On appeal.— A plea of a discharge in bankruptcy comes too late if first presented in an appellate court. Taliaferro v. Gay, 78 Ky. 496. And an appellate court will not take cognizance of a plea of discharge obtained after the appeal has been taken from the judgment below. Cornell v. Dakin, 38 N. Y. 253; Ward v. Tunstall, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.) 319; Riggs v. White, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 503. See also Dormire v. Cogly, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 177, holding that a plea to a writ of error of the bankruptcy of the plaintiff in error showing that the judgment was rendered after he was declared a bankrupt is insufficient. But see Todd v. Barton, 117 Mass. 291, holding that where a defendant before judgment against him suggested his bankruptcy and filed a written motion for a continuance, he may, upon subsequently obtaining a review, plead his discharge in bar of the action.

81. Pugh v. York, 74 N. C. 383; Featherman v. Beamish, 2 C. Pl. Rep. (Pa.) 155.

subsequent to the bringing of an action upon a claim which such discharge would release, and against which it would be a defense, defendant may be permitted to amend his pleadings for the purpose of setting up such defense.[82]

G. Evidence of Discharge. A certified copy of an order granting a discharge is evidence of the jurisdiction of the court, the regularity of the proceedings, and of the fact that the order was made.[83]

H. Discharge in Foreign Court. The discharge of a bankrupt in the court of a foreign country will not bar an action brought in the courts of the United States by a citizen who was not a party to, and did not appear in, the bankruptcy proceedings, although the debt upon which such action is based was contracted in such foreign country and was to be there paid.[84] But if a creditor who is a citizen of the United States has voluntarily submitted himself to the jurisdiction of a bankruptcy court in a foreign country he will be bound by a discharge granted by such court.[85]

I. New Promise After Discharge — 1. In General. The discharge of the bankrupt releases him from all legal obligation to pay a debt provable in bankruptcy;[86] but the moral obligation of the bankrupt still continues. This moral obligation, united with a subsequent promise by the bankrupt to pay the debt, is sufficient to constitute a right of action against such bankrupt.[87] A new promise

Form of order of discharge is prescribed in U. S. Supreme Ct. Bankr. Forms, No. 59; 89 Fed. lviii.

84. The discharge of a bankrupt from his debts is by virtue of statutory enactment and can have no extraterritorial effect. But partial payments upon a debt discharged in bankruptcy will not revive such debt.[93]

2. Declaring on New Promise or Original Debt. The authorities are in conflict as to whether the creditor should declare on the new promise or on the original debt. According to one line of cases the original debt may be considered the cause of action, at least for the purpose of the remedy.[94] According to another line the new promise does not revive the original debt so as to reinvest it with an actionable quality, but only recognizes its moral obligation so far as to admit it as the consideration to support the new promise.[95]

J. Revocation and Impeachment of Discharge — 1. Direct Impeachment. The judge may, upon the application of parties in interest, who have not been guilty of undue laches, filed at any time within one year after a discharge shall have been granted, revoke it upon a trial if it shall be made to appear that it was obtained through the fraud of the bankrupt, and that the knowledge of the fraud has come to the petitioners since the granting of the discharge, and that the actual facts did not warrant the discharge.[96] In the event of the revocation of the dis-

Courts may, in case of default, or in other charge, the property acquired by the bankrupt in addition to his estate at the time the adjudication was made shall be applied to the payment in full of the claims of creditors for property sold to him on credit, in good faith, while such discharge was in force, and the residue, if any, shall be applied to the payment of the debts which were owing at the time of the adjudication.[97]

2. Collateral Impeachment. A discharge granted by a court having jurisdiction is, until set aside or reversed in a direct proceeding, conclusive upon all parties to the proceeding. It cannot therefore be attacked collaterally.[98]

XX. Partnership Cases.[99]

A. Voluntary Bankruptcy — 1. In General. The term "person" as used in the Bankruptcy Act includes a partnership.[1] Therefore a partner-

Buying off opposition.— If the evidence shows that the bankrupt had bought off the opposition of a creditor to his discharge, the fact is itself prima facie evidence that he was not entitled to such discharge, and an order revoking the same is warranted. In re Dietz, 97 Fed. 563, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 316. See also Matter of Marshall, 3 Fed. 220.

Reference of petition.— When a petition for a revocation of a discharge makes out a prima facie case, and is filed in due time, it will be referred to the referee to ascertain and report upon the facts alleged, upon due notice to the bankrupt and upon hearing such evidence as may be offered by the parties. In re Meyers, 100 Fed. 775, 3 Am. 1. Bankr. Act (1898), § 1 (19), supra, note 8, p. 238.

An association of persons claiming to be ship which owes debts is entitled to the benefits of the Act as a voluntary bankrupt.[2]

2. PETITION. All the members of a partnership may unite in a voluntary petition, or an individual member of the firm may file a voluntary petition independent of the partnership.[3]

B. Involuntary Bankruptcy — 1. IN GENERAL. It is provided in the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 that a partnership, during the continuance of the partnership business, or after its dissolution and before the final settlement thereof, may be adjudged a bankrupt upon the petition of the individual members[4] of such part-incorporated as a bank under the laws of a territory, by which such corporations were not authorized, and which has conducted business as a bank since then under the corporate name assumed, may be held, subject to the provisions of the Act, as a partnership. Davis v. Stevens, 104 Fed. 235, 4 Am. Bankr. Rep. 763.

2. Bankr. Act (1898), § 4*a*.

Voluntary bankruptcy after dissolution.— The existence of unpaid debts, where there are no partnership assets and the partnership has ceased to exist before the petition, is not sufficient to bring it within the intent and meaning of Bankr. Act (1898), § 5*a*, which authorizes a partnership, after its dissolution and before a final settlement of its affairs, to be adjudged a bankrupt. In re Altman, 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. 689. But see In re Levy, 95 Fed. 812, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 21, holding that after a dissolution of a partnership, where debts are still owed by it, although outlawed by the statute of limitations of the state in which the court of bankruptcy sits, such partnership may be adjudged a bankrupt. See also In re Hirsch, 97 Fed. 71, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 344.

The Act of 1867, § 36, provided that "where two or more persons who are partners in trade shall be adjudged bankrupt," certain rights of all creditors in the partnership property, and in case of deficiency, in the individual property, should be recognized. Under this section it was held that where a firm did not actually exist and had no assets it could not be adjudged a bankrupt. In re Daggett, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 83, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,536, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 433; In re Work, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,044, 30 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 361; In re Wilkens, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,875, 2 Am. L. T. Bankr. Rep. 53, 1 Chic. Leg. N. 163, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 349; Hopkins v. Carpenter, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,686, 18 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 339; In re Abbe, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 4, 7 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 824, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 75, 15 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 589. Other cases held that where the partnership was dissolved and had debts it could be adjudged a bankrupt although it had no assets. In re Noonan, 3 Biss. (U. S.) 491, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,292, 5 Chic. Leg. N. 557, 30 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 425, 10 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 330, 21 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 73; In re Williams, 1 Lowell (U. S.) 406, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,703, 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 286; Hunt v. Pooke, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,896, 5 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 161. Still other cases held that a partnership might be adjudged a bankrupt although it did not actually exist, if there were partnership assets. In re Crockett, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 514, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,402, 2 Am. L. T. Bankr. Rep. 21, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 208; In re Hartouch, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,164, 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 422; Ex p. Hall, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,919, 5 Law Rep. 269; In re Bidwell, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,392, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 229.

3. In re Moore, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 79, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,750; In re Mitchell, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,656, 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 441.

Infant partner.— Upon a voluntary petition in bankruptcy presented by the adult member of a firm, the partnership, as well as the petitioning partner, may be adjudged bankrupt, and the partnership property, as well as the separate estate of the adult partner, may be administered in the bankruptcy proceedings, although no adjudication can be made against the infant partner. In re Duguid, 100 Fed. 274, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 794.

Where the partnership and the individual members thereof all become petitioners it is the practice in some courts to take proceedings as upon a single petition and administer the partnership estate as well as the estates of the individual members at the same time. In re Gay, 98 Fed. 870, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 529; In re Langslow, 98 Fed. 869, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 529. But in the eastern district of North Carolina it has been held that the filing of an involuntary petition against one partner individually does not justify any other member of the firm in coming into court and saving costs by being adjudged bankrupt even by a consent order. If the several partners desire to avail themselves of the benefits of the Bankruptcy Act they must file their individual petitions and make the deposit required to proceed stricti juris. Mahoney v. Ward, 100 Fed. 278, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 771. In another case in the same district where a petition was filed by a partnership to have the firm adjudged bankrupt, and also petitions by the individual members of such firm, it was held that the petitions and the accompanying schedules constituted separate and distinct cases. In re Barden, 101 Fed. 553, 4 Am. Bankr. Rep. 31.

Form of partnership petition is prescribed in U. S. Supreme Ct. Bankr. Forms, No. 2; 89 Fed. xxvii.

4. See supra, IV, B, 5; XX, A, 2.

As to separate petitions by several partners see supra, VI, B, 1, h, (1), (c).

A solvent partner is, as to the partnership and individual assets involved in the bank-nership or of creditors.[5] A non-joining member is entitled to resist the prayer of the petition in the same manner as if the petition had been filed by a creditor of the partnership.[6] The act of bankruptcy alleged in the petition may be that committed by one of the members of the partnership, while acting within the scope of delegated authority.[7]

2. ADJUDICATION. The partnership is a legal entity which may be adjudged a bankrupt in either voluntary[8] or involuntary proceedings,[9] irrespective of any adjudication of any of the individual members of the firm as bankrupts.[10] On the other hand, the language of the Act does not preclude an adjudication of the individual members of the partnership as bankrupts in proceedings against the partnership; and if there is such an adjudication there is nothing to prevent the partners from receiving a discharge individually, if they are otherwise entitled to ruptcy proceedings, an individual creditor. In re Stevens, 104 Fed. 323, 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 9.

When a petition is filed by one member of a partnership and the other members do not join, but contest the petition, the proceeding becomes, as to the non-joining members, an involuntary one. In re Murray, 96 Fed. 600, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 601. And where the petition is filed by one member of a partnership against the partnership and the members thereof, it must be clearly shown in the petition, and notice must be given to the non-joining partners before the firm can be adjudged bankrupt. In re Russell, 97 Fed. 32, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 91.

Under the Act of 1867 it has been held that a proceeding by the petition of one of two or more copartners to have such partners adjudicated bankrupt is a proceeding which is not wholly voluntary or wholly involuntary, but is partly voluntary and partly involuntary. So far as the petitioner is concerned it is voluntary; so far as the copartners not petitioning are concerned, it is not involuntary in the sense of other cases, unless the adjudication is asked for on the ground of the commission of an act of bankruptcy. In re Penn, 5 Ben. (U. S.) 89, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 10,927, 3 Chic. Leg. N. 225, 5 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 30; In re Noonan, 3 Biss. (U. S.) 491, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,292, 5 Chic. Leg. N. 557, 30 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 425, 10 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 330, 21 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 73.

5. Bankr. Act (1898), § 5*a*.

Joining of creditors.— Creditors of a partnership, being also by law creditors of each member of the firm, may join in a petition to have an individual member adjudged a bankrupt. In re Mercur, 95 Fed. 634, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 626.

6. U. S. Supreme Ct. Bankr. G. O. No. 8.

Notice of the filing of the petition must be given to the non-joining member in the same manner as in the case of a petition against an individual debtor. U. S. Supreme Ct. Bankr. G. O. No. 8; In re Murray, 96 Fed. 600, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 601; In re Altman, 95 Fed. 263, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 407; and supra, VI, B, 4, a.

Defenses.— A non-joining member may appear at the time fixed by the court for the hearing of the petition and make proof, if he can, that the partnership is not insolvent or has not committed an act of bankruptcy, and may make all other defenses which are permitted to be made by an individual debtor. U. S. Supreme Ct. Bankr. G. O. No. 8.

Power of referee.— Where a petition praying an adjudication in bankruptcy against a firm has been presented by a part only of the partners, and referred to the proper referee, if the partners who did not join in the petition shall, upon notice, enter their appearance, and contest the adjudication of the firm, the referee cannot act on the petition, but must certify the case to the judge, before whom the issue will be heard and determined. In re Murray, 96 Fed. 600, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 601.

7. In re Meyer, 98 Fed. 976, 39 C. C. A. 368, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 559, in which an assignment for the benefit of creditors, which purported to transfer all the property of the partnership, was held to be an act of bankruptcy, although the assignment itself may be void or voidable as against the firm because made by only one partner.

Where an assignment is made by the partnership and by each of the members thereof, the act of bankruptcy is committed by all of them, and the adjudication should embrace both the firm and the individual members thereof. Green River Deposit Bank v. Craig, 110 Fed. 137, 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 381. And see Chemical Nat. Bank v. Meyer, 92 Fed. 896, 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. 565.

Where a single member of a partnership signs an admission of bankruptcy in behalf of the partnership, the authority to sign will be presumed from the acquiescence or failure to disaffirm on the part of the other members, and constitutes an unqualified act of bankruptcy for which the partnership may be held responsible. In re Kersten, 110 Fed. 929, 6 Am. it under the Act.[11] But as the commission of an act of bankruptcy is indispensable to jurisdiction in an involuntary proceeding, the individual members cannot be adjudged bankrupts in such a proceeding, unless it is alleged and proved that they have committed or have been participants in committing one of the enumerated acts.[12]

3. SCHEDULES. Where the petition is filed by creditors, schedules are to be made and filed as in involuntary proceedings against individual debtors.[13]

C. Jurisdiction. The court of bankruptcy which has jurisdiction of one of the partners has jurisdiction of all the partners and of the administration of the partnership and individual property.[14]

D. Trustees. The creditors of the partnership appoint the trustee in the same manner and under the same circumstances as in cases of individuals.[15] The trustee must keep separate accounts of the partnership property and of the property belonging to the individual partners.[16]

E. Administration of Estate — 1. IN GENERAL. So far as possible the estate must be administered as provided in the Act for other estates.[17]

2. CLAIMS OF PARTNERSHIP AGAINST INDIVIDUAL ESTATES AND VICE VERSA. The court may permit the proof of the claim of the partnership estate against the individual estates and vice versa.[18]

Rep. 35, in which the petition did not allege that the members of the partnership had committed individually an act of bankruptcy, nor did anything appear in the record for which they could, as individuals, be adjudged bankrupts in involuntary proceedings. It was held that the individual members of the partnership could not be adjudged bankrupt and be given a discharge. See also In re Meyer, 98 Fed. 976, 39 C. C. A. 368, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 559.

Infant partner.— If a petition is filed against a partnership and its members, and it appears that one of the members is an infant, an adjudication can be made against the firm and its members who are of age, but the petition must be dismissed as to the infant member. In re Dunnigan, 95 Fed. 428, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 628.

13. See supra, IX.

Non-joining members.— Where a petition is filed by one or more, but not all of the members of a partnership, and the non-joining members resist the prayer of the petition, and an adjudication of bankruptcy is made upon the petition, the non-joining members are required to file schedules of their debts and inventories of their property in the same manner as is required in cases of debtors against whom an adjudication is made. U. S. Supreme Ct. Bankr. G. O. No. 8.

14. Bankr. Act (1898), § 5*c*.

The court is authorized to adjudge bankrupt persons who have had their principal place of business, resided, or had their domicile within its jurisdiction for the greater portion of the six months preceding the filing of the petition. Bankr. Act (1898), § 2 (1); and supra, II, A, 2, a.

In case two or more petitions shall be filed in two or more districts by different members of the same partnership for an adjudication of the bankruptcy of such partnership, the court in which the petition is first filed having jurisdiction shall take and retain jurisdiction over all proceedings in such bankruptcy until the same shall be closed; and if such petitions shall be filed in the same district action shall be first had upon the one first filed. U. S. Supreme Ct. Bankr. G. O. No. 6; and supra, VI, B, 1, h, (II), (B), (2).

The petition should state the facts as to the place of business of the firm, and the domicile and residence of the individual members thereof. In re Blair, 99 Fed. 76, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 588.

18. Bankr. Act (1898), § 5*g*.

Where the partnership of which the bankrupt is a member is not insolvent and it appears that all the creditors of the firm have been, or will be, paid, the claim of the solvent member of such partnership against his bankrupt copartner is to be treated the same as the

3. Marshaling Assets. The court may marshal the assets of the partnership estate and individual estates, so as to prevent preferences and secure the equitable distribution of the property of the several estates.[19]

4. Where All Partners Are Not Adjudged Bankrupt. In the event of one or more, but not all of the members of a partnership being adjudged bankrupt, the partnership property shall not be administered in bankruptcy, unless by the consent of the partner or partners not adjudged bankrupt; but such partner or partners not adjudged bankrupt shall settle the partnership business as expeditiously as its nature will permit, and account for the interest of the partner or partners adjudged bankrupt.[20]

5. Distribution of Proceeds[21] — a. In General. The net proceeds of the partnership property shall be appropriated to the payment of the partnership debts,[22] and the net proceeds of the individual estate of each partner to the payment of his individual debts.[23] Should any surplus remain of the property of any partner claims of other individual creditors of such bankrupt. In re Stevens, 104 Fed. 323, 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 9.

Where all the partners are bankrupt, the claim of one of them against the partnership cannot be proved in competition with other creditors of the partnership, unless there is a surplus of the firm property after the payment of all the partnership debts. b. Creditors Holding Firm and Individual Obligations. Where a creditor holds the joint obligation of a firm, secured by the individual obligation of one or more members thereof, he may prove his claim against both the firm and the individual partner or partners and receive dividends from both the joint and individual estates.[27]

6. Costs. The expenses of the proceeding shall be paid from the partnership property and the individual property in such proportions as the court shall determine.[28]

XXI. Offenses Against Bankruptcy Act.[29]

A. By Bankrupt.[30] A person may be punished, by imprisonment for a period not to exceed two years, upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently (1) concealed[31] while a bankrupt, or after his discharge, from his trustee any of the property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy; or (2) made a false oath[32] or account in, or in relation to, any proceeding in bankruptcy; (3) presented under oath any false claim for proof against the estate of a bankrupt, or used any such claim in composition personally or by agent, proxy, or attorney, or as agent, proxy, or attorney; or (4) received any material amount of property from a bankrupt after the filing of the petition, with intent to defeat the Act; or (5) extorted or attempted to extort any money or property from any person as a consideration for acting or forbearing to act in bankruptcy proceedings.[33] rule as to the marshaling and distribution of his assets among individual and firm creditors is the same as where the partnership itself is adjudged a bankrupt. In re Wilcox, 94 Fed. 84, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 117. There was a conflict of authority as to whether an analogous provision in the Act of 1867 applied in such case. Some decisions held that it did not. In re Knight, 2 Biss. (U. B. By Referee or Trustee. A person may be punished by fine, not to exceed five hundred dollars, and forfeit his office, and the same shall thereupon become vacant, upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly (1) acted as a referee in a case in which he is directly or indirectly interested; or (2) purchased, while a referee, directly or indirectly, any property of the estate in bankruptcy of which he is referee; or (3) refused, while a referee or trustee, to permit a reasonable opportunity for the inspection of the accounts relating to the affairs of, and the papers and records of, estates in his charge by parties in interest when directed by the court so to do.[34] A person may be punished, by imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years, upon conviction of the offense of having knowingly and fraudulently appropriated to his own use, embezzled, spent, or unlawfully transferred any property or secreted or destroyed any document[35] belonging to a bankrupt estate which came into his charge as trustee.[36]

C. Limitation of Prosecution. A person cannot be prosecuted for any offense arising under the Act unless the indictment is found or the information is filed in court within one year after the commission of the offense.[37]

D. Indictment. All matters necessary to constitute the offense as defined must be pleaded.[38]

XXII. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

The attorney-general must annually lay before congress statistical tables showing for the whole country, and by states, the number of cases during the year of voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy; the amount of property of the estates; the dividends paid and the expenses of administering such estates; and such other like information as he may deem important.[39]

I. DEFINITIONS.

A. Bank — 1. IN GENERAL. A bank has been defined as "a place for the deposit of money;"[1] "an institution usually incorporated,[2] with power to issue its promissory notes, intended to circulate as money (known as bank notes),[3] or to receive the money of others, on general deposit,[4] to form a joint fund that shall

3. Necessity of power to issue notes.— By many laws and state constitutions the primary function of banking is to issue notes. Consequently an institution that does not issue them is not a bank. 2. Kinds of Banks. Banks are of three kinds: Banks of deposit, which include savings-banks,[7] and all others which receive money on deposit; banks of discount, being those which loan money on collateral or by means of discounts of commercial paper; and banks of circulation, which issue bank-notes payable to bearer. But the same bank generally performs all these several operations.[8]

B. Banker. A banker has been defined as "a dealer in capital,—an intermediate party between the borrower and the lender."[9]

C. Banking. Banking is defined as "the business or employment of a banker, the business of establishing a common fund for lending money, discounting notes, issuing bills, receiving deposits, collecting the money or notes deposited, negotiating bills of exchange."[10]

Includes business of a money-broker.— Without considering the question as to how far a banker and a money-broker are the same in the common parlance and business usages of this state there is at least no doubt that the term "banker" includes all the business of a money-changer. II. Banking Corporations and Associations.[11]

A. Organization[12] — 1. Necessity For — a. In General. At common law banking is open to all persons,[13] but the states have unquestioned authority to forbid individuals or firms from engaging in banking unless they conform to the laws relating thereto, and the exercise of this power is not a violation of one's personal liberty.[14] A corporation organized for a specific purpose, like a railroad or an insurance company, cannot exercise banking powers.[15] Nor is authority to lend its surplus funds,[16] draw and sell drafts,[17] issue evidences of debt,[18] hold real or personal estate or any interest therein[19] sufficient.

b. Acting Without Authority — (i) In General. If individuals engage in banking without complying with the law,[20] hold meetings, elect directors, and the like, they may be civilly liable as partners[21] and criminally held as individuals;[22] and the president of a spurious bank is personally liable to the same extent as his thereon in payment of obligations, and buying checks or exchange from other banks or persons to keep up the Chicago deposit is not transacting the business of a banker. Scott v. Burnham, 56 Ill. App. 28.

11. Scope of section.— This subdivision is intended to treat of those principles which are common to all banking concerns, whatever the form of their organization. Elsewhere in the article will be treated such matters as are peculiar to national banks (see infra, III), savings-banks (see infra, IV), loan and trust companies (see infra, V), and clearing-houses (see infra, VI).

20. Necessity of showing full organization. — In a proceeding on a quo warranto against individuals exercising a banking franchise without authority in which they seek to show that they are legally acting as a banking corporation, they must prove it was fully organized (State v. Brown, 33 Miss. 500); but the title in the people to the franchise need not be shown (State v. Presbury, 13 Mo. 342).

Mere irregularities in organizing will not deprive the officers and stock-holders of the protection of the charter, or subject them to private liability when sued as unauthorized bankers. Bartholomew v. Bentley, 1 Ohio St. 37.

21. Pettis v. Atkins, 60 Ill. 454; Williams v. Hewitt, 47 La. Ann. 1076, 17 So. 496, 49 Am. St. Rep. 394; Vredenburg v. Behan, 33 La. Ann. 627; Workingmen's Accommodation Bank v. Converse, 29 La. Ann. 369; Field v. Cooks, 16 La. Ann. 153.

The promoters and organizers of a bank who attempt incorporation but do not complete it are liable as partners for debts contracted within the course of business. McLennan v. Anspaugh, 2 Kan. App. 269, 41 Pac. 1063.

Demand and notice.— Under the Ohio act of 1816 rendering the issuers of notes of unauthorized banks liable, the holders could recover from the issuers without proof of demand and notice, and likewise the payee and first indorser of a bill drawn by such a company was liable without a demand upon the drawer. What constitutes violation.—The New York act of April 21, 1818, did not preclude individuals or corporations, if otherwise authorized, from lending their funds on promissory notes by way of discount (People v. Brewster, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 498), but an individual who kept an office of deposit for the purpose of discounting notes was an offender within the law (People v. Bartow, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 290).

bank would have been if legally created.[23] No obligations, however, in favor of, or against, their bank, could once be enforced;[24] but now in many states if a bank does not possess authority to make a contract for the loan of money it may ignore the contract and recover the money in an action for money had and received.[25]

(II) INDICTMENT. An indictment for illegal banking may be against several,[26] or it may be against the president, cashier, and directors, without joining all the shareholders.[27] Such an indictment need not allege the defendants to be illegally organized where it is apparent that they were thus associated;[28] and in an indictment against one for acting as an officer of an unauthorized bank time is immaterial.[29] An indictment charging the offense in the words of the act creating it has been held sufficient.[30]

2. MANNER OF. To incorporate a bank several persons must associate and file an organization certificate containing prescribed particulars,[31] and the bank comes into being from the date of this certificate.[32] When a bank is created by special charter which requires the election of directors, the election of a president and

31. An individual who conducts a banking business is not a corporation. Codd v. Rathbone, 19 N. Y. 37; Hallett v. Harrower, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 537; Cuyler v. Sanford, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 225.

An unincorporated bank is not a de facto corporation and its president, who is the sole owner, may transfer its property to secure a bona fide creditor. Longfellow v. Barnard, 58 Nebr. 612, 79 N. W. 255, 76 Am. St. Rep. 117.

Conditions precedent prescribed by the act must be fulfilled before a bank can legally exist (Workingmen's Accommodation Bank v. Converse, 29 La. Ann. 369); but evidence of acts of user may be given for the purpose of showing such fulfilment (Williams v. Union Bank, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 339).

Effect of filing erroneous certificate.— Public policy demands that the certificate of incorporation when filed and acted on be given full effect against those who executed it, although its filing was contrary to the understanding and direction of some of them. Rehbein v. Rahr, 109 Wis. 136, 85 N. W. 315.

Omissions in an organization certificate may be subsequently corrected by legislation (People v. Perrin, 56 Cal. 345); and it has been held that although the directors of a bank be not named in a bank charter, or the institution itself be expressly called a bank, it may still have a legal existence (Mahony v. State Bank, 4 Ark. 620).

32. State v. Mason, 61 Kan. 102, 58 Pac. 978; Burrows v. Smith, 10 N. Y. 550, Seld. Notes (N. Y.) 115; Palmer v. Lawrence, 3

other officers by the stockholders will not satisfy the law, and the bank has no legal existence, even though the organization certificate be filed.[33]

3. Proof of. The existence of a bank may be proved[34] by reputation;[35] by evidence that it is doing business, has an office and officers, a name over its door, books of record of its business, and bills in circulation;[36] or by the charter itself, or a copy with proof of action thereunder.[37] In some states the charter is judicially noticed;[38] in others it must be pleaded and proved.[39]

B. Capital, Stock, and Dividends[40]— 1. Increase or Reduction of Stock. A bank incorporated with the privilege of having a minimum and maximum amount of stock may begin business with the smaller sum and afterward issue the larger;[41] but if the amount that may be issued is limited, there can be no increase without additional authority,[42] and the manner of making the increase prescribed by stat-

Validity of organization under special act. — A legislature authorized nine commissioners, or any three of them, to organize a bank. A majority of the entire number fraudulently transferred the franchise to the citizens of another state. Nevertheless the organization effected by three others was valid. Com. v. McKean County Bank, 32 Pa. St. 185.

34. When necessary. — A bank is not required to prove its existence under the general issue (Prince v. Commercial Bank, 1 Ala. 241, 34 Am. Dec. 773; Phenix Bank v. Curtis, 14 Conn. 437, 36 Am. 42. Kentucky Bank v. Schuylkill Bank, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 180.

There was held to be no increase where a bank cashier having fraudulently overissued the stock of his bank, it purchased, by legisute must be pursued.[43] Proper authority must also exist for lessening the amount,[44] and the capital set free by a reduction of the amount cannot be retained as a surplus fund.[45]

2. SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STOCK— a. Who May Subscribe— (I) IN GENERAL. Some banks have been organized and owned entirely by the state,[46] while others have had a dual ownership.[47] The right of the public to subscribe for the stock of an incorporated bank depends, therefore, on its charter.[48]

(II) WHERE SUBSCRIPTION FORBIDDEN IN NAME OF ANOTHER. Although a person is forbidden to subscribe in the name of another, the restriction does not prevent an attorney from subscribing in the name of his principal.[49]

b. Disposition of Unsubscribed Stock. When all the stock is not at first subscribed the balance is held by the bank in trust for all subscribers, and not simply for those who subscribed in the beginning.[50] A stock-holder entitled to a preëmption of an additional issue cannot maintain an action against the bank for its refusal to permit him to subscribe without proof of a demand and offer to subscribe therefor.[51]

c. Oversubscription. Where the law, anticipating oversubscriptions, has provided for reducing them, a subscriber cannot evade the law by subdividing his subscription among others, and in such a case the directors can go behind the face of the subscription to learn the truth.[52] When, however, the law does not provide a way, those authorized to receive subscriptions cannot act in an arbitrary manner in making reductions.[53]

3. PAYMENT FOR STOCK — a. Necessity For. When the stock of a bank is nontransferable by charter until complete payment no contract for transferring it can be executed until payment is made.[54]

Failure to pay first instalment.— If all rights acquired by subscribing for stock are forfeited by the failure to pay the first instalment no right in the stock can be trans-

b. Manner of Payment. When the law requires payment in cash or specie, payment must be so made,[55] and the giving of a note therefor will not constitute the payor a stock-holder,[56] although he may be liable on his note;[57] but where the condition of payment is for "property actually received," a note may be taken in payment.[58] Payment for stock in anything but money will not be regarded as payment except to the extent of the true value of the thing received in lieu of money.[59]

c. Time of Payment. Unless specifically required by law a subscriber need not pay at the time of subscribing;[60] and if a state can pay at a "convenient" time, payment at any time before the termination of the charter will suffice.[61]

d. Presumption of Payment. Whether shareholders have paid for the stock as the law requires must be proved by the certificate of the officers appointed to execute the law, but when a bank has been in operation several years, the presumption is that all the payments for stock have been made.[62]

4. Transfer of Stock — a. Right to Transfer — (i) In General. While a bank may refuse to transfer stock which is unpaid for[63] or of one otherwise indebted to the bank,[64] it has no discretionary authority in transferring its stock where application is made therefor in conformity with its by-laws by one having a prima facie right to have the same transferred[65] and cannot prevent a transfer by refusing to recognize the purchaser as a stock-holder.[66]

(ii) Remedy For Refusal. When a bank refuses to deliver a certificate to the purchaser his remedy is an action to recover the value of the stock[67] or for a conversion.[68]

b. Manner of Transfer.[69] A person does not become a stock-holder without his knowledge and assent, either express or implied,[70] but there may be a perfect transfer between the immediate parties, although no transfer be made on the books and the law provide that no transfer shall be voted unless it is registered.[71] Likewise a transfer on the books will suffice, although no certificate is issued to the transferee.[72]

c. Place of Transfer. If stock is transferable only on the books of the bank, which is the general rule, there can be no legal transfer except at the bank.[73] Therefore, if the parties make a transfer elsewhere, the purchaser cannot complain should the bank permit an attachment of the stock as the property of the vendor or former owner.[74]

d. Liability of Bank For Wrongful Transfer—(i) By Attorney. Where shares are transferred by an attorney the bank is responsible for his action[75] and is liable if the power be forged or executed by an incompetent person.[76] If stock is assigned to two persons with a power of attorney to one of them to transfer, he alone can make a valid transfer.[77]

Although a bank is prohibited from lending on the security of its own stock, or from becoming a purchaser except to prevent a loss on a debt previously contracted in good faith, it may acquire and retain a lien thereon by by-law for a liability as principal and surety so long as it remains undischarged. Meaning of by-law.— A by-law which provides that no transfer can be made by an indebted stock-holder and that the certificates of stock shall contain this notice does not created by by-law will not bind those purchasers who are ignorant of its existence.[86]

(II) Covers What Indebtedness. The lien covers the stock-holder's indebtedness to the bank;[87] but not his indebtedness to a third person acquired by the bank,[88] or an indebtedness incurred after a transfer of his stock.[89] A bank cannot hold the stock for the assignee's indebtedness.[90]

(III) Attaches to What Stock. Stock standing on the books of a bank in the name of a fictitious person or of a trustee is subject to a lien for the real owner's indebtedness;[91] and a bank may refuse to transfer any of the debtor's stock, although the retention of a part would be enough to secure its debt.[92] It has been held that a lien will not attach to stock which on its face is transferable,[93] or to stock held in trust when the bank has knowledge that it is so held.[94]

(IV) Waiver of Lien. A bank may waive its lien, acquired by charter or apply to an assignee of stock as collateral security who simply knows that the stock is transferable at the office of the company. Holly Springs Bank v. Pinson, 58 Miss. 421, 38 Am. Rep. 330.

general statute,[95] and a transfer[96] or the acceptance of other security[97] would be conclusive evidence of such waiver.

b. On Dividends. Whether a bank has a specific lien on the dividends of the stock of an indebted stock-holder has been decided both affirmatively[98] and negatively.[99] When it exists the bank's preference, in the event of the stock-holder's failure, is the same as that of a partnership creditor over an individual creditor in the estate of a partnership.[1]

C. Stock-Holders[2] — 1. Who Are. The one whose name appears on the stock-book is presumed to be the real owner, unless someone else is clearly shown to be.[3]

2. When They Become Such. The existence of the bank is not essential to constitute a subscriber a stock-holder if it is afterward duly organized;[4] and a

(III) Where Stock Is Transferred — (A) In General. As a rule transfers made in good faith and in accordance with legal requirements are valid and release stock-holders from subsequent liability;[12] while new purchasers are liable on the bank's failure for its indebtedness without reference to the time it was incurred.[13] In some states, however, the old stock-holders are still liable, either by statute or common law, for the bank's prior indebtedness, incurred while they were members, and the new stock-holders are liable only for the bank's indebtedness incurred after their purchase.[14]

(B) Where Bank's Debt Is Renewed. Where a stock-holder is regarded as the principal debtor and not the surety, the renewal of the bank's debt without his consent, or after the sale of his stock, does not affect his liability.[15] Where, however, the stock-holder is regarded as a surety, he is only secondarily liable, and the rule is otherwise.[16]

(C) Where Notice of Sale Required. Although a shareholder is sometimes required to give notice of the sale of his stock and is a holder for a specified period afterward,[17] his rights and obligations cease from the time of the transfer.[18]

It has been held that such notice of the sale of stock need not specify the purchaser.[19]

(D) Where Transfer Was Fraudulent. While the law seeks to make the real stock-holder liable[20] and the record furnishes strong evidence of his ownership,[21] yet, if the original and unrecorded owner has transferred his stock in order to escape liability, he will be liable.[22]

(E) Where Transfer Was Not Recorded Through Neglect of Bank. If the true owner's name does not appear through the unintentional or intentional neglect of the proper officers to make the transfer, he will be liable and the former owner, although his name still appears on the book, will be released.[23] To this rule the statutory exception must be noted, wherever it exists, declaring the person in whose name the stock stands to be the holder and liable for the bank's indebtedness.[24]

their debts;[30] but an authorized reduction of stock will exonerate them from liability beyond the reduced stock on subsequent indebtedness.[31]

(2) For Par Value of Stock. In many states statutes have been passed limiting the liability of shareholders to an amount equal to the par value of their stock, thus conforming the state requirement to that imposed on national bank stock-holders.[32] Under such statutes the liability of each is several without reference to the solvency of the rest,[33] and is unaffected by the non-payment in full of their shares.[34]

In Minnesota a stock-holder is liable for double the amount of stock, and the liability continues for one year after its transfer. State v. New England Bank, 70 Minn. 398, 73 N. W. 153, 68 Am. St. Rep. 538; Harper v. Carroll, 62 Minn. 152, 64 S. W. 145.

Interest on the claims of creditors constitutes, in some states, part of the indebtedness for which stock-holders are liable. Zang v. Wyant, 25 Colo. 551, 56 Pac. 565, 71 Am. Mahoney v. Bernhard, 45 N. Y. App. Div. 499, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 642.

33. By this rule a stock-holder can be held for such a proportion of the debt as his stock bears to the whole amount of stock; and if any stock-holder fails to pay his proportion the liability of the others is not thereby increased.

(B) When Liable as Partners. When a statute renders stock-holders jointly and severally liable for all the debts of their bank they are liable as partners as though it had never been incorporated.[35] Their liability is primary and not secondary, and they may be sued by creditors in any state where they happen to live without regard to the place where their bank was organized.[36]

(C) Limitation of Liability. An agreement among stock-holders not to be held is not valid,[37] and, since personal liability must inhere in some person, a stock-holder cannot exonerate himself by transferring his stock to the bank.[38] Nor is the assessment of some stock-holders, and not all, any defense, if the assessment be for the same amount as though all had been assessed.[39] Nor can a stock-holder lessen his liability by setting off a claim of any kind that he may have against the bank.[40]

(III) As to Duration—(A) In General. Unless the statute or charter otherwise prescribes, the liability of a stock-holder expires on the dissolution of his bank;[41] but in some jurisdictions the obligation of stock-holders is regarded as similar to that of a debtor on a note or similar obligation,[42] while in others it continues for a much longer period, like that of a debtor on a specialty.[43]

(B) When Statute of Limitations Begins to Run. It has been held that when a stock-holder's liability is primary, and not dependent on first obtaining a judgment against the bank, the statute of limitations begins to run in his favor from the time of the maturity of the bank's indebtedness;[44] while if his liability is secondary, it begins to operate from the time of issuing an execution against the bank on the judgment obtained against it.[45] According to another rule the statute begins to run in favor of stock-holders from the time their bank closes down,[46] although they cannot plead it as a bar to an action against them unless it also bars against their bank.[47]

c. Enforcement of Liability — (1) Condition Precedent. In many cases it has been held that before stock-holders can be subjected to any personal liability for their unpaid subscriptions, for capital withdrawn, or for a statutory assessment, the inability of the bank to pay its creditors must be judicially established,[48]

Assessment for unpaid stock and deficiency. — In the latest cases it is said that there is no substantial difference between the liability for an unpaid balance on a stock subscription and that for an unpaid deficiency of while in others this has been held unnecessary.[49] The question really depends on the mode of regarding the stock-holder's liability. If he is primarily liable a proceeding against the bank is not a prerequisite, otherwise it is essential before proceeding against him.[50] When a bank has been adjudged a bankrupt this is sufficient proof of inability to pay its creditors, and they can proceed against the stock-holders;[51] and after judgment against the bank a stock-holder cannot question the original cause of action unless it is tainted with fraud.[52]

(II) Form of Action. The remedy against stock-holders which is sometimes clearly prescribed by statute is not everywhere the same. In most states a proceeding in equity will lie;[53] in others, the remedy is by an action on the case;[54] and in others, the proceeding is statutory where the liability is founded on a statute and exclusive of any other.[55] Unless the statute clearly settles the question, the better rule perhaps is that the proceeding may be either a legal or equitable one.[56]

(III) Parties—(A) Who May Sue. In some states either the creditors or receiver can sue,[57] but when the question is not determined by statute,[58] the receiver's right to sue depends on whether the stock-holder's liability is a corporate asset. If it is he can maintain an action therefor;[59] otherwise he cannot.[60]

In Minnesota, by Gen. Stat. § 2501, the liability of each stock-holder is several to all the creditors, but all must be joined in one action in equity brought by all the creditors. The statutory remedy is exclusive, and therefore an action by the creditors in Minnesota against the stock-holders is a bar to a subsequent action in another state. Finney v. Guy, 106 Wis. 256, 82 N. W. 595, 49 L. R. A. 486.

Estate of deceased stock-holder.— In pursuing the estate of a deceased stock-holder for the payment of a bank debt, all the living stock-holders and representatives of estates of deceased ones should be made parties to the bill. (IV) VENUE—(A) In General. Where the liability of stock-holders is prescribed by statute, and the indebtedness of the bank, unless it has failed, must be judicially determined before proceedings can be begun against them, it has been held that creditors can sue only in the state where the bank is located.[65] In other cases, however, it has been declared that the liability of stock-holders under the usual statutes prescribing this liability is contractual,[66] and that therefore a creditor can proceed against a shareholder in any state where the latter may happen to live.[67]

(B) When Receiver Sues. Although an assignee or receiver can sue in another state for the balance of an unpaid subscription,[68] it is questioned whether he can sue elsewhere under a state statute for an assessment on the stock.[69]

85. Effect of not giving bond.— A bank director gave a bond as required by law for the discharge of his duties "while he should be a director," and was reëlected annually but never gave another bond. Although the statute forbade him from entering on his office until he had executed a bond, and also provided that he should hold office until another was appointed and qualified, nevertheless the office was considered an annual one and that he lawfully acted each year as a director. State Treasurer v. Mann, 34 Vt. 371, 80 Am. Dec. 688.

Effect of delay in execution.— A bond is not void because of two weeks' delay in its execution after the principal began his duties. U. S. Bank v. Brent, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 696, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 910.

Blanks.—When a bond bore no other day than the —— day of ——, 1869, it was not binding on the bondsmen until the last day of that year. Graves v. Lebanon Nat. Bank, 10 Bush (Ky.) 23, 19 Am. Rep. 50. The liability of one who signs a bond in blank, that is afterward completed, attaches from the time of his signature. Eyssallenne v. Citizens' Bank, 3 La. Ann. 663.

Director as surety.— A bond signed by a director as surety, who ought not to have signed it (Jose v. Hewett, 50 Me. 248), is valid if he resigned before its acceptance (Franklin Bank v. Cooper, 36 Me. 179).

Retroactive effect of statute.— A bond that fulfils the law at the time of its execution is not affected by subsequent legal requirements. Lionberger v. Krieger, 88 Mo. 160.

Acting as a bank in violation of law.— If a person becomes surety for the clerk of a company not authorized to do banking, and in violation of law it undertakes this business, the surety is not liable for any wrong of the clerk while thus acting as a bank clerk. Blair v. Perpetual Ins. Co., 10 Mo. 559, 47 Am. Dec. 129.

88. Franklin Bank v. Cooper, 36 Me. 179.

When formal acceptance not necessary.—If a cashier has acted for a long time his bond need not be formally accepted in order lawfully to enter on the duties of his office and render his sureties liable for his wrongs. Dedham Bank v. Chickering, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 335; U. S. Bank v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 64, 6 L. ed. 552.

(II) Effect of Promotion. If an officer is promoted, thereby incurring greater responsibility,[89] and his bond is not changed, his sureties are released for any defalcation in the higher office.[90]

(III) Renewal. If a bond which must be renewed[91] remains in force until given up and canceled, it is effective until the execution of the new one.[92] If a defalcation is discovered during the period covered by the first bond the sureties in this would be liable; but if the defalcation is made good by another committed

What is acceptance.— The delivery of a bond given by a cashier to the directors and its retention by them, and the putting of him in office is an acceptance, although nothing appears on the bank record.

during the running of the second bond, the authorities differ whether the sureties on the first or second bond are liable.[93]

b. Oath. It is sometimes required that an officer shall be sworn before entering upon his duties, but a neglect to take such oath will not vitiate his bond.[94]

3. Compensation. The compensation of the president[95] and cashier[96] is fixed by the directors and may be what they think reasonable; but the law raises no implied promise for his payment[97] and consequently he cannot recover payment for extra services however valuable they may be.[98] The vice-president is entitled to no compensation in the absence of a statute, by-law, or contract to which his own vote is not essential.[99] Unless an agreement to pay them a salary exist before their election, directors cannot authorize payment to themselves;[1] but one or more directors may be paid for extra services not of a directorial character but as agents.[2]

4. Duties and Powers — a. In General — (i) Rules of Agency Apply — (a) In General. Although every bank officer, including every director, is an agent, the acts of directors are regarded as corporate acts,[3] while those of other officers are governed by the general rules of agency. They have authority to act in accordance with the general usage, practice, and course of their business, and when thus acting they bind their bank in favor of third persons who have no knowledge of any narrower limitation of their powers.[4] When they act beyond

What defaults covered.—Where a bond covered defaults committed during its existence and within twelve months next and before the date of discovery, it did not cover a default committed more than twelve months prior to its discovery, although it would have been discovered within a year from its commission except for the act of the employer in falsifying the books during the year preceding the discovery. New York Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Consolidated Nat. Bank, 71 Fed. 116, 39 U. S. App. 26, 17 C. C. A. 641. care as would be exercised by a careful man in his own affairs of similar importance.[8]

(B) Imputation of Declarations of Officers — (1) GENERALLY — (a) RULE STATED. Declarations, representations, or admissions of an officer[9] made in the usual course of business bind his bank,[10] provided they are something more than incidental or casual remarks[11] and do not relate to transactions which are past and ended.[12] Concerning the place of making them the better opinion is that they need not be confined to the bank.[13]

(b) GIVING INFORMATION. In giving information it has been held that an officer's answer when given in good faith, even though erroneous, will not render his bank liable, and that should his bank suffer therefrom, it could not recover from the inquirer.[14] If, however, information is given in the due course of his business[15] on which another acts, his bank is bound thereby.[16]

(2) OF DIRECTORS. The declarations of directors usually are not binding as

15. Inquiry by telephone.— If a bank is thus asked whether it has issued a check in favor of a specified person, and if so, whether it is all right, and answers affirmatively, the answer applies to the drawer's signature and to the fund for paying the check, but not to any indorsement. they can act only in one way; but when they act as special agents they may bind their bank by what they say, like other agents or officers.[17]

(c) Imputation of Knowledge of Officers — (1) GENERALLY — (a) RULE STATED. A bank is charged with the knowledge acquired by its cashier, president, or other officers[18] pertaining to transactions within the scope of the bank's business,[19]

17. East River Bank v. Hoyt, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 441; Mapes v. Titusville Second Nat. Bank, 80 Pa. St. 163.

18. Must be an active officer.— A distinction has been raised with respect to the effect of a notice, whether the officer is actively engaged in conducting the bank's affairs or not. As a cashier is always thus engaged, knowledge acquired by him is always binding, but perhaps a different rule applies to a president who is less active. See Henry v. Northern Bank, 63 Ala. 527; Washington Nat. Bank v. Pierce, 6 Wash. 491, 33 Pac. 972, 36 Am. St. Rep. 174. When he is an active officer, however, knowledge acquired by him is as binding on the bank as knowledge acquired by the cashier. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. McAnulty, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. Attorneys.— This question has arisen with attorneys more frequently perhaps than with any others. Fulton Bank v. New York, etc., Canal Co., 4 Paige (N. Y.) 127. See, generally, ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

Clerks.— The knowledge acquired by a clerk employed in collecting notes concerning the residence of an indorser of a note held by his bank would be imputed to it; but if acquired by a paying teller while discharging his duties it would not be. although such knowledge be acquired in another transaction than that to which it relates.[20]

(b) Where Officer Acts as Agent For Two Parties. When a bank officer is acting as a president or director of another concern, or as a trustee or executor of an estate, the knowledge acquired in the latter capacity is imputed to his bank according to the most general rule.[21]

(c) Where Officer Personally Interested. When an officer is individually interested in a note or other matter, the better opinion is that his knowledge is not to be imputed to his bank, since his interest is best served by concealing it.[22]

Trust collaterals.— When a bank officer knows that securities deposited by a debtor as collateral are held by him as trustee the bank is charged with this knowledge. Loring v. Brodie, 134 Mass. 453; Gaston v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 29 N. J. Eq. 98. The same rule applies to a depositor who, with a bank officer's knowledge, deposits trust money in his own name (Bethlehem First Nat. Bank v. Peisert, 2 Pennyp. (Pa.) 277) or to a debtor who uses trust money with a bank officer's knowledge to pay a debt due to the bank (Hughes v. Settle, (Tenn. Ch. 1895, 36 S. W. 577). When a president knew that the depositor of money for a corporation, and in its name, had no authority to draw it out, the bank was not responsible for his withdrawal of it, for the president was ignorant of his intention to do this. (2) Of Directors — (a) In General. Knowledge of a material fact communicated by a bank director to the board at a regular meeting is notice to the bank;[23] but as he is not the chosen organ of communicating with the world, knowledge obtained by him in the ordinary way will not affect the bank[24] if he is not present at a board meeting[25] or is present and does not communicate it.[26]

Absence.—An interesting question arises in connection with the discount of notes whether knowledge possessed by the president, cashier, or director of some fact that would be clearly chargeable to the bank if he were present at the time of discounting them is nevertheless to be charged to the bank if, in truth, such officer was away. Perhaps the better opinion is that the bank is not to be charged with such knowledge, except where the officer is a member of a finance or discounting committee in which his duty to be present is imperative. not, the bank is nevertheless held responsible.[27] In like manner when the fact is one that ought to be especially stated because it pertains to a fraudulent transaction, and he withholds it, his fraud is imputed to his bank.[28]

(c) Where Personally Interested. The knowledge of a bank director is not chargeable to his bank with respect to all discounts and other matters in which he is interested, for the presumption is that he will not communicate them, since his purpose would be best served by maintaining silence.[29] This rule also applies when he is interested as a director or president of another company.[30] of a contract which the bank cannot lawfully make,[32] and the ratification to be perfected must be with knowledge of all the circumstances,[33] not simply as the officers who performed the act believe them to be but as they really are.[34] If a contract is ratified at all it is ratified in its entirety.[35]

(2) How Done. Ratification may be done by resolution of the board of directors,[36] or by great variety of acts and deeds.[37]

Bringing suit.— When a bank brings an action on a note or other contract made by an officer this works a ratification of it. Singleton v. Monticello Bank, 113 Ga. 527, 38 S. E. 947; Planters Bank v. Sharp, 4 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 75, 43 Am. Dec. 470; La Grande Nat. Bank v. Blum, 27 Oreg. 215, 41 Pac. 659; Wilson v. Pauly, 72 Fed. 129, 37 U. S. App. 642, 18 C. C. A. 475. But a bank, by bringing suit on a note taken for value before maturity, signed by the cashier and others, does not thereby ratify the cashier's representations to his co-makers that the note would not be delivered to the bank until it was signed by the president. Nephi First Nat. Bank v. Foote, 12 Utah 157, 42 Pac. 205.

Silence.— If the acts are known, especially if they are repeated, and no dissent is shown within a reasonable time by the directors, their silence will operate as a ratification. limited to such contracts as the bank can lawfully make,[38] and any other, if made, cannot be ratified.[39]

(B) Receiving Special Deposits. Officers cannot subject their bank to unusual liability by special contracts with depositors;[40] but when the practice of taking them is general, their bank will be regarded as the depositary, even though having no authority to receive them.[41]

(III) Payments—(A) Of Deposits. In paying deposits an officer must exercise reasonable care and diligence, although strict proof of the identity of the depositor who draws a check is not required.[42] There must be proper authority for paying the checks of corporations.[43]

(B) Of Overdrafts. In paying overdrafts the modern rule is different from the old one. Once, to do this was a grave offense;[44] now, its propriety depends on the ability and worthiness of the depositor.[45] It may intentionally be done as a loan, and under proper conditions is fully justified.[46]

(IV) Transfers of Stock. In issuing and transferring stock proper care and diligence are exercised when certificates are issued by the proper officers, under the corporate seal, after receiving value, and nothing appears to show any irregularity in issuing them.[47]

(v) When Personally Interested in Transaction. An officer cannot act in a transaction in which he is personally interested for both parties, and should he do so, his acts would not bind the bank and would become valid only through implied or expressed ratification. The sale of a note by a president or cashier to a bank of which he is the manager can never be valid without some act of the directory.[48]

b. Of Directors — (i) In General — (a) Can Act Only as a Board — (1) Rule Stated. The direction of a bank is in its board of directors,[49] but directors are not the officers of the bank, and have no power individually to control its management. They can act only collectively, and are not the agents of the institution.[50] Although it is usual for their action to be recorded, they may give a verbal direction to an officer that will be valid.[51]

(2) Action by Majority. Directors may bind their bank by a major vote of

What is a legal board.— If a charter requires seven directors to make a board, and declares the president to be entitled to all the powers and privileges of a director, the president and six directors constitute a legal board within the meaning of the charter. State Bank v. Ruff, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 448.

De facto director.— An officer de facto is one who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not a good officer in point of law (Mechanics Nat. Bank v. H. C. Burnet Mfg. Co., 32 N. J. Eq. 236), as a person elected at a meeting of five directors although by the bank's charter seven directors were required to meet for this purpose (Baird v. Washington Bank, 11 Serg. & R. those present[52] at a regular stated meeting, or at a special meeting of which all have been notified,[53] if a quorum[54] be present.[55] Notice of a meeting for ordinary transactions need not state the object of the meeting.[56]

(B) Effect of Custom. If the presence of a majority of the directors or of the finance committee is required by a rule of the bank to authorize a discount, a custom for one director and the cashier to discount a note will override the rule.[57]

(II) Specific Powers. Directors have authority to lend or borrow money;[58] to authorize the president or cashier or both to borrow;[59] to compromise a claim[60] or authorize one of their number so to do;[61] to assign or indorse a note[62] or authorize one of their number or the president so to do;[63] to transfer a judgment belonging to the bank;[64] to declare dividends;[65] to elect suitable officers for transacting the bank's business;[66] to make an assignment without the assent of the majority of the stock-holders;[67] and to appoint a finance committee to discount its paper.[68] They cannot, however, release a stock-holder from his subscription;[69] condone the fraud of an officer;[70] speculate with the funds;[71] make a private profit in discharging their official duties;[72] keep special deposits without authority;[73] or donate the property of the bank to any charitable, political, or business purpose.[74]

c. Of President and Cashier — (I) Of President — (A) In General — (1) Rule Stated. In some cases a president receives only a nominal salary, is expected to devote only a portion of his time to the business, and is not required to exercise the same degree of care and foresight as a president who is the real head and manager and who possesses all the authority of the cashier.[75] He may, however, be authorized by the directors to do anything within the authority of the bank's charter except those positive requirements that are personal and cannot be delegated;[76] but when he goes beyond the scope of his usual authority it must be shown that in some way his act was authorized by the directors.[77]

(2) During Cashier's Absence. The president's authority during the cashier's absence has been questioned, but custom rules in such matters, and whatever

(3) In Mixed Transactions. The president is often concerned in the transactions of his bank, and the question arises whether he or his bank or both are liable.[79]

(B) Specific Powers. The president can employ counsel and conduct the bank's litigation;[80] borrow money;[81] indorse and transfer the bank's paper;[82]

79. Bank as trustee.—A bank cannot be held as trustee for money collected by its president and financial manager, who in thus acting is a trustee for the benefit of the creditors of the makers of notes to bank, the bank having no connection with the trust property. Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1, 44 N. W. 1123.

Bank-stock.— The president induced a person to give his note for stock, telling him that the dividends would pay the interest and that it could be sold at any time if desired to pay the note itself. The note was discounted by the bank and the amount was put to the president's credit which he drew out. None of the bank's officers knew about the contract. The bank was not bound, and the maker was compelled to pay. Kennedy v. Otoe County Nat. Bank, 7 Nebr. 59.

Guaranty.—A guaranty to a person against loss for signing as a surety given by a president in his own name to a note given to the bank to retire another note held by it against the surety's principal is his individual obligation and not binding on the bank. Sturgis First Nat. Bank v. Bennett, 33 Mich. 520.

Loans.— A president procured a banking firm to discount his individual note, notified his own bank that he had deposited the amount with the firm to the credit of his bank, and afterward authorized the firm to charge the note to the account of his bank, which was done. It was held that he could not use the bank's deposit for his own use and that the receiver in an action against the firm was entitled to it. Chrystie v. Foster, 61 Fed. 551, 26 U. S. App. 67, 9 C. C. A. 606. The president of a national bank applied for a loan to a Canadian bank, which declined to make an individual loan, but offered to deposit the amount desired in the other bank. This was done by means of drafts, for which security was given. The loan was held to be that of the bank and not the president's individual loan. Eastern Townships Bank v. Vermont Nat. Bank, 22 Blatchf. (U. S.) 498, 22 Fed. 186. A bank manager is not acting within the scope of his authority in accepting a check from one customer to deliver to another. Grieve v. Molsons Bank, 8 Ont. 162.

13. Borrower.— One who borrows money from a bank for the cashier on collaterals belonging to the latter is not entitled to credit for the amount of them after their wrongful withdrawal and conversion by the cashier. Merchants Nat. Bank v. Demere, 92 Ga. 735, 19 S. E. 38.

Certificate of deposit.— A bank ordered goods for third persons who were unable to pay for them. The cashier took their note and sent the seller a certificate of deposit payable in three months, regular in form, but signed with his name alone and not as cashier. This transaction was held to be not within the scope of the cashier's authority. Crystal Plate Glass Co. v. Livingston First Nat. Bank, 6 Mont. 303, 12 Pac. 678.

Conversion of stock.— When buying and selling stock is outside the legitimate business of a bank, it cannot be held liable in trover for the conversion by its cashier of stock bought for plaintiff on a check drawn to the cashier individually without its knowledge or authority. Preston v. Marquette County Sav. Bank, 122 Mich. 696, 81 N. W. 920.

Deposits.—A cashier of a bank in which are deposited the funds of a corporation of which he is treasurer cannot be held personally liable therefor, although he deposited them in his official capacity. Sprague v. Steam Nav. Co., 52 Me. 592.

Guaranty.— A guaranty of a note for which the bank has given a consideration, although addressed to the cashier personally, runs to the bank. Woodstock Bank v. Downer, 27 Vt. 482, 65 Am. Dec. 210.

Indorsement.—An indorsement by the cashier of a note belonging to the bank is voidable only and passes the legal title unless avoided by the bank. Preston v. Cutter, 64 N. H. 461, 13 Atl. 874.

Loan.— If a cashier obtains a note and indorsement thereon, through improper means, from the maker and indorser, which is afterward discounted by the directors, the bank cannot recover of the indorsers. Bank v. Irvine, 3 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 250.

The public are not bound to inquire into the special instructions which the officers of a bank may have received about the manner of discharging their duties. Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 35. They are not supposed to know how the duties of bank officers are apportioned among themselves. If, therefore, an official who receives a note for collection, or the money in payment therefor which is offered at the counter, the person dealing with him is justified, in the absence of positive knowledge, in supposing that he has authority to act in this manner. proper clerk;[65] by a declaration made by one within his proper field of employment;[66] and if he acts in the place of the cashier or other administrative officer during the latter's absence, by his acts which pertain to the usual and ordinary business of the bank.[67]

5. Liability For Acts of Officers — a. Liability of Corporation — (i) In General. To render the bank liable for an officer's act, it must have been done for the institution.[68] If he goes beyond the range of his duties and of his own will does an unlawful thing he will be personally liable but not the bank;[69] but although an officer's wrongful act cannot be authorized or ratified,[70] the bank may sometimes be liable therefor.[71]

(ii) For Contracts. Although the defense of ultra vires will not prevent a recovery for torts, different rules apply to the contracts made by the bank's officers.[72]

67. Certifying.— An assistant cashier who is acting as cashier and teller can certify a check. Clarke Nat. Bank v. Albion Bank, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 592.

He can indorse and transmit notes for collection, but he has no power to pledge them unless they become pledged by their transmission. Smith v. Lawson, 18 W. Va. 212, 41 Am. Rep. 688.

68. Acting as agents for customers.— Officers occasionally act as agents for their customers, in making deposits (Manhattan Co. v. Lydig, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 377, 4 Am. Dec. 289), paying notes (Thatcher v. State Bank, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 121), making loans, and in other ways. When they act thus the bank is not responsible for what they do, but the question is sometimes difficult to answer, whether the customer supposed the official was acting for him or for the bank in executing a request (New England Mortg. Security Co. v. Addison, 15 Nebr. 335, 18 N. W. 76; Olmsted v. New England Mortg. Security Co., 11 Nebr. 487, 9 N. W. 650; Cheney v. Woodruff, 6 Nebr. 151).

The rule declared in the oldest American case by the highest court of Louisiana has been more often quoted and followed than any other: "The duties of directors are those of control, and the neglect which would render them responsible for not exercising that control properly, must depend on circumstances, and in a great measure be tested by the facts of the case. If nothing has come to their knowledge, to awaken suspicion of the fidelity of the president and cashier, ordinary attention to the affairs of the institution is sufficient. If they become acquainted with any fact calculated to put prudent men on their guard, a degree of care commensurate with the evil to be avoided is required, and a want of that care certainly makes them responsible." Percy v. Millaudon, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 68, 75.

In one of the latest well-considered cases in which many authorities were reviewed the court said: "It is not of course to be expected that the directors shall attend to the current business, but they must, at their peril, give such attention to and so manage the concerns of the company that they may be able at all times to know what their executive officers and other agents, as well as their fellow directors are doing." and a creditor who has a cause for action against them discharges one of them, he discharges his own claim against all.[97]

(c) Limitations. The directors can defend by showing that the action is barred by the statute of limitations.[98]

(d) Wrongful Acts of Others. Directors cannot relieve themselves from the consequences of their misconduct by the wrong-doing of others.[99]

(3) Enforcement [1] — (a) Mode of Procedure. An assignee or receiver can proceed against them in equity for their negligence; and if he refuses to do so the stock-holders and creditors can, in some jurisdictions, proceed themselves, making the bank a defendant,[2] while in others creditors cannot maintain such an action.[3]

(b) Pleading. In an action by a bank-creditor against a bank's officers to recover for a loss caused by their negligent and fraudulent mismanagement of its business, the complaint must allege that each defendant was an officer of the bank when the wrongful acts took place;[4] but where directors are charged with fraud and deceit in making false statements of the bank's solvency, it need not allege that they knew or believed the bank to be insolvent, such knowledge being conclusively presumed from their position.[5]

(c) Of President. The president, when abusing his authority, is clearly liable to the bank like any other agent to his principal.[6] He is liable therefore for discounting his own note;[7] for lending to others without proper security;[8] for permitting one to overdraw;[9] for neglecting to give proper instructions to others concerning the business of the bank whereby a loss is incurred;[10] for neglecting to take a bond from a bank official;[11] for permitting customers to take away the bank's securities for inspection;[12] and for misapplying property confided to him.[13]

(d) Of Cashier — (1) In General. The cashier is liable for making loans and not entering them on the books;[14] for permitting overdrafts;[15] for neglecting to demand payment of a note and thereby releasing the indorser;[16] and for misapplying or wrongfully converting funds intrusted to his keeping.[17] His liability is still greater for injury caused by his illegal, fraudulent, and tortious acts done on his sole authority,[18] and the periodical examination by the directors of the business of the bank does not estop it from taking action against him for negligence or fraud in conducting its affairs.[19] He is not liable, however, for doing a palpably illegal thing when acting under the special authority of the

(2) For Acts of Subordinates. The cashier is not an insurer of the honesty and fidelity of those who occupy subordinate positions, and therefore is not liable for misappropriations by them if he exercise reasonable diligence in supervising their work.[22]

(E) Of Minor Officers. Minor officers are not liable for mistakes.[23] If therefore a teller should, observing the usage of banks, receive as cash the check of an individual in good credit, he would not be personally liable therefor if the drawer had no funds.[24]

(F) Of Special Agent. A special agent is not liable when ordinary care has been used[25] or for a loss occasioned by his mistake on a doubtful matter of law,[26] although he would be for a palpable mistake in transacting the bank's business[27] or when he exceeds or disregards his instructions.[28]

(II) Criminal Liability[29] — (A) Drawing or Paying Overdraft. In some states the drawing or paying of an overdraft is a criminal offense.[30] The law formerly regarded this as a far more serious offense, but the cases are exceptional which are thus regarded at the present time.[31] taken, and also aver the value of the notes.[34] Under some statutes it must be averred that defendant had possession by virtue of his employment[35] but an intent to defraud the bank need not be averred.[36]

(c) Making False Returns. The return by a bank in obedience to the statute must be a substantial compliance, and if the statute requires the return to be true under oath and it is false the officer is guilty of perjury, but the indictment in such case must allege that the false return was wilfully made.[37]

(d) Receiving Deposits When Bank Insolvent — (1) In General. The most frequent modern criminal offense for which officers are liable is the receiving of deposits[38] when a bank is insolvent.[39] In some states these laws at first related only to incorporated banks,[40] but they now very generally include private bankers.[41] Neither the place where the deposit is received,[42] the receiver,[43] nor the fact that he intended to return the deposit is material.[44] If actually taken when the bank or banker was insolvent liability for the deed follows,[45] unless received contrary to the officer's instructions and such act is ratified by retention.[46]

(2) Indictment.[47] The indictment must sufficiently charge that the defendant was a banker within the meaning of the statute,[48] that at the time the bank

was actually insolvent;[49] and the unlawful conversion or appropriation of the moneys deposited, or that the same were embezzled, where the statute makes this the gist of the offense.[50] It need not be averred that loss occurred to any one by reason of such deposit.[51] An indictment in the language of the statute has been held sufficient.[52]

(3) EVIDENCE. The burden of proof is on the state to show by competent legal evidence every constituent of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt;[53] but it need not prove that the depositor was not indebted to any of the bank's officers.[54]

69. Method of bookkeeping.— A custom or practice in keeping books may be shown to corroborate the testimony of a bank official that a deposit has not been received. Meighen v. Bank, 25 Pa. St. 288.

Mode of transferring securities.—A custom concerning the mode of transferring securities may be sufficient to put a bank on inquiry when it has not been observed. Taliaferro v. Baltimore First Nat. Bank, 71 Md. 200, 17 Atl. 1036.

Place of leaving notice of maturity of directors' note.—A custom that notice of the maturity of the note of directors shall be left on the cashier's desk is binding. Weld v. Gorham, 10 Mass. 366.

Practice of borrowing.— Custom is admissible to show the ordinary practice of borrowing money of banks in a particular place. Crain v. Jacksonville First Nat. Bank, 114 Ill. 516, 2 N. E. 486.

