Depreciation of currency.— In The Steamship Telegraph v. Gordon, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 258, 20 L. ed. 807, it was held that a decree, rendered for a specific sum as damages, estimated upon the principle of allowing plaintiff for depreciation of currency between the arising of the cause of action and the date of the decision, if right when rendered, could not be reversed on the ground that currency had still further depreciated pending the appeal.

In an action to quiet title, where defendant pleaded a judgment in his favor for the recovery of the land, and appellant responded that it had heen superseded, it was held that the fact that the judgment superseded had been affirmed pending the appeal might be considered even though the causes were not consolidated. But see Haggerty v. Morrison, 59 Mo. 324, wherein the appellate court ordered appellant discharged from the judgment, he having filed in such court his certificate of discharge in bankruptcy, and also his plea showing that judgment was allowed against his estate in the bankruptcy court.

Massachusetts — Discharge in insolvency. — In Swan v. Easterbrooks, 16 Gray (Mass.) 520, appellant, after obtaining his discharge in insolvency, was allowed to waive his exceptions and plead the insolvency, thereby barring the action and discharging a bond given to dissolve an attachment therein.

Louisiana — Appeal to federal supreme court.—Where the parties desire it, the supreme court will, in a proper case, find the facts in such a manner that the questions of law can be fairly raised for the consideration of the supreme court of the United States. Wiggins v. Guier, 13 La. Ann. 356.

North Carolina — Facts not found below.— Where the supreme court has a right to review the findings of fact of the lower court, it may find the facts if they are not found by the lower court. Pearce v. Elwell, 116 N. C. 595, 21 S. E. 305.

an appeal lies to a higher court.[11] Such recital is usually necessary only where the court renders final judgment, and not where the cause is remanded for a new trial;[12] and it is not necessary to recite the evidentiary facts, the ultimate facts alone being required.[13]

Illinois.— If appellate court finds the facts differently from trial court, its final order or judgment is required to recite the facts as found. Huntington v. Metzger, 158 Ill. 272, 41 N. E. 881; Siddall v. Jansen, 143 Ill. 537, 32 N. E. 384; Tenney v. Foote, 95 Ill. 99.

Such findings cannot be collaterally attacked.— Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Scammon, 133 Ill. 627, 23 N. E. 406.

The finding of facts must appear in the record, and the opinion of the court cannot be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining what facts the court found. Centennial Nat. Bank v. Farrell, 166 Ill. 513, 46 N. E. 1125; W. W. Kimball Co. v. Cruikshank, 90 Ill. App. 3.

Where a case had previously been before the appellate court, and the facts had then been determined and recited in its final order, an order, on the second appeal, reciting "that the facts are substantially the same as they were in the record when the cause was before this court at a former term" is a sufficient compliance with the statutory provision. People v. Soucy, 122 Ill. 335, 12 N. E. 746.

Michigan — Appeal from probate court.— On appeal from an order of the probate court denying an administrator leave to sell, the circuit court should find and place on record all material facts relied on to warrant the judgment reversing the order and granting leave to sell. Matter of Ensign, 47 Mich. 443, 11 N. W. 262.

New York — Reversal of judgment on referee's report.—Where an appeal is taken from the judgment entered on the report of a referee, in the event of a reversal on a question of fact, the order should so state. Almy v. McKinney, 5 N. Y. St. 267.

Texas.— If jurisdiction final.— In cases where the court of civil appeals decides that its jurisdiction is final and judgment is affirmed, written conclusions of fact and law will not be filed unless its judgment on the question of jurisdiction is overruled. Lutcher v. Stoddard, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 608; Burnett v. Powell, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 39, 25 S. W. 1030.

Where, on appeal, the record contained no statement of facts, a motion that the appellate court file conclusions of fact will be denied. Neyland v. Ward, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 369, 54 S. W. 604.

A decision, by the court of civil appeals, sustaining a verdict is, in effect, a finding of the facts necessary to support the verdict and judgment thereon, and the court is not required to find as to other facts. Rice v. Ward, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 348.

Denial of motion to file conclusions of law and fact.— In Texas, if the opinion of the court of civil appeals contains the facts found by the court, and states them separately from the conclusions of law, a motion, asking such court to file its conclusions of law and fact on which the opinion was based, which does not point out any particular in which any of the findings are deficient will be denied. Muhle v. New York, etc., R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 24 S. W. 312.

Motion granted on rehearing.—Where suit s brought to establish a note as a claim against a decedent's estate, and, on appeal to the court of civil appeals, the judgment of the district court in favor of plaintiffs for the amount of their note and interest and attorney's fees is affirmed, on motion for rehearing, appellees' request that the court file conclusions of fact and law will be granted. Negligence.— In Illinois, it is necessary to recite conclusions of facts which prove the ultimate fact of negligence. Brown v. Aurora, 109 Ill. 165.

Where finding as to contributory negligence unnecessary.—Where, in an action for injuries, the appellate court reverses a judgment for plaintiff and finds that defendant was not guilty of negligence, it is not necessary to make findings as to plaintiff's contributory negligence, as this point is immaterial in view of the findings in regard to defendant's negligence. Senger v. Harvard, 147 Ill. 304, 35 N. E. 137.

Documentary evidence.— The Texas statute requiring the court of civil appeals to file conclusions of fact does not require it to incorporate therein documentary evidence. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Arispe, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 611, 23 S. W. 928, 24 S. W. 33.

Proceeding to correct conclusion of fact.— Where it is thought that the court of chancery appeals has overlooked facts that would

8. Rights of Persons Not Appealing — a. Persons Not Before the Court. It is the general rule that only the rights of parties before the court can be adjudicated on appeal, and the rights of persons who are not parties to the appeal cannot, ordinarily, be considered.[14] But where the parties appealing and those not appealing stand upon the same ground, and their rights are involved in the same question and equally affected by the same decree or judgment, the court will consider the whole case and settle the rights of all parties.[15] change the result of one of its conclusions of fact, the proper course is to apply for a rehearing, so as to change that conclusion, and not to apply for findings of mere evidentiary facts that are deemed inconsistent with the conclusion assailed. Where, after obtaining a writ of error, one of several plaintiffs in error obtains a severance and refuses to prosecute, the appellate court has full power over the cause, and may reverse as to him as fully as if he had remained. Having once been a party in the appellate court, he is governed by a rule different from that applicable to persons who have never appealed. Bowman v. Castleman, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 303.

b. Appellee or Defendant in Error. Where a party has acquiesced in a judgment or decree, and taken no steps to have it reviewed, he cannot, on an appeal by the adverse party, obtain relief greater than that granted him below,[16] unless his rights be so interwoven with those of appellant that the court, in adjudicating the latter's rights, must necessarily grant appellee additional relief.[17] But, usually, an appellee may obtain affirmative relief by cross-assignments of error.[18]

C. Affirmance — 1. On Motion — a. When Authorized — (i) On Failure to Prosecute Appeal — (a) In General. In most jurisdictions provision is made, by statute or rule of court, for the affirmance of the judgment appealed from, on a proper application by appellee, where appellant fails to prosecute his appeal as required by law.[19] And where appellee's right to an affirmance has attached,

Bill of exceptions filed by appellee.— On an appeal by defendant, a bill of exceptions filed by plaintiff, in the absence of a cross-appeal, affords no foundation for granting plaintiff relief in addition to that granted by the trial court, where the questions presented by the bill of exceptions in no way affect plaintiff's right to the relief granted. Watson v. New Milford, 72 Conn. 561, 45 Atl. 167, 77 Am. St. Rep. 345.

Incidental relief to appellee.— On reversing a judgment or decree the court will sometimes grant appellee such incidental relief as the equities of the case may require. Shuman v. Willetts, 19 Nebr. 705, 28 N. W. 301; Taylor v. Williams, 14 Wis. 155; Chittenden v. Brewster, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 191, 17 L. ed. 839.

As to the requisites and proceedings for the transfer of a cause from the trial court to the appellate court see supra, VII [2 Cyc. 789].

In admiralty, if appellant fail to enter and prosecute his appeal, appellee may produce the record and have the cause retained in the appellate court, and, on a hearing ex parte, claim affirmation of the original decree, with costs. The Montgomery v. The Betsey, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 416, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,734.

Several judgments—Separate affirmance.— Where defendants in an action of trespass plead severally, and have several judgments in the court below, from which plaintiff appeals but neglects to enter and prosecute his appeal in the court above, each defendant is entitled, upon his separate complaint, to affirmation of his own judgment, independent of his co-defendant. Cook v. Bennett, 2 Me. 13.

Submission of an action to arbitrators, after an appeal, does not, necessarily, deprive plaintiff of his right to enter his complaint for affirmance unless there is an award made before the sitting of the appellate court, or, by the terms of submission, time beyond such sitting is allowed for making the award. Hayes v. Blanchard, 4 Vt. 210.

Where judgment has been set aside.— Oreg. Supreme Ct. Rules, No. 14, providing for the affirmance of a judgment where an appeal is not prosecuted, does not apply to a judgment which has been set aside after an appeal has been initiated. Henrichsen v. Smith, 29 Oreg. 475, 42 Pac. 486, 44 Pac. 496.

Affirmance refused after dismissal.—After the docket to which certain cases belonged had been taken up, plaintiff in error moved for leave to dismiss, not having assigned error in the court below. The motion was granted. Thereafter appellees moved for judgment of affirmance on production of a certificate, etc. The motion for affirmance was refused, because the records had been filed within the time required by the statute. Farquhar v. McFarland, 13 Tex. 92.

Retention of jurisdiction after dismissal.— In Washington, where an appeal is dismissed at the instance of appellant, the supreme court will retain jurisdiction of the cause so as to permit respondent to move for an affirmance of the judgment, and for damages and judgment on the appeal bond, in case appellant fails to prosecute a second appeal within the time limited by law. Affirmance and dismissal asked at same time.—When a transcript is filed at a term subsequent to that to which the appeal was taken, and therefore subject to be dismissed on motion of appellee, the appellee cannot have a dismissal of the appeal and an affirmance of the judgment at the same time, and on the same transcript. Perryman v. Camp, 24 Ala. 438.

Where an appeal has been dismissed, a party other than appellant has no right to afterward move the general term for an affirmance of the judgment appealed from. Struppman v. Muller, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 38.

A bond or recognizance is necessary to give the appellate court jurisdiction; and, until filed in proper form, no appeal is pending and, consequently, the judgment cannot be affirmed on motion. Tindall v. Jones, 8 Ark. 267; Clark v. Oakley, 4 Ark. 236; Penn v. Penn, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 515; Goode v. Erwin,

(B) What Constitutes Failure to Prosecute — (1) IN GENERAL. As to what constitutes a failure to prosecute so as to authorize an affirmance on motion is a matter depending in large measure upon the statutes, rules, and practice in the different jurisdictions. Among the grounds on which such motions are granted may be enumerated a failure to appear when the docket is called,[25] to assign errors,[26] to furnish the proper papers for the hearing of the appeal,[27] or to pay the required fees.[28]

(2) FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT IN TIME. On the failure of appellant to file his transcript within the time prescribed by law, or to show good cause for the omission, the judgment will, usually, be affirmed on motion,[29] and appellee's right to an affirmance is not affected by the subsequent filing of the transcript, even

As to the necessity for bond, recognizance, or undertaking on appeal see supra, VII, D [2 Cyc. 818].

Appellant may show that bond was not filed in time.— The appellee having taken up the record and asked for an affirmance, appellant is not estopped from showing that the appeal bond was not filed in time, and that jurisdiction had, consequently, not attached. Burr v. Lewis, 6 Tex. 76.

Waiver of recognizance.— The statute requiring an appellant to enter into recognizance to prosecute his appeal, in order to stay execution, may be waived by appellee; and, in such case, if appellant fails to prosecute his appeal, the appellee must apply to the appellate court for an affirmance of the judgment in the same manner as where appellant has entered into recognizance. Wilson v. Dean, 10 Ark. 308.

As to waiver of bond, undertaking, or recognizance on appeal see supra, VII, D, 11 [2 Cyc. 850].

What judgment-entry must show.—Where the judgment of a county court is affirmed in the circuit court on certificate for failure to file a transcript, the judgment-entry in the circuit court must show affirmatively every fact necessary to authorize the judgment on certificate. Foster v. Harrison, 3 Ala. 25.

Where the citation in error is defective or has not been served, the appellate court does not acquire jurisdiction to affirm on motion. Beavers v. Butler, 30 Tex. 24; White v. Proctor, 17 Tex. 406; Chambers v. Shaw, 16 Tex. 143; Patton v. Laforce, 14 Tex. 240; Thompson v. Thompson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 41 S. W. 679; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Lennox, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 530. But where plaintiff in error neglects the service of the citation, and a term of the court is allowed to pass, the defendant in error may acknowledge service, and bring the case up for affirmance at the next term. Wilson v. Adams, 50 Tex. 5.

As to the necessity to assign errors see supra, XI [2 Cyc. 980].

No errors apparent in record.—Where appellant fails to serve a case on appellee, and there are no assignments of error, nor any errors apparent in the record, a motion to affirm the judgment is the proper proceeding. Walker v. Scott, 102 N. C. 487, 9 S. E. 488.

Failure of judge to make up statement of facts.—An affirmance on certificate will not be denied because the parties failed to agree upon a statement of facts, and agreed that the judge should make up a statement from the statements furnished by the parties, and the judge had failed to do so. Overton v. Blum, 48 Tex. 370.

28. Davis v. Miller, 35 Mo. App. 253; Fallen v. Ferris, 2 Wyo. 141. See also supra, VII, C [2 Cyc. 816].

Subsequent offer to pay fee.—A failure to pay the fee required by law in filing a transcript in the circuit court on an appeal is a failure to prosecute the appeal, and the omission is not cured by an offer on the part of appellant to pay the fee on the second day of the term, and after the transcript has been filed, and the fee duly paid by appellee. though it be prior to the application for affirmance.[30] But a motion to affirm will not be granted where there is a record on file, though it be defective, since such record may, aside from the defect, show errors requiring a reversal.[31]

(11) Where Proceedings Frivolous or For Delay. A motion to affirm the judgment appealed from will, usually, be granted where the appeal is merely frivolous,[32] or appears to have been taken for delay only.[33] But, on such motion, the appellate court will examine the entire record,[34] and, unless it be manifestly free from prejudicial error, the motion will be denied.[35]

b. Discretion of Court. Whether the appellate court should affirm for want of prosecution depends on the facts and circumstances. The question rests largely in the discretion of the court,[36] and, on good cause being shown why appellant has failed to proceed in time, a motion to affirm will be denied.[37]

What not a waiver of right.— The appellee is not estopped to move to affirm, though the motion is not made until after appellant has filed his abstracts and briefs. Brown v. Farmers L. & T. Co., 109 Iowa 440, 80 N. W. 525; Ziefle v. Seid, 137 Mo. 538, 38 S. W. 963.

Right not defeated by second appeal.— Where appellee is entitled to an affirmance, on a certificate, of the judgment appealed from, because of appellant's failure to file the transcript in time, such right cannot be defeated by appellant bringing error on the judgment after such failure. Scottish Union, etc., Ins. Co. v. Clancey, 91 Tex. 467, 44 S. W. 482; Davidson v. Ikard, 86 Tex. 67, 23 S. W. 379; Perez v. Garza, 52 Tex. 571; Hurley v. Lester, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. As to dismissal where proceedings are frivolous or for delay see supra, XIV, E, 3.

Error to the allowance of a merely formal amendment of the pleadings is evidently frivolous, and intended for delay, and the judgment in such case should be affirmed. Jenkins v. Banning, 23 How. (U. S.) 455, 16 L. ed. 580.

Presumption that appeal taken for delay. —Where no exception was reserved to any of the rulings of the court, the appellate court will presume, in view of appellant's failure to perfect the appeal granted by the lower court, and his delay in perfecting the appeal subsequently granted by the appellate court, that the appeal is prosecuted for delay merely. McDowell v. Pool, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 684.

Court decides on record.— In affirming on motion as a delay case the court decides upon the record, and not upon the statement of counsel. Longshaw v. Linning, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 822. A statement of counsel that he intends to take the case to the United States supreme court cannot be considered. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Schmidt, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 810, 47 S. W. 583.

35. Makibben v. White, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 514, wherein it was said that a motion to affirm as a delay case assumes that it is so manifestly free of prejudicial error as to induce the belief that the appeal was not taken with the hope of getting justice by a reversal, but with a desire to hinder justice by the delay.

Questions involved doubtful.—When an appellee making a motion to affirm as a delay case considers the questions involved so doubtful as to require a brief, and files one, this court will overrule his motion. Fisher v. Perkins, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 449.

36. Kamerick v. Castleman, 21 Mo. App. 587.

Affirmance without prejudice to appellant's rights.—In disposing of appellee's motion for affirmance of a judgment and appellant's motion to dismiss the appeal, the supreme court has power to order an affirmance without prejudice to appellant's rights under the law to a new trial in the lower court. White v. Poorman, 24 Iowa 108.

Where motion to withdraw also pending.— Where a motion for affirmation by defendant in error, and a motion to withdraw his writ of error by plaintiff, are pending at the same time, the court will grant that which the nature and justice of the case require. Rogers v. Alexander, 2 Greene (Iowa) 237.

37. Anderson v. Waco State Bank, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 47 S. W. 552; Skagit R., etc., Co. v. Cole, 1 Wash. 330, 26 Pac. 535.

c. Procedure to Obtain — (i) In General. The procedure to obtain an affirmance on motion depends upon the terms of the statute or rule of court authorizing it,[38] and a party seeking such relief must show affirmatively every fact necessary to bring the case within the statute or rule.[39]

(ii) Notice of Application. Notice of the motion to affirm must usually be given the opposite party.[40] But it has been held that, where notice of argument has been given by appellant, the appellee may move for affirmance without giving notice of argument.[41]

(iii) Time of Making Application. The question as to when the application for affirmance must be made is one depending, for the most part, upon the statutes and rules of court.[42] Affirmance will not be allowed where the application is made before[43] or after the time limited;[44] but the appeal may be dismissed.[45]

(iv) Transcript or Certificate of Clerk. The statutes and rules authorizing affirmance on motion require appellee to file a transcript,[46] or a certificate

In Dodd v. Bowles, 3 Wash. Terr. 11, 13 Pac. 681, a motion to affirm was denied and the case continued to the next term for a hearing on the merits, on condition that the plaintiff in error pay the costs of both courts.

Insufficient affidavit in opposition.—An affidavit, in opposition to a motion to affirm the judgment for failure to prosecute the appeal, which states that "due and great diligence was used," without setting forth any facts constituting such diligence, is insufficient. Meier v. Lowry, 28 Mo. App. 612.

38. Under Mass. Stat. (1888), c. 94, the application for an affirmance may be made and signed by attorney. Erlund v. Manning, 160 Mass. 444, 36 N. E. 59. And, where an appellant fails to file his exceptions in the appellate court, application may be made to the trial court to order the judgment affirmed. Erlund v. Manning, 160 Mass. 444, 36 N. E. 59; Ingalls v. Ingalls, 150 Mass. 57, 25 N. E. 92. But in equity and probate cases appeals from a single justice of the supreme judicial court must be affirmed by the full court. Gray v. Gray, 150 Mass. 56, 25 N. E. 91.

A clerical error in the application for an affirmance, in stating that such application was made by defendant, will not render it invalid if it appears from the whole application that it was made by and in behalf of plaintiff. Erlund v. Manning, 160 Mass. 444, 36 N. E. 59.

A ground not stated in the motion will not be considered. Cunningham v. Roush, 141 Mo. 640, 43 S. W. 161.

See 3 Cent. Dig. tit. "Appeal and Error," § 4437.

In New York, a cause is not in readiness to be noticed for hearing until the case is settled and filed; and judgment cannot be affirmed on the call of the general-term calendar if the case has not been settled and filed. Anonymous, 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 366.

43. After case docketed.— Under Ky. Civ. Code, § 759, the motion can be made only after the case is docketed and regularly before the court, whether the transcript be filed by appellant or appellee. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Schmidt, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 456, 46 S. W. 688.

Second application.—Where a motion to affirm on certificate has been overruled, because made at a term of the court prior to that to which defendant in error had been cited to appear, if defendant desires to make a motion to affirm on certificate at the proper term of court he should file a new and independent motion, and ask the action of the court thereon. As to dismissal see supra, XIV.

46. Must file whole transcript.—If appellee wishes to file the transcript in order to move for an affirmance as a delay case, he must file all of it. He cannot select part of it, and thereby preclude appellant from having it all considered. Tracey v. Symmes, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 288.

Judgment of affirmance or reversal will not be rendered unless a transcript is filed, but from the clerk of the lower court showing that an appeal has been taken.[47] Where a certificate of the clerk is filed it must state enough to show that the court below had jurisdiction to render the judgment, and state the facts conferring jurisdiction on the appellate court.[48]

d. Vacating Affirmance. Where a judgment has been affirmed on appeal for failure to prosecute, the affirmance will not be set aside unless a valid and meritorious excuse for such failure be shown.[49] But it is, usually, competent the appeal will be dismissed. Roberts v. Tucker, 1 Wash. Terr. 179.

Iowa — When transcript required. — Under the rules of the Iowa supreme court, to entitle an appellee to have the judgment appealed from affirmed he must first have filed a certified transcript of the judgment; but this is not required when the motion for affirmance is based on the ground of failure of appellant to file the printed abstract, as required by the rules of the supreme court. Hunger v. Patterson, 37 Iowa 501.

Texas — Indorsement on transcript. — Where defendant in error moved for an affirmance without regard to the merits, it was held that, there being no indorsement upon the transcript as required by statute, the motion for affirmance should be refused, the writ of error dismissed, and defendant in error condemned to pay the costs. Harris v. Williams, 4 Tex. 339. And so, where defendant in error filed the transcript and moved an affirmance without reference to the merits, and the transcript bore an indorsement, "Demanded by the Defendant," who was plaintiff in error, defendant in error did not bring himself within the statute, and therefore the motion was refused, and the writ of error dismissed, with costs against defendant in error. Moore v. Janes, 4 Tex. 340.

47. Ex p. Weissinger, 7 Ala. 710; Clark v. Oakley, 4 Ark. 236.

Under Mo. Acts (1885), p. 217, on motion of respondent to affirm the judgment for failure to prosecute the appeal, he must produce a perfect transcript of the record and proceedings. The clerk's certificate, as permitted by the Missouri act of March 24, 1883, is not sufficient. L. M. Rumsey Mfg. Co. v. Baker, 33 Mo. App. 239.

48. Schloss v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 4 Tex. Civ. App. 177, 23 S. W. 392; City Nat. Bank v. Presidio County, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 22 S. W. 10.

What necessary to jurisdiction of appellate court.—A certified copy of the final judgment of the trial court, notice of appeal of record in the term when the judgment was rendered, or, in case of error, the service of citation in error, and the perfection of the appeal by giving bond in cases where the law requires bond to be given, or a bond for supersedeas, or for costs in cases of error, are necessary to give the court jurisdiction to affirm on certificate; and the certificate of the district clerk should state in the exact terms of the statute when the appeal or writ of error was perfected. House v. Williams, 40 Tex. 346; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Lennox, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 530. And a mistake of the clerk in certifying when the citations in error were perfected, though obvious, is fatal to the motion to affirm. Umbdemstock v. Perry, 41 Tex. 374.

Misdescription of judgment.—A certificate for an affirmance which misdescribes the judgment will, on motion, be struck from the docket. Lloyd v. Barnett, 36 Tex. 190.

Certificate which omits to show the time at which the writ of error issued and the term to which it is returnable is insufficient to authorize an affirmance of the judgment. Tardy v. Murry, 17 Ala. 585.

Failure to show in what court judgment rendered. — The appellate court acquires no jurisdiction to affirm the judgment of the court below, on the certificate of the clerk of that court, where the certificate does not show in what court the judgment appealed from was rendered. City Nat. Bank v. Presidio County, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 22 S. W. 10.

Failure to show appeal taken in term-time. —A certificate is fatally defective which fails to show that the appeal was taken in term-time, or that notice thereof was entered of record. A mere averment that the appeal bond was filed and approved does not comply with the Texas statute. Loftin v. Nalley, 28 Tex. 127.

49. Waters v. Creagh, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 81.

Cause reached sooner than expected.—That a case was set for the last day of the session of the supreme court, which for years past had never been able to finish the calendar, and defendants' attorney did not expect it to be reached, is not sufficient to justify setting aside an affirmance, made because there was no appearance, or points or authorities on file, for defendant. Huggins v. Handy, (Cal. 1888) 17 Pac. 533.

Illness of attorney. — Where a judgment had been affirmed because of the wrongful retention of papers in the cause by appellant's attorney, it was held that the affirmance would not be set aside because of such attorney's continued illness, he having a partner who could attend to his business, and having been frequently urged to return the papers. Vice v. Jones, 4 Ind. App. 426, 30 N. E. 937.

Mere forgetfulness of counsel to assign errors, owing to the clerk's omission to enter their names on the docket, is not a sufficient reason for vacating the affirmance. Dorsey v. Dumas, 50 Ala. 244.

Technical objection.—Where a judgment on a forfeited bail bond has been affirmed, on appeal, for lack of prosecution, the cause will not be reinstated to allow appellant to interpose the technical objection that the bond for the court, on good cause shown, to vacate the affirmance and reinstate the case.[50]

2. On Hearing — a. Where No Error Shown — (i) In General. Where it appears that the merits of the case have been fairly submitted to the jury, that their verdict is supported by substantial evidence, and, on an inspection of the record, the appellate court can discover no error in the rulings of the court below, the judgment will, of course, be affirmed,[51] and where several cases on appeal, was not in due form. Price v. State, 55 Ark. 608, 18 S. W. 1054.

Affirmance without discussion. — Where every legal question involved in a case has already been passed upon by the supreme court in other cases, and when the court below has committed no error for which the judgment of such court can be reversed, such judgment will be affirmed without any discussion of any of the questions involved in such case. Rettman v. Richardson, 17 Kan. 413. And so, where the matter is of trivial importance and the merits are clearly against appellant, the court may affirm without discussion. Guinane v. Hogan, 78 Ill. App. 272.

Judgment by default will be affirmed where the complaint, though defective, does not lack anything material to plaintiff's right to recover. Hallock v. Jaudin, 34 Cal. 167.

presenting different states of fact, are, by agreement, consolidated and joined in one petition in error, the judgments must be affirmed as to all, if free from error as to one.[52]

(II) In Actions Tried Without Jury. And so, in an action at law tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, the judgment will be affirmed if it can be sustained on any theory consistent with the pleadings, there being evidence to warrant the findings, and no error is shown by the record.[53] But, in chancery appeals, the court will examine into the merits of the case and, where justice demands it, will reverse the decree even though there be no error apparent on the record.[54]

(III) Failure to Reserve Questions Properly. A party appealing from a judgment must take seasonable steps to bring the matters complained of to the attention of the appellate court in the manner prescribed by law, and unless this be done the judgment will, usually, be affirmed.[55]

(IV) Defective Record. A party alleging error must show error; and so, where the record before the appellate court is so imperfect or confused that the court cannot intelligently ascertain the facts nor pass upon the merits of the rulings of the lower court, and no reversible error is apparent on the face of the record as it stands, it is the practice in many jurisdictions to affirm the judgment.[56] fact that, pending an appeal from an order dissolving an injunction, the act sought to be enjoined has been accomplished is not an adequate reason why such order cannot be reversed.[64]

c. Affirmance to Permit Appeal to Higher Court. Where an appeal to an intermediate court involves questions of law as to which it is important there should be an authoritative settlement as early as possible, the judgment will sometimes be affirmed pro forma in order to permit an appeal to the court of highest jurisdiction, and thus save time and expense.[65] But the intermediate appellate tribunals, having been created for a substantial purpose, should not affirm pro forma except in cases where such practice is clearly warranted.[66]

A writ of error sued out after an affirmance of the judgment is a nullity. McRae v. Columbus Bank, 1 Ala. 578.

Cannot grant new trial.— On affirming a judgment, the appellate court has no discretion to grant a new trial. Junkin v. Lippman, 18 Ind. App. 316, 48 N. E. 8; Stevens v. Clark County, 43 Wis. 36. Nor can the lower court grant a new trial after appeal is prosecuted, although motion was made therefor before the writ of error was taken. Walker v. Hale, 16 Ala. 26.

Motion in arrest.— After a judgment has been affirmed on appeal, a motion to arrest it cannot be entertained. Haskell v. Sullivan, 31 Mo. 435.

The affirmance of chancellor's decree is not an affirmance of his opinion, where the opinion covers matters not embraced in the decree. McWilliams v. Jenkins, 72 Ala. 480.

Adoption of opinion below.—Where the court of appeals affirms the judgment below, without an opinion, and without formally adopting the opinion below, the inference, nevertheless, is that the opinion is adopted. Higgins v. Crichton, 98 N. Y. 626.

Appeal from part of decree.—If a chancery decree be partly in favor of a party and partly adverse, and he appeal from the adverse portion, an affirmance thereof on appeal left to be done is to enforce the judgment.[69] In other words, the rights of the parties stand as if there had been no appeal or writ of error.[70] If the decision finally settles all the questions in the case, and there is nothing requiring further consideration below, the appellate court will render final judgment.[71] But, of course, the court has power to send the cause back to the lower court for such further proceedings as the circumstances render necessary;[72] and sometimes, where the appeal presents only technical questions, the appellate court, though affirming the judgment, will remand the cause for a trial on the merits.[73] So, in does not affirm the other portion of the decree. Pennington v. Todd, 47 N. J. Eq. 569, 21 Atl. 297, 24 Am. St. Rep. 419, 11 L. R. A. 589.

On appeal from an interlocutory order the court cannot make any final disposition of the case. Schweinfurth v. Poehlman, 83 Ill. App. 428.

New York — Judgment absolute on affirming order granting new trial.— Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 191, 194, if the court of appeals affirms an order granting a new trial, judgment absolute is given against appellant. Boyle v. New York, etc., R. Co., 115 N. Y. 636, 21 N. E. 724, 23 N. Y. St. 731; Kennicutt v. Parmalee, 109 N. Y. 650, 16 N. E. 549, 15 N. Y. St. 515; Conklin v. Snider, 104 N. Y. 641, 9 N. E. 880; Snebley v. Conner, 78 N. Y. 218; Conger v. Conger, 77 N. By appealing he loses the right to any affirmative relief in case the order be affirmed. Rust v. Hauselt, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 389. All the traversable allegations of the opposite party stand admitted. Thompson v. Lumley, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 74. And where defendant has set up a counter-claim in his answer he is entitled to a judgment thereon. Hiscock v. Harris, 80 N. Y. 402. But the judgment absolute on appeal can have no greater effect than such judgment as could be obtained against appellant on a new trial. Maloney v. Nelson, 16 Misc. (N. Y.) 474, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 930. Where the new trial is granted only on condition that the successful party below will not accept a reduction of the amount recovered, and he refuses to do so and appeals, the court of appeals need not give judgment absolute against him on the whole case, but may render judgment in his favor for the reduced amount. Freel v. Queens County, 154 N. Y. 661, 49 N. E. 124. But see Hitchings v. Van Brunt, 38 N. Y. 335, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 272.

72. Remand for amendment of pleadings. —Where evidence of an estoppel was improperly admitted without being alleged in the pleading, but the judgment was in accordance with the equity of the whole case, the judgment was affirmed and the case remanded for the proper amendment of the pleadings, to be made below. Gill v. Rice, 13 Wis. 549. And see Green v. Hill, 101 Ga. 258, 28 S. E. 692, in which the cause was remanded, with leave to amend the pleadings.

Remand, with direction to alter decree.— An interlocutory decree directed the sale of lands to satisfy a debt in a case where it might have been proper to decree satisfaction out of the rents and profits; but this was not a point controverted in the court below, or in any way brought to the notice of the court, and, though the party had ample opportunity to apply to the court to alter the decree in that particular, he did not apply for that alteration. On appeal from the decree, it was held that the decree should not be reversed for that cause, but affirmed, and the cause remanded, with direction to alter the decree, and direct satisfaction out of the rents and profits, if such alteration were asked, and if the debt could be satisfied out of the rents and profits within a reasonable time. Mann v. Flinn, 10 Leigh (Va.) 97.

Allowing sale in lower court.—Where an order refusing to dissolve an injunction pendente lite, restraining a sheriff from selling certain silks on execution, was affirmed, but it appeared to the court that a sale of the goods would be to the pecuniary advantage of both parties, it was held that leave would be reserved to the court below to modify its order so that, by consent of the parties, the silk might be sold under the execution, after ample notice, and the proceeds placed in the registry to await a final decision. Hadden v. Dooley, 74 Fed. 429, 20 C. C. A. 494.

73. Case involving title to public office.— A petition for mandamus was dismissed without a trial, on the merits, and an appeal presented only technical questions of pleading. The case involved the title to a public office. It was held that, though the judgment was affirmed, it was a proper case for the exercise of the discretion given the court of appeals affirming a judgment or order, the appellate court will sometimes frame its judgment so that it shall be without prejudice to appellant's application to the lower court for relief to which he is entitled.[74]

(II) Of Judgment on Demurrer. On affirming a judgment on demurrer the appellate court is not, ordinarily, obliged to remand the case.[75] But the court, generally, has a discretionary control in this regard, and, where the merits of the case render it proper to do so, will remand the case for further proceedings below.[76]

D. Modification — 1. In General — a. Power to Modify. Usually, the power of an appellate court is not restricted to a simple affirmance or reversal of the judgment, and such court, where the facts are not in dispute and all the material matters appear on the record, may modify the judgment so as to conform to the law and justice of the case,[77] or may order it to be so modified in the lower by Md. Code, art. 5, § 20, when in its judgment the ends of justice will be promoted, to remand a cause to the lower court for trial on its merits. Creager v. Hooper, 83 Md. 490, 35 Atl. 159.

Designating judgment to be entered.— The general term of the supreme court may, on affirmance of an order overruling a demurrer to the complaint, designate what kind of an interlocutory judgment and final judgment shall be entered. Y. Suppl. 511.

Power to permit withdrawal of demurrer. —Although, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 497, the court of appeals, on affirming a judgment overruling a demurrer to a complaint, has power to permit defendant to withdraw the demurrer and answer on payment of costs, yet, where changes — such as the loss of testimony to plaintiff — may have occurred since the commencement of the action, the court, instead of granting such permission, will leave defendant to make application therefor to the court below. court.[78] But, ordinarily, an appellate court cannot exercise original jurisdiction in modifying a judgment. It cannot set aside a finding, make one of its own, and then apply the law to it;[79] and, if some of the material findings are against the evidence, the cause should be remanded for a new trial.[80] Moreover, the court should not modify a judgment where injustice would result therefrom to either party.[81]

b. Sufficiency of Record to Authorize Modification. In order for the appellate court to modify a judgment the record must contain sufficient to show clearly what judgment should have been rendered below; otherwise the cause will be remanded if error appears therein.[82] of a party in whose favor the judgment or decree was rendered in the court below.[87]

3. Rendering Judgment Lower Court Should Have Rendered — a. In General. Power is, generally, given by statute to appellate courts to enter such judgment or decree as should have been rendered by the court below on the undisputed facts of the case as shown by the record.[88] Thus, on appeals in equity causes, where the court can see from the record what the rights of the parties are, it will not remand the case, but will render such a decree as ought to have been rendered whom complainant was entitled to a deficiency judgment when such obligation was incurred, the court will not modify the decree, but will remand the cause for further proceedings. Goodlett v. St. Elmo Invest. Co., 94 Cal. 297, 29 Pac. 505.

When judgment on demurrer is reviewed in a court of error, judgment given should be the same as they decide ought to have been given by the court below — that is, a judgment in the cause for plaintiff or defendant; but the court of error, after reversing a judgment, may, instead of ordering such judgment as ought to be given, grant leave to amend. Hale v. Lawrence, 22 N. J. L. 72.

below.[89] And the same is true of appeals from probate courts[90] and in actions tried by the court without the intervention of a jury.[91]

b. Conforming Judgment to Verdict or Findings. Where the judgment below does not follow the verdict, which is itself proper, the appellate court will amend it so as to make it conform to the verdict.[92] And so, a judgment or decree in a cause tried by the court without a jury may be modified on appeal to correspond with the findings.[93] But if the verdict or findings be also not responsive to the issues submitted for trial, the error is incurable and the judgment must be reversed.[94]

c. Conforming Judgment to Pleadings. If the judgment does not conform to the pleadings, and the error is one which can be cured by a modification of the judgment, the appellate court will not order a new trial, but will itself correct the judgment.[95]

d. Amendments as to Rights and Liabilities of Parties — (I) In General. The appellate courts usually have power to modify the judgment of the lower court by amending errors as to the rights and liabilities of the parties thereto.[96]

(II) Changing Character of Liability. The appellate court may correct a judgment which is improperly rendered against an executor or administrator in his individual, instead of his representative, capacity,[97] and vice versa.[98]

(III) Striking Out or Inserting Parties. Ordinarily, appellate courts have power to insert the names of parties erroneously omitted from the judgment,[99] or to strike out such as have been improperly included therein.[1] But a judgment cannot be modified as to a person who is not a party to the appeal.[2]

Enforcement of lien — Erroneous personal judgment.— In an action to enforce a lien against a boat for coal furnished the lessee, error in rendering a personal judgment against the owner, who had given a bond to discharge the lien, instead of rendering judgment against the boat only, is merely formal, and the judgment will be amended by the superior court, and without reference. Lawrenceburgh Ferry-Boat v. Smith, 7 Ind. 520.

Payment directed in wrong capacity.— Where the decree of the circuit court is irregular, in that it directs payment to be made to one P as treasurer of a certain institution instead of to him as executor, it will be amended in that particular, and, so amended, confirmed. Jackson v. Shipman, 28 Ala. 488; Dawson v. Hardy, 33 Tex. 198, in which judgment was erroneously rendered in favor of a deceased administrator instead of the administrator de bonis non. In Cruchon v. Brown, 57 Mo. 38, a judgment in the name of the husband to the use of the wife was amended so as to be in the name of the husband alone.

Action wrongly dismissed as to one.— On appeal, by one of two sureties on a bond from a judgment thereon against him alone, where it appears that the action was wrongly dismissed as to the other surety, the appellate court will modify the judgment so as to provide that it shall not affect the latter's liability to plaintiff or appellant, that the dismissal shall be set aside, and that the case may be reopened to determine such other surety's liability on the bond. Cockrill v. Davie, 14 Mont. 131, 35 Pac. 958.

Other interveners.—A judgment erroneous merely because it disposes of appellant's claim under the name of "other interveners," instead of by name, will be corrected on appeal, without reversal. Burkitt v. Twyman, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 421.

e. Amending Description of Property. Where the judgment of the lower court is erroneous in its description of property affected thereby, it may, usually, be amended on appeal.[3] But if the judgment cannot be modified without creating a variance, the court will set it aside and grant a new trial.[4]

f. Correcting Provisions as to Enforcement of Judgment. The appellate court may correct an error in the provisions as to the enforcement of the judgment,[5] or may supply the proper provisions where they are omitted.[6]

g. Amendment as to Costs. A judgment erroneous only in regard to the imposition of costs will not be wholly set aside on that account, but the error will be corrected by the appellate court.[7]

h. Amendment as to Medium of Payment. Where the judgment of the lower court errs in regard to the medium in which payment is to be made, it may be corrected on appeal.[8]

i. Amending Order of Sale. Where a decree or judgment ordering a sale of land is defective in its directions, the appellate court may correct it if sufficient facts are before it to warrant such action.[9]

4. Reducing Amount of Recovery — a. Where Amount of Excess Apparent — (i) In General. It is a very generally accepted rule — though denied in some cases[10] — that, where there is no reversible error in the record except that the judgment is for too much, and the amount of the excess is readily ascertainable, the appellate court need not remand the cause for a new trial, but may allow such excess to be seeks to avoid a reversal by remitting a portion of his recovery, he must be able to satisfy the appellate court that it can be done without prejudice to defendant;[12] and, where there is no clear proof as to what is the true amount to which plaintiff is entitled, a remittitur cannot be allowed, but a new trial must be granted.[13] The court has no power to determine, upon the examination of conflicting evidence, what sum plaintiff ought to recover, and render judgment therefor.[14]

(11) Errors in Computation. Where it appears from the record that, through an error in computation, the judgment below was rendered for too great an amount, the mistake may be corrected in the appellate court and judgment given for the proper amount, if there be no other error requiring a reversal.[15]

As to excess in recovery as a ground of reversal see infra, XVIII, E, 1, e.

As to the effect of an excessive verdict, generally, see DAMAGES; NEW TRIAL.

In Louisiana the supreme court has arbitrary power to reduce an excessive verdict and render the proper judgment. Haselmeyer v. McLellan, 24 La. Ann. 629; Hughes' Succession, 14 La. Ann. 863. But where plaintiff appeals from a verdict in his favor, but defendant does not appeal nor ask an amendment of the judgment, the court will not reduce the judgment even though it appear excessive. Drews v. Williams, 50 La. Ann. 579, 23 So. 897.

Motion to remit unnecessary.— Under the Texas act of May 1, 1893, providing that, when a judgment is reversible only because excessive, the court shall indicate to the party in whose favor judgment was rendered the excess, and the time within which remittitur may be filed, and, if so filed, judgment shall be reformed and affirmed, appellee need not file motion to remit, nor need appellant be given notice. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Duelm, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 24 S. W. 334.

Remittitur on rehearing.— It has been held that where a judgment has been reversed solely on account of an excess therein, if, in a petition for a rehearing, appellee offers to remit such excess, the court may render judgment for the proper amount. Irlbeck v. Bierl, 101 Iowa 240, 67 N. W. 400, 70 N. W. 206; Hyde v. Minneapolis Lumber Co., 53 Iowa 243, 1 N. W. 740, 5 N. W. 126; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Wesch, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 21 S. W. 1014. But see Chadwick v. Meredith, 40 Tex. 380. Where a rehearing is applied for on the ground, urged, for the first time, that the judgment is excessive, though the application will be refused, the excessiveness of the judgment, if patent, will be ordered remitted. Arnau v. Florida First Nat. Bank, 36 Fla. 395, 18 So. 790.

After refusal to remit.—Where an order granting defendant a new trial, unless plaintiff should remit a portion of the damages recovered, was affirmed on appeal after plaintiff's refusal to remit, it was held that the supreme court would not, on rehearing, permit him to file a remittitur of such amount as to it might seem just, and direct a judgment for the balance. Kohler v. Fairhaven, etc., R. Co., 8 Wash. 452, 36 Pac. 253.

A slight excess will not be ordered remitted on appeal where the trial court was not asked to make such order. Frohs v. Dubuque, 109 Iowa 219, 80 N. W. 341.

Where judgment by default.— To make a remittitur effective it should affirmatively appear by the record that the real merits as to the residue after the remittitur are with the party who has the judgment. Therefore, on default after publication in attachment proceedings, a judgment for too large an amount cannot be cured by a remittitur, for the reason that it cannot appear from the record that the merits as to the residue are with the holder of the judgment. But though the appellate court has the power to remedy such defects and render the proper judgment without remanding the case, it is not obliged to do so,[16] and, usually, it will not undertake to readjust complicated matters of account for the purpose of reforming, instead of setting aside, the judgment.[17]

(III) JUDGMENT EXCEEDING AMOUNT CLAIMED. Where the record shows that the judgment awarded plaintiff below exceeds the amount claimed by him, the court will not, on that account, award a new trial if plaintiff consents to remit the excess.[18] But it has been held that, unless plaintiff offers to remit the amount

sive judgment may be corrected on appeal where the excess in the amount is caused by the allowance of interest at more than the legal rate,[22] or by a mere error in calculating the interest[23]—as where it is computed from the wrong date.[24]

(VI) Improper Allowance of Costs or Attorneys' Fees. An excessive judgment may be corrected, with the consent of the appellee, where the excess is due to the improper inclusion therein of costs[25] or attorneys' fees.[26]

(VII) Remittitur as Cure of Errors—(A) In General. The fact that error was committed in the court below, whereby the judgment was rendered excessive, will not necessarily require a new trial. If it can be clearly seen that defendant could not have been prejudiced thereby to more than a certain amount, and plaintiff consents to remit that much of his recovery, judgment may be affirmed for the residue.[27]

New judgment directed for correct amount.—Upon a writ of error, the court found that there was an error, in taxation of costs, to the amount of eight dollars and twenty-three cents, and ordered the judgment to be set aside and a new judgment entered for the correct amount, the plaintiff in error to have a writ of restitution for the excessive costs paid by him, with interest. No reduction as to parties not appealing.—Where a decree was rendered allowing attorneys' fees against several defendants, and the allowance made was reduced on an appeal by some of defendants, it was held that it would not be reduced in a decree as to defendants who did not appeal, the court having no jurisdiction over them. Pickett v. Gore, (Tenn. Ch. 1900) 58 S. W. 402.

Where judgment for gross amount.—Where it is contended that an unauthorized item of damages for attorney's fees, which had not been paid, is included in the judgment, but no such question is presented in the instruction, and the judgment is for a gross amount in excess of such amount and less than plaintiff's claim, the judgment will not be set aside, since it cannot be determined whether such sum, was included therein, and the question should have been presented by the instruction. Sherman v. Commercial Printing Co., 29 Mo. App. 31; Schenck v. Marx, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 309, 24 N. Y. St. 809.

(B) Excess Caused by Erroneous Instruction. Where, by reason of an erroneous instruction, the jury is led into giving a verdict for too much, but the amount of the excess caused thereby clearly could not have exceeded a given sum which appellee offers to remit, the judgment need not be reversed, but may be allowed to stand for the proper amount.[28]

(C) Improper Admission or Rejection of Evidence. The improper admission or rejection of evidence, whereby the jury are caused to return too large a verdict, will not necessitate the granting of a new trial if appellee remits a portion of his recovery fully sufficient to cover the amount of excess produced by such error; and, after such remission, the judgment may be affirmed as to the balance.[29]

b. In Actions For Unliquidated Damages — (I) In General. It is a generally adopted rule of appellate practice that, where a verdict is excessive and there is no other error requiring reversal, the appellate court may, on the entry by plaintiff of a remittitur of part of his recovery, affirm the judgment for the residue, even though the action be for unliquidated damages.[30] The right of the appellate court to accept a remittitur in this class of cases has been frequently assailed on the ground that the province of the jury is infringed thereby. As to reversal because of excessive verdict see infra, XVIII, E, 1, e.

In Kansas it is the practice, where a verdict appears excessive, to direct the judgment to be modified in the lower court in accordance with the undisputed testimony as to the amount of damages sustained. Wichita, etc., R. Co. v. Gibbs, 47 Kan. 274, 27 Pac. 991; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 36 Kan. 58, 12 Pac. 352.

In Mississippi the court cannot interfere with the verdict in a slander case, the statute providing that the jury shall be sole judge of the damages in such cases. Lewis v. Black, 27 Miss. 425.

In Missouri the courts appear to have been unable to establish any permanent rule. In Nicholds v. Crystal Plate Glass Co., 126 Mo. 55, 28 S. W. 991, and Burdict v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 123 Mo. 221, 27 S. W. 453, 45 Am. St. Rep. 528, 26 L. R. A. 384, it was held, by a bare majority of the court, that a remittitur could be required as a condition of the affirmance of the judgment in this class of cases. And in several other cases the same course has been adopted, without discussing the power to do so. Furnish v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 102 Mo. 438, 13 S. W. 1044, 22 Am. St. Rep. 781; Smith v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 92 Mo. 359, 4 S. W. 129, 1 Am. St. Rep. 729; Waldhier v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 87 Mo. 37. But in Rodney v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., 127 Mo. 676, 28 S. W. 887, 30 S. W. 150, owing to a change in the personnel of the court, the foregoing cases were overruled, and it was held, again by a bare majority, that, where, in an action for damages for personal injuries, the verdict is not so excessive as to warrant a reversal on the ground of passion or prejudice, the appellate court has no power to require a remittitur as a condition of affirmance. The same doctrine had been asserted in earlier cases. Gurley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 104 Mo. 211, 16 S. W. 11; Franklin v. Fischer, 51 Mo. App. 345; Matthews v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 26 Mo. App. 75; Lanius v. Druggist Pub. Co., 20 Mo. App. 12.

No reversible error — Excess not ascertainable.— In an action for damages for killing cattle the jury gave plaintiff a verdict for an aggregate sum. No error was urged which authorized reversal, but a reduction of the verdict was asked. It was held that, there being no way to determine the amount of the excess, if any, and no cause being shown for reversal, the judgment must be affirmed in whole. Cady v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 5 Dak. 97, 37 N. W. 221.

that the verdict is too great, merely indicates an amount which it would not feel at liberty to pronounce excessive.[31]

(II) Extent of Power. Usually, the power of the appellate court extends only to giving appellee his option either to accept the reduced amount or to submit to a new trial; and, where the jury assess the damages at an entire sum, the reviewing court cannot, according to its own estimate of what plaintiff ought to recover, compel him to accept any other sum than that assessed by the jury.[32]

(III) Verdict Showing Passion or Prejudice. Where the damages awarded in an action for a tort are so grossly excessive as to show passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, it would seem that a new trial should be granted, since it is probable, in such case, that defendant's side has not been properly considered.[33]

(IV) Excess Caused by Errors on the Trial — (A) Where Amount Can Be Segregated. Generally, where the injury resulting from an error committed on the trial can be segregated from the amount of the verdict, which is otherwise supported by the evidence, the judgment may be affirmed for the residue, on the remission of such excess by the prevailing party.[34] Thus, a remittitur has been allowed where the verdict exceeded the amount claimed by plaintiff,[35] where interest was erroneously allowed,[36] or where the court erred in instructing the jury.[37]

Remittitur under protest.— Though, in case of an excessive verdict, the trial court may suggest a remittitur, it should not enter one made under protest; and, both parties having appealed in such case, and the supreme court agreeing with the trial court that the verdict is so excessive as to show passion and prejudice, a new trial will be awarded. Massadillo v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., 89 Tenn. 661, 15 S. W. 445.

But, in Louisiana, the supreme court assumes to reduce excessive verdicts on its own judgment, without requiring a remittitur. Rice v. Crescent City R. Co., 51 La. Ann. 108, 24 So. 791; Lampkins v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co., 42 La. Ann. 997, 8 So. 530; Amet v. Boyer, 42 La. Ann. 831, 8 So. 588, 17 Am. St. Rep. 430; Bomar v. Louisiana North, etc., R. But see Brown v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 7 Utah 288, 26 Pac. 579, wherein it was held that, where the verdict in a personal-injury case was so excessive as to show passion or prejudice, if plaintiff would remit a specified amount, the judgment would be affirmed for the residue. And in North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Shreve, 70 Ill. Similarly, a remittitur has been allowed where the court erred in admitting or rejecting evidence.[38]

(B) Where Amount Not Ascertainable. But where it is impracticable for the appellate court to ascertain the extent to which the verdict has been affected by an error occurring on the trial, a new trial will, usually, be granted.[39]

c. Excessive Recovery of Land. Where a judgment in an action concerning real property erroneously includes too much land, it may be reformed in the appellate court.[40] Thus, where plaintiff in ejectment recovers a judgment for land in excess of that to which he is legally entitled under the evidence, he may remit the excess and have judgment for the residue, if the record furnishes the requisite evidence by which a correct judgment may be rendered.[41]

5. Increasing Amount of Recovery. In some jurisdictions the court will increase the amount of a judgment where it is for a less sum than the undisputed evidence shows plaintiff to be entitled to[42]— as, for instance, where there court to authorize a proper judgment, the fact that others are interested in the subject-matter will not call for reversal, if no injustice has been done.[48]

(II) As to Subject-Matter. Where the lower court renders judgment without having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the appellate court will reverse, and itself dismiss the action,[49] or direct the lower court to do so.[50] If the lower court has no jurisdiction the appellate court can have none.[51]

b. Prejudicial Error in Judgment — (I) In General. An attempt to enumerate all of the classes of errors for which a judgment may be reversed would necessitate an invasion of practically every branch of the law, and would serve no useful purpose here. It is enough to state the broad principle that wherever a prejudicial and incurable error has intervened without the fault of the party injuriously affected thereby,[52] it is ground for reversing the judgment.[53] And Fictitious action.—A judgment rendered in any action which the appellate court is satisfied is fictitious will be set aside, and the case be remanded to the inferior court, with instructions to dismiss it. Ebert v. Beedy, 113 Ill. 316.

When cause remanded.—Where a judge of a circuit court renders a decree in vacation which purports to be final as to any subject embraced by it, the appellate court will not dismiss the appeal because the decree was rendered without sufficient authority by the judge, but will take jurisdiction of the cause and decree, so far, and so far only, as to vacate the decree, and remand the cause to the circuit court, there to be proceeded with. nor will a reversal of a judgment or decree be granted by the appellate court in a case where the only error relates to the allowance or taxation of costs.[82]

(B) What Is Trifling Error — (1) In General. As to what error in amount is so trivial as not to require reversal is a question depending largely upon the circumstances of the particular case. Generally, an error of five dollars or less is too small to justify reversal,[83] and errors amounting to more than five dollars will frequently be regarded as immaterial in large cases, where the expense of a new trial would greatly exceed the amount of the error.[84] But the question is, necessarily, governed by the discretion of the court, and, where equity and justice demand it, a judgment will be reversed even though the amount in controversy be insignificant.[85]

(2) Failure to Recover Nominal Damages. It is a general rule that a judgment for defendant will not be reversed and a new trial granted merely to enable appellant to recover nominal damages.[86] And so, a judgment in favor of plaintiff below will not be reversed because a nominal recoupment, set-off, or counter-claim on the part of defendant was not allowed.[87] But a failure to award nominal damages is reversible error where plaintiff is substantially prejudiced thereby[88] — as where the judgment carries costs[89] — and the mere fact that the damages recoverable must be small will not prevent a new trial where such damages will be substantial, and not merely nominal, and a real right is involved.[90]

Judgment on counter-claim.—An unauthorized judgment for nominal damages on defendant's counter-claim is not ground for new trial. Osborne v. Johnson, 35 Minn. 300, 28 N. W. 510.

When judgment reversible.—A petition alleged that a deed absolute was given by plaintiff to defendant to secure a debt, on the agreement that defendant should convey the land when a purchaser was found, and out of the proceeds pay his debt and other encumbrances, and the surplus to plaintiff. It was alleged that the sale was made and defendant received three thousand three hundred and eighty-nine dollars above its debt and the other encumbrances. The prayer was for the surplus. It was held that a judgment for plaintiff on the verdict for one dollar should be set aside, since, if plaintiff was entitled to recover at all, he was entitled to a larger sum. ests of the parties are several and independent, so that a proper decision of the case as to one is not dependent upon the judgment as to the other, the judgment may be reversed as to the one and affirmed as to the other.[96] And, under the influence of statutes in many jurisdictions, the force of the common-law rule has been much weakened, and the courts are accustomed to reverse as to one or more co-parties and affirm as to the rest whenever the circumstances of the case warrant such course.[97] is entitled to a reversal as a matter of right, the appellate court has no power to impose conditions.[99]

5. Rendering or Ordering Final Judgment — a. In General. While it is true, as stated hitherto, that an appellate court cannot, in rendering its decision, invade the province of the jury,[1] yet such court, on reversing a judgment, will sometimes render final judgment where it manifestly appears that the ends of justice would not be promoted by remanding the cause for a new trial[2] — as, for instance, where there is nothing on which to ground further proceedings.[3] But the more usual practice in such cases is for the appellate court to order the lower court to render the proper judgment instead of rendering such judgment itself.[4]

99. In vacating an order denying a motion to set aside an execution against the person, and to release appellant from arrest, the general term has no right to attach to its order of vacation a condition that appellant shall stipulate not to sue for false imprisonment. Demurrer to evidence.— Usually, when a court sets aside a judgment rendered below on a demurrer to evidence, it will proceed to render such judgment as should have been given below. Hollimon v. Griffin, 37 Tex. 453.

Findings of fact by the judge, by consent, are equivalent to a special verdict, and upon them the revising tribunal may, without sending the case back, pronounce such judgment as is proper. Smith v. Old Dominion Bldg., etc., Assoc., 119 N. C. 257, 26 S. E. 40.

No new trial to let in counter-claim.— If the agreed facts warrant a final judgment on an appeal, the cause will not be remanded for the purpose of letting in a counter-claim which can be recovered upon in another action. Davis v. Krum, 12 Mo. App. 279.

In Alabama, where a judgment rendered on a demurrer to evidence, special verdict, or case-agreed is set aside, the court is accustomed to remand it in order that the primary tribunal may, in the exercise of its discretion, award a new trial or place the parties in such a condition as will advance the justice of the case. be ordered where the facts are in dispute or not found,[8] or the court is satisfied that it would work injustice to give judgment on a special finding of facts.[9]

c. Lack of Jurisdiction Below. The appellate court will not, on reversing a judgment, remand the cause for further proceedings where the court below had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter[10] or of the person.[11]

d. Want of Cause of Action — (i) In General. Where, on appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff below, the appellate court decides that plaintiff has no cause of action and cannot succeed on another trial, it will not order a new trial on reversing the judgment, but will itself render the proper judgment,[12] or Arrest of judgment.— On reversing an order granting a motion in arrest of judgment, the appellate court will, usually, render or direct final judgment. Gordon v. Downey, 1 Gill (Md.) 41; Wilson v. Gray, 8 Watts (Pa.) 25; Sims v. Alderson, 8 Leigh (Va.) 479. But see O'Reilly v. Murdoch, 1 Gill (Md.) 32, in which the cause was remanded to give defendant an opportunity of appealing from an instruction against him. See also Favor v. Philbrick, 5 N. H. 477.

Entering judgment on former verdict.— In some states, where a verdict in favor of one party is improperly set aside, and, on a second trial, judgment is given for the other party, the appellate court, on reversing such judgment, may enter or direct judgment for the first party on the former verdict. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Ricketts, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 662, 52 S. W. 939; Wood v. American L. Ins. Trust Co., 7 How. (Miss.) 609; Stearns v. Richmond, 88 Va. 992, 14 S. E. 847, 29 Am. In Edmunds v. Mister, 58 Miss. 765, the jury in the first trial, disregarding the instructions of the court, found for plaintiff; and on the second trial, following the instructions, the jury found for defendant. It was held that, on overruling the law given the jury at the second trial, the appellate court would not give judgment on the first verdict.

New trial illegally granted.—Where a verdict is illegally set aside by the trial judge, and a new trial granted, in vacation and after his term of office has expired, judgment will be entered in the supreme court on appeal. Coopwood v. Prewett, 30 Miss. 206.

8. As to granting a new trial where the facts are disputed or not found see infra, XVIII, E, 6, b, (III).

Rule stated.—When, on an appeal, error is found as to the proceedings anterior to and including the verdict, the supreme court can only declare error and order a new trial. When the error is solely in the judgment rendered upon an admitted or ascertained state of facts, then, and in such case only, can the judgment below be reversed, using the word in its strict sense. order it rendered in the lower court.[13] Thus, where it is apparent that there can be no new evidence, introduced by the party against whom a reversal is pronounced, to change the aspect of the case, a new trial will not be ordered.[14]

(II) In Equity — Dismissal of Bill. On appeal in chancery, if the bill is obviously devoid of equity and cannot be remedied by amendment, and no supplementary evidence can be offered which will change the result, the appellate court, on finding error, will dismiss the bill,[15] or direct its dismissal below.[16] Where the justice and equity of the case require it, the dismissal will be without prejudice.[17]

e. Insufficiency of Defense. Where plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, and defendant has set up no defense sufficient to prevent or bar the right of recovery, the appellate court, on reversing a judgment in defendant's favor, will, sometimes, render the proper judgment for plaintiff,[18] or direct the court below to do so.[19] But, if the reversal be for a mere deficiency in defendant's proof which may be supplied on another trial, a venire de novo will be directed.[20]

yet it may be stated as broadly true that, whenever it appears to be necessary for the purposes of justice, the appellate court will remand for such further proceedings as the circumstances of the particular case may require.[21]

b. For New Trial—(I) In General. It is difficult to lay down general rules as to when a new trial will be ordered on the setting aside of a judgment, the matter being one largely in the discretion of the appellate court.[22] It may be stated, however, that in actions at law there will, usually, be a remand for a new trial,[23] unless the case be one in which there is no dispute as to facts,[24] or it is quite evident that a new trial would serve no useful purpose.[25] The object of courts is to

In Vermont, if error is shown in proceedings by bill of exceptions, the appellate court has no discretion but to grant a new trial (Irish v. Cloyes, 8 Vt. 30, 30 Am. Dec. 446); but, on a petition for a new trial, the court will exercise its discretion (Beckwith v. Middlesex, 20 Vt. 593).

23. As to what questions will be determined by an appellate court see supra, XVII.

In Halsey v. Flint, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 367, the court said: "In general, where a judgment is reversed a new trial should be awarded, and in most cases it is imperatively necessary for the attainment of justice."

By what propriety of new trial determined.— Under Md. Code, art. 5, § 20, the question whether "a new trial ought to be had" must be determined according to the rules and principles of law and from the record before the appellate court at the time of its decision. Possibility of success on new trial.— On setting aside a judgment because of a defect or insufficiency in the evidence, the appellate court should order a new trial unless it be manifest that the party against whom error is adjudged would not, on another trial, be entitled to a judgment under any possible state of proof applicable to the issues.

ascertain the truth of facts between the parties litigant; and so, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, an appellate court will order a new trial whenever it appears that the ends of justice will best be served by such course.[26]

(II) For Errors Occurring at Trial—(A) In General. Where a judgment in an action at law is set aside for an error committed in the course of the trial below, a new trial will, usually, be ordered.[27] Thus, the cause will be remanded for a new trial where the lower court has erred in instructing the jury on a material point,[28] or in improperly admitting or excluding material evidence.[29]

(iv) Imperfect Record. Where, without the fault of appellant, the record is so imperfect or confused that the appellate court cannot render judgment with safety to the rights of the parties, a new trial will be ordered.[33] Thus, where papers necessary to present the case for review have been lost and their loss cannot be supplied, the cause will be remanded.[34]

(v) How Many New Trials Permissible. In many jurisdictions there are statutes limiting the number of new trials which may be granted to the same party, and such statutes have, sometimes, been held to apply to appellate courts.[35] But, by the weight of authority, an appellate court is not prevented by such a statute from ordering a new trial for error of law, regardless of the number of trials already had.[36]

(vi) Partial New Trial. In a number of jurisdictions it is the practice, on holding a judgment erroneous for errors relating only to distinct and specific issues, independent of the remaining issues which have been properly tried, to remand the case for a new trial as to such specific issues alone.[37] But such a rule

Rule stated.— If the jury omit to find a matter which goes to the very point of the issue, the new trial granted by the supreme court must be in toto. But when, on the first trial, all the material issues have been correctly found, and the error does not touch the merits, the supreme court may award a partial new trial to correct the error. Person not bound by judgment.—A motion to remand the case, in order that the newly-arising conflicting claims of a third person may be decided, will be overruled, on the ground that such third person will not be bound by the judgment in the case, and may assert his rights in a separate action. Morehead v. Western North Carolina R. Co., 96 N. C. 362, 2 S. E. 247.

When cause not remanded.— On vacating a decree for want of parties, the bill will not be remanded for further preparation where, if the bill were taken as true, the complainant would not be entitled to relief, unless it appears by the answer that relief should be granted to him. nature, is not in shape to be disposed of, the appellate court may remand for reference to an auditor, master, or referee.[45] But, generally, an issue already tried will not be reopened to enable a party to introduce evidence which could have been, but was not, introduced at the trial.[46]

7. Effect of Reversal — a. In General. The effect of a general and unqualified setting aside of a judgment, order, or decree is to nullify it completely, and to leave the case standing as if such judgment, order, or decree had never been rendered;[47] and the judgment debtor is entitled to be restored to the property or rights he has lost by reason thereof.[48] The judgment operates ex vi termini to vacate the judgment of the court below, without any action on the part of the latter court.[49]

b. On Dependent Judgments or Proceedings. On the setting aside of a judgment, order, or decree, a dependent judgment or proceeding, ancillary and accessory thereto, shares its fate and falls to the ground along with it,[50] and, generally, Law declared.— Though a judgment in a case is binding until reversed, when such judgment is reversed and the law declared, such law is to be considered as having existed from the first. Moore v. Damon, 4 Mo. App. 111.

Not admissible in evidence.—A judgment which has been set aside on appeal is properly excluded from evidence in a subsequent suit between the same parties. Atkison v. Dixon, 96 Mo. 577, 10 S. W. 160.

Vacates whole judgment.— The vacation of a judgment, generally, for a specified error, alleged to be the only error, sets aside the whole judgment, and not merely the part held to be erroneous. Davis v. Headley, 22 N. J. Eq. 115. And see Watkins v. Junker, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 629, 23 S. W. 802; Effinger v. Kenney, 92 Va. 245, 23 S. E. 742.

Where a judgment granting a new trial is reversed on appeal, the lower court should proceed to again try and determine the issues joined upon the petition for a new trial, as if no appeal had been taken. Dryden v. Wyllis, 53 Iowa 390, 5 N. W. 518.

Where vacation not general and entire.— Of course, a vacation is not always general so as to require a reëxamination of all the issues, and, in such case, the effect of the reversal will depend largely upon the directions given by the appellate court, construed in connection with the circumstances of the particular case. the appellate court will specifically set aside such depending matters so as to give consistency to the record.[51] But this rule will not operate, by implication, to set aside a distinct and independent judgment or proceeding, though it form a part of the same litigation.[52] Thus, the proceedings in the court below previous to, and not infected by, the error for which the judgment is set aside are not vacated thereby.[53]

An order of reference is not vacated by a vacation of the judgment entered on the referee's report. Catlin v. Adirondack Co., 19 Hun (N. Y.) 389 [affirmed in 81 N. Y. 379].

Judgment denying a new trial will not be reversed by the supreme court as a consequence of vacating a previous decision erroneously holding that a given document, filed with the motion for a new trial, was a brief of the evidence. Mehaffey v. Hambrick, 83 Ga. 597, 10 S. E. 274.

Order of arrest.—The vacation of a judgment leaves the parties in the situation in which they were before trial. It does not make void an order of arrest granted on grounds extrinsic to the cause of action, or discharge defendant from imprisonment. People v. Bowe, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 85.

Preliminary injunction to which the party showed himself entitled before the trial of the cause is not dissolved by a vacation of the judgment and the granting of a new trial. Hess v. Winder, 34 Cal. 270.

Temporary injunction previously granted. — The vacation of a decree granting a permanent injunction does not affect a temporary injunction previously granted in the case. Samis v. King, 40 Conn. 298.

Refusal to dismiss motion for new trial.— When the supreme court holds a refusal of the court below to dismiss a motion for a new trial to be erroneous, this does not dismiss the motion itself, but only abrogates the decision rendered, and leaves the motion

c. Rights of Third Persons. Rights acquired bona fide by a third person, under a judgment, order, or decree rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, are not affected by the subsequent setting aside thereof.[54]

d. Reversal of Judgment of Intermediate Court. Where a judgment of an intermediate court, holding erroneous a judgment below, is in its turn held to be erroneous by a higher court, it will, usually, operate to restore the judgment of the trial court.[55]

8. Restitution After Vacating Judgment — a. When Authorized — (i) In General. It is the general rule that when a judgment, order, or decree of the lower court has been reversed or vacated by the appellate court, restitution will be made to the party aggrieved of all property and rights which he has lost by reason of such erroneous judgment, order, or decree,[56] and it is no reason for denying such restitution to the party aggrieved that the money was received by the other party in good faith.[57]

(II) Discretion of Court. Restitution is not a matter of right, but depends upon the sound discretion of the court, and will be ordered only when the justice of the case seems to call for it.[58] Thus, where it appears that plaintiff is equitably entitled to retain the money, restitution will not be ordered,[59] though the burden is upon him to prove his equitable right to retain it.[60] But, where the judgment of vacation is final and absolute, and no new rights have been acquired, restitution will, usually, be ordered as a matter of course.[61]

(III) Where Merits Not Before Court. If the merits of the controversy are not before the appellate court, restitution will, usually, not be awarded.[62]

Purchase of judgment same as payment.— A payment to plaintiff by a defendant of the amount of a judgment against him, although in the form of a conveyance or transfer of the judgment, is in effect a payment thereof, and, upon its subsequent vacation, the payor is entitled to a restoration of the amount so paid. Gates v. Brinkley, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 710.

Partial restitution.—Where a decision that a wife's inchoate right of dower in land cannot, as against the husband, be recognized in an award, in proceedings to condemn the land, is vacated after payment of the award to the husband, he may be required to make restitution to the extent of the dower right. Matter of Trustees New York, etc., Bridge, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 219, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 1002, 68 N. Y. St. 837.

Re-restitution.—Where restitution has been awarded after vacation, if the judgment of vacation be itself vacated by a higher court, a writ of re-restitution may be awarded. Cooke v. Reinhart, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 317. But the mere fact that restitution has been prematurely ordered, in that plaintiff was required to refund before the filing of the judgment, will not entitle such plaintiff to have the money restored. (iv) Where New Trial Granted. While it is within the power of the court to direct restitution on ordering a new trial,[63] the order will sometimes be denied where it is not clear that plaintiff is not entitled to the money.[64] In such case, the appellate court may order the amount deposited in court to abide the result of the new trial.[65]

(v) Effect of Voluntary Payment. The fact that the money was voluntarily paid on the judgment, and not coerced by execution, will not affect the right to restitution.[66]

(vi) To What Property the Right Applies. The right to restitution applies only to property or rights lost under, or in consequence of, the judgment vacated,[67] and property taken under another judgment or order cannot be restored, notwithstanding the effect of the vacation be to decide that the property was taken from the party entitled to it.[68] And so, where a payment is made in consequence of a settlement rather than in pursuance of the decree, restitution will not be ordered on reversal of such decree.[69]

b. By What Court Compelled. While the power to enforce restitution exists in both the appellate court and that to which the cause is remanded,[70] it is the usual practice to leave such enforcement to the latter court.[71] Thus, the appel-

Payment as defense on new trial.— After restitution has been made to the judgment debtor, he cannot, on a new trial, avail himself of such payment in bar to another judgment. Costs paid under mandate of higher court. — In Miller v. Clark, 52 Fed. 900, it was held that, where the circuit court, on a bill of review, reversed its original decree and dismissed the bill, it could not order restitution of the costs of appeal which had been paid under the mandate of the supreme court.

c. Who Entitled to Restitution. The right to restitution can be asserted by no one other than the judgment debtor who has made the payment,[74] or by some one standing in his shoes.[75]

d. From Whom Restitution Compelled — (i) Judgment Creditor — (a) In General. The right to restitution in favor of one entitled thereto exists against the party who prosecuted the suit and for whose benefit the money was paid,[76]

Vacated for lack of jurisdiction.— In Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Brock, 139 U. S. 216, 11 S. Ct. 523, 35 L. ed. 151, the court, in holding that the lower court had power to award restitution after its judgment had been set aside for lack of jurisdiction, said: "Jurisdiction to correct what had been wrongfully done must remain with the court so long as the parties and the case are properly before it, either in the first instance or when remanded to it by an appellate tribunal."

Remand with leave to apply to lower court. — Restitution of money paid under an erroneous decree will not be directed by the appellate court where the interests of the parties defendant are, or may be, diverse, except, possibly, in a very plain case; but leave will be reserved in the mandate to present a petition for restitution to the court below. 75. Executor of a deceased judgment debtor is entitled to restitution of the amount paid under the erroneous judgment. Gates v. Brinkley, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 710.

Surety on appeal bond paid the debt of appellant on affirmance, but, on an appeal to the court of last resort, the cause was remanded and the judgment reversed. (B) Right to Specific Restitution. It has been held, in a few cases, that setting aside a judgment or decree under which land has been sold does not affect the title acquired by the purchaser at the sale, whether such purchaser be a party or a stranger.[78] But these decisions are opposed to the weight of authority, by which the doctrine is established that, on the vacation of a judgment, the debtor therein is entitled to specific restitution of everything he has lost by reason thereof, and which still remains in the hands of the adverse party, his agents, attorneys, or privies.[79] against him to recover money paid under the judgment, that he was merely nominal plaintiff in the suit, which fact was known to defendant, and that no portion of the money so paid was ever received by him or paid to his use. Catlin v. Allen, 17 Vt. 158.

Necessity to show receipt of money.— In Isom v. Johns, 2 Munf. (Va.) 272, it was held that a recovery could not be had against plaintiff without proof that the money was actually received by him, or was applied to his use. But see Owings v. Owings, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 267, wherein it was held that, where a decree was assigned for property, and thereafter payment was made to the assignee, the original plaintiff was still liable in an action for restitution.

Plaintiff's attorney.— Payment, under order, to plaintiff's attorneys is, in legal effect, payment to plaintiff (Grauer v. Grauer, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 98, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 854, 49 N. Y. (II) STRANGERS. It is well settled that what is done under a judgment or decree rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction is valid so far as third persons are concerned, and that rights acquired thereunder by such persons are not affected by its subsequent vacation.[80] Therefore, where moneys collected under a judgment are applied to a debt of plaintiff to a third person, there is, upon its subsequent reversal, no remedy against such third person.[81] And so, title to land acquired by a third person under a judicial sale is not affected by setting aside of the judgment in pursuance of which the sale was made.[82] In such case the party aggrieved must seek his remedy in the shape of damages from plaintiff in the judgment.[83]

e. Mode of Obtaining Restitution — (I) SUMMARY PROCEEDING — (A) In General. Both under the common law and by statute in most jurisdictions a party entitled to restitution may obtain it by a summary proceeding in the same suit, without resorting to a new one for that purpose.[84] And on the granting of the motion for restitution it becomes a part of the judgment, and the amount can be collected by execution,[85] though its enforcement is not confined to this means alone.[86]

(B) When Scire Facias Necessary. Where the record itself shows the payment of the judgment, the party may have restitution without a scire facias; but, where the facts do not not appear of record, a scire facias or some proceeding of that nature is necessary.[87]

A common-law remedy.— In Haebler v. Myers, 132 N. Y. 363, 30 N. E. 963, 44 N. Y. St. 403, 28 Am. St. Rep. 589, 15 L. R. A. 588, Vann, J., said: "Restitution was a remedy well known to the common law. Its object was to restore to an appellant the specific thing, or its equivalent, of which he had been deprived by the enforcement of the judgment against him during the pendency of his appeal. It was not created by statute, but was exercised by the appellate tribunal as incidental to its power to correct errors, and, hence, the court not only reversed the erroneous judgment but restored to the aggrieved party that which he had lost in consequence thereof. It was usually a part of the judgment of reversal which directed 'that the defendant be restored to all things which he has lost on occasion of the judgment aforesaid.'"

Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 957, which provides for restitution, by the appellate court, of all property and rights lost by the erroneous judgment or order, applies only to cases where the judgment operates upon specific property in such a manner that its title is not changed — as by directing the possession of real estate or the delivery of documents, or of particular personal property in the hands of defendant, and the like. Hewitt v. Dean, 91 Cal. 617, 28 Pac. 93, 25 Am. St. Rep. 227; Farmer v. Rogers, 10 Cal. 335.

Wis. Rev. Stat. (1878), § 3732, providing for restitution after reversal of a judgment, does not apply to an order made by a justice of the peace requiring a garnishee to pay into court the amount of his indebtedness to the principal defendant. Eilers v. Wood, 64 Wis. 422, 25 N. W. 440.

Stipulation for restitution.—A judgment was rendered against defendant, and execution issued. Defendant, desiring to bring error, entered into a stipulation with plaintiff whereby a certain sum was paid to him, in full satisfaction of the judgment if affirmed, but to be restored if reversed. It was held that the trial court, after a reversal, was warranted in enforcing restitution in a summary manner, in that action, on the motion of defendant. Ft. Scott First Nat. Bank v. Elliott, 60 Kan. 172, 55 Pac. 880.

Notice to the adverse party is usually required. Anonymous, 3 N. J. L. 459; Grauer v. Grauer, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 98, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 854, 49 N. Y. St. 354; Young v. Brush, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 171.

Time to make application.—On appeal from a district court of New York city to the court of common pleas, the appellant should apply for restitution at the time of arguing his appeal; and, in the case of his omission to do so if the judgment is reversed, he should apply for a reargument on that point. Cushing v. Vanderhilt, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 512.

Quashing writ of restitution.—A writ of restitution issued after, although tested before, the death of defendant or person against whom it issues will be quashed. And the application to quash may be made on behalf of a party interested. Quigley v. Middleton, 10 N. J. L. 293.

Conclusiveness of order of restitution.—An order of restitution, made upon the vacation of an erroneous judgment, is final and conclusive between the parties, and cannot be questioned by them collaterally. Hiler v. Hiler, 35 Ohio St. 645; Breading v. Blocher, 29 Pa. St. 347.

Failure to comply with order.—A party who wilfully fails to comply with a lawful order for restitution may be proceeded against as for a criminal contempt. But he may purge himself of such contempt by showing that his failure to comply with the order was due to inability. Jenkins v. State, 60 Nebr. 205, 82 N. W. 622.

Where identity of property disputed.— Restitution will not be ordered under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1323, where the identity of the property to be restored is in dispute, since such dispute should be settled in an action for restitution. Shapiro v. Goldberg, 31 Misc. (N. Y.) 787, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 312.

Ordering restitution at subsequent term.— Where the record still remains in the appellate court it may award restitution at a term subsequent to the reversal, and remit the record. Cassel v. Duncan, 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 57.

Where action dismissed.—An order for the restitution of money, paid pursuant to the direction of an erroneous judgment, cannot be made after such judgment has been set aside and the action dismissed. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assoc. v. Hier, 55 Nebr. 557, 75 N. W. 1111.

(II) Action—(A) In General. It is well settled that an action will lie to recover back money paid upon a judgment which is afterward set aside, the appropriate remedy being the common-law action of assumpsit for money had and received, or an equivalent proceeding under the code practice.[88]

(B) Defenses to Action. In such an action it is not permissible for defendant to urge, by way of set-off, the original claim on which the vacated judgment was based;[89] and no claim outside of the original suit, and not disposed of by the judgment, can be set up.[90]

f. Extent of Restitution—(I) In General. A party who had been deprived of possession of land under an erroneous judgment or decree is entitled to restitution of the rents and profits of the land.[91] And, where the restitution is in money, interest may be allowed thereon from the time of payment.[92] It has been held Evidence of payment.— The return of the sheriff on execution that the money was made and paid to plaintiff is sufficient evidence of the receipt of the money by plaintiff upon a rule to restore it to defendant. But a bare return of satisfied, without stating it was paid to plaintiff, or a return that the money was paid by defendant to plaintiff or his attorney, is not sufficient. Morgan v. Hart, 9 B. Mon. New York — Statutory remedy cumulative. — The summary remedy for obtaining restitution given by N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1323, is cumulative merely, and a party entitled to restitution may obtain relief by action. Haebler v. Myers, 132 N. Y. 363, 30 N. E. 963, 44 N. Y. St. 403, 28 Am. St. Rep. 589, 15 L. R. Necessity for demand.— In cases where a writ of restitution can issue at once, a demand is not required before bringing suit. Martin v. Woodruff, 2 Ind. 237.

Sufficient proof of reversal.— While an entry on the record of the circuit court of a decision of the supreme court, in a case taken by appeal from the circuit court, is necessary before any action of the circuit court in the cause remanded, yet the entry of a reversal is not necessary to authorize the maintenance of an action to recover back money paid on the judgment reversed; and when the question, in a suit to recover money paid on a reversed judgment, is whether the judgment had been reversed, the record of the court that reversed the judgment, or an agreement of the parties that it had been reversed, is sufficient to prove the reversal. Glover v. Foote, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 293.

Cannot divide demand.—Where the judgment debtor sues to recover the amount paid under an erroneous judgment, he must proceed for the whole amount, costs as well as debt, and, if he dismiss as to the costs, his remedy, pro tanto, will be gone. A plaintiff cannot divide an entire demand so as to maintain several actions for its recovery. Camp v. Morgan, 21 Ill. 255.

that costs may also be included in the order of restitution in a case where the aggrieved party is entitled to restitution.[93]

(11) Where Property Sold. Where there has been a sale under the judgment, the court will order restitution only for the amount actually received by the judgment creditor, and not for the value of the property sold.[94]

F. Rendition and Correction of Appellate Judgment — 1. Form of Judgment — a. In General — Certainty of Intent. The form of a judgment in the appellate court is sufficient if it expresses with reasonable certainty the judgment intended in the cause wherein it is entered.[95]

b. Absolute Affirmance. Ordinarily, a judgment of affirmance is sufficient if it states simply or in substance that the judgment below is affirmed,[96] unless a more specific form is required by statute,[97] by the character of the proceeding,[98]

Fund paid to claimants.—Where a fund has been turned over to claimants thereof under a decree of a trial court, they should, on reversal of such decree, be charged with interest received by them on such funds pending the determination of the appeal, and credited with the expenses of its management of the fund. Conversion of property by plaintiff.—Where plaintiff in attachment acquires possession of the property under a sale, which is set aside on appeal, and converts it to his own use, the trial court, on the cause being remanded, may compel him to account for it, and protect both parties by crediting defendant on the judgment against him with its market value. Where an affirmed decree is not explicit, the appellate court may and should "add any explanation which may be necessary to make it fully understood." Mayo v. Purcell, 3 Munf. (Va.) 243.

Where an evidentiary ruling alone is brought up in the bill of exceptions, upon which ruling a judgment of dismissal was rendered in the lower court, an order on appeal that "the judgment below be reversed" was held to refer, not to the ruling on evidence which was no judgment, but to the order of dismissal, though the latter was not included in the bill of exceptions. 97. Young v. Porter, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 98, where the statute required appellate court to render new judgment in place of appealed judgment.

An appeal by one of two defendants, in a case wherein the appellate court is required by statute to render a new judgment, leaves the judgment as to the defendant not appealing in full force in the lower court; hence, upon affirmance, there should be a new judgment as to appellant and a simple affirmance as to the other defendant. Puckett v. Ainsworth, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 254.

98. A judgment on certificate of the clerk, in Alabama, "must show every fact affirmatively in the judgment entry that is necessary to sustain the summary jurisdiction exercised by the court." Foster v. Harrison, 3 Ala. 25.

A judgment on appeal from a summary judgment against a sheriff and the sureties upon his official bond, in Tennessee, stands upon a different footing from a summary judgment in the first instance. "The rule requiring summary judgments to recite fully the jurisdictional facts does not apply to appellate judgments of the supreme court." Bittick v. McEwen, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 1.

Upon affirmance of an order denying a new trial, it is improper to enter an affirmance of or by the circumstances of the particular case in which the judgment of affirmance is rendered.[99]

c. Absolute Reversal. A simple statement that the judgment below is set aside does not, ordinarily, express the full intent of a judgment of vacation.[1] It is, usually, necessary to order a new trial,[2] settle the rights of parties,[3] enter another judgment in different terms or for different parties,[4] or order the entry of such judgment in the lower court.[5]

d. Neither Affirmance Nor Reversal. To be effective, the judgment should contain specific as well as certain provisions in case of affirmance or reversal in part[6] or upon condition,[7] in case of modification,[8] or in case of judgment on cross-appeals.[9]

2. Entry of Judgment — a. Necessity of Entry. An appellate judgment becomes final and complete only when entered on the records of the appellate the judgment to which the order related, since the order alone, not the judgment, is the subject of the appeal. Miller v. Eagle L., etc., Ins. Co., 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 184.

