographs are much enlarged, thrown upon the white screen. As one picture or reproduction of the scene photographed succeeds another upon the screen, and with great rapidity, the impression produced upon the retina of the eye by the preceding picture continues longer than does the existence upon the screen of the picture which produces such impression. This is owing to the well-recognized defect of the eye known technically as 'persistence of impression.' As a result of this persistence of impression, the impression produced by one picture lasts or endures approximately until the impression produced by the next succeeding picture occurs. The result is substantially that one sees upon the kinetoscope screen a continuous moving picture reproducing the action and movement of the scenes photographed upon the film."

steal, whether consciously or unconsciously;[22] the scientific name for the disease of stealing.[23] (Kleptomania: As Defense to Prosecution for Larceny, see LARCENY. See also, generally, INSANE PERSONS.)

KNAVE. A false, deceitful person; a dishonest person; one given to fraudulent tricks or practices; a rogue or scoundrel.[24] (See, generally, LIBEL AND SLANDER.)

KNEELING. As used in connection with religious services, touching the ground with the knee.[25]

KNIGHT-SERVICE. A tenure by which the greatest part of the lands in England were holden, and that principally of the king, in capite, till the last century.[26]

KNIT FABRICS. See KNIT GOODS.

KNIT GOODS. A term which, although frequently used interchangeably with "knit fabrics," more appropriately describes manufactured articles, while knit fabrics refer more especially to manufactured material as piece goods.[27] (See FABRIC.)

KNITTING MACHINE. A hand or power machine for knitting.[28]

KNOCK DOWN. In the language of the auction room, to signify to a bidder, by the fall of the auctioneer's hammer or other adequate or visible announcement, that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid according to the terms of the sale; the synonym of "strike off."[29] (See, generally, AUCTIONS AND AUCTIONEERS.)

KNOT. A synonym of marine or nautical mile.[30]

KNOW. To have knowledge; to possess information, instruction or wisdom;[31]

28. Century Dict. And see Holmes v. Plainville Mfg. Co., 9 Fed. 757, 759, 20 Blatchf. 123, in which the court say: "A knitting-machine has nothing in common with a loom, for weaving, except that each has a roller upon which the completed fabric is rolled, and a take-up. The office of the take-up, in each machine, is to regulate the tension of the cloth. In a loom, it is necessary that the warp should be kept taut between the yard-beam and the cloth-beam. A knitting-machine produces a fabric made by a succession of loops, and as the necessities of the manufacture do not require that the yarn or threads should be kept tightly drawn, a smaller expenditure of force is necessary than in a loom take-up."

As used in statutes, imposing liability, be it civil or criminal, upon persons knowing certain facts, the word is to be construed as implying actual knowledge, and not merely constructive notice or lack of information by reason of neglect or inadvertence. Southern R. Co. v. Bryan, 125 Ala. 297, 309, 28 So. 445; De Vaughn v. Harris, 103 Ga. 102, 104, 29 S. E. 613; State v. McBarron, 66 N. J. L. 680, 51 Atl. 146, 147, in which the court said: "The word 'knowing' in N. J. Gen. St. p. 1334, which enacts that any person who shall cause or procure his name or that of any other person to be registered, knowing that he or the person whose name has procured to be registered is not entitled to vote, shall be punished, etc., means knowledge, mental assurance or scienter. It is positive, not negative. Such knowledge must be clearly proved, or shown by such circumstances as leave no reasonable doubt on a fair mind. The proof of the knowledge must be clear, not a mere inference that he could have found out by further inquiry. There must have been culpable intent shown, not mere ignorance." 46. Century Dict. And see Wilcocks v. Phillips, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,639, 1 Wall. Jr. 47, in which the court said: "In the general Canton trade the kumshaw is a present made by the hong merchant or broker to the captain or supercargo of a vessel on the completing of a sale. It is voluntary on the part of the hong. It consists, not of money, but of shawls, fine teas, etc., and is always regarded as the perquisite and private profit of the person to whom it is made. But the kumshaw in the opium-trade differs in some respects from that in the ordinary Chinese trade. It is a money-fee, fixed in amount, and obligatory on the purchaser. . . . The kumshaw is paid only when the opium is delivered to a purchaser or smuggler, and not when it is trans-shipped." In the different opium ships at Canton, as between the owner and captain, the right to the kumshaw was usually, though not always, a matter of special agreement. In the British ships it was generally divided, while in the only American ship engaged in the opium store trade the captain received the whole kumshaw.

