Antedating commission.— The appointing power cannot, by antedating the appointment or commission of an officer, create a liability on the part of the government for his pay. Collins v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 22.

Antedating discharge.—An officer's right to pay down to the time of his discharge cannot be impaired by an order of the war department directing such discharge to bear a date earlier than that on which it was issued. Allstaedt v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cl. 284.

Regulations must be uniform.— While the amount of this compensation may depend in some degree upon the regulations of the department, such regulations must be uniform and applicable to all officers under the same circumstances. Brevet rank.— The act of congress of April 16, 1818, § 1, providing that brevet officers should receive the pay of their brevet rank when on duty and having a command according to that rank, was not repealed by the act of congress of June 30, 1834, c. 132. U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How. (U. S.) 556, 11 L. ed. 724. But this rule was changed by the act of congress of March 3, 1865. Pope v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 693.

An officer appointed provisionally, subject to the action of an examining board, even though he is assigned to duty, until the action of such board is not in service or in commission, so as to entitle him to pay. Greer v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cl. 182. So, too, an officer, provisionally appointed until duly notified that his services are no longer required, is not entitled to pay for the interval between the time when he knows he has been rejected and the time when he receives his discharge, where he performs no military service during the interval. Greer v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cl. 182.

the day of the assignment;[70] but, if his department commander refuses to certify on his pay-accounts that he is entitled to the pay of a mounted officer, he is not entitled to be reimbursed for the expense incurred in performing his duty, mounted, after the certification has been refused.[71]

(III) Of Navy Officers—(A) In General. By the laws governing the navy the pay of staff officers is, generally, fixed according to, and by the designation or title of, the offices held by them, and does not depend upon their rank.[72]

(B) Sea-Pay—(1) In General. A naval officer is not entitled to sea-pay and allowances while performing shore-duty, except where it is so provided by express statute;[73] and, on the other hand, the secretary of the navy has no authority to diminish an officer's compensation as established by law by declaring that to be shore-service which is, in fact, sea-service.[74] The right of the officer to sea-pay begins when his sea-service begins, independent of any order of the navy department.[75]

(2) What Constitutes Sea-Service. To constitute sea-service it must be performed at sea,[76] under orders of a department and in vessels employed by authority of law,[77] or on a vessel which is subject to, and actually governed by, rules and regulations which are applicable to service at sea.[78]

The words "after date of appointment" and "from such date," which occur in U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 1556, fixing the annual pay of passed assistant surgeons of the navy, refer, not to the original entry of the officer into the service as an assistant surgeon, but to the notification by the secretary of the navy that he has passed his examination for promotion to the grade of surgeon, and will thereafter, until such promotion, be considered as a passed assistant surgeon. U. S. v. Moore, 95 U. S. 760, 24 L. ed. 588.

Warrant officers.— In the act of congress of April 21, 1806, c. 35, § 3, relating to the pay of naval officers, and providing that "the said officers shall receive no more than half their monthly pay" during the time when they shall not be under orders for actual service, warrant officers are included under the general words "said officers." Johnson v. U. S., 2 Ct. Cl. 167.

If a naval officer is delayed in his promotion because he has not been examined owing to his absence on duty, he is entitled, when promoted, to the increased pay of the new grade from the time when he should have been examined (Hunt v. U. S., 116 U. S. 394, 6 S. Ct. 406, 29 L. ed. 674); but under such circumstances, if he is found unqualified for promotion at his first examination, and does not become qualified until after reëxamination, he is not entitled to the pay of his new grade from time when he should have been examined (Austin v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl. 269).

b. Of Captured Officers. The status of an officer is not changed by his capture by the enemy, so far as his relations to the government are concerned, but he is entitled to all the rights which he had in actual service, under the conditions which existed at the time of his capture, unless he contributed to it by negligence while acting contrary to his orders, and not in discharge of his duties.[79]

c. Of Reinstated Officers. Where an officer is reinstated, his right to pay for the period during which he was out of the service does not depend on the date of his commission, but on the will of congress, expressed in the law reinstating him.[80]

d. Of Retired Officers. A retired officer is still an officer, and his retired pay is the equivalent of salary.[81] Such an officer is entitled to receive only three-quarters of the maximum pay of the rank on which he was retired, regardless of the length of his service,[82] and his pay is subject to such alteration as congress may see fit to make.[83]

e. Upon Resigning. An officer's pay does not cease when he tenders his resignation, but continues, if he remains in actual service, doing actual duty, until he is notified that it has been accepted.[84]

f. While Waiting Orders. An officer at home, waiting orders, is entitled to full pay during such period, even though the assignment was made at his own request.[85]

g. Longevity-Pay.—(I) In General. Longevity-pay is extra compensation for longevity in actual service.[86] This increase does not attach to the commutation of fuel and quarters which is allowed officers.[87] The rate of increased compensation is fixed by the lowest grade having graduated pay which has been held by the officer since last entering the service;[88] but if he has entered the service but once his first entry is to be taken as his last entry,[89] and this holds true where he resigns his office to immediately accept an office of higher rank.[90] Longevity-pay is to be computed, except where otherwise provided, from the day the officer's commission was signed by the president, and not from an antecedent date mentioned in the body of the commission.[91]

(II) Of Retired Officers. Army officers, retired from active service with reduced pay, are still in the service, and are entitled to the increased pay which the law allows for every five years' service while in that condition.[92] Officers of the navy on the retired list are not entitled to an increase of pay by reason of longevity while on that list,[93] nor does active service by an officer on the retired list operate to post-date the time of his retirement so as to increase longevity-pay.[94]

h. Not Assignable. Neither the full pay of an officer,[95] nor half-pay of a retired officer,[96] is assignable at law.[97]

i. Forfeiture and Stoppage of Pay. Forfeiture of pay occurs only by sentence of a court martial or upon conviction of specified military offenses.[98] Stoppage of pay rests in the discretion of the secretary of war,[99] but can be legally made only by reason of an accountability to the United States.[1] Lapse of time does not preclude the government from enforcing a forfeiture of pay incurred by an officer.[2]

j. Recovery Back of Amount Paid De Facto Officer. Where an officer de facto renders service and receives pay in good faith, the money paid to him cannot be recovered back on proof that his appointment to the army was invalid;[3] but where one claiming to be an officer renders no service and holds no official relation with the service, money paid him for salary may be recovered back.[4]

2. Allowances — a. In General. Allowances are indirect or contingent remuneration which may or may not be earned, and which is sometimes in the nature of compensation, and sometimes in the nature of reimbursement.[5]

b. Power of Departments to Control. It is within the authority of the proper department, under the sanction of the president, to establish general rules of uniform application, regulating the allowance of extra compensation to officers, which, when duly promulgated, will be binding on the rights of the officers;[6] but allowances other than those specifically provided for are prohibited by statute.[7] This prohibition, however, does not prevent the payment to an officer of expenses arising while on a special mission,[8] nor giving him money, to be expended, in accordance with instructions, for a specified purpose;[9] but constructive allowances of pay will not be allowed except where the intention is clearly indicated.[10]

c. When Entitled to — (I) In General. An officer can make no charge for extra services where the duties performed necessarily belong to his office,[11] or where he voluntarily renders additional service without demanding extra compensation, and upon the implied condition that he will not do so.[12]

(II) Retired Officers. Where a retired officer renders services which could not be required of him, he is entitled to extra compensation.[13]

(III) When Performing Duties of Two Offices. An officer who holds another incompatible office to which a different salary is attached is not entitled to the salary of both offices,[14] but is entitled to the larger salary.[15] But a retired officer may hold an office in the executive department, and receive salary therefor, without barring his right to pay as a retired officer,[16] and payment by a state to an officer of the United States does not in any way affect the rate of pay which he is entitled to receive from the United States.[17]

3. Commutation of Fuel and Quarters — a. In General. A commutation of fuel and quarters constitutes no part of the pay proper of officers, but is merely designed to meet certain expenses which they will necessarily incur in the discharge of their duties.[18]

b. Who Entitled to. As a general rule, to be entitled to this commutation, the officer must have made unsuccessful application for fuel and quarters;[19] but this is not requisite where there are no quarters assignable to officers on duty.[20]

c. How Ascertained. The commutation of fuel and quarters is ascertained by a reference to the pay given the officer by statute,[21] which includes longevity-pay as well as the pay attached to his office.[22]

4. Mileage — a. In General. Mileage is a compensation allowed by law to officers for their trouble and expense in traveling on public business.[23] To entitle an officer thereto, he must have traveled upon such business under orders,[24] it, ordinarily, being for his commanding officer to determine whether the public business requires that he should travel.[25] Officers of the navy, while traveling under orders, are entitled to mileage for traveling within, as well as without, the United States.[26]

b. How Computed. When only the terminus of the journey is specified in the orders for a naval officer, leaving to his discretion the choice of route, his mileage should be calculated by the shortest route usually traveled, regardless of the distance actually traveled, unless some good cause is shown for the deviation;[27] but where his route is prescribed by superior authority he is entitled to

S. 219, 24 L. ed. 116, in which case it was held, in determining an officer's right to fuel and quarters, that a military station is merely synonymous with the term "military post," and means a place where troops are established, where military stores, animate or inanimate, are kept or distributed, where military duty is performed, or military protection afforded, or where something more or less connected with arms or war is kept, or is to be done); nor can he, when ordered home to await orders, recover commutation for fuel and quarters while traveling from his post to his home (Chilson v. U. Mileage is allowed where an officer is ordered home, to await orders, from a post at which he is doing duty (U. S. v. Graham, 110 U. S. 219, 3 S. Ct. 582, 28 L. ed. 126; U. S. v. Phisterer, 94 U. S. 219, 24 L. ed. 116); to an officer who, in compliance with orders, performs a duty while he is absent on leave (Andrews v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 264), unless the duty is performed at the place where he is spending his leave (Barr v. U. S., 14 Ct. Cl. 272, in which case it was held that an officer who was so ordered to temporary duty was not entitled to mileage when ordered back to his regular station, even though the temporary duty detained him until after his leave has expired); and to an officer ordered abroad by the war department for the purpose of collecting information for the department (Matter of Billings, 23 Ct. Cl. 166).

Mileage is not allowed where an exchange is made, from one station to another, by an officer at his own request (U. S. v. Phisterer, 94 U. S. 219, 24 L. ed. 116. But see Barker v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 288, holding that where a squadron commander on the high seas decides that there are no habitable quarters for certain warrant officers on their ship, and detaches them, with permission to return home, they are entitled to mileage, for the cause of their travel is public business, and that it is immaterial that they were not ordered home, and that they themselves requested to be sent); where an officer, on leave of absence, is ordered to rejoin his company, which has changed its post since his leave began (Romeyn v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl. 373); where an officer, provisionally appointed, subject to the action of an examining board, is discharged after rejection by the board, even though he has been assigned to military duty (Greer v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cl. 182); nor where the officer is delinquent and ordered to travel at his own expense (Hannum v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 516; Perrimond v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 509, in which last case it was held that a naval officer failing to join his ship when she sailed, and ordered by his superior officer to join her at his own expense, is not entitled to mileage for his travel in so doing).

25. Hannum v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 516. But an order which enforces upon an officer additional duty at another point, his personal attention being required to his duty at both places, invests him with discretion to determine when his presence is necessary at either, and entitles him to mileage for travel between the two. Ct. 117, 32 L. ed. 506 [affirming 23 Ct. Cl. 104], where an officer was traveling at the time when the mode of computing mileage was changed, and it was held that the mileage for each part of mileage for the distance actually traveled.[28] The question whether an officer in traveling is abroad or within the United States, in computing the mileage to which he is entitled, should be determined by the termini of the journey rather than by the route actually taken.[29]

5. Rations — a. Double Rations — (I) In General. The mere making of a provision by congress for double rations does not determine what officers are entitled to them.[30] The discretionary power to allow such additional number of rations to officers commanding separate posts as he may think just, having respect to the special circumstances of each case, is vested in the president;[31] but the proper department may designate a post as entitled to double rations, its act in so doing being deemed the president's act.[32]

(II) Who Entitled To. No officer is entitled to additional rations unless he be a commandant at a separate post;[33] but, when an officer presents with his account an authentic document or certificate of his having commanded a post or arsenal for which double rations have been allowed by the war department under the army regulations, his right to them is established, and they cannot be withheld.[34]

b. Sea-Going Rations. Officers on duty at the navy department are not entitled to the rations allowed officers attached to sea-going vessels,[35] nor is an officer of the marine corps a naval officer, so as to be entitled to this ration when attached to a sea-going vessel.[36]

K. Duties and Powers — 1. Of Army Officers — a. In General. The duties and powers of a military officer of the United States are regulated by law, and are for the court to determine;[37] but it is an unbending rule of the law that the his journey was to be computed according to the statute in force at the time it was made, the former statute applying to the first part of his journey, and the latter to that part of his journey which was undertaken after its enactment.

But the ratification, by the secretary of the navy, of an officer's action in choosing a different route from that which he was ordered to take is as effective as antecedent authority in establishing the officer's right to mileage. The adjutant and inspector-general has no exercise of military power, when the rights of the citizen are concerned, shall never be pushed beyond what exigency requires.[38]

b. To Confer Power of Appointment. A quartermaster is not authorized to confer a power of appointment on another person.[39]

c. To Contract For Government — (i) In General. Only officers specially empowered so to do are authorized to bind the government by express contract,[40] and in the exercise of this power they are bound by the rate of compensation[41] and the articles[42] allowed by law. No claim against the United States can be based upon a purchase within the enemy's lines,[43] and a contract regularly made between United States officials and a contractor for the delivery of supplies at a military post cannot be modified by an oral agreement with an inferior officer.[44]

(ii) Necessity of Advertising. A parol contract entered into by a quartermaster, without previous advertisement and without an exigency declared by the commanding officer, is void.[45] Where an exigency exists, however, supplies may be purchased, without advertisement under orders of the commanding officer,[46] in distinct command; his duties consist in details of service, and not in active military command. Parker v. U. S., 1 Pet. (U. S.) 293, 7 L. ed. 150.

Protection of property.— It is the duty of a de facto officer to protect government property in his charge, and when such an officer procures tarpaulins to protect from the weather public property in his custody, the government, as bailee for hire, becomes liable to the owner for a reasonable compensation while they continue in its service, and for their reasonable value if lost or destroyed. Protection to party furnishing supplies.— An officer may contract for the government to furnish "sufficient guards and escorts to protect the contractor while engaged in the fulfilment of this contract," it not being an agreement to protect a citizen in his ordinary pursuits, but being of the nature of a contract of indemnity or insurance, where the government is interested in the fulfilment, and where there is a risk which one party or the other must assume. whom exists the exclusive power to declare an emergency.[47] Such contract must be ordered by the commanding officer,[48] and the order must be given in writing.[49] The right is limited, moreover, to the continuance of the emergency.[50]

(III) Necessity of Approval. Where a contract is made under orders in due form of law no approval is necessary;[51] but where a contract was not authorized it must be approved by the proper authority.[52]

2. Of Navy Officers. The commander of a vessel of war has a right to issue and enforce orders as to the discipline of his ship,[53] and, on this principle, may control the issue of stores by the purser, but not vary their price.[54] But a naval officer has no authority, by virtue of his office alone, to charter a steamer for the use of the quartermaster's department,[55] or to deliver materials, arising from the breaking up of a war-vessel, to a contractor for the repair of another war-vessel, in payment for the work of the latter, where such materials are not used in the repairs, but are sold by the contractor for his private benefit.[56]

L. Leave of Absence. Authority to give leave of absence is committed by law to certain persons, the mode of application pointed out, and the maximum of its duration prescribed.[57] When granted, an officer is at liberty to go where he wishes during the permitted absence, to employ his time as he pleases, and to surrender his leave if he chooses, the only requirement being that he shall report at his post at the expiration of the leave.[58] His post is not changed by the fact that, after he has been granted leave of absence, he is ordered to perform temporary duty at another station, and while there accepts his leave.[59]

III. DISBURSING AGENTS.

53. Detaining marine after expiration of term.— The commanding officer of an exploring expedition may detain a marine after the term of his enlistment has expired, if, in his opinion, the public interest requires it; and may compel him to do duty, by the use of the proper degree of punishment. general staff is to include the officers of the pay department, are not evidence of the correctness of such classification of a paymaster in the general staff of the army so as to determine his pay.[61]

2. Commission on Disbursements. Officers who, out of the line of their duty,[62] disburse moneys are sometimes allowed extra pay for such services,[63] generally a percentage of the amount disbursed.[64]

B. Liabilities — 1. In General. A disbursing officer to whom money is advanced is liable therefor as a debtor, and not merely as a bailee;[65] but, by a statute[66] retrospective in its operation,[67] the court of claims is authorized to afford relief to such officers[68] where, without any fault or neglect on their part,[69] their money[70] or vouchers[71] are captured by the enemy, or where their funds are stolen.[72] The officer's testimony alone is insufficient to show that the loss was without his fault or neglect, especially when it appears that there were disinterested persons cognizant of all the circumstances.[73] The relief afforded by this statute is not forfeited by accounting for the full amount lost.[74]

2. Entitled to What Credits. A disbursing officer is entitled to credit for payments made by order of his superiors,[75] for payments to officers prior to receiving notice that their pay has been stopped,[76] and for payments of office rent and clerk-hire necessary to the prosecution of his duties.[77]

C. Liabilities of Sureties. The sureties on a disbursing officer's bond are responsible for his faithful performance of any service he may lawfully be required to perform,[78] and they are not relieved from liability by the failure of the government to recall a delinquent officer,[79] or to adjust his accounts when he reports himself ready for settlement.[80]

IV. NAVAL CADETS.

A. Examinations. A cadet, while upon the two years' cruise prescribed as a part of the course at the Naval Academy, is still a member of the academy, and is subject to final examination before graduation from the institution;[81] and a cadet who has been found deficient at any examination has no right to continue at the academy unless upon the recommendation of the academic board.[82] The secretary of the navy cannot drop a cadet, however, because he has not been examined for promotion.[83]

B. Term of Office. The term of office of naval cadets is not a term for life;[84] but expires with the completion of their six years' course, and they then cease to be officers in the navy if not appointed to another office.[85]

V. ENLISTED MEN.

A. Enlistment — 1. Who May Enlist — a. In General. Enlistment being only another and less objectionable mode of securing military service, any person liable to be drafted[86] may voluntarily enlist.[87]

b. Persons Over Prescribed Age. Though persons are required by statute to be between certain ages to be proper subjects for enlistment, one over the maximum age, who was enlisted on his representation that he was under such age, cannot avoid his contract.[88]

c. Family Man. A regulation of the army, providing that no man having a wife or child shall be enlisted in time of peace,[89] is merely a directory regulation of the war department, and an enlistment by such a man is valid.[90]

d. Minors — (i) In General. At common law a minor may enlist in either the army or navy wherever such contract is not positively forbidden by the state itself.[91] But, under some statutes, the enlistment of a minor under a certain age[92]

e. Aliens. Aliens may be legally enlisted in the army of the United States.[4]

2. FORMALITIES OF ENLISTMENT. To constitute one a duly enlisted man he must be mustered in[5] and must have taken the oath of enlistment or allegiance,[6] which may properly be administered by a commissioned officer.[7] Mere informalities in the enlistment proceedings will not invalidate the enlistment.[8]

3. EVIDENCE OF ENLISTMENT. Muster-rolls, properly certified and filed in the war department, are official records, and afford conclusive proof, as between the soldiers and the government, of the facts of enlistment and the length of the term thereof.[9]

After refusal by the court of common pleas, on application of the father of a minor who had enlisted in the army without his consent, to discharge such minor, as he elected to remain in the army, it was in the discretion of the supreme court to entertain a second application for such purpose. Com. v. Biddle, Brightly N. P. (Pa.) 447.

d. Not Granted While Minor a Prisoner of War. A minor will not be discharged while he is a prisoner of war on parole, awaiting exchange, the national faith being pledged for the execution of his promise, and the right of the parent temporarily subordinated to that of the government.[18]

e. Conclusiveness of Enlistment Oath. By statute, the oath taken by a recruit, on his enlistment in the army of the United States, as to his age is conclusive as against himself and every one else.[19] This statute, however, does not render the certificate of enlistment, stating the recruit's age, conclusive on this point if he made no oath respecting it.[20]

B. Draft — 1. Constitutionality of Statutes Authorizing. A statute authorizing the raising of a national military force by a draft is not repugnant to the constitution which gives congress power "to provide for calling forth the militia . . . to suppress insurrections," by interfering with the reserved rights of the states over their own militia.[21]

2. Who May Be Drafted — a. In General. Every citizen[22] of sufficient age and capacity is under obligation to render military service to the country, when required, and is subject to draft for such service.[23]

b. Exempted Persons. The proper board may declare certain persons exempt from draft,[24] and has no power, after publication of its decision declaring a person exempt, to revise the same.[25] The exemption from draft is a personal privilege, however, and if not pleaded or claimed at the proper time, before the proper tribunal, is waived.[26]

3. Formalities of Draft. Where the statute establishes the system of enrolling and drafting, and directs the commissioner of a county to cause "to be drawn from the wheel a number of ballots equal to the number of drafted men fixed by the governor to be drawn as the proper quota," it does not authorize the commissioner to take additional names from the wheel to make up for any that might be rejected by the mustering officer.[27] A misnomer in the enrolment prevents the Presumption of regularity.— Where the descriptive roll made out at enlistment states the recruit to have been over twenty-one, and he has since received pay, subsistence, etc., as a properly enlisted soldier, without objection, the presumption is in favor of the regularity of the proceedings of the enlisting officer, and that such recruit was of lawful age, until he clearly establishes the contrary. Green v. Ewell, 1 N. M. 166.

Insufficient evidence to rebut.—Evidence of the recruit's relations that he was under sixteen years of age when he enlisted is not sufficient to establish that fact, against his sworn statement made at the time of enlistment, and the record in the family Bible, showing that his birth, as recorded, had been changed from 1870 to 1871, and the record of the birth of a younger sister in 1871 entirely erased. In re Lawler, 40 Fed. 233.

person misnamed from being liable to the draft;[28] but where the name of a person was fully given, and properly spelled upon the enrolment list, the dropping out of the last letter of his name from the ballot placed in the box did not invalidate the drafting of his name.[29]

4. FURNISHING SUBSTITUTES. Persons drafted into the service of the United States may furnish substitutes in their stead, or pay, in lieu of service, a specified sum of money,[30] and the secretary of war is authorized to prescribe regulations relating to such substitutes.[31] Recruits mustered in, to stand to the credit of members of a subdistrict in case a draft should take place, and to be taken as substitutes for those drafted, are volunteers.[32]

5. CUSTODY OF DRAFTED MEN. Drafted men are held under federal authority,[33] and, from the time they regularly report for duty, are in the custody of the provost marshal.[34]

C. Place of Service. The place of service of volunteers may be changed notwithstanding the insertion in their enrolment of the officer's name under whom they were to serve.[35]

D. Pay and Allowances — 1. PAY — a. In General — (I) POWER OF CONGRESS TO CONTROL. Congress has a right to prescribe and determine what pay and bounty a soldier shall receive, and to whom, in the case of his death, the unpaid bounty and arrears of pay shall be paid.[36]

(II) OF MUSICIANS. One who enlisted as a private in the marine corps, and has performed duty with the marine band, on the capitol grounds or the president's grounds, under proper order, is entitled to four dollars a month in addition to his pay as private though he may not have been rated as a musician.[37]

b. Longevity-Pay. An enlisted man, who has served thirty years, may be retired on seventy-five per centum of the pay and allowances of the rank upon which he was retired.[38] This entitles him to three-fourths of his service ration, but not to commutation for things which he enjoys only in common with others, such as medicine, fuel, and quarters.[39]

c. On Discharge. An enlisted man, whether discharged at his own request[40] or as unfit for service,[41] is entitled to transportation to his place of enlistment.[42] But one commissioned as an officer and receiving an officer's mileage cannot claim transportation as an enlisted man,[43] and one discharged without court martial as

42. Where a soldier's first discharge is followed by his reënlistment within a few days, so that his service is practically continuous, and his second discharge occurs at the place of his original enlistment, he is not entitled to commutation for travel and subsistence to the place of his second enlistment. unfit for service and of bad character is not entitled to the retained pay allowed to a soldier upon his discharge, but which shall be forfeited unless he serves honestly and faithfully to the date of his discharge.[44]

2. Allowances — a. For Distinguished Service. By a statute held to be retroactive in effect, an enlisted man's certificate of merit for distinguished service entitles him, from the date of such service, to additional pay of two dollars a month,[45] and soldiers reënlisted for clerical service and messenger duty are still in the service, and are entitled to the additional pay for certificates of merit.[46]

b. For Loss of Horses. Where horses were furnished by soldiers, and orders were given to dismount and to do duty at a station separated from the horses, and a consequent loss of the horses and equipment occurred, their owners are entitled to recover;[47] but, where they were to furnish forage, they cannot recover for the loss of such horses on the claim that the United States failed to furnish sufficient forage.[48] Even where a soldier's horse was lost as a direct result of orders to do duty at a place detached from the horse, such soldier, by deserting soon after the orders were given, forfeits his claim for the loss.[49]

c. On Reënlistment. The additional pay allowed to men who reënlist depends upon an honorable discharge and a voluntary reënlistment as well as upon mere length of service.[50]

d. When Performing Extra Services. Although an enlisted man is entitled to additional pay when detailed for constant labor[51] or when on extra duty,[52] one who acts as schoolmaster at the marine barracks, and receives extra pay from his pupils, is not entitled to such additional pay.[53]

3. Rations, and Commutation Therefor. In the navy no person not attached to, or doing duty on, a sea-going vessel, except those attached to receiving-ships or to ships laid up in ordinary at a navy-yard, are entitled to a ration.[54] One who takes the cost-price of his rations instead of subsistence in kind is not entitled to the commutation price therefor.[55]

4. When Claim Accrues. A claim for pay and allowances due when a soldier is mustered out of the service accrues then, and at that time the statute of limitations begins to run.[56]

5. Effect of Capture. The status of a soldier is not changed by his capture, so far as his relations to the government are concerned. He is entitled to all the rights of a soldier after capture the same as if he were in actual service, under the conditions which existed at the time he was taken.[57]

E. Discharge — 1. Effect of. A certificate of honorable discharge at the expiration of a soldier's term of service constitutes a formal final judgment on his entire military record, and operates as a removal of any charge against him,[58] and this is true of soldiers in the volunteer service as well as those in the regular army.[59] It does not, however, restore to him pay and allowances forfeited for desertion.[60]

2. EVIDENCE OF. The certificate of discharge issued to a soldier is legal evidence of his discharge,[61] and his discharge will, in the absence of contrary evidence, be held to have been honorable.[62]

3. STATUS WHEN DISCHARGE REFUSED. Where a soldier who has served out his term is refused his discharge, he is, nevertheless, while remaining in the barracks, subject to the rules of the establishment.[63]

VI. CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES AND CONTRACTORS.

A. Compensation. A civilian employee whose appointment is not authorized by law can claim no salary,[64] and one duly appointed is not entitled to subsistence.[65] A contractor may recover, on an implied contract, for supplies or services rendered.[66]

B. Suspension. The suspension, by proper authority, of a civilian employee receiving a per diem compensation is equivalent, so far as the right of compensation is concerned, to a dismissal.[67]

C. Rights and Liabilities. A contract to furnish supplies is executed when such supplies reach and pass under the control and into the possession of the army, and any subsequent loss will fall on the government.[68] The contractor cannot be charged for services voluntarily rendered by the government,[69] with arbitrary deductions made by a military commission,[70] or for any losses occurring in transitu, except in accordance with the terms of his contract.[71] He is entitled to notice of intended transportation as prescribed in his contract.[72]

VII. COURTS OF INQUIRY.

A. In General. Courts of inquiry, to examine into the nature of any transaction of, or accusation or imputation against, any officer or soldier, are provided for both in the army[73] and navy.[74]

B. By Whom Ordered — 1. IN THE ARMY. In the military service a court may be ordered by the president or by any commanding officer, but cannot be ordered by commanding officers unless a request is made therefor by the one whose conduct is to be inquired into.[75]

2. IN THE NAVY. In the naval service the power to order a court of inquiry is vested in the president, the secretary of the navy, or the commander of a fleet or squadron,[76] and may be ordered at the request of a naval officer.[77]

C. Composition — 1. IN GENERAL. The court is composed of not more than three officers.[78]

2. OFFICERS. In the military service provision is made for a recorder, whose functions correspond to those of the judge-advocate of a court martial;[79] but in the naval service provision is made for a judge-advocate, or person officiating as such.[80]

D. Jurisdiction. This court, in the military service, has no jurisdiction where the person whose conduct is to be investigated is neither an officer nor a soldier;[81] but in the naval service the cases in which it may be ordered is not limited to any particular class of persons.[82]

E. Procedure — 1. CHALLENGES. The practice is to allow the challenging of members of the court, though it is not specifically authorized.[83]

2. SUMMONING AND EXAMINING WITNESSES. Courts of inquiry have the same power to summon and examine witnesses as courts martial.[84] Naval courts of inquiry are specifically given power to punish contempts,[85] but the military courts have not this power.[86]

3. REPORT. These courts are confined to a statement of the facts, unless they are expressly required in the order for convening to give their opinion,[87] and their report is a privileged communication.[88] In case of a disagreement between the members of the court as to the opinion, separate reports may be presented.[89]

F. Inquiry Does Not Bar Further Proceedings. The fact that the accused has appeared before a court of inquiry does not constitute a former trial so as to bar further proceedings against him.[90]

G. Civil Courts Will Not Interfere. Where a court of inquiry, properly instituted, has jurisdiction of the person and has entered into an investigation, a civil court will not remove the person while the inquiry is in progress.[91]

VIII. COURTS MARTIAL.

A. Definition. A court martial is a tribunal for the administration of the military and naval law by which the army and navy are governed.[92]

B. History and Origin. In England, the original of the modern court martial was the court of chivalry, which first had a distinct existence toward the end of the thirteenth century, the lord high admiral having a similar jurisdiction in naval causes.[93] In the United States, the earliest exercise of national authority by congress in the form of positive legislation was the enactment of rules and articles of war for the government of the army, and rules and regulations for the government of the navy, by which the entire authority over both these branches of the public service was assumed by congress, and enforced by courts martial, without reference to the local tribunals. This separation of the land and naval forces from connection with the local courts, and the method of punishment of

92. People v. Allen, 55 N. Y. 31, wherein it is said: "It has all the elements of a court. It has judges to hear the evidence, and determine the facts, and apply the law. It has parties, prosecutor and defendant. It has pleadings and a formal trial, renders judgment, and issues process to enforce it. In short, it does everything within the sphere of its jurisdiction which any judicial tribunal can do to administer justice."

Not a court of record.— A court martial is not a court of record. Wilson v. John, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 209; Ex p. Watkins, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 193, 7 L. ed. 650.

The authority of this court was gradually curtailed until it ceased to exercise the functions of a military tribunal, and the military law was administered during this period by courts or tribunals convened by special com-offenses committed within either by the appropriate courts martial, was resumed and maintained under the Confederation, while that government continued.[94] These rules and articles of war were borrowed in substance from the English mutiny acts, and those of the navy were copied literally, in all important features, from 22 Geo. II, c. 25.[95]

C. Constitutional Authority For. These courts are established, in the United States, by virtue of the authority conferred by the constitution[96] on congress to raise and support armies, and to make rules for the government and discipline thereof;[97] and, under this authority, congress may provide for the trial and punishment by courts martial, without indictment or the intervention of a jury, of all offenses committed by persons in the military or naval service of the United States,[98] and may provide for the trial and punishment of such offenses in the manner practised by civilized nations.[99]

D. Classification. The highest court martial in both the land and the naval service is the general court martial; the inferior courts martial in the land service are the regimental court martial, the garrison court martial, the field-officer's court and the summary court. The inferior court in the naval service is the summary court.[1]

E. Law Which Is Administered by — 1. In General — a. Articles of War and Regulations. The law administered by courts martial is a well-defined system of laws, consisting of the Articles of War enacted by congress,[2] and the regulations and instructions, sanctioned by the president, for the government of the army[3] mission or ordinances of the sovereign, until the passage of the mutiny act in 1689, by which the sovereign was, for the first time, authorized to grant commissions for the assembling of courts martial. This act was, with many changes and additions, reënacted annually until the passage of the army acts of 1879 and 1881, by which the powers and jurisdiction of courts martial are established and defined. The different codes adopted in the United States for the government of the army are the code of 1775, which was enacted by the second Continental congress; the code of 1776, which was amended in 1786, after the adoption of the constitution; the code of 1806 and the code and revision of 1874 (U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), §§ 1342, 1343). The laws passed at the time of the Spanish-American War in 1898, and to meet subsequent developments occasioned thereby, have necessitated a new codification which is now in preparation. The later codes for the government of the navy are the code of 1800 and the code of 1862 (U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 1624).

and navy.[4] These orders may be promulgated, for the land service, by the secretary of war,[5] and for the naval service by the secretary of the navy,[6] who are the regular constitutional organs of the president for the administration of justice in their respective departments; and rules and orders, when properly promulgated through them, must be received as acts of the executive, and, as such, be binding upon all within the sphere of their legal and constitutional authority.[7]

b. Usages. Usages have been established in every department of the government which have become a kind of common law, and regulate the rights and duties of those who act within their respective limits; and no change of such usages can have a retrospective effect, but must be limited to the future.[8]

2. Distinguished From Martial Law. This military law is distinct from martial law in that it applies only to persons in the military or naval service of the government; whereas martial law, when once established, applies alike to citizen and soldier.[9]

F. Jurisdiction — 1. In General. A court martial has the same plenary jurisdiction over offenses against military law as that which is exercised by the civil courts of the United States over controversies in their cognizance,[10] and is supreme while acting within the sphere of its exclusive jurisdiction.[11] This juris-

Powers of president and congress distinguished.— The constitutional power of the president to command the army and navy, and of congress to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, are distinct, and the president cannot evade the legislative regulations by military orders, nor can congress impair his authority as commander-in-chief by rules and regulations. 9. Johnson v. Jones, 44 Ill. 142, 92 Am. Dec. 159.

"There are under the Constitution three kinds of military jurisdiction: one to be exercised both in peace and war; another to be exercised in time of foreign war without the boundaries of the United States, or in time of rebellion and civil war within States or districts occupied by rebels treated as belligerents; and a third to be exercised in time of invasion or insurrection within the limits of the United States, or during rebellion within the limits of States maintaining adhesion to the National Government, when the public danger requires its exercise. The first of these may be called jurisdiction under military law, and is found in Acts of Congress prescribing rules and articles of war, or otherwise providing for the government of the national forces; the second may be distinguished as military government, superseding, as far as may be deemed expedient, the local law, and exercised by the military commander, under the direction of the President, with the express or implied sanction of Congress; while the third may be denominated martial law proper, and is called into action by Congress, or temporarily, when the action of Congress cannot be invited, and in the case of justifying or excusing peril, by the President, in times of insurrection or invasion, or of civil or foreign war, within districts or localities where ordinary law no longer adequately secures public safety and private rights." Superintendents of national cemeteries who are required to be selected from meritorious and trustworthy officers or soldiers, honorably mustered out or discharged from the military

b. Effect of Expiration of Term of Enlistment. The jurisdiction of courts martial over offenses committed by persons in the military or naval service is not defeated by the fact that the term of enlistment of the offender expired before the proceedings were commenced,[18] and where its jurisdiction attaches in a particular case by the commencement of proceedings and the arrest of the accused, it will continue for all the purposes of the trial, judgment, and execution, notwithstanding the fact that the term of enlistment of the accused expires before the conclusion of the proceedings.[19]

c. Effect of Sentence of Dismissal. A court martial's jurisdiction is not exhausted by a sentence dismissing the accused from the service, but it may impose in the same sentence additional penalties,[20] and it has jurisdiction of offenses committed by him while in a military prison, undergoing a sentence of confinement which was so imposed.[21]

3. Offenses — a. In General. Neither military nor naval courts martial are limited in their jurisdiction to the offenses specified in the articles of war, but it is also provided that they shall have jurisdiction of unenumerated offenses,[22] and this jurisdiction extends to the trial and punishment of acts which tend to bring reproach and disgrace upon the service of which they are members, whether those acts are done in the performance of military duties, in a civil position, in a social relation, or in private business.[23] Under this general authority, military courts martial are entrusted with the discretion of determining whether the acts proved are prejudicial to good order and military discipline, the gravity and degree of the offense, and the punishment appropriate to be imposed.[24] Where, however, an offense is specially provided for, the grant of jurisdiction to a court martial to service, are not amenable to the jurisdiction of courts martial. 16 Op. Atty.-Gen. (U. S.) 16.

Congress cannot give to a simple court martial any jurisdiction over a person who is neither in the military service of the United States nor regularly amenable to the military police of a territory occupied by the government for military purposes. Y.) 150, holding that, where a court martial is convened under the authority of the United States to try delinquent militiamen, the members sit as judges, and one accused who pleads guilty waives all objections to the jurisdiction of the court.

try and to punish such offense is conferred by the particular article which mentions it, and not by this general grant of jurisdiction.[25]

b. Desertion. A court martial has exclusive jurisdiction to try and punish persons, duly enlisted,[26] for the offense of desertion,[27] and this jurisdiction extends to desertion by persons above maximum age [28] as well as by a minor, his enlistment being voidable, not void,[29] and where he is held for trial by a court martial on the charge of desertion he must abide by the decision of that court before he can contest in a civil court the validity of his enlistment.[30]

It would seem that the powers conferred by this statute can be exercised only in the case of officers dismissed in time of war, the presi-

2. Secretaries of War and Navy. The secretary of war, as the regular constitutional organ of the president for the administration of the military affairs of the nation,[36] and the secretary of the navy by authority of statute,[37] may convene general courts martial.

3. Other Officers — a. In Land Forces — (I) In General — (A) General Officers. In the land service, general courts martial may be constituted, whenever necessary, by any general officer commanding an army, a territorial division or a department, or by a colonel commanding a separate department,[38] except when such commander is the accuser or prosecutor of any officer under his command.[39]

(B) Brevet Officers. A court martial may be convened by a brevet general officer who has been assigned by the president to command an army or separate department, and has been placed on duty according to his rank.[40]

(C) Commanding Officers. The commanding officer of a garrison, fort, or other place, regiment, corps, detached battalion, or company, may appoint one officer as a summary court, with jurisdiction, except in certain cases, over cases formerly tried by the other inferior courts.[41]

(D) Superintendent of Military Academy. The superintendent of the Military Academy is authorized to convene general courts martial for the trial of the cadets.[42]

(II) In Time of War. It is further provided that in time of war,[43] the commander of a division,[44] or of a separate brigade[45] of troops shall be competent to dent having no power to dismiss officers summarily at other times. See supra, II, H, 2, b, (I). It has been held that it did not apply to officers dismissed before its passage. Dig. J. A. G. 373; 16 Op. Atty.-Gen. (U. S.) 599. The constitutionality of the statute has been sustained by the attorney-general. 12 Op. Atty.-Gen. (U. S.) 4. But see 1 Winthrop Mil. L. 78, in which the author inclines to the view that it is unconstitutional.

This authority cannot be delegated (Dig. J. A. G. 82; 1 Winthrop Mil. L. 81), and the officer's authority to convene general courts martial is suspended where he is absent from his command (Dig. J. A. G. 82, par. 5; Davis Mil. L. 19; 1 Winthrop Mil. L. 82) if the absence is not merely temporary and incidental (16 Op. Atty.-Gen. (U. S.) 679).

The regimental court martial consisted of three officers, who were appointed, for his own regiment or corps, by the officer commanding a regiment or corps, to try offenses not capital. U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 1342, art. 81. Under this provision it was held that a regimental court could be appointed for the engineer battalion by the chief of engineers, and for the signal corps by the chief signal officer. Dig. J. A. G. 92, par. 1.

A garrison court martial consists of three officers appointed by the officer commanding a garrison, fort, or other place, where the troops are composed of different corps (U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 1342, art. 82) and may be ordered even when there is only one member of a different corps present on duty with the garrison (Dig. J. A. G. 94, par. 4). The commanding officer cannot appoint himself a member of the court. Dig. J. A. G. 93, par. 1.

43. In time of peace the formation of divisions and brigades cannot be made except for purposes of instruction. U. S. Army Reg. (1895), par. 189.

44. A division is composed of two brigades. U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 1114.

45. A brigade is constituted, in the ordinary arrangement of the army, of two regiments of infantry or of cavalry. U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 1114.

A separate brigade is one which is a distinct command, not constituting a part of any division. Dig. J. A. G. 85, par. 1. The war department requires that "when a post or district command is composed of mixed troops, equivalent to a brigade, the commanding officer of the department or army will designate it in orders as 'a separate brigade,' and a copy of such orders will accompany the proceedings of any general court martial convened by such brigade commander. Without such authority commanders of posts and disappoint a general court martial, except when such commander is the accuser or prosecutor of any person under his command, in which event the court shall be appointed by the next higher commander.[46]

(III) For Trial of Militiamen. A court martial may be convened under state authority for the trial and punishment, in accordance with the federal statutes, of militiamen of the state who refuse or neglect to serve when called into actual service by the governor in pursuance of an order or requisition of the president.[47]

b. In Naval Service. In the naval service, the power of convening general courts martial is further vested in the commander-in-chief of a fleet or squadron,[48] the latter being required, when his fleet or squadron is in the waters of the United States, to have the express authority of the president.[49]

4. Effect of Illegal Constitution. Where a court martial has been illegally convened and organized, its acts are void,[50] as trial by such a court is not trial by due process of law,[51] and the act of an officer in convening a court when he had no authority to do so cannot be legalized.[52]

H. Composition — 1. In General — a. What Officers May Serve. Courts martial must be composed of commissioned officers only.[53] Among those eligible for this service are included volunteer officers,[54] officers of the marine corps who are qualified to serve on courts martial in both the land and the naval service,[55] officers of the medical corps and of the paymasters' corps,[56] officers of the militia,[57] and graduated cadets with brevet rank.[58] Professors at the government academies are not competent to serve[59] unless they are regular officers of the service, temporarily detailed for duty at the academies;[60] nor are retired officers,[61] undergraduate cadets at the academies,[62] civilians, without appointment or commission, acting as officers,[63] or non-combatant officers.[64] It has been decided that tricts having no brigade organization will not convene general courts martial." G. O. 251, A. G. O., 1864.

48. Presumption as to rank of convening officer.— The designation of an officer in the proceedings of a naval court martial as commander-in-chief raises the presumption, under article 243 of the regulations for the government of the navy, that he was in command of a fleet or squadron, and was therefore a proper officer to convene the court. In re Crain, 84 Fed. 788.

Sufficient allegation of authority.— Where a naval court martial is convened in the waters of the United States, an allegation by the officer convening that it is done "by virtue of the express authority" vested in him "by the president of the United States, in accordance with the provisions of article 38, § 1624" of the revised statutes sufficiently alleges his authority. In re Crain, 84 Fed. 788.

64. 2 Op. Atty.-Gen. (U. S.) 297, holding it is not necessary that the members of a court martial shall have attained their majority.[65]

b. Number. General courts martial[66] may consist of any number of officers from five to thirteen, inclusive;[67] but they must not consist of less than thirteen when that number can be convened without manifest injury to the service.[68] Where a court has been duly organized, with more than five members, the trial is not to be arrested on account of the absence of any of the members, provided five continue to be present,[69] nor does the absence of members of a court martial, reassembled, by order of the secretary of war, to revise its sentence, impair its jurisdiction or otherwise affect its power to revise the sentence, if the number present is not less than five.[70] Where the number of members falls below the minimum, those remaining have no power to act as a court,[71] except for certain purposes.[72] This reduction does not of itself, however, dissolve the court, but the convening officer may either dissolve it, or may appoint the additional number requisite to constitute a lawful court.[73]

c. Rank. Provisions intended to prevent the trial of an officer, when it can be avoided, by officers inferior to him in rank, are merely directory to the officer summoning the court, and his decision is conclusive,[74] and a challenge to a member, based merely on his inferiority in rank, is not good.[75]

2. For Trial of Militiamen. Courts martial for the trial of the militia must be composed of militia officers,[76] either of the same or different states.[77]

I. Procedure — 1. Organization of Court — a. Summons. An order designating the officers to compose a court martial constitutes a sufficient summons to such officers.[78]

Number in discretion of convening officer.—The provision as to the number of members to compose the court is, within the limits prescribed, merely directory to the officer appointing it, and his decision as to the number which can be convened without manifest injury to the service is conclusive (Mullan v. U. S., 140 U. S. 240, 11 S. Ct. 788, 35 L. ed. 489 [affirming 23 Ct. Cl. 34]; Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 19, 6 L. ed. 537; In re Crain, 84 Fed. 788; Wooley v. U. S., 20 L. R. 631; 6 Op. Atty-Gen. (U. S.) 506, 510; 2 Op. Atty.-Gen. (U. S.) 534; 1 Winthrop Mil. L. 98); and both the army (Army Reg. par. 1002) and naval (U. S. Nav. Reg. (1900) 457, par. 1837) regulations now provide that the decision of the appointing authority as to the number that can be assembled without manifest injury to the service shall be conclusive.

68. A court martial of less than thirteen members is not a lawful court if that number could have convened without manifest injury to the service. 1 Op. Atty.-Gen. (U. S.) 299, wherein Wirt, Atty.-Gen., suggested that, in every case of life and death, at least, the president should be satisfied of the manifest injury which the service would have sustained in convening a court of thirteen before he gives his sanction to a sentence of death by a smaller number.

Number.—Under the act of congress of Feb. 28, 1795, c. 101, relating to courts martial for the trial of militiamen disobeying the order of the president calling h into the service of the United States, a court martial composed of six militia officers is sufficient as to number. 78. In re Crain, 84 Fed. 788, in which case it was held that a subsequent order, making a change as to one of the members of the court, was immaterial.

b. Challenges. A prisoner may challenge the members of a court martial, one at a time, for cause stated to the court, which determines the relevancy and validity of the challenge;[79] but this right must be exercised before arraignment or it will be deemed waived.[80]

c. Officers — (I) PRESIDENT. The senior in rank of the officers serving on a court martial is the president.[81]

(II) JUDGE-ADVOCATE. The judge-advocate is generally a commissioned officer,[82] detailed for that duty by the officer convening the court,[83] and prosecutes in the name of the United States, being required, however, to act as counsel for the prisoner, after the latter has made his plea, to the extent of objecting in his behalf to any leading question, and to any question which might tend to incriminate him.[84] Upon him rests the duty of preparing the case for trial, which includes the preliminary examination of the prosecution's witnesses, summoning them, and issuing formal summons for the witnesses for the accused;[85] the administration of the oath required of witnesses,[86] the preparation and forwarding of the interrogatories in cases in which depositions are taken,[87] and the forwarding of the original proceedings and sentence of the court for the judge-advocate general.[88] Both he and the accuser, when the latter acts as prosecutor, have the right of a reply in a trial before a court martial.[89] The proceedings of a court martial without a judge-advocate, legally appointed, are illegal and void.[90]

(III) REPORTERS AND INTERPRETERS. The judge-advocate is authorized to appoint a reporter to take down the proceedings of the court and the testimony;[91] and the court, it seems, may appoint interpreters where they are necessary.[92]

d. Oath of Officers and Members. The organization of a court martial for trial is completed by the administration to each member of the court, including the reporter[93] and interpreters,[94] by the judge-advocate, of the oath[95] prescribed by statute,[96] after which the oath is administered to the judge-advocate by the president of the court.[97] Irregularity in the order in which the oath is administered does not invalidate the proceedings of the court,[98] but the administration of the oath to each member before the commencement of the trial is essential,[99] and the record must show that the oath was administered.[1] It is also essential that the oath be taken anew by the members of the court and the judge-advocate before entering upon the trial of each case, even though the court is composed, for every case, of the same members.[2]

2. CONTINUANCES. Continuances are granted by the court martial to either party, for reasonable cause, for such time, and as often as may appear to be just, provided that, if the prisoner be in close confinement, the trial shall not be delayed for more than sixty days.[3]

3. CHARGES AND SPECIFICATIONS[4] — a. In General. The charge states the general nature of the offense, and the Article of War which is violated, being framed in the words of the article, except when the article treats of a single offense, in which case the charge may give the article by number merely.[5] The specifications are merely by way of exemplification and detailed statement of the principal charges to which they respectively relate.[6] The same precision is not required in a charge brought before a court martial as is required to support a conviction by ordinary courts of justice;[7] but the charge must be sufficiently clear to inform the accused of the military offense for which he is to be tried, and to enable him to prepare his defense.[8] The mere fact that certain acts of the accused are set out in all of the specifications supporting the charges against him does not destroy the distinctive character of the offense charged.[9]

Where the court martial has not power to grant a continuance for the time for which it is required, the authority convening the court should be applied to; where the application is made to the court, and if, in the opinion of the court, it is well founded, it will be referred to the convening authority to decide whether the court is to be adjourned or dissolved. The specification should give, in the case of military offenders, the name, rank, company, and regiment; in the case of naval offenders, their rank and vessel, or the yard or other post at which they are stationed; in the case of civilians, the facts which render them subject to the court's jurisdiction; and in all cases the acts constituting the alleged offense; the time, or the approximate time, where the exact time is not ascertainable, at which the acts were committed; the criminal intent, where it is an element; and the name of the person injured, where the offense alleged is the injury to another's person or property. So, it has been held that a court martial has jurisdiction of a case in which the charge is "conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline," although the specifications allege facts showing homicide by the accused. U. S. v. Maney, 61 Fed. 140. But, a charge that defendant, a contractor, was engaged in furnishing supplies "for the military services" is indefinite and does not show that he is amenable to the jurisdiction of a court martial composed of officers in the regular army, as he may have been engaged in furnishing supplies to the militia. Ex p. Henderson, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,349.

Atty.-Gen. (U. S.) 603.

A specification is good, and will support a finding and sentence upon it, with or without a descriptive designation of the quality of the imputed criminal act, provided it appear that the facts alleged and proved constitute in any point of view the offense charged. 7 Op. Atty.Gen. (U. S.) 601.

b. Amendments. After arraignment, an amendment of such nature as to entirely obliterate the original specifications and introduce new ones describing wholly different offenses, cannot be made.[10]

c. Service on Accused. Where an army officer is put under arrest for the purpose of trial, except at remote military posts or stations, it is required that a copy of the charges on which he is to be tried shall be served upon him within eight days after his arrest, and in event of a failure to serve them within that time his arrest ceases.[11] In the naval service it is required that the accused shall be furnished with a copy of the charges and specifications at the time he is put under arrest,[12] but, where the service is not made on the accused, he must apply to the officer ordering his arrest, or to other proper authority, for release, as the failure to serve them does not authorize him to release himself.[13]

4. Arrest and Confinement of Accused — a. Before Trial — (I) In General. Where an officer is charged with crime, under which term is included both military offenses and civil offenses of which a court martial has cognizance, it is the duty of his commanding officer to arrest him and confine him in his barracks, quarters, or tent, and deprive him of his sword.[14] Soldiers charged with crimes, except minor offenses,[15] are confined until tried by court martial or released by proper authority.[16] It is customary for the arrest to be ordered by the authority which convenes the court;[17] but arrest before trial is not necessary, and does not affect the court's jurisdiction.[18]

(II) Limitation of Time of Confinement. The statute upon confinement preliminary to trial is limited by the provision that the confinement shall not be for more than eight days, or until a court martial can be assembled,[19] but this applies solely to confinement preliminary to trial, and it is not intended that the assembling of the court martial for the trial of the offender should entitle him to be released from confinement.[20]

b. During Trial. When a court martial takes cognizance of a charge preferred against a prisoner awaiting trial, it is the duty of the commanding officer thereafter to have the accused at all times at hand to receive the judgment of the court when it shall be promulgated, and to that end he may keep him in confinement;[21] and the court martial itself has the power of keeping the delinquent until the will of the officer who affirms or disapproves its findings is known.[22]

5. Pleas in Bar — a. Limitation — (I) In General. A general court martial cannot try or punish any person for any offense which appears to have been committed more than two years before the issuance of the order for the trial, unless, by reason of having absented himself, or of some other manifest impediment, he shall not have been amenable to justice within that period.[24]

(II) Offenses to Which Applicable — (A) In General. The limitation provided by this statute applies to all offenses triable and punishable by a general court martial,[25] except desertion;[26] but does not apply to trials before courts of inquiry,[27] nor to a regimental court martial summoned to hear the complaint of a soldier who thinks himself wronged by an officer.[28]

(B) Desertion. The provisions of the statute[29] have been held applicable to the offense of desertion,[30] with the qualification that it is for the court martial to decide whether the limitation can be successfully invoked by the accused.[31]

(III) How Pleaded. This limitation is a matter of defense, to be entertained and determined like any other question involving an adjudication upon the merits of the case,[32] and should be specially pleaded and proved, although there is excellent authority in support of the view that it may be taken advantage of under the general issue.[33]

(IV) What Will Bar Running of Statute. The absence which will bar the running of the limitation is absence from the jurisdiction of the military courts — that is, absence from the United States; and the "other manifest impediment," which has a similar effect, is only such impediment as will operate to prevent the court from exercising its jurisdiction,[34] and does not include the concealment of his offense by the accused.[35] The limitation does not run in favor of the accused where the proceedings were instituted within the statutory period, but were suspended beyond that period on account of his having pleaded the pendency of civil proceedings arising in the same matter.[36]

b. Former Trial — (I) In General — (A) By Military Authority — (1) Generally. Courts martial are prohibited from trying those amenable to their jurisdiction a second time for the same offense;[37] and, under this provision, the plea of former trial may be made where there has been a trial[38] for the offense,[39] whether or not there has been a sentence adjudged,[40] and without regard to the disapproval of the findings by the reviewing authority.[41]

(2) By Illegally Organized Court. Where, however, the trial was held before a court which was not legally organized, there may be another trial for the same offense.[42]

(B) By Civil Authorities. Trial by the civil authorities for the civil relations of an act committed by an officer in the land service is not a bar to trial by court martial for the military relations of the same act.[43]

Effect of plea of guilty.— When it appears by the record that the order for trial was issued more than two years after the commission of the offense for which one is on trial before a court martial, a plea of guilty is not to be taken as an admission by the accused of the existence of an exception withdrawing his case from the limitation provided. 16 Op. Waiver of right.—It was formerly held that the accused could not waive the statutory limitation provided by the one hundred and third Article of War, and that a court martial could not proceed, even on his application, to examine into offenses which were barred thereby, the view being taken that the statute provided a limitation upon the jurisdiction of the court, presenting an absolute bar to trial. 16 Op. (B) Authentication. Depositions may be authenticated before the judge-advocate of a department or of a court martial,[53] or before a competent civil official;[54] but the officer's authority to take the deposition and administer the oath must appear.[55]

8. EFFECT OF ABSENCE OF MEMBER OF COURT. The absence of a member of the court during the trial, and his subsequent resumption of his seat, do not affect the validity of the proceedings;[57] but the court may exclude him from further participation if it see fit,[58] and this seems to be the better practice.[59]

9. FINDING GUILTY OF LESSER OFFENSE. A court martial may find the accused guilty of a lesser offense than the principal charge, if it be covered by, and be within, the scope of the specifications;[60] but it cannot convict him of a distinct crime,[61] nor of a more serious offense than the one with which he has been charged.[62]

10. SENTENCE — a. May Cover Several Offenses. A single sentence may be rendered covering all the convictions for the several offenses adjudicated.[63]

b. Imprisonment in Penitentiary. In the land service courts martial have power to sentence the accused to confinement in other than military prisons whenever the civil courts are authorized to inflict a similar punishment for the same offense,[64] but this does not prohibit the punishment from being greater in other respects than the civil courts can inflict.[65] Courts martial in the naval service are authorized to inflict such punishment in those cases only in which they are also authorized to adjudge the punishment of death.[66]

c. Power of Court to Reconsider. Courts martial have the power to reconsider any judgment or sentence rendered by them during the term or sitting and to change such judgment or sentence.[67]

d. Publication of Sentence. In cases where an officer is dismissed for fraud or cowardice, it is required that the sentence shall direct the crime, punishment, name, and place of abode of the delinquent to be published in the newspapers in and about the camp, and in the state from which he came or usually resides,[68] and this publication cannot be omitted, at the discretion of the court, but must be made.[69]

executive,[70] and the effect and conclusiveness of the court martial's action depends equally as much upon the approval and order of this reviewing authority as upon the original proceedings.[71] The reviewing authority has power to confirm, disapprove, pardon, or mitigate the punishment adjudged by the court martial,[72] or to return the record for revision as many times as he deems proper,[73] before the court martial has been dissolved,[74] making therewith a recommendation that a more severe sentence be imposed,[75] but cannot impose a new sentence of a more severe character, or interfere with the proper discretion of the court.[76]

(II) The Reviewing Authority — (A) President — (1) Sentences Which He Must Review — (a) Affecting General Officers. The confirmation of the president is required before the sentence of a court martial respecting a general officer can be executed, whether in time of peace or war.[77]

(b) Dismissing Officer in Time of Peace. Sentences directing the dismissal of any officer in time of peace must be reviewed and confirmed by the president.[78] Until such a sentence has been approved by him it is interlocutory and inchoate only.[79]

(c) Of Naval Courts Martial. Where the sentence of a naval court martial held within the United States extends to the loss of life or to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer, it cannot be carried into execution until confirmed by the president;[80] but neither the president nor secretary of navy has lawful authority to approve or disapprove the sentence of a court martial where the case is not one in which the president's approval is required.[81]

(d) When Death Penalty Is Inflicted. In cases in which the death penalty is inflicted, the confirmation of the president is required, except where it is inflicted as a punishment for certain specified crimes committed in time of war, in which cases the power of revision is vested in the commanding general in the field or the commander of the department, as the case may be.[82]

84. The president may call others to his assistance in making his examinations, and in presumptively his. It is not necessary, however, to render it effectual, that it be attested by his sign-manual,[85] though an order dismissing an officer, in conformity with the sentence of a court martial, must show otherwise than argumentatively that the proceedings of the court were laid before the president, and that the confirmation of the sentence was the result of his own judgment, and not merely a departmental order.[86]

(3) Powers. The president, in the exercise of the supervisory power committed to him, has authority to mitigate, as well as to affirm or reject, the sentence of a general court martial,[87] or to order it to reconsider its judgment,[88] or he may order a new trial before a court martial where, in his opinion, the court erred on the first trial in excluding certain testimony.[89]

(4) Effect of Disapproval. In cases involving sentence of death or of dismissal of officers, the disapproval of the president annihilates the sentence of a court martial, the case standing as if there had been no trial and being just as open for an order for a court martial as it was in the first instance.[90]

(B) Secretary of Navy. The secretary of navy has power to approve the sentence of a court martial convened by him where the sentence of the court does not extend to loss of life or to the dismissal of a commissioned or warrant officer.[91]

(c) Convening Officer — (1) Of General Court Martial — (a) In General. As a general rule, the reviewing power is vested in the officer ordering the court, and no sentence of the court martial can be carried into execution until it has been approved by him or by the officer commanding for the time being,[92] who may be either the temporary or permanent successor of the officer who convened the court, it being necessary, however, that he be of sufficient rank to be authorized to convene the court.[93]

(b) Cases Involving Dismissal of Officers in Time of War. A general, commanding forces in the field, does not possess power to commute the sentence of dismissal pronounced by a court martial, or pardon the offender, but only has the power to approve the sentence, or to suspend it and take the direction of the president.[94]

(2) Of Summary Courts. In the case of sentences adjudged by a summary court, the approval of the officer appointing the court, or the officer commanding for the time being, is required.[95]

(iii) Record to Be Laid Before. The record of a court martial laid before the reviewing authority must contain all of the evidence, and is defective where it contains merely an inference drawn from the evidence.[96]

(iv) Effect of Confirming Sentence—(a) In General. The action of the proper authority approving the sentence of a general court martial is, in contemplation of law, final, and no relief can thereafter be afforded defendant through a revision of the sentence.[97] This rule is not confined to cases in which, by the Articles of War, a sentence of a court martial is required to be approved by the president.[98]

(b) Where Court Was Illegally Constituted. The sentence cannot be confirmed by the reviewing authority where a member of the court, appointed by the officer convening it, has been relieved by a subordinate, and another officer substituted without the authorization of the convening officer.[99]

(v) Record of Reviewing Authority. When the reviewing officer sets forth in his order of approval the matters of fact and of law which have been considered by the court martial, his order and its recitals are, equally with the record of the proceedings of the court, evidence of what matters of fact and of law were adjudicated by the whole proceeding and sentence.[1]

b. By Civil Courts—(i) Inquiry Limited to Question of Jurisdiction. If the court has jurisdiction of the person accused and of the offense charged, and acts within the scope of its lawful powers, its proceedings and sentence cannot be reviewed or set aside by the civil courts.[2] The province of the civil courts extends, therefore, no further than to ascertaining whether the military court had jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, and whether, though having such jurisdiction, it had exceeded its powers in the sentence pronounced,[3] and to confining them to the exercise of that special jurisdiction.[4] They are not allowed to avoid the effect of the court martial's sentence on the ground of any circumstantial irregularity in the details of the proceeding, whether occurring before or at the time of the trial.[5]

(II) Who May Question Jurisdiction. The question of the jurisdiction of the court martial may always be inquired into by the civil courts upon the application of any party aggrieved by its proceedings,[6] even though he has appeared before the court martial, and has confessed his guilt,[7] and though the sentence has been approved by the reviewing authority;[8] but any question as to the legality of the sentence must be raised within a reasonable length of time, else it will be deemed that the accused acquiesced.[9] He who seeks to justify the judgment must set forth affirmatively all facts necessary to show that the court martial was legally constituted and had jurisdiction.[10]

(III) Power Where Court Martial Exceeds Jurisdiction. If the court martial had not jurisdiction, its judgment may be declared void by any court having jurisdiction of the proper parties and of the subject-matter.[11]

B. Liabilities to Civilians — 1. IN GENERAL. A militiary or naval officer, acting under instructions from his superiors, acts at his peril, and, if those instructions are not strictly warranted by law, he is answerable in damages to any person injured by their execution.[15]

2. FOR ACTS OF SUBORDINATES. A person in command is not liable for a trespass committed by any of his command without his knowledge or abetment;[16] but, if he advises or aids such trespass, the fact that he was so acting is no defense.[17]

3. FOR SEIZING OR DESTROYING PROPERTY. A military officer may, without liability, take private property under circumstances of pressing public nececessity,[18] or in the enforcement of orders relating to a military reservation.[19] So, too, lawful and public orders from the president and from the secretary of the navy are a good defense to a suit against a naval officer for the destruction of property by a bombardment of a foreign town.[20]

B. Beneficiaries. This aid was not intended for soldiers who enlisted from other states, but for those who formed a part of the quota of the state furnishing the aid, the consideration for it being actual service in the army of the United States under an enlistment in some city, town, or place in the state;[23] nor was it intended to be extended to those persons who enlisted in the regular army of the United States.[24] The relief provided for the widowed mothers and families of volunteers is intended only for those dependents who had their permanent residence in the state at the time of the enlistment.[25] Where the soldier deserted, he was entitled to no relief thereafter,[26] and, under some statutes, no state aid could properly be furnished to the family of a volunteer after his discharge, and where such aid had been given a family by a town, in ignorance of the soldier's discharge, it might be recovered from him.[27]

C. Distribution of Funds — 1. Basis. Where the fund is to be distributed among the several counties, the distribution is based, not on the amount which they respectively contributed, but on the number who are entitled to receive aid.[28]

2. Right to Compel. The distribution of the revenue collected under these acts was not a matter of discretion, but a duty, on the part of the commissioners and township trustees.[29] Where, however, the statute allowing aid has been repealed, a person cannot claim it as a matter of right, even though his right to relief accrued before the repeal and though all of the fund collected for the purpose has not been distributed.[30]

D. Effect of Acceptance. The acceptance by the family of a soldier of the benefits provided causes neither him nor his family to incur the disabilities of pauperism, and such disabilities cannot be imposed by the city granting the aid.[31]

B. How Governed. The board of commissioners of a home have authority, under a statute authorizing them to make rules for its government, to enforce reasonable rules adopted for that purpose, including those necessary to preserve order, enforce discipline, and preserve health;[33] but the power given them to enact these rules authorizes them to enact only such laws as are incidental to, and limited by, the objects of the charge which they are to administer, and gives them no authority as to general subjects of legislation.[34] Thus, it has been held that they may require the inmates to turn over to the commandant all of their pension money in excess of a certain amount;[35] but they have no authority to determine what relatives are dependent on the pensioner for support, nor to direct how much of his pension money shall be sent to his relatives.[36]

C. Jurisdiction Over Premises. The purchase, by a corporation created by the government of the United States for that purpose, of land for a soldiers' home does not withdraw that land from the jurisdiction of the state in which it is situated.[37]

XII. OFFENSES BY PERSONS NOT IN SERVICE.

A. Enticing Enlisted Man to Desert. To sustain a conviction under a statute making it an offense to entice an enlisted man to desert it is sufficient to show the making of representations as to the means and facilities for deserting to induce a person to enlist, with the belief that they were likely to cause him to desert, if they had such effect;[38] but the person enticed must have been actually enlisted.[39]

B. Purchasing Arms of Soldier. An indictment for purchasing his arms of a soldier can only be sustained by showing that the soldier was in lawful possession of the arms, or had a special bailment of them.[40]

C. Soliciting Person to Leave State to Enlist Elsewhere. Under a statute making it an offense to solicit a person to leave the state for the purpose of enlisting elsewhere,[41] it is immaterial that the person solicited was unfit for service,[42] and the indictment need not allege that the person solicited did leave, or was a citizen of, or liable to do military duty in, the state, or set forth the means used to solicit such person.[43] The exact time at which the offense was committed need not be proved as laid.[44]

I. ON CRIMINAL CHARGES.

A. Definition. As applied to criminal proceedings the word "arrest"[1] signifies the apprehension or detention of the person in order to be forthcoming to answer for an alleged or suspected crime,[2] or to prevent the commission of a criminal offense.[3]

B. What Constitutes — 1. NECESSITY OF ASSUMING CONTROL OF PERSON. To constitute an arrest it is necessary that the officer should assume custody and control over the party, either by force or with his consent, and it has been held that neither the utterance of words[4] indicating an intention to arrest on the part of the person uttering them, nor the reading of the warrant[5] is of itself sufficient.

