(x) Exhortation to Confess as a Religious Duty. An appeal to a man's religious feelings which induces him to confess his guilt does not invalidate his confession, as such a consideration is not likely to render his confession false.[23]

i. Promises and Similar Inducements — (i) In General. Confessions made by the accused under the promise or encouragement of any hope or favor made or held out to him by officers or other persons in authority, or by a private person in their presence, are not voluntary, and are therefore inadmissible,[24] provided the confession is so connected with the inducement as to be the consequence of it, but not otherwise.[25]

(ii) Character and Sufficiency in General. The promise of a benefit to the accused which will exclude a confession induced by it must have been positive in its terms or clearly implied and of such a character as would be likely to produce a false confession.[26] A mere suggestion to the accused that he should confess is not a promise which will exclude his confession;[27] but it is not necessary that the promise shall have been of some particular and specific advantage or favor. It is enough if in general terms it suggested an advantage to be gained by the confession.[28] It must appear of course that the promises were made and heard before the confession was uttered.[29]

(iii) Promise of Mitigation of Punishment, Immunity, Pardon, and the Like. A confession is inadmissible if indueed by a promise, express or implied, that if the accused would confess, efforts would be made to mitigate his punishment,[30] by a promise of immunity from prosecution or punishment,[31] by the promise of the prosecuting witness or the prosecuting officer to discontinue

A confession made with a view of compromising or settling the matter on the basis that the accused should not be prosecuted is not admissible. Austine v. People, 51 Ill. 236. But a confession of guilt is not inadmissible because coupled with a proposition by the accused to settle or compromise the charge, where the offer of settlement was not induced by another. Hecox v. State, 105 Ga. 625, 31 S. E. 592.

the prosecution,[32] or by a promise of pardon if the confession was induced thereby, but not otherwise.[33]

(iv) Promise of Collateral Benefit. The fact that a confession is obtained by the promise of some collateral benefit does not exclude it, if it is voluntary and otherwise admissible.[34] This is true for example of a confession made for the purpose of earning a reward for the apprehension of the criminal,[35] and of confessions on a promise by the jailer or other officer to unchain or untie the accused and permit him to associate with other prisoners,[36] to permit him to see his wife who was confined in a separate cell,[37] or to protect him from other persons implicated in the crime.[38]

(v) Inducements by Persons in Authority. A distinction is made as to their voluntary character between confessions which are procured by a promise or other inducement made or offered by a person who is so related to the accused as to be able to exercise power or authority over him, and confessions in response to promises by persons having no authority over him. The rule is that confessions made to persons in authority are presumed to have been produced by any promises they may have made to induce the confessions.[39] Persons in authority include the officer having the accused in custody,[40] the prosecuting officer and his assistants or agents,[41] the private prosecutor or person injured,[42] and the magistrate before whom the accused appears.[43] But one who lives in the jailer's family and sometimes has a key to the jail but who is not a sworn officer[44] and private detectives generally[45] are not persons in authority within the rule. And as private prosecutors are unknown to the practice of the federal courts, it has there been held that the prosecuting witness is not a person in authority.[46]

(VI) Inducements by Persons Not in Authority. An inducement to a confession held out by a private person in the presence of one in authority, and not expressly contradicted or rejected by the person in authority, will exclude a confession based upon it.[47] Some of the cases hold that inducements otherwise held out by a person not in authority do not render a confession incompetent, but that it is admissible in evidence and its weight is for the jury;[48] while other courts hold that such a confession is incompetent and should be excluded if it appears to the court that it was the effect of the inducements.[49]

43. U. S. v. Cooper, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,864.

In England persons in authority include the prosecutor (Rex v. Thompson, 1 Leach C. C. 325; Cass' Case, 1 Leach C. C. 328 note a), the prosecutor's wife (Rex v. Upchurch, 1 Moody C. C. 465) or his attorney (1 Phillips Ev. 407), or an attorney who is investigating (Reg. v. Croydon, 2 Cox C. C. 67), or some person assisting a constable (Rex v. Enoch, 5 C. & P. 539, 24 E. C. L. 696; 1 Phillips Ev. 407) or the prosecutor (Rex v. Stacey, 3 Russ. Cr. 464) in the apprehension or detention of the prisoner, or a magistrate acting in the business (Rex v. Pressly, 6 C. & P. 183, 25 E. C. L. 384; 1 Phillips Ev. 407), or other magistrate (Rex v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221, 19 E. C. L. 485), or magistrate's clerk (Reg. v. Drew, 8 C. & P. 140, 34 E. C. L. 654), or a jailer (Rex v. Gilham, 1 Moody C. C. 186), or a person having authority over the prisoner, as the captain of a vessel and one of his crew (Rex v. Parratt, 4 C. & P. 570, 19 E. C. (vii) Neglect of Accused to Perform Conditions. Where one of several co-defendants turns state's evidence, on a promise of immunity by the prosecuting attorney, but fails to keep his part of the agreement, his confession made under such promise may then be used against him on his trial.[50]

j. Judicial Confessions — (i) At Coroner's Inquest. Although there are some decisions to the contrary,[51] most of the courts have held that a confession of the accused voluntarily given when he was a witness at the coroner's inquest, although under oath, is admissible against him on his trial for the homicide of the person upon whose body the inquest was held, where he was not actually under arrest at the time, and where he was cautioned that he need not testify and that what he should say might be used against him, when such caution is required.[52]

(ii) At Fire Inquest. The rule also applies to defendant's testimony or statements under oath where he was summoned as a witness on a fire inquest, under a statute, and his confession, if any, contained therein is competent on his trial for setting the fire.[53]

(iii) At Preliminary Examination. The voluntary, unsworn statements of the prisoner constituting a confession, taken at the preliminary examination after he has been warned that what he says may be used against him, when this is required, are admissible.[54] So in most jurisdictions where he voluntarily becomes a witness for himself on his preliminary examination, and is cautioned that what

thus objecting, the answer elicited, having been obtained by compulsion, is not competent as a confession.[62]

k. Threats and Fear — (i) In General. The general rule is that a confession obtained by or made under the influence of threats or fear, being involuntary, is inadmissible, not only by statute in many jurisdictions, but also at common law.[63]

(ii) Character and Sufficiency of Fear. If the confession was induced by threats the degree of fear inspired is not material,[64] but the fear must be something more than that which is produced by the fact that the accused has been charged with crime and has been arrested or taken into custody, or by the fear that he may be punished for the crime.[65]

(iii) Character and Time of Threats. It has been said that the threats which will operate to exclude a confession must be of such a character as to render it doubtful whether the confession should be relied upon as worthy of credit.[66]

Ann. 478, 27 So. 50; State v. Revells, 34 La. Ann. 381, 44 Am. Rep. 436) are circumstances material to show the presence of fear.

66. State v. Freeman, 12 Ind. 100. If the officer having the accused in custody asks

A confession obtained by a threat to bring a civil action is competent.[67] It has been held that a confession by one defendant, made on seeing an accomplice whipped, is admissible against him;[68] but elsewhere it has been held that a confession made on witnessing torture inflicted on a co-defendant to induce him to confess is inadmissible.[69] The fact that the officer who had the accused in charge was armed,[70] that in making the arrest he pointed a pistol at the accused and advised him to give up,[71] or that fire-arms were deposited in the room where the confession was made[72] does not render a confession incompetent. Threats uttered after the confession was made do not exclude it.[73]

(iv) Fear and Threats of Mob Violence. It has been held that the mere fact that the accused feared mob violence when he made a confession does not exclude it, where such fear was not inspired by threats, express or implied.[74] But a confession is not admissible where it appears that it was made under threats to deliver the accused to a mob,[75] or under threats or representations, express or implied, that a confession was the only way to escape from the mob.[76] And where the confession was made when the accused was surrounded by or under the control of a mob, within hearing of their angry expressions of hatred, and in view of their preparation to put him to death or to injure him, it is incompetent, although no express threat was made by any member of the mob.[77]

I. Deception or Promise of Secrecy. The fact that a confession was procured by the employment of falsehood by a police officer, detective, or other person does not alone exclude it;[78] nor does the employment of any artifice, deception, or him to tell the truth, this is not a threat. Com. v. Preece, 140 Mass. 276, 5 N. E. 494. See also supra, XII, H, 2, h, (VII). But a threat to put the accused in the dark room (People v. Rankin, 2 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 467) or to put him "where the dogs would not bother him" (Beckham v. State, 100 Ala. 15, 14 So. 859) has been held enough to render a confession inadmissible.

fraud exclude it, if the artifice or fraud employed was not calculated to procure an untrue statement.[79] The fact that a confession was obtained by a promise of secrecy does not render it incompetent, if there was no motive to produce a false statement.[80]

m. Mental Incapacity — (I) In General. The mental weakness of the accused does not alone exclude his confession, although a confession by a weak-minded person is to be received with caution;[81] but if the fact of mental incapacity was coupled with circumstances calculated to inspire fear the confession is not admissible.[82] The great excitement of the accused when arrested does not exclude a confession.[83]

(II) Intoxication. The fact that defendant was more or less intoxicated when he confessed does not exclude the confession if he had sufficient mental capacity to know what he was saying, and this is the rule, by the weight of authority, although the liquor may have been furnished him by the person having him in custody for the express purpose of procuring a confession.[84] But confessions by one who was so drunk that he did not understand what he was saying are not competent.[85]

Effect of intoxication upon weight of confession.—The fact of intoxication may be considered by the jury as lessening the weight of the confession, for although the saying in vino veritas is of ancient acceptance, it is well known that boastful propensities and the inclination for lying are in many men stimulated by the indulgence in intoxicants. ing his education and intelligence. The confession of a child, even when he was under fourteen years of age, if he is proved to have been doli capax, is admissible.[86] Sometimes the competency of the confession is measured by the capacity of the child to testify as a witness, and if he is incompetent as a witness his confession is incompetent.[87] The age of a person under maturity is relevant in determining the voluntary character of his confession, for circumstances of compulsion or threats which would not exclude the confession of an adult may render the confession of a child involuntary and incompetent.[88]

o. Involuntary Confessions Disclosing Other Incriminating Evidence. Where an involuntary confession discloses incriminating evidence which is subsequently on investigation proved to be true, or where the confession leads to the discovery of facts which in themselves are incriminating, so much of the confession as discloses the incriminating evidence and relates directly thereto is admissible.[89] And the facts discovered in consequence of such involuntary confession may be proved.[90] Thus in a prosecution for murder evidence of the discovery in a certain place of the remains[91] or clothing of the deceased[92] or of the weapon by which he was killed,[93] with so much of an involuntary confession as relates directly to such facts,[94] is admissible. And in a prosecution for larceny, that portion of the involuntary confession of the accused disclosing the hiding place of the stolen property, and all he says in conveying the information which is directly connected with the discovery, is admissible, although his statement that he stole such property may be inadmissible.[95]

p. Written Confessions — (i) Parol Evidence. Where the confession has been committed to writing the writing must be produced as the best evidence, unless its absence is accounted for.[96] If the record cannot be found,[97] or if it is inadmissible by reason of irregularities,[98] parol proof of its contents is competent. And although the confession of the accused has been taken down in writing, parol evidence of other confessions at other times is competent.[99] If it appears that a confession at the preliminary examination was not committed to writing, the justice or any one present who heard it may prove it orally.[1]

(ii) Signature and Authentication. A confession in writing, if otherwise proved to have been made by the accused, is competent, although not signed by him;[2] but a writing purporting to be a confession before a justice cannot be admitted unless its genuineness is proved.[3]

(iii) Foreign Language. A written confession in English is not incompetent because the prisoner talks another language only, if, sentence by sentence, the written confession was translated into his own language in his presence and hearing, and by him admitted to be understood and to be correct.[4]

Competency of interpreter.— Where the confession was made to an interpreter, it is proper before introducing the transcript thereof to prove by the interpreter under oath be omitted,[5] but the better opinion is that all names and every word must be read just as it is, and the court should instruct the jury that the confession is not evidence against any one except the person making it.[6]

q. Confessions Under Oath. The general rule is that what a party says in relation to an offense is admissible in evidence against him, whether on oath or not, if such statement appears to have been made voluntarily, and not under threat or duress or in consequence of any inducement.[7]

r. Determination of Admissibility — (i) Presumption as to Voluntary Character. In some jurisdictions the prosecution is required to show affirmatively that a confession is voluntary before it will be admitted,[8] although even where this is required if no timely objection is interposed the confession will be admitted without the introduction of evidence showing that it was voluntary.[9] In other jurisdictions the presumption is that a confession, like every act or utterance which is the result of human agency, is voluntary in the absence of evidence to the contrary.[10] It is well settled, however, that there is a presumption of law that the influence of threats or promises once made continued to operate until such presumption is rebutted by proof clearly showing that it had ceased to operate.[11]

(ii) Facts Admissible. In determining whether a confession was voluntary, the age, situation, experience, intelligence, character, and disposition of the accused, and the circumstances under which the confession was made, are relevant.[12] It is not error to permit a witness to testify that a confession was volunthat he fully interpreted between the prosecuting attorney and the prisoner. State v. Abbotto, 64 N. J. L. 658, 47 Atl. 10.

Repetition of confession.—Although a confession may have been originally inadmissible because involuntary, it may become admissible by subsequent repetition by the accused when his mind was perfectly free from the undue influence which induced the original confession. Prima facie the undue influence will be considered as continuing, although the presumption may be repelled by strong and clear evidence. tary, as being an opinion or conclusion, if the circumstances of the confession are in evidence.[13]

(III) Sufficiency of Evidence and Reasonable Doubt. It is necessary in laying a foundation for the admission of a confession to prove affirmatively such facts as will exclude the hypothesis that it was procured by hope or fear,[14] and the accused should have the benefit of any reasonable doubt existing on this point.[15]

(IV) Rights of Accused. Where the state introduces evidence which shows or tends to show that the confession was voluntary, the accused must be permitted to introduce evidence of any fact showing or tending to show that it was involuntary.[16] He may call and examine, to aid in determining the admissibility of the confession, a witness who knows of the circumstances surrounding its making or of his physical or mental condition when it was made.[17] The witnesses who testify to the circumstances showing that a confession was voluntary may be cross-examined by the accused on the same point, and it is error to refuse to permit him to do so.[18] Counsel for the accused may also impeach the testimony of the witness testifying to the voluntary character of the confession by proving his former statements to the contrary.[19]

(V) Order of Proof. The court should determine, prior to permitting the confession to go to the jury, whether it was or was not voluntary.[20] Hence defendant is entitled to show before the admissibility of the confession is determined that it was involuntary, and according to better opinion permitting him to show the facts afterward and then striking out the confession is not sufficient.[21]

(vi) Province of Court and Jury. Whether confessions offered in evidence were voluntary is a question relating to the admissibility of evidence, and as such is generally exclusively for the court.[22] The court may, even after it has admitted a confession as evidence, rule it out if satisfied by any subsequent evidence that it was not a free and voluntary one,[23] and if there is a conflict of evidence and the court is not satisfied that the confession was voluntary, the confession may be submitted to the jury, under instructions to disregard it if upon all the evidence they believe that it was involuntary.[24]

3. Corroboration — a. Necessity For. A naked confession is one which is not corroborated by independent proof of the corpus delicti. Upon such a confession made in open court, as for example by a plea of guilty, if voluntary, a conviction and sentence may be had,[25] and there are cases which hold that the voluntary confession of a prisoner, although extrajudicial, is sufficient to sustain a conviction.[26] But according to the weight of authority a conviction upon an extrajudicial confession will not be sustained without corroboration.[27] In some states statutes expressly provide that one may not be convicted on his uncorroborated confession.[28]

b. What Are Corroborating Circumstances. Circumstances which corroborate the confession are such as serve to strengthen it and render it more probable; such in short as may serve to impress the jury with the belief that it is true.[29]

c. Proof of Corpus Delicti — (i) Necessity. A confession not corroborated by independent evidence of the corpus delicti is not according to the general rule sufficient to support a conviction.[30] A conviction based on a confession will stand, however, although it is uncorroborated by any other evidence, if the corpus delicti be proved.[31]

(II) Sufficiency. The corpus delicti need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[32] In other words the corroborative evidence need not be such as would be required to convict the accused independently of the confession.[33]

(III) Order of Proof. It has been held that proof of the corpus delicti should precede the admission of the confession, although if the confession be admitted, and evidence which would have been sufficient to authorize its admission is subsequently introduced, the error is cured.[34]

4. Conclusiveness of Confessions. The accused is not estopped to deny and disprove the statements in his confession. He may show that when he confessed he was intoxicated,[35] and may disprove by independent evidence of any sort any incriminating fact confessed by him.[36] The rule that a confession is to be considered in its entirety does not compel the jury to give the same belief to every part of it. The jury may attach such credit to any part of it as they deem it worthy of, and may reject any portion of it which they do not believe. All of it must be carefully weighed by the jury, and upon all the circumstances surrounding the case they must determine how much of it they will receive and how much they will reject.[37]

5. Credibility and Weight of Confessions. Three different theories of the credibility and weight of confessions have been proposed and sustained by the authorities. It has been said that a confession freely and voluntarily made is entitled to the highest credit and to great weight as evidence.[38] Other authorities have gone to the opposite extreme and have said that confessions are to be received with the greatest caution,[39] or with great distrust,[40] and that as matter of law confessions are entitled to very little weight.[41] But the rule generally laid down is that the weight and credibility of a confession as evidence are to be determined by the jury upon the same principles that they determine the weight and credibility of any evidence, that is, upon the consideration of all the circumstances connected therewith.[42]

I. Weight and Sufficiency — 1. Weight, Credibility, and Conclusiveness — a. Positive and Negative Evidence. As between witnesses of equal credibility contradicting one another, ordinarily a witness who testifies to the affirmative is entitled to credit in preference to one who testifies to the negative. this rule is the fact that the negative witness may have forgotten what might have actually occurred, while it is impossible to remember what never happened.[43] But an instruction which having this rule in view in effect tells the jury to believe the affirmative evidence regardless of its character or the surrounding circumstances is error.[44]

b. Conflicting Evidence. The rule requiring the jury to be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused[45] does not require the evidence to be free from conflict;[46] nor does it require them to attempt the impossible task of reconciling the irreconcilable, and they are at liberty to reject that which is inconsistent with belief.[47] And the fact that the number of witnesses who testify to certain facts exceeds the number of those who testify to the contrary does not impose upon the jury any obligation to believe that side which has a numerical superiority.[48]

c. Uncontroverted Evidence. The jury are not bound to believe testimony because it is uncontradicted and not directly impeached.[49] The jury may consider the inherent improbabilities of the statements of the witness, and they may be of such a character as to justify them in disregarding his testimony, although uncontradicted by direct testimony. He may be contradicted by the facts that he states as completely as by adverse testimony, and there may be so many omissions and improbabilities in his evidence as to discredit his whole story.[50]

d. Number of Witnesses Required. The general rule at common law is that the testimony of a single witness, if relevant and deemed credible by the jury, is sufficient for a conviction;[51] but to this rule there are very many exceptions created by the circumstances of the witness testifying, by the nature of the crime, or by positive statutory enactment, as in the case of perjury,[52] treason,[53] and certain other offenses.[54]

St. c. 13, § 8, which provides that no one shall be convicted of a capital crime without the testimony of at least two witnesses or its equivalent, it was held that each important fact need not be so proved, but that it was enough if the evidence as a whole equaled

e. Admissions of Counsel. The conviction of the accused cannot be had upon the admissions of criminality made by his counsel not constituting a plea of guilty, and it is therefore error to charge that counsel have admitted a felonious intent.[55]

f. Testimony of Accused. The credibility of the accused as a witness in his own behalf is determined by general rules. The fact that the evidence against him is strong and his story improbable does not necessarily render his testimony incredible.[56] The credibility of his testimony is for the jury to determine under all the circumstances, as in the case of other witnesses, and they may disbelieve such portion as they consider false.[57] They may consider the fact that he is testifying to exculpate himself.[58]

g. Failure to Disprove or Explain Incriminating Facts. The failure of defendant when he is a witness to deny incriminating testimony,[59] or his failure to deny or satisfactorily explain such incriminating evidence where he can readily do so,[60] tends to establish its truth.[61]

h. Conclusiveness of Evidence of Flight or Attempted Escape. Although the flight or attempted escape of the accused is a circumstance against him,[62] a conviction will not be sustained where it is based wholly upon the fact that shortly after the crime the accused left the state to avoid arrest, particularly where he gives a reasonable explanation for doing so, as for example that he was unable to give bond for his appearance.[63]

i. Circumstantial Evidence — (i) In General. Owing to the methods of criminals of shrouding their actions in secrecy and of performing them when no eye-witnesses are present, it is often necessary in criminal trials to resort to circumstantial evidence. Such evidence alone will support a conviction even of a capital crime, if it produces a belief in the minds of the jury that the accused is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.[64] In all cases of circumstantial evidence any fact or circumstance which tends to prove or to explain the facts or circumstances in issue[65] is to be considered, and the evidence of circumstances is permitted to take a wide range, and to include everything, however remote, which will aid the jury in reaching a verdict.[66]

(II) To Prove Corpus Delicti. It is not necessary that the corpus delicti should be established by direct and positive proof. It may be proved as well by circumstantial evidence, if on all the evidence the jury are satisfied of defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.[67] The expression corpus delicti, literally translated, body of the offense, may be defined in its primary sense as the fact that a crime has been actually committed.[68] The corpus delicti is made up of two elements: First, certain facts proved and forming its basis, and second, the existence of a criminal agency, of which the facts proved are the result.[69] The words are sometimes employed with a secondary meaning to indicate the subject of the crime and its visible effect, such as the body of the person murdered or the ruins of a house burned.[70]

(III) Sufficiency to Sustain Conviction. No general rule can be laid down as to the quantity of circumstantial evidence which in any case will suffice. All the circumstances proved must be consistent with each other, consistent with the hypothesis that the accused is guilty, and at the same time inconsistent with the hypothesis that he is innocent, and with every other rational hypothesis except that of guilt.[71]

(iv) Caution. Circumstantial evidence as a basis for a conviction of crime ought to be acted upon with great caution, particularly where the crime is very heinous or peculiar in its circumstances. The greatness of the crime naturally leads to an anxiety for its punishment, and this, together with the peculiar character of the facts, may lead witnesses to distort, mistake, or exaggerate facts, and the jury to draw incorrect inferences from them. But the caution with which circumstantial evidence should be received does not mean that it is incapable of producing a high degree of proof, equal to that to be derived from direct evidence, but only that the jury should in dealing with such evidence guard against the peculiar dangers inherent in it.[72]

(v) Strength of Circumstantial, as Compared With Direct, Evidence. No rule of law requires the court to instruct that circumstantial evidence is inferior to direct and positive evidence.[73] The two kinds of evidence are in effect the same if equally convincing.[74] The test of the sufficiency of the circumstantial evidence is not whether it produces the same conviction as the positive testi-

Moral certainty.— The test of the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence is often said to be whether it is of such a nature as to exclude to a moral certainty every rational hypothesis except that of guilt. Kastner v. State, 58 Nebr. 767, 79 N. W. 713; Hester v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 51 S. W. 932; State v. Sheppard, 49 W. Va. 582, 39 S. E. 676. It is not every hypothesis, but every "reasonable" hypothesis but that of guilt, which the circumstantial evidence must exclude. Walker v. State, 134 Ala. 86, 32 So. 703; King v. State, 120 Ala. 329, 25 So. 178. If the evidence is consistent with the theory of defendant's innocence, the verdict of guilty ought to be set aside. Black v. State, 112 Ga. 29, 37 S. E. 108.