51. Webster Dict. [quoted in U. S. v. Marble, 3 Mackey (D. C.) 32, 34 (citing Knight Am. Dict.; Skeat Etymological Dict.)].

As commonly understood the word denotes a slip of paper or other suitable material attached to goods, giving a short description of their character, directions for their use, and other facts of interest to the purchaser. U. S. v. Marble, 3 Mackey (D. C.) 32, 41.

The most general idea of the word is not of a separate strip of paper or parchment, but a written description of the article upon which it is placed or made, as to its ownership, or character, or quality, or extent. Wilkins v. Earle, 44 N. Y. 172, 185, 4 Am. Rep. 655, where the court, in speaking of a package in a hotel room with the name of the owner on it, said: "The name of . . . [the owner] was a label. It indicated the ownership. . . . A similar indorsement of the word money, or valuables, would have been a label."

55. "The word labor comes from the Latin verb labo, which is thus rendered in one of goods;[56] manual exertion of a toilsome nature;[57] physical toil or bodily exertion; hard muscular effort directed to some useful end;[58] work done or to be done; that which requires wearisome exertion;[59] labor, pains combined with physical efforts; or, metonymically, activity, industry, hardship, misfortune, trouble, distress;[60] the act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength; pains; toil; work to be done; work done; performance; exercise; motion with some degree of violence; child-birth, travail;[61] toilsome work; pains; travail, any bodily exercise which is attended with fatigue,[62] travail, the pangs and efforts of child-birth, the evils of life, trial, prosecution, etc.;[63] exertion of muscular strength, or bodily exertion which occasions weariness; particularly the exertion of the limbs; occupations by which subsistence is obtained as in agriculture and manufactures, in distinction from exertions of strength in play or amusements which are denominated exercise rather than labor;[64] heroic achievement;[65] and while the common and ordinary signification of the term is understood to be physical toil,[66] nevertheless, in some extended senses, it will include every possible human exertion, mental and physical;[67]

Restricted and extended use of term.—"The exception of claims for labor [in a statute] would not, therefore, ordinarily be understood to embrace the services of the clergyman, physician, lawyer, commission merchant, or salaried officer, agent, railroad and other contractors, but would be confined to claims arising out of services where physical toil was the main ingredient, although directed and made more valuable by mechanical skill. On the other hand, there is a technical use of the term in pleading, which has intellectual exertion; mental effort;[68] intellectual exertion, application of the mind which occasions weariness;[69] exertion of mental powers united with bodily employment.[70] As a verb, to exert muscular strength; to exert one's strength with painful effort, particularly in servile occupations; to work; to toil.[71] (Labor: As Consideration For Stock Issued, see Corporations. II. HISTORICAL.

A. At Common Law. Notwithstanding the adverse criticism and ridicule which have been uttered and written concerning the earliest reported case on the subject of labor unions,[2] and the unreported case cited to sustain it,[3] there can be no doubt that from the time of that decision in 1721 until the adoption of the statute of 1824 legalizing labor unions,[4] and giving laborers a right to organize for the purpose of maintaining wages and for mutual protection,[5] the law there announced continued to be the law of labor unions in England, and they were indictable as criminal conspiracies.[6] After the enactment of these statutes exempting they acquired the character of associations for the perfection of the interests of workmen against their employers." Rapalje & L. L. Dict.

The act of congress of June 29, 1886, 24 U. S. St. at L. 86 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3204], providing for national trade unions, defines such union as follows: "The term 'National Trade Union,' in the meaning of this act, shall signify any association of working people having two or more branches in the States or Territories of the United States for the purpose of aiding its members to become more skillful and efficient workers, the promotion of their general intelligence, the elevation of their character, the regulation of their wages and their hours and conditions of labor, the protection of their individual rights in the prosecution of their trade or trades, the raising of funds for the benefit of sick, disabled, or unemployed members, or the families of deceased members, or for such other object or objects for which working people may lawfully combine, having in view their mutual protection or benefit."