2. NECESSITY OF MANUAL TOUCHING. On the other hand, neither actual force, a manual touching of the body, nor physical restraint is necessary when the party submits to, or is in the power of, the officer.[6]

C. Who May Be Arrested — 1. IN GENERAL. With certain exceptions[7] all persons capable of committing crime[8] are equally liable to arrest in all criminal cases, although no man should be arrested unless he is charged with such a crime as will at least justify holding him to bail when taken.[9]

2. PERSONS ILLEGALLY BROUGHT WITHIN JURISDICTION. A person may be lawfully arrested and held for trial, under criminal process issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, even though he was brought within the jurisdiction of such court by fraud or force, after an illegal arrest made in another jurisdiction.[10]

3. PERSONS PRIVILEGED FROM ARREST. Diplomatic agents,[11] members of parliament, of congress, and of the various state legislatures, election officers, and jurors, suitors, and witnesses in attendance on a court of record,[12] are exempt from arrest in certain cases — usually in all cases except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace.[13] But the arrest of such persons is not void, as the exemption is only a personal privilege, which the person is entitled to plead in abatement.[14] An arrest is illegal when it is made, on a criminal charge, merely as a contrivance to get an exempt person into custody in a civil suit.[15]

D. Modes of Arrest — 1. In General. An arrest may be made in four ways[16] — either by a warrant,[17] by an officer without a warrant, by a private person without a warrant,[18] or by hue and cry.[19]

2. By Warrant — a. Who May Serve — (I) When Addressed to Peace-Officer — (A) In General. While a peace-officer may make an arrest under a warrant directed either to peace-officers of his class generally, or to him by name, or by the designation of his office,[20] it seems that he has no right to make an arrest under a warrant directed to peace-officers of another class.[21]

(B) Right of Officer to Deputize. A sheriff, being the highest peace-officer within his jurisdiction, may, when a warrant is directed to him, issue his warrant deputizing others to execute it,[22] and may even authorize, by word of mouth, his under-sheriff to execute it;[23] but an inferior peace-officer to whom a warrant is directed cannot authorize any one else to execute it, either verbally or otherwise.[24]

(II) When Addressed to Private Person. A private person may lawfully execute any warrant directed to him by name,[25] but cannot execute a warrant not so directed to him.[26] It follows, therefore, that a private person cannot Bribery. — In State v. Polacheck, (Wis. 1898) 77 N. W. 708, it was held that, since bribery was not a felony at common law, and the statutes making it such were enacted subsequent to the constitution, it is not a felony within the constitutional provision exempting legislators from arrest in all cases except treason, felony, and breach of the peace.

Fighting a duel. — A congressman is not privileged from arrest on a warrant charging that he is about to commit a breach of the peace by fighting a duel. U. S. v. Wise, 1 Hayw. & H. (U. S.) 82, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,746*a*.

Offense committed during absence as witness. — The privilege from arrest of a witness residing in one district and cited to appear before a court sitting in another will not protect him from arrest for a criminal offense committed during the time he was absent from his residence for the purpose of giving evidence. Ex p. Ewan, 6 Quebec Q. Arrest of truant. — A warrant for the arrest of a truant may be served by a truant officer. O'Malia v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 129.

21. Thus, a sheriff has no right to make an arrest under a justice's warrant directed to "any constable" (State v. Wenzel, 77 Ind. 428), and a constable has no authority to execute a warrant directed to the sheriff (Winkler v. State, 32 Ark. 539), unless he is deputized in the manner provided by law (see infra, I, D, 2, a, (I), (B)).

22. Winkler v. State, 32 Ark. 539; 1 Hale P. C. 581; 2 Hawkins P. C. c. 13, § 29.

Compare Salisbury v. Com., 79 Ky. 425, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 211, which holds that, although a sheriff cannot legally deputize a private person to execute a warrant of arrest, such person's possession of the warrant does not deprive him of the right to make an arrest where he has reasonable grounds for believing that the person arrested has committed a felony.

authorize another to execute a warrant directed to him,[27] although it seems that he may call others to his assistance.[28]

b. Necessity of Having Warrant in Possession — (I) In General. When a warrant has been issued, and the circumstances are such as to render an arrest without a warrant illegal, neither a private person nor an officer has a right to make an arrest unless he has the warrant with him at the time,[29] even though the person arrested knows that a warrant has been issued.[30]

(II) Where Arrest Is Made by Bystander. Where, however, an officer, armed with a warrant of arrest, calls upon a citizen or another officer for assistance,[31] the latter may make the arrest, though not in actual possession of the warrant,[32] provided the officer whom he is assisting is present, or near, and acting in the arrest.[33]

c. Necessity of Showing Warrant — (I) In General — (A) When Arrest Made by Known Peace-Officer. In making an arrest, a sworn peace-officer, commonly known as such and acting within the limits of his jurisdiction, is not bound to show his warrant,[34] even though it is demanded of him,[35] as every one is bound to know the character of such an officer when acting within his proper jurisdiction,[36] and is bound to submit peaceably to the arrest before he can demand that the cause thereof be made known to him.[37] After the person has submitted to the arrest or acquiesced in the authority of the officer, however, the latter should, if demanded, acquaint the former with the cause of the arrest,[38] either by stating the substance of the warrant to him,[39] or by reading it to him;[40] but, when the officer is resisted and there is danger of the prisoner's escape, it seems that he is not bound to exhibit his warrant.[41]

(B) When Arrest Made by Private Person or One Not Known as Peace-Officer. In making an arrest under a warrant under circumstances which do not justify an arrest without a warrant, either a private person, a special officer, one who is not commonly known as a peace-officer, or a regular officer who is not sworn, or is acting beyond the limits of his jurisdiction, must, if demanded, show the warrant to the person before he makes the arrest.[42]

(II) When Not Requested So to Do. In no event is it necessary for either an officer or a private person to show the warrant until he is requested so to do.[43]

d. Only Person Named May Be Arrested. No one may be arrested under a warrant other than the person named therein,[44] even though the warrant was intended to designate the person arrested,[45] unless the statute authorizes the designation by a fictitious name of a person whose name is unknown.[46]

(II) When Authorized — (A) For Felony — (1) Committed or Attempted in Officer's Presence. It is universally recognized that it is not only the right, but the duty, of a peace-officer to arrest, without a warrant, one whom he finds attempting to commit,[54] or one who is committing, or has committed, a felony in his presence or within his view,[55] and the arrest may be made at any subsequent time as well as at the time of the commission of the felony.[56] If the felony is committed in the presence of a justice of the peace or other peace-officer having similar powers,[57] he may arrest the felon himself, or give a verbal order for his apprehension and detention.[58]

(2) To Prevent Felony. A peace-officer also has the right to make an arrest without a warrant, for the purpose of preventing the commission of a felony.[59]

(B) For Misdemeanor — (1) IN GENERAL — (a) AT COMMON LAW. At common law, as a general rule, an arrest could not be made without a warrant for an offense less than felony, except for a breach of the peace;[65] and such an arrest is not authorized by a statute providing for arrests for felonies without a warrant.[66]

(b) UNDER STATUTE. In some jurisdictions, however, the common-law rule has been modified to the extent of permitting a peace-officer to arrest, without a warrant, one who has committed, or is committing, a misdemeanor in the presence or within the view of such officer;[67] but such an arrest can be made only at the time of the commission of the offense,[68] or upon fresh and immediate pursuit

f. What Constitutes Reasonable and Probable Grounds of Suspicion. The reasonable and probable grounds that will justify an officer in arresting, without a warrant, one whom he suspects of felony must be such as would actuate a reasonable man, acting in good faith.[4] The necessary elements of the grounds of suspicion are that the officer acts upon a belief in the person's guilt, based either upon facts or circumstances within the officer's own knowledge,[5] or upon information imparted to him by reliable and credible third persons.[6] Hence, an arrest

Simmons v. Vandyke, 138 Ind. 380, 37 N. E. 973, 46 Am. St. Rep. 411, 26 L. R. A. 33. Contra, in Canada, under the code. Reg. v. Cloutier, 12 Manitoba 183. And compare Cunningham v. Baker, 104 Ala. 160, 16 So. 68, 53 Am. St. Rep. 27, wherein it was held that such an arrest, under a telegram charging the person arrested with "swindling," was illegal, the word having no legal or technical meaning, the court, however, refusing to decide whether or not the arrest would have been legal had a technical felony been charged.

When circumstances contradict charge.— A peace-officer is not bound to arrest a person merely upon a statement by another that he is illegal when it is made by an officer upon mere suspicion or belief, unsupported by facts, circumstances, or credible information calculated to produce such suspicion or belief.[7] A private person, however, can arrest only when the suspicion arises in his own mind, upon facts or circumstances within his knowledge, and cannot act upon information or suspicion imparted or communicated to him by others.[8]

g. Making Known Authority and Intention — (i) Necessity For — (a) When Arrest Made by Known Peace-Officer. In making an arrest, without a warrant, a known peace-officer is not bound to disclose his character or authority, or give notice of his intention, until the party has submitted,[9] especially when the arrest is made at the time of the commission of the offense,[10] or upon quick pursuit of is a thief, especially when the goods alleged to be stolen are not in his possession. Wark's Case, 5 City Hall Rec. (N. Y.) 141.

In Texas an arrest can be made, without a warrant, only when a felony or an offense against the public peace is committed in the presence, or within the view, of the person making the arrest, or when "it is shown by satisfactory proof to a peace-officer, upon the representation of a credible person, that a felony has been committed, and that the offender is about to escape, so that there is no time to procure a warrant." Jacobs v. State, 28 Tex. App. 79, 12 S. W. 408. Stat. (1898), § 4638, permitting a private person to arrest another who has committed a felony in his presence, or where a felony has been committed and he has reasonable cause for believing that the person arrested has committed it.

The common fame of the country constitutes a reasonable ground of suspicion, authorizing a private person to arrest, without a warrant, one whom he suspects of felony. Ashley's Case, 12 Coke 90; 2 Hale P. C. 81; 2 Hawkins P. C. c. 12, § 16.

Assistance by third party.— The fact that a private person has reasonable grounds for believing that another has committed a felony, and, therefore, is justified in arresting him, furnishes no authority to another to aid in making such arrest unless he, likewise, has reasonable grounds to believe that the person arrested has committed a felony. the offender,[11] or where the officer is met with a demonstration of force before he attempts the arrest;[12] but, when the officer has effectually consummated the arrest, he should inform the prisoner of his authority, and the cause for which the former is arrested.[13]

(B) When Arrest Made by Private Person or One Not Known as Peace-Officer. When either a special officer[14] or one not generally known as an officer[15] makes an arrest, without a warrant, he must disclose his authority, if demanded; and a private person, in making such an arrest, should in all cases notify the person arrested of his purpose, and acquaint him with the cause of the arrest.[16]

(II) Who Entitled to Notice. It is not necessary that the notice should be given to any one other than the person sought to be arrested.[17]

(III) Sufficiency of Notice. When notice is requisite, its sufficiency is dependent upon the facts surrounding each particular arrest;[18] but it may be stated as a general rule that the notice is sufficient when it is such as to inform a reasonable man of the authority and purpose of the one making the arrest, and the reason thereof.[19]

E. Manner of Making Arrest[20]— 1. Time. It may be stated as a general rule that an arrest may be made for a criminal offense, either with or without a warrant, on any day, and at any time of the day.[21]

Warrant must specify particular felony.— A constable is not justified in breaking open a door in order to make an arrest under a or charged with a misdemeanor.[41] This right may be exercised in the night as well as in the day.[42]

(B) When Arrest Made Without Warrant. After due demand,[43] either a peace-officer or a private person may, without a warrant, break open doors for the purpose of apprehending a felon[44] or for the purpose of preventing the commission of a felony.[45] When the arrest is upon suspicion of felony, it seems that a peace-officer may break doors for the purpose of apprehending the suspected party,[46] but that a private person may not.[47] A peace-officer, moreover, may, without a warrant, break into a dwelling or other house for the purpose of suppressing or preventing a disturbance or breach of the peace, and of arresting the offenders,[48] even at night,[49] but a private person may not.[50]

(II) For Military Offenses. A military officer has no right to break into a private house for the purpose of capturing deserters.[51]

b. Necessity of Notice, and Demand and Refusal of Admittance. Neither an officer nor a private person, whether acting with or without a warrant, can break a door, for the purpose of making an arrest, until he has first given notice to those in the house of the cause of his coming, and has requested and been denied admittance.[52]

Taking before justice other than one named. — Where a justice of the peace issues a warrant for the apprehension of a party charged with crime, the arresting officer may take the party before another justice of the peace of the same county, who may examine and commit the prisoner in the absence or inability to act of the justice who issued the warrant, and it is not essential that the warrant shall contain a direction to that effect. Ex p. Branigan, 19 Cal. 133. Compare Stetson v. Packer, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 562; and see People v. Fuller, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 211, holding that a person, arrested under a warrant on a charge of having violated the act to prevent disturbances of religious meetings, cannot be taken by the arresting officer before any magistrate other than the one who issued the process; the provisions of the statute authorizing persons arrested under a warrant to be brought before the nearest magistrate applying only to cases where the accused may be required to give bond to appear before a court of criminal jurisdiction, or, in default thereof, be committed to jail.

Taking into county other than one from which warrant issued.— When a person commits a felony in one county and, upon a warrant being issued against him by a justice of the peace therein, he is pursued and flies into another county and is there taken, he must not, by virtue of that warrant, be carried to a justice of the peace in the county where he committed the felony, but to a justice of the peace in the county where he was taken. But if a felon is taken under a warrant in the county where he committed the felony, and breaks away into another county and is there taken, upon fresh pursuit, by those who first took him, he may be brought either to a justice of the county where he was last taken or legal.[59] For this purpose he may keep the prisoner in custody a reasonable length of time,[60] but no longer.[61] An officer's custody of a prisoner, whom he has arrested under a warrant and brought before a court, does not cease until the prisoner has been discharged, admitted to bail, or committed to jail upon a warrant issued by the court.[62]

b. When Arrested Without Warrant. When either an officer or a private person makes an arrest, without a warrant, it is his duty to take the person arrested, without unnecessary delay,[63] before a justice of the peace, magistrate, or other proper judicial officer having jurisdiction, in order that he may be examined and held, or dealt with as the case requires.[64] He may, however, detain the per-to a justice of the county under whose warrant he was first taken, for, in supposition of law, he was always in custody. 1 Hale P. C. 580.

Custody upon surrender by bondsman.— Where the presiding judge told the sheriff that the prisoner's surety wished to be relieved as soon as the trial commenced, and, after the prisoner's motion to continue had been denied and before the jury was impaneled, he was taken into custody at the noon recess by the sheriff on his own motion, it was held that this was proper, as the prisoner was left free to consult with counsel. Taking prisoner to third person.— An officer who has arrested a person for embezzlement has no authority to take him to a third person, at the request of the injured party, son arrested in custody a reasonable time, until he can conveniently and safely take him before a magistrate, when the circumstances preclude an immediate examination, hearing, or trial [65] — as where the arrest was made at night,[66] or the person arrested was ill [67] or drunk [68] at the time of the arrest, or the arresting officer was unable to find a judicial officer [69] — but to detain the person arrested in custody for any purpose other than taking him before a magistrate is illegal.[70]

(B) Money and Articles of Value. There has been a disposition on the part of some courts to extend the operation of this rule to money, jewelry, and other articles of value, as a prisoner might therewith procure the means or facilities to effect his escape.[78] The better rule, however, seems to be that, unless such property is connected with, or constitutes the fruits of, the particular crime for which the prisoner was arrested,[79] the officer has no right to take it from him, as he might thereby be deprived of the means of making his defense.[80]

(II) Disposition of Property Taken. Property taken from a person at the time of his arrest should be returned to him if it is not connected with the offense for which he was arrested,[81] and it seems that this should be done if he is acquitted.[82] On the other hand, if the property is connected with the offense charged it should not be returned to the prisoner, but may be disposed of in such manner as the ends of justice may require, under the order of the trial court or by the prisoner's consent.[83]

ful arrest, whether with or without a warrant,[86] unless such escape was voluntary;[87] and to that end may, if necessary, break doors, after demanding and being refused admittance.[88]

b. After Trial and Commitment. In like manner, an officer may arrest, without a warrant, a prisoner who has escaped from custody after trial and commitment.[89]

2. After Illegal Discharge or Release. When a prisoner has been illegally discharged or released from prison after trial and commitment, a peace-officer may retake him, without process,[90] or upon process issued at the instance of the district attorney.[91]

3. After Admission to Bail. After a prisoner has been admitted to bail an officer has no right to arrest him, without process,[92] because the bail was insufficient[93] or because the bail bond was defective or void.[94] It seems, however, that one who has been discharged on bail, by collusion between the witnesses, complainant, and justice of the peace, may be again arrested, upon a warrant issued by another justice, and required to give bail in a larger amount for the same offense.[95]

II. Under Mesne Process in Civil Actions.

B. Constitutionality and Construction of Statutes Concerning Remedy

1. Statutes Authorizing. Statutes authorizing the arrest and holding to bail of defendants in certain civil actions do not violate constitutional provisions forbidding deprivation of liberty without due process of law,[98] the imposition of cruel and unusual punishment,[99] or imprisonment for debt.[1] Such statutes should, however, be strictly construed.[2]

2. Statutes Abolishing or Prohibiting. Statutes abolishing imprisonment for debt as to existing contracts are not unconstitutional, as they affect the remedy only, and do not impair the obligation thereof.[3] Constitutions and statutes abolact indicating an intention to arrest." U. S. v. Benner, Baldw. (U. S.) 234, 239, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,568.

"The term 'arrest' has a technical meaning, applicable in legal proceedings. It implies that a person is thereby restrained of his liberty by some officer or agent of the law, armed with lawful process, authorizing and requiring the arrest to be made. It is intended to serve, and does serve, the end of bringing the person arrested personally within the custody and control of the law, for the purpose specified in, or contemplated by, the process." State v. Buxton, 102 N. C. 129, 131, 8 S. E. 774.

It is an auxiliary remedy designed to keep defendant within the reach of the court's final process. Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 411; Matoon v. Esler, 6 Cal. 57; Green v. Morse, 5 Me. 291.

Distinction between "arrest" and "attachment."—"As ordinarily used, the terms 'arrest' and 'attachment' coincide in meaning to some extent; though in strictness, as a distinction, an arrest may be said to be the act resulting from the service of an attachment. And in the more extended sense which is sometimes given to 'attachment,' including the act of taking, it would seem to differ from 'arrest' in that it is more peculiarly applicable to a taking of property, while 'arrest' is more commonly used in speaking of persons. The terms are, however, often interchanged when speaking of the taking of a man by virtue of legal authority. 'Arrest' is also applied in some instances to a seizure and detention of personal chattels, especially of ships and vessels; but this use of the term is not common in modern law." Bouvier L. Dict.

Prohibition of imprisonment for debt except in cases of fraud.— So, where constitutional provisions exist prohibiting imprisonment for debt except in cases of fraud, statutes have been held constitutional which authorize the arrest of a debtor for fraudulently disposing of his property (Dummer v. Nungesser, 107 Mich. 481, 65 N. W. 564), where he has removed or disposed of his property, or is about to do so, with intent to defraud his creditors (Ex p. Bergman, 18 Nev. 331, 4 Pac. 209), where he is about to remove from the state (Norman v. Manciette, 1 Sawy. No. 16,635); but unconstitutional where they provide that defendant may be arrested when the action is for wilful injury to person or character (Ex p. Prader, 6 Cal. 239), or in an action on a promise to marry, as the fraud meant is some fraud in procuring a contract to be made, or in attempting to evade performance — as by concealing or disposing of property, or attempting to run it out of the state (Matter of Tyson, 32 Mich. 262; Moore v. Mullen, 77 N. C. 327); but this last statement does not apply to a case where defendant seduced plaintiff under promise of marriage (Matter of Sheahan, 25 Mich. 145; Hood v. Sudderth, 111 N. C. 215, 16 S. E. 397).

ishing or prohibiting arrest and imprisonment for debt apply only to actions ex contractu, and not to actions ex delicto.[4]

3. Statutes of Exemption. A statute exempting a certain class of citizens from civil arrest, which statute applies to all in the same situation, is not unconstitutional, as being class legislation.[5] Nor is a statute which exempts permanent residents from arrest void, as discriminating between the citizens of the several states.[6]

C. Right to Remedy — 1. Who Entitled to — a. In General. An order of arrest or a capias ad respondendum may be obtained only by plaintiff in a civil action;[7] and may be obtained by him only when he has a right to maintain the action wherein it is sought.[8]

Remedy follows debt.— Plaintiff, in an action upon a debt which has been assigned to him, may hold defendant to bail in the same manner as though he were the original creditor, as the remedy attaches to and follows the debt, provided the relations of the parties remain the same, and the cause of action is not substantially changed. d. Non-Residents. A non-resident is entitled to resort to the provisional remedy of arrest,[11] in the absence of express statutory provision to the contrary.[12]

2. In What Actions — a. At Law — (i) Actions Ex Contractu — (a) Generally. At common law, plaintiff was entitled to arrest defendant in nearly every action ex contractu, for the recovery of a personal money judgment,[13] if the amount in controversy exceeded a certain sum.[14] Exceptions to this rule existed in actions of debt on penal statutes [15] and on collateral undertakings.[16] The right to arrest in civil actions has everywhere been greatly modified and limited by statute.[17]

12. In Louisiana, where a resident agent purchased for a non-resident principal a bill indorsed in blank, and afterward protested same for non-payment, and no discharge had been given, by the principal to the agent, from any responsibility growing out of the transaction, the agent, in an action against the vendor of the bill, was not prevented from procuring an order for the arrest of defendant by the Louisiana act of March 28, 1840, section 9, providing that no citizen of any state should be thereafter arrested in Louisiana at the suit of a non-resident creditor, except in cases where it was made to appear that the debtor had absconded from his residence. Conrey v. Elbert, 2 La. Ann. 18. So, the fact that three of four commercial partners reside in an adjoining state, and the fourth one resides in Louisiana, and they do business under one name in Louisiana and under another name in the other state, will not prevent a writ of arrest being brought by them against a party upon a note payable to plaintiffs under the name used by their firm in such adjoining state. 17. Georgia.—The Georgia act of 1857, providing that when an indorser of a note shall file an affidavit that he apprehends that the payment of the note will devolve upon himself if the maker is not held to bail, "it shall be the duty of the holder of the note immediately to commence suit," etc., does not authorize such indorser to have bail process by filing such affidavit after suit has already been begun by the holder of the note. Redding v. Price, 32 Ga. 178, 180.

Iowa.— A petition for alimony is in the nature of a civil proceeding within the Iowa act of Feb. 14, 1844, repealing all acts authorizing the issuance of a capias upon which a person may be arrested in a civil action. Westbrook v. Westbrook, 2 Greene (Iowa) 598.

New York.—Notwithstanding the code provision prescribing the cases in which an arrest might be had, a warrant might be issued under the Non-Imprisonment Act of 1831 in all the cases prescribed by that act. Gregory v. Weiner, Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y.) 210.

(B) On Judgments. Defendant is not, ordinarily, liable to arrest in an action on a judgment obtained in an action authorizing his arrest, whether he was[18] or was not[19] arrested therein, unless the action is on a foreign judgment, in which case he may be arrested[20] even though he was arrested in the original action.[21]

North Carolina.— In an action brought for the usurpation of a public office, a judge of the supreme court may, upon proof that defendant has received fees or emoluments belonging to the office he is charged with usurping, issue an order for defendant's arrest. Patterson v. Hubbs, 65 N. C. 119.

Pennsylvania.—Since the Pennsylvania act of July 12, 1842, abolishing imprisonment for debt in all cases except those especially provided for, a capias for a debt arising ex contractu is unauthorized. Pavona v. Di Jorio, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 382, 10 Pa. Dist. 83, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. (Pa.) 347; Blanco v. Bosch, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 171; Blanco v. Lauradon, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 368, 33 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 426. The purpose of an arrest under that act is to compel the debtor to give bail in an action on contract in such cases as the act refers to. Gosline v. Place, 32 Pa. St. 520.

Rhode Island.— The provision of R. I. Gen. Stat. c. 195, § 8, allowing arrest on any debt contracted before July 1, 1870, does not apply to a balance of account, some of the items of which bear a subsequent date. Corey v. Miller, 12 R. I. 337.

United States.— Since the act of congress abolishing imprisonment for debt to the extent of its abolishment by the respective states, no process can be issued to arrest a defendant in a civil suit except under the state law. Cooper v. Dungler, 4 McLean (U. S.) 257, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,192. Compare Gaines v. Travis, Abb. Adm. (U. S.) 422, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,180, holding that the act of congress of Aug. 23, 1842, authorizing the supreme court to prescribe, regulate, and alter the forms of writs and other process to be used and issued in the district and circuit courts of the United States, taken in connection with the United States supreme court rules of 1845, suspended the acts of congress of 1839 and 1841, which had abolished imprisonment for debt on process issuing out of the United States courts in all cases where, by the local law, it had been abolished, and that, therefore, parties became liable to arrest and imprisonment on process issuing out of the United States courts, irrespective of subsequent state legislation abolishing imprisonment.

Canada.— A capias cannot issue in an action for an account based upon the claim which may exist after the rendering of the account (Gay v. Denard, 3 Montreal Super. Ct. 125, 15 Rev. Lég. 585; Phillips v. Kurr, 2 Quebec Super. Ct. 444), even though plaintiff in the action claims a definite sum (Gay v. Denard, 3 Montreal Super. Ct. 125, 15 Rev. Lég. 585).

18. Thus, a person discharged under the poor-debtors law from imprisonment on execution (Willington v. Stearns, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 497), a judgment debtor, discharged for neglect of his creditor to proceed in execution or to pay his board (Barnes v. Viall, 6 Fed. 661), or a defendant who has been superseded, for want of being charged in execution within two terms after judgment (Blandford v. Foot, Cowp. 72), cannot be arrested in an action brought upon such judgment. But, in Massachusetts, in an action on a judgment founded upon a debt contracted with intent not to pay it, the debtor may be arrested, without notice, under Mass. Pub. Stat. c. 162, § 17 (Way v. Brigham, 138 Mass. 384); and, in Ohio, by statute, the court may order defendant to give special bail in an action upon a judgment (Headley v. Roby, 6 Ohio 521).

When judgment is for two claims.— No arrest can be had in an action upon a foreign judgment recovered for two claims, one only of which would have entitled plaintiff to arrest in the original action. Goodale v. Finn, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 151.

When no fraud alleged in original action.— An order of arrest may be granted, in an action in New York on a foreign judgment, upon allegations of fraud in the original transaction, even though no fraud was alleged in the action resulting in such judgment. (II) Actions Ex Delicto — (A) Generally. As a general rule, defendant in an action of tort for the recovery of unliquidated damages cannot be held to bail unless some special ground therefor is shown.[22] In some jurisdictions, however, the form of the action carries the right to arrest, and no special ground need be shown;[23] but a plaintiff who may sue either on contract or in tort cannot, by electing to proceed in the latter form, render liable to arrest a defendant who could not be arrested in an action on the contract.[24]

(B) For Injuries to Person or Character. As a general rule, defendant in an action for injury to person or character is not liable to arrest,[25] except in cases of mayhem or atrocious battery,[26] or under other special circumstances[27] making

Assault and battery.— To warrant an order for holding defendant to bail in an action for assault and battery, not only a good cause of action must be shown, but some special reason for holding to bail — as that defendant is a transient person, residing out of the jurisdiction of the court. Davis v. Scott, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 127; Zimmerman v. Chrisman, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 153; Van Vechten v. Hopkins, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 293.

False imprisonment.— Special bail will be refused, in false imprisonment against an officer of a court martial, where defendants have not oppressively exercised their power. Duffield v. Smith, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 302.

Malicious prosecution.— In order to warrant an order for bail in an action for malicious prosecution, the affidavit must disclose not only a good cause of action, but some special cause for ordering bail. Benson v. Bennett, 25 N. J. L. 166.

Slander and libel.— In actions for slander and libel, except slander of title, bail is not demandable unless special cause is shown by affidavit (Clason v. Gould, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 47; Withers v. Thornton, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 116, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,918), as that defendant is a transient person (Van Vechten v. Hopkins, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 293). But an arrest may be had in an action for slander if it necessary that he shall be kept within the reach of justice.[28] Statutory provisions that defendant may be arrested in an action for an injury to the character or person of plaintiff[29] have, however, been held applicable to actions for assault and battery,[30] criminal conversation,[31] divorce,[32] enticing a married woman's husband from her,[33] libel,[34] malicious prosecution,[35] and seduction.[36]

(c) For Conversion of, or Injuries to, Property. At common law, an arrest could be had in an action of trover,[37] and, by statute, defendant's arrest is authorized in an action for an injury to, or the wrongful taking, detention, or conversion of, property.[38]

Conversion of check.— Where defendant received and converted a check, knowing that it had been sent to him by mistake and that he had already been paid for the goods which the check was intended to pay for, it was held that he was liable to arrest, in an action to recover the amount of the check, it being an action for an injury to property within the meaning of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549. Agar v. Haines, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 448 [affirming 11 N. Y. St. 644]. But, where defendant was arrested in a suit for the conversion of stocks which came into his possession through an assignment which plaintiff claimed to have executed after hastily glancing over it, although he had full opportunity to examine it, it was held, on a motion to vacate the order of arrest, that plaintiff was bound by the assignment and that the order should be vacated. Dixon v. Beach, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 284.

Conversion of money.— Where defendant was a depositor in plaintiff's bank and one hundred dollars was paid him, by mistake, in addition to the true balance due him, and, after being informed of the mistake, he refused to return the money, and an action of trover was instituted against him to recover damages for conversion of the funds, it was held that the issuance of a capias was not unlawful under the provisions of the Pennsylvania act of July 12, 1842. Alexander v. Goldstein, 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 518.

Damages arising from boycott.— An action to recover damages from those who have combined to injure plaintiff's business by declaring and enforcing a boycott is "an action for an injury to property" within the meaning of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549, and an order for defendants' arrest may be granted therein. Old Dominion Steam-Ship Co. v. McKenna, 30 Fed. 48.

Money lost in gambling.— Under a statute providing for defendant's arrest in an action for wrongfully taking, detaining, or converting property, defendant may be arrested in an action brought for the recovery of money lost in gambling. When defendant held property as bailee.— In an action for an injury to personal property of plaintiff through the negligence of defendant, the latter may be arrested notwithstanding the fact that his possession was by virtue of a bailment. Keeler v. Clark, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 154. But see People v. Willett, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 78, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 210, holding that the gist of an action on the custom against an innkeeper, for the value of baggage lost, is his tortious negligence in caring for the property, and that the action is not one for "injuring or wrongfully taking, detaining or converting personal property," within the meaning of the code. Hence, de-

(III) For Fraud and Deceit. Statutes regulating imprisonment for debt frequently provide that a defendant who, by fraud and deceit, has procured the making of a contract, may be arrested either in an action on the contract or in an action for damages arising out of the contract.[39]

(IV) For Recovery of Statutory Penalties. In an action for the recovery of a statutory penalty or forfeiture plaintiff may arrest defendant when expressly authorized so to do by statute[40] or when the penalty constitutes a debt fraudulently incurred,[41] but not otherwise.[42]

fendant cannot be held to bail unless he is a non-resident, or is about to remove from the state.

Where an unincorporated association in due form orders its treasurer to pay over the money in his hands, and he refuses so to do, he is guilty of a conversion of the funds of the association for which he is liable to arrest in an action brought by its president. Strebe v. Albert, 1 N. Y. City Ct. 376.

Includes real property.— Under the provisions of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549, defendant may be arrested, in an action of trespass to recover damages for a forcible disseizin (Welch v. Winterburn, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 518), or to recover the possession of real property, and damages for the unlawful withholding of the same (Merritt v. Carpenter, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 61).

When defendant not liable to arrest.— Where the grounds upon which an order of arrest is based are "fraud, false and fraudulent representations," and no cause of action for fraud is made out, the order cannot be sustained upon the other ground stated, which is not a cause of action in tort known to the law. Leber v. Dietz, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 524, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 1002.

Where plaintiff paid defendant for part of the latter's business, after watching it for eight days, during which the average daily earnings were thirty-five dollars, it was held that an order of arrest, based upon an alleged fraudulent statement by defendant that the daily earnings were fifty dollars, was properly vacated, as the purchase was made after full knowledge. Cox v. Dwyer, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 713, 44 N. Y. St. 270.

One who transfers scrip to which his immediate transferrer had no title is not guilty of a fraud sufficient to warrant his arrest; but one who, receiving scrip which he knows does not belong to himself, forges the name of the true owner thereon and sells it to another, is guilty of a fraud sufficient to authorize an order of arrest in an action by the party to whom his vendee transferred it. Faris v. Peck, 40 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 484.

40. New Jersey.— Defendant could be held to bail in an action to recover the penalty for a violation of the act regulating fisheries in the Delaware river. Champion v. Pierce, 11 N. J. L. 196.

New York.— Defendant may be arrested in an action brought to recover a fine or penalty. N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549. Thus, an arrest may be had in an action before a justice to recover the penalty for selling adulterated milk. Buffalo v. Ray, 1 N. Y. St. 730. But 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. p. 667, § 32, providing that one purchasing a share in an illegal lottery may recover double the sum paid therefor, is remedial and not penal, and, therefore, does not authorize defendant's arrest (Staub v. Myers, 16 N. Y. App. Div. 476, 44 N. Y. Suppl. 954 [reversing 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 99, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 831]), and an order of arrest cannot be obtained upon proof that the property for the recovery of which the action is brought was offered for sale in violation of the statute against lotteries, and, therefore, is forfeited to the state, and, through the state, to plaintiff, by virtue of such forfeiture (People v. Phillips, etc., Tea Co., 30 Hun (N. Y.) 553).

Vermont.— An action to recover a forfeiture created by statute is not an action arising on a contract within the meaning of Vt. Rev. Laws, § 1477, forbidding arrests in actions on contract. U. S. v. Banister, 70 Fed. 44.

41. When penalty is debt fraudulently incurred.— In an action by the United States to recover a penalty for selling matches not stamped, an arrest may be had as in an action for a debt fraudulently incurred. U. S. v. Walsh, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 66, Deady (U. S.) 281, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,635.

(1823), c. 140, to compel a partnership accounting, defendant cannot be arrested and held to bail, since such a remedy is not specially authorized, and is not suitable as an equitable remedy, notwithstanding that Mass. Stat. (1817), c. 87, seems to permit holding to bail in equity by providing that, in certain cases, a plea in equity "may be inserted in a writ of attachment and such writ be served as other writs of attachment are by law to be served"— that is, by attachment of property or person.

Arrest pending action.— After a cause has been tried and disposed of as an equitable action, and the issues as to allegations constituting the legal cause of action have been sent to a jury for disposal, defendants as to whom the allegations make a cause of action at law, for which, under the code, an arrest may be had, may be arrested. Hennequin v. Clews, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 108.

A statute abolishing arrest on mesne process in suits founded upon contracts applies as well to suits in equity as to actions at law. Carter v. Porter, 71 Me. 167; People v. Speir, 77 N. Y. 144 [reversing 12 Hun (N. Y.) 70].

44. To set aside assignment.— In a suit in equity, to set aside an assignment on the ground of intent to defraud creditors, defendant is not liable to arrest, as no order can be granted, under N. Y. Code, § 179, except in actions for the recovery of money. People v. Kelly, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 444.

To set aside fraudulent conveyance.— In a proceeding in equity to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, an arrest of the grantee was held not to be authorized by N. Y. Code, § 179, subs. 4, permitting arrests where fraud was committed in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation to enforce which the action was brought. Fassett v. Tallmadge, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 436.

45. Who is absconding debtor.— A debtor about to remove from the state, without the consent of his creditors and without an intention of returning, is prima facie an absconding debtor under Oreg. Code, § 106. Norman v. Manciette, 1 Sawy. (U. S.) 484, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,300.

Necessity of showing present intention.— Where defendant, after his arrest, showed that he had no intention of leaving England at the time when the arrest was made, although he intended to do so about two months later, it was held that the arrest was premature, even though plaintiff's affidavit stated that, in consequence of a commission to examine witnesses abroad, no final judgment could be obtained before the expiration of that period. Pegler v. Hislop, 5 Dowl. & L. 223, 1 Exch. 437, 11 Jur. 996, 17 L. J. Exch. 53.

Intention to leave is not act.— N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 555, provides that a person prosecuted in a representative capacity cannot be arrested under the provisions thereof except for his personal act. This seems to contemplate more than a mere intention to do an act. A purpose to leave the state, although openly avowed, can hardly be called an act. Genesee River Nat. Bank v. Mead, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 303.

Kentucky.— Myall v. Wright, 2 Bush (Ky.) 130.

Louisiana.—Armistead v. Sanderson, 1 Rob. (La.) 176; Wooster v. Salzman, 14 La. 98, the latter case holding that a person residing at a boarding-house, having no other domicile or residence, may be arrested at the suit of the keeper of the boarding-house, upon her affidavit that she fears he may remove, with his effects, out of the jurisdiction of the court.

England.— Larchin v. Willan, 7 Dowl. P. C. 11, 1 H. & H. 322, 2 Jur. 970, 8 L. J. Exch. 19, 4 M. & W. 351; McBlair v. Weir, 7 Ir. R. C. L. 526; Yorkshire Engine Co. v. Wright, 21 Wkly. Rep. 15.

Canada.—Walker v. Goldman, 16 Quebec Super. Ct. 466.

An executrix who has rendered an account which has been opposed cannot be arrested, on the opposition and affidavit of a creditor of the estate she administers, on the ground that she will leave the state before her account has been homologated, and without leaving sufficient funds to pay his debt. Mondelli v. Russell, 17 La. 537.

When a debtor leaves sufficient property to satisfy the debt for which he is sued, he is not liable to arrest even though he may not leave enough to satisfy all his debts. Carraby v. Davis, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 163.

In England it must be shown that there is reasonable ground to believe that defendant is about to quit England to avoid plaintiff's action (Harvey v. O'Meara, 7 Dowl. P. C. 725, debtor is not liable to arrest on this ground, however, when his intended departure is in good faith,[47] without intent to defraud his creditors,[48] or when his absence will be temporary only.[49]

b. Concealment of Property Sought to Be Replevied. In some jurisdictions defendant, in an action for the recovery of specific personal property,[50] may be arrested when he has concealed, removed, or disposed of all or a part of the prop-

3 Jur. 629), and that defendant's absence from the country will materially prejudice the creditor in the prosecution of his suit (McBlair v. Weir, 7 Ir. R. C. L. 526), or that his absence is likely to last for such a time that he will not be forthcoming after final judgment (Larchin v. Willan, 7 Dowl. P. C. 11, 1 H. & H. 332, 2 Jur. 970, 8 L. J. Exch. 19, 4 M. & W. 351).

A person domiciled in Ireland, and about to return to that country after a temporary sojourn in England, is liable to be held to bail as a person about to quit England. Lamond v. Eiffe, 3 Q. B. 910, 3 G. & D. 256, 6 Jur. 1038, 12 L. J. Q. B. 12, 43 E. C. L. 1032.

47. As where he intends to leave on business (Myall v. Wright, 2 Bush (Ky.) 130; Stevenson v. Smith, 28 N. H. 12; Atkinson v. Blake, 1 Dowl. N. S. 849, 6 Jur. 1113; Marcotte v. Moody, 5 Montreal Leg. N. 359, 11 Rev. Lég. 460; S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Dixon, 3 Quebec 399; Nelson v. Lippe, 14 Quebec Super. Ct. 437), or for the purpose of seeking employment elsewhere, or improving his condition (Stevenson v. Smith, 28 N. H. 12; Shotton v. Lawson, 6 Montreal Super. Ct. 451; Toothe v. Frederick, 14 Ont. Pr. 287; Henderson v. Duggan, 5 Quebec 364; Seguin v. Cartier, 13 Quebec Super. Ct. 346).

48. Ex p. Fkumoto, 120 Cal. 316, 52 Pac. 726; Paulet v. Antaya, 3 Montreal Leg. N. 154, 10 Rev. Lég. 329; Lagacé v. Ayotte, 6 Quebec 88 [affirming 5 Quebec 240]; Kellert v. Carranza, 4 Rev. de Jur. 318; Senécal v. Tranchant, 14 Rev. Lég. 556.

Intent must be proved.— The simple fact that defendant is leaving the country without paying a debt does not, of itself, constitute a fraud, and it is necessary to prove an intent to defraud in order to maintain a capias. Tramblay v. Graham, 7 Montreal Super. Ct. 374.

Sufficient showing of intent to defraud.— Where defendant, between the date of the making and maturity of the note upon which the suit was based, received large sums of money and secretly and suddenly abandoned his house before the expiration of his lease thereon, and privately removed his family and household furniture from the state, it was held that sufficient facts were shown to justify his arrest on the ground of his intention to abscond with intent to defraud. Brooklyn Daily Union v. Hayward, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 235.

Where a debtor, who, in 1875, had secreted his property and left Canada with intent to defraud, came temporarily into the province in 1882, and was capiased as he was again leaving, it was held that the secretion and departure in 1875, coupled with the intention of again leaving in 1882, were sufficient grounds for the arrest. McFarlane v. McNiece, 7 Montreal Leg. N. 398.

Where there was evidence that defendant had said that plaintiff might "go to the devil," and that he would never pay a cent, but would go off to Montana, and his family would follow, it was held that an intention to depart with intent to defraud was sufficiently shown. Valade v. Bellehumeur, 2 Montreal Leg. N. 116.

Insufficient showing as to intent.—A debtor is not liable to arrest, on the ground that he is about to remove from the state with intent to defraud his creditors, upon a showing that, ten days before the application for the writ of arrest, he sought to escape a personal interview with an importunate creditor. Devries v. Summit, 86 N. C. 126.

The fact that one sued for breach of promise of marriage had told plaintiff that he would go to the United States if she insisted on their marriage before the time agreed upon does not entitle her to a capias ad respondendum against him if no proof is given that he intended to put his threat into execution and thereby defraud her. Walker v. Goldman, 16 Quebec Super. Ct. 466.

Presumption as to intent.— An intention to leave the state so as to authorize an arrest will be easily presumed where a fraudulent or suspicious disposal of property is proved. Hudson's Case, 2 Mart. (La.) 172.

49. Myall v. Wright, 2 Bush (Ky.) 130; Levi v. Levy, 20 La. Ann. 552; Stevenson v. Smith, 28 N. H. 12; Ambrois v. Malleral, 2 Montreal Leg. N. 159; Palmer v. Scott, 18 Ont. Pr. 368. Compare Roberts v. Page, 13 La. 452; Henshaw v. Ladd, 8 La. 512, which cases hold that a debtor who leaves no property behind may be held to bail when he is about to depart from the state, even though his absence will be temporary only, and even though he has established his family residence, and commenced permanent business, within the state.

50. Right to arrest not dependent upon character of cause of action.— The right to arrest defendant, in an action for the recovery of specific personal property, does not arise from the character of the cause of action, but depends upon the question of whether or not he has disposed of the property so that it cannot be found by the sheriff, or with intent to fraudulently deprive plaintiff of it. Jananique v. De Luc, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 419.

Does not apply to actions for conversion.— Where the complaint alleges a cause of action for wilfully taking, carrying away, and converting personal property, and demands a erty,[51] so that it cannot be found or taken by the sheriff, and with intent[52] that it should not be so found or taken, or to deprive plaintiff of the benefit thereof.[53]

c. Fraudulent Acts in Fiduciary Capacity — (1) In General. Some statutes authorize the arrest of defendant on the ground that he received, in a fiduciary capacity,[54] money or property belonging to plaintiff, and failed to account therefor.[55] money judgment, the action is for damages and not to recover specific property, and, hence, does not authorize defendant's arrest on the ground that he has concealed or disposed of property with the intent that it should not be found or taken, or to deprive plaintiff of the benefit thereof. Seymour v. Van Curen, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 94.

51. Plaintiff need not take part.— In New York, if a writ of replevin is sued out and the whole of the property claimed is not found, plaintiff is not bound to accept part, but may arrest defendant. Snow v. Roy, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 602. He cannot, however, hold defendant to bail after accepting part of the property, as he must elect whether he will take a portion of the goods only, or the person of defendant. Lowrey v. Mansfield, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 88.

52. Materiality of intent.— It must not only appear that the property has been concealed, removed, or disposed of, but that such concealment, removal, or disposal was made with intent that the property should not be found or taken by the sheriff, or with intent to deprive plaintiff of it. Watson v. McGuire, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 219; Reimer v. Nagel, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 256, Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y.) 219; Merrick v. Suydam, Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y.) 212. To same effect see Roberts v. Randel, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 707, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 327, 3 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 190. Compare Van Neste v. Conover, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 509, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 148, holding that defendant is liable to arrest if the property has been removed, concealed, or disposed of so that replevin is impossible, although no fraud or bad faith is alleged as to such disposition.

When disposition was without anticipation of action.—An intent on the part of one, who, by false representations, induces another to sell him property, to put the property beyond the seller's reach will authorize an order of arrest, the other elements appearing, even though the buyer may not contemplate that an action at law will be commenced to recover the specific property. Lippman v. Shapiro, 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 367.

Disposition before action.— Where defendant acquired property fraudulently and under circumstances justifying a reclamation of it by the vendor, and disposed of it with intent to perfect the fraud and put the property beyond the reach of the vendor, he is liable to arrest, in an action for the recovery of the property, even though such sale, made before the commencement of the action, was to a bona fide purchaser. Barnett v. Selling, 70 N. Y. 492 [affirming 9 Hun (N. Y.) 236].

54. The words "fiduciary capacity" apply to all contracts based on trust or confidence, and not on credit. Dunaher v. Meyer, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 87. They contemplate a case of express trust or confidence (White v. McAllister, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 106), a case where confidence is reposed in the integrity of the man rather than in his pecuniary ability (Schudder v. Shiells, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 420). The obligation of a surety on a guardian's bond is not fiduciary, within the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act that no debt "created while acting in a fiduciary character, shall be discharged under this act," and, hence, defendant is not liable to arrest in a suit filed on the bond pending his petition in bankruptcy. Ex p. Taylor, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 617, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,773.

When relations are those of debtor and creditor.— When the facts show that the relations existing between plaintiff and defendant are not of a fiduciary character, but are those of debtor and creditor, defendant is not liable to arrest. In California, an agent who has received money for his principal is not liable to arrest in an action therefor unless it is shown that he was guilty of fraud, as Cal. Const. § 15, art. 1, declares that "no person shall be imprisoned for debt, in any civil action on mesne or final process, unless in cases of fraud." Matter of Holdforth, 1 Cal. 438, 441.

The criterion in every such case is to determine whether the specific moneys received ought, in good faith, to have been kept and paid over to plaintiff, or whether defendant,

(II) Attorneys, Bankers, and Collecting Agents. An attorney, banker, or other agent, who collects money for his principal, holds it in a fiduciary capacity and may be arrested in a civil action brought upon his neglect or refusal to account for such money.[56]

(III) Factors, Brokers, and Other Agents. Such a statute applies to a factor, broker, or agent who misapplies money which he has received from his principal for a specific purpose,[57] or who fails to account for the net proceeds of upon receiving such moneys, had the right to use them as his own, holding himself accountable to plaintiff for the debt thus created. Decatur v. Goodrich, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 3. To same effect see Simms v. Bean, 10 La. Ann. 346.

Claim of third person to money.— The fact that a third person has interposed some claim to money which defendant received in a fiduciary capacity for plaintiff, wherefore defendant refused to pay it over lest he should be liable to such third person, does not affect plaintiff's right to have defendant arrested in an action to recover such money. Gross v. Graves, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 95.

Fraud committed in another state.— The fact that the fraud for which defendant was arrested was committed in another state is no ground for immunity from arrest. Castree v. Kirby, 2 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 334; Powers v. Davenport, 101 N. C. 286, 7 S. E. 747.

Intent immaterial.— Where defendant has committed acts which entitle plaintiff to have him arrested in an action for the recovery of money or property received in a fiduciary capacity, the intent with which such acts were committed is immaterial. Gossler v. Wood, 120 N. C. 69, 27 S. E. 33; Durham Fertilizer Co. v. Little, 118 N. C. 808, 24 S. E. 664.

Interest on money received.— A defendant who has received money in a fiduciary capacity, which he refuses to pay over, may be arrested as well for the accrued interest thereon as for the principal. People v. Clark, 45 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 12.

56. Holt v. Streeter, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 538, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 843, 57 N. Y. St. 193; Burhans v. Casey, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 707; Stoll v. King, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 298; Carroll v. Montgomery, 128 N. C. 278, 38 S. E. 874; National Bank v. Jennings, 38 S. C. 372, 17 S. E. 16; Cotton v. Sharpstein, 14 Wis. 226, 80 Am. Dec. 774. Contra, Smith v. Edmonds, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 86, the court saying that the provision for the arrest of persons receiving money in a fiduciary capacity contemplates only an express trust created by law — such as a trusteeship, executorship, administratorship, guardianship, or assigneeship — and not an implied trust arising from agency or bailment.

Bankers — When liable to arrest.— Where a banker collects notes, received, for collection only, from one with whom he has no account, and converts the proceeds to his own use, he comes within N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549, which provides that a defendant may be arrested in an action to recover money received in a fiduciary capacity and converted by him. Turney v. Guthrie, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 679. But, where defendant became plaintiff's banker, under an agreement to receive his deposits, collect his bills, and credit him with the amount, with the understanding that defendant might use the money and would pay plaintiff's drafts on him when presented, and interest on the balances, it was held that he was not liable to arrest as having received in a fiduciary capacity the proceeds of a draft remitted by plaintiff, which he collected on the day of, and just before, his suspension, and after he knew that he would be compelled to suspend. Bussing v. Thompson, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 696.

Collection by another creditor.— One who, in collecting a claim of his own, unites with it a claim belonging to another creditor, under an agreement with the latter to account to him for a due proportion of the amount collected, receives such proportion in a fiduciary capacity and is liable to be arrested in an action for not paying it over. Hall v. McMahon, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 319.

Payment by worthless bill.— Where a firm of collecting agents, who had been requested to remit, forwarded a bill upon themselves in lieu of some independent bill or security, and such bill was dishonored, it was held that they were guilty of a breach of trust, warranting an arrest in a civil action against them. Bull v. Melliss, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 58.

57. Clark v. Pinckney, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 226; Dubois v. Thompson, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 309, 25 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 417; Noble v. Prescott, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 139; Johnson v. Whitman, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 111. Compare Graeffe v. Currie, 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 554 (holding that the mere fact that a broker has received money from transactions for his principal does not establish that fiduciary relation which would justify the principal in demanding the broker's arrest in an action against the latter); McBurney v. Martin, 6 Rob. (N. Y.) 502 (holding that, where plaintiff's assignor employed defendant as his broker, to sell for him a certain number of shares of railroad stock not then owned by him, placing in such broker's hands certain sums of money as margins, to secure the latter against loss in case of a rise in the value of the stock, and defendant sold the stock and, in conformity to his instructions, borrowed from a third person the number of shares sold, and delivered them to the purchaser, receiving the price, such money was not received by defendant in a merely fiduciary character, and he was, therefore, not liable to arrest); Hammer v. Ladner, 17

property which he has sold on commission,[58] even though the commission be a del credere one.[59]

(iv) Public Officers and Officers of Private Corporations. It also applies to a public officer[60] or an officer of a private corporation[61] who has

Phila. (Pa.) 315, 41 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 376 (holding that where the affidavit alleged that defendants were employed by plaintiff, for a certain hire, to sell stocks and purchase others with the proceeds, and that defendants sold the stocks, but fraudulently appropriated the proceeds to their own uses, the fraud arose out of an express contract, and, while ground for an application to the judge for a warrant of arrest, it did not authorize a capias ad respondendum, such capias being abolished in every case of fraud originating in a breach of contract).

Refusal to pay back upon revocation of agency.— An agent or attorney, to whom money is paid by his principal for the purpose of making a specific appropriation of it, is liable to arrest upon his refusal to pay it back on demand made before he has made such appropriation of it. Schadle v. Chase, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 413.

58. Duguid v. Edwards, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 288 [reversing 32 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 254]; Collins v. Harris, 5 N. Y. St. 162; Turner v. Thompson, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 444; Schudder v. Shiells, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 420. But where, in accordance with a general custom of the trade, a commission merchant mingled the proceeds of sales with his own funds and paid once a week for all merchandise delivered during the week, whether it had been sold by him or not, it was held that his relation to his principal was not a fiduciary one, authorizing his arrest in a civil action by the principal. Donovan v. Cornell, 13 Daly (N. Y.) 339, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 222, 3 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 525 [reversing 8 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 283].

Where factor disregarded instructions.—A factor is not shielded from arrest, in an action for not accounting for and paying over proceeds of sales, by proving that the sales he made were not according to the authority and instructions given by his principal, as the principal has a right to adopt the sales made and claim the proceeds. Standard Sugar Refinery v. Dayton, 70 N. Y. 486.

Promissory notes delivered to note-broker.—Where the owner of promissory notes agreed to sell them to a note-broker, and delivered them to the latter without receiving payment therefor, but without agreeing to give credit, and the broker on the same day transferred them to another note-broker, who sold them and converted a large part of the proceeds, it was held, in an action against both, that an order of arrest against the second transferee should be sustained. Robbins v. Seithel, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 366.

An employment to sell tickets in a foreign lottery is illegal, and no action can arise out of it. Even money advanced to an agent, by the manager of a lottery, to forward the sale of tickets by him in New York, cannot be recovered. Hence, an order of arrest in such action, on the ground that defendant received money in a fiduciary capacity, is improper. Rolfe v. Delmar, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 80.

Form of action.— A defendant may be arrested in an action for money received, or property embezzled or fraudulently misapplied, as plaintiff's agent, or while he was acting for the plaintiff in a fiduciary capacity — such as a peddler of goods for plaintiff — whether the action is brought on the contract for not accounting and paying over the goods and money to plaintiff, or in tort for the conversion of the goods and money. Ridder v. Whitlock, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 208.

When commission is not fixed.— An auctioneer who receives goods for sale, under an agreement that he is to receive for his compensation all over a certain price reserved by the owner, is liable to arrest, as having committed a fraudulent act in a fiduciary capacity, where, upon demand, he fails to pay over the reserved price after sale. Holbrook v. Homer, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 86.

60. People v. Clark, 45 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 12.

When liability of defendant has been fixed by foreign judgment.— Where an English public officer was sued in New York for the recovery of public money embezzled by him in England, it was held that he might be arrested, and that the fact that, in proceedings in England before a jury, his liability to his government had been fixed at a certain sum did not extinguish the fraudulent character of the original transaction so as to relieve him from liability to arrest. Peel v. Elliott, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 200.

Presumption as to fiduciary relation.— A public officer or agent will be deemed to have received moneys belonging to the government in a fiduciary capacity when it appears that he had no authority to disburse them, but was bound to pay them over on request. Republic of Mexico v. De Arangoiz, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 634 [affirming 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 1].

Where officer had delivered property to another according to law.— A public officer is not liable to arrest in an action to secure possession of property which, before the action was brought, he had delivered to a custodian designated by law. Mulvey v. Davison, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 111.

61. Crook v. Jewett, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 19.

embezzled or misappropriated public or corporate money or property intrusted to him or placed in his custody.

d. Fraudulent Concealment, Removal, or Disposition of Property. Many statutes authorize the arrest of debtors on the ground that they have concealed, removed, or disposed of,[62] or are about to conceal, remove, or dispose of, their property,[63] with intent to defraud their creditors;[64] but such statutes apply only to cases of actual fraudulent intent,[65] and not to cases of mere legal or construc-

62. Concealment of property — What is.— An alienation of property, whether real or personal, by an insolvent debtor, with intent to defraud his creditors, is a concealment authorizing a capias against him (Quebec Bank v. Elliott, 16 Quebec Super. Ct. 393); but a debtor is not liable to arrest, on the ground that he "conceals his property so that no attachment or levy can be made," when he merely carries a watch and money on his person according to his custom, in the ordinary course of business and without any fraudulent design (Clement v. Dudley, 42 N. H. 367).

Secretion of property.—A fraudulent preferential payment by a debtor constitutes a secretion of his property, authorizing the issuance of a capias ad respondendum against him (Gault v. Dussault, 4 Montreal Leg. N. 321; Quebec Bank v. Elliott, 16 Quebec Super. Ct. 393; Cooke v. Jacobi, 13 Quebec Super. Ct. 433; Nash v. Bethume, 16 Rev. Lég. 699; Mackinnon v. Keronack, 15 Rev. Lég. 34 [affirmed in 15 Can. Supreme Ct. 111, 11 Montreal Leg. N. 351]. Contra, Emmanuel v. Hagen, 6 Rev. Lég. 209. Compare Labranche v. Cassidy, 32 L. C. Jur. 95; Vipond v. Weldon, 18 Rev. Lég. 422, both holding that fraudulent preferences by an insolvent trader may, according to circumstances, constitute secretions, as does a hypothecation of a debtor's immovables to one of his creditors, with the view of giving the latter a fraudulent preference (Banque de la Nouvelle Ecosse v. Lallemand, 19 Rev. Lég. 66); but a payment, made in the ordinary course of business, although it may be, in some sense, a preferential payment, does not (Ferland v. Neild, (Q. B. Quebec, Sept. 3, 1877) Consol. Quebec Dig. 279. See also Cushing v. Fortin, 1 Quebec Super. Ct. 512). The alienation of real estate does not, of itself, constitute a secretion authorizing a capias (Dumont v. Gourt, 7 L. C. Jur. 119), but the fraudulent assignment of real estate does (Gault v. Robertson, 21 L. C. Jur. 281 [affirmed in (Q. B. Montreal, March 22, 1878) Consol. Quebec Dig. 278]; Langley v. Chamberlain, 5 L. C. Jur. 49), as does also the fraudulent disposition of a debtor's goods (Mitcheson v. Burnett, 2 Quebec 260; St. Michel v. Viddler, 1 Montreal Super. Ct. 163).

63. Includes real property.— Under N. C. Code, § 291, subs. 5, authorizing the arrest of persons disposing of their property with intent to defraud creditors, and N. C. Code, § 3765, subs. 6, providing that, in construing statutes, the word "property" shall include all property, both real and personal, unless manifestly against the legislative intent, a partner who transfers his individual real property in contemplation of insolvency is subject to arrest. When act was committed in another jurisdiction.— When a debtor, residing in a foreign state or country, who has fraudulently disposed of his property there for the purpose of evading the payment of his debts, places himself within the reach of the process of a court within a jurisdiction where such act furnishes a ground of arrest, he may be arrested therefor. Claflin v. Frenkel, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 288, 3 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 109. Contra, Blason v. Bruno, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 520, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 265, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 112; Brown v. Ashbough, 40 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 226. Compare Bromley v. People, 7 Mich. 472.

When debtor can pay part only of his debts. — A debtor may avoid arrest by assigning in trust for all his creditors, and it is no excuse for his failure to pay a part of his debts that he has not sufficient money to pay all of them. C. M. Hapgood Shoe Co. v. Saupp, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 480.

65. People v. Kelly, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 444; Pacific Mut. Ins. Co. v. Machado, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 451; Watson v. McGuire, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 87.

Intent to remove from state.— The fact that a defendant intends to remove from the state will not justify his arrest on the ground that he has removed or disposed of his property, or is about so to do, with intent to defraud his creditors, unless it is coupled with some independent proof of intent to defraud. Flour City Nat. Bank v. Hall, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 1; Anonymous, 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 51.

tive fraud.[66] In order to constitute a fraudulent disposition of property, authorizing a debtor's arrest, four things must conjoin, namely: the thing disposed of must be of value, out of which the creditor could have realized all or a portion of his claim;[67] it must have belonged to the debtor;[68] it must have been transferred or disposed of by the debtor,[69] and the act must have been done with intent to defraud his creditors.[70]

e. Fraudulent Incurring of Obligation or Contracting of Liability — (i) In General. One of the commonest grounds of civil arrest now existing is that defendant fraudulently incurred the obligation or contracted the liability which is the basis of the action.[71] An arrest on this ground is proper only when the Suspicious circumstances insufficient.—Circumstances attending and following the execution of a debtor's assignment of his property, which may be evidence of constructive fraud sufficient to vitiate the assignment, are not evidence per se of an actual fraudulent intent, on the part of the debtor, furnishing sufficient ground for his imprisonment in an action against him. Birchell v. Strauss, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 293, 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 53.

67. Hoyt v. Godfrey, 88 N. Y. 669.

68. The disposition of property belonging to plaintiff is no ground for defendant's arrest. Gay v. Denard, 3 Montreal Super. Ct. 125, 15 Rev. Lég. 585.

Such intent is shown by an assignment (Fitch v. McMahon, 103 N. Y. 690, 9 N. E. 497; Wells v. Selling, 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 35; Com. v. Duncan, 1 Pittsb. Y.) 352) to a relative, or by shipping the bulk of one's stock obtained on credit to another jurisdiction (McButt v. Hirsch, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 441; City Bank v. Lumley, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 397).

Intent to defraud copartner.— Where a partner, with intent to defraud his copartner, withdrew goods belonging to the firm and converted them to his own use, it was held that creditors of the firm were entitled to an order of arrest on the ground that the conversion was with intent to defraud them. Hanover Vulcanite Co. v. Nathanson, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 488.

Presumption of fraudulent intent.— In an assignment giving preferences to creditors, the omission of any provision as to the disposition of the surplus, if any, is, at most, only presumptive evidence of fraudulent intent, and is conclusively rebutted by evidence that the preferred debts exceeded the value of the property. Spies v. Joel, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 669.

(Pa.) 162, 4 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 249; Mewster v. Spalding, 6 McLean (U. S.) 24, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,513.

Embezzlement.— An affidavit alleging the embezzlement, by plaintiff's brokers, of the proceeds of stock sold for him shows an obligation fraudulently incurred, within the meaning of Ohio Rev. Stat. § 5492, and warrants an arrest. Este v. Wilshire, 44 Ohio St. 636, 10 N. E. 677. See also London Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Geddes, 22 Fed. 639.

Fraud need not be sufficient to avoid contract.— Any fraud committed in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation sued on is sufficient to justify the arrest of defendant, whether or not it is sufficient to avoid the contract. Thus, the acts of buying goods without any agreement for credit, and of getting possession of them with an intent to forthwith convert them into property not capable of being readily reached by execution, or to sell them to a bona fide purchaser against whom a stoppage in transit cannot be had, constitute a fraud for which an order of arrest may be issued. Wallace v. Murphy, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 414.

Fraud committed in another jurisdiction.— An order of arrest may be granted for fraud in contracting the debt sued on, even though the fraud was committed in another state or country. Freeman v. Kolarek, 3 N. Y. St. 283; Brown v. Ashbough, 40 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 226; City Bank v. Lumley, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 397; Gosline v. Place, 32 Pa. St. 520.

Ratification of agent's fraud.— Where a wife purchases a large quantity of goods in her husband's name, with the expectation and design that they will not be paid for, and they are delivered to the husband's residence, he is liable to arrest for the debt thus created. Stewart v. Strasburger, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 337, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 388.

Presumption as to fraud.— A subsequent fraud was committed before or at the time the obligation was incurred, and not when it was committed subsequently.[72]

(II) By False and Fraudulent Representations — (A) Positive Representations. Defendant may be arrested as having fraudulently contracted the debt or incurred the liability when he knowingly[73] made false and fraudulent representations which induced plaintiff to enter into a contract with him,[74] to extend him credit,[75] or to part with something of value.[76] refusal to pay an account will not warrant an inference of fraud in contracting the indebtedness. Vankirk v. Staats, 24 N. J. L. 121. So, where defendant entered into an executory agreement with plaintiffs in order to induce them to part with certain property, it was held that defendant's failure to perform the agreement would not raise a presumption that he intended non-performance at the time of the agreement, and that, in the absence of other facts showing a fraudulent intent, the court properly vacated an order of arrest entered against defendant. Steinhardt v. Beir, 60 N. Y. Super. Ct. 489, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 609, 42 N. Y. St. 10.

Reparation by debtor.— No arrest will be granted on the ground that a debt incurred in the purchase of goods was fraudulently contracted, if it can be shown that the goods so purchased were subsequently included by the debtor in an assignment for the benefit of his creditors. Artman v. Bell, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 237, 32 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 117.

What is not fraud.— Where a debtor delivered as security for a loan several orders drawn by his wife for money yet to become due her, payment of which she afterward stopped, it was held not a case authorizing an order of arrest for a fraudulent act. Isaacs v. Gorham, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 479.

A bailee is not liable to arrest for breach of his contract, since the statute restricts imprisonment to the cases where the credit extended by plaintiff to defendant was induced by fraud. Levy v. Appleby, 1 N. Y. City Ct. 258.

72. New Jersey.— Vankirk v. Staats, 24 N. J. L. 121. Compare Van Wagenen v. Coe, 22 N. J. L. 531, wherein it was held that a debtor who gave his creditor a worthless security for an existing debt, falsely representing the security to be good, was guilty of fraud sufficient to hold him to bail.

South Carolina.— Davis v. Cardue, 38 S. C. 471, 17 S. E. 247.

73. What constitutes knowledge.— On a motion to vacate an order of arrest for fraudulent representations, it was held that if defendant knew the statements he made to be false, or intended to convey the impression that he had actual knowledge of their truth, although he was conscious that he had not, and that they were in fact false, he committed a fraud upon plaintiff; and that if the representation was affirmative, positive, and unqualified, not resting on opinion or belief, it must be regarded as having been designed to convey actual knowledge of its truth. Bishop v. Davis, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 342.

Belief in representations.— One who obtained a sale of goods upon credit, by a representation that he was solvent when in fact he was not, is not liable to arrest therefor if he believed his representations to be true at the time he made them. Birchell v. Strauss, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 293, 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 53; Gaffney v. Burton, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 516.

Where one of several representations is false.— A person who makes several representations to another, and thereby induces such other person to sell him on credit, is liable to arrest in an action of debt, although one only of the representations is false, if it was made with intent to deceive and was of such a nature as would materially influence the giving of the credit. Wannemacher v. Davis, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 272.

75. False representations as to financial condition.— It is proper to grant an order of arrest upon an affidavit showing that credit was given to defendant on his false representations as to his financial condition. Lamkin v. Oppenheim, 86 Hun (N. Y.) 27, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 367, 67 N. Y. St. 233; Whitmore v. Van Steenbergh, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 668; Wilmerding v. Mooney, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 283; Freeman v. Leland, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 479; Scudder v. Barnes, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 534.

False representation as to financial condition of third person.— The liability of a defendant in an action for falsely representing to plaintiff the pecuniary ability of a third person is not a debt fraudulently contracted, or an obligation fraudulently incurred, within the meaning of the code provision authorizing an order of arrest. Smith v. Corbiere, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 634.

76. False representations as to financial condition.— Ballard v. Fuller, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 68; Murphy v. Fernandez, 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 665; Harding v. Shannon, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 25.