To warrant a conviction on circumstantial evidence each fact necessary to the conclusion must be proved by competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. All the facts must be consistent with each other, and with the main fact sought to be proved, and the circumstances taken together must be of a conclusive nature, leading to a satisfactory conclusion, and producing a reasonable and moral certainty that the accused and no other person committed the offense charged. mony of a single eye-witness,[75] but whether it produces moral conviction to the exclusion of every reasonable doubt.[76]

2. Sufficiency and Degree of Proof — a. In General. The test of the sufficiency of evidence to establish the guilt of the accused is, whether it is sufficient to satisfy the jury of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.[77] The evidence for the prosecution should not be held insufficient solely because it is, when disconnected, weak and inconclusive, if taken together it may satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt.[78]

b. Inferences by the Jury. The jury may from all the testimony taken together draw all legitimate inferences[79] that probably or reasonably arise from the circumstances proved, although such inferences do not always necessarily follow the facts.[80] A conviction based on reasonable inferences from the evidence cannot be set aside as unsupported by evidence.[81]

c. Reasonable Doubt — (i) General Rule. In criminal cases a verdict of guilty cannot be based upon a mere preponderance of proof. The jury are required, particularly where the evidence is circumstantial or contradictory, to be satisfied upon all the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused is guilty.[82] In this respect criminal cases differ from civil, for in the latter no presumption is indulged in favor of either litigant, so that he who produces the pre-

Secondary evidence.— Circumstantial evidence is not secondary evidence, so that in order to introduce it a party must prove that there is no direct evidence. ponderance of evidence wins, while in the former the accused starts with the presumption that he is innocent, which must be overcome, in addition to the evidence introduced in his behalf.[83]

(II) Definition of. The meaning of the term "reasonable doubt" has been a topic of much discussion, and innumerable attempts have been made to define it. What a reasonable doubt is does not seem easy of explanation, for those who possess the most unusual facility in the use of language have found it difficult to formulate or convey to others their idea of the meaning of these words. Many of the cases point out the terseness and seeming simplicity of the phrase and the inutility of attempting a definition which must necessarily consist in a restatement of the proposition in different words, which are not more easily understood, and which render the original expression only more obscure.[84]

Definitions of reasonable doubt.— The doubt to be reasonable must have something to rest upon. It must be a substantial doubt arising upon the evidence or from a lack of evidence, such as an honest, sensible, and fair-minded man might with reason entertain consistent with a conscientious desire on his part to ascertain the truth. A vague conjecture or an inference of the possibility of the innocence of the accused is not a reasonable doubt. A doubt is not reasonable that in the face of overwhelming or even strong evidence assumes that the accused may possibly be innocent. There must be sincerity and common sense in the doubt, for the mental operations of all sane men are governed by the same rules, whether in the jury-box or out of it; and the jurors should be convinced as jurors by the same proof that would convince them as men, and upon which they would act in the management of the gravest and most important matters and in arranging their most serious affairs and concerns. But compare Williams v. State, 73 Miss. 820, 19 So. 826. A reasonable doubt has also been defined as "a doubt for which a reason can be given" (Jones v. State, 120 Ala. 303, 25 So. 204; Walker v. State, 117 Ala. 42, 23 So. 149; Hodge v. State, 97 Ala. 37, 12 So. 164, 38 Am. E. 681; Densmore v. State, 67 Ind. 306, 33 Am. Rep. 96; People v. McCann, 16 N. Y. 58, 69 Am. Dec. 642). Again it is said that the facts must satisfy a reasonable mind after a full comparison and consideration of the evidence (Wood v. State, 31 Fla. 221, 12 So. 539; People v. Guidici, 100 N. Y. 503, 3 N. E. 493); that it must have something to rest upon such as a sensible and honest man would reasonably entertain (Fletcher v. State, 90 Ga. 468, 17 S. E. 100); that it must be a doubt growing out of the evidence and the circumstances of the case (Malone v. State, 49 Ga. 210; State v. Kruger, 7 Ida. 178, 61 Pac. 463; State v. Davidson, 44 Mo. W. 232) or probability of innocence (Bain v. State, 74 Ala. 38; State v. David, 131 Mo. 380, 33 S. (III) Applies to Misdemeanors as Well as to Felonies. The rule requiring belief in defendant's guilt to the exclusion of every reasonable doubt is as applicable to misdemeanors as to felonies.[85]

(IV) In the Mind of One Juror. The proposition that the jury must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt does not justify an instruction that a reasonable doubt must be entertained by or arise in the mind of every one of them,[86] or that an acquittal is not warranted unless a reasonable doubt is entertained by all of them.[87] The law contemplates, and indeed demands that every one of the jurors must join in the conclusion that the accused is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, although each individual mind has to arrive at this conclusion separately, and each juror having in view the oath he has taken must have his own mind convinced beyond a reasonable doubt upon all the evidence before he can conscientiously consent to the verdict of guilty.[88] But the fact that one of the jurors entertains a reasonable doubt does not bind the jury to acquit, and the jury should be so instructed.[89] Under such circumstances all that the jury can do is to report an agreement impossible.[90]

(V) As to Each Particular Fact. Most of the courts have held that where the prosecution relies upon circumstantial evidence it is not necessary that each circumstance relied upon shall be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, but all the circumstances should be considered, and if those actually proved taken together are sufficient to satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt, they should not acquit merely because one or more of the circumstances relied upon by the prosecution was not proved.[91] Others have held that where certain facts are

Hence a mere whim or a groundless surmise (Welsh v. State, 96 Ala. 92, 11 So. 450), a vague conjecture (Fletcher v. State, 90 Ga. 468, 17 S. essential to guilt a reasonable doubt as to any of these facts will require an acquittal.[92]

(VI) INTENT. Where a particular intent is a necessary ingredient of the crime, and the jury have a reasonable doubt as to the intent, they should acquit. The prosecution must prove the intent beyond a reasonable doubt.[93]

(VII) GRADE OR DEGREE OF CRIME. Where the indictment charges a crime in two or more degrees, and the evidence leaves the degree or grade in doubt, the jury should convict of the lowest grade, if they have a reasonable doubt as to the grade.[94]

(VIII) IDENTITY OF ACCUSED. The prosecution must identify the person on trial as the person who actually committed the crime to the satisfaction of the jury and beyond a reasonable doubt.[95] But there is no rule of law that testimony identifying a party should be subjected to the closest scrutiny. The identification is not an expression of an opinion, but the statement of a fact.[96] A conviction may be sustained, although a witness declines to swear positively and testifies that he believes the accused is the person whom he saw commit the crime.[97]

(IX) NAME OF PERSON. Where defendant is indicted under his own name and also under an alias, it is not necessary to prove that he was known and called by both. It is sufficient if it be proved that he was known by either.[98]

(x) Incorporation. Incorporation need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Thus where the person injured by the crime is alleged to have been a corporation, a failure to prove this allegation will not justify the granting of a new trial.[99] And generally proof that an association was engaged in carrying on a business under a corporate name, and possessed at least a corporate existence de facto, is sufficient without producing a certificate of incorporation or a copy thereof.[1]

(xi) Age. The prosecution has the burden of proving that defendant was of an age to be criminally responsible for his act, and this it must do beyond a reasonable doubt.[2]

d. Venue — (i) Sufficiency of Proof. It has been held that the venue need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, but that it is sufficient if from all the evidence it may reasonably be inferred.[3]

(ii) Failure to Prove. If, however, the prosecution offers no proof of venue, or offers evidence of the venue which is clearly insufficient, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury that the venue has not been proved and to direct an acquittal.[4]

(iii) Circumstantial Evidence. It is not necessary that the venue as laid should be proved by direct or positive evidence. It may be proved like any other fact by proof of other facts and circumstances from which it may be inferred.[5]

Where no witness expressly states that the crime was committed in the county as charged, but there are references in the evidence to various localities and landmarks at or near the scene of the crime, known by or probably familiar to the jury, and from which they may have reasonably concluded that the offense was committed in the county alleged, the venue is sufficiently proved.[6] Venue may be inferred by the jury from proof of an act which is the logical and ordinary outcome of the commission of a crime in the county.[7]

(iv) Public Places and Streets. From proof that a crime was committed on a street or other public place well known to be within the limits of a town or city the jury may infer that the crime was committed within the limits of such town or city, and as the court will take judicial knowledge of the county in which it is located the venue is sufficiently proved.[8] Proof that the crime was committed in a certain city, village, or town has been held to be sufficient proof of venue under the same rule of judicial notice of geographical facts.[9] The contrary has also been held.[10]

(v) Private House or Building. Where one witness testifies that the crime was committed at, in, or near a certain building, and another witness testifies that the building is in the county alleged in the indictment, the venue is sufficiently proved.[11] Proof that the crime was committed at or near the store or residence of a person named, without evidence to show that the building named is in the county,[12] or at a certain house described by its street and number,[13] without evidence to show that the building named is in the county, is not proof of venue.[14]

(VI) Defendant's Evidence to Show Place of Crime. A defendant who claims that the crime was not committed within the state or county is not compelled to establish this solely by affirmative evidence, but he may rely upon and is entitled to the benefit which he may derive from any evidence offered by the state to prove the venue.[15]

e. Defenses — (I) General Rule. It is safe to say as a general rule that the doctrine of reasonable doubt applies only to criminative, and not to exculpatory, facts.[16] Hence defendant is not required to establish such fact or facts in mitigation beyond a reasonable doubt. It is sufficient if he satisfy the jury of their truth by credible or preponderating evidence,[17] or if the exculpatory facts, taken in connection with the incriminating evidence, raise a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the prisoner.[18]

(II) Insanity. There is a direct conflict in the cases as to the degree of proof necessary to establish the defense of insanity.[19] A few of the cases have held that defendant must establish his insanity beyond a reasonable doubt.[20] Others have held that he need not do so beyond a reasonable doubt, but that he must do so by a preponderance of the evidence or to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury.[21]

Others have held that while he has the burden of introducing some evidence to rebut the presumption of sanity yet if on all the evidence the jury have a reasonable doubt as to his sanity they must acquit.[22] The barbarity and natural atrocity of the crime does not alone in law justify the jury in finding that the accused was insane at the date of its commission.[23] The order on a commission in lunacy committing the accused to an insane asylum while relevant is neither conclusive[24]

nor ordinarily even prima facie evidence[25] that the accused was insane at the date of the commission of the crime.[26]

XIII. TIME[1] OF TRIAL.

A. Right to Speedy Trial — 1. AT COMMON LAW. In England from the very earliest time a prisoner, in theory at least, enjoyed the right to a speedy trial, which was procured him by the commission of jail delivery, which issued to the justices of assize, and twice every year resulted in the jails being cleared and the prisoners confined therein being convicted and punished, or freed from custody.[2]

2. UNDER CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS. It is usual for state constitutions and statutes to provide for the accused a speedy and public trial. By a speedy trial is meant one that can be had as soon after indictment as the prosecution can with reasonable diligence prepare for, regard being had to the terms of court.[3] It cannot be said, however, that in all the possible vicissitudes of human affairs the accused should have a public trial at the next term of the court, but only that the prosecution should be prevented from oppressing him by holding the proceedings suspended over him indefinitely.[4]

3. POWER OF COURT TO FIX DAY OF TRIAL. In the absence of statute specifying the day on which criminal cases must be tried, the day during the term[5] upon which a prisoner may be tried is in the discretion of the court.[6] The

A statute authorizing a nolle prosequi to be entered where there is a material variance between the proof and the indictment, unless the accused assents to an amendment, is not unconstitutional upon the ground that it denies the accused a speedy trial. State v. Kreps, 8 Ala. 951.

The practice of filing away indictments is not to be indulged in where the accused has been served with process, and for the court to permit this over his objection on the application of the commonwealth's attorney, after the case had been adjourned over the term, with permission to reinstate it on the commonwealth's motion, is error. Jones v. Com., 71 S. W. 643, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1434.

5. Adjournment of court during term.— While the judge, court having been regularly convened, has ample power to adjourn to some future time during the term, although not beyond it, in the absence of a statute authorizing it, the clerk cannot act for the judge in adjourning court. See COURTS, 11 Cyc. 733. Hence where the judge fails to appear and open court the term is lost, and a conviction obtained as of such term is a nullity. power which the court has to fix a day for the trial extends to the next term of that court.[7]

4. Discharge of Accused[8] — a. Statutory Provisions. In the majority of the states statutory provisions exist which provide that a person committed in a criminal proceeding and not admitted to bail shall, in case he is not tried within a period of time specified by the statute, due demand by him for a speedy trial having been made, be discharged from custody.[9] The words "person committed" in such a statute mean one who is in actual custody, and not out on bail.[10] It is the general rule that one desiring to take advantage of such a statute has the burden of proof to show that he is within its provisions.[11] On the other hand it is incumbent upon the prosecution to show that any delay which has occurred in trying the accused was within some exception mentioned in the statute.[12]

defendant shall not be detained in jail more than two consecutive terms without trial, except in certain specified cases, he is absolutely entitled to a speedy trial, and the court has no discretion to deny him that right.[13]

c. Necessity For Demand For Trial. A demand for a trial, a resistance to a postponement, or some other effort to secure a speedy trial must be shown to entitle the accused to a discharge under the statute by reason of the delay of the prosecution.[14]

d. Motion For Discharge. A demand or motion for a dismissal or discharge because of delay in the trial must be made before the trial begins.[15]

e. Effect of Discharge. A discharge by the court for failure to prosecute under a statute is an acquittal of the crime, and may be pleaded in bar to a subsequent prosecution.[16]

A prisoner admitted to bail is not entitled to be discharged for want of prosecution, unless he shall appear and demand a trial. Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 56, 45 N. E. 303, 54 Am. St. Rep. 447, 35 L. R. A. 176. Although the accused has forfeited his recognizance he is entitled, if there be a proper jury in attendance, to have his demand for trial put on the minutes. Hall v. State, 21 Ga. 148. A motion to discharge the accused on his own recognizance, where he was on bail, based upon the delay of the prosecuting attorney in trying the accused, was refused in U. S. v. Thorne, 15 Fed. 739.

If he makes a demand and the jury is impaneled and qualified to try the prisoner and he is not tried, he is then entitled to be absolutely discharged. Kerese v. State, 10 Ga. 95.

The demand for trial must be made before the jury is discharged for the term (Moreland v. State, 51 Ga. 192; Jordan v. State, 18 Ga. 532); and the benefit of it is not lost by the entry of a nolle prosequi without defendant's consent, or by a mistrial on a new indictment (Brown v. State, 85 Ga. 713, 11 S. E. 831).

The prisoner must usually show that the demand was made in accordance with the terms of the statute (Couch v. State, 28 Ga. 64) in the court in which the case is pending (Hunley v. State, 105 Ga. 636, 31 S. E. 543).

16. This is the rule under a statute declaring the accused to be "entitled to be discharged as far as relates to such offense." State v. Wear, 145 Mo. 162, 46 S. W. 1099; Ex p. McGehan, 22 Ohio St. 442. The same rule of course would apply where the statute provides that the prisoner shall be absolutely discharged and acquitted. Durham v. State, 9 Ga. 306; Denny v. State, 6 Ga. 491; McGuire v. Wallace, 109 Ind. 284, 10 N. E. 111; Com. v. Adcock, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 661; Vance v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 162.

If, however, the statute merely provides that the accused shall be discharged or "set at liberty" in case he is not promptly tried, no implication arises that an acquittal is intended, and his discharge cannot be pleaded in bar. In re Garvey, 7 Colo. 502, 4 Pac. 758; State v. Garthwaite, 23 N. J. L. 143. See also Cummins v. People, 4 Colo. App. 71, 34 Pac. 734. And in some cases the statute expressly provides that the discharge shall not be a bar. In re Begerow, 136 Cal. 292, 68 Pac. 773, 56 L. R. A. 528; Ex p. Clarke, 54 Cal. 412.

ordered, he will not be entitled to a discharge under the statute because of the delay of the prosecution in trying him the second time, as the delay was caused by his efforts to reverse his conviction.[18]

g. Excuse For State's Delay — (i) In General. Delay on the part of the state in trying one accused of crime may be excused, especially if such delay is for unavoidable reasons.[19]

Application for discharge must show that the delay did not happen through the prisoner's acts, and that it was not caused by lack of time to try the case. Korth v. State, 46 Nebr. 631, 65 N. W. 792.

Failure of defendant to object to postponements, or his objection to an immediate trial, is equivalent to a delay granted at his request. People v. Benc, 130 Cal. 159, 62 Pac. 404; People v. Cline, 74 Cal. 575, 16 Pac. 391; State v. Arthur, 21 Iowa 322.

Such delay results where defendant keeps away the state's witnesses by threats (Respublica v. Arnold, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 263; Com. v. Philadelphia County Prison, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 320); where the principal absconds, and the accessary being about to be put on trial refuses to be tried without the principal (Com. v. Allegheny County, 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 304); where the acoused moves to quash the indictment, and the court holds the motion under advisement during the term (Ex p. Walton, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 501); where defendant consents to a continuance (Healy v. People, 177 Ill. 306, 52 N. E. 426; State v. O'Connor, 6 Kan. App. 770, 50 Pac. 949), or being indicted jointly with others he asks for a separate trial, and this being granted, the trial of the other defendants extends beyond the statutory period (People v. Matson, 129 Ill. 591, 22 N. E. 456).

Procuring federal injunction.— Where the accused obtained a federal injunction staying his trial in the state court, and prohibiting certain records from being used against him, he cannot, after the injunction is dissolved, claim the benefit of a statute which provides that one not brought to trial within a certain time after indictment shall be forever discharged. Although three terms intervene pending an appeal, the accused is not entitled to be discharged under a statute which provides that if any person indicted shall not be brought to trial before the end of the third term he shall be discharged. State v. Bulling, 105 Mo. 204, 15 S. W. 367, 16 S. W. 830.

Where the statute provides that the accused must be brought to trial within sixty days after the indictment, and he has his conviction set aside and a new trial ordered, the running of the sixty days commences from the date of the order. In re Murphy, 7 Wash. 257, 34 Pac. 834.

Illustrations.— The fact that the court is engaged in the trial of another case having precedence over that of the accused (People v. Benc, 130 Cal. 159, 62 Pac. 404; People v. Vasalo, 120 Cal. 168, 52 Pac. 305; People v. Henry, 77 Cal. 445, 19 Pac. 830), that the prosecuting attorney was engaged in the public service as a member of the assembly (Kibler v. Com., 94 Va. 804, 26 S. E. 858), that the term failed and no court was had because the judge was too sick to hold court (State v. Huting, 21 Mo. 464), or that the commonwealth could not procure witnesses in time, where due diligence is shown on its part (Com. v. Brummer, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 607) may excuse the delay of the prosecution; but the fact that the county attorney and sheriff had heard and believed that defendant had left the state (State v. Radoicich, 66 Minn. 294, 69 N. W. 25), or that witnesses could not be found, where no diligence is shown in searching for them (People v. Buckley, 116 Cal. 146, 47 Pac. 1009), does not show good cause for delay.

Where the trial court, because of bad weather, backwardness of crops, and a belief that public interests would be promoted by so doing, adjourned the term sine die, when a prisoner was in jail, over the objection of his counsel, the court on habeas corpus, without venturing to determine whether these were sufficient reasons to warrant the action taken, intimated that the trial judge assumed a very grave responsibility and one that should never be assumed save under such extraordinary circumstances as pestilence or public necessity which rendered it proper to subordinate private rights to the public welfare. Ex p. Caples, 58 Miss. 358.

Where a statute enumerates certain excuses for omitting to try a prisoner, it will not be presumed to intend to exclude others of the same nature not enumerated, for by fair implication they may be comprised within the spirit of the statute. Com. v. Adcock, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 661.

Appeal by state.— An appeal by the state from the granting of a new trial, pending which two terms elapse without a trial, does not constitute inexcusable delay on the part of the state, or deny the defendant his right

(II) Disagreement of Jury. A trial resulting in a disagreement of the jury does not constitute a failure to prosecute or entitle the accused to his discharge under the statute.[20]

(III) Impossibility of Procuring Jury. The fact that the panel was exhausted before the jury was obtained at a regular term may be shown by the state as an excuse for a failure to bring on a trial within the time prescribed.[21]

(IV) Failure of Term. If there is no term by reason of circumstances over which the prosecution has no control it is excused for the delay.[22]

h. Computation of the Terms. The term at which the accused is indicted is not counted, where the statute provides that he must be brought to trial within a specified number of terms, or before the expiration of the second, third, or some following term.[23] Delay for a certain number of terms of the court after he is held means regular and entire terms of the court and not parts or fractions of terms.[24]

i. Failure to Indict.[25] In the absence of a statute establishing a different rule, where no indictment or information is filed against a defendant held for a crime, during the term at which he was held to answer, and the grand jury is in session

Mass. Gen. St. c. 171, § 30, giving the prisoner the right to be tried at the next term of the court after six months have expired from the time when he was imprisoned, does not give him the absolute right to have an acquittal or conviction or to be discharged; but if he is tried before that term and the jury disagree his demand for another trial is addressed to the discretion of the court. In re Glover, 109 Mass. 340.

21. Ex p. Stanley, 4 Nev. 113. Failure to call a jury.— It is not a sufficient excuse for the state that no jury was called at a regular term of the court, unless the state shall also show a good reason for not calling the jury. State v. Brodie, 7 Wash. 442, 35 Pac. 137.

B. Time For Preparation of Defense — 1. Reasonable Time Allowed. The accused is entitled absolutely to a reasonable time to prepare his defense.[29] Some statutes specify that he shall have a certain number of days after plea to prepare for trial.[30]

2. Time Allowed Counsel. In the absence of statute the time allowed counsel to prepare for trial is in the sound discretion of the court.[31]

3. Trial at Term at Which Accused Is Arrested. The case of the accused may be set for trial at the same term of court during which he was arrested if he is given sufficient time to employ counsel and prepare for trial.[32] So a trial

30. In Iowa the statute gives the accused three days to prepare for trial if demanded. This right is waived by a motion for a continuance (State v. Harris, 100 Iowa 188, 69 N. W. 413), by an insistence on an earlier trial (State v. King, 97 Iowa 440, 66 N. A provision that the accused shall not be tried until the expiration of five days "after his arrest," means the arrest which consists in being taken into custody before the justice, and not a rearrest after the information is filed. State v. Humason, 5 Wash. 499, 32 Pac. 111.

Waiver.— The objection that defendant was not given time to prepare is waived by going to trial without applying for time, or asserting that he was unprepared (People v. Winthrop, 118 Cal. 85, 50 Pac. 390; Fletcher v. State, 37 Tex. The constitutional guarantee that the accused shall have the assistance of counsel is not a barren right but one of inestimable value to him, and he should not be deprived of it by compelling counsel to go to trial unprepared, on the spur of the moment, and without an opportunity of studying the case. If the accused is to have the assistance of counsel, counsel must have adequate time to prepare to render such assistance. State v. Pool, 50 La. Ann. 449, 23 So. 503; State v. Brooks, 39 La. One held by a justice for a felony may be tried at a term of the court then in session (Page v. Com., 27 Gratt. (Va.) 954); or if an information is filed, the warrant issued on an indictment for a felony may be fixed for the same term of the court at which the indictment was found.[33]

4. SECOND TRIAL AT SAME TERM. Where the jury disagrees and are discharged it is not error for the court to proceed to another trial of the accused at the same term with another jury.[34]

XIV. TRIAL.[35]

A. Preliminary Proceedings — 1. CONSOLIDATING OR TRYING INDICTMENTS TOGETHER. Congress has enacted that where several charges against the same person, for the same act, or for connected acts, are contained in two or more indictments they may be consolidated.[36] And there is a similar statute in force in Colorado.[37] It has been said that trying a defendant upon two indictments at once, even with his consent, is irregular, and that such a practice should be condemned.[38] The trial by the same jury of two indictments for conspiracy found at different sessions of the court has been allowed;[39] but where after a trial for a misdemeanor the judge before charging the jury called up another similar case for trial and submitted both at once to the same jury, it was held that the court committed error.[40] There is no impropriety in trying a prisoner at the same time for different offenses charged in the same indictment, if the offenses are of the same grade and subject to the same punishment.[41] A case may be tried on a second indictment when the first was invalid,[42] or dismissed before the trial.[43]

2. NOTICE OF TRIAL. Whether or not the defendant must be served with written notice of the time of trial depends largely upon special statutes and rules of court regulating practice.[44] thereon is returnable forthwith, and the information must be tried at that term unless the case is continued for sufficient cause (In re Jourdan, 54 Kan. 496, 38 Pac. 556; In re Vance, 54 Kan. 495, 38 Pac. 557). It has been held also that where the statute does not require notice, holding such a special term without notice is not error (Collier v. State, 20 Ark. 36), although usually, even in the absence of statute, the prisoner should have notice of his trial to enable him to prepare (Collier v. State, 20 Ark. 36; State v. Townsend, 44 La. 3. DOCKETING CASE. The clerk's failure to docket the case, where defendant is out on bail, is the omission to perform a ministerial duty only and does not operate as a discontinuance.[45]

4. FURNISHING BILL OF PARTICULARS. If a valid indictment omits details necessary for defendant to know the judge has a discretion,[46] which is, except for gross abuse, not reviewable,[47] to direct, upon application, that the prosecution shall furnish a bill of particulars.[48]

5. FURNISHING LIST OF GRAND JURORS. In the absence of statute a defendant has no right to a list of the grand jurors by whom he was indicted.[49]

6. SEPARATE TRIAL OF JOINT DEFENDANTS — a. In General. In the absence of a statute conferring on one jointly indicted the right to a separate trial, it is in the discretion of the court to grant separate trials to defendants jointly indicted. They are not entitled to this of right, and separate trials will be granted only when the court in its opinion sees good cause therefor.[50]

b. Statutory Provisions. A statute giving a right to a severance is imperative. The court must grant the severance without condition or limitation, and a refusal to do so is reversible error.[51]

c. Who May Ask For. At common law the prosecution had the right of election, subject to the control and discretion of the court, whether to arraign and try prisoners jointly indicted separately or jointly.[52] Ordinarily the application for the severance comes from the defendant and he must show good cause therefor, unless the statute gives him the right to a severance absolutely.[53]

d. Causes For Which Permitted — (I) Antagonistic Defenses. Where the defenses of two or more jointly indicted are antagonistic, the court does not err in directing a separate trial for each.[54]

(II) To Admit Evidence — (A) Of Husband or Wife. If the evidence of the husband or wife is indispensable,[55] separate trials will usually be granted, and the evidence of the husband or wife of any defendant may be received against a co-defendant separately. (B) Of Defendant. Where one defendant desires the testimony of another jointly indicted, it is proper to grant separate trials, and on the acquittal of such person he may testify for the other.[57] If it appears to the court that

Not entitled to joint trial.— A statute which expressly or by implication entitles defendant to elect to be tried separately does not unless expressly so stated entitle him to demand to be tried jointly, and the action of the court in ordering his separate trial on the application of the prosecution is not reversible error. Origin of trying separately.—The practice of trying separately persons jointly indicted, on the application of the prosecution, grew out of the great inconvenience which resulted from the exercise by each joint defendant of the several right to challenge jurors peremptorily, each being entitled to the same number of challenges that he had on a separate trial. The venire and tales were frequently exhausted and trials were prevented from the deficiencies of juries at the same assizes. Accordingly, when the several defendants would not agree to join in their peremptory challenges, the court would, on the application of the crown, sever the trial. there is no evidence against the party whose testimony is desired, the severance ought to be granted; but if it appears to the court that there is evidence, although it may be insufficient for a conviction, the court does not err in refusing a severance.[58]

(c) Confessions. If one of several defendants jointly indicted confesses, and his confession involves another defendant, it is highly proper to order a separate trial, so that the confession, while evidence against the one confessing, may not prejudice the jury against the other.[59]

(III) Adultery. One of two defendants jointly indicted for adultery may be separately tried and convicted, although the other has been acquitted.[60]

(IV) Escape of Defendant. An escape of one of several persons jointly indicted before his trial creates a severance, and the court may proceed to try the others.[61]

