Negating statutory exceptions.—In proceedings to forfeit land under the Kentucky statute, it is not necessary that the petition allege what part, if any, of the land proceeded against is held by the occupants under a statutory provision that title to land forfeited and not purchased back by the owner is vested in any person having adverse possession for five years, since the purchaser from the commonwealth, and not the occupant, will be required to show that the land purchased by him was not in the excluded class. An entire forfeiture of the corpus of the land was contemplated by Va. Acts (1838), p. 21, c. 8, § 17, as it never was the policy of the legislature to forfeit or dispose of undivided or particular estates in land. State v. King, 64 W. Va. 546, 63 S. E. 468.

Ejectment by former owner.—In Ohio the forfeiture of land to the state for taxes does not divest the owner of title so as to prevent him from maintaining ejectment against one in possession not claiming title under the state. Thevenin v. Slocum, 16 by the former owner,<sup>29</sup> or a mere lien for the taxes, which may be satisfied by their subsequent payment.<sup>30</sup> In some states provision has been made by law for vesting title to forfeited lands in those persons, other than the delinquent or his heirs, who may show title derived from a grant from the state with actual possession and payment of subsequent taxes.<sup>31</sup>

7. REDEMPTION. The statutes generally allow a redemption of lands forfeited for non-payment of taxes,<sup>32</sup> such redemption to be effected by the former owner of the property,<sup>33</sup> or his heirs,<sup>34</sup> or vendee,<sup>35</sup> or by any person having a legal or equitable title to the premises,<sup>36</sup> either within a limited time, after which the forfeiture will become absolute,<sup>37</sup> or before the state has sold or otherwise disposed of the lands.<sup>38</sup> The amount to be paid on redemption ordinarily includes all Ohio 519. But in Virginia the heirs of a patentee of land, forfeited for non-payment of taxes and never redeemed, have no title on which they can maintain ejectment against any person whatsoever. Usher v. Pride, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 190. An action of ejectment cannot be maintained by the original owner after the lapse of two years, under the New York statutes, even though the notice of redemption was faulty. Meigs v. Roberts, 162 N. Y. 371, 56 N. E. 838, 76 Am. St. Rep. 322 [reversing 42 N. Y. App. Div. 290, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 215].

Removal of lien by invalid forfeiture.—Where a forfeiture of land for non-payment of taxes is invalid, a deed to such land, given by the state, conveys no title, but only removes the state's lien for taxes. Henry v. Knod, 74 Ark. 390, 85 S. W. 1130.

Privilege only.—Redemption of lands, title to which has become vested in the state, is not a vested right, but is a mere privilege extended by the state, which it may withdraw, or which it may deny before redemption by grant to another than the former owner. State v. King, 64 W. Va. 610, 63 S. E. 495.

Priority between former owners.—The owner of a valid title originating by reason of a first sale of lands by the state, as forfeited to or vested in the state, has, in regard to a subsequent forfeiture or vesting, a right of redemption superior to that of the former owner. State v. King, 64 W. Va. 546, 610, 63 S. E. 468, 495.

Necessity of good and valid title.—One seeking redemption must prove that, at the time his land became vested in the state, he held a good and valid title, legal or equitable, superior to that of any other claimant, irrespective of whether that claimant was the state or an individual. State v. Garnett, 66 W. Va. 106, 66 S. E. 98; State v. Jackson, 56 W. Va. 558, 49 S. E. 465.

The owner of an undivided interest in land forfeited may fully redeem the land, only where it is open to redemption by any other or all the owners under the same title, since redemption must always be of full fee-simple title of so much of the land as is redeemed, and not of mere interests or estates therein. *State v. In Washington, the two-year period for redemption commences to run from the date of sale, and not from the forfeiture, and the date of sale is construed to mean the day on which the certificate of the county treasurer issues to the purchaser. State v. Maple, 16 Wash. 430, 47 Pac. 966.

taxes due and in arrear, together with interest, penalties, and costs.<sup>39</sup> Although a redemption of this kind is generally to be effected as a matter of office business, it is sometimes provided that the owner shall proceed by petition in equity and obtain a decree;<sup>40</sup> and, where the redemption proceedings are regular and complete, the person redeeming is invested with the paper title to the land.<sup>41</sup>

8. SETTING ASIDE, RELEASE, OR WAIVER. It is competent for the legislature to release or remit a forfeiture already incurred,<sup>42</sup> or it may be canceled or set aside for good cause shown in a judicial proceeding brought for that purpose.<sup>43</sup> If the theory is that the forfeiture vests a final and complete title in the state, subject to no further equities in the original owner, it would be inconsistent for the state to continue to assess taxes on the lands in the former owner's name after the forfeiture, and such an act would be a waiver of the forfeiture.<sup>44</sup> But if, after the forfeiture, a time is still given to the owner in which to redeem, the assessment and collection of state taxes for several successive years after the forfeiture is no waiver.<sup>45</sup>

9. SALE OR OTHER DISPOSITION OF FORFEITED LANDS.<sup>46</sup> After forfeiture has become complete, the state, in disposing of the lands forfeited, acts as an owner and proprietor, rather than a creditor,<sup>47</sup> and, as it cannot sell that which it does not own,<sup>48</sup> it cannot sell the same land twice, unless, after the first sale, the lands have again become forfeited in the hands of the new owner.<sup>49</sup> To make a valid

A tender of the amount of the taxes and the value of the improvements is impracticable and unnecessary, under the Arkansas statute, when redemption is sought by one claiming an undivided share of the land, and the rights of the parties must be determined upon equitable principles. Loudon v. Spellman, 80 Fed. 592, 26 C. C. A. 13.

Payment in behalf of party redeeming.—Payment of taxes in redemption will be presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, to have been made by or for someone entitled to redeem. Harman v. Stearns, 95 Va. 58, 27 S. E. 601.

A decree allowing redemption is prima facie evidence of redemption as to third persons, and cannot be collaterally attacked for error in that the sum paid to redeem was less than the amount actually due (State v. Jackson, 56 W. Va. 558, 49 S. E. 465), or that the land was not within the jurisdiction of the court (Cecil v. Clark, 44 W. Va. 659, 30 S. E. 216).

Record evidence of identity of land.—The Virginia and West Virginia statutes providing for the purchaser having the land bought surveyed and the court, in case it finds the plat, certificate, or report of the surveyor correct, ordering the same recorded, are designed solely to furnish record evidence of the land sold and do not contemplate that the court, in the summary proceeding authorized, shall adjudicate all the questions arising upon delinquent land sales. *Nowlin v. W. 627, holding, however, that the taxation of inheritances is justifiable, not on the ground that the right to inherit is a creation of the law which can be given or withheld on such terms as the legislature may see fit to impose, but under the power reasonably to regulate and tax transfers of property. See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Taxation," § 1673.

A "death duty" is an exaction by the state, to be collected from the property left by a deceased person while in its custody, prescribed upon the occasion of his death, and the consequent devolution of his property, by force of its laws. The particular name given the duty in any statute—as probate, legacy, succession, transfer, or estate tax or duty—depends for its meaning upon the terms of that statute. A tax may be laid upon property immediately after it has devolved upon any person by will or inheritance, so as to be not easily distinguishable from a form of taxation sometimes called a "legacy tax." Hopkins' Appeal, 77 Conn. 644, 60 Atl. 657, 659.

The collateral inheritance tax is a specific tax and not ad valorem, notwithstanding it is based on the value of the property inherited. Union Trust Co. v. Wayne Prob. Judge, 125 Mich. 487, 84 N. W. 1101.

"Probate duty" see 32 Cyc. 404.

"A 'succession tax' as the words indicate and the history of such taxes clearly establishes, is an excise or duty upon the legislature to impose burdens in the form of taxes on this privilege is not restricted by the constitutional provisions relating to the taxation of property as such.<sup>61</sup> And for the same reason the tax may be imposed on the transfer, by bequest or under the intestate laws, of securities which are not within the taxing power of the state, considered as property in themselves, such as United States bonds.<sup>62</sup>

2. CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTES<sup>63</sup>—a. In General. The constitutional validity of legacy and inheritance taxes has generally been sustained both in principle and in detail.<sup>64</sup> The power to tax is incident to the legislative power, so right of a person or corporation to receive property by devise or inheritance from another under the regulation of the State. Whenever properly laid, this is its distinguishing feature in contradistinction from a property tax." The mere calling of such a tax a "succession tax" does not make it different from an ordinary tax upon property, when the effect and operation are identical with an ordinary property tax. State v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 328, 45 S. W. 245, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653, 40 L. R. A. 280. "The succession tax provided for, as defined by the terms of the Act in force when the testatrix died, is a death duty prescribed in view of the death of a domiciled resident of this State whose land within this State and whose personal property, wherever situate, is governed as to its disposition, distribution and succession, by the laws of this State, and of the death of a non-resident owning land within this State which is governed as to its distribution and succession by the same law; prescribed in respect to the beneficial interest which thus by force of our laws devolves upon all beneficiaries of the decedent; and fixed as to amount by a percentage upon the value of the whole interest thus devolving on the decedent's beneficial successors, based upon a valuation previously made of all the decedent's property inventoried by the administrator." Hopkins' Appeal, 77 Conn. 644, 649, 60 Atl. 657.

"The transfer tax . . . must be regarded as a tax, not upon the money which is the subject of the legacy, but upon the passing of that money under the will in possession or enjoyment." Matter of Wolfe, 89 N. Y. App. Div. 349, 350, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 949 [affirmed in 179 N. Y. 599, 72 N. E. 1152].

Such taxes are very ancient in origin, and have been long in use, especially in European states. that to justify the imposition of an inheritance tax by the legislature it is sufficient that the constitution does not prohibit it, and it is not essential that it shall be expressly authorized by the constitution.<sup>65</sup> Any provisions of the state constitution specifically applicable to this class of taxes must of course be obeyed;<sup>66</sup> but the restrictions on the power of the legislature with respect to the taxation of property generally have little or no application to succession taxes.<sup>67</sup> A tax of this kind has been held not to be within the constitutional provision that every law which imposes a tax shall distinctly state the tax and the object to which it is to be applied.<sup>68</sup> Statutory provisions for the enforcement of such a tax, through the agency of the probate courts, have generally been sustained.<sup>69</sup>

b. Rule of Equality and Uniformity. A statute imposing taxes on inheritances, legacies, and successions is not within the constitutional rule of equality and uniformity, because it lays the tax not on property, but on the privilege of succeeding to the ownership of real or personal estate by will or descent.<sup>70</sup> For this reason such a statute is not unconstitutional because it exempts from its operation estates or inheritances below a certain minimum value,<sup>71</sup> provided the exemption is not so excessive as to be entirely unreasonable,<sup>72</sup> or because it discriminates between direct and collateral heirs, by exempting the former altogether or by imposing a higher tax upon the latter than upon the former,<sup>73</sup> for it is said that, even if the rule of uniformity applies, the distinction between kindred in the direct line and collateral heirs is a natural and reasonable one and there is no inequality between members of the same class.<sup>74</sup>

In Minnesota Const. art. 9, § 1, provides that "all taxes to be raised in this state shall be as nearly equal as may be . . . provided . . . that there may be by law levied

3. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF STATUTES<sup>75</sup> — a. In General. An inheritance tax law should be construed strictly against the government and in favor of the taxpayer, and a doubt as to the taxability of a particular fund should be resolved in favor of the citizen.<sup>76</sup> Yet the construction must not be so narrow or technical as to defeat the purpose of the legislature, but such as to effectuate its proper and legitimate objects.<sup>77</sup> And to this end invalid clauses or limitations should be stricken out, leaving the remainder of the statute in force, if that can be done.<sup>78</sup> The various provisions of the act should be so interpreted as to make and collected a tax upon all inheritances, devises, bequests, legacies and gifts of every kind and description above a fixed and specified sum, of any and all natural persons and corporations. Such tax above such exempted sum may be uniform, or it may be graded or progressive, but shall not exceed a maximum tax of five per cent.<sup>79</sup> Under this constitutional provision it was held that Laws (1897), c. 293, which attempts to lay an inheritance tax, is unconstitutional for the reasons: (a) It excludes from its operation real property, and lays the tax upon inheritances of personal property alone; (b) it exempts from its operation persons and corporations whose property is exempt by law from taxation; (c) it allows a larger exemption to lineal heirs than to collaterals, and does not lay the tax on the excess of the value of the property received above a uniform exempted sum. Drew v. Tift, 79 Minn. 175, 81 N. W. 839, 47 L. R. A. 525. The statute was held, however, not to be unconstitutional because it taxed collateral heirs and distributees at a higher rate than lineals, for the constitution expressly authorized the graduation of the tax. Drew v. Tift, 79 Minn. 175, 81 N. W. 839, 47 L. R. A. 525. See also State v. Vance, 97 Minn. 532, 106 N. W. 98; State v. Bazille, 97 Minn. 11, 106 N. W. 93, 6 L. R. A. N. S. 732; *State v. it a harmonious whole,<sup>79</sup> and so as to make it reasonable and free from unjust discrimination.<sup>80</sup>

b. Retroactive Operation. Generally a right of inheritance, or of taking an estate, interest, legacy, or devise becomes fixed at the death of the testator or intestate, and is not taxable under a law enacted after that event.<sup>81</sup> In the case of an estate in remainder or reversion which vests at the time of the testator's death, although the possession is postponed, the transfer or succession, which is the subject of the tax, rather than the estate itself, is referred to the death of the testator, and if not taxable under any law then existing, cannot be taxed under a statute enacted thereafter, although before the vesting of the estate in possession.<sup>82</sup> So even though a will confers a power of appointment, subsequent legislation cannot authorize a tax upon the transfer of property effected solely by means of the will, with no aid from the power of appointment.<sup>83</sup> But it is competent for the legislature to provide for the taxing of interests when they shall come into possession or enjoyment, by the exercise of a power of appointment, although they were not taxable at the death of the donor of the power.<sup>84</sup> Succession statutes have also sometimes been made to apply to the property of persons dying before their enactment, in so far as the same might remain undistributed or in the hands of executors or under the control of the probate court at the time of the enactment of the statute; and their validity has generally been sustained.<sup>85</sup>

4. AMENDMENT AND REPEAL OF STATUTES. Legacy or inheritance taxes accrued and due under an existing statute are not remitted or released by its subsequent repeal.<sup>86</sup> As the statutes imposing taxes of this kind have been so often revised, amended, repealed, and reenacted in the different states, it seems important to remark that a law of this character is to be regarded as repealed by a later enactment which purports to be a revision of the entire subject and to provide a new and complete system;<sup>87</sup> but not so where the later statute merely contains new provisions, not necessarily inconsistent with those already existing but capable of being read into the existing statute as amendments to it.<sup>88</sup>

5. EFFECT OF TREATY PROVISIONS. Since a treaty between the United States and a foreign government is the "supreme law of the land," it may operate as a limitation upon the power of a state to impose inheritance taxes.<sup>89</sup> Treaties,

B. Property and Transfers Liable to Tax — 1. IN GENERAL. The property subject to an inheritance tax is not necessarily the same as that assessable for purposes of general taxation;<sup>91</sup> but it must of course be property subject to the jurisdiction of the taxing state,<sup>92</sup> and such as belonged to the decedent and was available to him at the time of his death,<sup>93</sup> and not in the nature of a gratuity or death benefit payable only to his heirs or next of kin.<sup>94</sup> Again, unless the statute otherwise directs, the tax is imposed on, or measured by, the value of the estate as it stood at the time of the death, and not including income or increase in value thereafter obtained or accruing.<sup>95</sup>

2. NATURE OF PROPERTY. There is no reason why real estate passing by devise or inheritance should not be subject to the tax, and usually the state statutes so provide.<sup>96</sup> If, however, the circumstances are such that the transfer regarded as a transfer of real estate falls within some exemption of the statute no tax can be imposed,<sup>97</sup> unless, at least, the property is to be treated as personal estate on the theory of equitable conversion.<sup>98</sup> A fund bequeathed to executors or trustees transfer of any property which is situated within the state and subject to its jurisdiction is subject to the payment of the tax, although the decedent was a resident of another state or an alien.<sup>7</sup> So where the property is within the state of which the decedent was a citizen, its transfer is taxable there, although the heir or legatee may be a non-resident or an alien.<sup>8</sup> But where both the domicile of the decedent and the situs of the property are in a foreign state or country, no tax is payable, although the succession devolves upon a resident citizen.<sup>9</sup> The laws of the different states vary as to the character of the property, belonging to a non-resident, which may be considered as within the state for the purposes of such a tax. Payment of tax in several jurisdictions.—It is no objection to the collection of the tax on the transfer of property within the state, belonging to a non-resident decedent, that the same was inventoried at the place of his residence as belonging to his estate and was there assessed and taxed, and that it also paid a tax to the federal government under its laws. In re Daly, 182 N. Y. 524, 74 N. E. 1116.

Exemption from taxation as affected by order of distribution at domicile of decedent.—Under Tenn. Acts (1893), p. 347, c. 174, § 1, providing that all estates, real, personal and mixed, situated in this state, whether the person dying seized thereof be domiciled within or without the state, passing from any person who may die seized or possessed of such estates to any person other than to or for the use of the father, mother, husband, wife, children, and lineal descendants born in lawful wedlock of the person dying seized and possessed thereof, shall be subject to a tax, it has been held that where, under the laws of decedent's domicile, the property passed to decedent's mother, it could not be taxed in Tennessee, although under its law the property would have passed to a brother. *Fidelity, etc., Co. v. which may be so treated,<sup>10</sup> not including choses in action.<sup>11</sup> On the other hand it is held to be within the power of the state to create a situs within its own borders for intangible personal property represented there by securities or investments.<sup>12</sup> So it has been held that a tax may be imposed on debts due to a foreign decedent from resident citizens,<sup>13</sup> money on deposit in a local bank to the credit of a non-resident decedent,<sup>14</sup> and upon his mortgages on real property within the state.<sup>15</sup> But a policy of insurance issued by a domestic corporation on the life of a resident of another state is not, upon the death of the insured, taxable at the domicile of the insurance company where the policy was kept in the state of the domicile of the insured and the company had designated a person in that state upon whom process might be served, since in such case it is not necessary for the person claiming under the policy to invoke the courts of the state in which the insurance company was incorporated to aid in the enforcement of the policy.<sup>16</sup> On the same principle a policy of insurance issued by a foreign corporation on the life of a non-resident is not taxable in the state where the policy is located.<sup>17</sup>

b. Corporate Stocks and Bonds. Shares of stock in a domestic corporation are subject to the tax at the domicile of the corporation on their transfer by will or under the intestate laws, although the decedent was a non-resident,<sup>18</sup> and this without regard to the place where the certificate may be kept.<sup>19</sup> But a different rule applies to bonds of a corporation. The bonds of a domestic corporation are not taxable at the domicile of the corporation if kept at the domicile of a non-resident owner,<sup>20</sup> but are subject to the tax if physically present in the state, although belonging to a non-resident decedent.<sup>21</sup> Stocks and bonds of a foreign corporation are taxable on the death of their owner if he was a resident of the taxing state,<sup>22</sup> but not where both the domicile of the owner and the home of the corporation were without the state.<sup>23</sup>

A resident decedent's stock in a domestic

c. Appropriation of Assets of Non-Resident to Payment of Debts or Exempt Distributive Shares. The personal representative of a non-resident decedent by election to appropriate the assets within the state to the payment of debts, to the exemption of property within the state of the decedent's domicile,<sup>24</sup> or to the payment of distributive shares which are exempt from the tax instead of to the payment of taxable distributive shares,<sup>25</sup> cannot relieve the property from corporation, although held by a foreign trustee, is taxable at the place of domicile of the corporation. Douglas County v. Kountze, 84 Nebr. 506, 121 N. W. 593.

Stock of corporation incorporated in several states.—Corporate stock belonging to a non-resident is taxable under the inheritance laws of the state of the domicile of the corporation, although the corporation may be also incorporated and doing business and may own property in other states. *Kingsbury v. It was held, under this statute, that, stock in a foreign corporation owned by a non-resident being non-taxable, a transfer in New York of such stock held by a non-resident decedent did not require such consent. *Dunham v. liability to the state inheritance tax attaching to the property upon the death of the decedent. On the other hand, no tax is payable on the property of a non-resident situated within the state where it appears that his indebtedness to resident creditors is in excess of the value of the property within the state;<sup>26</sup> and the fact that the ancillary executor has brought money from out of the state for the payment of the debts, so that assets within the state could be transmitted to be administered at the domicile of the decedent, will not alter the rule.<sup>27</sup>

4. SITUS OF PROPERTY. Where the decedent was a citizen of the state seeking to impose the inheritance tax, the liability of his estate thereto will sometimes depend on the situs of particular property. Land is taxable only where it lies, and if it is in another state, no succession tax can be imposed, although the deceased owner was domiciled in the taxing state;<sup>28</sup> but an exception must be made where the will absolutely directs the sale of the lands, as in this case there is an equitable conversion of it into personalty.<sup>29</sup> The same rule prevails as to tangible personal property, capable of having a situs of its own; it is not subject to the tax when located in a foreign state,<sup>30</sup> unless, at least, it is brought on to the home state for distribution, and therefore passes by virtue of the laws of the latter state.<sup>31</sup> As to intangible personal property and choses in action, the general rule is that mobilia sequuntur personam, and they are taxable at the place of the owner's domicile.<sup>32</sup> But this rule is considerably modified in some states by the disposition to create a special situs, for purposes of taxation, for certain classes of personalty, as stated in the preceding sections,<sup>33</sup> and the application of one rule in the state of the decedent's domicile and another in the state where the property is found frequently results in its taxation by both states.<sup>34</sup> It has been intimated, moreover, that if property of a decedent in a foreign country consisting of debts bona notabilia is fully administered in the jurisdiction where the debtor resides and is distributed to the beneficiaries in accordance with the court's order there, no succession tax can be imposed with respect to the same property in another state where the decedent was domiciled.<sup>35</sup>

5. TRANSFERS SUBJECT TO TAX — a. In General. A taxable transfer may be created by an instrument other than a will,<sup>36</sup> as where one conveys his property to trustees, reserving a life-interest or income to himself, and ordering the distribution of the property after his death according to directions contained in the deed or in his will.<sup>37</sup> But the instrument must be testamentary in character or bestow an estate to be enjoyed after the grantor's decease, and the transfer is not taxable if the deed or assignment was by way of sale or irrevocable gift inter vivos.<sup>38</sup> Further, the transfer, in order to be taxable, must be one created by the will or by the succession ab intestato, as the case may be, as distinguished from the vesting of an estate or interest, concurrent with the death of the decedent, but created previously by the agreement of the parties or by the act of the law independently of the question of inheritance or succession.<sup>39</sup> For this reason, a husband's right of curtesy<sup>40</sup> or a widow's right of dower<sup>41</sup> is not a taxable inheritance unless expressly made so, although if the widow elects to take a legacy under the will in lieu of dower it is taxable.<sup>42</sup> Again, the estate or interest to be taxed must pass directly from the decedent to the beneficiary,<sup>43</sup> or at most through the intervention of a trustee charged with a positive duty in regard to it and not with a mere discretion.<sup>44</sup> The tax is not chargeable on a sum paid by the heir or

c. Ante-Mortem Deeds and Gifts. In some states the laws impose a tax on all transfers of property by deed made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, or, as it is sometimes expressed, on gifts or transfers made in contemplation of death.<sup>54</sup> These provisions are intended to prevent evasions of the inheritance tax by distributions of property among the members of a family or others just before the death of the owner.<sup>55</sup> Whether or not a transfer was made "in contemplation of death" is a question of fact, in the determination of which the donor's age, his physical condition at the time, and the length of time he actually survives should be taken into account.<sup>56</sup> Under these provisions the tax of course attaches to a gift causa mortis.<sup>57</sup> The provisions, however, do not apply to a purchase and sale of property,<sup>58</sup> although a part of the consideration may be the support and maintenance of the grantor during his life.<sup>59</sup> And generally a gift, assignment, or transfer to a man's wife or children or to others, made absolutely and irrevocably at a time when the donor is not in contemplation of death, is not taxable;<sup>60</sup> but if the donor reserves an annuity or life income out of the property, or retains the control, management, and benefit of it, the beneficial interest or enjoyment of it is regarded as not vesting until his death, and it is therefore taxable.<sup>61</sup>

d. Gift or Legacy in Discharge of Debt. In some jurisdictions a bequest or an ante-mortem gift to a creditor of the testator in discharge of his claim is not subject to the tax,<sup>62</sup> provided the bequest represents a true and valid debt, recognized by both parties as such, and is not a mere pretense used to avoid payment of the legacy tax.<sup>63</sup> In other jurisdictions, however, a different rule prevails.<sup>64</sup> Where the decedent is the creditor, the remission or forgiveness of the debt by will is a legacy and taxable as such.<sup>65</sup>

6. ESTATES OR INTERESTS CREATED BY TRANSFER — a. In General. Any valuable interest or estate, immediate or future, created by a will and referable to the death of the testator, is a taxable transfer within the meaning of the statutes, including estates for life or for years,<sup>66</sup> annuities or life incomes charged upon property,<sup>67</sup> and pecuniary legacies, although the payment of them may be postponed to a future time.<sup>68</sup>

b. Estates in Remainder. A vested estate in remainder created by a will is a taxable transfer of property,<sup>69</sup> and the fact that the prior estate is exempt from the inheritance tax will not relieve the remainder-man from the payment of such tax.<sup>70</sup> So also a contingent remainder absolute is taxable,<sup>71</sup> although it may not be immediately subject to the tax on account of the uncertainty of the person to whom it may eventually descend or because he is not yet in esse,<sup>72</sup> or because the life-tenant is given full control of the corpus of the property, with a right to use so much thereof as he may desire or as may be necessary, and the ultimate value of the remainder therefore cannot be determined.<sup>73</sup>

C. Exemptions — 1. AMOUNT OR VALUE OF ESTATE. In Louisiana, property on which taxes have already been paid is exempt from the inheritance tax.<sup>74</sup> In other states no succession tax is imposed unless the estate exceeds a certain value; and this exemption is held valid if not unreasonable in amount.<sup>75</sup> In some jurisdictions the rule is that the "estate passing by will," which is exempt if below a certain sum, refers to the portion passing to the legatee or heir, and not to the whole estate of the decedent, so that a legacy or distributive share below that value is not taxable, although the estate to be distributed may in the aggregate exceed the statutory limit.<sup>76</sup> But in other states the rule is that an estate to be distributed, if it amounts in the aggregate to more than the limited sum, is taxable, although the separate legacies or portions may be individually below the limit.<sup>77</sup> Generally the value of the estate is to be taken as at the date of the testator's death,<sup>78</sup> and both real and personal property must be added together in determining it.<sup>79</sup> If the value of a pecuniary legacy is to be determined, it must be estimated at its face value.<sup>80</sup>

2. FUNERAL AND CEMETERY EXPENSES. The statutes usually exempt from taxation funds set apart for the funeral expenses of the testator, and this may include a reasonable provision for the care and maintenance of the decedent's cemetery lot and the graves of himself and his family and the erection of suitable monuments,<sup>81</sup> and perhaps also for the saying of masses for the repose of testator's soul.<sup>82</sup> But in some of the cases a distinction has been made between sums spent for these purposes in the discretion of the executor and definite bequests, the income from which is to be used for the same purposes, it being held that in the latter case the bequests are taxable.<sup>83</sup>

3. RELATIONSHIP OF PARTIES — a. In General. In most states the inheritance tax is imposed only on collateral heirs, exempting lineal heirs or exempting certain classes of relations by name.<sup>84</sup> But an exemption of this kind is construed with some strictness and is limited to the very persons intended by the statute to be relieved from the payment of the tax;<sup>85</sup> and the exemption of a certain class of relations by specific designation, as "brothers," "nephews," or the like, will not exempt their descendants.<sup>86</sup> But where the legacy or devise passes over the original legatee and vests in a third person, in consequence of the pre-decease of the original legatee, the exercise of a power of appointment, or the vesting of a remainder after a life-estate, it is regarded as passing directly from the testator to the final taker, and its taxability must be determined by the relationship of that taker to the testator, not by his relationship to the original legatee.<sup>87</sup> A legacy intended for the use and benefit of an exempt relative is not taxable because it is left to a third person in trust for him.<sup>88</sup> In addition to the usual exemptions of this kind, the laws of some states include legacies to the wife or widow of a son or the husband of a daughter.<sup>89</sup>

intended is not necessarily a formal act of adoption or any formal declaration of the parties as to their real or intended relationship;<sup>94</sup> but it may be established by pertinent facts, such as the care and maintenance of the legatee by the testator, that the latter supported and educated the former, that the legatee lived in the testator's home and as a member of his family, their mutually affectionate relations, and their style of address to each other.<sup>95</sup> On the other hand a presumption arising from circumstances of this kind may be rebutted by proof that the relationship of the parties was other than that of parent and child, as, for example, that of uncle and niece, and that they always addressed each other in terms appropriate to their actual relation.<sup>96</sup>

4. CHARACTER OF DONEE — a. In General. As the inheritance tax is not laid on the property but on the privilege of transferring it,<sup>97</sup> the state may lawfully tax a legacy given to the United States, and such a legacy is taxable if not specifically exempt by statute.<sup>98</sup> Nor is a bequest to a city or other public corporation exempt unless made so by law,<sup>99</sup> or unless the purpose of the gift brings it within the exemption of bequests for charitable and educational uses.<sup>1</sup> A statute imposing a tax on property of a decedent "which passes to any person" other than certain specified relatives, includes property devised to a private corporation.<sup>2</sup> within the constitutional power of the legislature to exempt bequests so given,<sup>4</sup> and this is sometimes done by a provision relieving from taxation legacies to corporations now exempt by law from taxation.<sup>5</sup> To avail itself of this immunity the institution must be able to show that its property in general is released from taxation either by its charter or by general law,<sup>6</sup> that the exemption applies to all its property and embraces all classes and kinds of taxes,<sup>7</sup> and that its objects and activities are charitable, educational, or religious, within the meaning of the law.<sup>8</sup> Where the legacy is given to trustees for the purpose of founding and endowing a charitable institution, it may be considered as if in the possession of a corporation already formed under the will for that purpose;<sup>9</sup> but the exemption does not extend to a legacy which is absolute on the face of the will, although bound by a secret trust for charitable purposes.<sup>10</sup>

or other expectant estate depends on a question of survivorship;<sup>20</sup> and generally a contingent remainder is not taxable until it vests in possession, or until the defeating contingency has been rendered forever impossible of occurrence.<sup>21</sup> Moreover, the laws of some states have provided generally that the tax shall not be imposed on future or expectant estates until the beneficiaries shall come into the possession and enjoyment thereof;<sup>22</sup> whereas in New York the statute is so framed as to require the immediate appraisal of the postponed estate and the payment forthwith of the tax on it out of the property transferred.<sup>23</sup> In the case of an annuity, it is sometimes held that the tax should be assessed on the annual payments as they successively accrue;<sup>24</sup> but in other jurisdictions it has been held that the whole present value of the annuity is to be appraised and the tax on the whole paid at once out of the principal set aside for the creation of the annuity.<sup>25</sup>

RATE OR AMOUNT OF TAX. The rate of the inheritance tax varies in the different states, and is wholly a matter of statutory regulation.<sup>26</sup> It is a common provision to grade it according to the nearness or remoteness of the relationship between the decedent and the heir or legatee.<sup>27</sup> If payment of the tax is deferred, or is not made within a limited time, it is also usual to provide that it shall bear interest.<sup>28</sup> inheritance tax is primarily to be made by the executor or administrator,<sup>29</sup> it is not chargeable upon the general funds of the estate, unless so ordered by the will;<sup>30</sup> but each legatee, devisee, or distributee is liable for the tax on his own share,<sup>31</sup> although not to an extent greater than the amount which actually comes into his hands,<sup>32</sup> and not at all in case he renounces or disclaims his legacy.<sup>33</sup> As between a tenant for life and a remainder-man, each estate should bear its proper proportion of the tax unless otherwise directed by the statute.<sup>34</sup>

b. Executors, Administrators, and Trustees. Although the tax on a legacy or devise is the debt of the beneficiary,<sup>35</sup> it is primarily the duty of the executor or administrator to pay it, and if he pays the legacies or distributes the estate without paying the inheritance taxes, he becomes personally liable for them,<sup>36</sup> as also where he exhausts the personalty in paying debts without providing for the tax.<sup>37</sup> He cannot maintain an action against the legatee or distributee, whom he has paid in full, to recover back the amount of the tax which he should first have deducted.<sup>38</sup> So if he erroneously pays taxes on legacies which really were exempt and not taxable, the loss is his own.<sup>39</sup> In some states the statutes make the executor personally liable for the tax in the first instance, and he is not freed from this liability until he produces a proper official receipt for the amount of the tax,<sup>40</sup> or unless he can justify himself by a judicial decision that the particular bequest is exempt.<sup>41</sup>

c. Provisions of Will. If a testator in his will directs that the amount of a legacy shall be paid to the legatee without deduction of the inheritance tax, or free and clear of such tax, the tax will be paid out of the residuary estate and not charged to the particular legacy.<sup>42</sup> Whether or not the legatee is to take his legacy in this way depends upon the intention of the testator as manifested on the face of the will, and no special formula of words is necessary to free the legacy from the tax, provided the intention is clear.<sup>43</sup>

E. Assessment — 1. JURISDICTION. According to the usual statutory provisions, the probate court having charge of a decedent's estate by the probate of the will or the grant of letters of administration<sup>44</sup> is given jurisdiction to determine all questions relative to the imposition of the inheritance tax, including the question whether a particular legacy or devise is subject to the tax or exempt from it and as to the incidence of the tax;<sup>45</sup> and this will include jurisdiction to construe

the will or determine the validity of particular clauses of it, when the decision may affect the amount of taxable property.<sup>46</sup> But the grant of such jurisdiction by statute does not take away the right of a legatee to sue for his legacy at common law and have the question of its liability to the tax determined in such action.<sup>47</sup>

2. APPRAISEMENT — a. In General. So far as concerns the procedure for the assessment and collection of the inheritance tax, the law to be followed is that in force when proceedings are instituted.<sup>48</sup> Under some systems the first step is a report or return to be made to the court by the persons liable to pay the tax;<sup>49</sup> under others it is the duty of the executor to apply for an appraisement of the estate for the purpose of the tax.<sup>50</sup> But, generally speaking, authority is given to the surrogate or judge of probate to appoint an appraiser, either on the motion of a party in interest or on his own motion,<sup>51</sup> selecting a suitable person for that purpose if there is no official appraiser.<sup>52</sup> In case these steps are not taken, the state may intervene by its proper officer and institute proceedings to have an appraisement made.<sup>53</sup> It is the function and duty of the appraiser to find and report all the property of the estate which is liable to the payment of the tax;<sup>54</sup> and when questions arise as to the liability of particular property or its exemption, or as to the deduction of particular debts in determining the taxable value of the residuary estate, it is his duty to examine witnesses, if necessary, and report the facts and his findings thereon to the court.<sup>55</sup>

b. Notice and Hearing. Notice of the time and place of an appraisement must be given to all parties interested in the estate or whose interests may be affected by the imposition of the tax, including on the one hand the legatees, heirs at law, etc.,<sup>56</sup> and on the other hand the proper representatives of the state,

60. Hopkins' Appeal, 77 Conn. 644, 60 Atl. 657, holding that the probate court, in computing the tax, is required to make a valuation of the whole interest that would, except for the tax, pass to all the decedent's beneficial successors, by deducting from the total amount of the valuation of all property left by the decedent, as it appears in the inventory and appraisal returned by the administrator and accepted by the court, or by a new appraisal that may be ordered at the instance of the state treasurer or any party interested, the amount of debts paid and expenses of administration, with other amounts required by the statute; then a sum equal to one half of one per cent on such proportion of the beneficial interest thus valued as would pass to husband or wife, parents, or lineal descendants, and three per cent on such proportion as would pass to any others, fixes the amount of death duty or succession tax payable to the state on occasion of that succession.

Interest on legacy.—In England, it has been held that where a legacy is not paid at the time appointed by the testator, legacy duty is payable, not merely on the capital sum bequeathed, but on the aggregate amount of capital and interest ultimately received by the legatee. Thomas v. Holbrook, 12 Price 407, 3 Y. & J. 114, holding that where a specific sum is bequeathed, or a specific debt forgiven, which is known and ascertained at the time of the testator's death, legacy duty is not payable upon the interest accruing in respect of such debt or sum of money between the time of such death and the period when the executors close their accounts.

(II) ANNUITIES, LIFE-ESTATES, AND REMAINDERS. The value of an annuity or life-estate is to be ascertained by calculating its probable duration according to the standard tables of mortality in use by actuaries, life insurance companies, and others;<sup>65</sup> and if the estate in remainder is to be appraised at the same time, its value is determined by deducting from the entire estate transferred the value of the life-estate as thus calculated.<sup>66</sup> But it is held that if the appraisal and taxation of an expectant or contingent estate are deferred until the beneficiary comes into the actual enjoyment of it, it should then be appraised at its present actual value, and without diminution on account of any valuation theretofore made of the particular estate.<sup>67</sup>

(III) CORPORATE STOCKS AND BONDS. In the case of stocks and bonds listed on the stock exchange, they should be appraised at their market value at the date of the decedent's death, by ascertaining the range of the market and the average of prices as thus found running back a reasonable period of time;<sup>68</sup> and although the decedent's holdings of particular stocks may have been so large that they could not be thrown upon the market at once without materially depressing the price, it is not proper to appraise them at less than the current market cases where this authority cannot be invoked, a right of appeal is generally granted,<sup>87</sup> which is available either to the executor or beneficiary whose interests are affected, on the one hand, or, on the other hand, to the state acting through its proper officers.<sup>88</sup> The appeal must be taken on such notice and within such time as may be limited by the statute;<sup>89</sup> and the reviewing court will not generally try the case de novo, but will restrict its inquiries to the specific questions and objections brought before it.<sup>90</sup> Provision is also made by law in some states of vacating or modifying appraisals for the causes mentioned:

Order made without jurisdiction.—Matter of Silliman, 175 N. Y. 513, 67 N. E. 1090 [affirming 79 N. Y. App. Div. 98, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 336].

