newspaper's contract of membership in a press association, not transferable without the consent of the association, is not taxable property,<sup>55</sup> and also that a membership or seat in a stock exchange is not taxable as property.<sup>56</sup>

3. OWNERSHIP OR POSSESSION OF PROPERTY AND TO WHOM TAXABLE — a. In General.<sup>57</sup> Ordinarily and in the absence of statute to the contrary, property is taxable only to the person who is the owner thereof<sup>58</sup> at the date for its listing or assessment,<sup>59</sup> or the date fixed by statute as of which its ownership for purposes of taxation is to be determined;<sup>60</sup> and taxes are not a lawful charge on property unless assessed in the name of its owner, and any attempt to enforce the payment of taxes assessed and charged to the wrong person will be ineffective.<sup>61</sup> This does not mean that the person assessed must have a perfect and unencumbered title to the property, but only that he should be vested with the apparent legal title,<sup>62</sup> or with the possession coupled with such claims and evidences of owner-personal property or a chattel mortgage, it being proper to assess and charge the tax to the pledgor or mortgagor and not to the pledgee or mortgagee.<sup>79</sup>

e. Equitable Estates or Interests. While ordinarily the owner of property for the purpose of taxation is the person having the legal title or estate,<sup>80</sup> an equitable estate or interest in land is subject to taxation, if within the terms of the statute imposing the tax;<sup>81</sup> but the same land ought not to be taxed both to the equitable owner and to the holder of the legal title.<sup>82</sup>

f. Interests of Vendor and Vendee.<sup>83</sup> Land may be assessed and taxed to a person who is in possession thereof under an executory contract of sale;<sup>84</sup> and in that case it is not taxable to the vendor, although the latter may be taxed on the notes or other securities given for the deferred payments as credits;<sup>85</sup> but if the contract of sale is only conditional, or reserves a life-estate to the vendor, then he is properly taxable as the owner of the premises.<sup>86</sup> So also in the case of an uncompleted sale of personal property where the title and possession still remain in the seller, the property is taxable to him.<sup>87</sup>

W. 41, holding that an oral sale of personal property without any actual or constructive delivery or payment of any part of the price and without special agreement as to delivery or change of title is not a completed sale and the title does not pass to the buyer but remains in the seller against whom the property should be assessed for taxation.

tion, etc., is properly taxable as the owner, although he has not yet fully complied with his bid, or although a right of redemption may still remain;<sup>88</sup> and the land should not in that case be assessed to the former owner, except perhaps in cases where the judicial sale was entirely null and void.<sup>89</sup> But the purchaser is not liable for the taxes for the current year, which had been duly assessed against the owner of the property prior to the sale.<sup>90</sup>

h. Property Held in Trust. Real or personal property held under a testamentary or other trust is ordinarily taxable to the trustee, as he has possession and control of it, and in this way the tax will ultimately be made to fall upon the beneficial owner.<sup>91</sup> But exceptions to this rule are sometimes found, the property being made assessable directly to the beneficiary,<sup>92</sup> and particularly in cases where the trust is not of the kind described in the tax laws, or where the person having control of the property is not vested with the rights and duties of a trustee in the true sense of the word,<sup>93</sup> or where it is a mere naked or dry

Assessment to executor before probate.—A will vests in the executors named therein a legal control over the estate, which will justify an assessment of the personal property of the estate against them before the will is admitted to probate or letters testamentary are granted. *People v. Ancillary administrator.—Money or property held by an ancillary administrator is subject to taxation in the state granting his letters, especially where taxes are not paid on it at the principal place of administration. Dorris v. Miller, 105 Iowa 564, 75 N. W. 482.

Credits of estates.—Where by the terms of a will the administrator was to keep the estate intact until the youngest child became of age, and in the meanwhile he loaned money to the heirs taking their notes therefor, it was held that such loans could not be considered as advances since no advances were authorized, but that the notes represented debts to the estate and were taxable as credits. In re Seaman, 135 Iowa 543, 113 N. Big Rapids*, 56 Mich. 35, 22 N. W. 103; Herrick v. Big Rapids, 53 Mich. 554, 19 N. W. 182.

Form of settlement.—Property should not be taxed to an administrator after there has been a settlement and distribution of the estate by amicable arrangement among all the parties interested and of which the assessors have notice, although there has been no formal settlement and decree in the probate court. Carleton v. Ashburnham, 102 Mass. 348.

Bridge*, 90 Me. 489, 38 Atl. 545, holding, however, that the executor or administrator, as the case may be, is not personally liable unless the assessment was made against him notwithstanding it was made after the death of the decedent.

Not personally liable for prior taxes.—An executor or administrator is not personally liable for the payment of a tax assessed against and due from decedent in his lifetime, and in an action to recover such taxes the judgment should be against the personal representative in his representative capacity. Eno v. Cornish, Kirby (Conn.) 296. And where an assessment is made for back taxes on omitted property for years during the lifetime of the decedent in which the property was not assessed, the executor or administrator is not personally liable for the payment of the tax, as his personal liability arises from the statutory duty of listing property in his hands for taxation, and the statutory lien on such property to secure reimbursement for the taxes paid by him, and the statute does not require him to make lists of property which the decedent has omitted to make in his lifetime. Scott v. People, 210 Ill. 594, 71 N. E. 582. So also the executor of a trustee who comes into possession of the trust estate but who holds it merely as a kind of bailee to preserve it intact and delivers it over to other trustees when appointed is not personally liable for the payment of taxes previously assessed upon the trust estate. State v. Mississippi Valley Trust Co., 209 Mo. 472, 108 S. W. 97.

8. New York v. Goss, 124 N. Y. App. Div. 680, 109 N. Y. Suppl. 151.

vests immediately in the heirs or devisees,<sup>9</sup> it should not thereafter be assessed as the property of the decedent;<sup>10</sup> although there is some conflict of authority as to whether in assessing such property it may be designated generally as the estate of the decedent or the property of his heirs, or whether the heirs must be named.<sup>11</sup>

j. Property in Custody of Agent, Factor, or Broker. In the absence of statute an agent or representative of another having in his possession property of the latter is not personally liable to taxation thereon,<sup>12</sup> and the assessment should be made in the name of the real owner.<sup>13</sup> By the laws of several of the states personal property in the possession or under the actual control and management of an agent, factor, or commission merchant may be assessed and taxed in his name rather than directly to the owner, the object being to lay the tax where it can most readily be collected, and the agent having of course the right to recoup himself as against the principal.<sup>14</sup> This method is most commonly pursued in retaining sufficient to pay the tax. Williams v. Holden, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 223.

St. (1895) § 1528*, provides that no consignee shall be required to list for taxation property held by him for the sole purpose of being stored or forwarded, if he has no interest in such property or profit to be derived from its sale. See State v. Franklin Sugar-Refining Co., 79 Minn. 127, 81 N. W. 752.

An agent cannot avoid taxation by executing a note to his principal for the money and property in his hands, simply to avoid the tax and with the understanding that such note shall create no liability on his part. Hutchinson v. Oskaloosa Bd. of Equalization, 67 Iowa 182, 25 N. W. 121.

Grain in a mill or warehouse in the possession of an agent and controlled by him on the day for assessment, and which was bought by him for other parties for a commission paid by them, is properly assessed against him. Lyle v. Jaques, 101 Ill. 644; Walton v. Westwood, 73 Ill. 125. But under the statute of Minnesota, providing that the delivery of grain to any warehouseman for storage, although it be mingled with that of others or shipped or removed from the original place of storage, shall be deemed a bailment, grain controlled by an elevator company, less than the amount of outstanding warehouse receipts, is not the property of the company for the purpose of taxation. State v. Northwestern El. Co., 101 Minn. 192, 112 N. W. 68, 1142.

Whisky in bonded warehouse.—Under the laws of Kentucky the proprietor of a warehouse in which bonded whisky is stored, on the removal of such whisky, is liable for the annual taxes levied thereon, with interest; and it is held that this statute is not in cases, where the property of a non-resident owner is being held by and in the possession of a resident agent.<sup>15</sup>

k. Property in Custody of Court or Court Officer. At common law property in the custody of the law or of a court or judicial officer is not subject to taxation.<sup>16</sup> But in some states statutes have been passed authorizing the taxation of clerks of court, masters in chancery, municipal treasurers, and other such officers for money paid into court and deposited with them by the court's order, or held by them under similar orders pending litigation as to its ownership;<sup>17</sup> and similar provisions have been made in some states as to real estate held by the courts and mortgages made to judicial officers in their official capacity.<sup>18</sup> Where land is sold under judicial decree and the proceeds brought into court, the proper course for the collection of taxes due thereon is to apply to the court for an order for their payment out of such proceeds.<sup>19</sup>

l. Property Held by Assignees, Receivers, and Trustees in Bankruptcy. Property continues to be subject to taxation, although it is in the hands of an assignee for the benefit of creditors;<sup>20</sup> but the statutes do not generally permit the taxation of property held by an assignee in insolvency acting under the direction of the court,<sup>21</sup> except perhaps in cases where he is continuing the business of the insolvent and operating it as a going concern.<sup>22</sup> In some states taxable property may be assessed to a receiver who is officially in charge or it,<sup>23</sup> and if so, the fact that the receiver was appointed by a federal court does not make him an officer of that court in such sense as to exempt the property from state and local taxes.<sup>24</sup> The same rule applies to property in the hands of a trustee violation of the constitution of the United States, nor is it material, on such question, whether or not the proprietor of the warehouse is also the owner of the whisky. *Thompson v. Stock broker.—The ordinary relation between a customer buying stock on margin and his broker is not that of pledgor and pledgee, but the broker is the owner of the stock and it is taxable to him as his property, for he is not bound generally to keep the stock of any one customer distinct, but has the right to take a single certificate in his own name for several customers and power to pledge the whole as collateral for a loan made to him. *Chase v. m. Occupancy or Possession — (I) IN GENERAL. Taxes should ordinarily be assessed to the real owner of the property without regard to temporary occupancy;<sup>26</sup> and if the statute requires the assessment of real property to be made to the owner thereof, it cannot be taxed to a person who is in possession but is not the owner.<sup>27</sup> But in several states the laws are so framed as to permit the assessment to be made either to the owner or occupant or to a person in possession and in apparent charge and control of the property.<sup>28</sup> Lands held and owned by joint tenants or tenants in common may be assessed to them jointly, without specifying their respective interests;<sup>29</sup> or, in some states, the property may be assessed in the name of either of them alone;<sup>30</sup> but when part of a lot of land belongs to one person and part to another, it is the duty of the assessor to assess each part to the proper owner, if known.<sup>31</sup>

(II) PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMEN. The separate property of a married woman should ordinarily be assessed to her as the owner thereof, and not to her husband.<sup>32</sup> In some jurisdictions, however, if a husband has the possession and the care and control of his wife's land, it may be assessed to him as the "occupant" thereof;<sup>33</sup> but if the husband and wife are living apart from each other, and the n. Partnership Property. Property owned by a partnership is properly taxed in the name of the firm, and not in the name of an individual member thereof.<sup>35</sup> But after the dissolution of a partnership, it is not chargeable as a firm with the future taxes on the property,<sup>36</sup> and as to taxes already assessed and due, the liability is apportioned among the former partners.<sup>37</sup>

4. PROPERTY OF NON-RESIDENTS — a. Taxability in General. In respect to property which is of a tangible and corporeal nature, and so capable of having a situs of its own, the residence of its owner is generally immaterial, and the property is taxable where found; hence property of this character found within a given state is taxable by that state, notwithstanding the owner may be a non-resident or alien and not in any other way subject to the laws of the state.<sup>38</sup> But such

In Wisconsin it has been held that a husband merely by residing with his wife upon her separate property does not become an occupant thereof within the application of the statute allowing lands to be assessed to occupants (Hamilton v. Fond du Lac, 25 Wis. 496); but that an assessment to the husband is not sufficient to invalidate a tax based upon such an assessment (Enos v. Bemis, 61 Wis. 656, 21 N. W. 812), provided the assessors acted in good faith and did not know that it was her separate property (Massing v. Ames, 37 Wis. 645 [distinguishing Hamilton v. Fond du Lac, supra]).

Effect of death of partner.—Where a partnership business continues after the death of one of the partners the title to the property vests in the surviving partner for the purpose of winding up the business, but it is properly listed for taxation in the firm-name. Blodgett v. Muskegon, 60 Mich. 580, 27 N. W. 686.

Property in hands of administrator.—Where money and credits belonging to a deceased citizen of another state are retained within the state of Iowa by an ancillary administrator, the fact that he was wrongfully appointed does not deprive the latter state of the right to tax the property. In re Miller, 116 Iowa 446, 90 N. W. 89. But see Boske v. Security Trust, etc., Vault Co., 56 S. W. 524, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 181, holding that property in the hands of an administrator with the will annexed cannot be taxed in Kentucky for years during which the testator was a citizen of another state.

Personal liability.—Where an agent had on hand on Oct. 1, 1865, cotton of his principal, a non-resident of the state, but before the ensuing December it had been removed beyond the limits of the state and his agency had ceased, it was held that he was not personally liable for the tax laid by the act of December, 1865, on cotton on hand on the first of October of that year. *State v. not taxable, however, if the custody of the agent is merely temporary and for purposes of transmission.<sup>41</sup>

c. Property Taxed in Another State.<sup>42</sup> It is perfectly competent for the state to lay a tax on tangible personal property found within its borders, notwithstanding the fact that the owner, a non-resident, is also liable to taxation on the same property in the state of his domicile.<sup>43</sup>

d. Credits, Investments, and Securities — (i) IN GENERAL. As to intangible personal property, the general rule is that it can have no situs other than that of its owner's domicile; and therefore a state cannot tax credits, investments, and securities belonging to a non-resident, although the evidences of debt may be within the state, or although the money represented may be loaned or invested there.<sup>44</sup> Nor can such credits, investments, or securities be taxed by the state, even though it may be secured by mortgage or other lien on lands within the state,<sup>45</sup>

In determining the validity of a tax in one state upon property of a non-resident, the only question is whether the property is subject to taxation in this state, and it is not material whether taxes have been paid or are payable on the property at the place of his residence. Theobald v. Clapp, 43 Ind. App. 191, 87 N. E. 100.

In Oklahoma an exception is made by statute in the case of property brought into the state between the first day of March and the first day of September in any year which has already been taxed for that year in another state (Wilson v. Wiggins, 7 Okla. 517, 54 Pac. 716); but the statute does not apply to property which has been brought into the state and acquired a situs there prior to the first of March, although it has already been taxed in another state (Spaulding Mfg. Co. v. Kendall, 19 Okla. 345, 91 Pac. 1031); and in cases where the statute applies the owner must claim his exemption and show the assessor that his property has already been taxed or the collection of a tax assessed thereon will not be enjoined (Wilson v. Wiggins, supra).

The mere physical presence in the state of notes and mortgages belonging to a non-resident does not give them a situs therein for the purpose of taxation, for until the situs of such property is changed by law it is at the domicile of the owner and is not "within the state" for purposes of taxation. Com. v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., 107 S. W. 233, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 796.

In order to establish a claim to non-residence so as to be relieved from taxes as a non-resident at the place where a person has previously resided, fact and intent must concur in order to establish a new residence in a different jurisdiction, but it is not necessary to show that the property has been elsewhere assessed. *Shirk v. or by a judgment of its courts.<sup>46</sup> On the same principle, shares of stock in a domestic corporation are not taxable, unless expressly so provided by statute, when owned by a non-resident;<sup>47</sup> nor are its bonds or other obligations when so owned.<sup>48</sup> But of late many states have undertaken to abrogate this rule by their legislation,<sup>49</sup> and it is conceded that this may be done in the case of corporate stocks and bonds, to which the state may assign a situs of their own, for the purpose of taxation, at the place where the corporation, rather than the stock-holder, is located.<sup>50</sup> So also, in several states, there are now laws taxing non-residents in respect to property or capital invested or employed in carrying on business within the state<sup>51</sup> and credits growing out of the business so conducted within the state.<sup>52</sup>

The same thing is true of public securities consisting of State bonds and bonds of municipal bodies, and circulating notes of banking institutions; the former, by general usage, have acquired the character of, and are treated as, property in the place where they are found, though removed from the domicile of the owner; the latter are treated and pass as money wherever they are." (II) CREDITS AND SECURITIES HELD BY RESIDENT AGENT. It is within the power of a state to tax money, investments, and credits belonging to a non-resident, when the money is placed out, the debt contracted, and the investment controlled by a resident agent of the owner, who retains in his possession the securities or evidences of indebtedness representing the investment; and this power is now exercised by most of the states.<sup>53</sup> This rule does not apply, however, where the agent has no control over the investment, but the securities are placed in his hands merely for convenience or for the purpose of collection and remittance only.<sup>54</sup> So also money deposited in a bank by a resident agent to the credit of a non-resident is taxable if it is under the control of and used by the agent in his principal's business within the state,<sup>55</sup> but not where it is deposited solely for the purpose of transmission through the bank to the non-resident principal in another state.<sup>56</sup>

(III) MORTGAGES. A mortgage on land so far partakes of the character of realty that it is competent for a legislature to provide that it shall be taxable in the county where the land lies, without regard to the domicile of the mortgagee.<sup>57</sup> But regarded as an investment or security, a mortgage is personal property of an intangible character, and hence follows the person of its owner and is taxable only where he resides.<sup>58</sup> Therefore, in the absence of a statute establishing a different rule, a mortgage on land situated within a particular state is not taxable by that state or by its authority when the owner and holder of the mortgage is a non-resident.<sup>59</sup> An exception is sometimes made in the case of mortgages belonging to non-residents but held and controlled by resident agents; but only when the agent is employed to invest, collect, and reinvest the moneys of his principal, as a business, and under only general directions from the latter,<sup>60</sup> and not where the securities are placed in his hands merely for the purpose of collection and remittance.<sup>61</sup>

e. Lands Owned by Non-Residents. The state has full power to levy taxes on land within its borders, although it belongs to a non-resident.<sup>62</sup> It should be observed, however, that in this case the land only should be assessed and the land only is liable for the payment of the tax, there being no personal liability on the non-resident owner.<sup>63</sup> But in some states lands are to be assessed to the occupant when in the possession of a person other than the non-resident owner.<sup>64</sup>

5. SITUS OF PROPERTY — a. General Principles.<sup>65</sup> The situs of property for the purpose of taxation may depend either upon its physical presence within the taxing district, where it is of a corporeal nature, or upon the domicile of its owner within the jurisdiction of the taxing power, where it is of that intangible character which, by a fiction of law, follows the person of its owner.<sup>66</sup> Of course real estate is taxable only where it lies, and no state can impose taxes on land in another state;<sup>67</sup> and the same is true of movable property which has a value of its own, instead of being merely the evidence or representative of value, and which has a visible and substantial existence. If located in the state it is taxable there by whomsoever owned;<sup>68</sup> but if permanently situated in another state it is not taxable, although it belongs to a resident citizen.<sup>69</sup> If, however, the property is only temporarily out of the state, it is still subject to taxation.<sup>70</sup>

b. Intangible Personal Property — (1) IN GENERAL.<sup>71</sup> The rule of law that mobilia sequuntur personam is applied to all species of personal property which has no tangible existence of its own, and which is not intrinsically valuable, but has worth only as the evidence or representative of value, such as accounts and bills receivable, deposits in bank, money loaned on mortgage or other security, shares of corporate stock, and bonds; and all such property ordinarily has its situs for purposes of taxation only at the domicile of its owner.<sup>72</sup> Consequently if owned by a resident citizen, such property is taxable, although the loans or investments are made or are payable in another state,<sup>73</sup> or the debt is secured by a mortgage on property situated in another state.<sup>74</sup> But the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam is merely a legal fiction, and for purposes of taxation does not always or absolutely apply even in the case of intangible property,<sup>75</sup> and should not be applied where to do so would be productive of unjust consequences.<sup>76</sup> It should be observed that it is within the power of the state, unless constitutional restrictions interfere, to divorce property of this kind from the person of its owner and give it a situs of its own for purposes of taxation, and this is not infrequently done, particularly in regard to mortgage loans and the securities and obligations of municipal bodies.<sup>77</sup>

(II) CREDITS AND SECURITIES HELD BY NON-RESIDENT AGENT OR TRUSTEE. Property in the nature of loans, investments, and securities, held and controlled by a non-resident, is not taxable, although he holds it as agent or trustee for a resident citizen, to whom the income or profits are payable,<sup>78</sup> unless a statute expressly makes such property taxable to the principal or beneficiary, which is the case in some states.<sup>79</sup>

c. Property of Decedents' Estates.<sup>80</sup> While ordinarily the domicile of a decedent determines the situs for purposes of taxation of his personal property which is of an intangible character or not permanently located elsewhere, and also the place of administering his estate,<sup>81</sup> the general rule is that after administration has been granted the title to such property vests in the personal representative, and that its situs for taxation is at the domicile of the executor or administrator,<sup>82</sup> notwithstanding the decedent at the time of his death was a resident of another state,<sup>83</sup> or the distributees are residents of another state,<sup>84</sup> or the will was executed in another state.<sup>85</sup> The domicile of a personal representative, however, for purposes of such taxation, is his official domicile, which is the place of his appointment,<sup>86</sup> and although the legal title to the estate is vested in him it does not follow him wherever he may have a residence in his individual capacity, as it would the original owner;<sup>87</sup> so that if a representative appointed in one state resides in another state where no administration was taken out, such residence does not give intangible property or tangible property not removed by him to the latter state a situs for taxation in such state,<sup>88</sup> although personal property actually removed to and held by him in the latter state or funds taken and invested there may be taxed there.<sup>89</sup>

d. Shipping.<sup>90</sup> Ordinarily the legal situs of sea-going vessels for the purpose of taxation is the port where they are registered under the laws of the United States as their home port, and this is not lost by mere absence and employment elsewhere, nor affected by the residence of their owners.<sup>91</sup> But this rule as to the situs of vessels is not absolute or conclusive;<sup>92</sup> and while a vessel registered and having its home port in one state is not subject to taxation in another state where it may happen to be merely temporarily and transiently as an incident to the commerce in which it is engaged,<sup>93</sup> a vessel which is employed exclusively or for an indefinite length of time in one state may be taxed in that state, although it is registered in another state,<sup>94</sup> and the owner is a non-resident.<sup>95</sup> It has also been held that the situs of vessels plying between ports of different states and engaged in the coastwise trade depends either upon the actual domicile of the owner or the permanent situs of the property entirely regardless of the place of enrolment,<sup>96</sup> and that, although a vessel may be registered or enrolled in a different

6. EXCISE, INCOME, AND POLL TAXES — a. Property Subject to Excise Tax.<sup>5</sup> As a general rule, excise taxes are laid only upon particular goods, wares, or commodities selected by the legislature to bear the burden of such a tax,<sup>6</sup> or upon actual sales of special kinds of merchandise,<sup>7</sup> although they are also sometimes made to include the right or privilege of conducting a particular business,<sup>8</sup> and taxes upon corporate franchises,<sup>9</sup> inheritance taxes,<sup>10</sup> and stock transfer taxes.<sup>11</sup>

b. Incomes Subject to Tax.<sup>12</sup> No taxes whatever can legally be levied upon incomes in the absence of express legislative authority therefor,<sup>13</sup> and only those persons are subject to the payment of an income tax who are specially described in the statute authorizing it or clearly within the meaning of the general terms which it employs,<sup>14</sup> and who are at the time residents of the jurisdiction seeking definite period subject to orders for future sale and delivery in specific quantities is subject to local taxation while awaiting orders for shipment); Lehigh, etc., Coal Co. v. Junction, 75 N. J. L. 922, 68 Atl. 806, 15 L. R. A. N. S. 514 [affirming 75 N. J. L. 68, 66 Atl. 923].

12. Constitutional validity of income taxes supra, II, F, 2.

13. Forman v. Board of Assessors, 35 La. Ann. 825, holding that such taxation must be expressly provided for by the legislature, as it is of a peculiar character requiring special provisions for defining and ascertaining the income to be taxed and cannot be considered as falling within the scope of general provisions relating to the assessment and taxing of property.

14. Com. v. Cuyler, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.)

to collect the tax.<sup>15</sup> It is also necessary that the receipts in respect to which the person is sought to be taxed should be plainly within the terms, such as "income" or "profits," employed in the statute;<sup>16</sup> and under some laws of this kind it is held that "income" means net income, not gross receipts.<sup>17</sup> The income of the preceding year may be and commonly is taken as the basis of the assessment.<sup>18</sup>

c. Persons Subject to Poll Tax.<sup>19</sup> Statutes requiring male inhabitants of a state to pay poll taxes are not restricted to such inhabitants as are citizens,<sup>20</sup> but apply to resident aliens.<sup>21</sup> They do not, however, apply to persons residing only temporarily in the state for a part of the year and domiciled in another state,<sup>22</sup> or to persons residing on lands purchased by or ceded to the United States for navy yards, forts, or arsenals, and over which the government of the United States has sole and exclusive jurisdiction.<sup>23</sup> The question as to what particular inhabitants or classes of inhabitants are or are not by reason of age or other circumstances or conditions required to pay poll taxes depends upon the provisions of the statutes.<sup>24</sup>

Davidson County*, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 65 (holding that a statute requiring every male "inhabitant" of the state to pay a poll tax applies to a resident alien, although he has never applied for naturalization papers).

22. State v. Ross, 23 N. J. L. 517.

Road tax.—A statute requiring persons "residing" in a road district to be listed annually and required to perform a certain amount of labor or to pay in lieu thereof a certain tax does not apply to persons temporarily in a road district engaged in the construction of a railroad but without any intention of remaining longer than such work requires. On Yuen Hai Co. v. Ross, 14 Fed. 338, 8 Sawy. 384.

23. Opinion of Justices, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 580, holding that persons residing on such lands where there is no reservation of jurisdiction to the state except the right to serve civil and criminal process on such lands are not subject to the payment of poll taxes.

24. See the statutes of the several states. And see Boston, etc., Glass Co. v. Boston, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 181; Faribault v. Misener, 20 Minn. 396; White v. Kershaw Dist. Tax Collector, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 136.

Minors.—Under a statute requiring male inhabitants over sixteen years of age to pay poll taxes, and providing that a minor having no parent, master, or guardian shall be personally taxed for his poll, and that the poll tax of every other person under guardianship shall be assessed to his guardian, the poll tax of minors in the employ of a manufacturing corporation and receiving salaries cannot be assessed to the corporation. Boston, etc., Glass Co. v. Boston, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 181.

7. TAX ON JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS. It is competent for the legislature to impose a tax on suits or judicial proceedings or on the process of the courts of the state.<sup>25</sup> But the necessary independence of the federal and state governments forbids that either should tax the courts or the process of the other.<sup>26</sup>

B. Corporations and Corporate Property — 1. IN GENERAL — a. Liability in General. Unless exempted in terms which amount to a contract not to tax, the property and franchises of a private corporation are as much the legitimate subjects of taxation as any other property within the sovereign power of the state;<sup>27</sup> and a statute imposing taxes on "persons" or "inhabitants" of the state, in general language, will include private corporations as well as natural persons.<sup>28</sup> All taxation of corporations, however, must rest on the basis of a valid and effective legislative enactment, either general or special, which must be construed in such a reasonable manner as to give effect to the plain intention of the legislature,<sup>29</sup> but not retrospectively unless such an interpretation is required by the very language of the act.<sup>30</sup>

Military tax.—Under the Connecticut statutes authorizing the imposition of a military tax on every person liable to military duty, one who is apparently well and strong is not exempt from the tax because of his poverty. Atwater v. O'Reilly, 81 Conn. 367, 71 Atl. 505.

In criminal cases.—The right to tax litigation includes the right to impose a tax on defendants convicted in criminal cases. State v. Howran, 8 Heisk. (Tenn.) 824.

Application of statutes.—A tax on "litigations on each suit" accrues when the suit is commenced. Elliston v. Winstead, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 472. A motion against a sheriff for an insufficient return is in legal effect a suit on which the tax must be paid. State v. Allison, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 373. But a statute imposing such a tax does not apply to cities and counties of the state when they are parties to suits. Bishop St. John Cathedral v. Arapahoe County, 28 Colo. 483, 65 Pac. 628. The tax of two dollars on suits in the parish of Orleans was abolished by the act of 1813. Orleans Parish v. Kennedy, 4 Mart. N. S. (La.) 511.

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Taxation," § 206.

Non-residence of stock-holders immaterial.—It is no defense to the payment of a tax on property of a corporation that some of its stock-holders are non-residents of the state. Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co., 12 Allen (Mass.) 298.

29. State v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 Minn. 13, 104 N. W. 567.

Repeal of statutes.—A general statute regulating the whole law of taxation will repeal earlier statutes relating to the taxation of certain corporations. People v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co., 98 N. Y. 67. But it will not repeal the provisions of the charter of an existing corporation, relative to taxation, unless plainly so intended. State v. Nashville Sav. Bank, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 111. Nor will a tax law relating to corporations be repealed by the general provisions of a later statute which is itself invalid. In re St. Louis Loan, etc., Co., 194 Ill. 609, 62 N. E. 810; State v. North America Ins. Co., 71 Nebr. 320, 99 N. W. 36, 100 N. W. 405, 102 N. W. 1022, 106 N. W. 767.

Canal Co. v. Com.*, 50 Pa. St. 399.

b. Corporations and Associations Subject to Taxation — (1) IN GENERAL.

If the terms of the statute are general, it will include all domestic corporations, whether they are chartered by act of the legislature or organized under a general law of the state by filing a certificate or otherwise;<sup>31</sup> but if it enumerates the classes or kinds of corporations to which it is intended to apply, the particular company, to be taxable, must be brought within the terms of the law.<sup>32</sup> A tax law applicable to corporations will include joint stock associations and limited partnerships if organized under a statute giving them substantially the rights and characteristics of corporations;<sup>33</sup> but not where they are formed by the private agreement of the persons concerned, without reference to the statute,<sup>34</sup> or the tax statute relates in terms to incorporated companies;<sup>35</sup> nor will the statute extend to an association which is purely and simply a partnership, in the contemplation of the law, although the articles provide for the sale of a partner's interest without dissolving the firm, for the management of its business by a board of trustees, or otherwise assimilate its organization to that of a corporation.<sup>36</sup> Ordinarily the liability of a corporation to taxation begins as soon as its organization is effected,<sup>37</sup> although in some states it will be charged with only a proportional part of the taxes for the fiscal year within which it was incorporated;<sup>38</sup> and its subsequent dissolution will not relieve it from taxes already due.<sup>39</sup> Neither is a domestic corporation released from taxation because its business is conducted and its capital employed wholly in another state or country.<sup>40</sup>

Corporation operated at a loss.—Moneyed or stock companies deriving a profit from their capital are liable to taxation, although their income was not equal to their expenditures for the year preceding the taxation. People v. New York, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 605.

Business corporations.—An incorporated social society, whose capital stock is divided into shares, is a "business corporation," in so far as its classification is necessary to bring it within a statute imposing taxes on such bodies. Newport Reading Room's Petition, 21 R. I. 440, 44 Atl. 511.

Moneyed corporations.—This term, as used in a tax law, includes all classes of corporations organized for business purposes, as distinguished from public and from charitable corporations, and thus includes a guaranty and surety company. State v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 35 Tex. Civ. App. 214, 80 S. W. 544.

Employing its capital stock within the state.—A statute applicable to any corporation so described will include a company whose only business is owning and managing an apartment house within the state. People v. Kelsey, 110 N. Y. App. Div. 617, 96 N. Y. Suppl. 745 [affirmed in 184 N. Y. 573, 77 N. E. 1194].

Corporation without capital stock.—A mutual life insurance company, which was incorporated without capital stock, cannot thereafter by a by-law change itself into a capital stock company, in order to reduce its taxes, the statute distinguishing between the two kinds of corporations in regard to the mode of taxing them. Mutual Benefit L. Ins. Co. v. Newark Receiver of Taxes, 33 N. J. L. 183.

"Every other like company."—The Kentucky statute imposing a franchise tax on every railroad company, press despatch, telephone, turnpike, palace car, sleeping car, and "every other like company" having or exercising any exclusive privileges not allowed to natural persons or for performing any public service, is held to apply to a corporation manufacturing cotton seed oil and owning tank cars by which such products are transported to its customers by railroads on a mileage basis. *James v. (II) CORPORATIONS CHARTERED IN TWO STATES. Where the same corporation is chartered under the general or special laws of two or more states, or is formed by the consolidation of corporations chartered by different states, it remains, in each of those states, a domestic corporation and taxable as such,<sup>41</sup> although it is held that each state should tax only so much of the corporate property as lies within its own boundaries or a proportionate part of the capital.<sup>42</sup>

c. Corporate Property in General. Unless in so far as it may be exempted by charter or statute, all the property of a corporation, both real and personal, is subject to taxation in the same way as if it were held by an individual,<sup>43</sup> even where the franchise of the corporation is not subject to taxation,<sup>44</sup> and regardless of where the stock-holders reside.<sup>45</sup>

d. Real Property. Under the laws generally in force a corporation is taxable on its real estate, as a private individual would be,<sup>46</sup> although the land so taxed represents a part of the corporation's capital invested in it,<sup>47</sup> and although a

Good-will of business.—The good-will of a newspaper is property, the value of which is to be taken into account in appraising the value of stock in the company. Matter of Jones, 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 356, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 983. But in cases where the good-will of a business as such is not taxable, a corporation cannot diminish its liability for taxes by charging off a certain amount from the value of its real estate and fixtures to the account of good-will, where there has been no depreciation in the value of those items. People v. Neff, 19 N. Y. App. Div. 596, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 299 [affirmed in 154 N. Y. 437, 48 N. E. 820].

Scrip.—The fund represented by scrip, issued by a corporation to its stock-holders, the fund being retained by the corporation, and being contingently liable for its debts, forms part of its taxable property. People v. New York Tax, etc., Com'rs, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 261 [affirmed in 91 N. Y. 670].

Riparian rights owned by corporation see People v. Smith, 70 N. Y. App. Div. 543, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 1100 [affirmed in 175 N. Y. 469, 67 N. E. 1088].

Notes distributed to stock-holders.—Where a corporation owning notes secured by mortgages on lands sold by it distributed such notes, together with cash to its stock-holders, as a dividend, guaranteeing the notes and the expenses of collection, the notes to be held by the stock-holders receiving them until payment or foreclosure, it was held that the title to the notes did not pass absolutely to the stock-holders and that the corporation was subject to taxation thereon. *Adams v. Where the tax imposed on a corporation is based on its capital "employed" within the state and is graduated according to dividends earned, the company cannot be taxed upon so much of its capital stock as is invested in unproductive real estate which it is holding merely as an investment. People v. Roberts, 157 N. Y. 677, 51 N. E. 1093.

statute provides that land held by a corporation shall be considered as personal property, this being merely intended to qualify and define the interest of the stock-holders.<sup>48</sup> An exception is, however, made in some jurisdictions in regard to real estate which is essential to the exercise of the franchises of quasi-public corporations.<sup>49</sup>

e. Deduction of Liabilities.<sup>50</sup> In some states the indebtedness or liabilities of a corporation may be deducted from the value of its property in assessing the latter for taxation.<sup>51</sup> In these cases it is the general rule that such liabilities may be deducted as are fixed and definite in amount,<sup>52</sup> but not mere contingent liabilities or mere estimates of probable obligations or responsibilities;<sup>53</sup> nor should an indebtedness incurred in the purchase of non-taxable property be deducted.<sup>54</sup>

f. Corporate Franchises and Privileges. The franchises possessed by a corporation are property and may be taxed as such, if the legislature shall so determine, entirely apart from or in addition to taxation on its other property or assets.<sup>55</sup> This includes not only special and exclusive privileges conferred by

The New York Tax Law of 1896 does not in express terms direct a deduction of debts of corporations but is construed as permitting such deduction as it is expressly allowed in the case of persons, and under the statutory construction law the word "person" as used in the statute includes within its meaning a corporation. People v. Dederick, 161 N. Y. 195, 55 N. E. 927.

Ultra vires business.—The term "franchise" as used in Ky. St. (1903) § 4077, imposing a franchise tax on corporations engaged in freight traffic, etc., is not the right to do the thing but the doing of it in fact, so that the liability of a corporation for such tax is not affected by the fact that its engaging in such business was ultra vires. James v. Kentucky Refining Co., 132 Ky. 353, 113 S. W. 468. So also if a railroad company having no separate franchise or authority to carry on a telegraph business assumes such a franchise and carries on a telegraph business, it is estopped to deny the existence of a franchise and is subject to taxation thereon. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Oppgaard, (N. D. 1908) 118 N. W. 830.

Y. 328; Southern Gum Co. v. Laylin, 66 Ohio St. 578, 64 N. E. 564, where it is stated that an excise tax may be imposed on corporations to compensate the state for the additional burden caused by the aggregation

Properly speaking, a franchise tax is one imposed only on these rights or privileges, and either consisting of a more or less arbitrary sum or measured, without appraisal, by the amount of nominal capital stock;<sup>58</sup> and a tax of this character is not to be regarded as a property tax.<sup>59</sup> In many states the tax on corporations is assessed or measured by the amount of their intangible property in general, the market value of their outstanding capital stock, the value of capital stock less all property otherwise taxable, the amount of gross or net earnings, the volume of business done, or the rate of dividends declared and paid; and it is generally held that such a tax is one on the franchise and not on the property of the corporation,<sup>60</sup> although it has been held that a so-called franchise tax which is in fact a tax upon all the intangible property of the corporation, including its capital, is really a property tax.<sup>61</sup>

g. Capital and Capital Stock — (i) IN GENERAL. The capital of a corporation is the aggregate of its property and assets of all kinds, and is the property of the corporation and properly taxable to it; while, on the other hand, its capital stock is the property of the shareholders, and consists of the aggregate of their separate interests in the business and profits of the corporation and of their ultimate right of participation in its assets on dissolution; and this property is taxable of capital in an artificial body and the exemption, in part at least, of the individuals composing it from liability for its debts.

In New Jersey.—In this state the legislature has not intended to tax the mere right or privilege of being a corporation; and hence a corporation which has simply preserved its organization but transacted no business is not liable to taxation. Faure Electric Light Co.'s Case, 43 N. J. Eq. 411, 5 Atl. 817. See also Passaic Water Co. v. Paterson, 56 N. J. L. 471, 29 Atl. 185. So a statute giving a corporation power to extend its operations does not change its character or attributes and is not a new franchise. State v. Manufacture Establishing Soc., 43 N. J. to the stock-holders.<sup>62</sup> Still, in several states, corporations are taxed on their capital stock, although, in this case, the stock is not actually taxed as belonging to the corporation, but is taken as the measure of the value of its property, and the tax is more properly considered as imposed on the franchise or assets of the company than on its stock.<sup>63</sup> The capital stock taxable under a law of this kind is the aggregate of that issued and outstanding,<sup>64</sup> including increases or additions to the original amount of issued or authorized stock;<sup>65</sup> but not including stock subscribed but not paid for.<sup>66</sup>

What corporations taxable.—The designation "any bank or other joint-stock company," in a statute providing for the taxation of capital stock, includes all incorporated associations having stock. State v. Simmons, 70 Miss. 485, 12 So. 477.

Actual cash value of capital stock.—Under the statute in Pennsylvania, imposing taxes on corporations according to the actual value of their capital stock, it is held that such value is a question of fact which must be determined by considering the value of the company's tangible property and assets of every kind, including bonds, mortgages, and money at interest, and the amount of indebtedness or encumbrances on its property. Stock issued during fiscal year.—On shares of stock issued during the tax year the state is entitled to taxes, at the appraised valuation, only from the date of issue to the end of the tax year. Com. v. Union Traction Co., 1 Dauph. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 178.

Stock owned in another corporation.—Where a domestic railroad company owns the stock of a domestic transportation company, which employs its capital outside the state, such stock constitutes no part of the railroad company's taxable capital. People v. Knight, 173 N. Y. 255, 65 N. E. 1102.

Stock bought in by corporation issuing it.—Stock once issued is and remains outstanding, within the meaning of the franchise tax law, although owned by the corporation issuing the same, until retired and canceled in the manner provided by the statute relating to the reduction of capital stock. Knickerbocker Importation Co. v. State Bd. of Assessors, 74 N. J. L. 583, 65 Atl. 913, 7 L. R. A. N. S. 885 [reversing 73 N. J. L. 94, 62 Atl. 266].

Stock held by holding company.—A part of the stock of corporations held by a holding company, pursuant to a plan of reorganization of the corporations, which is in progress, whereby the holding company is to acquire their entire stock is as much subject to a tax as is stock held by any other owner. McCallum v. Corn Products Co., 131 N. Y. App. Div. 617, 116 N. Y. Suppl. 118.

The corporation cannot escape taxation by its treasurer's failure to file with the secretary of state a certificate that the capital stock has been paid up, as required by law. Atty.-Gen. v. Massachusetts Pipe Line Gas Co., 179 Mass. 15, 60 N. E. 389.

(II) CAPITAL REPRESENTING PROPERTY OTHERWISE TAXED. The revenue laws of several states, instead of taxing the entire capital stock of a corporation without reference to the property and investments which it represents, impose taxes on real and personal property owned by the corporation, and exempt so much of its capital as is invested in such property, or lay the tax on so much of the actual value of the capital stock as is in excess of the actual value of property otherwise taxed.<sup>67</sup> This principle is intended to prevent double taxation of the same property or value.<sup>68</sup>

(III) CAPITAL REPRESENTING PROPERTY IN ANOTHER STATE. While it is competent for a state to tax the entire capital of a domestic corporation without regard to the fact that it is invested in property situated and taxed in another state,<sup>69</sup> an exception has been made as to so much of the capital as is employed or represented by property permanently located in another state and there used in connection with the business of the company.<sup>70</sup> Under this rule a domestic corporation is not subject to taxation on that part of its capital which is invested in the stock of foreign corporations,<sup>71</sup> but is subject to taxation on capital invested in the stock of other domestic corporations,<sup>72</sup> or in bonds of a foreign corporation,<sup>73</sup> or unpaid purchase-money due for lands sold by it situated in another state,<sup>74</sup> or tangible property which, although in another state, is not located there permanently or intended to serve any permanent corporate purpose.<sup>75</sup>

Michigan Southern, etc., R. Co., 4 Mich. 398 (making a similar ruling as to stock which had not been actually paid in but had been entered on the books of the company as part of its capital stock and had been used as money, and the holders of which were entitled to the same rates as on paid-up shares).

(iv) CAPITAL INVESTED IN NON-TAXABLE PROPERTY.<sup>76</sup> Where the tax is really laid upon the franchise of the corporation, although measured by the amount of its capital stock, the manner in which the capital is invested is not material;<sup>77</sup> but if the tax is really upon the property or assets of the corporation, as represented by its capital, allowance must be made for such portion of the capital as is invested in public securities or other non-taxable property.<sup>78</sup>

(v) DEDUCTION OF CAPITAL INVESTED IN REALTY. In several states, to avoid duplicate taxation, a corporation which has invested a portion of its capital in real estate, on which it pays taxes as owner, is allowed to deduct the value thereof from the amount of its assessable capital.<sup>79</sup> This will exempt capital invested in a lease of lands which is for such a long term as to amount practically to the fee,<sup>80</sup> but not real property situated in another state.<sup>81</sup>

h. Credits and Securities Owned by Corporations. Bonds, mortgages, notes, contracts, accounts receivable, and other forms of intangible personal property belonging to a corporation are taxable to it, the same as to a private individual,<sup>82</sup> except where or in so far as such property or certain classes of such property is expressly or impliedly excluded by the statutes.<sup>83</sup>

J. Shares of Stock-Holders. Since the capital of a corporation, which is its property, is a distinct and separate thing from the interests of the stock-holders, represented by the shares they severally hold,<sup>90</sup> and since the principle which forbids duplicate taxation is not violated, at least according to the decisions in many states, by assessing the capital to the corporation and the shares to their holders,<sup>91</sup> it follows that shares of stock in a domestic or foreign corporation may properly be assessed for taxation to their holder at the place of his domicile, irrespective of the taxes which may be imposed on the corporation itself in respect to its capital or franchises.<sup>92</sup> This principle, however, is not universally

Dividend deposited to stock-holder's credit.—Where a dividend is declared and directed to be deposited in a bank to the credit of the stock-holder, but to be held there until further order of the court, it is the property of the stock-holder and to be so taxed, and not to the bank. Pollard v. Newton First Nat. Bank, 47 Kan. 406, 28 Pac. 202.

Dividend payable in future.—The amount is any distribution made or ordered to be made to stock-holders out of the earnings or profits of the company,<sup>98</sup> including a stock dividend;<sup>99</sup> but not including a mere numerical increase in the number of shares of stock of the corporation not representing any distribution of earnings or profits,<sup>1</sup> or a distribution or return to shareholders of the capital stock or any part of it or the property represented by it or of the assets of the company as distinguished from earnings.<sup>2</sup> Taking the word "dividend" in this sense, it has been held not to be material, for the purposes of the tax law, where or how it was earned,<sup>3</sup> or when it was earned,<sup>4</sup> or if actually declared whether it was earned or not.<sup>5</sup> If the tax is laid upon dividends exceeding a certain percentage of the capital stock, this will be taken as meaning of a dividend declared by a corporation before the date fixed for the assessment of property for taxation, but payable at a future date, does not constitute part of the surplus fund of the corporation, taxable to it, but is a debt which the corporation is entitled to have deducted from its taxable assets. *People v. Profits applied to betterments are not "dividends earned," within the meaning of that phrase in a tax statute. State v. Comptroller, 54 N. J. L. 135, 23 Atl. 122.

Distribution among members of limited partnership.—Under the Pennsylvania statute relating to limited partnerships, which gives to such associations most of the characteristics of a corporation, they are to be taxed on their capital stock, the tax being measured by any distribution or division of profits which corresponds to dividends in a corporation. See Com. v. Sanderson, etc., Imp. Co., 3 Dauph. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 116.

Consolidation of corporations.—Where a consolidation of three corporations is effected by one of them absorbing the others and increasing its capital stock by more than double and dividing the increased stock among the shareholders in all three of the corporations, such distribution cannot be considered a stock dividend. Allegheny v. Federal St., etc., Pass. R. Co., 179 Pa. St. 424, 36 Atl. 320.

2. People v. Roberts, 41 N. Y. App. Div. 21, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 254; Credit Mobilier of America v. Com., 67 Pa. St. 233. And see Com. v. Central Transp. Co., 145 Pa. St. 89, 22 Atl. 209, in which case it appeared that the par value of the shares of stock of a corporation was reduced, and the difference between the old and new par was paid to the stock-holders in cash, and it was held that this was not a dividend but a reduction of the capital stock. On the other hand, in Com. v. Western Land, etc., Co., 156 Pa. St. 455, 26 Atl. 1034, where an enormous distribution to stock-holders was made, nearly equal to the capital stock, it was held to be a dividend and taxable, and a division of the capital or assets of the company, because it was shown that after this payment the market value of the stock did not sink below par.

3. People v. Roberts, 155 N. Y. 408, 50 N. E. 53, 41 L. R. A. 228, holding that it is immaterial that the dividends were earned outside the state and that the company made no profit on its business within the state.

Under the Pennsylvania statute providing for a tax on corporations according to dividends where they have "made or declared" during any year dividends amounting to six per cent or more on the par value of their capital stock, and in other cases for taxation according to the actual appraised value, a corporation is not to be taxed according to dividends where its earnings during the year are less than six per cent and it declares a dividend of over six per cent made up in part of accumulated earnings of previous years in none of which did the earnings amount to six per cent and during which it had been taxed according to the actual value of its stock. *Com. v. the paid-up stock, not necessarily the authorized capital.<sup>6</sup> But no such construction of the law will be adopted as would enable the corporation or its officers to escape taxation by juggling with the mode or time of declaring dividends.<sup>7</sup>

1. Bonded and Other Debts of Corporations. In some states corporations are required to pay taxes on the amount of their bonds or other evidences of indebtedness.<sup>8</sup> Generally this is an indirect tax on the creditors of the corporation, the latter being required to pay the tax in the first instance, but with the expectation that it will recoup itself; as in Pennsylvania, where the statute requires the treasurer of a corporation to deduct the state tax from each payment of interest on its bonded or other debt,<sup>9</sup> except in so far as such debt may be held by non-residents of the state,<sup>10</sup> and where it is held, in consequence of this provision, that no state tax is payable for any year in which no interest has been paid or in respect to any part of the corporate debt which does not bear interest.<sup>11</sup> In the absence of some such statute as this, however, the bonded or other debt of a corporation is not taxable to it, but to its creditors.<sup>12</sup>

m. Ownership or Possession of Property. Property held for a corporation by an agent, manager, or trustee is taxable to it under the same circumstances as in the case of an individual.<sup>13</sup> So also the corporation may be liable for the taxes on property in its possession and use, although it does not own the same in fee.<sup>14</sup>

that the treasurer made diligent efforts to discover the names and addresses of the holders of its debt, and the state does not show that any part of the debt is actually held by residents. Com. v. Philadelphia, etc., Coal, etc., Co., 2 Dauph. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 400.

So the land in and under a canal is taxable to a manufacturing company which owns the fee and the right to use the water, subject to the right of other persons to have the water flow through the canal for use beyond the premises of the company. Lowell v. Middlesex County, 152 Mass. 372, 25 N. E. 469, 9 L. R. A. 356.

n. Property Erroneously Left Untaxed. Property of a corporation which has escaped taxation for any year in consequence of its not being discovered, or through the mistake or inadvertence of the assessors, may afterward be assessed and charged with the tax,<sup>15</sup> provided the statutes authorize this course to be taken, for no such retrospective assessment can be made without statutory authority.<sup>16</sup>

But see Providence Banking Co. v. Webster County, 108 Ky. 527, 57 S. W. 14, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 214, holding that under the Kentucky statutes requiring certain corporations, including incorporated banks, to pay franchise taxes, and providing that persons and unincorporated associations engaged in the business of the corporations named shall be treated as corporations for purposes of taxation, an unincorporated banking company is subject to the payment of a franchise tax.

New York state banks.—Associations formed under the general banking law of New York are corporations, within the meaning of the tax laws, and liable to taxation on their capital. Niagara County v. People, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 504; People v. Watertown, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 616; Watertown Bank v. Watertown, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 686.

"Banker."—Within the meaning of the United States internal revenue laws imposing a tax on banks and bankers, one whose business is buying and selling stocks for his customers and who employs capital in his business and has a regular place for transacting it is a banker. Richmond v. Blake, 132 U. S. 592, 10 S. Ct. 204, 33 L. ed. 481. But a trust company which loans only its own money, taking bonds and mortgages therefor, which it sells with a guaranty, and which sells only its own property and not that received from other owners for sale is not a "banker" within the meaning of the statute. Selden v. Equitable Trust Co., 94 U. S. 419, 24 L. ed. 249.

(II) FRANCHISES AND PRIVILEGES.<sup>24</sup> Banking corporations may be and frequently are required to pay franchise taxes,<sup>25</sup> but a bank is not liable for such a tax after it has lost or been deprived of the right to exercise its corporate franchises.<sup>26</sup>

(III) CAPITAL AND STOCK.<sup>27</sup> The capital of a banking corporation is its property, and is liable to taxation,<sup>28</sup> provided the legislature so determines, for no such tax can be laid without legislative authority.<sup>29</sup> It is necessary in this connection to discriminate between "capital" and "capital stock," the former being, as stated, the property of the bank and rightly taxable to it, and the latter being more appropriately taxed to the shareholders according to their respective interests, or, if it is assessed to the bank, being considered rather as a measure of the value of the bank's franchise than as its property.<sup>30</sup> In strict propriety of operation if, before the assessment is made, it derives an income from its capital).

22. Ryan v. Gallatin County, 14 Ill. 78; Metcalf v. Messenger, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 325.

Liability pending insolvency proceedings.—An insolvent savings bank in the hands of a receiver for the purpose of liquidation is still liable for a property-tax (Bartlett v. Carter, 59 N. H. 105), but not for a franchise tax (see infra, III, B, 2, a, (II)).

language therefore the capital of a bank is the aggregate of its property invested and employed in its business, having regard to the market value of the various items rather than to the number and par value of its shares;<sup>31</sup> while its capital stock consists of the total amount contributed or paid in by the shareholders in exchange for their certificates of stock.<sup>32</sup> Ordinarily if the shareholders are taxed upon their shares the bank is not required to pay a tax upon its capital stock;<sup>33</sup> and under some statutes all of the capital, assets, and property of the bank other than its real estate is included in the valuation of the shares of stock as assessed to the stock-holders.<sup>34</sup>

(IV) SHARES OF STOCK-HOLDERS. Shares of stock in a banking corporation are taxable as the personal property of their respective owners,<sup>35</sup> and this, according to the principles stated in the preceding section,<sup>36</sup> is not a tax on the capital of the bank,<sup>37</sup> and may be laid without regard to the fact that part of the assets of the bank may be taxed separately to it or may be exempt from taxation,<sup>38</sup> although under some statutes if the banking corporation is taxed upon its capital or property the stock-holders are not subject to taxation on their shares.<sup>39</sup> The assessment is ordinarily to be made to the person appearing of record on the books of the bank as the owner of the shares;<sup>40</sup> but it is a perfectly proper provision,

Subscription partly paid.—An individual who subscribes for shares of stock in a bank and pays part of the amount, and conveys his shares to the bank to secure the residue, is liable to be taxed for the amount thus paid in as the owner of the stock. Tucker v. Aiken, 7 N. H. 113.