The rule in Texas is that where several persons jointly indicted are put on their trial together, and there is little or no evidence against one of them, who is willing to be tried on the evidence of the prosecution, the jury should be instructed to pass on his case at once before the other defendants have opened their defense, so that if he be acquitted they may have his testimony, and it is error to refuse so to instruct. If it be a simple case and the insanity plainly apparent he may determine the issue himself upon his inspection of the defendant and upon such evidence as he may take; or it seems he may direct the question of insanity to be tried under the general plea of not guilty. This is the procedure when the question to be determined is the present insanity of the accused.[78]

8. SERVICE OF COPY OF INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION — a. Necessity of Service. At common law the defendant was not entitled to be served with a copy of the indictment;[91] but now by statutory or constitutional provision in England[92] and in the United States[93] the accused is entitled to have a copy of the indictment or information served upon him. A failure to serve a copy, or the service of an imperfect copy, if timely objection is made, entitles the accused to a postponement.[94] The denial of his statutory or constitutional right to a copy is reversible error.[95]

b. Demand For Service. A demand for a copy of the indictment by the prisoner or by his counsel is indispensable,[96] even though a constitutional provision secures to the defendant the right to have a copy.[97]

c. Time of Service. The statutes usually provide that the copy shall be served one[98] or two[99] entire days before the trial. Where the [illegible] silent service of the copy when the case is called is not ground for a continuance, unless request of the court ought to give the accused a reasonable time to examine it.[1]

93. The various bills of rights in the state constitutions enact in substance, but in varying language, that the accused shall be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and shall have a copy of the indictment. This constitutional right has often been affirmed and defined by statute.

d. On Whom Served. Where a statute provides that the copy may be served on the defendant or his counsel,[2] service on the defendant alone is sufficient.[3]

e. Sufficiency of Copy. A true copy must be served, but clerical errors will be disregarded if they do not prejudice the accused.[4] A clerk's certification includes the body and the indorsement,[5] and is sufficient, although not signed, where the copy appears to be accurate.[6]

f. Service of Amended Indictment. If an indictment is amended by the insertion of matter which substantially changes the crime charged,[7] or which includes another person in the charge,[8] the accused is entitled to a copy of the amended indictment, with time to prepare for trial. On the other hand, where matter is stricken out diminishing the aggravating circumstances alleged no copy need be served.[9]

g. Objections For Failure to Serve. The objection that the copy is not served before going to trial.[10] So the accused, although an incorrect copy, may waive his right to a copy of the indictment;[12] and this he does by pleading and going to trial without demanding service or objecting to an incorrect copy.[13]

9. Indorsement of Witness on Indictment or Information[14]— a. Statutory Requirements. In many of the states the statutes require that the foreman of the grand jury or the prosecuting attorney shall indorse upon the back of each indictment the names of the witnesses upon whose testimony it was found.[15]

b. Time of Indorsement. The names of the witnesses should be indorsed on the indictment as early as possible. If the statutory requirement is construed to be directory, not mandatory, the court may permit the names of witnesses to be indorsed after the indictment is filed and before the day of trial,[16] and even after the trial has begun and the jury is in the box.[17]

c. Sufficiency of Indorsement. A statute requiring the names of witnesses to be indorsed on the indictment is properly complied with if they are written anywhere on the paper so plainly and conspicuously as to be readily seen.[18] The misspelling of a name,[19] the insertion of a wrong initial,[20] a mistake in the name,[21] or an error in stating the occupation of the witness[22] does not render a witness incompetent unless the accused can show he has been misled.

d. Adding Names of Newly Discovered Witnesses. The names of witnesses cannot, against objection, be added to the indictment or information by the state without a showing that they were not known earlier, and in time to give the accused notice in season to anticipate their presence before the trial.[23] But it is not error[24] to permit the prosecution prior to trial to indorse names on the indictment on motion and notice to the accused,[25] where he knows who they are and what they will testify to;[26] and under such circumstances another copy of the indictment with the added names indorsed need not be served.[27]

e. Competency of Witnesses Not Indorsed. The prosecution is not confined to the list of witnesses examined before the grand jury, and whose names, it is usually provided by statute, must be indorsed on the indictment.[28] The prosecution is not compelled to prove its case by the witnesses examined before the grand jury, but may examine any competent witness having knowledge of the facts.[29] The matter rests in judicial discretion, and this discretion will be reviewed only for the purpose of ascertaining if the defendant was in fact surprised.[30] Likewise it is within the discretion of the court to permit the prosecution to call and examine in rebuttal witnesses whose names are not on the indictment.[31]

Postponement on adding names.— The accused cannot complain because the court permits the prosecution to indorse additional witnesses at the trial, if he is granted sufficient time to inquire as to their character and credibility before they testify, and to prepare to meet their testimony. State v. Sorter, 52 Kan. 531, 34 Pac. 1036; Johnson v. State, 34 Nebr. 257, 51 N. W. 835. On general principles of justice and fair dealing it would seem reversible error to refuse time for such purpose if the accused can show he is surprised. State v. Jones, 2 Kan. App. 1, 42 Pac. 392; State v. Kelly, 14 Wash. 702, 45 Pac. 38; State v. Bokien, 14 Wash. 403, 44 Pac. 889. But in Rauschkolb v. State, 46 Nebr. 658, 65 N. W. 776, a postponement is said to be in the discretion of the court. And see Askew v. People, 23 Colo. 446, 48 Pac. 524; State v. McDonald, 57 Kan. 537, 46 Pac. 966.

27. State v. Nordstrom, 7 Wash. 506, 35 Pac. 382.

28. The object of these statutes is to give notice to the accused to enable him to meet the charges and to prevent surprise. As a matter of necessity, in order not to impede the course of justice, the court may in its discretion permit other witnesses to be examined, particularly where the defendant cannot affirmatively show surprise.

f. Objections For Failure to Indorse. A motion to quash or set aside an indictment for failure to indorse the names of witnesses thereon is proper and will be sustained if the statute be mandatory.[32] A motion to require the names to be indorsed thereon is proper where there is a failure in this respect.[33] That the names of witnesses are not indorsed is not ground for a new trial when no objection is made at the time of the trial.[34]

g. Effect of Omitting to Indorse.[35] A failure to indorse the names on the indictment, where the statute is not mandatory, is not a ground for abatement,[36] nor will a conviction be reversed therefor.[37]

right, however, is often conferred by statutes,[39] the provisions of which may be either mandatory[40] or merely directory.[41] The statutory list of witnesses should be served personally on the accused.[42] The objection to a witness that his name was not furnished to defendant must be taken before he is examined.[43]

(II) Errors in List. Clerical errors, misspelling, and the omission of initials will be disregarded to the same extent that they are in the case of the list indorsed on the indictment.[44]

(III) Competency of Witnesses Not on List. Where the statute requiring a list of witnesses to be served on defendant is mandatory in its terms, a witness whose name is not on the list cannot testify.[45]

b. Disclosing Residence of Witness. The accused cannot require the state to inform him as to the residences of witnesses whose names appear on the indictment.[46]

c. Limitation of Testimony of Witness. Where it is required by statute that the state before calling a witness who was not examined before the grand jury or whose name is not indorsed on the indictment, should serve a notice upon defendant, stating the substance of what is intended to be proved by such witness, the state is not strictly limited in its examination of the witness to the matters stated in the notice.[47]

d. Name of Private Prosecutor on Indictment. It is not necessary that the name of the prosecutor or informer be indorsed upon the indictment,[48] or information,[49] unless it is required by statute.[50]

e. Competency of Witnesses Not Examined Before Grand Jury. In the absence of statute it is not a valid objection to the competency of a witness for the prosecution that he was not examined before the grand jury.[51]

f. Furnishing Accused With Evidence — (i) Attaching Minutes of Testimony to Indictment. Under a statute requiring the minutes of the evidence taken before the grand jury to be filed with the indictment, it is not necessary, in order that the witness may testify, that the minutes shall be attached to the indictment if they are sufficiently identified.[52]

(ii) Inspection of Grand Jury Minutes. Leave to examine the minutes of the grand jury is not a matter of right, but whether defendant should be permitted to do so is in the discretion of the court.[53]

(iii) Evidence Taken at Preliminary Examination. In the absence of statute defendant is not entitled as of right to have a copy of the evidence taken at the preliminary examination,[54] although he may claim a continuance if the prosecuting attorney delays to file it when required to do so by statute.[55]

(iv) Co-Defendant's Confession. Where one defendant has made a confession implicating another, the district attorney is under no obligation to furnish the other defendant with a copy thereof.[56]

(v) Sufficiency of Statement of Matter to Be Proved by Witness. Under a statute providing that the prosecution shall give the accused notice of what it expects to prove by the witness whose name is not indorsed on the indictment, it seems that the mere brevity of the statement[57] or errors in it[58] will not exclude the witness.

Such a statute does not apply where the indictment is found by the grand jury on the minutes taken before the committing magistrate (State v. Rodman, 62 Iowa 456, 17 N. 11. Service of List of Jurors — a. In General. In England the accused is entitled to a copy of the jury panel in cases of treason ;[59] and statutes in some of the states confer upon an accused in certain cases the right to demand a list of the panel.[60] Where the statute is construed to be mandatory, a failure to serve a list of the jurors is good ground for setting aside the venire,[61] or if objection is promptly made and overruled, it constitutes reversible error.[62] An objection that the jury list is not served or that the list served is incomplete should be made before trial,[63] and where one declares that he is ready for trial and his trial is had the objection is waived.[64]

b. Demand For Service. Under some of the statutes it is not necessary to furnish the accused a list of the jurors unless it is demanded by him.[65]

c. Time of Service. The statutes usually[66] designate the period which must intervene between the service of the list and the trial.[67]

d. Sufficiency of List. The list should contain the names of the jurors drawn and summoned to serve at the time the accused is brought to trial.[68] A misnomer in the jury list, an immaterial variance between it and the names drawn from the box,[69] or a clerical error in it[70] is not ground for challenge. Most of the statutes provide expressly for a list of jurors to include not merely those drawn, but those both drawn and summoned to attend;[71] and it has been held that including in the list the names of jurors not summoned is sufficient ground for quashing the venire.[72]

e. Mode of Service. Unless a statute requires personal service on the accused,[73] service either on him or his counsel will suffice.[74]

f. Special Jurors and Talesmen. Lists of special jurors provided for by statute are usually required to be served on the accused,[75] but the state is not, however, under any necessity of furnishing the accused with a list of the names of persons summoned as talesmen.[76]

12. Dockets and Calendars. The statutes in many of the states provide that criminal cases shall have the preference in their positions on the calendar over civil trials.[77] After a case is dismissed against one of two defendants, the trial of the other is not irregular because the title of the case continues to include the former defendant.[78]

B. Course and Conduct of Trial — 1. Regulations in General — a. Right to Fair and Impartial Trial. In the several states bills of rights and constitutional provisions usually confer upon the accused the absolute right to a fair and impartial trial.[79]

See 14 Cent. Dig. tit. "Criminal Law," § 1442.

70. Beard v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 173, 53 S. W. 348.

Amendment.— The making of the list is clerical, and its service executive or ministerial. Errors occurring while the proceedings are under the control of the court may be corrected by amendment, if the accused is not prejudiced thereby. Kenan v. State, 73 Ala. 15. See Bailey v. State, 134 Ala. 59, 32 So. 673, for the duties of the clerk in preparing the list of jurors.

71. Smith v. State, 133 Ala. 73, 31 So. 942; Collins v. State, 31 Fla. 574, 12 So. 906; Murray v. State, (Tex. App. 1886) 3 S. W. 104.

72. Smith v. State, 133 Ala. 73, 31 So. 942. But see State v. Kane, 32 La. Ann. 999. And compare State v. Alverez, 7 La. Ann. 283; State v. Howell, 3 La. Ann. 50, holding that it is error to serve the prisoner with a long list of persons, the majority of whom have been either previously excused or exempt by law, or have never been summoned, for this necessarily tends to embarrass him in preparing his challenges.

73. Jones v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 617, 28 S. W. 464.

74. Henderson v. State, 98 Ala. 35, 13 So. 146; Johnson v. State, 94 Ala. 35, 10 So. 667; Aaron v. State, 39 Ala. 75.

The return of the sheriff that he has served the prisoner is conclusive of the fact. Woodsides v. State, 2 How. (Miss.) 655.

The silence of the statutes as to the person by whom service of the list of witnesses and jurors must be made leaves it open to be made either by the sheriff, public prosecutor, or a private person. There can be no objection to its being served by the sheriff. State v. Washington, 37 La. Ann. 828.

75. Brown v. State, 128 Ala. 12, 29 So. 200; State v. Pollet, 45 La. Ann. 1168, 14 So. 179; Murray v. State, 21 Tex. App. 466, 1 S. W. 522.

See 14 Cent. Dig. tit. "Criminal Law," § 1443.

In New Jersey the rule is otherwise, and the accused must be furnished with a list of the talesmen two entire days before trial. Patterson v. State, 48 N. J. L. 381, 4 Atl. 449; State v. Aaron, 4 N. J. L. 231, 7 Am. Dec. 592.

The rule of the text relates to talesmen summoned from among the bystanders, and not to special jurors regularly drawn, although the statute under which the drawing is made refers to them as talesmen. State v. Stewart, 34 La. Ann. 1037.

77. In order to secure the preference it should be asked for on the first day of the term. Turnbull v. Com., 1 Binn. (Pa.) 45; Com. v. Pascalis, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 37.

In Texas the statute provides that all suits shall be called for trial in the order in which they stand on the docket, unless otherwise ordered. This applies to criminal cases. Johnson v. State, 12 Tex. App. 414.

78. State v. Dillingham, 43 Ark. 154.

79. See the constitutions of the several states.

The presiding judge must so control and conduct the proceedings that this right shall be secured, and his failure so to do is reversible error. Collier v. State, 115 Ga. 803, 42 S. E. 226; State v. Wilcox, 131 N. C. 707, 42 S. E. 536.

b. Readiness For Trial. The court may, before asking the state, ask defendant if he is ready for trial,[80] unless the state's application for a continuance is pending, in which case it should first be disposed of.[81]

c. Publicity of Proceedings. Again a public trial as well as an impartial one is also usually guaranteed under constitutional provisions.[82] However, the exclusion of a portion of the public from the court-room under certain circumstances[83] is not a violation of the constitutional rights of the accused.

d. Presence and Control of Witnesses. The court may exercise supervision and control over the witnesses while in attendance under a subpœna.[84]

e. Appointment and Services of Interpreter. Where the matter is not regulated by statute, the employment of an interpreter, where a witness is unable to speak or understand English,[85] and the manner in which the examination through the interpreter shall be conducted,[86] are discretionary with the court. Every non-official interpreter should be sworn to interpret truly.[87] The accuracy

81. State v. Emerson, 90 Mo. 236, 2 S. W. 274.

82. This right has its basis in the ancient usages and principles of the common law. While it is of paramount importance that it shall be secured in its fullest enjoyment to the accused, the publicity of the proceedings should be subordinated to the orderly and proper way in which they are to be conducted. U. S. v. Buck, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,680.

83. Thus if the court finds that there are a number of persons present who endanger the secure administration of justice or create disorder (People v. Kerrigan, 73 Cal. 222, 14 Pac. 849; People v. Sprague, 53 Cal. 491; Stone v. People, 3 Ill. 326; Com. v. Van Horn, 4 Lack. Leg. N. (Pa.) 63; Grimmett v. State, 22 Tex. App. 36, 2 S. W. 631, 58 Am. St. Rep. 630; U. S. v. Buck, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,680) it may exclude them; and the same action may be taken when, because of the notoriety of the trial, the court-room is crowded to such an extent as to interfere with the orderly administration of justice (Benedict v. People, 23 Colo. 126, 46 Pac. 637; Myers v. State, 97 Ga. 76, 25 S. E. 252; Jackson v. Com., 100 Ky. 239, 38 S. W. 422, 1091, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 795, 66 Am. St. Rep. 336; State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542, 5 S. W. 257, 330; Kugadt v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 681, 44 S. W. 989). In People v. Murray, 89 Mich. 276, 50 N. W. 995, 28 Am. St. Rep. 294, 14 L. R. A. 809, where in a trial lasting for two weeks the court directed that an officer should stand at the door and see that the room was not overcrowded, but that all respectable citizens should be admitted, it was held to be error; but this case is distinguished from State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542, 5 S. W. 257, 330, where the exclusion only continued one day, and the court announced that any who wished to come into the court-room might do so until the seats were filled, and from People v. Kerrigan, 73 Cal. 222, 14 Pac. 849, where the court ordered that the lobby outside the court-room should be cleared of spectators, as their presence irritated and excited defendant, who claimed to be insane.

Where the evidence is of a peculiarly indecent and vulgar character, the court may, in the interest of public morality and decency, exclude from the court-room all persons except the jurors, witnesses, and others connected with the case. People v. Hall, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 57, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 433, 15 N. Y. Cr. 29. Contra, People v. Yeager, 113 Mich. 228, 71 N. W. 491, holding that a statute giving the court the right to exclude from the court-room all persons except those necessarily in attendance, in cases where the evidence is of a licentious, immoral, or degrading character, is in conflict with the constitutional right to a public trial.

84. Thus it is not error to permit a dangerous and desperate man, indicted for murder, to be attended while testifying by an armed guard. State v. Duncan, 116 Mo. 288, 22 S. W. 699. So the court may decline to allow counsel for the defense to have a private interview with witnesses for the prosecution who are in custody. Republic v. Kapea, 11 Hawaii 293.

A juror may, with defendant's consent, act as an interpreter. People v. Thiede, 11 Utah 241, 39 Pac. 837 [affirmed in 159 U. S. 510, 16 S. Ct. 62, 40 L. ed. 237].

One of the witnesses may act as an interpreter. Com. v. Kepper, 114 Mass. 278; State v. Kent, 4 N. D. 577, 62 N. W. 631, 27 L. R. A. 686; Brown v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 59 S. W. 1118.

The bias of the witness does not disqualify. State v. Burns, (Iowa 1899) 78 N. W. 681; Brown v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 59 S. W. 1118.

87. People v. Dowdigan, 67 Mich. 95, 38 N. W. 920.

The fact that the interpreter is assisted by bystanders who are unsworn, and that he when in doubt uses their knowledge to aid of the interpretation is for the jury;[88] and either party may show errors by cross-examining the interpreter or producing another.[89]

f. Appointment and Services of Stenographer. In the absence of statutory requirement[90] it is in the court's discretion to refuse to appoint a stenographer.[91] On the other hand it has been held to be error not to permit defendant to have a private stenographer in court to take down notes of the testimony and other matters in the progress of the trial,[92] although it seems that the court may refuse to permit the delay which would result from defendant taking down the evidence in longhand.[93]

g. Experiments and Tests.[94] It is within the discretion of the court to grant or refuse permission to either party to make an experiment in or out of court, pending the trial, with the purpose of introducing testimony as to its result.[95]

h. Presence of Others Under Indictment. The court may permit or require the presence in the court-room of persons jointly indicted with defendant but to be separately tried.[96]

i. Plea by Co-Defendants. Where several jointly indicted are in court, it is never erroneous to arraign one of them, who is to be separately tried,[97] and permit his own, although finally stating his own version, is not error. U. S. v. Gilbert, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,204, 2 Sumn. 19.

Evidence not hearsay.— The fact that evidence in a criminal trial is received through an interpreter does not render it hearsay. State v. Hamilton, 42 La. Ann. 1204, 8 So. 304.

90. Official stenographers are found in most courts of record, appointed under statutes providing therefor. Whether such stenographer shall attend at the trial or shall remain in the court after the evidence is taken to decide disputes between counsel as to what the evidence was is discretionary. Kearney v. State, 101 Ga. 803, 29 S. E. 127, 65 Am. St. Rep. 344; State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 300, 4 S. W. 931. It is not error to allow experiments to be made by the prosecuting attorney, although it would seem to be the better practice to permit them to be made by others. People v. Crandall, 125 Cal. 129, 57 Pac. 785.

An experiment illustrative of the methods of killing deceased, well calculated to inflame the minds of the jury against the prisoner, should not be permitted. Faulkner v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 311, 65 S. W. 1093.

Age of a person may be determined by a personal inspection by the jurors, and the person may for this purpose be required to stand up facing the jury. Com. v. Emmons, 98 Mass. 6.

A person's identity may be tested by bringing other persons into the court-room and asking the witness to identify the particular person among them. State v. Murphy, 118 Mo. 7, 25 S. W. 95.

Time.— It is error for the judge to take out his watch and show by a comparison thereof with a period measured by a witness that the latter is mistaken. Burke v. People, 148 Ill. 70, 35 N. E. 376.

96. Thus it may allow such person to be in court in order that defendant's counsel may consult him (State v. Weems, 96 Iowa 426, 65 N. him to put in a plea of guilty[98] of the offense with which he is charged in the presence of the jury.

j. Remarks and Applause by Bystanders. The applauding by bystanders of the argument and remarks of the state's attorney, and any systematic exhibition of their dislike to defendant, made in the presence of the jury, should be promptly suppressed by the presiding judge.[99] And the court should pursue the same course where bystanders cause interruptions and make remarks prejudicial to the accused.[1]

k. Suspending Trial. The interruption of the trial by taking under consideration a matter of short duration while the jury are out of court is not erroneous where the accused is not prejudiced or affected except by the slight loss of time.[2]

2. Presence of Judge — a. At All Stages of Trial. It is the duty of the judge to be present during all stages of the trial,[3] and his absence during the examination of a witness,[4] during the argument of counsel,[5] or at the handing in of the verdict[6] is reversible error; but the absence of the judge is not reversible error, where he is still in hearing of the argument or evidence, and where he is in a position to pass upon any question which might arise therein.[7]

b. Absence of One of Several Judges. If a statute requires the presence of

98. State v. Duffy, 124 Mo. 1, 27 S. W. 358.

99. If he fails to perform his duty in this respect a conviction will be reversed; but where he promptly reprimands the disturbers, suspends proceedings, and causes them to be taken into custody, and at the same time directs the jury not to give the disturbance attention but to decide the case according to the evidence, the effect is neutralized and there is no error.

two or more judges at the trial, a conviction is invalid where one or more of them is absent during the trial,[8] or when the verdict is received.[9]

c. Trial by Two Judges. The fact that two or more judges sat and coöperated in the trial,[10] or that the judge who had been assigned to try the case invited another judge to sit with him,[11] is not error.

d. Judge as Witness. Because of his duties it is erroneous for a judge presiding alone to testify as a witness.[12]

3. Presence and Custody of Defendant — a. Presence — (i) In Felony Cases (a) In General. By express statutory provision in many states, and at common law in the absence of a statute, it is essential to a valid trial and conviction on a charge of felony that defendant shall be personally present, not only when he is arraigned, but at every subsequent stage of the trial,[13] unless he may and does waive his right to be present;[14] and the fact that he was present must appear

Substitution of judge.— If by statute the presence of two or more judges is necessary to constitute a valid session of the court, those present when the trial begins should continue to constitute the court until it is terminated. If one therefore after the opening argument of the prosecution leaves the bench and his place is taken by another and the trial is then finished before the court as thus altered it is error. of the day's proceedings.[36] In some cases it is held that defendant must be present when the jury are taken to view the place of the crime, on the ground that this is the taking of evidence and a part of the trial,[37] while others hold that his presence is unnecessary.[38]

(c) Waiver of Right. Some of the courts have held that the right to be present during the trial of an indictment for felony cannot be waived by defendant in a capital case,[39] and some have applied the same rule in the case of any felony whether capital or not, so that a trial or any material step therein, or reception of the verdict, in defendant's absence in such cases is error, although he has escaped or is otherwise voluntarily absent.[40] Most of the courts, however, have held that defendant may waive his right to be present when the felony is not capital, that he does so if, having been released on bail, he absconds or is voluntarily absent after his arraignment and plea, and that in such a case the trial may proceed and the verdict be received notwithstanding his absence.[41]

Discretion of court.— Under some statutes defendant has a right to appear and plead by attorney and to be tried in his absence. People v. Ebner, 23 Cal. 158; Johnson v. Com., 1 Duv. (Ky.) 244. Under others the court has a discretion to refuse a trial in his absence, even when he consents. Owen v. State, 38 Ark. 512 (holding that the court had such discretion under a statute providing that, on indictment for a misdemeanor, trial may be had in the absence of defendant, and that such a trial should be refused where the punishment may be imprisonment); Bridges v. State, 38 Ark. 510; Warren v. State, 19 Ark. 214, 68 Am. Pr. (N. Y.) 468. The general authority of an attorney as counsel in the case is insufficient. People v. Wilkes, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 105.

Withdrawal of counsel.— On a trial for a misdemeanor where the defendant is absent, under a statute allowing trial for a misdemeanor if defendant appear by counsel, the ute defendant may waive his right to be present, so as to render a trial or reception of a verdict in his absence valid, where the misdemeanor is punishable by fine only, and he does so where he appears by counsel or voluntarily absents himself.[44] In some jurisdictions it is so held whether the offense is punishable by fine only or by imprisonment,[45] but in others there are the decisions or dictum to the contrary.[46]

b. Custody and Restraint of Defendant. At common law defendant, although indicted for the highest crime, must be free from all manner of shackles or bonds, whether on his hands or feet, when he is arraigned, unless there is evident danger of escape.[47] In the United States the common-law rule is followed, and shackling defendant during arraignment, during the calling and examination of the jurors, or at any time during the trial, except in extreme cases to prevent escape or to protect the bystanders from the danger of defendant's attack, is reversible error.[48] court may refuse to allow the counsel for defendant to withdraw from the case, and it is error to permit such withdrawal and proceed with the case in the absence of both counsel and defendant. State v. Young, 86 Iowa 406, 53 N. W. 272.

In removing the prisoner from court, on adjournment, he may be shackled. State v. Craft, 164 Mo. 631, 65 S. W. 280.