Upon trial de novo the court must render a new judgment upon which execution may be issued, since the appealed judgment is vacated by the proceeding de novo and cannot be revived by affirmance. 9. Consistency of the record in an appellate judgment upon cross-appeals may require a complete reversal of the appealed judgment, although, upon plaintiff's appeal, it is determined that he has not been prejudiced. Sloan v. Kansas City State Bank, 158 Mo. 439, 57 S. W. 1014.

Severable judgment upon cross-appeals, which affirmed the judgment on plaintiff's appeal as not inadequate, and reversed it and awarded a new trial on defendant's appeal as excessive, was declared, on further appeal, to be "glaringly inconsistent," and a new trial of the whole matter, with conditions, was directed. National Board Mar. Underwriters v. National Bank, 146 N. Y. 64, 40 N. E. 500, 65 N. Y. St. 755 [reversing 9 Misc. (N. Y.) 688, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 544, 62 N. Y. St. 125].

court;[10] but where the fact of entry is questioned in further proceedings had as upon proper entry, the fact of entry may be presumed until the contrary is shown.[11] A judgment does not become final, nor is it regularly entered as such until the time within which a rehearing may be granted has expired,[12] or, within such time, until a petition for rehearing has been made and denied.[13]

b. Nunc Pro Tunc Entry. An entry of an appellate judgment may be made as of a prior date, at which time it might have been entered, when, for any cause, it would be improper to enter it as of the time of the actual entry;[14] and a nunc pro tunc operation of an amendment may be presumed.[15] Where a judgment has been entered at a time when it could not legally be entered, it may be set aside and entered as of a date when its entry would have been legal, even though a remittitur has gone forth, which may be recalled for that purpose.[16] But a nunc pro tunc entry will not be made merely for the purpose of aiding an appeal to a higher court.[17]

3. Amendment or Vacation of Judgment — a. Correction of Clerical Error or Fraud — (I) In the Judgment. So long as jurisdiction of the cause remains in the appellate court, the power to correct clerical errors by way of amendment, so as to make the judgment as rendered conform to the judgment intended, is absolute, and will be exercised upon a proper application or upon its own motion,[18]

An objection to proceeding with a new trial, which had been awarded, and after remand of the cause to the trial court, that no judgment had been entered in the appellate court, in the absence of evidence to support such objection, was held to have been properly overruled, upon the presumption that the mandate of the appellate court was regularly sent down. See 3 Cent. Dig. tit. "Appeal and Error," § 4635.

Limitations on power to change or modify judgment.— In North Carolina the court cannot change or modify its judgment at a subsequent term, though the previous judgment may be amended so as to make it in fact the judgment intended (James v. Western North Carolina R. Co., 123 N. C. 299, 31 S. E. 707); nor can a judgment be entered as of a date when the court was not in session, nor as of a term when the appeal could not have been heard (De Agreda v. Mantel, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 130); nor as of a time prior to the submission of the cause (Cunningham v. Ashley, 13 Ark. 653); nor changed to the prejudice of a surety on an appeal bond without notice to him (Koch v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 77 Mo. 354).

judgment,[23] the intervention of other rights,[24] the lapse of an unreasonable and unexplained length of time after notice,[25] or the expiration of a reasonable time, fixed by statute, for such purpose.[26]

(II) In the Remittitur or Mandate. A remittitur or mandate, affected by clerical error or fraud so that it does not conform to the judgment as rendered, may be amended or vacated;[27] and, for the same purpose, it may be recalled after it has gone forth,[28] before action has been taken thereon in the lower court,[29] and if the applicant therefor is not guilty of laches,[30] but not for the purpose of giving relief supplemental to that adjudged,[31] or for reëxamination on the merits,[32] unless the remittitur had erroneously been issued pending the right to a rehearing.[33]

b. Correction of Judicial Error — (I) General Rule. Where the amendment or the vacation of a judgment for the correction of judicial error or oversight therein involves a reëxamination of the appeal upon its merits, this power will not, generally, be exercised except upon a proper petition for rehearing,[34] made previous to a transfer of the cause from the appellate to the lower court,[35]

Relief, by vacation or amendment, of an appellate judgment which is due to neglect of the party applying for such relief is, while the court has jurisdiction, a matter within the discretion of the court, and, except for very cogent reasons, will not be granted — as in case of failure to prosecute [50] or defend,[51] to complete the record,[52] to raise objections to the appeal,[53] to set up an additional defense,[54] to dismiss pursuant to a prior settlement,[55] or to present questions of practice which might have resulted in a different determination.[56]

4. Proceedings For Further Appeal. Proceedings for review by a successively higher tribunal are governed by the rules relating to appellate proceedings, generally, heretofore fully treated.[57] In addition thereto, it should be noted that, generally, in case a remittitur has issued upon the judgment of an intermediate appellate court, such court has no jurisdiction to effect a transfer of the cause to a higher court until the remittitur has been recalled;[58] also, that a suc-

and amounting to an unlawful obstruction of its enforcement); Remington v. Eastern R. Co., 109 Wis. 154, 85 N. W. 321 (where the supreme court declined to recall and amend a mandate so as to direct the manner of execution of a judgment by it directed to be entered).

With the imposition of reasonable terms, an affirmance upon failure to prosecute may be vacated, where no injury is done thereby and the failure may be excused (Rice v. Maddock, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 632, 28 N. Y. St. 413), even, in Wisconsin, after the term, where the motion to reinstate is made within sixty days and remittitur has not issued (Krall v. Lull, 46 Wis. 643, 1 N. W. 217).

A default in violation of a stipulation may, upon motion, be set aside, even though the stipulation be not in writing. Chamberlain v. Fitch, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 243.

A good excuse for non-appearance may not warrant relief if it appears that, even if the judgment of affirmance for non-appearance be vacated, another judgment of the same character must, upon the record, be rendered. Bishop v. Glassen, (Cal. 1886) 12 Pac. 258.

After remand, relief from an affirmance for failure to prosecute cannot be granted, even upon terms and a good excuse for the default. Zorn v. Lamar, 71 Ga. 85; Martin v. Wilson, 1 N. 51. Default without regular notice.— Though a party had not a regular notice, in writing, of a writ of error or of a judgment of reversal, yet, where he had sufficient information of the pendency of the writ of error to have pleaded in time, and of the judgment of reversal by default in season to have moved the court, at a former term, to set it aside, the court declined to vacate the judgment at a subsequent term on the ground of laches. In the federal courts, it is held that a recall of the mandate is unnecessary, since the transcript of the record is not remitted, but remains in the intermediate court. cessive appeal to the same appellate court cannot be taken by the same parties upon the same record,[59] nor upon a different record from the same judgment,[60] nor at all by the same parties, in the same case, until the lower court has rendered a new appealable judgment,[61] nor can an appellate judgment be corrected on appeal in a collateral proceeding.[62] Correction of clerical errors in an intermediate appellate judgment may sometimes be made after transfer to a higher court.[63]

G. Remission of Cause to Lower Court — 1. Mandate or Other Remanding Order — a. Necessity For. It is the general rule that, in order to reinvest the lower court with jurisdiction after the rendition of judgment on appeal, there should be a mandate or other order of remand issued by the appellate court;[64] and, in proper practice, such mandate should be copied in the record, so that the authority of the trial court to proceed may be apparent.[65] But the courts are not disposed to stand on technicalities in this regard, and it has been held, in some cases, that, where the lower court ascertains the judgment above and proceeds thereunder, its proceedings are not vitiated by the absence of a formal mandate.[66]

Orders not appealable.—A mandate will not be stricken out for the purpose of allowing an appeal from a judgment upon orders which are determined not to be appealable. Jenkins v. International Bank, 9 Ill. App. 488.

Writ of error after question reserved.— Where, after verdict for plaintiff, the question whether the action was maintainable upon the facts proved at the trial and reported by the presiding judge was reserved for the consideration of all the judges, and judgment was entered for plaintiff according to their opinion, this was held to be no bar to a writ of error, brought to vacate the judgment for a defect of substance in the declaration. Smith v. Moore, 6 Me. 274.

McArthur v. Dane, 61 Ala. 539. Contra, in Tuttle v. Gilmore, 42 N. J. Eq. 369, 7 Atl. 859, the appellate judgment had been wrongly entered in the appellate court, but, in the lower court, after remand, the judgment was entered and execution issued thereon according to its real intent, and, on appeal from the execution proceedings, the appellate court reversed the lower court and amended its former entry. Terminology.— The terms "mandate," "remittitur" and "procedendo" are used indiscriminately to signify the order by which the cause is remanded to the lower court.

Illinois.—Under Ill. Rev. Stat. (1889), c. 110, § 83, a certified copy of an order affirming the judgment or dismissing the appeal operates to reinvest the lower court with jurisdiction when filed therein. Smith v. Stevens, 133 Ill. 183, 24 N. E. 511.

New York — When remittitur proper.— In New York, whenever the court of appeals makes any order finally disposing of the appeal, a remittitur should be sent down (Dresser v. Brooks, 2 N. Y. 559); but, on an order dismissing an appeal, a remittitur is improper (McFarlan v. Watson, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 128).

Ohio — Where judgment affirmed.— On a simple affirmance of a judgment of the court of common pleas on error in the supreme court, a mandate from the latter court is not necessary to authorize the clerk of the common pleas to issue an execution on the original judgment. b. Issuance — (i) In General. The mandate is issued out of the highest court to which the cause has been carried,[67] and is, usually, directed to the court in which the cause was originally tried.[68]

(ii) Time of Issuance. As to when the mandate shall issue is a question usually provided for by statute or rule of court.[69] The issuance of the mandate

Iowa 139; Benzinger Tp. Road, 135 Pa. St. 176, 19 Atl. 942. But see Trowbridge v. Sickler, 48 Wis. 424, 4 N. W. 563, wherein it was held that the judgment and record of the supreme court must be brought formally to the attention of the lower court before it can proceed.

Failure to file.— The issuance of the remittitur gives jurisdiction to the lower court, and the failure to file it is a mere irregularity which will not affect the validity of subsequent proceedings. Judson v. Gray, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 289; Brooks v. Brooks, 16 S. C. 621. But see Lyon v. Lyon, 103 Ga. 747, 30 S. E. 575. In McCall v. Crousillat, 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 7, it was held that, where proceedings had been confirmed in the supreme court on error, and the record ordered to be sent back, it was to be considered as out of the supreme court, whether actually sent back or not.

Waiver.— The voluntary appearance of the parties and taking part in the subsequent proceedings without objection waives a formal remanding order. Gerard v. Gateau, 15 Ill. App. 520; Brooks v. Brooks, 16 S. C. 621; Pringle v. Sizer, 3 S. C. 335. In Foster v. Jordan, 54 Miss. 509, the court said: "It is the judgment of this court, reversing and remanding a case, which gives the lower court authority to enter upon a new trial. The mandate is the official mode of communicating that judgment to the inferior tribunal. The production of the mandate is the best evidence of the fact of reversal, and, if objection was made in the lower court, a second trial could not be gone into until the mandate was filed. But in this case the second trial took place without objection, and it is in this court that the objection is made for the first time that the Circuit Court had no jurisdiction. This is too late. Our own records show a reversal and issuance of a mandate two months before the second trial in the lower court; and the parties, by going into that trial without objection, must be held to have waived the filing of the mandate."

67. Case reserved in intermediate court.— When a case is reserved in a district court for decision by the supreme court, and the judgment of the latter requires no further proceedings to be had in the district court, the mandate ordered to be issued to the common pleas to carry the judgment of the supreme court into execution should be issued out of the supreme, and not out of the district, court. Thirty days after judgment.— In some jurisdictions no remittitur will be issued until the expiration of thirty days after the judgment on appeal. Hogs Back Consol. Min. Co. v. New Basil Consol. Gravel Min. Co., 65 Cal. 22, 2 Pac. 489; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Samuels, (Ky. 1900) 57 S. W. 467.

Denial of application.— The Florida supreme court will deny an application for the issuance of a mandate within thirty days after entry of judgment, when appellant objects and no necessity is shown for such spe-before the proper time is a mere irregularity which will not affect the jurisdiction of the court below to proceed in pursuance thereof.[70]

(III) Payment of Costs and Fees. The mandate may be withheld until the payment of all costs and fees for which the party seeking such mandate is liable,[71] but it is not material by whom the payment is made.[72]

c. Form. In the absence of any statute or rule of court prescribing a specific form, none is necessary, and the mandate is to be drawn to suit the requirements of the particular case.[73] It is not necessary to recite thereunder every step in the various stages of the cause.[74]

d. Filing — (I) In General. The practice in regard to filing the mandate is governed, for the most part, by statutes and rules of court.[75] By statute, in cial order. Guaranty Trust, etc., Co. v. Buddington, 27 Fla. 233, 9 So. 251.

Transcript of judgment not remittitur.— The filing and taking of a judgment of the supreme court in the district court of a county under Minn. Supreme Ct. Rules, No. 29, for the purpose of having execution issue thereon, is not a remittitur. La Crosse, etc., Steam Packet Co. v. Reynolds, 12 Minn. 213.

Remand from circuit to county court.— Under Va. Code (1873), c. 178, § 25, a judgment of the circuit court, remanding a cause to the county court for further proceedings instead of retaining the same to be there proceeded in, must show that it was done either for good cause shown or else by agreement of the parties, and a remanding order which fails to show this is void. Pettit v. Cowherd, 83 Va. 20, 1 S. E. 392.

Separate bills of costs.— In New York, where the court of appeals adjudges the appellant costs in all courts, the remittitur should award separate bills of costs. Hascall v. King, 165 N. Y. 288, 59 N. E. 132.

Effect of filing.— Where the remittitur of the supreme court, confirming a decree of the circuit court and directing that it shall be executed through the action and report of a referee, is filed in the circuit court, no order or judgment need be entered by said court on the remittitur, but the referee may act under the decree. Adger v. Pringle, 13 S. C. 33.

Filing in vacation.— A remittitur may be some states, a failure to file the mandate within a specified time operates as an abandonment of the suit.[76]

(11) Notice of Filing. By statute, in some jurisdictions, notice is required to be given to the adverse party of the filing of the mandate.[77] But such notice may be waived by agreement[78] or by voluntary appearance,[79] and, in the absence of a statutory requirement, would seem not to be necessary at all.[80]

2. Compliance With Mandate — a. Specific Directions. Specific directions contained in the mandate of the appellate court are beyond the judicial discretion of the lower court, and, hence, must be implicitly followed by the latter court[81] — as, for instance, directing the entry of a particular judgment below,[82]

filed in vacation (Dale v. Rosevelt, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 25); and the cause is deemed to have reached the court at the first regular term after the filing (Sturges v. Knapp, 38 Vt. 540).

Staying filing.— The filing of a remittitur may be ordered stayed, in whosesoever hands it may be, at any time before it is actually and regularly filed in the court below. Cushman v. Hadfield, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 109; Jarvis v. Shaw, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 415.

What not a filing.— The mere coming of a remittitur to the hands of the clerk below was held not to be an actual filing where, on being served with the stay, the clerk handed the remittitur back to the attorney and expressly refused to file it. Cushman v. Hadfield, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 109.

81. Nature and effect of specific directions. — In State v. Anthony, 65 Mo. App. 543, 551, the court said: "When a cause has been remanded with special directions, it is out of the power of the court receiving such directions to open the cause and have a new trial. . . . The mandate in such case is in the nature of a special power of attorney. By it authority and jurisdiction are granted to the lower court to take such steps as are ordered, and such incidental steps as are necessary to carry the mandate into execution. It has no power to enter any other judgment, or to consider or determine other matters not included in the duty of entering the judgment as directed."

Presumption of compliance.— In the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that a mandate has been complied with by the lower court. Moore v. Powers, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 536.

Presumption that all issues were decided.— Groves v. Sentell, 66 Fed. 179, 30 U. S. App. 119, 13 C. C. A. 386.

Dismissal of intermediate appeal should not be permitted after further appeal and remand to the intermediate court, with directions for a specific judgment in the trial court. Hough v. Harvey, 84 Ill. 308.

Direction of judgment for costs upon dismissal does not authorize the entry of a judgment of affirmance. Matter of Blythe, 118 Cal. 347, 50 Pac. 545.

Docketing and notice is not necessary, unless specifically required, as a preliminary to entry of judgment under a mandate. Howe v. Jones, 71 Iowa 92, 32 N. W. 187; Williams v. Whiting, 94 N. C. 481; Cullins v. Overton, 7 Okla. 470, 54 Pac. 702; Pierce v. Kneeland, 9 Wis. 23. This is necessary only in case of remand for further proceedings on the merits. Evans v. Eastman, 84 Ill. App. 636.

Entry of judgment is ministerial and, therefore, may be effected by the clerk without an order of court. McMillan v. Richards, 12 Cal. 467; Berlin v. Gilly, 13 La. New York.— Bruce v. Davenport, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 185.

North Carolina.— McMillan v. Baker, 92 N. C. 110.

Costs.— A condition of a new trial that the party obtaining it first pay the costs of the former trial cannot be annexed by the lower court to an unconditional direction. Ely v. Com., 5 Dana (Ky.) 398; Garrison v. Singleton, 5 Dana (Ky.) 160; Chapman v. Yellow Poplar Lumber Co., 89 Fed. 903, 61 U. S. App. 499, 32 C. C. A. 402.

Nonsuit after new trial ordered is not improper, since a new trial, though directed, is not compulsory but merely is allowed if desired. Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Hooper, 105 Fed. 550, 44 C. C. A. 586.

85. Ordering reference.— Pim v. Nicholson, 10 Ohio St. 623; Barksdale v. Ward, (Tenn. Ch. 1900) 58 S. W. 880.

86. A further proceeding as to particular matters or items only, specially directed by the appellate court, or which becomes necessary because of vacation as to particular matters or items, leaving the judgment otherwise intact, precludes, by necessary implication, a reëxamination by the lower court of all other accounting,[87] ordering appointment of designated administrators[88] or reinstatement of a court commissioner,[89] awarding certain costs[90] or damages,[91] and directing a particular method of execution.[92]

b. Incomplete or Inadequate Directions. Where the specific directions given in a mandate are incomplete, or insufficient to meet the requirements of the case, such action, not inconsistent with the directions given, may be taken by the lower court as necessity and the nature of the case requires.[93] A fortiori, this is true matters or items not thus necessary to be determined.

United States.— Holladay's Case, 29 Fed. 226.

A new trial ordered upon condition that if plaintiff enter a remittitur for a certain amount within a given time, judgment for the balance should be affirmed, confers no discretion on the lower court to extend the time, and defendant cannot excuse non-compliance with the condition because the other party came into possession of the order and withheld it beyond the time, in consequence of which he claims ignorance of the condition. Loyd v. Hicks, 32 Ga. 499. So, where the condition was that plaintiff discontinue as to one of the joint defendants, it was held that the discontinuance must have been made before scire facias. Kennerly v. Walker, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 117.

Execution, directed upon condition that defendant first have an opportunity to pay a certain amount in satisfaction of the judgment, leaves the lower court without discretion; but it must proceed to execution unless the condition is fulfilled in the manner specified. McClellan v. Crook, 7 Gill (Md.) 333.

Judgment directed except upon additional showing which may make it appear that such judgment would be improper refers only to such further matters as are not involved in the issues already tried. Titusville Iron Works v. Keystone Oil Co., 130 Pa. St. 211, 18 Atl. 739.

d. General Orders — (I) Of Affirmance — (A) Upon the Merits. Upon a simple affirmance upon the merits, there is nothing further for the lower court to do in the case but to enter the mandate and enforce the judgment.[97] Thus, there is no discretion which permits the reëxamination of matters once concluded,[98] further inquiry into additional matters,[99] the rendition of a different judgment.[1]

Additional attachment security required as a condition of sustaining an attachment cannot be reviewed by the lower court as an unauthorized abuse of discretion by the appellate court. Corbit v. Nicoll, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 235.

97. No discretion in lower court upon affirmance — Reasons.— In Lyon v. Ingham County Cir. Judge, 37 Mich. 377, the court, by Cooley, J., said: "The court rendering the conclusive judgment may have a discretionary authority to review and revise its own action, but if that court shall have taken the case on appeal, and shall have remanded it after judgment, the court below can have no similar authority, because, if it could and should exercise it, it would really be reviewing and revising the action of its superior, which would be absurd. All the discretion which the inferior court can have must concern the execution of the judgment or decree which has been sent down to it; if no directions have been given as to these it would have the ordinary powers in respect to it, as it would have had if it had been entered by itself."

A new judgment is not necessary, because an appealed judgment is not wholly vacated by the appeal, but only suspended. Bond v. Wool, 113 N. C. 20, 18 S. E. 77.

A substitution on appeal is no bar to immediate execution in the lower court against the substituted party after affirmance. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson, 149 U. S. 237, 13 S. Ct. 843, 37 L. ed. 717.

Special statutory relief from a judgment rendered through mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect, allowed within a specified time, has been held to have no application to an affirmed judgment so as to prevent a full compliance with the mandate. Ean v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 101 Wis. 166, 76 N. W. 329.

An affirmance, with order for further proceedings, is not a simple and final affirmance, even where the judgment affirmed is for a stated amount, so as to authorize immediate execution. In such a case, where the affirmed judgment was upon a creditor's bill, it was held that the "further proceedings" necessarily implied an accounting of some kind. Bieber v. Fechheimer, 9 App. Cas. An amendment of the affirmed judgment cannot be made in the lower court after re-or decree, the vacation of the judgment or decree,[2] or a stay of execution to enforce the judgment or decree.[3]

(B) Upon Errors Assigned. An affirmance upon errors of law assigned which determines only that the errors assigned were not committed, without otherwise touching the merits of the controversy, has been held to leave the trial court with power to reopen the case for other cause on the merits as if no appeal had been taken.[4]

(II) OF REVERSAL — (A) In General. From the nature of the particular case and the condition and contents of the record, it must be determined, in case of a general order of reversal and remand for further proceedings, whether or not a new trial should be had,[5] how far the scope of the inquiry upon a new trial

mand, so as to defeat or modify the appellate judgment. Stephens v. Norris, 15 Ala. 79; Gamble v. Gibson, 19 Mo. App. 531; Hubbard v. Copcutt, 9 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 289; Utica Ins. After reversal upon a question of law reserved, the lower court is not authorized to enter judgment for the other party, notwithstanding the verdict. Currier v. Bilger, 12 different judgment should be entered for the same party,[10] upon what, if any, conditions judgment should be given,[11] and how costs should be awarded.[12]

(B) For Want of Jurisdiction. Upon a vacation for want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter in the lower court, that court has no power further than to summarily remove the case from the docket.[13] Amendments to cure the defect cannot be permitted.[14]

e. Erroneous Directions. The lower court is not warranted in refusing to obey the mandate of the appellate court for supposed judicial error therein.[15] But, it has been held, a mandate should not be strictly followed, so as to work a manifest injustice, where it appears to have been framed upon a misapprehension.[16]

Pa. Co. Ct. 348, 2 Pa. Dist. 278. Aliter, where the parties had agreed for judgment if the evidence would support a contrary verdict. Stone v. St. Louis Stamping Co., 156 Mass. 598, 31 N. E. 654. And where the findings of fact in a chancery case were acquiesced in, judgment for the other party after reversal is proper. Andrews v. Burdick, 64 Iowa 692, 21 N. W. 140.

The lower court should not attempt the correction of mistakes in the mandate or appellate judgment,[17] nor send back the matter to the appellate court unless directed so to do.[18] But a manifest clerical error may be corrected.[19] For correction of a supposed error in the appellate judgment, another appeal will not lie from a compliance therewith — the only remedy is by rehearing in the appellate court.[20]

In Massachusetts the supreme judicial court, by Gray, C. J., has held that: "The decision of this court, as stated in its rescript, on the question of law reserved is conclusive upon the superior court. But if it appears to the satisfaction of that court that, by mistake of parties or counsel, or misunderstanding of that court, a question of fact which is essential to the determination of the rights of the parties has not been tried, it is within the power and discretion of that court to suspend the entry of final judgment, and to set aside a verdict or discharge a statement of facts, in order to afford an opportunity of presenting that question to the court or jury." West v. Platt, 124 Mass. 353. See also Gray v. Cook, 135 Mass. 189.

In Vermont it has been held that the chancellor might rehear a cause remanded from the appellate court for "substantial errors apparent or manifest from the papers and pleadings, errors plainly resulting from inadvertence or oversight of an uncontroverted or settled fact, errors or mistake such as it is evident the supreme court would correct upon suggestion before the cause was remanded. In a cause remanded this remedy is in no sense applicable for the purpose of review." Canerdy v. Baker, 55 Vt. 578, 582. See also Gale v. Butler, 35 Vt. 449.

Under the guise of an amendment for clerical error, the lower court cannot, after remand, be permitted to correct supposed judicial errors in the judgment. Smith v. Armstrong, 25 Wis. 517.

Reasons for rule.— In Perry v. Tupper, 71 N. C. 380, 381, the court, by Reade, J., said: "If the judge cannot refuse to obey the order because he thinks there is error, can the party frustrate it because he thinks there is error? That would be worse than for the judge to do it, because it might be supposed that the judge would exercise discretion, and refuse to obey only in case of palpable error; but the interested party would frustrate the order in every case. If, then, the judge cannot refuse to obey, and the party cannot be allowed to frustrate an erroneous decision of the supreme court; and if from it there is no appeal, are we driven to the revolting alternative that there is no relief? Of course not. The practice is well established and the relief perfect — a petition in this court to rehear."

Review of the former appellate judgment cannot be effected by a second appeal to determine the correctness of the lower court's action under the mandate. Gamble v. Gibson, 19 Mo. App. 531; Wright v. Southern R. Co., 128 N. C. 77, 38 S. E. 283; Shoaf v. Frost, 127 N. C. 306, 37 S. E. 271.

A party to a judgment, affirmed on appeal of a co-defendant as to all of the defendants, has been held to have no right, after remand, to move in the lower court to annul the judgment on the ground that he was not properly served with process or notice of appeal, because: "The court of appeals is, by common law, independent of statute law, conclusively presumed to have done everything that was necessary to invest it with full and complete jurisdiction over all the parties to this joint judgment;" and because, further: "The rendition by this court of a judgment or decree against persons who should have been appellees is, at common law, equivalent to an affirmation on the record that such parties were before the court, as, without their so being, the Court could not have proceeded to decide the case." Newman v. Mollohan, 10 W. Va. 488, 502, 503.

Reasons stated.— In McCrimmin v. Cooper, 37 Tex. 423, affirming the denial of an injunction against an appellate court judgment, the court, by Walker, J., said: "Should this court render a judgment in any cause over which it had not jurisdiction, there can be no doubt that such judgment would be void, and might be attacked or set aside in any court of competent jurisdiction. But the proposition upon which this case has proceeded is a very different one. . . . We are not called on in this case to defend the judgment of the supreme court further than to declare that the court had undoubted jurisdiction to render the judgment in question. It may have been error so to do; but that error might have been corrected in this court."

An execution issued before modification which is required by the remittitur should be quashed on motion. The integrity of the judgment as an entirety is impeached by the directed modification, and it is, therefore, unenforceable until modified as directed. Dawson v. Waldheim, 81 Mo. App. 636.

An irregular entry of costs, though subject to be struck out on motion, does not render the whole judgment void for non-compliance with the mandate. Lawrence v. Bank of Republic, 6 Rob. (N. Y.) 497.

A merely erroneous action in failing to follow the remittitur does not render the action absolutely void, it appearing that the lower court "attempted to enter a judgment in accordance with that remittitur," which was not without its jurisdiction. enter and execute the judgment.[31] But relief by another appeal must be resorted to where the ground for relief consists of a failure to follow the law of the case,[32] or to give appropriate relief outside the terms of the mandate,[33] or for a misinterpretation of the mandate not amounting to a refusal to act.[34] The appellate court will not act as upon a non-compliance with its mandate until application has been made to the lower court, and denied.[35]

3. Province of the Opinion — a. As Affecting the Mandate. In construing the mandate or in determining the action to be taken thereon, in case of a general order or incomplete directions, the lower court should look to the reasons stated in the opinion of the appellate court, and be governed thereby in the action

Where the appellate court has the power of trial de novo, it may, on a second appeal, retain the cause for trial at its own bar, the lower court having disregarded the instructions given for its guidance on a former appeal. Fine v. Cockshut, 6 Call (Va.) 16.

32. For a failure to follow the law of the case, as laid down in the appellate decision, the proper remedy is another appeal, and not a mandamus. Ludlum v. Fourth Dist. Ct., 9 Cal. 7; Blatchford v. Newberry, 100 Ill. 484; Avery v. Meikle, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 518.

33. Where the mandate does not specify the method of enforcement, if the lower court does not absolutely refuse to enforce, the remedy for an inadequate enforcement is by appeal alone. The record on former appeal will not be considered for the purpose of determining whether there has been a compliance with the mandate — an entirely new record, as for a new and distinct appellate proceeding, is necessary. Parsons Water Co. v. Hill, 3 Kan. App. 333, 45 Pac. 116.

Misinterpretation amounting to refusal.— In State v. Theard, 48 La. Ann. 926, 20 So. 286, where the lower court had so misinterpreted an incidental remark in the opinion as to paralyze its discretionary action in further proceedings which had been directed, the appellate court declined to issue a mandamus to the lower court ordering the particular course to be pursued, but merely "concluded to direct the district court" to dispose of the question raised in accordance with the proper interpretation, which was indicated, the court, by Nicholls, C. J., saying: "Under the circumstances we think a decision of this matter can be properly referred to us for immediate decision, so as to set matters at rest at once should the court below have misconceived the scope of the judgment."

In Rennebaum v. Atkinson, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1346, 49 S. W. 1, 342, it was held that a proceeding by rule against the lower court judge was proper to present the question whether a judgment entered under the mandate conformed thereto; but it was further held that inasmuch "as the circuit judge evidently believed the judgment entered was in accordance with the mandate, the rule moved for will not be awarded until he has had an opportunity to enter a judgment in conformity with the mandate."

Where reversal would not benefit appellant, a reversal will not be awarded on appeal from action taken under a mandate, though its provisions have not been strictly complied with. Campbell v. Pratt, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 354, 7 L. ed. 449. This applies where appellant has not been prejudiced by the failure complained of. Joseph v. Hotopp, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 285.

35. Royall v. Virginia, 125 U. S. 696, 8 S. Ct. 1392, 31 L. ed. 855.

Correction of an erroneous action should be made upon special motion in the lower court (In re Mahon, 71 Cal. 586, 12 Pac. 868; Griswold v. Havens, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 413, 26 How. Pr. (N. A mere formal irregularity which can at any time be corrected in the taken.[36] Especially is this true when the remand is for further proceedings in accordance with, in conformity to, or not inconsistent with, the opinion, for in such case the opinion is practically a part of the mandate.[37] But where the mandate contains express directions it is sufficient of itself, unaided or uncontrolled by statements in an opinion which is not made a part of it.[38]

b. As the Law of the Case[39] — (i) In General. It is the general rule that, as to those questions embraced therein, the decision of the appellate court is binding on the lower court in its further proceedings, even though such decision be in fact erroneous; and, where there is no change in the facts, it is the duty of the court below to adopt and follow the views expressed.[40] The decision

As to duty of lower court to comply with mandate see supra, XVIII, G, 2.

Conclusion reached on inconsistent views.— A subordinate court is bound by the judgment of an appellate court reversing its decision, although it appears that the members of the appellate court have arrived at the same conclusion by opposite and inconsistent reasoning and views of the law. Oakley v. Aspinwall, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 1.

Controlling principle decided in another case.— On appeal from a judgment entered on an order dismissing the complaint the commissioner granted a new trial, holding that the action could be maintained. The court of appeals decided in a case before it that such action could not be maintained. It was held, on the case coming up for a new trial, that such decision was the law of the case, and that an order dismissing the complaint was proper. Mechanics', etc., Bank v. Dakin, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 431.

Former decision governing second controversy.— Where the high court of errors and appeals have decided a controversy between two judgment creditors as to their respective rights to the proceeds of sales made on their executions, and a subsequent controversy between the same parties as to their respective rights to the proceeds of other sales made under like circumstances under executions on the same judgments arise, the former decision will be conclusive of the rights of the parties in the latter controversy. Martin v. Lofland, 10 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 317.

Interpretation of evidence.— Where a judgment is set aside by the court of appeals, and a new trial ordered, the interpretation of the evidence in the case, and the inferences drawn therefrom by the court of appeals, are binding on the trial court on the new trial. Moore v. Simmons, 133 N. Y. 695, 31 N. E. 513, 45 N. Y. St. 869.

Point not specifically mentioned.— Where, on appeal, question of the court's jurisdiction was raised and discussed, it is res judicata, on remanding of the case, though no specific mention was made in the opinion of such point. Hood v. Bain, (Kan. 1899) 59 Pac. 275.

Intermediate appellate court.— A former order or decree of the appellate court, unless vacated by the supreme court, is final and conclusive of the rights of the parties, and the questions therein determined cannot be again litigated by taking an appeal from the decree of the lower court carrying that decree into effect. Stapp v. Owens, 45 Ill. App. 488.

Ejectment — Doctrine of stare decisis.— In a second trial, upon the same state of facts, in an action in ejectment, taken under Minn. Gen. Stat. §§ 5845, 5846, authorizing a retrial in ejectment in stated cases, the decision on the former appeal controls on the doctrine of stare decisis, and not upon the doctrine of res judicata. Second vacation upon different grounds.— When the judgment on second appeal in the same case is set aside on grounds other than upon the first appeal, the trial court at the next hearing is not to follow the rule adopted on the first appeal, where such rule has, in the meantime, been overruled in other cases. (III) OBITER DICTA. Obiter dicta, on the part of the appellate court as to matters not before it for decision, are not binding on the lower court,[43] and the parties are not precluded from raising questions which were not submitted or considered on the appeal.[44] But, though a matter be not essential to the decision of the case on appeal, if it be important for the purposes of a new trial, and in that view passed upon, it becomes the law of the case.[45]

4. MATTERS ADMITTING OF FURTHER ACTION — a. Matters Deemed Concluded. No further action can be taken in the lower court upon matters which may be deemed to have been determined by the appellate court.[46] This applies, not only

In McLeran v. Benton, 73 Cal. 329, 14 Pac. 879, 2 Am. St. Rep. 814, the court said: "It is doubtless true, as a general proposition, that a previous ruling of the appellate court upon a matter directly in issue is, as to all subsequent proceedings, a final adjudication, and becomes the law of the case, from which the court ought not to depart, nor allow the parties to be relieved. But when such a ruling relates to a matter of fact, the principle can be invoked only when the fact appears again to the appellate court under the same circumstances in respect to which it was originally considered."

Trial on agreed facts.— Where judgment is rendered in a cause tried upon agreed facts, and the supreme court reverses such judgment and remands the case generally, the findings and conclusions of the supreme court are res judicata as to the facts embraced in the agreed statement, and the trial court should render such judgment as the supreme court should have rendered or directed on the findings and conclusions announced by said court. Statement arguendo.— In an action to enjoin defendant from diverting the waters of a stream, a statement, made by way of argument in the opinion of the supreme court on a former appeal, reversing and remanding the case for a decree in accordance therewith, that "there may be times of flood or high water when no one below would be injured if defendant's canal should carry away from the river surplus waters to its full capacity," does not entitle defendant to a provision in the decree, in the absence of such issue by the pleadings, allowing him to divert such surplus waters. to those matters which have been expressly presented and decided,[47] but also to all matters, properly a part of the case, which should have been presented, and which would, if presented, have been determined;[48] but it does not apply to matters which might have been litigated, but were not, and which were not, necessarily, involved,[49] though the appellate court assumes to decide them.[50]

b. Interlocutory and Ancillary Matters. The determination of interlocutory or ancillary matter on appeal decides merely as to the action already taken, leaving the matter as to subsequent action upon different facts discretionary with the trial court,[51] except in so far as the merits of the cause may be necessarily involved.[52]

c. Matters Pending the Appeal. Matters which occur outside the litigation pending the appeal, and which are not or cannot be made of record in the case, will not be permitted to directly affect the appellate decision or control the lower court in complying with the mandate.[53] But, to fully effectuate the mandate, action taken inconsistent therewith pending the appeal may and should be corrected, even though no specific directions to that effect are given.[54]

d. Matters Subsequent to Decision. Matters which occur subsequent to the appellate judgment, giving rise to new rights in contravention of those which have been determined, cannot be deemed to have been concluded;[55] but, though such rights must be recognized in an appropriate proceeding, they furnish no basis for non-compliance with the mandate so far as it may be complied with in view of another proper proceeding.[56]

e. New Parties. The rights of strangers to the record cannot be concluded by implication or otherwise.[57] But they cannot be allowed to interfere with enforcement of a mandate except in a new proceeding.[58] However, by way of exception, it has been held that new creditors may be allowed to come in for participation in a foreclosure,[59] and the rule does not, generally, apply so as to preclude additional parties in case of a new trial.[60]

f. Newly-Discovered Evidence. The lower court, as a general rule, has no power to grant a new trial, in contravention of the mandate, on account of newly-discovered evidence,[61] nor should it thereafter entertain a bill of review on this ground, in the absence of special leave from the appellate court[62] or a reservation to that effect in the mandate.[63]

g. New or Amended Pleadings. After a determination of the merits in the appellate court, amended or supplemental pleadings to avert the effect of the judgment should not be permitted in the lower court.[64] And an appellate judgment or demurrer, which finally disposes of the case, precludes amendment in the lower court;[65] but, if the case is not finally disposed of, amendments are discretionary with the trial court.[66] Amendments may be permitted to cure a defective pleading after vacation, for such defect, of a judgment on the merits,[67] provided such amendment does not essentially change the original cause of action or create a new one.[68] And, where the merits were not involved or were not finally determined, amendments are within the discretion of the lower court as to matters not determined.[69]

h. Matters Involved in New Trial. Where a new trial under the mandate is proper, all matters not expressly or by necessary implication concluded by the appellate decision are, if otherwise fairly within the scope of the original inquiry, within the jurisdiction of the lower court for further inquiry.[70]

5. Issuance of Execution — a. Court of Issuance. From what court the execution of an appellate judgment should issue is a question to be determined by reference to the laws under which the appellate court is constituted. Generally, this power is given to the courts of original jurisdiction,[71] though often it is given to the appellate courts;[72] and, in the absence of a restraining statute, the power to render a judgment implies the power to execute it.[73] But even though the power exists, an appellate court will, generally, remand for execution to the trial court.[74] Execution from the trial court becomes necessary in case of a dismissal of the appeal,[75] a simple affirmance of the appealed judgment,[76]

I. DEFINITION.

In its broadest sense an appearance is the coming into court of either of the parties to an action;[1] but, ordinarily, the word is used particularly to signify the act by which a person against whom suit has been commenced submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court.[2]

II. KINDS.

A. Compulsory, Voluntary, or Optional. An appearance is compulsory, voluntary, or optional, according as it is compelled by plaintiff's action, entered freely, or made by one not obliged to appear, but who applies to do so to save a right.[3]

B. Conditional or De Bene Esse. A conditional appearance is one coupled with conditions as to its becoming general.[4] An appearance de bene esse is one which is to remain an appearance, except in a certain event.[5]

C. General or Special. An appearance is general if it is an absolute submission to the jurisdiction of the court.[6] It is special if made for the sole purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court over the person of defendant,[7] because

III. HOW MADE.

A. When General — 1. GENERALLY. Formerly, an appearance was by actual presence in court, either in person or by attorney, and such appearance still exists in contemplation or fiction of law.[12] A technical or formal appearance is no longer necessary, however,[13] even when particularly prescribed by rule of practice,[14] nor need there be any act done or words spoken in court.[15]

2. GIVING BAIL. At common law the filing of common or special bail amounted to a general appearance,[16] even though defendant and his bail were subsequently

Fed. 565; U. S. v. American Bell Telephone Co., 29 Fed. 17.

The test as to whether an appearance is general or special is the relief asked (Deming Invest. Co. v. Ely, 21 Wash. 102, 57 Pac. 353), and, in determining the character of an appearance, the court will always look to matters of substance rather than to matters of form (Bankers L. Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 59 Nebr. 170, 80 N. W. 484; South Omaha Nat. Bank v. Farmers, etc., Nat. Bank, 45 Nebr. 29, 63 N. W. 128; Reedy v. Howard, 11 S. D. 160, 76 N. W. 304). If the appearance is, in effect, general, the fact that the party making it characterizes it as a special appearance does not alter its effect. Schwab v. Mabley, 47 Mich. 512, 11 N. W. 390.

An appearance will be presumed to have been general, so as to give the court jurisdiction of the person, where the record fails to show that it was special.

4. Notice of Retainer and Appearance.[22] Service of a notice of general retainer or appearance,[23] or filing such notice with the clerk after a complaint has been filed, constitutes a general appearance in actions at law,[24] except where bail is required,[25] but not in equity.[26] Such notice must antedate, or be cotemporaneous with, the service of all other notices and papers.[27]

Acceptance of service of the summons and complaint by an attorney for defendant, and indorsement thereon of appearance in the case, constitute notice of appearance. Cornell University v. Denny Hotel Co., 15 Wash. 433, 46 Pac. 654. Y.) 94, to the effect that, while the usual mode of appearing in chancery is by entering an appearance with one of the clerks of court, it seems that a notice of appearance by defendant's solicitor, given to plaintiff's solicitor without an entry in the clerk's minutes, is sufficient.

27. Steinbach v. Leese, 27 Cal. 295.

Notice may be served after default, if before entry of judgment, in all cases where an assessment of damages is necessary. Abbott v. Smith, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 463.

The indorsement of a notice of appearance forming no part of the essence thereof, the fact that it bears date prior to the date of summons does not invalidate its effect. Steinam v. Strauss, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 48, 44 N. Y. St. 380.

See 3 Cent. Dig. tit. "Appearance," § 27.

An answer to the cross-complaint of a co-defendant constitutes an appearance thereto. Bradley v. Indianapolis Builders, etc., Assoc., 38 Ind. 101.

Filing affidavits opposing a motion for an injunction (Cooley v. Lawrence, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 605, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 176), or controverting grounds on which an attachment issued, where the attachment and action constitute but one proceeding (Duncan v. Wickliffe, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 118), constitute a general appearance.

Filing plea of lis pendens amounts to a general appearance. New Orleans v. Walker, 23 La. Ann. 803.

Where a pleading is rejected as coming too late, such pleading does not constitute an appearance (Jordan v. Bell, 8 Port. (Ala.) 53); but, when defendant appears and pleads, the jurisdiction acquired by such appearance is not lost by the sustaining of a demurrer to the answer (Brooks v. Chatham, 57 Tex. 31).

for costs,[51] to set aside a default,[52] or to strike a petition from the files,[53] constitutes a general appearance.

(II) To Vacate Judgment. A motion to vacate a judgment, based on the sole ground of want of jurisdiction of the person, does not constitute a general appearance;[54] but, if the motion is based on other grounds, either alone[55] or coupled with this,[56] the appearance is general. And the same is true where defendant, after making a motion to vacate, voluntarily consents to the dismissal of the motion.[57]

d. Petition For Removal From State to Federal Court. Where a petition for the removal of a cause from a state to a federal court is limited to that special purpose,[58] or where a plea, based on want of jurisdiction of the person, is first made,[59] there is no general appearance; and, in spite of some cases to the contrary,[60] it may be laid down as the rule that a petition for removal, even though Signing an appeal bond cannot, of itself, be regarded as an appearance by which the person could be made a party to the suit so as to authorize a judgment against him as a principal defendant. This act merely made him a security in the appeal, and as such only could judgment be rendered against him. Hendrick v. Kellogg, 3 Greene (Iowa) 215.

constitutes a general appearance in the intermediate court and confers jurisdiction of the person on that court, whether the court from which the appeal was taken had acquired jurisdiction of the person or not.[71] If the appeal is to a reviewing court it is a general appearance in the sense that, on reversal and remand to the trial court, defendant is in court for the purpose of further proceedings without any further steps to bring him into court,[72] even though the judgment was reversed on the ground that the trial court had not acquired jurisdiction of the person of defendant.[73]

B. When Special. Where, in accordance with his right,[74] a defendant wishes to raise the objection that the court is without jurisdiction over his person, he must, according to the weight of authority, limit his appearance to that single question, or he will be deemed to have waived the objection.[75] Such special

"By the ancient common law a party cited to appear in court could not appear by attorney; but, after a personal appearance, he might, with the consent of the court, be represented by an attorney. Beecher's Case, 8 Coke 58, Cro. Jac. 211; Comyns Dig. tit. Attorney, B, 4. But now, under the sanction of various statutes, any suitor in a civil case may appear by attorney, even without a citation. Comyns Dig. tit. Attorney, B, 5. And though, by the modern common law, a written warrant of attorney was required to be filed, yet the statute of jeofails cured the want of one after verdict; and the universal practice of admitting attorneys without a warrant in writing has long prevailed. less than all,[79] but, if all the defendants have been served with process, a general appearance, purporting to be for all of them, will be intended by the court to be in behalf of all.[80] So, where process has not been served on some of the defendants, it has been held, in a number of cases, that an appearance by an attorney for the defendants generally must be construed as an appearance for all,[81] though it has been held, in other jurisdictions, that such an appearance will be intended by the court to be an appearance only for those defendants who were duly served with process.[82]

B. Party Not Served or Defectively Served. C. Party Against Whom Process Has Not Issued. It has also been said that, where a party has a right to be saved or an interest to be protected, he may enter an appearance, whether process has been issued or not.[89]

D. Person Not Made Party. It has been held that a person interested in the result of litigation, though not made a party, may voluntarily make himself a party thereto by appearing and pleading,[90] though other cases hold that a person who has not been named as a defendant may appear at the hearing only with the consent of all the parties to the action.[91]

V. EFFECT OF APPEARANCE.

A. When General — 1. Generally — a. On Defendant's General Rights. By making a voluntary general appearance defendant places himself under no disabilities under which he would not have labored had he been regularly brought into court by due service of process. He will be entitled to the same time in which to plead,[92] and he may take advantage of defects in the complaint,[93] or may make a default if he chooses to do so.[94] On the other hand, in consequence of a general appearance, he will be entitled to costs on a discontinuance of the action[95] or on a misentry ordered on motion of plaintiff,[96] and the fact that no summons has been served does not authorize plaintiff to refuse to accept service of his answer.[97] If the appearance is by appeal, defendant is entitled to make defense by demurrer or answer on reversal and remand of the cause.[98] In some jurisdictions, moreover, he is entitled to notice of all subsequent proceedings which could, in any respect, affect his rights,[99] though, according to the Notice of application for decree.—Where defendant in equity has appeared by solicitor, notice of application for decree, after order pro confesso, must be given such solicitor notwithstanding a rule providing that, after

b. With Respect to Jurisdiction — (I) Of Subject-Matter. It being a fundamental principle of the law that consent of parties cannot give to a court jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and that the question of want of such jurisdiction may be raised at any stage of a trial, or even on appeal, it follows that a general or voluntary appearance does not give jurisdiction of the subject-matter, whatever may be its effect as regards jurisdiction of the person.[2]

(II) Of Person — (A) In General. A general or voluntary appearance is equivalent to service of process,[3] and confers jurisdiction of the person on the court.

jurisdiction is based on diverse citizenship, is brought in a district in which neither plaintiff nor defendant resides.[19]

(2) CHANGE OF VENUE. Error in granting a change of venue, or in the proceedings to perfect a transfer of the cause after an order therefor, is waived by a general appearance in the court to which the cause is transferred, provided it has general jurisdiction of the subject-matter.[20] Where a cause transferred to another court is remanded to the court originally granting the change, the latter court acquires jurisdiction of defendant by his general appearance;[21] and, if the remand is made on the application of defendant, the case stands for trial in the court originally granting the change, as if defendant had appeared and answered there.[22]

c. With Respect to Irregularities in Pleadings or Other Proceedings — (I) IN COMMENCEMENT OR CONDUCT OF CAUSE. A general appearance waives any objection based on irregularities[23] in the commencement of the action — such as that it was commenced on Sunday;[24] that it was commenced without leave of court, where such leave was necessary;[25] that the manner of commencing suit was authorized only as against foreign corporations;[26] or that the complaint or declaration was not filed in the time allowed by law.[27] So, too, appearance and

A general appearance to which a second change is granted will confer jurisdiction on that court, such appearance being a waiver of any objection on the ground that the statute did not authorize a second change of venue. Schæffner's Estate, 45 Wis. 614. But see Johns v. Johns, 17 Fla. 806, in which the converse of this doctrine seems to be laid down.

Appearance after change of venue.—Where a change of venue from the county has been twice taken by the same party in the same action, and, without objection to its jurisdiction over him, he appears to the action in the court to which the last change was taken and by which it was tried, he cannot afterward question the jurisdiction over him of any of the courts in which the cause was pending, or of the judges presiding therein. pleading by the administrators of a decedent is a waiver of the objection that defendant was dead when the suit was instituted;[28] but an appearance does not waive the objection that suit was prematurely brought.[29] So, too, it waives objections based on a previous discontinuance[30] or continuances[31] of a cause, a failure to give security for costs[32] or the manner in which security was taken,[33] a clerical error in a remanding order,[34] a want of notice of the filing of an amendment to the pleadings[35] or of the taxation of costs in attachment,[36] or to the form of the proceedings.[37]

(II) Defect of Parties. A want of necessary,[38] proper,[39] or formal parties[40] is cured by a general appearance.

(III) In Organization of Court. A general appearance operates as a waiver of objections based on the organization of the court[41] or the disqualification of the judge.[42]

(IV) In Pleadings—(A) Misnomer of Defendant. A general appearance cures a misnomer of defendant in the process or pleading.[43]

(B) Variance Between Pleading and Process. In some cases the rule has been broadly stated that an objection based on a variance between process and pleadings is waived by a general appearance.[44] There are, however, decisions waiver of his right to have the writ dismissed, where plaintiff's failure to file the declaration within ten days before the second term of court, as required by section 17 of the practice act, is not known by defendant until after the entry of his appearance.

holding that, where the cause of action stated in the complaint is of a different nature than that stated in the summons, a general appearance is not a waiver of the irregularity, but that the complaint must be set aside.[45]

(c) Want of Pleadings. A general appearance and a judgment of nil dicit, or a judgment by default, does not cure the failure to file a declaration,[46] though it is otherwise where trial is had on issue joined,[47] under which circumstances it will be presumed that the declaration was dispensed with or lost.[48] When the statute provides that entry of appearance by defendant in the district court shall be equivalent to filing the general issue, such plea will, in case defendant has entered appearance, be deemed to have been filed, and to be a part of the record, not only while the case remains in the district court, but when it is certified to the common pleas division on defendant's claim for a jury trial.[49]

(v) Void Judgment. It has been held that, as to the immediate parties to the action, a general appearance validates a judgment that was theretofore absolutely void for want of jurisdiction.[50]

2. After Dismissal or Revival of Action. After entry of dismissal and reinstatement on the docket, a voluntary appearance constitutes a waiver of the dismissal,[51] and, where an action is dismissed as to some defendants and they obtain leave to answer, they thereby waive its benefits, and the fact that they fail to answer in time does not revive the original order of dismissal.[52] A voluntary appearance after the revival of a suit is a waiver of process.[53]

3. After Special Appearance. In many jurisdictions the rule is well settled that, where a defendant appears specially, any error of the court in deciding adversely to him is waived by a subsequent general appearance;[54] though, in

45. Tuttle v. Smith, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 329, 14 How. Pr. (N. 62. In Iowa, by statute [Iowa Code, § 3541, subsec. 3], the appearance of a defendant, although special, gives to the court jurisdiction of his person. Teller v. Equitable Mut. L. In Kentucky, by a recent enactment which has been held constitutional, special entry of appearance, by a defendant corporation, to object to the jurisdiction on the ground of insufficiency of the sheriff's return, is an appearance for all purposes. Maysville, etc., R. Co. v. Ball, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1693, 56 S. W. 188.

In Texas, by a statute [Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 1243], which has been held to be not unconstitutional as being within the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment (York v. Texas, 137 U. S. 15, 11 S. Ct. 9, 34 L. ed. 604), a special appearance of defendant, to object to citation or service thereof, has the effect of a general appearance to the succeeding term of the court, so as to confer jurisdiction over the person of defendant (Pace v. Potter, 85 Tex. 473, 22 S. W. 300; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Hanna, 81 Tex. 487, 17 S. W. 35; Kauffman v. Wooters, 79 Tex. 205, 13 S. W. 549; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Whitley, 77 Tex. 126, 13 S. W. 869]), whether the motion is sustained or overruled (Central, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 68 Tex. 49, 3 S. W. 457). Before the enactment of this statute an appearance for the sole purpose of challenging the court's jurisdiction of the person of defendant did not operate to submit the party to the jurisdiction obtained (Robinson v. Schmidt, 48 Tex. 13; Hagood v. Dial, 43 Tex. 625; De Witt v. Monroe, 20 Tex. 289; Raquet v. Nixon, Dall. (Tex.) 386); and the statute applies only to actions brought in the state courts, and is not binding on the federal court sitting in that state (Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Gonzales, 151 U. S. 496, 14 S. Ct. 401, court jurisdiction of the person,[63] nor waive objections to the jurisdiction of the person on other grounds not mentioned.[64] The general rule applies even though the objections were made for the first time on motion to set aside a judgment rendered by default,[65] or on motion in arrest of such judgment.[66]

b. On Default Judgment. Where a judgment by default is rendered which is void for want of jurisdiction of the person of defendant, his appearance to set it aside, on the sole ground of want of jurisdiction, does not validate such void judgment.[67]

c. On Right to Decision on Merits. A special appearance necessarily precludes the party entering it from obtaining any decision on the merits of the controversy.[68]

2. After General Appearance. Where defendant has entered a general appearance it has been held that he cannot thereafter make a special appearance, no matter by what act the general appearance may have been made,[69] and this

VI. WITHDRAWAL OF APPEARANCE.

A. In General. Whether or not an appearance shall be withdrawn is within the discretion of the court,[71] which should, in all cases, except for good cause shown, refuse to allow a withdrawal.[72] As a general rule, a withdrawal should be allowed when the appearance was unauthorized[73] or in case it was procured by Imposing conditions.— If defendant has lost no rights by the mere unauthorized appearance of an attorney, conditions may be imposed on granting leave to him to withdraw the notice of appearance. Gall v. Funkenstein, 10 N. Y. St. 331.

Application by only one defendant.—A joint and several answer, filed for two persons by a solicitor having authority from one only, will not be ordered to be taken off the file fraud,[74] and a non-resident defendant should be permitted to withdraw his appearance where plaintiff is permitted to amend so as to state an entirely new cause of action.[75]

B. Application For, and Leave to, Withdraw. To authorize the withdrawal of an appearance, special application must be made,[76] and leave of court obtained.[77]

C. Effect of Withdrawal — 1. By Attorney. The withdrawal of an appearance by counsel, for himself, does not amount to a withdrawal of appearance for defendant,[78] nor does it withdraw any pleading which the attorney had filed in defendant's behalf.[79]

2. By Defendant. The withdrawal of an appearance by defendant leaves the case as if there had been no appearance,[80] and, if made after demurring[81] or on the application of one party, in the absence of the other. Wiggins v. Peppin, 2 Beav. 403, 3 Jur. 721, 17 Eng. Ch. 403.

(U. S.) 355, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,327.

The withdrawal of a plea to the merits does not operate as a withdrawal of the appearance (Grigg v. Gilmer, 54 Ala. 425; Kennedy v. Young, 25 Ala. 563; Dart v. Hercules, 34 Ill. 395; Whitehead v. Fost, 2 Ohio Dec. Bank, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 545, 21 L. ed. 685).

The withdrawal of a demurrer does not withdraw appearance. Stevens v. Harris, 99 Mich. 230, 58 N. W. 230.

Failure to withdraw when leave obtained. — Where a defendant waives defects by appearing in a cause and moving to rule plaintiff to file a more specific bill of particulars, and demurring to the declaration, the subsequent granting of leave to withdraw the appearance, which is not done, will not abrogate the waiver. Withdrawal without prejudice to plaintiff. — Where the withdrawal of an appearance is allowed on the condition that it should be without prejudice to the position of the plaintiff, this leaves plaintiff at liberty to enter a personal judgment against defendant, as upon default after appearance. Withdrawal after pleading to merits and agreeing to judgment.—Where a defendant withdraws, after pleading to the merits and agreeing to a judgment, his withdrawal is without effect, and merely means that he does not wish to incur further costs. Habich v. Folger, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 22 L. ed. 307.

Withdrawal of part of defendants.— If an attorney, who appears for a part only of several defendants, afterward inadvertently files an answer for all, and, when he discovers his mistake, obtains an order allowing him to withdraw his answer and substitute a new one limited to the defendants for whom he intended to answer, the court will acquire jurisdiction only of those defendants for whom he finally appears. Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342.

81. Gunel v. Cue, 72 Ind. 34.

Withdrawal of appearance after overruling of demurrer.— The fact that a demurrer by pleading,[82] he thereby withdraws his demurrer, plea, or answer, and judgment by default may be entered against defendant, if he takes no further steps, and provided he has been served with process,[83] without notice of application for such judgment to defendant.[84]

D. Remedy For Wrongful Allowance of Withdrawal. Where, over plaintiff's objections, the court wrongfully permits defendant to withdraw and disclaim the defense, his remedy is by appeal from the judgment rendered in the cause.[85]

VII. UNAUTHORIZED APPEARANCE.

A. Presumption as to Authority. An attorney who has entered an appearance is always presumed to have authority to do so until the contrary is shown.[86]

B. Rights of Defendant Arising Out of Unauthorized Appearance in His Behalf — 1. In General. In England it was first laid down that, when an attorney takes it upon himself to appear, the court looks no further, but proceeds as if the attorney had sufficient authority, and leaves the party to his action defendant to the complaint is overruled, and that he then withdraws his appearance and makes default without reserving any exception to the decision upon the demurrer, will not estop him from questioning the sufficiency of the complaint in the supreme court, where the case stands as if no demurrer had been filed. Where there was not due service of process, it is erroneous to render a judgment against defendant on default. Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342; McArthur v. Leffler, 110 Ind. 526, 10 N. E. 81; Young v. Dickey, 63 Ind. 31; Lodge v. State Bank, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 557; Michew v. McCoy, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 501. But, where plaintiff withdrew appearance after the filing of a cross-complaint, a default judgment against him on the cross-complaint was not void, on the ground that he had not been summoned, since no summons is necessary on the cross-complaint, and the dismissal of the complaint and withdrawal of plaintiff's appearance does not carry the cross-complaint with it. Judd v. Gray, 156 Ind. 278, 59 N. E. 849.

Presumption as to service of process.— Where, after withdrawal of an appearance, judgment by default is rendered against defendant and the judgment is collaterally attacked in another action, it will be presumed, in support of the assumption, that defendant was duly served with process. against him;[87] but this rule was soon modified to the extent of holding that, if the attorney was insolvent, the judgment might be set aside;[88] and that it had no application where defendant was in custody by reason of an unauthorized act of an attorney, or where plaintiff or his attorney was a party to the wrong.[89] The present rule, which is, substantially, the law in Canada,[90] seems to be that, if process has been served and plaintiff be innocent of any fraud or collusion and the attorney is solvent, the party for whom the attorney appeared is confined to his remedy against the latter,[91] but that, if no process has been served and judgment is rendered on an unauthorized appearance, the judgment should be set aside.[92] In the United States some cases have followed the first English decision upon the subject,[93] while others have held that redress must be sought from the attorney, unless he is insolvent and unable to respond in damages, or unless there is fraud or collusion between him and plaintiff[94] — at least, where defendant has been served with process.[95] There are many other decisions, however, which either expressly or by necessary implication lay down the doctrine, without qualification, that a defendant against whom a judgment has been rendered on an unauthorized appearance may be relieved against it.[96]

Many reasons may be adduced against the earlier rules making the solvency or insolvency of the attorney an important element in determining whether or not defendant was entitled to be relieved against the judgment. Probably the strongest reason is that the rule is in derogation of the doctrine that a man does nothing when he acts neither in person nor by agent, or attorney duly authorized. Allen v. Stone, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 547; Bean v. Mather, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 440. It obliges a person to be bound by the unauthorized act of a mere stranger. Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20 Iowa 161, 89 Am. Dec. 520. It relieves the other party of a duty which in reason belongs to him — namely, to serve his process and to see, at his peril, that his adversary is in court, and it carries out its unsoundness by calling the wrong party to look to the attorney. Dillon, J., in Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20 Iowa 161, 89 Am. Dec. 520. relief must be sought in a direct application to the court by a motion in the action,[1] except, perhaps, under special circumstances.[2]

(II) Against Non-Residents. In an action on a domestic judgment against non-residents, it may be shown that such judgment was rendered on an unauthorized appearance for defendant, and without service of process.[3] Defendant is not, however, restricted to relief by a collateral attack of this character, but may move to open the judgment and be allowed to plead,[4] or the unauthorized appearance may be set aside.[5]

b. In Case of Foreign Judgment. Whatever the conflict of authority with respect to domestic judgments, the decisions are nearly unanimous to the effect that, in an action on a foreign judgment, it may be shown that defendant's appearance was not authorized, whether the action be brought in a state court on a judgment rendered in the court of another state,[6] or in a federal court on a judg-

Appeal or error.—A party cannot, ordinarily, by appeal or writ of error negative the presumption of authority in the attorney, and, as this is necessary to entitle him to relief from a judgment entered on the appearance of an unauthorized attorney, he cannot obtain relief by this method. There are other decisions holding that the remedies by motion in the original action and by bill in equity are concurrent (Du Bois v. Clark, 12 Colo. App. 22, 55 Pac. 750; Truett v. Wainwright, 9 Ill. 411; Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20 Iowa 161, 89 Am. Dec. 520); and, under the civil law procedure, it is similarly held that an action will lie to set aside the judgment (Ridge v. Alter, 14 La. Ann. 866; Marvel v. Manouvrier, 14 La. Ann. 3, 74 Am. Dec. 424).

Bill to enjoin enforcement of judgment.— In some cases it has been held that a bill in equity will lie to enjoin the enforcement of the judgment. 2. Thus, where the question of the unauthorized appearance is complicated with fraud or the rights of the purchasers, or the circumstances are such that the court can see that the right to, or measure of, relief cannot properly be determined on motion, having regard to all interests affected, resort may be had to a bill in equity, or, in states where the code practice prevails, to an equitable action. In support of this view it was said that, where defendant has not been within the jurisdiction of the court, it would not be just to compel him to come under that jurisdiction and establish his defense to the action in order to claim relief from a judgment obtained without notice, and, therefore, the relief granted here must be an absolute immunity from the judgment. ment rendered by a federal court sitting in another district[7] or on a judgment rendered by a state court of another state.[8]

3. EFFECT OF LACHES. Whatever may be the form of relief to which defendant is entitled, he must move promptly to obtain it, and, if he is guilty of gross laches, he loses all right thereto.[9] A delay in making application to vacate, so long as the parties have no notice of the judgment or of the action, will not bar, however, their right to have the judgment vacated,[10] even though others have taken title, innocently relying on the judgment.[11]

4. WHAT MUST BE SHOWN TO AUTHORIZE RELIEF. To obtain relief against a judgment entered on an unauthorized appearance as attorney, it is, of course, necessary to show clearly that the attorney was without authority to appear,[12] and it has also been held that defendant must show a meritorious defense.[13]

The reason assigned for this distinction between domestic and foreign judgments is "that in the case of a foreign judgment it is impossible, or at least unreasonable, to require the defendant to go to the courts of the state which rendered it and attack it directly by a hill or motion; hence, he is permitted to plead the want of authority in the attorney, defensively and collaterally." No such restriction, it seems, is made in this case, if defendant is without the jurisdiction of the court.

I. DEFINITION.

The word "apprentice" is derived from the French word apprendre, and signifies an "apprehender" or "learner."[1] An apprentice is defined to be a person, usually a minor, bound, in due form of law, to a master to learn from him his art, trade, or business, and to serve him during the time of the apprenticeship.[2]

II. WHO MAY BE APPRENTICED.

A. Infants — 1. In General. Besides the general power of a parent to bind his infant child as an apprentice, an infant orphan whose estate is insufficient for his support,[3] or an infant pauper,[4] whether an orphan or not,[5] may be apprenticed by the overseers of the poor or other similar officers.

2. Whose Parents Fail or Are Unable to Provide. In some cases it has been held that the mere fact that a parent neglects to provide properly for his children

A child who has no legal settlement in the district or county cannot be bound out as an apprentice by the overseers of the poor or other county officers, such settlement being essential to jurisdiction. will not give the authorities power to bind them out against the parent's wishes;[6] but the statutes of several states have been construed to mean that wherever the parents are unable to provide for their children, or are bringing them up in idle and immoral habits, the courts may apprentice them.[7] In other cases it has been held that unless the parents of a child are actually chargeable to the town or county the overseers of the poor have no right to bind him out.[8]

B. Adults. One who has arrived at full age may bind himself[9] as an apprentice, and will, as such, be subject to the provisions of law in relation to apprentices.[10]

III. WHO MAY BIND APPRENTICES.

A. Father — 1. IN GENERAL. Both at common law and under the statutes of the various states a father has a right, with the assent of the child,[11] to bind the latter as an apprentice until he shall reach the age of twenty-one years.[12]

2. OF ILLEGITIMATE CHILD. The father of an illegitimate child has no control over him, and consequently cannot bind him as an apprentice, or give his consent to the child's being bound by the court.[13]

B. Mother. Generally, if the father is living, a mother cannot bind out her

Where a person was, on his own application, relieved by overseers, without a previous order for that purpose, this was held in New York to be sufficient to authorize the overseers of the poor to bind out the children of such person as poor apprentices, the want of the order only coming in question on the settlement of the overseers' account, and not invalidating the indentures of apprenticeship — at least so far as to prevent the master from using them as a defense in an action to recover the value of the services of an apprentice after the indentures are executed. Schermerhorn v. Hull, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 270.

9. A person over age cannot be bound as an apprentice against his will (Rex v. Ripon, 9 East 295), and hence, where a woman attains her majority at the age of eighteen, an indenture of apprenticeship made after she has passed that age is inoperative, null, and void (McClintock v. Chamberlin, Wright (Ohio) 547).

Statutes strictly construed.— The power of taking children from their parents, families, and homes and binding them to strangers as servants is high and arbitrary, if not dangerous. It should be exercised only in cases of clear necessity, where all the circumstances concur to justify and require so extraordinary an interposition in the domestic relations of private families. Nothing is to be presumed in aid of it, but everything which is required for its support must be shown affirmatively.

2. Bond to Prevent Binding Out. Where the statute provides that certain persons may enter into a bond for the maintenance and education of a child brought before the court for the purpose of being bound out as an apprentice, it is a matter within the sound discretion of the court whether to accept such bond or not.[21]

E. Power of Infant to Bind Himself. In some jurisdictions it is held that an infant may bind himself as an apprentice, since it is for his benefit;[22] while in others this power is denied on the general ground of the inability of infants to make binding contracts.[23]

F. Effect of Action by Unauthorized Persons. It has been held that where a stranger having no authority over a minor undertakes to bind him as an apprentice, and covenants for his faithful services, the contract is not valid at common law as to either of the parties.[24]

IV. Who May Take Apprentices.

Any person sui juris[25] may take an apprentice. But where the minor is bound out under a statute, the officers should inquire into the fitness of the master to have charge of the education, both moral and intellectual, of the apprentice; and where an infant has been bound to an improper person the courts will interfere and cancel the indenture.[26]

Corporation.—An apprentice may be bound to a corporation. Burnley Equitable Co-operative, etc., Soc. v. Casson, [1891] 1 Q. B. 75. See also 25 Ir. L. T. 157.

Religious societies.—Where the practices of a religious society do not infringe upon the municipal law, a court, whatever may be its own views on the principles and supposed practices of that society, has no right to act upon them in administering justice. Consequently, indentures binding an infant to one of the trustees of the Shaker Society have been upheld. People v. Gates, 43 N. Y. 40; Fowler v. Hollenbeck, 9 Barb. (N. V. PROCEEDINGS FOR APPRENTICING.

A. In General. Statutes providing for the execution of indentures of apprenticeship which shall be obligatory upon the infant are to be strictly construed. They are not merely directory, but are peremptory and absolute in their requirements.[27]

B. Notice to Parent or Guardian and Infant. Where a court is given power to bind out infant poor persons, notice should always be given to the parent or guardian, and usually to the infant himself,[28] and, as a general rule, the latter should be present in the court during the proceedings.[29]

C. Order of Court — 1. CONTENTS. The order of a court apprenticing a child should set forth all the facts required by law to give it jurisdiction.[30]

2. EFFECT. The order of the court is not of itself sufficient to bind an apprentice unless an indenture is actually executed;[31] but a strict and minute compliance with the order of the court as to indenting an apprentice is not necessary.[32]

ness may, under the Pennsylvania act of Sept. 29, 1770, make a valid contract of apprenticeship by which boys are to be taught and employed in the business. O'Connor v. Simonson, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 576.

Two or more masters.— It is against the policy of the law and inconsistent with the relationship that should subsist between master and apprentice that there should be several masters who are not partners, and an indenture by which an apprentice is bound to serve a certain person for a specified period, and another for the remainder of his term, is invalid. Thorpe v. Rankin, 19 N. J. L. 36, 38 Am. Dec. 531. Compare Popham v. Jones, 13 C. B. 225, 76 E. C. L. 225; and see Rex v. Louth. 8 B. & C. 247, 2 M. & R. 273, 15 E. C. L. 129, in which it was held that an indenture by which an apprentice was bound for seven years, to serve one person for the first four years, and his father for the last three, was valid.

Partners.— An indenture, signed, in the prosecution of the firm's business, in the firm-name by only one of the partners, and repeatedly recognized and confirmed by all the partners, is valid, and is, at least, binding on such partner for the proper performance of the covenants contained therein. Com. v. Linker, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 455. But in Taylor's Case, 1 Browne (Pa.) 73, appendix, it was held that an indenture of apprenticeship, executed on behalf of a firm by one partner without an express power of attorney from his copartner, was void.

J., said that, although he held himself bound by the case of Rex v. Little Bolton, Cald. Cas. 367, if the question were one of first impression he would be inclined to hold that, if the relation of master and apprentice were in fact created by a contract of service between the parties, it would be sufficient to establish that relation even though the very words "master and apprentice" were not used. And again in Rex v. Burbach, 1 M. & S. 370, the same learned justice cast doubts upon the correctness of the rules laid down in Rex v. Little Bolton. Cald. Cas. 367.

D. Review. The right of a higher court to review the action of a lower court or officers in an apprenticeship case depends upon the constitutions and statutes of the various states. Where no enabling provision exists it would seem that the higher courts should not interfere with the discretion vested in the lower courts or public officers.[33]

VI. INDENTURE OR OTHER CONTRACT.

A. Form[34] and Validity — 1. IN GENERAL. In order to constitute a valid contract of apprenticeship there must be a deed,[35] duly signed,[36] sealed,[37] and executed by all the parties thereto.[38] Where there is no indenture, but only a binding by parol, the relation of master and apprentice does not exist.[39] The indenture should substantially comply with statutes relating thereto;[40] but, even where the statute declares an indenture void if not made in conformity with its provisions, Presumption of compliance.— In Smith v. Elliot, 4 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 710, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,040, it was held not necessary to state in the indenture that the apprentice was present in court, since this would be presumed unless the contrary appeared.

it has been held that such provision should be construed to mean voidable only.[41]

2. USE OF WORD "APPRENTICE." The use of the word "apprentice" is not necessary to the formation of a contract of apprenticeship.[42]

3. STATEMENT OF PREMIUM PAID. The premium given by public officers upon the binding out of a poor apprentice need not be stated in the indenture.[43]

4. CONSENT, EXECUTION, AND APPROVAL. Statutory provisions as to the consent of persons interested,[44] the execution of the indentures by the proper parties,[45] and their approval by the proper court or officers,[46] are mandatory, and must be strictly pursued. When so required, such consent must appear in the indenture[47] or in a separate certificate;[48] but, unless otherwise required by statute, it is sufficient if the assent of the parent or guardian is shown by his signing the indentures.[49]

5. PROVISIONS FOR BENEFIT OF APPRENTICE — a. In General. benefit of the apprentice which are required by the general law of the state in the case of white apprentices, was held to be void.[51]

b. Relating to Education — (I) Generally. Unless it appears that the education of the apprentice has been sufficiently attended to before the apprenticing,[52] an indenture which does not contain a covenant to educate the apprentice is void as against the child,[53] but not as against the master;[54] and where the statute provides that the master shall cause the apprentice to be instructed in certain branches of learning the master should covenant in the statutory language so to do.[55]

(II) In Art, Trade, or Business. Although not required by statute,[56] the indenture should contain a covenant, on the part of the master, to teach the apprentice some art or business,[57] which should be the one designated by the order of the court when there is an order.[58]

c. Relating to Support. An indenture which does not provide for the support of the minor during the whole time which he has to serve is fatally defective.[59]

B. Construction and Effect — 1. In General — a. What Law Governs — (I) In General. As in other cases of contract relating to the person, contracts of apprenticeship are to be construed according to the lex loci contractus; but if, from the terms or nature of the instrument, it appears that it is to be executed in another jurisdiction, then the lex loci contractus becomes immaterial, and its validity must be tested according to the lex loci solutionis.[60]

(II) Extraterritorial Effect of Indenture. Where a master removes his apprentice to another jurisdiction, the courts of the latter jurisdiction will not enforce the indenture.[61] If, however, a state enacts that indentures shall be valid

Covenant to pay penalty for failure unnecessary.— Where the statute provides a penalty in case the master fails to teach the apprentice to read and write, it is not essential to a recovery of the penalty by the apprentice that the indenture should stipulate for the payment of such penalty. if certain specified stipulations are inserted, when entered into in another state to be performed within the jurisdiction of the former, an indenture made in accordance with the statutes of the state where made, and also in compliance with the requirements of the statutes of the state wherein it is to be performed, is valid.[62]

b. Conclusiveness of Recitals — (I) Upon Parties. As in case of other sealed instruments, an adult party signing an indenture is concluded by the recitals contained therein;[63] but the apprentice himself is not estopped from showing the falsity thereof.[64]

(II) Upon Third Persons. A person not connected with the indenture of apprenticeship cannot take advantage of any defects or omissions therein;[65] but, on the other hand, third persons are not concluded by recitals contained in the articles.[66]

2. When Made by Infant. Where an infant cannot make a binding contract of apprenticeship,[67] he may avoid such a contract either during his minority or on becoming of age;[68] but where an infant is allowed to enter into a contract of apprenticeship as being for his benefit,[69] he will not be permitted to avoid it unless the avoidance also is clearly shown to be for his benefit.[70]

Recital of age only prima facie evidence.— An indenture of apprenticeship reciting the age of the apprentice is not conclusive, and, notwithstanding a statute declares that it shall be taken to be his true age, it is only prima facie evidence, and his true age may be shown by extrinsic testimony. VII. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES.

A. In General — 1. Dependent on Terms of Indenture. The rights and liabilities of the parties to an indenture of apprenticeship are defined by the terms of the covenants contained therein, and, as a rule, a party is only liable upon his personal covenants.[71]

2. Construction of Covenants — a. In General. No particular form of words is prescribed by law as necessary to make a covenant in an indenture of apprenticeship, but the court will be governed by what appears to be the intent of the parties.[72]

b. Mutual and Independent. The covenants in an indenture of apprenticeship are mutual and independent, entitling each party to a remedy for a breach of them.[73]

c. Limitation of Liability. Where the parties bind themselves to the fulfilment of the covenants so far as it may be in their power, such a covenant will be construed to limit their obligations to their legal ability.[74]

d. Place of Performance. A contract of apprenticeship is to be performed at the place where the master's business is carried on and the parties reside at the date of the indenture.[75]

e. Proviso as to Health of Apprentice. A proviso attached to the covenants of a master, to the effect that the minor shall continue to be a healthy boy and to be a faithful servant during his minority, will be construed to apply to all the covenants of the master, and not merely to that particular one to which it is attached.[76]

f. Time For Election Under Alternative Covenants. Where a master covenants to pay his apprentice a sum of money or teach him to read and write, he has until the expiration of the term to make an election.[77]

3. Of Master — a. In General — (i) Custody and Control of Apprentice. A master is entitled to the custody and control of his apprentice[78] and may retake him, if a runaway, wherever found;[79] and, in a proper case, the courts will interfere and restore an absconding apprentice to the custody of his master.[80] It is the duty of the master at all times to look to the apprentice's deportment, and restrain him from vicious courses,[81] and he may use moderate correction in case of misconduct on the apprentice's part;[82] but his power of chastisement cannot be delegated,[83] is limited to cases of misconduct,[84] and in no event should he exercise it in a wanton and cruel manner.[85]

(ii) Injury to Apprentice by Third Person. A master may maintain an action, per quod servitium amisit, for injuries to his apprentice, where they cause disability, either partial or total.[86]

(iii) Instruction in Art, Trade, or Business. A master is bound to give his apprentice specific instructions, and it is not sufficient merely to keep him at work.[87] However, the master is not bound in every event to compel the apprentice to learn his trade, but only to act toward him in the matter of coercion as an ordinarily prudent and sensible parent would act toward his own child.[88]

(iv) Medical Attendance. From the very nature of the relation between master and apprentice, the former is bound to pay for the care of, and medical attendance on, his apprentice during illness;[89] but it has been held that where the master did not call in the physician, and the professional treatment was not in the master's own house, the latter, in the absence of a special agreement, is not liable.[90]

(v) Religious Instruction. A covenant to give an apprentice religious instruction is complied with where the master sends the apprentice to the church where he and his family worship, and puts him under the Sabbath-school instruction of the same denomination.[91]

(vi) Removal of Master From Jurisdiction. The removal of a master from the jurisdiction in which a minor has been apprenticed to him is a breach of

4. Of Apprentice — a. In General. The fact that the minor is not named in an indenture as a party thereto, or that it contains no covenant on his part, will not relieve him from liability under the indenture, where he gave his consent, evidenced by signing and sealing the instrument.[1]

b. Additional Services. No services can be required of the apprentice other than those expressly or impliedly contracted for;[2] but it has been held that he cannot recover from his master for extra work done by him during the term of his apprenticeship, even though there has been an express promise by the master to pay for it.[3]

c. Contempt of Court. An apprentice may be punished as for contempt in case of his failure to obey an order of court.[4]

d. Making Up Lost Time. An apprentice will be compelled, after the expiration of his term of service, to serve the number of days lost by reason of his absence without his master's consent.[5]

5. Of Parent. A parent who binds himself is liable upon the indenture by reason of his signature and seal, although there are no express words of covenant binding him;[6] but where it clearly appears that the parent has become a party to the indenture merely for the purpose of giving his consent to the apprenticeship, as required by statute, he is not liable for any breach of covenant on the part of the infant.[7]

6. Of Guardian. So, too, persons in loco parentis, who sign the indenture merely to show their consent, will not be held liable for the failure of the apprentice to perform the stipulated services;[8] but where they personally covenant that the latter shall perform the stipulated services, they will be liable in case of a breach of covenant by the apprentice.[9]

2. When Executed by Public Officer. Where, under statutory authority, an apprentice is bound out by public officials, defects in the proceedings are usually available to neither the master, the apprentice, nor third persons;[11] but where the indenture is void it is of binding force upon no one.[12]

3. Where Contract Is Performed — a. By Apprentice. Where an apprentice performs the stipulated services under a defective indenture, the master is liable on his covenants contained therein.[13]

b. By Master.[14] Where an apprentice, serving under a voidable contract, terminates the contract by leaving the service without cause a long time before the end of the term, the master may recover a reasonable compensation for the instruction given.[15]

VIII. ASSIGNMENT OF APPRENTICES.

A. In General. The relation of master and apprentice being one of personal trust and confidence, it has been generally held, in the absence of statutory authority therefor, that the master cannot assign his apprentice and transfer the relation to another;[16] and this doctrine is much more stringently enforced where the assignment is to a person in another trade or business than that of the master.[17]

B. Who May Assign. Where an assignment is allowed only he who has the right to the services of the apprentice has power to assign those services.[18]

18. Com. v. King, 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 109, holding that an indenture binding an apprentice to a man, his heirs, and assigns, without naming executors, cannot be assigned by executors.

C. Consent to Assignment — 1. Of Infant. Where an infant's consent is required to indentures of apprenticeship,[19] a like consent is requisite to an assignment of the indenture by the master to another,[20] but the consent of an apprentice bound out by the overseers of the poor is not necessary.[21]

2. Of Parent or Guardian. In Pennsylvania no arrangement or contract between a master and his apprentice, by which the apprentice's services are assigned to another, is valid unless ratified in writing by the consent of the parent or person standing in loco parentis.[22]

D. Validity — 1. In General. Where an assignment of the services of an apprentice is not against public policy,[23] and the formalities required by statutes on the subject are observed, the validity of the assignment cannot be impeached.[24] And even though an indenture may not be assignable, yet an assignment, as between the old and new master, is valid as a covenant for the services of the apprentice; and if the apprentice serves the new master there is no failure of the consideration of the assignment.[25]

2. Where Indenture Was Void. If the indentures are themselves void in their inception, an assignment of them, otherwise valid, is also void unless accompanied by all the formalities essential to the validity of indentures of apprenticeship.[26]

IX. Enticing Away and Harboring Apprentices.

Right of apprentice to recover from assignee.—Where indentures of apprenticeship were assigned, with the consent of the apprentice, who voluntarily continued thereafter to live with, and work for, the assignee during the term of the apprenticeship, it was held that this must be deemed a continuance of the apprenticeship with the apprentice's own consent, and that he could not recover of the assignee for his services during that time, on an implied assumpsit. 27. Where a contract of apprenticeship is voidable at the election of the apprentice, no action will lie in favor of the master against a or upon implied contract,[28] and, under some statutes, will subject him to criminal responsibility.[29]

B. Defendant's Knowledge of Relation. In an action or criminal prosecution for harboring an apprentice, knowledge of the apprenticeship by defendant is an indispensable requisite to recovery or conviction;[30] but a master may sue and recover against any one who employs his apprentice, either with or without knowledge of the fact that the employee has been indented.[31]

C. Defenses — 1. Abandonment of Rights — (I) In General. Where the master has abandoned any of his rights, or has been wanting in due and reasonable exertions and diligence to reclaim the apprentice, or has knowingly suffered the apprentice to make and perform contracts for service to another, he is not entitled to recover from the employer for the services rendered.[32]

(II) Refusal to Receive Back Absconding Apprentice. If a master whose apprentice has left him wrongfully announces that he will not receive him again, others may lawfully employ him, though specifically forbidden by the master to harbor him.[33]

2. Illegality of Indentures. In order to make one responsible for enticing away or harboring an apprentice, the apprenticeship must have been entered into in accordance with the law.[34]

D. Declaration. A declaration in an action for wrongfully harboring an apprentice should allege the tenor or substance and legal effect of the indenture of apprenticeship.[35] plaintiff will be entitled to recover the value of the services lost up to the time of the commencement of the suit, the reasonable expenses necessarily incurred in getting said services back again, and damages for loss of time, trouble, and injury sustained until the commencement of the suit, in consequence of the enticing away of his apprentice.[36]

X. ACTIONS FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

A. Form of Remedy. The same remedies lie in the case of broken covenants of indenture as in other cases of breach of contract,[37] and where statutes have been enacted providing special remedies, these, generally, are merely cumulative, and do not preclude recourse to the ordinary forms of action.[38]

B. Parties. As a rule, only those who are parties to the covenants and who are sui juris should sue or be sued,[39] though it seems that, upon reaching his majority, an infant may sue in his own name for a breach of covenant,[40] and in some cases it has been held that, where the broken covenant is for his benefit, suit may be brought in his name notwithstanding his infancy.[41]

C. When Right of Action Accrues. Actions for breach of covenants of indenture may be brought immediately upon the breach, without waiting for the expiration of the term.[42]

D. Defenses — 1. To Actions by Master — a. Illegality of Service Required. That a service required of an apprentice by his master is illegal constitutes a good defense to an action by the master for the failure of the apprentice to perform the service.[43]

b. Illness. The illness of an apprentice, whereby he is incapacitated from per-(Va.) 183); but where the binding by the overseers is defective as a statutory deed, owing to their failure to obtain the required order of court, the action can only be maintained in the name of the overseers (Bullock v. Sebrell, 6 Leigh (Va.) 560).