Shares held for another.—The statutes authorizing the taxation of bank stock are generally construed not to include shares held by a

and one which is now quite usual, to require the bank to pay the tax in the first instance and look to the stock-holders or the dividends due them for reimbursement.<sup>41</sup>

(v) DIVIDENDS AND SURPLUS. Banking institutions, like other corporations, may be and frequently are taxed in proportion to their dividends;<sup>42</sup> but this is properly a franchise tax and not a tax on profits or on their property.<sup>43</sup> The surplus fund or undivided profits of a bank belong to it, rather than to its stock-holders, and are therefore taxable to the bank;<sup>44</sup> but the rule is otherwise where a surplus fund is accumulated in accordance with statutory provisions for the security of depositors or held in reserve as a protection or guaranty for them, and which cannot be used in making dividends; this is not taxable as undivided profits.<sup>45</sup>

(vi) DEPOSITS. In some cases it is held that money deposited with a bank in the ordinary form of general deposit becomes the property of the bank and ceases to be the property of the depositor, while at the same time the depositor becomes a creditor, and the bank a debtor, to the amount of the deposit;<sup>46</sup> while in other cases it is held that the depositor is to be regarded as the owner of the deposit,<sup>47</sup> which is to be considered as money on hand and not as a debt due from the bank,<sup>48</sup> the bank being regarded merely as a custodian or quasi-trustee.<sup>49</sup> So in some cases it is held that money thus deposited is taxable to the bank as its property,<sup>50</sup> while another line of cases holds that the several sums deposited should person as trustee or in any representative capacity. Revere v. Boston, 123 Mass. 375; In re Kingston Ct. of Revision, 9 Can. L. J. N. S. 259.

be taxed to the depositors.<sup>51</sup> The opinion has also been advanced that the money of a depositor may be taxed to him, and the deposits of the bank, including his, also be taxed to the bank;<sup>52</sup> although this has been held, particularly in the case of savings banks, to be objectionable as double taxation.<sup>53</sup> Still another doctrine is that while the bank may be taxed on the amount of its deposits, it is rather to be regarded as a franchise tax than as a tax on property.<sup>54</sup> The courts of New York maintain the rule that, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of taxable property of a savings bank, the amount of its deposits should be deducted from its gross assets, as being a liability.<sup>55</sup> banks are not taxable on loans and investments made out of the money deposited with them.<sup>57</sup>

(VIII) OWNERSHIP OR POSSESSION OF PROPERTY. A banking institution is taxable on property held by it in trust in the same manner and to the same extent as other trustees.<sup>58</sup> It is also to be taxed for real estate which it holds, although the same is taken for a debt, or is not used in connection with its business.<sup>59</sup>

b. National Banks — (1) IN GENERAL. As the national banks are agencies or instrumentalities of the general government, no state can exercise any control over them, nor subject them to taxation in any manner or to any extent, except only in so far as congress permits.<sup>60</sup> The only concession congress has made to the states in this respect is to allow the taxation of shares of stock in the national banks and to permit their real estate to be taxed.<sup>61</sup> Hence no state can require the payment of a license-tax by a national bank,<sup>62</sup> nor impose a tax on its franchises,<sup>63</sup>

Tax on surplus earnings.—In New Hampshire it has been held that a statute providing for the taxation of stock-holders on the par value of their shares and taxation of the bank on its surplus in excess of the surplus required to be kept on hand by the act of congress is not in conflict with the federal statutes, it being held that such surplus represents a voluntary accumulation of undivided profits, and that to tax the shares of the shareholders at their par value and the surplus to the bank, and the payment of such taxes by the bank out of its profits, decreasing to that extent the profits subject to division among the stock-holders, is in effect the same as taxing the stock-holders alone upon the market value of their shares. Peterborough First Nat. Bank v. Peterborough, 56 N. H. 38, 32 Am. Rep. 416.

Waiver or estoppel.—It has been held that where a national bank voluntarily returns its capital stock for taxation, and states, in its answer in an action to recover the taxes thereon as increased on equalization, that it is willing to pay the tax as returned, it may be held liable for the taxes on the value of its stock as returned, although an assessment thereof would be unauthorized, but will not be held liable for any amount due to the increase of valuation. Lampasas First Nat. Bank v. Lampasas, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 530, 78 S. W. 42. But an assessment upon the capital stock of a national bank is not merely irregular but void, and the bank is not estopped to recover taxes paid under protest under such an assessment by the fact that its cashier through mistake listed such capital for taxation or by the fact that it did not apply to the board of equalization for relief against the assessment, such board having no jurisdiction in regard to property over which the taxing authority has no jurisdiction. Weiser Nat. Bank v. Jeffreys, 14 Ida. 659, 95 Pac. 23.

the real property of national banks is liable to taxation by the states,<sup>69</sup> and the right to tax such property being thus established its liability to taxation in particular states depends upon the state statutes.<sup>70</sup> If, however, a portion of the capital of the bank is invested in real estate and the bank is taxed upon such real estate, its value should be deducted in estimating the value of the stock for the purpose of taxing the shareholders on their shares;<sup>71</sup> or conversely, if the shareholders are taxed on the full market value of their shares without any deduction, such real property, in order to avoid double taxation, should not be assessed as such against the bank.<sup>72</sup>

(IV) SHARES OF STOCK-HOLDERS — (A) In General.<sup>73</sup> An owner of shares of stock in a national bank is not exempt from taxation thereon by reason of the nature of the institution or its relation to the federal government; on the contrary, by express permission of the act of congress, such shares are assessable and taxable to him, under state laws, like any other personal property.<sup>74</sup> But it must

to reimburse itself from them individually,<sup>78</sup> or at least where the bank has funds in its hands equitably belonging to the shareholders sufficient for this purpose,<sup>79</sup> and when this is done, the ordinary processes for the collection of taxes on personalty may be put into operation against the bank.<sup>80</sup>

(B) Non-Resident Stock-Holders. Under the federal statutes providing that shares of stock in national banks shall be taxed "at the place where said bank is located and not elsewhere,"<sup>81</sup> and declaring such provision as to the place to mean "the state in which" the bank is located,<sup>82</sup> the state has jurisdiction to tax the shares of national banks within its limits, although owned by non-residents; and conversely, the owner cannot be taxed where he resides if the bank is located in another state.<sup>83</sup> Shares of non-residents must be taxed in the town or city where the bank is located.<sup>84</sup>

Nature of tax.—Where shares of a banking association are assessed under Laws (1896), c. 908, § 24, the tax is assessed against the shares owned by the respective shareholders and not against the capital of the bank, and the tax, although collectable by the bank, is due from the owners of the stock and is a property tax, so that the bank is not entitled to have it reduced because it has only enjoyed the benefit of government protection for a portion of the year. People v. Wells, 58 Misc. (N. Y.) 252, 110 N. Y. Suppl. 829.

79. Charleston Nat. Bank v. Melton, 171 Fed. 743, where it is said that it might be that an attempt to make the bank pay the tax of a shareholder where there were no accrued dividends or earnings upon the shares owned by the shareholder in the hands of the bank out of which such payment could be made would amount to an attempt to make one person pay the debt of another, but that no such objection can be raised where the bank does have in its hands funds equitably belonging to the shareholder sufficient for such purpose.

Effect of insolvency.—No proceedings for the collection of the tax can be maintained against the receiver of an insolvent national bank, where the property represented by the shares has disappeared, since the receiver could not in such case be reimbursed, and consequently the tax would fall on the assets of the bank, rather than on the shareholders. in the national banks by providing that such taxation should not "exceed the rate imposed upon the shares in any of the banks organized under the authority of the state."<sup>85</sup> This was amended in 1868, by omitting the reference to state banks and providing that "the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State."<sup>86</sup> The former provision was construed as meaning that if a state imposed no taxes on shares of stock in its own banks, neither could it tax stock in the national banks at all;<sup>87</sup> and the same rule was applied where the state imposed a tax on the capital stock of the state banks but exempted their shares in the hands of the individual stock-holders.<sup>88</sup> The later statute is intended to prevent any unfair or unfriendly discrimination against the national banks,<sup>89</sup> and does not require a state to follow the same methods in assessing and collecting taxes on the shares of the national banks which may be adopted in the case of state banks;<sup>90</sup> nor does it require perfect equality as between these different classes of property,<sup>91</sup> and so does not prohibit a discrimination which is in favor of the national bank stock,<sup>92</sup> although such discrimination might be illegal as being in violation of the provisions of a state constitution.<sup>93</sup> The prohibition as to a discrimination in the "rate" of taxation is not, however, restricted to the rate per cent but applies to the burden of the tax,<sup>94</sup> whether resulting from a discrimination in the rate of taxation or in the valuation of the property.<sup>95</sup>

(B) Meaning of "Moneyed Capital." The term "moneyed capital," as used in the act of congress above referred to, means capital employed in the form of money and not in any other form which capital may assume and so employed in business as to yield a profit from its use as money.<sup>96</sup> Hence capital invested and employed in railroads, public service corporations, insurance, mining, manufacturing, and other such forms of business is not within the meaning of the statute.<sup>97</sup> It is restricted to capital employed in substantially the same way as the capital of the national banks, that is, in making loans and discounts,<sup>98</sup> and in fact there is a strong tendency to limit the phrase to banking operations pure and simple,<sup>99</sup> excluding on the one hand the operations of trust companies and of savings banks;<sup>1</sup> and on the other hand the operations of private individuals in loaning money on mortgages or other securities,<sup>2</sup> and to interpret the phrase "moneyed capital" as meaning no more than those forms of capital which come into actual competition with the capital of the national banks in the same kind of operations.<sup>3</sup>

(c) What Constitutes Illegal Discrimination. The act of congress is designed to prevent the taxation of national bank stock at a higher rate than is imposed on other moneyed capital; if the burden imposed is no greater, there is no legal ground of complaint.<sup>4</sup> The act does not require that the mode or manner of taxing such stock shall correspond in all respects to that adopted in taxing other moneyed capital,<sup>5</sup> and a different system may be adopted with reference to such

Surplus as affecting value of shares.—A tax law providing for the assessment of shares in the hands of their holders, on the basis of their actual value, does not unjustly discriminate against national banks, on the ground that state banks can divide up all their surplus, while national banks are required to keep on hand an accumulated portion of their surplus. *People v. property, provided there is no injustice, inequality, or intentional discrimination.<sup>6</sup> But the valuation is a part of the rate; and there is an illegal discrimination if the stock of national banks is appraised for taxation at a higher proportion of its actual or market value than the stock of state banks or similar institutions,<sup>7</sup> provided this is done systematically and intentionally by the assessors and in pursuance of a rule hostile to the national banks.<sup>8</sup> If the holders of other forms of moneyed capital are allowed to deduct their debts, and be taxed only on the remainder, a similar deduction must be allowed to owners of national bank shares, or the law is to that extent invalid,<sup>9</sup> at least if the privilege is shown to be extended

Statute creating penalties.—A retroactive provision of a statute, relating solely to national banks, by which they are charged with a liability for taxes for past years on their capital stock, whether held within or without the state, and subjected to a penalty in addition for delinquency, is an illegal discrimination against them. Effect in isolated cases.—The fact that a special system of taxation of national banks may not be as favorable as the general system of taxation in an isolated case does not render the system unlawful as discriminating against those institutions so long as there is no intentional discrimination and no inequality in the effect upon their stockholders generally. But there is no discrimination under a statute providing that bank shares shall be assessed "at their value" and other personal property at its "true value in cash," the expressions meaning the same thing, and the former provision not contemplating the book value but the actual value of the shares. Stock-holder with no debts.—Although a state statute may be in conflict with the act to moneyed capital which comes into competition with the national banks and to a large or substantial extent;<sup>10</sup> but this rule does not apply unless the deduction allowed affects other moneyed capital,<sup>11</sup> and there is no discrimination in merely allowing a deduction of debts from "credits" without allowing a similar deduction from the value of national bank stock,<sup>12</sup> unless the term "credits" as defined by the state statutes includes moneyed capital within the meaning of the federal statute.<sup>13</sup> So also no such discrimination can be charged merely because certain forms of capital are exempted altogether from taxation by the state laws,<sup>14</sup> unless it is shown that a relatively large amount of moneyed capital, employed in competition with the national banks, thus obtains exemption.<sup>15</sup> Nor is it an unlawful discrimination against the national banks that that portion of their capital which is invested in United States bonds or other non-taxable securities is not deducted in valuing the holdings of their shareholders,<sup>16</sup> since the tax is levied not upon the

of congress, in not permitting a stock-holder in a national bank to deduct his just debts from the assessed value of his stock, while the owners of other property can do so, it is not void as to a stock-holder who has no debts to deduct, and he cannot complain of the assessment of his stock. Albany County v. Stanley, 105 U. S. 305, 26 L. ed. 1044; Charleston Nat. Bank v. Melton, 171 Fed. 743.

Substituting lower rate for advantage of deduction.—The state is not obliged to apply the same system to the taxation of national banks that it uses in the taxation of other property, provided no injustice or intentional discrimination is inflicted upon them, but may weigh advantages and disadvantages and substitute a low flat rate of taxation, an advantage which other property does not have, in the place of the deduction of debts, which is an advantage enjoyed by other owners of personal property. *People v. c. Insurance Companies — (I) IN GENERAL. In some jurisdictions insurance companies are subject to a privilege tax,<sup>18</sup> in others to a general tax on their property<sup>19</sup> and credits.<sup>20</sup> Any corporation which engages in a business which is essentially that of insurance, in any form, will be liable to be taxed as an insurance company, although its name may not indicate its business;<sup>21</sup> and conversely, if an insurance company engages in any other form of business, such as that of an annuity, security, or trust company, it becomes subject to taxation like other companies employed in those forms of business.<sup>22</sup> The laws for the taxation of insurance companies may apply to mutual companies,<sup>23</sup> although some of the statutes do not apply to such companies.<sup>24</sup>

(II) CAPITAL AND STOCK. Insurance companies, like other corporations, may be taxed upon their capital.<sup>25</sup> A tax laid on the capital stock of an insurance company is sometimes regarded as a franchise tax,<sup>26</sup> or privilege tax;<sup>27</sup> but if

In Kentucky it has been held that if state banks are allowed to deduct the amount of capital invested in United States bonds a similar deduction must be allowed in the valuation of shares of national bank stock (Marion Nat. Bank v. Burton, 121 Ky. 876, 90 S. W. 944, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 864, 10 L. R. A. N. S. 947); but that if other banks are not allowed to deduct the value of assets invested in government bonds, no such deduction can be claimed in the valuation of shares in national banks, as this would be a discrimination in their favor as against state banks and trust companies (Hager v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 127 Ky. 192, 105 S. W. 403, 914, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 95).

Deduction of debts.—Under a statute providing that in making up the amount of credits which any person is required to list, he shall be entitled to deduct from the gross amount of such credits the amount of all bona fide debts owing by him, an insurance company is not entitled to deduct from its credits losses by fires or policy cancellations which may thereafter occur, although they do in fact occur before the taxes become delinquent. Annual profit or income.—When the tax is not imposed on gross premium receipts, but on annual income or profits or gains, it is to be ascertained by deducting losses from all income. Last v. London Assur. Corp., 10 App. Cas. 438, 50 J. P. 116, 55 L. J. Q. B. 92, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 634, 34 Wkly. Rep. 233; Kingston Corp. v. Canada L. Assur. Co., 19 Ont. 453.

Tax apportionable.—A tax on premiums, to be reported and paid in January and July of each year, is apportionable, and when the

received for premiums may be taxed as a part of the capital of the company,<sup>34</sup> and uncollected premiums as credits,<sup>35</sup> a tax on gross premium receipts is ordinarily imposed as a franchise, occupation, privilege, or license tax.<sup>36</sup> Within the meaning of such laws, a premium is earned and becomes the property of the company as soon as the risk begins, and it is immaterial that it is held subject to the future contingency of a loss by fire.<sup>37</sup> The law will also apply to premiums earned but unpaid and in process of collection or secured by notes;<sup>38</sup> and if the terms of the statutes are broad enough, the tax may be collected on premiums received for business done outside the state as well as for policies written within it,<sup>39</sup> although some of the statutes apply only to premiums received on business done within the state.<sup>40</sup> Under some of the statutes, taxing insurance companies according to their gross premium receipts, it is held that they are taxable only upon premiums actually earned or received and retained by the company,<sup>41</sup> excluding amounts rebated from stipulated amount of the premium,<sup>42</sup> or returned upon the cancellation of policies,<sup>43</sup> or spent in reinsurance,<sup>44</sup> while under others the entire gross amount of premiums received is taxed without any deduction,<sup>45</sup> or no deduction is allowed for amounts spent for reinsurance.<sup>46</sup> No deduction is made for the commissions of agents or the expenses of carrying on the business,<sup>47</sup> and premiums received by one company for reinsuring the risks of other companies are a part of its gross premium receipts and subject to taxation.<sup>48</sup>

Stipulated premiums not collected.—Where

a mutual insurance company, in order to provide for whatever may be needed under extraordinary conditions, stipulates in its policy for a premium larger than it actually needs to carry the risk under ordinary conditions and collects only such amount as is necessary, it should be taxed only according to the premium actually received (*Mutual Ben. it is undoubtedly within the power of the states, and of their municipalities by their authority, to impose taxes upon railroad companies and all their taxable property,<sup>51</sup> by laws specifically applicable to that class of corporations and to such of them as are subject to the state's jurisdiction,<sup>52</sup> duly enacted for that purpose and remaining in force,<sup>53</sup> and not retrospective in their operation;<sup>54</sup> and such taxation may include the franchises of such companies,<sup>55</sup> as well as their personal property;<sup>56</sup> but property owned by the company, but not possessed or used for railroad purposes, should not be assessed and taxed as a part of the railroad but separately.<sup>57</sup>

Where the road is assessed as a whole, the assessors should include its tunnels, culverts, bridges, and other structures or works which really constitute a part of the road, and are not used separately or independently.<sup>62</sup> A railroad bridge is ordinarily assessed for taxation with the railroad in connection with which it is used,<sup>63</sup> notwithstanding it may also be used for the passage of teams or persons

Constitutionality of statutes providing special modes for assessing corporate property see supra, II, B, 1, g, (IV), (A); II, B, 4, b.

In Pennsylvania the property of railroad companies, consisting of freight stations, offices, depots, round-houses, machine shops, passenger stations, and grounds covered by tracks and used as ways of approach to the stations and buildings in connection with the railroad, and all public works of the company used as such, with their necessary appurtenances, that is, such property as is ordinarily and properly pertinent to railroads and strictly necessary for their proper operation in exercising their several franchises, is not liable to taxation as real estate by the local authorities. Northumberland County v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 6 Pa. Cas. 516, 9 Atl. 504. Under this rule, the following kinds of property have been held so exempt: Freight and passenger depots (Northampton County v. Lehigh Coal, etc., Co., 75 Pa. St. 461), depots and places to hold cars (Venango County v. Jamestown, etc., R. Co., 2 Leg. Chron. 325, 7 Leg. Gaz. 20), dining-room and lunch-room in a railway passenger station (Erie County v. Railway Co., 29 Leg. Int. 117), and water stations, offices, oil-houses, car-houses (Railroad Co. v. Berks County, 6 Pa. St. 70). But on the other hand, the following kinds of property have been held subject to local taxation: Machine shops for repair work, including blacksmith, carpenter, and paint shops (Pennsylvania, etc., Canal, etc., Co. v. Vandyke, 137 Pa. St. 249, 20 Atl. 653; Railroad Co. v. Berks County, 6 Pa. St. 70; East Pennsylvania R. Co.'s Case, 1 Walk. 428. But compare Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Bradford County, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 537; Venango County v. Jamestown, etc., R. Co., 2 Leg. Chron. 325, 7 Leg. Gaz. 20; Erie County v. Railway Co., 29 Leg. Int. 117), an ice plant (Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Metzgar, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 239), and land belonging to the company but not occupied or used by it in connection with its road (Erie County v. Railway Co., 29 Leg. Int. 117). And see Railroad Co. v. Berks County, 6 Pa. St. 70, holding that such property of a railroad as is indispensable to the construction and use of the railroad is alone exempt from taxation, not property which is only indispensable to the making of profits. Under a statute expressly authorizing a municipal corporation to tax all the real estate within its limits owned by a railroad company "the same as other real estate in said city," it has been held that the city may tax real estate used for depots, offices, and passenger or freight stations (Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Pittsburgh, 104 Pa. St. 522), but that it may not under such a statutory provision tax land used by the company as a right of way (Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Pittsburgh, 221 Pa. St. 90, 70 Atl. 271).

Canada.—Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Port Perry, 34 Can. L. J. N. S. 239.

Meaning of "roadway."—The term "roadway," within the application of Const. § 179, providing for the taxation of the franchises, roadway, etc., of all railroads, includes not only the strip of ground on which the main line is constructed, but all grounds necessary for the construction of side-tracks, turnpikes, connecting tracks, station houses, freight houses, and other accommodations reasonably necessary to accomplish the object of their incorporation. L. 96, holding that a railroad bridge is a part of "the main stem or road-bed and track" within the application of the act of 1873, and not subject to local taxation.

But the legislature may provide, in the absence of any constitutional restriction, for the taxation of railroad bridges separately and not as a part of the railroad. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Pottawattamie County, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,384, 4 Dill. 497.

Taxation of bridges generally see supra, III, A, 2, b, (IV).

Increased rate for crossing bridge.—A bridge constituting an integral part of a railroad roadway is not a "toll bridge" because the railroad company illegally charges more for carrying persons over the bridge than for carrying them the same number of miles on either side of the bridge, and is not taxable under the statutes authorizing the taxation of toll bridges. State v.

on foot,<sup>64</sup> and where it is so assessed as an integral part of the road it should be assessed by the state board and not by the local authorities;<sup>65</sup> but it may be separately taxed if separately owned,<sup>66</sup> and in such cases may be assessed by the local authorities.<sup>67</sup>

(III) ROLLING-STOCK AND EQUIPMENT. The locomotives, cars, and other rolling-stock of a railroad are generally regarded and treated as personalty for the purpose of taxation.<sup>68</sup> In this character they are capable of having a situs of their own, and hence they are taxable to a company using them within the state, although they are owned by a foreign corporation.<sup>69</sup> On the other hand, the taxing power of the state is not necessarily restricted to such engines and cars as remain constantly within the state, but may extend to those which, in performing their regular journeys, pass through and out of the state,<sup>70</sup> but rolling-stock employed exclusively without the state is not taxable, although owned by a domestic corporation.<sup>71</sup>

(IV) CAPITAL AND STOCK. As in the case of other corporations,<sup>72</sup> the capital or capital stock of a railroad company is distinct from the shares of stock belonging to the shareholders,<sup>73</sup> and may be taxed to the corporation itself;<sup>74</sup> and under some statutes such companies are taxable upon their capital or capital stock,<sup>75</sup> the tax

Charter provisions.—Under a charter provision requiring a certain tax on "capital stock paid in," stock is to be included which was not paid for in money but issued by the company and used instead of money in acquiring the rights of the original purchasers of the road and treated and considered by the company as so much stock paid in and entitling the holders thereof to all the rights and privileges of other stock-holders. People v. Michigan Southern, etc., R. Co., 4 Mich. 398. Under a charter provision limiting the rate of taxation upon the "stock" of a railroad company, the limitation applies only to the capital stock actually paid in, and if the value of the property of the company is greater than the capital stock paid in the excess is not stock and is subject to taxation at the ordinary rate at which the property of individuals is assessed. Goldsmith v. Rome R. Co., 62 Ga. 473.

being in some cases regarded as a franchise tax,<sup>76</sup> and in others as a property tax,<sup>77</sup> based not upon the par value but upon the actual value of the stock,<sup>78</sup> or including all the property of the corporation,<sup>79</sup> together with the value of its franchises,<sup>80</sup> or the fair cash value of the capital stock, including the franchise, over and above the assessed value of the tangible property.<sup>81</sup> It has also been held that as the shares of stock are distinct from the capital of the corporation the stock-holders may be taxed on their shares notwithstanding the corporation is also taxed upon its capital or property.<sup>82</sup> Ordinarily, however, the shares of stock-holders are not taxed where the corporation itself is taxed on its capital or property,<sup>83</sup> but are taxable to the shareholders where the corporation is not so taxed.<sup>84</sup>

(v) EARNINGS OR RECEIPTS. A tax laid upon railroad companies in proportion to their income or gross receipts is generally considered as a franchise or privilege tax.<sup>85</sup> Such taxes have been fully sustained by the courts;<sup>86</sup> and this is also true of taxes laid on gross or net receipts over and above a certain fixed sum

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Taxation," § 257.

Tolls and transportation charges.—The sums received by one railroad company from another as compensation for the use of its tracks are within the meaning of a statute taxing the gross receipts of railroads "for tolls and transportation." Com. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 145 Pa. St. 38, 22 Atl. 212; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Com., 158 U. S. 431, 15 S. Ct. 896, 39 L. ed. 1043. But not within a statute taxing receipts "from passengers and freight." Com. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 145 Pa. St. 200, 22 Atl. 806.

Union depot companies.—Where the several railroad companies which use the terminal facilities of a union depot, and which own all the stock of the union depot company, pay the state tax on their gross earnings, the depot company itself is not liable to such tax. State v. St. Paul Union Depot Co., 42 Minn. 142, 43 N. W. 840, 6 L. R. A. 234.

Receipts from carriage of mails.—A railroad company is not liable to assessment on gross earnings derived from carrying the United States mails, where such earnings include moneys received from carriage of interstate and foreign mails, and it is impossible to determine what proportion of mail originated and terminated within the state. People v. Morgan, 168 N. Y. 1, 60 N. E. 1041.

or percentage, the contingency that the minimum earnings may not be exceeded being a point for the consideration of the legislature, not of the courts.<sup>87</sup> In some states also the tax is on the value of the railroad as a whole, but is determined by capitalizing its net earnings at a fixed rate or at the current rates of interest.<sup>88</sup>

(VI) DIVIDENDS. Where a railroad is taxed on the dividends declared on its capital stock, this means the amount of capital actually paid in and not the nominal capital.<sup>89</sup> The law may be applicable to a stock dividend,<sup>90</sup> but not to a sale of stock below its par value resorted to as a means of raising money,<sup>91</sup> or a mere increase in the number of shares of stock not representing any distribution of profits.<sup>92</sup>

(VII) BONDED AND OTHER DEBT. In some states railroad corporations are required to pay a tax on their outstanding bonded or other debt, or on the interest paid to creditors, which, however, unless the bonds are made "tax free," is in reality a charge on the creditor rather than on the corporation.<sup>93</sup> For this reason the company cannot be taxed on bonds held by non-resident owners,<sup>94</sup> although if it accumulates and sets apart a fund to pay the interest on its foreign-held bonds, such fund, before distribution, is taxable as its own property.<sup>95</sup>

(VIII) PROPERTY MORTGAGED OR LEASED. It is generally held that in the assessment and valuation of a railroad as a whole, for the purpose of taxation, there should be included any lines which it is operating under lease as a part of its system.<sup>96</sup> But a contrary rule prevails in some states, and particularly where the tax laws are explicit in requiring the assessment of property to its owner.<sup>97</sup>

(IX) EFFECT OF CONSOLIDATION.<sup>99</sup> The consolidation of domestic corporations does not affect the taxability of their property, and unless otherwise ordered by the legislature whatever property was taxable before the consolidation remains so after it.<sup>1</sup> So also where a railroad corporation is formed by the consolidation of several companies chartered by different states, it remains, in each of those states, a domestic corporation for the purpose of taxation.<sup>2</sup>

e. Miscellaneous Corporations — (i) BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS. In the absence of any special statutory provision building and loan associations are subject to taxation in the same manner as individual or other corporations,<sup>3</sup> and are therefore subject to taxation upon all their property,<sup>4</sup> at its full value,<sup>5</sup> including the amount of capital paid in and accumulated surplus,<sup>6</sup> and notes, bonds, and mortgages representing loans made to members or others;<sup>7</sup> and they may be taxed upon their capital stock,<sup>8</sup> or the shareholders upon their shares.<sup>9</sup> Owing to the particular nature of such associations and the consequent difficulty of assessing all of the property represented once and only once,<sup>10</sup> statutes have

Missouri.—Kansas City v. Mercantile Mut. Bldg., etc., Assoc., 145 Mo. 50, 46 S. W. 624, holding that the statute merely provides for the taxation of the owners of shares "on which no loan has been obtained from such association," and that there being no provision in the statute for the taxation of the property of the company or the shares of borrowing members the legislative omission cannot be supplied by the courts.

New Hampshire.—Rochester Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Rochester, 69 N. H. 173, 45 Atl. 255, holding that under the statute providing that the association shall be taxed on "the whole amount paid upon its stock or shares which are in force, less the amount of notes held by it secured by mortgages upon the homestead of the debtor, upon which the debtor pays a tax in this state," the association is subject to taxation not only upon amounts paid in as monthly dues but also upon net profits which are required by law to be distributed each year and added to the dues paid.

In Wyoming the act of 1890 relating to building and loan associations was repealed by the act of 1895 providing for the taxation of corporations generally. Albany Mut. Bldg. Assoc. v. Laramie, 10 Wyo. 54, 65 Pac. 1011.

Unconstitutional provisions.—The legislature may tax both the property of the association and the shares of the stock-holders, and it cannot constitutionally provide that the taxation upon the shares of the stock-holders shall be in lieu of all other taxes upon the corporation. Atlanta Nat. Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Stewart, 109 Ga. 80, 35 S. E. 73. The amendment of 1901 to the Illinois statute of 1895, providing that no stock of a building and loan association "while loaned upon by, and pledged as security to the association issuing it, to an amount equal to the par value of such stock, shall be subject to assessment," was held to be unconstitutional as attempting to exempt all that portion of the capital stock on which loans had been procured. In re St. Louis Loan, etc., Co., 194 Ill. 609, 62 N. When association is "doing business."—An association which has ceased to collect dues from members who have not borrowed out money, and has ceased to make loans, but is in other respects in full life, is "doing business" within the meaning of the tax law of 1879, and liable to taxation. Home, etc., Fund Co. Bldg. Assoc., 127 Ky. 537, 106 S. W. 221, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 435 (holding that under the act of 1903 the association is not subject to taxation on notes and bonds representing loans to members). But see State v. Redwood Falls Bldg., etc., Assoc., 45 Minn. 154, 47 N. W. 540, 10 L. R. A. 752, holding that the act of 1885, providing that mortgages of such corporations "which are represented in their stock, and assessed as stock shall not be assessed as mortgages," justifies the taxation of such mortgages unless they are in effect taxed by a taxation of the stock.

14. Atlanta Nat. Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Stewart, 109 Ga. 80, 35 S. E. 73 (holding that the tax imposed under the act of 1896 is a tax upon the shares of stock as the property of the stock-holders and not upon the property of the corporation); McGowan v. (ii) STREET RAILROADS. It has been held that a street railway company, whose cars are operated by motive power other than steam, is not a "railroad company," within the meaning of the tax laws relating to such companies;<sup>16</sup> but is subject to taxation, under statutes referring particularly to this class of corporations, on its franchises as well as other property,<sup>17</sup> and may be made also to pay a license-fee, either generally for the privilege of conducting its business, or specially on each car operated,<sup>18</sup> unless exempted from such fees by something in the nature of a contract.<sup>19</sup> The right of way of such a company is generally held taxable as real estate,<sup>20</sup> as are also its tracks, poles, wires, bridges, power-

Under the Indiana statutes the interest of a stock-holder in a building and loan association, or at least in the case of a non-borrowing member (see Deniston v. Terry, 141 Ind. 677, 41 N. E. 143), while not assessed to him as stock (see Harn v. Woodard, 151 Ind. 132, 50 N. houses, and car barns,<sup>21</sup> except where such property is included in the valuation of the franchise.<sup>22</sup> But the rolling-stock is taxable as personalty.<sup>23</sup> In some states the property of a street railway company, necessary to its operation, including tracks, stables, horses, and vehicles, is exempt from taxation for local purposes.<sup>24</sup>

(III) ELEVATED RAILROADS. A railroad company of this description is taxable on substantially the same principles as a surface street railway.<sup>25</sup> Its foundations, columns, and superstructures are classified as real estate for the purpose of taxation;<sup>26</sup> and if the company, by proper condemnation proceedings and the payment of damages to abutting property-owners acquires the easements of light, air, and access of such owners and a perpetual right to operate in front of their property, the rights so acquired represent property which may be assessed as an asset of the company,<sup>27</sup> although where judgments are recovered against the company by such property-owners for trespass to their easements of light and air, such judgments do not result in the acquisition of rights by the company and therefore are not to be considered as increasing its assessable property, but on the contrary they create liabilities which are a deductible indebtedness in making the assessment.<sup>28</sup>

(IV) EXPRESS AND OTHER TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES. A company engaged in the express business or other forms of the transportation of merchandise<sup>29</sup> may be taxed, according to the systems in vogue in different states, on its actual property within the jurisdiction of the taxing power,<sup>30</sup> or on its gross income or receipts.<sup>31</sup>

Easements in streets.—The gross earnings tax imposed on street railroads by the acts of 1882 includes as an element a tax on the easement of the company in the streets under a grant for that purpose, and no other assessment on its easement can be made without express legislative authority; but as to that part of the road located on turnpikes and private rights of way, upon the receipts from which such tax is not paid, the easements therein are subject to taxation. *United R., etc., Co. v. 29. Transportation companies.—A corporation engaged in the removal of petroleum from place to place by means of pipes is a "transportation company" within the meaning of a statute taxing such companies. Columbia Conduit Co. v. Com., 90 Pa. St. 307. And see Mellon Pipe Lines v. Allegheny County, 3 Pa. Dist. 448. So also are "slack water" companies. Com. v. Monongahela Nav. Co., 66 Pa. St. 81.

Franchise tax.—A tax on the gross receipts of an express company is a franchise tax. State v. Boston, etc., Express Co., 100 Me. 278, 61 Atl. 697.

(v) BRIDGE, FERRY, AND CANAL COMPANIES. A corporation owning and maintaining a toll bridge is taxable in respect to its property under the general laws of the state,<sup>32</sup> unless the ordinary rules are varied in its case by a special concession or contract with the state;<sup>33</sup> and it is not released from taxation by the fact that its bridge is leased to or occupied by a railroad company.<sup>34</sup> The same general principles are applicable to companies operating canals, whether for transportation or for the creation of water power,<sup>35</sup> and to ferry companies.<sup>36</sup>

(vi) TURNPIKE AND TOLL-ROAD COMPANIES. Turnpike and toll-road companies, unless exempt, are subject to taxation upon their franchises and property,<sup>37</sup> including the road-bed and right of way,<sup>38</sup> and if authorized by statute each county may tax so much of the road as lies within its borders.<sup>39</sup>

Receipts from interstate business.—It has been held that a tax on the gross receipts of such companies must be limited to the gross receipts of business arising within the state. State v. Fleming, 70 Nebr. 523, 97 N. W. 1063. But see State v. Boston, etc., Express Co., 100 Me. 278, 61 Atl. 697.

As real estate.—Bridge property is properly assessed as real estate. State v. Metz, 29 N. J. L. 122. And a toll bridge is properly taxed as real estate, although built over a navigable river. Hudson River Bridge Co. v. Patterson, 74 N. Y. 365. In Illinois such structures were formerly classed as personal property but the rule was changed by the act of 1873. See Quincy R. Bridge Co. v. Adams County, 88 Ill. 615.

Consolidated company.—Under a statute imposing a tax on the capital stock of corporations, a bridge company formed by the consolidation of two different corporations chartered by different states may be treated as a domestic corporation and taxed upon its capital stock in one of such states, regardless of how it be regarded in the other. Quincy R. East St. Louis, 107 U. S. 365, 2 S. Ct. 257, 27 L. ed. 419 (construing a provision in the charter of a ferry company that it should not be taxed at a higher rate than any other ferry company).

Edwards*, 3 Colo. App. 74, 32 Pac. 549.

Easement in highway.—In New York where a turnpike company was authorized to improve and convert a former public highway into a toll-road, it was held that, although the company did not own the fee in the road it had an easement which was subject to taxation as real estate. The decision was reversed by the court of appeals on the ground that regardless of the nature of the company's interest, the assessment was fatally defective in not indicating in its description that it was not laid upon something other than an ownership of the fee of the land, the court being divided as to whether the company had any interest in the highway which was subject to taxation as real estate. See People v. Selkirk, 180 N. Y. 401, 73 N. E. 248 [reversing 94 N. Y. App. Div. 509, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 1104].

(VII) TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE COMPANIES. A telegraph or telephone company,<sup>40</sup> if employed in transmitting messages between points in two or more states, is within the provision of the federal constitution as to interstate commerce, and hence cannot be taxed by a state on messages so transmitted or on its receipts therefrom;<sup>41</sup> but each state may tax so much of the company's property as lies within its own borders, and this may be determined either on the mileage basis or as a proportional part of the value of its entire system or of its whole capital.<sup>42</sup> The local authorities may also impose a license-fee on interstate telegraph companies, which may be a fixed sum or graduated according to the number of poles, instruments, or messages sent, provided it is reasonably proportioned to the expense involved in the inspection and other regulation and control of such companies, and is not primarily a means of raising revenue.<sup>43</sup> Subject to these restrictions, and to such exemptions as the state may choose to grant,<sup>44</sup> or the substitution of special kinds of taxes for general taxes,<sup>45</sup> the prop-taxation of turnpike companies do not authorize a division of a turnpike road-bed into sections corresponding to the different taxing districts through which it passes and their assessment in each as so much real estate. Bergen County Turnpike Co. v. Haas, 61 N. J. L. 174, 39 Atl. 654.

40. A railroad company which operates a telegraph system, but only for its own purposes and in connection with the running of its trains, is not taxable as a "telegraph company." Adams v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (Miss. 1893) 13 So. 932. But if a railroad company having no separate franchise or authority to carry on a general telegraph business assumes such a franchise and carries on the business, it is estopped to deny the existence of the franchise and is subject to taxation under a statute providing for the taxation of franchises of telegraph companies. *Minneapolis, etc., R. erty of these companies is taxable like other property,<sup>46</sup> and it is generally held that the poles, wires, conduits, and instruments are assessable as real estate.<sup>47</sup> Such a company may also be required to pay a franchise tax.<sup>48</sup> While a telegraph company which has accepted the provisions of the Post Roads Act of 1866 cannot be excluded by a state or prevented from carrying on its business,<sup>49</sup> it does not thereby acquire any immunity from state taxation,<sup>50</sup> except as regards its federal franchise.<sup>51</sup>

If a company having no franchise or authority to carry on a telegraph business assumes such a franchise and carries on a telegraph business, it is subject to taxation thereon. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Oppgard, (N. D. 1908) 118 N. W. 830.

Special franchises.—In New York telegraph companies are within the application of the law taxing "special franchises," which are classified for purposes of taxation as real estate and include the tangible property of the company which is situated in, upon, under, or above any street, highway, public place, or public waters in connection with the special franchises, the valuation for assessment to be made by the state board of tax commissioners. People v. Woodbury, 63 Misc. (N. Y.) 1, 116 N. Y. Suppl. 209. So where a telephone company shows to a town board of assessors that it has no real property in the town other than that assessed by the state board of tax commissioners, and its poles and wires in the public highway, an assessment made against it for real estate in the town is illegal. People v. Hall, 57 Misc. (N. Y.) 308, 109 N. Y. Suppl. 402.

Transfer of franchises and property.—If an electric light company, pursuant to legislative authority, transfers its property and franchises to a street railroad company, such property and franchises are thereafter taxable to the street railroad company and not to the lighting company. State v. Anderson, 97 Wis. 114, 72 N. W. 386 [overruling State v. Anderson, 90 Wis. 550, 63 N. W. 746].

"Special franchises."—Under N. Y. Laws (1896), as amended by Laws (1899), tangible property of an electric light company situated in or under public waters in connection with a special franchise cannot be assessed by the commissioners of taxes in New York city, but is to be taxed only as a part of the special franchise by the state board of tax commissioners. People v. New York Tax, etc., Com'rs, 58 Misc. (N. Y.) 249, 110 N. Y. Suppl. 833.

In Pennsylvania the lands, buildings, and appliances of such companies essential to the carrying out of their corporate franchises are not subject to local taxation. *Southern Electric Light, etc., Co. v. (IX) GAS COMPANIES. A corporation of this sort is taxable, according to the laws of the particular state, on its franchises,<sup>56</sup> on its easement of occupying the public streets,<sup>57</sup> on its capital and surplus or undivided profits,<sup>58</sup> and on its physical property;<sup>59</sup> and as to the latter it is generally held that gas pipes and mains laid under the streets are assessable as real estate.<sup>60</sup> In Pennsylvania a gas company is regarded as a "public corporation" in such sense as to be exempt from taxation for local purposes, under the laws of that state, on such of its property as is necessary for conducting its business,<sup>61</sup> although in some other states a contrary view prevails.<sup>62</sup>

As manufacturing establishment.—Under a statute providing for the taxation of "manufacturing establishments" the pipes used to convey gas from the place of manufacture to the company's customers, although laid through and under the public streets of a city, are the property of the company and taxable as a part of the establishment, but pipes owned by the city or private persons into which the company delivered gas for consumption would not be included. Memphis Gaslight Co. v. State, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 310, 98 Am. Dec. 452.

The payment of a license-tax does not exempt a gas company from ad valorem taxation. Newport Light Co. v. Newport, 20 S. W. 434, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 464.

Advance deposits.—An advance payment required of customers on account of gas to be used and as a guaranty for the return of the meter, etc., is a mere pledge so long as no unpaid obligation accrues against the customer and is not taxable to the company, but to the extent of any default it becomes a payment thereon and taxable to the company. Parsons Natural Gas Co. v. Rockhold, 79 Kan. 661, 100 Pac. 639.

(XI) WATER COMPANIES. A corporation whose stock is held in private hands and which was formed for the purpose of supplying a city with water is not a governmental agency or a corporation of the kind properly called "public," so as to be exempt from taxation,<sup>70</sup> although in Pennsylvania it belongs to the class of corporations which enjoy an exemption from taxation for local purposes on so much of their property as is necessary to the conduct of their business.<sup>71</sup> Such companies are taxable on their franchises, including an exclusive right to supply water for the city,<sup>72</sup> as well as on their other property.<sup>73</sup> For the purpose an exemption from taxation of "mines and mining claims" does not apply to the products of mines, and that silver bullion taken from mines is properly subject to taxation); Gold Hill v. Caledonia Silver Min. Co., 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,512, 5 Sawy. 575 (holding that under a constitutional provision that all property shall be taxed except "mines and mining claims," the proceeds of which alone are to be taxed, the words "mines and mining claims" include the surface of the ground, but that surface improvements thereon are not included and are subject to taxation).

In Colorado all mining property is subject to taxation, but for the purposes of assessment is divided into two classes according to the value of the annual products of the mines. People v. Henderson, 12 Colo. 369, 21 Pac. 144.

Kruttschnitt*, 4 Nev. 178 (holding that a constitutional provision requiring all property to be taxed "excepting mines and mining claims, the proceeds of which alone shall be taxed," means that the entire annual proceeds of the mines are subject to taxation and not merely the proceeds on hand when the assessor happens to visit the mines); Centennial Eureka Min. Co. v. Juab County, 22 Utah 395, 62 Pac. 1024 ("net annual proceeds").

And for the same reason, where the company buys large tracts of land along the stream which is used for the water-supply, and holds them simply for fear that nuisances might be erected thereon, contaminating the water, such lands are not exempt. *Roaring Creek Water Co. v. 1866 acquire any immunity from state taxation, but is subject to taxation in the same manner as other foreign corporations.<sup>91</sup>

(II) CARRYING ON BUSINESS WITHIN STATE.<sup>92</sup> Where the state taxes such foreign corporations as "carry on business" within its limits, it is held that an isolated or occasional sale or other business transaction does not bring a company within this description.<sup>93</sup> Nor does the maintenance of an office within the taxing state, which is kept merely as a convenient place for interviewing customers, or where directors' meetings are held, transfer books kept, and dividends declared,<sup>94</sup> nor the maintenance of an office merely for the purpose of soliciting business,<sup>95</sup> or an agency for the exhibition of samples and the taking of orders, when such orders must be sent to the home office to be filled and accounts settled there,<sup>96</sup> or the consignment of goods of a foreign corporation to a resident commission merchant for sale constitute doing business within the application of the statute;<sup>97</sup> and it is to be observed that if the statute requires both the carrying on of business and the employing of capital within the state, it is possible for a corporation to carry on business without employing capital within the meaning of the statute.<sup>98</sup> But it is not essential that the whole business of a corporation should be done within the state, it being sufficient if a substantial part of its regular business is so carried on;<sup>99</sup> and a foreign corporation is within the taxing law when it maintains a branch office within the state, or a sales agency, to which its goods are consigned, from whence they are sold, and where the proceeds are collected and a bank account kept.<sup>1</sup> A railroad corporation is considered as doing business in any state where a portion of its line is built and operated.<sup>2</sup> But on the other hand, a telephone company organized in a foreign state and which operates in the taxing state only through domestic corporations, to which it grants licenses or leases, not constituting them its agents, cannot be said to carry on business in the latter state.<sup>3</sup>

c. Franchise, License, or Privilège Tax. It is within the power and discretion of each state to impose an annual or other license or privilege tax on all foreign corporations doing business within its limits;<sup>4</sup> and it is no valid objection that such tax is higher than that imposed on similar domestic corporations.<sup>5</sup> Although a tax of this kind is often spoken of as a franchise tax, it is to be observed that the state cannot tax a foreign corporation in respect to its franchise of corporate existence, the right to be a corporation, but that the privilege of doing business in a given state, in its corporate character, may be considered as a franchise and taxed as such.<sup>6</sup>

d. Property Taxable in General. In the absence of any provision to the contrary, whatever is property for purposes of taxation in the case of a domestic corporation is property in the case of a foreign corporation,<sup>7</sup> and such property if situated within the state is subject to taxation like property owned by individuals or domestic corporations.<sup>8</sup> So in addition to the license-tax just spoken of,<sup>9</sup> it is competent for the state to tax such actual property of a foreign corporation as is situated within its borders, including real estate<sup>10</sup> and personal property of all kinds,<sup>11</sup> and property held in trust for the corporation, when property similarly held for a private beneficiary is taxable.<sup>12</sup> Also the credits of a foreign corporation, such as accounts receivable, promissory notes, etc., are taxable when they arise out of corporate business transacted within the state.<sup>13</sup> So also its bonds or other obligations may be taxed when held by residents of the state.<sup>14</sup>

e. Capital and Stock — (i) IN GENERAL. Although a license or privilege tax on foreign corporations may be graduated according to the amount of their capital stock,<sup>15</sup> and although so much of the capital of a corporation as is employed in a given state may be there taxed,<sup>16</sup> yet no state can impose taxes on the capital stock, as a whole, of any corporations except those which are organized under its own laws.<sup>17</sup>

(ii) CAPITAL EMPLOYED WITHIN STATE. It is within the power of a state to tax so much of the capital of a foreign corporation as is invested or employed within the taxing state, and this rule is adopted in several jurisdictions.<sup>18</sup> For the purpose of such a statute, the amount of capital employed in the state is measured by the total value of the property within the state owned by the corporation,<sup>19</sup> and used by it in the transaction of its ordinary business,<sup>20</sup> as distinguished from a mere independent investment,<sup>21</sup> with a proper allowance or

21. People v. Wemple, 150 N. Y. 46, 44 N. E. 787 [affirming 78 Hun 63, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 92], holding that money invested in real estate by a foreign corporation as an deduction for debts or liabilities,<sup>22</sup> and excluding such property as is shown to have been purchased out of surplus funds or undivided profits.<sup>23</sup> While it has been held that the basis of taxation cannot exceed the amount of the whole authorized capital stock,<sup>24</sup> it has also been held that money actively employed within the state is to be treated as capital stock, so as to subject the corporation to taxation,<sup>25</sup> although the entire amount of the authorized capital stock is invested in the foreign state,<sup>26</sup> and that such amount if treated as capital stock for purposes of taxation should also be so treated for the purpose of determining the percentage of taxation.<sup>27</sup> Subject to these limitations, the taxable capital within the state may be represented by investments in real estate from which the company derives a revenue,<sup>28</sup> the loans and securities of a bank or investment company,<sup>29</sup> book-accounts or other credits representing the proceeds of the sale of property in which capital was invested,<sup>30</sup> and the stock or securities of other corporations.<sup>31</sup> It is said, however, that no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down as to what constitutes having capital employed in business within the state,<sup>32</sup> and that while unusual it is quite possible for a foreign corporation to be doing business within the state without having any part of its capital employed within the state;<sup>33</sup> and a cor-independent investment and not occupied by the corporation or used by it in the transaction of its ordinary business is not capital employed within the state within the application of the statute.

What receipts included.—A statute imposing a tax upon the gross receipts of express companies applies only to the gross receipts which a foreign express company doing business in a state has received within the state for itself, and does not include collections belonging to other express and railroad companies or amounts due to other connecting companies and received to their use. Southern Express Co. v. Hood, 15 Rich. (S. C.) 66, 94 Am. Dec. 141. The Ohio statute requiring foreign insurance companies to pay a tax of a certain percentage on their gross premiums relates in terms to premiums "received by it in the state" and therefore the company is not required to pay such per cent on the business done within the state or on premiums received from the state but only on the amount of premiums received "in" the state. New York Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. State, 79 Ohio St. 305, 87 N. E. 259.

Under the Massachusetts statute the provisions of section 24, imposing an excise tax of one fourth of one per cent on the net value of policies held by residents, and section 28, providing that if the state, where a foreign insurance company was incorporated, imposes a tax on the premiums received by Massachusetts companies doing business therein, such foreign corporation shall pay a similar tax at the highest rate so imposed in the other state, are not cumulative, and no tax should be assessed under section 28 unless the amount would be greater than the tax assessed according to section 24, and if a tax is assessed under section 28, no tax should be assessed under section 24. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Com., 198 Mass. 466, 84 N. E. 863.

Under the Texas statute of 1907 a lower rate of tax on gross receipts of foreign insurance companies is allowed in case the company complies with the provisions of the statute requiring the investment of a deposit of seventy-five per cent of the reserve apportioned to the policies written on the lives of citizens of that state. Invalid as a property tax.—S. C. St. (1897), Code (1892), § 1809, imposing a tax on the gross receipts of foreign corporations which is imposed in addition to certain license-taxes, and requires such receipts to be entered "with the other items now included in the taxable property" of the company, does not impose a privilege tax but a tax on property, and as it is levied not upon property within the jurisdiction of the state at the time of the assessment but upon money which has passed some method of ascertaining the amount of the gross receipts and prescribe the rate of taxation.<sup>39</sup>

g. Shares in Foreign Corporations. Each state has the right and power to tax its own resident citizens on shares of stock in foreign corporations owned and held by them, the stock having its situs at the place of the owner's domicile;<sup>40</sup> and this right is not affected by the fact that the stock-holder may have been taxed upon the same stock in another state.<sup>41</sup> This rule also applies even where the rule in regard to domestic corporations is that the corporation shall be taxed on its capital or property and that this shall relieve the stock-holders from taxation on their shares,<sup>42</sup> and regardless of whether the foreign corporation pays out of the state during the previous year, it is unconstitutional. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Bradley, 83 S. C. 418, 65 S. E. 433.

Pledge of stock.—A pledge by a resident owner of stock in a foreign corporation to a trust company in another state, although the stock is delivered to the pledgee and transferred to it on the books of the issuing corporation, does not transfer the situs of such stock but it remains taxable to the resident pledgor or a transferee in the same state who has succeeded to all of his rights. *Georgia Cent. taxes on its capital or property in the foreign state or not;<sup>43</sup> but if all of its property is situated and taxed to the corporation in the same state where the stock-holders reside, the same rules should be applied as in the case of domestic corporations similarly taxed, and the stock-holders relieved from taxation on their shares.<sup>44</sup>

C. Public Property — 1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES. The United States has no authority to tax the property of a state,<sup>45</sup> nor a state to extract revenue from the property of the federal government,<sup>46</sup> and from the nature of the case neither government will lay taxes upon its own property.<sup>47</sup> Hence as a general rule all public property is exempt from taxation, either by express exemption or by necessary implication,<sup>48</sup> including not only the property of the state itself, but also the public property of its political subdivisions, such as counties and municipal corporations.<sup>49</sup> While in the absence of constitutional prohibition the state may include in its scheme of taxation such property of its own or of its municipal subdivisions,<sup>50</sup> the presumption is always against an intention to do so, and such property is impliedly exempt unless an intention to include it is clearly mani-

The reason of the rule is not based upon constitutional prohibition, but upon the fact that the state would merely be taxing itself to raise money to pay over to itself (Public School Trustees v. Trenton, 30 N. J. Eq. 667), or, as stated in one case, "would be merely taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another" (People v. Doe, 36 Cal. 220), so that there would be no gain in revenue, but on the contrary a loss to the extent of the cost of assessing and collecting the tax (see Biscoe v. Coulter, 18 Ark. 423).