While awaiting jurors.— And accused may be shackled while he is in the dock, fifty feet from the jury-box, awaiting more jurors.

c. Place of Defendant in Court. By the English practice those charged with treason, whatever their rank, and whether or not on bail, would not be allowed to stand outside the dock.[49] Their attorney might freely communicate with them, but they had no right to sit next to him. Out of favor to one defending himself without counsel, he might be permitted to stand outside the bar.[50] In the United States these rules are modified to a certain extent. If the accused is in custody the proper place for him is at the bar or in the dock; if he is on bail he may sit near his counsel within the bar.[51]

4. Counsel For Prosecution[52] — a. Eligibility. If the prosecuting attorney has a personal interest in obtaining a conviction it may disqualify him.[53] On the other hand the mere prejudice of the prosecuting attorney against defendant, although open to severe criticism by the court, will not disqualify him.[54]

b. Assistance of Attorney-General. The attorney-general is sometimes required by statute, when requested so to do in writing by the governor, to assist in the prosecution of a crime.[55]

c. Employment of Private Assistants — (I) In General. No valid objection can be urged to the prosecuting attorney having the assistance of private counsel,[56] although it may be improper for the prosecuting attorney to surrender the direction and control of the case to a private person.[57]

(II) Who Are Eligible. An attorney who has been engaged by,[58] or who has appeared for, the accused on the preliminary examination,[59] or one who is not a resident of the state,[60] is not eligible. But a conditional employment of an

Counsel were allowed to defendant on an appeal, whether the offense was capital or not. Hawkins states that this distinction was probably made because appeals were generally carried on with greater vindictiveness than indictments, being grounded more on private revenge than on a desire for public justice. Counsel was also always allowed the prisoner to argue on a doubtful question of law, as for example the competency of witnesses or jurors, or where the prisoner pleaded pardon. 2 Hawkins P. C. c. 39, §§ 1–6. See also 1 Chitty Cr. L. 407; 2 Hale P. C. 236; 3 Inst. 29, 137.

In England it is held that where several persons are indicted jointly, and some introduce witnesses while others do not, the crown has a right to close as to those prisoners who called witnesses, but that counsel for the other prisoners who called no witnesses have the right to close as to them. Reg. v. Burns, 16 Cox C. C. 195; Reg. v. Trevelli, 15 Cox C. C. 289. b. Power of Judge to Adjourn During Trial — (i) In General. The court has full power and discretion even in a capital case[2] to adjourn its sessions from day to day while the trial is being had, over the objection of the accused, if the occasion be such that an adjournment is called for.[3]

(ii) To Try Issue of Prejudice of Jurors. After testimony has been introduced defendant cannot have a suspension of the trial to try the issue that some of the jury had, before they were sworn, expressed the opinion that he was guilty.[4]

(iii) To Get Evidence or Witnesses. The court may in its discretion grant a short adjournment to another day in the term to enable one of the parties to procure witnesses.[5]

8. View and Inspection[6] — a. Discretion of Court. Allowing the jury to view the place where the alleged crime was committed, or where some fact or transaction material thereto occurred, being discretionary with the court, where the premises have been thoroughly described in the evidence, it is not error to refuse defendant to have the jury take the view.[7] This rule applies to capital cases;[8] but in any case if the view is likely to mislead the jury it should be denied.[9]

b. Purpose of. The cases are divided upon the question whether the purpose of the view is to furnish new evidence or to enable the jurors to comprehend more clearly, by the aid of visible objects, the evidence already received. The latter proposition is well sustained[10] and seems more consistent with the conservative theories on which the rules of procedure and jury trials are based; but the contrary theory, holding that the purpose of a view is to supply evidence, is supported by good authorities.[11]

c. No Evidence to Be Taken. It is improper to permit a witness to testify as to the location of the objects or as to any other material point in the presence of the jury while taking the view.[12] The same rule applies to a person present with the jury, not sworn as a witness, who explains the locus in quo.[13]

v. Severance, 67 Hun (N. Y.) 182, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 91) or one whose attendance defendant had not compelled because of age and feebleness (George v. State, 11 Tex. App. 95) is error. But the refusal of the court to grant a short adjournment pending the trial to procure the presence of a witness is proper where it appears that defendant has made no efforts in that direction (State v. Valere, 39 La. Ann. 1060, 3 So. 186), and he has not shown that the evidence of the witness would be material (Wells v. State, 131 Ala. 48, 31 So. 572; State v. Osborne, 96 Iowa 281, 65 N. Where defendant has delayed the trial for nearly three years by continuances and dilatory motions, and has had ample time to have his mental condition examined, it is not error to refuse to suspend the trial to enable physicians to examine him as to his sanity. 9. Remarks and Conduct of Judge[14] — a. In General. The judge presiding at a jury trial, in his remarks and conduct of the case, should endeavor to maintain a strict impartiality. It is error for him to express directly or indirectly an opinion which points to the guilt of the accused[15] or to make a statement which tends to discredit the accused with the jury;[16] and generally statements by the judge in the presence of the jury that would constitute error if contained in the instructions are improper.[17]

b. Censuring Disorder. The remarks of the court censuring demonstrations of approval or disapproval or manifestations of ridicule or frivolity by the audience in the court-room are not ground for reversal.[18]

c. Vindicating Rights of Judge. Remarks of the court asserting its rights, its impartiality, and its dignity, and warning the jury of the obligations of their oath are proper and unobjectionable, and, where the rights of the court have been assailed by counsel, commendable.[19]

d. On Selecting the Jury. Remarks made by the court as to the selection of a jury do not constitute error unless it can be shown that the accused was prejudiced thereby.[20]

e. Admonishing and Correcting Counsel — (i) In General. The court may properly caution, correct, admonish, and to a certain extent criticize counsel during the case, provided it is done in such a manner as not to subject counsel to contempt or ridicule, or to prejudice the accused in the minds of the jurors.[21] An admonition to the prosecuting attorney to examine witnesses carefully to avoid

C. 572, 6 S. E. 820), is error, as calculated to discredit the accused in the minds of the jury.

W. 408), stating, before the charge, that it would enforce the rules laid down by the appellate court with reference to exceptions (Tucker v. State, 23 Tex. App. 512, 5 S. W. 180), or stating on a second trial of defendant that he had been acquitted of murder in the first degree (Pharr v. State, 10 Tex. App. 485) is not error.

20. Thus a comment by the court upon the great amount of time occupied by counsel for defendant in examining the veniremen (State v. Veillon, 105 La. 411, 29 So. 883), its observation threatening a prosecution for perjury, where one of them said he would find the accused guilty, although the court should instruct that he was not (State v. Hicks, 61 N. C. 441), or a remark by the court that it was singular that the prosecution had not challenged certain jurors who, the evidence showed, were biased in favor of defendant (Boldt v. State, (Wis. 1888) 35 N. W. 935), is not error.

A warning to the jury that the court had been informed that influences were at work to corrupt some of them, and that therefore it would keep them together until the case was submitted, is proper, and it is in no sense coercion. People v. Goslin, 171 N. Y. 627, 63 N. E. 1120.

exceptions[22] or to the counsel for defendant to treat a witness respectfully[23] is not error; but a remark by the judge conveying to the jury a severe criticism on the methods of defendant's attorney,[24] with a statement that he had been deceived by him,[25] is reversible error.

(II) During Argument. The court has full power to call the attention of counsel to what it believes to be the evidence,[26] to correct counsel for defendant when he incorrectly states the law in his argument[27] or assumes a condition of facts not shown by the evidence,[28] and to restrain and criticize him where he applies abusive and denunciatory language to the state's witnesses.[29]

f. Cautioning and Controlling Witnesses. It is proper for the court to rebuke a witness for levity,[30] to peremptorily check and silence one who is too voluble,[31] to direct one to tell only what he knows of his personal knowledge,[32] to ask a witness if he understands the question which has been put to him,[33] or to warn him not to become excited and to think over what he is going to say.[34]

g. Examining Witness. The trial judge violates no rule of procedure by putting questions to witnesses on their direct or cross-examination,[35] providing Manifestations of impatience by the court at the character or length of the examination of a witness are not only in bad taste, but may constitute error. Patience to hear and determine matters involving the liberties of those charged with crime is a most important requirement of the trial judge. Impatience usually results in a violation of the right of the accused to a fair trial and lengthens rather than shortens the prosecution. A hasty remark, used by the court in overruling an objection to evidence which tends to ridicule both counsel and defendant, while it may not have produced any injurious effect, is so improper as to constitute error. State v. Clements, 15 Oreg. 237, 14 Pac. 410.

h. On Ruling on Admissibility of Evidence. It is proper for the court to state its reason for admitting or excluding evidence,[37] or to state the purpose for which the evidence is offered or admitted.[38] But remarks of the court, on excluding evidence, which contain an intimation that it believes defendant guilty[39] constitute error, as invading the province of the jury. It is no less improper for the trial judge to intimate that the witnesses for the prosecution are credible than to hint that those for the defense are not credible;[40] but a remark discrediting the credibility of a witness for the state is not error.[41]

i. The court has a wide latitude in putting questions which will bring out the truth on points not made clear by the examination of counsel. It is not the province of the trial judge to express an opinion upon the facts either orally, during the trial, or in the form of the innocence of the accused,[44] and it is error for him to make any remark or inquiry in the presence of the jury concerning matters of fact at issue which indicate his opinion as to such facts.[45] It has been held that the error is not corrected by the court telling the jury that it is their exclusive province to determine the facts, and instructing them not to be bound by his opinion.[46]

(11) On the Weight and Sufficiency. It follows that it is error for the judge during the examination of the witnesses or the argument of counsel, on being asked to instruct, or at any other time during the proceedings, to comment on the weight or the sufficiency of the evidence,[47] or to state expressly or by implication his belief as to the guilt of the accused.[48]

(111) On Credibility of Witnesses. The remarks of the judge during the trial, indicating his opinion as to the credibility or lack of credibility of a witness, or of the weight of any evidence he may give, however inadvertent they may be, constitute error.[49]

that the accused has perjured himself at any time is error.[50] And this rule applies to the court's instruction to defendant when he goes on the stand that all he shall say must be true.[51]

j. Remarks on Defective Verdict. If the jury bring in a defective or informal verdict, it is the court's duty so to inform them and point out the proper form. They should then be allowed to make up and return their own verdict. It is error for the court to ask them if they intend to find the accused guilty as charged, and to record the answer given as a verdict.[52]

k. Contempt Proceedings in Presence of Jury. Fining the counsel for defendant for contempt in the presence of the jury is not error, where the court was justified in so doing by his conduct.[53] So a proceeding for contempt against one who is charged with threatening a member of the jury may be heard in their presence.[54] Hearing excuses of witnesses accused of contempt in the presence of the jury is not improper if defendant's counsel consents.[55]

l. Proceedings Against Witnesses For Perjury, Etc. According to some authorities the court may, in the exercise of its discretion, commit to jail, in the presence of the jury, a witness who has in its opinion perjured himself before the jury[56] or at the preliminary examination without committing error;[57] but according to others such judicial action would be error.[58] In any case it is error for the court to order a witness for the prosecution to be committed for perjury before defendant has had the opportunity to cross-examine him.[59]

m. Examining Jurors as to Prejudice. Where a juror was suspected of bias in favor of the accused and an investigation was had, the other jurors not being Criticizing accused as a witness.— The remark of the trial judge to defendant, in the presence of the jury, intimating that he, while on the witness stand, was arguing and making speeches rather than answering, and that he was generally misbehaving himself as a witness, and clearly intimating that his story if true was inconsistent, being greatly prejudicial to defendant, is error (Synon v. People, 188 Ill. 609, 59 N. E. 508); and the same is true where the judge during defendant's examination reads a newspaper and converses pleasantly and familiarly with the state's witness, whose testimony defendant's counsel is trying to impeach (State v. Coella, 3 Wash. 99, 28 Pac. 28).

Consent of defendant to discharge of jury. — Where a jury make an application to be discharged because unable to agree, defendant is not required to say anything. If therefore the judge asks him if he will consent and states in their presence that he would discharge them, but that he could not do so unless defendant would consent, and that defendant refuses to consent, it is reversible error, inasmuch as the jury will certainly attribute their further retention to the refusal of defendant to consent to their discharge. n. Exceptions.[61] A mere general exception[62] to the remarks claimed to be improper is not available unless it appears that no portion thereof was proper.[63]

C. Reception of Evidence[64] — 1. Right of Accused to Confront Witnesses[65] — a. In General. In theory at least the accused had an absolute right at common law to confront the witnesses against him.[66] By the federal constitution[67] and the constitutions of most of the states the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him is secured to the accused.[68] In its strictest sense the word "confront" means to meet face to face;[69] and the right of the accused to be confronted with the witnesses includes the right not only to be present when they testify, but to hear all they say and to see them literally face to face.[70]

b. Documentary and Record Evidence. The constitutional guarantee to persons accused of crime that they shall be confronted with the witnesses against them is not applicable to the proof of facts in their nature essentially and purely documentary, and which can only be proved by the original, or by a copy officially authenticated in some way, especially when the facts to be proved come up col-

This strict definition was adhered to where the court directed that the accused should be removed twenty-four feet from the witness testifying and made to sit with his back toward her so that he could neither see nor hear the witness nor see the jury, on account of the distance and intervening obstacles. The reason for this was that the witness, a very young child, stated that she was afraid to speak because she feared defendant, her father. State v. Mannion, 19 Utah 505, 57 Pac. 542, 75 Am. St. Rep. 753, 45 L. R. A. 638.

The admission of a statement as to what an absent witness would testify infringes the accused's constitutional right. Wills v. State, 73 Ala. 362; People v. Diaz, 6 Cal. 248; Dominges v. State, 7 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 475, 45 Am. Dec. 315.

There are several cases which, without expressly deciding the question, hold by implication that a confrontation face to face may be dispensed with, provided the accused has the opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses. The primary object of the constitutional provision is unquestionably to exclude depositions and to secure the personal presence of the witnesses, and if they are personally present and are examined in the presence of the accused and the jury, with an opportunity for cross-examination, it does not seem error for the court to direct the accused to occupy a place where his situation would not intimidate the witnesses and prevent the giving of testimony. See State v. Mannion, 19 Utah 505, 57 Pac. 542, 75 Am. St. Rep. 753, 45 L. R. A. 638 (dissenting opinion of Bartch, C. J.); Summons v. State, 5 Ohio St. 325; Howser v. Com., 51 Pa. St.

laterally.[71] Thus transcripts of a marriage record,[72] and of the account-books and other records of public officials,[73] and a notarial certificate of protest[74] have been received.

c. Use of Depositions.[75] Unless the accused stipulates to waive his constitutional right to confront the witness,[76] or unless he has had a prior opportunity to confront and cross-examine him,[77] it is not permissible for the prosecution to introduce depositions of an absent or deceased witness against him on his trial.[78]

d. Evidence Taken at Preliminary Examination.[79] The general rule seems to be that where the testimony of a witness against the accused has been taken down in writing by a magistrate or official reporter at a preliminary examination in the presence of the accused, who had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, such testimony is admissible where it is shown that the witness cannot be found after diligent inquiry, or is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, but that otherwise such testimony is inadmissible.[80]

e. Death of Witness. So too where a witness has died after he has testified, either at the preliminary examination or on a prior trial of the accused, his evidence, if given in the presence of the accused, may be read against him on his trial or other proceedings.[81] The statement of a deceased witness may be proved by a person who heard it at the preliminary examination or former trial and who is able to give the substance of it,[82] and it has been held that this is the only permissible method of proof.[83]

f. Absence of Witness Procured by Accused.[84] Admitting evidence of the testimony which a witness gave on a former trial of the accused is not a violation of his constitutional rights to confront the witnesses, where it is proved that they are absent by his procurement.[85]

g. Testimony Through Interpreter. The accused is not denied his right of confronting the witnesses against him, because the testimony of one of them unable to speak English is received through an interpreter,[86] or because, where a witness was unable to speak on account of violence done her by defendant, her answers were taken by a nod or shake of the head, or in writing.[87]

h. Reading Testimony in Absence of Accused. Where the accused has been confronted with a witness who has had his testimony taken down, his constitutional rights are not violated by permitting such testimony to be read to the jury while he is absent from the court-room.[88]

i. Flight of Accused. Defendant loses his right to confront the witnesses by fleeing from the jurisdiction during a trial for felony, or before trial in case of a misdemeanor.[89]

j. Waiver of Right. The defendant in a criminal prosecution may waive the benefit of the constitutional privilege of being confronted with the witnesses against him.[90]

it;[95] and so if asked to exclude all of the witnesses it is within his discretion to send out only a portion of them.[96] This rule has been applied to the following witnesses: Attorneys,[97] court officers,[98] experts,[99] and relatives of the accused.[1]

c. Consultation of Witnesses With Counsel. The fact that witnesses for the accused[2] or for the prosecution[3] have been placed under the rule does not deprive the counsel for the party calling them of his right to consult with them in a proper manner.

prosecution to produce as witnesses all who saw the crime committed.[9] Under the later and present practice the choice, introduction, and examination of the state's witnesses usually rests in the discretion of the prosecuting attorney.[10]

b. Names of Witnesses on Indictment — (i) AMERICAN RULE. His discretion, however, is not arbitrary, but is always subject to judicial discretion.[11] The prosecution is under no obligation to introduce as witnesses all persons whose names are indorsed on the indictment as having testified before the grand jury,[12] although they are present in court as witnesses summoned for the prosecution.[13] The accused has no right to demand that this shall be done,[14] and evidence that several persons who testified before the grand jury did not testify at the trial is not competent.[15]

(ii) ENGLISH RULE. While it is now the rule in England that the prosecutor is not bound to introduce as witnesses all persons whose names are on the bill,[16] yet these witnesses should be in court because the accused, seeing their names on the indictment, might have neglected to subpœna some of them.[17]

c. Eye-Witnesses. While the general rule is that the prosecution is not obliged to produce or call as witnesses at the trial all persons who saw the crime

9. The reason of this rule was that the prisoner was not permitted to call witnesses, although present, and the issue of his guilt or innocence was determined upon the evidence offered in support of the prosecution. Subsequently, when he was permitted to have witnesses, they did not obtain any particular degree of credit by reason of the fact that they were not sworn and the practice continued, but when later the prisoner's witnesses were permitted to testify on oath and he was at liberty to call in his own behalf all the eye-witnesses of the crime, the reason for the ancient rule ceased. 1 Chitty Cr. committed,[18] it has been decided that the refusal of defendant's request that the state should be compelled to call eye-witnesses of the crime, where he had been convicted wholly on circumstantial evidence and the eye-witnesses were in court, was error.[19]

d. Accomplices. Even where the practice is to require the prosecution to produce all the witnesses, the state cannot be required to call the accomplice of defendant as a witness.[20]

e. Unfavorable Witnesses. The general rule seems to be that the prosecution is not compelled to call and vouch for a witness, even though it be evident that he knows all about the facts, when the prosecuting officer, acting in good faith

Homicide.— In America the rule of the text has been applied to cases of homicide (Trotter v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 468, 36 S. W. 278; Kidwell v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 264, 33 S. W. 896); but a different rule is recognized in England in such cases, where every witness present at the killing must be called (Reg. v. Holden, 8 C. & P. 606; 34 E. C. L. 917).

In Michigan the rule seems to be that the prosecution cannot properly claim a conviction upon evidence which expressly or by implication shows but a part of the res gestæ or whole transaction, if it appears that the rest of the evidence of the transaction is attainable and that all the witnesses present at the transaction should be called for the prosecution, unless it appears that the testimony of those not called would be merely cumulative. Effect of failure to call.— It has been held that the failing to call an accomplice who was in court and who knew the facts entitled and under his official oath, is of the opinion that he will by false swearing or by the concealment of material facts attempt to establish the innocence of defendant.[21]

f. Permitting Consultations Between Counsel and Witnesses. The general rule gives counsel full opportunity to consult with witnesses prior to producing them on the stand.[22]

g. Compelling Witness to Ascertain Facts. It is not error to refuse to direct a witness to ascertain a certain fact during a recess, in order to answer correctly subsequently.[23] On the other hand, it has been held proper to permit a witness for the state to retire from the court so that he could examine papers for the purpose of identifying them and explaining their contents.[24]

h. Calling Witnesses by Defense. If the prosecution fails to call a witness which the defense thinks material, defendant may do so, where he is in court on a subpœna, or may ask for an adjournment in order to procure his attendance.[25]

i. Extent of Examination. The extent to which the prosecuting attorney shall question any witness is in his discretion.[26]

4. Statement by Accused — a. Right to Make. In England in prosecutions for treason,[27] although the prisoner is defended by counsel, he will be permitted to make a statement to the jury in addition to what his counsel says.[28] In the United States, independently of statute, the accused, when represented by counsel, has no right save in capital crimes to make a statement of facts to the jury unless the accused to every inference that might be drawn from this suppression of evidence. People v. Gordon, 40 Mich. 716.

21. State v. Barrett, 33 Oreg. 194, 54 Pac. 807; Ross v. State, 8 Wyo. 351, 57 Pac. 924.

Defendant as a witness.— The prosecution is not bound to use defendant as a witness to prove a fact peculiarly within his knowledge, although he may offer himself as a witness for the purpose. The statute making him a competent witness, at his own request, was intended to give him the privilege of testifying for himself and not to impose him upon the prosecution. Com. v. Pratt, 137 Mass. 98.

In Michigan, however, where the practice is to require the prosecution to produce all eye-witnesses, the fact that a witness is unfavorable to the prosecution (Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16) or that his evidence will contradict other witnesses (People v. Etter, 81 Mich. 570, 45 N. W. 1109) does not alter the rule.

22. Hence it is error to refuse counsel for the defendant permission to consult with a co-defendant, separately tried and convicted, whom he calls as a witness. White v. State, 52 Miss. 216.

In Texas it seems to be the practice to permit the defendant's counsel to consult with the witnesses for the prosecution prior to the trial. While allowing this, the court should not compel the state's witness to disclose to the defense what his testimony will be. Cahn v. State, 27 Tex. App. 709, 11 S. 26. Defendant has no right to demand that he shall examine a witness as to the full details of the crime, where the examination ceases with a few general questions. People v. Hughes, 118 Mich. 80, 74 N. W. 309.

27. Some cases hold that in cases not capital one represented by counsel ought not to be allowed to make a statement except under very peculiar circumstances. Reg. v. Rider, 8 C. & P. 539, 34 E. C. L. 880; Reg. v. Malings, 8 C. & P. 242, 34 E. C. L. 712; Reg. v. Beard, 8 C. & P. 142, 34 E. C. L. 655; Reg. v. Manzano, 2 F. & F. 64. 6 Jur. N. S. 406; Reg. v. Burrows, 2 M. & Rob. 124. In Reg. v. Taylor, 1 F. & F. 535, the court, denying the right of the prisoner to make a statement where he has counsel, said that permitting these statements to be made would bring the prisoner's statement before the jury as evidence without the sanction of an oath, and that it would allow the prisoner to exercise the option of speaking himself or having counsel speak for him.

he goes on the witness stand.[29] Sometimes by statute the accused is permitted to make a statement to the jury not under oath.[30]

b. Character of. The statement made by the accused is in the nature of evidence and subject to the same tests as to its credibility.[31]

c. Time and Manner of Making. The cases are not uniform as to the proper time for making the statement.[32] The accused while making his statement is not under examination as a witness and cannot be questioned by his counsel without the permission of the court;[33] nor can the court question him over his objection.[34] The accused has a right to make a statement without being embarrassed by the strict rules of law regulating the admissibility of evidence, but may be restrained by the court from occupying its time with a long, rambling, and irrelevant story.[35] He may state facts, but cannot give to the jury his unsworn statement as to his beliefs and motives.[36]

d. Supplemental Statement. The statute generally gives the accused the right to make one statement only, so that the refusal to permit him to make a supplemental statement is not error.[37]

e. Evidence in Rebuttal of Statement. The prosecution is entitled to give evidence, within the proper limits of rebuttal, to disprove new matter in the statement, which is not in answer to the case of the prosecution.[38]

f. Statement Made at Former Trial. The state may introduce in evidence a statement of the accused made at a former trial.[39]

The provision that the trial must be public does not require that the jury shall remain in the court during discussions upon legal questions, nor is it proper that it should be present while the judge examines a witness to determine his competency. The practice of retiring the jury under such circumstances is highly proper, as it may tend to keep from their consideration evidence absolutely irrelevant. Kraner v. State, 61 Miss. 158.

Requiring the substance of the proposed evidence to be stated is matter of discretion. If the evidence is nicely balanced the court ought, in order to protect defendant from injustice, carefully to inquire into the substance of the evidence, in order that if irrelevant it may be kept from the jury. But where the evidence is sufficiently conclusive of the guilt of the accused, it will be sufficient for the court to determine the competency of the evidence as it comes from the witness. People v. White, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 111.

42. He should state the fact he expects to elicit by the question, with explanations sufficient to show their relevancy. A general statement that he proposes by the evidence to establish his innocence is not sufficient. State v. West, 45 La. Ann. 14, 12 So. 7.

Contradiction.— Where evidence is offered to contradict a witness for the prosecution, it is not error to reject it in case defendant fails to show wherein it does so. People v. Totman, 135 Cal. 133, 67 Pac. 51.

Defendant's right to state facts.— It is error to refuse defendant permission to state the facts he expects to prove by witnesses who are excluded, in order that such statement may be incorporated in the bill of exceptions. Browder v. State, 30 Tex. App. 614, 18 S. W. 197.

evidence which, although admissible for certain purposes, is not admissible for the purpose which counsel states as the ground for offering it.[43]

c. Evidence Partially Inadmissible. Where evidence offered is partly admissible and partly inadmissible, it is not error for the court to sustain an objection to its introduction as a whole, it being the duty of the party offering the evidence to separate it and have the court rule separately as to each fact.[44]

d. Evidence Admissible Only Against One of Several Defendants. Where two defendants are tried together, evidence admissible only against one of them may be received; but the defendant against whom it is not admissible should ask the court to instruct that its effect shall be confined to the other defendant against whom it is admissible.[45]

e. Taking Down Evidence in Writing. In the absence of statute committing the testimony to writing at the trial is discretionary with the court.[46]

f. Repeating or Reading Testimony on Disagreement. The common practice is, where a court stenographer is employed in taking the testimony, to have it read from his notes, where there is a disagreement as to what the witness said.[47] In the absence of any notes of the evidence it is not error to direct the witness to repeat what he said.[48]

g. Handing Documentary Evidence to Jury. To make a record evidence it is not necessary that it should be handed or given to the jury.[49]

43. Roop v. State, 58 N. J. L. 479, 34 Atl. 749.

Where evidence is distinctly offered for one purpose, it is not error for the court in its charge to restrict it to that purpose, although it may have been relevant to others. Cochran v. State, 113 Ga. 736, 39 S. E. 337.