Time of depositing or returning checks.—A custom or usage of depositing checks on the day of receiving them, or on the following one; and of the immediate returning by a

have a binding force between bank and customer,[70] but like a by-law[71] a custom cannot affect a third person,[72] unless he knows thereof,[73] and a custom or usage between banks and customers living in the same place is not binding on persons living elsewhere.[74] Unreasonable customs or usages cannot stand.[75]

(II) How Established. A general usage is not established by proof of a single case.[76] Furthermore it rests in fact and not in judgment or opinion.[77]

3. Place of Business — a. In General. A bank has a legal home,[78] and while sometimes its contemplated operations are even more limited than the state giving it being,[79] it has been held that within the sphere of its action a bank can legally act in any place.[80]

b. Authority Outside State — (i) In General. Although the general franchise conferred by a bank charter can be exercised only within the dominion of the grantor,[81] the business of a bank cannot be wholly limited to state lines, and by state comity many outside transactions are permitted; but so far as its action is prescribed by the laws of its own state or of states outside it must act in conformity thereto when doing business within them.[82] A foreign non-banking corporation cannot transact business of a banking nature that is denied to a home bank,[83] but a foreign bank can sue on a transaction not of a banking nature.[84]

(ii) When Is Action Foreign. If a bank makes a loan[85] or purchases a note[86] in another state without any intention of doing business there it is not a violation of its laws pertaining to foreign banking corporations; but the establishing of a bank agency in another state is a clear violation of the law forbidding foreign banks from doing business there.[87]

Branch banks.—Whether a bank chartered to do business in a specified place can establish a branch without express authority can be determined in an action to vacate its charter, but cannot be questioned in an action on the bond given by the cashier of the branch. Morehead Banking Co. v. Tate, 122 N. C. 313, 30 S. E. 341.

Contract of absent officer.— Although a cashier does not represent his bank when acting away from its domicile, an act undertaken when absent and continued without objection by the board on his return becomes the bank's act. Valdetero v. Citizens' Bank, 51 La. Ann. 1651, 26 So. 425.

Dealings in exchange.— If a bank is restricted to a place of business, but not in dealing in bills of exchange, it may purchase them in one place and remit them to another, receiving the proceeds at its own office (Columbus City Bank v. Beach, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 425, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,736); but if a bank is authorized to do business only in one county it cannot buy and sell exchange through an agent in another county (People v. Oakland County Bank, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 282).

Discounting notes.—Although the business of receiving money and discounting notes is restricted to a village, yet the discounting of a note in the city of New York and the canceling there of a debt due to the bank is not a violation of its charter. Potter v. Ithaca Bank, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 530.

81. Lane v. West Tennessee Bank, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 419 (holding that, although the assets of a bank may be forced out of the state of its creation by a superior power, its franchise remains and cannot be expelled); Augusta Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 10 L. ed. 274.

82. Metropolitan Bank v. Godfrey, 23 Ill. 579; Silver Lake Bank v. North, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 370 (holding that it was not a violation of the New York statute of 1818 for a foreign bank to lend money and take a mortgage therefor); Lane v. West Tennessee Bank, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 419. But a foreign bank cannot discount notes in Virginia. Marietta Bank v. Pindall, 2 Rand. (Va.) 465.

To whom statute applies.—A statute prohibiting every individual or concern except an expressly authorized bank from receiving deposits and making loans applies to foreign corporations. Taylor v. Bruen, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 301.

Consequence of violating statute.— If a foreign bank violates a statute, for example, makes an unlawful loan, it cannot recover thereon. Pennington v. Townsend, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 276; Taylor v. Bruen, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 301.

A note and mortgage were given in Wisconsin to secure an obligation to a bank in New York. This was not an infraction of the Wisconsin law forbidding foreign banking corporations from doing business within the state. Kennedy v. Knight, 21 Wis. 340, 94 Am. Dec. 543.

87. Newberry Bank v. Stegall, 41 Miss. 142; Taylor v. Bruen, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 301; Bowman v. Cecil Bank, 3 Grant (Pa.) 33.

State cannot charter foreign bank.—A state has no right to charter a bank with power to establish banking companies in another state, and a company thus acting in another state is there held to be unchartered. Atterberry v. Knox, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 90. So, where a bank organized by a state in a disputed territory, which was finally held to belong to another state, continued to discount notes there, it could not collect them in the state where it actually existed. Myers v. Manhattan Bank, 20 Ohio 283.

4. Borrowing Money. A bank, unless restricted by statute[88] or its charter, may borrow money. Authority to receive deposits is by necessary implication authority to receive money as a loan and to assign or mortgage negotiable instruments.[89]

5. Buying and Selling Property — a. In General — (i) Real Estate. A bank has no authority to buy land to sell again,[90] but it may purchase and hold enough for a banking-house,[91] and to this end may buy more land and erect thereon fire-proof buildings and sell them for the better protection of its banking-house.[92] It can also mortgage its real estate,[93] and in conveying any real estate may enter into the common covenants of warranty, or make an assignment of any conveyance it may have acquired of property that has come into its possession.[94]

(ii) Personal Property — (a) Notes. A bank which has a right to discount a note has not always the right to buy one. In the case of a note discounted the compensation to be paid for the service is fixed by law; in the case of purchasing a note a bank can pay what it pleases. Hence the power in some cases has been denied,[95] in others it has been declared to exist.[96]

88. In Massachusetts, although a bank under Mass. Gen. Stat. c. 57, § 63, is not prohibited from borrowing of another bank money payable on demand with interest, it is prohibited from making such a loan payable on a fixed day. Com. v. Mutual Redemption Bank, 4 Allen (Mass.) 1.

(B) Stocks — (1) OUTSIDE STOCKS. Banks in many cases have been denied the right to buy the shares of other corporations,[97] except for a past debt[98] or by special enactment;[99] but if a bank becomes a stock-holder in another it assumes the same liability as other stock-holders.[1]

(2) OWN STOCK. Some state banks are forbidden to purchase the stock of their own bank[2] while others can do this,[3] but even where the inhibition exists a bank can take its stock for a past debt.[4] A purchasing bank can resell and a stock-holder or director can become the purchaser;[5] and it may sell on credit and take the purchaser's note with the stock as collateral security.[6]

b. To Prevent Loss[7] on Loans. Banks possess large power to take and utilize property taken for a past debt in order to save themselves from loss.[8] The most general principle is that a bank may do whatever is necessary to render productive property it has taken for a debt.[9]

6. Union Nat. Bank v. Hunt, 7 Mo. App. 42.

7. Authority to take property when closing.— Large authority is given a bank when closing its business to take other property in payment for its banking home and other real estate it may possess. Harwood v. Ramsey, 15 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 31, holding that although banks were prohibited by statute from trading in bonds or judgments and purchasing preëxisting debts, this did not prevent a bank when closing its business from taking an assignment of a judgment in part payment of its banking home.

Protective action allowed.—A bank can purchase a judgment on land whereon it holds a mortgage in order to clear the title and render its own interest more valuable (Brown v. Hogg, 14 Ill. 219); can take merchandise and sell the same (Sackets' Harbor Bank v. Lewis County Bank, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 213); can take an assignment of an account due a debtor (Bank of North America v. Tamblyn, 7 Mo. App. 570); can make a valid transfer of a security held to secure a debt that it owes (Gillett v. Campbell, 1 Den.

6. Collections — a. Right to Collect. The right to collect checks and other commercial paper is an incident of banking,[10] but when a bank is insolvent it has no such authority, and commits a fraud in undertaking the business.[11] The contract begins from the acceptance of the paper by the bank.[12]

b. Agency of Collecting Bank and Ownership of Paper — (i) In General — (a) Rule Stated. Generally the depositor is the owner[13] of the checks and other paper deposited by him for collection, and the bank performs the service of collecting as his agent.[14] While this relationship in many cases is created by

indorsement and deposit of the paper without other action, in others it is created by special agreement and indorsement of the paper.[15] In making collections for non-depositors a bank acts as an agent until the completion of the collection and return of the proceeds to the employer.[16]

(B) Effect of Indorsement — (1) GENERALLY — (a) IN BLANK. The depositor may part title with his paper at the time of depositing it by special agreement or by indorsing it in blank. Two different legal effects are given to this indorsement. By the federal and most state courts the first bank and any others through which it may pass, indorsing in the same manner, acquire a legal title which will justify any one of them in collecting the check and applying the proceeds on any indebtedness due from the indorser or receiver.[17] In some states, however, the first bank and any others through which the paper may pass and be indorsed in the same manner are justified in collecting it and applying the proceeds to reimburse themselves for present advances made thereon, but cannot apply them to extinguish past indebtedness due from an indorser.[18]

(b) In Blank Followed by Restrictive Indorsement — aa. Generally. Where paper is indorsed by the depositor generally, but by the first bank restrictively, it has been held that both paper and proceeds belong to it and that it cannot be divested thereof without its action and consent.[19] According to some tribunals the restrictive indorsement is a notice to subsequent indorsers or holders that the depositor is still the owner of the paper, and that they can acquire no rights in derogation of his own;[20] but according to others it does not operate retroactively, and nothing is thereby conserved to the first indorser or depositor.[21]

bb. By Intermediate Holder. Although an intermediate holder of paper specially indorsed to himself cannot enlarge the authority of a subsequent holder by a general indorsement, he can retain his dominion over paper generally indorsed to him by specially indorsing it to another.[22]

(c) Restrictive Indorsement — aa. Generally. When the depositor has indorsed his paper restrictively, thereby showing his intention to retain his ownership, the first bank is an agent to collect, possesses no title thereto, and is incapable of transferring a title by any kind of indorsement or agreement to any other; and every successive bank to which the paper may be sent is in like manner an agent to collect and remit the proceeds to the first.[23]

bb. Interpretation of Special Indorsements. Nearly all restrictive collection indorsements can be classified under two heads: Those "for collection," "for collection and remittance," and "for deposit," "for deposit to the credit of," or "to the account of" the depositor, which generally, although not always,[24] preserve the depositor's right to the paper and its proceeds, which cannot be impaired by any subsequent indorsements inconsistent with his own. Of course the ordinary construction given to these indorsements may be affected or changed by usage or agreement.[25] Indorsements "for collection and credit of" the indorser, and "for collection on account of" the indorser are interpreted in two ways, being sometimes construed like the others mentioned; the words "for collection" controlling the subsequent ones which by themselves seem to contradict the former;[26] and again stress is given to the crediting words and in these cases the indorser is a principal and his ownership continues until the paper is collected, when he becomes a creditor like an ordinary depositor.[27]

cc. Evidence to Explain Special Indorsements. The ordinary interpretation given to special indorsements does not always harmonize with the actual agreements and undertakings of the parties, and in such cases evidence may be given to show what the parties intended and the real contract when clearly understood will be enforced.[28]

dd. Effect of Advancing. If, notwithstanding such restrictive indorsements, advances are actually made to the depositor, the title passes, and in these cases the title can be passed on; in other words, a second bank can hold the proceeds of such paper for advances made to the first when it has advanced in like manner to the depositor. (2) When Bank Is Insolvent. If the bank is insolvent at the time of depositing the paper, it is a fraud to receive it,[33] and whatever be the kind of indorsement thereon no title is acquired by the bank.[34]

(c) Effect of Retransfer. With few exceptions, all checks which are credited to depositors are entered with the express or implied right to charge them back if they are not paid.[35] One view of this right to retransfer is that it is inconsistent with the bank's ownership of title, even though advances be made on them. If, however, a bank divests itself of its qualified title by charging them back, it still preserves its lien for any advances actually made on them.[36] The other view is that the right to retransfer does not affect the bank's title to the paper, every indorsee having recourse to his indorser in the event of not receiving payment from the primary party.[37]

(d) Effect of Special Instructions. In collecting paper with special instructions the bank usually acts as agent; and these instructions bind all other agents undertaking the service and having a knowledge of them. This relationship may be disproved as in other cases by showing that, notwithstanding the instructions, advances were made and other courses pursued inconsistent with the continuance of the agency relation.[38] As between the immediate parties therefore the true contract may be proved;[39] and an indorsement, although in form general, may be shown to have given the indorsee only a title and authority for making a collection.[40]

(E) Attachment of Paper Deposited For Collection. In some jurisdictions where paper has been deposited with a restrictive or regular indorsement and no advances have been made thereon, it can be garnished as the depositor's property, although not as the property of the drawer or of the bank,[41] but if advances have been made, then the lien is prior and superior to that of an attaching creditor.[42] In other states such paper cannot be garnished in favor of any one for the reason that it may never be collected;[43] but if a check thus received is drawn on the collecting bank, so as to create an absolute debt therefrom, it may be garnished.[44]

(II) Notes. The collecting bank is the agent of the owner or sender of paper.[45] It does not, however, become an agent by making paper payable there, but must become the possessor to establish the agency.[46] If the debtor or payor leaves money in the bank to pay his obligation,[47] or is a depositor and specially directs the bank to pay it, the bank also becomes his agent and is responsible to him for its safe-keeping and proper application.[48] It may too apply the depositor's funds on his notes made payable there without special direction.[49]

(III) Special Paper — (A) In General. In collecting mortgages, certificates of deposit, and other paper not usually given to banks to collect, banks serve as agents until the collection is fully completed, even though money is advanced on them or the amount is credited to the owner.[50]

(B) Effect of Special Instructions. In collecting drafts and other instruments deposited with specific instructions to collect and remit the proceeds to the depositor, the bank acts as agent throughout the undertaking.[51] This relation, however, may be disproved by showing that, notwithstanding such instructions, the well-understood usage prevailed of collecting the proceeds and giv-

Effect of receipt of funds and paper before maturity.— If the money is received, and also the paper to which it is to be applied, before its maturity, there is a conflict of opinion whether the bank should make the application as soon as both are in its possession. Perhaps the better opinion is that this cannot be done until the maturity of the paper, and, consequently, until then the debtor's liability continues. Among the most general forms of instruction are those to "collect and remit" and to "collect and credit." (IV) Where Subagents Are Employed — (A) In General — (1) Rule Stated. In some states the agent is responsible for the conduct of every subagent assisting in a collection as fully as though it had performed the entire service itself. By this rule the depositor has no concern with any subagent so long as the agent performs its duty, or is solvent and responsible;[54] and the agent is not thereby divested of its title.[55] In many states, however, an agent in employing a subagent must select one who is competent and worthy of trust and transmit the paper to him, and having done this its duty is done and the depositor must look to the subagent for any default of which he is guilty;[56] but

(2) Effect of Instructions From Agent to Subagent. The agent should convey proper instructions to the subagent to enable it to act in an intelligent manner in making the collection.[58] Having done so the subagent must follow them and is liable for neglect in executing them.[59]

(3) Effect of Payment to Subagent. Payment to a subagent is payment to the agent itself, and it at once becomes a debtor to the depositor,[60] provided the agent had authority to employ a subagent.[61]

(B) Where Subagent Is Also Drawee. When a check is remitted to the drawee for collection, this is not a payment of the debt, but the drawee is thereby made a collecting agent for the owner of the paper in addition to his duty to the payor-debtor to pay the same if his deposit is sufficient.[62] When the check sent for collection is charged to the drawer-debtor's account, his debt is discharged, and the subagent is responsible therefor,[63] notwithstanding the debtor has overdrawn,[64]

or the subsequent failure of the subagent;[65] but if, when the check was thus charged to the debtor both he and the subagent were insolvent, the check is not paid and the creditor can pursue the drawer.[66]

c. Effect of Usage. A depositor in selecting a bank as his collecting agent, thus availing himself of its facilities for doing the desired service, is bound by any reasonable usage, whether he knew of it or not, prevailing among the banks where the collection is made;[67] and if there is only one bank in a place its usages are as binding as those of several banks which are doing business in another locality.[68]

May receive its own paper.—A check drawn on itself based on a sufficient deposit, or its own certificate of deposit, if the bank is solvent, is equivalent to money, and may be taken in payment (British, etc., Mortg. Effect of remitting amount.— If the collector remits the amount as though he had collected the obligation, this operates as a payment and extinguishment of it. If the payment is made with the maker's assent he is liable therefor, or on the note as a reissued obligation; otherwise he does not become liable in any manner. Peoples, etc., Bank v.

In some states the latter rule is imperative,[75] while in others a collecting bank is justified by usage or custom in receiving as payment the check or draft of the debtor drawn on another bank,[76] or, if the paper has been sent by the receiving bank to another, the latter may be justified in taking either money or a check drawn on itself, or a check or draft drawn on another bank, and of sending its own draft drawn on a reputable bank to the first or receiving bank in payment.[77] So too under unusual circumstances, especially when the debtor is failing, a bank may be justified in taking any security it can get for the debt.[78]

(2) Remitting Proceeds. When paper is indorsed restrictively, this is a notice to the collecting agent or any agent of its ownership, and the proceeds must be sent to the owner, either directly, or through the agent or agents whence the paper came;[79] but they cannot be sent by the collecting bank in obedience to the directions of any prior bank to another bank outside the line.[80]

(D) Sending Paper to Drawee For Payment. The old rule that paper may be sent to the drawee for payment[81] no longer prevails in many states, notwith-

Taking paper of other banks is conditional payment only.—If a check drawn on another bank or any kind of paper is taken, payable outside its own bank, such paper is only a conditional payment, like the ordinary receipt of a check for a debt, and the collecting bank is responsible until the money thereon is collected.

standing the custom of thus sending it;[82] but some states which deny the legality of the rule permit the paper to be sent to the drawee when there is no other bank in the place known by the owner and collection by a different method would be costly and inconvenient.[83] These rules may be modified of course by instructions or agreement.[84]

(E) Suing on Paper. In most states, the collecting bank can sue in its own name on paper which has been indorsed to it for collection, the right of action being solely in such bank, unless the indorser can prove a retransfer or that the indorsee has no interest beyond a mere agency;[85] but in some states, however, decline the trust; or, if undertaking it, to give the preference to the principal. To act otherwise is deemed a fraud.[90]

e. Liabilities of Collecting Bank — (I) In General — (A) Rule Stated. A collecting bank is liable for failure to use diligence in presenting paper for acceptance[91] or payment,[92] for taking an irregular acceptance,[93] for not giving notice[94] or making protest[95] when this should have been done, and for not heeding instructions[96] and customs.[97] Although a bank cannot relieve itself by contract from the consequences of its own negligence, it may thus relieve itself from the consequences of others employed by it in making collections,[98] but if they were unfit for the service, the collecting bank may be held as neglectful in employing them.[99]

(B) Action — (1) Nature of. The cause of action is the bank's negligence, founded either on express or implied contract.[1] The cause of action, when it is regarded as founded purely on negligence, is one which is not capable of assignment.[2]

(2) Condition Precedent. A tender of the paper to the neglectful bank is not a condition precedent to a recovery against the institution.[3]

(3) Defenses — (a) In General. A bank cannot be charged with negligence if the depositor fails to give it the information needful to make a proper presentation of the paper and notification of all the parties liable thereon;[4] but in an action for failing to present a draft for collection and to notify the sender of its acceptance or non-acceptance, a custom between plaintiff and defendant to hold all paper against the drawee without notice of non-acceptance is no defense.[5]

(b) Limitations. The statute of limitations begins to run against the negligent bank from the time of its failure to act,[6] the gist of the action being negligence or breach of duty, and not the consequent injury.[7]

(4) Pleading — (a) Complaint, Declaration, or Petition. An averment that plaintiff had employed the defendant to collect an instrument, describing the same, for a commission or compensation,[8] followed by an averment of the bank's acceptance[9] of it for the purpose of collection in pursuance of such employment and neglect and failure to execute the undertaking,[10] is a sufficient statement of the cause of action.[11]

(b) Answer or Plea. An agreement to dispense with the custom of banks to present a draft received for collection for acceptance and notice of its non-

Negativing plaintiff's knowledge of drawee's condition.— In an action for failing to collect before the drawee became insolvent, plaintiff acceptance may be proved under the general denial;[12] but an answer alleging that the bank followed a custom established between the parties to the action with respect to presentation is insufficient when there is no averment that plaintiff constituted defendant its continuing agent.[13]

(5) Burden of Proof and Presumptions. The burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that the paper was collectable, that the bank was negligent in not collecting, and that an actual loss has followed;[14] but if a collecting bank loses paper it is presumed to be negligent.[15] This presumption, however, may be rebutted by showing that due care was used.[16]

(6) Damages. The measure of damage is the actual loss resulting from the collector's omission of duty.[17]

In the case of a sight draft the measure of damages is prima facie the amount of the bill, but evidence may be introduced to reduce the recovery to a nominal amount. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Greensburg Third Nat. Bank, 19 Ind. App. 69, 49 N. E. 171.

Loss of debt.— If there is a reasonable probability that the entire debt would have been collected had the agent not been negligent the amount is the measure of recovery. Omaha Nat. No injury no recovery.— If the depositor is not injured through the acceptance by the collecting bank of a check or draft instead of the negligence of any subagent in not properly performing the service intrusted to it,[18] the negligent subagent must in like manner answer to the agent;[19] but where the agent only selects a subagent and transmits the paper to him,[20] it cannot sue him for a neglect of duty even after voluntarily discharging the owner's claim.[21]

f. Termination of Authority — (I) In General. Ordinarily the authority to collect continues until the collection is completed and the proceeds are credited and remitted,[22] and as long as the bank retains possession the debtor may safely pay it;[23] but the owner may revoke the bank's authority unless it has a lien thereon for present or past advances.[24] The collection can also be judicially revoked,[25] or the bank may renounce its agency and return the paper.[26]

(II) Insolvency. The insolvency of a bank at once terminates its authority to proceed further,[27] and if collections are afterward made, or those previously undertaken are completed, the proceeds are held in trust for the owners.[28] If money nothing can be recovered. Kershaw v. Ladd, 34 Oreg. 375, 56 Pac. 402, 44 L. R. A. 236.

the bank at the end of the series has collected the proceeds of paper, but before sending or remitting the first bank has failed, the depositor or principal can collect the proceeds from the receiver, if these have come into his possession.[29]

7. DEPOSITS — a. In General — (I) RIGHT TO RECEIVE OR DECLINE. The chief business of a bank is to receive and lend money.[30] The money received is termed a deposit, although it is not strictly so, as the depositor does not expect to receive the identical thing in return, but another thing of the same kind and of equal value.[31] A bank is not, however, required to keep the deposits of every person who offers money for this purpose, but may decline to do business with those who, for any reason, it does not wish to serve,[32] and may close an account at any time by tendering to the depositor the amount due and declining to receive more.[33]

(II) KINDS OF DEPOSITS — (A) General and Special Deposits. The most primary division of deposits is into general and special deposits.[34] The former always consists of money which is mingled with other money, the entire amount forming a single fund from which depositors are paid.[35] A deposit is not special unless made so by the depositor, or unless made in a particular capacity.[36]

(B) Trust Deposits — (1) WHAT ARE — (a) CERTIFIED CHECKS. The certifying of a check is in effect merely an acceptance and creates no trust in favor of the holder and no lien on any particular assets of the certifying bank.[37]

(b) DELIVERED CHECKS. The drawing of a check on a bank does not bind the fund against which it is drawn until the bank has notice,[38] and even then it does not in all the states.[39]

(c) DEPOSITS BY TRUSTEES, PUBLIC OFFICERS, ETC. The deposits made by trustees, executors, administrators, assignees, agents, public officers, and other persons who are serving as fiduciaries, are simply general deposits, and if the bank fails to pay them, the beneficiaries have no peculiar claims or rights over other creditors. They must share like other general depositors.[40]

(d) DEPOSITS FOR COLLECTION. The deposit of mortgages and other special instruments for collection or the drawing of a draft on a debtor and giving it with specific instructions to collect and remit is a trust transaction, and the money, if collected, is of that character.[41]

in the name of an agent or other person it is not thereby impressed with a trust either by law or agreement with the bank, and is entitled to no higher consideration than any other general deposit.[42]

(f) Deposits to Be Specially Applied. In using deposits made for the purpose of having them applied to a particular purpose the bank acts as the agent of the depositor, and if it fail to apply it at all, or misapply it, it can be recovered as a trust deposit.[43]

(g) General Deposits. General deposits possess no trust quality, and on the debtor's failure the depositor shares with the general creditors;[44] and in like manner the holder of a certificate of deposit.[45]

(h) Savings-Bank Deposits. In some states savings bank deposits kept with other banks are stamped with a trust relation. By the proper construction of these laws they apply to deposits kept by savings institutions with the bank, and not to loans either on time or call they may make with them.[46]

(i) Special Deposits Expressly Marked. Special deposits of money which are marked in some unusual manner and can be readily identified are not general deposits, and are held by the bank as a trust for the depositor.[47]

(2) Changing From Trust to Debtor Relation. When paper is received for collection a trust relation often exists in the beginning which is changed by agreement or custom into that of debtor and creditor after the collection of the proceeds, but a bank cannot divest itself of the trust relation and assume the other at its own convenience. The transformation does not affect the depositor unless it is known by him either by agreement or usage.[48]

(3) Mingled Trust and Individual Deposits. Not infrequently trustees mingle a trust fund or several trust funds with their own deposit in an individual account. Such conduct, although approved in but one case,[49] is not per se wrongful,[50] and a bank, although knowing that this is done, is not at fault. The circumstance, however, is suspicious and should lead the institution to exercise caution in responding to their checks, but how far it should go in making inquiry or supervising their conduct has not been determined.[51]

(iii) Mode of Depositing — (a) With Whom. The payment of a deposit to any one serving behind the counter of a bank is valid; and if he retains the money for his own use his bank is liable.[52] The same principle applies to a bank whose officers receive special deposits of bonds and other securities.[53]

(b) Time of Depositing. When a deposit is received after banking hours and it is entered like other deposits the debtor and creditor relation is created as in other cases. But a different relation may be created by treating the deposit in a different manner, as by putting it into a separate place of deposit and entering it in a different book.[54]

(c) Entry in Pass-Book. Formerly if a bank officer entered a deposit on the pass-book at the time it was made the entry was original and binding on the bank; but if the entry was by copying from the ledger or from other bank-books, it could be questioned.[55] The entry, however, was not binding on the depositor because the bank clerk was not his agent.[56] The rule now is that the rights of neither party are changed by settling a pass-book. In all cases the account is open to examination and correction.[57] A pass-book is, however, prima facie evidence of the matters therein, but not conclusive.[58] It is not negotiable.[59]

(iv) Ownership of Deposit[60] — (a) In General. The law presumes that a deposit belongs to the person in whose name it is entered,[61] and the bank cannot question his right thereto.[62]

(b) Dual Relationship Between Bank and Depositor. A bank may maintain two relations with a depositor, his debtor with respect to one thing and his agent with respect to another. Again, it may be his agent at one time and his debtor at another. When money is deposited in a bank it is said to be the debtor and the depositor the creditor. Yet in another sense the depositor is the owner and can at any time demand repayment.[63] When the depositor's account is overdrawn any subsequent deposit needed to repay the bank belongs absolutely to it.[64] When a deposit is put in a bank for a special purpose, or a check is deposited for collection, the bank serves as an agent in keeping the money or the check, and also in paying the note and collecting the check.[65]

(v) Transfer of Deposits. A deposit should not be transferred from one account to another without ample authority.[66] What is sufficient authority is a question of fact to be answered whenever it arises.[67]

(vi) Liabilities of Bank — (a) For Loss of Deposits — (1) General Deposits. A bank, being in law a debtor,[68] is absolutely liable for the loss of a general deposit, although such loss occur by events wholly beyond its control;[69] but if the bank fail a general depositor, at common law, is not a preferred creditor.[70]

(2) Special Deposits — (a) In General. If special deposits of bonds, stocks, or other property which is to be kept in specie are kept by a bank without compensation,[71] to accommodate its customers, it must exercise the same care as in keeping its own property of similar character; and is therefore not liable, unless it has taken less care than of its own. (c) Paper For Collection. As a bank, either directly or indirectly, receives compensation for collecting paper left by depositors for collection, who still retain their ownership of it, a stricter rule of duty applies to a bank in keeping it than in keeping bonds and the like for accommodation. If it is lost the bank is prima facie presumed to have been negligent.[76] containing proper words to express that intention, is negotiable[80] in the usual manner by indorsement,[81] and although not negotiable in fact, if negotiable in form, it may be assigned.[82] Moreover, where they are negotiable their transfer is governed by the rules that apply to promissory notes, as is also the liability of the parties thereon.[83]

(III) How Affected by Statute of Limitations. In many states a certificate is a continuing security, and no action can be maintained thereon, or the statute of limitations be put into operation against it, until after making a demand for payment.[84] In others the certificate is due immediately and the statute begins to run at once without demanding the money. Where this view prevails bona fide holders are affected with the equities existing between persons having it prior to themselves.[85]

(IV) Surrender on Payment. When the owner of a certificate of deposit demands payment the issuer may insist on its delivery as a security against a future claim.[86] If it is in the possession of a third party, so that the owner cannot present it for payment, he cannot recover thereon. The risk of a demand by another and an action to determine its title cannot thus be thrown on the bank.[87]

353; Patterson v. Poindexter, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 227, 40 Am. Dec. 554.

Evidence to explain.— The certificate is a contract and no parol evidence of a previous or concurrent agreement is admissible to contradict or vary its legal effect (Long v. Straus, 107 Ind. 94, 6 N. E. 123, 7 N. E. 763, 57 Am. Rep. 87), but such evidence may be introduced to establish a subsequent arrangement between the parties (Woods v. Russell, (Pa.) 2 East Rep. 638).

8. LETTERS OF CREDIT. A letter of credit is a guaranty, and a bank can ordinarily recover for all advances made thereon in good faith within its terms.[88] If there is no limit in time the advancing bank is protected until receiving adequate notice to the contrary.[89]

9. LOANS AND DISCOUNTS — a. What Is a Loan or Discount. The purchase of a promissory note for a sum less than its face is a discount,[90] but one taken in payment of a preëxisting debt is not.[91] When a note is purchased or discounted the bank does not become the owner until it has paid therefor. Until then its possession is a bailment and it cannot apply the proceeds to extinguish other indebtedness of the borrower without his consent.[92] If, however, the borrower fails before drawing his money the note can be tendered back and the money retained, and the bank will not be liable to the holder of a check representing the amount, which was not presented before the holder's failure.[93]

b. Authority to Loan or Discount — (I) IN GENERAL — (A) Rule Stated. Authority to lend is defined by positive law, and most of the questions of this character are interpretations of charters or statutes.[94] When no prohibitory stat-necessary before recovery. Hunt v. Divine, 37 Ill. 137; Cate v. Patterson, 25 Mich. 191.

Retaining security.— When a bank has issued a letter to another bank announcing a credit for a stated sum for the use of the holder of the letter it cannot, after learning of the insolvency of the bank to which the letter is directed, retain the funds for a debt due therefrom. There was not a discount where a bank purchased bonds from a state giving its certificates of deposit therefor and other bonds were taken and certificates were given and left with the state's agent to sell, who was to use the proceeds to pay the old certificates (Mitchell v. Cook, 7 N. Y. 538, Seld. Notes (N. Y.) 16); or when the selling bank took a time draft in payment made by the purchasing bank (Buffalo City Bank v. Codd, 25 N. Y. 163).

Excessive loans.— On various occasions limitations have been imposed on the amount that might be loaned, and directors either have violated, or have been charged with violating them (Richmond Bank v. Robinson, 42 Me. 589; Albert v. Baltimore, 2 Md. 159; Pemigewassett Bank v. Rogers, 18 N. H. 255; Fisher v. Murdock, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 485; Arnold v. Reid, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 347, 7 West. L. J. 410); but a prohibition by a general statute does not affect a special charter (In re Iron, etc., Dollar Sav. Bank, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 42; In re McKinley-Lanning L. & T. Co., 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 40). A loan made by a cashier for the purpose of reducing to an equal amount loans of the directors which have exceeded the legal limit is not illegal, and the parties to the substituted paper are liable. Seneca County Bank v. Neass, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 329.

Loans to bank officers.—When a bank is prohibited from lending to its officers, a loan to a firm, a member of which is a director of the bank, is not a violation of the law. Richmond Bank v. Robinson, 42 Me. 589; Fisher v. Murdoch, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 485. But if a charter prescribe that only such loans can be made to directors as the by-laws shall authorize, and a loan is made to a director without any by-law regulating the conditions, the loan is void and the money cannot be recovered. Arnold v. Reid, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 347, 7 West. L. J. 410.

Care in lending.— In discounting a negotiable note a bank is not required to exercise care to learn, beyond the paper itself, whether there are equities or defenses. Warren Deposit Bank v. Younglove, (Ky. 1902) 66 S. W. 749.

ute exists a commercial bank can lend money on real estate security;[95] and a bank having authority to lend on public stocks, on bond and mortgage, or on any other securities deemed ample by the board of directors can also discount on commercial paper.[96] When discounting privileges have been granted to a bank it will be presumed that it has complied with the conditional requirements.[97]

(B) Accommodation Indorsements and Guaranties. A bank cannot make an accommodation indorsement,[98] but it may guarantee the payment of a bond and mortgage to a party who has advanced money thereon for the benefit of the bank,[99] and if a state lends money to a bank on bonds it has power to guarantee them.[1]

(C) Consequences of Unauthorized Loans. When banks have made unauthorized loans the doctrine is rapidly growing that the courts will nevertheless compel unwilling debtors to pay,[2] and punish the offending lenders in some other manner than by withdrawing its aid to them to enforce payment.[3] These violations have consisted in lending to a customer in excess of the legal amount,[4] on improper securities,[5] or to improper indorsers.[6]

(II) For Another. If money is left with a bank to be loaned it is an agent and not a debtor; and if it lends the money in good faith and exercises due care it is not liable to the borrower should there be any loss.[7]

c. Security For — (I) In General. It is a power incidental to that of discounting to secure loans[8] in any manner not prohibited by positive law.[9] A wide latitude exists in taking personal property for this purpose;[10] but banks have often been forbidden from lending on the security of their own stocks.[11]

A banker who promises to exercise "careful attention" in conducting the business of his customers is bound to exercise the skill usually shown by a banker in loaning money for a customer even though the service be rendered gratuitously; but a failure to inquire carefully into the condition of a borrower would not be negligence if he was generally believed to be solvent and an inquiry would have yielded no more information. Only prohibits loan directly to owner.— If a statute declares that a bank shall not

(II) Real Estate. A bank is permitted to take a mortgage to secure a debt[12] made either at the time[13] or afterward;[14] and it can afterward take such property to secure its debt either by foreclosure, by sale on execution, or by other process[15] for the purpose of selling it at better advantage.

(III) Stock Mortgages. In some states banks have authority to take a mortgage on land to secure the payment of their stock. Such mortgages are regarded as prior and superior to mortgages for loans, although both are made in the same instrument.[16] And the transfer of bank-stock subsequently to the transfer of real estate subject to a mortgage of this character does not affect the mortgage rights of the bank.[17]

d. Interest or Rate of Discount — (I) In General. With respect to the interest or rate of discount which may be charged[18] a bank, unless its charter prescribes differently, is governed by the same law as individuals,[19] and a note made in one state and discounted in another is governed by the law of the latter state.[20] If a charter prescribes a different rate from the general law the chartered rate prevails.[21]

do the usury laws apply to the purchase and sale by a bank of promissory notes and other instruments.[28]

(B) Effect of. There has been a steady trend toward the repeal of usury laws and the lessening of the penalties in those states in which the laws have been retained.[29] In general the penalties fall under a threefold classification. The voidance of the debt;[30] of the interest only;[31] of the excess above the legal rate only.[32] A new note or bill given in renewal of an old note or balance tainted with usury is usurious.[33]

(II) Nature and Effect of Check—(A) In General. Before delivery a check is without vitality.[35] After delivery it is regarded in some jurisdictions as an assignment of the deposit pro tanto, but generally it does not have this effect until it has been accepted by the drawee.[36] As a check is a written contract oral declarations cannot be admitted to contradict or vary it, yet as between the original parties such evidence may be introduced to solve ambiguities, for example, to show what bank or person was intended,[37] or to show in what capacity the drawer signed.[38] If the written sum in the body of a check does not correspond with the marginal figures the former will be regarded as correct.[39]

(B) As Payment. A check given in the ordinary course of business for a debt is not payment until it is paid;[40] and if payment be refused without the holder's fault or negligence he may resort to the original indebtedness.[41] The holder therefore is merely the agent of the drawer in getting the money to pay his debt.[42] The acceptance of the check of a third party is regarded in the same manner.[43] In both cases, however, this presumption will yield to proof of the intention of the parties. Of course a check may be taken as payment by agreement,[44] and if it was the intention of the parties to give and receive a check as payment the law will have due regard to its execution.[45]

(C) Post-Dated Check. A post-dated check is one containing a later date than that of delivery. The presumption is that the maker has an inadequate fund in the bank at the time of giving it, but will have enough at the date of presentation.[46] It is valid, but a bank ought not to pay it, if presented earlier, until the date mentioned; and if it does the depositor can recover his money.[47] If transferred by the holder to another for a good consideration before the date for demanding payment, he may recover of the maker, although there was no consideration for the check in the beginning.[48]

(D) Memorandum Check. The effect of a memorandum check is disputed. By one view it is a contract whereby the maker engages to pay the bona fide holder absolutely, without any condition concerning the presentment.[49] By the other view the marking of a check in this manner is for the purpose of indicating that it is not to be presented immediately for payment.[50]

(III) Manner of Signing — Descriptive Words. A check signed by an individual, with the word "Agent," "Treas.," or other descriptive term has sometimes been regarded as his individual check, and he alone was held to be bound.[51] By the modern doctrine the courts look at the intent of the signer, and if he is in fact an agent, trustee, or officer of some principal, and is in the habit of signing checks in that way when seeking to bind his principal, the court will give that effect to them.[52] When the mode of signing is ambiguous parol evidence may be introduced to show whether the signer intended to bind himself or his principal or company.[53]

(IV) In What Payable. A check in the ordinary form, calling for a certain number of dollars, is payable in coin or in current money to the amount of its face,[54] and the holder is not bound to take depreciated bank-notes in payment.[55]

(v) To Whom Payable. Of course a bank must not mistake the person of the holder; the direction of the maker or subsequent indorsers must be followed at the bank's peril.[56]

(vi) On Whose Order Payable—(a) In General. A bank is protected in paying out a deposit only where it has an order from the depositor himself or one authorized to act for him.[57]

(b) Corporation. The president is not authorized by virtue of his office to draw corporation checks. This authority, however, may be granted by charter, by statute, or by the usage of the place where the corporation transacts business.[58]

(c) Partnership. A partnership deposit cannot be drawn on the check of an individual partner. A bank could justify itself in paying such a check only by showing that the money had been applied to the partnership purpose.[59]

(d) Executors and Administrators. Although two or more executors be serving jointly, nevertheless either of them can sign a check without the signature of his co-executor.[60] The same rule applies to administrators.[61]

that the bank may, if it wishes, credit the amount of such deposit on the check.[85] If the bank pays a check to a holder who has committed no fraud it cannot recover of the holder if in fact there was not a sufficient deposit, but must look to the drawer.[86]

(c) Effect of Refusal to Pay — (1) Liability of Bank to Drawer — (a) In General. If the bank neglect or refuse to pay on the order of a depositor, where the latter has sufficient funds on deposit and no other good excuse exists, the depositor can maintain an action against the bank for the money,[87] and is entitled to recover substantial damages for such refusal.[88]

(c) Where Check For Entire Deposit. If a check is given for the maker's entire deposit this works an immediate transfer of it and the holder can sue the drawee therefor.[97] This rule, however, is not recognized everywhere,[98] except in cases where the check is drawn on a specific fund.[99] To have this effect the bank must be notified that such a check has been given; until then it remains as ineffectual as in the case of an ordinary check.[1]

(3) Liability of Drawer to Holder. Of course the drawer ordinarily is liable, but, in order to maintain an action against him on the check, the holder must show a demand of payment on the drawee and a refusal thereof,[2] and notice of such non-payment to the drawer,[3] or a legal excuse for not taking such steps.[4] But a creditor can return a check received from his debtor and sue on the original cause of action without first demanding payment;[5] and if the holder return it immediately after the drawee's refusal to certify it this is a notice to the drawer that the holder has declined to receive it for his debt.[6]

(IX) REVOCATION OF ORDER — (A) Uncertified Check — (1) BY ORDER OF DRAWER. As a general rule the drawer of an uncertified check can revoke his order at any time before the bank's acceptance thereof, and the bank is bound by such revocation.[7] In such case the drawer is liable to the holder for the consequences of his conduct.[8]

(2) BY DEATH OF DRAWER. Where a check is not regarded as an assignment it has been said that the death of the drawer will work a revocation; but, notwithstanding this, if a bank pay a check after the drawer's death and before learning of the event it is not liable.[9] In those jurisdictions, however, where the check operates as an assignment, it would seem that the drawer's death would have no such effect.[10]

(B) Certified Check. When a certified check has been delivered the maker's power over it is gone;[11] but a direction to the bank not to pay, after certification but before delivery to the payee, would be effectual.[12]

(X) CERTIFICATION — (A) Of Check — (1) WHAT CONSTITUTES. Certification of a check is an act by the proper officer of the bank[13] recognizing it as a valid appropriation of the amount of money therein specified to the person therein named.[14] In regard to whether such acceptance may be verbal it has been held in some cases, by analogy to bills of exchange, that a verbal acceptance[15] of a

Revocation too late.— Where a check delivered to the payee for accommodation without consideration was passed into the hands of another without the payee's indorsement and sent the next day to the bank for certification, it was held that a notice to the bank while the check was in its possession was too late and that the bank was bound to pay. check will bind the bank; but other cases hold that the certification must be in writing.[16]

(2) Effect of — (a) In General. The certification of a bank check implies that the check is drawn on sufficient funds in the drawee's possession, that they have been set apart for its payment, and that they will be thus applied when the check is presented for that purpose.[17] It serves quite the same purpose as money;[18] but when given in the ordinary course of business it is not presumed to have been given as absolute payment.[19] A distinction has been drawn between certification before delivery and after delivery. When certified before delivery, the legal effect is to assure the party afterward receiving it that it is genuine and will be paid. The bank is bound as well as the drawer.[20] By certifying after-

Bank estopped to allege lack of funds.— In Pope v. Albion Bank, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 226, it was said that any language, whether verbal or written, employed by an officer of a banking institution whose duty it was to know the financial standing and credit of its customers, representing that a check drawn upon it was good and would be paid, estopped the bank from thereafter alleging as against a bona fide holder of the check the want of funds to pay the same.

In Springfield Bank v. Springfield First Nat. Bank, 30 Mo. App. 271, it was held that a mere verbal statement given over the telephone that a check was "all right" did not amount to certification.

Statute of frauds.— In some jurisdictions a check is regarded as a bill of exchange within the meaning of the statute of frauds which requires the promise to be in writing, and the drawee cannot be held on a verbal acceptance (Risley v. Phenix Bank, 83 N. has been negligently paid.[23] Nor is the drawee bank responsible for a larger amount inserted after certification, and if by mistake such a check is paid it can recover the excess unless the holder has suffered in consequence of the mistake.[24]

(c) Where Check Forged. If a bank certify a forged check it must pay, for as someone must lose by the deceit, although unintentional, the law casts the loss on the deceiver.[25]

(d) Where Drawer Insolvent. It is a fraud for a drawer to obtain a certification after he has become insolvent. If perpetrated, the certifying bank has a right to reclaim or countermand the payment of the check unless it has been previously transferred to an innocent holder.[26]

(3) Effect of Subsequent Inquiry. If after a check has been certified, the bank is asked if the certificate is good and an affirmative answer is given, such answer has been assigned different meanings. One meaning is that the signature is good and that the bank will be responsible for the amount certified.[27] Another meaning is that the maker's signature is genuine and that his account is good for the amount but does not extend to the genuineness of the payee or to the amount written in the check.[28]

(B) Of Draft or Note. The effect of certifying a draft or note payable at the certifying bank is an admission that the bank has enough money of the accepter and maker to pay their obligations and will retain it for that purpose.[29]

b. Payment on Forged Check or Forged Indorsement — (I) Forged Check — (A) Liability of Bank — (1) To Depositor — (a) In General. A bank is presumed to know the signature of its customers, and if it pays a forged check[30] it cannot, in the absence of negligence on the part of the depositor whose check it purports to be, charge the amount to his account.[31] If, however, the drawer has prepared his check so negligently that it can be easily altered, and alterations

But see Wood v. Merchants' Sav., etc., Co., 41 Ill. 267, where the holder of a note presented it at the bank at maturity, at which time the maker had money on deposit sufficient to pay it, but the teller merely certified on the face of the note that it was "good," and the holder took it away without the money. It was held that the liability of the parties was in no way changed by such transaction and that the maker was not released from his liability, even though he lost his deposit by the failure of the bank on the following day.

What not negligence.— The fact that a depositor kept his check-book lying about in his office during the day, whereby a clerk employed in the office was enabled to forge a check, does not amount to such negligence as will excuse the bank from bearing the loss caused by paying such forged check. Mackintosh v. Eliot Nat. Bank, 123 Mass. 393.

are made afterward, he can blame no one but himself, and in such case he cannot hold the bank liable for the consequences of his own negligence.[32] And so, if a depositor should by words or acts cause his bank, while acting like a prudent man, to pay a forged check, he would be bound by the consequences.[33]

(b) Duty of Depositor to Examine Paid Checks. In some jurisdictions it is held to be the depositor's duty, when his pass-book has been written up and returned to him with the checks charged to his account, to examine them within a reasonable time and report any forgeries discovered. After the lapse of a reasonable time, a presumption arises that the checks are correct, and the depositor, having failed to examine them at the proper time, cannot recover from the bank the amount paid on checks subsequently discovered to be forgeries, without proving that "it could by proper care and skill have detected them."[34] Where this doctrine obtains, if the depositor intrusts the duty of examination to a confidential

Return of book balanced is account stated. — The writing up of a depositor's pass-book and striking a balance and returning it to him with the checks constitute a rendered account, and unless objection is made thereto by the depositor within a reasonable time he is bound thereby, and it can only be opened for examination and restatement on the ground of fraud (McKeen v. Boatmen's Bank, 74 Mo. App. 281); but in New York it is held that although the return of the account clerk or agent, and the latter forges checks, his knowledge of such forgery is chargeable to the depositor and the bank cannot be held liable upon the forgeries being subsequently discovered.[35] But in other states, especially in New York, this duty is not required of him, nor does such a presumption attend his inaction;[36] and the fact that the forgery was committed by a confidential clerk who was intrusted with the examination of the pass-book and vouchers will not affect the bank's liability.[37]

(2) To Other Persons. The above rule, in its full extent, applies only between the bank and its customer, the maker. Between the bank and other persons through whom a forged or altered check may pass, the bank is only responsible for the genuineness of the maker's signature.[38]

(B) Right of Bank to Recover of Payee. Although money paid by mistake can generally be recovered the payment of forged paper is an exception. When payment is made to the holder of paper who has come into possession of it without any fault on his part, and his situation would be rendered worse if compelled to refund than it was before receiving payment, the money cannot be recovered from him.[39] If, however, he has been negligent in any regard, he cannot retain the money. To justify him in doing so the bank alone must have been negligent.[40]

Effect of discounting forged note taken for debts.— R agreed to assist H in paying his debt and, to that end, delivered to him a note he held against K which was discounted by the bank and the proceeds applied accordingly. The note was considered as discounted on account of K or R, and although it was a forgery, H's debt was discharged. Grafton Bank v. Hunt, 4 N. H. 488.

Warranty of discounted paper.— A person who procures notes to be discounted by a bank impliedly warrants the genuineness of the makers and indorsers (Cabot Bank v. Morton, 4 Gray (Mass.) 156); but it has been held that a bank in discounting a draft does not warrant to the accepter the bills of lading attached thereto as security (Goetz v. Kansas City Bank, 119 U. S. 551, 7 S. Ct. 318, 30 L. ed. 515; Hoffman v. Milwaukee Nat. City Bank, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 181, 20 L. ed. 366).

Bank may sue in payee's name.— A bank that has taken a partnership note from a partner who has forged the name of the payee, and discounted the note, may maintain an action in the payee's name thereon. York Bank v. Asbury, 1 Biss. (U. S.) 230, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,142.

What diligence required.— When a bank pays a forged acceptance and sends it by mail to the accepters whose names are forged, they are not required to examine it immediately for the purpose of ascertaining its genuineness, nor are they chargeable with neglect for not discovering the forgery immediately. But they must give notice to the bank as soon as the forgery is discovered, otherwise they would be deemed negligent. Leavenworth First Nat. Bank v. Tappan, 6 Kan. 456, 7 Am. Rep. 568.

Drawer. A bank which pays a check on a forged indorsement acquires no rights against the drawer, and cannot charge to his account the amount so paid out.[43]

(2) As Against True Owner. In like manner if a bank pays a check on a forged indorsement, this is no defense against a recovery by the rightful owner.[44] Moreover, an indorsement by a person bearing the same name as the payee, but not the real person, is a forgery, and payment to him will not excuse the bank from paying the true owner of the paper.[45]

Public draft.— If a draft is drawn by one government agent on another and the payee's name is afterward forged and the money is paid to the wrong person, the rightful payee can demand his money of the drawee. Kimbro v. Washington First Nat. Bank, 1 MacArthur (D. C.) 415. A government officer gave to B's attorney a draft on a bank payable to B. The attorney forged B's indorsement and the drawee bank paid the draft to another bank which had cashed it. The government did not discover the forgery for three years, yet recovered the amount. U. S. v. National Bank of Republic, 2 Mackey (D. C.) 289.

Indorsement of fictitious indorsee's name.— The indorsement of a bank-draft by the payee to the order of a fictitious person, supposing him to be a real one, is not in law an indorsement to bearer; and the indorsement of the fictitious indorsee's name by a third person without authority is a forgery and does not protect the bank in paying the draft. Chism v. Memphis First Nat. Bank, 96 Tenn. 641, 36 S. W. 387, 54 Am. St. Rep. 863, 32 L. R. A. 778.

Procedure to collect on forged draft.— After a bank-draft which had been paid to one who held it under a forged indorsement was returned to the drawer, he redelivered it to the payee who demanded payment which was refused. Thereupon the drawer paid the draft after protest and had a right of action against the drawee for its refusal of payment. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Importers', etc., Bank, 119 N. Y. 195, 23 N. (3) As Against Presenter — (a) Where Presenter Acting For Himself. If the presenter owned the paper at the time of its payment, the money must be refunded on discovery of the forgery, provided his condition has not in the meantime changed so as to render a repayment unjust.[46]

(b) Where Acting as Agent For Another — aa. Disclosed Agency. Where it appears from the indorsement that the presenter is acting merely as an agent for collection, he cannot be required to refund, provided he has paid over the amount to his principal before notice of the mistake.[47] If the payment merely consists in crediting the principal for the money, and the money is really in the agent's possession, he must refund; but if, on the other hand, mutual accounts exist between the principal and agent, and the crediting operates as a genuine transfer of the money, this is regarded as payment and frees the agent from liability.[48]

bb. Undisclosed Agency. But where the agency of the presenter is undisclosed, and the paper is indorsed without qualification, he stands as to the paying bank in the relation of principal. His indorsement is a warranty to every subsequent holder in good faith that the instrument itself and all the signatures antecedent to his own are genuine; and when any of these are forgeries he is liable on his warranty without presentation or notice of non-payment by the holder.[49]

(B) Rights of Successive Indorsers. When several successive indorsers have advanced money on paper payable to order, and neither, it finally appears, had a title because the first indorsement was a forgery, each may recover from his immediate indorser.[50]

Deposit by agent — Right to set off agent's debt.— A deposit was kept in a bank in the name of A but really belonged to B, the bank supposing it to belong to A. The bank held an overdue note against A, taken before the account was opened. It was held that the bank had no right to apply the deposit to the payment of the note without the consent of B, unless it had been misled by B's conduct, and believing the deposit account to be A's had carried the note and suffered it to remain uncollected, relying upon the deposit for its payment, and in consequence of such reliance had been prejudiced. (2) Where Deposit Made For Particular Purpose. The general lien of a bank upon a customer's deposits will not be recognized where the circumstances are inconsistent therewith.[62] Thus where securities are lodged with the bank for a particular purpose — as where they are pledged as collateral to cover a particular loan or debt — they cannot be retained by the bank for the general balance or for the payment of other claims.[63]

(3) Where Debt Not Matured — (a) In General. As a general rule a bank cannot apply the deposit to an indebtedness which has not matured.[64]

(b) Insolvency of Depositor. In some jurisdictions, if the depositor become insolvent before the maturity of the debt, the bank may, as against him or his assignee, apply the deposit to the payment of its claim,[65] although the contrary view is maintained in other jurisdictions.[66] But the insolvency of the depositor gives the bank no right to retain the deposit for an immatured debt as against a

Bonds deposited to secure advances.— A New York bank authorized a New Orleans bank to draw thereon against "exchange purchases," which were to be sent to the New York bank for collection. Bonds also were deposited to secure the advances. The New Orleans bank also sent drafts of its own drawn on third persons, some of which were protested for non-payment. 76. If a previous appropriation has been made by the depositor the bank has no right to apply the deposit in payment of the debt. See supra, II, E, 10, d, (I), (A), (2).

(II) Notes or Acceptances Payable at Bank. In some jurisdictions it is held that making a note or acceptance payable at a bank is equivalent to a request to the bank to pay it out of any general funds of the maker or accepter on deposit in such bank.[77] But in others it is held that the bank has no right to make such appropriation of the deposit in the absence of an order from the depositor or a custom binding upon him.[78]

e. Attachment of Deposit — (I) In General. As a deposit is a debt due from the bank to the depositor, it may be attached by the depositor's creditors like any other property belonging to him,[79] and when so attached it becomes the bank's duty to retain the deposit until the court has made a proper order concerning its disposition.[80] An attaching creditor, however, gains no greater rights over the depositor's money than the latter himself had.[81]

(II) Effect as to Check-Holder. Where a check is not regarded as an assignment the bank should not pay any check given previously to the attachment but presented subsequently;[82] but in jurisdictions where the giving of a check works an assignment of the deposit pro tanto the amount thus transferred cannot be attached by a creditor of the maker,[83] and consequently a check given before the attachment of such deposit though not presented until afterward should be paid to the holder.[84]

11. Transfer of Notes. When a charter or statute contains no restriction on the power of a bank to indorse and transfer negotiable instruments the law presumes it has the power.[85] Such a right has been specifically declared on many occasions[86] and denied on others.[87] The authority to make the transfer must be governed by the law existing at the time of making the instrument.[88] Lastly, it is held that though a bank has no power to transfer an immatured note it can transfer it after maturity.[89]

the state, it is not thereby prohibited from continuing business,[93] and if the law requires returns to be made by a definite time, the withholding of them until a later period is not fatal to the bank's life,[94] although the proper state official to receive them is not bound to accept them after the prescribed time has expired.[95] In some states when banks fail to make reports the stock-holders are declared liable by statute. This liability is of a penal nature and an action against them can only be in the state where the bank is located.[96]

F. Dissolution and Insolvency — 1. Voluntary Dissolution. In some states the law provides for the voluntary dissolution of banks,[97] while in others this cannot be done without legislative assent.[98] Where such dissolution is permissible a bank, notwithstanding its dissolution, can sue in its corporate name to recover its assets;[99] and for the purpose of closing its affairs can appoint a temporary cashier.[1]

2. Expiration of Charter. A bank may be dissolved by the efflux of time or limitation, and when this happens the legislature has no power to revive the rights of its creditors.[2]

3. Forfeiture of Charter — a. Grounds — (i) In General. Although a charter provide for a bank's continuance until a fixed period, it may nevertheless be forfeited for a violation,[3] and the state has a legal cause to proceed against a bank when it abandons its charter;[4] when it fails to require subscription for its stock to be paid up as legally required,[5] to keep the requisite amount of specie on hand to redeem its notes,[6] to pay its drafts or other liabilities,[7] or to hold annual

(II) Waiver of. The state, however, may waive the forfeiture and permit a bank to continue in business;[15] the legislature may also remit the forfeiture;[16] a temporary injunction prohibiting a bank from doing business may be dissolved;[17] and the court decreeing a forfeiture may reserve its judgment and permit the bank to resume.[18]

b. Proceedings For — (I) Necessity of. Mere neglect to comply with its charter does not per se operate as a forfeiture without appropriate judicial proceedings,[19] and no attack aimed at the forfeiture of its charter can be made in a collateral proceeding.[20]

(II) Nature of. The proceeding is a civil, not a criminal, one,[21] and the state is the proper party to institute it,[22] although in some states stock-holders may also act,[23] but not creditors.[24] If state bank commissioners exist not all need be joined.[25]

(III) Restraint of Bank's Action. After a bill in the nature of a quo warranto has been filed by the proper officer against a bank, a court will not restrain the bank by injunction from continuing business, unless there is positive proof that it is insolvent or has violated a positive law.[26]

c. Trustees, Commissioners, etc. Trustees, commissioners, or other officers who wind up the affairs of a bank after its forfeiture have been declared to have quite the same authority as similar officers in other cases. The assets are collected, the claims are proved, and distribution is made under the general laws providing for insolvent banking institutions.[27]

d. Effect of. The effect of forfeiture is unlike that of the common law, and is what the statute prescribes.[28] Except where their existence is continued for a specified period,[29] a bank cannot make any contract thereafter;[30] but the forfeiture does not extinguish the liability of debtors.[31] Nor does the subsequent appointment of a receiver to distribute the assets among the creditors in the state of its location prevent a creditor in another state from bringing an attachment there against the bank.[32] The assets of a dissolved bank are applied to the payment of its debts and the balance is returned to the stock-holders.[33]

4. Insolvency — a. What Constitutes. A bank is solvent when it has enough assets to pay, within a reasonable time, all of its liabilities through its own agencies, and is insolvent when unable to meet its liabilities as they become due in the ordinary course of business, or, in shorter terms, when it cannot pay its deposits on demand in accordance with its promise.[34] In determining this question a bank's capital and surplus are considered its resources.[35]

b. Receivers — (I) In General — (A) Appointment and Removal. The appointment of receivers for insolvent banks is regulated largely by statute,[36] yet a court of equity can sometimes appoint a receiver on a stock-holder's petition,[37] or on the request of creditors.[38] It ordinarily has no power, however, to enjoin a bank and appoint a receiver on an ex parte application.[39] He can be removed from office for sufficient reasons on the application of the same officers who sought his appointment;[40] and stock-holders can interfere and prevent him from wasting the estate.[41]

(B) Powers and Duties — (1) In General. The receiver represents both bank and creditors, and can look behind its acts in asserting the rights they possess.[42] He is entitled to the bank's assets subject to all the equities existing against them,[43] but possesses no rights superior to those of the bank when it was alive.[44] The title to real estate in another state does not pass to him by virtue of his appointment, nor are prior attachments dissolved,[45] the lien thus acquired, notwithstanding his appointment, being preserved.[46] As he is an officer of the court he may apply thereto for instruction.[47]

(2) Collection of Assets. The receiver should proceed to convert the real estate into money, prosecute all disputed claims, and in doing this a court will not ordinarily interfere with his action.[48] He is not limited to collecting a sufficiency to pay off the bank's liabilities, but should collect all the debts that are due.[49] He can maintain an action on notes belonging to the bank indorsed in his proper name as indorsee without specifying his capacity as receiver,[50] or may sue in the name of the bank;[51] and on an instrument executed to receivers, their successors may sue in their own names as equitable assignees.[52]

(c) Effect of Appointment—(1) On Right to Sue Bank. In some states no action can be maintained against a bank after the appointment of a receiver.[53]

(2) On Subsisting Attachment. In some states an attachment against an insolvent state bank is dissolved by the appointment of a receiver and no rights are secured by the attaching creditor, while in others an attaching creditor secures a priority by his proceeding.[54] In no case, however, can a creditor secure any priority by levying, or attempting to levy, on the assets of an insolvent bank after it has been judicially declared insolvent or steps have been taken to have it thus declared.[55]

(II) Temporary Receivers. The rights of a temporary receiver are greatly restricted;[56] but a depositor's rights of set-off are the same in such a case as in any other.[57]

owners.[80] In many cases, however, in which the trust property, either in the original or substituted form does not exist, the courts will not inquire into the existence of the trust because, although the trust was established under the first rule mentioned, it could not be enforced.[81]

(iv) Selection of Assignee. The power to appoint an assignee may rest in the stock-holders[82] or directors[83] subject to the approval of the court. When the right rests in the stock-holders and a receiver is appointed temporarily until the shareholders have perfected their action he must immediately afterward relinquish his authority.[84]

(v) Effect of Assignment. It has been held that an assignment for the benefit of creditors causes the corporate powers of a bank to cease except so far as they may be continued by statute.[85]

5. Effect of Dissolution. At common law the debts to and from a bank are extinguished by its dissolution;[86] but by some statutes the debts owing by and in favor of a bank survive, and pending suits against them may proceed to judgment, while suits in their favor may be prosecuted by the trustees, receivers,

Collections.— The general power of a bank commissioners, or others authorized to settle their affairs.[87] Indeed a bank usually has all needful authority after it has discontinued business to do such things as are necessary to protect the rights of its creditors, conserve its assets, and collect and dispose of them in the most economical manner.[88]

6. Presentation of Claims and Distribution of Assets — a. In General. By some statutes a time is fixed for presenting claims against an insolvent bank, but if no positive law exists, and a judicial order is made for presenting them of which the claimant receives no notice, he may be permitted to prove his claim after the day fixed by the court.[89] A receiver should permit an issue to be framed to determine the validity of a claim instead of compelling the claimant to bring an action against the insolvent bank.[90] A creditor cannot recover twice, nor is he entitled to two judgments for the same claim under different forms.[91]

b. Interest. Interest should be allowed on claims from the date of the appointment of the trustee or receiver.[92]

c. Set-Off — (i) In General. Only direct and ascertained indebtedness can be properly set off against a claim due to a bank;[93] and where the debts are not due to and from the same persons in the same capacity the right of set-off does not exist.[94]

Set-off of debt against creditor of a stockholder.— Commissioners who are winding up the affairs of a bank that has forfeited its charter cannot set off against a creditor of a stock-holder who is seeking to subject his stock to the payment of his debts a debt due to the bank by the stock-holder, the bank itself having no lien on the stock for the debt. indebtedness a check drawn in his favor by a depositor before the bank's failure,[95] especially where the holder in no event has the right to sue the bank on which it is drawn unless it has accepted the check.[96]

(III) Claims Acquired After Bank's Failure. A debtor cannot, after the failure of a bank, obtain an assignment of a depositor's claim to use as an offset against his indebtedness to the bank,[97] unless this is permitted by statute.[98] But the question is sometimes difficult to decide what act shall be regarded as such a suspension or closing of a bank as to defeat a subsequent assignment of a deposit. In some states this may be done after closing and before filing of a bill to wind up the bank's affairs[99] or making a voluntary assignment.[1]

(IV) Depositor's Notes. A depositor is often indebted to the failed bank on notes or other obligations. If his obligation has matured his liability may be reduced by setting off his deposit[2] or a claim for services[3] against the same, and this right is unaffected by the appointment of a receiver.[4] The rule is almost as general that his deposit can be thus applied even though his obligation was not due at the time of the bank's insolvency;[5] but if a debtor pays his note without observing his legal right to set off his deposit against his liability he cannot afterward insist that his deposit is entitled to priority over other claims.[6]

(v) By Indorser, Surety, or Guarantor. An indorser, a surety, or a guarantor can set off a deposit against his liability.[7] If there are several indorsers, each is entitled to set off his deposit as against his contributive share of the note; and if some of the indorsers are insolvent, in justice and equity the receiver must adjust such share in view of the solvency of the other indorsers.[8]

d. Distribution of Assets — (i) In General — (a) Order of. The assets of an insolvent bank are distributed in the same order as the assets of other insolvent estates, except such preferences as may be prescribed.[9] The state or nation has no superior claim over other creditors;[10] and although the bank belongs to the state its assets must be applied, as in the case of any other failed bank, to the payment of its creditors.[11]

(b) Participation in — (1) Of Creditor Holding Collateral. Where a creditor holds collateral for his claim it is held in some jurisdictions that he can sell his collaterals, apply the proceeds on his debt, and, if they are insufficient, prove the unpaid portion of his claim on which he is entitled to a dividend like other creditors.[12] In others he can prove his entire claim as though he had no collaterals, take his dividend like other creditors, and afterward apply the proceeds of the collaterals to the balance of his claim. If the proceeds prove suffi-

(2) Of Officers and Stock-Holders. It has been held that an innocent officer or stock-holder of a bank is entitled to participate, like any other creditor, in the distribution of its assets,[14] notwithstanding his personal liability for its debts.[15] Stock-holders who have paid the claims of depositors and other creditors are subrogated to their rights to administer on the assets;[16] and if they buy up any claims against their bank at a discount, they are entitled to the same dividend on their face value as the original owners.[17] Nothing, however, can be repaid to them on their stock until the discharge of all the indebtedness of their bank,[18] and the rights of the creditors to these assets are complete and cannot be diverted by subsequent legislation.[19]

Relation to national government.— National banks are private banks constituting no part of any branch of the national government (Branch v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. 281) although created to aid the government (Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 29, 23 L. ed. 196).

cannot make a lease of its banking house,[29] cash a check,[30] or make any kind of agreement with another bank.[31]

2. Conversion From State to National Bank — a. Power to Convert. No authority other than that conferred by congress is required to enable a bank existing under a special or general state law to become a national banking association,[32] and the certificate of the comptroller of the currency is conclusive as to the regularity of the proceedings by which the conversion was effected.[33]

b. Effect of. Such conversion is a transition rather than a new creation. All of the old bank's rights of action are preserved and all of its liabilities still exist. Consequently, the new bank can sue to recover loans and is liable for debts and other obligations contracted by its predecessor.[34] Nor on the other hand can a national bank escape its liabilities by reorganizing as a state bank.[35]

35. Eans v. Jefferson City Exch. Bank, 79 Mo. 182.

3. Extensions. Congress has provided for extending the charters of the national banks; all the obligations due to and from them have the same force as before,[36] and the committee appointed to appraise the value of the shares act simply as appraisers possessing no judicial function.[37]

C. Capital, Stock, and Dividends[38] — 1. Increase of Capital. An attempted increase of capital without obtaining the consent of two thirds of the stock, the payment in full of the increase, and securing the comptroller's approval and certificate is invalid, and the increase to the subscriptions cannot be enforced.[39]

2. Making up Deficiency in Capital. When the capital of a national bank is impaired and it wishes to continue in business by supplying the impairment, the shareholders, and not the directors, must make the assessment required. If a stock-holder will not comply, enough of his stock must be sold to pay the assessment.[40]

3. Stock — a. Negotiability. The negotiability of national bank-stock depends on national laws.[41]

b. Transfer. The title to stock is acquired by the seller's delivery of his certificate thereof to the purchaser indorsed, or assigned, in the usual manner,[42] but the mere transfer of stock on the bank-books does not constitute the transferee a stock-holder, who must know of or ratify the transfer to make it complete.[43] On Rights of subscriber where law not observed.— If a subscriber has paid the proposed increase supposing that the requirements of the law have been observed when they have not been, or the plan fails, he can recover either the full amount paid (Winters v. Armstrong, 37 Fed. 508) or share with the other creditors (Nichols v. Stephens, 32 Mo. the other hand, if a stock-holder indorses his certificate and delivers it to the cashier with directions to make a transfer, he has parted with his title and discharged his duty and is no longer liable for an assessment.[44]

c. Assessments — (I) Who Liable — (A) In General. All the stock-holders are liable for assessments;[45] and the real ones as distinguished from those whose names may appear on the record.[46] The assessment will bind a married woman who is a stock-holder,[47] the personal representative of a deceased stock-holder,[48] a donor,[49] or one holding stock for an undisclosed principal.[50]

Minors.— If one buys stock in the name of his minor children he is liable for an assessment (Foster v. Chase, 75 Fed. 797); but a minor who is a stock-holder in an insolvent bank is bound by the action of his guardian in borrowing money as a trustee to pay its debts (Hanover Nat. Bank v. Cocke, 127 N.C. 467, 37 S. E. 507). As the estate of a minor only is liable for an assessment, property inherited after the liability accrued cannot be taken. Clark v. Ogilvie, (Ky. 1901) 63 S. W. 429.