One having a government title to land may set it up against one claiming under a tax-sale made previous to the time when the government parted with its title, notwithstanding any statutory provisions as to the effect of tax-sales. Wright v. Cradlebaugh, 3 Nev. 341.

Land occupied for military purposes.—Property taken and held by the national government in military occupation, but which is not owned by it, and which is afterward voluntarily relinquished and returned to its owner, is in the mean time taxable to such owner. Speed v. St. Louis County Ct., 42 Mo. 382.

Railroad property on military reservation.—The state has power to tax railroad property belonging to a private corporation, although it is situated exclusively within the boundaries of a United States military reser-

So land sold for direct taxes and bid in by the United States is not taxable while the government continues to hold it;<sup>56</sup> and property acquired from the general government after the time fixed by the state law for the completion of the assessment for the current year is exempt from taxation until the following assessment.<sup>57</sup>

(II) GRANT OR RESERVATION OF POWER TO TAX. Congress has power to grant to the states the right to tax public property or property in which the United States retains such an interest as would otherwise exempt it;<sup>58</sup> and where this is done no express acceptance by the state of the authority conferred is essential to the exercise thereof.<sup>59</sup> So also, if a state, in ceding to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over a tract within its limits, reserves to itself the right to tax private property therein, the consent of the government to the reservation may be presumed from its acceptance of the grant.<sup>60</sup>

(III) ENTRIES AND SALES OF PUBLIC LANDS — (A) In General. After title to any portion of the public domain has passed out of the United States by sale or by entry under the public land laws, in such manner as to invest the purchaser with the legal or equitable title, it becomes at once subject to taxation by the state.<sup>61</sup>

(B) Equitable Title Before Patent. When land belonging to the United States has been entered at the land-office and paid for and a certificate has been given to the purchaser, it is liable to taxation by the state, in advance of the issuance of a patent; for in such case the contract of purchase is executed, and the land belongs to the vendee and no longer to the government; the conveyance has not been made, but the purchaser has the equitable title, and the United States merely holds the dry legal title in trust for him; the land is segregated from the public domain and is thenceforth private property and subject to taxation.<sup>62</sup>

Ct. 50, 49 L. ed. 242, holding that the United States has no such interest in land conveyed by it to a corporation for dry dock purposes, with a reserved right to the free use of the dry dock, and a provision for forfeiture in case of the continued unfitness of the dry dock for use, or the use of the land for other purposes, as will prevent the state from taxing the interest of the corporation in such land.

Deed by town-site trustees.—The issuance and delivery of a deed to a lot by a board of town-site trustees appointed in pursuance of Act Cong. May 14, 1890, c. 207, 26 St. 109 (U. S. Comp. (c) Conditions Precedent to Vesting of Equitable Title. The equitable title just spoken of, to be subject to taxation, must be perfect and complete, without anything more to be paid or any further act to be done before the entryman is entitled to receive his patent.<sup>63</sup> Hence the land is not to be taxed before its survey and approval of the survey;<sup>64</sup> nor is it subject to taxation before full payment and acceptance of the price by the United States.<sup>65</sup> Again, in the case of homestead entries, the settler does not become entitled to a patent until he has completed the prescribed term of residence on the land, and his interest is not taxable before he is entitled to make his final proofs.<sup>66</sup> So if an entry is canceled and the issuance of patent suspended, on account of fraud, forgery, or mistake, the claimant has no taxable title while the proceedings are in this condition,<sup>67</sup> although his application is afterward reinstated or he is given an opportunity to substitute a valid entry.<sup>68</sup> But a mere suspension of the proceedings, on account of irregularity, after the right to a patent has become complete, does not destroy the taxable interest of the claimant,<sup>69</sup> and the same rule applies where the issuing of the patent is merely suspended pending an investigation of the rights of different claimants.<sup>70</sup>

(VI) GRANTS OF PUBLIC LANDS — (A) In General. Lands granted by the United States to private individuals become subject to taxation as soon as the grantee has done all that is required of him and becomes vested with the equitable title.<sup>73</sup> So also while congressional grants from the public domain to a state are exempt from taxation so long as the state holds the title,<sup>74</sup> they become subject to taxation as soon as the state has sold or granted them to private owners.<sup>75</sup>

(B) Grants to States For Internal Improvements. Lands granted by the United States to the several states in aid of their internal improvements become subject to taxation as soon as sold or granted by the state, or when earned by private parties who have become vested with everything except the dry legal title.<sup>76</sup>

(C) Railroad Land Grants — (1) IN GENERAL. Lands granted by congress to a railroad company to aid in its construction are not thereby charged with a trust, but become taxable as the property of the company as soon as it is vested with the legal or equitable title,<sup>77</sup> unless there be a specific provision in the grant for a general or limited exemption from taxation.<sup>78</sup> Where the lands are granted to a state, to aid in railroad construction, they are not taxable while the state holds the title in trust for the United States,<sup>79</sup> but become so when the state has passed the title to the railroad company.<sup>80</sup>

(2) EQUITABLE TITLE BEFORE PATENT. Lands granted to a railroad company by act of congress, to aid in the construction of its road, become subject to taxation by the state as soon as the company has earned the same and has become equitably entitled to receive the legal title, although the certificate or patent may not yet have issued.<sup>81</sup>

(3) CONDITIONS PRECEDENT TO VESTING OF EQUITABLE TITLE — (a) IN GENERAL. If the grant of lands to a railroad contains any conditions by which it is liable to be defeated, or which must be complied with before the company is held to have earned the lands, such lands are not taxable while the conditions are in force and unfulfilled,<sup>82</sup> but become taxable as soon as such conditions are complied with.<sup>83</sup> So also such lands are not subject to taxation where there are obstacles in the way of a conveyance of a clear title to the company, such as undetermined homestead entries upon the land,<sup>84</sup> or other conflicting or adverse claims thereto;<sup>85</sup> but a mere contingent right of preëmption in lands granted to a railroad company, if they should not be disposed of by the company within three years after the completion of the road, does not exempt the property from taxation.<sup>86</sup>

(b) SELECTION, SURVEY, AND CERTIFICATION. Lands passing to a railroad by such a grant are not taxable until the particular lands have been selected by the company, or set apart to it, so as to become capable of identification,<sup>87</sup> and certified by some state or federal officer if that is required by law,<sup>88</sup> and the selection approved by the secretary of the interior in cases where it is made subject to his approval,<sup>89</sup> and the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying the lands paid by the company.<sup>90</sup>

In Iowa it was formerly held that in the case of lands granted to the state in aid of railroads they were not earned by the railroad company so as to be taxable until they had been patented to the company by the state, in the absence of any fraud or intentional delay on the part of the company in procuring such patent (Iowa Falls, etc., R. Co. v. Plymouth County, 40 Iowa 609; McGregor, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 39 Iowa 655; Iowa Falls, etc., R. Co. v. Hemenway, 117 Iowa 598, 91 N. W. 910).

(c) DETERMINATION OF NON-MINERAL CHARACTER OF LANDS. Although the acts of congress granting lands to the railroads expressly except mineral lands, a railroad company is not exempt from taxation on its granted lands merely because there is a dispute as to the character of the land, because its non-mineral character has not been finally settled, or because the land commissioner refuses to issue patents until further satisfied as to the character of the land.<sup>91</sup>

3. PROPERTY OF STATES — a. In General. The property of the several states is not subject to taxation by the federal government,<sup>92</sup> and while in the absence of any constitutional prohibition the state might tax its own property,<sup>93</sup> it is presumed that no legislature intends to lay taxes on the state's own property, and therefore such property, even when not exempted from taxation by constitutional or statutory provisions, is so exempted by necessary implication, unless unmistakably included in the tax laws.<sup>94</sup> The public property which is thus exempt includes all property which in fact and equitably belongs wholly to the state, no matter on what basis its title rests, and no matter in what person or body the legal title may temporarily be lodged;<sup>95</sup> and these rules apply not only

Assessment of state land to private person.

—If state land is entered for taxation on the land books of a county, by a private person, and he purchases it at a sale for the non-payment of such taxes, neither he nor his grantee can acquire any title whatever. Braxton v. Rich, 47 Fed. 178.

Property taken under the power of eminent domain for a strictly public use is public property and not subject to taxation. Gasaway v. Seattle, 52 Wash. 444, 100 Pac. 991, 21 L. R. A. N. S. 68.

Title by escheat.—After the legal title to land has become vested in the state by escheat, there can be no valid assessment of taxes thereon. Reid v. State, 74 Ind. 252. But compare Philadelphia v. Linton, 10 Pa. Dist. 329.

Forfeiture for non-payment of taxes.—If land has been forfeited to the state for the non-payment of taxes thereon, it is not thereafter liable to further taxation while the

to land but also to personal property of all descriptions, including corporate stock, banks, railroads, and other institutions wholly owned and controlled by the state;<sup>96</sup> but it is only such property as may properly be said to belong to the state that is exempt,<sup>97</sup> and it is not sufficient that the state may have some indirect or expectant interest therein.<sup>98</sup>

b. Lands Under Water. Land under tide water and below high water mark belongs to the state and cannot be taxed so long as the state holds the title.<sup>99</sup> But an assessment of such property is not void ipso facto, since it may be the property of an individual under grant from the state.<sup>1</sup> And it is held that wharves and similar structures on tide lands held by a private owner under contract of purchase from the state are taxable to him.<sup>2</sup>

c. Sales and Grants in General. Public lands, the title to which has passed out of the state by sale or grant to private owners, become subject to taxation in the year succeeding that in which they were so granted or conveyed,<sup>3</sup> unless the title remains in the state. Buckley v. Osburn, 8 Ohio 180. See also supra, III, A, 1, g. Compare Bonner v. St. Francis Levee Dist., 77 Ark. 519, 92 S. W. 1124.

Foreclosure of mortgage.—If a mortgage securing a loan from the school fund is foreclosed and the estate taken under the foreclosure, the land in fact belongs to the state, in trust for school purposes, and is exempt. *Chicago v. A railway company, in condemning land for its right of way, is not the agent of the state, and the state has no ownership in the land condemned such as to exempt it from taxation. State v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 75 Nebr. 4, 105 N. W. 983.

Land held by a chancellor in trust under a will for beneficiaries who have not been ascertained cannot be considered as belonging to the state in the interval before the determination of such beneficiaries, and is therefore subject to taxation. State Chancellor v. Elizabeth, 65 N. J. L. 479, 47 Atl. 454 [affirmed in 66 N. J. L. 687, 52 Atl. 1130].

State as mortgagee.—Land belonging to a private individual is not exempt from taxation by the mere fact that it is encumbered by a mortgage given to the state to secure a loan of public money, but it may be assessed for taxes and sold for non-payment, subject of course to the state's mortgage. *Harrison v. grant was cumbered with conditions which leave an equitable title in the state or create a trust in its favor,<sup>4</sup> or unless the sale or grant is subsequently canceled by the state for failure to comply with the terms of payment or other conditions.<sup>5</sup>

d. Terminable and Equitable Titles to State Lands. As in the case of public lands of the United States, so also in relation to state lands, it is held that the same become taxable as private property as soon as the purchaser or grantee has become possessed of a perfect equitable title to the land, although the naked legal title may remain in the state, no patent or deed having as yet issued;<sup>6</sup> and in some of the states, even though the whole of the purchase-money may not have been paid, the purchaser may be taxed to the extent of his interest.<sup>7</sup> But generally if any condition precedent remains to be fulfilled before the grantee becomes entitled to the fee, the property is not taxable until performance thereof.<sup>8</sup> Property held under a lease from the state may also be taxed to the lessee, or at least to the extent of his leasehold interest,<sup>9</sup> and this question does not depend upon the qualities of the estate granted, but on the legislative intention expressed in the statute.<sup>10</sup>

4. PROPERTY OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — a. In General. While in the absence of constitutional prohibition a state may tax the property of its municipal corporations,<sup>11</sup> or a municipality having general powers of taxation may tax its

besides serving the strictly municipal uses, water rates are charged to private consumers;<sup>37</sup> but on the other hand, there are numerous decisions to the effect that a city, in undertaking to supply its inhabitants with water, discharges a proper municipal function, and that property used for this purpose is so far devoted to a public use as to be exempt from taxation.<sup>38</sup> It is clear, however, that a private water company is subject to taxation on its property notwithstanding it furnishes water to the city and is controlled in respect to the rates charged, and other matters, by the municipal authorities.<sup>39</sup> There is a similar conflict of authority as to whether a municipal electric light or gas plant is subject to taxation,<sup>40</sup> or exempt as municipal property used exclusively for public purposes.<sup>41</sup>

D. Governmental Agencies, Obligations, and Securities — 1. REASONS FOR EXEMPTION. The necessary independence of the federal and state governments imposes a limitation upon the taxing power of each. Neither can so exercise its own power of taxation as to curtail the rightful powers of the other, or interfere with the free discharge of its constitutional functions, or obstruct, embarrass, or nullify its legitimate operations, or destroy the means or agencies employed by it in the exercise of those powers and functions.<sup>42</sup>

it is not within the power of a state to lay any tax on the instruments, means, or agencies provided or selected by the United States government to enable it to carry into execution its legitimate powers and functions;<sup>43</sup> but a state tax upon the property of an agent of the federal government is not prohibited merely because it is the property of such an agent.<sup>44</sup> State taxation of the instruments or agencies of government is not objectionable on this ground if it does not impair their usefulness or efficiency or hinder them from serving the government as they were intended to serve it;<sup>45</sup> and a private corporation cannot claim exemption from taxation on this ground merely because it is employed more or less in the service of the United States, as for postal, military, and other purposes,<sup>46</sup> although the state cannot tax its receipts derived from carrying the mails,<sup>47</sup> nor telegraphic messages sent by United States officers on public business.<sup>48</sup>

3. BONDS AND OTHER SECURITIES ISSUED BY UNITED STATES — a. In General. A state has no power to impose any taxes on the bonds, stock, certificates of indebtedness, or other obligations issued by the United States as security for loans contracted by the general government under its constitutional power to borrow money;<sup>49</sup> nor on the income derived from such bonds or other obliga-

Franchise of railroad company.—A railroad company is not subject to state taxation on a franchise granted by the United States (California v. Central Pac. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 8 S. Ct. 1073, 32 L. ed. 150); but when a railroad chartered by a state and having a state franchise to operate its road, afterward receives a franchise from the federal government, the state franchise is not merged in the federal franchise so as to prevent the state taxation of the state franchise and the physical property of the road (People v. Central granted by letters patent of the United States for inventions or discoveries are exempt from all taxation by the states,<sup>61</sup> as is also the capital of corporations invested in or represented by such patents;<sup>62</sup> but this does not prevent the imposition of a franchise tax on such a corporation, its property as such not being taxed,<sup>63</sup> or a tax upon capital not invested in patent rights;<sup>64</sup> nor does it prevent the taxation of its stock-holders on the shares of stock respectively held by them.<sup>65</sup>

5. CORPORATIONS CREATED BY UNITED STATES. A corporation chartered by the general government, or subsidized by it, is not exempt from state taxation unless it is employed as an agency or instrumentality for the exercise of the constitutional powers of the United States.<sup>66</sup> If it is, the states can lay no taxes upon it which would hinder, obstruct, or interfere with its efficient discharge of its duties to the government or the government's use of it;<sup>67</sup> but subject to this

Co. v. Visalia*, supra; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lakin, supra). restriction its real and personal property is subject to state taxation like that of any other corporation.<sup>68</sup>

6. AGENCIES AND INSTRUMENTALITIES OF STATES. Congress possesses no power to lay taxes which would obstruct or interfere with the legitimate and efficient working of the state governments or on the agencies or instrumentalities employed by them.<sup>69</sup> This exemption includes railroads, banks, and other business enterprises wholly owned and operated by a state,<sup>70</sup> and its municipal corporations and their revenues,<sup>71</sup> and also the process and proceedings of its courts.<sup>72</sup> Nor, as in the case of public property generally,<sup>73</sup> will the state itself impose taxes upon its own public or governmental agencies or instrumentalities,<sup>74</sup> or those of its municipal corporations,<sup>75</sup> or a municipality tax such agencies or instrumentalities of a state.<sup>76</sup>

7. BONDS AND OTHER SECURITIES OF STATES. The bonds and other securities of a state or of its municipalities are generally exempt from all taxation by the state itself and its municipal corporations, either by express provisions of law or by implication;<sup>77</sup> and bonds of a municipal corporation, or the income derived from

Implied exemption.—State and municipal bonds and securities are impliedly exempt from taxation unless an intention to include them is clearly manifested; and they are not within the application of general constitutional or statutory provisions providing for the taxation of "all property," or including "bonds" in an enumeration of classes of property subject to taxation. State v. Bd. of Assessors, 111 La. 982, 36 So. 91; State v. Bd. of Assessors, 35 La. Ann. 651. Such bonds are instrumentalities of the government and are impliedly exempt like other governmental agencies and instrumentalities, unless an intention to include them as taxable property is clearly manifested. Penick v. Foster, 129 Ga. 217, 58 S. E. 773, 12 L. R. A. N. S. 1159.

A municipality cannot tax state bonds unless there is clear language in the charter conferring such power. Augusta v. Dunbar, 50 Ga. 387.

Deduction of state bonds from corporate capital.—Corporations are entitled to have deducted from the amount of their capital stock paid in and accumulated surplus, for purposes of taxation, the amount of the bonds of this state owned by them at the time of the assessment. *Newark City Bank v. them, cannot be taxed by the United States.<sup>78</sup> But in several states such public securities or particular issues thereof have been held subject to state taxation, because expressly made so or because the courts have denied that there was any necessary implication of an intent to exempt them;<sup>79</sup> and any state may tax its own citizens on their holdings of bonds or other securities of another state.<sup>80</sup>

8. SALARIES OF PUBLIC OFFICERS. A state cannot lay any tax on the office of a judicial, military, or civilian officer of the United States or on the salary or income he derives from it,<sup>81</sup> although of course his mere official character does not exempt him from paying taxes on his real or personal property other than his salary or emoluments.<sup>82</sup> Conversely congress cannot tax the salary or compensation of officers of the states.<sup>83</sup>

IV. EXEMPTIONS.

A. Nature and Purpose of Exemption. The term "exemption" presupposes a liability, and in the law of taxation it is properly applied only to a grant of immunity to persons or property which otherwise would have been liable to assessment.<sup>84</sup> Further, an exemption is a grant; a mere omission to tax or failure of the taxing officers to perform their duty is no exemption;<sup>85</sup> nor can the term be applied with propriety to a release from taxation granted in return for a consideration rendered.<sup>86</sup> Exemption or immunity from taxation is not one of the ordinary franchises of a corporation,<sup>87</sup> yet it is a franchise in such sense

Who are federal officers.—A clerk in a post-office, who is appointed by the deputy postmaster and his appointment approved by the postmaster-general, is not an officer of the United States so as to be exempt from taxation on the income derived from his employment as such clerk. *Melcher v. that it may be lost by non-user, that is, by acquiescence in actual taxation, and if this continues for a long period of years, it will raise a presumption of surrender.<sup>88</sup> Ordinarily an exemption from taxation is a mere personal privilege,<sup>89</sup> although it may be either a personal privilege or a privilege annexed to particular property.<sup>90</sup> The purpose of granting exemptions from taxation is ordinarily found in motives of public policy, such as the encouragement of manufacturing and other industries,<sup>91</sup> or the support of educational, charitable, or religious institutions;<sup>92</sup> but it is sometimes a proper and even necessary measure to avoid double taxation of particular persons or property,<sup>93</sup> although an exemption of this character is not properly speaking an exemption, but rather a mere regulation as to the mode of assessment.<sup>94</sup>

B. Grant or Creation — 1. POWER TO EXEMPT IN GENERAL. Unless restrained by constitutional provisions, the legislature of a state has full power to exempt any persons or corporations or classes of property from taxation, according to its views of public policy or expediency.<sup>95</sup> But no such power or authority belongs inherently to the municipal corporations of the state;<sup>96</sup> and still less can a mere executive or administrative officer exempt property from the payment of taxes.<sup>97</sup> The legislature may delegate to a municipal corporation the power to make particular exemptions, but then the grant of authority must be strictly pursued.<sup>98</sup>

2. CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS — a. In General. The constitutions of the different states usually either provide expressly for the exemption of certain kinds or classes of property,<sup>99</sup> or confer upon the legislature, in its discretion, authority to grant exemptions within certain defined limits, and statutes of exemptions thereafter passed are valid if they do not exceed the constitutional provisions;<sup>1</sup> but it is ordinarily held that a constitutional enumeration of exemptions which may be granted precludes the granting of any other exemptions.<sup>2</sup> A constitutional provision declaring that certain classes of property shall be exempt from taxation is self-executing and proprio vigore exempts the property specified,<sup>3</sup> and in such cases the legislature cannot impose any new or additional conditions as a prerequisite to the exemption;<sup>4</sup> but a constitutional provision

But under a constitutional provision requiring equality and uniformity of taxation it has been held that it is for the legislature to determine what property shall be subject to or exempt from taxation, so that all property of the same class may be taxed equally and uniformly, and that it cannot authorize different towns to determine what property within the limits of each shall be exempt. Discrimination.—Where a municipality is authorized by statute to give encouragement to manufacturing enterprises by exempting their property from taxation for a certain period, an ordinance exempting companies establishing woolen mills is invalid as discriminating in favor of companies and against individuals engaged in the same business. State, 160 Ala. 253, 48 So. 659, holding that where the constitutional provision exempts property from the taxation which is "used" for a certain purpose, a statutory provision exempting such property only when "owned and used" for such purpose is ineffective as to the condition of ownership, this being an additional prerequisite to the exemption given by the constitution.

If the constitution of the state expressly forbids the exemption of property from taxation, or provides that all property, or all property of certain kinds, shall be subject to taxation,<sup>7</sup> or if the legislature attempts to exempt property not within the classes or kinds enumerated in the constitution, in either case its action is invalid and the statutory grant of exemption is of no effect;<sup>8</sup> and the same rule applies where the constitution

Exemption of public "and other" property.—Where the constitution provides that "the property of the United States, and of the state, counties, school-districts and other municipal corporations, and such other property as the legislature may by general laws provide," shall be exempt from taxation, the words "such other property" refer to property of the same general character as that specially enumerated, and do not authorize specifically forbids the commutation of taxes in any form.<sup>9</sup> But the fact that a tax law contains an unconstitutional grant of exemption in one of its sections or provisions does not necessarily invalidate the statute as a whole,<sup>10</sup> although it may do so.<sup>11</sup> In determining the validity of statutes as affected by constitutional restrictions upon the power to grant exemptions the distinction must be observed between what is in fact an exemption and what is merely a regulation as to the mode of assessment.<sup>12</sup>

(II) IMPLIED RESTRICTIONS. Where the constitution grants to the legislature authority to exempt from taxation particular persons, corporations, or classes of property, this implies a prohibition against any other or further exemptions.<sup>13</sup> Implied restrictions on the power of exemption also arise from the constitutional provisions requiring equality and uniformity of taxation,<sup>14</sup> from the requirement that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value,<sup>15</sup> from the declaration in the constitution that every person ought to contribute his proportion of public taxes according to his actual worth,<sup>16</sup> or that no man or set the legislature to exempt any private property. State v. Daniel, 17 Wash. 111, 49 Pac. 243.

Constitutional restrictions not retrospective.—The Missouri constitutions of 1865 and 1875, limiting the power of the legislature in exempting property from taxation, were prospective and not intended to impair a charter already granted by the state to a college containing an exemption of its property. State v. Westminster College, 175 Mo. 52, 74 S. W. 990.

A. 116 (holding that a statute providing for the deduction from the assessed value of real estate of the mortgage indebtedness thereon is not an exemption and is not unconstitutional); Carroll v. Alsup, 107 Tenn. 257, 64 S. W. 193 (holding that a statute exempting from taxation the shares of stock-holders in certain corporations, but providing for the taxation of these corporations upon all of their property and franchises, does not in fact create an exemption but merely provides a different mode of assessment and is not unconstitutional). See also supra, IV, A.

If the total wealth of the state can be taxed once without the taxation of credits in any form, the constitutional provision requiring all property to be taxed is satisfied without the taxation of credits, and a statute exempting credits by providing that they shall not be considered as property for purposes of taxation and that thereafter no deduction shall be allowed on account of an indebtedness owed is constitutional; but the exemption of money from taxation is invalid as an attempt to avoid the taxation of all property as required by the constitution. State v. Parmenter, 50 Wash. 164, 96 Pac. 1047, 19 L. R. A. N. S. 707.

of men are entitled to exclusive separate public emoluments or privileges, but in consideration of public services.<sup>17</sup> But the constitutional provisions for securing religious freedom do not prohibit the exemption from taxation of such church property as the legislature may deem proper to exempt.<sup>18</sup>

3. STATUTORY PROVISIONS. A statute granting an exemption from taxation is generally to be construed as prospective only.<sup>19</sup> Except in the case of grants which are irrevocable because in the nature of contracts,<sup>20</sup> such a statute may be repealed or abrogated by the adoption of a new constitution or constitutional amendment which revokes the exemption,<sup>21</sup> by a later statute expressly repealing it,<sup>22</sup> by the enactment of a general revenue or tax law including in the classes of property to be taxed that which was previously exempt,<sup>23</sup> by any later statute containing provisions clearly inconsistent with the further continuance of the exemption,<sup>24</sup> or by a statute intended to cover the whole subject of exemptions from taxation and which does not include the particular property in any of the exempted classes,<sup>25</sup> or expressly repeals all prior statutes in regard to exemptions inconsistent with its provisions.<sup>26</sup> But as affecting exemptions already expressly granted the general rule applies that repeals by implication are not favored,<sup>27</sup> that

An exception to this rule was made in New York in regard to such property of the Roosevelt hospital as was acquired from the Roosevelt estate, it being held that the statute exempting the property of the hospital from taxation was not repealed by the general statute of 1896 limiting the exemptions of such institutions to such property as was used exclusively for carrying out their corporate purposes as "the peculiar features, which attended the incorporation and characterized the endowment of the Roosevelt Hospital, differentiate its case and render inapplicable the general doctrine." *People v. subsequent taxing statutes will not be construed as retroactive so as to repeal such exemptions,<sup>28</sup> and that a general law without negative words will not repeal a prior special statute granting an exemption, although the provisions of the statutes are different unless they are irreconcilably conflicting.<sup>29</sup>

4. TIME WHEN STATUTE TAKES EFFECT. When a constitutional or statutory provision exempting property from taxation goes into operation on a certain day in the year before the taxes for that year have been assessed, or before the day when by law they become a fixed charge on the property, the exempted property is free from the taxes for the current year;<sup>30</sup> but it is otherwise when the assessment is completed and the tax books closed before the day when the statute takes effect.<sup>31</sup>

5. EXEMPTION BY COMMUTATION OF TAXES. Unless restrained by some constitutional provision,<sup>32</sup> it is within the power of the legislature to provide for the payment of a fixed annual sum, or a fixed percentage of earnings or profits, by a corporation or other taxpayer, and to declare that such payment shall be in lieu of all other taxes on the property.<sup>33</sup> But the intention of the legislature in this respect must be entirely clear, and no exemption will be held to result from any language which does not show an unmistakable intention to accept the stated

Failure to pay special tax.—Where a corporation is required to pay a special tax, such as a percentage of its receipts or earnings and exempted from other taxation, a failure to comply with the statute does not affect the method by which its property should be taxed and does not render the property subject to taxation under the general law. *State Bd. of Equalization v. payment as a substitute for all taxes which would regularly be assessed on the property;<sup>34</sup> nor will an exemption of this kind be construed as intended to be irrevocable as to the mode of taxation or the amount of the payment.<sup>35</sup>

6. ACCEPTANCE OF EXEMPTION. Any individual or corporation entitled to the benefit of a statutory grant of exemption must in some way manifest its acceptance of the grant, in order to obtain immunity under it, and in particular must comply with all conditions imposed by the statute;<sup>36</sup> and the same rule applies to a statute commuting taxes or providing for the payment of a gross earnings tax or other special tax in lieu of general taxation.<sup>37</sup>

C. Construction and Operation — 1. PRESUMPTION AGAINST EXEMPTION. A grant of exemption from taxation is never presumed; on the contrary, in all cases of doubt as to the legislative intention, or as to the inclusion of particular property within the terms of the statute, the presumption is in favor of the taxing power, and the burden is on the claimant to establish clearly his right to exemption.<sup>38</sup> There is no real conflict between this rule and the rule that there can be no taxation except as authorized by the law-making power,<sup>39</sup> or at least where the exemp-

Illustrations and applications of rule.—Statutory exemptions from taxation will not be extended by judicial construction to property other than that expressly designated. Thurston County v. House of Providence Sisters of Charity, 14 Wash. 264, 44 Pac. 252. A law exempting those persons from the payment of a poll tax who have lost a hand or foot does not exempt one who has lost part of his fingers or whose foot is useless. Bigham v. Clubb, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 312, 95 S. W. 675. The fact that in an act amending the charter of a railroad corporation special provision is made for ascertaining the taxes to become due by the corporation to the state, nothing being said about the manner of ascertaining other taxes, is not of itself enough to work an exemption of the property of the corporation from all taxation not levied for state purposes. Silence in regard to such other taxes cannot be construed as a waiver of the right of the state to levy them. There must be something said affirmatively, and which is explicit enough to show clearly that the legislature intended to relieve the corporation from this part of the burden borne by other real and personal property, before such an act shall amount to a contract not to levy them. *Bailey v. muting taxes, as this is not so much an exemption as a change in the method of taxation.<sup>48</sup> Further the rule does not call for a strained construction, adverse to the real intention of the legislature, but the judicial interpretation of it must always be reasonable and in accordance with the actual meaning of the law-making power,<sup>49</sup> particularly in the case of exemptions existing by virtue of a contract contained in a corporate charter.<sup>50</sup>

b. Grant of Exemption by Reference to Earlier Grant. An immunity from taxation may be accorded to an individual or corporation by express reference to a similar grant in an earlier statute or charter; but according to the weight of authority, when a corporation is by its charter exempt from taxation, the grant to another corporation of the same "rights, powers, and privileges" possessed by the former does not carry the exemption, these terms not being explicit enough to import a surrender of the taxing power;<sup>51</sup> but the term "immunities" will include an exemption from taxation.<sup>52</sup>

3. TAXES AFFECTED BY EXEMPTION.<sup>53</sup> A general grant of exemption from "taxation" or from "all taxes" relieves the person or corporation affected from the payment of county or municipal taxes as well as from those levied for state purposes,<sup>54</sup> and also from special or local taxes which are properly taxes as distinguished

4. ACQUISITION OF PROPERTY BY EXEMPT PERSON OR CORPORATION. A general grant of exemption from taxation may extend to all property subsequently acquired by the exempt person or corporation, whether previously taxable or not, if such is the manifest intent of the statute;<sup>62</sup> but generally if a railroad or other corporation acquires the property or franchises of a similar corporation, it cannot extend its own exemption from taxation to cover the property so acquired, if that was previously taxable.<sup>63</sup> And even where an institution, such as a church or school, enjoys an exemption from taxes on all the property which it may acquire and hold, still it must assume the payment of taxes assessed for the current fiscal year on any property which it purchases or acquires otherwise.<sup>64</sup>

5. TRANSFER OF EXEMPTION—a. In General. Exemption from taxation granted by the legislature to an individual or a corporation is not a franchise, nor is it an estate or interest inherent in or running with the particular property exempted; but it is a mere privilege personal to the grantee; and unless there is express statutory authority therefor, the exemption will not pass to a successor of the corporation or to a person taking the property by sale, assignment, or other transfer.<sup>65</sup> So in construing grants of exemption they will be construed as perused synonymously and the company is exempt from payment of all taxes and not merely from paying a license-tax. Bowling Green v. Kentucky Masonic Mut. L. Ins. Co., 5 Ky. L. Rep. 697.

property as an appurtenance thereto,<sup>73</sup> unless the continuance of the exemption is contingent upon certain conditions which would cease to exist upon a transfer of the property.<sup>74</sup>

b. Purchase at Judicial Sale. The rule just stated applies where the property and franchises of an exempt corporation are sold under judicial process, whether on foreclosure or otherwise; and the purchaser does not acquire the privilege of exemption,<sup>75</sup> unless under a statute authorizing purchasers at such sales to enjoy the rights and privileges of a corporation and containing terms broad enough to pass an exemption from taxation,<sup>76</sup> or where the statute granting the exemption included the successors and assigns of the grantee,<sup>77</sup> or created an exemption which was not personal but appurtenant to the particular property.<sup>78</sup>

6. COMMENCEMENT OF EXEMPTION — a. In General. Unless otherwise specified, an exemption from taxation begins from the time the statute takes effect, and applies to property then owned by the exempt corporation or institution and attaches at once to that subsequently acquired.<sup>79</sup>

b. Compliance With Conditions Precedent. The statute granting an exemption may postpone the enjoyment of it until the performance of a condition precedent by the grantee, in which case it cannot be claimed until such performance;<sup>80</sup> as, where it is provided that a railroad shall be exempt from taxation upon the completion of its road or a certain portion of it,<sup>81</sup> or that a manufacturing company shall be exempt if a certain amount of capital is employed in its business,<sup>82</sup> or that a person claiming the exemption shall furnish the assessors with a written statement of the property he claims as exempt.<sup>83</sup>

7. COMPUTATION OF PERIOD OF EXEMPTION. Where a statute grants exemption only for a limited number of years, it will be strictly construed, and the property will become taxable immediately upon the expiration of the term;<sup>84</sup> and in no case will such a grant be permitted to extend in duration beyond what the terms of the concession clearly require.<sup>85</sup>

Alternative provisions.—A state statute providing that swamp lands shall be exempt from taxation "for the term of ten years, or until said lands are reclaimed," does not mean an absolute exemption for ten years, but for ten years if not sooner reclaimed, and upon reclamation the exemption ceases. State v. Crittenden County Ct., 19 Ark. 360; Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Loftin, 105 U. S. 258, 26 L. ed. 1042. So a statute exempting a railroad from taxation "until a single track of said road shall be completed, for a term, however, not exceeding ten years," imports that in no case shall the exemption continue for more than ten years from the time of the passage of the act. Poughkeepsie, etc., R. Co. v. Simpson, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 43 [affirmed in 89 N. Y. 636].

Constitutional provision not self-executing.—A constitutional provision abolishing all laws exempting property from taxation does not thereby impose any tax, and none can be collected which is not specially authorized by statute. Matter of House Bill No. 18, 9 Colo. 623, 21 Pac. 471; Savannah v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,385, 3 Woods 432.

Donation lands granted to soldiers are not subject to taxation until parted with by the original owner but may be taxed after a conveyance thereof. Sandford v. Decamp, 8 Watts (Pa.) 542.

But where exemption land is conveyed after the date for assessing property for tax-formed the basis of the grant<sup>90</sup> or of any of the conditions upon which its continuance depends,<sup>91</sup> by the death of the original grantee,<sup>92</sup> or the diversion of the property to other uses than those in consideration of which it was exempted,<sup>93</sup> and also by a surrender or release of the exemption, either express or implied from acquiescence in the assessment of taxes and their payment without protest.<sup>94</sup>

b. Earning of Specified Income or Dividend. Where exemption from taxation is granted to a corporation until it shall earn net income at a certain rate or declare a dividend, upon the happening of this event the exemption expires and the property becomes liable to taxation;<sup>95</sup> and it is not necessary that there should be any legislative act or resolution declaring the happening of the condition.<sup>96</sup>

9. REVOCABLE AND IRREVOCABLE EXEMPTIONS — a. In General. It is in the power of a state legislature, unless restrained by some constitutional provision, to exempt property of an individual or corporation from future taxation, in whole or in part, or during a certain period, and such a grant, if plainly expressed and distinctly contractual in its nature and founded upon a consideration, constitutes a binding and irrevocable obligation on the part of the state.<sup>97</sup> But on the other hand, in virtue of the control of the state over the whole subject of taxation, it is always competent for the legislature to repeal an entire or partial exemption from taxation, and to impose taxes on the property in question, or higher or additional taxes, unless there has been an express contract in limitation of the power;<sup>98</sup> and therefore if such a grant was not in the nature of a contract, but was a mere gratuity, or concession for which no price was paid or service rendered, it is at all times revocable at the pleasure of the legislature.<sup>99</sup> So also if the language of the grant is susceptible of a different construction it will not be construed as contemplating an absolute and irrevocable exemption.<sup>1</sup>

Exemptions in corporate charters see infra, IV, C, 9, b.

Constitutional prohibition.—Where the state has adopted a constitution which pro-

b. Exemptions in Corporate Charters. The charter of a private corporation is a contract between the corporation and the state, and if it contains a grant of exemption from taxation, based on a consideration and accepted by the corporation, this cannot lawfully be revoked or repealed by the legislature;<sup>2</sup> but even hibits irrevocable grants of exemption, all corporate charters thereafter issued are subject to its provisions and any privilege of exemption which they may contain is revocable. New Orleans v. Metropolitan Loan, etc., Bank, 27 La. Ann. 648.

Erroneous belief as to existence or validity of exemption.—Where the constitution forbids the grant of exemptions from taxation, or where the statute of exemption had already been repealed, no individual or corporation can claim an exemption of property merely on the strength of having expended money, constructed its works, or otherwise acted in the erroneous belief that such property was exempt. *Covington v. Property exempt "unless otherwise ordered."—Where the charter of a corporation provided that its property should not be subject to taxation "unless otherwise ordered" by the officers of a certain county, it was held that this provision had none of the characteristics of a contract, but was repealable. Mount Pleasant Cemetery Co. v. Newark, 50 N. J. L. 66, 11 Atl. 147.

Compliance with conditions.—Where an exemption from taxation is provided by the general laws of the state upon certain conditions, persons complying with the conditions do not thereby acquire such vested rights as against the state as to deprive a subsequent legislature of the power to alter the law and modify or revoke the exemption. *Shiner v. where the exemption is contained in a corporate charter it may lack the elements of a binding contract and constitute a mere gratuity subject to repeal.<sup>3</sup>

c. Reservation of Right to Alter or Amend. If the legislature, in creating a corporation, reserves to itself the right to alter or amend the charter, or if a similar reservation is embodied in the general statute under which corporations are organized, this constitutes a part of the contract itself, and consequently a subsequent revocation or repeal of an exemption from taxation enjoyed by the corporation is not a violation of the obligation of the contract, but is within the rightful power of the legislature.<sup>4</sup> And the same is true, in the absence of such a

Water company supplying city.—The fact that a charter amendment, granting an exemption to a water company, also imposed upon it the duty of furnishing to the city, free of charge, all water needed for fire protection, does not prevent a subsequent revenue act from operating as a repeal of the exemption, since the obligation would fall together with the exemption. upon which the right to the exemption claimed depends is ordinarily a question of fact,<sup>21</sup> but where the facts are shown or admitted the right to the exemption claimed is a question of law for the court.<sup>22</sup> Where the taxing officers have acted in good faith, they are not to be charged with the costs of any such proceeding, although it results in favor of the exemption claimed.<sup>23</sup>

b. Jurisdiction of Equity. A court of equity has jurisdiction to enjoin proceedings for the enforcement or collection of a tax on property which is legally exempt from its payment,<sup>24</sup> provided there is no other adequate remedy,<sup>25</sup> and provided the complainant will do equity by tendering or offering to pay such

New York*, 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 213.

Jurisdiction of federal courts.—A circuit court of the United States has no jurisdiction to enjoin the collection of taxes from a railroad company, where distinct assessments in separate counties, no one of which amounts to two thousand dollars, and for which in case of payment under protest separate suits must be brought to recover back the taxes paid, are joined and make an aggregate of over two thousand dollars. Northern Pac. Louisville, 133 Ky. 714, 118 S. W. 992.

Failure to set up exemption as defense.—One who fails to set up an exemption by way taxes as he admits to be due.<sup>26</sup> But equity will not enjoin the collection of an entire tax merely because, in determining the valuation of an aggregate property, some exempt property may have been included as a factor.<sup>27</sup>

c. Pleading. One who claims an exemption from taxation must allege all facts necessary to establish the claim;<sup>28</sup> and in a suit for equitable relief must allege all facts necessary to show the existence of the exemption and his right to the relief demanded.<sup>29</sup>

d. Evidence. One claiming, in any form of action or proceeding, that his property is exempt from taxation must assume the burden of establishing the exemption claimed by him by clear and satisfactory proof<sup>30</sup> of all the facts and of defense in an action brought to recover the tax cannot subsequently institute an independent equitable suit to enjoin its collection. Utah, etc., R. Co. v. Crawford, 1 Ida. 770.

Statutory remedy not exclusive.—In Illinois it is held that the statutory remedy by application to the board of supervisors is not exclusive but merely cumulative, and that while a plaintiff who elects to resort to that remedy will be bound by his election and cannot afterward resort to a suit in equity, he may sue in equity in the first instance to enjoin the collection of a tax assessed upon exempt property. *Illinois Cent. D. Persons and Property Affected — 1. IN GENERAL — a. Nature and Use of Property. Where the statute enumerates the kinds of property which shall be exempt from taxation, it will be construed with proper strictness;<sup>32</sup> but so as to carry into effect the intention of the legislature.<sup>33</sup> Property belonging to the public and devoted to public uses is always exempt.<sup>34</sup> Where the exemption is determined rather by the use which is made of the property than by its nature, as in the case of exemptions in aid of religious, charitable, or educational institutions, or for the encouragement of manufactures and the development of the resources of the state,<sup>35</sup> a mere intention, at some indefinite time, to devote the property to uses which would render it exempt, will not preclude its taxation in the mean time;<sup>36</sup> and further, the property must be wholly employed in such a use as will render it exempt.<sup>37</sup> If the constitution or statute provides that property used for certain purposes shall be exempt it is the use and not the ownership which determines the right to the exemption,<sup>38</sup> and the owner of the property may claim the exemption, although the use is by another, such as a lessee;<sup>39</sup> but if the exemption applies in terms only to property "owned and used" for such purposes the ownership and use must concur.<sup>40</sup> So also, although the owner of the land and the fee of the land itself may be exempt from taxation, a lessee of erty is taxable under a special law and not under the general law is upon the one claiming that it is so taxable. St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. Howard, 23 S. D. 34, 119 N. W. 1032.

such land may be taxed on his leasehold interest therein,<sup>41</sup> or on improvements placed thereon by him.<sup>42</sup>

b. Non-Resident Property. Although it is competent for a state to tax its own citizens upon property which they own in foreign parts, particularly property of an intangible nature,<sup>43</sup> several of the states have chosen specifically to exempt this kind of property, owned by resident citizens, at least where taxes are assessed and paid upon it at the place of its situs.<sup>44</sup> And conversely, although credits, investments, and securities of a non-resident owner in the hands of a resident agent for management and control are ordinarily taxable where the agent resides,<sup>45</sup> in at least one state we find a statute exempting property in this situation from taxation.<sup>46</sup> A statute requiring that every person shall be listed "in the county where he resides" does not exempt from taxation property within the state owned by non-residents.<sup>47</sup>

c. Amount of Exemption. Where the statute granting an exemption from taxation specifically limits it to property not exceeding a certain amount or value, its terms will not be extended by implication, but all property over and above the limitation will be held subject to taxation.<sup>48</sup>

2. INDIVIDUALS AND THEIR PROPERTY — a. In General. In many states the revenue laws are framed with a design to prevent the burdens of taxation from falling oppressively upon the poor or indigent, either by exempting their property in general from all taxes up to a small limited amount,<sup>49</sup> or by exempting specifically certain kinds of property, such as the growing crops of the farmer, the tools of the mechanic, or the furniture of the householder.<sup>50</sup>

Natural increase of value.—Where the charter of a benevolent society authorizes it to hold real and personal property up to a certain amount and exempts the same from taxation, and it acquires property worth less than the limited amount but which, in the course of time and by the natural increase of value, becomes worth more than that amount, it is taxable on the excess of value over the limited sum. Evangelical Baptist Benev., etc., Soc. v. Boston, 192 Mass. 412, 78 N. E. 407.

Yale college.—The charter of this college provided that it should never hold within the state of Connecticut real property free from taxation affording an annual income of more than six thousand dollars. It was held that in case the productive realty of the college exceeded six thousand dollars in annual value, it must elect either to sell the excess or to list the same for taxation; also that the provision of the charter did not permit the college to deal commercially with its exemptions by speculating in vacant lands or executing long leases at nominal rents, and thus evading the public purpose of its exemption; but that vacant lots held by the college, not yielding an income and not held for speculative purposes, were not subject to taxation. *Yale University v. Growing crops.—Alfalfa is not exempt as a "growing crop" (Miller v. Kern County, 137 Cal. 516, 70 Pac. 549), nor are fruit trees (Cottle v. Spitzer, 65 Cal. 456, 4 Pac. 435).

government while in course of transmission to the pensioner and is not subject to attachment or seizure under any legal or equitable process, but is to inure wholly to the benefit of the pensioner.<sup>51</sup> It is not therefore taxable until after it reaches the exclusive possession of the pensioner, and even then, by statute in several states, it is exempt from all taxes.<sup>52</sup> Moreover, the laws of some of the states extend this exemption from taxation to real or personal property bought by or for the pensioner with his pension money,<sup>53</sup> and if the pension money formed only a part of the price, then the property is exempt to that extent,<sup>54</sup> but only to that extent.<sup>55</sup> Similar exemptions have sometimes been extended to lands granted by way of bounty to settlers, soldiers, and others.<sup>56</sup>

Mode of assessment.—Under the New York statute of 1897, which introduces a more stringent exemption in regard to property purchased with pension money, such property is to be assessed in the first instance in the ordinary way, and the petitioner claiming the exemption must state in writing the facts including the amount of pension money used in the purchase. If this exceeds the assessed value of the property it is to be entered as exempt, but if the amount is less than the assessed value the property is exempt only to the extent of the amount of pension money used in the purchase. People v. Reilly, 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 363, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 742.

Exemption personal.—The exemption from taxation of lands granted to soldiers during the lifetime of such soldiers does not apply to their widows or children, whether the grant is made to the soldier during his lifetime or to the widow or children after his death. Platt v. Rice, 10 Watts (Pa.) 352.

specifically exempted by law are subject to pay taxes.<sup>57</sup> In some jurisdictions, however, statutes have from time to time been enacted exempting either entirely or to a limited extent certain classes of persons,<sup>58</sup> such as ministers of the gospel,<sup>59</sup> soldiers,<sup>60</sup> or volunteer firemen.<sup>61</sup> But an exemption of this kind which is personal in its nature does not extend to the family of the person exempt,<sup>62</sup> or pass to one who inherits or acquires the property of such person.<sup>63</sup>

3. CORPORATIONS AND THEIR PROPERTY — a. In General.<sup>64</sup> In pursuance of the rule of strict construction of statutes granting exemptions,<sup>65</sup> an exemption accorded to a corporation or to corporations of a particular class will be carefully limited to the terms of the grant;<sup>66</sup> and, although a general exemption of a corporation's property will cover all the property necessary to the exercise of its franchise or the accomplishment of the purposes of its incorporation,<sup>67</sup> it is not so as to property

To be entitled to the exemption the minister should be a settled minister over some particular society entitled to his services (Ruggles v. Kimball, 12 Mass. 337; Kidder v. French, Smith (N. H.) 155), although it is not necessary that the society should be under any legal obligation to pay him any fixed salary (Baldwin v. McClinch, 1 Me. 102); and it has also been held that one who has been a minister but has withdrawn from the active duties of his calling on account of age and infirmity is entitled to the exemption if he has not taken up any other occupation (People v. Peterson, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 421).

Valuation of property.—Under the Iowa statute giving soldiers an exemption of eight hundred dollars unless the soldier or his wife owns property of the actual value of five thousand dollars, such property for the purpose of determining the right to the exemption should be taken at its actual and not at its assessed value, and in valuing his property all property owned by him should be included, whether it is subject to taxation or exempt, and the value of a life-estate should also be included. White v. Marion, 139 Iowa 479, 117 N. W. 254.

But an exemption from sale under execution, or by virtue of any deed of trust or mortgage, or judgment or decree of any court, does not constitute an exemption from taxation or prevent a sale of the property for non-payment of taxes. Slane v. McCarrroll, 40 Iowa 61.

which is merely convenient for increasing its advantages or profits.<sup>68</sup> Where the exemption is made dependent on its annual gains or income not reaching a certain figure, this fact must clearly appear in order to warrant the exemption.<sup>69</sup> The term "residents" in an exemption statute has been held not to include corporations.<sup>70</sup>

b. Capital and Stock. The question as to what is included in an exemption of the "capital," "stock," or "shares of stock" of a corporation depends upon the intention of the legislature.<sup>71</sup> In some cases it is held that since the interests of the corporation in its stock and of the shareholders in their shares are separate and distinct, the exemption of the one does not include the other,<sup>72</sup> and that therefore an exemption of the capital or capital stock of the corporation will not exempt the stock-holders from taxation on their shares.<sup>73</sup> In other cases, however, it is held that an exemption of the corporation from taxation generally or from taxation upon its capital stock will also exempt the shareholders from taxation on their shares,<sup>74</sup> particularly where the charter also provides that all of the corporate property shall be vested in the shareholders;<sup>75</sup> and conversely that an exemption of the shares of stock also exempts the corporation from taxation on its capital stock,<sup>76</sup> or on the property represented thereby or essential to the proper exercise of the corporate franchises,<sup>77</sup> including not only the property but the franchise itself.<sup>78</sup> Where by its charter a corporation is required to pay "in lieu of all other taxes" an annual tax of a certain per cent on the "amount of capital" or "amount of capital stock" paid in, the charter tax is upon the capital stock of the corporation and the shares of the stock-holders are not exempt;<sup>79</sup> but where it is required to pay such a percentage "on each share of stock" the charter tax is upon the shares,<sup>80</sup> and the provision exempts the several shareholders

But if the tax, although nominally upon the shares, is in fact a tax upon the corporation itself, as where the corporation is required to pay the tax in the first instance irrespective of any dividends or profits payable to the shareholders out of which it may repay itself, such tax is within the application of an exemption of the corporation's from taxation on their shares,<sup>81</sup> but it does not also exempt the corporation from taxation on its capital stock,<sup>82</sup> or on its surplus and undivided profits,<sup>83</sup> or from the payment of an occupation or privilege tax.<sup>84</sup> In order to avoid what is sometimes regarded as double taxation,<sup>85</sup> the statutes frequently provide expressly for the taxation of corporations upon their capital or property and the exemption of the shareholders from taxation on their shares of stock, or vice versa;<sup>86</sup> but, strictly speaking, this is rather a mere regulation as to the mode of taxing substantially the same property than an exemption from taxation.<sup>87</sup> It is ordinarily held that an exemption of the capital or capital stock of a corporation includes the property represented thereby, or such as is essential to the carrying on of the corporate purposes of the corporation;<sup>88</sup> but this is not necessarily the case, the question being dependent upon the intention of the legislature.<sup>89</sup> It has been held that a charter provision exempting the stock of a corporation will not exempt the corporation from paying a license-tax.<sup>90</sup>

c. Consolidation of Exempt Corporations. Where a consolidation of two corporations takes place, one of which enjoyed an immunity from taxation, its property continues to be exempt in the hands of the consolidated company, if there is nothing in the statutes to prevent;<sup>91</sup> and conversely, all that part of the property which belonged to the non-exempt corporation continues liable to taxation as before.<sup>92</sup> But where the effect of the consolidation is to dissolve each of the companies and create a new corporation, it is subject to the laws existing at the date of the consolidation; and hence, although either or both of the constituent companies may have possessed an irrevocable exemption, yet if the statute authorizing the consolidation declares that the new company shall be subject to taxation, or if, in the mean time, a constitutional provision has been adopted prohibiting all such exemptions, the consolidated company is not exempt.<sup>93</sup> The same rule applies if the exemption of one of the constituent companies depended on certain precedent acts which the new company is neither required nor able to do or perform;<sup>94</sup> and even if the new company is vested with "all the rights, privileges, and franchises" of its constituents, it acquires no greater immunity from taxation than they severally enjoyed as to the portions of the property which belonged to them under their respective charters.<sup>95</sup>

e. Building and Loan Associations.<sup>4</sup> Unless restrained by the constitution,<sup>5</sup> the legislature of a state has power to accord an exemption from taxation to institutions of this class;<sup>6</sup> but the tendency is to restrict such an exemption within the narrowest limits consistent with the plain meaning of the statute.<sup>7</sup>

f. Insurance Companies.<sup>8</sup> Companies of this kind are in some states favored either by an entire exemption of their personal property, or their loans or investments, from all taxation,<sup>9</sup> or by imposing a fixed tax on their franchises, capital, or premium receipts, which is declared to be in lieu of all other taxes.<sup>10</sup>

g. Railroad Companies — (i) IN GENERAL. Private railroad.—In Louisiana the intention was to exempt any railroad open to the public and regulated by the law applicable clause of exemption is expressed in general terms, it will be held to include the franchise of the company and its profits, as well as its physical property,<sup>12</sup> although not outside investments, in the stock or bonds of other companies or the like.<sup>13</sup> In some cases, the language of the exempting statutes has been held broad enough to include all property lawfully owned by the company, whether used in the operation of its road or for other railroad purposes or not;<sup>14</sup> but the tendency, especially under statutes exempting property "necessary" for the purposes of the company, is to restrict the exemption to such property as is actually used or devoted to railroad purposes, and without which the company's business could not be conducted to the full measure of its capacity or duty, and to exclude property used in other forms of business, or which is not a necessary part of the railroad, although convenient to its operation.<sup>15</sup>

to common carriers, whether owned and operated by a corporation, a private society, or an individual; and hence a railroad is exempt, although owned by a limited company and having for its principal function the carrying of logs to a sawmill, if it also runs regular trains for passengers and freight with a fixed schedule of charges. Amos Kent Lumber, etc., Co. v. St. Helena Parish Tax Assessors, 114 La. 862, 38 So. 587.