44. Murphy v. State, 108 Ala. 10, 18 So. 557; Davidson v. State, 135 Ind. 254, 34 N. E. 972. But see Com. v. Bezek, 168 Pa. St. 603, 32 Atl. 109, where it was held that this rule, although applicable in civil cases, could not be invoked to sustain a ruling prejudicial to a defendant in a trial for murder.

The fact that the evidence tends to prejudice defendant, against whom it is inadmissible, does not make its admission error, where the jury is properly instructed to disregard it as to him. State v. Fournier, 68 Vt. 262, 35 Atl. 178; State v. Cram, 67 Vt. 650, 32 Atl. 502.

46. State v. Downs, 50 La. Ann. 694, 23 So. 456.

It is not error for the court, where it has no stenographer, to request an attorney to take down the testimony, although not required by law to do so. This is purely in the judicial discretion. Green v. State, 43 Ga. 368. It is very good practice to read over carefully to the witness the testimony thus taken in order to correct errors. Conner v. State, 25 Ga. 515, 71 Am. Dec. 184. Usually the precise words of the witness are not necessary to be taken down. Hatcher v. State, 18 Ga. 460.

Taking down evidence on preliminary inquiry into admissibility.— On the question of the competency of dying declarations, the prosecution examined several witnesses whose evidence defendant's counsel asked to have taken down, as it was a mixed question of law and fact, reviewable by the appellate court. The trial court refused to do this, inasmuch as it was a useless consumption of time, and its action in so doing was held error, as it was necessary that the evidence should be reduced to writing for the purpose of having it annexed to the bill of exceptions. State v. Seiley, 41 La. Ann. 143, 6 So. 571.

47. Vann v. State, 83 Ga. 44, 9 S. E. 945. But see Conner v. State, 25 Ga. 515, 71 Am. Dec. 184, holding that the proper practice in such cases is to recall the witness to repeat what he has said if he be within reach, and if not then to read from the written testimony.

48. State v. Huff, 76 Iowa 200, 40 N. W. 720; State v. Shean, 32 Iowa 88; State v. Boon, 82 N. C. 637; Hayes v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 146, 35 S. W. 983.

In Texas it has been held that a disagreement between counsel regarding the testimony given does not alone justify the recalling of the witness, but that the trial judge may ask the jury if they disagree as to the testimony, and if they do the witness may repeat his testimony. Lister v. State, 3 Tex. App. 17.

49. If it is submitted to the court and received without objection, or over objection, it is unnecessary either to read it to the jury or to hand it to them, unless they require it when they retire to consider their verdict. Binder v. State, 5 Iowa 457.

h. Exclusion of Evidence. Where the evidence is clearly inadmissible the court ought to exclude it in express language,[50] although it is not necessary to rebuke the witness or instruct the jury to give his statement no weight.[51]

i. Withdrawing Evidence. A party must take the consequences of having elicited unfavorable testimony from his witnesses. He has no right to withdraw it, and the refusal of the court to permit a defendant to do so is not error,[52] although some of the same evidence when offered by the prosecution, has on his objection been excluded.[53]

j. Effect of Evidence Admitted to Avoid Continuance. An agreement to permit defendant to read the testimony of an absent witness in order to avoid a continuance does not preclude the state from introducing the absent witness, if accessible before the conclusion of the evidence.[54]

k. Number of Witnesses. At the common law the testimony of one witness if believed was sufficient for conviction, except in case of high treason,[55] where two were required.[56] The number of witnesses that should be heard on behalf of either party is in the reasonable discretion of the court.[57]

l. Election Between Deposition and Oral Evidence. Under a statute providing for evidence by deposition, where by reason of temporary bodily infirmity a witness cannot attend, the trial court has discretion to decide whether in the interests of justice it is better to read the deposition or adjourn the case until the witness recovers.[58]

7. Order of Proof, Rebuttal, and Reopening Case — a. Order of Introducing Testimony — (i) In General. The order in which the evidence is introduced is within the court's discretion.[59]

Where a writing is produced by counsel, placed in the hands of the witnesses in the presence of the jury, and handled and inspected by some of the jurors, it is in evidence, although not formally offered or read to the jury during the trial. It is proper for the court to instruct the jury that they may consider such instrument in evidence. Bevington v. State, 2 Ohio St. 160.

(III) Admission of Irrelevant Evidence on Promise to Connect. Evidence which is not shown to be relevant when offered may in the discretion of the court be admitted or rejected. If admitted the court should exact a promise from counsel to connect it with the accused by evidence subsequently offered, or a consent to have it stricken out if not so connected.[64] Where irrevelant testimony is received against the accused under a promise, or on condition that it will subsequently be made relevant, it is error not to strike it out promptly on a failure to connect.[65]

b. Scope of Direct Examination. Only evidence tending directly to make out the affirmative case of the prosecution should be admitted on the direct examination of its witnesses.[68]

c. Evidence in Rebuttal — (i) Scope of. The state may introduce rebutting evidence to meet any pertinent issue.[69] Evidence in rebuttal need not completely and entirely contradict any portion of the evidence for the defense, if it has a tendency to contradict or disprove it.[70]

(ii) Evidence Which Should Have Been Offered in Chief. According to the weight of authority it is within the discretion of the trial judge to admit in rebuttal facts and circumstances which should have been offered in chief.[71] Some cases have held, however, that nothing which tends directly to prove the Contra.— Judge v. State, 8 Ga. 173; Ming v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1893) 24 S. W. 29.

In Texas a witness previously examined may be recalled after the case is submitted to the jury to restate testimony already given by him, but he cannot testify to any other facts. Lorance v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 453, 36 S. W. 93.

The points which will determine the exercise of the judicial discretion are: (1) Whether the jury requests to hear the witness; (2) whether by hearing him it is likely an agreement will be reached; and introduce new or additional testimony after the evidence has been closed, after the argument has been made, after the judge has given his general charge to the jury, and when he is about to give a special charge requested by accused on a point which the prosecution had omitted to support by evidence, and for the introduction of which it seeks to reopen the case.[84]

(II) Effect of. When the prosecution is permitted to offer new evidence on a material point on reopening the case after defendant has closed, it is error to refuse him permission to call witnesses to rebut it.[85] Again the court has a discretion to limit the examination of a witness, recalled to explain some point in his testimony, to that particular point.[86] In case the jury after retiring return to question a witness it is not error to refuse to permit counsel to question him.[87]

D. Objections to Evidence, Motions to Strike Out, and Exceptions — 1. Objections — a. Right to Object. The defendant has the right to object to incriminating questions,[88] or to questions which, although unanswered, by calling for clearly improper evidence tend to his prejudice;[89] but he cannot complain of

(3) whether the point which he testifies to has been shown. Livingston v. Com., 7 Gratt. (Va.) 658.

The right to cross-examine.— Some of the cases deny both parties the right to question or cross-examine the witness (Virginia v. Zimmerman, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,968, 1 Cranch C. C. 47), where others permit his cross-examination by the accused (Cooper v. State, 79 Ala. 54).

84. State v. Paul, 39 La. Ann. 329, 1 So. 666. But see State v. Murphy, 9 Nev. 394, holding that the court properly allowed the state to call a witness and prove a venue after defendant had moved for his discharge on the ground that there had been no proof of venue.

A motion to strike out evidence because a witness had not been sworn, made by the counsel for the accused during his closing argument, may be denied and the witness recalled and resworn. Thomas v. State, 1 Tex. App. 289. But see Thompson v. State, 37 Tex. 121, holding that the court erred in refusing an instruction to acquit upon the ground that there was no evidence, the only witness in behalf of the state having testified without being sworn, the court having refused the instruction and allowed the witness to be recalled and sworn and to testify again.

In Texas the statute provides that a witness may be recalled at the request of the jury, where they disagree as to any statement previously made by him, but on such recall he cannot testify to any fact other than the particular point of disagreement, and must make his statement as nearly as possible in the language used upon his former examination. Tarver v. State, 43 Tex. 564.

See 14 Cent. Dig. tit. "Criminal Law," § 1630; and infra, XIV, D, 1, b.

The judge cannot always determine the propriety of a question before it is fully stated, but if it is apparent from the general trend of the questions that when stated they will prejudice the accused the trial court should exclude the questions. Under such circumstances sustaining an objection to the answer or refusing to allow the question to be answered is not error, if the questions themselves, whether answered or not, the erroneous admission of evidence in his favor.[90] On the other hand by bringing out on cross-examination evidence which was inadmissible on the examination in chief,[91] or by consenting to the introduction of[92] or by failing to make a motion to strike out incompetent or irrelevant evidence,[93] defendant may be estopped from objecting to the admission of such evidence on the theory that he has waived his right to do so. So a specific objection to evidence upon one ground estops the objecting party from objecting upon any other ground inconsistent with it.[94]

b. Time. An objection to evidence to be available must have been made at the time it was offered.[95]

c. Manner. Where an objection is sustained, the party asking the question must offer to prove what facts he desires to elicit by the question, in order to obtain a review of the court's ruling.[96]

d. Scope and Sufficiency — (i) In General. Generally an objection to evi-

f. Evidence Admissible in Part. A motion to strike out evidence as a whole is properly denied where some of the evidence is competent, although the remainder is incompetent.[18] The motion should specifically point out the evidence to be stricken out.[19]

g. Evidence Elicited by Party. Where the prosecution, examining its own witnesses,[20] or defendant by his questions of his witness,[21] on the direct examination, or in cross-examining the witnesses for the state,[22] brings out irrelevant evidence he cannot move to strike out, provided always that the answer is responsive to the question.[23]

3. Exceptions — a. Manner of Taking. An exception to the exclusion of evidence must disclose the purpose of the evidence in order that the exception may be considered on appeal.[24]

c. Time of Taking. An exception to a ruling of the court on an objection must be promptly made.[27]

d. Taking and Noting. Exceptions and objections to the admission of evidence should be written out in full on the record and sealed immediately.[28]

e. Scope and Sufficiency. Exceptions to a ruling on evidence must set forth the evidence[29] and the nature of the objections made.[30]

f. Evidence Admissible in Part. An exception to evidence as a whole is properly overruled where some of the evidence is admissible, although the balance is not.[31]

4. Failure to Object or Except — a. Waiver.[32] A failure to object or except to incompetent evidence when offered, or to move to strike it out after it has been admitted, constitutes a waiver of the party's right and cures the error, if any.[33] So the admission of parol evidence of the contents of a written instrument without objection constitutes a waiver of the primary evidence of the writing.[34]

dence excluded was incompetent, the fact that the court acted on its own motion is not error.[36]

c. Repetition of Incompetent Evidence. The admission of incompetent evidence over objection is error, although the accused has failed to object to other prior evidence to the same effect.[37] It has also been held, however, that where an instrument is admitted in evidence without objection, it cannot subsequently be objected to when being read to the jury;[38] nor can an oral answer to a question be ruled out when it consists merely of a repetition of a prior answer to a similar question not objected to.[39]

E. Argument and Conduct of Counsel — 1. Argument in General — a. Refusal to Permit. The constitutional right of the accused to be heard by counsel precludes the trial court from refusing to allow his counsel to make an argument on the evidence in his favor,[40] however simple, clear, unimpeached, and conclusive the evidence may seem.[41]

b. Control by Court. The right of the parties to be heard by counsel is subject to the control of the court in the exercise of a sound discretion,[42] which, particularly in cases involving the right or liberty of the accused, must be carefully and cautiously exercised.[43] Thus where a number of counsel are engaged the order in which they may argue is in the discretion of the court.[44] Again the general rule is that the limitation of the time for argument by the counsel for either

But see State v. Tighe, 27 Mont. 327, 71 Pac. 3, holding that it is error for the court to limit in advance the time for argument in a capital case.

The constitutional provision guaranteeing the accused the right to be heard by counsel does not prevent the court from limiting counsel's time in argument. Peagler v. State, 110 Ala. 11, 20 So. 363.

Under a statute giving counsel as long as he sees fit to address the jury, he cannot be limited by the trial court (State v. Miller, 75 N. C. 73), but such a statute is confined in its operation to the summing up and not to arguments on motions or on questions arising during the trial (State v. Jones, 117 N. C. 768, 23 S. E. 247).

Where as a matter of immemorial practice each party has the privilege of being heard by two counsel, a statute providing that counsel shall occupy one hour means that each party may have two hours for the argument. It is immaterial whether this space of time shall be occupied by one counsel or two, and if by two, how it is divided. As matter of practice, it is customary for counsel to divide this into unequal portions between themselves; and to confine one counsel to one hour and to refuse to let him occupy a portion of the hour which had not been used by his associate is error, particularly in a capital case. State v. Nyman, 55 Conn. 17, 10 Atl. 161.

46. c. Permitting Reply. Where the prosecutor defers the statement of his case and of the law on which he relies until his second address to the jury,[47] or where he is permitted to introduce additional testimony after defendant's counsel has closed,[48] the latter should be permitted to reply to the new arguments or evidence offered.

2. Opening Statement — a. For Prosecution. At common law, after the arraignment and the impaneling of the jury, the outline of the indictment and pleadings was usually stated to the jury by the junior counsel, who was then followed by the senior counsel, who stated to them the circumstances expected to be proved.[49] At the present time the prosecuting attorney may generally in opening his case to the jury state fully the facts which he expects to prove.[50] And it is not error for the prosecuting attorney in his opening address to state facts as he expects to prove them, although not followed by proof because the facts themselves are irrelevant, or because he fails to introduce any evidence or introduces incompetent evidence to support them.[51]

defendant, and defendant, who was represented by two counsel, was limited to one hour (Wingo v. State, 62 Miss. 311), where on a trial of an indictment for assault with intent to murder the time was limited to thirty minutes (Hunt v. State, 49 Ga. 255, 15 Am. Rep. 677), and where after a trial lasting five days, during which twenty-four witnesses were heard, and the evidence was circumstantial, the time of counsel was limited to one hour (People v. Green, 99 Cal. 564, 34 Pac. 231) it was held error.

It is an unreasonable restriction for the court to limit counsel to five minutes for summing up in a case where nine witnesses have been examined (White v. People, 90 Ill. 117, 32 Am. Rep. 12), or to seventeen minutes in a case where a large number of witnesses have testified and the evidence is conflicting (McLean v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 521, 24 S. W. 898).

In the United States it has been held that where by statute he "may state to the jury the law and the evidence," it is in his discretion, and his omission to do so is not error. Hendrickson v. Com., 64 S. W. 954, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1191. The same rule was supported where the statute read "shall" (Holsey v. State, 24 Tex. App. 35, 5 S. W. 523), or "must" (U. See 14 Cent. Dig. tit. "Criminal Law," § 1659.

It is not error for the prosecuting attorney in opening to state that on a previous prosecution he had permitted the accused to plead guilty to a lower degree of crime than that for which he had been indicted (People v. Molina, 126 Cal. 505, 59 Pac. 34), to explain, when requested to do so by the court, what constitutes the crime (Ryan v. State, 83 Wis. 486, 53 N. W. 836), to state the law on which he relies (Morales v. State, 1 Tex. App. 494, 28 Am. Rep. 419), or to read a statute on which the prosecution is based (State v. Boogher, 8 Mo. App. 600).

It is error, however, for him to state that the accused has committed other crimes similar to the one in issue (State v. Stubblefield, 157 Mo. 360, 58 S. W. 337; People v. Smith, 162 N. Y. 520, 56 N. E. 1001; People v. Milks, 55 N. Y. App. Div. 372, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 889, 15 N. Y. Cr. 220. Compare People v. Van Zile, 73 Hun (N. Y.) 534, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 390), to outline an imaginary defense which is never attempted (People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 447, 39 N. The interruption of an opponent's opening to the jury is justifiable only in a very clear case of abuse, and the question thus raised should be disposed of summarily and without argument. People v. Wilson, 55 Mich. 506, 21 N. W. 905.

Indiana.— Reynolds v. State, 147 Ind. 3, 46 N. E. 31.

b. For Defense. The proper function of the opening for defendant is to enable him to inform the court and jury what he expects to prove. His counsel may therefore be forbidden to argue on the law,[52] to argue upon and review the testimony already offered by the state,[53] or to argue upon his own facts.[54] It is not error to refuse to allow him to state facts that he intends to prove which are manifestly inadmissible.[55] In the absence of statute,[56] it is discretionary with the court to allow the opening statement for the defense to be made after the close of the testimony for the prosecution.[57] It is also within the court's discretion to refuse to allow more than one attorney to open for the accused.[58]

3. Presentation of Evidence — a. For Prosecution — (i) Duty of Prosecuting Attorney. It is the sworn duty of the district attorney to see that defendant shall have a fair and impartial trial, and that he shall be convicted only by competent evidence, and to secure this he should himself be fair and impartial.[59]

See 14 Cent. Dig. tit. "Criminal Law," § 1659.

Statutes permitting the district attorney to state the evidence on which he will rely do not authorize him to read writings which he intends to offer (O'Brien v. Com., 89 Ky. 354, 12 S. W. 471, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 534), or to make an elaborate argument upon facts which the evidence fails to establish (State v. Williams, 63 Iowa 135, 18 N. W. 682). It is highly proper and fair to the accused for the court to inform the jury that statements not supported by subsequent evidence should be rejected by them (Reynolds v. State, 147 Ind. 3, 46 N. E. 31), but the court is not required of its own motion to do so (McFalls v. State, 66 Ark. 16, 48 S. W. 492).

58. People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 19 Pac. 161.

59. It is not his duty to convict by illegitimate and unfair means, and while the court will allow for the zeal which is the natural outcome of a legal contest, if by that zeal he is permitted to use unfair and unjust means to procure a conviction it will be reversed. Arguing on the admission of incompetent evidence.— Where the prosecuting attorney arguing upon an offer of evidence which is incompetent argues as to its effect with the evident intent of prejudicing the jury against defendant it is error. People v. Lee Chuck, 78 Cal. 317, 20 Pac. 719. The prosecuting attorney should not be allowed to state what he expected to prove by a witness, where objection has already been made and the testimony rejected. Newby v. People, 28 Colo. 16, 62 Pac. 1035; Flint v. Com., 81 Ky. 186, 23 S. W. 346; Leahy v. State, 31 Nebr. 566, 48 N. W. 390. This is an indirect method of influencing improperly the minds of the jurors by suggesting the existence of prejudicial facts which the court has adjudged to be incompetent and improper. Randall v. State, 132 Ind. 539, 32 N. E. 305.

Communications by counsel with third persons during examination.—If during the examination of a witness it becomes necessary for counsel to communicate with third persons to procure information necessary in framing questions, it must be done in such a manner as not to give the jury any information which may affect their verdict. The proper practice where this rule is not observed is for the court to instruct the jury to disregard such information and consider only the evidence, or to discharge the jury if the court believes that what has happened is of such a character that they must be influenced thereby. Com. v. Tripp, 157 Mass. 514, 32 N. E. 905.

(II) Persistence in Improper Questioning. The district attorney should not be permitted to ask a series of improper, incompetent, and prejudicial questions,[60] which he knows or has reason to suppose from their character the court will not permit to be answered.[61]

(III) Insulting Questions Put to Witness. A series of insulting, impertinent, and insinuating questions, tending to belittle and hold up for contempt the witnesses for defendant, constitute reversible error, where the court fails to interfere.[62]

(IV) Tampering With Witness. The public prosecuting officer is not justified in attempting to prevent witnesses for defendant from testifying because he believes they are unreliable and may testify falsely.[63]

b. For the Defense. The defendant should be permitted to exercise his powers of examining and cross-examining within legal limits.[64]

4. Facts, Comments, and Arguments — a. In General. It is always the duty of the prosecuting attorney to treat the prisoner in a fair and impartial manner.[65]

b. Exhibits and Illustrations. The exhibition, by the prosecuting officer, of articles of personal property, models, weapons, implements, etc., by way of illustration, and their examination by the jury is not error, whether the articles are in evidence[66] or not.[67] jection to hold an interview with a witness while under examination, in a tone not heard by counsel for defendant or by the court, while very bad practice and to be condemned as improper and unbecoming, is not error in the absence of a showing that something was said to the witness that affected his testimony, or that defendant was prejudiced by the interview. The fact that a witness for the prosecution proves unsatisfactory to the prosecuting attorney confers no right upon the latter to ask him insulting and degrading questions which imply that he is falsifying, or which by implication impute to him a desire to shield the accused and make him appear guilty of perjury. This may be done properly, but not by a mere assertion of facts which are calculated to prejudice the jury. Such statements, if not ruled out when objected to, constitute reversible error. People v. Carr, 64 Mich. 702, 31 N. W. 590.

63. Gandy v. State, 24 Nebr. 716, 40 N. W. 302.

c. Reading Books and Writings to Jury [68] — (i) Record in Pending or Prior Prosecution. It is not error for the prosecuting attorney to read the evidence from a stenographer's minutes,[69] and it is proper to read the indictment to the jury, if this is done in good faith and for the purpose of stating what the prosecution intends to prove.[70] It is error, however, to allow the attorney for the prosecution to read to the jury the opinion of an appellate court commenting on the weight and effect of the evidence given on a former trial of the same case,[71] or to read an affidavit made on an application for a continuance which was not introduced in evidence.[72]

(ii) Instructions of the Court. Permitting counsel to read and comment on the written instructions is within the court's discretion.[73]

(iii) Books of Science or Art. It is within the discretion of the court to permit or to refuse to permit counsel to read to the jury in their argument medical or other books treating of art or science claimed to be pertinent to the question in issue.[74] If, however, extracts from medical books are introduced in evidence counsel have the right to read them.[75]

Commenting upon the informal manner of proceeding at coroners' inquests, and their purpose, by the prosecuting attorney in explaining an apparent contradiction in the testimony is not objectionable, as not based on evidence, since judicial notice is taken of such proceedings. State v. Marsh, 70 Vt. 288, 40 Atl. 836. If the trial court instruct the jury in reference to improper statements made by the prosecuting attorney that they shall not consider them a new trial will not be granted. State v. Hernia, 68 N. J. L. 299, 53 Atl. 85.

It is improper for the prosecuting attorney to tell the jury what he thinks the witnesses know about the case which they do not tell, or that they know facts that would convict if they would tell. He has a right to comment on the manner, actions, and appearance of witnesses, but not to testify in his argument under the guise of telling what the witnesses would say if they were to answer truthfully. State v. McGahan, 48 W. Va. 438, 37 S. E. 573.

It is the duty of the court to punish counsel by fine and imprisonment if they persistently go outside of the facts in their argument and where the prosecution obtains a verdict by this means it should be set aside. State v. Gutekunst, 24 Kan. 252; State v. Comstock, 20 Kan. 650.

prosecuting attorney, and a slight deviation from the record may be overlooked if the accused is not prejudiced thereby.[81]

(iv) On Facts Not Within the Issues. It is error to permit the prosecuting attorney to argue upon matters outside of the issues in the case and which would not be relevant if offered in evidence, except as to matters of common and general knowledge which all intelligent persons may be presumed to know.[82]

(v) On Matters of General Knowledge. While in confining arguments to the facts in issue, it is proper always to prevent counsel from illustrating his argument by facts and circumstances drawn from beyond the record, it is not always easy to draw the line. Matters of common and general public information and of known and settled history may be properly referred to and commented upon by way of argument and illustration;[83] but matters outside the evidence of a local nature or matters not of common and public notoriety should not be commented upon.[84]

(vi) Misstatement of Evidence. The fact that the district attorney states some portion of the evidence erroneously[85] or makes exaggerated statements as to

For example an appeal to apply their common sense to the evidence, addressed to the jury, is proper (People v. Ringsted, 90 Mich. 371, 51 N. Rep. 314).

Extravagant statements.— The court cannot reverse convictions because counsel in their arguments sometimes make extravagant statements, or wander a little way outside of the record. If every immaterial assertion contained in an argument is to be held ground for reversal, no conviction would stand. Common fairness requires that jurors shall be presumed to possess ordinary intelligence, sufficient at least for them to disregard these general statements not supported by evidence, but if the immaterial matters are so weighty as to do the accused injury, the conviction should be reversed. its strength[86] is not error unless it is clear to the court that the accused was prejudiced thereby.

(VII) On Character of Witnesses. Abusing the witnesses for defendant,[87] making remarks which reflect upon their character,[88] or intimating that they have been bribed to testify for defendant[89] is error, where there is no evidence to sustain such statement.

(VIII) On Failure of Accused to Testify. A statute which provides that the neglect or refusal of the accused to testify shall not be commented upon by the prosecuting attorney is usually mandatory. This being so, the prosecuting attorney should therefore maintain an absolute silence on the subject in his argument, and any reference by him, direct or indirect, to the absence of the accused from the witness stand is generally deemed reversible error.[90] Where, however,

And a statement by the prosecuting attorney that the state is not bound by the testimony of a witness it was obliged to introduce except so far as the evidence is believed to be true is not objectionable. St. 534, 18 Atl. 558) is not a comment upon the failure of the accused to testify which violates the statute.

A statute which contains no express restrictions upon commenting on the failure of the accused to testify does not by implication prohibit the prosecuting attorney from commenting upon his silence and refusal to take the witness stand where the accusation against him may be disproved by his own oath as a witness. The jury will draw an inference of his guilt from his silence, even though it may not be commented upon, and, although his silence ought not to affect him where his testimony would only be a general denial of guilt, and should not then be commented upon, where the state proves his act, which he may disprove, if untrue, his silence may be commented upon with the strictest regard to his rights. Parker v. State, 62 N. J. L. 801, 45 Atl. 1092.