Name in book as proof of ownership.—The fact that one's name appears in the stock-book is prima facie but not conclusive proof of ownership. If a stock-holder knowingly permits his name to be entered or kept there he is liable as one (Finn v. Brown, 142 U. S. 56, 12 S. Ct. 136, 35 L. ed. 936; Lewis v. Switz, 74 Fed. 381; Welles v. Larrabee, 36 Fed. 866, 2 L. R. S. 655, 7 S. Ct. 61, 30 L. ed. 266).

Where transfer not actually made.— If one has bought stock and supposes the transfer has been made to him, when in truth it has not been, he cannot escape his liability after making this discovery. Burt v. Bailey, 73 Fed 693, 36 U. S. App. 676, 19 C. C. A. 651.

A trustee, however, is not personally liable if he be free from fraud or concealment.[51]

(B) Liability of Pledgee. A creditor who receives stock as collateral and takes out a new certificate in his own name as pledgee is not liable,[52] but if the stock is transferred on the books of the bank in such a manner as to show that the pledgee is the owner then he is liable.[53]

(II) Extent of Liability. Stock-holders are liable to be assessed equally and ratably. In other words each is assessed for such a portion of the entire indebtedness as his stock bears to the entire amount of stock. If any stock-holder fails to pay his assessment, no other pays an increased sum by reason of his delinquency.[54] If, however, the indebtedness proves to be larger than it was supposed to be when the first assessment was ordered a second assessment may be ordered for any amount, so long as the two do not aggregate more than the entire liability prescribed by law.[55]

(III) Duration of Liability. A stock-holder's liability ceases after the bank goes into liquidation,[56] but he may be sued for the liability he has incurred until the statute of limitations cuts off the right of recovery,[57] which is a bar in equity as well as law.[58]

The statute begins to run from the time the comptroller orders the collection of the assessment. De Weese v. Smith, 97 Fed. 309; Aldrich v. Yates, 95 Fed. 78.

(iv) Enforcement of Assessment. On an order from the comptroller[59] the receiver sues for the assessment.[60] Where the entire liability of a stock-holder is demanded the remedy is by an action at law,[61] but where the assessment is for less than the entire amount of the liability the proper remedy is by a bill in equity.[62]

4. Dividends — a. Right to Revoke Declaration. When a dividend has actually been declared out of the earnings of the bank it must be paid; the directors cannot reverse their action and conclude to retain the bank's earnings as a surplus.[63]

b. Where Bank Insolvent. As the capital of a bank is a trust fund for the creditors none can be distributed to their injury in the way of dividends; and if this be done, a receiver can bring a bill in equity against the stock-holders to recover them.[64]

D. Officers[65] — 1. Election or Appointment and Tenure. A national bank cannot hire one of its officers for a specified time, but only during the pleasure of the appointing power,[66] and if his bond reads in this manner his sureties are liable for any default while he holds office.[67]

59. The comptroller's action is conclusive and cannot be reviewed or collaterally attacked. Casey v. Galli, 94 U. S. 673, 24 L. ed. 168; Cadle v. Baker, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 650, 22 L. ed. 448; Kennedy v. Gibson, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 498, 19 L. ed. 476; Aldrich v. Skinner, 98 Fed. 375.

Right to set off against assessment. — As this is a trust fund for the creditors, a stock-holder can set off against the assessment neither a dividend on his deposit (King v. Armstrong, 50 Ohio St. 222, 34 N. 67. Phillips v. Bossard, 35 Fed. 99, where it was further held that a judgment against a cashier for embezzlement would not estop a bank from bringing an action on his bond to recover what he had taken by making false entries.

2. Powers and Duties — a. Of President. If a president is a nominal officer, simply presiding at board meetings and taking no larger responsibility in lending the bank's money than any other director, he does not possess much power; but the old rule that generally he possessed very little inherent power no longer applies to him,[68] for when he is the real head and manager of a bank, through and by whom its business is conducted, he can perform such business without express authority.[69] He has always had authority to conduct the bank's litigation;[70] and he can make loans on the pledge of collaterals;[71] indorse[72] and guarantee paper in the ordinary course of transferring it for value,[73] secure a debt,[74] sign a bond,[75] and borrow from his bank.[76] On the other hand he cannot bind his bank by a note made in his own name,[77] ratify a contract made with a promoter who assisted in creating the bank,[78] relinquish a debt,[79] receive in exchange an inferior security,[80] or make an unusual agreement.[81]

b. Of Vice-President. The powers of the vice-president are declared to be more limited. As in the case of the president, the correct answer depends on whether he is an active officer or not. Where he is thus daily employed he doubtless will bind his bank by his acts that are within the usual scope of his duties as fully as any other officer.[82]

c. Of Cashier. The cashier can borrow money in the regular course of the bank's business and pledge its property in payment;[83] make collections;[84] borrow from the bank for his own use;[85] certify a check drawn on a sufficient fund[86] (nor need this be done in writing);[87] and indorse the bank's paper.[88] He cannot bind his bank by any representations concerning the solvency of its debtors, especially if they are false;[89] nor can he make an unusual agreement.[90] Whether he can insure the safe-keeping of a collateral security has been questioned.[91]

d. Of Directors. The directors can act only as a board duly convened. Their assent separately is not the assent of the bank. Consequently it has been declared that they cannot ratify separately an unauthorized loan by the president or cashier.[92]

3. Liabilities — a. Civil — (i) In General. It is proposed to treat here of the civil liabilities of national bank officers only so far as they arise out of acts of congress. The general principles governing such liabilities independently of statutes have been already discussed.[93]

(ii) Of Directors — (a) For Losses Caused by Loans. The directors are not liable for losses caused by loans made in good faith although through erroneous judgment,[94] but they are liable when they lend more than one tenth of their bank's capital to a borrower on his own paper.[95] There is no limitation,

Borrower must pay. — The wrongful action of the directors is no defense to the borrow-however, to the amount they may lend to a borrower on the paper of others either with or without his indorsement.[96]

(B) For Declaring Unearned Dividend. The directors are liable if they intentionally[97] declare out of the bank's capital a dividend that has not been earned.[98]

(C) For Acts of Cashier or Other Officer. When the directors have acted in good faith and with ordinary diligence in exercising their duty of general control and supervision, they are not liable for losses sustained through the malversations of a cashier or other officer.[99]

(D) Proceeding to Enforce Liability. When the directors have violated their duty their liability is an asset belonging to all the creditors[1] for which the receiver, if the bank be insolvent, must sue in equity.[2] Moreover, as this is not an express trust, the statute of limitations runs in favor of the directors.[3]

b. Criminal — (I) In General. It is intended to treat here of only such criminal offenses on the part of national bank officers and agents as arise out of the National Banking Act and subsequent acts of congress.[4] The general liabilities of bank officers have been considered heretofore.[5]

(II) Statutory Offenses — (A) Embezzlement, Abstraction, or Wilful Misapplication. By the National Banking Act[6] it is provided that an officer or agent[7] of a national bank who "embezzles, abstracts or wilfully misapplies[8] any

ers. They must pay just the same, and the government must do the punishing and not individuals who have had the money.

8. Terms distinguished.— An embezzlement is the unlawful conversion by a bank officer to his own use of funds intrusted to him with the intent to injure or defraud the bank. Abstraction and misapplication are a conversion to his own use of funds which are not especially intrusted to his care. U. S. v. Northway, 120 U. S. 327, 7 S. Ct. 580, 30 L. ed. 664; U. of the moneys,[9] funds, or credits" of the bank is guilty of a misdemeanor. To constitute an offense under this provision it must appear that the funds were withdrawn[10] by defendant or someone under his direction or control,[11] without the knowledge or consent of the bank,[12] and were converted to the use and benefit of defendant or someone other than the bank,[13] with intent to injure and defraud the bank.[14]

(B) False Entries—(1) IN BOOKS OF BANK. A false entry includes any book entry made intentionally, either personally or by direction, to represent what is not true or does not exist. with the intent either to deceive the officers or to defraud the bank.[15]

The term "misapplication" is broader than embezzlement and includes the latter. Jewett v. U. S., 100 Fed. 832, 53 L. R. A. 568.

9. The word "moneys" means any currency usually and lawfully used in buying and selling, and includes national bank-notes. U. S. v. Johnson, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,483, 4 Cinc. L. Bul. 361.

10. Must be withdrawn.— To constitute a misapplication some portion must be withdrawn from the bank's possession or control. Mohrenstecher v. Westervelt, 87 Fed. 157, 57 U. S. App. 618, 30 C. C. A. 584; Dow v. U. S., 82 Fed. 904, 49 U. S. App. 605, 27 C. C. A. 140. Thus the receiving of a fictitious check as a deposit is not such a misapplication. Dow v. U. S., 82 Fed. 904, 49 U. S. App. 605, 27 C. C. A. 140.

The exact amount embezzled is of no consequence. U. S. v. Harper, 33 Fed. 471.

Directors cannot authorize an embezzlement, and therefore evidence cannot be introduced to show that the discount of worthless paper by the president with the intent to defraud the bank was authorized by them. Breese v. U. S., 106 Fed. 680; U. S. v. Eno, 56 Fed. 218.

The fact that other officers knew of the misappropriation does not take the case out of the statute where defendant knowingly applied the funds in a manner forbidden by statute. U. S. v. Taintor, 11 Blatchf. (U. S.) 374, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,428, 19 Int. Rev. Rec. 4, Thomps. Nat. Bank Cas. 256.

Where authorized by directors.— Where an officer being insolvent submitted his own note with an insolvent indorser as security to the board of directors for discount, and they knowing the facts ordered it to be discounted, it was held that the use of the proceeds of the discount by the officer for his own purposes was not a wilful misapplication of the funds of the bank. U. S. v. Britton, 108 U. S. 193, 2 S. Ct. 526, 27 L. ed. 701.

13. Must be conversion.— U. S. v. Britton, 107 U. S. 655, 2 S. Ct. 512, 27 L. ed. 520, 108 U. S. 192, 2 S. Ct. 525, 27 L. ed. 703; U. S. v. Kenney, 90 Fed. 257; U. S. v. Harper, 33 Fed. 471.

For whose benefit.— It was the intention of congress to make criminal the misapplication and conversion of the funds of national banking associations without regard to whether or not the party so misapplying received any of the funds or other advantage directly or indirectly. U. S. v. Lee, 12 Fed. 816.

Overdraft.— The conversion of money acquired by a director by means of an overdraft with the intent to defraud is a misapplication. U. S. v. Warner, 26 Fed. 616. So is an overdraft by a firm of which the bank president was a member (U. S. v. Fish, 24 Fed. 585), but the payment of a check which creates an overdraft does not necessarily constitute a criminal misapplication of the bank's funds. The criminal wrong, including the intent, cannot be inferred, but must appear from all the facts surrounding the transaction (Dow v. U. S., 82 Fed. 904, 49 U. S. App. 605, 27 C. C. A. 140).

Declaration of unearned dividend.— Although a national bank is forbidden to declare an unearned dividend, it is not a wilful misapplication of the funds of the bank. U. S. v. Britton, 108 U. S. 199, 2 S. Ct. 531, 27 L. ed. 698.

Although national banks are forbidden by law to purchase their own stock, yet it is not a "wilful misapplication" of the funds of the bank where the president uses its funds to purchase shares of its own stock and holds them in trust for the bank. U. S. v. Britton, 107 U. S. 655, 2 S. Ct. 512, 27 L. ed. 520, 108 U. S. 192, 2 S. Ct. 525, 27 L. ed. 703.

Loans by directors.— If the directors or a committee make loans in the honest exercise of their official discretion which prove worthless they are not criminally liable; otherwise if they intend to injure and defraud the bank. U. S. v. Harper, 33 Fed. 471; U. S. v. Fish, 24 Fed. 585.

(2) In Reports to Comptroller. In making reports[16] to the comptroller the officers who assume to make them[17] must be held responsible for the contents, unless the false entries are clearly the result of mistake. The officers cannot avoid responsibility, either civil or criminal, for the statements therein by showing that the entries were made by a clerk, and that they were not known to such officers to be false.[18] Every overdraft which is reported as a loan with criminal intent contrary to the instructions of the comptroller concerning the mode of reporting them is a false entry.[19]

(c) Drawing Bill or Assigning Note Without Authority. Under the act of congress[20] making it a misdemeanor for an officer without authority from the directors to draw any bill of exchange or assign any note, if a bill or note relates to the business of the association, the general authority conferred by the directors upon the officer to draw bills and assign notes would be sufficient authority; but if they relate to the individual and private business of the officer the general powers thus conferred would not be sufficient authority.[21]

(d) Certification of Check on Insufficient Deposit. Under the act of congress[22] making it a misdemeanor for any officer, clerk, or agent of a national bank to certify a check, where the drawer has not enough on deposit to meet it, the cer-

A false entry may consist of an erasure of figures and the writing of different ones in their place (U. S. v. Crecilius, 34 Fed. 30); or of entry of promissory notes or a specific deposit not belonging to the bank among its assets for the purpose of deceiving the examiner (Cross v. North Carolina, 132 U. S. 132, 10 S. Ct. 47, 33 L. ed. 287; U. S. v. Peters, 87 Fed. 984).

An honest mistake is not a false entry.— Graves v. U. S., 165 U. S. 323, 17 S. Ct. 393, 41 L. ed. 732 [reversing 53 Fed. 634]; Allis v. U. S., 155 U. S. 117, 15 S. Ct. 36, 39 L. ed. 91.

The entry of an overdraft, whether allowed rightfully or wrongfully, if it show just what occurred, is not a false entry. Dow v. U. S., 82 Fed. 910, 49 U. S. App. 605, 27 C. C. A. 140.

Directors are "officers" within the meaning of the statute, and consequently it is a misdemeanor for the president, vice-president, and cashier to make false entries for the purpose of deceiving the directors; and an intention to deceive any one director or officer is as criminal as the intention to deceive all of them. But a conviction cannot be had under this statute where it appears that the officers alleged to have been deceived were accomplices in the speculation to hide which the false entries were made. U. S. v. Means, 42 Fed. 599.

16. What reports included.— The reports are not confined to those mentioned in the U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), §§ 5211, 5212. Bacon v. U. S., 97 Fed. 35, 38 C. C. A. 37; U. S. v. Booker, 80 Fed. 376. See also U. S. v. Polter, 56 Fed. 97.

Comptroller's request unnecessary.—The report to the comptroller need not have been made in response to a request or order from him. Bacon v. U. S., 97 Fed. 35, 38 C. C. A. 37; U. S. v. Booker, 80 Fed. 376.

17. Responsibility of directors.— The directors cannot be indicted under the statute for making false entries, because their only function is to attest such reports, and entries by them would be spoliations. U. S. v. Potter, 56 Fed. 83.

An assistant cashier, although not authorized to make a report of the bank's condition, may be indicted for making a false entry therein. Cochran v. U. S., 157 U. S. 286, 15 S. Ct. 628, 39 L. ed. 704.

The verification of a report containing false entries is not a crime; the evidence must connect the accused with the making or directing of the entries. U. S. v. Booker, 98 Fed. 291.

Entry at request of examiner.— A bookkeeper who makes false entries in a statement at the request of a bank examiner is not liable. U. S. v. Eqe, 49 Fed. 852.

Entry of borrowed money.— An entry in a cash-book of the amount on hand at a certain date is a false entry, when money is borrowed for a few hours to make the amount good pending a bank examiner's examination. People v. Helmer, 13 N. Y. App. Div. 426, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 642.

"Suspended loans."— The entry of loans thus carried under the head of "Loans and Discounts," in a report to the comptroller, is not a false entry so long as they are not regarded as worthless. U. S. v. Graves, 53 Fed. 634.

tification of an overdraft is not an offense, where done in execution of an agreement that it should be considered as a loan bearing interest and amply secured by collateral.[23]

(E) Aiding and Abetting. The National Banking Act makes it a misdemeanor for any person, with intent to injure or defraud, to aid or abet an officer, clerk, or agent of the bank in the commission of any of the offenses specified therein.[24]

(III) Intent to Defraud—(A) An Element of the Offense. To constitute an offense under the statute there must be an intent to defraud or deceive,[25] and mistakes in the honest exercise of official discretion are not punishable.[26]

(B) When Intent Inferred. A man is presumed to know the natural consequences of his act, and where an act prohibited by the statute is knowingly and intentionally done and its natural and legitimate consequences are to produce injury to the bank or benefit to the wrong-doer[27] the intent to injure and defraud the bank will be inferred.[28]

(IV) Jurisdiction. Jurisdiction of the offenses specified in the National Banking Act is confined to the federal courts, and the state courts have no juris-

24. U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5209.

To aid and abet in making a false report is an indictable offense. U. S. v. French, 57 Fed. 382; U. S. v. Potter, 56 Fed. 97.

Wrongful certification of checks.— Aiding and abetting the cashier of a national bank in wrongfully certifying the checks of persons in excess of their deposit is not an offense under the act of congress of July 12, 1882, c. 290, § 13. This is not one of the offenses enumerated in U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5209. U. S. v. Potter, 56 Fed. 83.

Need not be connected with bank.— The statute includes any person who has aided or abetted an officer of a national bank in violating the law, although the former be himself not an officer or agent of the institution. Coffin v. U. S., 156 U. S. 432, 15 S. Ct. 394, 39 L. ed. 481.

How prosecuted.—The officer or agent must be prosecuted as the principal offender and the outsider as aider and abettor. Coffin v. U. S., 162 U. S. 664, 16 S. Ct. 943, 40 L. ed. 1109.

25. U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5209.

Malice not necessarily involved.— The intent to injure and defraud does not necessarily imply malice or ill-will toward the bank; it is sufficient that the unlawful intent must necessarily injure or defraud the bank. U. S. v. Kenney, 90 Fed. 257. The statute means such an intent to defraud as may be inferred from wilfully and knowingly doing that which is illegal. U. S. v. Harper, 33 Fed. 471.

26. U. S. v. Britton, 108 U. S. 192, 2 S. Ct. 525, 27 L. ed. 703; U. S. v. Means, 42 Fed. 599; U. S. v. Harper, 33 Fed. 471; U. S. v. Fish, 24 Fed. 585.

27. Benefit from use of funds not material. — The advantage, direct or indirect, derived from the use of the funds misapplied does not affect the question of the intention of the wrong-doer. If he has misapplied them his intention is regarded as unlawful. U. S. v. Allen, 47 Fed. 696; U. S. v. Fish, 24 Fed. 585; U. S. v. Lee, 12 Fed. 816; U. S. v. Voorhees, 9 Fed. 143; U. An intent to defraud may be inferred from the fact of embezzlement.— U. S. v. Allis, 73 Fed. 165; In re Van Campen, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 419, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,835, 1 Am. L. T. Rep. U. S. Cts. 67, Thomps. Nat. Bank Cas. 185. See also Peters v. U. S., 94 Fed. 127, 36 C. C. A. 105.

Check not drawn against funds.— If checks are not drawn against funds, but are drawn with the expectation and understanding that they are to be fraudulently paid out of the funds of the bank, the accused is guilty of an intent to injure and defraud the bank. U. S. v. Kenney, 90 Fed. 257.

Correct instruction as to intent.— An instruction to the jury that if an entry was made by the accused with the intention of circumventing, misleading, and deceiving the officers of the bank to his own advantage and benefit the intention was fraudulent is correct. Shipp v. Com., 101 Ky. 518, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 634, 41 S. W. 856.

Evidence inadmissible to disprove fraudulent intent.— The entry of money in the bank-book with the consent of the directors is inadmissible to negative the averments of an indictment against the accused that the funds were used with an intent to injure and defraud the institution. U. S. v. Taintor, 11 Blatchf. (U. S.) 374, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,428, 19 Int. Rev. Rec. 4, Thomps. Nat. Bank Cas. 256.

diction.[29] Nor can a state declare a national bank officer liable to a misdemeanor who engages in any other profession, occupation, or calling.[30] A state, however, can enact a law making an offense criminal concerning which the national law is silent, as in receiving deposits when the bank is insolvent.[31]

(v) Indictment — (a) Necessity For. The commission of one of the acts prohibited by the statute in question[32] is an "infamous crime" which must be charged by the indictment of a grand jury, and not by a mere information filed by a prosecuting officer.[33]

(b) Form and Sufficiency — (1) In General. Every indictment should charge the alleged crime with precision, and every ingredient should be accurately and clearly stated. If the offense is purely statutory the indictment is sufficient when the acts are fully set forth in the substantial words of the statute. The true test of its sufficiency is whether it contains every element of the offense, thereby apprising the accused of what he must be prepared to meet.[34] If one count is sufficient the judgment will stand, for the presumption is that the court awarded judgment on the good count.[35]

(2) Averment of Organization. The indictment must aver the organization of the bank.[36]

(3) For Embezzlement, Abstraction, or Wilful Misapplication. Embezzlement, abstraction, and wilful misapplication constitute three separate offenses. They may be joined in one indictment, but must be stated in separate counts.[37]

Discharge on habeas corpus.— If a state court should convict one of an offense punishable by national law he could be discharged on a motion in a habeas corpus proceeding. Ex p. Houghton, 8 Fed. 897.

Where same act violates federal and state laws.— Where the same act constitutes one crime against the United States and another against a state the offender is amenable both to the federal and state laws; but if there is only one crime, though punishable by both federal and state law, the United States has exclusive jurisdiction. Indictment good on motion in arrest.— An indictment in which the misapplication is

The indictment must allege defendant's official character,[38] describe the property embezzled or misapplied,[39] and charge its wrongful conversion[40] with intent to defraud.[41] Where the offense charged is "wilful misapplication" there must be averments showing how the wilful misapplication was made and that it was unlawful.[42] Where "embezzlement" is the crime charged, the indictment must show that the accused was in lawful possession of the funds which he is charged with embezzling.[43]

(4) For Making False Entries — (a) In Books of Bank. An indictment for this offense should aver that the accused was the president, cashier, or other officer; that he made in a book, a report, or a statement of the bank a false entry, describing it; that it was made with intent to injure and defraud the bank, or to deceive an agent, describing him, appointed to examine the book; and the time and place of making such entries.[44] alleged to have been done on many different days and times between named dates covering a period of nearly three years is not bad on a motion in arrest of judgment. U. S. v. McClure, 107 Fed. 268.

38. Sufficient allegation of official character.— An indictment which charges the accused as having committed an offense as "president and agent" of a particular bank is a sufficient description of his action in an official capacity. U. S. v. Northway, 120 U. S. 327, 7 S. Ct. 580, 30 L. ed. 664.

Insufficient description.—An indictment for embezzlement which charges the accused with having and receiving "certain of the moneys and funds" of the bank lacks definiteness, as "funds" include several species of property. U. S. v. Greve, 65 Fed. 488.

That the money embezzled was lawful tender money is surplusage. Porter v. U. S., 91 Fed. 494.

40. Sufficient averment of conversion.—An indictment charging the accused with wrongfully using the bank's money for the purpose of bribing city officials in his own interest is a sufficient statement of its conversion to his own use. McKnight v. U. S., 97 Fed. 208, 38 C. C. A. 115. See also Coffin v. U. S., 156 U. S. 432, 15 S. Ct. 594, 39 L. ed. 481, where the indictment was held to allege sufficiently an actual conversion.

Sufficient certainty.— An indictment which alleges that the accused did "unlawfully, fraudulently, and wilfully misapply and convert to his own use the assets of the bank, with intent then and thereby to injure and defraud the association," which "conversion was done by some means and in some manner to the jurors unknown" is not void for want of certainty. Jewett v. U. S., 100 Fed. 832, 837, 53 L. R. A. 568.

Receiving and crediting worthless checks.— An indictment charging the receiving teller with the making of false entries in the books of a bank by receiving and crediting checks drawn on the bank by parties who had no funds there should set forth a description of the checks with an averment of the reasons why they are false or valueless. (b) In Reports to Comptroller. An indictment for making false entries in a report to the comptroller must set out the false entries fully enough to inform the accused clearly of the offense charged and describe the report sufficiently to identify it;[45] but it is not necessary to allege that the false entries were published or transmitted to the comptroller,[46] or that the report was made on the request of the comptroller or according to the form or time prescribed by him.[47]

(5) For Drawing Bills or Assigning Notes Without Authority. An indictment of an officer for drawing bills of exchange and assigning notes without authority from the directors need not allege such drawing and assigning to have been with intent to injure and defraud such association; nor need it set out copies of the bills and notes if they are otherwise described with sufficient particularity.[48]

(6) For Wrongfully Certifying Check. In an indictment for wrongfully certifying a check, where the drawer had not enough on deposit to meet it, it is not necessary to allege the delivery of the check after certification.[49]

(7) For Aiding and Abetting. An indictment charging a person with aiding and abetting the director of a national bank with misapplying its funds must state enough facts to show the misapplication by him,[50] as well as by the officer or agent he is accused of abetting,[51] but it is not necessary to aver that defendant knew the person so aided and abetted to be a specified bank officer.[52]

(vi) Proof—(a) In General. The proof must of course correspond with the allegations of the indictment,[53] but where the offense charged is embezzlement, with making false entries for the purpose of deceiving the examiner should be of doubtful validity, the doubt should be decided on a motion in arrest of judgment and not on a motion to quash the indictment. U. S. v. Bartow, 20 Blatchf. (U. S.) 351, 10 Fed. 874.

45. Dorsey v. U. S., 101 Fed. 746; U. S. v. Work, 57 Fed. 391; U. S. v. French, 57 Fed. 382.

The report need not be described with technical accuracy.— Cochran v. U. S., 157 U. S. 286, 15 S. Ct. 628, 39 L. ed. 704.

Averment of intent in making false entries.— It is sufficient to charge that they were made "with intent to injure and defraud" the bank, naming it, "and certain persons to the grand jurors unknown." U. S. v. Britton, 107 U. S. 655, 2 S. Ct. 512, 27 L. ed. 520; U. S. v. Potter, 56 Fed. 97.

Verification and attestation.— It must be alleged that the report was verified and attested by the cashier. U. S. v. Potter, 56 Fed. 97. See also Cochran v. U. S., 157 U. S. 286, 15 S. Ct. 628, 39 L. ed. 704.

Charging several offenses in same indictment.—An officer may be charged with making at different times false entries in the books, reports, or statements in different counts of the same indictment. U. S. v. Berry, 96 Fed. 842.

Sufficient indictment.— If an indictment allege that the president of a specified bank did knowingly, wrongfully, and unlawfully, make or cause to be made false entries in a report or statement of the bank to the comptroller setting forth the report in full and the particulars of the false entries this is sufficient. U. S. v. Hughitt, 45 Fed. 47.

49. Potter v. U. S., 155 U. S. 438, 15 S. Ct. 144, 39 L. ed. 214.

What not charge of separate offenses.— In charging the accused in a single count with certifying a check "before the amount thereof had been entered to the credit of the party drawing the check on the books of the bank," and when the drawer did not "have on deposit an amount of money equal to the amount of the check," two separate offenses are not included. U. S. v. Potter, 56 Fed. 83.

50. U. S. v. Warner, 26 Fed. 616. For other cases involving questions relating to the indictment for aiding and abetting see Evans v. U. S., 153 U. S. 584, 14 S. Ct. 934, 38 L. ed. 830; U. S. v. Northway, 120 U. S. 327, 7 S. Ct. 580, 30 L. ed. 664; U. S. v. Work, 57 Fed. 391; U. S. v. French, 57 Fed. 382.

False entries — Need not specify acts.—An indictment charging one with aiding and abetting in making false entries need not specify the acts by which the aiding and abetting were accomplished. Coffin v. U. S., 156 U. S. 432, 15 S. Ct. 394, 39 L. ed. 481.

51. In charging a person not connected with the bank with aiding and abetting a director in misapplying its funds the indictment must state facts showing a misapplication of them by the director. U. S. v. Warner, 26 Fed. 616. See also Dow v. U. S., 82 Fed. 904, 49 U. S. App. 605, 27 C. C. A. 140.

53. False entries — Variance.— An indictment charging the accused with making a false entry in a report to the comptroller with intent to injure and defraud the asso-

the proof need not show that the exact amount embezzled was the same as that charged in the indictment.[54] What evidence is admissible under the indictment is a question depending for the most part upon the general rules of evidence.[55] Evidence will not be admitted on behalf of a defendant charged with misappropriation to show that the offense was committed in an effort to secure the bank against losses through former misapplications.[56]

(B) Of Organization of Bank. The comptroller's certificate of the organization of the bank is admissible to prove that it was organized, and constitutes conclusive evidence thereof.[57]

E. Functions and Dealings[58] — 1. Place of Business. The place where a national bank transacts its business and its officers reside is regarded as the home of the bank.[59]

2. Powers — a. In General. A national bank can purchase notes and bills;[60]

ciation and the stock-holders is not sustained by proof that it was done with the intent to deceive the creditors, depositors, comptroller, or the public. U. S. v. Allen, 47 Fed. 696. A charge of having made a false entry in the accounts of an individual with a bank is not sustained by proof that the account was with him in an official capacity. Williams v. State, 51 Nebr. 630, 71 N. W. 313.

Sufficient to support charge of abstraction. — Evidence that the cashier and director of a bank procured the making of two worthless notes for large amounts by an irresponsible employee of the bank and then appropriated an equal sum of the bank's money is sufficient to support a verdict on a charge of unlawful abstraction. Dorsey v. U. S., 101 Fed. 746.

54. U. S. v. Harper, 33 Fed. 471. See also U. S. v. Fish, 24 Fed. 585.

Proof that a check is for dollars and not for pounds sterling is not a material variance. Coffin v. U. S., 156 U. S. 432, 15 S. Ct. 394, 39 L. ed. 481.

55. Proof of defendant's conduct in performing duties. — On a charge of embezzlement or misapplication evidence may be introduced to show how the accused conducted himself in performing his duties as teller. Tyler v. U. S., 106 Fed. 137.

Use of funds taken. — Evidence that some of the money drawn out by the accused was for his children is not admissible to determine the character of the transaction. Breese v. U. S., 106 Fed. 680.

Evidence of former reports to show intent. — To show the intent with which the alleged false entries are made evidence of prior reports attested by the accused and containing false statements may be admitted. Bacon v. U. S., 97 Fed. 35, 38 C. C. A. 37.

Letter from comptroller to accused. — A letter written by the national comptroller to the president of a bank and forming part of its official correspondence may be used against the president in a trial for making a false entry in a report to the comptroller, even though it was kept with the president's private papers. Bacon v. U. S., 97 Fed. 35, 38 C. C. A. 37.

An opinion concerning the guaranty of a president who is charged with converting the funds of his bank to his own use by purchasing worthless bonds with them, and giving the bank his guaranty therefor is inadmissible. Agnew v. U. S., 165 U. S. 36, 17 S. Ct. 235, 41 L. ed. 624.

Bank-books admissible without proof. — Proof that books containing the record of a bank's regular daily transactions are kept by its regularly appointed officers raises the presumption that they are admissible without further proof. Bacon v. U. S., 97 Fed. 35, 38 C. C. A. 37.

Expert testimony. — A bank examiner, who is a skilled accountant, may testify to the results of his investigation of the books, but cannot form conclusions from the statements of clerks and officers of the bank. U. S. v. Allen, 47 Fed. 696.

Refreshing memory. — A bank teller when called as a witness against the president for abstracting or misapplying its funds may refresh his memory by examining entries in the bank-books and then testify, even though some of the entries are not in his own handwriting. the government can redress the public injury if it pleases by taking away, on proper proceedings, the bank's charter.[81]

(II) To Secure Past Advances. To secure past advances a national bank may take real estate[82] or its own stock.[83] A very wide latitude is given to a bank to take property to prevent the loss of a debt and to use and improve it temporarily until an advantageous disposition can be made of it.[84]

c. Power to Sue and Be Sued. By the law of 1888 national banks are put in the same category as individuals in suits by and against them. When an individual can sue in a state or federal court a national bank can do the same thing; and when the federal courts are not open to individuals they are not to national banks.[85]

What constitutes payment of interest.— The transfer of commercial paper to a bank and discount by it at a greater than the legal rate and the crediting to the transferrer of the net proceeds after deducting the interest charged constitutes a payment of the interest within the meaning of the statute providing a limitation of two years. Rahway Nat. Bank v. Carpenter, 52 N. J. L. 165, 19 Atl. 181. And see Danforth v. Elizabeth Nat. State Bank, 48 Fed. 271, 3 U. S. App. 7, 1 C. C. A. 62, 17 L. R. A. 622.

Applied pro rata to principal and interest. — A borrower of large sums from a national bank at usurious interest made payments from time to time, and at occasional settlements gave notes for the balance. In an action to recover double interest paid, it was held that his payments had been applied pro rata to the principal and interest. Kinser v.

F. Reports and Examinations. The oath of a director concerning his knowledge of the affairs of the bank relates only to such knowledge as he acquires in the exercise of his ordinary duties. The knowledge of an active officer, president, cashier, or manager possesses more significance.[16] A national bank examiner is not an officer or agent of the bank and has no authority to act for it in any manner;[17] nor is a letter addressed to him from a stock-holder inquiring about its condition a privileged communication.[18]

G. Attachment Against National Banks. No attachment before final judgment can be issued against a national bank. The proceeding is void and no lien is thereby acquired on the property of the bank.[19]

H. Dissolution and Insolvency[20] — 1. Expiration of Charter. A national bank continues after the close of the time fixed in its charter as a person in law capable of suing and being sued, until its affairs are completely settled.[21]

Statute applies whether bank solvent or insolvent.— In Pacific Nat. Bank v. Mixter, 124 U. S. 721, 8 S. Ct. 718, 31 L. ed. 567, the doctrine was settled that national banks are exempt from attachment whether they be solvent or insolvent. The court referring to the statute said: "It operates as a prohibition upon all attachments against national banks under the authority of the state courts. . . . It operates as well on the courts of the United States as on those of the States."

2. Voluntary Liquidation. Two thirds of the stock-holders may vote to liquidate the bank contrary to the wishes or interests of the minority.[22] By such action its capacity to collect its assets and close its affairs is not affected.[23] It may sue and be sued, and a valid judgment may be obtained against the bank.[24] While liquidating, the officers of the bank have no authority to transact any business in the name of the bank which can bind its stock-holders except that relating to the closing of the bank's affairs.[25]

3. Insolvency — a. When Bank in Contemplation of Insolvency. When it is reasonably apparent to the officers of a bank that it must be presently unable to meet its obligations, it is legally in contemplation of insolvency.[26]

b. Preferences. What is a preference is a question not always easily answered. The transfer of property to a creditor to avoid paying his debt and thus postpone the bank's failure is an illegal preference;[27] and this is true of the payment of some creditors to the exclusion of others.[28] But with respect to trust funds,[29] being changed into a national bank, its corporate existence ceases on the expiration of the period during which it was authorized to do business as a national bank. Therefore the cashier's authority is at an end, and process cannot be served on him in an action against either the state bank or the national bank. Hayden v. Syracuse Bank, 15 N. Y. c. Receiver — (i) Appointment. The receiver is appointed by the comptroller, whose action cannot be reviewed.[31] He is a federal officer,[32] and represents both the bank and the creditors.[33] His appointment does not work a dissolution of the bank.[34]

(ii) Control of Property. The receiver is vested with all the property of the bank, which must be converted into money and distributed to the creditors.[35] It is a trust fund for their benefit.[36] Checks in process of collection must be returned, or the assets if the collection is completed, unless the bank was the owner of them.[37] If deposits were received when the bank was knowingly insolvent these must be returned to their owners.[38] He holds the notes taken by the bank subject to the same defenses.[39]

(iii) Dealings With Receiver. A person in dealing with a receiver must have knowledge of the latter's authority, and therefore acts at his own peril.[40] The receiver cannot compromise a debt.[41]

(iv) Suits by Receiver. The receiver is authorized to sue in his own name or in the name of the bank for the purpose of collecting its assets and enforcing the liability of the stock-holders.[42] He has the same rights in court that the bank had.[43]

(v) Suits Against Receiver. If a suit is pending against the bank at the time of the receiver's appointment, he can be substituted in place of the bank.[44] If it is sued afterward he is the real party and the bank is only the nominal one.[45] As he is an officer of the United States, an action may be brought against him in a federal court,[46] although a state court may also have jurisdiction.[47]

d. Claims — (i) Determination of. The claims of creditors are to be determined as of the date of the declaration of insolvency, irrespective of the question whether particular creditors have security or not.[48]

e. Dividends. In declaring dividends secured by collaterals claimants are entitled to the same dividends as other creditors. The sums received from the sale of their collaterals are also applied, and if these with the dividends received are more than enough the balance is delivered to the receiver.[54]

IV. SAVINGS-BANKS.

A. What Are. A savings-bank is an institution only partially embodying the features of a bank in the full sense of the term, the purpose of which is to promote the prosperity of persons of small means and limited opportunities of investing them, by receiving their savings in even trivial sums, and lending them in larger amounts, whereby interest may be gained, to be divided among the depositors.[55] Whether a bank possesses this character depends, not on its designation, but on its functions.[56] A bank therefore which does a commercial banking business is not a savings-bank.[57]

B. Power of Courts to Control. Savings-banks are subject to the control of courts of equity.[58]

C. Stock-Holders.[59] The liability of each stock-holder in a savings-bank for the shares of stock subscribed by him is several and not joint with the other subscribers.[60] A stock-holder may defend a suit for the redemption of deposits by showing that, prior to the commencement of suit, he had discharged his obligation by paying other depositors than plaintiff an amount equal to the full proportion that his stock bears to the whole amount due to depositor.[61]

D. Officers — 1. Powers — a. In General. The trust character of a savings-bank is more clearly marked than that of a bank of discount, and its officers have more limited powers.[62]

b. Of Managing Officers. In many banks the treasurer is the chief managing

c. Ratification. The trustees or directors can ratify the conduct of the treasurer or other officers.[76]

2. Duties and Liabilities — a. manner contrary to law, they are liable.[79] So are they if guilty of improvidence or reckless extravagance.[80] No distinction can be drawn between their duties to general and special depositors; nor can they shield themselves by an honest misconception of their charter.[81]

(II) Remedy. The usual remedy is a bill in equity, which may be brought by the depositors; but as the damages recovered would be assets the receiver is a necessary party.[82] If their liability is limited to an excessive loan, the amount of which is known, an action at law will lie against them.[83]

b. Of Managing Officer. The president, treasurer, manager, or other leading officer may become liable for disregarding his plain duty. This is especially true of any leading officer who makes an investment contrary to law and without the sanction of the finance committee when one exists for making investments.[84]

E. Functions and Dealings — 1. Adopting and Amending By-Laws. All savings-banks adopt by-laws to regulate the payment of their deposits,[85] and so far as these are reasonable they form a contract binding both bank and depositor, unless the bank is negligent.[86] In no case, however, can a negligent bank by any regulation escape the consequences of its act.[87] Ordinarily a by-law cannot be amended without the depositor's knowledge and consent;[88] although this may be implied from many circumstances;[89] but if the by-laws provide for amending them without notifying depositors, this may be done.[90]

2. Borrowing Money. A savings-bank has implied authority to borrow money in the course of its business and to make negotiable paper therefor and pledge its securities in payment.[91]

3. Deposits — a. In General — (I) Amount Receivable. The amount receivable on deposit from any one individual is sometimes regulated by statute[92] and more frequently by by-laws.[93]

(II) Bank's Relation to Depositor — (A) Generally. In one sense a bank's relation to its depositors is that of a trust defined by statute or charter, which cannot be changed even by a court of equity.[94] In another sense the relation is that of debtor and creditor, and the profits on its loans are the bank's property, and it can in consequence negotiate or pledge any of its securities.[95] A depositor is not a stock-holder.[96]

(B) In Case of Special Deposits. A savings-bank may receive a special deposit,[97] and in such case, is an agent and not a debtor and must restore it.[98]

When a by-law is new and not an amendment.— A by-law provided for security to non-stock-holder depositors. A new by-law, reported by a committee on revision of by-laws, reported one that did not provide such security, which was passed. This was regarded as a new by-law, and the old one was no longer in force. Murphy v. Pacific Bank, 130 Cal. 542, 62 Pac. 1059.

Ultra vires no defense.—A savings-bank having received special deposits out of the ordinary course cannot defend in an action to recover them that the contract was ultra vires. Cogswell v. Rockingham Ten Cents Sav. Bank, 59 N. H. 43.

(III) Payment of Deposits — (A) Conditions Precedent — (1) In General — (a) Notice to Pay. Savings-banks generally require depositors to give notice of their wish to withdraw their deposit; but if a bank refuses to pay on the ground that the money has been already paid to another such notice need not be given.[99]

(b) Production of Pass-Book. In most savings-banks there is a rule that payments made to the person producing the pass-book shall discharge the bank. Such a by-law is reasonable and discharges the bank when it has exercised care in paying, even though the presenter was a thief.[1]

(2) When Pass-Book Is Lost. If a rule provides that if a pass-book is lost the deposit will not be paid without satisfactory proof of loss and adequate indemnity it is reasonable and may be enforced.[2] Most savings-banks also require the depositor to give notice of the loss of his book. This is a reasonable rule; and if not regarded the depositor cannot recover should the bank pay his deposit to another on his production of his book unless it has not made proper inquiry before paying.[3]

(B) On Presentation of Pass-Book and Order. Banks often pay on the presentation of an order from the depositor accompanied with the book. When using proper care in thus paying the bank is not liable even though it pay to the wrong person, or on a forged order.[4]

When not received.—A bank may claim that a special deposit, a bond, was never received when it was given by the owner to a clerk who never put it into the possession of the bank. Greeley v. Nashua Sav. Bank, 63 N. H. 145.

(c) On Presumption of Death. Even though the bank pay to one who has been appointed administrator of a depositor, supposing he is dead from an absence of seven years without any knowledge of him, and on presentation of his book, yet the true depositor can recover.[5]

(d) Where Deposit Made in Assumed Name. The bank must pay a deposit, even though it be made in an assumed name, on presentation of the book and proper proof of ownership.[6]

(iv) Ownership of Deposits. Entries upon the books of a savings-bank and upon the pass-book issued by it to a depositor are not conclusive evidence of the ownership of a deposit.[7] In the case of a joint deposit of a joint fund belonging to two depositors, title thereto vests in the survivor on the death of one of the depositors.[8]

(v) Assignment of Deposits.[9] A pass-book may be assigned,[10] although the assignee cannot maintain an action thereon in his own name;[11] but the book is not negotiable, even though a by-law provide that it may be transferable to order.[12]

discount[20] and purchase[21] paper. A savings-bank cannot make a valid contract with a broker for the purchase and sale of stock for a speculative purpose;[22] but if it should receive stock as security for a loan, which it is not authorized to make, the title would be merely voidable.[23]

F. Insolvency — 1. Appointment of Receiver. When a savings-bank is insolvent a receiver may be appointed to adjust its affairs,[24] but he need not be when the officers and depositors can agree among themselves.[25]

2. Rights of Depositors — a. In General. In some states, upon the failure of a savings-bank, depositors are considered general creditors like all others;[26] while in others they are not to be paid until after all other debts for management, etc., are discharged.[27] As such banks are only agencies for receiving and investing the money of depositors, one depositor cannot ordinarily bring an action to recover the full amount,[28] and if the deposits are scaled the adjustment will be deemed proper.[29]

b. Preferences. Attempts are often made to hold a deposit as special and

24. Sufficiency of petition for receiver.— A petition by a stock-holder alleging the bank to be insolvent and the directors to be inefficient and about to make an assessment for their own gain, but not charging fraud, is not a sufficiently clear case to justify the appointment of a receiver. Gorman v. Guardian Sav. Bank, 4 Mo. App. 180.

Collection of checks.— If a check is deposited in a savings-bank which fails before its collection, the depositor is usually entitled to the proceeds, if these are afterward collected by the assignee or receiver. Brooks v. Bigelow, 142 Mass. 6, 6 N. E. 766.

In New Hampshire by statute (N. H. Gen. Laws, c. 170) the depositors are the equitable owners in common after the deposits have been scaled. entitled to a preference, but a deposit, although special, is not always entitled to a preference, and generally a special depositor fares no better than others.[30]

c. To Bind Other Depositors. The right of some depositors to bind the rest by formal action with respect to the adjustment of its affairs has arisen especially after the failure of a bank. They often act under the advice of the court, and when thus acting they are sustained.[31]

d. To Set Off Deposit Against Debt. Unless allowed by statute,[32] a depositor, who is also a debtor, cannot have his deposit set off against his debt,[33] but if he has deposited a special fund to be thus applied its application will be made.[34]

V. LOAN AND TRUST COMPANIES.

A. Stock-Holders. The liability of stock-holders in loan and trust companies is dependent upon the statutes under which such companies are organized.[35]

B. Powers — 1. In General. The powers of trust companies differ greatly in the states and even in the same state, but the tendency is to enlarge their powers.[36] If a trust company can do a banking business it may employ any appropriate method for paying general deposits which are received.[37] A foreign Deposits in trust.—When a closed savings-bank resumed business and received deposits in trust to be used only in paying checks drawn on these new accounts, the new depositors were not special depositors but only creditors on an equality with the old ones. In re Mutual Bldg. If a bank lawfully executes a trust, deposits growing out of it do not differ from other deposits and are not entitled to any preference in payment. Vail v. Newark Sav. Inst., 32 N. J. Eq. 627.

Special capital.— The charter of a savings-bank provided that a special capital should be used as security for the depositors, yet after the bank's failure it could not be claimed exclusively by them. Fox's Appeal, 93 Pa. St. 406. The promise of a bank to use specified securities for the benefit of its savings depositors does not create a trust or lien in their favor. 35. Thus in Minnesota an annuity, safe deposit, and trust company is not a corporation embracing banking privileges, and consequently the liability of its members for the company's indebtedness is not the same as the liability of the stock-holders of a bank. International Trust Co. v. American L. & T. Co., 62 Minn. 501, 65 N. W. 78, 632.

36. Deposits.— In some jurisdictions they can receive deposits (Venner v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 54 N. Y. App. Div. 271, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 773) and issue certificates of deposit (Saginaw Bank v. Western Pennsylvania Title, etc., Co., 105 Fed. 491); but in Missouri a trust company cannot receive money in the way of general deposits and pay them out on demand on the check of the depositor, thereby establishing the ordinary relation of debtor and creditor that exists between banks and their depositors. But it can buy and sell bills of exchange (State v. Lincoln Trust Co., 144 Mo. 562, 46 S. W. 593).

Discounts.— In New York under the earlier statutes they could not discount notes (Pratt v. Short, 79 N. Y. 437, 35 Am. Rep. 531; New York L. & T. Co. v. Helmer, 77 N. trust company cannot act in another state as a trustee without complying with the laws which regulate trust companies in such state.[38]

2. Consequences of Exceeding Powers. Formerly if a trust company exceeded its powers in lending money the security could not be enforced,[39] but the money loaned could be recovered.[40] But now the contract can be enforced when justice requires unless this would be plainly contrary to public policy, and the state will recognize the public offense and take such action as the law has prescribed.[41]

C. Liabilities. A trust company which sells bonds of another company, certifying on their face how they are issued and secured, assumes no liability for any breach of trust of the original issuing company.[42]

D. Trust Funds. When a trust company mingles several trust funds and uses a part of them in its private business, the amount belonging to each fund is its proportionate share of the whole.[43]

E. Dissolution. When a trust company becomes insolvent[44] the assignee or receiver can sue for and recover assets which have been improperly sold;[45] and if he attempt to foreclose a mortgage taken in payment of a subscription, the mortgagor cannot defend on the ground that the company had authority to receive only money.[46]

VI. Clearing-Houses.

44. Application of trust fund.—A trust company held as trustee for another company a guaranty fund. At that time it was selling corporate obligations but afterward it sold debenture bonds and created other trust funds to secure them. After its failure the trust fund in the trust company's possession was applicable to the obligations first sold, but not to the debenture bonds. American L. & T. Preferences.— The charter of a trust company provided that, in the event of dissolution, minors, insane persons, and married women should be preferred creditors. The company became insolvent, but only in the sense of inability to meet present obligations, and did not lose its right to resume business. There was not such a dissolution as to prefer the above-mentioned persons in discharging its indebtedness. Dewey v. St. Albans Trust Co., 56 Vt. 476, 48 Am. Rep. 803.

B. Regulations. Banks may make rules for securing the payment of balances that may be found due from one member to another;[49] but the rules and usages[50] of a clearing-house are for the benefit of its members, and their customers can neither claim the benefit of, nor be injured by, them.[51]

C. Powers — 1. Clearing For Non-Members. Members are permitted to clear for other banks or trust companies, in the same city or vicinity, by complying with rules that are established for the protection of clearing-house members.[52] Such a contract between the two banks does not impose the same liability on the clearing-house bank to pay the checks drawn on the other as the law imposes on the drawee bank itself.[53] Again, the non-member is bound by the refunding of a Payment of notes.—When the rules provide that checks and drafts payable through any member must be paid in accordance with those rules, and that any error or mistake must be corrected by the parties to the transaction, and a certified note is paid by one member to another, the paying bank is not precluded from recovering of the other on the discovery of an error in the certification. I. DEFINITIONS.

Barratry[1] is the offense of frequently exciting and stirring up quarrels and suits, either at law, or otherwise;[2] an act committed by the master or mariners of a ship for some unlawful or fraudulent purpose, contrary to duty, whereby the latter sustains an injury;[3] and in Scotland the crime of a judge who is induced by bribery to pronounce a judgment.[4] A barrator or common barrator

1. "Barratry" and "barretry" are terms used interchangeably by the courts. It is said, however, that the former is derived from barrataria — fraud, deceit, etc. — and more properly applies to the acts of a master in shipping, while the latter is from barretta — a contention, quarrel, or wrangle — and is more properly used in the sense of an intermeddler. Adams Gloss. sub voc. Barretry.

2. 4 Bl. Comm. 134; 4 Stephen Comm. 262.

Code definition.— In California the offense is defined as "the practice of exciting groundless judicial proceedings." Cal. Pen. Code, § 158 [quoted in Lucas v. Pico, 55 Cal. 126, 128]. Similar statutory provisions exist in many other jurisdictions.

Distinguished from maintenance.— Barratry consists in the habit or practice of stirring up strife, while only one such act would be maintenance. Voorhees v. Dorr, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 580, 586.

is a common mover, exciter, or maintainer of suits and quarrels, either in courts of justice or in the country.[5]

II. Nature and Elements of Offense.

A. The Quarrel or Suit — 1. At Law — a. Civil Suits — (I) In General. While by statute it is sometimes required that the suit be groundless,[6] this was not necessary at common law, and inducing others to commence just suits would be barratrous, if done with a ruinous or oppressive motive.[7]

(II) Aid in Prosecution — (A) In General. It was, however, held at common law that one could in respect to poverty use money in behalf of another to enable him to recover a just right;[8] and that an attorney who prosecuted a groundless action would not be guilty of the offense, provided he was in no way connected with the institution of such suit.[9]

(B) Information of Land Titles. It is not barratry for one to sell his information concerning the title to lands held adversely by another.[10]

(III) Malicious Institution of Suits in Own Right. It was at one time held that the institution of any number of false actions brought by one in his own right would not be barratry,[11] but this view is repudiated by the later authorities.[12]

b. Criminal Prosecutions. Inasmuch as it is not only the privilege but the duty of every citizen and officer to bring violators of the law to justice, it has been argued that this offense ought not be extended to criminal prosecutions; but it is held otherwise.[13]

2. In the Country. While in some jurisdictions the offense is confined by statute to the exciting of groundless judicial proceedings,[14] at common law the offense extended to disturbances of the peace, the taking or detaining of the possession of houses, lands, or goods, which were in question or controversy, not only by force, but also by subtlety or deceit, and to the invention and sowing of calumny, rumors, and reports, whereby discord and disquiet arise between neighbors.[15]

B. Necessity of Three Acts. Before one can be properly convicted of this offense it is necessary that he be shown to be guilty of at least three distinct acts of malicious intermeddling,[16] the evil design or intent being a necessary element;[17]

13. State v. Chitty, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 379, 398 (where the court, per Johnson, J., said: "The offence, as I understand it, does not consist, . . . in promoting either private suits or public prosecutions, when the sole object is the attainment of public justice, or private right; . . . He who brings a public offender to justice, does well; but he who uses a public prosecution as a means of gratifying a passion for mischief, or for the sake of filthy lucre, or oppression, is an offender of no ordinary magnitude"); Case of Barretry, 8 Coke 36*b*.

but the three acts given in evidence on the trial need not be the same as those upon which the indictment was found.[18]

III. INDICTMENT.

A. In General.[19] An indictment for barratry is one of the few exceptions to the general rule that the indictment must distinctly and accurately set forth the particular acts constituting the offense charged.[20] It is sufficient, as well as necessary,[21] to charge defendant with being a "common barrator," [22] without showing the place where,[23] or the cause for which,[24] he is a common barrator. The indictment must conclude contra pacem.[25]

B. Bill of Particulars. Owing to the generality of the charge in the indictment and as a means of guarding defendant against surprise[26] and to enable him to prepare a defense against such an uncertain charge,[27] the prosecutor is required to furnish him with a bill of particulars, designating the particular acts of barratry which will be relied upon to prove the general charge.[28] Without such bill the prosecution cannot proceed to trial.[29] It is, however, no part of the record[30] and the acts designated in the bill need not be the same as those upon which the indictment was found;[31] but the evidence introduced must be confined to the particular acts designated in the bill.[32] particular directions therefor, with a malicious design to harass and oppress the debtor." But where he simply directed that the note be sued on, leaving the manner of suing to his attorney, in the absence of evidence of his direction he cannot be held for barratry though the evidence shows without question an indictable offense.

18. Com. v. Davis, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 432.

19. Joint indictment.— In Rex v. Philips, 2 Str. 921, it was said that two cannot be jointly indicted for barratry.

21. The words are a term of art which cannot be supplied by words which may import as much. Roy v. Hardwicke, Sid. 282.

The reason of this exception, which is of ancient date, was not understood by early writers (Buller, J., in J'Anson v. Stuart, 1 T. R. 748, 754), but it arises from the fact that the offense does not consist of the acts themselves but of the practice or habit of inciting trouble (Com. v. Pray, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 359, 362; State v. Chitty, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 379; Rex v. Mason, 2 T. R. 581). Inasmuch as the plaintiff is required to furnish defendant with a bill of particulars (see infra, III, B) the exception becomes immaterial (Lambert v. People, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 578, 587).

Sufficiency of bill.— A bill of particulars will be sufficient if it describes the alleged acts and proceedings with such certainty that defendant is not prejudicially misled thereby. Com. v. Davis, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 432, where one who was indicted as a common barrator was furnished with a bill of particulars, stating that evidence would be produced on the part of the state concerning complaints before certain magistrates against certain individuals for certain offenses, but not stating the time when the complaints were made, and giving only the surnames of the magistrates. It was held that after conviction exceptions for the want of certainty could not be sustained.

Remedy for defective bill.— Where one is misled by the uncertainty of the bill, it should be shown as ground for a postponement of the trial and not as an exception for want of certainty in a motion for arrest of judgment after trial. Com. v. Davis, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 432.

29. Rex v. Grove, 5 Mod. 18; Rex v. Urlyn, 2 Saund. 308.

30. Com. v. Davis, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 432; State v. Chitty, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 379, the latter case holding that it cannot furnish ground for a motion in arrest of judgment.

32. State v. Chitty, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 379; Rex v. Urlyn, 2 Saund. 308.

IV. DEFENSES.

It is no defense that defendant is an officer, and that the barratrous acts could have been reached by an action for malfeasance in office,[33] or that the prosecution was not commenced within the time fixed for prosecuting embracery, champerty, and like offenses.[34]

V. EVIDENCE.

On trial of an officer for barratry, evidence that defendant exacted illegal fees as the condition of compounding prosecutions which were incited by him is admissible to show the motive for the exciting of such suits;[35] but mere evidence of an oppressive disposition in collecting money on executions cannot be construed as evidence of a previous direction or assent in the manner of commencing the suits.[36] An order of a magistrate requiring the one complained against by defendant to appear before a proper court is not conclusive evidence of probable cause for making the complaint.[37]

VI. PUNISHMENT.

The punishment for barratry, at common law, was by fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court, and if committed by an attorney, by disbarment.[38]

BARREL. A measure of quantity[1] equal to thirty-six gallons;[2] a vessel of a certain kind and capacity.[3]

BARRENNESS. Incapacity to propagate or bear children.[4] (Barrenness: As Ground For Divorce, see DIVORCE.)

BARRETRY. See BARRATRY.

BARRICADE. An obstruction; an actual impediment to travel.[5]

BARRIER. In mining law, a wall of coal left between two mines.[6]

BARRISTER. See ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

BAR-ROOM. A room containing a bar or counter at which liquors are sold; a room with a bar where liquors and refreshments are served;[7] a place for the sale of intoxicating liquors by retail for consumption at the place of sale;[8] a tavern; a drinking shop.[9] (See, generally, BAR; INTOXICATING LIQUORS.)

33. State v. Chitty, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 379, 408, where the court said: "Barratry is a substantive and distinct offence, and in no wise necessarily connected with the office of magistrate, and is not, therefore, merged in an offence committed in that office."

34. State v. Chitty, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 379, 409, where the court said that barratry "is made up of many acts, committed at different times, and in tracing the circumstances, it would be impossible to fix upon the precise time when it began, or when it was consummated; . . . It is the aggregate of all the barretrous acts which constitute barretry; and the longer the list, and the more extended in point of time, the more aggravated is the offence."

J., said: "To hold that the order of the magistrate in that prosecution, which may have been occasioned by the false representations and malicious and artful contrivances of the defendant himself, was conclusive of his innocence and purity in the matter, could be justified upon no principle or authority."

I. WHO ARE ILLEGITIMATE.

A. In General. At common law a bastard is one who is born neither in lawful wedlock,[1] nor within a competent time after its termination;[2] or under circumstances which render it impossible that the husband of his mother can be his father.[3]

B. Issue of Void Marriage. In the absence of a statute declaring the issue of marriages void in law legitimate,[4] such issue are illegitimate.[5] So, also, if no marriage was in fact celebrated, the statute requiring a ceremony.[6]

II. EVIDENCE OF LEGITIMACY.

A. Presumptions — 1. In General. A child is presumed to be legitimate until the contrary is shown.[8] In case of conflicting presumptions that in favor of legitimacy will prevail.[9] There is no presumption that one who marries the mother of a bastard is its father.[10]

2. From Birth During Wedlock. Every child born in wedlock is by law presumed to be legitimate.[11] So firm was this presumption originally that it could not be rebutted unless the husband was incapable of procreation or was absent beyond the four seas during the whole period of the wife's pregnancy.[12] This ancient rule has been so far relaxed that in modern times this presumption may be overcome by showing that the husband had no opportunity for intercourse, and the jury, from all the facts, are to infer whether intercourse did, or did not, take place.[13]

uncontroverted for a great length of time strengthens the presumption regarding it.[16] This is especially true after the death of the parties.[17]

B. Burden of Proof. Those who assume the fact of illegitimacy have cast upon them the burden of establishing it.[18] One may, however, while protected by the presumption of legitimacy, have the burden upon him to prove his kinship.[19]

C. Admissibility — 1. Baptismal or Marriage Certificate. III. LEGITIMATION.

A. Definition. Legitimation is the act of changing the status of a bastard to that of a lawfully born child.[38]

B. At Common Law. Under the common law a bastard could be legitimated only by a special act of parliament.[39]

C. By Statute — 1. In General. The legislative power to legitimate a bastard child has long been recognized both in England and in the United States.[40]

2. Issue of Void Marriage. Statutes in many states provide that the issue of null and void marriages shall nevertheless be deemed to be legitimate,[41] especially

History of legislation.— An act of parliament in the fourteenth century legitimating the three sons and a daughter of John of Gaunt, begotten of Catharine Swynford, a governess of his children, seems to be the beginning of such enactments, but history records many other acts of legitimation in the two succeeding centuries. McGunnigle v. McKee, 77 Pa. St. 81, 18 Am. Rep. 428. The process of legitimating by special act was frequently resorted to in the United States, though by the intervention of general statutes such special legislation became much less frequent and unnecessary. Perry v. Newsom, 36 N. C. 28. But see Edmondson v. Dyson, 7 Ga. 512, where upon almost precisely the same state of facts a different view was held. A statute, however, giving capacity to the mother and her illegitimate child to inherit from each other as next of kin and heirs, does not legitimate such child in the sense that its mother's brothers and sisters can take its property as next of kin to the mother after it (the child) dies intestate. Such property escheats to the state. Grubb's Appeal, 58 Pa. St. 55. See also Neil's Appeal, 92 Pa. St. 193.

3. Recognition or Acknowledgment — a. In General. In some states a child may be legitimated by the recognition or acknowledgment of it by the putative father as his own. The usual requirement of such legitimation is that the recognition or acknowledgment be general and notorious or in writing.[43]

b. Sufficiency of Recognition or Acknowledgment — (i) In Pais. While one may by his acts be held to have sufficiently recognized a child to legitimate it,[44] loose acts of occasional recognition,[45] or an occasional apparent recognition during the first years of the child's life at the home of its foster parents have been held insufficient.[46] Where a public acknowledgment and

The degree of public recognition required is not satisfied by evidence that plaintiff was reared at the home of deceased in Ireland when not employed elsewhere until he reached the age of ninete n or twenty, when he came to the United States at the expense of deceased and went to his home, where he remained for two years, that deceased provided for him, collected his wages, and introduced him as his son to some few persons. The father often referred to him as his son, placed him with a family for adoption, and not long before his death gave him a farm of one hundred and twenty acres, for the expressed consideration of one dollar. It was held sufficient to show that the father generally and notoriously recognized the son as such.

reception into one's family is required the public acknowledgment alone is insufficient.[47]

(II) In Writing. The sufficiency of a writing to constitute an acknowledgment must be determined by the statutes of the particular state. In some jurisdictions it has been held that the writing must be made for such express purpose, and be in strict compliance with the statute.[48] In other jurisdictions a collateral writing is sufficient,[49] and it need not appear on the face of such papers that the child is the father's illegitimate offspring.[50]

c. What Law Governs. The sufficiency of the acts of a father to constitute legitimation is determined by the laws of his domicile and not of the child's.[51]

4. Subsequent Marriage of Parents. The civil and canon law, in contradistinction to the common law, allowed the subsequent marriage of the parents to legitimate previously born issue,[52] and the statutes of the different states, in

But a contract signed by decedent and a nurse, wherein the nurse agreed to nurse "a female child" of decedent, and that decedent "can take his creature whenever he pleases" was held to be an insufficient recognition. Sandford's Estate, 4 Cal. 12. Likewise a letter from deceased to a young man referring to the latter as "my boy" and "my son" and to himself as "his father" and a list of school children in a school district, sworn to by deceased with the name of deceased opposite the young man's name in the column for the names of "parent or guardian" is an insufficient acknowledgment under the laws of Nebraska. Lind v. Burke, 56 Nebr. 785, 77 N. W. 444. So the mere joining of the words "my daughter" to the name of the child in a will does not raise the presumption that it was the intention of the father to elevate an illegitimate child to the condition of his heir. Pina v. Peck, 31 Cal. 359.

Form of acknowledgment is set out in Llula's Succession, 41 La. Ann. 87, 6 So. 555.

49. Matter of Rohrer, 22 Wash. 151, 60 Pac. 122, 50 L. R. A. 350, where the statute which required that the writing be signed in the presence of competent witnesses was held to be duly complied with when deceased, a few years before, had, before a notary, duly certified that plaintiff was his daughter, in prosecuting a party for her seduction. See also Matter of Blythe, 110 Cal. 229, 42 Pac. 642, where it was held that the witnesses to such writing need not subscribe the same. Thus where the putative father wrote letters to one, addressing her as "My darling child" and signing himself "From your loving father" and also wrote her grandfather with reference to having her baptized and christened with his name, such acts constituted a complete acknowledgment.