Inadvertent confirmation of fatally defective appraiser's report. Matter of Earle, 74 N. Y. App. Div. 458, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 503.

Tax imposed under statute afterward declared unconstitutional.—In re Scrimgeour, 175 N. Y. 507, 67 N. E. 1089 [affirming 80 N. Y. App. Div. 388, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 636].

Fraud or newly discovered evidence.—Morgan v. Cowie, 49 N. Y. App. Div. 612, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 608. But the concealment of facts by an administrator is no ground for setting aside the appraisement, as the law does not require him to give voluntary aid to the appraiser or make any disclosure as to the estate. Matter of Smith, 14 Misc. (N. Y.) 169, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 701.

Mistake.—In re Earle, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 1038.

for ordering a reappraisal, chiefly in cases where property has been omitted by mistake,<sup>91</sup> although in some cases also where the state complains of an undervaluation.<sup>92</sup>

F. Payment and Collection — 1. PAYMENT. It is the duty of the executor or administrator in the first instance to pay the inheritance tax out of funds in his hands available for that purpose, looking for reimbursement to those upon whom it is ultimately chargeable.<sup>93</sup> The tax on a legacy is payable from the legacy, unless the testator directs otherwise;<sup>94</sup> and if the tax on an estate in remainder is to be made forthwith, it must come out of the principal of the fund.<sup>95</sup>

2. REFUNDING AND RECOVERY OF TAX PAID. Where an inheritance tax has been assessed and paid erroneously or on exempt successions or under an invalid statute, the laws generally provide for a method by which it may be reclaimed and refunded by the proper officers,<sup>96</sup> the claimant being also entitled to interest.<sup>97</sup> The time

Reference to ascertain question of fact.—Where an appraiser reported to the surrogate the property of a testator in New York which was subject to taxation, and counsel for the controller moved that the matter be sent back to the appraiser, to ascertain and report the property not in the state, but which would be subject to taxation if the testator was a resident of the state, a question of fact was presented to the surrogate for decision as to the place of testator's residence at the time of his death, which question the surrogate had power to refer. Matter of Bishop, 111 N. within which proceedings for this purpose may be taken is commonly limited by law.<sup>98</sup> In New York it is also provided that a person receiving a legacy and paying a tax therefor, who shall thereafter be compelled to refund a part of the legacy to pay debts proved against the estate after the payment of the legacy, shall be entitled to repayment of an equitable portion of the tax, by the executor if the tax has not yet been paid, or by the proper state or county officers if it has.<sup>99</sup>

3. COLLECTION AND ENFORCEMENT— a. In General. The collection of the inheritance tax is ordinarily made in and as a part of the proceedings for the administration of the estate, the executor or administrator being ordered to retain the amount of the tax from the funds in his hands, and being required, by rule if necessary, to pay it over to the proper officer.<sup>1</sup> The officers of the probate court are responsible for it if paid into that court.<sup>2</sup> But this does not exclude the maintenance of a suit by or on behalf of the state for the recovery of the tax where resort to such action becomes necessary;<sup>3</sup> and the state is not estopped from bringing such a suit for the unpaid tax on certain legacies by the fact that it has accepted payment of the tax on other legacies passing under the same will.<sup>4</sup>

b. Lien and Priority. In some states the inheritance tax rests as a lien upon the lands of the decedent,<sup>5</sup> but it is generally limited in time as against pur-

What law governs.—A proceeding to enforce a collateral inheritance tax is governed by the law in force at the time of decedent's death. Matter of Sterling, 9 Misc. (N. Y.) 224, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 385.

Parties.—It is unnecessary to appoint a special guardian to represent an infant heir, where the latter's interest is only in remainder and not presently taxable. Matter of Post, 5 N. Y. App. Div. 113, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 977.

Nature and form of remedy.—If the administrator pays over money to a distributee or legatee without deducting the inheritance tax, it becomes, to the extent of the tax, money had and received by him for the use of the state, and an action of assumpsit may be maintained against him therefor. Montague v. State, 54 Md. 481. See also Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Crenshaw, 120 Tenn. 606, 110 S. W. 1017. But see Atty.-Gen. v. Pierce, 59 N. C. 240, holding that the proper mode of suing for the inheritance tax is by a bill in equity in the nature of an information, in the name of the attorney-general.

Burden of proof.—The state has the burden of proving that property is subject to the inheritance tax. Matter of Miller, 77 N. Y. App. Div. 473, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 930. But where the government has made out a prima facie case for duty at a particular rate, if events have happened by which the duty would be less, the burden of proving such facts is on defendant. Solicitor-Gen. v. Law Reversionary Interest Soc., L. R. 8 Exch. 233, 42 L. J. Exch. 146, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 769, 21 Wkly. Rep. 854.

Discharge of lien by judicial sale.—In Pennsylvania the lien of the state for a collateral inheritance tax will be deemed constructively discharged if, upon a judicial sale of the land, although for other purposes, which realizes more than enough to pay such lien, the chasers.<sup>6</sup> If the testator directs the sale of his real estate, the lien of the tax is transferred to the fund produced by the conversion.<sup>7</sup>

c. Limitations.<sup>8</sup> The inheritance tax is not a debt, nor is it a statutory penalty or forfeiture, and therefore it is not within the statutes limiting actions on claims of either of those classes.<sup>9</sup> Special statutes of limitation, relating to the collection of this tax, have now been enacted in the various states where such a tax is imposed.<sup>10</sup>

d. Costs and Fees. The costs and expenses of a proceeding to collect the inheritance tax may be charged against the estate, if there was default in its payment,<sup>11</sup> or against the heirs or distributees whose neglect or refusal made the proceedings necessary,<sup>12</sup> but not against the state except under the conditions prescribed by the statute.<sup>13</sup> These costs may include a fee for the attorney employed to collect the tax if the law so provides,<sup>14</sup> and in some states probate officers are authorized to retain commissions on the taxes collected and paid over by them.<sup>15</sup>

G. Penalties — 1. IN GENERAL. In some states penalties for the non-payment of the inheritance tax are imposed in the form of heavy interest, beginning from the time when normally the estate should be settled and the tax paid.<sup>16</sup> If the delay in the payment of the tax is due to the fault of the executor or administrator, he may be personally liable for the penalty.<sup>17</sup>

2. GROUNDS FOR PENALTY AND EXCUSES FOR DELAY. The ground for imposing the penalty is that the tax was not paid within the time limited by law for that purpose.<sup>18</sup> But it is generally made a sufficient excuse for delay that the estate could not be settled within the time limited by reason of claims made against it, necessary litigation, or other unavoidable causes of delay.<sup>19</sup> Aside from a statutory provision of this character, an executor is not in fault if he withholds payment state fails to claim its privilege, although the state officers were unaware of the existence of the lien and had not appraised the estate or assessed the tax; and the fact that the judicial sale was of but a portion of the land liable for the tax will not prevent the discharge of the lien, since the tax is not apportionable, but rests on the entire tract. ## XVII. TAX ON TRANSFERS OF CORPORATE STOCK.

The tax of two cents a share imposed on transfers of stock,<sup>22</sup> made within that state, by the New York Tax Law of 1905,<sup>23</sup> does not violate the fourteenth amendment of the national constitution as making an arbitrary discrimination in favor of sales of other kinds of personal property,<sup>24</sup> or because it adopts the face value, instead of the market value, of the shares, as the basis of the tax;<sup>25</sup> neither is it objectionable as a tax on property outside the jurisdiction of the state,<sup>26</sup> nor as tainty as to identity of trustee named in the will); State v. Pabst, 139 Wis. 561, 121 N. W. 351.

Burden of proof.—One claiming exemption from the penalty on the ground of litigation or unavoidable delay must show affirmatively that the litigation was necessary and the delay unavoidable. People v. Prout, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 541, 5 Silv. Sup. 170, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 457 [affirmed in 117 N. Y. 650, 22 N. E. 1132].

Where estate can be partially settled.—It is the duty of executors, where a part of the estate cannot be settled up within the year, to estimate the amount thus suspended, and pay the collateral inheritance tax on the balance. Commonwealth's Appeal, 34 Pa. St. 204.

22. The original issuance of stock is not a transfer within the meaning of N. Y. Laws (1905), p. 474, c. 241. People v. Duffy-McInnerney Co., 122 N. Y. App. Div. 336, 106 N. Y. Suppl. 878 [affirmed in 193 N. Y. 636, 86 N. E. 1129].

23. N. Y. Laws (1905), pp. 474, 477, c. 241, §§ 315, 324. This act imposes a tax "on all sales, or agreements to sell, or memoranda of sales or deliveries or transfers of shares or certificates of stock in any domestic or foreign association, company or corporation, made after the first day of June, 1905," of two cents "on each hundred dollars of face value or fraction thereof." Payment of the tax must be denoted by an adhesive stamp or stamps affixed in the manner adapted to the circumstances of the sale. A violation of the act by a transfer without payment of the tax is made a misdemeanor and may be punished by fine, or imprisonment, or both, and the offender is also subject to "a civil penalty of five hundred dollars for each violation," to be recovered by the state controller in any court of competent jurisdiction. The statute further provides that no transfer of stock without payment of the tax "shall be made the basis of any action or legal proceedings, nor shall proof thereof be offered or received in evidence in any court in this state." The taxes thus imposed "and the revenues thereof shall be paid by the state controller into the state treasury and be applicable to the general fund, and to the payment of all claims and demands which are a lawful charge thereon." See People v. Reardon, 184 N. Y. 431, 77 N. E. 970, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 8 L. R. A. N. S. 314 [affirmed in 204 U. S. 152, 27 S. Ct. 188, 57 L. ed. 415].

A similar provision was contained in War Revenue Act, June 13, 1898, and was upheld in Thomas v. U. S., 192 U. S. 363, 24 S. Ct. 305, 48 L. ed. 481. See INTERNAL REVENUE, 22 Cyc. 1624 text and note 70.

The act imposes a tax, not upon property, but upon its transfer, and being uniform in its operation upon all transfers of the class named and upon all persons making such transfers within the state, is not obnoxious to the state or federal constitution as being so arbitrary, discriminating, and unreasonable in taxing the transfer of one class of property only, as to deprive certain persons of their property without due process of law, and denying to them the equal protection of the laws. People v. Reardon, 184 N. Y. 431, 77 N. E. 970, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 8 L. R. A. N. S. 314 [affirmed in 204 U. S. 152, 27 S. Ct. 188, 51 L. ed. 415].

Transfer tax not dependent on principle of valuation.—The tax imposed by the act being an excise tax imposed upon the transfer of a particular class of property does not depend upon any principle of valuation or any notice to the taxpayer. It is not a direct tax governed by the rule of appraisement but an indirect tax governed by the rule of uniformity; where there is no sale there is no tax; when there is a sale, the tax follows, which the legislature had the right to apportion in its discretion. It is valid, therefore, although not based upon the value of the certificates sold or of the sum for which they are sold. People v. Reardon, 184 N. Y. 431, 77 N. E. 970, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 8 L. an interference with interstate commerce.<sup>27</sup> But so much of the act as attempts to authorize a compulsory examination of all the private books and papers of a person having made, or suspected of having made, transfers of stock, for the purpose of securing evidence of violations of the act, is unconstitutional, as compelling a person in a criminal case to be a witness against himself.<sup>28</sup> And an amendment to the act of 1905,<sup>29</sup> imposing the same tax upon the transfer of each share of corporate stock, regardless of the face or actual value thereof, is invalid, as an arbitrary discrimination in favor of one and against another of the same class.<sup>30</sup>

VIII. DISPOSITION OF TAXES COLLECTED.<sup>31</sup>

A. Power to Regulate and Direct. Taxes which are set apart by the constitution of the state for particular uses cannot be diverted by the legislature to any other purpose.<sup>32</sup> But subject to this limitation it is in the general power 431, 77 N. E. 970, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 8 L. R. A. N. S. 314].

Not tax on property outside jurisdiction of state.—The fact that transfers made within the state by non-residents of certificates issued by foreign corporations and owned by such non-residents are subject to the tax does not constitute it a tax upon property without the jurisdiction of the state. Regarded as a tax not upon property but upon the privilege of its transfer, the state has the right to tax all business done and all contracts made within its territory, although relating to property situated elsewhere, provided they are not protected as federal agencies, whether the business is done or the contracts are made by residents or non-residents. Assuming, however, that the tax is in effect a tax upon property, the certificates may, for the purposes of taxation, be treated as property, and when found here are within the jurisdiction of the state and subject to the tax, so that whether regarded as a tax on the transfer of or upon the certificates themselves, it affects neither persons nor property without the jurisdiction of the state. People v. Reardon, 184 N. Y. 431, 77 N. E. 970, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 8 L. R. A. N. S. 314 [affirmed in 204 U. S. 152, 27 S. Ct. 188, 51 L. ed. 415].

27. New York v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 153, 27 S. Ct. 188, 51 L. ed. 415 [affirming 184 N. Y. 431, 77 N. E. 970, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 8 L. R. A. N. S. 314].

The act does not violate the commerce clause of the federal constitution because it taxes transfers of certificates of stock in foreign corporations made by non-residents in New York. The tax is uniform, is upon the privilege of transferring within the state of New York certificates of stock in all corporations, domestic or foreign, whether the transfers are made by citizens or non-residents; the fact that the certificates represent property situated in another jurisdiction is immaterial, and this would be true if it were a property tax. Assuming, however, that it is an indirect restraint thereon, in that it tends to prevent freedom of commercial intercourse, if there is no discrimination against persons or property from other states, that does not constitute such a substantial interference with interstate commerce as to amount to a state regulation thereof. People v. Reardon, 30. People v. Mensching, 187 N. Y. 8, 79 N. E. 884, 10 L. R. A. N. S. 625.

While the legislature has wide latitude in classification, its power in that regard is not without limitation, for the classification must have some basis, reasonable or unreasonable, other than mere accident, whim, or caprice. Under this statute the owners of corporate stocks do not stand on an equal footing. They do not receive the equal protection thereof, for some have to pay more than others in the same situation. Thus, if A sells one hundred shares of the face value of ten dollars each for one thousand dollars, he is taxed two dollars; while B, who sells ten shares of the face value of one hundred dollars each for one thousand dollars, is taxed twenty cents, the thing sold in each case being worth the same amount. This is not classification but arbitrary or accidental selection. People v. Mensching, 187 N. Y. 8, 79 N. E. 884, 10 L. R. A. N. S. 625.

B. Distribution of Taxes as Between State and Municipalities<sup>34</sup> —

1. TAXES COLLECTED BY STATE. Where the taxation of particular kinds of property, such as corporate franchises,<sup>35</sup> is withdrawn from the local authorities which otherwise would have jurisdiction, and committed to the state authorities under a general system, the state holds the taxes so collected as a trustee for the various municipalities affected,<sup>36</sup> and the apportionment to them of their distributive shares will be made in accordance with the provisions of the statute regulating the subject and according to the method of administration therein prescribed.<sup>37</sup>

2. GENERAL TAXES COLLECTED BY MUNICIPALITIES — a. Rights of State in General. There is nothing in the nature or the ordinary purposes and functions of a county to impose upon it the duty of collecting taxes for the state;<sup>38</sup> but such a duty may be laid upon counties or other municipalities by statute,<sup>39</sup> and in that case the county acts as the agent of the state in the collection of so much of the general taxes as belongs to the state.<sup>40</sup> It is also competent to give the state a preference and c. Default of Municipal Officers. A city or county treasurer whose duty it is to receive and pay over state taxes collected by the municipality is nevertheless not the agent of the state in respect to that duty, but is the agent of his municipality;<sup>49</sup> and hence if the money due to the state is lost through his embezzlement or other fault, the loss must fall upon the municipality and not the state.<sup>50</sup> But the city or county may obtain reimbursement by a suit on the defaulting officer's bond, although that bond runs to the state.<sup>51</sup> If the negligence, mistake, or fault of state officers has contributed to cause the loss, the state should bear its proportional share, and the municipality should not be charged with penalties in the shape of increased interest or attorney's fees.<sup>52</sup>

d. Actions to Recover Taxes Collected. The state may maintain an action against a county or city for state taxes due from the municipality<sup>53</sup> as soon as the latter has made the collection and is in default for not paying over the money.<sup>54</sup> But the position of the municipal corporation is not that of a collector or receiver of public moneys in such sense that judgment can be taken against it in a summary proceeding.<sup>55</sup>

C. Distribution and Apportionment of Taxes Between Different Municipalities<sup>56</sup> — 1. IN GENERAL. Where general taxes are collected by a larger municipal division of the state, such as a county, their apportionment and distribution among the different municipalities interested, such as cities, towns, villages, boroughs, and school-districts, will be made according to the principles and rules prescribed by the statutes and in the manner there directed.<sup>57</sup> Gener-

N. J. Pamphl. Laws (1903), p. 420, § 41, makes it the duty of a borough collector of taxes, on or before the twenty-second day of ally speaking, the collecting district is not the agent of the other municipalities, but their debtor,<sup>58</sup> and if the taxes are lost through the fault or fraud of its officers it is responsible for them.<sup>59</sup> A municipal corporation entitled to a share of the taxes may be estopped to claim such portion,<sup>60</sup> and should in any case be charged with a proper part of taxes delinquent and uncollected and of the expense of collection.<sup>61</sup> But the invalidity of the statute authorizing the tax is no defense to an action by a city to recover its share of the tax.<sup>62</sup>

2. INTEREST.<sup>63</sup> A city is entitled not only to the taxes collected for it by a county, but also to any penalties and interest accruing on those taxes by reason of their delinquency, if actually collected by the county.<sup>64</sup> But the county is not liable for interest on each collection made for the city, from the date of such collection, but is liable only when the city demands payment of any sums due to it which have actually been collected and not paid over by the county.<sup>65</sup>

3. ACTIONS FOR RECOVERY OF TAXES COLLECTED. A city or other municipality may maintain an action at law against a county which has collected taxes for it and failed to pay them over,<sup>66</sup> as soon as the liability of the county becomes fixed December in each year, out of the first money collected, to pay to the county collector the state and county taxes required to be assessed in his taxing district. Trewin v. Shurts, 74 N. J. L. 200, 65 Atl. 984.

Suppl. 128 [affirmed in 177 N. Y. 189, 69 N. E. 370].

Applications of rule.—The fact that the predecessors of the present county treasurer failed to make the appropriation of the railroad taxes required by law, and paid them over to their successors in office, will not excuse the present treasurer from making the appropriation. Spaulding v. Arnold, 125 N. Y. 194, 26 N. E. 295. And it is the duty of the treasurer to set aside and invest the money in question, as the law directs, although by doing so a deficiency is left in other funds and he will not have money enough to pay the obligations of the county to the state. Clark v. Sheldon, 106 N. Y. 104, 12 N. E. 341. If the money is diverted by the county treasurer, by the payment of state taxes and ordinary county expenses, it may be recovered by the town from the county. Crownshield v. Cayuga County, 124 N. Y. 583, 27 N. E. 242. And it is no defense for the county to allege that the taxes were not all paid into the county treasury, but part was used by the town collector to pay town expenses. Ackerson v. Niagara County, 72 Hun (N. Y.) 616, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 196. But compare as to the last point Peirson v. Wayne County, 87 Hun (N. Y.) 605, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 568 [affirmed treasurer may, it seems, be enforced even by a holder of the municipal aid bonds.<sup>73</sup>

E. Interest<sup>74</sup> and Penalties Collected. Unless otherwise directed,<sup>75</sup> interest, penalties, and costs collected on delinquent taxes follow the tax, and go to the state, county, or city, according as the one or the other is entitled to the tax itself;<sup>76</sup> and in cases where two or more of these are interested in the tax, such interest and penalties should be apportioned among them in the ratio of their respective shares of the tax.<sup>77</sup> But the legislature may change this rule and dispose otherwise of interest or penalties.<sup>78</sup>

F. Liability of Municipalities For Uncollected Taxes. As a general rule a municipality, such as a county, which is charged with the duty of collecting taxes for the state or for other municipal corporations within its limits, is held responsible for the entire amount of the tax levied and assessed,<sup>79</sup> not deduct-in 155 N. Y. 105, 49 N. E. 766]. A town is not entitled to have such appropriation made after the bonds which it issued have matured and been paid off. People v. Cayuga County, 136 N. Y. 281, 32 N. E. 854. But where new bonds have been issued for the purpose of paying the original bonds and coupons, the town is entitled to the same application of taxes in respect to the new issue. Barnum v. Sullivan County, 137 N. Y. 179, 33 N. E. 162. And the town is entitled to the benefit of this statute, although its issue of bonds has been adjudged invalid, where some of the bonds have been sold and have been held valid in the hands of the purchasers by the United States supreme court. *Strough v. ### G. Proceedings For Apportionment, Accounting, and Settlement.<sup>81</sup>

The duty of settling accounts and apportioning money raised by taxation, between the state and county, or between different municipalities, is ordinarily committed to a public officer or board,<sup>82</sup> whose decision, if not appealed from or brought up for review,<sup>83</sup> is final and conclusive.<sup>84</sup> But the duty to be performed by such officer or board is ministerial,<sup>85</sup> and if such officer or board neglect to perform such duty, the amount due to one of the parties in interest may be ascertained in any other manner that will satisfactorily establish it,<sup>86</sup> and hence by an action at County v. Hart Tp., 48 Mich. 319, 12 N. W. 190.

Illegal obligations incurred in a previous year by the municipal authorities, requiring the imposition of an additional amount to taxes for the current year, is no defense to a mandamus to compel the payment of state and county taxes. Shields v. Grear, 55 N. J. L. 503, 27 Atl. 807; Shields v. Paterson, 55 N. J. L. 495, 27 Atl. 803.

The state may make a county or other taxing district responsible as principal debtor for its entire quota of state taxes assessed within it. State v. Laramie County, 8 Wyo. 104, 55 Pac. 451.

Interest deducted under an agreement to that effect see Hubert v. New Orleans, 116 La. 507, 40 So. 853.

Parties.—The treasurer or the agent appointed by the county court, and not the judge of the county court, is the proper party to institute the proceedings to compel the enforcement of a tax required by law to be collected by one county for another. Bracken County Ct. v. Robertson County Ct., 6 Bush (Ky.) 69.

80. Harper County v. Cole, 62 Kan. 121, 61 Pac. 403; Muskegon v. Muskegon County, 123 Mich. 272, 82 N. W. 131; Oceana County v. Hart Tp., 48 Mich. 319, 12 N. W. 190. But compare Guittard Tp. v. Marshall County Com'rs, 4 Kan. 388, holding that, although a county may collect taxes for the townships in it, it is not liable for their quota until the taxes have been paid into the county treasury.

Pending injunction proceedings will not authorize deductions of taxes as delinquent for that reason. People v. Monroe County Sup'rs, 36 Mich. 70.

Lands bid in at tax-sale.—A county is not delinquent in failing to levy a tax as to lands which have been bid off by the county treasurer for delinquent taxes and have not yet been redeemed. State v. Ada County, 7 Ida. 261, 62 Pac. 457; State v. Atchison County, 1 Kan. 479. See also State v. Brewer, 64 Ala. 287.

83. Elizabeth City County v. Newport News, 106 Va. 764, 56 S. E. 801.

Appeal.—Where a street railway company did not contest a determination of the state corporation commission apportioning certain of its personal property for taxation between a city and a county, Code (1904), §§ 573a, 3454, prohibiting an appeal from the judgment of the state corporation commission ascertaining the value of any property of a railroad for the purpose of taxation and assessing taxes thereon, did not preclude the county from maintaining a writ of error against the city to review such apportionment. Elizabeth City County v. Newport News, 106 Va. 764, 56 S. E. 801.

Petition for reconsideration.—Where the state corporation commission apportioned certain personal property of a railroad company for taxation between the city and the county, the latter was entitled to institute an original proceeding before the commission to have such apportionment reconsidered and corrected. *Elizabeth City County v. law<sup>87</sup> in the nature of a suit for accounting,<sup>88</sup> to which the statute of limitations will not apply,<sup>89</sup> and in which, as the suit is equitable in its nature, such relief may be granted as the facts at the close of the litigation will warrant.<sup>90</sup>

H. Payment and Application Thereof.<sup>91</sup> Receivers of public taxes are required to keep the money safely until the proper time for its distribution,<sup>92</sup> and then to pay it over to the several treasurers or other officers entitled,<sup>93</sup> which duty may be enforced by mandamus.<sup>94</sup> In some jurisdictions state and county taxes are given a preference and are required to be paid over out of the first moneys received.<sup>95</sup>

91. Application of payments generally see PAYMENT, 30 Cyc. 1227.

92. Meyer v. Widber, 126 Cal. 252, 58 Pac. 532. In this case it appeared that a statute required the tax collector to settle with the county auditor each month for moneys collected, and to turn the same over to the county treasurer, and another statute required the auditor to settle the accounts of all persons indebted to the county and certify the amount to the treasurer; and it was held that where the collector deposited with the treasurer certain sacks containing money received on taxes generally, the treasurer was not required to segregate the amount to be credited to a certain fund, or pay it out to those entitled to the fund, until the collector had settled with the auditor and the latter had certified the amount to the treasurer.

Time of payment.—Payment to the school board of taxes for school purposes is not to be postponed until all the taxes of a particular year are collected, but they should be turned over from time to time as received. Iberia Parish School Directors v. Police Jury, 123 La. 416, 49 So. 5.

93. People v. Raymond, 188 Ill. 454, 59 N. E. 7; Atlantic County v. Weymouth Tp., 68 N. J. L. 652, 54 Atl. 458.

Delinquent personal property taxes.—The sum realized by the county as a result of legal proceedings, less the amount of expenses and fees for collecting, belongs, in the proportion prescribed by law, to the state, county, school-districts, and other governmental subdivisions. Washington County v. Clapp, 83 Minn. 512, 86 N. W. 775.

Manner of payment is sometimes regulated by statute. State v. Welbes, 11 S. D. 86, 75 N. W. 820.

In a proceeding to compel a county treasurer to make the application of taxes in the manner prescribed by law, it is no objection to the relief sought that the books in his office did not show the particular item to which the tax was to be applied, or that a town had not turned over its proportion of taxes for the particular purpose, or that claim had not been made upon the treasurer to have the taxes properly applied, or that the identical funds collected for the particular purpose were not then in the hands of the treasurer. Walsh v. Richards, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 610, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 1114.

Payments diverted from their proper channel and paid by mistake to the state (Ulster County v. State, 177 N. Y. 189, 59 N. E. 370 [affirming 79 N. Y. App. Div. 277, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 128]), or to the wrong county (Humboldt County v. Lander County, 24 Nev. 461, 56 Pac. 228; Kilbourne v. Sullivan County, 137 N. Y. 170, 33 N. E. 159 [affirming 62 Hun 210, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 507]), may be recovered back. Compare Auditor-Gen. v. Ottawa County, 76 Mich. 295, 42 N. W. 1101.

Restraining payment.—Where state taxes illegally apportioned against a county have been paid into the county treasury, the county cannot restrain the treasurer from paying the amount thereof to the state. Yamhill County v. Foster, 53 Ore. 124, 99 Pac. 286.

94. People v. Raymond, 188 Ill. 454, 59 N. E. 7. And see Buffalo v. Neal, 86 Hun (N. Y.) 76, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 346. But compare Sheridan v. Van Winkle, 46 N. J. L. 117, holding that, where a city treasurer had for several years been permitted by the county collector to pay over part of the state and county tax to the board of education and received credit therefor in his settlement with the collector, mandamus would not lie to compel repayment to the collector of moneys already paid to the board.

95. Sheridan v. Rahway, 44 N. J. L.

The driver or person in charge is not a part of the "team and carriage." Dexter v. Canton Toll-Bridge Co., 79 Me. 563, 567, 12 Atl. 547.

Live stock may not embrace the idea of a "team" but it cannot be denied that "team" embraces the idea of "live stock," hence under a statute making a railroad liable for injuries to live stock resulting from a failure to fence its tracks, an allegation of injury to plaintiff's team is sufficient. Inman v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 60 Iowa 459, 462, 15 N. W. 286.

"Team" or "carriage," in a statute making a town liable for damages happening to any person, his team or carriage, traveling upon a highway, or bridge thereon, by reason of any obstruction, defect, insufficiency or want of repair, which renders it unsuitable for travel thereon, include whatever animal or animals, drew or carried the load, and their harness, also the load itself (Woodman v. ## I. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS.

A. Definition and Nature — 1. TELEGRAPH. A telegraph, from two Greek words, meaning to write afar off or at a distance,<sup>1</sup> has been defined as an apparatus or adjustment of instruments for transmitting messages or other communications by means of electric currents and signals.<sup>2</sup> The term "telegraph" is sufficiently broad and comprehensive to include any apparatus for transmitting messages by means of electric currents and signals,<sup>3</sup> or by means of a wire, whether the communication is made by electricity or not,<sup>4</sup> and in the construction of statutory

2. Chesapeake, etc., Tel. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., Tel. Co., 66 Md. 399, 410, 7 Atl. 809, 59 Am. Rep. 167.

Other definitions are: "An instrument or apparatus for communicating words or language to a distance by the use of electricity." Webster Dict. [quoted in Com. v. Pennsylvania Tel. Co., 18 Phila. (Pa.) 588, 592; Atty.-Gen. v. Edison Tel. Co., 6 Q. B. D. 244, 254, 50 L. J. Q. B. 145, 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 697, 29 Wkly. Rep. 428].

"An apparatus, or a process for communicating rapidly between distant points, especially by means of preconcerted visible signals representing words or ideas, or by means of words and signs transmitted by electro-magnetism." Bouvier L. Dict.

The English Telegraph Act of 1863 defines a telegraph as "a wire or wires used for the purpose of telegraphic communication, with any casing, coating, tube or pipe enclosing the same, and any apparatus connected therewith for the purpose of telegraphic communication." Atty.-Gen. v. Edison Tel. Co., 6 Q. B. D. 244, 248, 50 L. J. Q. B. 145, 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 697, 29 Wkly. Rep. 428.

provisions has repeatedly been held to include the telephone.<sup>5</sup> Even before the invention of the modern electro-magnetic telegraph the term was applied to various contrivances or devices to communicate intelligence by means of signals or semaphores, which appeal to the eye,<sup>6</sup> but the term as now generally used applies distinctively to the electro-magnetic telegraph,<sup>7</sup> which was first perfected and put into practical operation by Morse,<sup>8</sup> although the term applies whether a wire is used or not,<sup>9</sup> and a telegraph line is such whether furnished with the Morse instruments or the typewriting instruments or other devices which have been invented to accomplish the same purpose.<sup>10</sup> The telegraph in common parlance is generally understood as referring to the entire system of appliances used in the transmission of telegraphic messages by electricity.<sup>11</sup>

2. TELEGRAPHY. Telegraphy has been defined as the transaction of business over or through wires.<sup>12</sup>

3. TELEGRAM. A telegram is any message or other communication transmitted or intended for transmission by telegraph.<sup>13</sup> A communication by telephone has also been held to be a telegram within the application of a statute.<sup>14</sup>

4. TELEGRAPH STATION. Telegraph stations are the ordinary offices for the business of telegraphy along the line of telegraph.<sup>15</sup>

5. TELEPHONE. A telephone has been defined as an instrument for transmitting spoken words.<sup>16</sup> In a general sense the name "telephone" applies to any instrument or apparatus which transmits sound beyond the limits of ordinary audibility;<sup>17</sup> but since the recent discoveries in telephony the name is technically

6. TELEPHONE EXCHANGE. A telephone exchange is an arrangement for putting up and maintaining wires, poles, and switch-boards within a given area, with a central office, and the necessary operators to enable the individual hirers of telephones within that area to converse with each other.<sup>24</sup>

7. LINE. The term "line" has been defined as a wire connecting one telegraphic station with another, or the whole system of telegraph wires under one management and name.<sup>25</sup> The term "line" as applied to telegraph and telephone lines has, however, both a popular and a technical meaning, and in a statute will be construed according to what appears to have been the intention of the legislature.<sup>26</sup>

B Telegraph and Telephone Distinguished — 1. IN GENERAL. Strictly speaking the telegraph and telephone are different and clearly distinguishable.<sup>27</sup> They have certain points of resemblance,<sup>28</sup> such as the use of poles and wires and the employment of an electric current,<sup>29</sup> and the common object of transmitting intelligence to a distance;<sup>30</sup> but they also have certain well-defined differences,<sup>31</sup> particularly in regard to the character of the terminal instruments,<sup>32</sup> and the mode of transmitting messages,<sup>33</sup> the telegraph conveying messages by means of sounds, representing words, letters, or figures,<sup>34</sup> requiring skilled operators to transmit, receive, and translate the same;<sup>35</sup> while the telephone conveys and voice from one room to another in large buildings, or a stretched cord or wire attached to vibrating membranes or discs, by which the voice is carried to a distant point, is, strictly speaking, a telephone."

reproduces the sound of the voice,<sup>36</sup> and with proper connections and facilities can be used by any person and requires no skill or experience to operate it.<sup>37</sup> This distinction leads to important differences in regard to the manner in which such companies transact business with their patrons and the facilities which they are required to furnish.<sup>38</sup> It is a marked and universal peculiarity in the telephone business as conducted in the United States that the instruments are always rented and never sold.<sup>39</sup>

2. TELEGRAPH AS INCLUDING TELEPHONE. The term "telegraph" is sufficiently broad and comprehensive to include the telephone,<sup>40</sup> and since the latter is comparatively so recent an invention as not to be mentioned in many statutes relating to telegraph companies,<sup>41</sup> it has been held that in applying the principles of the common law or in construing statutes the telephone is to be considered a telegraph unless there are express statutory provisions governing the case.<sup>42</sup> The telephone has accordingly been held to be included under the term "telegraph" in the application of constitutional or statutory provisions relating to the incorporation,<sup>43</sup> or taxation of such companies,<sup>44</sup> the exercise of the right of eminent domain,<sup>45</sup> and various other provisions relating to telegraph companies.<sup>46</sup> In some cases statutes originally relating in terms only to telegraph companies have by express enactment been made applicable to telephone companies also.<sup>47</sup> The term "telegraph" as used in statutes does not, however, always or necessarily include the telephone,<sup>48</sup> particularly where there is separate legislation relating specifically to telephones.<sup>49</sup>

C. Nature and Status of Companies — 1. IN GENERAL. Telegraph and telephone companies are quasi-public corporations,<sup>50</sup> or servants,<sup>51</sup> engaged in a quasi-public business,<sup>52</sup> in many respects similar to that of common carriers,<sup>53</sup> and their instruments and apparatus are therefore devoted to a public use.<sup>54</sup> Such companies receive from the public various valuable rights and franchises,<sup>55</sup> such as the right of eminent domain,<sup>56</sup> and are subject to certain well-defined duties and obligations to the public,<sup>57</sup> such as to serve the public gener-

Private business.—Telephone companies sometimes install what may be termed a local telephone plant by which persons in different rooms of a large building can communicate with each other, which system does not connect with the general telephone exchange or permit of conversation with the outside public, but is only for the use of persons in the building. Such telephones, although installed by a public telephone company, are not a part of its public business, as for the purpose of rate regulation. Chesapeake, etc., Tel. Co. v. Manning, 186 U. Canada.—Baxter v. Dominion Tel. Co., 37 U. C. Q. B. 470.

Telegraph companies have been called common carriers of messages or intelligence, and while there is sufficient analogy between them to make the term appropriate as a designation of the public character of such companies and of their business, they are not, strictly speaking, common carriers or within the law applicable to carriers of goods. Marr v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Tenn. 529, 3 S. W. 496.

An ordinance declaring a telegraph company to be a common carrier does not make it so. State v. St. Louis, 145 Mo. 551, 46 S. W. 981, 42 L. R. A. 113.

In California the statute defining common carriers expressly excepts telegraph companies. Hart v. Western Union Tel. Co., 66 Cal. 579, 6 Pac. 637, 56 Am. St. Rep. 119.

District telegraph company.—A telegraph company which maintains a staff of messenger boys which it furnishes to its patrons is not a common carrier as to the services rendered by such messengers in the delivery of packages. Constitutional requirements as to the mode pursuant to legislative authority,<sup>79</sup> the right to exercise which may be inquired into by quo warranto,<sup>80</sup> and which may be forfeited in case it was illegally or improperly granted or for non-user or misuser.<sup>81</sup> The franchise consisting of the rights and privileges incident to such a business is, however, distinct from the franchise to exist as a corporation,<sup>82</sup> and need not necessarily be granted to a corporation, but may be granted to an individual,<sup>83</sup> and this notwithstanding the statute under which the grant is made refers in terms to "companies."<sup>84</sup> It has also been held that an individual may own and conduct a telephone system without legislative authority unless there is some legislative restriction upon such right,<sup>85</sup> although legislative authority is undoubtedly necessary for the exercise of the right of eminent domain,<sup>86</sup> and the right to occupy public streets or highways must be derived either directly or indirectly from legislative authority.<sup>87</sup> The grant of a franchise to erect, maintain, and operate a telephone system authorizes the purchase of one which is already in existence;<sup>88</sup> but such purchase having been made the function of the grant is fulfilled and the grantee cannot thereafter erect and operate another system.<sup>89</sup> In some cases it has been held that the rights and privileges granted to telegraph or telephone companies by a municipality are not franchises, but merely licenses,<sup>90</sup> notwithstanding by a constitu-of acquiring a franchise to establish and operate a telephone system in a town or city must be complied with or the company will be a trespasser and without standing in court. Rural Home Tel. Co. v. Kentucky, etc., Tel. Co., 128 Ky 209, 107 S. W. 787, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1068.