Mining company's railway.—A company incorporated as a mining company, but with authority to construct and operate a railway from its mines to the place of shipment of its coal, and also to operate its railway for general passenger and freight traffic, is entitled to exemption as a "railway company." International Coal Co. v. Cape Breton County, 22 Can. Sup. Ct. 305 [reversing 24 Nova Scotia 496].

Property used as a telegraph line built by a railroad company is not exempt from

(II) BRANCH LINES. An exemption from taxation granted generally to a railroad does not ordinarily extend to a branch line which it constructs under authority given by the charter or a subsequent statute,<sup>16</sup> especially if the branch is substantially an independent road, having different stock-holders and a separate treasury.<sup>17</sup>

(III) RIGHT OF WAY AND OTHER REALTY. Under the terms ordinarily used in the statutes, an exemption from taxation granted to a railway will include its road-bed and right of way,<sup>18</sup> and the land used for its termini,<sup>19</sup> and generally also any real estate which is necessary to the proper operation of the road and is actually in use for such purposes.<sup>20</sup> But a contract by the state to exempt railroad lands from taxation will not be permitted to extend in scope beyond what the terms of the concession clearly require;<sup>21</sup> and an exemption cannot be claimed in respect to any lands held and owned by the company which are not needed for railroad purposes and are not actually devoted to such uses,<sup>22</sup> except perhaps taxation as property reasonably necessary for the running of trains and transaction of railroad business, where such line is used for commercial purposes for compensation. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Oppgard, (N. D. 1908) 118 N. W. 830.

in cases where it is reasonably certain that such lands will speedily be needed for the proper uses of the railroad and they are being prepared for such uses, or held in present contemplation of devoting them to such uses at an early day.<sup>23</sup> Nor is the company exempt in respect to lands which it holds for sale at a profit,<sup>24</sup> or for the sake of the timber on them or the gravel which they contain,<sup>25</sup> or which it has leased to private persons for their private uses.<sup>26</sup>

(iv) SALE OF RAILROAD LANDS. In some of the states, lands granted to a railroad company to aid in the construction of its road are by statute exempt from taxation until "sold and conveyed" by the company, and under these laws there is a sale and conveyance when the company has transferred to another the real and beneficial ownership of the property, receiving the purchase-price and retaining no lien on the lands, although it may still hold the naked legal title in the character of a trustee for the purchaser;<sup>27</sup> but not so if the conditions of the sale, in respect to payment of the price or otherwise, have not been fulfilled,<sup>28</sup> or if the company, acting within its rights, has declared the contract forfeited and canceled.<sup>29</sup> And generally the execution of a mortgage or trust deed on the property, or even its foreclosure, is not considered a "sale" of the lands;<sup>30</sup> nor is the transfer to another railroad company of the franchises, rights, and property of the exempt company, including the lands in question, such a sale of the lands as will make them subject to taxation.<sup>31</sup>

(v) DEPOTS, AND OTHER BUILDINGS AND STRUCTURES. A general exemption of property of a railroad will include all buildings and structures reasonably incident to the support of the road or to its proper and convenient use for the carriage of passengers and the transportation of commodities,<sup>32</sup> such as held that ferry-boats or other steam vessels are not within the terms of such a general exemption unless used as a necessary part of its road.<sup>42</sup>

(VII) CAPITAL AND STOCK. Where an exemption is granted to the capital stock of a railroad company, it is generally held to include the actual property in which the capital is invested, in so far as the same is necessary and appropriate to the operation of the road,<sup>43</sup> unless a contrary intention of the legislature is shown by a separate provision for the taxation of its physical property,<sup>44</sup> or unless it was the evident intention to exempt the shares of stock in the hands of their holders;<sup>45</sup> and conversely it has been held that an exemption of "all the property" of a railroad company will include its capital stock.<sup>46</sup> An exemption of the capital stock of a railroad company will include an increase of capital stock,<sup>47</sup> unless otherwise provided by statute.<sup>48</sup>

h. Mines and Mining Claims.<sup>49</sup> Some of the states, to aid in the development of their mineral resources, have granted exemptions from taxation to mines and mining claims.<sup>50</sup> But it must appear, to claim the benefit of the exemption, that the land in question is actually valuable for the minerals which it contains or is worked as a mine,<sup>51</sup> and the exemption does not necessarily include the plant or machinery of the mine.<sup>52</sup>

i. Water and Irrigation Companies.<sup>53</sup> In some of the states of the more arid regions, motives of public policy have induced the legislatures to exempt from taxation the property of irrigation companies, ditch and canal companies, and water systems generally,<sup>54</sup> and in others a similar immunity has been accorded

K. Manufacturing Companies — (1) IN GENERAL. In many states the laws exempt from taxation the property of corporations engaged in useful manufactures.<sup>58</sup> A grant of exemption of this kind ordinarily attaches upon the erection of the factory or the establishment of the business,<sup>59</sup> and may apply to existing companies, unless specially restricted to those to be founded in the future,<sup>60</sup> although in some jurisdictions the privilege is restricted to such as are carrying on business within the state or engaged wholly in manufacturing within the state.<sup>61</sup> The exemption usually covers so much of the company's property as is actually used in processes of manufacture,<sup>62</sup> although not that which may be employed

Land necessary to use of company.—Lands acquired and held by a water company, contiguous to the streams of water or reservoirs from which water is taken for public use, may properly be regarded as necessary for the purposes of the company, and are exempt from local taxation. Spring Brook Water Supply Co. v. Kelly, 5 Lack. Leg. N. (Pa.) 299; Roaring Creek Water Co. v. Snyder, 1 Northumb. Co. Leg. N. (Pa.) 181. And it is otherwise as to natural gas. A company engaged in supplying natural gas to customers for light and heat is not a manufacturing corporation; for natural gas is a product of nature and not the result of any manufacturing process. (iv) PLANT, PRODUCTS, AND OTHER PROPERTY. An exemption from taxation granted to manufacturing corporations will include generally the plant and all such other property as is necessary to enable the company to carry on its proper business,<sup>79</sup> but not property which is used for a distinct line or branch of business, not coming under the description of manufacturing,<sup>80</sup> nor a stock of goods carried as an incident to the general business of the company.<sup>81</sup> An exemption of machinery or property "employed" or "actually used" in manufacturing will be strictly limited to such as is really devoted to the purposes mentioned and necessary thereto.<sup>82</sup> building used for the purpose of storage and sale of manufactured articles. Victoria Lumber Co. v. Rives, 115 La. 996, 40 So. 382. But a factory is none the less exempt where the owner lives in a part of it, that being necessary to enable him to protect his goods. New Orleans v. Arthurs, 36 La. Ann. 98.

Ships for transportation.—Property exempt from taxation as "employed in manufactures" does not include vessels used to convey the raw material. Martin v. New Orleans, 38 La. Ann. 397, 58 Am. Rep. 194.

Property leased for manufacturing purposes is not exempt from taxation as "employed" in manufactures. State v. Board of Assessors, 46 La. Ann. 859, 15 So. 384. But see Colton v. Montpelier, 71 Vt. 413, 45 Atl. 1039.

"Water power," as the term is used in an exemption of improvements made on the water power on a stream for manufacturing purposes, does not apply to the operation of a tannery by steam, drawing water from a mill-pond by a force-pump and pipe, and located above the dam. *Plaisted v. taxes are payable on capital invested in the factory or plant,<sup>83</sup> nor on such part of it as is represented by the manufactured products into which it has temporarily passed,<sup>84</sup> nor on patents under which the business is carried on.<sup>85</sup> But the company cannot claim exemption on parts of its capital invested in dwelling-houses for its employees,<sup>86</sup> nor in mortgages or the stocks or bonds of other corporations.<sup>87</sup> If part of the capital is employed in the proper business of manufacturing, and part in some other line or branch of business, not necessarily connected with the main business of the company, although more or less incident to it, this does not render the entire capital subject to taxation, but only that portion of it which is so diverted from manufacturing.<sup>88</sup> Although the capital stock of the corporation is exempt, the shares of stock in the hands of their respective holders may still be liable to be taxed.<sup>89</sup>

1. Miscellaneous Corporations. Various other kinds of corporations have from time to time been favored with exemption from taxation, either on the ground of their performing public services or for the encouragement of beneficial industries.<sup>90</sup> But the principle is common to all that the company can claim exemption only as to so much of its property as is necessary and proper to the actual conduct of its particular business, and not in respect to property which may be devoted to other uses or which is held as a mere convenience or incident to the business.<sup>91</sup>

m. Foreign Corporations.<sup>92</sup> Although foreign corporations are not generally relieved by statute from local taxation, yet in some states an exception is made in favor of corporations engaged in manufacturing industries and carrying on their business within the taxing state.<sup>93</sup> Also it is not unusual to exempt from

E. Exemption of Charitable, Educational, and Religious Institutions — 1. CHARITABLE AND BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS — a. In General. Exemption from taxation is usually granted by statute or constitution to the property of charitable organizations or institutions of "purely public charity";<sup>95</sup> and this does not necessarily mean an institution solely controlled and administered by the state, but includes private institutions for purposes of public charity, which are not administered for private gain,<sup>96</sup> and may include foreign corporations,<sup>97</sup> unless the terms of the exempting statute are such as to exclude foreign corporations.<sup>98</sup> Nor is it necessary, to constitute a public charity, that it should be universal; it must not be restricted to privileged individuals; but on the other hand it need not be open to all persons without distinction; the "public" to which it ministers may be limited territorially, or with reference to particular classes of disease or forms of need, or to nationality or religious affiliations.<sup>99</sup> Again the Restriction to members only.—An institute of science, maintaining a library and museum, the benefits of which are restricted to members, except upon conditions prescribed by a board of managers, is not a public charity. Delaware County Inst. of Science v. Delaware County, 94 Pa. St. 163.

Restriction to members and their families.—In several cases it is held that, to enable an institution to claim the benefit of an exemption of the property of "charitable institutions," it is not necessary that its benefits should be extended to needy persons generally without regard to the relation the recipient may bear to the society, or to dues or fees paid; but it is still "charitable," al-

word "charity" is not restricted to the relief of the sick or indigent, but extends to other forms of philanthropy or public beneficence;<sup>1</sup> and if an institution is essentially a public charity, free from the element of private or corporate gain, its character as such is not affected by the fact that it receives some revenue from the recipients of its bounty, which is devoted to the maintenance of the institution or purposes of its charity.<sup>2</sup> But as the statutes are ordinarily framed, it is necessary, to claim an exemption as to particular property, that the ownership and use of it should combine; that is, property occupied and used by a charitable institution is not exempt if a third person owns it,<sup>3</sup> except perhaps where the title is merely held in trust for the institution or the property has been bequeathed to it.<sup>4</sup> And the exemption is commonly restricted to such property as is actually devoted to and used for the proper charitable purposes of the institution,<sup>5</sup> or held by it with the positive intention of devoting it to such uses in the immediate though it restricts its benefactions to its own members and their families. Indianapolis v. Grand Master Indiana Grand Lodge, 25 Ind. 518; *Appeal Tax Ct. v. Grand Lodge G. O. future,<sup>6</sup> and does not extend to property of the institution which is held or used for purposes not connected with the charity, more especially if it is a source of revenue.<sup>7</sup> Further, if the statute limits the amount of property which the institution may hold, or as to which it shall be exempt, any property owned in excess of that limit is subject to taxation;<sup>8</sup> and the exemption is lost by an abandonment of the charitable uses to which the property was originally devoted or its diversion to other purposes.<sup>9</sup>

b. Rents or Income Applied to Charity. While there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>10</sup> the rule most generally accepted is that where property belonging to a charitable institution is rented to third persons or otherwise employed as a source of profit, it is not enough to exempt it from taxation that the rents or income are devoted exclusively to the charitable purposes for which the institution was organized; the exemption applies only to property actually occupied and used for such purposes.<sup>11</sup> But property which is used directly for the purposes and in that they are partly supported by payments or fees exacted from those inmates or patients who are able to pay, provided the indigent are not for that reason excluded;<sup>22</sup> and the exemption extends to all property belonging to the institution which is actually used for its proper work and reasonably necessary thereto.<sup>23</sup>

What are "public" homes, asylums, etc.—An orphan asylum does not become a private

e. Fraternal and Beneficial Associations. In some states it is considered that fraternal associations, such as the Masonic order and the Odd Fellows, are to be classed as "charitable" or "benevolent" institutions on account of their philanthropies, and therefore entitled to hold their property exempt from taxes;<sup>24</sup> while a contrary doctrine is that the fact of their relief work being confined to members of the order and their families removes them from the class of public charities, so that they are not entitled to exemption.<sup>25</sup> In some cases it is held that the question depends upon whether the exemption granted is in terms restricted to institutions of "purely public charity" or applies generally to "charitable institutions."<sup>26</sup> Where the principal object of a fraternal order is to provide charity because, according to the will of its founder, a preference is given, in receiving inmates, to the children of clergymen of a particular church, if others are not absolutely excluded. *Burd Orphan Asylum v. tions,<sup>33</sup> the exemption will extend to educational institutions carried on by private individuals as well as to incorporated institutions.<sup>34</sup> Nor is it essential to constitute an "educational" institution that it should be incorporated exclusively for such purpose or that there should be a regular corps of teachers with regular classes of students,<sup>35</sup> but its objects must have some educational value and it must perform some educational function;<sup>36</sup> and it is always essential to the exemption that the educational work of the institution should be carried on; when it ceases or is abandoned, the property becomes subject to taxation.<sup>37</sup>

b. Public or Charitable Character of Institution. If an exemption from taxation is granted generally to schools or educational institutions, without requiring that they shall be public or charitable institutions, it may be claimed by a private school maintained by an individual or corporation as a business enterprise.<sup>38</sup> In some states, however, it is considered that such an institution is not within the spirit of the exemption laws,<sup>39</sup> and this is clearly the case where the exemption is limited to school property "not used with a view to profit."<sup>40</sup> general knowledge of kindred subjects, and to that end, of furnishing popular instruction and recreation." Matter of Mergentime, 129 N. Y. App. Div. 367, 113 N. Y. Suppl. 948 [affirmed in 195 N. Y. 572, 88 N. E. 1125]. Compare Academy of Fine Arts v. Philadelphia County, 22 Pa. St. 496, holding that an institution for the study and exhibition of works of art is not an "academy," within the meaning of the statute, although styled an "academy of fine arts." But a young men's christian association is not a "seminary of learning" within the application of an exemption statute. New York Y. M. C. A. v. New York, 113 N. Y. 187, 21 N. E. 86 [reversing 44 Hun 102].

Chautauqua assembly.—The property of a local "Chautauqua" is not exempt from taxation on the ground of its educational features, where its sessions last but a few days in the year, and its purposes are social as well as educational, and stock-holders in the corporation receive benefit from its earnings in the way of free tickets to its meetings. Bosworth v. Kentucky Chautauqua Assembly, 112 Ky. 115, 65 S. W. 602, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1393.

"College" and "university."—These terms contrasted and explained see Yale University v. New Haven, 71 Conn. 316, 42 Atl. 87, 43 L. R. A. 490.

The word "school" in an exemption statute has been held to mean any institution of learning, and is not limited to the lower grades of schools to the exclusion of higher institutions like colleges. Omaha Medical College v. Rush, 22 Nebr. 449, 35 N. W. 222. But the term "school-house" as used in the New York statutes applies only to buildings provided for the public common schools. Colored Orphans' Assoc. v. New York, 104 N. Y. 581, 12 N. E. 279; Chegaray v. New York, 13 N. Y. 220 [reversing 2 Duer 521, and overruling Chegaray v. Jenkins, 5 N. Y. 376].

The term "institutions of learning" as used in the Illinois statute does not include private schools which teach only the rudimentary branches commonly taught in public schools, but if the course of instruction includes the higher branches it is not material that it also includes branches ordinarily taught in the public schools. People v. St.

Francis Xavier Female Academy, 233 Ill. 26, 84 N. E. 55.

So also, if the exemption is granted only to "public" schools, colleges, etc., it cannot be extended to an institution conducted entirely for the pecuniary advantage of the proprietor.<sup>41</sup> Nor is such an institution one of "purely public charity" within the meaning of the statutes,<sup>42</sup> the distinction between charity and business, in this connection, being determined by the source from which the institution principally derives its support. If it is chiefly maintained by tuition fees it is not a charity, although it may also derive some revenue from donations or endowment funds,<sup>43</sup> particularly where its income produces a surplus over the cost of maintenance;<sup>44</sup> but if supported mainly by free gifts or income from charitable endowments it is exempt from taxation, although it may also receive tuition fees from those able to pay them.<sup>45</sup>

c. What Are Public Schools and Colleges. The term "public" school, as used in the tax laws, ordinarily means only such schools as are maintained and regulated under the laws of the state, or by the local municipal authorities, as part of the general system of popular education, and does not include such schools as are supported and controlled by private enterprise, although these may be "public" in the sense that they are open to the indefinite public free of charge;<sup>46</sup> but the application of the term "public" is not a question of definition but of legislative intention,<sup>47</sup> and it may apply to schools which are open to the public, although not owned by the public,<sup>48</sup> and notwithstanding some charge for tuition is made.<sup>49</sup> On the other hand, if the exemption is granted to "free" schools, it

But the fact that tuition fees are charged, where such fees are not used for the purposes of private or corporate profit but are appropriated to the maintenance of the institution, does not defeat the right to exemption under a statute exempting the property of educational institutions provided it is "not used for purposes of private or corporate profit or income." *Linton v. is not necessary, to meet this requirement, that the particular school should be controlled by the state, but only that it should be open and free to all children of suitable age.<sup>50</sup>

d. Sectarian Schools. If the statute exempts "property used for school purposes," or "educational institutions" generally, it may be considered broad enough to include parochial and other schools maintained by particular churches or sects exclusively for the benefit of their own people, provided they are not conducted for gain.<sup>51</sup> But such sectarian or denominational schools are not "free public schools" or "institutions of purely public charity,"<sup>52</sup> although a religious denominational school which offers educational advantages to all who may apply, not limiting the admission of pupils to children of members of the denomination, although it may give a preference to such children, and which is supported by voluntary contributions and not conducted for profit, may be exempt as a purely public charity.<sup>53</sup>

e. What Property Exempt — (I) IN GENERAL. The question as to what property of an educational institution is exempt depends largely upon the wording of the statute.<sup>54</sup> Under the statutes as generally framed all the property belonging to a school or college and used directly, immediately, and exclusively for its proper purposes is exempt from taxation,<sup>55</sup> including the school or college buildings,<sup>56</sup> the land on which they stand or which is used in connection with them,<sup>57</sup> and the personal property constituting the educational equipment, such as libraries, apparatus, and necessary furniture.<sup>58</sup>

(II) NATURE OF OWNERSHIP, OCCUPANCY, OR USE. To be entitled to exemption it is ordinarily necessary that the property should be owned by the school or college; it is not enough that it is used for such purposes if owned by a third person.<sup>59</sup> Further, the exemption ordinarily extends only to such prop-

in some cases are broad enough to include property yielding a revenue, where such revenue is applied directly and exclusively to the maintenance of the school or college.<sup>75</sup>

(VIII) TRUST OR ENDOWMENT FUNDS. In most of the states it is held that the exemption from taxation granted to an institution of learning includes not only its real estate and physical equipment, but also funds donated or bequeathed to it, by way of endowment or in trust for its uses, the income from which is entirely devoted to the maintenance of the institution.<sup>76</sup>

Sale of farm products by agricultural college.—A college of agriculture may sell its surplus agricultural products, such as milk, butter, and eggs, without losing its exemption; hence where an agricultural institute maintained a model dairy farm for the purpose of scientific instruction, a large part of the products thereof being consumed within the institute, and the revenue derived from marketing the surplus being devoted to the support of the school as a mere incident, and the state did not show what part of such property constituted a source of revenue as distinguished from that which was devoted solely to educational purposes, it was held that neither the farm nor its products were subject to taxation. *Com. v. and while such societies have been held not to be within the application of certain terms ordinarily used with reference to educational institutions,<sup>78</sup> it has been held that such an association may be a "purely public charity," although it has no particular reference to the poor.<sup>79</sup> In any case where the terms of the law are broad enough to include such an institution, the exemption will apply only to such of its property as is used exclusively, or at least predominantly, for its own special purposes.<sup>80</sup>

g. Libraries and Museums. Free public libraries and museums are usually exempted from taxation, either under a designation specially appropriate to such institutions, or in the character of "institutions of learning" or of "purely public charity."<sup>81</sup> But if the privileges of the institution are restricted to members or stock-holders, it is not public and therefore not exempt.<sup>82</sup> Nor can it claim exemption on any part of its building or other property which is rented out to others and used as a source of profit, but only on so much as is devoted to its own special uses.<sup>83</sup>

3. RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS — a. In General. If the constitution provides generally for the taxation of all property without exception, church property is not exempt;<sup>84</sup> but there are in most jurisdictions constitutional or statutory provisions exempting religious societies and institutions from taxation either generally or with regard to certain property,<sup>85</sup> and except under a statute relating only to incorporated institutions,<sup>86</sup> it is not necessary, in order to be entitled to the exemption, that the religious society should be incorporated.<sup>87</sup> Nor is it requisite that its sole purpose should be the maintenance of public worship in a church; the terms of the statutes are broad enough to include organizations of a benevolent, charitable, or missionary character, falling within the general sense of the term "religious" as distinguished from private and secular institutions.<sup>88</sup> There is some conflict of authority as to whether the property of a camp-meeting association is exempt from taxation.<sup>89</sup>

b. Ownership or Possession of Property. In some states the laws are so framed as to exempt from taxation property which is actually and exclusively used for religious purposes, although the congregation may not own it;<sup>90</sup> but in others the rule is otherwise, and title must be vested in the organized religious society, and it is not exempt if owned by a member of the society individually or by a stranger, although leased to and used by the society.<sup>91</sup>

E. 401 (holding that a camp-meeting association whose lands are not leased or otherwise used for profit is exempt as an institution of "purely public charity").

Food supplies for sale.—A charter provision authorizing a camp-meeting association organized for "religious, moral, charitable, and benevolent purposes" to hold exempt from taxation "for the purposes of said corporation" real and personal property not exceeding a certain value, does not exempt from taxation a stock of groceries and food supplies owned by the association and currently sold on the grounds to all persons desiring to purchase. c. Trust or Endowment Funds. Funds or property donated or bequeathed to a religious society, and held in trust for it or by way of endowment, the income being devoted exclusively to the religious uses of the society, is generally held entitled to share in the exemption from taxation of the other property of the society,<sup>92</sup> although the rule is otherwise under some statutes.<sup>93</sup>

d. What Property Exempt—(i) IN GENERAL. An exemption from taxation granted to religious societies will ordinarily include the houses or buildings exclusively devoted to religious purposes, together with so much land as is appurtenant thereto and reasonably necessary to their use.<sup>94</sup> But land owned by such a society, separate and apart from the premises on which its church stands, and not necessary or incidental to the use of the church as such, and not used by the society for any of its strictly religious purposes, is not exempt.<sup>95</sup> This last rule has been applied so strictly in some cases as to exclude from the exemption land purchased by the society for the express purpose of building a church on it, and intended so to be used when it becomes necessary,<sup>96</sup> or even to exclude church buildings in process of erection and the land on which they are being built.<sup>97</sup>

A janitor's residence, built on the church lot but separated from the church building, is not exempt. Pittsburg v. Pittsburg Third Presb. Church, 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 302.

"Religious or educational purposes."—Under a statute exempting property "used exclusively for religious or educational purposes" one use need not be entirely exclusive of the other, and a building for religious purposes is exempt from taxation, although it is also used for educational purposes, so long as such use is merely incidental or occasional or if habitual is merely permissive and does not interfere with the use for religious purposes. When a church building is abandoned and dismantled, it is no longer exempt.<sup>93</sup> As to personal property, it is held that a statute exempting the "equipment" of religious or charitable institutions will include sacramental vessels used in a church.<sup>99</sup>

(II) PLACE OF PUBLIC WORSHIP. The phrase "place of public worship," in the statutes exempting church property, is construed as meaning a house or building which is actually and exclusively used for the holding of religious services,<sup>1</sup> or one which is principally so used, where any other uses to which it may be put are either related to the religious or charitable work of the congregation or else are only incidental and occasional and not a source of revenue.<sup>2</sup> A temporary interruption in the use of a church building as a place of public worship will not affect its exemption from taxation,<sup>3</sup> but the rule is otherwise if its use for religious purposes is entirely discontinued or abandoned.<sup>4</sup>

(III) RECTORY OR PARSONAGE. It is well settled that a rectory or parsonage, built and owned by a religious society, is not exempt from taxation as a "place of public worship," although such rectory or parsonage is used for no other purpose than as a residence for the priest or minister, who occupies it rent free,<sup>5</sup>

Necessity for occupancy by minister.—If the statute merely exempts all "parsonages," a parsonage does not lose its character as such because it is not occupied by the pastor but is rented and the rents applied to the payment of his salary and the rent of a different residence (St. Philip's Parish Protestant Episcopal Church v. Prioleau, 63 S. C. 70, 40

religious purposes, another part of the same building, which is used as a source of revenue, may be taxed;<sup>14</sup> but a church building which is regularly and statedly occupied for purposes of religious worship does not become liable to taxation because it is occasionally rented for entertainments or political conventions.<sup>15</sup>

e. Property of Young Men's Christian Association. A young men's christian association has been held to be entitled to exemption both as a charitable institution and also on the ground that its building is a place used for religious worship;<sup>16</sup> but it is ordinarily held that whether it be classed as a religious or as a charitable institution,<sup>17</sup> it cannot claim exemption from taxation on its building as a "house" or "place" of public worship, merely because religious services are conducted in one room thereof, especially if other rooms are leased to tenants;<sup>18</sup> and generally that any part of a building or other property owned by this association which is leased for hire or otherwise used as a source of profit is liable to taxation.<sup>19</sup>

f. ## V. PLACE OF TAXATION.

A. General Principles — 1. TAXING DISTRICTS. A taxing district is the district throughout which a particular tax or assessment is ratably apportioned and levied upon the inhabitants.<sup>31</sup> The lines of such districts are usually, but not necessarily, coincident with those of the major municipal divisions of a state, such as counties, parishes, cities, or towns,<sup>32</sup> and in the case of an unorganized tery has been bought as an investment for a church, and whatever revenues are derived from it are for the use of the church, and may be appropriated to any purpose which it may choose, the cemetery is not exempt.

county, it is usually considered as within the taxing district represented by the county to which it is attached for judicial purposes.<sup>33</sup> The creation and determination of the taxing districts of the state is a matter within the discretion of the legislature, with which the courts will not interfere;<sup>34</sup> and when such a district is once lawfully established, it will retain its character and boundaries until divided or modified in some manner authorized by law.<sup>35</sup>

2. LEGISLATIVE POWER TO FIX SITUS OF PROPERTY. The legislature has power to fix the situs of personal property for purposes of taxation, placing it either at the owner's domicile or where the property itself is situated,<sup>36</sup> and also to invest executive officers with authority to determine the place for the listing of personal property as between different counties or different places in the same county.<sup>37</sup>

permanent home, to which he always has the intention of returning when absent from it, although he may take up a temporary or transient residence elsewhere.<sup>41</sup> The residence of an infant is at the residence of the parents or surviving parent,<sup>42</sup> and in the case of insane persons this rule applies after they have attained their majority.<sup>43</sup>

3. PERSONS HAVING TWO RESIDENCES. If the taxpayer has two residences in different taxing districts or in different states, as, a summer and a winter home, or two homes kept open the year round, he is taxable at that place which was originally his domicile, provided the opening of the other home has not involved an abandonment of the original domicile and the acquisition of a new one,<sup>44</sup> or at that place which he regards and claims as his domicile, as shown by his keeping the main part of his establishment there, holding office, voting, causing his prop-

Domicile and residence synonymous in tax laws.—Where the statute provides for the taxation of property of persons "residing" within the state, the word has reference to fixed and permanent domicile, and not to temporary or transient residence. Culbertson v. Floyd County, 52 Ind. 361. But in New York it is held that a person "resides" for the purpose of taxation in a city where he has lived for nearly two years, having employment there part of the time, although he has a domicile in another state where he votes and pays taxes, and to which he intends to return. Austen v. Crilly, 13 N. Y. App. Div. 247, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 1097. In New Jersey the residence required to make one liable to a personal tax in a particular township or ward is precisely the same in kind as that which will entitle him to vote there. Sharp v. Casper, 36 N. J. L. 367. But the rule is otherwise in New York. See Bell v. Pierce, 51 N. Y. 12.

Domicile and residence distinguished.—There is a wide difference between domicile and mere residence. While they are usually at the same place, they may be at different places. Domicile is the established, fixed, permanent, ordinary dwelling-place of a party, as distinguished from his temporary or transient, although actual, place of residence. One is his legal residence as distinguished from his temporary place of abode; in other words, one is his home, as distinguished from the places to which business or pleasure may temporarily call him. *Salem v. An unmarried man who owns in one taxing district a farm on which is a house in which he keeps a room and which he considers his home and who votes in this district is taxable in this district, although he sleeps at night at the residence of his parents in a different taxing district, owing solely to their feebleness and need of assistance. *State v. Residence at time of assessment.—Under a statute providing that every person shall be assessed in the municipality in which he resides at the time of the assessment, the assessment is to be made at the place where the person actually resides at the time, although he has a residence at another place and votes

erty to be assessed for taxes there, and other such indications.<sup>45</sup> In the absence of any other sufficient test, it is considered that his domicile is at the place where he spends the greater part of the year,<sup>46</sup> or, according to the statute in New York, at the place where his principal business is transacted.<sup>47</sup>

4. RESIDENCE SITUATED PARTLY IN TWO JURISDICTIONS. Where a dwelling-house is divided by the boundary line between two taxing districts, the owner is taxable in that district in which stands the most necessary part of the house or the living rooms of the family.<sup>48</sup>

5. CHANGE OR ABANDONMENT OF DOMICILE — a. In General. A taxpayer may change his domicile by abandoning his present home and removing to another and settling himself there permanently with no intention of returning to the former abode, and so cease to be taxable at the place of his former residence;<sup>49</sup> but a merely simulated removal from one place to another, which is no more than a device to evade or escape taxation, will not have this effect;<sup>50</sup> and his liability for a tax will not be abated by his removal to another place after the day when he is notified to return his list of taxable property or after it is assessed to him.<sup>51</sup> Since, for the purpose of taxation, one must have a residence or domicile somewhere, he cannot abandon a domicile once acquired until he has actually acquired another;<sup>52</sup> and a domicile once established will be presumed to continue where it has been until a change is affirmatively shown.<sup>53</sup>

b. Intent. In determining the question of a change of domicile, the intention of the party with reference to the permanence of his residence in the new place is important. If he means it to be a merely temporary residence, followed by a return to his former home, there is no legal change of domicile; otherwise if he intends to establish himself permanently in the new place and not to return to the former.<sup>54</sup> But a change of domicile cannot legally be effected by intention alone without actual removal;<sup>55</sup> and on the other hand, if there is an actual and permanent removal, a change of domicile is effected, notwithstanding the party's desire and intention to retain a legal residence at his former place of abode.<sup>56</sup>

c. Evidence. The burden of proving a taxpayer's legal residence is on the state or local authorities seeking to collect a tax from him,<sup>57</sup> except where met by the presumption that a domicile once established continues until its abandonment is affirmatively shown.<sup>58</sup> On this question evidence may be admissible of the party's declarations and statements as to where he considers his legal home to be,<sup>59</sup> particularly where he has given formal notice to the assessing officers of a change of domicile.<sup>60</sup> It may also be shown that he has returned property for assessment in a given place;<sup>61</sup> but the fact that his name is included in the lists of the assessors of a particular town is not conclusive evidence,<sup>62</sup> although the omission or removal of his name from such lists is competent evidence against his claim that he continues a resident of that place.<sup>63</sup> The location of one's domicile, in case of dispute, is a question of fact for the jury.<sup>64</sup>

C. Nature and Location of Property—1. REAL PROPERTY—a. In General. Real property and interests therein, including incorporeal hereditaments, should be taxed only in the city, county, or other taxing district where actually situated; and an assessment of it in another jurisdiction is absolutely void, and so are all proceedings founded thereon.<sup>65</sup>

Land in More Than One Taxing District. In the absence of statutory directions to the contrary, where a single tract of land or farm lies partly within two or more taxing districts, each district is entitled to tax that portion within its own limits, on a proportional valuation;<sup>66</sup> but in order to prevent certain mischiefs incident to the assessment of an entire property in different parcels and by different sets of assessors, this rule has in some jurisdictions been changed by statute,<sup>67</sup> and in several states the statutes now meet this case by providing that the whole lot or farm shall be assessable in that district where the owner or occupant resides or where the dwelling-house or "mansion house" is situated.<sup>68</sup>

App. Div. 1, 98 N. Y. Suppl. 1080, holding that a tract of land containing more than thirty thousand acres, somewhat unevenly divided between two towns, the whole tract being mountainous and woody and covered with lakes, and containing a number of buildings, some of which were in each town, and used for residences, hunting lodges, servants' residences, and in the manufacture on a large scale of maple sugar and lumber, is not a "farm or lot" within the meaning of the statute.

Division by township and borough lines.—Under the Pennsylvania statutes where lands are situated partly in a township and partly in a borough, the portion lying within the borough is properly assessable there, although the mansion house is in the township. Com. v. Wyoming County, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 418. And conversely where a farm is divided by a township and borough line and the mansion house is in the borough, the land in the township is to be assessed in the township and the land in the borough assessed in the

2. PERSONAL PROPERTY — a. In General. As a general rule, personal property, for the purpose of taxation, has its situs at the place of its owner's domicile, and cannot legally be assessed in any other place than where he resides, although the property itself may be elsewhere.<sup>69</sup> But it is competent for the legislature to assign to tangible personal property a situs of its own, independent of the place of the owner's domicile; and accordingly statutes in several states provide that such property shall be assessed for taxation at the place where it is physically present.<sup>70</sup>

b. Domestic Animals. According to the rule now generally prevailing, cattle, horses, and other domestic animals are assessable for taxation at the place where they are kept or herded during the greater portion of the year or usually, irrespective of the owner's residence;<sup>71</sup> but animals are not subject to taxation in a borough, whether the land outside of the borough lies in one or several townships. Follett v. Butler County, 219 Pa. St. 509, 69 Atl. 76. Where the dividing line between the city and township passes through the house, and the owner has filed a notice that he chose the township as his residence, the city cannot tax the house and lot. Lancaster v. Bare, 8 Pa. Dist. 472.

Manufacturing plant.—A statute of Georgia declares that manufacturing plants divided by county lines shall be returned for taxation in the county where the main buildings containing machinery or most of such buildings are located. d. Logs and Timber. Logs and timber are generally assessable for taxation at the place where found, rather than at the owner's residence;<sup>78</sup> and sawed lumber, piled or stored and kept for sale, is taxable where found, under the designation of "merchants' goods."<sup>79</sup> But in some states logs which are destined for a particular mill, and intended to be sawed there, are taxable in the district where the mill is situated;<sup>80</sup> and in Michigan, by statute, all forest products are assessable in the township where they are on the second Monday of April, except that when they are in transit to some place within the state they shall be assessed at such place, it being assumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that their destination is the sorting grounds of the booming company or driving agents nearest the mouth of the stream.<sup>81</sup>

f. Credits and Securities. Property of an intangible nature, such as credits, bills receivable, bank deposits, bonds, promissory notes, mortgage loans, judgments, and corporate stock, has no situs of its own for the purpose of taxation, and is therefore assessable only at the place of its owner's domicile.<sup>84</sup> This rule is not affected by the fact that the note or other evidence of the debt may be deposited elsewhere,<sup>85</sup> or that the debt is secured by a mortgage on property situated in another county or taxing district,<sup>86</sup> or that the debt has been reduced to judgment at the domicile of the debtor.<sup>87</sup>

A judgment foreclosing a mortgage is not taxable in the county where the mortgaged land lies, if the mortgagee lives in another. People v. Eastman, 25 Cal. 601.

<sup>88</sup> Voght v. Ayer, 104 Ill. 583; Cook v. Port Fulton, 106 Ind. 170, 6 N. E. 321 [distinguishing Eversole v. Cook, 92 Ind. 222, decided under a prior statute]; Woodsum Steamboat Co. v. Sunapee, 74 N. H. 495, 69 Atl. 577, holding that under the New Hampshire statute providing for the taxation of boats, etc., at the owner's place of residence, the residence of a steamboat company operating boats on a lake between three towns is at the town where most of the business is done and from which the boats start in the morning and to which they return at night, and where they are kept when not in use.

Under the Illinois statute requiring vessels to be assessed where they "may belong, or be enrolled, registered or licensed, or kept when not enrolled, registered or licensed," it has been held that if a vessel is registered and its business transacted in one town it should be assessed there and not in a utes relating to the taxation of other personal property,<sup>89</sup> and the general principles governing the situs of property of this character.<sup>90</sup> Ordinarily as between different taxing districts in the same state the particular place where the vessel may be registered or enrolled is not material,<sup>91</sup> the situs of the vessel, although registered elsewhere,<sup>92</sup> being at the domicile of the owner,<sup>93</sup> unless it has acquired an actual situs elsewhere.<sup>94</sup> So a vessel is not subject to municipal taxation because registered or enrolled in a particular city if the owner resides outside of the city,<sup>95</sup> or the vessel has acquired an actual situs elsewhere,<sup>96</sup> nor is a vessel which is owned and enrolled in a particular county or taxing district subject to taxation in a different taxing district where it may happen to be temporarily in the course of its business.<sup>97</sup>

D. Ownership or Possession of Property — 1. PROPERTY HELD IN TRUST. Trust funds or other personal property held in trust are usually assessable to the trustee at his place of residence, as he is regarded as holding the legal title, and this fixes the situs of the property.<sup>98</sup> But in some states the laws provide different town where the owner resides (Voght v. Ayer, 104 Ill. 583); and that a vessel which, when not engaged in navigation, is permanently located and kept in a particular town where the owner resides, is subject to taxation in such town although registered in a different town (Halstead v. Adams, 108 Ill. 609).

In Indiana the act of 1881 changes the rule prescribed by the act of 1872, and provides that vessels of persons, companies, or corporations shall be listed "where such owner, or one of the members of such company, resides, or where such corporation transacts business," and under this statute a vessel must be listed at the residence of the owner regardless of its actual situation. Cook v. Port Fulton, 106 Ind. 170, 6 N. E. 321.

89. Stinson v. Boston, 125 Mass. 348 (holding that under a statute requiring personal property to be "assessed to the owner in the city or town where he is an inhabitant," a vessel owned by several persons jointly cannot be assessed by a city for taxation to the owners jointly where only a part of them reside within the city); Wheaton v. Mickel, 63 N. J. L. 525, 42 Atl. 843 (holding that the statutory provision requiring visible personal estate to be assessed in the township, ward, or taxing district where it is found, applies only to property situated within the state, and that if a vessel is not within the state its assessment is governed by the provision requiring "other personal estate" to be assessed where the owner resides); Pelton v. Northern Transp. Co., 37 Ohio St. 450 (holding that the taxation of vessels is governed by the general statutory provisions as to taxation of personal property not otherwise especially provided for, and that under such provisions if the home port of a vessel and the residence of the owner are in the same county, the vessel is to be taxed in the township or town of the owner's domicile); *Pomeroy Salt Co. v. In Missouri the court in a recent case, while expressly avoiding a decision as to whether the property of a ward should be taxed at the residence of the ward or that of the guardian, held that where the guardian and ward resided in different school-districts, the fact that the ward had resided in a third district prior to the death of his parents did not make his property taxable in that district. State v. Hamilton, 202 Mo. 377, 100 S. W. 609. It is also held under a statute requiring personal property to be assessed "in the county in which such owner resides," that if a guardian is appointed in one county and later both he and the ward remove to another county, the property of the ward is taxable in the latter county, notwithstanding the probate court of the first county still retains jurisdiction over it until final settlement of the estate. *State v. PROPERTY OF DECEDENT'S ESTATE.<sup>9</sup> Personal property belonging to the estate of a decedent is assessable to the executor or administrator, and according to the general rule it is to be taxed at the place of domicile of such personal representative,<sup>10</sup> although in some states such property is taxable at the place where the decedent was domiciled at the time of his death.<sup>11</sup> But after particular property has been distributed or paid over to those entitled, it is taxable to them personally and at their respective places of residence.<sup>12</sup>

4. Reason of rule.—Personal property which is passing through a county for the purpose of finding a market elsewhere, or is destined for some other county in the state, is not property in the county through which it is passing, for the purpose of taxation. To constitute it property for that purpose in any particular county, it must be in such a situation as to make it a part of the wealth of that county; it must belong in it, or be incorporated with the other property of the county. Conley v. Chedic, 7 Nev. 336.

What constitutes transit.—In order that property within a county may be regarded as in transit, so as to be exempt from taxation therein, there must be at least an intention and fixed purpose to remove it within a reasonable time; and an intention to remove it at some future time, depending upon certain contingencies, which may or may not happen, is insufficient. *State Trust Co. v. 2. SITUS OF PROPERTY GENERALLY. Following the rules just stated, the situs of all intangible personal property of a corporation, for purposes of taxation, is at its legal residence or principal place of business,<sup>25</sup> and the same applies to its franchises,<sup>26</sup> and according to the decisions in some states to its tangible and

Indefinite location.—If the statute requires the certificate of incorporation to state the place of the principal business office and the statement is that it shall be at N "or at such other place as the stockholders of the company might determine," the latter provision will be held to be surplusage and the residence of the corporation to be designated as N. *People v. visible personal property also,<sup>27</sup> although in others property of the latter description is regarded as having a situs of its own and is taxable where found.<sup>28</sup> The appointment of a receiver for a corporation does not change the situs of its property for taxation, no matter where the receiver may reside.<sup>29</sup>

3. CAPITAL AND STOCK.<sup>30</sup> The capital stock of a corporation is assessable to the corporation itself at its principal place of business.<sup>31</sup> But shares of such stock, considered as the property of their individual holders, are taxable to such holders at their respective places of residence,<sup>32</sup> in the absence of a statute to the contrary; but the situs of shares of corporate stock for purposes of taxation may properly be fixed by statute at the place where the corporation is domiciled.<sup>33</sup>

4. BANKING INSTITUTIONS — a. In General. Real estate and other tangible property of a banking institution is taxable where situated.<sup>34</sup> But shares of stock in a bank are assessable only to the owner at his place of residence,<sup>35</sup> unless by statute they are made taxable where the bank is located.<sup>36</sup> As to money on deposit in a bank, there is a conflict of authority as to whether it should be taxed to the bank as a part of its assets or to the depositor as a debt due to him.<sup>37</sup> In the former case it will be assessable where the bank is located; in the latter, at the domicile of the depositor.<sup>38</sup>

b. National Bank Shares.<sup>39</sup> The federal statute provided that the shares of national banks should be assessed "at the place where said bank is located, and not elsewhere,"<sup>40</sup> and a conflict of authority having arisen as to whether this provision applied so as to define and limit the place of taxation as between different counties or taxing districts of the same state,<sup>41</sup> or was merely intended to define the state authority which was allowed to impose the tax without affecting the place of assessment within the state,<sup>42</sup> an explanatory statute was enacted declaring the meaning of the "place where" a bank was located to be the "state in which" it was located.<sup>43</sup> Under this statute, except in the case of shares of non-resident owners which must be assessed in the city or town where the bank is located,<sup>44</sup> the legislature is free to determine the place of local taxation,<sup>45</sup> and may provide for the assessment of the shares of resident owners either at the place where the bank is located, regardless of the owner's residence,<sup>46</sup> or at the place where the owner resides.<sup>47</sup> In the absence of any provision to the contrary, however, such shares have their situs at the residence of the owner,<sup>48</sup> and are not subject to taxation where the bank is located if the owner resides in a different taxing district.<sup>49</sup>

5. RAILROAD COMPANIES — a. In General. Real and personal property of a railroad may be assessed for local taxation, if the legislature so directs, by the several counties or other municipalities in which such property is actually located;<sup>50</sup> or the legislature may treat the railroad with all its property as an entirety and give it a general situs for purposes of taxation at its principal office,<sup>51</sup> or may cause the capital or property to be assessed as a whole by a state board, and distribute the total valuation among the several counties through which the road runs in proportion to the mileage of main line within each.<sup>52</sup>

Choses in action of a railroad company, coming into existence in the corporation's different divisions of the territory through which it runs, and going into a general fund to be applied to dividends or general expenses, without regard to the division where such expenses are incurred, have their situs for the purpose of taxation at the corporate domicile. b. Right of Way, Tracks, and Other Realty. In the ordinary distribution of railroad taxation between the state and the municipalities, the former sometimes reserves the right to tax the real property of the road as a whole, or to have it assessed as a whole for state taxes by a state board;<sup>53</sup> but the more usual arrangement is for the state to tax capital stock and franchises, leaving to the local authorities the right to tax the physical property of the road within their respective limits, such as road-bed, tracks, bridges, shops, and other improvements.<sup>54</sup>

c. Rolling-Stock and Equipment Rolling-stock and other such equipment of a railroad is sometimes apportioned among the several counties through which the road passes, for the purpose of local taxation, in proportion to the mileage of the road in each county.<sup>55</sup> But in the absence of a statute authorizing such a distribution, property of this kind is taxable only at the domicile of the corporation, that is, its head office or principal place of business.<sup>56</sup>

7. FOREIGN CORPORATIONS. Where a foreign corporation does business within the state, the place for the taxation of its property within the state is the place where its principal or head office within the state is located, if the statute so directs;<sup>58</sup> but otherwise, where the property is found.<sup>59</sup> But the fact that such a corporation maintains a business office in the state does not make it an "inhabitant" of the state, nor fix its legal residence there, in the sense of establishing a domicile which may draw to it the entire personal property of the corporation for the purpose of taxation.<sup>60</sup>

VI. LEVY AND ASSESSMENT.<sup>1</sup>

A. Levy and Apportionment<sup>2</sup> — 1. NATURE OF LEVY. While the word "levy" as applied to taxation has been given a variety of meanings,<sup>3</sup> in its proper sense, as applied to the determination of the amount or rate to be charged, it is the formal and official action of a legislative body invested with the power of taxation — whether national, state, or local — whereby it determines and declares that a tax of a certain amount, or of a certain percentage on value, shall be imposed personal property. Hudson River Bridge Co. v. Patterson, 74 N. Y. 365.

Water companies.—Where a water company is chartered to supply a certain county and a city therein with water, the mere fact that the pipes of the company pass through the adjoining county does not make the company's franchise taxable there. Spring Valley Water Works v. Barber, 99 Cal. 36, 33 Pac. 735, 21 L. R. A. 416. And see Riverton, etc., Water Co. v. Haig, 58 N. J. L. 295, 33 Atl. 215. Settles*, 37 Mont. 237, 95 Pac. 838.

The property of a manufacturing corporation is taxable to the corporation in the town where the property is situated. Smith v. Burley, 9 N. H. 423.

Telephone companies.—Under the New Hampshire statutes real estate owned by a telephone company and used in its ordinary business is taxable by the state board of equalization and not by the town in which it is situated. New England Tel., etc., Co. v. Manchester, 72 N. H. 166, 55 Atl. 188.

Consolidation with domestic corporation.—A corporation formed by the consolidation of a domestic and a foreign corporation is to be deemed a domestic corporation for the purpose of the taxation of its property subject to taxation as of its domicile. Keokuk, etc., Bridge Co. v. People, 161 Ill. 132, 43 N. E. 691.

Among the meanings given the word "levy" are: "To impose or assess;" "to impose, assess and collect under authority of law;" "to raise or collect by assessment;" "to charge a sum of money already ascertained against a person or property subject to the charge;" "to determine by vote the amount of tax to be raised;" "to fix the rate at which property is to be taxed." Gray v. Peoria Bd. of School Inspectors, 231 Ill. 63, 83 N. E. 95.

Distinctions.—The term "levy" is sometimes used for the purpose of conferring all the powers incident to the creation and collection of a tax; while again it is only intended to confer administrative powers in the collection of the tax without reference to its creation. Dickson v. Burekmyer, 67 S. C. 526, 46 S. E. 343. But the term "levy," in the sense of voting a tax, or determining in gross how much shall be raised by a particular class or general property, must not be confused with the term "levy" as it is used in the sense of merely performing the administrative duty of laying, on a legitimate basis, taxes previously levied, appropriated, or voted by the legislature. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. State, 128 Wis. 553, 108 N. W. 557.

on persons and property subject thereto.<sup>4</sup> It is not a judicial power,<sup>5</sup> but is a legislative function to be exercised only by the state or some inferior political division to which the state has delegated the power;<sup>6</sup> and as a legislative function it cannot be delegated to administrative officers,<sup>7</sup> although the further proceedings, such as in extending, assessing, and collecting the taxes, are administrative.<sup>8</sup>

2. POWER AND AUTHORITY OF LEGISLATURE — a. In General. The power of a state legislature to levy taxes is general and unlimited, in respect to amount and to the persons or property subject, except in so far as it is restrained by constitutional provisions,<sup>9</sup> or territorially limited by the boundaries of the state,<sup>10</sup> or by the vesting in local authorities of the exclusive right to levy taxes for their proper local purposes.<sup>11</sup> And although the constitutions sometimes limit the power of the legislature in this respect by requiring the levy of a tax to be based on previous estimates of the probable revenue and the estimated expenses of the state,<sup>12</sup> or by requiring tax levies to be periodically made,<sup>13</sup> yet as a general rule the legislature is left to its own judgment and discretion in regard to the manner in which this power shall be exercised.<sup>14</sup>

Levy of poll or capitation tax.—The assessment of half a poll tax on an individual is illegal. Southampton v. Easthampton, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 380. Under a statutory provision (Mass. Rev. St. c. 27), that there shall be assessed upon polls, as nearly as the same can be conveniently done, one-sixth part of the whole sum to be raised, provided the whole poll tax assessed in any one year shall not exceed one dollar and fifty cents upon any individual, one-sixth of the state tax must be assessed on the polls, although if added to the town and county tax it would bring the poll tax on each individual above one dollar and fifty cents. Goodrich v. Lunenburg, 9 Gray (Mass.) 38. In assessing taxes for county and township purposes and for city purposes, at the same time, in a city, a separate poll tax must be assessed

b. Apportionment to Municipalities. The apportionment of taxes among the taxable persons of the state, or of a particular section or territorial division thereof, is purely a legislative function,<sup>15</sup> and a general power to tax implies a power to apportion the tax in such manner as the legislature shall see fit,<sup>16</sup> except in so far as it is restrained by constitutional provisions.<sup>17</sup> The ordinary state taxes are generally apportioned among the several counties or other municipalities in proportion to the value of the taxable property therein as determined by the state board of equalization;<sup>18</sup> but this involves a proper adjustment of the burdens of taxation when a new county or municipality is formed out of an old one.<sup>19</sup> A state board, in assessing the entire value of the capital or franchises of a corporation, should apportion that value, for the purpose of taxation, among the various counties or taxing districts in which the business of the corporation is exercised.<sup>20</sup>

3. POWERS OF COUNTIES AND OTHER LOCAL AUTHORITIES <sup>21</sup> — a. In General. The local authorities of counties and other municipalities are generally invested by law with power to levy such taxes as are necessary for their proper expenses,<sup>22</sup> and such a in the city taxes, and it is an error to assess only one poll tax for all of such purposes which cannot be corrected by the court, but for which it must set aside the whole assessment. Fish v. Branin, 23 N. J. L. 484.