Comments addressed to the court.— A remark commenting on the failure of the accused to testify is error under the statute forbidding any such comment "during the trial," whether it is addressed to the court or to the jury, and whether defendant was prejudiced or not. State v. Ryan, 70 Iowa 154, 30 N. W. 397.

The word "comment" does not mean to criticize or condemn or anathematize the accused on his failure to testify. The statute forbids in unmistakable language any comment friendly or unfriendly. It forbids any remark, of any character, in any words, upon the failure of the accused to testify. The attention of the jury is not to be called to the fact at all by counsel. ute prohibiting counsel from commenting on the failure of the accused to testify in his own behalf does not apply even in a case where he is a witness for himself but fails to testify to material matters.[92]

(IX) On Failure to Produce Witnesses. While many cases hold that it is not error for the prosecuting attorney to comment on the failure of the accused to produce certain witnesses, where such witnesses if produced would be competent to testify,[93] no comment should be allowed on the absence of a witness not shown to be competent.[94] So it is prejudicial error entitling defendant to be granted a new trial to allow counsel for the prosecution to comment in his argu-

Presumption from failure to call witnesses. — But the failure to call witnesses cannot be adduced as a circumstance creating a presumption of law that they if called would have testified unfavorably to the accused. ment to the jury upon the failure of defendant to offer evidence of his previous good character.[95]

(x) On Other Crimes by Accused. Statements by the prosecuting attorney that the accused has committed other crimes besides that for which he is on trial constitute error,[96] unless there is evidence on the record from which the jury may infer the commission of such crimes by him.[97]

(xi) On Right to Appeal. It is error for the prosecuting attorney to say that if the accused is wrongfully convicted he has a right to appeal and that he would receive a new trial,[98] where objection to such remark is promptly made.[99]

(xii) On Conduct or Character of Accused. The conduct of the accused and his counsel during the trial,[1] the appearance of the accused while he was testifying,[2] or the fact that he stood mute when arraigned[3] may be commented on without error. It is error, however, for the prosecuting attorney, where accused offers no evidence of character, to comment unfavorably on his character,[4] to

of the guilt of the accused.[13] Such argument will not necessitate the granting of a new trial.

f. Appeals to Prejudice and Passion. The remarks of the prosecuting attorney which are injurious to the accused, in that they prejudice the minds of the jurors against him generally or specifically,[14] by referring to his wealth and social influence as contrasted with the poverty of the person injured,[15] to an alleged improper influence over the administration of justice by one of his family,[16] to the fact that a conviction of a lower crime will entail great expense on the county,[17] or by stating that he cares nothing for the expense entailed on the county by hanging the jury [18] are error.

g. Abusive Language. While the remarks of the prosecuting attorney which consist merely in personal abuse or villification of defendant and which therefore tend to arouse or inflame the passion and prejudice of the jury against him are error, where they are not based on any facts in proof,[19] the better rule [20] seems to be that if the facts are in evidence which prove or tend to prove that defendant is a bad character, it is not error for the prosecuting attorney to employ epithets, although abusive, in referring to him.[21]

S., 3 Indian Terr. 27, 53 S. W. 471), or to the effect that the accused ought to be in jail (People v. McMahon, 124 Cal. 435, 57 Pac. 224), or that defendant was "either guilty of murder in the first degree or not guilty" (Williams v. State, (Ark. 1891) 16 S. W. 816) is not error.

h. Instructing Jury in Their Duty. Remarks of the prosecuting attorney to the jury, which by appealing either to their fears or their vanity tend to coerce or cajole them into a verdict of conviction, are error.[22] He may legitimately appeal to them to do their full duty in enforcing the law,[23] and may tell them that the people look to them for protection against crime,[24] and, although it is improper for him to state that if juries do not punish the crime the people will do so by vigilance committees or other unlawful means, it is not error.[25]

i. Remarks Provoked by Opponent. Remarks of the prosecuting attorney which ordinarily would be improper are not ground for exception if they are provoked by defendant's counsel and are in reply to his statements.[26]

5. Argument Upon Law of Case — a. In General. Counsel may, even where the jury must accept the law as laid down to them in the judge's charge, refer to and explain the law of the case in his argument,[27] and he may with better reason do this where the jury determine both the law and the facts.[28]

b. Reading Reports and Text-Books. Where by statute the jury determine both the law and the facts, it is proper to permit counsel to read to them judicial opinions.[29] It has also been held that while the practice is not to be commended, the court may permit counsel in cases where the jury is bound to take the law from the court to read extracts from the opinions in reported cases bearing upon the law of the case,[30] but not the facts in the opinion.[31] The statute under which the prosecution is had may be read, although it is not in evidence.[32] As a general Permitting defendant to reply.— It is within the discretion of the court to refuse to permit counsel for defendant to reply to improper remarks by the prosecuting attorney, and the refusal will benefit the accused as much as a reply, which, being granted by the court, would convey to the minds of the jury that the judge conceded the correctness of the prosecuting attorney's comments. State v. Garig, 43 La. Ann. 365, 8 So. 934. But where the prosecuting attorney in his opening address comments on evidence which is never introduced, the error is not waived by the fact that defendant's counsel makes an elaborate reply to the improper argument. rule it is not improper to permit legal text-books of approved authority to be read in argument,[33] although this matter is so much in the judicial discretion that refusing defendant's counsel the privilege is not error.[34]

c. Misstating Law. It is reversible error for the prosecuting attorney in argument to misstate the law, where objection is promptly made,[35] and the court may at any time[36] interrupt counsel to correct his statement of the law or may do so in the charge.[37]

d. Argument After Ruling by Court. It is proper for the court to refuse to permit counsel to argue upon the law to the jury, where it has already ruled upon it.[38]

the jury have rendered their verdict,[40] or on motion for a new trial after a judgment of conviction.[41]

b. Sufficiency of Objections. The defendant should make his objection publicly in court,[42] pointing out specifically the matter complained of as improper[43] in the argument, and promptly take exception to the failure of the trial judge to condemn it.[44]

c. Necessity For Request For Correction. Improper remarks in argument by the prosecuting attorney, although prejudicial, do not justify reversal, unless the court has been requested to instruct the jury to disregard them and has refused to do so.[45]

d. Withdrawal and Disregarding Objectionable Matter. F. Province of Judge and Jury — 1. Jury as Judges of the Law — a. In General. At English common law, from the earliest times, it was taken for granted that the jury should be the judges only of the issues of fact, and the court of the law.[50] The common-law rule that the determination of the law is for the court, not for the jury, and that the judicial instructions as to the law and the rulings of the court during the trial are in every sense binding upon the jury is followed in the majority of the states.[51]

c. Extent of Power. In the absence of any constitutional or statutory provision it is the duty of the court to charge the jury fully upon the law of the case, and the duty of the jury to accept the law as laid down by the court.[54] This rule is also followed in some of those jurisdictions having constitutional or statutory provisions making the jury judges of both the law and the facts.[55] In other jurisdictions having similar provisions, it is held that the instructions of the court are merely advisory, and that the jury are not bound by them but may disregard them altogether,[56] and that it is proper so to instruct the

In Pennsylvania and Tennessee there are constitutional provisions that "in all indictments for libels, the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the court as in other cases." The effect of these provisions upon the province of the court and jury in criminal cases generally has been the subject of much discussion and some conflict of authority, but it seems to be settled in each jurisdiction that they do not alter the general rule that the court must determine the law and the jury accept it as laid down by the court. Criminal libel.— By statute or constitutional provision in many states, it is provided that the jury shall have the right to determine both law and fact in prosecutions for criminal libel. It is the duty of the court under such statutes to instruct as to the law of libel (State v. Whitmore, 53 Kan. 343, 36 Pac. 748, 42 Am. St. Rep. 288; State v. Syphrett, 27 S. C. 29, 2 S. St. Rep. 616); but the jury are the judges of the law, and are not required to accept such instructions as conclusive (Lowe's Appeal, 46 Kan. 255, 26 Pac. 749; State v. Zimmerman, 31 Kan. 85, 1 Pac. 259; State v. Armstrong, 106 Mo. 395, 16 S. W. 604, 27 Am. St. Rep. 361, 13 L. R. A. 419 [overruling State v. Hosmer, 85 Mo. 553]). The court has a right to express its opinion, and the jury may decide for themselves, having in view such opinions, whether the publication was of a mischievous tendency, whether it came within the legal definition of a libel, whether it was privileged, and whether it was true. jury.[57] The jury should in all cases give the instructions of the court careful and respectful consideration,[58] and should not disregard them unless in their judgment there is a good and sufficient reason for so doing.[59] For it must not be understood that a constitutional provision making the jury judges of the law places them above the law or confers upon them either a moral or legal right to decide simply as they see fit, regardless of all law.[60]

An instruction that the jury are judges of the law, and that they can take it as given by the court, but if they see fit they can reject this and construe it for themselves, and as they have a legal right to disagree with the court, they should weigh the instructions to the same extent as they weigh the evidence, and disregard neither without proper reason, is proper. Blaker v. State, 130 Ind. 203, 29 N. E. 1077.

Under these provisions the jury are not the sole judges of every question of law which arises, but only of those questions which they have to consider in making up their verdict, for the court still has a right to determine all questions as to the sufficiency of the indictment, and the admissibility of evidence. Anderson v. State, 104 Ind. 467, 4 N. E. 63, 5 N. E. 711.

Right to determine constitutionality of statute.— The right of the jury to determine the law does not authorize them to determine the constitutionality of a statute. State v. McKee, 73 Conn. 18, 46 Atl. 409, 49 L. R. A. 542; Franklin v. State, 12 Md. 236; Harrison v. Com., 123 Pa. St. 508, 16 Atl. 611. This question is solely for the court, and counsel will not be permitted to argue upon it to the jury. U. S. v. Callender, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,709; U. S. v. Riley, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,164, 5 Blatchf. 204. A charge to the jury to consider the constitutionality of a statute on which the indictment is based, and if they believe it unconstitutional to acquit defendant, is not proper. State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 37 Atl. 80, 61 Am. St. Rep. 30, 36 L. R. A. 623.

61. They have no more right, however, to exercise this power and determine the law contrary to the court's instructions than to disregard the evidence in their findings of fact. If by disregarding the law they render a general verdict of acquittal there is no remedy, since defendant cannot be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense, but if the verdict is of conviction it may be set aside and a new trial ordered as in the case of a verdict contrary to the evidence.

dence.[62] The decision of a fact on which the admissibility of evidence depends should not be left to the jury.[63]

(II) Sufficiency of Indictment. The sufficiency of the indictment,[64] or an issue upon an allegation that certain words have been erased from it or inserted in it,[65] or any issue which may be tried by an inspection of the record,[66] is to be determined by the court.

(III) Construction and Interpretation of Writings. The interpretation and construction of writings are exclusively for the court.[67]

b. Questions of Fact — (I) In General. Questions of fact in criminal proceedings are to be tried by the jury,[68] and it is not for the court to give instructions as to matters of fact[69] or to assume that a contested fact has been proved.[70]

(II) Variance. Whether there is a material variance between the proof and the allegations of the indictment as to the names of persons[71] or any other facts[72] is a question for the jury.

(III) Corpus Delicti. Whether the corpus delicti has been proved is a question of fact for the jury.[73] is a question of law;[74] whether it has been proved is for the jury.[75] Questions of jurisdiction are usually questions of law,[76] but where the jurisdiction depends upon particular facts, the jury may by means of a general verdict confirm or reject a ruling that the court has jurisdiction.[77]

(v) Knowledge and Intent. Whether defendant had guilty knowledge or acted with a felonious or criminal intent is for the jury to determine,[78] even where the evidence is very clear and convincing.[79]

(vi) Identification. The identification of defendant as the person who committed the crime is a question for the jury.[80]

(vii) Defenses — (a) In General. The sufficiency of the evidence to prove an affirmative defense is a question for the jury, and their determination, if supported by any evidence, will not be disturbed.[81] viction,[84] and the construction of the record, if there be any,[85] and generally all matters of law on such plea,[86] as where the plea is bad on its face and demurrable,[87] are for the court to determine.

(D) Intoxication. It is a question for the jury to determine whether the mental condition of defendant was so far overcome by intoxication that he was unable to form a guilty intent.[88]

(E) Insanity. The insanity of the accused at the time of the crime is a question of fact to be determined by the jury.[89] Its existence, character, and extent are for them to determine.[90]

c. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence — (I) In General. After it is determined by the court that evidence is admissible, its weight and sufficiency are questions for the jury.[91]

Insanity generally see supra, III, B.

Province of court.— The character of an insane delusion or monomania is matter of fact, and it is not proper to instruct that a certain belief, if existing in defendant's mind, was, as matter of law, an insane delusion (People v. Hubert, 119 Cal. 216, 51 Pac. 329, 63 Am. St. Rep. 72); but it is not error to instruct the jury to examine the evidence of insanity with care, lest a counterfeit of mental disease furnish immunity for guilt (People v. Allender, 117 Cal. 81, 48 Pac. 1014; People v. Kloss, 115 Cal. 567, 47 Pac. 459; People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 255, 46 Pac. 1073; People v. Larrabee, 115 Cal. 158, 46 Pac. 922). If evidence of insanity is entirely inadequate, it is proper for the court to withdraw it from the jury (State v. Morledge, 164 Mo. 522, 65 S. W. 226), although this should not be done if the facts in the least degree tend to support the defense of insanity (Turner v. Territory, 11 Okla. 660, 69 Pac. 804).

(II) Conflicting Evidence. Where the evidence is conflicting, the determination of its effect is still for the jury.[92] They must endeavor to reconcile it, if possible;[93] and if they cannot, they may give credit to such testimony as in their opinion is most worthy of belief.[94]

(III) Impeached Evidence. The weight and credibility, if any, which should be given to the testimony of a witness who may have been impeached, whether by contradictory evidence or by a showing of bad character, is a question for the jury.[95]

d. Extent of Punishment — (I) Power of the Court. Where the fine or period of imprisonment is fixed by law it is for the court and not for the jury to assess it.[96]

(II) Discretion of the Jury. If a statute provides that the accused shall suffer one of two punishments in the alternative at the discretion of the jury, the court can neither review its action,[97] nor deprive it of its right to fix the punishment by an agreement with the prosecuting attorney,[98] nor dispense with the jury and fix the amount of the fine,[99] although it must instruct the jury as to the statutory limits of the punishment[1] and should see to it that the punishment does not transcend these limits.[2]

3. DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE AND DIRECTION OF VERDICT — a. Demurrer to Evidence. A demurrer to the evidence is a proceeding by which the court is called upon to determine what the law is upon the facts which appear in evidence.[3] It admits the truth of facts which are shown, whether by parol or by writing, and every fair inference from such facts,[4] and the court decides upon their legal effect only, and not upon the sufficiency of their proof.[5] In some states the practice of demurring to the evidence is not recognized.[6] Where it is recognized neither party can demur without the consent of the other,[7] and even when both parties consent, it is discretionary with the court whether it will entertain the demurrer.[8]

b. Direction of Verdict — (I) OF ACQUITTAL. Where there is no competent evidence tending to sustain the charge,[9] where the evidence is so weak that a conviction would be attributable to passion or prejudice,[10] or where it is so slight and indeterminate that a verdict of guilty would be set aside the court should direct an acquittal,[11] and in some jurisdictions its failure to do so constitutes reversible Punishment in the alternative.— Where there is a discretion in the jury to either fine or imprison, it is the duty of the jury to choose between fine and imprisonment, and the duty of the court to fix the term of imprisonment (Turner v. State, 40 Ala. 21); and where both fine and imprisonment are imposed, the jury may fix the fine and the court the imprisonment (Cook v. U. In Michigan it is held that a conviction on a direction of a verdict of guilty will not be reversed on appeal, where the proof sustained the verdict. People v. Elmer, 109 Mich. 493,

(III) Requisites of Motion to Direct Verdict. A motion to direct an acquittal, which does not specify wherein the proof has failed, may be disregarded,[16] unless the failure of proof is total.[17]

(IV) Presence of Jury During Argument. Where defendant moves for a verdict in his favor, he is not entitled of right to have the jury sent from the room during the argument.[18]

(V) As to One of Several Co-Defendants. A joint motion to direct a verdict of acquittal of two co-defendants may be overruled where there is evidence tending to prove one of them guilty.[19] The same is true where one of several co-defendants moves for acquittal as to another, in order that he may introduce him as a witness,[20] although under such circumstances the prosecuting attorney may consent to the discharge of the witness. This action on his part is equivalent to entering a nolle prosequi.[21]

so long as they do not amount to a direction or advice as to how the jury shall decide the matter to which the evidence relates. The jury ought to be instructed that it is for them ultimately and solely to determine all questions of fact, including the credibility of the witnesses.[23]

(B) Federal Courts. In the federal courts an expression of opinion on the facts by the court is not error, if at the same time the court informs the jury that they are the judges of all questions of fact.[24]

(C) Of Particular Parts of Testimony. It is error for the court to single out certain testimony in the case and to instruct the jury that this testimony is entitled to very great or little weight, or to otherwise instruct as to its weight.[25]

(D) Of Circumstantial Evidence. In those jurisdictions in which the determination of the weight and credibility of evidence is committed solely to the jury, a charge which comments upon the weight or credibility of circumstantial evidence in comparison with direct evidence is improper as encroaching upon the province of the jury.[26]

(II) Directing Verdict[27] or Declaring Law — (A) If Jury Believe Evidence. Where the evidence for the prosecution is uncontradicted, is not conflicting, and, if believed, shows defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, it is not error according to some of the cases to charge that if the jury believe the evidence of the prosecution it is their duty to convict.[28] This charge is not proper, however, where a substantial conflict exists in the evidence upon any material question of fact,[29] where the incriminating evidence is wholly circumstantial, and material inferences are to be drawn therefrom by the jury,[30] or where the evidence is so vague, unsatisfactory, and unconvincing that a verdict of conviction would probably be set aside on appeal.[31]

(B) On Facts Stated Hypothetically. An instruction which enumerates hypothetically certain acts which constitute the offense as a matter of law, and charges that if the jury find these acts to be established or proved to have been committed by the accused it is their duty to find him guilty does not invade the province of the jury.[32] It leaves the jury free to find the facts according to their own view and opinion of the evidence.[33]

for an offense consisting of different grades, the court may, where the evidence warrants it, charge that the evidence shows that a crime of one of the specified grades has been committed, and direct the jury, if they believe the evidence, to find accordingly.[34]

(IV) Reconciling Conflicting Evidence. Where the evidence is contradictory, it is not error for the court in its charge to endeavor to reconcile the discrepancies by reviewing it in general terms, and by making suggestions warranted by it.[35] It is not proper, however, for the court to instruct that if the testimony shows two contradictory theories, one tending to guilt and the other tending to innocence, and both are reasonable, the jury must acquit, as this instruction invades the province of the jury.[36]

(V) Confining Jury to Part of Evidence. Inasmuch as it is the province of the jury to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused upon all the evidence, it is an invasion of their province for the court in its charge to ignore and exclude any material evidence from their consideration.[37]

(VI) Declaring Judicial Knowledge. It is no invasion of the province of the jury for the court to state in its charge that it will take judicial knowledge of facts that courts notice without proof.[38]

(VII) Affirmative and Negative Testimony. An instruction that makes any comparison between the weight and credibility of affirmative and of negative testimony, or that indicates that either is of less or greater weight than the other, is erroneous as encroaching on the province of the jury.[39]

improper and should be refused, the construction to be placed upon the evidence being for the jury.[42]

(IX) CORROBORATION OF WITNESS. Where the evidence clearly shows that a witness is an accomplice, and a statute requires the testimony of an accomplice to be corroborated, an instruction that the witness is an accomplice and hence needs corroboration is proper.[43] But whether the testimony of a witness is corroborated is exclusively a question for the jury, and their province must not be invaded by the court.[44] Where corroboration is not indispensable, an instruction that the credibility of a witness is weakened by its absence,[45] or that if there be no corroboration the jury ought to acquit,[46] encroaches upon the province of the jury.

(X) PURPOSE OF EVIDENCE. An instruction properly limiting the application of evidence to the object for which it was introduced,[47] or forbidding the jury to apply it to an issue to which it is not relevant,[48] does not invade the province of the jury.

(XI) CHARACTER. A charge that evidence of good character should weigh with the jury as raising a strong presumption of defendant's innocence,[49] that it is entitled to great weight where the evidence against him is weak or doubtful,[50] or that it may create a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused[51] is improper, as invading the province of the jury.[52]

(XII) CONFESSIONS. The general rule is that the weight and credibility of confessions are to be determined by the jury under all the circumstances of the case, and that the court would not express any opinion as to their weight.[53]

(XIII) INSTRUCTION IN RESPONSE TO REQUEST. If defendant requests a charge that certain evidence is insufficient to prove a fact, he cannot complain that the court is charging as to the fact, if in response thereto it charges that the evidence is sufficient.[54] Nor, where an instruction on the facts is asked for, can he

sion,[64] or which states that a witness who aided defendant is an accomplice,[65] or assumes the truth of the incriminating evidence as a whole, and implies that the accused is bound to overcome it.[66] An instruction which, in attempting to reconcile apparently contradictory testimony, assumes facts of which there is no evidence in order to reconcile the evidence is error, as invading the province of the jury.[67] An instruction assuming, although by implication, that defendant has failed to prove his defense is error, but a statement in an instruction that accused had attempted to prove a defense is not objectionable under this rule.[68]

b. Statement and Review of Evidence — (I) In General. As a general rule it is not error for the court, in charging, to recite the evidence, or to state what a witness has testified to, if he informs the jury that they are to be guided by their own recollection of the evidence, and that they are the exclusive judges of the truth of the testimony, and leave them to draw their own conclusions,[69] and in doing this does not give undue prominence to some evidence or overlook other evidence equally important.[70]

(II) Existence of Evidence. The court does not invade the province of the jury by stating that there is or is not evidence of particular facts, when by the record it appears that this is the case.[71] The right to state evidence conferred by should distinctly instruct the jury to ascertain whether from the evidence a confession has been made. Dixon v. State, 113 Ga. 1039, 39 S. E. 846.

Ct. 919, 38 L. ed. 841) or which by implication conveys the opinion of the court that defendant has failed to show his innocence (Johnson v. State, 27 Tex. App. 163, 11 S. W. 106) is error. It is proper to call the attention of the jury to the fact that defendant's story that he had killed deceased in self-defense was not corroborated, by "stating that his story is not gainsaid, as no one lives to gainsay it," where there were no witnesses to the homicide. People v. Rohl, 138 N. Y. 616, 33 N. E. 933. statute implies the right to state that there is no evidence when such is the fact.[72]

(III) Tendency of Evidence. It is not an invasion of the province of the jury for the court to state the tendency of evidence to prove certain facts, if it is stated fairly and the jury are instructed that they are the ultimate judges of the credibility of the evidence.[73] But it is objectionable as charging upon the weight of evidence to instruct that certain facts strongly tend to prove guilt.[74]

(IV) Sufficiency of Evidence to Sustain Conviction. It has been held that a statement by the judge that there is testimony enough before the jury to sustain a verdict of guilty, if they believe it and it satisfies them beyond a reasonable doubt, does not invade their province, if its credibility is left for them to determine,[75] but there are cases to the contrary.[76]

(V) Corroboration. It is not error to call the attention of the jury to evidence which the prosecution regards as corroboration, if it be left to them to determine whether such corroboration exists.[77]

c. Credibility of Witnesses — (I) In General. The question as to what degree of credit shall be given to the testimony of a witness, or whether his testimony is to be entirely rejected, is for the jury, and it is error for the court to invade their province in this respect in the giving of instructions to them.[78]

Comparing credibility of witnesses.— An instruction which makes argumentative comparisons between the credibility of the testimony of the prosecution and defense respectively, to the disparagement of the credibility of the witnesses for the former, infringes the province of the jury (Territory v. O'Hare, 1 N. D. 30, 44 N. W. 1003), as in all cases of this kind the reconciliation of the conflict is for them exclusively (Mitchell v. State, 43 Fla. 188, 30 So. 803).

Manner of witnesses on the stand.— An instruction that the jury may consider the manner of the witness on the stand (State v. Hilsabeck, 132 Mo. 348, 34 S. W. 38; State v. Hoshor, 26 Wash. 643, 67 Pac. 386), or which comments upon and points out an open exhibition of partiality and prejudice by the witness (State v. Nat, 51 N. C. 114), or states that the witness appeared to be candid (State v. Davis, 15 N. C. 612) does not invade the province of the jury.

Unimpeached witnesses.— Although there is a presumption that the reputation of a witness is good until it is impeached (State v. Taylor, 57 S. C. 483, 35 S. E. 729, 76 Am. St. Rep. 575), the jury should not be instructed that he is presumed to have testified truly (Glover v. State, 22 Fla. 493; State v. Jones, 77 N. C. 520; State v. Taylor, 57 S. C. 483, 35 S. On the other hand the jury are not bound to believe the testimony of an unimpeached witness even where his testimony is probable (People v. Tuczkewitz, 149 N. Y. 240, 43 N. E. 548; State v. Rash, 34 N. C. 382, 55 Am. Dec. 420. See also State v. Breckenridge, 33 La. Ann. 310), although they are not arbitrarily to disregard it, unless they can conscientiously say that it fails to convince them as candid and impartial men (Jones v. State, 48 Ga. 163; Ferkel v. People, 16 Ill. App. 310).