Exclusiveness of grant.—A grant to a telephone company of the right to construct and maintain a telephone system is a mere license and not exclusive, and the municipality may subsequently grant to another company a like privilege. Rock Island v. Central Union Tel. Co., 132 Ill. App. 248.

A municipality cannot grant a franchise to a telegraph or telephone company unless the power to do so has been delegated to it. State v. Milwaukee Independent Tel. Co., 133 Wis. 588, 114 N. W. 108, 315.

tional or statutory provision such municipal consent is necessary; <sup>91</sup> but this doctrine has been questioned, <sup>92</sup> and the term "franchise" is frequently used in this connection; <sup>93</sup> and it has been held even where the right to occupy public streets is termed a license and not a franchise, that such right, since it can only be granted pursuant to legislative authority, may be inquired into by information in the nature of quo warranto. <sup>94</sup> The fact that the incorporation of a telephone company is incomplete at the time a privilege is granted to it by a municipality does not affect its right thereto; <sup>95</sup> nor can a municipality which has granted rights and privileges to a telephone company organized under the laws of the state question the validity of the company's incorporation in a suit to restrain the municipality from interfering with the exercise of the rights which it has granted. <sup>96</sup> A grant by a municipality of rights, franchises, or privileges to a telegraph or telephone company and their acceptance by such company constitute a contract, <sup>97</sup> which is binding upon the municipality so that it cannot be revoked or rescinded without cause, <sup>98</sup> or the rights granted be nullified or materially impaired, <sup>99</sup> or made subject to new and burdensome conditions not justifiable under the municipality's police powers; <sup>1</sup> and it is also binding upon the company as to the conditions imposed, <sup>2</sup> and estops the company to repudiate any of the provisions of such contract;<sup>3</sup> but where pursuant to statute the designation of streets or manner of constructing the line is made by a court, the court cannot insert requirements not authorized by the statute, although assented to by the company.<sup>4</sup> An ordinance granting rights to a telegraph or telephone company will be strictly construed against the grantee,<sup>5</sup> and one company under a grant of the right to use streets cannot under its franchise confer a similar right upon a separate and distinct company without the consent of the municipality;<sup>6</sup> but the limitations or conditions imposed must be construed as coterminous with the franchise which the municipality was authorized to grant.<sup>7</sup> A right or franchise granted by a municipality to a telephone company for a certain period cannot be arbitrarily terminated by the municipality prior to the expiration of such period unless the right to do so is expressly reserved,<sup>8</sup> and if reserved the municipality must in enforcing such right proceed in accordance with the provisions of the ordinance reserving it,<sup>9</sup> although the grant may be revoked for an abuse of the powers granted or failure to comply with the conditions imposed,<sup>10</sup> and will terminate at the expiration of the time limited.<sup>11</sup> Where a municipality by ordinance has granted certain rights and privileges to a telegraph or telephone company, a subsequent ordinance granting other or additional rights to such company does not necessarily repeal the former ordinance;<sup>12</sup> but under some circumstances an acceptance by the company of the second ordinance may estop it to claim any further rights under the original ordinance.<sup>13</sup>

easement which is a property right and entitled to all the constitutional protection afforded to other property and contracts;<sup>31</sup> but the right must be exercised in such manner as not unnecessarily to obstruct or injure the street or highway,<sup>32</sup> and subject to all proper legislative or municipal regulations.<sup>33</sup> The right to construct a telegraph or telephone line in a street or highway includes the right to place therein necessary and proper appliances for such purpose;<sup>34</sup> but does not authorize any invasion of adjoining private property for the purpose of constructing the line or stringing wires across such property.<sup>35</sup> An unauthorized entry upon private property for the purpose of constructing a telegraph or telephone line is a trespass,<sup>36</sup> and a mere license to attach wires to a building is revocable at the owner's pleasure.<sup>37</sup> The consent of a landowner to the construction of a telegraph or telephone line across one part of his land does not authorize its subsequent removal to another part of his land without his consent;<sup>38</sup> nor does the grant of a right to construct a telegraph or telephone line over private property, as incidental to and to facilitate some other business, authorize the construction of such a line for ordinary commercial purposes.<sup>39</sup>

3. POWERS — a. In General. As in the case of corporations generally,<sup>40</sup> telegraph and telephone companies can exercise only such powers as are expressly or impliedly conferred upon them.<sup>41</sup> Since, however, the term "telegraph" ordinarily includes the telephone,<sup>42</sup> it has been held that a company incorporated as a telegraph company may carry on a telephone business,<sup>43</sup> and that telephone companies may exercise many of the rights and privileges conferred in terms upon telegraph companies.<sup>44</sup> A company incorporated as a telegraph company may also engage in a ticker business, since it is substantially of the same character,<sup>45</sup> and if a telegraph or telephone company is authorized by statute to transact any business in which electricity over or through wires may be applied to any useful purpose, such company may conduct an electric lighting business.<sup>46</sup>

or regulation of a telegraph or telephone company to be valid and binding must be reasonable,<sup>58</sup> and not contrary to public policy,<sup>59</sup> or in conflict with any duty or liability imposed by law,<sup>60</sup> whether its purpose is to facilitate business or to limit liability;<sup>61</sup> and such rules and regulations, although reasonable in themselves, must also be reasonably applied with reference to the circumstances of particular cases.<sup>62</sup> A telegraph or telephone company may also waive the benefit of a rule or regulation,<sup>63</sup> and thus become liable for a failure properly to perform the duties so undertaken.<sup>64</sup>

4. LEASES, CONTRACTS, AND COMBINATIONS — a. In General. The same principles which prevent a telegraph or telephone company from selling its franchises and property without legislative authority<sup>65</sup> have been held to prevent a lease of the same,<sup>66</sup> or to prevent a railroad company having such a franchise from leasing the same to a telegraph company.<sup>67</sup> Such a lease may, however, be made if authorized by statute,<sup>68</sup> provided the requirements of the statute are complied with;<sup>69</sup> but a provision in the charter of a telegraph company authorizing it to lease its lines, fixtures, and apparatus does not authorize a lease of its franchise,<sup>70</sup> or authorize its lessee to build new lines on new routes.<sup>71</sup> The validity of contracts and combinations between different telegraph or telephone companies depends upon the provisions of the statutes or, in the absence of a statute, upon questions of public policy;<sup>72</sup> but in so far as expressly authorized by statute the question of public policy cannot control.<sup>73</sup> Such contracts and combinations, if not ultra vires,<sup>74</sup> and which tend to promote the public welfare and convenience, are valid;<sup>75</sup> and such contracts, although they may incidentally involve a partial restraint in competition, are not contrary to public policy if the main object of the agreement is lawful and beneficial to the public, and such restraint is only an incident and fairly necessary for the accomplishment of the main object of the agreement.<sup>76</sup> So an arrangement between two such companies to prevent a competition which would be ruinous to each is not contrary to public policy;<sup>77</sup> and it has also been held that an agreement between two companies to divide their receipts and expenses in certain proportions is not invalid.<sup>78</sup> A contract between two telephone companies which provides for a physical connection between the two systems and stipulates that it may be terminated by either party on notice is not contrary to public policy, and the patrons of each are bound to know that such connection is liable to be discontinued;<sup>79</sup> but where the contract for such a connection is silent as to its continuance or discontinuance, it fixes a status affected by a public interest which cannot be voluntarily terminated by either or both of the parties,<sup>80</sup> but only by a retirement of one of the parties from the business.<sup>81</sup> A contract between two telegraph or telephone companies if valid may be specifically enforced,<sup>82</sup> although specific performance may be denied where there is another adequate remedy.<sup>83</sup> Such a contract if severable may be valid and enforceable as to some of its provisions, although invalid as to others.<sup>84</sup> The construction of contracts between such companies is governed by the rules relating to the construction of contracts generally.<sup>85</sup>

b. Contracts With Railroad Companies.<sup>86</sup> It has been held in a number of cases that a railroad company cannot legally grant to one telegraph company the exclusive right to occupy and use its right of way for telegraphic purposes,<sup>87</sup> it being held that such contracts are not only contrary to public policy,<sup>88</sup> but also in contravention of the federal statute of 1866 authorizing telegraph companies to maintain and operate lines of telegraph along the post roads of the United States,<sup>89</sup> which by statute include all railroads.<sup>90</sup> In other cases, however, it has been held that a railroad company may grant an exclusive right to the use of its right of way to one telegraph company,<sup>91</sup> and that such contracts are not contrary to public policy.<sup>92</sup> It seems to be uniformly held, however, that a railroad company cannot legally contract with a telegraph company occupying its right of way not to furnish equal transportation facilities to rival telegraph companies.<sup>93</sup>

II. CONSTRUCTION, MAINTENANCE, AND REGULATION.

A. Authority For Construction and Maintenance — 1. FEDERAL GOVERNMENT — a. Post Roads. The federal statute of 1866, sometimes known as the Post Roads Act, authorizes all telegraph companies accepting its provisions to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph over any portion of the public domain and over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States, provided they are so constructed as not to interfere with ordinary travel permissive,<sup>5</sup> and the franchise or privilege granted must, like any other franchise, be exercised in subordination to both public and private rights.<sup>6</sup> The act does not authorize the taking without compensation of state or municipal property,<sup>7</sup> which includes public streets and highways,<sup>8</sup> or of private property,<sup>9</sup> which includes railroad rights of way,<sup>10</sup> or even authorize the taking of such property in the absence of condemnation proceedings without the owner's consent, although compensation therefor is tendered.<sup>11</sup> The statute does not confer the right of eminent domain,<sup>12</sup> or authorize any compulsory proceedings for the taking of property without the owner's consent,<sup>13</sup> so that if the company is not entitled under the state statutes to exercise the right of eminent domain, it cannot take private property without the owner's consent, although willing to make just compensation therefor.<sup>14</sup> It does not deprive the state of the right to tax the property of the telegraph company, including its franchise, as far as the same has a situs within the state,<sup>15</sup> nor of the right to exact rental for the use of state property or to permit a municipality to exact such rental for the use of its streets where the municipality owns the streets;<sup>16</sup> nor of the right to impose or permit a municipality to impose a license-tax, as a revenue measure, provided such tax is based exclusively on domestic messages not pertaining to the business of the government of the United States;<sup>17</sup> nor of the right under the police power to exact or permit the exaction by a municipality of a license-fee, not as a revenue measure, but designed to cover and commensurate with the cost of police supervision.<sup>18</sup> But while the state retains the rights referred to, it may not, in enforcing them, make use of any means which impedes, embarrasses, or obstructs the continuance of the interstate, foreign, or governmental business of a company which has accepted the provisions of the act of 1866.<sup>19</sup>

b. Navigable Waters. The act of 1866 also authorizes the construction and maintenance of telegraph lines over, under, or across the navigable streams or waters of the United States,<sup>20</sup> provided they are so constructed and maintained as not to obstruct navigation;<sup>21</sup> but the statute does not apply to companies which have not accepted its provisions,<sup>22</sup> or to a company not organized "under the laws of any state," but of a foreign country for transoceanic communication.<sup>23</sup> Any unnecessary interference with the free movement of vessels is an obstruction

But the state cannot enjoin a telegraph company which has accepted the provisions of the act of 1866 and constructed its line along post roads from continuing to carry on its business in that state as a means of enforcing the payment of taxes, and a statute providing for such a remedy is invalid. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530, 8 S. Ct. 961, 31 L. ed. 790.

Federal franchises not taxable.—The franchise granted by the act of 1866 is not subject to state taxation either directly or indirectly, and where a telegraph company under the authority of the act of 1866 and the statutes of the state has constructed its line along the streets of a city, an ordinance merely prescribing the location of poles and mode of exercising the right does not grant to the company any new franchise which the municipality may legally tax. *Western Union Tel. within the meaning of the act,<sup>24</sup> and a vessel is navigating if proceeding under her own power, although plowing through soft mud.<sup>25</sup> The manner in which a cable must be laid so as not to obstruct navigation depends upon the nature of the locality and the character and extent of the navigation;<sup>26</sup> and the statute does not confer any absolute right to lay a cable upon the surface of even a solid bottom if it is necessary in order to prevent obstruction that it should be sunk below the surface.<sup>27</sup>

2. STATE. Since under the act of 1866 the state cannot exclude, its consent is of course unnecessary for the construction of telegraph lines along post roads by companies accepting the provisions of that act.<sup>28</sup> There are, however, in many jurisdictions statutes authorizing the construction of telegraph or telephone lines upon or along the public roads, streets, or highways of the state,<sup>29</sup> subject in some cases to the consent of the municipal authorities;<sup>30</sup> and such statutes, although referring in terms only to telegraph companies, apply to telephone companies also,<sup>31</sup> so that they confer rights and privileges upon companies not entitled to the benefit of the act of 1866.<sup>32</sup> In some cases the statutes also authorize the construction of such lines along and upon railroad rights of way,<sup>33</sup> subject of course

Municipal consent is not necessary unless required by constitutional or statutory provision. Barhite v. Home Tel. Co., 50 N. Y. App. Div. 25, 31, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 659, where the court said: "In every instance, so far as I have been able to discover, where the consent of a municipal body has been held to be a necessary preliminary to the occupation of its streets by a corporation, that consent has been based upon the delegation of power by the Legislature."

The right to regulate and control the erection, construction, laying, stringing, and maintaining of poles, wires, and cables in the streets of a city does not make the consent of the municipality essential to the right to occupy its streets, the right of regulation being subordinate to the legislative franchise. Barhite v. Home Tel. Co., 50 N. Y. App. Div. 25, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 659.

W. 67; Dakota Cent. Tel. Co. v. Huron, 165 Fed. 226; North Western Tel. Exch. Co. v. St. Charles, 154 Fed. 386.

Nature of right.—Where the constitution provides that a telegraph or telephone company shall not occupy the streets of a city without municipal consent, and that such consent shall only be granted by a sale to the highest bidder, the right or franchise so granted by the municipality is not the right to carry on such a business in the city, which is a right that a municipality could not deny, but is merely the right to occupy some part of the public streets. Bland v. Cumberland Tel., etc., Co., 109 S. W. 1180, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 399.

in which case it must be obtained,<sup>40</sup> and in the manner provided by the constitutional or statutory provision requiring it,<sup>41</sup> although if no particular mode of manifesting such consent is prescribed it may be either express or implied.<sup>42</sup> So also, although municipal consent was necessary and not obtained, the municipality, by permitting a telegraph or telephone company without objection to construct its line and expend large sums of money in so doing, may be precluded by its acquiescence and laches from objecting to the occupancy of its streets by such company.<sup>43</sup> Where municipal consent is necessary it may ordinarily be granted subject to any reasonable and proper conditions;<sup>44</sup> but the municipality cannot legally impose any conditions other than those permitted by the legislature,<sup>45</sup> unless they can be sustained under its general police powers in regard to the control and regulation of its streets,<sup>46</sup> although a telegraph or telephone company, by accepting the rights granted, may be bound by a condition annexed thereto which the municipality was not authorized to impose.<sup>47</sup> Municipal consent when once given and acted upon cannot be arbitrarily revoked,<sup>48</sup> or made subject to new conditions not justifiable under its police powers,<sup>49</sup> and a municipality may also be estopped by its conduct from denying the validity of an ordinance or resolution granting such consent.<sup>50</sup> A municipality, although its consent is not necessary in order to confer a right to use its streets, may regulate and control the manner in which such right shall be exercised;<sup>51</sup> but this right of regulation is entirely distinct from the original granting of the privilege, and is subordinate to the franchise granted directly by the legislature.<sup>52</sup>

Consent as to maintenance.—A constitutional provision requiring municipal consent for the construction of a telegraph or telephone line does not require such consent for its subsequent maintenance and operation, but is intended for the purpose of enabling municipalities to impose proper conditions within the limits of the police power before the company can place its poles and wires in the streets. Dakota Cent. Tel. Co. v. Huron, 165 Fed. 226. But if the statute requires municipal consent to "maintain and operate," such consent is necessary for the maintenance as well as for the construction. Southern Bell Tel., etc., Co. v. Richmond, 103 Fed. 31, 44 C. C. A. 147.

4. PROPERTY-OWNERS. A telegraph or telephone business is a public use authorizing the taking, under the power of eminent domain, of private property,<sup>53</sup> or property already devoted to a public use, such as a street or a railroad right of way;<sup>54</sup> but such property cannot constitutionally be taken against the owner's consent without compensation,<sup>55</sup> although already devoted to a public use.<sup>56</sup> So, if a telegraph or telephone line is constructed on a railroad right of way, compensation must be made to the railroad company,<sup>57</sup> and also to the abutting landowner;<sup>58</sup> and in some jurisdictions the abutting landowner is entitled to compensation where such construction is upon a public street or highway.<sup>59</sup>

B. Regulation and Control—1. IN GENERAL. Owing to the quasi-public character of telegraph and telephone companies and the business conducted by them,<sup>60</sup> they are subject to legislative regulation and control,<sup>61</sup> and the same rule applies whether the business is carried on by a corporation or by an individual.<sup>62</sup> The state may also delegate its power of regulation and control to a board or body, such as a railroad commission,<sup>63</sup> or to a municipal corporation;<sup>64</sup> but legislative functions such as the right to designate the location of poles or mode of construction in a municipality cannot be delegated to a court.<sup>65</sup> Telegraph and telephone companies are subject to all regulations falling properly within the police power of the state,<sup>66</sup> or the police powers vested in a municipal Suppl. 659, where the court said: "When a corporation of this kind is to avail itself of the legislative grant, the manner of its exercise, the location of its poles, the stringing of its wires, etc., are within the control and regulation of the local legislative body. That is one of the police functions committed to the municipality. This right of regulation is, however, entirely distinct from the original granting of the privilege. It is subordinate to that right."

corporation,<sup>67</sup> and a state or municipality cannot by contract with such companies surrender this power and deprive itself of the right to make proper police regulations.<sup>68</sup> The power of municipal corporations to regulate and control telegraph and telephone companies is derived from the legislature,<sup>69</sup> and limited accordingly;<sup>70</sup> but municipalities are usually vested with broad and extensive powers in regard to regulations affecting the occupancy and use of their streets.<sup>71</sup> The power of regulation is not affected by the Post Roads Act of 1866,<sup>72</sup> nor do the exclusive powers of congress in regard to interstate commerce prevent the making of proper local regulations;<sup>73</sup> but the power of regulation, whether exercised directly or indirectly, is not absolute, but subject to certain constitutional limitations,<sup>74</sup> and municipal regulations to be valid must be reasonable.<sup>75</sup>

Although there is a general statute prescribing a maximum rate, a municipality may by contract with a telephone company secure a lower rate. Charles Simons Sons Co. v. Maryland Tel., etc., Co., 99 Md. 141, 57 Atl. 193, 63 L. R. A. 727.

A telephone company will be enjoined from charging rates in excess of those prescribed by the ordinance granting its franchise to do business within the municipality. Cumberland Tel., etc., Co. v. Hickman, 129 Ky. 220, 111 S. W. 311, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 730.

Construction of ordinance.—Where an ordinance granting a telephone company a franchise to operate within a city prescribed that the company should not charge tolls in excess of a schedule contained in the ordinance, such schedule was limited to service within the city, and did not preclude the corporation from charging an extra rate for connections outside the city limits. Moberly v. Richmond Tel. Co., 126 Ky. 369, 103 S. W. 714, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 783. A city telephone franchise providing that the grantee should connect the central exchange, and thereby each subscriber's instrument with other specified towns and cities, and specifying monthly rates of one dollar and fifty cents and two

a condition upon the company against its consent,<sup>84</sup> yet if the company voluntarily accepts the rights granted with the condition annexed, it cannot afterward contest the reasonableness of such rate,<sup>85</sup> or refuse to furnish services and facilities at the rate stipulated,<sup>86</sup> or deny the authority of the municipality to make such agreement.<sup>87</sup> Rates established under the power of regulation, whether by the state or by a municipality or other body to which such power has been delegated, must not, however, be unreasonable or confiscatory;<sup>88</sup> but it will be presumed that the rate established is reasonable and valid, and the burden is upon the telegraph or telephone company to show the contrary.<sup>89</sup>

3. LICENSE-FEES, TAXES, AND RENTALS.<sup>90</sup> The telegraph or telephone business is one which is properly subject to a license-tax,<sup>91</sup> subject to the limitation that a state or municipality cannot by such means impose a tax upon or interfere dollars and fifty cents for residence and business telephones, respectively, does not entitle subscribers to service to such other towns and cities without additional charge, but merely gives them the privilege of using long-distance connections from their telephones. *Cumberland Tel., etc., Co. v. Rights of citizens.—A citizen of a city is entitled to insist on the enforcement of a contract between the city and a telephone company limiting the rate to be charged subscribers for service. Rochester Tel. Co. v. Ross, 125 N. Y. App. Div. 76, 109 N. Y. Suppl. 381 [affirmed in 195 N. Y. 429, 88 N. E. 793]. But where a private citizen, for whose benefit a contract is made between a city and a telephone company fixing maximum rates for telephone service, voluntarily and with knowledge of the facts contracts with the company for service at a different rate than that prescribed by the municipal franchise, he cannot repudiate his contract and demand a different service at a different rate by virtue of the franchise, on the ground that the company is bound by its franchise to render the service demanded. Buffalo Merchants' Delivery Co. v. Frontier Tel. Co., 112 N. Y. Suppl. 862.

87. Rochester Tel. Co. v. Ross, 125 N. Y. App. Div. 76, 109 N. Y. Suppl. 381 [affirmed in 195 N. Y. 429, 88 N. E. 793]; Buffalo Merchants' Delivery Co. v. Frontier Tel. Co., 112 N. Y. Suppl. 862.

88. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Myatt, 98 Fed. 335. See also Chesapeake, etc., Tel. Co. v. Manning, 186 U. S. 238, 22 S. Ct. 881, 46 L. ed. 1144.

Specific performance of ordinance.—Where a rate, reasonable in the beginning, has, because of changed conditions, become unreasonable and confiscatory it will not be speci-cally enforced even though it was originally accepted by the company as a matter of contract, in exchange for its franchise or other privileges. Maryland Tel., etc., Co. v. Charles Simons Sons Co., 103 Md. 136, 63 Atl. 314, 115 Am. St. Rep. 346.

Different rates for different companies.—The fact that a municipal corporation authorized by statute to regulate telephone rates prescribes different rates for different companies doing business within its limits does not necessarily constitute an illegal discrimination or denial of the equal protection of the laws, since a just ground for such classification may exist by reason of the differences in the territory occupied, facilities furnished, and services rendered by the different companies. Home Tel., etc., Co. v. Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 29 S. Ct. 50, 53 L. ed. 176 [affirming 155 Fed. 554].

Power of courts.—The power of fixing rates and charges is a legislative function which cannot be performed by the courts (Nebraska Tel. Co. v. State, 55 Nebr. 627, 76 N. W. 171, 45 L. R. A. 113); but after the rates to be charged have been fixed, the determination as to whether they are unreasonable or confiscatory is a judicial function (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Myatt, 98 Fed. 335).

In determining the unreasonableness of telephone rates it must be taken into consideration that a decrease in rates does not, as in the case of railroads and some other businesses, increase the volume of business without a corresponding increase in the expense of conducting it. State R. Commission v. Cumberland Tel., etc., Co., 212 U. S. 414, 29 S. Ct. 357, 53 L. ed. 577.

Ct. 357, 53 L. ed. 577 [reversing 156 Fed. 823], holding further that the presumption in favor of the correctness of telephone rates established by a state commission obtains, although the data upon which the commission acted may have been insufficient, so long as the rates adopted were not based entirely upon arbitrary conjecture.

with the carrying on of interstate commerce.<sup>92</sup> It may, however, as a police measure impose a license fee or tax to cover the cost of police regulation and supervision, provided the amount of the fee or tax is reasonably commensurate with such cost.<sup>93</sup> Under the rights of ownership and control with regard to their streets vested in certain municipalities by their charters or by statute, it has been held that they might exact from telegraph or telephone companies a charge in the nature of a rental for the occupancy and use of the streets;<sup>94</sup> but under other charter and statutory provisions this right has been denied.<sup>95</sup> A municipality having power to demand compensation for the privilege of maintaining a telephone system may fix the charge by means of competitive bidding,<sup>96</sup> and award the franchise or privilege to the bidder offering the largest percentage of its gross receipts.<sup>97</sup>

4. PLACE AND MODE OF CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE — a. In General. While a municipality cannot exclude from its streets a telegraph or telephone company having authority from the legislature to occupy and use the same,<sup>98</sup> it may make reasonable and proper regulations as to the manner in which such right shall be exercised.<sup>99</sup> The general powers possessed by municipal corporations with regard to the control and regulation of their streets extend as a rule to the deter-the exercise of a discretion on the part of the municipal authorities, the courts will not prescribe in advance the particular action to be taken,<sup>9</sup> their authority being limited to compelling action and passing upon the validity of such action when taken.<sup>10</sup>

b. Removal or Change of Location.<sup>11</sup> Since a municipality cannot prevent the use of its streets by a telegraph or telephone company having legislative authority to use the same,<sup>12</sup> or, where its consent is necessary, arbitrarily revoke the same after it has been given and acted upon,<sup>13</sup> it cannot require the entire removal from its streets of a telegraph or telephone line which has been constructed pursuant to such legislative authority,<sup>14</sup> or municipal consent,<sup>15</sup> or prevent the company from making proper extensions of its line;<sup>16</sup> nor can a municipality arbitrarily require such a company after it has constructed its line to change the location thereof.<sup>17</sup> A municipality cannot, however, by its consent or agreement, surrender the right to make under its police powers such subsequent regulations as the public safety and welfare may require;<sup>18</sup> and where by reason of changed conditions a telegraph or telephone line has become an obstruction to traffic or a menace to the public safety, or there are other reasons connected with the public welfare or safety making a change of location necessary, such change may be required by the municipality,<sup>19</sup> even though it involves a removal of the line from one street to another.<sup>20</sup> But the municipality cannot require the company to incur such expenses unless some reasonable necessity for the change exists,<sup>21</sup> and it cannot act arbitrarily or unreasonably either in regard to making the change or the method prescribed for effecting it.<sup>22</sup>

L. R. A grant of a right to adopt an underground system necessarily authorizes the construction of conduits, terminal poles, or any such appliances as are or may be reasonably necessary to make the system effective, but if the municipality has retained the right to regulate the manner of occupation this also includes the power to compel from time to time the adoption of any reasonable and generally accepted improvements which tend to decrease the obstruction of the streets or increase the safety and convenience of the public in their use. *Com. v. If the company refuses after due notice to remove its wires into an underground conduit, the municipal authorities may cut down and remove such poles and wires, and will not be enjoined from so doing. *American Rapid Tel. The Post Roads Act of 1866 does not affect the power of the state to require telegraph or telephone wires to be placed in under-and pay the expense incident to such change,<sup>33</sup> and the legislature may delegate to a municipal corporation the power to make such requirements,<sup>34</sup> and of regulating the manner in which the work of excavation and construction shall be done.<sup>35</sup> So also the legislature, or municipality pursuant to legislative authority, may authorize the construction by independent companies of subways or conduits to be used by telegraph, telephone, and other companies using electrical conductors,<sup>36</sup> and may require telegraph or telephone companies to remove their wires into such conduits,<sup>37</sup> and pay a reasonable rental therefor,<sup>38</sup> or to remove them into conduits constructed by the municipality,<sup>39</sup> and may refuse such companies permission to construct their own conduits,<sup>40</sup> provided the other conduits already constructed or provided are adequate and suitable.<sup>41</sup> The legislature may also require that companies constructing underground conduits shall submit to the local authorities for approval plans and specifications of the system proposed, and that the work of excavation and construction shall be done under the supervision and control of such authorities.<sup>42</sup> Where a telegraph or telephone company has legislative authority to construct its lines upon city streets, without the consent of the municipality, and subject only to its regulation and control, the municipality cannot require that in constructing such line it shall place its wires in underground conduits;<sup>43</sup> and it has also been held that in such case the municipality cannot without express legislative authority subsequently require overhead wires to be removed into underground conduits;<sup>44</sup> but on the contrary it has been held that a municipality has this power,<sup>45</sup> although it cannot exercise it arbitrarily where no reasonable necessity for such change exists.<sup>46</sup> The duty of making such removal may, however, be imposed upon the company by agree-ground conduits (American Rapid Tel. Co. v. Hess, 125 N. Y. 641, 26 N. E. 919, 21 Am. St. Rep. 764, 13 L. R. A. 454. See also supra, II, A, 1, a); although in one case the court, in sustaining the right to require the removal of wires from poles into underground conduits, held that the right to require such removal from the structure of an elevated railroad, where at the time the wires did not cause any public inconvenience, was so doubtful that it should be submitted to the court of last resort and the doubt temporarily be resolved in favor of the telegraph company (*Western Union Tel. ment with a municipality made in consideration of rights and privileges granted by the latter.<sup>47</sup>

d. Character of Equipment. Under its general powers with reference to the control and regulation of its streets a municipality may prescribe not only the precise location of telegraph and telephone poles, posts, piers, and abutments,<sup>48</sup> but also, within reasonable limits, the character, form, size, and color of such fixtures.<sup>49</sup> Thus it may require that decayed poles be removed or replaced with sound ones,<sup>50</sup> or that broken or crooked and unsightly poles be replaced with others that are neat and shapely;<sup>51</sup> it may refuse to permit the use of poles of improper and unusual size;<sup>52</sup> and it seems that it may even require the painting of all poles and prescribe what color they shall be painted.<sup>53</sup>

C. Mode of Construction and Maintenance. In so far as the mode of construction is prescribed by statute, the company must conform thereto;<sup>54</sup> but independently of statutory or municipal regulations as to the mode of construction and maintenance,<sup>55</sup> a telegraph or telephone company in constructing its line must exercise due care to avoid any unnecessary or improper obstruction of streets or highways,<sup>56</sup> or other negligent or improper mode of construction which would injure or endanger life or property,<sup>57</sup> and must also exercise such care

Under the Massachusetts statutes telegraph and telephone companies are liable for injuries caused by their poles, wires, or other apparatus irrespective of the question of negligence (Riley v. New England Tel., etc., Co., 184 Mass. 150, 68 N. E. 17); although the statute does not preclude the right of such a company to interpose the defense of contributory negligence on the part of the person injured (Riley v. New England Tel., etc., Co., supra).

Use of streets.—A telephone company having a right to construct its line in a street has also the right to use thereon at needful places suitable appliances for this purpose, and is not liable for injuries caused by a horse taking fright at a reel with lead pipe coiled thereon which the company had placed next to the sidewalk for the purpose of stringing the pipe on poles. Simonds v. Maine Tel., etc., Co., 104 Me. 440, 72 Atl. 175.

Ownership or control of wire.—In an action for an injury due to plaintiff's tripping over a wire lying concealed in the grass, he cannot recover in the absence of proof that defendant company owned or was in control of the wire at the time of the injury. Lee v.

Maryland Tel., etc., Co., 97 Md. 692, 55 Atl. 680.

Wires of another company.—Where a telegraph company permits a messenger service company to string wires on its poles, and the two companies occupy toward each other only the relation of licensor and licensee, the telegraph company is not liable for the negligence of the messenger service company in permitting its wire to fall to the pavement and remain there to the injury of a passer-by. *Holmes v. Not contributory negligence.—A person traveling along a road crossed by a telephone line is not bound to anticipate danger and to look to see if there is danger before passing under the wire. Weaver v. Dawson County Mut. Tel. Co., 82 Nebr. 696, 118 N. W. 650, 22 L. R. A. N. S. 1189.

78. Morris v. Rounsaville, 132 Ga. 462, 64 S. E. 473 (holding that where a telephone company permits a person for his own convenience to climb one of its poles to remove a wire, in order to facilitate the moving of a house across the highway, the company is not liable for an injury sustained by such person while so doing either on the ground that the pole was constructed without authority or on the ground that it was in a rotten condition, since the company is under no duty to keep its poles in a safe condition for persons to climb for such purpose); Cumberland Tel., etc., Co. v. Martin, 116 Ky. 554, 76 S. W. 394, 77 S. W. 718, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 787, 105 Am. St. Rep. 229, 63 L. R. A. 469 (holding that a telephone company is not liable for an injury to a person who takes refuge during a storm in a building to which one of its wires is attached and is injured by lightning which strikes one of its poles and is conducted over a wire negligently maintained over the metal roof of the building, reasonable time to discover and remedy them,<sup>79</sup> and it will not be liable for resulting injuries where the defect or condition has not existed for a sufficient length of time to charge the company with negligence.<sup>80</sup>

b. Injuries to Property — (i) IN GENERAL. A telegraph or telephone company is liable, not only for personal injuries,<sup>81</sup> but also for injuries to property caused by the negligent or improper manner of constructing or maintaining its line.<sup>82</sup> It must appear, however, that the company was negligent,<sup>83</sup> and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.<sup>84</sup>

(ii) INJURY TO TREES. A telegraph or telephone company has no right to go upon private property and cut or trim trees without the owner's consent,<sup>85</sup> although such cutting or trimming is merely of branches which overhang a street or highway,<sup>86</sup> and if it does so it will be liable in trespass.<sup>87</sup> It seems also to be plaintiff being at most a bare licensee to whom defendant owed no duty in this regard).

In Canada a telegraph company if authorized by statute may, without liability to an abutting owner, cut off overhanging branches which interfere with the working of its line, provided it does not go upon his land and thus commit a trespass in so doing. *Roy v. 2. ACTIONS FOR INJURIES — a. Pleading. As in other civil actions,<sup>96</sup> the complaint must state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action,<sup>97</sup> and the answer must be responsive to the complaint or bill.<sup>98</sup> A complaint based upon a breach on the part of defendant of the terms of a town ordinance imposing upon defendant the duty of maintaining its wires so as not to interfere with public travel must show the ordinance and its breach,<sup>99</sup> and where negligence is the gist of the action it must be properly alleged,<sup>1</sup> as must be also freedom from contributory negligence where it is inferable from other allegations in plaintiff's complaint that he was guilty of contributory negligence;<sup>2</sup> but defendant's negligence may be averred in general terms,<sup>3</sup> as may be also defendant's duty to keep its wires out of the way of travelers along public roads.<sup>4</sup>

b. Evidence — (i) PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF. In an action against a telegraph or telephone company for injuries resulting from construction or maintenance, the burden is on plaintiff to prove that the injury was caused by the fault or negligence of defendant.<sup>5</sup> Upon the question as to whether the burden is upon plaintiff to prove freedom from contributory negligence, the same difference of opinion is noted that arises in negligence cases generally;<sup>6</sup> and accordingly it has been held on the one hand that the burden is on plaintiff to prove that there was no contributory fault or negligence on his part,<sup>7</sup> and on the other that while the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to prove that the negligence of defendant caused the injury, plaintiff is not bound to prove affirmatively, as part of his case, that there was no contributory negligence.<sup>8</sup> Where a telephone company is sued for damages caused by the falling of a wire, the falling of the wire must be explained by evidence showing that it was unavoidable, and the burden of proving that fact is on defendant,<sup>9</sup> and proof of a defect in a telephone line and injury therefrom to plaintiff raises a presumption of negligence on the part of defendant.<sup>10</sup>

Facts held not to show plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law see Chant v. Clinton Tel. Co., 130 Wis. 533, 110 N. W. 423.

