creditor with respect to the remainder of his debt. Browder v. Hill, 136 Fed. 821, 69 C. C. A. 499.

Where the purchaser of mortgaged property paid only a part of such mortgage debt, as a consideration for the sale of the property, he was not entitled to subrogation to the mortgagee's rights, since the right of subrogation exists only on full satisfaction of the encumbrance. Hubbard v. Le Barron, 110 Iowa 443, 81 N. W. 681.

In Louisiana, although Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2160, c. 2, declares that a debtor borrowing a sum of money to pay his debt by public notarial act may subrogate the lender to the rights of the creditor, and that such subrogation takes place independently of the creditor, such recital is controlled by article 2162, providing that, in case of subrogation made by the debtor, the creditor may exercise his right for what remains due him in preference to the debtor's subrogee. Hutchinson v. Rice, 105 La. 474, 29 So. 898. And it has been held that one who advances money to the mortgage creditor of his debtor, in the payment of interest accumulations on the mortgage debt, becomes legally subrogated pro tanto to the mortgage creditor's right. *Hobgood v. from setting up the right of subrogation as against the other, to the extent of the payments made by them, although the payments may have been made at different times.<sup>83</sup> A judgment creditor is not bound to accept his debt from a stranger to the judgment, and a refusal of such tender is not equivalent to payment, for the purpose of subrogation, nor will it work an equitable assignment.<sup>84</sup>

IV. MANNER AND EFFECT OF SUBROGATION.

A. In General. Subrogation, legal or conventional, passes all the creditor's rights, privileges, liens, judgments, and mortgages,<sup>85</sup> and an actual assignment is not necessary.<sup>86</sup> Furthermore a subrogee is entitled to the benefit of all the remedies of the creditor and may use all the means which he could to enforce payment.<sup>87</sup> He stands in the shoes of the creditor;<sup>88</sup> and hence can be subrogated to no greater rights than the one in whose place he is substituted; if the latter had no rights the subrogee can have none;<sup>89</sup> and where a creditor is seeking to obtain satisfaction of his claim through subrogation to the rights of his debtor against a third party, the utmost good faith on his own part will not entitle him to prevail, if it appears that his debtor has been guilty of such fraud as to defeat his rights against said third party.<sup>90</sup> Furthermore, subrogation, being purely an equitable right, is limited only by equitable considerations, and it is not therefore available or enforceable where there are subsisting and countervailing equities,<sup>91</sup> and the equities being equal the law will prevail.<sup>92</sup> Subrogation cannot take place by effect of law beyond the amount actually disbursed,<sup>93</sup> under legal necessity.<sup>94</sup> In conventional subrogation the extent of the right is measured by the agreement for subrogation,<sup>95</sup> and by the rights of the one granting the right.<sup>96</sup>

to be subrogated to the county's lien for taxes paid by him, as against a subsequent encumbrancer, who has been accorded priority, may have judgment for the amount paid with legal interest, he cannot recover penalties (Dunsmuir v. Port Angeles Gas, etc., Co., 30 Wash. 586, 71 Pac. 9).

Holders of bonds of a county are not entitled to subrogation to the rights of creditors, whose claims were paid from their proceeds, so as to render such bonds enforceable beyond the county's constitutional limit of indebtedness. Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Lyon County, 95 Fed. 325.

B. Benefit of Mortgage Security — 1. IN GENERAL. A person who, under such circumstances that he is entitled to subrogation, pays a debt of another secured by mortgage is subrogated to the rights under the mortgage and can enforce the same for his own benefit,<sup>97</sup> and is subrogated to the priority of the mortgage for the benefit of creditors, the fact that the assignee discharged the debt secured by the pledge with funds of the estate did not entitle him to subrogation to the rights of the pledgee against the stock. Woodside v. Graffin, 91 Md. 422, 46 Atl. 968.

Where a note secured by a chattel mortgage is indorsed to a bank, and a third person, under an agreement with the maker, takes up the note by paying to the bank the amount due thereon, the note not being canceled, such person is subrogated to the rights of the bank in the chattel mortgage. *Ploeger v. The ordinary creditor paying the debt of the mortgage creditor is subrogated of right to the mortgage, under Rev. Civ. If one of two joint makers of a note secured by a mortgage paid the same before maturity, the payment of the debt acted as an equitable assignment to him of the mortgage, and he was subrogated to the rights of the original creditor, as against his co-maker, for the latter's share of the debt. Truss v. Miller, 116 Ala. 494, 22 So. 863.

over subsequent liens existing at the time of payment.<sup>98</sup> In general, any person having a subsequent interest in the premises and not primarily liable for the mortgage debt, who pays off the mortgage, thereby becomes an equitable assignee of it, and may keep the mortgage alive and enforce the lien for his own benefit.<sup>99</sup> Under the doctrine that the debt of the creditor must be fully paid,<sup>1</sup> one paying an instalment of a debt secured by mortgage while subrogated to the mortgage security will be postponed as to the mortgage creditor until the debt is fully paid,<sup>2</sup> unless the creditor has waived his right to priority;<sup>3</sup> and the payee of several notes secured by a mortgage who transfers such notes by indorsement to a third person, and assigns the mortgage to such transferee, is not entitled, when afterward compelled to pay one of such notes, to an assignment of a proportionate interest in the mortgage security.<sup>4</sup> But one who, on a verbal agreement that he should be reimbursed out of the mortgage, pays instalments of interest due thereon, and who afterward, as assignee of the mortgagor for the benefit of creditors, pays the balance of a judgment rendered on the mortgage, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.<sup>5</sup> One who pays a debt secured by a mortgage for the express purpose of discharging the lien cannot be subrogated to the rights thereunder;<sup>6</sup> and voluntary payment of a mortgage debt by a third person does not subrogate him to the mortgagee's rights, in the absence of an agreement to that effect;<sup>7</sup> and one who, by paying a mortgage, only does that which he is bound to do, cannot claim to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.<sup>8</sup> One seeking to be subrogated to the lien of a mortgage which he has paid must show that the owner of the mortgaged premises at the time of such payment was in good conscience bound to pay the debt.<sup>9</sup>

2. PAYMENT BY MORTGAGOR. The person paying off a mortgage can, as a general rule, be substituted to the rights of the mortgagee only where the mortgage is taken up by a third person, and not where it is satisfied by the mortgagor himself;<sup>10</sup> but where a mortgage, after being pledged as security for a note, was assigned, and the mortgagor thereafter paid the note and received the note and mortgage, he is subrogated in the place of the payee of the note as his assignee, and will be allowed the amount paid as credit on the mortgage on foreclosure by the assignee thereof;<sup>11</sup> and the maker of a mortgage note, which a third person agrees, but fails, to pay, is subrogated, on paying it, to all the holder's mortgage rights, even against a third possessor;<sup>12</sup> and where a mortgage is foreclosed without making the holder of a second mortgage a party, and afterward the mortgagor pays off the second mortgage, he is entitled to subrogation to the rights of the holder of the second mortgage.<sup>13</sup>

3. PAYMENT BY TENANT FOR LIFE OR FOR YEARS. A tenant for years, who pays off a mortgage debt, stands by redemption in the place of the mortgagee, and will be subrogated to his rights against the mortgagor and the reversioner;<sup>14</sup> but where the life-tenant paid off a mortgage and took no assignment thereof, and manifests a purpose to make a gift of the payment to the estate, the inference is that he so intended the payment; and he is not entitled to subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee.<sup>15</sup>

V. WAIVER OR LOSS OF RIGHT.

Subrogation, being an equity springing from the relation between the parties, and created and enforced for the benefit and protection of the one in whose favor it is originated, may be asserted or waived at pleasure,<sup>16</sup> either expressly<sup>17</sup> or by implication,<sup>18</sup> but not to the detriment of the subrogee's creditors, who, in turn, are entitled to subrogation to his right of subrogation,<sup>19</sup> and may be assigned and enforced by the assignee.<sup>20</sup> The ordinary doctrine of estoppel also applies.<sup>21</sup> Thus the equitable right to substitution is waived by the conduct of a would-be subrogee in urging another person to buy land without disclosing to him an intention to assert, in any event, any sort of claim to it, resulting from facts or rights then existing, and without notifying him of the existence of any such facts or contingent claim.<sup>22</sup> A creditor is not entitled to subrogation to a lien which, but for his own laches, he might have had.<sup>23</sup>

VI. ACTIONS AND OTHER PROCEEDINGS FOR ENFORCEMENT.

North Carolina.—Brinson v. Thomas, 55 N. C. 414.

Rhode Island.—Moore v. Watson, 20 R. I. 495, 40 Atl. 345 (holding that subrogation is the doctrine of equity jurisprudence, and is not usually applied in courts of common law, except in those states in which equitable remedies are administered through the forms of law. It is a substitution of one person for another, so that the same rights and duties which attach to the original person will attach to the substituted one, and, owing to the strict rules of common-law pleading, this cannot be done in actions at law, except, at any rate, where some statutory provision enables the court to permit the substitution to be made.

Virginia.—McIlvane v. Big Stony Lumber Co., 105 Va. 613, 54 S. E. 473.

But in Ohio it has been held that an action brought by one of the sureties on a note who had paid the judgment obtained thereon, praying that he might be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor, and enforce contribution against his cosureties, is an action for legal, and not equitable, relief. Neilson v. Fry, 16 Ohio St. 552, 91 Am. Dec. 110.

In Pennsylvania while the better practice is held to be to raise the question of subrogation by petition and rule, the court will enter a decree after a hearing before an auditor to distribute the proceeds of a sheriff's sale of the real estate of one of the cosureties. Bunting v. Riehl, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 450.

In Louisiana the right of a third possessor, on relinquishing the mortgaged property, to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgage creditor, against the mortgage debtor, can be exercised only in an action in warranty against the latter. Smith v. Lewis, 45 La. Ann. 1457, 14 So. 221.

Injunction.—A subsequent mortgagee, who has been made a party to a foreclosure of a prior mortgage, cannot maintain a separate action to enjoin a sale under the judgment and to be subrogated to the rights of plaintiff, on the ground of a tender of the amount due on the judgment, his remedy being by motion in the action foreclosing the mortgage. Ketchum v. Crippen, 37 Cal. 223.

Subrogation does not extend to the form or forum of the remedy, where the extent of the remedy is not affected by the form or forum. McDonald v. Asay, 37 Ill. App. 469 [affirmed in 139 Ill. 123, 27 N. E. 929].

Subrogation of sureties of administrator.—Where an administrator, having failed to collect and pay over the purchase-money of land sold by him to pay a debt which had been allowed against the estate of his decedent, was sued by the creditor on his bond, and his sureties were compelled to pay the debt, the proper mode to enforce their right of subrogation was to procure an order of the probate court for the sale of the real estate of the deceased to satisfy the creditor's allowance, but they were not entitled to have the probate court allow as a claim against the estate of the deceased a judgment which they had obtained against the administrator for the amount of the debt paid by them, together with costs and expenses. Werneck v. Kenyon, 66 Mo. 275.

Substitution may be had in probate courts.—McNeill v. McNeill, 36 Ala. 109, 76 Am. Dec. 320. But under Utah Comp. Laws (1888), § 4130, providing that an action may be brought by any holder of a mortgage or lien to enforce the same against the property of the estate subject thereto, it is not necessary for one claiming subrogation under a mortgage to present his claim for allowance to the probate court, but he may bring his action by virtue of his equitable claim and lien, without invoking the aid of the administrator or the probate court. Fullerton v. Bailey, 17 Utah 85, 53 Pac. 1020. And rights of subrogation are held to be peculiarly in the jurisdiction of the chancery court, and therefore an action by the executrix to enforce such rights acquired by the testator was held properly brought there, rather than in probate. Wilder v. Wilder, 75 Vt. 178, 53 Atl. 1072.

statutory and code provisions exist prescribing the mode of enforcing the right in particular cases and allow its enforcement at law,<sup>28</sup> and relief may be had at law where the equity and law procedure are blended;<sup>29</sup> and it is held in a very recent case that, although when the right of subrogation is in question the remedy is in equity, when the right itself is conceded, and there remains to be enforced only the right of realizing the value of the subject-matter, such right may be within the cognizance of a court of law.<sup>30</sup> The right of a surety to subrogation need not be determined in the suit between the creditor and the principal;<sup>31</sup> and one who has paid a judgment as surety before the question of his suretyship has been determined may have that relation established by applying to the court that rendered the original judgment, and become thus subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor.<sup>32</sup>

In Maryland a surety on a bond, who has paid it, cannot recover by suit in the name of the obligee against himself and his co-obligor, but must proceed under Code, art. 5, § 9, authorizing him to demand an assignment of the bond, "and by virtue of such assignment, to maintain an action in his own name against the principal debtor." Martindale v. Brock, 41 Md. 571.

In North Carolina under the code the right of a surety who has paid the debt of his principal to be substituted to all the rights, liens, and securities which the creditor held can only be asserted by a civil action, commenced by the service of a summons (Calvert v. Peebles, 82 N. C. 334); but the rule was formerly otherwise (Allen v. Wood, 38 N. C. 386).

In Pennsylvania, under the act of May 19, 1887 (Pamphl. Laws 132) where a scire facias has been issued by a surety claiming subrogation on a judgment paid by him for the original debtor the surety has the right to have the question of subrogation tried out on the scire facias he has issued, instead of on a motion summarily to set aside the execution. *Thompson v. Where a life-tenant, seeking to recover for assessments made on the property, based her claim on the doctrine of subrogation, the action was governed by Rev. Eddy v. Leath, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. 645.

Where money is fraudulently obtained and used at the instance of the mortgagors to pay off prior valid liens, such liens will be considered to be alive so long as equity and the rights of the parties require; and the holder of the defective mortgage, who had no notice of the fraud or defect until the answers of the mortgagors were filed in a foreclosure action, is not barred by the statute of limitations from asking subrogation to the prior liens, although more than five years have elapsed since they were paid off and discharged. In Georgia, under Code, §§ 2176, 2177, which made subrogation a legal as well as an equitable right, accommodation indorsers who have paid more than their pro rata share of the debt may sue jointly a co-indorser for contribution, founding their action on the indorsed note, and will have the same time in which to bring suit as the creditor would have had on the same instrument, which, under Code, § 2917, is six years after the note becomes due and payable. St. (1881) § 292, which provides that all actions on accounts and contracts not in writing shall be brought within six years after the cause of action accrued); Arbogast v. Hays, 98 Ind. 26 (holding that where a surety, paying the debt of his principal, becomes subrogated to the rights of the creditor in a mortgage given by the principal debtor to the creditor, his action to foreclose the mortgage for reimbursement is limited to six years, even where the mortgage contains an express covenant to pay the debt secured thereby).

The personal representatives of a surety on a sealed note, who paid the same without taking an assignment thereof, and begin an action against the principal in their own names, cannot after an unexplained delay of four years from beginning suit, amend by substituting the personal representative of the payee as plaintiff for their use, such amendment being a subrogation to the rights of the paid creditor, and not allowable where those rights are barred by limitation. A surety subrogated to a judgment cannot maintain an action against his principal after the expiration of the time limited for bringing an action thereon by the creditor (Catheart v. Bryant, 28 Wash. 31, 68 Pac. 171); and a surety on a judgment, who pays the judgment, must take steps to enforce his right of subrogation within the period prescribed as a limitation to the enforcement of simple contracts, for this merely equitable right will not be enforced at the expense of a legal one (Hutcheson v. Reash, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 96).

If the surety enforces contribution through the claim of the creditor, his right is not barred until the statute would have run as to the creditor (Northwestern Nat. Bank v. Great Falls Opera-House Co., 23 Mont. 1, 57 Pac. 440, holding that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1242, providing that a surety paying a judgment shall be entitled to its benefit to enforce contribution, his right is not barred so long as the judgment is alive), and although a judgment creditor held no securities for his debt, a surety of the judgment debtor having satisfied the judgment, there was an equitable assignment to him, and he might maintain an action against his cosurety after the running of limitations against the statutory actions for contribution, and within the period within which the judgment creditor might have asserted his rights against the principal (Burrus v. Cook, 117 Mo. App. 385, 93 S. W. 888).

A surety on a note, who pays the same, and thereby becomes subrogated to the rights of the holder of the note, may pursue upon the note itself, in equity, the same course, within the same limitation period, that the creditor could have pursued at law, had he remained the owner of the note, regardless of the fact that limitations have run against the surety's action at law to recover the money paid out by him on the principal's account. In South Dakota under Comp. The right to subrogation under a prior mortgage can be litigated only in a proceeding to foreclose said mortgage, in which the junior lien-holders are made parties. Farm, etc., Co. v. Meloy, 11 S. D. 7, 75 N. W. 207.

Non-joinder of insolvent debtor immaterial.—In a suit to subrogate a surety who has paid certain debts, to the rights and liens of the creditors against the property of one of the principal debtors, the failure to join the other principal debtor is immaterial, where he is insolvent, and his property is brought into court, and his non-joinder does not affect any rights defendant may have against him. Cauthorn v. Berry, 69 Mo. App. 404.

In an action by a creditor partner to be subrogated to a mortgage given by a debtor partner to secure a firm creditor on payment by the creditor partner of a firm debt, the debtor partner is not a necessary party. Schuyler v. Booth, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 35, 74

Where a bill seeks subrogation to a lien on land, and there are other persons holding liens on the land in conflict with such claims of subrogation, they must be made parties to the bill. Gall v. Gall, 50 W. Va. 523, 40 S. E. 380.

An administrator is a proper party defendant to a bill claiming subrogation to a vendor's lien on land of an intestate. Allen v. Caylor, 120 Ala. 251, 24 So. 512, 74 Am. St. Rep. 31.

W. 55 (holding that the party to whom the debt of another has been paid, the payment of which furnishes the basis of the claim for subrogation, is a proper and necessary party to the action for subrogation); Schilb v. Moon, 50 W. Va. 47, 40 S. E. 329 (holding that the judgment creditor in a judgment on a negotiable note must be a party to a suit in equity by a subsequent indorser to enforce substitution to the lien of the judgment against the land of the prior indorser); Hoffman v. Shields, 4 W. Va. 490 (holding that it is necessary in a bill to enforce a judgment lien by a surety, where such surety has paid the judgment, that the original judgment creditors whose judgment he has paid be made parties). But see Towe v. Newbold, 57 N. C. 212, where the court seems to hold by implication that where a surety has paid money he is entitled to an assignment of all the securities that the creditor held, and to substitution, and the creditor need not be a party.

But where a surety pays a judgment rendered in favor of the state against him and his principal, he may maintain a suit to enforce the lien thereof for his benefit, without making the state a party to the suit. Pickens v. Wood, 57 W. Va. 480, 50 S. E. 818.

Where an original creditor has satisfied his claim by a formal instrument sufficient for that purpose, he is not a necessary party to a suit for subrogation to his rights. Boevink v. Christiaanse, 69 Nebr. 256, 95 N. W. 652.

Similarly in an action for conversion by the mortgagor of a chattel against a purchaser from the mortgagee, who has therefore become subrogated to the rights of such mortgagee by operation of law, the mortgagee is not a necessary party to give defendant complete protection against plaintiff. *Potter v. that cosureties may maintain a joint bill in equity to enforce their right of subrogation.<sup>50</sup>

E. Pleading and Proof. Subrogation is not a universal remedy for parties who have lost their money. It has its sphere of relief plainly limited by its nature;<sup>51</sup> and before subrogation can be decreed, the facts on which it arises must be distinctly and appropriately alleged and shown, and the equity plainly appear, and the complaint to enforce a right acquired by subrogation should state the facts which give rise to the right claimed.<sup>52</sup> The issue of subrogation must be at a sale under his judgment, in which such creditor claimed the right to be subrogated to the benefits of a trust deed prior to his judgment, neither the trustees in the deed of trust nor the grantors are necessary parties, as they cannot be affected by the judgment therein. *Swain v. A mere allegation of belief that there was fraud and collusion in the sale of the property sought to be reached, unaccompanied by any averment of fact, is not sufficient to charge fraudulent collusion. Smith v. Providence County Sav. Bank, 18 R. I. 705, 30 Atl. 342, holding also that in an action for subrogation it is not necessary to allege that defendant obtained the property sought to be reached by fraud and collusion, it being sufficient to allege that he purchased the same with notice of plaintiff's equity therein.

Prayer for relief held sufficient.—The prayer of the petition of one of the sureties of a trustee for an order for payment from a new trustee of money paid for their principal, and for such relief as to the court may seem proper, is sufficient. John's Estate, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 77.

Description of land held sufficient in a proceeding to subrogate a judgment creditor to the landlord's lien on crops, although insufficient in a proceeding to foreclose such lien see Kelly v. Gibbs, 84 Tex. 143, 19 S. W. 380, 563.

It is too late for appellee to question the sufficiency of the pleading on appeal from a judgment denying the right of substitution, where, although the pleading asserting the right to be substituted to a vendor's lien does not allege that the lien was retained in the deed, no objection being made to the pleading, and the case being prepared for trial upon the idea that the lien was retained in the deed, and it being agreed at the trial that the lien had not been released. Greishaber v. Farmer, 42 S. W. 742, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1028.

Cross petition for subrogation not an amendment.—Where a vendor sues the maker and indorsers of the purchase-money note, and in the same action seeks enforcement of the vendor's lien, the cross petition of defendant indorsers, filed on their paying the note, after judgment for plaintiff, and thus becoming subrogated to the vendor's lien, seeking enforcement of the lien, is not an amendment, which can be filed only by permission of the court, but a supplemental pleading in the nature of an interpleader which can be filed in vacation. Matney v. Williams, 89 S. W. 678, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 494.

Where a purchaser at a void sale under a mortgage sues to subrogate himself to the pleaded,<sup>53</sup> and the subrogee who, on paying the debt, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of plaintiff, must ask for such relief in his answer;<sup>54</sup> and plaintiff cannot be subrogated to the rights of a defendant under a contract with a third person in an action in which the terms of the contract are not alleged.<sup>55</sup> But it is held that, although a party does not specifically claim the right of subrogation, equity will grant the relief, where it is justified by the facts alleged and established,<sup>56</sup> under the prayer for general relief.<sup>57</sup> The petition need not anticipate defenses,<sup>58</sup> and the sufficiency of the complaint must be judged from the pleading as a whole.<sup>59</sup> Proof must conform to the pleadings.<sup>60</sup>

F. Evidence. The rules of evidence in civil actions and proceedings generally<sup>61</sup> apply to proceedings to enforce subrogation,<sup>62</sup> the burden of proof being upon claimant to establish his right by clear evidence.<sup>63</sup> It is held, however, that where a stranger to an obligation pays a part of the whole of the debt, there is a presumption that the transaction was a purchase of the debt and accompanying security to the extent of the payment.<sup>64</sup> rights of the mortgagee, the complaint should allege that the purchaser bought with the belief that he was obtaining the legal title, and should set forth the amount of the price. Griffin v. Griffin, 70 S. C. 220, 49 S. E. 561.

E. 554, holding that where a creditor's bill alleges a state of facts entitling plaintiff to be subrogated in equity under the prayer for general relief to the rights of a judgment creditor whose debt he had paid as defendant's surety, the failure to ask specifically for such relief is not ground for dismissing the bill on demurrer.

A junior mortgagee who has the right of subrogation for all prior mortgages paid off by him for the purpose of protecting his lien, when made a defendant in chancery proceedings, should ask for the enforcement of such

G. Judgment or Decree. One who is entitled to subrogation may have a judgment or decree entered in his favor which will best insure to him the enjoyment of his equitable right.<sup>65</sup> Thus where a surety pays off a debt for which he is bound, during the prosecution of an action by the creditor, he may ask the court to render judgment for him instead of for the creditor;<sup>66</sup> but where the right demanded is disputed by other parties to the action having adverse interests, the court will go no further than to direct the subrogation on such terms as may be justified, leaving the conflicting claims to be determined by future adjudication.<sup>67</sup> A plaintiff, in a judgment against several defendants, by one of whom it was paid, cannot interfere to prevent a decree of subrogation in favor of the party paying against another one of the defendants for his proportion of the debt.<sup>68</sup>

H. Review. It has been held that subrogation being an equitable remedy can be properly reviewed in higher courts only by appeal,<sup>69</sup> and the proceedings therein should be in analogy to equity practice, as by petition and answer and not on mere notice.<sup>70</sup>

VII. APPLICATION OF DOCTRINE TO PARTICULAR RELATIONS.

A. Persons Interested in the Administration of Estates. A person who, being interested in the administration of an estate, pays claims against the estate, is entitled to subrogation of the creditor's right to recover the amount paid.<sup>71</sup> Thus a legatee or devisee whose legacy or devise has been absorbed in 71. Chaplin v. Sullivan, 128 Ind. 50, 27 N. E. 425.

If the life-tenant pay out money which he was not required to pay, or more than his proportionate share, he becomes to that extent creditor of the estate, and subrogated to the rights of the parties whose claims he has bought or paid off, and he, and those claiming under him, occupy a position analogous to a mortgagee in possession after condition broken, and cannot be evicted until all sums due them from the estate have been repaid. Whitney v. Salter, 36 Minn. 103, 30 N. W. 755, 1 Am. St. Rep. 656.

Where a widow paid claims against her deceased husband's estate, she is entitled to subrogation to the rights of the creditors whose claims were so paid (Jefferson v. Edrington, 53 Ark. 545, 14 S. W. 99, 903, holding also that the fact that the widow suppressed assets of the estate in rendering her accounts as executrix should not defeat her right to subrogation where the funds unaccounted for, or wrongfully diverted, are subsequently restored; Brown v. Forst, 95 Ind. 248, holding that the widow's right to recover against the estates rests in the doctrine of subrogation and derives no force from any contract with the executor or administrator; Neptune v. Tyler, 15 Ind. App. 132, 41 N. E. 965; Kelley v. Ball, 19 S. W. 581, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 132. But see Skinner v. Chapman, 78 Ala. 376), although the evidence does not affirmatively show that when she furnished it she had any intention of requiring it to be repaid, where it does not appear that she made a gift of it (Neptune v. Tyler, supra [following Brown v. Forst, 95 Ind. 248]); and where a vendor has two funds to resort to for the payment of unpaid purchase-money, the real estate sold by him, on which his lien especially rests, and the personal and other estate of his deceased vendee, which has been devised to the widow in lieu of her dower, and he resorts to the legatee, who discharges his claim, and by that means and to that extent diminishes her legacy, a court of equity will relieve the legatee, and subrogate her to the rights of the creditor (Durham v. Rhodes, 23 Md. 233). Similarly where a creditor of an insolvent testator holding a vendor's lien on real estate refused to file such claim against the estate, but sold the property on foreclosure of his lien, the testator's personal estate being the primary fund for the payment of such debt, and the widow's homestead and dower claim being superior to that of general creditors, she was entitled to subrogation to the rights of the lien creditor as against the personal estate, and to the allowance of dower and homestead from the surplus arising on the sale of the real estate, and from the pro rata share of the personal estate to which a lien creditor would have been entitled had he filed a claim against the estate. Whitmore v. Rascoe, 112 Tenn. 621, 85 S. W. 860.

payment of the debts of the testator may have it out of other property of the testator by subrogation to the debts of creditors, and may enforce contribution by other members of the same class,<sup>72</sup> and the same rule applies to heirs who have paid or whose property has been taken to pay debts of the intestate;<sup>73</sup> and where some of the heirs, after division of the realty, discharge a debt, which is a common liability upon the realty, by agreement with the rest, or pay more than their proportionate share, they are subrogated to the creditors' rights to proceed against the lands of the others.<sup>74</sup> But where heirs of an estate, supposing it to be solvent, pay off mortgages on lands, and, on learning afterward that the estate is insolvent, claim to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgages, if the intent to be subrogated did not exist at the time of payment of the mortgages, the claim cannot be maintained.<sup>75</sup> Where a wife paid a balance due on a mortgage of land in which she had a life-interest, executed by the husband and wife for his debt, her devisees

Where a widow elected to take a legacy bequeathed to her in lieu of dower, and a portion of the amount necessary to satisfy the legacy was used for the payment of testator's debts, she was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of creditors against testator's real estate for the recovery of the amount so taken. Overton v. Lea, 108 Tenn. 505, 68 S. W. 250.

If a widow, before the appointment of an administrator, incurs the expense of erecting a suitable monument over the grave of her husband, she is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the dealer who erected the monument, and may recover therefor against the administrator. *Pease v. If there be no devise of real estate, if the creditors exhaust the personal estate, then as against the heir at law the legatees may stand in the place of the creditors and come upon the real estate which has descended. Alexander v. Miller, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 65.

Where legatees pay off and discharge a judgment against the executors of the estate, which constituted a lien on the estate, they are substituted to the rights of the judgment creditor. Place v. Oldham, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 400; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 359.

A devisee whose devise has been sold to pay the debts of the estate, the personal estate being insufficient to pay the debts, is entitled to reimbursement by way of subrogation out of the assets subsequently received and discovered by the executors, the personal estate being the primary fund for the payment of debts, and being charged with the debts. Couch v. Delaplaine, 2 N. Y. 397. And where a devisee of land, which by the direction of the deviser was levied on during his life under an execution against himself, after his death bought the land at the execution sale to relieve it of the encumbrance, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor, and to have the amount which he advanced paid out of the personal estate or out of the residuum; but it would not be so if it not only had been levied on but sold during the life of the testator. Redmond v. Borrowghs, 63 N. C. 242.

are entitled, as against his heir, to be subrogated to the right of the mortgagee to the extent of the amount so paid.<sup>76</sup> As in other cases of subrogation the person seeking contribution must be personally bound for the debt paid, or it must be a charge on his estate; a volunteer or stranger cannot claim subrogation against the estate,<sup>77</sup> and it must have been actually paid by him or with his money.<sup>78</sup> A person seeking rights of subrogation against an estate can stand in no better position than the person to whose rights he claims subrogation.<sup>79</sup>

B. Persons Liable For Loss or Injury Caused by Fault of Another.

A person liable for and who has paid for a loss or injury caused by fault of another is subrogated to the rights of the injured party against the wrong-doer;<sup>80</sup> but a person damnified by the acts of a wrong-doer has no right to be subrogated to an indemnity which the latter may have taken against liability from his wrongful act,<sup>81</sup> and a creditor is not subrogated to his debtor's rights against one who injures the latter, although the wrong may have rendered the debtor unable to pay,<sup>82</sup> and similarly one person cannot maintain an action against another for an injury to a third on the ground that the wrong has also indirectly injured the first by reason of his contractual relations with the third person.<sup>83</sup>

One who pays taxes for an executor is not subrogated to the rights of the executor for reimbursement from the funds of the estate, if it appears that the executor has wasted the assets of the estate. Wilson v. Fridenberg, 21 Fla. 386.

78. Dean v. Rounds, 18 R. I. 436, 27 Atl. 515, 28 Atl. 802, holding that where the amount of a mortgage, given to an executor by a legatee and her husband, to secure notes which are equitably her debt, is deducted from her legacy, her legatees are not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.

An executor who is liable for the default of his co-executor is entitled to be subrogated to whatever compensation he has a right to, and his right cannot be defeated by his co-executor electing after he becomes insolvent not to assert the claim. Albro v. Robinson, 93 Ky. 195, 19 S. W. 587, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 124.

Subrogation to rights against sheriff for nonfeasance or misfeasance.—Where a consignee recovers judgment against a carrier for failure to deliver goods upon which he has a lien for advances, the same having been wrongfully attached, the carrier is subrogated to the rights of the consignee, and may maintain an action against the officer who levied the attachment, but cannot recover the costs and expenses of the suit against the carrier by the consignee, for these should not have been incurred. Holmes v. Balcom, 84 Me. 226, 24 Atl. 821. And where the assignee of a bond recovers judgment thereon, and, after execution against the obligor is returned unsatisfied because of the sheriff's neglect or malfeasance, sues and recovers from his assignor, the latter has a right of action against the sheriff for his misconduct. Smith v. Triplett, 4 Leigh (Va.) 590.

A sheriff liable for a fine against his prisoner, who paid the amount pursuant to orders of the county court, became subrogated to all rights of the county in the obligation executed by the prisoner and defendant as surety (Wilson v. White, 82 Ark. 407, 102 S. W. 201); and an officer who becomes liable for the amount of a judgment by reason of his failure to discharge his official duty under an execution in his hands may, on payment of the judgment debt, be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor (Bennett v. Chandler, 199 Ill. 97, 64 N. E. 1052).

An executor is bound to account for money belonging to the state which has been collected by his attorney, and the payment thereof subrogates him as an individual to all rights theretofore existing in favor of the trust estate. Lupton v. Taylor, 39 Ind. App. 412, 78 N. E. 689, 79 N. E. 523.

C. Persons Jointly or Jointly and Severally Liable For the Same Debt — 1. GENERAL RULE. Although it has been held in a minority of cases that a joint debtor is not entitled to subrogation,<sup>84</sup> his remedy being a suit for contribution,<sup>85</sup> other cases hold that where there is a joint duty, and one or more of the obligors discharges the common liability after maturity, the law raises the duty and obligation of payment of a proportionate share, which may be enforced by subrogation,<sup>86</sup> each joint debtor being regarded as the principal debtor for that part of the debt which he ought to pay, and as a surety for his creditor as to that part of the debt which ought to be discharged by the other joint debtor, and he has the same right to be subrogated to the securities held by the creditor that exists in behalf of a surety who pays in excess of his share of the burden.<sup>87</sup> But subrogation takes place only for the share of his co-debtor,<sup>88</sup> except where there is some equitable reason why the whole debt should have been paid by the others alone, when equity will allow subrogation to the entire amount.<sup>89</sup> Subrogation is not allowed at all where there was some sufficient consideration for the excessive payment;<sup>90</sup> and where as between two joint debtors there rests upon one the ultimate obligation of paying it, there cannot arise any rights of subrogation in his favor, for the reason that the payment by the one, whose obligation it was to pay, operates as an extinguishment of the debt and a discharge of all liens held by the creditor for his security.<sup>91</sup>

2. JOINT MORTGAGORS. If two or more persons mortgage their joint property to secure a joint debt, and each agrees to take up a proportionate part of the debt, and one defaults, whereby the other mortgagor is compelled to take up the whole of the debt, a lien in equity is thereby created upon the mortgaged property, to the amount of the part due by the other in favor of that mortgagor who took up the whole,<sup>92</sup> and the same rule applies to a purchase-money mortgage;<sup>93</sup> and defendant who has made payment for his co-defendant toward satisfying a prior mortgage and beyond his proportion of the burden will be substituted for plaintiff on a sale of the premises to that extent.<sup>94</sup> Similarly where a joint tenant to whom his cotenant had assigned his interest pays a mortgage on the land in ignorance that his joint tenant had previously conveyed his interest to another by deed of trust, he is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, and one half of the land will be considered as his, and the other half sold to satisfy one half of the mortgage debt;<sup>95</sup> and one who has paid off a mortgage, the interest on which was to be proportionately borne by another, becomes subrogated to the right to receive from that other his proportion of the interest,<sup>96</sup> and one of two co-contractors not bound may, upon paying the debt, take an assignment of the mortgage security and enforce it against the contractor bound.<sup>97</sup> In all these cases the mortgage may be treated as still subsisting for the protection of the party making the payment or the delinquent's share in the mortgaged property may be regarded as subject to a lien for the amount paid for his benefit.<sup>98</sup> But as in other cases of subrogation the subrogee's rights cannot be allowed to interfere with the creditor's full satisfaction of the debt.<sup>99</sup>

3. JOINT JUDGMENT DEBTORS. Subrogation has been refused to one joint judgment debtor paying off the entire debt.<sup>1</sup> But the better and more generally followed rule of the civil law is to the contrary;<sup>2</sup> and one of several coobligors, against whom judgment is rendered, may advance the amount of the judgment and contract for the control of the execution, and will be protected until he is

2. Coffee v. Tevis, 17 Cal. 239; Theus v. Armistead, 116 La. 795, 41 So. 95 (holding that one of two debtors in solido on payment of a judgment against both is subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor against his co-defendant to the extent of his portion of the debt, including interest and costs); Buchanan v. Clark, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 164 (holding that where one of two joint debtors fails to keep his agreement to pay to the creditor money received from the other, and a judgment is rendered against them, the latter, on payment by him of the judgment, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor in enforcing the judgment against the former out of land which the former had conveyed after the rendition of the judgment, as against alienees who have no better equity).

In Minnesota, under Gen. St. (1878) c. 66, § 330, where one of several debtors, against whom there is a joint judgment, pays more than his proportion, and files notice of his payment and claim to contribution, he is ipso facto subrogated to the right of the judgment creditor in the judgment and may issue execution thereon to enforce contribution from the other judgment debtors, and it is not necessary that his property should have been levied upon before he paid the judgment. Ankeny v. Moffett, 37 Minn. 109, 33 N. W. 320.

In Indiana, under Rev. St. (1881) §§ 1214, 1215 (Rev. St. (1894) §§ 1228, 1229), where any one of several judgment defendants satisfies plaintiff, the judgment is not discharged, but remains in force to collect of the others the ratable proportion each is equitably bound to pay. Harter v. Songer, 138 Ind. 161, 37 N. E. 595. But the statute is held to apply where the judgment is against two obligors on a promissory note which fails to show any suretyship, and the judgment is paid by one of them without raising any issue as to which was surety. Kreider v. Isenbice, 123 Ind. 10, 23 N. E. 786; Dewitt v. Boring, 123 Ind. 4, 23 N. E. 1085.

Similarly, one of two debtors in a joint judgment note, compelled to pay the entire amount, is entitled to subrogation against the estate of his coobligor. Ackerman's Appeal, 106 Pa. St. 1. But see West Branch Bank v. Armstrong, 40 Pa. St. 278, holding that the joint indorsers of negotiable paper, reimbursed his proportion of the demand;<sup>3</sup> but it is held that to entitle a joint debtor on a judgment to subrogation to the rights of the judgment creditors upon a purchase by him of the judgment, it must appear that it was his intention, in making the purchase, to acquire these rights.<sup>4</sup>

4. PARTNERS. A partner who on the dissolution of the partnership pays partnership debts is subrogated to the creditor's rights in the joint property to obtain contribution,<sup>5</sup> and where partners agree that one shall pay a firm debt, the other becomes a surety for him, and, upon making a payment, is subrogated to the rights of the creditor against his copartner;<sup>6</sup> and thus if upon dissolution one partner assumes to pay firm debts, he becomes the principal as between the partners and the other members merely sureties, although as to the creditor they are both principals;<sup>7</sup> and where one partner after going out of the firm under covenant by his partners that they will pay the firm debts and indemnify him against them pays debts he becomes their surety, and is entitled to come in as a creditor and be subrogated to the rights of the creditors whom he has paid.<sup>8</sup> The retiring partner, occupying the position of surety as to a firm debt assumed by his former copartners, who continue the business as a new firm, has the right, upon his being compelled to pay such debt, to a surrender to him by the creditors who are liable as co-promisors, have no rights of subrogation against each other.

Suppl. 733], holding that where a partnership has been dissolved and an accounting shows one of the partners to be the creditor of the other, and such creditor partner pays an outstanding firm debt, he will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor whose debt he has paid in mortgages which the debtor partner gave him to secure the firm debt.

Virginia.—Sands v. Durham, 99 Va. 263, 38 S. E. 145, 86 Am. St. Rep. 884, 54 L. R. A. 614, 98 Va. 392, 36 S. E. 472, holding that where a partnership has been dissolved, the social assets exhausted in the payment of partnership debts, and a settlement of the partnership accounts made, from which it appears that one partner was in advance to the firm, and with his individual means has paid judgment against it, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditors whose judgments he has discharged, and to subject the land owned by his copartner at the time of the docketing of the judgments to their satisfaction.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Subrogation," § 10. 6. Field v. Hamilton, 45 Vt. 35.

7. Conwell v. McCowan, 81 Ill. 285 (holding that where, on dissolution of partnership, one partner assumes the payment of a partnership note, and executes a mortgage to the payee of the note to secure its payment, and to indemnify his copartner against the payment thereof, such copartner will be entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee to the extent of any payment he may have to make on such partnership note); In re McGee, 1 Pearson (Pa.) 42 (holding that when, on the dissolution of the firm, one of the partners assumes a particular debt, he is bound to pay it, and, if another partner discharges it, he is entitled to be subrogated to the claims of the creditor against the one who assumed it); Royalton Nat. Bank v. Cushing, 53 Vt. 321 (holding that when upon the dissolution or reconstruction of a firm, one or more of the partners promises to pay the partnership debts in consideration of receiving or retaining the assets, this will place the rest in the position of sureties); Ætna Ins. Co. v. Wires, 28 Vt. 93 (holding that where, upon the dissolution of a copartnership, one partner assumes a liability, he does it prima facie upon sufficient consideration, leaving his copartners liable only as sureties, and they may take measures to have the claim assigned and collected from the partner liable). And see Tibbetts v. Magruder, 9 Dana (Ky.) 79.

The rule applies where one partner is bankrupt.—Thus where a creditor of a partnership, which has been dissolved and the debts thereof assumed by one of the partners, thereby constituting him the principal debtor and the other partner surety, has proved the debt in bankruptcy against the principal debtor, the surety may have himself subrogated to the creditor's rights on paying the balance due on the debt. Schmitt v. Greenberg, 58 Misc. (N. Y.) 570, 109 N. Y. Suppl. 881.

8. Olson v. Morrison, 29 Mich. 395; Burnside v. Fetzner, 63 Mo. 107; Merrill v. Green, 55 N. Y. 270; Gilfillan v. Dewoody, 157 Pa. St. 601, 27 Atl. 782; Scott's Appeal, 88 Pa. St. 173. But see Griffin v. Orman, 9 Fla. 22, holding that where a continuing partner agreed with the retiring partners to pay the firm debts and gave his bond and security to that effect, but no arrangement was made with the creditors, they did not take the continuing partner as principal and the retiring partners as sureties, and the latter, on pay-of a mortgage given by one of the copartners to secure the debt; and such right is not defeated by the bankruptcy discharge of the members of the new firm from personal liability.<sup>9</sup> A surety for the partner relieved of the debts has the same right of subrogation upon paying a firm indebtedness,<sup>10</sup> as have likewise his creditors.<sup>11</sup> A surviving partner who has paid joint judgments against himself and the estate of a deceased partner is entitled to subrogation to the amount equitably due from the estate of the deceased partner;<sup>12</sup> and conversely, where partnership creditors proceed against the estate of a deceased partner, his representatives will stand in their place, and be substituted to their rights against the other partners;<sup>13</sup> and a partner who pays a judgment against the firm on an acceptance in the firm's name by a copartner for his private account may, by subrogation to the creditor's rights, recover the amount from such copartner.<sup>14</sup> But it has been held that where one of two partners pays a partnership debt by compromise with the creditor, the latter cannot keep the debt alive and authorize the partner paying to enforce it against the other;<sup>15</sup> and after the satisfaction of a judgment for a partnership debt by one of the partners sued, equity will not extend or preserve the vitality of the legal security, under the guise of an assignment, so as to charge the bail of the other partner.<sup>16</sup> In any event a partner who has paid a firm debt is held not to be entitled to subrogation against his partner until an account has been settled between them.<sup>17</sup>

5. TENANTS IN COMMON. Where a tenant in common pays off an encumbrance on the common estate, equity will consider the encumbrance as still existing, in order to enforce contribution from the cotenant, or as extinguished, according to the justice of the case.<sup>18</sup> Generally as between tenants in common of an estate bound by a joint lien, the part of each is held liable to contribute only its proportion toward the discharge of the common burden, and beyond this is regarded as the surety for the remaining part, and if the part of one is called on to pay more than its proportion, the tenant, or his lien creditors, are entitled to stand in the place of the satisfied creditor to the extent of the excess which ought to have been paid out of the other shares;<sup>19</sup> and the same rule applies where the parties are owners

ing the debts, were not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors.

Auburn Iron Co.*, 64 Minn. 404, 67 N. W. 221 (holding that if defendant, to protect and preserve its own interests and rights, was compelled to pay a sum which should have been paid by a cotenant on account of royalty due the lessor, it would be entitled to reimbursement, by way of an equitable lien on the cotenant's of distinct parcels,<sup>20</sup> or joint devisees of land charged with the payment of legacies, the entire amount of which is paid by one devisee.<sup>21</sup> Where property owned by two is subject to a mortgage, and as between the two it is the duty of one to discharge it, and the other pays the debt on condition that the mortgage shall inure to his benefit, an equity arises in his favor entitling him to indemnity through the mortgage;<sup>22</sup> but payment by the one whose duty it is to pay extinguishes the debt,<sup>23</sup> and a vendee who pays a part of the consideration after notice of the adverse equity is not a bona fide purchaser as to the amount paid.<sup>24</sup> Similarly one of two cotenants of land subject to a purchase-money mortgage who redeems the mortgage to protect the property is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee under the mortgage, and equity will keep the encumbrance alive for his benefit;<sup>25</sup> he occupies the position of a surety and is entitled to set up the bond as a specialty debt against the estate of his cotenant,<sup>26</sup> and may purchase the mortgage, and enforce its payment out of the joint estate;<sup>27</sup> and where one of two joint owners of lands subject to a purchase-money mortgage dies and the survivor pays the mortgage debt he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee to the extent of a moiety of the debt, so as to take precedence over a claim of dower by the widow of the deceased joint owner.<sup>28</sup>

D. Parties to Bills or Notes. By paying a bill or note an indorser who is actually bound becomes subrogated to all the rights under the note against prior parties;<sup>29</sup> and one who is bound as indorser for the payment of a note secured by

The grantee of a tenant in common, who took up the bond secured by the mortgage, which he and the other cotenant as tenants in common were jointly obligated to pay, thereby acquired a right to collect one half thereof out of the estate of the cotenant, and was entitled to all the securities and remedies given by the mortgage, which by assignment passed to his assignees. Watson's Appeal, 90 Pa. St. 426.

Where the executors of two deceased tenants in common sold the real estate of the decedents, some of the encumbrances on which were joint liens, and paid off the liens in order to make title clear, one paying a larger amount than the other on an agreement that on distribution of the estate the proper adjustment should be made, he was entitled to be subrogated to the lien creditor's rights to the extent of the overpayment. Strough's Estate, 2 Chest. purchase-money, and this vendee afterward granted to a third party under a similar contract, the latter was not, by reason of discharging such balance, subrogated to the lien of the original vendor so as to prevent a lien from attaching in favor of the one who sold to his cotenant.

Where two partners purchase lands in trust for the firm, giving a mortgage back to secure the purchase-money, which the whole firm is to pay, but neglects to do so, and one of the partners is compelled to pay the debt to protect his own interest and save the land from sale under a power in the mortgage, he will have a clear right to be subrogated to the lien of the mortgagee. *McMillan v. United States.—Bird v. Louisiana State Bank, 93 U. S. 96, 23 L. ed. 818.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Subrogation," § 14.

A bank, as indorsee of notes, takes them with all privileges securing their ultimate payment; and when afterward taken up by the indorsers they return with a subrogation of the same privileges, and must be regarded in their hands as if never negotiated in bank. Wiggin v. Flower, 5 Rob. (La.) 406; Saul v. Nicolet, 15 La. 246.

The indorser of a note for the price of goods sold is by its payment subrogated to the vendor's rights, and may rescind the sale. Torregano v. Segura, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 158.

An accommodation indorser of a bill or note is to be regarded as standing in the character of a surety, and, in the event of his paying, is to be subrogated to all the rights and remedies of a creditor. Hoffman v. Butler, 105 Ind. 371, 4 N. E. 681; Yates v. Mead, 68 Miss. 787, 10 So. 75 [explaining Dibrell v. Dandridge, 51 Miss. 55] (construing Code (1880), §§ 998, 1140); Boyd v. Finnegan, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 222; Gunnis v. Weigley, 114 Pa. St. 191, 6 Atl. 465; McDonald Mfg. Co. v. Moran, 52 Wis. 203, 8 N. W. 864. But he must have actually paid. Malone Third Nat. Bank v. Shields, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 274, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 298.

The payment of an accommodation draft by the acceptor entitles him to be regarded in the light of a surety, and he has equal claims to enforce its payment against the drawer as any other surety who has the draft of his principal. The doctrine is that the payment entitles the doctry to be subrogated to all the rights of the creditor. Hoffman v. Bignall, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 702. Conversely, where one procures bills to be drawn for his accommodation, and gives a deed of trust to the acceptor, and negotiable notes for the amount of the acceptance, as well as for an account stated, as collateral security, the holders of the bills may resort to the trust property for the payment of them when dishonored, if the notes have not been negotiated to bona fide holders for value. Toulmin v. Hamilton, 7 Ala. 362.

Where the indorsers of the paper of a firm dissolved by death of a member indorse on his credit the paper of the surviving partner who pays the former note with the proceeds thereof, but without any arrangement to that effect with the indorsers, the indorsers are not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors who were paid, in the realty of the partnership. Holland v. Fuller, 13 Ind. 195.

A subsequent indorser of a negotiable note, who pays a judgment on it in favor of the holder against the maker, a prior indorser and the subsequent indorser, the maker being insolvent, is entitled in equity to substitution to the lien of the judgment against such prior indorser. Schilb v. Moon, 50 W. Va. 47, 40 S. E. 329.

30. Woodward v. American Exposition R. Co., 39 La. Ann. 566, 2 So. 413.

An accommodation indorser stands in the light of a surety to the maker, and upon payment is subrogated to the rights of the holder of securities pledged to the holder by the maker. Toler v. Cushman, 12 La. Ann. 733; Humphreys v. Vertner, Freem. (Miss.) 251; Riverside Bank v. Totten, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 519; Cleveland Second Nat. Bank v. Mirrison, 3 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 534, Ohio L. J. 534. Yet, as between him and a bona fide holder, where his liability has become fixed, he becomes the principal debtor, and if he desires the benefit of any security held by the creditor, he must first pay the paper, assert his right of subrogation, and himself enforce the security, and the fact that other parties are similarly interested with him in enforcing the security is immaterial; he is only entitled to such benefit as is conferred by the security as it is (Buffalo First Nat. Bank v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 405, 27 Am. Rep. 66).

An accommodation maker of a note, transferred for value to a bank, is entitled to have the amount which the payee owed the bank ascertained, and to be subrogated to the rights of the bank as to the securities, upon paying the amount so ascertained, the expense incurred by the bank in relation to the securities, and the costs of the action (Koehler v. Farmers', etc., Bank, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 745), and where the payee and first indorser of an accommodation note induces a subsequent indorser to take up the note, and gives him security therefor, the security will inure to the benefit of the maker, if he be obliged to pay the note and afterward sue the payee (Ward v. Wick, 17 Ohio St. 159).

Accommodation acceptor.—Although a drawee who accepts a bill for the accommodation of the drawer is regarded, in favor of a bona fide holder, as a principal debtor, yet, as between such acceptor and the drawer, the former stands in the relation of surety, and he is entitled on payment of the bill to be subrogated to the position of the holder of the bill in respect to any securities of the drawer held by such holder to secure the payment thereof. Toronto Bank v. Hunter, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 646, 20 How. Pr. 292.

In the District of Columbia the holder of a note secured by collateral is required by law, on payment of the note by an indorser or guarantor, to deliver to the latter the note rights of the owner in a mortgage given him as security.<sup>31</sup> An indorser of a note, after its maturity, who joins with the maker in giving a bond for the debt, is entitled, upon a tender of the debt, to an assignment of the bond;<sup>32</sup> and although by statute the indorser of a note is not liable thereon until the holder has exhausted his remedies against the maker, yet if the indorser waives that privilege and pays the amount due, he becomes subrogated to the rights of the holder, since such a payment cannot be considered as a voluntary one.<sup>33</sup> Thus where the money of an indorser of a note upon which judgment is obtained is used to satisfy the judgment, the indorser has a right to be subrogated to plaintiff's rights and to keep the judgment alive.<sup>34</sup> No entry on the judgment of such payment is required, in order that the indorser may have the right of subrogation; and an entry of satisfaction, made by plaintiff without the authority of the indorser, will not defeat the latter's right to enforce the judgment in his own favor against the land of the principal debtor;<sup>35</sup> and one who indorses a note to pay a judgment with the express understanding that the judgment shall be assigned is subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor.<sup>36</sup> Conversely, where the makers and indorsers of negotiable paper are insolvent, the holders thereof may, upon the principle of subrogation, avail themselves of the right of such indorsers arising under a chattel mortgage and collateral as means of indemnity to him, and he is subrogated to the rights of the maker, if he pays the note, and is entitled to receive the collateral in the same condition in which it stood in the maker's hands, and to all remedies thereon available to the latter; and this right does not depend on contract, but rests on principles of justice and equity. Mankey v. Willoughby, 21 App. Cas. 314.

Cornell-Tebbetts Mach., etc., Co.*, 150 Mo. 282, 51 S. W. 727 (holding that, where the payee of a note secured by a trust deed has compelled the indorser thereof to pay the note, he becomes subrogated to the payee's rights under the deed); Ætna Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 68 N. H. 20, 40 Atl. 396, 73 Am. St. Rep. 552 (holding that where sureties on a note secured by mortgage pay the same, they are subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee to the proceeds of an insurance policy on the property); Malone Third Nat. Bank v. Shields, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 274, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 298.

Similarly the indorser of a draft is, upon payment thereof by him, entitled to be subrogated to the security in the hands of the acceptor. Stevenson v. Austin, 3 Mete. (Mass.) 474.

32. Merriken v. Goodwin, 2 Del. Ch. 236.

33. Telford v. Garrels, 132 Ill. 550, 24 N. E. 573 [affirming 31 Ill. App. 441].

But where an administrator renews a note due from the estate giving security thereon, the administrator having no power to impose a direct liability upon the estate he represents by executing a note or other security for money in his representative character (see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 18 Cyc. 252), the parties to the renewal note are liable individually, and upon payment thereof by the surety he is not entitled to subrogation to the creditor's right against the estate, but only to subject the interest of the administrator to the amount paid as his indorser (Brown v. Lang, 4 Ala. 50).

34. Dorsey's Succession, 7 La. Ann. 34; Shaw v. McClellan, 1 Pa. L. J. Rep. 384 (holding that the indorser has a right to judgment against the maker of a note, and to the benefit of the recognizance for stay entered on it); Abrams v. Ingram, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 398. And see Johnson v. Webster, 81 Iowa 581, 47 N. W. 769.

The judgment passes, however, with all its privileges and infirmities and the surety is subrogated to the rights of the creditor but no more. Partee v. Mathews, 53 Miss. 140.

The indorser of a note, given by a creditor to prevent a sale of his debtor's effects under a judgment in favor of a creditor with a prior lien, who paid the latter, and to whom the judgment was afterward assigned, was substituted for the judgment creditor. Cottrell's Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 294.

In Nebraska it is held that an indorser must, in order to have the benefit of the judgment, make and prove his defense of suretyship in the original action and have the judgment against himself and his principal assigned to him. Potvin v. Meyers, 27 Nebr. 749, 44 N. W. 25.

Where separate judgments are recovered by the same plaintiff against the maker and indorser of a note, the indorser, upon the payment of the judgment against himself, is entitled to be substituted in equity to the judgment against the maker (Lyon v. Bolling, 9 Ala. 463, 44 Am. Dec. 444); and where one judgment was obtained against the maker and another against the indorser, and upon the latter judgment suit was brought in another state, and a judgment recovered, which the indorser paid, he was entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the judgment against the maker of the note (Old Dominion Bank v. Allen, 76 Va. 200).

given them by the makers to secure them against loss because of their liability as indorsers;<sup>37</sup> and similarly, a surety on a note, on payment by him, is entitled to be subrogated to all the rights and securities of the payee or holder, for the purpose of obtaining reimbursement;<sup>38</sup> and if the note has been reduced to judgment, he may pay the amount due, take an assignment, and become subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditors, and sell and assign his interest, before having any adjudication of his suretyship.<sup>39</sup> It is not necessary that the payment should have been made in money. Anything which the creditor is willing to accept in satisfaction of the debt is sufficient.<sup>40</sup> But the right to subrogation of a surety on a note is confined to the rights and securities of the contract for which he was surety, and do not extend to rights against one as to whom he was a stranger.<sup>41</sup>

E. Sureties or Guarantors — 1. GENERAL RULE STATED. A surety who has paid the debt of the principal is at once subrogated to all the rights, remedies, securities, liens, and equities of the creditor, for the purpose of obtaining his reimbursement from the principal debtor.<sup>42</sup> This subrogation to the remedies

St. 428 (holding that where a mortgage is given by the maker of a note to secure the indorser, and both become insolvent, the holder of the note is entitled to the benefit of the security; but he can have no higher rights than could the indorser); National Shoe, etc., Bank v. Small, 7 Fed. 837. But see Seward v. Huntington, 94 N. Y. 104 [reversing 26 Hun 217].

Where two persons exchange notes, each note is the proper debt of the maker, and each maker is a purchaser for value of the note received, and thus the relation of principal and surety does not exist, and no promise of either to indemnify the other can be implied, and no rights of subrogation are created. *Stickney v. A surety on a sealed note, paying it, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the holder. Smith v. Swain, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 112.

The guarantor of a note for accommodation is subrogated to the rights of the holder to whom he has made payment against the maker. Babcock v. Blanchard, 86 Ill. 165.

A surety in a note for two principal promisors, one deceased, having paid it, may recover the amount paid from the surviving principal promisor. Riddle v. Bowman, 27 N. H. 236.

Where a third person assumes payment of a note, and the surety for the maker is compelled thereafter to pay the note, he is entitled to be subrogated to the right of action which the maker would have against the third person. Rodenbarger v. Bramblett, 78 Ind. 213.

An action on a promissory note from ostensible partners, accepted by one unacquainted with the existence of a dormant partner, may be brought against all the partners, and where a surety pays the note he is entitled to the usual remedies of sureties, and may be subrogated to the remedy on the contract, or he may have his action for money paid for the use of the partnership. *Hill v. See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Subrogation," § 16 et seq.

As soon as the surety has paid the debt, an equity arises in his favor to have all the securities, original and collateral, which the creditor held against the person or property of the principal debtor, transferred to him, and to avail himself of them as fully as the creditor could have done, for the purpose of obtaining indemnity from the principal. He is considered as at once subrogated to all the rights, remedies, and securities of the creditor—as substituted in the place of the creditor—and entitled to enforce all his liens, priorities, and means of payment as against the principal, and to have the benefit of even securities that were given without his knowledge. Furnold v. State Bank, 44 Mo. 336.

The converse is not true; a principal who pays is subrogated to no rights against the surety. Union Nat. Bank v. Legendre, 35 La. Ann. 787.

A statute providing that a surety may by contract be substituted to the rights of a creditor whose debt he pays does not per se make the assignment. It only entitles him to an assignment on demand. Joyce v. Joyce, 1 Bush (Ky.) 474.

No doctrine of equity jurisprudence is more firmly established, or founded on more substantial and fundamental principles of right and justice, than the rule which subrogates a surety, who has paid the debt of his principal, to all the rights, remedies, and securities held or acquired by the creditor against the person or property of the principal debtor, with the same rights to resort to them that the creditor would have had if the surety had not paid the debt. The rule rests on the superior equity of the surety to be reimbursed out of any fund to which the creditor could have resorted, in the first instance, for his relief, and upon the natural equity, that the person primarily bound shall pay the debt. Watts v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 76 Ala. 474.

A surety on the bond of a contractor with a city for public work, who assumes and completes the work after its abandonment by his principal, is subrogated, so far as necessary to protect him from loss, to all rights which the city might have enforced against the contractor if it had declared the contract forfeited, and completed the work itself. Seattle cosurety.<sup>43</sup> The surety is subrogated without any special agreement to that effect,<sup>44</sup> and although bound by a different instrument than the principal;<sup>45</sup> and he need not,

First Nat. Bank v. Philadelphia City Trust, etc., Co., 114 Fed. 529, 52 C. C. A. 313. And similarly where a federal contractor's surety was compelled to pay labor and material claims to an amount exceeding the amount due from the government to the contractor, it was entitled to subrogation to the rights of the laborers and materialmen so paid against such sum which claim was prior to that of a mere voluntary lender of funds to the contractor, not shown to have been used in the performance of the contract. Henningsen v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., 143 Fed. 810, 74 C. C. A. 484 [affirmed in 208 U. S. 404, 28 S. Ct. 389, 52 C. C. A. 547]. And a surety on a contractor's bond who, at the request of the principal, and in reliance on his supposed liability under the bond, pays out money, is entitled to be subrogated in the place of the creditors as against the principal, although the creditors had no right of action against said surety. Lyth v. Green, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 300, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 478. Where a contractor gave a bond stipulating that, if he abandoned the contract, the surety might complete the work, and that any deferred payments due to the contractor should be paid to the surety, and the contractor abandoned the work, and the surety completed the contract, the amount due to the contractor at the date of the abandonment belonged to the surety, because of the contract of suretyship, and by reason of subrogation. Stehle v. United Surety Co., 107 Md. 470, 68 Atl. 600.

A surety who has paid the debt is treated as a fictitious assignee. Stables v. Fox, 45 Miss. 667 [citing as an instance Croft v. Moore, 9 Watts (Pa.) 451].

Directors of a corporation who have become its sureties to creditors will, on insolvency, be subrogated to the rights of the creditors. Gray v. Taylor, (N. J. Ch. 1897) 38 Atl. 951 [modified in 59 N. J. Eq. 621, 44 Atl. 668].

The right of a surety to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor does not depend on contract, but rests alone upon principles of justice and equity. Peirce v. Higgins, 101 Ind. 178 (holding that the surety's right to subrogation comes into existence with his contract; his rights flow from that contract and accrue when it is executed. His own acts may impair them; the acts of others cannot. These rights continue in undiminished vigor from their inception until the termination of his liability. It needs no particular form of contract to create them, for they are created by law and are legal incidents of the undertaking); Eaton v. Hasty, 6 Nebr. 419, 29 Am. Rep. 365 (holding that when such claim is contested it depends upon facts to develop and determine the rights of the parties in interest); Mathews v. Aikin, 1 N. Y. 595 (holding that the surety's right of subrogation does not depend at all upon a request or contract on the part of the debtor with the surety, but grows rather out of the relations existing between the surety and the creditor).

45. Havens v. Willis, 100 N. Y. 482, 3 N. E. 313 (holding that guarantors of a mortgage, compelled to pay deficiency thereon, are entitled to be subrogated to all the securities which are held as collateral to the debts secured by the original mortgage, and are so to entitle him to the right of subrogation at the time of payment, signify his election and acceptance of such right; but it is sufficient if he show suretyship, payment of the debt, and a right held by the creditor, in the absence of some act by him which amounts to a waiver.<sup>46</sup> The surety's rights pass to his creditors,<sup>47</sup> to mortgagees of the surety whose rights are affected by enforcing the debt against the property of the surety,<sup>48</sup> and to the surety's personal representatives,<sup>49</sup> devisees,<sup>50</sup> or heirs.<sup>51</sup> Where a surety furnishes money to his principal, to be applied on the debt of the principal, and the money is thus applied by the principal, the surety is as fully entitled to be subrogated to any securities held by the creditor as if he had paid the debt in person.<sup>52</sup> This equitable right is cumulative, and exists entirely independently of any statutory provisions, and is equally available to the surety, except when the rights of innocent purchasers intervene, whether the question of suretyship has or has not been determined in the statutory method.<sup>53</sup> The surety cannot acquire greater rights than the creditor possessed, and if the creditor has lost a lien on the assets of the principal the surety does not acquire any.<sup>54</sup>

2. NECESSITY FOR AND SUFFICIENCY OF PAYMENT<sup>55</sup> — a. In General. A surety is not entitled to be substituted to the rights of the creditor until he has paid the debt for which he is surety,<sup>56</sup> or has at least secured the payment of the debt due entitled to a subsequent mortgage obtained by the mortgagee as additional security; and a subsequent grantee cannot claim that such guarantors have no right to enforce the lien of such second mortgage); Enders v. Brune, 4 Rand. (Va.) 438.

by his principal,<sup>57</sup> because until payment is made he is regarded as in default to the creditor.<sup>58</sup> But the surety is entitled to subrogation, although payment was made before maturity,<sup>59</sup> or although payment was involuntary as the result of legal proceedings against him;<sup>60</sup> and a surety against whom judgment has been obtained is entitled, even before paying the debt, to bring a bill asking that a mortgage given by the principal to the creditor be applied in payment of the debt, and that upon payment of the debt he shall have the benefit of the mortgage security;<sup>61</sup> and although the surety on a note given for purchase-money due for land cannot be subrogated to the lien on the land until he has paid the debt to the creditor, equity will enforce the lien in an action on the note, to save a multiplicity of suits, especially when the creditor asks that it should be done.<sup>62</sup> It is not essential that payment be in money; whatever the creditor accepts in satisfaction will operate as payment.<sup>63</sup>

Compare Thompson v. Humphrey, 83 N. C. 416, holding that where a surety on the bond of a deceased guardian, having paid the amount recovered by a ward in a suit on such bond, sued to be subrogated to the claim of the guardian against the person to whom the guardian loaned the money, although plaintiff at this stage of the case was not entitled to have the debt assigned to him, it not appearing that the other wards of the deceased guardian had been paid in full, he was entitled to have the money paid into court, to await final adjustment of the rights of the several parties.

A surety who has paid a part of the amount due on a fieri facias had no right to control it, so as to reimburse himself, and his rights were secondary to those of the holder of the fieri facias, although a transferee who had bought property from the principal debtor had purchased the fieri facias to protect such property. Cherry v. Singleton, 66 Ga. 206.

Argument in support of rule see Columbia Finance, etc., Co. v. Kentucky Union R. Co., 60 Fed. 794, 9 C. C. A. 264.

The surety before payment cannot maintain a bill to indemnify himself from secunor in equity, call for an assignment of the claim against his principal, or be clothed by mere operation of law, and upon principles of equity, with the rights of an assignee of such claim, unless the entire debt of the creditor has been paid. A pro tanto assignment or subrogation will not be allowed;<sup>70</sup> and the same rule applies to an indorser.<sup>71</sup> But although the rule is sometimes narrowly stated that the surety is not entitled to subrogation till he has paid the entire debt,<sup>72</sup> if a surety pays part of the debt and the principal the balance, the surety will be subrogated to all the benefits which the creditor had against the principal to the extent of his payment,<sup>73</sup> and in general it is sufficient if the balance of the creditor's debt has been otherwise satisfied.<sup>74</sup> Nor is it essential that the surety should have paid the full amount of the debt in money, provided the creditor be satisfied; if he has discharged the burden, leaving in the creditor nothing further to demand, he will be entitled to subrogation, but only for indemnity to the extent of the money paid or value of the property applied.<sup>75</sup> But if the surety has made only part payment and any balance remains unpaid, he can have no subrogation,<sup>76</sup> the essence of the rule being that the creditor must be fully paid.<sup>77</sup> Thus a surety liable for only a part or instalment of a debt who pays that part is not entitled to be subrogated to the securities held by the creditor, unless the whole demand has been paid;<sup>78</sup> but the surety, in such cases, has a lien on the security, subor-gation will not be enforced against a superior equity.

75. Schoonover v. Allen, 40 Ark. 132, holding that the general rule that subrogation will not be allowed for partial payment extends only so far as its reason goes. The reason is that the creditor cannot equitably be compelled to split his securities, or give up control of any part until he is fully satisfied. It accords with the limitation that dinate to that of the creditor;<sup>79</sup> and only a creditor holding the securities can object to a subrogation pro tanto of a surety who has paid a portion of the debt, whether the surety has entirely satisfied the debt or not,<sup>80</sup> and the creditor may allow the surety to be subrogated before the indebtedness is wholly extinguished.<sup>81</sup>

d. Effect of Payment as Extinguishing Debt. In England the earliest rule seems to have been that upon payment of the debt the surety became subrogated not only to collateral security but to the very debt and evidence of indebtedness itself;<sup>82</sup> but under later English decisions prior to the enactment of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, it was held that the surety upon payment became subrogated to the collateral securities but not to the debt itself, and that the payment of a judgment or specialty rendered it functus officio and that the surety could not be subrogated to it;<sup>83</sup> and this rule has been in some degree followed in the United States, particularly in the earlier cases.<sup>84</sup> This qualification of the equity of the County Land, etc., Co., 54 Minn. 395, 56 N. W. 128, 40 Am. St. Rep. 342, holding that the grantee of land, who has assumed a mortgage debt represented by notes payable at different dates, cannot object against an indorser of said notes, who has taken one of them up, and is suing as subrogated to the holder's rights, that, not having paid the entire debt, he is not subrogated as to any part.

Where a surety pays part of a judgment against his principal and himself, such partial payment does not operate as an assignment to the surety pro tanto, so as to enable him to exercise any control over the judgment or execution (McKnew v. Duvall, 45 Md. 501), and a surety's settlement by payment of part of a judgment does not operate as an assignment of the judgment against defendant, so as to authorize the surety to recover the whole amount of such judgment (McDermott v. Mitchell, 53 Cal. 616); but he possesses an inchoate equitable interest in the judgment to the extent of his judgment which may be released or transferred (Grove v. Brein, 1 Md. 438).

surety was never consistent with the spirit of legislation which favors sureties, nor with the liberal application of the doctrine of subrogation in other cases,<sup>85</sup> and so it was expressly provided by the Mercantile Law Amendment Act<sup>86</sup> that payment by the surety should not satisfy the debt, and that the surety should be entitled to have assigned to him as a trustee every judgment, specialty, or other security held by the creditor in respect to the debt whether or not deemed at law to have been satisfied, and this is the rule supported by the great weight of authority in America.<sup>87</sup> The principal obligation is discharged as respects

In North Carolina the courts continue to follow the original doctrine as declared by the courts of England, the only modification of the rule being in favor of a surety who has paid the debt of a deceased principal. Liles v. Rogers, 113 N. C. 197, 18 S. E. 104, 37 Am. St. Rep. 627, holding that as soon as a surety has paid the debt an equity arises in his favor to have all of the securities which the creditor holds against the principal debtor transferred to him, and to avail himself of them as fully as the creditor could have done, but the securities referred to do not include those which are extinguished by the payment of the debt, such as the bond securing such principal debt, and unless the security procures it to be assigned for his benefit to a third person, it is utterly extinguished both at law and in equity, and he becomes a simple contract creditor. And see Tiddy v. Harris, 101 N. C. 589, 8 S. E. 227; McCoy v. Wood, 70 N. C. 125; Briley v. Sugg, 21 N. C. 366, 30 Am. Dec. 172; Sherwood v. Collier, 14 N. C. 380, 24 Am. Dec. 264; Hodges v. Armstrong, 14 N. C. 253. To prevent a satisfaction when a surety pays money to a creditor, and to preserve the security for the benefit of the surety paying it, it must be assigned to a trustee, and it can be kept alive in no other way. Tiddy v. Harris, supra. See also the North Carolina cases cited supra, this note.

The reason for this rule is held to be that the whole doctrine of subrogation is predicated entirely upon the discharge of the original obligation. Liles v. Rogers, supra.

By the civil law not only is the surety entitled in such cases to the benefit of all the collateral securities taken by the creditor, but he is also entitled to be substituted as to the very debt itself, to the creditor, by way of cession of assignment. And upon payment of the debt by the surety, the debt is in favor of the surety, treated not so much as paid, as sold; not as extinguished, but as transferred with all its obligatory force against the principal. After quoting at length from the Digest of Justinian the provisions of the Roman law, which support this view of the subject, Mr. Justice Story says: "We have here the doctrine distinctly put, the objection to it stated, and the ground upon which its solution depends, affirmed. The reasoning may seem a little artificial; but it has a deep foundation in natural justice. The same doctrine stands in substance approved in all the countries which derive their jurisprudence from the civil law." Carroll v. The Leathers, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,455, Newb. In Alabama the statute compels the creditor to assign to a surety paying the debt any judgment the creditor may have obtained upon it, and authorizes the surety to assert "in law or equity any right or lien against the principal debtor, which the plaintiff could assert, if the debt had not been paid." Code (1876), § 3418; Knighton v. Curry, 62 Ala. 404. The rule was formerly otherwise. Foster v. Athenæum, 3 Ala. 302. And see McNeill v. McNeill, 36 Ala. 109, 76 Am. Dec. 320.

In Missouri a surety, by paying the debt of his principal, becomes entitled to be subrogated to all the rights of the creditor, so as to have the benefit of all the securities which the creditor had for the payment of the debt, without any exception, as well those which became extinct (at law, at least) by the act of the surety's paying the debt, as all collateral securities which the creditor held for the payments which have not been considered as directly extinguished by the surety's paying the debt. These decisions have been made upon a principle of equity which, for the purpose of doing justice to the surety who has paid the debt, interposes to prevent the judgment or security which has been so extinguished at law from being so considered as between the surety and the principal or his subsequent lien creditors. Allison v. Sutherland, 50 Mo. 274; Furnold v. State Bank, 44 Mo. 336; Cowgill v. Linnville, 20 Mo. App. 138.

This was formerly the rule in Texas (Jackson v. Murray, 77 Tex. 644, 14 S. W. 235; Tutt v. Thornton, 57 Tex. 35; Sublett v. McKinney, 19 Tex. 438; Jordan v. Hudson, 11 Tex. 82; Bell v. Gammon, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 404; Hoffman v. Bignall, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 703), although not without some conflict (See Holliman v. Rogers, 6 Tex. 91). But after an elaborate discourse in Faires v. Cockerell, 88 Tex. 428, 31 S. W. 190, 639, 28 L. R. A. 528, the court held, reviewing all the cases in Texas and in other jurisdictions, that payment extinguishes the debt and the surety's action is not upon the debt itself but upon the contract implied by law, and this case is followed in Halbert v. Paddelford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 33 S. W. 592. See also Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Ferris, (Civ. App. 1906) 99 S. W. 896.

In Oklahoma under St. (1893) § 2951, providing that a surety, on satisfying an obligation, is entitled to every remedy which the creditor has against the principal, to the extent of reimbursing what he has expended, the right of a surety who has discharged a promissory note is against the principal on the note, and not on an implied promise to pay. McClure v. Johnson, 10 Okla. 668, 65 Pac. 103. See Keokuk Falls Imp. Co. v. Kinsland, etc., Mfg. Co., 5 Okla. 32, 47 Pac. 484.

89. Berthold v. Berthold, 46 Mo. 557 [affirmed on other grounds in 22 How. (U. S.) 334, 16 L. ed. 318]. But see Cureton v. Cureton, 120 Ga. 559, 48 S. E. 162, holding that a surety who pays the full amount due on a fieri facias, but does not have any entry of payment indorsed thereon, and allows the judgment to become dormant, is not equitably subrogated to the rights of plaintiff in the judgment, so as to enforce contribution against a cosurety. The surety must not only pay the amount due on the fieri facias but must also have the entry of payment made thereon before he can control the judgment and fieri facias against a cosurety.

Although the assignment stated that it was made with the "intention" of subrogating. People v. Anthony, 7 N. Y. App. Div. 132, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 279 [affirmed in 151 N. Y. 620, 45 N. A surety can have an attachment assigned to him. Brewer v. Franklin Mills, 42 N. H. 292.

Where plaintiff had been a surety on a note, but subsequently bought it, the assignment to him was not a discharge of the note, but entitled him to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against his principal, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the note. Marsters v. Umpqua Oil Co., 49 Ore. 374, 90 Pac. 151, 12 L. R. A. N. S. 825.