Comparison of canon and common law.— "The civil and canon laws do not allow a child to remain a bastard, if the parents afterward intermarry; and herein they differ most materially from our law, which . . . makes it an indispensable condition, to make it legitimate, that it shall be born after lawful wedlock. And the reason of our English law is surely much superior to that of the Roman if we consider the principal end and mitigating the severity of the common law, have generally adopted this principle.[53] These statutes, being remedial, are held to operate in a retrospective sense to the extent of legitimating those whose parents had married before the passage of the act,[54] but have been held not to affect the property relations of husband and wife.[55] design of establishing the contract of marriage which end and design is to ascertain and fix upon some certain person to whom the care, the protection, the maintenance, and the education of the children should belong, this end is undoubtedly better answered by legitimating all issue born after wedlock. . . . 1. Because of the very great uncertainty there will generally be in the proof that the issue was generally begotten by the same man, whereas by confining the proof to the birth and not to the begetting, our law has rendered it perfectly certain what child is legitimate and who is to take care of the child. 2. Because by the Roman Law a child may be continued a bastard or made legitimate at the option of the father and mother by a marriage ex post facto, thereby opening a door to many frauds and partialities, which by our law are prevented. 3. Because by those laws a man may remain a bastard till forty years of age, and then become legitimate by the subsequent marriage of his parents whereby the main end of marriage, the protection of infants, is totally frustrated. 4. Because this rule of the Roman Law admits of no limitations as to the time or number of bastards so to be legitimated. . . . whereas our constitutions guard against this indecency, and at the same time give sufficient allowance to the frailties of human nature . . . by allowing a child begotten before wedlock to be legitimate if the parties but marry before its birth." 1 Bl. See 6 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bastards," § 14.

Under a statute providing for the legitimation of the issue by the subsequent marriage and cohabitation of the parties it was shown that the parents of a bastard were married but subsequently separated by agreement; that the father visited the wife some four or eight times, remaining with her from Sunday until Monday on each occasion, and frequently recognized the child as his. After six months the visits ceased and the parties were divorced. The "cohabitation" was held sufficient to legitimate the offspring. Clauer's Appeal, 11 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 427.

54. Brower v. Bowers, 1 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 214; Sleigh v. Strider, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 229 note, 5 Call (Va.) 439. But see Morgan v. Perry, 51 N. H. 559, holding that a statute providing that "where the parents of children born before marriage afterward intermarry and recognize such children as their own, such children shall . . . be deemed legitimate," did not legitimate a son who was born and whose parents intermarried before the passage of the act. See also Stevenson v. Sullivant, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 207, 5 L. ed. 70, holding that where recognition by the father, in connection with a marriage of the parties, is declared to be necessary to legitimate the issue, some recognition must be made after the passage of the act to render it operative. Hence where the father died before the passage of the act his previous recognition was insufficient.

55. Hatch v. Ferguson, 68 Fed. 43, 15 C. C. A. 201, 33 L. R. A. 759. Nor will it apply when the estate which the child, who was born and died before the passage of the act, claimed had no existence until after the repeal of the act. Brown v. Belmarde, 3 Kan. 35.

5. JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS. In some states proceedings may be instituted to obtain a judicial declaration of legitimacy.[56]

D. Effect of Legitimation. In the absence of restrictions in the statute legitimation places an illegitimate child, so far as inheritable blood is concerned, on the same footing as offspring born in lawful wedlock.[57] But an estate that has already descended to the legal heir cannot be divested and given to a bastard by a subsequent act of legitimation.[58]

IV. REPUDIATION OF LEGITIMACY.

The right to disavow or repudiate a child, where legitimacy is presumed, is peculiar to the father and must be exercised by him or his heirs within the prescribed time.[59] Such disavowal must be by a judicial proceeding to which the child is a party.[60]

V. CUSTODY AND SUPPORT.

A. Right to Custody — 1. RIGHT OF MOTHER. The mother's right, as natural guardian, to the custody and control of a bastard is superior to that of any one else.[61] She cannot be deprived of such right by an appointment by the court of another guardian, unless she be given previous notice of the intended action.[62] The mother may, however, defeat her right to the custody by ill treatment or abuse of the child.[63]

2. RIGHT OF FATHER. The putative father of a bastard is entitled to its custody against all but the mother.[64] On legitimation the child is subject to the custody

See 6 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bastards," § 19.

In legal contemplation a bastard is generally considered as the relative of no one, but to provide for his support and education the mother has a right to the custody and control of him, and is bound to maintain him, as his natural guardian. In a moral view he is considered the child of his mother so far that their intermarriage is unlawful, and any sexual intercourse between them would be incestuous. Parsons, C. J., in Wright v. Wright, 2 Mass. 109.

62. Dalton v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 357, holding further that a gift of the child would not deprive her of her right to its subsequent custody.

A written surrender of all her rights of custody to one who educates and provides for the child will not preclude the court from appointing another guardian with the mother's consent. Gloucester v. Page, 105 Mass. 231. The court may, however, under such circumstances decline to interfere. Reg. v. Armstrong, 1 Ont. Pr. 6. See also Matter of Bush, 47 Kan. 264, 27 Pac. 1003, holding that custody will not be granted to a mother upon a showing that she was under eighteen years of age when she assented to the child's adoption and has since married, where it appears that the adoptive parents have become greatly attached to the child and are furnishing it a reasonably good home.

The best interests of the child will always be considered by the court where the legal right to custody is not fully and satisfactorily established, or where the court conceives the party to whom the custody should properly be given an unfit person for such a charge. Matter of Nofsinger, 25 Mo. App. 116; People v. Kling, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 366; In re Holeshed, 5 Ont. Pr. 251. See also Dodge County v. Kermnitz, 32 Nebr. 238, 49 N. W. 226, 38 Nebr. 554, 57 N. W. 385. If the child is of sufficient age to understandingly choose the custody it desires the court may, in its discretion, submit her disposition to her own choosing, and will not allow such choice to be disturbed by a displeased parent. In re Lloyd, 3 M. & G. 547, 5 Jur. 1198, 4 Scott N. R. 200, 42 E. C. L. 288.

See also Adams v. Adams, 50 Vt. 158, holding that a putative father, who has paid a judgment against himself for breach of his bond to a town for the support of a child, and has taken such child with the authority of the selectmen, has the right to its custody as against the overseers of the poor.

Hence the father cannot bind him as an apprentice without the mother's consent. Timmins v. Lacy, 30 Tex. 115. See also APPRENTICES, III, A, 2 [3 Cyc. 543].

Right of third persons.— A surety on a bond given to indemnify a town for the support of a bastard child has no right to the custody of such child. Falls v. Belknap, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 486. But a duly appointed guardian is entitled to a bastard's custody, notwithstanding the mother in her lifetime and control of the father to the same extent as in the case of a legitimate child.[65]

B. Duty to Support — 1. Duty of Father. In the absence of statutory regulations the father is under no legal obligation to support his illegitimate child.[66] His statutory liability, which is perhaps universal,[67] rests upon the fact that he is the father,[68] and can be enforced only to the extent[69] and in the manner indicated by the statute.[70]

2. Duty of Mother. At common law there was no liability on the part of a mother to maintain her illegitimate child.[71] In the United States the duty seems to be inferred as incidental to her guardianship of the child.[72]

3. Duty of Municipal Authorities. A bastard may become a public charge.[73]

C. Contracts For Support — 1. Implied Contracts. The father of a bastard child cannot be charged with an implied promise for its support.[74] But if he intrusted the child to another with whom she desired it to remain till its majority. And the illiteracy of the guardian, the desire of the child, and its good treatment by the other party are no defense to the action to procure its custody. Johns v. Emmert, 62 Ind. 533. See also In re Smith, 8 Ont. Pr. 23, wherein the court refused to order the removal of a child from a Protestant institution to that of a Roman Catholic, it having been consigned by the mother to the former, though just before her death she requested that it be transferred to the latter.

Under the Louisiana code the father of an acknowledged illegitimate child may be sued for alimony for its support by the mother. Gibney v. Fitzsimmons, 5 La. Ann 250.

The father of a child is not liable for its support, under the bastardy acts, where the mother, after conception, and during pregnancy, marries another man who has full knowledge of her condition, since the latter thereby consents to stand in loco parentis to such child, and is presumed to be its father. adopts or acknowledges it such promise may be implied so long as the adoption continues.[75]

2. Express Contracts — a. In General. Contracts wherein the putative father agrees to contribute to his illegitimate child's support, in lieu of the statutory remedy, are valid,[76] and cannot be repudiated by the father without reasonable cause.[77] Such contracts are not within the statute of frauds requiring a writing,[78] and being in discharge of an obligation imposed by law may be enforced against a minor.[79]

b. Consideration. The obligation imposed upon the father by statute to support his bastard child is a sufficient consideration for his promise so to do.[80] His moral obligation alone to do so, however, is insufficient.[81]

2. By Statute — a. In General. Most of the states have statutes mitigating in a degree the rigors of the common law and conferring rights which that law denied.[83] But terms of kindred in a statute will include only those who are legitimate, unless a different intent clearly appears.[84] Hence a description of those who may take as "child" or "children" would exclude illegitimate issue.[85] Where prohibited from taking as an heir, it has been held that a bastard cannot take as legatee.[86]

b. From Each Other. By statutory provision in many of the states one bastard is allowed to inherit from another of the same mother.[87]

According to some decisions no one can take land by descent unless recognized as a legitimate heir by the laws of the state wherein the land is situated.[93] The general current of modern authority, however, favors the doctrine that, where an illegitimate child has been legitimated, such legitimacy follows the child wherever it may go and entitles it to all the rights flowing from such status.[94]

The father cannot take from his bastard child unless he has lawfully acknowledged it.[99] And it has been held that a statute declaring that an illegitimate child shall in all respects, both in law and equity, be upon an equal footing with the father's other children does not enable the father to inherit from him.[1]

c. To Husband or Wife. Statutes often provide that the estate of an illegitimate, dying intestate and without issue, shall descend to the surviving wife [2] or husband.[3]

d. To Mother. While it is sometimes provided that if a bastard die intestate and without issue his estate shall go to his mother,[4] or to her and his bastard brothers and sisters together,[5] it has been held that she will not be included within the term "kindred," [6] and that a statute declaring that bastards shall be capable of inheriting from and through their mothers and of transmitting estates, as though born in wedlock, will not give a bastard capacity to transmit his estate through his deceased mother to her heirs.[7]

Issue of incestuous marriage.— The statute allowing illegitimates to transmit to brothers and sisters takes no note of the degree of crime of which they are the fruits. Thus on the death of an illegitimate son without issue his property may go to his illegitimate brothers and sisters, though they be the issue of a father with his own daughter by a former wife. VII. PROCEEDINGS UNDER BASTARDY LAWS.

A. Nature of Proceedings. By the weight of authority proceedings under the bastardy laws are considered in substance as civil suits.[9] They are, however, often spoken of as quasi-criminal[10] or quasi-civil,[11] and many courts have been inclined to deem them more as a criminal proceeding than otherwise.[12]

B. Purpose of Proceedings. It is generally said that the object of these proceedings is not the imposition of a penalty for an immoral or unlawful act, but merely to compel the putative father to provide for the support of his offspring and thus secure the public against such support.[13] In some jurisdictions, however, the courts hold, as at common law,[14] that punishment of the father is as much the aim of the statute as the immunity of the public from the child's support.[15] In others the benefit of the mother is held to be the intended aim.[16]

C. Conditions Precedent — 1. Birth of Child Within State. The place of birth[17] or of the begetting of the child is generally immaterial.[18] If, however, the object of the proceeding is a punishment for fornication it is necessary that the child be begotten within the state.[19]

2. Residence of Mother Within State. As a rule it is not necessary that the mother be a resident of the state, in order to prosecute a bastardy proceeding therein.[20]

D. Bar or Abatement of Proceedings — 1. Bar of Proceedings — a. Former Acquittal or Conviction. While an acquittal on the merits is of course a bar to a subsequent proceeding on the same charge,[21] a plea that a former indictment for the offense has been quashed,[22] or of a former acquittal of the charge of fornication and adultery with the mother of the bastard[23] will not be a sufficient defense. And as the province of a justice of the peace is usually confined to an examination only as to probable cause, and a requirement of security to appear for trial, an acquittal by such justice constitutes no bar to a subsequent prosecution.[24] On the other hand if the statute confers the proper jurisdiction an acquittal by the justice may be properly pleaded.[25] warrant or other proceedings, constitute a "former trial and conviction," and bar a subsequent prosecution on the same charge. State v. Robertson, 122 N. C. 1045, 29 S. E. 223.

26. Kenisten v. Rowe, 16 Me. 38; Wheelwright v. Greer, 10 Allen (Mass.) 389.

Thus it is not within the meaning of a statute regulating actions for misdemeanors (State v. Hunter, 67 Ala. 81), or for statutory penalties (State v. Laughlin, 73 Iowa 351, 35 N. W. 448; State v. Sarratt, 14 Rich. (S. C.) 29), or of a provision relative to crimes and punishments (State v. Stafford, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 412. See also State v. Hedgepeth, 122 N. C. 1039, 30 S. E. 140; State v. Perry, 122 N. C. 1043, 30 S. E. 139).

An exception arises where the proceeding is considered of a purely criminal nature. It must then be brought within the time prescribed for other offenses of the same grade. Bake v. State, 21 Md. 422. Such statute begins to run at the birth and not the begetting of the child. Neff v. State, 57 Md. 385. But under such provision if defendant leaves his residence within the state, and conceals himself to avoid arrest for the offense, the statute does not begin to run in his favor till his return to his customary residence, though his hiding-place be within the state. Com. v. Blackburn, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 464.

27. State v. Ledbetter, 26 N. C. 242; Ex p. Currie, 26 N. Brunsw. 576.

Infancy of mother.—Where the statute required that the proceeding be begun within two years from the birth of the child, the fact that the mother was an infant will not excuse a compliance therewith, notwithstanding a general provision of the code that persons under legal disability may bring actions within two years after the disability be removed. State v. Pavey, 82 Ind. 543.

The institution of the proceeding within the prescribed time is sufficient. Thus where the complaint and warrant in a bastardy proceeding were lost before service on defendant (Burt v. State, 79 Ind. 359), or the escape of defendant after arrest but before trial (Patterson v. State, 91 Ind. 364), the proceeding was sufficiently begun to enable a prosecution after the statutory time.

(III) Enforcement. A forbearance to institute a bastardy proceeding,[32] or dismissing or ceasing to further prosecute a proceeding, is a good consideration to support a note or promise given therefor.[33] The death of the child before its support has cost the amount for which the note was given is no defense to an action thereon.[34] And a settlement may be enforced by the mother, notwithstand-

Entering compromise of record.—While the compromise when properly made constitutes a complete bar to another action on the same cause (Carter v. State, 32 Ind. 404), under a statute providing that "the prosecuting witness may, at any time before the final judgment, dismiss such suit, if she shall enter of record an admission, that provision for the maintenance of the child has been made to her satisfaction; such entry shall be a bar to all other prosecutions for the same cause," any agreement prosecutrix may make out of court while an infant will not operate as a bar (Pickler v. State, 18 Ind. 266. And see State v. Wilson, 16 Ind. 134). Nor will the agreement operate as a bar until it is entered of record with the consent of the mother; the fact that she filed the agreement in court being not of itself sufficient to constitute a bar. Fisher v. State, 65 Ind. 51; State v. Wilson, 21 Ind. 273. Thus where prosecutrix dies after she had made and signed a release and acknowledgment, but before it has been entered on record, the prosecution of the suit in the name of the child is not barred. Agreement by third party.— A written agreement by which defendant and another were to pay all damages arising from the complaint for bastardy, and further stipulating that no further damage should accrue against the respondent, is a sufficient consideration for a promissory note, and proof that the injured woman agreed to be satisfied with such arrangement is no more than proof of the execution of the agreement, and is admissible in an action on the note. Taylor v. Dansby, 42 Mich. 82, 3 N. W. 267.

Duress.— A party who, while under arrest on a charge of bastardy, but not actually in prison, or even under such restraint as would prevent him from going where he pleased, executes his promissory note in settlement of the charge is not under such duress as would enable him to avoid the contract. Heaps v. Dunham, 95 Ill. 583.

Liability not limited to life of maker.— Where defendant, in consideration of prosecutrix's discontinuing pending actions against him and releasing him from all claims and demands, agreed to pay all costs and relieve her "from any cost or expense in the support and maintenance of said child, and to see that it was well taken care of," it was held that it continued so long as the mother's obligation to support the child continued, and ing her infancy,[35] or the infancy of the obligor.[36] It is a good defense, however, that prosecutrix, well knowing that she was not pregnant,[37] or that another than defendant was the father,[38] obtained the notes.

(iv) SETTING ASIDE. Plaintiff may always avoid a release or settlement pleaded in bar by showing that it was obtained from her through fraud.[39] Plaintiff must, however, return, or offer to return, any consideration paid her in the procurement of such release.[40]

2. ABATEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS — a. Death. The death of the child[41] or of the mother[42] will not abate the proceeding. But in the absence of express statutory provisions to the contrary the rule is otherwise upon the death of defendant.[43] that the executors of the maker were bound to perform so much of the contract as had not been performed. Stumpf's Appeal, 116 Pa. St. 33, 8 Atl. 866.

35. Infancy of mother.— Garner v. Cook, 30 Ind. 331. Or if on account of the infancy of prosecutrix the note is made payable to her mother it may be enforced; the payee being the natural guardian of the mother and charged with her support. Jenkins v. Neighbors, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 736. Likewise a note given in settlement to the father of plaintiff may be sued upon in the name of the father, though he be but a trustee for his daughter. (Pa.) 162, holding that, where plaintiff in procuring a compromise bond swore that none other than defendant had ever had carnal knowledge of her body, defendant should be allowed to show, in a subsequent action on such bond, that plaintiff's evidence was false regarding her chastity, it being proper to infer that such testimony would greatly influence defendant in giving the bond.

Burden of proof.— A receipt given by the mother, expressed to be in full settlement of a case of bastardy, is prima facie evidence of a full settlement, and the burden of proof is upon her in seeking to impeach it. McElhaney v. People, 1 Ill. App. 550.

b. Marriage of Complainant. The intermarriage of the parties pending the proceedings may properly be treated as an abatement thereof.[44] But the marriage of complainant to a third person while prosecuting a bastardy proceeding is not ground for abatement.[45]

c. Pendency of Another Proceeding. The mere issuance of a warrant upon complaint of prosecutrix, where it has not been served nor any proceedings had thereon, is not a "pending suit" in such sense as to abate a subsequent proceeding.[46]

E. Who May Institute Proceedings — 1. Mother — a. In General. The mother, and in some jurisdictions only the mother, may institute the proceeding.[47] The fact that the mother is a married woman will not preclude her from instituting it.[48] It has also been held in a number of jurisdictions that the infancy of Estoppel of mother to prosecute.—A mother who, on her oath, refuses to declare the father of her bastard child, but executes the prescribed bond and security to indemnify the county, is estopped from afterward instituting proceedings against the putative father to compel his maintenance of the child. State v. Price, 81 N. C. 516; State v. Brown, 46 N. C. 129. So a mother who has released herself from liability to support her child by a valid contract with a third person for its support cannot prosecute the putative father to compel him to aid in its maintenance. Young v. State, 53 Ind. 536.

Woman of color.— Before the abolition of slavery the right of colored women to institute bastardy proceedings was limited, in some states, to free women of color. Williams v. Blincoe, 5 Litt. the mother does not necessitate a prosecution of the proceeding by her guardian or by her next friend.[49]

b. Accusation in Travail. In some jurisdictions an accusation of defendant during the mother's travail has been held to be a condition precedent to her right to institute the proceeding against him.[50] In others such accusation is not necessary, but if made constitutes a prima facie case against defendant.[51]

2. Public Authorities. On the mother's refusal or neglect to prosecute, the municipal authorities liable for the support of the child are generally empowered to do so.[52]

F. Jurisdiction. The proceeding being statutory, reference should be had to the statutes of the particular state to determine the court in which it should be instituted. G. Venue — 1. In General. Proceedings under the bastardy acts are generally deemed to be transitory.[56] In some jurisdictions they must be instituted in the county wherein the putative father resides;[57] in others in the county wherein the mother resides;[58] in others in the county in which the child is likely to become a charge.[59]

2. Change of Venue. The venue may, in a proper case, be changed.[60] Statutes or rules of court governing a change must, however, be observed.[61]

state at what time and place the child was begotten,[65] nor that prosecutrix is a resident of the county in which the proceeding is brought,[66] nor need it conclude contra formam statuti.[67] If the right to prosecute is limited to unmarried women it should be alleged that complainant is unmarried.[68] The complaint must also allege that prosecutrix is "pregnant or delivered of a child who by law would be deemed and held a bastard," or the equivalent thereof, if the statute so requires.[69]

2. Examination of Complainant. The examination of the prosecutrix before the justice should be taken down in writing.[70] The examination should also be

It is not necessary to allege that plaintiff was unmarried at the time of conception, such fact being matter of proof. William H. T. v. State, 18 Fla. 883; Zweifel v. State, 27 Wis. 396. The allegation that plaintiff is a single woman and that the child when born will be "deemed to be a bastard" is sufficient. Thomas v. State, 37 Fla. 378, 20 So. 529.

69. Ex p. Hays, 25 Fla. 279, 6 So. 64.

A failure to allege in precise terms that complainant had been delivered of a bastard child may be cured by verdict, the presumption being that such fact was proved on trial. Chapel v. White, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 537. So a complaint by plaintiff in which she swears that defendant got her with child, and that he is the father of her child, is sufficient after verdict, though it is not distinctly alleged that she is pregnant or has been delivered. authenticated.[71] As the right of defendant to have the prosecutrix examined is for his benefit it may be waived by him.[72]

3. WARRANT. The warrant for the arrest of defendant should show either the jurisdictional facts essential to support a proceeding in bastardy or that such facts have been determined by the justice.[73] If not expressly required by statute it need not be under seal,[74] and it need not conclude contra formam statuti.[75] It is not limited in its operation to the township[76] or county[77] from which it issues, and may be served by an officer authorized to serve warrants in criminal cases.[78]

4. DECISION. A finding by a justice that said complaint is true,[79] or that respondent is guilty,[80] is equivalent to a finding that he was the father of the child. It has also been held that a requirement from defendant of a bond to appear before the higher court implies such finding.[81]

5. RETURN TO HIGHER COURT. The original papers are not indispensable in the higher court, but the proceedings may be continued on certified copies of same.[82]

71. Altschuler v. Algaza, 16 Nebr. 631, 21 N. W. 401.

Sufficiency of authentication.— While the signature of the justices before whom the examination is held is the proper authentication of the proceedings, yet a warrant issued by them on the same paper and connected with it has been held sufficient. State v. Thompson, 26 N. C. 484. And where the proceeding was before two justices, one of whom omitted his signature, the court to which the proceedings were returned may permit the justice then to sign the examination. State v. Thomas, 27 N. C. 366. See also Sayles v. Fanning, 13 Gray (Mass.) 538.

Material defects in an examination may be waived. State v. Carson, 19 N. C. 368. Thus the right to demand an opportunity to confront and cross-examine prosecutrix during such examination may be waived. State v. Rogers, 119 N. C. 793, 26 S. E. 142.

73. Collins v. State, 78 Ala. 433; Williams v. State, 29 Ala. 9.

The warrant need not show that complainant is unmarried where the evidence shows such fact. Francis v. Com., 3 Bush (Ky.) 4. And where the statute provided that "any unmarried woman may go before a justice of any township of her county, in which she has resided for the next preceding year," the period of residence was held to refer to the time before the making of the complaint and not to the birth of the child, and that the warrant need not show a residence of complainant in the township for a year preceding the birth of her child. Tennant v. Brookover, 12 W. Va. 337. But under a statute requiring that the warrant state the correct time of the birth of the bastard, a proceeding wherein the warrant failed to thus state the time is void. Burnett v. Com., 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 106.

Unnecessary statements in the warrant may be rejected as surplusage. Luce v. Burbank, 56 Me. 414.

The commitment of defendant on a defective warrant does not deprive the magistrate committing him of power to restrain him by virtue of a valid warrant subsequently executed. People v. McFarline, 50 N. Y. App. Div. 95, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 622, 15 N. Y. Crim. 23.

Amendment.— Where the warrant charged that the child was begotten on June 2, 1891, and was born on March 2, 1895, it was error not to permit the latter date to be changed to March 2, 1892, as stated in prosecutrix's complaint. Com. v. Cantrell, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 24, 45 S. W. 72.

A delay in the service of the warrant until after the term of court before which defendant was commanded to furnish security for his appearance will not vitiate the warrant. Luce v. Burbank, 56 Me. 414. See also Baker v. State, 56 Wis. 568, 14 N. W. 718, wherein it was held that an officer having failed to serve a warrant, and neglected to deliver it to his successor, a second warrant might issue on the original complaint.

Return.— It is not necessary that the return be made to the justice who issued the warrant. Hopkins v. Plainfield, 7 Conn. 286; Williams v. Copeland, 5 Allen (Mass.) 209.

79. Abshire v. State, 52 Ind. 99.

Insufficient findings.— Where the justices do not find whether a child alleged to be a bastard was born in wedlock or not, nor whether, if born in wedlock, the facts existed which would still render it a bastard, it was held that there were sufficient grounds for quashing the proceedings. State v. Herman, 35 N. C. 502.

Time of filing.—A certified copy of the proceedings may be filed in the higher court at

A transcript of the proceedings has been held sufficient, though a copy of the complaint[83] or warrant[84] be omitted. While the recognizance for appearance of defendant should be transmitted,[85] it has been held that if there has been a failure to exact such recognizance the appearance may be enforced by a capias.[86]

I. Security For Appearance —1. Necessity. It is generally the duty of the justice, when he finds that there is probable cause to believe that defendant is the father of the child, to require him to give bond for his appearance for trial.[87]

2. Who May Take. The right to take security is generally given to the committing magistrate.[88]

3. Requisites and Validity. If the statute is silent as to the effect of a departure from the prescribed form of bond the principles of the common law will govern.[89] It follows that if there be no material mistake in the substantive matter of the bond, a mere misrecital or informality will not invalidate it.[90]

The neglect of the justice to file a transcript, or even the fact that the papers are lost, does not render it obligatory upon the court to grant a continuance. A new transcript may be substituted, and the testimony which was taken may be proved by parol. Burt v. State, 79 Ind. 359; Hoff v. Fisher, 26 Ohio St. 7. But compare Bingham v. Marcy, 32 Vt. 278, in which case, though the proceedings were admitted to be civil, the rules allowing the filing of a new declaration upon the loss of the original complaint and warrant were held not to be applicable.

New York.— People v. Tilton, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 597. Nor would the validity be affected by the fact that one of the justices before whom the proceedings are had, and the bond given, had been previously employed by defendant as his counsel in the case. People v. Clark, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 214.

There should, however, be a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute.[91]

4. Performance and Breach. A bond conditioned that defendant shall appear and abide the order of the court is not fulfilled by his mere appearance.[92] He must pay such money as the court may order for the maintenance of the child,[93] or give bond for its payment.[94] By the weight of authority his submission to prison, in lieu of security for the performance of the court's final order, will be a discharge.[95] A failure to appear, however, at a different term than that specified is no breach of the bond.[96]

5. Rights and Liabilities of Sureties. Sureties may surrender their principal to the custody of the law, and terminate their liability.[97] To operate as a discharge, however, the surrender must be at the time,[98] and in the manner, pre-

If given under duress the bond will be void. Fisher v. Shattuck, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 252.

Where the justice by mistake takes a recognizance from defendant to indemnify the county against all charges for the maintenance of the child, when in fact defendant desired to, and supposed he did, enter into a recognizance to appear at the circuit court, to contest the charge, equity will grant relief, provided defendant use due diligence in having the mistake corrected. 6. Enforcement — a. In General. The declaration in an action on a bond for appearance should show defendant's default.[3] Proof that the judgment has been fully satisfied is a sufficient defense.[4]

b. Amount of Recovery. The amount recoverable is generally the penal sum named in the bond,[5] with interest from the date of forfeiture.[6]

J. Pleading and Indictment — 1. New or Supplemental Complaint. Under the practice of some states it is customary to file a new or supplemental complaint before going to trial in the higher court.[7] Such complaint should aver all Discharge by compromise of suit.— The judge and clerk before whom a bastardy suit was pending notified the sureties that a settlement had been effected and that no further proceedings would be had. Afterward, by a fraudulent conspiracy between plaintiff and accused, the case was removed to the superior court without the sureties' knowledge. It was held that the filing of the compromise operated to discharge the sureties. Haley v. Whalen, 121 Mass. 533.

K. Evidence —1. Burden of Proof. While the burden of proof to establish paternity is upon complainant,[18] yet where the statute provides that the oath and examination of prosecutrix before the justice shall be prima facie evidence of defendant's guilt, the burden is on defendant to exonerate himself from the charge.[19]

2. Competency of Mother as Witness. At common law, the mother being an interested party, was incompetent as a witness. The rule is changed, however, by the statutes of most, if not all, states,[20] such interest affecting her credibility only.[21]

3. Admissibility — a. In General. Evidence tending to show the motive of complainant in accusing defendant,[22] or evidence tending to show defendant's impotency[23] or an alibi[24] is admissible. But hearsay evidence,[25] or evidence of the mother's financial condition or the child's estate is inadmissible.[26]

People, 41 Mich. 167, 2 N. vious[44] or subsequent intercourse is competent to show the probability of the particular act having occurred,[45] though defendant can only be convicted on proof of the particular act of intercourse charged in the complaint.[46]

f. Preliminary Proceedings. In the absence of a statute making them competent evidence,[47] the complaint, warrant, or recognizance in the proceedings before the justice are inadmissible,[48] except to show the regularity of the proceedings.[49] But the testimony of the complainant taken by the justice may be introduced in evidence.[50]

g. Resemblance of Child to Putative Father. Evidence of the resemblance of the child to the alleged father, being but matter of opinion, is inadmissible.[51] As to the propriety of introducing the child before the jury, and permitting them to consider its resemblance to the alleged father in determining its paternity, the authorities are in conflict. c. Period of Gestation. It is not essential to support a verdict of guilty that the period of gestation was of the usual length if the evidence is otherwise satisfactory in that respect.[58]

L. Trial — 1. Term of Court. The trial should be had before the civil[59] or criminal term of the court,[60] dependent upon the nature of the proceeding in the particular jurisdiction as civil or criminal.

2. Appearance of Defendant — a. Necessity. The trial may be had without the appearance of defendant.[61] Defendant must, however, have some notice of the suit. A proceeding without his having been arrested, or constructively notified by publication, is irregular.[62]

b. Effect. As a rule defendant, by appearing and pleading to the charge, waives his right to object to any defect or irregularity in the prior proceedings in the cause.[63]

Appearance by attorney.— Defendant may, if he choose, appear by attorney, have a jury trial, and introduce and cross-examine witnesses in like manner as if actually present. Stone v. State, 33 Ind. 538.

Regularity of appearance.— Where defendant upon a hearing before a justice was recognized to appear at the next term of the circuit court, and after being defaulted for non-appearance was subsequently brought into court on a bench-warrant, whereupon he recognized for his appearance from day to day, it was held that such proceedings at that term of the court were irregular, and that defendant's recognizance under the bench-warrant could not be taken as an appearance to the case so as to heal the irregularity. An affidavit for a continuance ought to deny the truth of the charge and disclose some defense in bar of the action. Fish v. People, 86 Ill. App. 408. Where the affidavit was because of the absence of a witness who was the servant of a physician, and merely stated that the fact that such servant would testify as stated was made known to affiant by such physician the day before the affidavit was made, and that her name and address were unknown to the affiant but were known to such physician, as affiant was informed and believed, and could be secured for the purpose of obtaining her evidence, it was held that the affidavit failed to show sufficient probability of securing the testimony of such witness. Post v. State, 14 Ind. App. 452, 42 N. E. 1120.

Grounds for continuance.— The absence of a material witness, due diligence being shown, is ground for a continuance. Common v. People, 28 Ill. App. 230. But it is no abuse of discretion to deny a continuance because of the absence of defendant, where there is no showing that he is a necessary witness in his own behalf. Clark v. Carey, 41 Nebr. 780, 60 N. W. 78. Defendant's absence in the army does not entitle him to a continuance. Chandler v. Com., 4 Metc. (Ky.) 66. An objection to a continuance, because of the absence of a witness whose testimony if objected to would be inadmissible, sufficiently shows a purpose to object to such testimony, and the continuance should not be granted. A statement by counsel in opening that "the object of this bastardy statute is to prevent bastard children from being thrown on the county for support, and to make the father of bastard children support them" is but the statement of an inference, and no ground for reversal. not, however, be argumentative;[73] it must not confine or limit the consideration of the jury to a part only of the testimony;[74] it must not pass on the credibility of the witnesses;[75] and it must not express or suggest an opinion of fact.[76] If evidence of an attempt to compromise has been introduced the jury should be instructed that an offer of compromise should not be regarded as an admission of guilt.[77]

8. QUESTIONS FOR JURY. The paternity of the child being the fact to be determined by the jury[78] the credibility of the witnesses,[79] the opportunities for intercourse,[80] the duration of the period of gestation,[81] and the fact that a bastard child has been born[82] are all matters which may be considered by them in arriving at their verdict.

9. VERDICT. A verdict which in substance finds defendant guilty of being the father of the child is sufficient.[83]

M. New Trial. The court may set aside the verdict on the ground that it is against the weight of evidence and grant a new trial.[84] A new trial may also

Nor is a verdict that defendant is the reputed father a sufficient finding. Devinney v. State, Wright (Ohio) 564. Where, however, the statute provided that the issue submitted should be whether defendant is the father of the child, but the court submitted as an issue whether defendant was the father "of said child," and the verdict followed the language of the issue submitted, it was held that the plea and verdict should be referred to the complaint and the irregularity disregarded. be granted for newly discovered evidence which is not cumulative in its character.[85]

N. Judgment — 1. Form of Judgment. A substantial compliance with the statute as to the form of the judgment is sufficient.[86] If the statute determines with certainty who the plaintiff must be it is not error if the entry omits to state in whose favor the judgment is rendered.[87]

2. Award For Support and Expenses — a. Amount of Award. While the maximum amount which defendant may be adjudged to pay for the support of the child is often fixed by the statute,[88] the amount of the award, if below such sum, or if no provision be made, is within the sound discretion of the court.[89] In

Life of child.— While it is proper for the judgment to expressly limit defendant's liability, within the time prescribed by the order, to so long only as the child shall live (Judson v. Blanchard, 3 Conn. 579), yet such limitation is unnecessary to its validity. A judgment omitting such proviso is valid, the obligation being terminated by implication upon the death of the child (Rindskopf v. State, 34 Wis. 217).

Time of payment.—It is not necessary that the exact time of payment be specified. Page v. Com., 1 Litt. (Ky.) 157. Under a statute providing that if the mother be indigent the justices shall specify in the order of filiation, "the sum to be paid by the defendant for her support during her confinement and recovery" the order need not specify to whom the money for the support of the mother shall be paid. The amount would be properly payable to the overseers of the poor. People v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 618, 39 N. Y. St. 716.

2. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY. The bond must be so framed as to effect the object contemplated.[9] Though not in conformity to statute it may be good as a common-law bond,[10] but it should not contain requirements not authorized by the statute.[11]

3. LIABILITY ON BOND — a. In General. Defendant cannot relieve himself from his liability by any agreement which he may make with other persons for the support of the child,[12] nor will the mother's removal from the state,[13] or his demand for the custody of the child, and an offer to support it,[14] discharge him. Q. Review of Proceedings — 1. In General. In jurisdictions where the proceeding is considered as civil, the rules governing appeals in civil cases usually apply[21] in the absence of special statutory provisions regulating a review.[22] Statutes limiting the right of appeal by the state apply, however, in jurisdictions where the proceeding is considered criminal.[23]

2. Modes of Review. A review may be had by appeal,[24] writ of error,[25] or certiorari,[26] depending upon the practice or statutes of the particular state.

fendant. Bordentown Tp. v. Wallace, 50 N. J. L. 13, 11 Atl. 267. So a defense that the father had made provisions for the child, of which the town had notice, is insufficient, unless it be shown that the child was in the custody of the town and that its officers refused to allow the father to support it. Lyman v. Lull, 4 N. H. 495.

Though statutes relating to the support of bastards do not have a retroactive effect (Wheelwright v. Greer, 10 Allen (Mass.) 389; People v. Superintendents of Poor, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 116), the method of enforcing the father's liability for support may be changed, and applied where the child is born after the change, though begotten before (Willetts v. Jeffries, 5 Kan. 470; State v. Hughes, 8 S. D. 338, 66 N. W. 1076; State v. Bunker, 7 S. D. 639, 65 N. W. 33).

18. Mong v. State, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 380; Ex p. Harrington, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 203.

Form of scire facias upon a recognizance to support a bastard child is set out in Mong v. State, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 380.

19. Gillin v. Pence, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 304; Bell v. Chapell, 2 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 151, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 485; Freeman v. Batchelder, 36 Vt. 292.

Statutory remedy not exclusive.— A statute giving a particular and summary remedy against the father alone on a bastardy bond does not impair the common-law right to sue all or either of the obligors. Justices v. Stewart, 18 N. C. 412.

Where the bond is not in conformity to the statute, enforcement by motion under the statute is improper. Thompson v. Buckhannon, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 416; Thompson v. Com., 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 484.

20. Corson v. Dunlap, 83 Me. 32, 21 Atl. 173, 12 L. R. A. 90 [modifying Brett v. Murphy, 80 Me. 358, 14 Atl. 934; Philbrook v. Burgess, 52 Me. 271]; Barnes v. Chase, 128 Mass. 211; McGrath v. Conway, 116 Mass. 360. And see Freeman v. Batchelder, 35 Vt. 13.

Judgment for the penalty stands as a security for the payment of future instalments. Roll v. Maxwell, 5 N. J. L. 580. Thus where an instalment was due when the writ issued, but an affidavit of defense was filed showing that all the costs and instalments had been paid before it was filed, judgment was nevertheless issued for the penalty, to stand as security for future performance of the conditions. Com. v. Hoch, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 332.

Minnesota.— State v. Klitzke, 46 Minn. 343, 49 N. W. 54.

New Jersey.—Hildreth v. Overseers of Poor, 13 N. J. L. 5.

North Carolina.— State v. Edwards, 110 N. C. 511, 14 S. E. 741; State v. Crouse, 86 N. C. 617; State v. Wilkie, 85 N. C. 513.

See 6 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bastards," § 229.

The proceeding, though civil, is not an action "ex-contractu" nor is the judgment a penalty within the meaning of a general statute regulating appeals in such suits. Common v. People, 137 Ill. 601, 27 N. E. 533; Scharf v. People, 134 Ill. 240, 24 N. E. 761 [overruling Rawlings v. People, 102 Ill. 475].

22. Oneal v. State, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 214. See also People v. Lindsay, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 234, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 38, 25 N. Y. St. 519.

23. State v. Bruce, 122 N. C. 1040, 30 S. E. 141; State v. Ballard, 122 N. C. 1024, 29 S. E. 899; State v. Ostwalt, 118 N. C. 1208, 24 S. E. 660, 32 L. R. A. 396.

Special verdict.— A finding by a justice that defendant had intercourse with prosecutrix; that eight months thereafter she was delivered of a child, the result of such intercourse; that the child was living; and that the justice did not believe an eight months' child could live, is not a special verdict, and the acquittal of defendant was not an erroneous judgment of law on a special verdict, from which the state could appeal. State v. Bruce, 122 N. C. 1040, 30 S. E. 141.

24. Appeal.— State v. Cassidy, 38 N. J. L. 437; People v. Ontario County Ct. Sess., 45 Hun (N. Y.) 54; State v. Ledbetter, 26 N. C. 242. See, generally, Appeal and Error, 2 Cyc. 474.

25. Writ of error.— Peak v. People, 76 Ill. 289; People v. Noxon, 40 Ill. 30; Heikes v. Com., 26 Pa. St. 513; State v. Mushied, 12 Wis. 561. See, generally, Appeal and Error, 2 Cyc. 474.

The general statute must be complied with in the procurement of the writ. Bond v. State, 34 Fla. 45, 15 So. 591.

26. Certiorari.— Delaware.—Cloud v. State, 2 Harr. (Del.) 361.

Massachusetts.— Com. v. Moore, 3 Pick.

3. Decisions Reviewable. A judgment of a justice that defendant be discharged is a final adjudication from which an appeal may be taken.[27]

4. Bonds. When the state appeals from a judgment no appeal-bond is necessary.[28]

5. Scope and Extent of Review. It will be presumed upon appeal, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that the statutory requirements have been complied with and that the proceedings are regular.[29] Matters discretionary with the trial court will not be reviewed.[30] So error without prejudice in the admission or exclusion of evidence is not ground for reversal.[31] And a finding by the jury will not be set aside as against the weight of the evidence unless in a very clear case.[32]

An order refusing to dismiss the proceeding does not terminate the action and prevent judgment, and is therefore not appealable. Hobbs v. Beckwith, 6 Ohio St. 252.

If the power of the justice be limited to a mere hearing of the cause, and a requirement of security for appearance, and he has no power either to acquit or convict, his discharge of defendant after examination is not a final adjudication and is not reviewable. State v. Linton, 42 Minn. 32, 43 N. W. 571.

28. Dibble v. State, 48 Ind. 470; Risk v. State, 19 Ind. 152; Neff v. State, 3 Ind. 564; Walker v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 1.

In the absence of statutory requirements an appeal-bond in bastardy should be conditioned on the payment of all costs and charges awarded against defendant on appeal, and in case of dismissal of the appeal or of affirmance of the judgment, on defendant's abiding by and performing the judgment or surrendering himself a prisoner in execution thereof. State v. Allrick, 63 Minn. 328, 65 N. W. 639.

Insufficient bond.— Where the appeal-bond given by defendant is, by non-compliance with the statute (People v. Lindsay, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 234, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 38, 25 N. Y. St. 519; Ramsey v. Childs, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 329), or by a failure to describe the judgment rendered or show any undertaking for the costs (Williams v. State, 26 Ala. 85), rendered invalid, the appeal should be dismissed.

The mother, as relator, may have the right of appeal without giving security upon affidavit in forma pauperis. Oneal v. State, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 214. Likewise the writ of recordari, as a substitute for an appeal, may be issued without requiring security from prosecutrix, where the appeal is lost through fault and neglect of the justice. R. Costs —1. In General. The disposition of costs depends upon statutory provisions with express reference to the proceeding,[33] or upon its analogy to actions wherein costs are awarded by a general provision of the statute.[34]

2. Persons Liable. The person upon whom the paternity of the child is fixed is usually held liable for the costs.[35] While defendant upon acquittal should not be held for the costs,[36] the proceeding, though often prosecuted in the name of the state, is civil in the sense that upon acquittal the costs cannot be taxed against the state.[37]

3. Amount of Award. The award should include only such costs as may be properly taxed.[38]

A pardon by the governor of a person convicted of fornication and bastardy, when pleaded before sentence, discharges defendant from liability for costs. Com. v. Ahl, 43 Pa. St. 53.

36. State v. Pate, 47 N. C. 14.

In Nebraska a defendant may be adjudged to pay the costs notwithstanding his acquittal. Jones v. State, 14 Nebr. 210, 14 N. W. 901.

Dismissal of proceeding.— Where prosecutrix, pending the proceeding, files a statement admitting that provision has been made for the support of the child and dismisses the suit, a judgment against defendant for costs is error. Dodd v. State, 30 Ind. 76.

37. State v. Blackburn, 61 Ark. 407, 33 S. W. 529; Gleason v. McPherson County, 30 Kan. 53, 492, 1 Pac. 384, 2 Pac. 644.

Liability of county.— The county cannot be considered a party in interest to the extent of being held liable for the costs. McAndrew v. Madison County, 67 Iowa 54, 24 N. W. 590.

Liability of mother.— In Kentucky the mother is not liable in any event for costs. Francis v. Com., 3 Bush (Ky.) 4. In Vermont it has been held that a general statute which provides "that when any person after causing process to be served upon another, shall discontinue the action or become nonsuit therein, the costs of defendant may be recovered against such plaintiff," includes an action of bastardy, and costs against complainant upon being nonsuited are properly awarded. Allard v. Bingham, 8 Vt. 470. Under a provision of the bastardy act, however, if the discontinuance be by reason of miscarriage defendant is not entitled to costs. Eagan v. Bergen, 56 Vt. 589.

38. Mayham v. Allen, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 343, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 100, 19 N. Y. St. 811; Fellows v. Lane, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 435; Superintendents of Poor v. Moore, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 273.

In New York the clerk, and not the court, should tax the costs. Fellows v. Lane, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 435.

Attorney's fees may be taxed as costs. Neary v. Robinson, 98 N. Y. 81 [reversing 27 Hun (N. Y.) 145]. Contra, Abshire v. State, 52 Ind. 99; Sperger v. State, 32 Wis. 400.

Enforcement of award.— Execution in the form usual in civil cases is a proper mode of enforcing a judgment for costs. Young v. Makepeace, 108 Mass. 233. And see Goddard v. Com., 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 282.

BASTARDUS NON POTEST HABERE HÆREDEM NISI DE CORPORE SUO LEGITIME PROCREATUM. A maxim meaning "A bastard can have no heir unless it be one lawfully begotten of his own body."[1]

BASTARDY. The offense of begetting an illegitimate child;[2] the state or condition of a bastard.[3] (See, generally, BASTARDS.)

BASTARDY PROCESS. The method prescribed by statute for proceeding against the putative father of a bastard to procure a proper maintenance therefor.[4] (See, generally, BASTARDS.)

BATTERY. See ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

BATTURE. A marine term, used to denote a bottom of sand, stone, or rock mixed together, and rising towards the surface of the water; but in its grammatical sense, as a technical word, and in common parlance, an elevation of the bed of a river, under the surface of the water, since it is rising towards it — although sometimes used to denote the same elevation of the bank, when it has risen above the surface of the water, or is as high as the land on the outside of the bank;[7] alluvion; land formed by accretion.[8] (Batture: Ownership of, see NAVIGABLE WATERS; WATERS.)

BAWD. One who procures opportunities for persons of opposite sexes to cohabit in an illicit manner.[9] (See, generally, PROSTITUTION.)

BAWDY-HOUSE. A house of ill-fame, kept for the resort and convenience of lewd people of both sexes;[10] a house of ill-fame, kept for the resort and unlawful commerce of lewd people of both sexes;[11] a house used for lewdness and prostitution; a brothel.[12] (See, generally, DISORDERLY HOUSES.)

BAY.[13] An opening into the land where the water is shut in on all sides except at the entrance;[14] an inlet of the sea;[15] an arm of the sea, distinct from a river;[16] a bending or curving of the shore of the sea or of a lake;[17] a pond-head made of a great height to keep in water for the supply of a mill, etc.[18]

BAYLEY. An old form of BAILIFF,[19] q. v.

BAYOU. An outlet from a swamp, pond, or lagoon to a river or the sea.[20]

BEHRING SEA FISHERIES. See Fish and Game.

BEING. Existing in a certain state,[72] but sometimes taken in the future tense.[73]

BELIEF.[74] A persuasion of the truth, or an assent of the mind to the truth of a declaration, proposition, or alleged fact;[75] a persuasion of the truth of a fact, formed in the way of inference from some other fact;[76] an actual conclusion drawn from information;[77] partial assurance without positive knowledge or absolute certainty.[78] (Belief: Affidavits on Information and, see Affidavits; Attachment; Discovery; New Trial. As to Age of — Female as Defense to Abduction, see Abduction; Infant as Defense to Sale of Intoxicating Liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors. As to Legality of Marriage as Affecting Adultery, see Adultery.)

BELIEVE.[79] To put credit or confidence in the veracity of testimony;[80] to apprehend;[81] to find;[82] to satisfy;[83] to suppose;[84] to think;[85] to understand.[86]

BELLIGERENCY. See War.

BELLO PARTA CEDUNT REIPUBLICÆ. A maxim meaning "Things acquired in war belong to the state."[87]

74. Degrees of belief.—"Without recurring to the books of metaphysicians, let any man of plain common sense, examine the operations of his own mind, he will assuredly find that on different subjects his belief is different. I have a firm belief that the moon revolves 'round the earth. I may believe, too, that there are mountains and valleys in the moon; but this belief is not so strong, because the evidence is weaker. I firmly believe that Bonaparte is in the island of St. Helena, but as to the state of his health, I may have my belief, but it cannot be called firm, because the evidence is not clear." Tilghman, C. J., in Thompson v. White, 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 135, 137.

Distinguished from "intention."— See 3 Cyc. 1047, note 41.

Distinguished from "knowledge."—Between "belief" and "knowledge" "the difference is, after all, nothing more than in the degree of certainty. With regard to things which make not a very deep impression on the memory, it may be called 'belief.' 'Knowledge' is nothing more than a man's firm belief. The difference is ordinarily merely in the degree." Hatch v. Carpenter, 9 Gray (Mass.) 271, 274. See also Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Reynolds, 124 U. S. 374, 8 S. Ct. 598, 31 L. ed. 466.

Distinguished from "opinion."—"An opinion is not the exact equivalent of a belief. It may be simply a judgment formed upon a given statement of facts, which will yield when the facts stated disappear." Curley v. Com., 84 Pa. St. 151, 156. But see Day v. Southwell, 3 Wis. 657, 661, where it is said: "The nice philological distinctions between the words, 'opinion' and 'belief,' are too subtle and refined to form a basis on which to ground substantial justice."

79. Distinguished from "imagine."—"It imports a more certain and fixed conviction to say I believe, than it does to say I imagine." Giddens v. Mirk, 4 Ga. 364, 370.

Distinguished from "presume."— "Presume" is a weaker term, "for it means, according to the lexicons, to believe without examination." Hammock v. McBride, 6 Ga. 178, 184.

Distinguished from "suspect."—"The words 'suspect,' and 'believe' are not technical words, and have not, by the approved usage of the language, the same meaning. . . . 'Suspecting is not believing.' 'That may be a ground for suspicion, which will not induce belief.'" Com. v. Certain Lottery Tickets, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 369, 373 [quoting Smith v. Boucher. See Hardw. 62, 69, Ridg. t. 16. Garrett v. St. Louis, 25 Mo. 505, 511, 69 Am. Dec. 475.

"The word 'benefits,' when used unqualifiedly, is a comprehensive term, including direct or special benefits, and indirect or general. But when the connection in which it is used, and the subject matter to which it is applied, are such as to indicate that it is used in a limited or qualified sense, it is the duty of the court to give it that interpretation." Ferguson v. Stamford, 60 Conn. 432, 446, 22 Atl. 782.

"The term 'general benefits,' when unqualified, should probably be accepted in the same sense as the term 'common benefits'; that is to say, when there is no limitation expressed, it should be deemed applicable to the general public rather than as embracing as general but a limited part of the public." Kirkendall v. Omaha, 39 Nebr. 1, 6, 57 N. W. 752.

"The term 'special benefits' implies benefits such as are conferred especially upon private property by public improvement, as distinguished from such benefits as the general public is entitled to receive therefrom. In common with the general public the owner of adjacent property is entitled to travel upon an improved highway, and although by reason of the improvement such travel may be rendered easier or more pleasant, yet the benefit is general, because it is enjoyed by the public in common with the owners of adjacent property. If the improvement should result in an increase in the value to adjacent property, which increase is enjoyed by other adjacent property owners as to the property of each exclusively, the benefit is special, and it is none the less so because several adjacent lot owners derive in like manner special benefits each to his own individual property." Kirkendall v. Omaha, 39 Nebr. 1, 7, 57 N. W. 752.

19. Century Dict.

"Benevolence is wider than charity in its legal signification." Thomson v. Norris, 20 N. J. Eq. 489, 523.

20. Distinguished from "charitable."— It is a word of larger meaning than "charitable" (St. Joseph's Hospital Assoc. v. Ashland County, 96 Wis. 636, 639, 72 N. W. 43), even when coupled with it (De Camp v. Dobbins, 31 N. J. Eq. 671, 695 [affirming 29 N. J. Eq. 36], where Beasley, C. J., said: "Nor can I go with that process of reasoning that concludes that when the word 'benevolent' is conjoined to the word 'charitable' the two words become identical in meaning, as that implies that one of the terms is to be dispensed with, or that the lesser term swallows up the larger one"). which has been defined as meaning "well-wishing;[21] intended for the conferring of benefits as distinguished from the making of profit."[22] (Benevolent: Associations or Societies, see MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE. Purposes, Bequests For, see CHARITIES.)

BENIGNÆ FACIENDÆ SUNT INTERPRETATIONES, PROPTER SIMPLICITATEM LAICORUM UT RES MAGIS VALEAT QUAM PEREAT; ET VERBA INTENTIONI, NON E CONTRA, DEBENT IN SERVIRE. A maxim meaning "A liberal construction should be put upon written instruments, so as to uphold them, if possible, and carry into effect the intention of the parties."[23]

BENIGNIOR SENTENTIA IN VERBIS GENERALIBUS SEU DUBIIS EST PREFERENDA. A maxim meaning "Of general or doubtful words, the more liberal interpretation is preferred."[24]

BENIGNIUS LEGES INTERPRETANDÆ SUNT QUO VOLUNTAS EARUM CONSERVETUR. A maxim meaning "Laws are to be more liberally interpreted, in order that their intent may be preserved."[25]

BENZINE. A liquid consisting mainly of the lighter and more volatile hydrocarbons of petroleum, used as a solvent and for cleaning soiled fabrics.[26] (See, generally, FIRE INSURANCE.)

BEQUEATH. To give by will.[27]

BEQUEST. A gift of personal property by will;[28] but it may mean "any gift by will whether it consists of personal or real property."[29] (See, generally, CHARITIES; WILLS.)

BERM-BANK. The bank or side of a canal which is opposite to the tow-path.[30]

BESIDES. In addition to; over and above; outside of; separately from.[31]

BESOT. To stupefy; to make dull or senseless; to make to dote.[32]

BEST. Of the highest quality, excellence, or standing.[33] (Best: Evidence, see CRIMINAL LAW; EVIDENCE.)

I. DEFINITION.

Bigamy is the wilfully and knowingly contracting a second marriage when the contracting party knows that the first is still subsisting;[1] the state of a man who has two wives, or of a woman who has two husbands, living at the same time;[2] and in canon law the marriage of a second wife after the death of the first, or the marriage of a widow, either of which was considered as bringing a man under some incapacities for ecclesiastical offices.[3]

II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

A. Nature. At common law bigamy was considered as an offense of ecclesiastical cognizance exclusively, and not punishable by an ordinary common-law tribunal;[4] but by statute[5] the benefit of clergy was taken away from the "Polygamy" is a more just term to use as denoting the state referred to in the text, since bigamy properly signifies being twice married (Scoggins v. State, 32 Ark. 205, 211 [citing 1 Russell Crimes, 186, note a]; Com. v. McNerny, 10 Phila. offense; and during the existence of that statute the ecclesiastical offense was frequently used as the subject of counterplea, in the common-law courts, to a claim of the benefit of clergy in the prosecution of clergyable offenses.[6] Later, however, bigamy was by statute declared to be no longer an impediment to receiving the benefit of clergy,[7] and this was the state of the law upon the subject until more modern times,[8] when bigamy was made a felony punishable in the civil courts.[9] As this statute was limited in its operation to England and Wales it was at a very early period reënacted, generally with some modifications, in all the colonies;[10] was expressly continued after the Revolution by many states of the United States;[11] and is still in force, unless repealed or modified by some positive legislation.[12]

B. Elements of Offense — 1. In General. To constitute the offense of bigamy there must have been a prior valid marriage,[13] coupled with an entering,

11. In the District of Columbia the English statute was in modified force until the act of congress of July 1, 1862, c. 126, revised and incorporated in U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5352, which is a full substitute in every respect for the English statute, except as regards the grade of the offense, which is, under the act of congress, a misdemeanor. Knight v. U. S., 6 App. Cas. (D. C.) 1. But see U. S. v. Crawford, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 319, holding this statute and amendments thereto inapplicable in the District of Columbia.

In Maryland the English statute is modified with respect to the punishment but not as to the grade of the offense. Barber v. State, 50 Md. 161. See also U. S. v. Jennegen, 4 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 118, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,474.

In North Carolina the law, which declared the offense to be a felony, was enacted in 1790, and found its prototype in the English statute. In 1854 bigamy was made a misdemeanor, but in 1884 again became a felony. State v. Burns, 90 N. C. 707.

In Virginia the English statute was reënacted. Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244 [affirming 1 Utah 226].

Constitutionality of statutes.— The constitutional provision against the making of laws respecting religion is not violated by U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5352, defining and providing for the punishment of bigamy. Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244 [affirming 1 Utah 226]. See also Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 10 S. the country where the second marriage is celebrated is a question of no importance.[20]

b. Time and Place of. The time when, and the place at which, the prior marriage took place are not material ingredients of the offense,[21] because the second marriage alone is unlawful, the first having nothing criminal in it, and being merely of a transitory nature.[22]

3. Subsequent Marriage — a. Validity of. The second marriage is always void.[23] Whether, however, the second marriage must be one which, but for the suit, would have been as binding as that one, is a point upon which the authorities differ; the weight of authority being that, where the form of ceremony of marriage with another person is gone through, there is a sufficient marriage on which to predicate a charge of bigamy.[24] This does not mean, however, that any fan-

Where parties to second marriage are incapacitated to contract marriage.— The ground on which the subsequent marriage is penal is that it involves a breach of public decency and morals, and creates a public scandal by the prostitution of a solemn ceremony, which the law allows only to be applied to a legitimate union, to a marriage at best but colorable and fictitious, and which may be made, and too often is made, the means of tastic form of marriage to which a person might think proper to resort would be sufficient.[25]

b. Place of. The place where the second marriage was performed is material, since by the common law the place only in which the criminal marriage was solemnized has jurisdiction.[26] Where, however, the statutes so provide, the place of the second marriage is not important, and it may have been solemnized elsewhere than within the jurisdiction of the country or state where the charge of bigamy is made.[27]

c. Cohabitation — (I) In General. Cohabitation under the second marriage is not requisite, but the offense of bigamy is created when the second marriage is completed.[28]

(II) Under Edmunds-Tucker Act. The fact of cohabitation, whether ostensible or secret, is, under the Edmunds-Tucker law, the gist of that clause of the act which deals with polygamy.[29]

4. Intent. A criminal intent is not essential to the crime of bigamy,[30] no other intent being necessary to support a conviction for bigamy than that which must be inferred from the fact of a party marrying a second time, with a knowledge that the first consort is still alive, or with no reasonable belief in his or her death.[31] the most cruel and wicked deception. It is obvious that the breach and the scandal involved in such a proceeding will not be the less because the parties to the second marriage may be under some special incapacity to contract marriage. The deception will not be the less atrocious because the one party may have induced the other to go through a form of marriage known to be generally binding but inapplicable to their particular case. Reg. v. Allen, L. R. 1 C. C. 367, 12 Cox C. C. 193, 41 L. J. M. C. 97, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 664, 20 Wkly. Rep. 756. See also People v. Brown, 34 Mich. 339, 22 Am. Rep. 531, where it was argued that if the second marriage took place between parties who, if single, would be incapable of contracting marriage, defendant could not be said to have been married the second time at all, and Cooley, C. J., said that the court could not understand of what importance it could be "that there are two elements of illegality in the case instead of one, or why the party should be relieved from the consequences of violating one statute because the act of doing so was a violation of another also."

III. DEFENSES.

A. In General. The person accused may defend by showing the absence of one or more of the constituent elements of the offense.[32]

B. Ignorance of Law. Ignorance of the law is not a defense.[33]

C. Religious Belief. A belief that it is not wrong to have two or more wives at the same time is not a defense.[34]

IV. PROSECUTION.

A. Who May Make Complaint. It seems well established that, unless the statutes regard the first husband or wife as a competent witness against the other,[35] no complaint for bigamy may be made by either of them as the case may be.[36]

B. Limitations Upon. A statute of limitation begins to run upon the completion of the second marriage, or when the offense becomes known;[37] and the prosecution must be commenced within the statutory limit or it will be barred.[38]

C. Indictment, Information, or Complaint[39]— 1. In General — a. (II) Existence of Former Spouse. It should be stated positively that the first wife or husband was alive at the date of the second marriage,[56] unless it is alleged that a lawful marriage relation still exists.[57] It is unnecessary to allege that the former marriage was binding at the time of the second, if the fact of the first spouse being alive is alleged.[58]

d. With Force and Arms. It does not seem necessary to allege that the offense was committed with force and arms.[59]

e. Subsequent Marriage — (I) In General. The indictment must allege a second marriage,[60] and, both at common law and under statute, that the second marriage was unlawful.[61]

(II) Time and Place of. The time and place of the second marriage should be alleged,[62] the time being laid as of a date prior to the indictment.[63]

(III) Description of Second Spouse. Generally the second husband or wife must be so described as to be capable of identification, but where the name of the second husband or wife is alleged in a particular manner, and the proof shows a different name by which such a person can be identified the allegation is sufficient.[64] Under statutes, however, making it bigamy to marry "any other person" within a certain time after a divorce is obtained from a former spouse it must be alleged that the second wife or husband is "any other person" from the first one.[65]

f. Conclusion. The indictment should conclude contra formam statuti[66] and against the peace, etc.[67]

D. Competency of Witnesses — 1. At Common Law. On a trial for bigamy the true spouse cannot be a witness either for[68] or against[69] defendant, but the marriage,[85] and although made before the second marriage;[86] but defendant's declarations made in his own favor with regard to the first marriage, where no part of the res gestæ or of any statement or conversation called out by the prosecution, are not admissible for the defense.[87]

(B) As to Subsequent Marriage. Admissions of a second or polygamous marriage are admissible to prove such marriage,[88] or to corroborate proof of the fact of such marriage.[89]

(III) Conduct — (A) In General. The conduct of defendant toward the women he married before the time stated in the indictment is admissible to show the relation which he bore to them during that time.[90]

(B) Cohabitation. Cohabitation with a woman as his wife is admissible as evidence of the first marriage,[91] or of a polygamous marriage.[92]

(IV) Reputation. General reputation in a community[93] of the existence of a marriage relation may be admitted as tending to prove such relation.[94]

b. Documentary Evidence — (I) Divorce Proceedings. A valid decree of divorce may be admitted to show the marriage,[95] and a petition for divorce filed by defendant against the first spouse is admissible to show a prior marriage[96] or that the former spouse was alive when the bigamous marriage was contracted.[97]

See 6 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bigamy," § 43.

Admissions relative to certificate of foreign marriage.— Where a paper purporting to be a certificate of marriage to defendant's first wife and to contain a record that a child by such wife had been circumcised was shown to defendant, who thereupon admitted that he had been wrong and said that he would procure a divorce, it was held that an English translation of the paper, with evidence as to the admissions, were admissible against him. (II) Letters. Letters written by defendant are admissible against him to show the relation that defendant bore to the first spouse,[98] after they have been properly identified by the person receiving them.[99]

(III) Marriage License and Certificate. The marriage license is admissible as corroborative evidence of the marriage.[1] So a certificate of marriage is admissible against defendant when made so by statute,[2] if properly authenticated under statutory requirements.[3]

(IV) Marriage Records. Record proof of a marriage is admissible[4] where such records are kept in accordance with statutory requirements.[5]

c. Weight and Sufficiency — (I) Admissions, Declarations, and Reputation. It has been said that the first marriage must be established by positive proof of the very fact of marriage,[6] as distinguished from a marriage that may be inferred from circumstances,[7] in the event of such proof being obtainable.[8] The authorities, however, are not in unison as to whether admissions, reputation, and cohabitation are respectively sufficient to establish such marriage,[9] but it seems

I. Definition.

Blasphemy, according to the most concise definition, is the malicious reviling of God or religion.[1] It consists in reviling God or in wantonly or maliciously

1. People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335.

Etymologically, to blaspheme is to speak ill or evil of. Anderson L. Dict.; Century Dict.

Blackstone, according to his usual mode of describing each offense in the shortest possible terms in which it may be made intelligible, speaks of it as "blasphemy against the Almighty, by denying his being or providence." 4 Bl. Comm. 59 [cited in Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 206].

Bouvier thus defines blasphemy, "To attribute to God that which is contrary to his nature, and does not belong to him, and to deny what does. A false reflection uttered with a malicious design of reviling God." Bouvier L. Dict. (Rawles ed.).

Profanity distinguished.— Blasphemy and profanity agree in expressing the irreverent use of words, but the former is the stronger and the latter the wider. Profanity is language irreverent toward God or holy things, covering especially all oaths that, literally interpreted, treat lightly the attributes or acts of God. Blasphemy is generally more direct, intentional, and defiant in its impiety, and is directed toward the most sacred things in religion. Century Dict. It is in this latter sense that blasphemy is considered here. Yet the expression is also sometimes used as characterizing terms employed by one who is charged with profanity or profane cursing, in the sense of profanity as above interpreted, as where the charge is of profanely and blasphemously swearing in a public place, it being obvious that the offense charged is not a direct attempt to revile the Deity, or the christian religion, and that the contempt into which these sacred things are brought by the use of the language employed is only an incident to the actual offense. See, for example, Young v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 165; State v. Steele, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 135; State v. Graham, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 133. In Com. v. Spratt, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 365, 37 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 234, the indictment charged that the defendant "did wickedly, wilfully, premeditatedly and despitefully, utter and with a loud voice, and in the presence and hearing of divers of the citizens of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania aforesaid, did publicly and proclaim of and concerning Jesus Christ, the false, scandalous, malicious, wicked, and blasphemous words following, to wit, Jesus Christ, to the great dishonor and contempt of Almighty God," and this was said to be an indictment for blasphemy.

But in this state there were two statutes, one against profanity, the other against blasphemy, the former providing a punishment for persons over a certain age who should "profanely curse or swear by the name of God, Jesus Christ, or the Holy Ghost," and the latter providing a punishment for any person who should "wilfully, premeditatedly and despitefully, blaspheme or speak wilfully and profanely of Almighty God, Jesus Christ, the Holy Ghost, or the Scriptures of Truth," and in Com. v. Linn, 158 Pa. St. 22, 27 Atl. 843, 22 L. R. A. 353, upon an indictment charging that the defendant "did, on the public streets and highways, profanely curse and swear and take the name of God in vain, to the evil example and to the common nuisance," etc., it was held that the indictment could not be sustained under the statute against blasphemy, because it did not charge that offense; that it could not be sustained under the statute against profanity, because it was not framed under that act, and that it could not be sustained as charging a common-law offense, because it did not charge the facts and circumstances necessary to make the swearing a common nuisance. These kindred offenses, however, seem to be punishable upon the same general principle. "The general doctrine seems to be, that, under one name or another, every oral or written representation whereby men's reverence for the Power which controls them and the world is ruthlessly shocked or impaired, is indictable at the common law." 2 Bishop New Crim. L. § 76 note. See also infra, note 5; BREACH OF THE PEACE; DISORDERLY CONDUCT; PROFANITY.