(II) ADMISSIBILITY. The rule applicable in civil actions generally, that evidence to be admissible must be relevant,<sup>11</sup> applies to actions against telegraph or telephone companies for injuries from construction or maintenance.<sup>12</sup> In an action for damages for injury caused by a sagging telephone wire stretched across the road, evidence is admissible to show that defendant, shortly after the accident, made its line very much higher at the point where the accident took place by putting in larger poles and stretching the wire,<sup>13</sup> as is also evidence that a servant of defendant received orders to change the pole and wire,<sup>14</sup> and evidence is also admissible as to the height of the wire a few days before the accident;<sup>15</sup> and in an action for injuries from defendant's negligence in permitting a telephone wire to be down and lying across a highway at a certain spot, proof that defendant's poles and wire were down at other places within a few miles of the place of the injury and at other times within a few months before the time of the injury was held to be properly admitted to show negligence;<sup>16</sup> but where a question is raised as to the soundness of poles which fell and suspended wires across the highway, evidence is not admissible as to the condition of other poles a considerable distance away without evidence to show that they were of the same kind, put up at the same time and equally exposed;<sup>17</sup> and, similarly, in an action for personal injuries from a low hanging wire on a highway, evidence is inadmissible as to the condition of the wire some months subsequent to the time of the injury.<sup>18</sup>

(III) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY. The rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions generally,<sup>19</sup> and in so far as they are pertinent the rules relating to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in actions for negligence,<sup>20</sup> are applicable to actions against telegraph or telephone companies for injuries resulting from maintenance or construction.<sup>21</sup> The fact that a tele-

To show in an action to enjoin defendants from obstructing telephone cross arms and appliances and cutting down telephone poles on ground alleged to be a part of a public street of a town, that the land was a street, or that the town trustees had granted plaintiff the right to erect poles thereon, or that defendant had cut or otherwise damaged any poles erected in the street. Heck v. Greenwood Tel. Co., 35 Ind. App. 244, 73 N. E. 960. To justify a finding that defendants owned or were in control of a telephone wire at the time of an injury caused by tripping over it. Lee v. Maryland Tel., etc., Co., 97 Md. 692, 55 Atl. 680. To require a finding graph line crossing a highway is allowed to swing down so low as to obstruct ordinary travel is evidence of some negligence on the part of the telegraph company, and in the absence of anything to explain it will warrant a verdict against it for damages for injuries sustained by one who, using due care, was thrown from his vehicle by means of the wire,<sup>22</sup> and proof of a defect in the line and consequent injury to a traveler is sufficient to raise an inference of negligence on the part of a telephone company.<sup>23</sup>

c. Trial — (1) INSTRUCTIONS. The parties are upon request entitled to full instructions correctly stating the law applicable to the case as made by the pleadings.<sup>24</sup> The instructions must conform to the issues and evidence,<sup>25</sup> and must not be misleading,<sup>26</sup> but one clear and full submission of an issue is all that is required.<sup>27</sup> An exception to an instruction cannot be sustained where that given was at least as favorable as that asked,<sup>28</sup> and it is not error to refuse to give a requested instruction the substance of which has already been given in other instructions.<sup>29</sup> Where the complaint charges a malicious and wilful trespass, and the answer denies merely the words of aggravation, plaintiff is entitled to a peremptory instruction for the actual damage done his property.<sup>30</sup>

26. Jacks v. Reeves, 78 Ark. 426, 95 S. W. 781, holding that an instruction, in an action for injuries received by a traveler on a highway coming in contact with a telephone wire dragging over the highway, due to a broken pole, that plaintiff, in order to recover, must prove that the accident occurred through the negligence of the owner of the telephone line was misleading, because not qualified by a charge that the evidence of the accident and injury flowing therefrom, when the occurrence was not out of the usual course, was prima facie evidence of negligence, and shifted the burden to defendant to prove that the injury was not caused by any want of care on his part.

(II) QUESTIONS FOR COURT OR JURY. As in other civil actions,<sup>31</sup> if the evidence is conflicting or such that different conclusions might reasonably be drawn therefrom, the issue presented thereby is for the jury;<sup>32</sup> but where the facts are admitted or shown without conflict, and the conclusion is clear and certain, the question is for the court;<sup>33</sup> nor will issues be submitted to the jury where the evidence is such that a finding thereon would not be sustained,<sup>34</sup> or where no evidence is introduced from which the jury could determine the pecuniary loss suffered by plaintiff in consequence of the injury complained of;<sup>35</sup> but if the evidence is such that a finding in favor of either party would be sustained, a nonsuit will not be granted.<sup>36</sup> So it is ordinarily a question for the jury whether the telegraph or telephone company was negligent,<sup>37</sup> and if so whether such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury complained of,<sup>38</sup> and also whether the person injured was guilty of contributory negligence.<sup>39</sup> measure of damages is properly based upon the cutting of the timber, the making of a roadway, and the maintenance of the line, to the commencement of the action;<sup>51</sup> but since actions for future trespasses may be maintained it is improper to allow damages for the entire value of the land taken and all damages that might accrue, upon the assumption that defendant's trespass would be permanent.<sup>52</sup>

Liability For Injury To or Interference With Lines. Where a telegraph or telephone line is lawfully maintained, damages for any tortious injury thereto, whether wilful and wanton or merely negligent, or for a technical trespass which may not involve even negligence, may be recovered in a civil action against the tort-feasor. The ordinary principles of the law of torts apply to such actions.<sup>53</sup> A telegraph or telephone company is also entitled to injunctive relief against an unauthorized interference with or injury to its poles, wires, or property either on the part of an individual,<sup>54</sup> or a municipal corporation,<sup>55</sup> or another telegraph or telephone company.<sup>56</sup> In a proper case a telegraph or telephone company may have relief by injunction against injury to its lines by induction or conduction from the lines of a high tension company not having a prior or otherwise superior right in the streets;<sup>57</sup> but if the latter company cannot

House moving.—The question has sometimes arisen in the case of injury or interruption of the line in consequence of the operations of a house mover, and it has been held that the moving of a house along the streets of a city even pursuant to statute, and under a license from the city, is not the exercise of an ordinary street use, but an extraordinary use of the street for an unusual purpose, and as between the house mover and the telegraph or telephone company the former is liable for the damage resulting from the interruption. *Northwestern Tel. An electric light company will not be enjoined from placing its wires within three or four feet of the wires of a telegraph company, if the weight of evidence is against any sensible diminution of current by induction, and it appears that the linemen will not be in danger if careful except when doing certain work, when the current of the light company must on notice be stopped. Western Union

guard against the interference except at great expense, and the telegraph or telephone company can do so by the adoption of a safe and comparatively inexpensive device, an injunction will not be granted,<sup>58</sup> although the telegraph or telephone company may recover the cost of procuring and installing such device.<sup>59</sup> A wilful and deliberate interference with or injury to the poles, wires, or other equipment of a telegraph or telephone company has been held to be indictable as malicious mischief under the common law;<sup>60</sup> but there are in many jurisdictions special statutes expressly defining and providing a punishment for the offense of malicious injury to telegraph or telephone lines;<sup>61</sup> and in many instances these statutes provide also that it shall be a criminal offense maliciously to interfere with or obstruct the transmission of messages, even without physical injury to the line.<sup>62</sup>

III. DUTY AS TO FURNISHING SERVICES AND FACILITIES.

A. In General. Since telegraph and telephone companies are engaged in a quasi-public business in many respects similar to that of common carriers,<sup>63</sup> it is their duty to serve the public generally, impartially, and without discrimination, extending to every member thereof equal facilities under equal conditions.<sup>64</sup>

In some jurisdictions there are statutory provisions to this effect,<sup>65</sup> but such duty exists independently of statute by reason of the character of such companies and their business.<sup>66</sup> The fact that the telegraph or telephone instrument or device is patented and used by or under a lease or license from the patentee or owner of the patent right does not affect the application of the general rule or statutory provisions in regard to discrimination,<sup>67</sup> for while the patent is property and the owner may determine to what use he will put it,<sup>68</sup> and might lease or license it to an individual for his private use so that the latter alone could use it,<sup>69</sup> yet if the lease or license is for a public use, it is necessarily subject to the general rules requiring such use to be for the benefit of the entire public and without discrimination,<sup>70</sup> and any restrictions in the lease or license requiring discrimina-

Reasonableness of rule.—A rule of a rural telephone company that telephone rentals must be paid six months in advance is reasonable; and a subscriber, refusing to comply therewith, is not entitled to service. *Buffalo County Tel. A counter-claim by a rural telephone subscriber against the company for faulty services or for insignificant acts performed for its benefit, a large part of which is exorbitant and illegal, does not justify him in demanding that he be given a service without a prepayment of such rent as other subscribers pay. *Buffalo County Tel. within a municipality is not obliged to extend its facilities to persons living outside of the corporate limits;<sup>94</sup> and even where it has so extended its facilities to certain persons it is not obliged to extend them to another person who is not similarly situated.<sup>95</sup> So also a telegraph company doing only an interstate business cannot be required to receive and transmit intrastate messages.<sup>96</sup>

2. REFUSAL TO SERVE. A telegraph or telephone company cannot arbitrarily refuse to furnish service to a particular customer, if the service demanded be of a character which it holds itself out as prepared to furnish to the public generally, or to the public of the applicant's class.<sup>97</sup> It cannot require an applicant for service to contract not to make use of the facilities offered by a rival company,<sup>98</sup> or not to use a telephone to call messengers from another office,<sup>99</sup> or refuse such services on the ground that the applicant had broken a previous agreement to this effect.<sup>1</sup> It cannot refuse service to a person offering to pay therefor, or require as a condition of furnishing service that such person pay an old debt or settle a disputed claim growing out of a previous transaction, even though of the same kind.<sup>2</sup> Nor may service be refused because of a mere suspicion that the applicant therefor desires it for an illegal or immoral purpose,<sup>3</sup> and still less because of the general character of the applicant or the fact that the applicant is engaged in an illegal or immoral business at another place and with which the service requested can have no connection.<sup>4</sup>

3. RATES AND CHARGES. Even in the absence of any statutory regulation on the subject,<sup>5</sup> a telegraph or telephone company must not charge one of its customers more than it charges others for the performance of a similar service under similar conditions;<sup>6</sup> and in the application of this rule it is not material that the higher rate charged to one customer is not in itself unreasonable, since the rates charged must not only be reasonable in themselves but relatively reasonable.<sup>7</sup> It is not, however, every discrimination which is illegal but only such a discrimination as is under the circumstances unreasonable and unjust;<sup>8</sup> and in some cases different rates may be charged to different customers where there are substantial differences in the character of the services rendered or facilities furnished or a difference in conditions affecting the inconvenience and expense thereof to the company.<sup>9</sup> Even in such cases, however, the difference in rates must be reasonably proportionate to the difference in the conditions justifying a discrimination;<sup>10</sup> and the difference in conditions must not be due to the wrongful or improper conduct of the company, as by sending messages of one customer by a direct route and those of another by a longer and more expensive route,<sup>11</sup> although if a difference in conditions is shown justifying a discrimination, the burden is upon the party complaining to show the injustice of the amount thereof.<sup>12</sup> A discrimination in rates is not justified merely because one customer transacts a larger amount of business with the company than another.<sup>13</sup> services and facilities are extended to one company the general rule applies that they cannot discriminate against others of the same class.<sup>26</sup> So if a telephone company extends its facilities to one telegraph company it cannot withhold them from others,<sup>27</sup> even though the telephone company be a mere lessee under an agreement with its lessor not to serve the particular telegraph company applying for service,<sup>28</sup> and such lessor is the patentee or owner of the patent rights of the instruments used.<sup>29</sup> There are in some jurisdictions constitutional or statutory provisions expressly requiring that one telegraph or telephone company shall receive and transmit messages for other telegraph or telephone companies,<sup>30</sup> and while in some cases the statutes make an exception in the case of companies owning parallel or competing lines,<sup>31</sup> the fact that two companies have lines that are parallel or competing between certain points does not bring them within the application of the exception as to a line or portion thereof of one company between points where the other company has no parallel or competing line.<sup>32</sup> The general rule that one common carrier cannot demand the use of a rival's property for carrying on its own business applies to telegraph and telephone companies,<sup>33</sup> and neither at common law nor under the statutes requiring such a company to receive and transmit messages for other companies can a telephone company be required to instal an instrument in the office of another telegraph or telephone company to be used by the patrons of or for delivering the telegraphic messages of the other company,<sup>34</sup> and while a telephone company may be required to install an instrument in the office of a telegraph company for its ordinary private business, it is a proper regulation to require that it shall not be used for the delivery of messages in carrying on the public business of the latter company.<sup>35</sup> There is also a marked difference between furnishing initial independent service for another company and secondary service by means of a direct connection of two or more plants or systems;<sup>36</sup> and in the absence of statute a telephone company cannot be required to make a physical connection of its system with that of another company so as to give the latter the physical use of its lines,<sup>37</sup> although a telephone company may be required to make such connection under constitutional and statutory provisions expressly so requiring and providing that compensation shall be made under the statutory provisions relating to eminent domain.<sup>38</sup> It has also been held that where such connection has been made voluntarily by agreement between two telephone companies and without any stipulation as to the time of its continuance, it cannot be discontinued by either or both companies;<sup>39</sup> and that if a telephone company makes a physical connection with another exchange it cannot refuse to make such connection with other exchanges similarly situated.<sup>40</sup>

upon a compliance with reasonable rules and regulations,<sup>50</sup> and is not required to receive messages the transmission of which would subject the company to a penalty,<sup>51</sup> or to a civil<sup>52</sup> or criminal liability,<sup>53</sup> and it may refuse messages not couched in decent language, although it would not incur a liability by transmitting them;<sup>54</sup> but generally speaking, if a message offered for transmission is couched in decent language, and the company might legally transmit the same without incurring any liability therefor it is its duty to do so.<sup>55</sup> The fact that a message is not signed is not sufficient ground for refusing to accept and transmit the same unless its contents indicate some unlawful purpose or are calculated to arouse a well-grounded suspicion that there is some improper reason for withholding the signature.<sup>56</sup> So also where a message is offered which by reason of the ignorance of the sender is not in proper form, it would seem to be the duty of the operator to aid or advise him in regard to putting it into proper form.<sup>57</sup>

Message not improper.—A message delivered to a telegraph company for transmission and delivery to the superintendent of a railroad, which states, "No fire in depot. Is it agent's or passenger's place to make one? Wire answer," and signed by sender, is a proper message, and a refusal to send it cannot be justified, although a telegraph operator may refuse to send a message that is obscene, slanderous, blasphemous, profane, indecent, or the like. communicated to him over a telephone;<sup>60</sup> but it is the duty of such a company to exercise reasonable care to transmit only genuine and authorized messages and to avoid being made an instrument of fraud or deception;<sup>61</sup> and if there are facts and circumstances reasonably calculated to arouse suspicion the company should not receive and transmit the message without investigating and ascertaining the identity or authority of the sender,<sup>62</sup> or should at least communicate such circumstances, inquiry, or suspicions to the addressee at or before the time of delivering the message.<sup>63</sup>

3. OBSCENE MESSAGES. A telegraph company need not accept a message unless it is couched in decent language,<sup>64</sup> although if such a message is accepted and transmitted, there would seem to be no liability at common law on the part of the company for transmitting it, unless it is libelous.<sup>65</sup>

4. LIBELOUS MESSAGES.<sup>66</sup> A telegraph company need not and should not accept a message which is obviously libelous;<sup>67</sup> but if the message is reasonably capable of an innocent construction, or might reasonably be supposed to be a privileged communication, the telegraph company cannot refuse it on the ground that it may possibly be libelous.<sup>68</sup>

5. MESSAGES FOR ILLEGAL OR IMMORAL PURPOSES. A telegraph company is not permitted to act as a censor of public or private morals,<sup>69</sup> or a judge of the good or

The presumption is that a message presented for transmission is genuine and authorized, and an operator has the right to rely and act upon such presumption in the absence of suspicious facts or circumstances. Havelock Bank v. Western Union Tel. Co., 141 Fed. 522, 72 C. C. A. 580.

Transmission of money by telegraph.—Where a person presents for transmission a telegram wherein another is requested to transmit money by telegraph to the sender, the telegraph company, in the absence of anything calculated to excite suspicion, is not required before sending the message or delivering to the sender the money received in reply to require the sender to identify himself as being the person whose name is signed to the telegram. *Western Union Tel. bad faith of persons desiring to send messages over its lines;<sup>70</sup> and consequently is not justified in refusing a message couched in decent language and not libelous because its purpose or effect may be to accomplish or aid in the accomplishment of an illegal or immoral act,<sup>71</sup> provided the company would not itself incur a civil or criminal liability by transmitting the same.<sup>72</sup> Thus a message cannot ordinarily be refused because it relates to gambling in futures,<sup>73</sup> or contains reports of horse-races which the addressee may illegally use, when received, in conducting a pool room,<sup>74</sup> or is intended to procure the attendance of women of bad character for immoral purposes, provided the illegal or immoral purpose does not appear on the face of the message.<sup>75</sup> A telegraph company, however, is under no obligation to aid in or abet the commission of a crime, or to render itself liable to indictment, and if the sending of the message would itself be an illegal act or in direct furtherance of such an act, and the illegality appears from the face of the message or is otherwise positively known to the telegraph company, the message should not be transmitted;<sup>76</sup> but in such cases if the language of the message is ambiguous the doubt should be resolved in favor of the sender.<sup>77</sup> Such extraordinary remedies as mandamus and injunction will not be invoked against a telegraph or telephone company to compel service in favor of the proprietor of an admitted bawdy-house or similar place of ill repute;<sup>78</sup> nor, it seems, in favor of a bucket shop<sup>79</sup> or pool room.<sup>80</sup>

Analogy to railroad companies.—A telegraph company has no more right to refuse to transmit a message couched in decent language and for which the usual charges have been paid, on the ground that the information may be used for an illegal or immoral purpose, than a railroad company would have to refuse to carry a passenger who was not disorderly and who had paid his fare because it believed that his purpose in going to a certain place was to commit an illegal or immoral act. *Com. v. 6. SUNDAY MESSAGES. Under the laws relating to the observance of Sunday,<sup>81</sup> a telegraph company may keep its office open on Sunday;<sup>82</sup> but it is not obliged to receive for transmission messages not relating to matters of charity or necessity.<sup>83</sup> If, however, a message is presented for transmission which relates to a matter of charity or necessity it is the duty of the company to receive and transmit the same,<sup>84</sup> notwithstanding the person presenting it might have done so on the day previous.<sup>85</sup>

7. ORAL MESSAGES. A telegraph company may properly require that, before a message is accepted for transmission, it shall be reduced to writing, and may refuse to accept a message not in writing,<sup>86</sup> although one of its operators may at the sender's request act for him in writing the message.<sup>87</sup> The company may also waive the requirement that messages shall be tendered in writing, and may accept and contract to transmit a verbal message, or a message offered over a telephone,<sup>88</sup> in which case it will be liable for failure properly to transmit and deliver the same,<sup>89</sup> provided it is established that the message did in fact reach the telegraph company,<sup>90</sup> and what its language, as it reached the company, was.<sup>91</sup>

8. MESSAGES NOT ON REGULAR BLANKS. The company may reasonably require, not only that the message shall be reduced to writing, but that it shall, when presented for acceptance, be written on one of the usual blank forms containing the printed conditions on which only the company holds itself out to the public as prepared to accept messages, and it may refuse a message not so written;<sup>92</sup> but the company may waive the requirement and accept messages not so written, in which case it will be liable for a failure properly to transmit and deliver the same.<sup>93</sup>

9. MESSAGES FOR POINTS NOT ON COMPANY'S LINES. No obligation rests on a telegraph company to accept messages for points at which it has no office and no facilities for delivery, and for which it does not hold itself out to the public generally as prepared to handle messages;<sup>94</sup> but it is the duty of its agents to know the places at which the company has offices,<sup>95</sup> and of the company to furnish its agents with all necessary information in this regard.<sup>96</sup> So if an agent of a telegraph company through negligence or the lack of such information accepts for transmission a message for a point at which the company has no office, the company will nevertheless be liable for a failure to transmit and deliver the same;<sup>97</sup> and if an agent refuses to accept a message under the erroneous belief that the company has no office at the place to which it is addressed, the company will be liable in damages for such refusal,<sup>98</sup> although such a mistake, and the consequent refusal of a message, is not ground for the recovery of a statutory penalty in a state where the penalty is aimed only at wilful refusal or intentional discrimination.<sup>99</sup>

10. COLLECT AND DEADHEAD MESSAGES. A telegraph company may require, before accepting and contracting to transmit a message, that its reasonable charges for the service demanded shall be prepaid;<sup>1</sup> but the right to require such pre-message to the telegraph office and the operator testifies that he received it as he wrote it down, and the sender's agent, who telephoned it, does not remember anything about the transaction, there is no evidence of negligence.

11. UNSTAMPED MESSAGES. Where a statute or act of congress provides for a stamp tax on telegraph messages the duty of affixing such stamp and paying such tax is on the person sending the message, and the telegraph company is not bound to accept for transmission a message which is not properly stamped.<sup>8</sup>

B. Duty to Transmit — 1. IN GENERAL. Where a telegraph company has duly received a message for transmission, it is its duty to transmit the same, and it will be liable for a failure to do so,<sup>9</sup> notwithstanding it is a message which the company might have refused to accept,<sup>10</sup> unless it is also one which it would be unlawful for the company to transmit.<sup>11</sup> It is no justification for failure to transmit a message that it was written in cipher,<sup>12</sup> or that the operator mistakenly thought that the addressee was not at the place stated in the address.<sup>13</sup> A telegraph company by receiving a message for transmission does not, however, abso-

If a telegraph company makes no effort to transmit a message which it has received, as where the operator forgets and entirely neglects to transmit the same, it will be liable for all damages resulting from such neglect regardless of any rule or regulation limiting its liability in the case of unrepeat messages. Birney v. New York, etc., Printing Tel. Co., 18 Md. 341, 81 Am. Dec. 607.

Message stopped at intermediate point.—

lutely insure that it will be transmitted,<sup>14</sup> and circumstances over which it has no control may arise which will excuse a failure to do so;<sup>15</sup> but if the failure to transmit is due to the negligence of the company, it will be liable for all damages directly resulting from such failure,<sup>16</sup> and in some jurisdictions for a statutory penalty;<sup>17</sup> and if without negligence on the part of the company circumstances arise making it impossible to transmit the message, it may be the duty of the company to notify the sender of the message of such fact.<sup>18</sup>

2. TO TRANSMIT PROMPTLY — a. In General. The merit of telegraphic communication lies in its speed, and it is for this reason that it is resorted to instead of using the more certain and less expensive method of communicating by mail.<sup>19</sup> It is therefore the duty of telegraph companies, which hold themselves out to the world as prepared to furnish this rapid means of communication, to transmit messages promptly, and in the absence of any legal excuse they will be liable for a failure to do so.<sup>20</sup> Such companies, however, do not insure the prompt transmission of a message, but are liable only for failure to exercise ordinary care; that is, for failure to transmit as promptly as is reasonably practicable under all the circumstances.<sup>21</sup> They must, however, exercise reasonable care and diligence to secure a prompt transmission of messages,<sup>22</sup> and in determining whether they have done so all the facts and circumstances of the particular case should be considered,<sup>23</sup> including the urgency or importance of the message in question.<sup>24</sup> A telegraph company cannot justify a delay in transmission on the ground that one of its rules or regulations was not complied with where it has waived the same by accepting and agreeing to transmit the message.<sup>25</sup> In regard to Sunday

b. Excuses For Delay — (I) IN GENERAL. In addition to the general rule requiring that ordinarily messages are to be transmitted in the order in which they are received,<sup>28</sup> various circumstances or conditions may exist which will justify or excuse a delay in transmission,<sup>29</sup> or justify a refusal to accept a message for transmission unless it is taken subject to delay.<sup>30</sup> If, however, the message is accepted for transmission and circumstances arise making a prompt transmission impossible, the sender of the message should be notified.<sup>31</sup>

(II) WIRE TROUBLE. Inasmuch as a telegraph company is liable only for negligence and does not insure prompt transmission,<sup>32</sup> it follows that it is not responsible for delays due to unavoidable interruptions in the working of its lines, such as those due to storms or atmospheric disturbances or other causes over which it has no control and against which, in the exercise of ordinary prudence and foresight, it was not reasonably practicable to guard.<sup>33</sup> Wire trouble, however, is no legal excuse where its existence and extent were known to the company's operator when the message was accepted, and the facts not communicated by him to the sender;<sup>34</sup> nor is it an excuse when the trouble arises because of the ment to transmit the message and receive payment on the following day.

Time or place of delay.—It is the duty of a telegraph company to notify the sender of a message of its inability promptly to transmit the same, whether the cause of the delay exists at the time the message is received or arises subsequently before the message is transmitted. Swan v. Western Union Tel. Co., 129 Fed. 318, 63 C. C. A. 550, 67 L. R. A. 153.

company's own negligence, and was of a character which could have been prevented, or obviated earlier, by the exercise of ordinary care,<sup>35</sup> or where the message might have been transmitted by using a different wire, ordinarily but not at the particular time devoted to a different class of business.<sup>36</sup> So where a delay in transmission is shown, if the company relies upon wire trouble as a defense, it must go further and show that it was not due to the fault of the company.<sup>37</sup>

(III) OFFICE HOURS. It is well settled that a telegraph company may make reasonable rules and regulations in regard to its office hours,<sup>38</sup> and is not required to keep its offices open for every hour of the day and night, or for the same number of hours on every day of the week or year, as in the case of Sundays and holidays,<sup>39</sup> or for the same hours at different places.<sup>40</sup> It is also held that it is not the duty of a telegraph company to keep its operators at every point informed as to its office hours at other places where it maintains offices,<sup>41</sup> or of its operators to know such office hours,<sup>42</sup> or to ascertain upon accepting a message, and inform the sender, whether the office hours at the point of destination are such that the message may be promptly transmitted.<sup>43</sup> So the mere acceptance of a message for transmission does not import any agreement or undertaking that it shall be immediately or promptly transmitted, regardless of such office hours;<sup>44</sup> but on the contrary it is implied, in the absence of express agreement, that it shall be transmitted subject thereto,<sup>45</sup> and the company will not be liable for such delay as is due to the reasonable office hours observed at the point of destination or relay points through which the message must pass.<sup>46</sup> In order, however, that

But where the message is delayed at a relay point on account of wire trouble caused by severe storms, and this fact is not known to the operator at the original point of transmission, the company will not be liable for failure to notify the sender of the message of the delay, in the absence of anything to charge it with knowledge of the urgent character of the message. *Jacob v. the telegraph company may avail itself of the defense of office hours, as an excuse for delay, the established office hours must be reasonable.<sup>47</sup> The company may also waive its regulations as to office hours;<sup>48</sup> and if it expressly agrees that the message shall be transmitted promptly or within a certain time, it will be liable for a failure to do so regardless of its office hours,<sup>49</sup> it being within the implied authority of its transmitting agent to make such agreement.<sup>50</sup> It is not sufficient, however, to constitute such express agreement, that the sender of the message stated to the operator that he wished it to be at its destination by a certain time,<sup>51</sup> or that the operator stated that he thought he could get it through, and would send it immediately.<sup>52</sup>

The reason of the rule is to enable the sender to remedy any defect or insufficiency in the address or to communicate with mutual friends or resort to other means of communicating with the addressee and thus lessen or avoid the damages which would result from an unreported non-delivery of the telegram. Hendricks v. Western Union Tel. Co., 126 N. C. 304, 35 S. E. 543, 78 Am. St. Rep. 658.

Misleading message.—Where a service message announcing non-delivery stated, "Party said to be out of city," and the addressee was a railroad engineer who was absent on his daily run, and this fact was known to the sender of the message, it was held that the sender could not claim that by the wording of the message he was misled and prevented from sending another message giving a more specific address. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Garrett, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 430, 102 S. W. 456.

Agreement to notify sender.—Where a telegraph operator agrees to notify the sender of the message in case it is not delivered within a certain time, it is negligence for him to fail to do so. Johnson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 75 S. C. 54, 54 S. E. 826, holding, however, that in an action by the addressee the company will not be liable if such failure to notify the sender in no way caused or contributed to the injury complained of.

which the message was addressed,<sup>97</sup> or in the name or initials of the addressee.<sup>98</sup> In such case it is still the duty of the telegraph company to exercise reasonable efforts to ascertain the identity and whereabouts of the addressee and deliver the message, and it will be liable if by the exercise of such care it could have done so;<sup>99</sup> but while such defects do not entirely excuse a failure to deliver, they do have an important bearing upon the question as to whether the company exercised due care and diligence to make delivery.<sup>1</sup> In an action by the sender of a message an insufficiency or error in the name or address of the addressee may preclude a recovery on the ground of contributory negligence,<sup>2</sup> and the defense of such contributory negligence on the part of the sender has also been sustained in cases where the action was brought by the addressee,<sup>3</sup> although the application of the doctrine in actions brought by the addressee and based upon the negligence of the company has been questioned.<sup>4</sup> Negligence of the sender is no defense if it did not cause or contribute to the failure to deliver;<sup>5</sup> and conversely, it is not

4. Cogdell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 135 N. C. 431, 47 S. E. 490, where in an action by the addressee in which the company charged contributory negligence in misspelling the name of the addressee, the court said that the defense was not available, since if the error in spelling was so great as to render it practically impossible for the company to identify the addressee, there would be no negligence on its part and no occasion for setting up the defense of contributory negligence, while if the defect was not such as to prevent the company by the exercise of ordinary diligence from identifying the addressee and delivering the message, the company could not set up the antecedent negligence of the sender in bar of recovery.

Sender not agent of addressee.—The failure of the sender of a message to give a local address, although notified of the non-delivery of the message, is not contributory negligence which will preclude a recovery by the addressee, where the sender did not act as the agent of the addressee for and by his procurement in sending the original message. *Western Union Tel. Mode of delivery.—Where the expense of delivering a message in the country was guaranteed, it was error to instruct the jury in an action for delay in delivery that "it was not due diligence to entrust a guaranteed message to a stranger to carry on foot a distance of two and one-half miles." The company having no messengers at that station to deliver messages in the country, it was only required to select a trusty person for such purpose, and whether the person selected was suitable and whether he could have delivered the message sooner by waiting to find or hire a horse than by starting at once on foot were questions for the jury. *Western Union Tel. been made with reasonable promptness, regard must be had to all the circumstances,<sup>15</sup> including the company's established office hours,<sup>16</sup> its regulations requiring that messages, before being sent out for delivery, shall be copied, enveloped, and addressed,<sup>17</sup> the distance from the telegraph office to the addressee's residence or place of business,<sup>18</sup> and also, as sometimes said, the character and importance of the message itself,<sup>19</sup> so that the question is ordinarily one of fact for the jury.<sup>20</sup> A telegraph company does not absolutely insure a prompt delivery of messages regardless of circumstances,<sup>21</sup> and will not be liable where it satisfactorily appears that it was not negligent in regard to the delay complained of,<sup>22</sup> unless it has expressly agreed that the message shall be delivered promptly or within or before a certain time, in which case it will be liable for a failure to do so.<sup>23</sup> It is no justification for a negligent delay in delivering a message actually transmitted that it was one which the company might have refused to accept and transmit,<sup>24</sup> or that it was transmitted gratuitously,<sup>25</sup> or was transmitted on Sunday, provided it relates to a matter of charity or necessity.<sup>26</sup>

b. Office Hours.<sup>27</sup> The rules previously stated in regard to delays in transmission due to office hours also apply to delays in delivery of messages actually transmitted.<sup>28</sup> So, although a message is transmitted, if it is received at the point of destination after the regular office hours at that point, the company will not ordinarily be liable for a failure to deliver the same after such office hours,<sup>29</sup> provided it is delivered with reasonable promptness during the next ensuing office hours.<sup>30</sup> This rule is particularly applicable where the person receiving the message at the point of destination is not the agent of the telegraph company;<sup>31</sup> and it has also been frequently applied in cases where the telegraph operator is also the agent of a railroad company and the office is kept open for the receipt and transmission of despatches but closed after the messenger goes off duty in the evening for the purpose of delivery of ordinary messages.<sup>32</sup> It has been held, however, in one case that if a message shows upon its face that it is urgent and is received by the agent at the point of destination after office hours and he cannot deliver it, it is his duty to inform the transmitting agent of such fact, so that notice may be given to the sender of the message.<sup>33</sup> As in other cases to enable the company to justify a delay in delivery on the ground of its office hours, such hours must be reasonable.<sup>34</sup> It is competent for the company to waive the benefit of its office hours;<sup>35</sup> and if it expressly agrees that the message shall be delivered by a certain time it will be liable for a failure to do so, regardless of its office hours;<sup>36</sup> it being within the implied authority of its transmitting agent to make such agreement.<sup>37</sup> So also, notwithstanding reasonable office hours have been established, the company may waive or be precluded from relying thereon as a defense for failing to deliver a message by disregarding such office hours at the point of destination,<sup>38</sup> provided the company or its agent at such places has done so ordinarily and habitually;<sup>39</sup> but it is not sufficient to establish an abrogation by the company of its regular office hours to show that on some occasions its agent has kept his office open after such hours,<sup>40</sup> or has, as a matter of accommodation, delivered certain messages outside of such office hours.<sup>41</sup>

4. PLACE OR DISTANCE FOR DELIVERY — a. In General. Ordinarily a telegraph company is not liable for failure to deliver a message addressed to a person at a particular incorporated place if the addressee does not reside or cannot by reasonable diligence be found within the limits of such place.<sup>42</sup> The fact, however, that the addressee may reside outside the corporate limits is no excuse for failure to deliver to him, if as a matter of fact he was within the limits and could by ordinary effort have been found there;<sup>43</sup> or if, although living beyond the limits of the town, his name appears in the directory thereof, and his residence is within the district in which messages are customarily delivered from the telegraph office in the town, and not within the corporate limits of any other town having a telegraph office;<sup>44</sup> or if the company has notice, at the time the message is delivered to it for transmission, of the distance at which the addressee lives, and nevertheless contracts specially with the sender to deliver the message.<sup>45</sup> Where a telegraph company agrees with the sender of a message to deliver the answer at a particular local address, it will be liable for a failure to do so, although the answer is directed to a different local address.<sup>46</sup>

b. Free Delivery Limits. Without regard to corporate limits, a telegraph company may properly establish reasonable free-delivery limits, and refuse to deliver messages at an indefinite distance in the country, or at any point beyond such free-delivery limits, unless an additional charge covering the cost of such service is prepaid or satisfactorily guaranteed.<sup>47</sup> Free-delivery limits, however, are no defense where such limits exist merely on paper, without being observed in practice;<sup>48</sup> where the addressee, although he resides without the limits, could by reasonable diligence have been found within;<sup>49</sup> where with full notice as to the distance at which the addressee resided the company has made a special contract with the sender to deliver at all events;<sup>50</sup> or where the message has never been transmitted to the point of destination, or where its delay in reaching that point, and not the delay in delivery thereafter, is the subject of complaint.<sup>51</sup> It is prima facie the duty of the sender to ascertain where the addressee resides and to provide for the delivery of the message by paying or guaranteeing the charges for special delivery, if such charges are required;<sup>52</sup> and it has been held that handing in a message for transmission without explanation imposes no duty upon the transmitting operator other than to forward it accurately and promptly, or upon the terminal operator other than to copy it accurately and deliver it with reasonable promptness if the addressee resides within the free-delivery limits,<sup>53</sup> particularly where the sender knew of the existence of a rule in regard to free-delivery limits.<sup>54</sup> In some cases, however, it has been held, and particularly where the sender did not know of any rule in regard to free-delivery limits,<sup>55</sup> that if it develops that the addressee lives beyond such limits it is the duty of the company to communicate this fact to the sender and demand delivery charges or notify him that delivery will not be made unless such charges are paid or guaranteed;<sup>56</sup> and this has been held to be the proper construction and effect of a stipulation providing that messages will be delivered free within the company's established free-delivery limits, but that for delivery at a greater distance a special charge will be made.<sup>57</sup> This rule does not affect the right of the company to establish free-delivery limits and to exact reasonable compensation for delivery beyond such limits,<sup>58</sup> nor does a statute expressly requiring delivery within certain limits require a free delivery to the extent of such limits.<sup>59</sup> Where a service message demanding special delivery charges is sent the company will not be liable for failure to deliver the message if the sender refuses to pay or guarantee the extra charge;<sup>60</sup> and if such payment or guaranty is made it does not become effective so as to require a delivery until the answering message advising the terminal operator of this fact is received;<sup>61</sup> but the company will be liable for a negligent delay in sending the service message,<sup>62</sup> or in failing to make delivery after the answering message is received.<sup>63</sup> So also if delivery charges are guaranteed by the sender at the time the message is presented for transmission, it has been held to be negligence for the company not to wire this fact with the message.<sup>64</sup>

the addressee is improper unless such person is authorized by the addressee to receive the same.<sup>67</sup> If, however, the addressee is absent the telegraph company may deliver the message to any other person who is expressly<sup>68</sup> or impliedly authorized to receive the same,<sup>69</sup> and it is its duty to do so, so that the message may be forwarded or the addressee notified by such person.<sup>70</sup> So it has been held that in the absence of the addressee a message may be delivered to his wife,<sup>71</sup> or to the clerk at his hotel.<sup>72</sup> It is not, however, the duty of a telegraph company, although the addressee is absent, to deliver the message to a person not authorized to receive the same;<sup>73-74</sup> and it has been held that there is no such implied authority growing out of the relation between the parties as makes it the duty of a telegraph company, in the absence of the addressee, to deliver a message to his wife,<sup>75</sup> unless the message relates to a family matter in which the wife is directly interested.<sup>76</sup>

The delivery of a telegram to the addressee's minor son while passing the telegraph office is improper and makes such person the agent of the company so as to render it liable for any delay in delivering the telegram to the addressee. Mott v. Western Union Tel. Co., 142 N. C. 532, 55 S. E. 363. Where a telegram is addressed to a certain person at the freight yards of a railroad company, the telegraph company is not justified in leaving it with a yard master at such place who does not know the addressee, without any further effort to find the addressee. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Newhouse, 6 Ind. App. 422, 33 N. E. 800. Agreement to deliver to third person.—If the addressee, anticipating the receipt of a telegram, directs the agent of the telegraph company to deliver the same to a third person living near the telegraph office, by whom it is to be taken to the addressee, and the agent agrees to do so, the telegraph company will be liable for a failure to do so, such

Where a message is addressed in care of a corporation it is sufficient if it is delivered to the corporation (Lefler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 131 N. C. 355, 42 S. E. 819; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shaw, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 277, 90 S. W. 58); and if such corporation is a railroad company it is sufficient to deliver the message to its ticket agent at the place to which the message is addressed (Lefler v. Western Union Tel. Co., supra); and it is no excuse for failing to deliver a telegram to a corporation in whose care it is addressed that no particular officer of the corporation is named to whom it may be delivered or that the addressee is not connected with such corporation (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shaw, supra).