91. Sublett v. McKinney, 19 Tex. 438. But see Mudd v. Mullican, 12 S. W. 263, 385, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 417, holding that a claim against the estate of his principal, by a surety, for payment of a bond which is not assigned to him, is on an account, and not on the bond.

former.<sup>92</sup> But the rule has not been carried so far as to allow sureties to say they will not pay until an assignment is executed. The surety must pay in order to have any right of subrogation at all,<sup>93</sup> although it has been held that where a defendant, upon paying a debt sued for, will be subrogated to the rights of plaintiff in a security for the debt, he may in his answer allege the facts showing that he will be so entitled to subrogation; and the court, before rendering judgment, may require plaintiff to execute and file a transfer to defendant of the security to be delivered on payment of the judgment,<sup>94</sup> and a surety who pays the debt may stipulate for an assignment of the collateral securities held by a creditor, and the debt will be unpaid so far as the securities are concerned,<sup>95</sup> although the right of a surety to be subrogated on the payment of the debt to the securities held by the creditor does not depend upon any contract or request by the principal debtor, but rests upon principles of justice and equity.<sup>96</sup> The rule of non-extinguishment of the indebtedness applies not only to true sureties but to all who stand in the light of having paid as surety the debt of another;<sup>97</sup> but an advancement by a junior mortgagee of a judgment debt to a creditor, who also holds a judgment against another as surety therefor, is a final satisfaction of the latter, where the principal's estate suffices to pay the advance, and the advancing creditor is not therefore entitled to an assignment of such security;<sup>98</sup> and it has been held in a

Payment of execution by joint defendant.—While it has been held that payment of an execution by one of the several defendants so far extinguishes the same that the doctrine of subrogation does not apply and it cannot be subsequently assigned to the debtor paying it and be levied by him on land of the other debtors (Stevens v. Morse, 7 Me. 36, 20 Am. Dec. 337, where payment was made by the brother of one of several judgment debtors who afterward approved the act; Holmes v. Day, 108 Mass. 563; Adams v. Drake, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 504; Harbeck v. Vanderbilt, 20 N. Y. 395; Lowdermilk v. Corpening, 92 N. C. 333), other cases hold that where one of several co-defendants pay the judgment, and procures an assignment thereof, such payment will not operate as a satisfaction of the judgment as to any of the other defendants, unless an intention that it shall so operate plainly appears (Coffee v. Tevis, 17 Cal. 239; In re Wheeler, 1 Md. Ch. 80; Campbell v. Pope, 96 Mo. 468, 10 S. W. 187; Brown v. White, 29 N. J. L. 514), and as has been said to construe that as a payment which was meant to be an assignment is a contradiction in terms (McIntyre v. Miller, 2 D. & L. 708, 14 L. J. Exch. 180, 13 M. & W. 725 [quoted and followed in Campbell v. Pope, supra]).

case which recognizes the doctrine that in equity payment by one of several joint judgment debtors did not extinguish the lien of the judgment, which could be enforced for contribution, that where one of two joint obligors on a judgment pays the judgment before it has become a lien on their land by record of the abstract, the judgment is discharged, and the obligor making the payment cannot, under the doctrine of subrogation, by subsequently recording the judgment, render it an equitable lien on the land of the other for the amount due by way of contribution.<sup>99</sup>

Surety of administrator.—As the creditors and distributees of an intestate have an equity, as against the administrator, that the assets shall be applied exclusively for the purposes of the administration, the surety of an administrator, who has been compelled to answer to the creditors and distributees, or either, for the default of the administrator resulting from his misapplication of his assets, is entitled to be subrogated to this equity, and have it enforced for his indemnity against one who has knowingly contributed to the default by taking from the administrator the assets mala fide or without value. *Rhame v. Each of these authors, although the law is stated by them in other parts of their works in conformity to the principles we have mentioned, yet on the authority of an English case (*Williams v. This statement can only be upheld under the rule of tacking, a rule not recognized here and no longer in vogue in England."

surety has no ground for relief under a contract with the creditor to transfer to the surety the collaterals received from his principal, on payment of the sum for which he is surety, where it appears that the principal has himself paid the debt,<sup>27</sup> and where the whole security placed in the hands of a creditor has been applied to the debt, without extinguishing it, and the surety has been compelled to pay the deficiency, he cannot claim the right of subrogation as to such security, as this would defeat the very object for which it was taken.<sup>28</sup> And a creditor who holds security without special stipulation for its application for various notes due from his debtor, some of which bear the name of sureties, may, in case of the insolvency of the principal debtor and some of the sureties, apply the same toward the payment of such of the notes as may be necessary for his own protection, and solvent sureties upon others of the notes cannot avail themselves thereof in any way in equity with paying or offering to pay the whole of the notes for which the surety was given;<sup>29</sup> and although, where the surety pays the debt, he may be substituted for a creditor who has collateral security therefor, he cannot be substituted in relation to another credit, when the effect will be to deprive the creditor of one of his resources, thereby causing a partial loss of his debt.<sup>30</sup> It has been held that a surety for the payment of part of the indebtedness of his principal by paying the same becomes entitled to a pro rata or proportionate share with the other creditors of the proceeds arising from the sale of the debtor's property, and for that purpose may be subrogated to all the rights of the remaining creditors so as to have the benefit of all the securities which they had;<sup>31</sup> but the surety is not entitled to the benefit of security given for other specific debts,<sup>32</sup> or for another part of the debt for which he is liable,<sup>33</sup> and is subrogated only to security or funds which the creditor holds for the debt which he secures and cannot interfere with the creditor's use of property of the principal which he holds for a different object.<sup>34</sup> In some states the right of a surety to be subrogated to collateral for the debt is made statutory.<sup>35</sup>

Where one of several joint sureties pays the whole debt, he will be entitled to the judgment to enforce contribution by his cosurety (Wagner v. Olds, 6 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 739, 7 Am. L. Rec. 611; Croft v. Moore, 9 Watts (Pa.) 451; Packer v. Vandevender, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 31); and if he pays a joint judgment with the intention to save his right to be subrogated to the place of the judgment creditor, he may afterward sustain an action to be subrogated, notwithstanding the legal extinguishment of the judgment (Neilson v. Fry, 16 Ohio St. 552, 91 Am. Dec. 110).

In Ohio by express provision of law, Rev. St. § 5836, payment by a surety does not end the judgment so far as the principal debtor is concerned, but the surety is subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor, and the judgment remains in force against the principal debtor for the benefit of the surety. There is no provision or rule of law, however, keeping life in the judgment as against a surety. The rule is to the contrary, and payment of a judgment, by one surety, inures to the benefit of a cosurety, and cancels and ends it as to both of them, only leaving to the paying surety a right of action against his cosurety, for contribution. But as to all sureties, payment of a judgment by one cancels and ends it as to all. Nestlerode v. Foster, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 70, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 385.

Sureties who take an assignment of a decree against their principal, on paying it, are entitled to have it kept alive for their benefit. Allen v. Powell, 108 Ill. 584 [reversing 11 Ill. App. 129].

But a surety on a twelve months' bond, given on a purchase at execution sale, compelled to pay it, is subrogated to the rights of the creditor in the bond against the principal bondsman, but not to any rights of the judgment creditor under the judgment. Crow v. Walsh, 3 La. Ann. 540. See Trent v. Calderwood, 2 La. Ann. 942.

Real estate, owned by replevin bail when he replevied the judgment, but since conveyed, which is sold to satisfy the judgment, is, as between it and the property of the principal in the judgment subject to the lien thereof, secondarily liable, and the person who owned it when so taken is subrogated to the rights of the judgment plaintiff against the property primarily liable. Wilson v. Murray, 90 Ind. 477.

In Iowa it is held that a surety who has paid a judgment is not subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor until he has maintained an action to enforce his lien. Johnston v. Belden, 49 Iowa 301.

In Kansas, under Civ. Code, § 480, a surety who has paid a judgment is subrogated to such judgment not only to compel repayment from the principal but also to enforce contribution from cosureties. Honce v. Schram, 73 Kan. 368, 85 Pac. 535.

Where a surety on a judgment note pays the note after default by the principal on the maturity of the note, he may have the note entered up to his own use, and the wife of the principal, without authority from the husband, and without interest on the note, has no standing to apply to the court to have the judgment stricken off. Lawrence County Nat. Bank v. Gray, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 62.

Where one of two joint and several obligors, cosureties for a third, under the pressure of an execution and a levy upon his personal property, and real estate, pays the judgment for which all are jointly and severally liable, such surety may, on a rule to show cause, enforce subrogation to the rights of plaintiff as against his cosurety, and his right to subrogation cannot be defeated by satisfaction of the judgment. Shaffer v. Messner, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 191.

A surety on a court clerk's official bond, who has paid a judgment recovered by the state, is subrogated to the rights of the state against a bank which participated in the clerk's breach of trust. American Bonding Co. v. National Mechanics' Bank, 97 Md. 598, 55 Atl. 395, 99 Am. St. Rep. 466.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Subrogation," § 83.

But see Harper v. Kemble, 65 Mo. App. 514, holding that when a surety pays the amount of a judgment against his principal and himself, and thereon receives an assignment of the judgment, he is in equity entitled to the same rights which the judgment creditor would have at law, and therefore to the enforcement of the judgment by execution and to a revival of the judgment lien on real estate of the debtor; but, even in equity, he cannot procure a continuous lien from the date of the rendition of the judgment, if that it against his principal's estate,<sup>41</sup> particularly where the surety pays the amount thereof, with the understanding that the judgment shall remain in force and be assigned to him, and procures the assignment thereof,<sup>42</sup> and in the assignment of a judgment the legal and express subrogation are of equal extent, and all the creditor's rights pass to a surety making payment.<sup>43</sup> This right of the surety is not defeated by the fact that he paid the judgment in ignorance of such right and without stipulating therefor,<sup>44</sup> for an actual assignment to the paying surety is not necessary to enable him to collect the judgment against his principal, the surety succeeding to the rights of the creditor by mere operation of law;<sup>45</sup> and although a surety who has paid part of a judgment against the principal, which has been in fact satisfied by the principal himself, is barred by limitation from recovering the amount paid, he may still have his right of subrogation to the security of the judgment;<sup>46</sup> and a surety who has paid a judgment against the principal has preference over a subsequent judgment creditor of the principal.<sup>47</sup> But while it is true that a surety may be subrogated to the rights of the creditor, in reference to any collateral security which the creditor may hold, and that he may be subrogated to the creditor in the judgment for the purpose of keeping it alive and enforcing it for his own benefit against his co-defendants, yet this doctrine, being one of mere equity and benevolence, will not be enforced at the expense of a legal right;<sup>48</sup> and a surety whose claims against his principal for money paid on a judgment against them has been defeated at law cannot be substituted for plaintiff in the original judgment;<sup>49</sup> and where a surety, on paying a judgment against his principal, has noted on the record that it was paid by him and "fully satisfied," he cannot assert the judgment lien, as against a bona fide purchaser of the debtor's land;<sup>50</sup> and a surety who pays the debt must, as a condition of compelling an assignment by the creditor of a judgment obtained by him against the principal, pay the costs incurred by the creditor in obtaining the judgment.<sup>51</sup> Furthermore, a surety having the means of payment put into his hands by the debtor thereby becomes the principal debtor, and, having reconveyed the property to the debtor, it is not competent for him, in order to avoid the effect of this, to allege that the conveyance to him was fraudulent, and to seek to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment.<sup>52</sup> A surety's rights are limited to a judgment on the debt for which he was surety,<sup>53</sup> and a surety bound only for part of the principal's indebtedness cannot be subrogated to security taken by the creditor for another part of the same debt and at another time.<sup>54</sup> In some states this equitable right of the surety to be subrogated to a judgment is incorporated into statutes which declare the paying surety's rights to the benefit lien has expired by limitation of time before he has instituted a proceeding to keep it in force.

Expired lien.—The lien which a creditor acquires by a levy of his execution on personal property is, if not enforced by sale thereof, only temporary, and expires with the authority to sell under the execution, and therefore a surety of the debtor, who afterward pays the debt, has no right to be subrogated to the lien of the execution on the property. Carr v. Glascock, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 343.

A subsequent transaction of the debtor with a third person cannot impair the equitable right of a surety to substitution to the lien of a creditor's judgment. Johnson v. Young, 20 W. Va. 614.

54. Crump v. McMurtry, 8 Mo. 408 (holding that the doctrine of substitution is not applicable to a case where a creditor having a security for his debt, but fearing that it will prove insufficient, obtains additional se-of the judgment and to an assignment of the judgment;<sup>55</sup> but if a statute does not afford the surety an adequate remedy he still may enforce his purely equitable right to an assignment of the judgment;<sup>56</sup> and such a statute is held to be intended to adjust and protect the equities of parties holding such liens, but not to settle the liens or prescribe the remedy between principal and surety.<sup>57</sup> It is held that a judgment in favor of the state, when paid by a surety, cannot be assigned to such surety by any officer or agent of the state.<sup>58</sup>

(III) MORTGAGES. A surety, having been compelled to pay a debt, may be subrogated to the creditor's rights under a mortgage or deed of trust given by the principal to secure the debt,<sup>59</sup> although the taking of the mortgage was sub-curity); Wade v. Coope, 2 Sim. 155, 29 Rev. Rep. 70, 2 Eng. Ch. 155, 57 Eng. Reprint 747.

55. See the statutes of the several states. And see Schuessler v. Dudley, 80 Ala. 547, 2 So. 526, 60 Am. Rep. 124 (holding that under Code (1876), the surety of a defaulting tax collector who satisfies the judgment obtained by the state against such collector is entitled to an assignment of the judgment, and to be subrogated to the rights of the state and county, and to enforce for his own indemnity the lien created by the bond by suit in his own name); Alexander v. Lewis, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 407 (holding that Rev. St. c. 97, § 8, authorizing an assignment of a judgment in behalf of plaintiff against the debtor and his surety to the surety on payment by him, is not repealed by the civil code; and a judgment against principal and surety may be assigned to the surety, on payment by him); Wilkins v. Bobo, 13 La. Ann. 430 (holding that under the act of March 16, 1854, a person bound as security upon a twelve-months' bond, when he has paid the same, is subrogated to all the rights which the original creditor had at the time the bond was given, or at the time it was paid by the security, when the property had been adjudicated to the defendant in the judgment, and he is the principal upon the bond); Kinard v. Baird, 20 S. C. 377 (under Gen. St. § 2180, which declares that the payment by a surety of a debt secured by judgment or decree shall not operate as a satisfaction thereof against the principal debtor, but by such payment such surety shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of plaintiff in such judgment or decree).

Statute limited to assignments by legal plaintiff.—Md. Acts (1763), c. 23, which provides that, where a judgment against a principal debtor and surety is satisfied by the surety, the creditor shall be obliged to assign the judgment to such surety, is held to contemplate only assignments by legal plaintiffs, and therefore the cestui que use of a judgment against a principal debtor and his surety cannot, on receiving payment from the latter, make such an assignment of the judgment as is provided for by the act. Creager v. Brengle, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 234, 9 Am. Dec. 516.

In Texas, prior to the act of Feb. 5, 1858, relating to principal and surety, the cosurety in an execution who paid the debt of the principal could not be subrogated to the rights of plaintiff in the execution as to lien and levies; but since the passage of that act a surety who pays has these rights. Raymond v. Cook, 31 Tex. 373.

In New Jersey, under Gen. St. p. 2538, § 36, and Pamphl. Laws (1903), p. 543, § 35, requiring the sheriff, in levying execution in actions on bills and notes, to make the money out of the property of defendant primarily liable if possible, and providing that if the judgment be paid by defendant secondarily liable it shall not be considered satisfied as against any primary defendant, a separate judgment entered against the maker of a note is security in the hands of the judgment creditor for the debt due by the maker and indorser, and the latter, on paying a judgment entered against him for the amount of the note, is entitled to an assignment of the judgment against the maker. McKenna v. Corcoran, 70 N. J. Eq. 627, 61 Atl. 1026.

56. Harper v. Rosenberger, 56 Mo. App. App. 388, holding that Rev. St. (1889) § 8151, which provides that any surety paying a judgment rendered against his principal and himself on a note may have judgment against his principal on motion for the amount paid, with ten per cent interest, does not afford an adequate remedy to a surety who pays a judgment which is a lien on lands of the principal, and is collectable therefrom; and such surety, on the payment of such judgment, is entitled to have it assigned to him, and to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment plaintiff.

A statute which provides that a surety, certified as such, who pays the judgment or any part thereof, shall, to the extent of such payment, have all the rights and remedies against the principal debtor that plaintiff had at the time of such payment, does not affect the right of the surety, who is not certified in the judgment to be such, to be subrogated to the rights of plaintiff on payment of the judgment. Hill v. King, 48 Ohio St. 75, 26 N. E. 988.

57. Duffield v. Cooper, 87 Pa. St. 443, holding that, in a judgment against principal and surety, if the surety pays the amount of the judgment, he succeeds to the rights of the creditor, and it is not necessary that he should be subrogated under Act April 22, 1856, § 9.

But bail for stay of execution is not entitled to subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee against the terretenant or creditors, because but for his intervention the debt might be paid by the debtor or out of his property. McCurdy v. Conner, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 155.

Guarantors of a mortgage, compelled to pay a deficiency thereon, are entitled to be subrogated to all the securities which are held by the mortgagee as collateral, and so are entitled to a subsequent mortgage obtained by the mortgagee as additional security. Havens v. Willis, 100 N. Y. 482, 3 N. E. 313.

A surety who gave a separate mortgage on conveying a part of his lands in satisfaction of the debt is entitled to be subrogated to the mortgagee's claim on the mortgage of the principal debtor. Loomer v. Wheelwright, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 135.

Rule applied to statutory mortgage.—Under a statute which gives an administrator or executor a mortgage on lands purchased at a sale of the property of decedent, a surety upon a note given to an administrator will be subrogated to the rights of the administrator in his statutory mortgage, to satisfy the amount he has paid as surety. Stanwood v. Clampitt, 23 Miss. 372.

Sureties on an appeal-bond in mortgage foreclosure proceedings, who, after having been compelled to pay the decree against their principal, take an assignment of the mortgage debt and decree of foreclosure, may maintain a bill to set aside a modification of the decree entered on a supplemental bill to which they are not made parties. Allen v. Powell, 108 Ill. 584.

The reason is held to be that the debt, and not the pledgee, is protected by the pledge, and any person liable for the payment of the debt, into whose hands it came, until payment by the original debtor, was entitled to the security, and however it may be modified or into whose hands it may come until the debt is paid the fund or pledge accompanies it and remains for its redemption. Beleher v. Hartford Bank, 15 Conn. 381.

On payment by a surety in an injunction bond of a debt whose collection was enjoined, secured by a deed of trust, he will be substituted in equity to the lien under the trust deed. Billings v. Sprague, 49 Ill. 509.

Where a wife, as surety for her husband, joined him in a mortgage which stated that "the debt is a joint and several one," in an action praying leave to pay the debt and be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, she may show that she was simply surety, although she could not do so to defeat the mortgage. Snook v. Munday, 96 Md. 514, 54 Atl. 77.

60. Scott v. Featherston, 5 La. Ann. 306.

61. McArthur v. Martin, 23 Minn. 74, holding that where a surety redeems from a mortgage of his principal, in the absence of proof to the contrary it will be presumed that the act was done with the intent that would be most for the interest of the surety; that

gage securing a distinct debt in order to be subrogated to the rights of the holder of the debt for which he is surety.<sup>62</sup> A surety for part of a debt secured by mortgage is upon paying the entire debt subrogated to the creditor's rights under the mortgage;<sup>63</sup> and where a surety on a mortgage note pays part of it, he is entitled to be subrogated to the right of the mortgagee, and to receive payment out of the proceeds after the mortgage is satisfied, before subsequent judgment creditors.<sup>64</sup> Where a creditor recovers judgment against the principal debtor, sells his goods on execution, and takes a mortgage to secure the payment, and a surety of the original debtor subsequently pays the debt, the surety is entitled to the benefit of the mortgage;<sup>65</sup> and as a mortgage to secure a debt stands as security for the judgment thereon, a surety who pays the judgment may be subrogated to the mortgage lien.<sup>66</sup> A surety who pays the debt and takes a conveyance of all the creditor's interest in land mortgaged to secure it becomes by substitution, in effect, the mortgagee for the security of his advances,<sup>67</sup> for, in equity, the payment by a surety of his principal's note, secured by a mortgage, is regarded as a purchase of the debt, rather than a payment of it; and he is entitled to have the note assigned to him, and to have the benefit of the mortgage.<sup>68</sup> But one who stands in the position of principal cannot have subrogation upon payment;<sup>69</sup> and where one of several notes secured by a mortgage is not yet due, and a surety pays the notes, his right of subrogation to the security does not become perfect, or the assignment thereof operative, until the time when it falls due, and an attempted foreclosure of the mortgage securing it before that time is void.<sup>70</sup>

(iv) LIENS — (A) In General. Where a surety pays the debt, he is substituted to the rights of the creditor in respect to liens therefor, and to their priority over other creditors;<sup>71</sup> and it is immaterial that the surety did not enter into the relation in reliance upon the security or even know of it;<sup>72</sup> but it must be shown that at the time the surety paid the debt the creditor had a valid and subsisting lien is, that he might be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee.

Damages sustained by a charterer of a ship by a breach of the charter contract, in the loss or delay of his voyage through the negligence or fault of the owner, are a lien upon the vessel; and, if a mortgagee satisfied the demand and takes an assignment of the claim, he is entitled to come in upon remnants in or equity, such as a court of equity would have enforced at his instance for the satisfaction of his debt.<sup>73</sup>

(B) Vendor's Lien. One who pays purchase-money as surety of the vendee is entitled to the vendor's lien,<sup>74</sup> and his equity is superior to the widow's right of dower.<sup>75</sup> But to entitle him to relief he must actually have been surety for the purchaser, must have paid the debt, and the vendor's lien must not have been waived, abandoned, or extinguished;<sup>76</sup> and as one who merely lends money to another to pay off a lien does not thereby become subrogated to the lien,<sup>77</sup> the fact that a note paid by a surety was executed by the principal for money borrowed to pay for land does not entitle the surety to a lien on the land to secure the repayment of the money; the payee of the note himself having no lien.<sup>78</sup> In those cases which sustain the theory that payment of the indebtedness destroys

A surety to the crown, having paid the debt of his deceased principal, is entitled to the priority of the crown in the administration of the estate of the principal. In re Churchill, 39 Ch. A surety paying the debt of his deceased principal is entitled in equity to be paid as of the same class as the obligation discharged by him; but it is otherwise at law. Lenoir v. Winn, 4 Desauss. Eq. (S. C.) 65, 6 Am. Dec. 597. N. C. Rev. St. c. 113, § 4, confers on the claim of a surety the dignity in the administration of the debts of the principal which the debt, if unpaid, would have had; and it does not make any difference whether payment be made before or after the death of the principal. Drake v. Coltrane, 44 N. C. 300.

A surety on a custom-house bond after paying it has, under statute, the same priority as the United States against the estate of his principal in the hands of an assignee. Reed v. Emory, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 339; U. S. v. Hunter, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,426, 5 Mason 62. And where a person gives his bond for duties on imported goods, he will be subrogated, not under the statute but upon the general principles of equity, to the priorities of the United States, although the importer is not bound in the bond (Enders v. Brune, 4 Rand. (Va.) 438); but it has been held that a surety on a custom-house bond, who has paid it, is not entitled under the statute to be subrogated to the rights of the United States as against his cosurety, so as to give his demand for contribution a preference over other creditors of the cosurety (State Bank v. Adger, 2 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 262. But see Jackson v. Davis, 4 Mackey (D. C.) 194); and the statute is held to apply only to an assignment for the benefit of creditors in general, and not to an assignment by an insolvent debtor in trust for the benefit of single creditor or surety (Bouchaud v. Dias, 1 N. Y. 201 [reversing 3 Edw. 485]); and a surety who has discharged a duty bond to the United States is entitled to be subrogated only to the preferences and priorities of the United States to be first paid out of the estate of the principal, and to no other advantages secured to the United States (U. S. v. Preston, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,087, 4 Wash. 446). The act has no application when the person seeking subrogation is not a surety. Wilkinson v. Babbitt, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,668, 4 Dill. 207.

upon a bond, who pays it off after the death of the principal debtor, is subrogated to the same right of priority in the distribution of assets in the hands of the executor which the law confers on bond creditors.<sup>84</sup> The doctrine is extended to apply against a cosurety<sup>85</sup> or his estate.<sup>86</sup>

c. Rights of Principal. A surety is entitled to be subrogated to rights and privileges and securities which belong to the principal whose debt he has paid, in so far as these are connected with the debt,<sup>87</sup> such as the right of set-off,<sup>88</sup> or defense,<sup>89</sup> or to have a judgment against the principal reviewed,<sup>90</sup> and to have the benefit of any fund or collateral provided by the principal for the payment

The sureties on a state treasurer's bond who are compelled to pay his deficiency are subrogated to the rights of the state, and their claim against his estate for repayment of the amount paid by them is entitled to preference, as the state funds in his possession were trust funds, and therefore preferred. Whitbeck v. Dawkins, 93 N. C. 283.

The surety on the bond of a public contractor, conditioned, in compliance with statute, for the faithful performance of the contract, and the prompt and full payment of laborers and materialmen, has an equity, under the doctrine of subrogation, in the sums due from the government under the contract, which is superior to the claim of a bank under an assignment from the contractor to secure the repayment of money loaned, to be used as he saw fit, either in the performance of his building contract or in any other way. *Henningsen v. Indemnitors of sureties on the bond of a contractor for the erection of a county building compelled to pay judgments against the contractor, who was subsequently declared a bankrupt, were entitled to an equitable lien on a balance due from the county to the bankrupt, which the trustee subsequently recovered, to the amount of the judgments so paid. *Reid v. of the debt.<sup>91</sup> But the surety is entitled to subrogation only in regard to the contract upon which he was surety,<sup>92</sup> and a surety for the purchase-price of property cannot interpose as a defense the failure of title to the property,<sup>93</sup> and he cannot, unless the principal is insolvent,<sup>94</sup> thus bringing the matter within the scope of equitable set-off,<sup>95</sup> set off a demand in favor of the principal not connected with the subject of the action or growing out of the same transaction.<sup>96</sup>

d. Rights of Cosurety. One cosurety who pays the whole debt has the same remedy by subrogation against his cosurety for his proportionate part as a surety has against the principal,<sup>97</sup> and if a cosurety takes counter security from his principal for his own indemnity, his cosurety upon contributing will be subrogated to the benefit of the counter security.<sup>98</sup> get it discounted, and to apply the proceeds in discharge of a smaller note of the maker held by the bank, and on other debts of the creditor. The bank refusing to discount the note, the maker agreed that the creditor should hold it as collateral security for the debts due the latter, and it was held that the proceeds of a judgment on the notes should be applied first to indemnify a surety on the note held by the bank, and the balance to the claims of the creditor. *Tysor v. 5. EXTENT AND LIMITATION OF RIGHT. While it is a general rule, founded on principles of natural reason and justice, that a surety, paying off a debt, shall stand in the place of the creditor, and have all the rights which the creditor has for the purpose of reimbursing himself,<sup>13</sup> he takes the claim subject to all its disqualifications and limitations,<sup>14</sup> and he can acquire no greater rights than the creditor had<sup>15</sup> at the time of payment,<sup>16</sup> nor a priority of lien which the creditor did not have;<sup>17</sup> for the surety cannot be placed in a more favorable condition than the principal,<sup>18</sup> and where the creditor had no rights there is nothing to which the subrogee can be subrogated.<sup>19</sup> Whether the right of subrogation will be extended to the extremest point, so as to include all the rights and remedies of the creditor, must often depend on whether it is necessary for the protection of the surety that it should be so, and subrogation to a right which would be of no practical advantage to him will be refused, particularly where to grant it would work detriment to others;<sup>20</sup> and thus where a creditor makes a partial payment to one holding a prior special mortgage, subrogating him pro tanto to the rights of such mortgagee, he is subrogated subordinately to the rights of that creditor to be paid the balance,<sup>21</sup> the surety's equity of subrogation being measured by the contract which he secures and being limited by it,<sup>22</sup> and the surety is thus not subrogated to rights of the creditor relating to other and separate debts.<sup>23</sup> A surety will not be substituted to the rights and liens of the creditor so as to defeat an interest acquired and held by a third person, when that interest, although subordinate to that of the creditor, is prior in date to the undertaking of the surety;<sup>24</sup> and where the equity of the surety is a secret one it will not be allowed to the detriment of one whose rights were acquired without notice of the suretyship.<sup>25</sup> Furthermore a surety cannot speculate upon his principal's misfortune,<sup>26</sup> his right being limited to actual repayment and indemnification,<sup>27</sup> with legal interest;<sup>28</sup> nor can he base a claim for subrogation upon a payment intended as a gift and made without intent for subrogation;<sup>29</sup> and a surety cannot be substituted for the creditor in relation to another security for another part of the debt where the effect would be to deprive the creditor of one of his resources, and thereby cause a partial loss of the debt.<sup>30</sup> It has been held that a surety who has been fully compensated according to his contract for assuming the debt of another is not entitled to subrogation to the rights of the creditor.<sup>31</sup>

6. WAIVER OF LOSS OF RIGHT. The surety may permit security taken for the debt to be returned to the debtor, thus extinguishing his rights in them;<sup>32</sup> and generally it is a question of intention, with the presumption that the surety intends to keep the debt alive and claim the right of subrogation, but if it clearly appears that the intention was to satisfy and extinguish the debt or demand not only as to the creditor but as between the surety and the principal debtor, the right of subrogation is waived.<sup>33</sup> The taking of additional security by the surety does not of itself affect his right to subrogation to securities of the creditor;<sup>34</sup> and a surety does not lose his right to be subrogated to a lien upon the principal's real estate from the fact that he received a mortgage from the principal to secure him, and afterward released a part of it, without notice of any interest or equity of defendants, who were purchasers from the principal,<sup>35</sup> unless superior equities in third persons have intervened.<sup>36</sup> But accepting an independent security, which is not cumulative merely, and the enforcement of which is not consistent, and cannot be concurrent with the enforcement of the right of subrogation, displaces and defeats the latter right;<sup>37</sup> and a surety who has paid the judgment against himself and his principal, and who has been defeated in an action to recover of the principal the amount paid, cannot be substituted to the rights of plaintiff in the original action.<sup>38</sup>

7. SURETIES FOR PARTICULAR CLASSES OF PERSONS — a. Sheriffs and Other Officers. Sureties of a sheriff who have been compelled to pay a judgment, because of the sheriff's failure to return an execution, are subrogated to the right of the sheriff to recover the amount from plaintiff and his attorneys, who subse-well, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 36), is entitled to subrogation only to the extent of the actual value of the depreciated medium at the time of payment.

Right to statutory penalty against sheriff. — A defendant in an execution, surety for the other defendants therein, who pays the amount thereof to plaintiff after the sheriff has failed to return it for thirty days after the return-day, has no right to the thirty per cent damages which the law imposes, for the benefit of such plaintiff, on the sheriff for such failure. Sanders v. Commonwealth Bank, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 327.

Where the sureties have allowed a set-off to part of the creditors' demand, their right of subrogation is not limited to the amount of the judgment against them for the balance, but extends to the whole amount of the creditor's claim. Keokuk v. Love, 31 Iowa 119.

quently recovered the amount of the judgment from the judgment debtor;<sup>39</sup> and where the sureties of a sheriff discharge a judgment obtained against them by plaintiff in execution, for default of the principal, they are subrogated to all the rights of plaintiff, both against the sheriff and defendant in execution;<sup>40</sup> and, upon paying the owner for property wrongfully levied upon by the sheriff and turned over to the execution creditor, they are entitled to be subrogated to the sheriff's rights against the creditor;<sup>41</sup> and the surety of a sheriff who was compelled to pay over to heirs the amount due them on the sale of lands in partition may be joined with the sheriff's administrator as plaintiff and may sue on the note given for the purchase-price of the land.<sup>42</sup> Sureties on the official bond of a sheriff, on being compelled to make good the default of their principal, will, by the fact of payment, become equitable assignees and be subrogated to the position of the state in respect of all its securities, liens, and priorities, for the purpose of enforcing reimbursement from their principal.<sup>43</sup> If a party as surety for a sheriff has to pay the amount of a judgment or decree in whole or in part on account of the default of a deputy to said sheriff, he may obtain a judgment or decree against such deputy and his sureties and their personal representatives for the amount so paid by him.<sup>44</sup> But a sheriff who by his act or the act of his deputy, in violation of his official duty, has suffered property, liable to levy and which has been levied on by him or his deputy, to be converted by the debtor to his own use, cannot be allowed, as against and to the prejudice of creditors holding liens on the debtor's remaining property, to have indemnity thereout to the use of another by substitution for what he has been compelled to pay on account of official delinquency or misconduct. The remaining fund ought not to be taken from these lien creditors by the agency of a court of equity and appropriated to the indemnity of one whose claim to priority rests on the title of a wrong-doer.<sup>45</sup> The sureties of an insolvent clerk of court, on a breach of trust by their principal, will be entitled to be subrogated to all the remedies and securities that were in the power of the creditor against one who coöperated in the breach of trust.<sup>46</sup> The same rules of subrogation apply to sureties of other officers who have been compelled to answer for the default of their principal.<sup>47</sup>

equity to be substituted to the rights of the sheriff against such deputy, and to resort to a fund which such deputy had secured from defendant in the original writ to indemnify himself against the consequences of the same default. *Philbrick v. The sureties of a defaulting tax collector, who have been compelled to make good the default of their principal, are entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the state or county, and to have the lien created by the bond in favor of the state or county enforced for their indemnity (Turner v. Teague, 73 Ala. 554; Boone County Bank v. Byrum, 68 Ark. 71, 56 S. W. 532; Irby v. Livingston, 81 Ga. 281, 6 S. E. 591; Baker v. Maryland Fidelity, etc., Co., 73 S. W. 1025, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2196); and this although the collector who was absent from the state was not proceeded against by the state or county, and the sureties paid the judgment against them for their principal's default (Knighon v. Curry, 62 Ala. 404); and where the sureties of a county collector are compelled to b. Guardians. A surety of a guardian paying the debts of his principal has the right to be subrogated to all the ward's securities and rights against the principal,<sup>48</sup> such as the right of the ward to subject the homestead of the guardian to pay money to the state or county for the default of the collector after he has transferred his real estate after the statutory lien is attached thereto, they will be entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the state, and may enforce the same against the grantee of the collector by a bill in chancery to reimburse themselves for the amount paid (Richeson v. Crawford, 94 Ill. 165); and under Ala. Code, § 527, declaring the bond of a tax collector a lien upon the property of sureties from the date of his default, the sureties, upon payment of a judgment against them for the default as a tax collector, are subrogated to the rights of the county therein, and, as against a non-contributing surety, acquire a lien for his share superior to any mortgage or other lien of date subsequent to such default (Cummings v. May, 110 Ala. 479, 20 So. 307). Sureties on a defaulting tax collector's bond, after discharging the feri facias issued against them and their insolvent principal, and thus satisfying the state for all taxes for the given year, are subrogated to the rights of the state for the uncollected tax of that year, and, when executions for unpaid state taxes have not been issued, may recover such taxes by bill in equity, there being no strictly legal remedy available (Livingston v. Anderson, 80 Ga. 175, 5 S. E. 48; Prather v. Johnson, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 487. But see Jones v. Gibson, 82 Ky. 561, holding that, if a sheriff's surety pays the unpaid taxes due the state, he cannot be subrogated to the state's rights against delinquent taxpayers upon the ground that it would subject taxpayers to tedious and expensive litigations). But sureties on a defaulting collector's bond, who purchased lands of his sold on execution for an income sufficient to satisfy the judgment and received a conveyance to themselves, were not entitled to be subrogated to the statutory lien, which the state had in priority of a subsequent mortgage (Turner v. Teague, supra); and as the bond required of a tax collector is to secure the faithful performance of his duties, including the payment of all taxes collected by him, and although his bond may be insufficient, the purpose of the contract is that the obligee shall be held harmless up to the amount of the bond, where a surety pays the amount called for by such bond, he does not become subrogated to the right of a creditor to the prejudice of a balance due the latter in order that the surety may recoup himself and sustain no loss, while the creditor remains the loser in a matter with respect to which the bond was intended to protect him (State v. Perkins, 114 La. 301, 38 So. 196).

Sureties on a county treasurer's bond, who have been compelled to pay to the county moneys used by the treasurer in a firm in which he was a member, with the acquiescence of his copartners, will be subrogated to the rights of the county, against the partnership, and given priority over the claims of the partners for money paid out on ordinary partnership business. Stokes v. Little, 65 Ill. App. 255. Similarly where a county treasurer deposits county moneys with a bank, which, knowing the nature of such money, appropriates it to the payment of a private debt against the treasurer, who defaults in such sum, the sureties on his bond, against whom suit is brought by the county, may be subrogated to the rights of the county against the bank for the amount of the judgment rendered against them, since the county could have joined the bank as a party defendant (Skipwith v. Hurt, 94 Tex. 322, 60 S. W. 423); and where the state auditor issued a distress warrant against the collector's bondsmen for taxes which the collector had failed to pay over to the state, the bank was liable to the bondsmen in the respective amounts paid by each of them to discharge the collector's liability to the state, since they were entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the state to the funds deposited with the bank (Carroll County Bank v. Rhodes, 69 Ark. 43, 63 S. W. 68).

Where a sheriff deposited in a bank a portion of the taxes collected by him, and the bank appropriated the funds to the payment of an individual indebtedness of the sheriff, sureties on the sheriff's bond who had paid to the state the amount misappropriated were entitled as against the bank to be subrogated to the state's rights to the deposit, although they had not paid the interest or penalty which accrued to the state by the sheriff's default, since only the state could make such objection. Boone County Bank v. Byrum, 68 Ark. 71, 56 S. W. 532.

Subrogation may be had between cosureties for a guardian, in like manner as between other cosureties. Com. v. Marsh, 149 Pa. St. 239, 24 Atl. 339.

Where a surety for a defaulting guardian settles with his successor, he is subrogated to the rights of the wards, and entitled to recover from debtors of their estate, whose claims the defaulting guardian compromised without authority, such amounts as the wards themselves were entitled to recover. Brown v. Maryland Fidelity, etc., Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 76 S. W. 944 [affirmed in 98 Tex. 55, 80 S. W. 593].

But he cannot rise higher than his principal in right, and must stand in his shoes and take his remedies with all the equities and limitations existent against the ward. Adams v. Gleaves, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 367.

sale for the payment of claims owing by him in his fiduciary capacity;<sup>49</sup> and if, on the application of the sureties of a guardian, he is required to give further security, and the sureties on the first bond afterward pay the whole amount of the guardian's deficiency, equity will subrogate them to the rights of the ward so far as to allow them to use the second bond to enforce contribution.<sup>50</sup> It is held that a guardian's sureties are entitled to be subrogated to the remedies of the ward against their principal, even before payment, when the principal is insolvent.<sup>51</sup>

c. Trustees. A surety of a trustee may be subrogated to the right of the latter to be reimbursed from the trust fund for money properly paid out in its behalf by the trustee;<sup>52</sup> and a surety of a trustee, who has been compelled to account for the defalcation of his principal, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the cestui que trust, against one who has wrongfully appropriated part of the trust estate.<sup>53</sup>

d. Executors or Administrators. The surety of an administrator who has disbursed his funds for the benefit of the estate may be subrogated to the right of his principal;<sup>54</sup> and is entitled to the same lien on the estate which such payment by the administrator would have given him,<sup>55</sup> and to the rights of the creditors paid,<sup>56</sup> or of an administrator de bonis non,<sup>57</sup> and an administrator's surety upon payment of a devastavit is subrogated to the rights of the estate.<sup>58</sup> But a surety for an executor or administrator must exhaust his remedies against the executor or administrator individually before resorting to the assets of the estate.<sup>59</sup> An executor liable for the default of his co-executor is entitled to be subrogated to whatever compensation the co-executor is entitled to.<sup>60</sup>

e. Surety of Surety. A surety of a surety is entitled to all the rights of the surety, and is to be substituted in his place as to all remedies against the principal or his estate,<sup>61</sup> and to the benefit of mortgage security given to secure the debt.<sup>62</sup> But the surety of a surety, although compelled to pay the creditor, cannot be so substituted if the debtor has paid his immediate surety,<sup>63</sup> and in any event he can have no greater right than the surety for whom he is surety would have upon payment of the debt.<sup>64</sup>

g. Sureties on Judicial Bonds. The bail on a replevin bond is upon payment of the bond entitled to subrogation to the rights of the creditor.<sup>68</sup> Similarly the surety of a joint debtor in a forthcoming bond becomes, on forfeiture thereof, surety for the debt, and, when he has discharged it he is entitled to be substituted to all the rights of the creditor against the original debtor subsisting at the time he became bound for the debt;<sup>69</sup> and where, on a judgment against the subsequent indorser, the liability of the prior indorser is fixed, security of the subsequent indorser in a forthcoming bond is entitled to be substituted to the rights of the principal to the extent of that liability;<sup>70</sup> but as the equitable lien of a creditor on securities given by the principal to the surety to indemnify the latter is derived through the sureties and is thus discharged by any act which discharges the sureties from liability, subsequent sureties on a replevin bond, deriving their right of subrogation through the creditor, lose the right of subrogation to the securities by any act which discharges the original sureties.<sup>71</sup> Where a judgment is affirmed on appeal the sureties on an error or appeal-bond, being liable, may at any time pay the judgment,<sup>72</sup> and upon doing so they become subrogated to all the rights of the judgment creditor at the time of payment,<sup>73</sup> and their equity is superior to

The reason is that the new surety, by joining the principal in a bond by which he obtains time in the collection of the debt, changed the terms upon which the original surety was bound and prejudiced his rights. Moore v. Lassiter, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 630.

A supplemental surety is entitled to be subrogated to any rights which the creditor has against the surety. Bender v. George, 92 Pa. St. 36. Thus sureties on a bond can recover from bail given on arrest of the principal (Parsons v. Bridgock, 2 Vern. Ch. 608, 23 Eng. St. Rep. 44, holding that sureties on a bond for the release of attachment against the property of the principal given after a judgment against the principal and an indorser of a note are not entitled to subrogation against such indorser).

Subrogation of sureties on an administration bond to remedy of creditor on appeal-bond.—When a creditor of a deceased person recovered a personal decree against the administrator, who appealed therefrom, and on the appeal the decree was affirmed, and, having given an appeal-bond, the surety therein made an arrangement with the creditor, by which he obtained a transfer of the decree, and made a part of it out of the administrator, and afterward recovered judgment on the administration bond, in an action brought in the name of the creditor as relator, for a sum less than the damages incurred by the appeal, the sureties in the administration bond could not be substituted to the remedy of the creditor on the appeal-bond. *Brown v. In England the rule has been repudiated. In re Walker, [1892] 1 Ch. 621, 61 L. J. Ch. 234, 66 L. T. Rep. N. S. 315, 40 Wkly. Rep. 327 (holding that the proposition that the principal creditor is entitled to the benefit of all counter bonds or collateral security given by the debtor to the surety cannot be supported, and that Maure v. Harrison [cited in 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 93, pl. 5, 21 Eng. Reprint 904], as the authority for that proposition is not a decision to that effect); Royal Bank v. Commercial Bank, 7 App. Cas. 366, 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 360, 31 Wkly. Rep. 49.

Basis of the rule.—"The whole doctrine of subrogation rests upon equitable considerations and principles. The purpose, at last, is to make that thing or person bear a common burthen, which or who ought, in equity and good conscience, to bear it primarily, in relief or ease of another, only secondarily liable as between the two. Therefore it is that, generally, whenever a security is given by the principal debtor, either to the surety, or to the common creditor, for the payment of the debt, a court of equity will lay hold of it as a trust for the security of the debt, and will so execute the trust that the debt be paid. When the security is given to the surety, if the court subrogates the creditor to it, the surety is benefited—it is for his case. He is relieved from the vexation of suit, from payment of the debt, or from resorting to the legal remedies against the principal, or remedies to make the security avail-wrongful release of the securities of the surety,<sup>83</sup> or by the fact that his rights against the surety personally are barred by statute,<sup>84</sup> the surety being treated as a trustee of the securities for the benefit of the creditor.<sup>85</sup> The rule extends to guarantors<sup>86</sup> and indorsers,<sup>87</sup> and where a third person, for a present consideration, guarantees the payment of an existing debt, and the debtor executes to him a mortgage conditioned for the payment of the indebtedness to the creditor and the indemnification of the guarantor, the creditor, by substitution, is entitled to the benefit of the security;<sup>88</sup> but where a creditor accepts a guarantor, and the guarantor receives indemnity from the principal debtor, the creditor is subrogated to the rights of the guarantor in only such of the security as subsists at the time he asserts his right thereto by action.<sup>89</sup> The creditor is not subrogated to securities held by the surety for other purposes,<sup>90</sup> or given to take effect upon a con-able. The liability of the principal is extinguished, to the extent of the security, and justice is done to all parties in interest." Colt v. Barnes, 64 Ala. 108, 126.

If one of two principal debtors binds himself to the other to pay the whole debt, and gives security for the performance, the creditor of both is entitled to the benefit of that security. Cornwell's Appeal, 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 305.

A creditor will not be subrogated to the rights of a surety in a mortgage given by his debtor to indemnify the surety, since the mortgage is in the nature of trust property for the satisfaction of the debt. Whitehead v. Henderson, 67 Ark. 200, 56 S. W. 1065.

Where one accepts a mortgage as security for assuming a debt of the mortgagor, the creditor may, in equity, be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagor, and enforce the debt against the mortgagee. Greene v. McDonald, 70 Vt. 372, 40 Atl. 1035.

A distinction is made, however, and it is held that where security is given, with the intention that it shall be applied to the payment of the debt, and be an indemnity to the surety, the surety is a mere trustee for the creditor, and subrogation of the creditor may be decreed; but where the surety is indemnified only against the payment of the debt, it is personal to him, and there can be no substitution or subrogation. John Shillito Co. v. Henderson-Achert Lith. Co., 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 7, 6 Ohio N. P. 25. And see Pool v. Doster, 59 Miss. 258 [followed in Clay v. Freeman, 74 Miss. 813, 20 So. 871] (holding that to make a security available to the creditor, it must be conditioned for the payment of the debt, and for enforcement on default in its payment, in other words, it must be expressed to be for the security of the debt, and to be enforceable for its payment, or otherwise it will not be held to be enforceable in behalf of the creditor. And even if the security is conditioned for payment of the debt, but stipulates for its enforcement in a specified contingency, it will be held to be a mere indemnity to the surety, and only enforceable as such according to its terms); *McLean v. dividual fund, is entitled to be subrogated to their rights.

But a director, against whom a judgment has been rendered for assenting to a dividend greater than the profits has no right of subrogation against the company; he is sued as a wrong-doer, and wrong-doers have no recourse over either against those in pari delicto or anybody else. An insurance agent is subrogated to the rights of the insurer to collect premiums advanced by him, and may maintain an action, in his own name, against the holders of notes secured by a trust deed, to recover the amount of premiums advanced by him which the insured failed to pay, and for which, by the terms of the policy, the beneficiary thereupon became liable. Boston Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Thomas, 59 Kan. 470, 53 Pac. 472.

A court of equity will not allow an agent to use trust funds in any manner by which he himself acquires a special benefit to the detriment of his principal, and it will not allow him to invest the funds in securities which he himself held, and in such case equity will allow the principal to be subrogated to the rights which the agent had at the time of the transaction, even though the original securities are canceled of record.<sup>99</sup> Where assignees of an insolvent debtor give their joint note to a creditor of the insolvent in payment of such creditor's debt, relying for the means of paying the note on the funds in their hands by virtue of the assignment, specially appropriated for that purpose, such assignees will be considered, both in law and equity, as substituted for such creditor in reference to such fund.<sup>1</sup>

2. SHERIFFS. A sheriff who has satisfied a judgment rendered against him on account of his deputy's failure to pay money collected on an execution is entitled to be subrogated to the deputy's rights.<sup>2</sup> Similarly if personal property be sold under execution after satisfaction of the judgment, and under such circumstances as amount to notice to the purchaser of such satisfaction, the sheriff or his sureties, upon having been compelled by the execution debtor to repay the value of the property sold, will be entitled to the money taken or bid at the sale;<sup>3</sup> but where the maker of a note, which defendant has guaranteed conditionally, is sued, and his property attached, and the attaching officer is obliged to pay the debt through the failure of the receptors of the attached property, the suit and attachment are for the benefit of the guarantor, as well as the creditor, and the officer is not subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the guarantor. It is only against the maker of the note that this right exists.<sup>4</sup> Upon satisfying a judgment based upon his own delinquency, a sheriff cannot thereupon recover the amount from the party for whose benefit the judgment was recovered.<sup>5</sup>

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. Although in a few cases the right has been denied,<sup>6</sup> as a general rule an executor or administrator who with his own funds pays debts or charges upon the estate is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of those paid for the collection of the amounts so paid,<sup>7</sup> and he may apply assets

See Shinn v. Budd, 14 N. J. and in no other way can he be permitted to assert that he has paid as administrator more than he has received.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Subrogation," § 32. An administrator induced by fraud to credit an alleged assigned allowance on the purchase-price of land sold by the estate, and subsequently compelled individually to pay the allowance to the real owner, is subrogated to the right to enforce the vendor's lien against one who received a voluntary conveyance from the purchaser. *Thomas v. If an administrator pendente lite has paid debts of the estate and costs of litigation exceeding the amount of the personal estate, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors against the lands of the estate, and may subject the lands in the hands of the heirs, and the lands in the hands of the devisee, if necessary, to his reimbursement. *Woolley v. Subrogation to mortgage discharged.—If the executrix, the widow of the deceased, pays a mortgage out of her individual funds, she is entitled to be subrogated to the mortgage lien (Jefferson v. Edrington, 53 Ark. 545, 14 S. W. 99, 903, holding, however, that where a widow, who was also executrix of her husband's estate, paid off one mortgage on his lands out of her individual means, and another out of the funds of the estate, but on her final accounting as executrix she was credited with having paid both out of her individual means, she must release all claims against the estate based on the showing in her final account as to the payment of the two mortgages out of her individual means; Pineo v. Goodspeed, 22 Ill. App. 59 [affirmed in 120 Ill. 524, 12 N. E. 1961]); without proof of specific intent at the time of payment to keep the mortgage alive (Jefferson v. Edrington, supra). Similarly, an administrator who sells land subject to a mortgage, and afterward pays off the mortgage out of the general assets of the estate, will have a clear equity against the purchaser, and be entitled to reimbursement out of the land (Greenwell v. Heritage, 71 Mo. 459 [following Welton v. Hull, 50 Mo. 296]); and administrators, having redeemed the decedent's lands from mortgage, are subrogated to the right of the mortgagees to collect so much of the mortgage debt as is equal to the widow's share of the amount paid to redeem, by causing the interest assigned to her as dower to be sold for the purpose of foreclosing the mortgage to that extent, without an assignment or act of transfer of the mortgages, since they hold such right for the benefit of the creditors, as quasi-assignees for the purpose of contribution (Salinger v. Black, 68 Ark. 449, 60 S. W. 229).

11. Gaw v. Huffman, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 628, holding that if, after exhausting testator's personal estate, there still remains a balance due the executor on account of debts paid by him, which would be binding on the heirs, the executor is entitled to stand in the place of the creditors, and charge the balance to testator's real estate, which is liable in the hands of the devisees in proportion to the value at the time of his death of the estate devised to each devisee.

An executor, who has made advances to legatees from his own funds, is entitled to be subrogated to their rights, but can be credited only with a pro rata share of the assets available for distribution at the time of the accounting. Tickel v. Quinn, 1 Dem. Surr. (N. Y.) 425.

he holds the right in trust.<sup>14</sup> Where an administrator pays debts in full, with entire confidence that the assets are sufficient for all purposes, and the estate subsequently is found to be insolvent, he will be entitled to subrogation as to other claims against the estate in favor of the same creditors, even after audit, to the extent of overpayment on the first claim;<sup>15</sup> and thus an administrator who, at his own risk, pays debts not of the preferred class before he has had time to ascertain the insolvency of the estate, may be subrogated to the rights of the creditors whose claims he has paid, the estate being in fact insolvent;<sup>16</sup> and one who to protect his own interests furnishes the administrator funds with which to pay the debts is subrogated to the claims paid to the extent to which the administrator himself could have been subrogated.<sup>17</sup> Similarly a widow of the maker of a note who, before her appointment as administratrix, pays the note, which is thereupon delivered to her by the holder, will be subrogated to the rights of the holder.<sup>18</sup> But as in other cases,<sup>19</sup> the executor or administrator must not be guilty of laches.<sup>20</sup>

4. GUARDIANS AND TRUSTEES. A guardian who extends time to his ward's debtor until he becomes insolvent, relying on his promise to pay, and settles the debt in his accounts, can recover it as a debt due to himself;<sup>21</sup> and similarly a guardian compelled by suit to pay his ward a sum of money on the account of his neglect to sue a former guardian, by whom the sum was due the ward and unaccounted for, is subrogated to the rights of the ward, and may recover the amount from the former guardian or from the sureties on his bond;<sup>22</sup> and a court of equity, independently of any agreement, will consider money advanced by a trustee to purchase in an outstanding title as an advance for the benefit of his cestui que trust, and not for his own use, giving him a lien on the property until he is reimbursed for the advancement.<sup>23</sup> But a guardian who has for a valuable consideration promised to pay to the ward the amount of the ward's interest in land is not upon payment thereof subrogated to the interest of the ward in the land, for so to subrogate him would be to pay him twice.<sup>24</sup> In case of a mixed sale of property under a decree for the payment of debts, where the trustees making the sale

But he is not entitled to the full amount of a claim, his only right as against the estate being to stand substituted for the creditors whose claims he has discharged as a claimant against the insolvent estate and to take the same distributive share to which those creditors would have been entitled. McNeill v. McNeill, 36 Ala. 109, 76 Am. Dec. 320, holding that if an administrator who is also surety for the intestate on a note given for the purchase-price of land pays the note with his own funds, he merely becomes a creditor of the estate, and is not entitled to be subrogated to the vendor's lien on the land.

17. Freehold First Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 61 N. J. Eq. 188, 48 Atl. 333, holding, however, that where an administrator of an insolvent estate, who was also an heir, paid claims which were charges on the realty, he being unauthorized to pay such claims, the presumption was that the payment was not as administrator, but as heir, and therefore creditors who had loaned him money under an agreement that it was to be employed in paying claims against the estate were not entitled, as against other creditors, to be subrogated to the rights of those whose liens were so discharged, although such right might have existed as against the heirs.

H. Persons Discharging Encumbrances on Property — 1. IN GENERAL.

A person who, in order to protect his own interests or rights in property, is compelled to pay an existing obligation against the same, such as a mortgage or other lien, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor whose debt he paid, and to the lien of the encumbrance discharged;<sup>26</sup> and he thereby becomes an

Where a life-tenant pays assessments, which the remainder-men were bound to pay under a contract with him, and such assessments had become a lien on the property, and it was liable to be sold therefor, he was entitled to a lien on the premises by subrogation (Eddy v. Leath, 26 Ohio Cir. Ct. 645), and a life-tenant who pays a mortgage on the premises is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee; and the cancellation of the mortgage by inadvertence will not alter such right, where no other rights have been affected thereby (Kocher v. Kocher, 56 N. J. Eq. 545, 39 Atl. 535), and a devise of a life-interest in lands of the testator, who pays with his own funds a debt of the testator, which is either charged on the land by the will, or payable out of the land by statute, will be subrogated to the creditor's right (Suydam v. Voorhees, 58 N. J. Eq. 157, 43 Atl. 4); and where a life-tenant from time to time made payments on a mortgage on the property in order to protect her life-estate, such payments were not to be regarded as pro tanto satisfactions and releases of the original indebtedness, but the tenant had, as to the remainder-men, the right to keep the mortgage alive for the protection of her rights and interest (Bonhoff v. Wiehorst, 57 Misc. (N. Y.) 456, 108 N. Y. Suppl. 437, holding, however, that where a life-tenant of mortgaged property, for the protection of her life-estate, paid off the mortgage, she was entitled to recover from the remainder-men only the principal sum advanced by her, since it was her duty as life-tenant to keep down the interest charge, and since as such tenant she was entitled to all income derived from the property in excess of such interest charge). Similarly the payment of a mortgage on land by the tenant for life, who equitable assignee and may keep the mortgage alive and enforce the lien for his own benefit;<sup>27</sup> and plaintiff in an action for foreclosure of a mortgage, on the payment or tender of his mortgage and costs, can make no resistance to a claim for subrogation on the part of any one who has an interest in the property which can only be saved by, or which would be seriously injured without, the proposed substitution;<sup>28</sup> and the same principle applies if, instead of the property which he seeks to protect being his absolutely, there is a contingency upon which it may be his and he desires to protect it and therefore pays the debt.<sup>29</sup> Where a per-

was also a tenant in remainder of an interest in the land, made after she had made her will giving all her property to one of the tenants in remainder, will not be presumed to be a gift to both the other tenants in common, although she immediately caused the mortgage to be canceled of record. Kinhead v. Ryan, 64 N. J. Eq. 454, 53 Atl. 1053. But vendee of the life-tenant and her grantor, who paid the mortgage given by her to such grantor for the purchase-price of the land, conveyed to her for life and to her husband's children in remainder, did not thereby become subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, as they purchased the land with notice of the rights of the remainder-men. Robinson v. Lowery, 52 S. C. 464, 30 S. E. 487.

A widow in possession, whose dower has not been assigned, by paying a mortgage on the land, becomes subrogated to the mortgagor's rights, as against decedent's heirs (Becker v. Carey, (N. J. Ch. 1897) 36 Atl. 770); and where a widow, entitled to dower and homestead in land, relieves a portion thereof from the lien of a deed of trust in order to protect her interests, she is entitled to have the whole of such payment refunded to her, in case no portion of the land covered by the trust deed is required to satisfy her dower and homestead rights (Kopp v. Thele, 104 Minn. 267, 116 N. W. 472, 17 L. R. A. N. S. 981; Smith v. Stephens, 164 Mo. 415, 64 S. W. 260). Similarly, a wife who on the death of her husband paid off a mortgage on the homestead with her own money is entitled to subrogation to the mortgage security on the theory that she paid her own money for the protection of a vested interest in the land. Fowler v. Fowler, 78 Mo. App. 330. See Literer v. Huddleston, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1898) 52 S. W. 1003.

Where the beneficiaries of a life policy elect to allow the proceeds to be applied to a mortgage on the decedent's realty, and to take as heirs, under his will, and the estate becomes insolvent, the beneficiaries are entitled, on completing the payment of the mortgage, to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, as against other devisees and creditors. Cutchin v. Johnston, 120 N. C. 51, 26 S. E. 698.

On failure of a trustee to pay or secure certain debts, a beneficiary who has been compelled to pay one of them intended to be provided for in order to protect her interest is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor so paid. Walsh v. Walsh, 4 Nebr. (Unoff.) 683, 95 N. W. 1025 rights of the mortgagee who has been paid, and the right is not lost because the third possessor may be subsequently evicted. Walmsley v. Theus, 107 La. 417, 31 So. 869, holding also that where the wife was the owner of a separate interest in property owned by her husband, she being his creditor, she had a right to pay a debt against him, and to legal subrogation, if it did not come in conflict with the transferor's mortgage, who retained all his rights on unpaid notes in his hands.

A third mortgagee, who has taken title from the owner, and pays a first mortgage to protect his title, taking an assignment thereof, is entitled to subrogation to the lien of the first mortgage, on foreclosure of the second mortgage. Hagan v. Sheridan, 10 Kan. App. 22, 61 Pac. 756.

A beneficiary under a second trust deed who purchases the creditor's interest in a first trust deed, and also the interest of a purchaser by an invalid sale thereunder, is subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the creditor. Long v. Long, 141 Mo. 352, 44 S. W. 341. But where the holder of a second deed of trust paid to the trustee the sum secured by the first deed of trust, and the note and deed were surrendered to her, she was not, as to the grantor's creditors, entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the original holder of said note and deed, if her deed of trust was fraudulent as to creditors. Mansur, etc., Implement Co. v. Jones, 143 Mo. 253, 45 S. W. 41.

A junior mortgagee who purchases the mortgaged premises to protect his own interest at a sale on foreclosure of a first mortgage is entitled to be subrogated to all rights and equities of the first mortgagee. Benton v. Shreeve, 4 Ind. 66.

One who has paid off an encumbrance upon land, which the grantee assumed and agreed to pay as part of the purchase-money, is entitled to the benefit of a vendor's lien against the land to the amount so paid. Williams v. Crow, 84 Mo. 298.

A purchaser under a decree, obtained without appearance of defendant, on an attachment upon land as the property of defendant, in which he has only an equity, without designating it to be such, who has paid off the vendor's lien, will be subrogated to the vendor's rights. Lane v. Marshall, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 30.

Where purchase-money notes and the land are transferred by the vendor to a third person, and a lien retained for payment, the transfer subrogates such person to all the rights of the vendor against the original vendee. Where an owner of land finds it bound by a lien for the purchase-money due by his grantor, and, to protect himself, pays off the lien, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the holder of the lien. Fulkerson v. Taylor, 100 Va. 426, 41 S. E. 863.

Where two purchasers of land give their joint note for part of the price, the vendor retaining his lien, and one of them pays the note, he does not discharge the lien, but becomes subrogated thereto, and can enforce it against a third person, who has purchased, subject to the vendor's lien, the interest of the co-purchaser after a partition. Dowdy v. Blake, 50 Ark. 205, 6 S. W. 897, 7 Am. St. Rep. 88. Where a judgment of foreclosure by scire facias is obtained by the mortgagee, and one of several purchasers from the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage pays the judgment, equity will work a subrogation of such purchaser to the rights of the mortgagee, so far as to enable him to compel contributions from persons liable thereto. *Matteson v. to the extent of his payment, as against the junior judgment creditor,<sup>53</sup> although by mistake the amount deposited is not quite enough to satisfy the senior judgment in full.<sup>54</sup> Similarly where one against whom there is a judgment conveys part of the land, on which it is a lien, subject thereto, with a provision in the deed that the grantee shall pay it all, one claiming under foreclosure of a mortgage subsequently given thereon holds the land subject to the right of enforcement against same of the amount of the judgment by the grantee of the remainder of the land, who was obliged to pay it for his own protection, and who thereby becomes entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the common grantor, and the purchaser under the mortgage is affected by the assumption of the judgment in the deed to the one under whom he claims.<sup>55</sup> Where a person purchases land under execution for less than its value, agreeing with defendant in execution to release it to him whenever he will reimburse the sum bid, a vendee of defendant will be entitled by subrogation to redeem.<sup>56</sup>

(II) DEED OF TRUST OR MORTGAGE LIENS. Although it has been held that the mere payment of a mortgage on property by the purchaser of the property will not entitle such purchaser to subrogation to the rights of the mortgage discharged,<sup>57</sup> one who buys property encumbered with a mortgage or trust deed may, as a general rule, be subrogated to the rights and lien of the original mortgagee, so far as he has paid and discharged the mortgage.<sup>58</sup> This does not depend

If a mortgage is given on land owned in common by husband and wife to secure a debt of the husband, a purchaser of the husband's interest in the land, who pays off the mortgage debt, is not entitled to be subrogated to the mortgagee's rights as against the wife's interest in the land, since she was only surety for her husband, and was as effectually released by the payment of the debt by the purchaser as if her husband, the principal debtor, had paid it (Zeller v. Henry, 157 Pa. St. 1, 27 Atl. 559); but when a husband conveys land subject to encumbrances, without his wife joining in the deed, and the grantee, who has assumed the encumbrances, pays them off without knowledge of the wife's inchoate one-third interest, he is entitled, as against the wife's claim, to be subrogated to the rights of the holders of the encumbrances (Fowler v. Maus, 141 Ind. 47, 40 N. E. 56).

But in New Jersey it is held in a late case that where the owner or purchaser of property subject to several encumbrances pays off a prior encumbrance with his own money, the payment inures to the benefit of the subsequent encumbrances, against which the prior encumbrances cannot be kept alive for the owner's benefit, even by express agreement, upon his not being otherwise secured, and he may be subrogated, although he has

and on such payment by the owner, without any agreement for subrogation or keeping the security alive, a court will not revive the prior encumbrances by application of the equitable doctrine of subrogation in favor of the owner. Avon-by-the-Sea Land, etc., Co. v. McDowell, 71 N. J. Eq. 116, 62 Atl. 865.

A purchaser paying under a mistake of law, and not of fact, cannot be subrogated. Deavitt v. Ring, 76 Vt. 216, 56 Atl. 978.

In an action by a mortgage creditor's assignee who, at a sale by the mortgagee made under a power in the deed, had bought the mortgaged land, against a tenant of a purchaser of the mortgagor's interest in possession, defendant had a right to inquire by an account whether the price given by plaintiff exceeded the amount due him as assignee, and if it did defendant was entitled to be subrogated to the surplus. Jones v. Hill, 64 N. C. 198.

Subrogation pro tanto.—Where mortgaged land is sold by the mortgagor for full value, and the purchase-money applied in payment of the mortgage debt, the purchaser is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, as against encumbrances subsequent to the mortgage, and, if the purchase-money so applied is only a partial payment of the mortgage debt, he is subrogated pro tanto (Joyce v. Dauntz, (Ohio 1896) 45 N. E. 900, holding also that his right to subrogation is not affected by notice of the encumbrances when he bought and paid for the land; nor is it necessary that he show that he intended to keep the mortgage alive, for such intention will be presumed; as to which see further infra, note 63) and if the purchaser after taking possession pays the mortgagee part of the money secured to protect the land against the lien of the mortgage, he is entitled, on foreclosure of the mortgage for the unpaid balance, to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, as against other parties interested in the land, in the amount paid to the mortgagee (Fuller v. Irvin, 1 Kan. App. 248, 42 Pac. 1094).

Purchaser from pledgee or chattel mortgagee.—A bona fide purchaser of property for value from a pledgee of the same, who sold it in violation of the pledge, succeeds to all the rights of the pledgee, and a purchaser from a chattel mortgagee will likewise succeed to the rights of his grantor with respect to the property purchased, on the principle of subrogation, although there is no contract of assignment between him and his grantee. Potter v. Lohse, 31 Mont. 91, 77 Pac. 419, under Civ. Code, § 4602.

A purchaser of chattel property from a mortgagee in possession will, in equity, be subrogated to all the rights and equities of such mortgagee to the extent of his interest therein, as against a subsequent mortgagee. O. S. Kelly Co. v. Lobenthal, 15 Ohio Cir. Ct. 343, 8 Ohio Cir. Dec. 300. Similarly a vendee of a chattel mortgage, being called upon to pay off the mortgage, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee in any other security he may have for the payment of the mortgage debt. Illinois Trust, etc., Bank v. Alexander Stewart Lumber Co., 119 Wis. 54, 94 N. W. 777.

Where defendant purchased mortgaged lands from a husband by a deed in which the wife did not join, paying off the mortgage as the consideration for the conveyance of the land to him, he was entitled to subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee, and to have the mortgage treated as an existing encumbrance on the land as against the alleged rights of the grantor's widow in the land. Overturf v. Martin, 170 Ind. 308, 84 N. E. 531.

A purchaser at a second mortgage sale, of which the third mortgagee had no notice, which fact was not known to the purchaser, purchased a release of the first mortgage, and subsequently sued to be subrogated to the rights of the first and second mortgagees, and it was held that the fact that he was a stranger to the matters at the time of his purchase was no bar to relief. Home Inv. Co. v. Clarson, 15 S. D. 513, 90 N. W. 153.

In Louisiana it is held that the subrogation acquired under Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2161, by a purchaser who employs the price of his purchase in paying the creditors to whom the property is mortgaged is a special one, so that when the amount paid by the purchaser to the mortgage creditors does not exceed the purchase-price, the subrogation acquired by him is limited to the property purchased, and does not confer rights on him to be actively exercised against third parties. Randolph v. Stark, 51 La. Ann. 1121, 26 So. 59.

Purchaser paying taxes.—Where land of an insolvent is sold by the assignee with a statement that taxes would be paid by the estate, a purchaser, on payment of the taxes, is subrogated to the right to prove them in insolvency as a privileged claim. Taylor v. Wilcox, 167 Mass. 572, 46 N. E. 115.

Where plaintiff purchased real estate from the guardian of an insane person, the guardian agreeing to pay off a mortgage thereon, and although Rev. St. § 3515, provides that in sales of property of wards the court shall make an order for the application and disposition of the proceeds of such sale, no order was made directing the guardian to pay off the mortgage, and he thereafter embezzled the purchase-price paid by plaintiff, and plaintiff was subsequently obliged to pay off the mortgage, the failure of the guardian to pay the mortgage did not amount to a breach of duty, in the absence of an order of the court to pay it; and hence there were no rights existing in either the ward or the mortgagee, as creditors as against the guardian, to which plaintiff could be subrogated. Evison v. Hallock, 108 Wis. 249, 83 N. W. 1102.

One purchasing land pending attachment proceedings, and paying a mortgage existing on the land before the attachment was levied, while believing that such payment was necesother security from his grantor.<sup>59</sup> When the money due on the mortgage is paid by him it is in the nature of an equitable assignment of the mortgage, substituting him who pays in the place of the mortgagee;<sup>60</sup> and it makes no difference whether he took an assignment of the mortgage as a release, or whether a discharge was made and evidence of the debt canceled;<sup>61</sup> the debt itself may be held still to subsist in him who paid the money as assignee, so far as it ought to subsist, in the nature of a lien on the land, and the mortgage be considered in force for his benefit, so far as he ought in justice to hold the land under it, as if it had been actually assigned;<sup>62</sup> and no proof of intention on his part to keep the mortgage alive is necessary to give him the benefit of it;<sup>63</sup> and being subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, it follows that he is entitled to the money thus paid, with interest at the rate specified in the mortgage.<sup>64</sup> Similarly, a grantee of land who, through neglect to record his deed, has had the land taken from him on execution issued upon a judgment rendered against his grantor, in an action on a debt secured by a mortgage of the grantor's other land, may maintain a bill in equity against his grantor and the judgment creditor to be subrogated, to the extent of his loss by the levy, to all the rights of the latter under the mortgage not required for the full satisfaction of the debt;<sup>65</sup> and a grantee by warranty deed who is compelled to pay a mortgage released by a guardian without authority is entitled to be subrogated to the security taken by said guardian from his grantor in lieu of the mortgage;<sup>66</sup> and where a person, in good faith, takes a mortgage upon land to which the mortgagor has fraudulently obtained a patent, the real owner, on paying such mortgage, will be subrogated to the mortgagee's rights.<sup>67</sup> But the principle has no application where, at the time of the purchase, the purchaser knew of the existence of the mortgage debt, and, in the contract, provided a mode by which it was to be extinguished;<sup>68</sup> nor does the benefit of the rule extend to a fraudulent purchaser.<sup>69</sup> Thus a purchaser of mortgaged premises who pays the mortgage debt pursuant to his agreement to assume the same as a part of the purchase-price extinguishes the lien, and he cannot by subrogation avail himself of the mortgagee's lien to the prejudice of a junior lien claimant;<sup>70</sup> nor sary to protect his own interest, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. Davis v. John V. Farwell Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 49 S. W. 656.

One induced by fraud to convey land subject to a prior mortgage to one who mortgaged the land, and after selling the mortgage to a third person reconveyed the land to the defrauded grantor is, upon paying the prior mortgage, subrogated to the rights of the first mortgage, as against the third person. Simpson v. Del Hoyo, 94 N. Y. 189.

Where a vendor forecloses his purchase-money mortgage, and a third person becomes the purchaser, the vendor is estopped from controverting his title or taking advantage of irregularities in the proceeding of foreclosure, and if it is necessary to the security of a purchaser of land at a sale under the foreclosure of a vendor's lien equity will subrogate him to the rights of the vendor under the foreclosure. *Peters v. can his grantee,<sup>71</sup> since the price thus used was in fact the money of the vendor;<sup>72</sup> and neither a purchaser of land subject to a mortgage, which he assumed and paid, and which formed part of the purchase-price, nor his grantee is entitled to subrogation to the rights of the mortgagor as against a judgment creditor of the mortgagor whose judgment had been rendered at the time the land was bought,<sup>73</sup> even though he expended large sums of money in improving the premises and assumed and paid other liens thereon prior to such judgment,<sup>74</sup> and although the judgment was rendered subsequent to the execution of the mortgage,<sup>75</sup> and although he had no actual notice of the judgment;<sup>76</sup> nor is he entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee to have the mortgage foreclosed as against the purchaser of the land under a foreclosure of a second mortgage.<sup>77</sup> Similarly, where the purchaser agrees, for part payment of the purchase-money, to pay the amounts needed to redeem from a foreclosure sale, and also for accrued taxes, he can acquire no lien or interest by such redemption and payments other than his grantor would have acquired by paying the same debts.<sup>78</sup>

3. PURCHASERS OF EQUITY OF REDEMPTION. The purchaser of an equity of redemption upon paying off prior mortgages is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagees paid off, the mortgages paid being considered part of the purchaser's title to the premises,<sup>79</sup> with interest thereon from the time of payment, at the

A vendee who has assumed a debt which is a lien on the premises cannot take an assignment of or be subrogated to the debt and lien as against his vendor and those claiming under him. Menefee v. Marge, (Va. 1888) 4 S. E. 726. But see Peet v. Beers, 4 Ind. 46, holding that a judgment attaches on land subsequently purchased by the debtor, subject to the vendor's lien for the purchase-money, and a third party, who pays off the vendor's lien, is entitled, as against the judgment creditor, to be subrogated to the vendor's rights and equities.

A purchaser of mortgaged lands, pending proceedings to establish a ditch, who afterward pays the mortgage, pays it as owner, and presumptively as part of the purchase-money, and thereby extinguishes it; and he is not entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the mortgage, so as to defeat the lien of the assessment for constructing the ditch. *Shirk v. The reason for the rule is that the purchaser derives his right of subrogation through the vendor, and as the vendor in such case would not be entitled to priority upon payment of the mortgage, the vendee is not (Afton First Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 72 Iowa 417, 34 N. W. 184; Goodyear v. Goodyear, 72 Iowa 329, 33 N. W. 142); and the vendee in paying the mortgage does no more than he agrees to do (*Martin v. rate specified in such mortgages, in a suit for the foreclosure thereof; <sup>80</sup> but, although the owner of a first mortgage, or his assignee, will be protected to the extent of such mortgage, in case he becomes the owner of the equity of redemption, as against any subsequent encumbrance existing at the time he becomes such owner, and may foreclose such subsequent encumbrance, or require the holder thereof to redeem, this right will not be extended so as to permit such first mortgagee, after he has purchased the equity of redemption, or his grantee, to give a mortgage which shall take precedence, by way of subrogation, of the encumbrance existing at the time he became the owner of the equity of redemption; <sup>81</sup> and one who has contracted to purchase land and has redeemed the same from an existing lien is not deemed the legal owner of the land for the purpose of subrogation where such contract has not been fully carried out; <sup>82</sup> and where an equity of redemption in mortgaged property is sold under execution for a debt other than the debt secured by the mortgage, the sale vests the estate sold in the purchaser subject to the payment of the mortgage debt. <sup>83</sup> But the purchaser cannot hold the entire interest in the land, having paid only the value of the equity of redemption, and if the mortgage debt is satisfied from other property the original holder of the equity of redemption will be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee to enable him to indemnify himself out of the mortgaged premises; <sup>84</sup> and if the purchaser of the equity of redemption by words in the conveyance assumes the mortgage, upon a foreclosure bringing an amount less than the debt, the mortgagee is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagor, and the purchaser will be compelled to pay the balance. <sup>85</sup> It seems that where the purchaser of land at an execution sale accepts money tendered for redemption by a person not entitled to redeem, the person paying the money will be subrogated to the purchaser's right to the deed. <sup>86</sup>

The purchaser at a road tax-sale is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the county, and to have a lien upon the real estate for all taxes paid by him, with interest from the dates of such payments. Bois v. Merriam, 5 Fed. 439.