Relaxation of oaths.—In Reg. v. Hetherington, 5 Jur. 529, it was argued that to cast disgrace upon the old testament was not blasphemy, because it was no longer necessary that witnesses should be sworn on the bible or new testament, but the court held that this proposition could not be acceded to without saying that there was no mode by which religion holds society together but by the administration of oaths, which is not so.

Illustrations of blasphemous language.—"Jesus Christ was a bastard, and his mother must be a whore." People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335, where it was held that these words import wantonness and a wicked and malicious disposition in their utterance, and that after conviction it will be intended that the words were so uttered, and were not uttered in a serious discussion upon any controverted point in religion.

"Christ is a whoremaster, and religion is a cheat, and profession a cloak, . . . fear neither God, Devil, nor man: . . . Christ is a bastard, and damn all Gods of the Quakers," etc. Rex v. Tayler, 3 Keb. 607, Vent. 293.

"The virgin Mary was a whore and Jesus Christ was a bastard." State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553.

A publication stating Jesus Christ to be an impostor and a murderer in principle. Rex v. Waddington, 1 B. & C. 26, 8 E. C. L. 12, in which case it seems the court dealt particularly with the question whether the offense was punishable as a temporal one, but before the verdict was pronounced one of the jurors asked whether a work which denied the divinity of Christ was a libel, and the court answered that the work speaking of Jesus Christ in the language used in the publication in question was a libel, christianity being a part of the law of the land. But see Rex v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox C. C. 217, infra, notes 9, 10.

Discourses on the miracles of Christ in which defendant maintained that they were not to be taken in a literal sense but that the whole religion of the life of Christ in the new testament was an allegorical one. Rex v. Woolston, Fitzg. 64, 2 Str. 834. And in Cowan v. Milbourn, L. R. 2 Exch. 230, 36 L. J. Exch. 124, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 290, 15 Wkly. Rep. 750, it was held that a discourse maintaining that the character of Christ is defective and his teachings misleading and that the bible is no more inspired than any other book is blasphemy, and that therefore a contract to let rooms could be avoided by defendant who is sued thereon, where the purpose of plaintiff was to use the rooms for the purpose of delivering such lectures.

In Nayler's Case, 5 How. St. Tr. 802, in 1656, defendant was convicted of horrid blasphemy, in a proceeding in the house of commons, for having assumed the gesture, words, honor, worship, and miracles of the blessed Saviour, and the names and incommunicable attributes and titles of the blessed Saviour. A part of his offense consisted in having ridden through a town, his company spreading their garments and singing "Holy, Holy" before him, and going bareheaded before his horse.

Updegraph v. Com., 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394. And in Reg. v. Petcherini, 7 Cox C. C. 79, the defendant was convicted upon an indictment charging him with having contemptuously and blasphemously burned and destroyed a certain authorized version of the holy scriptures, it appearing that the only fact submitted to the jury was whether any copy of the holy scriptures or any bible of the authorized version was burned, the court holding that any conduct tending to bring christianity or the christian religion into disrespect or to expose it to hatred and contempt is an offense both

II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS.

A. Written or Oral. The writing, printing, and publishing of blasphemous language will constitute blasphemous libel.[3] But while the libel may be technically a distinct offense from blasphemy committed by spoken words, and may be differently charged, yet the same act may be, and often does, constitute both offenses, and the charge of blasphemy may be predicated of words written as well as of words spoken orally.[4]

B. Temporal Common-Law Offense — 1. In General. Blasphemy is not punished in temporal courts as an offense against God, but is treated independently of religious establishment as affecting the essential interests of civil society only; as imperiling the good order of society, or as tending directly to a breach of the against God and the common law of the land.

Publication of Paine's Age of Reason. Williams' Case, 26 How. St. Tr. 654, 655. In an opinion to the society whose object was the preservation of the morals of the people, before the institution of these proceedings, Mr. Bayley said: "We do not meddle about any differences in opinion, and . . . we interpose only where the very root of Christianity itself is struck at, as it plainly is, by this allegorical scheme. The New Testament, and the whole relation of the life and miracles of Christ being denied." He seems to have been speaking with reference to whether the publication in question was punishable as a temporal offense, but on the trial Lord Kenyon, in summing up virtually left the jury no discretion but to convict, which they did instantly, and he considered christianity a part of the law of the land in the sense that to asperse it was to violate the law. So in Eaton's Case, 31 How. St. Tr. 927, which also was a prosecution for the publication of Paine's Age of Reason, similar to the case last mentioned with respect to the trial and the attitude of the court upon the questions involved. But see infra, notes 9, 10.

Somewhat apart from the English cases above cited are Reg. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox C. C. 217, and Reg. v. Ramsay, 1 Cab. & El. 126, 15 Cox C. C. 231, 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 733 (infra, notes 9, 10), in which the alleged libel consisted of the publication in a paper called the Freethinker, of these words: "The God whom Christians love and adore is depicted in the Bible with a character more bloodthirsty than a Bengal tiger or a Bashi-Bazouk. He is credited with all the vices and scarcely any of the virtues of a painted savage. Wanton cruelty and heartless barbarity are his essential characteristics. If any despot at the present time tried to emulate, at the expense of his subjects, the misdeeds of Jehovah, the great majority of Christian men would denounce his conduct in terms of indignation." Coleridge, C. J., left the question of intent to the jury. Referring to the last case, Mr. Bishop says: "Therefore, with us, while probably the English case just cited would be followed, the older ones can be received only in a sort of general way, not as being in all particulars applicable here and now. For example, it is not probable that generally in our courts a conviction could be obtained against a publisher of Paine's 'Age of Reason.' And as we have no established form of religion, libels on particular formalities of worship might not be indictable here to the extent to which they formerly would have been and perhaps would be now in England, if directed against the formalities of the English Church." 2 Bishop New Crim. L. p. 46 note.

3. Blasphemous libel.— Rex v. Carlile, 3 B. & Ald. 167, 5 E. C. L. 104; Rex v. Carlile, 3 B. & Ald. 161, 5 E. C. L. 101; Rex v. Waddington, 1 B. & C. 26, 8 E. C. L. 12; Reg. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox C. C. 217; Eaton's Case, 31 How. St. Tr. 927; Williams' Case, 26 How. St. Tr. 654.

A correct account of proceedings in court cannot be published if such account contains matter of a scandalous, a blasphemous, or an immoral tendency; and it is a ground for a criminal information. See Rex v. Carlile, 3 B. & Ald. 167, 5 E. C. L. 104, and opinion of Mr. Bayley in Williams' Case, 26 How. St. Tr. 654.

Separate publications by several sales of copies.— Every copy of a libel sold by a defendant is a separate publication, and subjects him to a distinct prosecution. Rex v. Carlile, 1 Chit. 451, 18 E. C. L. 248.

Application of general exculpatory statute. — The provision in Lord Campbell's Libel Act [6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, § 7], "If on the trial of any indictment for the publication of a libel, evidence shall have been given which shall establish a presumptive case of publication against the defendant by the act of any other person, or by his authority, it shall be competent for such defendant to prove that such publication was made without his authority, consent, or knowledge, and that it did not arise from want of due care and caution on his part," being quite general in its terms, was held to apply to a prosecution for the publication of a blasphemous libel. Reg. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox C. C. 217.

4. Ex p. Delaney, 43 Cal. 478; State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553 (where it was said that a written publication of blasphemous words would undoubtedly be considered as an aggravation of the offense); Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. peace. In this sense it was punishable as a common-law offense,[5] though it has been the subject of statute both in England and in this country.[6]

2. Christianity As Part of Law of Land. The cases generally approve the statement, in connection with the offense under consideration, that christianity, the prevailing religion of the country, is parcel of the law.[7] This must be taken, however, in connection with what has been said as to the nature of the offense as

See also Goree v. State, 71 Ala. 7; Ex p. Delaney, 43 Cal. 478; Rex v. Curl, 2 Str. 788.

Misdemeanor.— Blasphemy was a misdemeanor at common law. Rex v. Carlile, 3 B. & Ald. 161, 5 E. C. L. 101; Rex v. Tayler, 3 Keb. 607, Vent. 293.

Ecclesiastical jurisdiction distinguished.— The ecclesiastical tribunals assumed jurisdiction of all offenses purely against God and the holy scriptures, pro salute animæ, without reference to the mere effect of such offenses on the peace of society, which the common law never did. See Caudrey's Case, 5 Coke 1; Rex v. Curl, 2 Str. 788. Indictments for maliciously blaspheming God or the founder of the christian religion were sustained because such blasphemy tended to subvert peace and good order which it was bound to protect, but no indictment for a mere sin against God as a common-law offense was sustained where this object of its care was not affected. While the ecclesiastical courts punished blasphemy as an offense against God, their punishments superseded the necessity for any procedure at common law for a mere temporal offense, but when the ecclesiastical courts had jurisdiction of the offense against God, the common law had jurisdiction of the temporal offense. But the common-law judges, by yielding up that jurisdiction to the ecclesiastical courts and refusing to reverse or revise their decisions when incidentally or collaterally presented in a common-law court, did no more intend by that to acknowledge the laws of holy church as common law than they intended to acknowledge admiralty law as common law when they gave faith and credit to an admiralty decision. State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553.

6. Resort to common law when not defined in statute.— Where, as a part of the general statute for the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors, it was provided that if any person should be guilty of the crime of blasphemy, he should, upon conviction, be punished in a certain manner, it was held that as the statute did not define blasphemy, the court should go to the common law for the legal definition of the crime. State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553.

Cumulative statute.—In New Jersey it was held that the Crimes Act in that state [N. J. Gen. Stat. (1895), p. 1061, § 66] prohibiting blasphemy did not abrogate the common law, and that therefore a blasphemer might be indicted under either law. State v. Rosenstrauch, 5 N. J. L. J. 186. In England it was held that 9 & 10 Wm. III was to give security to the government by rendering men who entertained opinions hostile to the established religion incapable of holding office, the only penalty imposed being the exclusion from office, and that penalty being incurred by any manifestation of the dangerous opinion without proof of the intention either to induce others to be of that opinion or in any manner to disturb persons of a different persuasion, and that the common-law offense of blasphemy remained. Rex v. Carlile, 3 B. & Ald. 161, 5 E. C. L. 101; Rex v. Woolston, Fitzg. 64, 2 Str. 834; Atty.-Gen. v. Pearson, 3 Meriv. 353, 17 Rev. Rep. 100. So 53 Geo. III, which removed the penalties imposed by 9 & 10 Wm. III on persons denying the Trinity and extending to such persons the benefits conferred upon all other protestant dissenters by 1 W. & M., did not alter the common law as to blasphemous libel. Rex v. Waddington, 1 B. & C. 26, 8 E. C. L. 12. See also Atty.-Gen. v. Pearson, 3 Meriv. 353, 17 Rev. Rep. 100.

7. People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335; Updegraph v. Com., 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394; Rex v. Waddington, 1 B. & C. 26, 28, 8 E. C. L. 12 (where, upon holding a publication a blasphemous libel at common law and that the statute which made other penalties was merely cumulative, Best, J., said that "the legislature has never altered this law, nor can it ever do so whilst the Christian religion is considered to be the basis of that law"); Lord Hale in Rex v. Tayler, 3 Keb. 607, Vent. 293. In a speech in Chamberlain of London v. Evans [cited in State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553, 556, and Updegraph v. Com., 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394, 401] Lord Mansfield is reported to have said: "The true principles of natural religion are part of the common law; the essential principles of revealed religion are part of the common law; so that a person vilifying, subverting or ridiculing them may be prosecuted at common law."

Other religions.—"A person may, without being liable to prosecution for it, attack Judaism, or Mahomedanism, or even any sect of the Christian Religion, (save the established religion of the country); and the only reason why the latter is in a different situation from the others is, because it is the form established by law, and is therefore a part of the constitution of the country. In like manner, and for the same reason, any a temporal one,[8] and, it is apprehended, means, not that the violation of religious precepts is to be punished as a temporal offense, but that notice is to be taken of the prevailing religion of the country for the purpose of punishing such attacks as tend to destroy the peace of society.[9]

C. Intent — 1. In General. The rule is, that the utterance or publication must be with an impious purpose to derogate from the divine majesty of the Deity, or purposely to hold up the christian religion to contempt or ridicule.[10] general attack on Christianity is the subject of criminal prosecution, because Christianity is the established religion of the country." Alderson, B., in Gathercole's Case, 2 Lewin 237, 254. The same principle as to the right to attack other religions, as judaism and mohammedanism, is recognized in State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553, and in People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335. The reason is stated "that the case assumes that we are a christian people, and the morality of the country is deeply ingrafted upon christianity."

8. See supra, note 5.

9. State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553 (where it is said that the people of the state have a full and perfect constitutional right to change their religion as often as they see fit, and whatever religion they thus prefer the offense of blasphemy would be committed by publicly reviling it, upon the principle that the religion of the choice of the people must thus be protected, in order to protect the peace and welfare of society); Zeisweiss v. James, 63 Pa. St. 465, 3 Am. Rep. 558 (where Sharswood, J., said, obiter, referring to the constitutional guaranty of religious freedom, that it was in entire consistency to hold that even if christianity is no part of the law of the land, it is the popular religion of the country, an insult to which would be indictable as directly tending to destroy the public peace).

Admission of divine origin and truth. — In Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. (U. S.) 127, 11 L. ed. 205, it was said that christianity, though a part of the common law of the state, is only so in the qualified sense that "its divine origin and truth are admitted," and for that reason it could not be openly and maliciously reviled to the annoyance of the christian people of the state, etc. Cooley pertinently doubts if the punishment of blasphemy is based necessarily upon an admission of the divine origin or truth of the christian religion, or is incapable of being otherwise justified. Cooley Const. Lim. (3d ed.) p. 472. And in Reg. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox C. C. 217, 225, Coleridge, C. J., referring to the view that any attack upon the fundamental principles of the christian religion and any discussion hostile to the inspiration or perfect purity of the Hebrew scriptures was against the law of the land, refused to assent thereto, and said: "It is founded, as it seems to me, upon misunderstood expressions in the judgments of great judges in former times, who have said, no doubt, that, inasmuch as Christianity is in a sense part of the law of the land, and as Christianity adopts and assumes the truth, in some sense or other, of inspiration, and in some sense or other assumes the purity of the Hebrew Scriptures, anything which assails the truth of Christianity, or asperses the purity of the Hebrew Scriptures, however respectfully, is a breach of the law. I fail to see the consequence from the premises, because you may attack anything that is part of the law of the land, in respectful terms, without committing a crime or a misdemeanour, otherwise no alteration in any part of the law could ever be advocated by anybody. Monarchy is part of the law of the land; primogeniture is part of the law of the land; the laws of marriage are part of the law of the land; and deliberate and respectful discussion upon the first principles of government, upon the principles of the law of inheritance, upon the principles which should govern the union of the sexes, on that principle, so far as I can see, would be an indictable libel. The consequence appears to me so extreme and untenable as to show that the premises must be wrong."

10. State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553; Cooley Const. Lim. (3d ed.) p. 474.

Question for jury. — The question of intent is one for the jury. Reg. v. Ramsay, 1 Cab. & El. 126, 15 Cox C. C. 231, 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 733; Reg. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox C. C. 217, in both of which cases Lord Coleridge adopts the rule from Starkie on Libel (4th ed.) 599, that "a wilful intention to pervert, insult, and mislead others, by means of licentious and contumelious abuse applied to sacred subjects, or by wilful misrepresentations or wilful sophistry, calculated to mislead the ignorant and unwary, is the criterion and test of guilt."

By statute the offense is sometimes defined as the "wilful" use of certain language. See Updegraph v. Com., 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394, and the statute therein referred to. And in Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 206, the word "wilfully" was held to mean not merely "voluntarily" but with a bad purpose, and in the blasphemy statute was construed to mean an intended design to disparage the Supreme Being and to destroy the veneration due to him.

Statutory charge — Common-law elements. — Notwithstanding the indictment is founded on a statute which merely prescribes a punishment for the offense of "blasphemy," the court will go to the common law for the definition of this offense, and whether expressly laid in the indictment, or whether the indictment follows the words of the statute, malice or intent is traversable as an essential

2. Respectful Discussion — Religious Freedom. At an early date it was intimated that blasphemy did not embrace disputes between learned men upon controverted points.[11] But in more modern times the doctrine is recognized, both in England[12] and in the American cases, that, as contradistinguished from utterances or publications which in an indecent and malicious spirit assail and asperse religion or the Deity, any man may soberly and reverently examine and question the truth of the doctrines of christianity, however fundamental, without subjecting himself to penal consequences.[13]

D. Publication or Utterance in Presence of Others. So however blasphemous in itself the particular language may be, yet if it is never uttered in the hearing of other persons, or published, the crime of blasphemy cannot be founded upon it.[14]

III. Prosecution.

A. Indictment.[15] An indictment may be considered both as a charge of composing, printing, and publishing a blasphemous libel, and also as a direct charge of the crime of blasphemy,[16] and it is no objection that the offense is characterized in the charge by words which indicate a spiritual offense, so long as the gist of the temporal offense is contained in the charge.[17] It seems that the words them-part of the offense. State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553.

Drunkenness, it has been held, is no excuse but only aggravates the offense. People v. Porter, 2 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 14. But see as to this Criminal Law.

11. Rex v. Woolston, Fitzg. 64, 2 Str. 834. See also Gathercole's Case, 2 Lewin 237, supra, note 7.

Heresy distinguished.— In Naylor's Case, 5 How. St. Tr. 802, 826, Lord Commissioner Whitelocke in his opinion on the debate upon the question whether Nayler should be punished with death, distinguished heresy and blasphemy: "They are offences of a different nature: Heresy is Crimen Judicii, an erroneous opinion: Blasphemy is Crimen Malitiæ, a reviling the name and honour of God. Heresy was to be declared in particular, and by the four first general Councils. But the Blasphemy in this Vote is general; and I do not find it reckoned in those Councils for Heresy."

12. Reg. v. Ramsay, 1 Cab. & El. 126, 15 Cox C. C. 231, 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 733; Reg. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox C. C. 217. See also supra, notes 9, 10.

13. Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 206; People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335. It is to be collected from the offensive levity, scurrilous and opprobrious language, and other circumstances whether the act of the party was malicious. Updegraph v. Com., 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394.

Infidelity no defense.— The law denies to infidels, as well as to any other person, the right to blaspheme, and it is no defense that the defendant was of opinion that the words used by him were true. If one class of persons may thus do an act tending to a breach of the peace all must have the same immunity from punishment. State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553.

Constitutional freedom of press and religious toleration.— In this country the constitutional safeguards which are thrown about the freedom of the press and the liberty of conscience in the matter of religious opinions and worship are recognized as a protection to the extent of guaranteeing the rights as announced in the text, and the cases cited in this note may be taken as authority for this, but to this extent only; for they also hold that such constitutional provisions do not legalize wilful or profane scoffing, or stand in the way of legislative enactments for the punishment of such acts. See also Zeisweiss v. James, 63 Pa. St. 465, 3 Am. Rep. 558; Cooley Const. Lim. (3d ed.), pp. 422–474.

14. State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553 (where it was said that if a writing which might be a libel is permitted to sleep in the writer's desk until it is dragged forth by the ministers of the law it cannot be indictable, although it may be a great sin against God); People v. Porter, 2 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 14.

16. Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 206.

17. State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553, holding that an indictment is not defective because it charges the offense to have been done "to the dishonor of Almighty God, and in contempt of religion," for the gist of the misdemeanor is contained in the charge that the words were published unlawfully and blasphemously against the peace, etc., which of itself imports that the offense was committed wantonly and maliciously.

selves, the utterance or publication of which constitutes the offense, must be set out.[18] If the offense may be committed in one of several ways, the commission may be alleged to have been in one or more of such ways.[19]

B. Evidence. Oral blasphemy must be proved to have been spoken in the hearing of others and a blasphemous libel must be shown to have been published,[20] and the fact of the commission of the offense, upon conflicting testimony, is for the determination of the jury.[21] If the offense may be committed in one of

18. See Updegraph v. Com., 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394 (where the learned judge delivering the opinion thought, though the point was not decided, that it was not sufficient to allege the words in substance); Rex v. Sparling, 1 Str. 497. See also dictum in Lagrone v. State, 12 Tex. App. 426.

19. Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 206 (in which the use of the several epithets employed in the statute to characterize the manner of committing the offense are considered); Reg. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox C. C. 217, 223 (holding that an indictment charging that the defendant "published or caused to be published," etc., and that the publication was in a printed "paper or newspaper," etc., is not bad for uncertainty). But in Updegraph v. Com., 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394, under a statute providing that if any person "shall wilfully, premeditatedly and despitefully blaspheme, and speak loosely and profanely of Almighty God, Christ Jesus, the Holy Spirit, or the Scripture of Truth," such person, etc., it was held that an indictment which charged that the defendant did "unlawfully, wickedly, and premeditatedly, despitefully and blasphemously," say, etc., was bad, because it did not charge the words to have been used profanely; that though the words "blasphemously" and "despitefully" may be synonymous with "profanely," and tantamount in common understanding, yet, as the legislature had adopted this word as a description or definition of the crime, the omission was fatal; that the indictment could not be sustained as for blasphemy at common law, because the sentence was founded on this act of assembly. See also Com. v. Spratt, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 365, 37 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 234.

For illustration of proof of publication of libel by showing purchase by the purchaser from defendant of the book containing the blasphemous matter charged, see Williams' Case, 26 How. St. Tr. 654. In Eaton's Case, 31 How. St. Tr. 927, upon the witness delivering over the book, an offer was made to read the title page of the Age of Reason, which was permitted only for the purpose of showing the quo animo and because it stated that the work was published by the defendant.

A confession made out of court that the defendant made use of the words charged in the indictment is not by itself sufficient evidence upon which to convict of blasphemy; if any one heard the words spoken this must be proved, because if they were not heard the crime could not have been committed. Furthermore, if this confession were legal evidence to prove a crime committed, it would not be sufficient if it did not admit that the words were spoken within the time of limitation, or that they were spoken within the county or state. People v. Porter, 2 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 14.

Qualified confession of authorship.— In an information for a libel against the doctrine of the Trinity, the witness for the crown, who produced the libel, swore that it was shown to the defendant, who owned himself the author of that book, errors of the press and some small variations excepted. The counsel for the defendant objected that this evidence would not entitle Mr. Attorney to read the book, because the confession was not absolute, and therefore amounted to a denial that he was the author of that identical book. But the chief justice allowed it to be read, saying he would put it upon the defendant to show that there were material variances. Rex v. Hall, 1 Str. 416.

Under Libel Act.— On the trial of two persons on an indictment for publishing blasphemous libels in a certain paper upon which their names were given, one as printer and the other as publisher, proof of their identity with the persons whose names were so given, or evidence merely connecting them with the paper was held not sufficient to fix them with liability, under the statute [6 & 7 Vict. c. 76, § 7], which provided that on such a trial, upon evidence to establish a presumptive case of publication against defendant by the act of any other person, or by his authority, it shall be competent for such defendant to prove that such publication was made without his authority, consent, or knowledge, etc. It was further held that evidence that one of the parties published the paper made a sufficient prima facie case as against him without express evidence that he knew of the libels, but that express evidence as to the other that he was editor was not sufficient evidence that he directed the insertion of the libels. Reg. v. Ramsay, 1 Cab. & El. 126, 15 Cox C. C. 231, 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 733.

21. In Bell's Case, 6 City Hall Rec. (N. Y.) 38, an indictment for blasphemy charged defendant with saying that "God Almighty was a damned fool for creating such men as composed the Hartford Convention." On the trial prosecutor and his son testified that defendant spoke the words in the presence of themselves and two others, while others testified that during an intemperate political dispute defendant said, with reference to the Hartford convention men, that "it was a disgrace to God Almighty to let such men live," but that he did not speak the words several ways, a charge that it was committed in two of the modes may be supported by proof that it was committed in either way.[22]

BLASTING. The operation of splitting rocks by the use of explosives.[1] (Blasting: Generally, see EXPLOSIVES. As Nuisance, see NUISANCES. Right of, as Against Adjoining Landowner, see ADJOINING LANDOWNERS.)

BLOCK. A square or portion of a city inclosed by streets, whether occupied by buildings or composed of vacant lots.[3] (See, generally, DEEDS.)

BLOCKADE.[4] To shut up by obstruction;[5] the shutting up of a place by surrounding it with hostile troops or ships, or by posting them at all the avenues to prevent escape and hinder supplies or provisions and ammunition from entering with a view to compel a surrender by hunger and want without regular attacks;[6] the shutting up of a place, blocking of a harbor, line of coast, frontier, etc., by hostile forces or ships, so as to stop ingress and egress, and prevent the entrance of provisions and ammunition, in order to compel a surrender from hunger or want, without a regular attack;[7] the act of surrounding a town with a hostile army, or, if it be on the seacoast, of placing a hostile army around its landward side and ships of war in front of its sea defenses; so as, if possible, to prevent supplies of food and ammunition from entering it by land or water;[8] a sort of circumvallation round a place, by which all foreign connexion and correspondence is, as far as human force can effect it, to be entirely cut off.[9] (Blockade: Effect on Insurance, see MARINE INSURANCE. Generally, see WAR.)

BLOOD. The fluid which circulates in the arteries and veins;[10] kindred; relation by natural descent from a common ancestor; consanguinity.[11] (Blood: As Determining Rights — Of Inheritance, see DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; Under Wills, see WILLS. charged in the indictment. As touching the animus of the prosecution, it was shown that after the time laid in the indictment prosecutor and defendant had a difficulty which had resulted in defendant filing a complaint against prosecutor for assault and battery. It was shown that defendant was in the habit of attending church, and often expressed his conviction of the truth of the doctrine of universal salvation. It was held that the evidence authorized an acquittal, the weight of it having been left to the jury. See also People v. Porter, 2 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 14; and supra, note 10.

Divisible averments as to intent.— Under an indictment charging the use of certain blasphemous words with intent to blaspheme God, and also with intent to revile the christian religion, it was held that these two averments were divisible, and that either of these intents, being found by the jury, was sufficient to sustain the indictment, and that a verdict of guilty, with the exception that the defendant was not guilty of the intent to blaspheme God, was a finding of guilty of blasphemy. I. DEFINITION.

Technically a bond is a deed or obligatory instrument, in writing, whereby one doth bind himself to another, to pay a sum of money, or to do some other act;[1] but in popular language any instrument in writing that legally binds a party to do a certain thing may be called a bond.[2] As a verb the word "bond" is used in the sense of "to give bond for; to secure payment of duties by giving bond."[3]

II. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

A. In General. A voluntary bond properly executed[4] and delivered[5] which is founded upon a sufficient consideration[6] and is entered into by competent parties[7] without fraud or unlawful compulsion,[8] for a purpose not legally prohibited,[9] will be valid at common law, though not authorized by statute.[10] And by

E. 265 [citing 1 Rapalje & L. L. Dict.], where it is said: "A bond is nothing more than an agreement or contract under seal to pay money, 'or to do some other thing.'"

Other definitions are: "A deed whereby the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors or administrators, to pay a certain sum of money at a day appointed." Williams v. State, 25 Fla. 734, 740, 6 So. 831, 6 L. R. A. 821 [citing 2 Bl. Comm. 340].

Bonds are single or double, simple or conditional, according as the obligor binds himself, his heirs, etc., to pay a certain sum to another at a specified date or adds a condition that if he does or forbears to do some act the obligation shall be void. Black L. Dict. See also BILL OBLIGATORY.

Bonds are negotiable or non-negotiable according as they pass by mere delivery or require a formal transfer. Anderson L. Dict. See also, generally, infra, IV.

A covenant is distinguished from a bond in Matter of Fitch, 3 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 457.

Distinguished from recognizance.— The only material respect in which a recognizance differs from another bond is that an ordinary bond is the creation of an original debt or an obligation de novo. The term is used in various significations in popular language, as importing the substantive action expressed by the verb to bind. If one is bound, he is in bonds or under bonds. In that sense it implies nothing more than a binding contract, in whatever form. And although, in the phraseology of the law, the term usually denotes a specialty, we do not think it necessarily implies that."

the common law a bond may be valid and may be enforced by a suit, though no beneficial interest therein exists in favor of the obligee,[11] or though the obligee hold no part in fixing the amount of the penalty, provided it was accepted and acted upon by him.[12]

B. By What Law Governed. The law of place of execution governs the validity of a bond so far as the capacity of the parties to enter into such a contract is concerned.[13] But if a bond is partly executed in one state the final act, however, to render it valid and enforceable, such as delivery to the obligee, being done in another state, the validity of the bond may be determined by the laws of the latter state.[14] And where a bond is executed in one state but relates to a transaction in another state which is illegal by the laws of that state the bond will be void.[15]

C. Certainty. Though the wording of a bond may be vague or uncertain, yet, if, considering the purpose for which given and in connection with evidence to explain the language used,[16] the terms and conditions can be made clear and certain, the instrument will be valid.[17]

Rule applied.— So it has been held that a

D. Parties[18] — 1. Obligors and Obligees. A bond to be valid, like any other contract, requires at least two contracting parties, one called the obligor and the other the obligee.[19] But a person can enter into no legal obligation to himself, cannot maintain a suit against himself, and therefore cannot be both the obligor and obligee in a bond;[20] and a bond so executed will be a nullity so far as it affects one who occupies thereunder this dual relation.[21]

2. Sureties[22] — a. Number of. A bond with but one surety instead of two as required by statute will be good as a common-law bond, unless the statute expressly provides that a bond executed in any other manner than therein designated shall be void.[23]

b. Qualifications of. Certain requirements are generally imposed as essential bond is not void for uncertainty which is conditioned to indemnify the obligee "against all loss, cost, damage and expense to which he may be subjected by reason of his becoming bail in the United States Court." Connor v. Harlan, 130 Mass. 265. But see Hale v. Hall, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 316. Nor is one to devise "all our personal estate, of every description, as well what we now have in possession as what we may receive at the decease of our mother" the obligor to keep possession of the property during his life. Jenkins v. Stetson, 9 Allen (Mass.) 128. But a bond has been held to be void for uncertainty which is conditioned to convey a certain number of acres out of a tract of land without any designation or description of the part to be conveyed so that it can be located. Huntt v. Gist, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 498.

18. As to the designation of the parties in the bond see infra, II, E, 1, c.

19. There must be at least two parties, one, the obligor, being bound to the other, the obligee, requiring something to be done which if not done can be compensated by an action on the bond. State v. Briggs, 34 Vt. 501. See also supra, I; and, generally, Contracts.

A conveyance bond is not void because of want of obligees in existence at the time of its delivery. So held where, in consideration of the location of a county-seat, a bond was given to convey lands to a board not in existence at the time of its delivery. Sargeant v. Indiana State Bank, 4 McLean (U. S.) 339, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,360 [affirmed in 12 How. (U. S.) 371, 13 L. ed. 1028]. See also, generally, Vendor and Purchaser.

Corporation obligee.— Where no form is prescribed by statute for a bond to be taken by a corporation it may be taken in the name of the individual members thereof and will be valid and enforceable if legally sufficient in other respects. Greenfield v. Yeates, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 158. Nor is a bond invalid because given to a corporation not authorized by its charter to take the same. State Bank v. Hammond, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 281. But no liability is incurred, it has been held, upon a bond given by an agent to secure the faithful performance of his duties where his principal to whom the bond is given is a corporation of another state, and is not authorized to do business within the state in which the bond is entered into. Daniels v. Barney, 22 Ind. 207 (failure to comply with requirements of a statute); Newberry Bank v. Stegall, 41 Miss. 142. See also, generally, Corporations.

The United States of America being a corporation endowed with the capacity to sue and be sued and to convey and receive property a bond will be valid and binding at common law which is made payable to the "United States of America." Dixon v. U. S., 1 Brock. (U. S.) 177, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,934.

20. Debard v. Crow, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 7, 22 Am. Dec. 113; Crabtree v. Johnson, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 360. See also, generally, Contracts.

From mere identity of names, however, it is not a necessary deduction that the obligor and obligee are the same person. Allin v. Shadburne, 1 Dana (Ky.) 68, 25 Am. Dec. 121.

21. Cecil v. Laughlin, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 30; Allin v. Shadburne, 1 Dana (Ky.) 68, 25 Am. Dec. 121.

So a bond executed by several persons to one of their number has been declared to be unenforceable in law. Smith v. Lusher, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 688; Chowan Justices v. Bonner, 14 N. C. 256. Contra, Morrison v. Stockwell, 9 Dana (Ky.) 172; Allin v. Shadburne, 1 Dana (Ky.) 68, 25 Am. Dec. 121.

But if the bond is executed to several persons, one of whom is also obligor in the same instrument, it will be void only so far as such person purports to be an obligor to himself. Cecil v. Laughlin, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 30. And a bond given to the directors of a corporation as a class, by the treasurer who is also a director, is not invalid and it may be enforced in equity, though an action thereon cannot lie at law. Durburow v. Niehoff, 37 Ill. App. 403.

The beneficiary of a bond cannot question its validity because an agreement between the principal obligor and sole surety not to

to the qualification of a person as a surety and to render the bond valid.[24] So the surety must ordinarily justify in an amount equal to or greater than the amount of the penalty.[25] A surety who is a non-resident of the state will be insufficient,[26] though it has been declared that the non-residence of a surety is no objection if he has sufficient property within the state.[27]

E. Formal Requisites — 1. Form and Contents — a. In General. While it is essential to the validity of a bond that the instrument should be written either on paper or parchment,[28] it has been declared generally that in order to make a writing under seal obligatory no particular words are necessary, provided there be words acknowledging an indebtedness or binding the maker to pay a debt.[29]

b. Condition. A bond should receive a reasonable interpretation if the intention of the parties can be ascertained from the language used,[30] but where the condition of a bond is omitted no liability will be incurred.[31]

c. Recitals as to Parties — (I) Obligors. The question has been raised in numerous cases whether a bond is valid if the names of some or all the parties are omitted in the body of the instrument. In this connection it should be remembered that it is the intent which controls, and it is sufficient if the intent appear, though not fully and particularly expressed. Therefore such an omission will not affect the validity where the parties whose names are thus omitted have executed the bond, for a full intent is to be found from the act of executing and signing the instrument, and a mere technical objection should not avail to discharge a contract into which a party has voluntarily entered. And file it until another surety was procured was not complied with. Arrowsmith v. Gleason, 129 U. S. 86, 9 S. Ct. 237, 32 L. ed. 630.

Inserting name of new obligor.— If after the execution of a bond by certain obligors the name of a new obligor is inserted by interlineation and he executes such bond as a surety without the consent of the other sureties it has been decided that the bond will be void as to them. The principle applicable in the construction of contracts, that is, that they are to be so construed if possible that the subject matter may have effect and that the end be promoted rather than defeated, applies also in the construction of bonds, and though words and clauses may be omitted the bond may nevertheless be enforced. So a bond has been held binding though the word "ourselves," in the clause "bind ourselves, our heirs," etc., be omitted (Wood v. Coman, 56 Ala. 283), or though there is an omission of the clause "in cujus rei" (Dardenne v. Bennett, 4 Ark. 458). Again it has been declared that though the solvendum be wrong yet if the teneri be right the bond is good. Wilkinson v. McLochlin, 1 Call (Va.) 49. And the omission of the formal conclusion will not invalidate a bond, where there is a substantial compliance with the statute and the condition intended by the parties is manifest. though the bond be a statutory instrument it is immaterial, unless the enactment contain some mandatory provision from which there is no escape.[32] Again, as a general rule, while the court will never extend relief against sureties, it will not on the other hand relieve them of a plain obligation within the letter and spirit of their bond.[33]

(II) Obligees. The weight of authority supports the rule that a bond with a blank left for the name of the obligee is a nullity, and proof of delivery to a particular person is not sufficient, as by mere delivery no rights are conferred on the person who receives it.[34] The omission, however, to expressly designate a person as obligee will not in all cases render a bond void.[35] So an incorrect designation of the obligee may not be considered as fatal.[36] But where a bond is given in

But in New York it has been decided that delivery of a bond with a blank left for the name of the payee is equivalent to making the bond payable to bearer until the blank has been filled by a bona fide holder. Manhattan Sav. Inst. v. New York Nat. Exch. Bank, 42 N. Y. App. Div. 147, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 51.

35. Illustrations.—So a bond to secure the payment of a note is not invalid because no obligee is named, where the bond sets out the names of the payor and payee, the amount and date of note, for what given, when due and payable, and rate of interest. Leach v. Flemming, 85 N. C. 447. And where a bond was given to one creditor for an amount sufficient for his debt and that of the other creditors who were not named therein, it was held to be valid if they sanctioned the transaction and the one to whom it was given agreed to account to them. Nickerson v. Hazel, 1 Houst. (Del.) 176.

36. Incorrect but not fatal designation.— And in a bond which is in fact and by its terms manifestly for the benefit of a county to which it should run, the fact that it appears to run to the state is not a variance which pursuance of an order directing the execution thereof to be approved by the court, the obligee should be described in the capacity designated in such order, and where not so described and a recovery in the capacity designated would not come within the protection thereof, such bond is not made good by the approval of the court, since in approving the bond the court has no power to modify the order.[37]

d. Recitals as to Penalty or Amount. A bond will be void in which the amount or penalty thereof is omitted and a judgment thereon cannot be sustained, such omission being a defect which cannot be supplied by oral proof of the amount intended.[38] Under some circumstances, however, it has been decided that the only effect of such an omission is to make the bond commensurate with the condition.[39] But where the amount is expressed, the mere omission of the word dollars or sign therefor will not affect the validity of the bond.[40]

2. Execution — a. In General. Generally speaking, a bond may be said to be executed when the obligation has been reduced to writing,[41] and has been properly signed [42] and sealed by the obligor.[43]

b. Date. The fact that a bond is erroneously dated, or bears no date at all, will not affect its validity, if other essentials necessary to give it a legal and binding effect have been complied with.[44] will be fatal. Brown, etc., Co. v. Ligon, 92 Fed. 851. Again, though a bond to the state does not designate the state as obligee in the exact terms of the statute, yet it will be sufficient if the term used is descriptive of the same sovereignty. But see Nelson v. Howe Mach. Co., 10 Ky. L. Rep. 37, wherein it was held that the penalty being fixed at "——— thousand dollars" would be construed as limited to one thousand dollars.

The bond should contain a clause with a fixed sum or penalty binding the obligor to pay the same, conditioned, however, that the payment of the penalty may be avoided by the performance by some one or more of the parties of certain acts. Bonds by surety companies being in terms prescribed by them should in case of doubtful language be construed against the surety and in favor of the indemnity which the assured had reasonable ground to expect, and therefore the date when it purports to have been made will control and date of acceptance

c. Signature — (I) In General. While the proper place for the signature of the obligors is at the foot of the agreement, yet independent of any statutory requirement the manner and form of the signature is immaterial, provided it is made by the surety for the purpose and with the intention of binding himself.[45] And it has been decided that if a bond is sealed and delivered it is not essential to its validity that it be signed.[46] Again, where the parties have signed the bond properly it is not essential to its validity that their names also appear in the body of the bond.[47] The order of signatures as to time of signing the instrument is immaterial, provided the bond is fully executed by all who purport to be parties.[48]

(II) By Agent. Though an obligor did not attend in person the execution of the bond, yet he will be bound thereby where his signature was affixed by another authorized in writing by him to so act.[49] And it has been decided that if a bond is required by statute to be executed by a person, "his agent, or attorney" it may be executed by the agent or attorney, describing himself as such, in his own name and be in form his personal obligation.[50]

Again, though a person in signing uses a name other than his own, he may be bound. Dodd v. Butler, 7 Mo. App. 583.

Place of signing.— The fact that the signatures are not opposite the scrolls for seals will not impair the validity of the bond (Biery v. App, (Pa. 1886) 4 Atl. 198); nor will the fact that one obligor signed on the right side and another on the left side of the instrument (Steininger v. Hoch, 39 Pa. d. Seal — (I) Necessity of. The term "bond" ex vi termini imports a sealed instrument, and as a general rule, independent of any statute providing otherwise, sealing is necessary to constitute a perfect bond.[53] And in the absence of a seal an instrument will not be construed as a sealed bond, though there be a recital in the body thereof that the obligors and parties have set their hands and seals thereto.[54] In several states, however, though a bond is not sealed it may nevertheless be enforced, it being declared in some cases that it is a valid obligation at common law, while in others it is declared that the omission of the seal is a mere irregularity;[55] and again in some states it is provided by statute that a seal is not essential to give a bond the force and effect of a sealed instrument.[56]

(II) Sufficiency of—(A) In General. Where the name of an obligor is followed by a scroll, the words "witness my hand and seal" contained in the bond sufficiently show that such scroll was intended as his seal;[57] and it has been declared that a bond will be construed as a sealed instrument where there is a scroll inclosing the word "seal" at the end of the signature, though there is no in testimonium clause.[58] And again it has been held that an obligation will be construed as a bond where there is a scroll after the signature, though the instrument does not purport to be a bond upon its face.[59]

(B) One Seal and Several Signatures. It is not in all cases essential to the validity of a bond that there be a separate seal to each signature, for one seal may be adopted by two or more signers, and in those cases where the number of seals is less than the number of signers the existence in the bond of the clause "Sealed with our seals" will raise the presumption that two or more of the signers adopted one seal.[60]

But in Alabama it has been held that there must be some recital in the bond of an intention to make a sealed instrument, the mere use of a seal or a scroll with the word "seal" inclosed not being sufficient. See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bonds," § 15.

Where a bond is subsequently signed without seals by two or more persons after it has been executed by one with his individual name and seal attached, it has been held that it could not be inferred that the seal of the original signer was adopted by the subse-

e. Acknowledgment and Attestation.[61] One cannot question the validity of a bond on the ground that it was not acknowledged by him or proved at the time of delivery, where he has signed,[62] sealed, and delivered the same as his bond, unless there is a statute which makes the acknowledgment or proof in court essential to its validity. This general principle is applicable alike to all bonds.[63] And it has been decided that the bond will not be void where a person who was neither present at the execution of the bond nor duly authorized to attest the same was procured to sign it as an attesting witness, provided it was not done with a fraudulent purpose.[64]

f. Affixing Revenue Stamps. By the act of congress of 1864, known as the Stamp Act,[65] bonds were in certain cases required to be stamped,[66] but those given in legal proceedings were expressly exempted by such act.[67] And under such an act the question whether process is void or valid for want of a revenue stamp is immaterial after appearance and answer to the action, and after the parties have gone to trial without objection.[68] Again under the act just referred to the question of intent was held to be immaterial, and therefore the penalties applied as

Authenticating bond for record.—A bond may in the absence of any law to the contrary be properly authenticated for record at a time subsequent to the execution thereof. C. 42, where it is held that the bond will be treated as if there was no subscribing witness where the name of a person who was not present at the execution was signed by the obligor as a witness.

65. Compliance with act — Bond lost.— Where a revenue stamp was necessary to the validity of a trustee's bond which had been lost but the contents of which had been proved by parol, it was held that the affixing to a paper setting forth the loss of the bond, with the consent of the court, the requisite stamp and canceling the same and the filing the paper in place of the bond was a substantial compliance with the acts of congress and gave the bond validity ab initio. Dowler v. Cushwa, 27 Md. 354.

Where a stamp law is repealed and validity given to all contracts previously made on unstamped paper, such repeal has a retroactive effect, and where such an act is passed pending an appeal from a judgment given in an action on a bond in which the court had refused to admit the bond in evidence for want of a stamp the judgment should be reversed. State v. Norwood, 12 Md. 195.

66. Date of affixing stamp.— If a bond when introduced in evidence had the proper stamp thereon the defendant cannot show that such stamp was not upon the bond at the date of execution but was subsequently affixed without his knowledge, or consent, for this latter may have been done and still not contrary to the revenue law, and, in absence of proof showing this, the court will presume the stamp to have been properly and legally placed on the bond. Myers v. McGraw, 5 W. Va. 30.

Date of execution shown by parol.— Though the date given in a bond is during a period when under the internal revenue laws it should be stamped the fact that it was not actually executed on the date mentioned may be shown. Biery v. App, (Pa. 1886) 4 Atl. 198.

67. Under this exception it was decided that a bond to dissolve an attachment need not be stamped. Bowers v. Beck, 2 Nev. 139. And although it was provided that writs or other process on appeal from the justice's court should be stamped, yet where no writ or other process was required on such appeal no stamp was necessary on the bond, it being within the exception just noted. Bonds to state.— General acts of the legislature are meant to regulate the rights of citizens and the reasoning applicable to them would apply in most cases with a different and perhaps contrary force to the government itself. General words of a statute should not include the government or affect its rights, unless from the words of the act such construction be clear and indisputable. So this principle is applicable to an act declaring void all bonds not stamped and bonds given to the state need not be stamped under a general state law, unless required as already stated. well to instruments executed without intent to evade such act as to those executed with such intent.[69]

g. Execution in Blank. A bond is said to take effect by delivery, and therefore where one executes a bond and delivers the same to another he will be bound thereby,[70] and his liability will not be affected by the fact that there were blanks in the instrument when executed, provided he executed it with knowledge thereof and in the absence of fraud in filling up such blanks, since he consents by implication in such case that they may be so filled.[71] This rule is, however, modified in some cases, in favor of the surety, by holding that a bond so executed and subsequently filled up will not be binding in the absence of authority to perform such subsequent act.[72] And it has been held that, where authority is given to fill blanks left in a bond, if such authority is revoked the bond, if subsequently filled up, will be void, even in the hands of the obligee who took it with no notice of the revocation.[73]

h. Partial Execution. Though a joint and several bond is signed by a part only of the obligors it will not on this account be void as to them,[74] unless their

A person to whom a paper signed in blank by another has been delivered, such paper to be filled up for a sum of money, has no authority to seal and deliver such paper as the bond of the person who signed the same. Manning v. Norwood, 1 Ala. 429.

Must be subsequently adopted.— In Maryland it has been held that delivery in blank is insufficient, but that the bond after the blanks have been filled must be subsequently recognized or adopted by the person or persons so executing it. 3. Delivery and Acceptance — a. Necessity of Delivery. A bond is not perfected until delivery thereof, and therefore delivery is essential to its validity, and it takes effect from that date.[76]

b. Mode and Sufficiency of Delivery — (1) In General. There is no precise or set form in which delivery must be made, in the absence of a statutory provision designating the manner thereof.[77] The essence of the question whether or not there has been a delivery consists in the intent of the obligor to perfect the instrument and make it at once the absolute property of the obligee. And where there is such an intent coupled with acts or words evincing the same and showing the intention to consummate and complete the bond and to part absolutely and unconditionally with it and the right over it, it will be given legal existence. The delivery may be by both words and acts, or there may be a valid delivery either by words without acts or by acts without words.[78] And it need

In some cases, however, it has been declared that if a bond is drawn up containing the names of several persons as obligors and it is signed by a part only, the presentation of the bond to such as signed amounts to a representation that it will be signed by all named therein, and in the absence of proof of knowledge and assent by those who signed they will not be bound. not be personally delivered by the obligor to the obligee.[79] Again, though the legal title to a bond may be in one person delivery to the one holding the equitable interest will be sufficient.[80]

(II) Of Bond Executed by Part Only of Obligors. Though a bond may be executed by a part only of the obligors, yet if delivered by such as executed it, it will be binding on them.[81]

c. Acceptance — (I) In General. The intention of the parties must be gathered from their language or their conduct or both,[82] and the legal effect of what they say and do cannot be altered or modified by the undisclosed intention or secret understanding of either. So the question of acceptance cannot be determined from such an intention or understanding.[83] If a bond is accepted conditionally on the day of date to become absolute upon the happening of some event, it will upon the occurrence of such event be considered as delivered and accepted on day dated.[84] And when once accepted by the obligee he cannot subsequently disagree to it so as to make it void.[85] But there is no acceptance where a bond is returned because of a defective acknowledgment.[86] The fact, however, that a bond is rejected does not render a reëxecution of it necessary in case of a subsequent acceptance.[87]

(II) Notice of. Sureties are not entitled to express notice of the acceptance of their obligation, where the bond is absolute in terms and is executed contemporaneously with the contract it is intended to secure and as a part of the same transaction.[88]

F. Consideration — 1. In General. The general principles applicable to contracts generally with respect to consideration apply likewise in the case of bonds.[89] But while a consideration is essential to the validity of a contract, the common law distinguishes between agreements by specialty and by parol. If the contract be by parol, and in this class are included written agreements not under seal, consideration must be proved in order to make it binding. The general rule is that a sufficient consideration may arise by reason of a benefit to the party promising or to a third person by the act of the promisee at the promisor's request, or in case of the promisee sustaining any loss or inconvenience or subjecting himself to any charge or obligation at the instance of the promisor, although the latter obtain no advantage therefrom. The principle upon which this is sustained is the reciprocal undertaking on the part of the promisor and promisee. Where, however, a bond is under seal it is not necessary, in order to make it obligatory, that a consideration appear, the seal itself

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bonds," §§ 29, 30; and also, generally, Contracts.

Particular instances of sufficiency of consideration.—"Love and affection," though not as between uncle and niece (Mark v. Clark, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 44), an agreement to assign a judgment against a third person (Ware v. Pennington, 15 Ark. 226), the cancellation of a contract (Oregon Pac. R. Co. v. Forrest, 128 N. Y. 83, 28 N. E. 137, 38 N. Y. St. 837 [affirming 11 N. Y. Suppl. 8, 32 N. Y. St. 178]), the giving of a bond as consideration for a stay of proceedings (Whereatt v. Ellis, 103 Wis. 348, 79 N. W. 416, 74 Am. St. Rep. 865), the granting of a new trial (American Exch. Bank v. Brenzinger, 10 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 208), the issuance of a writ of error and supersedeas on condition that a party execute a bond (Bosley v. Bruner, 24 Miss. 457), the signing of an appeal-bond on condition to hold harmless on a release bond (Conery v. Cannon, 26 La. Ann. 123), have been held to be sufficient consideration to support bonds. So a bond given by a son to secure the debt of his father is supported by a sufficient consideration. Bissinger v. Lawson, 57 Miss. 36; Murrell v. Greenland, 1 Desauss. (S. C.) 332. Again the deposit of money in a bank is sufficient consideration for the giving of a bond for the payment of checks drawn against such deposit. Comstock v. Gage, 91 Ill. 328. And the consideration is sufficient for the giving of bond by the inhabitants of a town that some benefit results to the community. Carpenter v. Mather, 4 Ill. 374. So also a bond given to a bank to enable it to continue in business is supported by a sufficient consideration, where the bank does in fact continue in business and incurs new obligations incident thereto. Hurd v. Kelly, 78 N. Y. 588, 34 Am. Rep. 567 [affirming 17 Hun (N. Y.) 327 note]; Hurd v. Green, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 327.

Want of consideration.— Recovery upon a bond may be prevented by a want of consideration. Mt. Pleasant v. Hobart, 25 Kan. 719; Lee v. Wisner, 38 Mich. 82; State v. Bartlett, 30 Miss. 624; Long v. Gilliam, 28 Mo. 560; Aberdeen v. Honey, 8 Wash. 251, 35 Pac. 1097. Contra, Meek v. Frantz, 171 Pa. St. 632, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 117, 33 Atl. 413. So a plea of want of consideration has been sustained, where it appeared that being evidence thereof,[90] and every bond from the solemnity of the instrument is said to carry with it an internal evidence of good consideration which will be sufficient to support the agreement.[91]

the consideration was the sale of a patent right to a certain article for which no patent had ever been issued (Brown v. Wright, 17 Ark. 9), and in case of a meritorious consideration as the duty to provide for a wife or child (Matter of James, 146 N. Y. 78, 40 N. E. 876, 66 N. Y. St. 246, 48 Am. St. Rep. 774 [affirming 78 Hun (N. Y.) 121, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 992, 60 N. Y. St. 184]), and where the consideration was ultra vires (Wimer v. Overseers of Poor, 104 Pa. St. 317), and where the obligor's name was forged (McHugh v. Schuylkill, 67 Pa. St. 391, 5 Am. Rep. 445). Again a bond executed to release a steamboat seized under proceedings of which the court had no jurisdiction has been held to be without consideration. Ford v. Fuget, 29 Ind. 52. And the simple liability as surety has been declared not to be a valuable consideration sufficient to sustain a bond for the payment of a sum of money as a debt. Jefferson v. Tunnell, 2 Del. Ch. 135. But if no consideration was contemplated by the parties it has been decided that equity will not relieve a principal or surety from liability merely for want of consideration. Meek v. Frantz, 171 Pa. St. 632, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 117, 33 Atl. 413. And a bond will not be invalid because no consideration passed directly between the obligor and obligee, it being sufficient if some consideration passed to a coöbligor. Robertson v. Findley, 31 Mo. 384.

Bond exceeding requirements.— A bond which exceeds the requirements either of an order of court therefor or of the agreement between the parties will, so far as it exceeds such requirements, be considered as without consideration. Young v. Schlosser, 65 Ind. 225; Wanters v. Van Vorst, 28 N. J. Eq.103.

Contractors' bonds.— A bond entered into and given concurrent with the execution and delivery of a contract, and as a part thereof, is supported by a sufficient consideration, as it will also be if subsequently given, provided the giving of the contract was conditioned for the execution of a bond. Mackenzie v. Edinburg School Trustees, 72 Ind. 189; Smith v. Molleson, 148 N. Y. 241, 42 N. E. 669 [affirming 74 Hun (N. Y.) 606, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 653, 57 N. Y. St. 250]. But if the giving of the bond be subsequent to the awarding of a contract and was no inducement thereto, in the absence of a new consideration the bond will be considered as a mere gratuity and invalid. Ring v. Kelly, 10 Mo. App. 411. See also Peck v. Harris, 57 Mo. App. 467. But see Winfield v. Paulus Architectural Co., 77 Mo. App. 370.

Substitution of bond for another.— If a bond is executed without any consideration and subsequently another security is given in exchange or substitution therefor, the original want of consideration follows and attaches to the subsequent bond and renders it void. McDaniel v. Grace, 15 Ark. 465; Campbell v. Cypress Hills Cemetery, 41 N. Y. 34.

Where a bottomry bond has been accepted as security for an advance, a bond subsequently executed as security for such sum and in consideration thereof is invalid for want of consideration, unless such subsequent bond was a part of the same transaction. 2. Failure of Consideration. In case of a failure of consideration, as where it proves to be a mere nullity, or where though good at the time of entering into the agreement it wholly fails before either party has received any benefit or sustained any loss or detriment thereunder, the agreement will not be binding.[92]

3. Illegal Consideration. It is a general proposition that if the consideration is illegal the bond will be void. As in contracts, however, the question of entirety of consideration would probably be a factor in determining the validity of the bond, for if incapable of severance if part is illegal it will all be, but if the consideration be such that it is capable of division and the illegal fact can be eliminated from the rest, leaving an entire and sufficient consideration, the bond may nevertheless be enforced.[93]

G. Validity of Assent — 1. Effect of Duress. Bonds executed under duress are void.[94] If, however, all the parties to the bond did not execute it under duress then the bond will be only void as to those who so executed it.[95] And the burden of proof is upon the party claiming duress to establish his contention.[96]

2. Effect of Fraud. It is a general principle of the common law that fraud vitiates all contracts, and this rule applies likewise in the case of bonds.[97] And

What constitutes duress.—A bond will be void for duress where executed under fear of unlawful imprisonment (Whitefield v. Longfellow, 13 Me. 146), or to obtain release therefrom (Bowker v. Lowell, 49 Me. 429). But the fact that a person is unlawfully detained in custody does not, it has been decided, avoid a bond voluntarily and freely given by him. Whitefield v. Longfellow, 13 Me. 146. See Pflaum v. McClintock, 130 Pa. St. 369, 18 Atl. 734. Again a bond has been held void for duress where given to secure the release of property which has been illegally levied upon. Perry v. Hensley, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 381, 61 Am. Dec. 164; Collins v. Westbury, 2 Bay (S. C.) 211, 1 Am. Dec. 643; Sasportas v. Jennings, 1 Bay (S. C.) 470. Contra, Hazelrigg v. Donaldson, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 445. But a bond required of a public officer as a condition to the retention of his position is not void for duress (Smith v. U. S., (Ariz. 1896) 45 Pac. 341; Howgate v. U. S., 3 App. Cas. (D. C.) 277; State v. Harney, 57 Miss. 863; Sooy v. State, 41 N. J. Y.) 431); nor where taken by authority of law by an officer who holds property by virtue of legal process (Shirley v. Byrnes, 34 Tex. 625). Nor does a threat of resorting to legal prosecution of a person constitute duress. Hamilton v. Lockhart, 158 Pa. St. 452, 27 Atl. 1077; Fulton v. Hood, 34 Pa. St. 365, 75 Am. Dec. 664.

if there is at the time a bond is entered into any wilful misrepresentation of circumstances or concealment of facts, so that the surety enters into a covenant or contract which he otherwise would not, fraud being thus in fact practised upon him, he will be discharged from liability on his undertaking.[98] But to constitute fraud under such circumstances it has been declared that the misstatement must be false and known to be such, and of a matter material to the contract not equally within the knowledge of the party imposed upon and relied upon by him to his injury; and in case of concealment it must likewise be of a matter material to the contract, known to the fraudulent party but not to the other, and not equally within his power to know.[99] A bond cannot, however, be impeached by an obligor who has knowledge of the fraud before he executes the contract,[1] and the fraud of a coöbligor in inducing a person to execute a bond will not relieve him from liability where the obligee did not participate therein,[2] nor will the fraud of a third party.[3]

3. Effect of Mistake. A bond should be construed and given an effect according to the lawful intention of the parties thereto; and where such intention can be ascertained from the terms of the bond it will not be invalidated by a mere technical defect or clerical error.[4]

But see Vrooman v. Phelps, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 177. And in Armstrong v. McConnell, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 32, a similar doctrine is asserted, it being declared that relief must be sought in a court of equity.

H. Validity of Bonds Exacted Colore Officii. A bond exacted by a judge or other public officer under the pretended authority of his office, and which he is not legally authorized to require, will be void.[5] It has been held, however, in other cases that though a bond is taken which is not authorized by any statute such bond, if it possesses the requisites of a common-law bond, may be enforced as such.[6]

Application of rule illustrated.— Bonds containing conditions not imposed by statute or different conditions are declared in New York to be included in the rule stated in the text and therefore void. People v. Mitchell, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 466; People v. Locke, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 443; Hoogland v. Hudson, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 343; People v. Meighan, 1 Hill (N. And a bond purporting to be an appeal-bond in a criminal case which substantially conforms to such a bond in civil actions but which is not required nor authorized by law creates no liability on the part of the sureties. People v. Cabannes, 20 Cal. 525. Again where a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction of the action a bond taken by him for the return or release of property seized in replevin proceedings will be void. Caffrey v. Dudgeon, 38 Ind. 512, 10 Am. Rep. 126; Florrance v. Goodin, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 111. See also Counts v. Harlan, 78 Ala. 551, construing Ala. Code, §§ 4005, 4021, as to execution of a search warrant requiring the property to be taken before a magistrate but giving no authority to take a forthcoming bond. And such a bond will be given no validity by the fact that it is executed in conformity with an order of court directing the release of property in judicial custody upon the execution of a bond. Alexander v. Silbernagel, 27 La. Ann. 557. But it has been decided in another case that though a bond is given in pursuance of an order of a court which has no authority to issue such an order yet, if the bond conforms to the statute, it is valid as a statutory bond and may be enforced as such. McCrosky v. Riggs, 9 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 107. Again, where a party who was not entitled to a new trial as a matter of strict legal right was granted the same by the court, in the exercise of its discretion, upon grounds not enumerated in the statute, it was declared that the court might require a bond to be executed in order to protect the prevailing party from losing his rights under the judgment already rendered, and such a bond was held not to be exacted colore officii and therefore not invalid. Brenzinger v. American Exch. Bank, 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. 536, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 775. And the execution of a bond for a larger amount than required and with one surety instead of two will not render it void as taken colore officii (Adee v. Adee, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 46); nor will the fact that it is not according to statute (McGowen v. Deyo, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 340). So also the taking of a bond by the overseers of the poor as an indemnity against the expenses of supporting a poor person has been held not to be a violation of a statute prohibiting an officer from taking any security by color of his office. Turner v. Hadden, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 480.

"Color of office" construed.— Under a New York act bonds taken in that state by officers by color of office were declared void. As used in this act the words "color of office" were construed as meaning some wrongful act committed by an officer under the pretended authority of his office. Decker v. Judson, 16 N. Y. 439, construing 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. p. 286, § 59.

6. When may operate as common-law bond. — Warfield v. Davis, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 33; Hanna v. McKenzie, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 314, 43 Am. Dec. 122. Thus it has been so held where such a bond has been taken in replevin (Wolfe v. McClure, 79 Ill. 564); where a bond has been given for the appearance of a person and he has been discharged thereunder (State v. Cannon, 34 Iowa 322); where given

I. Validity of Statutory Bonds — 1. In General. A bond to be good as a statutory bond should in general comply in respect to its conditions and execution with the requirements of the act under which given.[7] But an obligor will not be permitted to take advantage of an omission of a condition where such omission is beneficial to him.[8]

2. Complying Substantially With Statute. As a general rule if a statute prescribes what the substance of a bond shall be, the fact that it slightly varies from the form prescribed will not invalidate it, provided it includes substantially such obligations as are imposed by the act and allows every defense given by law.[9] But if a statute declares all bonds void which do not comply with the requirements therein prescribed, the statute in such a case should be strictly followed.[10] to pay money into court at the return of a fieri facias (Lampton v. Taylor, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 273); and where possession of property has been retained or obtained thereby (Brady v. Butts, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 127; Todd v. Gordy, 29 La. Ann. 498).

10. Whitsett v. Womack, 8 Ala. 466; Central Bank v. Kendrick, Dudley (Ga.) 66;

3. CONTAINING CONDITIONS NOT REQUIRED. A statutory bond will not be void because it contains conditions in excess of those prescribed by statute, but such conditions, where severable from the rest, may be rejected as surplusage and the instrument will be valid as to those which comply with the statutory requirements, unless the act under which it is executed prescribes the form of the bond and provides that it shall be taken in no other form.[11] But where the authority to take the bond is wholly derived from statute it has been decided that if it contains conditions not required thereby, or is in a penalty greater than prescribed and is not voluntarily given, the entire bond will be void.[12]

4. VALIDITY AS COMMON-LAW BONDS. A statutory bond may be good at common law, though insufficient under the statute because of non-compliance with its requirements, provided it does not violate public policy or contravene any statute.[13]

And it may be enforced by common-law remedies.[14] But it cannot be so enforced where it has never been delivered to, or ratified by, the obligee,[15] or where the condition upon which it was executed has not been complied with.[16] And a bond given to a judge of probate by one acting as trustee under an illegal appointment is not good as a common-law bond against the coöbligors, where it was signed by them under the belief that the trustee was subject to the jurisdiction of the probate court.[17] Again, where because of the giving of a bond the court appointed a certain person as curator of an estate, it was decided that as the court had no power to make such an appointment the bond could not be sustained even as a common-law bond.[18]

5. When Statute Has Been Amended or Repealed. Though a statute under which a bond is executed may be subsequently amended or repealed the validity and force of the bond will not be thereby affected, for though it may be insufficient as a statutory bond by the subsequent act, a common-law action may nevertheless be maintained thereon.[19] And a bond void by the act under which it is executed will not be validated by a subsequent general act.[20]

6. Where Statute Is Unconstitutional. If the statute which authorizes the execution of a bond and in conformity to which it is given is unconstitutional the bond will be void.[21]

J. What Is the Effect of Invalidity — 1. In General. While, under the rule that the law will not lend aid to the enforcement of a contract void in toto, and a bond wholly invalid must ordinarily be considered as inoperative,[22] it has been decided that a defective or invalid bond may be enforced where defects have been cured by waiver,[23] or where the parties thereto have ratified the contract, recognized its validity, or estopped themselves from objecting to the defects or invalidity.[24] Again, though a bond may be fatally defective it may be permissible under a statute to remedy the defect by the execution of a new bond.[25]

2. Partial Invalidity. Where the conditions of a bond consist of several different parts, and those which are not sustainable are severable from those which are, the bond, though void as to the former, will be good as to the latter.[26] And this rule applies in the case of statutory bonds which conform in part only to the requirements of the statute, unless it is expressly declared by such enactment that bonds shall be void which are not in conformity therewith,[27] in which case the entire bond will be void.[28] Again, a bond may be valid as to part of the obligors and void as to the rest.[29]

B. What Kind of Contract — 1. Whether Bond or Not. Resort to the rules of construction may be necessary to determine whether an instrument is a bond or other contract.[32]

2. Whether Common-Law or Statutory Bond.[33] The form is not essential,[34] for a writing may upon its face and standing by itself constitute one kind of an instrument and yet by indorsement thereon it may be changed into a penal bond. In such case the material question is as to the effect of the agreement and that must be based upon a consideration of the language of the condition as well as of that in the body of the contract since it is the entire writing which expresses what the parties intended.[35] And if a bond is given under a statutory requirement it is not a necessary requisite to its validity that it should be conditioned in the precise language of the statute.[36] So, where a bond is not in the language of the statute yet contains the substance of such language the rest may be disregarded as mere redundance.[37] But in the absence of anything showing a differ-

Court of equity will construe a penal bond even though a court of law may have done so previously. Clamorgan v. Guisse, 1 Mo. 141. See also, generally, EQUITY.

32. Juliaetta Tramway Co. v. Vollmer, (Ida. 1895) 39 Pac. 1115, where, although the contention of respondent was that the writing was a contract for the sale of land, it was held to be a bond.

As to rules of construction see infra, III, D.