St. Rep. 751, holding that a message addressed to A, "care of" B, has the same meaning and legal effect as if addressed to B, "for" A, and that as the contract of the company is merely to deliver the message to B for A, if B refuses to receive it its liability is at an end and it is under no duty to attempt to find and deliver the message to A.

The reason of this rule is that the person in whose care the message is addressed is the only person authorized to receive it for the addressee (Western Union Tel. Co. v. McCaul, 115 Tenn. 99, 90 S. W. 856); and he has no right to waive the duty of making such personal delivery (Thompson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 10 Tex. Civ. App. 120, 30 S. W. 250).

If both parties are absent so that the message cannot be delivered either to the addressee or to the person in whose care it is addressed, it should be delivered at the residence of the addressee and not to a business associate of the person in whose care it is addressed. to some other person who has been expressly authorized by the addressee to receive the same.<sup>86</sup>

6. MODE OF DELIVERY. It is ordinarily the duty of a telegraph company to make delivery of a message by writing out a copy thereof and actually delivering such copy to the addressee or person authorized to receive the same,<sup>87</sup> and in the absence of agreement to the contrary a different mode of delivery, as by telephone, is insufficient.<sup>88</sup> The addressee may, however, agree to accept delivery by telephone,<sup>89</sup> in which case it has been held that if an error is made in telephoning the message the company will not be liable either to the addressee or to the sender of the message.<sup>90</sup> Where a telegram is received for a person living beyond the free-delivery limits of the company,<sup>91</sup> and no arrangement has been made for extra charges for delivery, it has been held sufficient for the company to mail the message to the addressee;<sup>92</sup> and under some circumstances this may be sufficient even where it is held that ordinarily the company should in such cases wire back for the payment or guarantee of delivery charges.<sup>93</sup> It is not the duty of the telegraph company under its ordinary contract to telephone a telegraphic message, particularly as it would impair the confidential relations assumed;<sup>94</sup> but it is competent for it to agree to deliver a message in this manner.<sup>95</sup> It is also within the apparent scope of an agent's authority to agree on accepting a message that it shall be transmitted by wire to a point where the company has an office and thence by mail to a different point and specially delivered to the addressee from the latter point.<sup>96</sup>

86. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Barefoot, 97 Tex. 159, 76 S. W. 914, 64 L. R. A. 491, holding that a telegram addressed to A in care of B may in the absence of A be delivered to C, if C has been expressly authorized by A to receive the same, and that in such case the company will not be liable for making such delivery instead of delivering the message to B.

But see Bra-

shears v. Western Union Tel. Co., 45 Mo. App. 433, holding that while an addressee may waive his own rights by accepting a message by telephone, he cannot, by so doing, waive the rights of the sender, and that if an error is made in telephoning the message to the addressee the company will be liable therefor to the sender.

D. Duty to Forward. Where neither the addressee nor any agent of his authorized to receive messages is to be found at the point of destination, the company is under no obligation to forward the message to the place where the addressee happens to be, even though it is informed of his whereabouts.<sup>97</sup> Such further obligation can ordinarily arise only out of a new and independent contract, requiring a new consideration,<sup>98</sup> although it may be the duty of a telegraph company to forward a message where the sender has paid or guaranteed extra compensation to insure prompt delivery under such circumstances that an undertaking to forward should the addressee be absent may be implied.<sup>99</sup> There is no obligation to forward merely because the addressee has given instructions that his messages be forwarded, in the absence of any payment or agreement to pay the charges therefor,<sup>1</sup> and even a valid agreement to forward is, in the absence of express stipulation, binding only for a reasonable length of time.<sup>2</sup>

E. Duty Not to Disclose. It is a part of the undertaking of the telegraph company, with respect to the transmission and subsequent handling of a message, that the contents of the message shall not be disclosed to any person whomsoever without the consent, express or implied, of either the sender or of the addressee; and for a violation of this duty, wilful or negligent, the company will be liable.<sup>3</sup> By statute in many states the wilful violation of this duty of secrecy is made a criminal offense punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.<sup>4</sup> No liability, however, is incurred where the contents of the telegram are divulged in response to a proper subpoena.<sup>5</sup>

V. MODIFICATION OF LIABILITY BY CONTRACT.

A. What Contracts or Stipulations Are Valid — 1. LIMITING LIABILITY FOR UNREPEATED MESSAGES — a. In General. Telegraph companies usually contract with the sender of a message that, if it is desired that the message shall be repeated, that is, telegraphed back to the originating office for comparison, an additional charge shall be made for such extra service, and that the company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery or for non-delivery of any unrepeatable message beyond the amount received for sending the same. As to the validity of this stipulation the authorities are divided, some holding that it is reasonable, and that, when assented to by the sender, it relieves the company from liability beyond the amount stipulated, except in cases of wilful misconduct or gross negligence;<sup>6</sup> while others, and an undoubted numerical mitted by wire and then by mail to the point from which it was to be delivered if the company makes no provision for a special delivery to the addressee from the latter point.

2. THAT MESSAGE SHALL NOT BE DELIVERED DURING NIGHT. It is reasonable for a telegraph company to stipulate that in consideration of a reduced rate a message shall be sent during the night, and delivered not earlier than the morning of the next ensuing business day; and in such a case if the message is delivered with reasonable promptness on the morning of the next business day there can be no liability for the delay over night, to which the sender assented.<sup>23</sup>

In Texas it is provided by statute that such stipulations shall not be valid unless reasonable, and that a stipulation requiring notice within a period of less than ninety days shall be void. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lovely, (Civ. App. 1899) 52 S. W. 563.

thirty,<sup>32</sup> or even twenty, days.<sup>33</sup> But conceding the validity of the stipulation under ordinary circumstances, it has been held not binding where it would operate unreasonably under the circumstances of a particular case,<sup>34</sup> as where plaintiff had no knowledge of the company's negligence or default until after the stipulated period for presenting claims had expired;<sup>35</sup> and in a few of such cases that it is sufficient if the claim is presented within the stipulated number of days after such knowledge is acquired,<sup>36</sup> and the same rule has been applied in some cases where such knowledge was acquired some time after the sending of the message but before the entire expiration of the period stipulated,<sup>37</sup> although it would seem that the better rule should be to the contrary.<sup>37a</sup> Where the stipulation requires the claim to be presented within a certain time after the "sending" of the message, the period does not begin to run until the message is actually started,<sup>38</sup> and if there is a total failure to transmit, no presentation of claim is necessary;<sup>39</sup> but if the message is actually transmitted a delay in delivery will not extend the time for presenting claim if after the discovery of the company's negligence a reasonable time for presenting the claim still remains before the expiration of the period stipulated.<sup>40</sup>

b. Requisites of Claim. The claim must identify the message, state the negligence complained of, and the nature and extent of the damages sustained.<sup>41</sup> It is not sufficient merely to give notice of the negligence complained of,<sup>42</sup> to make complaint thereof and demand an explanation,<sup>43</sup> or to give notice that a claim for damages will be made,<sup>44</sup> although the process or complaint in an action against the company, if sufficient in form, may serve as a written presentation of claim.<sup>45</sup> There can be no recovery by one person on a claim presented by another,<sup>46</sup> nor can there be a recovery for subjects of damage not included in the claim presented,<sup>47</sup> although it is not necessary that the claim should accurately state the amount of the loss,<sup>48</sup> and plaintiff will not be limited in his recovery to the amount of damages stated in his claim.<sup>49</sup>

c. Condition Precedent or Subsequent. In some cases it has been held that the stipulation requiring claims to be presented within a certain time is a condition precedent to a right of action,<sup>50</sup> and that if such claim is not presented an action cannot be maintained, although the action is brought within the time stipulated for presenting claims.<sup>51</sup> In other cases, however, it is held that the condition is not a condition precedent, but a condition subsequent,<sup>52</sup> merely operating, in cases where no claim is presented within the time limited, to defeat a cause of action which has already accrued,<sup>53</sup> and that it is sufficient, although no other claim is presented, if suit is instituted within the time limited.<sup>54</sup> These decisions seem to be based upon the ground that the suit is equivalent to a written presentation of claim, and therefore a sufficient compliance with the stipulation,<sup>55</sup> it being stated that while it is sufficient if the process or complaint sufficiently informs defendant of the different facts which a written claim should set out,<sup>56</sup> a mere summons to answer is not sufficient.<sup>57</sup>

d. Waiver. Like any other contractual stipulation, the requirement in the contract of transmission that a written claim for damages shall be presented within a specified time may be waived by the party for whose benefit it was inserted in the contract — that is, the telegraph company;<sup>58-59</sup> and it is held that such waiver may rest in parol,<sup>60</sup> but that the evidence of waiver must be unequivocal, direct, and positive.<sup>61</sup> A mere promise to look into the matter, in response to an oral complaint, is not a waiver,<sup>62</sup> nor is waiver shown by mere verbal statements to and interviews with the company's operators,<sup>63</sup> or by correspondence commencing with a letter from plaintiff to the company merely asking an explanation and demanding an apology.<sup>64</sup> An ordinary telegraph operator, as such, has no authority to waive the benefit of the stipulation,<sup>65</sup> and still less has a messenger,<sup>66</sup> although the manager of an office, on whom the claim might properly have been served, has, ostensibly at least, such authority.<sup>67</sup>

5. 6. STIPULATION AGAINST LIABILITY FOR DEFAULTS OF CONNECTING LINES.<sup>69</sup> A stipulation that the telegraph company shall be the agent of the sender, without liability, to forward any message over the lines of any other company when necessary to reach its destination is reasonable and valid, and protects the initial company against liability for negligence on the part of any other company to which Waiver of regulation.—Whether such regulation be valid or not it is waived where the company directs its messenger to receive and bring the message to its office. Will v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 3 N. Y. App. Div. 22, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 933.

It seems that, even without such a provision, a telegraph company is not responsible for a message given to a messenger outside the office unless and until the messenger files it in the office in the regular manner (Stamey v. Western Union Tel. Co., 92 Ga. 613, 18 S. E. 1008, 44 Am. St. Rep. 95); although it would doubtless be otherwise in the absence of contract if the messenger were sent for the express purpose of receiving the message, or if the message were an answer for which he had been instructed to ask (Will v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 3 N. Y. App. Div. 22, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 933).

rule that the sender of the message may have been an infant, the stipulation if valid being as binding upon infants as adults.<sup>77</sup>

(II) BY OPERATOR. Where the message is written on the blank by one of the company's messengers or operators at the dictation and request of the sender, the messenger or operator is, for this purpose, the sender's agent, and the latter is bound by the stipulations as though he had written the message himself;<sup>78</sup> and in such cases it is not material, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, that the sender did not read such stipulations,<sup>79</sup> or even that he was unable to read or write,<sup>80</sup> or did not know of the existence of such stipulations.<sup>81</sup>

b. Message on Other Company's Blank. Where a message as delivered to and accepted by a telegraph company for transmission is written not on a form issued by that company, but on a form issued by another company containing certain stipulations, such stipulations are a part of the contract and the sender is bound thereby to the same extent that he would have been bound had he delivered the message to the company whose name appeared on the blank;<sup>82</sup> although it seems that if the transmitting operator, without the knowledge of the sender, rewrites the message upon a blank of his own company, the sender will not be bound by stipulations upon that blank which he never saw, signed, or agreed to.<sup>83</sup>

c. Message on Plain Paper. Where a message as delivered to the telegraph company is written on paper containing no contract stipulations, the sender is not ordinarily bound by the stipulations printed on the usual blank,<sup>84</sup> and this rule is not affected by the fact that the operator may, without the sender's knowledge or consent, subsequently attach it to or copy it upon one of such blanks.<sup>85</sup>

In Illinois it is held that the condition must have been known or assented to and that while slight evidence of assent may suffice yet there must be something more than the mere fact that the condition was to be found in the printed matter appearing upon the blank used (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lycan, 60 Ill. App. 124); and that in an action by the addressee of a message the condition is not binding unless assented to by him notwithstanding he had knowledge of the condition (Webbe v. It is not material what company's name appears upon the blank since the intention of the sender is to contract with the company to which the message is delivered for transmission, and the stipulations on the blank used constitute the contract, and being assented to are binding upon the sender. The rule has also been held to apply even where the sender knew of the stipulations on the company's ordinary blanks,<sup>86</sup> but in other cases it has been held that if he knew of such stipulations he will be bound thereby.<sup>87</sup>

d. Message Accepted Over Telephone. If a telegraph company accepts for transmission a message offered to it over a telephone, and the operator without the knowledge or direction of the sender writes the message upon one of the company's blanks, the sender will not ordinarily be bound by the stipulations contained thereon,<sup>88</sup> particularly where he did not know of such stipulations or intend or expect the message to be written upon such blank.<sup>89</sup>

2. WHETHER ADDRESSEE BOUND. In an action against a telegraph company brought by the addressee of a message,<sup>90</sup> it is ordinarily held that he is bound by the stipulations in the contract between the company and the sender of the message to the same extent as the sender.<sup>91</sup> In some cases, however, it has been held that the addressee is not bound by such stipulations unless he assented thereto, although he may have had knowledge thereof,<sup>92</sup> and also that where the addressee sues not in contract but in tort he is not bound by such stipulations,<sup>93</sup>

A distinction has been suggested between actions based upon a wrongful act independent of any duty assumed under the contract and actions based upon the negligent performance of a duty assumed by the contract, it being held, however, that in cases of the latter character, as in case of a negligent delay in delivery, the stipulations of the contract are binding upon the addressee. although in other cases it has been held that the addressee is bound whether the action is in contract or in tort.<sup>94</sup>

3. THIRD PARTY. Where a third party, neither the sender nor the addressee, is allowed to maintain an action on the contract for the transmission of the message on the theory that such contract was made for his benefit, he is of course bound by the conditions.<sup>95</sup>

VI. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES IN PARTICULAR CASES.

A. Libelous Messages.<sup>96</sup> Since a telegraph company is not obliged to receive for transmission a message which is obviously libelous,<sup>97</sup> and the transmission of such a message through its sending and receiving operators is a technical publication by the company,<sup>98</sup> a telegraph company may be held liable for the transmission of a libelous message;<sup>99</sup> but since the company cannot arbitrarily refuse to receive messages for transmission, and the nature of its business requires prompt action, if the message under the circumstances is reasonably susceptible of a construction which would make it either not libelous or privileged, it is the duty of the company to transmit the same and it will not be liable for so doing.<sup>1</sup>

B. Forged, Fraudulent, or Unauthorized Messages. It is the duty of a telegraph company to exercise reasonable care and diligence to prevent being made a means of perpetrating a fraudulent or wrongful act,<sup>2</sup> and for failure to the board or exchange.<sup>26</sup> Where a telegraph company undertakes to furnish market reports, its obligation is to procure and furnish correct reports, and it will be liable for losses occasioned by errors or mistakes therein.<sup>27</sup>

D. District Telegraph or Messenger Business. A district telegraph business ordinarily consists in the furnishing of messenger boys to deliver messages, carry packages, run errands, and perform other miscellaneous services,<sup>28</sup> although it may also include night watchman signals, fire and burglar alarms, and police calls.<sup>29</sup> As the business is ordinarily conducted, messengers are summoned by means of an electric call, and are sent out without any knowledge on the part of the company as to the particular services for which they are wanted,<sup>30</sup> and the charges are based upon the time for which the messengers are employed, without reference to the character of the services rendered.<sup>31</sup> As to the status and consequent liability of such companies there is a conflict of authority.<sup>32</sup> In some earlier cases it was held that they are common carriers and liable as such,<sup>33</sup> except, in the absence of notice or special agreement, in regard to the transmission of money.<sup>34</sup> But by the weight of recent authority, while such companies resemble common carriers in their public character and duty to serve all,<sup>35</sup> they are not, strictly speaking, common carriers or liable as insurers as in case of carriers of goods.<sup>36</sup> So it has been held that while in case of a special agreement to perform a particular service the company will be liable for a failure to perform it,<sup>37</sup> yet where a messenger is merely summoned in the ordinary manner, the company will not be liable for his acts unless it was negligent in the selection of the messenger.<sup>38</sup>

Violation of instructions.—In one early case it was held that regardless of whether a district telegraph company is a common carrier or not, if a package is given to one of its messengers, with instructions not to deliver it except upon certain conditions, the company will be liable if it is delivered in violation of such instructions. Feiber v. Manhattan Dist. Tel. Co., 15 Daly (N. Y.) 62, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 116, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 555, 22 Abb. N. Cas. 121.

E. Connecting Lines. As previously shown, a telegraph company may by express stipulation limit its liability to its own line;<sup>39</sup> but in the absence of such stipulation it has been held that, although telegraph companies are not common carriers or liable as such, where a message is to be transmitted over different connecting lines the respective liabilities of the different companies must be governed by the rules relating to connecting carriers,<sup>40</sup> as to which there is a direct conflict of authority between the so-called English and American rules.<sup>41</sup> So in some cases it has been held that while each company is liable for its own acts, neither is liable for the negligence or defaults of the other company;<sup>42</sup> and in others that, where one telegraph company receives for transmission a message for a point beyond its own line, and collects the entire charges therefor, it will be liable for the negligence or defaults of a connecting company over whose line the message must pass in reaching its destination.<sup>43</sup> But under either rule,<sup>44</sup> and irrespective of the liability of the original transmitting company,<sup>45</sup> the connecting company to which the message is transferred for further transmission will be liable for its own negligence or defaults,<sup>46</sup> although it will not be chargeable with knowledge of facts or circumstances from which special damages would

Procuring messenger for particular service.—Where a person applies at the office of a district telegraph company for a boy competent to drive a team of horses to a certain place, and a boy is furnished for this purpose, the company will be liable if, through his negligence or incompetency, the team is permitted to run away and is injured. *American Dist. S. 1091, holding, in a case where a messenger was sent out to collect money and failed to return it, that in such case the messenger while in the general service of the company was for the time being the servant of the person employing him, and that in the absence of any negligence on the part of the company in selecting a suitable and proper person for the performance of the ordinary duties of a messenger it was not liable for his acts. Liability to addressee.—A connecting telegraph company is liable to the addressee for its own negligence, although the original contract of transmission was between the transmitting company and the sender of the message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lyman, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 460, 22 S. W. 656.

accrue, which were not communicated to it by the first company or apparent from the message itself.<sup>47</sup> If the original transmitting company expressly undertakes to send a message to its destination, it will be liable for a failure to do so, although such failure was due to the default of a connecting line,<sup>48</sup> and one company may also be liable for the acts of another on the ground that in the particular case there was an agency or partnership relation;<sup>49</sup> but the existence of such a relation cannot be inferred merely from the fact that the two companies have a common terminus and are in the habit of receiving messages from each other,<sup>50</sup> even if it further appears that, for convenience, an arrangement exists between them whereby the initial company collects from the sender in each case the tolls for both lines, accounting afterward to the connecting company for the latter's proportion.<sup>51</sup> If there is more than one connecting line to which it is possible to transfer the message the sender may determine which one shall be selected, and the initial company will be liable if it transfers to the other and the other is negligent;<sup>52</sup> but it will be relieved from liability if it transfers to the one selected by the sender, whether the latter company is negligent or not.<sup>53</sup> In case there is negligence or default on both the line of the initial and the line of the connecting company, and each default contributes to the ultimate damage, both companies are liable.<sup>54</sup>

F. Telephone Companies.<sup>55</sup> Ordinarily it is not the duty of a telephone company, although conducting a long distance business, to transmit messages, but merely to furnish a means of communication and to find and notify persons for whom calls are made,<sup>56</sup> in which case it will not be liable for refusing to transmit a message;<sup>57</sup> but it will be liable for a negligent failure or delay in regard to notifying persons for whom calls are made,<sup>58</sup> or negligently bringing in response to such a call a different person from the one for whom the call is made.<sup>59</sup> If, however, a telephone company undertakes to transmit and deliver messages, its duties and liabilities in this regard are similar to those of telegraph companies.<sup>60</sup> Where a request is made for a particular number or telephone, the company discharges its duty by making the proper connection, and is not responsible for the identity of the person answering,<sup>61</sup> although it might be liable for negligently giving a wrong connection.<sup>62</sup>

VII. STATUTORY PENALTIES.

A. In General. In a number of jurisdictions there are statutes imposing penalties upon telegraph companies for violations of their public duties,<sup>63</sup> which statutes in some cases expressly include telephone companies also,<sup>64</sup> and such statutes are not unconstitutional,<sup>65</sup> except in so far as they attempt to regulate or interfere with interstate commerce.<sup>66</sup> The statutes vary both as to their terms and their objects, some being designed merely to prevent partiality or discrimination,<sup>67</sup> or applying only to wilful or intentional acts,<sup>68</sup> and others including

In Arkansas the act of 1885, repealing a former statute applying in terms to every "neglect or refusal" to transmit or receive messages, omits the word "neglect," and it is held that the latter statute applies only to wilful or intentional acts, and not to such as are merely negligent. State v. Western Union Tel. Co., 76 Ark. 124, 88 S. W. 834.

within their application negligent acts or omissions.<sup>60</sup> It is ordinarily held that the remedy provided by such statutes is merely cumulative,<sup>70</sup> and that the penalty is not in the nature of liquidated damages,<sup>71</sup> but rather in the nature of a punishment for breach of a public duty,<sup>72</sup> and that a recovery of the penalty is not a bar to an action for damages.<sup>73</sup> It is not necessary, in order to recover the penalty, that plaintiff should have sustained any actual damages,<sup>74</sup> nor is his object in sending the message material, provided the message was of a character proper for transmission.<sup>75</sup>

B. Construction and Application of Statutes — 1. IN GENERAL. As in the case of other penal statutes,<sup>76</sup> statutes imposing penalties upon telegraph or telephone companies must be strictly construed,<sup>77</sup> not only as to the liability imposed, but also as to the companies or persons liable,<sup>78</sup> and the person or persons entitled to enforce such liability,<sup>79</sup> particularly since the rights of any injured party, in cases not within the provisions of the statute, are fully guarded by the right to sue for damages;<sup>80</sup> but this rule does not prevent a reasonable construction of the statute as a whole,<sup>81</sup> so as to give effect to the evident intention of the legislature.<sup>82</sup> Under the rule of strict construction it has been held that statutes requiring transmission or delivery "within a reasonable time,"<sup>83</sup> or with "due diligence,"<sup>84</sup> are intended merely to secure promptness and do not apply to errors in transmission; and that a statute requiring the company to transmit correctly and deliver promptly imposes no penalty for delay in transmission,<sup>85</sup> or even for an entire failure to transmit,<sup>86</sup> but only for incorrect transmission or delay in delivery after the transmission is complete.<sup>87</sup> In some cases it has been held that statutes relating in terms only to the transmission of messages do not apply to defaults in regard to their delivery;<sup>88</sup> but, on the contrary, it has been held that the term "transmit" necessarily includes delivery,<sup>89</sup> and that therefore such statutes apply to negligence or defaults in regard to delivery.<sup>90</sup> A statute imposing a penalty for failure to transmit upon payment or tender of the usual charges does not apply unless such charges have been prepaid or tendered,<sup>91</sup> and a statute requiring prompt delivery "upon the arrival" of a message at the point of destination does not apply where the message never arrived at such point,<sup>92</sup> nor does a provision requiring prompt delivery "where the regulations of the company require" such delivery apply where the message is addressed to a place beyond the company's delivery limits.<sup>93</sup> A statute requiring delivery of all messages, provided the addressees "reside" within a certain distance or within certain limits, does not apply to a failure to deliver a message to a non-resident temporarily within such limits,<sup>94</sup> although he has given to the company an address within such limits at which he can be found;<sup>95</sup> but such a proviso in regard to delivery does not protect the company for a breach of duty in regard to the transmission of the message, although the addressee may not live within such limits.<sup>96</sup> A statute, although expressly including telephone companies, which requires the receipt and transmission of "messages" or "despatches," relates only to such as are in writing, and does not apply to a refusal to permit a person to communicate directly with another by telephone,<sup>97</sup> or to a failure to transmit by telephone a message tendered orally.<sup>98</sup> A statute directing that messages shall be transmitted

“correctly” does not require absolute literal accuracy, but only that they shall be substantially correct.<sup>99</sup>

2. STATUTES RELATING TO DISCRIMINATION. Penal statutes merely directing in substance that telegraph companies shall receive and transmit messages without discrimination, and with impartiality and in good faith, and in the order received, without any express requirement that the transmission shall be correct or prompt, are ordinarily construed as intended merely to prevent partiality and discrimination between different patrons,<sup>1</sup> and as applying only to intentional or wilful acts,<sup>2</sup> not including merely negligent acts or omissions,<sup>3</sup> such as a negligent failure to transmit,<sup>4</sup> delay in transmission or delivery,<sup>5</sup> error in transmission,<sup>6</sup> or even a positive refusal to accept a message for transmission, due merely to negligence on the part of the operator in ascertaining whether the company has an office at the point of destination;<sup>7</sup> but in some cases it has been held that if the act or omission complained of is within the terms of the statute, it is not material whether it was intentional or merely negligent.<sup>8</sup>

3. NO EXTRATERRITORIAL EFFECT. Statutes imposing penalties upon telegraph companies have no extraterritorial effect,<sup>9</sup> and so there can be no recovery in one

Under the Indiana statute it is held that telegraph companies are required, under penalty, to receive and transmit messages: (1) With impartiality and in good faith; (2) in the order of time in which they are received; and (3) without discrimination in rates or conditions of service; and that even conceding that the first and third requirements can be violated only by intentional acts, the second may be by negligence as well as by design. *Western Union Tel. state of a penalty incurred under the laws of another state,<sup>10</sup> or for an act or omission occurring beyond the borders of the state where the action is brought and by the laws of which the penalty is provided.<sup>11</sup>

C. Who May Recover. The question as to what person or persons may sue to recover a statutory penalty depends upon the terms of the statute.<sup>12</sup> Under some of the statutes imposing penalties upon telegraph companies, the right to recover is limited to the sender of the message and does not include the addressee,<sup>13</sup> and some statutes have been so construed, although applying in terms to "any party aggrieved;"<sup>14</sup> but under other statutes the action may

Application of rule.—A telegraph company is not subject to a penalty provided by the laws of one state for failing to transmit a message to that state from a point in another state (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reed, 96 Ind. 195); or for failing to deliver in another state a message transmitted from a point in the state imposing the penalty (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Carter, 156 Ind. 531, 60 N. E. 305; Connell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 108 Mo. 459, 18 S. W. 883).

Interference with interstate commerce.—As the telegraph is an instrument of commerce (see COMMERCE, 7 Cyc. 450), any attempt on the part of one state to penalize a telegraph company in regard to the conduct of its business in another state, as by attempting to regulate the delivery of messages in another state, would be in conflict with the commerce clause of the federal constitution (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 7 S. Ct. 1126, 30 L. ed. 1187 [reversing 95 Ind. 12, 48 Am. Rep. 692]); but such a statute is not invalid, even in regard to interstate messages, in so far as it applies only to defaults occurring within the state imposing the penalty, provided it imposes no new burden or duty (Western Union Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U. S.

650, 16 S. Ct. 934, 40 L. ed. 1105. See also COMMERCE, 7 Cyc. 452 text and note 6).

One who directs a message to be forwarded to him at another address does not thereby make himself the sender of the message forwarded. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kinney, 106 Ind. 468, 7 N. E. 191.

Message transferred to other line.—Under a statute imposing a penalty for the benefit of "the person or persons sending or desiring to send" messages, it has been held that where a message is filed for transmission with the A company for a point not on its line, and is transferred by it to the B company, and the B company is guilty of a breach of duty, the proper plaintiff in an action against the B company is not the original sender of the message, but the A company. Thurn v. Alta Tel. Co., 15 Cal. 472.

Another telegraph company which desires to forward a message to a point beyond the terminus of its own line, over the line of another company, is the party desiring to send the message and may sue the connecting company for a failure or refusal to transmit the same. The words "person or persons," as used in the statute, include corporations. U. S. Telegraph Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 46.

The reason for this construction of the Indiana statute is that it is designed merely to prevent partiality and discrimination between different patrons of the company, and that only those giving or offering business to the company can rightly be called its patrons. Hadley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 115 Ind. 191, 15 N. E. 845.

be brought to recover the penalty by either the sender of the message or the addressee.<sup>15</sup>

D. Defenses. Ordinarily it seems that the same defenses are available in actions to recover penalties as in actions for damages.<sup>16</sup> In such actions it has been held that the company may interpose the defense of office hours to excuse a delay in transmission or delivery,<sup>17</sup> or contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff in failing to give a correct or definite address,<sup>18</sup> and the defense that the addressee resided without the established free delivery limits.<sup>19</sup> It is also ordinarily held that a failure to comply with a stipulation requiring the presentation of claims within a certain time is available as a defense in an action for a penalty, as well as in actions to recover damages,<sup>20</sup> although in some cases a stipulation requiring the presentation of claims for "damages," and not specifically referring to penalties, has been construed as not applying in actions to recover penalties.<sup>21</sup> It is no bar to an action for a penalty that the company has refunded the amount received by it for the service undertaken,<sup>22</sup> or has paid the expenses incurred by plaintiff by reason of its negligence or default,<sup>23</sup> unless it was agreed that such payment was made and accepted in full settlement of all claims against the company.<sup>24</sup>

E. Actions To Recover Penalties — 1. PARTIES. The question as to what person or persons are entitled to sue to recover the penalty depends upon the provisions of the statute;<sup>25</sup> but such persons may sue in their own names and need not bring the action in the name of the state;<sup>26</sup> and where the message was sent by two persons who are jointly interested in the cause of action stated they may join as co-plaintiffs in the same suit.<sup>27</sup> A company receiving a despatch for transmission and a connecting company by which it should have been delivered cannot be joined as defendants in an action for a penalty, where the action is

The fact that a different name was signed to the telegram will not prevent a recovery, if it is shown that the message was in fact written and sent by plaintiff and that he was the contracting and real party in interest. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Troth, 43 Ind. App. 7, 84 N. E. 727.

2. PLEADING. The complaint in an action to recover a penalty must allege all facts necessary to bring the case clearly within the application of the statute,<sup>29</sup> and must allege facts and not merely conclusions of law.<sup>30</sup> It is not necessary, however, for the complaint to follow the exact language of the statute,<sup>31</sup> to refer expressly to the statute,<sup>32</sup> to set out a copy of the telegram in question,<sup>33</sup> or to allege that any actual damages were sustained.<sup>34</sup> It is not necessary for the complaint to negate matters of affirmative defense,<sup>35</sup> but on the contrary such Western Union Tel. Co.*, 59 Mo. Virginia.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Powell, 94 Va. 268, 26 S. E. 828, holding that under a statute requiring delivery "upon the arrival" of the message at the point of destination the complaint must allege that the message arrived at such point.

In an action before a justice of the peace, a complaint will be held sufficient if it informs defendant of the nature of plaintiff's cause of action, and is so explicit that a judgment thereon may be used as a bar to another suit for the same cause of action. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Huff, 102 Ind. 535, 26 N. E. 85.

Telegraphing for the public.—Under the

Indiana statute, which applies in terms to companies "engaged in telegraphing for the public," it must be alleged that defendant company was so engaged, and it is not sufficient to allege that defendant was "engaged in the business of transmitting telegraphic messages for hire" (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Axtell, 69 Ind. 199); but if the complaint alleges that defendant was engaged in telegraphing for the public, it is not necessary to also allege that it was so engaged for hire (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Scircle, 103 Ind. 227, 2 N. E. 604).

Complaint held sufficient.—See Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 94 Ga. 441, 19 S. E. 979; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Adams, 87 Ind. 598, 44 Am. Rep. 776; *Western Union Tel. Co. v. The complaint may be amended by adding a necessary allegation, such as the place of residence of the addressee (Durant v. Western Union Tel. Co., 94 Ga. 442, 20 S. E. 253, 44 Am. St. Rep. 100); or by striking out certain allegations, or by adding new allegations, provided they are consistent with the other allegations and merely amplify the same without setting up a new cause of action (*Chandler v. matters in order to be available as a defense must be specially pleaded by defendant.<sup>36</sup>

3. EVIDENCE. In an action to recover a penalty, the burden is upon plaintiff to establish his case by proof of all facts necessary to bring the case within the application of the statute,<sup>37</sup> and to show that he is a person entitled to recover the penalty,<sup>38</sup> and that the negligence or default complained of occurred within the state.<sup>39</sup> It has been held, however, that if plaintiff proves that there was an unreasonable delay, the burden is then upon defendant to explain the delay,<sup>40</sup> and that, although the statute applies only to intentional and not to negligent acts, if a breach of duty is shown the burden is upon defendant to show that it was not intentional.<sup>41</sup> The burden is of course upon defendant to establish any matters of affirmative defense.<sup>42</sup> If the message is fully identified, it is not error to admit evidence of its transmission at a date different from that alleged in the complaint.<sup>43</sup> The evidence must be sufficient to support all the material allegations essential to a recovery under the statute,<sup>44</sup> but no proof of any actual damage is necessary.<sup>45</sup>

4. JUDGMENT. Where the statute provides that a certain proportion of the penalty shall go to plaintiff, and the remainder to the county school fund, the judgment should expressly provide for such division and disposition of the amount recovered.<sup>46</sup>

VIII. ACTIONS AGAINST TELEGRAPH OR TELEPHONE COMPANIES.<sup>47</sup>

A. Right of Action and Defenses — 1. IN GENERAL. For a wrongful refusal to receive a message for transmission an action of tort will lie;<sup>48</sup> and where a message has been accepted for transmission a failure promptly and accurately to transmit and deliver the same is not only a breach of contract but a breach

Residence of addressee.—Under the Indiana statute requiring delivery where the addressee lives within one mile of the telegraph station or within the city or town where such station is located, it has been held that it need not be alleged in the complaint that the addressee lived within such limits, it being a matter of defense to be set up by defendant in case he did not live within such limits (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Buskirk, 107 Ind. 549, 8 N. E. 557; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lindley, 62 Ind. 371); but in a later case it has been held, without any reference to the earlier cases, that the fact that the addressee lived within such limits must be alleged in the complaint (*Reese v. of a public duty,<sup>49</sup> constituting an actionable tort,<sup>50</sup> so that ordinarily the action for a breach of such duty may be brought either in contract or in tort.<sup>51</sup> In some cases and in some respects it is immaterial in which form the action is brought,<sup>52</sup> but in others the form of action is material,<sup>53</sup> as in regard to the right to recover exemplary damages,<sup>54</sup> or in determining what law governs,<sup>55</sup> or as affecting the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.<sup>56</sup> It has also been held that as there is no contractual relation between the telegraph company and the addressee of a message, the latter's right of action is necessarily in tort,<sup>57</sup> unless the sender of the message acted as his agent.<sup>58</sup> While any breach of the contract of transmission or public duty undertaken will give rise to a right of action for at least nominal damages,<sup>59</sup> no cause of action arises except in favor of one to whom the company owed a duty in regard to the act or omission complained of.<sup>60</sup>

Stipulations in contract of transmission requiring claims to be presented within a certain time are ordinarily, although not uniformly, regarded as being conditions subse-

of the prior attachments obtained by other creditors,<sup>64</sup> nor where by reason of an error in transmission a contract has been entered into through an agent upon terms different from those intended by plaintiff is he required to bring an action against the other party to rescind the contract.<sup>65</sup>

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.<sup>66</sup> Actions against telegraph companies for breaches of duty in regard to the transmission and delivery of messages are regarded as arising ex contractu and are governed by the statutes of limitation applicable to actions upon contracts.<sup>67</sup>

4. WHAT LAW GOVERNS — a. In General. In actions against telegraph companies based upon negligence or defaults in regard to messages filed in one state to be transmitted to and delivered at a point in another state, it frequently becomes important to determine what law governs,<sup>68</sup> as in regard to the application of statutes imposing penalties,<sup>69</sup> or increasing the common-law liabilities of such companies,<sup>70</sup> or in regard to the validity and application of stipulations in the contract of transmission limiting the liability of the company,<sup>71</sup> or in regard to the right of plaintiff to recover damages for mental anguish.<sup>72</sup> In the case of statutory penalties it seems to be well settled that such statutes have no extra-territorial effect and that a penalty incurred under the laws of one state will not be enforced by the courts of another.<sup>73</sup> In regard to the other cases mentioned there is a direct conflict of authority,<sup>74</sup> some of the cases applying the law of the state where the contract of transmission was entered into,<sup>75</sup> and others the law of the state where the contract was to be performed,<sup>76</sup> while others make a further distinction according to whether the action is based upon the contract or is in quent and not conditions precedent. See supra, V, A, 4, c.

tort for the breach of a public duty,<sup>77</sup> or to enforce a liability other than a penalty imposed by statute,<sup>78</sup> holding that in such cases the law of the state where the particular breach of duty occurred controls.<sup>79</sup> It will be presumed, however, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, whether the action is in contract or in tort, that the law of the state where the contract was made or to be performed or the breach of duty occurred is the same as that of the state where the action is brought.<sup>80</sup>

b. Right to Recover For Mental Anguish. As affecting the right of plaintiff to recover damages for mental anguish it is held in some cases that the law of the state where the contract of transmission was entered into governs,<sup>81</sup> regardless of where the breach of duty occurred,<sup>82</sup> or where the action is brought.<sup>83</sup> Under this rule damages for mental anguish may be recovered if allowable in the jurisdiction where the contract was made, although the message was addressed to a point in another state where such damages are not recoverable,<sup>84</sup> and the breach consists in a negligent failure or delay in delivering the message in the latter state;<sup>85</sup> and conversely such damages cannot be recovered if not allowable where the contract was made, although the message was addressed to a point in a state where such damages are recoverable,<sup>86</sup> and the breach occurred in the latter state.<sup>87</sup> It will be presumed, however, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the law of the state where the contract was made is the same as that where the action is brought.<sup>88</sup> In other cases it is held that the law of the state where the contract is to be performed governs,<sup>89</sup> some of the cases seeming to regard the performance as being entirely in the state where the message is to be delivered,<sup>90</sup> and others recognizing a part performance in each state and making the right of recovery dependent upon the jurisdiction in which the breach complained of occurred.<sup>91</sup> If damages for mental anguish are recoverable both where the contract was made and where it was to be performed, it is of course immaterial as to which law should be considered as governing,<sup>92</sup> and in such cases damages for mental anguish may be recovered,<sup>93</sup> although the action is brought in a third jurisdiction where the mental anguish doctrine is not recognized at common law but has been introduced by statute.<sup>94</sup> In a third class of cases a distinction is recognized between cases where the action is based upon the contract and cases where it is in tort for a breach of public duty or to enforce a liability imposed by statute,<sup>95</sup> it being held that in such cases the law of the place where the particular breach of duty was committed governs;<sup>96</sup> and while in some of the cases the form of action is not expressly referred to,<sup>97</sup> it has been frequently held that if damages for mental anguish are recoverable where the breach of duty occurs, such a recovery may be had, although the message is sent from or addressed to a point in a state where such damages are not recoverable;<sup>98</sup> and in the case

A. 486, holding that the validity of a stipulation limiting the liability of the company for errors in the transmission of cipher or obscure messages is governed by the law of the state where the contract was made, regardless of the form in which the action is brought or the place where the breach of duty occurred, and that if the stipulation is valid where the contract was made, it will be upheld, although it would not be considered as valid if the contract had been made in the state where the action was brought. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Eubanks, 100 Ky. 591, 605, 38 S. W. 1068, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 995, 66 Am. St. Rep. 361, 36 L. R. A. 711, where in a case involving the validity of stipulations limiting the liability of the company the court said: "The general rule is that the law of the place where the contract is to be performed governs, subject, of course, to the rule that a contract which is void by the law of the

be performed, this being held to be the place where the message was to be delivered; <sup>4</sup> but such stipulations, although valid according to a law of the place of the contract, will not be upheld if contrary to the public policy of the state where the action is brought. <sup>5</sup>

5. DEFENSES.<sup>6</sup> Defendant may in so far as applicable to the form of action and circumstances of the particular case rely upon such defenses as are applicable generally in actions for breach of contract and for negligence,<sup>7</sup> such as a failure of plaintiff to comply with a condition precedent to his right of action,<sup>8</sup> or contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.<sup>9</sup> The company may also rely upon a valid stipulation in the contract of transmission limiting its liability,<sup>10</sup> or a valid regulation in regard to the conduct of its business as in regard to its office hours,<sup>11</sup> or free delivery limits.<sup>12</sup> It is of course a good defense for defendant to show affirmatively that it exercised due care and was not guilty of negligence.<sup>13</sup>

The contract is not necessarily with the sender of the message, but on the contrary if the sender in transmitting the message acts as the agent and at the request and for the benefit of the addressee, the contract is made with the latter through his agent. De Rutte v. New York, etc., Electro Magnetic Tel. Co., 1 Daly (N. Y.) 547, 30 How. Pr. 403.