42. Stokes v. Hatcher, 4 N. J. L. 95.

Time in which instruction should be given. — A master has the whole term of the apprenticeship in which to perform his stipulation to teach the apprentice, and it has been held that if he should die without performing it, but so long before the expiration of the term as to leave time for the performance had he lived, no action will lie for breach of the covenant to teach. Goodbread v. Wells, 19 N. C. 476.

forming the services stipulated for in the indenture, is a valid defense to an action by the master for breach of covenant.[44]

c. Ill Treatment. Where an apprentice leaves his master because of cruel and inhuman treatment, the master cannot recover on a covenant that the apprentice shall serve him faithfully.[45]

d. Infancy. Infancy is a good plea in bar to an action of covenant on indentures of apprenticeship.[46]

e. Performance of Defective Agreement. The performance by the apprentice, whether partial or complete, of defective agreements of apprenticeship is a good defense to an action by the master either for the taking away of the apprentice, or for his board, lodging, and instruction during the apprentice's stay with him.[47]

f. Relinquishment of Trade or Business. The relinquishment by a master, during the continuance of the term, of the trade or business to which an apprentice has been indented is a good defense to an action brought by the master against the father of the apprentice for a desertion of his services by the latter.[48]

g. Removal of Master From State. It is a good defense to an action by the master on the covenants in an indenture of apprenticeship that he has left the state, with intent to remain out of its jurisdiction, and has continued absent to the time of the bringing of the action.[49]

2. To Actions Against Master — a. Breach of Indenture by Apprentice. The covenants in an indenture of apprenticeship are independent covenants,[50] and, consequently, acts of misconduct on the part of the apprentice are no answer to an action brought for a breach of the master's covenant to support[51] or to instruct and maintain[52] the apprentice during the term agreed upon in the indenture.

b. Discharge in Bankruptcy. The duties of a master toward his apprentice, being for the most part of a purely personal nature, are unaffected by a discharge in bankruptcy.[53]

c. Evasion of Internal Revenue Law. Splitting of the consideration of an indenture so as to avoid stamp duties is no defense to an action for a breach of covenant.[54]

d. Incapacity of Apprentice — (i) To Learn Trade. If an apprentice is incapable of learning the trade or mystery which the master has covenanted to teach him, the master is excused from his covenant;[55] but it has been held that Burden of proof.— Where a master, sued upon his covenants, defends upon the ground of the apprentice's inability to learn, the burden of proving the defense rests upon him. Insufficient evidence.— In an action for breach of a covenant to teach an apprentice a trade it is not competent for defendant to where the failure to learn arises, not from inability, but from obstinacy and unwillingness, the master is not excused.[56]

(II) To Acquire Education. Similarly, where the apprentice is mentally incapable of acquiring the education covenanted for, the master is not liable upon his covenant to teach him, if he has used means appropriate to that end.[57]

e. Settlement With Overseers. Courts of law being alone authorized to determine the amount of damages which a minor, apprenticed by the overseers of the poor, is entitled to recover for ill treatment suffered at the hands of the master, an agreement between the overseers and master upon an amount, and a payment made to them, will not bar a claim against the master by the apprentice when he becomes of age.[58]

f. Voluntary Labor. The voluntary performance of services by a minor, under a voidable indenture, will bar an action by him against his master for the value of such services.[59]

E. Pleading and Evidence. In actions for breach of covenant upon indentures of apprenticeship all matters of defense relied upon must be averred and proved.[60]

F. Damages — 1. In General. In an action predicated upon the covenants of an indenture, brought before the term of apprenticeship has expired, damages are recoverable only to the date of the writ.[61]

Special plea — Effect of general verdict. — Where, in an action by an apprentice against his master, sufficient breaches are alleged, a discharge pleaded as to part, issue taken as to the residue, and there is a general verdict for plaintiff it will be presumed that the verdict is for such breaches only as are not covered by the special plea. Evidence in mitigation of damages. — In an action by an apprentice against his master for the latter's failure to use, during the term of apprenticeship, his utmost endeavors to instruct the apprentice in the trade to which he had been indentured, it may be shown in mitigation of damages that the apprentice, after his term of service, could do, and had done, good work in the trade specified in the indenture. 2. Exemplary and Punitive Damages. In an action upon an apprentice bond, where evidence was offered tending to prove that the health of the apprentice had been impaired by the master's improper treatment, but no evidence was produced showing the extent of the damage, it was not error for the court to instruct the jury that they might inquire if there was damage from that cause, and fix the amount thereof.[62]

XI. Termination or Cancellation.

A. What Acts Terminate Relation — 1. Appointment of Guardian. The appointment of a guardian for an apprentice will not ipso facto terminate the apprenticeship.[63]

2. Arrival of Apprentice at Given Age. Where an infant apprentice arrives at the age of majority the relationship between him and his master instantly ceases, no matter by what form or ceremony he may have been originally bound.[64]

3. Bankruptcy of Master. The issuance of a decree of bankruptcy against the master of an apprentice has the effect of annuling the indenture of apprenticeship.[65]

4. Change of Apprentice's Name. A statute which provides that the name of an infant received into institutions supported by the public may not be changed is not effective to invalidate indentures of apprenticeship, made by officers of such institutions, where the change of name occurs after the child has been apprenticed.[66]

5. Consent of Parties. An indenture of apprenticeship may be vacated by consent of all the parties.[67]

Giving up indentures.— An apprenticeship may be determined by the indentures being given up, though not canceled. Rex v. Notton, Burr. Sett. Cas. 629; Rex v. Titchfield, Burr. Sett. Cas. 511; Rex v. Devonshire, Cald. Cas. 32. See also Rex v. Harberton, 1 T. R. 139, in which it was held that, where there has been such an agreement between the master and the apprentice to give up the indentures, the latter could plead the agreement in bar, to an action of covenant brought by the former, the indentures being considered as canceled, though they still subsisted in fact.

License to leave.—Where a master grants an apprentice license to leave his service he cannot afterward revoke such license or prosecute the apprentice's surety on his covenant for such departure (Lewis v. Wildman, 1 Day (Conn.) 153; Anonymous, 6 Mod. 69; 1 Rolle's Abr. 455; 4 Comyns Dig. 582; Black v. Stevenson, 3 U. C. Q. B. 160); but where a master agrees to release his apprentice provided the latter shall not do a certain thing, and subsequently the apprentice breaks the condition, the master is entitled to recall him into his service (Gray v. Cookson, 16 East 13).

6. Death — a. Of Master. A contract to teach an apprentice a trade is personal, and dies with the master;[68] but his representatives are bound to perform every other covenant contained in the indenture.[69]

b. Of Parent. The death of the father, by emancipating his child, will relieve the latter from his duties under indentures executed by the father.[70]

7. Discontinuance of Trade by Master. Where a master discontinues one of several trades to which an apprentice has been indentured, it will have the effect of discharging the apprentice and his surety.[71]

8. Enlistment of Apprentice. Enlistment of an apprentice into the military services of the government, although voluntary and without the consent of the master, will nevertheless dissolve the relation of master and apprentice.[72]

9. Marriage of Apprentice. The marriage of a female apprentice is not an abandonment and violation of the indentures of apprenticeship, but is held to annul her indentures;[73] but the marriage of a male apprentice, without the privity of his master and in contravention of the covenants of his indenture, will not justify the master in turning him off. His relief is a suit upon the covenant.[74]

10. Removal From Jurisdiction. Where an apprentice is bound in one jurisdiction the indenture is generally invalidated by his involuntary removal from the original jurisdiction;[75] but the mere intention, on the part of the master, to remove to a distant state, and, against the apprentice's will, to carry the latter with him, will not justify the apprentice in leaving the master's services.[76]

B. Proceedings to Discharge or Set Aside — 1. Grounds of Relief — a. Failure of Indentures to Contain Statutory Requirements. Where indentures of apprenticeship fail to contain requirements made obligatory by statute, they will be set aside upon the application of the apprentice.[77]

b. Acts of Master — (I) Acts Injurious to Mind and Morals. A court will discharge an apprentice for acts of the master injurious to the former's mind and morals.[78]

(II) Cruelty. An apprentice may be discharged from his indentures on account of the cruelty or ill treatment of his master.[79]

(III) Employment in Different Trade. An apprentice will be discharged where it appears that the master has compelled him to perform menial services in no way connected with the trade which he was apprenticed to learn.[80]

(IV) Insolvency. Indentures of apprenticeship will not be vacated merely because a master is compelled to take the benefit of the insolvency law; but if the master do not thereafter continue his business, so that the apprentice may obtain competent knowledge of the trade, the latter will be granted relief from the indentures.[81]

c. Acts of Apprentice — (I) Abandonment of Service. The mere abandonment of service by the apprentice does not avoid the apprenticeship, and a master cannot, without leave of court, release himself from his obligation to maintain and educate the apprentice.[82]

(II) Illness. If the apprentice, by reason of incurable illness, become unable to learn his master's trade or to perform the stipulated services, the master cannot, on his own authority, put an end to the contract.[83]

(III) Misconduct. An apprenticeship cannot be terminated by the master, of his own motion, on the ground of the misconduct of the apprentice,[84] unless, indeed, the apprentice's misconduct is of an habitual and criminal character, as where he is an habitual thief.[85]

2. JURISDICTION — a. In General. Jurisdiction to discharge or set aside indentures of apprenticeship is generally conferred by statute upon a particular court or courts.[86]

b. Necessity of Complaint by Master or Apprentice. The complaint of the master or apprentice is the very foundation for the authority of a court to act with regard to the dissolution of the indenture, and is indispensable to confer jurisdiction on it.[87]

3. FORM OF PROCEEDING. The usual and proper mode for the release of an apprentice from his indentures is by a writ of habeas corpus,[88] and such action should be brought in the name of the apprentice, not in that of his father.[89]

4. WHO MAY INSTITUTE. As a general rule, proceedings to discharge or set aside indentures of apprenticeship can be instituted only by a party to the indenture,[90] and since, prima facie, the right of action to set aside an indenture is in the father of the child, an action is not well brought by the mother unless she avers facts showing that she is entitled to sue.[91]

5. NOTICE TO MASTER. In proceedings by an apprentice against his master to be discharged from service, the master should have notice.[92]

6. REVIEW. An appeal will not lie from an order discharging an apprentice pursuant to statute.[93]

C. Effect of Discharge. The discharge of an apprentice by a court does not affect the validity of the indentures as to services rendered prior thereto.[94]

APPRENTICESHIP. The state or condition of an apprentice; a contract by which a person is bound to serve another in his trade, art, or occupation on condition of being instructed in it; the term for which an apprentice is bound to serve.[1] (See APPRENTICES.)

85. Where the apprentice an habitual thief. — In Cox v. Matthew, 2 F. & F. 397, it was held that if an apprentice, whose master's business lies in precious articles which are constantly lying about, is a habitual thief, the master may discharge him. I. NATURE AND DEFINITIONS.

A. Nature of Arbitration as a Proceeding — 1. IN GENERAL. In its broad sense, arbitration is a substitution, by consent of parties, of another tribunal for the tribunals provided by the ordinary processes of law;[1] a domestic tribunal — as contradistinguished from a regularly organized court proceeding according to the course of the common law[2] — depending upon the voluntary act of the parties disputant in the selection of judges of their own choice.[3] Its object is the final

At the civil law.— Mr. Justice Story has remarked the coincidences between the civil law and our law in regard to arbitrations and awards. Arbitration, called compromise, was the mode of terminating controversies favored by the civil law. It was entered into by reciprocal covenants or obligations, with a penalty or with some other certain or implied loss, and the award partook of the character of a judicial proceeding and had a conclusive effect similar to that of awards herein treated. 2 Story Eq. (13th ed.) § 1460 et seq. [citing Pothier Pand. Lib. 4, tit. 8, n, 13, 14 et seq.].

2. Reily v. Russell, 34 Mo. 524; Phillips v. Rouss, 7 N. Y. St. 378.

It is not a suit or judicial proceeding, in a technical sense, under general statutes relating to proceedings of contest, between parties, begun by judicial process. Crook v. Chambers, 40 Ala. 239.

Though a judge of a court be selected by the parties to determine matters in controversy between them, the parties cannot, by such an agreement, confer upon the judge jurisdiction to hear, as a court, matters outside of his statutory jurisdiction. If the determination of the judge has any validity, it is as an ordinary award of an arbitrator. Banigan v. Nelms, 106 Ga. 441, 32 S. E. 337; Strite v. Reiff, 55 Md. 92; Lansing's Appeal, 10 Wis. 120; and APPEAL AND ERROR [2 Cyc. 539 note]. So, where an appeal is taken to a judge, personally, by agreement, as an arbitrator, his award, though rendered in the form of a judicial order, will be valid, and a failure to perform it will be a breach of the bond given to secure performance. State v. McCarty, 64 Md. 253, 1 Atl. 116. So, in Hays v. Hays, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 363, the form which plaintiff sought to give to the proceeding was a submission to a justice of the peace of certain matters in controversy between the parties, without pleadings on issue presented in any form, and it was held that, in that view, the proceedings would be an arbitration, and not an action; but it was also held that, in view of the fact that the hearing was held before the justice in the formal method of a trial, the defendant might, notwithstanding the agreement, prove, in support of his contention, that it was an action, and that there were pleadings and issues presented before the justice.

Court cannot impose arbitration as condition.— A court cannot impose, upon parties litigant before it, arbitration as a condition of justice, though it may suggest such a course. Sobey v. Thomas, 37 Wis. 568. See also REFERENCES.

Combination of consent and compulsion.— Disputes may be terminated and the right transferred from one of the contending parties to the other, by consent, by compulsion, or by a combination of both. It is by consent when one agrees to give, and the other to accept, something else in lieu of the property in dispute. It is by compulsion when one obtains process and sentence of a competent court of justice against the other. And it seems to be the combination of both when, unable to settle the dispute themselves, they refer it to others to whose opinion they bind themselves to submit. Dixon v. Morehead, Add. (Pa.) 216.

Reference by statute.— When the legislature compels a party, without his assent, to arbitrate upon a claim which, properly, should be the subject of an action, this is an attempt to deprive him of the right, which is secured by the constitution, of a trial according to the course of the common law. People v. Haws, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 115, as to the right of the legislature to refer to arbitrators an action of damages against a city, without the consent of the city.

Adjustment of claim against government. — An award cannot be made by public officers unless such officers are authorized, by statute, to act for the government. Benjamin v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cl. 417. So, under an act providing that the quartermaster-general may examine and adjust the claims of a designated person and shall "report the facts to Congress, to be considered with other claims reported by the Quartermaster-General," the only power which the quartermaster-general has, after examining and adjusting the claims, is to report the facts for the consideration of congress, and this report has no element of a final award. Nutt v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 68. But where, by an act of legislature, the state divests itself of its sovereignty and authorizes a submission to arbitrators, disposition, in a speedy and inexpensive way, of the matters involved, so that they may not become the subject of future litigation between the parties.[4]

2. Classes or Kinds of Arbitration — a. In General. Arbitration may be classified under three heads: (1) where, in the absence or regardless of any statutory provision, the parties to any controversy submit the decision thereof to mutually-chosen arbitrators;[5] (2) where, by statute, authority is given to parties to a controversy not in court to submit the same to arbitrators, and, by agreement, have the submission entered as a rule of court, and the award enforced, or, on motion, entered as the judgment of a designated court;[6] (3) where a court in which a controversy is pending sends it for determination, by consent of the parties, to arbitrators chosen by the parties or selected by the court. These are, usually, designated as references,[7] and, while the right to thus submit is inherent to be appointed by both parties, and both parties act pursuant to such statute, the authorities as to the finality or conclusiveness of a merely governmental commission have no applicability, as the proceeding then becomes an ordinary arbitration. State v. Ward, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 100.

Under by-law or society regulations.— Upon the principle that courts will not have persons coerced into waiving their strict rights if they choose to insist upon them, it is held that courts will not sustain a by-law of an exchange which assumed, under penalty of suspension or expulsion, to compel members to submit their business controversies to arbitration. State v. Union Merchants' Exchange, 2 Mo. App. 96. But, if parties voluntarily submit under such by-laws or regulations, they may, nevertheless, be bound as upon a common-law award. See infra, IV, B.

A testator cannot provide in his will that, if any differences arise respecting the will, they shall be determined by a specified arbitrator whose decision is to be final. Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 38 [citing Philips v. Bury, Skin. 469].

4. Waite v. Barry, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 377. See infra, IX.

Where final determination not intended.— If an award, so called, is not intended as a final disposition of the matters submitted, it cannot have the binding force of an award, properly so called. Gregory v. Pike, 94 Me. 27, 46 Atl. 793; Sartwell v. Horton, 28 Vt. 370, wherein, upon holding that an award published on express condition that the parties were not to be bound, did not conclude the parties, the court distinguished Ennos v. Pratt, 26 Vt. 630, in that there the arbitrators intended to make a final determination, and their opinion that, as their award was not in writing, it was not obligatory, had no effect upon its conclusiveness.

5. First method.— In these cases the successful party must resort to the courts in an action on the award to enforce it, and is benefited by the arbitration only in that he may base his action on the award instead of on the original cause of action, and such award, unless impeached, is conclusive evidence in his favor. See infra, IX, A, 2; XI, A, B.

6. Second method.— Here the successful party has not only the advantage of a determination of the disputed questions, but an easy and expeditious method of placing that determination in a position where the law will enforce it. This was the aim and scope of the statute 9 & 10 Wm. III — to put controversies out of court on the same footing as those in court. Lucas v. Wilson, 2 Burr. 701. The statutes in the United States differ, but, as a general rule, they are bottomed upon the statute of 9 & 10 Wm. III, and look to the same end. See infra, XI, E.

7. Third method.— Miller v. Brumbaugh, 7 Kan. 343.

Award entirely upon agreement distinguished.— The difference between an award solely by agreement of the parties and one under statute, or when made a rule of court, lies in the somewhat more extensive control by the court of awards in the latter instances, and in the difference between the remedies by which the award may be enforced. See Grayson v. Meredith, 17 Ind. 357; Moore v. Barnett, 17 Ind. 349; Burroughs v. David, 7 Iowa 155; Miller v. Brumbaugh, 7 Kan. 343; Eyre v. Fenimore, 3 N. J. L. 489; Den v. Allen, 2 N. J. L. 32; Gardner v. Masters, 56 N. C. 462. And where referees, though designated by the act of the parties, derive their authority from the court, and their doings are of no avail until sanctioned by the court, the proceeding is said not to be an arbitration. Bachelder v. Hanson, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 319. See also Strong v. Barbour, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 209; Chatfield v. Hewlett, 2 Dem. Surr. (N. Y.) 191. The referee derives his authority from the court, while the arbitrator derives his from the parties; the latter pronounces judgment, while the former reports his opinion to the court. Merieult v. Austin, 3 Mart. (La.) 319. A reference under a rule of court is considered as a judicial proceeding, as distinguished from a mere arbitration. Lazell v. Houghton, 32 Vt. 579. But in In re Curtis, 64 Conn. 501, 30 Atl. 769, 42 Am. St. Rep. 200, it was said that the duty imposed on the court in accepting an award was very much like the duty in accepting a report of a committee, auditor, or referee, the words used in statutes being similar, and the purpose of the acceptance in either case being the same — that is, to establish the award in the one case, or the report in the other, as the judgment of the court. It did not matter that arbitrators were not officers of the court, as were committees.

at common law,[8] the proceeding is often regulated by statute.[9] Statutes relating to references do not supersede this common-law method of arbitration;[10] but, if the case is not brought within the provisions of the statute as to references, it must be controlled by the rules which govern arbitration.[11]

b. Ministerial or Quasi-Judicial Acts. Technically, to constitute a valid common-law award, it is necessary that there should be a submission, by the parties, of an existing matter of difference, for the purpose of terminating or concluding the parties as to the entire subject-matter in issue between them,[12] as distinguished from a submission for the ascertainment of a single fact, or the settlement of a particular question in the chain of evidence constituting a mere appraisement, valuation, or reference not designed to terminate the whole controversy between the parties, which proceeding is said not to be an arbitration.[13]

10. Lusk v. Clayton, 70 N. C. 184; Leach v. Harris, 69 N. C. 532; Bollmann v. Bollmann, 6 S. C. 29. See also infra, I, A, 2, c; XI, E, 2, c.

11. "Reference" and "arbitration" compared.— Thus, on a motion to set aside a report of a referee, it was held that, as it appeared by the rule of reference that the cause was referred to a single person, it could not be regarded as a reference under the statute, and was, therefore, merely an arbitration, the result being that the court could not interfere with the report, or, more properly speaking, the award. Rathbone v. Lownsbury, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 595. So, in actions not referable, if the parties refer the cause without providing that judgment shall be entered, the reference is an arbitration and will operate as a discontinuance, although, if there is a provision that judgment shall be entered, the parties are held concluded by the agreement, though the cause is not referable. Merritt v. Thompson, 27 N. Y. 225; Green v. Patchen, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 293; Farrington v. Hamblin, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 212; Messenger v. Broom, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 630. See also Diedrick v. Richley, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 271; Camp v. Root, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 22; Johnson v. Parmely, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 129. But, where a part of claims were referable and a part not, and the referee was authorized, by agreement of the parties, to pass upon the latter, it was held that the complaint in an action on the report was properly dismissed, because the reference was not converted into an arbitration, and that the plaintiff's remedy was by application for confirmation of the referee's report. Hovey v. Hovey, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 71 [distinguishing former cases cited supra, in this note, in that the actions in those cases were, in fact, discontinued by the voluntary submission of the controversies to referees; while, in this case, the proceeding was pending and the subject-matter, or a considerable portion of it which the parties sought to and did bring to the attention of the referee, was legitimately in the special proceeding in progress before him. The court also distinguished Akely v. Akely, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 21, in that the decision there was put upon the ground that the proceeding was not in form or substance a reference under the statute; and Godding v. Porter, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 374, in that the motion to confirm in that case was denied, because the claim in question was not referable under the statute, and the objection went to the entire claim involved and allowed].

Reference to mere witness.— A reference, as to a disputed fact, to a party who was to state the fact of his own recollection, is not analogous to a submission to arbitration, and the statement of such referee is not conclusive. Williams v. Wood, 12 N. C. 82.

Survey.— A written instrument by the proprietors of adjoining lands, reciting that they were desirous of having their respective lines run so that each might know his true boundary, and agreeing to employ a surveyor to run the line, was held not to be a submission to arbitration. 15. James v. Schroeder, 61 Mich. 28, 27 N. ever, and it is impossible to trace, for all cases, a more definite distinction between a technical arbitration and the class of proceedings mentioned. Reference may be made to the cases in which parties bind themselves, by contract, to abide by a mere ministerial determination, without regard to the distinction above drawn.[16] Where the whole matter of dispute is referred to quasi-judicial determination, the original cause of action is merged by the judgment;[17] but a mere appraisement, valuation, or other like act does not destroy the original cause of action. At most it affects the evidence rather than the remedy.[18] In this connection, if the parties, by their contract, are bound by the mere ascertainment of the evidentiary fact, or other ministerial act, the distinction between the technical award and such ministerial act would seem to be one in the use of terms merely, and has been so regarded.[19]

Valuers.—So, a contract by which one party agrees to cut and haul timber at a stipulated price per thousand feet, to be estimated by a designated person, is held to bind the parties to the estimate of such person, in the absence of corruption or mistake. Oakes v. Moore, 24 Me. 214, 41 Am. Dec. 379; Stubbings v. McGregor, 86 Wis. 248, 56 N. W. 641, holding that an estimate so made stood upon the same ground as an award of arbitrators. And, in an action on a written instrument signed by the parties, whereby they agreed that certain persons should appraise work on a building lately erected by plaintiff for defendant, the contract was treated as a submission to arbitration. Contract to prevent differences from arising.— The difference between an arbitration and award and an estimate, made by third persons, under a contract between the parties, as to the performance of the contract, is that, in the former case, the cause of action is supposed to really exist, and is referred to the decision of arbitrators instead of a court, the award of whom is like the judgment of a court; whereas, in the latter case, the final estimate is, of itself, a part of the cause of action and a condition precedent, the performance, or a sufficient excuse for the non-performance of which, must be shown in order to maintain the action. Appraisement adopted by court.— In an action against the owner of a building to recover on a building contract, it appeared that, while the owner was conducting his business on the first floor of the building being altered, his stock was damaged by water coming through the roof by reason of the negligence of the contractors, and that arbitrators had decided on the amount of damages so suffered by the owner. It was held that the decision of the arbitrators, whether binding on the owner or not, would be followed by the court in determining the amount of counter-claim to which the owner was entitled. c. Statutory and Common-Law Proceedings Cumulative. Usually, the statutory provisions regulating the subject of arbitration in the various states refer to the remedy for the enforcement of the award, and unless, by express terms or necessary implication, they abrogate the common law on the subject, parties are still at liberty to enter into a submission as at common law.[20] The provisions of the statute, however, may be general and apply to all arbitrators, whether at common law or statutory.[21] Where the parties seek to avail themselves of whatever advantage there may be in a statutory award, the proceedings must conform to the statute. While a strict pursuance of the statute, in order to constitute a statutory award, has been held to be necessary,[22] it seems that the general rule is that all of the essential requirements of the statute must be pursued, though a substantial compliance will be sufficient.[23] If the proceedings are entirely contrary to the rules which govern statutory arbitrations, all questions as to the effect of the award, the sufficiency thereof, and the like, must be determined according to the rules of the common law.[24]

3. Approved Method of Settlement — Favored by Construction. Though arbitration was recognized at the common law as a mode of adjusting matters in dispute, especially such as concerned personal chattels and personal wrongs,[25] yet, from efforts perceptible in the earlier cases to construe arbitration proceedings and awards so as to defeat them, it would seem that they were not originally favored by the courts.[26] This hostility, however, has long since disappeared, and, by reason of the fact that the proceeding represents a method of the parties' own choice and furnishes a more expeditious and less expensive means of settling controversies than the ordinary course of regular judicial proceedings, it is the policy of the law to favor arbitration. Therefore, every reasonable intendment will be indulged to give effect to such proceedings, and in favor of the regularity and integrity of the arbitrators' acts.[27]

Agents or judges.— Arbitrators are sometimes considered as substitutes, and sometimes as judges for the parties. Dixon v. Morehead, Add. (Pa.) 216. Thus, upon the principle that arbitrators are the agents of both parties, their acts have been considered as the acts of the parties themselves, and a balance found by such arbitrators has been considered as a balance struck by the parties on an account stated by themselves. Hays v. Hays, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 363. But, on the other hand, upon the principle that an arbitrator is not an agent, it was held that a justice of the peace did not have jurisdiction in an action on an award for more than the pecuniary limitation of his jurisdiction, over the insistence that the award was in the whose functions are judicial and whose duties are not those of a mere partisan agent, but of an impartial judge, to dispense equal justice to all the parties,[30] and to decide the law and facts involved in the matters submitted, with a view to determining and finally ending the controversy.[31]

D. "Umpire" Defined. An umpire, in the common signification of the word, denotes one who is to decide the controversy in case the original arbitrators cannot agree.[32]

E. "Award" Defined. An award is the judgment pronounced by the arbitrators,[33] and to make an award is to announce and publish the judgment.[34] It is a judicial act,[35] and, while sometimes said to partake of the attributes of a contract,[36] it is more nearly akin to a judgment of a regular judicial tribunal, and is no more a contract than such judgment, being at the same time of a higher nature than a mere specialty.[37]

II. SUBMISSION TO ARBITRATION.

A. Necessity of Submission. Without a submission in some form there can be no valid award.[38]

B. Who May Submit — 1. In General. Where there is a capacity to contract, with a liability to pay, there is, generally, a power to submit to arbitration.[39] nature of a settled account signed by the parties, through the arbitrators as their agents, in order to bring the case within the provision of the statute extending the jurisdiction where the claim was on a settled account signed by the parties. Collins v. Oliver, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 438. See also Babb v. Stromberg, 14 Pa. St. 397, wherein Gibson, C. Statutory and common-law arbitration.— If an arbitration is under the statute, with an agreement to make the submission a rule of court, it partakes much of the nature of judicial proceedings. If the arbitration is under an ordinary submission, the award partakes of the nature of a judgment, as it is a voluntary agreement for the adjusting of differences, and may be regarded as simply the contract of settlement between the parties. nature or validity of a submission that there should have been a previous controversy between the parties regarding the subject-matter.[43]

(II) Controversy Capable of Sustaining Action. At common law, in order to make an award binding, it is not necessary that there should be a legal cause of action submitted. It is sufficient if there is a bona fide difference of opinion as to the rights of the parties.[44] Statutes, however, generally confine submissions under them to controversies which are capable of sustaining a civil action.[45]

c. Ownership of Property — (I) Title to, or Interest in, Property — (A) General Rule. The nature of an arbitration proceeding is such that arbitrators cannot be invested with the power to transfer the title to, or interest in, property; and, therefore, it may be said, in a limited sense, that a final determination of the title to, or an interest in, property cannot be submitted to arbitration.[46] This proposition applies with special reference to the ownership of real estate, in relation to which it has often been announced;[47] but it also applies equally to the ownership of personal property.[48]

Mutual deeds may be delivered to arbitrators for their disposal as they shall award the title; and, although the arbitrators cannot, merely as such, transfer title by force of their award, in case of mutual deeds the transfer is effected by act of the parties themselves, to take effect on publication of the award, when the deed to the party in whose favor the award is made becomes absolute. The creation of a lien upon real estate stands upon the same ground as the transfer of title thereto, so as to prevent the exercise of such power by arbitrators or of submission of a matter involving the exercise of such a power. Littlefield v. Smith, 74 Me. 387.

48. Shelton v. Alcox, 11 Conn. 240, 244, where it is said: "Awards respecting real estate, stand upon the same ground as those respecting personal property."

Trover cannot be maintained for personalty awarded, because it is not within the power of the parties to authorize, by a submission, the arbitrators to transfer the title; but, for non-performance, the remedy is upon

(B) Statutory Arbitrations. Under a statutory provision for entry of judgment upon an award when the statute embraces controversies relating to real estate, the judgment of the court has been held as effectual to divest title as a deed of conveyance, and, therefore, in such case, the final determination of the title to real estate may be submitted;[49] but, if the statutory provision contemplates only such a judgment as might have been entered in an action of ejectment, and since a judgment in ejectment does not finally settle the title to real estate, such power cannot be conferred by submission.[50] By statute in special cases awards of specially constituted boards of arbitrators have been given effect as conveyances, upon submission to them of the final determination of the title to, or an interest in, real estate.[51]

(II) Right of Property—(A) Personalty. There have never been any legal restrictions upon the power of parties to submit to arbitration any and all questions involving the right of property in personalty.[52]

(B) Real Estate—(1) Old Common-Law Disability. The restrictions upon alienation of real estate arising out of the peculiarities of feudal tenure prevented the submission of the right of property in real estate to arbitration so long as such restrictions upon the power of alienation were permitted to exist,[53] to which fact seems to be traceable the reason for the rule that the title to real estate cannot be submitted to, or determined finally by, arbitrators.[54]

(2) Submissions Under Bond. Aside from a consideration of the statutes and contrivances for the removal of disabilities to alienate property, the first departure from the early feudal doctrine preventing submissions of controversies involving title to real estate seems to have been effected by means of mutual bonds, given by the parties, and conditioned to perform the award.[55]

(3) Equitable Principles. The growth of equitable principles gradually replaced feudal restrictions upon the power to submit to arbitration the right of property in real estate, and it finally became established that equity would enforce specific performance of an agreement to abide an award,[56] or, by force of the the award. Hunter v. Rice, 15 East 100, 13 Rev. Rep. 394. Aliter in case of an agreement of the parties settling the title in the submission of accounts arising out of transactions with reference to it. Clement v. Hadlock, 13 N. H. 185.

In Pennsylvania, where no court of chancery existed, it was held that a decree for doctrine of equitable estoppel, would preclude a party from drawing the award in question;[57] and the power to submit such questions to the final determination of arbitrators at length became universally recognized as substantially coequal with the power of alienation.[58]

(4) Estoppel in Actions at Law. Estoppel to question an award of the right of property in real estate has been adopted as a rule of the common law, applicable in an action at law on the award, or where the award is pleaded in bar or drawn in question collaterally.[59]

(5) Statutory Restrictions. Statutes relating to arbitration usually prohibit, either by express language or by necessary implication, the submission under them of controversies involving the right or title to real estate.[60] But the existence of a statute, precluding or prohibiting the submission of controversies involving real estate from enforcement in the manner provided by the statute for matters as to which it applies, does not, by implication, destroy the power to submit such questions under the common law.[61] The exercise of such power may, however, be expressly prohibited.[62]

(c) Matters Relating to, But Not Involving, Realty. There are many matters in controversy relating to, or arising out of, the ownership of real estate in which the right of property is not involved and which are not, therefore, subject to any restrictive rules about the submission of the right or title to real estate, either as specific performance of an award upon the right to real estate would be considered as having been made in a subsequent action involving the title, upon the consideration that this was one of the cases in which a chancellor would make such decree. Although the question of damages depends upon a disputed title, it does not involve an adjudication of the title, and may, therefore, be submitted as a personal controversy. Dorr v. Hill, 62 N. H. 506. Aliter where the determination of a disputed title is the principal question. Wiles v. Peck, 26 N. Y. 42.

An alternative claim for damages, in case an agreement to convey land cannot be specifically performed, prevents the submission of the whole controversy from coming within a statute forbidding the submission to arbitration of claims to real estate. Olcott v. Wood, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 644 [affirmed in 14 N. Y. 32].

Damages for flooding land by mill-owner is a mere pecuniary claim, capable of being waived, satisfied, or extinguished by parol, and may, therefore, be submitted to arbitration like any other personal claim for damages. The question of the existence of a right to flood land has been held to stand upon a different ground from that of the question of damages for flooding, and that a submission thereof constitutes a submission of an interest in real estate. Carpenter v. Spencer, 2 Gray (Mass.) 407; Henderson v. Adams, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 610. Contra, Hersey v. Packard, 56 Me. 395.

Future damages constituting a lien upon mill property for overflowing adjoining lands cannot be authorized by a submission as a tions,[66] questions of amount of purchase-price to be paid on account of conveyances of real estate[67] or by way of compensation for the taking of real estate under the power of eminent domain,[68] compensation for the use of personal and temporary right of way,[69] a claim for a trust fund which has been invested in real estate,[70] or a controversy as to the seizin and possession of land.[71]

2. Matters of a Criminal Nature. On grounds of public policy, offenses affecting the public at large are not subject to submission to arbitration;[72] but, where a party injured has a remedy by action as well as by indictment, he may refer the adjustment of the reparation he is to receive to arbitration, although a criminal prosecution may have been commenced.[73]

D. Agreements to Submit — 1. In General. Agreements to arbitrate, whether made with regard to pending controversies, or embodied in contracts with relation to controversies that may arise in the future, are regarded with favor by the courts, and will be upheld where the jurisdiction of the courts is not ousted by the terms of the contract.[74]

2. Condition Precedent to Action. Though the parties cannot, by an agreement to submit, oust the jurisdiction of the courts,[75] they may agree to impose, as a condition precedent to any right of action, that, with respect of the liability to pay, the mode of settling the amount to be paid, or the time for paying the same, an arbitration shall first be held.[76] In respect to such agreements the rule is that, claim not affecting real estate. Littlefield v. Smith, 74 Me. 387.

66. Damages for breach of warranty, on account of an admitted encumbrance upon property sold as being free from encumbrance, may be submitted as a question of mere personal liability. Snodgrass v. Smith, 13 Ind. 393.

The question of the amount due under a real-estate mortgage may be submitted without reference to rules or statutes respecting real estate. Page v. Foster, 7 N. H. 392.

if the agreement is in such terms that a reference is a condition precedent to the right of the party to maintain an action, he is not entitled to maintain it until that condition is complied with; but, if the agreement is to pay, with a subsequent agreement to refer the question to arbitration, contained in a distinct clause collateral to the other, the agreement for reference does not oust the jurisdiction of the courts.[77]

3. Operation as Submission. A mere agreement to submit to arbitration will not be construed as a submission.[78]

E. Modes of Submission — 1. At Common Law — a. Controversies Out of Court. At common law any persons, though no suit was pending between them, might agree to submit their matters of difference to arbitrators.[79]

b. Causes Depending in Court. Where a cause was depending in court, the parties might, at common law, agree to an arbitration and obtain an order referring the cause to arbitrators or referees, designated either by themselves or by the court.[80]

2. By Statute.[81] Both in England[82] and in the United States, statutes have been enacted providing for the submission of controversies, whether depending in court or not, under rule of court.[83]

F. Requisites and Validity of Submission — 1. In General. The form of a submission is immaterial. It is sufficient if it appears from the acts of the parties that they intended to arbitrate, and that the decision of the arbitrators should have the effect of an award.[84]

Certainty to common intent.— The law favors and encourages the settlement of disputes by arbitration, and neither exacts nor expects technical precision either in the submission or in the award. It is enough if certainty to a common intent be observed. Payne v. Crawford, 97 Ala. 604, 10 So. 911, 11 So. 725.

Usury.—A stipulation in a submission that the arbitrator, in calculating the amount due on a certain note, shall compute interest at the rate of ten per cent. is not usurious. Rice v. Hassenpflug, 45 Ohio St. 377, 13 N. E. 655.

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arbitration and Award," § 49.

If the submission was by parol it is material to prove not only that both parties promised to abide by the award, but that the promises were concurrent and mutual, for otherwise each promise is but nudum pactum. Ingraham v. Whitmore, 75 Ill. 24; Houghton v. Houghton, 37 Me. 72; Keep v. Goodrich, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 397; Kingston v. Phelps, Peake 227.

Nature of agreement.— An agreement to abide by an award of arbitrators is an agreement to await the award without revoking the submission — not to acquiesce in any award that may be made, whether it be legal or not. Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Mangham, 49 Ga. 266; Bach v. Slidell, 2 La. Ann. 626; Marshall v. Reed, 48 N. H. 36; Shaw v. Hatch, 6 N. H. 162. See also Abide [1 Cyc. 164]. But see Pass. v. Critcher, 112 N. C. 405, 17 S. E. 9, in which last case it was held that an agreement to abide by the award made by the arbitrators renders the surety on the bond of agreement liable for the payment of the award, and is not merely a guaranty not to withdraw from the arbitration. 4. Parol Submission. A verbal submission is valid at common law in all cases where the subject-matter is such that a verbal agreement directly between the parties, in the terms of the award, would prevail.[87] A submission under the statute must, however, be in writing if the statute so requires.[88] Upon the same

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arbitration and Award," § 36; and, generally, Contracts.

Unlawful consideration for agreement to submit.— In an action upon an award it is not a sufficient objection to its validity that defendant agreed to withdraw a civil action for assault and battery then pending, and also, "as far as he might be able to do," withdraw his prosecution of an indictment for assault and battery relating to the same subject-matter, as this does not constitute a submission to arbitration of the criminal proceedings, the continuance of which is made no ground of complaint by plaintiff, who sues on the award. McCreary v. Taggart, 2 S. C. 418.

Want of mutuality.— Where a submission to arbitration is not binding for want of mutuality, no action will lie for a breach of the agreement to abide by the award. Ingraham v. Whitmore, 75 Ill. 24. See also Yeamans v. Yeamans, 99 Mass. 585, holding that a submission that is not binding on both parties is binding on neither. 91. Reasonable time.— Either party may, in such case, request the arbitrators to proceed within a reasonable time. Rogers v. Tatum, 25 N. J. L. 281; Curtis v. Potts, 3 M. & S. 145. See also French v. Shackford, 5 N. H. 143, wherein it was held that, if the submission make the report returnable "at or before" a specified day, it is sufficient.

In Massachusetts the parties to an agreement for submission to arbitration may agree upon a different time from the time named in Mass. Pub. Stat. c. 188; but, in such case, the time within which the award shall be returned is a material part of the submission,

7. What Law Governs. The validity, in the courts of one state, of an agreement to arbitrate, such agreement having been made in another state, is governed by the laws of the latter state.[92]

8. Submission Under Statute — a. In General. A submission, professedly under the statute, must substantially follow the statute, except in so far as its requirements are expressly waived.[93]

b. Acknowledgment. To authorize the court to adopt an award and render judgment thereon, statutory requirements as to the acknowledgment of the agreement of submission must be observed.[94] The same degree of particularity is not and must be fixed by an agreement, signed and acknowledged by the parties. Bent v. Erie Tel., etc., Co., 144 Mass. 165, 10 N. E. 778.

As to acknowledgments, generally, see Acknowledgments.

In Iowa, if the parties submit a controversy to arbitration that might be, but as yet is not, the subject of a suit, or where they submit, by agreement and without an order of court, any or all matters involved in any suit then pending between them, the agreement of submission must be acknowledged; but, where the subject-matter of a suit is submitted by order of court, an acknowledgment is not necessary. In the latter case the order of the court stands in the place of the acknowledgment. Fink v. Fink, 8 Iowa 312. See also Marion v. Ganby, 68 Iowa 142, 26 N. W. 40.

Acknowledgment by attorney.— In Wright v. Raddin, 100 Mass. 319, it was held that it is not, under Mass. Gen. Stat. c. 147, § 2, a defect in a submission, apparent as matter of law on the record, that one of the parties acknowledged the instrument by attorney, though there is no averment that it was signed before the magistrate.

An acknowledgment of a submission to arbitration is irregular if not made until after the arbitrators have begun their work; but a statutory judgment on the award is not invalid if the acknowledgment is made before the award. Davis v. Berger, 54 Mich. 652, 20 N. W. 629.

Extension of time.— An agreement for extending the time for making the award need demanded, however, in the acknowledgment of the execution of a submission as is required in the acknowledgment of deeds.[95]

e. Attestation and Sealing. Statutory provisions that submissions to arbitration shall be under seal and attested by a subscribing witness must be carried out.[96]

d. Consent of Parties. A submission to arbitration of a pending suit, without the consent of all the parties thereto whose interests may be affected by the award, is irregular and void.[97]

e. Designation of Arbitrators. The agreement of submission must state the names of the arbitrators, if the statute so requires.[98] not be acknowledged. Heglund v. Allen, 30 Minn. 38, 14 N. W. 57.

Submission executed by agent.—Where, under Mich. Rev. Stat. p. 531, the execution, by one of the parties of an agreement to submit matters in difference to arbitration, appeared to be by an agent, the certificate of the officer taking the acknowledgment of the agreement that such party appeared before him by such agent, for that purpose duly appointed, and acknowledged the same, is sufficient evidence of the execution of the agreement to authorize the arbitrators to hear and determine the matters submitted to them, and the circuit court to render judgment on their award. Pennsylvania.—An agreement to refer all matters in variance to certain persons is sufficient to authorize the entry of a rule without it being attested by subscribing witnesses or accompanied by an affidavit that it was duly executed. Herman v. Freeman, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 9.

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arbitration and Award," § 42.

A submission, not required by statute to be under seal, was signed by an agent under seal, and it was held that it was not necessary that the authority of the agent should be under seal. White v. Cox, 29 Conn. 570.

A submission to arbitration by a corporation need not be under the corporate seal. Brady v. Brooklyn, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 584.

Since a submission of the right to real estate cannot authorize a conveyance of the title by award of arbitrators, it is not necessary that the submission should be under seal, even where conveyances are required to be under seal (Stewart v. Cass, 16 Vt. 663, 42 Am. Dec. 534), unless a seal is specifically required by statute as a condition to a valid submission (Parmelee v. Allen, 32 Conn. 115; White v. Fox, 29 Conn. 570).

Submission by mistake.— A submission to arbitration entered into by mistake is not obligatory. Bright v. Ford, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 252; Peisch v. Ware, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 347, 2 L. ed. 643. But see Offerman v. Packer, 26 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 205, holding that an allegation that a submission was entered into "on erroneous impression" is not sufficient to avoid it in equity, in the absence of fraud or concealment.

98. McKnight v. McCullough, 21 Iowa 111; Franklin Min. Co. v. Pratt, 101 Mass. 359; Holdridge v. Stowell, 39 Minn. 360, 40 N. W. 259; Western Female Seminary v. Blair, 1 Disn. (Ohio) 370. But see Reeves v. McGlochlin, 65 Mo. App. 537, wherein it was held that an award will not be set aside because the written agreement to arbitrate did not contain the names of the arbitrators. Compare Hill v. Taylor, 15 Wis. 190, wherein it appeared that the parties to an action executed mutual bonds for arbitration. The names of two of the arbitrators were inserted, but that of the third was inserted only in defendant's bond. Underneath defendant's bond a stipulation was written, and signed by the parties, extending the time for "delivering the award referred to in the foregoing undertaking." It was held that this was a sufficient submission to the three arbitrators by an instrument in writing, as required by Wis. Rev. Stat. c. 131, § 1.

f. Designation of Court of Entry of Award. The submission must designate the court to which the award is to be returned, if the statute so requires.[99]

g. Naming Parties. As the submission presupposes the assent and presence of both parties, either in person or by attorney, as essential to its due execution and validity, it must not be doubtful who constitute the parties thereto. More especially is this so, inasmuch as the submission furnishes the only basis which the court can have upon which to render judgment after an award is returned and accepted.[1]

G. Construction and Effect of Submission — 1. In General. It is an established principle that submissions are to be liberally construed, so as to give effect to the intentions of the parties.[2] Every reasonable intendment is to be

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arbitration and Award," § 47.

Insertion before acknowledgment.— An agreement for a statutory arbitration is of no effect where the names of the arbitrators are not in it when acknowledged. Northwestern Guaranty Loan Co. v. Channell, 53 Minn. 269, 55 N. W. 121.

A misnomer in a submission, consisting of using a wrong middle initial of the referee, will not vitiate the award, especially where it appeared that the referee acted as such and signed the award. Riley v. Hicks, 81 Ga. 265, 7 S. E. 173.

Number and mode of selection.— A stipulation for a submission to arbitration which does not provide for the number of arbitrators nor the mode of their selection is too indefinite to be enforced. 99. Foust v. Hastings, 66 Iowa 522, 24 N. W. 22; Kendall v. Bates, 35 Me. 357. But see Woelfel v. Hammer, 159 Pa. St. 448, 28 Atl. 147, wherein it was held that, where parties have agreed to submit disputes to arbitrators and agree that the submission shall be an award of court, without designating the court, and also give bonds, with warrant of attorney, to each other to secure the payment of the award, and the amount of the award is recovered by means of a judgment entered upon the bond, the fact that the award is entered in the court of common pleas is a mere irregularity which does defendant no harm, and which does not entitle him to have the award set aside. See also McKnight v. McCullough, 21 Iowa 111.

In Illinois it has been held that, in an agreement to submit matters to arbitration under the statute, it is not necessary to name the court which is to render judgment on the award. Seaton v. Kendall, 61 Ill. App. 289 [affirmed in 171 Ill. 410, 49 N. E. 561].

In Texas, in an arbitration under Sayles' Civ. Stat. arts. 42–56, requiring submissions involving two hundred dollars or less to be filed with a justice, and over that amount with the clerk of the district court, it is not essential that the amount in controversy, showing the jurisdiction of the court, should appear from the agreement to arbitrate, but it is sufficient if the record, when the court is called upon to enter judgment, shows the requisite amount to give jurisdiction. Gautier v. McHenry, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 332, 39 S. W. 603.

Sufficiency of designation.— A submission naming the "supreme judicial" as the court to which the award should be returned is sufficiently definite as designating the "supreme judicial court." Kendall v. Bates, 35 Me. 357.

The reason is that the parties have chosen another forum for the determination of the matters in controversy between them, and the therein that the award shall be entered as a judgment of the court.[6] It has also been held that a mere agreement between the parties to a suit to submit it to arbitration, which agreement has not been acted upon by either of the parties or by the arbitrator, will not operate as a discontinuance.[7]

b. As Waiver of Objections. The submission of a pending cause to arbitration is, generally, a waiver of objections to previous proceedings in the cause.[8]

c. On Pending Appeal. Where parties, pending an appeal from a judgment

A misjoinder of parties is not waived by reference of the case to arbitrators, under rule of court. Porter v. Dickerman, 11 Gray (Mass.) 482.

Objections to jurisdiction.— If a court has not original jurisdiction of a cause commenced in it, yet, if the parties mutually agree to a reference of the action under an order of court, and it is referred, the objection on account of want of jurisdiction is thereby waived. Maxfield v. Scott, 17 Vt. 634. See also Brickhouse v. Hunter, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 363, 4 Am. Dec. 528, wherein it was held that, although consent of parties cannot give jurisdiction to a court of equity, yet if, after the improper granting of an injunction, the parties refer all matters in difference between them in that suit to arbitrators, consenting that their award may be made the decree of the court, such consent is binding. But see Clements v. Painter, 46 Ga. 486, wherein it was held that consenting to refer a case to an arbitrator does not preclude a party, upon the return of the award, from asking a dismissal for want of jurisdiction.

Right of review.— A party, by consenting to a reference of his cause, with an agreement that the report of the referees be final and that judgment shall be entered thereon, waives his right of review. Carroll v. Locke, 58 N. H. 163. See also Bone v. Rice, 1 Head (Tenn.) 149, wherein it was held that, where the parties to a litigation agree to submit the matters in controversy to the decision of arbitrators, whose award is produced in court and simply adopted as the judgment thereof without anything more, neither party has a right of appeal, and the fact that the parties in the articles of submission expressly reserved the right of appeal does not alter the rule.

Trial by jury.— A party, by submitting to an arbitration, waives his right to a trial by jury as to the matters in controversy. Boyden v. Lamb, 152 Mass. 416, 25 N. E. 609. See also Carroll v. Locke, 58 N. H. 163.

in an action, enter into an agreement to arbitrate the matter in dispute in the action in which the judgment has been recovered, such agreement implies a mutual abandonment of all previous proceedings, including the judgment.[9]

3. Effect on Subsequent Action. Being revocable in its nature,[10] an agreement to submit to arbitration, not consummated by an award, is no bar to a suit at law or in equity concerning the subject-matter submitted.[11]

See also Muckey v. Pierce, 3 Wis. 307, wherein it was held that the submission of a cause to arbitrators after an appeal from the judgment therein works a discontinuance of the suit and not merely a dismissal of the appeal. To same effect is Bigelow v. Goss, 5 Wis. 421. But see Hayes v. Blanchard, 4 Vt. 210, wherein it was held that a submission of an action to arbitrators after an appeal therein does not necessarily deprive plaintiff of his right to enter his complaint for affirmance, unless there is an award made before court, or unless the terms of the submission allow a time in which to make an award, which time extends beyond the term of the court to which the appeal is taken.

4. Effect on Statute of Limitations. A mere submission to arbitrators of matters upon which the arbitrators have never acted will not prevent the running of the statute of limitations during the continuance of the submission.[12] It has also been held that this rule is not affected by the fact that, pending the submission, the right to sue was suspended.[13]

P. 36 [citing Evans v. Thomson, 5 East 189, 1 Smith K. B. 380].

Introduction of new matter.— Where, after a submission had been entered into by

b. Parol Amendment or Modification. A submission may be amended or modified by parol, even though it is under seal,[15] except where the submission itself could not have been so made.[16] In case of amendment or modification, the amended or modified submission stands in the place of the original submission.[17] It has been held, however, that a contemporaneous parol agreement cannot enlarge a written submission to arbitrators.[18]

2. By Court. A submission made a rule of court cannot be amended or modified by the court without the consent of the parties;[19] but, where it is made manifest to the court that there has been some omission upon the part of its officer, or that, by some accident or mistake, the order is not in accordance with the intention of the parties, it may make such amendment as will give effect to that which the parties have agreed to.[20] bond, a further agreement was made under seal, bringing new matters before the arbitrators, subjecting to their power another person who was not a party to the original submission, but who was to the later agreement, and enlarging the power which the arbitrators already had over the subject-matter of the original submission, it was held that the later writing was not an alteration of the original submission, but an entirely new undertaking, superseding the original. As to submission by parol see supra, II, E, 4.

In Massachusetts it has been held that, where an agreement for arbitration, made under the statute, is executed, the parties can extend the time or alter the submission only by a supplemental agreement, executed in the manner required by the statute. Bent v. Erie Tel., etc., Co., 144 Mass. 165, 10 N. E. 778; Woodbury v. Proctor, 9 Gray (Mass.) 18.

To justify an inference that a written agreement for arbitration has been subsequently modified by parol, the evidence must be clear and the implication must be strong and free from all doubt. Loring v. Alden, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 576.

In this case A and B, having executed bonds of submission to arbitration of a controversy concerning a lease, and required the award to be in writing and subscribed by the arbitrators, waived that requirement by parol, and agreed to receive a verbal award. It was held that such waiver and verbal award were not binding, on the ground stated in the text.

I. Revocation or Setting Aside Submission — 1. By Act of Parties — a. Right to Revoke — (i) In General. Though there are cases which hold that a submission under a contract or agreement, founded upon a valuable consideration, or a submission which is part of an agreement containing other terms to be performed by the parties, is irrevocable by one party without the consent of the other,[21] the general rule is that a submission may be revoked by either party thereto at any time before award, if the submission is not made a rule of court or is not otherwise regulated by statute. The remedy of the adverse party, in case of a revocation, is by an action on the agreement to submit, or on the submission bond.[22] But after an award is made and pub-

Death of infant.—Where the guardians and trustees of an infant join in a reference affecting lands of which the infant was tenant for life, and the latter died pending the reference, an award made against them after his death was, on application to the court, set aside so far as it related to them. Death of trustee.— In Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Coit, 12 Ind. App. 161, 39 N. E. 766, it was held that, where a trustee of an express trust for the management of real estate takes out a policy of insurance and agrees to submit the amount of loss to arbitration, his death before an award is made does not revoke the submission.

in the absence of a stipulation that the submission shall survive, and to this end the agreement must be explicit.[29]

(B) Statutory Submission. The death of a party to a statutory submission will not, however, revoke the submission, if the cause of action survives.[30]

(III) Institution of Suit. The institution of a suit, before award, by one of the parties, the cause of action being the same subject-matter as that submitted to arbitration, revokes, by implication, the agreement to arbitrate.[31]

(IV) Marriage of Female Party. The marriage of a feme sole, a party to a submission, would formerly have the effect of revoking the submission. It is believed, however, that this would not now be the case under the married-women's acts so generally in force at the present time.[32]

(V) Refusal of Arbitrator to Act. The refusal of an arbitrator to proceed with the arbitration operates as a revocation of the submission.[33]

Effect in action of tort.— In an action of tort referred to arbitration before verdict, where plaintiff died and the award was afterward made, it was held that the clause providing against revocation in the event of the death of a party had no effect, and that the award was a nullity, as a right of action for tort was determined by the death. Form of revocation is set out in Frets v. Frets, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 335.
It is sufficient if enough appear in the instrument of revocation to show an intention to revoke, although it is not declared in terms that the party revokes the submission. Frets v. Frets, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 335. But a mere expression of a determination not to stand to the agreement will not put an end to a submission. Brown v. Welcker, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 197. The revocation, too, must not be coupled with any conditions. Goodwine v. Miller, 32 Ind. 419.
Notice to arbitrators.— A revocation is not effective until the arbitrators have been duly notified thereof. Brown v. Leavitt, 26 Me. 251; Allen v. Watson, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 205.
Request for delay of decision.— In Keyes v. Fulton, 42 Vt. 159, it was held that an agreement between the attorneys of the parties to exchange briefs before the award should be made, and the failure of one of the attorneys to comply with the agreement, together with a letter from the attorney of the other party requesting a delay of the decision on this ground, did not constitute a revocation of the submission.

Resubmission after award — Effect of revocation.— Where a pending action was submitted to arbitration, and an award made unsatisfactory to both parties, upon which they agreed to resubmit the matters in dispute, it was held that the second submission implied and contained in it an agreement to set aside the first award and a mutual release of either party absolutely from any obligation to abide such award, though one of the parties revoked the power of the arbitrators before a second award was made. however, in the case of a submission in a pending action not made a rule of court, that allowing the award to be entered as the judgment of the court, without objection, amounts to a confession of judgment for the sum found due by the award.[43]

3. TIME OF ENTRY OF RULE. A submission to arbitration may be made a rule of court after an award is made.[44]

K. Arbitration Bonds and Notes — 1. ARBITRATION BONDS. Common-law awards, made out of court, being non-enforceable save by action, it became customary for parties entering upon an arbitration to execute bonds, conditioned for the submission to arbitration and for the performance of the award. They are also authorized by the various arbitration statutes, and both at common law and under such statutes receive a liberal construction.[45]

2. ARBITRATION NOTES. A submission to arbitration is a good consideration for an arbitration note, and such a note is valid.[46]

III. THE ARBITRATORS.

A. Competency — 1. STATUTORY RESTRICTIONS. Any person may be selected to act as an arbitrator who is not prohibited from so acting by an express provision of a statute[47] or by reasons of public policy.[48]

2. FACTS AFFECTING IMPARTIALITY. The existence of any facts which may operate to affect the impartiality of arbitrators will render such arbitrators incompetent to make a valid award, provided such facts were unknown to the complaining party[49] — such as an interest of an arbitrator in the subject-matter of the contro-

Escrow of arbitration bond.— A mutual bond to abide the result of a common-law arbitration, placed in the hands of a third party, to be delivered up only on request of both parties, has been held enforceable although never delivered by such party, and although the losing party never requested it, but objected to its delivery, the bond appearing to have been "executed and delivered as the deed of each, to be an available security to whichever of them should have occasion to try its legal efficacy." Tyler v. Dyer, 13 Me. 41, 46.

A note given by an executor, on the submission to arbitration of a claim against his testator, does not bind him personally. He is only liable on it to the extent of the assets in his hands. Schoonmaker v. Roosa, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 301.

47. A woman, either married or single, is not incapacitated to act as arbitrator by reason of any common-law disability. Evans v. Ives, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 635, 38 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 393.

A statutory prohibition against judicial officers acting in any cause or proceeding in which they may be interested or related to either party does not apply to arbitrators if the parties, with knowledge of the interest or relationship, see fit to select them, since the reason of the statute rests upon the principle that the parties are drawn against their consent before judges, while arbitrators are voluntarily selected by the parties. Davis v. Forshee, 34 Ala. 107.

In Michigan a statute which prohibited any judge from practising, or having a partner who practises in the court for which he is a judge, has been held to be peremptory and applicable to arbitration proceedings. Gallagher v. Kern, 31 Mich. 138.

48. Judge self-appointed as arbitrator.— Under a statute permitting a submission to be filed with a court who is authorized to appoint arbitrators and enter judgment on the award, it has been held that the judge may not, in his judicial capacity, confer jurisdiction upon himself to act as an arbitrator. Drew v. Canady, 1 Mass. 158; Drew v. Mulikin, 5 N. H. 153. The contrary has been held where the statute authorizes the parties to nominate their own arbitrators, and the judges of the court are nominated. Hopkins v. Sodouskie, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 148; Galloway v. Webb, Hard. (Ky.) 318.

Failure to object on the ground of the incompetency of one of the arbitrators, because he was a judge of the court in which the award was entered, until after the cause was brought to the supreme court and final judgment rendered, has been held a sufficient waiver of the alleged incompetency to act as arbitrator. Sharp v. Loyless, 39 Ga. 678.

49. Arbitrators analogous to jurors.— The "arbitrators are said to be not only the judges, but the jurors, of the parties' own selection, chosen, it is supposed, for their disinterestedness. their intelligence, and moral fitness. Whatever, then, may be regarded as a good ground of objection to a juror, ought to obtain when urged against an arbitrator." Western Female Seminary v. Blair, 1 Disn. (Ohio) 370, 379. But see Shear v. Mosher, 8 Ill. App. 119, 124, wherein the court said: "It is the duty of an arbitrator, as of a juror or judge, to keep himself, as far as possible, free from any influence that would lead to impair his impartiality or expose him to the suspicion of prejudice. . . . The effect, however, of misconduct of an arbitrator upon an award may not be the same as that of a juror upon a verdict, for several reasons. He is voluntarily selected by the parties to the controversy, who are therefore estopped to complain of prejudice previously and honestly imbibed without fraud of the adverse party. A longer interval of time usually occurs between his selection and his service, subjecting him to greater exposure. And he is not specially advised of his duty and restrained in his conduct by the direction and authority of a court. Hence a greater latitude is to be expected and tolerated in his case than in that of a juror."

Lack of knowledge or information concerning the qualifications of arbitrators is not sufficient evidence of unfitness. Hart v. Kennedy, 47 N. J. Eq. 51, 20 Atl. 29.

An engineer who is a stock-holder in a railroad company is, if the fact of his being a stock-holder was unknown, incompetent to act as arbitrator upon disputes arising between the company and contractors, although the fact that he was employed as engineer by the company was known to the contractors. Milnor v. Georgia R., etc., Co., 4 Ga. 385. But see In re Elliott, etc., R. Co., 2 De G. & Sm. 17, 12 Jur. 445.

Bet of arbitrator on horse-race submitted. — It has been held that an award of stewards (who, by the rules of the association, were to be the arbitrators of all such disputes), upon a dispute as to the result of a horse-race, against a horse against which one of them had placed a bet, was not invalid on the ground that one of them was an interested arbitrator. Ellis v. Hooper, 3 H. & N. 766, 4 Jur. N. S. 1025, 28 L. J. Exch. 1, 7 Wkly. Rep. 15.

Indebtedness of an arbitrator to one of the parties is not, of itself, a sufficient objection to the award upon the ground of interest in the controversy (Wallis v. Carpenter, 13 Allen (Mass.) 19; Morgan v. Morgan, 1 Dowl. P. C. 611, 2 L. J. Exch. 56; Hall v. Wilson, 7 U. C. C. P. 272), especially if it appear that the indebtedness was small, not insecure, and not dependent, to any extent, on the result of the controversy (Anderson v. Burchett, 48 Kan. 153, 29 Pac. 315).

Mortgage, upon the furniture of an arbitrator, held by one of the parties does not, of itself, show such an interest in the controversy as to affect the competency of the arbitrator or the validity of the award. Mather v. Day, 106 Mich. 371, 64 N. W. 198.

Termination of interest.— Where, without the knowledge of the complaining party, one of two arbitrators was interested in the subject-matter of the controversy, and they failed to agree, gave notice to the parties thereof, and thereupon, after the interest of the arbitrator had ceased, a new agreement was made adding another arbitrator, with authority to make a majority award, it was held that the arbitrator was not disqualified to act under the subsequent agreement by reason of his interest, although the losing party did not obtain knowledge of such interest until after the award was made. Wilson v. Concord R. Co., 3 Allen (Mass.) 194.

51. Kinship of arbitrator.— Stinson v. Davis, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1942, 50 S. W. 550; Brown v. Leavitt, 26 Me. 251.

Equal relationship to both parties does not affect the competency of an arbitrator selected to settle a dispute between them. Matter of McGregor, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 191, 35 N. Y. St. 907.

Relationship interest of third party.— The fact that one of the arbitrators is related to the mortgagee of land, compensation for the taking of which by a railroad company was the subject of the arbitration, disqualifies such arbitrator to act if it appears that the railroad company had no knowledge of the existence of the mortgage or of the effect of such relationship. Stephenson v. Oatman, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 462.

Remote relationship.— The fact that an arbitrator was related to an officer of a company which was one of the contending parties has been held no sufficient objection to the validity of the award. Benning v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 34 L. C. Jur. 301, 6 Montreal Q. B. 385, 5 Montreal Super. Ct. 136 [affirmed in 20 Can. Supreme Ct. 177].

Transfer to an arbitrator's son, pending proceedings, of the interest of one of the parties in the subject-matter of the controversy, disqualifies such arbitrator to make an award unless the parties, with knowledge of the transaction, consent to the further action of the arbitrator; and the award cannot be upheld by showing that the fact did not change or affect his judgment. Spearman v. Wilson, 44 Ga. 473.

Brush v. Fisher, 70 Mich. 469, 38 N. W. 446, 14 Am. St. Rep. 510.

An opinion which has been changed by the evidence cannot be taken as an imputation of unfairness or partiality of an arbitrator. Tyler v. Dyer, 13 Me. 41.

An opinion unknown to the successful party, expressed by an arbitrator prior to the hearing as to the merits of the controversy, is not sufficient evidence of partiality upon which to avoid the award. Wheeling Gas Co. v. Wheeling, 5 W. Va. 448.

Opinion upon true knowledge of the facts.

nections between an arbitrator and a party which are calculated to influence the judgment of the arbitrator upon the matter submitted.[53]

3. WAIVER OF INCOMPETENCY. Notwithstanding the existence of facts which may influence the judgment of an arbitrator, if a party, with knowledge of such facts, submits his case to the decision of such person, the objection is waived,[54]

— Where it was objected that an arbitrator had expressed an opinion before hearing the controversy, and it appeared that, before the arbitrator was appointed, the successful party had honestly stated to him the principal facts in the case upon which the arbitrator had expressed an opinion, and the proposition was one with reference to which few men, upon the facts, would differ, and it did not appear that, by reason of such previous opinion, any injury had been done or could have been done, and there was nothing to show that the arbitrator had acted partially, the court on appeal refused to disturb the judgment of the lower court upholding the award. Morville v. The American Tract Soc., 123 Mass. 129, 25 Am. Rep. 40.

Previous opinion which the facts could not change.— Where it appeared that the facts before the arbitrators were undisputed and that the award thereon could not have been different without violating the law applicable to the facts, it was held that the forming of an opinion by one of the arbitrators before the hearing as to the merits of the controversy, from his knowledge thereof, would not invalidate the award. Graves v. Fisher, 5 Me. 69, 17 Am. Dec. 203.

53. Employment of an arbitrator by one of the parties in a capacity not in any way related to the subject-matter of the arbitration has been held not to affect the competency of the arbitrator unless it could also be shown that such fact resulted in bias or partiality favorable to the employer. Eckersley v. Mersey Docks, etc., Board, [1894] 2 Q. B. 667, 9 Reports 827, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 308; Ives v. Williams, [1894] 2 Ch. 478, 63 L. J. Ch. 521, 70 L. T. Rep. N. Regular employment as solicitor of the estate of which one of the parties was executor was held sufficient to disqualify an arbitrator, although he was not engaged as attorney or counsel in the matter in controversy and did not concur in the award. Sumner v. Barnhill, 12 Nova Scotia 501.

Former employment, as counsel in another matter, of an arbitrator by one of the parties in whose favor he made the award, although the fact was not known to the other party, has been held not sufficient, of itself, to establish incompetency. Goodrich v. Hulbert, 123 Mass. 190, 25 Am. Rep. 60.

Acting as counsel in a similar matter between other parties does not, as a matter of law, disqualify a person to act as arbitrator, in the absence of a showing as a matter of fact that he was biased or partial. Cheney v. Martin, 127 Mass. 304.

Prior services as arbitrator in similar matters for the same party in whose favor he makes an award does not, necessarily, render an arbitrator incompetent. Stemmer v. Scottish Ins. Co., 33 Oreg. 65, 49 Pac. 588, 53 Pac. 498.

Subsequent selection as arbitrator in other similar proceedings by the successful party is not legal ground of objection to the validity of an award. Benning v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 34 L. C. Jur. 301, 6 Montreal Q. B. 385, 5 Montreal Super. Ct. 136 [affirmed in 20 Can. Supreme Ct. 177].

Being a witness in a similar matter for one of the parties does not establish the incompetency of the person to act as arbitrator. Haigh v. London, etc., R. Co., [1896] 1 Q. B. 649, 65 L. J. Q. B. 511, 74 L. T. Rep. N. S. 655, 44 Wkly. Rep. 618.

An agent of one of the parties is incompetent to act as arbitrator where the submission to arbitration was procured by a representation that the person named was a disinterested person. Bradshaw v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 16 N. Y. Suppl. 639, 42 N. Y. St. 79.

Evidence of knowledge of incompetency — Constructive notice from records not applica-and the same rule obtains where a party has agreed to submit to arbitration without knowledge of such facts, and afterward, during the progress of the hearing, obtains knowledge thereof and proceeds, without objection, to the making of an award.[55]

B. Appointment. Unless the appointment of arbitrators is made in the agreement of submission[56] it is essential to their authority that further action appointing persons to act as arbitrators should be taken either in accordance with the agreement to arbitrate[57] or in accordance with the provisions of a statutory requirement.[58] But, independent of the agreement to submit and of a subsequent appointment, if the parties attend proceedings before persons acting as arbitrators without objecting to their authority, this, in itself, operates as a sufficient appointment or waiver of an irregularity therein;[59] and, by subsequent agreement of ble.— Where the sufficiency of an award was questioned on the ground of interest of an arbitrator by reason of the fact that he was related to a mortgagee of the land, damages for the taking of which by a railroad company was the subject of arbitration, and of which mortgage the company did not have actual notice at the time of the submission to arbitration, it was held that the company could not be charged, constructively, with notice of such mortgage, because it had been duly recorded, so as to hold that the company, with notice of the facts, had waived the objection to the incompetency of the arbitrator. Stephenson v. Oatman, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 462.

Notice to directors of a corporation.—Where an award is questioned on the ground of interest of an arbitrator because he was a stockholder of the other party, and the other party seeks to establish a waiver of the disqualification by showing that the first party had notice of the fact objected to, the fact of notice is not established by evidence that such arbitrator, a year prior to the submission, in the presence of a director of the party sought to be charged with notice, mentioned the fact of his being such stock-holder while discussing an entirely different transaction. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Canton Co., 70 Md. 405, 17 Atl. 394.

Knowledge of incompetency may be presumed, in the absence of a distinct averment to the contrary, in order to uphold an award. Ledlie v. Gamble, 35 Mo. App. 355.

Limits and extent of rule.— However, although a waiver of incompetency may be established as before stated, such arbitrator is not thereby invested with authority to act partially; and the courts, by reason of the existence of facts which would naturally influence the judgment, will closely scrutinize an award made by such arbitrator. Sweet v. Morrison, 116 N. Y. 19, 22 N. E. 276, 26 N. Y. St. 445, 15 Am. St. Rep. 376.

56. For sufficiency of appointment by agreement to submit to arbitration see supra, II, F, 8, e.

As to appointment of umpire or special arbitrator see infra, V, B.

57. Appointment by third party — Action of majority.— The committee of an association who are authorized, by an agreement of parties, to select and appoint arbitrators to settle matters in dispute between them may, unless otherwise provided in the agreement, make such an appointment by action of their majority. Burleigh v. Ford, 61 N. H. 360.

Refusal by one of the parties to appoint arbitrators prevents an arbitration under the agreement. The remedy for such refusal is for breach of the contract. Williams v. Schmidt, 54 Ill. 205; Copper v. Wells, 1 N. J. Eq. 10.

Refusal to appoint after void award.— After the return of an award which is void, or after the arbitrators have become incompetent to act and one of the parties refuses to agree to a new selection of arbitrators, the other party may sue at law for the amount of his demand. New York v. Butler, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 325.

Indorsement of acceptance on the agreement for arbitration, by an arbitrator upon his appointment as provided by such agreement, has been held not to be an essential prerequisite to the exercise of his authority. Witz v. Tregallas, 82 Md. 351, 33 Atl. 718.

58. Statutory requirements.— Jones v. Bond, 76 Ga. 517; Eyre v. Leicester, [1892] 1 Q. B. 136, 56 J. P. 228, 61 L. J. Q. B. 438, 65 L. T. Rep. N. S. 733, 40 Wkly. Rep. 203; Brazilian Submarine Tel. Co. v. Western, etc., Tel. Co., 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 234.

A greater or less number of arbitrators than that provided by statute, appointed by the parties to a submission, will prevent the award from being enforced in the special manner provided by statute, although it may be valid at common law. Price v. Byne, 57 Ga. 176; Martine v. Harvey, 12 Ill. App. 587; Bowes v. French, 11 Me. 182; Myers v. Easterwood, 60 Tex. 107.

the parties, the controversy may be submitted to a different number of arbitrators from that originally agreed upon.[60]

C. Substitution. Persons other than those originally appointed, in the submission, as arbitrators may be substituted, under the same submission, by subsequent agreement of the parties;[61] but not by one of the parties without the consent of the other,[62] nor by the arbitrators originally appointed unless in accordance with an express authority to them in the submission,[63] or in accordance with the provisions of a statute under which the proceedings are taken;[64] nor by 60. Subsequent agreement of parties.— Blanchard v. Murray, 15 Vt. 548.

61. Indorsement on submission.—An agreement of the parties to substitute arbitrators, which is indorsed on the original submission with express reference to the contents thereof, is obligatory upon the parties and constitutes sufficient authority in the substituted arbitrators to act under the original submission. McClure v. Gulick, 17 N. J. L. 340.

Indorsement, on submission under seal, of an agreement to substitute arbitrators with reference to the contents of the submission does not admit of the objection to an award by the substituted arbitrators that the indorsement was not under seal. Tunno v. Bird, 5 B. & Ad. 488, 3 L. J. K. B. 5, 2 N. & M. 328, 27 E. C. L. 209. See also Rone v. Hines, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 94.

Evidence of agreement to substitute.— In an arbitration under rule of court, if an entry is made of record of the substitution of an arbitrator, and the parties proceed before such substituted arbitrator without objection, this is sufficient evidence upon which to base a finding of an agreement to substitute. Chapman v. Ewing, 78 Ala. 403; Brigham v. Packard, 116 Mass. 195. But see Hicks v. McDonnell, 99 Mass. 459.

Presumption of authorized substitution.— A substitution of arbitrators which might have been authorized will, in the absence of a contrary showing, be presumed to have been made upon sufficient authority. Goldman v. Goldman, 50 La. Ann. 29, 22 So. 967; Bemus v. Clark, 29 Pa. St. 251.

62. Consent of both parties.— McCawley v. Brown, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 132.

63. By original arbitrators.— Hills v. Home Ins. Co., 129 Mass. 345; Crowell v. Davis, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 293; Mitchell v. Wilhelm, 6 Watts (Pa.) 259; Steeley v. Irvine, 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 128.

Absence of an arbitrator in Europe is sufficient evidence of his inability to act to justify the appointment of another under an authority given to arbitrators to make the appointment in case of refusal or inability of any of them to perform the duties imposed. Binsse v. Wood, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 624.

Where an arbitrator dies before an award is made his place cannot be filled unless done pursuant to a provision in the agreement to submit. Huggins v. Neill, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 103, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 467.

Such power is not to be inferred from a clause in the submission that if "either of the referees aforesaid do not attend at the time and place appointed, another or others are to be chosen in their room," as this constitutes merely a contract to secure additional arbitrators if necessary. Potter v. Sterrett, 24 Pa. St. 411.

Presumption of proper substitution.— In the absence of special objection, to an award made by persons other than the original arbitrators in a case where substitution was proper under the terms of the submission, that the substitution was not regularly made, it will be presumed that the award was regular, or that the irregularity, if any existed, was waived. Henneigh v. Kramer, 50 Pa. St. 530.

Waiver of unauthorized substitution by participation.— Where a vacancy was filled by arbitrators without express authority therefor, and one of the parties objected upon this ground, but proceeded to trial upon a written agreement of the other party that objections upon this ground would not thereby be waived, it was held, nevertheless, that the participation in the proceedings waived the irregularity, because, had the complaining party been successful, he could have enforced the award, and, for the sake of the mutuality, it must also be enforceable against him. Christman v. Moran, 9 Pa. St. 487.

64. Compliance with statutory requirement.— Under a statute providing for substituting arbitrators in place of those who may fail to attend at the designated time and place, by the parties in writing signed as the original submission, or by attending arbitrators by memorandum on the submission, it was held that a failure to comply with these provisions would prevent an entry of judgment upon the award. Dudley v. Farris, 79 Ala. 187.

Necessity for substitution.— The substitution of a third arbitrator, by the other two who attend the first meeting, is authorized by a statute permitting substitution in case of failure to attend such meeting where it appears that the third arbitrator was, in fact, present, but refused to act because of an interest in the controversy, it being held that he was not present as an arbitrator. Stiles v. Carlisle, etc., Turnpike Road Co., 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 286.

Time of substitution by arbitrators.— Under a statute authorizing attending arbitrators to substitute, in place of arbitrators who failed to attend the first meeting, other persons by them to be selected, two arbitrators have no authority to appoint a third, who attended the first meeting but who failed to attend the second. Sickel v. Keach, 2 Walk. (Pa.) 535.

the court, without the consent of the parties, where an award is set aside in equity.[65]

D. Oath — 1. Necessity For Oath — a. At Common Law. The authority to act as arbitrator under a submission at common law does not require that the arbitrators should be sworn,[66] unless it is stipulated in the agreement to arbitrate that such oath shall be administered.[67]

b. Statutory Requirements. In arbitration proceedings under a statute requiring that arbitrators shall be sworn as a condition of their authority to act, the award is invalid unless the statute has been substantially complied with.[68] But

After the arbitrators have assembled and been sworn, and thereafter one of their number fails to attend, the others have no power, under a statute permitting a substitution upon failure to attend, to supply the vacancy. Wilson v. Cross, 7 Watts (Pa.) 495.

Proof of notice to absent arbitrators, sometimes required to be made to attending arbitrators in order to authorize the choice of a substitute, may be effected in any manner satisfactory to the arbitrators, even without testimony. Reesman v. Kittanning Ins. Co., 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 1.

Statutory and common-law arbitration.— The fact that, in proceedings under a statute relating to arbitration, it is required that the arbitrators shall be sworn does not require the swearing of arbitrators as a prerequisite to their authority to act under a submission at common law or under any proceeding other than a statutory arbitration. Willingham v. Harrell, 36 Ala. 583; Broadwell v. Denman, 7 N. J. L. 278; Howard v. Sexton, 4 N. Y. 157; Cutter v. Cutter, 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. 470; Otis v. Northrop, 2 Miles (Pa.) 350.

67. Stipulation in submission.— State v. Jackson, 36 Ohio St. 281; Crosby v. Moses, 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. 146, holding that a false oath, under a stipulation in the submission for an oath, cannot constitute a public offense.

Where parties to submission evidently sought, by the language used, to invest their arbitrator with such power as the code conferred upon arbitrators under a statutory submission, but the arbitration was not under a statute because the submission was to one instead of three arbitrators and a statutory oath was not directed to be taken, it was held that these facts did not indicate that the parties intended to impose upon their arbitrator, as a condition precedent to the exercise of his authority, that he should take the statutory oath. Southern Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Benjamin, 113 Ga. 1088, 39 S. E. 489.

Presumption of waiver.— It will be presumed that an oath was dispensed with in the submission to arbitration if the parties proceeded without demanding it. Payne v. Crawford, 97 Ala. 604, 10 So. 911, 11 So. 725; Greer v. Canfield, 38 Nebr. 169, 56 N. W. 883.

All submissions in writing within statute. — In Missouri and New York it has been held that the statute requiring that, in cases of all submissions in writing, the arbitrators must be sworn applies where the submission is in writing, although there be no clause for entering judgment upon the award under the statute, and that an award made by arbitrators in disregard of this requirement is void. Fassett v. Fassett, 41 Mo. 516; Walt v. Huse, 38 Mo. 210; Valle v. North Missouri R. Co., 37 Mo. 445; Day v. Hammond, 57 N. Y. 479, 15 Am. Rep. 522; Cope v. Gilbert, 4 Den. (N. in those cases which hold the oath to be not jurisdictional, the requirement is material only when the oath is not waived.[69]

2. Evidence of Oath. Where it appears by recital or otherwise that an oath was administered, it will be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that the oath was duly administered in compliance with the requirement.[70] Unless the fact that the arbitrators were sworn is required to be shown by recital in the award it may be shown by extrinsic evidence.[71]

3. Waiver of Oath — a. Power of Parties to Waive — (1) Oath Held Jurisdictional. It has been held in some cases that the oath required by

A different oath, not substantially equivalent to that prescribed by statute to be administered to arbitrators, will invalidate the award unless it appears that the parties waived the irregularity. Wilkins v. Van Winkle, 78 Ga. 557, 3 S. E. 761, per Bleckley, J. [cited with approval in Sisson v. Pittman, 113 Ga. 166, 38 S. E. 315]. The contrary has been held in Kentucky in a substantially similar situation and with reference to a similar statute. Snyder v. Rouse, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 625. See also Vaughn v. Graham, 11 Mo. 575, where an oath different in form from that prescribed in the statute was held to be a substantial compliance.

The oath need not be in writing, in the absence of a specific requirement to that effect (Davis v. Berger, 54 Mich. 652, 20 N. W. 629); and, where required to be in writing and signed by the arbitrators, their failure to reduce the oath to writing and sign it until after the hearing will not vitiate the award, in the absence of objections to their proceeding without it, the arbitrators having, in fact, been sworn (Ogden v. Forney, 33 Iowa 205).

The oath may be administered by one of the arbitrators to the others if the person administering the oath is one of the officers designated by the statute. In re Kenny, 3 Nova Scotia 14.

Time of oath.— The oath need not be administered to an arbitrator before fixing the time and place of hearing. Ruckman v. Ransom, 35 N. J. L. 565.

Reswearing.— It has been held that, where arbitrators were sworn under a written submission which did not provide for statutory judgment on the award, and thereafter the submission was amended to cure the defect, it was not necessary, in compliance with the statute, to reswear the arbitrators. Bridgman v. Bridgman, 23 Mo. 272.

Where the arbitrators disagree and appoint an umpire, upon which umpire is devolved the whole burden of the award, it has been held that, the persons first appointed not having acted as arbitrators in making an award, it was not necessary that they should have been sworn. Scudder v. Johnson, 5 Mo. 551.

A mere jurat annexed to an arbitrator's report is not a sufficient showing of record that the oath was taken. Penny v. Carl, 10 La. Ann. 202.

An incomplete certificate of the oath by a justice of the peace may be amended after the award by adding to the signature the words "Justice of the Peace." Dorr v. Hill, 62 N. H. 506, 508.

Evidence of a statement by an arbitrator that the arbitrators were not sworn is not sufficient evidence upon which to impeach an award for non-compliance with the statute. Kankakee, etc., R. Co. v. Alfred, 3 Ill. App. 511.

The oath required by a submission will not be regarded technically, because "under no circumstances, could a falsehood in such a proceeding be a public offense, and the oath was only meant to bind strongly the conscience;" and it was, therefore, held that a showing that the oath was administered within the jurisdiction of the officer, although as drawn up and signed the venue was informal and no scilicet appeared, evinced a sufficient compliance with the requirement of the submission. Crosby v. Moses, 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. 146, 149.