Taxation for local improvements.—Where revenues are to be raised for the construction of local improvements, such as are designed to benefit in a special and peculiar manner some one portion of the state or municipality, a new and special taxing district is created, confined to the limits within which property receives the peculiar benefit of the improvement, and the apportionment is made according to value or some other just standard within this district. *Gordon v. W. 483 (holding that after the formation of a new county from parts taken from old counties the auditor-general should separate the equalized valuation of the property of such counties and apportion the taxes in any one of the old counties in proportion to the valuation of the property therein, after deducting therefrom the valuation of the property in the portion taken therefrom to form the new county); Ontona- gon County v. Gogebic County, 74 Mich. 721, 42 N. W. 170 (holding that where a county is divided and a new one created from a portion of its territory, the auditor-general should apportion the state tax chargeable to the original county prior to such division between it and the new county upon the basis of the assessed value of the land in each for the year in which the last state equalization was made prior to such division).

The setting off of a part of one town by the legislature to another, with a proviso that the part so set off shall pay its proportion of certain debts and liabilities of the town from which it is separated, to be assessed and collected in the same manner and by the same persons as though the legislature had not made such separation, does not authorize the assessment and collection of a separate tax on that section for the payment of its proportion. *Winslow v. b. Purposes of Taxation — (i) IN GENERAL. The requirement that all taxes, to be valid, must be levied for a public purpose,<sup>28</sup> applies to taxes which a county or other municipal corporation is authorized to levy.<sup>29</sup> The particular purpose for which such taxes may be levied depends upon the terms of the statute granting the power,<sup>30</sup> such as for the purpose of paying lawfully contracted debts and

Levy in newly organized county.—The acceptance by the controller of land rendered for taxation by a non-resident in an unorganized county, as provided under Tex. Const. art. 8, §§ 11, 12, does not prevent the county upon its subsequent organization from levying and collecting taxes, where the same have not been actually paid to the controller, and the organization is effected before June 1 of that year. Magnolia Cattle, etc., Co. v. Ann. 151, holding that the power delegated to police juries to levy tax is for parochial uses, and the special power to levy a uniform per centum on every species of property, trade, or profession on which the state assesses a tax, is not unconstitutional, although the constitution is silent on the subject. And see cases cited supra, note 22.

Levy without consent of taxpayers or their representatives.—A county levy imposed by the justices of the county courts, who are not elected but appointed, is not contrary to a constitutional declaration that men "cannot be taxed . . . without their own consent or that of their representatives." In re County Levy, 5 Call (Va.) 139.

(II) AID TO RAILROADS. Aiding in the construction of a railroad through a county or other municipal corporation is a public purpose with reference to that county or municipality, so as to justify local taxation to raise money to pay a county or municipal subscription to the stock or bonds of the railroad company.<sup>34</sup> As a general rule, however, the railroad itself cannot be taxed by the county or municipality for this purpose;<sup>35</sup> but where the franchises of a railroad company have been purchased by a new company the property and improvements of the new company in the county, except such as it acquires by its purchase from the old company, are subject to taxation for the payment of its part of a county subscription to aid in the construction of the old road.<sup>36</sup>

c. Rate or Amount. The state constitution or statutes usually limit the taxing power of counties or other municipalities for ordinary county or municipal purposes, to the raising, in any one year, of a specified sum or of a certain percentage of the value of the taxable property;<sup>37</sup> and where taxes are levied to the prescribed limit the power is exhausted, and any taxes levied in excess thereof are illegal and void.<sup>38</sup> But in addition to the levy of taxes for general county or municipal purposes, provision is usually made either by general or special laws, for extra levies, likewise limited, for school,<sup>39</sup> and poor taxes,<sup>40</sup> and for other special purposes not included in the ordinary county or municipal expenses,<sup>41</sup> such as the payment of the bonded or other debt of the county or municipality, or interest thereon,<sup>42</sup>

or the satisfaction of judgments which have been recovered against it.<sup>43</sup> Where it is left to the citizens to vote the amount of the taxes to be levied, this also imposes a strict limitation on the power of the assessing and collecting officers, and they can add nothing whatever to the amount voted.<sup>44</sup> Where the amount to be raised is by law committed to the discretion of the local authorities and they have lawfully exercised such discretion, commissioners of taxation who have authority to act only in case the local authorities fail to do so, have no power to change the amount so ordered;<sup>45</sup> nor, in the absence of an abuse of such discretion, can a court of equity supervise the action of such authorities.<sup>46</sup>

4. MAKING OF LEVY BY LOCAL AUTHORITIES — a. Necessity, Duty, and Authority to Make Levy.<sup>47</sup> No county or other local tax is valid unless it is duly levied by the proper local authorities,<sup>48</sup> except where the levy is made directly by the legislature, in which case the concurrent action of the local authorities is not necessary.<sup>49</sup> The action of the local authorities in this particular is not generally discretionary, but is an imperative duty,<sup>50</sup> and, when performed by a board, must be performed by at least a majority of the board acting together as such,<sup>51</sup> or by the prescribed number or majority,<sup>52</sup> and must be concurred in by such boards or authorities as the statute directs.<sup>53</sup>

b. Apportionment. Where the statute requires certain county authorities to apportion the state and county taxes among the several townships or other minor municipal divisions, according to the value of taxable property therein, it is essential to the validity of the taxes that the apportionment should at least substantially comply with the requirements of the statute,<sup>54</sup> as that it must not unreasonably exceed the amount to be raised by taxation;<sup>55</sup> although the apportionment will not be invalidated by mere clerical errors,<sup>56</sup> unless they have the effect to increase the tax to be borne by certain parcels of land beyond their just proportion.<sup>57</sup> If the county authorities improperly refuse to apportion the taxes they may be compelled to do so by mandamus.<sup>58</sup>

5. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF LEVY — a. In General. Although it has been held that no tax can be sustained as valid unless it is levied in accordance with the letter of the statute,<sup>59</sup> as a general rule the forms, methods, and various steps which the statute requires to be performed before the owners of property are properly chargeable with the tax, such as the filing of a petition for a levy,<sup>60</sup> an order for the submission of the question to popular vote,<sup>61</sup> the making of a previous estimate of the necessary or probable expenses of the municipality,<sup>62</sup> and notice to taxpayers of the meeting of the board which is to levy the tax<sup>63</sup> are conditions precedent to the validity of the tax and must be at least substantially followed in all material particulars;<sup>64</sup> and a failure substantially to comply with the stat-

Virginia.—Gilkeson v. Frederick County Justices, 13 Gratt. 577.

Mode of ordering levy.—Where an order of the board of supervisors showed that the committee on county taxes reported that they had examined the accounts of the county and recommended that a tax of a certain amount for all purposes be levied for the year on all the taxable property of the county, and that upon motion the report was adopted by the board, it is in effect an order for the levy of such a tax. Mix v. People, 72 Ill. 241.

Disregard of express directions.—The positive requirements of the statute in regard to

utory requirements is a fatal omission invalidating the tax,<sup>65</sup> although a formal levy is not required, and mere irregularities or informalities will not invalidate the tax.<sup>66</sup> If the statutory provisions relating to a levy have for their object the protection of the taxpayer against spoliation or excessive taxation, they are mandatory and must be followed;<sup>67</sup> but if the requirements prescribed by the statute are designed for the information of assessors and other officers, and intended to promote despatch, method, system, and uniformity in the mode of proceeding, they are merely directory, and a failure to comply with such requirements does not invalidate the levy;<sup>68</sup> and this is also true of clerical and ministerial duties, the observance or non-observance of which do not injuriously affect the taxpayer.<sup>69</sup>

b. Statement of Purpose and Amount of Tax. The failure of a tax levy to state distinctly, as required by statute, the amount of the tax<sup>70</sup> and the purpose for which it is levied<sup>71</sup> invalidates the tax, except where the statute itself defines such purpose.<sup>72</sup> But a substantial compliance with such requirements is sufficient, and it is enough if reasonable certainty and particularity is used in setting forth the purpose of the tax,<sup>73</sup> or the amount thereof;<sup>74</sup> and it is lawful to levy a tax the levy of taxes cannot be treated as obsolete merely because they have been disregarded in practice. Kitchen v. Smith, 101 Pa. St. 452.

Sufficiency of official action to constitute levy.—Where a committee appointed by the board of supervisors make a report recommending the levy of a specified tax, and the report is adopted by the board, it is a sufficient levy. West v. Whitaker, 37 Iowa 598. And it is not necessary, to make a legal levy, that there should be an appropriation of the money to be raised by the tax to the specific object for which it is levied. *State v. of a certain per cent or amount in gross, if the specific purposes to which certain percentages are to be applied are defined in detail.<sup>75</sup>

c. Certificate as to Rate or Amount. Where the statute requires certain authorities of the towns or other municipal divisions to make and file with certain officers a certificate of the amount which they require to be raised by taxation, it is essential that there shall be a compliance with such requirement in every substantial particular before the tax can be lawfully levied.<sup>76</sup> But a substantial performance of such requirement is ordinarily sufficient, and the tax will not be invalidated by mere irregularities or informalities in the certificate,<sup>77</sup> particularly where there is a statutory provision curing merely formal defects and irregularities not affecting the substantial justice of the tax.<sup>78</sup> It has been held that a levy cannot be made unless the certificate is made and filed within the time required;<sup>79</sup> but ordinarily a requirement as to time is held to be merely directory and a substantial compliance therewith is sufficient.<sup>80</sup>

d. List or Assessment as Basis For Levy. In many states the tax levy is required to be based upon an assessment list of the taxable property, which must be before the levying officers at the time, so that they may determine the rate necessary to raise a given sum.<sup>81</sup> It is usually required, under a provision of this

E. 1105, all of which hold that under a statute providing that when the taxes are to be raised for several purposes the amount for each purpose shall be stated separately, the levy must be in separate items, and a levy in a gross amount for all county purposes is void.

Claims to be embraced in the amount certified see State v. Goodwin, (S. C. 1907) 59 S. E. 35, 81 S. C. 419, 62 S. E. 1100.

Insufficient signature and authentication of certificate see Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. People, 141 Ill. 483, 31 N. E. 113; Hogleskamp v. Weeks, 37 Mich. 422.

Judgment as dispensing with certificate.—A judgment lawfully rendered against a town, on an obligation which shows on its face that the holder is entitled to have a tax assessed and collected for its payment, imposes on the county authorities the duty of levying such tax, although the town clerk does not make the certificate required by the statute. Hawley v. Fairbanks, 108 U. S. 543, 2 S. Ct. 846, 27 L. ed. 820.

Presumption.—One certificate, although not sufficient in amount, is a strong presumption against the existence of another certificate. Case v. Dean, 16 Mich. 12.

A certificate regular on its face is, in the absence of notice of illegality, sufficient authority for a levy of the amount certified. Wall v. Trumbull, 16 Mich. 228; Smith v. Crittenden, 16 Mich. 152; People v. Queens County, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 195. Thus a certificate of the amount of taxes voted, although on its face suggesting illegality, protects the county supervisor, unless the facts on which such illegality depends are shown on its face, or are such as to require inquiry by the supervisor as a ministerial officer. Wall v. Trumbull, 16 Mich. 228.

<sup>80.</sup> Smith v. Crittenden, 16 Mich. 152, holding that a requirement that the certificate be filed on or before the first Monday in October is directory merely, and is sufficiently complied with if it is filed after the first Monday and before the second.

Under Ill. Rev. St. (1874) § 191, curing formal defects and irregularities, the failure to file a certificate within the time required by law does not invalidate the tax. Thatcher v. People, 79 Ill. 597; Chiniquy v. People, 73 Ill. 570; Buck v. People, 78 Ill. 560. Prior to the enactment of this statute, however, if the certificate was not filed within the time required it was void. Gage v. Nichols, 135 Ill. 128, 25 N. E. 672; Shawneetown First Nat. Bank v. Cook, 77 Ill. 622; Mix v. People, 72 Ill. 241.

Presumption.—A certificate found in the county clerk's office with his file mark on it will be presumed to have been filed on the date named in the file mark, and will be presumed to have been the basis of the tax levy. Gage v. Nichols, 135 Ill. 128, 25 N. E. 672.

kind, that the tax shall be based upon the last completed assessment roll or list in force at the time,<sup>82</sup> and made up or prepared in due compliance with the statute.<sup>83</sup> A levy cannot be based upon a list or roll not made until after the levy, although in the same year,<sup>84</sup> unless by virtue of the statute the assessment, although made after the levy, takes effect as of a time prior thereto.<sup>85</sup> A levy for omitted taxes in a past year must be based upon the assessment for the year in which the tax was omitted.<sup>86</sup>

e. Determination of Rate and Amount. The amount to be raised by the tax, or the rate per cent of the tax, must be determined in due form by the proper officers,<sup>87</sup> and with such a degree of precision as to leave no uncertainty which cannot be removed by mere computation.<sup>88</sup> The rate per cent or amount

Valuation fixed by state board of equalization.—When the valuation of taxable property in any county is changed by the state board of equalization, the county commissioners may use the valuation so fixed by the state board as a basis for making their levies for all purposes, but are not bound to do so. Geary County v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 32 Kan. 168, 61 Pac. 693.

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Taxation," § 493.

Amount or per cent.—A levy of a certain per cent on the taxable property is a sufficient determination of the amount of the tax, where the amount which will result there-must not be in excess of the constitutional or statutory limitations,<sup>89</sup> but an amount or rate which is originally excessive may be subsequently reduced by the proper authorities.<sup>90</sup>

f. Time and Place of Levy. A statutory provision that the tax levy shall be made at a certain time of the year, or between certain dates, is generally held to be mandatory, so that a levy made at any other time is invalid,<sup>91</sup> unless the delay is caused without any fault or neglect on the part of the levying officers.<sup>92</sup> In some states, however, a provision of this kind is held simply directory, so that a delay beyond the statutory time in making the levy will not avoid it.<sup>93</sup> A lawful tax levy can only be made within the state,<sup>94</sup> and at some place where the levying board or other authority is authorized by law to hold its meeting.<sup>95</sup>

6. RECORD OF LEVY. It is essential to the validity of a tax levy that a written record of it should be made and kept by some proper authority,<sup>96</sup> although mere from is exactly determinable by mere calculation. State v. Southern Land, etc., Co., 45 Fla. 374, 33 So. 999; Mustard v. Hoppess, 69 Ind. 324; Hubbard v. Winsor, 15 Mich. 146.

No time fixed by law.—Where the charter of a city authorizes it to levy and collect taxes without any restriction as to time, the fact that the taxes of one year are levied somewhat later than usual will not invalidate the levy. Hallo v. Helmer, 12 Nebr. 87, 10 N. W. 568. See also State v. Manhattan Silver Min. Co., 4 Nev. 318.

informalities or defects in the record, such as its entry in a wrong book or the failure of the officers to sign it, will not avoid the levy.<sup>97</sup>

7. PRESUMPTIONS AND EVIDENCE AS TO LEVY. The record of a levy of taxes is the best evidence of it; its recitals are conclusive; and parol evidence cannot be received to prove such levy unless the previous existence of the record and its loss or destruction is established.<sup>98</sup> But when the record is in evidence, all reasonable presumptions will be indulged in favor of the validity and regularity of the proceedings.<sup>99</sup>

8. DEFECTS AND OBJECTIONS — a. In General. A total want of authority to levy a particular tax, or other fatal jurisdictional defects in the levy, may be shown against it;<sup>1</sup> but it will not be void for mere irregularities or informalities,<sup>2</sup> nor can such objections be raised against the levy in a collateral proceeding.<sup>3</sup>

Estoppel to object.—A taxpayer cannot question the legality and constitutionality of a special tax levied by an ordinance, on which others have acted, for the passage of which he petitioned, for which he worked and voted when it was submitted to a vote of the taxpayers, and from which he has secured an advantage. b. Effect of Partial Illegality.<sup>4</sup> If a tax is levied for several purposes, one of which is illegal, or if the rate or amount exceeds the statutory limitation, to any extent whatever, many decisions hold that the entire levy is absolutely void,<sup>5</sup> although according to others the partial invalidity or excess will not affect so much of the levy as is lawful, if it is possible to separate the legal from the illegal.<sup>6</sup>

9. RELEVY OR SUBSEQUENT LEVY. A levy of taxes which is illegal or invalid for irregularities may generally be cured by a relevy in proper form;<sup>7</sup> and so where provision should have been made, in a general levy, for special purposes or extra expenses, but this was omitted, the authority of the levying board is not exhausted, but may be exercised by a new levy for such purposes.<sup>8</sup>

10. JUDICIAL CONTROL OF LEVIES.<sup>9</sup> If the boards or officers authorized to levy taxes refuse to perform their duty, a court of competent jurisdiction may compel them to do so.<sup>10</sup> And so an injunction lies to restrain the levy of a tax which is clearly illegal or in excess of their authority, on the application of a party who shows that direct injury will result to himself or his property.<sup>11</sup> But courts have

B. Assessors of Taxes — 1. APPOINTMENT AND QUALIFICATION — a. Appointment, Status, and Tenure of Office. It is necessary to the validity of an assessment of taxes, and the acts of the various officers under it, that it shall have been made by assessors who were duly elected to their office, if that is required by law,<sup>17</sup> or duly appointed by competent authority, if the office is appointive,<sup>18</sup> or similarly appointed by the proper authority to fill a vacancy.<sup>19</sup> Tax assessors are

b. Eligibility. Statutory requirements that an assessor of taxes shall be a freeholder, a resident of the town or district, etc., are mandatory.<sup>24</sup> But it is generally held that a person who acts as assessor under color of title to the office, although he is ineligible or legally disqualified, is an officer de facto, so that the assessment will not be wholly void.<sup>25</sup>

c. Qualification, Oath, and Bond. It is generally held that where an assessor of taxes fails to take the oath required of him by statute, or takes it in an informal or irregular manner, or before one not authorized to administer it, or fails to subscribe it or have it recorded or attached to the assessment roll, any such defect does not vitiate the assessment, for, if otherwise qualified, he is entitled to the character of an officer de facto, and as such his acts are binding.<sup>26</sup> But where a board of assessors must by law consist of a certain number of persons, and one of

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Taxation," § 517.

But compare Martin v. Barbour, 34 Fed. 701 [affirmed in 140 U. S. 634, 11 S. Ct. 944, 35 L. ed. 546], holding that, under an Arkansas statute, the failure of the assessor to take the prescribed oath, ipso facto vacates his office, and where the clerk, in violation of law, delivers to him the assessment book, no assessment on that book can be made the foundation of a valid tax title.

Where no assessors are elected, the selectmen must, each of them, be sworn as an assessor before they can legally assess a tax, and an assessment made by them as officers de facto is invalid. Dresden v. Gould, 75 Me. 298.

Material alteration of oath.—Where the form of the oath to be taken by assessors is prescribed by statute, and is intended to secure a just valuation of the property to be assessed, and in the oath attached to the assessment roll of a certain year a change is made in the language so that the oath can truthfully be taken even if the assessment is entirely unequal and unjust, and cannot be laid as the foundation for an indictment them fails to qualify, the others have no lawful authority to make the assessment.<sup>27</sup> The best evidence of the due qualification of an assessor is the written oath itself or the official record of it;<sup>28</sup> but if no such record is in existence, it may be proved by parol.<sup>29</sup> Neglect or failure properly to file the bond required of an assessor may invalidate his title to the office, but not necessarily the assessment which he makes.<sup>0</sup>

d. Deputies and Assistants. The duty of assessing property for taxation must be performed by the assessor in person and cannot be delegated to a clerk, deputy, or assistant,<sup>31</sup> unless under express statutory authority.<sup>32</sup> But the employment of tax inquisitors, to search out concealed or omitted property, is sanctioned by some of the recent decisions.<sup>33</sup>

2. COMPENSATION OF ASSESSORS. The compensation of tax assessors, whether measured as a percentage on the amount of the total assessment,<sup>34</sup> or as a fixed sum for each taxable person on the list,<sup>35</sup> or a per diem compensation for the time actually for perjury however grossly the assessors should violate their duty, the assessment is void. Shattuck v. Bascom, 105 N. Y. 39, 12 N. E. 283. See also Lynde v. Dummerston, 61 Vt. 48, 17 Atl. 45.

ipality will be justified in making assessments in the absence of any assessor or without his intervention,<sup>53</sup> or in which the state may make the assessment directly by appropriate legislative action.<sup>54</sup> But as a rule this authority belongs alone to the regularly appointed or elected local assessor.<sup>55</sup> A board charged with the review and equalization of assessments has no power to take the place of the assessor and make an assessment in the first place,<sup>56</sup> nor is he, in matters resting in his judgment or discretion, subject to their direction or control.<sup>57</sup> Even the legislature cannot usurp the functions of the tax assessors created by the constitution.<sup>58</sup> Ordinarily the authority of the assessor to proceed with his work depends only on the directions of the statute under which he acts, and not on a warrant or authority given to him by any other officer.<sup>59</sup> An assessment of taxes made by any person other than the one authorized to make it is void.<sup>60</sup>

c. In Mississippi, the right of the state revenue agent to assess back taxes is not exclusive, as a municipality, acting through its clerk, is authorized, by Code (1906), § 3421, of its own motion to assess property that has escaped taxation. Adams v. Clarksdale, (Miss. 1909) 48 So. 242.

b. Illegality, Mistake, Overvaluation. The duties of the tax assessors are quasi-judicial in character, and therefore if they keep within their authority and act honestly and in good faith and with a common degree of care and prudence, they are not answerable in damages for errors, mistakes, inaccuracies, or bad judgment in the assessment,<sup>67</sup> or for any illegality in the tax itself not brought to their notice and for which they are not responsible.<sup>68</sup> Nor, under the same conditions, are they civilly liable for an overvaluation or excessive assessment of the property of a taxpayer.<sup>69</sup> If, however, it can be shown that an assessor acted fraudulently or with actual malice in a particular case, his judicial character does not protect him, and he is answerable in damages.<sup>70</sup>

c. Assessment of Exempt Property. It has been held that if an assessor undertakes to assess property which is exempt by law, he acts outside of his authority and is therefore liable in damages.<sup>71</sup> But on the other hand it has been held that an assessor is not individually liable for errors in determining what property is, and what is not, exempt from taxation, and in assessing exempt property, since in so doing he acts in a judicial and not a ministerial capacity.<sup>72</sup>

d. Error as to Residence. Assessors have no jurisdiction to assess a poll tax upon a non-resident, or to assess him for personal property not within their district, and they are personally liable for so doing, although under a mistaken belief that he was a resident.<sup>73</sup> It is to be noted, however, that in some states the statutes relieve assessors from the consequences of a mistake of this kind, by providing that they shall not be answerable if they acted under an honest belief that they had jurisdiction or "with integrity and fidelity."<sup>74</sup>

e. Omission or Refusal to Assess.<sup>75</sup> No action lies against an assessor for an error of judgment in omitting to place on the assessment roll some property which should have been assessed, although the consequence is to increase the plaintiff's taxes,<sup>76</sup> as the proper remedy against an assessor, who neglects or refuses to assess taxable persons or property, is by mandamus to compel him to do so.<sup>77</sup>

f. Waiver and Estoppel. One having a right of action against assessors for a fraudulent or illegal assessment may waive the same, or be estopped to claim it, by acquiescence in the assessment or payment of the tax.<sup>78</sup>

g. Actions For Damages. Trespass is the proper form of action against an assessor for a fraudulent or illegal assessment.<sup>79</sup> Such an action will lie against

5. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY OF ASSESSORS. In some states tax assessors who neglect or refuse to perform their official duties, or who act fraudulently or corruptly, are liable to indictment as for a misdemeanor.<sup>82</sup>

a. Definition and Nature of Assessment. An assessment of a tax is a final listing of persons and property subject to the tax, with an official estimate of the value of the property of each for the purpose of the tax.<sup>84</sup> It is the final step in the process of "taxation," and the one which fixes a definite and enforceable liability upon persons and property for the amount of the tax.<sup>85</sup>

b. Necessity of Assessment.<sup>86</sup> The assessment is an indispensable prerequisite to the validity of a tax against any individual; for without a valid assessment there can be no lawful attempt to collect the tax or to enforce it against any specific property.<sup>87</sup> Mere irregularities in the assessment will not affect its validity, but

"An assessment, strictly speaking, is an official estimate of the sums which are to constitute the basis of an apportionment of a tax between the individual subjects of taxation within the district." Cooley Tax. 596 [citing Perry County v. Selma, etc., R. Co., 58 Ala. 546; Rood v. Mitchell County, 39 Iowa 444; Geren v. Gruber, 26 La. Ann. 694; Wells v. Smyth, 55 Pa. St. 159].

The word "assessment," as used in tax statutes, does not mean merely the valuation of the property for taxation, but includes the whole statutory mode of imposing the tax, embracing all of the proceedings for raising money by the exercise of the power of taxation from their inception to their conclusion. Hurford v. Omaha, 4 Nebr. 336;

Jackson Lumber Co. v. McCrimmon, 164 Fed. 759.

"The term commonly includes two distinct processes: first, the preparation of a list by the proper officers, comprising a description of all the persons or property found within the jurisdiction and liable to contribute to the particular tax; and second, an estimate by the assessors of the value of the property, of whatever character it may be, which is to be called upon to contribute, thus forming the basis of an apportionment of the whole tax among the taxable persons within the district. The list, when thus completed, is usually denominated the 'tax list' or 'assessment roll.'" Black Tax Titles (2d ed.), § 89. See also In re Seaman, 135 Iowa 543, 113 N. W. 354.

"Assessed" means the amount to be imposed on the property and collected. Risley v. Utica, 168 Fed. 737.

Taxes not extended.—An assessment may be regarded as made, in the sense of fixing a liability upon the taxpayer, although the precise amount of the tax against his property has not yet been computed and extended on the roll. In re Babcock, 115 N. Y. 450, 22 N. E. 263.

only such omissions or defects as go to the jurisdiction of the assessors, or deprive the taxpayer of some substantial right.<sup>88</sup> And an illegality in the assessment, being a radical defect, cannot be regarded as a mere irregularity such as to be healed by the running of the statute of limitations;<sup>89</sup> and a statute which cures irregularities in tax proceedings will not cure a want of assessment.<sup>90</sup>

c. Statutory Provisions. An assessment of taxes must be made under authority of a statute and in accordance with its provisions.<sup>91</sup> Furthermore, the assessment must be based on the statute in force at the time it is made.<sup>92</sup> A new revenue law will not be construed retrospectively unless such is its clear meaning;<sup>93</sup> and while the enactment of an entirely new tax law will render illegal any proceedings thereafter taken under the former and repealed statute,<sup>94</sup> yet the repeal of an act under which an assessment has been made will not vacate or invalidate the assessment.<sup>95</sup>

d. Time and Date of Assessment. The revenue laws commonly provide that the assessment shall be made, or shall be completed, on a certain day or within a certain time. Such a provision, however, is so far directory that the assessment will not be invalidated by a delay beyond the statutory time, unless it is shown that the delay prejudiced the particular taxpayer by depriving him of a right to be heard before the board of equalization or otherwise operated to his disadvantage.<sup>96</sup> But the assessment must always be made as of the statutory date, or with reference to conditions as then existing; and hence a delay beyond that time will not enable the assessor to include in his list persons or property not within the state, or not in existence or not subject to taxation, on that date.<sup>97</sup> Within the meaning of such a statute, the assessment is completed when the persons and property to be taxed have been listed and the amounts to be collected have been computed.<sup>98</sup> And after that date, until a new assessment, assessors are not bound to regard changes in the title to taxable property or in its value.<sup>99</sup> An assessment is not invalid because of a failure of the assessors to date the assessment, as required by statute, such provision being merely directory.<sup>1</sup>

a list or schedule of the same and return it to the assessors as a basis for their assessment. Some of these statutes are held merely directory, no penalty attaching for a failure to comply.<sup>7</sup> But generally it is provided that some penalty or disadvantage shall be visited on the taxpayer who refuses or neglects to list his property; and the courts have affirmed the constitutionality of statutes providing that, in such case, the assessor shall estimate the value of such person's property according to the best information he can obtain, and that the taxpayer shall have no appeal from the valuation so fixed;<sup>8</sup> or that the assessor, after valuing the property according to his own judgment, shall add a certain percentage to the estimate so reached (even as much as fifty or one hundred per cent) and then proceed to assess the tax on the aggregate;<sup>9</sup> or imposing a specific penalty on the delinquent taxpayer,<sup>10</sup> or even rendering him liable to indictment and punishment.<sup>11</sup>

b. Notice or Demand. Statutes requiring the assessor to demand from the taxpayer a list of his taxable property, or to notify him of his duty to return it, have sometimes been held merely directory;<sup>12</sup> but generally this requirement is held to be mandatory, so that the assessor cannot make a valid assessment or impose any penalties on the delinquent, unless he has first given the proper notice or duly demanded the list.<sup>13</sup> Exceptions are necessarily made where the tax-

Sufficiency of notice or demand.—A personal application on the part of the assessor has been held sufficient. Melvin v. Weare, 56 N. H. 436. But on the other hand it has been held that where the statute requires a written or printed notice a mere verbal notice is insufficient (Cape Girardeau v. Buehrmann, 148 Mo. 198, 49 S. W. 985), although it is not material that the notice, if otherwise sufficient, is not dated (State v. Seahorn, 139 Mo. 582, 39 S. W. 809).

payer has kept out of the way or otherwise evaded notice,<sup>14</sup> or where he cannot be found.<sup>15</sup> The burden of proving a want of notice or demand is on the taxpayer.<sup>16</sup>

c. Who Should List Property. Every person should list for taxation the property of which he is the actual and beneficial owner,<sup>17</sup> and also, under the statutes as generally framed, property which he holds for another in a fiduciary capacity, as agent, trustee, guardian, etc.<sup>18</sup> The statute may also apply to non-resident owners of taxable property.<sup>19</sup> But the act of a stranger in listing the property as his own can neither give him a title nor affect the rights of the true owner.<sup>20</sup>

d. Making and Requisites of List in General. Provided there is an intention and endeavor to comply with the law, considerable latitude is allowed to the taxpayer in regard to the form of his return.<sup>21</sup> Real property is not ordinarily required to be listed every year, but only when there is a change in the title or possession.<sup>22</sup> But it is otherwise as to personalty, and a return which does not specify or describe

The notices may be sent by mail, if the statute does not require the assessor to visit each taxpayer personally. Turner v. Muskegon County Cir. Judge, 95 Mich. 1, 54 N. W. 705.

Bristol*, 104 Va. 213, 51 S. E. 223. But in New Jersey a demand is sufficient, although not made at the person's dwelling-house, unless he objects to it on that account. Anonymous, 7 N. J. L. 160.

the different kinds or classes of taxable personalty, but only gives the aggregate amount or valuation, is fatally defective.<sup>23</sup> If the forms or blanks sent out call for items of information not required by the statute, the taxpayer cannot be held delinquent for failing to furnish such items.<sup>24</sup> Directions as to the time when, or within which, the list must be returned, are generally applied with strictness.<sup>25</sup>

e. Property to Be Included and Valuation. The statutes commonly make the tax year begin on a certain date, so that the property which the taxpayer is required to list is that which he owned on that date;<sup>26</sup> and he must include all his taxable property according to its nature, and the directions of the statute,<sup>27</sup> including property out of the state but having its situs for the purpose of taxation at his own domicile,<sup>28</sup> and, if the law so requires, bonds or other securities of the United States.<sup>29</sup> The value of the property, or of each item or class, must also be stated if required by the statute,<sup>30</sup> merchants and manufacturers being ordinarily required to state the average value of their stock during the year.<sup>31</sup> But

To justify a failure to furnish a list at the time appointed, the taxpayer must show that he was unable to offer it at that time, and the fact that he in good faith supposed he was a non-resident, and had been so regarded by the assessors for a series of years, does not justify his omission to furnish the list, if in fact he was a resident and liable to taxation as such. *Edwards Mfg. 28. Com. v. Hays, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 1.
Situs of intangible personal property for purpose of taxation see supra, III, A, 5, b.

Evidence of situs.—The statement in an objection to an assessment or in court that the situs of money, notes, and credits is such that they are not subject to taxation in the state is not evidence thereof. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Denver, 46 Colo. 50, 103 Pac. 294.

a return by the taxpayer that he has no ratable personal property and owns none of the property mentioned in the statute is sufficient, if such be the fact.<sup>32</sup>

f. Statement of Debts to Be Deducted. Where the taxpayer is allowed to deduct his debts from the value of his taxable property, he is required to state such debts in his tax return;<sup>33</sup> and if he fails to do so no deduction can be claimed or allowed, but he will be taxable on his entire property.<sup>34</sup>

g. Verification of List.<sup>35</sup> Where the law requires the taxpayers' lists to be verified by oath or affidavit, an unverified list is of no effect; it does not bind the assessors, and does not benefit the property-owner;<sup>36</sup> and this is also true if the affidavit is in a form which does not comply with the directions of the statute.<sup>37</sup> But the failure of the assessors to require taxpayers to verify their lists will not vitiate the entire levy or assessment.<sup>38</sup>

h. Conclusiveness and Effect. A taxpayer is bound and estopped by his own statements as to the nature, title, and value of his property, made in the list which he returns for taxation,<sup>39</sup> although of course he can prejudice no one else by listing property which he does not own,<sup>40</sup> nor can he make such a list a foundation for a title.<sup>41</sup> On the other hand, the list is not absolutely conclusive on the assessors;

mand, and to place a valuation upon it according to his own best judgment and knowledge.<sup>50</sup>

(II) EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES AND INSPECTION OF BOOKS. Under the statutes in some of the states the tax assessor has authority, when he disbelieves a sworn list of property returned to him by a taxpayer, or on default of such list, to summon before him the taxpayer or third persons and examine them under oath;<sup>51</sup> and also has the right to examine the books and papers of taxpayers, including corporations, for the same purpose,<sup>52</sup> and mandamus lies to compel their production.<sup>53</sup>

c. Penal Action to Impose Fine. It is provided under some of the statutes that a taxpayer who neglects or refuses to return a list of his taxable property shall be reported as delinquent, and may thereupon be brought before a proper court by summons and a fine imposed on him.<sup>55</sup>

4. DETERMINATION AS TO TAXABLE PERSONS AND PROPERTY — a. In General. The selection of the subjects for taxation is a legislative power, and the assessing or valuing officers usually have no discretion in that regard;<sup>56</sup> but it is generally the duty of the assessor or other proper officer or board to investigate and determine questions as to the nature and classification of particular persons or property with reference to taxation, the liability of such person or property to taxation,<sup>57</sup> and the ownership of the property,<sup>58</sup> although his decision is not final or conclusive.<sup>59</sup>

b. Records or Paper Title. In determining who is the owner of particular property the assessor is justified in relying on what he finds on the public records, and is not required to investigate the validity of any conveyance or go behind the records to search out secret transfers.<sup>60</sup> Thus a tax title fair on its face and suffered to remain unquestioned on the records of deeds is a sufficient basis for an assessment for taxation, whether the title is valid or not.<sup>61</sup> So the validity of a lease of property cannot be questioned by the assessor, but it must be treated as binding and the assessment made with reference thereto.<sup>62</sup>

c. Inspection of Property. An assessment is not invalidated by the fact that the assessors did not actually view and inspect the property in question, if they have otherwise sufficient knowledge or evidence of its existence and value.<sup>63</sup>

d. Determination as to Place of Taxation. It is also within the province of an assessor to determine, in the first instance at least, the situs of particular property for the purpose of taxation,<sup>64</sup> and although his decision may be erroneous the assessment is not for that reason void.<sup>65</sup> And these rules also apply in regard to the apportionment by the assessor or other proper officers of railroad or other similar property for the purpose of its assessment in the various counties which it traverses.<sup>66</sup>

a. In General. The rules and principles for the assessment of property for taxation may vary according to whether it is real or personal estate, the statutes sometimes making a distinction between these two classes not quite identical with that recognized by the common law,<sup>68</sup> and, in the case of real estate, whether it is the title in fee which is to be assessed or a lesser interest, easement, appurtenance, or usufruct,<sup>69</sup> or the interest of a mortgagee.<sup>70</sup> So also there are different rules for the assessment of land according to whether it is occupied or unseated, improved or unimproved.<sup>71</sup> If property which is taxable and that which is not are mingled together in one assessment against the same person, the assessment as a whole is invalid.<sup>72</sup>

A tax assessed jointly on real and personal property is void. Stark v. Shupp, 112 Pa. St. 395, 3 Atl. 864.

Separate pieces of personalty.—A statute providing that in assessing personal property the different classes of personalty enumerated therein shall be assessed at their

b. Unoccupied or Unseated Land. In several of the states the statutes make a distinction between "seated" or "occupied" lands and those which are "unseated" or "unoccupied," requiring those of the one class to be separately assessed from those of the other, or even to be placed on a different list, or directing that they shall be differently described, or requiring the assessment to be made in the name of the owner in the one case but not in the other. Whatever the distinction, it is regarded as imperative; so that an assessment of seated or occupied land as unseated or unoccupied, or vice versa, is invalid.<sup>73</sup> The principle of the classification varies under the statutes in the different states; but the general theory is that value does not require that the separate value of each piece shall be given in the assessment. Wright v. San Antonio, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 50 S. W. 406.

In Illinois where lands of a sanitary district, parts of which are leased and subject to taxation, while other parts are exempt as being used solely for a public purpose, are assessed and taxed as a whole, the tax is not for that reason invalid, since it is the duty of the district to make known to the assessing officers what proportion is used for a public purpose. *Chicago Sanitary Dist. v. Mode of assessment in Pennsylvania.—It is a sufficient assessment of unseated land if it is so described as to warn the owner thereof that it is his land which is assessed. Putnam v. Tyler, 117 Pa. St. 570, 12 Atl. 43; Dunden v. Snodgrass, 18 Pa. St. 151; Thompson v. Fisher, 6 Watts & S. 520; Dunn v. Ralyea, 6 Watts & S. 475; Harper v. McKeehan, 3 Watts & S. 238.

the question of occupancy or non-occupancy is one of fact rather than of intention, and that entry upon the land, not merely transient, but of a more or less permanent character, and either for the purpose of residence or of cultivation, makes it "seated" land.<sup>74</sup> Once having this character, it is presumed to continue seated until a change is shown.<sup>75</sup> But an entire and permanent abandonment of the premises, suffering the land to return to its native wild state, will transform it again from seated to unseated property.<sup>76</sup>

c. Lands of Non-Residents. Where lands of a non-resident owner are required to be separately classed or assessed from those of resident owners, the observance of this direction is essential to the validity of the assessment.<sup>77</sup> As non-resident lands are not usually required to be assessed to the true owner, a mistake in the name is not material;<sup>78</sup> but they must be described with such certainty and particularity that they may readily be identified.<sup>79</sup>

d. Separate Parcels of Land. The statutory requirement, now practically universal, that each separate and distinct parcel of land shall be separately valued and assessed, is imperative; and an assessment of a joint tax on two parcels of land belonging to different owners is entirely invalid,<sup>80</sup> and the same rule applies statute.<sup>91</sup> Exceptions, however, are commonly made by statute in the case of unseated or non-resident lands;<sup>92</sup> and an assessment made to one not the owner may also be validated by acquiescence, so far that the principle of estoppel will apply.<sup>93</sup>

(II) UNKNOWN OWNERS. If the ownership of particular parcels of realty cannot be discovered, the statutes commonly permit their assessment to "unknown owners," and the assessment will then be as valid as if made to individuals by name.<sup>94</sup> When an assessment is made in this form, it is presumed that the officers performed their duty in endeavoring to ascertain who was the owner and that he really was unknown to them.<sup>95</sup> But if the name of the owner was in fact known to the assessor, or could have been discovered by an examination of the public records, an assessment to "unknown owners" cannot be sustained;<sup>96</sup> and these statutes give no authority for an assessment to a named person "and all owners and claimants known and unknown;" and such an assessment is void.<sup>97</sup>

And it is held that where there are three trustees of a single fund an assessment of the fund to only two of them is not invalid; and that where trustees hold a trust fund under three distinct trusts in favor of as many separate cotuis que trustent, an assessment of the fund is not invalid because it fails to assess each trust separately. People v. (II) DETERMINATION OF VALUE. The legislature may decide the manner in which different forms of property may be valued for taxation.<sup>25</sup> To constitute a valid assessment of property for taxation, the valuation of the property must be made by the proper assessing officer himself,<sup>26</sup> and he cannot delegate this duty to another.<sup>27</sup> In making the estimate the assessor must apply his own knowledge and exercise his own judgment,<sup>28</sup> and he is neither bound nor permitted, unless the statute so directs, to adopt a valuation made by a different assessor or board of assessors or board of review.<sup>29</sup> Unless otherwise specified, his estimate should be based upon and correspond with the fair cash value of the property;<sup>30</sup> and the amount it would bring at a fair private sale is ordinarily a just criterion of this value;<sup>31</sup> but in forming his estimate the assessor should avail himself of all proper sources of information and take into consideration all facts and circumstances

Laws (1906), 210, creating the county board of taxation, there has been no warrant sealing down valuation of taxable property by adopting a uniform percentage of actual value, although such was the general practice for years.

Legislative authority.—The power of the legislature to assess state taxes and to compel their payment directly to the state treasurer, without other official assistance, implies power to determine the value of the property to be assessed, and consequently a power of discrimination in selecting and fixing the taxable values. State v. Sterling, 20 Md. 502. and wilful undervaluation of particular property will also invalidate the assessment of it,<sup>38</sup> although it will not necessarily avoid the whole assessment list;<sup>39</sup> and one taxpayer cannot resist the payment of the taxes properly assessed against him, on the ground that another's property was undervalued, unless he shows resulting increase in his own burdens, or perhaps an intentional and habitual disregard of the law by the assessors.<sup>40</sup>

(iv) INCREASING VALUATION MADE BY TAXPAYER. The assessor is not bound by the valuation placed on his property by the taxpayer in his list or return, even though sworn to, but may increase it, if satisfied by proper evidence or even from his own knowledge that it is too low;<sup>41</sup> but the assessor cannot take this action arbitrarily and without sufficient reason.<sup>42</sup>

Omitted property.—Where taxable property has been omitted from a triennial assessment, such property may be included in an assessment made in the following year, although there may have been no erections, ad-

this valuation in any case where the value of a particular parcel has been increased since the last assessment by the addition of new structures or improvements to it.<sup>57</sup> But this will not authorize an increase of valuation on account of work which amounts to no more than a repair, alteration, or remodeling of an existing building,<sup>58</sup> or on account of an enhancement of the value of the property from causes other than those specified.<sup>59</sup>

c. Valuation of Personal Property — (i) IN GENERAL. In appraising personal property for taxation, the assessor is not conclusively bound by the valuation made by the owner,<sup>60</sup> but must estimate it, according to his own best judgment, at its fair market value.<sup>61</sup> The stock in trade of a merchant or manufacturer is ordinarily assessed at its fair average value through the year.<sup>62</sup>

(ii) CREDITS, INVESTMENTS, AND SECURITIES.<sup>63</sup> Bonds, mortgages, judgments, shares of stock, and similar securities are to be assessed for taxation at their actual value rather than their nominal or face value.<sup>64</sup> But United States bonds, treasury notes, and other securities of the national government are exempt from taxation and must be excluded from the assessment of the owner's personalty.<sup>65</sup> The holder of an annuity secured by mortgage or bond, or of a bond in lieu of dower, is to be assessed only for the sum actually due and unpaid thereon ditions, or improvements made since the triennial assessment. Union Coal Co. v. Cooner, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 95.

Owner's valuation as evidence.—If merchandise is carried on the owner's books as of a certain value, and he also insures it for that sum, the assessors are justified in appraising it at that value, and are not obliged to reduce their assessment merely on his statement that it has depreciated in value. *People v. 7. DEDUCTION OF INDEBTEDNESS<sup>68</sup> — a. In General. In several states a taxpayer is allowed to deduct his bona fide indebtedness from the amount of his taxable personal property;<sup>69</sup> and an assessment is void if made without allowing such deduction when properly claimed by a person entitled to it.<sup>70</sup> But generally, where a person owns property in several places, the deduction is to be allowed only at the place of his own domicile, and hence cannot be claimed by non-residents.<sup>71</sup>

b. Deduction From Credits. In the absence of statute there can be no deductions from taxes on credits for debts owing by the taxpayer, and a statute authorizing such deduction should be strictly construed.<sup>72</sup> Within the meaning of such laws, money, whether in hand or in bank, is not a "credit" from which the deduction can be made,<sup>73</sup> neither is money loaned at interest, whether secured by note, bond, mortgage, or otherwise,<sup>74</sup> nor shares of stock in a national or state bank.<sup>75</sup> Where the law requires the taxpayer to file a list or schedule of the debts which he wishes to deduct, he loses the privilege by a failure to comply with this requirement.<sup>76</sup> The right belongs, as the statutes are generally framed, to corporations as well as to natural persons.<sup>77</sup>

c. Debts Which May Be Deducted. The law allows the taxpayer to deduct only such debts as are just and legal, founded on actual consideration, and a present charge against him.<sup>78</sup> Either by restrictive provisions in the statutes,<sup>79</sup> or by the construction placed upon them by the courts, the taxpayer is not accorded this privilege in respect to obligations which are not properly described as "debts";<sup>80</sup> or in respect to contingent or collateral obligations or charges for which he expects to become liable, but which are not yet due;<sup>81</sup> or debts due to non-residents;<sup>82</sup> or for subscriptions to charitable institutions or to the capital stock of corporations;<sup>83</sup> or, in New York, for debts incurred in the purchase of property which is not taxable.<sup>84</sup>

d. Deduction of Encumbrances on Real Property. In the absence of a statute allowing the owner of land to deduct from its assessed value the encumbrances on it, real property is to be assessed at its full value without regard to mortgages or other encumbrances upon it.<sup>85</sup> In several states, however, there are now laws in force which permit such deductions to be made;<sup>86</sup> and when the privilege is duly claimed by the landowner it must be allowed by the assessor.<sup>87</sup>

8. OMISSIONS OF TAXABLE PROPERTY—a. Effect in General. In some jurisdictions it is held that the intentional omission of property liable to taxation from the assessment roll invalidates all taxes levied thereon and gives a right of complaint against the entire assessment to any one whose own burdens are unduly increased by such omission;<sup>88</sup> but that if the omission is accidental and unintentional, resulting from the negligence of the assessor or from a want or mistake of judgment on his part, without fraud, it will not vitiate the whole proceeding.<sup>89</sup> But the rule more generally adopted is that the assessment is not invalidated, at least as to a person who is properly taxed, by any such omission, from whatever cause arising, and whether intentional or not.<sup>90</sup>

a. Duty and Authority of Assessors. The assessment of corporations for taxation, particularly those whose business extends into several of the counties or other taxing districts of the state, is commonly intrusted to a state officer, board of commissioners, or state board of equalization, except as to property having a local situs exclusively; and the powers and duties of these officers, in making the assessment and valuation, are substantially the same as those of the local assessors in dealing with property locally taxable.<sup>8</sup>

b. Omitted Property. As in the case of property of individual taxpayers,<sup>9</sup> so also with regard to corporate stock and property, provision is commonly made by law for the assessment by the proper officers of any property which may have been omitted from the assessment as originally made or which has escaped taxation in previous years.<sup>10</sup>

2. REPORT OR STATEMENT BY CORPORATION — a. Necessity in General. In most jurisdictions there are statutory provisions requiring corporations to make a return or statement, to the proper assessing board or officers, of their taxable property,<sup>11</sup> and if they disregard and fail to comply with such provisions the assessing officers may make their lists and valuation from any sources of information open to them.<sup>12</sup> If, as is usually the case, the time for making this return is fixed by law, this direction must be obeyed; a return made after the limited time not being in any way binding on the assessors.<sup>13</sup> And the same is true of a requirement that the list shall be verified; to entitle it to consideration it must be sworn to by an officer or duly authorized agent of the corporation.<sup>14</sup> But a failure to make a requisition or demand on the corporation for a tax return before proceeding to assess it, if that is required by law, will invalidate the assessment.<sup>15</sup>

b. Property to Be Listed. The statutory directions as to the kinds and items of property to be included in a corporation's tax return must be complied with, at least substantially and in all essential particulars, or the return will be insufficient and may be rejected.<sup>16</sup>

d. Who May Make Return. The tax return for a corporation may be made by any of the officers designated in the statute for that purpose, or by an officer charged with the active conduct of its business;<sup>19</sup> but in either case, the return must show his competency to make it or it will be insufficient.<sup>20</sup>

e. Conclusiveness and Effect. A corporation is generally bound and estopped by the statements in its tax return as to its property and its value.<sup>21</sup> The return is also to be accepted by the assessors as prima facie correct and they are justified in relying on it and making their assessment accordingly.<sup>22</sup> In fact they are not at liberty arbitrarily to reject it as false or to proceed in disregard of its statements, when it is not disputed or contradicted by any competent evidence or information.<sup>23</sup> At the same time, the return is not absolutely conclusive on the assessors, and they may make the assessment without regard to its statements if its correctness is successfully impeached.<sup>24</sup> In the absence of a statute to the contrary, a corporation's tax report or list may be exhibited to a person having a legitimate interest in inspecting it.<sup>25</sup>

f. Failure or Refusal to Make Return.<sup>26</sup> Where a corporation neglects or refuses to make the tax return required of it by law, it becomes the duty of the assessors, or other proper officers, to assess its property upon the best information they can obtain,<sup>27</sup> and in some cases the company is debarred from obtaining any reduction of the tax so assessed.<sup>28</sup> In some jurisdictions a penalty is also imposed.<sup>29</sup>

3. REPORT OR STATEMENT BY STOCK-HOLDERS. When a corporation makes a report or return of its capital stock and is assessed and pays taxes thereon, it is not generally required that the individual stock-holders should list or return their separate holdings of the stock.<sup>30</sup> But under some statutes it is required that the individual stock-holder shall list capital stock held by him.<sup>31</sup>

4. PROCEEDINGS FOR DISCOVERY OF PROPERTY. In case of the failure or refusal of a corporation to make a tax return, the assessors may obtain the necessary information from any proper and available sources, as in the case of individual taxpayers,<sup>32</sup> and may have compulsory process to force the corporation to disclose its list of stock-holders or to furnish other information peculiarly within its own knowledge,<sup>33</sup> and may, under the statutes generally in force, examine persons under oath and inspect the books of the corporation.<sup>34</sup>

Corporation pursuing different kinds of business.—A corporation engaged in the business of transportation and mining and purchasing coal, occupations which are taxable at different rates, is entitled to an ap-

the law so requires.<sup>36</sup> But if the valuation is to be by separate elements, land should be estimated at its true value, having regard to its situation and all other considerations which affect its value,<sup>37</sup> and the value fixed by local assessors is not an invariable criterion;<sup>38</sup> and this is also true as to buildings, the cost price of which is not necessarily the present measure of value,<sup>39</sup> and in general as to the various kinds and items of personal property which the corporation may own,<sup>40</sup> and if the value of the personalty cannot otherwise be ascertained with exactness, it is proper to consider the earnings or dividends of the company.<sup>41</sup> Where the indebtedness of the corporation is also to be taxed, it is a question, in the absence of a statute, whether orders or bonds issued at a discount should be assessed at their par or market value,<sup>42</sup> although it is competent for the legislature to fix the face value as the value for taxing purposes.<sup>43</sup> In cases of doubt, insufficient information, or conflicting statements the judgment of the assessors will not be disturbed unless clearly shown to be erroneous or fraudulent.<sup>44</sup>

b. Valuation of Franchises and Privileges. The franchises of a corporation are property which may be valued and assessed separate and apart from its capital and other property;<sup>45</sup> but when so assessed they must be taxed, like all other prop-

In New York the state board of tax commissioners must annually fix and determine the valuation of each special franchise subject to assessment in each city, town, or tax district, and village assessors must enter the

erty, according to their real value.<sup>46</sup> The legislature may direct the manner of arriving at the value of franchises for taxation by any method reasonably fair in its operation, although it has no power to establish an arbitrary rule having no relation to the ascertainment of the true value.<sup>47</sup> One method of appraising corporate franchises much in vogue is to take the market value of the whole capital stock of the company and deduct from it the value of all its real property and tangible personal property, the remainder being the value of the franchise.<sup>48</sup> But under some statutes the amount of capital stock outstanding,<sup>49</sup> or of that employed within the state, is made the basis for estimating the franchise tax, the latter being calculated as a percentage on such capital, and varying with the amount valuation of such franchises as so fixed, and, where the board omits to do so, the assessors have no power to determine such value. People v. Keno, 61 Misc. 345, 114 N. Y. Suppl. 1094.