Illustrations.—So if the parties bind themselves each to the other in a penal sum to do certain things the obligation may constitute a bond. Wood v. Willis, 110 Mass. 454. And the agreement may have the force and effect of a delivery bond where a certain sum of money is to be paid on default of an obligation to deliver property on a specified day. Leverenz v. Haines, 32 Ill. 357. And although an obligation sued on purports to be a final bill yet if the sums named in the penalty and condition correspond it will be treated as a simple obligation or single bill; and in such case it is not error to render a verdict and judgment therein for the amount of the bond with continuing interest from the date the same fell due. Fleming v. Toler, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 310.

As where the obligation on the back of a promissory note was: "This note is given on the condition that the signer will cause trustees to assess damages . . . the award of said trustees to be subtracted from the amount of within note." In such a case the payee cannot recover the amount by merely setting up the instrument and alleging breach of contract but must plead his actual damages. Ellett v. Eberts, 74 Iowa 597, 598, 38 N. W. 426.

Contra.— A statutory bond to be valid and effectual must in every essential particular strictly conform to the statute so that a bond directed by statute to be taken to the state is void when taken payable to the governor. Lawton v. State, 5 Tex. 270. See also Sullivan v. Alexander, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 233.

Illustrations.— The fact that a conservator's bond is taken to the people of the state instead of to the county treasurer does not invalidate it, and it is good as a common-law obligation and may be enforced, especially so where no law is violated and public policy is not contravened. Richardson v. People, 85 Ill. 495. So where a collector by virtue of a bond not in the form required by the statute obtained money he and his sureties were estopped from denying its validity, and where it was a good common-law bond and was not prohibited by public policy or by statute it was obligatory. Coons v. People, 76 Ill. 383. So where a bond was not in conformity with the statute but was entirely variant from the condition prescribed therein, it was regarded as a voluntary common-law bond. Abrahams v. Jones, 20 Ill. App. 83. A bond given under a statute is valid where it is given to the treasurer instead of to the town in its corporate name, even though it names no individual and the statute requires that it shall be to the town in its corporate name. Judd v. Read, 6 U. C. C. P. 362 [affirmed in Todd v. Perry, 20 U. C. Q. B. 649].

37. Probate Judge v. Ordway, 23 N. H. 198. See also Bell v. Furbush, 56 Me. 178; and supra, II, I, 2.

A bond which contains the conditions required by statute and also conditions in excess of those specified by statute is valid so far as it imposes obligations authorized by statute but the stipulations which are in excess of it may be rejected as surplusage. A different rule prevails where the bond falls so far short of the statutory requirements as to be invalid as an official bond. It may then be obligatory as a common-law bond unless prohibited by statute or against public policy. Lowe v. Guthrie, 4 Okla. 287, 44 Pac. 198 [citing Barnes v. Brookman, 107 Ill. 317; Murfree Off. Bonds, § 61]. See also supra, II, I, 3.

ent intention in the giving of a statutory bond it will be presumed that the intention of the parties was to execute such a bond as the law required, and although its terms may bear a broader construction the liability of sureties will be confined to the liability contemplated by the law in requiring such bond.[38] And if the form in which a bond is given is not prohibited by statute or the law, is not contrary to public policy but is founded upon a sufficient consideration, is intended to subserve a lawful purpose, and is entered into by competent parties, it is a valid contract at common law.[39] Again a statutory requirement that certain persons "shall give bond" does not impress upon the instrument given in conformity therewith the character implied by the word "shall," for if there is no coercion or duress[40] such bond is a voluntary one.[41]

C. What Law Governs.[42] It may fairly be inferred that a contract is made with reference to the law of the country where the parties happen to be, but if the contract is made with reference to the law of another country the law of the latter ordinarily governs in preference to that of the former. If, then, the law of the place of contract is intended to be invoked it must appear that the parties contracted in view of that law, or at least it must not appear that they contracted without such reference.[43] If, however, a bond is made in one state conditioned

38. Lowe v. Guthrie, 4 Okla. 287, 44 Pac. 198.

A voluntary bond, not an official one, is enforceable as a common-law bond, even though the conditions are more onerous than that required by statute for a bond for the same purpose. See also supra, II, A; and Bell v. Furbush, 56 Me. 178, as to when a bond should be construed by its language to be a common-law and not a statutory obligation, so that a compliance with its conditions is a satisfaction, and the obligor is not compelled to perform other acts prescribed by the statute but not so expressed.

That bond is valid as a common-law or voluntary bond though not in conformity with the exact wording of the statute. See Richardson v. People, 85 Ill. 495; Coons v. People, 76 Ill. 383; Abrahams v. Jones, 20 Ill. App. 83; Judd v. Read, 6 U. C. C. P. 362 [affirmed in Todd v. Perry, 20 U. C. Q. A second or substituted bond containing the same stipulations as another bond is not the execution or making of a contract, but can only be regarded in the light of evidence of the contract and if, until the substituted bond was executed, neither the writings nor the proof furnished the slightest information that the contract was to be performed anywhere else than at the place where it was entered into, then its binding efficacy must be determined by the laws of that place. to be construed by the laws of another state, and no points in the law of the latter are shown to differ from those of the former in regard to the legal effect of the bond, its construction will be determined according to the laws of the state where the instrument is made.[44]

D. Rules of Construction — 1. Intention — a. In General. The contract of guaranty or of surety is subject to the same rules of interpretation as other contracts requiring the bond to be enforced according to the parties' intention;[45] and the cardinal rule of construction necessitates that such intention be ascertained because of its fundamental and preëminent importance.[46] The court must therefore endeavor to so construe a bond as to effectuate the meaning of the parties at the time the paper was executed embodying their evident purpose;[47] and if the contract is not ambiguous but plain the parties must abide thereby,[48] although the letter of the condition will be departed from to carry into effect such intention,[49] which will be enforced, even though it differs from the literal wording of the bond.[50]

b. Attendant Circumstances and Situation of Parties. In case of ambiguity or doubtful construction the obligation should be construed in the light of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the bond, the object to be accomplished, the situation of the parties, the relations existing, and the evident intention of the parties in making the bond.[51] So the nature of the duty of the obligor and the character of the obligee must also be regarded as explanatory of the intent.[52]

c. Entire Instrument Considered. The entire instrument is what expresses the actual contract, therefore the whole writing must be considered and regard must be had to all its parts so that the intention may, if possible, be gathered therefrom.[53]

d. Law and Custom or Usage. If a bond is given under authority of a law, that which is not expressed but should have been incorporated is included in the bond, while that which is not required by law is excluded.[54] So a bond given under a code provision incorporates a condition of such code therein as fully as if it were made expressly a part thereof, for when an agreement is silent or obscure as to a particular subject, the law and usage[55] become a portion of it, constitute a supplement to it, and interpret it; and this applies to a code provision which constitutes a limitation upon a surety's liability.[56]

e. Transposition, Rejection, and Addition of Words. In construing a bond or the conditions thereof the court will, where the intention is manifest from the instrument itself, transpose or reject meaningless and contradictory words and supply by addition an accidental omission to give effect to the real meaning of the parties, but ordinarily this does not include the addition of words not in the obligation or the rejection of written words in order to supply an intent different from that which is manifest.[57] But enough should remain, where useless and unnecessary words are rejected, to make the bond sensible.[58]

f. When Intention May Affect Bond's Taking Effect. A bond takes effect and speaks from the date of delivery not from the date of the bond, in the absence of something to indicate a different intention;[59] but where it appears from the language of the instrument that it was intended to cover a certain period or incur a certain liability, although anterior to its delivery it will, when delivered, relate back to and take effect in accordance with the terms and intention of the parties.[60]

Law existing at time of performance may govern an undertaking, for a contract may be entered into subject to the power of the legislature to change the law in respect to what the judgment might include. If a bond is taken to "A or B," who are agents, to settle an estate and make distribution, the conjunction "or" in said bond will be construed "and." Outlaw v. Farmer, 71 N. C. 31. And the word "pounds" may be supplied in a bond, where it is evident that that kind of money was intended. Coles v. Hulme, 8 B. & C. 568, 7 L. J. K. B. O. S. 29, 3 M. & R. 86, 32 Rev. Rep. 486, 15 E. C. L. 282. Again, if a bond omits to say expressly to where the money secured by it is to be paid, and it is plain from the context, the court supplies the words in the particular place where they ought to have been by intendment from the rest of the instrument. Allen v. Coy, 7 U. C. Q. B. 419. And see note to Coles v. Hulme, 8 B. & C. 568, 7 L. J. K. B. O. S. 29, 3 M. & R. 86, 32 Rev. Rep. 486, 15 E. C. L. 282. So where the final conclusion "then this obligation to be void" was wanting, it appearing to have been accidentally omitted, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff did not pay the sums of money mentioned in the condition, assuming that such breach of the condition made the bond void, according to the evident intent, though not so expressed. g. With Respect to Statutory and Judicial Bonds. Although the presumption exists that the parties intended to execute such a bond as the law required,[61] and notwithstanding a statutory obligation has in general the effect which in reason must have been intended by the statute,[62] yet it will not be assumed that the legislative enactment was intended to import to an instrument an effect different from that intended by the parties.[63] But the statute must be considered in construing the language used, as must also the intention of the law, the court, and the parties;[64] and an instrument executed in pursuance of a decree of the court is to be construed according to the intention of the tribunal which directed its execution.[65]

2. Memoranda and Indorsements. Memoranda or indorsements made upon a bond at the time of its execution may become a part thereof, where it is evidently so intended by the parties.[66]

3. Particular and General Words or Recitals. The condition of a bond is frequently preceded by a recital of certain explanatory terms, and these recitals will frequently operate in restraint of the condition, though the words of it imply a greater liability than the recital contemplates, and the general words of a clause obligation, and not to acknowledge one already created. Tomlinson v. Ousatonic Water Co., 44 Conn. 99.

63. Sturgis v. Rogers, 26 Ind. 1. So it is decided that in construing the obligations of a deputy sheriff's bond the intent of the parties governs and not the rules governing the construction of the sheriff's official bond. Mullen v. Whitmore, 74 N. C. 477.

As to the maxim applicable to other deeds and contracts, namely, Modus et conventio vincunt legem, the form of the agreement and the convention of the parties overrule the law. See Gott v. Gandy, 2 C. L. R. 392, 2 E. & B. 845, 4 H. & N. 343, 18 Jur. 310, 23 L. J. Q. B. 1, 2 Wkly. Rep. 38, 75 E. C. L. 845.

If, however, there are two constructions, one with the law, and the other against it, the intendment will be assumed to be that in favor of the law. Fussell v. Daniel, 10 Exch. 581, 24 L. J. Exch. 130.

64. Statute to what extent considered.— "We notice the kind of bond the law authorises the judge to receive, and requires him to exact. Thus we know what the parties must have intended, much better than by any general rules of construction; and we are bound to give to the language used, such construction as will give effect to the intention of the law, and of the court, and of the parties concerned, if it can be done consistently with the language used, however unskillfully the instrument may be drawn, and though some of the expressions used might even be understood to import a different meaning, if they were to be construed merely by the ordinary rules of interpretation, and without that same light which the statutes afford us as to the intention of the parties and the probate court." Probate Judge v. Ordway, 23 N. H. 198, 206.

65. Bond under order of court.— Irvine v. Barrett, 2 Grant (Pa.) 73. And where a bond was not given in pursuance of an order of court, but under an agreement and was "to abide and perform" the decree in the suit it was declared to be not merely equivalent to a bond "to abide" the event of the suit. Griswold's Petition, 13 R. I. 125.

66. Osborne v. Fulton, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 233 (words were written across the end); Hughes v. Sanders, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 360; Nichols v. Douglass, 8 Mo. 49; Shermer v. Beale, 1 Wash. (Va.) 11 (indorsement was signed by the parties). So an indorsement for a particular purpose and limiting liability on the bonds becomes a part thereof for the purpose specified (Harnsberger v. Geiger, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 138); and the general condition of a bond may be qualified by a clause added at the end of the formal part of a bond (Holmes v. Hubbard, 60 N. Y. 183); and the rule that it constitutes part of the bond holds good even though such memoranda is without date, and is signed only by the obligee (Gordon v. Frasier, 2 Wash. (Va.) 130).

Qualifications of rule.— But the indorsement must be made at the time of the execution of the bond (Nichols v. Douglass, 8 Mo. 49), although where the memoranda was signed by the parties it was held a part of the bond, even though made a day after its execution (Shermer v. Beale, 1 Wash. (Va.) 11); and it was decided in an early case that a defeasance must be of equal dignity with the writing and therefore a memorandum without seal indorsed upon a bond does not vary its condition (Creswell v. Dean, 1 Hill (S. C.) 227).

When not a part of bond.—A note or memorandum, made before signing, of the insertion of certain words is not a part of the bond. White v. Johns, 24 Minn. 387. Nor is a memorandum a part thereof as between the plaintiff and the signers when written on the left of, and opposite to, or below, the signatures in these words: "We pay our pro rata share according to our amount of goods sold." Cockroft v. Claflin, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 464.

may be restrained by a particular recital.[67] Although a recital not plainly inconsistent with the condition of a bond will not control or limit its operation,[68] and a condition which is not repugnant to such condition will not be rendered nugatory by the recitals.[69] So recitals may be merely descriptive of a person's legal capacity.[70]

4. Reference to Other Papers. It may be generally stated that a bond may incorporate, by reference expressly made thereto, other contracts, papers, or written instruments, or it may be conditioned for the performance of certain specific agreements set forth in such instruments, so as to embody the same therein as a part of the obligation thereof with all the stipulations, limitations, or restrictions mentioned in the referred-to papers, in which case the bond and the papers referred to should be read together and construed as a whole, although if only specific parts of another contract be referred to, only so much of said writing is incorporated as it is evident the parties intended to embody or rely upon.[71]

Canada.— Fleury v. Moore, 34 U. C. Q. B. 319. "I am of opinion that the recital does not so override and restrain the condition, as to render void and nugatory that part of it, the breach of which is the foundation of this suit. The various authorities on this point seem to me to resolve themselves into determining that the intention of the parties, as expressed in the whole instrument, shall govern, and that when the court can clearly gather that intention, they will construe the condition accordingly, and that it shall be restrained by the recital for that purpose. Such is Lord Ellenborough's exposition of the law in Parker v. Wise, (6 M. & S. 239, 18 Rev. Rep. 359.) He observes that all the cases from Lord Arlington v. Merrick, downwards, agree that the condition shall be taken with reference to the recital, and may be explained and restrained by it. 'But all this imports that it is to be gathered from the recital that the intention of the parties requires the condition should be qualified.' 5. Strict or Liberal Construction — a. In General. Ordinarily a claim against sureties is strictissimi juris, and no implications are to be made in giving construction to the terms of an obligation not clearly embraced within the language used;[72] nor is the contract to be extended beyond the fair scope of its terms, for it is well settled that sureties are only chargeable according to the strict terms of the bond.[73] It has also been decided that the construction of bonds taken under the provisions of the law is more rigorous than that of bonds taken voluntarily,[74] although it has been asserted that statutory bonds taken by an officer of the court in the absence of the obligee are to be liberally construed.[75] But in construing the covenants of a voluntary common-law bond not given in conformity with the statute, the intention of such statute becomes immaterial and the liability of the obligor will not be extended beyond the precise terms of the undertaking which is to be strictly construed.[76]

b. Against or For Obligor. A recital may operate against the parties to a bond as a conclusive admission of the facts recited, and the construction should also be most strongly against the obligor, where the bond is a single one. If the bond has a condition annexed with a doubtful meaning, such condition being for his benefit should be taken most strongly in favor of the obligor.[77] So if two constructions may be given, one making the obligors liable the other not, that which makes against the obligors will be taken, since they will not be permitted to escape liability because equivocal expressions have been employed.[78]

E. With Respect to Parties — 1. In General. The rights and obligations of parties to a bond and their capacity and character thereunder must depend largely upon the rules of construction applicable to the particular case, so that it is impossible to assert a definite guiding and controlling rule comprehensive enough to embrace all the various contingencies which may arise.[79]

79. The principal elements, however, are the terms of the bond, the consideration, mutuality, object to be accomplished, or the purpose or legally ascertainable intent of the parties. These being determined a basis ex-

2. Joint, Several, and Joint and Several Bonds.[80] In determining whether the parties are bound jointly, severally, or jointly and severally, recourse must first be had to the exact language used to evidence the intention, although the terms employed are not of themselves necessarily conclusive. If the words unequivocally express joinder then no difficulty would ordinarily be experienced, but there may be words of severance or the obvious meaning of the parties may show a several interest; intention and interest therefore are of primary importance.[81] So a bond may be joint as to part of the obligors and several as to part, and in this connection the assent and knowledge of the others as to the execution by an obligor is important as is also the time of said execution.[82] In the case of joint and several bonds, however, the words most frequently used are "jointly and severally"[83] and "we bind ourselves" or "we bind ourselves and each of us," etc., and even though the words "we bind ourselves," etc., "severally" are employed, yet the bond may be a joint and several one. Again, the fact that each surety signs for a certain sum will make them none the less jointly and ists for the ascertainment of the relative situation, rights, and duties of the parties as well as the character sustained by them under the bond and the exact nature and extent of liabilities, if any exist, with the limitations and restraints imposed, if any. Thus a bond from A to C may impose no restraint on C as to the purposes specified in the bond. Presbury v. Fisher, 18 Mo. 50. And where it does not appear that there was any benefit to the plaintiff, or that he was in the minds of the parties to the bond and guaranty, and that the obligation was not to pay plaintiff, but another, he can maintain no action. Simson v. Brown, 68 N. Y. 355 [reversing 6 Hun (N. Y.) 251]. So a bond from two guardians may bind each other equally as between themselves, where there is no proof that one was a surety. Kincaid v. McLain, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 68. And if upon the whole bond the intent is not to bind the heirs of the obligors they will not be bound. Huston v. Cantril, 11 Leigh (Va.) 142. Again a coöbligor, though described as surety, may be bound to perform the condition. Ward v. Johnston, 1 Munf. (Va.) 45. And a bond to "trustees" may run to individuals who are trustees. Van Winkle v. Blackford, 28 W. Va. 670. So a bond which omits the payee's name is payable to bearer. Keene Five-Cent Sav. Bank v. Lyon County, 90 Fed. 523.

Signers of a bond may be principals and jointly and severally liable, as in case of signers of a bond for the admission of a person to the insane hospital as a paying patient conditioned to pay all charges. Enslen v. Alabama Insane Hospital, 113 Ala. 658, 21 So. 74. So a bond given by a school-district treasurer and joined in by others as sureties is several as well as joint. Com. v. Joyce, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 616, 40 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 191.

The rule applied to administrators and guardians.— Whether a bond will have the effect to make each co-administrator liable for the acts of the other will depend upon the intention of the parties to be gathered from the instrument itself, although, generally, if they execute a joint bond, they are liable for the acts of each other. Litte v. Knox, 15 Ala. 576, 50 Am. Dec. 145. And this rule applies to guardians and executors unless the bond itself shows a contrary purpose. Williams v. Harrison, 19 Ala. 277. And a surviving guardian comes within the rule, although one acting as sole guardian before the execution of the joint bond is not subject thereto. Williams v. Harrison, 19 Ala. 277. See also, generally, Executors and Administrators; Guardian and Ward.

82. Joint as to part and several as to part. — Baber v. Cook, 11 Leigh (Va.) 635. See also Lockhart v. Bell, 2 Hill (S. C.) 422; Nash v. Fugate, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 202, 18 Am. Rep. 640.

83. Under an early decision a rule has been stated as follows: The words "jointly and severally" must be construed distributively so as to apply as well to the obligors as to their heirs. "We bind ourselves" makes them joint obligors. "We bind our heirs, executors, and administrators" binds them jointly and "We bind each and every of them" binds them severally. Mitchell v. Darricott, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 145.

severally liable.[84] If the bond is joint in its terms and there is nothing indicating a several interest or liability, and the instrument in all its parts evidences a joint purpose, then it is a joint bond or the liability thereon is joint,[85] and this, even though the obligation is executed at different times, provided the other obligors had knowledge.[86] If a several interest is expressly or by construction clearly evidenced by the terms and conditions of the bond as being that exclusively intended by the parties it will be deemed a several obligation, even though a part of the language used is that of a joint or a joint and several obligation.[87]

3. Representative Capacity — a. In General. When a bond is given by or to persons in a representative capacity, the first consideration is the character and authority of the representative; the next, is the form and purpose of the bond and its validity. These being ascertained and the obligation being legal and valid in these respects, the next inquiry is upon whom does the liability fall, what is the nature and extent of such liability, and whether it is limited to the representative capacity indicated or is a personal or individual obligation. If the recitals or other parts of the bond show the representative capacity of one and his authority, and the intent to bind the person for whom he acts is manifest, then the principal will be bound, even though the instrument is signed by the agent with his own seal.[88] On the other hand the recitals and signature may expressly indicate the agency, and yet the agent be personally liable;[89] although

A joint obligation implies unity, of time, of act, and extent of obligation. b. Trustees. In the case of trustees, the obligatory clause of the bond, the condition as expressed, the form of the signatures, the nature, character, and purposes of the instrument, the extent of the trustees' authority, and even extrinsic evidence are to be considered in determining whether the trustees are liable as such or individually responsible. So the character of the persons whom they purport to represent, as whether it is an individual, a private, or a municipal, quasi-municipal or similar corporation, may affect the result.[91]

F. With Respect to Scope of Conditions and Extent of Liability — 1. In General. It is a general rule that one incurs the precise liability nominated in the bond, and he can relieve himself by performance of the conditions,[92] and a

Again, if A executes a bond for B and C, it is the bond of A only. Kennerly v. Weed, 1 Mo. 672. And if a bond is given by two persons composing a firm and two others as sureties, it is the bond of the signers individually and not of the firm. U. S. v. Lawrence, 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 229, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,574. But where in a bond for a title A signed as "attorney in fact" for B, B was held liable and not A. Eckhart v. Reidel, 16 Tex. 62.

Where a cashier of a bank wishes to evade personal liability on a bond signed by him, the signatures being followed by the word "cashier" he must not only show that it was signed by him for or on behalf of the bank, but also that the bank had power to execute such an instrument, that he had authority to sign it, and that such facts were known and understood by the obligee. Gardner v. Cooper, 9 Kan. App. 587, 58 Pac. 230, 60 Pac. 540.

90. If an agent executes a bond without authority this cannot bind the sureties in favor of one who makes no inquiry of them as to genuineness of the bond before he acts thereunder to his disadvantage. Malic v. Fox, (Cal. 1893) 33 Pac. 441.

91. Outside of these considerations and the general rules of construction, hereinbefore noted, which may be applicable, no definite governing rule can be deduced from the decisions on bonds which cover trustees' liability.

Georgia.— Bowen v. Penny, 76 Ga. 743, a forthcoming bond where trustee was held to be individually liable.

Indiana.— Hobbs v. Cowden, 20 Ind. 310, township trustee personally liable.

New Jersey.— Dayton v. Warne, 43 N. J. L. 659, church trustees; where it was held to be the personal bond of the individuals named and not of the corporation.

New York.— St. Peter's Episcopal Church v. Varian, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 644 (where upon description in bond and signature, the trustees were liable and not the president of the board, personally); Taft v. Brewster, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 334, 6 Am. Dec. 280 (a case of church trustees; and bond was decided to be that of the individuals and not of the society).

Texas.— Elwell v. Tatum, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 397, 24 S. W. 71, 25 S. W. 434, where the trustees were not personally bound, in view of understanding at time bond executed.

See also, generally, Trusts.

Court commissioners who execute a bond for titles should not exceed their authority, but should fulfil the conditions of the bond or the obligors will be personally bound. Whiteside v. Jennings, 19 Ala. 784.

Executrix.— Although a bond is given to "Sophia Moss, executrix, and Ralph Moss and David Moss, executors," etc., "to them and each of them severally and individually" to indemnify them in case of a devastavit, yet the words "executrix," etc., are descriptio personæ merely and the bond runs to the obligees personally. Moss v. Cohen, 11 Misc. (N. Y.) 184, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 1078, 66 N. Y. St. 332.

Nature or class of corporation may affect the condition and validity of a bond. See Board of Education v. Robinson, 81 Minn. 305, 84 N. W. 105, 83 Am. St. Rep. 374; Green v. Dyersburg, 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 477, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,756.

Applications of rule, generally.—This principle would also apply where a bond is given to pay debts, for it is decided that such a bond includes the debts paid by the obligee and those which he is liable to pay, even though for the latter he would have a remedy over. Johnson v. Smith, 2 Root (Conn.) 414. And a bond which admits an existing indebtedness conditioned to pay a fixed sum, unless the obligors surrender a certain note, is a principal obligation to pay the sum admitted as due, subject to a resolutive condition which is the surrender of the note. Lenoir v. Kain, 1 Rob. (La.) 233. But words may be construed in such a manner as will signify the right to recover rather than the fact of recovery. Parham v. Cobb, 7 La. Ann. 157. And a bond to pay assessments covers those levied under a subsequent proceeding having the same general object as that pending when the bond was executed. Holmes v. Standard Oil Co., 183 Ill. 70, 55 N. E. 647 [affirming 82 Ill. App. 476]. And responsibility so incurred cannot be evaded by a party by showing that he has entered into similar obligations with others, for he is responsible upon each, if each is broken.[93] This rule also acts as a limitation upon liability, for one has a right to prescribe the terms upon which his liability is to depend, and when not acting, so as to mislead or deceive others, he is entitled to the letter and spirit of his undertaking.[94] Again, the ordinary and reasonable import of the language used should govern, and a bond which confers upon the obligee a right to do certain things depending upon the exercise of his judgment or discretion means a conditions unknown to the obligee cannot be set up by the surety. U. S. v. Boyd, 8 App. Cas. (D. C.) 440. So a bond may have the force and effect of a stay bond, and as such a valid enforceable obligation, where it does not by its terms, or by implication constitute an exclusive remedy. Seeberger v. Wyman, 108 Iowa 527, 79 N. W. 290. And a non-performance of a condition to deliver property makes the bond a liquidated demand for the amount thereof. Shelton v. Jackson, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 443, 49 S. W. 415. So a bond providing for the application of moneys to a specific debt, and assumed in consideration thereof, does not prevent the payment of the same by the obligee and his recovery of the amount of the bond. Skinner v. Mitchell, 5 Kan. App. 366, 48 Pac. 450.

Attorneys' fees.— A bond to pay a note will include attorney's fees (Morrison Stove Works v. Jones, (Tenn. Ch. 1899) 53 S. W. 217); and a building contract bond may include attorney's fees, notwithstanding Burns' Rev. Stat. Ind. (1894), § 7532, making conditional agreements for the payment of such fees void, if made part of any written evidence of indebtedness (American Surety Co. v. Lauber, 22 Ind. App. 326, 53 N. E. 793).

Bonds to secure indebtedness may be limited to present indebtedness or cover future debts according to the terms employed. Thus, where the words "all notes and other indebtedness" on which he "is liable" are used, only debts existing at the date of the bond are covered and not notes which were not renewable, afterward executed, and a condition to cover notes is not evidenced merely by an expression of opinion which does not show an agreement as to what is covered. Matter of Neff, 185 Pa. St. 98, 39 Atl. 830. But the express language may be such as to cover renewals of existing indebtedness as well as that in the future, and this notwithstanding a recital that the principals "shall pay the full amount of their indebtedness." Bond to secure deposits of county funds under a statute relates to the date of its taking and covers current amounts due the county therefrom, whether arising from deposits made before or thereafter, the condition being to "pay any and all deposits which may be deposited with it." Brown v. Wyandotte County, 58 Kan. 672, 50 Pac. 888 [citing Van Rensselaer v. Penniman, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 569; Ex p. Smith, 2 Montagu, D. & De G. 587; Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & B. 422]. And a bond by a state bank to keep account for all moneys deposited in the bank by a board of commissioners, and to pay the same, etc., covers a deposit evidenced by a time certificate irrespective of the board's authority to make a time deposit. Board Courthouse, etc., Com'rs v. Irish-American Bank, 68 Minn. 470, 71 N. W. 674.

Contractor's bonds.— A government contractor's bond to make full payments to all persons supplying him with labor and materials does not include unpaid wages due from a subcontractor, who has supplied materials and been paid in full (U. S. v. Farley, 91 Fed. 474), nor does a similar condition authorize a recovery to the use of laborers and materialmen (Lancaster v. Frescoln, 192 Pa. St. 452, 43 Atl. 961, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. (Pa.) 35), nor does such a condition cover scrapers nor any other tools or implements (Kilbourne, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Glann, 17 Ohio Cir. Ct. 162), and if a bond is merely that one contract to perform work and pay for labor material, it will not be construed so as to make him perform the work, etc. (Union Sewer Pipe, etc., Co. v. Olson, 82 Minn. 187, 84 N. W. 956). But the obligatory terms of builder's bond may include by reference to the contract a stipulation to satisfy the claims of materialmen and laborers (Morton v. Harvey, 57 Nebr. 304, 77 N. W. 808), and a condition to pay all claims for work and labor before liens should be filed provides for indemnification for liens whether valid or not which should be established on the property (Todd v. Phœnix Loan Assoc., 8 Kan. App. 254, 55 Pac. 501).

93. Collins v. Schlichter, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 349, 33 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 238. Nor will the express liability clearly contained in the body of the bond be restricted by the addition of figures to the sureties' names, nor by recitals in subsequent affidavits. 94. Hall v. Smith, 14 Bush (Ky.) 604, where a bond to account for and pay over money collected was decided to include only those moneys collected. See also People v. Breyfogle, 17 Cal. 504, 508, where Baldwin, J., says: "The true meaning of the cases is, that no strained construction is to be given to the obligations of sureties, and that it is not permissible to go beyond the fair import of the terms they employ in order to fasten upon them a liability."

reasonable and honest exercise thereof and not a wanton and capricious exercise of the right.[95] So the object of a penalty is to limit the obligation of the signers.[96]

2. COMMENCEMENT AND DURATION OF LIABILITY. General and indefinite words will be controlled by a recital specifying the time in which a condition is to be performed, and this will also limit the sureties' liability and determine whether it is a continuing one.[97] But notwithstanding the recitals in the bond, the time will not be extended by an implied condition beyond that which it was evidently intended by the terms of the obligation to cover.[98] As to bonds in general, however, resort must be had to the language employed and the intention and purposes contemplated to determine what time is covered by the condition. If upon its face it refers exclusively to the time of execution, then that time governs the acts and subject-matter,[99] or the liability specified may be that incurred simultaneously with the delivery and not simply a liability existing at the time the bond was delivered;[1] or the condition may include acts done before the execution;[2] or between the date and formal delivery;[3] or the obligation may extend beyond the time specified;[4] and ordinarily the condition will cover all transactions intended during the specific time mentioned,[5] and is limited thereto;[6] for the

controlling principle generally deducible from the decisions is that the terms of the undertaking limit a surety's liability.[7] The time conditioned for the doing of the specified act may, however, be affected by extrinsic acts done under a statute.[8]

3. Express, Implied, and Alternative Conditions. In the absence of express conditions a liability will not be construed into a bond which was not intended by the parties;[9] nor in the absence of mistake will a new condition be added where the express conditions clearly evidence that the bond is complete on its face.[10] And the meaning of words will not be enlarged so as to impose a duty other than that warranted by the legal construction thereof according to the obvious intent,[11] although that which is clearly implied as intended under the law to be done in performance of the express condition will be deemed a part of the obligation.[12] Conditions may, however, be expressly or impliedly in the alternative, and will be construed accordingly.[13]

4. Impossible, Illegal, or Repugnant Conditions. Any apparent repugnance in the condition of a bond must be reconciled by giving it effect according to the evident intent of the whole instrument;[14] and if some of the conditions are illegal and others legal and they are severable and separable the former may be disregarded and the latter enforced.[15] Again, where a bond is conditioned to do one of two things and one becomes impossible it is no reason for non-performance of the other.[16]

5. Independent and Dependent Conditions. In determining whether conditions are independent or dependent, technical expressions must yield to the real intention apparent from the instrument itself, and mutual covenants or acts are to be construed to be dependent unless a contrary intention appears.[17] Irrespective, however, of this general rule the determination of this question is beset with difficulties, for there are numerous conflicting decisions. If the intention is clear to make the contract either dependent or independent, the courts will enforce the obligation as made; but it is difficult to determine whether one promise be the consideration for another, or whether the performance and not the mere promise be the consideration. Again, in case of covenants, if part of the money is to be paid before performance on either side, or if part of the consideration has been received by the promisor, the covenants are independent. But this rule does not prevail where a different intention is apparent and the part unperformed is the essential consideration.[18]

6. Joint, Several, and Joint and Several Liability.[19] A joint bond may be treated in equity as several so far as to make the representatives of a deceased obligor proportionately liable.[20] So chancery will decree contribution for losses sustained and surplus advances made in case of joint obligors and the bankruptcy of one,[21] and a successful plea in an action against one of several on a bond discharges the other defendants unless infancy, bankruptcy, or other defense of a personal nature is pleaded.[22]

7. Performance[23]— a. In General — (i) Place. If no place is mentioned, the obligation must be performed to the obligee in person, but the subject-matter of the contract or the nature of the bond may work an exception,[24] although collateral circumstances may be considered to ascertain the intent in certain cases, as to the place of performance.[25]

(ii) Time. If no time is fixed for doing the act, then the law implies that a reasonable time was intended.[26] But time may be of the essence of the contract so that the party in default will not be released from performance except in case of accident or mistake.[27] So, if a day certain is specified within which an act may be done the whole period is meant,[28] and if a day positive is named subject to a condition, the bond becomes absolute on that day, unless it has been ascertained before then that the subject-matter of the condition exists.[29] Again, if the condition is to pay money to a named person on a certain day, and if a specified contingency happens, then to pay another, the happening of the contingency does not make the money due immediately,[30] and when the act on which the condition rests is to be done between certain dates, the obligation matures at the close of the day preceding the last named date.[31] So where the condition is for the benefit of the obligor, the obligee to perform the first act, he must do or concur in doing such act before he can demand the penalty.[32] Again, a bond may become due by death of the obligor, though the contingency specified may not have occurred,[33] and presentment for payment of a time certificate of deposit properly indorsed need not be made to a receiver of a bank to mature a right of action on a bond for safety of deposits which includes such time deposit and is conditioned to pay over on demand.[34] But the time specified in the bond may be enlarged or waived,[35] and if no time for ultimate performance is fixed by the waiver, the original contract must be consulted to ascertain what constitutes a reasonable time.[36]

b. Payment — (i) Amount[37] — Interest.[38] Payment may be fixed by condition upon a pro rata basis.[39] And interest may be allowed, although not provided for by the contract;[40] or it may become payable from demand where a liability is incurred;[41] or the rate of interest may be governed by the statute, express agreement, or both,[42] or interest may be payable annually where it is so

If, however, a bond is payable after date and no interest is stipulated, it does not bear interest until after maturity. Wilson v. Anthony, 19 Ark. 16.

41. Payable from demand.— Frink v. Southern Express Co., 82 Ga. 33, 8 S. E. 862, 3 L. R. A. 482, holding also that where no demand is made interest will become due from the service of summons in an action on the bond. So if the penalty of a bond has not been demanded, or there is no acknowledgment that the same is due, interest is recoverable from the commencement of the suit. U. S. Bank v. Magill, 1 Paine (U. S.) 661, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 929 [affirmed in 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 511, 6 L. ed. 711]. And where bonds are made payable at a particular place and no demand is there made and no funds are there to meet them at maturity, interest thereon continues. Skinker v. Butler County, 112 Mo. 332, 20 S. W. 613.

42. Rate generally.— The rate of interest on a bond executed in the state is a question of fact. Davidson v. Gohagin, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 634. And the legal rate should govern in a contract to pay interest on a specified sum and not the rate received by the obligor from investments of the money, the bond being one conditioned for support of B out of said interest and a payment of unexpended principal and interest to C on B's death. Granger v. Pierce, 112 Mass. 244.

Stipulated rate.— If a bond expressly stipulates for a specified rate of interest for a balance due to a bank after a certain date, for moneys advanced, such interest will be collected on such balance, even though interest at a greater rate had been charged and compounded on daily balances. Oxford Bank v. Bobbitt, 108 N. C. 525, 13 S. E. 177. So the contract rate should govern from the period specified (Barbour v. Tompkins, 31 W. Va. 410, 7 S. E. 1), for interest must be expressed, even though there are contrary words relating to the principal or instalments thereof,[43] or it may be payable after breach of the condition as well as before,[44] or before or after maturity, or both, according to the agreement.[45] It is therefore upon the stipulations and conditions of each particular contract or bond[46] that the determination of the various questions relating to interest must computed according to the agreement (Miller v. Burroughs, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 436).

Stipulated rate or legal rate.— If the value of bonds is recovered in replevin the legal rate of interest from the date of demand and not the rate the bonds bear is recoverable. Govin v. De Miranda, 140 N. Y. 474, 35 N. E. 626, 55 N. Y. St. 837. But if the specified rate is less than the legal rate the former is the rate recoverable after maturity. Elmira Iron, etc., Rolling Mill Co. v. Elmira, 5 Misc. (N. Y.) 194, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 657.

Effect of statute upon rate or specified rate.— If the agreement fixes the interest at such rate as is then or may thereafter be legal, and a statute subsequently enacted increases the legal rate, such increased rate is recoverable not by virtue of the statute but of the agreement. Mucklar v. Cross, 32 N. J. L. 423. But if a bond is forfeited prior to the passage of a statute increasing the rate, the per cent fixed by statute does not govern. Austin v. Townes, 10 Tex. 24. And if a judgment allows only five per cent the fact that it was given after a statutory enactment allowing six per cent does not change the rate recoverable. Brooke v. Roane, 1 Call (Va.) 205. So an agreement may change an express statutory provision fixing the rate of interest on bonds. Newport, etc., Bridge Co. v. Douglass, 12 Bush (Ky.) 673.

43. Interest payable annually.— Although the principal sum is to be due in two years with annual interest, such interest will be due in one year (Smith v. Holmes, 19 N. Y. 271), and this is so where interest is expressly conditioned to be paid yearly, even though instalments are to be paid only every two years commencing the second year (Fake v. Eddy, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 76). If interest is to be paid yearly on the first day of a certain month of each year, interest will commence on the first day of the named month next following the date of the bond. Fake v. Eddy, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 76. See further Wilson v. Kelly, 19 S. C. 160; Watkins v. Lang, 17 S. C. 13.

44. Miller v. Burroughs, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 436.

45. Before or after maturity, or both.— If interest is payable annually, annual interest will be due on agreed-upon instalments as well after maturity as before. Watkins v. Lang, 17 S. C. 13. So the principal will bear interest after maturity as well as before at the special rate expressed in the bond. Jackson, etc., Co. v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 29 Fed. 474. And in case of instalments the specified rate in the bond will be given on each instalment from its maturity until payment in full. Ellis v. Sanders, 32 S. C. 584, 10 S. E. 824. Although where interest is payable annually, it may, under the agreement, only draw annual interest until maturity and simple interest afterward until paid. Wilson v. Kelly, 19 S. C. 160.

Interest is recoverable not as damages but as interest on a bond with a penal sum conditioned for interest, and it can be recovered from date of the bond to date of payment. In re Dixon, [1900] 2 Ch. 561, 69 L. J. Ch. 609, 83 L. T. Rep. N. S. 129, 48 Wkly. Rep. 665.

46. Arrears or accrued interest.— The fact that it is expressly agreed that yearly interest on a certain sum shall be paid until a specified act is performed does not prevent the collection of arrears of yearly interest, even though the condition remains unperformed, and notwithstanding the statute of limitations, but interest on the sums payable yearly is not recoverable. Henderson v. Hamilton, 1 Hall (N. Y.) 314. And a stipulation exonerating the obligor from interest on part payments does not exonerate him from payment of interest accrued at the time of such part payment, but only for interest thereafter. Stone v. Bennett, 8 Mo. 41. So the payment of instalments due after interest commences, and which are paid when due, will not bar the recovery of interest accrued up to the time of payment of such instalments. Fake v. Eddy, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 76.

Executors must account for interest of money received and retained by their intestate, and on which there is a refusal to pay interest, where they are obligated under their contract with the executors of the obligor of bonds secured by mortgage to account therefor. Hylton v. Hunter, Wythe (Va.) 195.

Instalments or principal not punctually paid.— Where the bond read "without interest but with interest if not punctually paid" upon non-payment of the first instalment interest runs from the date of the bond and not from the date when the several instalrest, having in view those rules of construction which are applicable and which have been fully considered under preceding sections of this article.

(II) MODE. If a bond is payable in gold, silver, "lawful money," specie or any specifically named currency, such designation is of binding force to the extent of the terms of the obligation, subject to such conditions and limitations as are contained in the contract.[47] So the term "lawful money" means such money as shall be lawful when payment is actually made.[48]

(III) TIME. If a bond is conditioned for the payment of money on a certain day, the whole debt accrues on the day specified, even though the bond appears to have been given by way of indemnity.[49] But the whole day is meant,[50]

ments become payable. Wakefield v. Beckley, 3 McCord (S. C.) 480. But where the condition is "with interest from date if not punctually paid" and the bond is one with a penalty, the interest is an additional penalty and not recoverable. Waller v. Long, 6 Munf. (Va.) 71.

Interest in gold.— The payment of interest in gold may be enforced where so stipulated, even though the bond is payable in currency. Pollard v. Pleasant Hill, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 195, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,253, 1 Centr. L. J. 155.

Judgment may allow interest on a bond from a date specified to the date of the judgment and in the same judgment the words "no interest to be collected thereon" mean past and not future interest. Stuart v. Troutman, (Ky. 1888) 7 S. W. 535. And where a penal bond was given and the money was not due when the judgment was recovered, but only when the condition upon which the payment of the money rested was fulfilled, interest only runs from that date. Wilhite v. Roberts, 4 Dana (Ky.) 172. So interest on the aggregate amount of principal and interest found due in a commissioner's report may be allowed, at the rate stipulated in the bond, from the date of the completion of the report until paid. Part payment may operate by stipulation to relieve the obligor from interest on the sum paid. Stone v. Bennett, 8 Mo. 41. For rule for computing interest in case of part payment under a decision in 1848 see Singleton v. Allen, 2 Strobh. Eq. (S. C.) 166.

Relief under such condition.— Such a condition as that last specified may make time of the essence of the contract and the obligee may be relieved in case of mistake or waiver of default. Martin v. Melville, 11 N. J. Eq. 222. And the collection of the penalty will not be permitted if inequitable, even though there be such a condition. Western Bank v. Sherwood, 29 Barb. (N. White v. Jones, 88 N. C. 166.

Condition as to particular currency—When available.— It is determined that if a bond is payable in a particular currency the debtor must seek the creditor if within the state and tender payment, otherwise the privilege of paying in such currency will not be of avail, and a tender thereof after maturity of the bond is not a compliance with the condition, for if the bond is not paid as specified it becomes a specie debt. although a fixed time for payment may be varied by conditions.[51] But if no time is specified for the payment of a sum certain the money is due immediately without demand,[52] and where a bond is payable in express terms on demand it is payable on the day of its date,[53] or immediately,[54] unless the demand is dependent upon conditions, as that payment shall be made on demand after a specified time,[55] although the obligor need not wait until demand made, but may pay it prior thereto, even though it is conditioned that a reasonable time after demand shall be given to pay.[56]

But the time of payment is not postponed on railroad bonds redeemable twenty years from date by a provision therein making them redeemable at the pleasure of the legislature. Opinion of Ct. in Response to Governor, 49 Mo. 216. And if the bond is conditioned to be paid on a particular day with a condition as to indemnity which is indefinite as to time, the indemnity is not a condition precedent to the payment of the money. Wellborn v. James, 20 N. C. 310. So a bond by four may be made payable when three of them should be required to pay it. Carl v. Com., 9 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 63. Again, a bond conditioned to pay out of the income a certain sum after certain debts were paid is enforceable when, with reasonable diligence, there was a net income sufficient to pay the bond. Where a bond given during the Civil War was not payable except on demand, and in case of inability then to pay it was to be continued two years and become absolutely payable subject to a certain condition that tender might be made to the obligee's attorney, if he should be in Richmond, it was held that neither the obligee nor his attorney was compelled to be in Richmond to receive the money. here except to notice generally that the scope and extent of the engagement is determined by the terms of the contract and the nature of the transaction according to what was contemplated at the time of entering into the same,[58] for a surety's contract is to receive a strict interpretation in accordance with the obligation implied,[59] and the rule that the recitals may control general words is of importance.[60] In applying, however, the above and general rules of construction the character of the agency or employment, the duties imposed,[61] and also the fact whether an official bond relates to private or public officials are distinctions necessary to be observed. Again the statutes and charters or fundamental law upon which corporate existence depends, and also such by-laws, regulations, or governing rules and records of such corporations as exist and are pertinent and relevant are usually resorted to as aids to interpretation and to ascertaining the intent and the law.[62]

b. Commencement of Liability.[63] The liability on a bond may accrue by relation as of its date,[64] or the bond may include within or from its date matters fairly intended as coming within the terms thereof,[65] even though the transaction out of which the matter arose had its inception before said date, but the liability accrued thereafter.[66] But acts of an agent between the date and delivery of the bond do not raise a liability thereon.[67]

c. Nature and Extent of Duties — (i) In General. The nature and extent of the duties required under the obligation depends primarily upon the character of the agency or employment, the present and past relations of the parties, the degree of responsibility imposed by law, and the contract having in view the intention in executing the bond,[68] and where an officer or an agent executes a Liability is that covered by bond and will not be extended.— The bond of an agent covers all that is with the condition, and notes given for an indebtedness are within the words "all other obligations" which the agent is to pay. Parham Sewing Mach. Co. v. Brock, 113 Mass. 194. And a bond conditioned for the payment by the principal of "every indebtedness now existing or which may hereafter be incurred" means indebtedness in the business of the agency, and does not contemplate indebtedness for the purchase of goods incurred after termination of the agency, after all liabilities are settled. Burns v. Singer Mfg. Co., 87 Ind. 541. So a corporate agent's bond has been held not to cover advances made to him by the company. Burlington Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 24 Ill. App. 565. 68. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Bartlett, 120 Ill. 603, 11 N. E. 867, where a paymaster's bond was determined not to include a loss by bond in general terms for the faithful performance of his duties, it extends to and covers all acts done within the general scope and authority of the officer or agent.[69] It is also the settled rule as to official bonds that they extend to all such duties as may at any time be added to the office or imposed upon the officer, for these are held to be within the contemplation and liability of the obligor.[70]

(II) Additional or New Duties. The last rule does not permit the imposition of such new or additional duties or such a change thereof, or such an increase of responsibility as that the nature of the obligation is altered and the liability of the sureties is increased.[71] The general rule is that the bond of an officer or employee of a private corporation for the faithful performance of his theft of money without negligence on his part, and it was declared by the court that, although a bond will be so construed as to give force and effect to all the words contained, it is limited by a construction which will effectuate the parties' intention, and in determining whether the bond made the sureties insurers of the agent, this rule applies, and the agent's relation to the company, the nature of his existing employment, the duties it imposed, and the degree of responsibility which the law annexed thereto, should all be considered. The employment was one of confidence and trust, which required of him the handling and paying out of money, and accounting therefor, and with respect to the moneys he was a mere bailee for hire, and the measure of his legal liability was good faith, ordinary skill, care, and diligence in the performance of the duties of his employment, and taking the bond could not change the character of his responsibility, and make him an absolute insurer of all moneys in his hands, irrespective of his legal duties under his employment.

Receipt and temporary custody of moneys of an association by its general manager is covered by bond to secure "honesty in the performance of his duties in the position," and the nature of his duties may be shown in connection with his application and the by-laws. So the words "well and truly," referring to duties, covers honesty, reasonable skill, and diligence. If there is want of capacity or negligence or unskilfulness then and there, the duties are not "well and truly" performed. Minor v. Alexandria Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 46, 7 L. ed. 47.

An agent's bond may cover an entire balance at the close of his agency based upon an indebtedness carried through the term of agency. Zinns Mfg. Co. v. Mendelson, 89 Wis. 133, 61 N. W. 302. But see Rockford Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 15 Colo. App. 23, 60 Pac. 956.

A bond to pay balance may cover costs on an unnecessary "account rendered." Holmes v. Frost, 125 Pa. St. 328, 17 Atl. 424.

So where a cashier converts securities which call for money or notes he is liable for the nominal amount without regard to depreciation in value. Pendleton v. State Bank, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 171.

The bond of a bank messenger covers theft of the bank's money, whether he was acting at the time within the scope of his employment or not. German American Bank v. Auth, 87 Pa. St. 419, 30 Am. Rep. 374.

Time limited for discovery excludes acts and defaults not discovered within specific time limited, even though such discovery is prevented by acts of the employee in falsifying the books. But a bank clerk's bond given when he was assistant cashier does not cover a defalcation of the clerk if after the execution of the bond and before the defalcation the position of the clerk was several times changed, whereby his responsibility was increased. Baltimore First Nat. Bank v. Gerke, 68 Md. 449, 13 Atl. 358, 6 Am. St. Rep. 453. And new arrangements of an agent's duties are not within the condition "during his continuance" in office. duties relates to the office then contemplated within the terms of the contract, and does not extend to losses occasioned by his employment outside of the capacity for which the bond may by a fair, reasonable, and legal interpretation be held to have been given; provided, however, that the loss was not due to such employment, but rather arose out of the conduct of the office which is covered by the bond or was covered alone by the non-performance or wrongful performance by the officer of the regular duties of his office.[72]

(III) Conditioned to Cover Duties Not Specified. A bond may, however, be so conditioned as to cover the particular agency and other duties than those specified.[73]

(IV) Duration of Liability—(A) In General. The general rule is that the duration of the bond to secure faithful performance of the duties of an office is coextensive with the duration of such office.[74]

(B) As Affected by Term For Which Elected or Appointed—(1) Generally. A bond should be restricted by the term of the office, so that every new election should be considered the choice of a new officer, and a new bond should place, new duties in a new place are not covered. Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 65 Wis. 99, 25 N. W. 427, 26 N. W. 564.

Illustrations.— Where a clerk who is occasionally employed as cashier is thereby enabled to perpetuate a fraud, and the loss caused to the bank thereby has no connection with and cannot be fairly made a sequence of his occasional performance of a cashier's duties, the sureties on his bond for the faithful performance of his duties as clerk are liable but they are not liable for losses directly arising from wrongful acts committed solely by reason of his employment as cashier in matters which he as clerk had no right to handle and which were in exclusive control of the regular cashier. Garnett v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 91 Ky. 614, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 212, 16 S. W. 709, 34 Am. St. Rep. 246. Specific duty not designated.— Another exception to or qualification of the rule would also exist in case the specific duty is not designated, either in the appointment or the bond, and the latter is given for the faithful discharge of duties. Here the sureties may be liable, although the employee acts in different capacities at different times. So held in Vogeley's Appeal, (Pa. 1888) 15 Atl. 878. be taken.[75] If the obligation of the sureties is not by the terms of the condition or by any recital in the bond limited to a definite period, but is for his good behavior as an official, the sureties' obligation is coextensive with the duration of the office, but only so long as he should hold the office by virtue of the election for which the bond is given, and the obligation of the bond will cease as well upon election and qualification for a new term of office as upon the election and qualification of another person as his successor.[76] Again, notwithstanding the generality of the language, the obligation of a bond cannot be extended beyond the term of the first appointment irrespective of the fact whether the duration of the office is mentioned in the bond or not, since if it is not it may be shown by evidence aliunde.[77] And even where there is language in the condition carrying the liability beyond the time for which the principal is elected it is construed with considerable strictness, and the sureties are held only for such time as is plainly and explicitly therein specified. The same rule has been applied where an office or employment is by law or usage limited to a certain time even if the fact be not recited in the bond.[78] even though the charter is extended before its expiration this does not extend to default of a bond after expiration of the original charter. Thompson v. Young, 2 Ohio 334. It is decided, however, that a bond may cover acts done under an extension of a charter. Georgetown Union Bank v. Forrest, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 218, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,356.

75. If the words extend to an indefinite period, but by the recital it appears that the office is annual, the obligation refers to the limited office, and where it appears by the records of a corporation that the office by their regulation is an annual one, the bond should be restricted, and all this is based upon the parties' intent. It is a legal inference that an official bond making use of general language is given with reference to the specific election then made, and no other. Welch v. Seymour, 28 Conn. 387.

Even though the natural and grammatical construction of the language of a bond may extend the liability of a surety beyond the year for which a principal is appointed to an office, and even though such may appear to have been the intention of the parties, yet, the liability may only continue for the time for which the principal is bound. If there is a recital of the limited time for which the principal is appointed the surety is no longer liable. Kitson v. Julian, 4 E. & B. 854, 24 L. J. Q. B. 202, 1 Jur. N. S. 754, 3 Wkly. Continuing bond.—In Anderson v. Longden, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 85, 4 L. ed. 42, the bond was given to directors who were chosen yearly and the obligors were declared liable after the year had expired. And the liability continues beyond the definite term for which elected under a condition providing "whether of the present term . . . or of any succeeding terms," etc. Mutual Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Hammell, 43 N. Worcester Bank v. Reed, 9 Mass. 267, 6 Am. Dec. 65. And if the language discloses no intention to

(2) Principal Holding Over. If an official bond is in general language and the principal holds over, nevertheless courts will not extend the obligation beyond that intended.[79] There is, however, a line of decisions which extend the liability of sureties so as to cover either a holding over or permit a reasonable time in which to elect a new official or to reëlect the one in office or until a successor is elected and qualified. So that although the office be elective for one year only yet the surety will be liable for the official's acts, if he continue in office after the year where the term of office created by statute or by charter does not limit or restrict the period of service, it will be construed accordingly, even though other words of securing restriction or limitation follow, and the words may also be such as to refer to the office rather than to the period of service. Ulster County Sav. Inst. v. Young, 161 N. Y. 23, 55 N. E. 483 [affirming 15 N. Y. App. Div. 181, 44 N. Y. Suppl. 493]. And a customs bond under Kan. Gen. Stat. (1889), par. 1419, with no limitation as to time, covers defaults before and after expiration of a year. Merchants Bank v. Honey, 58 Kan. 603, 50 Pac. 871.

During pleasure or at will.— Where the treasurer is to hold office during the pleasure of the trustees, the obligation ceases only where the treasurer ceases to act. Com. v. Reading Sav. Bank, 129 Mass. 73. See also New German Loan, etc., Co. v. Kuehnert, 6 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 502. So where the office was that of note clerk and the bond was conditioned, "during the will of the present, or any future board of directors." The directors were to be elected annually, and such a condition does not limit the obligation of the sureties to one year only for the office of note clerk was not controlled by the limited term of office of directors, and there was nothing in the by-laws of the bank limiting the duration of place of note clerk and his reappointment is general. Louisiana State Bank v. Ledoux, 3 La. Ann. 674, 678.

Reëlection — Particular decisions.— If a bond is conditioned "during the time for which he has been elected, and for and during such further time as he may continue therein by any reëlection or otherwise" this covers defaults only during a continuous holding of office. Middlesex Mfg. Co. v. Lawrence, 1 Allen (Mass.) 339. And all acts under successive elections are covered under a condition "so long as he should continue in office." Dedham Bank v. Chickering, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 335 [distinguished in Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 274, 293] and Slidell, J., in Louisiana State Bank v. Ledoux, 3 La. Ann. 674, 678, says of this case: "The words of the bond were general, that there was nothing in it to show that a restriction was intended, and nothing in the records or regulations of the bank indicating that the office was annual." In Hannibal Sav. Bank v. Hunt, 72 Mo. 597, 37 Am. Rep. 449, it was held that if the officer is reëlected and no new bond is given the old bond does not cover a subsequent defalcation, while in Mutual Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. McMillen, 1 Pennyp. (Pa.) 431, the sureties were held liable only during the year, and not for acts after reëlection, and to the same effect is Manufacturers', etc., Sav., etc., Co. v. Odd Fellows' Hall Assoc., 48 Pa. St. 446. But in Elam v. Commercial Bank, 86 Va. 92, 9 S. E. 498, the bond was declared to create a continuing obligation, even though the cashier was annually reëlected, the corporation having no by-laws changing the office to an annual one, and the bond not being limited as to duration, but the sureties were directors of the bank, and did not require a new bond.

Reappointment; particular decisions.—Acts due after reappointment and giving a new bond are not covered. Frankfort Bank v. Johnson, 23 Me. 322. And where the condition is until "another" officer is appointed, the bond does not cover the reappointment of the original appointee. Citizens' Loan Assoc. v. Nugent, 40 N. J. L. 215, 29 Am. Rep. 230. But where the bond was conditioned "so long as he shall continue in said office," and the officer was duly chosen several times thereafter, and he having continuously acted, the sureties were held liable for treaties nine years after date of the bond, it not appearing in the charter, or the regulations of the bank or the bond that the office was annual. Union Bank v. Ridgely, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 324; Dedham Bank v. Chickering, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 335. See also McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Laster, 70 Ill. App. 425. And after reappointment the sureties on the bond were held liable for money previously embezzled under the particular circumstances of the case. Ingraham v. Maine Bank, 13 Mass. 208. Although a bond given on reappointment will not relate back so as to cover matters occurring four years before the date of the bond. Ward v. Hassell, 66 N. C. 389. But an appointment of an agent under a new contract will not abrogate a bond given prior thereto expressly conditioned for such appointment. Boogher v. New York L. Ins. Co., 103 U. S. 90, 26 L. ed. 310. And an interval of three days during which a bank teller continued to act without reappointment does not prevent liability for want of care after such interval, and although the condition was that the officer should be appointed or elected yearly, yet such yearly appointment was declared unnecessary under the condition that the obligation should be in force so long as such teller should act as teller. Georgetown Union Bank v. Forrest, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 218, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,356.

79. Arlington v. Merricke, 2 Saund. 404. The language here was "during all the time that he the said Thomas Jenkins shall continue deputy postmaster" and the surety was held not liable, the principal holding over.

expire by limitation at a fixed time or upon a specified event, but continues until a successor is elected and qualified, or if the official is himself reëlected and qualifies for a second term the liability on the old bond ceases.[80]

G. Cancellation, Rescission, and Revocation. The obligation of a bond may be discharged, through negligence or inadvertence of the obligee's attorney;[81] or by an actual cancellation or by its delivery to the obligor or to a stranger with the intention that it should be canceled;[82] or by the cancellation of a contract which is a part of the bond, unless the latter is excepted from the operation thereof.[83] But a bond is not per se extinguished where it is canceled through fraud or evident mistake.[84] Nor does a mere agreement to cancel render a bond void without an actual cancellation;[85] nor is there an extinguishment of the debt created by a bond by the mere unexecuted testamentary direction for the destruction of the bond;[86] nor does a notice terminate the obligation where it is not given in conformity with the requirements of a provision therefor in the bond;[87] nor can a judicial bond be canceled by the court on a mere notice of the obligors.[88] Again, the character of the bond may be such as to be irrevocable.[89]

80. Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 274, holding also that a failure to renew the bond after reëlection does not estop the bank from proceeding on the bond, it not appearing that the sureties' expectation that the bond was in force only for a year was due to the representation of the bank, for the extension of the term of office in consequence of an omission either to reëlect or to qualify the officer reëlected was one of the contingencies comprehended. So the general rule has been affirmed and qualified as follows: The limit of the liability of a surety is the term of office of the principal. If this is an annual office that limits the time, and such further time as may be reasonably necessary for the election and qualification of his successor, and no longer. And the words "during his continuance in office" mean only under his then election, and for a legal term and not an indefinite period, and construction must be had in view of the statutory or charter period of office, etc. Mutual Loan, etc., Assoc. v. Miles, 16 Fla. 204, 26 Am. Rep. 703. So in a Massachusetts case the bond was held to cover acts for the year, and for such further time as was necessary for a reëlection. Chelmsford v. Demarest, 7 Gray (Mass.) 1. This case is considered in Mutual Loan, etc., Assoc. v. Miles, 16 Fla. 204, 26 Am. Rep. 703 (last above cited), and in Welch v. Seymour, 28 Conn. 387, 394, it was said that the decision depended upon statute merely. So where a bond was given in 1831, and the cashier was reappointed in 1832 for the "year ensuing," defaults in 1836 were held to be covered. Amherst Bank v. Root, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 522 [distinguished in Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 274, and in Welch v. Seymour, 28 Conn. 387, where the decision was declared to rest upon a peculiar statute providing that officers should continue in office until removed which did away with distinctions as to annual offices and those unlimited as to duration, and also that said principal case admitted and approved the common-law rules]. In another case there was a continuous holding of office of cashier from 1809 until 1830, and the sureties were held liable during the entire holding of the office. Exeter Bank v. Rogers, 7 N. H. 21 [distinguished in Welch v. Seymour, 28 Conn. 387, as placing the decision upon peculiar circumstances rather than as a departure from the rule holding the sureties liable for the term or year]. In Lexington, etc., R. Co. v. Elwell, 8 Allen (Mass.) 371, the sureties were held not liable for a default after an omission to reëlect at a regular meeting, although a vote postponing the meeting for five weeks was held not to defeat the bond.

Contra.— Dover v. Twombly, 42 N. H. 59, was a suit against a surety upon the bond of an annual officer, holding until qualification of his successor, and it was determined that the official bond of an agent for the sale of spirituous liquors covered only the official year, even though there might be a holding over or a reappointment.

So defaults after directors have ceased to elect annually are not covered, even though the cashier is permitted to hold over with reëlection. Shackamaxon Bank v. Yard, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 239.

IV. NEGOTIABILITY AND TRANSFER.

A. Negotiability — 1. In General. In determining the question of negotiability it is necessary to understand what is meant by the term "negotiable," for that being resolved it may then be ascertained whether the nature and form of the obligation[90] is such that the constituent elements of negotiability are covered. A thing is negotiable which may be transferred by assignment or by a sale and indorsement and delivery.[91]

2. By What Law Governed.[92] It is decided that the indorsement of a bond is in itself a distinctive and substantive contract and will be governed by the lex loci contractu, if it does not look to any other place;[93] and a bond in one state, not payable at any particular place without the same, may be indorsed in another state so as to be enforced in the state where given. So a bond given in another state where there is no statute making bonds negotiable may be indorsed anywhere where bonds are negotiable so as to give a right of action thereon.[94]

3. Effect of Statutory Provisions. In this connection the effect of statutes relating to negotiability must be considered. But statutes must not be construed beyond the import of their words so as to alter the common law or as making an innovation therein, and because an instrument is thereby made negotiable all the consequences do not necessarily follow which are incident and attach to bills and notes before maturity.[95]

on death of the obligor, and is drawn up in absolute terms, and unconditionally delivered. Mack's Appeal, 68 Pa. St. 231.

Consideration.— The surrender of a bond to an obligor and the cancellation thereof constitute a deed and may be valid without a consideration. Paxton v. Wood, 77 N. C. 11. And the sufficiency of the consideration may be determined by what has been done, having reference to the purposes for which the bond has been given. Mann v. Betterly, 21 Vt. 326.

91. Anderson L. Dict.

The word "negotiability" is peculiarly applicable to the nature of the assignment or transfer (2 Bl. Comm. (1 Cooley 4th ed. 802) 468 note), for it includes more than was covered by mere assignment at the common law or by the law merchant; the terms "negotiation," "negotiability" express . . . the mode and effect of transfer. The payee has a property and the transfer is of the ownership and the right to sue. Anderson L. Dict. [citing Shaw v. St. Louis Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 557, 25 L. ed. 892]; 2 Bl. Comm. (1 Cooley 4th ed. 780, 802) 442, 443, 467, 468.

Distinguished from commercial paper.—Under some of the decisions bonds have not been placed upon the exact footing of commercial paper as to the equities between the assignor and other parties binding the assignee. Junction R. Co. v. Cleneay, 13 Ind. 161; Conover v. Van Mater, 18 N. J. L. 481; White v. Vermont, etc., R. Co., 21 How. (U. S.) 575, 16 L. ed. 221; Union Bank v. New Orleans, 24 Fed. Cas. Again an obligation payable to a certain person, his heirs, etc., which is called a "bond," may be in the nature of negotiable paper, so that an action thereon is to be governed in all respects by the rules applicable to commercial paper. Blake v. Livingston County, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 149. But see Salisbury First Nat. Bank v. Michael, 96 N. C. 53, 1 S. E. 855. But bonds not payable at an incorporated bank cannot be placed on the footing of foreign bills of exchange. Louisville Banking Co. v. Ogden, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1591, 61 S. W. 289. 4. Form and Nature of Bond as a Controlling Element — a. Generally. The negotiability or non-negotiability of a bond must rest largely upon the character thereof, the consideration, the purposes covered, the provisions or conditions therein or in such papers as are legally a part thereof by construction, the character of the persons, as whether they are individuals or corporations, and also, but not necessarily, the form of the instrument.[96]

Statutory provisions.— The statute may place bonds as to negotiability and the right of the assignee to sue in his own name upon the same footing as bills and notes. Bradford v. Williams, 4 How. (U. S.) 576, 11 L. ed. 1109. As to statutory provisions relating to assignability of written instruments see Assignments, I, D [4 Cyc. 9].

Alabama.— So a manufacturing company's bonds may be made negotiable by a statute which specifically authorizes the issue thereof where such enactment contemplates the issue of instruments having all the qualities, elements, and characteristics of negotiable paper which can be introduced into commercial markets circulating and passing as such paper in the usual course of business. Lehman v. Tallassee Mfg. Co., 64 Ala. 567.

Massachusetts.— And bonds of a corporation under seal payable to bearer are negotiable under Mass. Pub. Stat. (1882) c. 77, § 4, even though they show on the face that the obligor is required to keep a sinking fund for their redemption and may pay them before the day stipulated. Union Cattle Co. v. International Trust Co., 149 Mass. 492, 21 N. E. 962. But under section 9 of the same statute bonds of a street railway corporation with interest coupons attached are not negotiable promissory notes so as to be entitled to days of grace entered on the bonds or coupons. Chaffee v. Middlesex R. Co., 146 Mass. 224, 16 N. E. 34.

Mississippi.—A sealed bond is, however, negotiable under the express provisions of the Mississippi code. Skinner v. Collier, 4 How. (Miss.) 396.

New York.— Instruments without seals for the construction of a railroad are negotiable, even though the statute does not prescribe their form nor provide for their being negotiable. Gould v. Venice, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 442.