A recital of the oath has been held essential to validity of the award where the arbitration proceeds under a statute requiring such oath as a condition precedent to jurisdiction. statute to be taken by arbitrators is a prerequisite to the exercise of jurisdiction, that their authority to act is derived from the statute requiring the oath, and that, therefore, the requirement cannot be dispensed with or waived by the parties.[72]

(II) Oath Held Not Jurisdictional. However, the general rule established in most of the states is that the authority of arbitrators to act under a statute requiring an oath to be taken is derived, not from the statute, but from the agreement to submit to arbitration; that the oath is prescribed for the benefit of the parties to secure to them, if they desire it, a greater obligation upon the arbitrators to faithfully discharge their duties, and that, therefore, the requirement may be waived.[73] In case of a provision for an oath in the agreement to submit, it is evident that the requirement is not jurisdictional, and may, therefore, be waived.[74]

(III) Rights of Arbitration Surety. The rights of sureties upon a bond given to secure the performance of an award are not such as to affect the power of the party to waive a provision that the arbitrators shall be sworn.[75]

72. View that oath cannot be waived.— French v. Moseley, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 247; Lile v. Barnett, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 166; Overton v. Alpha, 13 La. Ann. 558; Bethea v. Hood, 9 La. In Missouri it has been held that the oath required by statute might be waived by an express agreement, and the earlier cases which established the rule that the oath could not be waived because it was jurisdictional and the character of the arbitrators judicial were distinguished upon the ground that this rule did not relate to an express waiver. Tucker v. Allen, 47 Mo. 488. See also Valle v. North Missouri R. Co., 37 Mo. 445, 450, holding that the objection for failure to take the oath could not be raised for the first time on appeal, because it was said that, had the question been raised in the court below, proof might have been produced "that it was expressly waived by the parties." Finally, in Cochran v. Bartle, 91 Mo. 636, 3 S. W. 854, the doctrine of the earlier cases — that the oath required by statute could not be waived — appears to have been expressly overruled, and the contrary doctrine that such provision may be waived, either expressly or by implication, from the circumstances attending the proceedings, is established.

Knowledge of requirement.— It is immaterial that the party waiving the oath of arbitrators did not know that the statute required an oath. Cochran v. Bartle, 91 Mo. 636, 3 S. W. 854.

Failure to take the oath is a technical defense; hence, after a case has been regularly closed, it should not be reopened for the purpose of permitting a party to show invalidity of the award on account of failure to take the oath (Winship v. Jewett, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 173), and the objection should not be entertained for the first time on appeal (Valle v. North Missouri R. Co., 37 Mo. 445).

74. Southern Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Benjamin, 113 Ga. 1088, 39 S. E. 489, where the court said: "The parties undertook originally to create a court for themselves outside of the statutory provisions. Their consent alone gave to it jurisdiction, their agreement alone vested it with power, and the matter as to when they agreed just so they did agree, must be immaterial; and if, after prescribing that the arbitrator should be sworn, they subsequently expressly agreed to waive this requirement, it was, after all, but a change they made in the submission."

b. Method of Waiver. If the statute prescribing the oath to be taken provides also a particular method of waiving it — as that it may be waived by agreement in writing — the provision for waiver is exclusive, and unless the provision is substantially complied with the waiver cannot be sustained, and no waiver in such case will be implied.[76] In the absence of a statutory provision on the subject, a waiver may be established by any competent evidence of the fact,[77] or it may be implied from the fact that the parties appear before the arbitrators and proceed with the hearing without objection,[78] provided such proceeding is had with knowledge of the omission to take the oath.[79]

E. Nature and Extent of Authority — 1. Necessity For Impartiality — a. Judicial Character of Arbitrators. When persons have accepted an appointment to act as arbitrators they assume a quasi-judicial character and become amenable to the same principles of justice which require judicial officers, in the exercise of their functions, to be impartial between the parties.[80]

b. Agency of Arbitrators. For the purpose of illustrating the nature of the functions devolving upon arbitrators, they have been regarded as the agents of both parties alike, so as to require equal justice between them, without favor to either.[81] But, however honest may be an arbitrator's intentions, it is highly improper that he should regard himself as the agent or partisan of the party appointing him; and, because of the rule requiring impartiality of arbitrators, an award which appears to have been made as the result of partisanship should not, irrespective of the honesty of the arbitrator's motive, be allowed to stand.[82]

the court saying: "But it is contended that such waiver could not be made so as to bind Benjamin, the surety on the bond. Why not? Benjamin had nothing to do with the submission. He was not a party to it; he had no differences to be settled by the arbitration. His obligation bound him to pay the award rendered against his principal, and his only right to attack the award rested on its illegality."

Gross mistake as to form of oath.— Where, in an action to enforce an award, it was sought to establish a waiver of the requirement to swear arbitrators by showing the circumstance that the parties proceeded with the arbitration without objecting to the omission, and it appeared that an oath had been taken, though not in the form prescribed by statute and so as not to be a substantial compliance with the statute, it was held that a waiver ought not to be implied because, as the court said: "They set out in their first act with the commission of such a gross mistake, that it is very likely their opinion about law was wrong all through." 2. AUTHORITY TO DETERMINE THE LAW — a. Under General Submission. Unless restricted by a reservation in the agreement of submission of a controversy to the final decision of arbitrators, they are, necessarily, given the power to decide upon all questions of law as well as of fact which either directly or incidentally arise in the consideration or decision of the matters embraced in the submission.[83]

b. To Disregard the Law. Arbitrators, who are given authority, under a general submission, to decide all questions of law and fact, are not bound by any strict rules of law or equity, but are free to do substantial justice between the parties according to such principles as may seem to them best adapted to establish the right of the particular matter before them.[84]

(U. C.) 84. But it has been held that, where it appeared that an honest result had been reached, the fact that one arbitrator unconsciously permitted his jealousy of the other to slightly warp his judgment, and that the other adjusted his judgment to balance the supposed leaning of the other arbitrator, would not be sufficient to vitiate the award. Silver v. Connecticut River Lumber Co., 40 Fed. 192. 2. Seeking Advice. There is no substantial reason why the arbitrators may not honestly seek the advice of outsiders for the purpose of enabling them to better understand the matters before them and to perform the duties confided to them.[87] It is, however, essential to the proper exercise of the arbitrators' duty that, in acting upon the advice so received, they should exercise their individual judgment and not accept as final the advice received unless it be in accordance with their own views.[88]

3. Ministerial Assistance. It is not an improper delegation of the authority confided to them for the arbitrators to employ other persons to perform ministerial duties connected with the arbitration — such as the assistance of a clerk or accountant,[89] the measurement of a tract of land involved in the arbitration,[90] the

the third authority to decide a point of law, and then draw the award in accordance with his decision. Filling blank after signing award.— Two arbitrators and an umpire, with authority to make a majority award, may, upon disagreement, as to one item, about which the umpire is not ready to decide, agree that the award shall be signed in blank, and that one of the arbitrators shall fill in the amount agreed upon, deducting or adding the item which is the subject of disagreement, according to the subsequent decision of the umpire. Filling the blank in such case is an exercise of ministerial and not judicial authority by the single arbitrator, and a subsequent decision of the umpire, agreeing with one of the arbitrators, constitutes a good majority award. Prudence and discretion would seem to require that arbitrators should ask the parties to be present when they communicate with any person for advice as to the law, although a failure to do so is not ground for avoiding the award, unless it can be shown that they were misled as to the law. Therefore, it has been held that the communication, by one of the parties to the arbitrators, of a legal opinion correct in itself, which is acted upon by them, does not vitiate the award. As to delegation of authority see supra, III, F, 1.

Previous agreement, made by arbitrators, to be bound by advice of an outsider, is altogether unwarranted and, if complied with, vitiates the award. Hopcraft v. Hickman, 3 L. J. Ch. 43, 2 Sim. & St. 130.

The adoption of another's opinion as the opinion of the arbitrators themselves, upon the investigation of a matter in which the person whose opinion is adopted possesses special skill, is not improper provided the opinion is not contrary to the views of the arbitrators. Bangor Sav. Bank v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 85 Me. 68, 26 Atl. 991, 35 Am. St. Rep. 341, 20 L. R. A. 650; Emery v. Wase, 5 Ves. Jr. 846, 8 Ves. Jr. 505, 7 Rev. Rep. 109; Rogers v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., 10 Manitoba 667.

The adoption of opinion of an intended umpire by arbitrators, such opinion being contrary to the opinion of one of them, and without making such third person an umpire, is irregular and unauthorized by a submission permitting them to make such person an umpire in case of disagreement. Eads v. Williams, 4 De G. M. & G. 674, 1 Jur. N. S. 193, 53 Eng. Ch. 528, 24 L. J. Ch. 531.

89. An accountant must not be permitted to interfere with the award.— His duties are ministerial and subject to the supervision of the arbitrators, who should exercise their own judgment as to the result — otherwise the award may be avoided. Haigh v. Haigh, 8 Jur. N. S. 983, 31 L. J. Ch. 420, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 507.

Employing the agent of one of the parties as a clerk in figuring amounts has been held not an unwarranted or irregular delegation of authority, where the other party was present and made no objection, and it appeared that no harm had been done. Rounds v. Aiken Mfg. Co., 58 S. C. 299, 36 S. E. 714.

The result arrived at by experts appointed by arbitrators to examine books and vouchers submitted to them should not, if there is any objection to the correctness of the results, be accepted by the arbitrators without a personal examination. Shipman v. Fletcher, 82 Va. 601.

sale of property authorized by the submission,[91] or the drawing of the award by an outsider,[92] by one of the parties,[93] or by the attorney of one of the parties.[94]

G. Termination of Authority — 1. When and How Authority Terminates — a. By Completion of Award — (I) Rule Stated. The authority of arbitrators to act as such terminates with the completion of the award,[95] notwithstanding the award, as completed, is not valid.[96]

(II) What Constitutes Completion. The question of what constitutes a completion of the award may depend upon the terms of the submission. If delivery is required the award is not completed, and, hence, the arbitrators' authority does not terminate until the award is delivered according to the submission.[97] When delivery is not required a question of what constitutes a complete and final award is to be determined by looking to the intention of the arbitrators.[98] The final intention of the arbitrators is sufficiently evidenced by

93. Deception by party drawing award.— The mere fact that one of the parties draws an award for the arbitrators in the absence of the other party is not of itself sufficient to invalidate the award; but where it was shown that the award as drawn and signed was erroneous and deceptive and in favor of the party drawing it — as where it recited that the arbitrators examined the premises in controversy after the submission, and that the valuation thereof was a money value, both statements being contrary to the facts — the award was held invalid in equity. Dickinson v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 7 W. Va. 390.

94. Award drawn by attorney of successful party.— After an award has been agreed upon, there is no evident impropriety in employing the attorney of the prevailing party to draw it up according to the agreement, provided the award is afterward submitted to the arbitrators, and adopted and signed by them. Steere v. Brownell, 113 Ill. 415; Kane v. Fond du Lac, 40 Wis. 495. It has, however, been held that although there is no necessary impropriety in employing the attorney of one of the parties to draft the award, yet that this practice is not to be commended. 98. Completion when delivery not required. — Fargo v. Reighard, 13 Ind. App. 39, 41 N. E. 74; Baby v. Davenport, 2 U. C. Q. B. 65.

Under an authority to make more than one award, the question of whether or not the award which has been made was intended to be a last and final award is one of fact, to be determined by all the circumstances of the case. Dowse v. Coxe, 3 Bing. 20, 3 L. J. C. P. O. S. 127, 10 Moore C. P. 272, 28 Rev. Rep. 565, 11 E. C. L. 20.

Reading an award to the parties, after it had been signed and sealed, for the purpose of entertaining any objections which might be made thereto, shows that the arbitrators intended that the award as read should not operate as a final award in case a valid objection thereto could be made; and, therefore, where, in such a case, upon objection, the award was altered, again signed, and delivered, it was held that the latter was the only final award. Byars v. Thompson, 12 Leigh (Va.) 550, 37 Am. Dec. 680.

Tentative award.— It is not a final exercise of authority for arbitrators to submit to the parties a tentative award, which is not finally signed and sealed when presented, for the purpose of allowing them to make objections, so as to prevent the arbitrators from acting upon objections thereupon made and correcting the award accordingly. Betsill v. Betsill, 30 S. C. 505, 9 S. E. 652.

The delivery of an informal decision as to one item submitted to arbitration has been held to terminate the arbitrators' authority, so as to preclude the subsequent delivery, on the same day, of the former decision of all the matters submitted. Flannery v. Sahagian, 134 N. Y. 85, 31 N. E. 319, 45 N. Y. St. 598 [reversing 12 N. Y. Suppl. 56, 34 N. Y. St. 887].

the announcement of their decision even when not in writing,[99] the execution and publication or notice of their decision when in writing,[1] or, in any case, by delivery of the award.[2]

b. By Inability to Make an Award. The authority of arbitrators terminates upon notice by them to the parties of their inability to make an award under the terms of the submission, and they cannot afterward, without the consent of the parties, assume to act under the original authority.[3] Upon a disagreement, requiring the appointment of an umpire and submission of the matters in controversy to him, and with whom the arbitrators have no power to concur, the authority of such arbitrators to act is at an end.[4]

Possession of an award by one of the parties is sufficient prima-facie evidence that the arbitrators delivered it to him as a final award. Lansdale v. Kendall, 4 Dana (Ky.) 613.

Presumption as to time of delivery of annexed explanation.— Under a submission to arbitrate all differences, including the costs of a former action, an award was made and signed for a certain sum, generally, and, on the same day the arbitrators — to prevent misapprehension, as was presumed — affixed a statement of a specified portion for costs of the arbitration and the balance for costs of the former suit. In an action upon the award for the latter portion alone it was presumed, in the absence of a showing that the original award was delivered prior to the supplemental statement, that they were both delivered at the same time. Walker v. Merrill, 13 Me. 173.

3. A subsequent meeting, on the same day of a disagreement and notice to the parties of inability to make an award, the subsequent meeting being upon the suggestion of one of the parties, should be submitted to the jury in an action upon the award with an instruction that the verdict should be for defendant unless it appears that the parties afterward agreed to abide by any award which the arbitrators might make. Couch v. Harrison, 68 Ark. 580, 60 S. W. 957.

Separation of three arbitrators after disagreement does not necessarily imply a termination of authority of two of the arbitrators thereafter to make a majority award, as it may be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the separation was temporary only, and because the third arbitrator did not assent to the finding of the other two. Baltes v. Bass Foundry, etc., Works, 129 Ind. 185, 28 N. E. 319.

Where, by statute, the concurrence of all is necessary, a report, to the court to which the award is made returnable, that the arbitrators are unable to agree terminates their authority, and they cannot thereafter proceed to make an award. Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Mounts, 7 Ind. 669.

Award of arbitrators upon opinion of umpire.— Where, upon disagreement, an umpire had been called in and an award was afterward made by the original arbitrators, such award being based merely upon the opinion of the umpire, who did not execute the award, it was held that such determination could have no validity. Daniel v. Daniel, 6 Dana (Ky.) 93. But it has been held that a recital in an award, which did not show that there had been any disagreement, that the arbitrators had "considered the decision of the umpire," would not invalidate the award, be-

c. By Expiration of Time-Limit — (i) Time Fixed by Submission. Whenever, by the terms of the submission, either at common law or under rule of court, the award is required to be made within a specified time, the authority of the arbitrators terminates upon the expiration of the time specified.[5]

(ii) Time Fixed by Statute. In arbitrations under a statute which fixes the time within which the award must be made and returned to the designated court, as a general rule the designation of the time-limit is held to be jurisdictional and the authority of the arbitrators to end with the expiration of the time;[6] but, in some instances, statutory designations of a time-limit have been held directory merely, for failure to observe which the consequence is not to terminate the arbitrator's authority.[7] cause the recital could be rejected as surplusage. Harlow v. Read, 1 C. B. 733, 3 Dowl. & L. 203, 9 Jur. 642, 14 L. J. C. P. 239, 50 E. C. L. 733. See also Matter of Cayley, 3 U. C. Q. A failure to deliver upon demand, on the day on which the award was required to be ready for delivery, has been held to terminate the authority of the arbitrators, so that a delivery after the day could not be made. Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Saund. 327*c*, note 3.

In the absence of a demand for delivery and in the absence of facts showing that it was not ready for delivery on the day named, it has been held no objection to an award that it was delivered a day after the day named in the submission upon which it should be ready for delivery, the presumption being that it was ready. Owen v. Boerum, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 187.

The designation of a certain hour of a certain date, on or before which an award shall be made, does not authorize an award on that day after the hour named. Elliot v. Hanson, 39 Mich. 157.

Withholding award beyond time-limit for correction.—Where an award was agreed upon by three arbitrators having authority to make a majority award, and it was drawn up and signed by two of them within the time-limit and delivered to the third to be signed by him and handed to the parties, and the third arbitrator discovered a mistake, which was afterward corrected with the consent of the two who had signed it, and finally signed and delivered after the time-limit, it was held that no effect could be given to the award, either as a majority award as first signed or as a unanimous award as subsequently corrected. Wilson v. Kerr, 2 N. Brunsw. 280.

Construction of agreement fixing time.— Where the submission contained a provision requiring the arbitrators "to meet and determine said matters on the first of August, 1858, and to adjourn from day to day until concluded, and within five days thereafter file the same in the District Court," it was held a sufficient compliance with the requirements for the arbitrators to meet on the day named, adjourn to the following day, on that day agree upon their award, and file it in court on August 23d. Fink v. Fink, 8 Iowa 312, 313.

Presumption from date of award.— Where an award bears date within the time limited by the submission it will be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that the award was made and published within that time. Agreement to waive statutory limit.— In Indiana, although the time within which an award shall be made is prescribed by statute, it has been held that the parties may waive this provision, and in their submission agree

(III) Extension of Time-Limit. The time within which an award is required to be made may be extended by subsequent agreement of the parties, without other limitation than that which affects their powers to enter into the original submission.[8] So an extension may be made by arbitrators, if by so doing they act in conformity to the terms of a submission or statute which authorizes it,[9] upon the time for its completion. Conrad v. Johnson, 20 Ind. 421.

Forfeiture of compensation.— In Pennsylvania, under the statutory provision requiring arbitrators to file their award in the prothonotary's office within seven days, it has been held that an omission to comply with this provision does not terminate the authority of the arbitrators to make an award, but only forfeits their right to compensation. Acknowledgment of extension.— An agreement for extending the time within which an award may be made need not be acknowledged before a justice of the peace as in the case of an original submission under Minn. Gen. Stat. (1878), c. 89, which permits an extension and requires acknowledgment only of the original submission. Heglund v. Allen, 30 Minn. 38, 14 N. W. 57.

An agreement after expiration of time for extension of the time for making an award has been held to be defective. Jones v. Powell, 1 W. W. & H. 60.

Necessity to seal extension agreement.— The time limited in a sealed submission for making an award may be extended by agreement of the parties, not under seal, in any case where there was no necessity to seal the original submission. Wood v. Tunnicliff, 74 N. Y. 38; Bloomer v. Sherman, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 575. Contra, Goldsborough v. McWilliams, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 401, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,518, which holds that parol evidence of an agreement to extend the time designated in an arbitration bond for making the award is inadmissible.

Extension by indorsement on arbitration bond is sufficient to authorize an award within the time so extended, and in accordance with the condition of the bond, if the indorsement is under the seals of the parties and the bond is redelivered. Penman v. Gardner, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 498; Greig v. Talbot, 2 B. & C. 169, 3 D. & R. 446, 9 E. C. L. 85.

An indorsement for extension, signed by one party only, is not sufficient to authorize an award after the time originally fixed in the condition of the bond. Peters v. Johnson, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 291.

Rule of court not provided for by indorsement.— Where parties, by indorsement, in general terms, on the bonds of submission to arbitration, agree that the time for making the award shall be enlarged, such agreement virtually includes all the terms of the original submission to which it has reference — among others, that the submission for such enlarged time shall be made a rule of court — and, consequently, the party is liable to an attachment for non-performance of an award made within such enlarged time, under 9 & 10 Wm. III, c. 15. Evans v. Thomson, 5 East 189, 1 Smith K. B. 380.

An extension of time for award under rule of court has been held not sufficient to authorize an attachment for enforcement where the agreement for extension failed to provide that the award should be made a rule of court. Jenkins v. Law, 8 T. R. 87.

Extension regulated by statute.— Where the manner of extending the time within which an award may be made and returned to court is regulated by statute, mere consent of the parties, not evidenced as required by the statute, is not sufficient. Franklin Min. Co. v. Pratt, 101 Mass. 359; Lazell v. Houghton. 32 Vt. 579. Under Me. Rev. Stat. (1857), c. 108, permitting an agreement for extension of the time for returning an award to a term of court subsequent to the term designated, it has been held that the parties could not, if the court should adjourn before the actual return, agree that an award returned after the designated term might be entered as of the term originally designated so as to warrant an entry of the award at a subsequent term. Berry v. Sands, 60 Me. 99.

Upon a rule for attachment for non-performance of an award, where the time for making the award had been enlarged, notice of such enlargement, and that the award had been made within the enlarged time, was required. Hilton v. Hapwood, 1 Marsh. 66. A verbal notice of the enlargement was sufficient (Doddington v. Bailward, 7 Dowl. 640, 8 L. J. C. P. 331); but it seems that a mere recital in the award of the fact of enlargement was not of itself sufficient notice (Davis v. Vass, 15 East 96).

or an extension may be ordered by the court under the provisions of a statute giving the court authority to exercise such power.[10]

(IV) Failure to Fix Time-Limit. If no time is fixed within which the award must be made it is fair to presume that the parties intended to leave the time of making the award to the discretion of the arbitrators,[11] unless the circumstances of the case are such as evince an intention to require an award within a reasonable time,[12] in which event the question of what constitutes a reasonable

Extension of time by arbitrators.— Where the arbitrators are given authority to extend the time within which an award may be made, and the award is made beyond the time originally fixed, it should properly appear that the extension was made in accordance with the terms of the submission to a time at or beyond the actual completion of the award. Dickins v. Jarvis, 5 B. & C. 528, 8 D. & R. 285, 11 E. C. L. 569; Moule v. Stawell [cited in Davis v. Vass, 15 East 97]; George v. Lousley, 8 East 13, 9 Rev. Interpretation of provision authorizing extension of time by arbitrators.— In an action on an arbitration bond in which the validity of the award was drawn in question by defendant, it appeared that the award was made after a day fixed in the submission, and also that the submission provided that the award might be made thereafter in case of prevention by either of the parties, and also that the arbitrators were ready in season to have made their award by the day limited, but that, at the request and for the accommodation of defendant, they adjourned beyond the time, and thereafter proceeded to a hearing and determination; and it was held that the award was conclusive and valid because the arbitrators were prevented by defendant from making it at the specified time, and that the provision of the submission related, not merely to the making up of the award after agreement, but to the whole proceeding. Bixby v. Whitney, 11 Me. 62.

10. Statutory extension by court.— Under 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 42, § 39 [repealed] if the arbitrator, having power to enlarge the time for making his award, failed to do so, but made his award after the time originally fixed, the court had power to extend the time so as to embrace the actual time of making the award. Under the English Common-Law Procedure Act of 1854 [17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 15], the judge, in his discretion, has power to enlarge the time for making an award so as to validate an award made beyond the time originally fixed, although the submission contained no provision authorizing an enlargement by the arbitrator. A delay of twelve years in the making of an award has been held, in the absence of good reasons for the delay, to be so unreasonable as to invalidate the award. Hook v. Philbrick, 23 N. H. 288.

Limitation of time by arbitrators.— Where no limit of time has been fixed in the submission within which an award shall be made, the arbitrators have no authority, unless it be contained in the submission, to fix a time beyond which the award may not be made. In re Morphett, 2 Dowl. & L. 967, 10 Jur. 546, 14 L. J. Q. B. 259.

12. Circumstances requiring award within a reasonable time.—Although no time is fixed in an agreement to submit to arbitrators the price to be paid for land purchased by one of the parties from the other, the fact that the land at the time was rapidly rising in value requires the making of an award within a reasonable time, and in such a case a delay of six months was held, under all the circumstances, to be an unreasonable time. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 19 Fed. 5.

Requirement for an immediate valuation by designated arbitrators has been held not sufficiently complied with by an award made twelve months afterward. Rutherford v. Pillow, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 133.

A bond payable in certain time, conditioned to perform an award which is not required by the submission or specified by the bond to be made within a certain time, does not, by implication, engraft a limitation upon the power of the arbitrators which prevents them from making an award after the date named in the bond upon which the obligation is payable. Armstrong v. Robinson, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 412.

time is one of fact, to be submitted to the jury.[13] It is, however, open to either of the parties to push the arbitration, where no time has been fixed, by requesting the arbitrators to proceed within a reasonable time, and to revoke the submission upon the failure of the latter to do so.[14]

(v) Waiver of Time-Limit. The time fixed for making the award may be waived by proceeding, without objection, before the arbitrators after expiration of the time[15] or by failure to make the expiration of the time-limit a ground of objection in the lower court when the award is there drawn in question.[16]

(vi) Power of Court to Recommit Award. The statutory power of the court to recommit an award implies the power to make a new award or a correction after the expiration of the original time-limit.[17]

d. Death of Arbitrator. The death of one of the arbitrators previous to the execution of an award terminates the authority of the board of arbitrators to make an award thereafter.[18] But it has been held that the death of one of the arbitrators after the execution of the award, and before the same has been returned to court for enforcement, would not invalidate the award, and that it might be returned thereafter.[19]

2. Effect of Termination of Authority. After the termination of the authority of arbitrators in the manner before stated they are functi officio and without further power to make any award, either as a new award[20] or by way of addition

Attending a hearing under protest, and after objections to the proceeding on the ground that the authority of the arbitrator has terminated because of expiration of the time-limit, has been held not a waiver of the objections nor sufficient to give the arbitrator authority to make an award. Davies v. Price, 34 L. J. Q. B. 8, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 203, 12 Wkly. Rep. 1009.

Attending one of several meetings after the expiration of the time-limit has been held to be merely a waiver pro tanto, and not to justify the proceeding thereafter when the party was absent, nor to constitute a parol submission to a new arbitration, the latter meetings having taken place under the terms of the original submission. Dunstan v. Norton, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 722.

Waiver of unauthorized extension by arbitrator.— By the terms of a reference to arbitration, the two arbitrators were to appoint an umpire before entering into consideration of the matters in difference, and to make their award before a certain day, or such time as they or any two of them should appoint. The arbitrators, before appointing an umpire, enlarged the time, and afterward held a meeting, at which the parties attended, and it was held that the parties, being aware of these facts, and having afterward attended, could not make any objection on the ground of the enlargement of the time having been made before the appointment of the umpire. The evidence should not be reconsidered, after the completion of an award, for the purpose of changing the amount thereof without the assent of all the parties. Hartley v. Henderson, 189 Pa. St. 277, 282, 42 Atl. 198, the court saying: "If he could do it for the reason that he had overlooked items of the evidence, why could he not for the reason that he had given undue weight to testimony, or been deceived by witnesses, or had pursued a wrong plan in seeking facts, or had erred in the inferences drawn from them?"

By agreement for reconsideration the parties may procure the reopening of the arbitration after an award has been delivered. Eveleth v. Chase, 17 Mass. 458.

Estoppel to claim termination of authority. — Where an award had been made and delivered to the parties, and one of them thereafter procured the arbitrators to change the award so as to make it more beneficial to him, and the award, as changed, was returned to court, and judgment entered thereon after hearing of objections by the party procuring the amended award, it was held, on appeal, that the judgment was proper upon the ground that the party was estopped to claim a lack of authority in the arbitrators to do what he had procured them to do in a manner favorable to him and unfavorable to his adversary. IV. PROCEEDINGS BY AND BEFORE ARBITRATORS.

A. Mode of Conducting in General. The mode of conducting the proceedings in arbitration is, as a general proposition, for the arbitrators to determine, and, when not restricted by the submission, they are not bound to proceed according to technical rules.[25]

B. Under Corporate By-Laws or Society Regulations. An arbitration, held pursuant to corporate by-laws or regulations of a society, under a voluntary submission of the parties, is governed by the ordinary rules of arbitration and award, and the award is equally as binding as if made without reference to such regulations.[26]

An alteration of the amount, leaving the original amount legible, is unauthorized and void, as to the alteration, when made after the completion of the award, but the award showing the original amount is valid for that amount. Henfree v. Bromley, 6 East 309, 2 Smith K. B. 400, 8 Rev. Rep. 491.

Correction of a mistake in the calculation of figures after making an award has been held unwarranted, the court remarking at the same time that such mistake might include the essential merits of the case. Irvine v. Elnon, 8 East 54.

Powers analogous to those of a jury.— It has been held that, after the making of a final award, the arbitrators have no more power to alter it than a jury has to change their verdict after it is rendered and they are discharged. Patton v. Baird, 42 N. C. 255.

C. Objections in General. Where it does not otherwise appear, every presumption will be indulged in favor of the integrity and regularity of the proceedings of arbitrators.[27] Irregularities in the proceedings of arbitrators may be made good by agreement of the parties.[28] Objections to the proceedings should, as a general rule, be taken at the hearing and when they come to the knowledge of the party, for, by proceeding thereafter, the objection will be waived. A person cannot thus take the chance of a favorable issue.[29] But, in order to operate as a waiver, the party must have had notice of the defects.[30]

L. 173], it was held that a party who attended before an arbitrator under protest, cross-examined his adversary's witnesses, and called witnesses on his own behalf, did not thereby preclude himself from afterward objecting that the arbitrator was proceeding without authority.

Effect of appointment of umpire.— On a motion to set aside an award of an umpire in a case where the arbitrators had disagreed, it was held that the court would not regard irregular and improper acts on the part of the arbitrators. Crabtree v. Green, 8 Ga. 8.

A court of equity may restrain an arbitration proceeding upon equitable grounds, as fraud or misconduct, or where it is satisfied that injury will result to the party complaining if the arbitration is allowed to go on (Pickering v. Cape Town R. Co., L. R. 1 Eq. 84, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 570; Farrar v. Cooper, 44 Ch. D. 323, 59 L. J. Ch. 506, 62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 528, 38 Wkly. Rep. 410; Beddow v. Beddow, 9 Ch. D. 89, 47 L. J. C.) 648). But the fact that a demand for arbitration, under a contract providing for a settlement of the differences between parties in that manner, sought the determination of a claim which was not within the contract of submission was held not a ground for an injunction, because an award as to matters not within the agreement would be void. D. Hearing — 1. Right to — a. In General. It may be stated, as a general proposition, that parties are always entitled to a hearing before the arbitrators, and, although arbitrators are not bound by strict rules of evidence, they cannot transgress that fundamental principle of justice which declares that no man shall be condemned without an opportunity of being heard.[31] The parties are entitled to a hearing upon all the matters submitted.[32] But, on the other hand, it is held that arbitrators are not bound to hear arguments of counsel or of parties, and, in the absence of a request, are certainly not under such a duty.[33]

b. By All the Arbitrators. All the arbitrators must have notice of the meeting,[34] and the matters must be heard by all the arbitrators together. A less number have no right to proceed, for the parties are entitled to have the arguments, experience, and judgment of each arbitrator at every stage of the proceedings brought to bear on the minds of his fellow-judges,[35] unless a different

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arbitration and Award," § 158.

Presumptions.— It need not appear on the face of the award that the parties were heard, or had an opportunity to be heard, by the arbitrator. Warner v. Collins, 135 Mass. 26; Houghton v. Burroughs, 18 N. H. 499. And, if an award states that, after due notice, the arbitrators met the several parties and their counsel, and heard their several pleas and allegations, the legal presumption is that they also heard all the legal proofs offered by either party, unless the contrary appears, although it is not so explicitly stated in the award. Leominster v. Fitchburg, etc., R. Co., 7 Allen (Mass.) 38.

32. Hearing on all matters submitted.— Fairfield v. Butchard, 3 Rev. de Lég. 357.

See infra, VI, J, 6, c.

Person named by a party as his arbitrator does not represent him in the sense that the presence of such arbitrator will justify a statement by the arbitrators, in their award, that the party was heard. Richelieu, etc., Nav. Co. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., 3 Quebec Q. B. 410.

33. Arbitrators not bound to hear arguments.— Zell v. Johnston, 76 N. C. 302. See also Collier v. Hicks, 2 B. & Ad. 663, 9 L. J. M. C. 138, 22 E. C. L. 278; In re Mequeen, 9 C. B. N. S. 793, 99 E. C. L. 793. But it is no objection that, contrary to the agreement of the parties, one party's counsel assisted him at the hearing, where such counsel desisted upon objection. Blodgett v. Prince, 109 Mass. 44.

Presence of stranger.— In Tillam v. Copp, 5 C. B. 211, 57 E. C. L. 211, the court refused to set aside an award on the ground that the arbitrator declined to permit a stranger to be present for the purpose of assisting defendant's attorney with practical hints. But see In re Haigh, 3 De G. F. & J. 157, 31 L. J. Ch. 420, 64 Eng. Ch. 124, where an award was set aside because an arbitrator excluded from some of the meetings a son of one of the parties, who was conversant with the partnership in dispute, and also a shorthand writer, the attendance of both of whom the parties wished to have.

New Jersey.— Hoff v. Taylor, 5 N. J. L. 976; Barr v. Chandler, 47 N. J. Eq. 532, 20 Atl. 733, holding that proceedings and award by persons who do not consult together and arrive at their conclusion as a result of conference are of no effect.

course is authorized by the submission,[36] or the parties assent to proceedings by a less number than the whole,[37] or unless, under the original authority, the arbitrators might have made a majority award.[38] But it is not necessary that the award should show on its face that all the arbitrators were present at the hearing, because this fact, while an essential one, is one which may be shown if it is denied.[39]

2. Appointment of Time and Place — a. In General. Parties must have a reasonable time within which to be heard,[40] and, in the absence of other provision, it is for the arbitrators to appoint a time and place of hearing, and they should not make an award without appointing such time.[41] If the submission provides

England.— Beck v. Jackson, 1 C. B. N. S. 695, 87 E. C. L. 695; Lord v. Lord, 5 E. & B. 404, 1 Jur. N. S. 893, 26 L. J. Q. B. 34, 3 Wkly. Rep. 553, 85 E. C. L. 404. In Plews v. Middleton, 6 Q. B. 845, 852, 51 E. C. L. 845, Patterson, J., said: "It is true that the erroneous proceeding related to a very small matter; but, if it were sanctioned in any instance, the referees in every case of joint arbitration might agree to carry on their inquiries apart." In that case it appears that several arbitrators each, separately, examined a witness in relation to a small matter of difference. And Coleridge, J., said: "To uphold this award would be to authorize a proceeding contrary to the first principles of justice."

Misconstruction of character of arbitrator. — An award by two, under a submission to three, has been held to be had, though the two supposed that they had authority, under a parol agreement made prior to the written submission, and that the third arbitrator provided for by the submission was to be called in only in case of their disagreement. Loring v. Alden, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 576. But, conversely, it was held in Overby v. Thrasher, 47 Ga. 10, that where three arbitrators were selected and one of them conceived himself to have been selected as umpire and expressed no opinion on the points submitted, except where the others disagreed, but signed the award with the others, it was doubtful if the award could be set aside on this ground, and certainly the arbitrator, himself, could not be introduced to show his own misconduct in this respect.

36. As governed by terms of submission.— Devereux v. Burgwin, 33 N. C. 490, holding that where a submission for the partition of land provides that the arbitrators should make such examination as they think proper, an award made upon a survey of one of the arbitrators, without the others having gone upon the land, is sufficient.

37. Controlled by stipulation of parties.— Hinkle v. Harris, 34 Mo. App. 223; Howard v. Conro, 2 Vt. 492; Wier v. Cumminger, 11 Nova Scotia 173.

Proceeding without objection is sufficient evidence of assent. Glass-Pendery Consol. Min. Co. v. Meyer Min. Co., 7 Colo. 51, 1 Pac. 443; Akridge v. Patillo, 44 Ga. 585; Howard v. Conro, 2 Vt. 492.

Proceeding after filing protest.— Where a party appears before the arbitrators and files a protest against their jurisdiction, on the ground of the absence of one of their number, he does not waive his objection by subsequently participating in the hearing. Kent v. French, 76 Iowa 187, 40 N. W. 713.

Reception of documentary evidence.—Where the parties appeared at the place of hearing before two arbitrators, where documentary evidence only was introduced, it was held that this was not sufficient to sustain an inference that one of the parties had consented that the award should be made without the participation of a third arbitrator named in the submission. Loring v. Alden, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 576.

Mere inspection of the subject-matter, without taking testimony or deciding the points to be arbitrated, is held not to constitute a hearing in the sense that an award will be bad unless all the arbitrators were present. Glass-Pendery Consol. Min. Co. v. Meyer Min. Co., 7 Colo. 51, 1 Pac. 443.

38. Under authority for majority award.— See infra, IV, E, 2.

39. That all arbitrators were present need not appear in award.— Hoffman v. Hoffman, 26 N. J. L. 175; Rixford v. Nye, 20 Vt. 132. A statement that they met at a certain time and place, heard the particulars, and the majority found the facts and made the report, means that all the referees heard the parties. Dorr v. Hill, 62 N. H. 506. But, where it did not appear by a report of referees that all the referees named in the submission were present at the hearing, the report not being signed by all the referees, under a reference made under a rule entered before a justice of the peace, pursuant to statute, it was held that a judgment entered on such a report would, on error, be reversed. Short v. Pratt, 6 Mass. 496.

40. Reasonable time.— Hollingsworth v. Leiper, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 161, 1 L. ed. 82; Green v. Franklin, 1 Tex. 497.

for a time and place of meeting the arbitrators must meet at that time and place.[42] The power of the arbitrators to act is not confined, however, by any such consideration as that of territorial jurisdiction.[43]

b. Notice — (i) Right to. Though formerly it was otherwise,[44] and a distinction is made in some of the cases between a voluntary submission and a submission by rule of court,[45] it may be laid down as a general rule that, unless the parties have dispensed with or waived notice, and even in the absence of any provision therefor in the submission, an award cannot properly be made without notice to them where, in the nature of the submission, the judgment of the arbitrators may be influenced or enlightened by the adduction of evidence.[46] But the England.— Fetherstone v. Cooper, 9 Ves. Jr. 67. Arbitrators may, if they think best, examine a witness at his own house. Tillam v. Copp, 5 C. B. 211, 57 E. C. L. 211; Hewlett v. Laycock, 2 C. & P. 574, 12 E. C. L. 740.

As governed by statute.— An appointment, in the absence of a party, of a day of meeting sooner than the time prescribed by the statute makes subsequent proceedings erroneous. Kirk v. Eaton, 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 103.

After declining to act, if the arbitrators, at the instance of one of the parties, are prevailed upon to act, and authorize such party to give notice to his adversary of the time and place of proceeding, and at such time and place they, against the protest of the other party, hear the matters on ex parte evidence, it is misbehavior which will vitiate the award. Graham v. Pence, 6 Rand. (Va.) 529.

42. Designated in submission.— Strum v. Cunningham, 3 Ohio 286. The parties cannot be heard after the time limited for the hearing in the agreement of the parties. Cole v. Blunt, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 116.

Presumption.— It is held that an award need not show on its face that the parties met at the designated place. Hassenpflug v. Rice, 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 206, 11 Cinc. L. Bul. 200; Kimble v. Saunders, 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 193. Contra, Saunders v. Throckmorton, Ky. Dec. 324. So, in Strum v. Cunningham, 3 Ohio 286, as to a statutory arbitration, it was held that the same motive which induced the legislature to require that a time and place should be agreed on and stated in the submission also required that the agreement in that respect should be strictly observed — not having trusted to parol proof of this part of the agreement, but having directed that it should be a part of the submission, for the same reason the performance of it should appear from the award.

43. Territorial jurisdiction.—Edmundson v. Wilson, 108 Ala. 118, 19 So. 367 (holding that where a part of the subject-matter of the submission was land situated in another state, the fact that the arbitrators met in the latter state, the parties appearing before them without objection, could not vitiate the award; that the time and place of the meeting, whether in one state or the other, under such circumstances, was within the discretion of the arbitrators); McMillan v. Allen, 98 Ga. 405, 25 S. E. 505 (holding that the fact that the arbitration was held and an award rendered in one county did not prevent the award from being made the judgment of the court of another county, when such proceeding is authorized by the submission). 45. In the former, proof of notice seems to have been considered unnecessary, and all that was required was proof of the execution of the award according to the submission. Miller v. Kennedy, 3 Rand. (Va.) 2, excluding the defense in an action on the award at law and holding that the only redress was by resort to a court of equity, upon the authority of 1 Saund. 328, (a) note 3, wherein, while the defense was excluded at law, the party obtained proper relief on the ground of corruption and partiality in the arbitrators upon a bill in exchequer. See Upshaw v. Hargrove, 6 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 286, holding that, where a bill in equity sets up an award and traces the claim of complainant through it, the award will be held prima facie good to support a decree pro confesso, though there is no averment that it was made upon notice. (II) Sufficiency. The parties must have formal notice, and it is not sufficient that they casually acquire information that the hearing is in progress;[48] but it is sufficient if the time is fixed in the presence of the parties,[49] or if, by the terms of the submission, the attorneys of the parties are made arbitrators.[50]

3. Attendance of Witnesses. At common law, or without the aid of statute, arbitrators have no authority, of themselves, to compel the attendance of witnesses.[52]

4. Oath of Witnesses — a. Necessity. Though sometimes required by statute, it is not, at common law, necessary that the witnesses should be sworn, unless it is so provided in the submission.[53] But, in case of such provision, the witnesses must be sworn in order to make a valid award,[54] unless the requirement is waived.[55] On the other hand, the omission to swear witnesses has been held to be a mere irregularity, which could not be set up as a defense to an action on the award.[56] But, whether such omission be a mere irregularity or of such consequence that it might be pleaded in defense of an action on the award, the parties may waive the necessity for such oath[57] — as by failing to request the administration of the oath, or neglecting to make any objection at the hearing,[58] or at

United States.— Lutz v. Linthicum, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 165, 8 L. ed. 904.

So, it is held that a statute requiring a submission to be in writing or by order of court is not for the purpose of repealing the common law, but to offer the parties, when they see fit to adopt it, a more certain and adequate remedy for the adjustment of their controversies, as by proceeding under the statute the arbitrators could act as a quasi-judicial tribunal, clothed with the power to administer oaths and compel the attendance of witnesses. Thomasson v. Risk, 11 Bush (Ky.) 619. And a submission to arbitration being made a rule of court, it has been held that a suit is pending within the meaning of a statute enabling the court to issue process to compel attendance of witnesses. But, in Grafton Quarry Co. v. McCully, 7 Mo. App. 580, it was held that no express agreement that witnesses need not be sworn was necessary.

Liability for slander.— On the question of the liability of a person for slander in calling a witness a liar, it was held that an oath administered to a witness who testified before arbitrators was not binding where a new party came in and new matters were submitted after the oath had been administered. the proper time in the court having authority to review the proceedings on a statutory award.[59]

b. By Whom Administered. At common law, arbitrators have no power to swear witnesses.[60] They were under the necessity of having the witnesses sworn by a magistrate, or, if the submission was in a pending cause, the custom was to have the witnesses sworn before a judge at chambers or in the court at Westminster.[61] The subject has been regulated by statute both in England, where the arbitrator was given power to swear witnesses,[62] and in the United States, where such provisions exist and also others which required such oaths, when necessary, to be administered by an officer authorized to generally administer oaths. These provisions, unless waived by the parties, must be complied with.[63]

C.) 308 (holding that a person cannot be indicted for taking a false oath before an arbitrator); Street v. Rigby, 6 Ves. Jr. 815 [citing Halfhide v. Fenning, 2 Bro. Ch. 336]. Compare Imlay v. Wikoff, 4 N. J. L. 153. In this case it was agreed that the submission should be made a rule of court. The grounds of the decision do not appear further than that a rule to show cause why the award should not be set aside was discharged and an attachment issued, but it was upon the argument of counsel that the matter was to be considered as a cause referred by rule of court or not; that, if the former, then the arbitrators had express authority by statute; that, if not a cause referred by rule of court, the arbitrators derived their authority from the agreement of the parties and were a tribunal constituted with power to hear and determine, and, therefore, with power to administer an oath to a witness if it became necessary in the course of their proceedings.

Proceedings not under the statute.— Where there was a parol agreement to extend the time for making the award, though the original submission was in writing and the arbitrators proceeded under such oral agreement, it was held that, the statute requiring the submission to be in writing, the arbitrators were not acting under the statute but as at common law, and that they, therefore, had no authority to swear the witnesses, and an indictment would not lie for perjury in evidence given under an oath administered by the arbitrators acting under this parol agreement. 63. Compliance with statute.— Thomasson v. Risk, 11 Bush (Ky.) 619 (holding that the statute requiring a submission to be in writing or by order of court did not repeal the common law, but was to afford parties a more certain and adequate remedy, as, by proceeding under the statute, the arbitrators could act as a quasi-judicial tribunal, clothed with the power to administer oaths); O'Neill v. Clark, 57 Nebr. 760, 78 N. W. 256; Howard v. Sexton, 4 N. Y. 157; Matter of Wells, 1 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 189; Rice v. Hassenpflug, 45 Ohio St. 377, 13 N. E. 655 (holding that where the witnesses were, in form, sworn by the arbitrator, who was in fact a justice of the peace, it was sufficient, under a statute permitting the oath to be administered by the arbitrator, umpire, or any judge or justice of the peace of the county; that it was not necessary that the oath should be administered by the arbitrator himself, and, as the arbitrator in this case was authorized, by virtue of his office, to administer oaths to witnesses before persons acting as arbitrators, it was no reason why he could not administer oaths to witnesses before himself); State v. Jackson, 36 Ohio St. 281 (holding, in construing the statute in that state, that an earlier statute requiring, in arbitration proceedings, that the oath should be administered by a judge or justice of the peace, was not changed by a later statute permitting oaths, generally, to be administered by notaries public, and that a witness who was not sworn before the prescribed officer could not be indicted for perjury).

Objection — Waiver.—The irregular administration of the oath to a witness, like the failure to administer any oath at all, must, if known to the adverse party, be objected to at the time. O'Neill v. Clark, 57 Nebr. 760, 78 N. W. 256; Large v. Passmore, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 51, holding that, as a witness might be examined by consent, without oath, the irregularity in the administration of an oath by an attorney might be waived.

5. Extent of Right of Hearing — a. As to Introduction of Evidence in General. Where the submission is not so framed that the arbitrators may hear and determine the matters without evidence aliunde, the parties have the right to introduce competent evidence in support of their respective claims, and the arbitrators have no authority to refuse to hear it.[64] From other cases, however, it appears that this rule, generally, extends only to the inhibition of such act, on the part of the arbitrator, as amonnts to a deprivation of a hearing, and not of the honest exercise of the judgment of the arbitrators in passing upon the admissibility of evidence or the competency of witnesses.[65] So, arbitrators are not governed by the technical rules of the common law in regard to the introduction of evidence,[66] and the fact that the arbitrators merely heard improper evi-

Failure to request.— Where the submission was on mutual statements of the parties, and the arbitrators, after settling the principles on which they would award, heard that one of the parties wished his witnesses to be examined, but such party did not insist upon the examination, it was held that the neglect of the arbitrators to hear such witnesses was no ground for objection. App. 543, wherein, upon an application to revoke a submission to arbitration to fix the renewal ground rental of land because the arbitrators declined to receive evidence of the gross and net rentals derived from properties on the other side of the street, Hagarty, C. J. O., said: "I think it both improper and inexpedient to attempt to lay down any hard and fast rule applicable to all cases of this character. Every case must stand on its special facts. Evidence may be in one sense admissible, although valueless in the view of those who have to form their judgment thereon. . . . In forming their decision as to the point submitted to them, they may decline entering upon the numberless 'res inter alios acta' involved in the calculation which may be made by neighbouring owners as to the net value of their own properties. . . . They surely must have the right to consider that a certain class of so-called evidence as to other properties has not, and ought not to have, any weight or value to help them to a decision, and they may therefore properly decline any further hearing of it."

Presumption of immateriality.— In a suit in equity to enforce an award it was held that an answer which alleges that the arbitrator refused to hear evidence was insufficient for not showing what the evidence was, as it would be presumed the evidence was immaterial and that the arbitrator did right to disregard it. Elder v. McLane, 60 Tex. 383. See also Leslie v. Leslie, 50 N. J. Eq. 103, 24 Atl. 319.

dence, or the evidence of incompetent witnesses, will not operate to defeat an award.[67]

b. Presence at All Meetings — (i) In General. Where the submission does not contemplate an award without evidence by the parties, the parties are entitled to be present, unless they waive that right, at all the meetings where the merits of the controversy are under investigation. The arbitrators, in such cases, have no right to proceed ex parte to make an independent investigation.[68] But, where the evidence is heard and the award determined upon at a place designated for that purpose in the articles of submission, it is not necessary that the arbitrators should actually reduce their award to writing at that place, but this may be done elsewhere.[69]

(ii) Hearing of Evidence in Presence of Parties. Parties are entitled to be present at the hearing of the evidence or examination of the witnesses.[70] The arbitrator cannot take it upon himself to listen to evidence on behalf of either party behind the other party's back,[71] and arbitrators cannot make a binding award where they have received evidence on the one side in the absence of the party on the other, without notice to the latter, and after both parties have been heard in the matter.[72] The law is peculiarly jealous of any intercourse between a party to the arbitration and the arbitrators, and the latter have no right to listen to ex parte communications from one party in the absence of the other.[73] It is not always necessarily fatal to an award, however, that one party is heard in the absence of the other, and it is held that no such consequence results where the object of calling the party and the nature of the disclosure by

him cannot prejudice the absent party — as where the only purpose is to fix a mere uncertainty.[74]

(III) Controlled by Terms and Nature of Submission. The necessity of notice, of the reception of evidence by the arbitrators, and the right to be present at the meetings of the arbitrators, are often controlled by the submission itself. Parties may so frame the submission that the arbitrators may decide without a formal hearing of the parties, and without a resort to evidence aliunde.[75] The nature of the reference may give the arbitrators power to make certain ex parte investigations,[76] and, when matter is referred to valuers, appraisers, surveyors, or have no right to call before them the attorney of one of the parties after the case is submitted and, in the absence of the other or his attorney, consult in regard to a matter pertaining to the controversy. Galbreath v. Galbreath, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 935.

Presenting list of authorities.—The ex parte presentation of a list of authorities to an arbitrator after the final submission was held to render the award void, especially when the parties had stipulated that neither should be represented by counsel. It was contended that the rule excluding communications made ex parte, between a party and the arbitrator, should not be applied here, but the court said that it was to be kept in mind that the arbitrator was the judge of the law as well as of the facts, and, also, that the parties had stipulated that they were not to be represented by counsel. Hewitt v. Reed City, 124 Mich. 6, 82 N. W. 616, 50 L. R. A. 128.

74. Aid in obviating uncertainties.— In Neely v. Buford, 65 Mo. 448, it was held that the fact that arbitrators, after the submission of the evidence and in the absence of one of the parties and his attorney, called in the attorney of the opposite party to point out certain items referred to in his brief which they were unable to find, was not such misconduct as to invalidate the award. See also Witz v. Tregallas, 82 Md. 351, 33 Atl. 718. So, in Seaton v. Kendall, 171 Ill. 410, 49 N. E. 561 [affirming 61 Ill. App. 289], it was held that an application to set aside an award on the ground of misconduct should be denied where there appeared to have been no bad faith, the only act complained of consisting in the submission, in the absence of one of the parties, of the books of account to the other party to find the cause of a difference in the trial balance made by such other party and the arbitrators respectively. See also Stewart v. Waldron, 41 Me. 486. And in Herrick v. Blair, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 101, it was held that the mere calling of a witness, who had been sworn and examined, for the purpose of ascertaining what his testimony was, because the arbitrators differed about it, was not misbehavior.

Admissions in favor of party objecting.— It is no objection that one of the parties was called into the presence of the arbitrator, in the absence of the other party, and asked if he admitted items in favor of such other party, where such admission was made or where, if such admission was not made, the items were charged against the party so called before the arbitrator. Anderson v. Wallace, 3 Cl. & F. 26, 6 Eng. Reprint 1347. But see Blanton v. Gale, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 260, holding otherwise where the award showed that it was founded, in part, upon admissions made to one of the arbitrators separately, and by him reported to the others at their final and only meeting on the business submitted to them.

As where, by the submission, the arbitrators are vested with authority to proceed informally, according to their own sense of propriety (Bridgeport v. Eisenman, 47 Conn. 34); where the matters are submitted to an arbitrator on certain written documents and such other evidence as he may collect (Hamilton v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 106 Mass. 395); or where the parties hand the papers in the matter to the arbitrators, telling them to do what is right, and not offering to introduce any evidence (Rector v. Hunter, 15 Tex. 380).

Inadvertent omission of stipulation from submission.—Where it appeared that the parties intended to agree in their submission that the arbitration should proceed without witnesses or counsel, but, through inadvertence, the stipulation was omitted, and the parties afterward, at the hearing, agreed orally to the same effect, and then proceeded with the arbitration after the arbitrator had refused to allow the hearing of a witness offered, the award will not be set aside. Bennett v. Bennett, 25 Conn. 66.

76. Ex parte investigations.— Straw v. Truesdale, 59 N. H. 109, holding that, under a submission to locate a boundary line, the authority to determine the line includes authority to make measurements in the absence of, as well as in the presence of, the parties, for the purpose of finding the line, marking it upon the ground, and testing the evidence, and to decide whether measurements made in the absence of the parties should be made known to them as a reason for further hearing.

Limited power.— Where, upon submitting the question whether the dam of one party flooded the land of another, and whether the latter had the right to have the dam lowered, the arbitrators were "to survey the ground, take levels," etc., it was held that these words constituted no relinquishment of the right of the parties to be heard by their proofs, but simply defined certain special duties which the arbitrators were to perform in making up their judgment. Hart v. Kennedy, 47 N. J. Eq. 51, 20 Atl. 29.

Failure to view the premises cannot affect the like, who are selected by reason of their special knowledge or skill with respect to the particular matters submitted, so that it is obvious the parties meant to rely upon these things rather than evidence aliunde, this justifies personal investigation and judgment on the part of the arbitrators, and even a refusal to hear evidence aliunde.[77]

6. Adjournment or Extension of Time — a. Power of Arbitrators to Adjourn. The adjournment of their meetings from time to time is within the power of the arbitrators.[78] Usually, the matter is one for the exercise of the arbitrators' discretion, and their action will not be revised unless it amounts to misconduct or the discretion is abused.[79] An application for an adjournment, made after the party an award as to value in the absence of a request that the arbitrator should make such view, he being familiar with the premises. Hewitt v. Lehigh, etc., R. Co., 57 N. J. Eq. 511, 42 Atl. 325.

Sufficiency of examination of premises.— Upon a charge of misconduct on the part of the arbitrators, such alleged misconduct consisting in that they did not examine the premises with sufficient accuracy to enable them to form a correct and just estimate of value, it was held that it was for the arbitrators to determine whether their examination was sufficiently minute and particular to satisfy their own minds. Underhill v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 339.

Evidence of identity of land.— Where a valuation is to be made by comparison with another tract of land, the valuers must, where the other party is absent and has no notice, have other evidence of the identity of the land than such evidence as is derived from the party at whose instance the valuation is made. Rutherford v. Pillow, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 133.

Presumption of view.—Where an arbitrator is to take a view previously to entering on the reference, and he takes such view, the non-recital of the view is no objection to the award. Spence v. Eastern Counties R. Co., 7 Dowl. P. C. 697, 3 Jur. 846.

Upon this kind of a submission, if the arbitrators appear to be well acquainted with the value of the article, a failure to offer evidence as to value would not tend to show that the award was not within the submission. Cobb v. Dolphin Mfg. Co., 108 N. Y. 463, 15 N. E. 438.

78. Georgia.— Arbitrators are not limited to an adjournment from day to day, but may adjourn for a longer time if the ends of justice require it. Vinton v. Lindsey, 68 Ga. 291; Richardson v. Hartsfield, 27 Ga. 528, holding that the statute giving arbitrators authority to adjourn from day to day does not exclude the right to adjourn for a longer time.

Pennsylvania.— Under the statute in Pennsylvania, if only one arbitrator attended on the day of the hearing, it was held that he might obviate the absence of the others by adjourning. Stiles v. Carlisle, etc., Turnpike Road Co., 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 286; Wilson v. Cross, 7 Watts (Pa.) 495; Mitchell v. Wilhelm, 6 Watts (Pa.) 259. But see, contra, as to power of majority of referees, Harris v. Norton, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 534.

Vermont.— Harrington v. Rich, 6 Vt. 666, holding that the power of the arbitrators is not determined by a neglect to attend at the time and place appointed for holding the arbitration, but they may appoint another session within any reasonable time, unless prevented by the terms of the submission or by express revocation of their authority.

West Virginia.—Boring v. Boring, 2 W. Va. 297.

United States.— Torrance v. Amsden, 3 McLean (U. S.) 509, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,103.

Canada.— An adjournment to enable one of the arbitrators to visit the property, without fixing a date for the next meeting, does not terminate the arbitration, and an award made on a subsequent date, all the arbitrators being present, is valid. Ontario, etc., R. Co. v. Le Curé, etc., de Ste. Anne, 7 Montreal Q. B. 110, 5 Montreal Super. Ct. 51, 21 Rev. Lég. 180.

Surprise.— It is no ground for setting aside an award that the unsuccessful party suffered a surprise because the arbitrator would have power to postpone the proceedings upon any reasonable application for that purpose. Jones v. Boston Mill Corp., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 148; Solomon v. Solomon, 28 L. J. Exch. 129.

79. Discretion of arbitrators.— Georgia.— Vinton v. Lindsey, 68 Ga. 291.

Indiana.—Madison Ins. Co. v. Griffin, 3 Ind. 277.

New York.— Sonneborn v. Lavarello, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 201. Where a party goes to hearing before arbitrators and is willing to rely upon the testimony of a witness who is the principal witness on the other side, he is not entitled to an adjournment on the ground that he is surprised by the false swearing of such witness, and that he can prove the falsehood by the testimony of other witnesses if the arbitrators will allow an adjournment, it not appearing that he has since discovered had received some intimation of the nature of the award and knew that the award was unfavorable to him, is too late.[80]

b. Introduction of Further Testimony — (I) Right to Reopen. Arbitrators have power to reopen a case for further testimony,[81] and, in the absence of other restriction, it is discretionary with them.[82] It is the duty of the parties to bring forward their testimony in the due course of the proceedings, and the arbitrators may refuse to hear one who has rested for a length of time without introducing his testimony.[83] And a refusal to reopen a cause after the award was substantially agreed upon, of which the party evidently had knowledge, for the purpose of introducing mere corroborative evidence, is not only within the discretion of the arbitrators, but is proper.[84]

(II) Premature Award. If, however, the hearing has not been closed and further time has been given to a party to produce evidence, or to be heard, or the parties are allowed to disperse under the impression that other meetings will be held, the arbitrators have no right to make their award in the meantime and without giving the opportunity for such further hearing which another meeting would afford.[85]

7. Waiver of Notice or Right to Be Present — a. In General. Parties may waive notice,[86] and, if a party appears before the arbitrators, he cannot afterward the testimony of which he had no knowledge before the trial, even though he offers to enlarge the time for making the award. Woodworth v. Van Buskerk, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 432.

Pennsylvania.— McDermott v. U. S. Insurance Co., 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 604; Becker v. Wesner, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 202. Where, upon adjournment at a late hour of the night, a witness who had been subjected to a long cross-examination was allowed to depart without any intimation that he would be required at the next meeting, it was held not improper for the arbitrators at the next meeting to refuse to procure the witness for further examination. Fairchild v. Hart, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 227, 8 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 130.

England.— Gind v. Curtis, 14 C. B. N. S. 723, 108 E. C. L. 723. Where the arbitrators have honestly exercised their discretion as to the materiality of the evidence of a witness, their action, upon an application to afford time to examine such witness, though erroneous, will not be disturbed. Larchin v. Ellis, 11 Wkly. Rep. 281.

Abuse of discretion.— If arbitrators refuse a request for adjournment, based upon sufficient reasons and offered in proper season, it is sufficient ground for vacating the award. Coryell v. Coryell, 1 N. J. L. 441. See also Forbes v. Frary, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 224; Torrence v. Amsden, 3 McLean (U. S.) 509, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,103, holding a refusal to postpone misconduct where the party was surprised by evidence which he was not, by reason of the unexpected absence of a witness, able to explain.

Sufficiency of affidavit.— Whether or not a refusal to reopen the matter on the ground of newly-discovered testimony which was not known to the party at the time of the hearing before the arbitrators, can be reviewed, the evidence discovered ought to be stated in the affidavit in order that its materiality may be judged by those who have to pass upon it. object that he did not have legal notice of the time and place of meeting.[87] So, a party to an arbitration may authorize the arbitrators to proceed in his absence,[88] and, while a party may be justified in abandoning an arbitration proceeding because a witness has been improperly examined in the absence of the party and without notice to him, yet, if he subsequently proceeds after knowledge of the fact, he waives the irregularity.[89] But where there is no notice to a party, there is no presumption that he has waived notice or consented to the examination of witnesses in his absence.[90]

b. Voluntary Absence or Withdrawal After Notice. Where a party, though duly notified, will not attend, the arbitrators may proceed ex parte without his presence,[91] and they may likewise proceed where the party having notice voluntarily withdraws from the sittings of the arbitrators.[92] So, if a party has notice

92. Caldwell v. Caldwell, 121 Ala. 598, 25 So. 825.

Absence by reason of neglect or misfortune. — Where the absence of a party is the result of his own neglect or misfortune, and nothing is done by him which might have been done, even after the day of the appointed hearing, to obtain a reopening of the case, such absence does not afford sufficient reason to vacate the award. Shroyer v. Barkley, 24 Mo. 346. See also Tryer v. Shaw, 27 L. J. Exch. 320, holding that, where an arbitrator has made an appointment and one of the parties, though under the mistaken notion that there would be notice of another meeting before an award was made, went away without tender-of the original meeting, he need not be notified of the succeeding or adjourned meeting, whether he attends,[93] or fails to attend, the original meeting of which he had notice.[94]

E. Manner of Arriving at Decision — 1. Necessity of Joint Judicial Action. The power conferred upon arbitrators being judicial, it follows that their award should be the result of their joint judgment; therefore, it is improper for them to arrive at an agreement by striking an average between aggregate sums which, in the judgment of each, should be awarded.[95]

2. Authority to Render Majority Award — a. Necessity For Special Authorization — (I) General Rule. For the reason that a submission to arbitration is a delegation of power to be exercised for a private purpose, it has been established as a general rule that under a submission to a number of arbitrators, without the expression of an intention that a majority or less than the whole number may exercise the power conferred, it is necessary, to the validity of an award, that all the arbitrators should concur.[96]

ing evidence or intimating that he intended to offer it, the arbitrator might proceed ex parte without further notice.

Oral agreement.— On error to a judgment entered on an award in pursuance of the agreement of the parties, upon the objection that plaintiff in error was absent from the hearing a portion of the time, on account of a stipulation made between the attorneys that, if either party could not be present at a certain time, the case should be continued, and that neither party should take advantage of the absence of the other, it was held that the agreement not being in writing, nor brought to the attention of the arbitrators by an application for a continuance, it was too late to raise the objection. Striking average between conflicting estimates of parties.— It has been held not improper for arbitrators to ask each of the parties separately at what sum they valued a water privilege which was the subject of arbitration, and then, after making their own estimates and comparing the estimates of the parties, to strike an average between the estimates so given, although it would have been different had they made no estimate themselves nor exercised their judgment as to the value. Rule of court contrary to submission.—Authority to make a majority award cannot be conferred by the terms of a rule of court under which the submission is made unless contained in the agreement for submission, because the rule is founded upon and must strictly follow the agreement of the parties. Partial provision for majority award. — Where it is expressly stated in the submission that a majority of the arbitrators shall have power to make an award with respect to some of the points therein submitted, it may be presumed that such authority extends to all of the matters upon which the arbitrators cannot agree, although the provision is not repeated throughout the submission as to every matter. Thirkell v. Strachan, 4 U. C. Q. B. 136.

(II) Matters of Public Concern. The proceedings of special tribunals, under legislative authority, upon matters of purely public concern stand upon a different ground from arbitrations of purely private controversies; and, as to the former, the rule prevails that, in the absence of a specific requirement for unanimity, a majority of the arbitrators are invested with incidental authority to render a decision.[97]

(III) Statutes Requiring Unanimity. Under a statute providing for the special enforcement of awards made pursuant to the provisions and requiring that awards shall be by the unanimous concurrence of the arbitrators, the arbitrators cannot be authorized to make a majority award which can be enforced in the special mode provided by the statute, although a majority award made pursuant to such an agreement may be good at common law.[98]

(IV) Statutes Permitting Majority Award. In case of a statute which permits an award to be made by a majority of arbitrators, such authority is vested in them by force of the statute without a provision therefor in the agreement to submit, unless the submission contains a contrary provision, and provided the requirements of the statute have been complied with so as to bring the submission within its terms.[99]

Subsequent dissent of one arbitrator is no ground of complaint against an award which has been concurred in, executed, and published by all of them. Winship v. Jewett, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 173.

Evidence of dissent of one arbitrator is inadmissible to impeach an award which is not otherwise shown to have been made by a less number than all of the arbitrators, because it does not establish the fact that such arbitrator did not unite in making the award, but merely that he differed in his opinion from the other arbitrators. Jackson v. Gager, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 383.

Parol evidence to show that one arbitrator signed as a witness and did not, in fact, concur in the award, for the purpose of impeachment where the award was not authorized to be made by a majority, has been held to be admissible, although the award appeared to have been regularly signed by all of the arbitrators. Parker v. Pawtucket Mut. F. Ins. Co., 3 R. I. 192.

Concurrence in ultimate decision sufficient. — The rule requiring unanimity of concurrence does not extend to the requirement that all of the arbitrators should concur in the decision of every question which arises in the proceedings as to the admission or rejection of every matter of evidence; but it is sufficient if all actually hear the cause and concur in the award which is finally made. Amendment of statute pending arbitration. — A submission to arbitration which specifically refers to a statute as being under its provisions, which statute requires an award under its provisions to be unanimous, authorizes an award only in accordance with such provisions, although the statute is thereafter amended, before the making of the award, permitting it to be made by action of the majority. (v) Inference of Majority Authorization. Although the agreement to submit to arbitration does not specifically provide for a decision of the majority, such authority may have been intended to be conferred, and this intention is to be inferred from a provision for the selection of a special arbitrator who is authorized to act only upon disagreement of those originally appointed;[1] but such intention is not to be inferred from a provision for a third or other additional arbitrator who is authorized to act throughout the proceedings without reference to any disagreement of the original arbitrators.[2]

b. Necessity For Unanimous Participation — (i) General Rule. Conferring upon arbitrators authority to render a majority award does not, by implication, authorize a majority, or any less number than the whole, to act upon the subject-matter submitted; and by granting such authority the parties cannot be held to have intended to dispense with the operation of the rule which gives to the parties a right to the presence and effect of the arguments, experience, and judgment of each arbitrator during the whole proceeding.[3] But unanimity of action may be waived by the parties, and such waiver may be established by showing that the parties proceeded, without objection, with the hearing before a majority.[4]

(II) Refusal of Minority to Act—(A) Failure to Appear After Notice. The failure of one or a minority of a number of arbitrators to appear and act with the majority, after sufficient notice and reasonable opportunity therefor, constitutes, substantially, a dissent from the action of the majority which will enable the latter to proceed, in the absence of such minority, to the rendition of a majority award in case a majority award has been authorized,[5] unless unanimity of action be absolutely required, by statute, as a condition precedent to the exercise of authority.[6]

(B) Refusal to Participate After Disagreement. The refusal of one or a minority of a number of arbitrators, having authority to render a majority award, to proceed further with the hearing or discussion of the case, after a disagreement has arisen, does not divest the majority of power to proceed, in the absence of the minority, with the hearing and to render an award in accordance with their authority.[7]

c. Proof of Majority Award. An award which is executed by a majority of arbitrators is sufficient proof of a proper majority award in case the arbitrators have been authorized to act by majority.[8] In the absence of any showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that the reason for the non-execution by the minority was either a dissent from the majority opinion or a refusal to participate after having been accorded sufficient opportunity so to do.[9]

V. SPECIAL ARBITRATOR OR UMPIRE.

A. Distinction Between Special Arbitrator and Umpire. A special arbitrator is one who is called in to act only after a disagreement between other arbitrators, not alone, however, but only in conjunction with the others, so as to enable a majority of them to render an award. Likewise, an umpire is one who is called in to act only after a disagreement; but the nature of his authority differs from that of a special arbitrator in the fact that he acts, not with the other arbitrators for the making of a majority award, but alone, and that his sole award determines the matters submitted to him.[10]

B. Appointment by Arbitrators — 1. AUTHORITY TO APPOINT — a. General Rule. The authority of arbitrators, originally appointed by the parties to determine a controversy, to appoint a special arbitrator or umpire, for the purpose of acting upon disagreement between them, is not to be implied as a consequence of the submission to them in general terms,[11] but the intention to delegate such power must be expressed either in the original submission[12] or by subsequent agreement of the parties.[13]

b. Whether Special Arbitrator or Umpire. The power of original arbitrators to appoint an umpire, for the purpose of acting, in the event of a disagreement, upon his sole responsibility, does not exist unless it be expressly conferred by the parties.[14]

2. Time of Appointment — a. Before Proceeding. The character of a special arbitrator or umpire being such that he has no authority to act except upon disagreement of the original arbitrators, it is not essential, unless it be required by the terms of the submission, to the validity of a proceeding by the original arbitrators that they should first appoint such special arbitrator or umpire.[15] However, the appointment may properly be made before the original arbitrators enter upon an investigation of the matters submitted to them, so that, in case a disagreement occurs, an award may conveniently be made without the necessity of rehearing the evidence, and because, if no disagreement occurs, the presence and participation of such appointee will not injuriously affect the award of the original arbitrator.[16]

Authority to appoint an umpire "if needful" authorizes such appointment by arbitrators in case of their disagreement. Smith v. Morse, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 76, 19 L. ed. 597.

13. Subsequent agreement.— Moseley v. Simpson, L. R. 16 Eq. 226, 42 L. J. Exch. 739, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 727, 21 Wkly. Rep. 694.

Subsequent agreement by parol, made at the time of disagreement of arbitrators, may authorize them to appoint an umpire, as an independent contract, which will not be in variance with a written submission not containing such authority. Jackson v. Wright, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 601; Sharp v. Lipsey, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 113.

Subsequent attendance by the parties before an umpire which the arbitrators have no authority to appoint, without objection upon that ground, is equivalent to a resubmission to such umpire. Matson v. Trower, R. & M. 17, 27 Rev. Rep. 725.

14. Thus, the authority to appoint is not only not to be implied in any case from a simple submission to arbitrators, but it is not to be inferred from the delegation of authority, expressed in general terms, to appoint a third or other additional arbitrator, even if such appointee is authorized to act only in the event of a disagreement. b. Before Termination of Authority. Before the expiration of a time fixed for the making of an award by original arbitrators, who have authority to appoint an umpire in case they are unable to agree within such time, the appointment may be made before the expiration of the time-limit so as to authorize the appointee to act thereafter;[17] and, for the reason that such appointment need not be made so long as the original arbitrators might make an award, it has been held that such appointment may be deferred until the time-limit has expired.[18]

3. Method of Appointment — a. In Accordance With Submission. If the method of appointing a special arbitrator or umpire is provided for in the submission, an appointment in any other manner which is not consented to by the parties will not confer any authority upon the appointee — as that the appointment shall be made by the original arbitrators,[19] and that it shall be evidenced by indorsement in writing upon the submission signed by the arbitrators.[20]

b. In Accordance With Statute. An arbitration which purports to proceed under a statute requiring the selection to be in writing cannot be enforced under the statute unless the requirement has been complied with.[21]

c. In the Absence of Restrictions — (I) Appointment by Parol. In the absence of a requirement in the submission, or in a statute under which the arbitration proceeds, that the appointment of a special arbitrator or umpire shall be in writing or under seal, such appointment may be by parol, notwithstanding the submission be written or sealed.[22]

(II) Appointment by Chance. The appointment of a special arbitrator or umpire is a joint judicial act, which requires that the original arbitrators should each exercise his individual judgment, upon knowledge, of the qualifications and fitness of the person appointed to exercise the powers delegated to him. The appointment should be, essentially, a matter of choice and not of chance.[23]

(III) Effect of Partisanship. Upon the ground that the selection of a special arbitrator or umpire is essentially a judicial act, requiring the exercise of individual judgment, it has been held that a refusal of one of the appointing arbitrators to agree to any competent or disinterested person proposed by his associates, for no other reason than that he desired to be governed entirely by the wishes and instructions of the party appointing him, was sufficient to invalidate an award made by a person finally agreed upon.[24]

d. Waiver of Irregular Appointment. An unauthorized or irregular appointment of a special arbitrator or umpire will be deemed to have been waived by the parties if they proceed to a hearing[25] before such appointee, with knowledge of the irregularity and without objection.[26]

Choice between two proper persons.— It has been held, by way of exception to the general rule above stated, that a selection by chance may be upheld as a proper appointment where two or more persons are nominated who, upon the individual judgment of each of the arbitrators, are conceded to be equally fit and qualified, so that it may be said that, after a chance selection, the selection of the persons finally appointed was due, not merely to chance alone, but to the exercise of the joint will and judgment of the arbitrators. appointment of a special arbitrator or umpire need not show such appointment, as it may be shown by parol evidence.[27]

5. Substitution. The authority to appoint a special arbitrator or umpire extends, by necessary implication, to a substitution in the event of a non-acceptance or refusal of the appointee to act;[28] but, if the appointment is accepted and the appointee proceeds to act, the authority of the original arbitrators is exhausted and they cannot, by a subsequent attempt to appoint another, affect the authority of the one first appointed.[29]

C. Exercise of Authority — 1. Within Time Allowed Original Arbitrators. Although a special arbitrator or umpire may be legally appointed within the time allowed to the original arbitrators for making an award,[30] yet, until the expiration of that time, such special arbitrator or umpire has no authority to proceed to a hearing of the case,[31] unless, previous thereto, the original arbitrators have disagreed and given notice of their intention to proceed no further, and do not thereafter undertake to act.[32]

2. Upon Disagreement — a. Participation Without Disagreement. Although the appointment of a special arbitrator or umpire may be made previous to a disagreement between the original arbitrators,[33] authority to act in such capacity does not attach until such disagreement occurs.[34] Therefore, his presence or participation in the hearing previous to a disagreement is not necessary,[35] and no act of his, in the assumption of such authority previous to a disagreement, can have any validity[36] unless by consent or waiver of the parties.[37] But, where the

37. Consent or waiver without knowledge will not be implied.— In a case where an umpire was appointed before the proceedings, and one of the parties objected to his being special arbitrator or umpire has been appointed before the occurrence of a disagreement, and, without any disagreement having occurred, he joins with the other arbitrators in the making of an award, the fact of the joinder will not affect the validity of the award.[38] But it has been held that such an award is invalid where the umpire who took part therein did not participate in hearing the case.[39]

b. Proof of Disagreement. In order to establish jurisdiction to act upon disagreement, it is not necessary to show an express admission of the original arbitrators that they could not agree[40] — the disagreement may be sufficiently shown by facts and circumstances attending the proceedings,[41] and the calling in of the umpire is sufficient prima facie evidence of a disagreement.[42]

3. Hearing After Disagreement — a. Necessity to Rehear Evidence — (i) Not Necessary Unless Demanded. After a disagreement between the original arbitrators, the special arbitrator, in conjunction with them, or the umpire acting upon his sole responsibility, may proceed to a consideration of the case as presented by the original arbitrators, and make an award thereon without hearing the evidence anew or additional evidence, unless such rehearing be specially requested by one of the parties,[43] or required by the terms of the submission[44] or called in to act until the disagreement had occurred, and he was afterward called in and proceedings had before him without objection, it was held, in the absence of a showing that the objecting party had knowledge of the fact that the arbitrators had not disagreed, that the fact was sufficient ground upon which to impeach an award of the umpire, and that it could not be presumed that the complaining party had waived his objection. a statute under which the arbitration proceeds.[45] But a just regard for the rights of parties requires that a full rehearing should be accorded them upon demand therefor, and a failure so to do is sufficient ground upon which to avoid the award,[46] unless a waiver can be established by clear and unequivocal evidence.[47]

(II) Opportunity to Demand Rehearing — (A) Notice of Proceeding. The reason of the rule above stated — that a rehearing of the evidence is not necessary except upon demand — does not apply unless the parties have been notified of the appointment of the special arbitrator or umpire, and of the proceedings by him, and have been accorded reasonable opportunity to make such demand.[48] And in this respect the same necessity exists in the case of a special arbitrator acting only after disagreement as in the case of an umpire.[49]

of notice will not lightly be presumed; and, when once the want of notice appears, the burden of establishing a waiver is upon the party who seeks to uphold an award which has been made after disagreement and without a rehearing of the evidence.[52]

b. Proceedings When Rehearing Not Necessary — (I) Discretion as to Extent of Hearing — (A) General Rule. The extent to which it is necessary for a special arbitrator or umpire to go in hearing the matters upon which the original arbitrators have disagreed, in the absence of a demand for a rehearing or in case of a waiver thereof, is a matter which rests in their sound discretion.[53]

(B) Upon a Partial Disagreement — (1) Necessity to Consider Entire Matter. If a rehearing of the entire case has not been required, upon a partial disagreement of the original arbitrators there is no reason or rule which prevents the special arbitrator or umpire from accepting as conclusive those matters about which there has been no disagreement, confining the subsequent investigation to the matters of difference.[54]

(2) Necessity to Make an Entire Award. Although the opinion of the original arbitrators, so far as they agree, may be adopted, such partial agreement does not constitute a partial award, so as to permit a separate award upon the matters of disagreement, but the subsequent consideration, by the special arbitrator in conjunction with the others, or by the umpire in his sole capacity, should result in a single and final determination,[55] unless a separate award is authorized in, or contemplated by, the submission.[56]

(II) Matters Not Discretionary. Upon general principles of justice, certain matters as to hearing after disagreement are not the subject of discretion. Thus, it had been held essential that the matters of difference between original arbitrators should not be presented or discussed by one in the absence of the other;[57] also, that evidence for one party upon the matters of disagreement should not be heard ex parte;[58] that the umpire should not arrive at his decision

Giving notice of intention not to attend, by statement thereof to one of the arbitrators, will dispense with the notice. Graham v. Graham, 12 Pa. St. 128.

Waiver of hearing before original arbitrators does not constitute a waiver of the right to be heard before the umpire. Brown v. Lyddy, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 451.

52. Burden of proof.— Alexander v. Cunningham, 111 Ill. 511; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 567 [affirming 23 N. J. Eq. 431]; Day v. Hammond, 57 N. Y. 479, 15 Am. Rep. 522.

The case of Hall v. Lawrence, 4 T. R. 589, so far as it may be held to establish a contrary doctrine, has been overruled in England and expressly disapproved by a number of courts in the United States. The case seems to hold that the parties need not be notified, or be given an opportunity for the introduction of evidence or to have their case reheard before a special arbitrator or umpire, the fact decided being that an umpire was warranted in refusing a request to introduce evidence after an award had been made; but the case has very generally been considered as turning upon the doctrine of waiver. Limited to the proposition that the parties may, with notice, waive their right to a rehearing, it may be supported as sound law. See also Day v. Hammond, 57 N. Y. 479, 15 Am. by striking an average between aggregate sums decided upon by the original arbitrators,[59] and other essentials which cannot be disregarded may be required by the special circumstances of the case,[60] the terms of the submission, or other agreement of the parties.[61]

e. Participation of Arbitrators After Disagreement — (i) With Special Arbitrator. It is essential to the validity of an award, by the original arbitrators in conjunction with a special arbitrator who is authorized to act with them only in the making of a majority award, that the original arbitrators should participate in the hearing and consideration of the case after disagreement, and at least a majority of all must join in making the award.[62]

(ii) With Umpire. It is not essential to the validity of an award by an umpire, who is authorized to make an award upon his sole responsibility, that the original arbitrators should participate with him in the hearing or consideration of the case after disagreement, or join with him in making the award.[63] But such participation and joinder will not invalidate the award, because it is permissible for the umpire to have the advice and assistance of the arbitrators in the hearing and decision of the case, and because the joinder of the arbitrators may be rejected as surplusage.[64]

Presence at examination waived.— Where an umpire examined each party in the absence of the other, and it was not shown that either party had desired to be present at the examination of the other, the award was upheld. Matson v. Trower, R. & M. 17, 27 Rev. Rep. 725.

59. Striking average.—Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Bonner Mercantile Co., 56 Fed. 378, 15 U. S. App. 134, 5 C. C. A. 524, which holds, nevertheless, upon the circumstances of the case, that an award of an umpire for sixty thousand dollars, which was an average between the amounts adjudged by the original arbitrators of five thousand and one hundred and fifteen thousand dollars, respectively, was not of itself sufficient to avoid the award.

As to striking average by arbitrators see supra, IV, E, 1.

60. Necessity to view premises.— Where a decision of the matters submitted to arbitration require a view of the premises involved in the controversy, it is not sufficient that the original arbitrators view the premises before disagreement, but it is necessary, to a subsequent award in which a special arbitrator joins, that he also should have viewed the premises. Palmer v. Van Wyck, 92 Tenn. 397, 21 S. W. 761.

61. Terms of submission.— Walker v. Charleston, Bailey Eq. (S. C.) 443, wherein relief in equity was granted against an award by an umpire who, after disagreement, and contrary to a special requirement of the submission, heard and determined the controversy in the absence of the original arbitrators.

An agreement to submit upon written arguments, without further notice to the parties or rehearing of the evidence, does not justify an award by a special arbitrator without reading the arguments submitted and without further notice to the parties. VI. THE AWARD.

A. Form and Execution — 1. General Rule — Intention to Award. In the absence of a special requirement in the submission or in a statute under which the arbitration proceeds, no precise form in the making of an award need be observed; it is sufficient if the language employed evinces an intention to decide the matters submitted.[65] The question of intention is one of fact, to be determined

66. The intention to make an award need not be stated; in such case parol evidence is admissible to show that the paper in question was intended as an award. Saunders v. Heaton, 12 Ind. 20.

An award in the form of an opinion may be sufficient to show an intention to render a final determination. Williams v. Paschall, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 284, 1 L. ed. 835; Matson v. Trower, R. & M. 17, 27 Rev. Rep. 725.

A mere suggestion or proposition is not an award; therefore, in case of a dispute between an architect and his clerk, relating to the wages of the latter, which was referred to arbitration, where the arbitrator stated in a letter to the architect that he had examined the claims of the clerk, which did not seem to justify any demand for remuneration under the circumstances, and proposing, evidently by way of a liberal compromise, that the architect should pay the clerk a certain sum, it was held that this was a mere suggestion and not a decided opinion upon which the clerk could recover as upon an award. Lock v. Vulliamy, 5 B. & Ad. 600, 2 N. & M. 336, 27 E. C. L. 255.

An award in the form of a recommendation may, nevertheless, be given effect as a final determination where such intention appears. West v. Averill Grocery Co., 109 Iowa 488, 80 N. A signed memorandum, shown to have been intended as instructions to a solicitor upon which to draft an award, has been held not binding as an award. Shaw v. Morton, 13 U. C. C. P. 223.

67. An indorsement of the award upon a lease, required by the terms of a submission, was held to have been sufficiently complied with by making an award on a separate paper, and annexing it to the lease with a wafer. Montague v. Smith, 13 Mass. 396.

The indorsement of a note and delivery of a receipt, delivered by the parties, respectively, to the arbitrators, was held to be exclusive as to the manner in which the arbitrators should make an award. Allen v. Galpin, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 246, 250, where the court said that the parties "might have directed it to be written upon parchment, or engraved upon brass; or that the arbitrators should cause it to be printed; and if the arbitrators did not choose to do as they were authorized, their acts would not bind the parties."

Indenting an award, required in terms by a submission, has been held not to be binding on the arbitrators, and that an award not indented was good. Gatliffe v. Dunn, 1 Barnes Notes Cas. 55.

