as possible, and all the information on the subject is in possession of defendants.[32] So an assignment may not be good as being too general and yet sufficient in view of preceding allegations.[33] If the breach constitutes the basis of an action in a suit for a penalty it should be clearly and particularly averred.[34]

(B) Alternative Conditions. If conditions are in the alternative, so that performance of either discharges the obligation, a breach is bad which assigns nonperformance of one only.[35]

(C) Following Language of Condition. In assigning breaches it is sufficient to aver the intention of the parties apparent from the entire instrument, and the precise language in which such intention is expressed need not be used.[36] An assignment which uses and negatives the language of the condition is good.[37]

2. PLEA, ANSWER, OR AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE — a. In General. In view of the different systems of pleading[50] the difficulty in stating a general rule is obvious for many of the technicalities as to the several steps prerequisite to an issue have at least as to form given way before such code provisions as exist. Under the decisions, however, it may be generally stated that a plea must be true at the time it is pleaded.[51] Nor should it be hypothetical, or a plea only applicable to a different kind of bond than that declared upon.[52] And if another instrument is relied upon as furnishing an equitable defense it should be set out according to its terms and legal effect by a proper plea.[53] But the plea should not set up a contract different from and contradictory to that stated in the bond, and with reference to which the latter was made.[54] And facts should not be specially pleaded which can be proven under the general issue.[55]

b. Denial or Traverse of Breach. The alleged breach should be directly, and not inferentially, denied;[56] and should be traversed as charged, and not by a plea that the obligors have not violated the conditions to the extent alleged in the declaration.[57] So the averments must be such that the court may see whether the matters assigned as breaches were within the conditions or not.[58] And where demurrer, yet if a general verdict be rendered for plaintiff the judgment may be arrested.

Special plea amounting to general denial is demurrable. Wallace v. Spencer Exch. Bank, 126 Ind. 265, 26 N. E. 175. "A special plea in bar, amounting to the general issue — that is, a plea alleging new matter which is, in effect, a denial of the truth of the declaration — is, in general, improper and inadmissible. It goes in denial, not in avoidance; but it is good in substance, and bad in form only. But this latter rule is subject to this exception: A special plea amounting to a justification — in other words, an entire special plea answering the whole declaration, and alleging matter of justification — is good, although as to part it amounts to the general issue; for matter of justification is matter of law which ought to be referred by plea to the court." a plea is to the whole declaration on a penal bond it should sufficiently meet all breaches which are well assigned.[59] So a substantial part of the breach must be answered.[60] But in case of several breaches, defendant may deny or confess and avoid in several pleas the facts severally assigned as if they were separate counts, although the entire assignment must be answered;[61] and some of the breaches may be met by plea and others by demurrer, where the assignment consists of a single count.[62]

c. Impeaching Consideration. While the doctrine of estoppel may operate to preclude setting up a failure of consideration,[63] yet where it may be availed of, the facts showing the same must be stated,[64] and they must be set forth with sufficient certainty,[65] and be good in substance and form.[66] Nor must the plea be too indefinite to apprise the plaintiff of the particular illegality relied on;[67] and a complete failure must be alleged in debt on a bond,[68] since if a part only of the consideration is impeached it is an insufficient pleading.[69] Again a special plea is necessary, where the bond is executed under seal, nor can the issue of its validity be raised by objecting to its admission in evidence,[70] and if fraud in the consideration is relied on it should be pleaded in bar[71] with an offer to return the thing within a reasonable time.[72]

Demurrer can only raise question whether nil debet is properly pleaded to declaration on penal bond. U. S. v. Spencer, 2 McLean (U. S.) 405, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,368.

Motion to quash plea of nil debet to debt on bond will not be granted. Eakle v. Oliver, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 3.

Plea of nil debet irregular, but if plaintiff tries issue he is bound. Belser v. Irvine, 4 McCord (S. C.) 380.

75. American Buttonhole Overseaming Sewing Mach., etc., Co. v. Burlack, 35 W. Va. 647, 14 S. E. 319, plea should conclude with an "et sic non est factum."

Bond sued on not original bond; plea of non est factum is good. Galbreath v. Knoxville, (Tenn. Ch. 1900) 59 S. W. 178.

Bond taken unlawfully; plea that seeks to avoid a bond on such ground must specially state the facts that show illegality unless they appear on the face of the condition. U. S. v. Sawyer, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 86, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,227.

Joint plea of non est factum in action of debt on bond against principal and sureties must be sustained as to all or fail as to all. U. S. v. Halsted, 6 Ben. (U. S.) 205, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,287.

On a voidable bond non est factum is not a good plea. Bollinger v. Thurston, 2 Mill Const. (S. C.) 447.

Plea that bond executed by partner without authority from copartners can only be raised by non est factum. Greene County v. Wilhite, 29 Mo. App. 459.

Plea that one signed as agent and director and not otherwise, without alleging his authority, is bad. White v. Skinner, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 307, 7 Am. Dec. 381.

Plea that seals affixed without consent of defendant, without alleging that they were affixed with the knowledge or by authority of plaintiff, is insufficient. U. S. v. Luin, 1 How. (U. S.) 104, 11 L. ed. 64.

Plea that signature was forged without alleging knowledge of forgery is demurrable. Jacobs v. Curtiss, 67 Conn. 497, 35 Atl. 501.

Plea uncertain and argumentative as to signature is defective. Manning v. Norwood, 1 Ala. 429.

All other pleas and replications are surplusage.— Where no other form of pleading will entitle plaintiff to recover, the issue in debt on a bond being accepted upon pleas of non est factum and nil debet. Ryan v. People, 165 Ill. 143, 46 N. E. 206 [affirming 62 Ill. App. 355].

76. Beach v. Springer, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 519.

77. Hicks v. Goode, 12 Leigh (Va.) 479, 37 Am. Dec. 677.

Special non est factum that defendants delivered the instrument as an escrow on a condition not performed is a good plea. Union Bank v. Ridgely, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 324. But such a plea is bad, unless it aver that the condition has not been performed. U. S. v. Dair, 4 Biss. (U. S.) 280, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,913.

f. Nul Tiel Record. This is a good plea to an action of debt on an appeal-bond.[78]

g. Plea of Payment. Pleading conditions performed to debt on bond for money amounts substantially to a plea payment.[79] But the payment should ordinarily be pleaded to be available, although this is not an absolute rule and the sufficiency, insufficiency, or necessity of such a plea must depend upon the averments of the complaint; outside of this statement no specific or certain rule can be laid down.[80]

h. Plea of Performance — (i) Generally. In order to plead performance, oyer of the condition should be craved where it is not set out in the declaration.[81] But where the condition is in general terms, yet comprehends a multiplicity of matters, or multifarious particulars all in the affirmative, performance may be pleaded to avoid prolixity.[82] And generally such a plea is an answer to the whole cause of action.[83] So if a complete performance of all conditions of the bond is averred the plea is not demurrable.[84] But each breach should be answered and the time, place, and manner of performance be set forth where the breaches are specifically assigned, for in such case a general plea is insufficient.[85] And if the condition is in the disjunctive, the defendant's pleading must show which part he has performed.[86] Again if the plea of performance is too narrow or contains a

C. 169 (facts pleaded from which the presumption of payment arose); Watson v. Joslyn, 27 Vt. 611 (on demurrer plea was of payment and acceptance of a sum of money as satisfaction before suit brought); Cooke v. Graham, 5 Munf. (Va.) 172 (payment averred in accordance with the condition).

Instalment due.—Plea of payment puis darrein continuance is a good bar to an action on a penal bond, but does not prevent actions for future instalments. Jones v. Griffin, 1 Strobh. (S. C.) 31. But obligor cannot plead in bar that he paid part of the instalments after they fell due and that the others are not yet due. Rozenkrantz v. Durling, 29 N. J. L. 191.

General performance is a good plea. Dawes v. Gooch, 8 Mass. 488; Jackson v. Rundlet, 1 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 381, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,145. But it is not a good plea under a condition that a third person shall pay to the obligee such sums as he shall recover against him, for this is not an affirmation that such third person has paid. Freeland v. Ruggles, 7 Mass. 511. Nor is it good under a condition not to practice or settle within certain limits, where the breach assigned is that the obligor had practised within such limits. Plea should answer specially, in debt on bond, to every particular mentioned in the condition, where it is to do several distinct things, being something other than the performance of covenants. Bailey v. Rogers, 1 Me. 186.

86. Tucker v. Lee, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 684, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,221.

Condition in alternative; general plea of flat negative pregnant it is bad.[87] If readiness and willingness to perform are relied upon, the plea should set forth the same with all the essentials as to time, place, and ability, and including, when requisite, the production or tender of the thing itself; all these should, however, rest upon the requirements of the condition.[88]

(II) Non-Damnificatus. This plea is substantially the equivalent of one of conditions performed;[89] and although it may be applicable to an indemnity bond,[90] or to one for penalty or forfeiture,[91] it is not good pleading to a count assigning breaches,[92] or where the conditions are multifarious,[93] or in debt on bond the condition of which is in the alternative,[94] or to pay another bond,[95] or for faithful performance of an agent's,[96] or a jailer's duties,[97] or for the performance of a particular act.[98]

i. Sham or Evasive Pleas. Sham, frivolous, irrelevant, or evasive pleading should be stricken out.[99]

j. Setting Up Fraud.[1] A general plea of fraud and covin is good without setting forth the particulars thereof;[2] but it should also be alleged that it was in consideration of the execution of the instrument;[3] and if the fraud could have been avoided by reading the instrument alleged to have been procured thereby, performance is bad. But under such a condition the use of disjunctive words does not necessarily make the clause an alternative one. Bailey v. Rogers, 1 Me. 186.

Covenant not made negative by the mere occurrence of negative words, so that a general plea of performance would be bad if they are in affirmance of a precedent affirmative or if the whole clause taken together is essentially affirmative. Bailey v. Rogers, 1 Me. 186.

there should be averments of acts or device of the obligee used to prevent such reading, and signing, or of some abuse of confidence reposed in him.[4]

k. What Is Admitted. A plea admitting a breach of part of the condition is bad.[5] Nor can the contents of the obligation be denied if its execution, delivery, and approval are admitted;[6] nor is it necessary to produce the instrument where there is a plea of payment,[7] or of general performance of a bond with a collateral condition,[8] or an admission of the truth of an allegation setting out the condition,[9] or a plea of non est factum, the signature being thereafter proved, and the bond being read.[10] So in covenant with oyer, pleading payment, accord, and satisfaction, admits all the allegations of the complaint and precludes objection to the admission of the bond on the ground of variance.[11] But a denial of indebtedness, and that the instrument was not a bond but a private writing not properly executed nor binding, does not admit any liability on the obligation.[12]

l. Where There Is More Than One Defense — (I) Inconsistent Pleas. Pleas which are inconsistent cannot be pleaded together.[13] Although, if there is no apparent inconsistency in the allegations or pleas, they should not be stricken out.[14]

(II) Severance of Defenses. There may be a severance of defenses.[15]

m. Affidavit of Defense. If the bond is not an instrument for the payment of money within a statute or the rules of court no affidavit of defense is required;[16] but such affidavit is required on instruments so payable.[17] A sufficient defense should be stated to enable the court to pass upon the merits, at least to the extent of determining whether or not there is a defense in law; but the sufficiency or insufficiency of such affidavit must rest largely upon what appears in each particular case.[18]

3. SUBSEQUENT PLEADINGS — a. Replication or Reply — (I) GENERALLY. A replication or reply is unnecessary if the plea is of a character to complete the issue as in case of non est factum,[19] or if there is matter of avoidance which is deemed to be controverted.[20] If, however, such reply or replication is necessary it should sufficiently answer the plea,[21] but the particulars of an alleged fraud in obtaining a release need not be set out therein,[22] nor should it contain any averment against the express condition of the bond.[23] Departure and repugnancy are bad,[24] as is also duplicity or double pleading,[25] or affirmative matter in avoidance of a plea of no consideration.[26]

(II) ASSIGNMENT OF BREACHES. Plaintiff may declare generally and assign breaches in his replication in actions on bonds with conditions other than for the payment of money,[27] so in suits on bonds with collateral conditions,[28] and so after defendant has pleaded general performance.[29] But after he has by his pleadings defeated plaintiff the latter cannot assign new breaches,[30] and if those assigned

21. Gray v. Gidiere, 5 Rich. (S. C.) 386.

Replication is good in debt on bond which replies a mortgage which was to be taken as part of the subject-matter of the contract, as shown by the condition of the bond and as part of the condition in effect. Rives v. Toulmin, 19 Ala. 288. So, where the making, execution, and acceptance of a note in satisfaction is pleaded, a replication is good which, after special inducement, traverses the making and execution of said note in satisfaction and not the acceptance. Morris Canal, etc., Co. v. Van Vorst, 23 N. J. L. 98. And on a bond to indemnify against costs given to an assignee of a bankrupt, the plea being that the assignee had received more than sufficient to cover all legal expenses, a reply that he had not recovered the costs is sufficient. Waddell v. Delaplaine, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 284. So on a plea of release or payment reply may be an assignment of the bond to a third person and notice thereof before release or payment. Andrews v. Beecker, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 411.

For replications insufficient see Funkhouser v. Purdy, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 294 (tender of deed when title not complete); Warner v. Dunham, Lalor (N. differ in the declaration and the replication it is bad.[31] So duplicity may constitute a ground for demurrer.[32]

b. Rejoinder and Surrejoinder. Where the several facts asserted are connected and dependent, all tending to the point of defense sought to be introduced, a rejoinder is not double.[33] But it will be bad where there is a departure in the pleading.[34] Again, a rejoinder of general performance to a replication assigning breaches is defective.[35] But issue may be taken on the most material fact set forth, even though such rejoinder is insufficient in substance.[36] A surrejoinder is bad on special demurrer, where it is evasive and tenders an immaterial issue and does not answer the material averments of the rejoinder, otherwise where the issue is tendered on a material fact.[37]

4. Amendments. The pleadings may be amended by adding the name of a party;[38] by inserting a necessary allegation, even though by its omission the declaration is defective;[39] by correcting a variance between the declaration and the bond, even though the former be not actually altered;[40] by setting out special matter upon proper affidavit filed and showing made, and by changing a too indefinite plea upon seasonable notice of the nature of the defense.[41] And an amendment may be allowed after trial, where it does not change the cause of action;[42] or is necessary to sustain the judgment;[43] but not after judgment,[44] and close of the term,[45] except upon consent of the parties.[46] So the court may in its discretion refuse to allow the same after the evidence is closed, and substantially another cause of action would be substituted.[47] But an amended declaration does not change the burden of proof or admit the truth of a plea in defense, where facts are not averred therein which would have that effect.[48]

D. Issues, Proof, and Variance — 1. Issues Raised — a. In General. A general denial puts in issue an averment of the declaration that the damages were liquidated.[49] But the recitals in the instrument and all material traversable matters assigned in the breaches and not traversed are admitted.[50] Again, a petition may be subject to objections on account of the generality of the allegations, and if the plaintiff fails to declare upon his bond a judgment cannot be entered.[51] And a traverse of a plea of acceptance of a deed in accord and satisfaction does not admit proof of fraud in said deed, a special replication being necessary therefor.[52] But an averment of want of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the signing and execution of the bond does not deny said execution, where it is also admitted by defendant that he signed a paper substantially of the tenor and effect set forth in the complaint, and therefore it cannot be shown on trial that the bond was not filled out or sealed when defendant signed it.[53]

b. Execution of the Bond — (I) Generally. Proof of execution of the bond sued on is unnecessary, where it is not put in issue, the defenses of performance and limitations merely being set up.[54] But where the bond is set forth in the complaint as the ground of the action and it purports to have been executed by defendants and neither its consideration nor execution is impeached by plea it is admissible in evidence;[55] and fraud in obtaining a cosurety's signature must be pleaded as a defense by the other sureties to be available.[56]

(II) Under Verified Denial — (A) Generally. Affidavit of the truth of defendant's plea is necessary, otherwise execution of the bond need not be proved.[57]

(B) Non Est Factum. The plea of non est factum should be sworn to, or accompanied with an affidavit of its truth, or it is a nullity and may be stricken out.[58]

2. Proof Under Pleadings — a. In General. The evidence should support the allegations,[59] and if it does not prove an averment which is the gist of the action and essential to sustain the same there can be no recovery.[60] So if the breaches are not well assigned it is error to admit proof thereof or of facts not properly in issue;[61] and special matter of impeachment of consideration is inadmissible under an indefinite plea of illegality thereof;[62] nor may it be shown why certain acts were done or what was said prior to the execution of the bond, where there is no ambiguity therein and no averment of fraud in obtaining the signature of the surety.[63] But if the condition of a bond under the pleadings is dependent as to its breach upon acts done before a certain date the evidence is limited thereby, although if it relates to a subsequent time it may be admissible, where it tends to prove the relied-upon breach;[64] and absolute delivery prior to the date of the writ may be proven under a plea of in escrow.[65] Again, payment of interest cannot be shown under a plea or notice of set-off as so much money had and received.[66] And where the object of the action is the subject-matter of a bond to a third person evidence of the instrument is inadmissible, except on proof of assignment to defendant.[67] But agreements concerning the admissibility of evidence may preclude the necessity of suggesting breaches before the bond can be introduced.[68]

b. Nil Debet. Under a plea of nil debet any fact may be proven which tends to reduce the indebtedness where issue is joined without demurring;[69] and if this plea contains a notice of set-off any evidence is admissible which could be given under the latter pleading.[70]

c. Non Est Factum. It is apparent from the authorities that non est factum extends to the inducement only and not to special matter in evasion, which ought to be specially pleaded.[71] It puts in issue only the execution of the deed[72] or of such bond as is declared on,[73] and admits evidence merely of matters proving it to be void.[74]

What is not admissible.—Defendant cannot prove anything in defense under the conditions of the bond (Rice v. Thomson, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 339); nor that the signature was conditional (Hall v. Smith, 14 Bush (Ky.) 604), or was wrongfully or fraudulently obtained (Patterson v. Patterson, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 200); nor the signature of one of several to bind the others (Kuykendall v. Ruckman, 2 W. Va. 332); nor delivery as an escrow (Anonymous, 3 N. C. 497), or conditionally; nor matters which must be specially pleaded (American Buttonhole Overseaming Sewing Mach. Co. v. Burlack, 35 W. Va. 647, 14 S. E. 319); nor failure of consideration (Neely v. Chinn, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 84; Ragsdale v. Thorn, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 335; Bollinger v. Thurston, 2 Mill Const. (S. Dec. 680); nor that its bond was illegally assigned (Soloman v. Evans, 3 McCord (S. C.) 274), or was not taken in conformity with the statute, which should be pleaded specially (Poor Com'rs v. Hainon, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 492); nor parol discharge of a joint bond (Dewey v. Derby, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 462).

74. Adams v. Wylie, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 78.

d. Plea of Payment. The evidence should support the plea of payment.[75] But payment of a smaller sum and acceptance thereof in full of all demands may be proven, and unless contradicted it may be inferred that the whole was paid;[76] and where notice of matter of defense is also given, mistake, fraud, or want of consideration are admissible.[77] Again, general payment may be first shown and then its application to the specific object,[78] or special matter may be proven, where leave is given, even though there is no notice thereof as required by rule of court.[79] So any matter that bars the action since judgment may be shown;[80] and payment by one of the coöbligors is admissible in evidence.[81]

e. Plea of Performance. The plea of performance in an action on a bond with a collateral condition controverts the right to recover at all and calls for proof of every material allegation in issue, except that it admits execution of the bond.[82]

3. Variance — a. In General. Ordinarily a variance will not be held fatal unless it is of matters legally essential to the issue or claim, so as to materially and injuriously affect the substantial rights of the parties, or is misleading

What may be proven.— Any ground of defense showing that the bond was never legally valid (Downer v. Dana, 19 Vt. 338); the bond itself in debt against part of joint and several obligors (Webber v. Libby, 70 Me. 412); the original bond which may go to the jury without explaining apparent alterations (Connor v. Fleshman, 4 W. Va. 693); signing and delivery (Cully v. People, 73 Ill. App. 501); signature of one of the defendants as against him alone (Kuykendall v. Ruckman, 2 W. Va. 332); what was said and done at the time of signing (State v. Gregory, 132 Ind. 387, 31 N. E. 952); a conditional signing (Stuart v. Livesay, 4 W. Va. 45); non-delivery (Treman v. Morris, 9 Ill. App. 237); non-delivery, where none of the evidence is special matter requiring notice (Moyer v. Fisher, 24 Pa. St. 513); want of consideration (Bollinger v. Thurston, 2 Mill Const. (S. C.) 447); settlement of all demands (Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Tinsley, 75 Mo. 458); anything which shows that the instrument was originally void at common law, as coverture, fraud, or delivery in escrow on a condition not performed, or that the bond has become void since its execution by erasures or alterations (Union Bank v. Ridgely, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 324); fraud in so far as relates to the execution (Huston v. Williams, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 170, 25 Am. Dec. 84; Dale v. Roosevelt, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 307; Dorr v. Munsell, 13 Johns. (N. b. With Respect to Bond or Copy Thereof. In addition to the rule just stated[88] it may be generally asserted that the proof should correspond with the allegations in all essential legal requirements. a slight difference in the words of the obligation is immaterial.[90] So also as to matters which are not substantial and which could not have surprised defendant.[91] And where a copy is annexed it is no objection that some of the legal formalities have not been complied with.[92] But if there are incorrect recitals the variances arising therefrom cannot be avoided by innuendoes in the declaration on the bond giving such recitals a different meaning from what their language imports.[93] Again, the omission to declare specially on the obligation may be fatal,[94] as may a wrong description of its character.[95]

c. With Respect to Instrument Referred to in Bond. If the subject-matter described in the contract and the bond is identical, and no one has been misled, or prejudiced by the inaccuracy, the action is not defeated by a variance in the description of the parties with the referred-to instrument;[96] or of the terms of the condition of the contract, the action being upon the bond only,[97] or of the record of the judgment where the difference is slight;[98] or where the discrepancy as to the subject-matter is of no substantial importance;[99] or where the recital as to a

E. Evidence — 1. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — a. In General. Where a bond is conditioned for the payment of a penal sum at a specified time a prima facie case for the plaintiff for the full amount thereof will be established by the introduction of the bond in evidence.[2] And it has been decided that it is not necessary to sustain an action on a bond that proof of damage by reason of a breach thereof be shown.[3] But it is declared that the plaintiff will be held to strict proof of damages, where the claim arising out of a breach is a stale one.[4] Again, where a bond is conditioned for the repayment of reasonable sums, the reasonableness of the amount for which plaintiff seeks to charge defendant must be proved.[5] So also where a plaintiff seeks to recover on a bond from the heirs of an obligor he must show that they were bound by the bond.[6] And in an action by a principal to recover on the bond of an agent he must show that the latter was acting as his agent.[7] But where a bond is conditioned to bear interest from a day anterior to its date it will be presumed to have been given for a debt existing at the time from which the interest begins to run.[8]

b. As to Consideration. If the defendant in an action on the bond attacks the consideration therefor on the ground of want, failure, or illegality thereof he has the burden of proof to establish such fact.[9] But where he traverses the consideration generally and plaintiff replies a special consideration it has been declared that the latter must show such special consideration.[10]

c. As to Execution. In an action on a bond the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show the execution of the instrument, and it is declared that in the absence of such proof a judgment thereon cannot be sustained.[11] But where the execution thereof is admitted or proved the burden then rests on the defendant to show that it is not binding.[12] The usual mode of proof of the execution of a bond is by the testimony of an attesting witness, but if there be none it may be by proof of the handwriting of the obligors, though this is not exclusive of other modes.[13]

d. As to Performance or Breach — (I) In General. Although it is said that to place upon the plaintiff the burden of proving a breach of the condition of a bond involves both in form and substance the proof of a negative,[14] yet it may be stated generally that where a plaintiff alleges a breach of the condition of a bond it is incumbent upon him to introduce evidence showing such breach.[15] But it has been decided that evidence which raises a presumption of failure to comply with the conditions will be sufficient to throw the burden upon the defendant to establish a compliance.[16] The question, however, upon whom the burden of proof rests depends in many cases upon the pleadings.[17] Performance of the condition of a bond may also be presumed from lapse of time.[18]

(II) Payment — (A) Generally. In an action on a bond given to secure a payment by the obligor to a third party the obligee need not show that he has been compelled to make such payment, it being sufficient to show that the indebtedness has matured and has not been paid,[19] and the burden is on a defendant who pleads payment to prove the same.[20] Possession of the bond, however, by the obligor raises a presumption of payment.[21] And where a bond is payable by instalments in an action by the assignees who are required to take all legal measures against the obligors immediately after the instalments respectively fall due the first instalment will be presumed to have been paid where not demanded.[22] So also where several bonds are given which fall due at different periods, if on payment of one falling due at an intermediate period there is an overpayment and the excess is credited on the bond next falling due it will be presumed that the prior bond or bonds have been paid.[23] And on a bond to secure monthly settlements as called for by a contract, a note accepted in fulfilment of the contract is prima facie payment of the amount due on such settlement.[24] Again, whatever weight the jury may give to the fact that a payment indorsed on the bond has been obliterated by the holder there is no legal or technical presumption of payment of more than appears to have been in fact paid.[25]

(B) Presumed From Lapse of Time—(1) GENERALLY. Under the common law and in many states by express statutory provision a certain period of time is designated as a reasonable one in which to assert a legal right, and after such period has passed it cannot be enforced. So in actions on bonds payment thereof may be presumed from lapse of time.[26] But it is not necessary in order to raise a presumption of payment that the full period which of itself will create such a presumption shall have passed, for payment may be presumed by the lapse of a less period of time in connection with other circumstances.[27]

(2) REBUTTAL. The presumption as to payment from lapse of time is not in all cases conclusive, but may be rebutted by proper and sufficient evidence.[28]

But in order to rebut the presumption the proof offered should run through the entire period, and evidence showing non-payment during a portion of the time only will be insufficient;[29] and where affirmative proof that a bond has not been paid is given the question of its sufficiency in rebuttal is said to be for the court.[30]

e. With Respect to Bona Fide Holders. As a general rule a negotiable bond passes by delivery and the burden of proof that the possessor thereof is not a bona fide holder is on him who assails the possession.[31] And a similar rule prevails in an action to recover the possession of bonds by one claiming to be the owner, where the holder alleges that he bought them in the ordinary course of business, in good faith, and without notice of any claim of the plaintiff thereto.[32] But where it is shown that the bonds have been stolen, illegally issued, or fraudulently diverted from their purpose the holder then has the burden of proving either that he is, or some one under whom he claims was, a bona fide holder.[33]

2. Admissibility — a. In General. The proceedings on which a bond are given are admissible in evidence as to its validity,[34] and a contract to which a bond refers and to secure the performance of which it is given may be admissible for the purpose of proving its provisions.[35] Again, in an action upon a bond, if there is no issue which imposes upon the plaintiff the onus of proving its genuineness, it should not be rejected as evidence because it has interlineations which he does not account for.[36] And the record of a suit in chancery for the settlement of a partnership account may be admissible upon the question of liability on a bond given to secure one of the partners from loss.[37] But evidence of previous litigation is inadmissible where immaterial.[38] And all contemporaneous parol agreements tending to vary, add to, or contradict the terms of a bond are inadmissible.[39] So also declarations of an obligor are not admissible to affect the validity of a bond as against the obligee, unless accompanied with proof of such confederacy between the parties as would in other cases make the acts of one the acts of the other.[40] Again, where a forthcoming bond is only a common-law obligation the value for which the obligors in a bond make themselves liable is the value as established by the rules of evidence known to the common law.[41]

b. As to Consideration. Evidence which does not vary the transaction as appears from the face of the bond is admissible,[42] as is also evidence showing consideration and the history of the transaction.[43] Again, where it is claimed that the execution was procured by fraud, evidence showing want of consideration is relevant.[44] So also where, under a statute, the defendant is permitted to impeach the consideration it is competent for this purpose to show that the execution of the instrument was induced by false and fraudulent representations, and the consideration expressed in the instrument is not the real one which induced its execution.[45] And where a bond is given for money loaned evidence showing the inability of the obligor to make such a loan has been held admissible.[46]

c. As to Delivery and Acceptance. The burden of proving the delivery of a bond is on the plaintiff.[47] But it may be inferred from the acts of the parties;[48] and where the bond is in the possession of the obligee such fact is prima facie evidence of delivery,[49] and also of acceptance by him.[50] of the clerk or other person before whom acknowledged;[51] and that it was procured by fraud may also be shown, but to affect the obligee it must appear he had an agency therein.[52] So also evidence is admissible to show that there never was such an instrument because never completely executed.[53] And approval by the obligee may be shown by presumptive evidence.[54]

e. As to Performance or Breach — (I) Generally. A bond should be construed by itself and parol evidence to contradict, vary, or add to it is not admissible;[55] and where it is claimed that there has been a breach the evidence, if neither material, relevant, nor pertinent to the issue, is inadmissible.[56] But in an action on the bond of an agent or employee acts, declarations, or admissions of such agent or employee are admissible, where done or made in the course of his duty.[57]

(II) Payment. Evidence from which the jury may infer payment to one legally authorized to receive it is admissible.[58] And a bond may be evidence of part payment of an earlier bond.[59] Again where a bond is conditioned for the repayment of deposits the payment must be in legal tender unless otherwise provided.[60]

f. With Respect to Amount of Recovery. In an action on the bond of a bank teller a daily balance-book kept by him may be admitted.[61] And evidence of debts against the estate of deceased may be admissible in an action on a probate bond;[62] as may also an inventory of the estate, where a breach is alleged of a bond conditioned that obligor shall exhibit all papers as to estate of deceased.[63] Again, evidence of expenses incurred is sometimes admissible.[64] And a bond may be evidence of the amount of money advanced, though void for usury.[65] But in absence of proof entitling a recovery beyond the amount of the penalty evidence is inadmissible, in an action on a bond to procure a conveyance of land, of the value of such land.[66]

show a liability upon the bond;[67] and where the burden of proof is thrown upon the defendant by the pleading or evidence he must fully meet and overcome the same to justify a verdict in his behalf.[68] Again, where the answer puts in issue the condition of the bond a judgment for plaintiff cannot be sustained where the bond is not filed and no evidence given of its contents.[69] But under a plea of non est factum a recovery may be permitted on proof of execution of the instrument;[70] and where the only plea is payment the bond need not be produced.[71]

b. To Show Delivery. To prove delivery there must be some act, words, or statements showing an intention to deliver the instrument. It may be by delivery to the obligor and generally possession by the obligee is evidence thereof.[72] But delivery of a bond to a clerk of the obligor without any evidence of instructions or declarations showing an intention to deliver is insufficient.[73]

c. To Show Execution. Any evidence tending to prove the execution of a bond is sufficient to entitle it to be read to the jury.[74] An ordinary method of proof is by the testimony of a subscribing witness.[75] But facts and circumstances from which the jury may infer that a bond was or was not executed are also admissible in evidence;[76] and the existence of a bond may be proved by writings of the plaintiff.[77] Again, in an action of trover the plaintiff may prove execution by evidence of one of the obligors;[78] and the execution of an appeal-bond by a railway company is sufficiently shown, where the secretary and president have signed the same and the corporate seal is attached thereto.[79]

F. Damages — 1. Measure and Amount of — a. In General. The measure of damages or amount of recovery in an action on a bond depends largely upon the intent of the parties as expressed in the instrument. If it appear clearly that the sum mentioned therein is to be liquidated damages, then there may be a recovery of the whole amount, where such recovery is not inconsistent with the policy of the law. If, however, the sum mentioned was intended as a penalty, then the measure of damages should be the actual loss which has been sustained as a result of the breach, where this can be ascertained. Parties may stipulate for a certain sum to be paid as liquidated damages and courts will not interfere where such sum is not unreasonably in excess of the actual loss or unjust or oppressive; but parties cannot evade the jurisdiction of the courts by the mere designation of a sum as liquidated damages, where it is in fact a penalty. And generally the courts have construed the sum mentioned in a bond as a penalty, considering it merely as a security for the damage actually sustained by the breach of the condition, and have limited the recovery to an amount compensatory therefor.[80] But where the measure of damages equals the penalty it may be recovered in full.[81] And where the sum mentioned is in the nature of a statutory penalty for the non-performance of a statutory duty, it is not necessary to show

Such a measure of damages has been held proper in actions on bonds for conveyance of real estate (Rawlings v. Adams, 7 Md. 26); of insolvent debtor (Kiersted v. State, 1 Gill & J. (Md.) 231); of contractors (Dunavant v. Caldwell, etc., R. Co., 122 N. C. 999, 29 S. E. 837); to rebuild (Longfellow v. McGregor, 61 Minn. 494, 63 N. W. 1032); to deliver goods (Littlejohn v. Gilchrist, 3 N. C. 589); to pay an annuity (Cairnes v. McKnight, 17 Ohio St. 68); and also in actions to recover on the bond of a cashier (Barrington v. Washington Bank, 14 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 405) or bank teller (State Bank v. Johnson, 1 Mill Const. (S. C.) 404, 12 Am. Dec. 645).

Bond to build is subject to same rule. United Real Estate Co. v. McDonald, 140 Mo. 605, 41 S. W. 913; Hirt v. Hahn, 61 Mo. 496. And where such a bond is given by a purchaser to a vendor of land, evidence as to the effect the erection of the building would have had on other property of the obligee in the same locality is irrelevant, nor is there any presumption that if erected they would have increased the value of the land to the extent of their cost. United Real Estate Co. v. McDonald, 140 Mo. 605, 41 S. W. 913.

Bond to pay insurance premiums.— In an action on such a bond recovery should be for the overdue premiums and costs (Scott v. Phillips, 140 Pa. St. 51, 21 Atl. 241), though in a decision in New York a recovery of the full penalty was allowed under the facts of that particular case (Gerard v. Cowperthwait, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 371, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 1092, 50 N. Y. St. 492).

Bond to support.— The rule also applies in this case. Wright v. Wright, 49 Mich. 624, 14 N. W. 571. And there may be a recovery for future as well as past damages. Shaffer v. Lee, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 412.

When sum recoverable as liquidated damages for breach of contract see Shelby v. Bohn, 25 Ind. App. 473, 57 N. E. 566.

Where medium of payment is designated as government bonds, notes of a particular bank, or current bank money, the measure of damages is the value of such medium on the day of the breach. actual damage, and the whole sum may be recovered.[82] If, however, the sum designated in the bond is in excess of that required by statute, there can be no recovery beyond what would have been allowed if it had conformed thereto.[83] On covenants running to the obligees jointly only such damages are recoverable as all are interested in.[84] But where there is a change in the obligees with the consent of the obligor he will be liable for damages from breaches occurring after such change.[85]

b. Damages Limited — (I) By Pleadings. It has been decided that the plaintiff's recovery in an action of debt is not limited to the amount of damages laid in the declaration but may be in excess of such sum,[86] and where under the law of the particular jurisdiction the plaintiff's recovery is thus limited a judgment allowing a larger amount cannot be objected to where the excess is remitted and the final judgment does not exceed the amount of the penalty.[87]

(II) To Amount of Penalty. The general rule is that the damages allowable to a plaintiff should not exceed the penalty of the bond.[88] In some jurisdictions, however, a recovery in excess of such sum has been allowed,[89] as where the action is for the debt and not for the penalty.[90]

c. Nominal Damages. Nominal damages at least are recoverable where there is shown to be a breach of the condition,[91] and such damages only are recoverable

3. THE ASSESSMENT. It has been declared that as a foundation for the assessment of damages a breach of the bond must be suggested in the pleadings or upon the roll;[97] but in lieu thereof plaintiff may substitute a confession of damages by the defendant.[98] It may be stated generally, however, that in the absence of any agreement between the parties or of any statutory or other legal requirement providing otherwise the damages should be assessed by the jury.[99] And in the absence of any evidence by defendant as to the amount of plaintiff's damages it has been held that such amount cannot be fixed by the jury at a less sum than the penalty of the bond.[1] In some cases, however, this question may be determined by the court;[2] or in a manner provided by statute in which case there should be a compliance therewith.[3] Again, an excessive assessment may be reduced.[4] And after a verdict and judgment for the penal sum payments made by the defendant on the bond may in some jurisdictions be shown.[5] But where breaches have been assigned in an action on a bond conditioned for the payment of money by instalments it has been declared that the plaintiff is not entitled to a scire facias to have his damages for further breaches assessed.[6]

G. Costs and Attorney's Fees.[7] It may be stated generally that costs are recoverable, and that they may be allowed in addition to the penalty.[8] The question, however, as to their allowance is generally controlled by statute, the amount allowable therefor being ordinarily dependent upon the amount of the recovery or judgment. And where a statute fixes an amount necessary to an allowance of costs, a judgment for the penalty, if in excess of such sum, will carry costs, though execution be issued for less,[9] and the right thereto where a judgment has been recovered for interest merely, and there is no allegation that the plaintiff has elected to make the principal sum due will not be affected by an unaccepted offer to allow judgment for such sum.[10] So sureties who have joined in a motion for an order that the judgment be satisfied of record which is granted but reversed on appeal, having submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the court, are liable for costs on appeal.[11] Again, costs may be allowed where defendant confesses forfeiture in an action on a bond, though it appear in a hearing in equity that nothing is due.[12] And where several breaches are assigned, if plaintiff succeed in any one breach, the defendant will not be entitled to costs, though there is a failure to establish other breaches alleged.[13] But a settlement of a suit with part only of the obligors in a joint and several bond does not prevent an allowance of costs to others, where they defend severally.[14] Several defendants may for good reasons bona fide sever their defenses and employ separate counsel.[15] But, although attorney's fees are stipulated for in a bond given to secure payment of a sum certain, and other items which could not then be determined, such fees are not recoverable contrary to the statute, where items are charged against which a plea is sustained.[16] And if a collection fee of a certain per cent is authorized by the obligation it can be computed only on the amount of the debt left due when judgment is entered.[17]

H. Trial — 1. Filing Bond. Where it is not required by statute that a bond must be filed in court when judgment is rendered it has been declared that it is sufficient if it is then produced.[18] But the court may order a bond filed for inspection of defendant and others, on affidavit that it is a forgery.[19] or where the suit has been brought without the obligee's authority.[21] And a valid order of dismissal may be made after the usee's death and before revivor.[22] But a suit should not be dismissed on a ground which is for the jury to decide.[23] Again, it has been decided that a suit may be discontinued as to all but one defendant, where plaintiff has sued part of several joint and several obligors.[24] But a joint motion to dismiss by all where one is improperly joined is held to be bad, as is also such a motion by the one alone improperly joined.[25] And where, by default in the payment of interest, a bond conditioned for the payment of a sum of money becomes due defendant is not entitled to have the case discontinued on bringing the arrears of interest into court and paying the costs.[26] Again a nonsuit is proper where, pending litigation, action is brought on a bond taken under order of court for the security of the parties;[27] or where plaintiff fails to show the quantity of interest intended to be interchanged in an action on a bond conditioned to deliver certain land, provided certain other land should be delivered to the obligor.[28]

3. Suggesting Breaches. Where the declaration contains no assignment of breaches they may be assigned after issue joined on the plea of non est factum,[29] and also after judgment by default or by demurrer.[30] And after judgment and assessment of damages a subsequent assignment of breaches has been permitted, which it is said is to be regarded as a part of the original suit.[31]

4. Questions of Law and Fact. The general rule is that questions of law are for the court to determine while questions of fact are for the jury. In the application of this general rule to actions on bonds it has been determined that the issue on a plea of nul tiel record should be tried by the court.[32] Again, the scope of the authority of an agent is generally a question of law for the court;[33] as is also the question whether the assignee of a bond has used due diligence to collect it, the facts being found by the jury.[34] And the court may instruct the jury as to the interest to be allowed.[35] But it is for the jury to determine the question whether a purchaser is a bona fide holder,[36] or whether a person in filling out and delivering a bond to the obligee acted as the obligor's agent,[37] or whether a bond was delivered as an escrow,[38] or whether it was repudiated,[39] or whether notice of refusal to furnish support was given,[40] or where the bond contains an erasure or alteration, whether from the evidence it is the contract declared on or its identity has been destroyed,[41] or as to the identity of a contract referred to in the bond,[42] or whether default of an officer occurred before the execution of the bond.[43] And the jury should also inquire into the truth of the breaches,[44] and they may presume that a credit indorsed was properly entered.[45] But it is error to submit the question of new consideration to the jury, in the absence of evidence to warrant a finding that there was a new one.[46]

5. VERDICT AND FINDINGS — a. Form and Sufficiency. It has been declared that in an action of debt on a bond the verdict should find "the amount of the penalty, as the debt, and the amount of the recovery in the action referred to in the condition, as the damages."[47] And where in an action on a bond to recover the amount of a judgment, if such judgment exceeds the penalty, the verdict should be either for the full amount of the penalty or for defendant.[48] Again, where part of a bond has been paid it should specify the exact sum that remains due.[49] And a special finding should state the amount due, though failure to do so is not fatal, if data for computing it are given.[50] But where no breaches are found untrue a verdict need not particularize the breaches on which damages are assessed.[51] And it has been held that it is not irregular where it finds "for plaintiff, that the condition of the bond is broken," etc.,[52] or "that the defendant is indebted to the said plaintiff" in a designated sum.[53] So also an execution will not be set aside because of a mere informality in the verdict in referring the damages to the detention of the debt instead of assessing them for the breaches.[54] And a verdict has been held sufficient which finds that bonds were issued and delivered "in the manner set forth in the complaint," though it fails to find that the security has been given to the corporation issuing them as required by law.[55] Again, it has been decided that the court may amend the verdict,[56] and a finding not required may be rejected as surplusage,[57] as may also unnecessary words used in describing the obligee where a corporation.[58]

b. Verdict Directed by Court. The court may properly direct a verdict for the full amount of the penalty, where by uncontradicted evidence it appears that damage in excess of that sum has been sustained;[59] and it may direct a verdict for plaintiff, where the evidence offered fails to support an allegation of fraud which is relied on as a defense.[60]

I. Judgment — 1. IN GENERAL. If the bond is conditioned for the payment of money generally there cannot be a recovery on a judgment payable in gold coin.[61] And a judgment upon all the pleadings for the defendant is erroneous, where there is a materially faulty replication.[62] But where several breaches are alleged which constitute but one cause of action it is not necessary for the judgment to specify the breach upon which it is founded.[63]

2. Form and Requisites — a. In General. The general rule affirmed by early decisions is that the judgment in an action on a penal bond should be for the penalty as the debt, to be discharged by the payment of such damages as may be proved,[64] though a judgment merely for the damages assessed has been held proper.[65] Again, in other decisions it has been declared that in an action of debt the judgment should be for the plaintiff to recover the amount of the debt found, to be discharged by the payment of the damages found or assessed and costs.[66]

b. With Respect to Parties — (I) In General. A judgment in favor of the obligee should conform in the designation of such person to that in the bond.[67] And where an action is brought in the name of the commonwealth for the benefit of an individual a judgment which attaches the recovery to that person to the exclusion of all others is erroneous.[68]

(II) Joinder. If it appears from the face of a bond that one defendant is principal and the others sureties, it has been held proper to enter judgment against the former as principal and the others as sureties; but in a joint action no greater judgment should be rendered against the principal than the sureties,[69]

and where they are each bound in separate sums a separate judgment against each may be rendered.[70] But if an action is brought jointly against all the obligors on a joint or a joint and several bond the judgment should generally be against all or none,[71] unless a separate defense be set up, in which case it has been decided that the judgment should be against those to whom the defense does not apply.[72] Or it may be against an intermediate number of the obligors in a joint and several bond according to the declaration.[73]

3. Operation and Effect. A judgment may, by reason of the condition of the bond, operate as a continuing security for future breaches.[74] And parties may by a stipulation agree that breaches not litigated on the trial may be subsequently assigned and recovered for, and in such case the previous judgment will be no bar.[75]

4. Reversal,[76] Setting Aside, Amendment, and Correction. A judgment regarded as informal may be reversed on error.[77] So it should not be for an amount in excess of the penalty, and where so entered it is decided that it is such an irregularity as will justify a motion to set it aside.[78] The court, however, in entering a judgment may reduce a verdict which is in excess of the penalty.[79] A judgment for an amount in excess of the penalty may be amended so as to limit it to that amount;[80] and where it is erroneously entered for the debt instead of the penalty it may likewise be amended,[81] as may also one in which the period from which the allowance of interest is to commence is wrongly stated.[82] But where the declaration on a bond averred it to be for a less sum than the actual amount, and defendant confessed judgment for the debt in the declaration mentioned, and it was entered for such amount, it was held that it could not be amended.[83]

J. Execution Upon Judgment. The execution on a judgment for the penalty should not, it is declared, issue for more than the amount of the condition with interest and costs.[84] And where a bond not due is forfeited for non-pay-

I. DEFINITION.

A boundary is a line or object indicating the limit or furthest extent of a tract of land or territory; a separating or dividing line between countries, states, districts of territory, or tracts of land.[1]

II. DESCRIPTION.

A. General Rules of Construction — 1. CONTROLLING FORCE OF INTENT. The general rules of construction as applied to deeds and grants are applicable in the case of boundaries.[2] Intention, whether express or shown by surrounding circumstances, is all controlling; and that which is most certain and definite will prevail over the less certain and indefinite. Ambiguous or patently erroneous descriptions may be rejected, and the land located by other calls.[3]

2. Use of Particular Words and Terms. While as a general rule words are to be construed according to their ordinary meaning and common acceptation, certain words and terms of frequent use in the description of boundaries have acquired more or less fixed meanings.[4]

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 1.

A boundary may be rejected when it is manifest from all the circumstances of the case that it was inadvertently inserted, and that a tract of land with definite boundaries was bargained for and intended to be conveyed. Thatcher v. Howland, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 41. So, too, where two objects are found which answer the description of those called for in a preëmption land claim, and it cannot be determined which was intended, they will both be disregarded and the claim located by means of the other calls. Frye v. Essry, Hughes (Ky.) 103. But if the starting-point given by a deed can be found, and the lines actually run and determined by the courses and distances of the deed, the boundaries must be settled by their course. Waugh v. Waugh, 28 N. Y. 94.

Control of United States surveys.— All disputes as to the boundaries of land are to be governed by the United States surveys, unless there is some statute to the contrary. Taylor v. Fomby, 116 Ala. 621, 22 So. 910, 67 Am. St. Rep. 149.

Date of deed controls date of plat.— Where lands are conveyed, bounded upon a watercourse or other varying limit, and reference is also made to a plan, the date of the conveyance, and not the date of the plan, is to be considered in determining the question of the true boundary of the land upon the water limit, and the claim for alluvion. Jones v. Johnston, 18 How. (U. S.) 150, 15 L. ed. 320.

The possible intention of a party in running a line of a grant will not control courses and distances as recited in the grant. Tucker v. Satterthwaite, 123 N. C. 511, 31 S. E. 722.

4. "Adjoining," in the description of the premises conveyed, has been held to mean "next to" or "in contact with" and to exclude the idea of any intervening space. Yard v. Ocean Beach Assoc., 49 N. J. Eq. 306, 312, 24 Atl. 729. See also Adjoining, 1 Cyc. 765.

"As laid out by Saulsberry Haley" in the official map of a town means "as surveyed by Haley" and includes a reference to the monuments erected by him. Penry v. Richards, 52 Cal. 496, 499.

"Bounded north of" may be construed to mean "bounded north by," if necessary to aid the description. Hannum v. Kingsley, 107 Mass. 355.

"East" construed as "west."— In a call for a line in a grant, "east" will be construed to mean "west," where such correction is obviously required by the other calls and an annexed plat. Mizell v. Simmons, 79 N. C. 182. See also Johnson v. Bowlware, 149 Mo. 451, 51 S. W. 109; Warden v. Harris, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 47 S. W. 834.

"East" read "easterly."— Where the courses called for in a deed were described as "east," "west," "south," and "north," but were controlled by other well-defined and certain descriptions, it was held that in order to harmonize all the terms of the deeds these words might be read "easterly," "westerly," "southerly," and "northerly." Faris v. Phelan, 39 Cal. 612. But see Craig v. Hawkins, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 53, where it was held that the word "northwardly" was not synonymous with "north." See also Reed v. Knights, 87 Me. 181, 32 Atl. 870.

"'Line' in surveying and dividing grounds means prima facie, a mathematical line, without breadth; yet this theoretic idea of a line may be explained, by the facts referred to, and connected with the division, to mean a wall, a ditch, a crooked fence, or a hedge, a line having breadth." Baker v. Talbott, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 179, 182.

"More or less" in the boundary in a deed of land are merely words of description to prevent the parties from being prejudiced from inaccuracies. They do not have the effect to extend the grantee's boundary beyond the line fixed by a visible monument, or a map referred to in the deed. Brady v. Hennion, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 528. And see Dodd v. Burchell, 1 H. & C. 113, 8 Jur. N. S. 1180, 31 L. J. Exch. 364; Dendy v. Simpson, 7 Jur. N. S. 1058, 9 Wkly. Rep. 743.

"'Stretching,' in its common use in grants,

B. Methods and Elements of — 1. Artificial or Natural Monuments — a. Natural Monuments — (I) What Are. Natural monuments are such natural or permanent objects as streams and rivers, ponds, shores, beaches, highways, streets, and the like.[5]

(II) Identification. Where a natural monument is called for in the description of the boundaries of land, the identification of the object intended by the description is to be determined by a fair and reasonable construction of the whole instrument, regard being had in all cases to the true intent of the parties as expressed therein.[6]

during the early periods of the English colonial government here, was applied either to the extent of a single line, or of a rolling location, in which the breadth being described by lines on surfaces, was carried with such breadth, to the object described as its terminus." Van Gorden v. Jackson, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 440, 462.

"To," "from," "by," and "on" when used to express boundaries are always to be understood as terms of exclusion, unless there is something in the connection which makes it manifest that they were used in a different sense. Municipality No. 2 v. Municipality No. 1, 17 La. 574; Thompson v. Blackwell, 5 La. 465; Bonney v. Morrill, 52 Me. 252; Bradley v. Rice, 13 Me. 198, 29 Am. Dec. 501; Williston v. Morse, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 17; Wells v. Jackson Iron Mfg. Co., 48 N. H. 491; Bailey v. White, 41 N. H. 337; Peaslee v. Gee, 19 N. H. 273. Compare Wilson v. Inloes, 6 Gill (Md.) 121, where it was held that the word "by," when descriptively used in a grant, does not mean "in immediate contact with," but "near" to the object to which it relates.

"To" construed "toward."—A description in a deed in the words "thence running to the rear of the said" land does not necessarily mean that the granted parcel is bounded by the rear line of the land referred to, but may simply indicate the direction of the boundary as if the word "toward" were used instead of "to." Moran v. Lezotte, 54 Mich. 83, 19 N. W. 757.

An entry calling to lie "in the fork of the first fork of Licking" was held to mean the first division of the first considerable stream flowing into the Licking, as one passes up the river from its mouth. Bibb v. Pickett, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 309.

Assuming that the expression "thence N.," in describing in a conveyance a line run from a certain point, means due north, and is not used to express generally a northerly direction, it will be given such construction only when it is necessary for certainty, or when there is nothing else to show that it was not used in that strict sense. Martin v. Lloyd, 94 Cal. 195, 29 Pac. 491.

Rejection of unnecessary words.— In ascertaining a place to be found by its distance from another place, by its description in an entry, the words "about" or "nearly" and the like are to be discarded, if there are no words making it necessary to retain them, and the distance mentioned is to be taken positively. Johnson v. Pannel, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 206, 4 L. ed. 221. See also Sanders v. Morrison, 2 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 109, 15 Am. Dec. 140; Whitaker v. Hall, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 72; and About, 1 Cyc. 196.

5. 3 Washburn Real Prop. (6th ed.) § 2332.

A "clearing" is a permanent object within the rule that monuments control courses and distances. Jackson v. Widger, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 723.

A savanna is a natural boundary in the sense in which that term is used in the construction of deeds. Stapleford v. Brinson, 24 N. C. 311.

A street, opened and long acquiesced in, should be regarded as a fixed monument. Van Den Brooks v. Correon, 48 Mich. 283, 12 N. W. 206.

Burying hill.— Where an ancient town grant described land as being bounded "southwest by the skirts of the burying hill as far as is laid out and marked round" and gave the grantees liberty to feed on the burying hill, it was held that the burying hill should be considered as a monument and boundary and not as a lot excepted out of the grant. Charlestown v. Tufts, 111 Mass. 348.

Culturable lands.— A requirement in a grant that the boundary lines shall be run so as to include certain culturable lands is a call for a natural object which will control courses and distances. Clark v. Hills, 67 Tex. 141, 2 S. W. 356.

The boundary line of another tract of land is a natural boundary within the rule that natural boundaries control courses and distances. Graybeal v. Powers, 76 N. C. 66.

What are not permanent monuments.— A covenant is a deed that the premises are free from encumbrances, "except a right, which is reserved, to draw water at the well on the west line of said land," where the description in the deed located the well about eleven feet from the line, was held to create an easement against the grantee, and not to make the well a monument fixing the west line of the premises. Maguire v. Sturtevant, 140 Mass. 258, 5 N. E. 644. So it was held that a deed which called for "the middle of the creek in its natural bed when the pond is exhausted" made a shifting boundary and not a fixed landmark. Primm v. Walker, 38 Mo. 94.

Kentucky.—Thurston v. Masterson, 9 Dana (Ky.) 228; Reid v. Langford, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 420; Lillard v. Henderson, 3 A. K.

b. Artificial Monuments and Marks — (i) What Are. Artificial monuments are landmarks or signs erected by the hand of man.[7]

(ii) Identification. The determination of what monument is intended by the description is a question of construction dependent upon the terms of the entry, patent, or conveyance; its identity being a question of fact determinable by the jury.[8]

(iii) Relocation of Lost Monument. When monuments designating the boundaries of land are obliterated and cannot be found, they are to be relocated by the field-notes and plats of the original survey.[9]

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 43.

Common consent and general reputation.— Where an entry calls for the main fork of a creek, and there are three forks or branches of nearly equal size, the locator is at liberty to take as the main fork the one fixed on as such by common consent and general reputation, although nature had not distinguished it as such. Whitaker v. Hall, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 72.

Control of matter of record.— In Mosby v. Carland, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 84, it was held that where an expression equally fits two natural objects, one a matter of record and the other not, that of record shall be understood as intended.

Numerical identification.— Where the third creek from the mouth of a river is called for in an entry, the creek intended must be taken according to the numerical order of creeks, unless some other stream, from general reputation and notoriety, has been so considered. Watts v. Lindsey, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 158, 5 L. ed. 423. See also McClure v. Byne, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 56.

Colorado.— Pollard v. Shively, 5 Colo. 309, where it was held that a stump, hewed and marked, might be adopted as a location post, but that the descriptive survey should give both its real and assigned character.

Connecticut.— See Law v. Hempstead, 10 Conn. 23, where, under the circumstances of the case, a post not referred to in the deed was rejected as an artificial monument.

North Carolina.— Smith v. Murphey, 3 N. C. 382, line of another tract. Compare Mann v. Taylor, 49 N. C. 272, 69 Am. Dec. 750; Reed v. Shenck, 14 N. C. 65, which hold that stakes are not such permanent boundaries of land as to control calls for course and distance, being generally regarded as imaginary boundaries.

Ohio.— Alshire v. Hulse, Wright (Ohio) 170, post between adjoiners.

Pennsylvania.— Pennsylvania Canal Co. v. Harris, 101 Pa. St. 80, where it was held that in determining the exact location of ground taken by the commonwealth for the use of a canal, a sharply defined cut in the bank or rock on the side of the canal may be taken as a monument. Compare Cox v. Freedley, 33 Pa. St. 124, 75 Am. Dec. 584, where stakes were rejected.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 44½.

It is immaterial by whom a stake was set, where a boundary is determinable upon its location and existence. Lampe v. Kennedy, 56 Wis. 249, 14 N. W. 43.

Call for adjoiner does not include monument.— Where each block of surveys is separate and complete of itself, the call of a tract in one block for an adjoiner in another does not make the monument of the adjoiner the monument of the later block. Grier v. Pennsylvania Coal Co., 128 Pa. St. 79, 25 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 85, 18 Atl. 480.

Effect of practical location.— Where the monuments of the original survey have disap-

2. Corners — a. In General — (i) Manner of Locating. As far as practicable[10] the actual course of the surveyor, as shown by marked lines or monuments, will be followed in locating corners, but where these do not exist or cannot be established the courses and distances called for will govern.[11] The general rules as to the measurement of distance govern[12] where a corner is described as being located a certain distance from a given point.[13]

(ii) Identification — (a) In General. What constitutes the true corner called for in an entry, grant, or conveyance, is a question of construction for the court; its identification a question of fact for the jury.[14] Where a corner called for is a known and ascertained point or one that can be ascertained and fixed peared, the question where they were located is to be determined by the practical location of the lines, made at a time when the original monuments were presumably in existence, and probably well known. Diehl v. Zanger, 39 Mich. 601.

In relocating lost monuments designating the boundaries of government lands, resort must be had to other known lines and monuments as a basis of survey. Sawyer v. Cox, 63 Ill. 130.

Object of resurvey.— A resurvey made after monuments of the original survey have disappeared is for the purpose of determining where they were, and not where they ought to have been. Diehl v. Zanger, 39 Mich. 601.

Where two monuments and the length and course of the line between them are given, but one of the monuments cannot be found, the location of the lost monument is to be ascertained by measuring the given length of line from the known monument on its course, and not by a reference to, and in conformity with, the length of other corresponding lines on the same tract, on which monuments have been preserved. Otis v. Moulton, 20 Me. 205.

10. In case of uncertainty the intention of the parties, as shown by the instrument, in connection with the surrounding circumstances, will control. Anderson v. Scott, 75 Mich. 300, 42 N. W. 991.

Practical location.— In Stewart v. Patrick, 68 N. Y. 450, it was held that describing a boundary line as commencing at a tree does not necessarily fix the point as at the center of the tree, but that with proof of an actual division and occupation upon a line beginning at the outer surface or near the tree, the deed may be interpreted in conformity with the practical effects so given it by the parties.

Meridian followed.— In Vance v. Marshall, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 148, the magnetic and not the true meridian was held to be the proper guide for ascertaining the beginning of a survey.

Test surveys.— When the accuracy of the starting-points taken for test surveys is merely matter of speculation, they cannot be used to fix a disputed boundary between two lots, when the dispute arises from a discrepancy which affects all the lots in the block, and which must therefore be apportioned among them. Beginning upon street.— Where, according to the description in the deed, land conveyed begins on a certain street, at the division line between the lot conveyed and the next continuous lot, the true import is the point where that division line intersects the marginal line of said street. upon the ground by proper examinations or surveys, the true location of such corner is the one referred to in the grant or conveyance.[15] In cases of uncertainty the general rules as to the relative importance of conflicting calls[16] apply in full force.[17]

(B) Reëstablishment of Lost Corner. The rule for determining lost corners of a survey, when some remain, is to run the lost lines according to the courses and distances in the survey, unless the lines so run do not close the survey with the corners remaining, in which case the courses in the survey must be followed and the distances disregarded, and if the survey cannot then be made to close the courses themselves must be deviated from.[18]

Sufficiency of description.— To establish a beginning and other corners of a grant, it is not indispensably necessary that they should be marked, if they can be established by other descriptions sufficiently certain to enable the surveyor, chainbearer, or others to find them. Evidence based upon courses and distances from other known points is admissible to fix a corner where no corner is found, but never to change the location of an original corner when found. Gordon v. Booker, 97 Cal. 586, 32 Pac. 593.

Where no corner was ever made and no lines appear running from the other corners toward the one desired, the place where the courses and distances will intersect is the corner. If, however, a marked line can be found, it must be pursued as far as may be, but if it does not extend to the intersection then the course of the patent must be taken until the intersection is made. (iii) Control of Beginning Corner. While in some jurisdictions the beginning corner, when established, is held to be of controlling authority,[19] and while, as a general proposition, it is undoubtedly true that mistakes are less likely to occur in relation to the starting-point than in respect to succeeding calls,[20] nevertheless, the true rule seems to be that when the succeeding calls are as readily ascertained and are as little liable to mistake they are of equal dignity with, and may control, the first.[21]

Allowances to be made.— In renewing lost corners allowance should be made for variation in the magnetic needle since the date of the original survey, and the courses and distances not departed from, except when necessary. In making measurements allowance should be made for unevenness of the ground. Bryan v. Beckley, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 91, 12 Am. Dec. 276; Beckley v. Bryan, Ky. Dec. 91.

From what corner survey must start.— In determining the location of lost corners of a survey when some remain, the surveyor may in his discretion proceed from the corner which can most easily be found. He is not limited to that one which was the beginning of the survey, and he may also proceed either to the right or to the left from such corner. Beckley v. Bryan, Ky. Dec. 91. See also infra, II, B, 3, a, (III).

If there is obliteration of only a portion of one of the boundary lines leading to the lost corner, the remaining portion, whether straight or not as marked, must be considered as established; and the corner must be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be at the point where the marked line, if continued, would intersect the next line. But if the lost corner is proved to have been at another point the lost portion of the boundary must be ascertained by running a straight line from the point at which the marks disappear to that corner. Billingsley v. Bates, 30 Ala. 376, 68 Am. Dec. 126.

Where vestiges of an ancient boundary are to be seen new posts should be fixed, but they must be placed where the former limit or fence stood, without regard merely to the title papers. Zeringue v. Harang, 17 La. 349.

Paper surveys.— Although it is a fundamental rule that the actual beginning corner must control in locating original surveys, yet when a survey is made upon paper, and not upon the ground, the intention of the parties making the survey should control, which intention is to be ascertained from all the facts and circumstances connected with the case. (II) Relocation. In case of lost corners on town or range lines, the lines should be resurveyed between the nearest known government monuments on either side of the lost corner or corners, and the section corners relocated on straight lines between such monuments at the distances indicated in the field-notes and the lost quarter posts at equal distances between the section corners.[23] In interior sections corners are always established, where the original corners cannot be found, at a point equidistant from the corresponding corners of the section.[24] In all cases the chain used in making the resurvey must be made to cor-

Corners of adjacent township.— A survey of the western line of a township is necessarily a survey of the eastern line of the next township to the west, and when no other survey has been made of the latter township, or of the section of it in controversy, the quarter post in a section of the eastern township, set on the township line, is necessarily the quarter post of the adjacent section, and governs the location of the quarter line in the section last named. Thompson Tp. Highway Com'rs v. Beebe, 61 Mich. 1, 27 N. W. 713.

Corners of subdivisions of fractional sections.— 2 U. S. Stat. at L. 313 and 3 U. S. Stat. at L. 366, relating to the survey of public lands of the United States, do not make the corners of subdivisions of fractional sections, as fixed by the United States surveyors, conclusive as to the true location of such corners, but they ought to be placed equally distant from the section corners on the same line, so that if the original United States surveyor has made a mistake in the location the corner may be changed. Nolen v. Palmer, 24 Ala. 391. See also Lewen v. Smith, 7 Port. (Ala.) 428.

Variance with description in plat or field-notes.— In construing a deed describing land by government survey, the corners of the survey as actually established and not as they ought to have been established, are the true corners, notwithstanding their location may not be such as is designated in the plat or field-notes. Greer v. Squire, 9 Wash. 359, 37 Pac. 545 [modifying Squire v. Greer, 2 Wash. 209, 26 Pac. 222].

Where a deed described the land by adopting the corner of a subdivision according to the United States survey as a starting-point, that corner is a monument and will control, although the party selling, at the time of sale, by actual survey, fixed the stake at a different point and ran the lines accordingly. By course and distance.— In reëstablishing lost government corners, where all traces of them are gone and there are no fixed monuments called for, the courses and distances called for in the field-notes of the original government surveys should be observed. Major v. Watson, 73 Mo. 661.