Reply message.—A message sent by A to B, making an inquiry and requesting an answer, constitutes B the agent of A to procure and communicate the information requested, so that in case of negligence in the transmis-

although the agency was not disclosed,<sup>27</sup> or where he himself has made a special contract in regard to the delivery of the message;<sup>28</sup> or he may be entitled to sue by reason of a statutory provision imposing certain liabilities upon telegraph companies.<sup>29</sup> The addressee's right of action has also been sustained upon the ground that, although not a party to the contract, it was made for his benefit;<sup>30</sup> but while this rule is undoubtedly true if the message shows or the company is otherwise informed that it is for his benefit,<sup>31</sup> it has been held that he cannot recover where this fact does not appear from the message or the sion or delivery of the reply message sent by B to A there is a sufficient contractual relation between A and the telegraph company to enable A to maintain an action for breach of the contract. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cunningham, 99 Ala. 314, 14 So. 579.

Where plaintiff arranges with a third person to send him a message in a certain event, and the latter does so, informing defendant's agent of the arrangement, the necessary contractual relation exists between plaintiff and defendant. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rowell, 153 Ala. 295, 45 So. 73.

But there can be no ratification so as to entitle the addressee to maintain an action for a breach of the contract where the sender of the message did not act as his agent. Heathcoat v. Western Union Tel. Co., 156 Ala. 339, 47 So. 139.

This rule applies in mental anguish cases where the message is sent for the purpose of notifying the addressee of the illness or death of a relative. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Coffin, 88 Tex. 94, 30 S. W. 896; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531, 12 S. W. 857, 16 Am. St. Rep. 920, 6 L. R. A. 844.

It is not material who paid for the transmission of the message if it was sent for the benefit of the addressee. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Beringer, 84 Tex. 38, 19 S. W. 336.

Nature of benefit to addressee.—It has been held that the message need not be for the sole and exclusive benefit of the addressee, but that it is sufficient if the company knows or is chargeable with knowledge of the fact that it will be of substantial benefit to him (McLeod v. Pacific Tel. Co., 52 Ore. 22, 94 Pac. 568, 95 Pac. 1009, 15 L. R. A. N. S. 810, 18 L. R. A. N. S. 954); although it has been held that the contract must have been made for the benefit of the addressee and that it is not sufficient merely that he would be incidentally benefited by the carrying out of the contract (*Postal Tel. company is not otherwise informed thereof.<sup>32</sup> Cases may arise, however, where the addressee is neither party nor privy to the contract of transmission nor within the application of the rule allowing a right of action to the person beneficially interested,<sup>33</sup> as where the sender did not act as the agent or for the benefit of the addressee,<sup>34</sup> and in such cases it is clear that he cannot sue upon the contract of transmission;<sup>35</sup> and the circumstances may also be such that the cause of action is necessarily in tort.<sup>36</sup> But the fact that the addressee may not be entitled to sue on the contract does not ordinarily affect the right of action but merely the form of remedy,<sup>37</sup> for as previously shown a breach of duty in regard to the transmission or delivery of a message is not only a breach of the contract but also a breach of a public duty,<sup>38</sup> and the addressee may maintain his action for the damages sustained by reason of the breach of such duty;<sup>39</sup> but in such cases where there is no contractual relation between the company and the addressee the latter must sue in tort and not in contract.<sup>40</sup>

which would be available in case the action was brought by the agent,<sup>43</sup> and the addressee may be entitled to sue as an undisclosed principal of the sender.<sup>44</sup> In the application of the rule a distinction has, however, been made between cases relating to business messages and cases where damages are claimed for mental anguish,<sup>45</sup> it being held that there can be no recovery of damages for mental anguish by the undisclosed principal;<sup>46</sup> but this rule is said not to involve any denial of the general right of an undisclosed principal to sue but merely a question of the character of damages recoverable,<sup>47</sup> it being held that the principal can recover only what the agent if suing in his own name might recover,<sup>48</sup> and that damages for mental anguish to a person whose existence and whose interest in the message was not disclosed cannot be said to have been within the contemplation of the parties,<sup>49</sup> but that, although he cannot recover for mental anguish, he may recover nominal damages or the price paid for the transmission of the message.<sup>50</sup> It has, however, been held that the addressee may recover for mental anguish where he sues on the contract as the principal of the sender, although the agency was not disclosed.<sup>51</sup>

If the agent was not authorized to send the message which was sent, as where he was instructed to send a certain message prepared by plaintiff but instead of so doing wrote out and sent a different message, and plaintiff's interest therein was not disclosed to defendant, plaintiff cannot recover for negligence in regard to its transmission or delivery. b. Of Addressee. Since the undisclosed principal of the sender may sue;<sup>52</sup> a person may of course sue where he is the undisclosed principal of both the sender and the addressee,<sup>53</sup> but it has been held that the action cannot be maintained by one who is the undisclosed principal of the addressee alone.<sup>54</sup>

4. AGENT. An agent who sends a message in his own name on behalf of an undisclosed principal may sue in his own name for a breach of the contract of transmission,<sup>55</sup> and may recover the entire damages, but as trustee for his principal.<sup>56</sup> So also where a message is addressed to an agent personally and the interest of his principal is not disclosed, the agent may sue;<sup>57</sup> but the agent cannot sue for damages due to an error in transmitting to him a message from his principal where the agency is disclosed and the agent acts under the message in the name of and for his principal.<sup>58</sup>

C. Pleading—1. COMPLAINT—a. In General.<sup>59</sup> As in other civil actions the complaint must allege every fact essential to plaintiff's cause of action,<sup>60</sup> and must therefore show the existence of a duty owing by defendant to plaintiff and a breach of that duty,<sup>61</sup> it being insufficient to allege a non-performance of certain acts without showing any duty or obligation on the part of defendant to perform the same.<sup>62</sup> The complaint must also set out distinctly the circumstances which create the liability of defendant,<sup>63</sup> and must allege facts and not legal conclusions,<sup>64</sup> and the facts relied on must be alleged positively and distinctly and not stated by way of argument or inference;<sup>65</sup> but it is not necessary to state the evidence of such facts,<sup>66</sup> or to anticipate and negative matters of defense,<sup>67</sup> or to negative the existence of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.<sup>68</sup> The complaint must, however, allege or show a compliance on the part of plaintiff with any conditions precedent,<sup>69</sup> such as a compliance with a statutory requirement that claims for damages shall be presented within a certain time,<sup>70</sup> or compliance with a stipulation in the contract of transmission to this effect where such a stipulation is regarded as a condition precedent;<sup>71</sup> but it is ordinarily held that such stipulations are not conditions precedent but are conditions subsequent,<sup>72</sup> and that a compliance therewith need not be alleged in the complaint.<sup>73</sup> If the message in question was a Sunday message the complaint must allege or show that it related to a matter of charity or necessity,<sup>74</sup> and if it related to a transaction in futures which might or might not be illegal the complaint must show that it related to a legal transaction.<sup>75</sup> In cases where defendant accepted the message in question for transmission the complaint need not allege that the charges were paid or guaranteed,<sup>76</sup> or that the message was presented in an allegation that defendant, a telephone company, failed to notify plaintiffs that a certain party wished to talk with them is insufficient, without some allegation that defendant undertook or agreed to serve plaintiffs or that plaintiffs paid or were ready and willing to pay defendant for its services. *Lewis v. Revenue stamp.—It has been held that it need not be alleged in an action for failure to deliver a message that the message had a revenue stamp affixed as required by statute, as this is a matter of defense which need not be anticipated. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henley, 157 Ind. 90, 60 N. E. 682. But see Kirk v. Western Union Tel. Co., 90 Fed. 809, holding that such an allegation is necessary where the action is for refusal to transmit the message.

Failure to give telephone connection.—Thus

Delivery limits.—The complaint in an action for failure to deliver a message need not allege that the addressee lived or was to be found within defendant's free delivery limits, since if defendant has established such limits and the addressee does not live within the same this is a matter of defense. *Western Union Tel. writing,<sup>77</sup> or during the company's regular office hours;<sup>78</sup> but if the action is for a refusal to receive and transmit the message, the complaint must show some duty or obligation on the part of defendant to do so.<sup>79</sup> It is not necessary for the complaint to set out or state the language of the message in question,<sup>80</sup> but if the message was in cipher the complaint should show the translation or meaning thereof.<sup>81</sup> The complaint may be amended provided the amendment does not set up a new cause of action.<sup>82</sup>

b. Allegations as to Damages — (1) IN GENERAL. A complaint alleging a valid contract of transmission between plaintiff and defendant and a breach thereof by the latter, although it does not show any substantial damages resulting from the breach, will warrant a recovery of nominal damages;<sup>83</sup> but in order to recover substantial compensatory damages the complaint must show that such damages were sustained.<sup>84</sup> General damages, such as naturally result from the act complained of or which the law implies therefrom, need not be specially pleaded but may be recovered under a general averment of damages,<sup>85</sup> and the price paid for transmission if alleged to have been paid is not special damage but may be recovered, it has been held, under a general allegation of damages;<sup>86</sup> but in order to recover what are known as special damages such damages must be specially pleaded,<sup>87</sup> and the allegations of the complaint must be sufficient properly to apprise defendant of the nature and amount of the damages claimed;<sup>88</sup> but, although the special damages claimed are defectively pleaded or are too remote or otherwise not recoverable, the complaint is not subject to general demurrer if it would warrant a recovery of general or of nominal damages.<sup>89</sup> If plaintiff seeks to increase his measure of damages by proof that at the time the message was accepted by the company the latter had notice from some source other than the language of the message itself of its importance and of the consequences which would result from a failure duly to deliver it,<sup>90</sup> he must allege such special notice;<sup>91</sup> but it is not necessary to allege such notice where the complaint sets out the message and the language of the message is sufficient to charge the company with notice of its urgency and importance.<sup>92</sup>

the rule in most jurisdictions seems to be that exemplary damages need not be claimed eo nomine but may be recovered under a claim for damages generally.<sup>95</sup> The complaint must, however, allege facts sufficient to warrant a recovery of such damages.<sup>96</sup>

c. In Mental Anguish Cases. In mental anguish cases, except in so far as affected by the necessity of particular allegations, the general rules previously stated apply.<sup>97</sup> Damages for mental anguish due to negligence in the transmission or delivery of a message announcing the illness or death of a near relative, whereby plaintiff is prevented from seeing the relative before death or from being present at the funeral, are the natural result of such negligence and are therefore general damages which may be recovered under a general allegation of damages;<sup>98</sup> but, where the relationship between the parties is remote, damages for mental anguish are special and must be specially pleaded.<sup>99</sup> So also if plaintiff relies on any special circumstances as elements of such damages, he must allege them,<sup>1</sup> such as having to leave the corpse of a relative on a depot platform because he was not met at a railroad station,<sup>2</sup> or the missing of a funeral as well as a burial, as alleged in the complaint;<sup>3</sup> but allegations of this character if made should not be stricken out if they are relevant to the cause of action stated.<sup>4</sup> Since in order to recover for mental anguish due to plaintiff being prevented from being present at the death-bed or funeral of a relative, it must be affirmatively shown that but for defendant's negligence he not only could but would have gone,<sup>5</sup> it has been held that this must be alleged in the complaint,<sup>6</sup> although it is not necessary to set forth the evidence of such fact.<sup>7</sup> If the message was not of such a character as to apprise defendant that mental anguish would be likely to result from negligence in regard to its transmission or delivery, it must be alleged that defendant

Under the South Carolina statute in actions ex delicto for actual and for punitive damages, plaintiff is not required to make separate allegations setting up such damages. Machen v. Western Union Tel. Co., 63 S. C. 363, 41 S. E. 448; Butler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 62 S. C. 222, 40 S. E. 162.

Sufficiency of allegations.—A complaint is not sufficient to warrant a recovery of exemplary damages where it merely contains vague and indefinite allegations of negligence (Daniel v. Western Union Tel. Co., 61 Tex. 452, 48 Am. Rep. 305), or even of gross negligence unaccompanied by any allegations of facts which would warrant a recovery of such damages (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Godsey, (Tex. App. 1890) 16 S. W. 789); but it is sufficient where it alleges "wilful negligence" (Hartzog v. Western Union Tel. Co., (Miss. 1902) 34 So. 361), or alleges a "wanton, wilful and grossly negligent" failure to deliver a message (Butler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 62 S. C. 222, 40 S. E. 162), or that such failure was due to "gross negligence, carelessness, wantonness and reckless mismanagement" (Machen v. Western Union Tel. Co., 63 S. C. 363, 41 S. E. 448), provided it states with sufficient definiteness the acts so characterized (see Machen v. Western Union Tel. Co., supra).

Sufficiency of allegations.—While it is not necessary that plaintiff should allege in express terms that he could and would have gone, there must be such allegations of fact as necessarily include this statement, and it is not sufficient to allege that by reason of defendant's negligence plaintiff was unable to leave until too late to be present at the funeral or that he could have been present if the message had been delivered within a reasonable time. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bell, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 462, 92 S. W. 1036. But see Western Union Tel. Co. v. Eskridge, 7 Ind. App. 208, 33 N. E. 238, holding that it is sufficient where the complaint alleges that by reason of defendant's negligence plaintiff was "prevented" from going.

had notice of the special circumstances giving rise to such damages,<sup>8</sup> and if the relationship between the parties was not sufficiently close to give rise to a presumption of mental anguish, it must be alleged that there were special relations of intimacy or affection,<sup>9</sup> and that defendant had notice of such special relations.<sup>10</sup>

2. ANSWER. A general denial puts in issue not only the negligence or other breach of duty relied on, but also the happening of any damage as a proximate result thereof.<sup>11</sup> Special matters of affirmative defense must, however, be specially pleaded.<sup>12</sup>

D. Issues, Proof, and Variance. Only such evidence is admissible as is justified by the pleadings,<sup>13</sup> and if plaintiff alleges a particular contract and a breach thereof, evidence of a different contract is inadmissible.<sup>14</sup> Special damages cannot be proved unless pleaded,<sup>15</sup> and such damages must be proved as alleged.<sup>16</sup> So evidence is not admissible to show special damages other than those pleaded,<sup>17</sup> or of a particular element of such damages which is not alleged in the complaint;<sup>18</sup> nor is evidence of extrinsic notice of facts which would give rise to special damages admissible unless pleaded.<sup>19</sup> So in a mental anguish case where the family relationship between the parties is too remote to give rise to a presumption of mental anguish, evidence of any special relations of intimacy or affection is not

Sufficiency of allegations.—In an action against a telegraph company for delay in delivering a telegram, an allegation that “notwithstanding the defendant had every reason to know the message was important” is sufficient to apprise defendant of plaintiff’s intention to prove notice of reasons why the message was important. E. Evidence — 1. PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF — a. In General. As in other civil actions the burden is upon plaintiff to establish his case,<sup>23</sup> and to show the existence of a contract of transmission or duty owing to him by defendant and a breach thereof or negligence on the part of defendant,<sup>24</sup> and that such negligence or default was the proximate cause of the injury complained of.<sup>25</sup> So in an action for non-delivery it has been held that the burden is upon plaintiff to show that the addressee lived within the company's free delivery limits,<sup>26</sup> and that at the time he was at the place to which the message was addressed, so that it could have been delivered.<sup>27</sup> It is ordinarily held, however, that unless there

Prima facie case.—In an action for mental anguish caused by delay of a telegram, whereby plaintiff was prevented from attending her mother's funeral, evidence that according to train schedules plaintiff could have reached the place of the funeral in time, if the telegram had been promptly delivered, made out a prima facie case that she could have arrived in time, and plaintiff was not bound to negative the contingencies of wrecks, washouts, or other accidents which might have delayed her arrival. *Western Union Tel. The presumption may be rebutted by testimony, but the mere fact that plaintiff did not attend the funeral, if explained by him as being due to his sudden illness, is not conclusive that he did not suffer mental anguish, but raises at most a question for the jury. *Western Union Tel. 2. ADMISSIBILITY — a. In General. As in other civil actions any evidence if justified by the pleadings,<sup>61</sup> and otherwise competent, is admissible if it is relevant to any of the material matters in issue;<sup>62</sup> but evidence which is immaterial or irrelevant is not admissible.<sup>63</sup> The message itself wherever relevant is admissible in evidence,<sup>64</sup> and in an action for delay in delivery the message delivered to the addressee is admissible,<sup>65</sup> it being unnecessary to produce the original message filed for transmission by the sender;<sup>66</sup> and in an action for delay in delivery the delivery sheet is also admissible after proof of the genuineness of the signature.<sup>67</sup> The general rules as to best and secondary evidence<sup>68</sup> apply in regard to the admission of copies of messages or of records relating thereto,<sup>69</sup> secondary evidence of the contents of a message being admissible if the original is shown to have been lost or destroyed.<sup>70</sup> While it has been held that the general rule applies<sup>71</sup> that parol evidence is not admissible to contradict or vary the written contract of transmission,<sup>72</sup> evidence is not inadmissible on this ground that defendant's transmitting agent was informed by the sender as to the character and importance of the message or the whereabouts of the addressee;<sup>73</sup> and it has also been held that parol evidence is admissible of an understanding between the sender and defendant's transmitting agent as to the words "care of" in the address,<sup>74</sup> or of the purpose of writing the word "day" across the stipulations

79. Alabama.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rowell, 153 Ala. 295, 45 So. 73, holding that evidence is admissible of a telephone conversation between plaintiff, the addressee, and defendant's agent tending to show that due diligence was not exercised in delivering the message.

Iowa.—Evans v. Western Union Tel. Co., 102 Iowa 219, 71 N. W. 219, statement made to sender of message on calling for an answer that the message had not been sent, admissible as a part of the same transaction.

Michigan.—Carland v. Western Union Tel. Co., 118 Mich. 369, 76 N. W. 762, 74 Am. St. Rep. 394, 43 L. R. A. 280, statement of transmitting operator made two days after the message should have been sent that it had never been received at the office of destination, admissible to show non-delivery.

South Carolina.—Fail v. Western Union Tel. Co., 80 S. C. 207, 60 S. E. 697, 61 S. E. 258 (declaration by defendant's agent that he had sent the message in question); Glover v. Western Union Tel. Co., 78 S. C. 502, 59 S. E. 526 (evidence of declarations of defendant's messenger when delivering a message to a person other than the addressee, admissible as part of the res gesta as tending to show whether the delivery to such person was negligent or in wilful disregard of duty).

Texas.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Simmons, (Civ. App. 1906) 93 S. W. 686 (statement made by operator on refusing to accept the message for transmission, admissible as evidence of the motive actuating him); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 29 Tex. Civ.

App. 591, 69 S. W. 427 (statement of agent on delivering message that he had received it the day before); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Davis, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 427, 59 S. W. 46 (evidence that defendant's agent when consulted as to the advisability of sending a second message said that it was an important death message and would be delivered, admissible to show defendant's knowledge of the nature and importance of the message); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reeves, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 37, 27 S. W. 318 (evidence that plaintiff after sending a message and receiving no reply suggested that it be repeated and was informed by defendant's agent that it had gone through all right); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bennett, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 558, 21 S. W. 699 (evidence of declarations of defendant's messenger as to his inability to find plaintiff, admissible against defendant in action for delay in delivery).

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Telegraphs and Telephones," § 62.

To explain conduct of plaintiff.—Evidence of a declaration by defendant's transmitting agent made to the sender after the transmission of the message that it had been delivered is admissible to explain the subsequent conduct of plaintiff. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lydon, 82 Tex. 364, 18 S. W. 701.

80. Alabama.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510, 7 So. 419, 18 Am. St. Rep. 148 (holding that a declaration by defendant's operator at the terminal office made to plaintiff the day after the message was received as to his reason for not delivering the message as soon as received is not admissible against defendant); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542, 4 So. 844 (statements of defendant's agent not made in the performance of any duty relating to the transmission of the message, not admissible against defendant).

c. Evidence as to Negligence.<sup>81</sup> Subject to the general rules above stated,<sup>82</sup> any evidence is admissible which tends to establish the negligence relied on,<sup>83</sup> such as evidence that defendant's agent or messenger was informed where the addressee could be found,<sup>84</sup> or was directed to a person who could give such information,<sup>85</sup> and that the information if requested would have been given,<sup>86</sup> that operator of an error in transcribing a message, the admission being made several days subsequently, not a part of the res gestæ.

Texas.—Southwestern Tel., etc., Co. v. Gotcher, 93 Tex. 114, 53 S. W. 686 (statement made by agent several days after the transaction in question); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wofford, (Civ. App. 1897) 42 S. W. 119 (statement made by agent several days subsequently as to why message was not delivered).

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Telegraphs and Telephones," § 62.

Rule stated.—The declarations or admissions of an agent of a telegraph company are not admissible against the company unless made within the scope of the agent's authority and while in the performance of his duty or so near in point of time to the main fact as to form a part of the res gestæ. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Way, 83 Ala. 542, 4 So. 844.

A. 728; Western Union Tel. Co. v. James, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 503, 73 S. W. 79; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Drake, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 601, 38 S. W. 632; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hearne, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 67, 26 S. W. 478.

Evidence held admissible.—In an action for non-delivery a city directory giving the addressee's name and address is admissible as evidence to show negligence. Woods v. Western Union Tel. Co., 148 N. C. 1, 61 S. E. 653, 128 Am. St. Rep. 581. Where defendant seeks to excuse non-delivery on the ground that plaintiff was an obscure person and little known evidence is admissible of the business plaintiff was engaged in and the means employed to advertise the same, and he may introduce printed cards, letter-heads, and envelopes used by him in such business. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson, 69 Tex. 739, 7 S. W. 653. Where the message is addressed to a third party and requests him to notify plaintiff, proof of the whereabouts of plaintiff is relevant. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Crawford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 75 S. W. 843. Where defendant received and agreed to transmit a message, knowing that its wires were down and not informing the sender of the fact, plaintiff may show that previously and under similar circumstances defendant had caused messages to be sent over the wires of another company, which it did not attempt to do in this case. Pacific Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Fleischer, 66 Fed. 899, 14 C. C. A. 166. In case of an error in transmitting a word in the message, where it appears that there was some difficulty in the reading of the message as written by plaintiff, plaintiff may testify what word was intended where it was so read by him to the transmitting agent. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hearne, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 67, 26 S. W. 478. In an action for non-delivery of a telegram to plaintiff, the court properly permitted the sender of the telegram to testify that, if it had been reported to him that the message could not be delivered to plaintiff, because the initials in the address were not the same as plaintiff's, he would have had the initials changed. Arkansas, etc., R. Co. v. Stroude, 82 Ark. 117, 100 S. W. 760. Evidence is also admissible of the habits and reputation of defendant's agent to whom the message was delivered for transmission (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hearne, supra). But see NEGLIGENCE, 29 Cyc. 610; of the time which it would take to deliver the message to the addressee at the place where he was at work (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Drake, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 601, 38 S. W. 632); of precautionary measures taken by plaintiff, the addressee, to secure a prompt delivery of the expected message (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Drake, supra); that plaintiff's employees were authorized to and did receive messages addressed to him (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Moran, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 113 S. W. 625); that defendant's agent was informed that a message was expected and requested to deliver it at once (Bailey v. Western Union Tel. Co., 150 N. C. 316, 63 S. E. 1044); that a second message was sent to defendant's operator requesting that the first message be promptly delivered (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Frith, 105 Tenn. 167, 58 S. W. 118); that plaintiff after waiting for two days for an answer to his message sent another message to a different person at the same place and received a reply in less than twenty-four hours (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lydon, 82 Tex. 364, 18 S. W. 701); and that plaintiff gave instructions as to where he could be found if a telegram came for him to a man whom he saw using the telegraph instrument, although he did not know his name or that he was defendant's agent (Bolton v. Western Union Tel. Co., 76 S. C. 529, 57 S. E. 543).

86. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Waller, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 72 S. W. 264.

the addressee was generally well known in the community<sup>87</sup> or was known to particular witnesses,<sup>88</sup> and that no inquiry was made of such witnesses in regard to him,<sup>89</sup> that he lived near defendant's office,<sup>90</sup> that he had received other telegrams which had been delivered at the same place where he then resided,<sup>91</sup> that others searching for him at the same time found him without difficulty,<sup>92</sup> and that if inquiry had been made at the place where he worked information as to his whereabouts would have been given;<sup>93</sup> but evidence of acts of negligence on the part of defendant other than those relied on is irrelevant and inadmissible.<sup>94</sup> On the other hand any evidence is admissible on behalf of defendant which tends to show the exercise of due care or the absence of negligence on its part;<sup>95</sup> but in an action for non-delivery the testimony of witnesses living in the same place as the addressee that they did not know him is not competent,<sup>96</sup> nor is evidence admissible of matters which would furnish no justification or excuse for the negligence or default complained of.<sup>97</sup> Where one of the defenses is or may be contributory negligence plaintiff may prove any facts which tend to explain his conduct and excuse or relieve him from the imputation of negligence.<sup>98</sup>

d. Evidence as to Notice. Since the question of damages is materially affected by defendant's knowledge or lack of knowledge of special circumstances from which special damages might arise,<sup>99</sup> evidence is ordinarily admissible under proper allegations to show that at the time the message was filed for transmission

But if plaintiff was not within the delivery limits so that defendant was under no duty to deliver the message at the place where he was, evidence that if defendant had informed plaintiff's foreman the latter would have informed defendant of plaintiff's whereabouts is inadmissible. *Western Union Tel. Evidence held inadmissible.—Evidence of defendant's office hours at the place to which the message was sent is inadmissible where there was an express agreement that the message should be delivered on the night when it was sent. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hill, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 252. In an action for delay in delivering a message evidence is not admissible that the business of the office to which the message was addressed was insufficient to justify the employment of a messenger to deliver messages. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510, 7 So. 419, 18 Am. St. Rep. 148. In an action for delay in delivering a message evidence that in making a copy of the original telegram it was so blurred that in addressing the envelope in which it was to be delivered to the addressee his name was by mistake written "Jackson" instead of "Johnson" and that this was the cause of the delay is inadmissible since it shows no reasonable excuse for defendant's negligence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Johnson, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 48, 28 S. W. 124.

98. Aiken v. Western Union Tel. Co., 69 Iowa 31, 28 N. W. 419, 58 Am. Rep. 210; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lydon, 82 Tex. 364, 18 S. W. 701; Erie Tel., etc., Co. v. Grimes, 82 Tex. 89, 17 S. W. 831.

defendant's agent was informed as to the importance or urgency of the message,<sup>1</sup> or that the company was otherwise informed or chargeable with such notice.<sup>2</sup>

e. Evidence as to Damages. Provided it relates to the particular damages claimed in the complaint,<sup>3</sup> any evidence otherwise competent is admissible which tends to show the nature or amount of the damages sustained by plaintiff by reason of the negligence or default complained of;<sup>4</sup> and in order to show the existence or proximate character of such damages the testimony of the other party to the message or of some third person as to what he would have done in case the message had been duly transmitted and delivered has in some cases been held admissible,<sup>5</sup> it being often the only means of showing such facts;<sup>6</sup>

However, except in mental anguish cases (see infra, VIII, E, 2, f), this does not seem to be the general rule (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Watson, 94 Ga. 202, 21 S. E. 457, 47

Am. St. Rep. 151; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 157 Ind. 64, 60 N. E. 674, 1080, 54 L. R. Western Union Tel. Co.*, 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 487, 7 Abb. N. Cas. 151)]. In the Ferguson case, supra, the court said: "The plaintiff says he would have gone. But would he? The jury found so as a fact wholly from the plaintiff's present opinion on a past condition of things that never existed but is now summoned before the mind by conjecture. Thus the 'mental anguish' doctrine not only departs from principle in regard to measuring compensatory damages, but also warps the rules of evidence which forbid a witness to testify what he would or would not have done in a stated contingency. Weed v. Martin, 89 Ala. 587, 8 So. 132: Would you have put the credit on the note if the money had not been paid? Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 104, 4 Am. 6. Doster v. Western Union Tel. Co., 77 S. C. 56, 59, 57 S. E. 671, where the court

but evidence is not admissible on the issue of damages, either on behalf of plaintiff or defendant, which is not relevant to such issue.<sup>7</sup>

f. In Mental Anguish Cases. Although mental anguish is presumed where plaintiff, in consequence of the telegraph company's negligence, is unable to attend the death-bed or the funeral of a near relative,<sup>8</sup> the direct testimony of plaintiff, in addition, that he suffered such anguish is competent,<sup>9</sup> and conduct and expressions of plaintiff indicating his grief, to the extent that it resulted from the negligence of the company, may also be shown.<sup>10</sup> On the other hand defendant may show any facts indicating that plaintiff could not have suffered mental anguish, or that he suffered little;<sup>11</sup> and any testimony is relevant which will assist the jury in distinguishing between the grief which plaintiff has suffered because of the death of the relative and that which he has suffered in consequence of the negligence of the telegraph company.<sup>12</sup> Evidence that plaintiff, in a mental anguish case, entertained a great affection for deceased is relevant, as bearing on the extent of the anguish suffered,<sup>13</sup> particularly in rebuttal of evidence introduced by defendant tending to show the absence of such affection and consequent suffering as would ordinarily be presumed from the relationship between the parties;<sup>14</sup> but the fact that deceased entertained a great affection for plaintiff would seem to be irrelevant, as it is not the mental anguish of deceased which is in question.<sup>15</sup> So also it has been held that evidence is not admissible of statements made by deceased prior to his death expressing a desire to see plaintiff said: "Testimony of this kind . . . is admissible from necessity."

Limitation of rule.—The rule has been stated that in mental anguish cases plaintiff may testify to the effect that he did suffer mental anguish after the circumstances from which such suffering might arise have been brought out, but that he cannot testify as to his peculiar apprehensions, fears, and conclusions since they might be due to individual temperament. *Roberts v. Where the family relationship is remote so that mental anguish is not presumed it must be proved and evidence of the existence of such suffering is of course admissible. Alexander v. Western Union Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 75, 53 S. E. 657.

11. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Terrell, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 60, 30 S. W. 649. But see Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lydon, 82 Tex. 364, 18 S. W. 701, holding that, in a case where plaintiff was prevented from seeing his mother before her death, it was not error to admit testimony that he was his mother's favorite child, since, although such testimony related to the feelings of the mother, it might properly be considered by the jury in connec-or disappointment at his absence,<sup>16</sup> even where such statements were communicated to plaintiff upon his arrival;<sup>17</sup> but in a few cases evidence of such statements made by deceased and communicated to plaintiff has been held to be admissible.<sup>18</sup> In an action by the sender of a message the addressee may testify as to what he would have done in case the message had been duly delivered;<sup>19</sup> and in an action by the addressee he may testify as to what he himself would have done,<sup>20</sup> and may show by the testimony of the sender of the original message what the latter would have done in response to plaintiff's action.<sup>21</sup> Where it is alleged that the non-delivery or delay of a message prevented plaintiff from being present at the death-bed or burial of a relative, plaintiff may be asked what was the cause of his failure to be present,<sup>22</sup> and evidence is admissible which tends to explain any tion with other circumstances in determining the feelings of plaintiff toward his parent.

Reasons for rule.—Evidence of such statements made by deceased is inadmissible because it is irrelevant to the true inquiry which is the effect produced upon plaintiff himself by the negligence of defendant, and also because it is calculated unduly to excite the sympathy of the jury. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Waller, 96 Tex. 589, 74 S. W. 751, 97 Am. St. Rep. 936 [reversing (Civ. App. 1903) 72 S. W. 264].

18. Potter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 138 Iowa 406, 116 N. W. 130 (holding that evidence that deceased before her death had called for plaintiff, her son, and wondered why he did not come, and that this fact was communicated to him upon his arrival, is admissible as bearing upon the amount of damages to be awarded); Whitten v. Western Union Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 361, 54 S. E. 289 (holding that while it is not competent for plaintiff himself to testify that he was told that deceased before his death expressed a desire to see him, as this would be hearsay, the testimony of the person giving such information to plaintiff is competent upon the question of damages, since the knowledge of such facts would naturally increase plaintiff's mental suffering).

19. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Benson, 159 Ala. 254, 48 So. 712 (holding that in an action for mental anguish due to plaintiff's being deprived of the presence and consolation of the addressee, the latter may testify that if the message had been promptly delivered he would have gone and could have arrived in time); Carter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 374, 54 S. E. 274 (holding that in an action for mental anguish due to the non-delivery of a message summoning a physician, the physician may testify that if the message had been delivered he would have gone at once); Bright v. Western Union Tel. Co., 132 N. C. 317, 43 S. E. 841 (holding that in an action for mental anguish due to plaintiff's being deprived of the aid and consolation of the addressee, the latter may testify that if the message had been delivered he would have gone to plaintiff); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Karr, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 60, 24 S. W. 302 (holding that in an action based upon a failure of the addressee to meet plaintiff at a station as requested, the addressee may testify that if the message had been delivered to him he would have met plaintiff). Where the message directs the addressee to notify a third person of the death of a member of the latter's family, in an action by the latter for delay in delivering the message to the addressee, the addressee may testify that if the message had been promptly delivered he would at once have notified plaintiff as directed. Doster v. Western Union Tel. Co., 77 S. C. 56, 57 S. E. 671.

20. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Norris, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 43, 60 S. W. 982, holding that in an action by the addressee for the non-delivery of a death message he may testify that if the message had been delivered he would have wired requesting a postponement of the burial and then taken a train so as to be present.

How message understood.—In an action for non-delivery to plaintiff of a message announcing the death of his mother and stating: "If you can reach here by two o'clock, come," it is not error to allow plaintiff to testify that he would have understood the message to mean two o'clock of the following day. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 591, 69 S. W. 427.

21. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Norris, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 43, 60 S. W. 982, holding that in an action by the addressee of a death message where he has testified that if the message had been delivered to him he would have wired back to the sender of the original message requesting postponement of the burial, the latter may testify that if he had received such a request he would have postponed the burial until plaintiff arrived.

failure or delay on his part in going in response to such a message.<sup>23</sup> Where defendant sets up as a defense that plaintiff was not financially able to go, plaintiff may show in rebuttal that his employer was indebted to him.<sup>24</sup>

3. WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY. As in other civil actions,<sup>25</sup> plaintiff must establish by a preponderance of evidence the material facts in issue essential to his cause of action,<sup>26</sup> such as the breach of contract or negligence on the part of defendant,<sup>27</sup> that such negligence or default was the proximate cause of the injury complained of,<sup>28</sup> the damages sustained by reason thereof,<sup>29</sup> and where exemplary damages

W. 701 (holding that where plaintiff had received a message announcing the illness of his mother and had wired back stating that if she was no better he would come to her, evidence is admissible that he inquired of defendant's agent and was told that his message had been delivered which, as he received no reply, induced him to believe that his mother's condition was not serious); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Johnsey, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 109 S. W. 251 (holding that where, after receiving a message announcing the death of plaintiff's mother, he failed to take the first train it was proper to permit him to state that he telephoned for a cab in which to go to the train and was informed that the cab had gone to the train and that he did not have time to make the train).