False representations as to purpose.— A person who borrows money on representations that it is to be used in a certain business in which the latter's husband is to be employed is guilty of fraud in contracting the liability,

(B) Concealment of the Truth. Under certain circumstances, the omission of the debtor to disclose material facts may, of itself, constitute a fraud for which he may be arrested[77]— as where he concealed the fact that he was insolvent when contracting a debt or incurring a liability[78] which he did not intend to pay,[79] or could not reasonably expect to pay.[80]

(III) By Seduction Under Promise to Marry. It seems that one who seduces a female under promise of marriage may be arrested, in an action for breach of the promise, as having fraudulently incurred the obligation for which the action is brought.[81]

f. Misconduct or Neglect in Office or in Professional Employment. Misconduct or neglect in office[82] or in a professional employment is,[83] in some jurisdictions, a ground of civil arrest.

4. Waiver of Right — a. By Accord and Satisfaction With Debtor. When a creditor, with full knowledge of his debtor's fraud, enters into an agreement with and is subject to arrest if the money is actually used for an entirely different purpose. Lovell v. Martin, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 126.

When representation is a mere expression of opinion, as a statement that a check of a third person would be paid on presentation, an arrest is not authorized. Stewart v. Potter, 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 68.

But an importer who pays less than the true amount of duty on his importations is not liable to arrest in an action to recover the residue, on the ground of having fraudulently contracted the debt as to such residue, since the fraud exists only as to the concealment and not as to the debt, money due the United States for duties on imports being a debt fully contracted immediately upon the importation of the goods. U. S. v. Wood, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,755*a*.

(Pa.) 256. Compare Bussing v. Thompson, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 696, where the concealment was held not fraudulent.

79. Must be intention to defraud.— It is not fraudulent per se for a person in embarrassed circumstances to buy goods, withholding from the seller information of the actual condition of his business affairs, but there must also exist an intention to cheat the seller, or at least to do an act the necessary result of which would be to cheat him. Morris v. Talcott, 96 N. Y. 100 [reversing 29 Hun (N. Y.) 426]; Harrisburg Pipe Bending Co. v. Welsh, 26 N. Y. App. Div. 515, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 299, 27 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 238.

80. Roebling v. Duncan, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 502, holding that, although a banker or trader who is in embarrassed circumstances is not compelled to disclose the fact of his embarrassment to persons dealing with him, yet, if he is at the time hopelessly insolvent, he is guilty of a fraud if, by virtue of his supposed solvency, he contracts an obligation which he cannot reasonably expect to pay.

In New York, the statute authorizing the arrest of defendant in an action upon contract, express or implied, where he was guilty of a fraud in contracting or incurring the liability, expressly provides that it shall not apply to an action on a promise to marry. N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549, subs. 4.

82. Liability for act of subordinate.— Where the register of the city of New York makes and certifies to an erroneous return to a written requisition for a search in his office, he is liable to arrest in an action to recover damages for such erroneous return, as being guilty of neglect in office within N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549, even though he does not personally make the search or personally certify to the return. Van Schaick v. Sigel, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 383.

83. Failure to account for money received as attorney.— The receipt by defendant of money, as attorney for plaintiff, no part of which he has paid over, entitles plaintiff, as of course, to an order of arrest for misconduct in professional employment (Gross v. Graves, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 707; Stage v. Stevens, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 267); and attorneys of other states are liable in New York to arrest in actions for money collected in their professional capacity (Yates v. Blodgett, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 278).

Layman not liable.— Where A employed B, who was not an attorney and counselor at law, and did not hold himself out as such, to establish a claim against the United States and to receive payment for same, and B received the amount but refused to pay it over, and A brought an action against B therefor, it was held that such action was not "for misconduct or neglect in a professional employment" so as to be excepted from the operation of the Michigan statute abolishing imprisonment for debt. Bronson v. Newberry, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 38, 39.

A real estate agency is not a professional employment within Mich. Comp. Laws, § 5734, authorizing arrest for a contract liability arising from misconduct or neglect in professional employment. Pennock v. Fuller, 41 Mich. 153, 2 N. W. 176, 32 Am. Rep. 148.

his debtor in the nature of an accord and satisfaction, he thereby waives his right to hold him to bail for the original fraud, in an action brought after the partial or total non-performance of the agreement.[84]

b. By Commencing Action by Summons. At common law, the commencement of an action by summons was a waiver of plaintiff's right to hold defendant to special bail.[85]

c. By Entering Rule of Reference. When a plaintiff enters a rule of reference under a compulsory arbitration act, he thereby waives his right to hold defendant to bail.[86]

d. By Express Stipulation. Plaintiff may also waive his right to hold defendant to bail by express stipulation.[87]

e. By Joinder of Arrestable and Non-Arrestable Causes. As an order of arrest must refer to the whole cause of action presented by the plaintiff's complaint, and not to a part of it only,[88] it has frequently been held that plaintiff waives his right to the provisional remedy of arrest by joining in his complaint a cause of action entitling him to the remedy with one not entitling him thereto,[89]

The right was deemed to be waived where, prior to the bringing of the action, defendant accepted a confession of judgment from defendant, which was partially enforced by execution thereunder (Fields v. Bland, 81 N. Y. 239); where there was a settlement between the parties, plaintiff accepting defendant's notes and certain securities (Nelson v. Blanchfield, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 630); where plaintiff received notes of third persons in settlement of defendant's account, and plaintiff had collected some of the notes and not offered to return the others (Trunninger v. Busch, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 124 [distinguishing Kelly v. Scripture, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 283; Dubois v. Thompson, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 309, 25 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 417; Shipman v. Shafer, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 449]); and where plaintiff had accepted an acknowledgment of indebtedness for the amount and received interest thereon (Murphy v. Elder, 4 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 212).

The right is not waived by acceptance of a partial performance of an agreement to compromise, as the agreement to accept a lesser amount than the original indebtedness was wholly executory, and was not an accord and satisfaction of the obligation (McDonough v. Dillingham, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 493); where plaintiff received payment for a part of the claim (Lambertson v. Van Boskerck, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 628); where plaintiff accepted the promissory note of his debtor for money received in a fiduciary capacity, which note was dishonored, and plaintiff was ready to return the note (Shipman v. Shafer, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 449); where plaintiff accepted part payment, and notes for the residue, the notes being unpaid (Person v. Civer, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 432 [reversing 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 139]); where plaintiff accepted bonds merely as security for his demand (Dubois v. Thompson, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 309, 25 How. Pr. (N. Ct. 63, holding that, where an action is commenced by a summons for a money demand on contract, an order of arrest will not be granted upon affidavits alleging a liability incurred under false representations, as it must be assumed that the complaint, when served, will be for an action ex contractu, as required by the summons, and not ex delicto, and that, if the complaint should happen to be for a cause ex delicto, it would, on motion, be set aside as being a departure from the summons.

even though he afterward elects to proceed on the single cause entitling him to the remedy.[90]

f. By Procuring Attachment. Plaintiff is not precluded from procuring defendant's arrest in a civil action by reason of the fact that he has previously attached defendant's goods in another action for the same cause,[91] unless such attachment reached all of defendant's property,[92] or enough thereof to satisfy plaintiff's claim.[93]

D. Who May Be Arrested — 1. In General[94] — a. Corporation Officer. The president of a corporation may be arrested for an act, committed in his official capacity, for which a private individual may be arrested.[95]

b. Non-Residents. While, under some statutes, non-residents are expressly or impliedly exempted from arrest,[96] it has been held that a non-resident may be arrested upon a ground authorized by the lex fori, even though he cannot be

(N. Y.) 225. See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arrest," § 3.

Claim and delivery.— In an action for the recovery of specific personal property, the action of plaintiffs in taking proceedings for the claim and delivery, and obtaining thereby possession of a portion of the goods, does not amount to a waiver of the right to issue process to arrest defendants, on the ground that the order of arrest must be applicable to the entire cause of action, and not to a part only, as the delivery of the property under the proceedings of claim and delivery is not decisive of plaintiffs' right, and if they succeed they cannot recover a larger amount than defendants are really bound to pay. Tracy v. Veeder, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 209.

Attachment and arrest on same writ.— Plaintiff cannot have defendant's property attached and his body arrested on the same writ (Trafton v. Gardiner, 39 Me. 501; Almy v. Wolcott, 13 Mass. 73; Cleft v. Hosford, 12 Vt. 296); but, where a writ is against two defendants, one is not exempt from arrest thereunder because his co-defendant's property has been attached (Connor v. Madden, 57 Me. 410).

Mechanic's lien.— A creditor suing under the Mechanics' Lien Act of 1875, for a personal recovery against his debtor, is entitled to the debtor's arrest for his fraudulently contracting the debt, as well as the other remedies under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 550, subs. 2. Burbridge v. Hart, 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 455.

But the fact that, when proceedings under the Michigan Non-Imprisonment Act were commenced, a writ of attachment in favor of the creditor had been levied upon sufficient of the chattels of the debtor to satisfy the debt did not render such proceedings void (Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129); and it is not a sufficient reason for ordering the discharge, on habeas corpus, of a debtor arrested on mesne process that the creditor had previously commenced another suit against him for the same cause of action and had therein attached his property to the value of more than twice the amount of the debt (In re Hosley, 22 Vt. 363).

94. Customs employees.—While public policy forbids the arrest under civil process of an officer of the United States while in the performance of his duty as such, a customs officer is not exempt from arrest, under civil process issued by a state court, by the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5447, prohibiting any person from forcibly assaulting, resisting, opposing, preventing, impeding, or interfering with any officer of the customs, when the arrest was made without such intent and at a time when the officer was not engaged in the performance of his duty. Ex p. Murray, 35 Fed. 496.

arrested upon such ground in the jurisdiction where he resides[97] or where the contract was made.[98]

e. Partners. One partner who has committed an act furnishing a ground of arrest may be arrested therefor,[99] but his copartners, who neither knew of nor ratified such act, may not.[1] While the individuals composing a partnership may be arrested, the firm may not.[2]

d. Persons Jointly Liable. It has been held that where one of two persons, jointly liable, is subject to arrest on the ground that he is about to leave the state, leaving no property, a capias ad respondendum may be issued against both.[3]

e. Principal For Acts of Agent. Even though a principal is civilly liable for the fraud of his agent, he may not be arrested therefor unless he personally participated in the commission of the fraud, or knowingly ratified it.[4]

Selection of one partner mainly responsible.— Though plaintiff's action is against a partnership, he may select for arrest a single member of the firm who is mainly responsible for the acts constituting the ground of arrest. National Bank v. Jennings, 38 S. C. 372, 17 S. E. 16. Compare Schwenk v. Coffin, 2 N. L. See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arrest," § 17.

Sufficient showing of participation.— In an action for goods sold defendants, who were partners, an affidavit for arrest, alleging that defendants were insolvent when each item of plaintiff's account accrued; that each partner ordered some of the items; that defendants knew they were insolvent and obtained a credit with plaintiffs with intent to cheat and defraud them, makes a sufficient showing of fraud on the part of both partners and authorizes the arrest of both. Hitchcock v. Peterson, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 389.

Constructive knowledge.— A partner who has only constructive knowledge of a firm trust is subject to arrest for joining in a firm assignment by which the trust property is conveyed to the assignee for other creditors. Durham Fertilizer Co. v. Little, 118 N. C. 808, 24 S. E. 664.

(II) Females. Statutes in different jurisdictions variously exempt females from arrest in all civil actions,[6] in certain actions,[7] or except for certain specified causes.[8]

(III) Freeholders. Some statutes exempt resident freeholders[9] from arrest in civil actions,[10] provided their land is unencumbered,[11] or, if encumbered, is of sufficient value to pay the encumbrances and satisfy the debt or damages demanded.[12]

(IV) Judges. As a judge is always supposed to be attending court, he is generally exempt from arrest under mesne civil process during his term of office.[13]

What constitutes attendance.— Where an elector on the day of electors' meeting, having given in his vote, retired to a house in the neighborhood while the proper officers were counting the votes, it was held that he was attending to the business of the election, and hence exempt from arrest under civil process (Swift v. Chamberlain, 3 Conn. 537); but the privilege does not extend to an elector, preparing to go, if he has not actually proceeded on the way (Hobbs v. Getchell, 8 Me. 187, 23 Am. Dec. 497).

8. Thus, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 553, providing that "A woman cannot be arrested, . . . except in a case where the order can be granted only by the court; or where it appears, that the action is to recover damages for a wilful injury to person, character, or property," it has been held that a female is liable to arrest in a civil action upon a showing that she knowingly bought stolen property (People v. Davidson, 3 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 389 note; Muser v. Miller, 3 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 388); where she induced plaintiff, by false and fraudulent palming off of worthless securities, to lend her money (Eypert v. Bolenius, 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 193); for converting to her use stock certificates which she has aided another to take (Northern R. Co., v. Carpentier, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 259, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 222); or for concealing property of plaintiff's which she has wilfully detained (Duncan v. Katen, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 1 [affirmed in 64 N. Y. 625]; Starr v. Kent, 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 30. Contra, Tracy v. Leland, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 729, 3 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 47 [disapproved in Duncan v. Katen, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 23, or on the ground that she fraudulently contracted the debt which is the basis of the action (Wheeler v. Hartwell, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 684).

9. Who is resident freeholder.— A defendant who went to Georgia on business and bought property there, but had real estate in Pennsylvania upon which his wife and children resided, and who had expressed an intention of selling his property in Georgia and returning, was held to be a resident freeholder of Pennsylvania, entitled to exemption from civil arrest. Penman v. Wayne, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 348, 1 L. ed. 169.

10. Hudson v. Howell, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 310, 1 L. ed. 151; Henry v. Flanagan, 1 Kulp (Pa.) 352; Ingersoll v. Campbell, 10 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 553; Buckman v. Jones, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 302; Lynd v. Biggs, 1 Pa. L. J. Rep. 18, 1 Pa. L. J. 47. See also Barnard v. Field, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 348, 1 L. ed. 170, holding that a capias ad respondendum cannot issue against a freeholder even though plaintiff directs the sheriff to accept defendant's appearance, as defendant would have to be arrested before his appearance could be accepted, and the Act of Assembly expressly directs that the process issued against a freeholder shall be a summons.

Under the former practice in New York, a householder and freeholder, residing in the county, could not be held to bail in an action of tort. Burton v. Temple, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 8.

A freeholder does not lose his exemption because the value of his freehold, if unencumbered, is less than plaintiff's demand (Fitler v. La Breure, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 363), nor because he is sued in conjunction with a person not exempt (McQuigan v. McCarthy, 6 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 253; Buckman v. Jones, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 302. Contra, Fife v. Keating, 2 Browne (Pa.) 135; Veale v. Hoag, 13 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 193, 16 Phila. (Pa.) 73, 40 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 170).

The exemption is forfeited when defendant freeholder neglects all notice to put in special bail, even in an action where bail is not demandable as of course (Jack v. Shoemaker, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 280), or when judgment against him is obtained before a justice of the peace (Quesnel v. Mussi, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 436, 1 L. ed. 212).

(v) Jurors. Jurors are protected from arrest while serving as such, and while going to, and returning from, the place of service.[15]

(vi) Legislators. Members of congress[16] and of the British parliament[17] are privileged from arrest, except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, during the sessions of their respective houses, and while going to and returning from such sessions;[18] and the same privilege is enjoyed by the members of nearly, if not all, of the state and territorial legislative bodies.[19]

(vii) Non-Residents — (a) Generally. While, in some jurisdictions, non-residents may be arrested in civil actions,[20] in others statutes authorizing mesne arrests in civil actions expressly exempt them,[21] and, from the nature

United States supreme court, who has been arrested on a capias ad respondendum in a case of which the federal court has no jurisdiction, is not entitled to be discharged on common bail); Matter of Livingston, 8 Johns. Delegates from territories.— The privilege from arrest guaranteed by the constitution to members of congress extends as well to delegates from the territories as to senators and representatives from the states, as such delegates are clothed with all of the powers, rights, and privileges of members from the states, except the power to vote. Doty v. Strong, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 84.

Member denied admission.— Although it is eventually decided by congress that a person alleged to be elected is not entitled to a seat, he is protected from arrest until he reaches home, provided he returns as soon as possible after such decision. Dunton v. Halstead, 2 Pa. L. J. Rep. 450, 4 Pa. L. J. 237, holding, further, that sickness or want of funds is a valid excuse for a person's failure to return home immediately after the house of representatives has decided that he is not entitled to a seat therein.

17. By the privilege of peerage, peers of the realm are at all times privileged from arrest; and, by privilege of parliament, members of the house of commons are privileged, during the sessions of the house, for forty days after prorogation, and for forty days before the next appointed meeting. 1 Bl. Comm. 166; 3 Bl. Comm. 289.

18. Going and returning.— A member of congress is only privileged while at congress, or while actually going to or returning therefrom. Lewis v. Elmendorf, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 222. The privilege does not extend for forty days before and after a session, but is limited to a reasonable time for going and returning (Hoppin v. Jenckes, 8 R. I. 453, 5 Am. Rep. 597), though it is not forfeited by a slight deviation from the route which is most direct (Miner v. Markham, 28 Fed. 387).

A member of the house who has been expelled by that body is no longer protected. Hiss v. Bartlett, 3 Gray (Mass.) 468, 63 Am. Dec. 768.

20. See supra, II, D, 1, b.

21. Hand v. Taliaferro, 1 La. Ann. 26 (holding that the Louisiana act of March 28, 1840, section 9, which declares that no citizen of another state shall be arrested at the suit of a non-resident creditor unless it is made to appear that the debtor has absconded from his residence, authorizes an arrest only where defendant has absconded from his last place of residence, and that a debtor alleged to have absconded from a state in which he resided at the time the debt was contracted, but who is shown to have since resided for several years in another state, cannot be arrested); Elgie v. Butt, 26 Ont. App. 13; Smith v. Smith, 9 Ont. Pr. 511 (both cases holding that a foreigner who contracts a debt in the country of his domicile, and then goes to Ontario to stay temporarily, cannot be arrested there in an action on such debt, when, in good faith, he is about to leave the

of their provisions, other statutes have been held to be inapplicable to non-residents.[22]

(B) Decoyed Within Jurisdiction. A defendant decoyed within the jurisdiction of a court by the trick, device, fraud, or false representations of plaintiff, cannot be lawfully arrested on mesne civil process.[23] This rule applies in a case province for the purpose of returning home); Frear v. Ferguson, 2 Chamb. (U. C.) 144 (holding that it is contrary to the policy of the Ontario laws of arrest to permit one foreigner to follow another into that province and arrest him for a debt contracted abroad). Compare Palmer v. Rodgers, 6 U. C. L. J. 188, holding that the mere fact that both plaintiff and defendant are foreigners does not of itself warrant the setting aside of an arrest.

Rule limited to citizens of other states of Union.—The Louisiana act of March 18, 1847, amending the act of March 28, 1840, section 9, exempting from arrest in Louisiana (except in certain cases) a "citizen of another state," applies only to citizens of other states of the Union, and not to citizens of foreign countries. The evil intended to be remedied, and the popular acceptation of the words "citizens of another state," show such to be the correct interpretation of the statute. Block v. Bannerman, 10 La. Ann. 1; New Orleans Canal, etc., Co. v. Schroeder, 7 La. Ann. 615; Absolom v. Callum, 6 La. Ann. 536.

The rule is limited to transient non-residents, and where the debtor has absconded from his own country to Ontario and does not intend to return, or intends to go to some other country, his creditors may follow and arrest him in Ontario. Butler v. Rosenfeldt, 8 Ont. Pr. 175. See also Blumenthal v. Solomon, 2 Ont. Pr. 51 (where defendant applied to be discharged from arrest for a debt contracted abroad, upon his affidavit that both plaintiff and he were foreigners; that he had come to the province very lately and had neither residence nor home in the province, but it was not shown under what circumstances or for what purpose he had come, whether as a transient visitor or with the intention of becoming a resident, and the application was refused); Brett v. Smith, 1 Ont. Pr. 309 (where plaintiff, a merchant living in Toronto, arrested defendant, lately from England, on a bill executed by him there, and the arrest was moved against on the ground that defendant was in Ontario for a temporary purpose only, and on business, but plaintiff gave reasons for believing that defendant had absconded from England to avoid proceedings there on the same bill, and the judge refused to vacate the arrest). Nor can defendant rely on a change of residence to a foreign country, so as to avoid the law of arrest to which he was subject in Ontario at the time he incurred the debt upon which the action was brought, when that change of residence was effected by a fraudulent flight to avoid arrest. Kersterman v. McLellan, 10 Ont. Pr. 122.

22. Thus, a statute authorizing the arrest of a debtor on the ground that he is about to leave the state to avoid the payment of his debts, has been held to apply only to a citizen of the state who is intending to remove therefrom with the intent alleged, and not to a debtor, residing in another state, returning, or intending to return, home. See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arrest," § 30.

Fraudulent representations.— Where defendant, a citizen of another state and president of an insolvent corporation, notified plaintiffs, residents of New York city and creditors of the corporation, that a meeting of the corporation's creditors would be held on a certain day, and plaintiffs replied by asking defendant to call on them before he went to the meeting, it was held that defendant, while in the city in response to such letter, was exempt from arrest at plaintiffs' instance, even though he did not arrive until after the date originally fixed for the meeting, and though plaintiffs swear that they had no intetion of arresting him until after they had conversed with him, when they found his statements very unsatisfactory. Higgins v. Dewey, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 894, 39 N. Y. St. 94, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 81 [affirming 13 N. Y. Suppl. 570, 34 N. Y. St. 692].

Use of force.— Where a private detective, without a warrant, forcibly seized defendant for the purpose of detaining him until the order of arrest could be served on him by the proper officer, it was held that, though the order was subsequently served while defendant was detained on a charge of assault committed in breaking away from the detective, there was an abuse of process for which the order should be set aside. Harland v. Howard, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 113, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 449, 32 N. Y. St. 871, 872. But an immigrant compelled to land first at Castle Garden, who is served before landing with a New York order of arrest, cannot claim exemption on the ground that he was forcibly brought within the jurisdiction of the court. Ziporkes v. Chmelniker, 15 N. Y. St. 215.

where plaintiff has employed either civil[24] or criminal[25] process, merely and solely for the purpose of detaining or bringing defendant within the jurisdiction of the court.

(VIII) PEACE-OFFICERS. Sheriffs and other peace-officers are exempt from arrest while engaged in the actual performance of their duty,[26] but not at other times.[27]

(IX) SOLDIERS. Private soldiers and non-commissioned officers in the actual service of the United States[28] are exempt from arrest,[29] but commissioned officers are not.[30]

24. Thus, where defendant, who is subject to an arrest under an attachment, cannot be found, and his creditor opposes his application for a discharge under the Insolvent Act, and obtains an order for his personal examination, for the express purpose of compelling him to appear in order that he may arrest him, defendant, on appearing, will be exempt from arrest. Extradition.— A defendant who has been brought within the jurisdiction of the court by means of extradition proceedings, had solely for the purpose of holding him to bail in a civil action, and not for trial on the criminal charge, is not liable to arrest in the civil action (Lagrave's Case, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 333 note, 45 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 301; Underwood v. Fetter, 6 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 66); but he is not exempt from civil arrest when the extradition proceedings were had in good faith and for the purpose of bringing him to trial on a criminal charge (Nichols v. Goodheart, 5 Ill. App. 574; Browning v. Abrams, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 172; Williams v. Bacon, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 636. Contra, Bacharach v. Lagrave, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 689 [reversing 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. 26. Welby v. Beard, Taylor (U. C.) 304; 3 Bl. Comm. 288. See also Scott v. Clark, Trin. T. (1831) 181, holding that sheriffs, being required by a rule of court to attend court every term, are privileged from arrest when they come to Fredericton during term, and the particular cause of their so coming will not be inquired into.

Deputy sheriffs are not exempt from arrest under civil process under a statute which names sheriffs only. George v. Fellows, 58 N. H. 494.

Policemen.— The exemption from arrest of policemen "whilst actually on duty," under the Metropolitan Police Act, section 34, means the exemption at all times of the superintendent of police and the captains, "since they are always on duty;" but patrolmen must be actually on duty in order to be exempt. Hart v. Kennedy, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 432, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 417.

28. Militia.— By the Militia Act of 1794, no one can be served with any process, except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, while at, or going to or from any muster. Gregg v. Summers. 1 McCord (S. C.) 461.

Effect of muster into service of United States.— Where the statute of a state exempts men enlisted in the military forces of the state from arrest on civil process while under military duty, a member of the state militia does not lose the privilege of the exemption by the fact that he is mustered into the service of the United States. Effect of enlistment on previous arrest.— The act of congress of Dec. 12, 1812, providing that no soldier should be arrested on civil process after enlistment, did not relieve by enlistment a debtor already under arrest on capias ad respondendum. Ex p. Field, 5 Am. L. J. 474.

When preëxisting debt was assigned after enlistment.— Under the act of congress of March 16, 1812, section 23, declaring that no private, etc., shall be arrested for debts contracted after enlistment, a private cannot be arrested at the suit of the assignee of several claims against him, if the assignment was made subsequent to enlistment, even though the debts were contracted prior to enlistment, as the cause of action accrued to the assignee after enlistment. (x) Suitors—(A) In Civil Causes. Parties to civil actions, while in actual attendance upon the courts,[31] and while going to and returning[32] from the courts, are exempt from arrest under civil process,[33] even though they have no writs of arrest when in actual service, as he is in the service of the United States and not that of Georgia); Moses v. Mellett, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 210. See also Larchin v. Willan, 7 Dowl. P. C. 11, 1 H. & H. 332, 2 Jur. 970, 8 L. J. Exch. 19, 4 M. & W. 351, holding that it is not a sufficient excuse to prevent the granting of a capias that defendant is an officer in the army and is going abroad to join his regiment.

In the militia, however, the fact that defendant was arrested on civil process while discharging his duty as an officer of the militia at a muster may be successfully pleaded in abatement of the writ (Murphy v. McCombs, 33 N. C. 274); but the lieutenant of a county is not privileged from arrest while soliciting commissions for officers of the militia before the executive council, where the council has not required his attendance (Morgan v. Eckart, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 295, 1 L. ed. 144), nor can a militia officer, when out of the state, claim exemption from arrest under civil process upon the ground that he is on his way, under the orders of his commanding officer, to perform certain duties within the state, since the moment he leaves the state he is without the jurisdiction of his commanding officer (Manchester v. Manchester, 6 R. I. 127).

34. What constitutes attendance.—A person who comes from a distant state to defend a suit for divorce, the hearing of which is passed from day to day without any new assignment, on account of the wife's illness, is "in attendance" on the court (Ellis v. Degarmo, 17 R. I. 715, 24 Atl. 579, 19 L. R. A. 560), as is a party while he is at his lodgings during the continuance of the court at which the trial will take place (Hurst's Case, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 387, 1 L. ed. 878, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 186, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,924); but a suitor who finds it unnecessary to attend personally to his suit, and remains at home and confides it to his attorney, is not privileged from arrest (Gray v. Ayres, Tapp. (Ohio) 164), nor is one who is within the jurisdiction of a court, which is not in session, for the completion of a contract of sale (Monroe v. St. Clair Cir. Judge, 125 Mich. 283, 84 N. W. 305).

32. A slight deviation or loitering in going or returning will not cause one to forfeit his exemption, as where a suitor whose cause is removed to another court stops to announce the removal to opposing counsel (Salhinger v. Adler, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 704); but the exemption will be forfeited where the suitor stops for the purpose of attending the funeral of a son (Chaffee v. Jones, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 260).

Person under bail in another civil action.— A person who is about to attend a case in court in which he has been arrested is privileged from arrest in another suit which he is then attending. Steinmetz v. Wade, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 187.

When surrendered by bail in another action.—When a defendant is in actual custody, having been surrendered by his bail in one suit while in town for the purpose of attending a second suit against him, he cannot, in a third suit, plead exemption from arrest as a suitor in the second suit, as he was lawfully in custody on the surrender of his bail, and, of course, could not attend the second suit even if the trial was going on. Davis v. Cummins, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 387. See also Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. McDougal, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,618, holding that a person arrested in a civil suit, and going to another state in virtual custody of his bail, may be there ar-protection.[34] This privilege extends to all proceedings judicial in their nature, whether taking place in court or not.[35]

(B) In Criminal Causes. It has been generally held that a person is not privileged from arrest while in custody under criminal process,[36] or while attending or returning from his trial on a criminal charge.[37]

(XI) Witnesses. A witness attending in good faith any legal tribunal in obedience to a subpœna, or other process or order compelling his attendance, is exempt from civil arrest while going, attending, and returning,[38] even though he rested in another civil suit if his bail voluntarily relinquish all claim to his detention.

Arrest in action wherein co-defendant was previously arrested.—In an action of assumpsit against two defendants, where one of them only was arrested originally, it was held that the other was protected from a subsequent arrest in the same suit while going to, attending, and returning from the trial. Arbitration proceedings.— A party to a suit, attending a trial thereof before arbitrators, is privileged from arrest. Webb v. Carter, 9 Lanc. Bar (Pa.) 65; Spence v. Stewart, 3 East 89; Moore v. Booth, 3 Ves. Jr. 350; Ex p. Temple, 2 Ves. & B. 391.

Bankruptcy and insolvency proceedings.— A petitioner in bankruptcy is privileged from arrest on civil process pending the proceedings on his petition to be declared a bankrupt (In re Kimball, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 38, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,767; U. S. v. Dobbins, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,971; Ex p. Mifflin, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,537), but the facts necessary to make out a case for protection must be shown otherwise than by the oath of the party who claims it (Ex p. Mifflin, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,537). So, too, a creditor of a deceased insolvent is privileged from arrest on civil process while attending a meeting of commissioners appointed by the judge of probate to examine claims against the estate. Wood v. Neale, 5 Gray (Mass.) 538.

Reference.— A party attending a reference is entitled to privilege from arrest the same as when attending a trial, but such privilege does not, necessarily, extend to the time when the referees report. Clark v. Grant, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 257; Vincent v. Watson, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 194. See also Steinmetz v. Wade, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 187, holding that a party to a divorce suit is privileged from arrest while attending a hearing before the examiner.

Proceedings before legislative committee.— A resident of another state, who is, in good faith, in attendance on a legislative committee solely for the purpose of presenting and testifying to a claim he has against the commonwealth, and with the intention of returning home without unnecessary delay, is not liable to arrest under civil process while so attending and returning. Thompson's Case, 122 Mass. 428, 23 Am. Rep. 370.

Proceedings contesting legality of prior arrest.— Where defendant suffered default on his motion for discharge from arrest on the ground that he was arrested on a general election day, and it was reopened on condition that he should appear on the day for which the hearing of the motion was set and submit to an examination as to the matters set forth in the motion papers; and, though then out of the court's jurisdiction, he voluntarily appeared at the time fixed, was discharged, and rearrested as he was leaving the courthouse, it was held that he was privileged from arrest as a suitor. Massachusetts.— Brown v. Getchell, 11 Mass. 11.

Michigan.— Brower v. Tatro, 115 Mich. 368, 73 N. W. 421.

Pennsylvania.—Gyer v. Irwin, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 107, 1 L. ed. 762, holding that, where neither defendant nor his attorney suggests the privilege, this amounts to a waiver, by which the party is forever concluded.

Virginia.— Prentis v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 697, 15 Am. Dec. 782.

Claim to arresting officer.— A privileged person should claim his exemption to the officer making the arrest (Farmer v. Robbins, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 415); but mere silence at the time of the arrest is not, of itself, a waiver of the exemption (Swift v. Chamberlain, 3 Conn. 537). But, as a sheriff is bound to execute process valid on its face and issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, it is his duty to arrest, under such process, one who claims to be privileged from arrest, and to take him before the court or officer issuing the process, in order that he may raise and present the question of his privilege. Tarlton v. Fisher, 2 Dougl. 671.

Person arrested in two cases.— If a suitor is arrested in two cases, in one of which he is privileged from arrest and in the other he is not, a motion to discharge him entirely from custody should be overruled. Crocker v. Duncan, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 278.

Sufficient claim of privilege.— A capias ad respondendum will be quashed where defendant's affidavit alleges that he is a freeholder, describes the property with particularity, and denies the existence of any encumbrances. Jacobs v. Bety, 2 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 127.

In Kansas the clerk may issue an order of arrest, but has no power to do so in the absence of the affidavit and undertaking required by statute. Long v. Hubbard, 6 Kan. App. 878, 50 Pac. 968.

48. In the District of Columbia a justice of the peace in Alexandria county was held to have no power to issue a capias ad respondendum or warrant of arrest for a small debt before judgment. Ex p. Minor, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 404, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,643.

In New Jersey the order may be made by any judge or commissioner to whom the affidavit may be exhibited. McKernan v. McDonald, 27 N. J. L. 541.

In New York a county judge may grant an order to hold to bail, even though the action is triable in another county and plaintiff's attorneys reside there (Kennedy v. Simmons, 4 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 82); and the term "county judge" as used in this connection was held to apply to a judge of the court of common pleas of the city of New York (People v. Donohue, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 446), and to a local officer elected to discharge the duty of surrogate in a county where there is an acting county judge and surrogate (Seymour v. Mercer, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 564).

In Pennsylvania, under the act of July 8, 1885, a warrant of arrest for fraud may be issued only in the county where the fraud has been committed (Weber v. Goldenberg, 20 Phila. (Pa.) 194, 48 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 24); but this has been held to mean, in the case of a defaulting executor in Ohio, who has removed to Pennsylvania, the county granting or refusing of which such officer acts in the exercise of his sound discretion.[49]

2. Waiver of Objections to Jurisdiction. An objection to the jurisdiction of an officer issuing a writ or order of arrest is not waived by consent to a continuance.[50]

F. Proceedings to Obtain Arrest — 1. Application For Order or Writ — a. Necessity For. As a general rule,[51] a court or judicial officer has no jurisdiction to order the arrest of a defendant in a civil action unless the facts author-in which such defendant can be legally sued (Miller v. Summers, 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 127, 17 Lanc. L. Rev. 345). Under this act the warrant may be executed in any county of the state. Halpin v. Kimball, 9 Kulp (Pa.) 405. Since the application for a warrant of arrest under the act of July 12, 1842, must be made to a judge of the court where the suit is brought, a judge of the court of common pleas has no authority to issue a warrant on a transcript filed therein, of a judgment of a magistrate, for the purpose of creating a lien. Wraith v. Van Dewater, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 251. An alderman or justice of the peace has no power to issue a warrant of arrest under the act to punish fraudulent debtors, which provides that a warrant may issue when certain facts are established to the satisfaction of the court. Wood v. Bell, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 180.

In England the power to arrest is specially given to a single judge, and not to the court (Harvey v. O'Meara, 7 Dowl. P. C. 725, 3 Jur. 629); and an application for a capias ad respondendum cannot be made to the courts at Westminster, but may be made to a single judge sitting there (Barnett v. Craw, 1 Dowl. N. S. 774, 6 Jur. 421; Bentley v. Berrey, 4 Jur. 1018, 7 M. & W. 146).

In Canada, where a judge's order is necessary to hold to bail, an arrest cannot be made in an action in a district court (Ferris v. Dyer, 5 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 5; Smith v. Jarvis, (Hil. T., 3 Vict.) 1 Robinson & J. Ont. Dig. 191), and a magistrate cannot cause the arrest of a party without first summoning him to appear before him (Croukhite v. Sommerville, 3 U. C. Q. B. 129).

Allegation of citizenship in federal court. — An affidavit to hold to bail, in a suit in a circuit court of the United States, need not state that plaintiff is a citizen of a state other than that in which the suit is brought, or an alien, such allegations not being necessary to give the court jurisdiction. Cooper v. Dungler, 4 McLean (U. S.) 257, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,192.

49. Johnson v. Morton, 94 Mich. 1, 53 N. W. 816; Clarke v. Lourie, 82 N. Y. 580; Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Ecclesine, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. 76, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 9, 42 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 201; Davis v. Scott, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 127; National Bank v. Temple, 39 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 432; Lapeous v. Hart, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 541; Ex p. Taylor, 14 How. (U. S.) 3, 14 L. ed. 302; In re Bergen, 2 Hughes (U. S.) 513, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,338; Stein v. Valkenhuysen, E. B. & E. 65, 4 Jur. N. S. 411, 27 L. J. Q. B. 236, 96 E. C. L. 65.

Discretion as to requiring further evidence. — It is a matter entirely within the discretion of the court to examine a party making an affidavit for an order of arrest, or to require other evidence as to the debt, even though the debt is positively sworn to in the affidavit to hold to bail, but the necessity of so doing must appear from the face of the affidavit itself. Oliver v. Parish, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 462, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,500.

Doubtful question of law. — An order of arrest in a civil case should not be granted, where the propriety of granting it is dependent upon a doubtful and important question of law. Cormier v. Hawkins, 69 N. Y. 188.

Information and belief. — Although an order of arrest should not be granted on assertions made on information only, stated generally, yet it is, to a certain extent, a matter of discretion with the officer granting the order how far he relies upon the statements of the party making the assertions, for, even if affiant furnishes the name of his informant and states his means of knowledge, it will still be but hearsay (Wolfe v. Brouwer, 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 601); and the extent to which the nature and sources of information upon which the order is sought must be disclosed is within the discretion of the judge to whom the application is made (Smith v. Frank, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 626).

Review in collateral proceeding. — The sufficiency of the evidence necessary to justify the issuance of a warrant for the arrest of a fraudulent debtor, under Mich. Comp. Laws, § 5390, cannot be inquired into in a collateral proceeding. Johnson v. Maxon, 23 Mich. 129.

51. Defendant may be held to special bail without an affidavit of debt in an action on a bond, bill of exchange, or note, it being necessary only that the court should be satisfied of the existence of a subsisting debt, of which a bond, bill, or note is prima facie evidence (Anonymous, 4 Harr. & M. (Md.) 159); and, in an action on a judgment, the same rule has been applied (Headley v. Roby, 6 Ohio 521). See also McFarlan v. McJinsey, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 85 (holding that a writ of capias ad respondendum may issue in case of defendant's non-residence, without an affidavit of that fact being filed); Taylor v. Knox, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 158, 1 L. ed. 80 (holding that 12 Geo. I, c. 29, requiring an affidavit to hold to bail, was not in force in Pennsylvania before the Revolution).

izing the arrest are presented by a proper affidavit,[52] which is usually made by plaintiff,[53] and it has been held that a writ of arrest issued without such affidavit is void, and not merely voidable.[54]

b. Who May Make. While it is usual for the plaintiff himself to make the affidavit,[55] it has been held in some jurisdictions that it may be made by a third person having knowledge of the facts — as, for instance, by plaintiff's agent,[56] or

Oral oath.— Under a statute providing that if, previous to commencing a suit, plaintiff shall make oath that there is danger of losing his claim unless defendant be held to bail, the justice shall issue a warrant, a written affidavit is not required; and where the justice administered an oath, the presumption is that he required all the averments prescribed by law. Outlaw v. Davis, 27 Ill. 467.

Judgment debtor's examination.—When the examination of a judgment debtor, under N. Y. Code, § 292, discloses ground for arrest, it may be used as the basis of an application for an order of arrest in a subsequent action upon the judgment. McButt v. Hirsch, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 441.

Treasury department's certificate of defalcation.— In an action upon an informal bond given by a marshal, payable to the president of the United States and his successors, instead of to the United States, the federal court will hold defendant to bail upon a certificate of defalcation from the treasury department. Jackson v. Simonton, 4 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 12, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,146. Compare U. S. v. Smith, 5 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 484, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,331, holding that a certificate in the usual form, by the officers of the treasury of the United States, that a certain balance is due by defendant to the United States, is not sufficient cause for special bail.

Affidavit by one plaintiff.—An affidavit, for the arrest of a debtor on mesne process, which is required to be made by plaintiff, or some person in his behalf, may be made by one of two or more joint plaintiffs in behalf of plaintiffs (Gorgorian v. Prood, 167 Mass. 31, 44 N. In an action by the assignees of a bankrupt a positive affidavit made by the bankrupt for his assignees is sufficient (Tucker v. Francis, 4 Bing. 142, 12 Moore C. P. 347, 13 E. C. L. 439), and so is a positive affidavit made by the clerk of the assignees' attorney (Anonymous, 1 Chit. 38, 18 E. C. L. 35).

Affidavit by accomplice.— In an action for the conversion of bonds by robbery, an affidavit against defendant, made by an accomplice, will be considered on a motion to vacate an order of arrest, in view of a rule that the testimony of an accomplice may, even when unsupported and uncorroborated, sustain a conviction. Royal Ins. Co. v. Noble, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 54.

59. Justice of the peace.— The Alabama statute of 1823 which provides that defendant in certain actions shall not be held to bail unless plaintiff makes oath "before some judge, justice of the peace, or the clerk who may issue the process, that the defendant is indebted," etc., does not limit the authority of justices of the peace to administer such oath to cases within their jurisdiction. Wykoff v. Taylor, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 105, 107.

Notary public.— Since Me. Rev. Stat. c. 32, § 3, authorizes a notary public to administer oaths in all cases where a justice of the peace may act, a creditor who desires to arrest his debtor in an action may take the necessary oath before a notary public instead of before a justice of the peace as required by chapter 113, authorizing such arrest. Duncan v. Grant, 86 Me. 212, 29 Atl. 987. But an affidavit for a debtor's arrest before judgment, under Ohio Rev. Stat. § 5481, sworn to before a notary, is insufficient, as it must be sworn to before a judge, a clerk of the court, or a justice of the peace. Williams v. Raitze, 7 Ohio N. P. 614, 8 Ohio Dec. 695.

United States commissioner.— While the pleadings, practice, and forms of the United States courts should conform as nearly as possible to the practice in the state courts, a commissioner of the United States may take the verification of an affidavit for a defendant's arrest on mesne process, even though the state code requires it to be taken by a judge of a court of the state, or the clerk thereof, or a justice of the peace. Fulton v. Gilmore, 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 260, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,154.

The clerk of the district court is not competent to take an ordinary affidavit to hold to bail. State v. Westcoat, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 431.

60. Commissioner.— An affidavit of debt for a capias, to be issued out of the town of Portland civil court, may be sworn before a commissioner for taking affidavits to be read in the supreme court. Waterbury v. Nixon, 18 N. Brunsw. 373.

Superior court judge.— An affidavit sworn before a superior court judge in any judicial district is sufficient to authorize the issuance of a capias in any other district. Caverhill v. Frigon, 9 Quebec Super. Ct. 539.

An affidavit made in a foreign country, which is duly authenticated by the certificate of a British consul, is sufficient to authorize a judge in New Brunswick to grant an order for bail. Drake v. Wentworth, (Hil. T. 1834) Stevens N. Brunsw. Dig. 24.

Affidavits by third persons have been held sufficient which stated that defendant is indebted in such a sum, as deponent computes it (Moultby v. Richardson, 2 Burr. 1032); that defendant "is indebted as appears by an account stated and under the defendant's own hand" (Anonymous, 1 Wils. C. P. 21); that "the defendant is indebted in 20 l, according to the bill delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant" (Williams v. Jackson, 3 T. R. 575); that defendant is indebted on a bill of exchange "as appears by such bill" (Bright v. Purrier, Buller N. P. 269, 3 Burr. 1687; Rollin v. Mills, 1 Wils. C. P. 279); that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in certain sums and that deponent is better and more strongly assured that the said sums of money are due by means of deponent's having transmitted to him certain documents which he has in his custody (Brown v. Phepoe, 3 Dougl. 370, 26 E. C. L. 244).

75. Thus, it is no ground for setting aside an arrest that the word "malicious" is spelled with a "t" instead of a "c" in the affidavit. Gardener v. Morrison, (Hil. T., 4 Vict.) 1 Robinson & J. Ont. Dig. 197.

by a slight error in grammar which does not render its meaning obscure or ambiguous.[76]

(II) Averments as to Parties — (A) As to Deponent. The deponent's name must be set out in the affidavit to hold to bail,[77] and, where the affidavit is made by a person other than plaintiff, it should state his relation to the latter.[78] It is not essential to state deponent's residence or place of abode,[79] though, under the earlier English practice, the affidavit was fatally defective if it omitted either deponent's addition,[80] or his place of abode.[81]

(B) As to Defendant. An affidavit which fails to name in its body a known defendant[82] is insufficient;[83] but, except in cases where the right to arrest is depend-

76. Thus, to justify the arrest of one of two joint debtors, the affidavit is sufficient even though it contains the pronoun in the plural instead of the singular form (McNamara v. Garrity, 78 Me. 418, 6 Atl. 668), and in an affidavit for the arrest of joint debtors it is not necessary to allege the belief that each of them is about to take the property away. An allegation that "they" are about to do it is sufficient. Cates v. Noble, 33 Me. 258. So, where there are two defendants, an affidavit which states that "the defendants has property" is regarded as being merely erroneous grammatically, and includes both defendants. Abbott v. Tucker, 4 Allen (Mass.) 72.

77. Richardson v. Northrope, Taylor (U. C.) 331 (holding that deponent's name must be set forth in the affidavit in words at length); Westover v. Burnham, (Trin. T., 3 & 4 Vict.) 1 Robinson & J. Ont. Dig. 197 (holding that deponent's christian names must be given in full).

A trifling inaccuracy in this respect will not, of itself, however, vitiate the affidavit, as where the affidavit referred to plaintiff in one part as "Antoine T." and in another as the "said Francois T." (Turcas v. Rogers, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 655), or where the affidavit referred to plaintiff by the name of "Gesser" but was signed by him as "Gasser" (Gesser v. Braunfeld, 13 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 209).

It was sufficient addition to describe deponent as "merchant" (Vaissier v. Alderson, 3 M. & S. 165) or "manufacturer" (Smith v. Younger, 3 B. & P. 550).

81. Collins v. Goodyer, 2 B. & C. 563, 9 E. C. L. 248; D'Argent v. Vivant, 1 East 330; Polleri v. De Souza, 4 Taunt. 154.

A clerk of plaintiff may state his place of abode to be the office where he is employed the greater part of the day, although at night he sleeps at another place, as the words "place of abode" do not, necessarily, mean the place where the deponent sleeps, the object of the rule being to ascertain the place where deponent is most usually to be found, and not the place to which he retires merely for the purpose of rest. Haslope v. Thorne, 1 M. & S. 103.

A foreigner whose residence is abroad, and who only landed in England for the purpose of making an affidavit to hold defendant to bail in an action where such foreigner was plaintiff, may properly describe his place of abode to be in his own country, and not at the place where the affidavit was made. Bouhet v. Kittoe, 3 East 154.

Street not necessary.— In an affidavit to hold to bail, if the deponent is described "as of the City of London," it is sufficient even though the street or square is not given. Vaissier v. Alderson, 3 M. & S. 165. So, where the affidavit for a capias describes plaintiff as "of the City of Kingston, Canada, West," it is a sufficient indication of his domicile. Macfarlane v. Béliveau, 9 L. C. Rep. 261.

82. An unknown defendant may be designated by description. Pindar v. Black, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 95, 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 53.

83. The words "the defendant," "the said defendant," or "the said defendants," are insufficient. Hunt v. Lesh, 6 Pa. Dist. 290; Snedden v. Gunn, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. 47; Hower v. Bennet, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 557. See also Hitchcock v. Baker, 2 Allen (Mass.) 431, holding that an affidavit for the arrest of the "defendant" on a writ against two defendants, which fails to show which defendant is intended, is insufficient to authorize the arrest of either.

Inaccuracy in name.— An affidavit is not vitiated by reason of a slight error in the spelling of defendant's name. Gesser v. Braunfeld, 13 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 209; Joutras v. Dunlop, 7 L. C. Rep. 420, 5 R. J. R. Q. 330. See also Hughes v. Sutton, 3 M. & S. 178, wherein an affidavit that "R. Sutton is indebted to the plaintiff for money paid and laid out to the use of the said R. Jackson" was held sufficient, the name "R. Jackson" not having been mentioned before, the court saying there was nothing to satisfy the word "said" unless Jackson were rejected. Compare, however, Waters v. Joyce, 1 D. & R. 150, 16 E. C. L. 24 (wherein it was held that an affidavit to hold to bail, referring to defendant in one place as "Edward Joyce" and in another as "George Page Edward Joyce," was insufficient, as it might raise an inference that another person was jointly in-ent thereon, it is not necessary that the affidavit should state defendant's residence or where he has his domicile.[84]

(III) AVERMENTS AS TO GROUNDS FOR ISSUANCE—(A) In General. The affidavit should state positively the facts relied upon by plaintiff to establish his right to the remedy he seeks;[85] and facts,[86] not mere conclusions of law or fact,[87]

debted with defendant to plaintiff); Botsford v. Stewart, (Easter T., 11 Geo. IV) 1 Robinson & J. Ont. Dig. 197 (wherein an arrest was set aside because defendant, whose name was Patrick, was called Peter in the affidavit and writ).

Use of full christian name.— In an action upon a bill of exchange the affidavit must not state defendant's christian name merely by initials, even though he may have so signed the bill. Reynolds v. Hankin, 4 B. & Ald. 536, 6 E. C. L. 591.

C.) 413, holding that an affidavit describing defendant's residence as at Canandaigua, State of New ("York" being omitted), was insufficient.

Presumption as to residence.— In an affidavit for an arrest defendant will, if no residence is stated, be presumed to be a resident of the state where the action is brought. Robinson v. Holt, Hempst. (U. S.) 426, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,955.

Exemption by non-residence.— If a person who is arrested upon an affidavit which does not state his residence is exempt by reason of his non-residence, he must plead the exemption in order to take advantage of it. Hanney v. Boehner, 14 La. Ann. 859.

But, if sufficient facts to justify the arrest are set out in the affidavit, it is no objection that the statement commences with the words "for that," as they constitute a positive averment and are equal to "because;" but if the statement commences with the words "for that, whereas," the affidavit is not sufficient, as the statement is not a positive averment, but a statement by way of recital merely. must be stated. The facts, moreover, must be such as would be admissible as evidence on a trial of the cause.[88]

What are not mere conclusions.— An affidavit for arrest does not violate the rule that facts, not conclusions, must be stated, if the allegations therein would be sufficient to make out a prima facie case in a criminal trial. Pease v. Pendell, 57 Mich. 315, 23 N. W. 827. An allegation that the property obtained from plaintiff was her separate and individual property is not an allegation of a mere conclusion of law within the rule requiring such affidavits to state facts, and not conclusions. In an action in the federal circuit court for the District of Columbia, upon an account, the affidavit to hold to bail must be as certain and positive as is required by Md. Acts (1729), c. 20, to make an account admissible in evidence. Travers v. Hight, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 41, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,151; Smith v. Watson, 1 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 311, 22 Fed. Cas. Affidavit by one who died before bringing of action.— In an action brought by an executor, an order of arrest will not be granted upon an affidavit made by plaintiff's testator before his death, and entitled in an action he proposed to bring against defendant, even though upon the same or similar causes of action as those set forth in plaintiff's complaint, as defendant could never cross-examine the deponent. Mason v. Lambert, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 250.

Suppl. 892. Compare Herwig v. Beach, 15 La. Ann. 261, holding that it is not sufficient for a creditor to swear that all the facts and allegations in his petition are true, to the best of his knowledge and belief, but that he must swear positively to the debt, and to his belief of the truth of the other allegations in his petition.

Circumstances from which facts may be deduced.— The affidavit must show personal knowledge of the facts by affiant, or state circumstances from which the facts must, necessarily, be deduced. Marble v. Curran, 63 Mich. 283, 29 N. W. 725.

Sufficient showing of knowledge.— An allegation that defendant said to a certain police officer that deponent stole defendant's wheel and he wanted her locked up, and then and there falsely and maliciously caused deponent to be arrested by said police officer on said charge, sufficiently shows that affiant of her own personal knowledge knows the facts stated in the affidavit. Wright v. Wayne Cir. Judge, 119 Mich. 499, 78 N. W. 545.

When the lack of deponent's knowledge is apparent from the face of the affidavit, it is insufficient (Finlay v. De Castroverde, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 59, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 716, 52 N. Y. St. 228), even though he swears that the facts are stated upon the personal knowledge of affiant (Harman v. Brotherson, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 537; Hart v. Grant, 8 S. D. 248, 66 N. W. 322).

or hearsay.[91] From their nature, however, it is permissible to make some averments upon information and belief;[92] but, in such case, the affidavit must show the source of affiant's knowledge or the foundation of his belief, in order that the court may judge if it is well founded.[93]

When affiant's knowledge appears from the face of the affidavit it is sufficient even though the allegations are expressed to be made according to the "best knowledge and belief" of affiant. Brooklyn Daily Union v. Hayward, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 235.

92. As, for instance, the amount of damages sustained by plaintiff (Nevins v. Merrie, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 499); defendant's non-residence (Gates v. Maxon, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 132); defendant's fraud in contracting debt (Matoon v. Eder, 6 Cal. 57); false and fraudulent representations by defendant (Whitlock v. Roth, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 78, 5 How. Pr. (N. Jur. 216, the first three cases holding that an affidavit alleging, upon information and belief, defendant's intention to abscond or remove is insufficient, and the last case holding that such an affidavit, alleging defendant's intention to secrete "his movable property and effects," is defective). Compare Bates v. Rowley, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 210, 211, 33 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 202, holding that an affidavit, upon information and belief, that the debtor has "rights in action, money and evidences of debt, which he unjustly refuses to apply," etc., is too general to authorize a warrant of arrest.

Sufficient averment of belief.— La. Code Prac. art. 223, requires the creditor to swear "he verily believes" the facts stated in his affidavit, but these words are not sacramental. To swear he "suspects" and "fears" his debtor is about to depart is sufficient. Passebon v. His Creditors, 9 La. 189.

Insufficient averment of knowledge and belief.— An affidavit in which plaintiff merely stated that, "to the best of his belief the defendant was about to quit the commonwealth," was held insufficient. It should have been "to the best of the deponent's knowledge and belief," although the statute has the words "knowledge or belief." Diehl v. Perie, 2 Miles (Pa.) 47, 48. See also Bromley v. Joseph, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 10.

Necessity of showing what is alleged on information.— It is of great importance that the original affidavit upon which an order of arrest is granted should be candidly and carefully drawn, and state correctly what is alleged on information and what of deponent's personal knowledge. (c) As to Cause of Action — (1) IN GENERAL. When plaintiff's right to hold a defendant to bail is dependent upon the cause of action, it is essential that the affidavit should disclose positively the existence of a good cause of action.[94] The rule has been applied to actions for breach of contract,[95] breach of marriage promise,[96]

It is sufficient to name deponent's informant, without specifying other reasons of belief (McRae v. Miller, 28 L. C. Jur. 268); and an affidavit which shows facts sufficient to satisfy the mind of the judge is sufficient even though it does not disclose the name of deponent's informant (Milligan v. Mason, 17 L. C. Jur. 159; McInnes v. Macklin, 6 U. C. L. J. 14).

Must state name of informant and why his affidavit was not obtained (Rolder v. Gonzalez, 25 N. Y. App. Div. 96, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 1015; Markey v. Diamond, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 181, 46 N. Y. St. 283; Jordan v. Harrison, 13 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 445; Bell v. Mali, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 254), and it is insufficient for affiant to state merely that he was unable to obtain the affidavit of his informant (Martin v. Gross, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 512, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 337, 22 N. Y. St. 439, 16 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 235).

Insufficient statement of source of information.— An affidavit made by the receiver of a corporation upon information and belief insufficiently states affiant's sources of information when it merely refers to affidavits made by the person whose arrest is sought, an examination of certain other writings signed by him, and an inspection of an inventory of the corporation. Matter of Van Amee, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 219, 29 N. Y. St. 198.

Documents.— Where affiant states certain facts upon information and belief, derived from certain documents, he should annex such documents to the affidavit, or produce them in court. Paulus v. Grobben, 104 Mich. 42, 62 N. W. 160; Finlay v. De Castroverde, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 59, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 716, 52 N. Y. St. 228; De Weerth v. Feldner, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 295, S. C. sub nom. De Nierth v. Sidner, 25 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 419. On the other hand, it is unnecessary to produce documentary evidence of facts stated in the affidavit as of affiant's own knowledge. Paulus v. Grobben, 104 Mich. 42, 62 N. W. 160.

94. No formal allegation to that effect is necessary, however, when the affidavit contains a statement of facts showing the existence of a cause of action (National Bank v. Jennings, 38 S. C. 372, 17 S. E. 16), and it is not necessary to state "that an action has been, or is about to be commenced" (Pindar v. Black, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 95, 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 53).

Action barred by limitation.— The affidavit does not show a sufficient cause of action if it shows that the action is barred by the statute of limitations. Pratt v. Page, 18 Wis. 337.

When order obtained after verdict.— Where plaintiff does not seek the arrest of defendant until after obtaining a verdict against him, the affidavit should state as the cause of action the claim for which the action was brought. McManus v. Wells, 29 N. Brunsw. 449.

When defect not jurisdictional.— A defect in the statement of the cause of action in an affidavit to hold to bail in a justice's court does not go to the jurisdiction of the justice to try the cause, even though defendant took the objection at the trial and his objection was there overruled. O'Keefe v. Delaney, 31 N. Brunsw. 299.

In Georgia it is not necessary that the affidavit should set forth or describe the cause of action, it being sufficient if plaintiff complies with the statutory requirements of oath to the amount claimed and apprehension of the loss of the debt, or some part thereof, unless defendant is held to bail. Ct. 363, wherein it was held that an affidavit which failed to aver that plaintiff had offered to marry defendant, and asked him to marry her, was sufficient.

Presumption of marriage.— In an action for a breach of promise to marry, where plaintiff stated in her affidavit to hold to bail that the parties had cohabited as husband and wife, representing themselves as married to each other, and had had born to them five children, it was held that plaintiff had raised a presumption of marriage which, unless repelled by proof, would defeat the action, and she was therefore not entitled to an order of arrest. Affidavit held sufficient.— An affidavit to hold to bail in an action for a criminal conversation with plaintiff's wife, which stated that she had been taken away from plaintiff about two years previously, and that plaintiff had only recently discovered that she had been living ever since with defendant in adultery, but omitted any positive averment that she was plaintiff's wife when she was taken away, or that defendant had committed adultery with her, was held sufficient. The averment that a wrong impression was intentionally conveyed by defendant is, in some cases, sufficient. Bishop v. Davis, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 342.

Sufficient showing of cause of action.— Where the affidavit set forth that defendant falsely and fraudulently represented himself to be superintendent of one who was constructing a railroad, and as authorized to hire men and teams for him at three dollars and fifty cents per day; that free transportation would be furnished from K to B, where accommodations and shelter would be furnished at one dollar per day; that, relying upon these representations, plaintiff went with his team to B, but was there informed that defendant had no authority to hire men and teams; that his contract would not be recognized, and that only two dollars and twenty-five cents per day would be paid; and that plaintiff worked for awhile for this sum and then returned, it was held that the affidavit, although not as clearly framed as was desirable, was sufficient. Lamper v. Roberts, 83 Mich. 547, 47 N. W. 440.

A prima facie case is made where the affidavit sets forth that plaintiff paid certain drafts upon the request of defendant, who represented the holder to be responsible, and that it subsequently developed that the drafts were forged. Clews v. Raphael, 4 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 664.

Insufficient showing of cause of action.— An affidavit alleging that defendant falsely represented that stock of a certain company was not overissued, whereby plaintiff was induced to purchase certain shares in 1853, and that the overissues were made between June, 1853, and June, 1854, does not show that there was an overissue when the representation was made and "that a sufficient cause of action exists" as required by N. Y. Code, § 181, to justify an arrest. Bell v. Mali, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 254.

Presumption as to cause of action.— If the affidavits show a cause of action in the nature of an action on the case, for obtaining goods from plaintiffs by fraud, the fact that they also allege that the action is brought to recover the price of goods sold does not warrant an inference that the complaint will not state a cause of action for obtaining goods by fraud. Townsend v. Bogart, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 355.

Non-residence and absconding.— Under the amendment of 1863 to subdivision 4, section 179 of the code, it was not necessary, in an action "brought to recover damages for fraud and deceit," to aver that defendant was a non-resident, or about to depart from the state; and an order of arrest would not be vacated upon affidavits denying, not the fraud complained of, but only the intention to leave the state. No. 13,386, holding that, where the affidavit is positive as to the damages sustained, it is not a valid objection thereto that the speaking of the words is averred on information and belief.

Translation of words spoken.— The alleged slanderous words must be set out in the language in which they were spoken, and it is insufficient to give merely the English version of words alleged to have been spoken in the German language. E—— v. R——, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 274.

3. Vanderpool v. Kissam, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 715; Grimes v. Davison, 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 457; Aarons v. Dunseith, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 208; Walker v. Curran, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 113, 7 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 187; Pratt v. Page, 18 Wis. 337. Compare Fraser v. Gerrie, 2 Rev. Crit. 477, wherein it was held that it is not essential that the affidavit should allege the conclusion of the prosecution when it appears that defendant is about to leave the country.

Failure to deny charge.— Where plaintiff, in an action for malicious prosecution in having him arrested on the charge that he received stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, failed to allege in his affidavit that he did not know that the goods were stolen, it was held that the affidavit was fatally defective. Aarons v. Dunseith, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 208. But where defendant's affidavit for plaintiff's arrest insufficiently averred facts entitling replevin,[4] slander,[5] trespass,[6] and trover.[7] As a rule, if the existence of a sufficient cause of action is shown, entitling plaintiff to an arrest, no special cause of arrest need be stated.[8] It has been held, however, that the affidavit must disclose some special cause for holding defendant to bail in actions for libel or slander.[9] him to the order of arrest, it was held that plaintiff, in his affidavit for arrest in an action of malicious prosecution in procuring his arrest, need not aver that the allegations in defendant's affidavit were untrue. Paulus v. Grobben, 104 Mich. 42, 62 N. W. 160.

(2) As to Indebtedness — (a) Existence of — aa. In General. In an action of debt the affidavit to hold to bail must show clearly and positively the existence of a debt[11] which is actually due and payable.[12] It must also be clearly shown by

It is sufficiently averred that the debt is due when the affidavit states that defendant was indebted to plaintiff, in trust for deponent, under a deed by which defendant had covenanted to pay "at certain times, and on certain events now past and happened." Barnard v. Neville, 3 Bing. 126, 10 Moore C. P. 475, 11 E. C. L. 70.

Bills and notes.— When the action is based on a bill or note, the affidavit must show that the instrument is past due (Edwards v. Dick, 3 B. & Ald. 495, 5 E. C. C. 526, 2 Jur. 374, 1 W. W. & H. 187). The affidavit is sufficient when it states that the instrument was due and payable at a day then past, without specifying the day (Elstone v. Mortlake, 1 Chit. 648, 18 E. C. P. C. 318, 2 Tyrw. 316; Machu v. Fraser, 2 Marsh. 483, 7 Taunt. 171, 2 E. C. L. 311; Jackson v. Yate, 2 M. & S. 148; Bill v. Rogers, 12 Price 194; Ross v. Hurd, 1 Ont. Averments of notice, presentment, and default are unnecessary when the action is against the person primarily liable (Osborne v. Pennell, 4 Moore & S. 431); but, in an action against one secondarily liable such averments are necessary (Hopkinson v. Salembier, 7 Dowl. P. C. 493, 3 Jur. 538, 5 M. & W. 423; Simpson v. Dick, 3 Dowl. P. C. 731; Nicholson v. Nowlin, 16 N. Brunsw. 210; Ross v. Balfour, 5 U. C.

the affidavit that such indebtedness is due and payable to plaintiff[13] by defendant,[14]

Q. B. O. S. 683. Compare Witham v. Gompertz, 2 C. M. & R. 736, 4 Dowl. P. C. 382, 1 Gale 301, 1 Tyrw. & G. 6, wherein it was held that it was sufficient for an affidavit to allege a default, without averring a presentment or notice). If the note is drawn and payable in a foreign country, by the law of which presentment at the place of payment is not necessary to be proved as a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to sue, it must be so stated in the affidavit. Cushing v. Gordon, 11 N. Brunsw. 524.

Demand and refusal to pay.— It is not necessary to state that defendant has been asked to pay the debt, and has refused to do so. Hasset v. Mulcahey, 6 L. C. Rep. 15, 4 R. J. R. Q. 474.

Qualification of positive oath.— In an affidavit made by plaintiff's agent (plaintiff himself being abroad) wherein the debt on a judgment is positively sworn to, the subsequent statement that the judgment is still in force and unsatisfied, "as this deponent verily believes," will not vitiate the affidavit. Bland v. Drake, 1 Chit. 165, 18 E. C. L. 100.

In an action for goods sold and delivered, the affidavit is fatally defective unless it avers that the goods were sold and delivered by plaintiff. Benedict v. Whartenby, 2 Miles (Pa.) 131; Taylor v. Forbes, 11 East 315; Cathrow v. Hagger, 8 East 106; Perks v. Severn, 7 East 194; Fenton v. Ellis, 1 Marsh. 535, 6 Taunt. 192, 1 E. C. L. 572; McDonnell v. Kelly, 4 U. C. Q. B. 394; Diamond v. Cartwright, 22 U. C. C. P. 494.

Money had and received.—An affidavit that defendant is indebted to plaintiff for money had and received by defendant, for and on account of plaintiff, and at his request, but not stating that it was received to plaintiff's use, is insufficient. Kelly v. Curzon, 4 A. & E. 622, 1 Hurl. & W. 678, 31 E. C. L. 278.

In action by partners.— An affidavit for a debt stated therein to be due A and B is good, even though plaintiffs are partners and are not stated to be so in the affidavit. Bodfield v. Padmore, 5 B. & Ad. 1095, 27 E. C. L. 459.

14. An express averment of the defendant's personal indebtedness should be contained in the affidavit (Alexander v. McLachlan, 1 L. C. Jur. 5; Hall v. Zernichon, 4 Quebec 268); but its omission is not fatal if the affidavit otherwise discloses a personal indebtedness (Sheridan v. Hennessey, 23 L. C. Jur. 212; Lampson v. Smith, 7 L. C. Rep. 425, 5 R. J. R. Q. 334).

In an action for goods sold and delivered, the affidavit must show positively sale and delivery to defendant (Benedict v. Whartenby, 2 Miles (Pa.) 131; Handley v. Franchi, L. R. 2 Exch. 34, 36 L. J. Exch. 32, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 252, 15 Wkly. Rep. 158; Bell v. Thrupp, 2 B. & Ald. 596, 1 Chit. 331, 18 E. C. L. 184; Taylor v. Forbes, 11 East 315; Cathrow v. Hagger, 8 East 106; Perks v. Severn, 7 East 194; Young v. Gatien, 2 M. & S. 603; McDonnell v. Kelly, 4 U. C. Q. B. 394; Diamond v. Cartwright, 22 U. C. C. P. 494. But see Maguire v. Rockett, 3 Quebec 347, holding that the affidavit need not show that the sale and delivery were made to defendant when they are alleged to have been made at his instance and request. Moreover, since the passage of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, § 3, an affidavit which states that the goods were sold to defendant need not state also that they were delivered. Bell v. Thrupp, 2 B. & Ald. 596, 1 Chit. 331, 18 E. C. L. 184; Lascar v. Morioseph, 1 Bing. 357, 8 Moore C. P. 366, 8 E. C. L. 546; Hopkins v. Vaughan, 12 East 398; Hargreaves v. Hayes, 5 E. & B. 272, 1 Jur. N. S. 521, 24 L. J. Q. B. 281, 85 E. C. L. 272); but it is not necessary to allege that the sale and delivery were at defendant's request (Kelly v. Kintzing, 2 Miles (Pa.) 181). However, an affidavit for money lent, for goods sold and delivered, and for work and labor done, is insufficient if it fails to state that it was "at the instance and request of defendant," even though it states that it was "to and for his use, and on his behalf," as, for all that such affidavit shows, the goods may have been sold and delivered to a third person for defendant's use, without the latter being acquainted with the transaction. Durnford v. Messiter, 5 M. & S. 446.