Relocation on base or correction lines.— The United States interior department, by a circular issued in March, 1883, gives the following method for the restoration of lost or obliterated corners of government surveys on base and correction lines: "Run a right line between the nearest existing corners on such line, whether base or correction line, which corners must, however, be fully identified, and at the point proportionate to the distance given in the field-notes of the original survey establish a new corner. This point should be verified by measurements to the nearest known corners north or south of the base or correction line, or both." A corner so established is not conclusive, and is not to be preferred to a survey between two fully identified corners, with which upon actual measurement it fails to verify. respond to that used by the government, by testing it with distances on the ground between two or more known monuments.[25]

3. Courses and Distances — a. Courses — (I) Determination of — (A) In General. In locating courses the intent of the party, as derived from the instrument itself, is to govern;[26] but independently of a showing to the contrary courses are to be run as called for.[27] Where a line is described as running toward one of the cardinal points, it must run directly in that course, unless it is controlled by some object,[28] and in all cases the magnetic meridian is to be fol-

Other courses unaffected by mistake in one. — In restoring and renewing lost lines and corners of a survey, a mistake in one course, evidenced by applying the patent to the ground, cannot be applied, or be made by presumption, to affect any other course named. A mistake in one course does not necessarily or probably argue a mistake in running any other course. Bryan v. Beckley, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 91, 12 Am. Dec. 276. But see Lewis v. Harwell, Peck (Tenn.) 294; Sevier v. Wilson, Peck (Tenn.) 146, 14 Am. Dec. 741, which hold that if, in running the lines of a grant, one line be found marked, which is admitted or proved to be a line of the grant, and which will run with a variation from the calls of the grant, if no other marked lines be found, the other calls should be run with the same variation as that found on the marked line, to ascertain the land granted.

lowed, making due allowance for variation, in the absence of a showing that the course has been run according to the true meridian.[29]

(B) Continuous Line. A boundary line whose commencement is given must be continued in the same direction, if possible, unless the contrary be shown.[30]

(C) Straight Line. Where a line is described as running from one point to another, it is presumed, unless a different line is described in the instrument, to be a straight line, so that by ascertaining the points at the angles of a parcel of land the boundary lines can at once be determined.[31]

(D) Meander Line. Numerous well-considered cases support the doctrine that unless, from the terms used in the description of a boundary line running up, down, or with a stream, the intent of the parties is clearly otherwise,[32]

To run a line at a given angle to a tortuous stream or irregular shore, a straight line must first be established as a base. This can only be done by ascertaining and reducing to a straight line, either the general course of the stream from its source to its mouth, or the general course of the shore line, or that portion of the stream or shore line which shall appear to have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the execution of the grant or conveyance. Where an entry gives a base line, and calls to run off from that base "northwardly,"

(iii) Reversing Course. Where a disputed or lost line or corner can thereby be established more nearly in conformity with the terms of the instrument and with the intent of the parties as gathered therefrom, it is competent to ascertain such line or corner by first ascertaining the position of some other bound and tracing the line back from that by reversing the course and distance;[38] but a line will not be reversed for the purpose of showing the termination of a prior line unless the description of the posterior line is more definite than that of the prior line, and a mistake in the prior line can be clearly shown.[39]

b. Distances — (i) In General. Unless controlled by other calls, calls for distances must be strictly observed.[40] A line between given points or monuments must be the shortest distance between them,[41] but in the absence of terminating monuments lines ought to be run upon the exact courses and distances stated.[42] Where the distances on the lines called for are not expressly given, or are vague

"southwardly," etc., these expressions are construed as a general description of the side of the base line on which the land is to lie, and the survey should be constructed at right angles thereto. Craig v. Hawkins, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 53.

By the use of the term "about" in deand indefinite, they must be ascertained by construction,[43] giving full effect to the apparent intention of the locator and to the descriptive words of the grant or conveyance.[44]

(II) Measurement by Meander of Stream or Road. As a general rule the distances called for from point to point on navigable waters, large non-navigable streams, or roads ought to be run by their meanders;[45] but in the case of small non-navigable streams the distances will generally be run from point to point in a direct line.[46] No fixed rule, however, can be laid down, since each case depends upon the intention of the locator or grantor, to be arrived at from the calls of his entry or conveyance, in connection with the surrounding circumstances.[47]

(III) Scale of Measurement. The scale of measurement to be used in locating lines by distance depends upon the circumstances of the case. Where surface, rather than horizontal, measurement has customarily been employed by the surveyors of a locality, the same measurement should be adopted in relocating the lines, and vice versa.[48] Similarly where a grant is made of land, and bounded by monuments named as existing upon the earth, and by distances between them, and not by monuments and distances named on the plan only, the admeasurement should be made upon the earth and not by the scale upon the plan.[49]

4. Designation, Quantity, and Location of Land — a. Designation — (I) In General. A general designation of the land to be granted or conveyed, by its name or number, as being owned by, or in the possession of, a certain person, as being the same land mentioned in another grant or conveyance, or otherwise, is a sufficient description of itself, without specific locative calls, if thereby the land scribing the length of line in the deed of conveyance, it is understood that exact precision is not intended; but if the place where a monument stood by which the distance was controlled and determined cannot be ascertained, the grantee must be limited to the number of rods or feet given. 48. In Pennsylvania, it has been held that in measuring distances called for in an original survey of land warrants, surface measurement, being the kind in practice by surveyors in that state, will be used, in the absence of proof that any other kind of measurement was in use when the original survey was made. Boyton v. Urian, 55 Pa. St. 142.

contemplated by the parties can be identified with certainty.[50] Where there is both a particular description by metes and bounds, or by courses and distances, and a general descriptive designation, the latter as a rule yields to the former;[51] but if the particular description is uncertain or indefinite,[52] or if used rather in the sense of reiteration or affirmation than in the sense of restriction,[53] the general description will prevail. In all cases, however, the intention of parties as gathered from a consideration of the whole instrument is of controlling authority,[54] and such construction will be given it as will, if possible, satisfy each of several descriptions.[55]

(II) By Name of Occupant or Owner. Where land is described by metes and bounds, or courses and distances, and also as being, or having been, in the possession or occupation of a named person, and the two descriptions conflict, the determination of what land is intended to be conveyed is a question of construction upon the whole instrument. If it is clearly the grantor's intention to convey the land as so described by ownership or occupancy that description will prevail;[56] but where such reference is merely descriptive, it will yield to the more certain and definite locative calls.[57]

(III) By Name of Tract. When there are two descriptions in a deed, one of which describes the premises conveyed generally by number or name, and the other giving a particular description by metes and bounds, or courses and distances, which is erroneous, the latter will be rejected.[58]

(IV) By Reference to Adjoining or Adjacent Lands. Lands are frequently described by reference to adjoining or adjacent lands and in the absence of other controlling calls[59] a call for adjoiners fixes the boundary so described, which is to be run coincident with, or at the prescribed distance from, the line of adjoiners.[60] In construing such calls, the true line of the adjoiner, irrespective of errors in location, is to be understood as meant.[61] What constitutes the adjoining land called for is a question of construction for the court; its actual location a question of fact for the jury.[62]

Necessity of locating line of older grant.— Where there is a call for the line of an older grant, the rule is that before the call may be ascertained the line of the older grant must be located. Dula v. McGhee, 34 N. C. 332.

Necessity of proving return of older survey.— When a surveyor in his return calls for an old survey the owner need not prove that the latter was returned, as it is immaterial whether it was returned, why it was not returned, or even why it was abandoned. (v) By Reference to Description in Other Grant or Conveyance. When land is described in a grant or conveyance by reference to another grant or conveyance, the description contained in the latter is regarded as adopted by and incorporated into the former, and the land therein described will pass.[63] The reference, however, must be definite and specific in order to control a specific description which, in itself, is plain and unequivocal.[64]

b. Reservations and Exceptions. Reservations and exceptions from land granted or conveyed are governed by the same rules as govern the boundaries of lands granted or conveyed.[65] Mere uncertainty of the exclusions from the Former ownership satisfies call for present ownership.— Where a deed describing premises conveyed bounds them on one side by lands mentioned as owned by another person, speaking in the present tense, when in fact at the date of the deed there is no land owned by such person in that place, the land recently owned by him will be intended and the deed should receive this construction ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Mason v. White, 11 Barb. Whether lands owned or occupied intended. — In Crosby v. Parker, 4 Mass. 110, land was described in a conveyance as being bounded by B's land. B owned at the time a piece of land, and had contracted to purchase another piece adjoining, which he occupied as his own, but had received no conveyance at the time of the conveyance to plaintiff, although he had paid the price for it. It was held that plaintiff's land was bounded by the land owned by B and not by that occupied by him. See also Jewett v. Hussey, 70 Me. 433; Cleaveland v. Flagg, 4 Cush. Control of courses and distances.— Where a deed describes the land by courses and distances, as given in a resurvey, and further as that tract which had passed to him by a chain of conveyances, the covenant of warranty extends to the entire quantity included by the courses and distances, although variant from the lines of the original survey actually marked out. Steiner v. Baughman, 12 Pa. St. 106.

Not necessarily conclusive.— A statement in a deed that the granted premises are the same that were conveyed to the grantor by a certain deed is not necessarily conclusive that the grantor intended to convey the whole of the premises to which he acquired title by the deed referred to, where the subsequent deed shows, with reasonable certainty, by a particular description of metes and bounds, that he intended to convey a smaller lot. boundary granted will not avoid a patent, where the outside lines are fixed and certain by courses, distances, and natural objects.[66]

c. Quantity Called For — (i) In General. Where an intention is clearly shown to grant or convey a specifically designated quantity of land, the boundaries will be so located, if possible, as to contain the quantity called for;[67] but mere proof of an overplus of land is not sufficient to change boundaries that are marked by monuments.[68]

(ii) In Government Surveys. In ascertaining the boundaries of land sold under government surveys, the sections and their subdivisions are to be considered as containing the exact quantity expressed in the returns of the surveyors, whatever may be the actual quantity contained in such sections or subdivisions.[69]

d. Location of Land — (i) In General. Location of land is a question of evidence and cannot be reduced to fixed and definite rules. A correct location consists in the application of any one or all of the rules of construction to the particular case; and when they lead to contrary results, that must be adopted which is most consistent with the intention apparent on the face of the grant or conveyance, to give effect to which the agreed-on line therein described may be corrected so as to correspond with the fact.[70]

Estimated quantity.— In Pierce v. Faunce, 37 Me. 63, one deed in a chain of title described the land as a tract "containing sixty-seven acres, more or less, and being on the north side of" a certain lot. A subsequent deed described the land as "containing twenty-five acres, more or less," and as being the same land conveyed by the former deed. The lot itself contained sixty-seven acres, and it was held that the latter deed conveyed the whole lot, the number of acres mentioned being regarded as an estimate of the quantity merely rather than a designation of the extent of the tract conveyed.

"More or less."— A description in a deed of the quantity of the land conveyed as so many acres, "more or less," is not conclusive as to the exact quantity of land in the tract conveyed. Hodges v. Kowing, 58 Conn. 12, 18 Atl. 979, 7 L. R. A. 87.

Insufficient description.— In Andrews v. Todd, 50 N. H. 565, a deed conveyed premises, "reserving about three fourths of an acre of land in and about the graveyard on said premises, as now staked out." No graveyard was ever actually staked out on the premises, but at the date of the deed there was a graveyard on the farm about four rods square, inclosed by stone posts and chains, and it was held that the three fourths of an acre could not be located in a square form about the small graveyard, because the words, "as now staked out," constituted a material part of the description which the court could not reject.

Where land is conveyed to be afterward located within specified bounds, the first rightful location determines its bounds forever. Farrar v. Cooper, 34 Me. 394. See also Hall v. Pickering, 40 Me. 548.

(II) Public Land — (A) In General. In locating public lands the same general rules apply as in the location of other lands.[71]

(B) Locating as Blocks. In Pennsylvania, where several tracts are surveyed at the same time, by the same surveyor, under warrants of the same date, and are returned into the land-office as one body, the surveys are not to be treated as separate and individual, nor can each tract be located independently of the rest by its own individual lines or calls, or courses and distances, but such surveys are to be located together as a block or large tract.[72]

(III) Surveying in Square. Where there are no calls to control a rectangular figure, that form, if possible a square, must be given a survey.[73]

5. Lines — a. In General — (I) Manner of Locating — (A) In General. In locating boundary lines a line actually marked must be adhered to, although it

Control of leading warrant.— The location of a series of land warrants surveyed on the same day is determined by courses and distances from the leading warrant, where no lines are to be found on the ground, and there is no call for the line fixed for the boundary of an adjoining warrant. Boynton v. Urian, 55 Pa. St. 142.

If the lines and corners can be found on the ground, they fix the location of the block, even to the disregard of a call for adjoiners, since they apply to each and every tract of the block as much as they do to the particular tract to which they are joined. varies from the course called for, and is not a right line from corner to corner.[74] Lines not run and marked must be ascertained by course and distance,[75] unless these are controlled by natural or artificial monuments.[76] In all cases the real question is, where the line was in fact located, not where it ought to have been located,[77] and in determining this resort may be had to every kind of evidence to which it is competent to have recourse in proving any question of fact.[78] Manifest intention as shown by the grant or conveyance, and by the circumstances surrounding the transaction is a controlling factor.[79]

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 66.

Sufficiency of description.— A right angle, erected at a given point upon a given line, certainly locates a line with mathematical precision, the only condition being that the line adopted as a base shall be precisely located. Kenniston v. Hannaford, 55 N. H. 268.

Control of intermediate monument.— Where a boundary line is described as beginning at a post and running "thence southerly in as straight a line as possible over the highest part of said hill, to a large white pine tree," the method of ascertaining the boundary is to run a straight line from the post to the highest part of the hill, and another straight line from the highest part of the hill to the tree. Control of actual location.— Where the calls of the field-notes of the title papers under which both parties claim begin at the corner of a certain survey, and plaintiff's title papers locate that corner at a rock set in the ground, which is there at the time of trial, but the survey made by order of court shows that this rock is not at the place where the calls in the original survey would place it, the line is not to be determined by the recent survey, or by the course and distance of the original survey, but it is to be located by the jury where it appears from the evidence to have been actually located originally. Presumption of intention.— Where lines are to be run at a certain distance from a rectangular building, and there is nothing in the deed or situation of the land to indicate the contrary, it is fair to presume that the parties intended that the exterior lines should be run so as to correspond with the lines of the building. Perkins v. Aldrich, 77 Me. 96. See also Hodge v. Blanton, 1 Head (Tenn.) 560.

(c) Running to Include Quantity. While calls for quantity are merely descriptive, and yield to all other calls,[81] yet such calls may be made locative and controlling, as where there is a call for a line, or lines, to run so as to include the quantity called for. In such a case the line, or lines, must be located in such a manner as to include the specified quantity as nearly as possible, in the absence of other controlling calls.[82]

Any of the marks of an older survey may be appealed to in fixing the location of a younger one, and it is the duty of the surveyors under younger warrants to adopt such ancient marks rather than establish new ones. Dreer v. Carskadden, 48 Pa. St. 38.

Where a series of land warrants were surveyed on the same day, the external boundary line of the warrant furthest from the first or leading warrant must be determined by beginning from such leading warrant and measuring therefrom the distance of each succeeding warrant in consecutive order unless such boundary line is fixed by a line on the ground as the boundary of the warrant, or as the boundary of another prior warrant adjoining thereto. (B) Relocation of Lost Line. The rules as to the reëstablishment of lost corners[85] apply to the relocation of lost lines. Visible and actual landmarks are to be preferred, but if they cannot be ascertained, resort must be then had to the courses and distances,[86] from which no departure should be made, except in cases of necessity, when distances will, as a rule, yield to courses.[87] In running these latter, allowance must be made for magnetic variation from the true meridian.[88]

Control of line first run.— In tracing a survey controlling importance need not be given to the line first run. Ayers v. Harris, 64 Tex. 296. See also supra, II, B, 3, a, (III).

Call for subsequently established line.— A conveyed land to B, describing it as bounded "north, on the line of said Blandford." The line of the town of Blandford was subsequently established by act of the legislature, after which B conveyed to C by a similar description, and the line so established was held to be the northern boundary of the land included in the deed from B to C. Cook v. Babcock, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 526.

Line of street.— Where a deed calls for the line of a street as the monument, the line of the street as it is opened and built upon will be held to be the line intended. De Veney v. Gallagher, 20 N. J. Eq. 33.

Presumption from coincident surveys.— In an action of ejectment, where the question is the boundary line between two ranches, there having been two surveys starting from points directly opposite, the distance between the calls, the monuments, and length of the lines run being exactly the same, the presumption will be conclusive that both surveys are of the same line, and that it is the true boundary line. Wise v. Burton, 73 Cal. 166, 14 Pac. 678.

Where there are two boundary lines known by the same name, and a deed calls for "McCulloch's corner, a red oak," and such corner and oak stood in one of such lines, that line will be considered as designated by the call. be actual lines on the ground excluding them, when such lines, constituting the survey, will control the calls; but when there are no natural monuments or lines called for, by which the closing line is to be fixed and ascertained, and no line on the ground, the survey is to be closed by a direct line between the termini of the lines on the ground, or as fixed by the courses and distances returned to ascertain these termini.[89]

c. Of Riparian or Littoral Holdings. Lines of flats or of the shore or bed of a watercourse are located by running them at the required angle from the upland to the utmost limit of the land granted or conveyed, whether that limit be low-water mark or the thread of the stream.[90]

90. Alabama.— The side lines of land below high-water mark are to be run by extending the side lines of the upland without variation of course to the margin of the channel of the river. Hagan v. Campbell, 8 Port. (Ala.) 9, 33 Am. Dec. 267.

California.— Quantity being given, without specifying length of line on stream, the required quantity of land is to be located by making the first line follow the meanderings of the stream from the starting-point named in the deed until, reduced to a straight line, it shall be of sufficient length to form one side of a square large enough to contain the required quantity; and this square is to be formed by projecting straight lines at right angles from the ends of the first straight line to such a distance that a line drawn from one to the other, parallel with such first line, will include the required quantity between it and the stream. Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 122, 85 Am. Dec. 103.

Connecticut.— The rule for the division of flats is to run perpendicularly to the shore line from the point of division at high-water mark to low-water mark. In determining the curve of the shore its general trend for a considerable distance is to be considered, omitting to notice small indentations and projections. Kentucky.— Alluvion is apportioned between coterminous proprietors, by extending the original river frontage of the respective lots as nearly as practicable at right angles with the course of the river to the thread of the stream. Miller v. Hepburn, 8 Bush (Ky.) 326.

Louisiana.—The proportionate area or acreage system for division of alluvion between riparian proprietors is not adopted. Each proprietor of original tracts takes between the lines of his new frontage on the watercourse, measured back to the old frontage. Course or direction of said lines is of no consequence. The extent of old frontage on the watercourse determines the extent of the new frontage. Newell v. Leathers, 50 La. Ann. 162, 23 So. 243, 69 Am. St. Rep. 395.

Maine.— The mode of ascertaining the side lines of water lots from the upland to low-water mark under the colonial ordinance of 1641, where they have not been otherwise settled by the parties, is to draw a base line from one corner of each lot to the other, at the margin of the upland, and run a line from each of these corners at right angles with such base line to low-water mark. If the line of the shore is straight the side lines of the lots thus drawn to low-water mark will be identical; but if by reason of the curvature of the shore they either diverge from or conflict with each other the land inclosed by both lines, or excluded as the case may be, is to be equally divided between the adjoining proprietors. Emerson v. Taylor, 9 Me. 42, 23 Am. Dec. 531. See also Call v. Carroll, 40 Me. 31; Treat v. Chipman, 35 Me. 34. In Kennebec Ferry Co. v. Bradstreet, 28 Me. 374, certain upland was conveyed adjoining easterly upon a river where the tide ebbed and flowed, one of the side

d. Partition or Division Line. Practically the same rules which govern the lines running at a right angle with the river, and the other so as to leave the land toward the river of less extent than at the other end,— "together with all the flats and water privileges adjoining to, being at and having the width of the easterly end of said land, as bounded by the river aforesaid." The bank of the river at that place was convex. It was held that the extent and position of the flats were to be determined by drawing a straight line from the southeast and northeast corners of the land at high-water mark, and extending lines from the ends of that line, and at right angles with it, from high to low-water mark.

Massachusetts.— The general rules for the division of alluvion or flats between coterminous proprietors, as deduced from the adjudged cases, may be stated as follows: (1) The intention of the ordinance of 1647 was, "if practicable, to give to every proprietor the flats in front of his upland of equal width with his lot at high-water mark." Gray v. Deluce, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 9, 12. See also Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 276. (2) The nearest channel from which the tide never ebbs, although not adapted to navigation, is the limit. Atty.-Gen. v. Boston Wharf Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 553; Walker v. Boston, etc., R., 3 Cush. (Mass.) 1; Ashby v. Eastern R. Co., 5 Metc. (Mass.) 368, 38 Am. Dec. 426; Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 95. (3) The direction of the side lines of the flats is not governed by that of the side lines of the upland (Curtis v. Francis, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 427; Piper v. Richardson, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 155; Rust v. Boston Mill Corp., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 158) unless expressly so agreed by the parties (Dawes v. Prentice, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 435). (4) Where there is no cove or headland a straight line is to be drawn according to the general course of the shore at high water, and the side lines of the lots extended at right angles with the shore line. Winnisimmet Co. v. Wyman, 11 Allen (Mass.) 432; Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray (Mass.) 441; Knight v. Wilder, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 199, 48 Am. Dec. 660; Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 95; Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 276. (5) Flats situate in a tidal river at a point in its course above the line of low tide are to be divided among the adjoining properties by drawing lines from the termini of the latter on the banks at the ordinary stage of water to, and at right angles with, the center line of the river. Tappan v. Boston Water Power Co., 157 Mass. 24, 31 N. E. 703, 16 L. R. A. 353. (6) Around a headland the lines dividing the flats must diverge toward low-water mark. Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray (Mass.) 441; Gray v. Deluce, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 9. See also Emerson v. Taylor, 9 Me. 42, 23 Am. Dec. 531. (7) In a shallow cove where there is no channel a base line will be run across the mouth of the cove, and parallel lines drawn at right angles with the base line, from the ends of the division lines of the upland to low-water mark. Gray v. Deluce, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 9. See also Wonson v. Wonson, 14 Allen (Mass.) 71; Atty.-Gen. v. Boston Wharf Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 553. (8) A deep cove out of which the tide entirely ebbs at low water is to be divided by drawing a line across its mouth, giving to each proprietor a width upon the base line proportional to the width of his shore line, and then drawing straight convergent lines from the divisions at the shore to the corresponding points on the base line. Rust v. Boston Mill Corp., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 158. See also Wheeler v. Stone, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 313; Ashby v. Eastern R. Co., 5 Metc. (Mass.) 368, 38 Am. Dec. 426; Sparhawk v. Bullard, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 95; Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 276. (9) The direction of the side lines of flats in a cove may be modified by the course of the channel bounding them, or by the position of other channels of the upland. Atty.-Gen. v. Boston Wharf Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 553; Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray (Mass.) 441; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 53. (10) It seems that after passing the mouth or narrowest part of a cove the lines may diverge, if necessary to preserve the proportions of different estates. Walker v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 3 Cush. (Mass.) 1. (11) An agreement of coterminous proprietors as to the direction of their boundaries may be proved or presumed from their acts, and those of public authorities. Michigan.— The boundary between adjoining riparian owners, as to the land under the water, is to be determined by extending a line from the boundary at the shore perpendicularly to the general course of the stream opposite that point. Clark v. Campau, 19 Mich. 325. See also Blodgett, etc., Lumber Co. v. Peters, 87 Mich. 498, 49 N. W. 917, 24 Am. St. Rep. 175; Bay City Gas Light Co. v. Industrial Works, 28 Mich. 182.

New Hampshire.— Land formed by alluvion in a river is, in general, to be divided among the several riparian proprietors entitled to it, according to the following rule: Measure the whole extent of their ancient line on the river and ascertain how many feet each proprietor owned on this line; divide the newly formed river line into equal parts, and appropriate to each proprietor as many of these parts as he owned feet on the old line; and then draw lines from the points at which the proprietors respectively bounded location of lines generally[91] govern the location of partition or division lines.[92]

New Jersey.— A riparian owner, when he extends his shore front, must, if the high-water line is substantially straight, so extend his side lines as to make them rectangular with such high-water line. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Hannon, 37 N. J. L. 276. See also Stockham v. Browning, 18 N. J. Eq. 390.

New York.— In determining the boundary lines between coterminous proprietors of land made from the bed of a river or bay, each riparian proprietor should receive his ratable share of front on the outer or new water line, and the boundary lines between coterminous proprietors are to be drawn at right angles or divergent or convergent to the shore, according to whether the new exterior line equals, exceeds, or falls short of the old shore line. O'Donnell v. Kelsey, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 202 [affirmed in 10 N. Y. 412, Seld. Notes (N. Y.) 22]. See also People v. Woodruff, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 43, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 515; Nott v. Thayer, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 10. But see People v. Schermerhorn, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 540, where it was held that the lateral lines must be drawn perpendicular to the general course of the shore.

North Carolina.— Persons owning lands on navigable streams may erect wharves next to their lands up to deep water, and may make entry and obtain titles as in any other case, subject to the regulation that they must not obstruct navigation, and that they shall be confined to the straight lines from their water fronts. Bond v. Wool, 107 N. C. 139, 12 S. E. 281.

Pennsylvania.— The owner of land on a navigable stream is entitled to claim to low-water mark by lines running directly from his extreme bank marks, if any such he has, to the beach, and this without regard to the courses of the side lines of his survey. Kreiter v. Bigler, 101 Pa. St. 94 [limiting Wood v. Appal, 63 Pa. St. 210].

Rhode Island.— In determining title to land formed by filling in from a former shore line, where the upland boundary, if prolonged, would meet the harbor line obliquely, in the absence of any agreement or facts working an estoppel, the line will be drawn from the termination of the line on the old shore to meet the harbor line perpendicularly. Manchester v. Point St. Iron Works, 13 R. I. 355; Aborn v. Smith, 12 R. I. 370. Compare Thornton v. Grant, 10 R. I. 477, 14 Am. Rep. 701, where the rule adopted is this: Draw a line along the main channel in the direction of the general course of the current in front of the two estates, and from the lines so drawn and at right angles with it draw a line to meet the original division line on the shore.

Vermont.— When alluvion is formed on lands bordering on an unnavigable river, owned by coterminous proprietors, the rule for distribution of the accretions is to extend the side lines of each owner to the nearest river bank, giving to each that part of the accretion formed in front of his own land. Hubbard v. Manwell, 60 Vt. 235, 14 Atl. 693, 6 Am. St. Rep. 110. Compare Newton v. Eddy, 23 Vt. 319.

Virginia.— In making an apportionment of flats between coterminous owners, the rule of division is, as the whole shore line of the coterminous owners at low-water mark is to the whole line of navigability, so is each one's share of the shore line to his share of the line of navigability. Groner v. Foster, 94 Va. 650, 27 S. E. 493.

Wisconsin.— The rule is the same as in New Hampshire. Northern Pine Land Co. v. Bigelow, 84 Wis. 157, 54 N. W. 496, 21 L. R. A. 776 [following Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 276].

United States.— The United States courts have adopted the rule for fixing boundary lines in a small bay or cove as declared in Deerfield v. Arms, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 41, 28 Am. Dec. 276; Jones v. Johnston, 18 How. (U. S.) 150, 15 L. ed. 320; Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black (U. S.) 209, 17 L. ed. 117; South Shore Lumber Co. v. C. C. Thompson Lumber Co., 94 Fed. 738, 37 C. See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 74.

Control of intention.— Where a description in a deed refers to an avenue line, and there are two avenue lines, one being the original line of the avenue and the other the line of said avenue as widened, although not opened, and either line may be meant, the line which was intended to be referred to by the parties should control the description. Norton v. Hughes, 17 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 287 note.

Control of marked line.— The fact that

6. Maps, Plats, and Field-Notes. When maps, plats, or field-notes are referred to in a grant or conveyance they are to be regarded as incorporated into the instrument and as furnishing the true description of the boundaries of the land,[93] in the absence of other controlling calls.[94]

7. Waters and Watercourses — a. In General — (i) What Law Governs. The boundaries of land located on navigable waters are under state control, subject to the regulations of congress concerning commerce and navigation.[95]

two surveys call for each other for a common boundary line is not so controlling as to justify the establishment of a common line, where the lines of each survey are actually marked on the ground, and as marked leave an area of ground between the surveys. Walker v. Smith, 2 Pa. St. 43. Compare Smith v. Davis, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 50, where the known intention of the parties was held to control the line marked on the land.

In the absence of marked lines and monuments the proper mode of locating such lines is to divide the land proportionately between the parties, in compliance with the order of court, under which the partition is made, or with the expressed intention of the instrument. McAlpine v. Reicheneker, 27 Kan. 257; Long v. Merrill, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 157; Runlett v. Demeritt, 8 N. H. 296. See also Au Gres Boom Co. v. Whitney, 26 Mich. 42.

Where the description calls for a subdivision of a government survey and the quarter section corners have never been established or are lost, the division lines of the fractions of the sections are determined by a division pro rata of the lines of the sections as they appear on the ground. Eshleman v. Malter, 101 Cal. 233, 35 Pac. 860; Miller v. Topeka Land Co., 44 Kan. 354, 24 Pac. 420; Packscher v. Fuller, 6 Wash. 534, 33 Pac. 875. Compare Beardsley v. Crane, 52 Minn. 537, 54 N. W. 740, where it was held that where, owing to meandered lakes, but one quarter post had been established upon the ground upon the boundary lines of a certain section, which post was on the south line thereof, the division lines between the southeast and southwest quarters of said section must be ascertained by running a line due north from the quarter post to the lake upon the north side of the section.

Agreement with ancient maps.—Where the original surveys agree with maps that have been in use for many years, they should not be held erroneous because they do not agree with resurveys made long afterward, and based upon the assumption that information furnished by living persons as to the locality of lines and corners is absolutely correct. McCombs v. Sheldon, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 1114.

(II) Presumption as to Rights Passed — (A) In General. In construing the description in a conveyance which bounds the lands conveyed upon a body of water courts incline strongly to such an interpretation of the language as will pass all the riparian rights to the grantee,[96] and it will be presumed, in the absence of a clear showing to the contrary, that the adjacent flats and shore, to the extent of the grantor's rights therein, pass as appurtenant to the highland.[97] On the other hand, a grant or conveyance of flats or shore passes no title to upland by presumption.[98]

as it usually stands when free from disturbing elements,[2] and to low-water mark on Lake Champlain, unless otherwise limited by the terms of their grants.[3] With respect to land bordering on unnavigable ponds or lakes, it is held in some jurisdictions that the littoral owner, as such, takes only to the natural shore of the pond or lake, or to low-water mark;[4] while in others the title of such owner is held to extend to the center of the lake, unless the contrary appears.[5]

bb. Where Sectionized. Where a lake has been surveyed and sectionized by the government, without reference to its character as waters, and as though it were dry land, an abutting owner's boundary will be confined to the literal terms of his deed, without regard to the center of the body of water.[6]

(c) Rivers and Streams — aa. When Navigable and Tidal. At common law the boundaries of lands lying upon navigable rivers, that is, rivers in which the tide ebbs and flows, extend to high-water mark, the shore between high and low-water marks and the bed of the stream being vested in the crown;[7] and this rule is gen-

The submerged lands are appurtenant to the upland so far as their limits can be reasonably identified, but in public waters the state law must determine how far rights in such lands can be exercised consistently with the easement of navigation.

erally applied in the United States to the boundaries of land lying upon tidal rivers which are navigable in fact.[8]

bb. When Navigable and Non-Tidal. At common law, a conveyance of land bounded upon a river or stream in which the tide does not ebb or flow, although navigable in fact, is presumed to carry title to the thread of the stream;[9] but in the United States, where the test of navigability is navigability in fact, the decisions with reference to the boundaries of lands lying upon non-tidal navigable rivers are hopelessly in conflict. Some, following the spirit of the common-law rule, hold that the right of a riparian owner extends to high-water mark only;[10]

"The principle which gives the land between high and low-water mark to the crown is said, in the case of Atty.-Gen. v. Chambers, 27 Eng. L. & Eq. 242, to be 'that it is land not capable of ordinary cultivation or occupation; or, according to the description of Lord Hale, as generally dry and manurable; and so it is in the nature of unappropriated soil. Lord Hale gives as his reason for thinking that lands only covered by the high spring tides do not belong to the crown, that such lands are for the most part dry and manurable; and taking this passage as the only authority at all capable of guiding us, the reasonable conclusion is that the crown's right is limited to lands which are, for the most part, not dry or manurable.'" Islands between bank and thread.— A conveyance of land bounded on a river not navigable conveys the land to the middle line of the river, including any island situated on that side of such line (Stanford v. Mangin, 30 Ga. 355; Kimball v. Schoff, 40 N. H. 190); but where the mainland and island have been separately surveyed and purchased by different parties as distinct tracts, the grantees of the mainland cannot claim the island as included in their grant (Wiggenhorn v. Kountz, 23 Nebr. 690, 37 N. W. 603, 8 Am. St. Rep. 150).

Intention controls presumption.— Where the probate judge advertises and sells a lot bounded on an unnavigable stream, and on the same day, and as part of the same sale, sells the bed of the stream to another person, the deeds for the two parcels being executed the same day and containing the same recitals, the intention thus shown to separate the ownership of the bed of the stream from the ownership of the lot will overcome the cial means or through natural causes, will not have the effect of shifting the boundaries.[16]

ee. When Watercourse Is National or State Boundary. When a watercourse forms a national or state boundary, there is a conflict of opinion as to the rights of the riparian owner.[17]

(2) Meandered Waters. The general rule adopted by both state and federal courts is that meander lines are not run as boundaries of the tract surveyed, but for the purpose of defining the sinuosities of the banks of the stream or other body of water, and as a means of ascertaining the quantity of land embraced in the survey. The stream, or other body of water, and not the meander line as actually run on the ground, is the boundary,[18] and the rules adopted in the vari-presumption that a deed to a lot bounded on an unnavigable stream carries the title to the bed of the stream to its center. Denver v. Pearce, 13 Colo. 383, 22 Pac. 774, 6 L. R. A. 541. See also Hall v. Whitehall Water-Power Co., 103 N. Y. 129, 8 N. E. 509.

Statutory change.— The owners of land bounded by a river declared by act of congress to be a navigable stream do not, upon a repeal of that act, acquire title to the bed of the river. Correspondence of line and quantity.— The fact that the number of acres recited in a government patent corresponds with the quantity within the meander line along a navigable lake will not prevent the patentee from claiming the land between the meander line and the shore line. The term "fractional," as used in describing a section of land partly within and partly without a meander line, refers simply to the circumstance that the section does not contain six hundred and forty acres of dry land, and does not bound the same by the meander line. ing to the contrary in the grant or conveyance from which such owners derive their title.[24]

(b) Ponds. Subject always to a manifest intention to the contrary, apparent upon the face of the instrument,[25] a grant or conveyance of land bounded generally upon an artificial pond will be construed as extending to the middle or thread of the original stream.[26] Where a boundary is fixed at the bank of a pond, a subsequent change in the height of the water will not affect the boundary as so fixed.[27]

(2) Natural Bodies Artificially Maintained. Land bounded on a pond extends only to the margin, and the margin of the pond as it existed at the time of the conveyance is the limit, whether the pond was then in its natural state, or raised above it by a dam, or depressed below it by the deepening of its outlet;[28] but when the margin varies at different seasons of the year, a grant bounded by a pond will include all the land that is uncovered when the water is at its lowest,[29] and where the artificial obstruction is subsequently removed and the water recedes to its original state the grantee will take to the water's edge.[30]

(iii) What Constitutes High or Low-Water Mark. In tide waters, high and low-water marks are the limits within which the tide ordinarily ebbs and flows.[31] In streams, lakes, or ponds in which the tide does not ebb or flow low-

Islands in rivers fall under the same rule as to the ownership of the soil and its incidents as the soil under water does. If not otherwise lawfully appropriated they belong to the riparian proprietor on one side, or are divided in severalty between the proprietors on both sides, according to the original dividing line, or filum aquæ, as it would run if the islands were under water. Filum aquæ is ascertained by measurement across from ordinary low-water mark on one side to the same on the other side, without regard to the channels or depth of water. When the island is appropriated the boundary is then midway between that and the mainland. McCullough v. Wall, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 68, 53 Am. Dec. 715. See also Bellefontaine Imp. or less definite meanings;[35] and in the absence of a clear showing of a contrary intention it will be presumed that parties use them in their technical sense.[36]

(II) For Edge, Bank, or Shore. While always a question of construction, depending upon the true intent of the parties as derived from a consideration of the whole instrument, specific calls in a description of the boundaries of land for the edge, bank, or shore of a watercourse, pond, or lake will, as a rule, be construed to limit the grant or conveyance to the water's edge.[37]

35. See Bank; Basin; Bay; Beach; Bed; Bounded Tree; Bounders; Bounds; Flat; Sea-Shore; Shore; Strand.

"Brook."— Where the boundary of land is described in a deed as running on the bank of a certain brook, and such brook has both a main and auxiliary channel, "brook" means the main channel, in the absence of evidence that the parties did not use the word according to its ordinary signification when referring to one of the two branches of the stream. Pike v. Hood, 67 N. H. 171, 27 Atl. 139.

Pennsylvania.— Wood v. Appal, 63 Pa. St. 210; Klingensmith v. Ground, 5 Watts (Pa.) 458.

(III) For Monument or Corner on Bank. The mere mention of a monument on the bank of a stream as the place of beginning or end of a line is not of itself sufficient to control the ordinary presumption that the grantee will hold to the thread of the stream,[38] or in the case of navigable rivers in some jurisdictions to low-water mark.[39] Where, however, the intention is clearly apparent to limit the boundary by the monument, the instrument will be so construed.[40]

(IV) For Thread of Stream. A specific call for the thread of a stream fixes the thread as the boundary,[41] and in case the stream has two channels the thread of the main channel is the limit.[42]

(V) For Quantity. The quantity of land intended to be included in a grant or conveyance will not, of itself, either enlarge or limit the boundaries of riparian lands, but in doubtful cases, where the boundaries are not definitely fixed, it may be considered in arriving at a true construction of the instrument.[43]

c. Effect of Shifting of Channel or Shore. Where, by a sudden and violent or artificial change, the channel or shore upon which riparian or littoral lands are bounded is shifted, the boundaries of such lands are unaffected, and remain in their original position;[44] but where the change is gradual and imperceptible, whether caused by accretion, reliction, or encroachment, the boundaries shift with the shifting of the channel or shore.[45]

A matter of construction.— The question whether the highway passes to the grantee is in all cases a matter of construction merely, to be determined from a consideration of the language used by the parties and such surrounding circumstances as are proper to be considered in ascertaining their intent. Codman v. Evans, 1 Allen (Mass.) 443; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Pittsburgh Grain Elevator Co., 50 Pa. St. 499; Buck v. Squiers, 22 Vt. 484. The employment of the words "by," "upon," or "along" a road manifests an intention to include the road in the grant to the center line. Mott v. Mott, 68 N. Y. 246; Cochran v. Smith, 73 Hun (N. Y.) 597, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 103, 56 N. Y. St. 227. But where a deed describes land by courses and distances, the line beginning at a certain point and running "to the road," and thence "in the line of the road," the measurement being exact, and extending only to the margin of the road, the title to no part of the road passes. If the grantor own the fee on one side only, and the whole road, either actual or contemplated, is upon the margin of his tract, the proprietor on the opposite side not having any interest in its ownership, a conveyance of the tract as bounded by the margin of the road will pass the fee in the whole road. Dec. 636, where it was held that where a deed described land as bounded by a street contemplated on a certain plan, but not actually made, the soil thereof, although owned by the grantor, did not pass to the grantee.

Whole street in grantor.— Where the grantor, prior to the location of a highway, owned the land for its entire width, and his deed of the land described it as bounding on the street, it was held that, on the vacation of the street, the grantee's tract included the entire highway, and not merely to the center. (Pa.) 9, 24 Atl. 1048, where the deed described the land conveyed as bounded by the "north-easterly side" of W street, "together with the free and common use, right, liberty and privilege of said Wright street," and the whole of such street was on grantor's land, it was held that the grantee took the fee only to the side line of the street, with a right of way over the whole street.

the line of the way as actually surveyed is held to determine the boundary of the land.[52]

(2) Dedication — (a) Necessity of Accepting. Where land is dedicated to the public for the purposes of a highway or street, a vendee of land abutting thereon does not take title in fee to the center of the street unless the dedication has been accepted by the public.[53]

(b) Conflict Between Dedication and Plat. Where a plat describes the boundaries of lots and streets, and specifies their size, but the dedication prescribes that the lots are bounded by the middle of the streets on which they are situated, the lot owners own the soil to the middle of the streets and alleys subject to the public uses.[54]

(c) Vacation of. A deed describing land by reference to a plat which shows it bounded by a street carries the fee in the land to the middle of the street opposite it, although the dedication of the street has been vacated and the specific dimensions of the land do not include the street.[55]

(3) Change of Location. Where a change is made in the location of a highway or street, it will not affect boundaries fixed according to the original location;[56] but grants made subsequently to such change, referring to the highway or street as a boundary, will be construed to mean the way as located at that time, unless an intention to bound on the original way is manifested.[57]

(d) Effect of Non-Opening. The grantee of land described as bounded on a street will take to the middle of a street as contemplated, although it has not been extended or opened;[58] but if the street is never in fact opened and used, and is not a public highway or dedicated to public use, the grantee does not take title in fee to its center.[59]

(e) Effect of Way Being Bounded by Watercourse. The fact that a highway or street bounding land is itself bounded by a body of water, or that a watercourse bounding land is itself bounded by a highway or street, will have no effect upon the boundary of the land, which is to be determined as if the outer boundary did not exist;[60] but the mere reservation of a right of way along the bank in fact exists the deed is to be construed irrespective of the supposed way mentioned.[66]

(B) Railroad. Where land is bounded generally upon a railroad, the grantee will be presumed to take as far as his grantor owns.[67] Where, however, the grant is clearly limited to the right of way,[68] to the side of the road,[69] or to a "cut,"[70] the grantee is restricted to such bound.

(IV) When Bounded by Public Grounds. Lands bounded upon public grounds other than highways and streets are limited to the outer lines of such grounds.[71]

b. Effect of Particular Calls — (I) For Monument or Corner on Way. In the case of a call for a monument or point of beginning on the side of a highway or street, the intention is all controlling. Such a call does not necessarily exclude the extension of the grant to the center,[72] if the grantor owns so far;[73] but in many cases the description is so expressed as to show a manifest intention to limit the grantee to the side line.[74]

(II) For Side Line. Land expressly described as being bounded by the side line of a highway or street is so bounded, and not by the center line;[75] but the mere fact that land is described as lying on the side of a highway or street does not exclude the highway or street, since it merely indicates the location of the land with reference to the way without defining its exterior lines.[76]

(III) For Quantity. Where the quantity intended to be conveyed as set forth in the deed can only be obtained by measuring from the center of a highway or street the measurement must be made from that line;[77] and the same is true where the point of beginning is itself on the center line,[78] although the grantee in either case receives the stated quantity subject to the public easement as to a portion of it. But where the required quantity can be obtained by beginning at the side of the highway or street, and such is clearly the intent of the instrument, the grantee will take the quantity contracted for irrespective of the center line, although his title under the deed extends to such line.[79]

(IV) Reference to Map or Plat. Although the contrary has been held in some jurisdictions,[80] the weight of authority is to the effect that when land is conveyed by reference to a map or plat, by which it is shown to be bounded by a highway or street, the grant extends to the center of such highway or street, in the absence of a clear showing to the contrary, if the grantor owns so far.[81]

C. Relative Importance of Conflicting Elements — 1. In General. While no inflexible rule can be laid down with regard to the relative weight to be given to the conflicting elements in a description of boundaries, it may be stated generally that when all the calls of an entry, survey, deed, or grant cannot be complied with because some are vague or repugnant, such vague or repugnant calls may be rejected or controlled by other consistent and certain material calls.[82] land belonging to another, it was held that his conveyances of lots bounded on such street carried the fee in the entire street opposite the lots, as it was not to be presumed that he intended to retain an interest in any portion of the street fronting the lots so conveyed. Matter of Robbins, 34 Minn. 99, 24 N. W. 356, 57 Am. Rep. 40.

Plat made subsequently to conveyance.— The doctrine that the grantee of a lot in a recorded plat, except where the terms of his deed or the plat expressly exclude that construction, takes to the center of adjoining public ways, applies in favor of one who took a deed describing land only by such metes and bounds as afterward formed the boundary of a designated lot, exclusive of public ways, upon a plat subsequently made and recorded by his grantor. Pettibone v. Hamilton, 40 Wis. 402.

Unrecorded or defective plat.— When the owner of land laid out into blocks and lots bounded by what are represented on an unrecorded or defective plat as streets, conveys a lot, referring in the deed to the plat as containing the true description of the premises, his grantee takes, as against the grantor and his assigns, to the center of the street on which the lot abuts. Jarstadt v. Morgan, 48 Wis. 245, 4 N. W. 27.

Vacation of plat.— A deed conveying lots by their numbers upon a vacated plat, which plat shows the lots bounded upon a street, the dedication of which has been vacated at the time, carries the fee of the land to the middle of such street, although the dimensions given on the plat do not include it. In locating lands the following rules are resorted to, and generally in the order stated: (1) Natural boundaries; (2) artificial marks; (3) adjacent boundaries; (4) course and distance. Neither rule, however, occupies an inflexible position, for when it is plain that there was a mistake an inferior means of location may control a higher. Fulwood v. Graham, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 491. See also Avery v. Baum, Wright (Ohio) 576.

If any of the abuttals or calls of the deed are found they cannot be disregarded, although the others may not be found. A marked line of another tract which can be established by its memorials must be run to, disregarding distance, when called for in a conveyance; but where such line cannot be established the distance run must govern. Gause v. Perkins, 47 N. C. 222. See also Norcom v. Leary, 25 N. C. 49.

Experimentally located line.— A marked line, experimentally located by a surveyor in

b. Over Natural Objects. Lines actually surveyed and marked, when found, will control calls for natural or other fixed objects.[87]

c. Over Maps, Plats, or Field-Notes. In case of a discrepancy between lines actually marked or surveyed, and those called for in maps, plats, or field-notes, those marked or surveyed will control.[88]

d. Over Calls For Adjoiners. As a rule lines marked on the ground for the survey or adopted by the surveyor are to be regarded rather than calls for adjoiners; and when there is a discrepancy such lines govern.[89]

e. Over Courses and Distances. Lines actually marked or surveyed and capable of identification[90] will, according to well-settled principles of law, attempting to divide a tract of land, not mentioned in the deed, and disagreeing with its courses and distances, as well as with a plot therein referred to, will not control the description in the deed. Kuhns v. Fennell, (Pa. 1888) 15 Atl. 920.

Necessity of actual survey.— A line or corner of another survey called for in field-notes without an actual survey may be disregarded, when evidently called for by mistake, and to observe it would be inconsistent with all other calls, with the course and distance called for, and the manifest intention of the parties. Boon v. Hunter, 62 Tex. 582.

United States surveys.— In executing surveys under the laws of the United States the mere marking of a corner by the surveyor establishes no boundary; but such marked corner is controlled by the actual division line subsequently made, field-notes of which are subsequently returned to the proper offices and preserved according to law. Reed v. Marsh, 8 Ohio 147.

Where several tracts have been surveyed in block, and returned to the land-office, the lines and corners marked upon the ground in any part of it are to be considered as belonging to each and every tract of which it is composed. If sufficient lines and corners thus marked can be found they determine the location of the whole block and of every tract in it, without regard to the calls for adjoiners or for waters, if such calls conflict with the lines actually run upon the ground and returned. The rule will not be varied because a call is made to run to the line of an older survey, if that line was never reached in the survey actually made, but the surveyor stopped at another line, which was mistaken for it. Burnett v. Burriss, 39 Tex. 501.

Where two surveys call for each other, there can be no vacancy unless the lines marked on the ground contradict the call, and in such case the marked lines must govern. McGinnis v. Porter, 20 Pa. St. 80.

90. Where the lines called for are of doubtful identity, course and distance should be resorted to as furnishing the best evidence the case is susceptible of, since it is only when lines called for in a deed are actually marked and can be identified that they con-control calls for course and distance in the determination and location of a boundary.[91]

f. Over Quantity. In locating boundaries a call for quantity, inserted in the instrument by way of description, must yield to lines marked or surveyed.[92]

Extreme monuments control.— In a grant of land the grantee ought to be confined to natural points noted and established as extreme or terminating points in his plat and grant, although another natural boundary may be called for, if it appears that the surveyor has gone to it, and both cannot be established. Shoolbred v. Vanderhorst, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 315.

Monuments described in a deed control other monuments pointed out on actual location, if those in the deed cannot be reconciled with those pointed out. Clark v. Baird, 9 N. Y. 183, Seld. Notes (N. Y.) 187.

No difference in value of natural monuments.— In ascertaining the boundaries of a tract of land, one kind of natural objects called for is not, as a matter of law, entitled

b. Over Artificial Monuments, Marks, or Lines. In case of a conflict between calls those for natural or permanent objects will control those for artificial monuments, marks, or lines,[95] except where there is some doubt as to the natural boundaries which can certainly be removed by artificial marks, when the latter will have effect, although of inferior degree.[96]

c. Over Maps, Plats, and Field-Notes. A natural monument, fixed, certain, and enduring, will control a reference to maps, plats, or field-notes in the same instrument,[97] except when the intention of the parties was obviously otherwise,[98] where the reference to such monument was made by mistake,[99] or where a statute provides to the contrary.[1]

d. Over Courses and Distances. In the absence of marked and established boundaries,[2] natural objects called for as the boundary of a survey, being more certain and permanent, control calls for courses and distances;[3] but this rule will to more respect or of more importance than another. Patton v. Alexander, 52 N. C. 603.

"The reason of the rule is, that it is the intention of the grant to convey the land actually surveyed, and mistakes in courses or distances are more probable and more frequent than in marked trees, mountains, rivers or other natural objects capable of being clearly designated and accurately described." Grant per aversionem.— Where a Spanish grant described the property, which laid on the Mississippi, and extended back to the sea marsh, as "about two leagues" from one bayou, the name of which was given, to another bayou, the name of which was also given, it was held that the grant was per aversionem, and that the boundaries thus named controlled the superficial and lineal measurements. otherwise the apparent intention of the parties would be defeated, courses and distances may control monuments in the location of a boundary.[12]

e. Over Quantity. Where lands are described in an entry, patent, or conveyance both by artificial monuments or marks and by quantity, the call for quantity yields to the more definite call for monuments and marks, in case of conflict.[13]

6. Control of Maps, Plats, and Field-Notes — a. In General. Where maps, plats, or field-notes are referred to in descriptions of land,[14] they are to be regarded

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 18.

Monuments must be fixed and known.— The rule that monuments will control courses and distances prevails only when the boundaries are fixed and known, and unquestioned monuments exist, but where the boundary is not fixed and known and the location of monuments is in dispute, courses and distances will be considered in fixing the boundaries. Hanson v. Red Rock Tp., 4 S. D. 358, 57 N. W. 11. See also Chinoweth v. Haskell, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 92, 7 L. ed. 614. Streets which are well defined and designated by some natural and artificial monuments must govern course and distance in fixing the boundaries of land; but streets which, in the infancy of a city or town, are only undefined portions of land dedicated to public use, themselves requiring to be located, would furnish very uncertain guides in arriving at the boundaries of other lands. Doe v. Riley, 28 Ala. 164, 65 Am. Dec. 334. See also Church v. Steele, 42 Conn. 69.

Government surveys.— The rule that monuments control courses and distances applies to discrepancies in government surveys between the courses and distances and the witness trees called for in the field-notes. England v. Vandermark, 147 Ill. 76, 35 N. E. 465.

12. Effect of mistake.— Where it is apparent from the face of the grant that such monuments or objects were inserted by mistake or laid down by conjecture and without regard to rule courses and distances will control. Robinson v. Doss, 53 Tex. 496.

Where otherwise the apparent intent would be defeated, courses and distances may control monuments. Danziger v. Boyd, 53 N. Y. Super. Ct. 398, 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. 537, 12 N. Y. St. 64. See also Hamilton v. Foster, 45 Me. 32; Murdock v. Chapman, 9 Gray (Mass.) 156; Buffalo, etc., R. Co. v. Stigeler, 61 N. Y. 348.

In a case where no mistake could reasonably be supposed in the courses and distances the reason of the rule was held to fail and the rule itself was not applied. Thus a line of "one ft. and three in." in describing land in one of the main streets in Boston was held to control the boundary mentioned. Davis v. Rainsford, 17 Mass. 207. See also Higinbotham v. Stoddard, 72 N. Y. 94 [affirming 9 Hun (N. Y.) 1].

Unmentioned monuments.— Where in the original survey by cotenants for the purpose of partition, the lines between the lots were located by artificial monuments, which were hidden, but no reference thereto was made in the plat, the description of the lots therein being merely by courses and distances, it was held, as between one of the cotenants and a grantee of a lot, whose deed referred to the plat for a description, and who was unaware of the existence of the monuments, the courses and distances therein called for controlled the monuments. Whitehead v. Atchison, 136 Mo. 485, 37 S. W. 928. And see Kashman v. Parsons, 70 Conn. 295, 39 Atl. 179, where it was held that fences not referred to in a deed cannot control the distances therein stated.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 19.

Exact statement of quantity.—Monuments erected as bounds by mutual consent control all statements in the deed even such as "containing exactly one acre." Emery v. Fowler, 38 Me. 99.

Where land is conveyed according to the government description and the monuments established by the original surveys can be found, these are controlling, although the division may exceed or fall short of the requisite number of acres. McEvoy v. Loyd, 31 Wis. 142.

14. Where there is a variance between the plat and field-notes of the original survey of public lands, the former must control, since it represents the land and corners as fixed by the surveyor-general, and by which the land was sold. Beaty v. Robertson, 130 Ind. 589, 30 N. E. 706. But see Harrington v. Boehmer, 134 Cal. 196, 66 Pac. 214, 489.

as incorporated into the descriptions,[15] and in case of a conflict of calls, the usual rules of construction are to be applied and those calls which are most certain and definite or most in accord with the true intent of the parties are to be adopted.[16]

b. Over Calls For Adjoiners. In case of a conflict between a call for adjoiners and a map or plan referred to in the description of land, the map or plan will ordinarily govern.[17]

c. Over Metes and Bounds. Maps, plats, or field-notes may control a description by metes and bounds,[18] but that call will be adopted which has the greater certainty, and is more in accord with the supposed intent of the parties.[19]

d. Over Courses and Distances. Where in a description of land a reference is made in the instrument by which it is granted to a map, plat, or field-notes, together with calls for courses and distances, the latter will generally[20] yield to

A mistake in the calls of a patent may be corrected by reference to the plat and certificate of survey. The survey is a matter of record, and of equal dignity with the patent. Steele v. Taylor, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 225, 13 Am. Dec. 151.

United States patents.— Where, as in a patent from the United States, the land is only described in the conveyance by numbers and quarters, the court will look at the plat and field-notes of the public surveys in order to locate the land, and these are considered as part of the patent itself. A purchaser of government lands acquires, by his patent, title to all of the land embraced within the boundary lines of the tract purchased, even though the survey be inaccurate, for the boundaries, when found, must control the notes and plat of survey. Lewen v. Smith, 7 Port. (Ala.) 428; Sawyer v. Cox, 63 Ill. 130.

20. Control of intention.— Where the evidence shows that it was the intention of the parties to a deed that only the land comprised within the description by course and distance should be included, such description will control one by number of lot and block. Mullaly v. Noyes, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 145.

Incidental calls, noted in field-notes as such in passing, unless specifically designated in such manner as to show an intention to make them locative, will not ordinarily have precedence over calls for courses and distances. Hanson v. Red Rock Tp., 4 S. D. 358, 57 N. W. 11.

Where a fractional lot is conveyed the grantee is bound by the distances given even if reference is made to an official map. Hostetter v. Los Angeles Terminal R. Co., 108 Cal. 38, 41 Pac. 330.

Where an original plat was not the result of actual survey and there was palpable mistakes therein in the calls for natural or artificial monuments, courses and distances will be permitted to prevail over such monuments in the former in case there is a conflict or discrepancy between them and control the location of the boundary.[21]

e. Over Quantity. Calls for quantity yield to maps, plats, or field-notes referred to in the description of lands entered, patented, or conveyed.[22]

7. Control of Calls For Adjoiners — a. In General. In the absence of calls for natural or artificial monuments, calls for adjoiners will, as a rule, control other and conflicting calls.[23] Where, however, such calls are manifestly erroneous they will be disregarded.[24]

b. Over Courses and Distances. In locating boundaries, calls for adjoiners control calls for courses and distances,[25] except where the former are clearly locating the plat. Evans v. Weeks, 6 Rich. (S. C.) 83.

incorrect, or are so vague and uncertain as to be incapable of definite ascertainment.[26]

c. Over Quantity. In construing descriptions of land by boundaries calls for adjoiners control a call for quantity.[27]

8. Control of Metes and Bounds — a. In General. Where land is described by clear and distinct metes and bounds, from which the boundaries can be readily ascertained, such description will control any general words of description added thereto.[28]

b. Over Courses and Distances. In the location of boundary lines metes and bounds always control courses and distances.[29]

c. Over Quantity. A recital of quantity in a description of lands must yield to metes and bounds, unless an intention is clearly shown that the call for quantity is to control the boundaries given.[30]

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 32.

As a matter of interpretation and construction alone, without reference to any extrinsic facts in case of a conveyance by a boundary, by a specified course and distance, "more or less," from a given point to the lands of a third person, named, it is held that the line of such lands, and not the specified distance, will govern. Howell v. Merrill, 30 Mich. 282.

A call for the marked line of an older adjoining survey will prevail over a call for distance, the presumption being that the surveyor identified the line called for by the marks on the ground, and that the mistake occurred in the measurement or calculation of the distance. Duff v. Moore, 68 Tex. 270, 4 S. W. 530.

Call for open line.— A call in a survey for the line of another survey, which is an open line on the prairie at the point of intersection, will not yield to a conflicting call for distances, when the location of the open line is certainly determined by natural objects, marked lines, and fixed corners of abutting surveys. Fordtran v. Ellis, 58 Tex. 245. Where the line of another tract is called for in a deed, the line must be run regardless of distances, although it may have to be ascertained by course and distance. Cansler v. Fite, 50 N. C. 424.

Whether the line called for is marked or unmarked is immaterial. Corn v. McCrary, 48 N. C. 496. Thus where a patent calls for unmarked lines of surrounding surveys, the position of which can be accurately ascertained, and there is no evidence as to how the survey was actually made, such unmarked lines will prevail over courses and distances, in case of a conflict. A sale of a certain number of acres between certain boundaries, but qualified by the expression "so as to include the said number of acres," does not convey to the grantee the land to the boundaries, but only the stipulated number of acres. Hoover v. Richards, 1 Rob. (La.) 34.

Construction of warranty.— In Lorick v. Hawkins, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 417, a warranty deed was to a certain definite number of acres, contained within certain metes and bounds, "having such form and marks as the plat annexed represents." The description as to metes and bounds and the number of acres was the same in the plat as in the deed. It was held that the description as to metes and bounds controlled the designation as to quantity, so that the warranty was only as to metes and bounds, and not as to quantity.

Description by government surveys.— Where the land conveyed is described by the government surveys, and as containing so many acres more or less, it is a sale by metes and bounds; and, in the absence of fraud, the actual quantity, whether more or less than the estimate at the purchase, will not avail either party. Dozier v. Duffee, 1 Ala. 320.

Where land is not sold by any definite quantity, a statement of the quantity will yield to boundary lines. Richwine v. Jones, Reversing course and distance.— In Ellinwood v. Stancliff, 42 Fed. 316, it was held that on a question as to the true location of a land patent boundaries fixed by revising the courses and distances must govern when found to coincide with the natural calls of the patent.

unless it is evident from the calls that the distance is the only and controlling object.[33]

b. Over Quantity. The statement of the quantity of land supposed to be conveyed and inserted in a deed or patent by way of description must yield to courses and distances,[34] unless there is a clearly expressed intention to the contrary.[35]

10. Control of Quantity. Quantity, although less reliable and last to be resorted to of all descriptions of boundaries, may, nevertheless, in doubtful cases, have weight as a circumstance in aid of other calls, and in the absence of other definite description it may have a controlling force.[36]

D. Relative Importance of Conflicting Grants. Where there is a clash of boundaries in two deeds from the same grantor, the title of the grantee in the deed first executed is, to the extent of the conflict, superior;[37] but when the elder grantee's deed and plat are obscure, the doctrine that the elder grant is to be more favorably located will not be strained in his favor.[38]

E. Relative Importance of Conflicting Surveys. Where survey lines conflict the lines of the elder survey will prevail over those of the junior,[39] and this is particularly so where the junior is bounded with express reference to the elder;[40] but a call for the well-established corner of an older survey is of equal dignity with a call for the established line of another survey, and in a case where plaintiff shows no ground for a recovery except a conflict in the two calls he is not entitled to recover;[41] and where two surveys are contemporaneous, neither can claim any advantage over the other from mere priority in the date of the final title.[42]

III. ESTABLISHMENT.

A. By Act of Parties — 1. By Agreement — a. In General. Adjoining landowners may agree upon the division line between them and each will own up to the agreed line as fully as if it were a natural boundary, or as if their respective deeds or grants called for it.[43] Such an agreement may be implied as well as whether, as originally surveyed, there is a conflict as between them.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 136.

A subsequent settler cannot object to the boundary of a prior adjoining settler, where he has assented thereto on making his entry. Syphers v. Neighen, 22 Pa. St. 125.

A younger grant on an older special entry will prevail over an older grant on a younger general entry. Hitchcock v. Southern Iron, etc., Co., (Tenn. Ch. 1896) 38 S. W. 588.

Controversies between state and citizens.— The rule that where boundaries, under titles of different dates, lap, the junior claimant has no color of title to the lappage without actual possession thereof, applies to controversies between the state and citizens who claim under mesne conveyances which extend the boundaries of the original grant. Hedrick v. Gobble, 61 N. C. 348.

Priority of specific over floating grant.—A grant of land identified by specific boundaries, or having such descriptive features as to render its identification a matter of absolute certainty, gives a better right to the premises in determining controversy in regard thereto, caused by the overlapping of two patents, than would a floating grant, although the latter be first surveyed and patented. Statute construed.— The Texas act of Feb. 1, 1845, requiring owners of land by titles from the Mexican government, the lines of which were not correctly marked, to have the same resurveyed and plats returned to the land-office, which plats would be delineated on the county maps, after which they were to be recorded as the only true boundaries of said land, not being compulsory, where the owner of such a grant fails to avail himself of it, and the land is patented to another, the elder grant, if capable of identification, must prevail. Construction of agreement.— Where landowners agree to select men to run a division line and that, having run the line from one of its terminal points to the other, the men should run and retrace it to the beginning point, the retracing forms a substantial part of the agreement and cannot be dispensed with except by the consent of the owners. Wheeler v. State, 109 Ala. 56, 19 So. 993.