4. St. 5 Geo. IV, c. 95 (June 21, 1824), amended by 6 Geo. IV, c. 129 (July 6, 1825), which later act repeals all prior statutes so far as they prohibited the organization of laborers for their mutual advantage, but required that all means employed for the accomplishment of their several aims should be peaceable. In this statute will be found specific reference to those repealed.

IV, c. 95, § 2, expressly declares that persons who join labor unions for the purposes therein specified shall not be liable to indictment or prosecution for conspiracy under the common or statute law. Hawkins P. C. (2d ed.) § 1, c. 72, p. 190. In Rex v. Mawbey, 6 T. R. 619, 636, 2 Rev. Rep. 282, decided in 1796, Grose, J., says: "In many cases an agreement to do a certain thing has been considered as the subject of an indictment for a conspiracy, though the same act, if done separately by each individual without any agreement among themselves, would not have been illegal. As in the case of journeymen conspiring to raise their wages; each may insist on raising his wages, if he can; but if several meet for the same purpose, it is illegal, and the parties may be indicted for a conspiracy." In Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 E. & B. 47, 53, 59, 2 Jur. N. S. 587, 25 L. J. Q. B. 199, 4 Wkly. Rep. 326, 88 E. C. L. 47, decided in 1855, Crompton, J., says: "The precedents of indictments for combinations of two or more persons to raise wages, and for other offenses of this nature, which were all framed on the common law and not under any of the statutes on the subject, sufficiently show what the common law was in this respect. In Rex v. Mawbey, 6 T. R. 619, 636, 2 Rev. Rep. 282, Grose, J., assumed the illegality of such combinations as well known law. Combinations of this nature, whether on the part of the workmen to increase, or of the masters to lower, wages were equally illegal." But in this case Lord Campbell, C. J., criticizes the dictum of Grose, J., and Erle, J., positively dissenting from it, says: "The Legislature, by various statutes, from the reign of Ed. I to that of G. 4, prohibited agreements, either of masters or of workmen, for the purpose either of lowering or raising wages, or of altering hours, or otherwise affecting their mutual relations. These agreements were by some statutes enacted to be . . . illegal; and the parties entering into them were liable to punishment. By Stat. 6 G. 4, c. 129. an entire change of the law was made. By sect. 2 all the statutes prohibiting such agreements are enumerated and absolutely repealed. By sect. 3 future prohibition is confined to endeavours, by force, threats, intimidation, molestation, or obstruction, to affect wages or hours, which labor unions from prosecution as criminal conspiracies, they were still so far outlawed by the courts, as combinations in restraint of trade, as to be denied the aid of the law in enforcing their rules and the obligations of their members.[7] By legislation adopted in 1871 this anomalous position of labor unions was in a measure remedied, and they were given the right to register, the power to sue and be sued and to hold real and personal property; but the courts were still prohibited from entertaining any proceedings instituted for the purpose of enforcing those agreements most common and most vital to such organizations.[8] An amendment of this act in 1876 conferred some additional powers on such organizations, but the denial of the right to resort to the courts for the enforcement of their rules and regulations was not affected thereby.[9]

B. Early Cases in the United States. For a time the English doctrine was approved and followed by the courts of this country.[10]

III. MODERN DOCTRINE AS TO RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

A. Right to Combine — 1. In General. Eliminating these earlier cases it is well settled in this country and in England that a person has the right to work for and with whom he pleases;[11] that he may, by lawful means, secure employment for himself or another;[12] and that what he may legally do alone he may combine with others to do.[13]

2. Effect of Employment by Receiver on Right. The fact that persons are employed by a receiver will not prevent the exercise of their right of organization for legitimate purposes,[14] and the court having jurisdiction of the receiver may, are made illegal and punishable: and by sects. 4 and 5, it is declared that neither masters nor workmen shall be punishable for any agreement in respect of wages or hours unless they infringe the prohibitions in the 3d section." See also arguments of counsel in In re Journeymen Cordwainers, Yates Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 114; Erle Trade Unions 37, 38.