Sale to third person.— An affidavit that defendant is justly indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum, for goods sold and delivered to a third person, upon the written guaranty of defendant, is sufficient to hold the latter to bail (Laverty v. Snelling, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 290, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,124); but an affidavit for the price of goods, guaranteed by defendant, which fails to show the terms of the sale, or that the time for payment has expired, is bad (Angus v. Robilliard, 2 Dowl. P. C. 90). And an affidavit for goods sold and delivered to, and for money paid and laid out for, the wife of defendant before his intermarriage with her, no request being stated, is insufficient (Gray v. Shepherd, 3 Dowl. P. C. 442).

In an action for work and labor done and materials furnished, it is essential that the affidavit should state that the work and labor were done for, and the materials furnished to, defendant (Bell v. Thrupp, 2 B. & Ald. 596, 1 Chit. 331, 18 E. C. L. 184; Young v. Gatien, 2 M. & S. 603; Diamond v. Cartwright, 22 U. C. C. P. 494), but this is sufficiently shown by an averment that the work was done by plaintiff for defendant as his servant (Bliss v. Atkins, 1 Marsh. 317 note, 5 Taunt. 756, 1 E. C. L. 387), or that defendant is indebted for money paid, laid out, and expended, and wages due to plaintiff for his services on board the defendant's ship, without an express statement that the debt is due from defendant (Symonds v. Andrews, 1 and further that the indebtedness is one for which an arrest may be lawfully made.[15]

bb. By Reference to Books or Papers. As a general rule an affidavit is insufficient which only avers the debt to be due as appears by a certain instrument or book to which reference is made, as such averment is not a positive oath of indebtedness;[16] but, in an action by an executor, administrator, or assignee of a bankrupt, Marsh. 317, 5 Taunt. 751, 1 E. C. L. 384). It is not necessary to aver "at defendant's request." Crane v. Fish, 2 Miles (Pa.) 165; Anonymous, 1 Chit. 292, 18 E. C. L. 162; Brown v. Garnier, 2 Marsh. 83, 6 Taunt. 389, 1 E. C. L. 667; Joutras v. Dunlop, 7 L. C. Rep. 420, 5 R. J. R. Q. 330. Contra, Hall v. Brush, (Trin. T., 3 & 4 Vict.) 1 Robinson & J. Ont. Dig. 194.

In an action for money lent, the affidavit must show that the money was lent to defendant (Smith v. Stevens, 3 Tyrw. 219; Diamond v. Cartwright, 22 U. C. C. P. 494); but this requirement is met by an affidavit which recites facts showing that such was the case, even though it does not contain the express recital that the money was "lent to the defendant" (Bennett v. Dawson, 4 Bing. 609, 1 M. & P. 594, 13 E. C. L. 658). It is not sufficient, however, to state that defendant was "indebted to the plaintiff in 245*l* for money lent by plaintiff to defendant for the use of another, and for which the defendant promised to be accountable, and to repay, or cause to be secured to the plaintiff," it not appearing in the affidavit but that the money had been secured according to the agreement. Jacks v. Pemberton, 5 T. R. 552. An affidavit that A and B are indebted for money lent to A has been held sufficient to authorize the arrest of A. Ellerby v. Walton, 2 Ont. Pr. 147.

In an action for money paid to and for the use of defendant, it is necessary to aver that it was so done at the instance or request of defendant. McCanles v. Frederickson, 2 Miles (Pa.) 132; Pitt v. New, 8 B. & C. 654, 3 M. & R. 129, 15 E. C. L. 323; Marshall v. Davison, 2 Tyrw. 315. Contra, Berry v. Fernandes, 1 Bing. 338, 8 Moore C. P. 332, 8 E. C. L. 537; Harrison v. Turner, 4 Dowl. P. C. 72, 1 Hurl. & W. 346.

Money had and received for plaintiff.—In an affidavit to hold to bail it is sufficient to state that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum for "money had and received on account of the plaintiff," without adding "received by the defendant," as it could not be said that defendant is indebted to plaintiff unless the money has been received by defendant. Coppinger v. Beaton, 8 T. R. 338.

Under agreement for purchase of land.—An affidavit stating that defendant is indebted to plaintiff by virtue of articles of agreement, by which the latter agreed to sell and the former to purchase certain lands, and that defendant has been let into possession in pursuance of the agreement, is insufficient unless it states that a conveyance has been tendered to defendant. Young v. Dowlman, 2 Y. & J. 31.

In action upon award.—Where there was a submission to two arbitrators, with power in them to name an umpire if they could not agree, provided the umpire made his award on or before a certain day, and the arbitrators named an umpire, who made an award in plaintiff's favor, but after the time limited had expired, and plaintiff held defendant to bail without stating in his affidavit that the time had expired, it was held that defendant was not entitled to be discharged on common bail, as the affidavit on its face disclosed a good and sufficient cause of action against him, and showed prima facie that defendant was properly held to bail. Masel v. Angel, 6 D. & R. 15, 16 E. C. L. 251. But an affidavit stating defendant to be indebted to plaintiff generally on a bond conditioned for the performance of an award, which award directed F to pay a sum of money upon demand, was held defective where it did not appear that defendant was indebted, and no demand was expressed to have been made upon the bond. Armstrong v. Stratton, 1 Moore C. P. 110, 7 Taunt. 405, 2 E. C. L. 421.

In an action for the hire of a berth on board plaintiff's vessel an allegation that it was let by plaintiff to defendant at his request, was held sufficient without showing actual enjoyment. Shepherd v. O'Brien, 5 Dowl. P. C. 173, 2 Gale 120, 1 M. & W. 601.

But in a suit brought by the commonwealth against a collector of tolls, an affidavit to hold to bail, made by a public auditing officer, averring the indebtedness of defendant in a stated sum, for tolls, etc., belonging to an affidavit by plaintiff, averring the indebtedness as appears by the books of the testator, intestate, or bankrupt, is sufficient provided it also avers deponent's belief that the debt is due.[17]

(b) Amount. It must also show the exact amount of the indebtedness claimed by plaintiff;[18] but, if an affidavit is good as to one distinct sum stated in it, and the commonwealth, received by him and unpaid, as appears by accounts kept in the public departments, it was held that the affidavit was sufficient, as the case formed an exception to the general rule because of the impossibility of one public officer making a positive affidavit of an indebtedness to the commonwealth when the accounts are kept in different public departments. Com. v. Fritz, 2 Miles (Pa.) 336. And it has been held that, when the application for the capias is made pendente lite, the affidavit is sufficient even though the debt is indicated only by a reference to the declaration filed in the cause. No. 8,871; Tonna v. Edwards, 4 Burr. 2283; Barclay v. Hunt, 4 Burr. 1992 (holding that an affidavit of indebtedness made by the assignees as appears to them by the last examination of the bankrupt, and as they verily believe, and that they have not received the debt, or any part of it, but believe it to be still due, is sufficient); Harrison v. Turner, 4 Dowl. P. C. 72, 1 Hurl. & W. 346; Swayne v. Crammond, 4 T. R. 176.

Necessity of averring belief.— But an affidavit which simply refers to the books and omits the averment of the deponent's belief is insufficient. Garnham v. Hammond, 2 B. & P. 298; Lowe v. Farley, 1 Chit. 92, 18 E. C. L. 63; Walrond v. Fransham, 2 Str. 1219; Sheldon v. Baker, 1 T. R. 87.

Effect of administrator's affidavit as estoppel.—In an action by an administrator where he states facts showing a special cause of action, he is not thereby estopped to abandon such special cause and resort to proof under the general counts at the trial, when he subsequently discovers that the information at his command at the time he made the affidavit was incorrect. Read v. Randel, 2 Harr. (Del.) 500.

The co-assignee of a debt arising out of bills of exchange may hold a defendant to bail upon his own affidavit, swearing positively as to all the facts which are within his own knowledge, and to the best of his knowledge and belief as to such as are within the knowledge of his principal and co-assignees. The same principle which allows such an affidavit in an action by an executor, or an assignee of a bankrupt, applies to an action of this nature. Cresswell v. Lovell, 8 T. R. 418.

In Arkansas, an affidavit in an action on a writing obligatory, stating that the action was "founded on a real subsisting debt; and this affiant verily believes that the sum of six hundred dollars as bail will not be more than will satisfy the debt and costs," was held to be sufficient under the territorial statute. Hughes v. Martin, 1 Ark. 455, 460.

In foreign attachment, an affidavit that the garnishee has in his possession money or effects of defendant, without stating the amount or value thereof, is insufficient to hold the garnishee to special bail. Benkard v. Clements, 2 Miles (Pa.) 284.

Bills of exchange.— An affidavit that defendant is indebted in a stated sum for principal moneys due upon a bill of exchange, without stating the sum for which the bill was drawn, is bad. Fowell v. Petre, 5 A. & E. 818, 5 Dowl. P. C. 276, 2 Hurl. & W. 379, 2 N. & P. 227, 31 E. C. L. 839; Robins v. Grant, W. W. & D. 373. Compare Robbins v. Upton, 5 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 498, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,886, holding that in a suit on a protested bill of exchange the federal court does not require an affidavit of the amount due.

Promissory notes.— An affidavit stating that defendant is justly indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum by promissory note, describing it, sufficiently sets out the amount of the indebtedness. Dummer v. Nungesser, 107 Mich. 481, 65 N. W. 564; Rosenberg v. McKain, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 145; Tobias v. Wood, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 103. An affidavit for several different notes need not state the aggregate sum, but the amount of each note must be stated. The dates of the notes should be set out in words, but figures will not make the affidavit defective. Ross v. Hurd, 1 Ont. Pr. 158.

this is an arrestable amount, it is no objection that it is bad as to another sum

Distinguishment of principal and interest. — Where an affidavit states defendant to be indebted in three hundred and four pounds, four shillings, seven pence, "principal and interest," by virtue of an indenture covenanting to pay three hundred pounds, the respective amounts of principal and interest are sufficiently distinguished. Jones v. Collins, 6 Dowl. P. C. 526, 2 Jur. 374, 1 W. W. & H. 187. See also Drake v. Harding, 4 Dowl. P. C. 34, 1 Hurl. & W. 364, holding that when the affidavit states the amount with certainty it is unnecessary to distinguish how much is due for principal and how much for interest.

Contract and covenant.— In special actions for non-performance of contracts, and in covenant, plaintiff must state the amount of his damage in positive terms, and must set forth in his affidavit the material circumstances of the case. Pontigen v. Williams, 1 Browne (Pa.) 206.

On account — Sufficient showing of amount. —An affidavit is sufficient as to amount where it avers a debt of a certain sum, as per bill of items, though the bill foots up a larger amount (Paul v. Ward, 21 Ind. 211); where, when made by plaintiff and his clerk to effect that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum, part of which was for money lent, and the rest of the principal sum for the balance which defendant owed on settlement, the precise amount of which could not be stated because defendant suddenly left without coming to any settlement, and that defendant, on being required to pay, did not deny the debt or the amount (Cammann v. Hind, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 320); where annexed to an account, to the effect that it "is just and true as stated, and no part thereof has been paid, except what is credited" (Clarke v. Druet, 4 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 142, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,850); where, in an action on account for money lent, it states "that the above account, as stated, is just and true, and that the plaintiff has not received any part, parcel, or satisfaction for the same," even though it does not state that defendant has received no security (Young v. Moriaty, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 42, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,167); where it states that defendant is justly indebted to plaintiff for a certain amount of goods for rent (Greenleaf v. Cross, 1 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 400, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,777), or where it states that plaintiff had furnished goods to the amount of two thousand pounds to A, for whom defendant undertook to be answerable, and that A had since failed, and paid four shillings on the pound only, and that one thousand pounds remained due to plaintiff (Collins v. Wallis, 11 Moore C. P. 248, 22 E. C. L. 606). But an affidavit stating that defendant owes plaintiff a certain sum, except so far as defendant might have an account against him for goods furnished, is insufficient (Weeks v. Trask, 1 Mart. (La.) 117), as is one that defendant was indebted in one thousand pounds "under an agreement in writing, whereby the defendant undertook to pay the plaintiff the balance of accounts, which balance is due and unpaid," without stating that the balance was one thousand pounds (Hatfeild v. Linguard, 6 T. R. 217).

Action for unliquidated damages.— Where the affidavit discloses a cause of action for unliquidated damages, it should specify the amount of damage sustained. Bullock v. Jenkins, 20 L. J. Q. B. 90, 1 L. M. & P. 645.

Separate counts relating to one amount.— An affidavit for a capias is not void for uncertainty because it sets out several causes of indebtedness for a like amount (as in a declaration with the common counts) so long as it is clear that the allegations all relate to one and the same sum of money. Pike River Mills Co. v. Priest, 15 Montreal Leg. N. 360. Compare Barry v. Eccles, 2 U. C. Q. B. 383, 384, holding that an affidavit for a certain sum, stated to be due as a distinct sum for each of three causes of action, but concluding "that the said sum of £613 is still due and owing to this deponent," was insufficient.

Distinguishment of amounts due on different accounts.— In an affidavit for a certain sum of money had and received, it is not necessary to distinguish or specify how much is due on each account. Hague v. Levi, 9 Bing. 595, 1 Dowl. P. C. 720, 2 Moore & S. 729, 23 E. C. L. 720. This rule has been applied also to an affidavit for money lent, paid, or on an account stated (Tannahill v. Mosier, 2 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 483; Black v. Adams (Easter T., 3 Vict.) 1 Robinson & J. Ont. Dig. 195), and to an affidavit for goods sold and delivered, and upon an executed contract for the delivery of certain lumber (McIntyre v. Brown, 4 U. C. L. J. 85. Compare Mackenzie v. Reid, 1 U. C. Q. B. 396, holding that an affidavit on a promissory note, and also for goods sold, not specifying the amount due on each account, or whether the goods sold formed the consideration of the note, was insufficient).

Kind of money.— Where an affidavit, made before a British consul, in a foreign country, stated that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in a certain number of pounds sterling, it was held that it was insufficient, as it did not appear with certainty whether defendant was indebted in British or Irish sterling money. It ought to have said "pounds sterling, English." Pickardo v. Machado, 4 B. & C. 886, 7 D. & R. 478, 10 E. C. L. 844. So, where the debt is foreign money, its value in English currency must be shown in the affidavit. Storie v. Ball, 2 Chit. 16, 18 E. C. L. 478. Compare Pawson v. Hall, 1 Ont. Pr. 294 (holding that an affidavit that defendant is indebted in the sum of five hundred and sixty pounds, sterling money, on a bill of exchange, drawn, etc., for the payment of five hundred and sixty pounds, not saying of what money, was sufficient); Montreal Bank v. Brown, 17 L. C. Rep. 144 (where, on a motion to quash a writ of capias on the ground that there was no sufficient statement of the debt, inasmuch as it was stated to be due in sterling money, it was held that the amount due may be legally so stated, as the value of the pound sterling was fixed by the Canadian Currency Act); Hall v. Zernichon, 4 Quebec 268 (holding that it is sufficient for the affidavit to state the amount due in dollars, without any qualification as to its particular currency).

stated in it, unless it appears that the process was issued for the whole amount, and not for the former sum only.[19]

Variance between affidavit and verdict.— The law does not require that an affidavit to hold to bail should be of the exact amount which may be eventually found due, for the verdict cannot alter the regularity of the former proceedings. Woodfolk v. Leslie, 2 Nott & M. (S. C.) 585.

19. Cunliffe v. Maltass, 7 C. B. 695, 6 Dowl. & L. 723, 13 Jur. 751, 18 L. J. C. P. 233, 62 E. C. L. 695; Jones v. Collins, 6 Dowl. P. C. 526, 2 Jur. 374, 1 W. W. & H. 187; Caunce v. Rigby, M. & H. 363, 3 M. & W. 67. See also Cushing v. Gordon, 11 N. Brunsw. 524; Ross v. Hurd, 1 Ont. Pr. 158 (which cases hold that an affidavit of debt, alleging several distinct and separate causes of action, some of which are well stated and others not so, is not bad altogether, but that in such case the bail will be reduced to the sum properly stated); Green v. Hatfield, 12 L. C. Rep. 115 (holding that an affidavit may contain several different averments of debt inconsistent with one another, and is not void because one of them is insufficient).

20. Comly v. Goldsmith, 2 Miles (Pa.) 133; Eicke v. Evans, 2 Chit. 15, 18 E. C. L. 477; Cope v. Cooke, 3 Dougl. 467; Brook v. Trist, 10 East 358; Cooke v. Dobree, 1 H. Bl. 10; Rolland v. Guilbault, 12 L. C. Jur. 276; Polleri v. De Souza, 4 Taunt. 154; Jacks v. Pemberton, 5 T. R. 552; Hall v. Zernichon, 4 Quebec 268. Contra, Barbee v. Holder, 24 Tex. 225.

Where the debt arises out of a written or sealed instrument, the affidavit need not set out the debt or other particulars, if it shows distinctly the nature of the debt and the instrument upon which it accrued. Clarke v. Clarke, 3 U. C. L. J. 149. See also Day v. Hackley, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 251, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,679, holding that, in order to hold defendant to bail in an action of debt upon a bond, the bond need not be produced until oyer is demanded, if there is a sufficient affidavit of debt.

Account stated.— An affidavit for money due from defendant to plaintiff "on an account stated between them" is sufficient (Balmano v. May, 6 Dowl. P. C. 306, 2 Jur. 109; Debenham v. Chambers, 6 Dowl. P. C. 101), even though it does not contain the words "and settled" (Tyler v. Campbell, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 675, 5 Dowl. P. C. 632, 3 Hodges 79, 1 Jur. 310, 4 Scott 384, 32 E. C. L. 312). Compare Kerrick v. Davies, 1 Dowl. N. S. 347, 7 Jur. 1013, 9 M. & W. 22 (holding that an affidavit that defendant was indebted "on the balance of an account, for goods sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant," is sufficient, without stating that it was an account stated between the parties); Jones v. Collins, 6 Dowl. P. C. 526, 2 Jur. 374, 1 W. W. & H. 187 (holding that an allegation of debt "for the balance of account" or "for the balance of principal money on a bill of exchange," is defective unless it states that the balance was on an account stated).

21. Comly v. Goldsmith, 2 Miles (Pa.) 133; Peck v. Van Evour, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 580, note a; Vance v. Findly, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 578; Cooke v. Dobree, 1 H. Bl. 10; Hurtubise v. Bourret, 23 L. C. Jur. 130, 2 Montreal Leg. N. 54; Kenny v. Keown, 9 L. C. Jur. 104. Contra, Debien v. Marsan, 14 L. C. Rep. 89.

Bills and notes.— An affidavit which states that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum by promissory note (describing the note) sufficiently sets out the manner in which the indebtedness accrued (Rosenberg v. McKain, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 145; Tobias v. Wood, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 103. See also Lowe v. Mayson, 3 McCord (S. C.) 313); but in an action by the indorsee of a bill or note, the affidavit must show by whom the instrument was indorsed, and it is insufficient to state that it was "duly indorsed" (McTaggart v. Ellice, 4 Bing. 114, 12 Moore C. P. 326, 13 E. C. L. 426; Lewis v. Gompertz, 2 Cr. & J. 352, 1 Dowl. P. C. 319; Woolley v. Escudier, 2 Moore & S. 392).

Interest.— When interest is claimed, the affidavit must show the existence of a contract for the payment thereof (Visger v. Delegal, 2 B. & Ad. 571, 1 Dowl. P. C. 333, 22 E. C. L. 240; Neale v. Snoulten, 2 C. B. 320, 3 Dowl. & L. 442, 9 Jur. 1058, 15 L. J. C. P. 48, 52 E. C. L. 320; Callum v. Leeson, 2 Cr. & M. 406, 2 Dowl. P. C. 381, 4 Tyrw. 266; Drake v. Harding, 4 Dowl. P. C. 34, 1 Hurl. & W. 364; Forster v. Blizzard, 35 Can. L. J. 88; Simonds v. Simonds, 7 N. Brunsw. 468. Compare Hutchinson v. Hargrave, 1 Bing. N. Cas. 369, 1 Scott 269, 27 E. C. L. 679 (holding that an affidavit that defendant was indebted in a certain sum for money paid to and for his use, and at his request, and for interest due and owing from and agreed to be paid by defendant to plaintiff, for and in respect thereof, is sufficient); Boddington v. Woodley, 1 Jur. 960, W. W. & D. 581 (wherein it was held that a contract to pay interest was sufficiently stated in an affidavit which set forth an indenture of mortgage containing a covenant for the payment of interest); Jenkins v. Arnold-Fortescue, 19 Can. L. T. 42 (holding that, under the Bills of Exchange Act, the interest upon a dishonored bill is liquidated damages, and that a person liable therefor may be arrested upon an affidavit which does not set forth an express agreement to pay interest). It must also set out the particulars of such agreement. Brook v. Trist, 10 East 358.

It is further essential that the right of plaintiff to maintain the action,[22] and the

Action on award.— In an action on an award, the affidavit should state the fact of the submission to arbitration, and the making of the award, and that the money was due at a day past (Anonymous, 1 Dowl. P. C. 5. Compare Jenkins v. Law, 1 B. & P. 365, holding that an affidavit "for damages awarded and for costs and expenses taxed and allowed" is sufficiently certain, as it will be inferred that the award and taxation are such as will support an action); but an affidavit on an award, directing money to be paid upon a judgment, not alleging a demand, is insufficient (Driver v. Hood, 7 B. & C. 494, 1 M. & R. 324, 14 E. C. L. 224).

In an action on a bond, the affidavit must show the condition of the bond (Bosanquet v. Fillis, 4 M. & S. 330); but a statement that defendant was indebted "for principal and interest due on a bond" was held sufficient to show that such bond was conditioned for the payment of money, without setting forth the condition (Byland v. King, 1 Moore C. P. 24, 7 Taunt. 275, 2 E. C. L. 361).

Breach of agreement.— An affidavit on articles of agreement should state the consideration (Walker v. Gregory, 1 Dowl. P. C. 24), and a breach of the articles (Stephens v. Meguire, 6 N. J. L. 152; Stinton v. Hughes, 6 T. R. 13), and must show that the sum claimed is stipulated damages, and not merely a penalty. Stating that defendant bound himself in a certain sum to perform a certain agreement, and that he had neglected and refused to perform his part, is insufficient (Wildey v. Thornton, 2 East 409).

22. Bills and notes.— In an action on a bill or a note it is necessary that the affidavit should show how it is held by plaintiff, and how he became entitled to recover upon it (Philadelphia Loan Co. v. Isaac, 2 Miles (Pa.) 145; Balbi v. Batley, 1 Marsh. 424, 6 Taunt. 25, 1 E. C. L. 491), and it is not sufficient for plaintiff to describe himself as indorsee, without stating by whom the instrument was indorsed to him (Glass v. Baby, 1 Ont. Pr. 274). It is sufficient, however, to describe a note as being "for the payment to" instead of "payable to" plaintiff (Pawson v. Hall, 1 Ont. Pr. 294), and it is not necessary that deponent should describe himself as indorsee, if he traces title to himself (James v. Trevanion, 5 Dowl. P. C. 275, 2 Hurl. & W. 332), nor need plaintiff state in his affidavit that he is the holder of the bill at the time of making the affidavit (Brett v. Smith, 1 Ont. Pr. 309). Compare Bauerle v. Fox, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 3, 8 Pa. Dist. 45 (holding that, where the holder of commercial paper arrests the maker as a fraudulent debtor, it is not necessary to set forth the manner in which the affiant became the owner of the note, or what became of the collateral alleged to be given therewith, or who holds the same); Elstone v. Mortlake, 1 Chit. 648, 18 E. C. L. 353; Bradshaw v. Saddington, 7 East 94, 3 Smith K. B. 117; Machu v. Fraser, 2 Marsh. 483, 7 Taunt. 171, 2 E. C. L. 311 (holding that an affidavit stating defendant to be indebted to plaintiff on a bill of exchange drawn by defendant is sufficient even though it does not show the character in which plaintiff is entitled to sue).

In an action upon a money bond the affidavit must show to whom the bond was executed. Case v. McVeigh, (Trin. T., 3 & 4 Vict.) 1 Robinson & J. Ont. Dig. 194.

In an action by a physician, for services performed and medicine supplied, the affidavit is insufficient if it fails to allege that plaintiff is a duly registered physician. Jones v. Gress, 25 U. C. Q. B. 594; Turner v. Connolly, 35 Can. L. J. 540.

In action by assignee of claim.— Where a person gave his promissory note to a partnership and, subsequently, one member of the firm died and the partnership business was continued under the same firm-name by the surviving partner and the dead partner's widow, and thereafter the new partnership sued the maker on the note and he was arrested on a writ of capias ad respondendum, the affidavit upon which it was issued being made by the surviving partner, who swore that he was a member of the firm, and that defendant was indebted to the firm on the note, but no mention was made of the note having been given to the old firm, it was held, on a motion to discharge the defendant from custody, that the affidavit was insufficient, as it did not disclose that plaintiffs composed a new and different firm from the one in existence when the cause of action accrued. Lenz v. Kirschberg, 6 Brit. Col. 533. But where the affidavit stated that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum, part of which was for work and labor done and performed by plaintiff for defendant, and the balance of which was the amount of a claim transferred to plaintiff by another, by a deed of assignment or transfer, before a notary, it was held, on a motion to quash the capias, that, notwithstanding that no notice of such transfer had been given to defendant except by the service of process in the action, it was sufficient to support the writ. Quinn v. Atcheson, 4 L. C. Rep. 378, 4 R. J. R. Q. 203.

In an action by an administratrix and her husband on a bond given to the intestate, it is no objection to the affidavit that defendant is alleged to be indebted to both of plaintiffs, and that the affidavit omits to state that the deceased died intestate, or to whom the sum mentioned in the condition is made payable, the same degree of precision not being re-character in which defendant is liable[23] be disclosed by appropriate averments on the part of plaintiff.

bb. Time and Place. It seems that, when the affidavit is positive as to the existence of the debt, it is unnecessary that it should specify either when[24] or where[25] the indebtedness was created.

(D) As to Special Grounds — (1) IN GENERAL. When the action is such that it does not carry with it the right to arrest defendant, the affidavit to hold to bail must disclose positively[26] not only a good cause of action, but some special cause for ordering bail;[27] but need not disclose more than one such quired in an affidavit to hold to bail as in a declaration. Coppin v. Potter, 10 Bing. 441, 2 Dowl. P. C. 785, 4 Moore & S. 272, 25 E. C. L. 210.

Action by trustee of insolvent.— Where an account is due to a person who has been discharged under an insolvent law, and an action is brought thereon by his trustee, defendant will not be held to bail upon the insolvent's affidavit that such account is correct and that no part thereof has been received by him, in the absence of an affidavit made by the trustee that he has received no part thereof. Way v. Selby, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 44, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,302.

When right is dependent upon foreign law. — In an action brought in England, an affidavit that defendant is indebted to plaintiff "as liquidator (duly appointed by the law of France) of an estate," is defective for not showing that plaintiff, as such liquidator, is, by the law of France, entitled to sue. Tenon v. Mars, 8 B. & C. 638, 3 M. & R. 38, 15 E. C. L. 315. But an affidavit that A is indebted to B for goods sold and delivered in Holland, and that the debt has been assigned to C according to the laws of that country, and that the assignee of a debt may sue the debtor according to the laws of Holland, "as deponent is informed and believes," is sufficient to hold defendant to bail in England. Seuerhop v. Schmanuel, 4 D. & R. 180, 16 E. C. L. 192.

23. Humphries v. Winslow, 6 Taunt. 531, 2 Marsh. 231, 1 E. C. L. 740. But an affidavit for principal and interest on a bill of exchange, drawn and accepted by defendant, and payable to deponent at a day past, is sufficient even though it does not state who is the drawer. Harrison v. Rigby, 6 Dowl. P. C. 93, 1 Jur. 897, M. & H. 362, 3 M. & W. 66.

24. Sheridan v. Hennessey, 23 L. C. Jur. 212; Hurtubise v. Bourret, 23 L. C. Jur. 130, 2 Montreal Leg. N. 54; Caverhill v. Frigon, 9 Quebec Super. Ct. 539; Maguire v. Rockett, 3 Quebec 347.

25. Sheridan v. Hennessey, 23 L. C. Jur. 212; Hurtubise v. Bourret, 23 L. C. Jur. 130, 2 Montreal Leg. N. 54; Debien v. Marsan, 14 L. C. Rep. 89; Hemken v. Slayton, 7 Montreal Super. Ct. 418; Caverhill v. Frigon, 9 Quebec Super. Ct. 539. Contra, Brisson v. McQueen, 7 L. C. Jur. 70; Sheridan v. Pingree, 17 Quebec Super. Ct. 310.

26. Probable existence of ground.— It is not enough that such facts point to the probability of the fraud. Gillett v. Thiebold, 9 Kan. 427. See also Lester v. Blodgett, 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 110.

Grounds stated in alternative.— An affidavit to hold to bail which affirms that defendant "has fraudulently conveyed, or is about fraudulently conveying, his estate," is bad for uncertainty, though either of the grounds, distinctly alleged, would have been sufficient under the statute. Wade v. Judge, 5 Ala. 130. And an affidavit which states the essential elements of a ground of arrest in the disjunctive, instead of in the conjunctive, form, is bad for uncertainty. McMaster v. Robertson, 21 L. C. Jur. 161; Ostell v. Peloquin, 20 L. C. Jur. 48; Talbot v. Donnelly, 11 L. C. Rep. 5; Gannon v. Wright, 5 Montreal Leg. N. 404.

27. Alabama.— Wade v. Judge, 5 Ala. 130.

Georgia.—Where a statute requires a plaintiff who seeks to hold a defendant to bail to swear "to the amount claimed," and that he apprehends its loss "if the defendant be not held to bail," it is sufficient if he swears that "the defendant is indebted to him" in the said sum sworn to, and that "he apprehends the loss of said sum unless the defendant is held to bail." Sugar v. Sackett, 13 Ga. 462.

Illinois.— The affidavit must either show by facts stated that defendant has been guilty of fraud, or must state facts raising a strong presumption that he has been guilty of fraud. It is insufficient to simply show the existence of the debt and to aver that plaintiff is in danger of losing the benefit of whatever demand he may recover unless defendant shall be held to bail. Parker v. Follensbee, 45 Ill. 473; Gorton v. Frizzell, 20 Ill. 291; Stafford v. Low, 20 Ill. 152; Matter of Smith, 16 Ill. 347.

Kansas.— Hauss v. Kohlar, 25 Kan. 640.

Michigan.— An application for arrest to a circuit court commissioner under the Fraudulent Debtors Act must make out facts amounting to a prima facie case of fraud. Matter of Teachout, 15 Mich. 346.

New York.— Brooks v. McLellan, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 247; Thorpe v. Waddingham, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 275. But the affidavit need not state in so many words that the case is one of those mentioned in section 179 of the code, though it must appear from the facts stated that such is the case. Pindar v. Black, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 95, 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 53.

Pennsylvania.— An affidavit for a warrant of arrest in a civil case under the act of July 12, 1842, abolishing imprisonment for debt, must state facts sufficient to bring the case cause.[28] When the application is addressed to the discretion of a judicial officer, it is not necessary that the affidavit should contain a conclusion negativing any vexations or malicious motive on the part of plaintiff.[29]

(2) Absconding or Leaving State or Place of Abode. It has been held that in the affidavit to hold to bail the deponent must make use of either the exact words of the statute, or of words equivalent thereto,[30] when it is sought to arrest defendant on the ground that, with intent to defraud his creditors,[31] the under some proviso of that act (Bates v. Rowley, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 210, 33 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 202; Heffner v. Kantner, 1 Leg. Chron. (Pa.) 162, 4 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 249), and must set out that a suit has been commenced, and sufficiently identify such suit (Heffner v. Kantner, 1 Leg. Chron. (Pa.) 162, 4 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 249).

United States.— Robinson v. Holt, Hempst. (U. S.) 426, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,955.

Canada.— Wingate Chemical Co. v. Smith, Stevens Quebec Dig. 274.

Sufficiency of affidavit.— An affidavit for an arrest is sufficient when it alleges the specific fraudulent representations under which the liability was incurred, makes a general allegation as to the fraudulent disposition of the debtor's property, and states that the debtor has made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, with preferences. Achelis v. Kalman, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 491. But an order of arrest cannot be maintained in an action on contract, upon allegations that defendant is about to remove from the state with intent to defraud his creditors, and that he fraudulently withholds and conceals his property with a like intent. Toole v. De Goicouria, 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 127.

28. Sutton v. Hays, 17 Ark. 462.

29. McLachlan v. Wiseman, 5 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 333; Lee v. McClure, 3 U. C. Q. B. 39; Weldon v. O'Sullivan, 19 N. Brunsw. 441 [approving Mullin v. Frost, 18 N. Brunsw. 463]. Compare Star Kidney Pad Co. v. McCarthy, 23 N. Brunsw. 83, wherein it was held that, in an action by an incorporated company, an affidavit negativing the purpose of vexing or harassing defendant, made by plaintiff's attorney, was insufficient, and that such an affidavit should have been made by plaintiff's agent.

30. State Bank v. Hervey, 21 Me. 38; Choate v. Stevens, Taylor (U. C.) 449 (holding that an affidavit "that the plaintiff had reason to believe," instead of is apprehensive "that the defendant was about to depart this province, without paying," etc., is insufficient).

31. Necessity of allegation of intent to defraud.— Under Mass. Stat. (1857), c. 141, § 17, no person can be arrested on mesne process for intent to leave the state if the affidavit of the creditor, "that he believes that the defendant has property not exempt from being taken on execution," omits to add: "which he does not intend to apply to the payment of the plaintiff's claim," or to state, not only that the creditor believes, but that he "has reason to believe the defendant has property." Stone v. Carter, 13 Gray (Mass.) 575.

An affidavit that defendant is "about to leave the State" is insufficient as a basis for a warrant of arrest. It ought to add: "with an intent to defraud his creditors as the affiant believes," and then set forth the grounds of such belief, so as to show some probable cause. Wilson v. Barnhill, 64 N. C. 121.

An affidavit that a debtor is "about to remove out of the state to defraud his creditors" is not equivalent to an affidavit that he is about to remove his person out of the state "with intent thereby to defraud his creditors," required by statute to authorize the issuance of a capias ad respondendum. State v. Robinson, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 483, 10 West. L. J. 159.

In an affidavit to hold to bail on the ground that defendant is about to leave the province the omission of the words "with intent to defraud his creditors generally and the plaintiff in particular" is fatal. Ford v. Léger, 21 L. C. Jur. 191; Lamarche v. Lebrocq, 1 L. C. Rep. 215, 2 R. J. R. Q. 465. But the words "intent to defeat," instead of "intent to defraud," as prescribed by statute, have been held sufficient. Laing v. Slingerland, 12 Ont. Pr. 366.

Must show facts.— It is not sufficient for a creditor, applying for an order of arrest under Ont. Rev. Stat. c. 80, § 1, to show the existence of a debt and that the debtor is about to quit Ontario, but he must show some other fact or circumstance which, coupled with these facts, points to an intent to defraud. Whether or not there is good and probable cause for believing that the intent to defraud exists is a question of fact. Phair v. Phair, 19 Ont. Pr. 67 [following Shaw v. McKenzie, 6 Can. Supreme Ct. 181; Toothe v. Frederick, 14 Ont. Pr. 287].

Sufficient showing of intent.— An affidavit contains sufficient grounds for belief of defendant's departure, with fraudulent intent, if it avers that defendant refuses to pay the sum sworn to be due, that the vessel of which he is master is immediately about to sail to Europe, and that defendant is to sail therein. Lefebvre v. Tullock, 5 L. C. Rep. 42, 4 R. J. R. Q. 287. But an affidavit which simply alleges that defendant, who resided in the United States, was on the point of immediately leaving the province to go to the United States, was held to disclose no intention of fraud. Larocque v. Clarke, 4 L. C. Rep. 402, Montreal Cond. Rep. 83, 4 R. J. R. Q. 212. See also Canada Paper Co. v. Bannatyne, 23 L. C. Jur. 261; Hurtubise v. Bourret, 23 L. C. Jur. 130, 2 Montreal Leg. N. 54.

Presumption as to intent.— Where a cred-latter intends or is about[32] either to leave,[33] remove from,[34] depart from,[35] or itor by affidavit satisfies the judge that there is good and probable cause for believing that his debtor is about to quit the province unless he is forthwith apprehended, the inference is raised that he is about to do so with intent to defraud. Coffey v. Scane, 22 Ont. App. 269 [affirming 25 Ont. 22].

Allegation of removal of property not essential.— An affidavit for an order of arrest under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 479, authorizing the arrest of a person about to leave the state with intent to defraud his creditors, need not, in order show that defendant's departure is with such purpose, allege that he is about to remove any of his assets or property. Ex p. Bernard, (Cal. 1886) 12 Pac. 487.

32. "Intends" not equivalent of "about." — An affidavit that defendant "intends" to abscond is not a compliance with the requirement that there should be an affidavit that defendant is "about" to abscond. Guilleaume v. Miller, 14 Rich. (S. C.) 118.

Must show present intention.— A capias cannot be issued, in an action on contract, upon an affidavit of defendant's intention to abscond, such affidavit having been filed sixty days previously (Pike v. McMullin, 66 Vt. 121, 28 Atl. 876. See also Bowers v. Flower, 3 Ont. Pr. 62); but it is essential that the affidavit should allege that the debtor's departure will be immediate (Wilson v. Ray, 4 L. C. Rep. 159, 4 R. J. R. Q. 127; Hawkes v. Caffrey, 2 Montreal Leg. N. 159; Lambe v. Read, 14 Rev. Lég. 344).

33. Statement of defendant.— An allegation that defendant himself stated that he was leaving for California has been held to be sufficient to justify the issuance of a capias. Benjamin v. Wilson, 1 L. C. Rep. 351, 3 R. J. R. Q. 34. But see Campbell v. McCormick, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 251, holding that where plaintiff, in his affidavit to hold to bail, stated that he believed, from a conversation with defendant, that the latter intended to leave the country, it was insufficient because of its failure to state what the conversation was, or what defendant said as to his leaving the country.

"Unless he be arrested."— When plaintiff is required to swear that defendant is about to leave the province unless he be arrested, an affidavit which omits the words "unless he be arrested" is insufficient. Spain v. Manning, 28 Nova Scotia 437.

Intention to leave "Province of Canada."— An affidavit was insufficient which alleged that defendant was about to depart from the "Province of Quebec," where, by statute, it should be from the "Province of Canada." Doyer v. Walsh, 3 Montreal Leg. N. 304; Maury v. Durand, 1 Montreal Super. Ct. 347. But see Swift v. Jones, 6 U. C. L. J. 63 (holding that an affidavit showing facts satisfying the judge that defendant, unless apprehended, is forthwith about to leave, is sufficient even though it is only sworn that defendant is about to leave Upper Canada); Senécal v. Hart, 1 Montreal Super. Ct. 371 (holding that there is no uncertainty in the allegation in an affidavit for a capias "that the defendant is about to leave immediately the province of Canada, comprising the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, with the intention of defrauding his creditors in general, and the plaintiff in particular"). Since the confederation, an affidavit alleging that defendant is immediately about to leave the "Province of Canada" is incorrect. Lefebvre v. Delorimier, 19 L. C. Jur. 102. But see Moisic Iron Co. v. Olsen, 18 L. C. Jur. 29 (holding that an affidavit is not bad because it states that the debtor is about to leave the "Dominion of Canada," when it can be gathered from the other allegations of the affidavit that the departure is really from a point within the limits of the former province of Canada); Milligan v. Mason, 17 L. C. Jur. 159 (holding that, in an affidavit made since the confederation, the allegation that defendant is about to leave the "Province of Canada" will be held to mean that part of the Dominion formerly called the province of Canada).

34. Insufficient allegation of belief.— An affidavit in an action of tort, made in behalf of plaintiff therein, that deponent believes, and has reason to believe, that defendant "intends to leave the state, so that execution, if obtained, cannot be served upon him," is insufficient to authorize an arrest under a statute permitting arrest upon oath that the deponent "has reason to believe that the defendant is likely to remove beyond the jurisdiction of the court." Wood v. Melius, 8 Allen (Mass.) 434. Compare Florance v. Camp, 5 La. 280, holding that an affidavit stating plaintiff's belief that defendant is about to "leave the state," instead of "remove from the state," is sufficient.

Must show that removal will defeat remedy.— An affidavit to hold one of several defendants to bail must show that the removal of the person or property of defendant sought to be held to bail will defeat the remedy after judgment. Briddle v. Vest, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 173.

Grounds of belief — Necessity of showing. — Where an arrest is sought on the ground that plaintiff believes that defendant "is about to remove from the state" the affidavit must allege the facts upon which the belief is founded, in order that the court may judge of its reasonableness. Toutain v. His Creditors, 14 La. 336; Wood v. Harrell, 74 N. C. 338. See also Desha v. Solomons, 12 La. 272.

35. The affidavit must state that the debtor is about "to establish his residence beyond the limits of this state" and "that the demand in the writ is, or the principal part thereof, due" plaintiff, in those words or their equivalent, or an arrest under the writ would be illegal. State Bank v. Hervey, 21 Me. 38. It must also set forth with certainty that the debtor is possessed of property or means exceeding the amount required for his own immediate support, and that he is about to depart and take with him that property or abscond from[36] either the state or from his usual place of abode within the state.[37]

(3) Cessation of Payments by Trader. When an arrest is sought on the ground that defendant, a trader, is notoriously insolvent, the affidavit should disclose facts showing that defendant is a trader;[38] that he is insolvent;[39] that he has ceased his payments;[40] and that he has refused to make an assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors.[41]

(4) Fraudulent Acts in Fiduciary Capacity. It has been held that when plaintiff seeks to arrest defendant on the ground that the latter has misapplied, converted, or failed to account for money or property which he has received for or from plaintiff in a fiduciary capacity, the affidavit must state facts showing defendant's receipt of the money or property in such fiduciary capacity, and his fraudulent misapplication or conversion of the same.[42] Where, however, such means, and reside beyond the limits of the state. Proctor v. Lothrop, 68 Me. 256; Sargent v. Roberts, 52 Me. 590; Shaw v. Usher, 41 Me. 102; Furbish v. Roberts, 39 Me. 104; Sawtelle v. Jewell, 34 Me. 543; Bramhall v. Seavey, 28 Me. 45; Whiting v. Trafton, 16 Me. 398.

An arrest of a debtor on mesne process, made under a creditor's sworn certificate that he was "about to depart and reside beyond the limits of this State with property or means of ——— own" (omitting the word "his"), was held to be illegal, as the statute was not thereby strictly complied with. Bailey v. Carville, 62 Me. 524.

Plaintiff's loss of remedy.— An affidavit for a capias which deposes that the departure of defendant "may" deprive plaintiff of his recourse, instead of "will" deprive him, is defective. Ford v. Léger, 21 L. C. Jur. 191; Stevenson v. Robertson, 21 L. C. Jur. 102; Boyd v. Freer, 15 L. C. Jur. 109. Compare Piché v. Bernier, 10 Quebec 351, holding that the statement that the departure of defendant will cause plaintiff to lose his debt and to suffer damages is equivalent to the allegation that it will make him lose his recourse, and is therefore sufficient.

36. "Leave" not equivalent of "abscond." — An affidavit for an arrest which states that defendant is about "to leave" does not charge that defendant is an absconding debtor. Norman v. Zieber, 3 Oreg. 197; Aiken v. Richardson, 15 Vt. 500. Contra, Norman v. Manciette, 1 Sawy. (U. S.) 484, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,300, holding that an affidavit for arrest alleging that a debtor is about "to leave" the state, with intent to delay, hinder, and defraud his creditors, is sufficient under the Oregon statute authorizing arrests in cases of absconding debtors. And see McLeran v. Shearer, 33 Vt. 230, holding that, under Vt. Laws (1852), No. 3, p. 4, concerning the arrest of persons in actions on contract, which repealed the Vermont act of 1851 on the same subject, the affidavit necessary in order to warrant the arrest of a citizen of another state need only aver that he is about to "leave" the state, and not that he is about to "abscond" or "remove," as is required by the act of 1851.

"Remove" not equivalent of "abscond."— An affidavit that defendants intend "to remove" from the limits of the state is insufficient to authorize their arrest on the ground that they are about to abscond. Barry v. Iseman, 14 Rich. (S. C.) 129, 91 Am. Dec. 262.

Reason for belief.— An affidavit for a capias setting forth that affiant has reason to believe, and does believe, that defendant is about to abscond or remove from the state, is sufficient, without an averment that the reason for such belief is a good one. Phillips v. Wood, 31 Vt. 322. See also Scane v. Coffey, 15 Ont. Pr. 112.

37. "Place of abode" insufficient.— Under Del. Laws, vol. 15, c. 180, authorizing the issuance of a writ of capias ad respondendum in a civil action, upon plaintiff's affidavit that defendant has absconded or is about to abscond "from the place of his usual abode," an affidavit that he is about to abscond "from his place of abode" is insufficient. Thomas v. Colvin, 1 Marv. (Del.) 106, 27 Atl. 829.

38. Parent v. Trudel, 13 Quebec 136.

41. Hamel v. Coté, 11 L. C. Rep. 446; Parent v. Trudel, 13 Quebec 136.

42. Necessity of showing fraud.— An affidavit for the arrest of an administrator who has been charged with assets to a certain amount is insufficient if it does not show fraud in the misapplication of the funds by the administrator. Melvin v. Melvin, 72 N. C. 384.

Necessity of showing that money is due.— An affidavit stating that plaintiff gave to defendant, who was a broker, certain sums as margin in the sale of oil; that defendant was requested to close the transaction, and promised to do so, and to settle his accounts and return such margin, but failed to do so, and converted the same, does not show that anything is due plaintiff, and, hence, will not sustain an order of arrest. Martin v. Gross, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 512, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 337, 22 N. Y. St. 439, 16 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 439.

An affidavit was held sufficient which alleged that plaintiff forwarded a note to de-facts are stated, it is not vitally necessary for the deponent to describe defendant's offense in apt words.[43]

(5) Fraudulent Concealment or Disposition of Goods. An affidavit to hold to bail on the ground that defendant has concealed, secreted,[44] removed, or disposed of, his property, or is about to do so, with intent to defraud his creditors, must state facts tending to establish the existence of the alleged intent,[45] and must specifically describe the property in question.[46]

(6) Fraudulent Incurring of Obligation or Contracting of Liability. In order to hold defendant to bail for fraudulently incurring the obligation[47] or contracting the liability which is the basis of the action,[48] the affidavit must state facts[49] showing that defendant,[50] with intent to defraud plaintiff,[51] knowingly[52] made false and fraudulent representations,[53] whereby he induced or procured plainfendant for collection, and that the latter collected part thereof, which he converted to his own use, and that, without authority, he accepted a note, which he refused to surrender to plaintiff, since it showed an unlawful conversion of plaintiff's property (Clark v. Kent Cir. Judge, 125 Mich. 449, 84 N. W. 629), as was one alleging that defendant was the agent of plaintiff, and that, as such, he collected money which he "fraudulently and unlawfully converted to his own use, with intent to defraud and cheat the plaintiff" (Powers v. Davenport, 101 N. C. 286, 7 S. E. 747).

43. Republic of Mexico v. De Arangoiz, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 634.

44. Secretion of property.— An affidavit for a capias which merely alleges that defendant has secreted his property is insufficient. It is necessary to allege that he has secreted, is secreting, and is about to secrete his property (Trudeau v. Renaud, 17 Rev. Lég. 647, 34 L. C. Jur. 102), which must be his property and effects generally, and not merely his "movable property or effects" (Hurtubise v. Leriche, 13 L. C. Jur. 83), and to allege facts showing the time, place, and circumstances of the act or acts of secretion referred to (Weinrobe v. Solomon, 7 Montreal Leg. N. 109; Archer v. Douglass, 10 Quebec Super. Ct. 42), and showing that the secretion has taken place since the creation of the indebtedness (McAllen v. Ashby, 4 Montreal Leg. N. 50. Compare Trenholme v. Hart, 16 Rev. Lég. 318, holding that the affidavit need not state the time when the secretion took place); but it is not necessary to allege "that the plaintiff will be deprived of his recourse against the defendant unless he has a capias against him" (Trenholme v. Hart, 16 Rev. Lég. 318).

Obs. 57. Compare Hughes v. Person, 63 N. C. 548 (holding that when an affidavit is based upon affiant's apprehension of some future fraudulent act by defendant, it must specify the grounds of the apprehension; but that, where the affidavit relies upon an act already done, it need state it only in general terms, it being unnecessary to specify how it was done, although it would be prudent to do so when the facts are known); Hockspringer v. Ballenburg, 16 Ohio 304 (holding that, under the statute authorizing the debtor's arrest on affidavit of a creditor "that the debtor is about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors," an affidavit in the words of the statute is sufficient); Berger v. Smull, 39 Pa. St. 302 (holding that an affidavit, disclosing the nature and amount of the debt and charging that defendant has property which he fraudulently conceals and unjustly refuses to apply to the payment of his indebtedness, and that he has removed and disposed of large amounts of property to defraud his creditors, is sufficient to authorize the issuance of a warrant of arrest).

46. Moller v. Aznar, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 233.

47. Alleging that defendant fraudulently incurred the obligation is broader than that he fraudulently contracted the debt. It includes an action in the nature of damages, and, though the latter words are left out of the order, plaintiff may sue in a pure action for damages. In re Sternberger, 10 N. J. L. J. 48.

48. Action must be on the fraud.— An order of arrest cannot be granted, in an action of contract founded upon a fraud, when the affidavit contains no allegation that plaintiff rescinds the contract and proceeds upon the fraud alone, and it does not appear what the allegations of the complaint are. tiff[54] to part with something of value[55] or to surrender some right.[56] It must also enumerate the particular representations so made and must point out the respect in which they were false, a general allegation of falsity being insufficient.[57]

(IV) Entitling in Court or Cause. It is no objection to an affidavit to hold to bail that it is not entitled in the court wherein it is filed;[58] nor is it necessary that it should be entitled as of a cause.[59]

(V) Defects — (A) In General — (1) Amendments. The court may, in its discretion, permit plaintiff to amend the affidavit to hold to bail,[60] unless the defect is jurisdictional.[61]

(2) Aider by Other Affidavits. It has been held that where the affidavit is defective plaintiff will not be permitted to supply deficiencies or cure defects in such original affidavit to hold to bail either by the filing of a supplemental affidavit[62]

54. Smith v. Jones, 4 Rob. (N. Y.) 655; Phelps v. Maxwell, 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 459.

Time as essential element.— An affidavit for arrest must contain facts from which the commissioner may legally infer fraudulent conduct of defendant at the time of contracting whereby plaintiff was deceived. Vankirk v. Staats, 24 N. J. L. 121.

55. For sufficient showing in this respect see Parker v. Follensbee, 45 Ill. 473; McLeod v. Wayne Cir. Judge, 125 Mich. 344, 84 N. W. 281; Hatch v. Saunders, 66 Mich. 181, 33 N. And see Swift v. Jones, 6 U. C. L. J. 63, holding that, where the order for bailable process was made upon two affidavits, one entitled in the queen's bench and the other not in any court, and a process afterward issued from the common pleas, the arrest should be set aside.

Not entitled at all.— It has been held that the affidavit may be entitled in a court or cause, or one of them, or may be altogether without a title. Damer v. Busby, 5 Ont. Pr. 356. But see Molling v. Poland, 3 M. & S. 157, wherein it was held that an affidavit not entitled in any court, and only with the words "by the court" written at the bottom of the jurat, was insufficient.

Affidavit sworn before commissioner.— An affidavit to hold to bail, sworn before a commissioner, need not be entitled in any court. Urquhart v. Dick, 2 Dowl. P. C. 17; Kennet, etc., Canal Co. v. Jones, 7 T. R. 451; Ellerby v. Walton, 2 Ont. Pr. 147. See also Bland v. Drake, 1 Chit. 165, 18 E. C. L. 100; Ferguson v. Mahon, W. W. & D. 605, which hold that an affidavit not entitled in the court, but purporting on its face to have been sworn before one of its officers, is sufficient.

59. For the reason that no cause is really pending when the affidavit is made, the affidavit being the basis upon which the action is commenced. Hatch v. Saunders, 66 Mich. 181, 33 N. W. 178. Compare Pindar v. Black, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 95, 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 53, which holds that, while an affidavit for arrest should not be entitled in a cause, the fact that it is so entitled is not fatal, because it does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party. In England, however, the rule formerly was that an affidavit entitled in a cause was bad. Green v. Redshaw, 1 B. & P. 227; Hollis v. Brandon, 1 B. & P. 36. See also Clarke v. Cawthorne, 7 T. Dig. 192, holding that, where an arrest was made under the statute allowing an arrest under an alias writ on a testatum writ issued to a different district, the affidavit was rightly entitled in the cause.

Amendment after service of writ.— Where the officer before whom an affidavit for a capias before judgment is sworn omits to sign the jurat, the court will not grant leave to affix the signature after the issuance and service of the writ. Dubois v. Persillier, 6 Montreal Super. Ct. 269.

61. Harris v. Durkee, 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 202, 5 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 376; Farrow v. Dutcher, 19 R. I. 715, 36 Atl. 839.

Aider by complaint.— Where the summons and complaint were served, and were before the judge upon an application for an order of arrest, based upon affidavit, it was held that plaintiff was entitled to refer to the complaint, if verified, in support of the order, or by referring to another affidavit filed in another cause against the same defendant.[63]

(3) Waiver by Defendant. By voluntarily putting in special bail or pleading to the merits, or doing any other act which adopts the process under which he was arrested, defendant waives all objections to the sufficiency and form of the affidavit to hold to bail,[64] unless it is so defective as to be absolutely void.[65]

(B) Material Erasures and Interlineations. A defendant cannot be held to special bail on an affidavit which contains material erasures and interlineations.[66]

where the affidavit proved defective. Turner v. Thompson, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 444; Brady v. Bissell, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 76.

In the English court of common pleas the practice was to allow a supplemental affidavit for the purpose of explaining ambiguities in the original affidavit, but for no other purpose. Green v. Redshaw, 1 B. & P. 227. But see Garnham v. Hammond, 2 B. & P. 298, wherein plaintiff, an executor, whose original affidavit stated the debt to be due "as appears by the testator's books," without adding "and which the deponent believes to be true," was allowed to swear to his belief in a supplemental affidavit.

Pr. 95; Palmer v. Rodgers, 6 U. C. L. J. 188. Compare Read v. McLellan, 6 N. Brunsw. 3, holding that, by pleading to the action after the intervention of a term, defendant waives an irregularity consisting of plaintiff's omission to file an affidavit to hold to bail within the required time; but that he does not waive such irregularity by entering special bail, for the reason that he cannot object to the want of the affidavit until after entry of bail.

In New York, under the present practice, a defendant is not precluded by giving special bail from questioning the sufficiency of the original affidavit to sustain the order of arrest. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Ecclesine, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. 76, 6 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 9, 42 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 201. Under the earlier practice, however, a defendant, who put in special bail without objection, could not, in the absence of fraud, subsequently object that the affidavit upon which the order of arrest was founded was insufficient. Stewart v. Howard, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 26.

Delay.— Two months' delay in making an objection to an affidavit that it is not sworn before a proper commissioner is not a waiver of it. Sharp v. Johnson, 2 Bing. N. Cas. 246, 4 Dowl. P. C. 324, 1 Hodges 298, 2 Scott 407, 29 E. C. L. 522.

An undertaking to "cause special bail in this action to be put in for the defendant in due course of law" is not a waiver of any objection to the affidavit. Glass v. Baby, 1 Ont. Pr. 274.

By demanding a declaration or applying for particulars defendant does not waive a defect in the affidavit to hold to bail. Hodgson v. Dowell, 3 M. & W. 284.

Pleading after denial of motion.—By pleading to the merits, defendant does not waive the defects in an affidavit for his arrest if he has already moved to quash the proceedings and the motion has been denied. Warren v. Crane, 50 Mich. 300, 15 N. W. 465.

An action for malicious arrest is not a waiver of objections to the affidavit upon which the arrest was made. Pawson v. Hall, 1 Ont. Pr. 294.

In such case objection may be made even after trial, judgment and execution, the affidavit being jurisdictional in its character. Hauss v. Kohlar, 25 Kan. 640.

Improper joinder of defendants.— Where several persons have separately incurred penalties for printing illegal schemes of a lottery, and an action is brought against them, under the statute, for the recovery of such penalties, a separate affidavit to hold to bail must be made and filed against each of them, and, if they are all joined in one affidavit, the irregularity is not waived by their putting in bail. Goodwin v. Parry, 4 T. R. 577.

Omission of venue.— An affidavit which has no venue is a nullity, and the court has no jurisdiction to grant an order of arrest upon it. Such an affidavit is, therefore, not amendable. Saril v. Payne, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 897, 24 N. Y. St. 486 [overruling 1 N. Y. Suppl. 15].

g. Filing. While it is the better practice to file[67] the affidavit before the issuance of the process for arrest, it seems that it is not imperative that this should be done unless the statute authorizing the remedy so directs.[68]

2. Complaint or Petition — a. Allegations as to Ground of Arrest. In some jurisdictions the complaint or petition must contain allegations showing plaintiff's right to arrest defendant, when the ground of arrest and the cause of action are identical;[69] but this is not necessary where the right to arrest is independent of the cause of action.[70] When the complaint must set out the ground upon which Immaterial erasures and interlineations.— The rule is otherwise where the erasures and interlineations are not material (Sedgebeer v. Moore, Brightly (Pa.) 197), even though they are not noted in the jurat (Gesser v. Braunfeld, 13 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 209).

67. What constitutes filing.— Under the Vermont statute requiring that the affidavit for the issuance of a capias be filed with the magistrate, it is sufficient if it is left with the magistrate or lodged in his office (Phillips v. Wood, 31 Vt. 322); but it is not a sufficient filing to slip the affidavit under the door of the magistrate's office when no one is in the office (Whitcomb v. Cook, 39 Vt. 585).

68. Wert v. Strouse, 38 N. J. L. 184.

In Alabama it is not important at what time it is filed, provided it is filed before the order for bail. Magee v. Erwin, 5 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 54.

In New Jersey the affidavit must be filed before the issuance of the writ in an action of contract, but need not be so filed in an action of tort. Wert v. Strouse, 38 N. J. L. 184. Compare Stowe v. Hassler, 7 N. J. L. J. 204. Under the earlier New Jersey practice the statute required that in all cases the affidavit should be filed before the issuance of the process. In Vermont the statute requires that the affidavit should be filed before the issuance of the process. Muzzy v. Howard, 42 Vt. 23; Whitcomb v. Cook, 39 Vt. 585; Parkhurst v. Pearsons, 30 Vt. 705.

In New Brunswick the affidavit should be filed within the time limited for entering the cause, and, unless it is so filed, defendant is entitled to be discharged on common bail unless plaintiff's neglect is most satisfactorily accounted for. Compare Read v. McLellan, 6 N. Brunsw. 3, holding that, in general, it is sufficient if the affidavit is filed within thirty days after the term at which the writ is returnable.

69. Harland v. Howard, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 113, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 449, 32 N. Y. St. 869, 871, 872 (money received in a fiduciary capacity); Hecht v. Levy, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 53; Rowe v. Patterson, 48 N. Proc. 77, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 275; Howard v. Howard, 9 Quebec 172 (secretion of property).

Replevin.— An order of arrest in replevin will be set aside where the complaint does not allege that the chattel or a part thereof has been concealed so that it cannot be found or taken by the sheriff, and with intent that it shall not be found or taken as provided by N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549, such allegations being jurisdictional. Michaelis v. Towne, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 721.

Aider of defects by affidavit.— If the complaint is defective in setting up a cause of action, its infirmities cannot be aided by the allegations of the affidavit (Saratoga Gas, etc., Co. v. Hazard, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 251, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 844, 27 N. Y. St. 588 [affirmed in 121 N. Y. 677, 24 N. E. 1095, 30 N. Y. St. 1016]); but even though fraud is not sufficiently set forth in the complaint to justify an arrest, an order of arrest will be granted where the evidence offered by the affidavits in support of the motion for the order tends to show extrinsic facts amounting to a fraud (Fitch v. McMahon, 103 N. Y. 690, 9 N. E. 497).

Demanding bail.— Bail need not be demanded in the petition. Eshom v. Lamb, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 219 (holding that bail may be demanded in a supplemental petition); Labarre v. Durnford, 10 Mart. (La.) 180.

Need not be proved if alleged.— In cases where the right to arrest depends upon facts extrinsic to the cause of action, such facts need not be alleged in the complaint, and if alleged are immaterial to the cause of action, and need not be proved upon the trial. Segelken v. Meyer, 94 N. Y. 473.

the arrest is sought it is essential that it should allege facts tending to prove the existence of such ground,[71] and showing plaintiff's right to maintain the action.[72] On the other hand, where sufficient facts are set out it is not essential that the complaint should specifically describe, in apt words, the statutory ground relied upon.[73]

b. Allegations as to Damages. When an arrest is sought in an action of replevin, on the ground that defendant has concealed the property to recover which the action is brought, it is necessary that the complaint should allege the value of such property.[74] But, where the ground alleged for defendant's arrest is that he was guilty of a fraud in incurring the liability, it is not necessary that the complaint should seek or allege damages by reason of the fraud.[75]

c. Variance Between Affidavit and Complaint. A material variance between the allegations of the affidavit to hold to bail and those of the complaint is fatal to plaintiff's right to arrest.[76]

Proc. § 549, holding that, in order to justify an order of arrest, based on defendant's fraudulent disposition of property, the complaint need not set forth the particular fraudulent acts, as the alleged fraud is an extrinsic fact which arose subsequently to the cause of action.

For sufficient showing of grounds see Barry v. Calder, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 449, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 586, 16 N. Y. St. 295, 15 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 14 [affirmed in 111 N. Y. 684, 19 N. E. 285, 19 N. Y. St. 931]; Elligood v. De Festetics, 8 N. Y. St. 851.

72. Thus, where a complaint in an action for conversion alleged that plaintiff deposited with defendant for safekeeping certain mining stock, and that defendant accepted the custody of said stock and agreed to keep it for plaintiff, subject to his orders and instructions, it was held that an order of arrest granted in the case should be vacated, as the complaint did not allege that plaintiff owned the stock. Description of offense held insufficient.— In an action to recover possession of personal property wrongfully detained by defendant, or its value, with damages for its detention, where the complaint does not contain the allegation required by N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549, to authorize an order of arrest in such an action, that the property "has been concealed, removed, or disposed of, so that it cannot be found or taken by the sheriff," etc., an order of arrest cannot be sustained under the provision of the same section that defendant may be arrested in an action "to recover damages for . . . an injury to property, including the wrongful taking, detention or conversion of personal property." Hough v. Folmsbee, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 148, 150, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 221, 36 N. Y. St. 708, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 111 [reversing 12 N. Y. Suppl. 309], and, in an action for replevin of goods alleged to have been bought by defendant from plaintiff under false representations as to his business, the allegation of the complaint that defendant "wrongfully took" the goods for which the action is brought does not, necessarily, imply a fraudulent taking so as to set forth such an extrinsic fact as is required to give plaintiff the right to have defendant arrested under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 550, subd. 1, specifying the fraud for which defendant may be subjected to arrest in civil actions. Fitch v. McMahon, 103 N. Y. 690, 9 N. E. 497.

d. Amendment. It seems that the court will permit the amendment of the complaint when, after the filing thereof, an arrest is sought on a ground which should be alleged in the complaint,[77] or when the complaint states conclusions instead of facts.[78] Where allegations of fraud are inserted in a complaint for the purpose of having defendant arrested, but no arrest is procured, the allegations will be stricken out on motion.[79]

3. UNDERTAKING — a. Necessity and Purpose. It is a rule of almost universal application that plaintiff is not entitled to have defendant in a civil action arrested until he has executed a bond or undertaking,[80] with good and sufficient sureties,[81] close a ground of arrest which is consistent with the allegations of the complaint); Union Bank v. Mott, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 315 (holding that the fact that, subsequent to the granting of an order of arrest, the form of the summons in an action of arrest was amended, changing it from a summons for a money demand to a summons for specific relief, neither impaired the effect of the order, nor afforded a ground for vacating it, as the order of arrest was procured upon affidavits showing the existence of a cause of action, and not upon the pleadings).

Variance held immaterial.—Where the complaint alleged that defendant, while acting as attorney for plaintiff's testator, received money for investment; that defendant did not make the investment, or pay the money to testator, or to any one for his benefit, and that plaintiff had demanded payment, which defendant refused, to plaintiff's damage, and an order of arrest in the action recited the ground therefor as for a conversion of money embezzled or fraudulently misapplied by defendant while attorney for plaintiff's testator, it was held that there was no variance, since the cause of action as stated led only to the conclusion that defendant was an embezzler. Quail v. Nelson, 39 N. Y. App. Div. 18, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 865. So, when an affidavit for arrest declares the cause of action to be a certain promissory note, it is no variance therefrom for the complaint to contain a second count on another note (Woodfolk v. Leslie, 2 Nott & M. (S. C.) 585), and, where the affidavit stated that defendant was indebted to plaintiff as indorser of a bill of exchange and the declaration was on a foreign bill, it was held that there was no variance (Phillips v. Don, 6 Dowl. & L. 527, 13 Jur. 445, 18 L. J. Q. B. 104).

77. Davis v. Robinson, 10 Cal. 411; Lennon v. Brandt, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 2, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 257. Compare Humphrey v. Hayes, 94 N. Y. 594, holding that the New York act of 1879, which amended N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549, by authorizing an arrest in an action where fraud was alleged in the complaint, and providing that, where such an allegation was made, it must be proved, did not apply to actions previously commenced, and that, therefore, where, after the commencement of an action, defendant was arrested upon affidavits charging fraud, it is neither necessary to amend the complaint by inserting allegations of fraud, nor to prove the fraud on the trial.