68. English language required.—Under La. Const. art. 6, § 15, the language of all public records must be that "in which the constitution of the United States is written," and it has, therefore, been held that, inasmuch as the court is prohibited from reëxamining an award on its merits, and is confined to the ministerial duty of enforcing it when presented for homologation, the award becomes a part of the records of the court and must be in the English language, in accordance with the constitution. there is evidence of an intention that the award should also be written, a writing is not essential to its validity;[70] but a parol award will be of no effect if a writing be required by the submission,[71] by a statute under which it proceeds,[72] or by the rules of an association under which the arbitrators act.[73]

3. SEPARATE WRITINGS. Separate writings of arbitrators, which are intended by them to form parts of one award, are to be taken together in construing it or deciding upon its effect, whether the result of the separate instrument is to avoid the award[74] or to validate it;[75] and statements written on the award may be considered as a part of it and receive the same construction as if such statements had been inserted in the body of the award, whether written on the margin,[76]

As to matters concerning real estate, but not involving rights of property therein, as to which a writing would not be required see supra, II, B, 1, c, (II), (C).

The law of the place of the submission controls the question of validity upon a parol award; wherefore it has been held that, although the law of the forum required a written award, a parol award was, nevertheless, good in pursuance of a submission made in another state with reference to a matter upon which a written award was not required. Green v. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co., 37 Ga. 456.

As a common-law award, a parol award may be enforced, although it may not be enforced in the manner provided by a statute requiring the award to be in writing.

A verbal agreement to abide by a verbal award pursuant to a written submission, which has the effect of changing it to a mere verbal one, has been held not to give effect to a parol award in regard to a matter respecting which the statute of frauds required the award to be in writing. French v. New, 28 N. Y. 147.

A writing will be presumed, in the absence of an allegation to the contrary, in a case where a writing is necessary and where the award is subsequently drawn in question. Brown v. Mize, 119 Ala. 10, 24 So. 453.

73. The rules of an association, which require awards of its arbitration committee to be in writing, have been held not applicable to a submission of a matter to certain members of the committee, so that their action should not be in any official capacity under the association rules, but merely as arbitrators, so constituted by the parties. Murdock v. Blesdell, 106 Mass. 370.

on the back,[77] or underneath the award.[78] Separate awards may be made at the same time upon distinct matters submitted by a single agreement,[79] and a single award upon distinct matters is proper where separate awards are not required.[80]

4. RECITALS — a. When Necessary. In the absence of a special provision requiring recitals of compliance with the terms of the submission or a statute applicable to the proceedings, it is not, generally, necessary that such recital should be made, although, in some cases, it has been held that requirements relating to jurisdiction, as conditions precedent thereto, must be shown in the award to have been fulfilled.[81]

b. Misrecitals. In accordance with the general rule that awards will be liberally construed in order to effectuate the intention of the arbitrators, misrecitals of facts not required to be recited may be disregarded and the award be given effect according to the actual facts and the real intention of the arbitrators,[82] and the arbitrator cannot, by a false recital, assume to himself authority beyond that which the submission confers upon him.[83] The submission, rather than the award, controls the question of what matters were submitted to arbitration;[84] but a recital of the submission is not conclusive of what the parties really submitted,[85]

Intention to make separate awards. — In a case where the parties had agreed that a statement of their accounts should be made an essential part of the award, an award in general terms was made, containing no such statement, and subsequently, when the award was drawn in question for failure to comply with the submission in respect of form, upon an offer to introduce in evidence such a statement and annex it to the award, it was held that the defect could not thus be cured, especially since it did not appear that the arbitrators had intended to make the statement a part of their award. Fobes v. Backus, 1 Grant (Pa.) 393.

Under a statute requiring a statement of the proceedings, an award in general terms, which refers to statements of the proceedings, which have been delivered to the parties, has been held not sufficient to enable the court to enter judgment on the award under the statute. Day v. Laflin, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 280.

80. Koerner v. Leathe, 149 Mo. 361, 51 S. W. 96.

But a single award is not permissible, in the absence of special authority, upon separate claims of different parties under separate submissions. Giles v. Royal Ins. Co., (Mass. 1901) 60 N. E. 786.

81. Province of recitals. — "It is held sufficient if it can be shown, otherwise than by the recital contained in the award, that the arbitrators had been duly constituted, and had, in making the award, pursued their authority. And these facts are not proved by the recital of them in the award, nor is the award evidence of anything except that for which the parties or the court from whom it derives its validity and effect, have made it evidence. The omission of the recital is therefore of no consequence whatever." Houghton v. Burroughs, 18 N. H. 499, 502.

and a recital in an award of the contents of the submission has been held to be proof neither of the submission nor of the terms of the submission.[86]

B. Signing the Award — 1. Necessity to Sign — a. When Writing Required. In a case where an award in writing is required it cannot be given effect as a written award unless it is signed by the arbitrators;[87] and, although a written award be not required, an award in writing which is not signed by the arbitrators cannot be given effect as a parol award unless it appears to have been delivered without any intention to sign.[88]

b. Signature by Unauthorized Person. The validity of an award, which is duly signed by the arbitrators authorized to make it, is not affected by the signing by another person with them who has no authority to act as arbitrator.[89]

2. Time of Signing — a. After Decision. It is not essential to the validity of an award that it should be made and signed immediately upon arriving at a decision, if it, in fact, be duly signed at a subsequent time.[90]

b. After Publication. An award which has been published without being signed may be given validity by signing it thereafter, provided it be signed within the time limited for completing the award.[91]

3. Presence of Arbitrators — a. Signing Coincident With Decision. In a number of cases it has been stated as a general rule that an award which is not signed by the arbitrators in the presence of each other could not be given effect as a valid award; but the reasons given show that the intention of the rule is to require merely the joint participation of arbitrators in the consideration of the case in arriving at a decision, and, therefore, the rule that an award is invalid unless signed by the arbitrators in each other's presence should be confined to the cases in which the signing follows immediately upon the arrival at a decision.[92]

b. Signing After Decision. After the arbitrators have arrived at a decision upon the matters submitted to them the mere signing of the award at a subsequent time does not involve the exercise of judgment or judicial discretion, and, therefore, it is no valid objection to an award in such a case that it was subsequently signed by each arbitrator without the presence of the others.[93]

C. Sealing the Award. In the absence of a special requirement it is not essential to the validity of the award that it should be under seal,[94] notwithstanding the submission itself be under seal,[95] not even for the purpose of determining the right or title to real estate.[96] But an unsealed award is invalid if a seal is required by the submission[97] or by statute applicable to the proceedings,[98] unless the provision is merely directory.[99]

D. Acknowledgment of the Award. A statutory provision requiring arbitrators to acknowledge the execution of awards before designated officers must be complied with in order to entitle the successful party to entry of judgment on the award under the statute.[1]

E. Attestation of Award. An award at common law need not be witnessed in order to be valid; and, therefore, an award pursuant to a submission which does not comply with the provisions of a statute requiring attestation may be good at common law without being witnessed;[2] but an award without attestation cannot be enforced in the manner provided by a statute which requires attestation.[3] The omission has, however, been held merely a formal one, which might be cured after publication and delivery to the parties,[4] or even after it has been filed in court for enforcement.[5]

F. Stamping the Award. An award is not to be regarded as an agreement, contract, or certificate, so as to come within the terms of a statute requiring such instruments to be stamped.[6]

G. Publication of the Award — 1. General Rule — Publication Necessary. Publication of an award is essential to its validity — which means that it should be made known in the manner specified in, or contemplated by, the submission or the provisions of a statute applicable thereto, compliance with which by the arbitrators amounts to a completion of the award and renders them functi officio.[7]

2. Formal Notice to the Parties — a. In the Absence of Requirement. Unless a formal notice to the parties of the making of an award has been required it is not essential to its validity, because, in such case, the parties are each bound to take notice of the completion of an award in accordance with the submission,[8] although a contrary rule has been announced in some of the cases.[9]

Correction of award after delivery of copies without further notice.— Under a submission requiring an award of a boundary line to be made and published to the parties in writing, the arbitrators made and signed an award and delivered copies thereof to the parties, and at the same time stated to them orally the actual decision as to the location of the line, and also that it was uncertain whether the award as drawn correctly expressed the decision, and that if it should afterward be ascertained, upon inquiry of the surveyor, that the award was incorrectly expressed it would be corrected. Thereupon the parties separated, and, thereafter, the chairman of the arbitrators corrected the original award, which was left in his possession, to conform to the decision actually made and orally stated to the parties, but did not again present the paper as altered to the other arbitrators nor again notify either of the parties of the alteration, and it was held that an action to enforce the original award as amended could not be maintained, because it had never been published to the parties in writing in accordance with the submission. b. Compliance With Requirements—(I) SERVICE OF ORIGINAL. The original award need not be served upon, or delivered to, either of the parties unless this has been required;[10] but when required, compliance is essential to the validity of the award[11] unless the requirement be waived.[12]

(II) SERVICE OF COPY. The service of a copy of the award upon the parties, if not required by the terms of the submission or by statute, is not essential to its validity;[13] but a failure to deliver copies to the parties in requisite manner and form will prevent enforcement of the award when such delivery is required by the terms of the submission[14] or of a statute applicable to the proceedings,[15]

notice of the award to both parties"); Kingsley v. Bill, 9 Mass. 198 (which holds that a declaration containing no allegation that the award was published or made known to defendant except by bringing the action is fatally defective. 11. Ready for delivery on demand.— A requirement that the award shall be delivered to the parties or to such of them as shall demand it is sufficiently complied with by making a single award within the time limited, since the requirement does not contemplate a duplicate until the latter be demanded. Martin v. McCormick, 34 N. J. L. 23.

Ready for delivery to the parties.— A requirement that an award shall be executed and ready for delivery to the parties has been held to necessitate execution in duplicate, so that each party may have a counterpart. Gidley v. Gidley, 65 N. Y. 169; Pratt v. Hackett, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 14; Buck v. Wadsworth, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 321. But see In re Oulton, 25 N. Brunsw. 19, which holds that delivery to the successful party of the original, and of a copy to the other party, is a sufficient delivery to the parties.

Reading an award to the parties has been held a sufficient compliance with the requirement that the award should be made in writing and ready to be delivered on a certain day. Rundell v. La Fleur, 6 Allen (Mass.) 480.

Intention to make and serve duplicate.— Where the arbitrators, after having made and signed their award, gave it to a clerk to be copied, for the purpose of delivering duplicate to the parties, and, subsequently, one of the arbitrators refused to sign the copy or consent to a delivery, it was held that there was no valid award, although a delivery had not been required, because the award had not been completed in accordance with the purpose of the arbitrators as to the manner of publication and delivery. Williams v. Rumbough, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 606.

A material variance between duplicates, rendering it uncertain what was intended to be awarded, is fatal to the award where each of the duplicates has been delivered as the award. Green v. Lundy, 1 N. J. L. 497. Aliter in case of a slight variance in the phraseology, such variance not producing any material conflict in the meaning. Spofford v. Spofford, 10 N. A knowledge of the variance, by a party to whom an inaccurate counterpart is delivered, and of the fact that the one delivered to the other party was the correct award intended to be made, has been held sufficient to cure the defect, which might otherwise have been fatal, in a case where the delivery of duplicates had not been specially required. Schenck v. Voorhees, 7 N. J. L. 383.

12. Acceptance of a copy without objection waives a requirement of a delivery of the original or a counterpart. Gidley v. Gidley, 65 N. Y. 169; Sellick v. Addams, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 197.

Failure to demand after notice is a waiver of the requirement that the award should be ready for delivery, since it must be presumed that, had he made the demand, the delivery would have followed. Burnap v. Losey, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 111; Perkins v. Wing, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 143.

Leaving the award with the arbitrators, by subsequent agreement, for the benefit of all the parties, is a waiver of the requirement that it should be delivered to the parties. Tracy v. Herrick, 25 N. H. 381.

14. Required by submission.—Low v. Nolte, 16 Ill. 475.

Informal notice of the contents of an award, given by the arbitrators to one of the parties, is not a sufficient compliance with the requirement in a submission that the award, or a copy thereof, shall be delivered. Anderson v. Miller, 108 Ala. 171, 19 So. 302.

unless such service has been waived by the party who raises the objection that a copy of the award was not delivered to him.[16]

H. Return of the Award — 1. Necessity For Return. An award which is not intended to be returned to any court need not be so returned in order that it may be valid and binding;[17] but, if the arbitration proceeds under a rule of court or statute requiring such return, compliance with the requirement is essential to its enforcement,[18] unless the parties stipulate for performance without such return,[19] or in case performance has been partially effected.[20]

2. Sufficiency of Return — a. Court of Return. An award, made pursuant to an arbitration which proceeds under a statute requiring that it shall be returned to a court within a specified jurisdiction, cannot be enforced if returned to another court.[21]

b. Manner of Return. In order that an award of arbitrators which is required to be returned to court may be enforced, it should be returned in the manner prescribed — as that the award be inclosed in a sealed envelope,[22] that it

In Alabama it has been held that: "The provision, that a copy of the award shall be delivered to each of the parties, is directory." Crook v. Chambers, 40 Ala. 239, 242.

In Georgia it has been held that the intention of the statute requiring service of a copy of the award is to give the parties opportunity to take exceptions thereto, and that, where a party has appeared upon the hearing for entry of judgment, has been heard upon exceptions, and does not show that he has been taken by surprise or lost any right by failure to receive a copy, the award should not be set aside on that ground. McMillan v. Allen, 98 Ga. 405, 25 S. E. 505; Anderson v. Taylor, 41 Ga. 10.

In Kentucky the failure to furnish and deliver copies of an award, immediately upon making the award and fifteen days before the next succeeding term of court, as required by statute, does not invalidate the award; but if the copy be not delivered at all, and proper objection has been taken upon this ground, the judgment may be set aside and a continuance allowed to await a service of the copy, and, if immediate delivery has not been made, this will be no ground of objection to entry of judgment on the award if the copy has been delivered fifteen days before the court meets. Carson v. Carson, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 434; Adams v. Hammon, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 5; Harding v. Wallace, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 536; Wrigglesworth v. Morton, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 157; Ward v. Rhodes, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 80.

16. Accepting the original, without objection upon the ground of failure to deliver a copy, is a waiver of compliance with a requirement for service of the copy, if, indeed, it be not a substantial compliance. Anderson v. Miller, 108 Ala. 171, 19 So. 302.

An attempt to revoke the submission has been considered as a waiver of the requirement for delivery of a copy of the award. Schultz v. Halsey, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 405.

Retention of award by arbitrators, under agreement of the parties, until the first day of a certain term of court, operates as a waiver of the statutory requirement that copies of the award must be made and delivered within fifteen days. Marsh v. Curtis, 71 Ind. 377 [cited in Coulter v. Coulter, 81 Ind. 542].

After pretending to comply with an award a party will not be allowed to raise the objection that a copy of it had not been delivered to him. Terry v. Moore, 3 Misc. (N. Y.) 285, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 785, 52 N. Y. St. 406.

The objection must be taken in the trial court, or else it will not be entertained on appeal. Cones v. Vanosdol, 4 Ind. 248; Weir v. West, 27 Kan. 650; Hollenback v. Fleming, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 303.

In West Virginia, under the statute which provides for the return of an award to the court, the party against whom the award is made may maintain a suit in equity to set it aside when it has been executed and is ready to be returned, although a return has not, in fact, been made. Legislative change of courts pending arbitration. — Where an award was made returnable to the district court, which was afterward abolished by the legislature and whose jurisdiction was assumed by the supreme judicial court, it was held that the award might be returned to the latter court at any term prior to the period limited in the submission, and that such legislative action was not an impairment of the obligation of a contract. Kendall v. Lewiston Water Power Co., 36 Me. 19.

22. Award opened before presentation to court. — Under a statute requiring that the award shall be inclosed in a sealed envelope and returned to the court, and remain sealed until opened by the clerk, it was held that an award so inclosed and sealed, which was deposited by counsel for one of the parties with be transmitted to the clerk of the court[23] or to the court,[24] and that such transmission be made at a designated term.[25]

I. Liberal Construction and Interpretation — 1. In General. Following the general rule of favorable construction which is now applied to arbitration proceedings,[26] courts do not travel out of their way for the purpose of overturning awards; but, on the other hand, they will refrain from exact and technical interpretation, and will indulge every reasonable presumption, whenever there is any room for such indulgence, in favor of the finality and validity of an award.[27] The the clerk of the proper court among the papers in an action brought on the award, and afterward opened by some person unknown to the clerk or the court, could not be enforced under the statute. Curley v. Chadburne, 119 Mass. 489.

In Iowa it has been held that a failure to inclose the award in a sealed envelope, as required by statute, is not sufficient ground for setting aside the award, in a case where the award was handed to the clerk by one of the arbitrators and all suspicion of prejudice was expressly rebutted by admitted or established facts. Higgins v. Kinneady, 20 Iowa 474.

23. Delivery in person to the clerk is a sufficient compliance with a statutory provision that the award shall be transmitted. McKnight v. McCullough, 21 Iowa 111.

Filing in term-time is not essential under a requirement for return to the clerk of the court. McKnight v. McCullough, 21 Iowa 111; Lovell v. Wheaton, 11 Minn. 92.

24. An address to the clerk of the court, to which the award is returnable, without any other writing upon the envelope declaring its contents, has been held a sufficient compliance with the requirement that the award shall be inclosed in a sealed envelope and transmitted to the court. Morrell v. Old Colony R. Co., 158 Mass. 69, 32 N. E. 1030.

Delivery by a person other than one of the arbitrators has been held no sufficient ground of objection to the award in the absence of a showing of any irregularity, occurring by reason of the means of transmission, which would cast suspicion upon the paper actually received. McMillan v. Allen, 98 Ga. 405, 25 S. E. 505.

Transmission to the clerk of the court is a sufficient compliance with the requirement that the award shall be transmitted to the court. James v. Southern Lumber Co., 153 Mass. 361, 26 N. E. 995.

25. At a designated term.—Chisolm v. Cothran, 40 Ga. 273; Skeels v. Chickering, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 316; Gerrish v. Morss, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 625; Durell v. Merrill, 1 Mass. 411; Russell v. Clark, 60 Wis. 284, 18 N. W. 844.

Filing in the clerk's office has been held not a sufficient compliance with the requirement for return to a specified term. Burghardt v. Owen, 13 Gray (Mass.) 300.

Under a statutory provision that the court shall be always open, it was held that a requirement for the return of an award to a term or session of the court within a designated time was sufficiently complied with by return to the court at any time within the prescribed limit, whether or not the court was holding a regular session. language of the arbitrator will be taken according to its obvious meaning, in order to arrive at his intention.[28]

2. Construed With Reference to Circumstances. Whether the arbitrators have authority in any particular, or whether the award conforms to the powers conferred by the submission, as well as the proper construction to be given to the award as made, will be decided according to the terms of the submission and bond and the language of the award, and with reference to, and in view of, all the surrounding facts and circumstances.[29]

J. Award and Authority as Dependent Upon Submission — 1. Conformity to Submission in General — a. Rule Stated. The submission furnishes the source and prescribes the limits of the arbitrators' authority, without regard to the form of the submission,[30] and the award, both in substance and in form,[31] must conform to the submission, and the arbitrators are inflexibly limited to a decision of the particular matters submitted. Any attempt to pass judgment upon other questions, or to extend their authority to other persons, is unauthorized, and, consequently, without legal force.[32]

b. Arbitrator Cannot Acquire Jurisdiction by His Own Decision. Though, in some sense, the arbitrator must, in the first instance, determine his course under the submission,[33] his power is, nevertheless, confined strictly to the matters submitted, and he cannot decide upon his own jurisdiction, and thereby take upon himself authority which the submission does not confer.[34]

c. Where Rule of Decision Is Fixed. To adopt a different rule of decision from that which the terms of the authority require the arbitrators to apply is as much a departure from the submission as to pass upon a matter not submitted, or to omit to consider a matter embraced in the submission.[35] And if the arbitrator is required to award in accordance with the law, and the right to recover depends upon the determination of a particular question in a particular manner, an award in favor of the right, which shows a failure to determine the question as the law required, is bad.[36]

d. Effect of Promise to Perform Award. The general words in the submission that the parties agree to abide by and perform the award, or that the award shall be final and conclusive, cannot operate to give effect to an award which does not conform to the submission.[37]

2. Award Need Not Be Limited in Express Terms. The rule requiring that the award shall not go beyond the submission is not to be so strictly construed as to make it necessary that it should be averred, in terms, that the award is so limited. On the contrary, every intendment will be indulged that the award is in conformity with the submission; and, even where the words of the award are so comprehensive that they may take in matters which are not within the submission, yet it will be presumed that nothing beyond the submission is awarded, unless the contrary is expressly shown.[38] If, after reciting his authority, the Value estimated by money standard.— Under a submission to arbitrators of the question of the value or price to be paid for land purchased by one of the parties from the other, such value or price to be paid in stock at par value, it was held that this did not authorize the arbitrators to ascertain the value of the land according to any but a money standard, and the award was set aside because the arbitrators, without notice to, and in the absence of, the purchaser, estimated the land at above its money value, according to a supposed depreciation in the stock. Construction of contract submitted.— A contract to build a railroad provided for alterations of the line which were necessary or expedient, without extra allowance, and reserved the right of the railroad company to substitute piling for embankment. The construction of this contract and the determination of all claims thereunder were submitted to arbitration, and it was held that an award which allowed extra compensation for alterations of the line and substitution of piling did not transcend the authority of the submission. b. Restricted Submission — (I) In General. If the submission is not so broad as to include all matters between the parties, or all matters in dispute, or is otherwise restricted, while the award may settle every question which necessarily arises from the particular matters submitted, it must be confined strictly to these.[42]

Amount of debt — Right to order payment. — Under a submission to "determine which of the said several items of claim the estate of Mrs. Boulton is bound, as matter of law, to pay," the authority of the arbitrator is confined to deciding the question of legal liability, and is not authorized to find the sum payable, in respect of the several items, or to order payment of them. Armstrong v. Cayley, 2 Ch. Chamb. (U. C.) 128, 131. And, where a confession of judgment provided that it was to be released on payment of the amount a person named should say was due, the person so designated to ascertain the amount due has no authority to award payment in specific personal property. State v. Jones, 2 Gill (Md.) 49.

Annulment of contract.— Where parties submit their controversies growing out of the work specified in a building contract, and such contentions or matters of difference as may arise in the premises, the arbitrators have no authority to annul the contract, unless it clearly appears that the right to annul was one of the questions submitted. St. Patrick's Church v. Dakin, 1 Rob. (La.) 202.

Appraisal — Other matters excluded.— Where the parties chose persons to value, in tobacco, certain lands purchased, it was held that the arbitrators had no power to adjust accounts or settle any other disputes between the parties. Ross v. Pleasants, Wythe (Va.) 147. So, a submission, under a contract by one joint owner to sell to the other all his interest at a price to be determined by appraisers, does not authorize the determination of the extent of either party's interest. Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 179. A submission of "the question of damages," in an action for debauching plaintiff's wife, does not embrace the question of defendant's liability. Samson v. Young, 50 N. H. 62, 64.

Assignment of dower — Distribution not included.— Under a submission upon an assignment of dower and to determine whether the widow is entitled to the whole of other land claimed by her husband's heirs, the arbitrators are not authorized to award a distribution among the heirs. Brown v. Mize, 119 Ala. 10, 24 So. 453.

Dealing outside of contract submitted.— A clause in a building contract providing that, if any differences shall arise between the parties in relation to the contract, the work to be performed under it, etc., the decision of the architect shall be final, is a submission of specific questions, and the architect's decision is not binding upon the parties as to the matters of dealing entirely outside of the contract in question — as a claim for money lent or goods sold and delivered. Busse v. Agnew, 10 Ill. App. 527.

Improper items considered.— An award, which took into account moneys, paid and received, for insurance of a vessel, under a submission of controversies concerning the earnings and expenses of the vessel, is outside of the terms of the submission, and could not support an action thereon. Sawyer v. Freeman, 35 Me. 542. The submission of a controversy between parties as to their respective liability to pay the mutual expense of "cleaning out a drainage canal" does not authorize an award based upon an inquiry of the expense of "deepening" the canal, and an action cannot be maintained upon a bond given to secure the performance of the award on account of failure to perform the award thus made. Noble v. Wiggins, 52 N. C. 535.

To run boundary line — In general.— The submission of a controversy about a boundary line, to determine the location of said line, and also to run the line in accordance with a previous line, limits the authority to ascertaining the single point where the line had previously been run, and an award undertaking to establish a new line is without the submission and void. Wyman v. Hammond, 55 Me. 534. To the same effect see Walker v. Simpson, 80 Me. 143, 13 Atl. 580; Ross v. Linder, 17 S. C. 593. But where devisees of land, not agreeing to the division of it according to the will, submitted, in general terms, an award "from the proofs adduced to the arbitrators, from the tenor of the will, and evident intention of the testator," is good, although the line specified is not the line mentioned in the will. Hollingsworth v. Lupton, 4 Munf. (Va.) 114.

(II) Matters on One Side. If the demands or claims on one side only form the subject of difference or dispute between the parties, the arbitrators cannot consider demands or claims put forth on the other side.[43]

(III) Personal Rights Only Submitted. Where personal rights are submitted, the arbitrator cannot bind a man's right to real things.[44]

(IV) Matters in Controversy or in Dispute. The submission of matters in dispute does not include all demands, but only those which are in dispute.[45] But to such a submission the parties give definite application by appearing before the arbitrators and presenting their claims and litigating their demands; the subject-matter of the submission is thereby rendered certain, and to that the award must be referred.[46]

c. Matters Involved in Suit — (I) In General. Where, pending a suit, the parties, out of court, submit the entire controversy between them to arbitration, the whole subject-matter is submitted, and whatever claim will arise in the suit is embraced in the submission.[47] It has been held that the cause of action is the cisive, and, therefore, any finding of the arbitrators could be of no effect. Coughran v. Alderete, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 109.

Validity of contract — Debt not included.— Where questions only as to the validity of a certain sale, and the amount of corn transferred thereby to be accounted for by defendant, were submitted to arbitration, an award as to the amount owed by defendant for the corn was unauthorized and void. Clark v. Goit, 1 Kan. App. 345, 41 Pac. 214.

Whether goods delivered correspond with samples.— So, a submission of the question whether goods sold by sample and delivered correspond to the sample, and must be accepted, does not authorize the arbitrators to award damages for a refusal to accept the goods. Leach v. Weeks, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 269.

43. Black v. Hickey, 48 Me. 545 (holding that, where the value of a tenant's betterments was submitted and the referee considered and deducted therefrom an account which defendant claimed was due to him from the tenant, such deduction was erroneous); Worthen v. Stevens, 4 Mass. 448; Scott v. Barnes, 7 Pa. St. 134.

Cannot arrange purchase and sale.— Where A and B agree to submit a demand made by A against B for a building and land, the arbitrators have no authority to award that A shall pay B a certain amount of money and that B shall convey the land. While the arbitrators may take into consideration any equities involved in the title, this equitable jurisdiction does not extend to making an award against the claimant against whom no award was submitted. The arbitrators have no authority to thus arrange a purchase and sale. Robinson v. Moore, 17 N. H. 479. See also Culver v. Ashley, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 98, holding that authority to estimate the value of chattels to be taken in payment of the debt, if any, at their valuation, does not authorize an award that the creditor should take them at the valuation, and, the indebtedness being to a less amount, pay the excess to the debtor.

Dower awarded on condition.— An award giving to a widow a child's share in lieu of dower, on condition that she pay a part of her husband's debts, does not conform to a submission for the assignment of dower. Brown v. Mize, 119 Ala. 10, 24 So. 453.

And a submission restricting the arbitrators to "all said controversies which we cannot settle ourselves" does not include matters not in controversy and not laid before the arbitrators. 47. Whole subject-matter is submitted.— Fowler v. Jackson, 86 Ga. 337, 12 S. E. 811; McMillan v. James, 105 Ill. 194; Adams v. Ringo, 79 Ky. 211, 1 Ky. L. Rep. 251.

Before answer filed.— After a suit brought to settle a partnership and before answer filed, the parties agreed to submit to arbitration and the suit was dismissed. In an action brought upon the award, defendant insisted that the award was invalid, because it embraced matters which were not submitted. Though the agreement was somewhat obscure in this connection, it was held, by a fair construction, to submit to the arbitrators the whole of the partnership transactions involved in the suit, notwithstanding the answer of defendant had not been filed, because, if suit had been carried on, defendant would have had a right, by way of defense, to present any claims which he had against plaintiff arising out of the partnership transactions. It was, therefore, proper, under such a submission, for the arbitrators to take into consideration all matters of the partnership and those which might have been set up by defendant in his answer, and to render the award, which would embrace all matters of controversy between the parties resulting from the partnership. Newton v. West, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 24.

basis of the submission, and not the particular form of the declaration nor of the particular issues which may have been formed.[48] But, on the other hand, the pleadings and the issues formed thereby may be looked to by way of aid in ascertaining the scope of the submission.[49] If the submission is of matters involved in action only, it includes nothing else, and matters accruing subsequent to the commencement of the action cannot be considered.[50]

(II) Matters in Suit, and Other Matters. But, if the submission is not alone of the suit or matters involved therein, but of all matters in difference between the parties in addition to the specific submission of the matters involved in the suit, then the arbitrators are not restricted to the latter.[51] Nor are they,

Affirmative relief without cross-bill, where a suit in equity for an accounting is discontinued and the subject-matter thereof referred to arbitration. McCune v. Lytle, (Pa. 1900) 47 Atl. 190.

Particular right and not cause of action.— Though a submission state that the parties had a cause then subsisting between them, relative to the right to turn the water from a certain spring, having submitted to "leave the same matter" to the decision of arbitrators, the matter referred was the right to turn the water, and not to the determination of a cause then subsisting. Dutton v. Gillet, 5 Conn. 172.

48. Cook v. Carpenter, 34 Vt. 121, 80 Am. Dec. 670.

Action on contract — Award must find contract.— Where the action was on an express contract which defendant denied, the arbitrators, in order to find for plaintiff, must find upon an express contract. Lynch v. Nugent, 80 Iowa 422, 46 N. W. 61.

Distinction between action and cause of action.— If the submission be of all actions, the arbitrators cannot make an award of causes of actions, but it is otherwise if the submission be of all actions and quarrels, because the word "quarrels" comprehends causes of action. Bacon Abr. tit. Arbitrament and Award, (E), 326 [citing Rolle Abr. 246].

Matters admissible under amendment.— In Ing v. State, 8 Md. 287, it was held that, under the statute of 1778 in that state, any matter which might be introduced into the action by amendment is within the submission. See also Rone v. Hines, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 93.

Under rule of court.—Where defendant has not filed an account and set-off, a submission to arbitration under a rule of court embraces only the matters set up in the declaration and plaintiff's bill of particulars, and an award for a recovery in favor of defendant is erroneous. Austin v. Clark, 8 W. Va. 236; Swann v. Deem, 4 W. Va. 368. See also Harrison v. Wortham, 8 Leigh (Va.) 296; Backman v. Reigart, 3 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 270, holding that where an amicable action in case is submitted to arbitration, nothing is submitted that might not be adjudicated in a declaration in that form of action.

Where the submission is oral and the terms do not appear in the record, the issues are the questions submitted. Bulsom v. Lampman, 1 Kan. 324.

50. Matters arising subsequently.— Carmack v. Grant, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 32; Smith v. Kincaid, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 28. But an award that nothing is due is sufficient, because it is to be presumed that things remain in statu quo from the time of the submission. Dickins v. Jarvis, 5 B. & C. 528, 8 D. & R. 285, 11 E. C. L. 569.

51. Harmon v. Jennings, 22 Me. 240; Jones v. Welwood, 71 N. Y. 208.

Distinction in terms used.— The distinction has been made between the submission of "all matters in difference between the parties in the cause," which is construed to cover all matters of difference, and of "all matters in difference in this cause between the parties," which is construed to confine the submission to questions in the action. Malcolm v. Fullarton, 2 T. R. 645, 646, 1 Rev. Rep. 567. But it was suggested by Buller, J., in Smith v. Muller, 3 T. R. 624, 626, that the distinction was too refined for general understanding, and it was recommended to make a general reference a reference "of all matters in difference between the parties," omitting the words "in the cause," and a reference to be restricted to the matters in the cause, "of all matters in difference in the cause," omitting the words "between the parties." In the Scotch courts, by a technical construction of the reference "of a cause and all questions," it is held that the reference is only of all matters in dispute in the cause. Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 87 [citing Baillie v. Edinburgh Oil Gas Light Co., 3 Cl. & F. 639, 6 Eng. Reprint 1577]. But see Harrison v. Wortham, 8 Leigh (Va.) 296, 303, wherein the submission was "of all matters of difference between the parties in this suit," and the court said that there was a well-settled distinction between such a submission and a general reference of all matters of difference between the parties, to which Malcolm v. Fullerton, 2 T. R. 645, 1 Rev. Rep. 567, was cited, and then proceeded to hold that the arbitrator was right in disallowing a set-off which was not the proper subject of set-off in the suit.

under such a submission, bound by any balance between the parties as it stood when the suit was brought, but they may regard it as the accounts appeared at the date of the submission.[52]

d. Powers and Orders Incidental to Nature of Submission — (I) In General. Where the submission is in general terms of all matters or differences, or requires general inquiry into, and determination with respect to, all matters connected with the particular transaction in difference or dispute, the arbitrator has power to pass upon and determine everything incidental to the matters submitted, or connected with the particular matters in difference or dispute.[53] The fact that certain subjects are specifically mentioned, as matters to be submitted and examined, does not justify the conclusion that all others were intended to be exeluded, when it appears from the submission that the purpose of the parties is to procure a settlement of all questions between them connected with the general subject-matter of the submission.[54]

(II) Submission by Partners. Upon a submission of all matters in difference between partners, the arbitrators may award a dissolution,[55] or award the joint property to one, and direct him to pay the other a sum in gross and to discharge and satisfy debts owing by the firm,[56] and the arbitrators may determine such other matters between sueh parties as the nature of the submission and their relations require.[57]

Discretion of arbitrator.—Where the agreement provides that the arbitrator should determine "whether or not there has been any breach of the contract and, if so, what damages, if any," etc., an award finding a breach of the contract, but no damages, is not bad for that reason. Holyoke Mach. Co. v. Franklin Paper Co., 97 Mass. 150. (III) Prior Settlements or Receipts. If the submission is broad enough, as including all matters between the parties, or all matters in difference or dispute, the arbitrators may go behind a former receipt or settlement;[58] and, in like manner, the arbitrators are not concluded by a former award where the submission, from its nature or express terms, is broad enough to include the matters which have been submitted to the prior arbitration.[59]

(IV) Directions—(A) In General. In connection with the rule already stated as to the power of the arbitrator, springing from, and incidental to, the nature of the submission,[60] the arbitrator has such power to direct the conduct of ment between the parties constitutes a bill of sale of the interest of one of the partners in a portion of the partnership property, or a mere pledge to secure a debt. Fulmore v. McGeorge, 91 Cal. 611, 616, 28 Pac. 92.

Individual accounts.— A submission of "all accounts, disputes, controversies and reckonings, of whatsoever nature, now existing between the same parties," authorizes an award, not only upon the individual accounts between the parties, but also upon accounts between one of the parties and a copartnership, of which the other party is the sole survivor. Wooden v. Little, 3 McCord (S. C.) 487.

Lien upon assets.— Under a submission to settle disputes between partners, it was held that the arbitrators, upon finding the balance due from the firm to one of the partners, might declare this balance a lien upon the assets. Redick v. Skelton, 18 Ont. 100.

Orders not within or incident to the submission.—An award of damages to one of the parties for a discontinuance of the business by the other is not within a submission to examine and adjust the mutual accounts and determine the rights of the parties with reference to the property. Bullock v. Bergman, 46 Md. 270. So, a submission to determine the interest of one of the parties does not authorize a general settlement of disputes. Gerhardt v. Davis, 12 Quebec Super. Ct. 137. And an award that all of the partnership stock and effects shall go to one of the partners, when the submission contemplates a division between the two, is bad. Wood v. Wilson, 2 C. M. & R. 241, 4 L. J. Exch. 193. And if, in consideration of a sum of money, paid by one to the other, parties enter into a partnership and covenant that, in case of dissolution, they will submit all matters relating to the partnership to arbitration, the arbitrators cannot determine whether any part of the money which was the consideration of the partnership should be refunded. Tattersall v. Groote, 2 B. & P. 131, 14 Rev. Rep. viii. So, a submission of "the whole matters of the account," the submission expressly reciting that the parties had no difficulty as to the separation and division of the property on hand, does not authorize or require a determination of anything as to the capital stock contributed by the partners. Wolff v. Shelton, 51 Ala. 425.

58. Maynard v. Frederick, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 247, 250 (holding that, under a submission of all matters arising out of the "trade and dealings" or "trade and business" of the parties, and that the award "shall be in full settlement and discharge from one to the other concerning and in respect to their said trade and dealings, from the commencement thereof to the date of the submission," the arbitrators are authorized to inquire into all matters, without restriction as to time, and may go behind a receipt given by one of the parties to the other); Emmet v. Hoyt, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 410. But where one claimed, in the right of his wife, to be entitled to certain portions of the estate of the father and other relatives of the wife's mother, which had come into the hands of another as legal representative of his father, and the parties mutually agreed to refer to arbitration all differences between them and all of said claims, it was held that the submission did not include claims which had been adjusted and settled in a previous settlement some years before. Calvert v. Carter, 18 Md. 73.

Fraud in former settlement.— Where the submission is of "all claims, whether in law or equity," the arbitrators may inquire whether a previous settlement of a suit in equity by the entry "Bill dismissed" was fraudulently obtained. Mickles v. Thayer, 14 Allen (Mass.) 114, 115.

Item due upon former settlement.— Upon a submission of all matters in dispute, the arbitrators may take into account an unpaid item which is due upon a submission made between the parties. Bryan v. Jeffreys, 104 N. C. 242, 10 S. E. 167.

Where annual settlements are required by law.— Under a submission to arbitrators by a school district and its treasurer, of a controversy between them as to "the money alleged to be due and owing by . . such treasurer, to the plaintiff," the arbitrators may make an award, based on a report covering several years, though the district board was required to make annual settlements with the treasurer. the parties as is necessary to accomplish a settlement and satisfaction of the matters in dispute.[61] It has been held, however, that where the arbitrator is authorized to direct what, if anything, shall be done, or what he shall think fit to be done, this is permissive only.[62] And directions regulating future use of property or conduct of parties will not be sustained unless they are clearly within the scope of the submission.[63]

(B) Releases. Arbitrators have power to order one party to the submission to execute a release to another party thereto of and concerning any claim or demand constituting a portion of the subject-matter of the arbitration or constituting the whole of the subject-matter of the arbitration.[64] If the submission is general of all controversies and demands, the arbitrators have power, clearly incidental to the submission, to award mutual and general releases;[65] but if the submission is

Any act in satisfaction.— It seems that the arbitrator may award as satisfaction that one party shall beg the other's pardon. Glover v. Barrie, 1 Salk. 71 [cited in Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 236]. But the arbitrators cannot bind a man's liberty or right to real things where personal rights are submitted, and no one can be supposed to submit more than his personal estate to answer a personal injury. But, if the arbitrators award a horse, money, a quart of wine, or the like, in satisfaction of the trespass, this is good, for here a new personal duty is raised instead of the former. Bacon Abr. tit. Arbitrament and Award, (E), 324 [citing Rolle Abr. 243, p.. 12, 13]. So, for a case where it was awarded that one party should provide two fowls at his mansion-house, "to be eat by the plaintiff and his friends," see Boisloe v. Baily, 6 Mod. 221. And, for a submission to determine the truth or falsity of certain publications, and, if found false, to fix the duty of the party making the publication, see Lynch v. Nugent, 80 Iowa 422, 46 N. W. 61, holding that there was nothing in the submission requiring the arbitrators to adjudge that the publications be retracted in case they were found to be false.

Direction as to future conduct of business. —Thus, where partners agree to dissolve, and the terms and conditions are to be settled by an arbitrator, he has authority to award that one shall not, during the life of the other, carry on business within a fixed number of miles of the place in which the partnership had been engaged in the same business. Morley v. Newman, 5 D. & R. 317, 27 Rev. Rep. 528.

Surrender of note.— So, under a submission of all matters in controversy arising out of a copartnership, it is not beyond the power of the arbitrator to award that one of the parties shall give up to the other certain promissory notes signed by the latter. Leavitt v. Comer, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 129.

Future use of spring.— Under the power to regulate the future use of a spring and to order and determine what the arbitrator should think fit to be done, the arbitrator may affect the enjoyment of other rights of the parties and make regulations as to the flowing of the water, though such award interferes with the customary enjoyment of other streams not the subject of dispute. Release on one side sufficient.— Where, under the provisions of a submission, the arbitrators are to "fix the terms and times of payment, and the forms of all the releases," the arbitrators are not bound to order releases to be made at all events any more than they are bound to order one of the parties at all events to pay money to the other; but they are first to decide whether either party is entitled to recover any sum of the other, and whether either party, or both, should give a release; and if, after deciding these points and determining that one should pay a certain sum to the other, they award that the other should execute a release to him, this is sufficient, and it is not necessary that they should order both parties to execute releases. of particular matters, as of matters only which are in difference, a general release is in excess of authority.[66]

(c) Conveyances. Where the right to land, or a conveyance thereof, is involved in the submission, the arbitrators have authority to direct a conveyance.[67]

(v) Order as to Acts Unlawful or Contra Bonos Mores. However general the submission may be, the arbitrators cannot award as to matters which, of themselves, are not the proper subjects of submission, as against public policy,[68] or direct acts to be done which are not lawful or which are criminal.[69]

(vi) Reasonableness and Possibility of Performance. An award must be reasonable and of things possible of performance.[70] But, it is not a sufficient objection to an award that its performance might be impossible, if such award gives an alternative which is possible of performance.[71]

(vii) Fixing Time of Payment. Where all matters in difference are referred, and the arbitrators are to ascertain what, if anything, is due by one party to the other, they may, unless restricted by the submission, give a reasonable time for payment,[72] and the nature of the contract under which the differences have arisen may justify an award of future payments by instalments.[73]

Construction of submission and award.— A submission touching divers other matters as well as those particularly mentioned is equivalent to a general submission of all questions between the parties, and will sustain an award of general releases. Slocum v. Damon, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 520. See also Munro v. Alaire, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 320. And where the submission was of particular matters only, an award of releases, qualified so as to operate only upon the demands, controversies, etc., "touching the premises, that is, respecting the matters submitted, or any matter or thing thereunto relating," is not in excess of authority. L. 237 (holding that an award on a submission of differences between a lessee and a neighboring landowner, that the lessee shall do an act for the benefit of the neighbor which would be waste on the estate of the lessor, is bad); Bacon Abr. tit. Arbitrament and Award, (E), 340.

70. Dunlap v. Campbell, 5 W. Va. 195.

Impossible ex naturæ rei.— If the arbitrators award a thing impossible ex naturæ rei, it is void; but if they award a thing which cannot be done, but not, in the nature of the act itself, contradictory or repugnant, this may be a good award; for there is no construction to be made of the award but by the words thereof. Thus, an award to pay a sum of money at a day past is void, but an award that one shall pay twenty pounds where he hath not twenty pence is good, for no contradiction appears in the award itself. An award that one shall turn the river Thames is void. Bacon Abr. tit. Arbitrament and Award, (E), 339.

Rendered impossible by stranger or party. — If an act possible at first afterward becomes impossible by the act of the party or a stranger, the party is not freed from his obligation to perform the award. Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 197 [citing Comyns Dig. 547].

72. Reasonable day of payment.—Egleston v. Taylor, 45 U. C. Q. B. 479; Addison v. Corbey, 11 U. C. Q. B. 433.

Execution of note.— Under a bond conditioned to pay the amount of the award, the arbitrators awarded that the party should give the other his note for a specified sum, payable at a future day. It was held that this amounted to ordering the party to pay the money at a future day, and not to the doing of a collateral act, and, therefore, was within the submission. Booth v. Garnett, 2 Str. 1082.

Express requirement of submission.— An action cannot be maintained upon an arbitration bond to perform an award, which merely directs the payment of a certain sum, if the agreement in the submission requires that the award "shall be made to be executed within ten days of the award." Waller v. Shannon, 44 Conn. 480, 483.

73. Future payments in instalments.—Donican v. Mulry, 69 Iowa 583, 29 N. W. 612, an

But, on the other hand, it is held that where their duty is limited to fixing a price or assessing a sum for damages, which the parties have agreed to pay on being fixed by the arbitrators, they have no power to fix a time for payment.[74]

e. Matters Fixed by Agreement. Matters which might have been determined under the submission, but which are settled by agreement of the parties, are not strictly matters in difference and need not be determined or stated in the award.[75]

f. Matters Considered or Withdrawn by Consent. An award which decides matters beyond the original submission may, nevertheless, be enforced when it appears that the matters outside of the submission were brought before the arbitrators, without objection, and were fully considered.[76] So if, after submission, award that one party pay to the other a certain amount in a certain time, in equal payments, under a submission of a contract by which the former was to pay to the latter, during his life, a certain sum annually. So, in Remelee v. Hall, 31 Vt. 582, 76 Am. Dec. 140, where a party contracted to furnish another with board, etc., as long as the latter should choose, and all questions of damages connected with the contract were submitted to arbitration, it was held that while a court of law could not, in an action on the contract, have rendered any judgment but one for a certain sum payable at once, arbitrators have more extended powers in this respect, and an award that payment be made at a future day, by instalments, may clog payment by requiring a performance of conditions; that an award that the obligor in the contract should pay the obligee a certain sum annually during his life is good.

Limitation of time.— A direction in an award that one of the parties should, from the date of the award until the completion of certain repairs, pay to the other party a certain sum per week as compensation for the loss he would sustain until the completion, was held to be bad for not limiting the payment of such compensation to such time as the party remained in possession of the premises. Lewis v. Rossiter, 44 L. J. Exch. 136, 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 260, 23 Wkly. Rep. 832.

Entirety of verdict for entry of judgment. — An award of damages, payable in instalments, is void, because damages must be entire, as in case of a verdict, and judgment cannot be entered on such a verdict. Shoemaker v. Meyer, 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 452. But, on the other hand, it is held that, while a statutory award which would not stand as a verdict will not authorize judgment thereon, and, as a general rule, an award for debt or damages payable in future instalments would be had, in a case of account render the arbitrators have powers similar to those of a chancellor, and may, therefore, make a special award in the nature of a decree, adapted to the particular circumstances of the case; and a decree in such terms would be good. Geary v. Cunningham, 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 230.

74. Egleston v. Taylor, 45 U. C. Q. B. 479. See also Gear v. Bracken, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 249; Benwell v. Huxman, 1 C. M. & R. 935, 3 Dowl. P. C. 500, 4 L. J. Exch. 99, 5 Tyrw. 509.

75. Gomez v. Garr, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 583 (holding that, where a day of payment is agreed upon in the submission, a failure to specify it in the award is immaterial); Prouse v. Painter, Tapp. (Ohio) 52; Woods v. Page, 37 Vt. 252. See also Emery v. Hitchcock, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 156. If the agreement of the parties provides for a release, the award need not direct it. Cox v. Jagger, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 638, 14 Am. Dec. 522. But, under a submission providing that any sums allowed by the arbitrator are to be added to, or deducted from, the balance upon the items agreed upon by the parties, it may fairly be inferred that this is to be done by the arbitrator. Merritt v. Thompson, 27 N. Y. 225.

Admission in pleading.—Where, pending an action, there is a conditional submission to arbitration for the purpose of effecting a compromise or settlement, referring only such matters as the parties themselves shall not agree upon in the items of their mutual accounts, but referring all the said matters in disagreement, an item which stands admitted by the pleadings does not fall within the submission, and should not be passed upon by the arbitrators. Merritt v. Thompson, 27 N. Y. 225.

Annexing account with admitted items.— But the annexing to an award of an account stated, which embraced items not submitted, but which have been agreed upon by the parties and were evidently so stated in order to show the balance due under the award, does not vitiate the award, especially where the allowance of the items objected to was in favor of the objecting party; and, according to an agreed case that, if the award should be held valid, judgment should be entered for the balance as stated, judgment for such balance was affirmed. Zell v. Johnston, 76 N. C. 302.

Stipulation as to correctness of particular items.— Where mutual accounts are submitted, an agreement that an annexed statement of disbursements and collections shall be taken to be correct does not prevent the arbitrator from hearing evidence in relation to items not included in the statement. The term "correct" does not mean "complete." Adams v. Macfarlane, 65 Me. 143.

76. Matters considered.— Massachusetts.— Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 179, holding that, where parties point out property to be appraised, they will be considered as agreeing that everything pointed out is included in some of the matters are withdrawn by the parties from the consideration of the arbitrators, such matters need not be considered, and an award embracing the other matters covered by the submission, and presented to them by the parties, is good.[77]

g. Matters Arising Subsequent to Submission. Matters which arise between the date of the submission and the time of the award are not within the terms of a general submission of all demands, but the arbitrators are confined to such demands or matters of difference as exist at the time of the submission.[78] But it is held that an award of a release or discharge of all matters subsequent to the date of the submission will not, necessarily, render the award bad, as the court will intend that there were no differences existing between the date of the submission and the date of the award,[79] and that, where the time for making an award is enlarged by reëxecution of the bonds of submission, the arbitrator may award interest on principal beyond the date of the original submission and up to the time of the reëxecution.[80]

h. Liability For Future Amounts or Damages. But the question submitted may be such that the determination of liability at the time of the submission involves liability for future amounts or damages. Where the submission is not the contract under which the appraisement is had.

Matters settled after submission.— Though matters which are settled between the parties after submission and before the trial are not strictly matters of difference between them, yet, if one of the parties brings such matters into the accounting before the arbitrators and presents them as credits due to the other, and no objection is made, the arbitrators have a right to suppose that they are a part of the accounts which are to be adjusted. Woods v. Page, 37 Vt. 252.

Admitted item.— Where, upon a reference of all matters in difference, a demand on one side is immediately admitted upon its being laid before the arbitrators, they cannot leave such claim out of consideration in making their award, upon the theory that the item is not a matter in dispute. A promise to pay certain claims embraced in the submission does not have the effect of withdrawing such claims from the consideration of the arbitrators, if the promise, as made, leaves unsettled the question of liability. Steere v. Brownell, 113 Ill. 415.

Note executed on day of submission.— In an action on a note given on the same day as a submission of all matters in controversy between the parties to arbitration, it was held that the note was not properly within the submission, it being, by intendment of law, given after the submission. Bixby v. Whitney, 5 Me. 192.

79. See Pomroy v. Kibbee, 2 Root (Conn.) 92; Hill v. Thorn, 2 Mod. 309.

Delivery of obligation in satisfaction.— If the submission be of all controversies to the time of the submission, and the award be that one of them should deliver up an obligation made since the submission, in satisfaction of all matters, etc., this is good, because the bond is given only in satisfaction and does not mean that the arbitrators have passed judgment on a bond not in existence at the time of the submission. Bacon Abr. tit. Arbitrament and Award, (E), 326 [cited in Buckley v. Ellmaker, 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 71].

Upon dissolution of partnership.— In Thirkell v. Strachan, 4 U. C. Q. B. 136, it was held, where arbitrators were authorized to dissolve the partnership, that, in order to accomplish this, they might, if it became necessary, look into the existing state of the concern in regard to property, liabilities, etc., and that this was not taking up matters of dispute that had arisen after the submission, by way of settling them as differences.

restricted, such future damages may be concluded by the award,[81] and it is held that, where an award covers the construction of a contract, questions subsequently arising between the same parties under the contract will be concluded by such construction.[82] But, on the other hand, a submission of this character, which contemplates the settlement of the full damages, cannot be construed as a submission of prospective damages only;[83] and if the apparent intention of the submission is that only damages due at the time of the submission shall be determined, an award as to future damages is void.[84] Sometimes the submission is for the purpose of ascertaining what damage will flow from a particular act, and it is held that the intention of the parties is that the damages are to be considered as already done.[85]

H. 126 (holding that a submission of all demands may include damages for the breaches of a bond already accrued, or to accrue in the future); Lewis v. Rossiter, 44 L. J. Exch. 136, 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 260, 23 Wkly. See also Broadbent v. Imperial Gas Co., 7 De G. M. & G. 436, 6 H. L. Cas. 600, 26 L. J. Ch. 276, 29 L. J. Ch. 377, 56 Eng. Ch. 436; and supra, VI, J, 3, d, (IV).

Yearly damages for indefinite time.—A submission concerning past and future damages from a flowage occasioned by a mill-dam does not authorize an award of future yearly damages for an indefinite time to be binding upon the heirs and assigns of the party. Littlefield v. Smith, 74 Me. 387. See also Gordon v. Tucker, 6 Me. 247, where, upon objection for want of mutuality in the case of a submission to determine damages past and future for injury to land by the maintenance of a mill-dam, it was held that a simple award of damages, without any assurance of protection, was good, inasmuch as the party had, as to past damages, received his equivalent, and as to future damages the payment thereof would operate as a bar to any further proceedings which might be brought upon the same subject-matter by the claimant; and the fact that this mutuality might not extend to protect the mill-owners from the subsequent grantees would not affect the award, because the parties had not seen fit to stipulate in the bond for any assurance to run with the land.

Interest on deferred payments.— Where an arbitrator has authority to make an award according to the principles of justice, and gives time for the payment of the principal sum found due, the fact that the award requires the party to pay interest on such sum from the date of the award will not avoid it, as the terms of the submission are broad enough to authorize the order. Noyes v. McLaflin, 62 Ill. 474.

Value as of date of award.— Where parties submitted to persons the value in tobacco of certain lands, without fixing the time for valuation or to which the valuation should refer in case of fluctuations in the price of land or of tobacco, it was held that the valuation should be governed by circumstances at the time of making it, and not at the time of the contract. 84. Cullifer v. Gilliam, 31 N. C. 126, holding, over the contention that the award was valid because the intention of the parties was to follow the provisions of the statute which permitted the assessment of annual damages in the future, in such cases, to be binding for a certain number of years, against which the dam-owner might have relief if he removes his dam, and the other party have additional damages if the dam is raised, that the award could not be said to be in pursuance of these provisions, because it awarded future damages without making any provision for relief in case of removal of the dam, or for additional damages in case the dam should be raised.

85. Maryland, etc., R. Co. v. Porter, 19 Md. 458, holding that a submission to arbitration of the amount of damages which a party "may sustain" by reason of the construction of a railroad through his land authorized an award of a sum for damages actually sustained.

Liability depending upon contingency.— Upon the dissolution of a firm one of the partners purchased the interest of the other. The seller subsequently engaged in the same business at the same place. A submission by them to arbitration stated that the buyer claimed and the seller denied that, at the time of the purchase and dissolution, the seller agreed not to engage in the same trade, and the seller agreed that, if the decision of the arbitrators was against him, he would then discontinue the trade while the other party remained in it, or, at the election of the other party, pay such damages as the arbitrators should allow. An award that the parties did make the above contract, and that the buyer's damages were of a certain amount, was within the terms of the submission and was valid and binding, the seller having failed to discontinue the business. Curtis v. Gokey, 68 N. Y. 300. But where the submission did not authorize the arbitrators to make an award before any damages had in fact been sustained, an award, not for damages which the party had sustained, but for those which

4. Effect of Penalty of Bond. The power of the arbitrator in respect to the amount to be awarded is not controlled by the penalty of the arbitration bond.[86]

5. As to Parties — a. Award and Authority Confined to Parties to Submission — (i) General Rule. As a general rule the power of the arbitrator is confined to the parties, and the claims of such parties, who joined in the submission. An award can have no effect to establish rights or duties in favor of or against persons who are not parties to the submission.[87] An action cannot be maintained, against a guarantor upon a contract guaranteeing the payment of an amount to be found due from another, by showing an award fixing the amount, under a submission to which the guarantor is not a party.[88] So, the changing of a contract by an award of the arbitrators, even though for a surety's benefit,[89]

the arbitrators supposed he would sustain in the event of the happening of a contingency, was held to be premature and void. Allen v. Galpin, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 246.

Massachusetts.— Munn v. Reed, 4 Allen (Mass.) 431, holding that, if a father and next friend of an infant submits, in his own name, his own claim for damages for injuries to the infant, an award of a sum to the father and another sum to the infant will not bar a subsequent action by the infant, as the submission covered only the father's claim.

Assignee and obligor — Effect on assignor. — Where a suit by an assignee of a bond against the obligor was referred to arbitration, and the award found the debt to have been discharged by payment to, and set-off against, the assignor, and a judgment was entered in favor of the obligor, it was held that the award was sufficient to establish the liability of the assignor and to support an assumpsit on such liability in a subsequent action by the assignee against him. Award against principal — Effect as to surety.— In an action to enforce liability of a surety on a bond an award against the principal is not admissible evidence. Beall v. Beck, 3 Harr. & M. (Md.) 242. In this case the award was in a former suit against the principal, and judgment was entered on the award in that suit. The case in reality turned upon the effect on the surety of the judgment against the principal, and has since been variously cited and commented upon in this connection. See, generally, Principal and Surety.

Surety on contract permitting arbitration. — A surety to a contract providing for a submission of particular disputes to arbitration if they should arise, is bound by the contract and by a submission made under the contract between the parties, but no further, and if other questions are included in the submission, the surety cannot be bound as to the latter. Cooke v. Odd Fellows' Fraternal Union, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 23, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 498, 17 N. Y. St. 490.

without the consent of such surety, will release the surety from any liability under the contract.[90]

(II) Exceptions. Exceptions seem to have been recognized to this general rule, however, to the extent of permitting an award to be used as evidence for or against a stranger under the particular circumstances.[91] And the rule is further subject to the condition that the submission or award has not been ratified or adopted by the stranger;[92] that he, having some interest in the subject-matter, has not, by his conduct, estopped himself from questioning the award,[93] or that money ordered to be paid to a stranger is not in discharge of a debt owing by a party to the submission.[94]

b. Direction of Act By or To Stranger — (I) Performance or Procurement of Act by Stranger. An award directing performance or the procurement of an act by a stranger is void — at least in that respect — and, when a party cannot enforce an award in the particulars in which it operates in his own favor, he cannot be concluded by it in those respects in which it operates against him.[95]

90. Coleman v. Wade, 6 N. Y. 44, holding that, where lessor and lessee submitted to arbitration all matters in controversy between them arising out of the demise, an award extending the time for payment by lessee beyond that fixed in the lease discharged the sureties for the lessee's performance thereof.

91. As evidence in favor of stranger.— In an action for false imprisonment against a servant of the East India Company, the defendant was permitted to give in evidence, in mitigation of damages, a release given by plaintiff to the company, in pursuance of an award between plaintiff and the company, in which plaintiff was awarded compensation for injuries done in and by the company's servants, including defendant, of matters in difference, comprehending, in terms, the claim in the action in which the award was offered as evidence. Shelling v. Farmer, 1 Str. 646. And an award as to the right to a chattel, which had been deposited with the arbitrator, was held to preclude the party against whom it was made from maintaining trover against the arbitrator for refusing to deliver up the chattel to him, since the award deciding against him is evidence that the withholding of the chattel was not a conversion. Gunton v. Nurse, 2 B. & B. 447, 5 Moore C. P. 259; Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 318.

As evidence against stranger.— In Rockwell v. Lawrence, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 471, 3 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 475, the action was for the price of personal property, the ownership of which had been in dispute between plaintiff and defendant's vendor, and an award under a submission by plaintiff and defendant's vendor was held to be admissible as evidence of plaintiff's title, upon the same footing as a bill of sale from defendant's vendor.

92. Ratification by stranger.— See Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Harris, 126 Ind. 7, 25 N. E. 831; Boston v. Brazer, 11 Mass. 447; Snow v. Walker, 42 Tex. 154; Evans v. Cogans, 2 P. Wms. 450. 93. Estoppel.— Russell v. Allard, 18 N. H. 222, holding that whether one had so acquiesced in an arbitration was a question of fact; but that proof that he had attended the arbitration as a witness and that he did not, on that occasion, object to the proceedings was not proof of such acquiescence. So, where it was submitted to arbitrators to determine which of two persons a tenant should pay rent to, and the tenant was privy to the submission, assented to it and entered into the possession of the premises at the time with knowledge of the submission, he is bound to take notice thereof, though he has no actual notice of the decision. Humphreys v. Gardner, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 61.

Abandonment of claim against one of joint trespassers.— Under the rule that where one, by his own act, discharges one of two joint trespassers, he cannot bring an action against the other, it is held that an award against one is a bar to relief against the other. Adams v. Ham, 5 U. C. Q. B. 292. See also Baltes v. Bass Foundry, etc., Works, 129 Ind. 185, 28 N. E. 319, wherein defendant, in an action for labor and material, counter-claimed for damages against one of alleged tort-feasors, and the parties submitted the whole controversy to arbitration, and it was held that defendant thus elected to rely upon this proceeding for his entire compensation.

(II) Act to Stranger — Payment. An award directing the payment of money to a stranger is not good unless it appears that such payment is for the benefit of a party to the submission.[96] But, on the other hand, while an award requiring a stranger to do an act is held to be bad, an award to do an act to a stranger is good, because it obliges only an endeavor, and this shall be supposed to be for the other party's benefit.[97] An award directing payment to a stranger, for the benefit of a party to the submission, or that one of the parties discharge the other of a debt to the stranger, is good, as by performance of such an order the party may discharge himself.[98] And it has been held that the creditor, not a to be unauthorized. George v. Smith, 4 U. C. C. P. 291.

To do an act on land of stranger.— Where an award, under a submission authorizing the arbitrator to direct what shall be done, directs a party to do an act on land belonging to a stranger, it is held that this latter provision is not good, though such an order might be good if conditional upon the consent of the owner of the land. Dodington v. Bailward, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 591, 7 Dowl. P. C. 640, 8 L. J. C. P. 331, 7 Scott 733, 35 E. C. L. 318; Turner v. Swainson, 2 Gale 133, 5 L. J. Surplusage — Release.— If one who is not an actual party to the submission at the time it was made ratifies it so that payment of the amount awarded to the party in the submission will be a complete discharge of the claim involved, an order in the award that such party join in a release may be rejected as surplusage. Smith v. Sweeny, 35 N. Y. 291.

Including surety on arbitration bond.— An award requiring payment by a party and the surety on his arbitration bond is not void for including the surety, but this part may be rejected. Richards v. Brockenbrough, 1 Rand. (Va.) 449. And where a judgment is rendered in favor of A and B against C, upon an award filed pursuant to the statute, it will not be reversed because B had no claim against C, he having joined with A in executing the submission of all matters arising out of a contract between A and C, for the faithful performance of which contract B was bound by separate instrument. Detroit v. Jackson, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 106.

Against party or his executors.— An award that defendant, or his executors or administrators, shall execute a release is not void for uncertainty, because: (1) it might be read as if it were that he and his executors, etc., and (2) the introduction of the words in the award would not vitiate it, because the executors and administrators would be bound without such words. And, under a submission providing that the arbitrators' authority shall not be revoked by the death of either party, if the party against whom the balance is found dies pending the reference, it is proper and sufficient for the award to direct his personal representative to pay such sum out of the assets of decedent. Dowse v. Coxe, 3 Bing. 20, 3 L. J. C. P. O. S. 127, 10 Moore C. P. 272, 28 Rev. Rep. 565, 11 E. C. L. 20.

Procurement of act of stranger as a condition.— An award is held to be good where the plain meaning of it is that the party is to pay an amount unless, by a certain day, he shall make a conveyance of the property described in the award, in which latter event he is to receive from the other party a transfer of certain shares in a company and be discharged from the payment of the money; and it does not matter that the party required to convey must convey in conjunction with other persons not parties. e. Joint and Several Submission — (I) Two or More Parties on Each Side. Where a submission is by more than one party on each side, of all matters in controversy between them, or any of them, it is held that the award is good, although nothing is awarded concerning one of the parties.[1]

(II) Two on One Side, One on the Other. And if two on the one part and one on the other part submit themselves, the arbitrator may make an award between one of the two on the one part and him on the other part, as such a submission includes the joint demands of the two as well as their individual demands.[2] But, on the other hand, if the difference is between one person on the one side and all the parties on the other, and the submission be on condition that the award shall comprehend all the parties, it has been held otherwise.[3]

(III) Payment to One Party For Benefit of Another Party. Where several parties on the one part and one party on the other part submit to arbitration, it is no objection that one of the several parties on the one part is ordered to pay to another party on the same side, in order to discharge from liability to the latter the sole party on the other part.[4]

(IV) Submission by One of Several Interested. One party may submit for himself, though others are interested,[5] and he may submit for himself and take upon himself the peril of the others' dissent or non-acquiescence, though, if the others dissent, they will not be bound, because they are strangers.[6] But, on that one of the parties discharge the other of a debt to a third person is good, as equity could compel such third person to give a discharge); Dale v. Mottram, 2 Barn. K. Edmundson v. Wilson, 108 Ala. 118, 19 So. 367. In Bean v. Newbury, 1 Keb. 790, 1 Lev. 139, it was held that, under a submission by two on the one part and one on the other, an award between one of the two on the one part and the sole party on the other was void; but the submission in this case was with the clause "so that the award be ready," etc., before a certain day. Boston v. Brazer, 11 Mass. 447, holding that where a city, in widening a street, is liable to injured abutters, and is entitled to compensation from benefited abutters, and the determination of these matters is submitted to arbitration by the city and the abutters, an award which directs payment from a benefited abutter to an injured one, instead of to the city directly, is valid.

Award against party who signed as firm.— Where the condition of a bond was that A & Co. should comply with the award of arbitrators, and the award was that A (who, in fact, signed the bond as A & Co.) should pay, or cause to be paid by A & Co., a sum of money in full settlement of the matters submitted, the other hand, it is held that, if it is an implied condition of the assent of certain parties to the submission that all the parties interested in the subject-matter shall be bound, an award void as to one party is void as to all,[7] and it seems than an award will be of no effect, even as against a party to the submission, when the purpose of the submission could not be accomplished without binding the rights of a person as to whom the award could not operate, as where the undivided interest of such a person necessarily pervades the several portions of the subject-matter, and the award is invoked under circumstances which involve the consid eration of the joint interests as a whole.[8]

(v) Joint Award Under Joint Submission. Where several parties make a joint submission of their claims to arbitration, the award is good, though it does not distinguish the portion of money that each party is to receive.[9]

(vi) Submission by Parties in Different Capacities. If the submission is general, embracing all matters in difference between the parties, this will include demands made in a representative, as well as in an individual, capacity to bind him,[10] and if all matters growing out of a guardianship are submitted to arbitration, an award cancelling a note given to the ward by the guardian individually, for money received from him, is held to be within the submission.[11] And where a submission is of matters which concern one of the parties in his own right and also in a representative character, an award in his favor is not objectionable because it fails to show his respective interests in his individual and representative capacities, where the submission does not require it.[12] But where claims against a party, both in his own right and in a representative capacity, are submitted to arbitration, it is held that an award is bad which does not distinguish between the moneys which are to be paid by him in his representative capacity and those for which he is personally liable.[13]

this was held, in effect, an award that A & Co. should pay, or, considering the bond as A's sole obligation, and as a stipulation that he should pay, then the award was within the condition, and in either case sufficient. 8. Power v. Power, 7 Watts (Pa.) 205, as to partition. So, if one of the holders of a joint promissory note and one of the makers submit to arbitration the question whether the note is valid as to such maker, an award that the note is not valid as to him will not bar a suit by all the holders against all the makers of the note. Woody v. Pickard, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 55. This is in analogy to the effect of an award under the submission by one partner only when set up against the firm, or to a plea of non est factum by partners, where it is sought to enforce an award against the partners under a submission entered into by one of them only, notwithstanding the party to the submission would be liable in an action against him for breach of his bond. See, for example, McBride v. Hagan, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 326; Tillinghast v. Gilmore, 17 R. I. 413, 22 Atl. 942; Stead v. Salt, 3 Bing. 101, 10 Moore C. P. 389, 11 E. C. L. 58. Plea to bill in equity.—While an award under an agreement, entered into after the bill is filed, to refer the whole subject-matter of the suit to an arbitrator may be pleaded to the bill, yet where all parties to the suit were not parties to the award, though the plaintiff was, and the prayer of the bill was for the execution of the trust deeds under which some of the parties to the suit were interested who were not parties to the award, it was held that the plea of the award should be ordered to stand for an answer, with liberty to except. In such a case the plea could not conclude the suit. Dryden v. Robinson, 2 Sim. & St. 529.

6. Finality and Completeness — a. General Rule as to Finality. The object of submitting to arbitration being to obtain such a settlement as shall put an end to the dispute and conclude the matters submitted, it is a fundamental rule that no award can be good which is not final, or which fails to give either party repose and quiet in return for the obligation imposed upon him.[14]

b. Application of Rule of Finality — (I) In General. The award must be such a disposition of the matters submitted that nothing further remains to fix the rights and obligations of the parties; that the party against whom it is made can perform or pay it without any further ascertainment of rights or duties, and that further litigation shall not be necessary in order to adjust the matters submitted.[15] But it is sufficient if, looking at the whole award, it appears that the Discontinuance and payment of costs.— An award that certain actions be discontinued and each party pay his own costs is final. Blanchard v. Lilly, 9 East 497.

No ground for distinction between terms.— There is no ground for distinction that an award which shall say that a suit shall be discontinued or dismissed, or shall cease, is good, and an award which shall say a suit shall not be further prosecuted is not good. The force and effect of the expressions are the same. Purdy v. Delavan, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 304.

"Nonsuit" and "dismissal" distinguished.— In Knight v. Burton, 6 Mod. 231, it was held that while an award that one of the parties be nonsuited is void, because it is not final, when the award is that a suit commenced be dismissed, it must be understood that the suit shall be dismissed and cease forever.

Dec. 522, wherein the matter in controversy related to the right of dower, and it was held that, until assigned, the right is one which rests in action only, and, therefore, an award which declared that an action should cease and not be prosecuted, and ordering the payment of money in lieu of the claim, operated as an actual extinguishment of the right of dower.

20. Rixford v. Nye, 20 Vt. 132 (holding that the legal effect of the submission and the award pursuant thereto is to put an end to the suit; that in this case the parties so understood it and acted accordingly, the suit having been discontinued by an entry upon the files); Jackson v. Yabsley, 5 B. & Ald. 848, 7 E. C. L. 461.

Litigation. An award is none the less final because it does not execute itself or preclude all future controversies. If it leaves nothing to be done but the performance of a mere ministerial act, it is not faulty for want of finality. It is no objection that litigation may ensue in enforcing it.[21] This rule is forcefully illustrated by the instances of submissions for the settlement of partnership affairs, in which it is held that, where the rights and duties of the partners toward each other are settled, the award is sufficiently final, notwithstanding litigation may spring up on account of the rights and duties of the parties in respect to third persons — as where one of the parties is burdened with the responsibilities of the partnership for its liabilities to such third persons, or there is no actual division of the assets.[22] Arbitrators are not clothed with power to take hold of partnership property and administer the assets.[23]

(iv) Direction of Conveyance. Under a submission of mere ownership, or of other questions not requiring a deed to effect mutuality, it is no objection that a conveyance is not directed.[24]

21. Kentucky.— Short v. Kincaid, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 420, holding that any other construction of the word "final" would place it in the power of either party to make the award incomplete or not final, because he would not perform it.

Right of support for building.— An award that one person shall have the right of support for his building and the timbers thereof in a wall erected by the other, and that the latter shall have the same right of support for his building and the timbers thereof, in the manner of the former, is not bad because it does not require the parties to execute conveyances of the right, because if such conveyances are necessary, they can be obtained by proceedings in equity as well as if they were

(v) Conditional or Alternative Award. An award may be conditional, so that, to entitle a party to the benefit of it, he may be compelled to show that he has performed, or offered to perform, the condition.[25] An alternative award is good if it finally determines the matters submitted, but only gives to the party charged an option to discharge his liability in one of two ways, or if it orders one thing to be done or, in default thereof, another thing.[26] But a mere hypothetical award of a particular sum, leaving the right of the party to it undetermined,[27] or an alternative award, not made unconditionally, but left to be dependent upon some future determination, is bad.[28] An award is void if there is a condition, and the condition leads to a new controversy.[29]

Good for part certain.— Under a submission to arbitration giving power to raise questions of law for the opinion of the court, the arbitrators awarded a certain sum as compensation for damages, and, in a subsequent part of the award, said, "for the purpose of raising the question for the determination of the court, in case it should be pleased to entertain the same." They made such award on a certain principle explained, but that, if the court should think that the damages ought to be estimated on another principle which they stated, then they should award another certain sum, and it was held that the first sum was positively awarded and that the hypothetical adjudication which followed might be rejected as surplusage. 28. Coghill v. Hord, 1 Dana (Ky.) 350, 25 Am. Dec. 148; Connor v. Simpson, 104 Pa. St. 440, holding that where the arbitrator thus made an alternative award of two different sums, depending upon a question of law which he declined to decide because he was not a lawyer, an action could not be maintained upon the award, and it was error for the court to decide the question of law and give judgment for one of the sums found by the arbitrator.

See also infra, VI, J, 10.

Costs to be paid by party in default.— Where the costs of making the submission a rule of court are in the discretion of the arbitrator, an award that such costs should be paid by such of the parties through whose default, in performance of the award, it should become necessary, is bad for want of finality. Dec. 576, wherein it was held that an award of a certain sum upon transactions between merchants, with the express condition that, if any outstanding debts are made to appear due, they are to be allowed against the balance found, does not render the award so uncertain that a verdict upon it should be set aside where defendant has not claimed any benefit by reason of the condition.

(VI) Reservation or Delegation of Future Authority. The final determination of all matters submitted must be by the arbitrators, and they cannot reserve to themselves or delegate to others the power of performing any part of that duty thereafter. As far as the judicial determination of the matters involved is concerned, that must be completely made when the arbitrators purport to decide the case.[30] A reservation of authority to make alterations and corrections is a reservation of judicial authority, and therefore obnoxious to this rule.[31] But it is not objectionable if the award completely determines the matters submitted, leaving to be done acts which are purely ministerial, or amount to mere computation.[32] If the reservation is only as to matters not submitted, the award may be

M. & R. 367, 4 Dowl. 457, 5 L. J. Exch. 24, 281, 1 M. & W. 531. In Lingood v. Eade, 2 Atk. 501, it was good as to the matters submitted, and void only as to the reservation of authority.[33] And where the submission embraces the determination of a right, as depending upon some future act, it does not destroy the finality of the award that the liability fixed by it is made to depend upon the doing of that act.[34]

c. Decision of All Matters Submitted — (I) Rule Requiring Completeness. The power of the arbitrators being confined by the submission, as already shown, the rule is not only that the arbitrators cannot go beyond the submission, but that they must decide all the matters embraced in the submission which are brought before them by the parties, or which are not withdrawn from their consideration by the parties. If they violate this rule, or if the award shows that they have not acted within it, the award will be void.[35] It is no answer to say that a party held that where the arbitrators awarded mutual releases and left it to the court to give directions to the master to settle the form thereof, the award was good. So, a direction that one party should execute such bond to secure the amount awarded as the opponent's counsel should advise was held to be a delegation to the counsel, not as arbitrator, but to act merely ministerially. Cater v. Startut, Rolle Abr. tit. Arb. H, 7, Style 217. But an award directing certain parties to execute such conveyances, releases, etc., as might be necessary to pass their respective interests, was held to be void because it reserved to the arbitrator power to appoint another to settle the proper deeds. In re Tandy, 9 Dowl. P. C. 1044, 5 Jur. 726. Where it was awarded that one party should pay his part of the expense of a voyage, and allow on account his proportion of the loss which should happen to the ship during the voyage, this was held good, because the expense and the loss might be ascertained by calculation. Beale v. Beale, 3 Vent. 65 [cited in Borretts v. Patterson, 1 N. C. 27, 1 Am. Dec. 576]. It would seem, however, that some of these cases — as, for instance, the last one above cited — do not show as strict an application of the rule against the reservation or delegation of authority as those cited generally to the rule, supra, note 30 — as for instance, Colcord v. Fletcher, 50 Me. 398; Hoit v. Berger-Crittenden Co., 81 Minn. 356, 84 N. Terms employed in award not covering future use.— In Benson v. White, 101 Mass. 48, it was held that a provision in an award, that certain property should continue to be held by the parties as they had before held it, did not destroy the finality of the award where such provision was not a condition upon which the award was to operate, but was intended only as an expression that the award had no reference to such property.

The reason is that the complaining party could not be prejudiced if it does not appear certainly that the claim was one of the matters submitted; and, therefore, if it was not included in the submission, it was properly excluded from consideration, and if it was included in the submission, the award being general, it would be conclusively presumed that it was settled by the award, so as to conclude the other party from thereafter setting it up. award will be good, though it disposes of a particular matter, or is not so comprehensive as the submission,[40] for it will be presumed that other matters were not submitted by the parties to the consideration of the arbitrators.[41]

(2) "Of and Concerning the Premises." If it appears from the recitals in the award that the arbitrators had fully heard and considered all the evidence, this is sufficient to show that they have passed upon all the matters in difference, and the award need not purport to be made "of and concerning the premises," in express terms.[42] But, on the other hand, if the submission is general, and the adjudication applies, in terms, to a particular matter, the award, purporting to be made of and concerning the matters submitted, will be presumed to be good until it is shown that there were other matters presented to the arbitrators which they neglected or refused to decide, and this is true even if the submission contains the ita quod clause.[43]

Award up to date before submission.— In Barnes v. Greenwel, Cro. (b) Finding of Balance. Where the submission is general of all matters, or the questions are merely of mutual indebtedness or pecuniary claim, or the claims are for damages capable of being liquidated and ascertained, if the arbitrators, professing to decide the whole subject, find a balance from the one to the other, the award is good although the principles from which their balance resulted are not stated.[45] So, where it appears that the judgment was made up upon a general view of what seemed to the arbitrators just and equitable between the parties, the award will not be set aside because the arbitrators have failed specifically to allow an item admitted in the claim of one party.[46]

(4) Under Submission of Enumerated Matters. Where the submission is of divers matters, distinctly enumerated, and it appears from the whole award that the matters submitted were adjudicated upon, it is sufficient though each particular is not specified in the award, unless the submission requires a separate finding as to each matter.[47] But if more than one separate and distinct matter

If required by submission.— It has been held that if, on the construction of the agreement of submission, the arbitrator is to decide, separately, the matters referred, he must do so; for, if this is the bargain of the parties, it must be observed; otherwise the arbitrator does not follow the authority given him. Whitworth v. Hulse, L. R. 1 Exch. 251, 12 Jur. N. S. 652, 35 L. J. Exch. 149, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 445, 14 Wkly. Rep. 736.

Particular reference to one item to the exclusion of others.— Where the award is for a particular item, without mentioning other items which have been properly submitted to the arbitrators, it has been held that, by thus deciding as to the particular items, it will appear, from the omission to refer to the other items, that they were not decided, and the court will not conjecture that the sum awarded is a general balance. Johnston v. Brackbill, 1 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 364. See also, to the same point, Carter v. Ross, 2 Root (Conn.) 507; Camp v. Sessions, 105 Mass. 236.

is specifically submitted, and the general finding does not, necessarily, include all such matters, the award must show that each of the separate matters was considered and passed upon by the arbitrators.[48]

(5) Express Exception of Matters From Decision. If the arbitrators award in relation to one or more things, and say that they will not meddle with the rest, or expressly except from the decision a particular matter within the scope of the submission, the whole award is void,[49] and in such a case it is immaterial whether the submission is general or special.[50]

7. Mutuality of Award — a. Rule Requiring Mutuality. An award to be binding must be mutual.[51] If it covers only a part of the several connective matters submitted to arbitration, giving to one party a benefit and awarding nothing to the other party, but leaving the latter under the necessity of further pursuing his rights in connection with the matters not embraced in the award, the award it is void for want of mutuality.[52] It does not matter that the arbi-

48. Muldrow v. Norris, 12 Cal. 331; Houston v. Pollard, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 164; Bowman v. Downer, 28 Vt. 532, wherein the court distinguished the cases where, besides ascertaining a certain sum to be paid, the arbitrators are required to direct the specific performance of certain acts, in which cases greater certainty than a general award is required. That was the case in Randall v. Randall, 7 East 81, 3 Smith K. B. 90, 8 Rev. Rep. 601, where the arbitrators were not only to determine the questions, but also to fix the value to be put on certain hop-poles and potatoes, and also rent to be annually paid by one party to the other, and it was held that a general finding of indebtedness could not be taken as an award as to the annual rent; and this case is distinguished in Bancroft v. Grover, 23 Wis. 463, 99 Am. Dec. 195, from those involving mere questions of mutual indebtedness. So, where the arbitrators were authorized to determine concerning all claims, differences, and disputes relating to certain alleged defects in a building, and certain charges for extra work, etc., and to ascertain what balance might be due in respect of the extras and omission, an award of a gross sum to be paid to the builder, without any decision of the alleged defects, was held to be bad. Co., 49 Iowa 604; and, generally, the cases cited supra, V, J, 6, c, (I).

Where the costs of the cause and of the special jury are distinctly and separately submitted to the discretion of arbitrators, they must distinctly adjudicate upon each, otherwise the award is bad. Where a claim appeared to be within the submission and the language of the arbitrator was that it was "not taken into account," it was held that this would be understood to mean, not that the claim was rejected by the arbitrator or abandoned by the party, but that the arbitrator made no determination in respect to its validity, and left the demand open. Moore v. Cockcroft, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 133.

Expressions not showing refusal to meddle. —Where the award was that all suits and actions should cease and all matters be determined, except in relation to a particular bond, which was awarded to stand in force, it was held that this was not a disclaimer to meddle with the bond, but an express award upon that part. Berry v. Penring, Cro. Jac. 399 [cited in Richards v. Drinker, 6 N. J. L. 307, and in Wright v. Wright, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 197]. So, an award that a particular claim was not a matter then in difference between the parties was held to mean, in effect, that such matter was not referred to the arbitrator, and the award was not obnoxious for the objection that, by such a clause, the arbitrator indicated that he had not adjudicated upon a claim submitted. Properties compared.— The rule that an award must be mutual means nothing more than that the thing awarded to be done should be a final discharge of all future claim by the party in whose favor the award is made against the other for the cause submitted, or, in other words, that it shall be final. Purdy v. Delavan, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 304; Blackledge v. Simpson, 3 N. C. 187, 2 Am. Dec. 614; Borretts v. Patterson, 1 N. C. 27, 1 Am. Dec. 576; Macon v. Crump, 1 Call (Va.) 575.

An award which complies with the agreement to submit, disposes of all the questions

trators intended that the award should be mutual, if, as a matter of fact, it is not mutual.[53]

b. Award on Both Sides — (I) General Rule. Originally, an award, in order to be mutual, must have awarded something on both sides.[54] But this has long been exploded, and the rule is that an award need not, in terms, order something to be done on both sides. On the contrary, if what is ordered to be done on the one side necessarily embraces a complete decision of all the matters in controversy, it is sufficient.[55] But if both parties are required to do certain acts, and those which are to be done by the one are void, and that part is the consideration of the acts required to be done by the other, the award is void for want of mutuality,[56] and, if a party on the one side cannot be compelled to perform, he cannot compel performance on the other side.[57]

(II) Presumption That Act on One Side Is in Satisfaction — (A) General Rule. The court will intend that an award of one or more things to be done by one, without anything to be done by the other, is in satisfaction of all claims by the other.[58]

(B) Award of Payment Without Order of Release. An award is sufficiently mutual which awards the payment of a certain sum, without awarding a release or acquittance on the other side;[59] and it has been held that such an award is suffireferred, and responds in all particulars to the submission, is not obnoxious for the objection that it lacks mutuality. Wood v. Shepherd, 2 Patt. & H. (Va.) 442; Lutz v. Linthicum, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 165, 8 L. ed. 904; Bacon v. Dubarry, 1 Ld. Raym. 246.