IN GENERAL. As in other civil actions,<sup>35</sup> questions of law,<sup>36</sup> including the construction of the contract of transmission,<sup>37</sup> or of other writings involved in the case,<sup>38</sup> are for the court, and questions of fact are for the jury.<sup>39</sup> The case should be submitted to the jury if there is any evidence legally sufficient to sustain a verdict for the cause of action alleged,<sup>40</sup> or to sustain the defense relied on,<sup>41</sup> and the evidence is conflicting or such that different conclusions might reasonably be drawn therefrom;<sup>42</sup> but if there is no evidence in support of an essential matter in issue, or the evidence is clear and without conflict, the court may grant a nonsuit or direct a verdict,<sup>43</sup> and ought

Rule stated.—If there is sufficient evidence, if believed by the jury, to sustain a verdict in favor of plaintiff, the case should be submitted to the jury, and it is error to direct a verdict for defendant. Box v. Postal Tel.-Cable Co., 165 Fed. 138, 91 C. C. A. 172.

43. Brumfield v. Western Union Tel. Co., 97 Iowa 693, 66 N. W. 898 (holding that in an action for delay in delivering a message where there was no evidence as to when the message was received by defendant for transmission or as to when it reached the office at the place of destination, there was an entire absence of evidence from which the jury could find negligence in regard to its delivery and that the court properly directed a verdict for defendant); Hartstein v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 Wis. 531, 62 N. W. 412 (holding that where there was no evidence to show that defendant's negligence was the cause of the injury complained of, a nonsuit was properly granted).

Separate cause of action.—Where the complaint states two causes of action, one for exemplary damages for a wilful wrong and the other for compensatory damages for negligence, and there is no evidence of wilfulness, the court may grant a nonsuit as to this if requested, to dispose of the case in this manner without submitting such issues to the jury.<sup>44</sup>

2. PARTICULAR ISSUES — a. In General. In accordance with the general rules above stated,<sup>45</sup> it is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury whether the person receiving the message for transmission was an agent of defendant,<sup>46</sup> whether defendant was negligent,<sup>47</sup> as in regard to the transmission<sup>48</sup> or delivery of a message,<sup>49</sup> cause of action leaving the cause of action for negligence to be submitted to the jury (Roberts v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 S. C. 520, 53 S. E. 985, 114 Am. St. Rep. 100); but in such cases if there is any evidence of negligence defendant is not entitled to a nonsuit on the whole case (Poulnot v. Western Union Tel. Co., 69 S. C. 545, 48 S. E. 622; Young v. Western Union Tel. Co., 65 S. C. 93, 43 S. E. 448).

44. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Elliott, 131 Ky. 340, 115 S. W. 228, 22 L. R. A. N. S. 761, holding that, although negligence is presumed from a failure to deliver a message, yet where defendant shows that it used all reasonable diligence to make delivery the presumption of negligence is overcome, and if plaintiff introduces no evidence tending to show negligence the court should direct a verdict in favor of defendant.

It is error to submit an issue where there is no conflict in the evidence relating thereto and the evidence is conclusive on such issue (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Housewright, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 23 S. W. 824), or to submit to the jury a ground of liability in support of which no evidence has been introduced (Cutts v. Western Union Tel. Co., 71 Wis. 46, 36 N. W. 627).

Whether defendant had an office at the place to which the message was addressed, or whether it was necessary to deliver the message to a connecting line in order to reach its destination, is a question for the jury where the evidence is conflicting. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Jones, 81 Tex. 271, 16 S. W. 1006.

Time shown by delivery sheet.—If, in an action for delay in delivering a telegram, there was evidence contradicting the genuineness of the signature to the delivery sheet which was put in evidence, it was a jury question whether the telegram was received at the time therein specified. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Northcutt, 158 Ala. 539, 48 So. 553, 132 Am. St. Rep. 38.

How message was addressed.—In an action against a telegraph company to recover damages for negligent delay in the delivery of a telegram sent to plaintiffs, a copy of which as delivered was addressed to plaintiffs' residence, the questions whether a paper shown a witness and alleged to be the original message, purporting to be addressed to plaintiffs' business address, was the original message, and how the same was addressed, were for the jury. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lehman, 105 Md. 442, 66 Atl. 266.

The authority of a person other than the addressee to receive a message addressed to the latter is a question for the jury. Glover v. Western Union Tel. Co., 78 S. C. 502, 59 S. E. 526.

Notice of long distance telephone call.—In an action against a telephone company for or an error in its transmission,<sup>50</sup> and whether such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury complained of.<sup>51</sup> Where exemplary damages are claimed it is a question for the jury whether defendant's conduct was of the gross, wanton, or wilful character essential to a recovery of such damages,<sup>52</sup> and where the circumstances are such as to raise a presumption of negligence placing the burden of proof upon defendant,<sup>53</sup> it is a question for the jury whether defendant has shown facts sufficient to rebut the presumption.<sup>54</sup> It is also a question for the jury whether defendant had notice of the nature and importance of the message so as to justify a recovery of special damages,<sup>55</sup> or whether the message itself was sufficient to charge the company with such notice,<sup>56</sup> unless its character and importance clearly appear upon the face of the message;<sup>57</sup> and also whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence,<sup>58</sup> or after the discovery of defendant's negligence might by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence have avoided or lessened the resulting damages.<sup>59</sup>

b. Stipulations or Regulations Affecting Liability. The reasonableness of stipulations in the contract of transmission limiting the liability of the company or of regulations affecting the conduct of its business, as in regard to its office hours, has ordinarily been held to be a question for the court,<sup>60</sup> although it has failing to secure an answer to a call over a long distance line, it is a question for the jury whether defendant exercised due diligence by merely telephoning to the place where the person called was working and making no other effort to find him on receiving an answer from such place to the effect that he was not there. Southwestern Tel., etc., Co. v. McCoy, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 114 S. W. 387.

Whether a failure to notify the sender of a message of the company's inability to find the addressee and deliver the message is negligence is a question for the jury. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Davis, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 51 S. W. 258.

Directing verdict.—If there is more than a scintilla of evidence tending to show that defendant exercised due care and diligence in regard to the delivery of a message, the court should not direct a verdict for plaintiff (Hunter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 130 N. C. 602, 41 S. E. 796); but on the other hand if defendant introduces evidence showing that it exercised due care and diligence to deliver the message, the presumption of negligence is overcome, and if plaintiff introduces no evidence tending to show negligence the court should if requested direct a verdict for defendant (*Western Union Tel. been held that whether a stipulation ordinarily valid would be unreasonable in its application to the facts and circumstances of a particular case is a question for the jury.<sup>61</sup> It is also a question for the jury where the evidence is conflicting whether particular regulations were ever established,<sup>62</sup> and what such regulations in fact were;<sup>63</sup> whether plaintiff had knowledge of a stipulation in the contract of transmission,<sup>64</sup> or assented thereto;<sup>65</sup> whether he did in fact present his claim within the time stipulated;<sup>66</sup> whether defendant by its conduct waived a stipulation limiting its liability;<sup>67</sup> whether where the word "day" was written across the stipulations of a night blank the message should with regard to such stipulations be considered as a night or as a day message;<sup>68</sup> and where the evidence tends to show a special agreement as to the time of delivery, whether defendant's ordinary regulations as to office hours should apply.<sup>69</sup>

c. In Mental Anguish Cases. In mental anguish as in other cases if the evidence is sufficient to warrant its submission to the jury,<sup>70</sup> and it is conflicting or different conclusions might reasonably be drawn therefrom,<sup>71</sup> it is a question for the jury whether plaintiff suffered mental anguish,<sup>72</sup> and whether such suffering

Message summoning a physician.—In an action for mental anguish due to delay in delivering a message summoning a physician, where the evidence would justify the jury in finding that the physician could not have arrived in time even had the message been promptly delivered, it is proper to refuse to direct the verdict for plaintiff. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Haley, 143 Ala. 586, 39 So. 386.

was the proximate result of defendant's negligence.<sup>73</sup> So in the case of messages announcing the serious illness, death, or burial of a relative, it is ordinarily a question for the jury whether, had the message been duly transmitted and delivered, plaintiff could and would have gone,<sup>74</sup> and whether he could and would have arrived in time,<sup>75</sup> or in the case of a message summoning a physician whether the physician could have arrived in time.<sup>76</sup> It is also a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence,<sup>77</sup> or failed to exercise reasonable care to avoid the consequences of defendant's negligence and to minimize the resulting mental suffering.<sup>78</sup> applies that ordinarily questions not raised in the trial court will not be considered on appeal,<sup>92</sup> and that a verdict based upon conflicting evidence will not ordinarily be disturbed on appeal,<sup>93</sup> if there is any evidence legally sufficient to sustain it;<sup>94</sup> but only where it is unsupported by evidence or is clearly and manifestly contrary to the great weight of evidence.<sup>95</sup> So also a judgment will not be reversed in toto where the only error is in the amount of damages which can be corrected by computation.<sup>96</sup>

IX. DAMAGES.

A. Nominal Damages or Cost of Transmission. Where an actionable breach of duty in regard to the transmission or delivery of a message is shown, plaintiff is entitled to recover at least nominal damages, although no actual damages are shown;<sup>97</sup> but if no actual recoverable damages are shown, plaintiff can recover only nominal damages.<sup>98</sup> Plaintiff has generally been allowed, however, to recover as actual damages<sup>99</sup> the amount paid for the transmission of the message,<sup>1</sup> provided he has actually paid the same;<sup>2</sup> but if no other actual

B. Compensatory Damages — 1. IN GENERAL — a. Must be Contemplated — (1) IN GENERAL. In actions for damages due to negligence or defaults in regard to the transmission or delivery of messages the general rule applies<sup>4</sup> that plaintiff can recover only such damages as may reasonably be supposed to have been within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract was entered into;<sup>5</sup> and while plaintiff may recover such general damages as are the direct and natural result of the breach itself,<sup>6</sup> which generally include the price paid for the transmission of the message,<sup>7</sup> the company will not be liable for special or consequential damages, although the proximate result of its negligence or default, unless it had notice from the terms of the message or otherwise of the facts and circumstances from which such damages would be likely to result,<sup>8</sup> although such notice may such payment and become liable therefor, and might at some future day be called upon to pay the same.

Explanation of rule.—The rule does not require that the parties must have contemplated such damages but it does require that the damages must be such as the parties may fairly be supposed to have contemplated or at least would have contemplated as flowing from the breach of duty if they had been informed of all the facts. Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 104, 4 Am. St. Rep. 126.

Effect of statutory provisions.—It has been held that a statute making telegraph companies liable for "all damages occasioned" by their negligence or defaults does away with the requirement of the general rule that the damages must have been within the contemplation of the parties or that the company must have had notice of the special circumstances from which special damages would be likely to result (Barker v. Western Union Tel. Co., 134 Wis. 147, 114 N. W. 439; Fisher v. Western Union Tel. Co., 119 Wis. 146, 96 N. W. 545), it being sufficient that the damages are the natural and proximate result of the negligence or default complained of (Barker v. Western Union Tel. Co., supra); but on the contrary it has been held that the general rule is not affected by statutory provisions making such companies "liable for special damages" occasioned by their negligence (Hughes v. Western Union Tel. Co., 79 Mo. App. 133), or liable for the damages "actually caused" by their negligence (Wheelock v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 197 Mass. 119, 83 N. E. 313).

be extrinsic as well as from the terms of the message.<sup>9</sup> In some cases it has been held that since the contract of transmission is the basis of the company's duty,<sup>10</sup> the general rule that the damages must have been within the contemplation of the parties applies whether the action technically sounds in contract or in tort,<sup>11</sup> although other cases where the action was in tort have followed the general rule<sup>12</sup> that in such actions plaintiff may recover such damages as are the direct and proximate result of the negligence complained of, whether within the contemplation of the parties or not,<sup>13</sup> particularly where the action is necessarily in tort, as where the breach of duty is a wrongful refusal to receive the message for transmission so that no contract is entered into.<sup>14</sup>

(II) CIPHER MESSAGES. As a result of the general rule above stated,<sup>15</sup> it is ordinarily held that where a message is written in cipher which is not understood by the agent who receives it for transmission, and its meaning is not made known to him, the company will not be liable for negligence in its transmission or delivery beyond nominal damages or the price paid for transmission.<sup>16</sup> In some jurisdictions, however, a more stringent rule has been adopted and a recovery of compensatory damages allowed;<sup>17</sup> and even in jurisdictions where the general rule obtains the company may have notice of facts which will render it liable for special damages, although the message was in cipher.<sup>18</sup>

(III) OBSCURE MESSAGES. It is also ordinarily held, following the same general rule,<sup>19</sup> that although the message is not in cipher, still if it is so obscure or unintelligible that it conveys no notice to the company of the nature of the loss which is likely to result from a failure to make due delivery, or that any loss is likely to result at all, recovery must be limited to nominal damages, even though there be an actual loss in fact.<sup>20</sup> In the application of this rule, however, a dis-

But see Houston, etc., R. Tel. Co. v. Davidson, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 334, 39 S. tion should be made between messages which are wholly unintelligible and those which disclose their importance and general character or purpose,<sup>21</sup> particularly where they show that they relate to a business transaction,<sup>22</sup> it being held that notice of the main purpose is sufficient to charge the company with notice of attendant details.<sup>23</sup>

(iv) MESSAGES RELATING TO BUSINESS TRANSACTIONS. It has frequently been held that if a message shows that it relates to a business transaction it is not necessary, in order to render the company liable for more than nominal damages, that the company should be advised of the details of the transaction to which the message relates,<sup>24</sup> it being sufficient if it discloses its general character and purpose,<sup>25</sup> and the fact that trade terms and abbreviations are used does not make it a cipher message.<sup>26</sup> So it has been held that the actual loss as far as it is the proximate result of the company's negligence is recoverable if the message contains sufficient, when read in the light of well-known usage in commercial correspondence, to apprise the telegraph company that it is an order to buy or to sell or to close a pending trade or option, or an offer of a definite contract, or the acceptance of such an offer.<sup>27</sup> It will be observed, however, that a or intervening cause,<sup>32</sup> or for damages which, although traceable to the negligence of the company, are too remote to be considered as the natural and proximate result thereof.<sup>33</sup> In the absence, however, of any valid limitation of liability,<sup>34</sup> the company will be liable for all damages which are the natural and proximate result of its negligence or default and may reasonably be said to have been within the contemplation of the parties.<sup>35</sup>

The line between proximate and remote damages is exceedingly shadowy and often difficult of application to particular cases, but while the damages need not always be the immediate result, they must be the actual and proximate result of the negligence or default complained of. Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Ky. 104, 4 Am. Rep. 126.

Physical suffering due merely to mental anxiety and suffering, although the latter is due to the negligence of defendant, is not the proximate result of such negligence. *Kagy v. Western Union Tel. Effect of statutory provisions.—The rule that the damages must be the proximate result of the negligence or default complained of is not affected by statutory provisions making telegraph companies liable for "all damages occasioned" (Fisher v. Western Union Tel. Co., 119 Wis. 146, 96 N. W. 545; Cutts v. Western Union Tel. Co., 71 Wis. 46, 36 N. W. 627); or "liable for special damages" (Hughes v. Western Union Tel. Co., 79 Mo. Applications of rule.—Thus the telegraph company has been held liable for the amount withdrawn from a branch bank in consequence of the delay of a message from the banker's assignee notifying the branch of the fact of the assignment (Stiles v. Western Union Tel. Co., 124 Ga. 478, 52 S. plaintiff's broker to buy or to sell short is delayed and the transaction directed is never entered into;<sup>44</sup> but where there is an actual purchase at a higher price than plaintiff would have had to pay if the message had been promptly delivered, there is an actual loss for which a recovery may be had.<sup>45</sup>

(iii) INTERVENING EFFICIENT CAUSES. If, notwithstanding the negligence of the telegraph company, the loss would not have occurred had it not been for the subsequent operation of a new intervening efficient cause for which the telegraph company is not responsible and over which it has no control,<sup>46</sup> such as a storm or flood,<sup>47</sup> or the felonious,<sup>48</sup> fraudulent,<sup>49</sup> or negligent<sup>50</sup> act of another party, the telegraph company's breach of duty is not the proximate cause of the loss.<sup>51</sup>

(iv) LOSSES WHICH PLAINTIFF MIGHT HAVE PREVENTED. It is the duty of plaintiff on learning of the negligence of the telegraph company to make reasonable efforts to render the resulting damage as light as possible,<sup>52</sup> and he cannot recover damages which by such care and diligence he could have avoided.<sup>53</sup>

Where a message notifying plaintiff of a purchase of stocks for him by his brokers is not delivered and the market subsequently declines beyond the amount of his margin and he is closed out, he cannot recover actual damages on the theory that if he had been notified of the purchase he would have sold earlier or put up more margin. *Smith v. Plaintiff is, however, required only to incur a reasonable amount of trouble and expense according to the circumstances of the particular case,<sup>54</sup> and it is not incumbent upon him to enter into litigation to rescind a contract which had already been entered into before the company's negligence was discovered.<sup>55</sup>

(v) LOSSES WHICH MIGHT HAVE OCCURRED AT ALL EVENTS. The loss is not, in the eye of the law, the proximate consequence of the telegraph company's negligence in a case where, even if the company had performed its duty, there can be no legal certainty that the loss would not still have occurred or the object of the message have been defeated.<sup>56</sup> Thus if the happening or preventing of the loss, even though the telegraph company had performed its duty, would still have been dependent on a speculative or contingent future event,<sup>57</sup> or on the voluntary action or inaction of the other party to the message,<sup>58</sup> or of plaintiff himself,<sup>59</sup> or of a third party,<sup>60</sup> where there was no obligation on the part of such party to act or not to act, it cannot be said with legal certainty that the loss was the result of the telegraph company's negligence.<sup>61</sup>

c. Must Not Grow Out of Illegal Transaction — (I) IN GENERAL. Where the transaction in connection with which plaintiff claims that the negligence of the telegraph company has caused him to suffer a loss is in itself an illegal transaction, and the message was sent in furtherance thereof, there can be no recovery.<sup>62</sup> It will be presumed, however, that the parties contemplated a legal rather than an illegal transaction, and the burden is upon defendant to show the contrary.<sup>63</sup>

(II) SUNDAY MESSAGES. In jurisdictions where contracts made on Sunday are unenforceable unless relating to works of necessity or charity a telegraph company is not liable either for damages or statutory penalties for failure to perform a contract made on Sunday to deliver a message,<sup>64</sup> unless it falls within one of the prescribed exceptions.<sup>65</sup>

d. Measure of Damages. As in other civil actions,<sup>66</sup> unless the circumstances warrant a recovery of exemplary damages,<sup>67</sup> the measure of damages in actions against telegraph companies for negligence or defaults in regard to the transmission or delivery of messages is the loss actually sustained by plaintiff,<sup>68</sup> in so far as it is the proximate result of the negligence or default complained of and reasonably within the contemplation of the parties,<sup>69</sup> or in other words, just compensation for the injury sustained,<sup>70</sup> without regard to the degree of defendant's negligence; <sup>71</sup> but it is not possible to lay down any exact formula by which such damages can in all cases be measured.<sup>72</sup>

e. Contributory Negligence.<sup>73</sup> As in other civil actions,<sup>74</sup> plaintiff may be precluded from recovering damages by reason of his own contributory negligence,<sup>75</sup> as where in the case of a message incorrectly transmitted plaintiff assumes to interpret and act upon it, although as delivered to him it is unintelligible,<sup>76</sup> where he acts upon such a message without attempting to verify its correctness, although having reasonable cause to suspect that it has been incorrectly transmitted,<sup>77</sup> or where after discovering that the message has been incorrectly transmitted he makes no effort to correct the mistake, although having sufficient time to do so before any damage would result.<sup>78</sup> It is ordinarily, however, a question of fact for the jury whether plaintiff was, under the circumstances of the particular case, guilty of such negligence.<sup>79</sup>

2. IN PARTICULAR CLASSES OF CASES — a. Message a Mere Step in Negotiations.

Where the message relates to a proposed contract between plaintiff and another person, but is neither an acceptance of a previous offer nor itself a definite offer, but only an invitation to submit an offer or to meet or correspond with the sender for the purpose of further negotiation, the failure duly to deliver the message is not, as a matter of law, the proximate cause of the failure of the negotiations to result in a binding contract,<sup>80</sup> and damages for the loss of a contract which

The primary end to be kept in view is compensation to the party injured for the difference in his position from what it would have been if the company had properly performed its duty. Bowie v. Western Union Tel. Co., 78 S. C. 424, 59 S. E. 65.

71. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Williams, 163 Fed. 513, 516, 90 C. C. A. 143, where the court said: "The injured party is entitled to recover, not according to the degree of negligence of the company, but compensation for the injury he has actually received, and this rule applies except in cases where punitive damages may be allowed."

72. Bowie v. Western Union Tel. Co., 78 S. C. 424, 59 S. E. 65.

The measure of damages for wrongful delay in delivering a message, whether suit be on the contract or in tort, is, first, at least nominal damages; second, such damages as may be fairly considered as arising naturally, or having been within contemplation of the parties when the contract was made; and, third, in a proper case, punitive damages. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Potts, 120 Tenn. 37, 113 S. W. 789, 127 Am. St. Rep. 991, 19 L. R. A. N. S. 479.

might or might not have resulted from further negotiations being too remote and uncertain,<sup>81</sup> only nominal damages can be recovered.<sup>82</sup> This rule applies to messages not containing a definite offer but merely inquiring whether the addressee will accept a certain price,<sup>83</sup> or will accept a certain position,<sup>84</sup> or desires a position or employment,<sup>85</sup> or requesting a quotation of prices,<sup>86</sup> and particularly to a message which is in effect a discontinuance of pending negotiations.<sup>87</sup>

b. that the offer would have been accepted, plaintiff may recover for the loss of the sale, purchase, or other contract which would have resulted,<sup>92</sup> provided the company is chargeable with notice of the nature and purposes of the message,<sup>93</sup> such loss being the proximate result of the company's negligence;<sup>94</sup> and cases may arise where actual damages may be shown to have resulted from the non-delivery or delay of a message containing an offer independently of whether the offer would have been accepted.<sup>95</sup> The fact that the offer would have been accepted, it has been held, may be sufficiently shown by allegations of the complaint admitted by demurrer,<sup>96</sup> or by testimony of the parties in connection with evidence of circumstances tending to show that a reasonably prudent person would have accepted the offer.<sup>97</sup> In some cases it has been held that where the action is by the addressee it cannot be established by his own testimony that he would have accepted the offer;<sup>98</sup> but a distinction has been made in this regard in other cases according to whether the action is brought by the sender or by the addressee,<sup>99</sup> it having been held that where the action is by the sender the fact that the offer would have been accepted may be shown by the testimony of the addressee.<sup>1</sup> In accordance with the rules just stated there can be no recovery of damages for the non-delivery of a message containing a mere order for goods in the absence of proof that the order would have been filled,<sup>2</sup> unless such order is in effect an acceptance of an offer previously made by the addressee.<sup>3</sup>

proximate result of the failure duly to deliver the message.<sup>4</sup> Since, however, where a contract is made by an exchange of telegrams, the contract is ordinarily regarded as complete and binding on both parties from the instant the message of acceptance is delivered to the company for transmission,<sup>5</sup> it would seem that in the ordinary case of offer and acceptance by telegram the offeree, whose message of acceptance is delayed, has suffered no loss, since, notwithstanding the delay, the offerer is liable to him and must, on demand, perform the contract.<sup>6</sup> If the message of acceptance is not in all respects an unconditional acceptance it is, at best, no more than a counter offer, and is to be treated according to the principles which apply in the case of an original offer.<sup>7</sup>

d. Loss of a Mere Chance.<sup>8</sup> Plaintiff cannot recover on the theory that, if it had not been for the telegraph company's negligence, he might, and probably would, have reaped a benefit, when such benefit is in the nature of things speculative and contingent, and where it is impossible to show with legal certainty that plaintiff would have received the benefit had the message been duly delivered,<sup>9</sup> or in other words where he has lost only the mere chance or possibility of making something.<sup>10</sup> Thus it has been held that plaintiff cannot ask the jury to speculate as to whether, had it not been for the telegraph company's negligence, his horse would have won a prize purse at a trotting race;<sup>11</sup> whether his father, had he reached him before death, would have given him a note;<sup>12</sup> whether, had he received a message from his failing debtor inviting him to come, the debtor would voluntarily have given him security;<sup>13</sup> or whether, had he received the information contained in the message at the time it should have been received, he would have been able to recover money previously paid out,<sup>14</sup> or property delivered.<sup>15</sup>

ligence of the telegraph company is to be regarded as the proximate cause of the loss of a sale, the question arises as to the proper measure of damages for that loss. If the subject-matter of sale has a definitely ascertainable market value, such as grain,<sup>16</sup> cotton,<sup>17</sup> lumber,<sup>18</sup> or wool,<sup>19</sup> the measure of damages for the loss of the sale is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the subject-matter of the sale at the place where it was when the vendor learned or should with ordinary diligence have learned of the failure of the trade.<sup>20</sup> Where by the terms of the contract of sale the delivery is to be made at another time and place, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the property at the time and place of delivery.<sup>21</sup> If there is no market for the subject-matter of the sale at the place where it is stored the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the value of the property at the nearest market, together with the expense of transporting it there.<sup>22</sup> Where the subject-matter of sale is of such a character that it has no market value or that its market value cannot be readily ascertained, the measure of damages is the contract price less the best price which the vendor could afterward obtain for it by the exercise of reasonable diligence, together

Shipments delayed.—In case of a delay in delivering to plaintiff a message directing him to ship his hogs to Chicago at once, it was held that the measure of his damages was the difference between the market value of the hogs on the day he was enabled to place them on the market after receiving the message and what the market value would have been on the day he could have gotten them to market if there had been no delay in delivering the message. *Manville v. Delay in reselling.—Where a sale of grain or cotton is defeated by the non-delivery or delay of a telegram, plaintiff's measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time the message should have been delivered, and if he continues to hold beyond this time he takes the risk of any fluctuations in the market and his damages are not increased in case the market declines and he afterward sells at a greater loss. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Love Banks Co., 73 Ark. 205, 83 S. W. 949. The same principle which relieves defendant from increased liability in case of delay in selling and a decline of the market also precludes it from deriving any advantage from a rise in the market during such delay, notwithstanding plaintiff actually sells at the higher price. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Nye, etc., Co., 70 Nebr. 251, 97 N. W. 305.

W. 219, the measure of damages was held to be the difference between the contract price and the value of the goods at the point of shipment, less cost of transportation to place of delivery.

with the expense, if any, of keeping it in the meanwhile;<sup>23</sup> but where plaintiff resells to a different purchaser and seeks to recover the difference between the amount so received and the original contract price, it must appear that he resold for the best price obtainable under the circumstances.<sup>24</sup>

f. Loss of a Purchase. If by reason of the negligence of a telegraph company in regard to the transmission or delivery of a message a purchase is defeated resulting in a loss to plaintiff, the company will be liable.<sup>25</sup> The general rule is that the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the goods at the time and place of delivery;<sup>26</sup> and where as the result of the telegraph company's negligence the purchase is not lost but delayed, there may as a general rule be a recovery for the rise in market value of the subject-matter of the sale during the delay.<sup>27</sup> Where the message is from plaintiff to his agent, instructing him to purchase, and there is a negligent delay in transmission, plaintiff is entitled to recover the difference between the market price at the time when the message should have been delivered and the price at which the order was in fact executed;<sup>28</sup> and where such a message to an agent is never delivered at all, the measure of damages is the difference between the price mentioned in the message, at which the purchase could have been made had the message been promptly delivered, and the market price at the time plaintiff learned of the non-delivery;<sup>29</sup> but where the message is not a positive direction to the agent to purchase, but leaves the matter to his discretion, or where in fact the agent does not purchase when the message is actually received, and no transaction takes place, there can ordinarily be no recovery beyond nominal damages or the amount paid for transmitting the message.<sup>30</sup>

g. Loss of an Exchange. Where, instead of a sale or a purchase, the telegraph company's negligence causes plaintiff to lose a contract for the exchange of property, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the property

Not receiving the message they bought the cotton in question, fifty bales at a higher price and the other fifty bales on the following day at a price still higher. Recovery was allowed only for the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time plaintiffs bought the first fifty bales, it being held that the subsequent fluctuations of the market could neither increase nor diminish the liability of defendant.

The damages are too remote, speculative, and contingent in such cases to authorize a recovery of more than nominal damages.

which, under the contract, plaintiff would have obligated himself to surrender, and the value of the property which he would have received in return.<sup>31</sup>

h. Loss of a Contract of Employment. Where the message is of such a character that its delivery would have resulted in a binding contract of employment, and in consequence of the negligence of the telegraph company no contract is made, plaintiff may recover his actual loss,<sup>32</sup> namely, the amount which the other party would have been legally obliged to pay him under the contract, less what he actually made or could in the exercise of reasonable diligence have made in similar employment during the corresponding time.<sup>33</sup> If, however, the message is not a definite offer or acceptance, but a mere inquiry as to whether the addressee desires or will accept a position or employment, a non-delivery or delay cannot be said to be the natural and proximate cause of a failure to obtain such employment;<sup>34</sup> and the same rule applies where plaintiff was already employed under a contract which would have prevented his acceptance of the employment offered.<sup>35</sup> So also plaintiff can recover only for the contract which he actually lost, and not for subsequent renewals of that contract which, had the parties been mutually satisfied, might or might not have been made.<sup>36</sup> So in the case of an employment from day to day, only nominal damages, or at most one day's salary, can be recovered,<sup>37</sup> while in the case of an employment from month to month the limit of plaintiff's recovery is one month's salary.<sup>38</sup> In the case of an appointment to an office which plaintiff would have held not for any definite length of time but solely at the will of the party appointing him, only nominal damages can be recovered.<sup>39</sup>

Loss of a Debt. Where as the direct result of a telegraph company's negligence plaintiff loses in whole or in part a debt which otherwise would have been collected, he may recover the amount so lost,<sup>40</sup> as in cases where a message directing the levy of an attachment is delayed or not delivered, so that other creditors are enabled to obtain prior attachments which exhaust the assets of the debtor,<sup>41</sup> or where in a message directing the levy of an attachment the amount of the claim is changed by an error in transmission so that the attachment is levied for too small an amount and the balance of the debt is lost.<sup>42</sup>

j. Loss of Commissions. Where the direct and proximate result of the telegraph company's negligence is to defeat a sale or purchase which the message would have effected and on which plaintiff as agent or broker would have earned a commission he may recover the amount of the commission so lost;<sup>43</sup> but the circumstances must be such that the loss of commission is the natural and proximate result of such negligence,<sup>44</sup> and can be said to have been fairly within the contemplation of the parties.<sup>45</sup>

k. Expenses of a Trip. Where as the direct result of the negligence of the telegraph company plaintiff, or someone for whose traveling expenses he is responsible, makes a trip which, had it not been for the company's breach of duty, it any salary which he might have earned were too speculative and uncertain.

Where plaintiff was instructed to draw on a bank for the amount of a debt and the message was not delivered, and subsequently the funds of the debtor were paid out on other claims, it was held that plaintiff might recover for the loss of the debt. Baird v. Western Union Tel. Co., 79 S. C. 310, 60 S. E. 695.

The measure of damages for the loss of a debt is the amount of the debt together with the cost of the message and interest to the date of trial. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Sheffield, 71 Tex. 570, 10 S. W. 752, 10 Am. St. Rep. 790.

Notice to company.—A message to plaintiff from his agent reading, "You had better come and attend to your claim at once," is sufficient to charge the company with notice of its purpose and the necessity of prompt delivery so as to make damages due to the loss of the debt by reason of other creditors obtaining prior attachments reasonably within the contemplation of the parties. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Sheffield, 71 Tex. 570, 10 S. W. 752, 10 Am. St. Rep. 790.

Evidence held insufficient to show that plaintiff's debt would have been secured if the message had been promptly delivered see Hartstein v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 Wis. 531, 62 N. W. 412.

41. Parks v. Alta California Tel. Co., 13 Cal. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 589; Fleischner v. Pacific Postal Tel. Cable Co., 55 Fed. 738.

If the debt is not entirely lost plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount of the debt less what he actually received. Bryant v. American Tel. Co., 1 Daly (N. Y.) 575.

W. 395.

Effect of subsequent sale.—If the loss of commissions is the proximate result they may be recovered, although at the time of the trial it appears that plaintiff subsequently negotiated a sale of the same property to another party and earned a larger commission. Hise v. Western Union Tel. Co., 137 Iowa 329, 113 N. W. 819.

44. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Barwise, 11 Colo. App. 328, 53 Pac. 252, holding that the loss of commissions is not the natural and proximate result of the non-delivery of a message from a broker to a manufacturer merely requesting a quotation of prices, coupled with a statement of those quoted by a rival concern and a suggestion that he could sell if the addressee could give better prices and fill an order for a certain amount, no specific order having been given to plaintiff and any prices quoted to him being subject to the approval of his principal.

45. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Barwise, 11 Colo. App. 328, 53 Pac. 252 (holding that a message from a broker to a manufacturer merely asking a quotation of his best prices and stating those quoted by a rival concern does not convey such notice of its purpose to the company as to make the loss of commissions within the contemplation of the parties); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Twaddell, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 51, 103 S. W. 1120 (holding that a message reading, "You can make big money next month—come at once," does not advise the company that a failure to deliver it to the addressee will result in a loss of commissions to the sender on a purchase of real estate).

would not have been necessary to make, the telegraph company is liable for the necessary and reasonable expenses of the trip,<sup>46</sup> and if the company's negligence causes plaintiff to make two trips when otherwise he would have made but one, he can recover for the unnecessary trip.<sup>47</sup> The negligence of the company must, however, have been the proximate cause of plaintiff's making the trip,<sup>48</sup> and if the trip is one which he would have made in any event, he cannot recover the expenses thereof,<sup>49</sup> notwithstanding the trip but for the negligence of the company would have been deferred until a later date,<sup>50</sup> although he may be entitled to recover damages of a different character.<sup>51</sup> A recovery has also been denied on the ground that the trip was made unnecessarily and could have been avoided by sending another telegram;<sup>52</sup> but if there was no reason for plaintiff to believe

Indiana.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Henley, 157 Ind. 90, 60 N. E. 682, where a trip from Bloomington, Ind., to South Bend, Ind., was held the proximate result of a failure to transmit a message reading, "Is stonework on building finished? Wire answer to-day."

Western Union Tel. Co.*, 135 N. C. 458, 47 S. E. 745.

Thus, if plaintiff is away from home and, in consequence of the company's negligence, comes home and stays there, he cannot recover his expenses, even though, had it not been for the negligence, he would have remained away longer. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Patton, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 973.

The fact that plaintiff arrived too late to be present at the funeral of a relative does not entitle him to recover the expenses of the trip. Hunter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 135 N. C. 458, 47 S. E. 745; Alexander v. Western Union Tel. Co., 126 Fed. 445.

50. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bates, 93 Ga. 352, 20 S. E. 639, holding that if for any reason it cost plaintiff more to make the trip at the time it was made than it would at the time to which it would have been deferred, he might recover this increased cost, but that this would be the limit of his recovery in regard to the expenses of the trip.

51. Hunter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 135 N. C. 458, 47 S. E. 745, holding that where by reason of the non-delivery of a death message plaintiff did not arrive in time for the funeral he could not recover his traveling expenses, because it appeared that he would have made the trip anyway, but that he could recover for mental anguish caused by being too late for the funeral.

52. Hilley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Miss. 67, 32 So. 556, where plaintiff, a traveling man, having wired home inquiring as to the condition of his sick child, left for that the necessity of the trip could be avoided in this manner he may recover.<sup>53</sup> In any event, however, plaintiff can recover as the expenses of a trip only the necessary expenses which he has actually incurred.<sup>54</sup>

1. Losses Due to Errors in Transmission. It frequently happens that losses for which the telegraph company will be liable are sustained by reason of errors in the transmission of a message, as in regard to the terms, conditions, or other details stated in a message relating to a business transaction, whereby one of the parties is caused to act to his prejudice upon the faith of the message as altered.<sup>55</sup> If the error is discovered in time the party who would be injured should ordinarily, unless he is bound to carry out the transaction, refuse to do so,<sup>56</sup> and in any case should make reasonable efforts to render the damages as light as another point on his route leaving instructions to forward any answer to the latter place, and failing to receive any forwarded message made a trip from such place to his home instead of sending another message.

53. *Duncan v. Western Union Tel. Co., 93 Miss. 500, 47 So. 552 [distinguishing Hilley v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Miss. 67, 37 So. 556], holding that where plaintiff sent a message inquiring as to the condition of his son and the reply message reading, "Son very well," was negligently changed in transmission to "Son very ill," it was not natural for plaintiff to suppose that another telegram would relieve him of the necessity of the trip but rather that he should go to his son at once.