North Carolina.— Bonds payable in whole or in part in specific articles are not negotiable within the act of 1786. Campbell v. Mumford, 2 N. C. 459; Jamieson v. Farr, 2 N. C. 210.

Ohio.—Although a statute makes bonds negotiable by indorsement and enables the indorser to sue in his own name, a subsequent enactment may restrict such negotiable character to bonds payable to order of bearer. Logue v. Smith, Wright (Ohio) 10.

Rhode Island.— R. I. Pub. Stat. c. 142, §§ 6, 7, as to negotiable paper covers the bonds of a corporation under seal and secured by mortgage payable to bearer. American Nat. Bank v. American Wood Paper Co., 19 R. I. 149, 32 Atl. 305, 61 Am. St. Rep. 746, 29 L. R. A. 103.

96. Georgia.— If a bond is under seal it is negotiable and may be assigned by indorsement in blank or transferred by assignment not under seal. Prioleau v. South Western Railroad Bank, 16 Ga. 582.

Kansas.— If stipulations which, if inserted in the bond, would make it non-negotiable are made a part thereof by express reference they have a like effect. Lockrow v. Cline, 4 Kan. App. 716, 46 Pac. 720.

Kentucky.— A bond executed to a corporation payable to it or bearer and secured by mortgage on real estate is not negotiable. Hefferman v. Brierly, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 304, 62 S. W. 852.

Louisiana.— The fact that past-due interest coupons are attached does not destroy the negotiability of bonds not yet due. Fairex v. Bier, 37 La. Ann. 821.

Missouri.— Bonds due in twenty years but redeemable after five years are negotiable. Fogg v. Sedalia School Dist., 75 Mo. App. 159.

New York.— A bond may be negotiable although the statute does not prescribe the form. Gould v. Venice, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 442.

North Carolina.— A bond otherwise negotiable under section 41 of the code is not made non-negotiable by a reference in the body of the bond to the consideration on which it is based. Salisbury First Nat. Bank v. Michael, 96 N. C. 53, 1 S. E. 855.

United States.—If a bond has not the marks of negotiability but is described in an annexed paper as a registered bond a purchaser is estopped from claiming it as negotiable; nor is a bond negotiable which is issued by a county in the form of a single bill executed under seal and made payable to an obligee and assigns. Cronin v. Patrick County, 89 Fed. 79.

A sealed bond issued by a private individual may be negotiable. Fairbanks v. Sargent, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 588.

Bonds of corporations.— A condition in a bond that it might "be registered and made payable by transfer only on the books of the company" does not per se make such bond non-negotiable by manual transfer. Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Lancaster, 62 Ala. 555. And an instrument in writing in the form of an ordinary bond issued by a corporation may be in legal effect a promissory note governed by the law merchant. Aurora v. West, 22 Ind. 88, 85 Am. Dec. 413. So corporation bonds are negotiable though under seal and payable to bearer on a day certain or sooner after five years. American Nat. Bank v. American Wood Paper Co., 19 R. b. Certainty. In measuring the negotiability of bonds by the qualities, elements, and characteristics of negotiable paper there should also be considered the factors of certainty as to the parties,[97] certainty as to the amount payable,[98] and corporation instrument under seal indorsed after maturity under seal in consideration of forbearance to a date named to pay a higher rate of interest constitutes the indorsement a new contract upon consideration and it is negotiable. Marine, etc., Phosphate Min., etc., Co. v. Bradley, 105 U. S. 175, 26 L. ed. 1034.

Municipal bonds do not become non-negotiable simply because they are sealed. Manhattan Sav. Inst. v. New York Nat. Exch. Bank, 42 N. Y. App. Div. 147, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 51.

Railroad bonds.—Railroad coupon bonds are negotiable and their transferee is prima facie a holder for value. Gibson v. Lenhart, 101 Pa. St. 522. If separate agreements accompany railroad bonds when issued and they become separated before purchase they are nevertheless negotiable. Hotchkiss v. National Shoe, etc., Bank, 21 Wall. (U. United States "5-20" bonds are negotiable. Ringling v. Kohn, 4 Mo. App. 59.

97. Certainty as to parties.— Corporate bonds must be payable unconditionally to a person named, or to order, or to bearer. McClelland v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 110 N. Y. 469, 18 N. E. 237, 18 N. Y. St. 344, 6 Am. St. Rep. 397, 1 L. R. A. 299 [reversing 3 N. Y. St. 250]. See also cases cited infra, this note.

Payable in blank.— Coupon bonds issued and put on the market with the payee's name in blank are negotiable. Boyd v. Kennedy, 38 N. J. L. 146, 20 Am. Rep. 376. And bonds payable in blank with the words after the blank "his executors," etc., are negotiable. Dutchess County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hachfield, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 675, 4 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 158, 47 How. St. 413; Carpenter v. Rommel, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 34, 19 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 148. Again coupon bonds so payable, although not negotiable by the law merchant, are so by usage and pass complete title by delivery. Morris Canal, etc., Co. v. Fisher, 9 N. J. Eq. 667, 64 Am. Dec. 423.

Penal bonds are negotiable so as to enable an indorsee to sue on his own name under a statute, providing that all bonds, etc., payable "to any person," his order, or bearer are negotiable by indorsement. Logue v. Smith, Wright (Ohio) 10.

Railroad bonds are negotiable by the usage and practice of the companies and of capitalists and business men of the community and the repeated decisions and recognition of the courts. White v. Vermont, etc., R. Co., 21 How. (U. S.) 575, 16 L. ed. 221.

Railroad bonds payable to A B or holder, even though under seal, pass by delivery (Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 9, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 225), although such bonds payable to A B or assignees are declared to be in the nature of commercial paper only negotiable by delivery under an assignment in blank and not a specialty subject to equities. Brainerd v. New York, etc., R. Co., 25 N. Y. 496.

So corporation bonds, though under seal, have the qualities of negotiable instruments and recovery may be had thereon with interest and exchange at the place where payable. Myer v. Muscatine, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 384, 17 L. ed. 564; Gelpecke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 17 L. ed. 520; Mercer County v. Hackett, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 83, 17 L. ed. 548. But conditional corporation debenture bonds are not. Crouch v. Credit Foncier, L. R. 8 Q. B. 374, 42 L. J. Q. B. 183, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 259, 21 Wkly. Rep. 946. certainty as to the time of payment, as uncertainty in these particulars may materially affect the negotiability of a bond.[99]

c. Interest Coupons. It may be generally stated that interest coupons are negotiable instruments.[1] The general rule has, however, been qualified by the statement that there must be some statutory provision or some negotiable word or words or language used from which negotiability may be inferred as intended or as creating an obligation distinct from, and independent of, the bonds to which they were severally attached, otherwise they are not negotiable.[2] Again, the question Uncertainty of amount payable may be a defect which deprives the bond of its negotiable character. Parsons v. Jackson, 90 U. S. 434, 25 L. ed. 457. And a bond to pay money and to do something else, as to feed and clothe a slave, is not negotiable. Sutton v. Owen, 65 N. C. 123; Knight v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 46 N. C. 357. See Skinner v. Collier, 4 How. (Miss.) 396; Rev. Code, p. 464, § 9; Campbell v. Mumford, 2 N. C. 459; Jamieson v. Farr, 2 N. C. 210. See also next following note. But the negotiability of bonds due on or before a certain date is not defeated by a provision making them redeemable by instalments determined by drawings. Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 20 S. Ct. 311, 44 L. ed. 423, Adv. S. U. S. 311.

99. Must be payable at a time capable of exact ascertainment.— McClelland v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 110 N. Y. 469, 18 N. E. 237, 18 N. Y. St. 344, 6 Am. St. Rep. 397, 1 L. R. A. 299 [reversing 3 N. Y. St. 250]. If a bond is payable at a fixed date it may provide for redemption by the obligor before maturity and it is not thereby made so uncertain as to time or amount as to make it non-negotiable. Union L. & T. Co. v. Southern California Motor Road Co., 51 Fed. 840. See also Union Cattle Co. v. International Trust Co., 149 Mass. 492, 21 N. E. 962; Pittsburgh, etc., R. A. 103; Marine, etc., Phosphate Min., etc., Co. v. Bradley, 105 U. S. 175, 26 L. ed. 1034. But it is also decided that a bond payable at a time certain with a provision shortening the time is uncertain and non-negotiable. Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 290.

Government and state bonds.— The bonds and treasury notes of the United States are commercial paper negotiable and transferable as such and subject to the law relating thereto, when payable to holder or bearer at a future time certain. If taken when overdue the purchaser takes such paper subject to the rights of prior holders the same as in cases of other paper taken after maturity, and this rule cannot be contravened by usage or custom of bankers or brokers. This rule has been applied to treasury notes taken after maturity. Vermilye v. Adams Express Co., 21 Wall. (U. S.) 138, 22 L. ed. 609. This case is cited in Morgan v. U. S., 113 U. S. 476, 5 S. Ct. 588, 28 L. ed. 1044, where the obligations of the government under the "5-20" bonds consols of 1865 were declared within the law merchant as to negotiable securities, except possibly when modified by the law authorizing their issue. The rules of negotiable paper as to maturity, its being payable on demand, and what constitutes a demand were considered, and it was also held that such "5-20" bonds were unquestionably stamped with the character of negotiability. This last decision is also of further importance in overruling Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 19 L. ed. 227, and denies the right of the state legislature to restrict the negotiability of bonds of which it was the owner by legislative enactment.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bonds," § 81.

Compare Ritchie v. Cralle, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 160, 56 S. W. 963, where it is said that coupon bonds executed to a private corporation for money loaned and payable to bearer are mere promissory notes, and not being payable at a bank or discounted these are not, as to defenses, upon the footing of bills of exchange.

2. Jackson v. York, etc., R. Co., 48 Me. 147 [partially disapproved in Evertson v. Newport Nat. Bank, 66 N. Y. 14, 23 Am. Rep. 9]. See also Augusta Bank v. Augusta, 49 Me. 507. So coupons to municipal bonds are negotiable if they have proper words of negotiability. Lexington v. Butler, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 282, 20 L. ed. 809.

Proof in such cases.— If such bond is not negotiable upon its face it will not be so held upon proof that similar coupons have been passed as negotiable (Augusta Bank v. Augusta, 49 Me. 507), although proof of custom has been declared admissible in the question of negotiability (Jackson v. York, etc., R. Co., 48 Me. 147).

of negotiability also rests in many cases upon the fact whether or not such coupons are detached from the bond itself. If they are attached to the bond, they are to be taken in connection with the bonds themselves and negotiability determined thereby,[3] and it has also been decided that they are negotiable and transferable by delivery if detached, and this seems to be a general rule,[4] pro-

In a case which has been extensively cited it is decided that coupon bonds payable to bearer, and which are of the ordinary kind, pass by delivery giving a good title to a purchaser in good faith irrespective of the vendor's title, and if the possession is assailed the burden of proof rests upon him who questions the same. (U. S.) 282, 20 L. ed. 809 (holding that when attached to interest warrants they as well as the bonds to which they are attached are transferable by delivery when payable to order and indorsed in blank or are made payable to bearer, and also deciding that the holders are shielded from the defense of prior equities between the original parties the same as in case of other negotiable instruments, when such equities were unknown to the holders at the time of transfer); McCoy v. Washington County, 3 Wall. Bank, 66 N. Y. 14, 23 Am. Rep. 9 (holding that their negotiability is not destroyed by their being detached, and they are declared by their terms to be for interest on bonds specified by their numbers, and that one purchasing them from another without production of the bonds obtains title, since they are subject to the same rules as other negotiable instruments and are transferable by delivery, being regarded as bank-bills, so that a bona fide holder for value without notice will be protected, even though such coupons were overdue when sold and were stolen by the party disposing of them for value). See further Spooner v. Holmes, 102 Mass. 503, 3 Am. Rep. 491 (detached government coupons); Mason v. Frick, 105 Pa. St. 162, 51 Am. Rep. 191; North Bennington First Nat. Bank v. Mt. S. 668, 26 L. ed. 886); Hotchkiss v. National Shoe, etc., Bank, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 354, 22 L. ed. 645 (where the certificate was detached and the bonds were held negotiable). B. Transfer — 1. Mode and Form of[6] — a. By Indorsement.[7] Bonds may be indorsed in blank,[8] or by the obligee, payable to bearer.[9] There must, however, be a delivery either to the indorsee or to some one for him, even though the indorsement is in full;[10] and proof of execution may be necessary to render the indorsement admissible in evidence.[11] But an indorsement under a statute making bonds assignable thereby, so that the assignee may sue in his own name, need not be under seal.[12] Again, it is sufficient that the official character and position appear explicitly in the body of the attestation clause, for the addition of the official title or of the office to the signature is unnecessary in such a case.[13] So words which merely import a consideration will not make the indorser an accommodation indorser or guarantor.[14]

b. Without Indorsement — (i) In General. While it has been expressly decided that an indorsement in writing is necessary to transfer the legal interest in a bond,[15] under other decisions the title to a bond passes by delivery.[16]

(II) By Assignment — (A) Assignability. It may be stated as a general rule that the assignability of a bond rests upon a consideration of the character of the instrument, its conditions, form, and purposes, and also upon the nature and effect of governing statutes as well as upon the rights formerly given by an assignment of certain instruments and the subsequent changes made in regard to negotiable paper.[17] Outside of this general rule the decisions generally rest upon factors peculiar to the individual case or to the especial law upon which the decision itself is based or upon particular governing circumstances.[18]

18. Effect of statute.— The statute may enable the assignee of a bond not payable to assigns to sue on it in his own name. Farmer v. Baker, 4 S. C. 752. Ky. Stat. (1899) § 474, is not restricted in its application to such instruments as were not assignable at common law so as to vest a right of action in the assignee and does not leave bonds, etc., just as they stood before it was enacted. Ritchie v. Cralle, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 160, 56 S. W. 963. But a statute making bonds assignable does not apply to those executed prior to its passage. Wilkinson v. Wright, 1 N. C. 422. But it is also decided that such an act is retrospective as to instruments made assignable but prospective as to the assignments authorized. Ford v. Hale, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 23. See also, generally, Assignments, I, D [4 Cyc. 9].

What bonds assignable.— A bond to convey land is assignable and the assignee may sue thereon in his own name (Brown v. Chambers, 12 Ala. 697 (under act 1828); Neyfong v. Wells, Hard. (Ky.) 561; Conn v. Jones, Hard. (Ky.) 8), and such a bond may be assigned after forfeiture (Ensign v. Kellogg, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 1). And a title bond may be assigned. Skinner v. Bedell, 32 Ala. 44. So may a bond for a deed to a person named "his heirs, executors, and administrators" (Fulcher v. Daniel, 80 Ga. 74, 4 S. E. 259), and also a bond for the payment of rent (Steele v. Mills, 68 Iowa 406, 27 N. W. 294), and a bond to a sheriff or his assigns for property bought at an attachment sale (Hale v. Schults, 3 McCord (S. C.) 218), or a bond with a collateral condition (Waterman v. Frank, 21 Mo. 108), or a bond conditioned that an injunction shall be dissolved upon payment of a judgment (Alexander v. Pringle, 27 Miss. 558), and a bond required to be taken in equity on granting an injunction and the assignees may sue in their own name (Cay v. Galliott, 4 Strobh. (S. C.) 282), or a bond for the payment of money conditioned for a deed, so that the assignee may himself sue thereon (Minor v. Edwards, 10 Mo. 671), or an agreement under seal indorsed by the sureties on an ordinary money bond and part of the condition thereof may be assigned so that the assignee may sue thereon (Folk v. Cruikshanks, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 243), or a bond of corporation payable to an obligee or his assigns and the assignee may sue thereon (Bunting v. Camden, etc., R. Co., 81 Pa. St. 254), or a bond for the payment of a specific sum in lumber (Knighton v. Tufli, 12 Mo. 531, 51 Am. Dec. 174). So the interest of an obligee is assignable by common law and statute (Melton v. Smith, 65 Mo. 315), and a bond may be assigned though not payable to an obligee or his assign (Sheppard v. Stites, 7 N. J. L. 90).

What bonds not assignable.— It has been decided that a bond for the conveyance of land (Buckmaster v. Eddy, 1 Ill. 381), a replevin bond, unless taken in distress for rent (Waples v. Adkins, 5 Harr. (Del.) 381), a bond to the sheriff under the Trover Act of 1827 (Smith v. Cook, 2 McMull. (S. C.) 58), a bond to the sheriff and a holder of a judgment given in injunction proceeding for the bond is personal (Burgett v. Paxton, 15 Ill. App. 379), a bond to a purchaser of a business given by the seller with a condition that can only be enforced for the buyer's protection (Hillman v. Shannahan, 4 Oreg. 163, 18 Am. Rep. 281), a supersedeas bond (Yantes v. Smith, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 395), a guardianship bond (Cobb v. Williams, 1 Hill (S. C.) 375), a bond in an action where a breach must be assigned and a jury called to assess damages (Lewis v. Harwood, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 82, 3 L. ed. 160), a railroad bond coupon containing the numbers of the coupon and the bond for a named sum payable at a certain date on the coupon at a certain place (Jackson v. York, etc., R. Co., 48 Me. 147), a bond which is not for the payment of money but for the performance of some other act (Duncan v. Wilbanks, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 10), or a bond dischargeable partly in money and partly in specific acts (Jamieson v. Farr, 2 N. C. 210) is not assignable, at least so as to enable the assignee to sue thereon in his own name. See also Force v. Thomason, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 166; Sutton v. Owen, 65 N. C. 123; Campbell v. Mumford, 2 N. C. 459; Mc-

(B) Requisites and Sufficiency.[19] A bond may be assigned by deed or other writing or without writing so as to give the assignee a right to receive the debt, to release it, or to sue thereon in the name of the obligee; but in general the instrument itself should be delivered to the assignee.[20] A mere written direction to pay the amount of a bond does not, however, constitute an assignment,[21] although an intent to sell may be inferred from payment by a third person.[22] But an assignment of a bond is good though not under seal,[23] and if under seal it need show no consideration.[24] Again, special authority is necessary to enable one of several obligees to assign a bond in his own name and that of the others,[25] although there will be an equitable assignment to effectuate that which ought to have been done.[26] So the terms of a special assignment will not vary the nature of the undertaking, nor affect the assignor's liability as it existed by the mere operation of the law in the absence of an express stipulation to the contrary.[27]

2. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES — a. In General. Generally the liability of the maker and indorser of a bond is the same as in the case of bills and notes.[28]

Cutchen v. Keith, 2 Ohio 262; and, generally, ASSIGNMENTS, 4 Cyc. 1.

A bond of suretyship for the completion of a contract to perform work, and not payable to the assigns or obligee and providing for notice of default, cannot be assigned without the surety's assent before breach. Citizens' Trust, etc., Co. v. Howell, 10 Pa. Dist. 65.

A corporation bond, although assignable in equity by parol delivery, cannot be sued on in the assignee's name. Bunting v. Camden, etc., R. Co., 81 Pa. St. 254.

An obligation to collect money and pay it over to the obligee is not assignable. Force v. Thomason, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 166.

20. Morse v. Bellows, 7 N. H. 549, 28 Am. Dec. 372.

A deed or writing may not be necessary to enable the assignee to sue in his own name. Allen v. Pancoast, 20 N. J. L. 68. Nor is a written assignment necessary where the bond is assigned by parol before action begun. Hoffman v. Smith, 94 Iowa 495, 63 N. W. 182.

21. A written direction by the obligor to the obligee to pay a third party an indebtedness out of the proceeds collected upon a bond, and which contains no words of transfer or assignment, operates neither as an equitable assignment to the extent of the debt nor constitutes the bond a security therefor, especially where the obligee does not accept the direction to pay when the writing is presented to him. Clayton v. Fawcett, 2 Leigh (Va.) 19.

22. An intent to sell coupons may be inferred when the holder has actual notice that purchase and not payment is being made, and when having such notice he consents to take his money. So the same result follows if the holder acquiesces in the transaction, on being informed subsequently that pay is not made by the debtor but by a third person who intends to purchase and keep said coupons subsisting and uncanceled, although the holder can repudiate the transaction, return the money, and demand possession, otherwise the presumption is that he acquiesces in the transfer. One of two obligees cannot assign his separate interest so as to render his assignee and the coöbligee legal holders of the bond. Boyd v. Holmes, 1 Ind. 480. Although if a bond is assigned by one executor of the obligee against the other executor, who was also surviving executor of the obligor, a suit by the assignee will be supported in the absence of a plea in abatement. 26. White v. Follin, 1 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 187.

So equity as well as the law will enforce the sale of a bond for less than its nominal value, there being no fraud or usury. Kenner v. Hord, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 14.

27. Goodall v. Stuart, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 105.

28. Nevill v. Hancock, 15 Ark. 511. See also, generally, COMMERCIAL PAPER.

Indorser does not become principal debtor by reason of his indorsement. Hill v. Glasgow R. Co., 41 Fed. 610.

Indorsement in blank by the obligee does not make him liable to the holder in case of the debtor's insolvency. Parker v. Kennedy, 1 Bay (S. C.) 398. If a suit is brought against the indorser in blank of assignable paper seeking to make him primarily liable the instrument and indorsement are necessary evidence, even though insufficient of themselves to maintain the suit. Wells v. Jackson, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 40.

But a liability may exist against an indorser or guarantor of interest coupons, even though the bonds are void.[29] If an indorsee after maturity of a bond seeks recourse against the indorser reasonable diligence in making demand upon the maker for payment and notice to the indorser of non-payment are required.[30] Again, if the maker and indorser are sued jointly and a successful defense is made by the former on the ground of want of demand and notice the holder may still recover against the maker.[31] But an indorsee for value of a bond payable to himself cannot set up any infirmities therein in an action by the indorsee.[32]

b. By Assignment or Sale[33]— (i) In General. One who sells a bond without assigning it is presumed in the absence of fraud not to be liable thereon.[34] But generally an unconditional assignment constitutes the assignor a guarantor, but not absolutely at all events;[35] and one may become bound by the voluntary gift to another of a bond,[36] and an invalid bond may be a good consideration for a purchase note.[37] Where a bond has been assigned in general terms with a verbal Demand and notice should be alleged or some sufficient legal excuse for not doing so be shown in an action against the indorser of a bond brought under a statute. Hicks v. Vann, 4 Ark. 526. But an allegation that "the instrument was duly presented to the maker" is supported by proof that he could not be found on diligent search, nor need there be a special averment of such facts. Taylor v. Branch, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 249, 23 Am. Dec. 293.

If diligence is unsuccessfully used to recover the money of the obligor a transferee without assignment may sue, for money had and received, the person from whom the instrument was received, and the latter can only defend by express stipulation to the contrary. Mackie v. Davis, 2 Wash. (Va.) 219, 1 Am. Dec. 482.

Liability as to interest coupons not detached is fixed if the indorser's liability upon the bond is fixed by due demand and notice. Lane v. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co., 13 Lea (Tenn.) 547.

So a railroad corporation may, where proper steps have been taken, be charged as indorser of negotiable municipal corporation bonds which the latter has failed to pay or demand at maturity and the indorsement is unqualified. Bonner v. New Orleans, 2 Woods (U. S.) 135, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,631.

Under the Alabama statute of 1820 it must appear that a suit against the obligor has proved unproductive in order to sustain an action against the indorser by an indorsee. Ivey v. Sanderson, 6 Port. (Ala.) 420.

32. Henderson v. Lemly, 79 N. C. 169.

Accommodation indorser.— The assignor of a bond may be liable in assumpsit either as assignor or guarantor, where he assigns it by indorsement in blank to enable another to obtain credit and the latter becomes insolvent before payment of the credit. Hopkins v. Richardson, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 485. If the state becomes simply an accommodation indorser of railroad bonds as required by statute after the performance of certain conditions by the railroad the liability thereon does not antedate such performance except to a bona fide holder for value. Gilman v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 72 Ala. 566.

33. See also, generally, Assignments, VII [4 Cyc. 79].

34. Porter v. Breckenridge, Hard. (Ky.) 21.

35. In an unconditional assignment of a bond or claim the assignor is held to be a guarantor of the legality of the bond or thing assigned and of the solvency of the maker of the bond or claim, but he is not a guarantor of the solvency or honesty of the assignee's attorney whom he employs to collect the debt, and an assignee cannot recover against the assignor or his estate a debt which is collected from the execution debtor by the assignee's own attorneys or by the sheriff or constable and subsequently appropriated or embezzled by such attorneys, especially where the assignee suffers said attorney to retain the money. Kerlin v. Kerlin, 85 Va. 475, 7 S. E. 849. And an assignment without recourse is a guaranty that the instrument evidences a debt not paid, and the assignee is not prevented from recovering on the bond because of its payment and discharge before assignment. Mays v. Callison, 6 Leigh (Va.) 230.

36. Gift.— If a bond for the conveyance of land is voluntarily given to another and the gift is based upon the consideration of natural affection and is executed by assignment and delivery, or by assenting to the delivery, it constitutes a contract which a court of equity has no power to set aside, and an intention to modify the assignment and to claim such bond comes too late after rights have accrued thereunder. Pawling v. Speed, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 77, 12 Am. Dec. 269.

37. The fact that a bond is invalid because of non-compliance with statutory requirements does not constitute a failure of consideration which can be availed of in an action upon a promissory note given for the purchase thereof, and all who purchase such a

agreement that the assignor shall not be responsible, this operates as a limitation even as to a subsequent assignee without notice.[38] But a bond not delivered is not the subject of a sale on execution,[39] although a sale of bonds may be made upon an option to return.[40]

(II) Interest or Title Passing — (A) In General. The assignee takes the legal title and not a mere equitable interest;[41] and the presumption exists that a holder of corporate bonds payable to bearer is the rightful owner, nor is he obligated in order to recover thereon to show the manner in which they were obtained either by himself or by prior holders.[42] Another rule of importance is that the transfer of a debt or obligation carries with it as an incident all securities for its payment.[43] So the assignment of one of a series of collateral securities

38. Stubbs v. Burwell, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 536.

39. Bonds which have never been issued, although prepared and made complete in form, are not the subject of attachment or of sale upon execution, for until delivery they have no validity and are not in any sense property; otherwise, however, as to bonds delivered. Sickles v. Richardson, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 559.

40. If a sale of bonds is made with the option given to return them upon a certain condition the vendee's option is not impaired by his sale of said bonds to another with the same reservation and option, and where it is a part of the original agreement to refund the money paid for the bonds the original vendee has a right to the consideration upon return and this irrespective of the consideration of the second sale. If there is a refusal to accept the return of said bonds an action for the purchase-money, as upon a rescission of the contract, may be brought and the vendee is not obliged to prove that he has sustained damage to entitle him to exercise his option. Wooster v. Sage, 67 N. Y. 67 [affirming 6 Hun (N. Y.) 285].

Prior agreements.— If a bond is payable to bearer the holder is not affected by an agreement between the obligor and obligee that the latter should provide for the payment of interest thereon, but he has a right to presume that such bond was issued and transferred in the mode agreed upon between the original parties. Com. v. Pittsburgh, 34 Pa. St. 496.

Purchase from attorney or holder for special purpose.— If the statute provides that title can only be passed by an assignment in writing made and executed in the name and under the hand and seal of obligee, either by himself in person or by his attorney in fact legally authorized to do so, an assignment of a bond is invalid when made by such attorney in fact in terms different from those warranted by its contents. Strohecker v. Farmers' Bank, 8 Watts (Pa.) 188.

Purchaser from one who is not the obligee's agent but the holder merely of the bond for a special purpose only acquires no title and cannot recover thereon. McMinn v. Freeman, 68 N. C. 341.

The legal effect of the sale and delivery of a bond without indorsement is not to pass legal title, for the vendor may if he thinks proper release it to the maker of the bond. But the purchaser is the vendor's agent to receive the money and it vests in him as legal owner when received, for this reception of the money extinguishes the chose in action, and where the purchaser obtains judgment in the vendor's name which is collected and paid to the vendor after notice by the purchaser, the former is liable therefor to the purchaser. Hoke v. Carter, 34 N. C. 324.

Title under contract to procure assignment.— If a proposition is made to another on consideration to procure an assignment the contract is not fulfilled unless the instrument be produced, especially where the terms of the promise imply a delivery. Such a contract is one to pay if the bond is produced and an authority to receive payment is shown, or if it has been duly assigned or delivered or its non-production is accounted for by loss from time, accident, or other cause. It is not enough to show a loss of the bond merely, it must be shown to have been lost after delivery. It was also declared in this case that it was unimportant whether the promise be made before or after the assignment, provided such assignment be obtained in pursuance of such promise and within a reasonable time, and that what is a reasonable time depends upon the situation of the parties and the subject-matter of the contract. Morse v. Bellows, 7 N. H. 549, 28 Am. Dec. 372.

Co. v. Ohio Valley Imp., etc., Co., 69 Fed. 431, 75 Fed. 433, 43 U. S. App. 550, 22 C. C. A. 378 (guaranty on railroad bond passes and is not within Ky. Gen. Stat. c. 22, §§ 6, 13, 14, making assignments assigns them all,[44] and title to coupons passes with bonds.[45] So the assignment of a bond transfers a guaranty of payment.[46] But a personal guaranty does not pass.[47]

(B) Effect of Payment, Satisfaction, or Release After Assignment. Whether or not a payment, release, or satisfaction of a bond after assignment is valid and effective depends largely upon notice. If the payment, etc., is made after notice of the assignment it is not binding upon the assignee nor may the obligee then release the obligor.[48] This rule has been extended so that if the circumstances under which payment is made to the obligee are such as should have put a man of ordinary caution on inquiry and so have enabled him to ascertain that the bond had been assigned, a recovery by the assignee is not defeated in an action against the obligor.[49] If, however, a bond has been assigned and the obligor has had no notice thereof at the time of his payment to the obligee such payment is valid and discharges the debt.[50] So it may be shown, irrespective of the obligee's intentions in making the assignment, that payment was made bona fide to one in possession of a bond assigned in blank;[51] and one of the joint obligees may discharge an action on the bond brought by an assignee of one of them in the name of obligations subject to defenses); George v. Tate, 102 U. S. 564, 26 L. ed. 232 (bond to release attached property passes [citing Claflin v. Ostrom, 54 N. Y. 581; Craig v. Parkis, 40 N. Qualificative decisions.— But it is also decided that a guaranty which is no part of the bond does not pass, for the statute which gives an action to the legal assignee of the bond does not give him an action on a contract which though ancillary is not collateral to it, and to have the benefit of that he must use the assignor's name. Beckley v. Eckert, 3 Pa. St. 292. So a promise to procure an assignment necessitates a production of the instrument and an assignment of the debt is not an assignment of the deed. "Assigns" not personal.— In Douglas v. Hennessy, 15 R. I. 272, 3 Atl. 213, 7 Atl. 1, 10 Atl. 583, it was declared that the bond was not intended to confer a privilege on the obligee which was purely personal but was intended to be assignable, and that the word "assigns" in the condition of a bond includes an administrator as assignee by act of law who is entitled to performance of the condition.

It is a good plea of payment that the obligor without knowledge of the assignment and before the bond became due had been obligated to pay sums exceeding the amount of the bond for which he had become bound as surety for the obligee. Frants v. Brown, 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 287. So an assignee of a bond is entitled to the amount thereof, unless it is paid before notice of his interest, or unless it has been assigned to a third person whose interest is superior to his. Mason v. Nelson, 11 Leigh (Va.) 234. And where a bond becomes payable and is thereafter assigned but afterward and before notice of the assignment the maker becomes surety for the obligee for another debt and is obliged to pay the same after the obligee's insolvency, he is entitled in equity to set off such payment against his own bond in the assignee's hands. Qualificative decisions.— It is decided that an equity between the obligor and his assignee cannot be urged successfully, where there has been no fraud and the debt is justly due. Duncan v. Wray, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 371. So the obligor who has equitable discounts against the bond ought to inform the assignee of his claims when notice of the assignment is given to him. Scott v. Jones, 1 Brock. (U. S.) 244, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,536. And equities of a third person of which the assignee has no notice are not within the rule. Moore v. Holcombe, 3 Leigh (Va.) 597, 24 Am. Dec. 683. Nor are equities included which are between the original parties subsequent to the assignment and notice. Newman v. Crocker, 1 Bay (S. What is not a defense.—The obligor cannot defend on the ground of a usurious contract between the obligee and the assignees. Littell v. Hord, Hard. (Ky.) 81. And giving time on a note is no defense where the bond is given to protect one against the debt and a bond is thereupon made to guarantee performance of the former one. Kennedy v. Goss, 38 N. Y. 330. So a purchaser or pledgee of railroad bonds who has complete title from a contractor can recover the full value, even though the condition of the bonds is only partly performed and the pledgee has full knowledge of the condition and the part performance only, since the intention was that the bonds should be issued in order that the contractor might proceed with his work. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Zanesville, etc., R. Co., 52 Fed. 342. And an objection to the capacity of a county court to buy a bond secured by a lien is not available, where the lienholder and assignor consented to the enforcement of the lien in favor of the county. Moore v. Bath County Ct., 7 Bush (Ky.) 177. And if a bond is payable to bearer possession is sufficient. Galbreath v. Knoxville, (Tenn. Ch. 1900) 59 S. W. 178.

Invalidity.—The principle that a bill drawn by a partner upon his own house and a firm note given by him payable to his own order are both valid in the hands of a bona fide holder applies where obligees assign a bond and one of them is also one of the obligors and so cannot sue himself, for whatever invalidity exists in law is obviated by a statutory right of the assignee to sue in his own name. Bradford v. Williams, 4 How. (U. S.) 576, 11 L. ed. 1109.

Waiver or estoppel.— The obligor may waive any special defense in an action on the bond by the assignee. Montgomery v. Dillingham, 3 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 647. But payment by the obligor of interest on a bond after assignment does not prevent setting up a defense against the bond which he had against the obligee. Harper v. Jeffries, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 26. And one is not bound by acknowledging his liability after an assignment, where he has a good defense against the original obligee. Ludwick v. Croll, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 464, 1 Am. Dec. 362. Again one who believes that he has an equitable defense against his bond and who does not accede to or absolutely all the rebutting equity attached to it in the hands of the assignor.[55] There are, however, exceptions to the general rule, and circumstances may place the assignee in a better situation than his assignor and the conduct of the latter may change the relations that existed between him and the assignee and deprive him of an equity he had against the assignor. If deceit is practised upon the assignee and he is induced to believe that the bond to be assigned will be paid by the obligor whereby he is led to take the assignment, the assignee is deceived and the obligor cannot set up a concealed equity between him and the assignor.[57] Again, an assignment or sale obtained by fraud, artifice, or false representations cannot be sustained;[58] nor can a bona fide purchaser for value be deprived of his rights by reason of a mutual mistake.[59] But an assignee is not obligated to accept payment in lands of a bond assigned as collateral.[60] If, however, an assignor after notice of assignment receives credits he is liable therefor to a surety who pays a judgment obtained by the assignee.[61] refuse a proposition to discount against an indebtedness from a holder before assignment does not waive his right to the discount, and the assignee takes it subject to the right. Picket v. Morris, 2 Wash. (Va.) 255. If there is more than one obligor all must join in the act of waiver relied on as a defense as against an assignee. Columbia Bridge Co. v. Kline, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 39, 6 Pa. L. J. 317.

(III) Rights of Assignee or Transferee — (A) Generally. An assign-

New bond extending the day of payment does not bar an equity then unknown against the obligee, where the statute provides that an assignment carries with it all the equities to which the bonds were subject in the obligee's hands, for the new bond is not a new contract. Pile v. Shannon, Hard. (Ky.) 53.

Security inuring to assignee — Cancellation. — If a bond and mortgage are assigned and the mortgagor without notice thereof pays his debt to the mortgagee, and takes a bond conditioned for the payment of the mortgage debt to the assignee and to save the mortgagor harmless, the security inures to the benefit of the assignee who is the real party in interest, the mortgagor having been discharged by the payment, and especially where there is an extinguishment of the bond and guaranty by an instrument of cancellation from the mortgagor, even though it purports to be based upon consideration but is not so in fact, and the subsequent transfer thereafter by the mortgagor conveys no interest. Agreement which tends to contradict the written contract is insufficient. Richardson v. Bennethum, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 494.

58. Artifice or fraud. — If an assignee who makes a purchase of a bond obtains the indorsement by fraud and artifice or false representations his claim has no equity and cannot prevail against a subsequent assignment to the rightful owner, although the latter derived his right through several parol contracts. McCormac v. Smith, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 429. And it may be proven in reduction of damages that a sale of a chattel was effected through false representations on the part of the payee as to the value of the chattel where the suit is by the assignee of the bond. Withers v. Greene, 9 How. (U. S.) 213, 13 L. ed. 109. Although an assignee of a bond for payment of land who has notice of fraud in the sale of the land is in no worse position than his assignor the vendor as to payment of the purchase-money. Highland v. Highland, 5 W. Va. 63.

Threats. — A plea that the assignment was extorted from the obligee by threats is not good in any action by the assignee, even though the obligor had notice from the obligee and was required not to pay the assignee. McCausland v. Drake, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 344.

59. Mistake or ignorance in regard to the premium on government bonds which is not of the essence of the contract nor its procuring cause does not avoid a sale thereof, and where such bonds are deposited in a bank which purchases them in good faith at par and both parties are ignorant that they were then selling at a premium the depositor cannot recover such premium and the sale is valid. Sankey v. Mifflinburg First Nat. Bank, 78 Pa. St. 48.

60. If a bond is assigned as collateral security for a debt from the assignor, the assignee is not obligated to accept an offer by the obligor with the consent of the assignor of the payment in lands where such obligor is in embarrassed circumstances and subsequently before payment becomes insolvent, especially where insolvency is within the meaning of the stipulation between the parties, and especially so where the title is extremely questionable. Rhinelander v. Barrow, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 538.

61. Roberts v. Jordans, 3 Munf. (Va.) 488.

ment cannot be altered or changed except upon consent;[62] nor does cancellation without consent revest title;[63] nor will a coöbligor be permitted by purchase of the bond to secure an inequitable advantage over the others.[64] In case of two obligees each may assign his own interest but he cannot dispose of that of the other without the latter's consent;[65] and if only one of several knows of the transfer the assignment will be revoked as to the others by the assignor's death.[66] If assignees of a bond are alone beneficially interested in a covenant to do certain things it is competent for them to give notice of the breach and request performance of the condition, and the rights of the assignee will be protected.[67]

(B) As to Filling Blanks.[68] A bond issued in blank may be filled in by the purchaser with his own name.[69] If, however, the blank is filled in by a payee with his own name in the absence and without the knowledge of one of two obligors the bond is invalid as to him,[70] and the place of payment cannot be filled in where the blank constitutes a want of certainty under the conditions of the bond.[71]

(C) Implied Warranties. In case of a bond or coupon there is an implied warranty by the vendor that it is genuine and binds the obligor; but otherwise

62. After an assignment is once made or has become complete the assignor has no power to release the debt or any part thereof. He has thereafter no control over the contract and no right to strike out or erase such assignment because thereby by its delivery all the interest becomes vested in the assignee, nor can such assignor then do any act that will change the nature of the defense that the obligor may have at law against himself or against the assignee. An assignor has no right or authority to alter or change the contract of assignment to the prejudice of the assignee or obligor without their consent or agreement. These rights are vested by the assignment and pass by delivery of the writing obligatory upon which the assignment is made, and being vested in them by statute or otherwise they cannot be divested of them without an express or implied agreement on their part. Block v. Walker, 2 Ark. 4, per Lacy, J.; Reed v. Nevins, 38 Me. 193.

As to alterations in instruments, generally, see ALTERATIONS OF INSTRUMENTS, 2 Cyc. 137.

63. A cancellation by the assignee of a bond without the knowledge or consent of the obligee does not revest the legal ownership of the bond in such obligee, for the law does not permit a cancellation when the interests of the obligee will be affected by it. Davis v. Christy, 8 Mo. 569, decided under a statute which made the assignee of a bond the legal owner so that no suit could be maintained after the assignment in the name of the obligee or payee.

As to cancellation see supra, III, G.

64. If coöbligors, in order to protect one from paying a bond on which he had become an obligor, deposit money in his hands therefor and he purchases the bond such purchase inures to the benefit of all, and surplus moneys of the deposit over the amount of the purchase must be returned, for an obligor cannot thus speculate with his cosureties. Davis v. Levy, 28 La. Ann. 834.

65. Brown v. Dickenson, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 690. But one of two assignees of a penal bond cannot by a separate assignment transfer to a third person the legal title to his moiety. Skinner v. Bedell, 32 Ala. 44.

66. In order to constitute a binding contract the minds of the contracting parties must assent to its terms, and if a bond is assigned to several and only one of them knows of the transfer or accepts its provisions the assignment is revoked by the assignor's death as to all who have not assented. Ellis v. Smith, 38 Me. 114.

Tender — Subrogation.— And a surety who is liable as co-principal is upon tender of the amount of the bond entitled to an assignment from the holder, and this cannot be refused on the ground that an inequitable use might be made of it, and such surety is in equity entitled to subrogation upon such tender. where all the facts connected with its execution and delivery are disclosed and the vendee agrees to take it at his own risk, or where there is an express stipulation overriding the implication;[72] although it is decided as to bonds payable to order or bearer that the only implied warranty of the vendor is that they belong to him and are not forgeries.[73] The principal rule has been further qualified by a ruling that the implied covenant arising from the assignment is not a guaranty but only that the assignee shall receive the money from the obligor to his own use, and if the obligee should receive it that then the assignor would be answerable over for it. If, however, the assignor has dealt in good faith his responsibilities cease as to the bond;[74] nor does the seller impliedly warrant that bonds are legally issued.[75]

(D) Recourse Against Assignor—(1) GENERALLY. The simple assignment of a bond operates as to the assignor's liability not otherwise than a mere sale of Ct. 1148, 41 L. ed. 199 (where warranty is declared to be of the nature though not of the essence of the contract of sale and is implied in the absence of a stipulation contra); Otis v. Cullum, 92 U. S. 447, 23 L. ed. 496. And the implied warranty may cover a deficiency after recourse and due diligence. Peay v. Morrison, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 149. Again an assignment imports a debt due from the assignor to the assignee. Drummond v. Crutcher, 2 Wash. (Va.) 218. And a representation that payment was or would be guaranteed implies a warranty. Callanan v. Brown, 31 Iowa 333. But in the absence of fraud an implied undertaking of payment does not enable the assignee to recover against the assignor, where there is not due diligence against the obligor. Graham v. Gondy, Add. (Pa.) 55. The agreement may, however, be such that there is a sale of a right to take bonds on certain conditions to a certain amount without any warranty being implied. Corcoran v. Henshaw, 8 Gray (Mass.) 267.

74. Lloyd v. McNamara, 19 Pa. St. 130; Elliott v. Miller, Add. (Pa.) 269; Cummings v. Lynn, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 444, 1 L. ed. 215.

75. Ruohs v. Chattanooga Third Nat. Bank, 94 Tenn. 57, 28 S. W. 303. So it may be shown that the seller supposed the bonds to be genuine and that both he and the vendee made inquiries at the time and that the seller refused any guaranty except that the bonds were not stolen. Porter v. Bright, 82 Pa. St. 441. It is also determined that the implied warranty of the genuineness and validity of a bond is broken as soon as made as in case of other warranties of title, if in point of fact the bond is not a valid security, and that the assignee's right of action accrues immediately against the assignor without waiting until the bond is due. Flynn v. Allen, 57 Pa. St. 482.

Warranty and covenants.— Whether the representations in a certificate annexed to railroad bonds constitute a warranty depends upon all the attendant circumstances. It is essential to the existence of such a contract that the party purchasing should have received and relied upon the affirmation in assenting to or in consummating the sale and purchase of the bond as between himself and the corporation. If he did not so receive or rely upon it and was not influenced by it and did not act upon the faith of it in making the bargain there was no warranty by the vendors, and their affirmation constituted no part of the consideration. Edwards v. Marcy, 2 Allen (Mass.) 486. So non-performance of covenants of warranty and failure of consideration in that a good title to bonds has not been given is demurrable. Worthington v. Curd, 15 Ark. 491. But it is also held that failure to perform covenants which constitute the consideration constitutes a good defense. Western Bank v. Sherwood, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 383. But a condition to protect the vendee from payment of a purchase-money note by the vendor for the land conveyed is not a warranty of title, and unless the purchaser has paid the note or other lien there can be no recovery. Clayton v. Franco-Texan Land Co., 15 Tex. Civ. App. 365, 39 S. W. 645.

Constitutional invalidity.—Where the bonds are valid in the contemplation of both the vendor and the vendee, but they are void by a constitutional provision adopted after the issuance thereof, and are not void because of the want of power to enact the law under which they were issued, nor because they are ultra vires, nor for any other legal cause, and there is nothing on their face indicating invalidity, there is a breach of the implied warranty of identity and the vendor may recover. Meyer v. Richards, 163 U. S. 385, 16 S. Ct. 1148, 41 L. ed. 199 [distinguishing Otis v. Cullum, 92 U. S. 447, 23 L. ed. 496]. See further as to void bonds Hedges v. Dixon County, 150 U. Counterfeit bonds.— One who purchases such United States bonds which have been redeemed by the government may recover back what he has paid therefor before he has returned them or repaid the government. Brewster v. Burnett, 125 Mass. 68, 28 Am. Rep. 203.

other property,[76] and the consideration received is the measure of the assignor's responsibility.[77] What has been said, however, in regard to an indorser's liability and recourse against him[78] applies here to the extent that an assignee in order to charge the assignor should make demand and give notice according to law and should use at least due and reasonable diligence to obtain payment from the obligor, unless he is out of the commonwealth and such absence was not within the assignor's or assignee's contemplation, nor should there be any laches or unreasonable delay in seeking recourse or in pursuing the necessary legal remedies.[79]

Usurious bonds.— A sale of such bonds impliedly warrants their validity, where the holder knows that they are void for usury. Ross v. Terry, 63 N. Y. 613.

76. Stout v. Stevenson, 4 N. J. L. 206. And it does not entitle the assignee to sue the assignor in case the obligor fails to pay the assignee. Garretsie v. Vanness, 2 N. J. L. 17, 2 Am. Dec. 333.

77. Duncan v. Littell, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 424.

This principle governs and is fully illustrated by the following decisions: Bush v. Bush, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 501; Herwig v. Richardson, 44 La. Ann. 703, 11 So. 135; Pugh v. Moore, 44 La. If a bond is given by a continuing to an outgoing partner, with a surety conditioned for the payment of the firm's debts, and the assignee sue the obligor and surety, only such sum can be recovered as is due after allowance of the sums allowable against the assignor. Merrill v. Green, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 582 [affirmed in 55 N. Y. 270].

Agreement that assignor not responsible made at the time of the assignment between the assignor and assignee relieves him from liability even to a subsequent assignee without notice, the assignment being in general terms. Stubbs v. Burwell, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 536.

Failure of consideration.— In an action on a guaranty of payment brought by a second assignee, the first assignor may show a failure of consideration between him and the first assignee. Waring v. Cheesborough, 1 Hill (S. C.) 187.

Invalid bonds—Estoppel.—Although bonds are unconstitutional the holder may nevertheless bind himself and his property for their payment, and having thus given them currency he cannot repudiate his pledge at the expense of his transferee. Jamison v. Griswold, 6 Mo. App. 405. As to estoppel of assignor to deny validity see Moncure v. Dermott, 5 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 445, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,707 [reversed in 13 Pet. (U. S.) 345, 10 L. ed. 193].

78. See supra, IV, B, 2, a.

79. Demand and notice, and reasonable diligence.— The holder of a bond before it is due must make demand and give notice of non-payment to hold a remote indorser; but after it is due by several indorsements the immediate indorser may be held by reasonable demand and notice but not a remote indorser as to whom a period of diligence has elapsed. Ellis v. Dunham, 14 Ark. 127. But notice to the assignor is not necessary in an action of covenant on the assignment, where the obligees assign and guarantee payment. Sibley v. Stull, 15 N. J. L. 332. And in Alabama it was unnecessary prior to the statute of 1832 to demand payment at the bank. Woodcock v. Campbell, 2 Port. (Ala.) 456. Although the assignee may sue if he has used due diligence without success (Ivey v. Sanderson, 6 Port. (Ala.) 420; Lewis v. Hoblitzell, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 259; Mackie v. Davis, 2 Wash. (Va.) 219, 1 Am. Dec. 482); or where there is proof of the inutility of such prosecution (Lewis v. Hoblitzell, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 259). Nor does a mortgage of indemnity from the obligor to the assignor excuse due diligence. Trimble v. Webb, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 100. So the assignee cannot show that the obligor was unable to pay, or could not be found in the county of his abode, or that some other thing or casualty happened precluding recovery against the obligor notwithstanding due diligence. Boyer v. Turner, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 285. And there must also be proof of due diligence. Parrott v. Gibson, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 398. So not only due diligence is required but every compulsory process of the law, unless the debtor was out of the commonwealth and such absence was not contemplated by the assignee and assignor. Smallwood v. Woods, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 542. And the remedy at law must be exhausted, nor does the principal's death excuse proceeding against the representatives. Hume v. Long, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 116. But recourse may be had after execution returned nulla bona, even though failure to collect was due to the sheriff's negligence or malfeasance. Smith v. Triplett, 4 Leigh (Va.) 590. See further as to judgment and execution James v. Nicholson, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 288; Johnston v. Hackley, 6 Munf. (Va.) 448. But the assignee cannot recover against the assignor where judgment was enforced but was not shown to be perpetual. McClung v. Arbuckle, 6 Munf. (Va.) 315. Although upon suit in equity where funds in a trustee's hands were insufficient to satisfy the claim the balance may be recovered in a suit against the obligor's debtor, and in default of funds in whole or part the assignor may be proceeded against. Taylor v. Ficklin, 5 Munf. (Va.) 25. But unreasonable delay or want of diligence against a solvent obligor releases the assignor from liability to the assignee. Tribble v. Davis, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 633; Bedal v. Stith, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 290; Moredock v. Rawlings, 3 T. B.

(2) In Case of Insolvency of Obligor. In case of the insolvency of the obligor the assignor is liable to the assignee.[80] Nor can an obligor escape liability by proof of the assignment by a corporation in contemplation of insolvency.[81]

(E) Suits by Assignee[82]—(1) Parties. An assignee of a bond could not at the common law sue thereon in his own name, even though it was payable to the obligee or his assigns.[83] But where the statute has abrogated the common-law rule an action lies in the name of the assignee in all cases within the statute.[84]

Mon. (Ky.) 73; Dougherty v. Maple, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 557. And there may be laches from failure to sue the assignor in one year. Greenlee v. Young, 2 N. C. 5. And so of a failure to sue out capias ad satisfaciendum for five months after return of fieri facias. Smith v. Blunt, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 522. But where fieri facias is returned nulla bona and the debtor is arrested on capias ad satisfaciendum and released for want of security for costs there is no laches, unless the debtor had property not within reach of fieri facias. Young v. Cosby, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 227.

80. Smallwood v. Woods, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 542. Contra, see Anderson v. Bradford, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 69; Coiner v. Hansbarger, 4 Leigh (Va.) 452.

Particular decisions.— Fieri facias need not precede a capias ad satisfaciendum to entitle the assignee to a remedy against the assignor, where no property can be found under the schedule and the insolvency may be proved by parol. Bryan v. Perry, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 275. And the obligor's discharge from capias ad satisfaciendum under the insolvent law does not release the assignor. Greer v. Blackledge, 1 N. C. 73. And a return of nulla bona on an execution against the obligor is sufficient. Harrison v. Raines, 5 Munf. (Va.) 456; Goodall v. Stuart, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 105. Contra, Eddings v. Glascock, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 295. If the obligor is notoriously insolvent, the assignee is not bound to sue him before recourse to an assignor. Saunders v. Marshall, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 455. See Coiner v. Hansbarger, 4 Leigh (Va.) 452, upon this point, and it was also decided that the assignor's promise to pay binds him, although a promise must be based on sufficient consideration. Hopkins v. Richardson, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 485. If the obligor is insolvent an action lies by the last assignee in the name of the first assignee against the assignor to recover back the amount paid for the bond. Dunn v. Price, 11 Leigh (Va.) 210. So if obligees are insolvent at the time of the first instalment due the assignor is liable, and an assignment under the Absconding Debtors Act evidences the insolvency, and the failure to prove the amount against the insolvent's estate does not avail the assignor. Ten Eyck v. Tibbits, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 427. But if the obligee, on assigning, covenants with the assignee to stand as security for payment it covers the obligor's insolvency, provided the assignee uses due diligence. United States.— Chew v. Brumagen, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 497, 20 L. ed. 663, construing New York statute.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bonds," § 97.

Particular instances.— The assignee may sue in his own name where the bond is payable to blank (Chapin v. Vermont, etc., R Co., 8 Gray (Mass.) 575); where payable to the obligee or his heirs (Carhart v. Miller 5 N. J. L. 675); where the bond is held as collateral (Chew v. Brumagen, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 497, 20 L. ed. 663); where the bond is not one of indemnity but of direct covenant (Salmon Falls Bank v. Leyser, 116 Mo. 51, 22 S. W. 504); or where one is the assignee of an assignee, even though the first assignment was not in terms to assigns (Allen v. Pancoast, 20 N. J. L. 68). See also Bennington Iron Co. v. Rutherford, 18 N. J. L. 158. And the statute giving the right to sue in the assignee's name and the assignment itself may remove the inability of an obligee to sue himself as obligor. Bradford v. Williams, 4 How. (U. S.) 576, 11 L. ed. 1109. So bonds transferred to secure an indebtedness makes the plaintiff the real party in interest. New York City Ninth Nat. Bank v. Ralls Co., 20 Fed. 374. And a suit lies in one state in the name of an assignee of an administrator appointed in another state. Leake v. Gilchrist, 13 N. C. 73.

If a bond is void for turpitude of consideration, it being assignable may be enforced by the assignee and considerations malum

Again, the assignee of a bond may in equity sue thereon in his own name,[85] although the statute is declared to be applicable to bonds for the payment of money only.[86] And notwithstanding the statutory right, action may be brought in the assignor's name;[87] and a bond conditioned for the performance of an act beneficial to the obligee may be sued on for a subsequent purchaser's benefit.[88] So a holder of one of several bonds may under the circumstances be a necessary party to a suit by the assignee of the remaining bonds.[89]

(2) Pleading. In an action against the obligors a declaration is not demurrable which sets up the bond, the condition, its performance by the obligee and non-performance by the obligor and consequent indebtedness, which was not paid, and the assignment of such bond and indebtedness.[90] But consideration for in se and malum prohibitum are not distinguished. Henderson v. Shannon, 12 N. C. 147.

Suit by assignor for use of assignee does not lie (Block v. Walker, 2 Ark. 4; Gamblin v. Walker, 1 Ark. 220), unless there is a consent or request of the party in interest (Reed v. Nevins, 38 Me. 193. But see Beckley v. Eckert, 3 Pa. St. 292).

85. In equity.— Young v. Person, 3 N. C. 398 (but he must allege that the assignment was for value); Winn v. Bowles, 6 Munf. (Va.) 23 (and the statutory right is merely cumulative). So the equitable assignee by delivery may sue in his own name, even though there is no formal assignment. Kiff v. Weaver, 94 N. C. 274, 55 Am. Rep. 601. And the assignee may assert his equitable title acquired by statute either in his own name or in that of the obligee. Garland v. Richeson, 4 Rand. (Va.) 266. So the assignee of an interest of a co-assignee who was an executrix may maintain a bill in equity against the executor and executrix of the obligor. Crawford v. Childress, 1 Ala. 482.

86. Richardson v. Beaumont, 20 N. J. L. 578.

87. Coachman v. Hunt, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 450.

When action in assignor's name.— The assignee cannot sue in his own name, notwithstanding the statute, where a bond is payable to bearer and transferred merely by delivery. Buckner v. Greenwood, 6 Ark. 200. So action must be brought in the assignor's name and he must join all the obligors, where his right of recovery is limited to one of three in a joint obligation. Lyon v. Ross, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 308. And the assignor's name may be used where the assignment is by one of two obligees. Dougherty v. Maple, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 557. Again an extension of time of performance indorsed upon the bond by agreement with the assignee does not entitle him to sue in his own name. Cole v. Bodfish, 17 Me. 310. So suit may be brought on a money bond in the name of the obligee or of his personal representative in case of death. Lowndes v. King, 1 S. C. 102. And the suit must be brought irrespective of the party in interest in the name of the assignor or obligee, in an action of debt on the bond. Waller v. Adams, 1 Hayw. & H. (U. S.) 218, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,107.

Assignment — Delivery and ownership.— Notice of assignment must be averred in suit on bond to convey lands upon payment of a certain note. Burt v. Henry, 10 Ala. 874. And transfer of title to bond must be alleged. Hardie v. Mills, 20 Ark. 153. But an allegation of assignment imports delivery which need not be otherwise alleged. Feimster v. Smith, 10 Ark. 494. So an averment that one is the owner and holder is sufficient. Gardner v. Haney, 86 Ind. 17. And profert of the assignment is necessary. Alston v. Whiting, 6 Ark. 402. So a reply to a plea of former recovery and satisfaction is sufficient which sets up the assignment and notice thereof to defendant and notice of non-prosecution of the former action for the assignee's benefit. Dawson v. Coles, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 51. But a plea of a prior assignment to another is insufficient if it does not show that the other was owner of the bond when action was commenced (Marvin v. Bolles, 18 N. J. L. 365); although an assignment need not be drawn secundum artem (Haile v. Richardson, 2 Strobh. (S. C.) 114). And how the title is acquired need not be stated where the bond is payable to bearer. Gardner v. Haney, 86 Ind. 17. A plea denying the assignment should be verified by oath (Sevier v. Wilson, 8 Ark. 496); and so of a plea denying its validity (Prewett v. Vaughn, 21 Ark. 417); and so verified it is sufficient (Jordan v. Mewborn, 8 Ark. 502). If assignment is denied the replication should not be a departure. Jordan v. Mewborn, 8 Ark. 502. Again a plea of non est factum admits the assignment (Davis v. Imboden, 10 Mo. 340); although it is also decided that upon such a plea it must be proven (——— v. Wright, 3 N. C. 327; McMurtry v. Campbell, 1 Ohio 262 [see Ford v. Vandyke, 33 N. C. 227]); and also that such a plea will be stricken out as not answering the averment (Richards v. Morris Canal, etc., Co., 18 N. J. L. 250). But if after oyer a date is added to the assignment previously indorsed on the bond this does not defeat recovery. Lowndes v. King, 1 S. C. 102. Again, an averment of authority to assign for another if not ques-

the assignment should be averred;[91] although if there is a dependent condition it is sufficient if its non-performance be alleged;[92] and execution by several must be averred.[93] But the statute giving the right to the assignee to sue need not be stated;[94] nor need the assignee set forth the fact that he sues in that capacity;[95] and negativing payment to the assignor before transfer is sufficient, even though payment to the assignee is not negatived.[96] There should, however, be an affirmative allegation by the maker in his plea of equities that he had no notice thereof before transfer.[97] So a plea setting up matters of defense against a prior holder is not good unless it appears that plaintiff did not become a bona fide holder for value.[98]

(3) Evidence. The execution of the bond need not be proven;[99] nor the consideration for the assignment in an action by the assignee;[1] nor the handwriting of prior indorsers.[2] And evidence of a fact that would impeach the validity of a bond will not constitute the basis of a decree where it is not alleged that the assignor knew the fact or concealed his knowledge thereof from the assignee.[3] But where ownership by the assignor is material there should be sufficient proof thereof.[4] Again, in case of proof of payment there should be no variance.[5]

c. Bona Fide Purchasers — (1) In General. As a rule[6] one is a bona fide tioned below is good on appeal. Hubble v. Mullanphy, Hard. (Ky.) 294. And if it is stated that plaintiff is the legal holder as trustee this sufficiently shows title. Smith v. Dean, 19 Mo. 63.

91. Duncan v. Littell, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 424; Hall v. Smith, 3 Munf. (Va.) 550. An averment that an assignment was made for value received is only an allegation of the consideration and not that the assignment is so written, but if it is not there is no variance. Averment of non-payment to the obligee before and to the assignee after the assignment is necessary, and in case of joint and several obligors named in an action against one it should be alleged that neither of them had paid. Gregory v. Freeman, 22 N. J. L. 405. So a failure to pay the obligee and each of the assignees should be alleged. Braxton v. Lipscomb, 2 Munf. (Va.) 282. And although there is an averment of non-payment to the plaintiff the complaint is defective if it fails to allege non-payment to the assignor before notice of assignment, and such defect is not cured by verdict. Green v. Dulany, 2 Munf. (Va.) 518. Again, in debt on bond by a survivor of joint assignees, it must be averred not only that there has been no payment to the obligee or plaintiff but also that there was no payment to the deceased assignee in his lifetime. Nicholson v. Dixon, 5 Munf. (Va.) 198. And in such an action by an administrator of the assignee against the administrator of the obligor a charge of non-payment to the assignor before notice of assignment or to the assignee in his lifetime afterward is defective. 6. In applying this rule, however, the nature of the bond, its character as to negotiability or transfer, to whom payable, as to bearer, to order, or in blank, etc., and the purposes of the issuance and transfer, and in purchaser or holder of bonds, who obtains them for value in the usual course of business before actual or apparent maturity, without notice of equities or defenses or of facts affecting their validity in his hands, or where the circumstances are not such as that he is obligated in good faith to make inquiry. Title and rights involve the question of validity and this may relate to the inception of the bonds, the authority to issue them, or to fraudulent or other acts which may or may not affect bona fide purchasers according to the circumstances. Thus corporation bonds may not as to their issuance be exactly in conformity with charter requirements and yet be valid in the hands of transferees holding in good faith.[7] So certain cases the statutory authority under which issued are all important, as are also the facts whether or not they are clearly tainted with suspicion, the legal character of the party transferring, and the nature of the indorsement if indorsed. Thus "Bona fide purchaser" includes:

A bank without notice of infirmity of corporate bonds where it has given value. Stainback v. Junk Bros. Lumber, etc., Co., 98 Tenn. 306, 39 S. W. 530. See Tompkins County Nat. Bank v. Bunnell, etc., Invest. Co., 8 N. Y. App. Div. 90, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 411, 74 N. Y. St. 857.

bonds may be expressly voided by the constitution of a state, and the invalidity attach thereto in the hands of bona fide holders or purchasers.[8] And a presumption of knowledge arises against holders of government bonds as to the laws by the authority of which they are created as well also as of all lawful acts done thereunder.[9] Again the unlawful alteration of a state bond will invalidate it even in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value;[10] and the fraudulent reissue before sale of such bonds is a defense.[11] But ordinarily the title and rights of a holder in good faith and for value are not affected by fraud, error, or mistake of which he has no notice, unless the circumstances are such as that the failure to inquire constitutes bad faith.[12] Thus negotiable railroad bonds payable

Ct. 539, 28 L. ed. 517. And in Buchanan v. Litchfield, 102 U. S. 278, 26 L. ed. 138, it is decided that notwithstanding recitals in municipal bonds bona fide holders cannot sue on unpaid coupons.

If bonds are regular upon their face and are in the hands of bona fide holders without actual notice the non-organization of the corporation within the time presented by charter is no defense, nor that when the bonds were issued a suit to restrain such issue was pending, nor is evidence of irregularities or even fraud in the issuance admissible. Macon County v. Shores, 97 U. S. 272, 24 L. ed. 889. Negotiable security of a corporation appearing on its face to have been duly and regularly issued is decided to be valid in the hands of a purchaser in good faith without notice, although issued in fact at a place and for a purpose not authorized by the charter. Marshall County v. Schenck, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 772, 18 L. ed. 556. But in Barnett v. Denison, 145 U. S. 135, 12 S. Ct. 819, 36 L. ed. 652, it was decided that where a municipal bond was not for a purpose specified in the charter no protection was afforded. And in Ottawa v. Carey, 108 U. S. 110, 2 S. Ct. 361, 27 L. ed. 669, it was determined that municipal bonds invalidly issued were void in the hands of one not an innocent bona fide holder without notice. While in Provident L. & T. Co. v. Mercer County, 170 U. S. 593, 18 S. Ct. 788, 42 L. ed. 1156, it was declared that bona fide holders of county bonds issued to aid a railroad were entitled to recover even if conditions as to delivery were not performed. Evidently the distinction in these decisions is whether or not the corporation has power at all to issue bonds. Lexington v. Butler, 14 Wall. (U. to bearer are valid in the hands of a bona fide purchaser, though they are sold by a trustee or agent in violation of his trust and although the semiannual attached interest coupons are past due.[13] If association aid bonds are issued by a state it becomes the principal and sole obligor, and bona fide holders are entitled to receive in exchange new consolidated bonds of the state.[14]

(II) Bona Fide Purchasers From Bona Fide Purchasers. A purchaser who succeeds to the title of a bona fide holder of bonds is entitled as a rule to stand on such title, even though he is not himself a bona fide holder[15] and has notice of a claim of a third person, the seller being free from such notice.[16] And the same rule applies to knowledge or notice of irregularity in the issue.[17] But if negotiable bonds are fraudulent reissues of genuine ones the bona fide owner is not, in the absence of any warranty, liable to one who purchases them from him for the amount paid therefor.[18]

(III) Purchasers After Maturity. Bonds purchased after maturity are subject to equities and defenses, and to all defects invalidating them in the hands of the original holder;[19] and the purchaser takes them subject to antecedent holders' rights the same as in case of other negotiable paper purchased after maturity, and this applies to bonds or treasury notes of the United States payable to holder or bearer at a future time certain.[20]

(iv) Purchasers For Value. It is a valuable consideration where bonds are taken before maturing for an antecedent debt,[21] or where an attachment is released,[22] or where one has changed his position to his injury.[23] But if bonds are purchased at a price far less than the market or actual value or at an exorbitant discount, it is a circumstance which has been considered upon the question of good faith or notice, in connection with other relevant and material facts,[24] although it is decided that the original consideration cannot be inquired into in an action on the bond by a bona fide holder;[25] that the presumption of purchase for value exists and if the defense necessitates proof thereof the holder need not show that he paid it, for if any prior holder gave value it is sufficient;[26] that if fraud in the origin is shown proof of payment of value before maturity is required;[27] that such a purchaser for value of bonds wrongfully put in circulation is not restricted to the amount paid therefor but may recover the whole amount secured thereby;[28] and that the fact that there is no consideration or a failure of consideration constitutes no defense against an assignee for value without notice.[29]

York v. McNutt, 16 Tex. 13, 67 Am. Dec. 607. And where a claim of a bona fide holder of bonds is paid in treasury notes expressly fundable in state bonds to be delivered, but which are never delivered, such claim is based upon an illegal consideration and is not recoverable. Rand v. State, 65 N. C. 194, 6 Am. Rep. 741.