There must be such mutuality in the submission between the parties to it that payment by one of the sum awarded will afford protection to him. Vermont.— The rule is applied that if, by manifest implication, that matter appears which, if positively expressed, would render ciently mutual without also directing the dismissal of a suit involving the matter submitted to arbitration.[60]

(III) OWNERSHIP OR TITLE SUBMITTED. Thus, where the question submitted is as to the ownership of certain property and the amount to be paid for the same, an award which specifies only that a certain amount should be paid is sufficiently mutual, since, by necessary inference, the title to the property is adjudged to be in the other party.[61] If the award itself establishes the title, it is not necessary that a release[62] or bill of sale should be awarded.[63]

(IV) MUTUAL RELEASES. An award which puts a final end to the controversy and orders mutual releases or receipts is not obnoxious to the objection that it is not mutual,[64] and an objection, that defendant is first to perform and execute on his part before plaintiff is to execute the general release, is not good.[65]

In the note, however, it appeared that the plea in question showed that the arbitrators made their award "of and upon the said premises specified in the said condition," and it was said that it did not seem so clear that the award here pleaded was in fact bad, but, on the contrary, in all probability, it would be held to be sufficiently mutual and final at this day; and that, from the above averment, it must be necessarily intended that the money was awarded to be paid "in satisfaction or on account of the premises," that is, of all matters which have been submitted to the arbitrators, and that the award, without directing a release. was as much a bar to another action as if a release had been expressly awarded.

Where conveyance to be effected.— But an award which requires payment for land to one party, without directing a conveyance by the other, is bad for want of mutuality, because in such a case the land cannot be vested without a conveyance. 65. The objection was raised and overruled in Marks v. Marriott, 1 Ld. Raym. 114 [cited approvingly in Munro v. Alaire, 2 Cai. (N. 66. Kunckle v. Kunckle, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 364, 1 L. ed. 178, holding that if, under a statutory reference, the court can enforce performance of one part of the award by execution, it is no valid objection that it cannot enforce the other part by execution, if it can do so by attachment; that in such case the remedies are mutual, though not by the same kind of process. This case was referred to approvingly in Reynolds v. Reynolds, 15 Ala. 398, which considered it as holding that one party may be entitled to recover by judgment or action, and the other to enforce a compliance by an attachment. In addition to the holding of the first case as above set out, however, the court therein further said that, if the report awards money to be paid on one side and certain other things to be done on the other, the court will enforce neither if it cannot enforce both; and in Pennington v. Bowman, 10 Watts (Pa.) 283, it was held that, under a submission under the Pennsylvania act of 1806, the only mode which the court

8. Certainty in Award — a. Rule Requiring Certainty. An award must be certain. It should be so expressed that no reasonable doubt can arise upon its face as to the meaning of the arbitrators or that the matters in dispute have been finally and conclusively settled, according to the terms of the submission and the intention of the parties.[67] Each party should not only know what he is to do, but should also be able to compel the other to perform what he is ordered to do. This cannot be the case unless the arbitrators make use of language which is intelligible as well to the parties themselves as to those who may be called on to enforce their decisions,[68] so that the award may be enforceable without the aid of extraneous circumstances, for, unless the uncertainty requires no more to obviate it than a mere reference to a rule or provision of law, or to some fixed standard or mere mathematical calculation, it cannot be cured by averment.[69]

b. Application of Rule — (I) Certainty to Common Intent — (A) In General. Exact certainty, or provision against all possible contingencies, is not indispensable to the validity of an award — certainty to a common or reasonable intent is all that the law requires.[70] If, by necessary implication, that appears

L. 80, the submission was of matters in difference concerning the value of certain stock and goods, the sum that each party should contribute toward the payment of two thousand five hundred pounds, and the costs of certain actions. The award, after settling their respective portions, was that all such sums as the parties had already expended in respect of those actions should be considered as part of their respective shares, as settled by that award. But the court refused to set aside the award for uncertainty, though they said they should hesitate to grant an attachment for non-performance, but would leave the party to his remedy by action on the award. In that case, it will be perceived, there was no dispute about the sums they had paid, but only as to what proportions of the original debt and costs they were bound to pay; and, therefore, the sums already paid by the parties was matter of averment, as indicated in McKeen v. Allen, 17 N. absolutely necessary that an award should state in figures the exact amount to be paid — it is sufficiently certain if nothing remains but a mere mathematical calculation.[76]

(III) Statement of Conclusion Sufficient. If the award shows a final disposition of all the matters submitted, it need not indicate the steps by which the arbitrators arrived at their conclusion, and special findings of fact are not neces-

to A as well for task-work as for day-work, and that then A should pay B twenty-five pounds, was held void for uncertainty, because the amount to be paid for task-work, etc., had not been stated. But see Waddle v. Downman, 13 L. J. Exch. 115, 12 M. & W. 562, holding that an agreement by the parties that, if the arbitrators should think plaintiff not entitled to recover on account of some articles of iron machinery, the arbitrators should allow him their value at the market price of pig-iron, authorized a mere finding that defendant was to pay plaintiff for these articles as machinery or as pig-iron, and that an award which merely directed defendant to pay for them as pig-iron was good without fixing the amount.

Amount "in furniture."— An award of arbitrators for a certain sum of money "in furniture" is void for uncertainty, and will not support an execution, nor will the court treat the words "in furniture" as surplusage and strike it out, for it cannot be treated as a finding in money, the probable intention, not expressed, being to award the delivery of certain furniture assessed at a certain value. Deduction of unascertained amount.— An award of a certain sum to one party, from which is to be deducted a sum or sums not fixed by, or capable of being ascertained from, the award, is bad. Parker v. Eggleston, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 128 (wherein the award was in favor of one party for a certain amount, with the exception of an allowance, not fixed, for hauling a number of staves); Fletcher v. Webster, 5 Allen (Mass.) 566; Fallon v. Kelehar, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 266; Waite v. Barry, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 377; Spalding v. Irish, 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 322; Zerger v. Sailer, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 24.

Contingency.— Where the matters involved in a suit, brought by plaintiff for a violation of the contract under which defendant was to furnish the plaintiff board, etc., as long as he should choose, were submitted to arbitration, an award that defendant should pay to plaintiff a certain sum annually during his life is not uncertain in a legal sense, because the amount depends upon the duration of plaintiff's life. A contract to pay so much money on such a contingency would not be void for uncertainty. Remelee v. Hall, 31 Vt. 582, 76 Am. Dec. 140.

76. Fixing amount in figures.— Louisiana. — St. Patrick's Church v. Dakin, 1 Rob. (La.) 202.

Maine.— Colcord v. Fletcher, 50 Me. 398.

Maryland.— An award to determine the respective rights of parties in a fund is sufficiently certain if it gives the proportion coming to each. Witz v. Tregallas, 82 Md. 351, 33 Atl. 718.

Michigan.— Bush v. Davis, 34 Mich. 190. But, if the accounts in the books of account referred to are so incomplete that the amount cannot be computed therefrom without other evidence, the award is void. Mather v. Day, 106 Mich. 371, 64 N. W. 198.

Missouri.— Cochran v. Bartle, 91 Mo. 636, 3 S. W. 854.

Pennsylvania.— Wood v. Earl, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 44.

England.—Hopcraft v. Hickman, 3 L. J. Ch. 43, 2 Sim. & St. 130; Higgins v. Willes, 3 M. & R. 382. An award that two persons shall pay a debt in proportion to the shares which they hold in a certain ship is sufficiently certain, the ratio of their shares not being a subject of dispute. Wohlenberg v. Legeman, 1 Marsh. 579, 6 Taunt. 251, 16 Rev. Rep. 616, 1 E. C. L. 600. But an award to pay a moiety of a debt for which A is bound, without saying in what sum, is bad. Gray v. Gray, Rolle Abr. tit. Arbitration, Q. 2, 263.

Amount with interest.— To award a certain amount in money, and "interest thereon" from a particular date, is intended to mean, and must be construed to mean, the principal debt, and legal interest upon it. And it is not necessary to explain, in direct and specific terms, that which the law fixes and defines. Gentry v. Barnet, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 312; Skeels v. Chickering, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 316; Emery v. Hitchcock, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 156. So, an award of the amount of three judgments, designated by amount and dates, with interest, is sufficiently certain, since, by the law, the judgments bear interest from their dates. White v. Jones, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 349.

Balance not stated.— If sums are found due on each side, the balance need not be stated. Chase v. Jefts, 51 N. H. 494; Platt v. Hale, 1 Jur. 358, 6 L. J. Exch. 144, M. & H. 191, 2 M. & W. 391.

Value of separate items may be found without stating the aggregate. Saunders v. Heaton, 12 Ind. 20; Kendrick v. Tarbell, 26 Vt. 416. An award finding two separate sums on two separate issues, without mentioning the aggregate, is good. Smith v. Festiniog R. Co., 4 Bing. N. Cas. 23, 6 Dowl. P. C. 190, 3 Hodges 305, 1 Jur. 844, 5 Scott 255, 33 E. C. L. 577. See also supra, VI, J, 6, c, (II), (C), (3).

For award of costs see infra, VIII, B, 1, d, (I).

sary. It is sufficient if the result is stated.[77] In this respect the same rule governs as is applied to the verdict of a jury.[78] Where the submission is general, of all matters, an award of a particular sum in favor of one of the parties is sufficiently certain.[79]

(IV) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY. Property must be so described in an award that it may be identified — that the rights and duties of the parties in relation to it may be known with reasonable certainty.[80] The description of property in an

Kentucky.— Shackelford v. Purket, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 435, 12 Am. Dec. 422, holding that, under a submission of all matters in dispute with respect to certain land, an award determining that one of the parties has the legal and equitable title, and ordering the other to render immediate possession, sufficiently implies a determination of all questions relating to the title, such as questions of fraud between the parties.

Massachusetts.— Blackwell v. Goss, 116 Mass. 394; Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 179, 192, holding that an award is not uncertain because a "sawmill, fixtures," etc., and two acres of land, were appraised together, at one sum, the parties understanding at the time what articles were included.

Separate findings of law and fact under statute.— Under a code provision that the rules prescribed in the case of a reference shall be applicable to arbitrators, referees being required, by another provision of the code, to make separate statements of law and fact, an award not containing such separate statements is erroneous unless the requirement is waived. But the defect is not jurisdictional and does not render the award absolutely void. Burkland v. Johnson, 50 Nebr. 858, 70 N. W. 388. See also Graves v. Scoville, 17 Nebr. 593, 24 N. 80. Connecticut.— An award which gives one a share in land, without saying what proportion or how much, is bad. Carter v. Ross, 2 Root (Conn.) 507.

Maine.— Banks v. Adams, 23 Me. 259, holding that an award to do some act other than the payment of money, in order to be good, should be so certain that a specific performance of the act can be decreed; that, therefore, an action cannot be maintained for an amount awarded in consideration that the other party pay a certain amount in property, "as good as she had received," the kind and quality of the property being thus left undetermined.

New Jersey.—McKeen v. Allen, 17 N. J. L. 506; Sheppard v. Stites, 7 N. J. L. 90.

New York.—An award "to finish the house" and "to pay for the stove," without saying what house or what stove, is void for uncertainty. Schuyler v. Van der Veer, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 235. An award that A should deliver "the said farm," is void for uncertainty. Brown v. Hankerson, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 70.

North Carolina.—Crissman v. Crissman, 27 N. C. 498, holding that an award, upon the rights of parties under a will, which gives to certain parties the right to occupy premises which are not definitely ascertained or ascertainable, with reference to the will, is not sufficiently certain to conclude the rights of the parties under the will.

Ohio.— Thomas v. Molier, 3 Ohio 266.

Pennsylvania.— Etnier v. Shope, 43 Pa. St. 110. A statutory award which finds a certain sum for plaintiff, upon condition that he deliver possession of a number of articles not definitely specified, is void for uncertainty. Sicard v. Peterson, 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 468. So, a statutory award which finds for one party in a certain sum, payable upon conveyance by the other party of a certain amount of land, is void for uncertainty in not describing the land. Murray v. Bruner, 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 276.

England.— Cockson v. Ogle, 1 Lutw. 550 (holding that an award that defendant should deliver certain goods and boxes, specifying them, and also "several books," without nam-award may be by reference, and if the description be certain to a common intent it will be sufficient.[81]

(v) As to Boundaries. An award as to boundaries of lands should be of such certainty as to enable an officer to give possession.[82] But an award which runs a distinct line between particularly described objects is sufficiently certain and conclusive of the location of the line, unless it be shown that the objects described are non-existent or incapable of location.[83]

(vi) As to Time. When uncertainty as to the time of the performance of an act leaves the rights of the parties only partially determined, the award is bad.[84] But an award which finds a sum due is not uncertain because it does not fix the day of payment, as in such case the money is payable immediately.[85]

(vii) As to Parties. An award must be certain as to the particular persons whose rights or duties are affected by its orders;[86] but, under the general

ing them, was void for uncertainty); Bedam v. Clerkson, 1 Ld. Raym. 123 (holding an award that defendant should deliver to plaintiff "a certain writing obligatory, or a certain bill obligatory, which he had before," was bad, though, in that case, inasmuch as, by the terms of the award, defendant was entitled to a general release on payment of eight pounds, and plaintiff, in a suit on the arbitration bond, had assigned no other breach but the non-payment thereof, the action was maintained).

81. By reference.— Clement v. Comstock, 2 Mich. 359.

Land.— A description sufficient in a deed will be good in an award. Crabtree v. Green, 8 Ga. 8; Williams v. Warren, 21 Ill. 541. See also Imlay v. Wikoff, 4 N. J. L. 153. "All the land held by a certain conveyance from a certain person" is not a void description. Whitcomb v. Preston, 13 Vt. 53. An award finding in favor of "the plaintiff by running a line beginning," etc., may be supported as an award to plaintiff of the land adjoining his own up to the dividing line. Massey v. Thomas, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 333.

Line to be ascertained by survey.— If an award concerning land claims decides their relative merits and the mode of surveying them, and leaves the boundary to be ascertained by the survey, it is sufficiently certain. Galloway v. Webb, Hard. (Ky.) 318. But see Cox v. Smyth, Hard. (Ky.) 411, holding that an award, sustaining the validity of one of two conflicting interests, could not be enforced in chancery where it was uncertain in defining the form and location of the entry, and where it did not appear that the survey, which was necessary to determine the validity of the entry, was submitted to the arbitrators.

82. Aldrich v. Jessiman, 8 N. H. 516.

83. Crawford v. Orr, 84 N. C. 246.

Such award may be impeached by parol proof that the monuments referred to do not exist. Giddings v. Hadaway, 28 Vt. 342.

Presumption.—Unless such uncertainty appears upon the face of the award, it will be presumed that the points exist and can be located. Rogers v. Corrothers, 26 W. Va. 238.

Description not requiring straight line.— An award establishing a boundary line, from one known monument to another, by land of one of the parties, is void for uncertainty as to the line so described, as such description does not require a straight line. Clark v. Burt, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 396.

84. Evans v. Sheldon, 69 Ga. 100; Alfred v. Kankakee, etc., R. Co., 92 Ill. 609; Carnochan v. Christie, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 446, 6 L. ed. 516. Where an award orders an act to be done in satisfaction — as that one party shall beg the other's pardon — time and place are essential ingredients, and if the award leaves these to be fixed by the injured party, it seems it would be uncertain. Glover v. Barrie, 1 Salk. 71 [cited in Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 236]. See also Boisloe v. Baily, 6 Mod. 221; and supra, VI, J, 6, b, (vi).

Reasonable certainty sufficient.— Where an award gave plaintiff a certain sum on surrender by him of a lease held by him of certain premises at the end of the first year of the term of the lease, but did not fix the date of payment thereof, the same was payable when the surrender was to be made. Soper v. Frank, 47 Vt. 368. So, an award dated the thirteenth day of October, 1840, ordering that a sum of money be paid on the "28th day of October next," was held sufficient as making the money payable on the twenty-eighth day of that present month of October. Brown v. Smith, 8 Dowl. P. C. 867. And an award directing that A shall forthwith execute certain reconveyances to B, and that B shall forthwith execute indemnities and releases to A, means, in the latter case, that B shall execute releases as soon as A shall put himself in the position to call for such execution by himself executing the reconveyances. Boyes v. Bluck, 13 C. B. 652, 22 L. J. C. P. 173, 76 E. C. L. 652.

Act on request or in reasonable time.— If the arbitrator directs one party to pay money or execute a release to the other, it is held sufficiently certain, though he mentions no time, because, if a request to do the act is necessary, it will be intended that it must be done in convenient time, and, if no request is necessary, it must be done in a reasonable time. Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 192 [citing Freeman v. Bernard, 1 Salk. 69].

rule already stated, this may be fairly intended, though not positively expressed.[87]

(VIII) IMMATERIAL VARIANCE BETWEEN SUBMISSION AND AWARD. The submission and award need not conform exactly in the designation of persons and things if the same are in fact intended in both.[88]

9. REPUGNANCY IN AWARD. An award which is repugnant, or inconsistent with itself, is bad — that is, it cannot make orders which are directly in opposition to the rights of the parties, as found and declared.[89]

10. PARTIAL INVALIDITY OF AWARD — a. As Rendering Award Void Pro Tanto — (I) IN GENERAL. Originally, it seems, an award which was bad in part was considered altogether bad.[90] But, from an early day, it has been the general rule that an award which is good in part and bad in part will be sustained as to that which is good if the two parts are severable — if the void part is not necessary to the finality of the award under the submission, or if it be not the consideration of the thing awarded to be done on the other side.[91]

Rev. Rep. 754, wherein the award was bad which provided that A or B should do a certain act. See also Rainforth v. Hamer, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 247.

87. Fairly intended.— Alexander v. Mulhall, 1 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 764 (holding, over the objection that it cannot be ascertained in whose favor the award is made, that an award, entitled in the names of the parties as plaintiff and defendant, and reciting that the arbitrators found for the plaintiff in a certain sum, is sufficient); Lutz v. Linthicum, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 165, 8 L. ed. 904 (wherein it was held to sufficiently appear that payment was to be made to the one party in the record, in the suit involved in the reference, to whom it could be judicially awarded to be paid). So, a direction that a nuisance erected on defendant's land should be pulled down was held sufficiently certain without saying by whom it should be pulled down, because it would be intended that defendant, who was the owner of the soil, was the party meant. Armitt v. Breame, 2 Ld. Raym. 1076, 1 Salk. 76. And, on a reference of an action, a direction that defendant pay the costs was held sufficient without saying to whom, because plaintiff would be intended to be the party to receive them. Baily v. Curling, 20 L. J. Q. B. 235, 2 L. M. & P. 161 [cited in Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 196].

Surplusage.— An award that a party or his executors or administrators should execute a release was held not void for uncertainty because it might be read as if the order were against him and his executors, etc., and that the introduction of these parties into the award was only cautionary, and would not vitiate it, as they would be bound anyway. Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 195 [citing Bacon Arb. tit. Arbitrament and Award, (E), 4; Freeman v. Bernard, 1 Ld. Raym. 247; Dawney v. Vesey, 2 Vent. 249].

Connecticut.— Parmelee v. Allen, 32 Conn. 115 (holding that an action may be maintained on an award which gives damages for trespass, although, in the same award, there is a provision for the location of a boundary line which affects title to land, and which provision is void because of the non-compliance of the submission with the statute); Dutton v. Gillet, 5 Conn. 172.

against the same party, or where several sums are awarded against the same party, the award being bad as to one of the orders.[92]

(III) BAD AS TO COSTS. If the award in relation to costs is not within the submission, or is otherwise objectionable — as for want of certainty — it is bad only pro tanto, and the invalid part as to the costs will not destroy the validity of the award as to the residue.[93]

(IV) VOID AS TO THOSE NOT PARTIES. Though an award cannot bind those who are not parties to the submission, the fact that it is against one who is not a party will not render it void as against others who are parties.[94]

b. As Rendering Award Void In Toto — (I) IN GENERAL. It is indispensable that the part of an award allowed to stand should appear to be in no way affected by the departure from the submission,[95] and must be in itself final.[96] An award can be sustained in part only in those cases where the subject appears clearly capable of being separated. If the award is not severable and is bad in part — as where that which would be otherwise good is so connected with that which is bad as to show that justice could not be done by permitting a part of the award to have effect — the whole must fall.[97]

(II) Failure to Decide Part of Matters — Ita Quod Clause. Formerly, it seems that, when the submission was made conditional by the clause ita quod arbitrium fiat præmissis, and recited several distinct matters, if the arbitrator omitted to decide one of them and there were no general words in the award which could be construed to embrace the decision of particular matter, the whole award was bad.[98] But, unless the submission expressly made it conditional, under an ita quod clause, that all matters in dispute were to be adjudged, an award of a part was good.[99] This, however, so far as the exception is concerned,

99. Jones v. Welwood, 71 N. Y. 208; Baspole's Case, 8 Coke 98*a* [cited in Bacon Abr. tit. Arbitrament and Award, (E), 329]. In several cases it appears that the rule permitting a partial award to stand is with a proviso that the omission of other matters does not destroy the equipoise of the consideration, and that it is not a condition of the submission that the award shall be made upon all the points submitted. McNear v. Bailey, 18 Me. 251; Simmonds v. Swaine, 1 Taunt. 549; Hide v. Cooth, 2 Vern. 109.

has been modified both in England and in this country, and, while the conditional clause retains its full force when inserted, and renders an award void where only a part of the matters submitted are passed on, the omission of that clause will not justify a partial award.[1] The intention of the parties should control.[2]

(III) Want of Mutuality of Remedy. Each party must be in a position to compel the other to perform that which he is ordered to do. If the two parts of the award are thus interdependent, the party who cannot enforce it in the particulars in which it operates in his favor cannot be concluded by it in those particulars in which it operates against him.[3]

c. Performance of Void Part. It is not competent for a defendant to take advantage of an irregularity or obscurity in an award which has been performed by other parties who alone were affected by such defect, when, so far as the award respects defendant, it is mutual, certain, and final;[4] and, as a party may waive a part of that which is awarded to him and insist upon the balance,[5] so the rule,

1. Modification of rule.— Muldrow v. Norris, 12 Cal. 331 (holding that the doctrine that an award may be good in part applies only to instances where there has been an excess of power in the arbitrators by attempting to determine matters not submitted, or where there is uncertainty or illegality in an independent and distinct matter, forming no consideration for other parts of the award, and a settlement of which could not have contributed to induce the arbitration); McNear v. Bailey, 18 Me. 251; Jones v. Welwood, 71 N. As far back as 1741 it was observed by Chief Justice Willis, in Bradford v. Bryan, Willes 268, that if it were not for the cases he would be of the opinion that, if all matters were submitted, though without the addition of the ita quod clause, all matters must be determined, assigning as the reason that it was plainly not the intention of the parties that some only should be determined, and that they should be left at liberty to go to law for the rest.

England.— Pope v. Brett, 2 Saund. 292.

Canada.— In Dalton v. McNider, 5 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 501, it was held that, under an award providing for the manner of payment, a creditor could not adopt the award in so far as it found the sum due and reject that part directing the mode of payment.

5. See supra, VI, J, 10, a, (II).

Excess of award not binding complaining party.—Where the plaintiff sued on an award which was in his favor for a certain amount "over and above the board," under a submission to fix the value of certain carpenter-work performed by plaintiff for defendant, it was held that, if the item of board was not included in the submission, the award would not bar a recovery by defendant for such item, and, therefore, he could not object to the validity of the award for deducting such item from the amount due plaintiff, if plaintiff was satisfied with his recovery before the arbitrators; that the complaint setting up this that an award is not severable if mutuality of remedy is destroyed as between the parties, does not apply where the party against whom the void part of an award operates, performs, or offers to perform, that part.[6]

VII. RATIFICATION AND REPUDIATION OF AWARD.

A. Ratification — 1. Of Valid Award. The validity of an award which has been completed according to law and the submission does not depend upon ratification.[7]

2. Of Void Award. An award which is void because in contravention of the mandatory provisions of a statute is incapable of being effectuated by ratification,[8] and, for the reason that parties cannot, by consent, confer upon courts jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the omission to observe such statutory requirements as are held to be jurisdictional cannot be cured by ratification, so as to enable the court to enforce the award under the statute.[9]

3. Of Voidable Award — a. In General. An award, which is not absolutely void but merely voidable because of some defect that does not go to the jurisdiction of the arbitrators or of the court having supervisory power over the proceedings, may be validated by such acts of the parties as indicate an intention to abide by it.[10] The question of what acts sufficiently show an intention to ratify is one of fact, under all of the circumstances,[11] and the burden of showing a ratification is upon the party claiming it.[12]

b. Consideration. No new consideration is necessary to uphold a ratification; the fact that the parties become mutually bound by the ratified award is sufficient.[13]

c. Knowledge of Defect. An act of ratification will not bind a party to the performance of an award which is not otherwise enforceable because of some fatal defect, if he did not, at the time, have knowledge of the defects, since it cannot be presumed that he intended to waive a defect of which he had no knowledge;[14] but a party who has received benefits under a defective award will award was not demurrable, and that defendant should support his answer, setting up a set-off for the board item by evidence instead of relying upon a demurrer to a replication thereto which pleaded that, by agreement of both parties, the item of board was submitted to the arbitrators. 6. Galvin v. Thompson, 13 Me. 367; Smith v. Sweeny, 35 N. Y. 291 [citing Lee v. Elkins, 12 Mod. 585; Kyd Awards 529]. See also Nichols v. Rensselaer County Mut. Ins. Co., 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 125.

7. Need not be ratified.— Sears v. Vincent, 8 Allen (Mass.) 507; Aspley v. Thomas, 17 Tex. 220; Akely v. Akely, 16 Vt. 450.

8. An award of real estate, prohibited by statute, cannot be given validity by ratification, although such acts as would be sufficient to pass the title or estop a party from claiming title may be available without reference to the award. Wiles v. Peck, 26 N. Y. 42. But see State v. Gurnee, 14 Kan. 111, where an award of real estate, in writing, but not signed in compliance with the statute, was subsequently drawn in question, and, it appearing that the parties had arranged their possession of land in accordance with the award, it was held proper for the trial court to refuse an instruction as to the insufficiency of the award, without any limitation of the rule arising from the ratification.

9. An award on matters not subject to submission under a statute cannot be ratified so as to give the court jurisdiction as if the submission had been of matters within its terms. Hubbell v. Bissell, 13 Gray (Mass.) 298.

Acknowledgment of the award has been held to be such a jurisdictional requirement. Burkland v. Johnson, 50 Nebr. 858, 70 N. W. 388.

10. See cases cited infra, note 17 et seq.

Parties claiming under the original parties cannot contest the validity of the award on the ground of irregularity in the arbitration proceedings, where the award has become unquestionable by acquiescence of the original parties. Kane County v. Herrington, 50 Ill. 232.

not be permitted to repudiate his ratification on the ground that, because of his ignorance of the defect, it was not intended, unless he can and does restore the other party to as good a situation as he was in before the ratification.[15]

d. Acts Showing Intention to Ratify — (I) Express Ratification. The simplest form of ratification of a defective award, which places the intention to waive the defect beyond any question, is an express promise to pay or perform the award after its publication.[16]

(II) Implied Ratification — (A) Acting on Award — (1) Performance. Payments which have been made in satisfaction of a voidable award cannot be recovered back,[17] and such payments, either in whole or in part, sufficiently show an intention to ratify the award, and will prevent the party paying from thereafter questioning its validity.[18] Giving a note or bond to secure the payment of an award stands, in respect of ratification, upon the same ground as payments,[19] and the same is true of the performance of things required by the award in whole or in part.[20]

A presumption of knowledge of errors in the award will be indulged to support a bond given to secure the award after a party has had full time and opportunity to examine it. Patton v. Garrett, 116 N. C. 847, 21 S. E. 679; Sharpe v. King, 38 N. C. 402.

A settlement based upon a voidable award,

(2) Accepting Benefits. Accepting payments in whole or in part satisfaction of a voidable award, or of things done by the other party in whole or part performance thereof, or otherwise receiving and enjoying the fruits of the award, shows an intention to ratify which will preclude such party from thereafter questioning the validity of the award or refusing to perform it on his part.[21]

(3) Proceeding in Court. Suing on an award affirms its validity as much as does a distinct expression of an intention to ratify.[22] The same result follows the pleading of an award in bar to an action on the original subject-matter,[23] and, generally, participation in any proceedings with reference to the award which are inconsistent with an intention to disaffirm it.[24] made with full knowledge of all the facts, is a ratification of the award; the settlement will be upheld and the award deemed conclusive. Howard v. Pensacola, etc., R. (B) Lapse of Time. The lapse of such a period of time after the publication of the award as will afford the successful party sufficient reason to regard it as having been acquiesced in may amount to a ratification.[25]

B. Mutual Repudiation of the Award. A valid award may be abandoned or repudiated by mutual consent of the parties, and, thereafter, it cannot be enforced by either of them or relied upon as a bar to an action based upon the original controversy.[26] The same result is attained by a subsequent agreement, fairly and voluntarily entered into, whereby the parties resubmit to the same or other arbitrators the subject-matter of the first arbitration,[27] notwithstanding the resubmission may not result in the making of a valid award.[28]

the amount of their fees and expenses and to direct the manner of payment and the party liable therefor, that such authority does not exist unless it has been expressly conferred by the parties or by the statute under which the arbitration proceeds.[29] But the terms of the submission may be construed to confer such authority.[30]

b. Incidental Authority. In most of the United States the contrary rule has been established that such authority is, necessarily, incident to, and should be implied from, the general authority to finally determine the matters expressly submitted.[31]

The case of Roe v. Doe, 2 T. R. 644, 1 Rev. Rep. 566, which has been cited and relied upon as sustaining a contrary doctrine, especially in the case of Strang v. Ferguson, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 161, which is the leading case in the United States in support of the contrary rule, was a case in which a cause pending in court was referred to arbitration, by rule of court, and the authority to award costs of the cause in court, not of the arbitration, was held to be "necessarily consequent on the authority conferred upon the arbitrator of determining the cause," and needed no express authorization for that purpose. But, though the authority to award costs of a suit which is referred to arbitration may, necessarily, be implied from the authority to make an award which shall determine the suit, the same reasons do not support the implication of authority in an ordinary common-law arbitration, where the determination of a pending suit has not been submitted. Questions concerning the fees and expenses of arbitrators arise after the time of the submission; whereas, the items of costs of a pending cause submitted to arbitration are incurred prior thereto. See the cases cited supra this note; also the cases cited infra, VIII, A, 2, a.

A subsequent agreement found by the trial court, whereby the parties to the arbitration enlarged the parol submission so as to confer authority upon the arbitrators to award concerning the expenses of the arbitration, will be taken as conclusive upon appeal, in the absence of sufficient objection to the admission of evidence tending to show such agreement. case of an arbitration proceeding under such a statute, the authority exists without having been expressly conferred in the submission.[32]

2. Costs of Court — a. In Causes Submitted to Arbitration. The costs of a cause pending in court, which has been withdrawn and submitted to the final determination of arbitrators, may be determined and awarded by the arbitrators without a special authorization therefor, because such authority is, necessarily, consequent on the authority conferred of finally determining the cause;[33] but in England, Canada, and some of the United States the implication of authority to determine and award the costs of a cause thus submitted does not extend to the fees and expenses of the arbitrators, or other costs of the arbitration,[34] although the contrary is true in the American jurisdictions where the rule that such authority will be incidentally implied has been established.[35]

b. References in Pending Suits. The reference of matters in a pending suit which does not involve a final determination of the suit does not, incidentally, confer authority to make an award upon the costs of such suit.[36]

3. Expenses of Parties. Irrespective of the question of whether or not arbitrators have incidental authority to determine and award concerning their own fees and expenses, the authority to award that one party shall pay the expenses incurred by the other party by reason of the arbitration proceedings does not exist unless it has been specially conferred.[37]

B. Exercise of Authority — 1. Sufficiency of Award as to Costs — a. Discretion of Arbitrators. An award of costs which has been confided to the discretion of the arbitrators will not be reviewed by the court upon the merits of the award or the propriety of the allowance of particular items which were within their authority,[38] unless supervisory power has been vested in the court by statute.[39]

b. Terms of the Submission. Restrictions, in the terms of the submission, upon the power of arbitrators to award costs must be observed.[40] Questions as to the extent of authority to award costs under the terms of the submission must be determined upon a construction of the language used in each particular case.[41]

40. Thus, if the parties, by their agreement, have fixed upon a rule to govern the costs, arbitrators have no power to make an

c. Statutory Provisions. In arbitration proceedings under a statute only such costs as the statute allows may be awarded,[42] and provisions of the statute under which arbitrators proceed as to the manner of making and returning an award of costs must substantially be followed, else the award as to costs is of no avail.[43]

d. Certainty of Intent — (I) Award of Gross Sum. In the absence of a requirement in the submission, or in a statute under which the arbitration proceeds, requiring a statement of the items of costs, an award of costs in a gross sum is prima facie sufficient.[44]

(II) Omission to Tax Any Sum — (A) Costs of the Arbitration. An award of costs, in an arbitration at common law, in favor of one of the parties, which does not specify the sum awarded nor prescribe a mode by which the amount may be ascertained with certainty by a simple calculation, is void for uncertainty, because, in such case, there is no person authorized to tax the costs.[45]

(B) Costs of Court — (1) Reference to Taxing Officer. An award of costs in an arbitration of matters involved in a pending suit may be made in general terms without fixing the amount awarded as to such items of costs as are of record in court, and the fixing of the amount may be referred, by the arbitrators, to the clerk of court or other proper taxing officer.[46]

(2) Award Without Reference to Taxation. An award in such a case in general terms in favor of one of the parties, without fixing the amount, is valid as being sufficiently certain, although the fixing of the amount is not

Award of costs of a pending suit according to law.— Where the parties to a submission withdraw a suit pending in court and agree that the costs of that suit are to be taxed, according to law, in favor of the successful party, this confers upon the arbitrators the authority to estimate and award the costs of the suit according to the same rules which govern the court in taxing costs and does not mean that the costs of the suit are to be taxed by the court. 41. Costs of a criminal prosecution, in the name of the state by one of the parties against the other, cannot be included in an award under a submission to arbitrate all matters in controversy, including costs of previous litigation, as such costs do not, in legal acceptation, constitute matters in controversy between the parties. referred to any officer of the court for taxation, for, in such case, the court will order the proper officer to tax the amount.[47]

(3) REFERENCE TO PROPER OFFICER. Such an award will not, however, be upheld as sufficiently certain where the taxation of the items, in order to fix the amount, is referred to some person who has no legal authority to tax the costs involved, as this constitutes an unauthorized delegation of authority.[48]

(III) OMISSION TO AWARD COSTS. Neither the costs of an arbitration nor of a pending suit submitted to arbitration may be recovered by the party in whose favor an award is made if there has been no specific award of costs.[49] But the court costs may be included in a judgment, entered upon the award after having been taxed by the court, in a case where the court still retains jurisdiction of the cause and has authority to enter judgment on the award.[50]

2. EFFECT OF INVALIDITY ON PRINCIPAL AWARD — a. When Severable. When an award of costs is so made that it may be separated from the principal award without leaving the latter uncertain in amount or as to its requirements, the fact that the cost award is invalid because unauthorized or uncertain does not affect the validity of the principal award, or its enforcement according to its terms.[51]

b. When Not Severable. When an invalid cost award has been included in the principal award without showing the amount of the items of cost with reasonable certainty, the amount of the principal award is left uncertain and cannot, therefore, have any validity.[52]

3. Objection to Unauthorized Cost Award. Objection cannot be taken to an award by the losing party because of an unauthorized award of costs against the other party;[53] and failure of a complaining party to object to an unauthorized award of costs against him until after the entry of judgment upon the award constitutes a waiver of the want of authority which will preclude him from thereafter having relief on that ground.[54]

C. Compensation of Arbitrators — 1. Recovery From Parties — a. Action Against Parties. Irrespective of the power of arbitrators to award the cost of the arbitration, when such costs have not been provided for, including compensation to the arbitrators for their services, the parties are liable, under an implied contract, to pay the arbitrators a reasonable compensation.[55]

b. Retention of Award Until Payment. Upon the completion of an award, if the parties neglect to pay to the arbitrators their reasonable compensation for services rendered, it is proper for the arbitrators to retain the award as security for such payment until the payment is made;[56] and such retention, after notice to the parties that the award is ready for delivery, beyond the time-limit within which the award is required to be delivered, does not affect its validity, because the requirement is sufficiently complied with when the award is ready for delivery.[57]

If, in order to take up an award, a party is compelled to pay the arbitrators an exorbitant sum by way of compensation, he may maintain an action to recover the excess beyond the sum which is reasonable.[58]

2. Exoneration Against Co-Party. In the absence of a special provision, by agreement of parties, by the terms of an award under sufficient authority or by a statute under which the arbitration proceeds, determining the matter of compensation, the parties are equally liable each to pay his aliquot share, and, therefore, in case one of the parties has been compelled to pay the whole, in an action against him or in order to get the award out of the hands of the arbitrators, he is entitled to exoneration against the other parties to recover from each of them their proportionate share.[59]

3. Amount of Compensation — a. Reasonableness of Charge. The question of the amount of compensation to be charged by arbitrators depends upon the particular circumstances of each case, regard being had to the nature and importance of the matters in dispute, the amount involved, and time properly employed.[60]

b. Determined by Statute. In statutory arbitrations the per diem compensation of arbitrators is sometimes fixed by the statute,[61] or the reasonableness of the compensation to be included in the judgment on the award is left to the discretion of the court to which the award is returnable.[62]

c. Effect of Failure to Make Award. Arbitrators are entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered in good faith in pursuance of the submission, although, within the time limited, they fail to make a valid award,[63] unless the delay is due to the neglect or fault of the arbitrators.[64]

IX. EFFECT AND CONCLUSIVENESS OF AWARD.

A. When Unimpeached—1. As to Merits of Controversy. As between the parties and their privies, an award is entitled to that respect which is due to the judgment of a court of last resort.[65] It is, in fact, a final adjudication by a court of the parties' own choice, and, until impeached upon sufficient grounds in an appropriate proceeding, an award which is regular on its face is conclusive upon the merits of the controversy submitted, and it is not for the courts to otherwise inquire whether the determination was right or wrong, for the purpose of interfering with it,[66] unless such power has been specially vested in them by stat-

2. As Merger and Bar of Original Demands — a. Valid Award — (I) General Rule. It is the general rule that a valid award operates to merge and extinguish all claims embraced in the submission. Thereafter the submission and award furnish the only basis by which the rights of the parties can be determined, and constitute a bar to any action on the original demand;[69] and the defendant can-

Where the subject-matter of a submission is a contract between the parties, the legal effect of the award is to extinguish it. Curley v. Dean, 4 Conn. 259, 10 Am. Dec. 140; Knowles v. Shapleigh, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 333; Varney v. Brewster, 14 N. H. 49.

Where particular questions are submitted by parties to a controversy, and they agree to be bound by the award, in a subsequent suit by one of the parties against the other in relation to the subject-matter of the submission the award will be the law of the case upon the questions submitted. Lunsford v. Smith, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 554.

Where one demand affects rights of stranger. —Where parties to a suit at law submit the subject-matter thereof to arbitrators, and include in the submission separate matters, one of which affects the rights of a third person, an award in favor of defendant will be a bar to the further prosecution of the action, though it may not be binding upon such third person. Sears v. Vincent, 8 Allen (Mass.) 507.

Instruction as to legal effect of award.—In an action of assumpsit for breach of a contract which had been submitted to arbitration, an instruction that the award is conclusive on all the facts submitted is right as far as it goes; but the jury should be further instructed that, if they find the award as a fact, the contract is defeated because it is merged and extinguished by the submission and award; otherwise the jury might believe that the effect of the award was merely to conclusively establish the contract and the right of action thereon. Curley v. Dean, 4 Conn. 259, 10 Am. Dec. 140.

Errors not prejudicial.— An award stating that the right of possession and ownership of certain property is in a specified party is conclusive upon those questions, and, in an action of trover based on the award, there is no prejudicial error in refusing to charge that plaintiff can recover only on the strength of the award and not on that of his previous ownership; and, where evidence of such ownership is immaterial, its admission cannot prejudice defendant. McArthur v. Oliver, 53 Mich. 299, 19 N. W. 5.

Effect of assignment of award.— In Lowenstein v. McIntosh, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 251, it was held that where the assignee of an award recovered judgment in an action thereon, the assignor could not thereafter claim any rights that he had in the matters determined by the award.

Evidence regarding a matter awarded on is not admissible in behalf of defendant in an action wherein plaintiff relies on the award. Cook v. Gardner, 130 Mass. 313.

Counter-claim passed on by arbitrator.— A counter-claim to an action on an award cannot be maintained, the cause of action set out therein having arisen before the agreement to arbitrate, which agreement provided that the findings of the arbitrators should "constitute a final settlement," and having been included in the matters the arbitrators were to determine. West v. Averill Grocery Co., 109 Iowa 488, 80 N. W. 555.

Set-off not allowed by arbitrators.—A matter of set-off offered in arbitration proceedings and not allowed by the arbitrators is concluded by an award not appealed from where it does not appear that the set-off was withdrawn, but merely that the party and his counsel thereupon left the room, stating that they would dispense with further attendance on the arbitration. Muirhead v. Kirkpatrick, 2 Pa. St. 425.

erly admissible in evidence in support of an action brought on the original demand.[71]

(II) Exceptions to Rule—(A) Where No New Rights or Duties Created. In some cases it has been held that, where an award gives no new rights and creates no new duties, it does not merge the original cause of action and will not operate as a bar to an action thereon until performed.[72]

(B) Where Submission by Parol. It seems to have been held in some of the earlier cases that, where the submission to arbitration was by parol, the award did not merge the matters submitted until it had been performed.[73] But, at this day, an award under a parol submission operates as a merger of the original cause as fully as one by bond.[74]

(III) Extent of Merger—(A) Matters Not Within Submission. An award will not operate to merge and bar any matters except such as were comprehended within the scope of the submission.[75] Thus, an award on a submission of all

Award pleaded in answer and admitted in reply.— In an action to compel the statement of an unsettled account between the joint owners of a steamboat, with a prayer for a judgment for the amount which might be found due to plaintiff, the defendant answered that the amount due plaintiff had been ascertained and fixed by an award upon submission to a third person. Plaintiff replied, admitting the submission and award, and asked judgment thereon. It was held that there was no such departure in pleading as would vitiate a judgment for the amount admitted to be due by the answer. Benson v. Stein, 34 Ohio St. 294.

Instructions.—Where an action was brought on the original cause and defendant set up the award, and plaintiff, in reply, alleged fraud therein, it was held erroneous for the court to charge the jury that, if they should find that the arbitrators acted in good faith, they should find for defendant, and leave plaintiff to his remedy on the agreement to submit, as the court should have instructed that, if the arbitrators acted in good faith, the jury should find for plaintiff the amount ascertained by the award to be due him. Blakenship v. Adkins, 12 Tex. 536.

72. Freeman v. Barnard, 1 Ld. Raym. 247.

Thus, in England, an award which merely ascertains the amount of a money demand, and directs payment, is not deemed a bar to an action for the original debt until after payment of the sum awarded. Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 295; Allen v. Milner, 2 Cr. & J. 47, 1 L. J. Exch. 7, 2 Tyrw. 113; Roulstone v. Alliance Ins. Co., 4 Ir. C. L. 547.

But in the United States this doctrine has been disapproved (Brazill v. Isham, 12 N. Y. 9; Armstrong v. Masten, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 189). And it is the general rule here that, where the acts to be performed by the parties are distinct and independent, performance is not necessary to give force to the award. As to the necessity for performance in general, see infra, X, A.

Award of same rent as provided in lease.— In an arbitration between a lessor and lessee as to the payment of rent under a certain indenture, an award that the lessee should pay the same rent and in the same manner as provided for in the lease was held not to supersede or merge the life of the lease so that no action for the rent reserved could be brought upon the covenant in the lease instead of upon the bond submitting to arbitration. Keeler v. Harding, 23 Ark. 697.

Distinction between award and valuation. — It would seem that, where the submission is a special one, and simply for the purpose of ascertaining the value of particular work, a suit may be brought either on the award or for work and labor, using the award merely as evidence of value. matters in difference is no bar to the recovery of a demand which, though it existed as a claim at the time of the submission, was not then a matter in difference.[76] And so, where the arbitrators refuse to consider a claim because they deem it not to be within their jurisdiction under the submission, such claim may properly be made the basis of an action.[77]

(B) General Submission — Matters Not Considered. The cases regarding the effect of an award made under a general submission, upon matters in difference which were not presented to the arbitrators, are far from being harmonious. It is the rule in England that a party to such a submission must come forward with his whole case, and all matters in difference become merged in the award whether Question one of fact.— In Huckestein v. Kaufman, 173 Pa. St. 199, 33 Atl. 1028, it was said that the decision of the question whether or not a matter was within the submission was one of fact; and, where there was any evidence which would reasonably support the finding that a particular item in question was submitted, the award embracing such item would not be disturbed.

Parol evidence will generally be admitted to show whether a certain matter was submitted, where such fact is not apparent from the submission and award. See infra, XII, A, 4.

Award fixing amount of debt does not destroy security.— Under a submission of a controversy concerning the amount secured by a mortgage, an award which merely fixes the amount due does not destroy the mortgage security for the debt. Collier v. White, 97 Ala. 615, 12 So. 385.

Matter arising subsequent to award.— A judgment on an award, in favor of the builder and against the owner of a house, upon a submission of all demands between them, is no bar to an action against the builder by the owner to recover a sum which he is subsequently — though before paying the amount awarded — obliged to pay to discharge the mechanic's lien of a workman employed by the builder, which lien has been included in the award. Hale v. Huse, 10 Gray (Mass.) 99.

Award fixing amount in lieu of dower.— The widow of C recovered judgment for her dower against F in a certain farm which had been warranted to F by B; and subsequently the agent of the widow entered into a submission with B by which it was referred to arbitrators to determine what sum annually should be paid to the widow by B instead of dower being assigned to her. An award was made fixing the sum and a bond given by B to pay the same; but, after several payments, B became insolvent and neglected to pay further. The widow never discharged the judgment nor signed any release of her dower. It was held that she was bound by the award so long as payments were made, but, upon failure of payments, she might institute proceedings to obtain possession of the land; that the true meaning of the submission was that the annual payments should be received, not in discharge of her dower in the land, but in the nature of rent for its use. Furber v. Chamberlain, 29 N. H. 405. See also Lewis v. Burgess, 5 Gill (Md.) 129.

Action to vacate award and recover on original cause.— Where a party joins, in one action, a claim for a balance alleged to be due on a building contract for a certain sum for extra work and materials, and damages for being hindered and delayed in the performance of the contract, and asks to have an award of an arbitrator, to whom some of the matters in dispute have been submitted, set aside as fraudulent, he is entitled to judgment for such sums as may be due upon those causes of action not included in the submission, even though the award be held valid. actually brought before the arbitrator or not.[78] This rule has been adopted in Canada[79] and in a number of jurisdictions in the United States.[80] But, according to the more generally accepted doctrine in this country, it is permissible to show that a certain matter, though within the scope of the submission, was not in fact considered by the arbitrators, and the award will not bar an action on such demand.[81] It seems, however, that, where the matter not presented constitutes part of an entire demand, the award will bar any further action on the original claim, even in those jurisdictions where the latter rule prevails.[82] And Rule qualified in equity — Accidental omission.— In Brophy v. Holmes, 2 Molloy 1, it was held that, where there was a purely accidental omission by the party, the matter was not merged.

Party made to account for omitted item.— On a general reference by three persons, A, B, and C, of all matters in difference, the arbitrators, acting upon certain statements of the assets and debts from which it appeared that A was indebted to the partnership in more than his share apparently would come to, directed B to receive the outstanding debts and effects, to pay the debts owing the partnership, and the remainder was to be divided between B and C. The award was acted upon by all parties, but B subsequently received some debts which were omitted in the accounts laid before the arbitrators and on which their award proceeded, and he also received good debts to a larger amount than had been estimated by the arbitrators. On a bill by A against his copartners, it was held that he was entitled, notwithstanding the reference was of all matters in difference, to an account of the good debts received beyond the amount estimated by the arbitrators, and to an account of the receipts in respect of dubious debts; and that any over-receipt in respect of good debts ought to follow the directions of the award with respect to the dubious debts. Rule in Vermont.— In Vermont, if a submission is by parol, the award will not merge matters not brought to the attention of the arbitrators. Ennos v. Pratt, 26 Vt. 630; Buck v. Buck, 2 Vt. 417. And see Briggs v. Brewster, 23 Vt. 100. But, where the submission is in writing, it seems that the award will bar a subsequent action on any demand within the scope of the submission, although it were not actually considered by the arbitrators. Barker v. Belknap, 39 Vt. 168; Robinson v. Morse, 26 Vt. 392.

82. Kendall v. Stokes, 3 How. (U. S.) 87, 11 L. ed. 506, 833, wherein the party sought where a party intentionally withholds a claim though requested to bring it forward, the award will always bar a subsequent action thereon.[83]

(c) Award Made Pending Suit. An award made pending an action for the same cause, when properly set up,[84] constitutes a good bar thereto,[85] even though the award finds for plaintiff in a less sum than the amount claimed in the suit.[86]

b. Invalid Award. Where the award rendered by the arbitrators is void, it will not bar an action on the original demand,[87] and it seems that the party may join a count on the award with one on the original cause of action, and, if it be determined that the award is void, may recover on the latter count.[88]

c. Award Vacated or Repudiated by Parties. Where an award is set aside, the parties are relegated to their former rights and an action will lie on the original demand.[89] The same is true where the award has been repudiated by the parties.[90] to recover on the ground that he had not proved before the arbitrator all the damages he had sustained. To same effect see Hoagland v. Veghte, 29 N. J. L. 125; English v. Wilmerding School Dist., 165 Pa. St. 21, 30 Atl. 506.

Items omitted from account.— If a submission, though not under seal, in terms embraces all the accounts arising from dealings of a particular character between the parties, the account upon each side in reference to that subject is an entire matter, and the whole will be merged in the award although every item be not presented before the arbitrators. Briggs v. Brewster, 23 Vt. 100.

83. Warfield v. Holbrook, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 531, wherein the party refused to produce a note held by him, although the other party called the attention of the arbitrators to it and claimed to have it laid before them.

Claim fraudulently withheld.—Where, upon a parol agreement to submit all demands to arbitration, one of the parties falsely represents to the other that he has presented all his claims, and the other, acting on the belief that such representation is true, performs the award, the party making such representation is estopped to recover a claim designedly and fraudulently withheld from the submission. Wyman v. Perkus, 39 N. H. 218.

Vermont — Note intentionally withheld.— Where notes and other claims are submitted under seal to arbitration, an award is a bar to a suit on any of the notes intentionally withheld from the examination and decision of the arbitrators. Robinson v. Morse, 26 Vt. 392.

Where parties not identical.— An award under an agreement entered into after bill filed may be pleaded to the bill; but, where all parties to the suit were not parties to the award, although the plaintiff was a party, and where part of the prayer of the bill was for the execution of trust deeds under which some of the parties to the suit who were not parties to the award were interested, the plea of the award was ordered to stand for the answer, with liberty to except. Award on matters not proper subjects of arbitration.— Where a matter in suit is not the subject of arbitration, or is a covenant and the submission is by parol, the original demand is not affected by a submission and award. Logsdon v. Roberts, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 255.

Not conclusive as to amount of damages.— Where an award of arbitrators was void for want of notice to defendant, so that he would not be liable in an action brought thereon, he cannot, in an action by plaintiff involving the same matter, urge the award as determining the amount of damages. Cobb v. Wood, 32 Me. 455.

Award not affecting rights of parties in subsequent suit.— A wife joined her husband in conveying her land to one who immediately reconveyed to the husband. In view of a subsequent suit for divorce, certain persons were called in to fix a basis for a division of the property, and decided that the husband should retain the land and pay the wife in instalments one half of its estimated value. The divorce suit was thereafter withdrawn. It was held that the award, being a nullity, did not affect the rights of the parties in a subsequent suit for divorce. McAllister v. McAllister, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 345.

Performance of void award.— It seems that a void award may sometimes constitute a good bar if it has been performed. Hamlin v. Duke, 28 Mo. 166. And see Norton v. Mascall, 2 Vern. 24.

88. Morton v. Cameron, 3 Rob. (N. Y.) 189.

Award on note — Admissibility of note in evidence.— The fact that an award for the payment of a note is void for uncertainty does not render inadmissible in evidence the note itself in an action declaring upon both. Harris v. Whitmore, 66 Ill. 144.

d. Agreement to Submit. A mere agreement to submit matters in controversy to arbitration cannot be set up in bar of a suit or action for the same cause,[91] though, under peculiar circumstances, an equity court will sometimes refuse to act until the arbitrators have made their award.[92]

3. As Evidence of Fact in Issue. In addition to the effect to be given a valid award as merger and bar, it is also conclusive evidence of facts necessarily involved in the arbitration whenever, in a subsequent litigation between the same parties or their privies, the same facts are brought directly in issue;[93] and, if a fact subsequently in issue was but inferentially involved in the arbitration, the award is prima facie evidence upon it, though not conclusive;[94] but, where it appears that the fact in question could not rightfully have been determined under the submission, the award is inadmissible.[95]

4. As Lien on Property. An award, of itself, does not operate as a lien.[96] But it is otherwise in statutory arbitrations in judicial proceedings, and where the award is entered as the judgment of the court under statute.[97] The submission,

96. Even though the submission provides that a mortgage is to be executed within a limited time, unless the party against whom the award was made should pay the amount thereof, or that the submission might be made a rule of court, the award gives no lien or claim on the land, but the successful party is simply in the position in which any other creditor at large of the debtor stands. Jones v. Winans, 20 N. J. Eq. 96.

97. In Georgia it is held that the lien of a judgment founded on an award under the code related back to the date of the award, so far as to take precedence of a lien of equal degree created on the property — by the party to whom it was awarded, and the foundation of whose title is the award — between the date of the award and the day it is made the judgment of the court. Miller v. Fisk, 47 Ga. 270.

In Pennsylvania.— Under the Pennsylvania act of 1810 it was held that an award was a lien on the real estate of the judgment debtor which continued during the pendency of an appeal. Dietrich's Appeal, 4 Watts (Pa.) 208; Ramsey's Appeal, 4 Watts & S. (Pa.) 71.

Under a later statute it was held that an award could not become a lien until it was however, may create a lien for the amount to be awarded so as to justify and require the enforcement of such lien by a court of equity.[98]

B. Impeachment of Award — 1. Grounds of Impeachment — a. Mistake of Arbitrators — (1) Honest Mistake of Judgment — (A) In Final Conclusion. An honest mistake of judgment in the conclusion of arbitrators which does not exceed the bounds of the submission is not, as a general rule, ground of impeachment of the award, whether the alleged mistake be one of fact or of law. Although the court might have given a different decision, it will not substitute its judgment for that of the arbitrators.[99]

(B) In Admitting or Rejecting Evidence. The admission by arbitrators of improper or illegal evidence as the result of an honest mistake of judgment as to its admissibility or probative force is not, ordinarily, a ground for impeachment of the award.[1] To constitute ground of impeachment, it must plainly appear that the award was so based upon the improper evidence that the decision would have been different but for its admission;[2] and it has been held that the same rule applies to the rejection of legal evidence under circumstances not amounting to a refusal to receive such evidence on the merits, but only showing a mistaken construction of the rules of evidence.[3]

(C) Upon Weight or Effect of Evidence. An honest mistake of arbitrators in the effect or weight given by them to certain portions of the evidence is not such an impropriety as may be shown to impeach the award.[4]

Parol evidence, offered to impeach an award, which has no bearing except upon a question that the arbitrators have committed an error of judgment is inadmissible. Hoffman v. De Graaf, 109 N. Y. 638, 16 N. E. 357, 15 N. Y. St. 197.

Evidence to contradict an admitted fact.— In an investigation by arbitrators of an amount to be allowed for certain extra work under a building contract, the party liable had admitted a certain amount and the arbitrators received evidence tending to show a smaller amount, and thereupon awarded to the contractor an amount smaller than that which had been admitted, and it was held that this was not sufficient to invalidate the award, upon the ground that the arbitrators were, necessarily, to be governed by the technical rules of evidence. Rounds v. Aiken Mfg. Co., 58 S. C. 299, 36 S. E. 714.

(II) Mistake Producing Failure of Intent — (A) General Rule. Whenever, in a proper proceeding, it is made plainly to appear, either by the face of the award or properly by matter extrinsic thereto, that the arbitrators have fallen into such an error, either of fact or law, as will make the award operate prejudicially against the complaining party, as to a material matter, in a manner in which they manifestly did not intend it to operate, the award will not conclude the parties as to such matter; and if the entire award is so infected by such a mistake or if the inoperative portion be not clearly severable from the remainder, it will be void in toto.[5]

(B) Modifications of Rule — Mistake, How Shown. It has also been held that such mistakes must appear on the face of the award or by documents properly a part thereof, as otherwise it cannot be ascertained that the intention of the arbitrators has miscarried,[6] unless the mistake is admitted by the arbitrators;[7] and, at all events, an award is prima facie valid where there is nothing on its face to impeach it.[8]

(c) Particular Applications of Rule — (1) Misconception of Facts. Although an award cannot be avoided on account of a wrong conclusion, drawn by the arbitrators from the facts before them, which conclusion amounts to a mere mistake of judgment,[9] a plain misconception of the facts submitted, by reason of which it is made to appear that the arbitrators must have rendered a different decision had they proceeded in view of the true state of facts, about the existence of which there could be no reasonable question, may be held to be a ground for avoiding the award.[10] But if, upon any reasonable view of the matter relied on to establish such misconception, it should appear that the existence thereof is doubtful or that the conclusion of the arbitrators was not based upon it, the award will be upheld.[11] Thus, it has been held that the mistake which will be sufficient to avoid the award must be one that is plain and palpable[12] — as a mere erroneous computation or calculation of the amount, and the Admission of arbitrators held not sufficient. — It has been held that a mistake of fact, although admitted by the arbitrator and appearing to be gross and clear, is not sufficient ground upon which to avoid an award. Eaton v. Eaton, 43 N. C. 102, 106 (wherein the court, by way of criticism of this requirement, said: "It makes the right of relief depend not on the mistake, but on the fact, that the arbitrators have intelligence enough to see it when pointed out, and frankness enough to admit it; whereas, if there be a mistake, and this, under any circumstances, is a ground for relief, it is difficult to perceive a reason for refusing it, because it so happens, that the arbitrators are too dull to apprehend or too disingenuous to admit their mistake. This, so far from being a ground for refusing relief, would seem to be a good reason to induce the Court to interfere, because it furnishes an inference that the arbitrators are totally unfit or dishonest, or both unfit and dishonest"); Phillips v. Evans, 1 Dowl. & L. 463, 13 L. A mistake in the application of a foreign law which should govern the claims of the parties has been held not sufficient ground upon which to decide that the arbitrators committed a plain mistake of law where the award was not objectionable under the law of the state of the award, and the peculiar law of the other state was not shown to have aside.[20] In applying this rule it is essential that the intent of the arbitrators to decide according to law should plainly appear.[21] Thus, where the reasons of the award are not shown, there is no means of knowing whether or not the arbitrators intended to decide according to law;[22] and it has often been held that a mistake of law which would justify setting aside an award must appear on the face thereof;[23] and, conversely, where the reasons of the award and the rules of law by which the arbitrators profess to be governed are stated by them, this is proof of their intention to decide according to such law, in which event the court may set aside the award for mistake of the law;[24] therefore, it has, generally, been held that a mistake

21. Intention to decide according to law must be plain, and, if there is any ground for the inference that they may have intended to decide according to their own notions of morals or equity, the award should be upheld although it may appear to have been decided contrary to law. It must appear to the satisfaction of the court that the award would not have been made had the arbitrators know what the law was. Alexanders v. Goodwin, 54 N. H. 423; Sanborn v. Murphy, 50 N. of law apparent on the face of the award renders the award inoperative and of no effect.[25]

(III) Mistake Amounting to Misconduct. Although a mistake which is properly to be considered as an honest error of judgment will not avoid an award,[26] a mistake of fact or law which is so gross and palpable as to be evidence of misconduct or undue partiality may be held ground of impeachment;[27] and it has been held that such mistakes only are impeachable mistakes.[28] Again, although the merits of the controversy cannot be reëxamined when the award has not been properly attacked on sufficient grounds,[29] nor for the purpose of ascertaining whether there has been an honest mistake of judgment in the final conclusion[30] or in considering the weight of evidence,[31] it has been held that the merits of the controversy and the evidence adduced before the arbitrators should be reëxamined in determining whether the award was the result of misconduct or undue means.[32]

But in that case we would set aside the award for corruption proved by the decision, and not because there was an honest mistake. If arbitrators should decide that the children of a deceased person, admitted to have been born in lawful wedlock, were not his heirs, we should not hesitate to set aside their award." b. For Fraud or Misconduct — (i) Of Party — (a) In General. It is ground for setting aside an award that it was obtained by the fraud, imposition, or other undue means employed by a party to the arbitration,[33] and the fact that

If there is any evidence on which the award may reasonably be sustained there cannot be any inference of misconduct of the arbitrators because a different conclusion might reasonably have been reached. Acts of party defeating effect of award.— A court of equity will give relief against an award, the effect of which is defeated by acts of one of the parties after the award was made and before it could be put into execution, which would deprive the complaining party of benefits under the award, in consideration of which certain things were required of him. Hillyard v. Nichols, 1 Root (Conn.) 360.

Award prepared by one of the parties.— The mere fact that one of the parties writes an award in the absence of the other party is not, of itself, sufficient evidence of fraud upon which to set aside the award. But where it appears that the award as drawn and signed is erroneous and deceptive and in favor of the party drawing it — as where it recites that the arbitrator examined the premises after the submission, and that the valuation thereof was a money value, which recital is contrary to the facts — an award may be held invalid in equity. Dickinson v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 7 W. Va. 390.

Consent obtained by fraudulent means.— An award made, not as a result of the judgment of the arbitrators, but on an agreement between one party and one of the arbitrators, representing himself as authorized to act for the other party, is not binding where the consent of the former was obtained by fraudulent means. Stockton Combined Harvester, etc., Works v. Glen's Falls Ins. Co., 98 Cal. 557, 33 Pac. 633.

What fraud available.— In some cases it has been held that the fraud which will justify the setting aside of the award must have been practised upon the arbitrators. Wilson v. Wilson, 18 Colo. 615, 34 Pac. 175. In Veghte v. Hoagland, 10 N. J. Eq. 45, it was said that fraud which would justify equity in interfering with an award "must amount to corruption, partiality, or gross misbehavior in the arbitrators."

Fraud not sufficiently shown.— A and B, each of whom held one half of the stock of a corporation, submitted to arbitration the question as to which should sell to the other his stock, and delivered their certificates, assigned in blank, to the arbitrators, who decided that B should sell to A, and delivered to A all such certificates. B's certificates were then transferred to A on the company's books. In an action by B to set aside an election of directors while his stock was in A's name on the books, it appeared that, after the award, A accepted the assignment of B's stock against the protest of the latter; that he had the assignment recorded on the company's books and had the company's affairs adjusted as if the the fraud is not discovered until after judgment has been entered on the award will not affect the right to relief;[34] but where all the facts were known to the party at the time the motion to enter judgment on the award was made, and no objection was then raised, equity refused to set it aside on a subsequent application.[35]

(B) Submission Procured by Fraud. Where a party is induced by the fraud or false representations of the other party to submit to arbitration, the award may be set aside on that ground.[36]

(C) Suppression of Material Facts. It is ground for setting aside an award that a party suppressed material facts which affected the determination of the arbitrators.[37]

(D) False Testimony. An award will sometimes be set aside because obtained upon the false testimony of a party.[38]

(E) Exertion of Improper Influence on Arbitrator — (1) IN GENERAL. The exercise of undue influence, applied by one of the parties to one or more of the award were valid; and that he resisted B's suit to set aside the award. It was held that such facts were insufficient to show that the arbitration was devised or carried out fraudulently by A to deprive B of his interest in the company. Matter of Leslie, 58 N. J. L. 609, 33 Atl. 954.

Unintentional misrepresentation.—The fact that the successful party to an arbitration honestly stated to the other party facts relating to the appointment of a third arbitrator, which statement was misconstrued, and the appointment was the result of such misconstruction, was held not of itself sufficient to show the necessary fraud or corruption to warrant the court in setting aside the award. Bridgeport v. Eisenman, 47 Conn. 34.

Misrepresentations of law.—In Indiana Ins. Co. v. Brehm, 88 Ind. 578, it was held that misrepresentations of law would not vitiate the award. In this case a party misrepresented the obligations imposed by a policy of insurance on an insurance company.

Party bound to disclose facts.— To an award under a contract for fattening cattle, in which it was provided that they should be of a certain average condition, to be ascertained by an arbitrator, it was objected that the arbitrator had been misled and was partial toward plaintiffs. It was held that the acts of the arbitrator could not be questioned unless he had been deceived by plaintiffs, who were bound, if they knew of any disease affecting the cattle, to disclose it. Teal v. Bilby, 123 U. S. 572, 8 S. Ct. 239, 31 L. ed. 263.

Immaterial matters.— The fact that plaintiff failed to produce books of account bearing upon the subject-matter in controversy is not sufficient ground of objection to an award where the arbitrators find that the books were not necessary to their determination. Gardner v. Lincoln, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 24, 19 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 132.

But see Williams v. Danziger, 91 Pa. St. 232; Pickering v. Pickering, 19 N. H. 389, 394, wherein an award pleaded in bar was attacked on the ground that it "was made upon false and corrupt testimony, procured and laid before the arbitrators by the defendant." The court said: "To try the issue presented by the replication would be to inquire whether the referees arrived at just conclusions upon the testimony. The question whether any portion of it was false, is involved in those passed upon and settled by the tribunal chosen by the parties, and to determine it now, would be to try the case over again. This cannot be done."

Representations not known to be false.— It is not a sufficient reason for vacating an award as to the division line between adjoining farms that one of the parties, without fraud, made representations to the witnesses and arbitrators, in respect to certain monuments involved in the controversy, which are proved to have been false, but which it does not appear the party then knew to be false and which at most could be but the suppression of an opinion derived from very recent acquaintance with the premises. Callant v. Downey, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 346; Howard v. Puffer, 23 Vt. 365.

Obtaining the allowance of a groundless claim is not, of itself, ground for setting the award aside. The party must have knowingly presented to the arbitrators, either by suggestion, or falsehood, or suppression of truth, a false state of facts. Emerson v. Udall, 8 Vt. 357 [on subsequent appeal see 13 Vt. 477, 37 Am. Dec. 604].

arbitrators by separate conference or other means of approach, is good ground for setting the award aside,[39] and a party who admits such improper measures will not be heard to say that he was unable to accomplish his purpose.[40] But, if there appears to have been no corrupt motive and the award was not influenced thereby, the mere fact that a party talked with an arbitrator regarding the case will not always necessitate the vacation of the award.[41]

(2) ENTERTAINING ARBITRATOR. For a party to furnish refreshments or other entertainment to an arbitrator is highly improper, and will sometimes justify the setting aside of the award.[42]

(II) OF ARBITRATORS—(A) In General. Fraud, corruption, or misconduct of the arbitrators is ground for setting aside the award,[43] and, where improper

An act of a party before the submission which has an effect upon the decision of the arbitrator, but which was not done with the view of deceiving or misleading them, will not vitiate the award. Ellmaker v. Buckley, 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 72.

Letter received after decision.— The fact that one of three arbitrators, after the decision, received from one of the parties a letter as to the merits of the case was held not to invalidate the award, subsequently drawn up and signed in pursuance of such decision. conduct is shown, the fact that the arbitrators were not actuated by an evil or corrupt intent will not prevent the vacation of the award.[44] But an award will not, ordinarily, be disturbed on account of mere indiscretions or slight irregularities in the conduct of the arbitrators, where they evidently acted in good faith and no injustice appears to have been done.[45] And where a unanimous award is not essential, misconduct of one only of the arbitrators will not, necessarily, operate to vitiate the award.[46]

(B) Partiality. If an arbitrator conduct himself with bias or partiality, this amounts in law to misconduct which will warrant the setting aside of the award.[47]

(c) Irregularities in Proceedings. While arbitrators are not bound by the strict and technical rules of law, they must, nevertheless, have due regard to natural justice and the rights of the parties; and irregularities in their proceedings, whereby these things are arbitrarily disregarded, constitute such misconduct as will necessitate the setting aside of the award.[48] For example, an award may be set aside because the arbitrators proceeded without notifying a party or giving him an opportunity to be heard,[49] refused to postpone the hearing when it was plainly their duty to do so,[50] refused to hear competent and material evidence,[51] received evidence in the absence of, and without the consent of, a party,[52] refused to allow one of the arbitrators to take part in their deliberations,[53] improperly delegated their authority,[54] or chose an umpire by lot.[55]

(D) Inference From Excessive or Inadequate Award. The mere fact that an award is different in amount from what the court would have given will not, of itself, necessitate setting it aside.[56] But, where the amount is so palpably excessive or inadequate as to produce a conviction that the arbitrators must have been biased or corrupt, the award will be set aside.[57]

(E) Waiver of Objections. Where a party having knowledge of the fraud, misconduct, or partiality allows the arbitrators to proceed without objecting on that account, he is deemed to have waived the objection.[58]

c. For Newly-Discovered Evidence. In an old case it was said that equity might grant relief against an award on the ground of an inevitable failure of proof, discovered after the making of the award.[59] But it is at least doubtful whether newly-discovered evidence, in the absence of any fraud or misconduct of either the parties or arbitrators, will ever furnish sufficient cause for setting aside an award,[60] and certainly it will not unless it appears that such evidence could not have been sooner procured by the exercise of due diligence.[61]

2. METHOD OF OBTAINING RELIEF — a. In General. Originally there was no way by which a court of law could give relief against an award regular on its face and within the jurisdiction of the arbitrators,[62] and for such relief resort must be had to equity.[63] In the reign of Charles II, however, the practice grew up of making submissions in pending suits rules of court and setting aside the awards on motion, which practice was afterward extended by statute to all arbitrations.[64] In modern times power to set aside awards on motion is, generally, given by statute to the courts to which such awards are returned.[65]

b. In Courts of Law — (I) DEFENSES IN ACTION ON AWARD — (A) Matters Apparent on Face of Award. In an action on an award defendant may, of course, avail himself of any defense apparent on the face of the award.[66]

(B) Matters Extrinsic the Award — (1) RULE AT COMMON LAW. At common law, matters extrinsic the award — such as fraud, mistake, or partiality in the arbitrator — cannot be set up in defense to an action on the award. Defendant's redress in such cases is a resort to a court of equity.[67]

Review on appeal.— An award which exceeds the authority of the arbitrators by deciding a matter not submitted, which excess is apparent from the face of the award and the submission, and which cannot be separated from the remainder of the award without doing injustice, is void, and may be noticed as error on appeal from a judgment in an action to enforce the award, although the record discloses no assignment of error and no exceptions to the rulings of the court during the progress of the trial, or to the findings of fact or to the judgment rendered. 67. Alabama.— In Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Kline, 114 Ala. 366, 21 So. 958, the rule as stated in the text was held to apply. It is difficult, however, to reconcile this case with Graham v. Woodall, 86 Ala. 313, 314, 5 So. 687, wherein a plea was relied on "as constituting partiality and fraud in the award." The court said: "There has been contrariety of decision on the question, whether fraud or partiality in the arbitrators can be raised as a defense to an action at law founded on the award. Some decisions hold that the defense can be made only in equity. We think, however, that both principle and the sounder line of authorities, require us to hold, that when such abuse has been practiced as the pleas in this case assert, the award furnishes no just

(II) Defenses to Award Pleaded in Bar. Where an award is pleaded in bar, only such objection can be urged against it as might be set up in an action to enforce the award.[70] If it be proper on its face it is conclusive as to the merits of the case,[71] and plaintiff cannot attack it by evidence of extrinsic matters — such as fraud — which render it voidable only.[72] But it is open to plaintiff to show

Question not raised by demurrer to plea.— Whether an award is infected with fraud, misconduct, or partiality is not a question that can be raised by demurrer to a plea setting up the award in bar where such objections do not plainly appear on the face of the award. Duren v. Getchell, 55 Me. 241.

Indiana — Fraud in procuring submission. — In Rice v. Loomis, 28 Ind. 399, it was held that an award pleaded in bar might be at-that the subject-matter of the action was not included in the submission and award,[73] and jurisdictional defects — such as an excess of authority by the arbitrators or a failure to award on some of the matters submitted — which render the award a mere nullity, may always be relied on as a defense to an award so pleaded.[74]

c. In Equity — (I) JURISDICTION — (A) In General. A court of equity has jurisdiction over awards to restrain the enforcement thereof and to set them aside in the ordinary cases of fraud, corruption, and mistake, or for extraneous causes going to their validity.[75] Any facts which show it to be against conscience to tacked for fraud in the procuring of the submission, the court taking the view that, under such a submission, the arbitrators acquired no jurisdiction. But Elliott, J., in a dissenting opinion, showed clearly the weakness of the majority arguments.

enforce the award, or the judgment on it, and which could not have been taken advantage of at law, will authorize equitable interference.[76] These may go to the misconduct of the parties as well as of the arbitrators.[77]

(B) Adequacy of Other Remedy—(1) OBJECTIONS AVAILABLE AT LAW—(a) IN GENERAL. The general rule that the existence of an adequate remedy will prevent the invoking of equitable jurisdiction is applied here, and if the objections are such as may be pleaded at law or are such as would defeat the enforcement of the award whenever it should be set up against a party—as where the invalidity of the award appears upon its face,[78] or goes to the jurisdiction to show no award—equity will not interfere.[79]

(b) AFTER FAILURE TO PURSUE OTHER REMEDY. Objections which might have been available in an action on the award or in resisting a motion or rule at law for the enforcement of the award cannot be made the ground for a bill to set aside the award or judgment thereon unless good excuse is shown for omitting to raise the objections sooner.[80]

(2) UNDER RULE OF COURT OR UPON MOTION. Courts at law in which awards are to be returned are frequently given certain supervisory powers over the awards, and may set them aside upon grounds which were before cognizable only in equity.[81] If the arbitration is one in which this supervisory power may be exercised, it must be for the grounds enumerated; but for other grounds the party is not remediless, as he may still proceed in equity.[82] Courts of chancery have declined to exercise the general jurisdiction to set aside awards for fraud, mistake, and the like, where the submission provides for enforcing the award, or for the entry of a rule of court, or where other analogous relief is provided by statute.[83] Sometimes, however, the jurisdiction of equity is expressly

The provision of the English statute was for the enforcement of the award by process of contempt, which it expressly declared should not be "stopped or delayed its execution by any order, rule, command, or process of any other Court, either of Law or Equity, unless it shall be made appear on oath to such Court, that the arbitrators or umpire misbehaved themselves; and that such award, arbitration, or umpirage, was procured by corruption or other undue means." Gwinett v. Bannister, 14 Ves. Jr. 530, 533. In Lonsdale v. Littledale, 2 Ves. Jr. 451, it was held that the jurisdiction of the court of chancery was not barred by a reference under the statute; but this case and Steff v. Andrews, 2 Madd. 6, were distinguished in Toppan v. Heath, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 293, from the English cases above cited in that the question arose in a cause pending which was admitted not to be within the statute, and, therefore, the opinion was extrajudicial.

It is contempt to file a bill in equity to set aside an award after entering into the rule of the court of king's bench to abide by it. Rex v. Wheeler, 3 Burr. 1256.

The summary jurisdiction of chancery over awards under 9 & 10 Wm. III, c. 15, was held to exclude every other jurisdiction to interfere with the execution of awards made under the statute. Where the submission contains no agreement that it shall be made a rule of court and no rule has been entered, equity has power to set aside the award. Smith v. Whitmore, 2 De G. J. & S. 297, 10 Jur. N. S. 1190, 33 L. J. Ch. 713, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 169, 13 Wkly. Rep. 2, 67 Eng. Ch. 232.

Motion to vacate award.— In Johnston v. Paul, 23 Minn. 46, it was held that a separate action to set aside a judgment entered on an award could not be maintained on grounds available by motion to vacate the award before confirmation, or by application in the same suit, if the facts were discovered after judgment.

Fraud in entry of judgment.— See Jones v. Blalock, 31 Ala. 180, wherein the equity of the bill was that defendant in the bill had fraudulently concealed a part of the actual award in having it entered as the judgment of the court, and it was held that the two writings, alleged to have been signed by the arbitrators at the same time and in relation to the same subject-matter, must be construed and considered as constituting the award in determining the equity of the bill.

(II) Extent of Relief — (A) Enforcement of Award — (1) Scope of Pleadings. Upon refusal to set aside an award under a bill filed for such relief, complainant will not be entitled to have judgment upon the award, the bill being filed only for an attack upon the award, and not for its enforcement.[88] And, conversely, under a bill seeking to enforce an award, complainant cannot, at the same time, question its validity.[89] But, on the other hand, if the whole matter is brought before the court by the pleadings, and the award is set aside, the court, having acquired jurisdiction for one purpose, will retain it for a complete settlement of the controversy.[90]

(2) Correction of Award. Where the arbitrators have, as a matter of fact, violated the terms of the submission in coming to their conclusion, though through an error or misapprehension on their part, and the mistake is of such a nature that it may be clearly pointed out, so that relief may be had without infringing upon the functions of the arbitrators, equity has jurisdiction to rectify the error, and will decree performance according to the truth of the fact.[91] Sometimes it uncertain, a court of equity will not disturb an award, especially when the party seeking the relief has paid the amount awarded against him); Beeson v. Elliott, 1 Del. Ch. 368; Hite v. Hite, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 177. But a delay of four and a half months, after the award is signed, before bringing suit to set it aside is not so unreasonable as to deprive the party of the right to relief, where it has gained nothing and the other party has lost nothing thereby, and no other remedy is available. 89. Multifariousness — Effect of answer attacking award. — Emans v. Emans, 14 N. J. Eq. 114, holding that, in a suit to enforce an award, complainant cannot question its validity by asking for relief against matter submitted if the award cannot be enforced; that the fact that defendant, by his answer, contests the validity of the award is not material so long as complainant claims the benefit of it; and, further, that the bill is multifarious.

90. Jurisdiction for complete relief. — See Overby v. Thrasher, 47 Ga. 10.

Where an answer is filed as a cross-bill, defendant denying all the equity set up in the bill and detailing the transactions out of which the original controversy grew, concluding with a prayer that relief be afforded him in the event the court should be of the opinion that the award is, for any cause, invalid, it is held that, upon setting aside the award, the jurisdiction of the court having attached for this purpose, the court will decide the whole controversy and render a final decree, although the issues are legal in their nature and capable of being tried by a court of law. Coons v. Coons, 95 Va. 434, 28 S. E. 885, 64 Am. St. Rep. 804.

Mistake not appearing on face of award. — In equity, although the means of distinguishing the good from the bad part of an award does not appear upon its face, if the evidence shows the character and precise extent of the mistake of law for which it is sought to set aside the award, so that the good may be separated from the bad, the award will be upheld in so far as it is correct. Davis v. Cilley, 44 N. H. 448, 84 Am. Dec. 85. But see Bullock v. Bergman, 46 Md. 270.

The award must be separable, for if the good and bad parts cannot be separated, it cannot be corrected. Bullock v. Bergman, 46 Md. 270. And it is held that if all the matters passed upon are within the submission, and the award is entire upon its face, it cannot be avoided in part and sustained in part. Auriol v. Smith, Turn. & R. 121. See also supra, VI, J, 10.

Correction by consent. — On a bill to set aside an award on the ground of an alleged mistake, defendant in the bill, by his answer, consented that the award be opened and an account taken, if complainants chose, from may appear from the award — as where the arbitrators are required or are intended to decide according to the law, but did not do so[92] — while in other cases the fact of mistake depends upon the admission by the arbitrators of its commission.[93] But proof of the intention by the arbitrators must be clear and explicit.[94] And, although the court may set aside an award for a plain mistake or palpable error of judgment,[95] it cannot, in such a case, put itself in the place of the arbitrators and substitute its judgment for that of the arbitrators, but must set aside the award altogether.[96]

(B) Set-Off. Where a bill to annul a judgment on an award is without equity for this purpose, relief may be granted to prevent the enforcement of the judgment where complainant alleges that the judgment creditor is insolvent and owns no property subject to execution, and is indebted to complainant on account of matters extraneous to the judgment and in a sum in excess thereof. The court will set off the indebtedness to complainant so far as necessary in satisfaction of the judgment.[97]

(III) PARTIES — (A) In General. Ordinarily, only the real parties in interest are proper parties to a suit to set aside an award.[98] But any party who is a real party to the submission, and whose rights are determined by the award, may bring a suit in equity to impeach it.[99]

(B) Arbitrators. Arbitrators are not necessary parties to an action to annul

the beginning, but, at any rate, as to certain matters specified by him, and at the hearing before the commissioner, defendant gave no evidence in respect to the matters specified by him. It was held that defendant was bound by the report which corrected only the mistake suggested by complainants, there appearing no objection to the report except that the account was not opened from the beginning. Scott v. Trents, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 356.

Corruption or mistake induced by fraud.— Where the jurisdiction of equity is invoked for the purpose of setting aside the award on the ground of corruption, or partiality, or a mistake into which the arbitrators had been led by undue means, the court does not correct the award or revise the decision of the arbitrators, but holds it to be against conscience to take advantage of the award in seeking to enforce it, or by using it as a plea in bar of a bill for an accounting. Eaton v. Eaton, 43 N. C. 102.

92. Intention to decide according to law.— Davis v. Cilley, 44 N. H. 448, 84 Am. Dec. 85; Moore v. Luckess, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 160.

98. Attorney.— Where there is nothing to show that a party had ever done anything except as an attorney in the cause, the fact that he, in behalf of his client, made use of arguments before the arbitrator or the court which would not bear the test of legal scrutiny can form no ground for making him a party to a bill for setting aside the award and subjecting him to the expense of defending a chancery suit, and he cannot be made such a party where the only motive is to deprive his client of the benefit of his testimony if it should be needed. Campbell v. Western, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 124.

99. As the state may divest itself of its sovereignty, and, by act of legislature, agree to submit matters in dispute between it and a citizen to arbitration, the proceeding is to be governed by the same rules which are applicable to other cases of arbitration. The remedies between the parties are mutual, and the award may be impeached by either party, in equity, for the same causes for which it might be impeached if the submission had been between individuals. State v. Ward, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 100.

Principal and agent.— A suit to set aside an award cannot be maintained by an agent of one of the parties who entered into the submission, as such agent, naming his principal. The principal is the only proper party, although the rule is that an action at law may be maintained by an agent in his own name, upon a contract made by him, without disclosing his principal. In equity the real party in interest must sue. Sutton v. Mansfield, 47 Conn. 388.