St. Rep. 652, 8 L. R. A. 837. Contra, State v. Fullerton, 90 Mo. App. 411), or "distrust" (State v. Hoxsie, 15 R. I. 1, 22 Atl. 1059, 2 Am. St. Rep. 838; State v. Bennett, 40 S. C. 308, 18 S. The credibility of a witness who by deceit, misrepresentation, and other disreputable means has obtained an illegal confession from a prisoner is for the jury, who should be specially instructed on that point. Heldt v. State, 20 Nebr. 492, 30 N. W. 626, 57 Am. Rep. 835. The motive of a detective, although it may be considered by the jury, does not justify an instruction that if for the purpose of betraying the accused he induced him to commit a crime, it should weigh against his testimony, but that if, acting honestly in the public interest, he visited the place of the offense for the purpose of procuring evidence, it should not detract from his testimony. of relatives of an accomplice.[84] The rule has also been held to apply to the testimony of expert witnesses.[85]

(11) Improbability of Evidence. An instruction that the jury must disregard testimony which appears to them improbable is error. Many improbable things occur, and the improbability of the statement of a witness is never, as matter of law, a sufficient reason for it to be disregarded, although it may diminish its weight and credibility.[86]

(111) Reputation of Witnesses. An instruction which in effect tells the jury that defendant's witnesses are disreputable[87] or lawless and criminal persons[88] is erroneous. An instruction is proper which tells the jury that they are not to disregard the evidence of convicts merely because they are convicts, but that they must weigh it and consider it according to the rules of evidence.[89]

N. C. 1203, 24 S. E. 118. According to the weight of authority the rule is that the testimony of relatives of the accused is to be received and its credibility tested by the same rules which apply to the testimony of other witnesses. Where near relatives of a party are called by him as witnesses, such relationship is always a proper matter for the consideration of the jury in estimating the value of their testimony, and the court may so instruct the jury; but it is not proper for the court to say that the testimony of witnesses related to the accused is entitled to less weight on account of such relationship or is to be received with caution.

Illustrations.— A statement that experts could be obtained to swear on both sides of any question (People v. Webster, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 398, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 414), or that their testimony, derived from an examination out of court, should be carefully considered in view of a possibility of their failure to seek for conditions favorable to the opposite party (State v. Rathbun, 74 Conn. 524, 51 Atl. 540), or that medical experts employed by defendant are by reason of such employment entitled to little or no credit, but that great weight should be given to the testimony of an expert appointed by the court and introduced by the state (Persons v. State, 90 Tenn. 291, 16 S. W. 726) is error. But it is not error to instruct that expert opinions are to be considered in connection with all the evidence and that the jury are not bound to act upon them (Wagner v. State, 116 Ind. 181, 18 N. E. 833), but may judge of the reasonableness of these opinions from the facts of the case, and that both expert and non-expert evidence should be subject to a careful examination (Wilcox v. State, 94 Tenn. 106, 28 S. (iv) Interest or Bias of Witnesses. The general rule is that the jury, in determining the credibility of witnesses, may among other circumstances consider their interest in the result or bias, and they may properly be so instructed by the court.[90] But an instruction that the jury may disregard the testimony of a witness interested in the result, irrespective of other considerations bearing on his credibility, is error.[91]

(v) Effect of Impeachment. It has been held that the court may with propriety state in its charge that there is no evidence impeaching the character of a witness, where such is the case;[92] but as a rule a charge that a witness has not been impeached invades the province of the jury and is properly refused.[93] The court must not instruct the jury that they cannot convict on impeached evidence unless it is corroborated,[94] but it may instruct them that they may disregard the evidence of a witness if they believe that he has been successfully impeached, unless it is corroborated to their satisfaction.[95] In every case where impeachment by any method is attempted the jury are not at liberty to arbitrarily discard the impeached testimony,[96] but ought to determine its credibility, and they may believe it if they think it credible.[97]

ince of the jury for the court to charge that if they believe that a witness has wilfully or knowingly testified falsely in relation to any material fact, they should or must disregard his entire evidence altogether, unless his evidence is corroborated by other evidence;[98] but it is not error to instruct them that they may, or are at liberty, or have the right to do so,[99] unless his evidence in their opinion is corroborated.[1]

d. Credibility of Accused — (I) In General. The credibility of the accused, like that of every other witness, is for the jury to determine, and if they believe his testimony to be true they should act upon it and acquit,[2] and the court should not, where the statute makes the accused competent, defeat the statute by hostile instructions discrediting his testimony.[3] If an attempt is made to impeach him directly it is exclusively within their province to determine whether he has been impeached.[4] The fact that he establishes a good character does not warrant an instruction that his testimony should be given greater weight than that of a witness which contradicts it.[5]

(II) Interest in the Result. Where defendant testifies in his own behalf, most of the courts have held that it is not error for the court to call the attention of the jury to the fact that he is vitally interested in the outcome of the case, and to point out his situation and relation to it, and that it is proper at the same time to instruct them that they may consider these facts in determining his credibility.[6] It is error, however, to instruct the jury that they must or that they should consider his interest in the result,[7] that they should because of such interest regard his testimony with great caution,[8] that they should bear in mind the tendency on the part of the guilty accused of crime to fabricate a story which they think may effect their acquittal,[9] or to instruct that the jury may disregard the testimony of defendant because of his interest, if his testimony conflicts with other evidence.[10]

ences of fact drawn from the existence of other facts.[14] It is the province of the jury, under the advice and suggestion of the court, to draw such presumptions or inferences from the facts proved,[15] and an instruction which tells them that they should or must draw a particular inference of fact from other facts proven or claimed to be proven in the case is error.[16] They should be told that it is for them to say whether or not they will draw a certain inference of fact.[17]

(II) FALSE EXPLANATIONS. It is proper for the court to suggest to the jury that if the accused has uttered false exculpatory statements, they may therefrom, but need not necessarily, infer his guilt;[18] but it is error to tell the jury that false statements should be construed as tending to establish guilt,[19] or to assume in the charge that the statements are false.[20]

(III) FLIGHT. An instruction that flight raises a strong presumption of guilt[21] or that the presumption from flight is so conclusive that it is the duty of the jury to act upon it[22] is error. The court, in charging on the flight of the accused, is limited to telling the jury that it is a circumstance which may be considered by them, and from which they may draw an inference of guilt in connection with other circumstances, in the absence of an explanation.[23]

f. Instructions to Jurors as to Their Duty — (I) IN GENERAL. The court should exercise great care in assuming to instruct the jurors as to their individual or collective responsibility, or as to the methods by which they should arrive at their verdict; but it is proper to instruct them that in considering and weighing the evidence they should use the same judgment, reason, common sense, and general knowledge of men and affairs as in every-day life,[24] and that if any of the 24. Morrison v. State, 42 Fla. 149, 28 So. 97. It is proper to call the attention of the jury to the importance of having the laws properly executed, and of giving careful con-

jury differ in their views from the majority they should be induced to doubt the correctness of their own judgments, and be led to reëxamine the facts of the case.[25] A special direction, however, as to how the evidence of defendant's witnesses should be weighed,[26] or which instructs them as to the proper methods of reasoning on the facts,[27] is error, as invasive of their province to determine the credibility of the witnesses.[28] The court may and should on request instruct in regard to the individual duty and responsibility of each member of the jury.[29]

(II) URGING AGREEMENT. It is not error for the court to tell the jury that the case has cost a great deal, has consumed considerable time and postponed other important cases, and that it is important to the ends of justice that they should agree upon a verdict, in order that new trials and delays of justice may be avoided.[30] It is also proper for the court to hold up to the jury the effect of a disagreement at common law, to compare the rule in the United States, and to tell them that they will have to remain together until they agree upon a verdict,[31] or to urge them to begin their deliberations as soon as possible.[32] But the court ought, while telling the jury that no juror should from mere pride of opinion refuse to agree, to charge that he should not surrender any conscientious views founded on the evidence.[33]

(III) FIXING PUNISHMENT. Where the amount or character of the punishment is determinable by the jury, it is error for the court to interfere with the exercise of their discretion. They should be charged not to exceed the limit of the statute,[34] but it is error to direct them that if defendant is guilty they should assess a certain punishment.[35]

G. Instructions — 1. NECESSITY AND REQUISITES — a. In General. It is the duty of the trial court to instruct the jury distinctly and precisely upon the law of the case.[36] This is so even though the jury are expressly authorized to detersideration to the evidence and the law, so that they may reach a result which will be just to both sides, regardless of what may be the consequences. People v. Hawes, 98 Cal. 648, 33 Pac. 791. mine the law as well as the facts.[37] If the instructions offered by counsel are objectionable, the court should give instructions which conform to the law.[38] The absolute right of defendant in a capital case to have the jury properly instructed on the law cannot be waived by him or by his counsel.[39]

b. Scope of Instructions — (I) In General. The instructions should be full, clear, and explicit, giving to the jury all the law so far as it relates to the facts proved or claimed to be proved, if such facts are sustained by any evidence.[40]

(II) Duty to Explain and Review Evidence. The court, in addition to instructing as to the law, may, and usually should, recall and relate the testimony, and resolve complicated evidence into its simplest elements, to aid the jury in applying the law.[41] It need not, however, recapitulate all items of evidence, nor even all evidence bearing on a single question.[42] It is only necessary to repeat such evidence as will direct the attention of the jury to the principal questions at issue, in order to explain the law applicable to the case.[43]

(III) Application of Law to Disputed Facts. The court in instructing upon the law based on disputed facts should accompany the instruction with such remarks as will enable the jury to apply the law to the facts claimed to be proved, and it should at the same time instruct them to apply it only upon finding the facts upon which it is based to be true.[44]

(IV) Opposing Theories. It is not error to state in the charge both the claims made by the state and those made by defendant, and the theories which the evidence for each respectively tends to establish.[45] Where the court groups together and states hypothetically the theory of the prosecution and cites evidence

It is not a proper instruction to state to the jury the facts of a decided case and submit to them the question whether or not that case and the one on trial are parallel. to authorize such theory, if believed, and instructs the jury that if these facts are true defendant is guilty, it is its duty, if the evidence is sufficient, also to group and state hypothetically the facts of defendant's theory, and to instruct the jury accordingly.[46] The jury should be instructed on the law applicable to any legitimate view they may take of the evidence.[47]

c. Submitting Questions of Law. An instruction submitting a question of law to the jury may and should be refused, as not within their province.[48] A charge that if the jury believe from the evidence that defendant's act was lawful he is not guilty is error.[49]

d. Definition of Words. As a general rule it is the duty of the court to define all technical terms of the law used by it in such a way as to give a correct idea of the meaning of such words to persons unlearned in the law.[50] An express definition, however, is usually not required where the court in an instruction has in so many words explained to the jury the meaning of the term.[51] The court's failure or refusal to define words which are not technical and are in common use is not error. The meaning of such words is for the jury.[52]

e. Reading Reports, Text-Books, and Statutes. It is wholly within the discretion of the judge, in charging the jury, whether or not to read from legal text-books,[53] reported cases,[54] or from the statute.[55] While it is a sufficient charge to read from a decision the law covering the case,[56] it is not error to refuse to do so, or to refuse to read from an elementary writer on request.[57]

2. Nature and Elements of Crime — a. Defining Offense. A definition by the court of the crime charged, in precise and accurate language, setting forth the essential constituents thereof is indispensable.[58] When the offense is statutory the definition may be given in the exact words of the statute,[59] and the court need not charge as to its elements at common law.[60] The penalty of the statute need not be stated in the definition.[61] In reading the statute it is error for the court to read that portion thereof which does not define the crime charged, but defines another and distinct crime,[62] unless he expressly limits the application of the statute to the charge in the indictment.[63] It is error to instruct that the jury may convict without finding a particular and material fact which constitutes one of the ingredients of the crime for which the accused is being tried.[64]

b. Several Offenses or Counts. Where several offenses are charged the court should define and instruct as to each,[65] but it is not necessary to instruct separately where the same crime is charged in two or more counts of an indictment, the only difference between them being in the allegation of the method by which it was accomplished.[66]

e. Time and Place of Offense. It is not error to instruct that it is sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime was committed at or about the time alleged,[67] or within a given period, although the date cannot be definitely ascertained,[68] if such time as found is within the period of limitations.[69] An instruction is not fatally defective because it does not inform the jury that they must be satisfied that the alleged crime was committed in the county named in the indictment.[70]

d. Corpus Delicti. It is the duty of the court to charge the jury that they should acquit the accused if the corpus delicti is not proved,[71] and to instruct them against treating evidence offered and tending to prove intent or guilty knowledge only as proof of the corpus delicti.[72] The court should also instruct the jury against considering, as tending to prove the corpus delicti, evidence having no such tendency, but merely tending to connect defendant with the crime;[73] but it need not distinguish between circumstantial and other evidence tending to establish the corpus delicti.[74]

e. Motive. It is proper to instruct that the absence of a probable motive is a circumstance in favor of the accused,[75] or at least a circumstance to be considered in weighing the evidence of guilt;[76] but if the offense is clearly made out it is not necessary to prove motive, and the court may properly so charge or refuse a request to charge to the contrary.[77]

f. Intent. The court must properly instruct the jury as to the intent necessary to constitute the crime charged.[78] It is proper to charge that the intent is for the jury to determine,[79] and that it may be inferred from defendant's acts and the circumstances surrounding them.[80]

g. Defenses. An instruction which, while stating the charge or the evidence against the accused, omits to charge the jury as to the defense set up by him is error,[81] unless the defense is properly submitted to the jury in other parts of the charge.[82]

3. PRINCIPALS AND ACCESSARIES. When a defendant is charged as an aider and abetter or accessary before the fact, or where he is charged as a principal and the evidence tends to show that he did not himself commit the act, the court must correctly instruct the jury as to what is necessary to constitute him an aider and abetter or an accessary, as the case may be.[83] An instruction is erroneous if it authorizes the jury to convict defendant because of his presence, or because of his mere mental approval or consent, without requiring that he shall have aided in or encouraged the commission of the crime.[84]

4. INSANITY — a. Evidence Justifying or Requiring Instruction. If there is any evidence bearing directly upon the condition of defendant's mind and tending to show that he was insane when the crime was committed, it is error to refuse an instruction as to his mental condition and as to the responsibility of insane persons;[85] but in the absence of such evidence an instruction on insanity is neither necessary nor proper.[86] An instruction that assumes that defendant's

Charges in disparagement of the defense of insanity should not be given to the jury.[90]

5. Intoxication — a. Evidence Justifying or Requiring Instruction. An instruction which in stating the law assumes that defendant's intoxication at the date of the crime is in issue is not proper where there is no evidence that he was then intoxicated;[91] but if there is any evidence tending to show his intoxication when he committed the crime, it is proper to give and error to refuse an instruction thereon.[92]

b. Effect of Drunkenness. Under the general rule that drunkenness is no excuse for crime[93] an instruction in a case not coming within an exception to the rule that if the jury have a reasonable doubt whether defendant's conduct was inspired by his intoxication they must acquit is properly refused.[94] And where it appears from the evidence that defendant was sober enough to form the necessary specific intent, it is error to charge that drunkenness as a separate element should be considered by the jury.[95] But where the actual existence of a specific intent is necessary to constitute the particular kind or degree of crime, and there is evidence of drunkenness which may negative such intent, the court should charge that the jury may take into consideration the fact that the accused was intoxicated in determining the intent with which he committed the act.[96] And a charge on mental incapacity produced by voluntary intoxication is proper, although it does not appear that the accused was intoxicated when he committed the crime, if there was evidence that his mind was affected by the previous habits of intoxication.[97] A charge on insanity produced by intoxicating liquors need not

6. ALIBI — a. Necessity of Special Instruction. The general rule[99] is that where defendant's evidence tends to prove an alibi, a refusal to instruct specially on the law of alibi is error.[1]

b. Sufficiency of Charge — (I) IN GENERAL. It seems to be the better rule[2] to charge that if the evidence of an alibi in connection with all the other evidence raises a reasonable doubt of the presence of the accused at the place of the crime he should be acquitted.[3]

(II) TIME NECESSARILY COVERED. According to some authorities an instruction that to establish an alibi successfully the evidence of the alibi must so cover the whole time of the transaction as to render it impossible that defendant could have committed the crime is erroneous;[4] but it has been held that such an instruction is unobjectionable when the jury is further instructed that upon the whole case, and every material part of it, they are to give the accused the benefit of any reasonable doubt arising out of the evidence;[5] and it has been expressly decided that an instruction "that to render an alibi satisfactory the evidence must cover the whole of the time of the transaction in question" is proper.[6]

c. Effect of Failure to Prove. A charge that an unsuccessful attempt to prove an alibi is always a circumstance of great weight against the accused is reversible error;[7] but the jury should be instructed that an attempt to prove an alibi by the introduction of false or fabricated evidence constitutes a circumstance against the accused.[8]

d. Disparaging Alibi. As a general rule it is error to charge in language tending to disparage an alibi as a defense, or to cast suspicion on the evidence introduced to establish it.[9] It is not, however, error to warn the jury that evidence of an alibi should be considered with caution[10] or care,[11] if at the same time an instruction is given which tells the jury that if defendant shall raise a reasonable doubt by his evidence of alibi they ought to acquit.

7. Character — a. Necessity of Instruction. Where no evidence of defendant's character has been introduced,[12] or where it has not been attacked,[13] no instruction on character is required.

b. Generating Reasonable Doubt. The proper instruction to be given as to character is that evidence of good character is to be considered in connection with all the other evidence upon the question of guilt or innocence, and that when so considered it will sometimes create a reasonable doubt, when without it none would exist, but that evidence of good character is unavailing when after giving it due weight the evidence still shows the accused to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.[14]

c. Effect of Bad Character. An instruction which withdraws from the jury evidence of bad character admitted to impeach the accused may be properly refused.[15] It has been held that an instruction as to the effect which the jury might give to the bad character of the deceased in a prosecution for homicide was properly refused.[16]

d. Effect of Failure to Prove Character. The court should not, in its charge to the jury, call attention to a failure on the part of defendant to introduce evidence of good character.[17]

Evidence artificially important.— Where any portion of the evidence has a presumptive weight given it by law the court must but it is proper for the court to charge that everyone is presumed to know the law.[21] An instruction that persons are presumed to intend the consequences of their voluntary acts is generally held unobjectionable;[22] and it is not error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury that "malice cannot be inferred."[23] The presumption of guilt arising from the flight of defendant is at most one of fact, and the jury should be instructed so to consider it in connection with other circumstances.[24] In order to justify a charge that the suppression of evidence may be considered by the jury, it should be shown that the evidence suppressed would shed light on the issue, and that it was in the possession or under the control of the party alleged to have suppressed it.[25] It is error to charge that a presumption of law does not continue after the production of any competent evidence to the contrary.[26]

b. Burden of Proof. An instruction which in substance tells the jury that the burden of proof has shifted during the trial and that it has become incumbent on defendant to prove a certain defense is error.[27]

Failure to call witnesses see supra, XII, A, 2, b.

Withholding evidence.— It has been held that an instruction that if evidence within the power of the accused, and not accessible to the state, is withheld by him, the jury are authorized to infer that if produced it would be against him is unobjectionable. State v. Rodman, 62 Iowa 456, 17 N. W. 663.

Proof evenly balanced.—And it is also error to charge that if the proof left the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused in equipoise, the jury could not on that account acquit. Winter v. State, 20 Ala. 39.

b. Necessity For Definition. It is not necessary for the court in its instructions to define or explain the words "reasonable doubt";[30] and, at least in the absence of a request by the defense, a failure to define reasonable doubt is not error.[31]

c. Sufficiency in General. A charge to acquit, if the jury have a doubt of defendant's guilt, is properly refused, as the doubt must be a reasonable doubt.[32] A charge is erroneous which authorizes a conviction on the mere belief of the jury instead of requiring them to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt.[33]

d. Negative Definitions. A reasonable doubt is not mere conjecture or speculation,[34] or one suggested by the ingenuity of counsel, or arising from a merciful inclination to permit defendant to escape, and prompted by sympathy for him or

No state of proof short of a substantial admission by accused of all the facts essential to guilt will justify the withholding of a charge of reasonable doubt. State v. Ackerman, 62 N. J. L. 456, 41 Atl. 497.

Facts hypothesized.— It is not necessary, however, to instruct that the jury must believe facts hypothesized as absolutely true beyond a reasonable doubt. Clark v. State, 105 Ala. 91, 17 So. 37.

30. The idea intended to be expressed by these words can scarcely be expressed so truly or so clearly by any other words in the English language. There are, however, definitions or paraphrases of these words which have been held to be good by the courts. When the words "reasonable doubt" are defined by statute, the statutory definition should be followed in the judge's instructions. State v. Potts, 20 Nev. 389, 22 Pac. 754.

Where the doctrine is declared by statute, in instructing on reasonable doubt it is best simply to follow the language of the statute. Jolly v. Com., 110 Ky. 190, 61 S. W. 49, 22 Ky. L. Doubt upon all the evidence.— It is proper to instruct that a reasonable doubt sufficient to acquit exists, if after an impartial comparison and consideration of the evidence the jury candidly say that they are not satisfied of defendant's guilt. U. S. v. Meagher, 37 Fed. 875. Hence, inasmuch as the doubt must arise on all the evidence, it is error to charge that if the jury have a doubt growing out of any part of it they may acquit, as such doubt, if they have it, may be dissipated by other evidence. those connected with him.[35] So also a mere misgiving of the guilt of the accused is not a reasonable doubt.[36]

e. Absolute Proof. It is not error to refuse to charge that unless the jury have an "absolute and abiding belief" in defendant's guilt,[37] or believe him guilty "beyond all doubt,"[38] or are "indubitably certain" of his guilt,[39] they must acquit. The court should not give any instruction which requires belief beyond that degree of moral certainty which excludes all reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused.[40]

f. Possibility of Innocence. It is proper to instruct that a reasonable doubt to authorize an acquittal must be a substantial doubt arising on the evidence, and not a mere possibility of innocence.[41]

g. Substantial Doubt. A charge which defines a reasonable doubt as an actual, honest, and substantial misgiving or doubt of guilt arising from the evidence or want of evidence, and not a mere captious or ill-founded doubt, is correct.[42]

h. Moral Certainty. It is correct to charge the jury that they must be convinced to a moral certainty of defendant's guilt in connection with a charge that they must be convinced beyond all reasonable doubt,[43] for these phrases are by some of the cases regarded as equivalent to each other.[44]

i. Abiding Conviction. It is proper to instruct the jury that a reasonable doubt exists when, after the entire evidence has been compared and considered by them, their minds are left in such a condition that they cannot say that they have an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge against the accused.[45]

j. Conscientious Belief. An instruction which defines proof beyond a reasonable doubt to be such proof as satisfies the judgment and conscience of the jury, as reasonable men applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime was not committed by the accused and so satisfies them as to leave no other reasonable conclusion possible has been held to be correct.[46]

k. Belief or Doubt as Men. An instruction is not erroneous which tells the jury that they are not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors if from the evidence they believe as men,[47] and that the oath which they take as jurors imposes no obligation to doubt where no doubt would have existed if the oath had not been administered.[48]

Reasonable man as the test.— An instruction that the degree of evidence required to convict defendant must be such as to remove all doubt from the mind of a reasonable man is incorrect. It should be such as to remove all reasonable doubt, for a man, although reasonable, may entertain an unreasonable doubt (Padfield v. People, 146 Ill. 660, 35 N. E. 469); but a charge that a reasonable doubt is such as a reasonable man would have after a careful investigation of any important subject that prevents his being able to come to a satisfactory conclusion about it is correct (Johnson v. State, 89 Ga. 107, 14 S. E. 889). Nor is it error for the court to define a reasonable doubt as such a doubt as would cause a reasonable man to hesitate and pause. Minich v. People, 8 Colo. 440, 9 Pac. 4.

l. Doubt Influencing Action in Private Affairs. Whether or not a reasonable doubt can be properly defined as such a doubt as a reasonable man would act upon, or decline to act upon, in the more weighty and important matters relating to his own affairs, is a question which has been frequently discussed,[49] and as to which the authorities are not uniform.

m. Doubt For Which Reason Can Be Given. The correctness of an instruction in which a reasonable doubt is defined as one for which a reason can be given has been the subject of discussion in a number of cases.[50]

n. Suspicion or Probability of Guilt. Even though the evidence establishes a strong suspicion or a probability of the guilt of the accused he should not be convicted, and the jury should be so charged.[51]

o. Probability of Innocence. An instruction that a probability of defendant's innocence is a just foundation for a reasonable doubt of his guilt, and therefore for his acquittal, asserts a correct legal proposition.[52]

The contrary has been held, however, on the ground that such an instruction tends to relieve the jury from the obligation of their oath. Siberry v. State, 133 Ind. 677, 33 N. E. 681 [following Cross v. State, 132 Ind. 65, 31 N. E. 473].

p. Doubt Arising From Want of Evidence. An instruction that a reasonable doubt must be one suggested by or arising out of the evidence adduced is erroneous, as it excludes all reasonable doubts that may arise from the lack or want of evidence.[53]

q. Doubt Upon Any Fact. While all the essential facts constituting a crime must be established beyond a reasonable doubt, it is not required that each link in the chain of circumstances relied upon to establish defendant's guilt should be so proved. It is sufficient if, taking the testimony altogether, the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant is guilty.[54]

10. Accomplices[55] — a. In General. When the state introduces the evidence of an accomplice, it is a general rule of practice to caution the jury as to the danger of convicting upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, and the jury should be instructed as to the necessity of corroboration in cases where corroboration is required by statute;[56] but where there is no evidence tending to show that any witness for the state is an accomplice, it is proper to omit to charge the law applicable to accomplice testimony.[57] If, however, a witness is an accomplice, the accused is entitled to an instruction on accomplice evidence, although there be other evidence besides that of the accomplice tending to show his guilt.[58]

b. Extent of Corroboration. The instructions should properly state the extent of the corroboration required,[59] and should explain what is meant by the terms "material to the issues" and "corroborated."[60] The court need not, however, instruct that the corroboration should be beyond a reasonable doubt.[61]

11. Admissions and Confessions — a. In General. Where no confession has been admitted in evidence, a refusal to charge on the law of confessions is proper.[62] So also if there is no evidence, or only insufficient evidence to show that a confession is involuntary, a request to charge that it should not be considered if the jury believe it to be involuntary is properly denied.[63]

b. Corroboration. Where the corpus delicti has been abundantly proved,[64] it is not necessary to instruct that a confession will not justify a conviction unless accompanied by proof of the corpus delicti.[65]

64. But where it is doubtful whether a crime has been committed at all, the jury

c. Excluding Involuntary Confession. Where a confession has gone to the jury upon preliminary proof that it was voluntary, and it subsequently appears during the trial that it was involuntary, it is the duty of the court to withdraw such confession from the consideration of the jury, and to instruct them that they should wholly disregard it.[66] And when the court undertakes to analyze or define what makes a confession voluntary, both members of the definition should be presented to the jury, to wit: the slightest hope of benefit or the remotest fear of injury.[67]

d. Weight and Credit. It is well settled that it is proper to instruct the jury that the weight of confessions and the degree of credit to be given to them is for the jury to determine under the circumstances of the case; but the authorities are not so uniform as to whether the court should go further and caution the jury[68] as to receiving confessions, or tell them that deliberate confessions of guilt shown to have been voluntarily made are regarded as among the most satisfactory proofs obtainable, such a charge being regarded by some authorities as infringing the rule which forbids charging upon the weight of evidence.