Obligor is estopped to plead want of consideration where he gives bonds to a corporation to raise money, and the burden of proving that fact is upon the purchaser. Hefferman v. Brierly, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 304, 62 S. W. 852.

bonds is liable for the whole amount to a bona fide purchaser thereof without notice, even though purchased at a discount.[30]

(VI) Purchasers of Stolen Bonds. In the case of negotiable securities which are stolen, a bona fide holder or innocent purchaser before maturity for value is protected and the owner has no title against such purchaser.[31] So a bona fide purchaser without notice of a lost bond is entitled to recover the amount thereof.[32] But the burden of proof is shifted upon the holder under a recent decision.[33]

30. Hansbrough v. Baylor, 2 Munf. (Va.) 36. So the state is liable as an accommodation indorser of railroad bonds to a bona fide holder for value who acquires them in the usual course of business without notice that they were originally misapplied in violation of the statute. Morton v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 79 Ala. 590.

But if the obligee has refused to accept an accommodation bond it is void in a third person's hands, even though he is a purchaser for value. Parker v. McDowell, 95 N. C. 219, 59 Am. Rep. 235.

Estoppel to question validity of coupon bonds in the hands of an innocent purchaser arises against one who executes them to another in order to obtain money advances, but it should appear with reasonable certainty that the obligor had notice of sale; if he had no notice and the purchaser had notice of the facts no estoppel arises. Decisions contra and in qualification of rule.— If stolen property is received merely as collateral for a preëxisting debt it is not held for value against the real owner; otherwise as to converted bonds. Smith v. Harlow, 64 Me. 510 (a case merely of converted bonds); Varick v. Norwich Second Nat. Bank, 15 N. Y. St. 127 [affirmed in 121 N. Y. 667, 24 N. E. 1093, 30 N. Y. St. 1014]. So if bonds are stolen before delivery a bona fide purchaser for value obtains no title. Germania Sav. Bank v. Suspension Bridge, 73 Hun (N. Y.) 590, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 98, 56 N. Y. St. 178. So if railroad bonds, conditioned not to be valid until certified, are stolen before certification but after being signed by the proper officers the company is not liable to one who purchased them for value upon a forged certification. Maas v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 83 N. Y. 223. Nor are bonds valid in the hands of a bona fide purchaser where they are payable in certain currency to be determined by the place fixed for payment and they are merely indorsed in blank without the place being fixed. Notice and proof.— A bank taking municipal bonds as collateral is not bound by notice of theft published in newspapers eighteen years before. Manhattan Sav. Inst. v. New York Nat. Exch. Bank, 42 N. Y. App. Div. 147, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 51. And it may be shown by a bank which has purchased stolen government bonds that although a printed circular describing the bonds and stating that they were stolen was left with the bank nevertheless such notices were ordinarily disregarded, since they were so numerous that it would be impracticable to keep track of them. (VII) PURCHASERS WITHOUT NOTICE — (A) In General. Notice may be actual or constructive; and in determining whether a holder of bonds is a bona fide purchaser without notice the character of the bonds, the known purpose for which issued, knowledge of statutory limitations, or actual notice of defenses may be important.[34]

(B) Due Inquiry and Good Faith. What facts necessitate due inquiry and what constitutes such inquiry must rest largely upon individual cases.[35] It seems,

It is also decided, however, that bankers and brokers who receive notice of loss, after maturity, identifying the paper, should make some memoranda or use other reasonable means whereby they may refer to the service of the notice. Vermilye v. Adams Express Co., 21 Wall. (U. S.) 138, 22 L. ed. 609. But failure of the owner to give notice is not fatal where the condition in the bonds is such as to put a purchaser on inquiry. Notice to agent or attorney.—A trustee of notes given to a corporation to raise money and held by him as security for the liquidation of bonds issued at the same time is not an agent of subsequent purchasers of the bonds so as to bind them with his knowledge of collateral agreements. Kinkel v. Harper, 7 Colo. App. 45, 42 Pac. 173. And an investment company making as agent loans on bonds, etc., payable to investors and guaranteed by it is not an innocent holder for value, where it takes up said bonds at maturity. Elwell v. Tatum, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 397, 24 S. W. 71, 25 S. W. 434. So if one through his attorney purchases bonds from an agent, who, together with his principal, knew of their invalidity, and said attorney is also the legal adviser of said principal, said holder is not a bona fide purchaser. Carter v. Ottawa, 24 Fed. 546. But if the purchaser's agent is treasurer of the company making the bonds which were illegally issued and such bonds are turned over in satisfaction of a note for money loaned, said purchaser is a bona fide holder for value. however, that something more than mere suspicion, or probable or possible knowledge, or gross negligence is necessary to preclude the claim that one is a bona fide holder. There must be bad faith or fraud, or at least circumstances showing the absence of good faith to have such effect, and where the bonds are taken in the usual course of business for value bad faith is not imputed merely because there is a failure to make a close and critical examination and due inquiry. Nor is a purchaser of bonds bound to make inquiry as to the seller's

Simmons v. Taylor, 38 Fed. 682. Nor is one a bona fide holder of bonds bought at auction who knows that they have been the subject of litigation and that ten years' interest on them is unpaid, the seller having knowledge of such facts as prevents him from obtaining title and the purchaser occupying no better position. Again bonds with past-due coupons attached are dishonored paper (Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 290), although if some of the attached coupons are past due one who purchases in good faith before maturity at the market rate is a bona fide holder. Question for jury.— The question whether one is a bona fide holder is for the jury. Mann v. Brooklyn, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 643, 45 N. Y. St. 14 [affirmed in 138 N. Y. 637, 53 N. Y. St. 929, 34 N. What necessitates inquiry or constitutes notice.— Overdue interest does (St. Paul First Nat. Bank v. Scott County, 14 Minn. 77, 100 Am. Dec. 194. See Simmons v. Taylor, 38 Fed. 682), or a reference to a mortgage (Caylus v. New York, etc., R. Co., 10 Hun (N. Y.) 295), or a name and referred-to order under which the bond is issued (Lewis v. Bourbon County, 12 Kan. 186), or the word "trustee" in mortgage bonds payable to a trust company as "trustees" (Louisville Banking Co. v. Ogden, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1591, 61 S. W. 289), or a public statute referred to on the face of coupon bonds payable to bearer (Virginia v. State, 32 Md. 501), or the word "consolidated" designating first mortgage bonds as such and referring to the mortgage for the purpose for which the bonds are intended (Caylus v. New York, etc., R. Co., 10 Hun (N. Y.) 295), or where it appears on the bond that a certain signature is essential to complete the instrument (Fales v. Filley, 2 Mo. App. 345), or where it is payable to one as guardian (Exum v. Bowden, 39 N. C. 281), or is indorsed by an assignment to an insane person and is pledged by two guardians (Langdon v. Baxter Nat. Bank, 57 Vt. 1, 52 Am. Rep. 113), or where it is payable in certain currency depending upon the place of payment which is left blank and therefore uncertain (Parsons v. Jackson, 99 U. S. 434, 25 L. ed. 457), or where the first instalment is to be paid "at the sealing and delivery of this bond" (Cox v. Edwards, 8 S. C. 1), or where the purchase is from the vice-president of a company in a receiver's possession and there are suspicious circumstances (American L. & T. Co. v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 42 Fed. 819), or where one of the firm had read hand-bills describing the stolen bonds and had received personal warning not to buy them, and there was no sufficient rebuttal (Lord v. Wilkinson, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 179).

What does not necessitate due inquiry or constitute notice.—A purchaser is not charged with notice of equities by dishonor of unpaid coupons (State v. Cobb, 64 Ala. 127); nor is he obligated to examine notices of theft left at his place of business where he has no actual knowledge or notice (Seybel v. National Currency Bank, 54 N. Y. 288, 13 Am. Rep. 583 [affirming 2 Daly (N. Y.) 383, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 352]); nor does the mere absence of certificates referred to in the body of the bond necessitate inquiry in the absence of fraud or bad faith (Welch v. Sage, 47 N. Y. 143, 7 Am. Rep. 423; Hotchright and title thereto, or to take any special precautionary measures to ascertain or protect others' interests.[36]

(VIII) TAKING AS COLLATERAL SECURITY. One is a bona fide holder for value, even though he takes negotiable bonds as collateral security for a preëxisting debt;[37] and this applies to bonds payable to bearer acquired in the regular course of business as collateral for current indebtedness and upon which there are thereafter actual advances made by the holder;[38] and a bona fide holder of bonds payable to bearer hypothecated for a debt is entitled to demand payment of coupons falling due before maturity of the debt which the bonds were pledged

Y.) 538]); nor does the fact that some of the coupons have been cut off and pasted on its face and that it is stained and soiled necessitate inquiry (Cornell v. District of Columbia, 20 Ct. Cl. 229); nor is an act of congress which is uncertain in its terms as to the number of shares to be delivered to the secretary of the treasury and relating to their sale sufficient notice of an equity of the United States (U. S. v. Alexandria, 19 Fed. 614).

36. Seybel v. National Currency Bank, 54 N. Y. 288, 13 Am. Rep. 583 [affirming 2 Daly (N. Y.) 383, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 352].

Particular applications of rule.—So the rule has been applied where the holder has no notice of prior arrangements between the seller and owner which might otherwise constitute a defense (Tompkins County Nat. Bank v. Bunnell, etc., Invest. Co., 8 N. Y. App. Div. 90, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 411, 74 N. Y. St. 857 [affirmed in 163 N. Y. 579, 57 N. E. 1126]), or where he has parted with value and changed his position to his injury and the bond is merely converted (Varick v. Norwich Second Nat. Bank, 15 N. Y. St. 127), or where he has received them in the usual course of business without notice of defects and for a consideration, such bonds being payable to bearer and being apparently still due upon their face, the plaintiff having no knowledge that they had been paid and defendant having been negligent in not having them canceled and in not taking precautionary measures to prevent their circulation through accident or fraud (Rockville Nat. Bank v. Citizens' Gas Light Co., 72 Conn. 576, 45 Atl. 361). And the rule applies to negotiable bonds payable to bearer and not due deposited as collateral for the loan of money, and title to the extent of the loan is given (Beall v. Southern Bank, 57 Ga. 274), and to bonds deposited as collateral before insolvency (Coster v. Griswold, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 364). So as to bonds pledged as collateral without authority by a bank president, even though given to secure forged notes. Fifth Ward Sav. Bank v. Jersey City First Nat. Bank, 48 N. J. L. 513, 7 Atl. 318. So as to corporation bonds issued by authority and transferred as collateral by authority, although certain stockholders had no knowledge of the indebtedness and the transferees were also stockholders. Lehman v. Tallassee Mfg. Co., 64 Ala. 567. And railroad corporation bonds overissued or to pay for construction work other than that specified in the incorporation articles are valid in the hands of innocent holders for value, even though taken as security for preëxisting debts without any present parting with property or losing any right of action or otherwise. Baker v. Guarantee Trust, etc., Co., (N. J. 1895) 31 Atl. 174. Contra, Reid v. Mobile Bank, 70 Ala. 199. See Garrard v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 29 Pa. St. 154.

Qualifications of rule.— The holder takes such bond subject to equities existing in the hands of the assignor, even though the former had no notice, except there are new advances made or some advantage surrendered (Holderby v. Blum, 22 N. C. 51. See also Bostwick v. Dry Goods Bank, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 449; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Capitol Electric Co., 56 Fed. 849), or consent or authority given by the real owner (Bostwick v. Dry Goods Bank, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 449). And a bank which holds as collateral county bonds, from a trustee to whom they have been delivered in direct violation of the statute, and said bonds were defective and had not been sold at public sale as required by statute, is not a bona fide holder, where the officers have explicit notice of their non-negotiability. Duckett v. Baltimore Nat. Bank, 88 Md. 8, 41 Atl. 161, 1062. So an assignee only for bringing suit obtains no better title than the real owner. Elwell v. Tatum, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 397, 24 S. W. 71, 25 S. W. 434. And a holder partly in payment of a precedent debt and partly for a present consideration does not hold bona fide for value beyond the sum actually advanced. Taft v. Chapman, 50 N. Y. 445.

Bond as collateral to bottomry bond but which does not recite that it is in lieu of the bottomry bond does not entitle the lender to recover, since such bond would only mature on arrival of the vessel. Davies v. Soelberg, 24 Wash. 308, 64 Pac. 540.

to secure.[39] Again, if bonds issued by the governor are sold or pledged by those to whom they are delivered to raise funds for construction of public works they are valid in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value;[40] and if an agent, contrary to the purpose for which bonds are placed in his hands, pledges them as collateral security for his own debts, and such bonds are negotiable in form the pledgee who has taken them without notice holds in good faith and for value.[41]

V. PERFORMANCE AND BREACH OF CONDITION.

A. Performance — 1. In General. As bonds are subject to the same rules of construction as are other contracts,[42] and the language of the instrument is supposed to be expressive of the parties' intention and it is their intention which is to govern,[43] the question whether there has been a performance of the terms of a condition must depend upon the facts of the particular case.[44]

2. Election as to Manner of Performance. If the condition of a bond is in the alternative, the obligor may elect which alternative shall be complied with,[45] unless the election is given to the obligee.[46] But a bond conditioned in the alternative for the payment of a certain sum of money or of some property, without designating the value of the latter, requires that if the obligor elects to tender the property it must be equal in value to the money;[47] and the obligor cannot, where there is no alternative condition, elect to refuse performance and incur the penalty.[48]

3. Payment — a. In General. Payment is the delivery by a debtor to a creditor of the amount due or of that which the parties contract shall be accepted as payment.[49] It may be by money, which is the ordinary medium of payment, but this is not necessary in all cases, for negotiable paper,[50] the payment of obli-

43. See supra, III, D, 1.

44. As to what constitutes performance in particular instances see the following cases where the question has been considered in the case of a bond given by the devisee of land to pay an annuity to a widow having a dower interest therein (Hoerath v. Hogan, 41 Ill. App. 472); of a bond to maintain and support the obligee (Washburn v. Titus, 10 Vt. 306); to pay where cause mentioned is decided in favor of plaintiff (Kittrell v. Hawkins, 74 N. C. 412); to marry within a certain time (Barnett v. Kimmell, 35 Pa. St. 13, 17 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 100); to execute articles of dissolution of a firm (Wright v. Taylor, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 538 [affirming 1 Edw. (N. Y.) 226]); to cut down the waste way of a mill-dam (Quinby v. Sprague, 17 Me. 226); in payment for territory in which to sell a patented article (Spence v. Smith, 101 N. C. 234, 7 S. E. 712); for the redelivery of certain property to the sheriff (Case v. Johnson, 19 Pa. St. 174); for the fidelity of the paying teller of a bank (New Orleans Nat. Bank v. Wells, 28 La. Ann. 736, 26 Am. Rep. 107); to pay a certain sum for the right to flow land (McFarlane v. Cushman, 19 Wis. 357); for the surrender of a person to the custody of the sheriff (Mounsey v. Drake, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 27); and that the obligor and his wife should live together as husband and wife (Axtell v. Caldwell, 24 Pa. St. 88).

50. Payment in negotiable paper.— So the acceptance of a bill of exchange may be a payment (Cox v. Robinson, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala) 91; Knott v. Whitfield, 99 N. C. 76, 5 S. E. 664; Ligon v. Dunn, 28 N. C. 133); or of the note of the obligor (Smith v. Jackson, 97 Iowa 112, 66 N. W. 80; Parsons v. Gaylord, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 463. See also Shumway v. Reed, 34 Me. 560, 56 Am. Dec. 679); but otherwise if the evidence shows that such note was not accepted as a discharge of the debt (Price v. Barnes, (Ind. App. 1892) 31 N. E. 809). And the notes of an insolvent bank have been held not a payment (Jefferson v. Holland, 1 Del. Ch. 116), and also a note not paid (McEvoy v. Baltimore, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 193). Nor does the lifting of notes by renewals thereof to secure the payment of which a bond was given operate as a novation and satisfy the condition of the bond. Shrewsbury Sav. Inst.'s Appeal, 94 Pa. St. 309.

gations or debts of the obligee,[51] the transfer of property,[52] the substitution of other bonds,[53] or some other means[54] will be sufficient, provided such medium is accepted by the creditor as payment. But in case the obligor unreasonably delays and refuses to pay a bond, which is payable partly in goods and partly in money, he may be compelled to pay the whole bond in money.[55] Payment may also be presumed from lapse of time in the absence of some acknowledgment or circumstance to rebut such presumption.[56]

b. Effect of Payment. An overpayment by one of several obligors, each bound for himself alone, does not inure to the benefit of the others;[57] but a payment of the full amount of the bond by one of several joint obligors will operate as a satisfaction thereof;[58] and where a bond has been fully discharged equity will decree its cancellation.[59] But for the retention of a bond by the obligee after it has been paid no action will lie.[60]

c. Extension of Time For Payment. An extension of time for the payment of a bond may be validly made by a parol agreement.[61] And where after maturity an agreement is made between one of the obligors and the obligee as to Again, where a note is conditioned that the obligor shall have credit upon returning a note to the obligee a plea of payment is not sustained by a return of such note at the time of trial. Bryan v. Drake, 20 N. C. 56. But where a note which is payable in specific articles is assigned as collateral security to a bond and a new contract is made between the assignee and the maker all parties to the bond are thereby discharged. Wales v. Cooke, 13 N. C. 183.

51. Payment of obligee's debts.— The payment by the obligor of a bond on which the obligee is indebted to a third party may operate as a payment. Huffmans v. Walker, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 314. Again, where a bond with a certain fixed penalty was conditioned for the payment by the obligor of all the debts of a firm, it was held that the bond was satisfied, where it appeared that the obligor had, for the purpose of indemnifying the plaintiff, who was one of the firm, against such debts, paid an amount in excess of such penalty. Spencer v. Perry, 18 Mich. 394.

52. Transfer of property.— Payment may be by a deed to lands. Miller v. Kerr, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 4. But a verbal agreement to deliver property at a future day will not operate as a payment. Rhodes v. Chesson, 44 N. C. 336. The disposition, however, by the obligee with the consent of one of the obligors of property, for the delivery of which within a certain time the bond is conditioned, will not be construed as a prevention by the obligee of the performance of the condition but rather as a payment pro tanto of the sum which the bond was given to secure. Wildes v. Wade, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 579.

53. Substitution of other bonds.— Bush v. Kilcrease, 1 Strobh. (S. C.) 419. See also Vanhook v. Williams, 19 N. C. 259. But see Bailey v. Wright, 3 McCord (S. C.) 484; Texas v. White, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 68, 19 L. ed. 839.

54. So delivery to a bond creditor of property of a testator has been decided to be a payment of the bond, though delivered to him as residuary legatee (Stephenson v. Axson, 1 Bailey Eq. (S. C.) 274); as has also a receipt to one of the obligors on a joint and several bond, such receipt being one half of the amount of the judgment recovered in full of the defendant's part thereof (Brown v. Ayer, 24 Ga. 288). So again there was held to be prima facie a satisfaction of a bond, where the executor of the principal obligor paid the same and took an assignment thereof to himself. Richardson v. Mitchell, 2 Hill (S. C.) 352. And it has also been held that the payment of the costs in a suit pending between the parties in accordance with a parol agreement between such parties that the bond should be surrendered when the obligor paid such costs is a sufficient discharge of the bond. Walters v. Walters, 34 N. C. 28, 55 Am. Dec. 401. But a bond will not be discharged by an agreement under seal that, on payment of a less sum than the real debt mentioned in the condition, it shall be void. Inman v. Griswold, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 199.

57. Pettingill v. Pettingill, 64 Me. 350.

58. Carroll v. Bowie, 7 Gill (Md.) 34, where it is held that the only remedy of the obligor in such a case is to recover from the other sureties their proportionate share on the whole sum from the principal.

As to payment by one surety operating as a discharge see also State v. Blakemore, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 638. But see McCormick v. Irwin, 35 Pa. St. 111, wherein it is held that equity will restrain an obligor who ought to have paid the bond from urging that the bond is discharged by reason of the payment of the full amount by another obligor.

an extension of time for payment, in terms more beneficial to the latter, the bond will not be invalidated as to the other obligee because of such agreement.[62] And an acceptance of a payment of part of the obligation received by the bond may operate as granting an extension of time for the payment of the balance, but such extension would be for a reasonable time only.[63]

d. Indorsement of Payment. An indorsement of a credit on a bond is prima facie evidence of a payment of the amount indorsed.[64] But where the debt is payable in instalments an indorsement of the payment of a particular instalment is not evidence of the payment of prior instalments.[65]

e. To Whom Made. A person in possession of a negotiable bond is prima facie the owner thereof with the right to accept payment in discharge of the same,[66] and this principle is applicable to the case of possession by an agent.[67] Where, however, the person in possession of the bond had wrongfully abstracted it from a sealed package left in his possession payment to him was held invalid.[68]

4. Strict or Substantial Performance. A strictly literal compliance with the terms of a condition is not in all cases essential, but a compliance which accomplishes the substantial object of the undertaking may be sufficient.[69] The doctrine, however, as to partial performance of mutual covenants which go to a part only of the consideration on both sides, where the part unperformed can be compensated in damages, has been declared inapplicable in the case of a penal bond for the payment of money on the performance of a condition precedent.[70]

5. What Will Excuse Performance — a. In General. Numerous decisions are to the effect that if at the time of the execution of a bond its condition is impossible of performance the bond becomes absolute as if no condition had been imposed, but where it is possible at the time of execution but subsequently becomes impossible either by act of God, or of the law,[71] or of the obligee[72] the bond is

Wing v. Rogers, 138 N. Y. 361, 34 N. E. 194, 52 N. Y. St. 888 [reversing 62 Hun (N. Y.) 38, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 153, 42 N. Y. St. 331]. And again, where a bond was given to pay a certain sum in case the obligor was cleared of several suits in the superior court, and he was cleared of all but one, in which he was convicted but an appeal was taken, judgment reversed and obligor discharged. Candler v. Trammell, 29 N. C. 125. So also where a bond was given conditioned on the completion of a railroad to a certain village and it was completed to the outskirts of such village. 72. Act of obligee rendering performance impossible will excuse non-performance of condition. Pindar v. Upton, 44 N. H. 358; Detroit v. Burr, 56 N. Y. 665 [affirming 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. 522]; Stewart v. Cuyler, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 482; Giles v. Crosby, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 389; Gibson v. Dunnam, 1 Hill (S. C.) 289, 26 Am. Dec. 180. The act of the obligee discharged.[73] But where the conditions of the bond clearly require the performance of certain acts the intent as expressed must control; performance cannot be excused by extrinsic circumstances, except as already noted, which would tend to show an intent other than that expressed.[74] And performance of the condition will not be excused by a voluntary act on the part of the obligor.[75]

b. Waiver of Performance. Performance of the conditions of a bond cannot be released or waived by a parol executory agreement;[76] but after a breach a right of action on the bond may, however, be waived by parol,[77] and performance may be accepted thereafter which will save forfeiture of the penalty.[78] Again, a refusal of the obligor to accept a sufficient tender of performance of conditions imposed on the obligee will not affect the right of the latter to maintain an action on the bond.[79]

B. Breach of Condition — 1. In General. It is a general rule that to save the bond the condition must be performed,[80] and in the absence thereof, a breach being established, recovery may be had against the obligors.[81] In determining may also excuse performance in the case of a bond conditioned to support him at a certain place, where he leaves such place (Jenkins v. Stetson, 91 Mass. 128; Howe v. Howe, 10 N. H. 88; Hawley v. Morton, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 255); and likewise where he fails to perform his part of a contract in consideration of which the bond was executed (Bagley v. Clarke, 7 Bosw. (N. Y.) 94); or violates the conditions of a bond similarly executed (Davies v. Beadle, 37 Iowa 390).

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bonds," § 116.

Rule applied in particular cases.—An overflow of land will not excuse performance of a condition to have such land cleared of timber by a certain time. Sillivant v. Reardon, 5 Ark. 140. Nor will the fact that a bridge is washed away excuse performance of a condition to build and keep in repairs. Gathwright v. Callaway County, 10 Mo. 663. And a contract extending the time of performance is no excuse for non-performance where such contract is not performed. Washburn v. Mosely, 22 Me. 160. Nor will an agreement between the obligee and a third person release the obligor from his liability. Baylor v. Morrison, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 103. But where a bond was conditioned upon sufficient consideration for the payment of a certain sum of money to a son-in-law, provided he lost a certain situation before the remarriage of the obligor, such obligation cannot be enforced where the obligee voluntarily resigns his position before such remarriage. Shafer v. Senseman, 125 Pa. St. 310, 24 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 208, 17 Atl. 350.

75. So enlistment in the army is not an excuse for the failure of an insolvent to appear according to his bond (State v. Reaney, 13 Md. 230); or absence from the state, for in such a case it is his duty to appoint an agent to act for him (Tasker v. Bartlett, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 359). So again the default of the obligor will not excuse the performance of the conditions of a bond with covenants. Miller v. Nichols, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 226.

But where the condition of a bond provided that the obligor would accept orders of the obligee to a specified amount, upon conveyance of land to him as security therefor, the obligor to reconvey such land upon payment of his advances and services, it was held that past breaches were not waived where the obligee procured a third person to accept for the benefit of the obligee a reconveyance of the land from the obligor. 81. Condition for payment of instalments. — Where a bond is conditioned for the payment of certain instalments a failure to pay the first instalment will constitute a breach of the condition. Cocke v. Stuart, 2 Overt. (Tenn.) 231; Nailor v. Kearney, 1 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 112, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 10,004. See also Hopkins v. Deaves, 2 Browne (Pa.) 93; Talbot v. Hodson, 2 Marsh. 527, 7 Taunt. 251, 2 E. C. L. 348; Judd v. Evans, 6 T. R. 399; Coates v. Hewit, 1 Wils. K. B. 80. But see contra, State v. Scoggin, 10 Ark. 326.

Condition not to engage in business.— Again a frequent condition is that the obligor shall not engage in a certain line of business within a certain district. So a condition that the obligor shall not open or keep another shop in the same town is broken by the pur-whether there has been a breach of the condition of a bond the same general principles control as upon the question of performance;[82] the intent of the parties should govern, and this being determined the question depends upon the act or acts of the obligor in the particular case, or in some instances the act of the obligee.[83] It is not necessary in a penal bond to expressly provide that in case of a breach of the condition the entire bond shall become forfeited, for such a result is implied in case of a breach.[84] And where the condition has been broken a subsequent tender of performance will not relieve the obligor from liability chase of a shop already in operation. Burrill v. Daggett, 77 Me. 545, 1 Atl. 677. And a condition not to engage in the sale of fish is broken by engaging in the sale of oysters. Caswell v. Johnson, 58 Me. 164. And owning stock in a corporation engaged in the same line of business is also a breach of a condition not to engage in such business. Whitney v. Slayton, 40 Me. 224. But the taking of an order for merchants in the same town, the goods to be sent to a distant city, and the selling of goods a few times in such merchants' store as a matter of accommodation while they were absent is not a breach of a condition not to engage in business in a certain town. Levitsky v. Johnson, 35 Cal. 41.

Condition to pay debts of obligee.— So, too, the question has arisen in the case of a bond which is conditioned that the obligor shall pay certain debts of the obligee, in which instance the condition is broken by non-payment (Pierce v. Plumb, 74 Ill. 326; Shattuck v. Adams, 136 Mass. 34; Kohler v. Mattlage, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 247; Browne v. French, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 445, 22 S. W. 581); or where the debt is a note by non-payment at maturity (Stewart v. Clark, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 384. See Fish v. Dana, 10 Mass. 46).

Condition to support another.— Again a condition that the obligor shall support another is broken by failure to furnish such support. Empie v. Empie, 35 N. Y. App. Div. 51, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 402; Scheive v. Kaiser, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 109, 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 193; Shaffer v. Lee, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 412. But where the condition is that the obligor shall support the obligee at the former's house, there is no breach where the obligee remains away without any cause therefor, but a demand and refusal for support will, however, constitute a breach. Farnum v. Bartlett, 52 Me. 570. And the condition will be broken where the treatment of the obligee is such as to compel him to leave. Smith v. Smith, 34 Wis. 320.

Other illustrations.— As to what constitutes a breach see the following decisions wherein, under the particular facts, there has been held no breach of a bond conditioned for the payment of all costs and damages (Thayer v. Hurlburt, 5 Iowa 521; Murrell v. Johnson, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 450); for the satisfaction of a judgment (Huntress v. Burbank, 111 Mass. 213); to keep a bridge in repair and continuously safe for a certain period (Meriwether v. Lowndes County, 89 Ala. 362, 7 So. 198); that a wall should last a certain period of time (Ready v. Tuskaloosa, 6 Ala. 327); for failure to return a boat in as good a condition as when leased (Clifford v. Smith, 4 Ind. 377); for failure to complete and deliver a vessel (Crowell v. Brown, 9 Gray (Mass.) 274); to pay a certain sum when a certain person shall cease to act as minister of a specified church (Bacon v. Lane, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 130 note); to pay a certain sum in case a decision is rendered in favor of the obligee as to his right to a share in certain property (Gyles v. Valk, 2 Speers (S. C.) 460); to perform work and labor (Boardman v. Keeler, 21 Vt. 77); to reconvey land upon the payment of certain debts due the obligor (Douglas v. Hennessy, 15 R. I. 272, 3 Atl. 213, 7 Atl. 1, 10 Atl. 583); that a seaman shall proceed to sea and in default thereof pay advances (Backman v. Hanson, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 391; Woodside v. Pender, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 390); by grantee of land not to permit a canal to be dug across such land (Bennet v. Kennedy, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 163); of commissioner in partition proceedings to sell real estate and account for proceeds (Williams v. State, 87 Ind. 527); and by a private banker for repayment of funds deposited with him (Poor v. Merrill, 68 Iowa 436, 27 N. W. 367).

On the other hand, for cases holding that there has been under the particular facts of the case no breach of the condition see the following citations, wherein the question has been considered in the case of a bond conditioned on the discharge of obligee from all claims held against him (Bignall v. Gould, 119 U. S. 495, 7 S. Ct. 294, 30 L. ed. 491); to pay taxes (Smith v. Smith, 34 Wis. 320); to pay a note indorsed by obligee (Franks v. Hamilton, 29 Ga. 139); to repay money paid and advanced to obligor's wife (Evans v. Leis, 2 Pennyp. (Pa.) 55); to erect and deliver a structure free from mechanics' liens (Hahn v. Wickham, 55 Iowa 545, 8 N. W. 358); to perform order or decree of court (Morgan v. Morgan, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 395); to save harmless from an attachment (Tufts v. Hayes, 31 N. H. 138); to abide by the constitution of an association (Troy Mfg. Co. v. Star Knitting Co., 67 Hun (N. Y.) 611, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 435, 51 N. Y. St. 346); to not withdraw a proposal as to the furnishing of supplies (U. S. v. McAleer, 68 Fed. 146, 32 U. S. App. 335, 15 C. C. A. 326); for the forthcoming of property (Trotter v. White, 26 Miss. 88; Hall v. Paschall, 27 N. C. 668. See also Jacobs v. Daugherty, 78 Tex. 682, 15 S. W. 160); and for the performance of an award within a certain time (Eames v. Carlisle, 4 N. H. 201).

where unaccepted.[85] Again, though a bond may be valid as to only one of the obligors and invalid as to the rest, yet if the condition be broken by the one as to whom it is valid the entire penalty will be forfeited.[86]

2. Failure to Exhaust Legal Remedies Against Principal. In the case of a condition imposed upon the holder of a bond that he will exhaust all legal remedies against the principal before suing the sureties it is not violated where suit is brought in the first instance against the latter, the principal being insolvent.[87]

3. Non-Payment of Interest. Non-payment of annual or semiannual instalments of interest due before the bonds mature is not a breach of a condition to pay bonds at maturity, where no reference is made to the payment of such instalments, though they are promised by the bonds, and there can be no breach of the condition until the time named for paying the principal arrives.[88] But where a bond is conditioned that, upon failure to pay any instalment of interest when due or within a stipulated time thereafter, the entire principal sum shall become due at the option of the obligee, a failure to pay interest operates as a breach of the condition;[89] and the option may be exercised within a reasonable time after default.[90] But if the non-payment of interest is due to some act of the obligee there is no breach of the condition.[91] And a mistake as to the condition may also relieve from forfeiture.[92] Relief will not, however, be granted from a forfeiture caused by the negligence or carelessness of the obligor.[93]

4. Where Bond Is That of Agent or Employee — a. In General. A bond for the faithful performance of the duties of an agent or employee in a particular line of employment is to be construed as an undertaking for his fidelity and honesty commensurate with the scope of his duties.[94] The intent of the parties as apparent from the terms of the instrument should control.[95] And the liability of the sureties cannot be extended by implication.[96] And a bond conditioned that an agent shall pay over and account for all moneys received by him as agent is not to be construed as an insurance of the company's funds against inevitable accident or theft without any negligence on the agent's part.[97]

b. Bank Officer's Bond. A condition in the bond of a bank official that he shall well and truly execute the duties of his office includes not only honesty but reasonable skill and diligence, and therefore if those duties are performed negligently and unskilfully, or if they are violated by the official from want of capacity or want of care, they cannot be said to have been well and truly executed and the condition is broken;[98] and this rule has been applied to the bond of the president,[99] of the cashier,[1] and of the teller,[2] as well as to the bond of the account-ble for moneys taken by him which did not belong to the society though in its vaults.

Again, where the bond of an insurance agent was conditioned that he should "receive and forward applications for and deliver policies, and receive and forward premiums upon the same," it was held that the sureties on such bond were not liable for premiums received by him from parties insured by a former agent. 99. 1. Bond of cashier.— The sureties on a cashier's bond are not liable thereon for money of which he has been violently robbed while in the discharge of his duty (Planters' Bank v. Hill, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 201, 18 Am. Dec. 39); nor for losses occurring through the delinquency of other officers who are given access to the property lost (La Rose v. Logansport Nat. Bank, 102 Ind. 332, 1 N. Bank, 126 Ind. 265, 26 N. E. 175); where he exceeds his authority by changing securities of the bank (Barrington v. Washington Bank, 14 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 405); where new bills made by consent of the directors and intended to be privately kept and surreptitiously issued by the cashier in violation of a statute are embezzled by him (Dedham Bank v. Chickering, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 314); where he embezzled the bank's funds under pretense of borrowing them (McShane v. Howard Bank, 73 Md. 135, 20 Atl. 877, 10 L. R. A. 552); where his salary being paid in advance he pays himself a second time (Menard v. Davidson, 3 La. Ann. 480); where he does not account for moneys received by him for deposit out of the bank or not in banking hours (Pendleton v. State Bank, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 171); where he omits to credit to another bank money received by him with directions to so credit it (State Bank v. Locke, 15 N. C. 529); where he so misappropriates stock put in a separate envelope for the purpose of evading the national banking laws, the stock being assigned to him as security for a loan from the bank (Walden Nat. Bank v. Birch, 130 N. Y. 221, 29 N. E. 127, 41 N. Y. St. 275, 14 L. R. A. 211 [affirming 7 N. Y. Suppl. 934, 28 N. Y. St. 98]); or where he omits to forward to a state treasurer duties on dividends declared by the bank (Washington Bank v. Barrington, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 27). And where he neglects to perform the duty of being sworn before he enters upon the duties of his office it will constitute a breach of the bond. Elizabeth State Bank v. Chetwood, 8 N. J. L. 1.

2. Bond of teller.— Where damage has been sustained owing to want of care on the ant,[3] bookkeeper,[4] and bank messenger.[5] And a breach of such a condition cannot be excused by any act or vote of the directors of the bank which is contrary to their duties and in fraud of the rights and interests of the stockholders.[6]

VI. ACTIONS.[7]

A. Right of Action and Defenses — 1. Right of Action — a. Nature and Grounds of Action — (I) Generally. There may be a recovery in different suits for different breaches, though arising out of the same bond of indemnity.[8] But to maintain an action for breach of the condition of a penal bond it must be alleged and proved that damage has been sustained.[9] Where, however, a bond is conditioned for the performance of some act, as for instance to erect a structure or build fences, the necessity of such structure or fences need not be alleged or proved.[10] And though an obligor has lost collateral security placed in the hands of the obligee by his negligence, it will not prevent the maintenance of the action, it not being available as a set-off or in defense thereto.[11]

(II) Divisible Agreements. Where there are two distinct agreements, one may subsist though the other be impossible of performance, and an action may be maintained on the one capable of being performed.[12]

(III) Time of Performance Extended. Where by an agreement between part of a teller the liability of the sureties cannot be controlled by a usage among banks to require of such officer only that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent man would exercise where the bond is expressly conditioned against such damage. Union Bank v. Forrest, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 218, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,356. And the neglect of the cashier to settle the daily accounts of the teller will not relieve from liability for failure of the latter to make good a certain amount to the bank. Union Bank v. Forrest, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 218, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,356. And concealment of deficiencies that first arose from mistake will constitute a breach of the bond. Union Bank v. Clossey, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 182. But a custom of a bank to receive as cash checks on other banks by individuals in good credit will save a breach of the teller's bond, where that officer receives such a check which is never paid. Union Bank v. Mackall, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 695, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,359.

3. Bond of accountant. — The sureties on an accountant's bond which is conditioned for the faithful performance by him of the duties of that office but who is not intrusted with or put in possession of any moneys of the bank are not liable for moneys taken by him from the teller's drawer. Allison v. Farmers' Bank, 6 Rand. (Va.) 204.

4. Bond of bookkeeper. — The sureties on a bookkeeper's bond conditioned for faithful performance by him of the duties of his office and all other duties required of him in said bank are liable for money misappropriated by him. Planters' Bank v. Lamkin, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 29; Rochester City Bank v. Elwood, 21 N. Y. 88.

5. Bond of messenger. — Where the bond of a bank messenger is conditioned "that he shall in all things conduct himself honestly and faithfully as such messenger" a larceny of the bank's money by him will operate as a breach of such condition, whether he was acting within the scope of his employment or not (German American Bank v. Auth, 87 Pa. St. 419, 30 Am. Rep. 374); and intrusting him with the keys of the bank's vault and the combination of its safe is not negligence (German American Bank v. Auth, 87 Pa. St. 419, 30 Am. Rep. 374).

So in a bond to secure the payment of another's debts mere legal liability of the obligor to pay such debts is insufficient, but payment by him or that which the law considers equivalent to payment or some loss or damage resulting to him by reason of the non-payment by the debtor must be shown. Harvey v. Daniel, 36 Ga. 562.

Though the issue of non est factum is found for plaintiff in an action of debt on the bond, yet if it appears from the other pleadings that the condition has not been broken, or if broken has been adjusted, there can be no recovery. Cheshire Bank v. Robinson, 2 N. H. 126.

In case of a bond for the payment of a specific sum with interest, the demand for prin-

the parties to a bond the time of performance is extended, the remedy is not on the bond for the penalty, but on the agreement which substantially incorporates in it all the stipulations in the bond.[13]

b. Nature and Form of Remedy — (I) Covenant or Debt. Covenant will not lie on the words of a penal bond, such words being inserted by way of condition or defeasance by the performance of some collateral act,[14] unless the breach assigned is non-payment of the penalty and not non-performance of the condition.[15] An action of debt which is an action founded on an express contract in which the certainty of the sum duly appears or may be readily determined is the proper remedy to recover the penalty of a bond.[16]

(II) Remedy in Equity — (A) Generally. The inability of one of the obligees in a bond who is also an obligor to sue himself thereon amounts only to an objection to a recovery in a court of law, and the bond may be enforced in equity,[17] and a suit by an equitable owner of bonds to recover such bonds or their value is properly brought in equity,[18] as is also a suit by one having a lien on a bond but not the possession,[19] or an action not only for a money judgment, but to adjudicate the priorities of liens against the obligor's lands for which lien-holders, not parties to the bond, are joined as defendants,[20] or where a bond has been lost.[21] But both at law or in equity, if one of two joint obligors who are sureties merely die the debt is extinguished as to him and his estate cannot be pursued and the remaining obligor is alone chargeable,[22] but otherwise where both are principals.[23]

(B) Bonds of Fiduciaries. The chancery jurisdiction of suits on bonds of fiduciaries for failure of the principal to account for moneys received, conferred by a constitutional provision,[24] embraces only technical trusts where bonds are required by law, and confers no jurisdiction of suits on bonds for breach of a condition for faithful performance of service under a private contract.[25]

(iii) Statutory Bond Enforceable at Common Law. An action upon a bond to enforce it as a common-law obligation is not prevented by the mere fact that it may be a good statutory bond and enforceable in the method provided by statute.[26]

c. Time to Sue — (i) Generally. There must be a breach of the condition of a bond in order that an action thereon may be maintained.[27] The question, however, whether there has been a breach which will enable the obligee to sue must depend upon the wording in each particular case, as showing the intent of the parties,[28] though in some cases the time of bringing suit may depend also on the terms of a statute referring to a particular class of bonds which includes the one in question.[29] Again, where the time of performance is in the alternative at the election of the obligee, an action may be maintained on the bond for a breach of the condition though both periods have not elapsed where the obligee has elected the earlier period for performance.[30]

(ii) Time as Affected by Covenant or Agreement. Where a bond has matured suit may be brought thereon notwithstanding a covenant not to sue until the happening of a contingency, but a special action may be brought and damages recovered on the covenant.[31]

28. Thus, where a bond is conditioned that the obligor shall leave the obligee all the personal estate of which he shall die possessed, a different disposition of his property by a will which is proved and allowed in the probate court constitutes a breach of the condition, and an action may be brought at once. Jenkins v. Stetson, 9 Allen (Mass.) 128. And where an executor gives a bond to his surety for the payment to the latter of one half the commissions as they are allowed to the former, upon a failure to pay one half of any particular commission, an action may be brought without waiting until the settlement of the estate. Culbertson v. Stillinger, Taney (U. S.) 75, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,463. But where the obligor agreed to conduct a certain business for a period of years, keep an exact account, and when demanded deliver to the obligee one tenth part of the product, it was held that for a failure to keep an account and deliver to plaintiff on demand an action would not lie until the end of the term. Cottle v. Payne, 3 Day (Conn.) 289. And an action on a bond conditioned for the payment of a judgment is premature if brought pending an appeal. Heagney v. Hopkins, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 549, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 1018. See also McArthur v. Barnes, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 318, 31 S. W. 212. If a bond provides that the principal shall become due at the holder's election in case of a default in payment of the interest, the commencement of an action to recover the principal and interest and the production of the bond are sufficient proof of such election. Death of surety.— A stipulation in a bond that a suit for breach of condition must be brought within a certain time should be complied with, and where brought within the time stipulated and during the pendency of the suit the surety dies and suit against the administrators of the estate is not brought until after the expiration of the period stipulated, such action may be maintained where due diligence was used in bringing the suit as soon as possible after the administrators were appointed. Eliot Nat. Bank v. Beal, 141 Mass. 566, 6 N. E. 742.

(III) Limitation of Actions. The statute of limitations may be a good defense to an action on a bond.[32]

d. Conditions Precedent[33]—(I) Generally. Conditions are in many cases inserted in a bond in the nature of conditions precedent to liability thereon, and where so inserted a performance of or compliance therewith is a prerequisite to the maintenance of an action to recover on such instrument.[34] And where a bond is conditioned that certain acts shall be done concurrently both by the obligor and obligee, an action cannot be maintained by the latter without showing a tender of performance by him or a waiver thereof by the obligor, or an excuse owing to disability.[35] Courts, however, will not unreasonably limit the rights of the obligee to sue by extending the construction of a condition precedent beyond what the parties clearly intended should be its operation and effect,[36]

Illustrations.—Where a bond is conditioned to pay money in conformity to an order of court, an action thereon cannot be maintained until such order has been made. Thompson v. State, 4 Gill (Md.) 163. And no action will lie on a bond to pay such damages as shall be recovered, until a judgment has been obtained. Davis v. Gully, 19 N. C. 360. See also Barnes v. Peck, 1 Port. (Ala.) 187. So, where the liability to pay is made dependent on condemnation proceedings, the prosecution of such proceedings must be shown. People v. Stuart, 97 Ill. 123. So also where an obligor's agreement is to refund any overpayment which may have been made, such an overpayment must be ascertained before an action can be brought. Cowles v. Garrett, 30 Ala. 341. And where a bond is given for the payment of money, when satisfactory evidence has been given that a certain amount was necessarily expended, such evidence must be furnished before a recovery can be had. Giles v. Crosby, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 389. And where a bond is conditioned on the corroboration of plaintiff's claim by a third party, an action may be maintained thereon, upon showing that his claim has been so corroborated. Brackett v. Osborne, 31 Minn. 454, 18 N. W. 153.

36. So where a bond is conditioned for payment of a designated sum whenever the obligee is compelled to pay a certain note, compulsory payment by suit is not necessary to authorize a recovery on the bond, but actual payment will be sufficient. Luckett v. Moore, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 205. And it is not a condition precedent to collection of a bond given toward the endowment of a professorship that such professorship be established and endowed. Barnett v. Franklin College, 10 Ind. App. 103, 37 N. E. 427, 10 Ind. App. 697, 37 N. E. 432. And in case of a breach of a bond by a railroad to build fences along plaintiff's land, the construction of such fences by plaintiff is not a necessary prerequisite before an action can be brought. Farley v. Moran, (Cal. 1892) 31 Pac. 158. So a statutory proceeding to condemn the property is not a condition precedent to an action on the bond of a corporation to pay all damages arising from its entrance on the obligee's land and construction of its works thereon. Pennsylvania Natural Gas Co. v. Cook, 123 Pa. St. 170, 23 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 52, 16 Atl. 762. And in the absence of a statute requiring the sheriff to return "forfeited" a bond taken in a suit in chancery, the obligee may maintain an action thereon without showing such a return. Falls v. Weissinger, 11 Ala. 801. Nor is it necessary to show that an execution was issued and returned nulla bona on a decree rendered in a suit in order that the obligee may maintain an action on a bond given to secure the payment of such sum as might be rendered in that suit. McLeod v. Scott, 38 Ark. 72. Nor need the obligee wait until actual dispossession from land purchased from the obligor in order to maintain an action on the latter's bond conditioned to pay a judgment against the land in case it is not reversed on appeal, but a sale under the judgment is sufficient. Frank v. Jenkins, 11 Wash. 611, 40 Pac. 220. So where a bond is conditioned to pay a certain sum due from the obligee to a third party, the obligee may sue thereon without showing payment by him or injury by the obligor's failure to pay. Jones v. Thomas, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 96.

and words in the nature of a mere proviso or defeasance will not be so construed,[37] nor will the courts so construe a statute where an intention to have it so operate is not clearly manifest.[38] And though a statute may be applicable as a condition precedent at the time of the execution of a bond, yet where subsequently rendered inapplicable it cannot operate to prevent an action thereon.[39]

(II) Demand. A bond which is payable on demand is due immediately on execution, and a previous demand is not necessary to the maintenance of a suit thereon;[40] and if a bond is conditioned generally for the payment of a specified sum, with interest, an action may be brought thereon, though no demand has been made.[41] So where a bond is made payable or to be performed on a stated day at a place named therein, it is unnecessary to allege or prove a demand for payment or performance at the time and place named.[42] Again if the covenant in a bond is an express and absolute one for payment, subject only to avoidance by performing the conditions of the bond, a demand for performance is unnecessary.[43] But where a bond with a penalty is conditioned for the payment of a sum of money on the performance of some act and by the terms of the bond a demand of payment or performance is required in order to put the obligors in default and fix their liability a demand must be made before an action can be maintained on the bond.[44]

(III) Notice of Default to Coöbligors. The coöbligors in a bond stand only as sureties as between themselves and the principal, but they occupy Code (1886), § 1457) the giving of such information by a freeholder is not a condition precedent to the commencing of the action. Meriwether v. Lowndes County, 89 Ala. 362, 7 So. 198.

The demand need not be made of all the obligors, though the bond be joint, where by statute joint bonds are to have the same effect as if they were joint and several, it being sufficient in such a case to prove a demand of the obligor against whom suit is brought. Whitsett v. Womack, 8 Ala. 466. See also Citizens' Bank v. Los Angeles Iron, etc., Co., 131 Cal. 187, 63 Pac. 462, 82 Am. St. Rep. 341, holding that where a demand merely is alleged the failure to state of whom made is a matter of defense, as is also the fact that the relation of principals to the obligee therein, and where the principal obligor is not entitled to any notice or request none need be given to the coöbligors, as a prerequisite to an action on the bond.[45]

e. Joinder of Causes. Where several bonds are given by the same persons to the same obligee, there may be a recovery upon all the bonds in one action.[46]

f. Action on Interest Coupons. Where interest coupons attached to bonds are separable therefrom and negotiable, an action may be maintained thereon by the owner without producing the bond from which they were detached.[47] Again, though several coupons may be due at the time of recovery on one, such recovery will not bar a suit on the others;[48] and a demand by the holder of coupons is unnecessary where liability for both principal and interest is denied by the obligor of the bond.[49]

2. Defenses — a. Generally. The general principles as to defenses to actions are applicable in actions upon bonds, and the sufficiency of the defense is to be determined in the application of the general principles to the particular facts of each case.[50] It is further to be observed that the assignee of a non-negotiable it was not made of the proper person or was otherwise insufficient.

50. What is a sufficient defense.— The following defenses have been held sufficient: Non-performance of condition precedent (Patterson v. Salmon, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 131. See also Ripley County v. Hill, 115 Ind. 316, 16 N. E. 156); signature conditional on other signers being obtained and such condition known to obligee (American Button-Hole, etc., Co. v. Murray, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 292, Syllabi 109); seal torn off where bond joint (Rittenhouse v. Levering, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 190); plaintiff not the owner, holder, and bearer of the bond as alleged in declaration (Pendleton County v. Amy, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 297, 20 L. ed. 579); and deed not valid in law, the bond being conditioned for payment in case such deed is so valid (Hays v. Muir, 1 Ind. 174). And in an action on a bond defendant may show that he is not liable for the full amount thereof in accordance with a stipulation on the back of such bond, providing for a deduction under certain circumstances. Wilmington, etc., R. Co. v. High, 89 Pa. St. 282.

What is not a defense.— The following defenses have been held insufficient: Mistaken belief as to the legal effect of a bond (Miller v. Elliott, 1 Ind. 484, 50 Am. Dec. 475); given without knowledge of an alleged defense (U. S. v. McKewan, 4 Blatchf. (U. S.) 383, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,692); non-performance by

b. Fraud or Misrepresentation — (i) As to Execution. The rule of law that fraud vitiates a contract applies where the execution of a bond is induced by fraud and misrepresentation, and this will be a good defense to an action thereon.[52] But to avoid a bond on such grounds it should appear that the obligee participated in or had notice thereof.[53] That false representations were made to induce the execution of the bond is not a defense, where the falsity of such statements could have been ascertained at the time the bond was given,[54] and where the fraudulent act was that of defendants it is no defense,[55] nor can a person repudiate his obligations on a bond on the ground of fraud, where he retains the benefits derived thereunder.[56]

(ii) As to Consideration. In an action on a bond it is no defense at law that the obligee made fraudulent representations as to the consideration for which it was given, in the absence of some statute which allows such defense.[57] But where the consideration of a bond is a sale in fraud of the obligee's creditors, and defendant of conditions (Wemhaner v. Parker, 32 Mo. App. 282); limitation of the amount of bond given on appeal (Sanger v. Miner, 54 N. Y. App. Div. 54, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 282); facts known to defendant at time of execution of bond (Pottinger v. Cameron, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 115); denial of delivery to plaintiff and also of any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief that plaintiff is or is not the owner or holder thereof (Bronson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 40 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 48); wrecking of obligor company by obligee where acts of obligee were legal (Shelby v. Bohn, 25 Ind. App. 473, 57 N. E. 566); defenses available in original suit in which bond was given to secure payment of judgment recovered (McDermott v. Isbell, 4 Cal. 113; Patterson v. Parker, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 598; Jacobs v. Daugherty, 78 Tex. 682, 15 S. W. 160; Hazard v. Griswold, 21 Fed. 178; Greathouse v. Dunlap, 3 McLean (U. S.) 303, 10 Fed. Cas. H. 691); that fulfilment of the bond is charged on real estate (Pettingill v. Patterson, 32 Me. 569); that forged bonds are in circulation not distinguishable from the genuine (Wood v. Consolidated Electric Light Co., 36 Fed. 538); that property was not in good repair when taken, where bond provided for its return in as good condition as when leased (Clifford v. Smith, 4 Ind. 377); or that obligor is able to pay the debt in an action on a bond conditioned for the delivery by the obligor of certain obligations as collateral (Stratton v. Henderson, 26 Ill. 68).

both parties have participated in the fraudulent intent, such fraud may be set up as a defense by defendant,[58] and though fraudulent representations as to the consideration may operate as a bar in some jurisdictions, yet it cannot be so pleaded where the contract has not been rescinded and the consideration has not entirely failed, but in such a case it may tend to reduce the amount of plaintiff's recovery.[59]

c. Payment, Release, Cancellation, or Discharge. Defendant may show in defense to an action on a bond that the obligation thereof is absolved by a rescission of the contract of which it was evidence,[60] or that it has been paid,[61] or that there has been a discharge of the bond,[62] or a surrender and cancellation,[63] or where the bond is a joint one that the remedy against all is defeated by the discharge of one of the obligors on a ground not personal to himself.[64]

d. Performance or Tender of Performance. Performance or a proper tender thereof in accordance with the conditions of the bond is a sufficient defense to an action thereon.[65] But a tender of performance after a breach of the condition will not so operate.[66]

e. Want or Failure of Consideration. At common law the general rule is that defendant cannot show a want of or a failure of consideration as a bar to an

Payment by third party.— Payment need not be made by the obligor, but if by a third person at his request it will be sufficient, and in such a case a suit cannot be maintained in the name of the obligee for the use of the person for whom it was made. action on a bond;[67] but such a defense is allowable by statute in some jurisdictions.[68]

f. To Actions on Bonds of Agents or Employees.[69] In an action on the bond of an agent or employee given to secure the payment to the principal of moneys handled by him it is no defense that plaintiff corporation was not authorized to do business in the state,[70] or that the money was derived from a business transaction, unauthorized or prohibited by the corporation's charter,[71] or that the cashier of the corporation consented to the defalcation or overdrafts, and the directors were negligent.[72]

B. Parties — 1. Plaintiffs — a. Generally. At common law an action on a bond can be brought only by the obligee named therein, or by his legal representatives.[73] But where the name of the obligee is incorrectly stated he may show that the bond was made to him by the name therein mentioned;[74] and though the obligee in a bond did not himself sign or seal such instrument he may sue thereon.[75]

b. Joinder. Where the covenants or conditions in a bond run to the obligees jointly, and there is nothing in the instrument showing the interest of such obligees to be several, they should all join as plaintiffs in an action thereon.[76] And they may so join where it appears that the bond is joint in form merely, but distinct obligations are assumed therein as to the different obligees,[77] though in such case it has also been held that separate actions may be maintained by each.[78]

c. Rights of Parties in Interest. One who is designated in a bond as the obligee is entitled to sue thereon, though the bond may be for the use and benefit of a third party, and the fact that the obligee designated in the bond has no beneficial interest therein is immaterial.[79] In some jurisdictions, however, the action may be brought in the name of the real party in interest, whether he pos-

But if plaintiff assigns a sufficient breach of the condition he may then specify the items of damage that he has sustained. Williams v. Maden, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 240.

Nominal damages may be recovered, although it is not alleged that plaintiff has been damaged, where a breach of the covenant is assigned in the words thereof. Albany Dutch Church v. Vedder, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 165.

96. Doane v. Chicago City R. Co., 51 Ill. App. 353; Horner v. Harrison, 37 Iowa 378. But see Allison v. Farmers' Bank, 6 Rand. (Va.) 204, holding that it is not necessary to state that damages have been sustained in action for penalty, nor to allege that plaintiff has been injured by the breaches.

The fact that damages are claimed in excess of those covered by the bond does not make the complaint bad. Offterdinger v. Ford, 92 Va. 636, 24 S. E. 246. See also Com. v. Lynd, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 144, 37 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 512. Nor is a complaint demurrable because in the prayer a penalty is asked which is not authorized. Ventura County v. Clay, 114 Cal. 242, 46 Pac. 9.

97. Brown v. Ready, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 583, 20 S. W. 1036.

It is sufficient to aver that defendant made his certain writing obligatory (Martin v. Davis, 2 Colo. 313; State v. Rush, 77 Mo. 586; Denton v. Adams, 6 Vt. 40), or that he executed the bond by his agent (Gilmer v. Allen, 9 Ga. 208), or that it was sealed with the company's seal (Curd v. Forts, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 119), or that the bond was "made and delivered" (Hazelet v. Holt County, 51 Nebr. 716, 71 N. W. 717).

An averment of execution by the principals does not charge the sureties, even though the bond is made a part of the complaint. Seattle Crockery Co. v. Haley, 6 Wash. 302, 33 Pac. 650, 36 Am. St. Rep. 156.

Where the objection is available that the declaration does not allege execution by the other obligors on a joint and several bond it must be by demurrer, plea in abatement, or a special plea. Tapley v. Goodsell, 122 Mass. 176.

98. Garcia v. Satrustegui, 4 Cal. 244; Brown v. Ready, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 583, 20 S. W. 1036.

It is sufficient averment of delivery that "defendants bound themselves by a writing under seal." Jacobs v. Curtiss, 67 Conn. 497, 35 Atl. 501; La Fayette Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 491. And if the complaint follows the statutory form, a statement that it was executed implies a delivery. Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co. v. Bacon, 148 Mass. 542, 20 N. E. 175.

If profert is made delivery need not be alleged. Boyer v. Sowles, 109 Mich. 481, 67 N. W. 530. So also where a copy is set out, and it is declared that defendant made his certain bond sealed, and non-payment is alleged, averment of delivery is not required. La Fayette Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 491.

A bond without date or an impossible one may be declared on as made on any day when proven to have been delivered. Ross v. Overton, 3 Call (Va.) 309, 2 Am. Dec. 552.

1. If the character in which plaintiff sues appears at the conclusion it is sufficient. It need not appear at the commencement of the complaint, although that is proper. State v. Ritter, 9 Ark. 244; Porter v. State, 9 Ark. 226.

And matters of description which are mere surplusage will not vitiate.[2] If there are several plaintiffs a prima facie title in them all to sue should be shown.[3] And if the joinder of parties is essential non-joinder should be excused or it is fatal.[4]

(VI) Description of Bond. So much of the bond must be set out as relates to the cause of action,[5] for it is not enough to merely refer to the bond as filed and file it with the petition.[6] The instrument, however, need not be set out in hæc verba,[7] since if the declaration shows a good common-law bond it is sufficient.[8]

If the bond is payable to a committee of a corporation, and the action is brought in the latter's name, it must be averred that the bond was made to the corporation in the name of the committee. New York African Soc. v. Varick, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 38. A want of legal capacity to sue is not a ground of objection, where the words used imply that plaintiff is a corporation. Mackenzie v. Edinburg School Trustees, 72 Ind. 189.

Partnership name in bond and in declaration is sufficient, even though individual members are also named in the latter. Armstrong v. Robinson, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 412.

For whose use or benefit the bond was given should be stated. Governor v. Throckmorton, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 243. But in describing for whose use the action is brought the party to whom it is payable should sufficiently appear, for if it is uncertain in that respect it is sufficient. Dean v. Boyd, 9 Dana (Ky.) 169. Where it appears by the declaration that the bond was given for plaintiffs' benefit it need not be averred that it was executed in their behalf. Shaw v. Tobias, 3 N. Y. 188. So a suit by a "county judge" sufficiently shows that he sues for the benefit of the county. Day v. Johnson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 33 S. W. 675. And a bond for the use and benefit of plaintiff entitles him as a proper party to sue. State v. Kaye, 83 Mo. App. 678.

Legal and equitable owners.— If the declaration shows plaintiffs were the legal owners and also shows that others were the equitable owners of the land the complaint is not bad. Pierce v. St. Anne, 30 Fed. 36.

Extent of interests of other obligees should be alleged where the action is by one of several, and it is necessary under the condition of the bond to determine the relative and respective rights of plaintiff. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Coultas, 33 Ill. 188.

5. Collins v. Blackburn, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 203. See also Hart v. Tolman, 6 Ill. 1.

Only that part of the instrument which contains the foundation of the action need be set forth. The penal part of the bond need not be stated. Prentiss v. Spalding, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 84. But see Holley v. Acre, 23 Ala. 603; Burkholder v. Lapp, 31 Pa. St. 322.

The condition of the bond should be set forth. Pike County v. Hanchey, 119 Ala. 36, 24 So. 751; Harrington v. Brown, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 232; Bridge v. Ford, 4 Mass. 641; Woods v. Rainey, 15 Mo. 484; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Bitner, 15 W. Va. 455, 36 Am. Rep. 820. See also Waterman v. Dockray, 56 Me. 52. If, however, the suit is on a bond conditioned for the performance of covenants, plaintiff may declare as on a common bond, without setting out the condition. State v. Leonard, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 173. And the condition need not be noticed where in debt on bond the count is on the penalty alone. Holley v. Acre, 23 Ala. 603. See also Burkholder v. Lapp, 31 Pa. St. 322. Nor need the declaration make it appear there is a condition, where a copy of the bond is annexed. Brown v. Warden, 44 N. J. L. 177. And the covenants and promises of the obligors sufficiently appear where the bond is copied into the complaint. Hazelet v. Holt County, 51 Nebr. 716, 71 N. W. 717. So if the condition is averred, but set out carelessly, it is sufficient if a copy of the bond is annexed and referred to in the complaint. Palestine Bldg. Assoc. v. Spengeman, (N. J. 1899) 43 Atl. 653.

Misdescription.— If the instrument is set out a wrongful designation of the bond as a note does not render it insufficient. Magruder v. Slater, 12 Ark. 171.

Uncertainty as to which bond is sought to be recovered on is not available by special plea, where the principal and sureties in a sequestration and replevin bond are the same and breaches of said bonds are alleged. McArthur v. Barnes, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 318, 31 S. W. 212.

If the complaint is upon a statutory bond it is not sufficient to aver that it corresponds with the statute. Mills v. Gleason, 21 Cal. 274. Compliance with code forms is neces-

(vii) Description of Coupons. Coupons should be identified on the face of the complaint by the number, date, sum, and time of payment.[9]

(viii) Negativing Defenses. Matters of defense need not be negatived,[10] unless they are a qualification of the original obligation.[11]

(ix) Performance of Conditions Precedent. Ordinarily, performance of conditions precedent should be averred, although the facts constituting such performance need not be stated.[12] A distinction has been made, however, between a demand for property and the payment of money, such demand not being necessary in the former case but otherwise in the latter.[13] Again, where concurrent acts are to be performed at the same time, it need only be alleged that there is a readiness and willingness to perform without averring an opportunity to perform, and that the other was requested to perform but refused and neglected so to do.[14]

(x) Setting Out Copy of Bond. If the contents of the bond and a breach thereof are substantially set forth in the complaint, it is not necessary to attach to it a copy of the bond itself,[15] although if a copy is annexed it must be referred to in the body of the pleading as so annexed.[16] But if the original or a copy is required by statute to be filed with the complaint it must be done or a demurrer lies for want of sufficiency.[17]

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bonds," § 162.

Coupons.— If irrigation district bonds are conditioned to pay a certain sum of money at a specified time and place a failure of the proper authorities to raise the funds and so perform their duty need not be averred in an action on detached coupons. Herring v. Modesto Irrigation Dist., 95 Fed. 705. If coupons are past due, presentation, demand, and refusal of payment at the time and place specified need not be averred. New South Brewing, etc., Co. v. Price, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 11, 50 S. W. 963.

If a bond is copied into the complaint, and its execution and delivery are alleged it is sufficient. Hazelet v. Holt County, 51 Nebr. 716, 71 N. W. 717.

Identification.— If there is a particular description of the bond in the complaint followed by an averment that a copy is filed and it appears following the complaint it is sufficiently identified. Blackburn v. Crowder, 108 Ind. 238, 9 N. E. 108. So if the copy is wrongly referred to but is otherwise identified it is sufficient. Wall v. Galvin, 80 Ind. 447.

or obligation referred to in a bond or its condition are material and necessary to be averred to warrant a recovery they should sufficiently appear.[18]

b. Assignment of Breaches — (I) Necessity. It may be stated, generally, that breaches should be assigned in a declaration or complaint in an action on a bond.[19] The distinction is made, however, that in bonds other than for the payment of money the breach of the condition relied on must be specifically alleged in the declaration.[20]

(II) Sufficiency — (A) Generally. In averring breaches it is generally sufficient if they are set forth in a reasonably specific manner, so that defendant may be fully apprised of what is relied on as the breach and the same strictness is not required as in setting out the bond itself.[21] But a cause of action must be shown,[22] and an intelligible breach of the condition be disclosed[23] within which such breach must be brought by the averment.[24] Again, the assignment must be such as to show the character and extent of the obligation,[25] and of the damage sustained.[26] So, if many things are required by a condition, the omission of any one of which would constitute a breach, a particular breach should be assigned.[27] A single averment, however, may be sufficient.[28] Nor need the substance of the bond be alleged in connection with every breach assigned;[29] but separate and distinct breaches should not be generally assigned.[30] The rule also applies that when a subject comprehends multiplicity of matter in order to avoid prolixity of pleading the law allows of general pleading.[31] But the claim cannot be sustained that the breaches assigned are too general, vague, and uncertain where they are as specific