The declaration of Grose, J., that there are many cases supporting the doctrine he announces can hardly be taken to be disproved by the lack of reported cases extant and available. Considering the light penalties and the evident poverty of the wage-earners of the time it is more than probable that prosecutions there, as in this country at a later date, ended with a judgment of inferior courts where no records were kept.

in the exercise of its equity power, direct him to treat and contract with such organization, although it is unincorporated.[15]

B. Rights of Employer. On the other hand an employer has the equal right to employ,[16] or continue in or discharge from his employment, whom he pleases,[17] and to manage, control, and use his property and conduct his business in any manner satisfactory to himself.[18] Subject to the restraint imposed by public policy,[19] an employer and employee may make and enforce such contract relating to labor as they may agree upon.[20] The former may by contract prohibit the latter from joining a labor union while in his employ or require withdrawal from such union, and a statute imposing a penalty upon the making of such contract is unconstitutional.[21] An employer whose workmen have gone out on a strike has the right to employ others to take their places, and such others have a right to accept the employment;[22] and legislation tending to fetter these rights by prohibiting employment agencies from furnishing lists of possible employees to such employer is unconstitutional and void.[23]

C. For What Purposes Combination Permissible. Legislatures as well as the courts now recognize the right of laboring people to organize for the purposes of promoting their common welfare, elevating their standard of skill, advancing and maintaining their wages, fixing the hours of labor and the rate of wages,[24] obtaining employment for their members,[25] securing control of the work connected with their trade,[26] or favorable terms to their employers in the purchase of material, and contracts for such persons as employ members of their society.[27] And others may combine with them for the accomplishment of these purposes.[28]

D. Means Permissible to Effect Purposes of Combination — 1. In General. In the accomplishment of their purposes labor unions must proceed only by lawful and peaceful means.[29] They may refuse to work for any particular employer,[30] or withdraw from the service of one whose terms are not satisfactory to them, or whose actions with respect to apprentices are objectionable.[31] They may obtain employment for the members of their union by solicitation, or by the promise of the support of the union and its members by those who employ them.[32] And they have the right to contract for the securing of certain classes of work to their members and such contract is not in contravention of public policy.[33]

lations by any means which operate to deprive those subject to them of perfect freedom of action.[63] Members present at a meeting when an amendment to the by-laws is illegally adopted and who fail to object thereto are not estopped to raise the question of its validity thereafter.[64]

2. PENALTIES AND THEIR ENFORCEMENT.[65] Labor unions may provide and impose penalties for the failure of any of their members to comply with regulations made to further the purposes of the union,[66] such as working for wages or prices below the scale fixed by the union;[67] and the payment of such penalties may be enforced in the courts.[68] Where under the by-laws a member in arrears for a specified time is prohibited from working until such arrearages are paid, he may be legally deprived of his pass card which evidences his good standing and right to work with union men.[69]

3. VALIDITY OF RULES, ETC. A union will not be denied legal redress of its wrongs where its main purposes are legal, although some of its purposes may be illegal.[70] But if a material part of its rules and regulations is illegal as being in restraint of trade or the freedom of its members, no appeal can be made to the court to enforce any of them.[71] A rule binding the members to decline to handle interstate business under certain conditions is illegal.[72]

F. Contracts For Members. A labor union ordinarily has no authority to make a contract with employers of its members in respect to the performance of work and the payment for it. In order to bind the individual members they must expressly assent to the terms of the contract. Such assent will not be implied from the fact that they have knowledge at the time of the contract.[73] It cannot maintain an action to enforce a contract made by it on behalf of its members.[74]

Nor is it liable to suit on such a contract, which is enforceable only against the individual members who are guilty of a breach of it.[75] An individual member of a labor union, not being bound by the terms of the contract made between the union and its employers as to the time of payment of his wages, has a right to sue therefor on the completion of his work, in the absence of any express contract with him.[76]

IV. General and Local Unions.

Where the charter of a local union is revoked by the general union, courts will not interfere to restore it, where no property rights are involved, until the remedies provided within the union have been exhausted.[77] The rights of membership evidenced by a charter granted by a general to a local union are not property rights,[78] nor does membership therein confer such property rights as are necessary to give the courts jurisdiction.[79] A subordinate lodge or society of a labor union which has a common label cannot maintain a suit to enjoin the unauthorized use of such label; the right of action, if any, being in the chief association.[80] Where such label stigmatizes without warrant or justice non-union laborers working in the same line of employment, the courts will not protect the union in the use thereof.[81]