In Alabama it is held that a purchaser of the rights and liens of the encumbrance paid off;<sup>88</sup> and when, on default in the conditions of a trust deed, a sale is made of the property covered thereby, the purchaser becomes subrogated to all of the rights of the beneficiary of the deed.<sup>89</sup> Thus a purchaser at an execution sale may, before the time for redemption expires, pay the debt secured by a prior trust deed, and be subrogated thereto;<sup>90</sup> and a party having purchased at a foreclosure sale and paid the purchase-money, in the event of the sheriff declining to make a deed of the property on account of the delay in paying such purchase-money, is still entitled to subrogation.<sup>91</sup> But the execution debtor will not be substituted to the rights of the holder of the prior lien by paying the debt which it secures, but the lien is thereby discharged; and this rule also holds where the lien is enforced by a sale of the property, and is purchased by a third party with the funds of the execution debtor;<sup>92</sup> and a purchaser at a foreclosure sale who buys goods which are sold subject to a lien is not upon payment of the lien entitled to be subrogated to the lienor's rights,<sup>93</sup> although it is held that a purchaser on an execution, who has satisfied a judgment, has a right to be subrogated in the place of the execution creditor, although he knew that the property sold belonged to a stranger.<sup>94</sup> Where goods are attached and sold by the sheriff, who pays liens out of the proceeds, one of the attaching creditors who is not paid in full is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the lien discharged.<sup>95</sup>

b. Invalid Sales — (i) GENERAL RULES. A purchaser in good faith at a void judicial or execution sale is subrogated to the rights of the creditor whose debts he has paid;<sup>96</sup> and when the property is recovered from him or his vendee land at a sale under execution issued on a moneyed judgment, in paying the purchase-money, pays his own debt, and not the debt of the obligor, against whom the judgment was rendered, and is not entitled to subrogation. Gray v. Denson, 129 Ala. 406, 30 So. 595.

Ohio Rev. St. (1892) § 5410, providing that if on sale of property on execution the title of the purchaser is invalid by reason of any defect in the proceedings, the purchaser may be subrogated, etc., does not give the purchaser at a sale under a creditor's bill a right to be subrogated to a mortgage on the property, the proceedings in the creditor's suit being regular. Jewett v. Feldheiser, 68 Ohio St. 523, 67 N. E. 1072, holding also that a purchaser at sheriff's sale under a creditor's suit, not being in privity with a mortgage on the land, is not entitled to be subrogated to any supposed rights of the mortgagee.

Where the land of a lunatic has been sold in proceedings instituted by his committee, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the lunatic's debts, and the purchaser of the by virtue of a superior title, he may be substituted for the creditor and have the amount of his purchase-money refunded him;<sup>97</sup> and, if his bid discharges an encumbrance on the land, he can have restitution to the extent of the lien discharged before defendant in the bond proceeding or his heirs can recover the lands so purchased by him, if his purchase is made in good faith under the belief that he is acquiring title.<sup>98</sup> Similarly a purchaser at a void sale to foreclose a mortgage is subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the mortgagee and can enforce them as the mortgagee could have done had the sale not been land has erected valuable improvements thereon, and the lunatic, after recovering the use of his reason, procures the proceedings to be set aside for informality, the purchaser is subrogated to the rights of the creditors whose claims were paid from the purchaser's money. Cathcart v. Sugenhimer, 18 S. C. 123 [cited with approval in Bailey v. Bailey, 41 S. C. 337, 19 S. E. 669, 728, 44 Am. St. Rep. 713].

In Indiana it was formerly held that the purchase-money paid by an ordinary vendee at sheriff's sale operates as a pro tanto discharge of the judgment, and hence he cannot be substituted to the rights of the judgment plaintiff, if the sale should prove to have been void. Richmond v. Marston, 15 Ind. 134. But the broad doctrine announced in this case that a volunteer purchaser at a sale made by a public officer is not entitled to the right of subrogation in case the sale is ineffectual to convey title has been overthrown by the later decisions of the courts of this state, which take the ground that the policy of the law is to hold out inducements to persons to become purchasers at such sales, and therefore whenever a sale is ineffectual to pass the title to the property offered for sale equity recognizes the right of subrogation. Bunting v. Gilmore, 124 Ind. 113, 24 N. E. 583; Bodkin v. Merit, 102 Ind. 293, 1 N. E. 625 (holding that it is a familiar principle of equity, and is fully recognized by the decisions, that payment of a debt by a purchaser at an invalid's sheriff sale subrogates the purchaser to the rights of the creditor, and that the invalidity of the sale does not destroy the right of subrogation, and it would be against good conscience and natural justice to permit mortgagors to hold property pledged for a debt against one who had paid their debt, expecting to secure a title to the land pledged as security for its payment); Short v. Sears, 93 Ind. 505; Ray v. Detchon, 79 Ind. 56 (holding that the purchaser at a sheriff's sale, void for want of notice, nevertheless takes color of title by his deed, and his grantee is entitled to be subrogated to all the rights of the judgment creditor); Muir v. Berkshire, 52 Ind. 149.

In Louisiana, Code, art. 2157, specifies the cases in which payment, by another than the debtor, produces a transfer of the creditor's rights; and the discharging a judgment debt, by a purchaser at a forced sale, is not one of them. It is there held that such an act, indeed, cannot be satisfactorily distinguished from payment made to the creditor, without a sale of the debtor's property, by a person not having an interest to discharge the debt. Under art. 2130, the law only permits this on the condition that the party paying should not be subrogated, by the act of payment, to the rights of the creditor. The 711th article of the code of practice, it is true, gives an action of warranty against the debtor, where the purchaser is evicted by a better title in a third person. But this action only arises on a sale legally made. Where the alienation takes place contrary to law, the debtor in execution may sue for and recover the thing sold. Although in such a case there is no warranty which prevents him being restored to the possession of the object sold, he must return the money which has been applied to the discharge of his debt. But this is not because the purchaser is subrogated to the rights of the creditor; for subrogation, even admitting it to arise on a sale regularly made, could not take place on one made contrary to law; but because it is unjust that the debtor should enrich himself at the expense of another. Childress v. Allen, 3 La. 477, holding that the purchaser of property at a sale on execution is not subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor. See Dufour v. Camfranc, 11 Mart. (La.) 655, 13 Am. Dec. 360.

In North Carolina it was held in an early case that a purchaser at sheriff's sale who acquires a defective title has no right to take the place of the creditor by substitution, and thus bring to his aid the dignity of such creditor's debt. Laws v. Thompson, 49 N. C. 104. But the doctrine is now well established that a purchaser at a void execution sale is subrogated to the rights of the execution creditor to the extent such creditor was benefited and the execution debtor was exonerated by the sale. Pemberton v. McRae, 75 N. C. 497. And see Myrover v. French, 73 N. C. 609. And similarly, where the purchaser of land of a cestui que trust agreed to pay for the same by releasing to the trustee a debt due from him personally, and in lieu of the money the trustee agreed to convey a tract of land to the cestui, although the contract cannot be enforced against the cestui, yet, if the purchaser acted in good faith as regards his actual intentions in paying the trustee by a cancellation of the latter's indebtedness, he will, upon paying to the cestui the amount of his bid, be subrogated to her title to the tract of land acquired from the trustee. Kemp v. Kemp, 85 N. C. 491.

In Ohio the rule is made statutory in Rev. St. §§ 5410, 5411, providing that, on sales by order of the court, where the title proves invalid by reason of defect in proceedings, a purchaser may be subrogated to the rights of a creditor against the debtor to the extent of the money paid, and thus a purchaser under a void execution rendered on foreclosure of a mortgage after the mortgagor's death, whereby other lands were sold to satisfy a deficiency, is subrogated for the amount of money so paid, and his right is a lien on the land sold to the extent of money paid, as against the heirs and legatees of the deceased mortgagor. Doyle v. Breneman, 4 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 22, 2 Ohio N. P. 415. The rule prescribed by the statute is recognized as having long been in vogue in sister states, and the statute is held to be merely declaratory of the rule of equity so followed. Doyle v. Breneman, supra.

Where the purchaser at foreclosure sale redeems from tax-sales made before foreclosure, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the state as against a judgment creditor of the mortgagor redeeming from foreclosure. Northern Inv. Co. v. Frey Real Estate, etc., Co., 33 Colo. 480, 81 Pac. 300, 108 Am. St. Rep. 104.

Subrogation of purchaser at foreclosure sale void as to heirs of mortgagor.—The mortgagor of land having died, and the mortgage foreclosed against his administrator without making his heirs or devisees parties, the purchaser and his grantees will be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee (Jellison v. Halloran, 44 Minn. 199, 46 N. W. 332), and so also as to the enforcement of a vendor's lien (Jones v. McKenna, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 630); and similarly, although a foreclosure sale in an action against the heirs of the mortgagor is void for defective service of process, a purchaser for valuable consideration at such sale, who has improved the property, is entitled, on showing that the foreclosure money, or any part of it, went to pay the mortgagor's debts, to be subrogated to the claims so paid (Bailey v. Bailey, 41 S. C. 337, 19 S. E. 669, 728, 44 Am. St. Rep. 713).

Justification of the rule.—It is an equitable principle, which secures justice to the parties immediately interested, tends to give confidence in judicial sales, and encourages purchasers to bid fair prices, because it assures to them that, happen what may, they will get back the money paid by them. Bunting v. Gilmore, 124 Ind. 113, 24 N. E. 583; Jones v. French, 92 Ind. 138; Sidener v. Hawes, 37 Ohio St. 532.

A judgment in ejectment that purchasers at a foreclosure sale had not acquired title as against the remainder-men does not preclude the purchasers from maintaining a suit in equity to be subrogated to the rights of a former mortgage which was valid as against the remainder-men. Stump v. Warfield, 104 Md. 530, 65 Atl. 346.

A purchaser at a sale to enforce the state's lien for a drainage assessment is, in case the sale is invalid, subrogated to the lien of the state to the extent of the amount thereof discharged by the money paid by him. Reed v. Kalfsbeck, 147 Ind. 148, 45 N. E. 476, 46 N. E. 466.

The grounds of the rule are, that while ordinarily a stranger to the estate who voluntarily pays off a mortgage thereon is not entitled to subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee, a purchaser at the mortgagee's sale, even when the sale is void, is not to be regarded as a mere stranger; but that, having bid off the estate in good faith on the invitation of the mortgagee to do so, when, supposing his bid to have been effectual to invest him with the equitable or executory title, he pays the amount of his bid and the same is applied to the mortgage debt, he has a most persuasive equity to be subrogated to at least the rights of the mortgagee who invited his confidence. In such a case the court does simply what the mortgagee would be bound in conscience to do himself, if he could, when it treats the purchaser as the assignee of the mortgage. And of course, where the purchaser has entered under the mortgagee's deed and made improvements, this equity is strengthened. Brewer v. Nash, 16 R. I. 458, 17 Atl. 857, 27 Am. St. Rep. 749.

The purchaser of land sold under a school-fund mortgage may be subrogated to the rights of the state in the mortgage, if the sale is set aside as invalid. Such a purchaser is not a volunteer, nor is the doctrine of purchaser.<sup>1</sup> But the right extends only to a purchaser in good faith.<sup>2</sup> Furthermore if there was no subsisting lien to be discharged by the purchaser at the sale made under a decree of foreclosure there is no room for subrogation, as the purchaser could not occupy a better position than plaintiff in the void decree.<sup>3</sup>

(II) EXECUTORS' OR ADMINISTRATORS' SALES. On a void sale by an executor or administrator the purchaser in good faith, without notice, may be substituted to the rights of the creditors whose debts were paid by his money;<sup>4</sup> even though the administrator was guilty of a misdemeanor in attempting to sell,<sup>5</sup> and the same rule is held to apply to a purchaser at a sale by one assuming, without authority, to act as executor,<sup>6</sup> and although a foreign administrator who has not complied with the statute requiring such administrators to record their letters and give a bond has no authority to exercise a power of sale contained in

One who buys in land at a judicial sale under partition proceedings by the purchaser's heirs, although the deed given him is without warranty, acquires all the rights of the heirs at the time of sale. Givens v. Carroll, 40 S. C. 413, 18 S. E. 1030, 42 Am. St. Rep. 889.

Effect of conveyance to third party.—Where the mortgagee or a stranger to the record purchases the mortgaged premises at a void sale under foreclosure proceedings, and then conveys by warranty deed said premises to a third party, the latter becomes subrogated in equity to the rights of the mortgagee in said mortgaged premises, as well as the mortgage debt thereon, to the extent of his purchase, and may demand a valid foreclosure of said mortgage for his protection. Jordan v. Sayre, 29 Fla. 100, 10 So. 823.

Peterson*, 11 N. D. 45, 89 N. Daniel*, 8 Dana (Ky.) 182, holding that the right of a purchaser of property sold under execution to be substituted to the place of the creditor, when the property is recovered from him or his vendee by virtue of superior title, is not affected by his knowing at the time of his purchase that the property so belonged to a stranger and was not subject to the execution.

a mortgage to his intestate as a domestic administrator, yet, if such a sale is ratified by the heirs and the proceeds are properly applied by the foreign administrator, the purchaser will be regarded as an equitable assignee of the mortgage, and will be subrogated to the rights of the heirs and the domestic administrator.<sup>7</sup> But purchasers of land at void sales by executors can claim no rights of subrogation where they knew that the land was subject to a trust, and that the executors had no authority to sell, and where the purchase-money was applied to various purposes indiscriminately with money arising from sales of personalty;<sup>8</sup> and it has been held further that the remedy is limited to the case where the heir files a bill to redeem, and then, not upon the doctrine of subrogation, but under the maxim that "he who seeks equity must do equity," and thus it is held that a purchaser of land at an invalid administrator's sale to pay debts is not subrogated to the rights of the creditors whose claims are paid out of the purchase-money paid by him.<sup>9</sup> Where land of a decedent is sold by decree of court in aid of assets, a purchaser, to be subrogated to the rights of creditors as against a devisee in remainder not a party to the proceedings, must show, beyond an order for payment of the claims made, that such claims existed as a charge on the land.<sup>10</sup>

5. JUNIOR MORTGAGEES, JUDGMENT CREDITORS, OR ENCUMBRANCERS — a. General Rule. A subsequent mortgagee or encumbrancer who in order to preserve his own security is compelled to pay a prior encumbrance held by another creditor is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee or lienor whose mortgage or lien he has paid, to the extent of the amount so paid, the payment

9. Borders v. Hodges, 154 Ill. 498, 39 N. E. 597 [following Bishop v. O'Connor, 69 Ill. 431], holding that a purchaser of land at an administrator's sale is not entitled in equity to be subrogated to the claims of creditors which have been paid by the purchase-money, where the title fails for a want of jurisdiction in the court ordering the sale over the persons of the heirs, because of want of service. And see McCammant v. Roberts, 87 Tex. 241, 27 S. W. 86.

Development of rule.—Originally this relief was granted in equity only to bona fide purchasers whom the holder of the legal title had called to an account in that court, and was not extended beyond allowing him to set up, as against the holder of the legal title, meliorations to the estate to an extent equal to the rents demanded (Weaver v. Norwood, 59 Miss. 665); and when his Treatise on Equity Jurisprudence was first published, Judge Story intimated that such cases were beyond the reach of equity courts, except when the party seeking to recover the estate required and called for aid from a court of equity, or unless there was some fraud; and that, where the party could recover the estate at law, a court of equity could not, unless there was some fraud, relieve the purchaser (2 Story Eq. § 1238. See Valle v. Fleming, 29 Mo. 152, 158, 77 Am. Dec. 557). But the right to charge the land purchased with repayment of the purchase-money, which has been appropriated to the payment of a charge previously existing upon it, is of the same character as that to charge it with the value of improvements, and is held to be of a more persuasive equity, since the status quo is precisely restored, and no charge is put upon the property which before did not exist. In cases where the bona fide purchaser has been permitted to charge the land with the purchase-money paid by him, courts of equity, while proceeding on the theory of substituting him to the right of the creditor whose debt has been paid, in fact give a broader right to the purchaser than was held by the creditor. They have, while professing to grant a charge only on the land, really treated the purchaser as the equitable owner, and protected his possession as such against the holder of the legal title by enjoining any interference with the possession until payment is made of the equitable charge (Weaver v. Norwood, supra); and the rule established in Bright v. Boyd, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 1,875, 1 Story 478, was that where a party, if called in equity, might have asserted a claim to reimbursement, then he may himself go into equity for the purpose of asserting this demand (Weaver v. Norwood, supra), and this rule is now generally followed throughout the several states (see supra, this section), and is not limited to cases granted where the court is appealed to by the opposite party for its aid (Caldwell v. Palmer, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 652); and it is held immaterial under what form equity in such case is administered; whether under the name of compensation, as it was done in the case of Bright v. Boyd, supra, or under the name of substitution, as in the case of Hudgin v. Hudgin, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 320, 52 Am. Dec. 124, or, as it is sometimes more conveniently effected, by reviving the encumbrance, which the purchase-money has extinguished, and permitting it to be used as a shield against a recovery at law (Valle v. Fleming, supra; Peltz v. Clarke, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 481, 8 L. ed. 199).

This right is often effectuated by compelling an assignment to him of the prior encumbrance. Knoblauch v. Foglesong, 37 Minn. 320, 33 N. W. 865; Clark v. Mackin, 95 N. Y. 346; Lyon's Appeal, 61 Pa. St. 15. But although it has been held in some cases that the right to compel an assignment of the prior mortgage is necessarily incident to the right of redemption and subrogation (Pardee v. Van Anken, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 534; Jenkins v. Continental Ins. Co., 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 66), although the junior encumbrancer does not occupy the position of a surety (Twombly v. Cassidy, 82 N. Y. 155), it is held that, to entitle a subsequent mortgagee to compel the assignment to himself of a prior mortgage, there must be some equitable reason for it, such as suretyship for the debt, and the mere fact that he is a subsequent mortgagee does not constitute such reason (Bigelow v. Cassey, 26 N. J. Eq. 557; Nelson v. Loder, 132 N. Y. 288, 30 N. E. 369; Johnson v. Zink, 51 N. Y. 333; Ellsworth v. Lockwood, 42 N. Y. 89; Vandercook v. Cohoes Sav. Inst., 5 Hun (N. A. 553); and upon the ground that the right of subrogation arises only upon payment and extinguishment of the mortgage and an assignment implies the continued existence of the debt some cases go so far as to deny entirely the right to an assignment of the mortgage, the mortgagee's right being in effect, if not actually, that of an assignee (Lamb v. Montague, 112 Mass. 352; Lamson v. Drake, 105 Mass. 564).

Rule applied on petition by second mortgagee's administrator to foreclose, although at the time of such payment a petition was pending to foreclose the second see Wood v. Hubbard, 50 Vt. 82.

The mortgagee of firm property to secure an individual debt having paid a firm debt secured by a mortgage on firm property, to protect his own interest, is entitled to be subrogated to the lien. Reyburn v. Mitchell, 106 Mo. 365, 16 S. W. 592, 27 Am. St. Rep. 350.

The holder of a subsequent execution lien on mortgaged chattels may pay off the prior encumbrance to prevent his own lien from being cut off, and is then entitled to be subrogated to the right of the person from whom he redeemed. Lucking v. Wesson, 25 Mich. 443. Similarly when an execution creditor, in order to make an effective levy on mortgaged chattels, pays off the mortgage, and afterward the lien of his execution fails, such person acquires an equitable interest in the mortgaged chattels to the extent of the money advanced, and, while the lien of the mortgage becomes discharged, equity will substitute a lien for his benefit. Moore v. Calvert, 8 Okla. 358, 58 Pac. 627.

Thus a judgment creditor is subrogated to all the rights of the purchaser under a foreclosure, from whom he, bona fide and before the expiration of the statutory limitation, redeems (Lamb v. Richards, 43 Ill. 312); and a judgment creditor after purchasing his debtor's land at a sale under his judgment and before the statutory period of redemption expires, has a lien on the land giving him the right to be subrogated to the benefit of a trust deed prior to his judgment (Swain v. Stockton Sav., etc., Soc., 78 Cal. 600, 21 Pac. 365, 12 Am. St. Rep. 118).

If a creditor who has a lien on two funds, on one of which another creditor has a junior lien, elects to take his whole amount out of the fund on which the junior creditor has a lien, the latter will be subrogated to the right of the prior lien. Anthes v. Schroeder, 68 Nebr. 370, 94 N. W. 611; Lathrop's Appeal, 1 Pa. St. 512; Ebenhardt's Appeal, 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 327. And see, generally, MARSHALING ASSETS AND SECURITIES, 26 Cyc. 938.

A junior mortgage lien-holder who has paid taxes and reduced an outstanding mortgage to protect his interests is entitled to be subrogated as against the rights of a dower claimant where the lien so protected existed at the time of the marriage of the deceased owner, although the payments were subsequently made. Lidster v. Poole, 122 Ill. App. 227. And a mortgagee who in good faith pays delinquent taxes to protect his lien may be subrogated to the county's lien therefor, and recover the amount paid as against a subsequent mortgagee, whose encumbrance has been accorded priority. Dunsmuir v. Port Angeles Gas, etc., Co., 30 Wash. 586, 71 Pac. 9. See Frankenstein v. Hamburger, 73 N. Y. App. Div. 352, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 818. And a mortgagee of part of certain premises who, in order to secure a release of a municipal tax lien which existed against the entire tract, paid it, may be subrogated to the rights of the city against the owner. Pittsburgh v. O'Reilly, 7 Pa. Dist. 758.

The assignee of a junior encumbrance, who within the time allowed by statute deposits the amount of money bid for the premises at retains its priority over such intervening encumbrances,<sup>12</sup> although the junior mortgagee has taken a deed of trust or another mortgage covering the same property;<sup>13</sup> and if a second encumbrancer takes up a prior encumbrance, which was also a lien on property other than that bound by the second, the second encumbrancer may resort to the property bound by the first encumbrance and not bound by the second, and enforce the lien of the first upon it;<sup>14</sup> and a junior judgment creditor who, upon the fraudulent representations of his debtor that there are no other liens, advances money to redeem lands from a prior judgment sale, is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the purchaser at such sale, in order to protect himself from the lien of a judgment prior to his own, of which he was ignorant at the time of the redemption, although the owner of such judgment was innocent of the fraud.<sup>15</sup> In such cases the person discharging the superior lien is treated as its purchaser or assignee, unless the facts show that it was intended as an absolute payment,<sup>16</sup> although no assignment is made to him,<sup>17</sup> and he is also entitled to all securities held by the prior encumbrancer.<sup>18</sup> The prior mortgage must, however, be actually discharged, and a tender which fails to discharge the prior lien because accompanied with conditions which the subsequent mortgagee is not entitled to make will not subrogate the subsequent mortgagee to the lien of the prior mortgage;<sup>19</sup> and if payment of the prior lien is neither made nor tendered, but the junior lien-holder assumes and maintains the attitude of denying both the validity and superiority of such prior lien, the right to make payment and of subrogation will be deemed to have been waived,<sup>20</sup> although a good legal tender will be as effective in subrogating the one making it as a payment would be.<sup>21</sup> Furthermore the equitable rule under which the holder of a junior mortgage is entitled to tender to the holder of a senior mortgage the amount due thereon, and demand an assignment of the same, is not applicable unless the former shows that such an assignment is necessary to his protection; nor can this rule be invoked by a mortgagee against a judgment creditor of his mortgagor having equities at least equal to those of the mortgagee,<sup>22</sup> and a creditor is not entitled to subrogation to a lien a foreclosure sale, with interest, thereby renders the certificate of purchase null and void, and becomes subrogated to the rights of the original purchaser, subject to the obligations to sell the premises under his decree. *Illinois Nat. Where a purchase-money mortgage executed by the husband alone during coverture is paid off and discharged by a junior mortgagee, as allowed by the decree in his action to foreclose, under which he has bid in the property, he is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee in the purchase-money mortgage as against the widow's claim of dower. Sheldon v. Hoffnagle, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 478, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 287.

which but for his own laches he could have had himself;<sup>23</sup> nor where he has been guilty of laches in asserting the right to subrogation,<sup>24</sup> for the right of the redeeming party to subrogation does not necessarily follow the right of redemption, but depends upon the relation of the parties liable to be foreclosed, to each other, and upon the circumstances in which the right of redemption is sought to be exercised;<sup>25</sup> and the mere fact that inferior lienors who, acting in their own interests and to accomplish a purpose of their own, have incidentally benefited a superior lienor, does not thereby subrogate the rights of the superior lienor.<sup>26</sup> The right does not exist in favor of the holder of a second mortgage to the prejudice of the paramount lien;<sup>27</sup> and a mortgagee in a mortgage prior in date and subsequent in record to a mortgage subsequent in date and prior in record, who pays a former mortgage of record at the time of the recording of the subsequent mortgage, cannot be subrogated to the rights of the paid mortgagee, as against an assignee of the subsequent mortgage, the latter relying on the record, and believing the mortgage to be a first lien;<sup>28</sup> and the right to subrogation of one who, having a lien on the property, pays off for his protection a prior encumbrance, will not prevail against intervening bona fide purchasers without notice;<sup>29</sup> but notwithstanding the fact that the rights of a third person have intervened where the third person has in no respect changed position, and done nothing upon the faith of the acts performed by the party who invokes the doctrine of subrogation the latter may still have subrogation.<sup>30</sup> Ordinarily a junior mortgagee is not entitled to be subrogated to a lien which did not exist when his mortgage was taken;<sup>31</sup> and on paying a first mortgage the holder of the second is not subrogated to a judgment of foreclosure, under which the time for redemption by the mortgagor has expired.<sup>32</sup>

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Subrogation," § 45.

Where a person makes a loan to a party at the time insane, but not knowing such fact of insanity, and at the request of the borrower pays a previous encumbrance secured by trust deed and causes such trust deed to be released, he may, notwithstanding such second trust deed is void, have a foreclosure of the first trust deed on the theory that the release of the same was a mistake of fact; no rights of bona fide purchasers or encumbrancers having intervened. Doxey v. Western State Bank, 113 Ill. App. 442.

Where money borrowed by an executor was used to pay debts of the estate, the lender was entitled to subrogation to the rights of the creditors whose debts were thus discharged, although a mortgage given by the executor to secure the loan was unauthorized. Talliferro v. Thornton, 80 S. W. 1097, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 183.

The invalidity of the new security must be alleged and proved.—Where in a proceeding by a purchaser at a foreclosure sale under his mortgage to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, to pay whose mortgage he paid the loan, there was neither averment nor proof that a satisfaction of a second mortgage appearing of record at the time of the execution of complainant's mortgage was invalid, it had no right of subrogation in equity, but had a plain defense at law against ejection by the second mortgagee, claiming under a deed from the mortgagor subsequent to complainant's purchase. Tait v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co., 132 Ala. 193, 31 So. 623; Powers v. McKnight, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 73 S. W. 549.

Where money is loaned to a husband and wife on the faith of a mortgage on land, for the purpose of paying off prior valid mortgages on the same land, and is so used, and it turns out that the husband signed his wife's name to the mortgage without authority, of which execution she was immediately informed, but, instead of disclosing the fraud, she allows the mortgagee to pay off the prior mortgages, and to believe that he has a valid security, the holder of such mortgage is entitled to be substituted to all the rights and interests of the prior mortgagees. Zinkeison v. Lewis, 63 Kan. 590, 66 Pac. 644.

Where invalid county bonds are voluntarily paid by a county, the funds being secured by sale or other similar bonds, which are subsequently repudiated for the same illegality, equities, if any existed, of the holders of the first issue, are extinguished by the payment, and the holders of the second issue cannot be subrogated thereto. *Lyon County v. have actual knowledge, and the failure of actual knowledge was not mala fides.<sup>38</sup> Similarly one who makes a loan to discharge a first mortgage, pursuant to an agreement with the mortgagor that he shall have a first mortgage on the same land to secure it, there being at the time another mortgage on the land of which the lender is ignorant, will be subrogated to the rights of the first mortgagee;<sup>39</sup> and one who advances money on a mortgage to pay a prior mortgage on the same premises, and afterward learns that the mortgagor has no title because of the conveyance after making the prior mortgage and before making the latter one, will be subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee, although the property was a homestead;<sup>40</sup> and where one pays off an existing mortgage at the request of the mortgagor, in just expectation that he would have like security for his money, he thereby, under the doctrine of equitable assignment, becomes entitled to subrogation to the lien of the mortgage so paid off, even though the mortgage given to him was inoperative as against the owners of an equity, because of the pendency of a bill filed by them to enforce their equity and establish a trust in the premises;<sup>41</sup> and similarly, where the holder of a mortgage has foreclosed the same, and, under a mistake as to the correctness of the proceedings, and the consequent validity of the foreclosure, has paid prior encumbrances which he was equitably entitled to have kept alive for his protection, equity will relieve from the mistake except as against innocent grantees and purchasers without notice, and allow him to be subrogated to the rights of the holders of such prior encumbrances.<sup>42</sup> But to entitle the lender to subrogation it is essential that the money be advanced for the very purpose of discharging the senior lien, and it must have been in fact so applied;<sup>43</sup> and one who has loaned money on a void mortgage, a part of which was used to pay a previously executed void mortgage, may not be subrogated to a lien discharged with the proceeds of the latter-mentioned mortgage;<sup>44</sup> nor can subrogation to the rights of a prior mortgage be claimed, where his mortgage has been paid, without the consent of the mortgagor, out of the proceeds of a subsequent invalid mortgage executed by an agent without authority.<sup>45</sup> One to whom a mortgage has been given, and who to protect the mortgage pays off in good faith a judgment against the mortgagor, is not a stranger or a volunteer, and is entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the judgment, although the mortgage may turn out to be void because of want of capacity in the mortgagor to execute it.<sup>46</sup>

E. 794 (holding that one who advances money to pay off an encumbrance upon realty, at the instance of the owner thereof, and upon the express understanding that the advance made is to be secured by the immediate execution of papers which will constitute a first lien on the property, is not a mere volunteer, and, in the event the new security thus taken turns out to be defective, the person parting with his money on the faith thereof, if not chargeable with culpable and inexcusable neglect in the premises, will be subrogated to the rights of the prior encumbrancer); Home Sav. Bank v. Bierstadt, 68 Ill. App. 656 [affirmed in 168 Ill. 618, 48 N. E. 161, 61 Am. St. Rep. 146] (holding also that his right to be subrogated in such case is not affected by the fact that the record shows a release of the first mortgage, where it appears from all the facts in the case that the position of the second mortgagee has not been changed because of the record showing such release).

But if subsequently another person advances money to the mortgagor for the purpose of paying off the mortgage given to the mortgagee who was thus entitled to subrogation, the right of subrogation to the lien of said prior existing mortgage cannot be extended to the last mortgagee, and the mortgage given to said last mortgagee is not available as against the owners of the equity to said premises. *Bigelow v. c. Part Payment. As a general rule a junior mortgagee, who claims to be an equitable assignee or entitled to subrogation, stands in the same position in respect to a partial payment of the senior mortgage debt as a surety does in respect to a partial payment of a claim against his principal;<sup>47</sup> and a junior mortgagee, by the payment of part of the senior mortgage, is not subrogated pro tanto to the senior mortgagee's interest;<sup>48</sup> and the mere fact that part of the proceeds of a subsequent mortgage was applied by the mortgagor in discharge of a purchase-money mortgage does not entitle the subsequent mortgagee to subrogation to the rights of the purchase-money mortgage.<sup>49</sup> But when the right of subrogation is the result of an express agreement, it is no objection that it extends only to a part of the mortgage or other security;<sup>50</sup> and a second mortgagee who, for the protection of his own security, pays an instalment due on the first mortgage, will, to the extent of such advancement, as against the mortgagor, be subrogated to the rights of the holder of the first mortgage, and may, upon payment by the mortgagor of the balance due on the prior mortgage, enforce by action his lien for the amount so advanced;<sup>51</sup> and it has even been held broadly that a second mortgagee making payments on the first mortgage will, under ordinary circumstances, be subrogated under the first mortgage to the extent of such payments, the residue of the claim of the first mortgagee having priority to the lien acquired by such subrogation.<sup>52</sup> If the junior mortgagee has paid a part of the prior mortgage under the belief arising from the conduct or representations of the senior mortgagee that this was the full extent of his claim, he may be allowed a priority of his claim before the senior mortgagee could participate.<sup>53</sup>

6. VENDORS AND MORTGAGORS PAYING AFTER TRANSFER OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY.

A mortgagor who, after selling the land to one who assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage debt, is compelled to pay the debt himself, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee and may foreclose the mortgage for his own benefit, for the vendor becomes in effect the surety and the vendee the principal;<sup>54</sup> and his right to be subrogated to the position of the prior mortgagee is not defeated by his having taken a second mortgage as security for the payment of the first,<sup>55</sup> and the same right extends against any one claiming under the purchaser with notice,<sup>56</sup> or where several successive grantees assume the mortgage.<sup>57</sup> The mortgagee and mortgagor, on notice to the former of a sale of the mortgaged property by the latter, and an assumption of the mortgage debt by the grantee, are placed in the relation of principal and surety to such an extent that the former cannot do any act which will prejudice the rights of the mortgagor, or defeat his right of being subrogated to the mortgagee on his payment of the mortgage debt, although the mortgagee may proceed in the first instance against the mortgagor to collect such debt;<sup>58</sup> and conversely the mortgagee's rights are not affected by the agreement between the mortgagor and the purchaser.<sup>59</sup> Where the mortgage debt forms a part of the consideration of the purchase, although the purchaser has not entered into any contract to pay it, he is bound to that extent to indemnify the debtor, who is subrogated to all the rights of the mortgagee in the security;<sup>60</sup> and similarly if the property is sold subject to the mortgage, although the purchaser has not assumed or agreed to pay it, he is, as to the mortgage, the principal debtor, and the land the primary fund.<sup>61</sup> Satisfaction of a judgment for a mortgage debt by the levying of an execution on property of the mortgagor other than that mortgaged is a payment of the debt which keeps the mortgage on foot for the benefit of the mortgagor.<sup>62</sup>

I. J. Persons Making Advancements For Necessaries For One Incompetent to Contract. A person making an advancement for necessaries, and to pay off an encumbrance on the real estate of one mentally incompetent to contract, is entitled to a charge against his estate, and to be subrogated to the benefit of the encumbrance discharged;<sup>66</sup> and one who furnishes money and service in good faith for one for whose support land is charged is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the beneficiaries and has a lien on the land.<sup>67</sup>

K. of such encumbrance expends money in valuable permanent improvements, where without such improvements the value of the property would not exceed the mortgages, equity will compel the judgment creditors to exercise their legal right, subject to the equitable right of the vendee, for whom the mortgage will be kept on foot, and to whom the value of the improvements will be allowed); *Dawson v. Whenever money is loaned or advanced to a person under disabilities and incapacitated from making a binding contract, as to an infant, a lunatic, and the like, and the money is thus loaned or advanced and actually used for the purpose of paying for necessaries, or necessary expenses of the party borrowing, although no legal debt arises and the lender can maintain no action at law to recover back the amount, yet, since his money was advanced and used for the purpose of paying debts which would be recoverable at law, he can sue in a court of equity and stand in the place of those creditors whose debts have been so paid, and recover back the amount of his advance. An equitable debt thus arises under the principle of subrogation. Wells v. Saline, 71 Hun (N. Y.) 559, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 134 [quoting 3 Pomeroy Eq. Jur. § 1300]. But the doctrine of equitable subrogation will not be invoked in favor of one advancing money under an invalid mortgage on a lunatic's property, where the money advanced was used simply to pay debts of the lunatic, for which the mortgagee was not answerable, and the payment of which was not necessary in any way for his protection (Corbin v. Dwyer, 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 488, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 822 [modified in 57 N. Y. App. Div. 630, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 1136]), and it has been held that as the deed of an insane grantor is absolutely void, the fact that he received and used the consideration for his support and maintenance creates no equity to which a bona fide purchaser from the grantee can be subrogated (German Sav., etc., Soc. v. De Lashmutter, 67 Fed. 399).

L. Persons Advancing Money to Pay the Debt of Another or Discharging Liens on Another's Property—1. IN GENERAL. It has been broadly stated that wherever a payment is made by a stranger to a debtor, in the expectation of being substituted in the place of the creditor, he is entitled to subrogation;<sup>70</sup> but unless the transaction takes the form of a purchase rather than payment,<sup>71</sup> the mere fact that one pays off a debt at the instance of the debtor, or lends money with which to pay it, does not entitle him to subrogation to a lien or securities which the creditor held for the enforcement of the obligation,<sup>72</sup>

Eq. 580, 61 Atl. 159, holding that where a chattel mortgagee failed to comply with the recording acts, and the property was taken by a judgment creditor, who had levied on the mortgaged chattels and on lands of the mortgagor, the mortgagee was entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the judgment on the payment thereof out of the proceeds of the sale.

But if a guardian use the ward's money to pay off a vendor's lien on the former's land, it has been held that the ward is not subrogated to the vendor's lien which is discharged. French v. Sheplor, 83 Ind. 266, 43 Am. Rep. 67.

Where a payment by a bidder at a void sale under a decree in a partition suit was applied to the satisfaction of a tax lien on the land, the bidder was subrogated to the rights of the holder of the tax lien, and a decree for the sale of the land in a subsequent suit for partition should direct the payment of such sum to the bidder. Liverman v. Lee, 86 Miss. 370, 38 So. 658.

Where a guardian mingled funds of his ward and of his wife, and invested them in real estate, and the property was subjected to a debt due by the guardian for failing to collect money due the ward, the wife should be subrogated to the guardian's right to receive any sum subsequently collected on the claim due the ward. It always requires something more than the mere payment of the debt in order to entitle the person paying the same to be substituted in the place of the original creditor;<sup>76</sup> nor can one by making advances without a debtor's knowledge be subrogated to the creditor's lien, being a mere volunteer.<sup>77</sup> It is not, however, necessary that there be an express contract that the substitution shall be made, but the right may be enforced because of a mere understanding or expectation of the transfer of the security,<sup>78</sup> or because it would amount to a fraud upon the payer if the payment were construed to effect a discharge of the security;<sup>79</sup> and, generally, where it is equitable that a person furnishing money to pay a debt of another should be substituted for the creditor or in the place of the creditor such person will be so subrogated;<sup>80</sup> but as this is a kind of conventional subrogation resting upon an implied agreement,<sup>81</sup> it is held not to arise in the absence of the apparent intention of the parties to the transaction,<sup>82</sup> as where the creditor takes or relies on a new security,<sup>83</sup> unless the new security fails,<sup>84</sup> in which latter case it would become, however, more in the nature of a pure equitable subrogation vesting upon the ground of mistake, or failure of consideration and not a conventional subrogation. The right has accordingly been denied, where one who paid off and discharged prior mortgages and took another mortgage expressly refused to take an assignment of the prior mortgages and voluntarily paid and discharged them from the record, because he preferred to have the one mortgage securing the entire amount.<sup>85</sup>

2. MORTGAGE LIEN. The rules just laid down<sup>86</sup> apply in full force to an advancement of money to discharge a mortgage lien. One who, having no interest to protect, voluntarily loans money to a mortgagor for the purpose of satisfying and canceling the mortgage, taking a new mortgage for his own security, cannot have the former mortgage revived and himself subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee therein;<sup>87</sup> nor does the fact alone that, from the proceeds of a later mortgage, prior mortgages have been paid that the lien might be removed, afford ground for subrogation thereto; but the claim must be based upon some recognized principle of equity jurisprudence, such as a fraud, mistake, or an agreement that the loan should be applied for the express purpose of discharging the prior lien.<sup>88</sup> A fortiori where there is no evidence that he gave or loaned the money, expecting it to be paid on the mortgage or on any particular indebtedness, the right of subrogation to the mortgage does not exist;<sup>89</sup> and a person advancing money to another to enable him therewith to make a loan to a third person, on the security of an equitable mortgage, is not entitled to subrogation thereby;<sup>90</sup> and where the payment of the prior mortgage was made without the mortgagor's knowledge by a mere volunteer, under no compulsion to make the payment for the protection of his own interests, no right to subrogation arises.<sup>91</sup> But a party who advances

But where the owner of property mortgaged is no party to the note secured by the mortgage, and is a stranger to the transaction by which the note was paid, and, further, is a married woman not holding land in her own separate right, the party so paying the note cannot be subrogated to the creditors' rights as against the owner of the mortgaged property. Wolf v. Walter, 56 Mo. 292.

The same right will pass to a third person who in turn repaid the money loaned, to the lender. Loewenthal v. McCormick, 101 Ill. 143.

One who pays a mortgage debt under an agreement for an assignment or for a new mortgage for his own benefit or protection, acquires a right to the security held by the other. Moore v. Lindsey, 52 Mo. App. 474.

A third party, who has taken up a lien note for the payer, with the understanding that he was to hold it just as it was held by the original holder, is entitled to the lien by which it was secured in the hands of the latter, although it may have been the understanding of the original holder that the note was simply paid off, and not purchased. Louisville Banking Co. v. Reinhardt, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 620.

If payment is made by one of the note of another, pursuant to a contract that he shall pay the same, the party paying it may be regarded as the agent of the debtor, and as such is entitled to receive and hold the note as evidence of having made payment, as well as for his own protection (Stiger v. Bent, 111 Ill. 328); and where a judgment debtor whose land has been sold in part satisfaction of the judgment requested a third person to give his note to the judgment creditor, and obtain from him an assignment of the judgment and although the creditor is not a party to the agreement;<sup>94</sup> and thus where one advances money upon real estate security for the express purpose of paying off a mortgage or other encumbrance on the same property, upon an understanding express or implied that his security will be subrogated in place of that which he discharged, and that he should have a first lien on the property, he is not a volunteer nor is the original encumbrance considered extinguished; and if for any reason his security turns out not to be a first lien, he will be subrogated to the extent of the encumbrances paid with the money loaned by him,<sup>95</sup> if not the certificate of sale, which was done, and the note was duly paid by the maker, the third person thereby became subrogated to all the rights of the judgment creditor, and was also entitled to judgment against the judgment debtor for the difference between the amount due him and the value of the land (Shattuck v. Cox, 128 Ind. 293, 27 N. E. 609).

A person who pays rent for a lessee in pursuance of an agreement so to do is subrogated by law to the right and privilege of the lessors. Stiwell v. Burdell, 18 La. Ann. 17.

One who at the request and for the benefit of a tenant in common of mortgaged premises tenders to the mortgagee the full amount due under the mortgage, and requests an assignment thereof, at the same time stating that he is acting at the tenant's request, is not a mere volunteer, to whom the right of subrogation should be denied. *Simonson v. Fuller statement of rule.—One who advances money to pay off an encumbrance on realty, at the instance either of the owner of the property or the holder of the encumbrance, either on the express understanding, or under circumstances from which an understanding will be implied, that the advance made is to be secured by a first lien on the property, is not a mere volunteer; and, in the event the new security is for any reason not a first lien on the property, the holder of such security, if not chargeable with culpable and inexcusable neglect, will be subrogated to the rights of the prior encumbrancer under the security held by him, unless the superior or equal equities of others would be prejudiced thereby, and to this end equity will set aside a cancellation of such security, and revive the same for his benefit. Wilkins v. Gibson, 113 Ga. 31, 38 S. E. 374, 84 Am. St. Rep. 204.

One who at the request of a mortgagor's widow paid a mortgage on the homestead, and a purchase-money lien, and took a new mortgage out under such circumstances as indicated that he intended to look also to the old mortgage, is subrogated to the rights of the lien and mortgage discharged as against the creditors of the deceased husband. Ogden v. Totten, 34 S. W. 1081, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1390.

If only part of the money was so applied, the second mortgagee upon paying the balance of the first mortgage is subrogated thereto. Quinlan v. Stratton, 128 N. Y. 659, 28 N. E. 529 [affirming 10 N. Y. Suppl. 152].

One lending money to an administrator upon a void mortgage to pay a prior mortgage is subrogated to the rights of the mortgage discharged (Crippen v. Chappel, 35 Kan.

chargeable with culpable and inexcusable neglect,<sup>96</sup> and if his security is otherwise insufficient,<sup>97</sup> and such subrogation is necessary for the better security of his mortgage debt,<sup>98</sup> notwithstanding the mortgage itself may have been canceled and not assigned and the mortgage debt discharged,<sup>99</sup> and even after such first mortgage is paid and delivered up to the mortgagor, and such lender has foreclosed his mortgage and takes possession;<sup>1</sup> and this same rule applies, although the lender's money was so applied without his knowledge or consent;<sup>2</sup> and where the junior mortgagee is placed in no worse attitude than he formerly was, he cannot defeat the right of subrogation.<sup>3</sup> But one who advances money on a mortgage on the strength of false representations that there was but one other mortgage on the premises, and that such money would be applied to the payment thereof, but which was in fact applied in payment of notes secured by another mortgage, could not be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee in the second mortgage, since there was no intention on his part to keep such second mortgage in existence, and since he was not compelled to advance the money to protect any Rep. 187); and where an administrator mortgaged land of the estate, and with the proceeds purchased for the heirs the widow's dower interest in the estate, although the mortgage be void, the debt secured thereby was properly declared a lien on the dower interest (Campbell v. Smith, 103 Mich. 427, 61 N. W. 654); but a person who loans or advances money to an administrator acquires no right at law or in equity against the estate, unless the money has in fact been applied to pay debts of the estate, in which case, however, the creditor of the administrator will be permitted to take his place, and be subrogated to his rights (Woods v. Ridley, 27 Miss. 119; Williamson's Appeal, 94 Pa. St. 231).

Facts held not to constitute waiver of the right.—When one advances money to another upon an agreement that the lender is to have a first lien on described property, and to secure the debt thus created the lender takes a security deed, the mere fact that the lender has sought to enforce the collection of his debt by the remedies appropriate in such a case will not alone amount to a waiver of the right to be subrogated to the claim of a prior encumbrancer, when, in his efforts to follow the remedies above referred to, he discovers that such subrogation is necessary to his protection. Wilkins v. Gibson, 113 Ga. 31, 38 S. E. 374, 84 Am. St. Rep. 204.

Where money is loaned to a trustee of real estate with which to pay taxes thereon, and it is so used, the creditors, by establishing the insolvency of the trustee, by exhausting legal remedies, can only be subrogated to the trustee's rights against the trust estate when by settlement of his administration it is shown indebted to him. Dantzer v. McInnis, 151 Ala. 293, 44 So. 193, 125 Am. St. Rep. 28, 13 L. R. A. N. S. 297.

In Louisiana where the parties interested in a mortgage note are unable to satisfy at maturity the claims of the holder, they may by a collateral agreement made between themselves, the holder, and a third person succeed in having the holder's claim satisfied and extinguished without having by that fact the note itself extinguished with its accessory mortgages or privileges; and the title to the note with its mortgages passes to the party satisfying the claim of the holder without any assignment of the note being made by the holder. Pellerin v. Sanders, 116 La. 616, 40 So. 917 [citing Walmsley v. Theus, 107 La. 426, 31 So. 869].

interest of his own;<sup>4</sup> and it is held that it is only where the party advancing money to pay off a prior mortgage is ignorant of the existence of a second mortgage that subrogation to the lien of the first mortgage takes place;<sup>5</sup> and the remedy of restoration and consequent subrogation cannot be enforced to the prejudice of an innocent third person,<sup>6</sup> and is subject to such rights as may have arisen meanwhile;<sup>7</sup> and thus one who loans money to satisfy a mortgage on property, and takes another mortgage on the property, without examining the records, and relying merely on an abstract not entirely up to date, which fails to notice the rendition of a recent judgment, is not entitled to subrogation under said mortgage to rights paramount to the judgment;<sup>8</sup> nor can one who has advanced money to pay a lien note be subrogated to the lien to the prejudice of a lien held by the creditor to secure other notes.<sup>9</sup> Furthermore where one takes a mortgage and loans money on condition that it be used to pay certain lienable claims against the premises, and to obtain releases, and there is no evidence of an intention on the part of the mortgagee to keep the claims alive, he is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the holders of such claims as have been paid,<sup>10</sup> particularly where the evidence rebuts the assumption of intention to be subrogated;<sup>11</sup> and of course payment of the debt by one primarily liable extinguishes the debt and destroys the lien of a mortgage securing it.<sup>12</sup> The principle which it seems may be abstracted from the cases is that where money due upon a mortgage is paid it may operate to cancel the mortgage, or in the nature of an assignment of it, placing the person who pays in the shoes of the mortgagee as may best subserve the purposes of justice and the true intent of the parties;<sup>13</sup> but that a mortgage

And where the mistake was in supposing the second lien to be discharged, it is held that the situation is the same as where the mistake was as to whether there ever was such a second lien.

Knowledge of the existence of an intervening encumbrance will not alone prevent the person advancing the money from claiming the right of subrogation, when the exercise of such right will not in any substantial way prejudice the rights of the intervening encumbrancer. *Wilkins v. App. 233, holding that where a mortgagor sold a part of the mortgaged premises with full covenants of warranty, and the remainder to one who assumed the mortgage debt, and the latter paid the mortgage, and it was marked "Canceled," he can have no right of subrogation against the purchaser with warranty, even by agreement, as the mortgage is extinguished.

13. Bullard v. Leach, 27 Vt. 491.

The payment of a prior mortgage by an attaching creditor is not regarded as a voluntary payment, and, as against the mortgagor and those holding under him and subsequent to the creditor's attachment, the effect of a redemption by the creditor is not to extinguish the mortgage so redeemed, but to keep it alive as a subsisting lien on the land, whether the creditor pursued his attachment lien or not. Chandler v. Dyer, 37 Vt. 345.

security will not be kept alive in equity if it appears that there are no equities requiring it.<sup>14</sup>

3. VENDOR'S LIEN. A voluntary payment by a stranger of a debt due to the vendor of real estate and which is a charge upon it extinguishes the debt and the lien and the payer is not entitled to subrogation;<sup>15</sup> and the mere fact that borrowed money was used to discharge a vendor's lien did not entitle the lender to be subrogated to the rights of the vendor. Thus one who loans money to be applied in payment of part of the purchase-price of land, there being no agreement or understanding that he should be substituted to the lien of the vendor, nor that he might in any way look to the land as equity for payment, is not entitled to the rights of the vendor;<sup>16</sup> and one who lends money to pay off a note given for the purchase-money of land is not entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor, although the money so borrowed is applied to paying off the lien.<sup>17</sup> But one who pays the lien at the special instance of the debtor is not a volunteer if when he made the payment he manifested an intention to keep the prior lien alive for his protection and he will be deemed in equity a purchaser rather than a payer and be subrogated to the lien paid off;<sup>18</sup> and his right is superior to the dower right of

Although the clerk certifies that the money paid fully discharged the decree, a party paying a decree of foreclosure becomes invested with the rights of the mortgagee. Wheeler v. Willard, 44 Vt. 640.

See 44 Cent. Dig. tit. "Subrogation," §§ 60-63.

Where one advances money to pay off a vendor's lien upon a homestead and the money is so applied, the creditor becomes subrogated to the vendor's lien as against the homestead rights. *Mustain v. 4. MARITIME LIENS. A creditor to whom a ship has been hypothecated for advances made before it was built, without an agreement that upon the payment the lien should be continued in his favor, or an assignment of the debt, does not become subrogated to the privilege of materialmen by reason of having paid the orders drawn by the builder in favor of the materialmen;<sup>25</sup> and while a surety on a bond given to release a vessel from attachment in admiralty who has been compelled to pay the whole amount decreed against his principal is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the libellants against the principal, he has no lien

And where a person loans money on a homestead, such loan being invalid, but, before paying over the money, he has part of it applied to discharge a vendor's lien on the land, he is entitled to subrogation to all the rights of the vendor (Texas Land, etc., Co. v. Blalock, 76 Tex. 85, 13 S. W. 12); and he does not waive this lien by taking a mortgage upon the land to further secure himself, unless such was the intention of the parties (Harrod v. Johnson, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 247); and it has been held that where a vendor's lien note, secured on the maker's homestead, having been indorsed by the payee to a third party, plaintiff, at the instance of the maker and payee, paid the note when due, and in lieu thereof took another note for a like amount, secured on the same premises, plaintiff, although he had notice that the property was a homestead, would be subrogated to the rights of the indorsee, so that he could enforce the note against the homestead if such indorsee was a bona fide purchaser for value (Denecamp v. Townsend, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 33 S. W. 254). Similarly a person who discharged a vendor's lien against a homestead by paying the vendor's lien notes at the maker's request, which request contemplated that the person paying such notes should hold the lien, was entitled to be subrogated thereto (Merzele v. Felix, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 55, 99 S. W. 709); and where notes were secured by a deed of trust covering land, part of which was the homestead of the grantor in the deed, and which was encumbered by vendor's liens which the beneficiary in the trust deed paid off with a part of the money secured by the trust deed, the beneficiary was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the holders of such liens, even though at the time subrogation was asked the notes secured by the trust deed were barred by limitations (Flynt v. Taylor, 100 Tex. 60, 93 S. W. 423).

23. Hart v. Davidson, 84 Tex. 112, 19 S. W. 454.

24. Small v. Stagg, 95 Ill. 39. But see Ruse v. Bromberg, 88 Ala. 619, 7 So. 384, holding that, although at law an absolute deed intended to operate merely as a mortgage is absolutely void as to the existing creditors of the grantor, yet in equity, where no actual fraud is proven, the grantee, who assumed the payment of the grantor's unpaid purchase-money notes, will be permitted to hold his deed as a means of reimbursement from freeing the land from the purchase-money lien.

A trustee who advances money to his cestui que trust, with which to extinguish a vendor's lien on the trust property, and who takes an imperfect mortgage and bonds as security, is not entitled to be subrogated to the vendor's lien. Norris v. Woods, 89 Va. 873, 17 S. E. 552.

25. The Hull of a New Ship, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,859, 2 Ware 203; Stalker v. The Henry Kneeland, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,282.

upon the vessel.<sup>26</sup> The maritime lien of a materialman does not transfer itself to a third party who at the request of the master pays the claim. It is money advanced for the necessities of the boat; but, if the lender fails to acquire a lien by taking a bottomry bond, it is considered as advanced on personal credit only;<sup>27</sup> and where a person lends securities for the general use of a ship-owner, who gets them discounted and applies part of the proceeds in satisfaction of a bottomry upon the ship, this raises no equity in behalf of the lender to be subrogated to the lien of a bottomry creditor;<sup>28</sup> and the same rule applies to a party advancing money to an owner of a steamer to pay for stores and provisions, and he is not legally subrogated to the privileges of the furnishers of provisions and the crew.<sup>29</sup> But where the master of a ship obtained money from another for purposes which were maritime in their character, and subsequently borrowed money of libellant and repaid the lender, libellant was entitled to a lien on the vessel, as standing in the same position in which the lender stood.<sup>30</sup>

5. WAGES. While it has been held that one not a mere volunteer who, with an honest purpose to relieve the wage-earner, and not for the purpose of personal gain, advances money in payment of wages earned, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the employee paid, including the statutory right of preference,<sup>31</sup>

26. Carroll v. The Leathers, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,455, Newb. Adm. 432. And see The Robertson, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,923, 8 Biss. 180, holding that one who, at the request of the owner of a vessel seized in a foreign port for supplies furnished, has signed a stipulation for her release, and afterward paid the amount decreed against her, does not become subrogated to the rights of the libellant, so as to require a lien upon the vessel.

27. Carroll v. The Leathers, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,455, Newb. Adm. 432.

29. Hill v. The Phoenix Tow Boat Co., 2 Rob. (La.) 35; Mississippi Agricultural Bank v. The Jane, 19 La. 1; Grant v. Fiol, 17 La. 158.

The surety of the captain on a note given for supplies furnished to a boat to a lien accorded by statute to one who furnishes such supplies does not come within the principle which entitles the surety to the benefit of securities furnished by the debtor to the creditor. Hays v. The Columbus, 23 Mo. 232.

30. The Thomas Sherlock, 22 Fed. 253.

31. Putnam v. News Pub. Co., 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 479, 14 Cinc. L. Bul. 109 (holding that one who carries on the business of a publishing corporation under an agreement whereby the directors and himself are to contribute money for that purpose, which the directors fail to perform, and who, relying upon their assurances of performance, pays the employees out of his own funds, will be subrogated to the right of such employees to preference when the proceeds of the sale of the corporation's property is distributed by a receiver according to the laws relating to estates of insolvent debtors); In re Standard Wagon Co., 4 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 188, 3 Ohio N. P. 168 (holding that where the foreman of a manufacturing company, with the consent of the company, and in order to prevent trouble, advanced money to pay wages of workmen employed by the company, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of such workmen).

Wages of seamen.—Where a part-owner of a vessel pays the wages of seamen, he may be subrogated to the rank of the seamen as against the mortgagee of the share of another part-owner (The J. A. Brown, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,118, 2 Lowell 464), but a volunteer cannot (The P. H. White v. Levy, 10 Ark. 411), and the general agent of a ship at her home port is not entitled to be subrogated to the lien of seamen whose wages he has paid in the regular course of his agency (The Sarah J. Weed, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,350, 2 Lowell 555); but the clerk of a steamboat who, having received an order from the captain on the company, which was accepted, paid the crew their wages out of his own money, and the company became insolvent, acquired and held the rights of the crew, and was entitled to be paid in full (Abbott v. Baltimore, etc., Steam Packet Co., 4 Md. Ch. 310). Where assignees of the owner sold a fishing vessel for its full value, without taking into account any secret liens, and the purchasers were afterward obliged, on a libel against the vessel, to pay wages of some of the fishermen for the preceding voyage, such purchasers of the vessel were subrogated to the lien of the seamen against the fish and their proceeds, and might recover of the assignees such proportion of those proceeds as the wages so paid bore to the whole amount of wages. In re Low, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,558, 2 Lowell 264. A bottomry creditor may, by payment of the seamen's wages, entitle himself to a novation in their place for recovery of their demands against the vessel. But he has no right to exact of them a formal assignment of their wages, or the payment of his proctor's fees; nor, on an offer to satisfy their wages, can he require them to defer the prosecution of their demands until he chooses to institute a suit on the bottomry. The Cabot, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,277, Abb. Adm. 150.

other cases decided upon a similar state of facts hold the one advancing the money to be a volunteer, and deny the right.<sup>32</sup>

SUBSCRIBE.<sup>1</sup> To attest or give consent or evidence knowledge, by underwriting, usually, (but not necessarily) the name of the subscriber; <sup>2</sup> to write one's name beneath or at the end of an instrument; <sup>3</sup> to write underneath; <sup>4</sup> to set one's hand to a writing; <sup>5</sup> to write under; <sup>6</sup> to write at the bottom or end of a writing or instrument; <sup>7</sup> to write the name under; <sup>8</sup> to give consent by underwriting the name; to attest by writing the name; <sup>9</sup> to sign in witness or attestation; to assent or consent; to witness or attest.<sup>8</sup> In reference to an agreement, to agree in writing to furnish a sum of money or its equivalent for a designated purpose.<sup>9</sup> (See SIGN, 33 Cyc. 441; and, generally, SUBSCRIPTIONS, post, p. 481.)

32. Macon Exch. Bank v. Macon Constr. Co., 97 Ga. 1, 25 S. E. 326, 33 L. R. A. 800 (holding that one who advanced money to a construction company, with which the employees of a railroad company were paid, was not entitled, as against the bondholders, to subrogation to the rights of the employees on distribution of the earnings of the road by a receiver thereof); Suddath v. Gallagher, 126 Mo. 393, 28 S. W. 880 (holding that a president of a corporation who, previous to its insolvency, voluntarily pays labor claims of the corporation with money borrowed upon its note indorsed by himself, in the absence of special agreement does not become subrogated to the rights of the laborers to be preferred under Rev. St. § 2538, so as to enable him, after insolvency, to hold out of any moneys of the corporation in his hands enough to pay the note); In re North River Constr. Co., 38 N. J. Eq. 433 (holding that a superintendent of the construction of a railroad who, supposing the company was solvent, and merely to befriend the working men, advanced his own money to pay for their work, without any assignment of their claims, or agreement that he was to have the benefit of their liens. The company turned out insolvent, and was not entitled to be subrogated to the workmen's statutory lien).

The payment of the planter's drafts in favor of his laborers and workmen does not subrogate the party so paying to the privileges of the laborers and workmen. Shaw v. Grant, 13 La. Ann. 52.

"Attest" distinguished see ATTEST, 4 Cyc. 888 note 14. See also Tobin v. Haack, 79 Minn. 101, 106, 81 N. W. 758.

Equivalent to "execute" see EXECUTIONS, 17 Cyc. 877 note 51.

Distinguished from "sign" see Davis v. Shields, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 341, 358; Miller v. Pelletier, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 102, 106; Matter of Strong, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 104, 2 Connolly Surr. (N. Y.) 574, 576; Lawson v. Dawson, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 361, 362, 53 S. W. 64.

It ordinarily implies that the name of the party who subscribes is set by him or by his authority at the bottom or end of the writing or document. Stone v. Marvel, 45 N. H. 481; American Surety Co. v. Worcester Cycle Mfg. Co., 100 Fed. 40, 41.

The primary meaning of the term is to write underneath, as one's name; but it also means to give consent to something written, to assent, to agree. Ashton v. Stoy, 96 Iowa 197, 201, 64 N. W. 804, 30 L. R. A. 584.

The etymology and definition of the word as given by lexicographers shows that its meaning, when applied to a signature to an instrument in writing, is the signature or writing of one's name beneath or at the end of an instrument. James v. Patten, 6 N. Y. 9, 12, 55 Am. Dec. 376 [reversing 8 Barb. 344]; Atty.-Gen. v. Clarke, 26 R. I. 470, 59 Atl. 395, 396. See also Davis v. Shields, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 341, 357.

As used in reference to contracts for stock in a corporation to be organized, the term has a definite technical sense, including in it the idea of a promise to pay the amount subscribed in the manner agreed upon. Cheraw, et c., R. Co. v. White, 14 S. C. 51, 62. "To 'subscribe for' shares in one of the ordinary significations of the word, subscribe, is to promise to give the thing subscribed for, or to contribute to the undertaking accordingly." Sagory v. Dubois, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 466, 493.

SUBSCRIBER. One who becomes bound by a subscription to the capital stock of a corporation;<sup>10</sup> one who subscribes; one who contributes to an undertaking by subscribing; one who enters his name for a paper, book, map, or the like.<sup>11</sup> (See SUBSCRIBE.)

SUBSCRIBING WITNESS. One who writes his name under an attesting clause;<sup>12</sup> one who sees a writing executed, or hears it acknowledged and at the request of the party thereupon signs his name as a witness;<sup>13</sup> one who was present when the instrument was executed, and who at that time, at the request or with the assent of the party, subscribed his name to it, as a witness of the execution.<sup>14</sup> (Subscribing Witness: Attestation—By Means of Defective Acknowledgment, see ACKNOWLEDGMENTS, 1 Cyc. 531; Of Assignment, see ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS, 4 Cyc. 155; Of Award, see ARBITRATION AND AWARD, 3 Cyc. 669; Of Bond, see BONDS, 5 Cyc. 738; Of Commercial Paper, see COMMERCIAL PAPER, 7 Cyc. 618; Of Deed, see DEEDS, 13 Cyc. 557; Of Documentary Evidence, see EVIDENCE, 17 Cyc. 341, 348; Of Instrument at Time Subsequent to Execution, see ALTERATIONS OF INSTRUMENTS, 2 Cyc. 206; Of Mortgage, see CHATEL MORTGAGES, 6 Cyc. 1005; MORTGAGES, 27 Cyc. 1108; Of Undertaking For Costs, see COSTS, 11 Cyc. 182 note 96; Of Will, see WILLS. Erasure of Attestation, see ALTERATIONS OF INSTRUMENTS, 2 Cyc. 205.)

It may mean actual payment of money, or the putting down of his name by a person, binding himself to contribute. Thames Tunnel Co. v. Sheldon, 6 B. & C. 341, 347, 9 D. & R. 278, 5 L. J. K. B. O. S. 157, 13 E. C. L. 161.

As used in a statute providing that an original notice in a justice's court "must be subscribed by the plaintiff, his attorney, or the justice of the peace before whom it is returnable," the term means to set under or to write under, as opposed to a signature at some other place. Loughren v. Bonniwell, 125 Iowa 518, 519, 520, 101 N. W. 287, 106 Am. St. Rep. 319.

"Subscribe for, take or hold" see Atty.-Gen. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 198 Mass. 413, 426, 84 N. E. 737.

"Subscribed capital stock" see Moore v. Lent, 81 Cal. 502, 505, 22 Pac. 875.

10. Reid v. De Jarnette, 123 Ga. 787, 790, 51 S. E. 770, where the term "stockholder" is distinguished.

11. Webster Dict. [quoted in Ashton v. Stoy, 96 Iowa 197, 201, 64 N. W. 804, 30 L. R. A. 584].

"To become a subscriber to a newspaper includes some voluntary act on the part of the subscriber, or something which is in effect an assent by him to the use of his name as a subscriber." It does not include a person to whom a paper is sent without his knowledge or consent. Ashton v. Stoy, 96 Iowa 197, 201, 64 N. W. 804, 30 L. R. A. 584.

The term may apply either to those who have advanced money or to those stipulating

13. Luper v. Werts, 19 Oreg. 122, 135, 23 Pac. 850 [citing Annot. Code, § 757].

14. Greenleaf Ev. [quoted in Houston v. State, 114 Ala. 15, 17, 21 So. 813; Huston v. Ticknor, 99 Pa. St. 231, 238; Tate v. Lawrence, 11 Heisk. 503, 510]. See also In re Clute, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 586, 588, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 1059.

Technically construed the term applies only to a written instrument, but in construing a statute providing that all beneficial devises, etc., made or given in any will, to a subscribing witness thereto, shall be wholly void unless there be two other competent subscribing witnesses to the same, the term was treated as synonymous with "attesting witness." Godfrey v. Smith, 73 Nebr. 756, 767, 103 N. W. 450.

In the sense of a registry law it has been held that a subscribing witness is one who becomes a witness at the request of the bargainer, either in his presence or at his special request, or with his assent upon his acknowledgment of the execution of the deed. Tate v. Lawrence, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 503, 515.

"A subscribing witness to a deed is one who sees it signed, sealed and delivered, or hears it acknowledged, and signs his name as a witness, at the instance of the maker." Gaskill v. King, 34 N. C. 211, 217.

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

A subscription contract is a legal obligation to make a payment in money or its equivalent in furtherance of a charitable, business, or other undertaking.<sup>1</sup>

1. Other definitions.—A subscription is ment over his signature in writing, to furnish a sum of money for a particular pur-
"the act by which a person makes an agree-

II. FORM, EXECUTION, AND DELIVERY.

A. In General. The subscription may be made either by the promisor or his agent.<sup>9</sup>

B. Date and Signature. The paper is not invalid if undated.<sup>10</sup> The signature of the promisor need not be his personal name. Such words as he adopts for his signature will serve for that purpose.<sup>11</sup> The subscription paper need not be signed by the payee.<sup>12</sup>

C. Designation of Payee. It is not necessary that the payee should be named in the subscription paper; it is sufficient if there is an acceptance by the party intended;<sup>13</sup> and this is so even if the payee was not in existence at the time the subscription was made.<sup>14</sup> But there can be no recovery by a payee who was not contemplated.<sup>15</sup> pose; as, a subscription to a charitable institution, a subscription for a book, for a newspaper, and the like." Bouvier L. Dict. To subscribe is "to agree in writing to furnish a sum of money, or its equivalent, for a designated purpose; as to assist a charitable or religious object, or to take stock in a corporation." Anderson L. Dict.

2. Agreement to subscribe.—An instrument by which defendant "agrees to subscribe" is construed to be a present subscription. Strong v. Eldridge, 8 Wash. 595, 36 Pac. 696.

Written contract.—A subscription paper to a church fund, containing an unqualified promise to pay, was read to the congregation, and the parties desiring to subscribe announced the amount, and the name and amount were placed on the list by those acting for the church, with the consent of said subscribers; it was held that defendant's subscription so obtained constituted a contract in writing, actions on which are governed by the ten-year statute of limitations. *Ft. #### IV. CONSIDERATION.<sup>28</sup>

A. In General. A subscription is usually regarded as merely an offer to contribute toward the accomplishment of a proposed object, and being no more than an offer it does not become a contractual promise until supported by a consideration.<sup>29</sup> The statement of the subscription in the form of a loan by the payee to the subscriber will not evade this result.<sup>30</sup> It has even been held that a sub-

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Subscriptions," § 6. Necessity of consideration discussed.—In Twenty-Third St. Baptist Church v. Cornell, 117 N. Y. 601, 604, 23 N. E. 177, 6 L. R. A. 807, action was brought to recover a subscription made by Mrs. Weeks, defendant's testatrix. The court, in stating the requirement of consideration, said: "It is an insuperable barrier to a recovery by the plaintiff that the subscription of Mrs. Weeks to the fund for the erection of a new church building was merely an executory gift, unsupported by any consideration. The doctrine settled in the recent case of Albany Presb. Church v. Cooper, 112 N. Y. 517, 20 N. E. 352, 8 Am. St. Rep. 767, 3 L. R. A. 468, is decisive upon the facts here presented. Since the subscriptions of several furnished no consideration for the promise of any one; since the decedent did not request the corporation to build a new edifice, and the church did not promise that it would; since no endeavor to obtain subscribers was occasioned by the expressed wish or direction of testatrix, but began and was continued irrespective of it; since these facts exclude the existence of a consideration at the date of the promise; the plaintiff is compelled to rely and does rely upon one originating later. The contention is, that the church corporation erected its new edifice and incurred the large cost of its construction in reliance upon these subscriptions, and so in the end, if not in the beginning, a consideration arose to support the promise. That may happen where the expenditure can be said to have proceeded with the knowledge and assent of the subscribers; but here, before any expenditure was made, or any work begun, Mrs. Weeks died. Her gift was unexecuted at her death and revoked by that event; and no after action of the church corporation could change or affect the result. Her executors could not create a new liability where none existed before, and had no authority to bind the estate by any assent to the work of construction, or convert an invalid promise of the testatrix into an enforceable liability of her estate. The promise died when she died, and was merely a good intention which did not survive her." As to what is sufficient ground for recovery in New York see the New York cases cited infra, IV, E.

30. Butler University v. Scoonover, 114 Ind. 381, 16 N. E. 642, 5 Am. St. Rep. 627.

scription does not amount to so much as an offer which contemplates the formation of a contract, but is simply a statement of an intention to make a gift.<sup>31</sup> Nevertheless the meritorious purposes which are usually the object of subscriptions, or the acts done by way of expenditure of labor or money upon the faith of the subscriptions, have led the courts in the great majority of cases to hold that subscribers' promises are enforceable upon one or more of the grounds enumerated in subsequent sections of this chapter.<sup>32</sup>

B. Work Done or Money Expended in Reliance Upon the Subscription. It is generally held that if work has been done or expenditure has been made upon the faith of, and in reliance upon, the subscription, a consideration is thus furnished for the support of the subscriber's promise.<sup>33</sup> The gratuitous

But if the promise thus reciting that it is a loan assumes the form of a promissory note there is a rebuttable presumption of consideration. Fisher v. Ellis, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 322.

31. In re Hudson, 54 L. J. Ch. 811, 815, 33 Wkly. Rep. 819, where it is said: "The whole thing from beginning to end was nothing more than this: an intention of this gentleman to contribute to the fund, and an intention of the committee . . . to dispose of that fund according to the purposes for which it was contributed." But in 1881, four years previous to the report of this case, it is stated that Earl Cowper, having been sued upon a subscription made by him paid upon the eve of trial, by the advice of the attorney-general, it having apparently been the opinion of the latter that since work had been done upon the faith of the subscription it was enforceable. Law Times, Lond. May 21, 1881. These two cases seem to be the only reported instances of attempted recovery upon subscriptions in England.

32. See infra, IV, B, C, D, E, F, G, H; V. Tendency to allow recovery.—"These subscription contracts are favored in law, and are calculated to foster and encourage public and quasi public enterprises." Merchants' Bldg. Imp. Co. v. Chicago Exch. Bldg. Co., 210 Ill. 26, 33, 71 N. E. 22, 102 Am. St. Rep. 145. "The general course of decisions is favorable to the binding obligation of such promises." Irwin v. Lombard University, 56 Ohio St. 9, 22. "An attempt to reconcile all the cases which have been adjudged, touching the validity of voluntary engagements to pay money for charitable, educational, religious or other public purposes, would be fruitless; for, while circumstantial differences in the cases will explain and satisfactorily account for some of the diversities in the decisions, it will be found that there is, to some extent, a want of harmony in the principles and rules applied as tests of validity to that class of undertakings. The general principle is recognized in every case, that all simple contracts executory, whether in writing or verbal, must be founded upon a good consideration, and that the want of a legally adequate consideration, that is, a consideration recognized as sufficient in law, will vitiate every executory contract not under seal; still, the objection of a want of consideration for promises like the one before us has not always been regarded with favor; and judges, considering defences of that character as breaches of faith towards the public, and especially towards those engaged in the same enterprise, and an unwarrantable disappointment of the reasonable expectations of those interested, have been willing, nay apparently anxious, to discover a consideration which would uphold the undertaking as a valid contract; and it is not unlikely that some of the cases, in which subscriptions have been enforced at law, have been border cases, distinguished by slight circumstances from agreements held void for a want of consideration." Barnes v. Perine, 12 N. Y. 18, 23. See also to the same effect Martin v. Meles, 179 Mass. 114, 60 N. E. 397, a case which contains a critical review by Holmes, C. J., of the various theories upon which recovery has been allowed against promisors in subscription papers. And see Gittings v. Mayhew, 6 Md. 113, 131, and *Presbyterian Bd. of Foreign Missions v. in reliance upon the subscription converted into a valid and enforceable contract.<sup>34</sup> The reliance that furnishes a ground for recovery need not have been exclusively upon the promise of the subscriber.<sup>35</sup>

C. Mutual Promises of the Subscribers. Many of the cases allowing recovery upon subscription promises proceed in whole or in part upon the ground that the consideration for a subscriber's promise is to be found in the promises of the other subscribers.<sup>36</sup> But in those jurisdictions where there exists a limitation upon the right of a beneficiary to sue upon a contract to which he is not a party, this doctrine that regards the mutual promises of the subscribers as consideration

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Subscriptions," § 15.