c. Valuation of Capital. In appraising the capital or capital stock of corporations for taxation, various rules and principles are followed in different jurisdictions, the following methods being those most generally adopted: (1) To take as the basis of assessment the aggregate par value of the capital stock issued and outstanding.<sup>52</sup> (2) To assess according to the actual or market value of the aggregate number of shares constituting the nominal capital.<sup>53</sup> (3) To appraise the capital according to its earning capacity, that is, to capitalize the net earnings of the corporation at a fair rate of interest, and take the result as the value of the capital.<sup>54</sup> (4) To take the property of the corporation as representing its capital, that is, to base the appraisal on the actual worth of all the assets, real and personal estate, franchises, and good-will in which the capital is invested.<sup>55</sup> But in some of the states, no one of these methods is followed exclusively, although all may be employed in arriving at the final result, the theory being that the value of the corporation's capital is a question of fact to be decided on consideration of all relevant facts and circumstances, such as the actual value of assets, earning capacity, dividends, market price of shares, indebtedness, encumbrances, franchises, and privileges.<sup>56</sup> Where the assessment is to be based on the capital

New York Franchise Tax Law of 1896.—This statute provides for the payment by every corporation of an annual franchise tax of one fourth of a mill for each one per cent of dividends, in case it pays dividends at the annual rate of six per cent or more, but otherwise of one and one-half mills on each dollar of its capital stock, and in the latter case, the capital stock is to be appraised "at its actual value in cash, not less, however, than the average price which said stock sold for during the year." This contemplates an assessment on the property in which the capital is invested rather than on the shares of stock, but it is not limited by the nominal or par value of the share stock. On the contrary, with reference to this matter, the capital stock and share stock are considered as the same thing, and may be assessed for more than the par value of the shares. People v. Morgan, 47 N. Y. App. Div. 126, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 191 [affirmed in 162 N. Y. 654, 57 N. E. 1121]. And as to the construction and application of this statute in general see People v. Knight, 173 N. employed within the state, it is the average amount so employed during the year that is to be taken as the basis, and not the highest amount employed at any one period.<sup>57</sup> If the capital has been increased during the year, the tax on the increased amount may be apportioned.<sup>58</sup>

d. Nominal or Actual Value of Stock. The valuation to be placed on the stock of a corporation is sometimes held to correspond with its nominal or par value or the amount paid in on such stock;<sup>59</sup> but more usually the assessment is made on the actual value of the stock, which may be its book value or liquidating value or its market value,<sup>60</sup> which is to be determined, where possible, by market quotations or evidence of the price passing on actual sales of the shares.<sup>61</sup> mortgaged, or otherwise set apart or held for the discharge of particular liabilities, it is only the value of the equity or residuary interest in it which is to be deducted and not its entire value.<sup>66</sup>

f. Determination of Amount of Earnings or Receipts. When the tax is laid upon or measured by the gross earnings of a corporation, this term includes all income from its business,<sup>67</sup> but does not include cash received from the sale of property or raw material in which a portion of the capital was invested.<sup>68</sup> Where the tax is on net income or earnings, it contemplates the deduction of all expenses of conducting the business;<sup>69</sup> but not extraordinary outlays in the enlargement or improvement of the plant or the replacement of capital.<sup>70</sup>

g. Determination of Amount of Dividends. If the tax depends on, or is measured by, the dividends declared by the corporation, the fact and amount of such dividends will be determined by the returns made by the corporation or other

In determining the value of a corporate special franchise by the net earnings rule, the gross earnings are ascertained from which the operating expenses are deducted, and then after deducting a fair return on that portion of the capital invested in tangible property, the balance comprises the earnings attributable to the special franchise, which when capitalized at a fair rate give the value of the special franchise. *People v. proper sources of information.<sup>71</sup> It is to be observed that when the statutes speak of dividends on the "capital stock," as related to taxation, the stock meant is that paid in and not the nominal or authorized capital.<sup>72</sup>

h. Valuation of Shares of Stock. Stock of an incorporated company is to be assessed for taxation, in the hands of the stock-holders, at its fair market value, not its nominal or par value.<sup>73</sup> From this valuation is to be deducted, according to the law in some of the states, a proportional part of the value of real estate or other property of the corporation which is already fully covered by taxation,<sup>74</sup> provided it is a domestic corporation;<sup>75</sup> but no deduction is made for the value of United States bonds or other non-taxable securities owned by the company.<sup>76</sup>

6. BANKS, BANK STOCK, AND DEPOSITS <sup>77</sup>—a. Assessment in General. A statute directing the taxation of banks in a specific manner, to be in lieu of all other taxes, prohibits their assessment in any other mode, and if incorporated in their charters is an inviolable contract.<sup>78</sup> If the tax is to be assessed on the capital of the bank, it means so much of the capital as may be issued and outstanding at the time.<sup>79</sup> If on the property or assets of the bank, it should be assessed like any other property and at its fair value;<sup>80</sup> and the assessment should include real and personal property, cash and credit items, and such other elements as may come within the terms of the particular statute.<sup>81</sup>

b. Deduction of Non-Taxable Property. From the assessment on its capital or total assets a banking corporation is entitled to have deducted the value of its real estate, where the same is otherwise taxed;<sup>82</sup> and if the assessment is made on the property in which the capital of the bank is invested, rather than on the capital eo nomine, there must also be deducted the value of United States bonds and other non-taxable securities constituting a part of such property.<sup>83</sup>

c. Deposits. Where money on deposit is considered as the property of the bank and therefore taxable to it,<sup>84</sup> or where a franchise tax on banks is measured by the amount of the deposits, the assessment will be made on the total of the general deposits, with any interest due depositors thereon, excluding some deposit accounts specially excepted by statute, and will be determined by the reports of the bank officers required by law to be made to the taxing officers.<sup>85</sup> It is generally held that deposits are not debts or liabilities which the bank is entitled to deduct from its gross assets.<sup>86</sup>

d. Assessment of Shares of Stock — (1) IN GENERAL. Shares of stock in a banking institution, as distinct from the capital stock, are to be assessed to the individual stock-holders, and this, although the law requires the bank to list and report the stock-holders and the number of their shares.<sup>87</sup> Such stock is ordinarily required to be assessed at its full and true market value, rather than its book value or its nominal price.<sup>88</sup> Whether or not it is of the class of credits or property from which the stock-holder's indebtedness may be deducted, for the purposes of the assessment, depends on the local statute.<sup>89</sup>

(II) NATIONAL BANK STOCK. Shares of stock in a national banking association are to be assessed for taxation at their actual market value, not necessarily their par value,<sup>90</sup> the only limitation imposed by congress being that they shall not be taxed at a higher rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the state.<sup>91</sup> Where the local statutes allow the taxpayer to deduct his debts from his credits or from stock which he holds in other corporations, it is generally held that he must be allowed the same privilege of deduction from his holdings of stock in national banks.<sup>92</sup>

8. RAILROAD COMPANIES<sup>1</sup>—a. Assessment in General. If the charter of a railroad company prescribes the mode of assessing its property for purposes of taxation, it constitutes a contract and that method must be followed.<sup>2</sup> Otherwise the assessment is to be made according to the special rules laid down by the statutes as applicable to this class of property.<sup>3</sup> Provisions for the assessment and valuation of the property of a railroad, as a unit, by a railroad commission or state board of equalization, and its apportionment among the various municipal corporations through which the road passes, designed to secure uniformity and to do away with fragmentary assessments in the counties, are now common and

What constitutes a railroad.—A railroad company having nothing but a bare road-bed, with no rails and no equipment, is not "running and operating a railroad," so as to be assessable by the railroad assessor. Neely v. Buchanan, (Tenn. Ch. App.) 54 S. W. 995. But a company, the business of which was to build and own a bridge used exclusively for railroad purposes, and which reports to the railroad commissioner and pays taxes as a railroad company, is a "railroad" within the Michigan statute. Sault Ste. Marie Bridge Co. v. Powers, 138 Fed. 262 [affirmed in 201 U. S. 245, 26 S. Ct. 466, 50 L. ed. 765]. So a railroad composed of short tracks, and used in connection with a ferry for the purpose of hauling cars of other railroads to and from the ferry, and owned by the ferry company is subject to assessment by the state board of equalization, and not by the city assessor. *State v. Degree of uniformity required.—Where the method of assessing the property of a particular railroad company adopted by a state board is within the powers conferred on it by statute, and does not result in an excessive valuation as compared with the property of other railroad companies, a court of equity will not enjoin the collection of taxes thereon because, owing to the peculiar nature of the property of such company within the state, the method so adopted was different from that applied to other roads. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. King, 120 Fed. 614, 57 C. C. A. 278.

Taxation in addition to franchise tax.—A tax can lawfully be levied on the franchise of a railroad and also a separate tax on the road-bed, rolling-stock, and fixtures at their cash value. In re R. Taxation, 102 Me. 527, 66 Atl. 726.

Railroad property as personality.—Under the statute of Kentucky regulating the taxation of railroads, the tax levied by the board of railroad assessors on property held or used in the operation of a railroad is a tax on personal property. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Labette County, 9 Kan. App. 545, 59 Pac. 383.

That the board of valuation gives an improper credit, whereby the franchise tax is reduced, after the railroad commission has properly assessed the tangible property of a railroad company, in no way invalidates the assessment of the railroad commission. Com. v. Kinniconick, etc., R. Co., 104 S. W. 290, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 859.

b. Valuation of Property. The assessment of railroad property is to be based on its value for the purpose for which it is intended and devoted.<sup>7</sup> The cost of construction or of acquisition, or the cost of replacement, may be considered in fixing this valuation, but it is not in itself a fair measure of value;<sup>8</sup> and it is also proper to consider the aggregate amount of the company's capital stock and bonded debt, as representing its investment and therefore indicating the value of its property.<sup>9</sup> But productiveness rather than cost should be the standard, and hence the question should be, what would the property sell for, as a railroad, at a fair and free sale;<sup>10</sup> and on this question the earning capacity of the road, as evidenced by its net profits, is a very important consideration, although perhaps not absolutely controlling;<sup>11</sup> and so also is the rental value of the road.<sup>12</sup> In this connection also the market value of the company's stock and bonds may properly be taken into account;<sup>13</sup> and in general the assessors should base their valuation upon all the factors which enter into the market value of the property,<sup>14</sup> obtaining

In New Jersey under Pamphl. Laws (1884), p. 142, as amended by Pamphl. Laws (1888), p. 269, the board of assessors must ascertain the value of: (1) The main stem, (2) other real property, (3) tangible personal property, and (4) the franchise; it being presumed that the road-bed as laid is to be taxed as main stem, whether the railroad company conducts a passenger or freight business, or both. *Jersey City v. d. Valuation of Capital Stock. Where the capital of a railroad is to be appraised at its actual value, the valuation should correspond with the fair market value of all the stock issued and outstanding.<sup>22</sup> In the case of an interstate road, each state should assess such a portion of the appraised value of the entire capital stock as corresponds with the number of miles of road within the state in its relation to the entire mileage of the road.<sup>23</sup>

f. applies only to lands used in connection with the business of the railroad; other real property, owned by the road but not so used, is to be valued in the same manner as the real estate of private individuals.<sup>34</sup> The land and the buildings or improvements on it are to be separately assessed if the statute so directs.<sup>35</sup>

(II) RAILROAD BRIDGES. A railroad bridge is assessable as real estate,<sup>36</sup> and its value for purposes of taxation is not measured by its cost, but by its earnings or its value as a part of the railroad system.<sup>37</sup>

(III) STATE OR LOCAL ASSESSMENT. The distribution of the right to assess the right of way, road-bed, and other real property of railroad companies, as between the state board and the local authorities, varies greatly in the different states; but the general tendency is to assign to the state officers all that which constitutes a part of the continuous line of railway, and to the local taxing officers all property not used for railroad purposes and also such as is incidental or accessory to the operation of the road.<sup>38</sup>

(IV) PROPERTY INCLUDED IN "RIGHT OF WAY," "RAILROAD TRACK," AND "ROAD-BED." Where these terms are used as descriptive of the kinds of railroad property which are to be assessed by the state board, they are generally taken in a very comprehensive sense. Thus, the "right of way" is not the mere easement of passage, but the land covered by the track,<sup>39</sup> and may also include side-tracks, depots, shops, and other structures along the line of the road,<sup>40</sup> although it cannot be extended to cover land acquired with the intention of using it for railroad purposes at some time in the future.<sup>41</sup> The same remarks apply to the general terms "roadway" or "road-bed."<sup>42</sup> And in states where the state officers are given jurisdiction over the assessment of "railroad track," this term is made to include not only the rails and their bed, but also the right of way and side or spur tracks, together with depots, round-houses, water tanks, reservoirs, and other such property.<sup>43</sup> A bridge forming a part of the line of a railroad, or connecting its

by the state board, but all other real estate of railroad companies, including stations and other buildings and structures thereon, must be assessed by the local assessors. *People v. different parts so as to make one continuous line, may be classed as "railroad track."<sup>44</sup>

(v) PROPERTY INCLUDED IN "REAL ESTATE." It is entirely competent for the legislature, for the purposes of taxation, to make that realty which would be personal property at common law, and vice versa;<sup>45</sup> and therefore the question whether particular railroad property is assessable as real estate or as personalty depends largely on the provisions of the local statute.<sup>46</sup>

9. MISCELLANEOUS CORPORATIONS. The general rules stated above,<sup>47</sup> except in so far as they are changed or modified by special statutory provisions, apply in regard to assessments of taxes against certain classes of corporations which differ from other corporations either in respect to the nature of their business, or in respect to the nature of the property which they hold,<sup>48</sup> such as express companies,<sup>49</sup> turnpike and toll road companies,<sup>50</sup> sleeping car companies,<sup>51</sup> street railroads,<sup>52</sup>

Co. v. People, 4 Ill. App. 468; Pfaff v. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co., 108 Ind. 144, 9 N. E. 93.

There is no distinction, within the New Jersey act of March 27, 1888, between the principal or main line of a railroad, and a lawfully authorized branch line of railroad, but the property of each must be assessed in part as "main stem," and in part as "other real estate used for railroad purposes," according to the circumstances of the property. Jersey City v. State Bd. of Assessors, 75 N. J. L. 571, 69 Atl. 200 [modifying 73 N. J. L. 164, 63 Atl. 21].

What constitutes "main stem."—What is the "main stem" of a railroad is a question of fact, depending on the actual use of the line at the time of assessment; but as between a line used mainly for passenger traffic and a line used mainly for freight traffic, the former is the main stem; and as between two lines of track used for freight traffic, the longer line, in the absence of other distinguishing features, is the main stem. A telegraph line owned by a railroad company, used for the transaction of its business, and leased to a telegraph company for commercial business, is not taxable as railroad property but as the property of a telegraph company. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Rhein, 135 Iowa 404, 112 N. W. 823.

Gross earnings.—Money received from messengers employed specially to call non-subscribers to the telephone stations, and moneys collected from the company's patrons as messenger charges paid to persons in whose buildings the company's booths are located, are a part of the gross earnings of a telephone company, as is also a proportionate part of its property within the state resulting from its use in interstate commerce; but money collected from its patrons for other telephone companies with which it has traffic arrangements is not a part of such earnings. State v. Northwestern Tel. Exch. Co., 107 Minn. 390, 120 N. W. 534.

Valuation.—The net earnings of a telegraph company for a single year, standing alone, are not a proper criterion by which to determine the actual value of its system for taxation purposes; and in determining the value of the property of such company the income derived from messages sent from and received at stations in a given district, comprising only a part of the system, is not the proper measure of the gross earnings of that part of the system within the district, where the lines within such district are used for the transmission of messages having neither origin nor destination therein. 10. FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.<sup>55</sup> Except in so far as governed by special statutory provisions, the ordinary rules for the assessment of property are applicable where a foreign corporation is taxed for the franchise or privilege of doing business within the state,<sup>56</sup> or in proportion to its gross receipts or net earnings made within the state,<sup>57</sup> or on specific real or personal property having its situs within the state.<sup>58</sup> But where the tax is on capital or capital stock, the company can be charged with taxes only on a ratable proportion of its capital,<sup>59</sup> and where the tax is on "capital employed within the state," this means capital as represented by property, and not capital stock,<sup>60</sup> and its value is to be ascertained by taking into account all property within the state owned by the corporation, whether in money, goods, or assets.<sup>61</sup> In fixing this valuation the assessing officers should be guided by any reliable evidence which is before them, and cannot fix the figures arbitrarily;<sup>62</sup> but their decision will not be disturbed by the courts unless plainly shown to be fraudulent or unfair.<sup>63</sup> Whether or not a foreign corporation is entitled to deduct debts from the assessed value of its property depends on the local statute.<sup>64</sup> assessing officers, and both the manner and the date of the steps they are to take in the assessment of property, it is the duty of the taxpayer corporation to take notice of its terms, and unless there is a statutory provision to the contrary, no personal or individual notice is ordinarily required to be given to it of the fact, date, or amount of its assessment.<sup>66</sup>

E. Assessment Rolls or Books<sup>67</sup> — 1. IN GENERAL — a. Nature and Necessity of Roll or List. The assessment or tax roll or list varies under the different statutes, but ordinarily it is a completed record for the year of all the taxable persons and property within the tax district, so arranged and itemized as to show to each taxpayer who may examine it exactly what property he is assessed upon and the amount of tax he is required to pay thereon,<sup>68</sup> and the making of this roll or list in accordance with the directions of the statute is ordinarily an essential prerequisite to the valid enforcement of the taxes entered on it.<sup>69</sup>

Notice to taxpayers to bring in lists see supra, VI, C, 2, b.

66. Arkansas.—St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Worthen, 52 Ark. 529, 13 S. W. 254, 7 L. R. A. 374, notice of meeting of board for valuation not required.

68. See the statutes of the several states.

And see Jewett v. Foot, 190 Iowa 359, 93 N. W. 364 (holding that a "tax list" under the Iowa statute relating to the duty of the county auditor to collect the assessment refers to the current list or book and to none other); Wells v. Burbank, 17 N. H. 393; Homer v. Cilley, 14 N. H. 85 (both holding that the term "tax list" includes a treasurer's warrant for the collection of a single sum assessed against only one place).

A "tax roll" means the roll in proper form to warrant the treasurer in enforcing the tax. Babcock v. Beaver Creek Tp., 64 Mich. 601, 31 N. W. 423. And "tax rolls" are the original extensions of the levies made by the proper authorities and include state, county, township, and school taxes. Smith v. Scully, 66 Kan. 139, 71 Pac. 249.

"Assessment rolls" to be laid before the local board of review for correction, under the Iowa statutes, are the lists originally made by the assessor and his assistant and sworn to by the assessor, and not the books or lists thereafter required to be made up for other purposes. Reed v. Cedar Rapids, 138 Iowa 366, 116 N. W. 140.

The terms "list" and "grand list," as used in the Vermont statutes relative to taxation, mean a schedule of the polls and ratable estate of the inhabitants upon which taxes are to be assessed. Wilson v. Wheeler, 55 Vt. 446. The personal list required to be lodged in the town clerk's office as a basis of taxation is the judicial determination of the listers of the amount of the taxpayer's personal estate that should enter into the annual grand list. Bartlett v. Wilson, 59 Vt. 23, 8 Atl. 321.

b. Authority and Duty to Make. The making of the assessment list or roll is a duty which can be performed, with proper legal effect, only by the particular board or officer designated by the statute.<sup>70</sup> It is a duty which cannot be delegated, and the roll is invalid if prepared by any third person,<sup>71</sup> unless he be a mere clerk or agent acting under the direction and supervision of the proper officer.<sup>72</sup>

c. Requisites in General. The assessment list must be made in at least substantial conformity with the directions of the statute and contain all the essential particulars which the law requires;<sup>73</sup> and further it must show on its face that it purports to be an official list made by the proper officer acting in his official capacity,<sup>74</sup> and must be certain and specific in designating the persons and property taxable and the amount of taxes charged.<sup>75</sup>

Texas.—See Sullivan v. Bitter, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 604, 113 S. W. 193, holding that an assessment of property for taxation includes a list of the property to be taxed in some form and an estimate of the sums which are to guide in apportioning the tax. But compare Hernandez v. San Antonio, (Civ. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 1022.

Vermont.—Downing v. Roberts, 21 Vt. 441.

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Taxation," § 675.

But compare Harris v. State, 96 Tenn. 496, 34 S. W. 1017.

After the completion of the tax list or assessment roll, the assessor is not required to keep a book containing the original list and assessment of each person's property. People v. Stockton, etc., R. Co., 49 Cal. 414.

Unless a legal levy has been made, the extension of an assessment upon a tax roll affords no authority for the collection of the tax. Reno County School Dist. No. 127 v. Reno County School Dist. No. 45, 80 Kan. 641, 103 Pac. 126.

Successor in office.—Where a county assessor resigns his office after having duly listed and valued all the taxable property, leaving nothing to be done but to copy the assessment sheets into the list or roll required by statute, the work may lawfully be completed by his successor. Bode v. New England Inv. Co., 1 N. D. 121, 45 N. W. 197; Farrington v. New England Inv. Co., 1 N. D. 102, 45 N. W. 191.

Authority as to contents of roll.—Under a law requiring the town clerk to prepare the assessment roll, so far as possible, from the assessment of the preceding year, after its revision by the town assessors, he has power to place on the roll an assessment which had been stricken therefrom by the assessors. People v. Schoonover, 47 N. Y. App. Div. 278, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 180 [reversing 26 Misc. 576, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 498, and affirmed in 166 N. Y. 629, 60 N. E. 1118].

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Taxation," § 677. Copying former roll.—An assessment is void which is made by copying the roll of the preceding year. Davidson v. Sterrett, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 265; State v. Cook, 82 Mo. 185.

Time of making entries.—The failure of the assessor to enter the assessment as soon as made, on the book prescribed for that purpose, does not invalidate the assessment as against the owner of the property. Grundy County v. Tennessee Coal, etc., Co., 94 Tenn. 295, 29 S. W. 116.

Partly exempt property.—Property which is by law exempt from taxes except for school and highway purposes should not be stricken from the assessment roll, but should be marked "exempt" so that it may be made the basis of assessment for school and highway taxes. People v. Reilly, 41 N. Y. App. Div. 378, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 558.

Designation of year.—Where there has been but one assessment for a certain calendar year, a statement in the assessment book that it is the book of assessments for that year is a proper designation of the year, although the fiscal year includes the first half of the succeeding calendar year. Chapman v. Zoberlein, 152 Cal. 216, 92 Pac. 188.

2. FORM AND ARRANGEMENT <sup>76</sup> — a. In General. The directions of the statutes as to the form and arrangement of the assessment list, in so far as they are designed to secure certainty and intelligibility and inform and protect the citizen, are mandatory and must be strictly observed; but otherwise they are to be considered as merely directions to the officers, and if they are disregarded it does not invalidate the assessment.<sup>77</sup> Thus a direction that the list must state the valuation placed on each separate piece of property must be at least substantially complied with.<sup>78</sup> On the other hand, the provisions of the statute as to the number, kind, or designation of the books or volumes in which the list shall be contained are generally directory only, provided no confusion or uncertainty results from the method adopted.<sup>79</sup> And so, where the roll or list contains all the matter essential to a good assessment, it is immaterial that the columns in the book are not arranged precisely as the law directs or that there are more columns than the statute intends.<sup>80</sup> Nor is the list invalidated by the use of characters and abbreviations, provided they are such as are commonly understood and plainly indicate what they stand for.<sup>81</sup>

b. Classification of Subjects. A direction of the statute that real and personal property shall be separately listed is generally imperative;<sup>82</sup> and so of a provision for the separate listing of property in different districts of the same city or county, where the rate of taxation varies.<sup>83</sup> Where taxes levied

3. DESIGNATION OF PERSONS<sup>85</sup>—a. Necessity of Inserting Name. An assessment of particular property is not valid or enforceable unless the name of the owner, or the person chargeable with the tax, is inserted with a proper description thereof in the assessment roll in connection with the property,<sup>86</sup> except in cases where the owner is unknown,<sup>87</sup> and under some statutes except in the case of non-resident owners;<sup>88</sup> but under other statutes a non-resident owner should also be described in the assessment roll,<sup>89</sup> although his assessment on the roll should be separated from other assessments.<sup>90</sup> Further if the person chargeable with

But compare Parker v. Cochran, 64 Iowa 757, 21 N. W. 13, holding that where taxes on land are duly assessed to the owner, the omission of the owner's name in transcribing the tax into the tax list does not invalidate the assessment.

Christian name blank.—An assessment of land for taxes made to the owner by his surname, leaving a blank for his christian name, is void. Crawford v. Schmidt, 47 Cal. 617.

Where a widow uses the initials of her deceased husband, and is known by his name, an assessment in which she is so described is sufficient. Tieman v. Johnston, 114 La. 112, 38 So. 75.

Name assumed for business purposes.—An individual banker doing business under the general banking laws of the state, who assumes a special name, by which his business is known, may be assessed by that name. Patchin v. Ritter, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 34.

Repeating name in connection with different properties.—Where a taxpayer is assessed for several separate pieces of property, it is not necessary that his name should be entered in the roll opposite each description, but it is enough if it is entered at the top of the page or at the commencement of the assessment, followed by the list of the property under the proper heads, no other name intervening. Oregon R. Co. v. Umatilla County, 47 Oreg. 198, 81 Pac. 352.

The entry in the column "remarks" in an assessment roll of the names and addresses of persons does not constitute an assessment of the property to such individuals or affect the validity of the assessment, where the entry appears to be merely a memorandum to aid in the collection of the tax. *Cone v. the taxes holds the property in a representative or fiduciary capacity, he should be described by adding some such term as "agent" or "trustee" to his name, although this rule is not very strictly enforced, provided the list shows clearly who it is that is charged with the tax.<sup>91</sup>

b. Entry in Alphabetical Order. A statutory requirement that the names of persons taxed shall be arranged in the assessment list in alphabetical order is sufficiently complied with, as to any particular person, if he is listed under the first letter of his surname, although a strict alphabetical order is not preserved among the names beginning with the same initial.<sup>92</sup>

c. Designation of Corporation and Stock-Holders. Strictly speaking a corporation should be described in the assessment list with the same particularity as an individual.<sup>93</sup> But the courts have been very lenient in this matter, sustaining assessments upon corporate property notwithstanding mistakes or errors in the name, where it could be shown that the essential words in the name were given, so that the misnomer was not calculated to mislead; <sup>94</sup> where the name given was that of a predecessor of the company intended to be charged; <sup>95</sup> where it was commonly and familiarly known by the name employed, although not its correct or full name; <sup>96</sup> where the officers of the company observed the mistake and failed to have it corrected; <sup>97</sup> or where the irregularity could be brought within the terms of a curative statute.<sup>98</sup> Where stock in a bank or other corporation is to be assessed to the individual holders, the assessment is invalid if made in the name of the corporation and not in the names of the shareholders.<sup>99</sup>

4. DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—a. In General—(i) NECESSITY AND SUFFICIENCY OF DESCRIPTION. It is essential to the validity of the assessment list and of all proceedings founded on it that it should contain a description of all the property intended to be assessed; but minute particularity is not required, any description being sufficient which identifies the particular property so clearly that the owner cannot be misled.<sup>1</sup> And a detailed description will be more easily dispensed with where the assessor is unable to ascertain the exact nature of the property.<sup>2</sup> It is not necessary to enumerate every item of personal property, but it has been held that the different classes mentioned in the statute should be separately listed,<sup>3</sup> although by the force of some statutes, it is now held sufficient to list all such property under the general description of "personal property,"<sup>4</sup> and an assessment even under such a heading as "miscellany" may be considered sufficient if the owner himself knows exactly what is meant.<sup>5</sup>

(ii) SHOWING TAXABILITY OF PROPERTY. Each article or item of property listed must appear on the face of the assessment to be included within the particular kinds or classes of property made taxable by law, or at least it must appear that it is not exempt.<sup>6</sup>

ital" of a designated corporation, by that name, and describing the capital generally, is ordinarily sufficient.<sup>7</sup> But where the property of the company is assessed, although its plant or works may be assessed as an entirety, the different parts or elements must be separately described with sufficient certainty to identify them.<sup>8</sup> Shares of stock in a corporation, when assessed to the holder thereof, may be described as so many shares of "bank stock," "insurance stock," or the like, without naming the company,<sup>9</sup> and if corporate stock is required to be assessed as a part of the holder's personalty, listing it as a separate item does not invalidate the assessment.<sup>10</sup>

Hence a description which merely gives the name of the owner and the number of acres, without anything to fix the exact location of the land, is insufficient;<sup>14</sup> but if such description is accompanied by other descriptive matter by which the particular land may be located and identified it is sufficient.<sup>15</sup> So also an assessment of a "lot" or "house and lot" on a designated street or street corner in a city is insufficient,<sup>16</sup> although the description may be sufficient if, in addition, the number of the house is stated.<sup>17</sup> It has been said that a description which would be sufficient in a conveyance of land between individuals will be sufficient in a tax assessment;<sup>18</sup> or, according to other cases, the description is sufficient if it contains such data as will enable a competent surveyor to identify the property with reasonable certainty.<sup>19</sup> Some decisions also maintain that parol evi-

Numbered lot in section.—A description of land as a certain numbered lot in a designated section of the government survey does not represent any ascertainable part of the survey, unless a plat has been made and recorded by competent authority dividing the survey into numbered lots. Sanford v. People, 102 Ill. 374; People v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 96 Ill. 369.

Lands not covered by government survey.—In a case in Arkansas it appeared that land uncovered by the recession of the waters of a meandered lake would, if the lines of the public survey had been extended so as to embrace it, have been a part of a certain section, township, and range. The land was not officially surveyed and platted, but an extension of the lines of the public survey was run by the county surveyor, and the land was popularly known by the description which it would have had if the survey had been officially extended, and under this description it was assessed and sold for taxes. It was held that the description was sufficient, when aided by evidence that the land had been unofficially surveyed and was popularly known by the description used. Buckner v. Sugg, 79 Ark. 442, 96 S. W. 184. But compare State v. Central Pac. R. Co., 21 Nev. 94, 25 Pac. 442.

Number of survey and certificate.—A statutory requirement that the description of the land in the assessment list shall contain the number of the certificate under which it was located, or the number of the survey under which it was entered or patented, is mandatory, and the assessment will be invalid if this number is omitted when it could have been ascertained. *Morgan v. description must be made complete by giving the name or number of the section, township, and range,<sup>25</sup> unless these particulars can be supplied or made definite from the headings of the columns in the assessment book,<sup>26</sup> or from the fact that the assessment district includes only one such section or township.<sup>27</sup>

(III) DESCRIPTION BY METES AND BOUNDS. A description of land by metes and bounds is sufficient in a tax assessment if correct and comprehensible; but if the boundaries given are confused, erroneous, uncertain, or impossible of location on the ground the assessment will be void.<sup>28</sup>

(IV) DESCRIPTION BY NUMBERS ON RECORDED MAP OR PLAT. It is usual and sufficient to describe city or town lots in an assessment roll by the number of the lot and of the block or square, and the name of the quarter, subdivision, or addition, according to the recorded plats, with the name of the city or town.<sup>29</sup> But a description of this kind must be definite and certain in itself,<sup>30</sup>

if the name is arbitrarily selected, or if it is ambiguous or misleading, or does not designate the property with such certainty as to avoid all chance of mistake, it is insufficient and the assessment void.<sup>40</sup>

(VI) DESCRIPTION IN RECORD TITLE. A description of property in the assessment roll which follows that in the owner's recorded title will ordinarily be sufficient.<sup>41</sup> But it is not essential that the description in the recorded deeds or other title papers shall be followed, if the assessor's description is sufficient to identify the property with certainty.<sup>42</sup>

(VII) FRACTIONAL LOTS OR PARTS OF TRACTS. A description of property in an assessment which is so indefinite as not to show whether the whole or a part of a tract, or if a part, what part, is intended to be assessed to the person named, is insufficient.<sup>43</sup> Thus a description which states that the property is part of a larger tract, but does not clearly identify the specific and determinate part intended, is so inadequate as to render the assessment void.<sup>44</sup> And this is also true of an assessment which merely describes the land as a certain number of acres in a specified tract, without locating or identifying the portion meant to be assessed.<sup>45</sup> But such a description may be good if it contains other matter land by the name applied many years before to a much larger tract of which the land assessed was a part.

which shows positively that the land assessed must be some particular part of the lot or tract and can be no other part of it.<sup>46</sup>

(VIII) STATEMENT OF QUANTITY OF LAND. In the case of agricultural and other lands outside of the cities and towns the number of acres in the tract should be given in the assessment as nearly as possible.<sup>47</sup> But an omission to do this, or a misstatement of the number of acres, will not vitiate a description otherwise sufficient,<sup>48</sup> unless the statute requires the acreage to be given, in which case an assessment cannot validly be made without it.<sup>49</sup>

(IX) SEPARATE LISTING OF UNSEATED OR NON-RESIDENT LANDS. A statutory requirement that unseated, unoccupied, or non-resident lands shall be listed in a separate book, or in a separate part of the assessment roll, from seated or occupied lands, is imperative and the assessment of such property is invalidated by a failure to comply with it.<sup>50</sup>

(X) IMPROVEMENTS. Where the assessment is upon improved real estate, it is not generally necessary to describe the improvements with great particularity, the use of such terms as "dwelling-house," "barn," and the like being sufficient.<sup>51</sup>

Recorded deed as notice to assessor.—The record of a deed creating a separate estate in the minerals in unseated lands, by a reservation thereof, is not notice requiring the assessment of the surface and the minerals separately. Hutchinson v. Kline, 199 Pa. St. 564, 49 Atl. 312.

Where land is assessed as that of non-residents and is an entire tract, which has not been subdivided, a failure to describe a part of the tract not liable to taxation and to designate unoccupied parts, where part of it is occupied, are jurisdictional defects. (XI) ABBREVIATIONS AND FIGURES. The description in an assessment list is not invalidated by the use of figures and abbreviations if they are such as are in familiar use and easily understood, and not misleading, and full enough to point out the particular land with certainty,<sup>52</sup> except that the name of the town or district should not be abbreviated.<sup>53</sup>

5. EXTENDING AMOUNT OF TAX. To complete a valid assessment it is necessary that the amount of the tax on each listed item or parcel of property shall be computed and extended on the proper tax book or roll in accordance with the statutory provisions relative thereto, and until this is done no legal liability attaches,<sup>54</sup> except where the omission of this step or defects therein can be brought

Buildings on different parts of tract.—Where a tract of land lies partly within and partly without the limits of a city, both parts being improved, and the improvements on the whole tract are included in the assessment of that part which lies within the city, and there is no means of determining how they should be apportioned, the tax on the improvements is void. Coolidge v. Pierce County, 28 Wash. 95, 68 Pac. 391.

Assessment of improvements as personalty.—Where, after the assessment of a tract of land, a valuable mill is erected on it, and it is reported as an additional assessment to the tax collector, an assessment thereon is not void because the collector gave in the mill as personal property. Tunica County v. Tate, 78 Miss. 294, 29 So. 74.

Applications of rule.—The ordinary ditto marks, or the abbreviation "do" for "ditto," are permissible. Bandow v. Wolven, 20 S. D. 445, 107 N. W. 204; Hodgdon v. Burleigh, 4 Fed. 111. The description may designate the points of the compass by their ordinary abbreviations and their combinations, as "N," "W," or "NW," "SE," and the like. *Law v. So also the abbreviation "ex" for except, "a" for acres, and "cor" for corner may be employed in the description. State v. Vaile, 122 Mo. 33, 26 S. W. 672. And the abbreviation "excep't rip'n r'gt" has been held sufficiently certain to be used for the words "excepting riparian rights." Newaygo Portland Cement Co. v. Sheridan Tp., 137 Mich. 475, 100 N. W. 747.

Fractions may be indicated by their ordinary arithmetical abbreviations; but "NW4" or "W2" is not a sufficient method of writing "the northwest quarter" or "the west half." State Finance Co. v. Mulberger, 16 N. D. 214, 112 N. W. 986, 125 Am. St. Rep. 650; State Finance Co. v. Trimble, 16 N. D. 199, 112 N. W. 984; Power v. Bowdle, 3 N. D. 107, 54 N. W. 404, 44 Am. St. Rep. 511, 21 L. R. A library tax is properly extended as a part of the general tax of the city with within the terms of a curative statute as a mere irregularity.<sup>55</sup> The same rule applies where the law requires the several amounts of distinct taxes levied on the same assessment to be separately set forth.<sup>56</sup> An error in computing and extending the amount of the tax will vitiate the assessment unless the amount of the excess is so trifling as to be negligible.<sup>57</sup> The duty of making this computation and entry is ordinarily a judicial duty of the proper board or officer and cannot be delegated to a third person,<sup>58</sup> except that it may be made up by one acting under the direction and supervision of the proper board or officer;<sup>59</sup> but the time of performing it is not regarded as very material, provided it is done before any attempt to enforce the tax.<sup>60</sup>

6. AUTHENTICATION — a. Signature of Assessors. The statutes ordinarily require the assessment roll to be signed by the assessors, and a compliance with this provision is essential to the validity of further proceedings,<sup>61</sup> although under some statutes the assessor's signature to the oath or certificate attached to the respect to which it is assessed. Chicago v. Cook County, 136 Ill. App. 120.

Sufficiency of signature.—A tax deed will not be held void because the official title of the assessor was omitted after his signature to the oath as to the correctness of the assessment roll. Shoup v. Central Branch Union Pac. R. Co., 24 Kan. 547.

Requirement of seal to assessment roll see Shoup v. Central Branch Union Pac. R. Co., 24 Kan. 547; Linton v. Wanke, 118 N. Y. Suppl. 965 [affirmed in 133 N. Y. App. Div. 922, 117 N. Y. Suppl. 1139].

In an action to collect the taxes, it is probable that the proceedings would not be defeated by the mere failure of the assessor to sign the roll, although this would defeat a tax-sale. See Bath v. Whitmore, 79 Me. 182, 9 Atl. 119.

assessment roll is a sufficient signature.<sup>62</sup> If there are several assessors jointly concerned in the making of the roll, they must all sign it; it is not sufficiently authenticated by the signature of less than the whole number.<sup>63</sup> But it is immaterial on what part of the roll the names of the assessors appear, if they sign in such a manner as to show their intention to give it official sanction.<sup>64</sup>

b. Certificate or Verification<sup>65</sup>—(1) NECESSITY. The assessment roll or list is usually required to be authenticated by an affidavit or verified certificate made and attached thereto by the assessor or other officer engaged in its preparation in final form, attesting its genuineness and setting forth that he has duly performed his duty according to law in the making of it; and the omission of this step is commonly held to be fatal to the validity of any further proceedings founded on the roll or list,<sup>66</sup> although in some states it is now held that the provision of

W. 854, holding that the fact that a certificate of equalization attached to the roll is not signed by the clerk of the board but by the chairman alone does not affect the taxpayers' obligation to pay the tax.

Where the assessor's clerk at his request writes the assessor's signature to the oath required to be appended to the tax roll, it is the assessor's signature and is as effective as if written by himself. Reed v. Cedar Rapids, 138 Iowa 366, 116 N. W. 140.

(II) REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY — (A) In General. The verification of the assessment roll should be in the form and method prescribed by the statute, but if it contains all that is essential, a substantial compliance with the statute will be sufficient, and minute particularity is not required.<sup>68</sup> The date of the Effect in equity.—However the omission of the statutory verification may affect the right to proceed further against the land itself, it does not necessarily invalidate the assessment in equity. In such a case, in a court of chancery, the assessment and the tax levy thereon are voidable only on condition that the party complaining shows that the omissions and defects in the tax proceedings have resulted in injustice to him, and pays or offers to pay the amount which, under a just assessment, would be required of him. Farrington v. Brooklyn, 89 N. Y. 128. See also Kane v. Brooklyn, 114 N. Y. 586, 21 N. E. 1053 [affirming 1 N. Y. Suppl. 306].

certificate or verification is not generally important, and an error or informality therein will not vitiate the assessment,<sup>69</sup> unless it shows that the verification was made before it could legally be done, as, for instance, without waiting to make the changes and corrections resulting from appeals and review.<sup>70</sup>

(B) Certificate as to Valuation. Where the assessors are directed to state in their certificate or verification that the property mentioned in the assessment roll has been estimated at its "true cash value," or its "true and full value," or where any similar phrase is positively prescribed, it is a fatal defect if these words are omitted, and subsequent proceedings founded on the assessment are invalid;<sup>71</sup> but if the statute is substantially complied with in this respect, an immaterial variance or error made in good faith in the use of the required term or phrase will not vitiate the verification or certificate.<sup>72</sup>

c. Presumptions and Evidence as to Authentication. The regularity and validity of the certificate or verification to an assessment roll will be presumed until a fatal defect in it is pointed out by positive evidence.<sup>73</sup>

d. Conclusiveness of Certificate.<sup>74</sup> Assessors are estopped to deny the statements in their certificate or verification of the assessment roll, and their admissions or declarations are not admissible in contradiction of such statements.<sup>75</sup>

7. COMPLETION, RETURN, AND FILING — a. Return and Filing in General. When the assessment roll or list is completed, it is commonly provided that it shall be returned by the assessors into the office of the town or county clerk, or of the board of supervisors, or some other public office, and there placed on file, in order that it may be open to the inspection of the interested public and also to furnish official evidence for the warrants or other process to the collectors of taxes. This requirement is imperative, and there can be no valid proceedings for the enforcement of the tax until the law has been duly and fully complied with in this particular.<sup>76</sup> As to the filing of the list or roll, the important thing is its physical presence in the proper office, and such irregularities as an omission to mark it "filed" or to note the date of its filing are generally disregarded.<sup>77</sup>

b. Effect of Delay in Returning. Where the law requires the assessment roll to be completed and filed on or before a certain day in the year, it is held in some states that this provision is mandatory and that a delay in making the return beyond the time limited will invalidate the assessment;<sup>78</sup> but in others, this provision is considered as directory only and a delay in filing as a mere irregularity not affecting the validity of the tax.<sup>79</sup> The better rule, however, appears to be

A written notice to a taxpayer, stating the amount of his assessment and the time and place when his objections to it will be heard, does not cure a defective compliance with the law requiring the assessment list to be filed in the town clerk's office. Bartlett v. Wilson, 59 Vt. 23, 8 Atl. 321.

Waiver of objections.—Irregularities in returning municipal taxes, and even an omission to return, are waived by pointing out property to be levied on under a tax execution, the issuance of which presupposes a return duly made. Athens Nat. Bank v. Danforth, 80 Ga. 55, 7 S. E. 546.

Turner*, 43 Ark. 243 (holding that an assessment will not be quashed because the date of filing the list does not appear); Mills v. Scott, 62 Miss. 525 (holding that the

that a delay in returning the roll is important only when it deprives the individual taxpayer of his opportunity to examine into his own assessment and to take proper steps to have it reduced or corrected, or unreasonably shortens the time allowed him for this purpose.<sup>80</sup>

c. Evidence of Return. An assessment roll filed in the proper office will be presumed to have been filed in due time, in the absence of evidence to the contrary;<sup>81</sup> and if the fact is in dispute, it may be shown by the testimony of any person acquainted with the facts.<sup>82</sup>

d. Notice of Completion and Filing. When the law requires public notice to be given of the completion and filing of the assessment roll, in order that taxpayers may be informed of their opportunity to scrutinize their own assessments and present objections to them, the requirement is jurisdictional, and the taxes cannot be enforced if the notice is neglected.<sup>83</sup>

8. DUPLICATE LISTS OR ROLLS — a. In General. A duplicate tax list or roll is to be placed in the hands of the tax collector, and, with or without a warrant according to the local statute, constitutes his authority to demand and collect the taxes.<sup>84</sup> That it should be duly made and delivered in the manner required by statute is therefore essential to the further proceedings,<sup>85</sup> although the omission of it will not invalidate the assessment already made.<sup>86</sup> It should of course be an exact copy of the original list, but clerical errors may be disregarded,<sup>87</sup> and in case of discrepancies between the two the original will govern.<sup>88</sup> The duplicate should include all changes made by the board of equalization or review in the original assessment,<sup>89</sup> but no additions can be made for the first time in the duplicate.<sup>90</sup> The duplicate should also show distinctly the names of the persons assessed,<sup>91</sup> and the amount charged to each,<sup>92</sup> but need not contain an exact description of the real estate.<sup>93</sup> Nor is it necessary that it shall include copies of the affidavits or certificates made by the assessors and other officers.<sup>94</sup> It must be authenticated by the assessors or other proper officers in the manner prescribed by the statute,<sup>95</sup> and should be delivered punctually at the time appointed by law, although a delay is not material if the delivery is made before the taxes become due.<sup>96</sup>

b. Supplying Lost or Destroyed Rolls. The fact that the assessment list or duplicate has been lost, destroyed, or mutilated does not prevent the collector from proceeding to collect the taxes, but the list should be replaced from the best evidence obtainable.<sup>97</sup>

9. ERRORS AND OMISSIONS <sup>98</sup>—a. In General. An assessment roll or list is not rendered null and void by errors, omissions, or irregularities which do not affect the substantial justice of the tax itself, or which do not prejudice the individual taxpayer in the way of charging him with a greater tax than he is legally liable to pay,<sup>99</sup> nor will the assessment be vitiated by an error of judgment on the part of the assessors, when made in good faith and in the honest exercise of their judgment and discretion.<sup>1</sup> Neither will the assessment be void when it is lacking only in those features which can readily and certainly be supplied by computation from the data given.<sup>2</sup>

It is the duty of a taxpayer to see that his property is properly listed and assessed, and, if there are clerical errors, to have them corrected; and failing in this, he should not be allowed to remain quiet and then seek to escape payment of his share of the taxes by relying on some defect that has worked him no prejudice. Jenkins v. McTigue, 22 Fed. 148.

b. Omission of Dollar Mark. Some of the decisions hold that if the amount of the tax on a specific item or piece of property is attempted to be expressed in figures only, without a dollar mark or any other sign explicitly indicating the denominations of money intended to be indicated by the numerals, it is insufficient and vitiates the assessment.<sup>3</sup> But the weight of authority is to the effect that this omission does not render the assessment void where the figures are arranged in the ruled columns familiar to bookkeepers, or where the dollar sign is placed at the head or bottom of the column, or generally where the entries are so made that a reasonably intelligent man, exercising his common sense, would not be deceived or misled by the mere omission of the dollar mark.<sup>4</sup>

c. Amendment by Assessors<sup>5</sup>—(1) IN GENERAL. After the completion and return of an assessment roll, the assessor has no further control over it and has no authority to alter or amend it,<sup>6</sup> except as concerns the correction of mere informalities or clerical errors,<sup>7</sup> and except as to making the changes ordered by the board of equalization.<sup>8</sup> But unauthorized changes made by the assessors will not necessarily vitiate the whole assessment roll; it may stand good as made and returned by them originally.<sup>9</sup>

(II) ADDING OMITTED PERSONS OR PROPERTY.<sup>10</sup> Unless specially authorized by statute, assessors have no power to add to their completed assessment roll any names not already included or any items of property omitted.<sup>11</sup>

d. Curative Statutes. Statutes have been enacted in many states legalizing and confirming particular levies of taxes, or providing that assessments of taxes in general shall not be held void on account of any errors, irregularities, informalities, or omissions not affecting the substantial justice of the tax itself.<sup>12</sup> But the legislature cannot cure jurisdictional defects. The entire want of any assessment, such imperfections in the assessment as prevent the taxpayer from discovering upon what property he is taxed and for how much, a failure to give him notice and an opportunity to object, and, generally, any defects or omissions which strip the assessors of their jurisdiction, or deprive their proceedings of the necessary character of "due process of law," are beyond the reach of a curative statute.<sup>13</sup>

Furthermore, laws of this character will not be construed retrospectively unless their language plainly requires it.<sup>14</sup>

10. EFFECT OF INVALIDITY. If an assessment of taxes is illegal and void, no action will lie for the recovery of the taxes,<sup>15</sup> and no valid sale of the property can be made for their non-payment,<sup>16</sup> although the tax need not be lost if a reassessment can be made.<sup>17</sup> If the assessment is valid in part and void in part, the whole assessment will not be invalidated if the legal and illegal portions can be separated clearly and certainly.<sup>18</sup>

11. PRESUMPTION OF VALIDITY AND CORRECTNESS.<sup>19</sup> In support of an assessment of taxes it will be presumed that it is valid, regular, and correct, and that various officers charged with the making of the assessment all performed their duties in good faith and at the proper time and in conformity with the statutes, and that their various acts were legal and proper; and this presumption will stand until overcome by satisfactory evidence to the contrary.<sup>20</sup>

12. OPERATION AND CONCLUSIVENESS <sup>21</sup>—a. Operation and Effect. An assessment roll or list is prima facie and sufficient evidence, in the absence of counter-vailing proof, of the due levy and assessment of the taxes charged upon it.<sup>22</sup> But it is not evidence of title to the property as between the person to whom it is assessed and a stranger,<sup>23</sup> and is not such a public record as imparts constructive notice;<sup>24</sup> and the tax book in the hands of the tax collector, prior to the time the tax becomes delinquent, does not have the force of a judgment and execution against the taxpayer, although it does have such effect after such delinquency.<sup>25</sup> The language employed in the descriptions of property and in other parts of the roll or list must be interpreted, reasonably and with due regard to the context and subject-matter, and also, if possible, so as to make the assessment effective.<sup>26</sup>

b. Admissibility of Extrinsic Evidence. Parol extrinsic evidence cannot be received to vary or contradict the particulars set forth in an assessment list or roll;<sup>27</sup> and the testimony of the assessors is not admissible to impeach or controvert their own assessments.<sup>28</sup> Parol evidence, however, may be admitted for the purpose of explaining descriptive matter in the assessment list or applying it to its intended object, provided the list itself furnishes an unmistakable clue for the application of such testimony.<sup>29</sup> Where it becomes necessary in any kind of action to determine to whom property was assessed at a given time, or who paid the taxes on it, the assessment list is the best evidence on this issue, and extrinsic evidence cannot be received unless the failure to produce the list is excused by showing its loss or destruction or in some other satisfactory manner.<sup>30</sup>

c. Conclusiveness in General. In the assessment and valuation of property the assessors or other proper officers act judicially, and therefore their determinations as to values and other questions of fact are final and conclusive unless impeached for fraud or want of jurisdiction, and until reversed or set aside by some tribunal having authority to review their action.<sup>31</sup>

13. CUSTODY OF ASSESSMENT RECORDS. The assessment lists or rolls are permanent public records and must remain in the custody of the officers charged by law with the duty of keeping them,<sup>34</sup> although they may be produced in court, as evidence, when properly called for.<sup>35</sup> If an assessment roll cannot be found in the office where it is required by law to be kept, the presumption arises that it never existed.<sup>36</sup>

VII. EQUALIZATION AND REVIEW OF ASSESSMENTS.

A. Equalization<sup>40</sup>—1. IN GENERAL—a. Meaning of Equalization. The function of equalization is the adjustment of aggregate valuations of property, as between the different counties of the state or between the different taxing districts of the same county, so that the share of the whole tax imposed upon each county or district shall be justly proportioned to the value of taxable property within its limits, in order that one county or district shall not pay a higher tax, in proportion to the value of its taxable property, than another.<sup>41</sup>

b. Power to Create Boards of Equalization. Statutes providing for the equalization of taxes, and for the creation of official boards for that purpose, whether state or local, are a legitimate exercise of the power of the legislature over the subject of taxation, and are free from constitutional objection.<sup>42</sup>

c. Equalization Among Classes or Kinds of Property.<sup>43</sup> While all the property in a district belonging to the same class must be increased or diminished in the same ratio, under some statutes, the valuation of one class of property may be raised or lowered, if necessary, by the local board of equalization, without disturbing the assessed valuation of another class.<sup>44</sup> But this cannot be done arbitrarily, and the act of the board is void if it results in palpable inequality.<sup>45</sup>

2. EQUALIZATION BY MUNICIPAL OR LOCAL BOARD OR OFFICER — a. Necessity of Equalization. A statutory direction that taxes shall be equalized by an official board, as between the different municipal divisions of a county, is imperative, and a failure to comply with this requirement is a jurisdictional defect which will invalidate the entire tax levy.<sup>46</sup>

b. Powers and Proceedings of Board. In that part of its work which concerns the different towns or other municipalities as units, a board of equalization has no authority to change the assessment of any individual taxpayer.<sup>47</sup> Hence no notice of its meetings or proceedings, for the purpose of equalizing assessments between different towns or districts, need be given to individual property-owners.<sup>48</sup> Furthermore, its action is automatic in the sense that no complaint, demand, or petition is necessary to set it in motion,<sup>49</sup> neither is the board required to examine witnesses or hear evidence, but it acts on its own knowledge, judgment, and discretion.<sup>50</sup> Its authority extends over all municipal divisions within its territory, but it must recognize the divisions made by law for assessment purposes, and cannot divide a city or other assessment district into portions for the purpose of equalizing the taxes.<sup>51</sup> The adjustments made by the board ordinarily apply to all classes of taxes which may be levied on the same assessment,<sup>52</sup> and must embrace Acts (1889), p. 238, as between the various townships, does not affect the legality of a levy of a school tax within a city); Scollard v. Dallas, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 620, 42 S. W. 640 (holding that a property-owner who does not in any way complain of the assessment of his property cannot resist payment of the tax levied according to such assessment on the ground that there is no proper board of appeals to pass upon objections to assessments).