V. Officers.

Labor unions have the right to elect or appoint officers to advise them in the conduct of their relations with their employers,[82] and such officers, or any other person to whom they choose to listen, may advise them in such matters.[83] Any one invested by them with such authority may order the members under penalty of expulsion to peaceably leave a service, any terms of which are unsatisfactory.[84] An officer of one trade union does not vacate his office merely by joining another similar union, the constitution of which provides that no member thereof shall remain a member of other like unions.[85] Where an officer's act is justified by the by-laws of the order, proof of a custom antagonistic to such law cannot be shown in order to justify the imposition of a penalty upon him for a violation of such custom.[86] There is no presumption that an officer of a trade union has authority to execute leases of the union's property; such authority must be affirmatively shown to make the lease binding.[87]

VI. Membership.

A. Qualifications. Labor unions may require such qualifications for membership and such formalities of election as they choose. They may restrict membership to the original promoters or limit it in any manner they may desire, and the restriction may be based on citizenship, nationality, age, creed, or profession.[88] They may lawfully exclude employers and foremen.[89]

B. Must Be Voluntary. Like all other voluntary societies labor unions must depend for their membership upon the free and untrammeled choice of each individual member. No resort can be had to compulsory methods of any kind to increase, keep up, or retain such membership.[90] Injunction lies to restrain a labor union from committing any act designed to coerce others to become members of it;[91] and they will be enjoined from persuading apprentices or other workmen to join who are under contract with their employer not to join such organizations.[92] The courts will not undertake to compel a labor union to admit any one to its organization who is in any way objectionable to the union or its members.[93] An expelled apprentice who has never been recognized as a full member of a union is not entitled to injunctive relief against the refusal of the society to grant him full membership and a union card.[94]

C. Rights of Members[95] — 1. In Respect of Membership — a. In General. So long as a labor union remains a voluntary one the courts have no jurisdiction over it, and will not interfere between it and a member except for the sole purpose of protecting any interest the member may have in the property of the association.[96]

b. Fines or Expulsion and Relief Against[97] — (1) In General. Where under the by-laws the union has the discretion to fine or expel a member, it cannot both fine and expel.[98] And where the by-laws provide that violations of certain sections shall be punishable by a fixed fine, there is no authority to impose a fine for the violation of each section.[99] If a by-law provides that any member violating it by inducing others to become employed at less than scale rates shall be bound for the fines imposed upon such others, he can only be required to pay on the failure of those fined to make payment, and then not until charges are preferred and heard.[1] Expulsion is justified where it appears that the member expelled secured admission by falsely representing that he possessed the qualifications therefor,[2] or where he persists in retaining membership after his disqualification has been established.[3] A member cannot, however, be expelled for the violation of a by-law not regularly and legally adopted in accordance with the fundamental laws of the union;[4] and merely circulating a manifesto criticizing the management and inviting members to attend a meeting for discussing the interests of the union will not justify expulsion.[5] So it has been held that by-laws which forbid a member to work at his trade at a price satisfactory to him and compel him to join in a strike are void as against public policy, and expulsion for a violation thereof is illegal.[6] And if the charter or laws of the union confer no power of expulsion, it can be exercised only when the member has been guilty of some infamous offense, or his conduct tends to the destruction of the society.[7]

(II) Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard. Although there is no provision in the by-laws for the trial of an accused member, he cannot be summarily suspended, but is entitled to reasonable notice of the charge and an opportunity to be heard.[8] And a law requiring notice to appear and show cause to be given must be complied with or the expulsion is illegal.[9]

(III) Appeal to the Courts—(A) In General. The decisions of a labor union in admitting, suspending, or expelling members are of a quasi-judicial character. In such cases the courts will not interfere except to ascertain whether or not the proceedings were in accordance with the rules and laws of the union, and whether or not the proceedings were in good faith, or if there was anything in the proceedings in violation of the laws of the land.[10] If the union is unlawful as being in restraint of trade the courts will not interfere.[11] But where a pecuniary or civil right is involved in the controversy, and the association is a lawful one, the court will interfere to protect a member from an unlawful or arbitrary suspension or expulsion,[12] or restore his membership by mandamus.[13] Where the proceedings for the expulsion of a member of a labor union appear to be fair and reasonable, in the absence of any clear showing of a violation of some rule or law of the union, he will not be reinstated by the courts,[14] but if illegally expelled, he may be restored to membership without resorting to the remedy provided by the by-laws for restoration,[15] especially where the conditions imposed on his right to such remedy, and those by which it could be made available, are so burdensome as to practically amount to a denial of relief;[16] but he cannot be reinstated by interlocutory order, and the violation of such order cannot be made the foundation for proceedings in contempt.[17]