78. McBride v. Langan, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 554, 18 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 201; Hanson v. Langan, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 625, 30 N. Y. St. 828 [affirmed in 16 N. Y. Suppl. 383, 38 N. Y. Action in forma pauperis.— The express provision of N. C. Code Civ. Proc. § 152, relating to arrests, that "before making the order the judge should require" an undertaking with sureties, excludes any implication that a plaintiff who is allowed to sue in forma pauperis can have an order of arrest without giving the undertaking required from ordinary suitors. Rowark v. Homesley, 68 N. C. 91.

In action brought by United States.— In an action brought by a private person to recover a penalty or damages for making a false claim against the United States, under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), §§ 3490–3493, the United States is the plaintiff and defendant may be arrested and held to bail without an undertaking or covenant by plaintiff, as provided by a state code. U. S. v. Griswold, 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 25, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,266.

Undertaking executed after arrest.— When the undertaking required by statute is not given until after the arrest, but is executed by the sureties with full knowledge of the attendant facts and circumstances, and without objection as to the time of its execution, they will not, afterward, be heard to complain. Vanderberg v. Connoly, 18 Utah 112, 54 Pac. 1097.

81. A plaintiff cannot become surety on his own undertaking for an order of arrest. Perry v. Smith, 9 N. Y. St. 728.

Failure of surety to swear to ownership of property.— Where the surety neglects to swear that, exclusive of the property exempt from levy and sale under execution, he is worth the amount specified in the affidavit, such affidavit is defective and the order of arrest will be set aside. Thompson v. Friedberg, 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 519.

In New York, under the former practice, it was within the discretion of the judge to require surety (Courter v. McNamara, 9 in the form[82] and amount[83] prescribed by law, conditioned for the payment of costs[84] and the damages which defendant may sustain by reason of the arrest.[85]

How. Pr. (N. Y.) 255), and, in the exercise of this discretion, he had the right, if he saw fit, to require only one surety (Sieff v. Shausenburgh, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 477 note; Courter v. McNamara, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 255), and the undertaking was not insufficient if signed by the sureties only, and not by plaintiff (Askins v. Hearns, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 184 [disapproving Richardson v. Craig, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 666]; Bellinger v. Gardner, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 441, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 381); and the judge's exercise of discretion on this point could not be called in question on a motion to discharge the order of arrest (Bellinger v. Gardner, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 441, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 381). Under the present practice the execution of an undertaking is a condition precedent to the granting of an order of arrest, except where the action is brought for a cause specified in N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549, subs. 3; and there must be two sureties (N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 559); but where an undertaking is duly signed by two sureties it is not invalidated by the fact that plaintiff himself also signed it (O'Shea v. Kohn, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 114).

82. What is sufficient bond.—Where, on an application for defendant's arrest on the ground of non-residence, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 551, plaintiff gives bond, which is accepted and approved by the presiding judge, such bond complies with section 560, requiring it to be in such form and amount as the court shall prescribe. Ensign v. Nelson, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 215, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 685, 17 N. Y. St. 66, 14 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 438, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 321 [affirmed in 112 N. Y. 674, 20 N. E. 416, 20 N. Y. St. 982].

83. N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 559, provides that such undertaking "shall be in a sum at least equal to one-tenth of the amount of bail required by the order" (Bauer v. Schevitch, 11 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 433), and an order of arrest is void for want of jurisdiction in the judge to grant it where he failed to require an undertaking from the plaintiff in the amount required, though the error is waived by defendant and cured by the court where, after the arrest, defendant obtains an order to show cause, in which he claims relief in the alternative either that the order of arrest should be vacated and set aside for irregularity, and on the merits, or that the amount of bail required in the order be reduced, upon which application the bail is reduced to an amount bringing plaintiff's undertaking within the requirements of the code (Godfrey v. Pell, 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 206, 4 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 448).

84. The costs intended to be secured by the undertaking are not the costs of the original action, for which defendant may recover judgment if successful, but only such costs, up to the specified amount, awarded to defendant, as accrue from the arrest, or in proceedings necessitated thereby. Sutorius v. North, 1 Misc. (N. Y.) 298, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 726, 48 N. Y. St. 694 [affirming 13 N. Y. Suppl. 557, 36 N. Y. St. 873, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 162]. See also Sperry v. Hellman, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 899, 37 N. Y. St. 258, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 218, holding that the undertaking is intended to secure indemnity to an arrested defendant only to the extent to which he may have been inconvenienced and may have suffered expenses over defendants not arrested, and that where two defendants, one only of whom was arrested, have recovered a joint judgment for costs in the original action, the arrested defendant cannot recover such costs in an action on the undertaking.

Costs on new trial.— The undertaking includes costs incurred on an application for a new trial as well as those incurred in the trial itself. Hence, in an action for the penalty, where plaintiffs in the original suit had paid the costs of the application for a new trial as well as those of the trial, their sureties were properly allowed credit therefor upon the amount of the penalty of the bond. Furber v. McCarthy, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 794, 36 N. Y. St. 212, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 229.

85. Protection of debtor from abuse of process.— The undertaking is required for the purpose of protecting the debtor against an abuse of the power of arrest. Squire v. Flynn, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 169, 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 117.

Extent of liability after payment of costs. — When an undertaking is conditioned in a certain sum for the payment of all costs that may be awarded defendant, and all damages which he may sustain by reason of the arrest, the sureties after payment of the costs are liable for damages only to the extent of the difference between the costs paid and the amount specified in the bond, as "all costs" and "all damages" must be taken in conjunction. Sutorius v. Dunstan, 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. 166, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 601, 36 N. Y. St. 685, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 241; Spang v. Patterson, 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 536, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 678.

Mental anguish and physical illness — Attorney's fees.— In an action on the undertaking for damages for an unwarranted arrest in a civil action, the jury may consider as elements in assessing damages the mental anguish and physical illness caused by the arrest and imprisonment, and also customary attorney's fees in procuring defendant's discharge. Vanderberg v. Connoly, 18 Utah 112, 54 Pac. 1097. But, where a defendant was arrested and the complaint was subsequently dismissed by default, it was held that the dismissal of the action ended his liability to arrest therein and that he was not entitled to damages for expenses for counsel fees thereafter incurred by him when the suit was re-

b. Indorsement of Judge's Approval. Where the undertaking is required to be approved by the judge who grants the order of arrest, the order will be vacated if the undertaking is not indorsed with such approval.[86]

c. Amendment. An undertaking which is defective in form or insufficient in amount may be amended.[87]

d. Effect of Setting Aside Order. When an order setting aside an arrest is irregular and is itself set aside, the undertaking to procure the arrest is not thereby rendered invalid.[88]

G. Process — 1. Necessity of Obtaining Judicial Order.[89] While, under the earlier practice, plaintiff could in many cases hold defendant to bail as of course,[90] under the modern practice it is, usually, necessary to procure a judicial order for that purpose[91] from a court or judicial officer.[92]

2. Time of Issuance — a. Capias Ad Respondendum. A capias ad respondendum may not be sued out pending an action, as defendant is already in court.[93]

b. Order of Arrest. With respect to the time for obtaining an order of arrest it has been held that it may be obtained only after the commencement of the action [94] opened and prosecuted to an appeal by the sureties upon the undertaking for his arrest. Sperry v. Hellman, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 899, 37 N. Y. St. 258, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 218.

Damages for disgrace.—In an action against the sureties on an undertaking for an order of arrest, damages for disgrace cannot be recovered as in an action against the principal for false imprisonment. Krause v. Rutherford, 45 N. Y. App. Div. 132, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 1047.

Interest on judgment.—Where the condition of an undertaking is to pay all costs and damages which may be awarded defendant by reason of his arrest in a civil suit, interest will attach to a judgment therein in favor of defendant as a legitimate item of damages. Furber v. McCarthy, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 794, 36 N. Y. St. 212, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 229.

In action against several defendants.— An undertaking to hold to bail conditioned that "the plaintiff in said action will pay all costs which may be awarded to the defendants or either of them, and all damages which they or either of them may sustain by reason of the arrest," is not sufficient, since it does not stipulate to pay the damages which each of defendants might recover by reason of the arrest. In an action for breach of promise defendant could not be held to bail without a judge's order. Bromley v. Town, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 373.

In a joint action against the maker and indorser of a note, bail could not be demanded as of right, but could be obtained only by order of a court, on a proper affidavit. Hatcher v. Lewis, 4 Rand. (Va.) 152.

When bail was required on a penal statute not expressly allowing it, it was necessary for plaintiff to have an order of the court or of a judge therefor. Brookfield v. Jones, 8 N. J. L. 311.

91. Order not process.— An order of arrest signed by the judge and complying with the requirements of Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 481, is not open to the objection that it is process, and therefore must, under Cal. Const. art. 6, § 18, be issued in the name of the state. Dusy v. Helm, 59 Cal. 188. See also Ellis v. Gee, 5 N. C. 445, holding that a paper writing, upon which a constable arrests a debtor and imprisons him, which does not run in the name of the state and is not directed to any ministerial officer, and does not purport to be signed by a justice of the peace, cannot be deemed judicial process.

May issue from the common pleas court in term-time, returnable forthwith. Crider v. Hammel, Tapp. (Ohio) 49.

94. What is commencement of action.— Under the provision of the New York code that a warrant of arrest shall not issue until the suit is commenced, a suit is not commenced until the summons has been served personally or by publication. Lee v. Averill, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 621, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 731, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 73. See, however, Dunaher v. Meyer, 1 Code Rep. (N. wherein it is sought and that it must be obtained before final judgment in such action.[95]

3. CONTENTS. A writ, warrant, or order of arrest should state the grounds upon which the arrest is to be made,[96] and, where the order is granted judicially, should show the exercise of the necessary judicial functions.[97] The process is usually required to state the sum in which defendant is to be held to bail,[98] and

Where an action is commenced by the filing of a complaint as well as by the issuance of a summons, a court has no jurisdiction to grant an order of arrest until after the complaint has been filed, even though a summons has been issued. Ex p. Cohen, 6 Cal. 318.

When fraud must be alleged in complaint. — Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 549, subs. 4, allowing defendant's arrest "where it is alleged in the complaint that the defendant was guilty of a fraud," an arrest cannot be had before the existence of a complaint in the action. A. F. Engelhardt Co. v. Benjamin, 2 N. Y. App. Div. 91, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 531, 73 N. Y. St. 147. See also Straus v. Kreis, 6 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 77, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 275, holding that, if no complaint is presented with the motion for arrest and the affidavits do not aver what its allegations are, an order of arrest cannot lawfully issue. Contra, Hall v. Conger, 7 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 53, 1 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 88, holding that it is not necessary that a complaint should be submitted, or that the contents of the complaint should be stated in an affidavit, or that any complaint should be in existence at the time such order is granted, as a condition precedent to the granting thereof.

Order held obtained before judgment.—Under section 183 of the code, providing that the order of arrest, as a provisional remedy, may only be obtained after judgment, if, after judgment has been recovered by default, defendant obtains and avails himself of leave to come in and defend, he is liable to arrest upon an order, although the judgment awarded final process against him, and the condition of his being let in was that the judgment should stand as security. By taking this course defendant elected to treat the action as still undetermined, and is estopped from availing himself of the judgment as a determination of the action which would preclude the provisional remedy of arrest. Mott v. Union Bank, 38 N. Y. 18 [affirming 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 591]; Union Bank v. Mott, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 106, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 353 [affirming 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 150, 16 How. Pr. (N. So, where, after trial of an action and the decision of the court, but before judgment, an order of arrest was granted upon affidavits establishing fraud prima facie, and was issued and served, it was held that it was in time. L. 334 (holding that it is no ground for discharge on common bail of a defendant held to bail in a large sum, that no specific cause of action is stated in the writ; it being sufficient if it is stated in the affidavit to hold to bail); C. M. Hapgood Shoe Co. v. Saupp, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 480 (holding that, if a warrant issued under the Pennsylvania act of July 12, 1842, is in the precise form prescribed by the act, it is not defective in that it omits a part of the affidavit, where, at the time it was executed, a copy of the affidavit was given defendant).

Grounds stated with proviso.— Where a magistrate, in his certificate, after setting forth facts upon which an arrest would be authorized by law, added a recital that: "I hereby authorize the arrest of the said debtor, if his arrest is authorized by law, to be made after sunset," it was held that the certificate was sufficient, as the right to arrest after sunset was the only purpose for which the magistrate's order was necessary. Stewart v. Griswold, 134 Mass. 391.

Grounds stated in alternative.—Under N. Y. Gen. Rules Prac. Rule 13, providing that every order of arrest shall briefly state the grounds upon which it is granted, an order of arrest reciting the ground as conversion of money embezzled or fraudulently misapplied is not defective as being in the alternative, since the ground covers only one offense. Quail v. Nelson, 39 N. Y. App. Div. 18, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 865.

Matters in addition to grounds.— When an order of arrest sufficiently states the grounds upon which it is granted, it is not vitiated by reason of the fact that it also states matters which are not made grounds for its issuance. Ross v. Wigg, 6 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 268 note.

97. Thus, an order made by the justice or commissioner must show upon its face that he has considered and decided upon the evidence of fraud submitted to him, and that the proof was to his satisfaction. Perry v. Orr, 35 N. J. L. 295; Hill v. Hunt, 20 N. J. L. 476.

Sufficiency of showing.— A magistrate's certificate authorizing the arrest of a debtor is not invalid because it states that he is "satisfied, upon the evidence," instead of (in the language of the statute) he is "satisfied that there is reasonable cause to believe" that the charge made in the affidavit is true. May v. Hammond, 144 Mass. 151, 10 N. E. 751.

98. For approved form of order in this respect see New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Shepherd, 10 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 153.

Bail less than might be required.— It is no objection to the validity of an order of arrest should show when[99] and whence[1] it issued, by whom it is to be executed,[2] and the person who is to be arrested thereunder.[3] It has been held, however, that it is not necessary that it should recite all the facts that confer jurisdiction, if they appear affirmatively in some anterior part of the proceedings,[4] and it seems that if it is otherwise in proper form, it is sufficient, even though it has not the signature of the officer issuing it.[5]

4. INDORSEMENTS. In some jurisdictions the amount sworn to be due,[6] and in that the sum in which defendant is required to be held to bail is a less sum than plaintiff might under the statute have inserted. The error being in favor of defendant, he cannot object to it. Tracey v. Veeder, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 209; Campbell v. Wood, 1 Ont. Pr. 199.

Judge's order.— An order of arrest in a civil case, made by a judge out of court, should not, in form, be an order of the court, or purport to be made in court. Lachenmeyer v. Lachenmeyer, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 542.

Sheriff's warrant.— It is not necessary that a sheriff's warrant, issued upon a capias ad respondendum, should specify the court out of which the process issued. Astley v. Goodyear, 2 Cr. & M. 682, 2 Dowl. P. C. 619, 3 L. J. Exch. 210, 4 Tyrw. 414.

2. Rex v. Osmer, 5 East 304, 1 Smith K. B. 555, wherein it was held that the warrant ought to be directed to a proper, known officer, as, if it were directed to any stranger, it might be resisted for want of knowledge that the party is an officer of the court.

In New Jersey a warrant in a civil suit, issued by an alderman of the city of Perth Amboy, must be directed to a constable of the city, and must be executed within the city limits. Dunham v. Solomon, 16 N. J. L. 50.

In New York an order of arrest made by the marine court of the city of New York, under the New York act of 1872 regulating procedure in that court, which act substituted an order for a warrant of arrest, was properly directed to, and served by, a marshal of the city of New York. Matter of Ott, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 293.

Writ directed to officers and their assistants.— Where the commissioners of bankruptcy issued a warrant to apprehend a bankrupt, and directed the warrant to "John Adams and William Smith, our messengers, and their assistants," etc., it was held that the warrant did not justify the apprehension of the bankrupt by any one who was not in the presence, actual or constructive, of J. A. or W. S., and that, therefore, B., who was the assistant of W. S. in his business of a sheriff's officer, was not justified in apprehending the bankrupt in the absence of W. S. and J. A., even though he had the warrant in his possession. Rex v. Whalley, 7 C. & P. 245, 32 E. C. L. 594.

Writ directed to "sheriffs" instead of to "sheriff."— A capias which was directed to the "sheriffs" instead of to the "sheriff" of Middlesex was held to be irregular. Moore v. Magan, 4 Dowl. & L. 267, 16 L. J. Exch. 57, 16 M. & W. 95.

3. Shadgett v. Clipson, 8 East 328, the court saying that process ought regularly to describe the party against whom it is meant to be issued, and that the arrest of one person cannot be justified under a writ sued out against another, unless such person is as well known by the one name as the other.

When alias may not issue.— When a capias ad respondendum issues against the wrong person as defendant, and he appears and takes issue, the proper person cannot be brought in on an alias writ. Brittin v. Shloss, 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 510.

4. Norman v. Zieber, 3 Oreg. 197. Compare Lutterloh v. Powell, 2 N. C. 455, wherein it was held that a constable could not arrest unless it expressly appeared in the warrant that the sum demanded was over five pounds.

Signature of attorney.— Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 561, 562, the order of arrest must be subscribed by the attorney; and the statute is imperative. Thompson v. Friedberg, 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 519.

Copy of writ served.— It is no objection to an arrest that the copy of the writ served contains neither the name of the clerk of the crown nor a mark to show that the original was issued by the proper authority, and was sealed. Carrol v. Light, 1 Ont. Pr. 137.

6. Applies to all actions.— In all cases of mesne process, the clerk must indorse upon the writ the cause of action and the amount sworn to be due, as the same may be stated in the affidavit to hold to bail. Weaver v. Russell, 18 Ohio 497; Herf v. Shulze, 10 Ohio 263; Stone v. Cordell, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 166, 3 West. L. J. 79.

Applies only to actions of contract.— The Judiciary Act of 1799, authorizing the taking of bail and requiring the sum sworn to be indorsed on the writ, applies only to actions of contract. Thornton v. Pass, 26 Ga. 108.

Effect of variance between affidavit and writ.— In an action on a promissory note, when plaintiff's affidavit for arrest sets forth the debt as four hundred and twelve dollars others the affidavit to hold to bail,[7] must be indorsed on the writ. When the writ is a capias ad respondendum, it should be indorsed with the order to hold to bail, if there is one.[8]

5. AMENDMENT. A writ, warrant, or order which is voidable merely may be amended;[9] but one which is void may not.[10]

6. ALTERATION. The alteration of a writ after its issuance renders it void.[11]

7. RETURN — a. Form. The manner and form in which an officer shall return mesne process under which he has made an arrest are usually prescribed by local statutes or rules of practice.[12] and fifty cents, "with interest," and the amount indorsed on the writ is four hundred and sixty-eight dollars and fifty cents, it will be considered a variance entitling defendant to his discharge, although the debt, with interest added, in fact amounted to four hundred and sixty-eight dollars and fifty cents. Jennings v. Sledge, 3 Ga. 128.

A sheriff's warrant must be indorsed with the amount of the debt claimed in the same manner as the writ is required to be. Steele v. Lameux, 5 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 154. See also Ross v. Webster, 5 U. C. Q. B. 570, holding that an arrest by a constable, on mesne process directed to the sheriff, is not legal unless the affidavit of the debt is annexed to the process.

7. Janes v. Miller, 21 N. H. 371; Malone v. Ryan, 14 R. I. 614. But see Haynes v. Saunders, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 537 (holding that, under Mass. Rev. Stat. c. 90, § 111, the affidavit necessary for the arrest of a person in an action of contract need not be indorsed upon the writ); Marsh v. Bancroft, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 497 (holding that it is not necessary that the writ of arrest should have indorsed thereon a certification that the proper oath was taken to authorize its issuance).

Such indorsement upon a different writ is insufficient. Kidder v. Farrar, 20 N. H. 320.

8. Terrill v. Grove, 2 Mich. N. P. 3. Compare Wert v. Strouse, 38 N. J. L. 184; Carler v. Drake, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 618, which hold that, while it is usual and proper to indorse the order to hold to bail on the capias, such indorsement is not indispensable, and that it may be on a separate paper, provided the authority exists and is in the possession of the officer, or under his control.

9. Amendments have been permitted to writs which were defective because of failure of attorney to subscribe (Mather v. Hannaur, 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 1), misnomer of defendant (Stuber v. Schuartz, 1 N. Y. City Ct. 110), error as to name of chief justice in teste (Brown v. Aplin, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 203), teste at wrong place (Raymond v. Hinman, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 41), being made returnable at wrong place (McConkey v. Glen, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 141), failure to run in name of state (Ilsley v. Harris, 10 Wis. 95), failure to indorse with amount claimed (Stone v. Cordell, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 166, 3 West. L. J. 79), indorsement upon writ of smaller sum than real amount of debt (Plock v. Pacheco, 1 Dowl. N. S. 380, 9 M. & W. 342), issuance of capias after action in form formerly used for commencement of action (Robertson v. Coulton, 9 Ont. 12. New York.—Rule 6 of the general rules of practice of the supreme court, in so far as it directs the sheriff to file the order of arrest with the clerk, may be disregarded, as it is in conflict with section 193 of the code, which prescribes that such order shall be delivered to plaintiff or his attorney. Forward v. French, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 88.

Pennsylvania.— The officer is not required to make return into the office or to the court whence the process issued, but executes the warrant by arresting defendant, bringing him before the judge, and keeping him in custody until he is discharged. Scully v. Kirkpatrick, 79 Pa. St. 324, 21 Am. Rep. 62.

Insufficient evidence of service.— An indorsement of a recognizance of bail on a capias ad respondendum returned to the clerk's office, defendant not being a party to the recognizance, is no evidence of service of the writ. Miller v. Bottorff, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 30.

What return necessary to authorize alias.— Where a capias ad respondendum was served after the return-day, it was held that the sheriff ought to have returned non est inventus in order to authorize the issuing of an alias; and, where the alias had issued without the return of non est inventus (the first writ having been served after the return-day thereof and returned according to the fact), it was held sufficient, but the sheriff was ordered to alter the return. Wilder v. Grimke, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 261.

When return may be amended.— Where a sheriff, who had arrested a defendant in a civil action and taken bail for his appearance, made an immediate return that he had taken defendant into custody as required by statute, and thereafter defendant voluntarily surrendered himself to the sheriff before return-day, and, while so in custody, was dis-

b. Time. Except where the rule has been changed by statute,[13] the process must be made returnable, and must be returned on the first day of the term next succeeding the one at which it was tested.[14]

8. Waiver of Objections by Defendant. A defendant does not waive his objections to a void writ by giving bail,[15] appearing,[16] or pleading to the merits;[17] but he does waive objections to a merely irregular or voidable writ by taking any of such steps.[18] charged under the insolvent laws, it was held that the sheriff should be permitted to amend his return to show such discharge. Dalbey v. Lowenstein, 34 N. J. L. 465.

13. In New York an order of arrest issued as a provisional remedy under the code may be made returnable within a specified period after the arrest of defendant. It is not essential to name a day certain. Continental Bank v. De Mott, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 696.

Direction as to return held sufficient.— A capias which directs the sheriff to bring the person named therein before the court "on the seventh day of October, A. D. 1879, that being the first day of the next succeeding term," sufficiently shows that it is returnable on the first day of the next term of court, even though such term does not begin on October 7th. People v. Kent Cir. Judge, 41 Mich. 722, 49 N. W. 924.

An alias capias must be made returnable to the next ensuing term. U. S. v. Parker, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 373, 1 L. ed. 421, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,992.

When writ is void.— A writ of mesne process commanding the arrest of defendant, returnable after an intervening term, is void. Kelly v. Gilman, 29 N. H. 385, 61 Am. Dec. 648.

Writ made returnable in vacation.— The common-law rule that a capias issued on an order to hold defendant to bail must be made returnable not later than the next term is still in force and is not repealed by section 41 of the Practice Act, providing that the courts shall be open for the return of such writs without restriction, which merely has the effect of allowing such writs to be made returnable in vacation also. Simmerman v. Clevenger, (N. J. 1886) 5 Atl. 273. Compare Leigh v. Alpaugh, 24 N. J. L. 629 (wherein it was held that a capias ad respondendum, returnable in vacation, was void); Miller v. Gregory, 4 Cow. (N. Co. v. Lincoln, 24 Kan. 123, holding that, where a constable gave an order of arrest, issued by a justice, to defendant, and made his return upon a copy which did not bear the name of the justice, defendant waived all objections by coming before the justice and admitting that he was under arrest and subject to his jurisdiction.

Kentucky.— Gore v. Murray, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 270, holding that the want of an indorsement of the species of action on the writ must be taken advantage of before judgment.

New Jersey.— Logan v. Lawshe, 62 N. J. L. 567, 41 Atl. 751, holding that, where less than fifteen days intervened between the teste of a capias and the day of its return, and defendant appeared and filed special bail, such alleged defect was thereby waived.

Ohio.— Smith v. Madison, 7 Ohio 236, holding that, by failing to object promptly after the return, a defendant waives the right to object to a writ because of a trifling misnomer.

Oregon.— Neimitz v. Conrad, 22 Oreg. 164, 29 Pac. 548, holding that, where a defendant who has been arrested under civil process which is merely irregular or voidable, and not void, appears and puts in bail without moving to set the process aside, he waives all defects therein.

Pennsylvania.—Shannon v. Madden, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 254, 8 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 162, holding that the irregularity of arresting defendant on a capias for a simple breach of contract is waived when defendant, without objection, proceeds to a hearing on the merits.

England.— Davis v. Watkins, 12 L. J. Q. B. 293, holding that, after a lapse of twenty days, the court will not discharge a defendant out of custody on the ground that his addition was not indorsed on the capias, unless he shows circumstances to excuse the delay.

But in New York, under N. Y. Code, § 204, as amended in 1858, a motion to vacate an order of arrest may be made at any time before judgment, notwithstanding the fact that

H. Manner and Place of Making Arrest — 1. What Constitutes. In order to effect an arrest, the officer must, in some unequivocal manner, acquire and exercise control of the person sought to be arrested.[19] The usual manner of doing this is by a manual touching or seizure of his body;[20] but a manual touching is not necessary in all cases.[21]

2. Making Known Authority. A known officer, acting within his jurisdiction, need not show his warrant in making an arrest;[22] but he should inform the party arrested of the cause thereof.[23] A special deputy, or an officer appointed for the purpose of making a particular arrest, should show his warrant on demand.[24]

3. Right to Summon Assistance. In making an arrest under civil process it is the duty of an officer to summon sufficient assistance to enable him to effect his purpose.[25] defendant has given and perfected bail (Warren v. Wendell, 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 187; Wickes v. Harmon, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 476, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 462). Compare Coles v. Hannigan, 8 Daly (N. Defendant sick in bed.— Where a sheriff's officer goes with a capias to a person, whom he finds ill in bed, and tells him that, unless he delivers up certain property or finds bail, he must either take him or leave a man with him, this is a sufficient restraint of the person to amount to an arrest, even though there is no actual contact. 4. Right to Break Doors — a. Outer Doors. An officer has no right to break an outer door[26] or window of a residence for the purpose of entering and arresting, under civil process, its lawful occupant,[27] or any member of his household,[28] except upon pursuit after an escape from arrest.[29] He may, however, break an outer door or window of a residence for the purpose of arresting one who has no legal domicile therein.[30]

b. Inner Doors. It has been held, however, that after having gained peaceable entrance at the outer door of a house,[31] an officer may break inner doors for the purpose of making an arrest under civil process,[32] even though defendant is not a capias ad respondendum may raise the power of the county for his assistance in the same manner as the sheriff may on writs of mesne process directed to him. Comfort v. Com., 5 Whart. (Pa.) 437.

The coroner may call to his aid the power of the county in a proper case in executing an order of arrest in a civil action in which the sheriff is a party. Slater v. Wood, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 15.

A sheriff is bound to provide such a force as will enable him to effect an arrest under a capias ad respondendum in spite of any resistance which he may have reason to anticipate. Howden v. Standish, 6 C. B. 504, 6 Dowl. & L. 312, 12 Jur. 1052, 18 L. J. C. P. 33, 60 E. C. L. 504. Compare Buckminster v. Applebee, 8 N. H. 546, holding that, when an arrest has been made on mesne process, a return of the arrest and of a rescue is a good return, as the officer is not required to raise the power of the county in the service of mesne process.

Arrest by assistant.— When a bailiff summons assistance for the purpose of making an arrest under civil process, the arrest may be made by the person whom he calls to his assistance, and it is not necessary that the bailiff should be actually in sight, it being sufficient if he is near at hand and acting in the arrest (Blatch v. Archer, Cowp. 63), and such an arrest is valid even though the appointment be by parol (Com. v. Field, 13 Mass. 321).

26. What is outer door.— Where defendant's house stood in a stable-yard, which was surrounded by a wall, and there was a gate at the foot of a staircase, at the top of which there was a door across part of a gallery which led to plaintiff's chamber, the under part of the house being a stable, it was held that an officer was not justified in breaking open such door after he had gained admittance into the yard. Hopkins v. Nightingale, 1 Esp. 99.

Dec. 147 (holding that an officer in making an arrest in a civil case may not break open the outer door of defendant's residence without first requesting that it be opened, and disclosing his purpose); Phillips v. Ronald, 3 Bush (Ky.) 244, 96 Am. Dec. 216 (holding, under the Kentucky statute, that a sheriff who has a writ of arrest, for the purpose of executing it, may, at any time, whether night or day, break into any house or inclosure, after having given the proper notice).

Forcible entrance after expulsion.— Where a sheriff's officer, in the execution of a bailable writ, peaceably obtained entrance through the outer door, but, before he could make an actual arrest, was forcibly expelled from the house and the outer door was fastened against him, and he obtained assistance, forced open the outer door, and made the arrest, it was held that he was justified in so doing, and that a demand of reëntry was not required under the circumstances. Aga Kurhboolie Mahomed v. Reg., 3 Moore P. C. 164.

28. To whom protection extends.— This protection extends to all who have for the time being a legal domicile in the house, such as the occupant's children, domestic servants, permanent boarders, or lodgers. Oystead v. Shed, 13 Mass. 520, 7 Am. Dec. 172; Gordon v. Clifford, 28 N. H. 402.

Where defendant has let part of house.— Where a person lets out part of his house and reserves for himself and occupies an inner room, an officer who has entered through the open outer door is justified in breaking open the inner door in order to arrest defendant. Fitch v. Loveland, Kirby (Conn.) 380; Williams v. Spencer, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 352.

Lodgers.— The privilege of the outer door belongs only to one door and not to others, although there are several separate apartments containing lodgers. Hence, an officer in the execution of mesne process may break open the door of a lodger after having gained peaceable entrance at the outer door of the house. Lee v. Gansel, Cowp. 1, Lofft 374.

Breaking inner doors at night.— Where the front door of defendant's house was generally therein at the time,[33] provided he first states his purpose, and demands, and is refused, admittance.[34]

5. MAY BE MADE WHERE. An officer has no right to make an arrest under civil process beyond the limits either of his own jurisdiction,[35] or those of the officer or court issuing the process,[36] except on fresh pursuit after an escape.[37] In some jurisdictions defendant in a civil action may not be arrested in a county other than the one in which he resides.[38]

6. SERVICE OF PROCESS AND ACCOMPANYING PAPERS. A capias ad respondendum, writ of arrest, or order of arrest is usually served[39] by arresting the person named therein,[40] reading the writ to him,[41] and delivering to him copies of the writ,[42] kept fastened, and the usual entrance was through the back door, and the sheriff, having entered in the night by the back door while it was open, broke open the door of an inner room in which defendant was with his family, and arrested him, the arrest was held lawful. 39. Who may serve.— Under the laws of Wisconsin, a son of plaintiff may be authorized as a "suitable person, not being a party to the action," to serve a warrant of arrest against defendant in a civil case. Mudrock v. Killips, 65 Wis. 622, 28 N. W. 66.

Time of issuance and service.— The capias must be issued and served within seven days after the warrant is obtained if the capias is issued upon the same material as the warrant, and, if not so issued and served, the capias and warrant are both void. This rule does not apply to a capias obtained upon fresh materials, which need not be executed within the above-mentioned time. Masters v. Johnson, 8 Exch. 63, 21 L. J. Exch. 253.

40. Arrest and discharge of privileged person.— Where an officer arrests a suitor who is attending court and discharges him on account of his privilege, there is no legal service of the writ. Wheeler v. Barry, 6 Vt. 579.

When arrest improper.— A capias ad respondendum issued by a justice of the peace, without an affidavit, against a person not a resident and householder of his county, operates as a summons and does not justify an arrest and imprisonment. Order served after arrest.— It is sufficient to serve a copy of the writ immediately after an arrest, and if defendant refuses to take such copy he cannot afterward object that it was not served upon him. McNider v. Martin, 1 Ont. Pr. 205.

When service of copy unnecessary.— Where a debtor has been discharged from custody on deposit of the debt and costs, it is unneces-affidavit to hold to bail,[43] and plaintiff's undertaking to procure the arrest,[44] as may be required by statute.

I. Disposition of Prisoner — 1. IN GENERAL. It is the duty of the arresting officer to make such lawful disposition of the person arrested as the process may direct,[45] the usual direction being that the prisoner shall be forthwith carried before the judge or other officer who issued the process.[46]

2. COMMITMENT TO PRISON. A prisoner in the custody of an arresting officer under mesne process,[47] who has failed or refused to give bail,[48] may be committed[49] sary to serve him with a copy of the capias, even though, at the time the capias issued, he was in custody under another warrant at the suit of a third person. Eld v. Vero, 8 Exch. 655, 17 Jur. 737, 22 L. J. Exch. 276.

Pr. (N. Y.) 190, holding that if no copy, or paper purporting to be a copy, of the affidavit, is served by the sheriff upon arresting defendant, such omission is an irregularity merely, and does not entitle defendant to his discharge.

A delay in serving such copy until after the officer has made his return does not, necessarily, vitiate the service. Pixley v. Berrien Cir. Judge, 121 Mich. 629, 80 N. W. 797; Ilsley v. Harris, 10 Wis. 95.

44. Mather v. Hannaur, 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 1, wherein it was held, however, that the failure of the sheriff to deliver such copy was only an irregularity, not entitling defendant to his discharge. 45. Under 32 Geo. II, c. 28, no officer could carry a person whom he had arrested to any tavern, alehouse, or other public-house, or to the private house of such officer, or of any tenant or relation of his, without the free and voluntary consent of the person arrested; nor could he carry such person to any jail or prison within twenty-four hours from the time of the arrest unless such person refused to be carried to some safe and convenient dwelling-house of his own nomination or appointment, provided such dwelling was not the house of the person arrested. When magistrate is without his jurisdiction.— Where a person arrested on civil process wished to go immediately before the magistrate who signed the writ, who was at the time absent in another county, it was held that it was the duty of the officer not to comply with the request, as the magistrate had no jurisdiction over the proceedings while out of his county; and that, pending an examination, the officer was justified in committing his prisoner to jail for safe-keeping. Whitcomb v. Cook, 38 Vt. 477.

Process not made returnable before particular justice.— If a warrant under the Non-Imprisonment Act be made returnable generally before one of the justices of the court whence it issued, instead of before the particular justice who issued it, the defect, if such it is, does not render the warrant void. Latham v. Westervelt, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 421.

47. Constructive custody.— A defendant who is arrested under civil process in an action of malicious trespass, and who asks and obtains time to plead, and who is not detained in actual custody during the time given him for pleading, although he has not given bail, is constructively in the custody of the arresting officer during such time, and, at the option of the officer, may be actually confined at any time. Warren v. Crane, 50 Mich. 300, 15 N. W. 465.

Duration of custody.— Where an officer arrests a debtor on a writ, pursuant to the provisions of Me. Stat. (1831), c. 520, and takes him before two justices of the peace and of the quorum, it is the duty of such officer to detain the debtor under arrest until he shall be discharged by the justices or be again committed to his custody by their mittimus. Wilson v. Gillis, 15 Me. 55.

Treatment of prisoner.— An officer may allow reasonable liberty to a debtor in custody; and, as between him and the debtor, the latter cannot complain, provided there is no abandonment of the arrest. Butler v. Washburn, 25 N. H. 251.

48. Dunham v. Solomon, 16 N. J. L. 50; 3 Bl. Comm. 290.

49. What constitutes commitment.—Under Vt. Gen. Stat. c. 33, § 61, a commitment to jail consists of a delivery of the person to the keeper of the jail, within the same, and a delivery to the jailer of an attested copy of the writ by virtue of which the commitment is made, with the officer's return of commitment. Until then the debtor's right, under sections 78 and 80, to be taken on request to the magistrate continues, even after a lodgment in, and incomplete commitment to, jail. Kenerson v. Bacon, 41 Vt. 573.

to prison,[50] pending the hearing of his application for discharge;[51] or when his application has been withdrawn[52] or denied,[53] or when it is impossible to take him forthwith before a proper judicial officer.[54]

J. Motions For Defendant's Relief — 1. Propriety of Respective Remedies — a. In General. When a writ, warrant, or order of arrest is defective or void, defendant's proper course is to move to quash or vacate it, or set it aside;[55] but when the process is regular on its face, but the arrest is, for any reason, improper, the general rule is that defendant may move only for his discharge from arrest, without disturbing the process.[56] In some jurisdictions, however, defendant is Commitment held sufficient.— Where a mittimus from two justices of the peace and of the quorum committing a debtor shows regular proceedings on the part of the magistrates, it is a sufficient authority to the officer and the prison-keeper to detain such debtor. Cordis v. Sager, 14 Me. 475. See also Gosline v. Place, 32 Pa. St. 520; Com. v. McCabe, 22 Pa. St. 450.

Who may sign commitment.— Where a person is arrested under a warrant of arrest, and his petition for discharge under the insolvent laws is refused by the court, it is not necessary that the judge who issued the warrant should sign the commitment, it being competent for any judge of the court to sign it, as it is issued by the court and not by one judge alone. Marks v. Drovers' Nat. Bank 114 Pa. St. 490, 6 Atl. 774.

50. Taking to prison.— After an arrest which requires a prisoner to be committed, it is the duty of the officer to take him to jail as soon as he reasonably can. The officer is to judge of the hour at which he will start and of the propriety of starting on account of the state of the weather, and of the personal restraint necessary to secure the prisoner. Butler v. Washburn, 25 N. H. 251.

Maintenance in prison.— Neither plaintiff nor the sheriff is bound, at common law, to maintain a defendant confined in jail under civil process. McClain v. Hayne, 1 Treadw. (S. C.) 212.

Duration of imprisonment.— A debtor who has been arrested and imprisoned under the Debtors Act, on the ground that his absence from England will prejudice plaintiff "in the prosecution of his action," cannot be kept in prison after final judgment has been signed. 55. Davis v. McCormick, 3 Pa. L. J. Rep. 221, 5 Pa. L. J. 86. Compare Ely v. Lyons, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 644, holding that when a person has been arrested on an illegal order to hold to bail issued by a recorder, if the recorder had authority to issue an order to hold to bail, defendant's proper course is to apply to the recorder to discharge or vacate the order; but, if the recorder had no power to make the order, defendant should make a direct motion to the supreme court to be discharged from arrest. See also infra, II, J, 1, b.

Nature of motion.— An application to the court to set aside an order of arrest is an original motion, and not an application to revise the discretion exercised by the judge. Lamond v. Eiffe, 3 Q. B. 910, 3 G. & D. 256, 6 Jur. 1038, 12 L. J. Q. B. 12, 43 E. C. L. 1032. It is not, however, a preferred motion, when made after defendant has been discharged on bail. Cummings v. Woolley, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 297 note.

What constitutes vacation of order.—Where an order was made for defendant's arrest in attachment proceedings, and he was arrested and held to bail, but the proceedings against the person of defendant were dropped, plaintiffs contenting themselves with a money judgment only, it was held that the order of arrest was, in effect, vacated by the entry of final judgment, without adjudging relief by seizure of the person of defendant. Arrest of female.— In Hatheway v. Jones, 20 Ark. 109, it was held that, where a writ of attachment against a female defendant is entitled to have the order of arrest vacated upon showing the non-existence of the grounds upon which it was issued.[57] In jurisdictions where defendant may move on the merits to vacate an order of arrest, he may do so as well when the cause of action and ground of arrest are identical[58] as when the order was issued upon facts extrinsic to the cause of action.[59]

b. Motion to Vacate Order of Arrest. An order of arrest will be vacated when the proceedings in relation thereto are fatally defective,[60] unless a motion irregular, in that it contains a capias clause (females being exempt from arrest in civil cases), but is, in other respects, regular, defendant's motion to quash the writ should be allowed to the extent only of quashing the capias clause.

In an action for breach of promise to marry, where defendant sought his discharge from arrest upon affidavits admitting the promise, but denying the breach, and offering to marry plaintiff, which offer plaintiff rejected, it was held that the order of arrest should be discharged. Bonn v. Bloch, 13 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 275.

Presumption that order was vacated on merits.— Where an order vacating an order of arrest shows that the pleadings and affidavits on both sides were read upon the hearing of the motion, and there is nothing to indicate that the motion was based upon an irregularity, the presumption is that the order of arrest was vacated on the merits. Allaire v. Kalfon, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 546, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 969.

When complaint shows arrest unauthorized. — Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 558, authorizing the vacating of an order of arrest, if it appears by the complaint that the case is not one for which an arrest is given, it must affirmatively appear in the complaint that the case is one in which an arrest could not be had in any event, under sections 549 and 550. Sloane v. Livermore, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 29. But an order of arrest granted upon a ground extrinsic to the cause of action will be vacated where the complaint subsequently served is in the ordinary form for goods sold and delivered, since section 558 applies only to cases where it affirmatively appears by the complaint that the cause is not one in which an arrest is authorized. Rule when no arrest has been made.— Ind. Rev. Stat. pp. 671, 673, providing that no writ of capias ad respondendum shall be delivered by any clerk until the order to hold to bail has been obtained and indorsed on the writ, applies only to cases where an arrest is to be made; and, where no arrest is made, an indorsement that no bail is required is no to vacate is not an appropriate method of raising defendant's objection.[61] On the other hand, the order will not be vacated because of a mere irregularity which may be corrected by amendment.[62] So, where the original papers are not defective, an order of arrest will not be vacated because of defects in the copies of the papers served on defendant at the time of the arrest.[63] It has also been held that it is no ground for rescinding an order for a capais that plaintiff, when he comes to declare, may have to rely upon a cause of action different from that stated in the affidavit upon which the order was obtained.[64]

c. Motion to Be Discharged From Custody, or on Common Bail — (I) Upon Extension of Claim. Where, after the issuance of an order of arrest, the claim upon which it issued is extended under a valid agreement, defendant is entitled to be discharged.[65]

(II) Upon Payment of Debt and Costs. If the debt and costs in an action have been paid to plaintiff, defendant is entitled to be discharged,[66] no matter by whom the payment is made.[67]

(III) Upon Disproving Ground Upon Which Arrest Was Made. Defendant is entitled to be discharged from arrest when he has effectually disproved the existence of the ground upon which he was arrested.[68] ground for quashing the writ, as in such case the capias is, substantially, a summons. Linn v. Schmall, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 94.

61. When plea in abatement is proper.— Want of jurisdiction, because defendant resides in a different parish, cannot be offered as a ground for the dissolution of the order to hold to bail. It must be taken advantage of by a plea in abatement, or on the trial of the cause. Simpson v. Burnett, 2 Mart. (La.) 243. A capias ad respondendum will not be set aside on a motion based on defendant's affidavit that the name by which the suit was begun was not plaintiff's true name. The objection, if raised at all, must be raised by plea in abatement. Watson v. Watson, 47 Mich. 427, 11 N. W. 227.

When defendant's recourse is against sheriff.— A defendant, arrested for fraudulently concealing property sought to be taken in replevin, cannot have the order of arrest vacated on the ground that the replevin bond is insufficient, his recourse being against the sheriff. Non-existence at time of motion.—A debtor arrested under mesne process, upon an affidavit charging that he conceals his property and is about to leave the state to avoid the payment of his debts, will be discharged from arrest on motion at the return term if it appears that he does not then attempt to conceal his property and does not intend to leave the state, even though it also appears that the alleged cause of arrest existed when the arrest was made. (iv) Upon Taking Oath Not to Leave State, and the Like. By statute in some jurisdictions, a defendant who is in actual custody[69] is entitled to be discharged upon taking oath that he does not intend to leave the state,[70] or has no property within the state subject to execution;[71] or upon making, under oath, a true and full disclosure of his affairs and surrendering his property for the benefit of his creditors.[72]

(v) Upon Plaintiff's Negligent Delay in Proceeding. Defendant is entitled, on motion, to be discharged from arrest or on common bail when plaintiff has negligently[73] failed to take, within the time prescribed by law, the proper steps required of him in the conduct and trial of the action.[74] In like manner,

L. J. Exch. 53; Donegan v. Short, 12 Ont. Pr. 589.

Proof of inability to produce property.— Proof by defendant, in an action of trover, held in custody, of his inability to produce the property, is not made by the statute one of the grounds of his discharge. He may have sold the property and put the money in his pocket, and then have placed it out of his power to produce it. The production of the property, or entering into the bond with good security for the eventual condemnation money, are the only terms prescribed by the statute upon which the court is authorized to discharge defendant from custody. Harris v. Bridges, 57 Ga. 407, 24 Am. Rep. 495.

When complaint alleges no fraud.— Where defendant has been arrested on mesne process under a complaint which contains no averment of fraud, and execution has been returned unsatisfied, and no execution has been issued against the body, defendant will be discharged. Harris v. Cone, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 259.

69. Defendant voluntarily discharged by plaintiff.— A defendant is not entitled to take the oath under the Insolvent Debtors Act after he has been voluntarily discharged by plaintiff, even though he has given bond for the prison limits and has filed his schedule. Second application.— A magistrate has no authority to entertain the application of a debtor, arrested on mesne process, to take the oath that he had not intended to leave the state, after a similar application has once been heard and refused (Henshaw v. Cotton, 127 Mass. 60), even though the decision on the first application was by default, upon the debtor's failure to appear (Collins v. Hardy, 160 Mass. 317, 35 N. E. 862).

Debtor of United States.— The act of congress of 1798, authorizing the secretary of the treasury to discharge imprisoned poor debtors of the United States, does not prevent a debtor imprisoned at the suit of the government from obtaining his discharge under the state insolvency laws, where the action was brought under the act of congress of March 2, 1867, adopting, in proceedings in the federal court, the state laws as to discharge, the remedies being cumulative. U. S. v. Tetlow, 2 Lowell (U. S.) 159, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,456.

In action of deceit.— A defendant in an action of deceit, committed upon mesne process for want of bail, is not entitled to be discharged from jail upon taking the poor debtors' oath, under the provisions of R. I. Rev. Stat. c. 198, §§ 1, 16. Matter of Payton, 7 R. I. 153.

Necessity of making full disclosure.— A defendant is not excused from making a full disclosure by the fact that he has been decreed a bankrupt. Marr v. Clark, 56 Me. 542. See also Dow v. True, 19 Me. 46.

For form of oath see Ex p. Ridgill, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 427.

73. Penalty for negligence.— Where plaintiffs have been guilty of gross negligence in failing to enter judgment and charge defendant in execution, they may be required, upon denial of defendant's motion for discharge from arrest, to stipulate to waive any objections to defendant's taking the benefit of the fourteen-day act, and that defendant be allowed to be discharged under that act upon giving the usual notice. Carter v. Loomis, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 295.

Showing of reasonable cause by plaintiff.— On defendant's application to be discharged from arrest upon the ground of the negligent failure of plaintiff to enter judgment within the prescribed time, plaintiff may show reasonable cause for the delay as well if defendant is actually in custody as if he is simply under arrest, but not in custody. Knight v. Vanderbilt, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 810, 45 N. Y. St. 759.

74. Delay must appear affirmatively.— In order to entitle a person arrested in a civil defendant is entitled to his discharge when plaintiff has negligently[75] failed to charge him in execution within the prescribed time.[76]

(VI) Upon Giving Prison-Bounds Bond. As a general rule, a defendant actually in custody,[77] who is unable or unwilling to give bail for his appearance, is entitled to gain the liberties of the prison upon giving a good and sufficient bond,[78] conditioned that he will not depart beyond the limits of the established prison bounds.[79] This privilege is usually withheld, however, from one who is imprisoned for fraud.[80]

action to be discharged before judgment on account of plaintiff's unreasonable delay, facts affirmatively establishing the unreasonable delay must be set forth in the application. Howell v. Taussig, 9 N. Y. St. 384, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 252.

This rule has been applied where plaintiff failed to appear (Dunham v. Solomon, 16 N. J. L. 50), asked an adjournment (Pope v. Hart, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 630, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 215), failed to file his declaration (Judson v. Jones, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 209. Aliter at common law. Branson v. Shinn, 9 N. J. L. 1; Hind v. Thompson, 2 Miles (Pa.) 345; Turner v. Parker, 2 Dowl. & L. 444), or to enter judgment within the time prescribed (Corley v. Griffin, 36 N. Y. Super. Ct. 515. See also Carter v. Loomis, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 295).

75. There must have been a negligent omission to issue execution, and not an omission from necessity. New York Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Gleason, 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 122.

Showing of reasonable cause by plaintiff.— While defendant is not entitled to his discharge on the ground that plaintiff has failed to charge him in execution, if plaintiff shows reasonable cause for such failure, the fact that an appeal has been taken from the judgment is not such reasonable cause as to prevent defendant from being discharged where the proceedings have not been stayed. Havemeyer Sugar Refining Co. v. Taussig, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 247. See also Lampmann v. Smith, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 922, 17 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 19.

(Va.) 339. Compare Smith v. Knapp, 30 N. Y. 581, holding that such delay entitles defendant to a supersedeas, but that, unless he applies for such remedy, he is still, legally, in custody.

In New York defendant is not entitled to move for his discharge on this ground until he has first moved to compel plaintiff to charge him in execution. Carter v. Loomis, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 295.

Presumption authorizing discharge.—In the absence of any statute directly authorizing the discharge of a defendant under arrest who is not charged in execution within a certain time after judgment, the court may assume that his discharge was contemplated by law and should be granted unless plaintiff, within a reasonable time, should charge in execution. U. S. v. Griswold, 6 Sawy. (U. S.) 255, 11 Fed. 807.

77. Necessity of actual custody.— A bond given for the prison limits is void unless defendant is actually in prison, and that fact is recited in the bond. Lytle v Davies, 2 Ohio 277.

78. The penalty in a prison-bounds bond, given by one imprisoned under mesne process, must be in double the amount for which the officer is directed to make attachment. Whiting v. Putnam, 17 Mass. 175.

A joint bond for the prison limits given by a debtor, where there are several writs in different actions, is void. Lytle v. Davies, 2 Ohio 277.

In New York, in an action for the recovery of specific personal property, where defendant was arrested for concealing the property to prevent it being taken under the writ, and the order of arrest directed that defendant be held to bail in a certain sum, the bail required should be according to the terms of N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 147, 150, providing that a person arrested in a civil action may be admitted to the liberties of the jail upon delivering to the sheriff a bond conditioned to remain a prisoner until discharged, and not the undertaking prescribed for the discharge of defendant by N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 575, conditioned to deliver the chattel to plaintiff if the delivery is adjudged, and to pay any sum recovered against defendant in the action. Horowitz v. Olenick, 62 N. Y. Effect of violation of prison bounds.— The provision, in the Prison Bounds Act, that a prisoner is not entitled to his discharge if, since his confinement, he has gone without the prison walls applies as well to a prisoner confined under mesne as to one confined under final process. Blease v. Farrow, 9 Rich. (S. C.) 46.

80. Arrants v. Dunlap, Cheves (S. C.) 27.

What fraud will deprive prisoner of privilege.— If a party who has conveyed land in trust to pay his debts subsequently conveys the land to another, it is such a fraud as will deprive him from taking the benefit of the Prison Bounds Act, as it tends to hinder or delay his creditors. Wiley v. Lawson, 7 Rich.

(VII) Upon Expiration of Term For Which Imprisonment Is Lawful. Where there is a statute limiting the duration of imprisonment under mesne civil process, one who is entitled to relief thereunder may obtain it by moving for his discharge.[81]

(VIII) Upon Rendition of Final Judgment. Mesne process under which an arrest has been made continues in force until the award and issuance of final process, and is not terminated by final judgment.[82]

2. Before Whom May Be Made. As a general rule, it is not essential that a motion to vacate an order of arrest should be made before the judge who granted the order.[83]

(S. C.) 152. But the payment of a debt on the day a defendant is arrested is not such an undue preference of one creditor to another as will deprive defendant of the benefit of the Prison Bounds Act even though the property assigned was not sufficient to pay plaintiff's debt. Creyton v. Dickerson, 3 McCord (S. C.) 438.

Statute applying only to final process.— N. Y. Code Civ. Y.) 451, holding that a person arrested and released on bail is not entitled to apply for his discharge from arrest under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 111, as amended in 1886, as the provisions thereof all relate to those imprisoned within the jail walls or within the jail liberties.

82. State v. Judge Fourth City Ct., 37 La. Ann. 385; State v. Orleans Parish, 31 La. Ann. 799; In re Kindling, 39 Wis. 35. Hence, a debtor who has been legally arrested and imprisoned for debt under a writ issued in a civil suit cannot, by confessing judgment, acquire the right to be discharged from arrest. 83. Jordan v. Harrison, 13 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 445; Dunaher v. Meyer, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 87; Johnson v. Kennedy, 4 Dowl. P. C. 345, 2 Scott 419.

Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 568, providing that, when an order of arrest is granted by a judge out of court, a motion to vacate may be made before any other judge of the same court, taken in connection with section 769, which declares that motions in a case triable in the first district must be made in that district, a motion to vacate an order of arrest made out of court by a judge of the first district cannot be made before another judge unless he is within that district. Sutton v. Sabey, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 557.

In North Carolina a judge may hear a motion to vacate an order of arrest anywhere within the district that his duties require him to be, whether or not he is within the county where the action in connection with which the order is made is triable. But, if defendant demands a jury trial on the issues raised by the conflicting affidavits on a motion to dismiss the warrant of arrest, as he is allowed to do by statute, the judge is compelled to remand the motion to the county where the action is pending, in order that the issues so arising may be tried at the first term of court. Parker v. McPhail, 112 N. C. 502, 16 S. E. 848.

Defendant's motion to be discharged from arrest because of plaintiff's failure to enter judgment within the required time may be made to any judge of the court in which the action was commenced. Sumner v. Osborn, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 13. But see Morch v. Raubitschek, 159 Pa. St. 559, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 567, 28 Atl. 369.

A judge in chambers has no power to set aside an order of arrest, but may order the release of defendant. Hogan v. Gordon, 2 L. C. Jur. 161; Damer v. Busby, 5 Ont. Pr. 356; Emmanuel v. Hagens, 6 Rev. Lég. 209; Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Browne, 6 Rev. Lég. 26. See also Judson v. Jones, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 209.

Relief because of privilege from arrest.— While a defendant who was arrested while privileged or exempt because of attendance upon judicial proceedings should seek redress at the hands of the court whence the process issued, he has a right to apply for that purpose to any court of competent jurisdiction. People v. Judge Detroit Super. Ct., 40 Mich. 729. See also In re Glaser, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 180, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,474, holding that, where a bankrupt was arrested in an action in a state court, upon allegations of fraud in contracting the debt to recover which the action was brought, and gave bail and applied to the federal court, upon affidavits denying the allegations of fraud, for an order discharging him from arrest, the federal court was competent to give him the relief sought, provided his arrest was founded upon a debt from which his discharge in bankruptcy would release him. Compare Kinsman v. Reinex, 2 Miles (Pa.) 200; Com. v. Daniel, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 29, 6 Pa. L. J. 330.

3. WHEN MAY BE MADE. A motion to vacate an order of arrest must be made within the time prescribed by statute or rule of court.[84] In the absence of a statute or rule of court fixing the time, the application should be made promptly,[85] and at a preliminary stage of the proceedings.[86]

4. NOTICE OF MOTION — a. Necessity. A motion to vacate or modify an order of arrest may be made before the judge who granted the order, without notice to the adverse party. Notice is necessary, however, when the application is made to another judge, or to the court.[87]

b. Specification of Grounds. When notice is necessary, it must specify distinctly the grounds upon which defendant seeks relief;[88] and defendant will be confined to such grounds on the hearing of the motion.[89]

Discharge on common bail.— A defendant who has been held to special bail must give notice to plaintiff of an application to be discharged on common bail. Gilmore v. Edmunds, 9 Allen (Mass.) 379; Morris v. Geiger, 10 N. J. L. 331.

It is not a waiver of objection to an insufficient notice that plaintiff's attorney appeared at the time and place named in the notice, for the purpose of examining the notice and return. Francis v. Howard, 115 Mass. 236.

A notice to a creditor reciting that a person "arrested on execution in your favor desires to take the oath for the relief of poor debtors," and appointing a time and place for his examination, is sufficient, although the debtor was arrested on mesne process only. 5. Procedure — a. Nature and Scope of Inquiry — (I) Upon Motion to Vacate Order of Arrest. Upon a motion to vacate an order of arrest, the issue is as to the existence of grounds of arrest, and not as to plaintiff's belief in their existence.[90] And, except where the motion is based upon defects in the proceedings to procure the order, the question is not whether the order should have been made, but whether it should be discontinued.[91] A motion to vacate an order of arrest does not embrace one to reduce the amount of bail.[92]

(II) Upon Motion to Be Discharged From Custody. On a motion to discharge on common bail, the merits of the controversy will not be considered further than to ascertain if a reasonable cause of action is shown.[93]

b. Evidence — (I) What Admissible — (A) Under Earlier Practice. Under the earlier practice, defendant's motion to be discharged from arrest, or to quash, vacate, or set aside the order of arrest, was heard only upon the papers upon which the order was granted.[94]

(B) Statutory Rule. In some jurisdictions, however, this rule has been so far

Y.) 219, which holds that, where the notice of motion to vacate an order to hold defendant to bail is merely that it will be made upon the insufficiency of the affidavits upon which the order was allowed, defendant will not be allowed to read counter-affidavits, nor will plaintiff be allowed to read additional ones.

90. Gardner v. O'Connell, 5 La. Ann. 353. See also Peel v. Elliott, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 433, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 485, holding that, on a motion to vacate an order of arrest, founded on the nature of the cause of action, if there is any ambiguity as to the nature of the right of action relied upon, the proper inquiry is, not what cause of action plaintiff intended to set forth, but, rather, what cause of action he must rely on for a recovery.

It is the duty of the court to examine the affidavits of each party and to dispose of the case according to the just preponderance of the proof, as disclosed by such affidavits. Levy v. Bernhard, 2 N. Y. App. Div. 336, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 849, 73 N. Y. St. 62, 3 N. Y. Annot. Cas. 40.

(La.) 607, holding that evidence of defendant's minority at the time of incurring the liability which is the basis of the action cannot be received on a motion to discharge him from custody, as a case cannot, on an interlocutory motion, be tried and decided on its merits. Compare Pratt v. Strickland, 1 Browne (Pa.) 213, wherein defendant was discharged on common bail upon the ground that he was an infant.

If the affidavit to hold to bail is, in itself, sufficient the court will not, upon a motion to appear without bail, inquire into the merits of the cause. Laverty v. Snelling, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 290, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,124.

modified[95] that defendant may support his motion with affidavits,[96] which plaintiff may oppose with affidavits tending to prove any ground of arrest recited in the order,[97] but no other.[98]

(II) PRIMA FACIE FORCE OF AFFIDAVIT TO HOLD TO BAIL. When defendant moves on the merits to vacate the order of arrest, or to be discharged from arrest, the affidavit to hold to bail, or other evidence upon which the order was granted, is prima facie sufficient to sustain the order.[99] Hence, defendant's evi-

95. How motion should be heard.— The court will not consider separately an application to set aside an order of arrest on the ground of the insufficiency of the papers upon which it was granted, and, as a part of the same motion, an application to set aside the same order on new affidavits. There should be but a single consideration and decision, which should be on the facts in the original papers, the affidavits in support of the motion, and the answering affidavits. Hinck v. Dessar, 3 N. Y. St. 349.

What papers must be presented with motion.— On a motion to vacate an order of arrest, the order itself, or a copy thereof, and the papers upon which it was founded, must be presented to the court, an affidavit stating generally their contents being insufficient. dence should squarely and unequivocally meet that upon which the order was granted.[1]

(III) Burden of Proof. The burden of proof is on plaintiff when the order was granted on a ground extrinsic to the cause of action,[2] and is on defendant when the order was granted on a ground identical with or dependent upon the cause of action.[3]

See also Henry v. Flanagan, 1 Kulp (Pa.) 352, holding that where defendant claims privilege from arrest as a freeholder and swears that his property is unencumbered, the burden is on plaintiff to prove that judgments against one of defendant's name are liens on the property. Contra, Molson v. Carter, 25 L. C. Jur. 65; Egart v. Laidlaw, 7 L. C. Where there are conflicting affidavits on a motion to vacate an order of arrest, granted on the ground that the debtor was about to remove from the state with intent to defraud his creditors, the facts that defendant did not dispute the claim in suit, and that, though of abundant ability to pay it, he was about to remove from the state without doing so, were held proof of a fraudulent intent on his part which rendered his affidavit less worthy of credit than that of plaintiff. Defendant's evidence must be sufficient to authorize nonsuit or verdict.— Where the arrest is grounded on the nature of the cause of action, the order will not be set aside upon the merits unless defendant clearly makes out such a case as would require the judge at the trial either to nonsuit plaintiff or to direct a verdict for defendant. McClure v. Levy, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 525, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 1006, 52 N. Y. St. 568; Hoy v. Duncan, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 555; Lorillard F. Ins. Co. v. Meshural, 7 Rob. (N. Defendant's denial insufficient.— Where a defendant is arrested on an affidavit stating a cause of action which, of itself, gives the right to hold defendant to bail, the order will not be vacated upon affidavits which merely deny the existence of such cause of action. Cousland v. Davis, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 619; Bedell v. Sturta, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 634, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 319 note; Chittenden v. Hubbell, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 319 note.

Conflicting affidavits.— Where the cause of action is identical with the ground of arrest the court will not vacate the order of arrest on conflicting affidavits (Jaroslauski v. Saunderson, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 232; Miller v. Parks, 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 159), particularly where the affidavit on behalf of plaintiff was made by a disinterested witness and is opposed only by defendant's affidavit (Butler v. Mellvaine, 31 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 379), even though the affidavits of defendant tend to disprove the existence of the cause of action (Peck v. Lombard, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 63).

4. Hecht v. Levy, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 53.

(11) Effect of Delay. A decision upon a motion to vacate an order of arrest is not void because it was withheld beyond the time fixed by statute,[5] or until after the rendition of final judgment.[6]

6. Imposition of Terms Upon Granting Relief. When defendant is entitled as a matter of right to have an order of arrest vacated, the court has no power to impose a condition in granting the relief.[7] But when the order is voidable merely, because of technical defects or irregularities, the court may impose a proper and reasonable condition.[8]

7. Second Motion. When a motion to vacate an order of arrest has been made and denied it cannot be renewed upon any statement of facts without leave of the court.[9]

K. Second Arrest — 1. In Same Action — a. After Escape. An officer may, at any time before the return-day, retake, without new process, one who had escaped after being arrested under mesne civil process,[10] even though the escape was voluntary.[11]

Y.) 47, holding that where the court is satisfied that there was no malice and that there was probable cause for procuring the order of arrest, it may, upon a motion to vacate the order upon the merits, grant the relief on condition that defendant shall stipulate not to bring an action for the arrest. See also Edgerton v. Ford, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 415, holding that the discretion exercised by the court at general term in imposing a stipulation not to sue for false imprisonment or malicious prosecution as a condition of reversing an order refusing to set aside an order of arrest can neither be reviewed by the court below, nor at a subsequent general term.

9. Lovell v. Martin, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 238. See also Wingo v. Watson, 98 N. C. 482, 4 S. E. 463, holding that, when a motion to vacate an order of arrest has been denied, a second motion will not be considered, as the matter is res adjudicata.

Effect of verdict when cause of action and ground of arrest are identical.— If the facts relied upon as warranting an arrest are put in issue by the pleadings in the cause and brought to trial, a verdict or finding upon those facts either way ought to be deemed conclusive of the question upon any subsequent motion to vacate the order of arrest. Chaine v. Coffin, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 441; Warren v. Wendell, 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 187.

Time within which motion must be renewed after leave.— Where a motion to vacate an arrest was denied, with leave to renew the motion on showing that the claim was secured by an attachment, it was held that the renewal could not be made after the rendition of judgment. Mills v. Rodewald, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 439.

10. Com. v. Sheriff, 1 Grant (Pa.) 187.

What is retaking.— Where A was arrested at the suit of B, and discharged, the sheriff not knowing that there was also a detainer in his office at the suit of C, and the sheriff subsequently arrested A at C's suit, such arrest was considered as an original taking, and not as a retaking after an escape. Atkinson v. Jameson, 5 T. R. 25.

Pursuit of escaped prisoner out of state.— The sheriff of another state cannot pursue and retake in this state a prisoner who has escaped from his custody after arrest on civil process. Bromley v. Hutchins, 8 Vt. 194, 30 Am. Dec. 465.

11. New Hampshire.— Langdon v. Hathaway, 1 N. H. 367. Compare Bruce v. Snow, 20 N. H. 484, which says that it seems that a sheriff who has voluntarily permitted a debtor to escape cannot retake him.

Pursuit out of county.— Where a prisoner on mesne process has made a voluntary escape, and the sheriff has acquired the right to retake him on a fresh suit, he may be retaken beyond the limits of the county. Langdon v. Hathaway, 1 N. H. 367.

When released by plaintiff's consent.— Where a defendant is released from custody at

b. Because of Insufficiency of Bail. When a sheriff, after arresting a defendant on mesne process, accepts bail and releases the prisoner, he cannot afterward rearrest him upon the ground that the bail is insufficient.[12]

c. After Discharge. A defendant who has been discharged from arrest may not, ordinarily, be rearrested in the same action,[13] unless the order under which the first arrest was made was void.[14] his own request, by consent of plaintiff, in order that he may have an opportunity of attending to his private business, he may be retaken on an alias capias on the same affidavit to hold to bail. Penfold v. Maxwell, 1 Chit. 275 note, 18 E. C. L. 151.

Effect of agreement not to recapture.—The right of an officer to retake a prisoner under mesne process after a voluntary escape is not impaired by his agreement to refrain from recapture. Langdon v. Hathaway, 1 N. H. 367.

12. State v. Brittain, 25 N. C. 17; Ricks v. Richardson, Dudley (S. C.) 57.

Failure of bail to justify.— Where the bail fails to justify, the sheriff may rearrest a prisoner whom he has discharged on bail, as, upon the failure of the bail to justify, the sheriff becomes liable as bail himself, and is, therefore, entitled to the same rights and powers (Seaver v. Genner, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 256; Metcalf v. Stryker, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 12; Sartos v. Merceques, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 188); but cannot do so until the actual failure of the bail to justify (Arteaga v. Conner, 88 N. Y. 403, 2 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 152); and where plaintiff's attorney consents to a postponement, even though for an indefinite time, of the justification of defendant's sureties, the sheriff has no right to rearrest defendant until the sureties have made an actual default, and no mere lapse of time will give him this right (Arteaga v. Conner, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 91).