A mere license by the owner of one tract of land permitting the owner of an adjacent tract, the boundary line between which and the former tract is disputed, to fence and occupy over the true line will not amount to an agreement accepting the line claimed by the licensee as the boundary, although his possession extends up to the line so claimed. A verbal agreement for a division of public land when either party should enter it, but indefinite as to time, where no trust is created between the parties and there are no peculiar circumstances that would make it unconscionable for either party to resist a specific performance, is not entitled to favorable consideration because clearly against public policy. Beneficiaries under devise of land to be sold. — Where a testator devised his real estate to his executor to be sold and the proceeds divided among his children, the latter have such an interest in the land as to entitle them to settle a question of boundary with an adjoining owner, if such settlement do not affect the rights of creditors. that there must be an actual dispute or controversy between the parties.[50] It is not necessary, however, that an actual interference of boundary lines be shown by the title papers.[51]

d. Proof of Agreement. An agreement fixing a boundary line need not be shown by direct evidence, but may be inferred from conduct, and especially from long acquiescence.[52]

e. Effect of Agreement — (i) In General. Where the proprietors of adjoining lands agree upon a division line between them, the presumption is that it is the true line according to the original location,[53] and the calls in their respective deeds will attach to all the land up to the line so established;[54] but an agreement to establish boundaries is of no effect until executed,[55] and when executed cannot affect the rights of an adjoiner of either party, not himself a party to the agreement.[56]

(ii) Persons Bound. A valid agreement between adjoining owners establishing their division line is binding upon themselves and those claiming under them;[57] but an agreement by one of several coöwners is not binding on the

(III) Conclusiveness — (A) In General. An agreement between adjoining owners establishing an uncertain or disputed boundary line is, in general, conclusive upon them and all persons claiming under them;[60] but where the intention was to establish the line according to the true boundary, and by mistake the parties agreed on a line which does not conform to such boundary, the line so agreed upon is not conclusive,[61] unless perhaps by prescription[62] or by reason of the intervention of rights of third persons.[63] Similarly, if either party is deceived

lishment of the true line,[71] or a location made by one owner without a previous agreement with his adjoiner is not binding.[72]

f. Cancellation or Modification of Agreement. A parol agreement for the establishment of the dividing line between adjoining owners may be afterward rescinded or modified by agreement,[73] or may be revoked by either party at any time before it is fully executed.[74] So too a party is entitled to have his agreement canceled where it has been entered into through ignorance or mistake.[75]

2. By Estoppel[76] — a. In General. In controversies concerning boundaries estoppels may arise either by matter of record or by deed,[77] or by acts or declarations of a party,[78] by reason of which another has been led to change his position for the worse, or has been in any manner injured to the benefit of the party against whom the estoppel is claimed;[79] but no estoppel arises in favor of

New York.— Sherman v. Kane, 86 N. Y. 57; Williams v. Montgomery, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 50. But see Sweet v. Warner, 14 N. Y. St. 312, where it was held that acquiescence in the line as located must have continued for twenty years in order to render such location conclusive.

Pennsylvania.— See Fisher v. Pennsylvania Co., (Pa. 1886) 2 Atl. 878, where the facts were held not to show practical location.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 223.

Agreement and location by minors.— A boundary line agreed on by heirs while under age, to be ratified by conveyance on their becoming of age, marked with a division fence built by both parties, and soon after repudiated by the heirs on the ground that they had since found out that defendant had no title to the land embraced therein, is not conclusive on a grantee of the heirs. Abandonment.— In an action of ejectment an order was entered stating that it was agreed by the parties that the M line was the true line, and that the surveyor should go on the land and establish the line. The order was never carried into effect, and the case was dismissed without any line being established, the parties remaining in possession as they were before, and some of the defendants never being brought before the court. It was held that the agreement was abandoned and that the order was not conclusive as to the rights of the parties. Four Mile Land, etc., Coal Co. v. Gibson, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1670, 49 S. W. 954.

strangers to the transaction,[80] and declarations and statements made to uninterested persons will not conclude the party making them.[81]

b. Where Erroneous Representations Are Made — (i) In General. A person who, by his conduct or by erroneous statements and representations as to the boundaries of land, induces another to purchase in reliance on such conduct or statements will be concluded thereby.[82] Conversely, where a person purchased according to boundaries specifically pointed out, marked on the ground, he is estopped subsequently to claim other boundaries to the injury of others.[83]

(ii) Through Mistake. A landowner who, in good faith, points out to the owner of adjoining land an incorrect division line, both parties being ignorant of the true line, is not estopped to deny that such line is the true boundary.[84]

Claim under deed to given line of survey.— A party's concession that he claims under his deed to a given line of a survey does not admit that such line is elsewhere than where defined by his title, and does not preclude him from showing that the line asserted by an adverse claimant is not the true line. Jones v. Andrews, 62 Tex. 652.

Disclaimer of title.—A landowner and those claiming under him are estopped by his parol disclaimer of title beyond certain boundaries, where third persons act and expend their money on the faith of such disclaimer. Boles v. Smith, Thomps. Cas. (Tenn.) 214.

Silent acquiescence.— The principle applies as well to silent acquiescence as to open assent. Acton v. Dooley, 6 Mo. App. 323. But silence without knowledge creates no estoppel. c. Where Improvements by Adjoiner Are Permitted. One who knows the true boundary between himself and an adjoiner, but allows the latter, without protest, to make improvements up to what he supposes to be the true line will be estopped to dispute such line.[85] Where, however, there is a bona fide mistake as to the location of the true line no estoppel arises.[86]

3. By Practical Location — a. What Constitutes — (I) In General. A practical location[87] is but an actual designation by the parties upon the ground of the monuments and bounds called for by their deeds.[88] It is, in fact, merely the result of an agreement[89] between the parties shown by the location of monuments and marks upon the ground.[90]

(II) Erecting Monuments or Fences or Making Improvements. If adjoining proprietors deliberately erect monuments or fences, or make improvements on a line between their lands upon the understanding that it is the true line, it will amount to a practical location;[91] but the mere fact that an owner sets his fence within his boundary line does not give his adjoiner a right to the land fenced out.[92]

Wend. (N. Y.) 104 [citing Rockwell v. Adams, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 467]; Knapp v. Marlboro, 29 Vt. 282. See also Clough v. Bowman, 15 N. H. 504. But see Baldwin v. Brown, 16 N. Y. 359, 363, where it was said: "The rule seems to have been adopted as a rule of repose, with a view to the quieting of titles; and rests upon the same reason as our statute prohibiting the disturbance of an adverse possession which has continued for twenty years."

Origin of doctrine.—"In searching for its origin, and introduction into the cases reported, we find it originally derived from a long acquiescence by the parties, in a line known and understood between them, for such a period of time, as to be identical with 'time immemorial,' or 'time out of memory'; and like the rule in easements, of title by prescription, rather than disturb such an ancient line, it was the policy of the law, that it was better to presume a grant than to incur litigation dependent upon the infirmity of memory or loss of muniments of title, at a period so far removed from the date of its settlement. One of the earliest cases upon which practical location is claimed to be traced, was a possession of thirty-six years, (Jackson v. Bowen, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 358, 2 Am. Dec. 193) where Thompson, J., said the parties had used them during that period adversely to any other claim, and recognized them by acts of use, and declarations, during all that time; that this was sufficient to protect the possession against the action." Hubbell v. McCulloch, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 287, 295. See also Baldwin v. Brown, 16 N. Y. 359.

A mere intention to locate in a particular place is not sufficient, where in fact the parties locate the line somewhere else. Stevens v. New York, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 274.

In New York in order to establish a boundary line by practical location it must be held and marked by a fence or other inclosure or the land occupied adversely up to it as a recognized one for a sufficient period to bar an entry. Laying tracks by street railroad company. — Where a grant of a right of way on a street to a street railroad company by abutting owners does not prescribe the location, the laying of the tracks is a practical location of the grant and it cannot afterward be changed without the consent of the grantors. McCruden v. Rochester R. Co., 5 Misc. (N. Y.) 59, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 114 [affirmed in 77 Hun (N. Y.) 609, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 1135, 59 N. Y. St. 892].

Reference to non-existing monuments.— If a conveyance of land refer for its boundaries to monuments not actually existing at the time, and the parties afterward deliberately erect monuments as and for those intended, they will be bound by them in the same manner as if erected before the conveyance. b. Effect — (i) In General. A practical location not induced by fraud or mistake[93] will conclude the parties and their privies,[94] although it may subsequently, after long acquiescence, be ascertained to vary from the course called for in the deeds or grants under which the parties claimed prior to agreeing upon the line;[95] but a line run through pure mistake and ignorance is not a practical location, even though silently acquiesced in by an adjoining owner.[96]

(ii) When Made by Mutual Grantor. A practical location made by the common grantor of the division line between the tracts granted is binding upon the grantees.[97]

4. By Recognition and Acquiescence — a. In General. Recognition of, and acquiescence in, a line as the true boundary line of one's land, not induced by mistake, and continued through a considerable period of time, affords strong, if not conclusive, evidence that the line so recognized is in fact the true line;[98] but a mere license or passive acquiescence on the part of a landowner in an encroachment by his adjoiner will not conclude him;[99] and where a line is recognized and acquiesced in through a mutual mistake the parties will not be estopped to assert the true division line.[1]

b. What Constitutes — (i) In General. Acquiescence in a division line may be proven by any evidence which would satisfy a person that in point of fact such line had been accepted by both of the adjoining landowners as a dividing line between them.[2]

(ii) Effect of Existence of Division Fence. The mere existence of a fence between adjoining landowners is not of itself sufficient to establish the line between them,[3] although long acquiescence will warrant a conclusion that it is upon the true line,[4] a presumption which becomes conclusive where possession has been had for the statutory period.[5]

(III) Effect of Lapse of Time. Although the presumption in favor of a boundary line acquiesced in by adjoining proprietors is strengthened by lapse of time, there is no period short of the statute of limitations which will render the presumption conclusive. Each case must furnish its own rule, according to its own circumstances, modifying the conclusiveness of the presumption.[6] Where, however, the recognition and acquiescence have continued beyond the period fixed by the statute of limitations the presumption becomes conclusive.[7]

Married women.—Where one of the owners of adjoining lands is a married woman, and the line is run fairly and honestly and is acquiesced in by her, it ought to be as binding on her as on others. George v. Thomas, 16 Tex. 74, 67 Am. Dec. 612.

5. By Submission to Arbitrators — a. In General. A question as to boundary may be submitted to arbitration or reference.[11]

b. Effect[12] — (i) In General. Where the location of a boundary has been submitted to arbitrators their award on that question is conclusive,[13] but the parties are not concluded by an award exceeding the authority of the arbitrators under the submission.[14]

(ii) Persons Bound. As between the parties and their privies an award is entitled to the same respect which is due to a judgment of a court of last resort. It is in fact a final adjudication by a court of the parties' own choice, and until impeached upon sufficient grounds in an appropriate proceeding an award which is regular upon its face is conclusive upon the merits of a controversy submitted.[15]

6. By Survey — a. In General. Boundaries may be established by private survey, but such an establishment is at most effective only amongst the parties thereto.[16]

b. Effect — (i) In General. A private survey is not as a rule conclusive upon the parties,[17] although if the rights of third persons, acquired in reliance thereon, would be injuriously affected by a repudiation an estoppel will arise.[18]

So, too, where adjoiners agree upon the line and employ a surveyor to run it, the line so run and established will be conclusive upon them.[19]

(II) When Acquiesced In. Mere acquiescence in a line erroneously run by a private surveyor will not conclude the parties;[20] but where long continued[21] or for a period beyond the statute of limitations[22] it becomes conclusive.

B. By Act of Public Authorities — 1. By Commissioners or Processioners — a. In General. The issuing of commissions to establish lost boundaries is a very ancient branch of equity jurisdiction,[23] but where no equitable consideration intervenes jurisdiction is conferred and defined by statutes which have been very generally enacted, and usually provide for the appointment by a designated tribunal of commissioners, processioners, or surveyors, who are to go upon the land, ascertain, run, and mark the lines, and make due report of their proceedings.[24]

b. Grounds For Appointment. The usual grounds for appointing commissioners or processioners are that the boundaries are either lost, doubtful, or disputed;[25] and where the facts are admitted and the only dispute is as to a rule of law, there is no ground for the appointment of a commission.[26]

c. Proceedings For — (I) In General. Proceedings under an act for processioning land must be construed with strictness.[27]

Lands situated in different counties.— The Illinois act of March 25, 1869, providing for the establishment of boundary lines by a commission of surveyors, embraces persons and lands in the county where the court is held, and consequently gives the court no jurisdiction for the appointment of the commission when the disputed line is between lands situated in different counties, and the owners reside in different counties. Tallon v. Schempf, 67 Ill. 472.

Constitutionality of statute.— In Britt v. Benton, 79 N. C. 177, it was held that the act for processioning land having been in operation since 1723, the long acquiescence of the courts raised a presumption of its constitutionality, which at all events could not be questioned by one who had voluntarily submitted his claim to the statutory tribunal.

The purpose of the act concerning the processioning of land is to establish the boundaries thereby, and a complete survey with plat, certificate, etc., is indispensable to the fulfilment of the statutory requirements. Porter v. Durham, 90 N. C. 55.

having any interest in the property are necessary parties;[28] and such a commission should not be issued where minors are interested.[29] The statutes contemplate that only the owner shall have the right to petition for the appointment of commissioners or processioners.[30]

(III) Notice of Application. Where notice of the filing of an application for the appointment of commissioners is required to be served on defendant it is in the nature of process and cannot be served by the applicant.[31]

(IV) Pleadings — (A) Petition. The petition for the appointment of commissioners to procession lands must definitely describe the disputed lines, and the ground of contest must clearly appear.[32]

(B) Answer. In a proceeding to permanently locate a disputed line or corner an answer may be interposed to the petition as in any other case.[33]

(C) Note of Claim. Where a bill is filed and issue directed to settle the boundaries of a tract of land, each party must, on the trial, give a note of the bounds he intends to claim.[34]

(VI) Objection to Commissioners. An objection to any of the commissioners appointed by the court is in the nature of a challenge and should be brought forward when the appointment is about to be made.[35]

d. Oath of Commissioners or Processioners. Unless called for by statute commissioners or processioners need not be sworn.[36]

e. Powers and Duties of Commissioners or Processioners — (I) In General. The powers of commissioners and processioners extend only to locating and establishing lost or doubtful boundaries, and they can in no event disturb title or rights of possession or establish new lines.[37] In doing this they must follow the mode prescribed by the order or decree of appointment,[38] and from a known and established corner or monument should run out the lines by course and distance according to their original location.[39] They are at liberty, however, to survey with the requisitions specified in the act, either by proof of their performance or by presumption arising from long acquiescence in the line run and re-marked.

Bowling v. Helm, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 88.

Of adjournment.— On a proceeding to procession land, if the ten days' written notice, required by Ga. Code, § 2385, of the time fixed for marking the line is given, such marking may, upon the day appointed, be postponed for cause, upon actual notice, verbal or written, given to the adverse party. sioners or processioners is regulated by the various statutes. As a rule, however, the court may adopt, reject, modify, or amend the report, or, in a proper case, order a new survey.[49]

f. Costs. In proceedings for establishing doubtful or disputed boundaries by commissioners or processioners the costs will be apportioned among the parties in interest in the absence of special circumstances.[50]

g. Effect — (I) In General. The effect of the determination of commissioners or processioners is dependent upon the provisions of the statutes under which they act. In some jurisdictions the determination is of prima facie weight only,[51] while in others it is conclusive.[52] Where the determination is confirmed judicially the parties are of course concluded.[53]

(II) Persons Bound. Only the parties to the proceeding to establish boundaries by processioning are bound by the determination of the commissioners.[54]

2. By Survey — a. In General. Both the national and state governments have enacted laws providing for the official survey of lands, and the proper preservation and recording of such surveys. Such laws, however, do not preclude the establishment of boundaries by unofficial surveys.[55]

b. What Constitutes. It is the acts done on the ground by the surveyor in pursuance of lawful authority which constitute the survey. The certificate or plat made by him thereafter may be corrected for fraud or mistake.[56]

c. Rights, Powers, and Duties of Surveyor — (i) In General. The public surveyor cannot procession and re-mark land without the owner's consent,[57] which may be impliedly withdrawn.[58] He has no authority outside of the limits of his jurisdiction,[59] and where he is appointed for a particular purpose his authority ceases upon its accomplishment.[60] In the discharge of his official duties he is not subject to equitable control,[61] and is presumed to have knowledge of the art of surveying.[62]

(ii) Method of Making Survey. In the case of government surveys specific rules as to the manner in which they shall be made have been enacted by congress[63] which should be followed in those states in which the lands were originally so laid off.[64] As a rule, however, the survey should be actually run and marked on the ground,[65] and where a new line is run by courses and distances the plat and field-notes should show the magnetic variation from the true meridian.[66] Allowance should be made for a variation in the base line in running the other lines.[67]

(iii) Fees. The fees of public surveyors are fixed by law,[68] and when improperly charged and received may be recovered by action.[69]

Adoption of earlier survey.— Where a surveyor had a short time previously made a survey of the tract which he was directed to survey, it was held that a resurvey was unnecessary, but that he might adopt the survey already made by him. Ayers v. Harris, 77 Tex. 108, 13 S. W. 768. Hence a chamber survey is not ipso facto a void act, but if it is made by the adoption of the line of older surveys, made under authority of law, to the same extent that is necessary to make a good survey on the ground, it is as valid as though done by running and marking the lines afresh. The ascertainment of any one corner is sufficient in making a resurvey, where the courses and distances are given; and in order to ascertain a corner the surveyor is not confined to the discovery of the landmarks called for in the field-notes, but may resort to other aids. Reinert v. Brunt, 42 Kan. 43, 21 Pac. 807; De Leon v. White, 9 Tex. 598.

Throwing off lines for quantity.— A surveyor may, by protraction in making out his plat and certificate, throw off lines to make the proper quantity. d. Effect — (I) In General. Unless so declared by statute[70] a survey is not to be deemed conclusive because made by an official surveyor;[71] but government surveys are conclusively presumed to be mathematically true as to the lines run and marked, the corners established, and the contents returned,[72] and in the case of other official surveys there is a prima facie presumption in favor of their correctness and regularity.[73]

(II) Where Acquiesced In. Long acquiescence in a line run by an official surveyor will conclude the parties,[74] but no agreement or acquiescence between the parties fixing a division line can have any effect upon the true boundary, where the line in dispute has been created by an original survey under governmental authority.[75]

e. Review. In Indiana an appeal lies to the circuit court within three years from the action of the county surveyor establishing boundaries.[76] Similarly, in Kansas an owner of land affected by a survey made by the county surveyor, on publication, may come in and apply to open the judgment and defend within three years after the judgment is entered.[77]

C. By Judicial Proceedings — 1. In General — a. Right of Action. The right of action to establish boundaries is in the owner of the land,[78] and the action lies, not only when two contiguous estates have never been separated, and the limits determined, but also when the bounds, although once properly fixed, have become confused or obliterated.[79] The action may also be maintained where the deed of one tract which was granted out of a larger tract does not ascertain the boundaries of the land conveyed, but merely gives a description by which they may be ascertained, and where the owner of the other tract will not permit the line to be run.[80] Where, however, a division line has been already run and marked by the parties or their privies, a suit cannot be maintained to have such line run;[81] and if, in the course of the trial, the parties litigant fail to establish title to contiguous tracts or bodies of land, the action will be dismissed.[82]

b. Defenses — (I) Adverse Possession. In an action to determine a boundary it is ordinarily a good defense that defendant has by adverse possession acquired title to the land in dispute,[83] but this defense cannot be made in a statutory proceeding to establish a lost government corner.[84]

(II) Judicial or Statutory Settlement. An action of boundary may be repelled by showing that the boundary between the two properties had been settled by judicial decree or by a survey made by a surveyor in conformity to statutory requirements.[85]

2. Jurisdiction — a. In General. Jurisdiction to determine questions of disputed boundary rests in the courts[86] of the jurisdiction where the land lies;[87] and

87. Land claimed under United States.— The state courts have jurisdiction, although both parties claim under the United States. Sprigg v. Hooper, 9 Rob. (La.) 248.

Land not within any county.— Jurisdiction for surveying purposes over land which is not within any county, but which was included in the land district of a county that has become disorganized is conferred by an act attaching the disorganized county to an adjoining county for "judicial and other purposes." Kimmarle v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 76 Tex. 686, 12 S. W. 698.

such a question does not involve the title to real estate,[88] although the court may examine the titles for the purpose of fixing the boundaries.[89] Where the amount involved becomes important as a test of jurisdiction, the value of the strip in dispute, and not the value of either or both of the adjacent estates, is the criterion.[90]

b. Of Courts of Law. Unless some special ground for equitable interference is shown[91] courts of law are the proper tribunals for the establishment of disputed boundaries;[92] but a court of law can render judgment establishing a boundary only when damages or possession are sought in the same action.[93]

c. Of Courts of Equity. The mere fact that a boundary line is in dispute is not of itself sufficient to confer jurisdiction on a court of equity, but there must be some additional ground of distinct equity jurisdiction;[94] and even where facts are averred which would authorize the interference of a court of equity to estab-

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 139.

Grounds of equity jurisdiction see EQUITY.

Confusion of boundaries.— Where a millrace was conveyed and afterward filled up and plowed over by one who had acquired an interest in the land, a court of equity took lish a disputed boundary that relief will not be granted when complainant is already in possession of the land.[95]

3. Conditions Precedent. Without proper service of process the court does not acquire jurisdiction over defendant in a proceeding to establish boundaries,[96] and where service is had by publication the record must show the facts rendering such service necessary.[97] It is not necessary for the court to first determine whether there is in fact a lost or uncertain boundary.[98]

4. Parties. The owners of the adjoining lands and all persons having a direct interest in the result of a proceeding to establish boundaries should be made parties,[99] but a defendant cannot, under an allegation that if the boundary claimed by plaintiff be established his own will be so altered as to include land held by third persons, have the latter made parties to the suit.[1]

5. Pleadings — a. Complaint, Declaration, Petition, or Bill. The complaint, declaration, petition, or bill in a proceeding to establish boundaries must state the facts in dispute sufficiently to enable the court to determine the nature of the controversy,[2] and to show the jurisdiction of the court.[3] Exceptions for insuffi-jurisdiction and granted relief, "under a well-settled head of equity jurisdiction — confusion of boundaries." Merriman v. Russell, 55 N. C. 470. But there is no "confusion of boundaries" such as to give jurisdiction in equity of a suit to settle boundary lines where the question presented is a mere naked question of title, and the fact that the bill charges fraud in attempting to establish a line other than the true line does not give jurisdiction. Pendry v. Wright, 20 Fla. 828.

Correction of mistake.— A mistake in the call for a boundary may be corrected in equity, where the instrument on its face, as well as the situation of the land, furnishes the correction. McMillin v. McMillin, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 560. But a trivial mistake in running the dividing line between two persons in making their original surveys, no fraud being alleged, is not a cause for altering that line after patents have issued on those surveys, and the party can have no relief in equity. Harrod v. Cowan, Hard. (Ky.) 542.

Equity will not enjoin a party from building over an alleged line, where the true location of the line is in dispute. McDonald v. Bromley, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 302, 24 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 157. But where a boundary has been uniformly established by various judgments rendered through a considerable time, a court of equity will enjoin its assailants from harassing, by a suit at law, those asserting it, even though such judgments did not relate to the same pieces of ground, provided they were between the same parties or their privies in estate. Parties plaintiff see supra, III, C, 1, a.

Change to petitory action.— When, by the act of defendant and the acquiescence of plaintiff, an action of boundary is changed into a petitory action, defendant in the original suit becomes plaintiff in the petitory action. Blanc v. Cousin, 8 La. Ann. 71.

2. Smith v. Scoles, 65 Iowa 733, 23 N. W. 146; Andrews v. Knox, 10 La. Ann. 604.

Color of title.— It is not necessary to allege that plaintiff has held under color of title, where facts are stated which sufficiently show that he has so held. Burr v. Smith, 152 Ind. 469, 53 N. E. 469.

Demand on defendant.—Where a complaint fails to allege that defendant was ever requested to establish boundary lines it is not good for that purpose. Morgan v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 130 Ind. 101, 28 N. E. 548.

Description of land.— In boundary cases plaintiff should set out the land in dispute by metes and bounds (Edwards v. Smith, 71 Tex. 156, 9 S. W. 77), but it is no objection to a prayer for an order of survey that the land to be surveyed is indefinite (Andrews v. Knox, 10 La. Ann. 604).

Injury sustained.— In an action of boundary it is not necessary to aver what injury plaintiff has sustained, or is likely to sustain, by reason of the alleged refusal of defendant to permit the line to be run. George v. Thomas, 16 Tex. 74, 67 Am. Dec. 612, where it was held that this was a matter of which the court might judicially take notice.

Plaintiff's ownership.— A complaint to restrain an adjoining owner from encroaching on land must allege plaintiff's ownership of the land. Burr v. Smith, 152 Ind. 469, 53 N. E. 469.

3. Scott v. Means, 80 Ky. 460, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 298, where, in an action in equity for the purpose of ascertaining the boundary and quieting the title to certain lands which plaintiff alleged belonged to him, it was held ciency of the allegations as to the matters in controversy may be interposed as in any other case.[4]

b. Answer. In a proceeding to permanently locate a disputed line or corner an answer may be interposed as in any other case.[5]

6. Evidence — a. Burden of Proof and Presumptions — (I) Burden of Proof — (A) In General. As a rule the burden of proof in proceedings to ascertain and establish boundaries is on plaintiff or claimant,[6] but by the interposition of a substantive claim of right by defendant the burden may be shifted to him.[7]

(B) As to Agreement Settling Boundary. A party setting up an agreement settling the boundary line between adjacent tracts must prove affirmatively the agreement relied on.[8]

(C) As to Monuments. The burden of proof to establish particular objects as the monuments called for in a grant or other conveyance, or to show that an ascertained monument is incorrect rests upon the party asserting that fact.[9]

(D) As to Surveys. One claiming under a survey, or disputing the accuracy of a survey, has the burden of proving the truth of his contention.[10] that the petition did not state a cause of action within the equitable jurisdiction of the court, where it merely alleged that defendant had trespassed on plaintiff's land and slandered his title, and prayed an injunction against further trespass and that the lines be made definite and certain and plaintiff quieted in his title and possession.

Affidavit treated as answer.— In North Carolina, in a proceeding to establish a boundary under N. C. Laws (1893), c. 22, which requires the answer to contain only a denial of the line set out in the petition, an affidavit entitled in the cause, and making such denial will be treated as an answer, none other having been filed, although its original purpose was to procure time to answer, it being desired to make a survey and incorporate the results in the answer. Denial that street is public highway.— The burden of proof is on one asserting it to show that a street called for as a boundary is not in fact a legal highway. Matter of Brooklyn, 73 N. Y. 179.

Identity of plan referred to.— Where a grantee, by his deed, if no plan had been mentioned therein, would have been entitled to a certain tract, one who seeks to diminish the quantity by the exhibition of a plan has the burden of proving it to be the plan referred to in the deed. Black v. Grant, 50 Me. 364.

Where claim is founded upon possession alone.— Plaintiffs relying upon the presumption of law of a valid title arising from possession alone must prove the boundaries of their claim or that it has been invaded by the other party, or they are not entitled to recover. See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 150.

As to monument upon adjoining tract.— Where the call in a certificate of survey is to a tree as the beginning tree of another tract of land, the party need only prove it to be the tree called for, and is not obliged to prove that it is the beginning or other tree of the land of which it is described to be a boundary. Boreing v. Singery, 4 Harr. & M. (Md.) 398.

10. Michigan.— Smith v. Rich, 37 Mich. 549.

(II) Presumptions — (A) In General. All grants and conveyances are presumed to be made with reference to an actual view of the premises by the parties [11] and in proceedings to establish boundaries, it will be presumed that purchasers who have taken possession of and inclosed land according to bounds pointed out by the proprietor have done so according to the lines of the actual survey; [12] that the grantor of lands bounded by a highway owned to the center; [13] that boundaries once fixed continue, in the absence of intervening deeds fixing others; [14] that in partition an indivisible improvement lies wholly upon one side of the dividing line; [15] and that an unlocated section line is to be run according to statute.[16] On the other hand every presumption will be made against a party who has neglected to locate his patent for an unreasonable period of time,[17] and no presumption can arise from a mere claim without possession; [18] from the boundaries of adjacent tracts owned by the grantors, but unreferred to in a conveyance; [19] from a map not referred to; [20] from a mistake in one course that there is a mistake in another; [21] or as to the date of a mark upon a witness tree from the number of its subsequent concentric layers of wood; [22] and evidence that a certain improvement called for in an entry was known as the second improvement raises no presumption that it was generally known and reputed as such.[23]

(B) As to Monuments. Monuments called for [24] in an entry, patent, or conveyance will be presumed to have existed at the time of the execution of the instrument; [25] and where a monument actually existed at that time, such as a located highway,[26] that will be presumed to be the monument called for, although not located according to its survey.[27]

(C) As to Surveys. In the absence of proof to the contrary by marked lines, monuments, or other competent evidence, the lines of a survey will be presumed to have been run and the corners to have been established as returned; [28] and where the boundaries are indefinite and uncertain, if they are run out and marked by the owner, it will be presumed as against him that it was correctly done.[29] The presumption of correctness has no application, however, where both parties claim by lines and corners marked on the ground.[30]

b. Admissibility — (I) In General — (A) Rule Stated. Boundaries may be proved by every kind of evidence admissible to establish any other controverted fact.[31]

(B) Hearsay — (1) In General. Hearsay evidence as to boundaries is admissible when there has been so great a lapse of time as to render it difficult to prove the original boundary lines by the existence of the primitive landmarks.[32] to prove a private boundary is limited to cases where it is shown that such boundary is coincident with a public or quasi-public one.[35] Such reputation or tradition must, however, be ascertained as to the subject-matter as direct evidence would be,[36] and is not admissible to contradict evidence of record;[37] and in all cases proof of ancient boundaries by common reputation must have reference to a time ante litem motam.[38]

(II) Deeds and Grants — (A) In General. It may be stated as a general rule that any deed or grant having a tendency to identify and fix a disputed boundary is admissible in evidence.[39] Thus the title deeds of the parties,[40] earlier deeds forming links in their chains of title,[41] or ancient deeds, under which neither party to the action claims,[42] are admissible; but a prior deed is inadmissible to locate a boundary of land conveyed by an older deed,[43] and to render a deed admissible in evidence upon the question of the boundary of a tract or grant other than the one described therein, it must contain a call for a corner or boundary line common to the two tracts, or must itself be called for as an adjoiner, and in the absence of such call it cannot be rendered admissible by parol evidence that the two tracts had in fact a common corner or boundary.[44] It is not necessary that the party offering an earlier deed to the same land shall connect himself therewith;[45] and deeds not admissible to show title,[46] patently erroneous in the description of land,[47] or unrecorded[48] may yet be introduced to prove boundaries.

(B) Contract of Sale. A written contract of sale under which a party has gone into possession is admissible in evidence to prove boundaries in a controversy thereto.[49]

(C) Entry. An entry may be given in evidence to fix the boundaries of lands granted by patent,[50] but the entry cannot be admitted to counteract the plain calls of the patent.[51]

(III) Former Establishment of Boundary—(A) By Act of Parties—(1) Agreement and Practical Location—(a) In General. In order to establish a boundary it is always permissible to show an agreement between the parties and its practical location by them.[52]

A patent made posterior to the running of the lines on the plots filed in the action, and reciting a copy of the certificate of survey, is evidence of the running of the lines located on the plots. King v. Tarlton, 2 Harr. & M. (Md.) 473.

Deeds used as basis of survey.—Where the controversy is whether a mutual mistake was made in the conveyance of land in including therein part of a public highway bounding the tract, a deed giving a description of the premises, and used as the basis of a survey is admissible to enable the jury to understand and apply the oral evidence. A report of processioners duly made and returned, although not recorded as required by law, is admissible in evidence as proof of boundary. McLawrin v. Salmons, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 96, 52 Am. Dec. 563.

Failure of commissioners to agree.— Where dence of such officers is receivable in support of an incomplete report.[57] The acts of fence-viewers or highway commissioners, however, are inadmissible to locate private boundaries.[58]

(c) By Judicial Proceedings — (1) In General. In a controversy as to boundaries former adjudications as to such boundaries between the parties or their privies are admissible in evidence;[59] and even strangers to a judgment may rely on it by way of estoppel for their protection as against parties to it, when they have acted on the faith of its recitals to their injury.[60]

(2) Sheriff's Return of Extent. Where an actual entry and seizin are proved, a sheriff's return of an extent on real estate to satisfy an execution may be evidence of the boundaries of the land possessed by the occupant, where he relies on a title by disseizin.[61]

(d) Certificate of Commissioner of Land-Office. In a suit to establish a boundary a certificate of the commissioner of the land-office is admissible in evidence.[62]

(iv) Location of Monuments and Marks — (a) In General. Where monuments or marks called for in a deed or grant are lost or otherwise uncertain, their location may be proved either by direct parol evidence,[63] by evidence of sur-commissioners certify in their return that they had taken the deposition of witnesses, caused a survey to be made of the land, settled and adjusted the location thereof, and marked and bounded the same, but that after duly considering the evidence, etc., they could not agree and therefore made no establishment or further return, it was held that the commission and the return were no evidence to prove the location of the tract. Line between two towns.— In Lawrence v. Haynes, 5 N. H. 33, 20 Am. Dec. 554, it was held that an adjudication of the court of sessions establishing the line between two towns is not evidence of the true line in a suit between individuals who owned land on the opposite sides of the dividing line of the towns, neither one of them being in any way a party to those proceedings.

rounding circumstances,[64] and the location of junior surveys which call for the same monuments or marks;[65] but the mere conclusions of a witness as to the location of boundaries are not admissible.[66]

(B) Adjoining Tracts. On an issue as to the identity and location of a survey testimony as to the relative location and calls of an adjoining survey is competent.[67]

(C) County or Town Lines. For the purpose of determining the location of a municipal line, as affecting private parties who claim such line as a boundary for their lands, not only the language of the law fixing the line must be considered but the public practice is to be looked to in connection with the levying of taxes, selecting jurors, serving process, official surveys, and similar matters.[68]

(D) Fences. The maintenance of fences between adjoining proprietors is competent evidence to go to the jury in a dispute as to their true boundary line,[69] but evidence of division fences upon adjoining tracts is inadmissible.[70]

(E) Lines Run and Marked. Lines actually run and marked on the ground are the best evidence of the true location of a survey,[71] and these may be proved by any evidence, direct or circumstantial, competent to prove any other disputed

Government corner.— When a corner-stone of a recent government survey has been recently removed, its original location may be identified by oral evidence, if possible, and in such case the plat or field-notes ought not to be admitted in evidence to show the location of the corner-stone, and thus dispute its actual location as proved. fact.[72] Conversely it is competent to prove that a line claimed to have been run was never in fact marked on the ground.[73]

(F) Streets and Ways. Where the location of a street or way becomes important in determining a disputed boundary, such location is admissible in evidence, and may be proved by the proceedings to open such street or way or by evidence as to its boundaries as actually opened and used.[74]

(V) Long-Continued Possession. In cases of disputed boundaries evidence of long-continued occupancy and acquiescence is admissible, in the absence of any certain monuments or data, to determine courses and distances.[75]

(VI) Maps and Plats—(A) In General. As a rule, in order that a map or plat may be admitted in evidence on a question of boundary, it must either be official,[76] have been recognized as correct by the former owner of the land,[77] or have been referred to, either expressly or by clear implication, in the deed or grant;[78] but in some states an ancient map or plat, when duly authenticated, is Discrepancy between calls and marks.— In ejectment against an adjoining lot-owner to recover a disputed strip a discrepancy between calls of a plat and marks on the ground may be explained by evidence that the tract is larger than the plat called for, and that the lots as then occupied were of a certain length corresponding to the original tract. Kron v. Daugherty, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 163.

Line established by processioning.— While the proper evidence of proceedings to establish a line by processioning land is a registered plat and certificate, or a copy thereof, of the survey made by the county surveyor and registered as required by Tenn. Code, § 2020, yet parol evidence is admissible to show the locality of the line or of the boundaries already established. Hughlett v. Conner, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 83.

Lines not connected with disputed boundary.— Lines which are established and undisputed, although not connected with the land in controversy, are competent evidence whenever they tend to elucidate the subject in dispute. Private way.— Where land was conveyed by a deed as bounded on a private way belonging to the grantor, but no way was then laid out, although a culvert was built by the grantor across a piece of the land retained by him and a fence was erected, it was held that the location of the way was a matter of fact, in determining which the conduct and declarations of the parties, the nature and position of the fence and culvert, and the purposes for which they were built were competent evidence. Crafts v. Judson, 119 Mass. 521.

Vacated proceedings.— Under a claim that a certain street marks a boundary line it is error to admit in evidence proceedings to open such street, the judgment of which has been vacated for the want of jurisdiction. St. Louis v. Meyer, 87 Mo. 276 [affirming 13 Mo. App. 367].

admissible to prove a disputed boundary,[79] and a map or plat referred to in the testimony is admissible as explanatory of it.[80] In all cases the map or plat should be verified,[81] and where one offered in evidence is unintelligible to the court and jury it should be rejected.[82]

(B) Of Cities, Towns, and Counties. Where a map of a city, town, or county is referred to in a deed or grant, it is admissible in evidence on the question of boundary.[83] So too where lands of individuals are bounded on public lands, ancient maps of the latter made by public authority are competent evidence in controversies between such individuals,[84] and a county map required to be kept in the surveyor's office is competent between the state and an individual.[85] Where such maps or plats are offered it must be shown when, how, by whom, and for what purpose they were made.[86]

(VII) Records and Certificates. When made in compliance with statutory requirements, records and certificates of surveyors, together with attached drafts and plats, are admissible in evidence on a question of boundary.[87]

Soulard v. Allen, 18 Mo. 590. Compare Jones v. Johnston, 18 How. (U. S.) 150, 15 L. ed. 320, where it was held that where reference is made in a deed to the recorded plan, a plan not recorded and varying from that which is of record is not admissible evidence of the true boundaries of the land.

Implied reference.— Where the description in a deed contains a call to and along a line, the true location of which is uncertain, maps in common use at the time are admissible to show the location and name of the line. Hanlon v. Union Pac. R. Co., 40 Nebr. 52, 58 N. W. 590.

A surveyor's report is evidence as to facts he can officially notice but is no evidence as to an extraneous matter (Bodley v. Hernden, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 21), of objects called for in the entry at the date of the report (Carland v. Rowland, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 125), or of the courses and distances and the present existence of the objects to and from which the lines are reported to run (Heffington v. White, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 115).

Where property is described as bounded on a public way, the return of the surveyors who laid out such way is competent evidence to establish such boundary without showing their appointment, or whether the highway was legally laid out. a government survey.[91] Resurveys, when made agreeably to the requirements of law, are also admissible to show boundaries.[92]

(B) Field-Notes. The field-notes of an authorized[93] survey, when duly authenticated, are properly admitted in evidence to show the true location of the disputed lines.[94]

(C) Of Adjoining Tracts. Surveys of adjoining tracts are often admissible in evidence on questions of disputed boundary, as where the two tracts are derived from the same grantor and have been surveyed by the same surveyor at about the same time,[95] where it is shown that a line run in a particular way will disturb and conflict with ancient and well-established boundaries of other tracts,[96] or where a junior survey made long before the inception of the controversy calls for an older survey whose marks were not then obliterated;[97] but a survey made

Calls in the field-notes of another survey, although made at the same time and by the same surveyor, cannot be resorted to in case no conflict arises from the survey in question, when applied to the objects called for as actually found on the ground. Thompson v. Langdon, 87 Tex. 254, 28 S. W. 931.

Canceled survey.—Where part of the boundaries of an old survey made by a deceased surveyor, who surveyed the tract in suit, are identical with some of the boundaries of that tract, although such old survey has been canceled, the surveyor's field-notes showing the boundaries thereof are admissible to show the boundaries as originally established by him. Stanus v. Smith, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 685, 30 S. W. 262.

Effect of erroneous call.— Field-notes of a survey should not be excluded from evidence because of error in a call, when such error can be readily corrected by comparing other calls in said notes with a colonial map or plat of survey in evidence. Pierce v. Schram, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 53 N. W. 716.

Extrinsic evidence to identify calls.— A boundary mark or name in a survey may be shown by extrinsic evidence to be that called for, although by a different name, in the field-notes returned to the land-office. Buford v. Bostrick, 50 Tex. 371.

Notes of deputy surveyor.— On an issue as to the boundary between front and rear concessions the field-notes of a deputy United States surveyor in surveying both concessions are admissible to show the location of the witness trees, and that the establishment of the land as claimed by the owner of the former concession would give the owner of the latter all the land his patent called for. Olin v. Henderson, 120 Mich. 149, 79 N. W. 178. Compare Doe v. Hildreth, 2 Ind. 274, where it was doubted whether the original notes of a deputy surveyor are admissible as evidence of boundaries.

of an adjoining tract at the instance of a stranger, and not acquiesced in by the adjoinee, is inadmissible.[98]

c. Weight and Sufficiency. To prove the location of a disputed boundary it is not necessary for plaintiff to prove the line contended for by him beyond a reasonable doubt. A mere preponderance of evidence is sufficient to establish it,[99] and the evidence need not be direct and positive. A boundary may be proved by circumstantial, as well as by direct, evidence.[1]

7. Competency of Witnesses — a. Landowner. A landowner is a competent witness as to the particulars of a survey, where he was present at the survey and testifies from his own knowledge of the facts,[2] but unless he is a surveyor he cannot testify in a controversy between other parties as to the significance of boundary lines on the plat put there by his directions when the plat was made, the surveyor having since died.[3]

b. Surveyors — (i) In General. A surveyor[4] may testify to facts within his personal knowledge relating to the lines, corners, or monuments of lands,[5] but not as to the location of a line which he has run from an ancient map, where he

But an indescriptive warrant calling for an adjoining tract as a boundary, and a survey thereunder, made ten years after a location and survey of such an adjoining tract, are not competent evidence to prove such boundary. Clement v. Wright, 40 Pa. St. 250.

Former owner.— It is competent to show by a witness who owned the premises in controversy for many years that during his ownership there was no controversy about the matter, and no claim to the contrary within his knowledge. Leach v. Bancroft, 61 N. H. 411. See also Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 230.

3. State v. Crocker, 49 S. C. 242, 27 S. E. 49, where it was held that such lines, under the circumstances, were merely the declarations of an interested party.

4. Assistant.— On an issue as to the location of the true boundary of a given survey, one who assisted in the survey is competent to testify as to how it was made so as to enable the court to trace the course of the surveyor; such evidence not contradicting the original field-notes. See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Boundaries," § 157.

As to ambiguity of deed.— A surveyor is competent to testify to the ambiguity of the terms of a deed in respect to location and that all the lines given in the deed are shorter than as found by actual survey. Ratcliffe v. Gray, 4 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 4, 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 510, 3 Transcr. App. (N. Y.) 117.

Oral evidence of the acts of a county surveyor who runs a new line departing from the old line is not admissible. Beeman v. Black, 49 Mich. 598, 14 S. W. 560.

Report of surveyor.—Under Tex. Rev. Stat. (1895), art. 5264, making it evidence, unless rejected for good cause, the report of a surveyor appointed by the court to run a boundary, and who has testified to the survey, is admissible in an action to establish such boundary. Wardlow v. Harmon, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 828.

Return of surveyor.—Where a deed bounds property on a public highway, the return of surveyors who laid out such highway is competent evidence on the question of bound-had no means of verifying his survey,[6] or as to his intention in running the survey;[7] nor can he give his opinion as a surveyor as to the true location of the land in controversy.[8] Surveyors may properly be questioned, as experts, upon subjects with which they are peculiarly acquainted, and which cannot be made known to the jury except by such testimony.[9] They can, however, testify only in regard to facts, never in regard to conclusions of fact[10] or in regard to conclusions

Where a section line or other starting-point actually exists is always a question of law, as such matters are for the determination of the jury or the court as the case may be.[11]

(II) As to Survey of Tract in Controversy. One who has himself surveyed land, or been an assistant at the survey, is a competent witness to prove its boundaries,[12] and may give parol evidence explanatory of his map.[13]

8. Trial — a. In General. The conduct of an action involving boundaries is ordinarily governed by the same rules as other civil actions,[14] but where a special proceeding is provided by law the provisions of the law must be complied with.[15]

b. Province of Court and Jury — (I) In General. What are boundaries is a matter of law for the court;[16] where they are, a matter of fact for the determination of the jury, under proper instructions from the court.[17] of calls having no application to the case at issue between the parties should not be given.[22]

d. Verdict, Findings, or Judgment. The verdict, findings, or judgment establishing a disputed boundary should be so definite that the line can be accurately run in accordance therewith,[23] and where the disputed boundary cannot be established otherwise a new survey should be ordered.[24] Where an action of trespass is turned by the pleadings into one for the determination of boundaries, judgment may be given for land as well as for a money compensation,[25] but under a statute providing that possession shall be sufficient to entitle a party to relief the judgment should omit all reference to the title to the lands in controversy.[26]

IV. APPORTIONMENT OF EXCESS OR DEFICIENCY.

A. In General. Where a tract of land is subdivided and is subsequently found to contain either more or less than the aggregate amount called for in the surveys of the tracts within it, the proper course is to apportion the excess or deficiency among the several tracts.[34] If, however, the original tract is subdivided by distinct and separate surveys the second survey is subservient to the first, and must bear any subsequently discovered deficiency.[35] So too where a tract is conveyed in parcels without reference to any plan or the avowal of a purpose to divide land according to any definite proportion, any excess or deficiency will go to, or be borne by, the last grantee;[36] and if a tract is divided into a certain number of lots of a uniform size, and an irregular surplus is also divided into two or more lots, any deficiency will fall upon the latter lots.[37]

B. Of Government Sections. In the case of government sections interior lines in the extreme northern or western tiers of quarter sections containing either more or less than the regular quantity are to be twenty chains wide, and the excess or deficiency of measurement is always to be thrown on the exterior lots; elsewhere the assumed subdivisional corner will always be a point equidistant from the established corners.[38] This rule, however, has no application when the original surveys are found to be erroneous, in which case the excess or deficiency is to be apportioned to each subdivision within the boundaries where the corners are lost.[39]

V. REMOVING LANDMARK.

A. Civil Liability. Where lines and trees are destroyed by one of the adjoining proprietors, trespass lies by the other, whether his interest be several or as tenant in common.[40]

B. Criminal Liability. At common law there was no criminal liability for removing a landmark,[41] but statutes have been very generally passed making it a criminal offense to remove or obliterate landmarks set up by public authority, or other boundaries that have acquired a known character and reputation as such.[42] An indictment[43] for removing or destroying a landmark must distinctly charge the elements of the offense prohibited by the statute and that the acts were done with the intent therein mentioned.[44]

Necessity of wrongful and unlawful purpose.— Mo. Rev. Stat. (1899), § 3597, provides that every person who shall wilfully or maliciously remove any monument of stone created for the purpose of designating the corner or boundary of any tract of land with intent to destroy the boundary shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Under this statute it has been held that evidence that defendant intentionally removed a corner-stone was not sufficient to support a conviction, since the act must have been shown wrongfully and committed for an unlawful purpose. Averment of intent.— An indictment under a statute making it a misdemeanor "to wilfully destroy, deface or alter any established line, corner," etc., of a survey, which omits the use of the word "wilfully," is fatally defective, and the defect is not supplied by the averment, in general terms, that the acts were "contrary to the form of the statute," etc. Woolsey v. State, 14 Tex. App. 57.

Conjunctive statement.—Although the statute makes the offense to consist in altering, defacing, or removing a landmark, an indictment thereunder may properly charge the offense in the conjunctive. State v. Bryant, 111 N. C. 693, 16 S. E. 326.

Failure to negative exception.— An indictment under N. C. Code, § 1063, which alleges that defendant "wilfully and unlawfully did alter, deface and remove a certain landmark, to-wit, a corner tree," is not defective for failing to negative the proviso contained in such section, which excepts from its operation creeks or other small streams which the interests of agriculture might require to be altered or turned from their channels, as it goes without saying that a corner tree is neither a creek nor a small stream. State v. Bryant, 111 N. C. 693, 16 S. E. 326.

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

"Bounty," in the widest acceptation of the term, may be defined as a gratuity,[1] or an unusual or additional benefit conferred upon, or compensation paid to, a class of persons.[2] But the term, according to its more common and received usage, signifies money paid or a premium offered to encourage or promote an object or procure a particular act or thing to be done.[3] Among bounties which have been offered and concerning which rights have been adjudicated are bounties for enlistment in army,[4] naval bounties,[5] bounties to stimulate manufactures,[6] fish bounties,[7] bounties for planting trees and hedges,[8] bounties for sinking artesian wells,[9] and bounties for the destruction of animals.[10]

II. BOUNTIES FOR ENLISTMENT IN ARMY.

A. Offer and Payment — 1. Offer — a. In General.

As municipal corpo-

1. Bounties are never pure donations, but are allowed either in consideration of services rendered or to be rendered, objects of public interest to be obtained, production or manufacture to be stimulated, or moral obligation to be recognized. Allen v. Smith, 173 U. S. 389, 19 S. Ct. 446, 43 L. ed. 741 [reversing 49 La. Ann. 1096, 22 So. 319]; Calder v. Henderson, 54 Fed. 802, 2 U. S. App. 627, 4 C. C. A. 584. Bounty has also been defined to be "a sum of money or other things given, generally by the government, to certain persons for some service they have done or are about to do to the public"; as bounty upon the culture of silk; the bounty given to an enlisted soldier; and the like. Ingram v. Colgan, 106 Cal. 113, 38 Pac. 315, 39 Pac. 437, 46 Am. St. Rep. 221, 28 L. R. A. 187; Abbe v. Allen, 39 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 481.

Distinction between "bounty" and "reward."— "The terms 'bounty' and 'reward' are nearly allied in meaning, the distinction being the former is said to be the appropriate term where the services or action of many persons are desired, and each who acts upon the offer may entitle himself to the promised gratuity without prejudice from or to the claims of others; while a reward applies to the case of a single service, which can be only once performed, and therefore will be earned only by the person or co-operating persons who succeed while others fail." Ingram v. Colgan, 106 Cal. 113, 124, 38 Pac. 315, 39 Pac. 437, 46 Am. St. Rep. 221, 28 L. R. A. 187. See also, generally, REWARDS.

3. Such is the meaning of the word when used in connection with the enlistment of soldiers. Fowler v. Danvers, 8 Allen (Mass.) 80. See also State v. Howard County Ct., 39 Mo. 375. In Eichelberger v. Sifford, 27 Md. 320, 330, the court said: "The word 'bounty' ex vi termini, implies a gratuity, not compensation, an inducement to enlist. It was not paid only to the man who volunteered and served, but to every drafted man who furnished a substitute." See also, generally, infra, II.

Not gratuity for past services.— In Kidder v. Stewartstown, 48 N. H. 290, 292, the court said: "The very term bounty used in the law would ordinarily imply that the money so raised was to be used as an inducement to enter the service, and not as a gratuity or acknowledgment for services already rendered, and such was the view entertained by the court in Fowler v. Danvers, 8 Allen (Mass.) 80."

Nature and origin.— The bounty system, while of ancient origin, was never until late years the object of very serious consideration by the courts of the United States, and the system as understood and exemplified by the present law of the several states of the Union may be said to have grown out of the exigencies of the late Civil War, and of the voluntary efforts of the people to relieve themselves of drafting for military service. rations can exercise no powers, except such as are granted to them, or such as are necessary to enable them to discharge their duties and carry into effect the objects and purposes of their creation,[11] they have no power, in the absence of authority so conferred, to appropriate money for gratuities to men drafted for military service,[12] or power to raise or appropriate money for the purpose of the payment of bounties.[13] Notwithstanding such conceded lack of authority, it has never been doubted that such right might be delegated to municipal corporations in aid of the general welfare and for the furtherance of a public purpose.[14] In recognition of such right, many enabling and confirmatory statutes were passed during the Civil War.[15] In some cases legislative acts were passed

History.— At an early period of the late war, when the several states were being called upon by the general government for soldiers, the inhabitants of the several towns were very desirous of procuring volunteers to enlist from their respective towns, under the belief that, whatever system or plan for raising the necessary troops should ultimately be adopted, such enlistments would inure to the benefit of their towns, by reducing the number that they in the future would be required to furnish. Some towns voted to raise money by taxation, and the officers of other towns borrowed money to be expended in procuring volunteers, before the legislature had taken action on the subject. But the idea generally prevailed that the towns, as such, by virtue of the general authority conferred upon them by the legislature, had no power to raise money by taxation to pay bounties to volunteers. To obviate this difficulty the legislatures passed what are generally called enabling acts, authorizing the several towns to "grant and vote, such sums of money as they might judge best." Butler v. Putney, 43 Vt. 481.

Policy of statutes.— Statutes authorizing the payment of bounties by municipal corporations are usually prospective and not retrospective. The policy of such statutes is to induce enlistment and to save the country from a draft, and such fact constitutes the before, or at the time, the power was exercised;[16] while in other cases the exercise of such power was confirmed by subsequent enactment.[17] In such cases counties, townships, and cities were considered public agencies in the system of the state government; and were employed by the legislatures as mere instrumentalities to raise a tax for a public object, and to effect an equitable distribution of the proceeds of such tax among those for whom it was consideration for which the bounty is paid. Briscoe v. Allison, 43 Ill. 291.

Cure of irregularities.— Not only were the acts of municipal corporations legalized by such statutes but irregularities and informalities were also cured (Stuart v. Warren, 37 Conn. 225; Baldwin v. North Branford, 32 Conn. 47; Sithin v. Shelby County, 66 Ind. 109; Nave v. King, 27 Ind. 356; Crittenden v. Robertson, 13 Mich. 58; Northrup v. Pittsfield, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Revival of contracts.— Where contracts of towns to pay bounties to soldiers furnished by them are subsequently ratified and made intended.[18] As a general rule there was nothing mandatory in these acts. They merely gave the power to levy taxes to pay bounties. They were merely enabling acts, and the authority conferred was to be exercised according to the discretion of the officers in whose hands such authority was vested.[19]

b. Correspondence of Vote With Notice of Town-Meeting. In most cases where bounties were offered by towns, a town-meeting was first called to ascertain the views of the voters. Such meetings were usually held upon notice, setting out the objects and purposes of the meeting and the time when action would be taken.[20] As the warrants or notices of the town-meeting constituted the groundwork or foundation upon which an offer of bounty could be made, the vote should correspond with, and be confined to, the objects and purposes stated in such warrants or notices.[21]

c. Construction of Vote. In giving construction to votes granting bounties, the same principle of interpretation has been applied as in the case of statutes.[22] valid by statute, such statute cannot be construed to revive contracts which have been put an end to, and have not since been renewed by the town. Grover v. Pembroke, 11 Allen (Mass.) 88.

Such duty did not arise out of any contract relation supposed to exist between the municipality and the volunteer, but was devolved upon it by the legislature in the exercise of the taxing power of the state and of the power of apportioning taxation. Acting upon the authority, the designated officers were at liberty to fix the amounts of money to be raised and paid, and to select not individual recipients, but the classes of beneficiaries, provided they did not transcend the limits of power which the acts conferred. Scarlet v. Robeson Tp. School Dist., 2 Woodw. (Pa.) 25. See also People v. Quartermaster-General, 14 Mich. 23, holding that where a bounty is offered under a statute providing that the governor may in his discretion cause to be paid from the war fund such uniform bounty as he should deem necessary to each person volunteering and mustered into the service of the United States, the bounty must be paid to all persons included within the terms of the offer; and the governor cannot discriminate and pay the bounties to some, and withhold it from others.

Where the act is imperative and directory, its terms must be strictly followed, and where the officers in whose hands its execution is intrusted have failed or neglected to perform their duty they may be compelled to do so. State v. Harris, 17 Ohio St. 608.

20. The object of specific articles in a warrant calling a town-meeting is to give information to the voters of the subject-matters to be acted upon in the meeting, so that the voters may be enabled to act deliberately and intelligently. Pittsburg v. Danforth, 56 N. H. 272.

Sufficiency of warrant.— A warrant issued by town officers for a town-meeting is not to be construed with the same strictness as a power of attorney or penal statute. If it gives intelligible notice of the subjects to be acted upon it is sufficient. Grover v. Pembroke, 11 Allen (Mass.) 88.

Suspension of general statutes.— Where a provisional statute required a shorter time for notice of the meeting of the town authorities, for the purpose of raising bounties, it was held that the general statutes theretofore regulating the length of such notice were pro tanto suspended. Miller v. Grandy, 13 Mich. 540.

21. Kittredge v. Walden, 40 Vt. 211; Blush v. Colchester, 39 Vt. 193. See also Mudgett v. Johnson, 42 Vt. 423.

Bounty for drafted men furnishing substitutes.— A warning "to see what action the town will take in regard to the expected draft soon to be made" and to "see whether the town will vote to pay bounties" is sufficient to authorize a town to vote a bounty to "each man liable to draft who shall furnish a substitute" or who has furnished a substitute. Hickok v. Shelburne, 41 Vt. 409.

Vote limited to amount stated in warning. — An article in a warrant for a town-meeting "to see if the town will vote to pay the same bounty to those who may enlist after" a specified time "as is now paid by the town to those who enlisted before that time" does not authorize a vote to pay a larger bounty, since the vote is limited to the amount stated in the warning, and cannot exceed that sum. Austin v. York, 57 Me. 304.

Warning to tax — Vote to borrow money. — A warning to see if a town will vote a tax for the payment of a bounty does not authorize a vote to borrow money for that purpose, and a vote at a subsequent meeting to pay an additional bounty will not confirm and legalize the former invalid vote. Atwood v. Lincoln, 44 Vt. 332.

22. Where the intention is plain, it is the

d. Authority of Municipal Officers and Agents. Officers and agents of a town are bound by the terms of the offer as voted upon by the town or ratified by statute.[23] One selectman, acting without the knowledge or consent of his brother officers, cannot bind the town by entering into a bounty contract.[24]

e. Power to Rescind Offer. Where a vote has been taken and a bounty offered under a legally called meeting, it is binding on the town when accepted, and such offer cannot be subsequently rescinded.[25] But where an offer has been reconsidered or postponed before any action has been taken by the claimant, there is no such binding offer as will entitle him to recover.[26] duty of the court so to construe the vote as to carry out these intentions; where the language used will fairly admit of such construction where the meaning of the words used is doubtful, or they are susceptible of a doubtful construction, that sense is to be adopted which best harmonizes with the context, and the apparent policy and object of the vote. Upton v. Stoddard, 47 N. H. 167.

Ambiguous vote.— A vote of a town "to instruct the selectmen to pay three hundred and twenty-five dollars for each volunteer to fill our quota," under a warning of a meeting "to see if the town will authorize their selectmen to pay a bounty to volunteers to fill the quota of [the town]," is ambiguous, and inapplicable to future calls on the town for volunteers. Scott v. Cabot; 44 Vt. 167.

Grammatical precision and verbal accuracy are not to be expected in the records of the proceedings of town-meetings, and the want of them vitiates nothing, provided the true intent can be truly ascertained, looking at the record in the light afforded by a knowledge of the purpose, occasion, and circumstances of the proceedings. Hart v. Holden, 55 Me. 572. See also Pottle v. Maidstone, 39 Vt. 70.

Subsequent enlistments.— Where the warning was "to consider the propriety of paying bounties to such persons as may enlist" to fill an existing quota, and the vote was "to pay to each volunteer to fill the required quota," etc., it was held that the vote had reference to those who should thereafter enlist. Sargent v. Ludlow, 42 Vt. 726.

23. It is competent for the town to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which bounties shall be paid, and the selectmen cannot waive a material condition in the offer, or make a different contract in relation thereto than the one authorized. Carley v. Highgate, 45 Vt. 273; Collins v. Burlington, 44 Vt. 16.

An unauthorized offer of bounty by the selectmen of a town, in their official capacity, to one who knows that the offer is unauthorized will not render them personally liable. Leet v. Shedd, 42 Vt. 277.

Oral promises made by officers unauthorized by any vote of the town cannot bind the town. Barker v. Chesterfield, 102 Mass. 127.

24. Hunkins v. Johnson, 45 Vt. 131.

Misunderstanding of contract.—Where two of a board of three selectmen went together to procure the enlistment of plaintiff, and one of the selectmen, by consent of the other, negotiated with plaintiff concerning the amount of bounty, the town, after availing itself of plaintiff's credit, cannot repudiate the contract entered into because the two selectmen, who did not actually participate in making the contract, did not correctly understand the contract with reference to the amount. Earle v. Wallingford, 44 Vt. 367.

Promise by recruiting officer.— A promise of bounty made by a recruiting agent being within the general line of his authority, and one of the selectmen having participated in perfecting the enlistment of plaintiff with full knowledge of the contract with him by the agent is sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover. Stiles v. Danville, 42 Vt. 282 [following Haven v. Ludlow, 41 Vt. 418]. But where a town is not bound to pay a bounty under its vote, it cannot be held bound by a subsequent promise, made by one of its officers, who is also a recruiting officer of the town. Livingston v. Albany, 40 Vt. 666. See also Hartwell v. Newark, 41 Vt. 337.

When authorized, the contract of one selectman is as legal and binding as when made by all. Guyette v. Bolton, 46 Vt. 228.

Offer for credit received.— A vote to pay a certain sum for a soldier's credit, which the town had already received, is such a completion of the contract as placed it out of the power of the town to rescind it by a subsequent vote without his consent. Haven v. Ludlow, 41 Vt. 418; Cox v. Mt. Tabor, 41 Vt. 28.

Subsequent vote.— One who reënlists to the credit of a town, under an assurance from its authorized recruiting agent that he will receive as much pay as the town paid others, probably five hundred dollars, is entitled to recover a bounty under a subsequent vote of the town to pay reënlisted veterans a bounty of five hundred dollars, and an attempt on the part of the town to rescind is inoperative. Haven v. Ludlow, 41 Vt. 418.

26. Foulke v. West Bethlehem Tp., 53 Pa. St. 221.

Where a town voted to pay a bounty to volunteers to the number of eighteen when mustered into the service of the United States, and at a subsequent meeting instructed its selectmen to pay no bounty to those who enlisted before the date of the previous vote, it was held that as there was no article in the warning under which the second meeting was held which authorized such action, the former vote was not rescinded thereby. Chase v. Middlesex, 43 Vt. 679.

2. Repayment of Money Advanced by Individuals. A municipal corporation has no inherent power to reimburse money voluntarily paid by individuals for recruiting purposes.[27] In many cases, however, municipal corporations were expressly authorized by statute to refund the money thus advanced and levy a tax in furtherance of that purpose.[28] Such statutes usually imposed no duty upon municipal corporations, but only conferred on them an authority, the exercise of which was left wholly discretionary.[29] In the consideration of such statutory authority the courts have made a distinction between money advanced for a public and a private purpose.[30] Where the advance partakes strictly of the former nature, its repayment has usually been upheld,[31] while advances of the latter character have been considered entirely voluntary and without consideration.[32] So, too, the distinction has been drawn between money actually advanced,[33] upon an express or implied promise of repayment,[34] and money paid over only

Where individuals act upon their own account in advancing money for bounty purposes, they must be considered as doing what they are willing to consider their own part toward the public welfare, and they cannot shift their voluntary burden upon others. 30. In Oliver v. Keightley, 24 Ind. 514, 518, the court said: "We can readily understand how the payment of a bounty to volunteers, thereby inducing men to enter promptly into the military service of the government, and thus increase the strength and power of her armies in the field, at an earlier date and at less expense than could be accomplished by a draft, would 'aid the government.' But no aid was afforded to the government in suppressing the rebellion by the re-payment to individuals of the money they had expended to relieve the men drafted, or the citizens or townships from the draft. The original expenditure of the money may have accomplished that result, but upon its re-payment, the existence of the rebellion did not perceptibly depend. The payment of $400 to men drafted under the former call for troops, when the men were already mustered into the army of the United States, and were then rendering most efficient aid to the government in suppressing the rebellion, clearly does not come within the intent or the letter of the statute."

32. In People v. Blackman, 14 Mich. 336 [following Miller v. Grandy, 13 Mich. 540], it was held that a statute legalizing the actions of certain townships in paying bounties, etc., did not extend to advances made by individuals on their own account and not on the credit of the townships, and any vote to refund such advances must be held unauthorized and void.