(B) Exhaustion of Other Remedies. The member must, however, exhaust the remedies afforded by the union before seeking redress in the courts;[18] but where he takes an appeal in accordance with the by-laws of the union he will be regarded as having exhausted such remedies, although an amendment to the by-laws may be pending.[19]

(C) To Recover Damages — (1) IN GENERAL. For an illegal suspension of a member the union is liable to him in damages for wages lost during such suspension by which he was deprived of the right and opportunity to work,[20] and he is under no obligation to leave the place of his residence in quest of work in order to protect it, or reduce its liability.[21]

(2) PLEADING.[22] In an action by a member against a union to recover damages for his wrongful suspension the complaint must allege in what manner his suspension affected his rights to engage in remunerative labor or prevented him from procuring work.[23]

(3) EVIDENCE.[24] Where a member sues a union for his illegal suspension or expulsion, and the union rules provide that no member shall permit himself to be employed with an expelled member, it is competent to show that a "black-list" was kept posted in the office of the union,[25] that his discharge was a consequence of such expulsion,[26] and what his earnings were before and after his expulsion and his inability to obtain employment after being expelled.[27]

(D) To Recover Fine Paid. If the payment of a fine is enforced by threats amounting to duress the member may recover it by suit.[28]

2. IN RESPECT OF PROPERTY RIGHTS AND BENEFITS — a. In General. The articles of agreement of a labor union, whether called a constitution, charter, by-laws, or any other name, constitute a contract between the members which the courts will enforce if not immoral or contrary to public policy or the law of the land.[29] A provision in the constitution of a union that no person who engages in the sale of intoxicating drinks can be admitted or retained as a member is not self-executing, and unless a member who engages in such business is expelled in accordance with the rules of the union he is entitled to the benefits conferred by membership.[30] Where the conditions on which a funeral benefit will be paid are set forth in a single section of the by-laws, and are fully complied with by a member before death, other by-laws relating to conditions on which benefits generally will be granted cannot be invoked to deprive him of the funeral benefit.[31] A statute prohibiting the courts from enforcing the agreements for the application of the funds of the union does not preclude a member in the absence of action by the trustees from applying to the courts to restrain a misapplication of the funds of the society.[32] An application of the funds of a union to the support of members illegally on a strike will be enjoined at the instance of a member, where the officers charged with the due use of the revenues of the society refuse or fail to act.[33] Members in good standing may make an assignment of the funds of the union, and the contingent interest of suspended members who may be reinstated will not affect the validity of such assignment.[34]

b. Upon Dissolution of Union. On the dissolution of a labor union the accumulated funds should be distributed to those who are members at the time in proportion to their contributions thereto.[35]

VII. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST LABOR UNIONS.[36]

A voluntary labor union, not being a partnership or corporation,[37] actions by or against it come within the rules governing actions by or against other voluntary associations;[38] hence at common law and in the absence of statutory provisions changing the common-law rule,[39] a voluntary labor union cannot sue in the names of only a portion of its members,[40] nor sue or be sued in its own name.[41] A complaint in behalf of a union must show a grievance of the organization as such and not that of its individual members.[42] A complaint against an unincorporated union and a number of individuals jointly is defective as against the union where it fails to show that the individuals compose or are members of it.[43] Members of such union are properly sued in their individual capacity and in federal courts the associations themselves are properly made parties in order to locate the citizenship of their members.[44] The leaders of an organized strike may be sued as fairly representing the organization without regard to their official connection with it.[45]

VIII. INJUNCTIONS AGAINST.*

A. In General.[46] The rule that an injunction will not be denied merely because it may operate to restrain the commission of crime[47] has been applied on applications for injunctions against labor unions.[48] The fact that complainant himself belongs to an illegal association,[49] or that his complaint states a cause for closing his business different from that announced at the time of such closing,[50] does not constitute a ground for dissolving a temporary injunction. An injunction against a voluntary association need not be directed against it by name, but one against the individual members is effective to restrain illegal action by them in their associated capacity.[51] An injunction against a labor union or its members for illegal acts, such as picketing, need not be limited to the members of the union actually engaged therein, but where a conspiracy exists the entire membership may be enjoined.[52] On application for an injunction against the unlawful acts of a labor union a court may consider the proclamation of a state governor bearing upon such acts which is incorporated into the record before it.[53]