In Idaho under Const. art. 7, § 12, the county commissioners for the several counties constitute boards of equalization for their counties, and it is the duty of such boards to equalize the valuation of the taxable property in their respective counties under such rules as may be prescribed by law. *Weiser Nat. all the assessed property within the district affected.<sup>53</sup> The compensation of the officers constituting the board is generally fixed by law.<sup>54</sup>

c. Method of Equalization. In order to effect an equalization it is the duty of the board to ascertain whether the valuation of assessable property in each town or district bears a just relation to that in all the other towns or districts, and if it does not, the board is to increase or diminish the aggregate valuation in any town or district by adding or deducting such a percentage as will in its opinion be necessary to produce such relation.<sup>55</sup> For this purpose the board may take as a standard the particular township or district assessment roll which, in its judgment, most nearly represents a true and just valuation, and make the others conform to it.<sup>56</sup> The increase or diminution ordered should be specified as a percentage, and not as a gross or lump sum,<sup>57</sup> and should be made applicable to all the taxable property of the district affected, and not to a particular class or kind.<sup>58</sup> It is not "equalization," or within the functions of the board to transfer property from the assessment list of one district to that of another,<sup>59</sup> or to make an addition to the valuation in all the districts indiscriminately,<sup>60</sup> although it may lawfully reduce the total of the assessment list of any district below that made by the assessors.<sup>61</sup>

d. Records of Board. The board of equalization must keep a written record of its proceedings if required by statute as an essential to the validity of further proceedings.<sup>62</sup> And the record must contain enough to show clearly what action was taken by the board in regard to the equalization of taxes,<sup>63</sup> and must be signed by the members if the law so directs.<sup>64</sup> But presumptions will be indulged in e. Decision of Board and Certificate. The decision of the board of equalization, acting within its jurisdiction, is in the nature of a judgment and cannot be impeached collaterally. <sup>67</sup> It is binding on the officer whose duty it becomes to make the changes in the assessment list ordered by the board, <sup>68</sup> and mandamus lies to compel him to perform this duty; <sup>69</sup> but it is not final or conclusive as against a reassessment or back assessment or omitted or undervalued property. <sup>70</sup> Where the law directs that a certificate of equalization shall be attached to the assessment roll, if this requirement is not complied with, no valid sale of property can be made for non-payment of the taxes appearing on such roll. <sup>71</sup>

f. Review of Proceedings. Provision is generally made by statute for an appeal or other proceeding to review the action of a board of equalization, at the instance of the town, city, or other municipal division aggrieved thereby; <sup>72</sup> but such an appeal cannot be taken at the instance of an individual taxpayer. <sup>73</sup> is limited to the equalizing of state taxes and does not extend to taxes levied by local authorities.<sup>75</sup> Under some statutes the state board is an integral part of the machinery for the assessment of taxes, and this process cannot be considered complete until the state board has acted upon it.<sup>76</sup> A state board of equalization should convene at the time appointed by law, although statutory provisions as to the date of meeting are held to be merely directory.<sup>77</sup> Where the statute prescribes the time and place of meeting, no other notice need be given to the public or to the members of the board.<sup>78</sup> This board is not generally required to examine witnesses or to base its action on any particular kind or quantum of evidence, but may proceed in its own way and act on any information which is satisfactory to it.<sup>79</sup> Its record of proceedings should be signed by the members of the board if the law so directs.<sup>80</sup>

b. Method of Equalizing. The office of a state board of equalization is to equalize the tax among the several counties, or districts, if the statute so provides, so that the share of such tax imposed upon each county or district shall be justly proportioned to the value of the taxable property therein;<sup>81</sup> and for this purpose it may adopt as a standard that one of the several returns which most fix the value thereof for purposes of taxation.

The state board of equalization has no power to adopt rules for the government of assessors which require the assessment of the property of an individual in excess of its value. Richards v. Harlan County, 79 Nebr. 665, 113 N. W. 194.

75. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Pioneer Irr. Dist., 16 Ida. 578, 102 Pac. 904 (holding that the power and jurisdiction of a state board of equalization as to the assessment of railroad property relates to assessments for general purposes and not to assessments for local improvements); Spear v. Braintree, 24 Vt. 414.

76. Hacker v. Howe, 72 Nebr. 385, 101 N. W. 255.

Premature return of roll.—Where the state board of equalization, after acting on the assessment roll of a county, returned the roll to the county clerk, leaving the assessment of the real estate untouched, but afterward recalled the roll and made changes in the real estate assessment, the board did not lose jurisdiction by prematurely returning the roll to the county clerk, but its jurisdiction continued until it had acted on all the assessments. Carroll v. Alsup, 107 Tenn. 257, 64 S. W. 193.

Assessment rolls.—The fact that the state board of equalization does not have before it the assessment rolls of the different counties, as intended by the statute, or any other particular written evidence provided for by law, is not a jurisdictional defect, but a mere irregularity. New York v. Davenport, 92 N. Y. 604; Dayton v. Multnomah County, 34 Ore. 239, 55 Pac. 23; Dayton v. Bd. of Equalization, 33 Ore. 131, 50 Pac. 1009. Thus the territorial board of equalization of Arizona may base any order it may make upon abstracts of the assessment rolls furnished by the clerks of the boards of supervisors of the various counties under its order without inspecting the assessment rolls from which the abstracts were taken. *Old Dominion Cooper Min., etc., Co. v. nearly represents a true and just valuation of the property assessed, and add to or deduct from the returns of the other counties or districts, such a percentage as will make them conform to the standard selected.<sup>82</sup> But this board has generally no power to increase or reduce the assessment of any individual taxpayer;<sup>83</sup> and as it must, as a rule, act upon the aggregate valuations of the different counties, it cannot ordinarily increase or diminish the valuation of any particular class of property,<sup>84</sup> except where it is specially authorized by statute to do so,<sup>85</sup> as in regard to railroad and other similar property;<sup>86</sup> nor can it raise the returns of any county above the total actual value of all the taxable property therein,<sup>87</sup> or add to the valuation of all of the counties in such a manner as to raise the aggregate valuation of the whole state.<sup>88</sup>

c. Operation and Effect of Decision. The decision of the state board of equalization, acting within its jurisdiction, is judicial in character and therefore not open to collateral impeachment,<sup>89</sup> although it may be reviewed or enjoined

if fraudulent or illegal;<sup>90</sup> but such decision is not final or conclusive as against a reassessment or back assessment on omitted or undervalued property.<sup>91</sup> Its rulings, if at all ambiguous, will be aided by construction so as to keep them if possible within the jurisdiction of the board.<sup>92</sup> And if the board transcends its proper jurisdiction, in making an original assessment, it will not vitiate the whole tax.<sup>93</sup>

B. Review and Correction of Assessments by Official Boards or Officers — 1. IN GENERAL — a. Nature and Scope of Remedy. An application to an officer or board of equalization or review to change an individual assessment is in the nature of an appeal from the decision of the assessor, and it has been held that in passing upon it the officer or board acts in a judicial capacity, at least to the extent that its determination has the force of an adjudication,<sup>94</sup> although its powers and method of procedure are strictly regulated by statute.<sup>95</sup> The effect of such an appeal is to suspend the power of the assessing and collecting officers to act upon the particular assessment until the board shall have decided the case.<sup>96</sup> If complaint is made of an excessive valuation of the property affected, the remedy of the complainant is to have the assessment reduced, and not to be released from the entire tax.<sup>97</sup>

b. Necessity of Pursuing Statutory Remedy. When the statutes provide a remedy against an excessive, erroneous, or improper assessment of the property of an individual, by proceedings before a board of equalization or review, the taxpayer must at his peril avail himself of this remedy, and cannot resort to the courts in the first instance; and if he neglects properly to bring his complaint before the board of review, he cannot assail the assessment in any collateral failure to appear before the board of review, since he voluntarily submits himself to the jurisdiction of the state, for purposes of taxation, by acquiring and holding property therein.<sup>99</sup> But the necessity for pursuing the statutory remedy does not exist where the assessment complained of is void and illegal,<sup>1</sup> as where the assessors acted entirely without jurisdiction,<sup>2</sup> or where the assessment was fraudulently made,<sup>3</sup> or is so incomplete or devoid of proper authentication that there is nothing legally sufficient to lay before the board as a basis for their action.<sup>4</sup>

2. GROUNDS OF REVIEW — a. Defects and Irregularities. Defects, errors, and irregularities, not fundamental in their nature, but occurring in the exercise of lawful jurisdiction, may be corrected by the board of equalization or review, and should not be brought before the courts in the first instance.<sup>5</sup> This rule applies, for instance, where property is assessed in the wrong name,<sup>6</sup> or in the name of a deceased person,<sup>7</sup> or where it is erroneously classified as real instead of personal property or vice versa.<sup>8</sup>

Second application to board not required.—A taxpayer need not make more than one complaint to the board of review before resorting to the courts; that is, he need not go back to the board for the purposes of pointing out an alleged error in its former action, before bringing his appeal. *Ingersoll v. b. Error in Valuation or Amount. A taxpayer may obtain from the board of review a reduction of his assessment when it is excessive, whether in consequence of a relatively exorbitant valuation of his property or an error in estimating its extent or amount,<sup>9</sup> provided he can show that he is prejudiced by the mistake,<sup>10</sup> which is not the case where his assessment, however erroneous, requires him to pay no more than his just and fair proportion of the tax,<sup>11</sup> or where his property has been assessed uniformly with other like property in the same district and at no higher rate.<sup>12</sup>

3. RIGHT OF REVIEW — a. In General. The constitutional requirement of "due process of law" applies to tax proceedings, and it is necessary that the tax-

Discrimination against national banks see Mechanics' Nat. Bank v. Baker, 65 N. J. L. 113, 46 Atl. 586.

Fraud, capriciousness, or want of the exercise of an honest judgment by tax officers is ground for interfering with their action if the assessment made is grossly disproportionate to the property's value, or unequal when compared with the assessment of other like property; but mere overvaluation, unless the excess is so gross as to impute fraud to the assessor, is not ground for interference. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Pierce County, 55 Wash. 108, 104 Pac. 178.

10. State v. Flavell, 24 N. J. L. 370; People v. Feitner, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 299, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 793 [affirmed in 63 N. Y. App. Div. 615, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 1124 (affirmed in 168 N. Y. 674, 61 N. E. 1132)].

A party is prejudiced, in such sense as to have a legal right to complain, when the error of which he complains allows a large amount of taxable property of a particular corporation to escape assessment, thereby increasing the rate of taxation on all the property in the assessment roll, although the immediate effect of the correction will be to increase, rather than reduce, his own assessment on particular items of similar property. People v. Albany Bd. of Assessors, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 583, 5 Thomps. & C. 155.

One error neutralizing another.—When the same person is over-taxed for some of his property, and for other property on the same roll he is under-taxed to an equal or greater extent, he is not entitled to an abatement, although he is entitled to a correction of the erroneous form of assessment when it is injurious to him. Lowell v. Middlesex Co., 152 Mass. 372, 25 N. E. 469, 9 L. R. A. 356; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Manchester, 70 N. H. 200, 46 Atl. 470; Edes v. Boardman, 58 N. H. 580 [overruling Dewey v. Stratford, 42 N. Suppl. 353 (although in excess of its value); Martin v. Clay, 8 Okla. 46, 56 Pac. 715; Wallace v. Bullen, 6 Okla. 17, 52 Pac. 954.

Franchise tax.—A statutory provision which relates alone, so far as the equality of the assessment is concerned, to the assessment or valuation of different franchises, does not relate to inequality of assessment by special franchises as compared with other kinds of property; and the fact that real estate in a city is assessed at only eighty per cent of its full value does not entitle the owner of a special franchise in that city to a reduction of twenty per cent on its full valuation as fixed by the state board of tax commissioners. People v. Woodbury, 63 Misc. (N. Y.) 1, 116 N. Y. Suppl. 209.

payer shall have an opportunity to be heard in opposition to the assessment or valuation of his property before his liability is conclusively fixed.<sup>13</sup> But the denial of this opportunity, or the failure to constitute a board of equalization or review, or of such a board to meet, is a matter which can be complained of only by a party who can show that he himself is prejudiced thereby.<sup>14</sup>

b. Persons Entitled. The right of appeal to the officer or board of equalization or review is ordinarily given to any person "interested" or having property assessed on the roll.<sup>15</sup> If this right is not in terms restricted to taxpayers, the city in which property is located may complain that the assessment is too low.<sup>16</sup> But where shares of corporate stock are assessed directly to the individual shareholders, it has been held that the corporation itself is not a party in interest in such sense as to have a right of appeal.<sup>17</sup> Several taxpayers are not authorized to unite in a petition for review, unless they complain of an error or illegality which affects them all in the same manner.<sup>18</sup>

c. Failure to Return List or Inventory.<sup>19</sup> In some states a taxpayer who neglects or refuses to return a list or schedule of his taxable property, as required

No implied repeal of law giving right of review.—A statute providing a remedy against illegal assessments should not be deemed embraced in a general repeal of all laws relating to assessments, in an act prescribing and regulating the method of assessing taxes. Shear v. Columbia County, 14 Fla. 146; Warner Iron Co. v. Pace, 89 Tenn. 707, 15 S. W. 1077.

Mortgagor of realty entitled to complain see Detroit v. Detroit Bd. of Assessors, 91 Mich. 78, 51 N. W. 787, 16 L. R. A. 59.

One having color of title to land may apply for an abatement of the taxes assessed thereon. Carpenter v. Dalton, 58 N. H. 615.

Owner of exempt property.—Where the statute provides a proceeding to obtain relief when an "owner of assessable property" has been unjustly assessed thereon, it will not be construed as affording relief to an owner of property on which taxes could not legally be assessed, but which is nevertheless erroneously assessed. Arapahoe County v. Denver Union Water Co., 32 Colo. 382, 76 Pac. 1060.

Agent.—One who is assessed for money in his hands as agent may have the assessment corrected so as to show that the principal is ultimately liable for the tax. Title Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles County, 3 Cal. App. 619, 86 Pac. 844.

But compare Kenilworth v. Bd. of Tax Equalization, 78 N. J. L. 302, 72 Atl. 966 [affirmed in 78 N. J. L. 439, 74 Atl. 480], holding that where a borough consents to the confirmation of assessments of ratables as made by its assessor before the county board of taxation and such assessment is confirmed, the borough cannot be said to be aggrieved by the action of the county board so as to justify an appeal to the state board.

by law, is debarred from any relief against the assessment imposed on him, and the officer or board of equalization or review has no jurisdiction to hear his complaint or reduce his assessment.<sup>20</sup> But a taxpayer will not forfeit his right to a review by a mere inaccuracy or imperfection in a list or inventory, or the omission of property from it by mistake or under an honest belief that it is not taxable,<sup>21</sup> or by a delay in filing it beyond the time allowed by law, provided it is filed before the petition for review,<sup>22</sup> or, in fact, by an entire failure to return the list if there is a good and unimpeachable excuse for such failure.<sup>23</sup> In several states, on the other hand, the taxpayer's neglect to comply with this requirement, although it may entail other consequences, such as the imposition of a penalty or a fine, will not deprive him of the right to appeal to the board of review.<sup>24</sup>

Warwick, etc., Water Co., 28 R. I. 570, 68 Atl. 577 (holding that where the assessors prescribe a time for the making of returns within which it is impossible for the taxpayer to make a return of ratable estate owned by it on the day of the assessment, the taxpayer is not deprived of his right to defend against a tax illegally assessed against him by reason of his failure to return an account of his taxable property). And see Edwards Mfg. Co. v. Farrington, 102 Me. 140, 66 Atl. 309, holding that, in order to justify a failure to furnish the assessor with a list of taxable property at the time appointed, as required by statute, the applicant for abatement must show that he was unable to offer it at the time appointed; and the fact that the applicant in good faith supposed himself to be a non-resident, and had been so regarded by the assessors for a series of years, does not justify his omission to furnish such list, if in fact he was a resident and liable to taxation as such.

Want of authority to assess.—A person whom the assessors have no authority to assess at all, if enrolled and assessed, may contest the tax at any time, and is not estopped therefrom by neglecting to return the list required by law. St. Paul v. Merritt, 7 Minn. 258.

d. Estoppel or Waiver<sup>25</sup> — (I) IN GENERAL. A taxpayer is estopped to object to the form or substance of his assessment where it has been made in compliance with his own request or directions or on the basis of his own list or inventory.<sup>26</sup> An appeal from an assessment, calling in question the amount justly due, is a waiver of any irregularities in the form or manner of the assessment.<sup>27</sup>

(II) BY PAYMENT OR TENDER OF TAXES. It has been held that payment of taxes without protest is a waiver of any invalidity or irregularity in the assessment.<sup>28</sup> But one is not estopped to object to an irregular or improper assessment on particular property by the mere fact that taxes similarly assessed upon it for several previous years have been paid without objection.<sup>29</sup>

(III) BY FAILURE TO OBJECT. A taxpayer who discovers errors, irregularities, or injustice in his assessment must take steps to have it corrected by the assessor or by the board of review, or otherwise according to the remedies which the law gives him, and if he neglects to do this, when he has an opportunity, he will not be allowed afterward to raise objections to the assessment,<sup>30</sup> except where

The action of the cashier of a national bank in giving in to the officers of the city for taxation against the bank a number of the shares of its stock, taxable under the laws of the state to the stock-holders, does not estop a receiver subsequently appointed for the bank, but before the tax is paid, from setting up the mistake. *Wilmington v. he has been prevented from making such objection by a failure to give him notice, or by other omission of duty on the part of the assessor or board of review.<sup>31</sup> But this rule does not apply where the assessment is entirely void for want of authority to make it or on account of some fundamental error.<sup>32</sup>

4. CREATION AND ORGANIZATION OF BOARD — a. In General. The legislature has implied authority to create state and county boards of equalization and review,<sup>33</sup> or it may authorize their appointment by the executive<sup>34</sup> or judicial officers.<sup>35</sup> If such a board is illegally appointed, or never holds a meeting to effect an organization, taxpayers are under no obligation to file complaints or petitions before it,<sup>36</sup> but a person who appears before the board and seeks a correction of his assessment thereby waives any objection to the validity of the board's organization or the title of the members to their office.<sup>37</sup>

b. Qualification of Members. If the officer, or a majority of those acting as a board of equalization, do not possess the statutory qualifications or have no legal title to their office, the actions of the officer or board will be void;<sup>38</sup> but it is otherwise where this objection applies only to one member or to a minority, in which case no objection can be raised to the action of the board in any collateral proceeding.<sup>39</sup> Although the members of the board are required to be sworn, their official actions are not invalidated by the fact that the records fail to show that they took the oath of office.<sup>40</sup>

c. Power to Act by Majority or by Committees. The duties of an officer or board of equalization are judicial in their character and cannot be delegated to third persons, except as to merely clerical details, but must be performed by the officer or board as such.<sup>41</sup> The board, however, may act by a committee of its

In General. Officers or boards of this kind are generally vested with authority to equalize assessments and to review individual assessments, on the application of parties in interest, and correct any mistakes, defects, or erroneous valuations therein.<sup>45</sup> But their authority is entirely statutory and must be strictly confined to the limits marked out by the statute and exercised in conformity therewith.<sup>46</sup> Furthermore, their jurisdiction may depend on the fact of an assessment having been made, on the situs of the particular property, the residence of the owner, or other such considerations, and such jurisdiction is not presumed, but the necessary facts must appear on the record.<sup>47</sup> This jurisdiction is also, in general, appellate only, and where it depends on some precedent action of the taxpayer, or on the denial of relief by some inferior officer or board, it will be strictly construed.<sup>48</sup> Where the statute directs the mode of assessing or valuing particular property, the board has no power to change an assessment made in accordance therewith.<sup>49</sup> And moreover, where the board is created for the purpose of reviewing assessments of particular classes of property, such as corporate property in general or the property of railroad companies, it will possess, as to that kind of property, the ordinary powers of a board of review, but will have no jurisdiction over assessments of any other property.<sup>50</sup>

What property may be added.—The board may add omitted property of railroads as well as of private individuals. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. v. Guenther, 19 Fed. 395. And it may also add property temporarily converted into non-taxable securities with intent to evade the law (Crowder v. Riggs, 153 Ind. 158, 53 N. E. 1019), but not property which was intentionally and deliberately omitted by the assessors because they believed it was not taxable (People v. Schoonover, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 576, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 498 [reversed on other grounds in 47 N. Y. App. Div. 278, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 180 (affirmed in 166 N. Y. 629, 60 N. E. 1118)]; Marsh v. Bowen, 12 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 1; Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 242), nor property which actually bears its share of the tax, although accredited to the wrong item in the tax return (Woll v. Thomas, 1 Ind. App. 232, 27 N. E. 578). The board has power to add omitted property, although no property at all was assessed to the owner and his name does not appear on the assessment roll. Horton v. Driskell, 13 Wyo.

for taxing purposes.<sup>53</sup> Such an additional assessment made by the board should be made as of the time when it should have been made originally,<sup>54</sup> and before the time fixed by law for the adjournment of the board.<sup>55</sup> On this question of omitted property, the taxpayer's sworn list or inventory is not conclusive on the board.<sup>56</sup>

(II) ASSESSMENT FOR PRIOR YEARS. Where the statutes empower the officers or board of equalization to add omitted property to the assessment list, they are not generally restricted to the taxes of the current year but are authorized to assess back taxes on such property, within the limitations of the statute.<sup>57</sup> But a statute granting this authority will not be construed as retroactive;<sup>58</sup> and it gives the board no power to revise and increase an assessment of property for former years, on the theory that the assessment was too low and was therefore to be regarded as an omission.<sup>59</sup>

(III) DIRECTING ASSESSOR TO ASSESS. In some jurisdictions, where the board of equalization lacks authority to make an original assessment of property which it discovers to have been omitted from the roll, it may still direct the assessor to assess such property, and the latter officer will be bound to act on the instructions of the board, although exercising his own judgment and discretion as to details.<sup>60</sup>

c. Change of Valuation or Amount of Tax. In reviewing an individual assessment, the board of equalization is bound neither by the valuation placed on the property by its owner nor by that of the assessor, and does not act as an arbitrator between these two parties, but as an official body charged with the duty of ascertaining the true taxable value of the property, and therefore it may make such changes in the assessment as are necessary to carry its determination into effect.<sup>61</sup> But county boards have no authority to change valuations made by the state board on property committed to the exclusive jurisdiction of the latter;<sup>62</sup> and generally an appeal does not lie from one board of equalization to another, each possessing its own well-defined jurisdiction and authority.<sup>63</sup>

d. Increase of Valuation or Tax. Ordinarily the officer or board of equalization is restricted to correcting assessments alleged to be excessive, and has no authority to increase valuations previously made by the assessor or other proper

Contra.—Houghton v. Austin, 47 Cal. 646.

The state board of equalization has power to increase or reduce the valuation of railroad property as well as other property. Braden v. Union Trust Co., 25 Kan. 362.

Necessity of valuation by assessor.—A board of equalization cannot place a valuation on property for assessment which has been returned by the assessor without having any value placed on it. Lyman v. Howe, 64 Ark. 436, 42 S. W. 830.

Change of valuation between assessment periods.—Annual boards of equalization may change the appraisal in any one year of the decennial periods, but such revaluation must be based upon some change of value or condition. Black v. Hagerty, 16 Ohio Cir. Ct. 255, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 93. But in equalizing values and correcting errors made by the decennial appraisers a board of review must at all times be guided and controlled by values as they existed at the time of making the decennial appraisal, and not by values as at present existing. National Land, etc., Co. v. Davies, 29 Ohio Cir. Ct. 334 [affirmed in 76 Ohio St. 407, 81 N. E. 755]. As to apportionment of valuation between owner of surface and owner of coal, when coal is conveyed after the decennial appraisal see Johnson v. Lacey, 30 Ohio Cir. Ct. 619.

A resolution of a town meeting reducing an annual military tax is ineffectual. Atwater v. O'Reilly, 81 Conn. 367, 71 Atl. 505.

officer;<sup>64</sup> but under most statutes such officer or board has at least a limited authority to increase the valuation placed on any piece of property, if satisfied that it is too low.<sup>65</sup> But this action must be based on sound and sufficient reasons,

Wasco County*, 2 Oreg. 206; Leach v. Blakely, 34 Vt. 134. But see People v. Wells, 91 N. Y. App. Div. 172, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 309.

Back taxes.—An understatement by a taxpayer of the extent or value of his taxable property, even if intentional, does not warrant the board of equalization in going back and levying taxes on the difference between the listed and the actual extent or value, under their authority to assess "omitted" property, at least after payment of the taxes originally assessed. Sudderth v. Brittain, 76 N. C. 458. And see Florer v. Sherwood, 128 Ind. 495, 28 N. E. 71; Williams v. Segur, 106 Ind. 368, 1 N. E. 707; Donch v. Lake County, 4 Ind. App. 374, 30 N. E. 204. But see National Storage Co. v. Jersey City, 50 N. J. L. 141, 11 Atl. 348.

Increase after reduction.—Where the board has reduced the valuation of property at the instance of the owner, it has no jurisdiction subsequently to increase the valuation, at least without notice. *Manson L. & T. Increasing all valuations.—A city council, sitting as a board of equalization, has no authority to raise the assessed value of all the property of the city by raising the aggregate value of each assessment a certain per cent. Kittle v. Shervin, 11 Nebr. 65, 7 N. W. 861. But where assessments are relatively equal, but at much less than the true value of the property, the board of review cannot increase the valuation of the property of one taxpayer without increasing in proportion the valuation of the property of the other taxpayers. Hixon v. Eagle River, 91 Wis. 649, 65 N. W. 366.

and cannot be taken arbitrarily;<sup>66</sup> nor is the board justified in any case in raising the valuation of property above its true cash value,<sup>67</sup> or in taking this action without notice to the individual affected.<sup>68</sup>

e. Reduction of Valuation or Tax. If fully satisfied that the assessment of an individual is too high, through error or injustice, the officer or board of equalization generally has power to correct it by reducing the valuation or abating the tax proportionally,<sup>69</sup> provided the owner duly and seasonably applies for relief.<sup>70</sup> In some states also this board is empowered to reduce the assessment where the property in question has been destroyed or materially injured, or its value exhausted or diminished, since the assessment was made.<sup>71</sup>

Gross increase.—A board of equalization may not make a gross increase in the aggregate valuation of property, where the list returned by the assessor has several different items therein; and such an increase cannot be upheld by evidence that in equalizing the assessment it added items to the list as returned by the assessor and increased the items listed. *Nashville Lumber Co. v. Ground of application for relief.—If the complainant's property is not assessed above its fair cash value, no abatement can be allowed because other like property is assessed at less than its fair cash value. Lowell v. Middlesex County, 152 Mass. 372, 25 N. E. 469, 9 L. R. A. 356. f. Remission of Tax and Striking Off Names or Property.<sup>72</sup> In some states a limited authority is given to the board of equalization or review to remit or release taxes for particular reasons; <sup>73</sup> but as a general rule they have no power to strike out the name of any person from the assessment roll as prepared by the assessors, or to cancel the assessment on any item of property, for the reason that they believe it to be exempt or for any other cause.<sup>74</sup>

g. Correction of Errors and Defects. Statutes empowering the board of equalization or other reviewing officers to correct errors and defects in the assessment roll will authorize them to amend assessments made in the wrong name, mistaken or defective descriptions, errors of computation, and the like; <sup>75</sup> but this power of amendment is generally to be restricted to such errors as are apparent on an examination of the roll without extrinsic evidence, and does not extend to the correction of an error of the assessors in making the assessment, or to any substantial error of judgment or of law.<sup>76</sup>

h. Reassessment.<sup>77</sup> In some of the states authority is given to the board of equalization to order a reassessment of property in case it is found that the original assessment was invalid or fatally defective.<sup>78</sup> But this cannot be done simply on the ground of an undervaluation, where the assessment was made in good faith and was accepted without any steps taken to review it, and the taxes were paid.<sup>79</sup>

6. MEETINGS OF BOARD — a. Time and Place of Meetings — (i) IN GENERAL. Some cases maintain the rule that a statute requiring the board of equalization to meet on a designated day is mandatory and must be literally complied with;<sup>80</sup> but the doctrine generally accepted is that the failure of the board to convene and begin its sessions at the appointed time is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the tax, provided no one is deprived of his opportunity to appear before them and be heard.<sup>81</sup> The board may continue its sessions by adjournments taken from time to time.<sup>82</sup> If it is required to sit from day to day, or to remain

rect any clerical or other error in the assessment or tax books does not include errors of judgment on the part of the assessors, but is meant to cover all cases where the record does not disclose the true facts, and in which the matter of judgment is not involved); *Hernance v. Proceedings.—Under the Alabama statute, where a tax commissioner makes a reassessment, he is required to return it to the commissioners' court, which, if satisfied that there has been no undervaluation, dismisses the proceeding; but if not so satisfied notice must be given to the taxpayer, as required by statute, and the commissioners must then proceed as in other cases of undervaluation. State v. Sloss-Sheffield Steel, etc., Co., 162 Ala. 234, 50 So. 366. In such a case the question before the commissioners' court is not whether the reassessment by the commissioner is proper, but whether the assessment by the tax assessor is correct. *State v. in continuous session, an interruption of the session will not be a fatal defect if enough time is given for the hearing and determination of all objections;<sup>83</sup> and it may hold special meetings at times properly appointed and of which due notice is given.<sup>84</sup> If it is required to complete its work within a limited number of days, business days only are to be counted, Sundays being excluded.<sup>85</sup> But where the statute expressly limits the time during which the board may act, its power ceases with the expiration of that time, and any changes in the assessment roll made afterward are illegal.<sup>86</sup> So also are changes made prematurely, that is, before the board is legally organized or before the time appointed for it to begin its labors.<sup>87</sup> The board should also sit at the very place appointed for it by law; but a slight departure from the law in this respect, such as holding the meeting in another room in the same building, will not invalidate the proceedings, if no one was misled or deprived of his opportunity to appear.<sup>88</sup>

b. Time and Place For Objections or Application For Review. A taxpayer aggrieved by his assessment must present his objections to the board of equalization, or file his application for a review, at the appointed time and place, or within the time limited by law, or he will lose his right to claim relief.<sup>90</sup> But on the other hand, no regulation or procedure of the board can deprive him of the full time allowed him by law for this purpose.<sup>91</sup>

7. PROCEEDINGS BEFORE OFFICER OR BOARD OF REVIEW — a. Procedure in General. The proceedings before an officer or board of equalization are not governed by the rules of practice prevailing in ordinary civil suits, and minor irregularities or informalities do not vitiate them, the only essential matters being that the officer or board shall keep within his or its jurisdiction and that taxpayers shall be given a full opportunity to appear and present their grievances.<sup>92</sup> Nor is this proceeding one in which a trial by jury can be claimed as of right.<sup>93</sup> If the statute makes no provision for a new trial or rehearing, the officer or board cannot grant one.<sup>94</sup>

(II) REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY. It is generally held that personal notice to taxpayers is not necessary where a public statute, of which all persons are bound to take notice, specifies the day and place where the board of equalization shall meet, this being sufficient notice to give the board jurisdiction over any particular assessment.<sup>98</sup> And it has also been held that a published general

W. 645, 1039, holding that the requirement that notice shall be given of the meetings of the city and state boards of equalization is directory, and that a failure to give such notice is no defense to a tax unless it is shown to have resulted prejudicially.

Exceptional cases.—Notice to individual taxpayers is not required before making a change in the entire assessment of a taxing district. Hallo v. Helmer, 12 Nebr. 87, 10 N. W. 568; Dundy v. Richardson County, 8 Nebr. 508, 1 N. W. 565. Nor is it necessary to give special notice of a transfer of a personal property assessment from one township to another, where the assessment is not increased. Ellis v. People, 199 Ill. 548, 65 N. E. 428. Nor is notice necessary where the board of review is to act entirely upon its own knowledge of the property and opinion as to its value, without hearing evidence. Collier v. Morrow, 90 Ga. 148, 15 S. E. 768. And so where a statute provides for the construction of a system of sewers in a city, and the levy of assessments therefor according to area, without regard to improvements, the levy of the assessment is a mere mathematical computation, and if full notice is provided for as to all prior proceedings, it is not necessary that the act should provide an opportunity for lot owners to be heard on the assessments after they are levied. Gillette v. Denver, 21 Fed. 822.

Failure to give notice.—Where a tax law provides an opportunity for the taxpayer to be heard but notice thereof is not given, and the assessing officer refuses to hear any complaint, the statute is not invalid on that account, but the tax is voidable and the assessment if attacked in due form and in due time will be set aside for the irregularity. *People v. Incorrect description of statute.—An assessment valid under the act in force at the time is not invalidated by the fact that the tax commissioners, in their notice to the property-owner, incorrectly describe the statute under which they assumed to act in making the assessment. People v. Barker, 35 N. Y. App. Div. 486, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 848 [affirmed in 159 N. Y. 569, 54 N. E. 1093].

L. 186, 56 Atl. 138; Everett Water Co. v. Fleming, 26 Wash. 364, 67 Pac. 82; Lewis v. Bishop, 19 Wash. 312, 53 Pac. 165. Compare Anderton v. Pawtucket Tax Assessors, (R. I. 1909) 71 Atl. 797, holding that an increase in the valuation of property is not illegal because a notice to persons to bring in statements of their taxable property, made the time therefor include, contrary to law, days prior to the assessment, where the objecting owner made no statement at any time and is not prejudiced by the notice.

If the statute does not prescribe a definite number of days' notice, the notice given must be sufficient to allow for a full and fair hearing. Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69. And it is not sufficient if it requires the taxpayer to appear the next day. Wells v. Adair, 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 783, 29 Cinc. L. Bul. 205.

Notice before decision.—The notice must be given before the board decides on the change to be made in the assessment; it is not sufficient to make the change and then give notice to show cause against it. Jersey City v. State Bd. of Equalization, 74 N. J. L. 753, 67 Atl. 38 [reversing 74 N. J. L. 382, 65 Atl. 903]; State v. Anderson, 38 N. J. L. 82. But compare Cleaveland County v. the nature of the change proposed to be made in the assessment.<sup>4</sup> The provisions of the statute must also be followed in regard to the manner of serving or giving the notice.<sup>5</sup>

(III) PERSONS NOTIFIED. Where personal notice is required it ordinarily must be served on the owner of the property to be affected,<sup>6</sup> or his agent,<sup>7</sup> or executor or administrator.<sup>8</sup> In case of a corporation service may be had on any officer of the company authorized to accept notice,<sup>9</sup> and need not be made on the individual stock-holders.<sup>10</sup>

(IV) WAIVER OF NOTICE. A voluntary appearance of a taxpayer or his agent before the officer or board of equalization or review, for the purpose of obtaining relief against the assessment or contesting a proposed increase of it, is a waiver of notice or of any objections to the form or service of the notice.<sup>11</sup> But not so where the appearance by the taxpayer or his counsel is only for the

is not necessarily judged by the strict rules of pleading, it must clearly and definitely set forth the grounds on which the revisory power of the officer or board is invoked and show on its face that the petitioner is entitled to relief;<sup>18</sup> but if it is informal or irregular, it may be amended,<sup>19</sup> or any objections to its form or substance may be waived, by the reviewing officers' receiving and filing it.<sup>20</sup>

d. Answer and Reply. According to the practice in some states where a citation issues to a taxpayer requiring him to show cause why his land shall not be sold for delinquent taxes or his assessment shall not be increased, he is to file a written answer,<sup>21</sup> which has the evidential force of a pleading, that is, if its allegations are sufficient and are admitted no judgment of increase can be given.<sup>22</sup> But as the ordinary rules of pleading do not apply in proceedings of this kind, no reply to such an answer is considered necessary.<sup>23</sup>

Who may file complaint.—A complaint filed before the board of review by the clerk of the board, although filed under its order, is not such a complaint as the statute intends, for it must be filed by an owner of real estate interested in a new assessment. *Davies v. e. Evidence — (i) PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF.<sup>24</sup> On appeal to the board of equalization, the assessor's decision as to the situs of property, its taxability, and the valuation put upon it is presumed to be correct until the contrary appears,<sup>25</sup> and the party complaining must assume the burden of proving his grievance by satisfactory evidence.<sup>26</sup> It will also be presumed on appeal that any action taken by the board of equalization was based on proper and sufficient evidence.<sup>27</sup>

(ii) ADMISSIBILITY. If the statute prescribes the kind of evidence which the officer or board may hear, or on which his or its decision shall be based, it must be strictly obeyed;<sup>28</sup> but otherwise the officer or board is not bound by the ordinary rules of evidence, and may hear affidavits or unsworn testimony without giving an opportunity for cross-examination;<sup>29</sup> and, generally, it may admit and act upon any evidence which has a direct bearing on the question before the board or tends to prove the fact in issue.<sup>30</sup> But evidence as to the value of the

Applications.—The amount of insurance carried by a merchant on his stock in trade is evidence of its value which may be considered by the board. People v. Feitner, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 305, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 798 [affirmed in 62 N. Y. App. Div. 618, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 1145]. An inventory of an estate sworn to and filed by the administra-

property should be confined to its value at the time of the assessment complained of, and evidence of its value at some former time is not admissible except as a starting point from which to estimate subsequent appreciation or depreciation.<sup>31</sup> Evidence of the assessed valuation of other property in the same town or district and similarly situated is not generally considered to be admissible,<sup>32</sup> except that it may be admitted for the purpose of showing a rule of the assessors to value all such property at a certain percentage of its actual value and to show whether or not such rule was observed in the case complained of.<sup>33</sup> The members of the board of review are not required to inspect the property in person, but they may send experts to examine it.<sup>34</sup>

(III) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY. The affidavit or sworn statement of the taxpayer is evidence to be considered by the board of review, and while it is not conclusive, still if it is not contradicted or impeached by evidence, it must be accepted as correct;<sup>35</sup> and the same is true of schedules or reports filed by corporations.<sup>36</sup> And on the other hand, the assessor's sworn statement is sufficient to sustain the action of the board, taken in accordance with it, if not overborne by testimony.<sup>37</sup> Aside from these considerations, any evidence which has a direct bearing on the question of value may serve as the basis of the board's determination, if uncontradicted.<sup>38</sup> But in case of a conflict in the testimony the ordinary rules of evidence apply, and the decision should be given in accordance with the clear preponderance of testimony.<sup>39</sup>

tor in the probate court is competent evidence of the value of the estate. Erie County v. Walker, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 558, 22 Cinc. L. Bul. 106. So also the inspectors' report made to assist the assessor in his valuation of land is admissible as to its value. T. B. Scott Lumber Co. v. Oneida County, 72 Wis. 158, 39 N. W. 343. (IV) DECISION NOT BASED ON EVIDENCE. In some states the board of equalization may act upon the assessments within its jurisdiction without hearing any evidence, and merely upon the knowledge or opinions of its members as to the value of property.<sup>40</sup> But in other states the rule is otherwise; and the board is empowered to act only upon evidence adduced before it, and no assessment can be changed except upon evidence;<sup>41</sup> and furthermore, the action of the board will be illegal if taken arbitrarily without any evidence or contrary to all the evidence before it.<sup>42</sup>

(V) POWER TO CALL WITNESSES AND COMPEL TESTIMONY. The officer or board of equalization, under the statutes generally in force, has power to administer oaths and to summon witnesses and require them to testify,<sup>43</sup> including the complainant himself, the penalty of his refusal to answer being the denial of all relief.<sup>44</sup> Under some statutes the board also has power to require the production of books and papers for its inspection.<sup>45</sup>

Objections to questions.—The mere fact that the questions asked by the tax commissioners are inquisitorial is no ground for a refusal to answer, since the examination is of necessity inquisitorial, and the materiality of the questions is for the determination of the commissioners, and not for the complainant. People v. Feitner, 58 N. Y. App. Div. 468, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 410.

f. Judgment or Decision and Record — (i) SCOPE AND EXTENT OF RELIEF. The board of equalization, in granting relief, is generally limited to the scope of the application made to it,<sup>46</sup> although in some jurisdictions it has power to increase an assessment instead of reducing it.<sup>47</sup> If the valuation is found to be merely excessive, it may be set aside as to the excess and affirmed as to the residue;<sup>48</sup> but if the assessment is arbitrary and fraudulent, it should be vacated entirely, and not merely as to the excess.<sup>49</sup> There is generally no authority to award costs to the successful applicant for relief,<sup>50</sup> or to allow him interest on so much of the tax as is adjudged excessive, where the whole has been paid under protest.<sup>51</sup>

(ii) RENDITION AND FORM OF DECISION. The decision of an officer or board of equalization is usually in the form of a resolution or order, and while it should specify the persons or property affected,<sup>52</sup> it is not to be judged by strict rules, and will not be invalidated by any informality, provided it shows clearly what action was taken by the board.<sup>53</sup> Although the courts will not interfere with the discretion of the board, it may be compelled by mandamus to take up and decide any particular complaint.<sup>54</sup> Formal notice to the taxpayer of the decision of the board is not generally required.<sup>55</sup>

(iii) RECORD OF PROCEEDINGS — (A) In General. If the statute requires the board of equalization to keep a record of its proceedings and enter thereon the action taken in particular cases, it is generally held mandatory, and a disregard of it fatal to the validity of its determinations.<sup>56</sup> The record when made must show affirmatively upon its face the jurisdiction of the officer or board and that he or they acted within the same;<sup>57</sup> but in other respects it will be aided by all reasonable presumptions,<sup>58</sup> and irregularities, informalities, or clerical errors in the record, or in the manner of preparing or keeping it, will not invalidate the proceeding.<sup>63</sup> It must be accepted and obeyed by the officer whose duty it is to make the changes in the assessment roll which are ordered by the board, and he cannot question or review its decisions, but mandamus lies to compel him to perform the simple ministerial duty which the decision of the board imposes on him.<sup>64</sup> It is also binding on the collector of taxes, and conversely it will protect

Liability of property to taxation.—On the question whether particular property is liable to taxation or is exempt by law the decision of the board of equalization is not conclusive. Johnson County v. Johnson, 173 Ind. 76, 89 N. E. 590; Horne v. Green, 52 Miss. 452; Potter v. Ross, 23 N. J. L. 517.

Application of doctrine of res judicata in general.—The rule of res judicata in reference to tax assessments rests upon the same basis as in the case of other judgments; and one who relies on the conclusiveness of an assessment must be able to show that all his property was before the board of review when his assessment was settled, for any of it which was not brought to the attention of the board was not in issue before it and of course not adjudicated. Adams v. Clarke, 80 Miss. 134, 31 So. 216. For the same reason orders of the board made in proceedings to which a city was not a party are not res judicata as to the city. People v. Priest, 41 Misc. (N. Y.) 545, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 235. So also the decision of the board as to the assessment of property for the taxes of a given year is not binding on the same board or its successors when the question is as to the assessment of the same property in succeeding years. The opinion of the assessor that the acts of the board of equalization in changing the valuations in the assessment roll were irregular and void will not excuse him from assessing the taxes according to such changed valuations, since the opinion of an officer that the acts of his superior are void does not relieve him from the performance of a statutory duty based on such acts. State Tax Com'rs v. Quinn, 125 Mich. 128, 84 N. W.

him in the discharge of his duties, if he acts within it.<sup>65</sup> But it may be reviewed and reversed by the courts when shown to have been given without jurisdiction or otherwise to be wholly illegal,<sup>66</sup> and also where shown to have been fraudulent, malicious, or entirely arbitrary.<sup>67</sup> Such decision may also, by statute in some of the states, be reviewed by the courts on the ground of error, but in that case it will not be disturbed unless very clearly shown to have been erroneous.<sup>68</sup> And under some statutes the board of equalization itself has power, on notice to the complainant, to reopen its decision, which has been rendered without proper jurisdiction, and render a proper one.<sup>69</sup>

(B) Presumption of Regularity. In proceeding to review an order or decision of the board of equalization, there is a presumption that the board discharged its functions properly and that its proceedings were duly and regularly taken, which presumption must be overcome by the party complaining.<sup>70</sup>

g. Mode of Correction of Assessment. The changes and corrections ordered by the board of equalization should be duly entered in the books or rolls containing the original assessment,<sup>71</sup> by a proper officer or clerk; <sup>72</sup> and, if the law so requires, a statement of the facts on which the change was ordered should be filed at the same time.<sup>73</sup> Omitted property, if ordered by the board to be assessed, may be entered nunc pro tunc.<sup>74</sup>

C. Judicial Remedies For Review and Correction of Assessments —

1. JURISDICTION AND POWERS OF COURTS — a. In General. The courts have no jurisdiction to revise and change assessments of property for taxation duly made by the proper officers, in any collateral proceeding or in any direct proceeding except where authorized by statute, on grounds of irregularity, error, or excessive valuation.<sup>75</sup> They may always inquire into the jurisdiction of the assessors and board of equalization, and set aside their decisions if found to have been made

And the question whether a cestui que trust whose estate is sought to be assessed in such a proceeding against a trustee is a resident of the county in which the proceeding is brought, as alleged in the petition, is not placed in issue by an averment in the answer of want of knowledge or information sufficient to constitute a belief on that subject in the mind courts have no jurisdiction or authority to entertain an appeal after the time limited by law.<sup>92</sup>

c. Parties. A proceeding for the assessment and collection of a tax is between the taxpayer and the state or municipality levying the tax, so that an appeal may be taken either by the person whose property is affected by the assessment complained of<sup>93</sup> or by the state or municipality;<sup>94</sup> and in the former case the county or other municipal corporation is the proper party defendant, and not the board of equalization whose judgment is appealed from.<sup>95</sup>

Inequality, as a ground for relief under this statute, means that the relator's assessment is made at a higher proportionate valuation than the assessment of other property on the same roll by the same officers, and this must be something more than a valuation disproportionate to that placed upon a few other pieces of property in the same vicinity. In re Corwin, 135 N. Y. 245, 32

N. E. 16; People v. Carter, 109 N. Y. 576, 17 N. E. 222; People v. Feitner, 95 N. Y. App. Div. 217, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 694 [affirmed in 180 N. Y. 536, 72 N. E. 1148]. But where it appears that all the other property is assessed at only one fifth of its value, although this is in violation of the statutory direction that property shall be assessed at its full value, yet, as the law requires an unequal assessment to be made proportional with the others, the relator's assessment will be reduced accordingly. People v. Ganley, 131 N. Y. 566, 30 N. E. 64 [affirmed in 56 Hun 639, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 563].

But where a local assessment has been appealed to and passed upon successively by the county board and the state board, certiorari will not lie to the local authorities, as the proper procedure is to bring up the judgment of the state board and the proceedings before that board. *People's Inv. Effect of mistaken claim by taxpayer.—A railroad company appeared by its attorney on grievance day, to obtain a review of its assessment, and filed an affidavit in which the attorney stated the rule of law by which he claimed the assessors should be governed in valuing the company's real estate, but the rule so stated was erroneous. Thereafter the company brought certiorari to review the assessment, and it was held not to be bound by the argument or rule set forth in such affidavit, so as to be precluded from obtaining relief on a different theory. People v. Garmon, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 350, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 819.

harm might result from setting aside the assessment.<sup>41</sup> Payment of the taxes under protest does not generally bar the prosecution of proceedings by certiorari.<sup>42</sup>

d. Persons Entitled to Review. The writ may issue on the relation of any individual taxpayer who is injured or aggrieved by his particular assessment,<sup>43</sup> although it has been held that he must show that he has some peculiar interest in the controversy which is not common to all the taxpayers on the roll.<sup>44</sup> Two or more persons will commonly be permitted to join in the application if they complain of the same alleged error or inequality and are affected by it in the same way.<sup>45</sup> But stock-holders in a corporation cannot have certiorari to review an assessment of the property of the corporation;<sup>46</sup> nor can the corporation thus obtain a review of the assessment of its stock in the hands of the individual shareholders.<sup>47</sup>

e. Parties Defendant. The writ of certiorari should go to the officer or board having the custody of the record or papers sought to be reviewed, and hence ordinarily to the assessors or board of assessors,<sup>48</sup> even after they have parted with control of the assessment roll;<sup>49</sup> or it may go to the collector of taxes if the f. Time of Taking Proceedings. Where the statute prescribes a period within which application must be made for a writ of certiorari to review assessments, it is mandatory, and the writ must be refused if the application comes too late; <sup>52</sup> and independently of statute, the laches of the relator will be ground for denying him relief, <sup>53</sup> except in cases where he had no notice of the proceedings, for in that event the statutory limitation does not apply and he is not chargeable with laches if he acts with reasonable promptness after discovering the assessment.<sup>54</sup>

g. Petition. Statutory certiorari to review an action of tax assessors is substantially a new trial of the matters decided by them; the petition is the complaint, and the return the answer, and general rules of pleading are applicable.<sup>55</sup> The petition or application for certiorari to review a tax assessment may state conclusions of fact without supporting evidence; <sup>56</sup> but it must show clearly and directly the grounds of objection to the assessment on which the relator relies, <sup>57</sup> and that he is injured or prejudiced by the assessment as it stands.<sup>58</sup> If it is claimed that the assessment is illegal, the petition must set forth specifically, and not by way of inference or implication, in what the alleged illegality consists.<sup>59</sup> If it is claimed that relator's assessment is unequal because at a higher proportionate valuation than other property, instances of such inequality should be set forth in the petition.<sup>60</sup> And if relief is sought on the ground of overvaluation, it is not enough to state merely the relator's opinion as to the value of the property, but such facts in regard to its value must be set forth as will make out a prima facie case.<sup>61</sup> It is also proper, and probably necessary, to show that the relator is not chargeable with any negligence in failing to obtain a correction of his assessment by the assessors or the board of review.<sup>62</sup> But the court will not require the taxes to be paid as a condition to granting the writ.<sup>63</sup>

In Wisconsin the rule is stated to be that the court cannot investigate the evidence on which the board of review acted and vacate the ruling of the board on the ground that it is contrary to such evidence, but can only determine whether there is a reasonable basis, from the standpoint of the board, for its decision, and if there is such basis the determination of the board must be sustained. *State v. Where a number of certiorari proceedings are brought by distinct sets of relators to review assessments of various parcels of property, and the testimony of experts is necessary, and it will be difficult to bring them together for the purposes of trial in court, the court in the exercise of its discretion may send the proceedings to various referees under orders containing provisions for expediting the proceedings. People v. Feitner, 53 Misc. (N. Y.) 334, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 794.