Voluntary payment by association.—An act directing the repayment of money voluntarily paid by an association in aid of its own members would not be legislation, but would be in the nature of judicial action, without notice to the parties to be affected by it, hearing, trial, and all that gives sanction to judicial proceedings. Such an act would be unconstitutional in declaring an obligation where none previously existed, and then decreeing payment by directing the money or property of the people to be sequestered to make the payment. Tyson v. Halifax Tp., 51 Pa. St. 9.

33. The word "advancement" should be understood in its commercial sense, implying that money or property was paid over upon a promise or expectation of reimbursement. Tyson v. Halifax Tp., 51 Pa. St. 9; Heiser v. Casselberry, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 194, 23 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 340.

What constitutes assurance of repayment. —A declaration at a meeting of a bounty association, by its president, that "all payments of money to be considered as loaned to the township, in the belief that the legislature for the purpose of saving a draft, or for the exemption of the parties so advancing the money.[35]

3. Recovery Back of Bounty. Bounty money paid under a fraudulent misrepresentation of fact may be recovered back in an action against the person perpetrating the fraud.[36]

B. Right to Bounty — 1. As Dependent Upon Nature of Offer — a. In General. In many of the offers of bounty made, the ultimate disposition of the bounty fund was either intrusted to the discretion of the municipal authorities,[37] or was to be disposed of only by contract made through themselves or their authorized agents.[38] In such cases the right of recovery is purely one of contract;[39] and in order to show himself entitled to the bounty the claimant must show some act amounting to a contract or agreement for the payment of the bounty claimed,[40] and even though his enlistment operated to the benefit of the town and saved it will so amend the law as to enable us to throw the expense on the township," is not an assurance of repayment as is contemplated by statute. Tyson v. Halifax Tp., 51 Pa. St. 9.

Agreement by public officers.— It was not the intent of the legislature to create a municipal liability or to validate loans or advances of money to procure volunteers upon any authority or understanding of private parties. The agreement or authority must proceed from the corporate or public officers. Hartman v. Mt. Joy School Dist., 68 Pa. St. 441.

Relief of district in its corporate capacity. — No tax can be levied under such statutes for the repayment of such advances unless in the discharge of an existing obligation and unless the claims of those to be reimbursed arose from advancements made for the relief of the district in its corporate capacity, and not for their own exemption. 39. Recovery founded on contract.— In Frey v. Fond du Lac, 24 Wis. 204, 206, the court said: "There seems to be no other ground upon which such an action can be sustained, except that of contract. In all those cases where actions have been brought for bounty offered before the party enlisted, the liability of the town or city has been maintained upon the express ground that, having offered the bounty, and the party having accepted it, and enlisted on the faith of it, there was a contract between them. No other ground upon which such a liability could be maintained, has been suggested." See also Scott v. Cabot, 44 Vt. 167.

Nature of contract.— Statutes authorizing towns to raise and appropriate money, either by assessment in the usual way or by credit pursuant to a vote, for the purpose of enabling them to furnish their assigned quota of men, are not only to enable towns to discharge a corporate duty under the law, but to relieve the inhabitants in respect to drafts and military service. Any contract, or agreement therefore, express or implied, entered into for this purpose and to this end is obligatory, and the town can stand upon no different footing than an ordinary individual with respect to an ordinary contract. Seymour v. Marlboro, 40 Vt. 171.

40. Sanders v. Bolton, 47 Vt. 276; Poquet v. North Hero, 44 Vt. 91; Chase v. Middlesex, 43 Vt. 679; Johnson v. Bolton, 43 Vt. 303; James v. Starksboro, 42 Vt. 602; Frey v. Fond du Lac, 24 Wis. 204. See also Mifflin School Dist. v. Learn, 53 Pa. St. 180.

The consideration for such bounty contracts lies in the acceptance of credit by the municipality. Carver v. Creque, 48 N. Y. 385 [affirming 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 507]. And a volunteer having enlisted to the credit of a town, and been applied to its quota, is a sufficient consideration to support a promise to pay a bounty subsequently made. Josselyn v. Ludlow, 44 Vt. 534; Swift v. Elmore, 44 Vt. 87; Collins v. Burlington, 44 Vt. 16; Laughton v. Putney, 43 Vt. 485; Cox v. Mt. Tabor, 41 Vt. 28; Seymour v. Marlboro, 40 Vt. 171.

Presumption arising from enlistment.— Where a statute confers authority to pay bounties, but imposes no duty, no presumption arises from the enlistment of a volunteer before an offer of bounty is made that he enlisted in consideration of his receiving a bounty. Debolt v. Dunkard School Dist., 53 Pa. St. 214.

Question for jury.— Liability of towns to pay bounty arises only upon proof of an express contract; therefore the evidence bearing upon the question as to whether there was such contract should be submitted to the jury. Poquet v. North Hero, 44 Vt. 91. See also infra, note 89.

the necessity of procuring another man, this gives no legal claim upon the town, unless it has agreed to pay.[41]

b. Unconditional Offer. But where the vote offering the bounty is general and unconditional in its terms, offering a bounty to whoever may enlist and apply himself under the quota of the town, such vote constitutes a general and direct offer to any one who performs its conditions,[42] and no contract is necessary to entitle the claimant to a recovery.[43] It has also been held that a volunteer is entitled to his bounty under an unconditional offer, even where he enlisted in ignorance that such offer had been made.[44]

c. Conditional or Restricted Offer — (i) In General. The claimant must show that he has accepted the offer under which he sues to recover by complying with the conditions and restrictions thereto attached and performing the services therein contemplated,[45] and that he is within the class of persons contemplated by the vote or the ratifying statute.[46] Thus he must show that he has given the Neglect to levy tax.—A contract formed by resolution of a county board offering a bounty to each soldier enlisting in the army, and the acceptance of such offer by a soldier by actually enlisting, is not affected by neglect of the county to levy a tax to pay an order issued for such bounty. Clark County v. Lawrence, 63 Ill. 32.

A volunteer is entitled to a bounty under a county resolution offering bounties to volunteers, on showing that he had knowledge of the offer made by the county and volunteered with reference thereto, and that he had fulfilled all the requirements of the resolution, and was actually credited to the county quota, although he did not give notice to the county of his acceptance of the terms of the resolution, and did not receive notice of the resolution from the county authorities. Omission of mustering officers.— Under a vote to pay a bounty to each volunteer to fill a certain quota, if a soldier is mustered in while the deficiency is outstanding against the town, his right was unaffected by the omission of the adjutant-general to reckon him on the town's deficiency, if it existed at the time of his muster-in; the object of the adjutant-general's books being to show the standing of the town with the government, not of the soldier with the town. Steinberg v. Eden, 41 Vt. 187.

Signature of enlistment contract.— Upon a vote to pay three hundred dollars to "the first six men who shall enlist into the service of the United States to save the draft," the first six to perfect their enlistments by a muster into the service, are the six entitled to the benefit of the offer even though others signed enlistment contracts before them. Recovery cannot be had against a draft association, formed for the purpose of relieving a district from a draft for military purposes, by one who enlisted without regard to the bounty offered by such association, and with the full knowledge that he would not receive it if he did so enlist, and who was induced to enlist by the hope of receiving the state and county bounties. Sparrow v. Grove, 31 Md. 214.

Where the claimant has made no effort to have himself applied until after the quota has been filled, the situation of the town will be considered, and his right to bounty denied. Davis v. Windsor, 46 Vt. 210; Witherell v. Fletcher, 42 Vt. 409. See also State v. Brown, 20 Wis. 287.

Right not affected by numbers.— Where a person is mustered in under a call and a bona fide offer of bounty, the mere fact that more than enough men to fill the quota were mustered in with him at the same time does not affect his right to recover. Kittredge v. Walden, 40 Vt. 211; Pottle v. Maidstone, 39 Vt. 70.

Commissioned officer.—One who entered the army as a commissioned officer of volunteers is not entitled to the bounty voted by a town under a statute which authorized towns to required notice,[47] and that he has enlisted within the time set in the offer.[48] So if the offer of a bounty is limited to the residents of a certain district or municipality, or requires a legal residence to entitle an applicant to share therein, such residence is a condition precedent to the right of recovery.[49]

(II) Enlistment Under Particular Call or Quota. As a general rule an offer of bounty was made to provide for the exigencies of a particular call for men, and in order to claim thereunder it must be shown that the enlistment was made under the particular call or quota designated.[50] An enlistment after the raise and appropriate money "to encourage enlistments in the army," the court holding that in such a case the term "enlisted man" could not be taken either in its technical or popular sense to include a commissioned officer. Hilliard v. Stewartstown, 48 N. H. 280.

Drafted non-combatants.— The vote of a town to pay a bounty to drafted "non-combatants" who were credited to the town's quota, though discharged under act of congress, Feb. 24, 1864, § 17, was not ratified by Me. Pub. Laws (1865), c. 298, § 1, ratifying acts in favor of volunteers, drafted men, or substitutes of drafted men. French v. Sangerville, 55 Me. 69.

47. Davis v. Windsor, 46 Vt. 210; Atwood v. Lincoln, 44 Vt. 332. See also Warren v. Daum, 73 Pa. St. 433.

Notice unaccompanied by evidence.—Where one enlisted in the service of the United States and had himself credited to a certain town, and notified the town officers of the fact, it was not necessary, in order to entitle him to a bounty offered by the town, that he should "accompany such notice with evidence sufficient to warrant the officers in paying him the bounty." It was sufficient that the proofs were furnished before the bounty was paid. Welch v. Sugar Creek, 28 Wis. 618.

Negligence in giving notice.— In Mudgett v. Johnson, 42 Vt. 423, it was held that where a person had been induced to reënlist upon the application of the selectmen of a town, such selectmen could not exclude him from the benefit of a bounty by subsequently and before receiving notice of his reënlistment filling the quota with other men, unless there had been culpable negligence on the part of said person in giving notice of his reënlistment.

Reasonable time.— Where no time is limited in the offer in which the claimant shall be mustered into service, the law will give him such time as would be deemed reasonable under the circumstances. Mann v. Fairlee, 44 Vt. 672. In Gale v. Jamaica, 39 Vt. 610, it was held that two weeks was a reasonable time for notification by a soldier in the field.

Inquiry on part of town.— The mere failure of plaintiff to inform the town of his enlistment will not deprive him of his bounty, where it does not appear but that the town might have learned of it on inquiry at the office of the adjutant-general, to whom, it is to be presumed, the enlistment was officially reported. Hill v. Eden, 41 Vt. 195. See also Gale v. Jamaica, 39 Vt. 610.

49. Upton v. Stoddard, 47 N. H. 167. But see Hoboken v. Bailey, 37 N. J. L. 519; Hawthorne v. Hoboken, 35 N. J. L. 247, which cases hold that this requirement will not be enforced where the terms of the offer do not distinctly require the condition, and where the claimant has been accepted by the corporate authorities and performed his part of the contract.

Transfer without consent.— One who enlisted at P. and was credited to that town, with the knowledge and consent of its authorities, is entitled to a bounty under an offer of bounty to those enlisted "from the town of Pittsfield," although not a resident of that place, and the fact that he was subsequently transferred to another town without his consent will not relieve the town that was primarily liable. Northrup v. Pittsfield, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 108.

50. Gardon v. Readfield, 58 Me. 293; Hatch v. Fairfield, 43 Vt. 321; Seymour v. Marlboro, 40 Vt. 171. See also Bucklin v. Sudbury, 43 Vt. 700.

Attempt to change credit.— The fact that a claimant, after having volunteered to fill a quota under the vote of a certain town, attempted to get his credit changed before he is actually mustered in does not prejudice his right of recovery against the town, where such attempt proved a failure owing to the neglect of his superior officer, and where he has served out his full term of enlistment credited to the town under which he first volunteered. Chandler v. Bristol, 45 Vt. 330.

Enlistment in particular regiment.—Where a county offered a bounty for enlistment in a particular regiment and the claimant enlisted in that regiment, but was afterward, without his consent, mustered into another, it was held that he was entitled to the bounty. Hackleman v. Henry County, 78 Ind. 162. But where a town voted a bounty to each man who should enlist into the old regiments to fill the town quota under a given call, it was held that one who enlisted into a new regiment, but was applied on the quota, could not recover the bounty, even though he intended to comply with the offer, and erroneously believed the selectmen could waive a material condition thereof. Carley v. Highgate, 45 Vt. 273.

Particular call not specified.— Under the resolution of a county to pay a bounty to volunteers enlisted to the credit of the quota of the county "under the (then) present call, particular quota named in the vote has been filled will not inure to the benefit of the subsequently applied volunteer.[51]

d. Enlistment Prior to Offer. As the right to a bounty is supposed to be founded upon a contract,[52] an enlistment prior to an offer is usually void of consideration and cannot be enforced.[53] Nor is a municipal corporation legally justified in extending to him the benefit of a bounty by any such subsequent action.[54]

2. Persons Entitled to Bounty — a. Drafted Men. In the absence of statute or express agreement a drafted man has no claim upon a bounty fund,[55] and especially is this so, where, after being drafted, he has paid commutation money in lieu of actual service.[56] In many instances, however, bounties were provided or to fill any call that might thereafter be made," the county is liable to persons who enlist in any other quota than that due from the county at the time of adoption and publication of the resolution, and the fact that one half of the bounty was to be paid at a fixed date would not affect the rule. Part of appropriation unused.— Where a county court under authority of statute appropriated a sum of money to be applied in payment of bounties, and made an order providing for the distribution of the money to volunteers credited to the county under the "late call," a soldier volunteering under a subsequent call is not entitled to a bounty under such order, though a part of the appropriation remains unused. Watson v. Buchanan County, 44 Mo. 422.

Proclamation as to full quota.— In Mayweather v. Scott County, 36 Iowa 143, it was held that a proclamation by the governor announcing that the quota was full, issued and published three days before plaintiff enlisted under an offer of bounty by the county, would not, in the absence of notice thereof to plaintiff, bar a recovery, and that the proclamation and its publication in a daily paper in the county would not as a matter of law constitute notice of its contents.

Want of authority and consideration.— A resolution of a board of supervisors, promising to pay a bounty to persons who had previously enlisted in the military service of the United States, without any assurance of a bounty before enlisting, will create no indebtedness, for want of a consideration to support the promise, and for the want of legal authority in the board to make the same. Greenwood v. De Kalb County, 90 Ill. 600.

A town which voted to pay a bounty to those who should enlist under an existing call for troops and be applied on its quota is bound to pay those who enlisted previous to the vote, but were mustered in subsequent thereto, to the credit of such town, where they had the right at the time of muster to be credited to any town they chose. for this class of persons who were actually mustered into service, and in such cases the ordinary rules applicable to the volunteer were enforced. Thus the drafted man must go to fill the quota under which the offer was made,[57] and be mustered into the service with all the formality usual in such cases.[58]

b. Substitutes. A substitute is not a volunteer within the meaning of statutes providing for bounties to such class of persons,[59] and in the absence of agreement all bounties are the property of his principal,[60] who may recover the same to his own use.[61]

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bounties," § 16.

A municipal corporation cannot constitutionally pay a bounty to a drafted man who has paid commutation in lieu of actual service, as it would in effect be payment of the commutation money by the municipality. Moulton v. Raymond, 60 Me. 121; Gould v. Raymond, 59 N. H. 260; Bowles v. Landaff, 59 N. H. 164; Kelly v. Marshall, 69 Pa. St. 319. See also State v. Jackson, 33 N. J. L. 450.

57. A recovery cannot be had on a town bond given to one who had furnished a substitute to apply on the town's quota, the bond being issued under a resolution to pay bounties to drafted men which was adopted after the quota of the town was filled. Susquehanna Depot v. Barry, 61 Pa. St. 317.

No actual military service.— A town, at a regular meeting, voted to pay a certain sum "for each man drafted to fill their quota." Plaintiff, a resident of the town, was drafted and accepted, but furloughed to continue his work in the navy-yard where he had been employed, and was never called upon for actual military service. It was held that plaintiff was not within the vote, and since he had not gone "to fill the quota" could not recover against the town. Bickford v. Brooksville, 55 Me. 89.

58. Acceptance by board of examiners.— Where a town authorized the selectmen to pay a certain sum to every citizen of the town drafted into the United States service "and accepted by the board of examiners, who shall enter said service or procure an accepted substitute," and plaintiff was drafted, but before the examination he procured a substitute who was accepted, it was held that plaintiff was not entitled to recover for the sum granted by the town to drafted men, because he was not "accepted by the board of examiners." Reed v. Sharon, 35 Conn. 191.

Furlough after acceptance.— In Mahoney v. Lincolnville, 56 Me. 450, plaintiff having been examined and accepted and allowed upon the quota, was permitted to go home upon condition that he return at a specified time. Upon his return he was informed of the surrender of the Confederate army and that he might return home and remain there until further notice. He received pay as a soldier and was finally discharged in the regular way. It was held that he had entered the service within the meaning of a vote for bounty, and that he was entitled to the same.

Substitutes furnished by draft associations. —Act of Congress, March 3, 1865, provided that where an association procured the enlistment of men to the credit of its district, such men might be counted as substitutes in the event that members of such association were afterward drafted. Under a resolution to pay bounties to volunteers, it was held that payment was properly made to recruits furnished by such an association; that such recruits were volunteers, and the mere fact that they were liable to serve as substitutes, upon the event of drafting of members of the association, did not bar their right to the bounty. Application to assigned quota.—N. Y. Laws (1865), c. 29, § 6, providing that a bounty "shall be paid to any person who has furnished or who shall furnish an acceptable substitute to apply on the quota under the call of December 19, 1864, . . . which substitute shall have been accepted by the authorities of the United States and credited to the town, city or county in which said person shall be enrolled and which substitute shall go to reduce the quota in such town or county," was held to apply only to such principals as furnished substitutes whose enlistments applied on the assigned quota of men and went to reduce such quotas, by so far actually filling them. Taber v. Erie County, 131 N. Y. 432, 30 N. E. 177, 43 N. Y. St. 177 [reversing 14 N. Y. Suppl. 211, 38 N. Y. St. 283].

Substitute for no particular person.— In pursuance of Wis. Laws (1865), c. 14, a town voted to pay two hundred dollars to each volunteer to be credited to its quota, etc. Plaintiffs, six in number, being residents of the town subject to military duty, entered into a contract with three persons, by which plaintiffs jointly agreed to pay to each of said other parties three hundred dollars, for which each of said other parties agreed to volunteer into the service of the United States to the credit of said town. Plaintiffs claimed as persons furnishing substitutes and as assignees of said volunteers. It was held that as no one of these three volunteers entered the service as the substitute of any particular person, and as they neither

c. Veteran Volunteers. As it was thought desirable to retain upon the several quotas the services of veterans who had previously enlisted, in many cases special inducements were held out by way of bounties to such persons who answered to that description;[62] and such veteran bounties were also offered by the United States payable at regular intervals of six months, until the expiration of three years of service.[63]

d. Effect of Desertion — (I) In General. Where a volunteer has enlisted in contemplation of an offered bounty his right to the same is perfected when he is mustered in.[64] Hence the fact of his subsequent desertion will not defeat such right,[65] unless there is some provision in the contract or statute under which he enlisted to that effect.[66]

(II) Bounty Payable in Instalments. Bounties which are made payable either in instalments or at times subsequent to the date when the soldier enlisted or joined his regiment are dependent upon faithful service actually rendered according to the terms of the enlistment,[67] and at no time and in no manner can a military deserter claim future instalments of bounty.[68]

Credit for services.— A vote "to pay the veteran soldiers three hundred dollars bounty, and seven dollars per month as long as they remain in the service," without specifying what veterans are meant, will be construed to apply only to the veterans whose services stood to the credit of the town that passed the vote and that amount to each. Cox v. Mt. Tabor, 41 Vt. 28.

Unexpired enlistment.—A town vote to pay "veterans re-enlisting in the field" was held to mean an offer to pay soldiers who reënlisted while they were yet held to service under a former unexpired enlistment, and not to pay soldiers who reënlisted after having been discharged from service. Sargent v. Ludlow, 42 Vt. 726.

Veterans in the field.— Under the Ohio act, April 16, 1867, as amended April 16, 1880, the class of volunteers designated as "re-enlisted veteran volunteers" does not embrace "veteran volunteers" who were not in the field at the time of their enlistment as veteran volunteers, and hence they are not entitled to the bounty provided by statute. 64. Hunkins v. Johnson, 45 Vt. 131; Steinberg v. Eden, 41 Vt. 187.

Where a person enlisted in one town, and on account of a larger offer he deserted and reënlisted in another, it was held that even though he was withdrawn from the latter town and compelled to serve out his term under the first enlistment, yet such first town was liable for the bounty, since it had received the benefit of the contract. Desertion by substitute.— The fact that a substitute deserted is no bar to an action by the person who furnished the substitute against the town on the quota of which he was credited for bounty. Rogers v. Shelburne, 42 Vt. 550.

66. Effect of subsequent pardon.— Where the vote of a town offering a bounty contained a proviso that nothing should be paid to any soldier who should desert, one who deserted could not claim the bounty, although he was afterward pardoned by the president, and returned to the service, and was honorably discharged. Barnes v. Rutland, 42 Vt. 622. See also Harvey v. Peacham, 42 Vt. 287.

An honorable discharge of a soldier (who had been a deserter), at the end of his service, is a formal final judgment passed by the government upon the entire military record of the soldier, and an authoritative declaration by it that he had left the service in a status of honor, and removes any charge or impediment in the way of his receiving bounty. Recovery by assignee.— When it is agreed that a state, to promote enlistments, shall advance the bounty promised by the government and take an assignment from the recruits, and that the government "shall pay the bounties to the State or town instead of to the men at the time and in the manner they are to be paid to the soldiers respectively," the assignee stands in the place of the assignor. The claim for bounty is not enlarged nor the time of payment changed. Therefore the state cannot recover from the government instalments forfeited by reason of desertion. State v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl. 394.

is dependent upon the amount offered in each individual case,[69] or the length of time for which the person volunteered to serve.[70] By some statutes the bounty was to be paid upon enlistment and the remainder at the expiration of his term of service,[71] while all bounty claims under the surplus remaining from state equalization funds were dependent upon the time of service.[72]

b. Additional Pay and Equipment. In addition to the bounties payable upon enlistment and muster, municipalities in certain states further provided certain gratuities or additional pay to those volunteering for service.[73]

c. Money Paid Broker. Money paid a broker as consideration for procuring volunteers is not bounty money, and the soldier enlisted has no claim upon such money as for bounty.[74]

4. Assignment of Claim. A claim for bounty has its own degree, measure, or extent, its conditions and its limitations. With such surroundings it passes to the assignee.[75]

69. Shackford v. Newington, 46 N. H. 415; Hills v. Marlboro, 40 Vt. 648.

Conditional bounty.— In Bishop v. Rochester, 93 Mass. 84, a vote was passed by a town "that all men belonging to the town and enlisting into the service of the United States, and who shall be accepted and mustered into the service of the same, shall receive a bounty from the town of one hundred and twenty-five dollars," and "that shall the full quota required of the town be enlisted and accepted as aforesaid, an additional sum of seventy-five dollars shall be paid each man thus enlisting, but should there be a failure in making up the full quota of nine months' men, then those enlisting and being accepted and mustered as aforesaid shall receive only the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars." In consequence of these votes, certain citizens of the town were enlisted and mustered into the United States service, but not enough to fill the quota, and after about three months a draft was ordered. The town then averted the draft by filling the quota with recruits from abroad. It was held that the quota was not filled so as to entitle the citizens so enlisted to the additional sum of seventy-five dollars. See also Ferrin v. Portland, 53 Me. 458.

There is a marked difference between an absolute offer of a certain sum and the offer of a bounty not exceeding a certain sum. The former is definite and certain and can be satisfied, if accepted, only by the payment of the fixed sum. The latter is variable and indefinite and capable of satisfaction with any sum less than the fixed amount. Hence, it cannot be accepted so as to create an obligation to pay any definite sum without further negotiation. Blodgett v. Springfield, 43 Vt. 626.

Statute prohibiting future bounties.— A town voted that it would guarantee to all members of a company of volunteers, citizens of the town, to pay "twenty-six dollars per month while in service," and would furnish to "each volunteer soldier" a uniform, and pay him a daily sum while drilling, and "when the company of volunteer citizens of this town are called into service, they shall have one month's pay in advance." It was held that the guaranty of monthly pay had reference only to service under the authority of the United States, and where the claimant was mustered into such service, after the passage of an act prohibiting further municipal bounties, he could not recover. Howes v. Middleborough, 108 Mass. 123.

The state aid which the family of a soldier has received from the treasury of the town, under the statutes of the commonwealth, is in no sense a payment of or substitute for the sum which the town had promised to pay to him individually during the term of his enlistment. Grover v. Pembroke, 11 Allen (Mass.) 88.

74. Abbe v. Allen, 39 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 481. See also Vrancx v. Ross, 98 Mass. 591.

An enlisted soldier may recover from a broker any of the bounty money due himself and which has been withheld from him by false representations or fraud. Sullivan v. Fitzgerald, 94 Mass. 482.

75. State v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl. 394.

A valid parol assignment of a soldier's bounty by a substitute to his principal will have the right of action over a subsequent written assignment to a third person, especially where such third person had reason to know of the prior assignment. Sprague v. Frankfort, 60 Me. 253.

Contract not conforming to foreign law.— Where a volunteer, before enlisting, assigns his bounty, for a consideration received and retained, without fraud or misrepresentation, and the assignee incurs expenditures and risks on the faith of the agreement, and receives the money as his own by consent of the assignor, the fact that the written contract is invalid, as not conforming to the laws of the foreign country in which it was

C. Proceedings to Recover Bounty — 1. Form of Remedy — a. In General. Where a person has enlisted upon the faith of a bounty offer and has fulfilled his part of the agreement or contract the proper remedy to recover his claim is by action.[76] The form of action in a great measure depends upon the agreement sought to be enforced and the jurisdiction whose aid is invoked. The action may be one of contract,[77] or for money had and received according to the nature of the claim.[78]

b. Mandamus. While courts will not attempt by writ of mandamus to enforce simple common-law rights between individuals, such as the payment of money, where there is another adequate legal remedy,[79] mandamus is the proper remedy where an officer or board of officers refuse or neglect to audit a claim for bounty which is properly due and owing.[80] Mandamus is also the proper remedy to compel commissioners to proceed to levy a tax for the payment of bounties when so directed by a statute.[81]

2. Limitations of Actions. The time within which an action for a bounty may be maintained depends upon the law of the state in which the same is sought to be collected.[82] The time during which a soldier is absent from the state in military service is to be deducted in determining whether the statute of limitations has run against his claim.[83] executed, is no ground for a recovery of the bounty by the assignor from the assignee, especially where there is proof in the action independent of the instrument. Vrancx v. Ross, 98 Mass. 591.

Two or more claimants.— Where two or more persons claim to be entitled to the same bounty, and such bounty is paid to the one not entitled thereto, an action cannot be maintained against him for money had and received by the party to whom it was really due, or his assignee. Such payment does not oust the real owner of his just claim, and he may recover the bounty from the authority which originally offered it. Decker v. Saltzman, 59 N. Y. 275.

The right to the bounty must be entirely free and clear of all legal dispute. Northrup v. Pittsfield, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 108.

Delivery of script.— Where bonds, certificates, or script in the hands of an officer of a municipal corporation are withheld or refused by one of its officers, the better and more effective remedy is to apply for a mandamus to compel their delivery provided there has been a sufficient proof of claim. In Michigan, by statute, limitations does not constitute a bar to any claim by a "soldier, or his widow, children, or legal representatives." Smith v. Aplin, 80 Mich. 205, 45 N. W. 136.

The bounty given by 14 U. S. Stat. p. 322, § 12, is a gratuity, which may be taken away by act of congress, and if a bounty claim is not presented within the time and in the form prescribed by statute it is void. Bowman v. U. S., 10 Ct. Cl. 408.

When statute begins to run.— The act of enlisting includes the entire process by which a person becomes a member of the army, and a cause of action, for a bounty previously voted, accrues at the moment of enlistment. Wood v. Springfield, 43 Vt. 617. A claim for bounty due when a soldier is mustered out of service under the United States bounty statutes accrues then, and from that date the statute of limitations begins to run. Bowman v. U. S., 10 Ct. Cl. 408. As the excess in the sum received by a town from the state for the equalization of bounties belonged to the soldiers who served on the town's quota without any such reward, the town received the excess as a trustee, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run against a soldier's claim until the town repudiated the trust. McGuire v. Linneus, 74 Me. 344.

83. Wood v. Springfield, 43 Vt. 617.

3. Pleading. All that is required in actions for the recovery of bounty money is that the declaration or complaint shall state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and show that the claimant is entitled to recover.[84] Where such claim depends for its validity upon a contract express or implied, the contract relied upon must be averred.[85]

4. Evidence. Evidence tending to directly affirm or disaffirm the contract under which the bounty was offered or accepted is admissible;[86] but declarations[87]

84. Moore v. Monroe County, 59 Ind. 516. See also Grant County v. Wood, 69 Ind. 356; Young v. Franklin County, 25 Ind. 295; and 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bounties," § 30.

Averment of credit.— The Illinois act of January 18, 1865, in relation to payment of bounties by counties to volunteers in the military service of the United States only authorized the levy of a tax to pay indebtedness that had been or might be incurred for bounties to volunteers, who had or should enlist and be credited to the quota of the county. Therefore a declaration in a suit against a county to recover such bounty is fatally defective if it does not aver that plaintiff's enlistment was credited to the county. Greenwood v. De Kalb County, 90 Ill. 600.

Averment of residence.— An act of congress having provided that all persons mustered into the military service, etc., should be credited to the ward or township where such persons belonged by actual residence, in an action for bounty money a declaration setting forth that plaintiff was credited to a certain city is a sufficient averment that he resided in such city. Hawthorne v. Hoboken, 32 N. J. L. 172.

Complete compliance with offer.— In a suit to recover a bounty offered by a county to those, to the number of one hundred and four, who should enter the military service otherwise than as commissioned officers, an allegation in the complaint that plaintiff "had in all things complied with the terms of said offered bounty" is a sufficient averment that plaintiff was not a commissioned officer. Vermillion County v. Hammond, 83 Ind. 453.

85. Cole v. Economy Tp., 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 549.

In proceedings by mandamus to compel a township board to meet and audit and allow a claim for money advanced for the purpose of filling the township's quota of troops under a certain call, the petition must set forth a state of facts which, under the law, imposes upon the board the duty of which he seeks to compel the performance. People v. Woodhull, 14 Mich. 28.

86. Warren v. Daum, 73 Pa. St. 433.

Military records of state.— In an action to collect a bounty a copy of the military records of the state, certified by the adjutant-general of the state, and showing plaintiff's enlistment, muster into, and discharge from the military service is admissible in evidence. Monroe County v. May, 67 Ind. 562. The books and records in the office of the adjutant-general of the state, and not the date of the muster-in, control as to who are entitled to bounty under a vote of a town to pay a bounty to those who should apply on a quota under a given call. Moore v. Warren, 45 Vt. 199; Hunkins v. Johnson, 45 Vt. 131; Spalding v. Waitsfield, 45 Vt. 20; Bucklin v. Sudbury, 43 Vt. 700. And as the official record of a soldier's desertion is the best evidence of that fact, parol evidence of such desertion is inadmissible, where the record is in existence. Terrell v. Colebrook, 35 Conn. 188. Compare Harvey v. Peacham, 42 Vt. 287, where it was held that it was not necessary to produce the record of conviction by a court-martial, but the fact of desertion might be established by general evidence. See also Lebanon v. Heath, 47 N. H. 353.

Oral evidence of contract.—Where a volunteer sues the selectmen of a town on a personal offer of bounty, the fact that he entered into a written contract of enlistment with them in behalf of the town will not render oral evidence of the contract with the selectmen inadmissible. Leet v. Shedd, 42 Vt. 277.

Payment to persons of same class.— The payment of bounty money by a town to a number of volunteers is in the nature of an admission that they were entitled to it; and evidence of the fact should be admitted in an action against the town on a similar claim, by a person precisely similarly situated, as tending to prove a promise to pay plaintiff. Knowlton v. Sanbornton, 48 N. H. 333.

87. Declarations of agent without authority.— Declarations of a recruiting agent appointed by vote of the town made at a town-meeting after his agency had ceased, in respect to what bounty he promised plaintiff when he enlisted and made when plaintiff was not present, and long after the contract to which they related was made are not admissible in an action to recover the bounty, although they were made at a town-meeting and the one who made them is dead. Stiles v. Danville, 42 Vt. 282. So promises made by an agent of the state are not admissible against the town, he not being shown to be its agent. Bogue v. Montville, 69 Conn. 472, 37 Atl. 1078.

Declarations of acting agents.— In an action to recover a bounty offered by certain resolutions of the board of supervisors of a county to persons enlisting in the military service, the declarations of one of a committee appointed by the board, respecting such bounty, made while acting as such, are admissible against the county for the purpose of showing that the committee acted, although such declarations were after the enlistment in question. Keough v. Scott County, 28 Iowa 337.

or private agreements made in the absence of one of the parties to the suit are inadmissible as under the ordinary rules of evidence.[88]

5. Questions For Jury. The question as to whether an offer of bounty was made, and the terms and amount thereof, is for the jury.[89]

III. Head Money.

Head money or bounty within the meaning of the United States statutes, providing that a certain bounty shall be paid by the government for each person on board any vessel of war belonging to the enemy at the commencement of an engagement, which shall be sunk or otherwise destroyed by any vessel belonging to the United States,[90] is not prize under the law, but a gratuity which the government has promised to distribute under the direction of the secretary of the navy, in the same manner as prize-money is distributed.[91] The amount of the bounty depends upon the superiority or inferiority of the force with which the claimants are called upon to contend.[92]

IV. Bounties For Destruction of Animals.

In many states bounties are provided by statute for the destruction of certain animals deemed destructive to stock or crops.[93] Such statutes have been held to come within the purview of the police power of the state, as securing the general comfort, health, and prosperity.[94] All of such statutes require the presentation

88. Private agreement.— In an action against a member of a board of enrolment to recover money deposited with such member to be paid as a bounty to plaintiff as a substitute for a drafted man, evidence of an agreement between plaintiff and the person depositing the money, not known to defendant, is inadmissible. Gates v. Thatcher, 11 Minn. 204.

90. U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878), § 4635.

Vessel not engaged.— The officers and men of a naval vessel which was not engaged in the destruction of the vessels of the enemy, but which was within signal distance of the vessels of the American fleet, or of the flagship of the commanding officer which did participate in such destruction, and able to render effective aid if required, are entitled to bounty, under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878), § 4635, authorizing a bounty for each person on board an enemy's vessel which is destroyed in an engagement by any United States vessel. Sampson v. U. S., 35 Ct. Cl. 578.

91. Matter of Farragut, 7 D. C. 94; U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878), § 4642.

Such bounty, in lieu of prize-money, applies only to successes achieved by the navy alone, without the assistance of the army, and solely by maritime force. U. S. v. War Steam Vessels, 106 U. S. 607, 1 S. Ct. 539, 27 L. ed. 286.

92. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878), § 4635, a bounty of one hundred dollars is provided if the enemy's vessels are of inferior force and of two hundred dollars if of equal or superior force, to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize-money. See Dewey v. U. S., 35 Ct. Cl. 172.

The force specified is that of the enemy's vessel, disjoined from the force arising from forts and batteries on the shore, and torpedoes and mines; hence, in the engagement at Manila bay between the United States naval forces and the Spanish fleet, the force of the vessels of the Spanish fleet being inferior to the American vessels, the claim for bounty is within the provision allowing one hundred dollars for each person on board the vessels sunk and destroyed. To make such appropriations valid within the meaning of the constitution the statute must not only designate the amount, but also the fund out of which it shall be paid. Ingram v. Colgan, 106 Cal. 113, 38 Pac. 315, 39 Pac. 437, 46 Am. St. Rep. 221, 28 L. R. A. 187.

of evidence of claim to some board or officer mentioned therein;[95] and in order to entitle himself to the bounty provided, the claimant must bring himself within the terms of the statute under which he seeks to recover.[96]

Bounties have in some instances been granted for the planting of certain trees and hedges, the cultivation of which is supposed to redound to the public welfare.[97]

VI. Bounties For Sinking Artesian Wells.

A bounty has been declared by statute in some states in favor of those sinking artesian wells.[98]

VII. Bounties on Manufactured Products.

A bounty has in some cases been provided by statute to stimulate the production of certain manufactured articles or products in the manufacture or consumption of which the public is interested.[99] These bounties have been offered

Presentation to proper officers.— Cal. act March 31, 1891, providing for the payment out of the general fund of a bounty to any one killing a coyote, and for taking proof and issuing a certificate by the county supervisors, and that "such certificate may be presented to the controller of the state, who may draw his warrant on the general fund in the state treasury," does not exempt such claims from the necessity of presenting them for audit before the state board of examiners, in accordance with Cal. Pol. Code, § 660, requiring claims against the state to be so presented, nor from the provision in section 672, forbidding the controller to draw his warrant for any claim unless it has been approved by such board. Ingram v. Colgan, 106 Cal. 113, 38 Pac. 315, 39 Pac. 437, 46 Am. St. Rep. 221, 28 L. R. A. 187.

Insufficient certificate.— Under Fla. Laws, c. 3763, providing for the payment of a bounty for the killing of wildcats, and requiring the county commissioners to issue a warrant in payment of the bounty upon the certificate of the county judge that the person killing the wildcat exhibited its scalp to him within ten days after the killing, it was held that a certificate that a person named therein exhibited to the judge the scalp of a wildcat, "which he represented as having been killed" within the time prescribed by the statute was insufficient. Division of plantation.— Under the California act of 1868, for the encouragement of silk culture, and offering a premium for "each plantation of five thousand mulberry trees of the age of two years," it was intended that the owner of a farm or assemblage of mulberry trees, of the age of two years, amounting to five thousand or more, should be entitled to the premium, and if he has more than one such farm or plantation, they being entirely separate or distinct, to a premium for each, but no one is entitled to a premium for one half a plantation. Atty.-Gen. v. Judges, 38 Cal. 291.

Such statutes have been held unconstitutional as granting public money for an individual use. Deal v. Mississippi County, 107 Mo. 464, 18 S. W. 24, 14 L. R. A. 622.

Constitutionality of statutes.— Statutes providing for this class of bounties have been held unconstitutional as taxation for other both by the state[1] and the federal authorities.[2] Such statutes usually require a preliminary application from the prospective claimant and a license from the government,[3] and to prove himself entitled to the offer the claimant must show that he is one of the class contemplated by the statute under which he seeks to recover.[4]

VIII. FISH BOUNTIES.

Bounties have been provided by statute for persons engaged in a certain kind of fishing.[5] To recover a bounty under such statutes the owner of the vessel engaged must make oath to the facts provided by the statute.[6]

8. Origin of term.— "Captain Boycott was an Englishman, an agent of Lord Earne, and a farmer of Lough Mark, in the wild and beautiful district of Connemara. In his capacity as agent he had served notices upon Lord Earne's tenants, and the tenantry suddenly retaliated in a most unexpected way by, in the language of schools and society, sending Captain Boycott to Coventry in a very thorough manner. The population of the region for miles round resolved not to have anything to do with him, and as far as they could prevent it, not to allow any one else to have anything to do with him. His life appeared to be in danger — he had to claim police protection. His servants fled from him as servants flee from their masters in some plague-stricken Italian city. The awful sentence of excommunication could hardly have rendered him more helplessly alone for a time. No one would work for him — no one would supply him with food. He and his wife had to work in their own fields themselves, in most unpleasant imitation of Theocritan shepherds and shepherdesses, and play out their grim eclogue in their deserted fields with the shadows of the armed constabulary ever at their heels. The Orangemen of the north heard of Captain Boycott and his sufferings, and the way in which he was holding his ground, and they organized assistance and sent him down armed laborers from Ulster. To prevent civil war the authorities had to send a force of soldiers and police to Lough Mark, and Captain Boycott's harvests were brought in and his potatoes dug by the armed Ulster laborers, guarded always by the little army." I. AGREEMENT TO MARRY.

A. Nature of. An agreement to marry can only be made between a man and a woman, and is essentially different from every other contract known to the law, its objects being totally unlike the purposes to be accomplished by any other kind of contract which can be entered into, and the relation it has in view being wholly distinct from the relation which any other contract could contemplate. Moreover the contract has its origin in natural law and is the foundation of society.[1]

History of law as to promises of marriage. — It was said in Morgan v. Yarborough, 5 La. Ann. 316, that the usage of sponsatia or promises of marriage among the Romans was of very ancient origin; that it was spoken

B. Who May Make — 1. In General. Personal capacity to enter into an agreement to marry depends on the law of domicile.[2]

2. Infants. The capacity of infants to enter into a contract to marry has been said to be far less restricted as to age than their capacity to enter into any other agreement,[3] but a contract to marry entered into by an infant is voidable by him or her.[4]

C. Requisites and Validity — 1. In General. To constitute a contract to marry there must be a meeting of the minds of the contracting parties,[5] that is, there must be an offer on the one part and an acceptance on the other.[6] The contract may be unspoken[7] and unwritten;[8] but enough must appear to show of in the Theodosian Code, in Justinian's, and in the decree of Gratian [citing Merlin Repertoire, verbo Fiançailles: Pothier Pandects, bk. 23, tit. 1]; and that if the promise was not fulfilled an action was permitted [citing Mackeldey, Droit Romain, 263]. The same authority says that Pothier, in his treatise on marriage, claims that the usage of Fiançailles existed among the Greeks and ancient Hebrews; and that under the Spanish law the ecclesiastical tribunals would take cognizance of a breach of promise, and punish the party until a consent to fulfil the promise was obtained [citing Partida 4, tit. 1, law vii]. Again, it is stated that in France a reciprocal promise of marriage is considered as producing a reciprocal obligation to contract a marriage, but that if one of the two fiancés refuses to accomplish the promise, neither the ecclesiastical nor lay tribunals can constrain a specific performance, the obligation resolving itself into damages, upon which a civil tribunal can alone decide, the damages being assessed with reference to the actual injury which the party sustained, and not to the advantage lost [citing Merlin Repertoire, verbo Fiançailles; Pothier Traite du Mariage, No. 53]; and that the Civil Code, by its silence on the subject of Fiançailles, leaves them in the general category of contracts, and they are consequently submitted to the rules of ordinary agreements [citing Merlin Repertoire, verbo Fiançailles, § 11]. So in a note to Wightman v. Coates, 15 Mass. 1, 6, 8 Am. Dec. 77, it is said that by the custom of Scotland the party refusing to fulfil may be either compelled to celebrate the marriage or to pay damages; that in Germany promises of marriage made with certain formalities are actionable; and that in the two Sicilies a promise of marriage produced no civil obligation, unless made before an officer of state in the prescribed manner, in which case an action might be maintained for the recovery of damages in case of non-performance of such promise.

2. Campbell v. Crampton, 18 Blatchf. (U. S.) 150, 2 Fed. 417, where it was said that the domicile which the parties contemplated was the very essence of the contract, and that, although consanguinity of the parties might not render a marriage between them voidable in New York, an agreement to marry between parties, whose consanguinity was such that they could not marry within a state where the agreement was made, should not be sanctioned in New York even if marriage was possible.

that the minds of the parties meet, and to fix the fact that the parties are to marry as clearly as if put in formal words of offer and acceptance.[9]

2. Consideration. The promises being mutual each is usually the consideration for the other,[10] but it is not the only possible consideration.[11] It is not sufficient if the sole consideration is immoral,[12] or against public policy,[13] but if other a previous promise had been made and broken. Pyle v. Piercy, 122 Cal. 383, 55 Pac. 141.

Statute of frauds.— A promise to marry is not within the clause of the statute of frauds relating to contracts made in consideration of marriage. Lewis v. Tapman, 90 Md. 294, 45 Atl. 459, 47 L. R. A. 385; Ogden v. Ogden, 1 Bland (Md.) 284; Harrison v. Cage, 1 Ld. Raym. 386 [overruling Philpott v. Wallet, 3 Lev. 65]; Cork v. Baker, 1 Str. 34. It has been held, however, that the agreement, if not to be performed within one year, is within a clause requiring contracts of that character to be in writing (Nichols v. Weaver, 7 Kan. 373; Derby v. Phelps, 2 N. H. 515; Ullman v. Meyer, 10 Fed. 241. Contra, Blackburn v. Mann, 85 Ill. 222 [cited in Lewis v. Tapman, 90 Md. 294, 45 Atl. 459, 47 L. R. A. 385; Nearing v. Van Fleet, 151 N. Y. 643]; Brick v. Gannar, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 52); the cases, of course, turning upon the construction of the different statutes involved (Lewis v. Tapman, 90 Md. 294, 45 Atl. 459, 47 L. R. A. 385). Where there is a possibility of the marriage being performed within a year, and there is no stipulation that it should not be, the statute does not apply. Lawrence v. Cooke, 56 Me. 187, 26 Am. Dec. 443; Lewis v. Tapman, 90 Md. 294, 45 Atl. 459, 47 L. R. A. 385.

Time for performance.— A contract definite and certain in every element and part, except as to the time of consummation which is made to depend upon an event which in the course of nature must inevitably occur, is not void for indefiniteness and uncertainty. Brown v. Odill, 104 Tenn. 250, 56 S. W. 840, 52 L. R. A. 660, holding that a contract to marry upon the death of a divorced consort of defendant is reasonably definite and certain, since the possibility that one or both of the contracting parties might die in advance of that event is the same as if the marriage had been set for the first day of the next month, or of the next year, and in neither of these cases would that possibility render the contract void for indefiniteness or uncertainty. The promise may be to marry at a fixed time (Halloway v. Griffith, 32 Iowa 409, 7 Am. Rep. 208), in general terms, that is, to marry within a reasonable time (Blackburn v. Mann, 85 Ill. 222; Cannon v. Alsbury, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 76, 10 Am. Dec. 709), or to marry on the recovery of health (McConahey v. Griffey, 82 Iowa 564, 48 N. W. 983).

10. Harvey v. Johnston, 6 C. B. 295, 6 Dowl. & L. 120, 12 Jur. 981, 17 L. J. C. P. 298, 60 E. C. L. 295; Harrison v. Cage, 5 Mod. 411; Cock v. Richards, 10 Ves. Jr. 429.

11. Harvey v. Johnston, 6 C. B. 295, 6 Dowl. & L. 120, 12 Jur. 981, 17 L. J. C. P. 298, 60 E. C. L. 295.

Sufficient considerations.— A promise to marry is supported by a promise to go to a certain place for the purpose of marrying (Harvey v. Johnston, 6 C. B. 295, 6 Dowl. & L. 120, 12 Jur. 981, 17 L. J. C. P. 298, 60 E. C. L. 295) or by a promise to remain unmarried (Millward v. Littlewood, 5 Exch. 775, 20 L. J. Exch. 2, 1 Eng. L. & Eq. 408; Wild v. Harris, 7 C. B. 999, 7 Dowl. & L. 114, 13 Jur. 961, 19 L. J. C. P. 297, 62 E. C. L. 999); and a bond, conditioned for damages in a case of a failure to marry, given by one, is a good consideration for an agreement that in the event of his or her failure to marry after a certain time the other shall have all his or her property (Cock v. Richards, 10 Ves. Jr. 429).

12. Sexual intercourse is not a good consideration (Boigneres v. Boulon, 54 Cal. 146; Hanks v. Naglee, 54 Cal. 51, 35 Am. Rep. 67; Judy v. Sterrett, 52 Ill. App. 265; Saxon v. Wood, 4 Ind. App. 242, 30 N. E. 797; Button v. Hibbard, 82 Hun (N. Y.) 289, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 483, 64 N. Y. St. 80; Steinfeld v. Levy, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 26; McDonald v. McCann, 4 City Hall Rec. (N. Y.) 63; Lewis v. Goetschius, 20 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 140; Goodal v. Thurman, 1 Head (Tenn.) 208; Burke v. Shaver, 92 Va. 345, 23 S. E. 749); but the contract is not vitiated if the intercourse be had before (Hotchkins v. Hodge, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 117) or after (Fleetford v. Barnett, 11 Colo. App. 77, 52 Pac. 293; Powell v. Moeller, 107 Mo. 471, 18 S. W. 884; Kelley v. Highfield, 15 Oreg. 277, 14 Pac. 744; Spellings v. Parks, 104 Tenn. 351, 58 S. W. 126) the promise.

13. Public policy would be contravened by a promise to marry another person after the death of a living consort (Noice v. Brown, 38 N. J. L. 228, 20 Am. Rep. 388; Davis v. Pryor, 112 Fed. 274, 50 C. C. A. 579 [reversing (Indian Terr. 1900) 58 S. W. 660]; Millward v. Littlewood, 5 Exch. 775, 20 L. J. Exch. 2, 1 Eng. L. & Eq. 408) or when a divorce should be obtained (Paddock v. Robinson, 63 Ill. 99, 14 Am. Rep. 112; Noice v. Brown, 38 N. J. L. 228, 20 Am. Rep. 388 [affirmed in 39 N. J. L. 133, 23 Am. Rep. 213]); but it seems that one may make a valid promise to marry upon the death of a parent (Frost v. Knight, L. R. 7 Exch. 111, 41 L. J. Exch. 78, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 77, 20 Wkly. Rep. 471), or upon the death of a divorced consort of defendant (Brown v. Odill, 104 Tenn. 250, 56 S. W. 840, 52 L. R. A. 660).

promises were made free from the immoral or unlawful taint the contract will be upheld on such other promises.[14]

D. Abrogation, Release, or Rescission. An agreement to marry may, like other agreements, be abrogated, released, or rescinded.[15]

II. ACTION FOR BREACH OF AGREEMENT.

A. Accrual of Right. Where the contract is not performed in accordance with the agreement there is a right of action.[16] Where the contract was to marry at a certain time, suit may be brought immediately upon the renunciation of the contract before the expiration of such time,[17] or upon discovery that performance by one party is impossible;[18] and where no time of performance was fixed action may be brought after a reasonable time.[19]

14. Judy v. Sterrett, 52 Ill. App. 265; Kurtz v. Frank, 76 Ind. 594, 40 Am. Rep. 275; Button v. Hibbard, 82 Hun (N. Y.) 289, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 483, 64 N. Y. St. 80.

The rule that a contract is void, if part of the consideration is illegal, or against sound morals or public policy, is not applicable to agreements to marry. Thus where an executrix, as part consideration of a promise of marriage, agreed to compromise a suit which she had instituted in her fiduciary character, the contract was held valid. Contract not speedily carried out considered abandoned.— When persons of different sexes contract to marry each other, but do not marry immediately, there is always some reason or other against it, as disapprobation of friends and relations, inequality of circumstances, or the like. "Both sides ought to continue free; otherwise such contracts may be greatly abused, as by putting woman's virtue in danger by too much confidence in men, or by young men living with women without being married. Therefore these contracts are not to be extended by implication." Davis v. Bomford, 6 H. & N. 245, 249, 30 L. J. Exch. 139, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 279 [citing Lowe v. Peers, 4 Burr. 2225].

Returning an engagement ring does not waive or release a right of action for a failure to marry. Kraxberger v. Roiter, 91 Mo. 404, 3 S. W. 872, 60 Am. Rep. 262; Ortiz v. Navarro, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 195, 30 S. W. 581.

Who may rescind or release.— A parent or guardian cannot avoid an infant's promise to marry (Parks v. Maybee, 2 U. C. C. P. 257), but a minor may release the promise if competent under statute to contract marriage (Develin v. Riggsbee, 4 Ind. 464). As to a release by infants, generally, see INFANTS.

B. Defenses — 1. In General. The fact that there was a mutual rescission of the contract is a good defense;[20] but plaintiff's consent to postpone the wedding-day,[21] the fact that defendant thought the proposed marriage would not tend to the happiness of both parties,[22] or an adjudication in a former action against defendant for seduction[23] is not.

2. Character and History of Plaintiff. A defense is good which sets up the unchastity of plaintiff occurring and becoming known to defendant subsequently to the promise,[24] or existing at the time of the promise and coming to the knowledge of defendant for the first time after such promise,[25] if immediately upon acquiring such knowledge he or she repudiated the contract;[26] but the unchastity of plaintiff is not a defense where committed with defendant, after the latter's engaging to marry plaintiff,[27] or where defendant knew of the misconduct before the engagement, or learning it subsequently, failed to act promptly in disavowing the promise.[28] Defendant cannot, however, take advantage of undesirable traits, conduct, characteristics, or other causes,[29] except in mitigation of damages,[30] unless there was a fraudulent concealment of the facts on the part of plaintiff.[31]

3. Disease or Physical Incapacity. Disease or physical disability rendering it unsafe or improper to marry, and which has developed in either party to the contract without intervening fault on his or her part, between the date of the contract and the date appointed for the marriage, entitles either party to postpone the marriage until cured,[32] and, if such disease or disability is of a permanent character, to refuse to carry out the contract,[33] and it is proper so to do.[34] In like manner, it is a defense when the disease or disability existed previously to the promise and reappeared before the date fixed for the marriage, if defendant believed that it was cured before the promise was made.[35] Where, however,

Where plaintiff undertakes without inquiry from defendant to state facts relating to the circumstances of his or her history or life, to his or her parentage or family, or to his or her former or present position, those facts if material must not only be stated truly, but defendant is also bound not to suppress or conceal any facts necessary to a correct understanding on the part of defendant of the facts which are stated, and if there is a wilful concealment and suppression of such facts whereby defendant was led to believe that the matters to which such statement related were different from what they actually were plaintiff is guilty of a fraudulent concealment. Where disease develops after agreement, and before breach, it has been held that defendant cannot avail himself of the fact even if plaintiff had notice thereof, since performance is not impossible, and it is not enough to show in answer to an action upon a contract that its performance is inconvenient or may be dangerous. 4. Engagement of Plaintiff. It is not a defense that plaintiff was at the time of the promise engaged to marry another than defendant.[37]

5. Infancy. Infancy is a valid defense to an action for breach of a marriage promise,[38] unless plaintiff is a minor and defendant an adult.[39]

6. Subsequent Offer to Perform. Defendant's offer to marry after breach is as a rule no defense.[40]

7. Subsisting Marriage of Defendant. The fact that defendant was married at time of the promise is not necessarily a defense,[41] although it may be if plaintiff knew at the time of promise that defendant had a consort living and not divorced.[42]

C. Form of Action. The ecclesiastical courts from a very remote period had power to decree a performance of the marriage in the event of a failure to carry out the promise,[43] but when this power was taken away the common-law courts began to entertain civil actions for a breach of the contract to marry,[44]

although, where resort was had to the ecclesiastical court a suit for damages could not be entertained by the common-law courts, and e converso.[45] The whole system of ecclesiastical courts as separate from the civil is, however, foreign to the institutions of this country. Accordingly, specific performance of an agreement to marry cannot be decreed,[46] and an action for breach of promise is in form an action founded on contract, and is treated as an action for breach of contract;[47] but the injury is regarded as entirely personal and the action, although in form one for breach of contract, is really one for a breach arising from the personal conduct of defendant and affecting the personality of plaintiff.[48]

D. Jurisdiction. Where the contract was made in a foreign country it has been doubted whether an action can be maintained in the country where the breach occurs, unless the jurisdiction of such country is submitted to.[49]

E. Conditions Precedent — 1. LIMITATIONS. Action should be brought before the statute of limitations has run.[50]

2. REQUEST FOR, OR TENDER OF, PERFORMANCE. Request for performance of the promise is not necessary before suit, where the promise has been renounced,[51] but where no time and place for marriage were fixed, it is held that a breach does not occur until there has been an offer to fix a time and place for fulfilment of the promise.[52]

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Breach of Marriage Promise," § 21.

Date of promise.— An allegation that the contract to marry was made on a named date, and at and on divers other dates before commencing suit, is a sufficient designation of time. Spelling v. Parks, 104 Tenn. 351, 58 S. W. 126.

Time of performance.— A definite time for performance need not be alleged (Clark v. Reese, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 64 S. W. 783. See also Clements v. Moore, 11 Ala. 35), and where the declaration does not lay a time or place for performance of the promise proof that any time or place was agreed on is unnecessary (Martin v. Patton, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 233). An allegation of an agreement to marry in a reasonable time, and a further allegation of a subsequent agreement to marry, as aforesaid, to wit, on a specified date, charges a promise to marry on such date. Haymond v. Saucer, 84 Ind. 3.

The contract alleged in the complaint must be proved where there is an answer of general denial (Paris v. Strong, 51 Ind. 339), but where the date of promise was laid on a given date in the year 1869, and on divers times prior to that date in the years 1868 and 1869, proof of a promise in 1866 is not fatally variant therefrom unless defendant is misled thereby (Fowler v. Martin, 1 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 377 [affirmed in 56 N. Y. 676]). An allegation of a promise to marry generally is supported by a promise to marry on request, or in a reasonable time (Clark v. Pendleton, 20 Conn. 495), but not by proof of a promise to marry at a specified future time, or on the "happening of a contingency" (Clark v. Pendleton, 20 Conn. 495; Atchinson v. Baker, Peake Add. Cas. 103); but a promise to marry in a reasonable time is supported by proof of a promise to marry plaintiff in the following spring (Prescott v. Guyler, 32 Ill. 312). Where an unconditional promise to marry is alleged, proof of a conditional promise is fatally variant. Conrad v. Williams, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 444. Under averments of a promise to marry on request within a reasonable time, and generally, plaintiff may show a promise to marry when certain work should be finished where the promise was only a part of what passed between the parties. Bennett v. Beam, 42 Mich. 346, 4 N. W. 8, 36 Am. Rep. 442.

Aided by verdict.— A petition, failing to aver that defendant had promised to marry plaintiff, but averring a promise to marry defendant, and alleging that defendant not regarding the promise had married another person, is aided by verdict though bad on demurrer. Roper v. Clay, 18 Mo. 383, 59 Am. Dec. 314.

Amendment of petition.— Where defendant pleads infancy, an amendment alleging a new promise and a ratification of the original promise when defendant attained majority is permissible. Schreckengast v. Ealy, 16 Nebr. 510, 20 N. W. 853.

65. McCarville v. Boyle, 89 Wis. 651, 62 N. W. 517.

Time of breach.— A breach laid as taking place on or about November 11 is supported in the action and are all that need be alleged in order to constitute a cause of action.[66]

b. Particular Averments — (i) Offer and Willingness to Perform. Where no time or place of marriage was fixed in the promise, or where the promise was to marry within a reasonable time or upon request, and defendant has not married another, plaintiff must aver an offer of marriage, since in such cases it may not be possible for plaintiff otherwise to show that defendant is in default.[67] An allegation of plaintiff's readiness to fulfil the promise at the proper time is also material,[68] unless defendant has clearly shown an intention not to perform the promise or incapacity so to do.[69]

(ii) Request For Performance. A request to perform need not be alleged where there was a clear intention on the part of defendant not to perform his promise,[70] or where the complaint, declaration, or petition alleges facts show-by proof of a breach on November 15. Holloway v. Griffith, 32 Iowa 409, 7 Am. Rep. 208.

Failure to present a good cause of action is not cured by verdict where the answer sets up as a defense that plaintiff was an infant, that the guardian had refused his consent to the marriage, and that the marriage contract was rescinded by mutual consent. Such an answer admits only that there had been a marriage engagement between the parties, but does not admit, either in form or substance, expressly or by implication, that plaintiff had ever offered to perform it, or that upon such offer defendant had refused. Fible v. Caplinger, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 464.

66. McCarville v. Boyle, 89 Wis. 651, 62 N. W. 517.

Capacity or competency to contract.— It is not necessary to allege that the parties were of marriageable age (Glasscock v. Shell, 57 Tex. 215) or that the guardian of a minor plaintiff had consented to a marriage with defendant (Cannon v. Alsbury, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 76, 10 Am. Dec. 709, holding that if it be necessary to show consent, it is sufficient so to do in evidence, and that the provisions of an act regulating the solemnization of a marriage do not change the rule), because where the promise is duly alleged there is an inference that the parties thereto were legally competent to contract to marry (Jones v. Layman, 123 Ind. 569, 24 N. E. 363; Blattmacher v. Saal, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 22, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 409).

Where the parties had previously been married and divorced an allegation that the parties while married agreed to procure divorce and afterward to remarry is immaterial. Bowman v. Bowman, 153 Ind. 498, 55 N. E. 422.

An allegation that defendant married another since the promise to marry plaintiff is unnecessary and redundant. McCarville v. Boyle, 89 Wis. 651, 62 N. W. 517. See also Ortiz v. Navarro, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 195, 30 S. W. 581. Under an averment that defendant had married Hannah E. M., proof that he married Anna E. M. is not variant. Moritz v. Melhorn, 13 Pa. St. 331.

67. Burnham v. Cornwell, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 284, 63 Am. Dec. 529; Fible v. Caplinger, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 464; Martin v. Patton, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 233; Burks v. Shain, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 341, 5 Am. Dec. 616; Turner v. Baskin, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 224, 2 West. L. Month. 98; Kelley v. Brennan, 18 R. I. 41, 25 Atl. 346; Gough v. Farr, 2 C. & P. 631, 12 E. C. L. 774.

Sufficiency of averment.—Where defendant promised to marry plaintiff within a fortnight, an averment that the latter was always ready and offered herself, without saying "within the fortnight" was sufficient, there being no necessity to aver an offer when she was always ready. Holcroft v. Dickenson, 1 Freem. K. B. 347.

Facts rendering offer to perform unnecessary.— Where mutual promises to marry within a reasonable time were alleged, with an averment that plaintiff has been at all times since the promise ready to marry defendant, of which he had notice, and that a reasonable time had expired, but that defendant had not kept the promise, an offer to marry defendant was not necessary. Turner v. Baskin, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 224, 2 West. L. Month. 98.

68. Graham v. Martin, 64 Ind. 567; Fible v. Caplinger, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 464; Martin v. Patton, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 233.

Absence of averment — Aided by verdict.— The absence of an averment of continued readiness and willingness to marry defendant from the time the contract was made until its alleged breach is aided by verdict. Hunter v. Hatfield, 68 Ind. 416.

69. Cole v. Holliday, 4 Mo. App. 94; Wagenseller v. Simmers, 97 Pa. St. 465.

What constitutes refusal.— If, after an engagement to marry and a lapse of reasonable time or the time agreed upon between the parties, the man omits to offer to marry, it is generally considered a refusal to marry. Kelley v. Brennan, 18 R. I. 41, 25 Atl. 346; Seymour v. Gartside, 2 D. & R. 55, 16 E. C. L.

ing that performance of the alleged promise was rendered impossible before suit.[71]

(III) DAMAGES. Under a general allegation of damages plaintiff may recover not only an indemnity for pecuniary loss and the disappointment of reasonable expectations of an advantageous settlement in life, but also compensation for injury to feelings and affections, and mortification undergone.[72] Where, however, plaintiff desires to recover damages that are not the direct, natural, and necessary consequences of the breach of promise,[73] although they may be the proximate consequences,[74] facts showing such damages must be alleged;[75] thus, there should be special allegations of seduction under the promise,[76] loss of health,[77] or proper expenditures made in preparation for marriage.[78]

c. Joinder of Causes. A cause of action or count for breach of promise cannot be joined with one for defamation of character,[79] or with a count for nonpayment of an annuity for the support of a child.[80]

72, in which latter case the court said that it could hardly be expected that a lady should say to a gentleman "I am ready to marry you; pray marry me."