B. Grounds For — 1. In General. Capital and labor each have the right to organize to secure control of a trade or of the work connected therewith, and in the absence of a breach of contract, or the use of violence, intimidation, or coercion, acts by which either endeavors to effect such purpose will not be enjoined on the ground that they may be detrimental to trade or injurious to individual business.[54]

2. Intimidation.[55] Employees may refuse to work with any except members of their association and may by lawful means compel the discharge of other employees so long as no coercion or intimidation is used, and injunction against their acts will not be granted.[56] So an injunction will not issue against striking employees to prevent their using peaceful entreaty and persuasion to induce others to leave or not to enter the employ of another where no intimidation is used.[57] What constitutes intimidation must be determined in each case from all the circumstances attending it.[58] If the things done or the words spoken are such that they will excite fear or reasonable apprehension of damages, and so influence those for whom designed as to prevent them from freely doing what they desire, and the law permits, they may be restrained, and the courts will look beyond the mere letter of the act or word into its spirit or intent.[59] So the use of actual violence, such as assault and battery,[60] or the assembling in large numbers at or

Rule restated.— Defendants have the right to argue or discuss with the new employees the question whether the new employees should work for the company. They have the right to persuade them if they can. But in prosecuting the matter they have no right to use force or violence to terrorize or intimidate the new employees. The new employees have the right to come and go as they please without fear and molestation, and without being compelled to discuss this or any other question, and without being guarded or picketed; and persistent and continued objectionable persuasion by numbers is of itself intimidating and not allowable. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 102.

58. Bill sufficient.— A bill to restrain intimidation and picketing is sufficient which alleges that the strikers stationed themselves in the streets and alleys and approaches to complainant's place of business, and began to intimidate the employees, and began a systematic course of intimidation and warned the employees not to return to work and assumed a menacing and threatening attitude and continued to menace and threaten said employees, that the employees were willing to work but were so threatened and intimidated that they refused to continue in complainant's employ, and that the strikers had intercepted the employees and induced them by threats and unlawful persuasion not to enter complainant's employ. near the works of the employer, accompanied by jeering and hooting, and the use of vile epithets,[61] has been enjoined. Intimidation is, however, not limited to threats of violence or physical injury to person or property. There may also be a moral intimidation which is illegal.[62] Where a combination or organization of persons, by means of intimidation, prevent a person from employing labor, or prevent persons from remaining in, or entering, the employ of another, to his or their irreparable injury, such acts constitute an unlawful interference with occupation which equity will enjoin.[63]

Test restated.— The doctrine which supports that portion of the restraining order in this case which undertakes to interdict defendants from molesting applicants for employment as an invasion of a right of the complainant is applicable to a situation presenting either an employer or an employee as complainant, and containing the following elements: (1) Some person or persons desiring to exercise the right of employing labor or the right of being employed to labor. (2) A combination of persons to interfere with the right by molestation or annoyance of employers who would employ, or of employees who would be employed, in the absence of such molestation. (3) Such a degree of molestation as might constrain a person having reasonable fortitude, and not being unreasonably sensitive, to abandon his intention to employ or be employed in order to avoid such molestation. (4) As a result of the foregoing conditions, an actual pecuniary loss to the complaining party by the interference with his enjoyment of his probable expectancies in respect of the labor market. 3. STRIKES[64] — a. In General. Protection of freedom of contract.— The law upholds and will protect the right of freedom of contract between employer and employee, the right of every person or corporation to hire and discharge men at pleasure, subject to liability for damages for breach of contract and the right of every man to work or to quit work at his pleasure, subject to the same liability, making no distinction between union and non-union workmen. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 102.