Joinder of plaintiffs — Separate interests affecting jurisdiction.— Where several join in submitting to arbitration and a single award is made, a single bill may be brought by all the parties as parties plaintiff to set aside the award, and those whose proportions of the award are too small to give the court jurisdiction in an action against them to recover on the award are proper parties to the suit. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Bonner Mercantile Co., 44 Fed. 151, 11 L. R. A. 623. See also 56 Fed. 378, 15 U. S. App. 134, 5 C. C. A. 524.

their award,[1] and they are not proper parties when they are not charged with fraud or corruption, and are joined only for the purpose of discovery.[2]

(IV) PLEADING—(A) Allegation of Grounds For Setting Aside. In order to invoke equitable jurisdiction to set aside an award, the grounds upon which the relief is asked should be specifically alleged.[3] And if the bill is based upon a demand which was included in an award and the award is pleaded in bar, complainant must amend his bill if he wishes to rely on matters in avoidance of the award.[4]

(B) Offer to Restore. After receiving payment under an award, in an action to set it aside and for judgment on the original demand, plaintiff should, in his complaint, offer to restore the amount received.[5]

(C) Plea or Answer. In a suit in equity to set aside an award, where the facts do not appear upon the face of the award, they may be ascertained by reference to the answer. But plaintiff is entitled to a full and sufficient answer upon the point upon which relief is invoked.[6] The award alone cannot be pleaded in bar,[7] but must be supported by an answer upon the matters charged in avoidance of the award.[8]

Award assimilated to judgment.— There is no more reason for making the arbitrators parties to such a suit than there would be in making a court a party to an action to set aside its judgment. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Bonner Mercantile Co., 44 Fed. 151, 11 L. R. A. 623 [affirmed in 56 Fed. 378, 15 U. S. App. 134, 5 C. C. A. 524].

Refusal to hear evidence.— A bill to set aside an award, on the ground that the arbitrators refused to hear material evidence, presents no question which can be tried by the court if it does not contain a statement of the rejected evidence, so that the court may determine as to its materiality. Particulars of accident.—So, in order to set aside an award on the ground of accident, the pleading should state in what particular the accident occurred. Cantrell v. Cobb, 43 Ga. 193.

Where error not induced by fraud is not sufficient to justify the setting aside of an award, a complaint which charges that the award is partial and unjust in certain particulars mentioned is bad, because it does not charge that the arbitrator was guilty of corruption or fraud. d. Statutory Relief — (1) Power to Set Aside Award — (A) In General. The statutes giving courts of law summary jurisdiction to enforce awards made in accordance with the statutory requirements usually confer the further power to set such awards aside,[9] and it seems that the statutory authority to accept and enter judgment on the award implies the power to set it aside for sufficient reasons, even though the statute contains no specific provision to that effect.[10]

(B) Extent of Jurisdiction — (1) What Court Can Set Award Aside. An application to vacate an award can be made only in the court to which, in pursuance of the statute, the award is returnable.[11]

(2) Necessity For Award to Be Within Statute. The power to vacate extends only to awards falling within the terms of the statute.[12]

(3) Effect of Stipulation Against Exceptions. Where it is agreed by the parties that neither shall file exceptions to the award, the court will not consider exceptions going to the merits of the award.[13] But such a stipulation will not preclude objections on account of fraud, misconduct, corruption, or excess of authority on the part of the arbitrator.[14]

also Rybott v. Barrell, 2 Eden 131. And though the arbitrators, notwithstanding the award may be defective in point of law, may plead it in bar to a bill for a discovery, it is held that they must support their plea by showing themselves impartial, or the court will give the party a remedy by making the arbitrators pay costs. Lingood v. Croucher, 2 Atk. 395.

Answer without plea sufficient.— Where a bill sets out an award and charges that it is void, it is sufficient that the equities of the bill are denied in the answer, and it is not necessary that the award should be pleaded by plea. Tyler v. Stephens, 7 Ga. 278.

Extent of discretion.— Whether or not an award which is made returnable to a court without suit shall be accepted, rejected, or recommitted by that court is a matter within the discretion of the court, but such discretion is to be exercised judicially, upon consideration of the facts and circumstances of the case, and the court would not be warranted in rejecting a report where no new evidence is offered and it does not appear that any prejudice, bias, or mistake in the proceedings existed; nor will the court be warranted in rejecting or recommitting an award merely because the party is dissatisfied with it, or because the arbitrators are willing that the matter shall be reopened for more full and mature consideration. Long v. Rhodes, 36 Me. 108. But, where any of the grounds specified in the statute are made to appear to the court, the award must be set aside. Herbst v. Hagenaers, 137 N. Y. 290, 33 N. Parties, it is true, may waive many legal rights; but they cannot exact a surrender of juris-

(c) Grounds on Which Relief Granted. Where the statute specifies the the grounds on which the court may exercise its summary jurisdiction to vacate the award, no other grounds than those specified can be taken advantage of in such proceeding.[15] But where the statute does not specify the grounds for which the award may be vacated, it seems that the court will set it aside for any cause which would move a court of chancery to set it aside at common law.[16]

(d) Manner of Raising Objections. Under the English practice no objections could be urged against an award in answer to a motion for an attachment except such as were apparent on its face, and other objections were required to be raised by a distinct motion to set the award aside.[17] Following this practice, it is the diction on the part of the court, nor compel judges to accept a release from a responsibility which the law of the land imposes upon them for public purposes. The approval by the court is not placed at the option of either or both of the parties. The requisition of the law looks to the general purity of the administration of justice, and is plainly designed, if that object demands it, to control the parties." As to the grounds on which an award may be impeached, generally, see supra, IX, B, 1.

Other grounds available in equity.— See supra, IX, B, 2, c, (I), (B), (2).

Matters occurring subsequent to award.— Matters which have occurred subsequent to the making of an award cannot be set up against the award by way of answer to a rule to show cause why judgment should not be entered on the award. Beeber v. Bevan, 80 Ind. 31.

Failure to pursue authority.— An award may be set aside on motion on the ground that some of the matters submitted were not determined (Muldrow v. Norris, 12 Cal. 331), or that the arbitrators awarded upon matters which were not submitted (Leach v. Weeks, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 269).

Intent of parties controlling statute.— A rule of submission provided that the award should be final "except for fraud, accident, or mistake," and that the arbitrators should be guided by the Georgia act of March 5, 1856. The act in question specified no other ground but fraud for which the award might be set aside. It was held that it might nevertheless be set aside for accident or mistake, such being clearly the intention of the parties as evidenced by the submission. South Carolina R. Co. v. Moore, 28 Ga. 398, 417, 73 Am. Dec. 778.

Void award — When set aside.— Where an award is void and nothing can be done upon it without suit, the court will not interfere to set it aside, because such an award is not enforceable in any way. But where a cause is referred by order of nisi prius and the arbitrator has power to order a verdict to be entered for either party, and he makes an award ordering a verdict to be entered — although such award be void, the court will set it aside, for otherwise the party in whose favor the award is made will have judgment upon the verdict without any new proceeding to enforce the award. Doe v. Brown, 5 B. & C. 384, 8 D. & R. 100, 11 E. C. L. 507.

Motion made on slight grounds.— If a motion for setting aside an award be made on slight grounds, the rule will be discharged with costs. Snook v. Hellyer, 2 Chit. 43, 23 Rev. Rep. 741, 18 E. C. L. 493.

Rule nisi must contain grounds of objection.

rule in some of the United States that exceptions to entry of judgment on an award must be confined to matters apparent on its face, and objections dehors the award must be raised by motion to set aside, supported by affidavits.[18] But, under other statutes, the proper method of obtaining relief, whether the objection be apparent on the face of the award or not, is by objecting to the entry of judgment on the award.[19] Whatever be the method provided by the statute it must be followed in order to obtain relief.[20]

(E) Time For Making Application. Where the statute specifies the time within which a party may apply to have an award set aside, the application must be made within the prescribed time, else the right to such statutory relief is waived.[21] But a failure to move in time will not preclude the party, when motion

— A rule nisi to set aside an award must contain the grounds of objection on which the party moving intends to rely, and must also be drawn up on reading the award or a copy of it. Grant v. Hall, 6 Nova Scotia 72; McDonald v. Marmaud, 3 Nova Scotia 79.

In chancery practice an award on a general reference of all matters in dispute is not properly impeached by exceptions, but by cross-motions to confirm it and set it aside. Knox v. Symmonds, 3 Bro. Ch. 358, 1 Ves. Jr. 369.

18. United States — Objections not apparent on motion for judgment.— Ing v. State, 8 Md. 287; Ebert v. Ebert, 5 Md. 353; Cromwell v. Owings, 6 Harr. & J. Request for time to prove objections.— If a party objects to an entry of judgment on an award upon facts dehors the award, and wishes time to make his objections good, he should, by affidavit, show that the facts are probably true and could be proved if reasonable time were given. Singleton v. Mason, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 165.

19. Objections apparent and dehors.—Thus, in Connecticut, it is held that since the passage of the Practice Act, combining equitable and legal jurisdiction, the proper practice in every case, except where the causes for objection do not become known until after the award has been accepted, is to grant relief only upon remonstrance to the acceptance. In re Curtis, 64 Conn. 501, 30 Atl. 769, 42 Am. St. Rep. 200. In Indiana the only mode of attacking the award is by answer to the motion for entry of judgment, alleging some of the grounds of objection specified in the statute. Martin v. Bevan, 58 Ind. 282.

Exception to entry of award on minutes of court.— An exception allowed to an order entering an award on the minutes of the court does not suspend all proceedings, but the court may thereafter entertain a motion for entry of judgment on the award, as the two proceedings are distinct and dependent on different grounds. Walker v. Walker, 25 Ga. 257.

Effect of withdrawing exceptions.— In an action of ejectment, an award is admissible in evidence to support plaintiff's claim, though exceptions thereto have been filed but afterward withdrawn. Roe v. Doe, 46 Ga. 550.

Ex parte affidavits may be read against or in support of objections to the entry of an award as the judgment of the court, especially where they are not objected to in such court; but they are entitled to less weight than testimony taken in court or on notice. Tennant v. Divine, 24 W. Va. 387.

At what term motion to be made.—In Smith v. Cutler, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 589, 25 Am. Dec. 580, it was held that a statute providing that the application should be made at the next term after publication of the award meant the next term provided by law, and not special motion-day. The motion should properly be made at some special term after the publication of the award and before the next regular term, but if made at such term it is in time to save its rights, though, by the practice of the court, it could not then be discussed.

When argument brought on.— In New Jersey it was held that the party had until the last day of the term succeeding the publication of an award to except to it, but that the is made for judgment on the award, from urging such objections to the award as can properly be taken in such proceeding.[22] In England a motion to set aside an award must be made before the last day of the next term after the publication of the award,[23] and a motion to set aside made thereafter was refused, even though both parties consented to an extension of the time.[24] Under special circumstances, however, the court will sometimes entertain an application to set aside an award made after the time limited by statute for making such application;[25] argument ought to be brought on at the second term. Den v. Curtis, 6 N. J. L. 415.

Notice served too late.— Notice of a motion to vacate an award served after the first term of the court following the publication of the award comes too late. Reeves v. McGlochlin, 65 Mo. App. 537.

Where objections too late after entry of judgment.— Where the statute requires objections to the award to be taken at the time application for judgment thereon is made, it is too late to object after judgment has been entered on the award. Gaines v. Clark, 23 Minn. 64; Brace v. Stacy, 56 Wis. 148, 14 N. W. 51. But, under Ind. Rev. Stat. (1838), p. 371, an award on which a justice of the peace had entered judgment could be impeached, before the justice, within ten days from the rendition of the judgment. Payne v. Miller, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 178.

Motion concurrently with action to enforce. — In Canada it has been held that a proceeding to vacate an award may go on concurrently with an action to enforce it. Huyck v. Wilson, 18 Ont. Pr. 44. But, where an action on the award is pending, another court will refuse to vacate the award on grounds which could be set up in defense to such action. Smith v. George, 12 U. C. Q. B. 370.

Delay in filing affidavits.— The court to which an award is returned is not bound, on a motion to set it aside, to receive reasons filed, or affidavits taken at so late a period that they could not be answered and the witnesses could not be cross-examined, unless reasons for the delay are shown. Ford v. Potts, 6 N. J. L. 388.

22. Objections on motion for judgment.— Shores v. Bowen, 44 Mo. 396; Hinkle v. Harris, 34 Mo. App. 223; Elmendorf v. Harris, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 516; Montgomery County v. Carey, 1 Ohio St. 463.

Court may refuse to enforce award.— In England it has been held that, although an award cannot be set aside after the time limited by statute has elapsed, yet, where there is a palpable objection upon the face of the award, the court may refuse to enforce it. Where submission afterward made rule of court.— Where a rule nisi to set aside an award had been granted on the last day but one of the term, but was stayed in the office because the submission had not been made a rule of court, of which it appeared the parties were aware at the time of making the motion, the court refused in the following term — the submission having been meanwhile made a rule of court — to antedate the latter rule as of the day when the motion to set aside the award was made, and to draw up the rule to set aside the award, on reading the rule making the submission a rule of court, although it appeared that the party moving had no copy of the submission, which was in the hands of the opposite party, who had refused to make it a rule of court in time. Misconduct of party.— Where, from the misconduct of one of the parties, the submisbut the party seeking such indulgence must present an ample excuse for his failure to apply sooner.[26]

(F) Form and Sufficiency of Motion or Exception — (1) In General. The manner in which objections to an award shall be taken is usually pointed out by statute, and the statutory requirements must be complied with.[27]

(2) Necessity For Specific Allegations. It is upon the party objecting to the award to show affirmatively why it should not be enforced against him,[28] and he must state specifically the facts on which his objections are based — general averments are insufficient.[29] Thus, it is not enough to allege generally that the sion could not be made a rule of court so as to enable the opposite party to make it a rule of court before the last day but one of the term next after the award, the time for a motion to set it aside was enlarged until the following term. In re Perring, 3 Dowl. P. C. 98.

What operates as extension of time.— In Harvey v. Shelton, 7 Beav. 455, 13 L. J. Ch. 466, a motion was made to dismiss a bill in pursuance of an award. It came on upon the last day, to which, under the statute, an application could be made to set aside the award. Respondent then made objections to the award, and the motion was ordered to stand over, with liberty for respondent to give notice of motion to dispute the award. It was held that this operated as an extension of time.

26. Newly-discovered fraud.— Where, after the period for setting aside an award, a party applies to set it aside on the ground of newly-discovered fraud, he is bound to show that it is a new discovery, and that he could not, with due diligence, have made such discovery before. Auriol v. Smith, Turn. & R. 121. But see Reynolds v. Askew, 5 Dowl. P. C. 682, W. W. & D. 366.

Insufficient excuse.— The fact that during several months a party had been in bad health and passed one month abroad for that reason; and an affidavit of his physician stated that during another of the months he was unfit to attend to any business, does not furnish a sufficient excuse to take the case out of the rule requiring the application to be made before the last day of the next term. Guadinao v. Brown, 2 Jur. N. S. 358, 4 Wkly. Rep. 456. In Emet v. Ogden, 7 Bing. 258, 9 L. J. C. P. O. S. 83, 20 E. C. L. 121, it was held that it was not a sufficient excuse that plaintiff had been misled by a statement of defendant that the latter intended to move to set the award aside. Plaintiff ought not to have relied on defendant, but should have proceeded himself.

27. See the statutes.

What equivalent to motion.— Where the papers containing the submission and award were destroyed, and no opportunity apparently afforded defendant to move to vacate the award, it was held that defendant's answer to a suit on the award might well be treated as in the nature of such motion, or as objections upon a motion to confirm. Hyeronimus v. Allison, 52 Mo. 102.

What equivalent to "complaint."— Where a submission to arbitration has been made a rule of the chancery court, service of a notice of motion to set aside the award is a complaint, within the meaning of 9 & 10 Wm. III, c. 15. In re Huddersfield, L. R. 17 Eq. 476, L. R. 10 Ch. 92, 44 L. J. Ch. 96, 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 466, 23 Wkly. Rep. 100.

Necessity for oath.— Where the statute provides that the objections shall be under oath, an objection not sworn to will be insufficient. Foster v. Collier, 76 Ga. 692; Chisolm v. Cothran, 40 Ga. 273; Montgomery County v. Carey, 1 Ohio St. 463.

Need not be signed by counsel.— Where the record shows that exceptions to an award were filed in the case "by the counsel for the defendant," it is sufficient to show that they were genuine though they were not signed by counsel or entitled as of the case. Johnston v. George, 6 Md. 452.

Demurrer to exceptions.— Exceptions to an award which are not well pleaded may be attacked by demurrer. Fowler v. Jackson, 86 Ga. 337, 12 S. E. 811; Harper v. Pike County Road Com'rs, 52 Ga. 659; Chisolm v. Cothran, 40 Ga. 273.

28. Snodgrass v. Snodgrass, 32 Ind. 406, wherein it was held not to be sufficient merely to object to a motion for judgment on the award, and to except to the ruling sustaining such motion.

29. General averments insufficient.— McMillan v. Allen, 98 Ga. 405, 25 S. E. 505; Mitchell v. Brunswick, 41 Ga. 370; Sharp v. Loyless, 39 Ga. 678; Shaifer v. Baker, 38 Ga. 135; Bowden v. Crow, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 591, 21 S. W. 612; Alexander v. Mulhall, 1 Tex. L. 529; Bedington v. Southall, 4 Price 232.

A notice of motion in the chancery division to set aside an award should specify the grounds of objection in analogy to the practice in the courts of law. An objection on "good grounds" is insufficient. Mercier v. Pepperell, 19 Ch. D. 58, 51 L. J. Ch. 63, 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 609, 30 Wkly. Rep. 228.

Objections too general.— In Bradbee v. Christ's Hospital, 2 Dowl. N. S. 164, 11 L. J. C. P. 209, 4 M. & G. 714, 5 Scott N. R. 79, 43 E. C. L. 368, the following objections to an award were held to be too general: "That the facts stated by the arbitrator on the face of his award are not sufficient to enable the court to decide the points of law thereby inarbitrator was guilty of fraud, partiality, or misconduct,[30] that he failed to pursue his authority,[31] that the award was contrary to the evidence,[32] or was the result of a mistake.[33] But the fact that one ground of objection is not well pleaded will not preclude the party from relying on other grounds which are properly presented.[34]

(3) Necessity to Allege All Objections. All objections intended to be relied on must be presented,[35] and the party cannot renew his applicatiou on fresh grounds after his former objections have been overruled.[36]

(G) Right to Jury Trial. Ordinarily, neither party has a right to a jury trial tended to be raised, or the several points of law which he was requested by the defendant to raise;" "that the arbitrator has not by his said award raised the points which, on the part of the plaintiff, he was requested to raise;" "that the award is not finally certain and mutually binding, because it raises points for the opinion of the court which the arbitrator was not requested by either party to raise or state on the face of his award."

Amendment.— It seems that a defective motion to set aside an award may be amended. Sharp v. Loyless, 39 Ga. 678; Whatley v. Morland, 2 C. & M. 347, 2 Dowl. P. C. 249, 3 L. J. Exch. 58, 4 Tyrw. 255.

Refusal to compel production of evidence. — Where a party seeks to set aside an award because of misconduct of the arbitrators in refusing to compel production of certain books in evidence "as to be subject to his examination," but the books were actually produced, it is his duty to state plainly why he could not examine them. Newman v. Labeaume, 9 Mo. 30, 37.

An affidavit to set aside an award on the ground that the arbitrator had refused to examine a material witness should state what reason, if any, he gave for refusing to hear the witness. Bradley v. Ibbetson, 2 L. M. & P. 583.

Material averments.— Where an answer to a motion for entry of judgment on an award set forth, as particulars of partiality and misbehavior, that one arbitrator's whole course and manner was one of deep interest in the success of a party, that he argued his case during the hearing, that on his own motion he stopped witnesses of the other party from testifying, that he controlled and consulted alone with one arbitrator and ignored the other, contemptuously insinuating that he was attorney for the other party, it was held that these were material averments tending to show a valid reason for not entering judgment, and that it was error to strike them from the answer. Bash v. Christian, 77 Ind. 290.

31. Failure to pursue authority.— Spencer v. Curtis, 57 Ind. 221; Allenby v. Proudlock, 4 Dowl. P. C. 54, 1 Hurl. & W. 357. But see Dunn v. Walters, 1 Dowl. N. S. 626, 11 L. J. Exch. 188, 9 M. & W. 293, wherein it was held that an objection that the arbitrator has not awarded on a matter in difference submitted to him was sufficiently specific.

Affidavits showing excess of authority.— Where a rule is obtained to set aside an award on the ground "that the arbitrator has exceeded his authority," the affidavits should state specifically in what points the excess consists. Rawsthorn v. Arnold, 6 B. & C. 629, 9 D. & R. 556, 5 L. J. K. B. O. S. 270, 13 E. C. L. 284; Staple v. Hey, 1 Dowl. & L. 711, 8 Jur. 315, 13 L. J. Q. B. 60.

32. Georgia — Award contrary to evidence. —Exceptions to an award on the ground that it is contrary to the evidence must set forth all the evidence produced before the arbitrators, and allege that it is all correctly stated. Fowler v. Jackson, 86 Ga. 337, 12 S. E. 811; Foster v. Collier, 76 Ga. 692; Harper v. Pike County Road Com'rs, 52 Ga. 659; Overby v. Thrasher, 47 Ga. 10; Akridge v. Patillo, 44 Ga. 585; Tomlinson v. Hardwick, 41 Ga. 547; Anderson v. Taylor, 41 Ga. 10.

Brief filed by other party.— The brief of evidence filed with exceptions to an award being found by the jury to be incorrect, another brief, filed by the opposite party and admitted by him to be correct, will stand in lieu of the former for all purposes. Right to amend.—Although a motion to set aside an award made at the proper term may be granted at a subsequent term, yet if the moving party does not ask to amend before proceeding with the motion as made, a judgment against him is final. Sharp v. Loyless, 39 Ga. 678.

on the issues raised on a motion to set aside an award, or on exceptions to entry of judgment thereon.[37] But it has been held that, where the party objects on the ground that he never authorized the arbitration, he is entitled to a jury trial on that issue.[38]

(H) Effect of Vacating. Where the award is set aside, the parties are remitted to their original rights.[39]

(I) Appeals — (1) FROM JUDGMENT ON AWARD — (a) RIGHT TO APPEAL — aa. In General. In the absence of statutory authority permitting such procedure, there can be no appellate review of an award.[40] Where, however, an award has been entered as the judgment of a court under statutory authority to that effect, an appeal or writ of error will usually lie to such a judgment.[41] But for such remedy

In Georgia the statute provided that the court shall order a special jury to try the issues in the manner provided for the trial of appeals. Ga. Code, §§ 4054, 4055. But questions as to whether the award is legal are for the court and not the jury. Harper v. Pike County Road Com'rs, 52 Ga. 659; Overby v. Thrasher, 47 Ga. 10; Cobb v. Morris, 40 Ga. 671.

In Texas, if it is sought to impeach an award made in a pending suit, on the ground of fraud or partiality in the arbitrators, these questions should be submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions from the court, as well as the questions involving the merits of the controversy, so that, if the jury find the award invalid, they may decide upon the merits. Bowden v. Crow, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 591, 21 S. W. 612.

38. Boyden v. Lamb, 152 Mass. 416, 419, 25 N. E. 609, wherein the court said: "A party by submitting to an arbitration waives his right to a trial by jury as to the matters in controversy, and cannot have the decision of the arbitrators reviewed and revised when they have lawfully proceeded to decide and pass upon them. This would be to defeat the very object of the statute. But when there is an inquiry whether he has ever assented to an agreement for a submission,— as where he contends that the alleged signature of his name is a forgery, or that the person assuming to act as his agent or attorney had no authority thus to act,— it by no means follows that this pure question of fact can be determined by the court without affording him an opportunity, if he so desires, of having it passed upon by a jury. Arbitration is a substitution, by consent of parties, of another tribunal for those provided by the ordinary processes of law; but that such a substitution should be established, the consent of parties thereto should be proved in the usual way."

40. In the absence of statute.— Boyd v. Stubbs, 7 Watts (Pa.) 29; Wilson v. Colwell, 3 Watts (Pa.) 212. In Shirk v. Trainer, 20 Ill. 301, 302, where an award was not one over which a justice of the peace was given jurisdiction by statute, it was held that the circuit court could not obtain jurisdiction thereof by appeal merely because a justice had prepared the submission. The court said: "There is no authority given to appeal from the award of arbitrators; and the circuit court can derive jurisdiction to review a decision of an inferior court by appeal or certiorari, and has no power to review the decision of arbitrators by either of these modes."

Controversy submitted to judges as arbitrators.— See supra, I, A, 1, note 2.

Louisiana — Constitutional provision not applicable to arbitrations.—La. Const. (1812), art. 4, § 2, giving the right of appeal, was held to refer only to inferior courts established for general purposes by the legislature, and not to apply where the parties chose their own judges under the law relative to arbitrations. Davis v. Leeds, 7 La. 471.

Michigan — When error does not lie.— Mich. Comp. Laws, § 6897, provides that any party complaining of an award may move the court designated in the submission to vacate the award upon certain grounds. Section 6903 provides that the record of a judgment on an award shall recite the submission and hearing before the arbitrators, their award, the proceedings of the court thereon in modifying or confirming the award, and the judgment of the court for the recovery of the debt or damages awarded. It was held that error did not lie on a judgment upon an award rendered by arbitrators under a statutory submission, where the same was in due form and the award was one that could have been lawfully made. Cooper v. Andrews, 44 Mich. 94, 6 N. W. 92.

Ohio — Not a "civil action."— Where the award was filed in the court of common pleas, exceptions thereto overruled and judgment entered thereon, it was held that the case was not appealable under a statute authorizing an appeal in a "civil action." Moore v. Boyer, 42 Ohio St. 312.

to be available, the arbitration must conform substantially in all respects to the statutory requirements.[42]

bb. Effect of Stipulation Not to Appeal. The parties may stipulate in the submission that neither shall appeal, and such agreement is usually regarded as binding, so far as relates to the merits;[43] but courts cannot be ousted of their proper jurisdiction by agreement of the parties, and such a stipulation will not prevent the court appealed to from taking jurisdiction to prevent a miscarriage of justice.[44]

(b) WHAT CONSIDERED BY APPELLATE COURT — aa. In General. Where the statute provides for the review of the judgment on certain specified grounds only, the courts are precluded from reviewing the judgment except for the causes specified in the statute.[45]

bb. Objections Not Apparent From Record. Objections to an award which are not jurisdictional in their nature will not be considered by the appellate court unless they appear from the record,[46] and it will be presumed that the rulings and Writ of error coram nobis.— A controversy was submitted to arbitration with the agreement that judgment be entered by the clerk of the district court in vacation. On writ of error coram nobis, it was held that, since the office of such writ in the district court was to review errors of fact in its own judgment, the writ would not lie to review an award before the entry of judgment. McKinney v. Western Stage Co., 4 Iowa 420.

Who not necessary parties to appeal.— Where an award, in pursuance of the submission, contained a provision that, out of the amount found for plaintiffs, their counsel fees should be deducted and paid directly to the attorneys by defendants, it was held that such attorneys were not necessary parties to an appeal from the judgment entered on the award. Cases appended to writ of error.— The supreme court will not look into the transcripts of cases appended to a writ of error taken upon a judgment on the award of arbitrators, unless it appears from the submission that these particular cases were referred. Lamar v. Nicholson, 7 Port. (Ala.) 158.

Affidavits part of judgment-roll.— Where it is provided by statute that, on an appeal from a judgment entered on an award, certified copies of the original affidavit upon which any application in relation to such award was founded, and all other affidavits and papers relating to such application, shall form a part of the record of the judgment, such affidavits are a part of the judgment-roll. Dundon v. Starin, 19 Wis. 261.

Validity at common-law not considered.— On appeal from a judgment entered on a statutory award which is held to be invalid because of non-compliance with mandatory provisions of the statute, the question of the validity of the award at common law will not be considered, the only question before the court being whether the judgment was rightly entered. Massachusetts — Should present case by exceptions.— A party appealing from the denial of a motion for judgment on an award of arbitrators should present his case by exceptions, showing the ground on which the motion was denied. Giles v. Royal Ins. Co., (Mass. 1901) 60 N. E. 786.

But, in Alabama, such an order is regarded as interlocutory and not appealable. Dudley v. Farris, 79 Ala. 187.

(3) Appeal From Order Setting Award Aside. An order setting aside an award made upon a submission in pais is usually appealable,[51] but where, under the statute, an award is not so far a finality that it can be enforced in any way at all until judgment has been entered thereon by the court, an order setting it aside is not such a final order as will sustain an appeal.[52]

(4) Appeal From Refusal to Set Award Aside. In jurisdictions where an appeal lies from an order refusing to vacate an award,[53] the appellate court, on reversing such order, will set aside the award and remand the cause as in the case of a reversal of a final judgment.[54] The appellate court will consider only such questions as are brought before it by the record.[55]

51. Usually appealable.— Tennant v. Divine, 24 W. Va. 387, 389, wherein the court said: "When an award made in a pending case, is set aside, the action still remains in court for further proceedings, and a final judgment may be had therein without a new action. But where the submission is in pais, upon an agreement of the parties that the award shall be made the judgment of the court, if the court sets aside the award, nothing remains in court and no further proceedings can be had therein without resorting to a new action either on the original cause of action or the agreement for submission. The judgment of the court setting aside the award and discharging the rule in such case is final so far as that particular proceeding is concerned. I am, therefore, of opinion that the order complained of in this case is such a final judgment as entitles the plaintiff to a writ of error to this Court." See also Donovan v. Owen, 10 La. Ann. 463.

Facts must appear of record.—Where there is no showing by bill of exceptions or otherwise upon what facts the court acted in setting aside the award, the supreme court will not review its rulings. Hamble v. Owen, 20 Iowa 70; Taylor v. Smith, 93 Mich. 160, 52 N. W. 1118.

Ultimate facts.— An appellate court will not weigh or examine testimony adduced either to sustain or impeach the award, but will confine its rulings to questions of law arising upon the facts shown; hence, to obtain a review, the ultimate facts must be found and reported in the bill of exceptions, and merely to report the testimony and affidavits considered below is insufficient. Nolan v. Colorado, etc., Min. Co., 63 Fed. 930, 27 U. S. App. 427, 12 C. C. A. 585.

Massachusetts — Matter of law apparent of record.— An appeal from an order setting aside an award must be from a "matter of law apparent on the record;" and where, upon an appeal from a judgment of the superior court in the matter of an award of arbitrators, the record does not show the grounds on which the superior court acted in ordering an award to be set aside, it cannot be held that the grounds were insufficient in law. Bent v. Erie Tel., etc., Co., 144 Mass. 165, 10 N. E. 778.

Pennsylvania — Writ of error.— The supreme court, having no authority to review evidence on a writ of error, will not review an order of the court of common pleas setting aside an award under the Pennsylvania act of 1705, in which it was stated that judgment for the sum awarded would not be given "because it was admitted that there were errors which would reduce the award." From this it appeared that the decision of the lower court did not altogether rest on matters of law. Gratz v. Phillips, 14 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 144.

Entry of judgment in appellate court.— Where an order setting aside an award is reversed on appeal, the appellate court may itself enter judgment on the award. State v. Stewart, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 456; Taylor v. Smith, 93 Mich. 160, 52 N. W. 1118; Bergh v. Pfeiffer, Lalor (N. Y.) 110.

Nebraska — Motion for new trial not necessary.— Where a motion to set aside an award is overruled, and judgment entered on the award over the objection and exception of the party attacking it, the decision of the district court on such motion may be reviewed upon error without a motion for a new trial having first been made in the district court. Graves v. Scoville, 17 Nebr. 593, 24 N. W. 222.

New Jersey — Right to bill of exceptions.— On the discharge of a motion to set aside an award, the party is entitled to a bill of exceptions to the decision of the court on the sufficiency of the objection to the award. It is not necessary that there should be a trial of a cause in order to entitle a party to a bill of exceptions. Ford v. Potts, 6 N. J. L. 388.

New York — Writ of error.— In New York, if the general term affirms the judgment of the special term refusing to grant an order vacating an award, an appeal will not lie to the court of appeals from the judgment of the special term, but the remedy, if any, is by writ of error. (II) Power to Correct or Modify Award. In the absence of statutory authority, the court to which an award is returned has no power to modify or correct it.[56] By some statutes such power is given,[57] but extends only to the cases specified in the statute.[58]

(III) Power to Recommit Award— (A) In General. In the absence of any statute to the contrary, the authority of the arbitrators terminates with the execution of their award,[59] and the court has no power to recommit the matter to the arbitrators without the consent of the parties.[60] But such power is now very commonly given by statute.[61]

(B) Discretion of Court. The court having control of the award is, usually, given discretionary power over the question of recommittal;[62] but such discretion

Refusal of arbitrator to receive the resubmission.—After an award has been made and set aside it is competent for one of the arbitrators to withdraw before there has been any resubmission, and, in such case, a second award made by the other arbitrators, against the objection of one of the parties, is invalid. is not arbitrary and must be exercised in accordance with fixed rules of law and upon consideration of the facts and circumstances of the case.[63]

(c) Grounds For Recommittal — (1) In General. The causes for which an award may be recommitted depend, to a considerable extent, upon the terms of the statutes.[64] In general, however, the award may be sent back for more specific findings,[65] to allow the arbitrators to reconsider and amend a defective part,[66] or to pass upon matters embraced in the submission, but omitted from the award.[67] But where an award was void because partly founded on matters outside the submission, the court refused to recommit it.[68] And where the ground of objection consisted in the partiality of one of the arbitrators, it was held that a recommittal to the same arbitrators was improper.[69]

(2) For Correction of Mistakes. The most frequent ground of recommit tal is for the correction of informalities or clerical mistakes.[70] But the mistake must be apparent on the face of the award or be admitted by the arbitrators,[71] and mere errors of judgment will not, ordinarily, furnish grounds for recommital.[72]

(3) For Revision of Whole Case. Under some statutes the award may be recommitted for reëxamination of the whole case.[73]

(4) Newly-Discovered Evidence. Under some statutes, newly-discovered evidence is a sufficient reason for recommitting the award.[74]

(d) Practice After Recommittal. Where an award is recommitted generally, the authority of the arbitrators is as extensive as it was under the original submission.[75] A rehearing need not be granted where not necessary to accomplish

63. Discretion not arbitrary.— Depew v. Davis, 2 Greene (Iowa) 260; Long v. Rhodes, 36 Me. 108.

64. Wishes of party — Willingness of arbitrators.— The wishes of one of the parties who is dissatisfied with the award, or the willingness of the arbitrators to have the case opened and more fully considered, furnish no ground for recommitting the award. Long v. Rhodes, 36 Me. 108.

In England the court cannot send back an award to the arbitrator except for a cause for which the award might be set aside. Oldfield v. Price, 6 C. B. N. S. 539, 95 E. C. L. 539.

66. To amend.— In re Aitken, 3 Jur. N. S. 1296.

67. To pass upon matters submitted but omitted from award.— Boardman v. England, 6 Mass. 70; Kleine v. Catara, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 61, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,869. In Paine v. Paine, 15 Gray (Mass.) 299, an award was recommitted to the arbitrator to take a required account and render such award final.

Matter not brought before arbitrator.— An application to remit an award upon a reference of all matters in difference, on the ground that the arbitrator had omitted to decide upon a cross-claim, was refused on the ground that it did not appear that the matter had been brought before the arbitrator. the purpose for which the award was recommitted.[76] Having made their new award,[77] the arbitrators may return it to the term during which they agree upon it,[78] and it seems to be no objection that the time of such return is outside the time originally limited in the submission.[79]

(E) Appeal From Order of Recommittal. In some jurisdictions it is held that the exercise of discretion by the court in recommitting, or refusing to recommit, the award, will not be reviewed;[80] but in Iowa an appeal lies from such order.[81]

X. PERFORMANCE OF AWARD.

A. Necessity For, as Condition Precedent to Enforcement — 1. Award Directing Concurrent or Dependent Acts. Where the duties imposed upon one party by an award are to be performed simultaneously with, or as a condition precedent to, those required of the other party,[82] the former cannot enforce the award against the latter until he has performed or offered to perform on his own part.[83] Thus, a performance or offer to perform is a condition precedent to 76. Rehearing.—Blood v. Robinson, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 389; Bird v. Penrice, 9 L. J. Exch. 257, 6 M. & W. 754.

Need not give notice.— Where the attorneys of the parties agreed verbally that the arbitrator should amend a defect in his award, and thereafter one of the attorneys obtained an order for a remission to the arbitrator, it was held that the arbitrator was not bound to give notice to the parties before altering his award, or to recite therein the order of court. Baker v. Hunter, 4 Dowl. & L. 696, 16 L. J. Exch. 203, 16 M. & W. 672.

77. Sufficiency of new award.— Where an award was sent back on one point only, it was held that the arbitrator adopted the proper course in making a new award, repeating the old adjudication as to the matters not referred back, and adjudicating on the matters remitted for consideration. Johnson v. Latham, 20 L. J. Q. B. 236, 2 L. M. & P. 205.

Annexing evidence and stating grounds on which award made.— Where an award was recommitted generally, and the arbitrator, understanding from the counsel of the respective parties that the object of the recommitment was to ascertain the exact claims made by one of the parties, for that purpose annexed to his award the original papers constituting the evidence of the only claims which were made and insisted on by the plaintiffs' counsel in his closing argument, and also stated the grounds upon which he had made the award; it was held that the arbitrator had not thereby exceeded his authority. French v. Richardson, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 450.

79. Sperry v. Ricker, 4 Allen (Mass.) 17. And see Henley v. Menefee, 10 W. Va. 771.

May enlarge time.— On recommitting an award a justice may enlarge the time for reporting. Eastman v. Burleigh, 2 N. H. 484.

80. Walker v. Sanborn, 8 Me. 288; Cumberland v. North Yarmouth, 4 Me. 459.

In Louisiana, where the court refused to homologate an award and referred it back to the arbitrators, it was held that the judgment recommitting the award was not final, and no appeal would lie. Bird v. Laycock, 7 La. Ann. 171.

81. Brown v. Harper, 54 Iowa 546, 6 N. W. 747; Depew v. Davis, 2 Greene (Iowa) 260.

Second award after appeal taken.— Where an order of recommittal is superseded upon appeal, of which the arbitrators have notice, and after service on them of a writ of injunction, a second award is a nullity which can hurt or injure no one, and cannot be made the basis of an action for damages against the arbitrators. Jones v. Brown, 54 Iowa 74, 6 N. W. 140, 37 Am. Rep. 185.

enforcement where the award directs an exchange of lots by conveyances between the parties[84] or the execution of mutual releases.[85] But where performance is prevented by the refusal of the other party to abide by the award, this is sufficient to justify enforcement even though the party seeking it has not himself performed his part.[86]

As to averring performance in pleading the award see infra, XI, B, 6; XI, C, 3.

Performance of condition precedent.— In Gray v. Reed, 65 Vt. 178, 26 Atl. 526, it was held that where an award directed that, after one party had done certain acts, then the other party should deliver to him certain property, the latter was not obliged to do anything until the former had performed on his part; that title to the property to be delivered did not pass until after such performance, and that the neglect or refusal of the former to perform left the latter free to dispose of such property as he might see fit. See also Com. v. Pejepscut, 7 Mass. 399.

Payment made in consideration of a release.— An award, pursuant to a submission to ascertain the price to be paid for land of one party upon which the other had a claim — the submission being made in consideration of an agreement to release — was held not enforceable by action until a tender of the release had been made, the submission being construed to mean that defendant would pay the award upon that consideration, and not merely in consideration of an agreement to release. Portland v. Brown, 43 Me. 223.

Prospective award.— If, under the award, a benefit is to accrue, or a right be made to depend upon the performance of a condition, the party is not entitled to such benefit or right unless he has performed the award on his part. Skillings v. Coolidge, 14 Mass. 43.

Damages to be paid within specified time.— Where an award requires certain damages to be paid within a specified time, if the party fail to pay or offer to pay such damages within the time specified, he cannot rely upon the award. Brigham v. Holmes, 14 Allen (Mass.) 184.

Void condition — Performance not necessary.— Where the award of the arbitrators contained a void condition, it was held that a party was entitled to recover notwithstanding such condition had not been performed. Foster v. Durant, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 544; New York v. Butler, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 325, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 446. But see Com. v. Pejepscut, 7 Mass. 399.

86. Refusal to abide award.— Jesse v. Cater, 28 Ala. 475; Giles Lithographic, etc., Co. v. Recamier Mfg. Co., 14 Daly (N. Y.) 475; Jones v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 143 Pa. St. 374, 22 Atl. 883. And see Preston v. Whitcomb, 11 Vt. 47.

Refusal to perform one of several orders.— In Bayne v. Morris, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 97, 17 L. ed. 495, it was held that where an award declared that one party should pay to the other a certain sum on one day specified, another sum on another day specified, and that to secure the payment he should give a bond in a penal sum, and he refused to do any of the things awarded, an action of debt would lie against him, even though the time when both sums of money were awarded to be paid had not yet arrived. The right of action became perfect on the party's refusal to give the bond.

Performance excused in part.— Where a party is directed by the award to do several independent acts as a condition precedent to performance by the other, the fact that the latter prevents the doing of one of the specified acts will excuse performance to that extent, but not as to the other acts. Gray v. Reed, 65 Vt. 178, 26 Atl. 526.

What not a refusal to abide.— Plaintiff and defendant covenanted with each other that certain arbitrators should fix the value of defendant's land, as a consideration for a conveyance to plaintiff. The arbitrators reported their appraisement, and defendant immediately declared in their hearing and in the hearing of plaintiff that he would "never let the land go for that price." It was held that such declaration did not authorize plaintiff to maintain an action against defendant on his covenant without first tendering the appraised value of the land and demanding conveyance thereof. Pomroy v. Gold, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 500.

Time to consider.— Where a landowner enters into an agreement for arbitration for the assessment of damages for a railroad right of way, and, after the award has been made, the company tenders a deed for his signature, he is entitled to a reasonable time to advise himself as to whether the deed is in accordance with the decision of the arbitrators; and his refusal to sign it, accompanied, however, by the statement that he will sign it if it is

2. Where Distinct and Independent Acts Directed. Where the acts to be performed by the parties are distinct and independent, the one not being a condition precedent to the other, the failure of a party to perform the duties required of him will not prevent the enforcement of the award in his favor.[87] In such case the parties have mutual remedies upon the promise to perform the award.[88] In former times a distinction was drawn between parol submissions and submissions under seal, requiring performance as a condition precedent in the former case, but not in the latter;[89] and a distinction was also made between awards which merged the original cause of action and those which did not;[90] but these distinctions are no longer of any importance.[91] in accordance with the said decision, cannot be construed into a refusal to abide by the award. Odum v. Rutledge, etc., R. Co., 94 Ala. 488, 10 So. 222.

Award of sum of money and mutual releases.— Arbitrators having awarded a sum of money and mutual releases between the parties, a tender of a release is not necessary before bringing action for the money. Dudley v. Thomas, 23 Cal. 365.

Failure to perform stipulation to dismiss suit.— Where parties entered into an agreement of submission to arbitration for the purpose of settling matters involved in a pending suit, with an agreement that the suit should be dismissed immediately, it was held that the failure to dismiss the suit was no objection to an action by plaintiff therein to recover on the award, because the stipulation as to the dismissal of the suit was not a condition precedent which affected the validity of the award; the award or the performance of it was not made by the terms of the submission to depend upon the prior dismissal of the suit, but the submission itself was absolute and unconditional. It was held that the party's remedy was for the breach of his promise or covenant, and it was not proper, after defendant had agreed to submit and had gone into the arbitration, and when the award was against him, to turn around and say he was not bound by it, because his adversary had not performed some other stipulation which he had undertaken to do before the award was made. Shockey v. Glasford, 6 Dana (Ky.) 9.

Failure to redeliver property.— An award providing that the vendor retain the property sold and pay to the vendee a specified sum of money does not make redelivery of the property in the hands of the vendee a condition precedent to recovering the amount awarded to him. The value of property retained by the vendee would be a proper deduction from the amount awarded in a suit therefor. Mulligan v. Perry, 64 Ga. 567.

89. Submissions parol and under seal.— See Armstrong v. Masten, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 189; U. S. v. Ames, 1 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 76, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,441.

90. As to awards operating as merger.— Allen v. Milner, 2 Cr. & J. 47, 1 L. J. Exch. 7, 2 Tyrw. 113; Roulstone v. Alliance Ins. Co., 4 Ir. R. C. L. 547. In Freeman v. Bernard, 1 Ld. Raym. 247, Lord Holt said: "Where an award creates a new duty instead of that which was in controversy, the party has a remedy for it upon the award; therefore, if a party resort to demand that which was referred and submitted, the arbitrament is a good bar against such action. Contra, Where an award does not create a new duty but only extinguishes the old duty by a release of the action."

91. No distinction between parol and sealed submission.— An award under a parol submission constitutes as perfect a bar, though

B. Necessity For Demand.[92] Where no demand is required by the submission, and the award is for the payment of money unconditionally, it becomes payable without demand upon the taking effect of the award,[93] and an action on the bond may be brought immediately.[94] But it has also been held that, in order to obtain a judgment on the award, performance must be demanded;[95] and it seems that a demand was always necessary before an attachment for non-performance would be granted.[96]

C. Time of Performance. Where an award ordering the doing of a certain act does not specify the time of performance, it seems that a reasonable time will be implied,[97] though it is at least questionable whether such an award should not be held void for uncertainty.[98]

D. Sufficiency of Performance — 1. In General. To constitute a valid performance, the party must comply with the directions of the award as far as possible and in the manner provided,[99] and a refusal to perform any part of the not performed, as an award under a submission by bond. Jessiman v. Haverhill, etc., Iron Manufactory, 1 N. H. 68; Armstrong v. Masten, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 189.

Award as merger of original debt.— In Brazill v. Isham, 12 N. Y. 9, the court considered the theory on which the English cases were founded, and decided that at the present day every valid award substituted new rights and corresponding obligations in place of those arising out of the subject submitted; and, consequently, an award of a sum of money in discharge of a debt merges the original cause of action as effectually as any other award. To same effect see Armstrong v. Masten, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 189. And for a full discussion of the effect of an award as a merger see supra, IX, A, 2.

England.— Furser v. Prowd, Cro. Jac. 423; Rodham v. Stroher, 3 Keb. 830.

Award for payment of costs.— If there is an award that one of the parties pay the costs of suit in five days, the party awarded to pay the costs is not to wait until the taxed bill is presented to him. Bishop v. Woodruff, 3 N. J. L. 110. See also Candler v. Fuller, Willes 62.

Where the time and place of payment are specified, it is the duty of the party who is to make the payment to be present ready to tender the amount. Doyley v. Burton, 1 Ld. Raym. 533.

Penalty stipulated.—The mere delay to make payment of the amount of an award when the debtor has taken no steps to set it aside and has not denied its obligatory force, and when no formal demand upon him to enforce it has been made, will not subject the debtor to the payment of the stipulated penalty in addition to the amount of the award. Bodett v. Lees, 12 La. Ann. 761.

94. Immediate action on bond.— Plummer v. Morrill, 48 Me. 184.

95. Demand before judgment on award.— Ex p. Wallis, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 581; Knight v. Carey, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 39. So, in Connecticut, it has been held that where an award of damages does not specify any time for payment, nor make the payment thereof conditional upon the performance of any act, the amount is payable on demand; that in such case there is no distinction between an award and a note of hand which does not specify when the money is payable. Parmelee v. Allen, 32 Conn. 115.

96. Demand before attachment.— See infra, XI, E, 1, f, (I).

97. Reasonable time implied.— Freeman v. Bernard, 1 Salk. 69. Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 304. In Blackett v. Bates, L. R. 1 Ch. 117, 2 H. & N. 610, it was held that, where it was directed in an award that an act should be done within a limited time, which was less than the time within which a motion to set aside the award might be made, the party directed to do such act need not do it until the expiration of a reasonable time after the time limited for such motion.

Sufficient performance.— An award that A "shall make and well execute a good and authentic deed of conveyance" of certain lands to B by a given day, refers merely to the validity and sufficiency of the deed in point of law, and not to the title to be conveyed thereby, and is satisfied by the execution of such a deed as is effectual to convey all the right and title A had in the premises at the date of the award. Preston v. Whitcomb, 11 Vt. 47.

award constitutes a breach of the obligation to perform, even though the time for performing the residue has not arrived.[1]

2. OFFER TO PERFORM. If there be an offer of performance and a refusal of the tender, this is equivalent in effect to actual performance.[2] But, where a party

Payment to husband is not a sufficient performance, such payment being clearly collusive, under an award directing a certain sum to be paid to a married woman. Wynne v. Wynne, 1 Dowl. N. S. 723, 11 L. J. C. P. 206, 4 M. & G. 253, 3 Scott N. R. 442, 43 E. C. L. 137.

Continuance of action contrary to award.— Continuance of an action from term to term is a breach of an award forbidding the party to continue the action; but not of an award directing that the party should not continue or proceed in the action at the same term. Gray v. Gray, Cro. Jac. 525. So, under an award directing a cessation of all suits between the parties, it was held that the prosecution by one party of a suit in which the other was one of several defendants was not a breach. Barnardiston v. Fowler, 10 Mod. 204.

The mere filing of a fresh bill in chancery is not a breach of an award directing the cessation of a suit, for, until a subpœna issues on the bill, the other party is not injured. Freeman v. Sheen, 2 Bulst. 93, Cro. Jac. 339; Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 306.

Alternative performance.—Where an award is in the alternative, a performance of either alternative is sufficient (Hanson v. Webber, 40 Me. 194); but if one of the alternatives be uncertain or impossible, it is incumbent on the party to perform the other (Wharton v. King, 2 B. & Ad. 528, 9 L. J. K. B. O. S. 271, 22 E. C. L. 223; Simmonds v. Swain, 1 Taunt. 549. See also Oldfield v. Wilmer, 1 Leon. 140, 304; Lee v. Elkins, 12 Mod. 585). And as to partial invalidity of award see supra, VI, J, 10.

Duty to prepare conveyances.— Where arbitrators award a conveyance by one party to the other without directing which shall prepare the instrument, it seems to be the duty of the party conveying to do so. Doe v. Stillwell, 8 A. & E. 645, 2 Jur. 591, 3 N. & P. 701, 35 E. C. L. 773; Standley v. Hemmington, 2 Marsh. 277, 6 Taunt. 561, 1 E. C. L. 754; Candler v. Fuller, Willes 62. See, generally, VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Discharge by release or by accord and satisfaction.— It is competent for the parties to agree that a less sum than the amount of the award shall be received in full payment thereof, if the residue be released under seal or by way of accord and satisfaction. Wood v. Bangs, 2 Pennew. (Del.) 435, 48 Atl. 189.

1. Failure to perform in part.— Bayne v. Morris, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 97, 17 L. ed. 495.

What is not breach.— Failure to do illegal or impossible acts.— But it is not a breach that the party fails to perform illegal or impossible acts. Dodington v. Bailward, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 591, 7 Dowl. P. C. 640, 8 L. J. C. P. 331, 7 Scott 733, 35 E. C. L. 318; Hanson v. Boothman, 13 East 22, 26, wherein Lord Ellenborough said: "No person can be bound to do impossibilities."

As to the power of arbitrators to award the doing of illegal or impossible acts see supra, VI, J, 3, d, (v), (vi).

Acts not required by award.— Nor is it a breach to fail to do acts not required by the award. Young v. Leaird, 30 Ala. 371 (holding that, where the award directs one of the parties to give the other a conveyance of certain import, the former is not required to sign a conveyance tendered to him containing a provision which is beyond the requirements of the award. His refusal to sign will not preclude him from relying on the award as a defense); Webb v. Fish, 4 N. J. L. 431; Anonymous, 2 N. J. L. 213 (holding that where costs are not awarded they cannot be recovered, and the party cannot be in contempt for refusing to pay such costs); Sharpe v. Hancock, 8 Jur. 382, 13 L. J. C. P. 138, 7 M. & G. 354, 8 Scott N. R. 46, 49 E. C. L. 354.

Institution of proceedings to set aside the award on account of its non-conformity to the submission, is not a breach. Ross v. Linder, 17 S. C. 593.

Omission to give notice of the meeting of the arbitrators, according to a stipulation in the submission, is not a breach. Hoag v. McGinnis, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 163.

Tortious act on property after it has vested in the other party by virtue of the award is not a breach. Bridgeman v. Eaton, 3 Vt. 166.

2. Smith v. Stewart, 5 Ind. 220.

Refusal to accept deed.— Under an award, A was to give B a good, authentic deed by a given day, and at the same time was to give him possession of the premises. It was held that, upon a refusal by B to accept the deed when tendered, A was excused from going further and tendering the possession, if that would otherwise have been necessary. Preston v. Whitcomb, 11 Vt. 47.

Tender of amount in bank-notes.— A tender of the amount due under an award in current bank-bills or United States certificates, though not a legal tender, is sufficient unless specifically objected to at the time. Wood v. Bangs, 2 Pennew. (Del.) 435, 48 Atl. 189.

See, generally, PAYMENT.

Tender of release containing condition.— Where an award provided that one party should give the other a release, and he tendered one containing a condition, which release the other party refused to accept, objecting, not to the condition, but on the ground that the award was not binding, it was held that this tender was sufficient as evidence of an offer to perform the award, but would not have been, if the condition had been objected to, without an offer to furnish is directed to do several independent acts, a refusal of an offer to perform one of them will not excuse him from performance of the residue.[3]

XI. ENFORCEMENT OF AWARD.

A. In General. Originally, at common law, an award could be enforced only by action[4] or by way of a bar to another action for the same cause,[5] or, in a proper case, specific performance could be sought in equity.[6] In the time of Charles II, however, a practice grew up of making the award a rule of court, and enforcing it by attachment, and this practice was subsequently affirmed and fixed by statute.[7] At the present time, the usual method of enforcement is by entering judgment on the award,[8] though the common-law remedies are still available.[9]

B. Actions at Law — 1. Right of Action — a. Award Not Made Rule of Court. At common law the only way to enforce an award not made a rule of court is by an action on it or on the bond of submission.[10] a release conformable to the award. Lincoln v. Cook, 3 Ill. 61.

Tender of performance of co-parties.— In an action upon a policy of insurance, where defendant pleaded an award made pursuant to a submission of the question of the amount of loss by itself and other companies who had insured the same property, it was held that a tender of the amount of the award by all of the companies in one sum, without showing a part tender by defendant of its portion, was sufficient. 7. 9 & 10 Wm. III, c. 15. In Buccleuch v. Metropolitan Board of Works, L. R. 5 Exch. 221, 230, Blackburn, J., said: "A practice arose first in the time of Charles II. of making submission a rule of court, so as to render any misconduct under that submission, or any refusal to act on the award, a contempt of that court, and so give that court jurisdiction over the award and the parties to the submission; and this practice gave rise to the various enactments under which a court of law now has extensive power over the reference. Those powers, however, must be exercised by the court in a summary way; and the statutes neither take away any defence given by common law, nor enable any defendant in an action to set up any defence which he could not have so set up before." Smallwood v. Mercer, 1 Wash. (Va.) 290.

Suit between joint obligors in bond.— Six

b. Award Made Rule of Court. An award may be enforced by action, even though made a rule of court, and, consequently, capable of enforcement in a summary manner.[11]

c. Amendment or Modification of Bond. An agreement, indorsed on a submission bond, enlarging the time for making the award includes all the terms of the original submission to which it had reference the same as if the original terms had been formally set forth and repeated in the new agreement. Consequently, in case of an award made within the enlarged time, plaintiff is not bound to resort to his action upon the submission implied in the agreement to enlarge the time, but may sue directly upon the bond as carried along with and incorporated in that agreement.[12]

d. Part of Award. It is competent for a party to declare upon a single article of an award, and, if that article is of itself so complete and independent of the rest of the award that its separate enforcement would work no injustice to the partners submitted to arbitration differences which had arisen between them. A, B, and C gave a joint and several bond to D, E, and F, conditioned for the performance of the award; and D, E, and F gave a similar bond to A, B, and C. The arbitrator awarded, among other things, that B should pay a sum of money to A. It was held that, while A could not sue B on the bond, they being joint obligors, yet the submission was in effect a submission of all matters in dispute between the six partners, and, therefore, A could sue B on the award. Mandamus.— Where a statute providing for arbitration by a city is of doubtful construction, and the legal rights thereunder are not clear, an award pursuant to such statute cannot be enforced by mandamus, the remedy being an ordinary action on the award. State v. Jersey City Board Finance and Taxation, 39 N. J. L. 629. See also People v. Haws, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 115.

Obtaining possession of award by improper means.— The fact that plaintiff obtained possession of an award by misrepresentation will not prevent him from bringing an action thereon if, previously, the award had become final and had been published according to the submission agreement. In Maryland and New York it has been held that an action of debt cannot be sustained on the arbitration bond when the award is not made within the time specified in the bond, though the parties have extended the time by new agreement. In such case the action must be on the submission implied in the new agreement. Peters v. Johnson, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 291; Myers v. Dixon, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 491; Freeman v. Adams, 9 Johns. (N. Alteration of bond.— A bond of a particular date for the performance of an award, conditioned that the award should be made on or before a fixed date, was afterward, by the consent of the parties, changed by erasure and interlineations, so as to extend the time for the award. It was held that plaintiff might either declare on the bond as both dated and made on its original date, or as dated on that day and made afterward, according to the last date as changed by consent. Tompkins v. Corwin, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 255. See, generally, ALTERATIONS OF INSTRUMENTS [2 Cyc. 137].

Award not pursuing submission in bond.— An action upon a bond to perform an award cannot be maintained if the award does not pursue the submission in the bond, although it does pursue a submission contained in a written agreement not under seal which was substituted by the parties. George v. Farr, 46 N. H. 171. See also Hull v. Alway, 4 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 375.

other party, he may recover even though the other portions of the award are void.[13]

2. ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION.[14] An award, as a cause or ground of action, is so only from the date of its publication.[15]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTION. In the absence of a particular limitation by statute, an action on an award is an action on a specialty within the meaning of a statute fixing the limitation of actions on specialties,[16] and this is true even though the submission was by parol.[17]

4. FORM OF ACTION — a. Assumpsit. Assumpsit may be maintained upon an award,[18] and, if the submission is by parol, it is the most suitable remedy.[19]

b. Debt or Covenant. If the submission is by a bond with a penalty, debt will lie either on the submission or on the award.[20] If the submission is by

If an award order two things in favor of one party, one of which orders is uncertain, or for other reasons cannot be enforced, he may waive this and sue upon the breach of the other. Simmonds v. Swaine, 1 Taunt. 549. So, an award which gives a sum of money and damages for the diversion of a stream, and requires defendant to restore the stream to its original channel, may be enforced as to the damages by an action without reference to the other portion, requiring restoration. 15. Varney v. Brewster, 14 N. H. 49. See also Ehrman v. Stanfield, 80 Ala. 118, wherein it was held that where a sum of money is awarded, and no day of payment is fixed, it is payable instanter, and an action may be brought on the award if not paid on delivery of a copy.

As to publication of award see supra, VI, G.

Failure to comply with conditions.—Where an award declares that one party shall pay to the other a certain sum on a day specified, another sum on another day specified, and that to secure the payments he shall give a bond, and he refuses to do any of the things awarded, an action will lie against him although the time when both sums of money were awarded to be paid has not yet arrived. Instrument under seal.— In some jurisdictions it has been held that assumpsit cannot be maintained on an award made in pursuance of a submission by covenant under seal (McCargo v. Crutcher, 23 Ala. 575; Horton v. Ronalds, 2 Port. In an action on an award or on a bond to abide by an award, all the parties to the submission or the bond should be joined.[22] And where an award directs the parties to pay each a certain sum of money, and one of them is obliged to pay the whole, he may bring his action against the other to compel contribution.[23]

Agent of parties.— On an action to recover damages for alleged breach of covenant to perform an award, the person who acted as agent of the parties in whose favor the award was rendered is not a necessary party plaintiff. Smith v. Morse, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 76, 19 L. ed. 597.

Intervention.— Where an action is brought against a city to recover an award made as damages for taking property for a public use, a third party, who claims to have been the owner of the property taken, or of a part of it, and hence entitled to the award, or part of it, may come in as a party to the action and assert his claim. Smith v. St. Paul, 65 Minn. 295, 68 N. W. 32.

Joinder of parties.— Where certain of the heirs at law of an intestate, entitled to different proportions of the personal property, joined with the administrators in a submission of their claim to an arbitrator, who awarded a gross sum against the administrators, which he further proceeded to apportion among the heirs, it was held that they all might join in an action on the award. Stetson v. Healey, 7 Me. 452.

Subsequent agreement.— If A and B have submitted matters in dispute between them to arbitration, and an additional agreement is executed, viz.: "Whereas A. and B. have entered into the foregoing submission, now I, A., and C. as his surety, and I, B., and D. as his surety, hereby agree and bind ourselves each to the other to pay all such sums of money each to the other as the said arbitrators shall award," B may maintain an action in his own name alone against A and C for a failure of A to comply with the award. Hubbell v. Bissell, 2 Allen (Mass.) 196.

Third persons.— An award, on a general submission in writing, whether under seal or not, of all disputes between A and B, that A shall pay certain debts of B to third persons, although made on the express condition that A shall receive certain property of B, will not support an action against A by one of such creditors to recover a debt specified in the award. Millard v. Baldwin, 3 Gray (Mass.) 484.

Liability under joint and several promise to perform.— Two several tenants of a farm agreed, with the succeeding tenant, to refer certain matters in dispute respecting the farm to arbitration, and jointly and severally promised to perform the award. The arbitrator awarded that each of the two pay a certain sum to the third. It was held that they were jointly responsible for the sum awarded to be paid by each. Mansell v. Burredge, 7 T. R. 352.

Action by administrator.— An administrator may submit a claim of his intestate to arbitration, and may, in that capacity, maintain a suit on the award. Alling v. Munson, 2 Conn. 691.

Action against administrator.— In an action on an award against an administrator, a declaration which seeks to charge him indi-

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arbitration and Award," § 493.

Evidence on which award based.— In an action on an award it is not necessary to set forth the evidence on which the award was based. Littleton v. Patton, 112 Ga. 438, 37 S. E. 755. See also Crane v. Barry, 54 Ga. 500.

Form of declaration or complaint in action on award is set out in whole, in part, or in substance in Anderson v. Miller, 108 Ala. 171, 19 So. 302; Ehrman v. Stanfield, 80 Ala. 118; Toole v. Urquhart, 44 Ala. 646; Johnson v. Maxey, 43 Ala. 521; Roundtree v. Turner, 36 Ala. 555; Gomez v. Garr, 9 Wend. (U. S.) 105, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,288.

26. Mutuality of submission.— Georgia.— Littleton v. Patton, 112 Ga. 438, 37 S. E. 755.

Kentucky.— Shockey v. Glasford, 6 Dana (Ky.) 9.

Maryland.— Ogle v. Tayloe, 49 Md. 158.

New York.— Keep v. Goodrich, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 397.

England.— Brazier v. Jones, 8 B. & C. 124, 15 E. C. L. 69; Ferrer v. Oven, 7 B. & C. 427, 6 L. J. K. B. O. S. 28, 1 M. & R. 222, 14 E. C. L. 195; Dilley v. Polhill, 2 Str. 923.

Canada.— Skinner v. Holcomb, 6 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 336.

As to necessity of submission see supra, II, A.

As to proof of submission see infra, XI, B, 7, b.

27. Substance of submission.— Littleton v. Patton, 112 Ga. 438, 37 S. E. 755; Shockey v. Glasford, 6 Dana (Ky.) 9. See also Brown v. Warnock, 5 Dana (Ky.) 492; Hodsden v. Harridge, 2 Saund. 61*h*.

Terms of submission.— It is not necessary to set out in the declaration the terms of the reference. It is enough to state that there were matters in difference between the parties, and that the reference was of and concerning those matters. Smith v. Hartley, 10 C. B. 800, 15 Jur. 755, 20 L. J. C. P. 169, 2 L. M. & P. 340, 70 E. C. L. 800.

28. Award conforming to submission.— Littleton v. Patton, 112 Ga. 438, 37 S. E. 755; Wilson v. Constable, 1 Lutw. 536; Henderson v. Williamson, 1 Str. 116.

Award under hand of arbitrator.— Where a submission is "so that the award be in writing under the hand of the arbitrator," in an action on the award it must be shown in pleading that the award is under hand, as well as in writing. Everard v. Paterson, 2 Marsh. 304, 6 Taunt. 625, 16 Rev. Rep. 701, 1 E. C. L. 784.

Setting out award.— The declaration or complaint need not set out all the award, but such part only as is essential to plaintiff's case.

Illinois.— Haywood v. Harmon, 17 Ill. 477.

Indiana.— A copy of the award must be filed with the pleading. Sanford v. Wood, 49 Ind. 165; Hays v. Miller, 12 Ind. 187. Compare Boots v. Canine, 58 Ind. 450.

Kentucky.— Shockey v. Glasford, 6 Dana (Ky.) 9; Gentry v. Barnet, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 312.

Canada.— Bond v. Bond, 16 U. C. C. P. 327; McCallum v. McKinnon, 15 U. C. C. P. 561.

29. Littleton v. Patton, 112 Ga. 438, 37 S. E. 755; McCreary v. Taggart, 2 S. C. 418; Bissex v. Bissex, 3 Burr. 1729; Skinner v. Andrews, 1 Saund. 169.

Acting of all arbitrators.— In an action to recover the amount of an award, while the rule of law is that all the arbitrators must have acted though only a majority of them sign the award, the declaration is sufficient if it avers that all the arbitrators took upon themselves the burden of the arbitrament, has failed to perform it either in whole or as to that part only of which the plaintiff may require performance.[30]

(II) Action on Bond. In an action on an arbitration bond the declaration need only allege, generally, the differences agreed to be arbitrated as recited in the conditions of the bond; the submission; that the arbitrators, in pursuance of such submission, made out and published their award, setting it out; and that defendant, on request, refused to abide by and perform it.[31] and that the third arbitrator refused to sign the award. Hoffman v. Hoffman, 26 N. J. L. 175.

Costs and fees.— An award which provides for the payment by a party of the taxable costs of the suit is sufficiently certain; but, in order to recover upon such an award, plaintiff must aver in his declaration that the taxable costs amounted to a sum certain, of which defendant had notice before suit. Wright v. Smith, 19 Vt. 110. After a verdict for plaintiff, in an action upon an award, embracing the fees of the arbitrators, judgment will not be arrested because the declaration does not contain an averment that plaintiff has paid the arbitrators' fees. Blanchard v. Murray, 15 Vt. 548.

Notice of award need not be averred unless it is provided in the submission that notice shall be given to the parties. Matthews v. Matthews, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 105, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,288; Hodsden v. Harridge, 2 Saund. 61*h*. Compare Woodbury v. Northy, 3 Me. 85, 14 Am. Dec. 214.

Swearing of arbitrator.— Conceding that the statute requiring arbitrators to be sworn reaches the case of a mere common-law arbitration, still, in an action on an award, it is not necessary to allege that the arbitrators were sworn, because it is not a jurisdictional fact. Browning v. Wheeler, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 258, 35 Am. Dec. 617.

Umpire's award.— Where the action is founded on an award, its true character, as the act of an umpire or of arbitrators, must be set forth in the complaint in order that a defense adapted to its true character may be set up in the answer. Lyon v. Blossom, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 318. See also Bates v. Cooke, 9 B. & C. 407, 17 E. C. L. 186.

Where the submission was to arbitrators, and if they disagree to an umpire, and the time limited for the arbitration and the umpirage was the same, it was held that, in an action on the umpire's award, the declaration must allege the cause why the arbitrators could not make their award. Coppin v. Hurnard, 2 Saund. 129.

As to the difference between umpirage and decision of arbitrators see supra, V, A.

30. Defendant's failure to perform.— Littleton v. Patton, 112 Ga. 438, 37 S. E. 755.

Breach of valid part.— Where an award is in the alternative, but is void as to one of the alternatives, it is sufficient, in an action of debt on the award, to allege non-performance of the valid alternative, without noticing the other. Oldfield v. Wilmer, 1 Leon. 140, 304.

Promise to perform.— In an action on an award, it is not necessary to allege that defendant expressly promised to perform the award, for the law implies a promise to perform from the fact of the submission. Stockton Combined Harvester, etc., Works v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 98 Cal. 577, 33 Pac. 633; Haywood v. Harmon, 17 Ill. 477; Kingsley v. Bill, 9 Mass. 198. Compare Swicard v. Wilson, 2 Mill (S. C.) 218; Lupart v. Welson, 11 Mod. 171.

As to necessity of agreement to abide by award see supra, II, F, 2.

Performance by plaintiff.— Where the award requires the performance of dependent acts on the part of both parties, plaintiff, in an action on the award, must allege performance or readiness to perform his part.

Kentucky.—Fleming v. Chinowith, Ky. Dec. 17.

Missouri.— Finley v. Finley, 11 Mo. 624.

New Jersey.— Hoffman v. Hoffman, 26 N. J. L. 175; Hugg v. Collins, 18 N. J. L. 294.

United States.— Matthews v. Matthews, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 105, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,288.

Canada.— Baker v. Booth, Draper (U. C.) 65.

But where the acts to be performed by the parties are distinct and independent, the one not being a condition precedent to the other, the rule is otherwise.

In Indiana, in an action on a statutory arbitration bond, it must be alleged that, in a proper proceeding for that purpose, the award

(III) Joinder of Counts. A count in debt on simple contract may be joined with a count on the award.[32]

b. Demurrer. Advantage may be taken by demurrer of an objection to an award apparent on the face of the declaration.[33]

c. Plea or Answer[34]— (1) In General. In debt on an award, the plea of nil debet is an appropriate plea. It is the general issue and puts in issue every allegation in the declaration.[35] In assumpsit on an award, non assumpsit puts had been confirmed by the judgment of the proper court. Bash v. Van Osdol, 75 Ind. 186; Healy v. Isaacs, 73 Ind. 226; Shroyer v. Bash, 57 Ind. 349.

Conformity to submission.— In an action of debt on an arbitration bond founded on an agreement of submission, the declaration must aver that the arbitrators conformed in every material respect to the agreement of submission. To aver generally that the arbitration and award was "in proper manner and form" is not sufficient. Gear v. Bracken, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 249.

Delivery of award.— Under a submission stipulating that the award shall be ready by a specified day for delivery to the parties or such of them as may desire it, plaintiff need not allege readiness to deliver, for it is upon defendant to plead specially that he "desired" it and was denied. Rowsby v. Manning, 3 Mod. 330. See also Houghton v. Burroughs, 18 N. H. 499.

Revocation of submission.— In an action on a bond conditioned to perform an award, if plaintiff wishes to recover for the breach in revoking the submission he should assign this breach, and not the non-performance of the award. Frets v. Frets, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 335.

Setting out bond.— In declaring, on an arbitration bond, it is not necessary to set out the bond in hæc verba. It is sufficient if it is stated according to its true legal effect and meaning. Armstrong v. Robinson, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 412.

Setting out award.— In debt on a submission bond, the whole award must be set out, either in the declaration or replication. Byars v. Thompson, 12 Leigh (Va.) 550, 37 Am. Dec. 680; Baker v. Booth, Draper (U. C.) 65. See also Perry v. Nicholson, 1 Burr. 278. The declaration need not be according to the letter of the award. Macon v. Crump, 1 Call (Va.) 575. See also Dale v. Dean, 16 Conn. 579.

Variance between bond and award.— In an action on a bond for the performance of an award, a variance between the bond and the award as to the personnel of the board of arbitrators is waived where defendant's rejoinder to a replication setting out the award alleges performance thereof. Gardener v. Oden, 24 Miss. 382. See also Noyes v. McLaflin, 62 Ill. 474; Winter v. White, 1 Ball & B. 350, 3 Moore C. P. 674, 21 Rev. Rep. 636; Bentley v. West, 4 U. C. Q. B. 98.

Form of declaration or complaint in action on bond is set out in whole, in part, or in substance in:

Alabama.— Dodge v. McKay, 4 Ala. 346.

New Jersey.— Webb v. Fish, 4 N. J. L. 431.

England.— Roberts v. Mariett, 2 Keb. 614, 702, 1 Lev. 300, 1 Mod. 289, 2 Saund. 183; Hodsden v. Harridge, 2 Saund. 61*h*.

Canada.— McCallum v. McKinnon, 15 U. C. C. P. 561.

Waiver of award.— Where, in an action for the price of certain hay, plaintiffs declare upon the award of an arbitrator, they do not waive such award by declaring in another count on the contract under which the hay was sold. Sadler v. Olmstead, 79 Iowa 121, 44 N. W. 292.

33. Hoffman v. Hoffman, 26 N. J. L. 175; Gisborne v. Hart, 7 Dowl. P. C. 402, 5 M. & W. 50, 3 Jur. 536, 8 L. J. Exch. 197; Lossing v. Horned, Taylor (U. C.) 219. See also Fidler v. Cooper, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 285; Price v. Via, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 79.

Demurrer to plea.— In an action to enforce an award, the award being an estoppel as to all matters properly embraced in the decision of the arbitrator, and the declaration showing the estoppel upon its face, an objection to a plea setting up matters thus concluded by the award is properly taken by demurrer. Garr v. Gomez, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 649.

Failure of arbitrator to determine matters. — An objection to an award — that the arbitrator had left undetermined matters submitted to him — cannot be taken advantage of upon demurrer to a declaration in an action on the award, unless it appears on the face of the submission and award. Aitcheson v. Cargey, 2 Bing. 199, 9 Moore C. P. 381, M'Clel. 367, 13 Price 639, 26 Rev. Rep. 298, 9 E. C. L. 544.

General or special demurrer.— In an action on an arbitration bond, an objection that the arbitrator had no authority to make the award should be taken by general demurrer; but if he has some authority, and the objection is that it is not sufficiently comprehensive, such objection should be made on special demurrer. Dowse v. Coxe, 3 Bing. 20, 3 L. J. C. P. O. S. 127, 10 Moore C. P. 272, 28 Rev. Rep. 565, 11 E. C. L. 20.

every material averment in issue, and, as in other cases, renders it necessary for the plaintiff to prove them.[36]

(II) Equitable Defenses. In jurisdictions permitting an award to be questioned on equitable grounds, the plea attacking it should allege facts as distinguished from legal conclusions.[37]

d. Affidavit of Defense. It has been held that an action on an award pursuant to a verbal submission does not come within a rule of court which permits (N. Y.) 56; Wills v. Maccarmick, 2 Wils. C. P. 148.

Plea of nul tiel award to an action upon an award puts in issue, not merely the fact of the making of the award set out in the declaration, but the making of a good and valid award of and concerning the premises referred. Roberts v. Eberhardt, 3 C. B. N. S. 482, 4 Jur. N. S. 898, 28 L. J. C. P. 74, 6 Wkly. Rep. 793, 91 E. C. L. 482; Skinner v. Andrews, 1 Lev. 245; Dresser v. Stansfield, 15 L. J. Exch. 274, 14 M. & W. 822. But see Hartley v. Huntley, 4 U. C. C. P. 276, wherein it was held that where plaintiff proves such an award as is stated in his declaration, its legal effect or validity is not involved under a plea of nul tiel award. See also Adcock v. Wood, 6 Exch. 814, 20 L. J. Exch. 435, 2 L. M. & P. 501; Whitmore v. Smith, 7 H. & N. 509, 8 Jur. N. S. 514, 31 L. J. Exch. 107, 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 618, 10 Wkly. Rep. 253.

Plea of alteration of award.— A plea in an action on an award, setting up that the award was altered after it was made, is bad if it does not aver that the alteration was made in a material part nor show in what part it was altered, so as to enable the court to judge whether it was in a material part. Brown v. Warnock, 5 Dana (Ky.) 492. See also Alterations of Instruments, VIII, C, 7, b, (II) [2 Cyc. 231].

Plea of performance.— In an action on an award, defendant may set forth the award and plead performance of it; and such plea will bar the action unless avoided by plaintiff's replication. Peters v. Peirce, 8 Mass. 398. See also Wooden v. Little, 3 McCord (S. C.) 487. But, in a suit upon an arbitration bond, the validity of the award is not put in issue by the pleas of "conditions performed and not broken." Kesler v. Kerns, 50 N. C. 191.

Plea to part of award.— In debt on a bond conditioned to perform an award consisting of two separate parts, defendant cannot plead in bar of the whole any matter which answers only one part. Boyd v. Durand, 5 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 122. See also Marsh v. Curtis, 71 Ind. 377.

Special pleas.— Defenses on the ground of the invalidity of the award in law should be specially pleaded. Lord v. Lee, L. R. 3 Q. B. 404, 9 B. & S. 269, 37 L. J. Q. B. 121; Beckett v. Midland R. Co., L. R. 1 C. P. 241, 35 L. J. C. P. 163; Mitchell v. Staveley, 16 East 58, 14 Rev. Rep. 287; Wade v. Dowling, 2 C. L. R. 1642, 4 E. & B. 44, 18 Jur. 728, 23 L. J. Q. B. 302, 2 Wkly. S. 618, 10 Wkly. Rep. 253. But a special plea, amounting to the general issue, in debt on an award is bad. Ott v. Schroeppel, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 56; Matthews v. Matthews, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 105, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,288; 2 Chitty Pl. 208. See also Whitcomb v. Preston, 13 Vt. 53.

New Hampshire.—Whitcher v. Whitcher, 49 N. H. 176, 6 Am. Rep. 486.

Ohio.—Tullis v. Sewell, 3 Ohio 510, holding that the fact of submission was put in issue by a plea of the general issue.

Virginia.— Bierly v. Williams, 5 Leigh (Va.) 700.

Canada.—Hodson v. Whitby Tp. Municipality, 17 U. C. Q. B. 230; Abbott v. Skinner, 11 U. C. C. P. 309.

As to evidence admissible under the general issue see infra, note 42.

A general plea to an action upon an award, charging mistakes generally, without stating the particulars, is bad. Williams v. Paschall, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 564, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 284, 1 L. ed. 825. See also Bash v. Christian, 77 Ind. 290; Burroughs v. David, 7 Iowa 155; Hart v. Kennedy, 47 N. J. Eq. 51, 20 Atl. 29; Morewood v. Jewett, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 496.

Failure of arbitrators to pursue authority. — Where the declaration upon an award averred a submission of matters involved in a suit at law to arbitration, a plea that the arbitrators failed to pass upon and allow matters embraced in the submission, but which does not aver that the arbitrators had notice of such matters or that defendant presented and offered to prove them, is bad. Seely v. Pelton, 63 Ill. 101; Whetstone v. Thomas, 25 Ill. 319. So, a plea to a declaration upon an award, that the arbitrators heard and determined matters not embraced in the submission, in general terms, is defective in not stating in what particular they exceeded their jurisdiction. Seely v. Pelton, 63 Ill. 101.

Verification.— In Indiana it has been held that a plea that there was no such award as alleged in the declaration should be sworn to. Dickerson v. Tyner, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 253.

Form of answer in action on award, alleging that the award was made without notice to the parties and was the result of clerical error, is set out in Garvey v. Carey, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 286, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 159, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 282.

judgment to be taken upon certain instruments in writing for the payment of money in the absence of a sufficient affidavit of defense.[38]

e. Replication. To a plea of no award in debt on a submission bond a replication must show an award according to the submission.[39]

f. Rejoinder. After a plea of no award, and a replication setting out an award and assigning a breach, defendant cannot rejoin that the award is void, as such a rejoinder is a departure from the plea.[40]

g. Amendment. The court may, in a proper case, permit an amendment of the pleadings.[41]

h. Variance. In actions to enforce awards, as well as in defending such Assignment of breach.—In Genne v. Tinker, 3 Lev. 24, it was held that where, in debt on an award, the award was ill pleaded by defendant, it was not necessary for plaintiff to assign a breach in replication. But see Gillet v. Bristow, 1 Root (Conn.) 355; Green v. Bailey, 5 Munf. (Va.) 246.

Departure.—If plaintiff, in replying, alleges a different breach from that set up in the declaration, it is a departure, and the replication is bad on special demurrer. Henries v. Stiers, 8 N. J. L. 364. See also Tewsley v. Dunlop, 1 U. C. Q. B. 138, 139, which was an action on an arbitration bond. Defendants set out the bond and condition on oyer. The condition was that defendants perform the award of "Joseph Kimble Gooding." Plaintiff replied that "the said Jasper K. Gooding, the arbitrator in the condition of the said writing obligatory mentioned, did, within the time limited, make his award." It was held that the replication was bad for repugnancy.

Setting forth award.—The whole award should be set forth in a replication to a plea of no award. Gentry v. Barnet, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 312; Diblee v. Best, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 103; Green v. Bailey, 5 Munf. (Va.) 246; Perry v. Nicholson, 1 Burr. 278; Foreland v. Marygold, 1 Ld. Raym. 715, 12 Mod. 534, 1 Salk. 72. It is not, however, necessary that it be set out in hæc verba. Diblee v. Best, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 103. See also Veale v. Warner, 1 Saund. 326, wherein it was said that, in debt on a bond conditioned for the performance of an award, if defendant showed an award imperfectly in his plea, plaintiff in his replication must show so much thereof as would make an award good.

Form of replication to plea of no award in action on bond for performance of award is set out in Roberts v. Mariett, 2 Keb. 614, 702, 1 Lev. 300, 1 Mod. 289, 2 Saund. 183.

R. 585; Harding v. Holmes, 1 Wils. C. P. 122; Maxwell v. Ransom, 1 U. C. Q. B. 219. But see Fisher v. Pimbley, 11 East 187, which was debt on bond conditioned to perform an award. Plea no award. Replication setting out an award and breach, and rejoinder stating the whole award, in which were recited the bonds of submission, whereby it appeared that the award was not warranted by the submission. It was held that the rejoinder was not a departure, or inconsistent with the plea. See also Benedict v. Parks, 1 U. C. C. P. 370, wherein defendant set out the condition on oyer, which was for the performance of the award of arbitrators, and pleaded "No award made." Plaintiff replied showing an award made at the proper time and with the proper formalities, and setting it out; and then averred notice by defendant of the award, and assigned two breaches. Defendant rejoined, setting out the award verbatim, and then demurred separately to each breach. It was held that defendant could not, by thus setting out the award in his rejoinder by suggestion, make it a part of plaintiff's profert, and that defendant's demurrer should have been to the replication, and not to the several breaches assigned in the replication. But, upon the whole record, judgment was given for defendant on demurrer because the award as set out by plaintiff himself in his replication was void.

A rejoinder setting up a revocation of the submission is not a departure from or inconsistent with the plea of no award, but, rather, fortifies it as showing that the instrument purporting to be an award is, in fact, no award. Allen v. Watson, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 205.

41. Trescott v. Baker, 29 Vt. 459. In this case the declaration contained only general indebitatus assumpsit counts. The court allowed it to be amended by adding a count upon a parol submission and award.

As to amendment of pleadings, generally, see PLEADING.

actions, the rule applies that a material variance between the pleading and the proof is fatal.[42]

7. Evidence[43]— a. In General. In an action on an award the submission and award, if not inconsistent with the declaration, are admissible in evidence without regard to their validity in point of law.[44]

b. Proof of Submission and Award. In order to support an action on an award, it is not only essential that the plaintiff should make proof of the submission,[45]

42. Lyon v. Blossom, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 318 (holding that a variance between a complaint setting up an award by arbitrators and proof showing an umpirage is fatal); Smith v. Crosswhite, 5 Humphr. (Tenn.) 59.

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arbitration and Award," § 495.

Matters not alleged in pleadings.— An award cannot be impeached, in an action thereon, by evidence of facts not alleged in the answer — as neglect or refusal of the arbitrator to hear defendant's witnesses. Morewood v. Jewett, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 496.