Findings of referee.—Under a statute providing that where the validity of a tax assessment is disputed, it may be submitted to a referee and his report shall constitute part of the proceedings on which the court may determine its validity, the findings of the referee are not conclusive on the court. *People v. Y. Consol. Laws, c. 60, § 290) provides that the testimony in such cases may be taken by a referee and reported with his conclusions, the final determination as to the correctness of the assessing officer's valuation rests with the special term to which he reports and on appeal with the appellate division, and it is not merely the referee's report with the annexed proof which the court has to review but the decision of the special term with all matters upon which it is founded. People v. State Tax Com'rs, 196 N. Y. 39, 89 N. E. 581 [modifying 128 N. Y. App. Div. 13, 112 N. Y. Suppl. 392], 197 N. Y. 33, 90 N. E. 112.

to the proper amount;<sup>84</sup> or it may reverse the decision of the assessing officers and remit the case for a new assessment.<sup>85</sup> If the assessment is found to be entirely illegal, the proper course is to order it stricken from the roll.<sup>86</sup> On the other hand, if the decision is against the relator, the court may give judgment for the taxes found to be due.<sup>87</sup> But ordering the municipal officers to refund an excess of taxes already paid by the relator is generally a matter of statutory regulation and not within the jurisdiction of the court.<sup>88</sup> Bringing an assessment up for review on certiorari does not usually operate as a stay of proceedings for the collection of the tax.<sup>89</sup>

k. Appeal. Except in so far as regulated by special statute, an appeal from the decision of the court reviewing an assessment on certiorari is governed by the ordinary rules applicable to appeals in final orders.<sup>90</sup> The appellate court will not ordinarily interfere with the lower court's discretion,<sup>91</sup> and will not review the evidence, or at least will not reverse on this ground unless the want of evidence very clearly appears.<sup>92</sup>

l. Costs. If the proceedings result in favor of the respondents, they are entitled to their costs.<sup>93</sup> But the assessors whose action is under review are not to be made personally liable for costs unless it is shown that they acted with gross negligence or in bad faith;<sup>94</sup> and this is not to be imputed to them where they honestly applied their judgment, in a case not free from doubt, although their decision was wrong.<sup>95</sup>

4. MANDAMUS TO CORRECT ASSESSMENT<sup>96</sup> — a. Nature and Scope of Remedy —

(i) COMPELLING OFFICIAL ACTION. If assessors omit property from their lists which should have been assessed, mandamus lies on the relation either of the proper public officer or of an individual taxpayer to compel them to make an assessment of it, although their judgment as to the amount of the assessment will not be controlled by this writ.<sup>97</sup> Assessors may also be required in this manner to supply defects or correct informalities in the assessment roll,<sup>98</sup> to transfer property from the name of the original owner to the name of a purchaser thereof,<sup>99</sup> or to enter on the roll the changes ordered by the board of equalization.<sup>1</sup> In like manner the writ lies to compel the board of equalization to hear and determine complaints of taxpayers, although of course their judgment must be left free.<sup>2</sup> But even where this writ would otherwise be available, the right to it may be lost by the laches or unreasonable delay of the relator.<sup>3</sup> The writ will not go to the assessors or board after they have completed their work on the assessment roll and it has been placed in the hands of the collector.<sup>4</sup>

(ii) CORRECTING ERRORS IN ASSESSMENT. Mandamus does not lie to control any administrative officer in the discharge of duties which require the exercise of judgment and discretion on his part, but only to enforce the performance of a plain ministerial duty. Hence the writ will not be granted to enable a taxpayer to obtain a reduction of an assessment which he alleges to be excessive.<sup>5</sup>

But where the assessors have acted illegally and without jurisdiction, in assessing property which is not taxable or not within their territory, they may be required by mandamus to strike the assessment from the roll.<sup>6</sup> And so they may be required to deduct an unwarranted increase in the assessment, or otherwise to correct it when they have violated their plain statutory duty either in fixing it originally or in changing it contrary to law.<sup>7</sup> The correction of merely clerical or mathematical errors may also be obtained by means of this writ.<sup>8</sup>

b. Existence of Other Remedy. Mandamus is an extraordinary remedy and is not granted where the petitioner has a full and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law; hence this writ cannot be used as a means of correcting a tax assessment where there is an available and sufficient remedy by appeal or certiorari.<sup>9</sup>

5. INJUNCTION TO RESTRAIN ASSESSMENT — a. In General. Although injunction may be an appropriate remedy to prevent the collection of an illegal tax already assessed,<sup>10</sup> the courts set their faces strongly against the use of this writ to restrain an expected or intended but uncompleted assessment, the functions of assessors being quasi-judicial and the illegality or impropriety of the assessment not being ordinarily a matter of anticipation but a matter for consideration after the assessment is made;<sup>11</sup> nor will an assessment be restrained for mere irregularity

37. Buchanan v. McFarland, 31 App. Cas. (D. C.) 6; Dade County v. Hardee, 56 Fla. 243, 47 So. 350 (holding that the statutory remedy that, where payment of an assessment is refused because of illegality, the person assessed may apply to the circuit court, which, if it finds the assessment illegal, shall declare it not lawfully made, is limited to cases where payment is refused because of the illegality of the assessment and does not meet defects in the levy of the tax); U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Board of Assessors, 122 La. 139, 47 So. 442 (holding that where a taxpayer has been sued for money in possession when as a matter of fact he had no such money, and so stated in his return, the assessment will be canceled); Moffat v. Calvert County, 97 Md. 266, 54 Atl. 960 (holding that an error in naming a corporation assessed is not sufficient grounds for vacating the assessment).

Facts arising subsequent to the assessment cannot be made the basis of a proceeding to annul it. Tampa v. Kaunitz, 39 Fla. 683, 23 So. 416, 63 Am. St. Rep. 202. But compare Com. v. New York, etc., Coal Co., 1 Dauph. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 248.

Purpose to misapply funds raised by tax.—That county authorities have levied an unnecessarily large tax, with the purpose, as alleged in the complaint, of applying the excess to an unlawful use, does not justify a court of equity in setting aside the assessment, but it will wait until the authorities vote to expend the money in an unlawful manner, and then interfere by injunction. West v. Ballard, 32 Wis. 168.

38. Townsend v. New York, 77 N. Y. 542 (holding that to authorize an action to set aside a tax and cancel a lien on land as a cloud on title, the lien must be apparently valid and endanger the owner's title; and that the fact that the tax was unconstitutional is insufficient, as its invalidity will always appear); Trumbull v. Palmer, 104 N. Y. App. Div. 51, 93 N. Y. Suppl. 349 (holding that the invalidity of the assessment must be such as can only be shown by extrinsic evidence); Coxe v. Town, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 73.

Suit to remove cloud on title.—Notwithstanding a person, whose property has been encumbered by the levy of an illegal tax, has an opportunity to pay the same under duress or protest and thereby secure a remedy to recover back the money, he may at his election, while the tax roll is in the hands of the collector, sue to remove the cloud on the title and incidentally prevent the collection of the tax; and in such a suit an interim injunction should be granted restraining the enforcement of the tax where it is reasonably probable that plaintiff will recover on where an excessive valuation is fraudulently or wrongfully put upon the property.<sup>39</sup> But under the power now generally given by statute to the courts to correct irregularities and defects in assessments, such radical action will not be taken if it is possible to do equity by canceling the illegal part of an assessment and allowing the remainder to stand, reducing it to a just amount, apportioning the tax among different pieces of property or different owners when it has been erroneously assessed as a whole, or otherwise adjusting the assessment to the legal rights of the complainant.<sup>40</sup> Such an action must be brought within the time limited by the statute, if any.<sup>41</sup> The question of costs, except when regulated by statute, rests in the discretion of the court.<sup>42</sup>

b. Parties. An action to vacate an illegal assessment may be maintained by any one having a direct interest in the property and who may be affected by the taxes in question.<sup>43</sup> Generally the only necessary defendant is the municipal corporation levying the tax, and not administrative officers or any third persons.<sup>44</sup>

c. Pleading and Evidence. The presumption is in favor of the correctness and regularity of the assessment,<sup>45</sup> and the plaintiff must distinctly and specifically allege the errors or grounds of illegality on which he relies and assume the burden of proving them by competent and satisfactory evidence.<sup>46</sup>

d. Stay of Proceedings and Reassessment. In some states, by statute, if the court decides that the assessment should be vacated for reasons going to the ground-work of the tax and affecting all the property on the roll, it will stay all proceedings in the action until a general reassessment can be made.<sup>47</sup> If, however, the objections relied on and established affect only the particular assessment before the court, it may simply correct or adjust the complainant's assessment;<sup>48</sup> or if the action necessary to be taken in order to do justice to the complainant more properly belongs to the province of the assessors than to that of the court, those officers may be ordered to make a new assessment.<sup>49</sup>

effect must be clearly manifested in the statute, as the lien will neither be created by implication nor enlarged by construction.<sup>3</sup> Nor will a statutory provision of this kind be given a retrospective operation unless plainly required by its terms.<sup>4</sup> Further, the repeal of the statute will divest the liens which it created, unless they are expressly or impliedly preserved.<sup>5</sup>

Sufficiency of description of property to create lien see Watkins v. Couch, 134 Iowa 1, 111 N. W. 315.

Assessment against owner of land personally.—Under Tax Law, § 89, providing that unpaid taxes may be assessed against the land itself the next year after that for which they are delinquent, where unpaid taxes were assessed each year against the owner of land personally, they did not constitute a lien on the land, and hence a purchaser on foreclosure of a mortgage was not entitled to compel the referee to pay such taxes out of the proceeds of the sale. Greenfield v. Beaver, 30 Misc. 366, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 472.

b. Demand.<sup>7</sup> The lien of a tax exists independently of any demand made upon the taxpayer, and hence no such demand is necessary before suing to foreclose the lien.<sup>8</sup>

c. Recording or Registration. In some states, although a tax lien is good in favor of the state against the owner without recording or registry of it, this action is necessary to make it effective as against third persons.<sup>9</sup> But generally the only requirement is that the amount of the tax and the fact of its being delinquent shall be shown by the official tax books or records, or by some official certificate, so that persons interested in the property can ascertain by inspection the existence and amount of the lien.<sup>10</sup>

B. Property to Which Lien Attaches — 1. IN GENERAL. Where a statutory provision makes taxes a lien on particular kinds of property it will not be extended by construction so as to affect other kinds of property.<sup>11</sup> As a general rule the tax is a lien only on the specific piece or article or aggregate collection of property upon which it is assessed,<sup>12</sup> and binds only such property as is owned by the taxpayer at the time the taxes become delinquent or the lien attaches,<sup>13</sup> and only such property as is situate within the county or other taxing district.<sup>14</sup>

Tax on bank stock.—Where a statute imposes a tax on shares of stock in incorporated banks, and provides that the bank shall pay the tax, but it is intended that this shall be a mere method of collection and that the tax shall ultimately fall on the stock-holders, the tax does not attach as a lien on the property of the bank. Cleveland Trust Co. v. Lander, 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. 271, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 452. And see State v. Mayhew, 2 Gill (Md.) 487.

Railroad property.—All the property of a railroad being assessed as a unit, and the tax being due as a unit, the tax is a lien on all the property assessed. Maricopa, etc., R. Co. v. Arizona, 156 U. S. 347, 15 S. Ct. 391, 39 L. ed. 447.

Stock in trade.—A tax assessed on a stock of goods, which is afterward sold as a whole, is not a lien on additional goods added by the vendee, and where the original stock bought by the vendee is all sold out by him, the only things in his hands to which the tax lien attaches are the store fixtures. Chicago Bazaar Co. v. McNichols, 13 Colo. App. 154, 56 Pac. 672.

Property of non-residents.—If the property is assessable within the particular county or other tax district, it is generally immaterial, with respect to the creation of a tax lien on it, whether the owner is a resident or non-resident. Edwards v. Beard, 1 Ill. 70. See Harris v. Layport, 4 Nebr. (Unoff.) 636, 95 N. W. 851.

Change of county lines.—When, by a change of county boundaries made after land has been assessed for taxes, it falls into another county, the lien of the tax on the land still continues, and the tax collector of the old county may enforce the payment of the tax by sale. Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38, 85 Am. Dec. 94.

And of course the tax does not attach, as a lien, to property which the statute exempts from taxation.<sup>15</sup>

2. LIEN ON PERSONAL PROPERTY. Taxes on personal property do not constitute a lien upon it unless it is so declared by the statute.<sup>16</sup> But when such a lien is given it generally attaches to all the taxable personalty of the owner, and not separately to each item or piece of property for the tax assessed against that article.<sup>17</sup>

3. LIEN ON REAL ESTATE. According to the rules generally in force, the taxes assessed upon a particular parcel or tract of land are a lien upon that alone, and not upon other real estate of the same owner;<sup>18</sup> and if land is assessed to a person having an interest in it less than the fee, the lien generally attaches only to that interest, not to the fee.<sup>19</sup> The lien on land for taxes does not follow fixtures severed therefrom.<sup>20</sup>

4. TAXES AGAINST PERSONAL PROPERTY AS LIEN ON REALTY. In some of the states taxes assessed upon personal property attach as liens upon any real estate owned by the taxpayer at the time of such assessment or at the time when the taxes become delinquent.<sup>21</sup>

15. See Jetton v. University of the South, 208 U. S. 489, 28 S. Ct. 375, 52 L. ed. 584, to the effect that a state statute (Tenn. Acts (1903), c. 258, § 32), assessing leaseholds and making the tax a lien upon the fee, is not to be construed as giving such a lien for a tax on the interest of a lessee where the fee itself is exempt from taxation.

Titles and interests affected.—Under a statute making taxes on personal property a lien on real estate "owned" by the taxpayer, the mortgagor of land is the "owner" of it,

C. Time When Lien Attaches and Priorities — 1. WHEN LIEN ATTACHES IN GENERAL. In many states, the time when taxes shall attach as a lien upon property is fixed by statute as of a certain day in the year or other specific time.<sup>22</sup> Where this is not the case, the lien ordinarily attaches as soon as the amount of the tax is definitely fixed and liability for its payment commences, which may be as soon as the assessment of the property is completed and the tax extended on the books,<sup>23</sup> or more usually when the tax warrant or other process or the even after sale on foreclosure if his right of redemption has not yet expired. Bodertha v. Spencer, 40 Ind. 353; New England L. & T. Co. v. Young, 81 Iowa 732, 39 N. W. 116, 46 N. W. 1103, 10 L. R. A. 478. So taxes on the personal property of a firm are a lien on the land of a partner. Bibbins v. Clark, 90 Iowa 230, 57 N. W. 884, 59 N. W. 290, 29 L. R. A. 278. But a statute making personal taxes a lien on real estate of the "person" assessed does not apply to corporations. Com. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 474. And taxes on a husband's personal property are not a lien on land held by himself and his wife in entirety. Morrison v. Seybold, 92 Ind. 298. Nor does the lien attach to property entered under the homestead laws of the United States prior to the issuance of a patent. Natrona County v. Shaffner, 12 Wyo. 177, 74 Pac. 88, 109 Am. St. Rep. 971.

Property affected.—The lien of a tax on personalty does not attach to land in another town, in the hands of a purchaser after the assessment and before the delinquency of the tax. Schaeffer v. People, 60 Ill. 179. But personal taxes assessed against the owner of improvements on land attach as a lien on the improvements. People v. Smith, 123 Cal. 70, 55 Pac. 765.

When "assessed."—When valued by the assessor, personal property is "assessed," within the meaning of Wash. Laws (1903), p. 74, c. 59, § 3, providing that personal property taxes shall be a lien upon all real estate and personal property from the day the assessment is made. Puyallup v. Lakin, 45 Wash. 368, 88 Pac. 578.

Relation back of lien.—If the assessment tax book is delivered to the proper officers for the collection of the tax.<sup>24</sup> But under some statutes there is no lien on personal property until actual seizure or distraint thereof,<sup>25</sup> and taxes on personalty do not become a lien on real estate, in some jurisdictions, until the recovery of a judgment therefor, or at least until application for judgment is made.<sup>26</sup>

2. PRIORITY OF TAX LIEN — a. In General. It is competent for the legislature to make taxes a paramount lien on the property of the taxpayer, and this has been done in many states, the consequence being that the lien for taxes takes precedence of every other lien or claim upon the property of whatsoever kind, however created, and whether attaching before or after the assessment of the taxes.<sup>27</sup> is not made until after the date fixed by law, still the lien will relate back to the time designated. McLaren v. Sheble, 45 Mo. 130; Blossom v. Van Court, 34 Mo. 390, 86 Am. Dec. 114.

But this preference does not belong to the tax lien unless it is so declared by statute, and a law, for example, which merely enacts that taxes shall be a lien on real property does not make them a first lien.<sup>28</sup> A statute creating this extraordinary privilege will not be construed as retrospective unless its language plainly requires that interpretation.<sup>29</sup> There is generally no displacement of prior liens by the tax lien if the law under which the taxes are levied contemplates the separate assessment of various particular interests in land, rather than the holding of the land itself liable.<sup>30</sup>

b. As Affected by Registration. Where the law requires tax liens to be registered or otherwise made a matter of public record, they do not outrank liens or interests acquired previous to such recording.<sup>31</sup>

c. As Against Levy or Attachment. Where the lien of a tax on personal property attaches only from the time of its seizure or distraint, it does not displace a lien previously acquired by the levy of an execution or attachment.<sup>32</sup> But if the tax lien begins from the issuance of a warrant or the placing of the duplicate in the hands of the collector, it is superior to any lien acquired by judicial process after that time.<sup>33</sup>

d. As Against Mortgages and Other Encumbrances. Taxes levied subsequent to the execution or recording of a mortgage on realty do not have priority over it unless by express legislation.<sup>34</sup> But statutes so enacting are in force in many states, so that the lien of a tax assessment, as soon as it attaches, displaces the lien of a mortgage or a judgment already existing against the property.<sup>35</sup> It is even within the constitutional power of the legislature to enact that the tax lien shall take precedence over mortgages or other encumbrances made or given before the enactment of the law creating the tax lien and existing at the date of its passage.<sup>36</sup> But this retroactive construction will not be adopted unless expressed in terms too plain to be mistaken.<sup>37</sup> The lien of a personal property tax, when sought to be enforced against real estate of the owner, is generally inferior to the lien of an existing mortgage.<sup>38</sup> And as to personal property, to which the tax lien does not ordinarily attach until seizure or distraint, such lien is usually subordinate to that of an existing chattel mortgage.<sup>39</sup> It is also to be noted that the provisions of a statute giving priority to tax liens over mortgages and other encumbrances do not apply to mortgages made to the state or its officers.<sup>40</sup>

D. Transfer of Property — 1. IN GENERAL. Where taxes are by statute a specific lien or charge upon the land on which they are assessed, whether or not the lien is made paramount to others, the general rule is that such lien will not be divested by any sale or other transfer of the land, but binds the premises in the hands of all successive holders,<sup>41</sup> although in some states an exception is made in

Exceptions to rule.—In Connecticut the law provides that land shall be subject to a lien for taxes for one year and afterward "until a transfer thereof"; and the foreclosure of a mortgage, and the vesting of the absolute title in the mortgagee by failure to redeem, is a transfer within the meaning of the statute. Waterbury Sav. Bank v. Lawler, 46 Conn. 243. In Louisiana unrecorded tax liens more than three years old do not affect purchasers of the property. Sale of land in parcels; order of liability for taxes.—Where the owner of land which is subject to a lien for taxes divides it into parcels and sells them separately to different purchasers at different times, the tax lien continues to bind each parcel for the whole amount of the tax, and the several purchasers are liable for the payment of the taxes in the inverse order of alienation; that is, the parcel last sold is the one first liable. Transfer to one exempted from taxation.—Where, for the purposes of taxation, the statutory tax lien for the current year attaches to real property on a certain day, ownership of real property on that day determines its liability to taxation for that year, and if it is taxable at that time the lien then attaches, and it is not divested by a sale after that day to a corporation which has commuted to the state by a payment of a percentage on its gross earnings in lieu of other taxes. Who are innocent purchasers.—A transfer of property subject to taxation, by persons individually to themselves as constituting a corporation, does not constitute the corporation an innocent purchaser so as to defeat a claim for taxes thereon. And a new corporation created by the consolidation of other corporations is not an innocent purchaser of the property of such corporations, at least in the absence of a provision for the payment of their liabilities, so as to prevent the state from subjecting such property to the payment of taxes thereon. Bloxham v. Florida Cent., etc., R. Co., 35 Fla. 625, 17 So. 902. But on the other hand, where a mortgagee of land, foreclosing his mortgage and buying in the property, had no notice at the time the mortgage was made that taxes were in arrear, the land is not liable for such taxes, although he had notice prior to the sale. Moore v. Sugg, 114 N. C. 292, 19 S. E. 147. A purchaser of land subject to state taxes is not an innocent purchaser where the description of the property in the tax rolls was sufficient to identify it and the delinquent rolls showed that the taxes had not been paid. that the lien shall not be divested by alienation.<sup>46</sup> Where a tax on personal property does not become a lien upon the real estate of the owner until the collector, on failure to collect the same, charges it on such real estate in his application for judgment, and by notice, after such real estate is conveyed by the owner his personal tax cannot be charged against it in the hands of his grantee, even though the grantee had notice at the time of his purchase of the existence of an unpaid personal tax.<sup>47</sup>

2. JUDICIAL SALE OF PROPERTY. It is also a general rule that a tax lien which has attached to land is not divested by a sale of the land under judicial process, whether upon execution, decree of court, foreclosure of a mortgage, or in any other proceeding to which the state is not a party.<sup>48</sup>

E. Duration and Termination of Lien—1. ically limited to one or more years from its inception,<sup>50</sup> and after the expiration of this period it is generally held that the taxes become a mere personal charge or claim against the taxpayer,<sup>51</sup> although in some jurisdictions the doctrine prevails that the statute does not restrain the collector from selling the land after the expiration of the tax lien, provided there has been no alienation of it in the mean time by the owner.<sup>52</sup> The repeal of the statute under which taxes were levied will also extinguish the lien, unless the repealing act contains a provision preserving the lien.<sup>53</sup> But it is in the power of the legislature to extend the life of a tax lien, to revive and restore a lien which has lapsed, or even to create a new lien for the same taxes, if no rights of third persons have intervened.<sup>54</sup>

2. AS AFFECTED BY PAYMENT, JUDGMENT, OR PROCEEDINGS TO COLLECT. A tax lien is extinguished by payment or a sufficient tender of the taxes,<sup>55</sup> except in cases where the payment is made by a person who has the right to be subrogated to the lien of the state.<sup>56</sup> But when a judgment is recovered for back taxes the lien of the taxes will not be merged in the judgment so as to expire within the time fixed

When action for taxes barred.—A lien for taxes is an incident to the tax, and when an action to recover the debt is barred the lien is also barred. San Francisco v. Jones, 20 Fed. 188.

Tax lien similar to mortgage lien.—Where a statute authorizes the incorporation of a railroad company and the construction of its road, and imposes an annual tax on its capital and makes the same a lien on its road, and this is accepted by the company, the lien for taxes is a contract lien in the nature of a mortgage lien and is not defeated by the lapse of any less time than would suffice to defeat a mortgage lien. *People v. by statute for the expiration of a judgment lien;<sup>57</sup> and generally the bringing of a personal action or the recovery of a personal judgment for the taxes against the owner of the land will neither divest nor extend the lien of the taxes.<sup>58</sup> Nor will a tax lien on personal property given by statute be divested or defeated by the recovery of a personal judgment for the amount of the taxes.<sup>59</sup> In some states, however, provision is made by law for instituting a suit or proceeding by scire facias upon a tax lien within a limited time after it has attached, the effect being to continue the lien in force for another period of years.<sup>60</sup> A specific lien for taxes, which the statute declares shall last for a certain time only, is not extended by the lodgment of an execution for the taxes, as allowed by the statute, within such time, but the execution has its own lien only, which is subject to prior encumbrances.<sup>61</sup> An action to enforce a lien subject to statutory bar, in order to arrest the running of the statute of limitations and keep the lien alive, must not only be brought in time, but must be prosecuted, after commencement, with such reasonable diligence as will save a lis pendens lien from loss by laches.<sup>62</sup>

3. MERGER IN TITLE. A tax lien is merged and extinguished when the state, by escheat or, it would seem, by forfeiture or purchase at a tax-sale, becomes the owner of the fee in the land affected,<sup>63</sup> or where the owner of land, after it has been sold for the taxes and bid in by the state, and before the sale becomes absolute, purchases the bids of the state;<sup>64</sup> but it has been held, under a statute declaring taxes on real property to be a perpetual lien thereon, that the lien of a county for taxes is not extinguished by the county's bidding in the land at a sale for such taxes, but continues until the taxes are in fact received.<sup>65</sup> A merger and extinguishment of the tax lien may also result where the owner conveys the land to one holding a tax certificate or tax deed for the premises, but it seems that an intent to produce the merger must appear.<sup>66</sup> But a merger does not result merely because a mortgagee, taxed in respect to his debt and security, becomes the owner by foreclosure.<sup>67</sup>

4. LOSS OR DISCHARGE OF LIEN.<sup>68</sup> The lien of a tax may be lost by its intentional abandonment by the state or municipal corporation,<sup>69</sup> or by neglect to proceed with an action instituted for its enforcement.<sup>70</sup> But such lien is not ordinarily

Conveyance to grantee in void tax deed.—Where one was in possession and claimed to own real estate under a void tax deed, but later procured a quitclaim from the rightful owner the interest he had by virtue of tax deed was merged in the stronger and superior title he obtained by the quitclaim deed; and he then held subject to all tax liens that would have been valid if the rightful owner had never parted with his title. *African M. divested by the failure or neglect of officers to take steps prescribed by the statute with relation to the perfecting or enforcement of the lien,<sup>71</sup> and so far as it affects realty, the lien is not lost by failure to collect the tax out of personal property which was available for its satisfaction.<sup>72</sup> The fact that there was a time during the existence of a tax lien when no procedure was provided for its enforcement did not extinguish the lien.<sup>73</sup> County commissioners have no authority to release land from a lien for taxes, and an attempted release by them of a lien on land for personal taxes, made subsequent to the execution of a mortgage of the property, does not estop the county, as against the mortgagee, from enforcing the lien.<sup>74</sup> Under some statutes the lien of taxes on personal property expires on the return by the collector of the warrant for their collection.<sup>75</sup>

5. OMISSION FROM CERTIFICATE OR STATEMENT AS TO TAX LIENS. Where a certificate or statement as to the amount of taxes chargeable against a particular property and which are delinquent is furnished by an officer whose statutory duty it is to furnish such certificates on demand, the state or municipality is estopped to assert the lien of any tax omitted from such certificate, as against an innocent purchaser dealing with the property in reliance thereon.<sup>76</sup>

6. SALE OF PROPERTY FOR TAXES. A valid sale of land for taxes discharges the lien not only of the taxes for which the sale was made but of any others which were delinquent at the time.<sup>77</sup> But if the sale was illegal or so defective as to be entirely void, the lien is not divested, because in that case the owner loses nothing and the state or municipality takes nothing which it can legally retain.<sup>78</sup> And, as will be elsewhere shown, omissions and irregularities in the sale of property for taxes may render the sale invalid to convey title, but still valid to transfer the lien to the purchaser.<sup>79</sup>

F. Protection of Lien. If the chief value of realty is in the timber or other natural products thereon, the state may protect its tax lien by an injunction to prevent waste, or may constitutionally enact a law prohibiting, under penalties, the stripping of the land when taxes are delinquent.<sup>80</sup>

IX. PAYMENT, RELEASE OR COMPROMISE, AND REFUNDING OR RECOVERY OF TAXES PAID.

A. Payment or Tender—1. IN GENERAL—a. Necessity of Notice or Demand.<sup>81</sup> A demand for payment of taxes or notice that they are due and payable is usually made a condition precedent to distraint, sale, or other compulsory proceedings for their collection,<sup>82</sup> and sometimes it is required in order to render taxes delinquent;<sup>83</sup> but unless the law expressly requires it, no notice or demand is required either to fix the duty of the citizen to pay his taxes,<sup>84</sup> or to authorize a suit or other compulsory proceeding to collect the same.<sup>85</sup> And even when a statute contains provision for notice, such provision may be merely directory, so that a failure on the part of the officer to give the notice will not prevent collection of the tax.<sup>86</sup> Where demand for payment of a tax is required, it need not be in any express words, but is sufficient if it plainly informs the taxpayer

Maine.—See Miller v. Davis, 88 Me. 454, 34 Atl. 265, demand before arrest on warrant for taxes.

Vermont.—Notice to a resident taxpayer of the time and place at which the collector will receive payment of the tax, required by St. § 472, and a similar notice to a non-resident taxpayer, required by section 504, is essential before a valid sale for the tax can be made, unless excused by demand and refusal to pay. Brush v. Watson, 81 Vt. 43, 6 Atl. 141 (non-resident); Brock v. Bruce, 58 Vt. 261, 2 Atl. 598; Hurlbut v. Green, 42 Vt. 316; Wheelock v. Archer, 26 Vt. 380; Downer v. Woodbury, 19 Vt. 329.

United States.—Mayhew v. Davis, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,347, 4 McLean 213, holding that under the Illinois act of 1839, it was necessary that a collector of taxes should make a demand for taxes upon the owner of land, as provided by the statute, before a judgment could be properly rendered against the land.

Notice to parties reducing ores.—The written notice required by Nevada Mining Tax Law (1871), § 7, to be given by the assessor to parties engaged in reducing ores, was not a prerequisite to the liability of the producer for the tax, but was only intended to hold a party reducing ores extracted by others to the extent of the value of the ores in his possession when notified. *State v. 86. Noland v. Busby, 28 Ind. 154. Compare, however, Brush v. Watson, 81 Vt. 43, 69 Atl. 141 (holding, in view of the summary method of proceeding against property for taxes, and under a fair construction of the statute, that the provision in St. § 504, that a tax collector "may" notify a non-resident taxpayer of the time and place at which he will receive payment of the tax, and that the time shall not be less than twenty or more than forty days from the time when the notice is mailed, is mandatory, unless excused by demand and refusal to pay); *Mayhew v. that the collector is present and officially desires payment of the tax.<sup>87</sup> Under some statutes notice by publication in a newspaper or by posting, or both, is sufficient.<sup>88</sup>

b. Person by Whom Payment May Be Made — (i) IN GENERAL. Payment of taxes may be made by the owner of the property through an agent,<sup>89</sup> by any one of several joint owners or persons having separate interests or estates in the premises,<sup>90</sup> by a purchaser having an inchoate title under a foreclosure or other judicial sale,<sup>91</sup> or by a stock-holder of the corporation against which the tax is assessed.<sup>92</sup> Payment of taxes by a stranger, a mere volunteer or intermeddler, will divest the lien and inure to the benefit of the owner,<sup>93</sup> but it cannot be made the foundation of any right or claim on the part of such third person,<sup>94</sup> unless his act is adopted or ratified by the owner.<sup>95</sup> Where there are two assessments of the same land to different persons for the same year, the payment of taxes by one under his assessment discharges the lien for taxes, and no collection under the other assessment can be made, because the state is entitled to only one payment.<sup>96</sup>

(ii) PAYMENT BY CLAIMANTS, LIENORS, AND OTHER THIRD PARTIES — (A) Effect in General. A person who in good faith and under color of title claims to be the owner of real property may pay the taxes assessed thereon, and if his claim of title is subsequently defeated, he is entitled to reimbursement for the so as to a purchaser who is obliged to pay taxes which should be paid by his vendor,<sup>3</sup> or a lessee who is forced to pay the landlord's taxes and vice versa.<sup>4</sup> But in all these cases it must be observed that there is no right to claim reimbursement if the payment is voluntary, that is, if the person making it is under no kind of compulsion, or is not forced to do so for the protection of any interest of his own, or if he no longer has any interest to protect, or if the tax is invalid and uncollectable.<sup>5</sup> A grantee or mortgagee of land, who pays taxes assessed upon the interest of a prior party in the land, and which is a lien thereon, cannot recover the land so paid from the latter, where there is no contractual relation between them.<sup>6</sup>

(III) CORPORATION PAYING TAX ON STOCKS OR BONDS — (A) In General.

The courts have sustained the validity of the statutes in force in several of the states requiring corporations to pay the taxes assessed upon the shares of their capital stock in the hands of individual stock-holders, or upon their outstanding bonded indebtedness, and directing, or intending, that the corporation shall then deduct and retain the amount of such taxes from dividends payable to its shareholders or from interest on its bonds, as the case may be.<sup>11</sup> It is generally held that such a provision makes the tax a debt due from the corporation, for which it is directly and primarily liable, and that its liability for the same is not affected by its becoming insolvent or going into the hands of a receiver.<sup>12</sup> Under a statute requiring a municipal corporation to pay the state tax on its stock loans for the holders thereof, and directing its collection from them by the corporation by deducting it from the interest due and payable thereon to them, the obligation of the corporation to pay such tax is a direct statutory obligation, for breach of which an action at law will lie.<sup>13</sup>

(B) Bank Stock. The rules stated in the preceding section apply to the taxation of shares of the capital stock of banking institutions;<sup>14</sup> and in particular, a state has power to require national banks to pay for their stock-holders the taxes legally assessed against their respective shares.<sup>15</sup> But the bank is not directly liable to pay such tax unless it has dividends or other property of the stock-holders in its possession, and hence a suit for the tax cannot be maintained against the receiver of an insolvent national bank where the property represented by the shares has disappeared.<sup>16</sup>

Statutes sometimes provide for the apportionment of taxes among the proper subdivisions or parcels of the real estate assessed.<sup>20</sup>

c. Payment From Property in Custody of Law. Where property subject to taxes has been sold under decree of foreclosure or other judicial process and the proceeds brought into court, even if the statute does not expressly direct the payment of the taxes out of the fund, it is entirely proper for the court to do so,<sup>21</sup> and the same is true in regard to property in the possession of a receiver appointed by the court.<sup>22</sup>

20. See Morris, etc., Dredging Co. v. Bayonne, 75 N. J. L. 59, 67 Atl. 20, holding that under Gen. Tax Act (1903) (Pub. Laws (1903), p. 414), § 61, the council of the city of Bayonne are required on proper application of any person interested to apportion taxes among the proper subdivisions or parcels of real estate assessed for taxes in said city.

Intervention by state.—The state has a right to intervene in a suit to enforce its lien for taxes on property involved therein, and obtain an order for payment out of proceeds arising from the judicial sale of such property (Huckleby v. State, 57 Fla. 433, 48 So. 979); and where the state does intervene in such a case parties wishing to question the legality of the tax must do so by answer (Huckleby v. State, supra).

Georgia.—Dysart v. Brown, 100 Ga. 1, 26 S. E. 767, holding that where it appears that an insolvent corporation, whose assets are in the hands of a receiver, is already two years in default in the payment of its state and county taxes, and that the taxes for a third year will soon become due, it is the duty of the judge by whom the receiver was appointed, upon a proper application by the tax collector, to order the receiver, if no other means are available for the purpose, to sell a sufficiency of the property of the corporation to raise the money with which to pay the overdue taxes; and the fact that all of the income derived by a receiver from carrying on the business of a corporation whose assets are in his hands is requisite to the operation of that business is no legal excuse for such long delay in paying its taxes.

Illinois.—Wiswall v. Kunz, 173 Ill. 110, 50 N. E. 184, holding that while property held by a receiver should be assessed to the receiver, the fact that it is assessed in the name of the party for whom the receiver holds possession does not affect the validity of the tax; and it is within the power of the court appointing the receiver to allow the amount of the tax, as a claim against the receiver, and order the same paid by the receiver to the tax collector; and that the taxes upon this property in the hands of the receiver, assessed after his appointment, may properly be regarded as part of the costs and expenses of the receivership, and may be ordered paid in full, as other costs and expenses.

Kentucky.—Spalding v. Com., 88 Ky. 135, 10 S. W. 420, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 714, holding that the proper procedure is for the court appointing a receiver of property of a decedent's estate which is in litigation to direct him to list the property in the county court, and pay the taxes, but it is not improper for the former court to grant leave to institute a suit in the county court against the receiver, to compel him to list the property; and the county court having ordered the receiver to do so, and its order having been appealed to the court appointing him, and there affirmed, the latter court may be considered as having directed the listing.

d. To Whom Payment Made.<sup>23</sup> A payment of taxes, in order to be effective in relieving the person and his property from liability, must be made to the officer primarily authorized to receive them,<sup>24</sup> or at least to someone legally delegated to act in his behalf in receiving and receipting for the taxes.<sup>25</sup>

e. Time and Place For Payment. The statutes ordinarily fix the time when taxes shall become due and payable and prescribe the length of time which may elapse before they shall be considered delinquent.<sup>26</sup> After that time, although the citizen still has the right to relieve his property by paying the taxes, they usually carry a penalty or interest, which must be included in the payment.<sup>27</sup> But when land has been sold for delinquent taxes, the owner's right to discharge the tax by payment is lost and he has instead a right of redemption which must be obtained by means of the appropriate procedure.<sup>28</sup> On the other hand, payment of taxes

Excuse for non-payment.—The facts that a receiver had sold the property, which was realty, by the court's order and approval, and the purchaser had taken it subject to taxes, were held a "good and sufficient cause" for non-payment within the meaning of Horner Rev. St. Ind. (1897) § 6436, providing that where a receiver neglects to pay taxes on property he may be cited to show cause why such taxes, with penalty, should not be paid. Stoner v. Bitters, 151 Ind. 575, 52 N. E. 149.

at a time when the collector is not authorized to receive them will not avoid a subsequent sale of the land for the same taxes.<sup>29</sup> Questions seldom arise as to the proper place for the payment of taxes, but it is held that where a new county or other political subdivision is formed by separation from an old one, taxes on property within the district set off to the new county must be paid to the proper officer of that county, rather than in the old one.<sup>30</sup>

f. Tender. A good and sufficient tender of taxes due has the same effect as actual payment, in preventing the lawful prosecution of any proceedings for the enforcement of the taxes.<sup>31</sup> But the tender must be unconditional,<sup>32</sup> and it must be made to an officer authorized to receive the tax,<sup>33</sup> and be for the full amount

Lands assessed to another.—A sale of land for taxes after a tender of payment by the owner or his agent does not divest the owner of his title, although the land was assessed in the name of another person. Kinsworthy v. Austin, 23 Ark. 375.

By whom made.—While actual payment by any person will discharge the lien of taxes and thus end the treasurer's power to sell for non-payment, an offer to pay, which fails through the fault of the treasurer, in order to have such effect, must be made by a person having an interest which would be lost to him by a sale. Such an interest may be shown by a contract of sale of the land executed prior to the payment of the taxes. Trexler v. Africa, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 385.

Keeping tender good.—If, in an action of replevin against a tax collector, plaintiff relies upon a tender of all the taxes due as entitling him to a return of his goods, he must show a continuous tender up to and during the trial. Miller v. McGehee, 60 Miss. 903. If the taxpayer comes into equity to have a sale for taxes set aside and to cancel the certificate or redeem, basing the right upon a tender, he must keep the tender good. Lancaster v. De Hadway, 97 Ind. 565; People v. Edwards, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 377, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 335.

Tender unnecessary see U. S. v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 1 S. Ct. 240, 27 L. ed. 171.

A valid tender in redemption and its refusal terminates the estate of tax purchasers. Bender v. Bean, 52 Ark. 132, 12 S. W. 180, 241. And see infra, XII, C, 2, a.

32. State v. Central Pac. R. Co., 21 Nev. 247, 30 Pac. 686, holding, however, that a demand for a receipt does not invalidate the tender where the law makes it the duty of the tax receiver to give such receipts.

Sufficiency of tender.—Where coupons from state bonds are made by law a legal tender in payment of taxes, but the state has notified the tax collectors not to receive them, the slightest offer of such coupons to a collector is a tender. Green v. Brooks, 28 Fed. 215.

33. Edwards v. Upham, 93 Wis. 455, 67 N. W. 728.

of the tax due, with any accrued interest, penalties, or costs,<sup>34</sup> except in cases where the assessment is entirely void, when no tender at all is necessary,<sup>35</sup> and in cases where part of the tax is illegal, when the taxpayer may tender the amount legally due and resist payment of the rest.<sup>36</sup> But the taxpayer always has the right to tender the taxes due on a part of his assessed property, separable from the rest, or to offer payment of one only of several distinct taxes levied on the same property reserving the right to contest the others.<sup>37</sup>

g. Excuses For Non-Payment — (i) IN GENERAL. The personal disability of the owner of property is not an excuse for his failure to pay the taxes thereon;<sup>38</sup> nor is his financial inability to pay them,<sup>39</sup> or an actual or intended diversion to an unlawful purpose of the public moneys raised by the tax.<sup>40</sup> But an unlawful rule adopted and published by the collecting officers that they will receive payment of the taxes from no one but the owner in person will excuse an agent having charge of the property from making a useless tender and prevent a valid tax-sale of the property.<sup>41</sup> Failure of the officer to present a check given in payment of taxes, so that, by reason of failure of the bank, it is not paid, is no excuse for non-payment of the taxes.<sup>42</sup>

(ii) MISTAKE; RELIANCE ON OFFICIAL STATEMENT OR CERTIFICATE. Where a property-owner in good faith applies to the proper officer to pay his taxes, and is furnished with a statement, certificate, or information as to the amount of the taxes due, on which he relies, but which is incomplete or erroneous by reason of the mistake or fraud of the officer, and he pays all that is demanded of him, this will be equivalent to full payment, so far as to invalidate any subsequent sale of the property for the omitted taxes.<sup>43</sup> But in some states this rule

Tracy*, 19 Vt. 569 (tender must include traveling expenses incurred by collector in attempting to distrain property). Compare Converse v. Jennings, 13 Gray (Mass.) 77, holding that a tender of the amount due for taxes on land advertised for sale for non-payment of taxes, but not yet sold, need not include any fees of the collector for a levy upon the land, or for traveling expenses to make a return to the state and county treasurers, or for a commission on the tax.

is restricted to cases where the officer is authorized or required by law to furnish official tax statements, and it is held that in the absence of any such authority or requirement the taxpayer who relies on what he is told does so at his own peril.<sup>44</sup> A landowner, it has been held, is not bound as a matter of law to take notice of a new map giving a new description of his lands, and if, relying on the old description and the old map, he attempts to pay his taxes, and supposes he has done so on all his lands, but fails to do so on some of them, which are subsequently sold for taxes without his knowledge, the deed made in pursuance of such sale is void.<sup>45</sup> Where the owner of land goes to the county treasurer's office, in good faith, for the purpose of paying the taxes thereon, and, although using reasonable diligence to ascertain and pay them, fails to do so by reason of being actually misled by the assessment, and the treasurer's advertised list of sales of unseated lands, the land being there designated by a wrong warrant number, a sale of the land for such taxes is void.<sup>46</sup>

2. MODE AND AMOUNT OF PAYMENT — a. Mode of Making Payment — (i) IN GENERAL. As a general rule, the law requires taxes to be paid actually in cash, and all at once, unless where a statute allows their discharge in instalments;<sup>47</sup> but the same result may be accomplished by retention of funds belonging to the taxpayer, by transfer of credits, or anything else which is equivalent to actual payment.<sup>48</sup> But private arrangements between the taxpayer and the collector are not regarded with favor, and a tax cannot be discharged by the collector merely

Unauthorized officer.—The rule has no application where the officer applied to is not the one authorized to receive the tax. Edwards v. Upham, 93 Wis. 455, 67 N. W. 728.

44. Elliot v. District of Columbia, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 396; Kahl v. Love, 37 N. J. L. 5. But compare Rosecrans v. District of Columbia, 5 Mackey (D. C.) 120. In Raley v. Guinn, 76 Mo. 263, it was held that a tax deed could not be defeated by showing that before advertisement or sale of the land the owner went to the office of the collector to pay the taxes, and was told that there were none against the land, as the publication of the delinquent list, as required by law, gave him correct information on the subject.

Contract for services in payment.—An agreement between a taxpayer of a county or city and such corporation that certain services were to be rendered by him in consideration that his taxes were to be canceled will not avail the taxpayer in an action between him, or his grantee, and the purchaser of real property at tax-sale, notwithstanding he may have performed his part of the contract, it not appearing that the county or city had complied with its contract and paid the taxes. Merriam v. Dovey, 25 Nebr. 618, 41 N. W. 550.

48. Thus a county treasurer may withhold so much of an officer's salary as is necessary to pay a tax lien on the latter's property. Beckett v. Wishon, 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 257, 5 Ohio N. P. 155. And see Ewing v. Robeson, 15 Ind. 26, as to state auditor retaining the interest accruing on state bonds, for the payment of taxes. So where a county treasurer deposits in a bank receipts for taxes due from the bank, receives credit for the amount of such taxes, and afterward draws the money out by check, the transaction amounts to a payment of the taxes. Wasson v. Lamb, 120 Ind. 514, 22 N. E. 729, 16 Am. St. Rep. 342, 6 L. R. A. 191. Where a county treasurer deposited the county funds in a bank, and used the bank as a medium for the collection of taxes, by placing tax receipts in its hands and permitting it to collect the amount and credit it to the deposit account, the delivery to the bank of a receipt for the amount of the taxes assessed against the bank, and a credit of the amount of such receipt to the deposit account, constituted, as between the county and the county treasurer, a collection of the tax due from the bank. Brown v. Sheldon State Bank, 139 Iowa 83, 117 N. W. 289.

marking it "paid" on his books,<sup>49</sup> although in some states it has been held that he may, if he chooses, account for the tax in his return, and then sue on the promise of the taxpayer to pay him.<sup>50</sup>

(II) SET-OFF OR COUNTER-CLAIM. As a tax is not a debt in the ordinary sense, nor the liability for it founded upon contract, it cannot be paid or discharged by setting off or counter-claiming against it a debt due from the municipality to the individual taxpayer,<sup>51</sup> and still less of course a debt due from the collector of taxes in his private capacity.<sup>52</sup>

b. Medium of Payment—(i) IN GENERAL. The legislature has power to prescribe the kind of funds in which taxes shall be payable,<sup>53</sup> and may declare that only gold and silver coin shall be receivable for this purpose.<sup>54</sup> But in the absence of such a restriction, taxes may be paid in any lawful current money, although the collector has no authority to accept anything else, unless specially allowed by law.<sup>55</sup>

(II) STATE AND MUNICIPAL BONDS, WARRANTS, AND OTHER OBLIGATIONS. State scrip, county warrants or orders, treasurers' certificates, school-district orders, state or municipal bonds or the coupons therefrom, and all other such evidences of indebtedness are not receivable in payment of taxes, unless specifically made so by some constitutional or statutory provision.<sup>56</sup> But where

Virginia coupon litigation.—In a long series of cases in the courts of Virginia and of the United States relating to the receivability of coupons from certain bonds of that state in payment of state taxes, it was finally decided that a declaration by a state, incorporated in its bonds, that they shall be receivable in payment of all taxes due the state creates a contract between the state and any holder of such bonds, which is protected by the federal constitution; that it would be violated by a subsequent act of the state legislature withdrawing the privilege of using such bonds, or their coupons, in payment of taxes, and that therefore, notwithstanding such subsequent act, a collector of taxes was legally bound to accept the coupons when tendered in proper amount; but that a statute which provided a course of proceedings for testing and determining the genuineness of such coupons, that question being sometimes in doubt on account of the existence in the market of spurious or stolen bonds, was not open to constitutional objection, where it did not absolutely prohibit the acceptance of such coupons in payment of taxes, although it required the payment of the tax in money pending the investigation of the validity of the coupons tendered, and the refund of the money so paid when their genuineness should be legally established. (III) BANK AND TREASURY NOTES. Where a state is the sole stock-holder in a bank, or establishes a bank as its fiscal agent, and provides by law that the notes of the bank shall be receivable in payment of taxes, it is the imperative duty of the collector to accept such notes when tendered in due amount.<sup>60</sup> United States treasury notes may also be made by the states a legal tender in payment of taxes, but they are not so if the state requires taxes to be paid in coined money.<sup>61</sup>

(IV) CHECKS, DRAFTS, AND NOTES. The acceptance of a check on a bank for the amount of the drawer's taxes is at most only a conditional payment; that is, the taxes are not paid until the check is paid, and if it is never presented or is dishonored the taxes remain a charge.<sup>62</sup> The same rule applies to drafts.<sup>63</sup> As to promissory notes of individuals, the collector has no right whatever to accept them; if he does so, it may give him a private right of action against the maker, but cannot prejudice the public in the collection of the revenue.<sup>64</sup>

c. Amount of Payment in General. One who has paid taxes is not prejudiced by the fact that he paid less than was due, relying on the statement made to him by the receiving officer.<sup>65</sup> A statute requiring a corporation to pay its tax to the state treasurer, although it has applied to the supreme court for an abatement of the same, and providing that a reduction, if obtained, shall be credited on its next tax, is mandatory as to allowing such credit.<sup>66</sup>

d. Partial Payment.<sup>67</sup> The law ordinarily intends that taxes shall be paid in full at one time, and unless it is otherwise provided by statute, a taxpayer cannot tender a portion of the tax due and demand a receipt therefor.<sup>68</sup> But the citizen always has the right to pay the amount of any one tax listed against him, while refusing or omitting to pay others,<sup>69</sup> or to pay the taxes for the current year, and contest those assessed for previous years,<sup>70</sup> or to pay the tax on any one piece or item of his property which is separately assessed, without offering to pay the taxes on other parts.<sup>71</sup>

e. Interest and Penalties. Delinquent taxes do not bear interest unless it is expressly so provided by statute.<sup>72</sup> But it is competent for the legislature to prescribe the payment of interest as a penalty for delay in the payment of taxes and to regulate its rate.<sup>73</sup> This, however, can be effected only by an act plainly manifesting the legislative intention as to the right to recover interest, its amount, and the date from which it shall begin,<sup>74</sup> the latter being ordinarily the time when

And so the owner of three quarter sections of land which have been assessed and taxed as entire and complete quarter sections cannot pay taxes on an undivided half of each. Auld v. McAllaster, 43 Kan. 162, 23 Pac. 165. And where two adjacent lots of different sizes and values, and belonging to different owners, are assessed together as one parcel, the owner of the larger and more valuable lot cannot, by paying one half of the joint tax, cast the remainder on the other lot. *Chaliss v. The holder of an estate in remainder in real property is not liable for the penalties for non-payment of taxes assessed to the tenant for life. Hadley v. Hadley, 114 Tenn. 156, 87 S. W. 250.

Interest in case of partial payments—Where a taxpayer liable to a tax paid a part thereof and obtained an injunction restraining collection of the balance, and the injunction was afterward dissolved, and the taxpayer then paid the amount of taxes unpaid without interest, it was held that the second payment should have been credited as a partial payment on the balance, with interest from the time payment should have been made to the date of payment, so that the remainder would become a new principal bearing interest. *Com. v. Interest and penalty.—Where a statute fixes a penalty of ten per cent for each year during which the tax remains unpaid, interest is not chargeable in addition. People v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co., 98 N. Y. 67 [reversing 32 Hun 491].

the assessment is complete and the taxes become payable, unless the statute grants a certain time within which to make the payment without penalties or fixes the day when interest shall commence to accrue.<sup>75</sup> There may be circumstances which will justify a delay in the payment and warrant the courts in refusing to enforce the statutory interest or penalties,<sup>76</sup> and a sufficient tender, kept good, will stop the running of interest;<sup>77</sup> but interest continues to run from the date of the assessment, although the delay in payment was caused by the taxpayer's appeal from the assessment, and even though he succeeds in obtaining a reduction in the amount of the tax.<sup>78</sup>

f. Rebates and Discounts. As an inducement to citizens to pay their taxes promptly, it has sometimes been thought proper to offer a rebate or discount on all taxes paid within a certain time after they become due, and such a statute is valid,<sup>79</sup> unless it permits the rebate or discount to be made in such a manner as

Statute fixing legal rate of interest.—A statute providing for the recovery of interest on debts, contracts, and judgments and fixing the legal rate does not apply to taxes if it does not specially name them; and another statute providing that every tax shall have the "effect" of a judgment against the person does not make taxes bear interest simply because judgments do so. People v. Central Pac. R. Co., 105 Cal. 576, 38 Pac. 905; Rochester v. Bloss, 185 N. Y. 42, 77 N. E. 794, 6 L. R. A. N. S. 694.

No rate fixed.—Where the law plainly intends that delinquent taxes shall bear interest, but does not fix the rate, it will be the same as the legal rate of interest on ordinary debts and claims. Licking Valley Bldg. Assoc. v. Com., 89 S. W. 682, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 543; Baker v. Kelley, 11 Minn. 480.

Insufficient tender.—The presentation of a certified copy of a decree in a suit to enjoin the collection of taxes on the ground that the valuation was grossly excessive, adjudging that the valuation was excessive and fixing a less amount as a fair valuation, to the county treasurer, with demand that he correct the taxes so as to conform to the decree in order that the taxpayer might know the amount of taxes to be paid, followed by the statement of the treasurer that he would consult the county attorney upon the subject, with no further inquiry or demand by the taxpayer, was not such a tender by the taxpayer as would arrest the running of interest. *State v. to violate the constitutional requirement of a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation or some other particular constitutional provision.<sup>80</sup>

3. EVIDENCE OF PAYMENT — a. Presumptions. The mere duty of the owner of property to pay the taxes thereon raises no presumption that he has paid them,<sup>81</sup> although the fact that he has paid the taxes on particular property for a series of years may warrant a presumption of payment as to the taxes of one particular year for which he cannot show a receipt,<sup>82</sup> and it may be presumed that the tax of a particular year was paid from the fact that it was not included in the tax bills of succeeding years.<sup>83</sup> It is also held that a presumption of payment may arise from mere lapse of time if sufficiently long continued.<sup>84</sup> It will be presumed that payments made on tax assessments were made by the party rendering the land for taxation.<sup>85</sup>

b. Admissibility. The fact of the payment of taxes may be shown by the receipt or certificate of the collector of taxes or other officer authorized to receive them,<sup>86</sup> or by the entries in the books and official records of the tax office,<sup>87</sup> or Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Louisville, 29 S. W. 865, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 796 (holding that an act providing that a discount in case taxes in the city of Louisville should be paid before a certain date applied only to the taxes of citizens, and not to those of railroad companies).

Statutes repealed see Ridgway v. O'Neill, 49 Pa. St. 174.

Failure of assessors to post up a copy of the section of the statute relating to abatement for prompt payment of taxes, as provided by the statute, does not affect the validity of assessments, the provision being merely directory. Sprague v. Bailey, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 436.

Discrimination.—A statutory provision for the allowance of a discount to citizens, and not to railroad companies, for the prompt payment of taxes, is not such a discrimination as to render the act unconstitutional. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Louisville, 29 S. W. 865, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 796.