Adequate remedy at law.— Equity does not undertake to grant injunctions in strike or boycott cases unless complainant has shown pecuniary loss in respect to his property or business, for which an action at law is an inadequate remedy, or where he has shown that he had been deprived of his right to make a living. Atkins v. W. A. Fletcher Co., 65 N. J. Eq. 658, 55 Atl. 1074. See also Longshore Printing Co. v. Howell, 26 Oreg. 527, 38 Pac. 547, 46 Am. St. Rep. 640, 28 L. R. A. 464.

E. 1011, 77 Am. St. Rep. 330, 51 L. R. A. 339, where the following statement is made: "It is true they committed no acts of personal violence, or of physical injury to property, although they threatened to do something which might reasonably be expected to lead to such results. In their threat, however, there was plainly that which was coercive in its effect upon the will. It is not necessary that the liberty of the body should be restrained. Restraint of the mind, provided it would be such as would be likely to force a man against his will to grant the thing demanded vent others from entering the employ of another merely because he had refused to employ only union men.[67] It has also been held that the right of labor unions to strike is limited to strikes on persons with whom the organization has a trade dispute, and that a strike on one with whom no dispute exists to compel him to coerce another to discharge non-union men or to give work to members of the union is illegal and will be enjoined.[68] An injunction should not be granted in strike or boycott cases unless the complainant shows a substantial pecuniary loss in his business for which the law affords no adequate remedy, or that he has been deprived of the right to make a living.[69]

b. Interference With Interstate Commerce.[70] A court of equity has authority to issue an injunction restraining the officers of a labor union from ordering a strike where the bill alleges a malicious conspiracy on their part to interfere with the carrying of the mails by complainant and with interstate commerce,[71] especially where it appears that the members of the union employed by complainant are satisfied with the conditions of and wages for their services.[72] An injunction will issue to compel the rescission of such order after its issuance;[73] and an injunction will issue where the intimidation by a threatened strike is intended to and does operate to prevent the employment of persons for the purpose of handling interstate and foreign commerce.[74]

4. Picketing[75] — a. In General. While it has been held that the mere stationing persons near the premises of another for the mere purpose of observing and and actually has that effect, is sufficient in cases like this."

A conspiracy by a number of persons that they will by threats and strikes deprive a mechanic of the right to work for others because he does not join a particular union will be restrained. A union has a right for reasons satisfactory to its members to cease work, but a combination by it to prevent others from obtaining work by threats of a strike, or to prevent an employer from employing others by threats of a strike, is unlawful, and will be enjoined. Erdman v. Mitchell, 207 Pa. St. 79, 56 Atl. 327, 99 Am. St. Rep. 783, 63 L. R. A. 534.

A "picket" is "a body of men belonging to a trades union sent to watch and annoy men working in a shop not belonging to the union, or against which a strike is in progress." Century Dict.; Webster Dict. This word had no such meaning originally, but this definition is the result of what has been done under it and the common application that had been made of it. Nuisance.— Picketing for the purpose of interfering with business is a private nuisance and the maintenance of a patrol of two men in front of plaintiff's premises, in furtherance of a conspiracy to prevent, either by threats and intimidation, or by persuasion and social pressure, any workmen from entering into, or continuing in, his employment, will be enjoined, although such work-

b. All Picketing Illegal and Should Be Enjoined. The doctrine that there may be a moral intimidation which is illegal announced by the supreme court of Massachusetts[79] was among the first judicial steps taken in this country toward overturning the rule permitting peaceable picketing laid down in the first clause of this paragraph, and was a forerunner of the later rule that there can be no such thing as peaceable picketing, and consequently that all picketing is illegal.[80] Picketing will be enjoined as a continuing injury to business notwithstanding it may be punishable as a crime,[81] and the right to injunction against it has been based upon the ground that the aggrieved person is entitled to protection of his "probable expectancy" which is defined as the right to enjoy a free and natural condition of the labor market.[82]

5. Boycotts.[83] It has been repeatedly held that boycotts, in the sense of organized attempts to coerce a person or party into compliance with some demand, by combining to abstain, or compel others (against their will) to abstain, from having any business relations with him,[84] are unlawful and will be men are not under contract to work for plaintiff. Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 44 N. E. 1077, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, 35 L. R. A. 722.

Protection of right to picket.— The right of a voluntary association engaged in supporting a strike to freedom in the labor market, so that it may readily employ pickets and other agents in carrying out its purposes, is not a proper subject of protection by injunction.