The signing by children of a mutual subscription for the support of their parent is valid, under Civ. Code (1895), § 3661, providing that in mutual subscriptions for a common object the promise of the others is a good consideration for the promise of each, it not being unilateral. Worth v. Daniel, 1 Ga. App. 15, 57 S. E. 898.

In Nebraska the doctrine of mutual promises of subscribers as consideration is stated with a modification as follows: Where several promise to contribute to a common object desired by all, the promise of each is a good consideration for the promise of the others, and can be enforced by suit, when the person to whom the subscription runs has incurred obligations on the faith of such subscriptions. Horman v. Buel, 40 Nebr. 803, 59 N. W. 515; Arman v. Steele, 18 Nebr. 652, 26 N. W. 472; Fremont Ferry, etc., Co. v. Fuhrman, 8 Nebr. 99; Mefford v. Sell, 3 Nebr. (Unoff.) 566, 92 N. W. 148.

must be rejected and some other consideration be found, in order to enable a beneficiary to sue.<sup>37</sup>

D. Mutual Promises of Subscribers and Payee or Beneficiary. There are cases in which the consideration for the subscriber's promise is found either in the express promise, or in what is regarded as the implied promise, of the payee or beneficiary, to carry out the purpose for which the subscription is made; the acceptance of the subscription being evidence of the implied promise of the payee or beneficiary.<sup>38</sup> But this view has been rejected by some courts, which have urged the objection that the duty of the payee as a recipient of a subscriber's money to carry out the purpose of the subscription would arise from his trusteeship and not from a contractual promise to accomplish the object.<sup>39</sup>

37. Objection to the doctrine of the mutual promises of subscribers as consideration.—In Albany Presb. Church v. Cooper, 112 N. Y. 517, 521, 20 N. E. 352, 8 Am. St. Rep. 767, 3 L. R. A. 468, the objection is stated as follows: "It has sometimes been supposed that when several persons promise to contribute to a common object, desired by all, the promise of each may be a good consideration for the promise of others, and this although the object in view is one in which the promisors have no pecuniary or legal interest, and the performance of the promise by one of the promisors would not in a legal sense be beneficial to the others. This seems to have been the view of the chancellor as expressed in Hamilton College v. Stewart, when it was before the court of errors (2 Den. (N. Y.) 403, 417), and dicta of judges will be found to the same effect in other cases (Pembroke Second Precinct Church v. Stetson, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 506, 508; Watkins v. Eames, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 537). But the doctrine of the chancellor, as we understand, was overruled when the Hamilton college case came before this court (1 N. Y. 581), as have been also the dicta in the Massachusetts cases, by the court in that state, in the recent case of Cottage St. M. E. Church v. Kendall, 121 Mass. 528, 23 Am. Rep. 286. The doctrine seems to us unsound in principle. It proceeds on the assumption that a stranger both to the consideration and the promise, and whose only relation to the transaction is that of donee of an executory gift, may sue to enforce the payment of the gratuity for the reason that there has been a breach of contract between the several promisors and a failure to carry out as between themselves their mutual engagement. It is in no proper sense a case of mutual promises, as between the plaintiff and defendant." On the other hand, in Irwin v. Lombard University, 56 Ohio St. 9, 20, 46 N. E. 63, 60 Am. St. Rep. 727, 36 L. R. A. 239 the court in discussing mutual promises as consideration for a subscription contract says: "It is true that this doctrine is rejected by the supreme court of Massachusetts in Church v. Kendall. But in that state, one for whose benefit a contract is made by others, cannot maintain an action on it for want of privity. While in this state it has long been established that one for whose benefit others contract, upon a consideration sufficient as between themselves, may maintain an action for its enforcement.

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Subscriptions," § 6.

39. This objection is stated in Johnson v. Otterbein University, 41 Ohio St. 527, 531, as follows: "But grant, that by acceptance of the [subscription] note, the university impliedly agreed to comply with the direction, that is to apply the proceeds to the payment of its indebtedness. Is that a promise to do an act of advantage to Johnson, or of detriment to the institution in the sense requisite to constitute it a legal consideration? We think it is not. If the writing had been in form a promissory note, or a mere promise to make a donation without any qualification, a necessary implication of duty to apply its proceeds to proper corporate objects would arise upon acceptance. In the absence of special circumstances we fail to see how a duty to apply the fund to a particular corporate purpose, can better serve as a consideration than a duty to apply it to

E. Request. Recovery is allowed where the promisor expressly requests that acts be done in furtherance of the purpose of the subscription and they are performed pursuant to the request,<sup>40</sup> or where the subscription paper and other facts of the case warrant the inference of an implied request to accomplish the object.<sup>41</sup> The request may be subsequent to the execution of the subscription corporate purposes not specified. The duty in either case is implied. The claim made involves the proposition that a promise in writing to make a gift to an educational institution is valid on acceptance. This is denied in Ohio Wesleyan Female College v. Higgins, 16 Ohio St. 20. It, however, finds some support in the authorities." Another statement of the objection is found in Albany Presb. Church v. Cooper, 112 N. Y. 517, 523, 20 N. E. 352, 8 Am. St. Rep. 767, 3 L. R. A. 468, the court saying: "It may be assumed from the fact that the subscriptions were to be paid to the trustees of the church for the purpose of paying the mortgage, that it was understood that the trustees were to make the payment out of the moneys received. But the duty to make such payment, in case they accepted the money, would arise out of their duty as trustees. This duty would arise upon the receipt of the money, although they had no antecedent knowledge of the subscription. They did not assume even this obligation by the terms of the subscription, and the fact that the trustees applied money, paid on subscriptions, upon the mortgage debt, did not constitute a consideration for the promise of the defendant's intestate."

The doctrine of implied request as a foundation for recovery in subscription cases is stated and applied as follows in Keuka College v. Ray, 167 N. Y. 96, 60 N. E. 325, the action having been brought against Ray who had subscribed upon the solicitation of Ball, the president of the board of trustees of plaintiff college: "In this peculiar class of agreements to pay money, those which are conditioned, merely, upon all subscriptions for a like purpose aggregating a certain amount by a certain day, are deemed to lack the legal consideration to make them enforceable. The doctrine, however, may be regarded as well established that, if money is promised to be paid upon the condition that the promisee will do some act, or perform certain services, then the latter, upon performance of the condition, may compel payment. Nor need a request to the promisee to perform the services be expressed in the instrument; it may be implied. (Hamilton College v. Stewart, 1 N. Y. 581; Barnes v. Perine, 12 N. Y. 18; Albany Presb. Church v. Cooper, 112 N. Y. 517, 20 N. E. 352, 8 Am. St. Rep. 767, 3 L. R. A. 468.) In the latter case, Judge Andrews reasserts the doctrine, as laid down in earlier cases, that a naked promise to pay money, bare of any condition, accepted by the promisee, to do something, will not be sustained; but he, very distinctly, recognizes the rule that where there is a request to the promisee to go on and render services, or to incur liabilities, on the faith of a subscription, which request is complied with, the subscription would be binding. It may be observed that the difficulty in the case last mentioned, and which prevented the maintenance of the action upon the defendant's subscription, was, as Judge Andrews stated, that there was 'no evidence, express or implied, on the face of the subscription paper, nor any evidence outside of it, that the corporation, or its trustees, did, or undertook to do, anything on the invitation or request of the subscribers.' Now the evidence of the witness Ball showed that the plaintiff was provisionally chartered as a college and that it was necessary to raise a certain sum of money to entitle it to a full charter; that a large sum had been promised, conditionally upon $20,000 being raised by a certain time from others, and that the defendant's promise to pay $500 was a step in the plaintiff's proceeding, which invited it to continue its efforts and whereby it was, impliedly, requested to do so and to expend the incidental time and money in accomplishing the purpose." In Philomath College v. Hartless, 6 Oreg. 158, 164, 25 Am. Rep. 510, the doctrine is stated as follows: "While the courts, rather than violate an old and established rule of law, hold that a naked promise to pay money for a public object cannot be enforced for the want of a consideration, they have also decided, with great unanimity, that if the promise itself, or any other promise upon which it is founded, contains a request, or that which by any fair construction can be construed as a request, to the trustees, or others representing the institution for whose benefit the promise is made, to do any act, or to incur any expense, or to undergo any inconvenience, and such institution does the paper.<sup>42</sup> A subscription invalid at the time for want of consideration may be made valid and binding by a consideration arising subsequently between the subscriber and the beneficiary.<sup>43</sup>

F. Benefit to the Promisor. It has been held occasionally that the object being meritorious, and beneficial to the promisor, this benefit to him, although it is to be enjoyed by him in common with other persons, or even with the public generally, furnishes a consideration for the promise.<sup>44</sup>

G. Statutory Duty of the Promisee to Disburse the Fund. In a few cases the promise has been supported partly or wholly upon the theory that if the beneficiary has been authorized, by its own charter or by other legislation, to receive money and appropriate it to the purpose of the subscription, then such legislation together with the promise of the subscriber creates a legal obligation to pay the subscription,<sup>45</sup> the court saying either that the legal duty imposed upon the beneficiary to expend the fund constitutes a consideration,<sup>46</sup> or expressly placing the right to recover under these circumstances upon the ground of public policy.<sup>47</sup>

H. Moral Obligation. While in most instances there is undoubtedly a act, or incurs the expense, or submits to the inconvenience, this request and performance on the behalf of the institution, is a sufficient consideration to support the promise." For further discussion of implied request see also Barnes v. Perine, 12 N. Y. 18.

Benefit to the promisor.—In Pitt v. Gentle, 49 Mo. 74, 77, defendant was sued upon a subscription made to aid in rebuilding a mill, and the court said: "In the West, mills of this kind are essential to enable families to carry on an important branch of domestic industry; and besides, they form nuclei of settlements and enhance the value of property where they are located. The defendant, as well as his neighbors, was personally interested in having this one rebuilt, and may be supposed to have been moved in making his subscription by considerations of private interest as well as of benevolence. I have, then, no hesitation in holding that the defendant and the public had sufficient interest in the undertaking to authorize the plaintiffs to trust to his promise to aid." And in Comstock v. Howd, 15 Mich. 237, 244, the court says: "We see no difficulty upon the question of a consideration. The object was a meritorious one, for which people generally are willing to expend money, and which, therefore, 'must be regarded as worth money when it is promised': Underwood v. Waldron, 12 Mich. 73, 90."

46. In Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Fleming, 10 Bush (Ky.) 234, 238, where the action was brought upon a subscription note the court said: "The note was no doubt given for a donation intended to be made to appellants, which by section 2 of their charter (Sess. Acts 1846-47, p. 216) they were authorized to receive. The law made it their duty to apply the fund to carrying out the charitable and benevolent purpose of the institution and the donor. This obligation furnished consideration enough to uphold the promise to pay. (Collier v. Baptist Education Soc., 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 68)."

47. Public policy.—In Irwin v. Lombard University, 56 Ohio St. 9, 21, 46 N. E. 63, 60 Am. St. Rep. 727, 36 L. R. A. 239, the court in stating the grounds of public policy which underlie the right to recover, says: "Institutions of this character are incorporated by public authority for defined purposes. Money recovered by them on promises of this character, cannot be used for the personal and private ends of an individual, but must be used for the purposes defined. To this use the university is restricted not only by the law of its being but as well by the obligations arising from its acceptance of the promise. A promise to give money to one to be used by him according to his inclination and for his personal ends is prompted only by motive. But a promise to pay money to such an institution to be used for such defined and public purposes rests upon consideration. The general course of decisions is favorable to the binding obligation of such promises. They have been influenced, not only by such reasons as those already stated, but in some cases, at least by state policy as indicated by constitutional and statutory provisions. The policy of this state, as so indicated, is promotive of education, religion and philanthropy. In addition to the declarations of the constitution upon the subject, the policy of the state is indicated by numerous legislative enactments providing for the incor-strong moral obligation to pay a promised subscription, and such obligation has generally moved the courts to discover a technical consideration for the promise, nevertheless, in apparently only two cases have the subscriptions been enforced explicitly upon the ground that the promise is supported by the moral obligation.<sup>48</sup>

V. ESTOPPEL.

While the cases that allow recovery of subscriptions upon the ground of expenditure made, or work done, in reliance upon the subscription, usually state the reason in terms of consideration,<sup>49</sup> it has been held that the promise can really be operative only by way of estoppel;<sup>50</sup> and there are some cases where expenditure having been made or work done, on the faith of the subscription, the court has placed the right of recovery clearly upon the ground of an estoppel invoked against the promisor.<sup>51</sup>

VI. REVOCATION AND LAPSE.

A. Revocation by Notice. The subscription may be revoked upon notice<sup>52</sup> by the subscriber, if the subscription has not yet been accepted and no consid-poration of colleges, churches and other institutions of philanthropy, which are intended to be perpetual, and which not only for their establishment, but for their perpetual maintenance, are authorized to receive contributions from those who are in sympathy with their purposes and methods—the only source from which, in view of their nature, their support can be derived. Looking to the plainly declared purpose of the law making department, promises made with a view to discharging the debts of such institutions, to providing the means to give them greater stability and the means for the employment of teachers, to establish endowment funds to give them greater stability and efficiency, and whatever may be necessary or helpful to accomplish their purposes or secure their permanency must be held valid. A view which omits considerations of this character is too narrow to be technically correct.”

Where the purpose is discretionary.—But in Kansas City School Dist. v. Sheidley, 138 Mo. 672, 40 S. W. 656, 60 Am. St. Rep. 576, 37 L. R. A. 406, it was held that where the discretion to establish a library is to be exercised by a board of education, in view of all the circumstances, the rule that the performance of an act legally incumbent on the party performing is not a sufficient consideration has no application to a subscription made in consideration of the undertaking of the board to establish a library, they not being bound by law to erect the library.

48. Caul v. Gibson, 3 Pa. St. 416; Hart's Estate, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 226.

49. Expenditures or work as consideration.—In commenting upon expenditures or work in reliance upon the subscription as furnishing a legal consideration, Holmes, C. J., says in Martin v. Meles, 179 Mass. 114, 116, 60 N. E. 397: “In the later Massachusetts cases more weight has been laid on the incurring of other liabilities and making expenditures on the faith of the defendant's promise than on the counter promise of the plaintiff. Sherwin v. Fletcher, 168 Mass. 413, 47 N. E. 197; Cottage St. M. E. Church v. Kendall, 121 Mass. 528, 23 Am. Rep. 286.

Of course the mere fact that a promisee relies upon a promise made without other consideration does not impart validity to what before was void. Bragg v. Danielson, 141 Mass. 195, 196, 4 N. E. 622. There must be some ground for saying that the acts done in reliance upon the promise were contemplated by the form of the transaction either impliedly or in terms as the conventional inducement, motive and equivalent for the promise. But courts have gone very great lengths in discovering the implication of such an equivalence, sometimes perhaps even having found it in matters which would seem to be no more than conditions or natural consequences of the promise.”

50. Upon estoppel as constituting the true ground of recovery, the court, in Reimensnyder v. Gans, 110 Pa. St. 17, 20, 2 Atl. 425, says: “A subscription to a charity embodies in it no previous consideration; hence . . . it can be operative only by way of estoppel; and unless others have been thereby induced to subscribe, or some undertaking has been commenced, or continued, on the faith of it, it cannot be regarded as a binding contract.” A contract of this kind is enforceable rather by way of estoppel than on the ground of consideration.

eration has been furnished therefor,<sup>53</sup> but not after there has been an acceptance and a consideration furnished.<sup>54</sup>

B. Lapse by Death or Insanity. A subscription lapses by the death of the subscriber, if that event occurs before there is an acceptance and before a consideration is furnished,<sup>55</sup> but not thereafter.<sup>56</sup> The lapse of the subscription by the subsequent insanity of the subscriber is controlled by the same rules that govern the lapse of the subscription by death.<sup>57</sup>

VII. FRAUD AND MISREPRESENTATION.

A. In General. If the execution of a contract to give a subscription is induced by a fraudulent representation of fact, it is not binding upon the subscriber; the fraud affords a defense.<sup>58</sup> It is essential, however, that the fraud should relate to the subject-matter of the contract.<sup>59</sup>

B. Fictitious Subscriptions. One of the more common forms of fraudulent representation in subscription contracts is the fictitious subscription, made only for the purpose of inducing others to subscribe in good faith.<sup>60</sup> While such

What does not constitute fraud.—The mere fact that the person who wrote down names and amounts to a subscription paper had no authority to do so does not raise a presumption that the person taking the subscription had notice of that fact and his statement to a subscriber that the persons thus put down as subscribers were subscribers does not indicate a fraudulent purpose. Scott v. Blanton, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 379.

59. Blair v. Buttolph, 72 Iowa 31, 33 N. W. 349, holding that where the condition of a subscription was that a railroad should be constructed to a designated point, the subscriber was not relieved of liability on the subscription because of false representations that the company intended to construct an additional line of road.

60. New London Literary, etc., Inst. v. Prescott, 40 N. H. 330; New York Exch. Co.

fictitious subscription is a defense to those who subscribe in good faith, the fictitious subscriber himself is estopped by his fraudulent representation from denying the validity of his own promise.<sup>61</sup>

C. Opinions. A subscription contract is, however, not affected by representations that are so loose and general,<sup>62</sup> or are so manifestly mere statements of opinion,<sup>63</sup> that the promisee cannot be deemed to have relied upon them as being statements of fact.

D. Innocent Misrepresentation. A false representation if made innocently has been held to be no defense to a subscriber.<sup>64</sup>

E. Promissory Representations. Where a representation which induced the subscription is promissory in its nature, and not a statement of existing fact, it has been held that the contract cannot be avoided by the subscriber because of such misrepresentation,<sup>65</sup> although there is authority to the contrary.<sup>66</sup>

VIII. ILLEGALITY.

A. In General. A subscription which has for its purpose the accomplishment of ends that are in contravention of public policy is invalid; for example, a subscription to secure the location of a railway station on a particular site, if such location is at the sacrifice of the interests of the public.<sup>67</sup> A contract whereby certain citizens of a town agreed to pay a specified sum to aid in the erection of a power plant, in order to increase the facilities for furnishing electric light to the town, is not illegal on its face.<sup>68</sup>

B. Subscriptions Made on Sunday. Whether a Sunday subscription is illegal depends upon the construction which in any particular state is put upon the state statute providing against the violation of Sunday. As these statutes usually except from their operation works of charity or necessity, Sunday subscriptions have been held not to come within their prohibition.<sup>69</sup>

C. Contracts Ultra Vires. The legality of subscriptions made to public officers or to public corporations in aid of public works has occasionally been contested upon the ground of lack of authority in the beneficiary to accept and use the subscriptions, but the legality of such subscriptions has been upheld.<sup>70</sup> So too the validity of subscriptions to private corporations has in some cases been contested upon the same ground.<sup>71</sup>

IX. CONSTRUCTION.

The rules applicable generally to the construction of written contracts<sup>72</sup> govern the construction of subscription contracts. The contract will be construed with reference to the intent of the parties at the time, and the court will consider the subject-matter of the agreement, the inducement which influenced the subscription was given for the purpose of erecting a college building therefor at H, the subscription was held invalid, as for a purpose not authorized by law, in the absence of a showing that it was given as an inducement to the college to obtain legislative authority to remove it to H.

Instances.—Rogers v. Galloway Female College, 64 Ark. 627, 44 S. W. 454, 39 L. R. A. 636 (where citizens of the town of S had subscribed a fund for the location of a college "in" S, and the town was in part outside the corporate limits, and it was held that the college representatives were bound to locate the college in the town, but not necessarily inside the corporate limits); Lasar v. Johnson, 125 Cal. 549, 58 Pac. 161 (where the word "entertainment," as used in a subscription for the purpose of entertaining a large number of strangers, constituting an organized body, by the resident and business men of a city, was held not synonymous with "board," and limited to the ordinary necessities of life); Merchants' Bldg. Imp. Co. v. Chicago Exch. Bldg. Co., 210 Ill. 26, 71 N. E. 22, 102 Am. St. Rep. 145 (where a subscription was on condition that the Chicago stock exchange should occupy the first or second floor, or both, of a building about to be erected, and that one of the main entrances to the stock exchange room should be from a certain street, and there was an entrance to the building from that street, but the stock exchange occupied the second floor, it was held to be a question for the jury whether the entrance was a main entrance; also where the subscription of a certain sum annually was payable to the owners of certain premises while the Chicago stock exchange should occupy them, for not more than fifteen years, and by another writing the payments were to be made only on condition that the owners should, before a certain date, enter into a contract with the stock exchange to occupy the premises in accordance with the terms of the subscription, it was held not necessary that the contract with the stock exchange should be binding on it for fifteen years, to make the subscription binding); Richelieu Hotel Co. v. International Military Encampment Co., 140 Ill. 248, 29 N. E. 1044, 33 Am. St. Rep. 234 (where a subscription paper reciting that the signers "subscribe the sums set opposite our respective names" and containing other language indicating that the intention was to subscribe sums of money, followed by subscribers' names, with figures opposite, of which one has the figures "1,000" opposite, was taken to be, as to such subscriber, a subscription of one thousand dollars); Cottage Hospital v. Merrill, 92 Iowa 649, 61 N. W. 490 (where a subscription paper recited that, whereas the managers of a certain hospital are about to erect a building, "I do hereby subscribe for this purpose the sum of one hundred dollars. . . . And, further, as a soldiers' memorial, I agree to support three beds in said hospital, at a cost of two hundred and fifty dollars each per annum, for ten years from date of completion of said building. . . . These beds all for the use of soldiers, but always for use when there are no soldier applicants"; and it was held that the instrument should not be construed as two separate contracts—one for one hundred dollars, and one for the support of the beds—so as to make the latter void for want of consideration, because there was no promise by the hospital to set apart such beds for the use and benefit of soldiers); Gittings v. Mayhew, 6 Md. 113 (where M, as treasurer of a subscription fund for the purpose of erecting an "athenæum," sued G, one of the subscribers, for the amount by him subscribed, and it was held that the objection that the term "athenæum" conveyed to the mind no definite idea, and that the altered contract is therefore void for want of a sufficient and certain subject, was not a sufficient objection to the validity of the subscription); Syracuse First Baptist Soc. v. Robinson, 21 N. Y. 234 (where a promise to give toward building a church "a lease of [a certain house] for three years, which at present rent, is $516," was construed, not as giving a lease of the house, but as a contract to pay the amount received from the rent); Boyce v. Stringfellow, (Tex. Civ. App. 1908) 114 S. W. 652 (a contract between a promoter of a proposed railroad and certain subscribers provided that the promoter would cause the railroad company to be organized, and that the company would build a line to A, where it would connect with two specified railroads; and the subscribers agreed to procure a right of way, depot grounds, etc., at their expense, according to a proposition of a general solicitor attached to the contract, and which contained a provision to "give the company whatever right of way, depot grounds, etc., it may 'require' at A;" and it was held, in view of the object to be attained—the connection with the other railroads—all that the company could "require" of the subscribers were right of way, depot grounds, etc., reasonably necessary to accomplish the connection, and it was not entitled to a right of way through the town beyond the point of connection required by the road for an ultimate extension in that direction.

scription, the circumstances under which it was made, and the phraseology thereof.<sup>73</sup>

X. ASSIGNMENT.

The contractual right against the subscriber is assignable if the subscription paper expressly<sup>74</sup> or by implication<sup>75</sup> contemplates an assignment.

XI. TITLE TO FUNDS SUBSCRIBED.

The title to funds subscribed and paid upon a subscription, or to property purchased with the funds, depends upon the intention of the subscribers.<sup>76</sup> It has been held that where the subscribed funds have been paid to the committee which raised the subscription, the title to the funds did not thereby pass to the beneficiary.<sup>77</sup> If, however, the subscription list to which the subscribers' names are signed is headed, "Subscriptions and donations to" the beneficiary, and the money is received by its treasurer, title to the funds passes to the beneficiary.<sup>78</sup>

XII. PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS.<sup>79</sup>

B. Substantial Performance. Recovery is allowed, however, where there has been a substantial, although not literal, performance of the conditions.<sup>82</sup> By substantial performance it is understood that, although the conditions of the subscription be deviated from in trifling particulars, such deviation does not materially detract from the benefit the subscriber would derive from literal performance, but leaves the subscriber substantially the benefit he expected.<sup>83</sup>

C. Performance of Collateral Agreements. The performance of a collateral and contemporaneous promise is not a condition precedent to recovery upon the subscription.<sup>84</sup>

D. Time of Performance. According to the weight of authority the time of performance, when prescribed by the subscription contract, is of the essence of the contract, and a non-compliance with this requirement is a defense to the subscriber,<sup>85</sup> although performance was completed shortly after the time stipu-mittee. Mefford v. Sell, 3 Nebr. (Unoff.) 566, 92 N. W. 148. Seating capacity of theater. Germer v. Church, 43 Nebr. 690, 62 N. W. 51. Establishing hospital ward. *Cottage Hospital v. And where a contract required plaintiff to construct a certain railroad in consideration of defendants' subscription, and it became necessary for plaintiff to organize a corporation to construct such road in order to condemn a right of way, in which corporation plaintiff held a majority of the stock, the construction of the road by the corporation constituted a sufficient compliance with the contract. *Hunt v. E. Change of Plan or Purpose.<sup>89</sup> Any material change in the plan or purpose for which the subscription was made cannot be effected without the consent of the subscriber.<sup>90</sup> He is thereby released unless there has been a waiver,<sup>91</sup> or unless he has estopped himself to deny his consent to the change.<sup>92</sup>

Reason for rule.—Such agreement is stricti juris, and the obligation of the promisor is akin to that of a guarantor who receives no personal benefit from the performance of the act for which he agrees to become responsible, at least none to which he would not have been entitled if the promise had not been made. Change of location.—Where subscriptions to public improvements are made with reference to their location, any material subsequent change of location without the consent of a subscriber releases him from his subscription. Pratt v. Canton Cotton Co., 51 Miss. 470.

Subsequent formation of corporation.—When the fund is raised by mutual subscriptions, the fact that the purpose is carried out by a subsequently formed corporation of subscribers, of which defendant subscriber does not choose to become a member; does not relieve him from liability upon his subscription. Carr v. Bartlett, 72 Me. 120; Osborn v. Crosby, 63 N. H. 538, 3 Atl. 429.

Return to original plan.—In Anderson v. West Kentucky College, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 725, a subscriber was to pay when fifteen thousand dollars had been subscribed. Afterward the plan was changed so as to limit the amount to be raised to ten thousand dollars but fifteen thousand dollars was in fact subscribed. The subscriber was still liable.

Directing verdict.—In Wrought Iron Bridge Co. v. Greene, 53 Iowa 562, 5 N. W. 770, it was held that where the petition in an action to recover defendant's subscription to a fund for the erection of a bridge fails to aver compliance with a provision to the subscription requiring the bridge to be of a certain character, and the defect is not assailed by demurrer or other pleading, it is error to direct a verdict for defendant on the ground that such condition has not been established.

What constitutes waiver.—Part payment of a subscription and a promise to pay the balance, the subscriber not then knowing that a condition of his subscription had not been complied with, was held not a waiver of the condition. Albany First Presb. Church v. Cooper, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 453, 10 N. Y. St. 142 [affirmed in 112 N. Y. 517, 20 N. E. 352, 8 Am. St. Rep. 767, 3 L. R. A. 468]; Felt v. Davis, 48 Vt. 506. F. Abandonment of the Undertaking. If the enterprise is abandoned before the accomplishment of the purpose contemplated by the subscription paper, no recovery can be had against the subscriber;<sup>93</sup> but if the purpose which is fairly to be deemed the object of the subscription is substantially accomplished a subsequent cessation of the enterprise will not ordinarily relieve the subscriber from liability.<sup>94</sup>

G. Subscriptions Conditioned Upon Other Subscriptions.<sup>95</sup> A subscription conditioned upon other subscriptions requires that they shall be made in good faith, by responsible persons,<sup>96</sup> and to the amount designated.<sup>97</sup> It is Chipman, 32 Ind. App. 489, 68 N. E. 320; Hall v. Thayer, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 130.

What constitutes estoppel.—Where a subscriber to a public work permits it to be carried on for a length of time without objection, he will be regarded in equity as acquiescing in the acts done, and will not be relieved from the payment of his subscription on the ground that the plan has been changed and the work is of no benefit. *Ex p. Evidence of abandonment.—Mann v. O'Neil, 29 Wash. 115, 69 Pac. 635 (where a committee was appointed by a meeting to raise subscriptions to a corporation on condition that it would erect a factory in a certain county, the committee being instructed to hold the subscription contracts until assurances of the erection of the factory were given, correspondence between the corporation's representative and the committee was held admissible, in an action for such subscriptions, to show that the corporation had abandoned the enterprise); Michels v. Rustemeyer, 20 Wash. 597, 56 Pac. 380 (where, after subscriptions were made to the building of a church, collection of the subscriptions was temporarily deferred, owing to the poor financial condition of the subscribers, two plans were submitted to the building committee, one of which was disapproved of by part of the committee, who withdrew dissatisfied, and desired to abandon the project; but a majority of the committee adopted one of the plans, and the construction of the building proceeded, it was held insufficient to show an abandonment of construction in accordance with the original determination, on which the subscriptions were based); Hodges v. O'Brien, 113 Wis. 97, 88 N. W. 901 (where it was held that, in an action to recover on subscription notes, which defendant has secured possession of, there is evidence that the required amount of subscriptions were not secured when defendant was transferred to another church, and after his successor was installed the project was revived, and the former subscriptions were not considered binding, it is error to refuse to submit to the jury whether the building had not been given up, and the subscribers released, when defendant regained such possession).

But it was held in Chicago Bldg., etc., Co. v. Higginbotham, (Miss.) 1901) 29 So. 79, that where parties sign a subscription contract by the terms of which so much money was to be raised for the company constructing a plant, adult signers cannot defeat their liability thereon by showing that some of the subscribers were minors or insolvents, since the loss resulting therefrom would fall on the company and not on the subscribers.

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Subscriptions," § 15.

A subscriber may be estopped to deny the good faith of other subscribers. In Rogers v. Galloway Female College, 64 Ark. 627, 44 S. W. 454, 39 L. R. A. 636, it was held that one who has taken a prominent part in getting up a subscription list as a consideration for the location of a college, and knows how the individual subscriptions were taken, and makes no objection when the list is pre-essential that there should be no conditions as to the liability of any of the subscribers not applicable to all,<sup>98</sup> except where there is consent to a variation of conditions as to some of the subscribers.<sup>99</sup>

XIII. PAYMENT OF THE SUBSCRIPTION.

A. Time of Payment. The liability of the subscriber becomes fixed when there has been an acceptance<sup>1</sup> of the subscription and a consideration furnished.<sup>2</sup> Payment is due after the conditions precedent to payment have been complied with,<sup>3</sup> and upon the date prescribed, if one is stated in the subscription.<sup>4</sup>

B. Demand. An action upon a subscription will lie without first making a demand for payment.<sup>5</sup>

C. Abatement of Subscriptions. If less than the amount subscribed is expended upon the undertaking, each subscriber is liable only for his pro rata share of the total sum expended.<sup>6</sup>

XIV. RELEASE OR DISCHARGE OF SUBSCRIBER.

The subscriber is released from his obligation if the conditions of the subscription have not been fulfilled by the other party.<sup>7</sup> He is not discharged, however, simply because he ceases to benefit by the enterprise for which he has incurred sent to and accepted by the college representatives, is estopped to allege that certain subscribers were acting in bad faith, and that the list was in fact short of the total amount necessary to bind subscribers.

Iowa.—McCormack v. Reece, 3 Greene 591.

Massachusetts.—Martin v. Males, 179 Mass. 114, 118, 60 N. E. 379. This case was an action brought by a committee who were the payees of the subscription and were to carry out the project. In discussing the time when payment became due the court says: "A more serious difficulty if the acts are the consideration, is that it seems to lead to the dilemma that either all acts to be done by the committee must be accomplished before the consideration is furnished, or else that the defendant's promise is to be taken distributively and divided up into distinct promises to pay successive sums as successive steps of the committee may make further payment necessary and may furnish consideration for requiring them. The last view is artificial and may be laid on one side. In the most noticeable cases where a man has been held entitled to stop before he has finished his payments, the ground has not been the divisibility of his undertaking but the absence of consideration, which required the court to leave things where it found them. Albany Presb. Church v. Cooper, 112 N. Y. 517, 20 N. E. 352, 8 Am. St. Rep. 767, 3 L. R. A. 468; In re Hudson, 54 L. J. Ch. 811, 33 Wkly. Rep. 819. As against the former view, if necessary, we should assume that the first substantial act done by the committee was all that was required in the way of acts to found the defendants' obligation. See Amherst Academy v. Cows, 6 Pick. 427, 438, 17 Am. Dec. 387."

Virginia*, 91 Ill. 535 (where it was held that interest on a subscription against a delinquent subscriber cannot be allowed in the absence of proof showing when the money was expended by the promisee); Chicago Bldg., etc., Co. v. Higginbotham, (Miss. 1901) 29 So. 79 (where it was held that where the time of payment of a subscription is extended, the subscriber can only be charged with interest from the time to which it is extended).

Nalty*, 104 Wis. 464, 80 N. W. 726. But in Martin v. Creech, 58 Mo. App. 391, it was held that the fact that plaintiff, having agreed to erect and operate a described mill, really erected such a mill upon the subscription of a smaller amount did not prevent him from recovering from the subscribers the amount they had agreed to pay.

7. See supra, XII.

the obligation,<sup>8</sup> nor because of the fact that the beneficiary requires that the subscriptions be guaranteed, which is done;<sup>9</sup> nor because the beneficiary releases the guarantor;<sup>10</sup> nor because an extension of time was given to another subscriber who subsequently paid.<sup>11</sup>

XV. RECOVERY BACK OF SUBSCRIPTION.

A paid subscription may be recovered back if such recovery be expressly provided for,<sup>12</sup> if the condition upon which it was paid has not been fulfilled,<sup>13</sup> or if the subscription was fraudulently procured;<sup>14</sup> but there can be no recovery back where there is an implied condition against recovery of the sum paid.<sup>15</sup>

XVI. ACTIONS.

A. Jurisdiction. Where the subscribers to a fund are numerous, many of whom deny liability on various grounds, equity has jurisdiction to administer relief in a suit to enforce the subscriptions.<sup>16</sup>

B. Parties — 1. PARTIES PLAINTIFF — a. In General. An action upon the subscription is properly brought by the other party to the subscription contract.<sup>17</sup> A beneficiary who is not a party to the contract may sue a delinquent subscriber in those jurisdictions where a third person is allowed to sue upon a contract made for his benefit.<sup>18</sup> But in those cases where the only consideration is to be found

Jurisdiction of courts of law.—Where various persons subscribed for shares in a meeting-house and a committee erected the meeting-house, recovery can be had against the subscribers in actions at law, and it is not necessary to resort to a bill in equity, since the promises are several, the proportionate shares being distinctly defined. *Hall v. in the mutual promises of the subscribers, and the jurisdiction is one where a beneficiary who is not a party to the contract cannot sue upon the contract, such subscribers, and not the beneficiary, are the only proper parties plaintiff.<sup>19</sup> Where the subscription calls for payment to designated persons,<sup>20</sup> the action upon the subscription may be brought by them; as for example where the paper provides for payment to a committee,<sup>21</sup> to a trustee,<sup>22</sup> or to a treasurer.<sup>23</sup> The assignee of a subscription right is the proper party plaintiff in those jurisdictions where the action must be brought by the real party in interest.<sup>24</sup>

b. Corporations. Where the subscription runs to a contemplated corporation the corporation may sue if, when it is formed, it accepts the subscription and furnishes the consideration, or is the contemplated beneficiary in a jurisdiction where the beneficiary is permitted to sue.<sup>25</sup>

2. PARTIES DEFENDANT. Where two or more persons sign a subscription paper, each promising to pay a stated sum, the liability of the subscribers is several and not joint, and in consequence they must be sued severally on their undertakings.<sup>26</sup>

the beneficiary it is now held in New York that he cannot sue upon the contract. Albany Presb. Church v. Cooper, 112 N. Y. 517, 20 N. E. 352, 8 Am. St. Rep. 767, 3 L. R. A. 468.

In Wisconsin it was held under section 2604 of the Revised Statutes of 1898, which provides that when the question is of common interest to many persons, or when the parties are very numerous, one or more may sue or defend for the benefit of the whole, that a part of the subscribers to the fund to build a church, there being about seventy-five subscribers, can sue for the benefit of all the subscribers, where the subscriptions were made and expenses were incurred on the faith of defendant's subscription. *Hodges v. In this case a subscription agreement with a local manufacturer authorized a person named to pay the subscription money to the manufacturers proposing to operate a factory in the village on the completion of the building with one hundred machines ready for work; on their failure to do so, the money to be returned to the contributors. It was held that the quasi-trustee alone could maintain an action against one of the signers; the subscribers apparently reposing in him a special trust.

But there are cases where the subscribers are found in fact to be joint principals acting through the payee as their agent for the purpose of carrying out the enterprise for which the subscription is made, and as a consequence in such cases the subscribers must be sued jointly.<sup>27</sup> It has been held, however, that if one is sued alone, he can only avail himself of the non-joinder of his co-subscribers by plea in abatement.<sup>28</sup>

C. Pleading. In jurisdictions where a written contract of subscription imports a consideration the complaint in an action to recover a subscription need not allege a consideration;<sup>29</sup> and where the consideration for each subscription is the other subscriptions, the complaint need not allege the completion of the work for which it was taken,<sup>30</sup> and such allegation if made may be treated as surplusage.<sup>31</sup> Where the subscription is due, it is not necessary to allege a demand.<sup>32</sup> If by the terms of the subscription contract the subscriber's liability is mainly to pay a pro rata share of any excess of expenses above receipts of an enterprise to be undertaken, a complaint in an action to recover on such subscription must show the total amount subscribed and the amount of the loss.<sup>33</sup> Where the answer sets up want of consideration, no reply is necessary under a statute providing that there shall be no reply except in cases where matter in confession and avoidance is relied on.<sup>34</sup> In an action to recover a subscription, evidence is admissible under a plea of the general issue that defendant signed the subscription contract on condition that it should not be delivered without his consent, and that he did not consent.<sup>35</sup>

D. Evidence — 1. PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF. There is a rebuttable presumption of consideration for the subscription paper where, as in some states, by statute, a promise in writing imports a consideration,<sup>36</sup> or where the promise assumes the form of a promissory note.<sup>37</sup> It has been held also that such presumption exists where the subscription paper recites that the promise is given for "value received."<sup>38</sup> Where money is subscribed on condition that other subscriptions aggregating a certain sum are obtained, and subsequent subscribers know of the former subscription, it will be presumed that their subscriptions are made in reliance on the earlier subscription, although it is an instrument complete in itself and separate from the other subscription.<sup>39</sup> If the contract provides that any surplus of subscription over the price for erecting the plant should belong to the subscribers, the burden is on a delinquent subscriber to show that there was a surplus.<sup>40</sup> In an action to recover a subscription given on condition that a certain amount be subscribed, which was done, the burden is on defendant to show that any of the subscriptions were invalid.<sup>41</sup>

of the contract,<sup>42</sup> and the admission in evidence of the paper with all the names thereon is not a variance, although only defendant's name is mentioned in the declaration.<sup>43</sup> On the question of consideration, it is competent to show that money had been raised and work done in reliance on the subscriptions, and the exclusion thereof is error.<sup>44</sup>

b. Parol Evidence. The general rules applicable to the admissibility of evidence to vary or contradict written contracts generally<sup>45</sup> apply to subscription contracts.<sup>46</sup> It is the general rule that parol evidence is not admissible to show that a subscription was not to be payable except on other conditions than those embodied in the written contract.<sup>47</sup> But it has been held that parol evidence is admissible to show that the contract was not intended to be wholly reduced to writing, and what terms were to remain in parol;<sup>48</sup> that there was an oral condition precedent which was to be complied with before the writing was to take effect as the written contract of the parties;<sup>49</sup> that there was a request to expend money or labor in furtherance of the project of the subscription;<sup>50</sup> that the subscription was fraudulently procured;<sup>51</sup> and who was the intended payee where none was named in the subscription.<sup>52</sup> It is held that parol evidence as to the circumstances under which a subscription is made is admissible as a part of the res gestæ.<sup>53</sup>

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE OF ACT.

A. Definition. In a broad sense the word "suicide" is sufficiently specific and comprehensive to cover all kinds of human self-destruction;<sup>1</sup> but in legal acceptation and popular use suicide is something more than self-sought and self-inflicted death, and the word "suicide" is generally employed to characterize a crime or offense, and in such a sense it is the act of voluntarily and intentionally destroying one's own life, committed by a person of years of discretion and of sound mind.<sup>2</sup> In order that suicide may constitute an offense or crime within

A felo de se, or suicide, is "where a man of the age of discretion, and compos mentis, voluntarily kills himself by stabbing, poison, or any other way." 1 Hale P. C. 411. See also Clift v. Schwabe, 3 C. B. 437, 54 E. C. L. 437, 2 C. & K. 137, 61 E. C. L. 137, 17 L. J. C. P. 2.

N. Y. Pen. Code, § 172 (Pen. Laws, § 2300), defines suicide as the intentional taking of one's own life. See Shipman v. Protected Home Circle, 174 N. Y. 398, 67 N. E. 83, 63 L. R. A. 347.

Origin.—The word "suicide" is of modern origin; it does not occur in the Bible, or in any English author before the reign of Charles II; probably, not till after the reign of Anne. It first occurs as an English word in Hale's Pleas of the Crown. It is not in Hawkins, first published in 1716; but it is to be found in Blackstone. Clift v. Schwabe, 3 C. B. 437, 54 E. C. B. Nature of Act. At common law suicide was considered both criminal and felonious, although the punishment except of an anticipatory dread was of necessity visited upon the innocent,<sup>7</sup> and under some statutes it is still so regarded.<sup>8</sup> Under other statutes, however, it is held that suicide is not a crime since the person guilty of the act cannot be punished,<sup>9</sup> although an attempt to commit suicide is criminal.<sup>10</sup>

II. ATTEMPT TO COMMIT SUICIDE.

If the act of suicide fails to accomplish its purpose, it constitutes an attempt to commit suicide,<sup>11</sup> which is an indictable offense both at common law,<sup>12</sup> and under some statutes.<sup>13</sup> Under other statutes, however, an attempt to commit suicide is not an indictable offense on the ground that no penalty of any kind attaches to the suicide if actually committed.<sup>14</sup>

v. Moore, 34 Mich. 41, holding that the word "suicide" means self-killing, and is not restricted to a wrongful act of self-murder, although if non compos mentis the actor in suicide commits no crime.

Legally speaking, self-destruction by a person bereft of reason can with no more propriety be ascribed to his own hand than to the deadly instrument that may be used for the purpose, and whether it is by drowning or poison or hanging or any other manner, is no more his act in the sense of the law than if he is impelled by irresistible physical power. Breasted v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 8 N. Y. 299, 59 Am. Dec. 482, Seld. 114 [affirming 4 Hill 73]; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Broughton, 109 U. S. 121, 3 S. Ct. 99, 27 L. ed. 878. See also New Home Life Assoc. v. Hagler, 29 Ill. App. 437.

Death by accident, and death by one's own hand, when deprived of reason, stand on principle in the same category, as in both cases the act is done without a controlling mind. Breasted v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 8 N. Y. 299, 59 Am. Dec. 482, Seld. 114 [affirming 4 Hill 73].

III. KILLING ANOTHER IN ATTEMPTING TO COMMIT SUICIDE.

In some states, unintentionally killing another in attempting to commit suicide is manslaughter, while in others it is murder.<sup>15</sup>

IV. ADVISING OR AIDING TO COMMIT SUICIDE.

Where one person advises, aids, or abets another to commit suicide, and the other by reason thereof kills himself, and the adviser is present when he does so, he is guilty of murder as a principal,<sup>16</sup> or in some jurisdictions of manslaughter;<sup>17</sup> or if two persons mutually agree to kill themselves together, and the means employed to produce death take effect upon one only, the survivor is guilty of murder of the one who dies.<sup>18</sup> But if the one who encourages another to commit suicide is not present when the act is done, he is an accessory before the act and at common law escapes punishment because his principal cannot be first tried and convicted.<sup>19</sup> The abolition of the distinction between aiders and accessories in some jurisdictions, has, however, carried away this distinction, so that a person may now be convicted of murder for advising a suicide, whether absent or present at the time it is committed, provided the suicide is the result of his advice.<sup>20</sup>

V. PUNISHMENT.

Formerly by the common law of England, the penalty attached to an act of suicide consisted in giving the body of the criminal an ignominious burial in the highway, and in the forfeiture of his lands and chattels to the king;<sup>21</sup> but the law tempt to commit suicide an indictable offense, since no penalty of any kind attaches to suicide if actually committed); Com. v. Mink, 123 Mass. 422, 25 Am. Rep. 109; Com. v. Dennis, 105 Mass. 162 [distinguishing Com. v. Bowen, 13 Mass. 356, 7 Am. Dec. 154]; Com. v. Wright, 26 Pa. Co. Ct. 666 (holding that an attempt to commit suicide is not an offense under the constitution and statutes of Pennsylvania).

Dec. 154 (holding that where a prisoner under sentence of death was repeatedly urged and advised by another to commit suicide, and the person thus advised actually hanged himself, the court properly charged that the jury might convict of murder); Rex v. Dyson, R. & R. 389.

Proof that accused induced another to commit suicide by taking poison is sufficient to warrant his conviction for murder, but in such a case strict proof that the poison was taken by his procurement is required. Burnett v. People, 204 Ill. 208, 68 N. E. 505, 98 Am. St. Rep. 206, 66 L. R. A. 304.

In Ohio, suicide not being a crime, there can be no accessories or principals in the second degree; but this rule has no application where one is charged with administering poison, although to another intending to commit suicide. Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 146.

In Texas suicide is not a crime, and the punishment of persons connected with the suicide, by furnishing the means or other agencies, does not obtain. Grace v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 193, 69 S. W. 529.

17. State v. Ludwig, 70 Mo. 412, holding that one who is present aiding and abetting another to hang himself is guilty of manslaughter in the first degree.

Mink*, 123 Mass. 422, 25 Am. Rep. 109; Reg. v. Jessop, 16 Cox C. C. 204, 10 Cr. L. Mag. 862; Reg. v. Alison, 8 C. & P. 418, 34 E. C. L. 813; Rex v. Dyson, R. & R. 389.

If it be uncertain whether the deceased really killed himself or whether he came to his death by accident before the moment when he meant to destroy himself, it will not be murder in either. Rex v. Dyson, R. & R. 389.

20. Com. v. Hicks, 118 Ky. 637, 82 S. W. 265, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 511, holding that under Ky. St. (1903) § 1128, providing that in all felonies, accessories before the fact shall be liable to the same punishment as the principals, and may be prosecuted jointly with the principal or severally, although the principal be not taken or tried, an accessory before the fact to a suicide is guilty of murder as a principal in the second degree, although he was absent at the time of the suicide.

"The term is certainly a very comprehensive one, and is understood to apply to any proceeding in a court of justice, by which an individual pursues that remedy in a court of justice, which the law affords him." The modes of proceeding may be various, but if a right is litigated between parties in a court of justice, the proceeding by which the decision of the court is sought is a suit. Appleton v. Turnbull, 84 Me. 72, 76, 24 Atl. 592; Eckerle v. Wood, 95 Mo. App. 378, 384, 69 S. W. 45; Cass County v. Sarpy County, 83 Nebr. 435, 437, 119 N. W. 685; Rowan v. Shapard, 2 Tex. App. Civ. The term does not include: An appeal from an assessment of property for taxation. Upshur County v. Rich, 135 U. S. 467, 470, 10 S. Ct. 651, 34 L. ed. 196. An arbitration. Crook v. Chambers, 40 Ala. 239, 243; Henderson v. Adams, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 610, 612. An election contest. Williamson v. Lane, 52 Tex. 335, 345. An order of court authorizing an administrator to sell the lands of his intestate, remaining unexecuted. Ludlow v. Wade, 5 Ohio 494, 508. A petition to a county board for the allowance of a claim. Fuller v. Colfax County, 14 Fed. 177, 178, 4 McCrary 535; Gurnee v. Brunswick, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,872, 1 Hughes 270. Assessment proceedings for municipal improvements. In re Chicago, 64 Fed. 897, 900. A void attachment. Edwards v. Ross, 58 Ga. 147, 149. Proceeding by appeal, error, or review, unless context requires it. Franks v. Chapman, 61 Tex. 576, 580 [*cit*ing Abbott L. Dict.] Proceeding for review or a decree in equity. Wilt v. Stickney, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,854, 15 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 23. Proceeding in a county court for the alteration, establishment, or discontinuance of a public road. Hawkins v. Robinson, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 8, 9. Proceedings before railroad commissioners. Burlington v. Burlington Traction Co., 70 Vt. 491, 496, 41 Atl. 514. Proceedings for ecclesiastical, admiralty, and military courts under the English system of jurisprudence. Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 24, 23 L. ed. 524. Proceeding to foreclose a mortgage by advertisement. Hall v. Bartlett, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 297, 300, such being merely an "act" of the mortgagee.

"Suits at common law" in the constitutional guaranty of right to trial by jury embrace those suits which are not of equity or admiralty jurisdiction. Bradford v. Territory, 1 Okla. 366, 370, 34 Pac. 66; Boyd v. Clark, 13 Fed. 908, 910; Bains v. The James & Catherine, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 756, Baldw. 544; Baker v. Biddle, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 764, Baldw. 394; U. S. v. The Queen, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,107, 4 Ben. 237.

By "suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity" used in the federal statute conferring jurisdiction in such suits on the circuit courts is meant the old and settled proceedings as recognized at common law or in equity and in contradistinction to cases in admiralty or criminal law. U. S. v. Block, 121, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,610, 3 Biss. 208, 214. See also Brisenden v. Chamberlain, 53 Fed. 307, 309. The phrase "'suits' of a civil nature" in this statute is less comprehensive than "cases" used in the federal constitution, providing that the judicial power of the United States extends to all cases in law and equity arising under it. San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 13 Fed. 145, 147.

"Suits of a civil nature" in a statute relative to the jurisdiction of courts interpreted to mean private suits for private wrongs. See Koch v. Vanderhoof, 49 N. J. L. 619, 623, 9 Atl. 771.

"A suitor is but a witness, after all. Time was when a party litigant was not entitled to testify and must rely solely upon the evidence of others. A suitor, being but a witness, may be allowed to have the common infirmities of this kind, e. g., lapses of memory, inability to see things precisely as others do, and may not hear or may forget things actually said or done. ### I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

Proceedings have been classified as regular or summary.<sup>1</sup> When a court acts or professes to act upon common-law principles, its proceedings are called regular, and not summary, however expeditiously it may act;<sup>2</sup> but when a court of common-law jurisdiction is by some law authorized to act different from the common-law mode it is called a summary proceeding,<sup>3</sup> a summary proceeding being defined to be a form of trial in which the ancient established course of a legal proceeding is disregarded, especially in the matter of trial by jury, and in the case of the heavier crimes, presentment by a grand jury.<sup>4</sup> Summary proceedings are not, however, as might be inferred from this definition, exclusively criminal in their nature but are more often available to enforce civil rights.<sup>5</sup> They are generally held to be cumulative in their nature.<sup>6</sup>

II. STATUTES AUTHORIZING REMEDY.

tempt,<sup>7</sup> and suspension or disbarment of attorney,<sup>8</sup> express authority is essential to the validity of a summary proceeding,<sup>9</sup> and such proceedings being in derogation of common law must very closely conform to the statutes authorizing them, which are strictly construed and which are not extended by implication or intendment, and the mode of procedure indicated in the statute must be closely followed.<sup>10</sup>

B. Constitutionality. The question of the constitutionality of statutes authorizing summary proceedings arises more particularly in regard to infringement of the right to trial by jury guaranteed by the federal and state constitutions, and the due process of law clause. But these constitutions have been uniformly construed as not conferring a right to trial by jury in all cases and as not extending the right to cases in which it was not allowed at common law, but simply as guaranteeing that right unchanged as it existed at common law or by statute in the particular state at the time of the adoption of the constitution,<sup>11</sup> and since at common law the right to trial by jury did not exist in summary proceedings these proceedings are still triable without a jury, and are not within the constitutional guaranty.<sup>12</sup>

This question has been considered and so adjudicated with regard to summary proceedings to recover possession of land,<sup>13</sup> to remove public officers,<sup>14</sup> to disbar and otherwise proceed against attorneys,<sup>15</sup> to enforce penalties and forfeitures,<sup>16</sup> and with regard to statutes providing for summary trial of small offenses against the state or of violations of municipal ordinances.<sup>17</sup> Indeed, if the procedure under the statute is to be without a jury, a jury cannot be called.<sup>18</sup> But a legislature cannot authorize a summary procedure in controversies properly triable by jury at common law or according to the practice of the particular jurisdiction prior to the adoption of the constitution.<sup>19</sup>

III. PROCEDURE.

A. Process and Pleading. Procedure in summary proceedings is governed by the provisions of the statute or statutes under which the proceedings are instituted, and such provisions must be strictly complied with and followed.<sup>20</sup> Defendant must be notified or summoned to appear,<sup>21</sup> and must be apprised of the nature and purpose of the proceeding either by notice or motion,<sup>22</sup> or complaint or affidavit,<sup>23</sup> which must show all the facts necessary to support the proceeding.<sup>24</sup> Formal pleading is not, however, usually necessary in summary proceedings,<sup>25</sup> and unless the statute otherwise provides all defenses except the statute of limitations, set-off, or matters in abatement may be given in evidence without a plea.<sup>26</sup>

B. Record.<sup>27</sup> Every fact necessary to warrant and sustain a recovery or a legal conviction should appear in the record,<sup>28</sup> nothing being taken by intend-

Properly speaking, a summons is only a process when issued from the office of a court of justice requiring the person to whom it running in the name of the state, issuing out of court having jurisdiction of the action, directed to the ministerial officer, commanding him to execute the same, and certify to the court how he executes it;<sup>9</sup> a citation proceeding upon an information or complaint laid before the magistrate who issues the summons and conveying to the person cited the fact that the magistrate is satisfied that there is a prima facie case against him.<sup>10</sup> (Summons: In General, see PROCESS, 32 Cyc. 412. SUMMONS AND SEVERANCE. A remedy formerly allowed when more than one person was interested jointly in a cause of action or other proceeding; and one is addressed to attend the court for the purposes therein stated. Whitney v. Blackburn, 17 Oreg. 564, 571, 21 Pac. 874, 11 Am. St. Rep. 857.

At common law synonymous with "process" see Ackermann v. Berriman, 61 Misc. (N. Y.) 165, 169, 114 N. Y. Suppl. 937 [citing Nicholls Pr.].

In modern practice used interchangeably with "process" see Horton v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 26 Mo. App. 349, 355.

Under code procedure, it is not a process but merely a notice given by the plaintiff's attorney to the defendant that proceedings have been instituted, and that judgment therein will be taken against him if he fails to answer (Plano Mfg. Co. v. Kaufert, 86 Minn. 13, 16, 89 N. W. 1124; Whitewater First Nat. Bank v. Estenson, 68 Minn. 28, 70 N. W. 775); a notice to bring a party into court (Riesterer v. Horton Land, etc., Co., 160 Mo. 141, 155, 61 S. W. 238); the process used to commence a civil action (Whitney v. Blackburn, 17 Oreg. 564, 571, 21 Pac. 874, 11 Am. St. Rep. 857); the paper which gives jurisdiction to the court over the person of the party brought in (Adkins v. Moore, 43 S. C. 173, 175, 20 S. E. 985; Simmons v. Cochran, 29 S. C. 31, 33, 6 S. E. 859); a mere notice addressed to defendant giving him information that a certain proceeding has been commenced for a certain purpose (Prince v. Dickson, 39 S. C. 477, 484, 18 S. E. 33). See also Genobles v. West, 23 S. C. 154, 168.

"The office of a summons is to bring the defendant to whom it is directed into court to answer the petition of the plaintiff." Mansur v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 136 Mo. App. 726, 727, 118 S. W. 1193.

It is not a process or writ against the body; it is only a notice and therefore an exemption of jurors from process against their bodies does not cover it. Grove v. Campbell, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 7, 9.

The return being a part of the summons, it is sufficiently described by the word "summons." Casety v. Jamison, 35 Wash. 478, 480, 77 Pac. 800.

Process issuing on filing of a libel for divorce is held to be in the nature of a summons issued by a common-law court and not as in the nature of a citation from an ecclesiastical or civil court. It cannot, therefore, be served by a private person. Leavitt v. Leavitt, 135 Mass. 191, 192.

Notice of an application to admit to probate an alleged will, or to admit a copy of a foreign will with an authenticated probate thereof is not "a summons, notice, or advertisement . . . required to be published" in a "State Paper." In re Miller, 39 Cal. 550, 554.

9. Burrill L. Dict. [quoted in Horton v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 26 Mo. App. 349, 355].

10. Dixon v. Wells, 25 Q. B. D. 249, 257, 17 Cox C. C. 48, 54 J. P. 725, 59 L. J. M. C. 116, 62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 812, 38 Wkly. Rep. 606.

of them refused to participate in the legal assertion of the joint rights involved in the matter. In such case the other party issued a writ or summons by which the one who refused to proceed was brought before the court, and if he still refused, an order or judgment of severance was made by the court, whereby the party who wished to do so could sue alone.<sup>11</sup> (See APPEAL AND ERROR, 2 Cyc. 761.)

SUMMUM JUS, SUMMA INJURIA. A maxim meaning "Rigid law is the greatest injustice — or too strict interpretation of the law is frequently productive of the greatest injustice."<sup>12</sup>

SUMP. In mining parlance, a rude well or cistern in which the water in a mine is trained to collect, and from which it is pumped out of the mine by the steam engine which moves the cars in the shaft.<sup>13</sup>

SUM UP. A term which, ex vi termini, means to present all the proof to the consideration of the jury.<sup>14</sup> (See SUMMING UP, ante, p. 532.)

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

A. Definition and Distinctions. Sunday is a day of the week — the first day of the week;<sup>1</sup> a holy day;<sup>2</sup> the day set apart for cessation from all secular employment by the Christian world.<sup>3</sup> Legally considered, Sunday is merely a day of rest.<sup>4</sup> Although the words "Sabbath" and "Sunday" are not strictly synonymous, the one signifying the Jewish Sabbath, which is the seventh day of the week, and the other, the first day of the week,<sup>5</sup> yet the expressions "the first day of the week," the "Sabbath," the "Lord's day," and "Sunday" are used interchangeably and synonymously both in legislation,<sup>6</sup> and in common parlance.<sup>7</sup> It is not generally comprehended within the meaning of the term "holiday."<sup>8</sup>

B. Origin and Nature — 1. AS RELIGIOUS INSTITUTION. Sunday is among the first and most sacred institutions of the Christian religion.<sup>9</sup> The fourth commandment directs abstinence from labor on the Sabbath, but the day there designated is the seventh day of the week, and the injunction has been deemed to apply to the Hebrews only.<sup>10</sup> There is nothing in the New Testament relating to Sunday or the Sabbath;<sup>11</sup> but by common consent, the Christians at an early date substituted the first day of the week for the seventh, and have since observed it as a day of rest and worship, in commemoration of the resurrection.<sup>12</sup>

2. AS CIVIL INSTITUTION. As a day set apart for rest and cessation from labor, Sunday has long been recognized as a civil institution.<sup>13</sup>

C. Duration of Day. In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, Sunday is identical with the natural day, beginning at midnight between Saturday and Sunday and continuing twenty-four hours.<sup>14</sup> Under the statutes of some jurisdictions, the day begins at midnight and ends at sunset,<sup>15</sup> while in others, it comprises the solar day only, that is, from sunrise to sunset.<sup>16</sup> A reference in a statute to the evening of the Lord's day refers to Sunday evening, and not Saturday evening.<sup>17</sup>

II. STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A. Historical. Sunday legislation is more than fifteen centuries old. It originated in Rome in A. D. 321, when Constantine the Great passed an edict commanding all judges and inhabitants of cities to rest on the venerable day of the sun.<sup>18</sup> Sunday statutes were passed at an early date in England, and 29 Chas. II, c. 7, has been made the basis of similar legislation in the United States.<sup>19</sup>

A few colonial statutes regulating the observance of Sunday were enacted in the United States during the seventeenth century.<sup>20</sup>

B. Constitutionality<sup>21</sup> — 1. IN GENERAL. As statutes which designate Sunday as a day of rest and prohibit the doing of specified acts on that day have for their object the promotion of the health, peace, and good order of society by requiring man to take a periodical day of rest, they have, from the beginning, been constantly upheld as constitutional on the ground that they are within the domain of the police power.<sup>22</sup> They are essentially civil, and not religious, regulations, whose validity is neither strengthened nor weakened by the fact that the day of rest they enjoin is the Sabbath.<sup>23</sup> The few instances in which such

Sanitary reasons.—In People v. Bellet, 99 Mich. 151, 57 N. W. 1094, 41 Am. St. Rep. 589, 22 L. R. A. 696, it is said that the better reason for maintaining the police power to prohibit citizens from engaging in secular pursuits on Sunday is the necessity of such regulation as a sanitary measure; that experience has demonstrated that one day's rest is requisite for the health of most individuals, and not all individuals possess the power to observe a day of rest of their own volition. See to same effect State v. Petit, 74 Minn. 376, 77 N. W. 225 [followed in State v. Weiss, 97 Minn. 125, 105 N. W. 1127; State v. Justus, 91 Minn. 447, 98 N. W. 325, 103 Am. statutes have been held to be invalid are cases where a single class of persons has been singled out and legislated against, and the classification was so arbitrary and the discrimination so unreasonable as to fall under the head of class legislation.<sup>24</sup>

2. AS AFFECTED BY SPECIFIC CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS. Statutes of this character have been held not to abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens;<sup>25</sup> affect vested rights;<sup>26</sup> deny the equal protection of the laws;<sup>27</sup> or to deprive a person of his liberty or property without due process of law.<sup>28</sup> Neither are they obnoxious as class legislation,<sup>29</sup> nor do they invade the religious liberty and the freedom of conscience guaranteed by the constitution, because no exception is made in favor of persons who observe the seventh day of the week as their Sabbath.<sup>30</sup> A statute is not unconstitutional because it excepts from its operation those who observe a day other than Sunday as the Sabbath;<sup>31</sup> or because it excepts such person as to servile labor only, and not as to the selling of goods.<sup>32</sup> Of course the statute, to be valid, must not contravene constitutional provisions that no bill shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in the title.<sup>33</sup>

3. CANADIAN ACTS. Legislation in regard to the profanation of the Lord's Day is criminal legislation, and as the British North America act placed the criminal law under the exclusive authority of the parliament of Canada, any attempt of the provincial legislatures to amend the existing ante-confederation legislation or enact new legislation is ultra vires.<sup>34</sup>

4. PROVISION FOR PENALTY. The failure to provide for a maximum penalty for the first offense does not render the law unconstitutional.<sup>35</sup>

5. AMBIGUITY. A statute making it unlawful to engage in any game of base-ball on Sunday "where any fee is charged" is not void for uncertainty and ambiguity.<sup>36</sup>

6. WHO MAY QUESTION. A defendant who does not assert that he belongs to the class that observes the seventh day of the week as Sunday is not in a position to assert the invalidity of the statute because of the lack of such exception.<sup>37</sup>

C. Construction.<sup>38</sup> The authorities are not harmonious as to whether statutes regulating the observance of the Sabbath should receive a strict or liberal construction. In some jurisdictions it is held that, as these statutes are penal, they are to be strictly construed and are not to be extended by construction;<sup>39</sup> while, in other jurisdictions, it is held that, as they are in harmony with the religious sentiment of the public, and also tend to promote public morals and good order, they must be liberally construed.<sup>40</sup> In the interpretation of such statutes the maxims of construction, in pari materia<sup>41</sup> and ejusdem generis,<sup>42</sup> apply.

against Sunday theatrical entertainments under a title, "To preserve the public peace and order on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday." Neuendorff v. Duryea, 69 N. Y. 557, 25 Am. Rep. 235 [affirming 6 Daly 276]. Also, when the Sunday legislation is part of a penal code, the title of the latter, "An act relative to crimes and punishments and proceedings in criminal cases," is sufficient, as the title of the act need not be a complete index thereof. In re Donnellan, 49 Wash. 460, 95 Pac. 1085. Where hunting and fishing have always associated together in the legislation of a state, they may be combined in the title of an act prohibiting them on Sunday. Com. v. Rothermel, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 648. See also STATUTES, 36 Cyc. 1017.

34. Atty.-Gen. v. Hamilton St. R. Co., [1903] A. C. 524, 72 L. J. P. C. 105, 89 L. T. Rep. N. S. 107, 19 T. L. R. 612 [followed in In re Legislation, etc., 35 Can. Sup. Ct. 581]; Reg. v. Halifax Electric Tramway Co., 30 Nova Scotia 469. Compare Re Greene, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 182, holding that until parliament legislates on the subject, the provinces have, each for itself, the same power.

Nist*, 9 Ohio St. 439, wherein a municipal ordinance was held void because of the absence of such an exception, although it did not appear from the record in the case that defendant was a person who conscientiously observed the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath day was observed by others.

41. See Grattan L. Gloss.

Thus a statute which prohibits the carrying on of one business only on Sunday, although in the form of an independent enactment, must be regarded as in pari materia with the general laws upon the same subject. Stanfeal v. State, 78 Ohio St. 24, 84 N. E. 419.

42. See 15 Cyc. 247; Grattan L. Gloss.

Thus where the statute, in addition to the general prohibition, enumerates specific classes of persons or acts, the doctrine of ejusdem generis is applicable in determining whether a person or act not specifically named is within the general prohibition. Eden Musee American Co. v. Bingham, 58 Misc. (N. Y.) 644, 108 N. Y. Suppl. 200 [reversed on other grounds in 125 N. Y. App. Div. 780, 110 N. Y. Suppl. 210]; People v. Finn, 57 Misc. (N. Y.) 659, 110 N. Y. D. Repeal. Sunday laws may be repealed not only by non-user,<sup>43</sup> but by implication, where subsequent statutes cover the same ground.<sup>44</sup> In one jurisdiction at least a section excepting those who observe the seventh day of the week may be repealed by reference to its title only and without reenacting the whole law.<sup>45</sup>

III. ACTS PROHIBITED.

A. In General. Statutes which make it unlawful to do certain acts on the Sabbath do not apply to government servants,<sup>46</sup> or to interstate commerce,<sup>47</sup> and it is doubtful whether they will be recognized in the maritime law.<sup>48</sup> However, a city cannot abrogate the general state law, by refusing to exercise its power to enforce it.<sup>49</sup> Although the closing of a public library on Sunday is in harmony with the spirit of the law,<sup>50</sup> the proprietors of a public navigation, in the absence of specific statutory authority, have no power to pass a by-law forbidding navigation on Sunday.<sup>51</sup>

B. Work and Labor <sup>52</sup> — 1. IN GENERAL. The statutes of nearly all jurisdictions prohibit the performance of work and labor in one's ordinary calling on the Sabbath.<sup>53</sup> Under these statutes the words "ordinary calling" mean that which the ordinary duties of the calling bring into continued action.<sup>54</sup> The words "labor" and "laboring" are used in their ordinary sense, and should not receive a strained construction.<sup>55</sup> Where the statute excepts works of necessity and charity,

Sale of intoxicating liquor.—It was held in Cortesy v. Territory, 6 N. M. 682, 30 Pac. 947, 19 L. R. A. 349, that a person selling intoxicating liquor on Sunday was engaged in "labor" within the meaning of the Sunday act. On the other hand it was held in Benson v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 609, 85 S. W. 800, that the isolated acts of a steward of labor performed on Sunday is not ipso facto illegal.<sup>56</sup> It is immaterial that the work or labor performed by defendant on Sunday is not at his usual place of business, provided it is work of his ordinary calling.<sup>57</sup>

2. BARBERING. Barbering is laboring within the meaning of general statutes prohibiting labor<sup>58</sup> or "worldly employment" on Sunday,<sup>59</sup> and is not generally considered a work of necessity.<sup>60</sup> However, it is not unlawful under a statute prohibiting the opening of any place of business for the purpose of trade or sale of goods, wares, and merchandise,<sup>61</sup> nor does it constitute a nuisance.<sup>62</sup> The mere keeping open of a barber shop, without performing any labor therein, does not violate a general law against Sabbath breaking.<sup>63</sup>

C. Business or Occupation<sup>64</sup> — 1. IN GENERAL. At common law all business other than judicial proceedings<sup>65</sup> could be lawfully transacted on Sunday.<sup>66</sup> However, the carrying on of one's usual business or occupation on Sunday is a club in separately selling two bottles of beer on Sunday did not constitute labor.

generally specifically prohibited by statutes, varying somewhat in their phraseology.<sup>67</sup> The evil aimed at is the engaging in one's usual business or accustomed pursuit, works of necessity and charity excepted, and when this exists, the law is violated.<sup>68</sup> It has been held that a single act in the exercise of one's usual avocation amounts to a violation of the law;<sup>69</sup> but every act done does not constitute a separate offense, as the offense consists in the exercise of an employment or business.<sup>70</sup> Of course it is necessary, in order to sustain a conviction, to show that the act or acts done come within the terms of the statute;<sup>71</sup> while, on the other

Disturbance of others.—The New Hampshire statute prohibits no acts to be done on Sunday except such as are done to the disturbance of others (Clough v. Shepherd, 31 N. H. 490); a disturbance, within the meaning of this statute, has been defined to be any business which withdraws the attention of others from the appropriate duties of the Sabbath and turns it to other things, regardless of whether the other persons present do or do not object to its performance (Varney v. French, 19 N. H. 233). "It is a matter of law, that, whether any one besides the plaintiff and the defendant was present or not, the sale was business of the plaintiff's secular calling, done 'to the disturbance of others.'" Thompson v. Williams, 58 N. H. 248, 249. In State v. Ryan, 80 Conn. 582, 69 Atl. 536, it was held that hand, if defendant seeks to justify his acts, they must be brought within the exception of the statute.<sup>72</sup>

2. KEEPING OPEN PLACE OF BUSINESS FOR PURPOSE OF TRAFFIC — a. In General. The statutes of many jurisdictions make it unlawful to keep open a place of business on Sunday for the purpose of traffic. Statutes which, in terms, prohibit the keeping open merely have been construed to mean that the prohibition is against the keeping open for purposes of traffic.<sup>73</sup> This "keeping open" for the purpose of doing business with the public indiscriminately is an offense in itself, separate and distinct from that of performing labor on the Sabbath,<sup>74</sup> and exceptions as to necessity and charity applying to the latter do not apply to the former.<sup>75</sup>

b. Elements of Offense. A sale is not necessary to constitute the offense,<sup>76</sup> and evidence showing a sale does not conclusively establish a keeping open for the purpose of traffic.<sup>77</sup> The offense is complete when there exists a readiness on the part of the proprietor to carry on his usual business in his store,<sup>78</sup> and the public is afforded access thereto, even though part or all of the doors and entrances are closed.<sup>79</sup> In general the word "shop" is not the legal equivalent of the word there was a sale on Sunday. New Castle v. Cummings, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 443.

Driving cattle.—In Triggs v. Lester, L. R. 1 Q. B. 259, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 701, 14 Wkly. Rep. 279, it was held that the "driving or conducting" cattle intended in a statute prohibiting such on Sunday is the ordinary driving, when the cattle themselves are driven, and does not include their conveyance in a van driven with horses.

Collection of camp-meeting fee.—The collection of a compulsory admission fee at the entrance gate to camp-meeting grounds on Sunday is worldly employment or business, prohibited by the act of April 22, 1794, as it does not stand on the same plane as subscriptions solicited or collected during a religious meeting. Com. v. Weidner, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 437.

Piloting canal-boat.—It is a violation of the Pennsylvania act of April 22, 1794, to pilot a canal-boat laden with coal upon a part of the Schuylkill navigation on the Lord's day, in discharge of the party's ordinary occupation, even though the locks are required to be kept open for lawful travel. *Scully v. Keeping "wide open" unnecessary.—Thus, in Com. v. Kirshen, 194 Mass. 151, 152, 80 N. E. 2, the court, per Morton, J., said: "A shop, warehouse or workhouse may be kept open so as to come within the prohibition of the statute without being kept 'wide open,' or kept open in the same manner and for which it is the same purposes in which and for which it is kept open for business on week days."

Delivery of goods only.—In Goldstein v. Vaughan, [1897] 1 Q. B. 549, 61 J. P. 277, 66 L. J. Q. B. 380, 76 L. T. Rep. N. S. 262, 46 Wkly. Rep. 399, it was held that a workshop was not open for traffic when all that was done was that customers with whom the business arrangements had been previously made brought or fetched away their things on Sunday.

Admission limited to club members.—A social club, to which none but members are admitted, which supplies its members with

“store,” as used in a statute making it unlawful to keep “open store,”<sup>80</sup> although a butcher shop has been considered a “store,”<sup>81</sup> as has also a fruit stand.<sup>82</sup> Where the statute enumerates the different classes of proprietors which are subject to its provisions, the classes are to be construed together in determining the meaning of any one.<sup>83</sup>

c. Statutory Exceptions.<sup>84</sup> Where the statute contains no exceptions, the nature of the business of defendant is immaterial, and the fact that it is a work of necessity, or charity, or that it is not unlawful in itself, constitutes no defense.<sup>85</sup> In construing the statutory exceptions, the ordinary signification of the words used controls.<sup>86</sup>

d. Persons Liable. The ownership of the store or shop is immaterial. The person who is in charge and control keeps it open within the meaning of the law and is liable therefor.<sup>87</sup> A partner, even though he is only nominally so, is amenable in his individual capacity.<sup>88</sup>

e. Violation of Other Statutes. In a prosecution for keeping open a shop on the Sabbath, it is no defense that the business transacted is an offense under another statute.<sup>89</sup>

3. OPERATION OF TRAINS AND PUBLIC CONVEYANCES — a. Passenger Trains. The running and operating of a passenger railroad train on the Sabbath has been held to be a work of necessity,<sup>90</sup> and is expressly permitted under the legislation of at least one state.<sup>91</sup> On the other hand, it has been considered a violation of a

Modification of business no defense.—The facts that on Sunday there are fewer electric lights in a “penny arcade” exhibiting pictures than on other days of the week, and no music is played as on other days, constitutes no defense to a prosecution for keeping open on the Sabbath. *Fitchtberg v. License no defense.—The Texas Sunday law, directed against the keeping open on Sunday of a place of business for the purpose of traffic, is not suspended as to a licensed liquor dealer by reason of his license. Bennett v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 294, 92 S. W. 415.

E. 459, holding that persons who simply deal in the products of bakeries are not bakers, and that a person whose wife sometimes baked a few cookies and ginger snaps which he sold with bread, bought elsewhere, was not a baker.

The exemption of public markets from a Sunday closing law does not include grocery stores situated within those markets, such stores when located outside the limits of the markets being required to be closed. State v. Fernandez, 39 La. Ann. 538, 2 So. 233.