54. *Salinger v. Western Union Tel. Co., (Iowa 1907) 111 N. Sender or addressee.—Where either the sender or the addressee of a message which has been changed in transmission must suffer loss, it has been held that as between them the party who selects the telegraph as a means of communication must bear the loss caused by such negligence, and that he has his remedy over against the telegraph company (Ayer v. Western Union Tel. Co., 79 Me. 493, 10 Atl. 495, 1 Am. St. Rep. 353. See also CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 294); and that accordingly if a message is sent by A offering goods at a certain price to B, and the message as delivered to B quotes a lesser price and the offer is accepted, A, although the error is discovered before the goods are delivered to B, may deliver them at the lesser price which B intended to accept and recover the resulting loss from the telegraph company (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shotter, 71 Ga. 760; Ayer v. Western Union Tel. Co., supra. But see Shingleur v. Western Union Tel. Co., 72 Miss. 1030, 18 So. 425, 48 Am. St. Rep. 604, 30 L. R. possible;<sup>57</sup> but it frequently happens, particularly where the transaction is carried on through an agent, that the transaction is completed before the error is discovered,<sup>58</sup> or the circumstances are such that at the time the error is discovered the transaction must be completed in order to avoid a greater loss.<sup>59</sup> In such cases, subject to the general rules above stated,<sup>60</sup> there may be a recovery of the loss actually sustained as the proximate result of the company's negligence,<sup>61</sup> the proper measure of damages necessarily depending upon the nature of the transaction and the circumstances of the particular case,<sup>62</sup> and no actual damages to him, does after knowledge of the error accept the goods and pay the higher price, he cannot recover from the telegraph company (Joynes v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 37 Pa. Super. Ct. 63).

57. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Truitt, 5 Ga. App. 809, 63 S. E. 934 (holding that where goods are shipped by plaintiff but not delivered to the buyer before the error in stating the price is discovered, he should not resell at a loss at the point of destination if by reshipping to another point he could secure a price which after paying transportation charges would involve a smaller loss); Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Schaefer, 110 Ky. 907, 62 S. W. 1119, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 344 (holding that where goods were shipped by plaintiff and it was not discovered that his selling price had been changed until the purchaser received the draft accompanying the bill of lading, which he refused to pay, it was the duty to plaintiff to take prompt steps to dispose of the goods, which in this case were perishable, to the best advantage, and that he could not recover damages which might thus have been prevented).

But where plaintiff orders his agent to sell cotton on the faith of a telegram quoting the price for which the agent could sell it, which was negligently changed in transmission, plaintiff is under no duty to recoup damages so sustained by buying other cotton and holding it for an advance in price. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Crawford, 110 Ala. 460, 20 So. 111.

Company as agent of sender.—In some cases it has been held that in the transmission of a message the telegraph company acts as the agent of the sender who is bound by the terms of the message as transmitted, and to whom, and not to the company, the addressee must look for damages arising out of an error in transmission. *Brooke v. Measure of damages.—Where the addressee was to take at a certain price all the cotton plaintiff could buy, provided plaintiff reported by wire the amount bought each day, and in a message reporting the purchase of one hundred and seventy-five bales the amount was changed to one hundred and twenty-five bales, and the addressee refused to take the other fifty bales, plaintiff's measure of damages is the amount lost on the fifty bales, measured by the difference between what the addressee was to pay and the amount plaintiff received for them at the best market price obtainable. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Milton, 53 Fla. 484, 43 So. 495, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1077, 11 L. R. A. N. S. 560.

being recoverable unless an actual loss was sustained.<sup>63</sup> Where in a message quoting a price to plaintiff the price is changed to a larger amount, which is paid by plaintiff, it has been held that the measure of damages is the difference between the price as stated in the original message and the higher price paid by plaintiff;<sup>64</sup> but on the contrary it has been held that while plaintiff cannot recover more than this difference, he is not necessarily entitled to recover this amount,<sup>65</sup> his actual loss being the difference between the price paid and the market value of the property purchased.<sup>66</sup> Plaintiff is also entitled to recover the loss actually sus-

Where defendant agreed to furnish plaintiff correct market reports and furnished incorrect reports upon the faith of which he directed the purchase of grain to fill a contract for future delivery, the measure of damages has been held to be the difference between the price actually paid and the price as represented in the report. Turner v. Hawkeye Tel. Co., 41 Iowa 458, 20 Am. Rep. 605. But see Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bradford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 114 S. W. 686, holding that the measure of damages in such a case is the difference between the incorrect price quoted and the correct market price on the day when the price was furnished. Where plaintiff, who was engaged in buying cattle for the Chicago market, had an arrangement with the dealers there through whom he sold, to furnish him market prices on request unless there was no change in prices since their last report, in which case no answer to his inquiry was to be sent, and on a failure to receive a reply to a request for prices he bought on the basis of the prices last quoted, it was held that the measure of damages was the difference between the Chicago market prices last quoted and the market price on the day of such purchase. Garrett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 92 Iowa 449, 58 N. W. 1064, 60 N. W. 644. Where by reason of an error in a message from plaintiff to his agent directing the purchase of a certain amount of cotton, the agent purchases a larger amount, the measure of damages is the amount lost on resale of the excess at the market price including the commissions of the agent who purchased it. Washington, etc., Tel. Co. v. Hobson, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 122. Where in a message ordering goods the telegraph company changed the name of the addressee and delivered the message to plaintiff, who filled the order, whereupon the sender of the message refused to accept the goods, which being perishable were entirely lost, the measure of plaintiff's damages is the value of the goods and the amount paid for transportation. Eley v. Postal Tel. Co., 15 Daly (N. Y.) 58, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 117.

No damages.—Where a message addressed to plaintiff offering twenty and one-half cents for grain was changed in transmission to twenty-one and one-half cents, and after the order was filled the sender refused to pay over twenty and one-half cents, and it was delivered to him at that price, it was held that plaintiff was not damaged if he procured the grain and filled the order at less than twenty and one-half unless the work of procuring it was worth more than this margin of profit. Mickelwait v. Western Union Tel. Co., 113 Iowa 177, 84 N. W. 1038. Where an incorrect transmission of a message induced plaintiff to sell shares of stock but he received the full market value therefor, it was held that he could not recover more than the cost of the message, the market value of stock, nothing else appearing, being the actual value thereof. Hughes v. Western Union Tel. Co., 114 N. C. 70, 19 S. E. 100, 41 Am. St. Rep. 782. Where a message directing plaintiff's broker to purchase a certain number of bales of July cotton was changed so as to direct a purchase of January cotton, which was made, and plaintiff elected to stand upon the contract as made and afterward closed out at a profit, it was held that he could not recover any damages, having made an actual profit, and any additional profits that might have been made on July cotton being too remote, speculative, and contingent to authorize a recovery. James v. Western Union Tel. Co., 86 Ark. 339, 111 S. W. 276.

E. 65 (where a message quoting flour to plaintiff at four dollars and thirty cents per barrel was changed to four dollars and sixty cents, which plaintiff paid, and he was allowed to recover on the basis of the difference between these prices, although he had resold the flour at four dollars and forty cents); *Hays v. m. Deterioration in Value of Property. Where personal property deteriorates in value as the direct and proximate result of the telegraph company's negligence, the amount of the deterioration constitutes the measure of damages.<sup>71</sup> Such a situation may present itself in cases where, as the result of the delay of a message, a shipment of perishable property is delayed;<sup>72</sup> or where, as the result of the telegraph company's negligent failure to communicate important information to the owner of the property, the latter fails to take proper precautions to avert a threatened danger.<sup>73</sup>

n. Shipment Induced by Negligence of Company. Where in consequence of a telegraph company's negligence goods are shipped and sold on a particular market, which, if the company had performed its obligation, would have been shipped and sold on another and better market, a recovery has been allowed for the difference between the markets, plus or minus, as the case may be, the difference in expense of transportation and handling.<sup>74</sup> Where the negligence of the tele-

Measure of damages.—Where plaintiff's selling offer on potatoes was changed from one dollar and seventy cents to one dollar and seven cents per barrel and accepted, and the goods were shipped and the mistake not discovered until the buyer refused to take them and pay the draft accompanying the bill of lading, the measure of damages is the difference between the amount which the potatoes would have brought at one dollar and seventy cents and the amount which plaintiff by ordinary care and diligence could have sold them for at the place to which they were shipped, not exceeding, however, sixty-three cents on the barrel. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Schaefer, 110 Ky. 907, 62 S. W. 1119, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 344. Where a message to plaintiff from his agent stating the amount of an offer for plaintiff's land is changed so as to make the offer appear larger, and plaintiff instructs his agent to sell, which the agent does at the lesser price stated in the original message, plaintiff's measure of damages is the difference between the price actually received and the market value of the property. Reed v. Western Union Tel. Co., 135 Mo. 661, 37 S. W. 904, 58 Am. St. Rep. 609, 34 L. R. A. 492. Where in a message from plaintiff's agent notifying plaintiff of the purchase of sheep at five dollars and sixty cents per hundred, the word "sixty" was changed to "six," and plaintiff, relying on the message, resold at six dollars per hundred, it was held that the measure of damages was the difference between the amount for which plaintiff sold the sheep and their actual value, although they were sold for more than they cost plaintiff. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Landis, 9 Pa. Cas. 357, 12 Atl. 467.

o. Message Summoning a Physician.<sup>76</sup> Where a message is sent by or on behalf of a sick person summoning a physician, and in consequence of the delay or non-delivery of the message the arrival of the physician is delayed, a recovery is generally allowed for any increased physical suffering, and the increased mental suffering incident thereto.<sup>77</sup> The company must, however, have had some notice that such suffering would be likely to result from a non-delivery or delay of the message,<sup>78</sup> and it has been held that the mere fact that the message is addressed to or requests the presence of a physician is not sufficient,<sup>79</sup> although it has been held sufficient where the message directs the addressee to come at once,<sup>80</sup> or shows that the patient is suffering from a physical injury.<sup>81</sup> Such damages must, however, have been the proximate result of the company's negligence, and there can be no recovery where it appears that even had the message been duly delivered the physician could not have gone or arrived in time.<sup>82</sup> The question does not seem to have been raised whether a recovery would be precluded under the doctrine relating to a mere offer by reason of the uncertainty as to whether the physician would have been willing to respond to the call,<sup>83</sup> it being apparently conceded or affirmatively shown in all of the cases that he would or was at least under some obligation to do so.<sup>84</sup>

The court said: "Neither was the physical suffering the natural and proximate result of the defendant's negligence. p. Message Summoning a Veterinary. In case of the non-delivery or delay of a message summoning a veterinary, plaintiff may recover for the loss of his animal, provided it was the proximate result of the company's negligence or default,<sup>85</sup> but not otherwise;<sup>86</sup> and while the fact that such loss was the proximate result need not be proved with absolutely certainty,<sup>87</sup> it must be fairly established by competent evidence and not left to mere conjecture or speculation.<sup>88</sup>

r. Money Transfer Messages. Where the telegraph company undertakes, for a consideration, to pay a sum of money to a person at a distant point, and fails to perform its contract, the measure of damages ordinarily is interest on the money from the time of default until tender.<sup>95</sup> There can be no recovery for mental distress, even in a mental anguish state;<sup>96</sup> nor can there be a recovery of special damages based on the fact that as a result of the failure to receive the money in due time plaintiff was evicted from home,<sup>97</sup> or was injured in reputation,<sup>98</sup> or lost credit,<sup>99</sup> such special damages as a rule being deemed too remote, and not within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract for the transfer of the money was made;<sup>1</sup> but the company may have notice of facts and circumstances such as to render it liable for special damages.<sup>2</sup>

3. MENTAL ANGUISH — a. In General. At common law there can as a rule be no recovery of compensatory damages for mental suffering unaccompanied by physical injury,<sup>3</sup> unless resulting from the wilful or malicious wrong of defendant,<sup>4</sup> and in opposition to a doctrine now recognized in some jurisdictions,<sup>5</sup> it has been vigorously maintained that there is no sufficient reason or justification for making an exception to the common-law rule in the case of actions against telegraph companies.<sup>6</sup> It is accordingly held in most jurisdictions that in such cases there can be no recovery for mental anguish, although by reason of the company's negligence or default in regard to the transmission or delivery of a message plaintiff is prevented from seeing a near relative before death or from being present at the funeral.<sup>7</sup> Even in these jurisdictions, however, there may be a recovery for

Minority Rule. The doctrine that, in the case of messages relating to sickness or death, if the negligence of the telegraph company prevents plaintiff from being present at the bedside of a near relative before death, or from attending the funeral, the telegraph company is liable in compensatory damages for the mental suffering so caused, was first promulgated by the supreme court of Texas in 1881,<sup>10</sup> there being no authority for it, prior to that time, except a tentative suggestion advanced by a text-writer to the effect that in the writer's opinion it should be the law.<sup>11</sup> In spite of some subsequent judicial vacillation,<sup>12</sup> the doctrine has now become

Statutory provisions.—The common-law rule is not changed so as to authorize a recovery for mental anguish by statutory provisions making telegraph companies liable for "all actual damages sustained" (Francis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 58 Minn. 252, 59 N. W. 1078, 49 Am. St. Rep. 507, 25 L. R. A. 406); or liable for "special damages" (Connelly v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 Va. 51, 40 S. E. 618, 93 Am. St. Rep. 919, 56 L. R. A. 663); although there are statutes expressly authorizing a recovery for mental anguish (see infra, IX, B, 3, b).

In Georgia the court of appeals has recently expressed its disapproval of the rule established by the earlier decisions of the supreme court denying a right of recovery for mental anguish and followed those decisions only because obliged to do so (Enloe v. Western Union Tel. Co., 5 Ga. App. 502, 63 S. E. 590; Glenn v. Western Union Tel. Co., 1 Ga. App. 821, 58 S. E. 833), respectfully suggesting that the rule be changed by statute (Glenn v. Western Union Tel. Co., supra).

Form of action.—In Alabama it has been held that if the action is not for breach of contract but is in tort, and there is no proof of damage for physical injury or injury in estate, there can be no recovery of damages for mental anguish. *Blount v. civil law in Louisiana.<sup>16</sup> On the other hand, in at least one jurisdiction, where the mental anguish doctrine was formerly recognized,<sup>17</sup> it has been expressly repudiated by the courts.<sup>18</sup>

c. Incidental to Other Injury. Mental anguish may be considered as an element of damages in connection with damages due to some other injury sustained by plaintiff,<sup>19</sup> and as incidental to an actual physical injury may be recovered for even in jurisdictions where the general mental anguish doctrine is not recognized;<sup>20</sup> but in such jurisdictions where there can be no recovery for mental anguish alone, it is held that there can be no recovery for physical suffering resulting from such mental suffering.<sup>21</sup>

d. Applications and Limitations of Rule — (1) IN GENERAL. Even in jurisdictions where the mental anguish doctrine is recognized the courts have, in order, as said, to prevent intolerable litigation,<sup>22</sup> adopted various rules and limitations

No recovery against agent.— Fail v. Western Union Tel. Co., 80 S. C. 207, 60 S. E. 697, 61 S. E. 258.

Constitutionality of statutes.— It has been held that a state statute expressly providing that all telegraph companies doing business within the state "shall be liable in damages for mental anguish or suffering even in the absence of bodily injury for negligence in receiving, transmitting or delivering messages" is not in violation of either the state or federal constitution. Simmons v. Western Union Tel. Co., 63 S. C. 425, 41 S. E. 521, 57 L. R. A. 607. But see dictum in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ferguson, 157 Ind. 64, 60 N. E. 674, 1080, 54 L. R. A. 846 [quoted in Connelly v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 Va. 51, 67, 40 S. E. 618, 93 Am. St. Rep. 919, 53 L. R. A. 663]. It seems, however, that such a statute would be unconstitutional if it extended the doctrine so as to allow a recovery for mental anguish for mere business disappointments, as in such cases there would be no sufficient ground for making a distinction between telegraph companies and common carriers or other agencies for the transmission of money or goods. See Capers v. Western Union Tel. Co., 71 S. C. 29, 50 S. E. 537.

In Virginia there is a statute providing that telegraph companies shall be liable for "special damages," and that "grief and mental anguish occasioned to the plaintiff by the aforesaid negligent failures may be considered by the jury in the determination of the quantum of damages," but it is expressly held that the statute does not permit a recovery for mental anguish as an independent cause of action or affect the common-law rule in this regard. *Connelly v. in regard to its application,<sup>23</sup> which in recent cases they have expressed a disinclination to extend beyond the limitations established by the earlier decisions.<sup>24</sup> Some of these rules and limitations grow out of the general principles previously stated,<sup>25</sup> requiring that the damages recoverable must be the proximate result of the negligence or default complained of,<sup>26</sup> and reasonably within the contemplation of the parties,<sup>27</sup> while others are of a more or less arbitrary character.<sup>28</sup> The cases are not entirely uniform in the different states, or even in the same state, as to the proper applications and limitation of the doctrine,<sup>29</sup> and applications or limitations recognized in some states have been expressly disapproved in others.<sup>30</sup> So in some cases it has been said that the doctrine should be limited to cases where the message related to a matter of sickness or death,<sup>31</sup> and, even in cases of this character, to cases where there was a close family relationship between the parties,<sup>32</sup> and where plaintiff was prevented from being present at the last illness or funeral of his relative.<sup>33</sup> In other cases it is held that the doctrine is not limited to messages relating to sickness or death,<sup>34</sup> but should be restricted

In Tennessee the rule has been stated, in a recent case, that mental anguish may be recovered for being deprived of the privilege of attending the bedside of a near relative during his last hours, or of superintending the preparations for his interment or of being present at the burial, but in no other cases. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McCaul, 115 Tenn. 99, 90 S. W. 856.

33. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McCaul, 115 Tenn. 99, 90 S. W. 856.

If plaintiff was not prevented from being present at the funeral, he cannot recover for mental anguish suffered from the uncertainty as to whether the funeral would be postponed in order to permit him to be present. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reed, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 445, 84 S. W. 296.

Recovery allowed.—Where plaintiff was expecting the arrival of his wife and children on a certain train, it was held that he might recover for mental anguish due to the non-delivery of a telegram from his wife notify-to matters of a personal and social nature, as distinguished from business matters;<sup>35</sup> while in others it has been broadly stated that the doctrine extends to all cases where mental suffering may reasonably be anticipated.<sup>36</sup> It is well settled, however, that damages cannot be recovered on this ground for every mental disturbance or injury to the feelings,<sup>37</sup> and that to constitute mental anguish there must be something more than mere worry, vexation, or disappointment,<sup>38</sup> or anger and resentment,<sup>39</sup> and it must be based upon grounds reasonably calculated to produce mental suffering.<sup>40</sup> There can be no recovery for mental anguish in regard to the non-delivery or delay of a mere business message,<sup>41</sup> or money transfer message,<sup>42</sup> or message asking for money,<sup>43</sup> nor for worry over the loss of a position.<sup>44</sup>

(ii) UNDER STATUTORY PROVISIONS. In those jurisdictions where the mental anguish doctrine has been expressly recognized by statute, it is held that the statutes do not give any new meaning or application thereto, but merely adopt the same as previously recognized and applied by the courts,<sup>45</sup> although ing him that they had gotten left at an intermediate point, whereby he was left in ignorance of their whereabouts and condition. Dayvis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 139 N. C. 79, 51 S. E. 898. Where plaintiff sent a message requesting the addressee to meet his minor daughter who was to arrive in a strange city at midnight, and was informed, after it was too late to make other arrangements, that the message had not been delivered, it was held that he might recover for mental anguish due to his apprehension as to what had befallen her. *Green v. it was not the intention of such statutes to adopt the particular applications of the doctrine prevailing in the state of its origin, or any other particular state.<sup>46</sup>

(III) MUST BE CONTEMPLATED. The rule that plaintiff can recover only such special damages as may be said to have been within the contemplation of the parties applies to damages for mental anguish as well as for actual pecuniary loss,<sup>47</sup> so that there can be no recovery on this ground unless the telegraph company had notice from the language of the message or otherwise that by reason of its negligence or default such damages would be likely to result;<sup>48</sup> and this rule applies

Illustrations of rule.—In the absence of some extrinsic notice as to the purpose or importance of the message, there can be no recovery for mental anguish in regard to a message merely reading, "Come at once" (Bowers v. Western Union Tel. Co., 135 N. C. 504, 47 S. E. 597; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kibble, (Tex. Civ. App. 1909) 115 S. W. 643); or "Have Dr. Register meet me at Weldon Friday" (Williams v. Western Union Tel. Co., 136 N. C. 82, 48 S. E. 559); or "Meet me at Union this P. M." (Jones v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 S. C. 539, 50 S. E. 198).

The statutory provisions expressly adopting the mental anguish doctrine do not affect the application of this rule. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hogue, 79 Ark. 33, 94 S. W. 924.

It is not essential, however, that the company should have detailed information as to every specific matter which may cause mental anguish. Lyles v. Western Union Tel. Co., 77 S. C. 174, 57 S. E. 725.

If the action is founded not on contract but on pure tort, as where defendant wrongfully refuses to receive the message, so that no contract was ever entered into, the rule as stated in the text does not apply and defendant is liable if mental anguish was the natural and proximate result of such refusal, whether within the contemplation of the parties or not. Cordell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 149 N. C. 402, 63 S. E. 71, 22 L. R. A. I. N. S. 540.

not only to the existence of any mental anguish, but also to the particular elements or grounds for such suffering in the particular case,<sup>49</sup> and not only to the general character of the message, but also to plaintiff's connection therewith or interest in the subject-matter.<sup>50</sup> If, however, the company has notice, either from the language of the message or otherwise, of facts from which the resulting mental anguish might reasonably have been anticipated, it will be liable therefor;<sup>51</sup> and ordinarily the fact that the message shows that it relates to a matter of sickness or death is sufficient to charge the company with notice that someone is likely to suffer mental anguish from its non-delivery or delay,<sup>52</sup> although it may not be sufficient to charge the company with notice that mental anguish will result to the particular person appearing as plaintiff.<sup>53</sup>

(iv) MUST BE PROXIMATE RESULT. The general rule applies in mental anguish cases that such suffering must have been the proximate result of the negligence or default complained of;<sup>54</sup> and as the telegraph company is not liable

The period of time for which mental anguish can be recovered is also restricted to that which is the proximate result of the company's negligence. Mitchiner v. Western Union Tel. Co., 75 S. C. 182, 55 S. E. 222, holding that where, through a failure to deliver a telegram to plaintiff's wife, she went to a town where there was smallpox, plaintiff could recover for mental anguish only for such time as would be reasonably necessary to remove her from the danger, and not for any subsequent length of time during which he voluntarily permitted her to remain.

Where plaintiff's telegram merely inquires as to the condition of his sister, a failure to deliver it is not the proximate cause of mental anguish due to his being absent from her funeral, since there is no certainty that any answer to the message would have been sent, or if sent that it would have reached plaintiff. Taliferro v. Western Union Tel. Co., 54 S. W. 825, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1290.

for the mental anguish resulting to plaintiff from the illness or death of a relative, care should always be taken to distinguish between such mental anguish and that which is really attributable to the company's negligence.<sup>55</sup> So also there can be no recovery for not being present at a death-bed or funeral, unless, had the message been duly delivered, plaintiff not only could but would have gone,<sup>56</sup> and arrived in time,<sup>57</sup> which must be affirmatively shown;<sup>58</sup> or where his failure to do so was due to his being erroneously informed that a train which he might have taken had already gone,<sup>59</sup> or to the fact that the train which he did take and which should have arrived in time was late,<sup>60</sup> or to the fact that he stopped off at an intermediate point.<sup>61</sup> In some cases it has been held that if plaintiff could not have arrived by the time at which the funeral actually occurred, he cannot recover on the ground that if the telegram had been duly delivered he would have wired for and procured a postponement;<sup>62</sup> but in other cases it has been held that there may be a recovery on this ground,<sup>63</sup> provided it appears not only that he would have requested a postponement, but also that the request would have been granted.<sup>64</sup> The fact that such a message was sent, and that those in charge of the burial did not postpone it, will not, however, necessarily preclude a recovery.<sup>65</sup> Where a message announces a catastrophe and at the same time announces the safety of those near to plaintiff, the delay of the message is the cause of no actionable mental anguish to plaintiff unless he knew of the catastrophe from some other source;<sup>66</sup> but if he did know of it from some other source, he may recover for the mental anguish sustained owing to the non-delivery of the message.<sup>67</sup>

(v) MUST BE PLAINTIFF'S OWN. The mental anguish for which a recovery may be had must be that of plaintiff himself,<sup>68</sup> and he cannot recover for the mental suffering of his wife or other members of his family;<sup>69</sup> or, it has been held, for mental suffering of his own which is merely reflex or sympathetic suffering due to witnessing the suffering of other members of his family;<sup>70</sup> but the mere fact that others are also caused to suffer does not affect the right of plaintiff to recover for his own mental anguish.<sup>71</sup>

(vi) RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN PARTIES. Another limitation in the application of the mental anguish doctrine is based upon the relationship between the parties,<sup>72</sup> as between plaintiff and the person whose death or illness is announced,<sup>73</sup> or between plaintiff and the addressee whose aid and consolation is desired,<sup>74</sup> or between plaintiff and deceased, where the message relates to the arrival of the

The reason for this rule has been stated to be that since there is no presumption of mental anguish where the relationship is remote, if such mental suffering does in fact result the damage is special and the company is not liable for such special damage unless it has notice of the circumstances giving rise thereto. as in the case of a failure to deliver a message announcing the fact that a relative known to have been seriously sick is better;<sup>92</sup> or delay in regard to a message sent by plaintiff inquiring as to the condition of a sick relative,<sup>93</sup> or a message sent to plaintiff in reply to a message making such inquiry;<sup>94</sup> but in other cases the distinction between mental anguish directly caused and that merely prolonged has been expressly disapproved,<sup>95</sup> and a recovery has frequently been allowed in cases of the latter character,<sup>96</sup> while in one case where the distinction was recognized, a recovery was allowed on the ground that the preëxisting mental suffering was increased.<sup>97</sup>

(VIII) UNWARRANTED APPREHENSION OR MISTAKE OF FACTS. It has been frequently held that there can be no recovery for mental anguish growing out of an unwarranted apprehension on the part of plaintiff;<sup>98</sup> but the mere fact that such suffering grows out of a belief in circumstances which do not actually exist will not preclude recovery,<sup>99</sup> both the reasonableness and the extent of plaintiff's mental suffering being questions for the jury;<sup>1</sup> and if through the negligence or default of the company plaintiff is reasonably caused to believe erroneously in the existence of a state of facts which, if true, would justify mental anguish, he may recover therefor.<sup>2</sup>

is not every matter incidental thereto which may be considered as an element of such damages;<sup>8</sup> and it has been held not to be an element of such damages that plaintiff was prevented from being present with the other members of his family;<sup>9</sup> or was prevented from offering them his consolation and assistance;<sup>10</sup> or that deceased was buried at an unsatisfactory place,<sup>11</sup> in unsuitable clothes,<sup>12</sup> or at the expense of strangers;<sup>13</sup> or that a particular clergyman did not conduct the funeral;<sup>14</sup> or that plaintiff was deprived of the companionship of another member of his family while on the way to the bedside of a dying relative,<sup>15</sup> or was compelled frequently to leave the bedside of his relative to meet incoming trains;<sup>16</sup> and it has also been held that if plaintiff is not actually prevented from being present at the funeral he cannot recover for mental anguish due to uncertainty as to whether the funeral would be postponed in order to allow him to be present.<sup>17</sup> If, however, a case of sickness or death is involved, there is some authority that there may be a right of recovery for mental distress, although plaintiff was not actually prevented from attending at the bedside before death, or from attending the funeral.<sup>18</sup> Thus recoveries have been allowed in cases where, as the direct and proximate consequences of the telegraph company's breach of duty, plaintiff failed to arrive while his relative was still conscious, even though he arrived before death,<sup>19</sup> or failed to arrive in time to see the body before decomposition set in, even though he arrived in time for the funeral.<sup>20</sup> had for mental anguish due to a delay in reaching a relative who has become insane and confined in a hospital. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McIlvoy, 107 Ky. 633, 55 S. W. 428, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1393.

warrant a recovery on this ground.<sup>29</sup> In order to authorize a recovery in such cases, however, the message must show, or the company be otherwise informed, that the sender is accompanied by a corpse,<sup>30</sup> and it must be affirmatively shown that the message could have been delivered to the addressee,<sup>31</sup> and that had it been duly delivered the sender could and would have been met, or the burial arrangements made.<sup>32</sup>

(D) Message Summoning Physician. As to whether in case of non-delivery or delay in regard to a message summoning a physician to attend a member of the sender's family he may recover for his mental anguish due to the absence of the physician and to witnessing the suffering of his sick relative, the authorities are conflicting even in the same jurisdiction,<sup>33</sup> a right of recovery under such circumstances being expressly denied in some cases,<sup>34</sup> and recognized in others,<sup>35</sup> provided the negligence or default complained of was the proximate cause of such suffering.<sup>36</sup>

(XI) CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE. As in other cases plaintiff may be precluded from recovering damages for mental anguish, by reason of his own contributory negligence,<sup>37</sup> which negligence may consist in his failure to send a message requesting the postponement of a funeral,<sup>38</sup> or in failing to take an earlier body left in freight warehouse). But see Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burch, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 237, 81 S. W. 552, holding that there can be no recovery for mental anguish growing out of particular circumstances connected with the failure to meet plaintiff which could not reasonably have been within the contemplation of the parties.

29. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McMorris, 158 Ala. 563, 48 So. 349, 132 Am. St. Rep. 46, holding that the relationship of brothers is sufficient.

Relationship between parties see supra, IX, B, 3, d, (VI).

31. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McMorris, 158 Ala. 563, 48 So. 349, 132 Am. St. Rep. 46, where there was no evidence that the addressee was at his home or place of business on the day in question, or that the message could have been delivered by the telegraph company.

32. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McMorris, 158 Ala. 563, 48 So. 349, 132 Am. St. Rep. 46; Hancock v. Western Union Tel. Co., 137 N. C. 497, 49 S. E. 952, 69 L. R. A. 403. Compare Western Union Tel. Co. v. Crowley, 158 Ala. 583, 48 So. 381.

It cannot be presumed that plaintiff would have been met or the funeral preparations made, however willing the addressee may have been to comply with such a request, since too many contingencies might have prevented his doing so. Hancock v. Western Union Tel. Co., 137 N. C. 497, 49 S. E. 952, 69 L. R. A. 403.

Cooper, 71 Tex. 507, 9 S. W. 598, 10 Am. St. Rep. 772, 1 L. R. A. 728.

The grounds upon which a recovery has been denied are that the mental suffering of plaintiff in such cases is merely reflex or sympathetic, too remote, and not within the contemplation of the parties. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reid, 120 Ky. 231, 85 S. W. 1171, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 659, 70 L. R. A. 289.

W. 245; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stephens, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 129, 21 S. W. 148.

The right of recovery is, however, limited to the mental anguish due to the absence of the physician, and does not include that caused by the death of the member of plaintiff's family. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stephens, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 129, 21 S. W. 148.

36. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Haley, 143 Ala. 586, 39 So. 386, holding that there can be no recovery where the physician could not have arrived in time, even if the message had been promptly delivered. See also Slaughter v. Western Union Tel. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 112 S. W. 688.

38. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Jeanes, 88 Tex. 230, 31 S. C. Exemplary Damages.<sup>41</sup> In those jurisdictions where a corporation may be held liable for exemplary damages for wilful torts committed by its servants, without a showing that the corporation previously authorized or subsequently ratified the torts,<sup>42</sup> a telegraph or telephone company may, in a proper case, be compelled to respond in exemplary damages.<sup>43</sup> Such damages, however, are not recoverable where the action is brought in contract.<sup>44</sup> Exemplary damages are if it was too late when plaintiff received the message for him to have secured a postponement, a failure to send a message requesting a postponement is not contributory negligence); Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Pratt, 85 S. W. 225, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 430 (holding that it is not incumbent upon plaintiff as a matter of law to request a postponement of the funeral); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Crawford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 75 S. W. 843 (holding that plaintiff is not necessarily precluded from recovering on the ground of contributory negligence, where there is evidence which would justify the jury in finding that if the message had been sent the funeral would not have been postponed); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Anderson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 619 (holding that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence in not wiring to have the funeral postponed, where he expected to arrive in time and would have done so but for the lateness of the train).

W. 850, holding, however, that it was not necessarily contributory negligence to fail to take an earlier train, where plaintiff was old and feeble and the earlier train went by an indirect route unfamiliar to him and requiring a change of cars at an intermediate point.

42. See DAMAGES, 13 Cyc. 117.

Authorization or ratification.—In some cases it is held that a telegraph company is not liable for exemplary damages for the acts of its agents unless it authorized or directed or subsequently ratified such acts (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 58 Tex. 170, 44 Am. Rep. 610; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Landry, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 108 S. W. 461 [reversed on other grounds in 102 Tex. 67, 113 S. W. 10]. But see Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 542, 46 Am. Rep. 269); or unless the company was negligent in the selection of its servants (see Western Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, supra), and where it is alleged that defendant was negligent in the employment of incompetent servants, a verdict for exemplary damages cannot be sustained where the evidence does not show any knowledge on the part of defendant of such incompetence or that its servants were negligent before or after the act complained of

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Telegraph and Telephones," § 71.

Conduct of operator.—Where a telegraph operator, when asked about the non-delivery of a message, laughs at the inquiry and gives offensive answers, it will support punitive damages. Toale v. Western Union Tel. Co., 76 S. C. 248, 57 S. E. 117.

Long unexplained delay in the delivery of a telegram is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of punitive damages in the absence of undisputed evidence of some effort to deliver it. *Glover v. also confined in the jurisdictions where they are allowed to cases of wantonness, wilfulness, recklessness, or malice;<sup>45</sup> and while such damages may be recovered in cases of negligence so gross as to amount to wantonness or wilfulness,<sup>46</sup> they cannot be recovered where the company's breach of duty is the result of a mere mistake,<sup>47</sup> or thoughtlessness,<sup>48</sup> or of simple as distinguished from gross negligence,<sup>49</sup> or where there has been some honest effort to perform its duty.<sup>50</sup>

D. Excessive or Inadequate Damages.<sup>51</sup> In mental anguish cases and other cases where the damages are unliquidated the court will not ordinarily interfere with the discretion of the jury in fixing the amount necessary to compensate plaintiff for the injury caused by the breach of duty complained of.<sup>52</sup>

Conflicting duties.—The fact that a delay was due to the operator acting also as agent for the railroad company and express company and obliged from time to time to perform duties for those companies which temporarily interfered with his duties as agent of the telegraph company is to be considered on the question of punitive damages. Co. v. Griffin, 92 Tenn. 694, 22 S. W. 737 (nine hundred dollars held excessive where, although a message notifying plaintiff of his father's illness was not delivered, he went to see his father anyway two days later and was with him for thirty-six hours before his death); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bowles, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 76 S. W. 456 (where had plaintiff started promptly he could have been at the funeral, although the telegraph company's negligence caused him to miss the death; one thousand dollars reduced to five hundred dollars); Western Union Tel. Co. v. Berdine, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 517, 21 S. W. 922 (one thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine dollars and ninety-nine cents for twelve hours' delay in the arrival of a doctor, where plaintiff might have procured another doctor).

inclusion of punitive damages,<sup>58</sup> the court will grant a new trial,<sup>59</sup> unless plaintiff will consent to file a remittitur of the amount to which the court deems the verdict to be excessive.<sup>60</sup> The damages may also be so obviously inadequate that a new trial should be granted.<sup>61</sup>

20. State v. Cunningham, 75 Vt. 332, 334, 55 Atl. 654, where it is said each expression constitutes a good definition of "temporarily."

In an act entitled "An act to remove the seat of government temporarily to Wheeling" the term is used in its most familiar signification and import, or natural and ordinary meaning, and in contradistinction to permanent, and not in a technical sense. It therefore means an indefinite time not to be permanent, but to be determined by some future contingency or event. Slack v. Jacob, 8 W. Va. 612, 649. See also Knox v. Beirne, 4 Ark. 460, 464, where the term is used in contradistinction to "constant" or "permanent."

Construed as short and definite interval or portion of time in a statute authorizing the police commissioners of a city, whenever in their judgment the public peace and tranquillity might require it, to order the closing "temporarily" of all bar-rooms, etc. State v. Strauss, 49 Md. 288, 299.

In reference to an obstruction in a street which may be maintained for the construction of a public improvement, the term is the opposite of "permanent" and means a period of time commensurate with the reasonable prosecution of the work which is being carried on. Lefkowitz v. Chicago, 238 Ill. 23, 29, 87 N. E. 58.

"Temporary loan," as used in General Municipal Law of New York, seems to be one which is to be paid with and by the taxes of a current fiscal year. People v. Carpenter, 31 N. Y. App. Div. 603, 608, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 781. A loan is not temporary which is made for eleven months and then paid to answer a temporary purpose of the creditor, and as soon as that purpose is effected is renewed or made again for the same period. Una v. Dodd, 39 N. J. Eq. 173, 187.

"Temporary privileges" see Bates v. Holbrook, 67 N. Y. App. Div. 25, 35, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 417.

"Temporary purpose" is not confined to a purpose that happens to last in fact for a few years only, but includes a purpose which is temporary in the sense that it may within the reasonable contemplation of the parties come to an end. The term is thus construed in considering the question of the creation of an easement. Burrows v. Lang, (1901) 2 Ch. 502, 508, 70 L. J. Ch. 607, 84 L. T. Rep. N. S. 623, 17 T. L. R. 514, 49 Wkly.