2. Answer or Plea — a. In General. The answer or plea must, in a proper manner,[81] state all facts essential to the defense,[82] and must not be irrelevant, redundant, or scandalous.[83]

b. Abandonment or Rescission. It has been held that under a general denial evidence of a mutual rescission of the contract prior to the alleged breach is admissible,[84] but where abandonment or rescission is specially pleaded it must be alleged that the contract was rescinded or abandoned under an agreement with plaintiff, and not with any other person.[85]

c. Disease or Physical Incapacity. A defense of disease or physical incapacity for marriage developing after the promise must be pleaded by way of confession and avoidance, and not in bar.[86]

N. Y. Suppl. 220, 72 N. Y. St. 799; Spellings v. Parks, 104 Tenn. 352, 58 S. W. 126.

Under statutes permitting a joinder of as many different causes of action as plaintiff may have against defendant, a count for breach of marriage contract is not affected by a count for seduction. That count may be disregarded; but where evidence is offered in support of the count for seduction, and that evidence increased the amount of damages, judgment will not be arrested, for the reason that the evidence was admissible under the first count. Roper v. Clay, 18 Mo. 383, 59 Am. Dec. 314.

81. Coble v. Eltzroth, 125 Ind. 429, 25 N. E. 544, holding that defendant cannot in one paragraph of the answer confess and deny the promise.

It must be definite and certain in its allegations. Mingst v. Bleck, 7 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 314, holding that an answer denying each and every allegation in the complaint, except so much as might thereinafter be admitted, and admitting an acquaintance with plaintiff, but denying seduction of plaintiff under promise of marriage, is sufficiently plain.

82. Mabin v. Webster, 129 Ind. 430, 28 N. E. 863, 28 Am. St. Rep. 199; Coble v. Eltzroth, 125 Ind. 429, 25 N. E. 544; Lehman v. Scott, 113 Ind. 76, 14 N. E. 914; Smith v. Braun, 37 La. Ann. 225; Kniffen v. McConnell, 30 N. Y. 285; Leavitt v. Cutter, 37 Wis. 46.

Answer setting up limitations.—An answer to a complaint alleging that plaintiff when nineteen years of age entered with defendant into a contract to marry and that plaintiff's cause of action did not accrue within two years prior to the commencement of suit is bad for not showing that the action was not brought within two years after plaintiff attained majority. Lehman v. Scott, 113 Ind. 76, 14 N. E. 914.

An objection that the promise alleged was in restraint of marriage is not supported by an allegation that defendant was unwell at the time of promise, and that performance was conditional upon defendant's recovery, there being no presumption that long delay was in contemplation. McConahey v. Griffey, 82 Iowa 564, 48 N. W. 983.

83. Keegan v. Sage, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 78, where an averment that plaintiff had led a profligate life was held not scandalous, irrelevant, or redundant, because plaintiff alleged in the complaint that "she was, and ever had been, chaste, and a virgin."

Traverse of immaterial averment.—In Bowman v. Bowman, 153 Ind. 498, 55 N. E. 422, it was held that where the complaint alleged an agreement of the parties, who had previously been married, to procure a divorce and afterward remarry, the fact so averred was wholly immaterial, even though the agreement was void, and that a traverse of such allegation was not sufficient.

84. Shellenbarger v. Blake, 67 Ind. 75.

85. A plea setting up rescission by the parent or guardian of an infant plaintiff is bad. Parks v. Maybee, 2 U. C. C. P. 257.

Plea of exoneration.— A plea that after the making of the promise and before any breach thereof by defendant, plaintiff wholly absolved, exonerated, and discharged defendant from his promise and performance of the same, is sufficient (King v. Gillett, 10 L. J. Exch. 164, 7 M. & W. 55 [citing Coniers v. Holland, 2 Leon. 214; Langden v. Stokes, Cro. Car. 383]; Parks v. Maybee, 2 U. C. C. P. 257 [citing Rogers v. Custance, 1 Q. B. 77, 1 Wms. Saund. 295*n*, 41 E. C. L. 444]), a plea of rescission not being necessary (King v. Gillett, 7 M. & W. 55, 10 L. J. Exch. 164).

W. 242, holding that under the general issue defendant may show through plaintiff that plaintiff was not capable of making or carrying out a contract to marry without fraud or injury to defendant.

Sufficiency of plea.— A plea that before breach and up to commencement of suit defendant was afflicted by a dangerous bodily disease and therefore "incapable of marriage" and "unfit for the married state," although not properly confessing any breach of the promise, is not good even though "incapable of marriage" may mean two things — either incapable of going through the ceremony of marriage, or incapable of performing the functions required in the married state, and though "unfit for the married state" may mean incompetency to perform duties which the marriage contract enjoins. Hall v. Wright, E. B. & E. 746, 6 Jur. N. S. 193, 29 L. J. Q. B. 43, 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 230, 8 Wkly. Rep. 160, 96 E. C. L. 746.

Physical examination of plaintiff.— Where defendant pleads the physical condition of plaintiff as showing that no contract was

d. Infancy. While it has been held that infancy may be shown under the general issue,[87] it has also been held that the defense must be pleaded.[88]

e. Unchastity. Plaintiff's unchastity subsequently to the promise to marry must be specially pleaded,[89] and a plea of previous unchastity must aver that this fact was not known to defendant when the promise was made.[90]

f. Want of Consideration. Want of consideration may be shown under the general issue.[91]

3. Replication or Reply. A replication de injuria to a plea of discharge from the promise before breach denying any breach is bad, such a replication being good only when the plea admits a breach of the promise stated and excuses it; but to a plea of misconduct of plaintiff a replication de injuria is proper.[92]

I. Evidence — 1. Burden of Proof and Presumptions. Upon plaintiff is the burden of proving mutual promises to marry,[93] a breach of the contract,[94] and any alleged element of damage;[95] but it is not necessary for plaintiff to prove that defendant was of full age at the time of making the promise,[96] or, where the immoral character of plaintiff previous to the promise was well known to defendant, reformation on the plaintiff's part.[97] The burden of proving any facts relied upon by defendant as a defense is upon him;[98] but it is unnecessary for defendant to prove a justification of a failure to marry on the particular ground alleged by defendant.[99] There is a presumption that plaintiff was capacitated to enter into a marriage contract,[1] and that a general promise to marry was to have been performed within a reasonable time.[2]

2. Admissibility — a. In General — (i) Admissions or Declarations. To establish a promise by defendant his or her admissions or declarations are admissible,[3]

made, and not as involving plaintiff's fitness to marry, plaintiff should not be required to submit to a physical examination to discover whether his or her physical condition is such as to present an obstacle to marriage. Vierling v. Binder, 113 Iowa 337, 85 N. W. 621.

There is no presumption that there was a promise to marry because persons unlawfully cohabiting agree to go to another country and spend the balance of their days together (Dupont v. McAdow, 6 Mont. 226, 9 Pac. 925. See also Bleiler v. Koons, 132 Pa. See also Fowler v. Martin, 1 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 377 [affirmed in 56 N. A person requested by defendant to inform and unless the admissions may as well refer to illicit intercourse as marriage;[4] but plaintiff's declarations made to persons not related to or interested in plaintiff are not admissible to prove a promise on the part of plaintiff.[5] So, to show a mutuality of contract, plaintiff's declarations, made before institution of suit, that he or she had promised to marry defendant are admissible.[6] Declarations made by plaintiff to a near relation on the occasion of a failure of defendant to appear at the time and place fixed for the wedding are admissible on plaintiff's behalf.[7] So, declarations of plaintiff made after breach, tending to show that plaintiff had no affection for defendant, are admissible for him.[8]

(II) CONDUCT OF PARTIES. Evidence of plaintiff's conduct is admissible to show a promise,[9] or the acceptance of a promise on plaintiff's part,[10] but not to show a mutual promise, unless the conduct took place in defendant's presence or was connected with him or her.[11] Evidence of plaintiff's feeling toward defendant after a breach is not admissible to show what his or her feelings were while the engagement lasted.[12] Evidence of defendant's conduct is admissible as tending to show a promise to marry[13] or an intention not to perform the promise,[14] where plaintiff was cognizant thereof.[15] So, too, the mutual conduct of the parties subsequently to the promise may be put in evidence as tending to show what took place at the time of the proposal,[16] or to prove the existence of a promise.[17]

Whether such evidence should be confined to general reputation is a moot point. In Kniffen v. McConnell, 30 N. Y. 285, and Kerfoot v. Marsden, 2 F. & F. 160, evidence was confined to general reputation, while in time of the breach, or during such time as defendant might reasonably have been expected to perform the promise,[25] although evidence relating to defendant's pecuniary condition at the time of trial, and not when the promise was made, is admissible when the time to which the evidence relates is not too remote from that at which the promise is claimed to have been made.[26] Evidence as to the financial condition of defendant's relatives is generally inadmissible.[27]

(II) In Aggravation—(A) In General. Circumstances of contumely attending a breach of the promise are generally admissible in aggravation of damages;[28] and for that purpose plaintiff may, after proving the promise, show that the fact of the engagement was announced to friends invited to attend the wedding.[29] Plaintiff may not show that illicit intercourse took place between her or him and defendant,[30] that remarks were made by defendant derogatory to plaintiff's chastity,[31] or that defendant, pending suit, married another.[32]

(B) Seduction. The fact that plaintiff was seduced under promise of marriage[33] and that such seduction was followed by pregnancy[34] is admissible in aggravation of damages.

Defendant's pecuniary circumstances cannot be shown in reduction of damages (Wilbur v. Johnson, 58 Mo. 600), unless in rebuttal of evidence of wealth (Sprague v. Craig, 51 Ill. 288; Wilbur v. Johnson, 58 Mo. 600; Smith v. Woodfine, 1 C. B. N. S. 660, 87 E. C. W. 219).

General bad reputation of plaintiff's family, although not of individual members, is admissible. Spellings v. Parks, 104 Tenn. 352, 58 S. W. 126.

Recovery by plaintiff's father for seduction cannot be shown in mitigation where the seduction is alleged to enhance damages. Jarvis v. Johnson, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 312, 2 West. L. Month. 389. See also Schubkagel v. Dierstein, 131 Pa. St. 46, 18 Atl. 1059, 6 L. R. A. 481.

That plaintiff, subsequent to the breach, shot defendant is not admissible in mitigation. Schmidt v. Durnham, 46 Minn. 227, 49 N. W. 126.

Evidence of unchaste conduct after suit is not admissible. Duvall v. Fuhrman, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 174, 3 Ohio Cir. Ct. 305; Capehart v. Carradine, 4 Strobh. (S. C.) 42. But see Willard v. Stone, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 22, 17 Am. Dec. 496, where it was held that, even after any intimacy between the parties was at an end, immodest conduct with others might be shown.

Conduct short of unchastity inconsistent with a pure-minded woman s action is admissible. Stratton v. Dole, 45 Nebr. 472, 63 N. W. 875; Button v. McCauley, 1 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 282, 4 Transcr. Plaintiff's general bad character between promise and breach is not admissible. Boynton v. Kellogg, 3 Mass. 189, 3 Am. Dec. 122.

The period within which licentious conduct may be shown has been held not to be limited (Johnson v. Caulkins, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 116, 1 Am. Dec. 102), but other cases hold that the inquiry should be limited to such time as will enable a jury to determine the question (Tompkins v. Wadley, 3 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 424. See also Thorn v. Helmer, 4 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 408, 2 Keyes (N. Y.) 27; Rathbun v. Ross, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 127).

Particular acts of plaintiff cannot be shown, unless they show, or tend to show, plaintiff to be unchaste. or that plaintiff showed an absence of affection toward defendant[40] during the engagement,[41] but defendant cannot show a lack of affection for plaintiff.[42] Whether the fact that subsequently to breach plaintiff received an offer of marriage from another is admissible is doubtful.[43]

3. Weight and Sufficiency — a. As to Promise. While a mutual promise must be proved,[44] it is not necessary to prove an express promise in direct terms,[45] at least on the part of the woman.[46] It is enough if circumstances are adduced from which a promise can with reason be inferred.[47]

b. As to Breach. There is sufficient evidence of a breach where defendant

A promise to marry generally may be inferred from evidence of a promise to marry at a fixed future time. Clark v. Pendleton, 20 Conn. 495; Phillips v. Crutchley, 3 C. & P. 178, 1 M. & P. 239, 14 E. C. L. 513; Potter v. Deboos, 1 Stark. 82, 2 E. C. L. 40.

Attentions, declarations, and preparations for marriage.— Mere attentions, although exclusive and long continued (Espy v. Jones, 37 Ala. 379; Walmsley v. Robinson, 63 Ill. 41, 14 Am. Rep. 111; Burnham v. Cornwell, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 284, 63 Am. Dec. 529; Standiford v. Gentry, 32 Mo. 477; Yale v. Curtiss, 151 N. Y. 598, 45 N. E. 1125; Weaver v. Bachert, 2 Pa. St. 80, 44 Am. Dec. 159; Munson v. Hastings, 12 Vt. 346, 36 Am. Dec. 345; Vineall v. Veness, 4 F. & F. 344), visits of defendant to plaintiff, coupled with plaintiff's preparations for marriage and declarations made not in defendant's presence of an intention to marry defendant (Walmsley v. Robinson, 63 Ill. 41, 14 Am. Rep. 111), or the mere expression to a third person of an intention to marry plaintiff (Cole v. Cottingham, 8 C. & P. 75, 34 E. C. L. 618), are not enough; but a statement of plaintiff in the presence of defendant that plaintiff was ready to marry defendant, and that plaintiff had made preparations for the occasion, and was ready is evidence from which an offer to marry may be inferred (Green v. Spencer, 3 Mo. 318, 26 Am. Dec. 672), and a positive statement of plaintiff that there was a promise corroborated by evidence of defendant's statement recognizing the engagement is sufficient, notwithstanding an express denial of the promise (Musselman v. Barker, 26 Nebr. 737, 42 N. W. 759).

Letters expressing the impure desires of one toward his mistress rather than a desire for honorable marriage are not sufficient proof of a promise. Boyer v. Sherer, 28 Ill. App. 545.

Plaintiff's letters informing defendant that she was pregnant by him, and referring to frequent illicit intercourse between them, but not hinting of any promise of marriage or claiming, as a right, defendant's society and attention, are not sufficient proof of a promise. Roe v. Doe, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 236, 33 N. Y. St. 41.

Proof of circumstances usually attending an engagement is sufficient to draw an inference of a promise (Wightman v. Coates, 15 Mass. 1, 8 Am. Dec. 77 [citing Hutton v. Mansell, 3 Salk. 16]), but where the parties are permitted to testify in their own behalf they must state all that was said and done, so as to remove from the field of speculation writes to plaintiff informing plaintiff of reports made respecting plaintiff, refuses to go to the house pending investigation, and refrains from so doing;[48] or where defendant makes no effort to carry out the promise, and does not reply to plaintiff's requests that a day for the marriage should be named.[49]

c. As to Release. Evidence in support of a release should show that the release was mutual.[50]

d. As to Reputation. Evidence in support of a defense of plaintiff's bad reputation must show that there was a basis for such defense, and that defendant was ignorant of such reputation before he promised to marry.[51]

J. Trial — 1. Questions of Law and Fact. Whether there was a promise to marry, where the evidence is conflicting,[52] and if so, whether it was express or conditional;[53] and whether there was a breach of a proved promise,[54] and, if so, the assessment of damages[55] are questions for the jury. Where there is no evidence sustaining the contract, the question is one of law,[56] and in like manner the admissibility of evidence is a question of law.[57] facts which had theretofore been inferred (Yale v. Curtiss, 151 N. Y. 598, 45 N. E. 1125 [citing Homan v. Earle, 53 N. Y. 267]).

Corroboration of plaintiff.— In England some corroboration of plaintiff is necessary (Wiedemann v. Walpole, [1891] 2 Q. B. 534, 60 L. J. Q. B. 726, 40 Wkly. Rep. 114; Bessela v. Stern, 2 C. P. D. 265, 46 L. J. C. P. 467, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 88, 25 Wkly. Rep. 561; Hickey v. Champion, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 557, 20 Wkly. Rep. 752; Wilcox v. Gotfrey, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 481), but the rule is otherwise in the United States (Lowden v. Morrison, 36 Ill. App. 495; Giese v. Schultz, 65 Wis. 487, 27 N. W. 353. Compare Nearing v. Van Fleet, 71 Hun (N. Y.) 137, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 531, 54 N. Y. St. 308; Kelley v. Brennan, 18 R. I. 41, 25 Atl. 346).

48. Jones v. Layman, 123 Ind. 569, 24 N. E. 363.

49. Campbell v. Arbuckle, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 29, 21 N. Y. St. 412.

Where the promise was to marry on request, proof of request by plaintiff is not necessary. A request made by one authorized on her behalf so to do is sufficient. Prescott v. Guyler, 32 Ill. 312.

Proof of request to marry is sufficient, without proof of request to fix the day and a refusal thereof. Kelley v. Brennan, 18 R. I. 41, 25 Atl. 346; Ortiz v. Navarro, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 195, 30 S. W. 581.

Positive proof of request and refusal is not necessary under a count to marry on request. The request may be inferred from circumstances. Prescott v. Guyler, 32 Ill. 312. But evidence of a mere refusal to marry on a particular day when marriage on that day is forbidden by the religion of the parties is not sufficient. Stone v. Appel, 12 Ill. App. 582.

50. Sufficient evidence of release.— A letter from plaintiff offering freedom from an engagement and action taken upon the offer by defendant is sufficient evidence of a mutual release. Kellett v. Robie, 99 Wis. 303, 74 N. W. 781. So, where defendant, after writing to plaintiff expressing a desire to terminate the engagement, returned plaintiff's letters, but plaintiff refused to return those of defendant and no correspondence took place between the parties for a period of two years, there was evidence from which the jury might infer that plaintiff had released defendant, Davis v. Bomford, 6 H. & N. 245, 30 L. J. Exch. 139, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 279.

Insufficient evidence of release.—Where defendant wrote plaintiff that he had proved false and was going to be married to another, and plaintiff replied that, although heart broken, defendant would be forgiven, hard though it was so to do after having waited for many years, and that, while plaintiff did not wish defendant any bad luck, defendant was to think if bad luck should befall, no release from the promise was shown. Folz v. Wagner, 24 Ind. App. 694, 57 N. E. 564.

Where defendant was married at time of promise.— If the uncontradicted evidence shows that defendant was as a matter of fact a married man when the alleged promise was made the court should take the responsibility of declaring such conclusion, and not submit the question to the jury. Davis v. Pryor, 112 Fed. 274, 50 C. C. A. 579 [reversing (Indian Terr. 1900) 58 S. W. 660].

57. Tobin v. Shaw, 45 Me. 331, 71 Am. Dec. 547, holding that where plaintiff had destroyed defendant's letters previous to

2. INSTRUCTIONS — a. In General. In its charge to the jury the court should properly state the law as to what constitutes a valid contract of marriage[58] under the pleadings[59] and proof[60] and as to the facts which constitute a justification of a breach.[61] So, the jury should be duly instructed respecting on whom lies the burden of proof.[62] It is not proper, however, to instruct upon the weight of evidence.[63]

b. As to Damages. The jury should also be duly instructed by the court as to matters which should be taken into consideration by them in estimating the amount of damage suffered by plaintiff,[64] such as the personal pain suffered by trial, and offered secondary evidence of their contents, it was a question for the court whether the letters had been destroyed, and whether their destruction was for a fraudulent purpose.

58. Lowden v. Morrison, 36 Ill. App. 495.

As to statute of frauds.— It is sufficient to instruct a finding for defendant, unless there was a mutual agreement existing within a year of the commencement of the action, if defendant does not request an instruction that the promise must have been made to be performed within a year. Daggett v. Wallace, 75 Tex. 352, 13 S. W. 49, 16 Am. St. Rep. 908.

As to fraud of plaintiff.— It is erroneous to charge that if the engagement was brought about by false representations and concealment of matters inquired about which defendant had a right to know, the contract could not be enforced. Van Houten v. Morse, 162 Mass. 414, 38 N. E. 705, 44 Am. St. Rep. 373, 26 L. R. A. 430.

Assumption of a contract.— An instruction predicated upon the jury finding that "there was a valid, subsisting contract of marriage" between the parties, without informing the jury what is required to constitute such a contract, is not erroneous where the jury have been properly instructed on that point in another part of the charge. Judy v. Sterrett, 153 Ill. 94, 100, 38 N. E. 633.

It is a sufficient statement of the law to instruct that plaintiff must prove the contract as alleged by a preponderance of testimony, that if the evidence on this point is found by the jury to be evenly balanced there can be no recovery, and that plaintiff's case is entirely uncorroborated, but that the jury may, if convinced of the truth of plaintiff's statements, base their verdict upon such evidence. Giese v. Schultz, 69 Wis. 521, 34 N. W. 913.

Preparation for marriage.— In deciding whether a contract of marriage existed the jury should not be instructed to consider any preparation that plaintiff might have made for the marriage. Graham v. Martin, 64 Ind. 567.

59. Where the petition alleges a contract by correspondence it is erroneous to refuse an instruction that plaintiff cannot recover unless a contract by correspondence is shown. Barber v. Geer, (Tex. 1901) 63 S. W. 1007 [reversing (Tex. 1901) 63 S. W. 934].

As to time of contract.— Where the promise was alleged to have been made at a specified time and there is proof of several promises, an instruction that the verdict must be for defendant if the contract was not made at such time is properly refused. Nearing v. Van Fleet, 71 Hun (N. Y.) 137, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 531, 54 N. Y. St. 308.

As to time of performance.— Under an allegation of a marriage promise without an allegation that the promise was to marry within a reasonable time, or to marry generally, where defendant denies any promise whatever, the court need not, when instructing as to the running of a statute of limitations, define a reasonable time. Schroeder v. Michel, 98 Mo. 43, 11 S. W. 314.

60. Smith v. Henry, 46 Ill. App. 42; Chamness v. Cox, 131 Ind. 118, 30 N. E. 901; Thurston v. Cavenar, 8 Iowa 155.

As to corroboration of plaintiff.— A refusal to instruct that the uncorroborated testimony of plaintiff when contradicted by defendant will not make out a contract of marriage is proper. Lowden v. Morrison, 36 Ill. App. 495.

61. Espy v. Jones, 37 Ala. 379; Robinson v. Craver, 88 Iowa 381, 55 N. W. 492; Grant v. Willey, 101 Mass. 356; Campbell v. Arbuckle, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 29, 21 N. Y. St. 412.

Release from promise.— After assuming that plaintiff was induced by a third person to release defendant from the engagement and promise to marry, the court should direct a verdict for defendant because a release if not fraudulently obtained would constitute a valid defense. Allard v. Smith, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 297.

62. Where pregnancy of plaintiff is conceded, an instruction to find for defendant if the jury are satisfied that defendant was not the father of plaintiff's child is open to criticism, for the reason that plaintiff should prove that he was the father, and not defendant prove that he was not. Kniffen v. McConnell, 30 N. Y. 285.

63. Ortiz v. Navarro, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 195, 30 S. W. 581.

64. Graham v. Martin, 64 Ind. 567; Stribley v. Welz, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 571; Glasscock v. Shell, 57 Tex. 215.

Instruction must not be complex.— An instruction that if the jury find for plaintiff they should award such damages as would place plaintiff in as good a condition pecuniarily as if the contract were fulfilled is too complicated and conjectural. Miller v. Rosier, 31 Mich. 475.

Where defendant had just cause to refuse to marry plaintiff the jury has nothing to find on the subject of damages. Guptill v. Verback, 58 Iowa 98, 12 N. W. 125.

plaintiff,[65] her seduction,[66] and any other evidence admissible in aggravation,[67] or in mitigation,[68] of damage. The jury may also be charged that they may allow punitive or exemplary damages, if they find that defendant was actuated by improper motives.[69] It is also proper to instruct that the jury must determine what plaintiff ought to recover, and not concern themselves with what defendant is able to pay.[70]

3. VERDICT. Where there is a finding that defendant is guilty and an assessment of damages the verdict is sufficient.[71]

K. Damages — 1. In General — a. Rule Stated. The damages recoverable for breach of a marriage promise are such as will compensate plaintiff for the benefits lost by the breach,[72] in addition to such sum as will be compensatory for Erroneous instruction.— An instruction is erroneous that tells the jury that if plaintiff was engaged to a third person, and defendant induced plaintiff to break the engagement, and promise to marry defendant while not intending in good faith to marry plaintiff, such conduct was an aggravation of plaintiff's damages, because under the previous engagement plaintiff would be a wrong-doer if it was broken, and not entitled to recover damages growing out of the wrongful breach of the engagement. Trammell v. Vaughan, 158 Mo. 214, 59 S. W. 79, 81 Am. St. Rep. 302, 51 L. R. A. 854 [citing Hahn v. Bettingen, 81 Minn. 91, 83 N. W. 467, 50 L. R. A. 669].

Sufficient instruction.—A charge informing the jury that there is no rule for the measure of damages, but that they should consider the evidence, the situation of the parties and what occurred between them, their condition and surroundings, and then give such sum as the evidence would warrant is proper. Olson v. Solveson, 71 Wis. 663, 38 N. W. 329. See also Campbell v. Arbuckle, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 29, 21 N. Y. St. 412.

66. Bennett v. Beam, 42 Mich. 346, 4 N. W. 8, 36 Am. Rep. 442; Goodal v. Thurman, 1 Head (Tenn.) 208.

An instruction that seduction cannot be considered in aggravation of damages, but commenting upon the rule and giving the judge's opinion that the rule is bad in such a way as to inflame the jury into disregarding the rule as stated is error. McFadden v. Reynolds, 20 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 312, 11 Atl. 638.

67. The jury may be instructed to take into consideration a letter written by defendant that might be construed as a proposal that plaintiff should become defendant's mistress instead of his wife. Campbell v. Arbuckle, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 29, 21 N. Y. St. 412.

Attacks upon plaintiff's character.— The jury may be told that the injury is aggravated, and the claim to damages strengthened, if defendant attempted to prove plaintiff guilty of misconduct with other men, knowing of her innocence, or that her misconduct was committed with him, even if such misconduct is not set up as a defense in the answer. Kniffen v. McConnell, 30 N. Y. 285.

Expenditure of money.— An instruction that the jury must consider plaintiff's expenditures of money growing out of the engagement, without stating the purposes for which such expenditures might be made, is erroneous. Stribley v. Welz, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 571.

Financial circumstances of defendant.—After instructing that the jury may consider the circumstances of defendant, the court may refer to the admitted value of his property as a fact which the jury may consider in aggravation of damages. Johnson v. Travis, 33 Minn. 231, 22 N. W. 628.

but where defendant makes the attempt to establish such facts in good faith and fails, the rule is otherwise.[76]

c. Seduction. It is generally held that the jury may take into consideration the fact of plaintiff's seduction by defendant, under promise of marriage.[77]

2. Exemplary Damages. An action for breach of promise is an exception to the rule that exemplary or punitive damages should not be allowed in actions on contract, and with regard to the measure of damages it has always been classed with actions of tort;[78] accordingly since the action embraces the injury to the feelings, affections, and wounded pride of plaintiff as well as the loss of marriage,[79] exemplary damages may be awarded where defendant was guilty of fraud or deceit in the making of the contract,[80] or in the breach thereof.[81]

3. Review. The question of the justice or adequacy of a verdict for plaintiff in an action for breach of marriage promise rests almost wholly in the judgment of the jury and the discretion of the trial judge.[82] Accordingly, however large the damages may be,[83] and although higher than the court would have

I. THE OFFENSE.

A. Definition. The term "breach of the peace" is generic and includes all violations of public peace or order,[1] or acts tending to the disturbance thereof.[2]

B. What Constitutes — 1. IN GENERAL. The offense may consist of acts of public turbulence or indecorum in violation of the common peace and quiet,[3] of an invasion of the security and protection which the law affords every citizen,[4] or Commonly and more narrowly the term signifies any criminal act of a sort to disturb the public repose. 1 Bishop Crim. L. § 536.

"Peace," in this connection, means the tranquillity enjoyed by the citizens of a municipality or community where good order reigns among its members. It is the natural right of all persons in political society. Davis v. Burgess, 54 Mich. 514, 517, 20 N. W. 540, 52 Am. Rep. 828; State v. White, 18 R. I. 473, 28 Atl. 968.

"The public peace" is that invisible sense of security which every person feels, and which is necessary to his comfort and for which government is instituted. of acts such as tend to excite violent resentment.[5] Actual personal violence is not an element in the offense,[6] but where the incitement of terror or fear of personal violence is a necessary element, the conduct or language of the wrong-doer must be of a character to induce such condition[7] in a person of ordinary firmness.[8]

2. Abusive and Insulting Language. Unless so provided by statute, abusive and insulting language will not constitute a breach of the peace, where there is no threat of, or incitement to, immediate violence.[9] Where, however, it has a tendency to create a tumult and provoke a conflict, and especially when denounced by statute,[10] the use of such language may constitute an offense, although the other elements mentioned are absent.[11]

3. Cock-Fighting. By statute, witnessing or engaging in cock-fighting may constitute the offense,[12] but where cock-fighting or assisting thereat is prohibited only in certain specified places it is not an offense to participate in such fighting at some other place.[13]

4. Disturbing Inmates of Dwelling. There are holdings that at common law the offense may be committed by breaking into a dwelling-house or disturbing the inmates,[14] and by statute in many of the states the invasion of a dwelling-

False statement of death.— Tolling a church bell to have it believed that a living person was dead, falsely stating the fact of his death, and that he was to be buried on the next day, with intent to annoy, harass, and vex such person and his family is not indictable under the Vermont statute. 10. "Following or mocking."— The continuation of a controversy begun on the day previous by calling one a sheep thief, using other scurrilous and abusive language, and bleating like a sheep is a "following or mocking" within a statute denouncing it as an offense, to "disturb or break the peace, or stir up or provoke contention and strife by following or mocking any person with scurrilous or abusive or indecent language, or gestures, or noise." W. 997, holding that the use, in the presence of the occupants of a dwelling-house, of foul, abusive, and insulting language unaccompanied by threats, which excites no apprehension or fear of personal violence, is not a breach of the peace at common law.

Going to another's house and shooting his dogs, in the absence of the male members of the family, and to the terror and alarm of house, and such conduct as has a tendency to disturb the peace and quiet of the occupants, is punishable.[15]

5. Reckless Driving. Driving a carriage through the streets of a populous city so as to endanger the safety of the inhabitants is indictable at common law as a breach of the peace.[16]

6. Threats. Threats, especially when accompanied by acts showing an intent to execute them and intended to put the person threatened in fear of bodily harm, while not an indictable offense at common law,[17] may be punishable by statute as an actual as well as a threatened breach of the peace.[18]

7. Trespass. It seems that under some circumstances an injury to realty, when accompanied with violence, or a trespass not amounting to a forcible entry and detainer, is indictable as a breach of the peace;[19] but a mere trespass on, or the dispossession of, property which is the subject of a civil action is not.[20]

8. Tumultuous and Offensive Carriage. In some states it is an offense to disturb or break the peace by tumultuous and offensive carriage or by threatening, quarreling, challenging, assaulting, beating, or striking any other person.[21]

C. Defenses — 1. In General. It is no defense that opprobrious words, the use of which tended to provoke a breach of the peace, were true;[22] that defendant's wife informed him that the person addressed had insulted her;[23] that prosecuting witness provoked the abusive language by abusing defendant,[24]

Disturbance of family or neighborhood.— Under a statute imposing a fine upon any person who, at late or unusual hours in the night, maliciously or wilfully disturbs the peace or quiet of any neighborhood or family by loud or unusual noises or by tumultuous and offensive carriage, an indictment will lie for disturbing a woman occupying a dwelling-house alone. Such statutes are declaratory of but one offense — breaking the public peace, and are construed as imposing a liability for an infraction thereof, in any or all of the modes prescribed (State v. Matthews, 42 Vt. 542) and contemplate tumultuous verbal abuse and personal outrage (State v. S. S., 1 Tyler (Vt.) 180), although not necessarily acts amounting to an assault and battery (State v. Farrall, 29 Conn. 72).

although such abuse may be considered in mitigation;[25] or, the offense being charged to have been committed in a private house, that at the time the house was open to invited guests and hence became a public place.[26] Neither can defendant justify by showing that the prosecutor was in the wrong,[27] or on the ground of former punishment for the offense as a contempt of court.[28]

2. Former Conviction. A conviction on an indictment alleging the offense to have been committed by one or more of the modes prescribed by statute will be a bar to any subsequent indictment for the same offense, which alleges it to have been committed by one or more of the other modes named.[29]

D. Indictment, Information, or Complaint[30] — 1. Charging Acts Constituting Offense — a. In General. While in some jurisdictions it is sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute, or to aver the fact of its commission generally without specifying the words or describing the acts,[31] it is held in others that the particular language or conduct upon which the offense is predicated should be set forth, that the court may judge whether or not a breach of the peace has been committed.[32]

b. Charging Commission in Several Modes. Where several modes are named by which a breach of the peace may be committed, an indictment charging in one count several acts committed at the same time and as part of same transaction is not duplicitous,[33] nor is it objectionable to charge the offense to have been committed in any one of the modes denounced.[34]

2. Particular Averments — a. Force and Violence. If a complaint otherwise good shows the commission of the act charged with force and violence, the omission of the phrase vi et armis is immaterial.[35]

b. Intent. Unless required by statute no allegation of an intent to break the public peace is necessary.[36]

Sufficient averment of means of commission.— A complaint alleging that respondent "did disturb and break the public peace by tumultuous and offensive carriage, . . . by threatening, quarreling with, challenging, assaulting, beating, and striking" sufficiently shows the means by which the offense was committed. State v. Hanley, 47 Vt. 290. But where the obvious intention of the statute is to prevent the disturbance of the peace of families an affidavit which charges the disturbance of a single person not constituting a family is insufficient to show the commission of the offense. 36. State v. Archibald, 59 Vt. 548, 9 Atl. 362, 59 Am. Rep. 755.

Inference of intent.— In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the necessary intent to commit either the offense of provoking or that of attempting to provoke an assault may be inferred from the fact that defendant used words reasonably calculated to provoke the party to whom they were addressed. Warwick v. State, 17 Ind. App. 334, 46 N. E. 650.

c. Naming Person Referred to or Addressed. When the offense consists of using certain language in reference to, and in the presence of, another, the name of the person referred to, and of the person in whose presence the words were uttered, should be stated, if known, and if unknown that fact should be alleged;[37] but where the objectionable language is addressed to, and intended to apply to, a number of persons, it may be charged to have been addressed to any or all of them.[38]

E. Trial — 1. Evidence — a. Admissibility. Evidence of defendant's custom of indulging in the use of immoderate and vituperative language,[39] or his previous conduct as a common disturber of the public peace,[40] is admissible.

b. Sufficiency. It is sufficient to prove the substance of the language charged,[41] and evidence of the use of opprobrious and offensive epithets will sustain an indictment for using insulting language which, in its common acceptation, is calculated to cause a breach of the peace.[42] Where the offense is charged to have been committed in the several modes denounced proof of its commission in any one of such modes will be sufficient,[43] but proof that the offense was committed in the county of the prosecution is indispensable.[44]

2. Instructions. An instruction that there may be a conviction if defendant cursed the prosecuting witness in his presence and hearing is proper where the latter's testimony to that effect is uncontradicted,[45] but an instruction to acquit if the evidence was consistent with a breach of the peace by another is properly refused where such other might also be guilty.[46]

F. Judgment and Punishment. In the absence of statute the offense is punishable by fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the jury; but where a punishment is prescribed by statute a judgment in excess thereof is erroneous, although good at common law.[47] A judgment that defendant is guilty of provocation as charged is sufficient.[48]

II. Security to Keep the Peace.

A. Nature of Proceedings. The requirement of surety of the peace is preventive justice and consists in obliging those persons of whom there is a probable ground to suspect future misbehavior,[49] to stipulate with and to give full assurance to the public that such offense as is apprehended shall not happen, by finding pledges or securities for keeping the peace.[50] It is, however, to be observed that, strictly speaking, such proceedings are not criminal[51] or even quasi-

B. When Demandable — 1. In General. It may be stated generally that both at common law[53] and by statute surety of the peace may be required of any person who makes threats or menaces of such a character as to excite fear of actual harm or injury to person or estate.[54]

2. After Acquittal. After an acquittal upon an indictment and upon the evidence adduced at the trial defendant may be required to find sureties,[55] but should not be detained while articles of the peace against him are being prepared.[56]

Requiring in addition to punishment.—Under a statute permitting it (Kan. Crim. Code, § 242), a court may, in addition to the punishment adjudged for the commission of an offense, require defendant to give security that he will keep the peace, or be of good behavior, or both, for a term of years, or to stand committed until such security is given. peace is derived from the common law, and from statutory enactments, and is generally confided in justices of the peace and all others who ex officio are conservators of the peace, and in such as have been particularly designated by statute.[58] At common law, if justices acted in pursuance of a writ of supplicavit they were bound by the direction of the writ,[59] but on a complaint made to them in the first instance, the number and sufficiency of the sureties, the sum[60] and the time[61] for which the party might be bound were entirely within their discretion.[62] The powers and duties of magistrates in these respects are now generally regulated by statutes, which require them to exact surety of the peace on the presentation of a prescribed state of facts.[63]

E. Defenses. The fact that the threats were made conditionally will not affect the right to demand security if the fulfilment of the threats may be reasonably apprehended.[64] Neither is it a defense that just prior to the menaces complained of defendant had been informed that complainant had slandered the former's wife;[65] nor that defendant had been convicted of an attempt to provoke an assault,[66] or had been once put in jeopardy by a mistrial.[67] In England matters set forth in the articles of peace may not be controverted, nor can matters said to have been suppressed be supplied therein.[68]

F. Proceedings to Compel — 1. Affidavit, Articles, or Complaint[69] — a. Necessity For. A magistrate has no power to entertain a proceeding for security unless a proper complaint is first made.[70]

b. Particular Averments — (I) Of Threats and Fear — (A) Generally. The articles of peace must state in terms that the prosecutor was threatened, or must state facts from which threats may be inferred;[71] and must aver fear of the execution of the threats, stating the grounds upon which injury is apprehended.[72]

(B) In Alternative. An allegation of fear of defendant or of others acting at his instance is bad because in the alternative;[73] but an affidavit in the alternative as to the injuries apprehended,[74] or in which fear of injury to person, family, and property is stated disjunctively[75] is not objectionable.

(II) Negativing Malice. At common law[76] and sometimes by statute[77] complainant's affidavit is required to negative the idea that the proceeding is instituted maliciously or vexatiously.

c. Verification. The charge, which must be made upon oath,[78] may be sworn to before a notary public.[79]

2. Warrant.[80] The warrant should show that some threat was made, or should state circumstances from which the court can determine whether or not the fear expressed is well founded.[81]

It is sufficient to aver that prosecutor verily believes that he has just cause to fear violent injury to his person (Beckwith v. State, 21 Ind. 225); that affiant has just cause to fear, and does fear, that defendant "will kill and murder" him (Davis v. State, 138 Ind. 11, 37 N. The ancient common form of the warrant directed the officer to cause the party complained of to come before some justice, and to find sufficient surety, and if he shall refuse to do so to convey him immediately to prison, and the officer could imprison him by force of the same warrant. If, however, the warrant specially directed that the party should be brought before the justices who issued it, he was required to be taken before that justice. If the warrant was general he might be taken before any justice. 1 Hawkins P. C. c. 60, §§ 12, 13.

nizance bound themselves to the king, in a specified sum, to appear on a certain day[83] and in the meantime to keep the peace, either generally toward the latter and his liege people or particularly also with regard to the person demanding the security.[84] If the form of the bond or recognizance is prescribed by statute its failure to conform to the requirements,[85] or to the order of the court requiring its execution[86] will vitiate it, although if taken in substantial compliance with the statute mere errors of form will be disregarded.[87]

b. Return to Criminal Court. By an ancient English statute[88] the recognizance[89] was required to be returned to the next sessions that the party might be bound, and general provisions based on this statute and modifications thereof, to substantially the same effect, exist in some jurisdictions,[90] although it seems that in England justices may require sureties of the peace for a limited term according to their discretion and need not bind the party over to the next sessions.[91]

the security must be sufficient to support the commitment,[95] but the warrant need not state the particular crime or offense, or the nature of the bodily harm which the party threatened,[96] when the threatening language was used,[97] or mention the sum in which the party and his sureties are to be bound.[98] It should, however, state that the facts presented justified the exaction of the security,[99] the refusal or neglect to furnish the required security,[1] and the time for which the party is committed.[2]

b. Taking Security After Commitment. If a person committed by a court for want of surety afterward becomes able to furnish it, he should be taken by habeas corpus before a judge for that purpose.[3]

4. In Indiana the only issue to be tried is whether complainant had just cause for the fears stated in his affidavit (State v. Tow, 5 Ind. App. 261, 31 N. E. 1120), and if that fact be found affirmatively, surety must be required, though such cause may then have ceased (Stone v. State, 97 Ind. 345; State v. Steward, 48 Ind. 146; State v. Sawyer, 35 Ind. 379, the last case also holding that cessation of the fears may be considered in determining the recognizance to be given, but will not entitle defendant to an unconditional discharge).

In Iowa the fullest investigation may be had, and the inquiry is, whether any just reason to fear the commission of the offense still exists. The undertaking may be discharged or a new one required. If complainant appear and defendant do not a forfeiture may be declared. If defendant appear, or neither appear, the undertaking may be discharged, and costs awarded against defendant, although he demand a trial. State v. White, 47 Iowa 555; Gribble v. State, 3 Iowa 217.

In Missouri, under the statute of 1855, when the parties appear in the circuit court it is the duty of that court to examine the evidence, and the recognizance taken may be discharged or a new one taken as the circumstances may require. State v. Emnitz, 27 Mo. 521.

made against the complaining witness by defendant, and that such threats were communicated to the former.[6]

(II) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY. In proceedings of this character the doctrine of reasonable doubt has no application, but the facts of the threats, and whether or not the prosecuting witness has just cause to entertain the fears expressed are to be determined by the preponderance of the evidence.[7]

c. Instructions. An instruction which permits the jury to take into consideration the apprehension of complainant as to fear not expressed in his affidavit or within the issues, while erroneous, will not require reversal where the jury are subsequently informed of the proper issue to be tried.[8]

d. Province of Jury. In these proceedings the jurors are not the judges of the law, as in prosecutions strictly criminal, but must take the law from the judge,[9] and they may consider the fact that defendant did not testify in his own behalf.[10] It is a question for them under all the circumstances whether or not the language used was calculated to arouse anger or provoke a breach of the peace.[11]

e. Verdict. If the fear which the prosecutor states as the reason of the prosecution is to himself or his family, a verdict which is not in the alternative is not responsive to the issue,[12] and where the issue is whether or not the complaining witness has just cause to entertain the fears expressed by him a simple verdict of guilty is insufficient for the like reason.[13]

f. Costs. The power to require the payment of costs rests with the tribunal on whom devolves the duty of determining whether or not the accusation is true or false and placing the burden on whom it should rest.[14]

6. APPEAL AND REVIEW. Unless provided by statute[15] it has been held that no appeal lies from an order of a justice requiring a recognizance,[16] or dismissing the complaint;[17] but the action of the justice may be reviewed by certiorari or habeas corpus.[18] It has been held also that the judgments of magistrates in such proceedings simply furnish a prima facie presumption of probable cause,[19] and may be attacked collaterally and by parol evidence.[20]

G. Forfeiture — 1. Grounds. A special recognizance may be forfeited by actual violence or menace to the person upon whose complaint the party was held, and, if the recognizance is general, by any unlawful action whatsoever, which is either an actual breach of the peace or tends thereto;[21] but it seems there may not be a forfeiture for offenses which do not involve violence or injury to any individual,[22] for hurts done through negligence or mischance,[23] or for a breach of the peace committed without the state.[24] When two execute a joint bond, instead of separate bonds, a breach by one will work a forfeiture.[25]

2. Necessity of Previous Conviction. A judicial conviction of the principal is sometimes a prerequisite to a forfeiture;[26] but where the commission of a prescribed offense will itself work a forfeiture, which may be ascertained by a jury without a previous conviction, the court may determine the breach without waiting for a trial or conviction.[27]

3. Defenses. All defenses available to the principal are available to his sureties.[28] Mere errors in proceedings prior to the execution of the recognizance,[29] or the fact that defendant was convicted and punished for the offense constituting the breach[30] are not available.

4. Enforcement — a. Jurisdiction. Jurisdiction to entertain actions to recover penalties or forfeitures will authorize the court to entertain proceedings on a peace bond.[31]

b. Proceedings — (i) In General. If a breach occurs before the term at which the recognizance is returnable it may be proceeded on prior to that term,[32] and where a bond is taken instead of a recognizance as required by statute it may be enforced as a common-law bond.[33] A complaint,[34] although informal and somewhat in the form of an information, is sufficient if it contains facts substantially sufficient to constitute a cause of action.[35]

(ii) Scire Facias. Where the proceedings are by scire facias, which is permissible in some jurisdictions,[36] its issue is regarded as a judicial act.[37] Such a writ must be sufficient in form,[38] but mere defects in the issue which do not go to the merits are waived by appearance and the interposition of other defenses.[39]

c. Right to Jury. Except a summary mode of procedure is prescribed it seems that defendant is entitled to a jury trial.[40]

d. Evidence. If the record fails to show the evidence on which the bond was exacted it will be presumed that it was sufficient to justify its requirement.[41]

e. Judgment.[42] Judgment may be entered for the penalty without impaneling a jury to compute the amount,[43] and it is not necessary to enter up a formal judgment reciting the parties' names and the amount of the recovery.[44]

I. DEFINITION.

Bribery is the voluntary giving or receiving of anything of value in corrupt payment for an official act done or to be done.[1]

II. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

A. In General — 1. THE GIVING OR RECEIVING. Any attempt to influence an officer in his official conduct by the offer of a reward or pecuniary consideration constitutes the offense of bribery, and the crime is complete without the tender or production of the money;[2] and personal participation is not necessary, the accomplishment of the act through the agency of others being sufficient.[3]

1. 2 Bishop New Crim. L. § 85 [quoted in State v. Pritchard, 107 N. C. 921, 929, 12 S. E. 50; Honaker v. Board of Education, 42 W. Va. 170, 175, 24 S. E. 544, 57 Am. St. Rep. 847, 32 L. R. A. 413].

Other definitions are: "The receiving or offering any undue reward by or to any person whatsoever, whose ordinary profession or business relates to the administration of public justice, in order to influence his behavior in office, and incline him to act contrary to the known rules of honesty and integrity." 1 Russell Crimes 154 [quoted in Watson v. State, 29 Ark. 299, 302]; State v. Davis, 2 Pennew. (Del.) 139, 141, 45 Atl. 394; Walsh v. People, 65 Ill. 58, 65, 16 Am. Rep. 569.

"The giving (and perhaps offering) to another, anything of value or any valuable service, intended to influence him in the discharge of a legal duty." Dishon v. Smith, 10 Iowa 212, 221.

"The crime of offering any undue reward or remuneration to any public officer, or other person intrusted with a public duty, with a view to influence his behavior in the discharge of his duty." State v. Miles, 89 Me. 142, 149, 36 Atl. 70.

"Bribery . . . is where a judge or other person concerned in the administration of justice takes any undue reward to influence his behavior in office." 4 Bl. Comm. 139 [quoted in Watson v. State, 29 Ark. 299, 302].

"The distinction between bribery and extortion seems to be that the former offence consists in offering a present or receiving one, the latter in demanding a fee or present by color of office." State v. Pritchard, 107 N. C. 921, 929, 12 S. E. 50. See, generally, EXTORTION.

3. People v. Kerr, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 674.

The words "directly or indirectly to offer or promise," etc., as used in Pa. Const. art. 3, § 30, have the same effect. Whenever an

Neither is a mutual or reciprocal agreement to commit the crime of bribery necessary.[4]

2. THE THING GIVEN OR RECEIVED. In order to constitute the offense there must be the promise, gift, or acceptance of money or other thing of value.[5]

3. INTENT. It is essential to the offense that the offer, promise, or gift must have been made or accepted with the corrupt intent to influence the action of the officer in the discharge of his official duties.[6]

4. THE OFFICER — a. In General. It seems that at common law the offense of bribery could only be predicated of a reward given to a judge or other person concerned in the administration of public justice;[7] but the modern definitions of bribery clearly include as the subjects of it all persons whose official conduct is in any way connected with the administration of the government.[8] Such statutes offer is made indirectly it is in law as if it had been directly made. Com. v. Petroff, 2 Pearson (Pa.) 534, 8 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 212, 1 Ky. L. Rep. 132.

4. People v. Squires, 99 Cal. 327, 33 Pac. 1092; State v. Dudoussat, 47 La. Ann. 977, 17 So. 685; Com. v. Murray, 135 Mass. 530; Com. v. Dietrich, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 515. But see Newman v. People, 23 Colo. 300, 47 Pac. 278, where it was held that to constitute bribery the act of at least two persons is essential; of him who gives, and him who receives. The minds of the two must concur, and it is immaterial whether the giver makes the first advance, or gives money to get some personal advantage to himself.

Need not have present value.— To charge the jury in a trial for attempting to bribe a legislator that the thing offered or promised must have a value at the very time it is offered or promised, and while the bill is pending, is error but not to the prejudice of the defendant. It is a crime under Ohio Rev. Stat. § 6901, to offer or promise a thing valuable at that time, or which will be valuable, when, according to the promise, it is to be given or delivered. Watson v. State, 39 Ohio St. 123.

To give entertainments for the purpose of unduly influencing legislation is wholly bad in morals, but does not constitute the crime of bribery. Randall v. Evening News Assoc., 97 Mich. 136, 56 N. W. 361.

Guilty knowledge of recipient.— Under Mass. Pub. Stat. c. 205, § 9, it is not necessary that the recipient of the bribe shall know the purpose for which it is given in order to consummate the guilt of the briber. Com. v. Murray, 135 Mass. 530.

do not, however, abrogate the common law but are more comprehensive in their character.[9]

b. De Facto Officers. A person exercising the functions of an office de facto is subject to the statutes denouncing the crime of bribery.[10]

5. The Act Done or to Be Done. If the bribe be offered or received it is not essential that the act for which it is given be actually accomplished,[11] but it seems that the act must be one capable of being done.[12] Whether to offer a bribe to an officer to influence his conduct in a matter not within the scope of his official duty constitutes the offense will depend upon the provisions of the various statutes. On the one hand, it has been held immaterial whether the officer had or had not jurisdiction;[13] while on the other, it has been held no offense to offer a bribe for an act entirely outside the officer's official function.[14]

B. Attempt to Bribe. An attempt to bribe is at common law a misdemeanor, and the person making the offer is liable to indictment and punishment.[15]

the grounds of duplicity, repugnancy, or variance, as faults in these respects are fatal.[21]

B. Particular Averments — 1. Nature and Value of Bribe. It should be averred that defendant gave something of value or advantage, present or prospective, or some promise or undertaking, or did some act constituting the offense;[22] but the indictment need not allege the kind and value of the money,[23] or an offer of any specified sum.[24] the indictment need not allege that the contingency contemplated has arisen,[28] or the particular effect on the officer's conduct had in view;[29] or, in case of an offer or solicitation, that the officer was influenced thereby;[30] or that his action, if procured, would have had the desired result;[31] but under some statutes the indictment must allege that the officer had jurisdiction over the subject-matter in respect to which the bribe was offered, solicited, or given.[32]

5. SOLICITATION. An indictment against a public officer for soliciting a bribe need not set out the means of solicitation.[33]

V. DEFENSES.

A. Ignorance of Law Contracted Against. Ignorance of the existence of a specific statute against an offense is no defense to a prosecution against an officer for accepting a bribe not to perform his duty in the enforcement of the law against such offense.[34]

B. Instigation of Others. One who has actually accepted a bribe cannot excuse his act on the ground that it was instigated by others for the purpose of entrapping him.[35]

C. Lack of Authority. In a prosecution for offering a bribe to an officer who is acting as such under a statute, defendant cannot question the constitutionality of such statute,[36] nor can an officer de facto, prosecuted for accepting a bribe, raise the question as to his authority to act.[37]

D. Legality of Antecedent Proceedings. In a prosecution for bribery a defendant cannot impeach the legality of the proceedings in connection with which the bribe is offered, given, or accepted.[38]

E. Non-Enforceability of Contemplated Contract. In a prosecution

Eligibility for office.— An indictment under Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1470, for bribing an officer to appoint defendant to an office need not allege that defendant was eligible to said office, for the purpose of being appointed to which he gave the bribe. Florez v. State, 11 Tex. App. 102.

against an officer for accepting a bribe to influence him in his official action, and for entering into a contract in pursuance of such bribe, it is no defense that such contract was void and non-enforceable.[39]

F. Reputation of Accused. That the accused has always borne a good reputation for integrity is in his favor during the trial, but is no defense to the crime of bribery, if actually committed.[40]

G. Worthlessness of Bribe. The worthlessness of the bribe given or received is no defense in a prosecution therefor.[41]

VI. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES.

Where defendant contends that the prosecuting witness is an accomplice, it is admissible for such witness to testify upon such collateral issue, and to explain his conduct.[42]

VII. EVIDENCE.

A. Burden of Proof. As in other criminal cases, defendant is presumed to be innocent, and the burden of establishing his guilt by proving all the elements of the offense is upon the state.[43]

B. Admissibility — 1. In General — a. Acts and Declarations of Accused. It is permissible to show the various steps taken by the accused in committing the crime, including preliminary negotiations with the other parties,[44] and his acts subsequently to the offense charged, which tend to confirm that charge.[45] Other acts of bribery unconnected with the offense charged are inadmissible in evidence,[46] but where the prosecution is for offering to bribe an officer, subsequent offers made to the same officer, and with regard to the same subject-matter, are admissible.[47] It has been held that previous similar statements of the Illegality of note.— It is no defense to a prosecution for bribery under N. Y. Pen. Suppl. 674, where it was held that where the bribery was with the object of securing a street-railway franchise from the board of aldermen, evidence that those members who, by the testimony of an accomplice, were implicated in the conspiracy, voted against a resolution to sell the franchise at auction is competent in corroboration of the testimony of the accomplice.

W. 455, where it was held that under the allegations of an indictment alleging that defendant was paid a certain sum by one named "and others, whose names are to the jurors unknown," and under the peculiar circumstances of the case at issue, it was competent for the state to prove other acts of bribery than those alleged in the indictment, for the purpose of corroborating the principal witness upon material facts involved in the original contract of bribery, and also for the purpose of showing the system, plan, and design of the parties involved in the transaction alleged in the indictment.

47. Rath v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 142, 33 S. W. 229.

prosecuting witness were properly admitted in evidence in corroboration of his testimony.[48]

b. Documents and Records — (I) In General. Documents and records are admissible in evidence and may be read to the jury, in order to prove the alleged offense. Thus, the journal of a state senate has been admitted to prove the pendency of the matter with regard to which a senator was accused of bribery;[49] and the records of cases in which defendants were charged with attempted bribery of jurors, to show that the cause was pending[50] and that the jurors served therein.[51] Similarly it is permissible to introduce a previous indictment for the same offense, which has been quashed, in order to show that the pending prosecution is not barred by the statute of limitations.[52]

(II) Letters. A letter to the accused bearing upon the question of bribery is admissible in evidence, where a witness testifies that the accused showed it to him, and stated that the warrants therein listed were issued by him in consideration of money received from the person in whose favor they were issued.[53] Similarly in a prosecution for offering to receive a bribe, letters from an officer to his employer communicating the facts bearing upon the issue, being an incident of the business, and contemporaneous therewith, have been admitted as a part of the res gestæ.[54]

c. Opinions. Opinion evidence with respect to the advisability or non-advisability of the action with regard to which an officer is charged with accepting a bribe is inadmissible. The crime may be established as well by showing that the officer did his duty under the influence of a bribe as that he violated it.[55]

2. Business Condition of Parties. In a prosecution for accepting a bribe the business condition of the accused may be shown.[56] Similarly in a prosecution for giving a bribe, evidence is admissible to show that, at about the time of the alleged bribery, the corporation, in whose interest the bribe was given, raised the required amount of money, for which there was no apparent necessity for legitimate purposes and that the money did not appear to have been used for legitimate ends.[57]

3. Nature of Offense in Which Bribe Was Offered. It is competent, in a prosecution for attempted bribery of a witness, to show the general nature of the crime in connection with which the offer was made, in order to prove the materiality of the requested testimony.[58]

C. Weight and Sufficiency — 1. In General — a. Identity of Person Offering Bribe. On a charge of bribery the identity of the person offering the bribe need not be proved. It is sufficient if the agreement to accept a bribe is proved with some person, no matter whom.[59]

48. People v. Fong Ching, 78 Cal. 169, 20 Pac. 396.

Evidence of accused in other proceedings.— In New York it is provided by statute that a person connected with a case of bribery shall be a competent witness against others so offending, and may be compelled to attend and testify upon any trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation, but that such testimony shall not be used against such witness. People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 14 N. E. 319, 1 Am. St. Rep. 851 [reversing 45 Hun (N. Y.) 460], where it was held that testimony given before a legislative committee delegated to inquire generally into the truth of rumors, and charges of bribery in connection with the granting of street-railroad privileges was given in an "investigation" within the meaning of N. Y. Pen. Code, § 79.

b. Of Evidence of Decoy. The fact that the witness has acted as a detective or decoy apparently entering into the criminal plan, in order to detect and expose it, does not of itself render his evidence unworthy of belief,[60] but defendant may fully cross-examine him as to his connection with the case, and as to the names of all who were concerned in the alleged detection.[61]

c. Official Character of Officer. On a trial for bribery it is not necessary to introduce record evidence as to the election or appointment and qualification of the officer.[62]

d. Promise by Person Bribed. In a prosecution for giving a bribe, it is unnecessary to prove that the person bribed made any promise as to his future action.[63]

e. Value of Bribe. It is not necessary to prove the value of the bribe as laid in the indictment. It is sufficient merely to prove that it is of some value.[64]

2. In Prosecution For Soliciting Bribe. In a prosecution under a statute making it a crime to solicit a bribe it is not necessary to prove that anything was given to defendant, or that he solicited the bribe for his own use and intended to use it for his own purposes. The crime is complete when the solicitation is made.[65]

VIII. TRIAL.

A. Questions of Law and Fact. What constitutes bribery is a question of law for the court; whether under the evidence the crime has been committed is a question of fact for the jury.[66]

B. Instructions. It is the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to what constitutes the offense of bribery, and that, in order to a conviction, all the elements of the offense must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[67]

67. State v. Smith, 72 Vt. 366, 48 Atl. 647.

Character, profession, and vocation of witnesses.— It is erroneous to instruct the jury that where the witnesses are shown to have been active parties to the transaction they may consider the character, profession, and vocation of such witnesses in judging of the probability of their participating in such transaction, and whether they would have been likely to offer a bribe to an officer; and that in determining that as a fact they might judge of the character of the party alleged to have made the offer. People v. Edson, 68 Cal. 549, 10 Pac. 192.

Conduct of accused.— Where the conduct of the accused when arrested is shown by the evidence, it is proper to charge the jury that his conduct bore on the question of his acceptance of the bribe. State v. Smith, 72 Vt. 366, 48 Atl. 647, where it was also held that where the evidence in a prosecution for bribery showed that defendant proposed to conceal the crime when he was arrested, it was proper to charge that such proposal was evidence to prove his guilt.

Official character of person bribed.—In a prosecution for bribing an officer to appoint defendant to an office it is error to refuse to instruct the jury that it devolves upon the state to prove affirmatively and by competent evidence that defendant, within three years prior to the finding of the indictment, offered to pay or did actually pay to the officer money, gratuity, reward, or some other valuable consideration with the intent to induce or procure the said officer to appoint defendant to the office; and that at the time of Weight of evidence.—On a trial for bribing a witness to testify falsely the defense being that money was paid to the witness to dissuade him from giving false testimony, a charge that it is not a recognized custom of the country to subsidize the personal integrity of citizens to prevent them from lapsing into falsehood and perjury is error as usurping the powers of the jury. I. Definition and Nature.

A bridge is a structure of wood, iron, brick, or stone, ordinarily erected over a river, creek, pond, or lake; or over a ravine, railroad, canal, or other obstruction in a highway,[1] so as to make a continuous roadway, and afford to travelers a convenient passageway from one bank to the other.[2] While a bridge is a part of the highway which passes over it,[3] no definite rule can be laid down as to where

1. Distinction between meaning at common law and under statute.— So far at least as the duty to repair is concerned, the word "bridge" at common law was held to mean a structure across a stream or watercourse: it should be a structure super flumen vel cursum aquæ (see infra, III, A, 1, a, (I), (A)), and while our legislatures in the use of the term may clearly imply that its meaning is to be restricted to its common-law signification (Carroll County v. Bailey, 122 Ind. 46, 23 N. E. 672; Clark County v. Brod, 3 Ind. App. 585, 29 N. E. 430), it has been held that unless the import of the term was clearly limited by statute, it would mean any structure by which a highway was carried over a place (Whitall v. Gloucester County, 40 N. J. L. 302. See also State v. Pierce County, 71 Wis. 321, 37 N. W. 231). In Bridge Proprietors v. Hoboken Land, etc., Co., 1 Wall. (U. S.) 116, 17 L. ed. 571, after commenting upon the fact that old terms with well-defined meaning have been applied often to things totally new, it was held that a railroad bridge, erected merely for the transfer of trains, and being entirely unfit for vehicles, and unsafe for pedestrians, was not a bridge within the meaning of the term as used in 1790. Compare Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. Hartford, etc., R. Co., 17 Conn. 40, 42 Am. Dec. 716.

2. Carroll County v. Bailey, 122 Ind. 46, 48, 23 N. E. 672.

Other definitions are: "Any structure of wood, stone, brick or iron, raised over a river, pond, lake or across a valley." Madison County v. Brown, 89 Ind. 48, 52 [citing 3 American Cycl. art. Bridge; Webster Dict.].

"A building constructed over a river, creek or other stream, or over a ditch or other place, in order to facilitate the passage over the same." Whitall v. Gloucester County, 40 N. J. L. 302, 305 [citing Shearman & R. Negl. § 248].

"A structure for the purpose of connecting the opposite banks of a river, by means of certain materials, forming a road way from one side to the other." Brande Encycl. [quoted in Tolland v. Willington, 26 Conn. 578, 583].

"A structure, usually of wood, stone, brick, or iron, erected over a river or other watercourse, or over a chasm, railroad, etc., to make a passage-way from one bank to the other. Anything supported at the ends, which serves to keep some other thing from resting upon the object spanned, which forms a platform or staging over which something passes or is conveyed." Webster Dict. [quoted in Duncan v. State, 29 Fla. 439, 453, 10 So. 815].

It must afford a passageway for travelers and others over streams or other obstructions and a structure of stone or wood which spans the width of a stream, but is wholly inaccessible at either end, whatever it may be in architecture, is not a bridge either in law or common parlance. Sussex County v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 108, 35 Am. Dec. 530. The term "bridge," however, is a comprehensive one, and embraces every structure in the nature of a bridge, over any obstruction to the highway, whether a river, ditch, or other passage for water (Rusch v. Davenport, 6 Iowa 443 [citing Angell Highways, §§ 35–37]) regardless of its material or form of structure (Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. Hartford, etc., R. Co., 17 Conn. 40, 56, 42 Am. Dec. 716, where the court said: "It is a structure of wood, iron, brick or stone, ordinarily erected over a river brook or lake, for the more convenient passage of persons and beasts, and the transportation of baggage; and whether it is a wide raft of logs floating upon the water, and bound together with withs, or whether it rests on piles of wood, or stone abutments, or arches, it is still a bridge." See also Bridge Proprietors v. Hoboken Land, etc., Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 503, 510).