Prohibited and unprohibited business in same store.—An ordinance against keeping open, which permits the keeping open for the sale of certain specified articles, and which limits the privilege to those dealing exclusively in such articles, does not authorize a dealer, who conducts both the prohibited and unprohibited business, to keep open for the conduct of both (Fitchtberg v. Atlanta, 126 Ga. 62, 54 S. E. 933), although it is lawful for him to keep open for the sale of the unprohibited articles (Penniston v. Newnan, 117 Ga. 700, 45 S. E. 65).

statute forbidding the performance of any worldly employment or business whatsoever on the Lord's day.<sup>92</sup>

b. Freight Trains. While the legislation of some jurisdictions permits the running of freight trains on the Sabbath,<sup>93</sup> in others, it is expressly prohibited.<sup>94</sup> Under statutes prohibiting the running of freight trains on the Sabbath, the permission of the railroad company is an essential ingredient of the offense;<sup>95</sup> but it is no justification that the company has issued general orders to its employees not to run trains on Sunday, without also showing that in the particular instance the rules were violated without the sanction of the officer indicted.<sup>96</sup> The superintendent of transportation, or the officer having charge of that department of the railroad, is the only person liable to indictment.<sup>97</sup> Where it is provided that trains leaving their starting point on Saturday night may run through to their destination, providing they reach it before a certain hour on Sunday morning according to schedule, detention by unavoidable circumstances is a good excuse for not reaching their destination until after the hour stated,<sup>98</sup> provided there was good faith in establishing and maintaining the schedule.<sup>99</sup>

c. Street Cars. In regard to street railway cars, the authorities are conflicting, some holding that the operation of such cars on the Sabbath contravenes the Sunday statutes,<sup>1</sup> or constitutes a breach of the peace,<sup>2</sup> while others hold it to be a work of necessity.<sup>3</sup>

e. Canal-Boats. It seems that, in one jurisdiction, it is unlawful to pilot a canal-boat on Sunday.<sup>5</sup>

f. Other Public Conveyances. The driving of an omnibus or other public conveyance on Sunday, for hire, has been held to come within a statute prohibiting worldly employment.<sup>6</sup>

4. PUBLICATION AND SALE OF NEWSPAPERS. Statutes directed against the doing of any labor, business, or worldly employment on Sunday have been held to apply to the publication, circulation, and sale of newspapers,<sup>7</sup> such business not being regarded as a work of necessity or charity.<sup>8</sup> The sale of newspapers has also been held to be within the terms of a statute prohibiting the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise on Sunday.<sup>9</sup> While the carrying about and selling of newspapers on Sunday may violate such statutes, it does not constitute a breach of the peace, although the "crying" of the papers on the public streets does.<sup>10</sup>

D. Sports and Amusements — 1. IN GENERAL. To make the indulgence on Sunday in the various sports and amusements, such as hunting, fishing, and theatrical performances, unlawful, a specific statutory prohibition is necessary, as these things are not within the meaning of statutes prohibiting common labor or worldly employment.<sup>11</sup> However, the participation in such acts is expressly prohibited by the statute of many states. When so prohibited, the words naming the sports or amusements are used in their ordinary meaning. Thus statutes using the word "sporting" or similar words do not comprehend driving for pleasure or to make a social visit;<sup>12</sup> nor does it include bathing in the surf.<sup>13</sup> The general rule of statutory construction that where general words follow particular ones they are to be construed as applicable to things or persons of a like nature applies.<sup>14</sup> of violating statutes against "laboring,"<sup>25</sup> or keeping open a "place of business,"<sup>26</sup> the act of selling tickets not being considered a work of necessity or mercy.<sup>27</sup> Every performer is amenable to the statutory provisions.<sup>28</sup>

4. GAMING. A statute containing a general prohibition against gaming on Sunday embraces every species of gaming for money.<sup>29</sup> Playing and betting at cards comes within the meaning of a statute prohibiting a housekeeper from suffering gaming on Sunday,<sup>30</sup> but not within a statute prohibiting public games,<sup>31</sup> or common labor.<sup>32</sup> Under the statutes of some jurisdictions playing at a game with dice or dominoes at a private residence is not an offense.<sup>33</sup>

5. SHOOTING. To engage in shooting within the meaning of an act prohibiting it on Sunday, it is not necessary that the shooting be repeated; one act is sufficient.<sup>34</sup> It is not unlawful to shoot at a mad dog on Sunday.<sup>35</sup>

6. FISHING. Unless enjoined by statutes, fishing on Sunday is not unlawful.<sup>36</sup> However, when it is prohibited, it is unlawful to fish regardless of the place or circumstances.<sup>37</sup>

E. Works of Necessity and Charity<sup>38</sup> — 1. IN GENERAL. All the statutes regulating the observance of Sunday and prohibiting secular labor and business on that day except from their operation works partaking of necessity or charity.<sup>39</sup>

2. NECESSITY — a. Meaning of Term. The question of what constitutes a work of necessity within the meaning of the Sunday statutes has been often mooted and much discussed in the authorities.<sup>40</sup> The definition adopted by the courts as most satisfactory is the one evolved in an early Massachusetts case,<sup>41</sup> to the effect that the necessity meant is not a physical and absolute necessity, but a moral fitness or propriety of the work and labor done under the circumstances of each particular case.<sup>42</sup>

General rule impossible.—In Johnston v. Com., 22 Pa. St. 102, it is said that it is impossible to lay down any general rule as to works of necessity and charity; that the exigencies of human life which demand works of necessity and charity are so numerous and so diversified by attending circumstances as to defy classification; but that as rest and the public worship of Almighty God are the primary objects of the institution of Sunday, both as a divine and civil appointment, "no means reasonably necessary to these ends can be regarded as prohibited." To the same effect see Ungericht v. State, 119 Ind. 379, 21 N. E. 1082, 12 Am. St. Rep. 419; Reg. v. Albertie, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 356.

safety;<sup>60</sup> nor to do work in shipping goods, where navigation for the season may close at any time.<sup>61</sup> The property saved from destruction need not be of great value if the circumstances of the owner make it of relatively large value to him.<sup>62</sup> However, it is only in case of actual loss or injury by reason of the delay that it becomes a work of necessity to save the property.<sup>63</sup>

(VI) ACTS TO SECURE PUBLIC SAFETY. Any work necessary to be done to secure the public safety, such as the safe-keeping of a felon<sup>64</sup> or the repairing of a public highway or railroad, is a necessity.<sup>65</sup> This rule does not include the making of the ordinary repairs which can be done with equal safety on any other day.<sup>66</sup>

(VII) AVOIDABLE ACTS. A necessity voluntarily brought about by the actor himself, and which could have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary discretion, is not allowable as a defense.<sup>67</sup>

(VIII) TRAVELING. As to whether traveling on Sunday is a necessity, within the meaning of the Sunday statutes, is dependent upon its moral fitness and propriety.<sup>68</sup> It has been considered morally fit and proper, and hence necessary to ride or walk for the purpose of visiting one's parents, children, or other relatives;<sup>69</sup> friends or relatives who are ill,<sup>70</sup> or to procure medicine for a sick child.<sup>71</sup> It is also an act of necessity to travel to a religious meeting<sup>72</sup> or a funeral.<sup>73</sup> It is lawful to ride or walk in the open air on Sunday for exercise;<sup>74</sup> to take a visitor home in a sleigh on a wintry night;<sup>75</sup> and for a servant to travel for the purpose of preparing needful food for her employer.<sup>76</sup> The traveling cannot be considered unlawful when it is necessary to the performance of a lawful contract.<sup>77</sup> However, the necessity must be a real and not a fancied one, as it is the actual existence of the necessity and not the belief of the traveler that excuses.<sup>78</sup> It is unlawful to travel on Sunday for the purpose of obtaining one's mail;<sup>79</sup> of ascertaining whether a house is ready for occupancy,<sup>80</sup> of either making one's self or allowing a companion to make a social call,<sup>81</sup> or of supplying a market with fresh meat on Monday.<sup>82</sup>

(IX) TRANSMITTAL OF TELEGRAMS. The transmittal of a telegraphic message concerning ordinary business or social affairs cannot be regarded as a work of necessity.<sup>83</sup> However, a telegram announcing the death or sickness of a third person and requesting the presence of the addressee has been held to create such a moral necessity as to come within the statutory exception.<sup>84</sup> Likewise the sending of a message by a husband to his wife explaining his absence is a necessity within the meaning of the statute.<sup>85</sup>

3. CHARITY.<sup>86</sup> The word "charity," as used in the Sunday statutes, is intended to be understood in its ordinary sense, and to denote something more than mere alms-giving.<sup>87</sup> It is active goodness,<sup>88</sup> and includes everything which proceeds from a sense of moral duty, or a feeling of kindness and humanity, and is intended wholly for the purpose of the relief or comfort of another, and not for one's own benefit or pleasure.<sup>89</sup> However, the act done must be itself charitable. The act of ascertaining whether the charity is needful is not the charity contemplated.<sup>90</sup> It is well settled that the making or soliciting of a subscription toward the purchase or construction of a church building is a work of charity.<sup>91</sup> Traveling on the Sabbath is sometimes justified not only on the ground of necessity,<sup>92</sup> but also as a deed of charity.<sup>93</sup> It has also been held the taking of a recognizance on Sunday is a charitable act.<sup>94</sup>

F. Acts of Persons Observing Other Day. The fact that a person conscientiously observes the seventh rather than the first day of the week as the Sabbath constitutes no defense to a prosecution for performing labor or transacting business on Sunday, where the statute creates no exception in favor of that class of persons.<sup>95</sup> Even where there is such an exception in the statute, it does not apply to the offense of keeping open shop or store,<sup>96</sup> nor does it include a person who believes that the seventh day is the Sabbath, but does not observe it as such.<sup>97</sup>

IV. VALIDITY OF PRIVATE ACTS AND TRANSACTIONS.

A. Incomplete Transaction. Where a portion of a transaction takes place on Sunday, but it is not completed on that day so as to become effective, it is not vitiated by the illegal, and perhaps punishable, acts of those concerned in it.<sup>98</sup>

B. Gifts. As a gift does not embrace the essentials of a contract, it is not void, when executed on Sunday, under a statute declaring void contracts made on that day,<sup>99</sup> or prohibiting work or business in one's ordinary calling.<sup>1</sup>

C. Acts Affecting Past Indebtedness. The payment of a debt on Sunday discharges it, if the creditor retains the money paid;<sup>2</sup> but a promise or part payment made on Sunday to pay a debt already barred by the statute of limitations is not sufficient to remove the bar.<sup>3</sup> It is not an act of bankruptcy for a debtor, who has appointed Sunday to settle an account with one of his creditors, to refuse to keep the appointment.<sup>4</sup>

D. Competency as Evidence. An admission made on Sunday is competent evidence, as it relates to a previously incurred liability, and the mere telling the truth on the Sabbath is not forbidden.<sup>5</sup> And a conversation had on a Sunday is competent for the purpose of explaining a later conversation and showing its meaning.<sup>6</sup> However, a book-account dated on Sunday is not competent,<sup>7</sup> unless it is shown that the sale was in fact made on another day.<sup>8</sup>

E. Acts of Benevolent or Religious Societies. The proceedings and transactions of benevolent and religious societies performed on Sunday are valid.<sup>9</sup> The rule has no application to societies not of a religious or charitable nature.<sup>10</sup>

F. Giving of Notice.<sup>11</sup> In general a notice given on Sunday is void and does not change or affect the rights of the parties.<sup>12</sup> The irregularity is not waived by the reception of the notice without objection,<sup>13</sup> but action upon the notice may invest it with validity.<sup>14</sup>

were as valid as those made on any other day.<sup>16</sup> Neither were contracts for the performance of labor or the sale of goods on Sunday illegal.<sup>17</sup>

B. By Statute. The doctrine that contracts made on Sunday are void depends therefore alone on statutory enactments.<sup>18</sup> No principle is more firmly established or better recognized than that a contract which violates a statute is void.<sup>19</sup> Hence a contract made on Sunday in violation of a statute is an illegal contract and void between the parties.<sup>20</sup> It is well settled that a contract entered into on Sunday does not violate a statute forbidding "labor" on that day and hence is not void.<sup>21</sup> The instances in which contracts or other written instruments have been held to be void because they violate such statutes are those of negotiable instruments, bonds, and other specialties.<sup>22</sup> However, contracts executed on Sunday have been held to be void under statutes prohibiting worldly

Execution before sunset.—Under Me. Disturbance of others.—In Illinois a contract made on Sunday is not void under Ill. Cr. Code, § 261, unless the peace and good order of society is thereby interfered with. Richmond v. Moore, 107 Ill. 429, 47 Am. Rep. 445; Ryan v. Schutt, 135 Ill. App. 554. However in New Hampshire a contract made on Sunday is held to be within a statute prohibiting work, labor, or business of a person's secular calling done to the disturbance of others upon the Lord's day. employment or business on that day,<sup>23</sup> and other statutes more comprehensive in their terms.<sup>24</sup>

C. Contracts Made in Another State. As the enforcement of a contract executed on Sunday is not contrary to public policy or good morals, the general rule that a contract valid where made is valid everywhere<sup>25</sup> obtains, and the contract will be enforced in a state other than the one in which it was made, where it is not shown that it violates the statutes of the state where made.<sup>26</sup> When it is shown to violate the statutes of the state where made, it will not be enforced by the courts of other states,<sup>27</sup> or by the courts of the state where delivered, although final acceptance was made in another state.<sup>28</sup> Likewise, as the Sunday laws of a state have no extraterritorial force, the courts of one state will enforce a contract made on Sunday within its borders, but which contemplates performance in another state, where the performance is not shown to violate the law of such other state.<sup>29</sup>

D. Nature of Contract — 1. EXECUTED AND EXECUTORY. In some cases the validity of a Sunday contract has been made to turn upon the question whether it was executory or executed, it being held void if executory,<sup>30</sup> and valid if executed.<sup>31</sup> On the other hand, there is authority for the proposition that the fact that the contract is executory or executed is not to be considered in determining its validity.<sup>32</sup>

2. CONTRACTS NOT WITHIN ORDINARY CALLING OF PARTIES. Under the statutes of some jurisdictions, a contract made on Sunday outside of the ordinary calling of the parties is valid.<sup>33</sup>

3. CONTRACTS FOR PURPOSE OF NECESSITY OR CHARITY. A contract made on Sunday for the purpose of necessity or charity is valid.<sup>34</sup> Of course if the act contemplated cannot be classed as a work of necessity or charity the contract is void.<sup>35</sup>

4. SPECIFIC CONTRACTS CONSIDERED— a. Transportation of Goods and Live Stock. The violation of the Sunday laws by a shipper or common carrier in contracting either on Sunday for the transportation of goods or live stock or so that their transportation on Sunday is contemplated is no defense to an action against the common carrier for their loss or for delay. The Sunday laws are not applicable to such transactions as, after the goods are received, the law imposes the obligation to transport and deliver safely and without delay.<sup>36</sup> However, plaintiff will not be permitted to show the Sunday market price at the destination in order to increase his damages.<sup>37</sup>

b. Hiring Horse. The letting of a horse on Sunday, or the making of a contract to let a horse on Sunday, by a livery-stable keeper, for purposes of business or pleasure, and not of charity or necessity, is illegal and void.<sup>38</sup> But it has been held that the contract is not void, unless the liveryman knows that the customer intends to use the horse for pleasure and not charity or necessity.<sup>39</sup>

c. Use of Land. Agreements made on the Lord's day for the use and occupation of land have been held to be void.<sup>40</sup>

d. Loaning Money. The loaning of money on the Sabbath has been held to come within the prohibition of statutes directed against the transaction of secular business on that day.<sup>41</sup>

e. Creation of Agency. Likewise agencies created on Sunday have been held to be void as constituting secular business.<sup>42</sup>

f. Extension of Time. A parol agreement extending the time of payment of a mortgage debt, entered into on Sunday, has been held to be void.<sup>43</sup>

g. Partnership Agreement. An agreement for the formation of a partnership in presenti is void when made on Sunday.<sup>44</sup>

h. Sale or Exchange of Property. A sale or exchange of property on Sunday is quite generally held to be in violation of the Sunday statutes and void.<sup>45</sup> It is not void under statutes prohibiting merely the keeping open of a place of business,<sup>46</sup> the performance of labor,<sup>47</sup> or the exposure of property for sale, where the sale is privately made.<sup>48</sup> Of course if the contract has been really consummated on a previous day it is valid,<sup>49</sup> and if part is valid and part invalid, and the contract is severable, the invalid part will not invalidate the rest.<sup>50</sup> A sale on Sunday is valid as to an innocent second purchaser.<sup>51</sup>

E. Negotiation on Sunday. The mere carrying on of negotiations on Sunday will not invalidate a contract completed on a secular day. The final consummation of the contract on Sunday is necessary to bring it within the prohibition of the Sunday statutes.<sup>52</sup>

Delivery on Sunday of goods sold on Saturday constitutes a violation of an ordinance prohibiting the sale of merchandise on Sunday, as a delivery is essential to the consummation of the sale. McDowell v. Murfreesboro, 103 Tenn. 726, 54 S. W. 976.

Waiver of delivery.—Where, under the statutes of a state, parties cannot make a valid contract on Sunday, they cannot agree on Sunday to waive the delivery of the property attempted to be sold. Calhoun v. Phillips, 87 Ga. 482, 13 S. E. 593.

Delaware.—Terry v. Platt, 1 Pennew. 185, 40 Atl. 243.

F. Execution of Instrument on Sunday — 1. IN GENERAL. In general a contract or other instrument completely executed on Sunday is void and not enforceable,<sup>53</sup> even though dated on a secular day.<sup>54</sup> This rule applies only where the execution is complete. An instrument requiring delivery is not void because signed on Sunday.<sup>55</sup> Neither is an instrument actually entered into on a secular day void by reason of its being mistakenly dated on a Sunday.<sup>56</sup> Before the contract will be declared void, it must appear that the party seeking to enforce it had some voluntary agency in consummating it on that day.<sup>57</sup>

2. GUARANTIES. A guaranty or agreement of indemnity executed on Sunday is void.<sup>58</sup> But in accordance with the rule above stated<sup>59</sup> the execution must be complete on Sunday to bring it within the rule.<sup>60</sup>

L. 31, where the giving and acceptance of the guaranty was not considered to be within the ordinary calling of the parties.

Guaranty for lease.—A guaranty for the fulfilment of a lease executed and delivered on Sunday is void, although the lease itself be not executed until a week day following. Merriam v. Stearns, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 257.

59. See supra, V, F, 1.

60. Diamond Glass Co. v. Gould, (N. J.

3. ASSIGNMENTS. The annexation of a schedule on Sunday to an assignment made on a prior secular day does not invalidate it.<sup>61</sup> Neither is an assignment invalidated by its partial execution on Sunday.<sup>62</sup> A third person, not a party to the contract of assignment, cannot dispute its validity on the ground that it was made on Sunday.<sup>63</sup>

4. BILLS AND NOTES. Under the statutes of most jurisdictions, a promissory note executed on Sunday is void as between the parties.<sup>64</sup> The indorsement of a promissory note on Sunday, by an accommodation surety or otherwise, is also void,<sup>65</sup> except where it does not appear on the face of the indorsement that it was made on Sunday and the note is sought to be enforced by a bona fide holder without notice.<sup>66</sup> Likewise the indorsement of a bill of exchange on Sunday renders it void in the hands of one not a bona fide holder,<sup>67</sup> but the mere drawing of the bill on Sunday does not invalidate it, in the absence of evidence showing its acceptance on that day.<sup>68</sup> Where the note is merely signed on Sunday but not delivered until some other day, it is valid.<sup>69</sup> And where it is dated on Sunday, but in fact was made and delivered on a week day, it is valid.<sup>70</sup> The fact that the note was executed on Sunday is not a defense against a bona fide holder for value and without notice, where there is nothing on the face of the instrument to indicate that fact.<sup>71</sup> Although a recovery cannot be had on a note executed on Sunday, one may be had on the contract which is the consideration of the note, when it was entered into on a secular day;<sup>72</sup> but not when it too was made on Sunday.<sup>73</sup>

5. BONDS. A bond executed on Sunday is not binding on the surety.<sup>74</sup> However, the validity of a bond duly executed on a secular day is not affected by the fact that some steps toward its execution were taken on Sunday.<sup>75</sup> The date of its actual execution and not the date of the bond controls.<sup>76</sup>

6. CONVEYANCES. The execution of mortgages,<sup>77</sup> deeds, or leases on Sunday render them void under the statutes of most jurisdictions.<sup>78</sup> It has also been held that a contract to sell land made on Sunday is void.<sup>79</sup> As a deed does not take effect until delivery, it is valid when delivered on a secular day, although signed and sealed or acknowledged on Sunday.<sup>80</sup> Where the deed is actually executed on Sunday, but is dated on a preceding day, the grantor cannot assert its invalidity against a subsequent bona fide purchaser.<sup>81</sup> However, the fact that the certificate of acknowledgment bears a secular date does not validate a mortgage actually executed on Sunday.<sup>82</sup>

Execution after sunset.—In Massachusetts, when the statutory prohibition of worldly business on Sunday extends only to sunset, the execution of a mortgage on Sunday evening does not affect its validity. Tracy v. Jenks, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 465.

Executed contract.—It was held in Greene v. Godfrey, 44 Me. 25, and Ellis v. Hammond, 57 Ga. 179, that a deed fully executed upon Sunday is sufficient to pass the title. And in Rosenbaum v. Hayes, 10 N. D. 311, 86 N. W. 973, it was held that the acquisition of possession by a factor of property on Sunday did not defeat his lien based thereon, as a Sunday transfer of property, although prohibited by law, is effective so far as executed.

Canada.—A mortgage of personal property does not come within the meaning of 8 Vict. c. 45, § 2, prohibiting sales and purchases on Sunday, and therefore is not void when made on Sunday. Wilt v. Lai, 7 U. C. Q. B. 535. See also Lai v. Stall, 6 U. C. Q. B. 506.

Thus, where the deed was handed to the grantee on Sunday, the acknowledgment, recording, and transmission of the deed to the grantee on secular days are mere incidents of the transaction, and do not render the

7. INSURANCE. It is true in regard to insurance policies and applications as in the case of other contracts, that the antedating or post-dating of a contract executed on Sunday does not remove the illegality.<sup>83</sup> On the other hand, a policy executed and delivered on a week day is valid, although dated on Sunday.<sup>84</sup> The Sunday law is no excuse for not keeping a watchman in the building insured according to the terms of the policy,<sup>85</sup> nor does it affect the recall of a policy on Sunday.<sup>86</sup>

8. MARRIAGE CONTRACT. A marriage contract entered into on Sunday is valid, if subsequently recognized by the parties.<sup>87</sup>

9. WILLS. A will does not come within the meaning and intent of the Sunday statutes and is valid when executed on the Sabbath.<sup>88</sup>

G. Delivery on Sunday. In general the delivery of an instrument on Sunday completes its execution and renders it invalid,<sup>89</sup> although it has been held that the delivery of a deed on Sunday is sufficient to pass the title.<sup>90</sup> Bills of exchange and promissory notes should not be delivered on Sunday, although an agent may, on a Sunday, legally receive an authority to deliver on a subsequent day;<sup>91</sup> and the delivery of a note in satisfaction of a guaranty is not invalidated by the fact that the note was handed to the transferee on Sunday, the contract having been made on another day.<sup>92</sup> The leaving of a note at a designated place on Sunday and the calling for it by the payee on a secular day does not constitute a delivery on Sunday, so as to invalidate the note.<sup>93</sup> A delivery on Sunday is not sufficient to take a contract out of the statute of frauds.<sup>94</sup>

H. Ratification. The authorities are not harmonious on the question whether a contract, invalid because entered into on Sunday, may be rendered valid and enforceable by ratification on a subsequent secular day. The view taken in many jurisdictions is that Sunday contracts are wholly void and incapable of ratification;<sup>95</sup> while in others they are not viewed as being tainted with deed valid. Jacobson v. Bentzler, 127 Wis. 566, 107 N. W. 7, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1052, 4 L. R. A. N. S. 1151.

any general illegality, but, being illegal only as to the time in which they are entered into, they are capable of being made valid by affirmation and ratification on a subsequent day.<sup>96</sup> But even in those jurisdictions where a Sunday contract is considered incapable of ratification, it is held that there is nothing to prevent the parties from making the same contract over again on a week day, and that the consideration emanating from the tainted contract is sufficient to form the foundation for a new express promise on which recovery may be had.<sup>97</sup> In those jurisdictions where a ratification of a Sunday contract is sustained, a contract is held to be ratified by complying with its terms;<sup>98</sup> by making and accepting a

delivery of the property;<sup>99</sup> by partial payments;<sup>1</sup> by an express promise to pay,<sup>2</sup> especially when coupled with a retention of the property sold;<sup>3</sup> by the giving or delivery of a note<sup>4</sup> or a receipt;<sup>5</sup> by the collection of a check;<sup>6</sup> and by demanding payment.<sup>7</sup> It is not ratified by mere acquiescence,<sup>8</sup> by a request to forbear suit,<sup>9</sup> by retaining a payment after a demand for its return,<sup>10</sup> by allowing the vendor credit on an account, of which he does not take advantage,<sup>11</sup> or by a declaration of an intention to pay, when supported by no consideration.<sup>12</sup>

I. Rescission and Rights of Third Persons — 1. RESCISSION — a. On Sunday. The rescission of a contract stands on a level with the making of a contract so far as the Sunday statutes are concerned, and, when done on Sunday, is void.<sup>13</sup>

b. Of Contract Made on Sunday. It is the rule in a few jurisdictions that a contract void because made on Sunday may be rescinded,<sup>14</sup> provided the party rescinding restore to the other party whatever he has received under the agreement.<sup>15</sup> However, the weight of authority is to the effect that such a contract may not be rescinded on account of its illegality, as the parties are in pari delicto and the court will refuse its aid to either. Neither party may recover back the property or the purchase-money.<sup>16</sup> cannot dispute its validity on the ground that it was made on Sunday.<sup>17</sup> Neither is a sale of a chattel made on Sunday invalid as to an innocent second purchaser.<sup>18</sup> The sale or contract, when untainted with fraud, is good as against the creditors of the vendor;<sup>19</sup> and the property sold is no longer subject to attachment as his property.<sup>20</sup>

J. Performance of Contract on Sunday.<sup>21</sup> A contract requiring or contemplating the doing of an act on Sunday which is within the prohibition of the Sunday statutes is absolutely void and unenforceable.<sup>22</sup> However, where the contract does not require performance on Sunday, but simply names Sunday as a means of estimating the compensation, it is valid.<sup>23</sup> Where no time for performance is stipulated by the parties, performance on Sunday cannot be legally demanded.<sup>24</sup> And where the contract does not in terms require the performance of labor on Sunday, and it is doubtful if it contemplated such performance, it will be presumed that it did not.<sup>25</sup> No implied promise based on work done on the Lord's day will be recognized by the courts.<sup>26</sup> Although the contract also contemplates the doing of other acts on secular days, the illegality taints the whole contract and renders it void.<sup>27</sup> Although performance on Sunday of a valid contract will not be treated as a nullity,<sup>28</sup> it will not be given an independently affirmative effect beyond mere performance.<sup>29</sup>

VI. ACTIONS ON SUNDAY CONTRACTS AND TRANSACTIONS.

A. Right of Action — 1. EXISTENCE OF RIGHT — a. In General. It is frequently declared by the courts that no action can be maintained in a court of law or equity for the enforcement of, or relief from, Sunday contracts and transactions.<sup>30</sup> However, it has been held that an instrument executed on Sunday may be canceled in equity.<sup>31</sup> The courts will neither enforce such void contracts,<sup>32</sup> nor will they entertain actions to recover back the property sold or the consideration paid.<sup>33</sup> Thus one cannot recover for services performed on Sun-

Thus a contract contemplating that one of the parties shall take a train on Sunday to proceed to the place where he is to perform his services does not necessarily call for services on Sunday and will not be so interpreted. Goddard v. Morrissey, 172 Mass. 594, 53 N. E. 207.

The making of a payment on Sunday, which payment was not returned, will not invalidate the contract. Lamore v. Frisbie, 42 Mich. 186, 3 N. W. 910.

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Sunday," § 50.

Contra.—It has been held in Michigan that if one party to a Sunday contract performs his part of it on secular days and the other accepts what is done he must pay for what he receives. Bollin v. Hooper, 127 Mich. 287, 86 N. W. 795.

"The ground upon which courts have refused to maintain actions in contracts made in contravention of statutes for the observance of the Lord's day is the elementary principle that one who has himself participated in a violation of law cannot be permitted to assert in a court of justice any right founded upon or growing out of the illegal transaction." Gibbs, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Brucker, 111 U. S. 597, 601, 4 S. Ct. 572, 28 L. ed. 534.

A judgment entered on a judgment note bearing a Sunday date will not be stricken off because of its execution on Sunday. Hodgson v. Nesbit, 25 Pa. Co. Ct. 78. But equity will enjoin the collection of an unjust judgment obtained without defendant's knowledge after an agreement for settlement and discontinuance with plaintiff, although such agreement is void by reason of being made on Sunday. Blakesley v. Johnson, 13 Wis. 530.

Injunction.—The fact that plaintiff affixed his signature on Sunday to a petition for the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of a railroad will not prevent him from obtaining an injunction against the issue of the bonds on the ground that the required number of signatures were not affixed on any secular day. *De Forth v. b. Breach of Warranty.<sup>38</sup> An action is not maintainable on a warranty made during the course of a sale or exchange of property on Sunday.<sup>39</sup>

c. Deceit.<sup>40</sup> Neither is an action maintainable for damages resulting from fraudulent representation made during the transaction.<sup>41</sup>

d. Conversion or Damages For Injury to Property Hired.<sup>42</sup> In regard to an action for conversion or for damages for injury to property hired on Sunday, a different rule applies, and the action may be maintained, as it rests in tort, independent of the contract of hiring or bailment.<sup>43</sup>

2. CONDITIONS PRECEDENT TO EXERCISE OF RIGHT. In at least one jurisdiction, the maker of a note given on Sunday cannot have it declared void without restoring the consideration he received for it.<sup>44</sup>

B. Defenses — 1. IN GENERAL. Where the contract was really consummated on Sunday, the defense of illegality may be set up.<sup>45</sup> It is not available in an action on incidental agreements consummated prior<sup>46</sup> or subsequent to

Sunday,<sup>47</sup> nor can it be set up as a defense to an otherwise well-grounded cause of action.<sup>48</sup> Of course it is not available when the act is a work of necessity within the meaning of the statutory exception.<sup>49</sup>

2. RESTORATION OF CONSIDERATION OR BENEFIT. Under the statutes of some jurisdictions, a person who receives a valuable consideration for a contract made on Sunday is not permitted to defend an action on the contract on the ground that it was so made until he restores the consideration.<sup>50</sup> The fact that the consideration is of such a nature that it cannot be restored does not defeat the operation of the statute.<sup>51</sup>

C. Pleadings<sup>52</sup> — 1. IN ANTICIPATION OF DEFENSE. Plaintiff is not required to anticipate the defense of illegality and plead that the act or persons were within the exceptions of the statute.<sup>53</sup>

2. DEFENSE OF ILLEGALITY — a. Necessity of Pleading. The defense that the contract is illegal because executed on Sunday, to be made available, must be raised by the pleadings,<sup>54</sup> at the outset of the case, and not by amendment at the trial.<sup>55</sup>

b. Form of Pleading. The validity of a contract, which appears to have been executed on Sunday, cannot be attacked by demurrer, but only by plea or answer.<sup>56</sup> The defense must be specifically pleaded or notice of it given,<sup>57</sup> and cannot be proved under a general denial,<sup>58</sup> or a plea of non est factum,<sup>59</sup> unless plaintiff's pleadings disclose the fact that the contract was consummated on Sunday.<sup>60</sup>

c. Particularity Required. The facts showing a violation of the Sunday law

632, holding that the fact that an agreement for the sale of land to a purchaser procured by plaintiff was made on Sunday does not affect plaintiff's right of action on a prior agreement to pay him for securing a purchaser.

Work done on week days — used on Sunday.— A recovery may be had for work done on secular days, but used on Sundays, where there is no evidence showing knowledge on the part of plaintiff of the unlawful use. Cornelius v. Reiser, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 113 [affirming 11 N. Y. Suppl. 904].

Ct. 276, where it is said that, as special pleading is abolished by the practice act of 1887, probably the defense would not need to be specially pleaded.

Action for penalty.— In Bassett v. Western Union Tel. Co., 48 Mo. App. 566, it was held that if a telegraph company, sued for the statutory penalty for failure to send a telegram received on Sunday, desired to avail itself of the defense that the telegram was not a work of necessity or charity, it must aver and prove the facts taking the case out of the operation of Rev. St. (1889) § 3850, which provides that the Sunday statute shall not be a defense in a suit for damages or penalties against any person or corporation voluntarily contracting or engaging in business on Sunday.

must be stated as fully as is required in framing an indictment for such violation,<sup>61</sup> although it has been held sufficient to allege the date of the instrument in defense, without stating that the day was Sunday.<sup>62</sup> An allegation of execution on Sunday is too indefinite.<sup>63</sup>

3. REPLY OR REPLICATION. Where a ratification of a Sunday sale is relied on to take the case out of the statute, the replication should state an express promise to pay by the purchaser after his retention of the goods on a secular day.<sup>64</sup>

D. Evidence<sup>65</sup> — 1. PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF.<sup>66</sup> The party who desires to have the act or instrument declared invalid because entered into on Sunday has the burden of showing that it comes within the terms of the statute,<sup>67</sup> and the party who seeks to sustain its validity has the burden of showing that it comes within the exception to the statutes.<sup>68</sup> To sustain the burden of showing that the instrument or transaction comes within the statute defendant must show that the instrument was fully executed or the transaction completed on Sunday, as the court will not assume that it was.<sup>69</sup> However, where the instrument in question is dated on Sunday, it is presumed to have been delivered on that date, and the burden is on the party asserting its validity to show that it was in fact executed on a day other than Sunday.<sup>70</sup>

2. ADMISSIBILITY. As between the original parties, evidence is admissible to show that an instrument, although purporting to be of a different date, was executed on Sunday.<sup>71</sup> However, where it purports on its face to have been executed on Sunday, evidence that it was executed on some other day, is incompetent, in the absence of any such allegation in the pleadings.<sup>72</sup> A deposition showing deponent's refusal to answer questions concerning his purchase of a bill of exchange on Sunday on the ground that his answer would incriminate him, is not admissible as tending to show that he did buy such bill on Sunday.<sup>73</sup>

3. WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.<sup>74</sup> Where the testimony is equally balanced on the question whether an instrument was delivered on Saturday or Sunday, a finding that it was delivered on Saturday will not be disturbed, as the burden of proof is on the party contending that it was delivered on Sunday.<sup>75</sup>

Presumption arising from delivery.—In an action on a contract for the sale of a chattel, evidence that the vendee received the chattel from a third person on Sunday does not raise such a presumption that the contract was made on Sunday as will defeat the action. *Hadley v. E. Trial and Review — 1. PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY.<sup>76</sup> It is within the province of the jury to determine whether the transaction was closed on Sunday,<sup>77</sup> and if so, whether it was justified on the ground of necessity or charity.<sup>78</sup> Where the facts are not in dispute, it is a question of law whether the sale is to the disturbance of others within the meaning of a statute prohibiting business on Sunday to the disturbance of others.<sup>79</sup>

2. INSTRUCTIONS.<sup>80</sup> An instruction that no recovery may be had on Sunday agreements is justified by evidence tending to prove that the agreement in question was made on Sunday.<sup>81</sup>

3. OPENING OF JUDGMENT.<sup>82</sup> It is no ground for opening or arresting a judgment that the note on which it is based was executed on Sunday.<sup>83</sup> However, the rendition of judgment on a note executed on Sunday does not impart validity to an accompanying agreement of indemnity.<sup>84</sup>

4. APPEAL AND ERROR.<sup>85</sup> An attack upon the validity of the contract will not be noticed when made for the first time in the appellate court.<sup>86</sup>

VII. INJURIES RECEIVED OR INFLICTED WHILE VIOLATING LAW.

A. Liability — 1. RULE STATED. It is a general rule of law that no man shall be allowed to found any claim upon his own iniquity.<sup>87</sup> In accordance with this rule, it has been held in a few jurisdictions that no liability attaches for injuries received by a person while violating the Sabbath laws, as his own illegal act necessarily contributes to the injury.<sup>88</sup> This rule, confined in its application to some of the New England states, has been held to be against reason and the great weight of authority,<sup>89</sup> and has in at least two jurisdictions been superseded by positive statutory enactment.<sup>90</sup> The more enlightened rule, and the one supported by the great weight of authority, is that a violation of the Sunday law by the person injured does not prevent a recovery, as such violation is not the efficient or proximate cause of the injury, or an essential element of the cause of action; and as the time when the injury was inflicted is only an incident and not the foundation

2. APPLICATION OF RULE. The rule above stated, namely, that a person violating the Sunday law is not precluded from recovering damages for injuries received, has been applied to a variety of injuries, including those caused by the negligence or wrongful act of a common carrier,<sup>93</sup> injuries to vessels,<sup>94</sup> injuries to servants,<sup>95</sup> and various injuries received while traveling on Sunday in violation of the stat-

Co., 140 Mass. 199, 4 N. E. 227; Day v. Highland St. R. Co., 135 Mass. 113, 44 Am. Rep. 447. In Solarz v. Manhattan R. Co., 8 Misc. (N. Y.) 656, 657, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 1123, 31 Abb. N. Cas. 426 [affirmed in 11 Misc. 715, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 1149], it appeared that plaintiff was required to report for work by defendant on Sunday, and while working was injured. The court said: "A party violating the law is not on that account put at the mercy of others. Cooley Torts 159. He may not be able to recover for services renute,<sup>96</sup> such as those caused by a defective highway.<sup>97</sup> However, a person injured while traveling and hunting on the Sabbath cannot recover on an accident insurance policy which expressly excepts from its operation injuries resulting from or effected by a violation of law.<sup>98</sup>

B. ACTIONS — 1. BURDEN OF PROOF.<sup>99</sup> In jurisdictions where a violation of the Sunday statute precludes a person from recovering for injuries received on that day, the burden of proof is on him to show that the work in which he was engaged was a work of necessity or charity.<sup>1</sup> However, in jurisdictions where such violation does not prevent recovery, he is not required to show that he was engaged in a work of necessity at the time of the accident.<sup>2</sup>

2. PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY.<sup>3</sup> The question of whether plaintiff was engaged in an act of necessity or charity, when it becomes an issue in actions of this nature, is for the jury to determine.<sup>4</sup> In an action for death by wrongful act the trial court should not submit to the jury the question whether decedent's dered on the faith of the contract; but he is not for that reason to be physically disabled. In other words, defendant, in order to escape from liability for its negligence, cannot plead a violation of the Sunday law which it invited."

In Nebraska the right of the father of a section hand employed by a railroad company to recover for his death resulting from the negligence of the company was upheld on the ground that one of the exceptions of the Sunday statute was the running of necessary trains, and the railroad company, having itself decided that the work of the deceased was a work of necessity, could not assert that it was not. *Johnson v. ### VIII. PENALTIES.<sup>6</sup>

A. In General. In some jurisdictions a violator of the Sunday statutes is subject to a penalty recoverable in a civil action.<sup>7</sup> Such violator is subject to no other penalty than that named in the indictment.<sup>8</sup> Where criminal punishment is also provided for, both remedies may be pursued together or independently,<sup>9</sup> and a conviction under the criminal statutes is not a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action for the penalty.<sup>10</sup>

B. Proceedings to Enforce — 1. PETITION — a. Joinder of Offenses. Although a separate penalty may be imposed for each distinct violation of the law by the same person and on the same day,<sup>11</sup> several causes of action against the same person may be combined in one action, and the state cannot be required to elect which cause of action it will prosecute.<sup>12</sup>

b. Charging Part. Where the statute of limitation is not involved, it is sufficient to allege that the act was done on the Sabbath, without naming the day and month.<sup>13</sup> And the omission of the name of the state where the alleged acts were committed is not fatal where the county is mentioned, as the court will take judicial notice that the county is within the state.<sup>14</sup> In accordance with the general rules of pleading<sup>15</sup> facts and not conclusions must be stated;<sup>16</sup> and the petition is demurrable if it shows on its face that the work was an act of necessity or charity.<sup>17</sup> No more need be alleged than is sufficient to bring the case within the statute.<sup>18</sup>

2. JUDGMENT AND COSTS. A judgment which does not respond to the issue raised by the complaint or petition is erroneous.<sup>19</sup> On the quashal of a conviction, costs will be awarded against the prosecutor in a case where he would have been entitled to a moiety of the penalty.<sup>20</sup>

3. APPEAL. Although the penalty named in the statute is not large enough to give a court jurisdiction of the appeal, yet jurisdiction is conferred where several causes of action are combined and the maximum amount of the penalties exceed the amount required for jurisdiction.<sup>21</sup>

C. Disposition of Fines. An act providing for the disposition of fines collected under the Sunday law is not repealed by a later act providing for the disposition of fines and penalties collected by certain officers.<sup>22</sup>

IX. CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS FOR VIOLATION OF LAW.<sup>23</sup>

A. Jurisdiction. In some states and countries inferior courts have jurisdiction to try offenses against the Sunday laws,<sup>24</sup> even though the prosecution is under a city ordinance, and the act is also a violation of the state law.<sup>25</sup> A court of last resort has no original jurisdiction.<sup>26</sup>

B. Complaint, Indictment, or Information<sup>27</sup> — 1. WHEN INDICTMENT LIES. At common law the performance of labor or business on the Sabbath was not indictable.<sup>28</sup> An indictment will lie under a statute prohibiting the doing of certain acts on the Sabbath, under a penalty certain, although no mention is made of an indictment,<sup>29</sup> unless some other specific mode of recovery is specified, such as summary proceedings before a justice of the peace.<sup>30</sup> Even though for a single offense a person is liable to a penalty, yet a succession of such acts, performed in such manner as to become a nuisance, is indictable.<sup>31</sup> Where the statutes authorize an indictment for selling and bartering on Sunday, an indictment

Leave of designated official.—Under the Lord's Day Act, Can. Rev. St. (1906) c. 153, § 17, leave of the attorney-general for the province in which the offense is alleged to have been committed must be obtained and proper evidence of such leave presented to the magistrates before they have jurisdiction to start the proceedings by taking an information. *Rex v. This written consent must be obtained when the information is laid. Thorpe v. Priestnall, [1897] 1 Q. B. 159, 60 J. P. 821, 66 L. J. Q. B. 248, 45 Wkly. Rep. 223. will lie for each separate act of barter and sale;<sup>32</sup> but where the offense consists in exercising one's ordinary calling, there can be but one offense for one and the same day, and convictions for more than one are in excess of jurisdiction.<sup>33</sup>

2. SUFFICIENCY — a. In General. The indictment, information, or complaint must embrace all the element of the offense as defined by the statute under which the prosecution is brought and the decisions construing it, or it will be deemed insufficient.<sup>34</sup>

b. Venue. Not only the place where the alleged offense was committed,<sup>35</sup> but also the fact that it was committed in the county where the prosecution is brought, must be affirmatively alleged.<sup>36</sup>

c. Seal. When not required by statute, the complaint need not be under the seal of the court.<sup>37</sup>

d. Allegation of Intent. An indictment for keeping open a store or shop on Sunday need not aver a criminal intent.<sup>38</sup>

e. Grammatical Errors. It is not a valid objection to the indictment, information, or complaint that it is inartificial and ungrammatical, provided it contains, in substance, a sufficient statement of the facts constituting the offense intended to be charged.<sup>39</sup>

f. Following Language of Statute. An indictment which charges the offense in the language of the statute is sufficient,<sup>40</sup> although it is not essential to use the precise language, provided the substance of it is embraced in the words used.<sup>41</sup>

g. Negating Exceptions. Although it is held in a few jurisdictions that the exceptions in the statute need not be negated,<sup>42</sup> and that any attempt to do so is mere surplusage,<sup>43</sup> the weight of authority seems to be that an indictment which does not negative such exception is insufficient.<sup>44</sup>

Exception in enacting clause.—In Massachusetts the rule is otherwise when the offense charged is that of an innkeeper entertaining on the Lord's day persons who are not travelers, strangers, or lodgers, as the exceptions are contained in the enacting clause of the statute, and not in a separate clause. Com. v. Crowther, 117 Mass. 116; Com. v. Maxwell, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 139.

h. Certainty and Particularity — (I) IN GENERAL. The indictment must contain such a statement of the particular circumstances constituting the offense charged that the court can say as a matter of law that, admitting the allegations to be true, there has been a violation of the statute.<sup>45</sup> However, facts sufficient to show the gist of the offense is all that is required. Attending facts and circumstances, which are not essential ingredients of the offense, need not be alleged;<sup>46</sup> but if alleged, they must be proved.<sup>47</sup>

(II) OWNERSHIP. In an indictment for keeping open on Sunday, it is not necessary to allege that defendant is the owner of the building kept open.<sup>48</sup>

(III) TIME. As an offense against the Sunday laws consists in the doing of an act on a prohibited day, time is of the essence of the offense, and it must be affirmatively alleged that the act complained of was performed on a Sunday,<sup>49</sup> although the particular Sunday is not important,<sup>50</sup> provided it is within the statute of limitations.<sup>51</sup> An indictment is sufficient which alleges the commission of the offense on Sunday, but which fails to state the day of the month<sup>52</sup> or refers to a wrong date.<sup>53</sup> Likewise an indictment which names the day of the month and year but does not allege that it was Sunday is good, as the court will take judicial notice that the date named was Sunday.<sup>54</sup>

All the exceptions, and not part, must be fully and completely negated. Russell v. State, 50 Ind. 174; State v. Carpenter, 62 Mo. 594. An indictment charging that the labor was not "a work of daily necessity" is insufficient to negative an exception, "or other works of necessity," leaving out the word "daily," as a work of necessity contemplated by the statute may not always be a work of "daily" necessity. State v. Stone, 15 Mo. 513.

45. Com. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 12 Ky. L. Rep. 505; Mosely v. State, 18 Tex. App. 311.

Sufficient allegation.—An information alleging that defendant did on a certain Sunday named sell and expose for sale goods at his place of business, describing it particularly, contrary to the acts of assembly in such case made and provided, is sufficient. Denzin v. Com., 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 654.

Card-playing.—Thus an indictment for playing cards on Sunday need not allege the name of the game played; the names of the persons with whom defendant played; that defendant bet on the game; or that it was played for amusement. State v. Jeffrey, 33 Ark. 136; State v. Anderson, 30 Ark. 131; State v. Grace, 21 Ark. 227; Stockden v. State, 18 Ark. 186; State v. Kellar, 53 Mo.

State*, 88 Ga. 787, 789, 15 S. E. 905, the court, per Simmons, J., said: "While it is true that time is of the essence of this offence, it is so only to the extent that the act must be on Sunday. When it is shown that the act was on Sunday, the day of the month is not essential in order to make out the offence."

Sufficient allegation.—In State v. Nickel, 137 Mo. App. 24, 118 S. W. 1192, it was held that an allegation that defendant "on the 18th day August, A. D. 1907, did on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, keep open," etc., contains a direct statement of the fact that the date mentioned was Sunday, and is sufficient.

"On or about."—The use of the phrase "on or about" renders the indictment bad for indefiniteness. State v. Land, 42 Ind. 311. Contra, where it is definitely alleged that the labor was performed on a Sunday. State v. Nesbit, 8 Kan. App. 104, 54 Pac. 326.

54. State v. Bergfeldt, 41 Wash. 234, 83 Pac. 177. Contra, Gilbert v. State, 81 Ind. 565.

(IV) NATURE OF LABOR OR BUSINESS. It has been held sufficient to designate in general the nature of defendant's avocation or business without specifying the particular business he was engaged in.<sup>55</sup> However, where the offense charged is that of engaging in common labor, the specific kind of labor must be stated.<sup>56</sup>

(V) INFORMATION AND BELIEF. An information otherwise sufficiently specific, certain, and positive is not invalidated by an additional statement that the charge is made on information and belief.<sup>57</sup>

3. JOINDER AND ELECTION. An indictment charging defendant with keeping open his shop on Sunday for the purpose of doing business therein does not charge two distinct offenses.<sup>58</sup> Counts for selling and trading may be joined in the same indictment;<sup>59</sup> and where there are separate counts for keeping open and selling, an election cannot be compelled, as it is not necessary to set out such different states of fact in separate counts.<sup>60</sup> It is proper to charge in one count the running of six freight trains through the county on the same Sunday, for while the running of each train may be a separate violation of the law, they may be grouped and treated as but one offense.<sup>61</sup> Where the offense charged is that of keeping open store, the fact that several sales may have been made does not render applicable the doctrine of election.<sup>62</sup>

C. Evidence<sup>63</sup> — 1. PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF. The burden of proving the essential ingredients of the crime is upon the state;<sup>64</sup> but, upon proof of the matters charged, the law presumes a criminal intent,<sup>65</sup> and the burden is then cast upon defendant to show that the act comes within the exception to the statute.<sup>66</sup>

2. JUDICIAL NOTICE. The courts will take judicial notice that the running of trains on Sunday is a work of necessity.<sup>67</sup>

3. ADMISSIBILITY. It is competent to show defendant's conduct immediately before his arrest.<sup>68</sup> Also testimony in relation to sales to others than the person named in the indictment is competent on a prosecution for keeping open for the purpose of traffic and sale.<sup>69</sup> Testimony concerning defendant's purpose in keeping open or his statements at the time of the sale is properly excluded when it has no tendency to bring his acts within the protection of the statute.<sup>70</sup> Where the charge is for playing in a game on Sunday where an admission fee is charged, evidence of the payment of a fee to see the game by one or more persons is competent proof that a fee was charged, although other persons saw the game for nothing.<sup>71</sup>

4. PROOF AND VARIANCE. The state is not limited in its proof to the particular day named in the indictment, but may show a violation of the law on any Sunday preceding the finding of the indictment and within the statute of limitations.<sup>72</sup> The proof need not be as broad as that charged in the indictment, provided a distinct violation of the law is shown.<sup>73</sup> Affirmative testimony as to the commission of the act charged controls over negative testimony as to defendant's general habits on Sunday.<sup>74</sup> Where a principal is sought to be made criminally liable for the act of his agent, either knowledge on his part must be shown<sup>75</sup> or such a habitual recurrence of the act that his assent is implied.<sup>76</sup> In general the proof must correspond with the allegations of the indictment,<sup>77</sup> and a conviction is not warranted when the evidence is so doubtful or conflicting as to raise a reasonable doubt concerning the guilt of defendant.<sup>78</sup> On the other hand, a conviction must be sustained where the evidence clearly shows a commission of the act prohibited by statute.<sup>79</sup>

stances of the case one of necessity of charity within the meaning of the statutory exception.<sup>83</sup>

2. INSTRUCTIONS.<sup>84</sup> It is not incumbent upon the court to define the business or occupation of defendant,<sup>85</sup> but the meaning of the statutory terms must be given.<sup>86</sup> The court should not submit to the jury all the phases of the statute, but should restrict them to the consideration of the one charged in the indictment.<sup>87</sup> Neither should the court give any instruction which deprives defendant of the presumption of innocence.<sup>88</sup> Defendant has no ground of exception when the charge given correctly states all the law applicable to the prosecution,<sup>89</sup> and the charges refused did not correctly state it.<sup>90</sup> It is error to refuse to charge that the knowledge or consent of the accused to the performance of the acts complained of must be shown before a conviction may be had.<sup>91</sup> A harmless charge, even though erroneous, cannot be complained of as error.<sup>92</sup>

Missouri rule.—In State v. Schatt, 128 Mo. App. 622, 107 S. W. 10, it was held that if the labor in question is so clearly a work of necessity, or is so clearly not, that no two reasonable minds could differ on the proposition, then the court may treat it as a matter of law; but that if the question is one about which reasonable minds might well differ, then it is essentially one of fact, and as such within the province of the jury. In State v. Campbell, 206 Mo. 579, 105 S. W. 637, it was held that the court should have declared as a matter of law that lemons are an article of necessity.

When presumption affected by statute.—Under a statute providing that on the trial of an officer in charge of the transportation department of a railroad company for running a train on Sunday, "the simple fact of the train being run" need only be proved, an instruction that the jury are authorized to infer that a freight train run on Sunday was run in violation of law, unless it appears that it was loaded with live stock, or that it was delayed, is not erroneous as depriving de-

show the calling of defendant or the specific act of worldly employment which he performed on the Sabbath.<sup>96</sup> However, it is sufficient if the form prescribed by statute is followed,<sup>97</sup> or if the description of the work appear in any part of the record.<sup>98</sup> Technical niceties are not required.<sup>99</sup> The evidence should be returned with, or made a part of, the record;<sup>1</sup> and when it appears from the evidence returned, but not made a part of the record, that the act done was one of necessity, the conviction will be reversed.<sup>2</sup>

E. Review.<sup>3</sup> Certiorari is the proper remedy to bring up a conviction obtained without jurisdiction.<sup>4</sup> On application for such a writ, new evidence cannot be taken to bolster up the lack of evidence of jurisdiction before the magistrate.<sup>5</sup> However, questions of fact within the magistrate's jurisdiction will not be reviewed on certiorari. Defendant's remedy, if any, is by appeal.<sup>6</sup> Habeas corpus is not a proper remedy for attacking the validity of the judgment of the trial court.<sup>7</sup>

X. JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS AND OTHER OFFICIAL ACTS.

Anciently the courts of justice sat on Sundays. Two reasons for this are given in Sir Henry Spelman's Original of the Terms, one being that the christians laid aside all observance of days in opposition to the heathen who were superstitious about the observance of days and times; and the other being that, by keeping their own courts always open, they would prevent christian suitors from resorting to the heathen courts. But in 517, a canon was passed exempting Sunday from the judicial days, which, with other canons passed later, was received and adopted by the Saxon kings and embodied in the constitution of Edward the Confessor. These canons and constitutions were all confirmed by William the Conqueror and Henry the Second, and so became part of the common law of England. Swann v. Broome, 3 Burr. 1595, have been established, both at common law and by statute, so that the rule can no longer be accepted in its entirety.<sup>11</sup>

B. Arbitration and Award. In some jurisdictions the making and publishing of an award is considered a judicial act and hence void when done on Sunday.<sup>12</sup> In others an award is considered more in the nature of a contract and therefore does not come within the prohibition of judicial business.<sup>13</sup> An award is valid when not really published until a week day, although some of the proceedings were had on Sunday.<sup>14</sup>

C. Taking of Depositions. A deposition taken on Sunday must be rejected.<sup>15</sup> Likewise the adjournment of the taking of depositions from Saturday to Sunday and from Sunday to Monday is without authority of law, and the deposition will be suppressed.<sup>16</sup>

D. Filing Pleadings. As the filing of a complaint and its reception by the clerk are ministerial acts, they are not void when done on Sunday, under statutes prohibiting the opening of courts and the transaction of judicial business.<sup>17</sup> The mere filing of an affidavit and bond on Sunday does not come within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the issuance of process.<sup>18</sup> Neither is an information void because filed on Sunday, where the statute prohibits the commencement only of civil suits.<sup>19</sup>

E. Process — 1. CIVIL — a. In General. At common law, the award of a judicial writ was a judicial act and void if done on Sunday, but the issuance and service of original civil process were mere ministerial acts and could lawfully be done on Sunday.<sup>20</sup> However, both the issuance and service of civil process on Sunday is now quite generally void under statutes specifically prohibiting the same,<sup>21</sup>

Under a statute prohibiting judicial busi- ness on Sunday the issuance of a summons is not illegal as it is only a ministerial act. Havens v. Stiles, 8 Ida. 250, 67 Pac. 919, 101 Am. St. Rep. 195, 56 L. R. A. 736.

Summoning of jurors.—In State v. Gilbert, 8 Ida. 346, 69 Pac. 62, it was held that there is nothing in the Idaho statute which renders void the summoning of jurors for a special venire by a sheriff on Sunday.

Partial service.—Where service is begun prior to Sunday, it may be completed on that day as the statute refers to the commencement of the service. Fifield v. Wooster, 21 Vt. 215; Pearson v. French, 9 Vt. 349.

And the levy of an attachment on Monday on property taken possession of by the officer on the previous Sunday under another order of attachment is not absolutely void, and its validity cannot be questioned in an action of replevin by the debtor against the officer. Blair v. Shew, 24 Kan. 280.

Countermanding of order to sheriff.—An order given on a secular day to a sheriff di- recting him not to proceed under an execu- tion in his hands cannot be legally counter- manded by an order given to him on a Sun- day, and the latter order is void. Stern's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 447.

Sheriff is not liable for failure to serve writ on Sunday. Whitney v. Butterfield, 13 Cal. 335, 73 Am. Dec. 584.

Provisional remedies.—It has been held that the goods of a tenant are privileged on Sunday from seizure for rent (Mayfield v. White, 1 Browne (Pa.) 241), and that a per- son's swine cannot be lawfully impounded on the Sabbath by a hogreeve (Frost v. Hull, 4 N. H. 153); while on the other hand it has been held that a sheriff may proceed on Sun- day by distress to enforce a penalty for ped- dling without a license; the statutory prohibi- tion against service of "writs or other process" on Sunday being confined to such original or judicial process as may as well be executed on any other day (Cowles v. Brit- tan, 9 N. C. 204).

Admiralty.—A warrant of arrest may issue in admiralty on Sunday, where a vessel has changed her day for sailing, and pro- poses to sail on that day, and a libellant for seaman's wages did not learn that his wages would not be paid in time to begin his case before that day. good, although it has been dated on Sunday.<sup>26</sup> A notice of the examination of a witness is good, although given on Sunday.<sup>27</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that the service on Sunday of notice of a motion<sup>28</sup> or of plea filed<sup>29</sup> is irregular and void; as is also a notice to take a deposition on Sunday.<sup>30</sup>

e. Publication. The weight of authority supports the proposition that the publication, in whole or in part, of a summons or other legal notice in a newspaper published on Sunday is invalid.<sup>31</sup> A notice required to be published each day for a week need not be published on Sunday.<sup>32</sup>

d. Process or Notice Returnable on Sunday. As courts do not sit on Sunday, a process or notice returnable on that day is void and no proceedings may be had thereon.<sup>33</sup>

2. statutes, it has been held that a man may voluntarily surrender himself to a warrant on Sunday;<sup>37</sup> that he may be lawfully arrested on Sunday for contempt in not performing an order of court;<sup>38</sup> and that he may be retaken on a Sunday after he has escaped from the custody of an officer, except where the escape was voluntary.<sup>39</sup> However, one who has been convicted under a penal statute cannot be lawfully arrested on Sunday for non-payment of the penalty.<sup>40</sup>

F. Bonds and Recognizances.<sup>41</sup> It is well settled that a bail-bond or recognizance entered into on Sunday, for the purpose of securing the release of a person in custody and his appearance for trial, is valid, the entering into such bond being considered as an act of necessity and charity and not judicial business.<sup>42</sup> The rule has been extended to appeal and supersedeas bonds<sup>43</sup> but not to replevin bonds.<sup>44</sup>

G. Holding Court. In the absence of a permissive statute, a judge or magistrate has no authority to hold court or conduct a trial on Sunday.<sup>45</sup> An exception is made in the case of a judge instructing a jury that has disagreed.<sup>46</sup> The continuing of a cause from Saturday to Monday does not constitute a keeping open of the court on Sunday,<sup>47</sup> and even where a trial is conducted on Sunday, the justice does not thereby lose jurisdiction of the cause.<sup>48</sup> As no court may lawfully sit on Sunday it is proper to adjourn from Saturday to Monday;<sup>49</sup> and when, by mistake, a hearing is set for Sunday, the meeting of the court on that day and its adjournment over until the next day does not invalidate the proceedings.<sup>50</sup> It is lawful for a court to adjourn to Sunday for the purpose of receiving a verdict.<sup>51</sup> By statute in some jurisdictions, court may be held for certain purposes on Sunday.<sup>52</sup>

H. Judgment and Verdict <sup>53</sup> — 1. JUDGMENT. As the rendition of a judgment, order, or decree is a judicial act, it is void when done on Sunday.<sup>54</sup> An exception has been established in cases where a verdict was received on Sunday, and the statute directed the court or justice of the peace to render judgment immediately or forthwith.<sup>55</sup> Where a verdict is rendered on Sunday, it will be presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the record, that the judgment on the verdict was rendered on a subsequent day.<sup>56</sup> And even when the judgment is rendered on the same day, although it is void, it does not vitiate the verdict.<sup>57</sup>

2. VERDICT. In regard to the delivery and reception of verdicts, a different rule applies, as the rendering of a verdict is a mere ministerial act and it is an act of necessity and charity to receive it and not keep the jurors confined until Monday. It is well established, both at common law and by statute, that a verdict in civil as well as criminal cases may be delivered, received, and entered on Sunday.<sup>58</sup> It has also been held that the deliberation of the jury on

New York city magistrates.—In People v. Walton, 35 Misc. 320, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 85, it was held that Code Civ. Proc. § 6, which authorized a magistrate to commit or discharge on Sunday a person charged with an offense, did not permit of a trial on Sunday, but only permitted a discharge or commitment for a hearing. But in People v. New York State Reformatory for Women, 73 N. Y. App. Div. 174, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 728, it was held that the word "commit" covers committing after conviction as well as committing to await trial. It was further held that the above statute has been superseded in the city of New York by Laws (1897), c. 378, as amended by Laws (1901), c. 466, which confer authority for the opening of magistrates' courts at certain hours on Sunday.

Sunday,<sup>59</sup> or their agreeing on a verdict and sealing it up,<sup>60</sup> does not invalidate the verdict when it is delivered on Monday. Where a term of court expires by its legal limitation on Saturday, a verdict received on Sunday is invalid.<sup>61</sup>

I. Discharge of Jury on Disagreement. It has been held that the court may, on Sunday, adjudicate the fact that the jury cannot agree and discharge it.<sup>62</sup> A positive finding that the jury cannot agree is necessary before the power may be exercised.<sup>63</sup>

J. Appeal and Bill of Exceptions.<sup>64</sup> It has been held that an application for a writ of error may be lawfully filed on Sunday.<sup>65</sup> On the other hand it has been held that, in the absence of a showing of necessity, a bill of exceptions is void when signed on Sunday,<sup>66</sup> and that a clerk of court is not bound to take appeals on Sunday when not required to by statute.<sup>67</sup>

L. Objection to Irregularity and Waiver. There is some confusion in the authorities as to the proper method of objecting to the service of process or other proceedings in a cause done on Sunday. It has been held that the objection cannot be urged for the first time on appeal, but that the irregularity is waived by appearance and going to trial without objection.<sup>70</sup> On the other hand it has been held that the irregularity cannot be waived,<sup>71</sup> and that the court is bound to take notice of it without its being especially assigned for error.<sup>72</sup> Process issued or served on Sunday is the proper subject of abatement by plea.<sup>73</sup> In criminal cases the irregularity cannot be inquired into on certiorari,<sup>74</sup> but may be, on either habeas corpus or appeal.<sup>75</sup>

"While attacks of sunstroke are frequently precipitated by exposure, especially during fatigue, to the direct rays of the sun, in a large number of instances they come on under other circumstances. Cases are of not unfrequent occurrence among soldiers in hot climates where there is over-crowding or bad

Further, persons whose occupation exposes them to excessive heat, such as stokers, laundry workers, &c., are apt to suffer, particularly in hot seasons." *Encycl. St. Rep. 810, holding that the term, as used in the state constitution providing that "it shall be required by competent legislation, that the 'structure' and 'superintendence' of the penal institutions of the State, the county jails and city police prisons, secure the health and comfort of the prisoners," &c., was intended to impose upon the governing officials of a municipal corporation the duty of exercising ordinary care in procuring articles essential for the health and comfort of prisoners, and of overlooking their subordinates in immediate control of the prisons (so far at least as to replenish the supply of such necessary articles when notified that they are needed), and of employing such agents and raising and appropriating such amounts of money as may be necessary to keep the prison in such condition as to secure the comfort and health of the inmates.

I. DEFINITION.

A supersedeas is in practice a writ containing a command to stay a proceeding at law.<sup>1</sup> Originally it was a writ directed to an officer, commanding him to desist from enforcing the execution of another writ which he was about to execute, or which might come in his hands.<sup>2</sup> In modern times the term is often used synonymously with a "stay of proceedings;"<sup>3</sup> and by an extension of the term it has come to be used as a designation of the effect of any proceeding or act in a cause, which, of its own force, causes a suspension or stay of proceedings.<sup>4</sup>

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY.

A. Nature of Remedy. A proceeding by supersedeas is not a proceeding at common law in the strict sense of that term.<sup>5</sup> It is said to be a substitute for the writ of audita querela;<sup>6</sup> and the same rule which governs the one, regulates the other, with but slight exceptions.<sup>7</sup> The writ and the proceeding on which it is founded are regarded as in the nature of a bill in equity,<sup>8</sup> where the matter of discharge set forth in the petition does not appear in the record.<sup>9</sup> While a supersedeas is in one sense a continuation of the original suit,<sup>10</sup> yet in another sense it is the commencement of a new suit, and it is generally so regarded.<sup>11</sup>

B. Scope of Remedy. The primary and principal object of the remedy by the writ of supersedeas is to prevent the abuse of the process of the court.<sup>12</sup> In a proceeding for a supersedeas, that which forms the ground for relief must either rest on facts accruing subsequent to the decree,<sup>13</sup> such as satisfaction;<sup>14</sup> or, if it relates to antecedent facts, must show fraud in the decree,<sup>15</sup> or want of jurisdiction in the court, apparent on the face of the record,<sup>16</sup> or a denial of the relation which authorizes execution.<sup>17</sup>

III. WHAT MAY BE SUPERSEDED.<sup>18</sup>

The proceeding by supersedeas, being substituted for the writ of audita querela,<sup>19</sup> generally will lie in all cases where that writ would lie at common law.<sup>20</sup> The writ is most frequently used to suspend and quash executions,<sup>21</sup> either when they are improperly issued,<sup>22</sup> or where an unjust or improper use is attempted to be made of them.<sup>23</sup> In at least one state power is conferred upon the supreme court, in term, and any of the judges, in vacation, to grant writs of supersedeas to interlocutory orders and decrees, as in case of final decrees.<sup>24</sup> This power to Limitation.—But the remedy by supersedeas is unfit for many cases in which the audita querela is used in England, and in none more so than an attempt to vacate and correct a judgment for usury. White v. Harris, 5 Humphr. (Tenn.) 420.

Issuance of execution after judgment satisfied.—If a judgment upon which an execution is issued has been paid prior to the issue of such execution, the debtor's remedy is by petition for a supersedeas. Mason v. Vance, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 178, 60 Am. Dec. 144; Marsh v. Heywood, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 210. Matter which operates as an equitable satisfaction of a judgment may be inquired into by this proceeding. Thompson v. Lassiter, 86 Ala. 536, 6 So. 33; Mobile Branch Bank v. Coleman, 20 Ala. 140.

In Alabama the matter, to some extent, is regulated by statute, which directs the allowance of a supersedeas on application to a judge at chambers, whenever an execution has improperly issued. Aiken Dig. 208, § 38. This statute was at first considered as extending only to cases where the execution issued irregularly. Holloway v. Washington, 3 Ala. 668; Clemens v. Prout, 3 Stew. & P. 345; Fryer v. Austill, 2 Stew. 119. Subsequently, however, it has been held to apply to all cases where executions are improperly sued out, whether on account of mere irregularity or because plaintiff has no just right to enforce process. Shearer v. Boyd, 10 Ala. 279; Lockhart v. McElroy, 4 Ala. 572.

In the English courts of common law, the practice, when an execution has issued improperly, is to obtain a judge's order to stay proceedings until defendant can submit a motion in court; and this summary mode of redress by motion, it is said, obtains in all cases, when it would be allowed by audita querela. Lister v. Mundell, 1 B. & P. 427; Nathans v. Giles, 1 Marsh. 226, 5 Taunt. 558, 15 Rev. Rep. 581, 1 E. C. L. 286.

Necessity of showing want of jurisdiction.—In Arkansas, to entitle a party to a writ of supersedeas as a principal remedy, such facts must be established as show that the inferior tribunal had no jurisdiction at the time of pronouncing judgment. Ex p. Davis, 5 Ark. 405; Ex p. Caldwell, 5 Ark. 390; Dunn v. State, 2 Ark. 229, 35 Am. Dec. 54. In Louisiana to entitle a party to a supersedeas to stay a writ of possession issued from the district, on a judgment from the supreme court, he must show affirmatively that it issued in contravention of the latter's decree. Crane v. Allen, 11 La. Ann. 496.

23. Rutland v. Pippin, 7 Ala. 469; Lockhart v. McElroy, 4 Ala. 572.

Where two judgments exist for the same debt, the payment of one is a satisfaction of both, and the attempt to coerce the payment afterward, by execution, is an abuse of the province of the court, which may be arrested by supersedeas. Lockhart v. McElroy, 4 Ala. 572.

24. Tenn. Code, §§ 3933, 3934, 4512, 4513.

The object of these provisions is to enable the court, or one of its judges, to stay the execution of an order or decree of the chancery court which, in advance of the final hearing, undertakes to deprive the litigant of money or property. Gwynne v. Memphis Appeal-Avalanche Co., 93 Tenn. 603, 30 S. W. 23; Blake v. Dodge, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 465; Redmond v. Redmond, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 561.

supersede the orders and decrees of inferior courts does not authorize the supreme court to supervise the discretion of a chancellor in the exercise of a conceded power for the protection of property pendente lite.<sup>25</sup> That court can simply suspend or supersede, for the time being, the execution of such orders and decrees as are of a nature to be actively and affirmatively enforced,<sup>26</sup> and are in fieri;<sup>27</sup> but have no power, in this mode, to reverse the action of the inferior court, or to set aside, or annul, or supersede orders or decrees, which are merely of a negative or prohibitory character,<sup>28</sup> or such as have been executed.<sup>29</sup> Nor has the supreme court, in a proceeding of this character, the power to supersede the fiat of a chancellor awarding extraordinary process.<sup>30</sup>

IV. JURISDICTION AND AUTHORITY TO GRANT SUPERSEDEAS.<sup>31</sup>

A court has authority, under its general powers, to supersede its own executions in a proper case, especially when it has general jurisdiction of the subject.<sup>32</sup> The subject is, however, usually regulated by statute.<sup>33</sup> Thus in some states the judges of the circuit court may issue the writ of supersedeas in vacation, returnable to the court in term-time.<sup>34</sup> But a circuit court judge has no power or jurisdiction to grant an order for supersedeas to the judgments or decrees of the supreme court.<sup>35</sup> So also the supreme court, or any judge thereof, is often granted express authority to issue writs of supersedeas.<sup>36</sup> But an application for a supersedeas of execution issuing on a judgment from the court below must first be made to that court, and refused by it, before the supreme court will hear such application.<sup>37</sup> A proceeding in supersedeas should be granted out of the court where the record upon which it is procured remains, or be returnable in the same court.<sup>38</sup> It cannot be granted out of any court returnable in the same court, where the record upon which it is returnable is not there.<sup>39</sup> If the record is not brought into the court where the writ is sued, there should be judgment against plaintiff.<sup>40</sup>

Appointment of receiver.—Where the court has the discretionary power to appoint a receiver, the order making the appointment cannot be reversed by the supreme court on writ of supersedeas. Trougher v. Akin, 109 Tenn. 451, 73 S. W. 118; Enochs v. Wilson, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 228; Roberson v. Roberson, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 50; Bramley v. Tyree, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 531; Baird v. Cumberland, etc., Turnpike Co., 1 Lea (Tenn.) 394. Matters of mere form, not going to the jurisdiction of the chancellor to appoint the receiver, cannot in general be considered when collaterally presented. Trougher v. Akin, supra. But if the court had not the power to appoint a receiver, the supreme court may supersede the appointment. Roberson v. Roberson, supra; *Baird v. The appointment of a receiver is ordinarily in the nature of extraordinary process. Baird v. Cumberland, etc., Turnpike Co., 1 Lea (Tenn.) 394.

In Alabama there is an act declaring that "the Judges of the Circuit Courts respectively shall have power and authority in vacation to supersede any execution when it shall satisfactorily appear to them that the same shall have improperly issued from the clerk's office of any of the Circuit Courts." Lockhart v. McElroy, 4 Ala. 572.

In New York, an application, under 2 Rev. St. p. 556, §§ 36, 37, for an order of supersedeas, may be made to a judge of the first district, although the action is triable elsewhere. Wells v. Jones, 2 Abb. Pr. 20; Sturges v. Weed, 13 How. Pr. 130.

V. THE APPLICATION OR PETITION.<sup>41</sup>

A. In General. A proceeding by supersedeas to arrest and have entry of satisfaction of an execution is a suit between the parties to the judgment<sup>42</sup> and the pleadings must be made in their names.<sup>43</sup> The petition is regarded in the nature of a declaration or statement of facts, and, as such, it may be pleaded or demurred to.<sup>44</sup> But the same strictness in pleading is not required as in an ordi-

36. The Arkansas constitution gives the supreme court, by express grant, power to issue writs of supersedeas, but omits to define under what circumstances the writ may issue; nor has the legislature prescribed any rule to be observed in regard to such writs. Ex p. Caldwell, 5 Ark. 390; Ex p. Woods, 3 Ark. 532. Under such circumstances, the rule of the common law will govern in a proceeding of this kind, the court possessing over this subject the whole power, as exercised by the courts of England. This power results from the general grant of authority to this court, of supervising the adjudications of inferior tribunals, and to correct their proceedings if they assume to act without authority of law, or oppressively, or in a manner not authorized by law. Ex p. Caldwell, 5 Ark. 390.

Under the Indiana statute any judge of the supreme court, either in term-time or vacation, has authority to issue writs of supersedeas. Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 2 Ind. 670.

In Tennessee the supreme court in term-time, or any judge thereof in vacation, may grant a writ of supersedeas to an interlocutory order or decree, or execution thereon, if such decree, etc., is of a nature to be actively and affirmatively enforced, but not if it is merely negative and prohibitory as an injunction. McMinnville, etc., R. Co. v. Huggins, 7 Coldw. 217. And see supra, III.

In Virginia a supersedeas, auxiliary to other proceedings, is not within the meaning of St. (1806) § 4, concerning the court of appeals, which provides that no appeal, writ of error, or supersedeas shall be granted in court by the court of appeals to the decree of the chancery court, but only by a judge in term-time or in vacation. Cheshire v. Atkinson, 1 Hen. & M. 210.

37. Hofler v. State, 16 Ark. 214; Ex p. Bixley, 13 Ark. 286.

If the error be one for which the judgment might be reversed in an appellate court, no appeal, writ of error, or supersedeas should be allowed until after motion to the court or judge has been made and overruled. Davis v. Com., 16 Gratt. (Va.) 134.

38. Payne v. Thompson, 48 Ala. 535.

39. Payne v. Thompson, 48 Ala. 535.

A circuit judge has jurisdiction to grant a writ of supersedeas returnable into the probate court, where the record upon which it is founded remains. But he could not make it returnable into his court, unless under some process the record was to be brought there. Payne v. Thompson, 48 Ala. 535.