Under the general issue, in debt on an award, it may be shown that the arbitrators had no power to make and publish their award at the time and in the manner they did; and, therefore, under that plea, the question may be raised whether an award is valid which was made on Sunday morning after a hearing completed just before twelve o'clock on Saturday night. Blood v. Bates, 31 Vt. 147. See also Bierly v. Williams, 5 Leigh (Va.) 700, holding that, in assumpsit on an award under a parol submission, defendant may show under the general issue fraud in the procurement of the submission. But evidence tending to impeach an award actually made and published in accordance with the agreement of submission is inadmissible under a general denial. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. O'Fallon, 49 Nebr. 740, 69 N. W. 118.

Under a plea of nil debet defendant may show any payment made by him. Turner v. Alway, 5 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 45.

Under a plea of no award defendant cannot deny the submission (Hodson v. Whitby Tp. Municipality, 17 U. C. Q. B. 230), show non-delivery of the award (Perkins v. Wing, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 143; Marks v. Marryott, 1 Lutw. 524; Oates v. Bromhill, 6 Mod. 176; Rowsby v. Manning, 3 Mod. 330), or performance (Richards v. Drinker, 6 N. J. L. 307). He may, however, show that the arbitrators awarded on a matter not submitted to them. Macomb v. Wilber, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 227.

What constitutes variance.— In an action of debt on an award, the declaration set out a submission to A, B, and C. The proof showed a submission to A and B and a third person to be selected by A and B as the third arbitrator, and that C was selected in accordance with this provision. It was held that there was no variance between the pleading and proof. Chase v. Jefts, 51 N. H. 494.

In an action on an award, a plea alleging want of finality in the award in two respects is sustained by proof that one of the respects alleged is well founded. Stewart v. Webster, 20 U. C. Q. B. 469.

43. As to presumptions in favor of award see supra, VI, 1.

Presumption of authority to submit.— After an award and submission have been permitted to come to the jury in an action on the award, after verdict it will be presumed that there was sufficient evidence of the authority of the president of one party, which was a railroad corporation, to enter into the submission in the absence of specific objection at the proper time. As to necessity of submission see supra, II, A.

Proof of submission.— In an action on an award under bonds of submission, it is sufficient to produce the submission bond executed by defendant, without that of plaintiff. Towsley v. Wythes, 16 U. C. Q. B. 139. The indenture of submission may be received upon proof of the handwriting of the subscribing witness, where it is shown that repeated attempts had been made to find such witness, who was the son of defendant, in order to serve him with subpœna, by calling at his father's house and at several other places where he had resided, and also at an hospital at which he was, as a student, in the habit of attending lectures; and that, these attempts failing, a summons had been taken out, calling on defendant to admit the execution of the indenture, on which the judge indorsed "No order; defendant refusing to give any information." Spooner v. Payne, 4 C. B. 328, 16 L. J. C. P. 225, 56 E. C. L. 328. If the submission is by parol no special form of words is necessary in the proof of the agreement to submit. Nor is it necessary that such agreement should be proved by express language of the parties to it, uttered at the very time of making it. Fooks v.

but he must also prove that the arbitrators made an award in conformity with the terms of that submission.[46]

c. Proof of Demand. Where no demand is required by the submission, and by the award one of the parties is required to pay money unconditionally, a demand need not be proved in an action on the award.[47]

8. Set-Off. A set-off is allowed against an award, in an action on the arbitration bond.[48]

9. Instructions. In an action on an award, where the only issue is upon the impartiality of one of the arbitrators, an instruction that the award is void if the jury believe, upon all the evidence, that such arbitrator was not impartial is sufficient.[49]

10. Judgment. Where an award directs one party to pay money and property to the other, in an action of covenant on the award, the court cannot render judgment for the specific property in kind.[50]

Proof of award.— In an action on an award against an administrator, evidence of admissions of the administrator appointed prior to the award is competent as corroborative of the existence of the award, although not to prove the original liability of the estate. Lobb v. Lobb, 26 Pa. St. 327. Plaintiff cannot give parol evidence of the contents of a written award on which he sues, without accounting for the absence of the award. Burke v. Voyles, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 190. The production of the award and the rule of court is sufficient prima facie to support the issue on the part of plaintiff, without producing the record of the cause, until the validity of the award is impeached by evidence dehors on the part of defendant. The agreement to submit and the award were admitted in the answer and the court instructed the jury to that effect. In introducing another instruction the court said: "If you find from the evidence that plaintiff and defendant agreed to submit their differences to arbitration, and if you find such an award was made as agreed," etc. It was held that the jury could not have understood that the execution of the agreement and the making of the award were in issue.

Judgment by default.— Final judgment by default may be rendered in a suit on an award for a liquidated sum, without the aid of a jury. Swift v. Faris, 11 Tex. 18.

Limitation by award.— Where plaintiff brought an action to recover a certain sum which arbitrators had found due him on a contract for making staves for defendant, and plaintiff had the staves in his possession and made no demand for them or their value, a judgment for the amount of the arbitrators' award and the staves will be modified, on appeal, to include the award only. Couch v. Harrison, 68 Ark. 580, 60 S. W. 957.

if not in excess of the penalty of the bond, is the limit of recovery.[51] In case of a revocation of a submission, the person revoking is liable to the damages which the other party has sustained by reason of the submission.[52]

b. Interest. On an award directing payment of money at a certain time, interest from that time till payment may be allowed.[53]

C. Pleading Award in Bar — 1. In General. As has been seen hitherto, a valid award constitutes a bar to any action on the original claims submitted to the arbitrators.[54] Where an award is pleaded in bar, it is for the court to determine what facts were requisite to constitute a valid award, and to declare the legal effect of the award when made.[55]

51. Action on bond.— Stewart v. Grier, 7 Houst. (Del.) 378, 32 Atl. 328; Shroyer v. Bash, 57 Ind. 349; Spear v. Smith, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 464. See also Miller v. Hays, 26 Ind. 380; McArthur v. Oliver, 53 Mich. 299, 19 N. W. 5, 8.

Action on award.— Where parties submit to arbitration, and agree that each will perform the award or pay a certain sum, if the award be to pay a sum of money, the sum awarded is the measure of damages in an action on the award. Whitcomb v. Preston, 13 Vt. 53. An award of arbitrators required defendants to make to plaintiffs a written relinquishment of a timber-culture claim on public land which was liable to become forfeited within a certain time. It was held that, on defendants' failure to make and deliver such relinquishment within that time, plaintiff was entitled to recover as damages the expenses which he was compelled to pay to effect a settlement of a contest with a subsequent claimant, which contest was the result of defendants' default. Palmer v. March, 34 Minn. 127, 24 N. W. 374. A failure, on demand, to furnish certificates of stock awarded upon a contract to build a railroad, in a certain amount, at its par value, renders the party liable for the market value of the stock in an action on the award — not for an amount equal to its par value. Rate of interest.— An award found a certain sum to be due from one of the parties to the other, and directed its payment as follows: "One thousand dollars to be paid within five days from this date, and the balance . . . to be paid within sixty days from this date, together with ten per cent. interest per annum thereon from this date until paid." It was held that no interest was to be paid on the one thousand dollars, if paid within five days; and that, as the award made no provision for any rate of interest if not so paid, the rate of interest must be governed by the statute. Noyes v. McLaflin, 62 Ill. 474.

2. Necessity For Special Plea — a. In General. In some cases it has been held that, under the general issue, defendant may introduce an award embracing the claim sued on.[56] But, as a general rule, a party relying on an award in bar of an action must plead it specially.[57]

b. Where Award Made Pending Suit. An award made pending an action on the same cause must be set up by a plea puis darrein continuance.[58]

3. Form and Sufficiency of Plea. The rules controlling a plea setting up an award in bar of a claim relied on by the plaintiff are substantially the same as those governing the declaration or complaint in an action on an award.[59] The pleading should set forth the submission, or enough of it to show that the matter on was included in the submission, it was held that the question was properly submitted to the jury. Madden v. Blain, 66 Ga. 49. The question whether or not the arbitrators denied one of the parties a proper hearing is one for the determination of the jury where the award is pleaded in bar of an action on the original demand. Riley v. Hicks, 81 Ga. 265, 7 S. E. 173.

56. General issue held sufficient.— In assumpsit it may be shown, under the general issue, that there has been a submission of the subject-matter of the suit to arbitration. May v. Miller, 59 Vt. 577, 7 Atl. 818; Winne v. Elderkin, 2 Pinn. (Wis.) 248, 52 Am. Dec. 159. And see Massie v. Spencer, 1 Litt. Not necessary to aver notice of award.—In a plea of an award it is not necessary to aver notice of the award to plaintiff. Adams v. Ham, 5 U. C. Q. B. 292.

Sufficient averment of notice of meeting.— An allegation that the arbitrators appointed time and place of hearing, and, "having given due notice thereof," met, is a sufficient averment of notice. Pickering v. Pickering, 19 N. H. 389.

Sufficient averment of making the award. — To a plea of an award objection was made that it did not appear that an arbitrator whose name was not signed to the award was present at the meeting of the arbitrators, participated in their deliberations, or had notice of their meeting. It was averred in the plea that, the arbitrators having taken upon themselves the burden of the arbitration and having been duly affirmed, did duly examine and consider the matters in difference between the parties, and that afterward two of them made the award. It was held that the averment in the plea was sufficient, and that it was not necessary that the presence of the third arbitrator at the time the award was made should appear on its face. Rogers v. Tatum, 25 N. J. L. 281.

Time within which award made.—In a plea of an award it is not necessary to aver that the award was made within a reasonable time after submission, if the submission does not require the award to be made within a time certain. Adams v. Ham, 5 U. C. Q. B. 292.

sought to be barred was embraced in it,[60] and state the award in substance so that the court may see that, if valid, it will bar the action.[61] But no averment of a promise to perform or abide the award is necessary,[62] nor need the pleader, ordinarily, allege performance, or an offer to perform, on his part.[63]

4. Proof of Submission. As in the case of an action on an award, a party setting up an award in bar must prove the submission.[64]

5. Demurrer to Plea. If, on a plea setting up a submission and award, plaintiff wishes to deny the submission or award, he must tender a direct issue upon that fact alone; if the question which he wishes to present is upon the legal effect of the submission, he should set it out and demur, and if he wishes to try the legal effect of the award he should crave oyer, set it out, and demur.[65]

6. Replication. Where an award is pleaded in bar the replication must either traverse or avoid the bar.[66] Fraud, or any other matter which does not appear on

60. Submission.— Armstrong v. Webster, 30 Ill. 333; Milner v. Turner, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 240; Young v. Shook, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 299; Henderson v. Williamson, 1 Str. 116; Cleal v. Elliott, 1 U. C. C. P. 252. And see Suydam v. Johnson, 16 N. J. Eq. 112.

Sufficient averment.— Under a submission of "all demands" the parties and referees may or may not investigate and settle the damages which will afterward probably accrue on an indemnifying bond. Hence a plea in bar to an action for such damages is good if it aver that they were actually investigated and settled by the referees, and judgment rendered on their report. Cheshire Bank v. Robinson, 2 N. H. 126.

Authority of agent to make submission.— A plea of arbitration by an agent is defective which fails to allege the agent's authority to make the submission. Wright v. Evans, 53 Ala. 103.

61. Statement of award.— Gihon v. Levy, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 176.

Need not set out whole award.— In a plea of an award, it is not necessary to set out the whole of the award, if there are parts of it which have no bearing upon the defense set up. Kennedy v. Burness, 15 U. C. Q. B. 473.

Insufficient plea.— Where an award must be pleaded as a defense, it is not sufficient to plead in these words only: "Arbitrament and award." Harrison v. Brock, 1 Munf. (Va.) 22.

Copies of submission and award attached to plea.— Where a plea to an action at law sets up an arbitration and award in bar of the action, it is improper to attach thereto, as exhibits, copies of the submission, and the award. Jones v. Harris, 58 Miss. 293.

A replication to a plea of set-off that the causes of action set up in the plea, as well as those in the declaration, had been submitted to arbitration, and an award thereon delivered to the parties, is bad in that it does not disclose the nature of the award nor in whose favor it was made. Heath v. Doyle, 18 R. I. 252, 27 Atl. 333.

62. Promise to perform.— Evans v. McKinsey, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 262.

North Carolina.— Moore v. Austin, 85 N. C. 179.

England.— Gascoyne v. Edwards, 1 Y. & J. 19, 30 Rev. Rep. 756. But it has been held that, in an action to recover a debt, an award of a sum of money cannot be pleaded in bar without averring payment of the sum awarded. Allen v. Milner, 2 Cr. & J. 47, 1 L. J. Exch. 7, 2 Tyrw. 113; Roulstone v. Alliance Ins. Co., 4 Ir. R. C. L. 547.

Exception.— The above rule is subject to exception where the duties imposed on the pleader by the award are to be performed simultaneously with, or as a condition precedent to, those imposed on the other party. Jesse v. Cater, 25 Ala. 351; Littlefield v. Smith, 74 Me. 387. See supra, X, A, 1, 2.

64. As to proof of the submission in an action on an award see supra, XI, B, 7, b.

A certificate of a county clerk that a controversy relative to the ownership of a chattel was submitted to him by the parties, and that he decided it in favor of one of them, is not evidence of such submission. Howard v. Sherwood, 1 Colo. 117.

When not part of record.— In an arbitration not made by order of court, the submission and award do not constitute part of the record unless made so by order of court, and identified. Thomason v. Odum, 31 Ala. 108, 68 Am. Dec. 159.

Evidence that submission made rule of court.— The submission is not sufficiently proved by evidence of a rule making the agreement a rule of court, such proceeding being ex parte. Berney v. Read, 7 Q. B. 79, 9 Jur. 620, 14 L. J. Q. B. 247, 53 E. C. L. 79.

65. Fidler v. Cooper, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 285.

Plea omitting portions of award.— If, in a plea of an award, portions of it are improperly left out which materially qualify those parts on which the party is proceeding, the other party should take advantage of it by setting out the parts omitted, and demurring. Kennedy v. Burness, 15 U. C. Q. B. 473.

66. Must either traverse or avoid the bar.—A replication which sets forth a submission and award in substantially the same terms as it is set forth in the plea in bar, alleging that the award is invalid because not the face of the award and which renders it voidable, cannot ordinarily be set up in this collateral fashion.[67]

D. Enforcement in Equity — 1. In General. Although a mere agreement to submit to arbitration cannot be specifically enforced,[68] yet it is well settled that an award made in pursuance of such submission may be specifically enforced in equity where the thing awarded to be done is such that a court of equity would compel its specific performance if agreed on by the parties themselves.[69] within the terms of the submission, is bad. Clement v. Durgin, 1 Me. 300.

Denial of submission.— Where an award under submission by a mutual bond is pleaded in bar, a replication denying the submission properly tenders issue upon the execution of the bond. Pickering v. Pickering, 19 N. H. 389. Where defendant pleaded a submission and award, and the replication, after protesting against the submission, traversed the award, it was held that the submission was admitted. Stipp v. Washington Hall Co., 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 16.

Allegation of no award.— A replication denying the allegations of the plea, and alleging that there never was any award made that had any binding force or validity, is sufficient. Fassett v. Fassett, 41 Mo. 516. But it has been held that, under a replication of "No such award" it cannot be shown that the award has been set aside. See Roper v. Levi, 7 Exch. 55, 21 L. J. Exch. 29, 2 L. M. & P. 621.

Averment of legal conclusion.— Where a submission and award are pleaded in bar, a replication that the arbitrators did not award any relief whereby the causes of action mentioned in the declaration were released, is bad, because it attempts to put in issue a matter of law. Fidler v. Cooper, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 285.

67. As to what may be urged against an award when pleaded in bar see supra, IX, B, 2, b, (II).

Where fraud available as defense — Objection anticipated.— Defendant, relying upon an award, anticipated plaintiff's objection, and alleged in the answer that the arbitration and award were fair, just, and honest. The whole question of fraud was gone into by the introduction of evidence to which no objection was made. It was held that defendant's substantial rights were not prejudiced by the court's refusal to sustain his demurrer to, and motion to make more specific, that paragraph of the reply alleging fraud, although the facts constituting the fraud were not stated. Where submission made rule of common-law court.— In Hawksworth v. Brammall, 5 Myl. & C. 281, 46 Eng. Ch. 281, it was held that an award of arbitrators might be enforced in equity although the submission to arbitration was to be made a rule of the common-law court.

Part performance.— Equity will usually compel specific performance of an award where the parties seeking relief have performed the award in whole or in part. Pawling v. Jackman, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 1; Church v.

2. What Awards Enforceable Specifically — a. In General. An award being looked upon as a contract of the parties, so far as relates to specific enforcement, reference should be had to the general treatment of that subject in determining the right to specific performance.[70] A void award, like a void contract, will not be specifically enforced;[71] nor will specific performance of part of an award be compelled where the whole cannot be so enforced.[72] And, in general, equity will not exercise its power of specific enforcement where the right thereto is doubtful,[73] or the party has long delayed to seek relief.[74]

b. Necessity For Acquiescence in Award. It was formerly held in England that equity would not enforce an award unless the parties had acquiesced in it, or agreed afterward to have it executed;[75] but this distinction was afterward over-Roper, 1 Ch. Rep. 75, 141; Hall v. Hardy, 3 P. Wms. 187. And in Norton v. Mascall, 2 Vern. 24, the lord chancellor decreed specific performance of an award which had been partly performed by the parties seeking relief, although such award was considered extrajudicial and not good in strictness of law.

For acts not considered as a part performance see Nickels v. Hancock, 7 De G. M. & G. 300, 56 Eng. Ch. 232.

Award made lien on property.— Where, by the terms of the submission, the amount fixed by the award was to be a lien on land, it was held that such lien, being enforceable only in equity, furnished an element of equitable jurisdiction, and the award should be specifically enforced. Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Scruggs, 50 Miss. 284.

Award establishes legal right.— An award is equivalent to the verdict of a jury as establishing the right at law so as to justify the granting of an injunction to protect the rights of a party under the award. Imperial, etc., Co. v. Broadbent, 7 H. L. Cas. 600, 5 Jur. N. S. 1319, 29 L. J. Ch. 377 [affirming 7 De G. M. & G. 436, 56 Eng. Ch. 337].

70. See Specific Performance.

71. Void award.— Mobile v. Wood, 95 Fed. 537; Hopcraft v. Hickman, 3 L. J. Ch. O. S. 43, 2 Sim. & St. 130. And see Cox v. Smyth, Hard. (Ky.) 411. But see Norton v. Mascall, 2 Vern. 24, in which case there had been a part performance.

Statute of frauds.— An award under an agreement, which is invalid by the statute of frauds, will not be specifically enforced. Walters v. Morgan, 2 Cox Ch. 369.

Death of arbitrator before execution of award.— Where one of the arbitrators died after the award had been agreed on, but before it had been executed, equity refused to enforce it. Blundell v. Brettargh, 17 Ves. Jr. 232.

As to death of arbitrator as revocation of submission see supra, II, I, 1, b, (I).

72. Not of part.— Nickels v. Hancock, 7 De G. M. & G. 300, 56 Eng. Ch. 232. And see Hide v. Petit, 1 Ch. Cas. 185, wherein it was held that an award as to a part only of the matters referred would not be enforced.

Provisions on one side not enforceable immediately.— Specific performance will not be decreed where the provisions in favor of one of the parties cannot be enforced at once, to give such party a right to have certain duties continuously performed by the other for a number of years. The court cannot undertake to see to such performance. Blackett v. Bates, L. R. 1 Ch. 117, 12 Jur. N. S. 151, 35 L. J. Ch. 324, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 656, 14 Wkly. Rep. 319.

Qualification of rule.— The rule that the court will not specifically perform an award unless it can perform the whole of it must be taken with this qualification — that the plaintiff is at liberty, as in the case of any other agreement, to forego any parts of it if they are for his own benefit. Bell v. Miller, 9 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 385.

73. Doubtful right.— Nickels v. Hancock, 7 De G. M. & G. 300, 56 Eng. Ch. 232, in which it was held that, where the submission and award, taken together, constituted an unwise and unreasonable agreement which could not be worked out consistently with the terms of the submission, specific performance should be refused.

Where arbitrator influenced by party.— Where there had been a disagreement among the arbitrators in regard to the amount of a certain rent, and one of them had been influenced by the entreaty of the wife of one of the parties to concur with the others, it was held that, under the circumstances, a specific performance was not to be enforced. Chichester v. McIntire, 4 Bligh N. S. 78, 1 Dowl. N. S. 460, 5 Eng. Reprint 28.

Where some of the persons to be bound were married women, of whom also one had not executed, the chancery court refused a specific performance and dismissed the bill, leaving plaintiff to his remedy at law. Emery v. Wase, 5 Ves. Jr. 846, 7 Rev. Rep. 109.

74. Laches.— Specific performance of an award will not be decreed where there has been long delay and laches, a material change of circumstances, and injury to the other party. McNeil v. Magee, 5 Mason (U. S.) 244, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,915; Eads v. Williams, 4 De G. M. & G. 674, 1 Jur. N. S. 193, 24 L. J. Ch. 531, 3 Wkly. Rep. 98, 53 Eng. Ch. 528, wherein it was said that the party must seek relief as promptly as the nature of the case will permit. But see Sweet v. Hole, Finch 384.

75. Thompson v. Noel, 1 Atk. 60. In Webster v. Bishop, Eq. Cas. Abr. 51, 2 Vern. 444, the court refused to order specific performance of an award which had been performed ruled in England,[76] and has never been recognized as prevailing in the United States.[77]

c. Adequacy of Remedy at Law. Equity will not interfere where the party has a complete and adequate remedy at law.[78] But it is not enough to say that the party has a right of action upon the award or the promise to abide by it, for such remedy is often very inadequate to the ends of justice, and, if it appears that he could not thereby obtain all that the award intended to give him, then equity will compel a specific performance.[79]

3. The Bill. A bill which makes out a case for a specific execution of the award is sufficient, although it does not pray for general or special relief, if defendant makes no objection thereto and submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court by answering to the merits.[80] If the award set forth in the bill be void on its face, the objection may be taken by demurrer.[81]

4. Plea or Answer. The principles governing the answer and plea are practically the same as in other suits for the specific performance of contracts.[82] If defendant answers and asks the intervention of the court, he submits to the jurisby neither party. See also Eyre v. Good, 2 Ch. Rep. 18, 34; Bishop v. Bishop, 1 Ch. Rep. 75, 141.

76. Wood v. Griffith, 1 Swanst. 43, 1 Wils. C. P. 34, 18 Rev. Rep. 18.

77. Never necessary in United States.— Brown v. Burkenmeyer, 9 Dana (Ky.) 159, 33 Am. Dec. 541; Jones v. Boston Mill Corp., 4 Pick. (Mass.) 507, 16 Am. Dec. 358, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 148; Smith v. Smith, 4 Rand. (Va.) 95. And see Pawling v. Jackman, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 1.

78. Award for payment of money.— A bill will not lie to compel a specific performance of an award merely for the payment of a sum of money, the remedy at law being adequate in that case. Turpin v. Banton, Hard. (Ky.) 312; Cannady v. Roberts, 41 N. C. 422; Walters v. Morgan, 2 Cox Ch. 369; Hall v. Hardy, 3 P. Wms. 187.

Award payable in gold.— A bill in equity will not lie to enforce specific performance of an award to pay a certain number of dollars in gold. Howe v. Nickerson, 14 Allen (Mass.) 400.

Payment of money and conveyance of land. — But a court of equity has jurisdiction to enforce specific performance of an award concerning real estate, or of an agreement for the purchase or sale of real estate, notwithstanding it involves the enforcement of an award to pay money. The jurisdiction of the court of equity will not be ousted and the ends of justice defeated because of an obligation in the award to pay money. Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Scruggs, 50 Miss. 284; Wood v. Shepherd, 2 Patt. & H. (Va.) 442.

Allegations of fraud.— A suit will not lie in equity to obtain a decree against one for a debt evidenced by an award, and then for a decree for the satisfaction of the debt from the grantee of the debtor, upon the allegation that the debtor's property had been fraudulently conveyed to the other defendant. The complainant ought first to recover his demand at law upon the award and proceed as far as he can in the collection of it, and then if, owing to the fraudulent conveyances, he cannot obtain satisfaction, and not before, he may go into equity. Duberry v. Clifton, Cooke (Tenn.) 328. So, in a suit for a specific performance of an award made in an arbitration between partners, wherein their respective rights and liabilities were determined, allegations of failure to comply with the bond given for the performance of the award, that defendant neglected to apply the assets to the liabilities of the firm, and had fraudulently applied a part of the assets to the payment of his individual debts, is no ground for equitable interference, it not appearing that the obligor in the bond was insolvent, or likely to become so. Burke v. Parke, 5 W. Va. 122.

79. Mere right of action will not defeat jurisdiction.— Kirksey v. Fike, 27 Ala. 383, 62 Am. Dec. 768; Whitney v. Stone, 23 Cal. 275; Brown v. Burkenmeyer, 9 Dana (Ky.) 159, 33 Am. Dec. 541; Davis v. Havard, 15 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 165, 16 Am. Dec. 537. And see Smith v. Smith, 4 Rand. (Va.) 95.

Award directing release of realty.— An award that a party shall execute a release of real estate is a proper subject for a bill for specific performance, there being, in such case, no adequate and complete remedy at law. Jones v. Boston Mill Corp., 4 Pick. (Mass.) 507, 16 Am. Dec. 358, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 148; Thompson v. Deans, 59 N. C. 22.

80. Appearance without objection to want of prayer.— Smith v. Smith, 4 Rand. (Va.) 95.

As to the bill, generally, see Specific Performance. And see also supra, IX, B, 2, c, (II), (A), (1).

81. Void award — Demurrer to bill.— Bishop v. Bishop, 1 Ch. Rep. 75, 141; Hopcraft v. Hickman, 3 L. J. Ch. O. S. 43, 2 Sim. & St. 130.

82. See, generally, Specific Performance. And as to the methods of obtaining relief against an award see supra, IX, B, 2.

diction,[83] and his answer must fully set up the matter relied upon to defeat the relief sought.[84] If he sets up new matter it must be proved.[85]

E. Statutory Methods of Enforcement — 1. Attachment — a. In General. The method of enforcement of an award by attachment formerly prevailed to some extent in the United States,[86] and appears to be still available,[87] though the usual method now is by entry of judgment on the award.[88]

b. When Granted. In order that an award might be enforceable by attachment, it was required to come within the terms of the statute.[89] The court would not grant such a summary remedy where there was any doubt as to the appli-

83. Waiver of objections to jurisdiction.— Moore v. Buckner, 28 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 606.

84. Materiality of rejected evidence.— If the answer attacks the award by allegations that the arbitrators refused to hear evidence, it is insufficient, unless it show what the evidence was and that it was material. Elder v. McLane, 60 Tex. 383, wherein it was further held that an allegation in the answer, under oath, that the arbitrator had not examined into the correctness of a boundary line, as required by the submission, was not overcome by a recital in the award that this duty had been performed. As to effect of refusal to hear evidence see supra, IX, B, 1, b, (II), (C).

Statute of frauds as defense.— Where defendant to a bill to enforce an award admitted the agreement to submit to arbitration, the actual submission, and the award, and failed to set up the statute of frauds as a defense in his answer, he cannot insist on it at the hearing. Hewitt v. Lehigh, etc., R. Co., 57 N. J. Eq. 511, 42 Atl. 325.

Motion to strike out answer — Presumption.— In a suit to enforce an award upon motion to strike out part of an answer which sets up that a third arbitrator was chosen by the first two by chance instead of by the exercise of their judgment, the court cannot presume, for the purpose of striking out the answer, that defendant consented that a third arbitrator should be selected by chance. Hart v. Kennedy, 47 N. J. Eq. 51, 20 Atl. 29.

Georgia — Questions for jury.— A question made by the pleadings as to what evidence was introduced before the arbitrators is a question of fact for the jury. Thrasher v. Overby, 51 Ga. 91.

85. New matter — Performance.—An averment that performance by plaintiff was made a condition precedent constitutes new matter and must be proved as such. Pawling v. Jackman, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 1.

As to performance as a condition precedent see supra, X, A.

86. Formerly method in United States.— See Chandler v. Gay, 1 Ill. 88; Skillings v. Coolidge, 14 Mass. 43; McClure v. Gulick, 17 N. J. L. 340; Anonymous, 2 N. J. L. 213; Elmendorf v. Harris, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 516; Ex p. Wallis, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 522.

In the time of Charles II a practice arose of making submissions to arbitration rules of court, where the matter referred was involved in a pending suit (Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 323; Veale v. Warner, 1 Saund. 326), and this practice was subsequently confirmed by statute, which extended the summary remedy by attachment to every award which had been made a rule of court, whether in a pending suit or not (9 & 10 Wm. III, c. 15, which statute is no longer in force, having been repealed by the Arbitration Act of 1889 [52 & 53 Vict. p. 49]).

In Canada the court may enforce the performance of an award by attachment, if it is not an award for the payment of money. McPherson v. Walker, 1 Ont. Pr. 30.

87. Modern remedy.— Burrows v. Guthrie, 61 Ill. 70; Shriver v. State, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 1.

88. Entry of judgment.— See infra, XI, E, 2.

89. Reade v. Dutton, 2 Gale 228, 6 L. J. Exch. 16, 2 M. & W. 62.

Controversy, suit, or quarrel must exist.— Under 9 & 10 Wm. III, c. 15, in order for an award to be enforceable by attachment there must have been a controversy, suit, or quarrel existing at the time of the submission. In re Lee, 3 L. J. K. B. 124, 3 N. & M. 860.

Must be made rule of court.— To warrant a motion for an attachment against a party for non-performance of an award, the submission must appear to have previously been made a rule of court. Salmon v. Osborn, 3 L. J. Ch. 237, 3 Myl. & K. 429; Jemmett v. Lattimer, 2 L. J. K. B. O. S. 78; Bath v. Pinch, 4 Scott 299, 36 E. C. L. 587. See also Elmendorf v. Harris, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 516; Clarke v. Baker, 1 Hurl. & W. 215; Ansell v. Evans, 7 T. R. 1; Owen v. Hurd, 2 T. R. 643; ——— v. Mills, 17 Ves. Jr. 419.

Necessity for order.— There must be an order of the court to authorize issuing an attachment for not paying an award which had been made a rule of court. McDermot v. Butler, 10 N. J. L. 158.

Order made before award.—Where an equity court had ordered a party to comply with the terms of an award thereafter to be made, but when the award was made such party refused to do so, it was held that the proper course was not to attach him for contempt of the order, but to make another order directing him to comply with the terms of the award before a certain day, otherwise he should be attached. Birdsall v. Bradley, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 436.

cant's right to it.[90] And it seems that a long and unexplained delay in seeking relief would preclude enforcement by attachment.[91]

c. To Whom Granted. An attachment would not be granted to a stranger to the submission,[92] nor to the personal representative of a deceased party if the death avoided the rule of court.[93]

d. Against Whom Granted. Attachments lay against a party to the submission even though he were beyond the jurisdiction, the process being of a civil nature.[94] But it would not be granted against the personal representative of a deceased party,[95] against a public officer acting officially,[96] nor against a corporation.[97]

e. No Proceeding by Action and Attachment at Same Time. A party could not enforce the award by action and attachment at the same time.[98]

f. Procedure to Obtain — (i) Demand of Performance. A demand of performance was always necessary before the party could be entitled to an attachment.[99] Where the payment of money was awarded, the demand of such pay-

(II) Service of Papers. In order to bring a party into contempt, it was necessary that he should be personally served with a copy of the papers upon which the liability depended.[2]

(III) Motion For Attachment — (A) In General. It seems that an appli-

Reduction of amount — Fresh demand required.— Though a party is at one time in contempt for not paying costs which have been duly demanded, yet if, before motion for attachment, the sum due become reduced in amount, a fresh demand of the reduced sum must be made to ground a motion for an attachment. Spivy v. Webster, 1 Dowl. P. C. 696, 2 L. J. Exch. 38.

Demand after day set for payment.— An attachment for non-payment of a sum of money pursuant to an award might be granted notwithstanding a demand therefor was not made until some months after the day on which it was directed to be paid. In re Craik, 7 Dowl. P. C. 603, 2 W. W. & H. 52.

The demand should be for the precise thing awarded.— Hemsworth v. Brian, 1 C. B. 131, 2 Dowl. & L. 844, 14 L. J. C. P. 134, 50 E. C. L. 131.

Performance of condition.— An award ordered a defendant to pay to the arbitrator the costs of the award, and, in case plaintiff should pay them, ordered defendant to repay to him such amount. On making a demand for these costs, in order to entitle plaintiff to move for an attachment, notice should be given defendant that plaintiff had paid them. Kendrick v. Davis, W. W. & D. 587.

As to the necessity for a party to perform conditions precedent to compelling performance by the other party see supra, X, A.

Demand confined to part well awarded.—It seems that where part of the award was outside the arbitrators' authority, the demand had to be confined to what was well awarded. Necessity to produce power.— Where a demand for payment of money, pursuant to an award, was made under a power of attorney, it must appear that the power was produced to the party at the time the demand was made. Laugher v. Laugher, 1 Cr. & J. 398, 1 Dowl. P. C. 284, 1 Tyrw. 352; Boyes v. Hewetson, 2 Scott 837.

Proof of demand.— Where a demand was made under power of attorney for payment of money pursuant to an award, it was sufficient to found a rule for an attachment if the attorney swore to the demand and refusal, and that the sum remained unpaid; and it was not necessary that the party himself should swear that the money was not paid. Reg. v. Paget, 9 Dowl. P. C. 946, 5 Jur. 872.

Where there were several parties, the demand must be by all or under power of attorney from all. Sykes v. Haigh, 4 Dowl. P. C. 114, 1 Hodges 197, 2 Scott 193, 30 E. C. L. 632. But see Baily v. Curling, 20 L. J. Q. B. 235, 2 L. M. & P. 161.

On demanding the execution of a deed directed by an arbitrator, where such demand was made by a third person, it was not necessary that such person should be empowered by deed or power of attorney in order to enable the party to have an attachment. Copy of power of attorney.— If the demand were made under power of attorney, service of a copy of such power was required. Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 330.

The original submission was not required to be served, as it was the disobedience of the rule of court which was the foundation of the contempt. Greenwood v. Dyer, 5 Dowl. P. C. 255; Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 330.

The court would not infer personal service of an award to bring a party into contempt. Brander v. Penleaze, 5 Taunt. 813, 1 E. C. L. 415.

Necessity to show originals.— The originals of the papers served were required to be shown at the time of service. Russell Arb. & Award (8th ed.) 330; Lloyd v. Harris, 8 C. B. 63, 7 Dowl. & L. 118, 18 L. J. C. P. 346, 65 E. C. L. 63; Reid v. Deer, 7 D. & R. 612, 16 E. C. L. 302; Rex v. Sloman, 1 Dowl. 618; Jackson v. Clarke, M'Clel. & Y. 72, 13 Price 208. But it was sufficient if the originals were shown to the party, so that he could read them, without delivering them into his hands. Calvert v. Redfearn, 2 Dowl. P. C. 505.

The copies served must be correct.— Rex v. Calvert, 2 C. & M. 189.

Copies tendered and left.— It was sufficient service if the copies were tendered to the cation for an attachment has always to be made by motion in open court, upon due notice to the party to be charged.[3]

(B) Affidavits. The party applying for an attachment was required to present an affidavit verifying the award,[4] and showing that the preliminary steps to bring the other party into contempt had been taken.[5] So, where the time for making the award had been enlarged, the affidavit was required to state such enlargement, that the award had been made within the enlarged time, and that defendant had been notified of such facts.[6]

(C) Producing Original Award to Court. On an application for a rule for an attachment the original award must be produced to the court.[7]

(D) Showing Cause Against Motion. In defense to a motion for an attachment, defendant could prove that he had performed the duties imposed on him by the award,[8] or that the proper steps had not been taken to bring him into contempt.[9] Objections to the validity of the award, apparent on its face, could be taken advantage of,[10] and, so, anything which rendered the award absolutely void

5. Showing preliminary steps taken.— Laugher v. Laugher, 1 Cr. & J. 398, 1 Dowl. P. C. 284, 1 Tyrw. 352.

Performance of condition.— Such affidavit must show that the moving party had performed, or offered to perform, the duties imposed upon him. In re Smith, 5 Dowl. P. C. 513, 2 Hurl. & W. 306. But see Lindsay v. Direct London, etc., R. Co., 15 Jur. 224, 19 L. J. Q. B. 417, 1 L. M. & P. 529.

Refusal to perform.— Such affidavit must show also that the other party had refused to comply with a demand of performance. Reg. v. Paget, 9 Dowl. P. C. 946, 5 Jur. 872. The court would not grant an attachment for non-payment of money pursuant to an award, where payment had been demanded under a power of attorney, unless the affidavit of demand showed that it had been made after the time appointed for paying the money. Right of objecting party to enter into merits.— Where, on cause shown against a rule for an attachment, the court discharged the rule without costs, on a preliminary objection to the insufficiency of the affidavit, the objecting party had a right to enter into the merits in order to have the rule discharged with costs, and did not thereby waive his right to the discharge of the rule without costs. In re Chamberlain, 8 Dowl. could be set up in answer.[11] But no extrinsic objections merely rendering the award voidable could be taken in this way.[12]

(IV) THE RULE. Under an award directing that several defendants should each pay a certain sum, separate attachments had to be issued against them;[13] but an attachment could issue against one alone of several defendants.[14] The rule would sometimes be molded to suit the facts,[15] and, if there were reasons for giving indulgence to a party in contempt, the court could direct the attachment to be stayed for a certain period, or impose such terms as seemed equitable.[16]

b. Extent of Authority to Enter Judgment — (1) In General. The jurisdiction to enter judgments upon awards is special and statutory, and, therefore, can be exercised only where it is conferred by statute.[18] Such jurisdiction extends only to awards which fall within the scope of the statute,[19] and, in order that an award may be enforced in this manner, it is necessary that the statutory requirements shall have been complied with.[20]

W. 976, the court said: "In cases in which an extraordinary power of this character — a power simply to enter judgment in a case not brought before it by petition, complaint, or suit, in accordance with the essential principles of the common law, and upon the finding of a distinct tribunal of the parties' own selection — is conferred by statute upon a court of general jurisdiction, we are of the opinion that the jurisdiction should be treated as special; that the statutory authority should be substantially pursued; and that if that authority be exceeded, the judgment entered upon the award should be held void."

Where attachment appropriate at common law.— In the absence of any statutory provision on the subject, it was held that an award which was made a rule of court would be enforced by entering judgment thereon, in cases where, at common law, attachments would have been granted for non-performance. Repeal of statute after submission.— After the parties have entered into a submission under a statute which permits judgment to be entered on the award, a repeal of the statute does not prevent a subsequent entry of judgment, because the parties are deemed to have made the law at the time of the submission a part of the contract, and to have acquired a vested right to the remedies then in force, or others equivalent thereto, which could not be destroyed by the legislative action. 21. Statute controls.— Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 45; Marshall v. Hicks, 61 Ga. 72.

Justice of the peace.— Under some statutes, justices are given such authority. Whitis v. Culver, 25 Iowa 30; Van Horn v. Bellar, 20 Iowa 255; King v. Hampton, 4 Greene (Iowa) 401. In Illinois it was held that a justice of the peace could render judgment on an award only in cases pending before him upon a reference by the parties. Shirk v. Trainer, 20 Ill. 301; Weinz v. Dopler, 17 Ill. 111. And in New Hampshire it was held that a statute authorizing justices of the peace to render judgment on the report of referees, whenever the subject submitted before them was under two hundred dollars in amount, was not in violation of a constitutional provision limiting the jurisdiction of justices in civil causes, to cases where the damages demanded should not exceed four pounds, and in which title to real estate was not involved. Hayes v. Bennett, 2 N. H. 422.

But, where the statute does not confer such authority on justices of the peace, a judgment rendered on an award by a justice of the peace is void. Van Winkle v. Beck, 3 Ill. 488; Worthen v. Stevens, 4 Mass. 448. And a statute authorizing "courts of record" to enter judgment on awards does not confer such authority on a justice of the peace. Hollingsworth v. Stone, 90 Ind. 244; Richards v. Reed, 39 Ind. 330; Hubbel v. Baldwin, Wright (Ohio) 86.

c. Effect of Statutes on Right to Common-Law Remedies. A statute providing for arbitration proceedings does not, in the absence of an express provision to that effect, abrogate the common law. The methods are cumulative, and the parties may still proceed in accordance with the common law.[23] Consequently, it is the general rule that an award not enforceable in the manner provided by statute, because of failure to comply with the statutory requirements, may, neverthe-the same county, provided that a justice of the peace should enter judgment for the amount of the award in case such award did not exceed five hundred dollars, and that if it exceeded the jurisdiction of a justice "judgment shall be entered in any court having jurisdiction of the same," it was held that it was competent for the district court of that county to enter judgment, the amount awarded being seven hundred and forty-one dollars. McKnight v. McCullough, 21 Iowa 111, 112.

Submission by residents of another county. — Where the agreement of the parties designates the court to which the award is to be returned, such agreement will control in that respect, and if, in fact, the losing party do not reside in the county, to the superior court of which the award is made returnable, such party will be held to admit a residence in such county, in so far as may be necessary, as between the parties themselves, to uphold the jurisdiction of such court to enter judgment on the award. No judicial sanction is required to give force and effect to a common-law award. Sheffield v. Clark, 73 Ga. 92; North Yarmouth v. Cumberland, 6 Me. 21.

Oral submission collateral to submission under rule of court.— A parol agreement, to submit the determination of a boundary line, made at the time of the meeting of the arbitrators, on a submission under a rule of court to determine the issues in regard to a trespass, is binding as a common-law arbitration, distinct from the statutory arbitration, upon sufficient proof of the submission and award. Babb v. Stromberg, 14 Pa. St. 397.

Presumption as to intention.— Where the submission did not provide that a judgment might be rendered upon the award, and, pending the proceedings before the arbitrators, the parties changed the terms of the submission without the formalities required by the statute, it was held that it would be considered that the parties did not intend to arbitrate their differences under the statute, but according to the common-law rules. Foust v. Hastings, 66 Iowa 522, 24 N. W. 22.

less, be enforced at common law,[24] and some courts have gone to the length of holding that a party may elect to rely upon his common-law remedy even where the award might be enforced under the statute.[25] In a number of jurisdictions, however, an exception is drawn to this rule to the effect that, where it clearly appears, either by express stipulation or otherwise, that the parties intended to be bound by the award only in case it should conform to the statute, then, if it fails to comply with the statute, it cannot be enforced at common law, because to do so would change the contract entered into by the parties.[26]

Washington.— Under the Washington statute it is held that a statutory award cannot be enforced in any way until judgment has been rendered thereon by the court. Tacoma R., etc., Co. v. Cummings, 5 Wash. 206, 31 Pac. 747, 33 Pac. 507.

d. Procedure to Obtain Entry of Judgment — (I) In General. The method of proceeding to have judgment entered on an award varies somewhat under the different statutes.[27] The jurisdiction to enter such judgment is summary in its nature, and the general statutes regulating the procedure in ordinary suits and actions are not applicable thereto.[28] Under some statutes a motion for entry of judgment is necessary,[29] but, under others, the judgment is entered, as a matter of course, upon compliance with the preliminary requirements.[30]

(II) Notice. Generally, notice to the opposite party is required before a judgment can be entered on the award.[31]

United States.— Erie Tel., etc., Co. v. Bent, 39 Fed. 409.

In many of the other cases cited to sustain the general rule the circumstances were such as to make them necessarily in conflict with this exception. See supra, note 24.

27. As to objections to entry of judgment upon the award see supra, IX, B, 2, d.

Kansas — Amendment of statement of facts.— Upon the hearing of a motion to make the award of arbitrators a rule of the district court, the court may permit an amendment of plaintiff's written statement of facts, so that it will correspond with the award. Anderson v. Burchett, 48 Kan. 153, 29 Pac. 315.

Louisiana.— The practice in this state was to rule the other party to show cause why judgment should not be entered according to the award when the award was brought in. McMaster v. Duncan, 2 Mart. (La.) 264.

Minnesota — Entry in vacation.— After an award has been filed, the court may enter judgment thereon in vacation. Heglund v. Allen, 30 Minn. 38, 14 N. W. 57 [following Lovell v. Wheaton, 11 Minn. 92].

Lost award — Judgment on copy.— When an award made under a rule of court has been lost, judgment may be rendered upon a copy thereof. Little v. Gardner, 5 N. H. 415, 22 Am. Dec. 468 [citing Hill v. Townsend, 3 Taunt. 45, 12 Rev. Rep. 595; Robinson v. Davis, 1 Str. 526].

Lost submission.— In Eaton v. Hall, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 287, it was held that the court ought to take cognizance of an award upon satisfactory evidence that an agreement of submission was signed, acknowledged, and certified according to the statute, and had been lost, and on proof of a copy thereof, or of its contents so full and complete as to be substantially a copy.

Waiver of proof of submission.— In Montgomery County v. Carey, 1 Ohio St. 463, it was held that, on a motion for judgment, the execution of the submission need not be shown if the requirement was waived by the adverse party.

28. Jurisdiction summary.— Janes v. Richard, 3 La. 486.

Proceeding not a suit or action.— A motion to enter judgment on an award was held not to be a suit within the meaning of the Alabama "stay-law" of Feb. 20, 1866, and, consequently, the court properly refused to withhold judgment until after the time prescribed in that act. Crook v. Chambers, 40 Ala. 239. So it was held that, in case of the death of a party to a proceeding, upon an arbitration and judgment entered thereon under the statute, the court could not revive the proceeding or substitute another person in place of the deceased; that the provisions of the code of procedure relating to the revival and continuance of actions did not apply to arbitration proceedings under the statute, and that the equitable power of the court did not authorize such a revival. Manning v. Pratt, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 344.

29. Motion necessary.— Brace v. Stacy, 56 Wis. 148, 14 N. W. 51.

Motion oral or written.— A motion to make an award a rule or order of the circuit court may be made either orally or in writing, and is not subject to demurrer. Martin v. Bevan, 58 Ind. 282.

Judgment by consent.— In Hughes v. Bywater, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 551, where a bond of submission to arbitrators contained a stipulation that, in case the award was not paid or fulfilled, judgment for the penalty of the bond might be forthwith entered up in the supreme court, it was held that the prevailing party was at liberty to perfect judgment in vacation immediately after the award, without a special motion to the court. And in Lovell v. Wheaton, 11 Minn. 92, it was held that when an award of arbitrators was filed with the clerk of the district court as provided by the statute, the court had jurisdiction thereof, and the parties might waive all objections to the award on account of formal errors and irregularities, and authorize the clerk to enter judgment without confirmation by the court.

(III) TIME OF ENTRY. Where the statute prescribes that the judgment shall not be entered until certain things have been done, or a specified time has elapsed, it is error to enter judgment sooner.[32] And, on the other hand, if the statute specifies that the judgment shall be entered within a certain time, no valid judgment can be entered after the expiration of such period.[33]

(IV) COMPELLING ENTRY OF JUDGMENT BY MANDAMUS. Where a court was held that notice was not necessary where a term had intervened since the publication of the award.

Ohio.— Hubbel v. Baldwin, Wright (Ohio) 86.

Wisconsin.— Brace v. Stacy, 56 Wis. 148, 14 N. W. 51.

As to publication and service of the award see supra, VI, G.

Kentucky — Sufficiency of notice.— Under the statute requiring immediate delivery of a copy of an award, and that the court cannot enter judgment thereon until fifteen days after such delivery to the party, it is held that if the copy be not delivered at the time the award is made, but the party has the benefit of it fifteen days before the court meets, the object of the law is satisfied, and the court ought to enter judgment on the award. Wrigglesworth v. Morton, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 157.

Change of time of holding court.— Where a notice was given that a motion would be presented to the court on the first Monday of May for entry of judgment on an award, and the legislature subsequently changed the time of holding such court from the first until the second Monday, the notice was held to be sufficient. Price v. White, 27 Mo. 275.

Judgment at adjourned term.— Where an award was made the judgment of the court at an adjourned term, after notice given to defendant between the regular and the adjourned term, such notice was held to be sufficient. Green v. Shields, 37 Ga. 35.

Waiver by appearance.— Appearance on a motion to confirm an award, without objecting to the want of notice, is a waiver of such notice. Brace v. Stacy, 56 Wis. 148, 14 N. W. 51.

Agreement for judgment at term of submission.— If parties agree that the award shall be returned and entered as the judgment of the court, at the same term at which the submission is entered, it is no objection to the judgment of that term that one of the parties was not present at the return and judgment. Keans v. Rankin, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 88.

Notice not necessary.— Under some statutes, notice is not essential. Hart v. Stewart, 13 La. Ann. 37; Kelly v. Morse, 3 Nebr. 224.

32. Premature entry erroneous.— Nelson v. Hinesley, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 432; Middleton v. Hume, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 221; Alexander v. Witherspoon, 30 Tex. 291; Brulay v. Brooks, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 50 S. W. 647; Williams v. McPherson, 2 Ont. Pr. 49.

Waiver of provision.— Premature entry of judgment is erroneous unless the provision as to time of entry is waived. Middleton v. Hume, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 221. Thus, where plaintiff had moved to set aside an award against him at the next term after it was returned, it was held that final judgment thereon might be entered, on overruling the motion, before the end of the term, though the statute provided that the award might be vacated on complaint made "before the end of the term of the court next after such award be made and returned to such court," as the motion invited action on the award, and plaintiff could not complain that judgment could not be entered until the end of the term. Hollingsworth v. Willis, 64 Miss. 152, 8 So. 170.

Judgment not void.— Under a statute allowing submissions and awards to be filed in court, and directing the court, if proper, to enter judgment thereon at the next term after filing, it was held that a due filing gave the court jurisdiction, and that an entry of judgment at the same term, though erroneous, was not void, and was, therefore, good in a collateral proceeding. Gibbon v. Dougherty, 10 Ohio St. 365.

33. Entry after expiration of time.— In re Taylor, 9 Mo. App. 589, wherein it was held that, where judgment was entered more than one year after publication of the award, a motion to set it aside for irregularity saved the point, though no motion in arrest or for a new trial was filed.

No validity imparted by recommittal.—Under a statute in Maine, permitting parties to enter into a voluntary arbitration and have the award returned to the district court for acceptance within one year, it was held that if the award is not returned within the year it has no validity, and no force can be imparted to it, nor any jurisdiction subsequently vested in the arbitrators, by recommitting the award which has been returned after such time. Field v. Bissell, 36 Me. 593.

Texas — Object of statute.— The Texas arbitration statute which provided for the filing of the submission with the clerk of the district court and the entry of judgment thereon at the first term of court thereafter, was held to be intended, as to the entry of judgment, to prevent it from being entered before the losing party should have an opportunity of filing his objections to the award, and, therefore, the fact that the judgment was not entered until the second succeeding term, allowing six months' additional time within which to make objections, was held not to furnish such losing party any ground for impeachment of the award and judgment when thereafter drawn in question in an action upon the same subject-matter. Hall v. Morris, 30 Tex. 280.

improperly refuses to enter judgment on an award, it may be compelled to do so by mandamus.[34]

e. The Judgment. The judgment must conform to the award,[35] and if the award be conditional, so must be the judgment.[36]

f. Enforcement of Judgment. A judgment entered on an award may be enforced by execution as in the case of any other judgment.[37]

XII. PAROL EVIDENCE TO VARY OR EXPLAIN AWARD.

A. Admissibility — 1. In General. Where an award is in writing and expressed in unambiguous terms, and is not attacked on any of the grounds on which awards may be set aside, it is itself the best evidence of what the arbitrators intended and decided, and parol evidence is not admissible to vary or control its terms;[38] and

Notice to losing parties.— In mandamus to compel entry of judgment on an award, notice must be given to the losing parties; but, they having been fully heard on the petition, a continuance for formal notice is unnecessary. Dorr v. Hill, 62 N. H. 506.

35. Conformity to award.—Lamar v. Nicholson, 7 Port. (Ala.) 158; Nelson v. Andrews, 2 Mass. 164; Bouck v. Bouck, 57 Minn. 490, 59 N. W. 547.

Award directing mutual payments.— In entering judgment upon an award which determines that each party is entitled to recover of the other certain sums, judgment should be entered merely for the difference in favor of the party entitled to recover the greater sum. Rone v. Hines, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 93.

Release of part of award.— Judgment may be rendered on an award for a less sum than is awarded therein, if the prevailing party will release the difference. Phelps v. Goodman, 14 Mass. 252.

As to the power of the court to modify the award see supra, IX, B, 2, d, (II).

36. Conditional judgment.— Com. v. Pejepscut, 7 Mass. 399.

Award payable in instalments.— Where arbitrators awarded a sum of money payable in several annual instalments, it is error to order judgment for the whole amount payable immediately. Bouck v. Bouck, 57 Minn. 490, 59 N. W. 547.

37. By execution.—King v. Jemison, 33 Ala. 499; Com. v. Pejepscut, 7 Mass. 399. See also, generally, EXECUTIONS.

Necessity for judgment before execution.— An award, under the Pennsylvania act of 1705, cannot be executed until a judgment is entered upon it, and an execution issued before judgment in such case is void. Book v. Edgard, 3 Watts (Pa.) 29. But where the arbitration was not under that act, and the submission provided for the immediate issuance of execution, it was held that judgment on the award was not necessary to entitle the prevailing party to execution. Gallup v. Reynolds, 8 Watts (Pa.) 424.

Attachment when execution not adequate. —Where the writ of execution is not adequate, the court may grant a rule against the losing party to comply with the award, and, on his failure to do so, may attach him for the contempt. Burrows v. Guthrie, 61 Ill. 70; Shriver v. State, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 1.

(Mass.) 291; Wiswall v. Hall, Quincy (Mass.) 27. Mental reservations of arbitrators.— The arbitrators have no right to make mental reservations whereby to qualify their written award (Campbell v. Western, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 124); and so an arbitrator is not permitted so, where a written submission is couched in clear terms, parol evidence is not admissible to explain the intent and meaning of the parties.[39] However, it often becomes necessary in determining what questions are concluded by the award, or whether the award is in itself binding on the parties, to show by parol evidence what took place before the arbitrators, what was in controversy, and what matters entered into the decision.[40] And where the award is attacked in a proper proceeding for an extrinsic matter for which it may be avoided, parol evidence is, of course, admissible to show the facts.[41]

2. To Sustain Award. Parol testimony is admissible in either direct or indirect proceedings to sustain the award by showing facts as to which it is silent, provided such evidence does not contradict or vary the award.[42] But, where to testify that the award was not intended to be binding unless the losing party should consent to it (Denman v. Bayless, 22 Ill. 300); or that it was intended to reserve a certain matter for future determination (Barlow v. Todd, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 367, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 551).

A statutory arbitration and award cannot be proved by parol in a subsequent proceeding involving the same property. Wayte v. Wayte, 40 Ark. 163.

The testimony of a subscribing witness to the submission and award is the best evidence of their execution. Tyler v. Stephens, 7 Ga. 278.

May show non-compliance with award.— It is competent to introduce evidence to show a non-compliance with the terms of an award, inasmuch as that does not impeach the award but merely goes to show a non-compliance with its terms. Keaton v. Mulligan, 43 Ga. 308.

39. Intention of parties.— Furber v. Chamberlain, 29 N. H. 405; Leslie v. Leslie, 50 N. J. Eq. 155, 24 Atl. 1029; Cobb v. Dolphin Mfg. Co., 108 N. Y. 463, 15 N. E. 438; Sessions v. Barfield, 2 Bay (S. C.) 94.

What not a variance.— In Sharp v. Lipsey, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 113, it was held that where a submission was in writing it might be shown by parol that the parties afterward agreed that the arbitrators should have power to call in an umpire, since such evidence did not vary the submission but only rendered certain that which the parties did not intend to make certain by writing.

Methods used to arrive at result.— Where an award is drawn in question in a subsequent action involving the same subject-matter, evidence of the methods employed by the arbitrators in reaching their conclusions is not admissible, as this is not a proper subject of inquiry. Hall v. Norwalk F. Ins. Co., 57 Conn. 105, 17 Atl. 356.

Calculations or grounds for an award, which are not incorporated in or annexed to it at the time of the delivery, are not to be regarded or received as reasons or grounds to avoid it. Taylor v. Nicolson, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 67.

Paper taken as part of award.— Where a paper entitled a "General Result," containing a summary of the calculations of the arbitrators, accompanied their award, it was taken as part of it for the purposes of a hearing to set the award aside. Bell v. Price, 22 N. J. L. 578.

Declarations by an arbitrator, after making and publishing his award, are incompetent to impeach it. Hubbell v. Bissell, 2 Allen (Mass.) 196. See also Lemay v. McRae, 16 Ont. 307.

An ex parte statement of the evidence before the arbitrators, sworn to by the counsel of one of the parties, was held to be inadmissible at a hearing to set aside the award. Bell v. Price, 22 N. J. L. 578.

42. Evidence not varying award.— Riley v. Hicks, 81 Ga. 265, 7 S. E. 173; Stone v. Atwood, 28 Ill. 30; Robertson v. McNiel, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 578.

To show time of meeting.— Parol evidence is admissible in a proceeding to homologate an award to show that the arbitrators met at the time appointed in the submission, although the award does not show any meeting until a later date. Porter v. Dugat, 12 Mart. (La.) 245.

To show why one arbitrator did not sign.— Where an award which was made by two of three arbitrators recited that two arbitrators heard the allegations and proofs and made the award, it was held that parol evidence could be offered to show that the three arbitrators had been present at the hearing and at the final submission of the matters to them, and that the award, though signed by two only, the third one being absent, thinking his power had been revoked, was good and valid. Schultz v. Halsey, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 405.

To show when award returned.—Where the clerk of the district court omitted to make the usual indorsement on arbitration papers left with him to be filed, the testimony of one of the arbitrators is admissible to show that the award had been returned to the clerk within the time stipulated in the arbitration agreement. Young v. Dugan, 1 Greene (Iowa) 152.

Where arbitrator's authority questioned.— Where, in an action on an award, the authority of an arbitrator to make the award is drawn in question, he may be permitted to testify as to the time when, and the circumstances under which, his award was made.

there is no means of clearing up uncertainty in an award except by traveling out of the instrument altogether, and such uncertainty cannot be aided by reference to the submission, the award cannot be upheld by relying entirely on parol evidence.[43]

3. To Show That Award Is Void. Parol evidence is always admissible to show than an award is a mere nullity.[44]

4. To Show Extent of Submission and Award — a. In General. Where it does not certainly appear from the submission or award what matters were submitted to and decided by the arbitrators, parol evidence is admissible to show that fact.[45]

Claims not mentioned in award.— In an action on an award pursuant to a submission of a number of claims between the parties, where the award shows an itemized statement of the claims allowed, upon which a balance is struck, it is competent to show by the arbitrators that other claims not included in the statement were submitted and disallowed. Hammond v. Deehan, 78 Me. 399, 6 Atl. 3.

To show what considered on a former arbitration.—Defendant erected a mill-dam which overflowed the land of plaintiff. By agreement defendant was to pay damages which might result, to be assessed by arbitrators chosen by the parties. Three successive arbitraments were had and awards made. In an action upon the last award it appeared on the face of the award that the arbitrators had allowed damages adjudicated on in a prior arbitrament. It was held that parol evidence was admissible, as to what had been considered on a prior award, in order to show how far such award was conclusive. Hoagland v. Veghte, 23 N. J. L. 92.

To explain language of submission.— Parol evidence may be given to explain the expression "certain controversies and accounts" in a written submission. Faw v. Davy, 1 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 440, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,701.

b. Where Submission Oral. Under an oral submission to arbitration, it may be shown by parol evidence what matters were submitted to the arbitrators.[46] And if the award is also oral, the testimony of the arbitrator is admissible to show what was awarded.[47]

c. Submission of All Matters in Difference. In those jurisdictions wherein an award under a general submission of all matters in difference is regarded as merging such matters only as were actually presented to the arbitrators,[48] parol evidence is admissible to show what matters were, in fact, presented, provided the terms of the award be not varied thereby.[49] But where all matters in difference are regarded as merged whether brought forward or not, parol evidence is, of course, inadmissible.[50]

5. Testimony of Arbitrators — a. In General. The testimony of an arbitrator is, generally, admissible in any case where other parol evidence can be received — except to show his own fraud or misconduct — to prove matters of fact arising in connection with the arbitration.[51]

Interlineations in submission.— Where the effect of a submission and award was drawn in question in an action for damages on account of an alleged interlineation in the submission, it was held that the arbitrators were competent to testify as to the existence of the alleged interlineation at the time of the arbitration. Abel v. Fitch, 20 Conn. 90.

Submission extended by parol.— In an action of assumpsit upon promises made subsequent to, and in conformity with, an award, parol testimony to prove that other matters than those contained in the written submission were submitted to the arbitrators is admissible. The gist of the action seems to be neither the submission nor the award, but the subsequent promise for which there was an adequate consideration. The court said: "Had the action been brought for the breach of the agreement contained in the written submission, parol testimony to vary the terms of that submission would have been clearly inadmissible. Or had the suit been brought to recover money due and ascertained through an award of arbitrators for which an indebitatus assumpsit would have lain, the written submission must alone have been the basis of that award." Dice v. Yarnel, Morr. (Iowa) 241, 244.

46. What matters submitted.— Blackwell v. Goss, 116 Mass. 394; Tucker v. Gordon, 7 How. (Miss.) 306; Torrence v. Graham, 18 N. C. 284; Hall v. Mott, Brayt. (Vt.) 81.

Matter not presented to arbitrator.—A matter, not in terms included in a written award rendered upon an oral submission, may be shown by parol evidence not to have been, in fact, brought to the notice of the arbitrators or considered by them. Cook v. Jaques, 15 Gray (Mass.) 59; Birkbeck v. Burrows, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 63.

Question of fact for jury.— Where the submission is by parol and the award does not, on its face, purport to determine all matters of controversy between the parties, the question whether the matters involved in a subsequent suit were embraced in the submission and award is one of fact for the determination of the jury. Birkbeck v. Burrows, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 63.

47. What awarded.— Cady v. Walker, 62 Mich. 157, 28 N. W. 805, 4 Am. St. Rep. 834; Boughton v. Seamans, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 392, which was an action on a parol award, founded on a parol submission. It was held that the question to arbitrators: "What did you agree to?" did not, on its face, call for evidence touching the consultations or reasons of the arbitrators, but only a statement of what the award actually was, there being some dispute as to what the award was, owing to the phraseology in which it was delivered. The question was competent and an answer showing what the award was was admissible.

48. As to the effect of an award under a general submission as a merger of matters not considered see supra, IX, A, 2, a, (III), (B).

49. Parol evidence admissible.— Connecticut.— Bennett v. Pierce, 28 Conn. 315.

b. To Show Fraud or Misconduct. An arbitrator is not a competent witness to prove his own fraud or misconduct,[52] or the misconduct of a party involving also misconduct of the arbitrator.[53] But an arbitrator who has refused to join in the award may testify to acts of partiality or misconduct on the part of other arbitrators.[54]

B. Presumption and Burden of Proof. Where objection is taken to an award proper on its face, every reasonable presumption will be indulged in its favor.[55] in L. R. 5 H. L. 418, 41 L. J. Exch. 137, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1] Blackburn, J., said: "There is no case or authority that I can find that says an umpire or arbitrator is either incompetent as a witness or privileged from giving testimony as to any matter material to the issue. Of course, any attempt to annoy an arbitrator by asking questions tending to show that he had mistaken the law, or found a verdict against the weight of the evidence, should be at once checked, for these matters are irrelevant. But where the question is whether he did or did not entertain a question over which he had no jurisdiction, the matter is relevant, and nobody can be better qualified to give testimony on that matter than the umpire."

Canada.— In re Christie, 22 Ont. App. 21.

To sustain award.— Thus, the testimony of an arbitrator is admissible to sustain his award. Stone v. Atwood, 28 Ill. 30; Young v. Dugan, 1 Greene (Iowa) 152; Woodbury v. Northy, 3 Me. 85, 14 Am. Dec. 214; Robertson v. McNiel, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 578. But see Lloyd v. Seal, 5 Harr. (Del.) 250. Where the affidavits of the arbitrators are used in support of the award, the court, in its discretion, may permit the arbitrators to be orally examined at the instance of the party impeaching the award. Robinson v. Shanks, 118 Ind. 125, 20 N. E. 713.

To prove mistake.— So, the testimony is held to be admissible to prove a mistake in the award. King v. Armstrong, 25 Ga. 264; Pulliam v. Pensoneau, 33 Ill. 375; Barrows v. Sweet, 143 Mass. 316, 9 N. E. 665; Roop v. Brubacker, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 304. And see Jones v. Corry, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 187, 3 L. J. C. P. 89, 35 E. C. L. 109. But in Newland v. Douglass, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 62, where an action of assumpsit was brought to recover an amount caused by an arithmetical error of the arbitrators in making up their award, it was held that there was no such remedy at law as an action to recover for such a mistake in case of a submission not within the statute, and, consequently, the testimony of the arbitrators was inadmissible to prove the mistake.

To show award void.—Testimony of the arbitrators is held admissible to show that the award is a mere nullity.

What matters decided.— Testimony of the arbitrators is admissible to establish what matters were submitted and decided, where that fact is not apparent from the award itself.

C. Sufficiency of Evidence to Impeach. In order to justify the court in setting aside an award, the fraud or other ground of impeachment must be made out by clear and strong evidence.[56]

XIII. LIABILITY OF ARBITRATORS.

A. General Rule — No Liability. The action of arbitrators in pursuance of a submission of matters in controversy is judicial in its nature, and, therefore, they cannot be held liable in damages to either of the parties for failure to exercise care or skill in the performance of their functions,[57] and, like the judges of the courts, they are exempt from civil liability for the making of any award, although it is claimed to have been the result of fraud, corruption, or an unlawful conspiracy.[58]

B. Exceptions — 1. When Acting in Other Capacity. An arbitrator who acts also in a capacity other than that requiring judicial action — such as agent, receiver, or appraiser — is not exempted from liability for improper action in the latter capacity by reason of the fact that he is also an arbitrator.[59]

2. Forfeiture of Compensation. Although an arbitrator acting judicially is protected from civil liability for his wrongful acts, such acts as have rendered his award unavailing to a party may be relied upon to defeat an action by the arbitrator to recover compensation.[60]

I. POWER TO RAISE AND MAINTAIN.

A. In General. Congress is specifically authorized by the constitution[1] to raise and support armies (subject to the limitation that no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years), to provide and maintain a navy, and to make rules for the government of both forces,[2] and this power is not affected by the amendments.[3]

B. Calling Militia Into Service. By the same instrument authority is given to provide for calling forth the militia,[4] the question whether an exigency has arisen requiring this step being for the exclusive determination of the president,[5] who may vest the power of summoning them in a subordinate.[6] The militia, when in the active service of the United States, may be governed by congress.[7] Where a militiaman, who has been called into the military service of the United States, refuses to attend at a rendezvous, his subjection to military discipline and organization may be compelled by military force.[8]

II. OFFICERS.

A. In General. An officer of the United States is one who holds his place by virtue of an appointment by the president, by one of the courts of justice, or

By whom commanded.— Where the exigencies exist authorizing the employment of the militia by the United States, the militia, unless commanded by the president of the United States in person, can be commanded only by their own officers. In re Opinion of Judges, 8 Mass. 548.
The expenses of the militia in the active service of the United States under requisition of the president, are to be borne by the general government. Com. v. Pierce, 4 Rand. (Va.) 432.

by heads of departments authorized by law to make such appointment.[9] The term "officers," as used in the statutes, has reference to commissioned officers only — that is, officers who hold, as evidence of their right to office, a commission, signed by the president, sealed with the seal, and attested by the secretary of war.[10]

B. Appointment — 1. How Made. The appointment to office can be made only by the executive branch of the government, in the manner approved by the constitution, and not by congressional enactment.[11] The power of appointment is not incident to the president as an exclusive power of his office, but is subject to the advice and consent of the senate,[12] and his appointment does not take effect until after it has been confirmed by the senate.[13]

2. Effect of Appointment — a. In General. A message of the president, informing the senate of the dismissal of a naval officer, and the consent of the senate to the nomination of his successor, followed by a commission in due form, invests the successor with the office, and gives him exclusive right to the pay and allowance attached thereto.[14]

b. Not Retroactive. The appointment of an officer cannot be made retroactive, but takes effect from its confirmation.[15]

c. When Made During Recess of Senate. An officer who is appointed during a recess of the senate and serves until notified that his nomination has been rejected is legally appointed and entitled to the office until notified of his rejection.[16]

d. When Made Provisionally. A volunteer officer may be appointed provisionally, in which case his appointment is limited by the terms which he accepts and under which he acts.[17]

C. Commissions. The appointment of an officer is ordinarily made by granting a commission,[18] an instrument signed by the president, sealed with the seal, Warrant officers.— In Johnson v. U. S., 2 Ct. Cl. 167, it was held that a warrant officer in the navy was an officer within the meaning of 2 U. S. Stat. at L. 390, which fixes the complement of officers for each vessel in service.

17. Greer v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cl. 182, wherein it was held that compliance with the conditions of the appointment, which required the officer to pass the examining board, to be confirmed by the senate, and commissioned by the president, was necessary before he could acquire a vested right to the office.

18. O'Shea v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 392.

"Warrant" and "commission," outside of naval technicality, are synonymous words. There is no difference, in form, between a and attested by the secretary of war,[19] which evidences the officer's right to his office.[20] A commission is not essential, however, and an open and unequivocal act of appointment to office is effective even though no commission is issued.[21]

D. Promotion — 1. Qualifications. Seniority of rank alone gives no right to promotion, but the officer must be physically, mentally, and morally qualified therefor.[22]

2. Examination — a. In General. The officer's qualifications in these matters are passed upon by an examining board, which cannot inquire into any fact which occurred prior to the last examination whereby he was promoted, and which was inquired into and passed upon, unless the fact, continuing, shows his unfitness for duty, but may take into consideration all matters arising subsequently in his record which will aid them in determining his mental, moral, and professional qualifications.[23]

b. Reëxamination After Failure to Pass. In case an officer is found, upon examination, not to be professionally qualified for promotion, he is entitled to another examination after a lapse of one year.[24]

c. Approval of Findings by President. The president's approval or disapproval of the findings of the examining board as to the qualifications of an officer for promotion are required before any action can be taken in reference to his promotion.[25]

3. Effect of Brevet Promotion. The promotion of an officer by a brevet does not release him from any duty or service attached to his commission by the regulations or by usage.[26]

E. Rank and Grade — 1. Actual — a. In General. The position and rank of officers depend upon the provisions of positive law.[27]

27. Babbitt v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 202.

"Office" and "rank" distinguished. — In the army "office" and "rank" are not necessarily identical, but the office has a rank attached to it, expressed by its title, when no other rank is conferred. The office remaining the same, however, the officer may have a different rank conferred on him, as a title of distinction, to fix his relative position with reference to other officers as to privilege, precedence, or command, or to determine his pay.

b. How and When Obtained. To obtain rank an officer must be eligible for promotion, must pass an examination, must be nominated by the president to the senate, and must be confirmed by that body.[28] He takes rank in his grade, however, from the time the law entitled him to do so, and not necessarily from the time he is actually commissioned.[29]

c. Not a Vested Right. The relative rank of officers is not a vested right nor a matter of contract, but is subject to regulation by the legislation of congress and to the action of the executive departments in the scope of their discretion.[30]

2. Brevet. Brevet rank is conferred, for special and meritorious service, by a commission from the president, under authority of an act of congress. It does not entitle the holder to corresponding pay or command except under special circumstances defined by law,[31] and may relate back to a period antecedent to the actual date of the appointment and commission.[32] An officer regularly commissioned is of higher rank than one holding the same commission by brevet.[33]

F. Resignation — 1. What Constitutes. To constitute a valid resignation, there must be some unequivocal indication of an intention to resign on the officer's part,[34] and he must receive due notice of the acceptance of his resignation.[35]

2. Effect. A written resignation addressed to the proper authority by a commissioned officer, and an acceptance of the same, duly notified to the incumbent in the customary mode, creates a vacancy in the office.[36]

Wood v. U. S., 107 U. S. 414, 2 S. Ct. 551, 27 L. ed. 542 [affirming 15 Ct. Cl. 151]. In the navy, however, the pay of staff officers is fixed, generally, according to, and by the designation or title of, the offices held by them, and does not depend upon their rank; so the rank of staff officers in that service is usually operative only in determining the relation of the different officers to each other, in matters of precedence, privilege, and the like, and is generally called relative rank. Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 151.

Grade is a step or degree in either office or rank, and has reference to the divisions of one or the other, or both, according to the connection in which the word is employed. Schuetze v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cl. 299; Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 151. As used in U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 1588, fixing the pay of retired officers, the word refers to the division of officers into periods of service of five years each. McClure v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cl. 347; Rutherford v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cl. 339; Thornley v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cl. 111.

Cl. 392, wherein it was held that an officer who, having been appointed in a recess of the senate, taken his oath, and notified his acceptance to the war department, is requested by the adjutant-general to return the letter of appointment as having been sent him prematurely, does not, by obeying the order, resign his office.

The acquiescence of an officer on the active list in the action of the department in dismissing him is equivalent to a resignation (Ide v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cl. 401); but this is not true in the case of an officer on the retired list (Fletcher v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 541).

The validity of an officer's resignation is not affected by the fact that he placed an undated resignation in the hands of his commanding officer, authorizing him to fill it in and forward it to the proper authority in the event of the happening of a certain contingency. B. D. 13, 57 L. T. Rep. N. S. 477; In re Hearson, 64 L. T. Rep. N. G. Retirement — 1. In General. Officers are divided into two classes — those on the active list, who perform active duty, and those on the retired list, who perform no duty in time of peace.[37] The retired list is filled from officers on the active list.[38]

2. How Effected — a. Examination by Retiring Board. The officer goes before a duly organized retiring board, which examines into his capacity for active service, and, if it finds him incapacitated, determines the cause, and whether it is an incident of the service.[39]

b. Findings — (I) Approval by President. After the examination, a record of the proceedings and decision of the board must be made and transmitted to the secretary of the department, and by him laid before the president for his approval, disapproval, or orders in the case.[40]

(II) Effect. The finding of a retiring board, approved by the president, fixes the fact that an officer's incapacity was or was not caused by something arising in the line of his duty, and when that fact has been so fixed the department cannot review it.[41] The legal effect of the finding that an officer is unfit for active service is to put him on leave or waiting orders.[42] If there is any defect or irregularity in the report of the board, it is the duty of the officer to object, without unreasonable delay.[43]

3. Duties. As a general rule, an army officer on the retired list cannot be

An immediate and unconditional resignation tendered by an officer in the army includes his position on the retired list as well as that on the list for active service. Turnley v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cl. 317.

37. Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cl. 604; Thornley v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cl. 111.

The class of retired officers was created by 12 U. S. Stat. at L. 287. Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cl. 604.

In the military service retired officers constitute two distinct classes — those retired from active service only, and officers wholly retired, the former being considered as still in the service (Hill v. Territory, 2 Wash. Terr. 147, 7 Pac. 63; Tyler's Motion, 18 Ct. Cl. 25, in which case it was held that a retired officer could not act as attorney to prosecute a claim against the United States); while the latter are entirely out of the service (Tyler v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 223).

In the naval service there are two classes of retired officers — those whose incapacity was caused by their service being placed on the retired list, while those whose incapacity was not an incident of the service are placed on the retired list on furlough pay. Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S. 568, 5 S. Ct. 648, 28 L. ed. 1079. The transfer of a naval officer from the furlough to the retired list does not abrogate the finding of the retiring board, but that remains in his record and determines his position. Potts v. U. S., 125 U. S. 173, 8 S. Ct. 830, 31 L. ed. 661; Burchard v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 137. Such transfer may be antedated so as to make it date back to the day of the officer's retirement. U. S. v. Burchard, 125 U. S. 176, 8 S. Ct. 832, 31 L. ed. 662 [reversing 19 Ct. Cl. 137].

38. Thompson v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cl. 604.

39. Magaw v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 3.

To entitle him to be placed on the retired list, it is incumbent on an officer to show that his incapacity was the result of some incident of the service, and the report of the board that there was no evidence to support such a finding is, to all intents and purposes, a report that the incapacity was not the result of an incident of the service. Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S. 568, 5 S. Ct. 648, 28 L. ed. 1079 [affirming 18 Ct. Cl. 537].

Warrant officers may be placed upon the retired list, upon certain findings as to the cause of their incapacity, whenever they shall report themselves unable to comply with an order to perform appropriate duties, or whenever, in the judgment of the president, they are, in any manner, incapacitated from the performance of their duties. Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S. 568, 5 S. Ct. 648, 28 L. ed. 1079 [affirming 18 Ct. Cl. 537].

40. U. S. v. Burchard, 125 U. S. 176, 8 S. Ct. 832, 31 L. ed. 662; Magaw v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 3.

The president's right to determine whether an officer shall be placed on the retired list or wholly retired is entirely dependent upon the letter of positive enactment. He is authorized, when acting upon the board's report, to retain the officer in the active service, or wholly retire him from active service (McBlair v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 528; Miller v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 338); but this is not a continuing power, and, when the findings have been approved, neither the department nor the president can change them (U. S. v. Burchard, 125 U. S. 176, 8 S. Ct. 832, 31 L. ed. 662; McBlair v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 528; Miller v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 338).

42. Hotchkin v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cl. 18.

43. Brown v. U. S., 113 U. S. 568, 5 S. Ct. 648, 28 L. ed. 1079 [affirming 18 Ct. Cl. 537], in which case it was held that, after a naval officer has, during the remainder of his life, acquiesced in the proceedings of the retiring board, it does not lie with his administratrix to object to them for a mere irregularity.

assigned to duty except at the Soldiers' Home, but congress may at any time impose upon him special duties, which he will have to perform.[44]

H. Dismissal — 1. In General. An officer of the navy, appointed for a definite time or during good behavior, has no vested interest or contract right in his office of which congress cannot deprive him;[45] and while, by usage, the tenure of a military office has been for life or during good behavior, it has always been subject to the will of the president.[46]

2. Powers of President — a. In Absence of Statute. In the absence of statutory enactment, the president has power to dismiss an officer in the military or naval service for any cause which, in his judgment, would render the officer unsuitable for the service, or whose dismissal would promote the public service.[47] He may act without the concurrence of the senate,[48] and his action is not reviewable in the court of claims.[49]

b. Under Statutory Enactment — (1) In General. By statute,[50] the president's power to dismiss officers of the army or navy,[51] except upon the sentence of a court martial, has been limited to time of war;[52] but, under later statutes, the president may, under certain circumstances, dismiss an officer in time of peace.[53]

In the British army every officer holds his office subject to the will of the crown, and is liable to be dismissed at any moment, without cause assigned; and there is no such thing as a military appointment permanent in the sense of being tenable for life, or until the holder is disqualified by misconduct or incapacity from fulfilling the duties attached to it. In re Tufnell, L. The East Indian Company, before 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106, when the government of India was transferred to the crown, had the absolute power to dismiss or compel the retirement of an officer in the Indian army, at the will and pleasure of the company, and such power, being in the nature of a crown prerogative, could not be waived by contract between the company and its officers. The purpose of this enactment was not to attach a life-tenure or element of vested right to the office, but to save officers from a hasty and dishonorable dismissal in time of peace. Street v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cl. 230.

53. Desertion.— The act of July 15, 1870, c. 294, § 17, authorized the president to drop from the rolls of the army for desertion any officer absent from duty for three months without leave. Under this statute jurisdiction to find the fact of desertion was vested in the president alone, and his decision was not subject to review. Newton v. U. S., 18 Ct. Cl. 435.

Drunkenness.— It is now provided that the president can discharge an officer of the navy who is unfit, by reason of drunkenness, to perform the duties of a position to which it is proposed to promote him. Jouett v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 257.

Supernumerary officers.— Under the act of congress of July 15, 1870, the president was authorized, on the recommendation of a board therein provided for, to muster out of the military service any officers deemed by the board unfit, for certain reasons, to discharge their duties, the officers to have a hearing before the board, and was also authorized to transfer officers to the supernumerary list. It was further provided, in a subsequent section, that "if any supernumerary officers shall remain after the first day of January next, they shall be honorably mustered out." Under this statute it was held that the government might discontinue proceedings commenced against an officer under the former section, and muster him out under the provisions of the latter section; that no limitation was placed by the statute upon the time within which officers might be transferred to the supernumerary list; and that where the validity of an order of the president mustering out an officer under the provisions of the statute had been recognized by several acts of congress, the question whether it was in technical compliance with the statute could not be considered. Street v. U. S., 133 U. S. 299, 10 S. Ct. 309, 33 L. ed. 631.

The exercise by the president of the power

(II) Dismissal by Appointment of Successor. The prohibition against the dismissal of any officer in the military or naval service except upon, and in pursuance of, the sentence of a court martial does not deprive the president of the power to supersede an officer by the appointment of a successor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate,[54] and the mere appointment of a successor in such manner operates as the removal of the prior incumbent.[55]

3. Power of Department. Congress may restrict, as it appears best for the public interest, the removal of officers whose appointment it has vested in the heads of departments.[56]

4. Order of Dismissal. It is not necessary that an order issued by the secretary of the navy, dismissing a naval officer or appointing his successor, should state in so many words that it is the act of the president.[57]

5. Notice to Officer. The discharge of an officer of the army does not take effect, so as to relieve the government from its obligations to him, until he is notified of the fact, and is actually discharged from the service.[58]

6. Effect of Unwarranted Dismissal. An unwarranted dismissal from the naval service of an officer by the secretary of the navy is of no effect.[59]

I. Reinstatement. As a rule, an appointment by the president, confirmed by the senate, is necessary to reinstate an officer of the army or navy who has lost his office through being dismissed,[60] or wholly retired,[61] or where he has resigned given by the statute to transfer officers to the supernumerary list was not dependent on the consent of the officer. Byrne v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cl. 251.

The examining board authorized by the statute was not a court martial and the president could set aside its proceedings; and his order mustering out officers of the army under this statute could not be collaterally impeached for irregularities of the board on whose recommendation he acted. Duryea v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cl. 24.

Appointment does not supersede retired officer.— In Fletcher v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 541, it was held that the action of the president, with the advice and consent of the senate, in filling a vacancy on the active list of the army, is not such an exercise of the appointing power as to amount to the dismissal of an officer on the retired list.

55. McElrath v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. 201.

Where an officer is appointed by the president in place of one who has been sentenced by a court martial to dismissal from the navy, it is immaterial whether the court martial was a legal body. Mullan v. U. S., 140 U. S. 240, 11 S. Ct. 788, 35 L. ed. 489.

and has been notified of the acceptance of his resignation,[62] unless the vacancy occurs during a recess of the senate, in which case the president may grant a commission, to expire at the end of the next succeeding session.[63] Congress, however, may, by a private act, authorize the president to reinstate a discharged army officer, in which case he may do so without the advice and consent of the senate.[64]

J. Pay and Allowances — 1. Pay — a. In General — (I) Power of Congress to Control. Pay is a fixed and direct amount given by law to persons in the service in consideration of, and as compensation for, their personal service.[65] Congress has full control of this compensation,[66] and, where it is fixed by the law which provides for its payment, it can neither be increased nor diminished by an order or regulation of a department or of the president, unless the power to do so is conferred by an act of congress.[67]

(II) Of Army Officers — (A) In General. All officers of the army, whether on the active or retired list, with the single exception of chaplains, are paid according to their rank,[68] and are entitled to pay, if they were properly commissioned and performed the duties of their rank, though in fact never mustered in.[69]

(B) Mounted Officers. Where the service to which an officer is assigned requires that he be mounted, he is entitled to the pay of a mounted officer from