Bridges are either public or private.— Public bridges are such as form a part of the highway, according to their character as foot, horse, or carriage bridges, for the accommodation of the public generally, with or without payment of toll; while a private bridge is one erected by one or more private persons for their own use and convenience. Black L. Dict. But whether a bridge is public or private depends more upon the use to which it is subjected than upon whom the builder was. When erected by a private individual for private purposes it will not become public merely by being used by the public, unless it is of public utility (Rex v. Yorkshire West Riding, 5 Burr. 2594, 2 East 342, Lofft. 238, 2 W. Bl. 685, 6 Rev. Rep. 439), but if the bridge is of public utility, and is subjected to public use, it then becomes public, and as such must be repaired by the public (Whitall v. Gloucester County, 40 N. J. L. 302; Rex v. Bucks County, 12 East 192, 11 Rev. Rep. 347; Rex v. Glamorgan County, 2 East 356, note a, 6 Rev. Rep. 450 note. And see Reg. v. Southampton County, 19 Q. B. D. 590, 16 Cox C. one terminates and the other begins.[4] While both at common law and usually under our statutes,[5] a bridge includes the abutments and approaches necessary to make it accessible and convenient for public travel,[6] the determination of the question of how much of the embankment constitutes the approach, so as to be a part of the bridge, is for the jury.[7] of the highway would be an acceptance of the bridge.

Louisiana.— Oliff v. Shreveport, 52 La. Ann. 1203, 27 So. 688, holding that while the bridge in question was but an extension of the highway and was a part thereof, yet there was a distinction in that instance between the terms "highway" and "public road," and that a bridge built over a navigable stream by a railroad was not necessarily open to the travel of the general public, although constructed in a manner to admit of such travel.

Statutory exception.— The statute may, however, use the term "road" or "highway" in such sense that it is plainly not intended to include bridges. Union Drainage Dist. v. Highway Com'rs, 87 Ill. App. 93.

4. The question becomes one of importance where, as at common law, and as is sometimes the case in this country, the duty of maintaining highways and the duty of maintaining bridges is placed upon different bodies. See Whitall v. Gloucester County, 40 N. J. L. 302.

At common law the respective limits of each seems not to have been fixed with absolute certainty until the enactment of 22 Hen. VIII, c. 5, which was, however, held to be an affirmance of the common law, and which fixed the line at three hundred feet back from the bridge structure at each end. 5. Statutory meaning not fixed.— The meaning of the term "bridge" when used in the statute cannot, however, be said to have a certain, fixed, and definite scope; but as to whether or not the approaches, causeways, and abutments at the end of the bridge are included within the term must be determined by the intent which, in view of all the circumstances, it was likely the term was intended to include in each particular case: the scope of the term being evidenced by all the words used, and not simply by one word. II. ESTABLISHMENT AND ERECTION.

A. At Common Law. At common law bridges seem to have been built either by the liberality of individuals or under authority of special acts of parliament,[8] counties being bound only to their repair,[9] and not to their erection.[10]

B. Under Legislative Enactment — 1. In General. It will thus be seen that the erection of public bridges in this country[11] is a matter dependent almost exclusively upon statutory enactments,[12] the right of the legislature to provide for the building of such structures being limited only by the existence of some prior contract made by it,[13] the provisions of the federal constitution relative to commerce,[14] or by some constitutional inhibition.[15] The usual method of exercis-no part of the bridge proper or of the approach to the bridge.

Such was the common-law rule before the passage of 22 Hen. VIII, c. 5, Lord Ellenborough observing in Rex v. York County West Riding, 7 East 588, that he considered it to have been laid down long ago by Lord Coke, that the three hundred feet of highway at the ends of the bridge were to be taken as parts of the bridge itself; but that as in some cases the limit was uncertain, the statute was designed to make it exact.

An instruction which affects to submit this issue to the jury, but only directs them to find whether the accident was upon an approach to the bridge without finding that such approach was part of the bridge is erroneous. Newcomb v. Montgomery County, 79 Iowa 487, 44 N. W. 715.

8. State v. Canterbury, 28 N. H. 195, 230 [citing Woolrich Ways, 963], where it is said: "No trace has been found of any indictment for neglect to build a new bridge by such description."

In England, by the Great Charter (9 Hen. III, c. 15) no town or freeman could be compelled to make new bridges, where none had before been, except by act of parliament. Under such act they may be erected and maintained by corporations chartered for the purpose, by counties, or in whatever other mode parliament may prescribe. Bouvier L. Dict.

9. See infra, III, A, 1, a, (I), (A).

10. Sussex County v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 108, 116, 35 Am. Dec. 530 [citing Rex v. Devon County, 14 East 477, 13 Rev. Rep. 285; Roscoe Ev. § 246]. Compare Dennis v. Maynard, 15 Ill. 477.

11. "Different nations, according to their general frame of government, adopt different modes of providing roads and bridges. In modern France, for example, a highly centralized despotism, the State is everything. Their municipal institutions are without a democratic element, or the power of independent local self-government. The central power governs and regulates everything. It provides amusements, constructs roads and bridges, controls trade, inspects manufactures, &c.— the only agency of the people being the poor privilege of paying the expense. But under our decentralized system it is entirely different. Here each local constituency chooses its own officers, each town, city, road-district, school-district, and county administers its own affairs. This is the vital principle of American liberty, the distinguishing feature of our system of government, and is so regarded by political philosophers and distinguished jurists." Barrett v. Brooks, 21 Iowa 144, 151.

12. Legislative permission is necessary when the stream is navigable, when the state owns the bed of the stream, or when the right to take toll is desired (Allen v. Monmouth County, 13 N. J. Eq. 68; Ft. Plain Bridge Co. v. Smith, 30 N. Y. 44; Wright v. Nagle, 101 U. S. 791, 25 L. ed. 921), and the mere fact that an individual or company owns the land adjoining the stream does not of itself give the right to erect a bridge across the same (Enfield Toll Bridge v. Hartford, etc., R. Co., 17 Conn. 40, 42 Am. Dec. 716; Hudson v. Cuero Land, etc., Co., 47 Tex. 56, 26 Am. Rep. 289); but if the objection be that the bed of the stream belongs to the state, so long as the state officers make no objections, an individual or corporation will not be heard to complain on that ground (Ft. Plain Bridge Co. v. Smith, 30 N. Y. 44).

13. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 19 Fed. Cas. No. 10,953, 18 Int. Rev. Rec. 142, construing the state of New Jersey's contract with the Delaware & Raritan Canal Co., and holding that it did not preclude the former from afterward passing an act providing for the bridging of the Raritan river.

14. Dietrich v. Schremms, 117 Mich. 298, 302, 75 N. W. 618, where the court said: "Subject to this limitation [Mich. Const. art. 18, § 4, which forbids the bridging of a navigable stream without authority from the board of supervisors of the county where the bridge is located], and the limitation imposed by the Constitution and laws of the United States in relation to navigable streams, the legislature has the right to enact laws providing for the erection, maintenance, and ownership of bridges over the streams of this State." See, generally, COMMERCE; NAVIGABLE WATERS.

15. Acts held constitutional.— A law providing for the erection of a bridge within a city, at the cost of the county, with a provision that it should remain under the control of the county commissioners, who should appoint a superintendent of construction, has been held not to take from the city the control of its streets in contravention of Kan. Const. art. 12, §§ 1, 5, giving them such con-

ing this authority is to erect the bridge at the expense of the state,[16] by general law to impose the duty of erection upon counties, towns, or cities,[17] or by chartering companies for the purpose.[18]

2. By Municipal Authorities — a. In General — (1) Counties. The power of the governing board of counties with regard to the building of bridges, their right or duty to construct them within the limits of a city or other municipality,[19] and the amounts which they may expend therefor[20] are matters which must be trol. State v. Shawnee County, 57 Kan. 267, 45 Pac. 616. So, too, an act requiring a county in which a bridge built and maintained for the public is situated, to pay to particular towns sums of money already paid by them, pursuant to law, for its construction, is a constitutional exercise of legislative power. Agawam v. Hampden, 130 Mass. 528. And a statutory regulation of the manner of constructing a bridge, and an apportionment of expenses to be borne by the several counties in whose territorial limits it lies, is not an infraction of a constitutional provision requiring all taxes to be equal and to be levied on a cash valuation; nor would it conflict with a provision declaring that counties shall have such powers of local taxation as may be prescribed by law. Guilder v. Dayton, 22 Minn. 366. For other cases where the constitutionality of legislative provisions regulating the construction of bridges has been questioned see Granby v. Thurston, 23 Conn. 416; Brayton v. Fall River, 124 Mass. 95; Atty.-Gen. v. Cambridge, 16 Gray (Mass.) 247; Mehling v. Cuyahoga County, 8 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 328, 6 Ohio N. P. 421.

Police power.— It may also be said that the legislative regulation of bridge building properly falls within the police power of the state, and, in the absence of any particular clause of the constitution, the right is undeniable. Plecker v. Rhodes, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 795.

16. Young v. Harrison, 6 Ga. 130.

17. Rapalje & L. L. Dict.

Establishment by municipal authorities see infra, II, B, 2.

A general statutory power to lay out highways includes the power to construct bridges necessary for the crossing of streams which intersect such highways (Brown v. Preston, 38 Conn. 219), unless complete and separate statutory provision is made for the building of the bridges apart, in which case the ruling would be otherwise (Wrought-Iron Bridge Co. v. Hendricks County, 19 Ind. App. 672, 48 N. E. 1050. See also Atty.-Gen. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 27 N. J. Eq. 631).

18. Rapalje & L. L. Dict.

Erection by virtue of franchise see infra, II, B, 3.

19. Right to construct within city.— The question as to whether county commissioners may construct or assist in the construction of a bridge within the corporate limits of a city is essentially a statutory one, and adjudged cases in one state afford little aid in another except to illustrate the principles which should be applied in the construction of the various statutes. Where a county and a city had been given full power and control over highways and over streets and bridges respectively, it has been held that the county could not construct a bridge within a city which was accessible over streets and highways controlled by such city. Nelson v. Garfield County, 6 Colo. App. 279, 40 Pac. 474. And see People v. La Salle County, 111 Ill. 527; Newark v. Jones, 16 Ohio Cir. Ct. 563, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 196. On the other hand it has been held that granting to a city council the power to supervise and control all of its public highways, bridges, etc., within the city does not oust the county of the right to erect free bridges across rivers on public highways within the limits of a city. Bell v. Foutch, 21 Iowa 119 [followed in Skinner v. Henderson, 26 Fla. 121, 7 So. 464, 8 L. R. A. 55; Oskaloosa Steam-Engine Works v. Pottawattamie County, 72 Iowa 134, 33 N. W. 605]. See also Whitall v. Gloucester County, 40 N. J. L. 302. The case of Greenman v. Mower County, 62 Minn. 397, 64 N. W. 1142, is not an authority for either of the above views, as it was expressly decided upon provisions of a special statute.

Right to construct within borough.— The construction by a county of a bridge within the limits of a borough, such borough to contribute a part of the expenses, is within the meaning of the statute relating to county bridges, although reference is made to townships only, and not to boroughs. In re Waverly Borough Bridge, 3 Pa. Dist. 559, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 669.

20. Kansas City Bridge, etc., Co. v. Wyandotte County, 35 Kan. 557, 11 Pac. 360 (holding that while, under the laws of that state providing that the county commissioners could make no appropriation for the building of a bridge, the cost of which was to exceed two thousand dollars, until the question of making such appropriation had been submitted at a general election, a county could not evade a submission by building a bridge in separate sections, each at a cost less than two thousand dollars, they were not prevented from building, at an expense less than two thousand, a span of a bridge, the whole of which cost over two thousand, if the bridge was otherwise completed at the expense of another); Follmer v. Nuckolls County, 6 Nebr. 204 (holding that all contracts for the improvement of roads must be let to the lowest competent bidder, including contracts for the erection and repair of permanent bridges and culverts; and that county commissioners had no authority, either personally or by agent, to erect bridges on the credit of the county); Lehigh County v. Kleckner, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 181. See also Potter v. Davis, Lalor (N. Y.) 394, construing the New York act of determined largely by the application of general principles of municipal law in conjunction with the respective legislative enactments from which the powers and duties of the county are derived.[21] It may be said, however, that the expediency of the construction rests largely in the administrative discretion of the county officials,[22] whose decision as to whether the public convenience demands the erection of a bridge is conclusive in the absence of a showing of fraud or bad faith on their part.[23]

(II) Other Municipalities. In some jurisdictions the building of public bridges is expressly intrusted to the towns, townships, or other municipalities within whose limits they are necessary;[24] while in others such matters have been 1840, by which a loan was made to the towns of Wilna and Champion to enable them to build a bridge, and holding that the act did not limit the expenditure to the amount loaned.

A rule, based on a county council, for the construction of a wooden bridge at a small expense, will not permit, without other orders, a construction of an iron bridge, costing a much greater amount. Mégantic Corp. v. Nelson Tp., 17 Quebec Super. Ct. 87.

Damages to the owners of land occasioned by the construction of a bridge and highway across a river are to be included within the statutory provision that the expense of the same shall not exceed a certain amount. Montague Paper Co. v. Burrows, 121 Mass. 88.

When authorized to purchase a bridge at its "true value" a board of county commissioners has no authority to pay the original cost of the construction, if the bridge has evidently deteriorated in value. State v. Pierce, 52 Kan. 521, 35 Pac. 19.

21. The power should be definitely expressed and will not be extended by unnecessary implication. Thus a special act of the legislature conferring upon a city authority to erect a bridge over a navigable stream does not by implication authorize the county commissioners to make such erection should the city refuse to do so. In re Belfast, 52 Me. 529. So, too, N. C. Code (1898), § 2014, which authorizes county commissioners to establish roads and ferries, does not give them authority to accept and maintain as a public charge a private bridge leading to a private road. Greenleaf v. Pasquotank County, 123 N. C. 30, 31 S. E. 264. Neither can the commissioners, under a statute authorizing them to levy a tax, provide for the building of bridges in a township, advertise for bids, let contracts for the work on behalf of the township, or delegate to the township the power to use the money to construct the bridge. Act authorizing confers a continuing power. —An act authorizing the board of freeholders of a certain county to build and maintain a bridge at a certain point, at their discretion, does not confer a temporary authority only, but a continuing power, which is not lost by failure of the then existing board to build such bridge. Tucker v. Burlington County, 1 N. J. Eq. 282.

23. Bingham v. Marion County, 55 Ind. 113; McKinley v. Union County, 29 N. J. Eq. 164. And see Daviess County v. State, 141 Ind. 187, 40 N. E. 686, construing Ind. Rev. Stat. (1894), § 3275, which provided that "whenever in the opinion of the county commissioners, the public convenience shall require that a bridge should be repaired or built over any water-course" they should direct the same to be done, in conjunction with the Indiana act of 1885, § 4, which provided that all bridges costing more than five hundred dollars "to be built within the corporate limits of any city or town" should be built by the county commissioners, and paid for out of the same funds as other bridges, and holding that mandamus would not issue at the suit of a city to compel county commissioners to construct a bridge within its limits, if its construction involved simply a question of public convenience and was not an absolute necessity.

The recommendations of two successive grand juries that a public bridge be built in a needed place does not render the building of it a matter of such absolute duty that mandamus will lie against the county officer whose duty it is to proceed with the construction, the code having invested him with a discretion in such premises. Patterson v. Taylor, 98 Ga. 646, 25 S. E. 771.

24. Whitcomb v. Reed, 24 Nebr. 50, 37 N. Co. Ct. 129 (holding that under the Pennsylvania road act of 1836, § 31, which provided that it should be the duty of township supervisors in making and repairing public roads "also to make and maintain sufficient bridges over all small creeks and rivulets and deep gullies, when the same should be necessary for the ease and safety of travelers," the supervisors must, where the public highway crosses creeks or rivulets, provide for the ease and safety of held to be within the general scope of their powers.[25] Generally speaking, however, the extent of the powers of such municipalities with regard to their bridges is dependent strictly upon the statute.[26]

b. Observance of Prescribed Procedure. There is no uniformity among the various states as to the prescribed procedure which must be adhered to by the officials of a county or other municipality to render their acts regarding the erection of bridges regular and binding.[27] The prescribed procedure should, how-pedestrians when practicable, and if the expense be not too great, must erect and maintain foot-bridges for their accommodation).

26. In the absence of statutory authority a city cannot erect and operate a toll-bridge. Nor would the provisions of its charter authorizing it to improve its sidewalks, alleys, and streets and to make by-laws necessary for safety and health give it such authority. Clark v. Des Moines, 19 Iowa 199, 87 Am. Dec. 423. But when a city had full statutory power to construct an intended bridge, a provision that if private persons contribute enough to build a more convenient one such a one shall be built does not render the acts of the council invalid. Kelley v. Kennard, 60 N. H. 1. And see Gordon v. Strong, 3 N. Y. App. Div. 395, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 922 [reversing 16 Misc. (N. Y.) 420, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 449, 74 N. Y. St. 72], holding that the commissioners appointed under N. Y. Laws (1895), c. 789, § 5, to build a bridge between the cities of New York and Brooklyn could agree, in the purchase of the rights of a bridge company, the location of whose bridge interfered with the location selected by the commissioners, to construct their bridge with tracks for the exclusive use of elevated railroads.

Giving county officials opportunity to be heard.— While highway commissioners may determine the necessity for, and the location of, a bridge and make arrangements for its construction, and may, in certain instances, compel the county board to aid in its construction, they have not authority to determine at all times the particular character and price of the bridge, without first giving the county officials an opportunity to be heard. Mercer County v. New Boston, 13 Ill. App. 274.

Implied authority to build.— The statutory power and duty of a highway commissioner to repair a highway may properly include the implied power to build a new bridge, where such bridge is merely a part of the highway of the town, and is absolutely necessary to render the highway at all times passable. Huggans v. Riley, 125 N. Y. 88, 25 N. E. 993, 34 N. Y. St. 458 [affirming 51 Hun (N. Y.) 501, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 282, 21 N. Y. St. 706].

Limited to existing highways.— The authority of the commissioner of highways to build bridges may be limited to those on existing highways. Mather v. Crawford, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 564. See also Huggans v. Riley, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 501, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 282, 21 N. Y. St. 706 [affirmed in 125 N. Y. 88, 25 N. E. 993, 34 N. Y. St. 458], holding that although the commissioner exceeds his authority in making a contract for the erection of a bridge, before the highway of which the bridge will form a part has been laid out, yet after such highway has been located, he may cause the bridge to be constructed at the point of intersection with the stream, and thus carry out the former contract.

Repairing before building.— Under the Illinois law, the highway commissioners of a town have discretionary power to first repair roads or bridges before they can be compelled to construct new bridges. People v. McLean County, 118 Ill. 239, 8 N. E. 684.

27. In Minnesota Stat. (1894), §§ 1894–1902, have no application to county commissioners so far as to make it their duty to advertise for bids, or to let the contract to the lowest bidder. Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co. v. Aitkin County, 69 Minn. 297, 72 N. W. 123. For construction of Minn. Spec. Laws (1870), c. 100, concerning the building of bridges see Guilder v. Dayton, 22 Minn. 366, holding that under that statute the commissioners are judges of their own inability to act, and their declination and appointment of substitutes is conclusive.

In New Jersey it has been held that, in the absence of statute, the county is not restricted to the erection of bridges on streams having a perennial source, but may bridge watercourses created by surface water. McKinley v. Union County, 29 N. J. Eq. 164.

In Pennsylvania the road law of 1836 (Brightly Purd. Dig. Pa. (1894), p. 1891), concerning the erection of bridges, has been continued up to the present time and has been the subject of no small amount of litigation. Under this act viewers are appointed who must report to the court, grand jury, and commissioners of the county, who consider the necessity and feasibility of the bridge's erection; and, if it appear that such bridge would be too expensive for the township or townships, it is entered on record as a county bridge. The act also provides that in all cases of views mentioned in the act the court shall, on the petition of any person interested, direct a second view or review for the same purpose, and it is held that such review is a matter of right. In re Bedford Bridge, 72 Pa. St. 42. The commissioners' approval of the bridge as a county bridge should be entered on the record in the quarter sessions (Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Lawrence County, 198 Pa. St. 1, 47 Atl. 955); and it is said to be the better practice to permit the report of the viewers to lie over for one term, or that the court shall, by rule, provide that the report may be acted on at the first term sub-ever, be pursued with reasonable diligence,[28] and in the manner prescribed by the statute.[29] A decision to construct a bridge and the appointment of a committee to contract therefor is not such a judicial act as cannot be reviewed at a subsequent meeting, no action having been taken by the committee which involved the rights of third parties.[30]

c. Fund For Construction — (i) How Raised. The necessary funds must be procured either by appropriation or by taxes or assessments for that purpose;[31] the legality of the proceeding depending in each case upon the existence of a statute authorizing the raising of funds for this purpose and a due compliance with such statute when the right so authorized is sought to be exercised.[32] It ject until the next term to exceptions and review (In re Bedford Bridge, 72 Pa. St. 42). Inasmuch as the grand jury, the county commissioners, and the court may be properly considered as representatives of the taxpayers, exceptions to the confirmation of the report of a jury of review for a county bridge on the ground of expense will be dismissed (In re Shoemakerville Bridge, 2 Del. Co. (Pa.) 479); and where the regularity of the proceedings under this act by which a bridge is built is not questioned for fourteen years it is then too late to attack their validity (Myers v. Com., 110 Pa. St. 217, 1 Atl. 264). The court, grand jury, and commissioners are intended to act as a check on each other, and when either body disapproves the proceedings must end. In re Pequea Creek Bridge, 68 Pa. St. 427. Moreover, if it appear on the record of the court that the foreman of the grand jury which recommended the building of the county bridge was also one of the original petitioners the court will not approve the report. In re Nescopeck Bridge, 120 Pa. St. 288, 14 Atl. 419; In re County Bridge, 3 Kulp (Pa.) 196; In re Pottstown Bridge, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 334. The act does not give the grand jury any authority to designate the kind of bridge to be built, or the material of which it shall be composed, and a direction that it be constructed of iron is not binding on the county commissioners. In re Rush Creek Bridge, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 305. As the county commissioners are required to obtain in good faith an estimate as to the probable cost, which estimate they cannot exceed, if they let the contract for the construction of the bridge without such estimate and thereafter procure an estimate merely to meet the letter of the law and at once relet the contract to the same party at the same price the contract is not legal. Bradford County v. Horton, 6 Lack. Leg. N. (Pa.) 306. Where there is a change of the original plan there must be a new estimate. Lehigh County v. Kleckner, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 181. Substantial compliance with statute.— A notice published by a board of county commissioners of their intention "to appropriate money to build the bridge" is a substantial compliance with a statute that "it shall be unlawful for any board of county commissioners to make an appropriation for building any bridge, unless notice of the intention to build such bridge has first been published." Kansas City Bridge, etc., Co. v. Wyandotte County, 35 Kan. 557, 11 Pac. 360. So, too, a vote by a town board to build a new bridge, followed by a subsequent vote to adjourn for one week, such resolution containing no intimation that the decision to rebuild was not final, amounts to a consent within the statute permitting the highway commissioners to rebuild the bridge only upon the consent of the town board. See also State v. Wood County, 72 Wis. 629, 40 N. W. 381, holding that under a statute providing that "any such board may annually levy on the taxable property of the county a county road tax, not exceeding eight thousand dollars, which shall be expended under their direction in making culverts, grading, graveling, ditching, or otherwise improving such highways," does not authorize the levy of a tax for the building of a bridge over a navigable river.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bridges," § 24.

An appropriation is presumptively valid when made by a board of supervisors for the construction of a county bridge, although it does not appear on what road the bridge is located. Stockle v. Silsbee, 41 Mich. 615, 2 N. W. 900.

A clerical error, by which the amount of an assessment is increased beyond the estimated expense, does not vitiate it if it had been properly and legally made. People v. Rochester, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 142.

What constitutes diversion from intended use.— Where a fund is raised under an act of the legislature for the future maintenance and repair of a certain bridge, it is not a diversion of the funds from their appointed uses for a subsequent session of the legislature to provide that such a part of the funds as are necessary shall be used for the construction of draws in the bridge. Dow v. Wakefield, 103 Mass. 267.

Time of making assessment.— Where the charter of a city prohibited the common council from taking lands, etc., until damages for such taking were paid, it was held that the common council might nevertheless make an assessment for the erection of a bridge before title was acquired to the land necessary therefor; the proceedings in making the assessment and proceedings to acquire title to lands being distinct and independent. People v. Rochester, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 142. And see Baltimore v. Stoll, 52 Md. 435; State v. Hamilton County, 5 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 471, 6 Am. L. Rec. 106, the latter case holding that, under the Ohio act of May 4, 1877, which directed a levy of a county tax for a bridge in a city, provided a certain railroad should bear such part of the expenses as might be agreed upon by it and the city, the act intended that only the cost above the amount estimated by the railroad should be paid by the county and that no obligation arose on the part of the county until the city and railroad reached an agreement.

33. Bell v. Foutch, 21 Iowa 119 [followed in Barrett v. Brooks, 21 Iowa 144].

The mere misnomer of an otherwise valid appropriation will not invalidate it. Hence, while the word "donate" generally means giving without any consideration and gratuitously, yet if the clear import and language of a resolution by a town board show that it was intended that the town should pay a consideration for the construction of a bridge for the public use, the use of the word "donate" will not avoid the resolution by indicating a "gift," which of course the town has no authority to make. Goodhue v. Beloit, 21 Wis. 636.

34. Thus where a county was authorized to levy a special tax only for the erection of "necessary bridges," a railroad bridge to be used by a corporation distinct from the county does not come within the meaning of such regulation, and any special tax for the erection of such a bridge is unlawful. Garland v. Montgomery County, 87 Ala. 223, 6 So. 402. See also Skinner v. Henderson, 26 Fla. 121, 7 So. 464, 8 L. R. A. 55, holding that the building of a bridge in a town, as a completion of one of its streets, which was not a county highway, and where such bridge will not be of benefit to the inhabitants of the county outside of the town, was not a "county purpose," for which alone such county was authorized by the constitution to assess and impose taxation. Nor would the power given to towns to raise money for "necessary charges" authorize them to levy a tax for the discharge of a contract entered into by them with a corporation of a toll-bridge for the free passage of the bridge by the citizens of such towns. Bussey v. Gilmore, 3 Me. 191.

(II) Contribution to — (A) In General. At common law the counties or towns benefited by the erection of a bridge were under no obligation to contribute to the expense of its construction.[35] The subject is, however, one clearly within the legislative control,[36] and the burden may be apportioned at its discretion;[37] it being no infringement on the right to local self-government to require towns or counties specially benefited by a bridge to contribute to the expense of its construction, although it be entirely without their territory.[38] Such

To same effect see Defiance County v. Croweg, 24 Ohio St. 492, holding that the building of a new bridge where one became dangerous by decay is not the "repairing" of a bridge within the meaning of the statute, and if the expense exceeds a certain amount the statute prescribing the procedure relative to the building of a bridge must be complied with.

The manner in which this power shall be exercised, and the means and instrumentalities to be employed, are largely within the discretion of the Legislature."

Vermont.— Grand Isle v. Kinney, 70 Vt. 381, 41 Atl. 130, holding that the Vermont act of 1888, making an appropriation toward a bridge provided a like amount was raised by a certain town aided by other towns in the county and by individual appropriation, did not cast on the town the burden of constructing the bridge unaided.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bridges," § 17.

Manner of making apportionment.— The usual procedure for the apportionment of the expense of erection among the towns or townships benefited by a bridge is to allow the commissioners either of the county, or those specially appointed for that purpose, to determine the relative proportion to be borne by such bodies. Under Vt. Acts (1882), No. 16, the report of such commissioner is subject to revision by the county court. Sharon v. Strafford, 56 Vt. 421. In Rockingham v. Westminster, 24 Vt. 288, it was held that commissioners appointed under the statute to apportion to towns the share each should bear in the construction of bridges or roads, where the expense would be too great for one town to bear, cannot make an apportionment in specific sums of money to be paid by each town, but should settle and define the ratio of expense to which each would be subjected; and where such commissioners found the expense of construction to be two thousand eight hundred and ninety dollars, and apportioned six hundred dollars to one town and one hundred and fifty dollars to another town the county court, in passing upon the report, regarded the amounts not to be what each was actually obliged to pay, but as settling the ratio under which they were liable in the apportionment, and apportioned the sum that six hundred dollars bears to one thousand eight hundred and ninety dollars in the one case, and the sum that one hundred and fifty dollars bears to one thousand eight hundred and ninety dollars in the other.

The "relative proportion" which, under Mass. Stat. (1868), c. 309, § 8, the county commissioners were empowered to determine should be "borne by the county, and any of the cities and towns lying near to, or contiguous to, said bridges, . . . as in their judgment, may be just and equitable," does not require an absolute mathematical ratio. But it is within the power of such commissioners to fix the proportion and assign to each town a specific part, if, in their judgment, that was just and equitable; and under this statute, it is not incumbent upon them to impose any expense upon the county, but they may assign it wholly to the towns or cities within which the bridge was situated. Com. v. Newburyport, 103 Mass. 129.

Contribution from township to county.— Under an Indiana statute which provides that if the probable cost of erecting a bridge shall be more than a certain sum the trustees of the township in which the bridge is to be located shall notify the county commissioners of the necessity of such bridge, and, if the commissioners proceed to construct it, the township shall be liable to a certain proportion of the cost, the county cannot build the bridge of its own motion, and then demand contribution of the township. It is only when the township takes the initiative that the contribution may be demanded. Martin County v. Mitcheltree Tp., 4 Ind. App. 424, 30 N. E. 937 [following Owen County v. Washington Tp., 121 Ind. 379, 23 N. E. 257]. See also Ritz v. Tannehill, 69 Iowa 476, 29 N. W. 424, holding that under the statutes which authorized "any township . . . to aid in the construction of county bridges, when the estimated cost of the same was not less than $10,000, as fixed by the board of supervisors; . . . the aggregate amount of the tax shall not exceed one-half of the estimated cost of the bridge," that it was necessary that such estimate be made by the county board before the vote of the electors to raise such tax.

statutes are prospective in their operation and should not be construed to include expenses incurred upon an improvement that has already been made.[39]

(B) From County to Town or Township. In providing for apportionment between different territorial subdivisions, statutes often provide that if the expense of construction be too great a burden upon a town or township, or is more than a certain per cent of its taxable value, the county shall pay a certain portion of the cost thereof.[40] Although under the Illinois statute, the township board may let the contract for erection of a bridge before their application to the county for aid,[41] yet if they proceed to build and pay for a bridge before applying for aid they can claim no appropriation.[42] Where, however, the statute is complied with,[43] mandamus will issue to compel the county derhill v. Essex, 64 Vt. 28, 23 Atl. 617, holding that since the repeal of certain sections of the Vt. Acts (1884), No. 18, a town cannot be assessed for any portion of the expense of maintaining a bridge wholly within another town.

But it will be presumed, in the absence of a clear expression of the legislature to the contrary, that county commissioners whose duty it is to apportion the expense to be borne by the town or townships especially benefited by the construction of a bridge will act only in their regular jurisdiction, and cannot therefore assess a town in another county. Boston v. Middlesex County, 111 Mass. 313.

39. Pomfret v. Hartford, 42 Vt. 134.

40. Illinois.— Under the Illinois act of 1879, § 110, the county must pay half the expense incurred in building a bridge if it appear that its construction or repair would be an unreasonble burden on the township and the cost of the bridge exceed such sum as could be raised in one year by ordinary taxation for bridge purposes in the town. People v. Madison County, 125 Ill. 334, 17 N. E. 802.

Indiana.— By Ind. Rev. Stat. (1894), § 6833, the county must build or repair bridges where the probable cost would exceed seventy-five dollars, if notified by the township, and, in its opinion, such bridge or culvert should be built. See also Delaware Tp. v. Ripley County, 26 Ind. App. 97, 59 N. E. 189, construing this statute and determining what constitutes notice to render the township liable.

Massachusetts.— Norwich v. Hampshire County, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 60, holding that a special act making such apportionment was constitutional.

New York.— Under N. Y. Laws (1890), c. 560, § 130, where the expense of building a bridge wholly in one town shall exceed one sixth of one per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable property of such town, the county in which the town is located must pay not less than one third part of such expense. People v. Steuben County, 146 N. Y. 107, 40 N. E. 738, 66 N. Y. St. 258 [affirming 81 Hun (N. Y.) 216, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 729, 62 N. Y. St. 691].

Pennsylvania.— The Pennsylvania act of June 13, 1836, § 35, provides that when a stream over which it may be necessary to erect a bridge crosses a public road or highway, and the expense of erection is greater than one of the townships should bear, it may be at the expense of the county. In In re Youghiogheny Bridge, 182 Pa. St. 618, 38 Atl. 478, this was held to apply only to a case where a highway such as a ferry or otherwise has existed across the stream, and not where a township's street terminates at a river bank and its extension has been merely projected.

Wisconsin.— Under Wis. Laws (1885), c. 187, § 1, a county must aid the town in building bridges where the cost exceeds one fourth of one per cent of all taxable property of the town "according to the last equalized valuation." In State v. Pierce County, 71 Wis. 327, 37 N. W. 233, this statute was construed to mean that the valuation of 1885 controlled as to bridges authorized at the annual town-meeting of 1886, although the county was not called on for aid until after the latter year. See also Johnson v. Buffalo County, 111 Wis. 265, 87 N. W. 240 (holding that the statute did not authorize the county board to act jointly with the town in contracting for the erection); State v. St. Croix County, 83 Wis. 340, 53 N. W. 698.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bridges," § 18.

Repeal of statute before payment by county. — If a bridge is constructed under such conditions that the county is by statute liable to pay a certain part of the expense thereof, and after its completion such statute is amended, absolving the county from the necessity of assisting in the construction of bridges, the amendment not indicating that it is retroactive, the county must pay its pro rata of the expense of the bridge. Stone v. Broome County, 166 N. Y. 85, 59 N. E. 708 [reversing 52 N. Y. Suppl. 1150]; Thacher v. Steuben County, 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 271, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 124. See also People v. Hancock County, 21 Ill. App. 271.

42. People v. McHenry County, 110 Ill. 93 [affirming 12 Ill. App. 204].

43. What constitutes compliance.— An arrangement by the board, to borrow money to pay one half of the cost of a bridge, not sanctioned by a vote of the town, is not a proper compliance. Stark County v. People, 110 Ill. 577. So, too, under the Illinois act of July 1, 1883, where an appropriation is made by the county, but the bridge contemplated is appropriation,[44] the determination of the necessity of the bridge resting within the discretion of the county board.[45]

(c) When Built Over Boundaries. In the absence of statute or agreement one territorial subdivision of the state cannot compel another to assist it in erecting bridges over their common boundaries.[46] It is therefore a just and equitable exercise of legislative discretion to provide that when the necessity or convenience of travel renders advisable the erection of bridges over the boundaries between counties or townships, that each must contribute to the expense thereof.[47] Such statutes must be clear and explicit, and must be strictly complied abandoned and a more costly structure erected in a different location, no attempt being made to comply with the statute as amended by the act of 1889, the appropriation cannot be applied to the new bridge. People v. Shelby County, 168 Ill. 351, 48 N. E. 100 [affirming 65 Ill. App. 410]. Nor can the township board include a number of bridges in a petition so that the total sum will be of sufficient amount to render the county liable for a part. Vermilion County v. Oakwood, 69 Ill. App. 464. Where, however, the statutes provide that county aid shall be conditional upon a levy of the road and bridge tax for the full amount of sixty cents on each hundred dollars, and the town has levied a tax for bridge purposes of forty cents, and a separate tax of twenty-five cents for road purposes, which the taxpayers are permitted to pay in money or labor, at their option, the tax to be paid in labor should be considered as a money tax in determining whether the town has fulfilled the condition. Champaign County v. Condit, 120 Ill. 301, 11 N. E. 394 [affirming 24 Ill. App. 560]. And see Donnelly v. Luzerne County, 9 Kulp (Pa.) 271.

Two bridges.— A petition by a town to a county to aid in the construction of a bridge may, under the Illinois statute, properly embrace two bridges, if it contain the necessary averments as to each. Mercer County v. Town of New Boston, 13 Ill. App. 274.

44. New Boston v. Mercer County, 110 Ill. 197; People v. Iroquois County, 100 Ill. 640; People v. Moultrie County, 71 Ill. App. 348; Kankakee County v. People, 24 Ill. App. 410; Kendall County v. People, 12 Ill. App. 210.

If the facts justified an appropriation of a part they will be compelled by law to furnish their full quota. Logan County v. People, 116 Ill. 466, 6 N. E. 475.

What petition for mandamus should allege. — A petition for mandamus to compel a county board to furnish aid to build a bridge should allege that the town had raised one half of the necessary funds. Kendall County v. People, 12 Ill. App. 210.

Defenses to action of mandamus.— The determination by the township commissioners that a necessity exists for the construction or repair of a bridge is the exercise of a corporate power vested in them, and can only be exercised at a meeting of such commissioners; and before the county board can be legally moved in the matter, the record of such meeting must show that the proceedings required by law were regularly had, and parol evidence is not admissible to aid the record. Where the county appropriates a certain sum without proof of the regularity of the proceeding it acts without authority and cannot be required to make further appropriation. People v. Madison County, 125 Ill. 334, 17 N. E. 802. But if the record, although insufficient at first, is subsequently amended to correspond with the facts, and the refusal of the county board was not based upon the failure of the township commissioners to determine and record the necessary facts, mandamus may properly be brought against them. Du Page County v. Winfield, 142 Ill. 607, 32 N. E. 269 [affirming 39 Ill. App. 298].

47. Carter v. Cambridge, etc., Bridge Proprietors, 104 Mass. 236; Guilder v. Dayton, 22 Minn. 366; Guilder v. Otsego, 20 Minn. 74 (holding that the act apportioning the relative cost of a bridge between the towns of Dayton and Otsego, in the sum of three tenths of the cost to each of the towns, was not in conflict with Minn. Const. art. 9, §§ 1–4, art. 11, § 5).

This may be done by either private or general statute. Waterville v. Kennebec County, 59 Me. 80. And see Shoolbred v. Charlestown, 2 Bay (S. C.) 63.

In the absence of an express repealing clause such statute does not destroy an agreement between townships, lawfully made, existing at the date of its passage, and having been acted upon for years, whereby one is charged with the duty of erecting and maintaining a bridge so situated as to come within the general meaning of the statute. Stitt v. Casterline, 89 Mich. 239, 50 N. W. 847.

Necessity of apportionment as to wealth or population.— It is usually unnecessary, under the provisions of the statutes, that the amount paid by each county or town shall be in proportion to the taxable wealth or population of the other. Thus under Mass. Stat. (1870), c. 303, providing that commissioners should, in such manner and amount as they deemed just and equitable, apportion and as-with[48] to enable one county or town to build a bridge at its own expense and recover a pro rata from the other;[49] but where there has been a due compliance, sess the expenses incurred on boundary bridges, the apportionment may be made in equal parts, regardless of the population, area, or valuation of property within the two cities (Dow v. Wakefield, 103 Mass. 267); and under N. Y. Laws (1857), c. 639, providing that the expense of a bridge over a stream between two towns should be justly proportioned between them, and chapter 383, providing that a bridge for the maintenance of which two towns were liable, should be built and maintained at their joint expense, the cost should be divided equally between them, regardless of their relative wealth or population (Matter of Spier, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 438, 20 N. Y. St. 389). And see Haverhill v. Groveland, 152 Mass. 510, 25 N. E. 976.

A stream is the boundary between two towns or counties within the meaning of these statutes, not only when it literally so runs, but where one of the municipalities cannot erect a bridge over it without extending it into the other (Brookline v. Westminster, 4 Vt. 224); and under N. Y. Laws (1841), c. 225, requiring towns on different sides of a stream to contribute in equal proportions to the erection and maintenance of bridges over the stream, they are liable equally, without regard to where the line between the two towns runs in the stream (Corey v. Rice, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 141. To a similar effect see Keiser v. Union County, 156 Pa. St. 315, 26 Atl. 1066 [reversing In re Milton Bridge, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 17]). But a statute providing the manner in which bridges "across a stream which runs between two townships," shall be built, has been held to exclude a stream which runs between a township and a city or borough. Wilkes Barre v. Luzerne County, 3 Kulp (Pa.) 302. For further construction of this act see In re County Bridges, 4 Kulp (Pa.) 146; Luzerne County v. Plymouth Tp., 2 Kulp (Pa.) 199. L. 512, 19 Atl. 972.

48. Waiver of statutory compliance.— Where the commissioners of highways of a town absolutely refuse to render aid in the repair of a bridge, it being jointly liable with an adjoining town, the notice required to be given it under the law may be deemed to be waived. Day v. Day, 94 N. Y. 153.

Indiana.— Fountain County v. Warren County, 128 Ind. 295, 27 N. E. 133; Jackson County v. Washington County, 146 Ind. 138, 45 N. E. 60; Wrought-Iron Bridge Co. v. Hendricks County, 19 Ind. App. 672, 48 N. E. 1050.

Kentucky.— Under Ky. Rev. Stat. (1874), c. 84, §§ 30, 35, when two adjoining counties differ as to the expediency of building a bridge over a boundary stream between them, the county court of one can take no steps to compel the other to provide means to assist in the construction; the circuit court of the opposing county being constituted an arbitrator between them. Garrard County Ct. v. Boyle County Ct., 10 Bush (Ky.) 208. Under the latter statute of 1886, c. 94, § 36, where one county refuses to coöperate with another, the circuit court should hear such evidence as either county may produce touching the matter in controversy. This evidence need not be confined to the mere convenience or necessity of the bridge, but the financial condition of the counties may be fully shown as reason for their refusal; and if it appear that the bridge is not indispensable, and the finances of the county are such that its erection would impoverish the taxpayers, it will not be compelled to contribute. What structure is within operation of statute.— Under Va. Code (1887), §§ 989, 990, providing for the apportionment of the expense of the erection or maintenance of "a bridge and causeway, or either, . . . over a place between two counties," one county is not liable for any part of the expense incurred by the building of a causeway wholly in the adjacent county, although such causeway is necessary as an approach to the bridge. Gloucester County v. Middlesex County, 88 Va. 843, 14 S. E. 660. Nor under a similar statute would a town be liable for any part of the cost of the bridge built over a stream on its boundary, and across a strip of land within its limits, where neither end of the bridge is within the town, and the bridge is practically inaccessible therefrom (Candor v.

the liabilities of the respective towns or counties become absolute, and may be enforced like any other indebtedness.[50]

d. Location — (I) In General. The determination of the exact location at which it is most feasible to erect a bridge being a matter necessarily depending upon the facts of each particular case, the county or town officials are usually invested with a discretion in determining the site of a bridge.[51] The rights of adjoining landowners must, however, be kept in mind while exercising this discretion;[52] and it may be said that a county board having once located a bridge Tioga, 11 N. Y. App. Div. 502, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 911); and the fact that a township has a particular and local interest in the construction of a bridge will not render it liable to contribution if no part of the bridge is situated therein (Frenchtown Tp. v. Monroe County, 89 Mich. 204, 50 N. W. 757). For an analogous construction of the Ill. Rev. Stat. (1880), c. 121, § 106, see Highway Com'rs v. Gibson, 7 Ill. App. 231. On the other hand, a bridge upon a town line road which is located partly in each of two towns is not to be considered as wholly within the town to which the road district including it has been allotted, under the provisions of N. Y. Rev. Stat. §§ 73, 75, but the towns are jointly liable concerning such bridge. Day v. Day, 94 N. Y. 153. And see Waupun v. Chester, 61 Wis. 401, 21 N. W. 251. So, too, under a statute providing that a town excessively burdened by rebuilding or repairing a highway may have contribution by a neighboring town greatly benefited thereby, a town which has to build at great expense its half of the bridge between it and an adjoining town may have contribution from that town to the expense of rebuilding the bridge. Hudson v. Nashua, 62 N. H. 591.

50. Minnesota.— Guilder v. Otsego, 20 Minn. 74.

New York.—Under N. Y. Rev. Laws (1885), c. 451, the board of supervisors of a county having within it two towns separated by a stream may, upon the application of one of the towns, authorize and compel the erection of a bridge over such stream, to connect the highways in the two towns, and impose a tax upon both towns to pay the necessary expense thereof; although the taxpayers, officers of one of the towns, be opposed thereto. Kirkwood v. Newbury, 122 N. Y. 571, 26 N. E. 10, 34 N. Y. St. 546 [affirming 45 Hun (N. Y.) 323]. And see Matter of Mt. Morris, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 29.

Pennsylvania.—Pottsville v. Norwegian Tp., 14 Pa. St. 543.

Vermont.—In an action by one town against another for its share of expenses in erecting a bridge the work of plaintiff town in such erection may be shown by parol. Brookline v. Westminster, 4 Vt. 224.

Wisconsin.— Waupun v. Chester, 61 Wis. 401, 21 N. W. 251.

Form of action.— If the expense should be borne by the townships in equitable proportions an action of debt will not lie against such township in the absence of a joint contract to build as authorized by the statute, since a recovery would be against both towns for a sum in solido. Union Drainage Dist. v. Highway Com'rs, 87 Ill. App. 93.

Parties.— Where two of three commissioners of highways to several towns have paid the indebtedness of the third for the construction of a bridge connecting their towns they should sue separately to recover their respective portions. Corey v. Rice, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 141.

51. "As they may think necessary."— Under a statute authorizing commissioners of roads to build such bridges "as they may think necessary," the bridge need not be located on the precise line where the road crosses a stream, but may be erected at the nearest suitable location and the road altered to conform therewith. Maddox v. Ware, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 314.

At a designated line or point.— Under an act which authorizes the building of bridges over streams near county or town lines, the highway commissioners of the town or towns electing to build such bridge may determine its location within a mile of any reasonable distance of the town lines. Insley v. Shepard, 31 Fed. 869. On the other hand, commissioners invested with authority to rebuild "upon or near the site of the old bridge" cannot construct a bridge a quarter of a mile up the stream from the old site. People v. Finger, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 341. And see Long v. Laufman, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 154.

At a town named.— Authority in a charter to erect a bridge "at the town of Clinton" is sufficiently complied with where a public ferry has existed at the point in question for more than thirty years, generally spoken of as the "ferry at the town of Clinton," although not within the limits of the town. Hudson v. Cuero Land, etc., Co., 47 Tex. 56, 26 Am. Rep. 289.

Over "streams."— Authorizing a town to build bridges over "streams" does not authorize the bridging of bays, lakes, or marshes. Matter of Irondequoit, 68 N. Y. 376.

Where the location is left to the entire discretion of the county commissioners, but the approval of the plan by the state board of public works is necessary before it can be constructed, such board cannot disapprove the plans because it objects to the location of the bridge, it having no power with respect thereto. Muskingum County v. Board Public Works, 39 Ohio St. 628.

52. Quinton v. Burton, 61 Iowa 471, 16 N. W. 569 [approving McCord v. High, 24 Iowa 336], holding that the road supervisors had no right to erect a bridge close to either side of a highway sixty feet in width,

(II) Right to Build Over Boundary Independently of Adjoining Municipality. It has been held that a county authorized to build and keep in repair necessary public bridges may, if it chooses, bridge, at its own expense, its boundary streams;[54] but the authorities cannot be said to be uniform on this point,[55] and the right of a town to erect a bridge over a boundary stream between two states, in the absence of express statute, has been denied.[56]

e. Manner of Construction — (I) In General. While any provisions of the legislature prescribing the size of a bridge must be complied with,[57] the county or town officials are usually invested with a discretion as to the proper method of erection,[58] and the time which should be used in completing the merely because it would cost more to place the bridge in the middle of the road; and especially where travel, diverted to the side of the road, would interfere with the shrubbery and otherwise injure the adjoining land.

53. Allen v. Monmouth County, 13 N. J. Eq. 68. See also Hague v. Philadelphia, 48 Pa. St. 527, where it was held that, under a statute authorizing the construction of a free bridge over a certain river and requiring the county commissioners to submit the site, plan, and specification to the county board for confirmation before advertising for proposals, they had no power after such confirmation to change the location; and if changed after such submission the county could not be held responsible for the expense of such change.

The lawful laying out of a highway by a township official practically constitutes a location of any bridge necessary to span an intersecting stream. Huggans v. Riley, 125 N. Y. 88, 25 N. E. 993, 34 N. Y. St. 706 [affirming 51 Hun (N. Y.) 501, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 282, 21 N. Y. St. 706].

54. Washer v. Bullitt County, 110 U. S. 558, 4 S. Ct. 249, 28 L. ed. 249 [explaining Nelson County Ct. v. Washington County Ct., 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 74], holding that the provisions of the statute prescribing the procedure by which a county could compel another to coöperate in the erection did not supersede the power granted by the general statute. And see Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 5 Cal. 426, holding that where a creek was the dividing line between the city of Oakland and the remainder of Contra Costa county, either the city or county would have jurisdiction to build it.

55. See Browning v. Owen County, 44 Ind. 11; McPeeters v. Blankenship, 123 N. C. 651, 31 S. E. 876, the latter case holding that N. C. Code, § 2014, giving county commissioners power "to appoint where bridges shall be made" must be construed with subsequent sections providing for the construction of bridges over streams between counties, and that, under such statutes, a county could not build a bridge over a boundary stream without joining with another county.

56. Abendroth v. Greenwich, 29 Conn. 356, holding that any undertaking of the town with regard to such a structure is without consideration and beyond its power.

Such authority is clearly within the scope of legislative powers, and under N. H. Laws (1881), c. 67, §§ 11, 12, conferring upon the towns on the Connecticut river power to contract with the Vermont towns opposite as to the erection of bridges across the river, it is held that the authority is vested exclusively in the town, to be exercised at their option; the county commissioners having no interest therewith. Stearns v. Hinsdale, 61 N. H. 433.

57. Gould v. Schermer, 101 Iowa 582, 70 N. W. 697, holding that inasmuch as Iowa Code (1897), § 1001, expressly provides that public bridges must not be less than sixteen feet wide a road supervisor is not justified by the resolution of the town trustees in erecting a bridge under fourteen feet wide.

Sufficient compliance as to width.— Under a statute requiring that where a bridge is built across a stream upon a public road more than three feet above the level of the bank upon either side of such stream it shall be at least sixteen feet wide, the requirement with regard to width is sufficiently observed when it appears that between the trusses and the innermost projecting part of the superstructure the distance is sixteen feet, although it also appears that wheel-guards four inches wide and six inches high are laid upon the floor and encroach upon the sixteen feet. Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co. v. Aitkin County, 69 Minn. 297, 72 N. W. 123.

58. Thornton v. Roll, 118 Ill. 350, 8 N. E. 145.

They are not divested of such discretion until the bridges are constructed; and it is not within the power of the courts to control their procedure. State v. Martin County, 125 Ind. 247, 25 N. E. 286.

Superintendence of construction.—The party whose duty it is to superintend the construction of a bridge must be determined by the statutes of each state. Under a statute which provides that county boards may authorize towns to build bridges and issue their bonds in payment therefor, the county board may, in its resolution, authorize the building of a bridge and appoint commissioners to supervise its construction, although such power of appointment is not expressly conferred by the act. Barker v. Oswegatchie, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 834. So, too, where a statute invests a commissioner of highways with the care, superintendence, repair, and improvements of highways and bridges within his town, and also charges him with the custody and disbursement of whatever money is raised by the structure;[59] subject to the limitation that the bridge must be such as the convenience and safety of the public requires.[60]

(II) Approaches. Inasmuch as the approaches necessary to render a structure accessible are legitimately included by the term "bridge,"[61] it follows that a duty to build a bridge prima facie carries with it a duty to construct the approach,[62] although the term may be so used that the courts will construe it to mean only the bridge structure proper.[63]

f. Contracts For Building — (I) In General — (A) Power to Make. Where a town is under no legal obligation to build a bridge, a contract for its construction could not be considered necessary to the exercise of the town's corporate or administrative powers, and would not therefore be binding upon it;[64] but giving town for those purposes, if the town raises a sum of money for the erection of a bridge, such commissioner is charged with the duty of superintending the erection of it, in the absence of any action placing the work in the hands of other agents. Berlin Iron Bridge Co. v. Wagner, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 346, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 840, 32 N. Y. St. 407. For superintendence and control of the erection of a bridge under the settled course of Kentucky decisions see Bullitt County v. Washer, 130 U. S. 142, 9 S. Ct. 499, 32 L. ed. 885. And see Deweese v. Hutton, 144 Ind. 114, 43 N. E. 13.

59. What constitutes abuse of discretion. — In the building of a bridge one hundred and forty feet in length, sixty feet in width, and costing fourteen thousand dollars, where the city authorities allowed a chasm in the street to remain unbridged for four months after the wooden bridge which spans the stream was removed, and consumed about the same length of time in having the new bridge put in its place, such delay cannot be considered as an abuse of discretion on the part of the municipal authorities. Tuggle v. Atlanta, 57 Ga. 114.

60. State v. Williston, 31 Vt. 153.

It would be a good defense by a commissioner of highways against a claim for paying for the building of a bridge ordered by his predecessor to show that the bridge was not connected with the public highway or formed no part of it, and that the public could not use it for any purpose without the permission, expressed or implied, of the owner of the land. What not an approach. — A stretch of ground eight hundred and fifty feet over the private property of a citizen cannot be regarded as a mere approach to a bridge. Nor would the obligation of a county to build proper approaches impose upon it the duty to lay out, open, and construct public roads; and county commissioners cannot be compelled by mandamus to construct such an approach to a county bridge where the bridge does not connect with the public highway, since the commissioners have no power to appropriate private land or to lay out a highway to a bridge. Acts (1899), c. 214, p. 129, was intended to provide that the towns which had conveyed their property and bridges to the county under the general statute should build approaches, if not already built, and convey them to the counties, and that then, and not till then, the counties should take charge of such bridges, including the approaches.

County judge. — In Iowa the right of the county judge to contract for the construction of a bridge, the cost of which does not exceed five hundred dollars, is not dependent upon the raising of the special tax to meet the expense, since if no special tax is levied the expense may be paid from the ordinary county revenue; and such judge may contract for a bridge over a watercourse on a public road if water therein exists with sufficient frequency to render a bridge essential to a safe and convenient passage, although no constant stream of water passes through it. Long v. Boone County, 36 Iowa 60.

Power of supervisors to bind two counties. — Ind. Rev. Stat. (1894), § 3252, relating to the erection of a bridge by two counties jointly, provides that the boards of county commissioners while in joint session shall appoint one or more superintendents who shall have full control and supervision of the erection, "subject, however, to such regulations as such boards of county commissioners may determine upon." It was held that the superintendent thus appointed by two counties could bind them at least to the extent that a superintendent appointed by one county could bind it as provided by section 3278 of the statute. a county authority to build and repair bridges impliedly gives it the power to contract for their construction,[65] and a town, having by its charter the control of its streets may contract for the construction of free bridges connecting them.[66]

(B) Validity. It is essential to the validity of a contract for the erection of a bridge that the statutory provisions authorizing its construction be closely adhered to;[67] and that it be made with the parties designated by statute to act on behalf of the municipality.[68] In some jurisdictions no valid contract can be made by

Township officials.— In Kansas it has been held that the statute does not absolutely forbid township officers to make contracts for the construction of a bridge, the cost of which is more than two hundred dollars, when they have funds obtained from road taxes or otherwise which may be so appropriated. But such corporation has no right to erect a toll-bridge on its streets for pecuniary benefit. And see New Albany v. Iron Substructure Co., 141 Ind. 500, 40 N. E. 44, holding that although Ind. Rev. Stat. (1894), § 3283, provides that all bridges costing over five hundred dollars built within city limits shall be constructed by the county board, yet, inasmuch as a subsequent section of the statute gave cities authority over their streets and bridges and the construction of the latter, if a city, without consulting the county board, builds a bridge within its limits costing a greater amount than five hundred dollars it cannot defend an action for the contract price on the ground that the contract was ultra vires.

A committee chosen by a town to build a bridge has power to bind the town by contract for building, although it is only authorized by vote to borrow money for the purpose of rebuilding. Simond v. Heard, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 120, 34 Am. Dec. 41.

Acceptance by commissioners.— Under a statute providing that to build a bridge between adjoining counties "it shall be lawful for the commissioners of highways of such adjoining towns or counties to enter into contracts," etc., such contract is an essential prerequisite to a joint building and must be accepted by a majority of the commissioners of each town acting as a separate body; the majority of six at a joint meeting cannot bind the towns even though another commissioner signs the contract after completion of the work. Deer Park v. Wrought-Iron Bridge Co., 3 Ill. App. 570.

Signing.— If the statute does not require the signature of all the commissioners who are appointed to contract for the building of a bridge a contract by a majority of them is valid. Hooper v. Webb, 27 Minn. 485, 8 N. W. 589. So, too, where the name of one commissioner was signed by one of the other commissioners, and he, with knowledge of the fact, acted with the other commissioners without objection in the subsequent completion of the contract, it was held that the contract was valid as to all three. Fraud in execution of contract.— The construction of a bridge having been determined by the town board and authority given to highway commissioners to build the same, evidence that an agent of the bridge company to whom the contract was let and the commissioners spent the night of the day in which such action was taken at the same hotel and that they went together to secure legal advice as to the commissioners' power to contract, and that the contract bound the town to pay five hundred dollars more for the bridge than the price at which it was privately offered to certain of the town board, is not evidence of fraud in the making of the contract, if the commissioners did not know of the previous lesser price offered by the company, and the bridge contracted for was suitable and well worth the price to be paid for it, and the commissioners received no personal advantage from the contract. Basselin v. Pate, 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 368, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 653.

Construction of contract as to joint ownership.— Where a municipality entered into an agreement with a railroad, whereby, in consideration of its paying the increased cost of construction and obligating itself to pay a certain fixed appropriation for maintenance and reconstruction in the future if the railroad would construct the bridge in such manner as to adapt it as a roadway for vehicles and passengers, the parties to such an agreement did not thereby become joint owners of the bridge. The ownership remained in the railroad corporation, subject to a partial use by the municipality, under the terms and conditions of the contract between the parties. Oliff v. Shreveport, 52 La. the county authorities until an appropriation has been made to pay for the same either in whole or in part,[69] or for the expenditure of more than double the amount of the bridge funds;[70] and a statute authorizing the commissioners of a county to contract for the construction of bridges and appoint persons to supervise the building of the same does not authorize them to appoint agents to make such contracts.[71] Failure of the contractor's bond to conform strictly to the statute will not absolve the county from payment after the bridge has been accepted by them.[72]

(c) Ratification. If a contract for the erection of a bridge is one which the county or township has no authority to make it cannot, by its subsequent acts, ratify it.[73]

(II) Liability — (A) In General — (1) Of County. If the contract sought to be enforced is a valid one a county is liable thereon the same as any other corporation;[74] but if the bridge is built without entering into any contract,[75] or if the contract is void[76] it has been held that no recovery can be had against the county, even upon a quantum meruit.

(2) Of Individual Commissioners. It has been held that if commissioners whose duty it is to contract for the construction of a bridge enter into a contract in excess of their power, or, having sufficient funds on hand to pay for the work, allow them to be used for other purposes, they will be individually liable, notwithstanding a clause in their contract exempting them from such liability.[77]

Clark v. Dayton, 6 Nebr. 192, holding that a statute which provides that county commissioners may let contracts to the lowest competent bidder for the improvement of such roads as may be a general necessity and pay for the same by orders on the county treasurer payable out of the county road funds, and that no contract shall be entered into for a greater sum than double the amount of money on hand in the county road fund, applies to contracts for the erection of bridges as well as to improvements of roads.

Ratification of change in contract.— Where a board of supervisors had in their individual capacity consented to a change in a contract for the construction of a bridge, the appointment of a committee to examine the same after its completion, with power to accept or reject it and a subsequent qualified acceptance by them (the supervisors) does not amount to a ratification of the change in the contract. (B) Enforcement of Liability. Where the contract is in the name of an agent, it is necessary to a recovery against the county to show an adoption or ratification of it by the county;[78] or, if the action is brought in a jurisdiction where a recovery on a quantum meruit is allowed in the absence of an express contract, it must be shown that the county accepted and derived benefit from the work.[79]

g. Acceptance. While the commissioners may in certain cases be held to have waived their right to pass upon and condemn the workmanship or material used in a bridge,[80] its use by the public after its completion cannot be taken as an acceptance of it, where the commissioners alone are authorized to accept.[81] Acceptance and payment therefor by the county court does not amount to a waiver of any defect of which it was ignorant,[82] or when the approval was procured by fraud;[83] but in the absence of fraud or mistake, an acceptance by duly authorized parties is conclusive upon the towns or counties defraying the expenses of the work.[84]

3. By Private Capital — a. Power to Grant Franchise. The power to grant franchises to individuals or companies to construct and maintain public bridges rests primarily with the state legislature,[85] and may be granted to whomsoever it

80. Thus where a contract required the county commissioners, if they had a superintendent and desired to exercise their privilege of inspection, to be present as material was furnished or labor expended and pass upon the same, it was held that where the superintendent was present, watching the progress of the work which was done pursuant to his orders and in substantial compliance with the plans, the commissioners waived their right to pass upon the workmanship and material and their right to redeem either, unless there was collusion between the contractor and the superintendent. Where the bridge was used by the public for five years without objection, and it is shown that it was approved by a jury of view appointed to inspect it, evidence of defects of a trivial character, involving small cost, is not sufficient proof to make out the defense of non-acceptance by the county. Vacating orders on discovery of fraud.— It is no abuse of the power of the court when the fraud is discovered to set aside its orders concerning the inspectors' report, and to recommit the matter to the inspectors to make a final report, in order to let the county into whatever remedy it may have to recover money paid under the fraudulently procured decree. 84. Guilder v. Dayton, 22 Minn. 366.

The acceptance by a committee on roads and bridges appointed by the board of county commissioners whose duty it was to accept the same is prima facie an acceptance by the commissioners, and proof of acceptance by a majority of such committee is proper in determining whether or not the bridge was in fact accepted by the county. Evans v. Stanton, 23 Minn. 368.

Where acceptance by the board is necessary to bind the county, and such board has the option to accept or reject, it must follow that they may make their acceptance subject to such conditions as they may see fit to impose. Hence, where they accepted the bridge upon the condition that the contractor would take a specified sum for his work, the limitation of his recovery to that amount cannot be made to depend upon his receiving it in full satisfaction. chooses.[86] The power may, however, be delegated to municipalities,[87] and when this is clearly so, a franchise obtained from such authority is equally valid with one granted by the legislature.[88] The right to erect a toll-bridge over a river forming a coterminous boundary between two states can only be conferred by the concurrent legislation of both.[89]

If not clearly granted, the power will not be implied. Williams v. Davidson, 43 Tex. 1, holding that under its charter the city of Victoria did not have authority to authorize the erection of a toll-bridge and permit the company to charge tolls thereon.

Must be for public use.— Cities or municipalities hold the fee of their streets in trust for public uses only and cannot grant private parties the right to construct a bridge over a public alley for their own use. 90. Free transportation.— Under a charter allowing a party to erect a toll-bridge provided it should ever remain free and open to the citizens of the county, it was held that the proper construction of the provision was that the bridge should be free and open to the citizens of the county whether they crossed on foot or otherwise, and also for the passage of their carriages or any other means of transportation employed in their lawful business. Reed v. Hanger, 20 Ark. 625.

Duties attending transfer of franchise.— Where an act of the legislature assigns the right to build a toll-bridge, which right had been formerly conferred to another bridge company, the assignee will be held to take such franchise free from all liability to forfeiture for any previous act or omission of the former company. The reason being that it would not be the probable purpose of the legislature to give to a party a privilege for the mere purpose of taking it from him by a suit then pending, and without regard to any act of his. State v. Centreville Bridge Co., 18 Ala. 678. But a bridge company which is authorized to purchase the bridge and franchise of another company and under such authority does purchase such bridge and franchise will be held to have assumed the duties of the latter with regard to the maintenance and repair of a turnpike built by the latter corporation, although at the time of making the purchase they protest against the clause in the deed, expressing that it was the understanding of the parties that all the right, title, and interest in said road was to pass. Com. v. Hancock Free Bridge Corp., 2 Gray (Mass.) 58. And see Proprietors Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 344 [affirmed in 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. ed. 773], holding that the rights of Harvard college in the old ferry between Boston and Charlestown did not pass to the proprietors of the Charles river bridge, incorporated under the act of March, 1785.