40. Payne v. Thompson, 48 Ala. 535.

41. Application for stay pending appeal see APPEAL AND ERROR, 2 Cyc. 894.

42. See supra, II, A.

Right to relief in several causes.—It is incompetent for a petitioner for a supersedeas to ask by the same petition relief in several causes, and it makes no difference in this respect whether the parties are the same or different. Shearer v. Boyd, 10 Ala. 279.

To whom addressed.—An application for a supersedeas should be addressed to the court, and not to one of its members. Haskell v. Hazard, 33 Me. 585.

Notice of application and hearing.—A plaintiff in execution is not entitled to notice of the filing of an application in vacation for the writ of supersedeas, but is entitled to notice of the hearing in term-time. Ex p. Pearl Roller Mill Co., 154 Ala. 232, 45 So. 423.

43. Edwards v. Lewis, 16 Ala. 813.

Defendant in a judgment, who applies for a supersedeas, is plaintiff in the proceeding subsequently had on his petition, and is therefore entitled to open and conclude the argument. Pearsall v. McCartney, 28 Ala. 110.

An assignee of a judgment is a proper defendant to a petition for supersedeas of an execution issuing thereon. Eslava v. Farley, 72 Ala. 214.

44. Pearsall v. McCartney, 28 Ala. 110; Bruce v. Barnes, 20 Ala. 219; Powell v. Washington, 15 Ala. 803; Shearer v. Boyd, 10 Ala. 279; Mabry v. Herndon, 8 Ala. 848; Spence v. Walker, 7 Ala. 568.

nary bill in equity.<sup>45</sup> When an issue is formed on the facts set forth in a petition for a supersedeas of an execution, it may properly be submitted to a jury for decision,<sup>46</sup> and should then be tried as other issues of fact submitted in ordinary cases and under the same rules of evidence.<sup>47</sup>

B. Amendment. Since a petition for supersedeas stands in lieu of a declaration, it may be amended by leave of court, on demurrer sustained to the original,<sup>48</sup> provided the amendment does not make an entirely different case.<sup>49</sup>

C. Verification. It is not required that the petition presented should be verified by the oath of the person in whose name, and on whose behalf, it is filed;<sup>50</sup> any person who knows the matters set forth in the petition to be true may verify it.<sup>51</sup>

VI. WRIT OR ORDER, AND SERVICE THEREOF.<sup>52</sup>

A. In General. The order for a supersedeas is not a supersedeas of itself;<sup>53</sup> it is but the declaration of the judge that it is fit under the circumstances that a supersedeas should issue;<sup>54</sup> and may be recalled by him at any time before it is complied with, if upon consideration he deems it improper or improvident.<sup>55</sup> The supersedeas issued should conform to the order,<sup>56</sup> and if there is a substantial variance between the two, the writ will be quashed.<sup>57</sup> Unless required, it is not essential to the efficacy of a supersedeas that it should be executed by a sheriff or other officer; but a delivery of the supersedeas by defendant in execution, or other person, to the officer who has in his hands the process to be superseded, is effectual for all legal purposes.<sup>58</sup> A supersedeas issued improvidently or without warrant of law will be quashed or vacated on motion.<sup>59</sup> Moreover if a supersedeas

Effect of overruling of demurrer.—A petition for a supersedeas of an execution is regarded, under the Alabama practice, in the nature of a statement or declaration of facts, and when demurred to, if the demurrer is overruled and the respondent declines to answer over, the court may take the facts as admitted and render judgment thereon. Powell v. Washington, 15 Ala. 803; Spence v. Walker, 7 Ala. 568.

A petition for a supersedeas is sufficient on demurrer which alleges that the judgment is satisfied. Rice v. Dillahunt, 20 Ala. 399.

A petition for a supersedeas to prevent the sale of exempt property must set forth under oath that petitioner is a resident of the state (Felner v. Bumgarner, (Ark. 1891) 17 S. W. 709; May v. Hutson, 54 Ark. 226, 15 S. W. 606; Brown v. Peters, 53 Ark. 182, 13 S. W. 729), and must contain a description of all his property, real and personal (May v. Hutson, supra; Brown v. Peters, supra).

56. Ex p. Woods, 3 Ark. 532.

57. Ex p. Woods, 3 Ark. 532, holding that where the order for a supersedeas directs the proceedings to be immediately stayed, the execution having been improvidently and illegally issued, and the writ only directs them to be suspended, omitting to set forth the facts for reason of which they are to be stayed, it is a variance for which the writ will be quashed.

58. Welch v. Jones, 11 Ala. 660.

In Virginia the writ of supersedeas is directed to the sheriff. See 4 Minor Inst. Pt. 1, pp. 854, 855. In giving notice of a writ of supersedeas, the sheriff must pursue the mode required by the act for giving notice upon replevy bonds. Mackey v. Fuqua, 2 Call (Va.) 496.

59. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Annon, 13 W. Va. 393. And see cases cited infra, this note.

A supersedeas, granted upon an ex parte application, may be vacated upon a proper showing at a subsequent term. Farrelly v. Cross, 10 Ark. 197.

A supersedeas issued by an inferior court to a judgment of the supreme court will be quashed on motion. Dibrell v. Eastland, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 507.

A writ of supersedeas which embraces several judgments, although between the same parties and upon claims of a like nature, is not given within the time limited by statute, the right to the remedy is lost; and if given thereafter it is ineffective.<sup>60</sup> The order of the judge allowing a supersedeas is to be taken as the commencement of the proceeding, in reference to the operation of the statute of limitations.<sup>61</sup>

B. Waiver of Irregularities. By appearing and filing an answer to the petition, plaintiff in execution waives any irregularity in the issuance and return of the writ.<sup>62</sup>

VII. OPERATION AND EFFECT.<sup>63</sup>

A supersedeas suspends the efficacy of a judgment,<sup>64</sup> but does not, like a reversal, annul the judgment itself.<sup>65</sup> Its object and effect are to stay future proceedings,<sup>66</sup> and not to undo what is already done.<sup>67</sup> Whatever is lawfully done under the judgment before the supersedeas takes effect is valid and must stand.<sup>68</sup> Anything done afterward is unauthorized by the judgment, and must be set aside.<sup>69</sup> A supersedeas takes effect not at the moment when it is issued, but when the proper evidence of its existence has been furnished.<sup>70</sup> When ordered and although the question is the same in all the cases, is irregular, and will be quashed as improvidently allowed; the supersedeas partaking of the character of a writ of error. Ayres v. Lewellin, 3 Leigh (Va.) 609. But see Jones v. Welch, 15 Ala. 306, holding that a writ of supersedeas, which embraces two separate executions, and commands the officer to suspend proceedings on each, is not a nullity.

A motion to discharge a supersedeas suspending an interlocutory decree for the appointment of a receiver to take possession of and rent out land will not be granted, if the proper parties in interest are not before the court, and if the proof of such party has not been taken and the cause not ready for hearing. Richmond v. Yates, 3 Baxt. (Tenn.) 204. Under the Tennessee code the only question before the court on a motion to discharge the writ is whether the order sought to be superseded was one to be actively enforced, and which might deprive petitioner of money or property in advance of the final hearing. Blake v. Dodge, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 465.

Discharge by lapse of time.—A supersedeas to stay proceedings until the next term is discharged of course at the end of the term, and therefore an order of the court discharging it during the term, which merely produced the same effect, is not erroneous. Benton v. Engleman, Cooke (Tenn.) 496.

60. Anderson v. Lively, 6 Leigh (Va.) 77. In Virginia the law forbids the emanation of a supersedeas after five years have elapsed from the date of the judgment. Anderson v. Lively, 6 Leigh 77. The order for the supersedeas should therefore either be construed to imply a compliance within the limited period, or it should impose a limitation. Anderson v. Lively, supra. The fair construction of such an order would require the party to sue out the writ, and execute the bond, at a date anterior to the first term to which it could be made returnable. Anderson v. Lively, supra. And if this be not done, then a new order should be obtained. Anderson v. Lively, supra. If there was no clerk, then, as the party was not in default, it would be competent to direct it to issue nunc pro tunc, provided the motion was addressed to the court in due season. Anderson v. Lively, supra. But it would be a gross abuse to permit the party, at any length of time, however remote, to have his supersedeas, after having so long held up the order. Anderson v. Lively, supra.

64. Polk County v. Johnson, 21 Fla. 577; Runyon v. Bennett, 4 Dana (Ky.) 598, 29 Am. Dec. 431.

A supersedeas to an interlocutory decree does not operate as an appeal or writ of error to bring the cause into the appellate court. The cause remains in the court below, and the effect of the writ is merely to suspend the operation of the decree until the final hearing. Blake v. Dodge, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 465; Redmond v. Redmond, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 561; McMinnville, etc., R. Co. v. Huggins, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 217.

and issued to an officer by proper authority, he is bound to obey it,<sup>71</sup> and if he holds property in his custody under an attachment, the supersedeas operates to release the property, and authorizes the officer to return it to the debtor,<sup>72</sup> without requiring a bond that it shall be forthcoming at the end of the suit.<sup>73</sup>

VIII. VIOLATION OF WRIT OR ORDER.<sup>74</sup>

A violation of a supersedeas is a contempt.<sup>75</sup>

IX. BONDS.<sup>76</sup>

A bond is usually required to be given by the person obtaining the supersedeas,<sup>77</sup> which bond, if the supersedeas is set aside, is given the force and effect of a judgment.<sup>78</sup> Actions on supersedeas bonds are governed by the rules applicable to actions on bonds generally.<sup>79</sup> Money judgments are sometimes authorized on supersedeas bonds.<sup>80</sup>

An order to issue a supersedeas against the sale of property seized under attachment and claimed by defendant as exempt does not authorize the constable to restore the property before the supersedeas was actually issued. Farris v. State, 33 Ark. 70.

Harlem Lighting Co.*, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 371.

Contempt generally see CONTEMPT, 9 Cyc. 1.

76. In granting supersedeas pending appeal see APPEAL AND ERROR, 2 Cyc. 895 et seq.

77. See the statutes of the several states. And see Lockhart v. McElroy, 4 Ala. 572.

Effect of failure to require bond.—Where a supersedeas was allowed, without requiring a supersedeas bond, when one ought to have been required, and the cause was docketed without objection, it was held that this was not good cause to dismiss the supersedeas on motion made after lapse of six years from the time of awarding it. Pugh v. Jones, 6 Leigh (Va.) 299.

Where execution has been improvidently issued the supreme court will issue a supersedeas without recognizance. Ex p. Smith, 4 Ark. 601.

78. See Lockhart v. McElroy, 4 Ala. 572.

Dismissal of supersedeas in chancery cause.—In the absence of statutory provisions regulating the practice on the dismissal of a supersedeas in a pending chancery cause, the chancellor may, on such dismissal, render a final decree against the principal and sureties on the supersedeas bond for the amount of the suspended decree, with interest thereon and costs. Mead v. Christian, 50 Ala. 561.

Although the condition of a bond does not conform to the statute, yet, if the bond is effectual to delay the collection of the execution, it becomes absolute upon the discharge of the supersedeas, and may be prosecuted as an obligation at common law. Hester v. Keith, 1 Ala. 316.

79. See BONDS, 5 Cyc. 811.

Pleading.—It is no ground of demurrer to a declaration upon a supersedeas bond that it does not aver the issuance and return of the writ of supersedeas; the bond admits the existence of the writ, and any defects in it are matters of defense upon issue; if indeed the execution of the bond does not waive all objections to previous proceedings. Harper v. Montgomery, 11 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 611. It is likewise no ground of objection to a declaration upon such a bond that it does not set forth with sufficient averments the judgment and execution, in consequence of which the writ of supersedeas was sued out; the bond narrates the judgment, and the execution of the bond is a waiver of the objections. Harper v. Montgomery, supra. The averment, in such declaration, that the writ was not prosecuted with effect, but was discharged, and that defendant in the execution superseded by the writ has not paid the judgment, interest, and damages, whereby the bond became forfeited, is a sufficient averment of damages to plaintiff. Harper v. Montgomery, supra.

It is necessarily a flexible term. The requisite means of support varies largely with different families, and varies often at times with the same families, because they are compelled to make the character of the support harmonize with the amount of means available therefor. There may be material injury to means of support without deprivation of the actual necessities of life, or a reduction to a state of dependence. Reath v. State, 16 Ind. App. 146, 44 N. E. 808, 809. explained by extrinsic evidence. Western Union R. Co. v. Smith, 75 Ill. 496, 502.

62. State v. Parker, 35 N. J. L. 575, 377.

"Surplus personalty" left by decedent, as meaning what is left after payment of funeral expenses, charges of administration and debts see Towery v. McGaw, 56 S. W. 727, 728, 982, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 155. See also Coates' Appeal, 2 Pa. St. 129, 137.

In a will directing the payment of certain legacies out of the residue of testator's estate and providing that "if, after the payment of these legacies, there should remain any surplus undisposed of, I give and bequeath the same unto my sons," etc., the term includes real estate. Lamb v. Lamb, 131 N. Y. 227, 236, 30 N. E. 133. But see Allen v. Allen, 18 How. (U. S.) 385, 391, 15 L. ed. 396, where the term was held not to include real estate.

In the nomenclature of bankers the term does not include "undivided profits." Leather Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Treat, 128 Fed. 262, 263, 62 C. C. A. 644.

In a war revenue act providing for payment of certain sums by bankers according to the amount of their capital stock and providing "in estimating capital surplus shall be included," the term is used in its natural and ordinary sense, as including any overplus of assets over liabilities and not in the restricted sense in which it is used in national banking legislation. Leather Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Treat, 116 Fed. 774, 775.

Distinguished from "capital stock" see Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 161 U. S. 134, 147, 16 S. Ct. 456, 40 L. ed. 645.

Meaning among insurance companies.—Expert evidence was held admissible to show that the meaning of the term, in this connection, is a sum of money or assets which has been accumulated over and above all debts and liabilities of any and all kinds whatsoever. Fry v. Providence Sav. L. Assur. Soc., (Tenn. Ch. App. 1896) 38 S. W. 116, 126. In a provision in an insurance policy entitling insured to participate in the distribution of the "surplus" of the company issuing it, the term is used to designate the amount of funds in the hands of the company after deducting its liabilities as ascertained by certain rules adopted by the insurance department for determining the value of each risk. Greeff v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc., 160 N. Y. 19, 34, 54 N. E. 712, 73 Am. St. Rep. 659, 46 L. R. A. 288.

"Surplus assets," in a statute fixing the rights of shareholders in the distribution of such assets on the winding up of a company, are held to mean that which remains after all the outside liabilities of the company have been satisfied. In re Crichton's Oil Co., [1902] 2 Ch. 86, 93, 71 L. J. Ch. 531, 86 L. T. Rep. N. S. 787, 18 T. L. R. 556.

SURPLUSAGE. Matter, in any instrument, foreign to the purpose; whatever is extraneous, impertinent, superfluous and unnecessary.<sup>64</sup> In law, matter which is not necessary or relevant to the case and may be rejected;<sup>65</sup> matter in any instrument that is not necessary to its meaning but does not affect its validity;<sup>66</sup> in pleading, an allegation without which the pleading would remain adequate at law;<sup>67</sup> that which is impertinent or entirely superfluous, as not being necessary either to the substance or the form of the pleading;<sup>68</sup> that which does not help at all;<sup>69</sup> in a complaint or declaration, a term which comprehends whatever may be stricken from the record without destroying the plaintiff's right of action;<sup>70</sup> in a verdict, that by which the verdict exceeds the issue.<sup>71</sup> Of property, a term of more restricted meaning than "rest" or "residue," applied more properly to money than lands.<sup>72</sup> (Surplusage: As Ground For Demurrer, see PLEADING, 31 Cyc. 287. SURPRISE. The act of taking unawares, sudden confusion or perplexity;<sup>73</sup> a word which in its legal acceptation denotes an unforeseen disappointment against which ordinary prudence would not have afforded protection.<sup>74</sup> In practice, the situation in which a party is unexpectedly placed, without any fault of his own, which will be injurious to his interest.<sup>75</sup> In private transactions, an

"The terms 'accident' and 'surprise,' though not strictly synonymous, have, as used in legal practice, substantially the same meaning, as each is used to denote some condition or situation in which a party to a cause is unexpectedly placed, to his injury, without any default or negligence of his own . . . which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against." McGuire v. Drew, 83 Cal. 225, 229, 23 Pac. 312 [quoted in Zimmerer v. Fremont Nat. Bank, 59 Nebr. 661, 664, 81 N. W. 849]. Surprise, as the word is used in Rev. St. (1879) § 3704, declaring it a ground for new trial, is "nearly allied to accident, which is a prominent subject for equitable relief." Fretwell v. Laffoon, 77 Mo. 26, 27. See also Connolly v. Pehle, 105 Mo. App. 407, 418, 79 S. W. 1006, where a definition, given in Story Eq. Jur. § 78, as the definition of "accident" and quoted as such in Fretwell v. Laffoon, supra, is requoted, apparently as Story's definition of "surprise," and incorrectly said to have been adopted in Fretwell v. Laffoon, supra, as such, where in fact it is used merely in pointing out the analogy between the two words.

"The inability to produce evidence otherwise available" is the only condition that can constitute such "surprise" as affords ground for setting aside a judgment and granting a new trial under § 224 of the Code of Civil Procedure; under such circumstances as the allowance of an amendment of a complaint to conform to the proof. Carlisle v. Barnes, 45 Misc. (N. Y.) 6, 10, 90 N. Y. Suppl. 810 [affirmed in 102 N. Y. App. Div. 582, 92 N. Y. 924].

In N. C. Code, § 274, providing for the relief of a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his surprise, the word implies "not simply any," but "surprise occasioned by some fact, or something that has or has not been done, of which the complaining party ought to have knowledge, and which, if he had had such knowledge, might have prevented the judgment, order or other proceeding of which he complains." Skinner v. Terry, 107 N. C. 103, 106, 12 S. E. 118.

Implies active misconduct.—"Surprise, in the legal sense of the term, that would defeat a judgment, always involves the idea that there has been active misconduct on part of the plaintiff amounting to much the same thing as fraud." Turley v. Taylor, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 376, 390.

76. See Story Eq. Jur. § 251 [adapted and qualified in Turley v. Taylor, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 376, 390, in the form of a definition, by omitting the word "is," which appears in the original, and adding the qualification "In private transactions"].

Surprise such as to vitiate a deed is "either Falsehood or Forgery, that is . . . Fraud; if that be not the meaning of it . . . something done suddenly and unawares, not with all the Precaution and Deliberation as possibly a Deed may be done." Bath's Case, 3 Ch. Cas. 55, 74, 22 Eng. Reprint 963.

77. Webster Int. Dict. adding: "As, the 'surrender' of a castle to an enemy; the 'surrender' of a right."

Yielding, not sale.—"The term 'surrendered' does not express, or in any sense suggest, the transaction of a 'sale' and 'delivery.' It involves the idea of yielding, of delivering in response to a demand," and, as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 751, does not apply to the selling or delivery of a bond or other security by the county treasurer without order of court. Tompkins County v. Ingersoll, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 344, 347, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 242 [affirmed in 177 N. Y. 543, 69 N. E. 1132].

"The surrender of a charter can only be made by some formal solemn act of the corporation; and will be of no avail until accepted by the government. There must be real property, the resignation of a particular estate for life or for years to one in the immediate reversion or remainder;<sup>78</sup> a yielding up of an estate for life or years to him that hath the immediate estate in reversion or remainder, wherein the estate for life or years may drown by mutual agreement;<sup>79</sup> the yielding up of an estate for life or years to the reversioner or remainderman;<sup>80</sup> the yielding up of the less estate to him who has the reversion or remainder;<sup>81</sup> the restoring and yielding up an estate or interest in lands to one who has an immediate estate in reversion or remainder;<sup>82</sup> a falling of a lesser estate into a greater;<sup>83</sup> of a lease-the same agreement of the parties to dissolve, that there was to form the compact. It is the acceptance which gives efficacy to the surrender." Boston Glass Manufactory v. Langdon, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 49, 53, 35 Am. Dec. 292.

Of a policy for modification.—As used in a declaration on a policy, alleging a "surrender" of the policy at the request of the insurance company that it might be modified, the word "plainly means only a handing over of the document to the defendant for the purpose of modification." Goodhue v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 175 Mass. 187, 189, 55 N. E. 1039.

Of securities, within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), see Firth v. Inland Revenue Com'rs, [1904] 2 K. B. 205, 207, 73 L. J. K. B. 632, 91 L. T. Rep. N. S. 138, 20 T. L. R. 447, 52 Wkly. Rep. 622.

Distinguished from "assignment" see Scott v. Scott, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 150, 159.

It "indicates a transfer of title as well as of possession" and "carries with it something more than a bare delivery." Evans v. U. S., 153 U. S. 584, 591, 14 S. Ct. 934, 38 L. ed. 830, construing the word as used in an indictment charging defendant with procuring "surrender and delivery" to himself of national bank funds in violation of Rev. St. § 5209.

Either express or by operation of law.—"It is either in express words by which the lessee manifests his intention to yield up his interest in the premises to the lessor, or by operation of law, when the parties, without any express surrender, do some act which implies that they have both agreed to the surrender as made." Taylor Landl. & Ten. § 507 [quoted in Brewer v. National Union Bldg. Assoc., 166 Ill. 221, 225, 46 N. E. 752]. See also LANDLORD AND TENANT, 24 Cyc. 1366, 1367.

Of prior interests.—As used in Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 251), § 15, providing for payment of duty in case of acceleration of the title "by the surrender or extinction of a prior interest," the quoted words refer "to cases of assignment by the remainderman of his remainder to the tenant for life or of release by the tenant for life of his life tenancy to the remainderman." Ex p. Sitwell, 21 Q. B. D. 466, 469, 59 L. T. Rep. N. S. 539, 37 Wkly. Rep. 238.

With slight variations the same definition, substantially, is given by other authorities, as follows: "A 'yielding up of an estate for life or years to him that hath the immediate reversion or remainder, wherein the particular estate may merge or drown by mutual agreement between them.'" 2 Blackstone Comm. 326 [quoted in Scott v. Scott, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 150, 159]. See also Washburn Real Prop. § 546 [quoted in Fisher v. Edington, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 189, 193], where it is said: "If a tenant for life or years yields up his estate to him who has the immediate estate in reversion or remainder, it is called by the law a surrender, the effect of which is to extinguish all claim for rent not due at the time. The estate for years in such case is drowned by mutual agreement between them."

Ct. 443, 49 L. ed. 790, where it is said that "in Webster's International Dictionary, the word is primarily defined the same way," the court, no doubt, having in mind the second definition in Webster's International Dictionary which is as follows: "To yield to the power of another; to give or deliver up possession of (anything) upon compulsion or demand; as, to 'surrender' one's person to an enemy or to an officer; to 'surrender' a fort or a ship"].

The word "does not exclude compelled action, but to the contrary generally implies such action. That this is the primary and commonly accepted meaning of the word is shown by the dictionaries. . . . The word, of course, also sometimes denotes voluntary action." Keppel v. Tiffin Sav. Bank, 197 U. S. 356, 362, 25 S. Ct. 443, 49 L. ed. 790.

Not "to vacate, or locate," in any sense of the word see Megrue v. Putnam County, 15 Ohio Cir. Ct. 242, 244, 8 Ohio Cir. Dec. 262.

As used in Bankruptcy Act (1898), § 579, providing that "the claims of creditors who have received preferences shall not be allowed unless such creditors shall surrender their preferences," the word denotes an enforced, as well as a voluntary preference. Keppel v. Tiffin Sav. Bank, 197 U. S. 356, 360, 362, 25 S. Ct. 443, 49 L. ed. 790 [cited in In re Otto F. Lange Co., 170 Fed. 114, 116, and distinguished in In re Armstrong, 145 Fed. 202, 210].

87. See Nolander v. Burns, 48 Minn. 13, 17, 50 N. W. 1016, where the exact language used is "'surrender,' which undoubtedly means 'yielded, rendered, or delivered up.'" will by false suggestions prevail upon another to do that which otherwise he would not have done.<sup>90</sup>

SURREPTITIOUSLY. A word which, in its ordinary use, implies fraud, secrecy or stealth, in doing.<sup>91</sup>

SURROGATE. In American law, the name given in some of the states to the judge or judicial officer who has the administration of probate matters, guardianships, etc.<sup>92</sup> A word which, as used in a statute relating specifically to the accounting and settlement of estates and lacking words conferring power to act upon any surrogate in the state, must be deemed to refer to the judicial officer who has or had general jurisdiction over the estate, its representatives, and its management and disposition.<sup>93</sup> In English law, he who is appointed in the stead of another, most commonly of a bishop or his chancellor.<sup>94</sup> (See SURROGATE'S COURT or SURROGATE COURT.)

91. See Yates v. Huson, 8 App. Cas. (D. C.) 93, 98, 99, construing U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 4290, requiring one who contests the validity of a patent on the ground of prior invention to show that such patent was obtained "surreptitiously or unjustly" where, in disposing of the argument of counsel that the words "surreptitiously or unjustly" implied fraud or false suggestion and required that a showing of craft or stealth on the part of the patentee be made, the court used the following language: "The argument is founded on the word 'surreptitiously,' taken in its usual signification, and completely ignores the alternative word 'unjustly,'" and, referring to the amendment of the statute to the form in question, "A learned author's view of the history . . . of the word 'surreptitiously' is that the word has thereby 'lost its former significance and become the equivalent of 'unjustly' (3 Rob. on Pats., sec. 960, note 1), because 'no fraud or deceit is necessary to render void a patent obtained by a later true inventor when the first inventor is complying with the obligation of diligence imposed upon him by the law.' Whether that view of the change wrought in the meaning of the word 'surreptitiously' be correct or not, it seems clear to us that . . . the word 'unjustly' was not added carelessly or without a special purpose. The words are not synonymous, and though 'unjustly' may include the idea of a thing done fraudulently, and secretly as well, its ordinary meaning is, contrary to justice or that which is right."

Distinguished from unjustly see supra, this note.

In pleading.—As applied to an act which is the subject of a complaint, "surreptitiously" and such epithets are "merely allegations of conclusions of law, which a demurrer does not admit." Lumley v. Wabash R. Co., 71 Fed. 21, 28 [reversed on other grounds in 76 Fed. 66, 22 C. C. A. 60].

SURVEY. A. AS A NOUN. Of land, in one sense, an attentive or particular view; examination of the land with a design to ascertain the condition, quantity, or value; not necessarily a paper containing the courses, distances, and quantity of land; not necessarily a plot of land made by a survey or as such;<sup>97</sup> a word which may apply as well to the map, plat, or chart, exhibiting the result of actual examination of the surface of the ground as it does to the examination itself;<sup>98</sup> the actual measurement of land ascertaining the contents by running lines and angles, marking the same and fixing corners and boundaries;<sup>99</sup> sometimes synonymous with "land," "grant," "location;"<sup>1</sup> generally, when used in relation to location of proprietary rights, a description, in words or figures, of the lands located;<sup>2</sup> under a proprietary title, as a means of setting off lands, an instrument sui generis in the nature of a partition; a customary mode in which a proprietor has set off to himself, in severalty, a part of the common estate.<sup>3</sup> Of logs, the act of counting

98. Hahn v. Cotton, 136 Mo. 216, 224, 37 S. W. 919, construing the word "as used in the law governing the adjustment of disputes concerning boundaries of land."

Failure to mark one of the lines of a survey does not necessarily vitiate it, the survey of a quadrilateral, made by running three sides and capable of completion by running a single straight line, is a survey under the Utah laws; a quadrilateral survey so made as to establish the four corners without running any of its external lines might be a good survey. Alford v. Dewin, 1 Nev. 207, 214.

"Map" or "profile" is not necessarily the meaning of "survey." They "are sometimes used as convertible terms, but not always. In the act of 1719, for settling the boundary between East and West Jersey, a plain distinction is made between 'books of surveys' and 'maps' or 'draughts' of land." Atty.-Gen. v. Stevens, 1 N. J. Eq. 369, 385, 22 Am. Dec. 526, holding that a charter requirement that a railroad company before taking possession of its land, file a survey of its route and location is satisfied by the filing of a description by courses and distances, the road in question being the Camden and Amboy Railroad and Transportation Company.

An actual survey and not a mere declaration of opinion based on statutes and personal knowledge of the country on the part of surveyors is required by Colo. Laws (1887), p. 238, § 1, providing for survey of county boundaries disputed for indefiniteness, the use of the expressions "run out and establish," "fix and define such boundary line" by plain and substantial mounds and marks, and unmistakable monuments" with a provision in case the "surveyor of either of such counties, shall not appear and assist the state engineer in making such survey," leading to that conclusion. Mineral County v. Hinsdale County, 25 Colo. 95, 99, 100, 53 Pac. 383 [reversing 9 Colo. App. 368, 48 Pac. 675].

Not necessarily upon the surface.—The "survey" authorized by N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1682, may be made in a tunnel, in a proper case. Howe's Cave Lime, etc., Co. v. Howe's Cave Assoc., 88 Hun (N. Y.) 554, 558, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 848 [affirmed in 147 N. Y. 721, 42 N. E. 723].

"Subject to survey."—"A demise of land at an Acreage Rent, 'subject to Survey,' means, that the acreable contents shall be ascertained by actual measurement for the purpose of fixing the amount of rent." Stroud Jud. Dict. [citing Persse v. Malcolmson, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 572].

Map and survey of the route of a railroad as required by Mich. Laws (1859), pp. 559, 560, as a prerequisite to appraisal of land for condemnation, means "not only a delineation upon paper or other material, giving a general, or approximate idea of the situation of the road, but also such full and accurate notes and data as are necessary to furnish complete means for identifying and ascertaining the precise position of every part of the line with courses and distances throughout, so that there can be no doubt as to where any portion of it is to be found. A map can be made to contain all of those data, so as to need no reference to field notes, but the information must exist somewhere." Convers' Appeal, 18 Mich. 459, 466 [quoted in San Francisco, etc., R. Co. v. Gould, 122 Cal. 601, 603, 55 Pac. 411].

99. Winter v. U. S., 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,895, Hempst. 344, 371 [citing Jacob L. Dict. (where, however, the word is defined "to measure, lay out, or particularly describe a manor, or estate in lands; and to ascertain not only the bounds and royalties thereof, but the tenure of the respective tenants, the rent and value of the same, &c."); Webster Dict. (where the word is defined in this sense as "the act of surveying . . . the operation of finding the contour, dimensions, position, or other particulars of, as any part of the earth's surface, whether land or water; also, a measured plan and description of any portion of country")].

Not a conveyance see Estell v. Bricksburg Land, etc., Co., 35 N. J. L. 235, 237 [quoted in Jennings v. Burnham, 56 N. J. L. 289, 291, 28 Atl. 1048].

B. AS A VERB. To inspect or take a view of; to view with attention; to view with a scrutinizing eye; to examine; to measure as land;<sup>7</sup> to examine with reference to condition, situation, and value;<sup>8</sup> to inspect with reference to condition, situation, and value; to determine the boundaries, extent, position, etc.<sup>9</sup> (Survey: Angles to Be Adopted in Determining Courses and Distances, see BOUNDARIES, 5 Cyc. 877. construed by the rules applicable to conveyance, but it appears to be an acknowledgment of the common owners that a certain portion of the joint estate has been assigned to one of the original proprietors, or to an assignee of such proprietor. The certainty of the party to whom the title has been passed, is to be ascertained not from the record of the survey, but from the deed of the proprietor, in those cases in which he has parted with the title: The office of the survey and return is fully discharged when it shows that a parcel of designated land has been set apart in severalty, under the title of one of the original holders; to whose benefit such allotment endures, is a matter to be settled, if a stranger claim by the ordinary proofs." *Estell v. 4. Antill v. Potter, 69 Minn. 192, 195, 71 N. W. 935, so construing the word as used in Minn. Gen. St. (1894) §§ 2397, 2406, to the effect that no survey of any logs except the survey of the surveyor-general shall be received in any court.

5. See Albion Lead Works v. Williamsburg City F. Ins. Co., 2 Fed. 479, 483, where it is said that "plan," "application," and "survey" are often used synonymously, and "survey" most commonly of the three, the word having been adopted as a substitute for "application," evidently to avoid confusion between the two uses of the latter word, which, in the technical sense in which "survey," also, is used, means an application upon a form furnished for the purpose, containing details in answer to questions, but, in another sense, may mean a mere letter asking for insurance.

6. Potter v. Ocean Ins. Co., 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,335, 3 Summ. 27, 43 [quoted in Hathaway v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 33, 68].

The object of a survey is to assist the judgment of the master, as to his proceeding to repair damage, or to sell the ship. It is designed to protect him in the fair discharge of his difficult and often critically responsible duty in great emergency, by giving him the aid of the opinion of other men of sound judgment, intelligence, and skill in naval affairs. Potter v. Ocean Ins. Co., 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,335, 3 Summ. 27, 42.

With a view to the sale of a vessel, a survey—that is, a precedent examination by competent surveyors and their report stating the condition of the vessel and advising a sale, affords authentic evidence to guide the master, but does not bind him to sell, nor, of itself, justify a sale. It is an important element in the proofs, in determining the character of the emergency and, especially, the good faith of the master. It should be deliberately made and precede the action of the master. The report should be sworn if an oath can be legally administered at the place of survey. It is not a fixed rule that all proceedings of the surveyors shall be under oath, but such a formality adds to the weight and credit of their decision. A paper signed but not subscribed or sworn until after the sale, signed by persons who were not asked to the vessel to act as surveyors, who made no joint examination of her, nor consulted with a view to a report, nor all individually inspected the vessel in such a way as to enable them to form a sound opinion as to her condition, is defective. The Henry, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,372, 1 Blatchf. & H. 465, 472, 474 [cited in Hathaway v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 33, 69].

10. Black L. Dict.

As defined by Public Health Act (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), § 4, and as used in that act, "surveyor" includes any person appointed by a rural authority to perform any of the duties of surveyor under this Act," therefore one of whom a local power, empowered, by section 189 of the act, to appoint "fit and proper persons" to be surveyors, has merely determined that he is "competent, first, to be their assistant-surveyor, and, secondly, to discharge such of the duties of surveyor as might be necessary or proper" in the absence of their officer, is not "the 'surveyor'" within the meaning of the latter section, or of section 16 making the report of the "surveyor" the test of power to extend sewers through certain places. Lewis v. Weston-super-Mare Local Bd., 40 Ch. D. 55, 56, 68, 69, 58 L. J. Ch. 39, 59 L. T. Rep. N. S. 769, 37 Wkly. Rep. 121 [distinguished in Kendal v. Lewisham, 19 T. L. R. 384 (argued on appeal but settled in 20 T. L. R. 21)].

"Surveyor for the time being," authorized by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), § 105, to estimate the expenses of paving streets, does not mean the permanent surveyor or any particular officer, and his acts are therefore not open to objection for lack of appointment as permanent surveyor. Kendal v. Lewisham, 19 T. L. R. 384 [argued on appeal but settled in 20 T. L. R. 21, and distinguishing Lewis v. Weston-super-Mare Local Bd., 40 Ch. D. 55, 58 L. J. Ch. 39, 59 L. T. Rep. N. "Able practical surveyor."—Under the Trustee Act (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), § 4, indemnifying a trustee who in making a loan on mortgage "was acting upon a report as to the value of the property made by a person whom the trustee reasonably believed to be an able practical surveyor or valuer, instructed and employed independently of any owner of property" a mere assumption by the trustee that the person upon whose report the loan is made is such a surveyor is not sufficient, and proof of some knowledge on the part of the trustee is requisite. In re Walker, 59 L. J. Ch. 386, 391, 62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 449.

"A quantity surveyor, is a person 'whose business consists in taking out in detail the Measurements and Quantities, from plans prepared by an architect, for the purpose of enabling Builders to calculate the amount for which they could execute the plans.'" 3 Stroud Jud. Dict. 1634, tit. "Quantity Surveyor" [citing Taylor v. Hall, 4 Ir. R. C. L. 476]. There is no privity of contract between a quantity surveyor and builder who tenders for the building contract. 3 Stroud Jud. Dict. 1634 [citing Taylor v. Hall, 4 Ir. R. C. L. 476]; Priestley v. Stone, 4 T. L. R. 730 [distinguished in North v. Bassett, infra]. A quantity surveyor may recover his fees from those who have employed the architect who engaged him when it is the custom for architects to engage quantity surveyors, and this is implied in the contract between the architect and his employers. Moon v. Witney Union, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 814, 817, 819, 3 Hodges 206, 6 L. J. C. P. 305, 5 Scott 1, 32 E. C. L. 374. Compare 3 Stroud Jud. Dict. 1635 [citing *Antisell v. The fees of a quantity surveyor are payable, according to valid custom, by the builder whose tender, based on the quantity surveyor's specifica-

SURVEYOR OF HIGHWAYS. In certain of the United States, a public officer clothed with certain powers and duties which are prescribed and regulated by statute;<sup>11</sup> merely a ministerial officer of the town council, subject to their directions, is accepted, but, if no tender is accepted, by the building owner or architect. North v. Bassett, [1892] 1 Q. B. 333, 335, 336, 56 J. P. 389, 61 L. J. Q. B. 177, 66 L. T. Rep. N. The builder has no action on the ground that he was misled by inaccurate specifications of the quantity surveyor, and put to unexpected expense thereby, against the owner of the building, unless he can prove three things, namely, that the quantity surveyor was the owner's agent, that the quantity surveyor was guilty of fraud or misrepresentation, and that the owner knew of, or sanctioned it. Scrivener v. Pask, L. R. 1 C. P. 715, 719.

11. Walcott v. Swampscott, 1 Allen (Mass.) 101, 102.

Function.—"They are elected by towns and cities, not because they are to render services for their peculiar benefit or advantage, but because this mode of appointment has been deemed expedient by the legislature in the distribution of public duties and burdens for the purposes of the government, and for the good order and welfare of the community. . . . Towns cannot direct or control them in the performance of these duties; they cannot remove them from office during the term for which they are chosen; . . . nor can towns exercise any right of selecting the servants or agents by whom they perform the work of repairing the highways. In the discharge of these general duties they are wholly independent of towns, and can in no sense be considered their servants or agents." Walcott v. Swampscott, 1 Allen (Mass.) 101, 102. "He is clothed with very limited and well defined powers and duties. . . . He has no power to change the established grade of a highway, nor has he any power to change the actual grade thereof, whether this be the record grade or not, except in so far as such change may be necessary to make the same safe and convenient for travelers. And having no power to make any such change, it necessarily follows that no duty rests upon him in this regard." Sweet v. Conley, 20 R. I. 381, 383, 39 Atl. 326. The powers and duties of surveyors of highways are the same as those of commissioners of highways and are "to keep the highways in repair and amended," together with such incidental and additional powers as are conferred by Pub. St. c. 65. They do not include extensions and improvements for the building or entire rebuilding of bridges and the appointment of a committee by the town council for such purposes is not a usurpation of their powers. State v. White, 16 R. I. 591, 594, 18 Atl. 179, 1038.

He is not the mere agent (White v. Phillipston, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 108, 110; Mathewson v. Hawkins, 19 R. I. 16, 20, 31 Atl. 430) or servant of the town (Mathewson v. Hawkins, supra).

Liability.—"They are not amenable to towns for the manner in which they discharge the trust reposed in them by law." Walcott v. Swampscott, 1 Allen (Mass.) 101, 102. "It has never been held that an action would lie, by the party injured, against the surveyor of the highway himself, for his alleged neglect of duty, or that such surveyor is answerable, except in the manner provided for in the statutes. . . . If in that district of the highways assigned to him to keep in repair, any deficiency exists, occasioned by his fault or neglect, he may be prosecuted for the same by indictment. And if the town also shall be sentenced to pay a fine for any such deficiency, the surveyor, within whose limits such deficiency may be found, shall be liable to the town for the amount of such fine and the costs of prosecution, to be recovered by the town in an action on the case, if such deficiency exist through his fault or neglect. Rev. Sts. c. 15, §§ 83, 84. But no other action is specially given against him, where a recovery has been had against the town. He is not treated by the statute as a mere agent or servant whom the town has employed, and to whom, as such agent or servant, he is directly responsible for any neglect of duty. . . . A judgment against the town, in a civil action, is not the ground of a suit against him." White v. Phillipston, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 108, 110.

Power to render town liable only exceptional.—"It is only in certain specified cases, and under carefully guarded limitations, that they can bind towns by their acts." The town is not liable in a civil action for damages due to the negligence or lack of skill of a highway surveyor or one in his employ. Walcott v. Swampscott, 1 Allen (Mass.) 101, 102. They have "no authority to incur any indebtedness against the town, except, perhaps, in case of emergency such as the removal of snow or other obstruction from the highways." Sweet v. Conley, 20 R. I. 381, 383, 39 Atl. 326. "Such officer cannot be regarded as an agent for whose acts or contracts the town can be held liable." Mathewson v. Hawkins, 19 R. I. 16, 20, 31 Atl. 430.

Not entitled to payment unless by contract see Sikes v. Hatfield, 13 Gray (Mass.) 347, 352, 353, where it is said: "It is not an office to which, by law or usage, any compensation is attached, unless the town choose to contract for it," and held that the highway surveyor cannot recover from the town for labor performed by himself merely because the money appropriated to his district is not sufficient to put the roads in a proper condition, and that the fact that the town has in some instances consented to pay for work done under like circumstances is not evidence of the contract with him; nor is the fact that they have offered to pay him a

See also SURVEY, ante, p. 621.)

SURVIVABILITY. A term which has been said to be, in general, convertible with "assignability" as a quality of causes of action,<sup>16</sup> or things in action,<sup>17</sup> in the sense that in things of that nature the two conditions are co-existent.<sup>18</sup> (Survivability: Power of Survival Equivalent to Assignability, see ABATEMENT AND sum which he has declined evidence of a debt.

He may testify against the town in a civil action in which the town is defendant, for a defect in that part of the highway within his district. White v. Phillipston, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 108, 111.

Advantages.—"The office of surveyor of highways is one which generally is quite extensively distributed, by having a considerable number of districts, in such towns as do not make the care of the highways the subject of special contract. It is an office which, according to the usual practice, affords some compensating advantages to its possessor, and is not unfrequently an object of competition. The surveyor has the opportunity to work out his own tax, where the tax is to be expended in labor, at such time as he may himself determine; and may expend, according to his best judgment, the portions of the tax which may be paid to him in money. He usually finds opportunity to employ some labor profitably in working out the taxes of his neighbors who may employ him for that purpose. But above all, he is enabled to secure at least a reasonable degree of attention to such parts of the public ways as more especially affect his personal convenience." Sikes v. Hatfield, 13 Gray (Mass.) 347, 352.

12. Sweet v. Conley, 20 R. I. 381, 383, 39 Atl. 326.

13. Mathewson v. Hawkins, 19 R. I. 16, 19, 31 Atl. 430.

14. Black L. Dict. [citing Mozley & Whitley L. Dict.], adding: "He must possess certain qualifications in point of property; and, when elected, he is compellable, unless he can show some grounds of exemption, to take upon himself the office."

By the Public Health Act (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), § 144, every "urban authority" was made "surveyor of highways" exclusively "within their district." Therefore, after the passage of that act, where a rural district council was the "urban authority," it, as a board, was "surveyor," and an individual, although one of its members, could not be convicted of misconduct as "surveyor" under the Highway Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50), § 46, providing a penalty for certain offenses on the part of such "surveyor." *Buckley v. 20. See, in Jordan v. Roach, 32 Miss. 481, 613, the following language: "The word 'survive' in its popular signification, may mean 'over-living a specific individual,' or 'living beyond a specific event,' or it may mean 'still living,' or 'living at some designated period of time.'"

"Surviving" construed as synonymous with "living" (Barker's Appeal, 1 Pa. Cas. 324, 326, 3 Atl. 377); "living beyond some period" (In re Benn, 29 Ch. D. 839, 844, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 240, 34 Wkly. Rep. 6).

"Then surviving" construed "who may be alive" see Fisher v. Anderson, 4 Can. Sup. Ct. 406, 417.

In statute of distribution.—In the provincial statute of William and Mary, concerning distribution and settlement of estates, providing that if any of the children happen to die before he or she come of age, or be married, the portion of such child deceased shall be equally divided among the survivors, the term "survivors" means the surviving children, to the exclusion of parents. Roney v. Edmands, 15 Mass. 291, 292.

Interested witness and survivor of deceased.—In Worth Amended Code, c. 130, § 23, providing that no interested person shall be examined as to any communication between himself and a survivor of a deceased person, except in his own behalf, "survivor" means "every person, who by reason of his surviving the deceased becomes as such survivor interested in the subject of the controversy" and includes such persons as "tenants by curtesy, tenants by dower, the survivor in a joint tenancy of land, which had been held by a deed to husband and wife, whether such survivor were the husband or the wife, a widower or widow, who by surviving . . . became a distributee" of the estate of the spouse and, doubtless, other classes of successors of deceased persons. *Seabright v. SURVIVORSHIP. A. In General. The living of one of two or more persons after the death of the other or others.<sup>33</sup> In relation to property, the condition that exists where a person becomes entitled to property by reason of his having survived another person who had an interest in it.<sup>34</sup>

B. Words of Survivorship — 1. IN WILLS — a. In General. The several meanings of the word "survive" and its derivatives, in their relation to persons and events,<sup>35</sup> have puzzled the courts for centuries, especially in wills, where they have resulted in a multitude of conflicting decisions and attempts to reconcile them upon various theories.<sup>36</sup> The words in their natural import refer to the one

"Longest liver" as the idea carried with the word where the gift is to two and the survivor see Keating v. Reynolds, 1 Bay (S. C.) 80, 87. Title by survivorship exists only when the estate is held in joint ownership. The mere deposit, in a savings-bank, of money which is the wife's separate property, in the names of her husband and herself, does not show joint ownership and is not a basis of title by survivorship in the husband at her death. Denigan v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 127 Cal. 142, 149, 59 Pac. 390, 78 Am. St. Rep. 35.

Operation of law involved in survivorship as source of ownership see Atty.-Gen. v. Brown, 5 Ont. L. Rep. 167, 172, 2 Ont. Wkly. Rep. 30, where it is said: "... the property in question does not pass or accrue by survivorship, i. e., by operation of law," and held that such survivorship does not exist as the source of title to the subject of a transaction which, although in form a donatio causa mortis, is, in fact, the fulfilment of a contract that, as between the decedent and the recipient, the survivor shall take certain property; also that Ont. Rev. St. (1897) c. 24, § 4(d), relating to property which passes by survivorship, applies to "joint tenancies created by the deceased when absolutely entitled to the whole" and has no application to matter which passes as the subject of an express agreement taking effect as part of the contract at the death of one of the parties thereto.

No certain rule of construction see Taaffe v. Conmee, 10 H. L. Cas. 64, 77, 8 Jur. N. S. 919, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 666, 11 Eng. Reprint 949, where, of the word "survivor," it is said: "I think it not possible, and I think it would be very dangerous, to attempt to derive from decisions any certain and general rule of interpretation of the word, or of the period to which it ought to be considered as referring."

Objectionable for vagueness see Graves v. Spurr, 97 Ky. 651, 659, 31 S. W. 483, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 411, where it is said of the word "surviving": "This objectionable term is not used. Such a word . . . might and would, unless controlled by other expressions of the will, make the person who was to take uncertain."

Two constructions in one will.—As to two constructions of the same word used once only see infra, p. 642 text and notes 89, 90. Where there were legacies of specific sums to the surviving children of C, and also of the interest of funded property to C for life and after her death such property to be divided among her surviving children, it was held that the first "surviving" referred to the time of the testatrix's death, and that the former use did not affect the latter. Neathway v. Read, 3 De G. M. & G. 18, 19, 20, 17 Jur. 169, 22 L. J. Ch. 809, 52 Eng. Ch. 14, 43 Eng. Reprint 8. It seems that "survivors" and "survivor" may have a more enlarged meaning in one part of the will than in another. Winterton v. Crawford, 1 Russ. & M. 407, 412, 5 Eng. Ch. 407, 39 Eng. Reprint 157.

Dependence on context illustrated see Hoover v. Gregory, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 444, 449, where, in construing a devise to a daughter and, if she should die without issue, to "the survivor," an allusion elsewhere in the will to testator's "two children," with the fact that he had no more, was held to show that he had the two in mind, and therefore meant by "survivor" his son.

Not implied by postponement of possession.—A devise in fee "to my grandchildren, whatever number they may be . . . share and share alike, to take possession only after the death of my said daughters" is not a grant to "'surviving' grandchildren," but, except for the postponement of possession, a present and unconditional grant of a present fee. Cheney v. Teese, 108 Ill. 473, 482.

will.<sup>44</sup> A general rule has been expressed, in varying terms, to the effect that when the gift to survivors, or, at all events the enjoyment and possession thereof, is immediate upon the death of the testator, words of survivorship are referred to that period, but, otherwise, to some later time.<sup>45</sup> Where, however, an estate intervenes between the death of the testator and the taking in possession of the gift qualified by words of survivorship, the question of construction is by no means settled.<sup>46</sup> Two conflicting general rules, each subject to intent, have been laid where it is said: "If all these sisters had not survived their mother, [the tenant for life] possibly I might have adopted the construction, that it related to the death of the mother, and not of the testator."

Connors*, 10 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 389, 392 (where it is said: "In general, words of survivorship are significant of the death of testator, but when a future period of distribution is fixed by a will, such as the termination of a life estate, or when a legatee shall attain twenty-one years, then for the benefit of the legatees and in increase of the objects of bounty, the terms are 'referred' to the period of distribution"); In re Benn, 29 Ch. Rep. 6 (where it is said: "There is no canon as to the period to which survivorship is to be referred, except that in an immediate gift it is to be referred to the death of the testator, and if there is a life estate then to the determination of the life estate"); Theobald Wills 508, (6th ed.) 654 [quoted in Reiff's Estate, 124 Pa. St. 145, 151, 16 Atl. 636] (where it is said: "If there is no previous interest given in the legacy, then the period of division is the death of the testator, and the survivors on his death will take the whole legacy. 46. See Branson v. Hill, 31 Md. 181, 187, 188, 1 Am. Rep. 40 (where it is said: "Few questions in regard to the construction of wills have given rise to greater difficulty than the proper meaning of the words of survivorship, as used in the will before us, and the decisions are conflicting and irreconcilable with each other. Where the gift is to take effect in possession immediately upon the death of the testator, it is plain that the words of survivorship must refer to that time, there being no other period in the devise to which they could relate. But where the gift is not immediate (i. e., 'in possession'), there being a prior life, or other particular interest carried out, so that there is another period to which the words could refer, the question becomes one of greater difficulty. . . . An examination of the earlier English cases will show that the Courts uniformly held that words of survivorship in wills of both real and personal estate, referred to the death of the testator. Some of the cases went upon the particular phraseology and context of the will—others upon the probable intention of the testator, making allowances for the deficiency and inaccuracy of expression so commonly to be found in testamentary instruments, and the policy of the law which favors the vesting of estates—and others again upon the presumption that the testator did not intend to cut off from the provisions of his will, the children and descendants of such of the primary legatees or devisees as might happen to die before the termination of the intermediate estate. But . . . in the later English decisions, especially where there is a gift of personal estate to a person for life, and after the termination of such interests to certain persons nominatim, or to a class, there is a strong inclination to refer the words of survivorship to the period of distribution, or to the termination of the intermediate estate. That is to say, the legatees surviving at that time, take to the exclusion of the personal representatives of such as may have died before that period. And to this modern rule of construction such eminent elementary writers as Mr. Jarman and Mr. Redfield give their unqualified approval. . . . In this country, however, the weight of authority seems to be in favor of the earlier rule, which refers the words of survivorship to the death of the testator, and this too without recognizing any distinction between real and personal estate"); Matter of Cramer, 59 N. Y. App. Div. 541, 543, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 299 [affirmed in 170 N. Y. 271, 63 N. E. 279] (where it is held that the word "survivor" in a will is not necessarily restricted to death before that of the testator, and said: "While the general use of the term is limited to that sense, the rule is not a hard and fast one and yields like all arbitrary tests to the intention of the tes-down and followed, the one referring words of survivorship to the death of the testator; the other, to the period of distribution;<sup>47</sup> while, according to one theory, such words are to be referred to a period, whether that of the testator's death or of the end of some estate under the will, when and because it is the period of distribution of the subject-matter of the gift.<sup>48</sup> But a period which is neither of tator"); Ross v. Drake, 37 Pa. St. 373, 376 (to the same effect as Johnson v. Morton, infra); Johnson v. Morton, 10 Pa. St. 245, 250 (where it is said: "All the authorities concur, perhaps without exception, that, when the gift is 'immediate,' that is, in possession, it is to be treated as intended to provide for the death of the objects of the testator's bounty in the lifetime of the testator; the devise affording no other point of time to which they could be referred. . . . But, when the limitation was not immediate, (that is, in possession,) there being a prior life . . . or other particular interest carved out, so that there 'was' another period to which the words survivor or survivors could be referred, was a point, it seems, of more difficulty. In these cases, as well as in the cases where the gift was immediate, the courts of England, as Mr. Powell, in his Treatise on Devises, vol. 2, p. 750, very correctly observes, for a considerable period, perhaps for upwards of one hundred years, applied the words in question to the period of the death of the testator, on the idea that there was no other mode of reconciling the words of survivorship with the words of severance, creating a tenancy in common. . . . Such was the state of the question on authority when Sir J. Leach, at that time the Vice-Chancellor, in Cripps v. Wolcott, 4 Madd. 11, 20 Rev. Rep. 268, 56 Eng. Reprint 613, undertook to reverse the general rule, and to refer the limitation, in favor of survivors, to the death of the tenant for life, rather than the death of the testator. . . . For our part, we are inclined to adhere to the law, as settled prior to our revolution, and, however we may respect the opinions of Sir John Leach, they are no authority here. Besides, in addition to the reason that it is intended to prevent a lapse, the old rule has the further recommendation, that it preserves the rights of children, as here, intermediate between the time of the death of the testator and the time of the period of distribution. . . . Although we believe the general rule to be, that the words of survivorship must be referred to the death of the testator, whether the gift is immediate, or the limitation is after a prior life, or particular interest carved out; yet that general intent may be controlled by particular expressions in the will, indicating a contrary intent"); Martin v. Kirby, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 67, 68 (where it is said: "Where a devise or testamentary gift is made to several, with words of survivorship annexed, or where the gift is to such of a class as shall survive, it becomes important to ascertain to what period the words of survivorship are intended to refer. Where no previous particular estate is interposed, but the gift is to take effect in possession immediately on the death of the testator, the established rule of construction is, to refer the words of survivorship to that event, and to regard them as designed to provide against the contingency of the death of the objects of the testator's bounty in his life time. Where, however, the gift is not to take effect in possession immediately upon the death of the testator, but a previous estate for life, or other particular estate, is interposed, there is much greater difficulty in determining the construction by which the period of the survivorship is to be ascertained. The cases on the subject are numerous and would seem not to be by any means all accordant. . . . In the earlier cases, almost without an exception, it will be found that the words of survivorship have been held to refer to the period of the testator's death. . . . On the other hand, numerous cases are to be found, affirming a different rule, and referring the words of survivorship to the death of the tenant for life, or other prior particular estate); 2 Jarman Wills (3d Am. ed.) 462 [quoted in Ridgeway v. Newberry, 99 Ill. 11, 44] (where it is said: "Where there is a clause of survivorship, primâ-facie survivorship means the time at which the property to be divided comes into enjoyment—that is to say, if there be no previous life estate, at the death of the testator; if there be a previous life estate, then at the termination of that life estate"); Young v. Robertson, 8 Jur. N. S. 825, 826 (where, after stating as a rule of construction finally established in England that "words of survivorship occurring in a settlement (that is, a will) should be referred to the period appointed by that settlement for the payment or distribution of the subject-matter of the gift," it is said: "Now, here

(II) TIME OF DEATH OF TESTATOR. Where the death of the testator has been taken as the period of survivorship, various reasons have been given,<sup>51</sup> such as a general rule of construction subject to express intent;<sup>52</sup> or to preserve the estate

the application of that rule would lead to this determination in two sets of events. If a testator gives a sum of money or the residue of his estate to be paid or distributed among a number of persons, and refers to the contingency of any one or more of them dying, and then gives the estate or the money to the survivor, in that simple form of gift, where the gift is to take effect immediately on the death of the testator, the period of distribution is the period of death; and accordingly the event of the death upon which that contingency is to take place is necessarily to be referred to the interval of time between the date of the will and the death of the testator. . . . Then, by parity of reasoning, or rather as a necessary consequence of the same principle, if a testator gives a life estate in a sum of money or in the residue of his estate, and at the expiration of that life estate directs the money to be paid or the residue to be divided among a number of objects, and then refers to the possibility of some one or more of those persons dying, without specifying the time, and directs, in that event, the payment to be made or the distribution to be made among the survivors, it is understood and regarded by the law that he means the contingency to extend over the whole period of time that must elapse before the payment is made or the distribution takes place. The result, therefore, is, that in the event of such a gift the survivors are to be ascertained in like manner by a reference to the period of payment or of distribution, namely, the expiration of the life estate<sup>53</sup>).

Period of distribution see infra, p. 635.

R. 5 Eq. 349, 351], holding that the rule "is this: that, in cases of survivorship, the class is to be ascertained at the period of distribution, if no other time is expressed by the testator" and that, where a fund was bequeathed for life to the widow, then for life to the testator's brother, at whose death the principal was to be divided between his surviving children and another, and the widow outlived the brother, so that her death became the period of distribution, the survivorship was referred to a different period, namely, the death of the brother. Compare Macklin v. Daniel, 18 Ont. 434, 436 (where the time of distribution and of survivorship was held to be the time when the estate should have been put in order for the payment of legacies and was not postponed to their payment).

Time of exercising power.—Where a testator appointed two brothers executors and trustees and provided that in the event of death or inability or refusal to act of either

Bigg*, 7 Ves. Jr. 279, 286 note 61, 32 Eng. Reprint 114, where it is said that a statement in the opinion as follows: "The general leaning of the Court is against construing the words of survivorship to relate to the death of the testator; if any other period can be fixed upon: the testator generally supposing, the legatee will survive him," was retracted by the master of the rolls in his judgment.

This is not an arbitrary rule, as counsel for the defendant seem to think. It is based upon clear and satisfactory reasoning. Where the time is certain and definite, of division among survivors, see Olney v. Hull, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 311, 314.

To two or the survivor at a given age.—A devise to two or the survivor of them when they attain the age of twenty-one years, and if they die without issue before taking the property so devised, over, does not refer to survivorship at the testator's death, but, when one dies under twenty-five, the survivor, upon reaching that age, takes the whole. In re McIntosh, 13 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 309, 310.

"Surviving heirs" would be meaningless if it referred to the death of the testator, but not, where it referred to the period of distribution. Evans v. Godbold, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 26, 37.

"My surviving" does not necessarily refer to the testator's death, it may mean those survivorship is not confined to a death before that of the testator.<sup>65</sup> A single provision for survivorship may relate to successive periods, of distribution, consisting in deaths of members of the class one after another.<sup>66</sup>

(iv) TIME OF ANY OF SEVERAL DEATHS. Where there is a gift over, in case of the death of any of a number of persons, to the survivor or survivors, there may be successive survivorships at successive deaths,<sup>67</sup> as in case of a gift or gifts to several, with a gift over, to survivors, of the part of any of them who shall die without having issue, the survivorship there being referred to the time of the death of any one of them,<sup>68</sup> such being the natural sense of the words so used.<sup>69</sup>

c. Letting in Issue. Words of survivorship are sometimes held to include issue of deceased members of the class specified, and this result is reached by

Where the devise is not immediate the more reasonable construction selects the period of distribution. In re Gregson, 2 De G. J. & S. 428, 439, 10 Jur. N. S. 1138, 34 L. J. Ch. 41, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 460, 5 New Rep. 99, 13 Wkly. Rep. 193, 67 Eng. Ch. 334, 46 Eng. Reprint 441.

Substituted class included in the survivorship see Atkinson v. Bartrum, 28 Beav. 219, 220, 9 Wkly. Rep. 885, 54 Eng. Reprint 349, holding that, in a bequest in remainder, to be divided equally between the testator's surviving brothers and sisters or their children, the word "'surviving' must govern the whole sentence, and that the brothers and sisters would take if they survived the tenants for life, but, if not, the nephews and nieces who survived the tenants for life alone take"—the word to be treated as covering both the brothers and sisters and their children.

"Should none of my children survive me" as the condition of a gift over, and following a direction to trustees to divide the estate among all testator's children, and pay to each upon coming of age, his share, taking into consideration the amount necessary for education, may, in view of the carelessness of the will and a motive for such intention, be held to create a right of survivorship among the children at the time of each payment. Re Sandison, 6 Northwest Terr. 313, 318.

In default of a second male heir.—In a devise to testator's son for life and "at his decease to the second male heir of him and his present wife, and his heirs male for ever; and in default of a second male heir to their eldest surviving female heir or child," the survivorship is of the son and his said wife, not of the testator. Re Brown, 5 Ont. Effect of statutes see Rivenett v. Bourquin, 53 Mich. 10, 12, 18 N. W. 537 (holding that a provision that if any child die before testatrix, the survivors or their legal representatives shall take, is not such an unequivocal exclusion of issue of a predeceased child as to prevail against How. St. 5, 812, providing against the lapse of legacies when the legatee leaves issue surviving the testator "unless a different disposition shall be made or directed by the will"); In re Bentz, 221 Pa. St. 380, 384, 70 Atl. 788, holding that the "surviving issue" substituted for a deceased legatee by St. May 6, 1844 (Pub. Laws 564), so as to prevent a lapse of the bequest by reason of prior death of legatee, living issue includes the children not named in the will, although their brothers and sisters are named). See also Thorington v. Hall, 111 Ala. 323, 324, 331, 21 So. 335, 56 Am. St. Rep. 54, holding that a power of appointment, in favor of three named children of the testator, was restricted to the particular children named, and therefore, in the absence of any showing upon the record that the three named included all the testator's children, was not within the application of Code, § 1862, providing: "When a disposition under an appointment or power is directed to be made to the children of any person, without restricting it to any particular children, it may be exercised in favor of the grandchildren or other descendants of that person," the court declining, however, to decide what would have been the effect of the statute had such showing been made. The opinion contains no allusion to any possible effect of the word "survivors" to enlarge the scope of the power.

In Maryland the principle that in order to take, as a devisee, by purchase, one must answer the description of devisees in the will, has been applied toward the exclusion of issue of deceased members of the class. Turner v. Withers, 23 Md. 18, 40 [cited in Anderson v. Brown, 84 Md. 261, 272, 35 Atl. 937, where it is pointed out that the case, while it contained many of the conditions upon which the English courts have construed the devise to create cross remainders between the stirpes as well as between the children, refused the construction and held, on the contrary, that no one should take by purchase unless he answered to the "description of the parties as devisees" ].

78. General rules.—"The following principles have been decided and considered in well adjudged cases. If there be an 'absolute' gift to several persons, with the gift to the survivors, if any die without issue 'survivors' must be construed in its ordinary sense. . . . Another principle of interpretation is, that where there is a gift over to take place only in the event on which the property is limited to the first legatees, among whom there is to be survivorship . . . survivor will be construed 'other' so as not to cause an intestacy. . . . Another principle of interpretation is, that where there is a devise to sons, and the heirs of their bodies and if any die without issue to the survivors and the heirs of their bodies, and if all die without issue over, survivorship shall be referred to the stirpes and not to the first taker, and the share of a son dying without issue will go among the issue of a son previously deceased, and the surviving sons. In such a case says Mr. Theobald, in his able and excellent treatise on wills, 'the testator has expressed his intention of benefiting the line of issue, and the survivorship contemplated is one between the respective stirpes, and not between the first takers merely, and this coupled with the gift over which can only take effect if all the sons die without issue, is sufficient to enlarge the meaning of the word survivor.' The same principle will be applied to the case where the will gives life estates with limitations expressly to issue, followed by a gift on failure of issue of any of the tenants for life to the surviving tenants for life for their lives.

d. Construed "Other." "Survivor," "surviving" or their equivalents are often construed "other"<sup>79</sup> to let in issue of predeceased members of a class.<sup>80</sup> The word "survivor" or "surviving" will be understood as the equivalent of "other," where any other construction would lead to an intestacy or to inequality and then to their issue, and an ultimate gift over on failure of issue of all the tenants for life. 'There is here,' says the same distinguished author, 'the same evidence of intention to benefit the issue, and the gift over shows that survivorship is contemplated not merely between the first takers but between the respective stirpes.'" Cooper v. Cooper, 7 Houst. (Del.) 488, 513, 31 Atl. 1043. "It seems . . . that the decisions establish the following propositions:—Where the gift is to 'A.,' 'B.,' and 'C.,' equally for their respective lives, and after the death of any to his children, but if any die without children to the survivors for life with remainder to their children, only children of survivors can take under the gift over. If to similar words there is added a limitation over if all the tenants for life die without children, then the children of a predeceased tenant for life participate in the share of one who dies without children after their parent. They also participate, although there is no general gift over, where the limitations are to 'A.,' 'B.,' and 'C.' equally for their respective lives, and after the death of any to his children, and if any die without children to the surviving tenants for life and their respective children, in the same manner as their original shares." In re Bowman, 41 Ch. Betts, 86 Ky. 164, 168, 5 S. W. 465, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 607 (where it is said of the word "survivors:" "The controversy has been whether the word should have its literal and natural meaning, or whether it should prima facie be construed as equivalent to the word 'others' in the absence of circumstances or something in the context showing that it was used in a strictly literal sense. There is a line of older cases, as in Wilmot v. Wilmot, 8 Vesey Jr. 10, 6 Rev. Rep. 196, 32 Eng. Reprint 252, holding to the latter view. Some eminent judges have also held that the words were convertible terms; but where the word 'survivor' has been given the force of 'other,' thus letting in the issue of a deceased member of a class by inheritance from the parent, it has been usually done, as was the case in Harris, &c. v. Berry, &c., 7 Bush, 114, to avoid some consequence which it was quite certain the testator did not intend. It was necessary in order to effect an intention appearing upon the entire will. The later cases, however, hold that the word 'survivor,' when unexplained by the context, is to be given its natural meaning, and interpreted according to its literal import. As this rule may often defeat the unexpressed intention of the testator, courts readily listen to any argument drawn from the context or other provisions of the will, showing that 'survivor' was used by him as synonymous with 'other;' but unless this appear, it may now be regarded as the settled rule that its literal meaning is to be given to it"); Anderson v. Brown, 84 Md. 261, 269, 35 Atl. 937 (where it is said: "All the cases to which we have been referred or examined in which 'survivor' has been construed as the equivalent of 'other' appear to have been so decided because there was something in the will to make it clear that the testator intended the issue of predeceased children to take, or that some other clearly expressed intention would otherwise be rendered inoperative"); In re Benn, 29 Ch. Beckwith*, 46 L. J. Ch. 97, 99, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 128, 25 Wkly. Rep. 282 (holding that "survivors" is not to be construed "others" ex vi termini).

Construction as "other" refused where the language of the will was precise and showed that the survivors were to take as tenants for life for their separate use, a provision wholly inconsistent with any intention that the children of a deceased member of the class should stand in his place as their parent. *Winterton v. Rep. 254], where it is said by Lord Selborne: "I do not entirely assent to language which is to be found pervading almost all the cases upon questions of this kind, that the question is whether the word 'survivor' is to be read 'other.' I think there is certainly a very strong probability that any one using the word 'survivor' does not precisely mean 'other' by it, but has in his mind some idea of survivorship; and if the question is simply whether you are to turn it into 'other,' and say it is used merely by mistake for the word 'other,' which is the true word to express the testator's meaning, there is undoubtedly a strong onus probandi cast upon any one who would do that violence to the literal meaning of the word. It would be a strange thing to hold that so many testators were in the habit of using the word 'survivor' when they simply meant 'other.' Generally speaking, a reason of some kind will be found for the use of the word 'survivor' where it occurs, though it may very possibly be, and often in these cases is, an imperfect expression, not expressing completely and exhaustively the whole intention. If no such explanation can be suggested, it is a strong argument against any construction that would reject the word in its proper and primary meaning altogether, and substitute a word which has a different meaning."

Not alone sufficient, to necessitate the construction of survivors as others, is a gift over to survivors for life with remainder to children. In re Horner, 19 Ch. D. 186, 51 L. J. Ch. 43, 45 L. T. g. Whether Creating Joint Tenancy. While words of survivorship are construed, when nothing appears to the contrary, as creating a joint tenancy,<sup>97</sup> they do not necessarily do so.<sup>98</sup> The limitation of survivorship involved in joint tenancy and that which may be annexed to a tenancy in common are not the same,<sup>99</sup> and tenancy in common and words of survivorship have been reconciled by referring such words to the contingency of death of one of the tenants in common under age<sup>1</sup> or to the death of the testator.<sup>2</sup>

2. IN DEEDS.<sup>3</sup> In a deed, as in a will, the question to what period words of survivorship are intended to relate is one of construction.<sup>4</sup> Survivorship to a

The limitation may be too remote to prevent the failure of issue on which it depends from being regarded, according to the general rule, as indefinite; as where the gift over on death without issue of either of two legatees, to the survivor of them, is followed by the words "his or her executors, administrators, or assigns," whereby the presumption, that a mere personal benefit was intended for the survivor, is excluded (Massey v. Hudson, 2 Meriv. 130, 132, 134, 16 Rev. Rep. 158, 35 Eng. Reprint 889); or where a gift over on death of the first taker without issue is to several, named, one of whom is to take only for life and her part to be divided between the survivors, "survivors" being construed "others" so that the gift to them does not even depend upon their being alive at the death of that life-tenant (Barlow v. Salter, 17 Ves. Jr. 479, 482, 484, 34 Eng. Reprint 185).

97. Barker v. Giles, 2 P. Wms. 280, 283, 24 Eng. Reprint 730 [affirmed in 3 Bro. P. C. 104, 1 Eng. Reprint 1206, and explained in Garland v. Thomas, 1 B. & P. N. R. 82, 91, as having "turned on the meaning of the word 'survivor,' to which Lord Chancellor 'King' could not give effect without making it a joint-tenancy"]; Folkes v. Western, 9 Ves. Jr. 456, 461, 7 Rev. Rep. 271, 32 Eng. Reprint 679. Compare Doe v. Tomkinson, 2 M. & S. 165, 170, 105 Eng. Reprint 344, where, although the court did not say that the words of survivorship created a joint tenancy, it was held that they at least prevented a tenancy in common in fee, and that if they created a tenancy in common with contingent remainder to the survivor, such remainder was not devisable, since the survivor could not be ascertained until the contingency took place.

A devise over after the death of the survivor following gift to a class has been held conclusive to show the intention to create a joint tenancy in spite of expressions in general construed to create a tenancy in common. Armstrong v. Eldridge, 3 Bro. Ch. 215, 216, 29 Eng. Reprint 497.

98. Perry v. Woods, 3 Ves. Jr. 204, 206, 30 Eng. Reprint 970; McArthur v. Flett, 11 Can. L. T. Occ. Notes 222 (holding that the expression "with survivorship between the different lines" merely annexed, to the tenancy in common previously bequeathed, the incident of survivorship including issue). See also supra, p. 634 text and note 56; infra, text and notes 99-1.

Accompanied by words of severance, words of survivorship do not create a joint tenancy.

Reprint 949 (where it is said: "It has been sometimes objected that this interpretation of the word 'survivor,' cannot be adopted where there is a gift to several persons as tenants in common, not as joint tenants. But there is obviously a very great distinction between the limitation of survivorship that is involved in a gift of joint tenancy, and the limitation of the word 'survivor' which is annexed to a tenancy in common. The survivorship involved in an estate in joint tenancy is that which is capable of being defeated at the pleasure of the joint tenant, so that if, by alienation or otherwise, the joint tenancy is converted into a tenancy in common, the survivorship ceases; but when a gift to the 'survivor' is annexed to a tenancy in common and not to a joint tenancy, then the limitation takes effect by virtue of the gift, and not by virtue of something involved in a limitation of joint tenancy"); Quarm v. Quarm, [1892] 1 Q. B. 184, 186, 188, 61 L. J. Q. B. 154, 66 L. T. Rep. N. S. 418, 40 Wkly. Rep. 302 (where it is held that a devise to several "as joint tenants," and not as tenants in common, "and to the survivor or longest liver of them, his, or her heirs and assigns for ever" creates a joint tenancy for life, with a contingent remainder in fee simple to the last survivor, and said: "It is admitted that the appeal must fail if the effect of the gift . . . was to give the ultimate survivor of the joint devisees, not the mere benefit of survivorship incident to a joint estate, but a separate estate in remainder after joint life estates.")

4. Brown v. Brown, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 502, 515 (where it was held that, as used in a deed of settlement or marriage contract whereby the husband covenanted that as soon as possible after his death a fund should be raised to be held in trust for the issue of the marriage, as tenants in common "with benefit of survivorship," the wife to take a child's part during her life, the words "of survivorship" did not relate to the deaths of members of the class, and did refer to the period of distribution, and the opinion was class may be extended to the lines of issue of deceased members of the class,<sup>5</sup> but not against the intention of the grantor.<sup>6</sup>

3. SURVIVING EXECUTORS AND TRUSTEES. Such words, applied to executors or trustees, do not include persons who are merely nominated by the will and are not actually in the capacity.<sup>7</sup> Such a word may include one continuing to act, as distinguished both from those who refuse to act and those who discontinue acting.<sup>8</sup> A personal trust to be carried out by executors or their survivors cannot expressed that that period was the time of the widow's death, although whether that, or the death of the husband, was practically immaterial, since all the children survived both); Westbrooke v. Romeyn, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,428, Baldw. 196, 201 (construing a deed to M, a son of grantor, and the heirs of his body, and if he die without issue "them" to the surviving sons and daughters of the grantor; two shares to a son, one to a daughter, and the heirs of their bodies, and in case any or either of said sons or daughters died without issue "then" their shares in like proportions to the survivors or their heirs, and in default of issue in them the surviving sons and daughters, over to the grantor's right heirs, and holding that in all three limitations the word "surviving" was intended to apply to those sons and daughters who should outlive M, the first taker, and not to those who should merely survive the grantor, taking into consideration the use of the word "then" [misprinted "them" in the opinion at p. 201] referring to the death of M; also the proportions of the shares; also the fact that the limitations over was on the death of all the surviving sons and daughters, which must mean those who survive M in the first place, and next, those who survive each other).

Referred to death of any of class without issue see Doe v. Wainwright, 5 T. R. 427, 431, 101 Eng. Reprint 240.

"Other" rejected.—In construing a deed where it was clear that the survivorship was not intended to relate to the death of the testator it was said: "Were we to substitute 'other' for 'surviving,' it would be going further in a court of law in a deed, than courts of equity have done in a will; such substitution is made only where the plain intention of the testator, or some other provision of the will would be defeated, by giving the words their natural meaning." Westbrooke v. Romeyn, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,428, Baldw. 196, 202.