Provisional bail.— Where a bail-bond is taken, conditioned for the obligor's appearance at the return-day of the writ, but under the express agreement that it shall only be required as security for his forthcoming on the next day after the arrest, unless other or additional bail is given, the officer making the arrest may, if such bail is not given, retake defendant without new process. Bronson v. Noyes, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 188.

Where sheriff puts in bail for defendant.— Where a sheriff's officer, after arresting a defendant, released him on his promise to put in good bail, and, upon afterward finding that the bail were not forthcoming, put in bail himself without defendant's consent, and rearrested defendant the day previous to that upon which his time for putting in bail expired, it was held that defendant was entitled to his discharge. Taylor v. Evans, 1 Bing. 367, 8 Moore C. P. 398, 8 E. C. L. 551.

13. McGilvery v. Morehead, 2 Cal. 607; Enoch v. Ernst, 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 96; Benson v. Adams, (Easter T., 3 Vict.) 1 Robinson & J. Ont. Dig. 208. But see Meucci v. Raudnitz, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 343 (holding that it is within the discretion of the court to grant a second order of arrest, after another order in the same action has been vacated on the ground that the affidavit failed to establish fraudulent intent on the part of defendant); Chambers v. Durand, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 494 (holding that, if plaintiff fails to sustain his first grounds of arrest and yet, by his proofs on the motion, establishes another cause of arrest, the order should be vacated without prejudice to plaintiff's right to make a new motion for an order of arrest on proper notice to defendant).

When discharge procured by fraud.— A defendant may be rearrested in the same action where he procured his discharge from the first arrest by fraud — as where he gave a draft for part of the demand and agreed to settle the remainder in a few days, and the draft was dishonored (Puckford v. Maxwell, 6 T. R. 52), or gave a note, which he dishonored (McDonald v. Amm, (Easter T., 2 Vict.) 1 Robinson & J. Ont. Dig. 208); but a party who procured his discharge by giving security which turns out to be worthless cannot be rearrested unless he was guilty of fraud (Wilson v. Hamer, 8 Bing. 54, 21 E. C. L. 441).

When capias failed to issue after first arrest.— Where a debtor arrested under a warrant was discharged because no capias to support the arrest was issued within the required time, and was subsequently arrested a second time under a capias, the material of the affidavit upon which he was arrested being the same in both cases, it was held that the second arrest was valid, the warrant being auxiliary to the capias. Williams v. Gibbons, 4 B. & S. 617, 10 Jur. N. S. 236, 33 L. J. Q. B. 33, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 328, 13 Wkly. Rep. 70, 116 E. C. L. 617.

Rearrest before appearance-day.— Where a justice takes bail for appearance at a fixed time, a second arrest by the same complainant, for the same charge, before the time appointed, is illegal. King v. Orr, 5 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 724.

After discharge because of temporary privilege.— Where an order of arrest is set aside because defendant was arrested on a general election-day, he may again be arrested in the same suit on the same process, since the exemption from arrest expired with the election-day, and the parties were put upon the same footing toward each other as if the arrest had not been made. 2. In Another Action For Same Cause — a. During Pendency of First Action. A person will never be held to bail in two different actions for the same cause at the same time.[15]

b. After Discontinuance of First Action. While, as a general rule, a person should not be arrested a second time for the same cause of action,[16] one who has been arrested on mesne process may, after the order has been vacated and the suit discontinued or non-prossed, be rearrested in a new action for the same cause, if it appears that there is no design to vex, harass, or oppress him.[17]

L. Liability For Wrongful Arrest — 1. In General. A plaintiff who has procured the arrest of defendant in a civil action[18] is liable to an action of damages to be discharged, and procured a new order of arrest, based upon the same affidavit, defendant was not entitled to be discharged from his second arrest on the ground of his previous arrest and discharge.

S. 550, wherein a second arrest, made after plaintiff had been non-prossed in the first suit, was set aside, because of his failure to pay the costs.

Presumption as to vexation. — A second arrest in a second action will always be deemed vexatious until the contrary is shown. Peltier v. Washington Banking Co., 14 N. J. L. 391; Young v. Weeks, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 115; Williams v. Thacker, 1 B. & B. 514, 5 E. C. L. 773; Archer v. Champneys, 1 B. & B. 289, 5 E. C. L. 640.

Second arrest before discontinuance. — Where an affidavit to hold to bail was defective, and plaintiff thereupon made a full affidavit and took out a new writ, and the next day moved to discontinue upon payment of costs, it was held that defendant should be discharged on common bail in the second action, as plaintiff should have discontinued before he took out a new writ. Belifante v. Levy, 2 Str. 1209. To same effect see Barry v. Eccles, 3 U. C. Q. B. 112; Ellis v. James, 1 Ont. Pr. 153. But where, after defendant had put in bail, plaintiff discovered that the sureties were worthless, and discontinued, but, before discontinuance, arrested defendant in a second action, it was held that the second arrest was good, as defendant would probably have run away if plaintiff had discontinued earlier. Olmius v. Delany, 2 Str. 1216.

Where first process was void. — A defendant, after arrest on mesne process, may be rearrested in a new action for the same cause if the first process was absolutely void. Schadle v. Chase, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 413.

Where first action prematurely brought. — Where plaintiff held defendant to bail before the cause of action accrued, and afterward discontinued, and then rearrested him in a new action for the same cause after it accrued, the court discharged defendant on common bail on the ground that plaintiff was guilty of gross negligence in making the first arrest before the cause of action accrued, and that, for that reason, the second arrest was vexatious. Wheelwright v. Joseph, 5 M. & S. 93.

Third arrest. — A third arrest in a third action, all for the same cause, is not, necessarily, vexatious where defendant was once released on his agreement to waive the arrest, and both times on his earnest solicitations, and promises to pay, which promises he failed to keep. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Vorhis, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 24. Compare Wells v. Gurney, 8 B. & C. 769, 15 E. C. L. 378, wherein the court say that it is doubtful whether a third arrest for the same cause is ever allowable, even in the absence of vexatious conduct on the part of plaintiff.

18. Liability of officers. — Though a writ of arrest may have been illegally obtained, the clerk who issued it and the sheriff who exetherefor,[19] when the arrest was malicious and without probable cause,[20] constituted other abuse of the process of the court,[21] or was made without the affidavit required by statute.[22]

2. Upon Undertaking — a. When Right of Action Accrues. Defendant's right to maintain an action on the undertaking by plaintiff for defendant's arrest[23] accrues when it is judicially determined that plaintiff was not entitled to have him arrested,[24]

cuted it, in obedience to the mandates of a competent tribunal, cannot be sued as co-trespassers with plaintiff in the suit, the latter alone being responsible for the consequences of the proceedings. Driggs v. Morgan, 10 Rob. (La.) 119.

19. When defendant may sue.— A debtor arrested at the instance of his creditor, in order to compel payment of the debt with property exempt by the constitution, may sue for damages for abuse of process before the termination of the action in which he was arrested. Lockhart v. Bear, 117 N. C. 298, 23 S. E. 484.

Presumption as to waiver of wrong.—In the absence of an affirmative statement or action to the contrary, the presumption is that a person wrongfully arrested and illegally held in custody neither consented to the wrong nor waived the illegality. In re Baum, 61 Kan. 117, 58 Pac. 958.

20. An attorney will be liable for maliciously procuring an arrest when he knew there was no cause of action. Burnap v. Marsh, 13 Ill. 535.

Malice alone is insufficient to support an action for the abuse of legal process in making a civil arrest. There must also be a want of probable cause. Tucker v. Davis, 77 N. C. 330.

Estoppel to deny probable cause.— In an action for maliciously suing out a capias ad respondendum plaintiff is estopped to deny the existence of a probable cause of action by the fact that a judgment was rendered against him in the suit wherein he was arrested. Herman v. Brookerhoff, 8 Watts (Pa.) 240.

21. Defendant decoyed within its jurisdiction.—One who was induced by fraud to come within the jurisdiction of the court, in order that he might be arrested and imprisoned on a capias ad respondendum, may maintain an action therefor. Wanzer v. Bright, 52 Ill. 35.

To compel payment from exempt property. — A creditor who arrests his debtor in order to compel the payment of the debt from property which the constitution exempts from execution, is liable to the debtor for abuse of process. Lockhart v. Bear, 117 N. C. 298, 23 S. E. 484.

When process used in good faith.— A person who delivers a capias ad respondendum to an officer, with instructions to arrest defendant forthwith, is not liable for an arrest made while defendant was privileged from arrest, unless he knew or had cause to believe him to be privileged at that time. Sewell v. Lane, 1 Ind. 293. See also Ward v. Cozzens, 3 Mich. 252.

22. Cody v. Adams, 7 Gray (Mass.) 59; Curry v. Pringle, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 444.

Sufficiency of affidavit.— An affidavit to obtain an order of arrest in which the statement that defendant, in removing his property, intends to defraud his creditors is made upon the deponent's belief, derived from statements made by a certain specified person, is legally sufficient to warrant the order in the first instance, although insufficient to support it on a motion to vacate. Such an order is erroneous merely, and, being within the jurisdiction of the judge, is a protection to the party obtaining it as well as to the officer who made the arrest under it before it was set aside. Hall v. Munger, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 100.

23. Leave of court.— In order to sue on an undertaking for an order of arrest under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 559, leave of court need not be obtained under section 814, since the latter section, by its terms, applies only to bonds or undertakings given to the people or to a public officer. Krause v. Rutherford, 45 N. Y. App. Div. 132, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 1047.

Without first proceeding against plaintiff. — A party arrested in a civil action may sue in the first instance on the undertaking without proceeding against the party who procured the arrest. Keck v. Gross, 6 Misc. (N. Y.) 438, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 1111, 58 N. Y. St. 301.

Right is assignable.— The right to recover damages upon an undertaking given to procure an order of arrest is assignable. Bamberger v. Kahn, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 411.

When plaintiff is not proper party.— A plaintiff who did not sign the undertaking for arrest is not a proper party defendant in an action for damages on the undertaking. Gobbi v. Associazone Fraterna, 32 Misc. (N. Y.) 756, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 672.

24. Pending an appeal one arrested and discharged by a justice cannot maintain an action on the undertaking given to procure his arrest. Stechhan v. Roraback, 67 Cal. 29, 7 Pac. 7. But, where an action was instituted on an undertaking for an arrest on civil process, which arrest had been vacated and an appeal taken from the vacating order, and notice therein given plaintiff (defendant in the original action) before answer filed, the notice of appeal was ineffectual as a bar to plaintiff's action on the undertaking, defendant not having perfected the appeal by executing the undertaking therein required under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1326. Ferris v. Tannebaum, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 295, 39 N. Y. St. 71, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 136.

A consent order of the parties, vacating an order of arrest, is not a judicial determination that plaintiff in the original action was not entitled to the order of arrest, and, hence, will not support an action on the undertaking. Hallen v. Jones, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 249, 21 and this has been held to be true even though the original cause is still pending.[25]

b. Release of Sureties From Liability. The sureties are released from liability on the undertaking when, without their consent, plaintiff and defendant enter into a stipulation which changes their relative positions or alters the terms of the contract;[26] but they cannot escape responsibility because their principal has put himself beyond the jurisdiction of the court,[27] nor can they take advantage of their own wrong by escaping liability because of defects in the undertaking for which they are responsible.[28]

M. Bonds For Relief of Imprisoned Debtors — 1. In General. It seems that a bond for the relief of a poor debtor is not vitiated either by the fact that it contains trifling defects[29] or contains conditions not required by the statute which authorizes the relief.[30]

2. Release of Sureties From Liability. It has been held that the sureties on a prison-bounds bond[31] or a poor debtor's bond[32] are released from further liability

N. Y. Suppl. 943, 50 N. Y. St. 329 [reversing 1 Misc. (N. Y.) 192, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 659, 48 N. Y. St. 937].

Judgment as to one of two defendants.— Where, in an action against two defendants, plaintiff gave an undertaking for their arrest, by which the sureties bound themselves that plaintiff would pay costs and damages if defendants recovered judgment, one defendant who has recovered judgment cannot maintain an action on the bond while the action is pending as to the other. Miller v. Herlich, 5 N. Y. St. 909.

Setting aside default.— When a plaintiff who has given an undertaking for arrest is defaulted in the principal action while absent, and a judgment is also procured against him on such undertaking, he is entitled, upon good cause shown, not only to have the default set aside, but also the judgment which was rendered upon the undertaking. Wettig v. Moltz, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 389.

25. Krause v. Rutherford, 45 N. Y. App. Div. 132, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 1047; Allaire v. Kalfon, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 546, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 969.

Even though cause of action and cause of arrest are identical, this is true, for, although a final judgment for plaintiff may thus indicate that the arrest was proper, the liability on the bond is fixed by the discharge from arrest. Squire v. Senia, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 577, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 1027, 51 N. Y. St. 220; Squire v. McDonald, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 422, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 1025, 50 N. Y. St. 762, 23 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 150.

Where ground authorizing arrest abandoned.— In an action in the superior court in which plaintiff joined causes for fraud, money received in a fiduciary capacity, and on account, and defendant was arrested, and, before trial, the cause for fraud was eliminated by consent and the arrest vacated, whereupon defendant brought an action in the city court against the sureties on the undertaking, it was held that the action was not prematurely brought, and that, to enable it to be sustained, the ground or propriety of the order vacating the arrest need not be determined, and that the amended complaint and papers were admissible to prove that fraud had been eliminated from the original action. Rothwell v. Paine, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 128.

An order vacating an order of arrest which has become final by expiration of the time allowed for appeal is a final decision that plaintiff was not entitled to the order vacated, authorizing action on plaintiff's undertaking, even though the subsequent judgment may be for plaintiff and establish the right to an order of arrest. Silverstein v. Rugiero, 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 139, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 1059 [affirming 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 872, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 1147].

Under the former practice in New York the entry of judgment in favor of defendant was a condition precedent to liability on plaintiff's undertaking for the order of arrest (Parshall v. Hammond, 5 Alb. L. J. 381), and the obligors in the undertaking were not liable thereon when the action in which it was given was simply discontinued (Moses v. Waterbury Button Co., 37 N. Y. Super. Ct. 393).

26. Schuyler v. Englert, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 463, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 479; Miller v. Herlich, 5 N. Y. St. 909. Compare Rothwell v. Paine, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 128.

27. Rogay v. Juilliard, 25 La. Ann. 305.

28. Thus, the failure of plaintiff in an action in which an order of arrest was granted to have the undertaking approved by the judge will not relieve the sureties from responsibility thereon (Keck v. Gross, 6 Misc. (N. Y.) 438, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 1111, 58 N. Y. St. 301), and the fact that an arrest bond is several, and not joint and several, does not relieve the sureties from liability when they are sued severally (Rothwell v. Paine, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 128).

29. Gilmore v. Edmunds, 7 Allen (Mass.) 360.

30. Kavanagh v. Saunders, 8 Me. 422; Anderson v. Foster, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 500.

31. Not assignable.— A bond taken under the Prison Bounds Act is not assignable (Peck v. Glover, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 582), at any rate, not until a breach of the bond occurs (Tunison v. Cramer, 5 N. J. L. 586).

32. Validity.— A bond to take the poor-debtors' oath, voluntarily given by a creditor under arrest on mesne process, to his creditor, thereunder when the sheriff voluntarily permits their principal to escape,[33] or when their principal, within the life of the bond, surrenders himself into custody[34] fulfils the conditions of the bond.[35] The same is true where the principal is dis-is valid at common law if it is given without duress or abuse of legal process. Pindar v. Upton, 44 N. H. 358.

33. Huntington v. Williams, 3 Conn. 427.

34. Morrow v. Weaver, 8 Ala. 288, prison-bounds bond.

Surrender must be actual.— A poor debtor, enlarged on giving the statutory bond, who seeks to save forfeiture by surrendering himself into jail, can do so only by actually surrendering himself into the custody of the jailer and being received by him into actual custody. Goodrich v. Senate, 92 Me. 248, 42 Atl. 409.

35. What conditions must be performed.— The obligor is not required to perform any statutory provisions in relation to poor debtors except those recited in his bond (Bell v. Furbush, 56 Me. 178); but, if one of the conditions be "and further do and perform all that is required in and by the acts in such case made and provided," this imposes upon the poor debtor the duty of abiding by the order of the justices before whom he shall make disclosure (French v. McAllister, 20 Me. 465).

What is fulfilment.— A condition that the debtor will, within fifteen days after the last day of the term of the court at which judgment shall be rendered in the suit, notify the judgment creditor, for the purpose of disclosure, etc., is saved by a notice within fifteen days after the last day of the term at which judgment is rendered, although there had been an adjournment of the court and a special judgment had been entered prior to such adjournment (Parsons v. Hathaway, 40 Me. 132); but a forfeiture is not prevented by a notice to the creditor within fifteen days after judgment, but before the last day of the term of the court at which it is rendered (Hunkins v. Palmer, 48 Me. 251).

Where a recognizance in poor-debtor proceedings recited that defendant desired to take the oath for relief of poor debtors, and the oath that he did not intend to leave the state, and defendant, after due notice to plaintiff, applied to take oath only that he did not intend to leave the state, and, upon examination, plaintiff being present, the oath was refused, and defendant departed, after having waited in court until after the certificate of refusal had been attached to the writ and the court had stated that its duty in the matter was ended, it was held that there was no breach of the recognizance. Bessom v. McLaughlin, 166 Mass. 296, 44 N. E. 248.

What is not fulfilment.— A recognizance conditioned that the debtor "deliver himself up for examination, giving notice in the manner required" by Mass. Gen. Stat. c. 124, cannot be performed by a surrender to a single justice, since Mass. Stat. (1860), c. 215, substitutes two justices of the quorum for the single justice required by the former chapter. Dike v. Story, 7 Allen (Mass.) 349. Neither is a discharge by the commissioners of special bail, procured by fraud, a fulfilment of the conditions of the bond. Poole v. Vernon, 2 Hill (S. C.) 667.

Wrongful refusal of certificate of discharge. — A debtor who is entitled to his discharge is not liable on his recognizance because he departed without the magistrate's consent, after a wrongful refusal by such magistrate to give him a certificate of discharge. Coleman v. Hawkes, 120 Mass. 594.

Enjoinment of proceedings.— A recognizance conditioned that the debtor shall appear at an adjourned hearing and submit to examination, and abide the final order of the magistrate thereon, is discharged by the service on the magistrate of an injunction, procured by the creditor, prohibiting all further proceedings in the case. Palmer v. Everett, 7 Allen (Mass.) 358.

Evidence of performance.— Where a poor-debtor's oath has been administered within the appointed hour, evidence that the creditor had told the magistrate that he might as well discharge the debtor, as he (the creditor) should not appear, is competent to be submitted to the jury as tending to prove a waiver of the full hour. Lord v. Skinner, 9 Allen (Mass.) 376.

Where a debtor is carried before two justices of the peace and of the quorum, and by them ordered to be imprisoned because he is not entitled to a discharge from arrest, the mittimus, under the hands and seals of the justices, is competent evidence to prove the facts therein stated in an action on the debtor's bond (Cordis v. Sager, 14 Me. 475); but the notes of evidence of the commissioner of special bail, taken on the examination of a debtor, are inadmissible as evidence of the validity of the debtor's schedule (Hyatt v. Hill, 2 McMull. (S. C.) 55).

Conclusiveness of justice's certificate.— A certificate given by the justices to a poor debtor, in the form prescribed by the statute, is not conclusive, but prima facie evidence merely, that a citation was issued by the justices to, or was duly served upon, the creditor. Brown v. Foster, 6 R. I. 564.

Conclusiveness of officer's return.— In an action upon a poor-debtor's recognizance, oral evidence is inadmissible to show that the debtor's last and usual place of abode is different from that recited in the return of the officer who served the notice upon the debtor to appear for examination. Stewart v. Griswold, 134 Mass. 391. But evidence may be introduced to contradict the sheriff's return that the service was made in his county, where the only object of such evidence is to show that the service was made at a point too far distant from the place of examination to afford the requisite statutory notice. Francis v. Howard, 115 Mass. 236. And an officer's return, stating that he served the citation on a charged in bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings from the obligation for which the arrest was made.[36]

3. FORFEITURE — a. What Works Forfeiture. On the other hand, the bond is forfeited by the failure of the principal obligor to faithfully perform any of the conditions thereof.[37]

b. Actions Brought Upon Forfeiture — (I) MAY BE BROUGHT WHEN. An action will not lie against the sureties until plaintiff has recovered judgment for his debt or damages against the principal in the bond.[38]

(II) PLEADING. The declaration in an action on a bail bond must aver facts showing that the taking of the bond was authorized by the debtor's situation;[39] and, in pleading a discharge under a poor-debtor's act, it is necessary to aver facts showing that the officer who granted the discharge had jurisdiction so to do.[40]

(III) DEFENSES. In an action on a debtor's bond the sureties may show that the writ upon which their principal was arrested was void;[41] but may not question the exercise of a discretionary power by the officer who granted the process.[42]

(IV) MEASURE OF DAMAGES. When a forfeiture occurs, the sureties' liability is for the amount of damages actually sustained by the creditor, and not for the penalty of the bond.[43]

certain day, without specifying the hour, is not sufficient evidence that the citation was duly served, when the notice was sufficient if served before, but not if served after, a certain hour of such day. Park v. Johnston, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 265. The agreement of the parties that the debtor's notice of his examination failed to state the time of day at which the examination would be held, provided such fact was admissible against the officer's return, was held not to be a waiver of the conclusiveness of the return. Lowery v. Caldwell, 139 Mass. 88, 28 N. E. 451.

36. Young v. Whitton, 9 Ohio 100 (even though the insolvency proceedings are subsequently dismissed by a court of review); Caldclough v. Carey, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 155; Mason v. Haile, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 370, 6 L. ed. 660; Simms v. Slacum, 3 Cranch (U. S.) 300, 2 L. ed. 446 (even though such discharge was obtained by fraud).

Discharge in another county.—An insolvent debtor, whose application to be discharged is pending in one county of Pennsylvania, need not make a second application in another county in which he has been arrested and given bond, since a discharge under the first will fulfil the conditions of the bond. Caldclough v. Carey, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 155.

37. Marston v. Savage, 38 Me. 128 (even though the existence of the ground of arrest is disproved); Adams v. Pierce, 177 Mass. 206, 58 N. E. 591; Detwiler v. Casselberry, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 179 (even though he is immediately surrendered into custody by his bondsmen); Headman v. O'Neil, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 190 (even though he is remanded to prison upon the creditor's application).

Escape of prison-bounds debtor from close custody.— When a debtor who has given a prison-bounds bond is confined in jail and escapes, the sureties on the bond are not liable for the escape. The liberty of the debtor, which is the consideration for the bond, fails as soon as he is committed to close confinement. Horton v. Hicks, 27 Ga. 311.

When liability is for nominal damages only. — In an action upon a poor-debtor's bond where there was no evidence in relation to the amount of damages except that the oath had been irregularly taken by the debtor before two magistrates, who had certified that he was clearly entitled to have the oath administered after a disclosure of his affairs, it was held that execution should issue for nominal damages only. Waldron v. Berry, 22 Me. 486.

Under Mass. Pub. Stat. c. 162, § 64, providing that, where a debtor files a recognizance and defaults, judgment shall be entered for the amount of the penalty, but execution shall be for so much thereof as may be justly due, the sureties on a recognizance, where the debtor defaults after he has by insolvency proceedings prevented plaintiff from obtaining judgment, are liable to execution only for nominal damages. Evidence in reduction of damages.— Evidence of the principal's insolvency is admissible to reduce the damages to a nominal amount. Downes v. Reily, 53 Me. 62.

I. DEFINITION.

Arson, at common law,[1] is usually defined as "the wilful and malicious burning the house or outhouse of another."[2]

II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

A. In General — 1. MALICE — INTENT — a. Generally. The burning must be wilful and malicious, and not accidental; otherwise, it is not felony, but only a trespass;[3] and, ordinarily, there must be an intent to destroy the property fired,[4]

1. Under statutes, the crime has, in some jurisdictions, been distinguished by degrees (see Lacy v. State, 15 Wis. 13), and, in most jurisdictions, extended to embrace the burning of buildings other than those immediately appertaining to the dwelling-house (see infra, II, A, 3), as well as the burning of one's own dwelling with intent to injure or defraud another (see infra, II, A, 5; II, B), and even the setting fire to or burning of certain kinds of personal property, more particularly the immediate products of the soil (see infra, II, A, 3, h).

Where a statute does not denounce the offense eo nomine, as in Louisiana, it has been held that, under the generic term "arson" are included the offenses described in La. Rev. Stat. §§ 841–843, as the burning in the nighttime of any inhabited house or water-craft, burning of the same in the daytime, and the burning of any other houses or water-craft not provided for in the preceding sections, each of which is but one class of arson, with a specific punishment attached. State v. Fulford, 33 La. Ann. 679.

Where a statute does not define the offense, but fixes the punishment therefor, the common law must be looked to for its proper definition. Aikman v. Com., 13 Ky. L. Rep. 894, 18 S. W. 937; Cochrane v. State, 6 Md. 400; State v. Hannett, 54 Vt. 83.

C. 73. See also Reg. v. Batstone, 10 Cox C. C. 20 (holding that throwing a light into a postoffice letter-box in a house, with the intention of merely burning the letters, is not felony); Reg. v. Child, L. R. 1 C. C. 307, 12 Cox C. C. 64 note, 40 L. J. M. C. 127, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 556, 19 Wkly. Rep. 726 (holding that setting fire to goods, though, if a person set fire to or burn a house while engaged in the commission of a felony, it is arson, even though there was no intent to set fire to or burn the building.[5] It is immaterial, however, whether the motive be gain, revenge, or any other kind of malicious mischief.[6]

b. To Escape From Jail. It has been frequently held that if a prisoner burn a part of a jail merely for the purpose of effecting his escape, and not with the intent to destroy the building, he is not guilty of arson;[7] but it would seem that a more logical and consistent view is that taken by the authorities deciding to the contrary.[8] The authorities are agreed, however, that if he intends to burn down the building to effect his main design, which is to escape, he is guilty.

2. The Burning — a. In General. An intent, or even attempt, to commit the crime by actually setting the fire, unless it absolutely burns the house, does not fall within the description incendit et combussit.[9] Yet, if there is actual ignition[10] of any part of the house, though the fire immediately go out of itself, with intent to injure the owner thereof, does not amount to a felony under the statute, although the house in which the goods were stored caught fire).

Intent to produce death.— Under a statute defining arson in the first degree as the wilful burning of a dwelling-house containing a human being, the specific intent to produce death is not essential, and it is even immaterial whether defendant knew that the building burned was usually, or had at any time, been occupied by persons lodging therein. People v. Orcutt, 1 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 252. See also infra, II, A, 3, a, (II), (B).

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arson," § 23.

Result of explosion.— By the force of a dynamite explosion, splinters of the ceiling of a house were scattered on the floor. Some of these splinters were on fire. Some of the paper between the tin roofing and the rafters also burned. It was held that, on a trial under an indictment charging defendant with the burning of the house, but not drawn under Tex. Pen. Code (1895), art. 761, making the explosion of a house by explosives arson, it was error to refuse an instruction that the explosion did not come within the definition of arson, unless it resulted in setting the house on fire, in contradistinction to the burning of the parts of the house blown off and detached therefrom. Landers v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. 671, 47 S. W. 1008.

"Setting fire to" synonymous with "burn." — Although 9 Geo. I, c. 22, provided that "if any person or persons, shall 'set fire to' any house," etc., it was construed to have made no departure from the common-law requirement that there must be an actual burning to constitute the crime. Rex v. Taylor, 5 East P. C. 1820, 1 Leach 49; Rex v. Spalding, 2 East P. C. 1025, 1 Leach 218; Rex v. Breeme, 2 East P. C. 1026, 1 Leach 220. So, too, "setting fire to" and "burning" were held to be synonymous in State v. Taylor, 45 Me. 322; State v. Jones, 106 Mo. 302, 17 S. W. 366; but the contrary was asserted in Howel v. Com., 5 Gratt. (Va.) 664; and in Graham v. State, 40 Ala. 659, 664, it was said: "It has been held that the words 'set fire to' are substantially synonymous with the word 'burn' when used with reference to a house. Ordinarily, and in common acceptation, the phrase 'set fire to,' would be understood to convey a different meaning from the word 'burn,' when applied to a house, or anything else." See also Benbow v. State, (Ala. 1901) 29 So. 553; State v. Babcock, 51 Vt. 570.

10. The flames need not be visible.—Graham v. State, 40 Ala. 659; Rex v. Stallion, 1 Moody 398.

Scorching or smoking.— The offense is not complete where the building is simply scorched the offense is committed,[11] and it is immaterial how small a part is consumed,[12] provided there be a perceptible wasting of the fiber of the structure,[13] or, as it is commonly expressed, that the material be charred,[14] even where the offense in its highest degree is visited with capital punishment.[15]

b. Means Employed — (I) In General. If the burning be wilful, it is not material how the fire was communicated.[16] It need not have been applied by defendant with his own hand,[17] nor need he even have been present if he procured, aided, and abetted the commission of the crime.[18]

(II) Fire Communicated to Another Building. If a person sets fire to one building with intent that the fire should be communicated to and burn another, this is, in law, deemed the burning of the latter.[19]

3. The Structure or Property Burned — a. Houses or Dwelling-Houses — (I) In General. The common law only threw its protection over such houses as were used for the habitation of man,[20] this protection, however, was held to extend, not only to the very dwelling-house, but to all outhouses which were a or smoked, without the fire being actually communicated thereto. Woolsey v. State, 30 Tex. App. 346, 17 S. W. 546.

But see State v. De Bruhl, 10 Rich. (S. C.) 23, to the effect that, under 22 & 23 Car. II, c. 7, providing that "if any person shall," etc., "burn, or cause to be burnt or destroyed, any ricks," etc., "barns, or other houses or buildings," etc., no injury to any building comes within the meaning of the statute which does not unfit it for the purpose for which it was erected.

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arson," § 23.

It is sufficient that a wooden partition annexed to a building was charred by fire, and in one place burned through (People v. Simpson, 50 Cal. 304); that some of the window-frames, casings, and doors of the building were so injured that they had to be repaired and in some instances replaced (State v. Spiegel, 111 Iowa 701, 83 N. W. 722); that the floor of a house was charred to the depth of half an inch (State v. Sandy, 25 N. C. 570); that, where wood was placed on the steps of a house and fired, the fire communicated to the door and would soon have caught the roof had it not been extinguished (Blanchette v. State, (Tex. (B) Necessity of Human Occupation. By the preponderance of authority, to constitute the structure a dwelling-house it must at the time have been occupied by a human being, even though it were designed and intended for a dwelling;[24]

but a temporary absence will not, ordinarily, affect the character of the house.[25] It is not necessary, however, that the whole of the building be so occupied or that the entire building be devoted exclusively to human habitation,[26] nor need the accused have knowledge that the building burned was usually, or at any time, occupied by persons lodging therein.[27]

(III) Meaning of "Curtilage." The curtilage of a dwelling-house is a space, necessary and convenient, and habitually used for the family purposes, the carrying on of domestic employment;[28] the yard, garden, or field which is near to, and used in connection with, the dwelling.[29] While, it has been said that it need not be separated from other lands by a fence,[30] the better rule seems to be to the contrary, though the inclosure may consist wholly of a fence, or partly of a fence and partly of the exterior side of buildings within the inclosure.[31]

4. Value of Property. Under some statutes, the value of the property burned is an element of the offense, while under others it is not.[57]

5. Ownership of Property — a. In General. As arson, at common law, was an offense against the security of the dwelling-house rather than the property in it,[58] there could, ordinarily, be no conviction of the owner for burning his own house,[59] even though the act was done with intent to defraud an insurer;[60] and, where it is not arson for a man to burn his own house, an agent or servant who sets fire to the house at the owner's request is not guilty of arson.[61] For this purpose the tenant or other person in possession was regarded as the owner, and or, in part, of coleseed straw and part of wheat stubble (Rex v. Tottenham, 7 C. & P. 237, 32 E. C. L. 590), nor is a quantity of straw packed in a dory, in course of transportation to market, deemed a stack of straw (Reg. v. Satchwell, L. R. 2 C. C. 21, 12 Cox C. C. 449, 42 L. J. M. C. 63, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 569, 21 Wkly. Rep. 642).

not he who held the fee,[62] and it seems immaterial whether such possession is lawful or otherwise.[63] It was, however, a high misdemeanor to set fire to one's own house or other building under circumstances endangering the property of others,[64] or when the house was inhabited by accused and other tenants in a populous city.[65] At the present time many statutes defining the offense make no distinction in reference to the ownership of the building destroyed, so that now the tenant is put upon the same plane as third persons.[66]

Hence, if a landlord or reversioner sets fire to his own house, of which another is in possession, under lease, it is arson (McNeal v. Woods, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 485; Tuller v. State, 8 Tex. husband in burning the house of his wife, although dwelling in it with her at the time.[68]

B. Burning With Intent to Defraud Insurer. Although, at common law, burning one's own property with intent to defraud an insurer was, at most, only a misdemeanor,[69] the act is now generally condemned as a felony.[70] It is not material whether the accused was the owner of the property or not,[71] or in whose name the goods were insured,[72] and it has also been held immaterial whether the policy is valid or not, or whether there is an enforceable liability.[73] If the company issuing the insurance had a de facto existence it is sufficient,[74] and compliance of a foreign corporation with the laws of the state is not essential.[75]

C. Attempt. Where the offense is regulated by statute, which uses only the word "destroy," there can be no conviction thereunder for a bare attempt;[76] but, generally, where the intent is accompanied by an overt act purporting to be in execution of such intent, there may be a conviction of at least a misdemeanor.[77] The intent is essential,[78] but it is not necessary that there should have been a burning,[79] a mere solicitation, accompanied by overt acts, being sufficient.[80]

c. Particular Averments — (I) Time. In jurisdictions where, if the burning is in the night-time, the offense is of a higher degree, to authorize a conviction for the higher degree, the fact that the act was committed in the night-time should be alleged in the indictment,[87] for, if it is not, it will be taken to have been done in the daytime.[88] If, however, the statute is silent in this respect the time of day need not be averred.[89]

(II) With Force and Arms. It is not necessary to allege that the offense was committed vi et armis.[90]

(III) Malice — Intent — (A) Generally. Where the statute makes the offense a felony it should be charged to have been "feloniously" done.[91] Malice being of the essence of the crime at common law and under statute, it has been held that the act must be charged to have been "maliciously" done,[92] even though the word is not used in the statute,[93] or though the words "feloniously, wilfully, and unlawfully" are employed.[94] When the statute employs particular words to express the intent, these, or words of equivalent import, should be used in charging the offense.[95]

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Arson," § 35.

An indictment in the general words of the statute, and following the analogous forms given for the higher degrees, without alleging any fact or circumstance which constitutes arson in the first or second degree, is, necessarily, an indictment for arson in the third degree, and is sufficient in form and substance. James v. State, 104 Ala. 20, 16 So. 94; Brown v. State, 52 Ala. 345. See also State v. Young, 9 N. D. 165, 82 N. W. 420, holding that an information accusing defendant of arson, and charging facts constituting arson in the third degree, is sufficiently specific as to the crime charged, and does not accuse of one crime and state facts constituting a different crime.

E. 1047 (holding that, where it is unnecessarily averred that the offense was committed in the night-time, the commonwealth may enter a nolle prosequi as to this part of the indictment); Com. v. Lamb, 1 Gray (Mass.) 493, 495 (holding that, where the particular arson charged is equally punishable whether committed in the night or daytime, the fact that the indictment, in charging the offense to have been committed in the night-time, states that it was between the hour of sunsetting on one day and that of sunrising on the next is immaterial, though the statute defines "night-time," in criminal prosecutions, to be "the time between one hour after the sunsetting on one day and one hour before sunrising on the next day"). But see In re Curran, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 619, to the effect that, although the common-law form is probably sufficient, it is better practice, if the burning occurred in the daytime, to so charge.

Statute directory as to punishment.— Where a statute provided that "arson in the daytime shall be punished by a shorter period of imprisonment and labor than arson committed in the night," it was held to be only directory, and not to necessitate a charge in the indictment that the offense was committed in the day or in the night. Malice aforethought.— An indictment for arson is sufficient if it avers that the house was "willfully and maliciously set on fire," without averring that it was done with malice aforethought. State v. Price, 37 La. Ann. 215.

A warrant alleging that defendant, "with force and arms," did set fire to and burn a certain mill, "contrary to the form of the statute," etc., and referring to the act as a "felony," is sufficient, though it does not charge a "willful and malicious" burning, in the terms of How. Anno. Stat. Mich. § 9125, under which the warrant was drawn. People v. Pichette, 111 Mich. 461, 69 N. W. 739.

Dec. 166, holding, however, that, under a statute prohibiting the reversal of a judgment for any matter of form which might have been the subject of demurrer to the indictment, a conviction will not be reversed for failure to allege that the burning was done maliciously. But see Aikman v. Com., 13 Ky. L. Rep. 894, 18 S. W. 937, holding that the word "feloniously" embraces the word "maliciously."

(B) To Burn or Destroy. Where an intent to burn or destroy the property is not an element of the offense,[96] or where defendant is charged with setting fire directly to a building which was thereby burned,[97] it is not necessary to allege an intent to burn it. Aliter, where he is charged with setting fire to one building whereby another building is burned,[98] or where such intent is, by statute, made a specific element of the offense.[99]

(C) To Injure or Defraud. At common law,[1] or where the statute does not require it,[2] an intent to injure a particular person need not be charged further than such intent is implied by a charge that the burning was done wilfully and maliciously.[3]

(IV) Setting Fire to, and Burning. It is not sufficient to allege that the building was "set fire to," where the statute uses the word "burn,"[4] but it is not necessary to allege a consumption of the property by fire,[5] nor is it necessary, although it is usual, to allege that defendant "set fire" to the building where the burning is stated.[6]

(holding that the words "unlawfully, maliciously, or feloniously" will not supply the statutory words "wantonly and wilfully"); State v. Massey, 97 N. C. 465, 2 S. E. 445 (holding that "unlawfully and maliciously" are not equivalent to "wantonly and wilfully"); Rex v. Reader, 4 C. & P. 245, 1 Moody 239, 19 E. C. L. 498 (holding that "feloniously, voluntarily, and maliciously" are not equivalent to "feloniously, unlawfully, and maliciously").

Wilfully.— The words "unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously" imply that the act was "wilfully" done. People v. Haynes, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 450, 38 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 369; State v. Thorne, 81 N. C. 413; Chapman v. Com., 5 Whart. (Pa.) 427, 34 Am. Dec. 565.

Use of words in conjunctive or disjunctive. — The words "wilfully" and "maliciously" may be used either conjunctively or disjunctively, although the statute uses them disjunctively (State v. Nickleson, 45 La. Ann. 1172, 14 So. 134; State v. Philbin, 38 La. Ann. 964; State v. Price, 37 La. Ann. 215); and it is sufficient if the indictment uses either of the words alone (State v. Philbin, 38 La. Ann. 964).

The unnecessary use of descriptive words such as "feloniously" (State v. Keen, 95 N. C. 646; Staeger v. Com., 103 Pa. St. 469), "unlawfully" (State v. Philbin, 38 La. Ann. 964), or "unlawfully, wilfully, and feloniously" (State v. Battle, 126 N. C. 1036, 35 S. E. 624) is simply surplusage.

(v) The Structure or Property Burned — (a) In General. It is necessary to aver what was burned,[7] but it is sufficient to describe a building in the language used in the statute on which the indictment is founded,[8] and though the statute prohibits the burning of particularly designated buildings, it is sufficient to allege that the building was used as such a building.[9] The indictment may, without duplicity, charge in one count the burning of a number of buildings, caused by the act of accused in setting fire to one.[10] maliciously, and feloniously set fire to, with intent then and there to burn, etc., instead of "did," is good, in arrest of judgment, the error being merely clerical. People v. Duford, 66 Mich. 90, 33 N. W. 28.

Where an unnecessary charge of "setting fire" is included, the omission of the word "fire" will not vitiate, since the whole clause may be rejected as surplusage. Polsten v. State, 14 Mo. 463.

Describing building in alternative.— Charging a burning to have been of a "certain house or outhouse" is bad, as being in the alternative. Horton v. State, 60 Ala. 72; Whiteside v. State, 4 Coldw. (Tenn.) 175. But see State v. Moore, 61 Mo. 276, holding that an indictment is not fatally defective for describing the property burned as a "house or building" where the words are evidently used in a synonymous sense, and to designate the same object.

Mill-house.— An indictment describing the property burned as a certain "mill-house," is sufficient. Ford v. State, 112 Ind. 373, 14 N. E. 241.

The averment must be proved as laid.— Thus, an indictment charging the burning of a dwelling-house is not supported by proof of the burning of a building not a dwelling-house (Com. v. Hayden, 150 Mass. 332, 23 N. E. 51; People v. Handley, 93 Mich. 46, 52 N. W. 1032; State v. Young, 9 N. D. 165, 82 N. W. 420), an averment of burning a "building" is not supported by proof of burning a "dwelling-house" (State v. Atkinson, 88 Wis. 1, 58 N. W. 1034. Though the contrary is intimated in Com. v. Smith, 151 Mass. 491, 24 N. E. 677), an indictment for setting fire to a "cock of hay" cannot be sustained under a statute making it an offense to set fire to a "stack of hay" (Reg. v. McKeever, 15 Ir. R. C. L. 86), nor, upon an indictment for burning a barn with grain or corn in it, can a prisoner be convicted upon proof that he burned a crib with corn in it (State v. Laughlin, 53 N. C. 354); but, an indictment for burning, in the night-time, a building erected for public use, is sustained by proof of burning in the night-time a building removed by a city, and afterward fitted up as a school-house and engine-house (Com. v. Horrigan, 2 Allen (Mass.) 159). And an information for arson, which describes the property burned as "a two-story wooden storehouse building," is sustained by proof that the building had two stories, with no communication between them, and that the lower one, which was set on fire, was used as a storehouse, while the upper was used as a lodging-house (State v. Biles, 6 Wash. 186, 33 Pac. 347).

8. People v. Russell, 81 Cal. 616, 617, 23 Pac. 418 (holding that when an information charged, in the language of the statute, that defendant burned a "building" it was sufficient without describing the building, according to the statutory definition, as one "capable of affording shelter to human beings, or appurtenant thereto, or connected with an erection so adapted"); State v. Temple, 12 Me. 214; State v. Jaynes, 78 N. C. 504; State v. Bedell, 65 Vt. 541, 542, 27 Atl. 208, the last case holding that an indictment for setting fire to a school-house, under Vt. Rev. Stat. § 4128, making it an offense to set fire to a town-house, school-house, or "other building erected for public use," is good, though it fails to charge that the school-house was erected for public use.

Building.— An allegation of burning a "flouring, grist, and corn mill-house," is a sufficient description of a "building" (Jordan v. State, 142 Ind. 422, 41 N. E. 817), but a "sawmill" is not necessarily a "building" (State v. Livermore, 44 N. H. 386).

"Corn-crib" and "corn-pen" may be used synonymously. Cook v. State, 83 Ala. 62, 3 So. 849, 3 Am. St. Rep. 688.

Jail.— In charging the burning of a jail it is sufficient to describe it as "the common gaol and county prison in the said county of New Kent." Com. v. Posey, 4 Call (Va.) 109, 2 Am. Dec. 560.

Purpose for which building occupied.— The word "saloon" is not sufficiently expressive of the purpose for which the building was used (State v. O'Connell, 26 Ind. 266), but if a building is called a "stable," the designation is sufficient to describe its uses (Dugle v. State, 100 Ind. 259; State v. Smith, 28 Iowa 565).

Describing realty as personalty.— It is not a material variance that a building which was realty was alleged to be personalty. Kruger v. State, 135 Ind. 573, 35 N. E. 1019; Ford v. State, 112 Ind. 373, 14 N. E. 241.

See also Com. v. Goldstein, 114 Mass. 272, holding that an allegation that defendant burned several articles of merchandise, separately specified, charges a single act of burning and not as many separate acts as there are different articles named.

(B) How Described — (1) IN GENERAL — (a) HOUSE OR DWELLING-HOUSE — aa. Generally. By the common law it was not necessary to aver that the house burned was a dwelling, but only that a house was burned;[11] but where, by statute, the crime can be committed only on a dwelling-house it must be so alleged.[12]

bb. Separate Apartments. Where there is no interior communication between different parts of the same building which are separately occupied, the parts are to be regarded as separate buildings, and should be so described.[13]

(b) CHURCH. In an indictment for burning a meeting-house it is not necessary to allege that the place was then continued to be used as a place for public worship. Its use for any other purpose would be matter of defense.[14]

(c) Unfinished Structure. An indictment is good which alleges that defendant set fire to and burned "a building erected for a dwelling-house, and not completed or inhabited."[15]

(2) CONTENTS. If the act is made punishable only when the building contains other property, the fact that it contains such property should be alleged;[16] and where the statute distinguishes between the burning of a building and the contents thereof, it must definitely appear whether the burning was of the building itself or of the contents.[17]

(3) LOCATION. It must affirmatively appear that the building burned was within the jurisdiction of the court;[18] but it is not necessary to allege that the Avant v. State, 71 Miss. 78, 13 So. 881, holding that an indictment which charges that defendant set fire to and burned a certain cotton-house, in which was then and there a designated quantity of cotton, the said cotton-house and cotton being the property of one named, with the intent to injure the person named, is an accusation of the arson of the house, not the cotton. But see People v. Didieñ, 17 How. Pr. (N. The locality is sufficiently stated when the indictment avers that defendant, "at P, in the county of H, did . . set fire to and burn a certain barn" (Com. v. Lamb, 1 Gray (Mass.) 493); that defendant "at the township aforesaid," etc., "one barn, of the property of one Nicholas Ryerson, not parcel of the dwelling-house of the said Nicholas Ryerson, there situate, wilfully and maliciously did burn" (State v. Price, 11 N. App. 1, 8 S. W. 23, 8 Am. St. Rep. 427).

building burned was within the curtilage of a dwelling,[19] unless that fact is made essential to the crime, or affects the degree.[20] Neither is it necessary, in an indictment for burning an outhouse, to state whether such outhouse was situated within or without a city, town, or village, where such fact affects only the punishment.[21]

(VI) PRESENCE OF HUMAN BEING. It is not necessary to allege that the building was occupied unless the statute expressly or impliedly makes the presence of a human being an ingredient of the offense,[22] but a statutory requirement in this respect must be strictly complied with.[23]

(VII) VALUE OF PROPERTY. It is only necessary to allege the value of the property burned, or attempted to be destroyed, when the value enters into the degree of the crime or affects the punishment;[24] but, under statutes distinguish-

Location of dwelling in indictment for burning barn.— An indictment for burning a barn situated at a certain place, which was within the jurisdiction of the court, and alleged to be "within the curtilage of the dwelling-house of said Peck," need not also aver that the dwelling-house was at that place. Com. v. Barney, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 480.

Variance.— The venue of the offense is not sufficiently proved by evidence showing merely that the outhouse alleged to have been burned was at a point thirty-five or forty feet from a dwelling-house, which was located in the county laid in the indictment (Green v. State, (Ga. 1899) 34 S. E. 563), and where the indictment describes the house as in the sixth ward, and the proof shows it to be in the fifth ward, there is a fatal variance (People v. Stater, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 401).

The words "in which there was at the time no human being," may be rejected as surplusage where the statute makes the burning of an inhabited dwelling-house arson, whether there is at the time any human being in it or not. Paine v. State, 89 Ala. 26, 8 So. 133.

Names of occupants of house endangered.— An indictment charging that defendant burned his own house, thereby endangering the safety of houses belonging to other persons, is sufficient without giving the names of such other persons. Baker v. State, 25 Tex. App. 1, 8 S. W. 23, 8 Am. St. Rep. 427.

Where the punishment may be increased if bodily injury ensues, an indictment is not bad for duplicity because it charges that the house, when burned, contained a little child, which was seriously injured by the fire. Beaumont v. State, 1 Tex. App. 533, 28 Am. Rep. 424.

Sufficient averments.—An averment "which was at the time occupied by Alfred Phillips, who was lodged therein," is equivalent to an allegation in the statutory form — that is to say, "in which there was at the time a human being," and is sufficient (Childress v. State, 86 Ala. 77, 83, 5 So. 775), as is an averment in an indictment for burning a penitentiary that, at the time when the fire was set, certain officers, servants, and employees of the state did usually lodge there (State v. Johnson, 93 Mo. 73, 5 S. W. 699).

In an indictment for burning several houses, an allegation that there were "within the said dwelling-houses some human being" imports that there was a human being in each. Woodford v. People, 62 N. Y. 117, 118, 20 Am. Rep. 464 [affirming 3 Hun (N. Y.) 310, 5 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 539].

ing the lesser degrees by money value, it is rather the value of the property sought to be burned than the amount actually consumed that is controlling.[25]

(VIII) Ownership of Property—(A) Necessity of Averring—(1) In General. Both at common law and under statute, the ownership of the building or property burned must, ordinarily, be averred and proved as laid,[26] and a defect in this respect may be taken advantage of by motion in arrest.[27]

(2) In Case of Public Building. In the absence of statute[28] no allegation of ownership is necessary in the case of public buildings.[29]

(B) How Stated. In view of the common-law conception of the crime,[30] it has been held that the premises should, ordinarily, be alleged to be the property of the occupant in possession in his own right, and not of the real owner,[31]

Arson by tenant or occupant.— An indictment against a tenant for arson in burning the leased building must allege such tenancy (Mulligan v. State, 25 Tex. App. 199, 7 S. W. 664, 8 Am. St. Rep. 435); but it has been held sufficient in such case to allege that the landlord was the owner of the house (People v. Simpson, 50 Cal. 304).

Ownership may be laid in a servant residing in the building on leased premises (Davis v. State, 52 Ala. 357), in one having title by descent and in the dowress jointly (People v. Eaton, 59 Mich. 559, 26 N. W. 702), in one who held the property in trust, although defendant had a contingent interest in it, and was occupying it (Lipschitz v. People, 25 Colo. 261, 53 Pac. 1111), in a wife in possession during her husband's absence (May v. State, 85 Ala. 14, 5 So. 14), in a widow having an unassigned dower interest, and the right to the dwelling as a mansion-house (State v. Moore, 61 Mo. 276; State v. Gailor, 71 N. C. 88, 17 Am. Rep. 3), in one in possession under an oral gift (Wyley v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. 514, 31 S. W. 393), in a bankrupt, although the house has been included in the assignment (Rex v. Ball, 1 Moody 30), in a partnership (People v. Greening, 102 Cal. 384, 36 Pac. 665; Kruger v. State, 135 Ind. 573, 35 N. E. 1019, and in a tenant of property occupied jointly with the landlord (Shepherd v. People, 19 N. Y. 537); but not in one working a farm on shares, whose mere right is to deposit the crops in the buildings (People v. Smith, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 226), or in the proprietor of a stable and one of his tenants jointly where the greater part of the stable was in the rightful occupancy of another (Com. v. Wade, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 395).

Property of person of same name as defendant.—An indictment, describing the property destroyed as the property of a person of the same name as defendant, will not be quashed, on the ground that the property belongs to defendant, where it does not affirmatively appear that the owner of the property is the same person as defendant. Com. v. Jacoby, 11 York Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 162.

Lawfulness of occupation.— In an indictment for burning the dwelling-house of another, where such house is lawfully occupied, the fact that such occupation was lawful should be distinctly alleged. Lacy v. State, 15 Wis. 13.

Insufficient averment of ownership of personalty.— An indictment charging that defendant "set fire to a great amount of rags, . . . in the cellar under the . . . building situated on the north half . . . of lot 4, . . . owned by Margaret Grady," avers that G was the owner of the building, and not of the rags. State v. Tennebom, 92 Iowa 551, 61 N. W. 193.

32. Owner or occupant.— In some states the premises may be charged to be the house of either the owner or occupant. People v. Fisher, 51 Cal. 319; Harvey v. State, 67 Ga. 639; Avant v. State, 71 Miss. 78, 13 So. 881; State v. Carter, 49 S. C. 265, 27 S. E. 106. See also Com. v. Elder, 172 Mass. 187, 51 N. E. 975; State v. Kroscher, 24 Wis. 64.

Owned by one and occupied by another.— If it be alleged that the dwelling-house is owned by one and occupied by another, this is sufficient. State v. Barrett, (Del. 1899) 47 Atl. 381; State v. McCarter, 98 N. C. 637, 4 S. E. 553. But, in People v. Myers, 20 Cal. 76, 78, it was said that an indictment charging defendant with burning a dwelling-house which "was then and there the property of one Lemon, and was then and there the dwelling-house of one Chinaman," was bad for uncertainty as to whether the building burned was the dwelling-house of L or C, and could not be made good by any rejection for surplusage.

Possession by cotenant.— In an indictment under the statute for arson of a crib, ownership is properly laid in one tenant who had actual possession and exclusive occupancy of the premises on which it was situate, under the contract with the cotenant, though the fee was in the two jointly, as tenants in common. Adams v. State, 62 Ala. 177.

Where the name of the owner is immaterial it need not be proved even though alleged. People v. Handley, 100 Cal. 370, 34 Pac. 853.

33. Brown v. State, 79 Ala. 51; Sampson v. Com., 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 385.

34. Cunningham v. State, 117 Ala. 59, 23 So. 693, holding that, in such case, a charge restricting the jury to one of the counts, where there is no evidence that separate offenses were committed, is properly refused.

35. Com. v. Hamilton, 15 Gray (Mass.) 480.

"the property of," "owned by," "in possession of,"[36] or simply "of"[37] a person named.

(IX) CONCLUSION. An indictment for arson, in burning a stable, must conclude "against the form of the statute," etc., otherwise it will be bad, on error.[38]

2. JOINDER OF COUNTS. Where the offenses charged in the several counts of an indictment are not repugnant, but grow out of the same transaction, and are mere variations of the statement of the same act, such counts may be joined, although some of them charge the offense as a felony and others as a misdemeanor,[39] or though some charge an actual burning and another a solicitation and inciting to commit the crime.[40]

B. Burning With Intent to Defraud Insurer[41] — 1. IN GENERAL. An indictment for burning property with intent to defraud the insurer must allege facts which show that accused is brought within the terms of the statute with such certainty as to identify the offense, and distinguish it from other transactions.[42]

2. OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY. When the statute ignores it, an allegation of ownership is not necessary;[43] but, when it is alleged that defendant is the owner, it has been held that the averment must be proved as laid.[44]

3. INTENT. It should be alleged that defendant acted with intent to injure the insurer.[45]

4. DESCRIPTION OF INSURER. It has been held that the indictment should aver that the insurer is a corporation, if such be the fact,[46] or that it is a partnership, if such be the fact, composed of certain individuals, giving their names.[47] It seems, however, that it need not be averred whether the company is domestic or foreign,[48] or that the insurer was authorized to do business in the state;[49] and it is no ground for arrest of judgment, on an indictment for arson committed with intent to defraud an insurance company, that there was a variance between the name of the company as given in the indictment and as proved on the trial.[50]

5. EXISTENCE OF INSURANCE ON PROPERTY. It must be alleged that the property burned was, at the time, insured against fire;[51] but the indictment need not aver that accused held a valid policy, or any policy,[52] nor need the policy be set forth according to its tenor.[53]

C. Attempt.[54] It is sufficient to charge the attempt in the language of the statute defining the offense,[55] and the particular manner in which the attempt was made need not be pointed out.[56] In one count may be included what defendant did himself and what he solicited another to do, in making the same attempt,[57] or a charge of breaking and entering a building, as well as an attempt, in the building, after the breach and entry, to set fire to it.[58]

IV. EVIDENCE.

A. Burden of Proof and Presumptions. Where a building is burned, the presumption is that the fire was caused by accident rather than by the act of the accused, accompanied by a deliberate intent;[59] but it is also presumed that one intends the natural consequence of his act,[60] and an intent to injure the owner or Omission cured by verdict.— An omission of the allegation that the property was at the time insured is a defect which cannot be raised after verdict of guilty. State v. Jessup, 42 Kan. 422, 22 Pac. 627.

Sufficient averments.— An allegation that the goods burned were "then and there insured" in a corporation "theretofore duly established" sufficiently alleges an insurance by a corporation legally existing, and bound by the policy, at the time of the fire (Com. v. Goldstein, 114 Mass. 272), and an allegation that defendant burned his own house, the said house "being at the time insured," is sufficient, without alleging the facts in relation to the insurance (Baker v. State, 25 Tex. App. 1, 8 S. W. 23, 8 Am. St. Rep. 427).

insurer may be inferred from the deliberate act of firing.[61] On plea of not guilty, the state must show that the accused was at a place where he could have committed the act,[62] and it has also been held that it must prove that he had no permission or authority from the owner to burn the house.[63] Where a human being was placed in the building burned a few hours before the fire, the presumption is that he was still there at the time of the fire.[64]

B. Admissibility — 1. In General — a. Facts in Issue and Relevant Thereto. The extent of the conflagration may be shown [65] and, on the trial of an indictment for burning an uninhabited building, where a dwelling was endangered, it may be shown that the fire was actually communicated to the dwelling, to establish that the latter was endangered.[66] Opinion evidence as to the incendiary origin of the crime is inadmissible,[67] and testimony, although suggesting an incendiary origin, should not be received where nothing appears to connect defendant with the arson.[68]

Simultaneous firing of several buildings.— Where a dwelling and two outhouses were so close together that the burning of one must have resulted in the destruction of the others, it was competent, in a prosecution for burning the dwelling, to show that the three buildings were fired simultaneously. 68. Gawn v. State, 13 Ohio Cir. Ct. 116, 7 Ohio Cir. Dec. 119.

69. State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153, 17 Atl. 483.

Admissions to the effect that accused was present at the place of the fire at an earlier hour than admitted by him (Com. v. Allen, 128 Mass. 46, 35 Am. Rep. 356); that, on the night of the fire, he used a team which the evidence associated with the perpetrator of the crime (State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153, 17 Atl. 483); or that he was near the farm on which the burned property was located (People v. Eaton, 59 Mich. 559, 26 N. W. 702), are admissible; but a statement, made several months after his barn was burned, that defendant had a good insurance on his house, and it might go to blazes with the barn, is not an admission that he burned the barn (Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173).

Mutilation of books which would show the interest of defendant in the insured property which he is charged with burning is pertinent to the issue, if done by, or at the instance of, defendant. People v. O'Neil, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 422, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 119, 6 N. Y. Crim. 274 [affirmed in 112 N. Y. 355, 19 N. E. 796, 20 N. Y. St. 754].

Making claim and swearing to proof of loss is competent on the trial of an indictment for burning, or aiding and abetting another to burn, property with intent to defraud the insurer (Stitz v. State, 104 Ind. 359, 4 N. E. 145; Searles v. State, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. 331); as is evidence of previous demands on other insurers for losses occurring at other fires (Reg. v. Gray, 4 F. & F. 1102). It may also be shown that defendant claimed that the insurance money should be paid to him, and not to another who was entitled to it; and that he stated that he "was willing to sacrifice a little of it if they would make a settlement with him then and there." People v. Fitzgerald, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 139, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 1020, 12 N. Y. Crim. 524.

Possession of property and incendiary materials.— Evidence of the possession of goods similar to those in the building immediately before the fire (State v. Vatter, 71 Iowa 557, 32 N. W. 506), or of the possession, immediately after the fire, of materials similar to those used in kindling the fire (Morris v. State, 124 Ala. 44, 27 So. 336; State v. Gillis, 15 N. C. 606; Halleck v. State, 65 Wis. 147, 26 N. W. 572) is admissible; but it is error to exclude evidence of defendant explaining the removal of the goods (People v. Fournier, (Cal. 1897) 47 Pac. 1014). So, where there was evidence that defendant was seen to approach the building with a jug in her hand, and pour oil therefrom, to which she set fire, evidence that the jug was formerly in possession of her husband is admissible as evidence of the prisoner's identity. Thomas v. State, 107 Ala. 13, 18 So. 229.

of a merely argumentative character,[70] or of the conduct of the accused or of other facts having no tendency to implicate him,[71] should not be received; but evidence of the conduct of the accused prior to, at, and immediately subsequent to, the fire is, in general, admissible.[72] So, too, evidence tending to show that, from existing conditions or prior occurrences, the fire might well have been of accidental origin is admissible.[73] Evidence cannot be received to exculpate[74] or incriminate[75] another, or where it has no tendency to implicate defendant any more than several others.[76] The rule excluding secondary evidence applies to the admission of oral statements of value, where they are contained in a written application to the insurer;[77] but such evidence is admissible to show the contents of policies where accused refuses to introduce them on his trial for burning property with intent to defraud the insurer.[78]

(II) Acts and Declarations of Accomplices. Facts tending to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice, although not otherwise directly bearing on the main fact tried, are admissible.[79] So, the joint act of several may be shown on the trial of one,[80] and, on the trial of several, it is not necessary to show a conspiracy before introducing evidence implicating only some of defendants,[81] though, until a connection between the parties is established, the act of one, indicating a motive for the offense, cannot be received against the other.[82] After the existence of a conspiracy is established, the acts and statements of the accomplice, done, made, or said in furtherance of the execution of the crime, or subsequently in relation thereto, are admissible.[83]

That the accused, on his preliminary examination, gave an account of his whereabouts on the night of the fire that was inconsistent with his former statements may be shown. People v. Eaton, 59 Mich. 559, 26 N. W. 702.

That defendant's clerk forbade the removal of goods from the store burned is incompetent, in the absence of any evidence that defendant authorized him to do so, other than the statement of a person that he was told by defendant to desist from carrying out goods. Bluman v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. 43, 21 S. W. 1027, 26 S. W. 75.

70. Thus, it was error to admit evidence of the amount of goods saved from a house that was burned at the same time as defendant's store, to corroborate evidence that defendant obstructed the removal of goods from his store. Bluman v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. 43, 26 S. W. 75, 21 S. W. 1027.

71. Thus it was error to admit evidence tending to show that defendant had used personal violence upon a female servant in his household, one of the persons whom it was claimed he had procured to set the fire. People v. Fitzgerald, 156 N. Y. 253, 50 N. E. 846 [reversing 20 N. Y. App. Div. 139, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 1020].

75. U. S. v. White, 5 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 73, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,676.

76. Thus, evidence of the habits of a watchdog, or of his acts on the night of the fire, is not admissible in connection with, or corroboration of, evidence that defendant had previously said, while declaring his intention to burn the building, that he must do so soon after leaving the place, and before the dog forgot him. Com. v. Marshall, 15 Gray (Mass.) 202.

77. Thus verbal statements of defendant as to the value of goods insured, made to the agent of the insurance company, are not admissible in evidence upon the trial of defendant for attempting to set fire to the insured goods, where the written application for insurance contains a statement as to the value of the goods, and is offered in evidence, or is present in court. People v. Jones, 24 Mich. 215.

80. Thus an affidavit made jointly by defendant and the secretary of a corporation, to which defendant had sold the business carried on in the building which he was charged with burning, for the purpose of obtaining insurance thereon, is as competent evidence against defendant as if made by himself alone. People v. O'Neil, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 422, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 119, 6 N. Y. Crim. 274 [affirmed in 112 N. Y. 355, 19 N. E. 796, 20 N. Y. St. 754].

(III) Experiments. The court may, in its discretion, receive experimental evidence,[84] but it is error to receive evidence of an experiment made under conditions entirely different from those existing at the time of the fire.[85]

2. Motive. Evidence of the prisoner's pecuniary condition,[86] the fact that accused owned a policy of insurance upon the building burned,[87] and especially that he procured overinsurance,[88] is admissible upon the question of motive on a trial for burning property with an intent to defraud the insurer thereof. So, the fact that the building burned contained papers prejudicial to the interests of accused,[89] or the pecuniary relations existing between the owner of the building burned and relatives of the insured who had property stored therein,[90] may be shown. And on the trial on an indictment for setting fire to a jail, the indictment containing the charges for which accused was in jail is admissible on the question of intent.[91] Accused, having given evidence that others had equally as strong motive to commit the offense, is not entitled to give the names of such persons.[92]

A false statement made by one of defendants after the fire, to the import that the barn was not insured, is no part of the res gestæ, and should not be received against another defendant (Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173), and a statement of the principal, after the fire, that he had hired the accused to burn the property, not made in connection with any efforts of the principal to obtain insurance, are inadmissible as against the accused (Searles v. State, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. 331).

The admission of drafts, drawn by defendant, for the purpose of showing his financial condition at the time of the fire, was not error where most, if not all, of the indebtedness evidenced by the drafts was shown by defendant's testimony to have existed at that time. State v. Hull, 83 Iowa 112, 48 N. W. 917.

The pendency of a suit concerning the title should not have been introduced to show a motive to defraud, when the time for taking proofs had expired some time before the fire, and the answer denied the equity of the bill. A fortiori, evidence of a suit brought subsequent to the fire was improper. Amount of stock owned by defendant.— In a prosecution for burning insured property, the amount of stock owned by defendant in the company to which he had sold the property is competent as tending to show the interest of defendant in the insurance. People v. O'Neil, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 422, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 119, 6 N. Y. Crim. 274 [affirmed in 112 N. Y. 355, 19 N. E. 796, 20 N. Y. St. 754].

The amount of defendant's loss, and the value of stock remaining, as ascertained in the course of an adjustment of the loss, in the presence and with the assistance of defendant, is admissible on the question of motive. People v. Levine, 85 Cal. 39, 22 Pac. 969, 24 Pac. 631.

Insurance on another building.—On a prosecution for burning one's building with intent to get the insurance thereon, evidence that the building of a third person, in which the fire started, was also insured, was admissible. People v. Fournier, (Cal. 1897) 47 Pac. 1014.

New York.— Shepherd v. People, 19 N. Y. 537. But the jury cannot consider the question of overinsurance of defendant's property, where the only evidence thereof is that, in the proofs of loss, the property was valued at less than the insured amount, and there is no evidence that such proofs referred to all the property insured. People v. Kelly, 11 N. Y. App. Div. 495, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 756.