91. Thus, where one is authorized by statute to take toll until an admitted indebtedness to him by the state is liquidated, his franchise does not expire when he is reimbursed to the amount admitted by the statute, but he is also entitled to interest thereon, although the act was silent as to that point. Adams v. Beach, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 271. See also Central Bridge Corp. v. Lowell, 15 Gray (Mass.) 106, construing the Massachusetts statute of 1843 as amended by chapter 31 of the statute of 1845, and holding that the right of the bridge company was to take the tolls thereby fixed until the new tolls should be sufficient to reimburse the original capital and costs of building the bridge with nine per cent interest.

Waiver as to time of completion.— N. Y. Laws (1867), c. 399, incorporated the New York Bridge Company, and in 1869 the company was required to complete a bridge across the East river between New York and Brooklyn on or before June 1, 1874. The Brooklyn act of June 5, 1874, provided for the completion of the bridge and authorized the cities of New York and Brooklyn, by the issue of bonds, to pay money during the years of 1874 and 1875 toward that object. It was held that the latter act was not only an absolute and unconditional waiver of the limit of time previously declared but was an extension of the time within which the bridge should be finished. Matter of New York Bridge Co., 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 295.

benefits of the franchise [92] or any aid which the statute may authorize a municipality to give it [93] are matters determinable largely upon the statute by virtue of which the franchise is obtained; and it can claim only such benefits,[94] build only for the purpose,[95] and acquire and control only such property [96] as is contemplated or authorized by its charter.

(II) Tolls — (A) Right to Take — (1) In General. The right to demand toll of the public for the crossing of a public bridge exists only by virtue of statutory enactment,[97] and such toll cannot be lawfully exacted unless the charter and conditions of the statute as to the building and maintenance of the bridge are complied with.[98] No toll can be exacted after the expiration of the time for

92. A substantial compliance with the conditions imposed by an act granting the franchise of a toll-bridge is held to be sufficient to invest the grantee with the rights and privileges thereof. Thompson v. New York, etc., R. Co., 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 625. But building a bridge a half mile below the point designated by the charter is not a compliance with the statute in the sense that the bridge company can claim the benefit of an act avoiding the charter of a new bridge company, provided the other would build at the designated point. State v. Old Town Bridge Corp., 85 Me. 17, 26 Atl. 947. And see Saugatuck Bridge Co. v. Westport, 39 Conn. 337.

93. Thus, under Iowa Gen. Laws (1896), c. 13, §§ 1–3, it is held that the aid authorized to be given by cities to any corporation organized under the laws of Iowa for the construction of bridges cannot be given to a foreign corporation, and that the taxpayers may sue to recover from a bridge company taxes paid by a city to such corporation. But a company authorized to construct a bridge for purposes of a public highway, if it is in good faith so doing, cannot be enjoined from proceeding with the work, merely because it is also to be used by a street railway, for which latter purpose alone the company would have no authority to build. Oliver v. Thompson's Run Bridge Co., 197 Pa. St. 344, 47 Atl. 230.

96. Approaches.— The right to build includes by implication the right to construct reasonable and proper approaches. Com. v. Pittston Ferry Bridge Co., 148 Pa. St. 621, 24 Atl. 87.

Interest in realty.— Under the charters granted to some bridge companies they acquire the fee in the land, and not merely an easement. Harlow v. Rogers, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 291. See also Covington, etc., Bridge Co. v. Magruder, 63 Ohio St. 455, 59 N. E. 216, holding that under Ohio Rev. Stat. But see Thompson v. Proprietors Androscoggin Bridge, 5 Me. 62, where it was held that under the charter in question the company acquired no more than an easement in the land on which the bridge was built.

Terminus of highway upon river.— In the absence of expressed stipulation this would seem to include the right to use the whole terminus of a highway upon a river, but not as hostile or adverse to the rights of the public. Newark Lime, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Newark, 15 N. J. Eq. 64.

The power to build and rent wharves is not an incident to such business. New Haven Toll Bridge Co. v. Osborn, 35 Conn. 7.

Enlargement of franchise.— A statute authorizing the proprietors of a toll-bridge to build and maintain a turnpike at their own expense, leading toward their bridge and separated therefrom only by a public highway of less than a mile in length, and to take toll on such turnpike, does not create a new and distinct franchise, but only enlarges the franchise conferred by their charter. Enforcement of right.— Where the proprietors of a bridge are entitled to take tolls, there would seem to be no doubt that the right may be enforced by assumpsit as on an implied promise, although the traveler claim exemption and refuse to pay toll. Central Bridge Corp. v. Abbott, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 473. See also State v. Dearborn, 15 Me. 402. So, too, the proprietors may interpose a gate or bar which they may lawfully refuse to open unless their toll is paid, and if the party attempt to pass by force or violence, the statute renders him liable to a penalty. But it would seem that the law does not suffer the right to be enforced by violence, and the proprietor has no right to seize the traveler and enforce his right thereby. (2) Exemptions, Commutations, Etc. In some instances statutes authorizing toll-bridges have specifically exempted from the payment of tolls persons engaged in certain employments or pursuits;[4] and as the purpose of the law in fixing the rates of toll is to prevent extortion,[5] it follows that unless forbidden by charter or statute, the company may, by vote or contract,[6] exempt certain parties from toll,[7] the South Carolina side so long as such persons were required to pay again at the gate at the Georgia side.

Substantial compliance with the statute.— Where the statute required that the bridge company should construct its bridge at least twenty-four feet wide, with sufficient rails on each side, and the bridge was built twenty-four feet wide between the rails but with a framework in the center, the thickness of which being deducted the traveling pathway was a little less than twenty-four feet, it was held that the statute was substantially complied with, and that this reduction of the width did not impair the right to take tolls. Damariscotta Toll-Bridge v. Cotter, 31 Me. 357.

99. Grand Rapids Bridge Co. v. Prange, 35 Mich. 400, 24 Am. Middle Bridge Corp. v. Marks, 26 Me. 326, where the company, which was incorporated by the state of Maine, having extended its bridge across St. Croix river into the province of New Brunswick, it was held that, in the absence of any express promise, the company could not recover tolls or compensation from a party using the end of the bridge on the New Brunswick side.

Right of company to utilize free bridge.— In Proprietors Canal Bridge v. Gordon, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 297, 11 Am. Dec. 170, it appeared that a corporation was chartered to build a bridge and take tolls of persons passing over it, and that another corporation was empowered to build a dam near the bridge to be used as a road without the power of demanding tolls. The two corporations agreed that the bridge and dam should be connected so that a part of the bridge should become a part of the dam. It was held, in an action by the bridge corporation to recover tolls of persons passing over that part of the bridge which constituted a part of the dam, that the dam being built under a franchise which did not allow tolls the agreement of the two corporations did not affect the same, and that the bridge corporation could not recover tolls for passage over such parts.

2. Reg. v. Greaves, 46 U. C. Q. B. 200, where it appears that the court, upon a complaint of twelve freeholders that a toll-bridge is out of repair, may appoint an engineer to examine the same, and if the bridge is found to be defective, the company are allowed a certain time within which to make repairs, at the expiration of which time, should they fail so to do, the taking of toll would be illegal.

Conclusive evidence of proper repair.— The report of the bridge commissioners, whose duty it is to supervise and accept bridges, that a toll-bridge is completed and in good repair as required by the charter is conclusive between a party who has been sued for the non-payment of tolls and the bridge company; and such party cannot set up as a defense that the statute had not been complied with in the repair of the bridge. Strong v. Dunlap, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 423.

4. An exemption of "all persons drawing firewood for their own family use" extends to a person drawing his firewood at one time, with the assistance of his neighbors and others hired by him for that purpose, as well as if he himself was engaged in drawing the loads. Wooster v. Van Vechten, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 467. See also Adams v. Ft. Gaines, 80 Ga. 85, 5 S. E. 241, holding that under the statute authorizing the bridge in question, persons bringing produce to the market of Fort Gaines had the right to pass free of tolls, without regard to the value of their produce.

5. Com. v. Allegheny Bridge Co., 20 Pa. St. 185.

6. Such contract does not preclude the company from enacting reasonable by-laws to regulate the manner of crossing its bridge. Holmes v. Pickering, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 179, 3 West. L. J. 222.

7. Stock-holders.— The right of stock-holders in a bridge corporation to pass the bridge free of toll, such right being derived or commute or compound [8] the toll, or levy what they choose from each person,[9] so long as they keep within the prescribed maximum.[10]

(B) Right to Evade. In the absence of statute a party has the right to evade toll by crossing a stream near a bridge in another manner;[11] but in some jurisdictions it is provided that any person crossing otherwise than on the bridge but within a certain distance thereof shall be liable to the payment of the toll which he would have paid had he crossed the bridge,[12] and the avoidance of tolls may be prohibited by the infliction of a penalty.[13] from a resolution exempting "all present proprietors of stock," does not become a concomitant part of the stock, and a subsequent purchaser of the same would not be entitled to such privilege. Central Bridge Corp. v. Abbott, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 473. But it is held that such exemption would extend to a wagon or carriage of the stock-holder. Salmon v. Mallett, 6 N. C. 372.

8. Construction of compounding contract. — Under a contract providing that, in consideration of certain sums of money, all persons owning certain land within a town, and all persons who might thereafter have their homes upon any of said lands, and all persons, carriages, vehicles, stages, animals, and conveyances going to or from said lands upon the proper business of any person owning or having his home thereon, should pass over the bridge of the corporation without paying any tolls, it was held that one who resided on the land might operate a line of stages over the bridge for the conveyance of passengers, without paying hire. Central Bridge Corp. v. Sleeper, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 324. See also Central Bridge Corp. v. Bailey, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 319.

9. It is no ground of forfeiture that the company have refused to let some other person pass at the commuted rates. Com. v. Allegheny Bridge Co., 20 Pa. St. 185.

10. Central Bridge Corp. v. Sleeper, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 324; Central Bridge Corp. v. Bailey, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 319; Saunders v. Hathaway, 25 N. C. 402, 404 (where it is said: "None of the reasons for laying such a toll apply to its collection. It is granted to the builder as his compensation. It is for his benefit and is his property; and, consequently, he may levy what he likes from each person, within the rates fixed by the court, or relinquish it altogether"); Hamilton, etc., Road Co. v. Binkley, 9 Ont. 621.

What constitutes discrimination.—A charge of two cents made by a bridge company for every person transported over its bridge by a street railway, instead of a charge of twenty cents per car, such charge being the toll for ordinary two-horse vehicles, is not an unlawful discrimination. It is clear that in regulating tolls no one would classify a street car with a family carriage or two-horse wagon; the car might be constructed so as to carry a hundred persons and thus materially decrease the profits of the bridge company. Covington, etc., Bridge Co. v. South Covington, etc., St. R. Co., 93 Ky. 136, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 52, 19 S. W. 403, 15 L. R. A. 828.

Evidence that a third person had been permitted to pass the bridge without paying toll, in going to certain lands to which defendant frequently went, and by virtue of an ownership or residence on which he claimed an exemption from toll, is admissible to show that such lands were included in the vote exempting the occupants thereof from toil; and where it is clear that persons residing on certain lands have been exempted the burden is on the bridge company to show that defendant is not one of those persons. Central Bridge Corp. v. Butler, 2 Gray (Mass.) 130.

11. Wright v. Morris, 43 Ark. 193.

12. Sprague v. Birdsall, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 419, where the statute provided that any party crossing Cayuga lake within three miles of the bridge should be liable for tolls and it was held that a party embarking on one side of the lake six miles from the bridge and crossing it from such a direction as to leave the lake within sixty rods of the bridge on the other side would not constitute an evasion of the statute. This holding was approved in Cayuga Bridge Co. v. Stout, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 33, which also criticized and departed from the holding of the principal case, that it was not the intention of the act to prohibit any one from crossing on the ice, even though they crossed within three miles.

Avoidance of toll by heavy load.— Equity will not interfere to restrain a party from hauling heavy loads across a toll-bridge and thereby to some extent avoiding a payment of tolls. If the load is heavier than the statute allows the bridge company would have an adequate remedy at law for an injury to its bridge, and if the load is not an unlawful one, the fact that they cannot charge more for it than for a lighter load is a matter for legislative notice, and not for a court of equity. Thompson v. Matthews, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 212.

13. Middle Bridge Proprietors v. Brooks, 13 Me. 391, 29 Am. Dec. 510, holding that to enable a company to recover such penalty it is essential that it comply with those conditions of the charter which are for the particular benefit or accommodation of the traveling public. Hence, if by charter or statute they are required to keep the rates of tolls exposed to view, they could not recover if such conditions were not complied with. But if the regulation is not for the particular accommodation of individuals, as for instance the building of the bridge exactly twenty-five feet wide, a non-compliance with the condition could not be urged in defense

(III) Exclusiveness of Privileges — (A) In General. The right to erect bridges within certain limits and to take tolls may be made exclusive,[14] and the erection of another bridge within such limits is, as respects the franchise, a nuisance.[15] Such exclusive privileges are not, however, favored in law, and will not be recognized or enforced by the courts unless clearly expressed;[16] and the granting to county courts of jurisdiction to authorize the construction of bridges does not confer upon them the power to grant to any person the exclusive right of construction.[17]

(B) Infringement of — (1) What Constitutes. An individual cannot of his own authority establish a free bridge so as to impair the profits or interfere with the franchise of a party operating a toll-bridge;[18] but a provision of the legisla-by the traveler. Nor can the traveler defend on the ground that the toll-gatherer had not been legally appointed, his acts having been adopted by the company. Proprietors South-West Bend Bridge v. Hahn, 28 Me. 300.

14. Proprietors Piscataqua Bridge v. New Hampshire Bridge, 7 N. H. 35.

Prescribed distance — How measured. — A legislative provision that no other bridge shall be built within a certain distance of a designated bridge will be construed to mean the distance as measured along the course of the stream. McLeod v. Burroughs, 9 Ga. 213, where it was held that the expression in the bridge charter of "five miles, either above or below the said bridge," could not be taken to mean five miles in a straight line, but that the distance must be measured along the stream.

Election between two sites. — If a company having the exclusive privilege of building at either of two sites exercises its discretion by building at one, it thereby locates its grant, and cannot, by subsequently building another bridge at the other site, extend the scope of its franchise. Cayuga Bridge Co. v. Magee, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 85, where it appeared that a company was authorized to erect a bridge across a lake or the outlet thereof, and to rebuild it if destroyed or carried away by ice; and all other persons were prohibited from erecting a bridge within three miles of the place where the bridge should be erected. The company built its bridge across the lake, and upon its subsequent destruction built another bridge across the outlet of the lake. It was held that the restricted limits were to be measured from the place where the bridge was first built, and not from the bridge which was subsequently built across the outlet. ture prohibiting the erection of other toll-bridges or toll-ferries within a certain distance of a bridge does not preclude the county from constructing a free bridge within such distance;[19] and the erection of a railroad bridge within the territorial limits in which a bridge company has the exclusive right to take toll is not an infringement of its franchise.[20]

(2) Damages For. Proof by plaintiff of the legislative act providing for the existence of the franchise, of a deed to plaintiff of the freehold upon which the bridge is situated, and of plaintiff's possession of the bridge is sufficient to entitle him to maintain an action for the recovery of damages for the infringement of his franchise, in which action plaintiff may prove the number of persons who have crossed the rival bridge.[21]

c. Public Acquisition of Toll-Bridge — (I) How Accomplished — (A) In General. In many instances the charters of toll-bridges, or the statutes under which they are established, prescribe the time or manner by which such bridges may be made free.[22] This may be done by requiring a city or county to purchase and assume control of a bridge within its limits,[23] although usually they are merely authorized to purchase or assume control of such bridges and operate them free of charge.[24] The making of such purchases may be considered a necessary

This demonstrates that the franchise granted to the defendants is not the same as that vested in the complainants; nor is there such a similarity between them as renders the one an interference with the other, in the sense in which a new bridge or a ferry interferes with a prior one established at the same point."

22. Thus where a corporation builds a bridge under a charter granting it the exclusive privilege to collect toll for a designated number of years, providing that after the expiration of that time the bridge shall be abandoned to the parish, such bridge must, after the expiration of the franchise, be surrendered without compensation, inasmuch as the consideration for the building of the bridge was a franchise; the parish being the real owner of the bridge. See also Scott v. Des Moines, 34 Iowa 552, holding that, where a toll-bridge and franchise relating thereto were conveyed for a consideration to a city "to be held in trust by said city for the use of the public," the acceptance of such conveyance and trust did not in itself impose upon the city the expense of a county,[25] but a county not having authority to build a bridge across its boundary, without the concurrent action of the other county, cannot purchase a toll-bridge on its boundary without the concurrence of the adjoining county.[26]

(B) By Eminent Domain. A toll-bridge may also be changed to a free one, upon the payment of due compensation by the public under the exercise of its right of eminent domain.[27]

(C) By Expiration of Franchise. When the franchise to take tolls upon a permanent bridge on a public highway ceases, the right of the public to use the bridge as a free one attaches without any right on the part of the builders to remove the structure and destroy the highway.[28]

duty of keeping the bridge in repair as a free bridge, but that the city, in the exercise of its authority for the protection of the public, might properly remove it to construct in its place a new bridge and charge tolls for the use of the same. The fact that other corporations or persons contributed to the erection of the old bridge would not affect this right.

Nature of title required.— Under the Pennsylvania statutes, where a bridge is purchased by the county commissioners, the county acquires exclusive title thereto, to the exclusion of the commonwealth. Venango County v. Oil City St. R. Co., 3 Pa. Dist. 546.

Contract before completion of bridge.— Where the charter of a bridge company provided that a town should have the right, at a price agreed or at an appraisal, to purchase such bridge and the franchise at any time after the bridge was completed and open for travel, a contract by the town before the bridge was built to purchase it on its completion is valid. Saugatuck Bridge Co. v. Westport, 39 Conn. 337.

The stock is taken subject to the obligations of the bridge company arising under an agreement previously made by such company, and therefore a traction company which has furnished the bridge company with funds to reconstruct its bridge so as to allow the traction company to run its cars thereon, with a provision for a settlement of accounts at the end of forty years, cannot recover of the bridge company any of such amount advanced, because of the fact that the city has purchased the stock. Pittsburg, etc., Traction Co. v. Monongahela Bridge Co., 184 Pa. St. 180, 39 Atl. 56.

Repeal of statute by implication.— A statute authorizing a city to lay out as a town way a toll-bridge between it and a town is not by implication repealed by a subsequent act authorizing the city and town, or either of them, to maintain a bill in equity to ascertain the amount, on the payment of which they were authorized by the charter of the bridge to open it free of toll. The former act was intended to delegate to the city the right of eminent domain, while the latter was only intended to enable either of the municipalities to enforce the right of purchase. (D) By Forfeiture of Franchise. What will be such a misuser of a franchise to build and maintain a bridge as will constitute a forfeiture thereof must be determined by the conditions in the charter and the facts of each particular case.[29]

(II) DAMAGES. The amount of damages due the owners of a toll-bridge when it is converted by the public into a free bridge depends upon the nature of the property and title of the proprietors,[30] and considerations peculiar to the particular case.[31] If the bridge is built under a charter or statute limiting the right to take tolls to a certain number of years, the damages would be the value of the right to receive such tolls until the expiration of that period, and the value of the bridge, as a structure, cannot be considered.[32] On the other hand, if the bridge

29. A continued neglect for ten years to comply with prescribed conditions was held, in People v. Thompson, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 235, to constitute a misuser and a ground of forfeiture of the franchise. See also Chandler v. Montgomery County, 31 Ark. 25.

Borrowing of money.— If the charter of a bridge company does not prohibit its borrowing money, such borrowing will be no ground for forfeiture. Nor will the fact that the company, instead of acquiring a piece of ground for erecting an abutment of the bridge in the mode authorized by law, acquired it by contract, or that the company failed to render to the legislature the periodical accounts required by the charter, constitute grounds for its forfeiture. Com. v. Allegheny Bridge Co., 20 Pa. St. 185.

Failure of company to give bond.— Where a charter was granted a company to build a bridge and the incorporators were required to give bond for the completion thereof, the mere fact that the company did not give the bond required by such act will not invalidate the charter or cause its forfeiture. Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. Connecticut River Co., 7 Conn. 28.

Failure to build in strict compliance with contract.— Where a charter was granted to A to build a bridge and collect tolls, which bridge was subsequently swept away by a freshet, and A, after rebuilding the bridge several times, filled in the place of passage with rocks and earth, excepting for a short distance where he built a bridge and collected tolls as before, the real object in view was obtained; the interest of the public was fully subserved, and the change in the original construction does not constitute a ground of forfeiture of the charter. Chandler v. State, 38 Ark. 197.

If a penalty for neglecting to raise the draw of a bridge is imposed by the charter under which it is constructed, such neglect will not work a forfeiture of the franchise. Com. v. Breed, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 460.

30. It must be a just and reasonable compensation and cannot be placed upon any fanciful or arbitrary basis. Central Bridge Corp. v. Lowell, 15 Gray (Mass.) 106.

If the bridge has been abandoned by its proprietor no compensation need be awarded under the late statutes of California. Sears v. Tuolumne County, 132 Cal. 167, 64 Pac. 270.

31. Sunderland Bridge Case, 122 Mass. 459. Thus the charter of a bridge corporation allowed a specific toll for seventy years as a remuneration for the cost of building and maintaining the bridge, and by a subsequent act the corporation obtained a right to take tolls thereby fixed until the net amount of such tolls should be sufficient to reimburse a capital of ten thousand dollars and the cost of rebuilding the bridge with nine per cent interest, unless sooner redeemed by payment of such sum with the same interest. It was held that in ascertaining the value of the franchise under this charter computation should be so made as to give the stock-holders nine per cent interest when the net receipt of tolls fell short of that percentage of the capital, if there were any such years from the income of succeeding years which exceeded nine per cent, so that the average income of the stock-holders would be nine per cent per year. Central Bridge Corp. v. Lowell, 15 Gray (Mass.) 106. See also Clarion Turnpike, etc., Co. v. Clarion County, 172 Pa. St. 243, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 503, 33 Atl. 580, construing the Pennsylvania act of April 10, 1862, under which the Clarion Turnpike & Bridge Company was chartered, and holding that the authority granted the company to maintain a turnpike was distinct from the power granted to it to erect a certain toll-bridge, and that therefore the county, in making the bridge public, need not consider the value of the turnpike franchise.

32. Sunderland Bridge Case, 122 Mass. 459; Central Bridge Corp. v. Lowell, 15 Gray (Mass.) 106.

Certainty as to obligors.— A sum awarded for the franchise of a bridge in two towns "to be paid equally by both towns" is a sufficient award of the sum to be paid by each town. State v. Canterbury, 28 N. H. 195.

Destruction of bridge after award to proprietors.— If, after the damages which the proprietors of a toll-bridge should receive upon its being laid out as a public highway have been awarded by the commissioners, and accepted by the county and towns, the bridge is destroyed by wind or flood, the proprietors are not obliged to rebuild the bridge, before they became entitled to the compensation; inasmuch as their ownership ceased when the award was accepted. Besides, it cannot be said as a matter of law, that the foundation of the award has failed because the bridge is gone; the value of the bridge structure cannot be separately computed, and is not necessarily involved in the award which gives only is erected under no limitations, it would seem that the value of the structure, as well as that of the franchise, must be considered in computing the damages.[33] In either case, however, the question in issue is the value of the property to the company, and not its value to the county or town taking it.[34]

34. Sunderland Bridge Case, 122 Mass. 459; Montgomery County v. Schuylkill Bridge Co., 110 Pa. St. 54, 20 Atl. 407.

Market value.— In a proceeding to take a toll-bridge for public use the principle of market value does not apply in determining the measure of damages. There are no sales of such property by which it can be compared, and the property cannot be said to have, properly speaking, any market value. Montgomery County v. Schuylkill Bridge Co., 110 Pa. St. 54, 20 Atl. 407.

Value of toll-house as damages.— In Central Bridge Corp. v. Lowell, 15 Gray (Mass.) 106, where a toll-bridge was taken by the public to be used as a free bridge, it was held that the toll-house was not within the limits of the town way, and not necessary or useful to it as a public way, and did not therefore pass by the taking, but still remained the property of the proprietors, and should not be included in the damages which the corporations should receive. But in Pennsylvania the opposite view was taken, and the value of the toll-house and also the canal bridge used as an approach to the main bridge were permitted to be included in the damages. Montgomery County v. Schuylkill Bridge Co., 110 Pa. St. 54, 20 Atl. 407.

Evidence of value of franchise.— As the point in issue is the value of the bridge to the company, evidence of the existence of a free bridge a short distance from the one taken is competent as affecting the earning value of the bridge (Lock Haven Bridge Co. v. Clinton County, 157 Pa. St. 379, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 168, 27 Atl. 726); but the fact that a bridge and turnpike as a whole yielded no net income, the income from the bridge being absorbed in maintaining the road, does not affect the amount of damages to be given for the taking of the bridge (Clarion Turnpike, etc., Co. v. Clarion County, 172 Pa. St. 243, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 503, 33 Atl. 580). While the earnings of the company in past years may be shown, it is not error to refuse to extend the inquiry back to a time so remote as to have no bearing on the value of the franchise at the time of the taking. Montgomery County v. Schuylkill Bridge Co., 110 Pa. St. 54, 20 Atl. 407. Evidence as to the cost of repairs made on the bridge (Mifflin Bridge Co. v. Juniata County, 144 Pa. St. 365, 28 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 399, 22 Atl. 896, 13 L. R. A. 431) or evidence as to what it would cost the county to erect a new bridge at the same or some other point (Mifflin Bridge Co. v. Juniata County, 144 Pa. St. 365, 28 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 399, 22 Atl. 896, 13 L. R. A. 431) is inadmissible; and evidence that the company had declared larger dividends than allowable by law is immaterial (Montgomery County v. Schuylkill Bridge Co., 110 Pa. St. 54, 20 Atl. 407).

35. By 43 Geo. III, c. 59, § 5, no bridge thereafter to be built in any county, by or at the expense of any individual or private person, body politic or corporate, should be deemed a county bridge unless erected in a substantial and commodious manner under the direction, or to the satisfaction of the public. This statute was held to apply only to newly built bridges, and not to those merely widened or repaired since its passage (Rex v. Lancashire, 2 B. & Ad. 813, 1 L. J. M. C. 1, 22 E. C. L. 342), and a bridge rebuilt where one had been washed away was not a new bridge within the meaning of the act, although the plan of structure or its location was to some extent changed (Reg. v. Southampton County, 18 Q. B. 841, 17 Jur. 254, 21 L. J. M. C. 201, 14 Eng. L. & Eq. 116, 83 E. C. L. 841; Rex v. Devon County, 5 B. & Ad. 383, 2 L. J. M. C. 74, 2 N. & M. 412, 27 E. C. L. 165. See also Reg. v. Somerset, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 452); but it was held that this statute did apply to the erection of a bridge by trustees, appointed by a legal turnpike act, and that therefore it was not the duty of a county to repair such bridge (Rex v. Derby County, 3 B. & Ad. 147, 1 L. J. M. C. 1, 23 E. C. L. 73).

36. Effect of right to take tolls.—The fact that turnpike trustees by whom a bridge was built were given authority to take tolls to a limited amount for the support of the roads would not relieve the county of this obligation in the absence of a specific direction that such tolls be applied in the repair of the bridges. Rex v. Oxfordshire, 4 B. & C. 194, 6 D. & R. 231, 3 L. J. K. B. O. S. 198, 10 E. C. L. 540; Rex v. Yorkshire West Riding, 5 Burr. 2594, 2 East 342, Lofft. 238, 2 W. Bl. 685, 6 Rev. Rep. 439.

The fact that a culvert might have been sufficient will not excuse the county of this duty on the ground that the bridge was not necessary. Rex v. Lancashire, 2 B. & Ad. 813, 1 L. J. M. C. 1, 22 E. C. L. 342.

ity to repair was on the county,[37] but this rule was not adopted in this country,[38] where the duty is one dependent upon statute, which may be changed or modified at the discretion of the legislature.[39] By some statutes the duty to repair still rests, either wholly or partly, upon the county.[40] Statutes in other

L. 841 (holding that all public bridges in the Isle of Wight which, before the passage of the act of 1842, were repairable by tithings from the parish or township in which they were situated should be repaired by the county, and that the previous agreement whereby such bridges were repaired by tithings from the parishes did not affect the legal liability of the county to see that such bridges were repaired); Rex v. Yorkshire West Riding, 5 Burr. 2594, 2 East 342, Lofft. 238, 2 W. See also Rex v. Kent County, 13 East 220, 12 Rev. Rep. 330, where the county was exonerated by showing that a navigation company was, by its charter, liable to repair the bridge in question.

Bridge must be over waters flumen vel cursus aquæ.— To be a bridge which it is incumbent upon the county to repair at common law it must be erected over waters flowing in a channel between banks more or less defined, although such channel may be occasionally dry (Reg. v. Derbyshire, 2 Q. B. 745, 2 G. & D. 97, 6 Jur. 483, 11 L. J. M. C. 51, 42 E. C. L. 893; Rex v. Oxfordshire, 1 B. & Ad. 289, 8 L. J. K. B. O. S. 354, 20 E. C. L. 489), but it is a question of fact in each case whether an arch thrown over a stream is such a bridge or not (Rex v. Whitney, 3 A. & E. 69, 30 E. C. L. 53, 7 C. & P. 208, 32 E. C. L. 575, 1 Hurl. & W. 147, 4 L. J. M. C. 86, 4 N. & M. 594. And see Reg. v. Gloucestershire, C. & M. 506, 41 E. C. L. 277).

A short foot-bridge composed of a few plank nine or ten feet in length, and a hand-rail spanning a small stream which intersects a public foot-path is not repairable as a county bridge. Reg. v. Southampton County, 18 Q. B. 841, 17 Jur. 254, 21 L. J. M. C. 201, 14 Eng. L. & Eq. 116, 83 E. C. L. 841.

Bridge used in time of floods.— A bridge which is used only on occasion of floods and which lies out of and alongside the road commonly used is a public bridge, and it is the duty of the county to repair it. Rex v. Northampton County, 2 M. & S. 262, 15 Rev. Rep. 241; Rex v. Devon County, R. & M. 144, 21 E. C. L. 720.

Need not be built by the public.— It was not necessary to this liability that the bridge be constructed by the public. If it was built by a private individual and afterward was used by the public and became of public utility it was the duty of the county to repair it. Reg. v. Ely, 15 Q. B. 827, 14 Jur. 956, 19 L. J. M. C. 223, 4 N. Sess. Cas. 222, 69 E. C. L. 827; Rex v. Yorkshire West Riding, 5 Burr. 2594, 2 East 342, Lofft. 238, 2 W. Bl. 685, 6 Rev. But the fact that such bridge is of public utility and is used by the public is not necessarily conclusive against a county on the question of its liability to repair; user and utility being only elements upon which the jury may determine whether or not there has been a public acceptance. There need not, however, in addition to such evidence, be proof of an overt act of adoption by a body representing the county. Reg. v. Southampton County, 19 Q. B. D. 590, 57 L. T. Rep. N. S. 261, 16 Cox C. C. 271, 22 J. P. 52, 56 L. J. M. C. 112.

The common-law idea of adoption exists in this country and therefore if a county or other municipality which, by the statutes, would be liable to repair a bridge built by the public, adopts a bridge built by an individual and uses it for public purposes it will be liable to repair the same. Iowa.— It is within the discretion of the county board to repair small bridges and culverts throughout the county. Denison v. Watts, 97 Iowa 633, 66 N. W. 886; Roby v. Appanoose County, 63 Iowa 113, 18 N. W. 711. But it is said that the only bridges which are required to be repaired by the county are those which require for their construction an extraordinary expenditure of money beyond the means at the disposition of the road districts, and those which have been constructed by the county. Chandler v. Fremont County, 42 Iowa 58. The fact, however, that a part of the cost of construction was defrayed by voluntary contributions does not relieve the county from its duty to keep the bridge in repair. Moreland v. Mitchell County, 40 Iowa 394.

Nebraska.— The fact that a precinct in the county issued bonds to aid in the construction of a county bridge does not relieve the county of its duty to repair. Dutton v. State, 42 Nebr. 804, 60 N. W. 1042.

New Jersey.— Beatty v. Titus, 47 N. J. L. 89, holding that where the expense of repairing did not exceed the sum of fifty dollars it was the duty, under the statute, of the overseer of the highways within whose jurisdiction the bridge was situated, and the chosen freeholders of the township, to superintend or contract for the work.

Pennsylvania.— Not only have the general statutes been several times changed, but they have also been modified by the passage of special statutes for certain counties. It may, however, be said that prior to the passage of the act of April 4, 1802, the duty to maintain bridges was exclusively the business of the county. From 1802 to 1843 this duty was either wholly or partly upon the township, but the act of 1843 again placed the duty primarily upon the county, and the act of 1876, it would seem, did not change this primary liability. Com. v. Northampton County, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 299, where the course of statutory legislation in the state is fully traced. See also Dougherty v. Upper Allen Tp., 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 304. These general statutes would seem to apply only to bridges erected by the county, and not to those which had been built by a turnpike company and subsequently freed of toll. In re Bedford, etc., Turnpike Road Bridge, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 296. Compare Whitmire v. Muncy Creek Tp., 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 399, where the statutes of 1843, 1859, 1860, relating to the repair of bridges are reviewed, and from which it would seem that the duty to repair is considered as resting on the township, unless the expense be too great, in which case the county should, when properly notified, repair the structure.

Virginia.— To render the county liable, the record of the court must show that the county court proceeded in compliance with the statute in the establishment of the bridge, and the county is not bound to repair or maintain a bridge not established or adopted by the court in conformity with statutory requirements, although the bridge was erected by an individual in a public place and dedicated to the public. Sampson v. Goochland Justices, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 241.

Wisconsin.— The fact that the landing or approach on one side of a county bridge is private property will not relieve it from its duty to repair so long as it is kept open for public travel. State v. Wood County, 41 Wis. 28.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bridges," § 50.

What constitutes bridge within meaning of statute.— Under Ind. Stat. (1881), § 2892, a bridge, forty feet long, sixteen feet wide, and eight feet above the ground, constructed by a county across a ditch on a free gravel road, is clearly a bridge within the meaning and operation of such statute. Boone County v. Mitchler, 137 Ind. 140, 36 N. E. 534.

41. Connecticut.— Daly v. New Haven, 69 Conn. 644, 38 Atl. 397 (holding, however, that the duty to keep a bridge in repair should refer to the bridge when used as a highway, and that it did not necessarily follow that a party charged with the duty to repair a bridge was also charged with the duty to maintain and operate a draw in the bridge, to aid in navigation); Lewis v. Litchfield, 2 Root (Conn.) 436; Swift v. Berry, 1 Root (Conn.) 448; Eldredge v. Pomfret, 1 Root (Conn.) 270.

bridges are situated. Statutes in still other jurisdictions place such duty upon townships.[42]

(B) When Located Within City or Village Limits. If a bridge is situated within the corporate limits of a city or village, and was built by such municipality and is a part of its streets,[43] was purchased,[44] or accepted by it,[45] or in some legitimate way was brought within such limits,[46] such corporate body, by virtue

Y.) 432, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 749, 64 N. Y. St. 419. But the imposition of this duty upon a commissioner of highways of a town does not require him to repair a bridge in his town wholly upon an Indian reservation. Bishop v. Barton, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 436. And see Hill v. Livingston County, 12 N. Y. 52, where the liability of the town as a general rule to repair its bridges was discussed and affirmed, and it was held that the special laws of 1833 authorizing a county board to levy fifteen hundred dollars to build a bridge over the Genesee river, and three hundred dollars on the town of York, two hundred dollars on the town of Avon, and the residue upon the whole county did not change the general law.

Rhode Island.— North Providence v. Dyerville Mfg. Co., 13 R. I. 45, holding that R. I. Gen. Stat. (1873), c. 60, § 22, did not apply to a manufacturing company, and that therefore the town being in duty bound to repair the bridge could not recover against the manufacturing company for an outlay for repairs.

Vermont.— Under a statute requiring the repairing to be done "as soon as may be" the town must proceed with as much dispatch as the importance of the road, the magnitude of the work, the opportunity of procuring the materials, and other circumstances necessarily connected with such a work will reasonably permit. Briggs v. Guilford, 8 Vt. 264. But a town, while proceeding with reasonable dispatch in the repair of a bridge, has a right to insist that an owner of a dam below the bridge desist from obstructing the flow of the waters of the stream and allow it to flow as it was accustomed to at the time they obtained their grant from the city. East Montpelier v. Wheelock, 70 Vt. 391, 41 Atl. 432.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bridges," § 51.

Imposition on county by special acts.— Since the duty to repair is upon the towns in the state of New York, the imposition of such duty upon the county can only be done by a special act. For a judicial construction of the New York act of April, 1808, holding that under it a resolution of the board of supervisors directing a sum to be levied for repairing the bridges on certain towns was erroneous see People v. Dutchess County, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 50.

42. Brophy v. Schindler, 126 Mich. 341, 85 N. W. 1114; Dietrich v. Schremms, 117 Mich. 298, 75 N. W. 618, the latter case holding that a statute which authorizes a township to purchase a bridge and requires it to attend to the draw makes it the duty of such township to keep the bridge in repair and provide funds to operate the draw.

In North Carolina the duty to repair public bridges is primarily upon the township, but it is the duty of the county to concur and act with the township in the repairing when it cannot conveniently be borne by such municipalities, although it would seem that in such case the expense must be borne by the whole county. State v. Selby, 83 N. C. 617.

Effect of special act authorizing county to rebuild.— The fact that the legislature had, on two occasions, by special act, authorized the county to rebuild a certain bridge when destroyed by freshets will not relieve the township of its duty to repair. Delta Lumber Co. v. Wayne County, 71 Mich. 572, 40 N. W. 1.

43. Daniels v. Athens, 54 Ga. 79; Jordan v. Hannibal, 87 Mo. 673.

44. Marseilles v. Howland, 124 Ill. 547, 16 N. E. 883 [affirming 23 Ill. App. 101], holding that upon the purchase of a toll-bridge by a village the company's right to the street reverted to the village, and it therefore became the duty of the village to maintain and repair the bridge.

45. Hord v. Montgomery, 26 Ill. App. 41.

46. Georgia.— Polk County v. Cedartown, 110 Ga. 824, 36 S. E. 50 [explaining Daniels v. Athens, 54 Ga. 79], where, by an amendment of the charter of a city, a bridge was brought within its corporate limits, and it was held that the county authorities could relinquish their jurisdiction in such a case, either with or without the assent of the municipal authorities.

Indiana.— Goshen v. Myers, 119 Ind. 196, 21 N. E. 657. And this duty exists although the bridge may cost more than five hundred dollars, in which case it is made the duty of the boards of county commissioners to build all bridges within the corporate limits of any city, the estimated cost of which exceeds the above amount. Wabash v. Carver, 129 Ind. 552, 29 N. E. 25, 13 L. R. A. 851. But the mere fact that a bridge constructed by a county as a part of the public road leads up to and joins the street at the corporate limits of a village does not relieve the county of its duty to repair and impose it upon the village. Owen County v. Washington Tp., 121 Ind. 379, 23 N. E. 257.

Iowa.— See Tubbs v. Maquoketa, 32 Iowa 564.

Kansas.— Rosedale v. Golding, 55 Kan. 167, 40 Pac. 284. And the fact that the county concurred in the purchase of a bridge, and for some time exercised joint control of the same with the city, and contributed of its control over its streets and thoroughfares generally conferred upon it by statute, is under obligation to repair. On the other hand, if a bridge is controlled by, and is the property of, a county, the fact that it is within the corporate limits of a city will not of itself impose upon the latter corporation the duty to repair.[47]

(c) When Built Over Boundaries. The obligation to repair a bridge built over the boundary between two counties or municipalities is, by statute, generally imposed upon them jointly;[48] and one may be compelled, at the suit of the other, jointly to its maintenance does not of itself impose any duty on such county for the future, or change the duty resting upon the city. Shawnee County v. Topeka, 39 Kan. 197, 200, 18 Pac. 161 [distinguishing Wyandotte County v. Wyandotte, 29 Kan. 431], where the court say: "This duty appears to be imposed upon the city as a municipal corporation, and the duties devolving upon its officers having care of the streets, rest upon them as officers of the city. The power to repair and maintain the streets in a safe condition conferred upon the corporation, is implied by authority to levy taxes and impose local assessments for that purpose. In conformity with these general rules, the duty to repair streets is considered to exist without positive statutory provision."

Michigan.—Williams v. Petoskey, 108 Mich. 260, 66 N. W. 55, holding that under the facts of the case in question the statutory imposition of the duty upon the township at large did not relieve the village of its duty to repair the bridge constituting a part of its streets.

Missouri.— Walker v. Point Pleasant, 49 Mo. App. 244, holding that under Mo. Rev. Stat. (1889), § 1674, it is the duty of the town to repair bridges on its streets, although the streets were never established by ordinance.

Ohio.— Piqua v. Geist, 59 Ohio St. 163, 52 N. E. 124, holding that under Ohio Rev. Stat. § 860, as amended by the statute of 1894, a municipality must keep in repair the bridges on its streets, although it receives no part of the bridge fund levied on the property within its limits. See also State v. Cincinnati, 4 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 368, holding that by virtue of Ohio Rev. Stat. (1896), § 2640, a bridge extending from one street to another, built for the sole benefit of the city and accommodation of the public traveling over its streets, must be maintained by the city, although the county contributed to the expense of its construction; and the county is not such a party in interest that a writ of mandamus may issue on its behalf to compel the city to make such repairs.

Wisconsin.—State v. Wood County, 41 Wis. 28 [citing Kittredge v. Milwaukee, 26 Wis. 46]. See also Battles v. Doll, (Wis. 1902) 89 N. W. 187.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bridges," § 52.

Optional repair by village.— Under N. Y. Laws (1870), c. 291, relating to villages, it is optional with the village to repair its bridges, and in the absence of an election so to do the duty continues upon the town. Washburn v. Mt. Kisco, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 329.

Under a special statute authorizing a city to erect and maintain a bridge, and requiring it after the construction to maintain it in good repair, the city cannot, after the construction of the bridge, evade the obligation to repair until the public way over it has been discontinued, although it is not as greatly benefited by the bridge as another city. Brunswick v. Bath, 90 Me. 479, 38 Atl. 532.

The imposition of a fine for wilful and negligent injury to such structures is a proper method of maintaining such repair. Korah v. Ottawa, 32 Ill. 121, 83 Am. Dec. 255.

Nature of interest which will render adjoining municipalities both liable.— After a thorough exposition of sections 107 and 108, of the Illinois road and bridge law of 1880, it was held that the word "interest" as used therein must be considered as meaning an interest arising from legal proprietorship, growing out of the concurrent acts of the two boards of commissioners of highways, and not an interest arising from the proximity of such bridge to the dividing line between the towns, or an interest arising from the beneficial use of the bridge by the inhabitants of to contribute toward such expense.[49] Such obligation may also be assumed by contract or agreement, expressed or implied.[50]

(II) PRIVATE PARTIES— (A) Bridge Companies. The duty of repairing a public bridge constructed by a company for the purpose of taking tolls is usually imposed upon such company,[51] and in the absence of any special provision in the charter, this duty would seem to be the same in extent or degree as that of a town or other municipality in the control of its bridges.[52]

(B) Individuals. An individual liability to repair a public bridge may arise by express agreement,[53] by prescription,[54] or by the pursuit or assumption of a business necessitating the maintenance of a bridge in the public highway, which, aside from such individual interest, would be unnecessary.[55]

Necessity of being on actual boundary.— Inasmuch as it may often happen in the laying out of a highway and construction of a bridge that it would be unwise to place the bridge on the exact boundary between two municipalities, but that nevertheless both would be greatly, if not equally, benefited by such bridge, the statutes of some jurisdictions provide that a bridge built on a road "near" a town line must be jointly repaired by the municipalities the same as if on the exact boundary. Necessity of keeping bridge lighted.—Under a provision of a charter of a toll-bridge corporation that a bridge should "at all times be kept in good, safe, and passable repair" it is incumbent upon the company to light the bridge if a jury finds such lighting necessary to make it safe and convenient for passage at night. Com. v. Central Bridge Corp., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 242.

Duty limited to affording safe passageway. — Where the abutments of a bridge rested upon the dam of an adjoining mill-owner, the obligation of the bridge company to keep the dam in repair extended only to such repairs as were necessary to keep the bridge in a safe condition for passage, and not necessarily to maintaining the dam so that it would retain water. Where the bridge is built by a contractor, he is generally required to give a bond, obligating himself to keep the bridge in repair for a certain period, and in such case it is held that the sureties thereon are liable if the bridge becomes unsafe within that time, although they were not notified of the repairs necessary to restore it. b. Approaches. Inasmuch as the approaches necessary to make a bridge accessible are properly included within the meaning of the term,[56] it follows that the duty to repair such approaches and abutments is upon the party whose duty it is to repair the bridge proper.[57] The difficult point is the determination of what constitutes an approach as distinguished from the highway generally,[58] which, in the absence of definite expression, must be determined by a consideration of what is reasonable under the circumstances of the particular case.[59]

2. To Rebuild. While in some jurisdictions the statutes specifically authorize or impose upon municipalities the power and duty to rebuild bridges after their destruction, as well as to repair them,[60] the law seems to be well settled that the

The fact that the bridge was built within three hundred feet of an old bridge repairable by the inhabitants of another county, who were bound of course to maintain such three hundred feet of road, would not relieve the county building the latter bridge from its duty to repair, and subject the former county to this duty. Where a stream was widened by a flood leaving a space of fifteen or twenty feet between the ends of a bridge and the bank, it was held that the obligation of the corporation having the franchise of the bridge to maintain and keep it in repair would require the extension of the bridge to the new bank thus created in the absence of other limitations in the franchise. duty to repair, whether imposed by statute or assumed by contract, includes the duty to rebuild when, for any reason, the bridge is destroyed during the continuance of such duty.[61]

B. Enforcement of Duty — 1. In General. No general statement can be laid down as to the proper action to be invoked in the enforcement of the duty (holding that an act, providing that in case a bridge should be damaged or destroyed by the elements or otherwise, after any town-meeting shall have been held, the commissioner of highways, with the consent of the board of auditors, may cause the same to be immediately repaired or rebuilt, etc., did not authorize such commissioner to contract for the rebuilding of a bridge after the town-meeting, where it appeared that the old bridge continued to be used as before the meeting, and that no change had occurred in it except such as was produced by use); Taylor Tp. v. Lawrence County, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 396, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. 343 (holding that a causeway leading to a county bridge is within the purview of the Pennsylvania act of May 5, 1876, making it the duty of the county commissioners to rebuild bridges when blown down, destroyed, or partly destroyed by floods, freshets, etc., and must be rebuilt by the county); Riddle v. Delaware County, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 600, 2 Del. Co. (Pa.) 232 (holding that the Pennsylvania act of Jan. 26, 1844, authorizing county commissioners to rebuild bridges destroyed by floods "or otherwise," referred only to sudden or accidental destruction of bridges, and did not authorize the commissioners to take down the county bridge and replace it with a new one, when, in their judgment, a more substantial and commodious one was necessary for the accommodation of the public travel).

Co. Ct. 28); and where such contract has been let, in compliance with the statute, the town board cannot, after the bridge has been constructed by the contractors, refuse to audit and allow to the full amount the claim for the contract price on the ground that there was no need for the bridge, and that the commissioners did not let the contract to the lowest bidder, in the absence of evidence that the commissioners acted corruptly and collusively with the contractor in accepting a higher bid (People v. Campbell, 92 Hun (N. to repair, the statutes with regard thereto being by no means uniform. The remedy may be by indictment,[62] by mandamus,[63] or by action for a penalty where the neglect is wilful and intentional;[64] but it has been held that failure to keep a public bridge in repair was not an obstruction of the public road within the meaning of a statute making such obstruction punishable as a misdemeanor.[65]

2. By Indictment or Information — a. In General. Generally speaking, the county, town, or person chargeable with the duty of repairing public bridges may be indicted for the wilful neglect of such duty,[66] although the statute prescribing the duty is silent as to the mode of punishment for its neglect.[67] To sustain such an indictment it should be shown that there was palpable omission of a duty imperatively required by law, or a wilful or palpable neglect of a discretionary duty.[68] Whether a bridge in a certain place would be of public utility, and

Exception to rule.— Where the statute provides that the penalty for failure of a turnpike company to keep its bridges in repair shall be the forfeiture of its franchise and right to collect tolls, no indictment for a failure to rebuild a bridge which has been carried away by a flood will lie. When right accrues.— Under a statute creating a corporation to build a bridge and allowing it three years therefor, and also providing that it should be built with a draw and piers, if the corporation completes the bridge and takes toll for several months, but neglects to build any piers, they are indictable, although the three years have not yet elapsed. Admissibility of evidence.— Under a plea of not guilty on an indictment against the inhabitants of a county for not repairing a public bridge, it is for defendant to give evidence of the bridge having been repaired by private individuals. Rex v. Northampton County, 2 M. & S. 262, 15 Rev. Rep. 241. So, too, it has been held that, under a plea that three persons were bound respectively to repair the three arches of a bridge ratione tenuræ a witness who, as well as his father and grandfather, had been employed in doing repairs on parts of the bridge, might testify as to having heard them say who was liable to repair such three arches. Such evidence was not necessarily evidence of reputation of a particular fact, but might proceed upon a distinct reputation prevailing in the neighborhood or upon an admission of the owners of the land in question that they were liable therefore subject the town to an indictment for the non-building or repairing of it, is a question of fact for the jury.[69]

b. Form of Indictment or Information.[70] Although a bridge is part of the highway on which it is situated, an indictment for its non-repair should use the term "bridge,"[71] and contain an express allegation that a bridge had been built.[72] If the indictment is against an individual[73] it must be shown how he became subject to such duty[74] and if the possession of funds necessary for repairs is a condition precedent to defendant's liability the possession of such funds should be alleged;[75] but the practicability or necessity of the bridge need not be averred or proved.[76]

3. By Mandamus.[77] Upon the proper showing by a duly authorized petirespectively to repair that part of the bridge. Reg. v. Bedfordshire, 3 C. L. R. 442, 6 Cox C. C. 505, 4 E. & B. 535, 1 Jur. N. S. 208, 24 L. J. Q. B. 81, 3 Wkly. Rep. 205, 82 E. C. L. 535.

Sufficiency of evidence.— An indictment for non-repair of a bridge on the ground of liability ratione tenuræ cannot be sustained, where it appears that the tenement on which the liability is charged originated within the time of legal memory. Defenses.— Upon an indictment against a town for neglecting to maintain a bridge, a defense that the town council had declared, under R. I. Rev. Stat. c. 43, § 26, that the road over such bridge was useless was insufficient unless it be shown that the bridge had in fact become so, the declaration of the council not being conclusive as to its uselessness. State v. Cumberland, 7 R. I. 75.

Since repairing involves the exercise of discretion, it is error to direct on the conviction of freeholders for the non-repair of a bridge, that the sheriff shall make such repairs, since the performance of such work is committed by statute, not to the sheriff, but to the freeholders alone, who should be compelled to discharge that duty. Three hundred feet of highway not included by term.— Although the inhabitants of a county are in general liable to repair a highway within three hundred feet of the bridge as well as the bridge itself, an indictment which charges merely a non-repair of the "bridge" is not sufficient to charge them with the non-repair of the highway within that distance. Likewise an indictment for non-repairing an ancient bridge which is described as being situated within the parish of M & P, without showing what part of it was situated in the township of M, and that the inhabitants thereof were liable to repair it, is bad, as no special or sufficient construction was shown to render the inhabitants of the township liable to repairs, and, since they could not hold land, they could not be liable ratione tenuræ. IV. REGULATION OF USE.

A. In General. The power to regulate the use of bridges would seem to be a necessary incident to the power to build or repair them.[85] The manner of exercising this power, whether obtained by necessary implication or derived from charter or constitutional provisions, may, however, be prescribed or determined by the legislature.[86] Such provisions may allow the bridge authorities a discretion as to the manner of regulating the travel,[87] but if specific and mandatory must be observed to render the regulations binding.[88]

Co. v. International Bridge Co., 7 Fed. 653 (holding that the act of congress of June, 1870, which refers the question of the conditions upon which railway companies shall enjoy the use of an international bridge to the district court of the United States for decision was a proper exercise of legislative power, and that such decision should proceed upon settled principles of law and equity, and not upon arbitrary discretion). See also Hogan v. New York, 68 N. Y. 17, holding that under a proper construction of the New York Laws of 1867, c. 586, 1868, c. 853, 1869, c. 867, and 1870, c. 383, these acts gave the park commissioners entire control of all bridges over the Harlem river and Spuyten Duyvil creek, and that an intention to except Kingsbridge from the operation of such acts could not be inferred.

Construction of statute. — A statute which authorizes any company which maintains a bridge over a river connecting any city of more than one million inhabitants with any other city in the state, to lay tracks and operate a railway on its bridge, includes a corporation which is engaged in the construction of such a bridge, although at the time the company received its original charter there was no city at one terminus of the bridge in question. New York, etc., Bridge Co. v. Smith, 148 N. Y. 540, 42 N. E. 1088 [affirming 90 Hun (N. Y.) 312, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 920, 70 N. Y. St. 586].

87. What constitutes abuse of discretion. — Under New York Laws (1897), c. 66, §§ 3, 4, the trustees of the Brooklyn bridge were authorized to contract with certain railroad corporations to permit them to carry passengers over the bridge, and were directed to prepare plans regulating the operation of cars "as such trustees shall deem best adapted to promote the public comfort and convenience . . . and, except as otherwise provided by such plans and specifications, should be in substantial conformity with" certain designated plans. The original contract executed by these trustees followed the designated plans in providing for an elevated terminus at the New York city end of the bridge, with elevators, thus leaving a clear passageway for pedestrians. There being various objections to this plan, the contract was afterward modified so as to provide for a terminus at the end of the roadway with loops crossing the passageway for pedestrians and for gates to close such passageway whenever the cars were crossing it. It was held that the variance from the plans of the statute was within the trustees' discretion, and that therefore the work would not be enjoined. Hearst v. Shea, 156 N. Y. 169, 50 N. E. 788 [affirming 24 N. Y. App. Div. 73, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 49].

Forbidding the dragging of timbers, stone, etc., over a bridge, and requiring such articles to be raised on wheels or otherwise, is a reasonable, proper, and enforceable regulation. Holmes v. Pickering, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 179, 3 West. L. J. 222.

Power of trustees of Brooklyn bridge. — Prior to the consolidation of the cities of New York and Brooklyn, the trustees of the Brooklyn bridge had exclusive control and management thereof, and by virtue of this power it was proper for them, and was within the scope of their authority, to contract with the New York Mail & Newspaper Transportation Company, allowing them to construct and operate pneumatic mail-tubes along such bridge; and such contract was binding on the commissioner who succeeded them, subject, however, to his power to maintain the bridge for the greatest efficiency for the paramount purpose of its construction — that of public travel. New York Mail, etc., Transp. Co. v. Shea, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 266, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 563.

88. Thus a by-law by a bridge corporation imposing a penalty for riding or driving a horse over the bridge faster than a walk is

B. As to Tolls. Subject to the exception that the charter of a bridge company must not be impaired,[89] the regulation of tolls is subject to legislative action.[90] In some jurisdictions the legislature has subjected the company to the payment of a penalty [91] or to an indictment [92] for an overcharge. In other jurisdictions the right to so regulate has been delegated in whole or in part to the interested municipalities;[93] and when such is the case the courts will not interfere and define the limit of the amount which may be exacted.[94]

V. LIABILITY FOR INJURIES CAUSED BY DEFECTIVE BRIDGE.

A. General Nature of. As neither a municipality nor a bridge company is to be held as an insurer of the safety of its bridges,[95] it follows that they are liable only on the ground of misfeasance [96] or negligence either in the manner of construction or in the maintenance thereof,[97] whether the action be for an injury to not binding upon a person who has no actual notice thereof, unless posted at the ends of the bridge as required by the statute. Worcester v. Essex Merrimac Bridge Corp., 7 Gray (Mass.) 457.

89. See, generally, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

90. Monongahela Bridge Co. v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 114 Pa. St. 478, 8 Atl. 233, holding that, under the statutes and charter by virtue of which the bridge company was organized, the court of quarter sessions had jurisdiction to fix the tolls for a street car to cross such bridge, and from its decision no appeal would lie; the constitutional provision of the state giving a right of appeal and trial by jury from an assessment of damages arising from the exercise of the right of eminent domain having no application to the case. See also Canada Southern R. Co. v. International Bridge Co., 8 Fed. 190, holding that the act of congress of June, 1870, did not confer upon the district court of the United States jurisdiction over a controversy relating solely to the compensation which is due the corporation for the use of the bridge.

91. One penalty only is incurred, under the Pennsylvania act of 1874, § 31, which provides for a penalty against a bridge company for each overcharge of toll which it shall "collect or demand," if the payment is made at one time for tolls for use of the bridge at various times preceding the payment, although the account embraces various items of overcharge. Porter v. Dawson Bridge Co., 157 Pa. St. 367, 27 Atl. 730.

92. See Lewis v. State, 41 Ala. 414, holding that the indictment against a bridge-keeper for an overcharge must aver that the bridge was licensed by the commissioners' court of the county, and specify the prescribed rates of toll. An averment that defendant "being employed as the keeper of said bridge, did demand and collect from B. F. P. larger toll than is authorized by said charter," is not sufficient.

93. Stanislaus Bridge Co. v. Horsley, 46 Cal. 108 (holding that the power of the board of supervisors was not exhausted when they once fixed the tolls, but that they might change the same from time to time subject to supervisory control of the legislature); Macon v. Macon, etc., R. Co., 7 Ga. 221 (holding that the act of 1847 which vested in the corporate authority of the city of Macon the right to regulate the tolls of the Ocmulgee bridge repealed all laws which would militate against such acts).

Validity — When not police regulation. A city ordinance subjecting any officer or agent of a bridge company to a fine if he should refuse to sell packages of one hundred passage tickets for a dollar is not a police regulation, and is therefore invalid. While it was proper, in this case, for the municipality to insist that one hundred passage tickets be sold for a dollar it could not enforce such authority by a penalty. What is not negligence. — It is not negli-adjoining property[98] or to a traveler.[99] Such negligence must be the proximate cause of the injury,[1] and whether it exists, or, if shown to exist, whether it is the proximate cause, is a question of fact for the jury.[2]

B. To Adjoining Landowners — 1. Ground of Liability — a. In General. As a rule, any person or corporation having the right to construct a bridge will be liable for any undue damages it may cause to adjoining property, upon the broad principle that every man must conduct his business in such a manner as to do no unnecessary injury to others;[3] but the liability of a county for such injury has been denied, in the absence of a statute expressly giving a right of action.[4]

b. Injury to Business. In the absence of evidence of a gross abuse of discretion in the construction or repair of a bridge a municipality is not liable to the adjacent property owner for incidental injuries to his business or for a decrease in the rents of his property during such construction.[5]

c. Interference With Flow of Water. If a municipality construct a bridge in such a manner as to divert the stream from its natural course,[6] or cause it to set gence to construct a bridge of the width of sixteen feet, one inch lower on one side than on the other. Nor, where there is a hill at one end of a bridge, is there any negligence in constructing a bridge twenty feet in length, one foot lower at one end than at the other, thus creating an incline toward the hill. Who is adjacent property owner.— A tenant of realty under a lease of four years is not an adjacent property owner within the meaning of a statute which provides that any person who has "real estate," and is injured by the change of grade made in erecting a certain bridge may recover damages for the same from the city. back, or, in certain instances, overflow upon, an adjoining landowner,[7] it is liable in damages for the injuries thus sustained, unless the flood or freshet causing the injury be an extraordinary one, in which case the rule would be otherwise.[8] The same rules are applicable in determining the liability or non-liability of railroads or other quasi-municipal corporations for overflows alleged to be due to the improper construction of their bridges.[9] The same rules also apply where a bridge, by reason of its improper construction, unduly diminishes or increases the volume of water theretofore enjoyed by a mill-owner, it being held that the municipality or corporation must respond in damages for the injury.[10]

Maryland.— Piedmont, etc., R. Co. v. McKenzie, 75 Md. 458, 24 Atl. 157, holding that if the bridge was carried away because of its negligent or unskilful construction, in an extraordinary high flood, the railroad company would be liable, but if it was properly constructed and was carried away only by reason of the unusual destructiveness of the flood the company was not liable.

Rhode Island.— Spencer v. Hartford, etc., R. Co., 10 R. I. 14.

Texas.— Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Parker, 50 Tex. 330 (holding that if the backwater was caused by an extraordinary rain which could not have been anticipated when the culvert was built the road would not be liable, but that the fact that the bridge was on a street and used by the public would not release it from its liability); St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Craigo, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 238, 31 S. W. 207.

West Virginia.— Taylor v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 33 W. Va. 39, 10 S. E. 29.

Contribution to cause of injury.—If a party over whose land a railroad bridge is built, by building dikes along the creek, fences the flow of the stream into a narrow channel, he will be held to have contributed in a degree to his own injury, where an ice-gorge is formed against the bridge, causing the overflow of his land and injury to his dikes. Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. Barton, 38 Ill. App. 469. But the rule is otherwise if the dikes or levees were constructed before the bridge was built. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Schaffer, 26 Ill. App. 280.

The compensation allowed by law to an individual for damages caused by the construction of a railroad through his premises does not preclude him from afterward suing the railroad for damages from an overflow caused by an insufficient culvert or bridge. Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Wachter, 123 Ill. 440, 15 N. E. 279, 5 Am. St. Rep. 532 [affirming 23 Ill. App. 415]. But in the absence of evidence of neglect of duty on its part or of some excess of the powers conferred upon it incidental injuries must be held to have been included in what plaintiff agreed to receive when the road was constructed. 2. Enforcement of Liability.[11] In the recovery of damages to adjoining property caused by the improper construction of a bridge,[12] plaintiff must show that he has sustained injury by reason of the defective construction,[13] and that defendant was guilty of negligence.[14] Whether the overflow was caused by the construction of the bridge is a question of fact for the jury.[15] street, it not being shown that that fact in any way added to their injury); Taylor v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 33 W. Va. 39, 10 S. E. 29. Compare Ely v. Rochester, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 133.

Contributory negligence.— A mill-owner whose property has been injured by the obstruction of the flow of water of a stream by the negligent construction of a county bridge is not guilty of contributory negligence because he had, previous to the construction of the bridge, raised his mill-dam, but for which the property might not have been flooded; it being the duty of the county in erecting the bridge to provide for the then existing conditions. Riddle v. Delaware County, 156 Pa. St. 643, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 155, 27 Atl. 569.

12. Form of remedy.— While the remedy of plaintiff in such a case is usually an action of trespass, it is held that the statute of Pennsylvania providing a special proceeding by view for the assessment of damages in such cases (act of May 24, 1878), excludes the common-law remedies. Power v. Ridgway, 149 Pa. St. 317, 24 Atl. 307. Showing of defendant's liability.— A complaint which alleges that the work of constructing a bridge was done under the direction of, and according to the plans and specifications furnished by a board of supervisors, and that it was accepted by them, is sufficient to fasten the liability upon the county, although the work may have been performed by a bridge company. Tyler v. Tehama County, 109 Cal. 618, 42 Pac. 240.