Rule favoring time of distribution applied to deed see Westbrooke v. Romeyn, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,428, Baldw. 196, 202, where in construing a deed the rule for construction in wills is invoked as follows: "As a general rule, words of survivorship relate to the time or event when the thing devised is to be distributed or enjoyed, and not to the time when the will took effect by the testator's death. Their reference to the latter period, is to effectuate some special intent, to preserve an estate previously given, or to prevent a lapse, which are exceptions to the rule; . . . and were it the will" of the donor "we could not, consistently with the rules of courts of equity, give it the construction contended for," i. e. referring to testator's death.

5. Brown v. Brown, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 502, 515 (holding that, where the intention of the covenantor to divide equally among all his children is clear, the words "with benefit of survivorship" in the gift to them, will not alter the result, the shares of those who die at least after the period of distribution, going to their issue instead of accruing to the last survivor); Doe v. Wainwright, 5 T. R. 427, 431, 101 Eng. Reprint 240 [cited in Wake v. Varah, 2 Ch. D. 348, 356, 45 L. J. Ch. 533, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 437, 24 Wkly. Rep. 621 (a case of a will), and distinguished in Dooling v. Hobbs, 5 Harr. (Del.) 405, 407 (a case of a will)], so holding where the ultimate limitation was only to take effect on the death of all the children without issue).

6. Westbrooke v. Romeyn, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,428, Baldw. 196, 204, construing a deed where "issue" was used only as a word of limitation in tail, and not by way of description.

7. Herrick v. Carpenter, 92 Mich. 440, 448, 52 N. W. 747 (holding that "survivors or survivor" of executors does not include such as have not accepted the trust); Nicholson v. Field, [1893] 2 Ch. 511, 512, 62 L. J. Ch. 1015, 69 L. T. Rep. N. S. 299, 3 Reports 528, 42 Wkly. Rep. 48 (holding that under Conveyancing and Law of Property Act (1881), 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), § 31, providing that a new trustee under a will may be appointed by the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee for the time being, or the personal representatives of the last surviving or continuing trustee, the appointment cannot be made by the survivor of two persons, neither of whom has been a trustee, so that, where both the trustees named in the will die before the testator, the personal representatives of the survivor of these cannot make the appointment).

8. Sharp v. Sharp, 2 B. & Ald. 405, 413, 106 Eng. Reprint 414. Compare, however, Blanton v. Mayes, 58 Tex. 422, 427, where, an estate being devised to three persons named and the survivors of them in trust and by another clause the same three named as executors, of whom only one qualified, on objection to a sale of land by that one as trustee, it was said: "In the exercise of the powers thus conferred, the contingency that would authorize less than the whole number to act independently of the court is clearly indicated by the expression 'to the survivor of them.' The death of one or more of the trustees named seems to have been intended be carried out by new executors.<sup>9</sup> Directions to trustees "or their survivors" have been held to indicate an intention that they should take, not in their personal capacity, but officially as a class.<sup>10</sup>

4. SURVIVING SPOUSE. Either through the death of her husband or by means of divorce, a wife may survive her coverture;<sup>11</sup> she may be said to survive her husband by divorce<sup>12</sup> or her survivorship may be confined to his death.<sup>13</sup> Words importing survivorship between husband and wife as devisees or legatees are not necessarily confined to the case of the spouse living as such at the date of the will.<sup>14</sup> A devise to one for life and during the life of his wife or the survivor does not carry the life-estate after his death to the widow.<sup>15</sup>

5. AS USED BY MUTUAL BENEFIT SOCIETIES. In some cases words of survivorship used in relation to members of mutual benefit societies have needed judicial construction.<sup>16</sup> (Survivorship: In General, see DEATH, 13 Cyc. 308. 12. Will so construed see Cary v. Slead, 220 Ill. 508, 513, 77 N. W. 234, holding that the words if she survive her "present husband" may refer to surviving either the individual or the marriage relation, and that the intent of the testator included the case of a divorce.

13. Statute so construed see Fletcher v. Monroe, 145 Ind. 56, 58, 59, 43 N. E. 1053 (holding that in Rev. St. (1894) § 2652; Rev. St. (1881) § 2491, providing for the share of a surviving wife in her husband's real estate, "surviving wife" means a surviving widow and does not include a divorced wife, although she herself has obtained the divorce). See also Wiseman v. Wiseman, 73 Ind. 112, 114, 38 Am. Rep. 115, where, with reference to the statutory right of the surviving wife in her husband's lands, it is said: "A woman who has been divorced from her husband cannot, of course, be deemed a surviving wife, but, unless there has been a judicial decree, dissolving the marital relation, the wife who outlives her husband is the surviving wife, no matter how bad her conduct may have been."

16. Vagueness.—The word "survivors" is too vague necessarily to include the husband and children of a deceased woman, and as used in the constitution of a mutual aid society, providing indemnity for payments to survivors of a deceased member, may be shown by evidence not to include her husband. Slavik v. Supreme Lodge B. L. A. S., 59 Misc. (N. Y.) 183, 185, 186, 110 N. Y. Suppl. 347.

"Assessments upon surviving members" as the phrase is used in a statute, requiring insurance companies on the assessment plan to show by their constitutions and by-laws that indemnities to beneficiaries are in the main provided for by such assessments, are understood to be assessments to meet the loss caused by the death of a member, made after his death upon those members who survive him, and "surviving" does not refer to policies, or to members whose policies have not lapsed. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Marye, 85 Va. 643, 645, 647, 8 S. E. 481.

"Survivor" does not include one who was neither a relative of deceased nor member of his household, nor connected with him by marriage, when used to describe the class to which beneficiaries' rights are limited by the laws of this society, party to the case. Koerts v. Grand Lodge O. H. S., 119 Wis. 520, 525, 97 N. W. 163 [followed in Grand Lodge O. H. S. v. Lemke, 124 Wis. 483, 487, 102 N. W. 911].

"Such suspected person" used, with reference to the preamble, in 3 Geo. IV, c. 55, § 21, relating to the apprehension of reputed thieves, seemingly taken as an indication that "reputed" as used in the statute means "generally reputed" see Cowles v. Dunbar, 2 C. & P. 565, 567, 12 E. C. L. 735.

"Suspected of evil" see Ex p. Hopkins, 17 Cox C. C. 444, 454, 61 L. J. Q. B. 240, 66 L. T. Rep. N. S. 53.

Not synonymous with "postpone."—A provision in a contract that deliveries may be "suspended" in case of strikes, does not mean that they may be "postponed," and "the two words are not synonymous." A charge to the effect that, if owing to such cause the deliveries could not be made within the period fixed by the contract, the vendor was released from his guaranty to deliver, is correct. Hull Coal, etc., Co. v. Empire Coal, etc., Co., 113 Fed. 256, 259, 51 C. C. A. 213. Compare, however, the opinion, concurring in the result, of Simonton, J., at p. 263, where to "be suspended" is explained as meaning to "cease temporarily."

A suspended member is still a member of a society whose by-laws recognize the distinction between suspension and expulsion. Palmetto Lodge No. 5 I. O. O. F. v. Hubbell, 2 Strobb. (S. C.) 457, 462, 49 Am. Dec. 604. Within the meaning of a provision of the by-law of a mutual benefit society that any member failing to pay his assessment within thirty days shall be "suspended" merely by such non-payment, the action of the officer in charge of the books of the lodge in drawing a black line around such a member's account therein and marking it "suspended," cessation, may, in certain connections, imply a termination.<sup>23</sup> (See SUSPENSION, and Cross-References Thereunder. See also DELAY, 13 Cyc. 767; HINDER, 21 Cyc. 436; INTERRUPT, 23 Cyc. 39; STAY, 36 Cyc. 1257.)

SUSPENDED LOAN. See BANKS AND BANKING, 5 Cyc. 583 note 19.

SUSPENSE. A temporal, that is temporary, stop of a man's right.<sup>24</sup> In legal understanding that which occurs when a seignior, rent, profit appender, etc., by reason of unity of possession of the seignior, rent, etc., and of the land out of which they issue are not in esse for a time et tunc dormiunt, but may be revived or awaked.<sup>25</sup> (See also SUSPENSION.)

SUSPENSION. Temporary cessation; delay; intermission; stay;<sup>26</sup> a temporal,

according to custom, without any punitive action of the lodge, and where the subordinate lodge has paid the amount of the assessment to the grand lodge, does not prevent such member's widow or heirs from recovering from the grand lodge, upon his death, the sum payable on the death of a member. Scheu v. Grand Lodge I. F., 17 Fed. 214, 215.

Suspended business.—A corporation has "suspended business" within the meaning of Gen. St. (1899) § 1628; Gen. St. (1897) c. 66, § 45, where it has ceased to do its ordinary and usual business, even though it is engaged in such acts of business as are done with a view to a cessation of its affairs (Jones v. Slonecker, 66 Kan. 286, 291, 292, 71 Pac. 573; Brigham v. Nathan, 62 Kan. 243, 246, 62 Pac. 319; Jones v. Edson, 10 Kan. App. 110, 62 Pac. 249, 250); nor does a single corporate act or an occasional corporate act prevent the business from being so suspended (Jones v. Edson, supra).

Suspended not "quashed"—"Superseded" stronger.—A statute which provides that on the finding of a second indictment the first shall be "suspended" and "quashed" means only that it shall be quashed during the existence of the second indictment, by the removal of which new life and validity may be imparted to it. A stronger word than "suspended" is "superseded," used in the New York statute on the same subject, yet under that statute it has been held that the first indictment was only "liable" to be quashed and not in fact quashed. State v. Melvin, 166 Mo. 565, 572, 66 S. W. 534 [overruling a dictum in State v. Daugherty, 106 Mo. 182, 17 S. W. 303], construing Rev. St. (1899) § 2522.

Not "dissolve" relations.—A presbytery of the reformed presbyterian church passed a resolution suspending its relations with the synod until further light should be obtained, for unconstitutional interference. "It but intermitted the relations of the Presbytery and Church with the Synod, but it worked no dissolution of the organic connection." McAuley's Appeal, 77 Pa. St. 397, 418.

Applied to right of action in an agreement that the right of action on notes shall be suspended as long as certain quarterly payments were made "suspended" does not imply a legal suspension of the right, for that would result in its extinction, which was not intended, but that the creditor will forbear his suit until such payment shall cease to be made. Ford v. Beech, 11 Q. B. 852, 867, 868, 869, 5 D. & L. 610, 12 Jur. 310, 17 L. J. Q. B. 114, 63 E. C. L. 852.

<sup>23</sup> See McNamara v. New York, 152 N. Y. 228, 232, 46 N. E. 507, where it is said: "While the word 'suspend' ordinarily means a temporary cessation, the connection in which it is used may give it a stronger meaning, and when, as in this case, the suspension was accompanied with a reason showing that there was no further right to continue the relation theretofore existing, we regard it as conclusive evidence of the intention to terminate the connection."

May be to "dispense with" a rule.—A motion that the rules be "suspended" is not substantially or materially at variance with Code, § 489, requiring that a town council for certain purposes "dispense with" a certain rule. Bayard v. Baker, 76 Iowa 220, 222, 40 N. W. 818.

"Suspended" whether "removed."—"Suspended" is not "removed," and as used in Comp. St. c. 18, art. 2, § 9, relating to vacancies in an office, is not synonymous with "removed" in other sections of the same article (State v. Meeker, 19 Nebr. 444, 447, 27 N. W. 427); but a person notified that he is "suspended from further duty," such so-called suspension being a removal in fact, is "removed" and cannot succeed in an action for unlawful suspension when reinstated. The language in which he was notified is not material if the intent to remove is clear (Donnell v. New York, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 55, 57, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 661).

A suspension of administration as contemplated by Pub. St. (1901) c. 191, §§ 2, 4, is "one occasioned by the death, resignation, removal, and the like of an original administrator upon a deceased debtor's estate, within the period prescribed for the presentation of claims or the bringing of suits, and has no reference to a suspension of administration upon the estate of a deceased creditor." A mere failure to apply for administration is not a suspension within the meaning of these sections. Cummings v. Farnham, (N. H. 1908) 71 Atl. 632, 634.

that is temporary, stop of a man's right.<sup>27</sup> From office, a deprivation of office for the time;<sup>28</sup> exclusively an interruption in the exercise of the officer's duties, of his authority.<sup>29</sup> Of an employee, a temporary interruption or cessation of labor.<sup>30</sup> Of payment, a term which contains the idea of the failure to pay from inability to do so.<sup>31</sup> Of a right in an estate, a partial extinguishment thereof, or an extin-

Mere suspension of the execution of a contract is not an abandonment, and such suspension under a clause of a state contract, itself providing that if the execution of the contract shall be suspended by the state at any time for any cause no claim for prospective profits of work not done shall be made or allowed, but the contractors shall complete the work when the state shall order it resumed, would not be a breach, but the termination of a contract by the state is a breach when there is no provision therefor. Baker v. State, 77 N. Y. App. Div. 528, 531, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 922.

Suspension of partnership distinguished from "dissolution" see Williston v. Camp, 9 Mont. 88, 96, 22 Pac. 501, holding that an assignment for creditors of the firm might be said correctly to have "suspended" its business without saying that it dissolved the partnership.

Suspension of rent.—"It would avoid dispute to provide that the rent shall 'cease and be suspended' or shall 'be suspended and cease to be payable'" during eviction. See 3 Stroud Jud. Dict. 2001.

27. See 3 Stroud L. Dict. 2002 [quoting and explaining Cowell L. Dict.].

28. Ex p. Diggs, 52 Ala. 381, 383.

Distinguished from removal see State v. Richmond, 29 La. Ann. 705, 706; Stack v. O'Hara, 98 Pa. St. 213, 232; Poe v. State, 72 Tex. 625, 629, 10 S. W. 737. Compare Nolen v. State, 118 Ala. 154, 159, 24 So. 251.

Permanent "suspension" equal to removal.—A "suspension" which is to continue perpetually unless the person suspended be restored to office by a joint resolution of the general assembly is in legal contemplation a removal, and St. (1886-1887) p. 1, undertaking to authorize the governor so to "suspend" tax assessors, is void as a violation of the constitution, since that prescribes the only mode by which a tax assessor can be removed. Nolen v. State, 118 Ala. 154, 159, 24 So. 251. Compare, however, Poe v. State, 72 Tex. 625, 629, 10 S. W. 737, where it is said: "While the suspension is by the terms of the law only a temporary deprivation of the office, it in every case may be what it in effect was in this, a permanent deprivation of the office. Still, a suspension is in no proper sense the same thing as a removal. We are not at liberty by construction or otherwise to hold that the provisions of the Constitution with regard to removals apply equally to suspensions from office."

As applied to a priest of the Roman catholic church, "suspension is a judicial act based on something which calls for such sentence" and a "sentence of suspension follows a trial for an offense, from which the priest may appeal." Suspension is not to be confounded with "removal" which is "the exercise of episcopal authority according to the bishop's judgment. It may be without supposition of wrong, and it leaves the priest . . . without employment." Stack v. O'Hara, 98 Pa. St. 213, 232.

A statute prescribing suspension from office as the consequence of some act or event is penal, and is therefore not to be enlarged in its scope by construction, and cannot be retroactive. Ex p. Diggs, 52 Ala. 381, 383, in regard to the effect of St. No. 155, March 2, 1875, providing for the suspension of a county solicitor against whom an indictment is pending.

Distinguished from removal see Lethbridge v. New York, 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. 486, 487, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 562.

May be discharge.—See McNamara v. New York, 152 N. Y. 228, 233, 46 N. E. 507 (where it is said: "Suspension without pay because there is no work is a practical discharge"); Wardlaw v. New York, 137 N. Y. 194, 197, 33 N. E. 140 [quoted in McNamara v. New York, supra] (holding that if the plaintiff "understood . . . that his services were no longer required . . . and that compensation was no longer to be paid to him . . . and that such was the purpose of this notice from the commissioner and both parties acted accordingly, then the . . . notice operated to terminate the employment, though it was called a suspension instead of a dismissal").

31. See In re Wolf, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,923, 4 Sawy. 168, 169, 17 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 423, where, in holding that the fact that a note payable "one day after date" remained due forty days did not constitute such a suspension of payment as to amount to an act of bankruptcy, it was said: "Suspension of payment means something more than a failure of the maker of such paper as this to seek the holder and pay him. Business men understand very well what the term means; there is the idea in it of a failure to pay from an inability to do so."

Need not be permanent to come within the meaning of the words of the Bankr. Act (1883), § 4, subs. 1, clause h, "if the debtor gives notice to any of his creditors that he has suspended, or that he is about to suspend, payment of his debts." Crook v. Morley, [1891] A. C. 316, 319, 61 L. J. Q. B. 97, 65 L. T. Rep. N. S. 389.

By trader.—A suspension of payment within the meaning of Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, § 225) takes place where a trader who is unable to meet his engagements with his creditors and is desirous of laying the state of affairs before them enters into such an arrangement as an assignment for creditors, and a plea

SUSPICIOUS PLACE. A term of which it has been held that it does not apply to a place concerning which the police, after active vigilance consisting in frequent investigations, open and secret, have been able to discover no incriminating evidence.<sup>42</sup> (See SUSPECT, ante, p. 647; SUSPICION.)

SUSTAIN. To maintain; to keep alive; to support; to subsist; to nourish;<sup>43</sup>

"That state of mind which in a reasonable man would lead to inquiry is called mere 'suspicion.'" Stuart v. Farmers' Bank, 137 Wis. 66, 73, 117 N. W. 820.

"The essence of a 'suspicion' is that it is without known facts to support it, and in every case where a person has apparent ownership of goods, either through actual possession, or the possession of the muniments of title, there is room for a 'suspicion' that some other person may have an interest therein," so that a charge to the effect that if parties advancing money to others on an invoice and bill of lading, had sufficient facts at the time to arouse their suspicion as to whether the latter were the owners, it was their duty to inquire of the shippers, is erroneous. Kinston Cotton Mills v. Kuhne, 129 N. Y. App. Div. 250, 259, 113 N. Y. Suppl. 779.

Compared with "belief."—"Suspicion" is weaker than "belief." Giddens v. Mirk, 4 Ga. 364, 370. "Suspicion may be upon very slight grounds, and imports a less degree of certainty than belief." Humes v. Taber, 1 R. I. 464, 470.

41. See People v. Russell, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 765, 766, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 1, where a bail bond, describing the principal as "Sus. Person," was held good, and it was said: "That the abbreviated term used indicates no offense in law is not so plain. Where there is reasonable cause to believe that a person has committed a felony he may be arrested without a warrant. Code Crim. Pro., § 177. Yet the belief is generally nothing more than a well-grounded suspicion. Such a person is, therefore, regarded in police parlance as a 'suspicious person,' the designation aptly denoting the offense."

"Suspicious character" is a term which has been defined by an ordinance as including all persons who entice any other person or persons to commit any irreputable act or deed; all persons found loitering about the city under suspicious circumstances or places and who are unable to give a proper account of themselves; all persons in the act of committing theft not amounting to a felony or misdemeanor, and all persons following any business by soliciting orders whereby the person or persons giving such orders are defrauded. McFadin v. San Antonio, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 140, 141, 54 S. W. 48.

42. See People v. Greene, 92 N. Y. App. Div. 243, 247, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 172, so holding of the term as used in rule 44 of the New York police department, requiring captains to state in their monthly reports "the location of all suspicious places;" and assuming that, the rule being silent as to what constitutes a "suspicious place," the question is to "be determined by the exercise of good judgment and discretion on the part of the captain . . . required to make the report."

SWAMP. Wet spongy land; soft low ground saturated with water, but not usually covered with it; marshy ground away from the seashore.<sup>50</sup> (Swamp: As a Boundary, see BOUNDARIES, 5 Cyc. 903 note 35. See also SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS; SWAMP LANDS, post, p. 654.)

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS. A term which, as used in the act of congress, granting to each state its own lands of that description,<sup>51</sup> includes all pairs, supplying it with machinery, and such like acts, and not to projects for extending its business, by schemes and enterprises not contemplated and expressed in clear, unambiguous terms, by the charter itself." A grant to maintain and sustain a railroad cannot "in any fair sense be construed to authorise the engaging in any enterprise which will extend the business or lessen the rivalries of the company." Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 582, 624.

On streams in South Carolina.—The meaning of the word as used in a survey must be decided in the absence of artificial marks by the known and established understanding in the state. It may be ascertained even by more local usage. In larger streams such as Santee and Edisto the swamp is spoken of as distinct from the river, but in creeks with a margin of swamp the usage is universal in this state to speak of the creek and swamp as one. Felder v. Bonnett, 2 McMull. (S. C.) 44, 47, 48, 37 Am. Dec. 545.

"There may be a continuous watercourse through a body of swamp-lands." Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 413, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674.

Evidence of cultivation as test.—When the character of the land is due to overflow it must, in order to come within the description, be rendered unfit for successful cultivation (Thompson v. Thornton, 50 Cal. 142, 145), in other words, not "susceptible of cultivation" (Keeran v. Griffith, 31 Cal. 461, 465 [followed in Keeran v. Allen, 33 Cal. 542, 547]), in grain or other staple productions by reason of the overflow (Thompson v. Thornton, 50 Cal. 142, 144; Keeran v. Griffith, supra [followed in Keeran v. Allen, supra]), and will not be within the description if capable of producing a fair crop of any of the staple productions (Thompson v. Thornton, supra), such as "potatoes, or corn,

Quantity necessary.—The greater part of a legal subdivision must be wet and unfit for cultivation in order that land may pass under the act. Robinson v. Forrest, 29 Cal. 317, 324 [followed in Hogaboom v. Ehrhardt, 58 Cal. 231, 233 (affirmed in 115 U. S. 67, 5 S. Ct. 1157, 29 L. ed. 346)], citing 9 U. S. St. at L. 519, § 1.

53. Swamp lands, as distinguished from overflowed lands, are such as require drainage to dispose of needless water or moisture on or in the lands in order to make them fit for successful or useful cultivation. State v. Gerbing, 56 Fla. 603, 615, 47 So. 353, 22 L. R. A. N. S. 337. "The word 'swamp,' without the addition of the word 'overflowed,' would have conveyed all lands so lacking in drainage as to be temporarily covered by water in the rainy seasons. . . . The word 'overflow' was added for the very purpose of bringing within the grant . . . permanently submerged areas." McDade v. Bossier Levee Bd., 109 La. 625, 633, 33 So. 628. "Swamp lands, as distinguished from overflowed lands, may be considered such as require drainage to fit them for cultivation." San Francisco Sav. Union v. Irwin, 28 Fed. 708, 712 [affirmed in 136 U. S. 578, 10 S. Ct. 1064, 34 L. ed. 540].

"Overflowed lands are those that are covered by non-navigable waters or are subject to such periodical or frequent overflows of water, salt or fresh, (not including lands between high and low water marks of navigable streams or bodies of water, nor lands covered and uncovered by the ordinary daily ebb and flow of normal tides of navigable waters), as to require drainage or levees or embankments to keep out the water, and thereby render the lands suitable for successful cultivation." State v. Gerbing, 56 Fla. 603, 615, 47 So. 353, 22 L. R. A. N. S. 337.

54. Miller v. Tobin, 18 Fed. 609, 614, 9 Sawy. 401, where it is said: "The phrase 'swamp and overflowed,' as defined by section 2 of the Arkansas swamp land act of 1850, is merely the equivalent of the phrase 'wet and unfit for cultivation,' and therefore land which is too 'wet' for cultivation is 'swamp and overflowed,' whether the water flows over it or stands upon it. In this sense the adjectives 'swamp' and 'overflowed,' taken together, qualify the noun 'land' in but one particular,—express but one fact concerning it,—that is, it is too wet for cultivation."

55. In Manitoba.—The transfer of swamp lands to the province of Manitoba by the Dominion of Canada, for which Can. St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 50, provides, did not take effect by and with the statute itself, which expressly postpones the transfer to a showing to the satisfaction of the government as to what lands are to be included in the grant. Atty.-Gen. v. Atty.-Gen., [1904] A. C. 799, 802, 803, 73 L. J. P. C. 100, 91 L. T. Rep. N. S. 300, 20 T. L. R. 769.

A swamp land assessment is a charge imposed upon property by the authority of the legislature and is clearly "a liability created by statute" within the meaning of the statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 1). People v. Hulbert, 71 Cal. 72, 73, 12 Pac. 43.

"Sworn" is equivalent to "sworn to" in a magistrate's certificate to an oath. Com. v. Bennett, 7 Allen (Mass.) 533, 534.

"Duly sworn" or "sworn according to law" is defined by Rev. St. c. 1, § 23, rule 21, as applied to any officer who is required to take and subscribe the oath prescribed in the constitution, as meaning "that such officer had taken and subscribed the same, as well as made oath faithfully and impartially to perform the duties of the office to which he had been elected or appointed" and, when applied to any person other than such officer, "that such person had taken an oath faithfully and impartially to perform the duties assigned to him in the case specified." 82. Kinloch Tel. Co. v. Western Electric Co., 113 Fed. 659, 660, 51 C. C. A. 369.

"The form in common use on switchboards in the telephone exchanges consists of a socket set in the switchboard containing the terminals of the two sides of the subscribers' circuit, and this is used by means of a plug which contains the terminals of the two wires that are attached to it in a cord. The insertion of the plug in the socket makes the electrical connection between the subscriber's line and the wires attached to the plug, and these wires usually lead to another similar plug or to the telephone of the operator. If they lead to another plug, electrical connection may be made between the lines of two subscribers by inserting these plugs in the respective switches of the subscribers upon the switchboard. These sockets set in the switchboard through which the subscribers communicate with each other are called 'switches' in Seely's patent." Kinloch Tel. Co. v. Western Electric Co., 113 Fed. 659, 660, 51 C. C. A. 369.

Contents and purpose see Koonce v. Doolittle, 48 W. Va. 592, 594, 37 S. E. 644, where it is said: "The syllabus is never made up of finding of facts, but is limited to points of law determined. Sometimes the finding of facts are referred to for the purpose of explaining the point of law adjudicated, but only for such purpose. The opinion and not the syllabus shows the finding of facts necessary to the adjudication for the information of the circuit court and this Court only makes the more important points of law a part of the syllabus for the general information of the legal profession and public, and not for the government of the circuit court in the further progress of the case."

In old world commerce it meant the combination of a number of merchants for the consummation of a venture beyond the means or the inclination of any one of them. The Dutch merchants were fond of forming syndicates for large trading purposes; and the East India Company, Hudson's Bay Company, and many other concerns of our own time . . . had a similar origin. The syndicate had in it the germ of the joint stock company system, but although each member subscribed a certain amount which he would advance, or for which he would be liable, his liability could not always be restricted thereto. 18. Tagliabue v. Sondermann, 67 Fed. 551, 552, holding that the uses in a syringe and a pump, of the same apparatus working in the same way, are so closely analogous, that a patent on the pump precludes a later patent by another inventor on the syringe.

19. Century Dict. [quoted in California Fig-Syrup Co. v. Stearns, 73 Fed. 812, 815, 20 C. C. A. 22, 33 L. R. A. 56].

"Syrup of Figs" is a descriptive term, therefore not available as a trade-mark. Worden v. California Fig Syrup Co., 187 U. S. 516, 533, 23 S. Ct. 161, 47 L. ed. 282; Cali-boiled with sugar; <sup>20</sup> a thick sweet liquid.<sup>21</sup> Specifically, a saturated solution of sugar in water, often combined with some medicinal substance, or flavored, as with the juice of fruits, for use in confections, cookery or the preparation of beverages.<sup>22</sup> As defined by the United States Department of Agriculture, the product obtained by purifying and elevating the juice of a sugar-producing plant without removing any of the sugar.<sup>23</sup>

SYSTEM. Any complexure or combination of many things; a scheme which reduces many things to regular dependence or co-operation; a scheme which unites many things in order; <sup>24</sup> a plan or scheme according to which things are conifornia Fig-Syrup Co. v. Stearns, 73 Fed. 812, 816, 20 C. C. A. 22, 33 L. R. A. 56. Used to describe a medical preparation it "has a distinct and definite meaning, namely, a combination of sugar and the juice of the fig, and possibly other ingredients, in which, however, the medicinal property of the fig is the active and chief element." California Fig-Syrup Co. v. Stearns, 73 Fed. 812, 815, 20 C. C. A. 22, 33 L. R. A. 56.

23. People v. Harris, 135 Mich. 136, 141, 97 N. W. 402, adding that "cane syrup," "sorghum syrup," and "corn syrup" describe respectively syrups so obtained from the respective plants named.

24. Johnson Dict. [quoted in In re Kemper, MacArthur Pat. Cas. (D. C.) 1, 9].

Of government see Ex p. Wall, 48 Cal. 279, 318, 319, 320, 17 Am. Rep. 425 (where, in construing Const. art. 9, § 4, it is said: ". . . the Constitution commands the Legislature to establish a system of town governments. This form of expression conveyed a definite meaning, when the Constitution was adopted, and is at once understood by those familiar with the systems of town government elsewhere; it would be meaningless, unless applied with reference to organizations, in their general features at least, like those in other States, where systems of town government had been established. To establish a system of government, the duties of the several local officials must be defined, in some of whom (or in the inhabitants of the town acting in a public capacity) a discretionary action must be vested within the scope of the powers given by the organic law which creates the system. In view of the origin of towns and their history in other States, I can conceive of no system of town government which is not continuous; which does not furnish officers to whom is given (during their term of office) the management of the machinery of local government, and which does not provide a legislative assembly, whose enactments shall be the product of deliberation and mutual consultation. This last seems the very life of any such system heretofore known in the United States," and, after describing the town meeting under the system of town governments in New England, as an example of the element of deliberation among the voters of the town, and contrasting the town system in this respect with the representative system of city government) it is added: "The system of town governments, as it existed in New York prior to 1846, is fully explained in the eleventh chapter of the first part of the revised statutes of 1827-8. There, as in New England, the towns possessed certain of the faculties of a body corporate; could sue and be sued, hold lands and make contracts necessary to the exercise of their corporate powers. In New York, as elsewhere, the citizens of towns chose certain town officers, and, when assembled as a deliberative body (Justices of the Peace presiding), made 'prudential rules and regulations,' with respect to local matters committed to their discretion;" where, also it was held that the legislature of California had not yet established a "system of town governments"; McConihe v. State, 17 Fla. 238, 269 [quoted in Enterprise v. State, 29 Fla. 128, 149, 10 So. 740; Ex p. Wells, 21 Fla. 280, 305] (where it is said of the word: ". . . when used in reference to municipal government, it means simply 'rules and regulations' for the organization and government' of municipal corporations," and held that that is its meaning in Const. art. 4, § 21); Martin v. Tyler, 4 N. D. 278, 291, 60 N. W. 392, 25 L. R. A. 838 (where the term is said to be applied in N. D. Const. § 171, to the conduct of county business by township chairmen); Bryant v. Robbins, 70 Wis. 258, 261, 262, 35 N. W. 545 [quoted in Martin v. Tyler, supra] (where it is said: "It may admit of doubt . . . whether the power to construct drains, etc., given to town and county officers under the general law, is, strictly speaking, a part of the 'system of government' belonging to those political corporations within the meaning of the constitution"); State v. Riordan, 24 Wis. 484, 487, 488 (where, in construing Const. art. 4, ] 23, which provides for the establishment of "but one system of town and county government, which shall be as nearly uniform as practicable," it is held that the true construction of "system" in that context is not merely "plan" in such nected or combined into a whole; an assemblage of facts, or of principles and conclusions, scientifically arranged or disposed according to certain mutual relations, so as to form a complete whole, as a system of philosophy, a system of government;<sup>25</sup> in its general meaning, plan, arrangement, method.<sup>26</sup> (System: Of Coördinated Action, see EVIDENCE, 17 Cyc. 287. See also SCHEME, 35 Cyc. 799.)

SYSTEMATIZED DELUSION. A delusion based on a false premise, pursued by a logical process of reasoning to an insane conclusion.<sup>27</sup> (See DELUSION, 13 Cyc. 775; MONOMANIA, 27 Cyc. 886; PARANOIA, 29 Cyc. 1556; and, generally, INSANE PERSONS, 22 Cyc. 1104.)

TABLE. A synopsis or condensed statement, bringing together numerous items or details so as to be comprehended in a single view.<sup>28</sup> (Table: Annuity as Evidence, see EVIDENCE, 17 Cyc. 422. Interest as Evidence, see INTEREST, 22 Cyc. 1577 note 25. Judicial Notice, see EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 871. Keeping or sense that one system or plan, whereby certain general powers of local government are delegated to the counties, to be executed by a class of agents or county while the legislature is left free to determine, increase or diminish, at discretion, the number of county supervisors acting under the general law, since that would endanger the uniformity demanded by the provision).

Of numbering.—“The fact that a single block has been subdivided into lots would not constitute a ‘system’ of numbering” as the phrase is used in Pol. Code, § 3650, providing for assessment. Davis v. Pacific Imp. Co., 137 Cal. 245, 248, 70 Pac. 15.

Of pleading.—In 4 Tex. St. 88, excepting from the general adoption of the common law, the common-law system of pleading, and providing that proceedings in all civil suits shall be conducted by “petition and answer” the words “petition and answer” are intended, not as a restriction of the pleadings to the answer but as the designation of a system of pleadings. Underwood v. Parrott, 2 Tex. 168, 178, 179.

Of public schools see State v. Ogan, 159 Ind. 119, 121, 122, 63 N. E. 227 (where it is said: “The Constitution does not direct the General Assembly to provide for the organization of the common schools, but it directs that body to devise ‘a ‘system’ of common schools,” and after quoting the definition cited in the text supra, “A system of school government in which the cap-sheaf is a state officer, having authority more or less broad, as the legislature may provide, but which, of necessity, reaches down to and affects the schools themselves, is a centralized, and not a localized, form of school government”); Peay v. Talbot, 39 Tex. 335, 346 (holding that as used in Const. art. 9, § 4, providing that the legislature shall establish a “free system” of public schools throughout the state the word “‘system’ means an organized plan, an institution, something established for the use and benefit of the people, so long as the want of public education will continue”).

Of railroad.—What is meant by the “system” of a railroad depends upon the subject to which it is applied and the connection in which it is used. The word has not, in itself, a meaning so clear and explicit that it must be interpreted according to its ordinary and popular meaning, regardless of the consequences of interpretation. As used in Rev. St. (1883) § 42, making “the gross transportation receipts of a railroad . . . line or system” the basis of an excise tax on a railroad which lies partly within and partly without the state, or is operated as part of a line or system extending beyond the state, the words “line” or “system” cannot be separated from the word “railroad,” of which they are predicated. State v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 100 Me. 202, 205, 60 Atl. 901.

“Of the insured.”—“Cause or causes arising within the system of the insured,” as used in an accident insurance policy disclaiming liability for injury due to such causes, while the phrase includes erysipelas, when that disease is one of those enumerated among such causes, although resulting from an external injury, where the word “secondary” is also used to describe the excepted causes (Smith v. Accident Ins. Co., L. R. 5 Exch. 302, 306, 307, 39 L. J. Exch. 211, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 861, 18 Wkly. Rep. 1107), does not include [at least in a policy where the word “secondary” is not used] hernia, although specified as one of such causes, when the hernia is the direct and immediate result of an accident (Fitton v. Accidental Death Ins. Co., 17 C. B. N. S. 122, 136, 34 L. J. C. P. 28, 112 E. C. L. 122 [distinguished in Smith v. Accident Ins. Co., supra]).

Electrical system.—In an ordinance providing that a “system of electric conductors and poles provided with street lamps” be built in the streets, “the use of the word ‘system’ implies that the wires are connected with the power house.” Ewart v. Western Springs, 180 Ill. 318, 326, 54 N. E. 478.

Placing ice on edge with a view to its better preservation does not constitute a “system.” In re Kemper, MacArthur Pat. Cas. (D. C.) 1, 9, where a patent was claimed for a new method of storing ice on vessels.

An appeal is taken when notice of intention to appeal is served as required by law. Saverance v. Lockhart, 66 S. C. 539, 541, 45 S. E. 83. "An appeal cannot be said to be 'taken' . . . until it is, in some way, presented to the court which made the decree appealed from, thereby putting an end to its jurisdiction over the cause, and making it its duty to send it to the Appellate Court." Credit Co. v. Arkansas Cent. R. Co., 128 U. S. 258, 261, 9 S. Ct. 107, 32 L. ed. 448.

49. Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Dick, 9 Ind. 433, 436, where the term was so construed in the constitutional provision against taking private property without compensation.

In a statute prescribing punishment for administering poison to a human being with intent to kill "and which shall have been actually taken by such human being," the term means any method by which the system is made to absorb the poison administered or procured to be administered by another person, and includes every possible way that poison can be administered. State v. Stuart, 88 Miss. 406, 409, 40 So. 1010.

Used in connection with other words.— "Taken or reserved." Brickett v. Minot, 7

Metc. (Mass.) 291, 294. "Taken as true" see State v. Brooks, 99 Mo. 137, 143, 12 S. W. 633. "Taken in the act of adultery" see Gregory v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 73, 77, 94 S. W. 1041; Price v. State, 18 Tex. App. 474, 481, 51 Am. Rep. 322. "Taken together" see St. Thomas First Nat. Bank v. Flath, 10 N. D. 281, 287, 86 N. W. 867. "To be taken as ordered" see Excelsior Wrapper Co. v. 51. Bouvier L. Dict.

"Taking down the testimony," as used in an act providing for the compensation of official stenographic reporters, embraces the whole process of reproducing the testimony of a witness in ordinary or intelligent writing, when necessary to comply with the law, including both the stenographic notes taken by the reporter and the translation of these notes and writing out the same in ordinary language. Where there is no conviction, so as to make it legally necessary to record the evidence, the process of taking down is complete without writing out the stenographic notes, and hence in such cases the compensation of the reporter should be limited to the time occupied in making his notes. Henderson v. Parry, 93 Ga. 775, 21 S. E. 144.

"Taking up" an animal, such as a horse, etc., in Texas, among stockmen, has a well defined meaning, and apprehends that the animal is running loose on the range. Cochran v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 115, 117, 35 S. W. 968. "Taking up" an animal necessarily includes the idea of confining it. Jaquith v. Royce, 42 Iowa 406, 411.

Used in connection with other words.— "Taking by force" see North Bridgewater Second Cong. Soc. v. Howard, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 206, 209. "Taking of poison" see Hill v. Hartford Acc. Ins. Co., 22 Hun (N. Y.) 187, 189. "Taking orders" see In re Abel, 10 Ida. 288, 291, 77 Pac. 621. "Taking poison"

Includes every house of public resort within a statute prohibiting gambling taverns. Wortham v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 669, 675; Linkous v. Com., 9 Leigh (Va.) 608, 611.

Inn and tavern are both said to be houses of public entertainment. Crown Point v. Warner, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 150, 156.

Distinguished from "keeper of a house of private entertainment" see Braswell v. Com., 5 Bush (Ky.) 544, 545.

A restaurant, where meals are furnished, is not an inn or tavern. People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311, 316, 1 Cow. Rep. 381.

A license to keep a "tavern" in the licensee's brick house applied to a frame room adjoining it, which was used as the bar-room. Gray v. Commonwealth, 9 Dana (Ky.) 300, 301, 35 Am. Dec. 136. A license to "keep a tavern" construed under the statute to include license to retail liquors as well as to keep a tavern. Hirn v. State, 1 Ohio St. 15, 19. A license in general terms to keep a "tavern" authorizes the tavern-keeper to vend spirituous liquors in his bar-room or tavern to his guests or others in small quantities, to be drunk in the tavern or elsewhere. Com. v. Kamp, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 309.

TAVERN-KEEPER. One who obtains a license to keep a tavern and for whom it is kept; <sup>90</sup> a person who makes it his business to entertain travelers and passengers, and provide lodging and necessaries for them and their horses and attendants; <sup>91</sup> a person a part of whose business at least it is to sell intoxicating liquors; <sup>92</sup> a person who makes it a business to keep a house of entertainment for travelers; <sup>93</sup> a person who receives and entertains as guests those who choose to visit his house; <sup>94</sup> synonymous with "innkeepers." <sup>95</sup>

TAXABLE COSTS. Full indemnity for the expenses of a party who is successful in a suit between party and party whether at law or in equity; <sup>97</sup> such costs as a party is entitled to have taxed by law. <sup>98</sup> (See, generally, COSTS, 11 Cyc. 1.)

TAXABLE INHABITANT. One who is, or who may lawfully be, taxed; one who possesses all the qualifications necessary to authorize the proper taxing authorities to assess him with the tax. <sup>99</sup> (See TAXATION, post, p. 767.)

94. People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311, 316, 1 Cow. Cr. 381.

95. Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 296, 306; Crown Point v. Warner, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 150, 156.

Does not include one who keeps a mere boarding house or lodging house, or even one who keeps a house for lodging strangers for the season (Southwood v. Myers, 3 Bush (Ky.) 681, 685), nor would it include one who merely keeps a restaurant where meals are furnished (People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311, 316, 1 Cow. Cr. 381).

To constitute an inn-keeper, a tavern-keeper, or hotel-keeper, the party so designated must receive and entertain as guests those who choose to visit his house; and a restaurant where meals are furnished is not an inn or tavern. People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311, 317, 1 Cow. Cr. 381.

2. NATURE OF TAXES — a. In General. In a general sense the terms "tax" and "taxes" include every burden that may be lawfully laid upon the citizen by virtue of the taxing power,<sup>8</sup> but their application in constitutional or statutory provisions varies to some extent according to the intention and purpose of the particular provision,<sup>9</sup> and even the fact that a burden is imposed in the exercise

"The word 'taxes' in its most extended sense, includes all contributions imposed by the Government upon individuals, for the services of the Government, by whatever name they are called or known." Union Bank v. Hill, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 325, 327.

9. Santa Barbara v. Stearns, 51 Cal. 499, 501 (holding that a license-fee is within the term "tax" as used in a particular section of the code of civil procedure and as used in a particular article of the constitution but not as used in a different article of the same constitution); Tull v. Royston, 30 Kan. 617, 619, 2 Pac. 866 (holding that while assessments were not taxes within the meaning of

of the taxing power does not necessarily make it a tax.<sup>10</sup> The essential characteristics of a tax<sup>11</sup> are that it is not a voluntary payment or donation, but an enforced contribution,<sup>12</sup> exacted pursuant to legislative authority,<sup>13</sup> in the exercise of the taxing power,<sup>14</sup> the contribution being of a proportionate character,<sup>15</sup> and payable in money,<sup>16</sup> and imposed, levied, and collected for the purpose of raising the constitution they were taxes within the application of a particular statute); Tompkins v. Little Rock, etc., R. Co., 15 Fed. 6, 11 (holding that the word "tax" as used in the Arkansas statute of 1868, section 7, was not used according to its strict legal signification).

Statutory definitions.—The words "tax" and "taxes" as used in particular statutes have been defined as including "any tax, special assessment, or costs, interest or penalty imposed upon property." Blake v. People, 109 Ill. 504, 525; State v. Irely, 42 Nebr. 186, 208, 60 N. W. 601.

10. In re Hun, 144 N. Y. 472, 477, 39 N. E. 376, holding that, although an assessment for improvements is imposed under the taxing power, this fact does not necessarily make the assessment a tax, and that it is not a tax within the application of a statute requiring executors to pay unpaid taxes. Taxes not the price of governmental protection.—The doctrine that a tax is a payment made to the government in consideration of the advantages which it offers, or as an equivalent for the security which it affords, or a pledge to secure the enjoyment of the remainder of one's property, rests upon a false conception of the relation of the citizen to the state. For the advantages of organized society are not a matter of bargain and sale, and protection in the enjoyment of his rights is a duty owed by the state to every citizen, whether he can or does pay taxes or not, and this duty would be just as much obligatory on the state if it needed no taxes. Black Tax Titles, § 2. c. Taxation and Licensing Distinguished.<sup>31</sup> While in a broad sense a license-fee may be regarded as a tax,<sup>32</sup> there is properly speaking and as generally understood a clear distinction between licensing and taxation,<sup>33</sup> and between license-fees and ordinary taxes.<sup>34</sup> License-fees exacted for the primary purpose of regulating or restraining occupations deemed dangerous to the public or to be specially in need of public control are imposed in the exercise of the police power, and not that of taxation;<sup>35</sup> and where the object of the imposition is not to raise revenue the fact that the fee demanded is greater than the expense of issuing the license, and therefore does in fact produce revenue, is not sufficient to make it a tax.<sup>36</sup> If, however, the fee or charge is imposed solely or primarily as a means of raising revenue it is a tax,<sup>37</sup> regardless of the name by which it may be called.<sup>38</sup>

d. Taxes and Assessments Distinguished. In a broad sense taxes may be said to include assessments for improvements,<sup>39</sup> since the right to impose assessments has its foundation in the taxing power of the government;<sup>40</sup> but in practice and as generally understood there is a clear distinction between the two terms,<sup>41</sup> and ordinarily such assessments are not included in the terms "taxes" or "taxation."<sup>42</sup> Taxes are burdens or impositions laid for purposes of general revenue, while assessments are special and local impositions upon property in the immediate vicinity of a public improvement, made for the public welfare, which are necessary to pay for the improvement and made with reference to the special benefit which such property derives from the expenditure.<sup>43</sup> Hence a charge imposed by law upon all taxable property in a given district is a tax and not an assessment,

An assessment is not regarded as a burden imposed upon persons or property, as is a tax, but is regarded as an equivalent or compensation for the enhanced value which the property of the person assessed has derived from the improvement. Hale v. Kenosha, 29 Wis. 599; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Decatur, 147 U. S. 190, 13 S. Ct. 293, 37 L. ed. 132.

Two meanings of assessment.—The word "assessment" has been employed in two different senses, sometimes as expressing the appraisal or valuation of the property and entering it on the lists for the purpose of taxation, and sometimes as indicating the charge or special tax imposed on the land as its portion of the expense of a benefit conferred by a local improvement. First Div. St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. St. Paul, 21 Minn. 526. See also District of Columbia v. Sisters of Visitation, 15 App. Cas. (D. C.) 300.

Application of rule.—Assessments have been held not to be within the application of the terms "tax" and "taxes" as used in constitutional or statutory provisions requiring every law imposing a tax to state the tax and its object (In re Ford, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 92); limiting the amount of taxes which a municipality may lay in any one year (Greensburg v. Young, 53 Pa. St. 280); providing that taxes shall be collected within a certain time after they are levied and shall not be enforced by law after such time (Gould v. Baltimore, 59 Md. 378); providing that the holder of a general tax certificate before bringing an action to foreclose the lien shall pay the taxes that have accrued on the property (McMillen v. Tacoma, 26 Wash. 358, 67 Pac. 68); subjecting homesteads to forced sale for taxes due thereon (Lovenberg v. Galveston, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 162, 42 S. W. 1024); authorizing a municipality to sell lands for taxes (State v. Irey, 42 Nebr. 186, 60 N. W. 601; Sharp v. Johnson, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 92, 40 Am. Dec. 259; Sharp v. Speir, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 76; Allen v. Galveston, 51 Tex. 302); imposing a penalty for wrongfully enjoining the collection of taxes (Wilson v. Anderson, 28 La. Ann. 261); providing that delinquent taxes shall bear interest after a certain date (Murphy v. People, 120 Ill. 234, 11 N. E. 202; Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Traylor, 104 La. 284, 29 So. 141); and providing that back taxes and a penalty of twenty-five per cent shall be added to the taxes for the current year (Hosmer v. Hunt Drain. Dist., 134 Ill. 317, 25 N. E. 747).

But assessments have been held to be taxes within the application of particular statutory provisions. See Tull v. Royston, 30 Kan. 617, 2 Pac. 866; Smith v. Frankfort, 2 Kan. although the purpose is to make a local improvement;<sup>44</sup> and conversely a charge imposed only upon those property-owners who are to enjoy the benefits accruing from the improvement is an assessment, notwithstanding that the statute may call it a tax.<sup>45</sup>

e. Fees of Public Officers Not Taxes. Fees prescribed to be paid by individuals to public officers, whether in the judicial or executive department of government, for services rendered, are not ordinarily taxes,<sup>46</sup> unless the object of the requirement is to provide general revenue rather than compensation for those officers,<sup>47</sup> as in the case of graduated fees in probate proceedings based upon the valuation of the estate and having no relation to the services rendered or compensation received therefor by the officer.<sup>48</sup> On similar principles, where statutes provide for the inspection of given commodities, with a view to determine their quality and fitness for use, the fees to be paid to the inspectors are not properly classed as taxes.<sup>49</sup>

f. Taxation and Eminent Domain Distinguished. While both are attributes of the sovereign power and both involve the taking of private property for public use,<sup>50</sup> there is a clear distinction between the power of taxation and the right of nations according to that upon which the tax is laid or the purpose for which it is imposed.<sup>56</sup>

4. TAXATION AND REPRESENTATION. Taxation without representation, or without the consent in some form of those who are to be taxed, is vicious in principle and contrary to the fundamental principles of good government;<sup>57</sup> but the principle of representation applies to political communities, as such, and not to individuals, and is satisfied by their adequate representation in the legislative body which votes the tax.<sup>58</sup> Hence this principle does not prevent any state from taxing the property of persons who have not the right to vote, such as infants, married women, and non-residents.<sup>59</sup>

B. Origin, Nature, and Extent of Taxing Power — 1. IN GENERAL. The power of taxation rests upon necessity, and is an essential and inherent attribute of sovereignty, belonging as a matter of right to every independent state or government,<sup>60</sup> and it is as extensive as the range of subjects over which the power of that government extends.<sup>61</sup> As to such subjects and in the absence of consti-

A state has the power in the absence of any constitutional restriction to tax its own property or that of its municipal corporations, but ordinarily the power is not exercised and such property is by implication exempt from the operation of tax laws unless there is a clear expression of an intention to include it. Public School Trustees v. Trenton, 30 N. J. Eq. 667. See also Norfolk v. Perry, 108 Va. 28, 61 S. E. 866, 128 Am. St. Rep. 940.

2. POWER OF UNITED STATES. For the purposes of the general government, congress has power to lay and collect taxes, subject to the limitations imposed by the federal constitution.<sup>74</sup> That instrument provides that congress shall have power "to lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States;"<sup>75</sup> but it is the generally accepted interpretation that this clause is to be read as if it declared that "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, etc., in order to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States,"<sup>76</sup> the second clause of the provision constituting a qualification of the first and limiting the power of taxation to the objects specified.<sup>77</sup> So also congress has no authority to tax the state governments or the means, agencies, or instrumentalities by which they are carried on,<sup>78</sup> nor to interfere with state taxes either in amount, assessment, collection, or means of payment.<sup>79</sup>

3. POWER OF STATES. Subject to the general rules above stated,<sup>80</sup> under which a state cannot tax the property of the United States,<sup>81</sup> or its governmental agencies,<sup>82</sup> and except in so far as it is limited or restrained by the provisions of the constitutions, national and state, the taxing power of a state is general and absolute, and extends to all persons, property, and business within its jurisdiction or reach;<sup>83</sup> and the liability of the same person or property to taxation by

The reason why such property is not taxed is that it would render necessary other taxation for the payment of the taxes so laid so that the public would be taxing itself to raise money to pay over to itself. Public School Trustees v. Trenton, 30 N. J. Eq. 667; Norfolk v. Perry, 108 Va. 28, 61 S. E. 866, 128 Am. St. Rep. 940. A further reason which has been assigned is that such taxation might result in a sale of the property, thereby destroying its public character. *Camden v. C. Territorial Limitations of Taxing Power—1. IN GENERAL. The taxing power of a state is limited to persons and property within and subject to its jurisdiction.<sup>86</sup> Hence it is entirely incompetent for any state to tax realty which lies within the boundaries of another state, no matter who may be the owner;<sup>87</sup> nor does the taxing power of a state extend to the person of a non-resident,<sup>88</sup> or to the personal property of non-residents unless it has an actual situs within the state;<sup>89</sup> nor to the personal property of resident citizens which has a situs of its own, either corporeally or by fiction of law, beyond the boundaries of the state.<sup>90</sup>

2. PROPERTY IN MORE THAN ONE STATE. Where a continuous piece of property, such as a railroad or a bridge, extends into two or more states, each state has the right to tax so much of it as lies within its own borders.<sup>91</sup> But in assessing for taxation the property of an interstate railroad or telegraph line, it is proper for each state to take, as the basis for its own taxation, that proportion of the whole value of the company's whole capital stock which the length of its lines within the state bears to the whole length of all its lines.<sup>92</sup>

3. PROPERTY ON PUBLIC OR INDIAN LANDS.<sup>93</sup> Persons residing on public lands, and their personal property, are not for that reason alone exempt from state taxation.<sup>94</sup> So a state has power to tax a railroad track and right of way through an Indian reservation lying within its own exterior limits, the same having been constructed under grant or permission of congress;<sup>95</sup> or to tax personal property of private individuals other than Indians located on an Indian reservation,<sup>96</sup> such as cattle grazing on such reservation;<sup>97</sup> or to tax personal property of private individuals on a military reservation.<sup>98</sup> Again, when a state cedes land to the United States for the purposes of a military reservation, it may reserve to itself the right to tax persons and property thereon, and the consent of congress to such saving of the power of taxation may be presumed from its acceptance of the grant.<sup>99</sup>

D. Purposes of Taxation — 1. NECESSITY OF PUBLIC PURPOSE.<sup>1</sup> A legislature has no rightful power to impose taxes on the people for any other than a public purpose; it is not legal taxation if the power is exercised for the benefit of private persons or in aid of private uses or enterprises,<sup>2</sup> even where there is no express constitutional prohibition;<sup>3</sup> and it is not sufficient to justify such taxation that the private enterprise may incidentally or indirectly inure to the public benefit.<sup>4</sup> Whether a particular purpose is public in the sense of being a legitimate object of taxation is a question to be determined in the first instance by the legislature,<sup>5</sup> but its decision is not conclusive and may be reviewed by the courts;<sup>6</sup> and while the courts will not pronounce a tax law invalid on this ground unless the absence of a public interest in its objects is clear and palpable,<sup>7</sup> yet if the tax is clearly for an unauthorized purpose they will not hesitate to declare the law invalid.<sup>8</sup>

that the power of taxation is exerted for a public purpose when the money raised is to be applied to the payment of the salaries of the state officers,<sup>10</sup> to the protection of property by means of police and fire departments,<sup>11</sup> to the encouragement of education by means of public schools and colleges,<sup>12</sup> to the support of public charitable and reformatory institutions,<sup>13</sup> to the construction and maintenance of public roads,<sup>14</sup> to the construction or in aid of the construction of railroads,<sup>15</sup> to the establishment of public parks or pleasure-grounds,<sup>16</sup> to the establishment or

In determining this question in a particular case the courts should be governed largely by the course and usage of government, the objects for which taxes have been by long course of legislation levied, and what objects or purposes have been considered necessary to the support and for the proper use of the government, whether state or municipal. Whatever lawfully pertains to this and is sanctioned by time or acquiescence of the people may well be held to belong to the public use and proper for the maintenance of good government, although this may not be the only criterion of lawful taxation. Citizens Sav., etc., Assoc. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 655, 22 L. ed. 455.

The term "public purposes" with reference to objects for which taxes may be levied has been said to have no relation to the urgency of the public need or the extent of the public benefit which is to follow but to be merely "a term of classification, to distinguish the object for which, according to settled usage, the government is to provide, from those which, by the like usage, are left to private inclination, interest or liberality." *People v. The distinction which has been made in favor of taxation in aid of railroads on the ground that, although owned by private corporations, they are of a public character, for public use and subject to public regulation and control, is said to be going "quite to the verge of legislative authority," and the principle does not authorize taxation in aid of a manufacturing establishment or other enterprise of an essential private character. *Cleveland Nat. A distinction has, however, been made between taxation to raise money to pay bounties to soldiers to induce them to enlist or to repay money advanced for the purpose of procuring enlistment and taxation long after a war is over to raise money to pay bounties to soldiers who enlisted without any promise or inducement of this character, it being held that in the latter case the bounty is a mere gratuity not conducive to the public welfare and is therefore unauthorized as being for the benefit of particular individuals and not for of certain other bounties has been held invalid as being for a private rather than a public purpose.<sup>23</sup>

3. SPECIAL OR LOCAL PURPOSES. A tax cannot be imposed exclusively on any district or subdivision of the state to pay any claim or indebtedness not peculiarly the debt of such subdivision, or to raise money for any purpose not peculiarly for the benefit of such subdivision;<sup>24</sup> but there may be special or local taxation for special or local purposes of a public character and beneficial to the community which pays the tax.<sup>25</sup>

4. PAYMENT OF DEBTS OR CLAIMS. Taxation to raise money for the payment of the public debt is always recognized as being for a public and legitimate purpose;<sup>26</sup> and this, although the particular debt or claim against the state or municipality rests only upon a moral obligation and would not be enforceable at law.<sup>27</sup> This principle cannot, however, be extended to include a mere gratuity not based any public purpose. Opinion of Justices, 186 Mass. 603, 72 N. E. 95; Mead v. Acton, 139 Mass. 341, 1 N. E. 413.

But a subsequent statute authorizing taxation to pay a bounty to which the claimant had become entitled under the prior statute authorizing the same while such statute was in force and regarded as constitutional may be sustained on the ground that it is for the payment of a debt constituting a moral obligation, although not enforceable at law. upon any obligation legal, equitable, or moral;<sup>28</sup> and it has also been held that the payment of claims which are void as arising under a statute which has been declared to be unconstitutional is not a legitimate object of taxation.<sup>29</sup> Where public officers, in the honest and faithful discharge of their duty, have been subjected to loss or damage, the responsibility for which does not properly attach to themselves, it has been held proper for the state or municipality to reimburse them, and that taxation for this purpose is legitimate,<sup>30</sup> although there are decisions to the contrary.<sup>31</sup>

E. Power of Legislature and Delegation of Power — 1. TAXATION A LEGISLATIVE FUNCTION. The power to impose taxes is vested exclusively in the legislative department of government, and cannot be exercised except in pursuance of its authority; neither the courts nor the executive possess any powers of taxation, this being solely the function of the legislature.<sup>32</sup> And further, subject to the general and constitutional limitations of state power in this respect, the legislature alone has the right and the discretion to determine the time, amount, nature, and purposes of the taxes to be levied,<sup>33</sup> and the means of enforcing their payment.<sup>34</sup> And no tax of any kind can be laid upon the citizen or his property

2. DELEGATION OF TAXING POWER. It is not competent for the legislature to delegate its power of taxation, wholly or in part, to either of the other departments of government, or to any individual, private corporation, officer, board, or commission.<sup>36</sup> An exception exists in the case of the municipal corporations of the state, to which the legislature may lawfully delegate the power of taxation so far as necessary for their own purposes and in respect to property within their jurisdiction,<sup>37</sup> provided the purpose is a public one.<sup>38</sup> But even in this case the power must be expressly and distinctly granted,<sup>39</sup> and must be exercised in strict conformity to the terms of the grant;<sup>40</sup> and the municipality cannot delegate to an administrative officer or board the authority to determine when, to what extent, or for what purposes taxes shall be laid.<sup>41</sup>

F. Surrender of Power and Estoppel to Exercise — 1. SURRENDER OF POWER IN GENERAL. It is competent for the legislature of a state to release or surrender the power of taxation with respect to particular persons, corporations, or property, and when such a release is in the form of a contract, it is irrevocable.<sup>42</sup> But the relinquishment of this high power of sovereignty is never presumed, and the intention of the legislature in that regard must be manifested in clear and unmistakable terms;<sup>43</sup> and the same rule applies to any limitation upon such power as in regard to the mode or rate of taxation.<sup>44</sup>

2. ESTOPPEL TO IMPOSE TAXES. The state is not estopped to levy and collect taxes on particular property by failure to assess it for a number of years, nor can the rights of the state in this respect be forfeited by the laches of its agents.<sup>45</sup> And it seems that the same rule applies in the case of municipal corporations.<sup>46</sup>

3. CURING DEFECTS AND IRREGULARITIES.<sup>47</sup> In respect to the exercise of the taxing power, it is competent for the legislature to cure or validate by retroactive legislation any defects or irregularities which are not jurisdictional in their nature, or, as otherwise stated, to validate retrospectively any action or proceeding which it was competent to have authorized in advance.<sup>48</sup> But this is not so where the statute under which the tax was attempted to be levied was absolutely void, as Contrary decisions in Ohio, denying the right of the legislature to abridge or surrender any portion of the taxing power of the state, and particularly with reference to a grant of exemption from taxation in the charters of certain state banks (Milan, etc., Plank Road Co. v. Husted, 3 Ohio St. 578; Toledo Bank v. Bond, 1 Ohio St. 622; Mechanics', etc., Bank v. Debolt, 1 Ohio St. 591), were overruled by the supreme court of the United States, on the ground that such grant of exemption constituted a contract with the banks, which, under the federal constitution, must not be impaired by any subsequent legislation of the state (Jefferson Branch Bank v. Skelley, 1 Black (U. S.) 436, 17 L. ed. 173; Mechanics', etc., Bank v. Thomas, 18 How. (U. S.) 384, 15 L. ed. 460; Mechanics', etc., Bank v. Debolt, 18 How. (U. ## II. CONSTITUTIONAL REQUIREMENTS AND RESTRICTIONS.

A. In General — 1. NATURE AND EFFECT OF PROVISIONS. Limitations upon the taxing power both of the United States and of the several states are found in the federal constitution;<sup>51</sup> and the general principle of the separation of the three departments of government forbids such an exercise of the power of taxation as would infringe upon the constitutional rights of the courts or of the executive.<sup>52</sup> There are also in the different state constitutions various provisions relating expressly to taxation,<sup>53</sup> such as the provisions requiring equality and uniformity in taxation,<sup>54</sup> or taxation according to value,<sup>55</sup> or imposing restrictions as to its purpose,<sup>56</sup> or as to its rate or amount.<sup>57</sup> The principle of home rule is also now generally established by constitutional provisions, its application to matters of taxation being found in the declaration that the legislature may levy taxes only for state purposes, those for the uses of municipal corporations being left entirely within the control of the latter under the general authorization of the legislature.<sup>58</sup> The power of taxation being essential to government, and being usually confided

The fifth and seventh amendments to the constitution of the United States are designed as restrictions upon legislation by the federal government, and not upon state governments in respect to their own citizens, and therefore do not affect the validity of a state law imposing a tax on the gross earnings of a railway company. North Missouri R. Co. v. Maguire, 49 Mo. 490, 8 Am. Rep. 141.

Taxation of property in custodia legis.—A statute providing that real estate held by a state officer in his official or judicial capacity, in trust for the benefit of some person, shall be subject to taxation, and the taxes levied thereon shall be a lien enforced as are other taxes, is not an unconstitutional invasion of the functions of the court of chancery in the administration of estates, since the law is at least valid in so far as it makes such taxes a lien on the land, which lien the chancery court can enforce by appropriate proceedings. *Chancellor v. in the largest measure to the legislative discretion, constitutional limitations upon its exercise will not be inferred or implied, but must be distinctly and positively expressed.<sup>59</sup> On the other hand, such constitutional provisions as are designed for the protection of taxpayers, or such as impose penalties or forfeitures upon them, will be strictly construed.<sup>60</sup> In the absence of constitutional restrictions the power of the legislature in regard to taxation is practically absolute and unlimited,<sup>61</sup> so long as it is exercised for public purposes,<sup>62</sup> and taxes may be imposed which are not equal, uniform, or according to value;<sup>63</sup> and while such taxation may be unwise, inequitable, or oppressive, it cannot merely upon this ground be declared unconstitutional,<sup>64</sup> the proper remedy being by appeal to the legislature and not to the courts.<sup>65</sup>

2. STATEMENT OF OBJECT OF TAX. The constitutions of several states provide that every law imposing a tax shall state distinctly the object of the same, to which only it shall be applied.<sup>66</sup> It is held, however, that this applies only to the ordinary and general taxes for state purposes, and such as are imposed generally on all the taxable property in the state, and not to local taxes for local purposes,<sup>67</sup>

Stating the tax.—A law which merely directs a tax to be levied for certain purposes, leaving it to the commissioners named in the act to determine the amount to be raised, does not "state the tax" within the meaning of the constitution. Hanlon v. Westchester, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 383, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 261.

Amendatory or supplemental legislation.—The constitutional provision applies to a tax statute, although it is merely an amendment of a former law. People v. Moring, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 642 [affirmed in 3 Abb. Dec. 539, 3 Keyes 374, 4 Transer. App. 522]. But see Com. v. Brown, 91 Va. 762, 21 S. E. 357, 28 L. R. A. 110, where it is said that a law which merely continues an old tax is not affected by the constitutional requirement, provided the act which originally imposed the tax sufficiently stated its object.

Reference to another statute.—In some states the constitution also provides that it shall not be sufficient for a tax law to refer to any other statute to fix the tax or its object. But this is not violated by a reference to another law merely for the purpose of designating the machinery to be employed in assessing and collecting the tax. Trowbridge v. Detroit, 99 Mich. 443, 58 N. W. 368.

Object of the tax stated by the constitution.—A statute is not invalid for failure to state the object of the tax which it levies where the constitution itself directs how that particular tax shall be appropriated. Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68.

or to special taxes on peculiar kinds of property or such as are in the nature of license or occupation fees;<sup>68</sup> nor does the provision apply to laws which merely provide or regulate the machinery for assessing and collecting the tax.<sup>69</sup> An exact enumeration of all the items of expenditure to which the revenue of the state may be applied is neither practicable nor required by such a constitutional provision; it is sufficient if the tax law states in general terms that the taxes are to be applied to "the ordinary and current expenses of the state," or to its "general fund," without greater detail.<sup>70</sup>

3. RESTRICTIONS AS TO PURPOSES OF TAXATION. In the absence of specific constitutional restrictions, the legislature of a state is vested with the authority to determine the objects and purposes for which the taxing power shall be exercised,<sup>71</sup> subject only to the condition that such purposes shall be public,<sup>72</sup> and lawful.<sup>73</sup> It is, however, commonly provided that taxes shall be imposed by the legislative authority only for state purposes,<sup>74</sup> and that the legislature shall not levy taxes on the inhabitants or property of municipal corporations for local or corporate purposes.<sup>75</sup>

B. Equality and Uniformity — 1. IN GENERAL — a. Constitutional Provisions.<sup>76</sup> The constitutions of many of the states contain the requirement that taxation shall be equal and uniform, that all property in the state shall be taxed in proportion to its value, that all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, or that the legislature shall provide for an equal and uniform rate of assessment and taxation;<sup>77</sup> and in the face of such provisions a tax law which violates the prescribed

There are express constitutional requirements in some jurisdictions that taxation shall be for public purposes only (State v. St. Louis, 216 Mo. 47, 115 S. W. 534; *State v. rule of equality and uniformity is invalid,<sup>78</sup> although there is sufficient difference in the wording of the different provisions to account for some lack of uniformity in the decisions as to what constitutes a violation of their requirements.<sup>79</sup> The requirement does not apply to every species of taxation,<sup>80</sup> and does not restrict the legislature to the levying of taxes upon property alone.<sup>81</sup> The restriction relates only to the rate or amount of taxation and its incidence upon taxable persons and property, and does not limit the legislature in regulating the mode of levying and collecting the taxes imposed,<sup>82</sup> and it also relates only to property within the state, and neither the statutes of another state nor the action of its taxing officers can affect the question.<sup>83</sup> In the absence of such a constitutional requirement it is not essential to the validity of taxation that it shall be equal and uniform,<sup>84</sup> and in such a case a tax law cannot be declared unconstitutional merely because it operates unequally, unjustly, or oppressively.<sup>85</sup>

b. What Taxes Affected — (i) IN GENERAL. The requirement of equality and uniformity applies only to taxes in the proper sense of the word, levied with the object of raising revenue for general purposes,<sup>86</sup> and not to such as are of an extraordinary and exceptional kind,<sup>87</sup> or to local assessments for improvements levied upon property specially benefited thereby,<sup>88</sup> or to other burdens, charges, or impositions which are not properly speaking taxes;<sup>89</sup> and further, such a constitutional provision is to be restricted to taxes on property,<sup>90</sup> as distinguished Virginia.—Slaughter v. Com., 13 Gratt. 767.

United States.—Ex p. Thornton, 12 Fed. 538, 4 Hughes 220.

Property taxes and business taxes distinguished.—A tax imposed on the premium receipts of an insurance company is a business tax and not a property tax (Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assoc. v. Augusta, 109 Ga. 73, 35 S. E. 71; Scottish Union, etc., Ins. Co. v. Herriott, 109 Iowa 606, 80 N. W. 665, 77 Am. St. Rep. 548); and the same is true of a tax on the gross receipts of a railroad company (State v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 45 Md. 361, 24 Am. Rep. 511; State v. Northern Cent. R. Co., 44 Md. 131); and of a tax on savings banks according to the amount of their deposits (State v. Richards, 52 N. J. L. 156, 18 Atl. 582); but on the other hand, a license-tax on the cash value of the stock in trade of merchants in the city is a property tax and not an occupation tax (Brookfield v. Tocey, 141 Mo. 619, 43 S. W. 387); and so is a tax on intoxicating liquors, in stock or stored, as distinguished from a tax on the business of liquor selling (Com. v. Taylor, (Ky.) 38 S. W. 10).

In Texas the constitution expressly provides that "all occupation taxes shall be equal and uniform upon the same class of subjects within the limits of the authority levying the tax." Hoefling v. San Antonio, 85 Tex. 228, 20 S. W. 85, 16 L. R. A. 608.

94. Johnston v. Macon, 62 Ga. 645; Hager v. Walker, 128 Ky. 1, 107 S. W. 254, 32 Ky.

this extent also, and no further, the principle applies to license fees or taxes imposed under the police power or for the better regulation of occupations supposed to have an important public aspect.<sup>95</sup>

(III) INHERITANCE AND SUCCESSION TAXES. A statute imposing taxes on inheritances, legacies, and successions is not within the constitutional rule of equality and uniformity, because it lays the tax not on property, but on the privilege of succeeding to the ownership of real or personal estate by will or descent.<sup>96</sup>

(IV) GENERAL MUNICIPAL TAXES. The constitutional provisions in regard to equality and uniformity of taxation are ordinarily held not to be restricted

L. Rep. 748, 129 Am. St. Rep. 238, 15 L. R. A. N. S. 495; Pullman Palace-Car Co. v. State, 64 Tex. 274, 53 Am. Rep. 758. See also Cook v. Marshall County, 119 Iowa 384, 93 N. W. 372, 104 Am. St. Rep. 283 [affirmed in 196 U. S. 261, 25 S. W. 233, 49 L. ed. 471].

Classification of occupations.—The constitutional provision does not prevent a classification of the various occupations subject to taxation. Thus, butchers and milk dealers may constitute separate classes, and so also retail dealers in meats and farmers who sell meats from their own wagons. Davis v. Macon, 64 Ga. 128, 37 Am. Rep. 60.

Classification by amount of business done.—Persons following the same calling may be classified for taxation according to the amount of their business. Sacramento v. Crocker, 16 Cal. 119; Johnston v. Macon, 62 Ga. 645; Goodwin v. Savannah, 53 Ga. 410; Aurora v. McGannon, 138 Mo. 38, 39 S. W. 469; Gatlin v. Tarboro, 78 N. C. 119; Western Union Tel. Co. v. State, 55 Tex. 314. But see Schuster v. Louisville, 89 S. W. 689, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 588.

Classification by population of cities.—The constitutional requirement is not violated by graduating a business tax according to the population of the city or town in which it is carried on. Blessing v. Galveston, 42 Tex. 641; Texas Banking, etc., Co. v. State, 42 Tex. 636. But see Hager v. Walker, 128 Ky. 1, 107 S. W. 254, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 748, 129 Am. St. Rep. 238, 15 L. R. A. N. S. 195.

Classification according to branch of business.—The legislature may lawfully discriminate, for purposes of taxation, between persons pursuing different branches of the same general business, as between brewers and distillers on the one hand, and saloon-keepers on the other, or between persons holding licenses for the sale of different kinds of liquors or between licensees in cities and in rural districts. Territory v. Connell, 2 Ariz. 339, 16 Pac. 209; Trimm v. Harrison, 109 Ill. 593; State v. Rolle, 30 La. Ann. 991, 31 Am. Rep. 234; Kaliski v. Grady, 25 La. Ann. 576; Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 539, 9 N. E. 672.

Classification of merchants.—A statute which divides merchandise into several groups and classes and requires any person who desires to engage in the sale of articles of more than one class or group to pay a license-fee is invalid (State v. Ashbrook, 154 Mo. 375, 55 S. W. 627, 77 Am. St. Rep. 765, 48 L. R. A. 265); and so is a city ordinance which imposes a higher fee upon a merchant selling goods by sample and keeping his stock in trade outside the city than upon one who maintains a store in the city (Ex p. Frank, 52 Cal. 606, 28 Am. Rep. 642).

Maryland.—Applegarth v. State, 89 Md. 140, 42 Atl. 941.

Missouri.—Glasgow v. Rowse, 43 Mo. 479. But see St. Louis v. Spiegel, 75 Mo. 145, holding that under a constitutional provision that taxes "shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax," an ordinance which requires a license-fee of a certain amount in one part of a city and a different fee in a different part of the city for carrying on the same business is unconstitutional.

But the legislature cannot under pretense of a license-fee impose unequal taxes and establish a partial exemption. Atty.-Gen. v. Winnebago Lake, etc., Plank Road Co., 11 Wis. 35.

Tax on dogs.—A statute or ordinance imposing a tax on dogs is a valid exercise of the police power, and not within the constitutional requirement of equality and uniformity. Van Horn v. People, 46 Mich. 133, 9 N. W. 246, 41 Am. Rep. 159; Kidd v. Reynolds, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 355, 50 S. W. 600; Carter v. Dow, 16 Wis. 298.

to state taxes but to be equally applicable to general taxation by cities, counties, and other municipal corporations for their general purposes,<sup>97</sup> although provisions that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state are held to apply only to state taxes,<sup>98</sup> or at least to be so applicable in the sense that they do not require that every tax shall be assessed throughout the entire state,<sup>99</sup> or prevent the several counties or municipalities from levying taxes for their own purposes according to their several needs;<sup>1</sup> and the legislature may authorize each to make its own valuation within its own limits so long as the principles of equality and uniformity are preserved with respect to persons and property within such limits.<sup>2</sup>

(v) LOCAL TAXES FOR LOCAL PURPOSES. As previously shown local assessments for improvements are not properly speaking taxes,<sup>3</sup> and it is ordinarily held that the constitutional provisions as to equality and uniformity of taxation do not apply to such assessments,<sup>4</sup> and even in the case of taxes proper it is only taxation for state purposes which must be equal and uniform throughout the entire state.<sup>5</sup> These constitutional provisions do not prevent local taxation for local purposes,<sup>6</sup> or require equality and uniformity throughout the state as between

Such taxation must conform to the same principles of equality, uniformity, and just valuation as are essential in state taxation, but the regulations for securing the same need not be made by the legislature but may be prescribed by the municipal authorities. A taxing district is fixed in most cases by the nature of the case itself. Thus if the tax is for general state purposes the whole state will constitute the taxing district, and if for general county or city purposes the whole county or city respectively will constitute the taxing district, but where it is not so fixed by the nature of the case it is within the power of the legislature to do so and its discretion will not be interfered with unless it clearly appears that the tax does not pertain to the district taxed and was imposed and apportioned without regard to any special local interest on the part of such district in the purpose to be accomplished. School-districts.—The Georgia statute providing for the creation of local tax district schools and for the laying off of counties into school-districts is not in violation of the constitutional requirements as to uniformity of taxation. Henslee v. McLarty, 131 Ga. 244, 62 S. E. 66.