Rebuttal.— Where, on a trial for arson, in order to show a malicious motive, evidence was introduced that defendant had in the building a stock of goods worth only five hundred dollars, which was insured for two thousand dollars, evidence offered in rebuttal that the goods were mortgaged for one thousand seven hundred dollars was held immaterial, since the money received from insurance might be advantageous to pay off the mortgage notes. 3. Other Crimes — a. In General. Evidence of other crimes is not admissible,[93] unless committed in furtherance of the plan to burn[94] where the arson was committed in aid of a purpose to accomplish the other crime.[95] Where, however, the evidence is restricted to that purpose, it may be shown that defendant possessed the skill, tools, and opportunity to construct an implement used at the commission of another crime.[96]

b. Other Fires. While evidence that other fires occurred in the vicinity at or about the same time as the burning of the building alleged in the indictment,[97] or that the same or other property of accused or prosecutor was on fire on previous or subsequent occasions,[98] is not generally admissible in the absence of anything to show defendant's connection with the charge for which he is on trial, yet, if it tends to directly connect defendant with the burning alleged in the indictment,[99] to establish intent,[1] or to show the incendiary origin of the crime,[2] it may be received. So, evidence of the burning of other property belonging to the same owner at almost the same time is admissible to show that the two fires were parts of a scheme concocted and carried out by accused.[3]

c. Previous Attempts. A previous attempt to burn a building may be shown to establish intent, if accompanied by evidence of circumstances tending to implicate defendant on the former occasion,[4] and evidence of a previous conspiracy to burn the same building is admissible.[5]

4. Property Burned — a. Character. Testimony tending to fix the description of the building is proper,[6] and the character of the surrounding buildings may be shown to establish the fact that the building burned was a dwelling-house.[7]

b. Contents. It is improper to admit evidence of the contents on the trial of an indictment for burning a building, where the character of the building is not controverted.[8]

d. Ownership. Testimony of ownership is irrelevant where the lawfulness of the possession is not questioned;[10] but, where proof is necessary and the deed cannot be produced, a registered copy is competent to prove ownership of the property,[11] which may even be proved by parol.[12]

5. Threats and Prior Relations. It has been held that threats made by the accused[13] against the person or property of the prosecutor[14] may be shown, not only for the purpose of proving malice, but to connect accused with the commission of the offense.[15] Similarly it may be shown that unfriendly relations existed between accused and the owner of the building,[16] or the insurer case holding that, in an indictment for arson in the third degree, where the building is designated as a "corn-crib," proof that "corn and fodder were kept in it" is relevant and proper to show that the building was such a one as was described in the indictment; but that proof of what was in it at the time it was burned is irrelevant, and should be excluded. 14. Threats against adjacent property.— It has been held that evidence of threats made by accused against the owner of a building in immediate proximity to the burned structure, and which caught on fire, is relevant (Bond v. Com., 83 Va. 581, 3 S. E. 149); but, in a prosecution of accused for burning his own building to defraud his insurer, evidence that he had made threats against the owners of buildings in the vicinity, which buildings were burned about the same time as his own, is inadmissible to establish a presumption that he is guilty of the offense charged (State v. Smalley, 50 Vt. 736).

The fact that ownership of the property was afterward changed does not render inadmissible evidence of prior threats of accused to burn the same building. State v. Fenlason, 78 Me. 495, 7 Atl. 385.

Rebuttal.— On trial of an indictment for burning a court-house and records, including a decree of sale of real estate of the accused, it was error to refuse to admit, in rebuttal of testimony of a declaration of the prisoner that "he had three ways of heading the Kingwood lawyers," a certificate of protection in bankruptcy granted to accused. thereof,[17] or between accused and one who had property stored therein at the time of and prior to the burning;[18] but it is improper to inquire into the cause of the quarrel.[19] The existence of friendly relations, without reference to the time at which such feelings were entertained, cannot be shown to establish want of motive.[20]

C. Weight and Sufficiency. Arson may be proved by circumstantial evidence,[21] but the evidence must be sufficient beyond a reasonable doubt to convict defendant.[22]

V. TRIAL.

A. Questions of Law and Fact. It has been held that, after proper instructions from the court as to the legal meaning of the terms, it is a question for the jury to determine whether there was a burning,[23] whether the building burned was within the curtilage,[24] whether an incomplete structure was so far advanced as to be a building[25] or was a dwelling-house,[26] and whether defendant had the nec-

202, holding that, where it appeared that defendant had beaten his stepdaughter, and driven her from his house, and that the house burned was that in which the stepdaughter had taken refuge, defendant's treatment of his stepdaughter was admissible in order to show a motive for the burning.

Lapse of a long time between the acts manifesting hostile relations and the commission of the offense does not affect the admissibility of such evidence. Hudson v. State, 61 Ala. 333.

Ill-will of defendant toward the agent of the owner of the property is inadmissible to prove a motive, in the absence of evidence of threats against the latter, or of any facts tending to show that defendant's ill-will had extended to the owner. State v. Battle, 126 N. C. 1036, 35 S. E. 624.

Refusal to rent building to defendant.— Evidence that prosecutor refused to rent to accused his farm, on which the barn was situated which accused was charged with burning, because he had already leased it, is inadmissible to show a motive of accused for burning the barn. Simpson v. State, 111 Ala. 6, 20 So. 572.

17. People v. Gotshall, 123 Mich. 474, 82 N. W. 274.

18. State v. Emery, 59 Vt. 84, 7 Atl. 129.

19. State v. Hannett, 54 Vt. 83.

20. Com. v. Cornelly, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 77, 42 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 34.

It is improper to inquire into the friendliness of defendant's family with prosecutor's wife. Bell v. State, 74 Ala. 420.

21. Whitfield v. State, 25 Fla. 289, 5 So. 805; Meeks v. State, 103 Ga. 420, 30 S. E. 252; Carlton v. People, 150 Ill. 181, 37 N. E. 244, 41 Am. St. Rep. 346.

22. Green v. State, 111 Ga. 139, 36 S. E. 609; Boatwright v. State, 103 Ga. 430, 30 S. E. 256; Clark v. State, 37 Ga. 191; State v. Johnson, 19 Iowa 230.

Existence of insurance corporation.— The act of incorporation, with proof of user, is sufficient to establish the existence of the corporation (Carncross v. People, 1 N. Y. Crim. 518), and testimony that a party was acting as the agent of an insurance company, effected an insurance, and delivered the policy to the insured, is sufficient to authorize the jury to find the de facto existence of the corporation, and the execution and delivery of the policy of insurance by its de facto agent (People v. Hughes, 29 Cal. 257).

Intent.— The fact that defendant, four months before the fire, advised certain persons to remove property from the building and others to insure adjoining property, does not necessarily indicate an intention to burn the building. People v. Doneburg, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 613, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 438.

Motive.— Proof that the buildings were insured (Martin v. State, 28 Ala. 71), or overinsured (Stitz v. State, 104 Ind. 359, 4 N. E. 145; People v. Kelly, 11 N. Y. App. Div. 495, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 756) does not establish a motive for the owner to burn them, unless it is shown that he knew of the insurance or overinsurance. Neither is the fact that prosecutor had not fully settled with defendant for work done by the latter a sufficient motive. Ross v. State, 109 Ga. 516, 35 S. E. 102.

Ownership.— Proof of possession, unquestioned, is sufficient evidence of property in the alleged owner of the premises burned to sustain a verdict of guilty. State v. Taylor, 45 Me. 322. Production of the title-deed to the premises is not necessary, in addition to proof of the owner's occupation at the time of the fire. State v. Burrows, 1 Houst. Crim. Cas. (Del.) 74.

23. Com. v. Betton, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 427.

24. Cook v. State, 83 Ala. 62, 3 So. 849, 3 Am. St. Rep. 688; Com. v. Barney, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 480.

25. Com. v. Squire, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 258; Reg. v. Manning, L. R. 1 C. C. 338, 12 Cox C. C. 106, 41 L. J. M. C. 11, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 573, 20 Wkly. Rep. 102.

26. State v. McGowan, 20 Conn. 245, 52 Am. Dec. 336.

An appellate court will not review the question whether the building was a dwelling-house, and whether it was the property of the person alleged to be the owner, after these matters have been submitted to the jury. Joan v. Com., 136 Mass. 162. But, essary intent.[27] It is also a question for the jury to determine whether a motive for the crime was disclosed.[28]

B. Instructions. The instructions should define the crime and explain its constituent elements;[29] but the term "curtilage" need not be defined without request,[30] and, having given the code definition, the court may refuse to charge that arson is a crime against the dwelling-house.[31] While a conviction should not be authorized upon a finding of facts of a less criminal nature than those comprised in the definition,[32] it is proper to confine the instructions to the highest degree where the evidence is indisputable as to the existence of the facts constituting that degree,[33] or to refuse a charge to acquit if the evidence does not sustain a conviction for the higher degree where the offense is alleged in several degrees.[34] On the other hand, it is error to authorize a general verdict of "Guilty" where the indictment sets out the offense in different degrees, and it is doubtful to which degree the evidence is applicable.[35] All matters of defense should, upon request, be incorporated in an instruction;[36] but it is not error not to touch upon a possible defense, in the absence of any evidence thereof.[37]

VI. PUNISHMENT.

Arson, at common law, was a felony punishable with death.[38] The punish-where an indictment contained two counts — one for burning a barn, parcel of the dwelling-house, and one for burning a barn not parcel of any dwelling-house — and accused was convicted of the former offense, and the appellate court found that the building was of the latter character, a new trial was ordered. State v. Stewart, 6 Conn. 47.

27. State v. Phifer, 90 N. C. 721.

28. People v. Burton, 77 Hun (N. Y.) 498, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 1081, 60 N. Y. St. 544; State v. Roberts, 15 Oreg. 187, 13 Pac. 896.

29. Wilful.— The instructions in a prosecution for arson should define the meaning of the word "wilful" as therein used. Erwin v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1901) 61 S. W. 390.

Malice.— Since, in arson, the law presumes malice from the wilfulness of the act, without specific proof thereof, it was proper to refuse a requested instruction defining malice, that the evidence failed to show malice, that malice was a necessary ingredient, and that it was not necessarily implied from the fact that defendant wilfully set fire to the building. Morris v. State, 124 Ala. 44, 27 So. 336.

The instructions should be construed as a whole, however, so that the omission of the word "maliciously" in one part of the charge, where it is properly used in another, is not prejudicial (Young v. Com., 12 Bush (Ky.) 243); and an instruction wherein the court used the term "set fire to" instead of "burn," is unobjectionable where the subsequent instructions told the jury that it was necessary that a burning should have occurred (State v. Babcock, 51 Vt. 570).

30. State v. Shaw, 31 Me. 523.

31. People v. Lee Hung, (Cal. 1883) 1 Pac. 155.

32. Thus, if the statute fixes the value as an element of the crime, an instruction that, if the property is "of some value," the jury shall find defendant guilty, is erroneous. Burger v. State, 34 Nebr. 397, 51 N. W. 1027.

33. Cunningham v. State, 117 Ala. 59, 23 So. 693; State v. Nolan, 48 Kan. 723, 29 Pac. 568, 30 Pac. 486.

34. Thus, where an indictment charges arson both in the first and second degrees, and value is a material element only of the higher offense, a charge authorizing an acquittal, on reasonable doubt as to the value of the property, is properly refused. Hudson v. State, 61 Ala. 333.

35. Carter v. State, 20 Wis. 647.

36. Thus, where there is evidence tending to show that defendant was indisposed, it is error to give an instruction, ignoring the alleged indisposition, to the effect that if defendant was within a certain distance of the building burned, and knew of the fire, and did not go with the others and aid in saving the property, the jury might consider that fact as a circumstance indicating guilt (McAdory v. State, 59 Ala. 92); and where, on the trial of a defendant for setting fire to a guard-house, the issue was whether he attempted to burn a hole in the door solely for the purpose of effecting his escape, or set fire to the house maliciously and with intent to burn it, and the court, in its charge, after stating in detail a number of alleged acts of defendant, instructed the jury they should look to the circumstances and to the conduct of defendant in determining what his intention was, the court should also instruct the jury they might look to defendant's statement, and decide whether or not the statement successfully rebutted any inferences of guilty intention, provided there were such, which might be drawn from the testimony (Washington v. State, 87 Ga. 12, 13 S. E. 131).

37. People v. Jones, 123 Cal. 65, 55 Pac. 698.

38. 1 East P. C. 1015; 1 Hale P. C. 566.

Benefit of clergy was allowed by 25 Edw. III, c. 4, but was taken away by 23 & 25

ment is now governed by statute and may be either death,[39] imprisonment at hard labor,[40] or fine.[41] Punishment within the limits prescribed by statute cannot be said to be excessive.[42]

ART. The employment of means to a desired end; the adaptation of powers in the natural world to the uses of life.[1] (Art: As Subject of Patent, see PATENTS. Terms or Words of, see CONTRACTS; STATUTES.)

ART AND PART. A term used in Scotland and the north of England, where one charged with a crime, in committing the same, was both a contriver of, and acted his part in it.[2]

ARTESIAN WELL. See BOUNTIES; WATERS; WELL.

ARTICLE. One thing of many;[3] one item of several;[4] distinct portion or part.[5]

Hen. VIII, and, notwithstanding the latter statute was repealed for a time by 1 Edw. VI, it was revived by 6 Edw. VI. State v. Bosse, 8 Rich. (S. C.) 276; Com. v. Posey, 4 Call (Va.) 109, 2 Am. Dec. 560; 1 Hale P. C. 573. But a prisoner indicted under 22 & 23 Car. II, c. 7, for burning a house in the night-time, is entitled to his clergy. State v. Bosse, 8 Rich. (S. C.) 276; State v. Sutcliffe, 4 Strobh. (S. C.) 372.

39. Where the jury recommend that the death penalty be commuted to life-imprisonment, it is the duty of the court to commute the death penalty. Stallings v. State, 47 Ga. 572, holding that the death penalty for arson may be commuted, irrespective of whether the conviction was founded on circumstantial evidence or not.

40. State v. Nolan, 48 Kan. 723, 29 Pac. 568, 30 Pac. 486, holding that the prisoner may be so confined in the penitentiary, although the statute does not specify the place of confinement.

Minimum duration of confinement.— Under a statute fixing the punishment as imprisonment "for life or for any term of years," the minimum period of imprisonment is two years. People v. Burridge, 99 Mich. 343, 58 N. W. 319.

Place of confinement where defendant a woman.— Under Mass. Rev. Stat. c. 143, § 18, it was held that a woman convicted of arson under Mass. Stat. (1852), c. 259, should be imprisoned for life in the county jail or house of correction.

41. Under Ala. Crim. Code, § 4491, the only punishment which can be imposed on a conviction for arson in the third degree is a fine of not exceeding two thousand dollars. Leonard v. State, 96 Ala. 108, 11 So. 307.

42. Ledgerwood v. State, 134 Ind. 81, 33 N. E. 631; Harbin v. State, 133 Ind. 698, 33 N. E. 635.

Statutes construed.— Under the Illinois act of 1859, which declared that any owner setting fire to a building, with intent to defraud an insurance company, "shall be deemed guilty of arson, and punished accordingly," it was held that the punishment should be that enumerated in the criminal code for wrongfully burning property, and not that for wrongfully setting fire to property with intent to destroy the same. McDonald v. People, 47 Ill. 533.

The North Carolina act of 1846, chapter 70, providing that any one unlawfully burning an uninhabited building shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, altered 1 N. C. Rev. Stat. 347, so far as the latter declared the burning of a mill-house to be a felony, and reduced the punishment therefor from death to fine and imprisonment. State v. Upchurch, 31 N. C. 454.

The Tennessee act of 1865, chapter 5, section 4, which increased the penalty for burning a dwelling-house or bridge, did not repeal, and had no effect on, the provisions of the code applicable to the burning of buildings other than dwellings. Hall v. State, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 552.

1. Piper v. Brown, Holmes (U. S.) 20, 21, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,180.

"A polite or liberal art is that in which the mind or imagination is chiefly concerned, as poetry, music and painting." New Orleans v. Robira, 42 La. Ann. 1098, 1100, 8 So. 402, 11 L. R. A. 141.

"A useful or mechanical art is that in which the hands and body are more concerned than the brain." New Orleans v. Robira, 42 La. Ann. 1098, 1100, 8 So. 402, 11 L. R. A. 141.

As used in our patent acts and constitution "the word 'art' means a useful art, or a manufacture which is beneficial" (Smith v. Downing, 1 Fish. Pat. Cas. 64, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,036), as examples of which are mentioned in Jacobs v. Baker, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 295, 19 L. ed. 200, "the art of printing, that of telegraphy, or that of photography."

Especially when used without any qualifying adjective or phrase, the term is used "to signify art in its higher manifestations, or art par excellence, as it is represented in works of art by those who are distinctively denominated artists." Almy v. Jones, 17 R. I. 265, 266, 21 Atl. 616, 12 L. R. A. 414.

ARTICLES OF FAITH. See ARTICLES OF RELIGION.

ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT. The formal statement of the charges against a public officer, put forward as the basis of proceedings to remove him.[13]

ARTICLES OF PARTNERSHIP. A written agreement by which the parties enter into a partnership upon the conditions therein mentioned.[14] (See, generally, PARTNERSHIP.)

ARTICLES OF RELIGION or OF FAITH. The system of faith of the Church of England, more commonly known as the Thirty-Nine Articles.[15]

ARTICLES OF ROUP. In Scotch law, the conditions under which property is exposed to sale by auction.[16]

ARTICLES OF SET. In Scotch law, an agreement for a lease.[17]

ARTICLES OF THE NAVY. A system of rules prescribed for the government of the navy.[18] (See, generally, ARMY AND NAVY.)

ARTICLES OF THE PEACE. A complaint made or exhibited to a court by a person who makes oath that he is in fear of death or bodily harm from some one who has threatened or attempted to do him injury.[19]

ARTICLES OF WAR. A system of rules prescribed for the government of the army.[20] (See, generally, ARMY AND NAVY.)

ARTICULATE SPEECH. An uttered sound produced by the human voice.[21]

6. Wetzell v. Dinsmore, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 193, 195.

"It is derived from the Greek, the original or radical word meaning 'to join' or 'to fit to' as a part." Wetzell v. Dinsmore, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 193, 195.

"It is a word of separation to individualize and distinguish some particular thing from the general thing or whole of which it forms a part, as an article in an agreement, an article of faith, an article of a newspaper, or an article of merchandise." Wetzell v. Dinsmore, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 193, 195.

In common usage it is applied "to almost every separate substance or material, whether as a member of a class, or as a particular substance or commodity." Junge v. Hedden, 146 U. S. 233, 13 S. Ct. 88, 36 L. ed. 953 [affirming 37 Fed. 197]. But its use in this sense is said to be comparatively modern. Wetzell v. Dinsmore, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 193, 195 [citing Allison Am. B. Elements of Offense — 1. Assault — a. In General — (i) Attempt or Offer. Mere preparation to commit a violent injury upon the person of another, unaccompanied by a physical effort to do so, will not constitute an assault;[3] but there must be an attempt or offer, though interrupted[4] — the commencement of an act, which, if not prevented, would produce a battery.[5]

(ii) Force and Violence — (a) Must Be Physical. The force or violence attempted or offered must be physical,[6] and no words, of themselves, can constitute an assault.[7]

(b) Kind of Physical Force — (1) In General. The kind of physical force employed is immaterial. It has been held that it may consist of striking,[8] a well-founded apprehension of physical injury,[30] nor need there be any fear created,[31] provided injury is actually inflicted.[32]

b. Aggravated Assault — (i) In General. An aggravated assault at the common law is one that has, in addition to the mere intention to commit it, another object which is also criminal — as an assault with intent to kill, maim, or wound, or the like[33] — but these are now commonly made distinct offenses by statute,[34] and any circumstance of aggravation, in the manner or character of an assault, by which it exceeds the incidents of a common assault as distinguished from an assault with intent to commit some distinct offense other than battery, may be justly said to render it of an aggravated nature.[35] In order to support a conviction for an aggravated assault there must be an act upon which aggravation supervenes, and with which it is in some way connected.[36]

(ii) By Adult on Female or Child. An assault is, by statute, aggravated when committed by an adult male upon the person of a female or child, or by an adult female upon the person of a child. Within such a statute an adult is one who has attained the full age of twenty-one years,[37] and the word "child" must be taken in its ordinary sense, and not as synonymous with "minor."[38] To constitute the offense under the first clause there must be an assault,[39] which may consist of violent and indecent liberties or familiarities,[40] on a female,[41] and the person committing the assault must be an adult male,[42] except when a female, in connection with an adult male, joins in assault on another female, when, as all present and participating in an assault are principals, the first female may be convicted of aggravated assault.[43]

(III) By Means Inflicting Disgrace. By statute an assault is aggravated if made with a whip or cowhide or by means such as to inflict disgrace on the person assaulted.[44] If made with a whip or cowhide no disgrace in fact need be shown,[45] but if made by other means it must be shown that a sense of shame or constraint was produced.[46]

(IV) Cutting or Stabbing. When the offense of cutting or stabbing is made an aggravated assault there must exist an intent to cut or stab,[47] and the assault must be committed with a weapon with which a person may be wounded by cutting or stabbing.[48] Malice against the individual cut is not essential, general malice being sufficient.[49] To constitute stabbing, the knife need not enter further than to penetrate the skin and draw blood.[50]

(V) Indecent Assault. To constitute the offense of assaulting a female child, and taking indecent liberties with her person, the liberties taken need not have been with her private parts, but may be such liberties as the common sense of society would regard as indecent and improper.[51] Where the child is below the age of consent the acts need not be against her consent[52] or positive resistance.[53]

(VI) On Decrepit Person. An assault by a person of robust health or strength on a decrepit person is, by statute, an aggravated assault, and one is decrepit who is disabled, incapable, or incompetent, from either physical or mental weakness or defects, whether produced by age or other causes, to such an extent as to render him comparatively helpless in a personal conflict with a person of ordinary health and strength.[54]

(VII) Shooting. In some jurisdictions shooting is an aggravated assault, and neither malice[55] nor deliberation on the part of defendant[56] is necessary to constitute the offense. Under some statutes there must be both a shooting and wounding,[57] while, under others, no actual injury is necessary.[58] The weapon,

(VIII) To Extort Confession. Where an assault by two or more persons, on an accusation or for the purpose of extorting a confession, is made an aggravated offense, to support such a charge the accusation must be the moving cause.[62]

(IX) When Bodily Harm Is Inflicted. Where an assault becomes aggravated if bodily harm is actually inflicted, there must, to constitute the offense, be an assault,[63] though the injury need not result directly therefrom,[64] and there need not be a specific intent to inflict the injury.[65] To constitute grievous bodily harm it is not necessary that the injury should be either permanent or dangerous, it being sufficient if it is such as to seriously interfere with comfort or health.[66]

(X) When Committed in Court of Justice. An assault is aggravated when committed in a court of justice.[67]

(XI) When Committed in House of Private Family. By statute, an assault becomes aggravated when the person committing the offense goes into the house of a private family and is there guilty of an assault and battery; but, to constitute this offense, a battery must be committed [68] and the person whose residence is invaded must have a family.[69] to intimidate, it is not essential that defendant should expose the pistol, or that the person assaulted should know that his assailant had one.[70]

(XIII) With Dangerous or Deadly Weapon—(A) In General. In some jurisdictions[71] an assault is aggravated if made with a dangerous or deadly weapon. The character of the instrument or weapon with which the assault is committed constitutes the gist of this offense as distinguishing it from simple assault;[72] but, as in simple assault, there must be an attempt or offer to use the weapon,[73] coupled with present ability.[74] This offense involves neither a specific intent[75] nor malice,[76] nor is it necessary that a battery should follow.[77]

(B) What Is a Dangerous or Deadly Weapon. A dangerous or deadly weapon is one likely to produce death or great bodily harm by the use made of it;[78] but a weapon capable of producing death is not necessarily a weapon likely to produce death.[79]

(XIV) WITH INTENT TO INFLICT BODILY HARM. Under some statutes an assault with intent to inflict bodily harm is an aggravated assault, the intent constituting the very gravamen of the offense;[80] but this need not be a specific intent to assault the prosecuting witness[81] or to inflict the particular kind of injury which resulted.[82] Under some statutes, the assault must be with a deadly weapon,[83] and, under others, where no considerable provocation appeared or the circumstances show an abandoned and malignant heart;[84] but the existence of either of these elements is sufficient.[85] As in simple assaults, the force must be unlawful[86] and the ability to inflict the injury must exist,[87] though no actual battery need ensue.[88] It has been held that by the term "great bodily injury" is meant an injury of a graver character than an ordinary battery;[89] and that a "serious bodily danger" is an injury which is attended with danger or gives rise to apprehension.[90]

(xv) With Means Calculated to Inflict Bodily Injury. A premeditated assault with means calculated to inflict great bodily injury is, in some jurisdictions, an aggravated assault. To constitute the offense a premeditated design is necessary;[91] but the use of a dangerous or deadly weapon is not.[92]

(xvi) Wounding. Wounding is, in some jurisdictions, an aggravated assault. To constitute this offense the wounding must be direct,[93] and, where the statute so provides, must have been given with some instrument,[94] though, where the statute relates to wounds with a dangerous weapon, it is not essential that the instrument used should be a technically dangerous weapon, fashioned and used for purposes of offense.[95] To constitute a wound there must be an injury by which the skin is broken,[96] either internally or externally.[97] Malicious intent is not an element of this offense.[98]

But where defendant struck prosecutor on the side of his hat with an air-gun, with great force, by which prosecutor was wounded, but the wound was made by the violence with which the hat was struck, the weapon used by the prisoner never coming in contact with the head of the prosecutor, this was a wounding within the latter statute. But see Alston v. State, 109 Ala. 51, 52, 20 So. 81, holding that an instruction that "the least touching of another person, wilfully or in anger, is a battery," is vitiated by the disjunctive "or," since touching one wilfully is not sufficient to constitute a battery.

Touching in lust.— "To touch a virtuous wife in the way of illicit love is a far greater outrage than to touch her in anger, and equally a breach of the peace. It is violence proceeding from lust, instead of violence proceeding from rage. It issues from the passion which, unrestrained, culminates in rape, instead of from the passion which culminates in homicide." Goodrum v. State, 60 Ga. 509, 511, holding that it is an assault and battery for a man, without any innocent excuse, to put his arm around the neck of another's wife against her will.

8. Com. v. Brungess, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 13; Weaver v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1894) 24 S. W.

the intended injury may be bodily pain, constraint, a sense of shame, or other disagreeable emotion of the mind.[9] When injury is inflicted the intent to injure[10] and malice[11] are presumed.

3. Attempt. As an assault is itself an attempt to commit a crime, there can be no such offense as an attempt to commit a simple assault;[12] though it seems that there may be an attempt to commit an aggravated assault;[13] and an indictment will lie for attempting to induce another to commit assault and battery on a third person,[14] or for attempting to provoke one having the present ability to do so upon one's self.[15]

C. Persons Liable. Mere presence at the time an assault was made will not render one guilty of an assault;[16] but one present, ready to aid if necessary,[17] or actually aiding and encouraging the principal offender,[18] or in pursuance of an unlawful conspiracy,[19] is equally as guilty as the actual perpetrator. So, too, one who incites or procures another to commit an assault, though not present at its commission or otherwise participating therein, may be indicted and punished as a principal.[20]

D. Jurisdiction — 1. In General. At common law a common assault was an indictable offense;[21] but jurisdiction over this offense has been variously affected by statutes.[22]

22. In Arkansas, under the constitution of 1836, an assault and battery could only be punished by presentment or indictment (Durr v. State, 6 Ark. 461; Rector v. State, 6 Ark. 187), but, by the act of Dec. 16, 1846, which

2. Necessity of Prosecutor. A court of summary jurisdiction has no power to convict of a common assault unless the party aggrieved, or some one on his behalf, complains of the assault, with a view to the adjudication of the court was held not to apply to indictments pending at its passage (Gooch v. State, 8 Ark. 448), exclusive jurisdiction was conferred on justices of the peace (State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436).

In California the superior court has jurisdiction of an aggravated assault amounting to a felony, and this is not affected by the fact that the offense charged includes a lesser offense. People v. Fahey, 64 Cal. 342, 30 Pac. 1030.

In Hawaii the supreme court has concurrent jurisdiction with the police and district courts over an assault with a weapon obviously and imminently dangerous to life. Reg. v. Quai, 8 Hawaii 282.

In Illinois circuit courts have original jurisdiction in all cases of misdemeanors, which include assaults (Kennedy v. People, 122 Ill. 649, 13 N. E. 213); but, under an earlier statute, exclusive jurisdiction over assaults and assaults and batteries was conferred on justices of the peace (Carpenter v. People, 5 Ill. 197).

In Indiana, under an early statute, a common assault was not indictable, but was in the exclusive jurisdiction of justices of the peace. State v. Hailstock, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 257. By the act of 1849 such jurisdiction was given to justices in certain counties. Smith v. State, 2 Ind. 251 (holding that the circuit court did not acquire jurisdiction by charging in the indictment an intent to commit a felony); Nelson v. State, 2 Ind. 249. The circuit court now has jurisdiction. Hinkle v. State, 127 Ind. 490, 26 N. E. 777, holding that such jurisdiction is not ousted by the act of March 9, 1889, which provides that, upon conviction of assault and battery, in the courts named in the section, the punishment shall be as therein stated.

In Iowa the offense of assault and battery is triable summarily before a justice of the peace or other officer authorized by law, on information under oath, without indictment or the intervention of a grand jury, and not otherwise (State v. Lee, 37 Iowa 402; State v. Carpenter, 23 Iowa 506; State v. Burdick, 9 Iowa 402); but aggravated assaults are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the district court (State v. Carpenter, 23 Iowa 506).

In Kansas an assault is a criminal offense (Kan. Gen. Stat. p. 325, § 43) of which the district court has original jurisdiction, concurrent with justices of the peace. State v. Finley, 6 Kan. 366. But in Guy v. State, 1 Kan. 448, it was held that assault and battery is not indictable.

In Maine the supreme judicial court has original jurisdiction, by indictment, of the offense of assault and battery, concurrent with the jurisdiction of municipal and police courts and trial justices, when the offense is not of a high and aggravated character. State v. Jones, 73 Me. 280.

In Missouri an act declaring assaults and batteries not indictable, but punishable before justices of the peace in a summary manner, was held constitutional. State v. Ledford, 3 Mo. 102.

In New Hampshire the court of common pleas has no original jurisdiction in cases of assault and battery; but complaints for such offenses must be first made before a justice of the peace (State v. Hilton, 32 N. H. 285; State v. Berritt, 17 N. H. 268; State v. Taylor, 16 N. H. 477); but, to give the court jurisdiction of an indictment for an offense the description of which necessarily includes an assault, it is not necessary that there be a preliminary examination before a magistrate; and a conviction upon such an indictment for assault and battery, simply, does not oust the court of jurisdiction (State v. Webster, 39 N. H. 96).

In North Carolina the superior court has jurisdiction of aggravated assaults, and failure to prove the particular charge does not oust the jurisdiction acquired by virtue of the form of the indictment. State v. Phillips, 104 N. C. 786, 10 S. E. 463; State v. Ray, 89 N. C. 587. And, under the provisions of the act of 1879, c. 92, the superior, inferior, and criminal courts have concurrent jurisdiction with justices of the peace of assaults and assaults and batteries, where a justice has not taken jurisdiction within six months after the commission of the offense. State v. Moore, 82 N. C. 659.

In Texas, if the offense be of an aggravated nature, a justice cannot take cognizance of the case for the purpose of trial and punishment, but is required to recognize the offender, with sufficient sureties, to appear at the district court. Norton v. State, 14 Tex. 387.

In England justices have power to hear and determine charges of assault and battery, except where a question as to the title to land arises (Reg. v. Pearson, L. R. 5 Q. B. 237, 11 Cox C. C. 493, 39 L. J. M. C. 76, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 126), and the fact that the evidence, if believed, discloses a felony does not affect their jurisdiction (Anonymous, 1 B. & Ad. 382, 20 E. C. L. 527; Wilkinson v. Dutton, 3 B. & S. 821, 9 Jur. N. S. 1104, 32 L. J. M. C. 152, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 276, 113 E. C. L. 821).

In Canada, on information for attempt to do grievous bodily harm, justices of the peace have no right to alter the charge to one of simple assault. Miller v. Lea, 25 Ont. App. 428, 2 Can. Crim. Cas. 282.

Presumption on appeal.— Under Mass. Stat. (1887), c. 293, § 1, providing that "municipal, district, and police courts shall have jurisdiction, concurrently with the superior court, of cases of assault and battery with a weapon dangerous to life, where there is no intent shown to commit any other offense," upon it,[23] or it affirmatively appears that the aggrieved person has declined or refused to prefer a complaint;[24] but an indictment may be preferred by a person other than the person aggrieved, or some one on his behalf.[25]

E. Indictment, Information, or Complaint — 1. For Assault, or Assault and Battery[26] — a. In General. It is not necessary to charge in so many words that defendant was guilty of an assault or assault and battery,[27] though the acts constituting the offense must be alleged.[28] Such facts must be stated a complaint for an assault with a weapon dangerous to life, which does not charge an intent to commit any other offense, is apparently within the final jurisdiction of a police court; and where the record of such court shows that it took final jurisdiction it will be presumed on appeal, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that there was no evidence that defendant had an intent to commit any other offense. b. Joinder of Offenses—(i) In General. The indictment may, in separate counts, charge a simple and an aggravated assault,[32] or distinct grounds of aggravation,[33] and is not bad for duplicity because it charges facts constituting more than one offense where the lesser is necessarily included in the greater,[34] or where,

Statutory form held bad.— The form of indictment for aggravated assault prescribed by the "common-sense" indictment bill [Gen. Laws XVIIth Legislature, p. 61, § 11, form No. 4] is unconstitutional. Allen v. State, 13 Tex. App. 28.

Charging in alternative.— When the indictment charges that defendant, by force, poured, or attempted to pour, "a mixture of spirits of turpentine and pepper" on the person of the prosecutrix, this is, in legal effect, the averment of an assault and battery, and the alternative averments are authorized by the statute. Murdock v. State, 65 Ala. 520.

"Cut, penetrate, and wound" equivalent to "stab."— The words "cut, penetrate, and wound," in an indictment, sufficiently describe the offense of malicious stabbing, under Tenn. Code, § 4608. Starks v. State, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 64.

Omission of the word "did," before the words "assault, beat, and maltreat," was supplied by intendment. State v. Edwards, 19 Mo. 674.

Use of "and" for "an."— An indictment charging that defendant "did commit and assault," otherwise good, is sufficient. Such use of the word "and" for "an" will not be noticed on general exceptions, either on motion to quash or in arrest of judgment. Martin v. State, 40 Tex. 19.

Use of "inflict" for "cause."— Under a statute providing that whosoever shall "cause" any grievous bodily harm to any person, etc., shall be guilty of felony, an indictment alleging that "A unlawfully and maliciously did 'inflict' grievous bodily harm," not using the statutory word "cause," is sufficient. Reg. v. Bray, 15 Cox C. C. 197.

Circumstances constituting manslaughter if death ensued.— In an indictment for an assault with a dangerous weapon, under circumstances which, if death had ensued, would have constituted manslaughter, the circumstances should be set out; but it is not necessary to state that the offense was committed "in a case and under circumstances," etc. Jennings v. State, 9 Mo. 862. though the language is applicable to either of the statutory offenses, it clearly indicates the commission of but one act by defendant.[35]

(II) Mutual Assaults. Two persons who commit an assault and battery, each on the other, at the same time, if severally charged, may be joined in the same indictment; but it is not proper to do so, because the court has discretion to quash the indictment.[36]

(III) Separate Assaults—(A) By Two Persons. Separate assaults by two or more persons may be united in one indictment by separate counts.[37]

(B) On Two Persons. An indictment may properly charge an assault to have been committed on two persons at the same time,[38] or separate assaults on different persons may be united in one indictment by separate counts.[39]

(C) By Two Persons on Two Persons. An indictment in one count against two or more persons for assault and battery upon two or more is not bad, as embracing distinct offenses,[40] and either of defendants may be convicted for his own separate assault on the persons named in the indictment.[41]

c. Joinder of Defendants. Several defendants may be jointly indicted,[42] though they need not be;[43] but the verdict and judgment must be several.[44]

d. Particular Averments—(I) Description of Defendant. In describing defendant the omission of a middle letter,[45] or the use of a name idem sonans with his own,[46] is not fatal; and, where he is equally well known by either of two names, an indictment charging him by either of such names is sufficient.[47] The indictment is not invalidated by an omission to repeat defendant's name in the clause, "the said ——— then and there having," etc.[48]

(II) Time. Time, not being of the essence of the offense,[49] need not be specifically alleged;[50] but it must be shown that the offense was committed within the period of limitation[51] and prior to the finding of the indictment.[52]

(III) Place—(A) In General. The place where the offense was committed must be alleged;[53] but, where a county is named in the caption, an allegation that

See also Com. v. Creed, 8 Gray (Mass.) 387; Com. v. Tolliver, 8 Gray (Mass.) 386, 69 Am. Dec. 252, in which cases it was held that an indictment for an assault in one town is supported by proof of an assault in another town in the same county, and within the jurisdiction of the court.

No venue to the wounding is necessary, in the offense charged was committed at, etc., in said county sufficiently states the county wherein it was committed.[54] So, too, a sufficient allegation of venue in a first count under which defendant was found not guilty will supply a defect in this respect in a second count.[55]

(B) In Public — Terror of Citizens. In an indictment for assault and battery it is not necessary to allege that the offense was committed in public, or to the terror of citizens.[56]

(IV) Description of Party Assaulted. Where the name of the party injured is known, it should be stated in the indictment or information,[57] and proved substantially as alleged;[58] but, if unknown, it may be alleged that the name of the person injured is unknown to the grand jury.[59] It is sufficient, how-an indictment for feloniously wounding, if there be a venue to the assault and stroke which caused it. State v. Bailey, 21 Mo. 484; State v. Freeman, 21 Mo. 481.

Stating the venue as defendant's place in the township of Townsend, not adding "in the county of Norfolk," or equivalent words, was sufficient, for Consol. Stat. Upp. Can. c. 3, § 1, subs. 37, shows that township to be within the county. Reg. v. Shaw, 23 U. C. Q. B. 616.

A clerical mistake whereby it is stated that defendant did assault and wound one "Dunlop," by means of which wounding the life of the said "Craighead" was then and there endangered, etc., is cured by section 27 of article 4 of the act of practice in criminal cases, the mistake being merely clerical, and in no way tending to prejudice the substantial rights of defendant. State v. Craighead, 32 Mo. 561. See also Reg. v. Crespin, 11 Q. B. 913, 12 Jur. 433, 17 L. J. M. C. 128, 63 E. C. L. 913.

Omission of a final letter in the christian (Hall v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. 594, 25 S. W. 292) or surname (Hart v. State, 38 Tex. 382) does not vitiate the indictment.

Defect available on motion in arrest.— The failure of an indictment to set out the name of the person assaulted, or to aver that it is to the grand jurors unknown, being a substantial defect, may be taken advantage of by a motion in arrest of judgment. Ranch v. State, 5 Tex. App. 363.

It is sufficient if the information charge an assault and battery "upon the person of this informant," where it is signed and verified by him, even though his name does not appear in the body thereof (State v. McKinley, 82 Iowa 445, 48 N. W. 804), or state that defendants did, "upon one W. H. S. Brown, make an assault, with intent then and there willfully, maliciously, unlawfully, and feloniously to inflict a great bodily injury," without more specifically stating the person intended to be injured by the assault (State v. Shinner, 76 Iowa 147, 40 N. Presumption.— Where the record shows that an information charged an assault upon Daniel Aneson, and that the evidence proved an assault on Daniel Aueson, but it also appears that the court told the jury that defendant was accused of assaulting Daniel Aueson, it will be presumed that the court read the information aright, and that in copying for printing the clerk had mistaken the letter "u" for the letter "n." ever, if the party is designated by his christian and surname,[60] by a name acquired by reputation,[61] or if the name alleged be idem sonans with the true name, though differently spelled.[62] It need not be specifically averred that such party was a human being[63] or a living person,[64] that he was late of the county,[65] or that he was in the peace of the state.[66]

(v) With Force and Arms. In an indictment for assault and battery the words "force and arms" are not necessary in the description of the offense.[67]

(vi) Unlawfully, Wilfully, Maliciously, Etc. Since the word "assault" carries with it the idea of illegality,[68] an indictment for assault or assault and battery need not allege that it was committed unlawfully,[69] wilfully,[70] maliciously,[71] or the like, except where these terms are required by statute.[72] When the offense

Com. v. Smith, 153 Mass. 97, 26 N. E. 436.

Use of initials and full name.— An indictment is not defective, in describing the person against whom the offense was committed, which sets forth that "defendants . . . feloniously did make an assault upon the person of one J. W. Jones, . . . and him, the said John W. Jones, in fear and danger . . . did put," and afterward refers to him as the "said John W. 72. "Maliciously."— Under some statutes the act must be charged to have been "maliciously" done (Allen v. State, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 21), and an omission in this respect is not cured by the use of the word "feloniously" (Reg. v. Jope, 8 N. Brunsw. 161).

"Rude, insolent, or angry manner."— Under the Indiana statute an indictment for assault and battery must charge, either in direct terms or equivalent words, that the touching was done "in a rude, insolent, or angry manner" (Knight v. State, 84 Ind. 73; Slusser v. State, 71 Ind. 280; Howard v. State, 67 Ind. 401; McCulley v. State, 62 Ind. 428; State v. Wright, 52 Ind. 307; Sloan v. State, 42 Ind. 570; Cranor v. State, 39 Ind. 64; Ford v. State, 7 Ind. is not a felony the word "feloniously" need not be used,[73] and if used may be rejected as surplusage.[74]

(VII) MEANS EMPLOYED — (A) Generally. It is not necessary to state the means with which the assault was committed[75] or the particular manner in which a weapon was employed,[76] though it is not improper to do so.[77] If, however, the means is alleged it must be proved substantially as alleged.[78]

(B) Dangerous or Deadly Weapon. Where an assault is charged to have been committed with a dangerous or deadly weapon the dangerous or deadly character of the weapon must be averred[79] either in the language of the statute,[80]

"Wilfully."— Under some statutes the omission of the word "wilfully" is fatal. State v. Robinson, 104 La. 224, 28 So. 1002; State v. Langston, 45 La. Ann. 1182, 14 So. 137.

State v. Davis, 29 Mo. 391. Where an impossible means is alleged, as where an indictment against several defendants charges that "they, with a knife, which they then and there with their right hand held, made an assault," the indictment is bad. State v. Gray, 21 Mo. 492.

Where two weapons were used the indictment may so charge (Johnson v. State, 35 Ala. 363), and, where the indictment charges an assault to have been committed with several different weapons, it is not necessary to prove that defendant used all the weapons described; and the indictment will be sustained by proving that one of the instruments was used as alleged (State v. McClintock, 1 Greene (Iowa) 392).

(VIII) MATTERS OF AGGRAVATION. An indictment for aggravated assault need not, in so many words, describe the offense as an aggravated assault,[83] but it must charge the matters of aggravation relied on,[84] and must make a case coming within the statute defining the offense.[85] It is also common and proper, in a count charging a simple assault, to insert various matters tending to aggravate the offense,[86] and the insertion of such matters does not affect its legal sufficiency.[87] On the contrary, if proved, it may, in the discretion of the court, justify a heavier punishment;[88] and, when the matters of aggravation are not properly charged in an indictment for aggravated assault, they may be rejected as surplusage and the indictment held sufficient for simple assault.[89]

No description of the weapon's size, etc., is necessary where an instrument, ex vi termini importing a deadly weapon, is mentioned and described in the language of the statute (Sprague v. Com., 22 Ky. L. Rep. 519, 58 S. W. 430; State v. Shields, 110 N. C. 497, 14 S. E. 779; State v. Phillips, 104 N. C. 786, 10 S. Where two grounds of aggravation are alleged proof of either is sufficient. Waechter v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. 297, 30 S. W. 444, 800; Whitten v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1894) 28 S. W. 474.

By adult male on female.— Where the assault is aggravated because committed by an adult male on a female it should be alleged that defendant was an adult male (Gorman v. State, 42 Tex. 221; Blackburn v. State, 39 Tex. 153; Price v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 501, 34 S. W. 622; Schrader v. State, (Tex. App. 1891) 17 S. W. 1101; Lawson v. State, 13 Tex. App. 83; Griffin v. State, 12 Tex. App. 423) and that the person assaulted was a female (Price v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 501, 34 S. W. 622). This need not be done, however, in ipsissimis verbis (Veal v. State, 8 Tex. App. 474), and where the information refers to defendant by the pronoun "his," and to the person assaulted by the pronoun "her," and mentions the latter's vagina, it is sufficiently clear that defendant was a male, and that he assaulted a female (Slawson v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. 176, 45 S. W. 575, 73 Am. St. Rep. 914). So, too, an information which charges the accused with an aggravated assault on one G, and that the accused was "an adult male, and the said E G being then and there a female," is sufficient. Collins v. State, 5 Tex. App. 38.

Committed in court of justice.— A charge that the assault was committed in a "court of justice," describing the court, is a sufficient charge of an aggravated assault. State v. Hunter, 44 Tex. 94. It has also been held sufficient to charge that the assault was made "in a court of justice, then and there being in session," without specifying what court, or whether lawfully in session. State v. Murrah, 25 Tex. 758.

Committed in place of religious worship.— An indictment for aggravated assault is sufficient which charges that it was committed "at Hickory Grove School House," though the evidence shows that it was on a minister in a congregation assembled for religious worship under a brush arbor, a few steps from the school-house. Blackwell v. State, 30 Tex. App. 416, 17 S. W. 1061.

Where an assault on an officer is charged it must be alleged that defendant knew the party to be an officer. State v. Smith, 11 Oreg. 205, 8 Pac. 343; Johnson v. State, 26 Tex. 117.

(IX) INTENT. When the intent is the gravamen of the statutory offense it must be alleged[90] substantially in the words of the statute;[91] but an averment of intent is not necessary when not specifically made an element of the offense or when it may be inferred from the act itself.[92]

(X) CHARGING BATTERY. A defendant cannot be convicted of a battery under an indictment which does not charge a battery;[93] but if a count in an indictment for a common assault would be good with the addition of the battery, it is equally good for the assault without the battery.[94]

(XI) DESCRIPTION OF INJURY. When the statute prohibits the infliction of a wound less than mayhem, an indictment is fatally defective which does not contain the words "less than mayhem;"[95] but, on an indictment for shooting, it is not necessary to describe the wound inflicted.[96]

An indictment for an assault without battery must allege an intent to injure. Hill v. State, 34 Tex. 623.

Not amounting to intent to murder or maim.— In an indictment for an aggravated assault with a deadly weapon it is not necessary to allege that the assault was made under circumstances not amounting to an intent to murder or maim. With intent to commit a felony.— An indictment for assault with intent to commit a felony must state specifically what felony was intended to be committed (Davis v. State, 35 Fla. 614, 17 So. 565; State v. Hailstock, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 257; State v. Child, 42 Kan. 611, 22 Pac. 721); but it is not necessary to make all the averments required in an indictment for the offense itself (State v. Newberry, 26 Iowa 467; State v. Montgomery, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 160). See, generally, ABORTION; HOMICIDE; LARCENY; MAYHEM; RAPE; ROBBERY.

With intent to inflict great bodily injury. — An indictment for assault "with intent to inflict great bodily injury" is not sufficient where it alleges an "intent to beat, strike, wound, and bruise" (State v. Harrison, 82 Iowa 716, 47 N. W. 777), or "to strike and bruise" (State v. Clark, 80 Iowa 517, 45 N. W. 910). It is sufficient where it avers an "intent of doing her great bodily injury" (State v. Carpenter, 23 Iowa 506), or refers to a "personal" instead of a "bodily" injury (State v. Clayborne, 14 Wash. 622, 45 Pac. 303).

93. Bryant v. State, 41 Ark. 359; Young v. People, 6 Ill. App. 434; Furnish v. Com., 14 Bush (Ky.) 180.

Following statutory language is not necessary in charging a battery where words of equivalent import are used. Sloan v. State, 42 Ind. 570, holding that the words "heat, strike, and kick" are the equivalent of "touch." See also State v. Prather, 54 Ind. 63.

(XII) To Damage of Person Assaulted. The indictment need not allege that the offense was to the damage of the person assaulted.[97]

(XIII) Negativing Excusatory Clauses. When these elements enter into the gist of the offense[98] the indictment should aver in substance[99] that the assault was committed without just cause or excuse, or when no considerable provocation appeared, or when the circumstances showed an abandoned and malignant heart.[1]

(XIV) Present Ability. It is not necessary that the indictment should aver that defendant had the present ability to carry his attempt to completion.[2]

(XV) Facts Showing Jurisdiction. When a superior court has jurisdiction only where the offense was committed under certain circumstances, it has been held that such circumstances need not be averred.[3] On the other hand, where a complaint must first be made to a justice of the peace, it has been held that the indictment must show that proceedings on a complaint and warrant were had before a justice of the peace, and that defendant was bound over to the higher court.[4]

(XVI) Conclusion—(A) Summation. An indictment for a felonious assault, which sets forth all the facts necessary to constitute the offense, need not allege that defendant is, or is to be deemed and taken to be, a felonious assaulter.[5]

(B) Contra Formam Statuti. When the indictment is under a statute it should conclude with the words "against the form of the statute;"[6] but these words may be rejected as surplusage when necessary.[7]

2. For Attempting to Provoke Another to Commit.[8] Under a statute making it an offense to provoke, or attempt to provoke, one having the present ability so to do, to commit an assault and battery, an affidavit charging in a single count that defendant "did provoke, and attempt to provoke," is not bad for duplicity.[9]

a complaint for assault or battery has been made to justices, who, after a hearing on the merits,[11] dismiss the complaint and give the party a certificate accordingly,[12] the certificate may be pleaded in bar to an indictment, founded on the same facts,[13] charging assault and battery, accompanied by acts of aggravation.[14]

2. COMPROMISE. The offense of assault and battery, except in certain cases, may be compromised either before or after indictment,[15] but not after conviction.[16]

3. CONSENT. Consent of the party assaulted[17] is a defense[18]— so far, at least, as such party can legally assent[19]— provided the party consenting be not of too tender years[20] or the consent be not obtained by fraud;[21] but each of two persons fighting by consent is guilty of an assault, regardless of who struck the first blow.[22]

than the occasion calls for or if he uses force in doing acts which he is not authorized to do.[65]

b. Bystanders. It being the duty of bystanders to assist an officer when called upon so to do,[66] a bystander so assisting an officer is not guilty of assault, even if the officer's acts are without authority.[67]

10. Preservation of Order at Public Meeting. Under a statute permitting the use of violence for the preservation of order at meetings for lawful purposes, the use of means unnecessarily severe is not justified.[68]

11. Previous Punishment For Contempt. One may be convicted of an assault committed in view of the court, though he has previously been fined for the contempt.[69]

12. Provocation — a. In General. Under some statutes sudden and strong provocation is a defense;[70] but this is no defense when the circumstances show a malignant heart,[71] or when the acts charged are not the immediate result of the provocation.[72]

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Assault and Battery," § 91.

The use of handcuffs on a prisoner who has twice escaped is not such an abuse of an officer's power as will subject him to indictment for assault. State v. Sigman, 106 N. C. 728, 11 S. E. 520.

Tying a prisoner is not, necessarily, an excessive force, but will render the officer liable to an indictment if he so acts to gratify his malice. State v. Stalcup, 24 N. C. 50.

Use of firearms.— Peace-officers are not justified in using deadly weapons, on a mere suspicion that a felony has been committed (Com. v. Megary, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 616), or to prevent the escape of one arrested for a misdemeanor (State v. Sigman, 106 N. C. 728, 11 S. E. 520).

Mere words, however opprobrious, cannot be said to constitute the "considerable provocation" contemplated by the statute relating to assaults to murder, and to inflict bodily harm. Steffy v. People, 130 Ill. 98, 22 N. E. 861. But see Ruble v. People, 67 Ill. App. 438, 439, where it is said: "Words do excite the passions and arouse anger and rage, and while they are not sufficient in law to justify an assault or an assault and battery, yet they are proper for consideration in connection with the conduct of the prosecutor when, as here, it is to be determined whether the defendant is guilty under the statute of acting without considerable provocation."

There is not sufficient provocation where complainant had abandoned his home, and left accused in possession, and then returned and set fire to a fence surrounding the premises, and committed a trespass thereon (Scott v. State, 118 Ala. 115, 24 So. 414); where prosecutor merely struck the first blow (Riddle v. State, 49 Ala. 389); or where a person took hold of another's horse, and turned the horse's head, and, being told by the teamster to let go, did so, and struck the horse on the head with his hand, causing the horse to step back, but not otherwise doing any damage (Com. v. Ford, 5 Gray (Mass.) 475).

Missouri.— State v. Nicolai, 8 Mo. App. 598, where a woman reported to her escort that a man had addressed a rude remark to her, and the escort assaulted the man after he had left the woman's presence.

b. Opprobrious Words or Abusive Language. In the absence of statute, no words, however opprobrious, disgraceful, annoying, or vexatious, will justify an assault or battery,[73] though they may mitigate the punishment.[74] Under some statutes, however, the use of such words may justify a simple assault or battery,[75] but not one of an aggravated nature.[76] This defense is only available between private persons,[77] and is not available where defendant himself first uses opprobrious words.[78] The opprobrious words or abusive language[79] which will justify an assault are such as are used by the person assaulted to the accused at the time of the assault or assault and battery, and not statements published in a paper.[80]

A schoolmaster has a prescriptive right to beat, and an action of assault and battery cannot be admitted against him, unless there be some great excess, some barbarity. In our schools in England many boys have been maimed, yet I never heard of an action against a schoolmaster on that account. Puffendorf, I think, maintains the right of a schoolmaster to beat his scholars."

See 4 Cent. Dig. tit. "Assault and Battery," § 92.

By voluntarily attending school after majority, a pupil waives any privilege, and sub-

parentis children under their control,[83] having regard to the character of the offense[84] and the sex, age, and physical condition of the offender;[85] but he will be liable criminaliter if prompted by malice or other improper motive,[86] if unreasonably severe,[87] if he make use of an improper instrument,[88] or if the punishment result in permanent injury.[89]

b. Of Pauper. The superintendent or keeper of a poorhouse who, without anger and solely for the purpose of preserving discipline, administers moderate physical chastisement to a pauper is not guilty of assault and battery;[90] but he will be guilty if he inflicts such punishment on a female pauper in an indecent manner, even though within the limits of moderation,[91] or if the acts done by him had no connection with the pauper's misconduct.[92]

Misconduct out of school.—Though a schoolmaster has, in general, no right to punish a pupil for misconduct committed after the dismissal of school for the day, and the return of the pupil to his home, yet he may, on the pupil's return to school, punish him for any misbehavior, though committed out of school, which has a direct and immediate tendency to injure the school or subvert the master's authority. St. Rep. 31], in which case it was held that one standing in loco parentis is not criminally liable for punishing a child merely because the punishment be excessive, but that the punishment must also have been inflicted with legal malice, or there must have been some permanent injury; State v. Alford, 68 N. C. 322, holding that such a person was not liable unless the punishment inflicted exceeded the bounds of moderation and tended to cause permanent injury.

Chaining to sewing-machine.—Where defendant kept his twelve-year-old daughter chained to a sewing-machine while she was alone in the house with her infant brother, the punishment was unreasonable. Hinkle v. State, 127 Ind. 490, 26 N. E. 777.

But see Stanfield v. State, 43 Tex. 167, wherein the jury was instructed that if defendant inflicted a castigation on the person of his ward with an unusual instrument, and one that was calculated to inflict serious injuries to his person, they must find him guilty, and this was held error, because the charge made the instrument and not the extent of punishment the test of unlawful correction.

e. Of Seaman. The master of a vessel, while at sea, has a right to give a seaman moderate correction.[93]

14. Recaption of Property. A person may lawfully use so much force as is reasonably necessary to retake his property which has wrongfully been taken by another;[94] but if he use more force than is necessary he will be guilty of an assault.[95]

G. Competency of Witnesses. Upon an indictment for assault the accused, under some statutes, is not a competent witness on his own behalf,[96] while, under others, though a competent witness on a trial for common assault,[97] he is not where the assault is one occasioning actual bodily harm.[98]

H. Evidence — 1. Burden of Proof and Presumptions — a. In General. When defendant sets up in defense no distinct and independent fact, but contends that, on the facts proved by the evidence on both sides, he is not guilty, the burden is on the government to satisfy the jury that the assault and battery were unjustifiable;[99] but, when the assault is proved, the burden is on defendant to show the existence of a sufficient justification.[1]

b. Unreasonableness of Chastisement. When the relation of schoolmaster and pupil, or any similar relation, is established in defense of a prosecution for an assault and battery, the legal presumption is that the chastisement was proper, and the burden of proving unreasonableness or excess rests upon the prosecution.[2]

c. Weapon Used. On an indictment for assault with a deadly weapon, where the weapon used is not, necessarily, deadly, the prosecution must establish its deadly character.[3] Where the assault is alleged to have been committed with a firearm the presumption is that the weapon was loaded,[4] and the burden of proving it to be unloaded is on defendant.[5]

(II) On Behalf of Defendant. The defendant may testify as to the cause and circumstances of the alleged assault,[9] and may show an immediate provocation thereto,[10] provided what took place is not too far removed in time to be part of the res gestæ,[11] though he should not be restricted to the exact point of time when the injury was inflicted.[12] Where an intention to wound is not alleged by the prosecution, disproof of it is inadmissible.[13] He may also introduce evidence in mitigation.[14]

In order to show some motive of resentment on the part of defendant, it was competent for the state to prove that the party assaulted had said, in defendant's hearing, a short time before, "that no honest man would avail himself of the bankrupt act," and

(III) Third Persons. Acts and declarations of third persons who were present and apparently coöperating with defendant,[22] or which tend to show a conspiracy either with[23] or against[24] defendant, are admissible as res gestæ. So, too, the conduct of third persons subsequent to the offense may be shown where it tends to throw light on the offense,[25] but not otherwise.[26]

c. Character of Parties — (I) Defendant. It seems that evidence of defendant's good character is admissible, not only in a case where doubt otherwise exists, but also for the purpose of creating a doubt,[27] or to aid the jury in fixing the measure of punishment;[28] although it has been held that, where the offense is proved by direct and positive testimony, evidence as to the good character of defendant is not admissible.[29]

(II) Party Assaulted — (A) In General. Evidence as to the general reputation for quarrelsomeness of the party assaulted is admissible only when defendant claims to have acted in self-defense,[30] and can never be shown by proof of specific acts.[31] Evidence of his good reputation for peaceableness is admissible where defendant has given evidence that, prior to the difficulty, he had been threatened by prosecutor, and that the latter made a movement as if to draw a pistol before defendant struck him.[32]

(B) As to Chastity. Where the indictment charges an assault on a woman by taking indecent liberties with her person, evidence of her general bad reputation for chastity is admissible in behalf of the defense, on the question of consent.[33]

d. Disposition of Defendant in Cause For Which Arrested. In a prosecution against an officer for assault and battery while making an arrest, evidence to show that the person arrested was convicted[34] or acquitted[35] of the offense charged is irrelevant; but where the charge is of assault upon a police officer, committed while defendant was under arrest for drunkenness, the record of a conviction and sentence of defendant for drunkenness at the time of his arrest is conclusive evidence of that fact.[36]

e. Identity and Appearance of Weapon. Evidence to identify the weapon used is admissible,[37] as is evidence of the appearance of the weapon as bearing on the question of reasonable force.[38]

f. Nature and Extent of Injury. Testimony of the party assaulted as to the nature and extent of his injuries is admissible,[39] as is testimony of a physician in corroboration thereof,[40] and the prosecuting witness may[41] and must, when requested by defendant,[42] exhibit the injured part to the jury. So, too, the prosecution may give evidence of the severity and extent of an injury in order to enable the jury to graduate the punishment to be inflicted.[43]

g. Official Character of Party Assaulted.[44] When there is nothing to show that the prosecuting witness was acting as a peace-officer at the time of the assault, it is error to admit evidence that he was then such an officer.[45]

h. Other Prosecution or Action Relating to Same Transaction. It is proper to show in mitigation of the fine that there is a civil action pending for the same assault;[46] but the record of the conviction of prosecutor for assault and battery on the same day on defendant is not admissible for the purpose of showing that prosecutor assaulted defendant first, and that defendant acted in self-defense.[47] So, too, papers and the justice's docket showing the status of an action brought by defendant to oust prosecutor, and pending at the time of the assault, were properly introduced, as tending to explain the situation when the force was used in recovering premises in possession of the prosecutor.[48]

i. Ownership of Premises or Property. Where there is no pretense that a trespass on land was attempted or resisted, it is proper to exclude testimony as to title to the lands of prosecutor and the lands of defendant;[49] but where it is claimed that the force was used in the defense of property, either real[50] or personal,[51] evidence as to ownership is admissible.

j. Physical Condition of Party Assaulted. The prosecuting witness may testify that she was in an advanced state of pregnancy at the time of the assault on her by defendant, though she, herself, was the aggressor.[52]

k. Violation of Municipal Ordinance. Where recklessness or gross carelessness was at the foundation of the charge against defendant of an assault with a dangerous weapon, the fact that the act was done in violation of a city ordinance was held to be proper evidence for the jury on the question of negligence.[53]

3. Weight and Sufficiency — a. In General. The offense must be strictly proved as alleged;[54] but defendant cannot be acquitted because the proof shows that he was guilty of a graver offense than was charged;[55] and, where the evidence tends to prove an attempt at actual violence,[56] the use of undue force in an otherwise lawful enterprise,[57] or the existence of any of the elements of aggravation,[58] the question of guilt is properly left to the jury, and its verdict of "Guilty" will not be disturbed on appeal. A conviction may be supported by prosecutor's testimony alone,[59] or by that of an accomplice, if corroborated.[60]

b. Matters of Aggravation — (I) Character of Weapon. To warrant a conviction for assault with a deadly or dangerous weapon direct evidence of the character of the weapon is unnecessary, but this may be inferred from other facts and circumstances shown in evidence.[61]

(II) Defendant an Adult Male. Evidence that defendant was a man,[62] or that he was constable of his precinct, discharging the duties of his office,[63] is sufficient proof that he is an adult male.

(III) Intent. Felonious intent need not be shown by direct and positive evidence,[64] and the act itself may be sufficient to establish the intent.[65]

Intent is not sufficiently shown by evidence that defendant had some words with prosecutor, and pushed him down (Rutherford v. State, 13 Tex. App. 92), or when the person injured is the only witness to show the commission of the offense and testifies that defendant did not intend to injure (McConnel v. State, 25 Tex. App. 329, 8 S. Intent to do great bodily harm is not shown

(iv) Official Character of Party Assaulted. The testimony of the person assaulted that he was a field-driver of the town, and was acting as such at the time of the assault and had so acted for many years, is sufficient to prove that he was a field-driver.[66]

(v) Party Assaulted a Female. Proof that the assaulted party was a widow, and that at the time of the assault she had been five months in a pregnant condition, is sufficient to establish the fact that she was a female.[67]

I. Trial — 1. Questions of Law and Fact — a. In General. Whether the acts done constitute an assault;[68] whether there existed the necessary intent[69] and present ability,[70] or the particular intent necessary to constitute an aggravated assault;[71] whether the act was done without considerable provocation;[72] what constitutes great bodily injury,[73] and whether grievous bodily harm might result,[74] are all questions for the jury, under proper instructions. Whether an instrument used in an assault is a deadly weapon is a question of law, where there is no dispute about the facts;[75] but where the character of the weapon — whether dangerous or deadly, or not — is doubtful, or where its character depends on the manner in which it is used, the question whether there was an assault with a dangerous or deadly weapon is to be submitted to the jury.[76]

b. Matters of Justification. It has also been held to be a question of fact for the jury as to whether defendant was justified;[77] whether defendant stood in loco by evidence that defendant had a shotgun with which he jabbed prosecutor, and that he struck the latter several times in the face with his fist (Smith v. State, 58 Nebr. 531, 78 N. W. 1059); that defendant struck a person with his fist and broke his jaw (Reg. v. Wheeler, 1 Cox C. C. 106), or by the fact that prosecutor, in the act of warding off a blow, pushed his hand against a weapon in defendant's hand, and so received a wound on his finger (Reg. v. Day, 1 Cox C. C. 207).

parentis,[78] and whether the punishment was excessive;[79] whether the amount of force used was excessive in making an arrest,[80] or when used in defense of self,[81] a third person,[82] or property,[83] and, in the last case, whether the prosecutor was a trespasser.[84]

2. Pleading to Felony. It has been held that, where a prisoner is indicted for felonious assault, he will not be permitted to plead guilty to a common assault merely, but must plead to the felony; and, if no evidence of the felony is offered, he may be acquitted of the felony and found guilty of the assault on his own confession.[85]

3. Separate Trial. Where the statute provides that any one of several jointly indicted for felony may be tried separately, on application, a defendant may be tried for assault in the absence of his co-defendant;[86] but it has been held that, where several persons are jointly indicted for an assault and battery, and one of them pleads guilty, the others who plead not guilty cannot claim, as a matter of right, to be tried separately from him.[87]

4. Stay Pending Decision in Civil Suit. On an indictment for an assault and battery, the trial will not be stayed because a civil suit is pending to recover damages for the same assault and battery,[88] if the party injured is not to be used as a witness for the government;[89] though, after conviction, the court may, with a view to the measure of punishment, suspend judgment until the decision of the civil action.[90]

5. Election of Offenses. Where one indictment is for two assaults, the state will be compelled to elect;[91] but such election will not be required until after the evidence has been heard,[92] after which further evidence as to the assault selected is admissible on the part of the state.[93]

6. Instructions — a. In General. The court should charge what constitutes the offense as defined by statute,[94] giving the law applicable to the case, and no other;[95] and should also, when the evidence makes such explanation necessary, the articles of the penal code relating to assault and battery, under an agreement that the court might give an oral charge, was error.

Intent.—Where the intent charged in the indictment is not an essential averment (Berry v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1897) 40 S. W. 984), or where the state's evidence showed that the injury was slight and temporary, and that defendant accomplished all that he tried to do (People v. Ross, 66 Mich. 94, 33 N. W. 30), an instruction on intent is not warranted. But where, on a trial for aggravated assault, the state's evidence was that defendant caught a girl eight years old, and held her between his legs; that she tried to get loose; that he used improper language, and exposed his person, the evidence warranted a charge, in the language of the statute, that, when an injury is caused by violence to the person, the intent to injure is presumed, and it rests on the one inflicting the injury to show accident or innocent intention, where the main charge required the jury to find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant intended to injure the girl. Hill v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. 279, 38 S. W. 987, 39 S. W. 666, 66 Am. St. Rep. 803. See also Young v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 24, 19 S. W. 431.

Serious bodily injury.— Where, on a prosecution for aggravated assault and battery, the aggravation alleged being serious bodily injury, it appears that the injury was nearly fatal, a refusal to define "serious bodily injury" is proper. De los Santos v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1895) 31 S. W. 395.