14. Harford County v. Wise, 75 Md. 38, 23 Atl. 65.

Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence.— In an action of this character evidence that the piers of the bridge were only twenty feet apart from center to center, that prior to the construction of the bridge floods had occurred in the river, that driftwood had frequently at such times floated down the river, and that in the breaking of ice in the spring, cakes of more than twenty feet square often floated down, is properly admissible in determining the question of negligence or inefficiency in the construction of the bridge (Omaha, etc., R. Co. v. Standen, 29 Nebr. 622, 46 N. W. 46; Omaha, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 29 Nebr. 492, 46 N. W. 39); and a showing that by consequence of such construction an ice-gorge formed, throwing nearly all the water of the river upon the bottom lands, and thereby greatly injuring and destroying plaintiff's property, is sufficient to warrant a verdict in his favor (Omaha, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 16 Nebr. 161, 20 N. W. 202). See also St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Winkelmann, 47 Ill. App. 276, holding that testimony that the flood occurred in 1887 or 1888 is admissible under an allegation that it occurred in 1887. But see Hodge v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 39 Fed. 449, where the evidence failing to show clearly that the construction of the bridge caused the injury complained of, and the damages awarded being greatly in excess of the injury shown, the verdict was set aside.

Erroneous instruction.— An instruction to the jury that if the first flood was an extraordinary one it was for them to determine whether defendant ought after the first, or first and second floods, to have altered its culvert by enlarging its cavity, and whether it was negligence not to do so after such repeated instances, is erroneous, since the jury might infer that permission was given them to allow damages for extraordinary floods caused by their reoccurrence one after the other in so short a time. The fact that the floods occurred frequently could only be recognized in determining whether or not they were in fact extraordinary, and if extraordinary, damages should not be awarded for them. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Gilleland, 56 Pa. St. 445, 94 Am. Dec. 97.

15. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Winkelmann, 47 Ill. App. 276. See also Omaha, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 29 Nebr. 492, 46 N. W. 39; Van Duzer v. Elmira, etc., R. Co., 75 Hun (N. Y.) 487, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 474, 57 N. Y. St. 355, the latter case holding that if the bridge was built by the predecessor in title of defendant, it is a question for the jury whether the situation was such as to charge defendant

C. To Travelers — 1. In General — a. Rule Stated. Whenever the duty to repair a public bridge is imposed upon an individual or company, either by statute or charter, or where such duty is incurred either by contract or by the erection of the same across a highway for individual benefits, such company or individual is liable on common-law principles to respond civilly for injuries sustained by an individual, because of a neglect of this duty.[16]

b. Liability of Municipalities — (i) In General — (A) Counties or Towns — (1) At Common Law. The liability to respond civilly for the failure to maintain or repair a bridge does not necessarily accompany the duty to repair; and at common law a county was not liable in a civil action for injuries to travelers, resulting from its failure to maintain or repair a public bridge.[17] By the weight of authority in the United States such liability does not exist as to such subdivisions created by the sovereign authority for political and civil purposes as counties or with the notice that the bridge was defective before its defective character was demonstrated by a flood; and that it is a question for the jury whether the flood was of such an extraordinary character that it should have been anticipated and provided against in the building of the bridge.

The better reason for exempting counties, and in some states towns or townships, from this liability would seem to be the fact that such political subdivisions are involuntary, so far as the inhabitants therein are concerned, are created for governmental purposes, without regard to the consent or dissent of the inhabitants, and are mere agencies of the state which should be privileged with all the immunities enjoyed by the state. But it has been pointed out that this case "so often cited as the source of the doctrine of nonliability of quasi-municipal corporations for injuries resulting from defective bridges or highways, never was intended to be authoritative further than that the inhabitants of a certain territory designated as a county, but not incorporated, and having no corporate purse, could not be held liable for such injuries, and that the case is not an authority for nonliability of counties in this country, where counties are incorporated and have a corporate purse." The rule is otherwise when the highway commissioners have sufficient funds in their self without a remedy for an injury which he has sustained. In a few jurisdictions, however, the reasons for the common-law holding have been held inapplicable to counties or towns in this country, and an implied obligation is affirmed.[21]

(2) Under Statute. In most of the New England states, statutes have been enacted rendering the towns liable, in certain instances, to a civil action for injuries occasioned by the non-repair of the bridges within their limits;[22] and in many other jurisdictions the common law has been wholly or partly changed as to the non-liability of counties or townships.[23] The general trend of these enactments

County must be bound to repair.— In jurisdictions where an implied liability upon the county to respond for injuries is upheld it is essential that the bridge be one commonly designated as "a county bridge," or, in other words, one upon which the statute imposes the duty to repair. If the bridge is one of such minor importance that the statute has placed the duty upon some other subdivision of the county, the county would not be liable for an injury happening by a defect in such bridge. Massachusetts.— Sawyer v. Northfield, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 490; Mower v. Leicester, 9 Mass. 247, 6 Am. Dec. 63. The erection and support of the bridge by a town and its use by the public for thirty-eight years is sufficient proof of its existence as a highway to render the town liable for an injury occasioned by its being out of repair. Williams v. Cummington, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 312.

New Hampshire.— Morrill v. Deering, 3 N. H. 53.

Vermont.— Crockett v. Barre, 66 Vt. 269, 29 Atl. 147, holding that if a statute provided that a village should assume all the responsibility of the town as to bridges within its limits, such village would, by virtue of the general statute, be liable for the defects of its bridges.

23. Alabama.— The statutory modification of the common law in Alabama has not subjected the county to a general liability, but only to a special one, where it has failed to take a guaranty from the contractor who built the bridge. Barks v. Jefferson County, 119 Ala. 600, 24 So. 505 (holding that, inasmuch as Ala. Code (1896), § 2498, invests a county with authority to establish free bridges without expressly confining them to public highways, a county is liable for injuries from a defective bridge erected on a private road, if no guaranty is required of the contractor); Lee County v. Yarbrough, 85 Ala. 590, 5 So. 341 (holding that where no guaranty is taken the liability of the county is the same as would be the liability of the contractor had the guaranty been exacted); Greene County v. Eubanks, 80 Ala. 204; Sims v. Butler County, 49 Ala. 110; Barbour County v. Horn, 48 Ala. 649; Barbour County v. Brunson, 36 Ala. 362 (holding that the statute gave a remedy for injuries arising from defects in free bridges as well as in toll-bridges).

Georgia.— The Georgia act of December, and of the judicial construction put upon them is an affirmance of the principle that the liability to respond for the injury should accompany the duty to maintain and repair, and that it exists only when such duty exists,[24] unless the municipality

1888, made counties primarily liable for defects in bridges, but this act does not apply to bridges erected before its passage (Grays v. Bibb County, 94 Ga. 698, 19 S. E. 1021; Mappin v. Washington County, 92 Ga. 130, 17 S. E. 1009; Bibb County v. Dorsey, 90 Ga. 72, 15 S. E. 647); and previous to this statute the common-law liability had been only partly changed by the statute. If the county contracted for the construction of a bridge without requiring a bond of guarantee from the contractors as required by the code, they would then be liable for injuries occasioned by defects in the bridge (Cook v. De Kalb County, 95 Ga. 218, 22 S. E. 151 [followed in De Kalb County v. Cook, 97 Ga. 415, 24 S. E. 157]; Mackey v. Ordinaries, 59 Ga. 832), but if it did not appear that the bridge was one built by a contractor, and there had been no bond taken, or it was not a toll-bridge, no action against the county would lie (Gwinnett County v. Dunn, 74 Ga. 358; Scales v. Ordinary, 41 Ga. 225). It has also been held that the county is not liable after the expiration of the time within which the contractor would have been liable, although no bond was taken from him (Dougherty County v. Newsom, 107 Ga. 811, 33 S. E. 660; Monroe County v. Flynt, 80 Ga. 489, 6 S. E. 173); although if a contractor's bond had been taken and the time for which it was drawn had expired, and the county had undertaken to keep the bridge in repair, it has been held that it would be liable for the injury (Davis v. Horne, 64 Ga. 69). Where a structure which was built before the passage of the act of 1888 is, after the passage of that act, materially strengthened and repaired, the question whether a new bridge was constructed or the old one merely repaired becomes material in fixing the liability of the county, and is one of fact for the jury. Kelvingston v. Macon County, 103 Ga. 106, 29 S. E. 596. For sufficiency of contractor's bond to exempt the county from primary liability see Mappin v. Washington County, 92 Ga. 130, 17 S. Liability by implication.— It has been argued that a statute declaring a county to be a municipal corporation in effect changes the common-law rule and thereby impliedly renders them liable for injuries; but this contention is not sound, and is not recognized in jurisdictions where the common-law nonliability of counties is adhered to. Scales v. Ordinary, 41 Ga. 225; Ahern v. Kings County, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 148, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 1023, 69 N. Y. St. 104; Godfrey v. Queens County, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 18, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 1052, 69 N. Y. St. 24; Albrecht v. Queens County, 84 Hun (N. Y.) 399, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 473, 65 N. Y. St. 658.

Defects within the meaning of the statute.— The removing of the superstructure of a bridge is a defect within the meaning of a statute making the county liable for defects in its bridges (Atchison County v. Sullivan, 7 Kan. App. 152, 53 Pac. 142); but an injury occasioned by an animal taking fright at a placard placed on a bridge without the knowledge of the county commissioners, and which was taken down by them as soon as their attention was called to it, does not arise from any "defect" in the bridge, within the meaning of a statute making the county liable (Acker v. Anderson County, 20 S. C. 495).

Restriction of statutory liability to travelers only.— The Massachusetts statute allowing an action against a town for injuries received by reason of a defective bridge is restricted in its application to travelers only, and it is therefore held that a city would not be liable for injuries received by a member of a crew of a vessel, who, in loosening the ship's rigging, was injured by a defect in the draw of the bridge; he not being a traveler within the meaning of the statute (McDougall v. Salem, 110 Mass. 21); and under a statute providing for the accrual of liability when any "traveler or person" is injured, it is held that an injury to a stray horse which has broken from an inclosure and is running at large is not within the meaning of the law (Lee County v. Yarbrough, 85 Ala. 590, 5 So. 341). But under a statute relating to any person who "shall be without contributory negligence," etc., it is not necessary that the injured party be a traveler, and one who is lawfully under the bridge may recover. Vickers v. Cloud County, 59 Kan. 86, 52 Pac. 73.

Such laws are not unconstitutional as imposing an unlawful burden upon the taxpayers of a county. Mehling v. Cuyahoga County, 8 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 328, 6 Ohio N. P. 421.

Michigan.— Quinlan v. Manistique, 85 Mich. 22, 48 N. W. 172.

New Jersey.— Spencer v. Hudson County, 66 N. J. L. 301, 49 Atl. 483, 485, where it is said: "It follows, therefore, that if some of voluntarily assumes the duty of maintenance, in which case it would be liable for its negligence, regardless of statute.[25]

(B) Cities or Villages. When, however, the corporation is a purely municipal one, created at the request and for the local advantage and convenience of the inhabitants thereof, such as a city or village, and the duty to maintain or repair its bridges is voluntarily assumed by it, or is imposed by statute or charter, a corresponding liability rests upon it to respond in damages to those injured by neglect to perform such duties.[26]

(II) Where Duty to Repair Is on Individual. Where a municipality is charged with an absolute duty to maintain the bridges within its limits, the fact that a corporation or individual is also obligated, either by common law or by statute, to repair a particular bridge therein, does not absolve the municipality from its duty to the public to see that the bridge is in proper repair; and it is the officers or agents of the board have neglected their duty, and have acted ultra vires, by erecting bridges for the erection of which no duty was cast upon the county board, then the county municipality cannot be held."

New York.— Ehle v. Minden, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 903, holding that under the statute the commissioner of highways had no authority to erect the bridge in question and that the town was not liable for its repair and was therefore not liable for an injury because of its defects. Wisconsin.— Green v. Bridge Creek, 38 Wis. 449, 20 Am. Rep. 18. The liability rests upon the municipality upon which the law casts the duty of making repairs (Bishop v. Centralia, 49 Wis. 669, 6 N. W. 353); and the fact that a village has occasionally made slight repairs on a town bridge within its limits will not absolve the town from its liability (Spearbracker v. Larrabee, 64 Wis. 573, 25 N. W. 555). As to the sufficiency of adoption of a bridge to estop the town from claiming that it is not a lawful bridge see Houfe v. Fulton, 34 Wis. 608, 17 Am. Rep. 463.

Indiana.— Goshen v. Myers, 119 Ind. 196, 21 N. E. 657 (holding that proof that the city had taken charge of, and graded the highway upon which the bridge was built was sufficient to sustain the conclusion that it was liable for the defects of the bridge); Lowrey v. Delphi, 55 Ind. 250.

Iowa.— McCullom v. Black Hawk County, 21 Iowa 409; Rusch v. Davenport, 6 Iowa 443 (holding that the Iowa act of Jan. 22, 1855, did not create a road district as a corporation separate and distinct from the city, and that the city itself was liable for the injury).

liable to an individual for injuries sustained by neglect of this duty.[27] If the duty of the municipality is qualified and not absolute the rule would seem to be otherwise.[28]

(III) When Built Over Boundaries. With regard to boundary bridges the same general principle governs: if the duty to maintain and repair exists jointly, the liability for the injury from a neglect of this duty, whether arising by virtue of statute or upon common-law principles, will be found to be a joint one;[29] and if one is compelled to so respond, contribution may be had against the other.[30]

c. Care Required — (I) In General — (A) Of Municipalities. It may be said as a general proposition that a municipality has discharged its duties to the public when it keeps the bridges intrusted to its care in a reasonably safe condition for travel.[31] This means that care must be used to prevent an accident which, from the general use of the bridge, might be likely to happen,[32] but does not mean that such care must be exercised that accidents thereon would be impossible;[33] although it would seem that the degree of care should be not less than prudent men may be expected to exercise in their own affairs.[34]

When liability is several.— Where the duty to repair a boundary bridge is so apportioned that each town or township is required to repair a specified part of the bridge, each town or municipality would then be liable only if the injury occurred on the part which they were bound to repair, and the liability would be a several, and not a joint, one. (B) Of Bridge Companies. In a recent case it has been held that the degree of care required of a bridge company should be higher than that required of a municipality;[35] but in another jurisdiction this distinction, in the absence of statutory regulation, is denied.[36] Clearly, however, they are not insurers,[37] or chargeable with the same diligence as common carriers;[38] and from several well-considered cases it would seem that only ordinary care and diligence is required.[39]

(II) As to Maintenance — (A) Inspection and Discovery of Defects. The duty of keeping a bridge in reasonably safe condition for travel is not fully performed when the company or municipality chargeable with such duty have supplied obvious safeguards, but requires of them an anticipation of defects arising from natural causes, and that they make proper inspection to ascertain such defects,[40] especially after notification that the bridge is unsafe.[41]

(B) Provision of Safeguards — (1) Barriers or Warnings of Defect. The observance of due care also requires a party or municipality charged with Such a corporation is held to a degree of care closer akin to that exacted of a carrier of passengers. The mere use of ordinary care in repairing the bridge would not exculpate the defendant if it had not by such care made the bridge safe."

Necessity of employing skilled inspector.— Whether it is sufficient that the parties charged with the duty to repair should make a careful inspection of the bridge themselves, or whether it is incumbent upon them to employ a skilled inspector, does not seem to be fully settled. In Michigan (Medina Tp. v. Perkins, 48 Mich. 67, 11 N. W. 810) it is held that no higher duty is enjoined on the township to keep informed of the condition of its bridges than its own officers may discharge by the use of reasonable intelligence and ordinary care. This would also seem to be the view taken by the Illinois court in Neinsteil v. Smith, 21 Ill. App. 235. On the other hand, it is held in Pennsylvania (Rapho Tp. v. Moore, 68 Pa. St. 404, 8 Am. Rep. 202; Whitmire v. Muncy Creek Tp., 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 399) that it is the duty of the supervisors to call to their assistance those whose skill would enable them to ascertain the true state of a structure as to its safety. And in Iowa it is held that if the supervisors do not possess the requisite skill to inspect a bridge it is incumbent upon them to employ one who has such skill. Morgan v. Fremont County, 92 Iowa 644, 61 N. W. 231; Ferguson

the maintenance of a bridge to provide suitable barriers or warnings when, by reason of the operation of a draw therein, or of the disrepair or decay of a bridge, it is evident that travel thereon would be dangerous.[42] It is also essential that reasonable care and diligence be employed in maintaining such barriers,[43] but if by accident or malicious interference such barriers are rendered insufficient, the municipality would not be liable if, by the use of reasonable care, it would not have known of such interference.[44]

(2) GUARD-RAILS. Where guard-rails to a bridge or its approaches are clearly necessary for the safety of travelers,[45] a failure to erect or properly maintain them is negligence, for which the municipality or company charged with the duty to maintain the bridge is liable to a party who, in the observance of due care, is injured by reason of such neglect.[46] This is true, notwithstanding the shying, Sufficiency of barrier.— A barrier erected to prevent travel across a bridge must be sufficient to warn any one using reasonable diligence that the bridge is unsafe for travel. It need not, however, be one of such shape or size that a traveler cannot climb over or crawl under or through it (Kane v. Yonkers, 169 N. Y. 392, 62 N. E. 428; Maginnis v. Brooklyn, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 194, 26 N. Y. St. 689, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 522, 16 N. Y. St. 760) or sufficient to stop a runaway horse (Lane v. Wheeler, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 606). See also Cornelius v. Appleton, 22 Wis. 635, where it was held that a plank a foot wide, placed about breast high across the end of a bridge, and eighteen feet from the open water, was such obstruction that a person of ordinary care could not fail to observe.

45. Purpose for which railing may be used. — It is agreed that guard-rails on a bridge are simply for the safety of those who are in the legitimate use of the bridge or its approaches, and should be sufficient to meet all the incidental uses to which it would reasonably be put by travelers; but the courts in determining what constitutes an incidental use of the railing, do not seem to be in accord; in Orcutt v. Kittery Point Bridge Co., 53 Me. 500 [citing Stickney v. Salem, 3 Allen (Mass.) 374], where the captain of a military company having called a halt upon the bridge leaned his back against the railing to rest and wait for further orders; as he sprang forward to take his place in the ranks, the rotten railing of the bridge broke, and he fell off. It was held that his use of the rail was unauthorized, and that he could not recover. This case is commented upon in Langlois v. Cohoes, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 226, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 908, 34 N. Y. St. 288, and held not to be the law in that state, the court holding that a person who, in crossing a bridge, pauses for a moment to rest against the railing, does not lose his right against the negligence of the town in maintaining the bridge and could not be nonsuited in an action to recover for such injury.

backing, or unruly and unmanageable conduct of the traveler's horse may have contributed to the accident;[47] the rule being that the liability accrues if the injury would not have happened had there been a proper and sufficient guard.[48] Whether a bridge is so situated or is such a structure that railings are necessary to make it reasonably safe for travel is usually a question of fact for the jury.[49]

Cause of horse's conduct.—It has been held in some cases that if, besides a defect in the bridge, there is another cause contributing directly to the result for which neither of the parties is in fault the town is not liable (Moulton v. Sanford, 51 Me. 127 [approving Moore v. Abbot, 32 Me. 46]; Minkley v. Springville Tp., 113 Mich. 347, 71 N. (III) As to Size and Stability of Structure. With regard to the size and stability of the structure of a public bridge it may be said that it should be of sufficient width to accommodate the public travel,[50] and the passage of all vehicles or machinery usually drawn upon the highway;[51] and should be built and maintained of sufficient strength to sustain loads which, from the nature of the travel and the business of the road and occupations of the locality where it is situated, are likely to be imposed upon it; but not for unusual or extraordinary loads not reasonably anticipated.[52]

2. Defenses — a. In General. The ulterior purposes of a traveler,[53] or the fact that he has not paid his toll[54] does not affect his right to have a bridge in a reasonably safe condition, and cannot be urged as a defense by a party maintaining the bridge.[55]

b. Contributory Negligence — (I) In General. The failure of a municipality or company to perform its duty of repairing a bridge does not relieve persons passing thereon from the duty of exercising due care and diligence, and a showing that plaintiff's negligence proximately contributed to his injury would be a good defense.[56] appearance of the bridge is such that it would suggest danger to a reasonably prudent person.[61]

(B) Extraordinary Load. As it is unnecessary that bridges be constructed to sustain unusual, extraordinary, or unexpected loads,[62] it follows that one who attempts to cross such a bridge with a load which is clearly of such nature and which would subject the bridge to an unusual strain is guilty of contributory negligence.[63] So, too, if a statute prescribe a maximum weight to which a bridge shall be subjected,[64] an injured party cannot recover if his load exceed such maximum,[65] but in the absence of such a statute the question of whether a load is an unusual or extraordinary one is ordinarily for the jury.[66]

64. Weight — How determined.— Under a statute providing that no recovery can be had for injuries sustained by the breaking down of a bridge where the weight of the load "exceeds forty-five hundred pounds, exclusive of the team and carriage," it is held that the weight of the driver seated upon the load must be taken into account in computing the actual weight. Dexter v. Canton Toll-Bridge Co., 79 Me. 563, 12 Atl. 547.

If the statute require a certain precaution, such as the giving of notice to the toll-gatherer that the load exceeds a certain weight (Pomeroy v. Fifth Massachusetts Turnpike Corp., 10 Pick. (Mass.) 35), or the spanning of the bridge with planks if the load be over a certain amount (Welch v. Geneva, 110 Wis. 388, 85 N. W. 970), an injured party cannot recover if he does not observe these requirements. But under a statute providing that no recovery can be had where the owner of a steam-engine neglects to span any culvert or bridge, before crossing, with hard-wood planks at least two inches thick and twelve inches wide, it is clear that this precaution is intended to protect the bridge from the calks on the engine wheels, and therefore the use of planks eight to ten inches wide with other planks besides them so as to accomplish the same purpose, would be a compliance with the spirit of the statute, and would not render the party guilty of contributory negligence. Walker v. Ontario, 111 Wis. 113, 86 N. W. 566. See also Toedtemeier v. Clackamas County, 34 Oreg. 66, 54 Pac. 954.

65. Dexter v. Canton Toll-Bridge Co., 79 Me. 563, 12 Atl. 547. But it would seem that the maintenance of a bridge known to be insufficient to bear the statutory maximum would be prima facie negligence (Heib v. Big Flats, 66 N. Y. App. Div. 88, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 86); and where a statute exempted the town from liability if the load exceeded four tons in weight, it has been held that, although an engine and thresher exceeded this in weight, yet, if the engine alone was less than four tons in weight, and the panel of the bridge thereunder gave way, a recovery could nevertheless be had, since there was less than four tons on the panel which broke (Bush v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 166 N. Y. 210, 59 N. E. 838; Vandewater v. Wappinger, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 699; Lee v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 71 N. Y. Suppl. 120. Compare Heib v. Big Flats, 66 N. Y. App. Div. 88, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 86).

This statute provides an immunity for towns only, and the defense that the load was above the statutory maximum cannot be urged if the bridge was one which a railroad was bound to repair and maintain. Bush v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 166 N. Y. 210, 59 N. E. 838.

Traction engines and threshing outfits.— If traction engines and threshing outfits were not in use at the time that a bridge was built, it is clear that such loads are not those which should have been anticipated in the building of the bridge, and it may be alleged, with reason, to thus use it would be unusual and extraordinary. Vermillion County v. Chipps, 131 Ind. 56, 29 N. E. 1066, 16 L. R. A. 228. On the other hand, if such en-

(c) Fast Driving. While fast driving over a bridge may be clearly of such nature as to preclude a recovery,[67] the mere fact that plaintiff violates a statutory or municipal regulation by driving thereon faster than a walk is not negligence per se, and does not preclude a recovery for an injury alleged to be caused by a defect in the bridge, if the jury find that such violation did not contribute to the injury.[68]

(d) Notice of Defects. If a traveler has knowledge[69] of the existence in a bridge of defects of such nature that a reasonably prudent man would see that it was clearly unsafe and that prudent or cautious driving could not avert the danger, an attempt to cross the same would be negligence, as a matter of law.[70] On the other hand, although a party knows that a bridge is probably unsafe, or is not in all respects in a proper state of repair, still, if it is not clearly dangerous, it is not negligence per se to attempt its use, provided the traveler's business rendered its passage necessary, and he exercised care and diligence in keeping with gines had been in use in the neighborhood before the construction of the bridge, it may fairly be presumed that the crossing by such machinery was anticipated in the construction. Bonebrake v. Huntington County, 141 Ind. 62, 40 N. E. 141. As a general proposition, it may be said that the courts will not judicially assume, or say, as a matter of law, that a party is negligent in attempting to cross a bridge with such machines (Clark County v. Brod, 3 Ind. App. 585, 29 N. E. 430; Coulter v. Pine Tp., 164 Pa. St. 543, 35 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 399, 30 Atl. 490); and, while recognizing the fact that such machinery is coming into general use, and that it is transported along the highways, are inclined to assume the position that whether or not the load is one which the county or township should have anticipated in the building of the bridge or highway, or whether or not it is an unusual or extraordinary one, is a question of fact rather than of law, and should be submitted to the jury (Yordy v. Marshall County, 80 Iowa 405, 45 N. W. 1042; Moore v. Hazelton Tp., 118 Mich. 425, 76 N. W. 977; Clapp v. Ellington, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 58, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 516, 20 N. Y. St. 412, 22 Abb. N. Cas. (N. 67. As, for instance, driving at a gallop over a bridge, the floor of which is unspiked. Zimmerman v. Conemaugh Tp., (Pa. 1886) 5 Atl. 45. But driving on a trot over a small bridge without knowledge of its defects and without violating any municipal ordinance is not such contributory negligence, as a matter of law, as will preclude a recovery for the loss of a horse and vehicle occasioned by the falling of the bridge. 69. Constructive notice of defect.— Where sign-boards bearing the inscription "bridge unsafe" are conspicuously placed at each end of a defective bridge, the fact that a traveler is unable to read English does not excuse his attempting to cross the bridge, and his so doing would be contributory negligence. the increased danger,[71] but if there is another reasonably convenient way by which the defective bridge may be avoided the rule is otherwise.[72] It may also be said that one who has given notice of defects in a bridge to the parties whose duty it is to repair has a right to presume, after a reasonable time, that repairs have been made, and his subsequent use of the bridge would not be negligence per se.[73]

c. Lack of Funds. If the liability of a municipality for injuries caused by its defective bridges is absolute and unqualified, the lack of funds with which to make the needed repairs would not constitute a good defense to an action for an injury from such defects;[74] but if the liability is limited by statute the rule may be otherwise.[75] Such lack of funds must, however, be pleaded as a defense by defendant,[76] and it must be shown that it had no means of obtaining such funds.[77]

If there is no evidence that the defect has been complained of, or that the county has indicated any intention to repair such defect, the mere fact that a party knowing of it has been absent several months would not justify him in assuming that the needed repairs have been made. 75. Thus, by N. Y. Y. St. 316), and inasmuch as the lack of funds was a defense to an action against the highway commissioners (Garlinghouse v. Jacobs, 29 N. Y. 297; Smith v. Wright, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 621) it follows that a lack of funds would be a good defense in an action against a town (Bullock v. Durham, 64 Hun (N. Y.) 380, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 635, 46 N. Y. St. 459).

d. Want of Notice of Defect — (i) In General. As the ground of liability in an action of this nature is either a misfeasance,[78] or negligence,[79] it follows that proof by a municipality or bridge company that it had no notice of the defect would exonerate it and constitute good defense to the action.[80]

(ii) What Constitutes Notice. It is not necessary, however, that the municipality or company have actual notice of the defective condition of the bridge, and if the defects are of such nature or have existed for such length of time that they could, by the exercise of ordinary diligence, have been discovered and repaired, notice may be inferred.[81] As a rule if notice of a defect is given to plaintiff examined the bridge on which the accident occurred three weeks after the injury complained of and saw that it was covered with new plank is incompetent to show that the town had necessary funds for repairing at the time of the injury. Terwilliger v. Crawford, 40 N. Y. App. Div. 253, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 64. But the fact that before the occurrence of the accident the highway commissioners had procured material for the repair of the bridge and did repair it on the following day warrants the inference that they had funds or means to procure such funds to repair the bridge. an officer whose duty it is to act on the matter, such notice will constitute notice to the municipality or company of which he is an officer;[82] but if the party to whom the notice is given is under no obligation to repair the defect, or take any action in the matter, the rule is otherwise.[83]

3. Action — a. Conditions Precedent — (i) Notice of, and Claim For, Injury — (a) In General. As a rule the statutes provide that no action shall be brought against a county or municipality charged with the duty of repairing a bridge, for an injury occasioned by a defect therein, until notice of the injury and demand of the claim shall have been presented to the proper authorities for payment;[84] but in some jurisdictions the action would not be premature, although brought before a town had an opportunity to pay the claim.[85]

Where the defect is latent it is obvious that the principle of constructive notice cannot be held to apply, at least to the same degree as where the defect is obvious; and if it is not shown that an examination of the bridge conducted with reasonable care and prudence would have discovered the defect, the municipality is not liable unless actual notice is shown. 83. Murray v. Woodson County, 58 Kan. 1, 48 Pac. 554 (where, the statute providing that notice of the defect must be brought home to the chairman of the county board, it was held that notice to another member of such board does not constitute notice to the chairman, and that there is no legal presumption that such other member has communicated his information to the chairman); Atchison County v. Sullivan, 7 Kan. App. 152, 53 Pac. 142 (holding that under the above statute the chairman of the board would be presumed to know what was done by the board's direction, and that an allegation that the superstructure of a bridge was removed by the direction of the board of commissioners, including its chairman, under a contract therefor signed by the chairman more than five days before the injury complained of, was sufficient); Moore v. Hazelton Tp., 118 Mich. 425, 76 N. W. 977 (holding that one who has contracted with the town to build a bridge is not an officer of the township, and that notice to him of defects will not be notice to the township. With this case compare Atlanta v. Buchanan, 76 Ga. 585); San Antonio v. Ball, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 66 S. W. 713; Austin v. Colgate, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 896.

New York.— Spencer v. Sardinia, 42 N. Y. App. Div. 472, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 412.

Wisconsin.— Spearbracker v. Larrabee, 64 Wis. 573, 25 N. W. 555, holding that, under the facts presented, the jury were warranted in finding that such notice was given within the time prescribed by statute.

Contra, Hollingsworth v. Saunders County, 36 Nebr. 141, 54 N. W. 79, holding that the statute providing for such notice does not apply to actions of tort.

85. Whitman v. Groveland, 131 Mass. 553, 556, where it is said: "The object of the statute is to enable prompt investigation by the town of its liability, which may be done after as well as before suit, and to prevent the bringing of actions on fictitious claims when evidence may be lost or inaccessible."

(B) Sufficiency of.[86] In some jurisdictions the demand[87] is sufficient if it informs the board of the amount of the claim, and, in a general way, of its nature;[88] but in others it must specify the nature of the injury,[89] and inform defendant of the nature of the defect with sufficient certainty, that it may investigate the question of its liability so far as the cause of the injury is concerned.[90]

(II) Time of Bringing. In some jurisdictions the statute has limited the time within which actions for this nature of injury must be brought.[91]

b. Parties — (I) Plaintiff. As a rule plaintiff must be a party who has sustained injury, either to his person or to his property.[92]

(II) Defendant. Generally speaking, the action should be brought against the company or municipality whose duty it is to repair the bridge;[93] and where

86. Constructive notice.— Under a statute providing that notice of the injury shall be given to the town or towns in which the bridge is situated, notice to two towns in which it is situated is constructive notice to all the towns which are liable for the repair of the bridge. Tyler v. Williston, 62 Vt. 269, 20 Atl. 304, 9 L. R. A. 338 [distinguishing Brown v. Fairhaven, 47 Vt. 386].

87. Use of word "demand."— The presentation of a claim to the county authorities, alleging injuries to claimant in a certain sum from the falling of a bridge, is sufficient if it appears that the payment of the claim is required, although the word "demand" is not used. Homan v. Franklin County, 98 Iowa 692, 68 N. W. 559. See also Spencer v. Sardinia, 42 N. Y. App. Div. 472, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 412.

88. Porter County v. Dombke, 94 Ind. 72 (holding that the claim is sufficient if it fully apprise the board of the nature of the claim, and is stated with such certainty that judgment upon it would bar another suit); Dale v. Webster County, 76 Iowa 370, 41 N. W. 1 (where it is said that the code does not require that the claimant shall produce his evidence, but it is enough if the board is informed of the amount of the claim, and the grounds on which it is made, with sufficient clearness to enable it to investigate the facts, and reach an intelligent decision").

89. Low v. Windham, 75 Me. 113 (holding that a notice to a town that "I shall claim damages for injuries which I received in going through" a certain bridge is not a sufficient specification of the nature of the injury); Bradbury v. Benton, 69 Me. 194 (holding that a notice describing the injury as "periosteum of the tibia" is sufficient, and not open to the objection that the notice was not in the English language); Lynds v. Plymouth, 73 Vt. 216, 50 Atl. 1083 (holding that under a notice that the "back of my head was injured . . . with resultant shock," it may be shown that, from the time of the accident, she has been subject to headaches).

90. Whitman v. Groveland, 131 Mass. 553, holding that the notice given therein was sufficient. But see Dickie v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 131 Mass. 516, where the notice that plaintiff was injured "by a defect in the bridge" was held insufficient, in that it did not inform defendant of the nature of the defect.

Place of injury.— A notice that "said injuries were caused by a defect in the planking of the said bridge, one of the plank being insufficient in length, which insufficiency caused a hole in the said bridge into which I fell" sufficiently indicates the place of the injury. Lyman v. Hampshire County, 138 Mass. 74.

91. Turner v. Brantford, 13 U. C. C. P. 109.

Statute runs from time of accident.— Under a Canadian statute which provides that an action for an injury from a defective bridge must be brought within three months, it is held that the statute contemplates the bringing of the action within three months after the accident has happened, and not three months after the death which may have resulted from the injury. Therefore, where plaintiff's horse fell through a bridge and died four months thereafter, it was held that the suit could not be instituted after the death of the horse. Miller v. North Fredericksburgh Tp., 25 U. C. Q. B. 31.

92. Hence, under Me. Stat. (1821), c. 118, § 17, the father's right to the custody and services of his minor son not being "property" within the meaning of the statute, it was held that he could not recover for personal injuries received by such son, by reason of a defect in a bridge. Reed v. Belfast, 20 Me. 246.

Right of surveyor to bring action.— Under the judicial construction of the early statutes of Massachusetts it was held that a surveyor was obligated by law to keep in repair the bridges of the town, and the fact that the town did not make provisions for such repairs did not excuse his performance of this duty, as, after making the repairs, he would have a remedy against the inhabitants; and that therefore he could not bring an action for injuries occasioned by defects in the bridge: since to do so would allow him to recover for his own negligence. Wood v. Waterville, 5 Mass. 294.

93. Hence, if the structure is a toll-bridge, the action should be brought against the owner of the franchise, notwithstanding the fact that he has contracted with a railroad company that the latter shall keep the bridge in repair; the party owing the duty to the the liability to keep the bridge in repair is joint, the action may be brought against either.[94]

c. Complaint, Declaration, or Petition[95]— (i) In General. As the basis of the action is the negligence of defendant,[96] the complaint must allege the existence of such negligence[97] and that it caused the injury.[98] Where the statute public being the holder of the franchise only. Tift v. Towns, 53 Ga. 47.

94. Thus under Ga. Code (1888), §§ 690, 691, it is held that an action may be brought either against the contractor who built the bridge, or the county, and that it is not necessary to sue the contractor to insolvency before suing the county. Arnold v. Henry County, 81 Ga. 730, 8 S. E. 606.

Where towns are jointly liable, either or both may be sued. Oakley v. Mamaroneck, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 448; Hawxhurst v. New York, 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 181; Peckham v. Burlington, Brayt. (Vt.) 134.

97. Frankfort Bridge Co. v. Williams, 9 Dana (Ky.) 403, 35 Am. Dec. 155.

Facts constituting negligence.— In some jurisdictions it is necessary not only to allege a carelessness and negligence on the part of defendant, but also to aver the facts constituting the negligence. Heilner v. Union County, 7 Oreg. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 703.

Defendant's negligence was sufficiently pleaded in Huntington County v. Huffman, 134 Ind. 1, 31 N. E. 570; Vermillion County v. Chipps, 131 Ind. 56, 29 N. E. 1066, 16 L. R. A. 228; Wabash County v. Pearson, 120 Ind. 426, 22 N. E. 134, 16 Am. St. Rep. 325 (holding that an allegation in the complaint that the bridge was safely used for thirteen years did not overcome the statement that it was negligently constructed of unsafe and unsuitable material); Walker v. Point Pleasant, 49 Mo. App. 244.

98. Northern Alabama R. Co. v. Sides, 122 Ala. 594, 26 So. 116; Harris v. Vigo County, 121 Ind. 299, 23 N. E. 92; Williamsport v. Smith, 2 Ind. App. 360, 28 N. E. 156. Compare Taylor v. Constable, 131 N. Y. 597, 30 N. E. 63, 42 N. Y. St. 949 [affirming 15 N. Y. Suppl. 795, 40 N. Y. St. 60].

Sufficient allegation of proximate cause.— An allegation in a complaint that "by reason, entirely, of the insufficiency, want of repair, and defects aforesaid, of and in said bridge," said wagon and team fell therefrom is a sufficient averment that the defects in a bridge were the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. Kelly v. Darlington, 86 Wis. 432, 57 N. W. 51.

Necessity of alleging absence of contributory negligence.— The general rules of pleading with regard to contributory negligence apply in this action; and hence in a jurisdiction where plaintiff need not negative this fact it need not appear in his pleading. Smoot v. Wetumpka, 24 Ala. 112. See also Albee v. Floyd County, 46 Iowa 177.

Complaint not showing contributory negligence.— A complaint alleging that a bridge "became decayed, shaky, out of repair, timbers rotten and displaced, so that it was obviously defective and dangerous continuously for more than a year prior to the accident; that defendant could have readily discovered the defective and dangerous condition in ample time to have made repairs and prevented said accident" does not show of itself that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in using the bridge. Homan v. Franklin County, 98 Iowa 692, 68 N. W. 559.

Averment that defect was in "highway."— Under a statute which provides that the word "highway" shall include bridges thereon, it has been held that a declaration states a cause of action when it alleges that the injury was caused by reason of certain defects in a certain described "highway" which it was the duty of defendant to keep in repair. Cook v. Barton, 63 Vt. 566, 22 Atl. 663.

Variance.— An allegation that an injury was caused by the insufficiency of a bridge is supported by proof that the defects were in the abutment. Augusta v. Hudson, 94 Ga. 135, 21 S. E. 289; Bardwell v. Jamaica, 15 Vt. 438. An allegation that plaintiff's fall was due to the faulty construction of a bridge is supported by proof that in relaying the floor of the bridge the planks were left loose and unfastened and so caused the injury complained of. Atlanta v. Buchanan, 76 Ga. 585. But an allegation that the construction of the bridge was faulty, in not sinking the mudsills below the bottom of the ditch, and bracing or piling them, to prevent the bridge slipping into the ditch, is not supported by evidence that the weakening of the bridge was caused by the undermining of the mudsills, occasioned by deepening the drain under the bridge after it was rebuilt. Pearl v. Benton Tp., 123 Mich. 411, 82 N. W. 226. A variance of from twelve to eight feet be-gives the right of action only to certain persons, or imposes upon defendant only a special liability, plaintiff must plead the facts showing his right to the action,[99] or the existence of the special liability.[1]

(II) Defendant's Notice of Defect. Unless, by statute, notice to defendant is not essential to his liability,[2] the complaint must, as a rule, aver either that defendant had notice of the defect, or facts from which such notice may be imputed;[3] but this has been held unnecessary when the negligence charged relates to the original construction of the bridge.[4]

(III) Plaintiff's Presentation of Claim. Where the presentation of a notice of, and claim for, the injury is a prerequisite to the right of action,[5] if plaintiff fail to allege that such notice has been properly given his pleading is insufficient, and will be bad on demurrer.[6]

d. Evidence — (I) Burden of Proof. Inasmuch as the negligence of defendant in the maintenance of the bridge is not to be presumed, the burden of proving such negligence is upon plaintiff,[7] and, under some statutes, tween the allegations and the proof as to the place where a horse backed off the abutment of a bridge is not fatal. Ross v. Ionia Tp., 104 Mich. 320, 62 N. W. 401.

99. Thus where, by statute, no person is entitled to maintain an action against a turnpike company for a defect in its bridge unless he is liable to pay toll, such liability of plaintiff must be alleged in his complaint. Williams v. Hingham, etc., Bridge, etc., Corp., 4 Pick. (Mass.) 341.

1. Barbour County v. Horn, 48 Ala. 649.

Failure to take bond from contractor.— Under a statute providing for the liability of a county only when it fails to take a bond from the contractor, a failure to take such bond should be alleged. Willingham v. Elbert County, 113 Ga. 15, 38 S. E. 348; Collins v. Hudson, 54 Ga. 25.

Duty of county to maintain.— If the bridge is within the corporate limits of a city, inasmuch as the duty to repair the same would prima facie be upon the city, the complaint, if the action is against the county, must affirmatively aver that it was the duty of the county to maintain the bridge. Spicer v. Elkhart County, 126 Ind. 369, 26 N. E. 58.

Defendant's possession of funds.— Where a lack of funds would constitute a defense to an action against highway commissioners, the complaint in an action against such commissioners must aver the possession by them of the requisite funds to make the necessary repairs. Smith v. Wright, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 621. Where, however, the action is against the town such averment need not be made. Oakley v. Mamaroneck, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 448. Compare Eveleigh v. Hounsfield, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 140.

Location of bridge.— The location of the bridge must be averred with such certainty that it is clear that defendant is the party who, either by virtue of a statute or upon common-law principles, is liable for the injuries arising from its defects (Shelby County v. Deprez, 87 Ind. 509; Clark County v. Brod, 3 Ind. App. 585, 29 N. E. 430; Smith v. Wright, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 621); but a complaint which states that the bridge spans a watercourse is not defective for omitting the name of the watercourse, and an allegation that the bridge formed a part of a highway leading into the city sufficiently shows that it was not within the city (Jackson County v. Nichols, 139 Ind. 611, 38 N. E. 526). For sufficient averments of location see Lowrey v. Delphi, 55 Ind. 250; Shelby County v. Castetter, 7 Ind. App. 309, 33 N. E. 986; Shartle v. Minneapolis, 17 Minn. 308.

Indiana.— Posey County v. Stock, 11 Ind. App. 167, 36 N. E. 928, holding that it must also show that such notice was given in time to allow repairs to be made.

Massachusetts.— Worster v. Proprietors Canal Bridge, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 541.

Mississippi.— State v. Vaughn, 77 Miss. 681, 27 So. 999.

Oregon.— Heilner v. Union County, 7 Oreg. 83, 33 Am. Rep. 703.

St. Rep. 325; Allen County v. Bacon, 96 Ind. 31, where the rule is said to be that if the dangerous condition of the bridge arises from the act of the corporation itself, or from decay or rottenness of the structure it is sufficient in the complaint to charge generally the negligence of defendant in the act of omission complained of.

5. See supra, V, C, 3, a, (I), (A).

6. Schroeder v. Colbert County, 66 Ala. 137; Low v. Windham, 75 Me. 113; Dickie v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 131 Mass. 516; Wentworth v. Summit, 60 Wis. 281, 19 N. W. 97. Compare Jackson County v. Nichols, 139 Ind. 611, 38 N. E. 526; Sullivan County v. Arnett, 116 Ind. 438, 19 N. E. 299; Hancock County v. Leggett, 115 Ind. 544, 18 N. E. 53.

Complaint may allege greater damages than claim.— It is not fatal to the complaint that it demands greater damages than the claim which is presented before the board; but the court may properly limit the recovery to the amount which plaintiff demanded in his claim. Homan v. Franklin County, 98 Iowa 692, 68 N. W. 559.

7. Fulton Iron, etc., Works v. Kimball Tp., 52 Mich. 146, 17 N. W. 733.

he also has the burden of establishing his own freedom from contributory negligence.[8]

(II) ADMISSIBILITY — (A) In General. Evidence tending to show that defendant had assumed the control and repair of the bridge,[9] and defendant's negligence in the maintenance[10] thereof is admissible. Evidence tending to show contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff should not be excluded.[11]

Where a company fails to maintain a bridge as required by law, the burden of proof is upon it, in an action for an injury alleged to be caused by reason of such failure, to show that its failure to comply with the law was not negligence. Worster v. Proprietors Canal Bridge, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 541. See also Beecher v. Derby Bridge, etc., Co., 24 Conn. 132.

8. Independent Tp. v. Guldner, 7 Kan. App. 699, 51 Pac. 943, construing Kan. Gen. Stat. c. 42, § 48, but holding that where defendant pleads contributory negligence, sets out certain particular acts of plaintiff, and alleges that by reason of such acts plaintiff was injured, the burden of proving such facts is thrown upon defendant.

Presumption where injury results in death. — If a person of reasonable or mature discretion knowing of a defect in a bridge which, by the use of ordinary care could have been avoided, is found dead near the bridge, and it is evident that a fall therefrom has caused his death, it would seem that the fact of his knowledge of the defect, and that it was of such nature that it could have been avoided by reasonable care, would raise the presumption that his own negligence contributed to his death; and, in the absence of proof rebutting such presumption, no recovery could be had. Peaslee v. Chatham, 69 Hun (N. Y.) 389, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 628, 52 N. Y. St. 695; Achtenhagen v. Watertown, 18 Wis. 331, 86 Am. Dec. 769. But see Strong v. Stevens Point, 62 Wis. 255, 22 N. W. 425, holding that, where a boy eight years of age while crossing a bridge fell through a large hole therein and was drowned, it was for the jury to pass upon the question whether he was guilty of contributory negligence. See also Yuran v. Randolph, 6 Vt. 369.

9. Tolland v. Willington, 26 Conn. 578; Sherwood v. Weston, 18 Conn. 32; Jessup v. Osceola County, 92 Iowa 178, 60 N. W. 485, the last case holding that a copy of a resolution by the county board, which tended to show that the structure was one for the building of which the county had paid, is admissible. See also Knox County v. Montgomery, 109 Ind. 69, 9 N. E. 590.

10. Eginoire v. Union County, 112 Iowa 558, 84 N. W. 758; Whitman v. Groveland, 113 Mass. 553; Lay v. Adrian, 75 Mich. 438, 42 N. W. 959; Woodbury v. Owosso, 64 Mich. 239, 31 N. W. 130. See also Tomlinson v. Derby, 43 Conn. 562.

Other defects. — As the whole structure is usually to be considered by the jury, evidence of other defects than the one immediately causing the injury is admissible. Hughes v. Muscatine County, 44 Iowa 672; Snyder v. Albion, 113 Mich. 275, 71 N. W. 475; Woodbury v. Owosso, 64 Mich. 239, 31 N. W. 130. See also Pearson v. Spartanburg County, 51 S. C. 480, 29 S. E. 193.

Repairs after injury. — The fact that a bridge was repaired soon after the injury is not admissible to show negligence in its maintenance (Shelby County v. Blair, 8 Ind. App. 574, 36 N. E. 216; Woodbury v. Owosso, 64 Mich. 239, 31 N. W. 130; Fulton Iron, etc., Works v. Kimball Tp., 52 Mich. 146, 17 N. W. 733. And see Morrell v. Peck, 88 N. Y. 398 [reversing 24 Hun (N. Y.) 37]); but if the repairs are made soon after the accident, such evidence is admissible to show that defendant exercised control over the bridge, and should keep the same in repair (Shelby County v. Blair, 8 Ind. App. 574, 36 N. E. 216; Walker v. Point Pleasant, 49 Mo. App. 244; Morrell v. Peck, 88 N. Y. 398 [reversing 24 Hun (N. Y.) 37]; Folsom v. Underhill, 36 Vt. 580. Compare Titler v. Iowa County, 48 Iowa 90; Holmes v. Hamburg, 47 Iowa 348).

Subsequent defective condition.—While evidence of a defective condition of the bridge immediately after the accident would be admissible (Jessup v. Osceola County, 92 Iowa 178, 60 N. W. 485), such evidence would be irrelevant if relating to the condition at a period remote from the acident (Washington, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Case, 80 Md. 36, 30 Atl. 571).

Under an allegation of the incompetency of the keeper of a bridge, it may be shown that he had been, a short time previous to the accident, temporarily insane. Goodale v. Portage Lake Bridge Co., 55 Mich. 413, 21 N. W. 866.

11. Wilson v. Granby, 47 Conn. 59, 36 Am. Rep. 51; Parke County v. Sappenfield, 6 Ind. App. 577, 33 N. E. 1012 (holding that it was error to reject evidence of a conversation between plaintiff and his wife, on the eve of the accident, to the effect that she did not want to go home because it was dangerous on account of the team having acted badly on the way over); Walker v. Decatur County, 67 Iowa 307, 25 N. W. 256 (holding that it was error to exclude evidence that the injured party could have reached his destination by another road, equally convenient, over a good bridge).

Res gestæ. — Where the defense to an action was the contributory negligence of plaintiff in going upon the bridge at too great a speed, evidence of what was said and done by plaintiff and his assistant in regard to checking the speed of the engine before going upon the bridge is admissible on plaintiff's behalf as a part of the res gestæ. Stebbins v. Keene Tp., 55 Mich. 552, 22 N. W. 37. See also Baldridge, etc., Bridge Co. v. Cartrett, 75 Tex. 628, 13 S. W. 8, holding that plaintiff might

(B) To Show Notice of Defect. As tending to show that defendant had notice of the condition of the bridge, evidence is admissible that other horses were frightened at the defect,[12] or that other persons had at the same place been injured under similar circumstances;[13] and for the same purpose evidence of the general defective condition of the bridge is admissible.[14]

(III) Weight and Sufficiency. To sustain the action, it is essential that at least some evidence of negligence on the part of defendant be shown,[15] and a verdict in favor of defendant will not be disturbed where the evidence, instead of showing negligence, shows only a mistake of judgment in the selection of material for repairs.[16] On the other hand, it is held that where the only rebutting evidence to the direct testimony of plaintiff and her husband that they were free from negligence is that the husband had made certain conflicting statements concerning the accident, a verdict for plaintiff will not be disturbed.[17]

e. Instructions. The broad rule that in determining whether a court has properly presented the law applicable to the case in issue the instructions must be construed as an entirety applies to this action.[18] Words imputing liability or nonliability generally should be restricted to some definiteness of meaning,[19] and care testify that while his mules were backing he looked around and saw the railing to the bridge, but thought that would stop them; this being a part of the res gestæ.

13. Chicago v. Powers, 42 Ill. 169, 89 Am. Dec. 418, holding that a resolution passed by a city council reciting that, owing to insufficient lights and protection at the approaches of a bridge, several accidents had occurred, resulting in the injury or death of citizens, and referring the matter to the committee of harbors and bridges, is admissible to show that the city had notice of the defects.

Evidence that a party fell from a foot-bridge and was injured at the same place that a horse was injured, between the wagon-way and the foot-bridge, has no tendency to show that the wagon-way was unsafe for travel on horseback, and would consequently be inadmissible on the question of notice. Shelley v. Austin, 74 Tex. 608, 12 S. W. 753.

14. Spearbracker v. Larrabee, 64 Wis. 573, 25 N. W. 555.

A written report by the street commissioner that a bridge was decayed, which report was printed and circulated by the city, is admissible to show that the municipal officers had notice of the defect. Bond v. Biddeford, 75 Me. 538.

Declaration of the road commissioner made after the accident has happened has been held not to be admissible to charge the township with notice of the defect. O'Neil v. Deerfield Tp., 86 Mich. 610, 49 N. W. 596; Stebbins v. Keene Tp., 55 Mich. 552, 22 N. W. 37.

Gross or wilful negligence can only be shown by the fact that the bridge was essentially deficient in some respect, and that the defect was of such nature that the company must have known it, and wilfully and unreasonably neglected to repair the same (Shelby County v. Scearce, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 576); and the mere fact that the agents of a company might have discovered the defect by the exercise of ordinary care is not sufficient evidence of gross negligence upon their part (Muldraugh's Hill, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Maupin, 79 Ky. 101).

Ownership of a bridge is sufficiently shown by testimony of the mayor of a city, of the city engineer, and of a member of the city council, without including any ordinance authorizing the building of the same. Austin v. Emanuel, 74 Tex. 621, 12 S. W. 318.

A sufficient showing of notice to a county of a defect in a bridge is made by evidence that they directed it to be propped up so that it could be used for travel. Einseidler v. Whitman County, 22 Wash. 388, 60 Pac. 1122. See also Cloud County v. Vickers, 62 Kan. 25, 61 Pac. 391.

19. Koenig v. Arcadia, 75 Wis. 62, 43 N. W. 734, where the court having used the words "fault," "defect," and "unsafe," without ad-should be taken that proof of defects not necessitated by plaintiff's pleadings are not required of him;[20] but defendant should not be made an insurer.[21] On the other hand, the instruction must not relieve plaintiff from the duty of exercising proper care in his use of the bridge.[22]

f. Damages. If defendants have been guilty of gross negligence in their maintenance of a bridge, exemplary damages may be awarded against them;[23] and where plaintiff's property is injured by reason of the occurrence, the fact that its use was valuable to him at that particular time may be considered in estimating the damages;[24] but under a statute providing for the recovery of actual damages, the right of plaintiff to recover the amount paid his employees for their loss of time necessitated by the injury has been denied.[25]

VI. LIABILITY FOR INJURY TO BRIDGE.

A. In General. Where an injury has been negligently or intentionally done a bridge, the wrong-doer may, in an appropriate action, be held accountable for the same,[26] and if the injury is intentional, he may, in some jurisdictions, be proceeded against by indictment.[27] If the wrong be a negligent vising the jury as to whether such words were used in their full and unrestricted meaning or not, and without putting some limitation upon the words, it was held that the charge was erroneous.

20. Thus, where plaintiff alleges that he was injured in consequence of the absence of a guard-rail on one of the abutments of a bridge, the charge should not be given that he must show that there was no guard-rail connected with the bridge. Augusta v. Hudson, 88 Ga. 599, 15 S. E. 678.

W. 18; Staples v. Canton, 69 Mo. 592; McFail v. Barnwell County, 57 S. C. 294, 35 S. E. 562 (holding that, under S. C. Rev. Stat. (1893), § 1169, which makes a county liable for an injury arising from a defective bridge, any degree of negligence on the part of plaintiff will preclude a recovery, and the instruction must so state).

Assumption as to location of bridge.— An instruction that "if the bridge in question, being within the city, was defective" is not erroneous as assuming that the bridge was in fact located within the limits of the city. Logansport v. Justice, 74 Ind. 378, 39 Am. Rep. 79.

Exclusion of res gestæ.— An instruction that "in considering this case you ought to lay out of your minds the fact that an accident happened upon it, and decide that question just as you would have decided it if you had been called, with the same evidence of the condition of the bridge, to decide it before an accident had happened at all; . . . so you will look at the bridge just as the evidence shows it to you before the accident happened" is erroneous as excluding from the jury the res gestæ. Koenig v. Arcadia, 75 Wis. 62, 66, 43 N. W. 734.

It is not error to define both artificial and natural watercourses if, under the law of the state, defendant is bound to maintain bridges over both of such courses. Jackson County v. Nichols, 139 Ind. 611, 38 N. E. 526.

Loss of service, expense of nursing, etc.— Under the Connecticut statute giving a right of action against a town for an injury to a person or his property caused by a defective bridge, it is held that the loss of service of one's wife and daughter and the expense incurred in their sickness, while undoubtedly "property" was not that species of property which the statute awarding the action evidently contemplated. Chidsey v. Canton, 17 Conn. 475.

26. Wellington County v. Wilson, 16 U. C. C. P. 124.

Actions for injuries to highways and bridges in different districts cannot be joined in one action. Denver Tp. v. White River Log, etc., Co., 51 Mich. 472, 16 N. W. 817.

27. Owens v. State, 52 Ala. 400 (holding that an indictment, under Ala. Rev. Code, § 3737, charging the wilful destruction or injury, otherwise than by burning, of a certain public bridge, need not contain an averment of its ownership and value); O'Dea v. State, 16 Nebr. 241, 20 N. W. 299 (holding that where it was conclusively shown that defendant knew that the highway over the bridge had been established, he was not entitled to an instruction based upon his belief in the non-existence of the road and his right to destroy the bridge).

For form of indictment in substance for wilful injury to a bridge see Owens v. State, 52 Ala. 400.

one,[28] an action for damages may be maintained at the instance of the corporate owners, or of the party or town whose duty it is to repair the same;[29] but it has been held that a town cannot recover for such injury until it has incurred some expense in making repairs occasioned thereby.[30]

B. By Whom Action Brought. No general rule can be laid down as to the party in whose name an action for the injury to a bridge or for a penalty for its destruction must be brought; the statutes being by no means uniform in this regard.[31]

C. Defenses. The mere fact that a bridge does not in all respects comply with the requirements of the statute or franchise authorizing its construction is not a defense in an action to recover for an injury thereto, if the omission was not a real or proximate cause of the injury.[32]

28. Necessity of alleging negligence.— The action for damages inflicted to a bridge by a party navigating the stream is not one of trespass, but negligence must be proved. Chico Bridge Co. v. Sacramento Transp. Co., 123 Cal. 178, 55 Pac. 780.

Prima facie negligence.— Where, in an action for damages inflicted by a steamer, the evidence showed that for several years previous the river had been navigable at all stages, and that a slight injury to the bridge had occurred only once before the suit, and only a few slight injuries since the suit, and that the draw in the bridge in no way contributed to the accident, it was held that the facts showed a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the navigators. Chico Bridge Co. v. Sacramento Transp. Co., 123 Cal. 178, 55 Pac. 780.

29. Chico Bridge Co. v. Sacramento Transp. Co., 123 Cal. 178, 55 Pac. 780 (holding that the bridge company, being in duty bound to repair the bridge, had a right to maintain the action against the wrong-doer, notwithstanding the fact that the county could, under its agreement with the bridge company, resume control and possession of the bridge at any time); Cue v. Brelland, 78 Miss. 864, 29 So. 850 (where plaintiff, having built a bridge for the county and obligated himself to keep the same in repair for a period of five years, it was held that an injury to the bridge resulting from the negligent driving of logs against it was an injury to him, and he was therefore entitled to maintain a suit against defendant for the damages so sustained); Hooksett v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co., 44 N. H. 105; Troy v. Cheshire R. Co., 23 N. H. 83, 55 Am. Dec. 177; Bidelman v. State, 110 N. Y. 232, 18 N. E. 115, 18 N. Y. St. 107, 1 L. R. A. 258; Ft. Covington v. United States & C. R. Co., 8 N. Y. App. Div. 223, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 313 [affirmed in 156 N. Y. 702, 51 N. E. 1094]. See also Pierrepont v. Lovelass, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 696, where, it appearing that a town having lawfully acquired the right to maintain a bridge, it was held that it might maintain an action to recover damages for an injury thereto.

Evidence of ownership — Prescription.— Evidence that for more than ten years a county had the claim and control of a bridge and continuously used it as a public county structure, and that after such time the bridge was repaired at the expense of the county, is sufficient to show such prescriptive title to the ownership of the bridge as will entitle the county to sue for an injury thereto. Howard County v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 130 Mo. 652, 32 S. W. 651.

30. Freedom v. Weed, 40 Me. 383, 63 Am. Dec. 670, the decision resting upon the theory that the town, in some instances, might neglect to repair the bridge, and never be called upon to restore it to its former state; and, being under no obligation by contract to make the repairs, it could not call for payment until there had been something in the nature of a disbursement.

31. Illinois.— McDonough County v. Markham, 19 Ill. 159, holding that an action to recover a penalty for the destruction of a bridge must be brought either in the name of the county commissioner or of the board of supervisors.

Michigan.— Denver Tp. v. White River Log & Booming Co., 51 Mich. 472, 16 N. W. 817, where it is held that actions for injuries to bridges must be brought by the overseer of highways, or, if he is disqualified from suing, then by the commissioner of highways.

New Jersey.— Suits for the protection of such property are properly brought in the name of the board of chosen freeholders. Monmouth County v. Red Bank, etc., Turnpike Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 91.

North Carolina.—Burke County v. Catawba Lumber Co., 115 N. C. 590, 20 S. E. 707, 847, where it is held that the county commissioners may sue in their own name to enjoin an injury and to recover damages for such injury.

Ohio.— The action must be brought by the county commissioners when it is their duty to keep the bridge in repair (Perry County v. Newark, etc., R. Co., 43 Ohio St. 451, 2 N. E. 854); but if the bridge is situated within the corporate limits of another city, which, under the statute, is bound to repair and control the same, and the county commissioners have no control thereover, they cannot maintain an action for damages in such case (Mahoning County v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 45 Ohio St. 401, 15 N. E. 468). And see Gallia County v. Holcomb, 7 Ohio 232, holding that under the statutes at that time, the county commissioners could not maintain an action for an injury to public roads or bridges.

32. Cumberland County v. Central Wharf Steam Tow-Boat Co., 90 Me. 95, 37 Atl. 867, 60 Am. St. Rep. 246.

D. Damages. The measure of damages for injury to a bridge is usually the amount which must necessarily be expended in repairing or restoring it,[33] but in some jurisdictions the party is, by statute, liable to greater damages.[34]

BRIEF. A detailed statement of a party's case;[1] an abridgment of a plaintiff's or defendant's case, prepared by his attorney, for the instruction of counsel on a trial at law;[2] an abbreviated statement of the pleadings, proofs, and affidavits at law, or of the bill, answer, and other proceedings in equity, with a concise narrative of the facts of the plaintiff's case, or the defendant's defense, for the instruction of counsel at the trial or hearing;[3] a condensed statement of the propositions of law which the counsel desire to establish, indicating the reasons and authorities which sustain them.[4] (Brief: Of Evidence, see APPEAL AND ERROR. Of Title, see ABSTRACTS OF TITLE. On Appeal or Error, see APPEAL AND ERROR.)

BRIGADE. See ARMY AND NAVY.[5]

BRITISH. See ALIENS; CITIZENS.

BROCAGE or BROKERAGE. The commission or percentage paid to brokers on the sale or purchase of goods, etc.[8] (See, generally, FACTORS AND BROKERS.)

BROKEN. Out of repair.[9]

BROKERAGE. See BROCAGE.

A worthless and decayed condition of a public bridge will not consitute a defense to an indictment against one for its destruction. Owens v. State, 52 Ala. 400.

Hindrance to navigation.—Inasmuch as the state may, in the absence of restrictive legislation by congress, authorize an erection of bridges across navigable rivers, it is no defense in a prosecution for the destruction of a bridge that it prevented the accused from navigating the stream. State v. Leighton, 83 Me. 419, 22 Atl. 380. Nor where the injury is caused by a raft of logs allowed to carelessly drift against the bridge, can the defendants show that there was a large amount of timber at the head waters of the river, and that it could not be taken to market in any other mode than that pursued by them. Sewalls Falls Bridge v. Fisk, 23 N. H. 171.

Improper construction.— In an action to recover damages for an injury to a bridge, if there is no averment of an improper or faulty construction of the bridge, evidence that if certain protections to the bridge had been built the collision would not have happened is inadmissible. Chico Bridge Co. v. Sacramento Transp. Co., 123 Cal. 178, 55 Pac. 780.

The fact that one is under orders from a street railway company of which he is an employee will not exonerate him. Smith v. District of Columbia, 12 App. Cas. (D. C.) 33.

If a toll-bridge, the damages would be the value of the structure destroyed, and the loss of tolls during the time reasonably necessary to rebuild it. Sewalls Falls Bridge v. Fisk, 23 N. H. 171.

34. In the District of Columbia any one convicted of injuring any bridge therein may be fined not exceeding fifty dollars. Smith v. District of Columbia, 12 App. Cas. (D. C.) 33.

In Michigan, treble damages are allowed against any party found guilty of injuring any bridge maintained by the public. The damages contemplated in these statutes, however, must be computed from the injury to the structure and not to public travel, and evidence of the importance of the road to the people is inadmissible. Shepard v. Gates, 50 Mich. 495, 15 N. W. 878. Nor would he be liable to such penalty for mere negligent acts resulting in injury, but the injury complained of must be wilful.