Tautges, 50 Minn. 248, 52 N. W. 858.

11. Maltby v. Tautges, 50 Minn. 248, 52 N. W. 858, holding that it is the interest of the district in the object of the tax and not the location which determines whether such object is a proper subject for district taxation, and that a particular district may be so interested in a public work which has its situs in a different district.

13. Sherlock v. Winnetka, 68 Ill. 530.

As otherwise stated, taxes are said to be equal and uniform when no person or class of persons in the taxing district, whether a state, county, or other municipal corporation, is taxed at a different rate than are proportion to value is imposed upon one person or species of property than upon others similarly situated or of like character.<sup>14</sup> Uniformity requires that all taxable property shall be alike subjected to the tax,<sup>15</sup> and this requirement is violated if particular kinds, species, or items of property are selected to bear the whole burden of the tax, while others, which should be equally subject to it, are left untaxed.<sup>16</sup> Further, it is implied that each tax shall be uniform throughout the taxing district involved. A state tax must be apportioned uniformly throughout the state, a county tax throughout the county, and a city tax throughout the city.<sup>17</sup>

d. What Inequality Sufficient to Invalidate Tax Law. It is a matter of common experience that absolute equality in the imposition of a tax is not attainable. Nor is this the meaning of the constitutional provision. All that it requires is an aim and intention on the part of the legislature, in framing the tax law, to approximate to the ideal of absolute equality as closely as the nature of the subject other persons in the same district upon the same value of the same thing, and where the objects of taxation are the same, by whomsoever owned, or whatsoever they may be. Norris v. Waco, 57 Tex. 635. Taxation is equal and uniform when the tax reaches and bears with the like burden upon all the property within the taxing district; and it bears the like burden when the valuation of each parcel is ascertained in the same mode—the mode prescribed by law—and when it is subject to the same rate of taxation as other property within the district. People v. Whyler, 41 Cal. 351. And see Hodgson v. New Orleans, 21 La. Ann. 301; Texas Banking, etc., Co. v. State, 42 Tex. 636; Albrecht v. State, 8 Tex. App. 216, 34 Am. Rep. 737.

Distribution of railroad tax according to mileage.—A scheme for assessing an entire railroad line and distributing the value over the main line to different taxing districts on a mileage basis does not violate the constitutional requirement of uniformity of valuation and assessment for taxation. *State v. and the necessities of practical administration will permit.<sup>18</sup> Hence the courts will not pronounce a statute invalid on this ground unless it appears that it was framed on a plan or principle not calculated to produce equality and uniformity, or that its administration will result in such flagrant injustice as to evidence an entire disregard of the constitutional requirement.<sup>19</sup>

e. Fraud or Defects in Execution of Tax Law. The constitutional requirement of equality and uniformity has regard to the laws which may be passed for the imposition of taxes, and not to their practical working or execution;<sup>20</sup> and hence a law properly framed cannot be declared invalid because injustice or inequality results from the error or misconduct of the officers charged with its administration,<sup>21</sup> or because it is practically possible, under the terms of the statute, to escape taxation on some kinds of property by manipulation or evasion.<sup>22</sup> But misconduct on the part of taxing officers resulting in an assessment which is contrary to the constitutional principles of equality and uniformity may invalidate the particular assessment so made,<sup>23</sup> or at least entitle those discriminated against to relief against the assessment to the extent to which it is improper.<sup>24</sup>

f. Exemptions — (1) IN GENERAL.<sup>25</sup> As to the effect of the constitutional provisions relating to equality and uniformity of taxation upon the right to grant exemptions there is some conflict of authority,<sup>26</sup> due in part to a difference in the wording of the constitutional provisions,<sup>27</sup> although the authorities are not entirely uniform as to the effect of provisions similarly worded.<sup>28</sup> It is generally held that an exemption from taxation granted by the legislature to particular persons or property violates the constitutional requirement of equality and uniformity and is therefore invalid, except as to particular instances in which the constitution itself permits it.<sup>29</sup> Still there are numerous decisions upholding such exemptions, as against the constitutional provision, provided the particular exemption is founded on some sound principle of public policy or some consideration moving to the public, and provided it does not result in unjust discriminations but is the property of individuals was assessed at a certain percentage of its true value, and the property of a railroad company at its full value, the court would relieve against the illegal discrimination by reducing the railroad assessment to the same proportion as that applied to other property); *Dundee Mortg., etc., Co. v. In Pennsylvania the constitution in addition to the provision requiring uniformity expressly prohibits any exemptions except in equally available to all taxpayers possessing property of the exempted class;<sup>30</sup> it being held that the requirement of equality and uniformity does not mean that all property must be taxed so as to prevent the granting of any exemptions, but merely that such property as is made subject to taxation shall be taxed equally and uniformly,<sup>31</sup> although in some cases the provisions are so worded or coupled with other provisions as to show an intention to prevent the granting of any exemptions.<sup>32</sup> The right to grant exemptions is, however, exclusively a legislative power, and does not belong to municipal corporations unless specifically accorded to them by statute.<sup>33</sup>

(II) CORPORATE PROPERTY. The federal constitution secures to the citizens of each state all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states; and this prevents a state from taxing the property of non-residents, found within its borders, at a higher rate than is imposed on its own citizens, or exacting from them higher license or privilege taxes.<sup>45</sup> The same result is also held to follow from the constitutional provisions requiring the taxation of all property at an equal and uniform rate.<sup>46</sup>

(III) BETWEEN CORPORATIONS. Unless restrained by some constitutional provision for the equal taxation of all property within the state, applicable as well to corporations as to individuals,<sup>47</sup> it is competent for the legislature to divide ation as of the first day of May in each year and that real property may be assessed at any time between that date and the last Monday of June. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Lincoln County, 57 Wis. 137, 15 N. W. 121.

Tax imposed on all corporations.—A franchise or other tax which applies to all corporations subject to the power of the state, without discrimination, is valid and constitutional. Paducah St. R. Co. v. McCracken corporations into various classes for the purposes of taxation,<sup>48</sup> and a tax law satisfies the requirement of equality and uniformity which falls impartially upon all corporations of the same kind or class, as all railroads or all banks,<sup>49</sup> although other corporations of a different character are taxed at a different rate or not at all.<sup>50</sup> But a law which discriminates between corporations of the same class, taxing some at a different rate from others, is invalid.<sup>51</sup>

(IV) AS TO RATE OR MODE OF ASSESSMENT AND VALUATION — (A) In General. The principle of uniformity in taxation requires uniformity in the mode of assessment as well as in the rate charged,<sup>52</sup> particularly where it is expressly required to be by a uniform rule,<sup>53</sup> and forbids discrimination between different classes or species of property all equally subject to the tax, whether this is accomplished by taxing them at different rates on their actual value,<sup>54</sup> or by assessing one kind of property at a certain proportion of its real value and another kind at another proportion.<sup>55</sup> But so long as no such discrimination results, but an

Classification.—Where there is a proper ground for the classification of different kinds of property (see infra, II, B, 2), it is not a violation of the requirement of equality and uniformity that different classes are assessed at different rates in proportion to their values if all property of each class is assessed uniformly in proportion to its value (Smith v. Kelly, 24 Oreg. 464, 33 Pac. 642).

Tax on income or receipts of corporations.—A tax upon a corporation may be proportioned to its income or earnings, as well as to the value of its franchises or the property possessed. Kneeland v. Milwaukee, 15 Wis. 454; Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Waukesha County, 9 Wis. 431 note; Minot v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 206, 21 L. ed. 888. But see State v. U. S., etc., Express Co., 60 N. H. 219.

Tax on rents reserved.—A statute taxing rents reserved in leases, which are to be assessed at a principal sum, the interest on which at the legal rate would produce a sum equal to such annual rents, is not invalid as fixing the valuation of a particular kind of property, instead of leaving it to be determined as in the case of other property. Livingston v. Hollenbeck, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; Loring v. State, 16 Ohio 590.

Property unlawfully omitted.—There is no constitutional objection to a statute providing for the taxation of property which was unlawfully omitted from assessment, or for its reassessment where there was a gross undervaluation. State v. Weyerhauser, 68 Minn. 353, 71 N. W. 265.

Income not property.—A constitutional provision that "taxes shall be ad valorem only and uniform on all species of property taxed" does not require that the gross earnings of merchants and the interest on bonds and notes shall be taxed at the same rate as real estate; for income is not "property" in this sense. Waring v. Savannah, 60 Ga. 93.

Right to object to assessment.—A corporation whose franchise has been assessed at its fair cash value by the board of assessors cannot complain of the inequality caused by the fact that other officers have, in violation of the constitution and statutes, assessed property at less than its fair cash value. Louisville R. Co. v. Com., 105 Ky. 710, 49 S. W. 486, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1509.

(B) Provision For Deducting Indebtedness. The rule of equality and uniformity in taxation is not violated by permitting the taxpayer, in listing or returning the amount of his taxable property, to deduct the amount of his actual present indebtedness, whether this allowance be made against personal property and credits,<sup>59</sup> or by the deduction of a mortgage debt from the value of the real estate on which it is a lien,<sup>60</sup> or by allowing a corporation to deduct from its taxable assets the value of its real estate which is separately taxed.<sup>61</sup> But there must be no discrimination in this respect between different classes of property,<sup>62</sup> or between different individuals or corporations.<sup>63</sup>

(V) AS TO ENFORCEMENT AND PAYMENT OF TAXES — (A) In General. Since the constitutional rule applies to the statute imposing the tax, rather than to the details of its administration, an objection to the validity of the law on this ground cannot be predicated on the mere fact that the statute, which imposes the tax, makes different provisions for the collection and enforcement of taxes on different kinds of property or as to different classes of taxpayers,<sup>64</sup> as by directing that certain taxes shall be paid or collectable at an earlier date than others,<sup>65</sup>

Discrimination against national bank stock.—That the law of a state permits the taxpayer to deduct the amount of his indebtedness from the amount of all bonds, notes, and other evidences of debt on which he is taxable does not necessarily render the assessment of shares of stock in a national bank at their market value, without allowing the holder to deduct his debts, an unlawful discrimination against such stock; and the court will not so pronounce it in the absence of any data from which to determine what proportion the moneyed capital of individual citizens included in the term "credits" bears to the amount invested in national bank stock. *Wellington First Nat. (B) Imposition of Penalty.<sup>67</sup> A statute imposing a penalty for delinquency in the payment of taxes, or for failure or refusal to return property for assessment, is not invalid on the ground of inequality or unjust discrimination;<sup>68</sup> but a penalty cannot be imposed for any default or omission which is wholly that of the public officers and not of the taxpayer.<sup>69</sup>

h. Fixing Situs of Property For Purpose of Taxation. The legislature may, without violating the constitutional provisions in regard to equality and uniformity of taxation, fix the situs of personal property for purposes of taxation,<sup>70</sup> and give it a situs other than the domicile of the owner,<sup>71</sup> it being sufficient if the property where it is taxed is taxed equally and uniformly with other property in the same taxing locality,<sup>72</sup> but real property must be taxed where it is actually situated.<sup>73</sup>

Taxing whole or constituent elements.—It is within the legislative discretion either to tax the constituent elements of the property as by taxing separately the corporate capital and corporate shares or the separate estate of the life-tenant, remainder-man, etc., fair and reasonable system based on grounds of public policy or on some natural and substantial difference of situation or circumstances;<sup>78</sup> but a classification cannot be sustained which is arbitrary, invidious, or unreasonable,<sup>79</sup> and the tax must be equal and uniform as to the class upon which it operates.<sup>80</sup>

b. Corporations and Corporate Property—(I) IN GENERAL. Pursuant to the principles just stated, it is competent for the state to classify domestic corporations, for the purposes of taxation, according to the nature of their business,<sup>81</sup> or to tax at its full value the thing which represents these various elements of property. Com. v. Walsh, 133 Ky. 103, 106 S. W. 240, 117 S. W. 398.

Banks and individuals may be put in separate classes and different rules applied as to the nature and amount of the deduction of debits from credits. Johnson County v. Johnson, (Ind. 1909) 89 N. E. 590.

Real and personal property.—The legislature has power to classify property as personal and real for purposes of taxation, and is not controlled in so doing by the common-law distinctions between those classes of property. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Miami County, 67 Kan. 434, 73 Pac. 103. But see supra, II, B, 1, g, (1).

Business or occupation taxes.—In respect to the classification of occupations or pursuits for purposes of taxation, a tax law possesses the requisite character of uniformity if the persons subject to it are duly divided into classes and the law operates on the members of each class uniformly under the same circumstances. Aachen, etc., F. Ins. Co. v. Omaha, 72 Nebr. 518, 101 N. W. 3; Rosenbloom v. State, 64 Nebr. 342, 89 N. W. 1053, 57 L. R. A. 922. See also supra, II, B, 1, b, (II).

Mining property.—A statute dividing mining property into two classes for taxation: (1) Mines producing an annual output of more than one thousand dollars; and (2) all other mining property without reference to value, is not so unreasonable as to justify judicial interference. People v. Henderson, 12 Colo. 369, 21 Pac. 144.

Classification of cities according to population, for the purposes of taxation, is not repugnant to the constitutional provisions. Louisville v. Com., 134 Ky. 488, 121 S. W. 411; *Com. v. Corporate and individual debts.—It is competent to impose a tax on debts which is to be assessed on the actual value of debts due from individuals and on the nominal value of debts due from private corporations. Com. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 129 Pa. St. 429, 18 Atl. 406, 410; Coal Ridge Imp., etc., Co. v. Jennings, 127 Pa. St. 397, 17 Atl. 986; Com. v. Delaware Div. Canal Co., 123 Pa. St. 594, 16 Atl. 584, 2 L. R. A. 798.

Good and bad debts.—A statute making debts due from solvent debtors subject to taxation does not violate the constitutional provision, on the theory that it distinguishes between debts due from solvent and insolvent debtors. Kingsley v. Merrill, 122 Wis. 185, 99 N. W. 1044, 67 L. R. A. 200.

While all state taxes must be uniform throughout the state,<sup>85</sup> and all local taxes uniform throughout the particular subdivision of the state by which they are levied,<sup>86</sup> this does not mean that taxes for the same purpose must be imposed in different territorial subdivisions at the same time,<sup>87</sup> or that one subdivision cannot be taxed for a particular local purpose unless the other subdivisions are also taxed;<sup>88</sup> nor does it prevent the creation of different taxing districts within the state,<sup>89</sup> and so there may be different rates of local taxation in such different subdivisions, provided there is uniformity within each particular county, municipality, or taxing district;<sup>90</sup> but to render taxation uniform each taxing district should confine itself to the objects of taxation within its limits.<sup>91</sup>

c. Taxing Part of State For General Benefit. So also, it is not permissible, in view of this constitutional provision, to lay a tax exclusively upon one municipality or portion of the state, when the proceeds are to be devoted to general state purposes or the support of a state institution.<sup>93</sup> But this does not forbid authorizing the counties or cities to compete with each other in offering donations for the location of a state institution and taxing the successful competitor for the payment of the donation offered,<sup>94</sup> or forbid a grant of authority to a municipality to levy taxes in aid of a railroad.<sup>95</sup>

d. Urban and Suburban Lands. It is ordinarily held that the constitutional provisions in regard to equality and uniformity of taxation prohibit any discrimination as to the rate of taxation between lands lying within and those lying without incorporated towns or cities, in the case of a state tax,<sup>96</sup> or, in the case of municipal taxation, between lands within the municipality which consist of city lots and those which are used for agricultural purposes,<sup>97</sup> notwithstanding the legislature may have acted unwisely or unjustly in extending the limits of the municipality so as to include lands of the latter character.<sup>98</sup> Conversely, if these different classes of lands are in fact taxed at the same rate, such taxes cannot be held to be unequal upon the ground of any inequality of benefits to the owner.<sup>99</sup>

Where a new county is created by taking parts of other counties its liability for a proportion of the debts of such other counties should be measured not by the amount of territory taken but according to the taxable value of the property in the parts of the other counties taken (Mills County v. Brown County, 85 Tex. 391, 20 S. W. 81); and if measured in this manner there is no violation of the constitutional requirement of equality and uniformity in taxation (*Presidio County v. #### 4. TAXATION OF INDIVIDUALS AND CORPORATIONS — a. Discrimination in General.

For the purposes of a general tax on property there cannot lawfully be any discrimination between that owned by individuals and that owned by corporations, but all must be taxed at the same equal rate.<sup>1</sup> But this rule is not violated by imposing a special franchise tax on corporations,<sup>2</sup> or by laying special duties upon them in the exercise of the police power, when their operations affect the general public.<sup>3</sup>

b. As to Mode of Assessment or Valuation. The constitutional requirement of equality and uniformity is not violated by a statute which provides a special mode of assessing or appraising the property of corporations, when this is rendered necessary by the nature or distribution of the property, and when the plan devised is inherently fair and just;<sup>4</sup> and on this principle, it is competent to commit the assessment of corporate property to special boards or officers.<sup>5</sup> But a system is not to be evaded by taxing the same thing under different names.<sup>10</sup> It is not, however, every duplication of taxation which is objectionable on this ground,<sup>11</sup> and the terms "double" and "duplicate" have sometimes been used to designate respectively that which is objectionable or prohibited and that which is not.<sup>12</sup> Double taxation in the objectionable or prohibited sense exists only where the same property is taxed twice when it ought to be taxed but once,<sup>13</sup> and to constitute such double taxation the second tax must be imposed upon the same property,<sup>14</sup> by the same state or government,<sup>15</sup> during the same taxing Double taxation on the same land under the same title is not permissible (State v. Allen, 65 W. Va. 335, 64 S. E. 140); but where there are adverse claimants to the same land it is not double taxation to require each claimant to list his claim and pay taxes upon it (Eastern Kentucky Coal Lands Corp. v. Com., 127 Ky. 667, 106 S. W. 260, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 129, 108 S. W. 1138, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 49).

Tax on raw material and on finished products.—It would be a case of duplicate taxation if the same article were taxed in the hands of the same person first as raw material and again, in the same year, as a finished product; but this objection does not apply to a statute which separates the raw material from the product and imposes the tax on either class only once. See Christian Moerlein Brewing Co. v. Hagerty, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 330, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 276.

Taxation of chattels real.—A statute providing for the taxation of chattels real as personalty is not unconstitutional as imposing double taxation. Harvey Coal, etc., Co. v. Dillon, 59 W. Va. 605, 63 S. E. 928, 6 L. R. A. N. S. 628.

Tax on property and on administration of same in probate court.—Where the executors of a decedent's estate had paid all the taxes due on the real and personal property of the estate for the year in which they applied for letters testamentary, a demand by the clerk of the probate court for the payment of an additional docket fee, proportioned to the size of the estate, imposed by statute, could not be enforced, as it would constitute double taxation. Cook County v. Fairbank, 222 Ill. 578, 78 N. E. 895.

Double taxation should be avoided not only in not taxing the same property twice in the same year for the same purpose but also in not taxing the same thing twice whatever its form. Com. v. Walsh, 133 Ky. 103, 106 S. W. 240, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 460, 117 S. W. 398.

Harris*, (Ky. 1909) 118 S. W. 294.

Bridge and railroad property.—Where a bridge belonging to a railroad is taxed as a part of the railroad and the taxes paid, it cannot be again taxed as a bridge. State v. Louisiana, etc., R. Co., 196 Mo. 523, 94 S. W. 279.

Tax on loans and debts.—The lender of money is not subjected to double taxation by reason of a statutory provision requiring the payment of taxes on money loaned by him and on solvent debts due him over his own indebtedness. People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432. And see Kingsley v. Merrill, 122 Wis. 185, 99 N. W. 1044, 67 L. R. A. 200.

Assets of insolvent bank.—Notes and solvent credits of an insolvent state bank passing to an assignee before the day for listing property for taxation may be taxed to the assignee, and the fact that the creditors of the bank have their interests in the assets of the bank assessed to them individually as an indebtedness properly collectable does not constitute double taxation. *Gerard v. period,<sup>16</sup> and must be a burden imposed by the state and not one voluntarily assumed by agreement;<sup>17</sup> but there may be double taxation in requiring a double contribution to the same tax on account of the same property, although the assessments are to different persons.<sup>18</sup> At the same time it must be remembered that the same property may represent distinct values belonging to different persons, and the fact that each is taxed on the value which the property represents in his hands does not constitute double taxation.<sup>19</sup> Thus the interest of the vendor in an executory contract of sale may be taxed and also the interest of the vendee;<sup>20</sup> but trust property cannot be taxed both to the trustee and to the cestui que trust,<sup>21</sup> whether the trustee is a corporation or an individual.<sup>22</sup> There is no constitutional objection to the levy of a license-tax for the privilege of carrying on a particular business and at the same time a tax on the property employed in the business.<sup>23</sup> While in the case of bank deposits it has been held that the depositors may be taxed on the amount of their deposits and the bank on the money held on deposit or the property in which it has been invested,<sup>24</sup> it has ordinarily been held that in the case of savings banks this constitutes double taxation,<sup>25</sup> although it is not double taxation to tax depositors on their deposits and the savings bank upon its real estate, furniture, surplus, and undivided profits.<sup>26</sup> It is not double taxation to require individuals to contribute to the support of relatives confined in a public institution, such as an insane asylum which is supported by general taxation,<sup>27</sup> or to require the different counties to contribute to the support of persons in such institutions coming from such counties;<sup>28</sup> nor is a requirement of compulsory labor on public highways which are maintained in part by taxation objectionable as double taxation.<sup>29</sup>

2. PRESUMPTION AND CONSTRUCTION AGAINST DOUBLE TAXATION. The presumption is against the intention of the legislature to impose double taxation on the same property, and a statute will not be so construed as to produce this result unless required by its express terms or by necessary implication.<sup>30</sup>

3. TAXATION OF SAME PROPERTY IN TWO PLACES. The same property cannot be legally taxed at the same time at two different places within the same jurisdiction,<sup>31</sup> although there is no double taxation if under the law a payment of the tax at one of such places would absolutely bar any proceedings for its enforcement at the other.<sup>32</sup> Each state, however, with regard to the taxation of property within its territorial limits is sovereign and independent;<sup>33</sup> and the taxation of property which is within the jurisdiction of the state is not rendered objectionable as double taxation by the fact that the same property is also assessed for taxation in another state.<sup>34</sup>

It is not double taxation to tax the same property in different jurisdictions where each of them has a right to tax it (Griggsry Constr. Co. v. Freeman, 108 La. 435, 32 So. 399, 58 L. R. A. 349; State v. Maryland Fidelity, etc., Co., 35 Tex. Civ. App. 214, 80 S. Beckwith, 137 Iowa 24, 114 N. W. 565, 15 L. R. A. N. S. 142).

The occasion for such duplicate taxation may arise from the removal of property from one state to another after its assessment in the former, but before the time for assessment in the latter (Griggsry Constr. Co. v. Freeman, 108 La. 435, 32 So. 399, 58 L. R. A. 349; Nelson Lumber Co. v. Loraine, 22 Fed. 54); or by reason of the fact that the owner of the property resides in another state which taxes him for such property as part of his general estate attached to his person (Coe v. Although the mortgagor pays both the tax upon the property and the tax upon the mortgage, this does not constitute double taxation, since where he pays the tax upon the mortgage, this is not a burden imposed by the state but the result of a contract which he has voluntarily entered into. Subsidiary corporations.—Where one corporation is merely subsidiary to and owned by another, it is double taxation to tax the former separately while including the value of its franchise and property in the assessment against the latter. Com. v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 131 Ky. 661, 117 S. W. 287.

Lessor and lessee.—The state after assessing a railroad franchise to and collecting the taxes from a lessee cannot reassess the franchises as the property of the lessor. Com. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 105 S. W. 127, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 10.

Separate assessments of different kinds of property.—The road-bed of a railroad is the foundation on which the superstructure of the railroad rests. The roadway is the right of way, which is property subject to taxation. The rails in place constitute the superstructure resting on the road-bed. An assessment of these items separately does not constitute double taxation. San Francisco, etc., R. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 60 Cal. 12. Where a railroad company is authorized to construct a railroad to a certain terminus, a wharf subsequently purchased at but extending beyond the authorized terminus is not necessarily a part of the railroad, and a separate assessment of the wharf and of the entire railroad does not constitute double taxation, although the mileage on which the assessment of the road is based might include the length of the wharf. Pacific Coast R. Co. v. Ramage, (Cal. 1894) 37 Pac. 532. It is not double taxation to assess the trackage of a railroad company separately from other real estate owned by it, the valuation but the modern scheme of taxation of gross receipts is not generally considered to be inconsistent with this principle,<sup>37</sup> and there are various other elements of corporate taxable values which may be separately taxed without constituting double taxation.<sup>38</sup> So the imposition of a franchise tax on corporations or the exaction of a license-fee is not in any sense a duplication of the taxes levied on its property,<sup>39</sup> except in cases where such franchise tax or fee is declared by the statute to be in lieu of all other taxes.<sup>40</sup> of each being made by distinct items. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Galveston, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 384, 77 S. W. 269.

Coöperative insurance company.—Where a coöperative insurance company is organized without stock, and its personal property consists of money contributed by its members for the payment of losses, the fact that the members pay taxes on the property insured does not exempt the company from taxes on its personalty. German Washington Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Louisville, 117 Ky. 593, 78 S. W. 472, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1697, 80 S. W. 154, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2097.

An occupation or license-tax measured by the gross earnings or receipts of a corporation does not constitute double taxation, although the franchise and tangible property of the corporation are also taxed. Lincoln Traction Co. v. Lincoln, 84 Nebr. 327, 121 N. W. 435; Nebraska Tel. Co. v. Lincoln, 82 Nebr. 59, 117 N. W. 284; State v. Pacific States Tel., etc., Co., 53 Oreg. 162, 99 Pac. 427.

Distinct things or interests.—The capital stock of a corporation and shares of stock are distinct things and both may be taxed. So also the franchise, the surplus earnings, and real estate if it does not represent capital stock but only earnings, are distinct from the capital stock and from each other, and the state may tax the corporation under each of these heads without being guilty of double taxation. Franklin County Ct. v. Frankfort Deposit Bank, 87 Ky. 370, 9 S. W. 212, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 506.

The state may levy simultaneously any two or more of the following taxes: On the franchise, on the capital stock, on the real and personal property of the corporation, and on the shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders. *Durham County v. Whether based on income or measured in some other manner a tax on the franchise and on the tangible corporate property is not double taxation. State v. Pacific States Tel., etc., Co., 53 Oreg. 162, 99 Pac. 427.

A tax exacted from foreign insurance companies doing business in the state, based on their premium receipts therein, is a tax on the franchise or business, as distinguished from one on property, and does not affect the right of the state to tax any property of the company having its situs for purposes of taxation within the state. *Western Assur. corporation and also on the property in which that capital is invested would be double taxation and illegal.<sup>41</sup> But this does not prevent a tax on the value of the capital stock over and above the value of the property,<sup>42</sup> nor will it be objectionable to tax the capital stock as a whole and also property held by the company which is not necessary to or connected with its business and therefore does not constitute a part of its plant or equipment.<sup>43</sup>

c. Tax on Capital and on Shares of Stock. In some jurisdictions it has been held illegal, as producing double taxation, to tax the capital stock of a corporation, or the property in which it is invested, to the corporation, and at the same time tax the shares of stock as the property of their several holders;<sup>44</sup> but the decisions of other states are opposed to this view, either on the ground that the local constitution does not forbid double taxation, or on the ground that the capital stock of a corporation and the shares into which it is divided are separate and distinct property interests and each of a taxable character.<sup>45</sup> Even in jurisdictions where the former rule prevails a distinction has been made according as to whether the corporation and the stock-holders are taxed in the same or in different jurisdictions;<sup>46</sup> and it is ordinarily held that shares of stock in a foreign corporation held by resident owners may be taxed to them without regard to the taxation of the capital or property of the corporation at the place of its domicile,<sup>47</sup> since in such cases the tax may be sustained on the ground that it is not double taxation where the taxes are imposed by different states.<sup>48</sup>

D. Taxation According to Value—1. CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS. A constitutional requirement that all property shall be taxed in proportion or according to its value is mandatory upon the legislature, and imposes a rule for its assessment which cannot be varied,<sup>50</sup> as to such taxes as are within the application of the provision.<sup>51</sup> In particular, it forbids the levy of specific taxes and requires that they shall be imposed ad valorem.<sup>52</sup> Such a provision is also generally taken as prohibiting the commutation of taxes, in so far as that is involved in imposing a fixed charge on receipts, amount of business, or output in lieu of all taxes on property owned,<sup>53</sup> and as prohibiting a classification of property and taxation of the different classes at different rates.<sup>54</sup> But this provision is not intended to interfere with mere methods of administration in assessing and collecting taxes,<sup>55</sup> nor does it require that all property shall be taxed,<sup>56</sup> or restrict the power of the legislature to the levying of taxes upon property alone;<sup>57</sup> but merely requires that all property which is taxed shall be taxed according to its value, and not specifically.<sup>58</sup>

But see Stearns v. Minnesota, 179 U. S. 223, 21 S. Ct. 73, 45 L. ed. 162, in which case, however, a commutation of taxes on certain railroad lands was held to be in the nature of a contract made by the state in its capacity as trustee of the public lands.

2. WHAT TAXES AFFECTED. The constitutional provisions requiring that taxation shall be according to value do not apply to every species of taxation,<sup>59</sup> and are ordinarily held to apply only to ordinary taxes for purposes of general revenue,<sup>60</sup> and which are levied upon property.<sup>61</sup> So it has been held that such provisions do not apply to corporation franchise or privilege taxes,<sup>62</sup> or taxes upon their gross receipts,<sup>63</sup> or to business or occupation taxes,<sup>64</sup> or poll taxes,<sup>65</sup> or to such as are levied under the police power or by way of license-fees,<sup>66</sup> which

Nature of charge.—While in one sense the franchise of a corporation is property and subject to the application of a constitutional provision requiring taxation according to value (Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69), this does not prevent the legislature from imposing a charge in the nature of a privilege or license tax for the privilege of being or continuing to exist as a corporation in the case of a domestic corporation, or for the privilege of doing business as a corporation within the state in the case of a foreign corporation (*Kaiser Land, etc., Co. v. 3. MODE OF VALUATION. The rule of taxation according to value has no direct relation to the methods prescribed for appraising and assessing property, and is satisfied by any plan or system which is intended and calculated to result in fixing the fair and true value of the property.<sup>72</sup> Nor does it prevent the legislature from directing that the value of property for the purpose of assessment shall be taken at less than its market value, unless this would be contrary to the explicit terms of the constitution,<sup>73</sup> provided such rule is applied without discrimination.<sup>74</sup>

Different times for assessing real and personal property.—A statute providing for a quadrennial assessment of real estate and an annual assessment of personal property is not in violation of the constitutional requirement that all property shall be assessed at its fair cash value. Worten v. Paducah, 123 Ky. 44, 93 S. W. 617, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 450.

"Actual cash value."—Where the constitution directs that all taxable property shall be assessed and taxed on a valuation fixed at its actual cash value, or as near such value as is reasonably practicable, the test of such value is the cash price for which the property would sell in the open market. State v. Thomas, 16 Utah 86, 50 Pac. 615.

74. Lively v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 102 Tex. 545, 120 S. W. 852, holding that where the property of individuals in a county is assessed at sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of its real value, according to an adopted policy, an assessment of the intangible assets

So also the rule of taxation according to value is not violated by allowing the owner of property to deduct from its assessed value an indebtedness which rests upon it,<sup>75</sup> or in listing personal property for taxation to deduct debits from credits.<sup>76</sup> But a statute is invalid which sets up an arbitrary and inflexible standard for the valuation of property, such as to prevent the assessing officers from exercising their judgment and knowledge upon it.<sup>77</sup>

4. IMPOSITION OF PENALTY. A statute imposing a penalty for delinquency in the payment of taxes, or for neglect or refusal to list and return property for assessment, does not violate the constitutional rule of taxation according to value.<sup>78</sup>

E. Limitation of Rate or Amount — 1. IN GENERAL.<sup>79</sup> A constitutional provision that taxes shall not be levied in excess of a specified rate or in excess of a maximum amount in any one year has been held to render illegal and void a tax imposed beyond the constitutional limitation,<sup>80</sup> at least in respect to the

of a railroad company at their full value is in violation of a constitutional provision requiring all property to be taxed in proportion to its value.

Illustrations of rule.—A statute is unconstitutional which provides that railroad beds shall not be valued at less than eight thousand dollars per mile (Atlantic, etc., R. Co. v. Carteret County, 75 N. C. 474); or which makes as a standard for the valuation of railroad property the assessed value of real estate of persons other than railroad companies instead of the true value of the railroad property itself (Williams v. State Bd. of Assessors, 51 N. J. L. 512, 18 Atl. 750); or which provides for the assessment of railroad property at certain fixed amounts based upon the length of the road (State v. Charleston R. Corp., 4 S. C. 376).

Including penalty in valuation.—It has been held that while the legislature might make provision by way of a penalty for failure to list property or swear to its value, the penalty cannot be embraced in the value of the property as by adding a certain percentage to the value of the property as returned by the assessors. McCormick v. Fitch, 14 Minn. 252. But see Ex p. Lynch, 16 S. C. 32.

But the fact that the state debt has reached the constitutional limit is no ground for resisting a particular tax unless the object for which the tax is levied or the law authorizing it is unconstitutional and void. State v. Maginnis, 26 La. Ann. 558.

Taxation for state purposes.—Where the constitutional provision is that the tax for state purposes shall not exceed a certain rate, any legitimate expenditure of the state, necessary to be provided for by a state tax, is a "state purpose," and the tax therefor is a tax for a state purpose. People v. Scott, 9 Colo. 422, 12 Pac. 608.

Assessing omitted property.—In Maguire v. Mobile County Bd. of Revenue, etc., Com'rs, 71 Ala. 401, it is held that assessing and collecting taxes on property which had escaped taxation for previous years is a vio-excess.<sup>81</sup> But this does not prevent the levy of a poll tax, although the tax on property has already reached the limit;<sup>82</sup> and there is always an implied exception as to taxes levied for the purpose of paying debts contracted before the adoption of the constitutional restriction.<sup>83</sup>

2. TAXATION BY COUNTIES AND OTHER MUNICIPALITIES. The rule just stated applies also to taxes levied by counties and other municipal corporations, and such a tax is illegal when in excess of the limit imposed by the constitution or statute,<sup>84</sup> unless it is voted by a majority of the citizens, as is sometimes provided,<sup>85</sup> or unless the legislature, having originally prescribed the limit, legalizes a levy which was unlawful when made because transcending that limit.<sup>86</sup> With a limitation of this kind the courts have no power to interfere; and therefore mandamus will not issue to compel the officers of a municipal corporation to levy a greater tax than they are allowed by the law of the state to levy, or to compel the levy of a special tax when they have already, in the general levy, exercised the taxing power of the constitutional provision limiting the rate of taxation in any one year.

Exception as to support of state institutions.—Where the constitution limits the annual state tax levy, except for the support of state institutions, a tax levied for the completion and repair of the state penitentiary building is within the exception. *State v. State tax paramount.—Under a constitutional provision that the whole tax levy for the ordinary purposes of state and county governments shall not exceed a certain rate, a tax levy for the state is paramount, and counties can only levy taxes to the extent that the power of taxation has not been exhausted by the levy for the state. *State v. "The term excise is of very general significance, meaning tribute, custom, tax, tallage, or assessment." Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252, 256. "The designation does not always indicate merely an inland imposition or duty on the consumption of commodities, but often denotes an impost for a license to pursue certain callings, or to deal in special commodities, or to exercise particular franchises. It is used more frequently, in this country, in the latter sense than in any other." Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 142 U. S. 217, 227, 12 S. Ct. 163, 35 L. ed. 994.

An inheritance tax is not a tax upon property or property rights, but is an excise tax levied upon the transfer or transaction. Beals v. State, 139 Wis. 544, 121 N. W. 347.

Tax on transfers of stock.—A tax on transfers of stock in domestic and foreign corporations is an excise tax and not a property tax, and is valid as a transfer tax, even conceding that it could not be sustained as a property tax because not based on value, and because it affords the taxpayer no opportunity for a hearing on the valuation of his property and the amount of the tax. People v. Reardon, 184 N. Y. 431, 77 N. E. 970, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 8 L. R. A. N. S. 314.

In Massachusetts the constitution expressly authorizes excise taxes which must be reasonable but need not be proportional (In re Opinion of Justices, 195 Mass. 607, 84 N. E. 499); but they are restricted to "goods, wares, merchandise, and commodities" (Gleason v. McKay, 134 Mass. 419); and while corporate franchises are held to be "commodities" within the application of the provision (Com. v. Lancaster Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 493; Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252), the term does not apply to the rights and privileges exercised by a copartnership (Gleason v. McKay, supra).

Federal taxation.—Congress has power, specifically granted, to lay and collect "excises," to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but such excises must be uniform throughout the United States. 2. TAXES ON INCOME.<sup>95</sup> Unless forbidden or restricted by the constitution,<sup>96</sup> a tax may lawfully be laid upon the income of the citizen.<sup>97</sup> But in view of the necessary independence of the federal and state governments, congress has no power to impose a tax on the salary of an officer of a state government,<sup>98</sup> and conversely the states have no power to lay income taxes on the salaries of judicial or other officers of the United States,<sup>99</sup> nor on so much of the income of a private citizen as is derived from interest on United States bonds or other securities or obligations of the federal government.<sup>1</sup>

3. POLL OR CAPITATION TAXES.<sup>2</sup> Unless expressly forbidden by the constitution,<sup>3</sup> and except as so limited in regard to their amount or mode of assessment,<sup>4</sup> capitation or poll taxes are regarded as a lawful means of raising revenue for (Mass.) 298; Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252.

Corporate franchises are "commodities" within the application of a constitutional provision authorizing excise taxes on "goods, wares, merchandise and commodities." Com. v. Lancaster Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 493.

Incomes subject to tax see infra, III, A, 6, b.

Taxes not income taxes.—A tax upon the gross receipts of a railroad company arising from the transportation of passengers, freight, and baggage is not an income tax (Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Davidson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1906) 93 S. W. 436); nor is a tax required to be paid by oyster tong men on the amount of their sales an income tax (Com. v. Brown, 91 Va. 762, 21 S. E. 357, 28 L. R. A. 110).

96. Pollock v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 158 U. S. 601, 15 S. Ct. 912, 39 L. ed. 1108, holding that the income tax imposed by the federal statute of 1894 was unconstitutional in its application to income from real estate and personal property, as it was a direct tax not apportioned according to representation. See also INTERNAL REVENUE, 22 Cyc. 1614.

97. Glasgow v. Rowse, 43 Mo. 479. See also Drexel v. Com., 46 Pa. St. 31.

Exemptions.—No constitutional objection to the validity of an income tax law can be based on the fact that it excepts from its operation incomes below a certain small minimum. New Orleans v. Fourchy, 30 La. Ann. 910. And see supra, II, B, 1, f, (1).

Income is not "property" within a constitutional provision that "taxation upon property shall be in proportion to its value" (Glasgow v. Rowse, 43 Mo. 479); or a provision that taxes shall be "uniform on all species of property taxed" (Waring v. Savannah, 60 Ga. 93).

Measure of taxation.—It is perfectly constitutional as well as expedient in levying a tax upon profits or income to take as the measure of taxation the profits or income of the preceding year. Drexel v. Com., 46 Pa. St. 31.

But a clerk in a post-office, who is appointed by the local postmaster with the approval of the postmaster-general, is not an officer of the United States, and therefore his salary as such clerk is subject to the income tax. Melcher v. Boston, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 73.

Compulsory labor on public roads with the privilege of providing a substitute or paying a stipulated sum in lieu of such personal service is not a poll tax within the application of a constitutional provision prohibiting poll taxes. Short v. State, 80 Md. 392, 31 Atl. 322, 29 L. R. A. 404. But see Proffit v. Anderson, (Va. 1894) 20 S. Restriction on power of congress.—"No Capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken." U. S. Const. art. 1, § 9.

A capitation tax on passengers to be paid by the carrier, it has been held, is not a poll tax and is not in conflict with a constitutional provision limiting the amount of poll taxes. Ex p. Crandall, 1 Nev. 294 [reversed on other grounds in 6 Wall. (U. S.) 35, 18 L. ed. 744, 745].

public purposes,<sup>5</sup> and are in some cases expressly authorized, either generally or within certain limits, by constitutional provisions.<sup>6</sup> Not being laid upon property, they are not within the constitutional requirements as to equality and uniformity or as to taxation by value,<sup>7</sup> unless the principle of uniformity is violated by an arbitrary exemption of a certain class of persons from the tax.<sup>8</sup>

III. LIABILITY OF PERSONS AND PROPERTY.

A. Private Persons and Property — 1. LIABILITY TO TAXATION — a. Statutory Provisions — (i) IN GENERAL. The determination of the property or objects to be affected by a tax, as well as the rate or amount, belongs to the legislature, and except in the rare cases where the constitution itself prescribes a specific tax, the foundation for all lawful state taxation must be laid by a valid act of the legislature.<sup>9</sup> Like any other statute, a law imposing taxation may be repealed either by a particular declaration of the legislature to that effect or by the enactment of a wholly new statute covering the whole ground of taxation and inconsistent with the continuance in force of any earlier laws.<sup>10</sup> But the repeal of a tax law will not prevent the collection of taxes which had already been duly assessed or levied under it and so become a charge on the property.<sup>11</sup>

Aliens may be required to pay a poll tax in the absence of any constitutional restriction, and a constitutional provision that "all male citizens" over a certain age "shall be liable to a poll tax" does not prevent the legislature from imposing a poll tax on inhabitants of the state who are not citizens of the state. *Kuntz v. retrospectively without being unconstitutional,<sup>15</sup> such a statute will not be so construed unless in accordance with its plain meaning,<sup>16</sup> and repealing statutes will not be construed as operating retrospectively so as to remit taxes already assessed and payable under the earlier statute.<sup>17</sup>

b. Persons Liable — (i) IN GENERAL. Except in so far as it may be restricted by the constitution or subject to specific exemptions, the legislative power to tax is coextensive with its general control over the inhabitants of the state and their property; and every person who subjects himself or his property to the jurisdiction of the state comes within that power.<sup>18</sup> The liability to personal taxation is governed not by one's citizenship but by his residence.<sup>19</sup>

c. Time When Liability Attaches. As between the state and the taxpayer, the latter is liable for the taxes on such taxable property as he owned on the day fixed by law for the completion of the assessment, or, according to the statute, on the day fixed for the filing of taxpayers' lists or schedules, his liability attaching as of that date.<sup>25</sup> Consequently in the absence of statute no liability for taxes

In Arkansas it is held that the statute requiring landowners to list their lands for taxation on or before the first day of January of each year is merely directory and does not exempt lands purchased from the state after the first day of January from taxation until attaches during the current year or until after the next regular date for listing or assessment, with regard to property not previously subject to taxation which is acquired after the date when such liability ordinarily attaches,<sup>26</sup> as in the case of lands purchased from the state,<sup>27</sup> or personal property brought into the state from another state after such date.<sup>28</sup>

d. Contracts to Assume and Pay Taxes. An agreement by one holding a leasehold or other interest in property, but to whom it would not be assessable, to assume and pay the taxes thereon, may be binding as between the parties to it but does not affect the right of the state to proceed against the party assessed.<sup>29</sup>

e. Contracts and Transactions to Evade Taxation. It is not unlawful for the citizen to convert his taxable property into forms which are not taxable, although his only purpose is to escape taxation;<sup>30</sup> but if the transaction is only a temporary change or concealment of the property, made just before the time for assessment, and with the intention of restoring the property to its original form immediately after, it is a fraud on the revenue laws and the taxes may be assessed and collected on the property.<sup>31</sup> But notwithstanding this, if the trans-

Changing title to property.—The same principle applies where the citizen, to evade taxation, places his property in the name of another person, particularly a non-resident, no real transfer being intended. *Loud, etc., Lumber Co. v. Covering up mortgage.—The same rule applies where a person lending money on real estate security casts the transaction in a form intended to conceal the fact that it is really a mortgage for the purpose of escaping taxation as a mortgagee. Waller v. Jaeger, 39 Iowa 228; Lappin v. Nemaha County, 6 Kan. 403; Patrick v. Littell, 36 Ohio St. 79, 38 Am. Rep. 552.

In Kentucky it is by statute a misdemeanor subjecting the offender to a fine and also to treble taxation to make temporary investments in non-taxable securities or to resort to any device whatever to evade taxation. Com. v. Harris, (1909) 118 S. W. 294, hold-action involves the aid of a third party, who undertakes to restore the property or otherwise assist in its reconversion, it seems that the intended fraud on the state does not prevent the enforcement of such an agreement by the ordinary legal remedies.<sup>32</sup>

f. - Persons or Property Erroneously Omitted.<sup>33</sup> Where any taxable property has been omitted from the assessment for a given year, through the mistake or error of the assessors or their failure to discover it, or the neglect of the owner to list or return it, it may nevertheless, under the statutes in force in most of the states, be thereafter assessed as for that year and the taxes collected;<sup>34</sup> and in ing, however, that a bona fide sale and transfer of taxable property nearly two months before the assessment day and the investment of the proceeds in non-taxable government bonds cannot be held to be a trick or device on the part of the owner to escape taxation within the application of the statute.

Invalid assessment.—Where property has been assessed but the assessment is invalid the property has "escaped assessment" within the meaning of the statute. San Luis Obispo v. Pettit, 87 Cal. 499, 25 Pac. 694.

for taxation while it remains in his hands may be proceeded against, and an assessment made, even after he has settled and made distribution. Baldwin v. Shine, 84 Ky. 502, 2 S. W. 164, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 496.

Property in hands of purchaser.—Property which has escaped taxation through the negligence of the proper officers is subject to taxation in the hands of a subsequent purchaser for the years it has escaped. Kansas City v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 81 Mo. 285.

Taxes paid by stranger.—Where a tax on land has been assessed to and paid by another than the true owner, the state cannot again assess the land for the same year in the name of the true owner and compel him to pay the taxes. Com. v. Ingalls, 121 Ky. 194, 89 S. W. 156, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 164. And see Adams v. Schwartz, 80 Miss. 660, 32 So. 280.

Property no longer existing.—In Wisconsin it is held that the statute authorizes the re-assessment of any omitted personal property, although, between the time of its omission and the reassessment, it has passed out of existence, notwithstanding the objection that if the property is not in existence it cannot be within the jurisdiction of the assessors, since the whole subject of taxation is within the control of the legislature subject only to the constitutional requirement of uniformity. State v. Pors, 107 Wis. 420, 83 N. W. 706, 51 L. R. A. 917.

Authority of assessor.—The statutes authorizing the county treasurer to assess omitted property confer on him no appellate jurisdiction to correct the errors of assessors or boards of review in estimating the value of property actually assessed, and their valuation, in the absence of an appeal to the district court, is final. Security Sav. Bank v. Carroll, 128 Iowa 230, 103 N. W. 379.

Under the Iowa statute the authority of the county auditor to "correct any error in the assessment or tax list" and to "assess and list for taxation any omitted property" applies only to the tax list of the current year, the duty of assessing and listing omitted property except for the current year resting upon the county treasurer. Mead v. Story County, 119 Iowa 69, 93 N. W. 88.

The Missouri statute (Rev. St. (1899) § 9199), providing that when "there has been a failure to assess the property in any county for any year or years, the assessor of said county for the time being shall assess the property for the year or years in which such failure shall have occurred," applies only where there has been a total fail-the absence of statute back assessments for previous years on omitted property are not authorized,<sup>35</sup> and the laws commonly provide a period of limitation, by declaring that property shall not be assessed for back taxes for more than a certain number of years, usually five.<sup>36</sup> Statutes authorizing assessments for back taxes on omitted property are not unconstitutional,<sup>37</sup> and as affecting the right of the state to collect such taxes it is not material how the property happened to be omitted,<sup>38</sup> or that the public expenses for the years during which the property was omitted have been paid, or that the purposes for which the taxes were originally required have been met with other funds;<sup>39</sup> but in the assessment of omitted property it must be assessed for each year that it was omitted at the rate at which it would have been assessed if the assessment had been made at the proper time.<sup>40</sup>

g. Property Sold or Forfeited to State. Where land is sold or forfeited to the state for the non-payment of taxes upon it, it may still be listed and assessed to the former owner so long as he has a right to redeem it, and no waiver of the forfeiture is implied in so assessing it.<sup>41</sup> But it is otherwise when the forfeiture is absolute with no right of redemption, or when the right of redemption has expired.<sup>42</sup>

h. Estoppel to Deny Liability. Mere submission to illegal taxation should not, except in extreme cases, be construed into a recognition of the right so to tax, so as to estop the party from afterward denying it;<sup>43</sup> but one who procures ure to make any assessment in the county and does not authorize a back assessment of the personal property of a particular taxpayer which may have been omitted. Hannibal v. Bowman, 98 Mo. App. 103, 71 S. W. 1122.

Where an assessment of personalty for taxation is absolutely void, the property not being liable to taxation, the taxpayer's failure to appeal to the board of review does not estop him from contesting the validity of the assessment. Woodmere Cemetery Assoc. v. Springwells Tp., 130 Mich. 466, 90 N. W. 277.

Validity of acts of political departments of government as ground of objection.—In 1846, congress retroceded to the state of Virginia the county of Alexandria, which previously had formed part of the District of Columbia. Very grave doubts were raised as to the validity of this action. But it was held that since the state of Virginia had ever since been in particular property to be assessed in his name, or returns it to the assessor as his, is estopped to deny his liability for the taxes upon it;<sup>44</sup> and the same rule has been applied as to the amount of the tax, where he has acquiesced in its valuation at a certain sum.<sup>45</sup> Where the taxpayer has submitted to the payment of the tax, it is not ordinarily open to other persons, such as his creditors, to object to it.<sup>46</sup>

the de facto possession of Alexandria county, and the political department of her government had uniformly asserted, and her judicial department expressly affirmed, her title thereto, and congress had more than once recognized the transfer as a settled fact, a resident of that county, suing to recover taxes paid under protest upon his property there situate, was estopped to raise the question of the validity of the retrocession. *Phillips v. A receiver of a bank is estopped to resist the payment of a tax based upon a property statement made to the assessor by the cashier of the bank prior to its insolvency. Hamacker v. Commercial Bank, 95 Wis. 359, 70 N. W. 295.

But a guardian in a proceeding to recover taxes charged against him as guardian is not estopped from making the defense that by reason of the death of the ward, and administration granted on the estate before the property was listed, he was without authority to list the same for taxation. *Sommers v. Commutation of taxes.—Where the charter of a railroad company conditions the exercise of its corporate privileges upon the payment to the state of a certain percentage of its earnings, by way of a tax, and the company actually proceeds to operate its road, there is an implied acceptance of the condition and an agreement to pay the stated tax which rests on contract and cannot be evaded or denied. State v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 128 Wis. 449, 108 N. W. 594.

Subject to constitutional limitations everything to which the legislative power extends may be taxed, whether person or property, tangible or intangible, franchise, privilege, occupation, or right. Wolfe County v. Beckett, 127 Ky. 252, 105 S. W. 447, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 167, 17 L. R. A. N. S. 688.

Scope of term "property."—In a constitutional provision for levying a tax by valuation, so that every person shall contribute in proportion to the value of his property, the word "property" is a generic term and includes all property of whatever description, whether tangible or intangible. State v. Savage, 65 Nebr. 714, 91 N. W. 716.

Commodities imported from abroad.—An imported article in the importer's possession, in the original package, continues to be a part of the foreign commerce of the country and is not part of the property in the state subject to taxation; but when the article has passed into the hands of a purchaser, it is no longer an import and is subject to taxa-

but on the other hand, no property is liable to assessment under a particular tax law unless named or described in it,<sup>48</sup> and only that which may properly be termed property is subject to a property tax.<sup>49</sup> As regards the character of property for purposes of taxation the first inquiry is whether it is taxable at all;<sup>50</sup> and if taxable, the next inquiry is whether it shall be taxed as real or personal property;<sup>51</sup> and this must be determined from the provisions of the statutes and the general distinguishing characteristics of real and personal property.<sup>52</sup> As thus determined real property should not be assessed as personalty,<sup>53</sup> or personal property as realty,<sup>54</sup> although it has been held that such an assessment is not prejudicial where the rates are the same.<sup>55</sup>

b. Real Property and Interests Therein — (i) IN GENERAL.<sup>56</sup> All real property within the jurisdiction of the state, unless expressly or impliedly exempt,<sup>57</sup> is subject to taxation,<sup>58</sup> although a distinction has sometimes been made as regards

(II) MINES, MINING RIGHTS, AND MINERALS.<sup>62</sup> Mines in operation are taxable as real estate.<sup>63</sup> Moreover the mining rights in land may be severed by grant and conveyance from the surface rights or from the general ownership in fee, and thereupon become separately taxable to their owner as real estate;<sup>64</sup> but in the absence of statute a mere lease for a term of years of the right to mine for and extract coal or other minerals from the land does not effect such a severance of the title as to make the interest of the lessee taxable as realty,<sup>65</sup> and still less

S. 628, decided under the act of 1905, making any interest in coal, oil, gas, or minerals separately taxable, as realty or personalty according to whether the interest is a freehold or less than a freehold, and which therefore includes mining leases.

United States.—Barnes v. Bee, 138 Fed. 476 [affirmed in 149 Fed. 727, 79 C. C. A. 433].

The question depends upon the legal effect of the instrument rather than the name given to it or the technical terms employed, and whether it was intended to convey the whole or a specified part of the unmined minerals in a described tract of land or merely to give a right or privilege of entering upon the land for the purpose of mining and removing minerals therefrom. Sanford's Appeal, 75 Conn. 590, 54 Atl. 739.

In California it is held that, although ordinary leases are not separately assessed, a lease of mining privileges may be separately assessed as real estate as being within the

a mere license or privilege to search for and extract minerals,<sup>66</sup> unless granted in fee or for life and so as to create an incorporeal freehold estate in the land.<sup>67</sup> Mining claims duly located are property, and unless expressly exempt are taxable as such,<sup>68</sup> whether held under patent, application for patent, or mining location,<sup>69</sup> and may be sold for the non-payment of taxes without infringing the title of the United States.<sup>70</sup> Taxation may also be laid on the surface improvements on a mining claim.<sup>71</sup> Ores or minerals "in place," that is, unsevered, are taxable as real estate to their owner,<sup>72</sup> but minerals extracted and brought to the surface are taxable as personalty.<sup>73</sup> It is also customary in some states to assess and tax mines according to their annual product or output or according to the annual net proceeds of their operation, which is also a permissible form of taxation.<sup>74</sup>

(III) RIPARIAN AND OTHER WATER RIGHTS AND DITCHES. Riparian rights of an owner of shore property, unless and until there is some act of the owner indicating an intention to sever them,<sup>75</sup> are ordinarily regarded as mere statutory definition of the term "real estate," which includes a "claim to" or "right to the possession" of land, and also "all rights and privileges appertaining" to mines, minerals, and quarries. Graciosa Oil Co. v. Santa Barbara County, 155 Cal. 140, 99 Pac. 483, 20 L. R. A. N. S. 211.

In Illinois the statute provides that "any mining right" may be conveyed "by deed or lease" and that when so conveyed it shall be considered as separated from the land and taxed separately, and it is held that an oil or gas lease is a "mining right" within the application of the statute. People v. Bell, 237 Ill. 332, 86 N. E. 593, 19 L. R. A. N. S. 746.

In Kentucky the court, while expressing the opinion that the wide difference between an ordinary lease of land and a mining lease would alone justify the separate assessment of the latter, held that any doubt was removed by the statute requiring the listing for taxation of "mineral rights" and of "any coal, oil or gas privileges, by lease or otherwise, or any interest therein." *Wolfe County v. incidents to and a part of the abutting property and are not subject to a separate assessment for taxation,<sup>76</sup> but to be assessed as real property with and as a part of the riparian lands.<sup>77</sup> It is also held that water power for mill purposes is not a distinct subject of taxation which can be taxed independently of the land,<sup>78</sup> or of the mills which it drives;<sup>79</sup> but that a water power or mill privilege on or appurtenant to certain lands, although unimproved or unused,<sup>80</sup> may be considered and included as an element increasing the valuation of the land.<sup>81</sup> Where water power in actual use is created by a dam or reservoir in one taxing district and applied to mills situated in another district, the practice varies in different jurisdictions<sup>82</sup> as to whether the water power should be considered as appurtenant to and taxed in connection with the land where the dam is situated,<sup>83</sup> or whether the dam and land on which it is situated should be taxed at a reasonable valuation independently of the water power created thereby,<sup>84</sup> and the water power be taxed where it is applied in connection with and is increasing the value of the mills.<sup>85</sup> A right in one person to flow by means of a dam, which he does not own, the lands of another is a mere easement, and not an estate subject to separate taxation;<sup>86</sup> but where one person acquires title to the waters of a pond and a permanent dam and sluiceway connected therewith on the land of another, he acquires an interest taxable as real estate.<sup>87</sup> It has been held that a ditch for conveying water for mining purposes has no separate independent value subject to taxation;<sup>88</sup> but that a ditch for transporting logs has a value separate and distinct from the lands through which it runs and may be separately assessed,<sup>89</sup>

While the water power as such is not to be included this does not mean that the capacity of the property for valuable use is to be excluded, and therefore a dam and the land which it covers with water are liable to be taxed, although independently of their use in connection with mills, the dam and the land so overflowed are only of nominal value. *Pingree v. between the people and the owner of a building, the question whether engines, shafting, and other machinery and apparatus contained therein are to be deemed real or personal property for the purpose of taxation, is to be decided on principles no less rigid than those applicable to a question of fixtures as between vendor and vendee; that in such a case the tests to be applied are the relation of the annexor to the land, the purpose of the annexation, and the method of annexation; and that the circumstance that the machinery could be removed without material injury to the building is not controlling.

Property leased for profit.—A statute requiring "personal property . . . leased for profit" to be assessed for taxation does not apply to lamps and lanterns owned and controlled by a company and used by it in the performance of a lighting contract with a city but not leased to the city. Rising Sun St. Lighting Co. v. Boston, 181 Mass. 211, 63 N. E. 408.

Household furniture.—Within the application of a statute providing for the taxation of "all household furniture" all the furnishings in a boarding-house or hotel which is the keeper's home where he eats, sleeps, and lives, except the bar furniture, bottles, wines, etc., are subject to taxation without regard to what part is used for domestic and what for business purposes, but in order to be so taxable it must appear that the keeper makes his home in such boarding-house or hotel. McWilliams v. Gable, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 467.

Logs on water.—A river is a "body of water" within the application of a statute requiring timber, logs, and lumber lying "in or upon any body of water" in the state outside of boundary or limits of any town therein to be taxed in the town nearest and opposite such property. (II) SHIPPING. Boats and vessels are personal property and are taxable like all other such property within the jurisdiction of the state,<sup>17</sup> there being nothing in their floating character and habitual change of location to exempt them from taxation.<sup>18</sup>

(III) MERCHANTS AND MANUFACTURERS' STOCK IN TRADE.<sup>19</sup> The stock in trade of a merchant or manufacturer is subject to taxation,<sup>20</sup> unless a license-tax is required which is declared to be in lieu of all other taxes.<sup>21</sup> The statutes frequently contain express provisions in regard to the taxation of such property,<sup>22</sup> and the tax on stock in trade is usually assessed on its average value

Domestic animals.—It has been held that a statute providing for the taxation of "sheep" for state and county purposes does not apply to unweaned lambs (In re McCoy, 10 Cal. App. 116, 101 Pac. 419); but it is held that in the Montana statutes the term "calf" which is used in the fourteenth and fifteenth sections of the act, is not limited by the list of property set forth in section 16, which is a mere form and not intended to exempt property not specifically mentioned therein, and that sucking calves are subject to taxation (Milligan v. Jefferson County, 2 Mont. 543).

A widow's interest secured to her by the orphans' court under the intestate laws in lieu of her dower at common law is not within the application of the act of 1831 specifying the personal property subject to taxation. Deitz v. Beard, 2 Watts (Pa.) 107.

A. 309 (holding that cattle kept on hand for sale by a cattle dealer are subject to taxation as stock in trade in the same manner as the goods of a merchant); Hopkins v. Baker, 78 Md. 363, 28 Atl. 284, 22 L. R. A. 477 (holding that stock in trade of a partnership doing business in a city, which remains there until sold, is "goods and chattels permanently located" for the purpose of taxation).

A person is not an importer who buys goods from an importer after they are brought within the jurisdiction of the United States, but before the duties are paid or they are delivered at the port of entry, and who then transports them at his own expense to the port to which they are consigned, and such goods are subject to taxation by the state, although they are sold in unbroken packages as they were when imported. Mobile v. Waring, 41 Ala. 139.

Coal shipped from another state after arrival at its destination is legally taxable, although kept on board the floats which carried it and not sold or consigned to any specially authorized agent. *Pittsburg, etc., Coal Co. v. 21. Montgomery County v. Tallant, 96 Va. 723, 32 S. E. 479, holding that under a provision making the license-tax "in lieu of all taxes for state purposes" the capital employed by a merchant is also exempt from county taxes.

22. Connecticut.—Jackson v. Union, 82 Conn. 266, 73 Atl. 773, holding that a firm engaged in buying standing timber in large quantities and cutting and sawing the same

during the fiscal year or on a valuation computed by equalizing the average values for successive shorter periods.<sup>23</sup>

(IV) MONEY.<sup>24</sup> Money is not only the standard of value, but is also taxable personal property of the owner,<sup>25</sup> provided he has it in his possession at the time of the assessment or it is held for him by a person from whom he is entitled to receive it on demand.<sup>26</sup>

(V) CREDITS, INVESTMENTS, AND SECURITIES — (A) In General. Loans and investments of money and debts due to the taxpayer are assessable for taxation as his personal property, if within the terms of the statute, whether represented by accounts receivable, pecuniary interests under contracts, promissory notes, bonds, mortgages, or otherwise.<sup>27</sup> To be thus taxable it is not necessary and selling the lumber is engaged in a "trading or mercantile business" within the application of the statute.

Iowa.—Iowa Pipe, etc., Co.'s Appeal, 101 Iowa 170, 70 N. W. 115, holding that a company engaged in the manufacture and sale of sewer pipe and drain tile, made from water salt and clay, is a "manufacturer," within the application of the code, section 816.

Massachusetts.—Hittinger v. Westford, 135 Mass. 258, holding that within the application of the Massachusetts statute a storehouse for ice is not a "store," and that the cutting of ice upon a pond and storing it in a building is not a "manufacture."

New Hampshire.—Russell v. Mason, 69 N. H. 359, 41 Atl. 287, holding that the owners of land who cut timber thereon and saw it into lumber for the purpose of selling it are not "tradesmen" within the application of a statute making the stock in trade of merchants, mechanics, and tradesmen taxable at its average value for the year.

Pennsylvania.—Campbell v. Campbell, 26 Leg. Int. 261 (holding that a manufacturer who has no store or warehouse apart from his manufactory is not subject to taxation under the act of 1846); Hay v. Harding, 5 Phila. 234 (holding that "shoddy" is a manufacture within the application of the revenue law of 1862).

Tennessee.—American Steel, etc., Co. v. Speed, 110 Tenn. 524, 75 S. W. 1037, 100 Am. St. Rep. 814, holding that the term "merchant," as used in the Tennessee statute of 1901, includes a foreign corporation having an agent in that state to whom it ships goods to be kept in stock and used to fill contracts of sale made by the company's salesmen or orders filed by purchasers with the agent.

See 45 Cent. Dig. tit. "Taxation," § 157.

Internal revenue stamps are not property within the application of the tax laws and, although kept in quantities by a dealer for the purpose of sale, are not taxable as "stock in trade." Palfrey v. Boston, 101 Mass. 329, 3 Am. Rep. 364.

Sewing machines delivered under a contract in the form of a lease providing for the payment of certain monthly rentals until a certain sum is paid, with the option of re-

In Alabama the act of 1903 providing for a "privilege tax" on recorded mortgages and other instruments, and making such tax a substitute so far as such instruments are concerned for ad valorem taxes, is construed as also exempting from taxation money lent, solvent credits, and other credits of value not secured or represented by such recorded instruments, since to exempt the one and subject the other to ad valorem taxation would violate the constitutional requirement as to uniformity of taxation. Barnes v. Moragne, 145 Ala. 313, 41 So. 947.

Credits construed as net credits.—The word "credits" as used in the Nebraska statute providing for the listing of credits for taxation, means net credits, and the indebtedness of a taxpayer may be deducted from the gross credits to find their true value for assessment. Oleson v. Cuming County, 81 Nebr. 209, 115 N. W. 783, holding further that a note and mortgage taken in exchange for property is not "money loaned and invested" but is a "credit" from which the holder is entitled to deduct indebtedness.

Loans secured by exempt property.—Solvent loans are subject to taxation, although they are secured by a pledge of property exempt from taxation. Security Sav. Bank v. San Francisco, 132 Cal. 599, 64 Pac. 898.

Royalty under coal lease.—An amount due to the lessor by the lessee by way of royalty on coal mines, bearing interest, is liable to taxation under the Pennsylvania statute. Hull v. Luzerne County, 93 Pa. St. 502.

Rent due.—Where the owner of land which was leased to tenants was assessed not only upon the land but also upon the amount of rent due, it was held erroneous, as the latter element was included in the former. Scully v. People, 104 Ill. 349.

Policy loans.—Where an insurance company makes a policy loan to a policy-holder where sufficient premiums have been paid on a policy to give it a recognized reserve value, taking the policy in pledge and requiring payment of interest, but the transaction is in effect merely an advance payment on the earned value of the policy and the interest in effect an additional premium, such a loan is not a credit on which the insurance company is subject to taxation. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Orleans Parish Bd. of Assessors, 158 Fed. 462 [affirmed in 216 U. S. 517, 30 S. Ct. 385, 54 L. ed. —].

Partnership agreement.—Although a contract for a limited partnership provides that the special partners, as their share of the profits, shall receive interest at a certain rate on the money contributed by them as capital, and that the general partners shall be responsible to them for the capital so contributed and interest, it will not be held a loan to the partnership so as to subject the sums so contributed to taxation as "credits" of the special partners. Hunter v. Newman, 3 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 350, 1 Ohio N. P. 307.

Judicial bonds.—A statute requiring a stamp duty on any written bond, obligation, single bill, or note does not require the bond of an executor to be stamped. Ex p. Burton, 3 Gill (Md.) 1.

A transaction which is in effect a bailment of bonds to a bank and not a sale is not taxable as a credit. Clark v. Gault, 77 Ohio St. 497, 83 N. E. 900.

"Solvent credits."—Where a statute provides for the taxation of "debts due from solvent debtors," it refers not to the general solvency of the debtor, but to the amount of the debt which may be realized or collected, that is, to the value of the debt. Lamar v. Palmer, 18 Fla. 147.

31. Deane v. Hathaway, 136 Mass. 129, where, however, it was held that a debt due from an intestate is properly assessed to the creditor, although the amount is in dispute, if it is admitted by the administrator to be as much as that taxed.

taxed;<sup>33</sup> to an enforceable contract for the sale of land;<sup>34</sup> to the amount represented by a judgment, although it is liable to be reversed, and even though proceedings in error are pending;<sup>35</sup> and to a claim for compensation for land taken under the power of eminent domain, if adjudicated or agreed on and fixed as to amount.<sup>36</sup>

(B) Debts Due From Non-Residents. The state has power to tax persons residing therein on debts due from non-residents,<sup>37</sup> although such debts are secured by mortgages on real estate outside of the state,<sup>38</sup> and under the statutes in most jurisdictions such debts are subject to taxation.<sup>39</sup>

Cases in which deferred payments not taxable.—Where the contract for transfer of the land does not give rise to any actual indebtedness to the vendor but amounts only to an option to buy, there is not a taxable credit (Schoonover v. Petcina, 126 Iowa 261, 100 N. W. 490); and the same rule applies where no note is given for the purchase-money and neither the legal nor the equitable title is transferred (Brown v. Thomas, 37 Kan. 282, 15 Pac. 211); or where the purchaser was a city, buying the land for use as a public park, and the agreement expressly stipulated that it should create no liability against the city (Perrigo v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 236, 65 N. W. 1025); and where the sale is made by a commissioner of the court, the notes given for the price are not taxable (Fulkerson v. Bristol, 95 Va. 1, 27 S. E. 815); but on the other hand, a stipulation in the contract that the agreement shall be void if the vendee makes default does not render the indebtedness created thereby unenforceable in the event of such default, and the contract is taxable (Clark v. Horn, 122 Iowa 375, 98 N. W. 148).

But a contract giving a mere option to purchase land in the future on the terms specified is not a taxable credit within the meaning of the tax laws. In re Shields, 134 Iowa 559, 111 N. W. 963, 10 L. R. A. N. S. 1061.

Debts secured by mortgage due from non-resident debtors see supra, III, A, 2, c, (v), (B).

In New Jersey a mortgagee is taxable for the amount of the mortgage debt only in case a deduction has been claimed and allowed to the mortgagor on account thereof. See Lippincott v. Howell Tp., 66 N. J. L. 508, 49 Atl. 675; State v. Gano, (Sup. 1897) 37 Atl. 434; Newark v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 55 N. J. L. 145, 26 Atl. 137; State v. Lantz, 53 N. J. L. 578, 22 Atl. 49; State v. Massaker, 26 N. J. L. 564.

It is not the mortgage but the debt which is taxed. A mortgage by itself is not property or a thing of value, it is a mere incident to the debt which it secures; hence, although it is common to speak of taxation as being laid on mortgages, it is not the mortgage but the debt which is really taxed. People v. Whartenby, 38 Cal. 461; People v. Eastman, 25 Cal. 601; Falkner v. Hunt, 16 Cal. 167. While a mortgage is a transfer of title until redemption, it is actually but a security for a debt or an interest in land for the purpose of security, and it is the debt evidenced by it, the chose in action, which by reason of its intangible nature is drawn into the domicile of the obligee or owner for taxation. Com. v. Pennsylvania Coal Co., 9 Pa. Dist. 486. See also State v. Earl, 1 Nev. 394, where it is said that a tax on "money at interest secured by mortgage" is not a tax on the coin or notes in which the mortgage debt may be paid or in which it was made; nor is it a tax on the land covered by the mortgage; neither is it a tax on the pieces of paper on which the note and mortgage are inscribed; but it is a tax on a chose in action, that is, on the right of the creditor to receive or collect a certain sum of money.

Assignment after assessment.—Under a statute requiring mortgages to be assessed to their owner on the first Monday of March, the assignment of the mortgage after that day does not relieve the person to whom it was assessed from liability for the tax. San Gabriel Valley Land, etc., Co. v. Witmer Bros. Co., 96 Cal. 623, 29 Pac. 500, 31 Pac. 588, 18 L. R. A. 465, 470.

Double taxation.—A mortgagee is not bound to pay taxes assessed on his mortgage and also on a deposit of money in court made by the mortgagor for the payment of the mortgage debt. Oakland Sav. Bank v. Applegarth, 67 Cal. 86, 7 Pac. 139, 476. And so, where the owner of land has paid the tax on it, and in the same fiscal year sells it and takes a mortgage back, he is not liable to be assessed with the amount of the mortgage in the same year. People v. Kohl, 40 Cal. 127.

41. State v. Hinkel, 139 Wis. 41, 119 N. W. 815.

In Massachusetts loans on mortgages on real estate are taxable as real estate unless the real estate is exempt from taxation, in which case the loan is taxable as personal property. Sweetser v. Manning, 200 Mass. 378, 86 N. E. 897.

In Wisconsin the statute providing that "whenever taxable real estate shall be subject to mortgage" such mortgage and the indebtedness secured thereby shall be deemed an interest in real estate and taxed as such interest and not otherwise, applies where the value of the mortgaged real estate in the state exceeds the debt, although the mortgage also covers lands outside of the state or the debt is further protected by other security. State v. Hinkel, 139 Wis. 41, 119 N. W. 815.

42. See Barnes v. Moragne, 145 Ala. 313, is immaterial what form the transaction may assume, and an absolute deed of land or any other form of conveyance which was actually intended by the parties as security for a loan is taxable as a mortgage.<sup>43</sup> Neither is it material that the amount of the mortgage debt is greater than the value of the premises;<sup>44</sup> or, on the other hand, that the mortgagor is insolvent and payment depends on the sale of the land.<sup>45</sup> But of course a mortgage which has been actually satisfied or canceled and discharged of record is no longer taxable,<sup>46</sup> nor is it taxable after it has merged in the fee by the mortgagee's purchase of the land.<sup>47</sup> In some jurisdictions a tax on mortgages is imposed in the form of a registration or recording tax,<sup>48</sup> or privilege tax.<sup>49</sup>

d. Annuities. In some states annuities are taxable whether created by will, settlement, or otherwise;<sup>50</sup> but in others, where an annuity is charged upon land, it is not taxable in addition to the land itself.<sup>51</sup>

e. Licenses, Membership Rights, and Franchises. A license may be regarded as property and as such subject to taxation,<sup>52</sup> and franchises of all kinds are property subject to taxation;<sup>53</sup> but membership rights in various associations, although a source of profit, are ordinarily regarded as being in the nature of a personal privilege and not subject to taxation as property.<sup>54</sup> So it has been held that a Suppl. 885 [affirmed in 190 N. Y. 565, 83 N. E. 1129]; White v. Walsh, 62 Misc. (N. Y.) 423, 114 N. Y. Suppl. 1015.

In New York the mortgage tax law of 1905 imposed a certain tax on mortgages and exempted mortgages on which such tax had been paid from local taxation. People v. Keefe, 119 N. Y. App. Div. 713, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 154 [affirmed in 190 N. Y. 555, 83 N. E. 1130]. This statute was superseded by the act of 1906 substituting a recording tax on mortgages recorded after July 1, 1906. People v. Dimond, 121 N. Y. App. Div. 559, 106 N. Y. Suppl. 277; White v. Walsh, 62 Misc. (N. Y.) 423, 114 N. Y. Suppl. 1015. The statute exempts mortgages so recorded from other taxation (see People v. Dimond, supra; Drummond v. Smith, 118 N. Y. Suppl. 718); but prior mortgages are subject to general taxation (People v. Dimond, supra); or at least are subject to such taxation where they have not been recorded and the recording tax paid (Drummond v. Smith, supra).

Transactions subject to recording tax.—An agreement for the extension or renewal of an existing mortgage is in effect a mortgage and subject to the Minnesota registry tax. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Martin County, 104 Minn. 179, 116 N. W. 572. A mortgage of a leasehold interest in land is entitled to record and subject to the New York recording tax. People v. Gass, 120 N. Y. App. Div. 147, 104 N. Y. Suppl. 885 [affirmed in 190 N. Y. 565, 83 N. E. 1129]. The New York statute also provides that executory contracts for the sale of real property under which the vendee has or is entitled to possession shall be deemed mortgages. White v. Walsh, 62 Misc. (N. Y.) 423, 114 N. Y. Suppl. 1015, holding that an instrument leasing property for a term of years and containing provisions for a purchase thereof by the lessee on certain contingencies is an executory contract of sale within the application of the statute.