Submitting matters of aggravation not alleged.— It is reversible error to submit to the jury a circumstance of aggravation not alleged in the information. Grayson v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1897) 42 S. Where the instrument is not per se a deadly weapon, the jury should be instructed as to the meaning of the phrase "deadly weapon." Lawson v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1895) 32 S. W. 895; Howard v. State, 18 Tex. App. 348; Kouns v. State, 3 Tex. App. 13.

Sufficient charges.—Where defendants were charged with an assault with "a club and knife," an instruction to the jury that the information charged defendants with making an assault with a deadly weapon, and that, if the jury believed from the evidence that defendants, as charged, made the assault with a deadly weapon, they should return a verdict of guilty, is not erroneous, though the evidence tended to show an assault by one defendant alone, and with a club only. McNary v. People, 32 Ill. App. 58.

Where the court defined a deadly weapon as one likely to produce death or "great bodily injuries," a further statement that such a weapon is one likely to produce death or "injury," is not reversible error as having misled the jury. State v. Rosener, 8 Wash. 42, 35 Pac. 357.

98. Intent.— On a prosecution for assault with intent to wound, it is proper to instruct that the intent with which an act is done is a mental process, and must be inferred from the outward manifestations of the words or acts of the party entertaining them, and the facts attendant on the assault with which it is connected. Clarey v. State, (Nebr. 1901) 85 N. W. 897. And, where the evidence shows that the assault was without provocation, that defendant immediately ran after striking the blow, which broke the nose of the person assaulted, and rendered him insensible, an instruction that one is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his act is proper. People v. Resh, 107 Mich. 251, 65 N. W. 99.

99. Kennedy v. State, 9 Tex. App. 399, holding that a charge: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant committed an assault and battery, . unattended with circumstances of aggravation, they will acquit him of an aggravated assault and battery, and find him guilty of a simple assault," was erroneous, as leaving no option for an acquittal. See also Reid v. State, 9 Tex. App. 472.

A charge assuming the assault is not error where it is conceded that defendant committed the same, and the defense is justification (Spigner v. State, 103 Ala. 30, 15 So. 892), or where the charge, taken as a whole, was such that defendant could not have been prejudiced (State v. Gillett, 56 Iowa 459, 9 N. In a prosecution for an assault on a female child, an instruction that, when an injury is caused by violence to the person, the intent is presumed, and defendant must show the accident, or innocence of the intention, is not erroneous as stating, as a matter of law, that

b. As to Grade of Offense. On an indictment for felonious assault the defendant may be entitled to instructions as to the law relating to the lower grades of assault;[5] but, where the evidence discloses that defendant was either guilty of a more serious offense than simple assault, or was not guilty, the court is justified in failing or refusing to give an instruction as to simple assault;[6] and it has been held that, if such an instruction is given and defendant is convicted of simple assault, the conviction will be reversed.[7] So, too, it is reversible error to submit instructions covering an aggravated assault, where the evidence discloses an assault of a lower grade.[8]

c. As to Matters of Justification. The court may properly refuse to instruct as to matters of justification not raised by the evidence;[9] but, where there is evidence tending to raise the issue, the court should fully and correctly instruct on the right of self-defense,[10] the right to arrest without a warrant,[11] and the effect of accidental striking.[12]

d. As to Punishment. The court should instruct the jury correctly as to the penalty which may be inflicted;[13] but it has been held that the verdict will not be set aside for an error in this respect when it was without prejudice to defendant,[14] or in the absence of a request for an instruction to supply the omission.[15]

7. VERDICT.[16] The verdict may be simply "Guilty,"[17] or "Guilty as charged in the indictment;"[18] but when the verdict attempts to find the facts, it must, to be sufficient, embrace all the necessary elements of the offense,[19] though these need not be found in the precise words of the statute, words of equivalent import being sufficient,[20] and when defendant is convicted of part of the offense charged, and that part is, of itself, an offense substantially alleged in the indictment, he is liable to be sentenced accordingly.[21]

J. Punishment — 1. AT COMMON LAW. In the absence of any statute upon the subject, the common law must control the punishment,[22] and, at common law, ameliorated, but for an offense committed before the code took effect, it was error to give, in charge to the jury, the penalty prescribed by the original code, unless the accused elected to receive that penalty. Guilty of assault and battery.— A verdict of "Guilty of aggravated assault and battery" is good, although no battery is charged or proved. The words "and battery" may be rejected as surplusage. Bittick v. State, 40 Tex. 117. Such a verdict, rendered under an indictment charging in two counts an assault and battery with a shovel and an assault and battery with a shovel with intent to kill, may be referred to either count. State v. Beadon, 17 S. C. 55.

Guilty of indecent assault.— A verdict of "Guilty of an indecent assault" sufficiently describes the offense of taking "any indecent liberties with or on the person of any female," etc., which is made a felony by Minn. Pen. Code, § 245, entitled "Indecent Assault." State v. West, 39 Minn. 321, 322, 40 N. W. 249.

Guilty of shooting.— Where the jury returns a verdict of "Guilty of shooting," on an indictment for an assault and battery drawn in the usual form, judgment will be arrested. State v. Hudson, 74 N. C. 246.

Grade — How determined.— On a verdict of guilty of assault and battery the punishment assessed will determine whether the jury regarded the offense as an aggravated or common assault and battery, without specification in the verdict. Reynolds v. State, 11 Tex. 120. But compare Bowen v. State, 28 Tex. App. 498, 13 S. W. 787, holding that where, on a charge of aggravated assault, the jury determined on a conviction for simple assault, the verdict should have so specified.

"Without justifiable excuse or cause."— A verdict finding defendant "Guilty of assault and battery with a sharp and dangerous weapon, with intent to do bodily harm," is sufficient, without adding that it was "without justifiable excuse or cause," although it is harmless error to require the jury to retire and add said words to such verdict. Amendment.— Where, upon an indictment for a felonious assault by shooting with a pistol with intent to murder, the jury returned a verdict of "Guilty of the assault and battery as charged, but without the felonious intent," it was held that this verdict might be amended by the court during the same sitting by striking out the words "and battery," and, thus amended, was sufficient. The summary mode, by statute, for punishment of assault and battery does not re-

an assault, or an assault and battery, may be punished either by fine or imprisonment or by both.[23]

2. Under Statutes — a. Fining and Imprisonment. The punishment for assault is usually fixed by statute, either by provision in the general statute relating to punishment of criminal offenses,[24] or by provision in the particular statute relating to the offense.[25] Some statutes provide that the punishment must be by fine,[26] others that it may be by fine or imprisonment,[27] and still others that it may be by both.[28]

There is no limitation on the power of the jury in fixing the amount of fine, or the term of imprisonment, except that cruel and excessive punishment, prohibited by the constitution, must not be imposed. Cornelison v. Com., 84 Ky. 583, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 793, 2 S. W. 235. See Chandler v. Com., 1 Bush (Ky.) 41, holding that a fine of fifteen hundred dollars is not excessive where it appears that defendant knocked down and stamped upon a defenseless woman for the purpose of unlawfully taking away her child.

Imprisonment in case of default in payment of the fine is often included in the sentence (Ex p. Kelly, 28 Cal. 414; People v. Sutton, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 95, 24 N. Y. b. Form of Sentence.[29] The fine should be so assessed as to indicate for whose use the money is to be paid,[30] and, under a joint indictment for assault, the jury should assess a several fine against each defendant convicted.[31]

c. Payment of Fine or Discharge of Judgment. One who has been convicted of assault, fined, and imprisoned in default of payment of the fine, may at any time recover his liberty by paying the amount of fine unsatisfied,[32] and it has been held that defendant's confession of judgment, with sureties to secure the fine and costs imposed, will discharge the judgment and sentence.[33]

Hard labor should not be added to the sentence of imprisonment (Ex p. Arras, 78 Cal. 304, 20 Pac. 683; Ex p. Kelly, 65 Cal. 154, 3 Pac. 673), unless specially authorized by statute (Taylor v. State, 114 Ala. 20, 21 So. 947; Ex p. Middleton, (Cal. 1889) 20 Pac. 684; O'Neil v. Com., 165 Mass. 446, 43 N. The place of imprisonment which is usually designated by the statute is the county jail. People v. Aubrey, 53 Cal. 427; Ex p. Kelly, 28 Cal. 414; Ex p. Cox, (Ida. 1893) 32 Pac. 197; O'Neil v. Com., 165 Mass. 446, 43 N. E. 183; State v. Haynie, 118 N. C. 1265, 24 S. E. 183; Matter of Coughlin, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 34).

Sometimes the house of correction (O'Neil v. Com., 165 Mass. 446, 43 N. E. 183), and sometimes the workhouse (White's Application, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 248), is designated as a proper place of imprisonment.

While the punishment must not exceed the maximum amount of fine or the longest term of imprisonment prescribed by statute (People v. Wilson, 9 Cal. 259; Ex p. Cox, (Ida. 1893) 32 Pac. 197; People v. Harrington, 75 Mich. 112, 42 N. W. 1092), it seems that any punishment within the prescribed limits should not be considered excessive, it being within the sound discretion of the jury or the court, as the case may be, to assess or fix the punishment (Baker v. State, 94 Ga. 700, 19 S. E. 887; State v. Akin, 94 Iowa 50, 62 N. W. 667; State v. Boynton, 75 Iowa 753, 38 N. W. 505; State v. Haynie, 118 N. C. 1265, 24 S. E. 536; State v. Roseman, 108 N. C. 765, 12 S. B. Elements of Liability — 1. FOR ASSAULT — a. Attempt or Offer. To create a liability for an assault there must be a threat or offer on the part of defendant to do physical injury.[37]

b. Force and Violence. The force or violence offered must be unlawful[38] and physical;[39] but, beyond this, it may be of any kind or degree.[40]

c. Anger. In the absence of statutory provision, to render one liable the force need not have been used in anger.[53]

C. Persons Liable.[54] Not only the principal actor or actual assailant, but all others who aid, abet, or encourage the wrong-doer, are equally liable with him to the injured party,[55] whether they were present when the wrongful act was done or not;[56] though, in the latter case, the person sought to be charged must have done something which led directly to the assault.[57]

D. Defenses — 1. Accident. It is a general rule of law that an action will not lie when the injury was unavoidable, or was the result of accident, and the party sought to be charged was guilty of no want of care or prudence.[58]

B. Mon. (Ky.) 216); but a direction, by defendant, to persons to go through a certain roadway, and tear down a fence which plaintiff had erected across it, no matter what it cost, and he would stand by them, warrants no implication of an instruction to them to commit an assault and battery on plaintiff (Wagner v. Haak, 170 Pa. 2. Consent.[59] Under some circumstances, the fact that the party seeking a redress agreed or submitted to the assault may constitute a defense;[60] but the consent of one who, at the time, is mentally incapacitated to give it cannot avail the wrong-doer;[61] nor can consent to mutual combat, such fighting being unlawful,[62] though it seems that such consent may be shown in mitigation of damages.[63]

3. Defense — a. Of Property or Possession — (i) In General — (A) Personalty. If one attempts to deprive another of his goods, the latter is justified in laying hands on him to prevent him from so doing, and, if he persists with violence, may use sufficient force to cause him to desist.[64]

(B) Realty. One has no right to use force to acquire possession of realty to which he has a real or fancied right, and of which the person assaulted is in lawful possession,[65] nor, having wrongfully obtained possession, will such mere possession justify him in assaulting the lawful occupant to prevent a reëntry.[66] So, one being on the premises of another, or attempting to enter thereon against the latter's wishes, is liable for any assault or violence which he may commit,[67] and if he commits an assault upon the possessor or his family when the latter attempts to remove him, then, in defending the assault, a wounding is justified.[68]

(II) EJECTING TRESPASSER — (A) In General. It is the undoubted right of a lawful owner, or one claiming title and rightfully in possession,[69] or of an occupant of premises, to retain possession and to use such force as may be reasonably necessary to remove therefrom trespassers or intruders,[70] or persons, originally on it be interposed if, after the ejection, he follow the trespasser up and assault him.[75]

(B) Notice to Depart. If a person enter upon premises wrongfully, or with force and violence, it is not necessary, as a prerequisite to the right to eject, to ask him to leave; but, if his entry was rightful, and he is present with license or permission, it is, generally, regarded as necessary to request him to depart, and allow him a reasonable time so to do, before resorting to force.[76]

(C) Expiration of Tenancy. For necessary force exerted in resisting his reëntry or in removing him, one, whose tenancy has ended or who has no right of lawful occupancy, cannot recover against the landlord in actual possession, though the force used was cotemporaneous with a forcible entry of the latter upon the premises.[77]

b. Of Self. While it is unquestionably the duty of one who has been assailed to endeavor to avoid the use of force if other means of self-protection are immediately available,[78] yet it has been very generally held that he is justified in repelling the assault by the exercise of such reasonable force as may be, or as appears to him at the time to be, necessary, to protect himself from bodily harm,[79]

Misconduct of plaintiff not amounting to assault.— Under the general issue, before a defendant can claim exemption from legal responsibility for beating and wounding plaintiff on the mere ground of misconduct of the latter which does not in law amount to an assault, he must show that he, himself, was wholly free from fault. Phillips v. Kelly, 29 Ala. 628.

A recovery may be had, in cross-actions for an affray, by the assaulted party for the assault and battery first committed on him, and by the assailant for the excessive force beyond what was necessary for self-defense. Dole v. Erskine, 35 N. H. 503.

after the assault had terminated and all danger was past, he struck or beat the aggressor by way of revenge.[83]

c. Of Third Person — (I) Master or Servant. A servant may strike another in order to prevent an injury to his master,[84] or a master may come to the defense of his servant.[85]

(II) Relatives. A person is justified in using sufficient force to protect his wife, children, or other members of his family, though the danger must be such as to induce one exercising a reasonable and proper judgment to interfere to prevent the consummation of the injury.[86] Under like circumstances, a child may interfere to protect his parent,[87] and it has been held that, to prevent a breach of the peace, one may use gentle and moderate force to prevent an assault on his brother.[88]

4. Ignorance Concerning Health of Party Assaulted. It is no defense that the wrong-doer was not aware of the condition of health of the person assaulted.[89]

5. Intoxication. Intoxication is no defense to an action for assault.[90]

6. Other Proceedings For Same Assault — a. Civil. A former recovery in assault and battery is a good plea, notwithstanding subsequent damages, for the consequence of the battery is not the ground of the action, but the measure of the damages.[91]

b. Criminal — (I) Former Acquittal or Conviction. It has been held that, where defendant has been acquitted of felonious assault upon plaintiff, the latter may recover for the civil injury unless he has colluded in procuring the acquittal;[92] but formerly, and in some jurisdictions at the present time, one who, on being convicted in fact,[93] pays the amount adjudged against him or suffers imprisonment is released from liability in a civil proceeding for the same cause.[94]

Change of charge.— Where justices, before whom a charge of "shooting and wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm" is made, change the charge to one of common assault, the person aggrieved not objecting, their certificate of conviction and payment

(II) Certificate of Dismissal. By statute in England[95] and Canada,[96] on a hearing upon the merits[97] of a charge of assault, both parties being in attendance, and after a proper inquiry into the facts of the case, if the charge is dismissed, it is the duty[98] of the magistrate to forthwith[99] grant a certificate of such dismissal, which will be a good defense to a subsequent action for the same assault.

7. Preservation of Order — a. By Peace-Officers. A peace-officer or other person duly empowered is not liable for injuries inflicted by him in the use of reasonably necessary force to preserve the peace and maintain order, or to overcome resistance to his authority;[1] but, if unnecessary violence is used to accomplish the purpose, or he assaults a person without just excuse, he becomes a trespasser and is liable as such.[2] of th fine is not a bar to an action by the person aggrieved for damages. Miller v. Lea, 25 Ont. App. 428, 2 Can. Crim. Cas. 282.

Liability to husband.— One who has been convicted of an assault on a married woman, and has paid the fine imposed, is not liable (because of section 45 of the Offenses Against the Person Act) to the husband for the consequential damages sustained by him. Masper v. Brown, 1 C. P. D. 97, 45 L. J. C. P. 203, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 254, 24 Wkly. Rep. 369.

97. If there has been no hearing on the merits, the magistrate has no jurisdiction to grant the certificate, and, therefore, if it is granted, it is no bar to a subsequent action for the same assault. Reed v. Nutt, 24 Q. B. D. 669, 54 J. P. 599, 59 L. J. Q. B. 311, 62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 635, 38 Wkly. Rep. 621, wherein it was held by Lord Esher, M. R. [Lord Coleridge, C. J., doubting], that, upon the trial of the action in the county court, the judge had power to inquire into the validity of the certificate, and to consider whether the magistrate, in granting it, had acted within his jurisdiction.

What constitutes a hearing.— If the accused pleads not guilty and the prosecutor declines to proceed (Tunnicliffe v. Tedd, 5 C. B. 553, 17 L. J. M. C. 67, 57 E. C. L. 553), or if the prosecutor withdraws the charge before the day fixed for the hearing, but the accused appears and has the charge dismissed (Vaughton v. Bradshaw, 9 C. B. N. S. 103, 7 Jur. N. S. 468, 30 L. J. C. P. 93, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 373, 9 Wkly. Rep. 120, 99 E. C. L. 103) there is a hearing which will authorize the granting of a certificate.

98. The granting of such a certificate is a ministerial, not a judicial, act, and a magistrate is, therefore, bound to grant it. Hancock v. Somes, 8 Cox C. C. 172, 1 E. & E. 795, 5 Jur. N. S. 983, 28 L. J. M. C. 196, 7 Wkly. Rep. 422, 102 E. C. L. 795.

Forthwith.— A certificate applied for five days after a complaint had been dismissed, and granted two days after the application, but dated as of the day upon which the complaint was made, is made out forthwith. Costar v. Hetherington, 8 Cox C. C. 175, 1 E. & E. 802, 5 Jur. N. S. 985, 28 L. J. M. C. 198, 7 Wkly. Rep. 413, 102 E. C. L. 802. It need not be drawn up in the presence of the parties, or applied for by the party against whom the complaint was preferred. Hancock v. Somes, 8 Cox C. C. 172, 1 E. & E. 795, 5 Jur. N. S. 983, 28 L. J. M. C. 196, 7 Wkly. Rep. 422, 102 E. C. L. 795.

Under the Canadian statute, the certificate must be obtained on the first hearing before the justice — one granted on an acquittal on appeal is not a bar. Westbrook v. Calaghan, 12 U. C. C. P. 616.

9. Punishment of Child — a. By One Authorized by Parent. One authorized by a parent to take charge of or control a minor child is not liable for the use of force necessary to enforce the latter's obedience when such force is not unreasonable or excessive.[7]

b. By Schoolmaster. From the very nature of his employment a schoolmaster has the right to adopt reasonable rules to promote good order and discipline,[8] to inflict reasonable corporal punishment for the infraction of such rules,[9] or to require proper submission or prevent subversion of his authority,[10] and, in inflicting the punishment, he may take into consideration the habitual disobedience of the pupil.[11] He is not liable for an error of judgment as to when and to what extent punishment is necessary;[12] but, if the punishment is cruel or excessive and beyond that required by the circumstances, the master is liable for an assault,[13] from which liability he is not relieved by the fact that he acted in good faith and without malice.[14]

that one may use force to overcome opposition to his taking possession of personalty to which he is entitled;[17] that one may not assault another who is removing his property from the premises of the former;[18] and, that if, under such circumstances, the former is assaulted, he may use necessary force to repel the attempt to take the property.[19]

11. Service of Process. An officer may use necessary force to overcome resistance to the service of process,[20] or to place a party in possession under a writ;[21] but is liable for unnecessary force,[22] and cannot resort to violence where he has an adequate legal remedy.[23] So, if an officer does not act in pursuance of legal process,[24] or is not justified by the process,[25] neither he nor one acting in his aid can escape liability for personal violence in an attempt to execute it.

E. Actions — 1. Form of Action. At common law, an action of trespass for assault and battery was the proper form of action for direct injuries, negligently and carelessly inflicted, as well as for those that were intentional and malicious.[26]

2. Jurisdiction. An action of assault and battery is transitory, and may be tried in any court having jurisdiction of the person and the subject-matter;[27] but,

Assault on vessel within United States.— Jurisdiction generally of an action for assault and battery, or of such an action for an assault and battery committed on board a vessel in the merchant service upon the high seas or without the United States, authorizes the court to entertain a cause for such a wrong committed on a vessel within the United States and not upon the high seas. Farley v. De Waters, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 192.

3. Conditions Precedent — a. Limitations. The action must be brought within the time limited by statute.[29]

b. Necessity of Criminal Prosecution. It is the general rule that a criminal prosecution for an assault is not a prerequisite to the right to recover civilly for the injury.[30]

4. Parties — a. Plaintiff. Unless authorized by statute, husband and wife cannot sue jointly for the battery of both,[31] nor, in such case, can the husband bring an individual action.[32] Where, by statute, the remedy is by a qui tam action, the state must be joined.[33]

b. Defendant. All persons who assault and injure another are jointly or severally liable, and may be sued jointly or separately;[34] but a corporation cannot be joined with private persons as a party defendant.[35]

5. Process. It is not important that the initiatory process should state the form of the action, though enough should appear to inform defendant of what he is charged;[36] and where a civil action is commenced by information, the public must be joined and the same notice must be given as in a civil suit.[37] A writ for a joint assault may be sent to the several counties wherein the defendants reside, and no allegation of such residence is necessary.[38]

The plaintiff must state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.[40] He may, with proper allegations, charge in one count[41] several acts of violence, so connected that each of them, to some extent, characterizes the others and all together make a continued series of assaults and batteries,[42] though the instruments used were different.[43]

(II) Particular Averments—(A) Description of Defendant. The defendant should be clearly identified as the alleged wrong-doer,[44] though, where it is sought to charge a principal for the act of his servant or agent, it is sufficient to allege that the name of the actual assailant is unknown.[45]

(B) Conspiracy. Where an assault and battery by more than one is charged, it need not be alleged that there was a conspiracy or collusion between defendants;[46] but, where one of the parties was not present at the time of the alleged assault, sufficient must be alleged to show a conspiracy, or to otherwise connect the absentee with the commission of the offense.[47]

(C) Place of Assault. The county in which the assault was committed need not be specified,[48] except where, by statute, the action is made local.[49]

(D) Characterization of Assault. It is not necessary that the assault and battery should be characterized as unlawful;[50] that the injuries were wrongfully inflicted or were the result of defendant's wrongful act;[51] or that force was used, where the complaint shows actual violence.[52]

40. A mere averment of an unlawful assault is but the statement of a legal conclusion (Stivers v. Baker, 87 Ky. 508, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 523, 9 S. W. 491; Shapiro v. Michelson, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 615, 47 S. W. 746); but an allegation charging defendant with the commission of an assault, by the agency of his servants, acting within the scope of his employment, and by certain specified instrumentalities, is an averment of an issuable fact, and not a mere conclusion of law (Foran v. Levin, 76 Minn. 178, 78 N. W. 1047).

Aider by verdict.— It has been held that, after a general verdict for plaintiff on the plea of not guilty and son assault demesne, the judgment will not be arrested on the ground that no time was stated in the declaration (Digges v. Norris, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 268); and that, after verdict, a plea of son assault demesne sufficiently justifies a battery, charged to have been committed by different instruments (Paige v. Smith, 13 Vt. 251; Blunt v. Beaumont, 2 C. Y.) 475, wherein the venue was laid in the city and county of New York, and it was alleged that the injuries were inflicted "at Batavia, to wit, at the city and county of New York," and in which it was held that the venue was mislaid, because of the presumption that the cause of action arose in Genesee county, wherein Batavia was situated.

50. Schlosser v. Griffith, 125 Ind. 431, 25 N. E. 459; Benson v. Bacon, 99 Ind. 156; Sheldon v. Lake, 9 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 306, 40 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 489.

51. Norris v. Casel, 90 Ind. 143. See also McKee v. Calvert, 80 Mo. 348, in which case it was held that a failure on the part of plaintiff to allege that the assault was wrongful is cured by verdict.

52. Greenman v. Smith, 20 Minn. 418.

(E) Motive — Malice. The motive of the assault, or the fact that defendant was actuated by malice, though tending to increase the damages, need not be specially pleaded;[53] but the speaking of slanderous words may be alleged as an incident of the assault to show the malicious intent, and will not be regarded as an attempt to charge more than one cause of action.[54]

(F) Plaintiff's Freedom From Fault. It need not be alleged that plaintiff was free from fault,[55] since the doctrine of contributory negligence has no application to an action for assault and battery.[56]

(G) Institution of Criminal Proceedings. Notwithstanding a statutory requirement that the institution of criminal proceedings shall be a prerequisite to an action for the same assault, the failure of the declaration to set forth the institution of such proceedings will not vitiate it.[57]

(H) Matters of Aggravation. Matters of aggravation, which are not essential to make out a cause of action, and whose effect is merely to enhance the damages, need not be pleaded specially.[58]

(I) Damages — (1) IN GENERAL. Where a count for malicious prosecution is improperly joined with a count for assault and battery, and there is a general ad damnum clause at the end of the declaration, it will apply to the count for assault and battery;[59] but, where an assault and a false imprisonment at the same time and place were charged separately, a general averment of damages in a specified sum was held to refer to both causes of action,[60] though such damages accrued after the commencement of the action.[61]

(2) NATURAL RESULTS OF INJURY. Elements of damage which are the natural result of the injury need not be specifically set forth to authorize a recovery therefor.[62]

(3) CONSEQUENTIAL OR SPECIAL DAMAGES. Consequential or special damages must be alleged to enable plaintiff to make proof in relation thereto or to recover therefor;[63] but a defect in this respect is cured by verdict.[64]

(III) Amendments. A complaint charging a battery may be amended by adding an allegation of wounding,[65] of unlawful detention or imprisonment,[66] or, it seems, of permanent injury;[67] but a count in trespass for carrying away goods cannot be added.[68]

(IV) Joinder of Counts, and Election. Plaintiff may state his cause of action in separate counts;[69] but, in a proper case, the court may compel plaintiff to elect upon which count he will rely.[70]

b. Answer or Plea[71]—(I) In Abatement. To raise the question, before a trial on the merits, that the complaint fails to set forth the institution of criminal proceedings as required by statute, a plea in abatement should be filed setting up the statute relied on, and alleging non-compliance with its provisions.[72]

(II) In Bar—(A) Generally. Where no special form of general denial is required by statute, any words which fairly import denial of all the averments of the complaint will be sufficient.[73] The answer must, however, be sufficient to present an issue,[74] though circumstances of aggravation need not be traversed;[75] and, where the use of force and arms is charged, it need not be specially denied.[76]

(B) Accident. Inevitable accident need not be specially pleaded.[77]

Separate causes.—A count charging a malicious trespass to the person may be joined with a charge of an intent to defraud, though the former is in trespass and the latter is in case. Cadwell v. Farrell, 28 Ill. 438.

70. Thus, where a declaration charged two with assault and false imprisonment, and plaintiff offered evidence of an illegal arrest by them jointly, but a separate assault by one, it was held proper to compel him to elect on which tort he would rely (Gainey v. Parkman, 100 Mass. 316); and, where plaintiff in one count alleged sundry wrongful acts on the part of defendant, on the same day, and after proving an assault by one defendant, attempted to prove a subsequent assault by the other, it was held that she must elect upon which assault she would rely, unless it was shown that the wrongful acts were part of a concerted plan of defendants (Brown v. Wheeler, 18 Conn. 199).

An answer admitting the assault, but denying that it was of the nature or extent alleged, presents no issue to be tried (Schnaderbeck v. Worth, 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 37); but, where a malicious assault is charged, an admission that defendant inflicted a blow with a weapon of substantially the same kind as that charged to have been used, while admitting the commission of the assault as alleged, is not an admission of the accompanying malice (Baker v. Hope, 49 Cal. 598).

An answer which merely sets up matters in mitigation, but which does not take direct issue upon the fact of the assault and battery, is bad. Gilbert v. Rounds, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 46; Lane v. Gilbert, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 150.

Where a battery is not mere matter of aggravation, a sufficient plea must either confess or justify the battery. Seymour v. Bailey, 76 Ga. 338; Buller N. P. 19. A plea justifying the assault only is insufficient because only a partial answer. Loder v. Phelps, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 46. But see Bryan v. Bates, 15 Ill. 87, holding that a plea professing to answer the assault, etc., and imprisonment, is broad enough to answer the battery complained of.

(c) Former Recovery or Acquittal. A former recovery,[78] or dismissal of the criminal prosecution, where that is a defense,[79] must be specially pleaded.

(d) Justification—(1) GENERALLY. Matters of justification cannot be given in evidence under the general issue but must be pleaded specially,[80] and so fully as to admit proof which will have the effect of exonerating defendant.[81]

(2) SON ASSAULT DEMESNE. Son assault demesne is a good plea of justification, charging plaintiff with having committed the first assault,[82] even, it seems, when extraordinary force is charged.[83] This plea need not set forth minutely or particularly the nature or extent of the force used by plaintiff.[84]

(3) MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT. A plea of molliter manus imposuit is also good,[85] except where plaintiff alleges extraordinary or aggravated force or violence.[86]

Defense of property.— In justification, on the ground of defense of property, where no force was used by the assailant, defendant should plead that plaintiff refused to leave on demand, or that there was a resistance after a gentle laying on of hands. (III) In Mitigation. Matters of provocation[87] so recent as to raise a reasonable presumption that such acts prompted the assault,[88] hostile feelings of plaintiff, or the fact of a former assault by him,[89] or the right of possession over which the controversy arose,[90] should be pleaded in mitigation and not as a partial defense, though it has been held that such matters may be shown in evidence even though not alleged in the plea.[91] Defendant may also prove such recent acts of provocation under his denial of malice, without alleging them specifically in his answer.[92]

(IV) Amendments. Defendant may amend by striking out a plea of son assault demesne and substituting therefor a plea of molliter manus imposuit;[93] but, under the general issue, it has been held proper to refuse defendant leave, after all the testimony is in, to file an additional paragraph setting up self-defense, though counsel, in his opening, stated that to be the defense.[94]

(V) Joinder of Pleas. A plea in justification may be added to a general denial or a plea of not guilty;[95] and, under the English practice, a plea of a former conviction, for which a certificate was granted as provided by statute, may be joined with a plea of justification.[96]

c. Counter-Claim. Where assaults are separate transactions, one cannot be set up as a counter-claim to the other, but redress must be sought in a cross-action.[97]

d. Replication[98] — (I) In General. To a plea of son assault demesne or of defense of possession, the plaintiff may reply de injuria sua propria,[99] the effect of which is to confine defendant to proving an excuse for the battery,[1] and, if

Degree of proof.— Upon issue taken on a plea of son assault demesne, it is necessary to prove an assault commensurate with the trespass sought to be justified. Reece v. Tay-plaintiff relies on the fact that he was assaulted, and not for the purpose of expelling him from defendant's premises on his refusal to leave, as pleaded, he may take issue on the plea.[2] The replication must answer the whole plea.[3]

(II) Necessity of Special Averments — (A) In General. Special facts or circumstances relied on as a justification must be specially pleaded to entitle plaintiff to the benefit thereof.[4] Thus, he must specially justify his own prior assault,[5] and must reply specially where the justification sets up either matter of right, interest, or authority from him.[6]

(B) Excess of Force. While there are some cases to the contrary,[7] the more reasonable rule, and the one which seems to have been adopted in this country, is that a general replication of de injuria is a traverse of the whole plea of son assault, and that, under it, plaintiff may recover for an excess of force without a new assignment or specially pleading such excess.[8]

e. Rejoinder.[9] A rejoinder substantially reiterating a replication confessing and avoiding a plea of son assault is bad, because not traversing the replication.[10]

7. Evidence — a. Burden of Proof. Where the plea is "Not guilty" plaintiff is put to the proof of every material allegation in the declaration,[11] and,

Brunsw. 274 (where the replication justified the assault, but not the battery).

Where the declaration averred an assault on plaintiff "while sitting in his gig," and the replication stated that, while defendant was in the gig, plaintiff gently laid hands on him and put him out, and then the assault, there was held to be no departure, since both allegations, though apparently discrepant, might be true, because not necessarily referring to the same exact point of time. prima facie, is entitled to a verdict on proof of the assault and battery charged.[12] It is not essential, however, that he should show, in the first instance, by direct evidence, either an intention to commit the injury or that defendant was in fault.[13] On the question of excessive force[14] or abuse of authority,[15] the burden of proof is on plaintiff; and where defendant was engaged in a lawful act when plaintiff was injured, the burden of showing want of due care is also on plaintiff.[16] The assault or battery being proved, it devolves upon defendant to justify or to show facts in mitigation;[17] and where he seeks to justify, the burden rests on him to show the justification.[18] Under the plea of son assault demesne in excuse, with the general replication de injuria, etc., the burden of proof is also on him to show that plaintiff actually committed the first assault, and, also, that that which was done on his own part was in the necessary defense of his person.[19]

b. Acts of defendant, not committed in plaintiff's presence, and which might be considered by the jury to defendant's prejudice, cannot be shown. Taylor v. Adams, 58 Mich. 187, 24 N. W. 864.

Declarations of plaintiff, made at a distance of two or three hundred yards from the place of the assault (the interval of time not being fixed), are not admissible as part of the res gestæ. Cherry v. McCall, 23 Ga. 193.

Evidence that defendant complained of plaintiff for intoxication is immaterial and irrelevant, and consequently inadmissible. Roach v. Caldbeck, 64 Vt. 593, 24 Atl. 989.

Evidence that defendant interviewed plaintiff and paid his physician, having no bearing on the original transaction nor any tendency to disprove malice, is inadmissible. Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471.

Hallucinations.— On a trial for indecent assault on a woman afflicted with a particular disorder, it is proper to show that such persons are subject to hallucinations, and to ask her if she had not made similar charges before. Derwin v. Parsons, 52 Mich. 425, 18 N. W. 200, 50 Am. Rep. 262.

In actions for indecent assault the competency of evidence as to complaints made by the female immediately after the assault, or as to her condition and personal appearance, is governed by the same rules as obtain in criminal prosecutions for the same offense. Collins v. Wilson, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 1049, 39 S. W. 33; Gardner v. Kellogg, 23 Minn. 463. In such an action, the plaintiff need not be corroborated as in a criminal action (Rogers v. Winch, 76 Iowa 546, 41 N. W. 214), and, to rebut evidence that defendant was elsewhere at the time, evidence that he pleaded guilty to a similar assault on another at the same time is admissible (Parker v. Couture, 63 Vt. 449, 21 Atl. 1102). So, where plaintiff testifies to the commission of the assault in her room, she may show defendant's presence in that room at other times (Mawich v. Elsey, 47 Mich. 10, 8 N. W. 587, 10 N. W. 57); and corroborative evidence of defendant's habit of taking women to a particular place for attempted sexual intercourse is also admissible (Fay v. Swan, 44 Mich. 544, 7 N. W. 215).

Statements of bystanders.— Evidence is inadmissible to show that, at the time of the assault, bystanders requested the arrest of defendant and threatened him with violence, nor may they testify as to their opinion of the assault, or what they said or did with reference to it. Kuhn v. Freund, 87 Mich. 545, 49 N. W. 867.

It is improper to permit third persons to give in evidence the plaintiff's declarations as to the particular way in which the injury was inflicted. Collins v. Waters, 54 Ill. 485.

or assaults charged in his declaration or reply, and cannot introduce evidence of others.[26] So, where two different assaults and batteries are charged, and but one is justified, the effect of the replication de injuria is to preclude evidence of an assault and battery other than the one justified.[27] But if, on pleas of "Not guilty" and son assault to a declaration in one count, plaintiff newly assigns, on a new plea of "Not guilty," he may prove the trespass so assigned, though it differs from the one originally justified.[28]

(B) Admissions. Admissions and confessions of defendant which were directly made, or which may be inferred from his silence when charged with the offense, are admissible against him,[29] and it has been held that evidence as to the disposition made by defendant of his property, after the commission of the acts complained of, may properly be received as tending to show an admission of liability or to explain the character of the acts.[30] Such admissions and declarations are not admissible against a co-defendant,[31] unless when made before the separation of the parties and circumstances of aggravation are shown, in which case the declaration is admissible against all.[32] Declarations by one of the participants in the assault after the termination of the conspiracy are inadmissible against the others,[33] as are the declarations of a person not shown to have been connected with the conspiracy.[34]

(C) Particular Elements — (1) DEFENDANT'S PARTICIPATION. Under a count charging an assault, proof that the assault was committed by another acting under defendant's authority is inadmissible;[35] but an averment that an assault was committed by a person named is supported by proof that the person named was present as an aider and abettor.[36] So, evidence of acts of violence or of aid or encouragement, or declarations to one assailant by another person, is admissible in evidence where circumstances exist which tend to show that such other person was coöperating in the assault,[37] though the person alleged to have committed the Means employed.— A charge of an assault by the presentation of a loaded pistol must be sustained by proof that the pistol was loaded (Blake v. Barnard, 9 C. & P. 626, 38 E. C. L. 365); but, where an assault with a cane is charged, plaintiff may prove that, during the assault, defendant forced him against an object which injured him (Brzezinski v. Tierney, 60 Conn. 55, 22 Atl. 486). The court will take notice that a fence-pole is a "heavy club," the assault being charged to have been committed with the latter, and the proof being that it was committed with a fence-pole. 37. Williams v. Jarrot, 6 Ill. 120; Cleveland v. Stilwell, 75 Iowa 466, 39 N. W. 711.

Evidence of a previous affray between some of the parties is admissible to show a common purpose to assault. Sodusky v. McGee, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 621; Rhinehart v. Whitehead, 64 Wis. 42, 24 N. W. 401.

violence is not a party to the action,[38] or where defendants having separate trials were engaged in the common purpose of an illegal act;[39] and where it appears that plaintiff had confederated with others in making the assault, evidence of his participation in previous threats and attacks is admissible.[40] When plaintiff's testimony has a tendency to connect one defendant with an assault committed by the other, it is error to refuse to permit him to explain the apparent incriminating circumstances.[41]

(2) TIME. If the allegation of time is immaterial — as where issue is joined on a plea of not guilty — proof of the assault on any day before the institution of the action is sufficient;[42] but where a plea of son assault demesne is interposed, plaintiff must prove that the assault was committed on the day laid, whether defendant supported his plea by evidence or not.[43]

(3) PLACE. Where the place of the battery is alleged, proof that it was committed at the particular place laid is unnecessary. If it is shown that it was committed within the county it is enough.[44]

(4) MOTIVE — MALICE. Where it is material to show the motive of assailant, or the existence of malice or ill-will on his part, in order to enhance the damages or for any other lawful purpose, both his prior and subsequent declarations, acts, and conduct, as well as those which accompany the act, are legitimate evidence for that purpose.[45] Likewise, defendant may testify as to the intent

Express direction to make assault.— It is not incumbent upon plaintiff to show that either of defendants expressly directed the other to make the assault, or that they struck him at the same moment of time, or that one struck him after the other. Reizenstein v. Clark, 104 Iowa 287, 73 N. W. 588.

Evidence that a battery was excessive tends with which he approached plaintiff, and as to his opinion with relation to plaintiff's design.[46]

(5) Excessive Force. Under the plea of son assault demesne and reply de injuria sua propria, plaintiff may prove that defendant used more force than was necessary, and that an excessive battery was committed,[47] although the replication does not specially allege excess.[48] Upon the question of whether the punishment of a pupil by his master was excessive, evidence may not be given that the ordinary management of the school by defendant was mild and moderate, but defendant may show that, in a former trial, no claim of excessive punishment was made.[49]

(6) Matters of Aggravation. Evidence of acts and circumstances of outrage, or insult accompanying an assault and battery, which wound the feelings and tend to lower the parties in the estimation of society, is admissible in evidence to enhance the damages.[50] Evidence of prior threats[51] or of a criminal intent against plaintiff[52] have also been held admissible.

(7) Resulting Injury — (a) Fact of Injury. Under the plea of son assault demesne, defendant may show that a particular injury was sustained otherwise than by his own wrongful act;[53] but such testimony should be limited to a time proximate to the injury;[54] and, where defendant's testimony shows, or tends to show, some other cause, defendant may properly rebut it.[55] Defendant may introduce testimony tending to show that the claim of injury made is a pretense;[56] but, to show that the alleged injury is not as serious as pretended, the evidence must be material on that issue.[57]

57. See Garrett v. Thomas, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 490, 57 S. W. 611, wherein plaintiff claimed that his injuries precluded him from manual labor, and it was held error to permit a witness to testify that plaintiff stated "he would be" in business "directly."

Unnecessary bandages.— Evidence is immaterial that plaintiff appeared, on a criminal prosecution against defendant, with a large bandage on his head, with intent to deceive as to the extent of his injuries. Kaline v. Stover, 88 Iowa 245, 55 N. W. 346.

(b) NATURE AND EXTENT OF INJURY. Where sickness and injury are alleged,[58] plaintiff may prove, as a consequence of the assault,[59] physical and mental conditions which are not apparent to others,[60] or those the origin or aggravation of which is traceable to the act complained of,[61] and may testify as to his condition prior to and since the assault.[62] Where permanency is pleaded,[63] plaintiff may give evidence as to his condition of health since the assault,[64] or may show the permanence of a bodily infirmity produced or aggravated by the wrongful act.[65] Evidence is also admissible to prove aggravation of a previously impaired physical condition, and the extent thereof,[66] or of an aggravation of the injuries since their infliction, by illness.[67]

(III) AS TO RIGHT OF POSSESSION. Where it appears that the assault and battery grew out of a dispute or controversy as to the right to personal or real property, or the use or possession of the latter, or the fact of actual occupancy thereof, and the subject-matter of the controversy is a material element in the Other persons than plaintiff, who are competent witnesses because of actual knowledge, may state not only the physical condition of plaintiff before the assault (Kuney v. Dutcher, 56 Mich. 308, 22 N. W. 866), but also his apparent sufferings and impaired physical or mental condition after the assault (Dimick v. Downs, 82 Ill. 570; Kuney v. Dutcher, 56 Mich. 308, 22 N. W. 866; Hannan v. Gross, 5 Wash. 703, 32 Pac. 787) and at the time of the trial (Stone v. Moore, 83 Iowa 186, 49 N. W. 76). But, plaintiff having testified to his injuries and sufferings, the testimony of a witness, who had seen him frequently during three or four months after the injury as to "whether at these times he evinced any emotion of pain or otherwise," is inadmissible because tending to elicit a mere opinion. Leonard v. Field, 136 Mass. 125.

Professional opinions as to the extent and nature of the injury and its cause, derived from the witness' examination, observation, and statements made by the plaintiff, are competent (Bonino v. Caledonio, 144 Mass. 299, 11 N. E. 98; Fay v. Swan, 44 Mich. 544, 7 N. W. 215; Fort v. Brown, 46 Barb. (N. Complaints and representations indicative of present pain, whether made before or after the suit, and not as a narration of past suffering, but as exhibiting the natural symptoms and effects of the injury, and whether made to a medical expert or other person, are admissible.

case, evidence may be given by either party to prove such right or fact of occupancy;[68] but, if unimportant because not material, or not tending to characterize the transactions, is inadmissible.[69] So, a judgment determining facts tending to show the true boundary line is inadmissible where there is no identity of parties or of subject-matter,[70] or where it is not conclusive as to the rights of the parties.[71] Likewise, under a plea justifying an assault on an alleged trespasser because of a right of possession, that right must be established.[72]

(IV) JUSTIFICATION. Where two assaults are charged, and both are admitted by the plea of son assault, defendant, to justify, must prove two several assaults.[73] If he seeks to justify as an officer, he must clearly establish his authority.[74] One who attempts to justify on the ground that the assault was committed in endeavoring to remove a trespasser, fails unless he shows that the assault was committed in such an endeavor,[75] or that, as claimed, he mistook the person assaulted for a wrong-doer.[76] Defendant may also give in evidence quarantine regulations to justify his action thereunder.[77]

(V) CHARACTER AND REPUTATION OF PARTIES—(A) In General. The character and standing of the parties are pertinent in determining the amount of exemplary damages;[78] but are not an element of compensation.[79] Ordinarily, evidence as to the character of defendant, his general reputation, or the like, being weight of authority, if mental and moral outrage is relied on as a substantial ground of recovery, evidence tending to show plaintiff's want of chastity is pertinent to the issue.[88]

(VI) FINANCIAL CONDITION OF PARTIES. While evidence of the pecuniary circumstances of defendant is admissible on the question of compensation, evidence of his actual wealth is inadmissible; but, where evidence of such circumstances is admissible to enhance exemplary damages, his actual wealth may be shown, and, in some cases, evidence of defendant's wealth is admissible because bearing on his ability to respond in damages.[89] By parity of reasoning, if it is competent to prove the wealth of defendant for the purpose of augmenting the damages, it is also competent for defendant to show a want of means to diminish them,[90] but this must be shown by way of rebuttal.[91] While it has been held competent for plaintiff to prove his condition in life, in order to show the extent and amount of damages sustained by him, or to augment them,[92] it has also been held that the admission of testimony to show his poverty is erroneous.[93]

(N. Y.) 109). So, in an action for indecent assault, specific acts of lewdness with others than plaintiff may be

do not constitute a complete defense may be introduced in evidence, notwithstanding the general rule that whatever is to be shown in justification must be specially pleaded.

(B) Consent — License. Any evidence tending to show consent or license on the part of plaintiff is admissible to repel the allegation of force,[95] to mitigate damages,[96] or to reduce punitive damages;[97] and plaintiff may, likewise, repel any implication of license arising from such evidence.[98]

(C) Official Acts. An unwarranted assault by peace-officers cannot be palliated by showing facts which might have induced the fear of a general disturbance or riot,[99] nor can an officer who unlawfully breaks into premises[1] to serve process, and therein commits an assault, show his purpose or the fact that he was engaged in the service of process.[2]

(D) Provocation. Provocations so recent and immediate as to induce a presumption that the violence done was committed under the immediate and continuing influence of the feelings and passion excited thereby[3] may be shown in mitigation of damages, but never can be considered as a justification or complete defense;[4] though, in some jurisdictions, evidence of cotemporaneous or previous

Threats not known to defendant.—Antecedent threats, not so recent as to constitute a part of the res gestæ, and which were unknown to defendant at the time of the commission of the act, cannot be received in evidence as tending to show the formation of a well-grounded belief in the danger of physical injury. received from plaintiff is subject, however, to modifications which more or less qualify it, according to the particular circumstances of each case.[6] The provocation must, however, be that of plaintiff himself — hence, statements, made by third parties to defendant, of provocative or threatening acts of plaintiff on a former occasion, are inadmissible,[7] and the fact that threats of personal violence were communicated to defendant will not aid him to mitigate the damages unless he shows that the threats were actually made.[8]

(VIII) OTHER PROCEEDINGS FOR SAME ASSAULT. By the weight of authority, the fact that defendant was prosecuted criminally, convicted, and imprisoned, or paid a fine imposed, cannot be considered in mitigation of damages nor as a bar to a recovery of exemplary damages;[9] though it has been held that, for the purpose of mitigating vindictive damages, it is competent for defendant to show that he was theretofore convicted and punished for the same offense.[10] A plea of a prior action pending for the same assault is not proven where it appears that the former action was in case.[11] Evidence of a previous conviction or acquittal is not admissible to prove the fact of the assault,[12] nor may defendant

6. Thus, the lapse of a day or so between the provocation and the assault was held not to preclude defendant from urging the provocation in mitigation (Irwin v. Porter, 1 Hawaii 159), and, where a considerable time elapsed between the provocation and the date of the assault, and it was communicated immediately preceding the assault, it was held to be admissible (Gaither v. Blowers, 11 Md. 536). 17. Thus plaintiff's estimate as to the value of the time lost by him because of his injury, together with a statement of fact upon which the estimate is based, is admissible (Jackson v. Wells, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 275, 35 S. W. 528); but an averment that plaintiff was prevented from attending to, performing, and looking after his necessary affairs and business will not justify evidence of injury thereto because of trouble in procuring assistance therein (Heiler v. Loomis, 47 Mich. 16, 10 N. W. 60). 34. French v. Ware, 65 Vt. 338, 26 Atl. 1096. But see Hendricks v. Fowler, 16 Ohio Cir. Ct. 597, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 209, wherein it was held that it is unnecessary to give a technical definition of an assault and battery where the law is otherwise properly charged.

An instruction is erroneous which, attempting to define assault and battery, fails to state what matters are excusable or justifiable (Kaline v. Stover, 88 Iowa 245, 55 N. W. 346; Taylor v. Clendening, 4 Kan. 524; Drew v. Comstock, 57 Mich. 176, 23 N. W. 721), as is an instruction which assumes that an assault was committed in fact where the evidence on that point is conflicting (Orscheln v. Scott, 79 Mo. App. 534), for, in such a case, the jury should be cautioned as to the care to be exercised in considering the testimony (Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471); but an instruction declaring the principles applicable to an assault or battery is not erroneous because assuming the commission of the nition is substantially accurate.[35] If it is an element in the case, the court should instruct the jury as to the difference between an assault by one and by many,[36] and, where the degree of credit to be given to either party, as to the fact of the assault, is material, they may be told that they may find for that party whose testimony they believe.[37] It has also been held that the omission of defendant to deny the fact of the assault, on a repetition of the accusation and after a previous denial, may be properly referred to.[38]

(II) Burden of Proof. The use of inapt language, as to the burden of proof, which could not have misled the jury is not prejudicial error,[39] nor is an instruction authorizing the jury to find for defendant if they believe he did not commit the assault, because placing the burden on him, where elsewhere they are informed correctly as to upon whom the burden rests.[40]

(III) Damages. The jury should be informed as to the right to damages under the pleadings and proof,[41] the right to give vindictive or exemplary damages,[42] and as to the measure of damages recoverable.[43] Where punitive damages may be awarded, it is of vital importance that the jury should be informed of the effect of their verdict on the question of costs.[44] It is erroneous to advert to matters not in evidence which may have the effect of leading the jury to enhance the damages,[45] or to give undue prominence to matters which might be considered as an aggravation of the assault and tend to the same result;[46] to withdraw from the jury the inquiry as to how much of the damage claimed was attributable to plaintiff's own act;[47] to charge that delay in bringing an action act (Von Reeden v. Evans, 52 Ill. App. 209, wherein the instruction was that one charged with a deadly assault cannot avail himself of the claim of necessary self-defense if the necessity of such defense was brought about by his own deliberate, wrongful act). So, a failure to instruct on the evidence as to which party was the aggressor, and allowing the jury to decide whether, on the facts claimed by one party, there was an assault in fact, is erroneous. French v. Ware, 65 Vt. 338, 26 Atl. 1096.

An instruction is not objectionable because leaving to the jury the question of what constitutes an assault, where it charges that, if the jury find for plaintiff, they may award such compensatory damages as were sustained by defendant's unlawful act, and that, if they find that defendant assaulted and struck plaintiff, and was guilty of reckless violence, they may award punitory damages. Thillman v. Neal, 88 Md. 525, 42 Atl. 242.

41. Harmless error.—Where defendants who obtained a verdict acted in good faith, and the jury was instructed generally on the questions presented, but not that they must find for plaintiff in some amount, a new trial was refused. Elwell v. Bradham, 2 Speers (S. C.) 168. An instruction leaving the question of damages to the discretion of the jury under all the circumstances is not prejudicial where plaintiff is also required to prove his case by a preponderance of the evidence. 42. Porter v. Seiler, 23 Pa. St. 424, 62 Am. Dec. 341.

43. It is error to lay down an improper rule as to the right to award punitory damages (Hendrickson v. Kingsbury, 21 Iowa 379), or to authorize such damages regardless of whether or not the assault was malicious (Badostain v. Grazide, 115 Cal. 425, 47 Pac. 118), or, actual damages alone being claimed, to define an aggravated assault, and thus confuse and mislead the jury and induce them to give more than compensatory damages (Texas Coal, etc., Co. v. Arenstein, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 441, 55 S. W. 127).

44. Waffle v. Dillenbeck, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 123 [affirmed in 38 N. Y. 53].

45. Crossman v. Harrison, 4 Rob. (N. Y.) 38.

There is no impropriety, however, in calling the attention of the jury to the character of plaintiff as bearing on a question of damages, though no evidence was permitted in respect thereto, where counsel for both parties strenuously urged the question of character, as material in determining the amount of damages. McKenzie v. Allen, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 546.

tended to prove that no serious injury was done;[48] to make the damages depend to any extent upon the ability of defendant to pay;[49] or, in the absence of proof, to impliedly characterize the assault as unlawful, and permit the jury to allow what they see fit, not exceeding the amount claimed in the declaration, in view of possible latent injuries.[50]

(IV) Excess of Force. It is error for the court to refer to an excess of force not proven,[51] or to permit the jury to consider such excess as a factor in arriving at their verdict;[52] but if there is reasonable doubt as to the excess of the force used, defendant should be given the benefit of it.[53]

(V) Intention — Malice. It is the duty of the court, especially when so requested, to direct the jury to consider all the circumstances testified to in determining the absence or presence of intention or malice,[54] and also to inform them of the necessity that such elements should exist in order to impose a liability on defendant.[55] The court should not, however, advert to matters not in evidence which may lead the jury to impute improper motives to defendant,[56] or refer to the weight of testimony to prove intention, so as to preclude them from considering all the evidence.[57]

(VI) Joint Liability. An instruction as to the right to find against one of two joint defendants, without reference to their joint liability, is erroneous;[58] and an instruction which ignores the proved participation of one defendant in the assault is improper.[59] It has been held, however, that the refusal of defendants sued jointly, when called on by plaintiff, to testify as to who committed the assault, may be commented on by the trial judge.[60]

(VII) Justification — (A) In General. Where justification is in issue — as self-defense, or the like — the jury must be properly informed as to the legal principles involved, the applicability of the evidence thereto, and the rights of defendant under the circumstances,[61] and also as to their duty in determining whether or

55. Where there is a sharp conflict in the testimony, it is error to inform the jury, generally, that they may infer malice if defendant acted with a wanton disregard of plaintiff's rights, without explaining the relative rights of the parties or the duty of defendant, thus permitting them to put their own construction on the acts of defendant and the rights of plaintiff. Brownback v. Frailey, 78 Ill. App. 262.

An instruction is not objectionable, though unnecessarily long and somewhat involved, if it intelligently informs the jury that the alleged wrongful act must have been intentional and not accidental (Krall v. Lull, 49 Wis. 403, 5 N. W. 874); where it requires the jury to find that the assault was wanton, if there was evidence of malice (Brantz v. Marcus, 73 Iowa 64, 35 N. W. 115); or where it authorizes exemplary damages if defendant's acts were done wantonly and without justification, because conveying the idea that "wantonly" and "without justification" are synonymous in law (Shook v. Peters, 59 Tex. 393).

59. Carlton v. Henry, (Ala. 1901) 29 So. 924, but an instruction possibly misleading, because failing to explain the effect which the act of one might have in connecting another with the assault and battery, is not reversible error, if its effect might have been prevented by a request that the court inform the jury as to such effect.

not the plea is supported.[62] If, however, justification is not in issue, no instruction in respect thereto is necessary, though evidence tending to prove such a defense was admitted without objection;[63] nor, in the absence of such an issue, should the jury be so instructed as to permit them to find for defendant on the ground that he acted in self-defense.[64]

(B) Defense of Property or Possession. The jury should be properly instructed as to the right to eject a trespasser,[65] but need not be specifically instructed as to the right to use force, where the law respecting that right has been substantially stated.[66]

(VIII) Matters of Mitigation. A party may not be deprived of his right to have the jury properly instructed as to matters of extenuation or mitigation.[67]

(IX) Nature and Extent of Injury. Failure of plaintiff to produce important witnesses as to the extent of the injury may be referred to,[68] and a charge calling special attention to the professional evidence bearing on the injury will be deemed harmless where the jury are also instructed to determine the Instructions are erroneous which exclude from the jury a full consideration of the justification claimed (Courvoisier v. Raymond, 23 Colo. 113, 47 Pac. 284; Collins v. Waters, 54 Ill. 485; Bittinger v. Druck, 33 Ill. App. 301; Comstock v. Dodge, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 97), or which assume that defendant was justified in fact (Roach v. Parcell, 61 Iowa 98, 15 N. W. 866).

Ignoring degree of force.— Requested instructions which leave entirely out of consideration the degree of force used by defendant are properly refused. Shay v. Thompson, 59 Wis. 540, 18 N. W. 473, 48 Am. Rep. 538.

The use of inapt words, as applied to the particular facts, will not, of itself, require reversal. Norris v. Whyte, 158 Mo. 20, 57 S. W. 1037. Thus, a charge that "words from one person to another will not justify an assault and battery" is sufficient, without using the word "merely" or the word "only" before the word "from." Smith v. Bagwell, 19 Fla. 117, 45 Am. Rep. 12.

62. An instruction that the jury must be "satisfied," instead of that they must "find from a preponderance of the evidence" that the plea of self-defense was made out, is erroneous. Brent v. Brent, 14 Ill. App. 256, 258.

63. Myers v. Moore, 3 Ind. App. 226, 28 N. E. 724. But an instruction as to justification, as to which no evidence was adduced, is not error of which defendant can complain. Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471; White v. Barnes, 112 N. C. 323, 16 S. E. 922.

A lengthy statement as to the right to resist intrusion on one's premises, or as to the right of a trespasser to annoy a householder, is not objectionable because argumentative. Hammond v. Hightower, 82 Ga. 290, 9 S. E. 1101.

An instruction that, if the trespasser was of weak mind, he should not be held to the same strictness as one mentally sound, is not erroneous where the jury are also told that he was a trespasser, and that the defendant might have used reasonable necessary force to eject him. Chapell v. Schmidt, 104 Cal. 511, 38 Pac. 892.

An instruction is erroneous which authorizes the jury to give plaintiff actual damages for the alleged assault and battery, even though defendant did not exceed his just right in defending the possession of his land. Phillips v. Jamieson, 51 Mich. 153, 16 N. W. 318.

66. Jones v. Jones, 71 Ill. 562. See also Hamilton v. Arnold, 116 Mich. 684, 75 N. W. 133, holding that it is not material that the jury were improperly informed in one part of the instruction as to the right to use force to retake property, where the instruction, as a whole, sufficiently states the law.

67. Hayes v. Sease, 51 S. C. 534, 29 S. E. 259, wherein it was held that instructions that, if defendant, having admitted a battery, had not shown a legal justification, plaintiff should have a verdict, and that words spoken ought not to justify an assault, were held not to deprive defendant of his right of mitigation, the court having previously charged that they might consider the extent of mitigation in connection with the facts proven.

An instruction is not erroneous which charges that the jury might consider in mitigation the sincerity of defendant's belief in his right to eject plaintiff, even though he acted unlawfully, when the effect of the finding on the questions of malice and exemplary damages is elsewhere presented. Redfield v. Redfield, 75 Iowa 435, 39 N. W. 688.

68. Cooley v. Foltz, 85 Mich. 47, 48 N. W. 176.

question of the injury on all the evidence.[69] If defendant introduces testimony which, if true, disposes of plaintiff's claim as to the nature and extent of the injury, he is entitled to an instruction that, if the jury believe it, plaintiff cannot recover.[70]

(x) Reference to Immaterial and Extraneous Matters. Reference to immaterial matters,[71] the incidental characterization of the assault as unlawful,[72] the assumption that defendant was engaged in the commission of an unlawful act at the time of the assault,[73] failure to define an offense which is charged to have been the reason for the assault,[74] or reference to a penal statute respecting the offense,[75] furnish no ground for reversal. It has been held erroneous, however, to instruct as to the law of homicide, because tending to obscure the real issue.[76]

(xi) Reference to Pleadings. Instructions that plaintiff is entitled to a verdict if the facts were proved as stated in his pleading[77] are not misleading or objectionable as a summing up of the facts;[78] but, where an assault with different instruments is charged, to inform the jury that the assault must be proved substantially as claimed is error, since proof of an assault by either instrument would be sufficient.[79]

d. Verdict — (i) In General. Where the evidence shows that an unjustifiable assault or battery was committed, a verdict in favor of defendant is improper and will be set aside as against the weight of evidence;[80] and, on the same principle, a verdict for plaintiff cannot be upheld where it is apparent that the assault by defendant was justified by the circumstances.[81] If the evidence clearly establishes the commission of an unjustifiable assault, the verdict will not be set aside, if not excessive;[82] and, where plaintiff clearly and conclusively makes out

So, an instruction, as to plaintiff's right to recover for future disability, which is open to criticism because not making that right dependent on whether or not plaintiff's condition was the proximate result of the battery, is harmless where the jury was otherwise properly instructed and the evidence warranted the verdict. 72. Thillman v. Neal, 88 Md. 525, 42 Atl. 242, holding that an instruction, authorizing compensation for the unlawful act of defendant, is not objectionable because allowing a consideration of a trespass by defendant on plaintiff's premises at the same time if the jury are also required to find that defendant committed the assault.

a case entitling him to substantial damages, a verdict for mere nominal damages will be set aside and a new trial granted.[83] If the evidence is conflicting, but there is sufficient to warrant the jury in finding the commission of an unjustifiable assault, their determination will not be interfered with.[84]

(II) Form[85]—(A) Generally. At common law, if defendant justified the assault and pleaded not guilty to the battery, and both pleas were found against him,[86] or if, in an action against two, one pleaded not guilty and the other son assault demesne,[87] there could be but one damage. Where defendant justifies, a verdict for plaintiff against defendant and assessing the damages is responsive to the issues,[88] and a verdict that defendant is guilty in manner and form as alleged in the declaration necessarily negatives a justification set up by the plea of son assault demesne.[89] Unnecessary or immaterial findings,[90] or the failure to find as to immaterial matters,[91] will not vitiate a verdict which is otherwise good. A verdict for a stated amount against some of the defendants, and of "Not guilty" against the others, will support a judgment against the former;[92] and a verdict sufficiently intelligible to enable the entry of judgment against the parties intended cannot be complained of.[93] Where a common intent against several is established, or where defendants aided, abetted, or encouraged the assault, or previously counseled the violence, a joint verdict against all is proper;[94] and, while it has been held that the damages must be assessed against those found guilty as an entirety, and cannot be severed among them according to their different degrees of guilt,[95] it is likewise held that the jury may apportion them,[96] and estimate the damages against all the guilty defendants according to the amount which they think the most culpable should pay.[97]

(B) Irregularities—How Cured. Informality in a verdict which is substantially responsive to the issues may be disregarded or cured by amendment,[98] and, holding that a verdict will not be set aside as excessive if, on the whole, it was warranted by the evidence.

e. Judgment. Where a verdict is joint, the judgment must be joint;[1] but, where the writ is returned as to some of defendants though the declaration is filed against all, judgment may be taken against those served.[2] So, in an action by husband and wife for a battery of both, if the damages are assessed separately, judgment may be given for the wife and the writ abated as to the husband;[3] and, if several damages are assessed on a writ of inquiry, the plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi against one defendant and take judgment against the other.[4] Where the jury has passed on the whole matter in issue, and have assessed damages for an excessive battery not answered by the plea, and judgment non obstante veredicto is rendered, a writ of inquiry need not issue, but judgment may be rendered for the damages assessed.[5]

9. Damages — a. In General. Defendant is liable for all the natural and proximate consequences of the assault or battery,[6] whether the consequences might have been foreseen[7] or the injuries are more serious than were intended,[8] and for all damages sustained to the time of trial,[9] as well as those which may be sustained in the future.[10] Where actual damage is sustained plaintiff is entitled to recover as much as, by his proof, he may show he has suffered, and as will compensate him for the injury, irrespective of the motive of the wrong-doer;[11] and, on proof of an unlawful assault or of a battery from which no appreciable injury resulted, is entitled to recover nominal damages at least.[12] Failure might be awarded, defendant submitted the special interrogatory: "What amount of actual damages did plaintiff sustain, if any?" and the jury returned a general verdict for three hundred dollars, but did not answer the interrogatory, stating that they could not agree. The court, without sending the jury back, directed as an answer: "Jury do not agree," and this was held to be reversible error, the verdict being simply a compromise in the aggregate.

b. Compensation. In actions for assault and battery, plaintiff may recover for actual personal or pecuniary injury and loss, the elements of which are the physical injury and consequent pain and suffering, impaired physical or mental powers, mutilation and disfigurement, medical and like expenses,[14] and mental anguish[15] suffered by the person assaulted.

though the trespass was slight (Richmond v. Fisk, 160 Mass. 34, 35 N. In Michigan, the court draws a distinction between smart-money and punitive damages, holding that, while acts of indignity to the person or reputation may give an added smart or injury to the feelings if actuated by malice or wilfulness, yet, in the absence of statute, damages by way of punishment may not be awarded. Haviland v. Chase, 116 Mich. 214, 74 N. W. 477, 72 Am. St. Rep. 519; caused by misconduct or culpable negligence.[17] And, by the weight of authority, if a proper case for exemplary damages is made out, the fact that defendant was or may be punished criminally for the same assault will not preclude a recovery of such damages.[18] There can be no recovery of exemplary damages where there was a reasonable excuse for the assault arising from the provocation or fault of plaintiff,[19] or where no proof of actual damages is made.[20]

(II) Expenses of Litigation. In some jurisdictions, the expenses of the litigation, or counsel fees, may be taken into consideration by the jury in estimating damages,[21] where exemplary damages are proper[22] or the injury was the result of gross and culpable negligence.[23] In others, the expenses to which plaintiff may be put, and such costs and disbursements as cannot be taxed, are not proper elements of damage.[24]

d. Increasing and Reducing. Formerly, in England, the damages might be increased upon view of the party and examination of surgical experts in open court, and after hearing counsel on a rule to show cause;[25] but an amount of damages equal to the full compensation of plaintiff for the injury sustained by him cannot be increased by the addition of a fine for the punishment of defendant,[26] nor will the court diminish the damages where the circumstances of the assault justify the verdict.[27]

e. Excessive or Insufficient. Courts will not disturb a verdict, in an action for assault and battery, unless it is manifest that the jury was swayed by passion or prejudice, was partial or corrupt, or was misled as to the measure of damages. It is not enough that, in the opinion of the court, the damages are too high, or

Not authorized by considerations of public welfare.— The law allows only exemplary damages, either to deter the wrong-doer or as compensation for the wounded feelings of plaintiff; and an instruction to the jury to give exemplary damages if they thought the public good required it, or to deter others, is erroneous. Ratteree v. Chapman, 79 Ga. 574, 4 S. E. 684.

Reduction — When justified.— Where there is a right of action for a trifling assault, no material damage being done, and plaintiff refuses all settlement, and begins and then abandons a prosecution before a magistrate in order to bring an action of damages, the court will reduce damages, which have no reasonable measure, to such a sum as would be imposed as a fine by a magistrate. Papineau v. Taber, 2 Montreal Q. B. 107.

that a less amount would have satisfied the injury. It must be apparent at first blush that the damages are glaringly excessive.[28] Likewise, if the verdict is manifestly inadequate to compensate plaintiff for the damage sustained, it will be rectified or set aside for insufficiency.[29]