Conviction not made necessary by corroboration.— In instructing that proof of the corpus delicti is necessary as corroboration of the confession to sustain a conviction, the court should not so speak that the jury may infer that a confession thus corroborated will require a conviction, but it should leave them free to pass upon the question whether or not the corroborative evidence, with a confession, is enough to justify them in convicting the accused. e. Silence Under Accusation. It is proper to instruct the jury that they may take into consideration the fact that defendant remained silent when accused of the crime.[69]

f. Statements Favorable to Defendant. The jury should be instructed that when the admissions or confessions of defendant are introduced in evidence by the state, then the whole of the admissions or confessions are to be taken together,[70] and that if such admissions or confessions contain exculpatory or mitigating statements, the state is bound by them, unless they are shown to be untrue by the evidence.[71]

g. Referring to Statements as "Confessions." Inasmuch as admissions and declarations are but circumstantial evidence of guilt and in no sense confessions, an instruction which characterizes them as "confessions" is erroneous.[72] So also a charge is erroneous which makes no distinction between deliberate confessions and statements or declarations uttered in casual conversation.[73]

12. Purpose and Effect of Evidence — a. Evidence Against Joint Defendants Limited to One. Where several defendants are jointly tried, evidence competent against one or more of them only and not against all cannot be excluded for that reason, but a defendant against whom it is not competent has a right to a charge by the court limiting its application and effect,[74] or declaring that it is not to have

Where several distinct voluntary confessions or declarations made by defendant are introduced in evidence, some more favorable to him than others, it is for the jury to determine which account is the true one, and a charge which leaves the jury to infer that they are not to take into consideration the accounts most favorable to him is erroneous. b. Limiting Evidence Admitted For a Specific Purpose — (I) In General. Where evidence admissible for one purpose only has been admitted for that specific purpose, an instruction limiting it to that purpose must be given.[76]

(II) Impeaching Evidence. Where evidence, otherwise inadmissible, is introduced to impeach either a witness for the accused or the accused himself when he testifies, the court should on request charge that this evidence shall be considered by the jury only on the question of the credibility of the witness or the accused, and not to show the guilt of the accused.[77]

(III) Other Crimes. When evidence of other crimes is admitted, it should be carefully limited and guarded by instructions to the jury, so that its operation and effect may be confined to the legitimate purpose for which it is competent.[78]

13. Explaining Rules of Evidence — a. In General. Although the jury are the exclusive judges of the weight and credibility of the evidence, it is proper for the court to tell them in the instructions what rules they may apply in determining that weight and credibility.[79]

b. Positive and Negative Testimony. While as a general rule it is proper to instruct the jury that positive testimony outweighs negative testimony, the witnesses being equally credible,[80] yet it has been held that the rule relating to the distinction between positive and negative evidence does not apply, and should not be given in a charge to the jury where there are two witnesses having equal facilities for seeing and hearing the thing about which they testify, and directly contradicting each other, one of them testifying that it occurred and the other that it did not.[81]

c. Disregarding Improper Evidence. It is proper for the court in its charge, although not requested to do so, to withdraw from the consideration of the jury any incompetent evidence which has been admitted by mistake.[82]

d. Reference to Conviction of Innocent Men. It is proper to refuse an instruction which in substance states that it is better that ninety-nine guilty per-

When limiting instructions unnecessary.— When the purpose of admitting evidence of other crimes is clearly apparent and no instruction is asked limiting the purpose of such evidence, the omission of such an instruction is not error. State v. Gaston, 96 Iowa 505, 65 N. W. 415. When defendant is indicted for receiving stolen goods, and evidence is offered showing the theft at the same time of other goods than those charged in the bill of indictment, an instruction should usually be given limiting the purpose for which such evidence can be considered, but it is not absolutely necessary to give such instruction unless the character of the property stolen contemporaneously with that charged is such that the jury might convict for that offense. Com. v. Clark, 145 Mass. 251, 13 N. E. 888.

sons should escape than that one innocent person should suffer,[83] or that the punishment of the innocent is a greater evil than the acquittal of the guilty, or that it is the policy of the law to acquit rather than to convict.[84]

e. Reasonableness of Evidence. A charge that the jury has a right to look to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of any testimony, and if they believe the statement of any witness is unreasonable and contrary to their observation and experience they may disregard it, is misleading.[85]

f. Jury Exclusive Judges of Facts. Independently of a statute requiring such a charge to be given,[86] it is not usually necessary to instruct the jury that they are the sole judges of the weight of evidence or of the credibility of the witnesses,[87] although it is not reversible error for the court to do so.

g. Lessening Sense of Jurors' Responsibility. It is error for the court, after impressing on the jury the care they should use in their deliberation, to give them any instructions which may tend to cause them to be indifferent in the proper discharge of their duty.[88]

14. CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE — a. Necessity For Instruction. Where the prosecution relies solely upon circumstantial evidence, the court must always instruct upon the nature of circumstantial evidence.[89] Such evidence should be expressly

Instruction as to possibility of mistakes.— A charge which, while stating that innocent persons have been convicted, requires the jury to determine the issues from the evidence, and ends, "if all criminals must go free because there is a possibility of making mistakes, society might as well disband," was held erroneous. People v. Travers, 88 Cal. 233, 26 Pac. 88.

Testimony of one witness.— Where the testimony showing an act on the part of defendant is positive, but is stated by one witness only, an instruction that if there was a possibility that such witness was mistaken the jury should acquit was properly refused. Rulings of court.— It is not necessary to instruct the jury that rulings by the court, made during the trial, should not be considered as intimating the court's opinion as to what the verdict of the jury ought to be. Lyons v. People, 137 Ill. 602, 27 N. E. 677.

88. People v. Harris, 77 Mich. 568, 43 N. W. 1060. Thus it is error for the court to tell the jury that they are not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors what they would believe as men, and that their oath imposes on them no obligation to doubt, where no doubt would exist in its absence, as this instruction tends to relieve them from the obligation of their oath. defined, and the rules governing its effect concisely stated.[90] Where there is direct evidence sufficient, if believed, to convict, an instruction on circumstantial evidence, although there be such evidence in the case, is properly refused.[91] Thus proof of a confession by defendant renders a charge on circumstantial evidence unnecessary.[92]

b. Form and Sufficiency of Instructions. The law does not require that a charge upon circumstantial evidence or any other subject should be couched in any particular set of words or phrases.[93] Where the evidence is circumstantial it is proper to charge that circumstantial evidence is legal and competent, and, if it is of such a character as to exclude every reasonable hypothesis other than that defendant is guilty, it will authorize a conviction.[94]

c. Links in the Chain. Some authorities hold that an instruction that the law requires the jury to be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of each fact of the circumstances proved or, as it is often put, of each link in the chain of circumstances, is error, as it is enough if a reasonable doubt arises from the circum-

Moral certainty.— An instruction that defendant must be acquitted unless the evidence excludes to a moral certainty every hypothesis but that of guilt, omitting the word "reasonable" (Crawford v. State, 112 Ala. 1, 21 So. 214), or that the test of the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence is whether it is as clear and convincing as the evidence of an eye-witness (Thornton v. State, 113 Ala. 43, 21 So. 356, 59 Am. St. Rep. 97), is properly refused.

Probabilities of the case.— An instruction that minds will form their judgments on circumstances and act on the probabilities of the case is error, since the jury are not at liberty to act on probabilities. People v. O'Brien, 130 Cal. 1, 62 Pac. 297.

Reasonable inferences from circumstances. — An instruction that circumstantial evidence is to be regarded by the jury and that, when strong and satisfactory, they should so consider it, neither enlarging nor belittling its force, and that they should make those reasonable inferences from the circumstances which the guarded judgment of a reasonable man should ordinarily make under like circumstances is correct. Smith v. State, 61 Nebr. 296, 85 N. W. 49.

Harmless remark of court.—A remark that "many, probably a majority of, convictions are had upon circumstantial evidence" is not error if defendant's guilt is submitted to the jury with full and fair instructions. Funk v. U. S., 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 478.

stances taken as a whole.[95] Others, however, require that each separate fact or link tending to show guilt must at least be proved satisfactorily to the jury,[96] or beyond a reasonable doubt;[97] and that if the jury entertain doubt as to any of the facts they may acquit.

d. Consistency With Hypothesis of Guilt. Where all the evidence is circumstantial, a refusal to instruct that the circumstances, to warrant a conviction, must be consistent with each other, must tend to prove guilt, and must be consistent not only with the hypothesis of defendant's guilt, but must be inconsistent with every other reasonable hypothesis, including the hypothesis of his innocence, is error.[98]

As compared with direct evidence.— An instruction that circumstantial evidence is not only legal evidence, but also that a well-connected chain of circumstances is as conclusive of the fact as the greatest array of positive evidence, is proper when accompanied with a further instruction as to the certainty with which circumstantial evidence must establish guilt. Gantling v. State, 40 Fla. 237, 23 So. 857.

Concurrence of circumstances.— The following instruction was held proper: "A few facts, or a multitude of facts proved, all consistent with the supposition of guilt, are not enough to warrant a verdict of guilty. In order to convict on circumstantial evidence, not only the circumstances must all concur to show that the defendant committed the crime, but they must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion." State v. Andrews, 62 Kan. 207, 208, 61 Pac. 808.

e. Weight and Effect. An instruction which tells the jury what weight they may or must give to circumstances in order to convict is erroneous;[99] but an instruction merely defining the nature of circumstantial evidence,[1] or pointing out the degree of certainty required as compared to or in connection with direct evidence,[2] is correct.

15. Credibility of Witnesses — a. Necessity For Instruction. It is not necessary to instruct the jury that they have a right to discredit the testimony of any witness when, from the facts before them, they are satisfied that the witness is unworthy of belief.[3] Where there is no impeaching evidence,[4] a failure to charge on the impeachment of witnesses is not error.[5] Where witnesses have not contradicted themselves, a charge that if witnesses contradict themselves the jury may consider that fact is properly refused.[6] An instruction which attempts to throw discredit upon certain evidence introduced by the state should be refused.[7]

b. Sufficiency of Instruction. An instruction which tells the jury that they are exclusive judges of the facts and of the weight of the evidence, and that where there is a conflict in the evidence it is their duty to reconcile it if possible, which they may do by determining which testimony is entitled to the greatest credibility, taking into consideration the appearance, intelligence, interest, bias, and prejudice of the witnesses, their manner of testifying, the probability of their stories, and all facts and circumstances which can aid in weighing their testimony, is sufficient and proper to be given.[8]

c. Effect of Impeaching Evidence. An instruction that evidence to prove that a witness had made contradictory statements out of court is introduced to discredit him and to show that he had sworn falsely,[9] but that such evidence is uncertain and somewhat unreliable, because persons are liable to misunderstand and repeat incorrectly what they hear,[10] is proper. An instruction that it does not follow that because a witness may be impeached his testimony shall be entirely excluded from consideration, and that in such case it is for the jury to decide for themselves what weight shall be given to the testimony of such a witness, taking into consideration all corroborating circumstances and testimony, if any exist, is not erroneous.[11]

d. False Testimony. The jury should not be instructed that if they find the testimony of a witness false as to certain material facts stated by him, or false in part as to a material fact, they may discard all the evidence.[12] An instruction that if the jury find that any witness has wilfully sworn falsely upon any material point, then the entire testimony of such witness is to be distrusted, is sufficient.[13]

e. Referring to Penalty For Perjury. An instruction that it has been provided by statute that a witness who wilfully and corruptly, and with intent to take away the life of a person, bears false testimony against him, and thereby causes such person's life to be taken, shall suffer death is proper.[14]

16. Credibility of Testimony or Statement of Accused — a. Necessity For Instructions. It is usually necessary, where the accused testifies, to instruct the jury that he is a competent witness for himself under the statute, unless perhaps where his testimony was immaterial.[15] On the other hand it is not usually neces-

Effect of fear.— It is always proper to charge on the preliminaries which must be proved before contradictory statements can be proved (Evans v. State, 95 Ga. 468, 22 S. E. 298), and that if the statements were made under the influence of fear of one's life they shall not be considered as impeachment (Williams v. State, 69 Ga. 11).

Explanation of contradictory statements.— A charge which in effect makes it the duty of the jury to believe the witness if he satisfactorily accounts for his former false statement is error, as they have a right to believe him notwithstanding he made prior false statements under oath, and on the other hand they are not compelled to believe him if he explains why he did so, particularly if he be a person of bad character. Reinhart v. State, 102 Ga. 690, 29 S. E. 443.

Good character.— Where the witness is impeached directly, evidence of good character for veracity should be considered by the jury. Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 9, 29 S. E. 309, 65 Am. St. Rep. 277; Hart v. State, 93 Ga. 160. 20 S. E. 39.

sary, even under a statute requiring the court to instruct on all questions of law, to give a special charge on the credibility of the accused as a witness.[16]

b. Sufficiency of Instructions. It is proper to instruct that in weighing his evidence the jury may consider defendant's manner of testifying, the reasonableness of his account of the transaction,[17] the surrounding facts and circumstances,[18] and that they may judge it by the same rules given for weighing other evidence.[19] They should be told that they have no right to disregard it or to refuse to give it any weight merely because it is the accused who testifies,[20] but that if they are not satisfied it is true they may disregard it.[21] Instructions calling the attention of the jury to defendant's interest in the result, as affecting his credibility, have been held proper.[22]

17. Failure of Accused to Testify — a. In General. In those jurisdictions where it is provided by statute that when defendant does not testify his silence shall not be considered against him by the jury, and that such failure raises no presumption of his guilt, an instruction to this effect is not erroneous,[23] unless there is some statutory provision prohibiting the giving of the same.[24] In quite a number of cases it has been held that the court need not give such an instruction unless requested to do so;[25] but the right of the court to so instruct, of its own motion, without request, has been frequently decided.[26]

b. Unfavorable Comment. An instruction commenting unfavorably upon the failure of the accused to testify, and intimating to the jury that they may draw an inference against him from his silence, is error.[27] The same rule applies to a failure to make an unsworn statement permitted under a statute.[28]

although giving an instruction in such a case on the lower degree of the offense may not be an error of which defendant can complain.[33]

e. Instruction to Acquit of Higher Grade. An instruction that if the accused shall be acquitted of the higher degree the jury may or should find defendant guilty of the lesser one ought to be accompanied by an instruction that in finding him guilty of the lower degree of the crime their verdict should expressly acquit him of the other and higher degree.[34] The same rule applies where the evidence fails to prove that the crime has been consummated and the jury are advised that they may convict of an attempt.[35]

d. Instruction on Higher Grade Than That Charged. It is error to instruct as to an offense which exceeds in grade or degree the offense for which the accused is indicted.[36]

e. Reasonable Doubt of Grade or Degree. It is proper to charge that if the jury believe the accused is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, but have a reasonable doubt as to the degree of his offense, they should give him the benefit of that doubt and convict him of the lower degree.[37] But it has been held that it is sufficient for the court to charge that the accused is entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt without charging specially as to a reasonable doubt of the degree of the crime.[38]

19. PUNISHMENT — a. In General. Where the assessment of the punishment is in the discretion of the jury, they should be charged that if they find the accused guilty they should assess the punishment;[39] and it is reversible error to give an

Va. 718, 22 S. E. 310, holding it to be the duty of the court to instruct the jury as to their right to fix the punishment, upon request made after announcement of their verdict.

Discretion of jury.—It has been held proper to refuse to instruct the jury how they should exercise their discretion in assessing punishment. People v. Kamaunu, 110 Cal. 609, 42 Pac. 1090. Compare, however, Powell v. State, 21 Ark. 509. The court, in defining the limits of the power and discretion of the jury, should strictly follow the statute. An instruction that the jury may, in their discretion, assess a fine is properly refused where a statute directs that they must assess a fine not less than a prescribed amount. Welsh v. State, 126 Ind. 71, 25 N. E. 883, 9 L. R. A. 664. Where the jury have a discretion whether to assess a fine, or to leave the imposition of the punishment to the court, it is error to instruct that they must assess the punishment. Bibb v. State, 84 Ala. 13, 4 So. 275.

Sufficiency of instructions.— An instruction that the jury should fix the punishment between certain limits, as, in their discretion and judgment, the evidence seems to require, is sufficient. Boggs v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 82, 41 S. W. 642.

Sympathy and considerations of mercy.— An instruction that the jury in fixing the penalty should be guided wholly by the evidence, under the instruction of the court, and not by considerations of mercy or sympathy, is proper. Dinsmore v. State, 61 Nebr. 418, 85 N. W. 445.

"Without capital punishment."—In Louisiana the jury has a discretion, where the punishment pronounced by law is death, to add to their verdict "without capital punishment" and should be so instructed. State v. Obregon, 10 La. Ann. 799.

Necessity for assessing punishment.— It is instruction which states incorrectly the punishment which should be assessed by the jury,[40] even though the punishment actually assessed by the jury is within the limits of their discretion as prescribed by statute.[41] The jury should be told, where the statute empowers the court to assess the punishment in case the jury fails to do it, that if they find defendant guilty, but omit to declare his punishment, the court may pronounce the highest punishment.[42] An instruction as to the statutory punishment is properly refused where the jury has no power to fix or to recommend the punishment,[43] and where no statute confers on the jury the right to assess the punishment, it is not error to tell them that they have nothing to do with the punishment or with the consequences of the verdict, but that they are merely to determine whether or not defendant is guilty.[44] Merely reading to the jury the statute which fixes the punishment is not error.[45]

b. Several Counts. Where two or more offenses subject to different punishments are embraced in the same indictment, they should be treated separately in instructing as to the penalty attached to each;[46] and a conviction will be reversed where the court incorrectly stated that a penalty was applicable to one count, which in fact was applicable to another.[47]

20. Recommendation to Mercy. It is error to instruct the jury that they can recommend the prisoner to the mercy of the court, where the law gives the judge no discretion in passing sentence upon a convicted prisoner,[48] and where the jury is not authorized to recommend a convicted prisoner to mercy it is not error to so instruct.[49] On the other hand, when it is provided by statute that the jury may recommend the accused to the mercy of the court, it is error according to some of the cases for the court to refuse or to fail to so instruct them,[50] or for the erroneous to instruct the jury that they "have the right and authority to return a general verdict of guilty, without assessing any punishment," when the power of the court to assess and declare punishment is merely contingent and only to be exercised in case of a failure of duty or disagreement of the jury. Fooxe v. State, 7 Mo. 502.

Confinement in reformatory.— The Texas statute, providing for the confinement in a reformatory of youthful offenders, is mandatory, and it is the duty of the court to give an instruction based on this statute. Washington v. State, 28 Tex. App. 411, 13 S. W. 606. As to the sufficiency of instructions on this subject see Rocha v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 69, 41 S. W. 611; Duncan v. State, 29 Tex. App. 141, 15 S. W. 407.

Disposition of convicts.— An instruction, although requested by the jury, with reference to the disposition of convicts by the county commissioners, is properly refused where the court has fully instructed them with reference to the statutory punishment to be fixed by the jury. And where the statute provides that there may be imposed both fine and imprisonment, an instruction which only informs the jury that they may impose either is error. Moody v. State, 30 Tex. App. 422, 18 S. W. 94. Failure of jury to understand instructions. — Where the court has properly instructed court, in the instructions given, to limit or to interfere with the power and discretion of the jury in this respect.[51]

21. FORM AND BASIS OF VERDICT — a. Form. The judge should carefully instruct the jury as to what verdicts will be responsive to the indictment,[52] and may properly furnish them with a form of verdict for them to follow in case they convict.[53] If it is desired by defendant that an instruction as to the form of verdict, in case of his conviction of a lesser offense, should be given, it is his duty to prepare and ask such an instruction.[54] The court need not, in the absence of a special request, instruct on the form of a verdict of insanity[55] or of acquittal.[56]

b. Several Defendants. Where several defendants are tried together, the jury should be instructed that they may find some of such defendants guilty and some not guilty.[57]

c. Independent Judgment of Jurors. The oath taken by jurors binds each of them severally to render a true verdict, according to the evidence, upon his own judgment and conscience, and not that of his fellows, and no instruction which intimates anything to the contrary should be given.[58] It is the duty of jurors, however, in arriving at a verdict, to consult each other, to pay proper respect to each other's opinion, and to listen with candor to each other's arguments, and therefore an instruction should not be given which would have the effect of impressing upon an obstinate juror that he is never to yield to the arguments or reasoning of his fellow jurors.[59] An instruction that each juror should be satisfied beyond the jury that a recommendation to mercy would reduce the penalty from death to imprisonment for life, a new trial will not be granted on the affidavits of jurors that they did not understand the instructions. State v. Aughtry, 49 S. C. 285, 26 S. E. 619, 27 S. E. 199.

Tendency to induce compromise verdict.— A charge calling attention to the fact that the jury have the privilege of recommending the accused to mercy after a verdict of guilty is not open to the objection that it tends to produce a compromise verdict. Sterling v. State, 89 Ga. 807, 15 S. E. 743.

Judge's approval necessary.— The judge should state that the recommendation is effectual only when approved by him, if this is the law. Echols v. State, 109 Ga. 508, 34 S. E. 1038. See also Fogarty v. State, 80 Ga. 450, 5 S. E. 782; Green v. State, 71 Ga. 487.

a reasonable doubt that the accused is guilty before a verdict against him is found is correct,[60] and according to some authorities must be given upon request.[61] Other authorities, while conceding its correctness, deny the necessity of giving it when proper instructions have been given on the general doctrine of reasonable doubt.[62] It is proper to charge the jury that it is a reasonable doubt entertained by the jury, and not by one member thereof, that justifies an acquittal.[63] The jury should not be given an instruction which means that if a majority are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, still if one is not satisfied the majority should yield and concur in a verdict of acquittal.[64]

d. Excluding Improper Considerations. An instruction telling the jury that they are not to be controlled in making up their verdict by fear of what the punishment may be,[65] by outside pressure for a conviction, or by an undue appeal to their sympathy,[66] is proper.

e. Personal Knowledge, Experience, and Common Sense. An instruction which authorizes the jury to base their verdict as well upon their personal knowledge and experience as upon the evidence legitimately in the case is erroneous.[67] But it has been held not to be error to charge the jury that "in arriving at a correct verdict, they should consult their general knowledge and their own experience of life,"[68] or to apply to the facts of the case the same rules of good common sense, subject always to a conscientious exercise of it, that they would apply to any other subject coming under their consideration and demanding their judgment.[69]

f. Arguments of Counsel. It is not error to instruct the jury to regard the statements of counsel made in argument with caution,[70] or to disregard assertions of their belief in the innocence of the accused,[71] or to warn them against attaching too much importance to cases of innocent men convicted on circumstantial evidence, which are read by defendant's counsel,[72] or to speak generally of the sophistries of counsel.[73] And when counsel in the heat of argument takes a position which is not well founded and is calculated to create an erroneous impression upon the mind of the jury, the court may in its charge call attention to and correct such impression.[74] But an instruction limiting the influence of legitimate statements and arguments of counsel should not be given.[75]

22. Formal Requisites of Instructions — a. Time of Giving. It is not error for the court, before evidence is introduced, to state to the jury their duties and the rights of the accused,[76] or to instruct them as to the evidence which may be introduced;[77] and this charge is considered a part of the general charge. But the trial court cannot be required to instruct during the taking of evidence on abstract legal propositions which may or may not be applicable.[78] The order in which requested instructions may be given, whether before or after the general charge, is in the judicial discretion.[79]

b. Language. An instruction should be so explicit and so closely connected with the facts of the case as to enable the jury to apply the law to the facts. It must present the law substantially and correctly, and in such a way that it will be understood by the jury,[80] and if it does so it is sufficient.[81] Failure to follow the language of a statute is not error where the instruction fairly embraces its meaning.[82]

c. Written Instructions — (i) In General. By statute in many of the states, and as a rule of practice in others, instructions in criminal trials are required to be wholly in writing unless oral instructions are consented to.[83] These statutes torted and misrepresented the facts and telling the jury that they are not to consider his argument is error, where there is no evidence of counsel's misconduct. Gibson v. State, 26 Fla. 109, 7 So. 376.

Curing error in giving oral instructions.— The error in charging orally may be cured by withdrawing the instructions as given, reducing them to writing and reading them, with a direction to disregard the oral charge given (People v. Garcia, 25 Cal. 531), but filing a written copy of the oral charge after verdict does not cure the error (Territory v. Duffield, 1 Ariz. 58, 25 Pac. 476; Territory v. Dorman, 1 Ariz. 56, 25 Pac. 516).

are generally mandatory.[84] Under such statutes charging orally, in addition to or in explanation of the writtten charge, is usually error.[85] The defendant may under some statutes waive his right to have an instruction given in writing by express consent.[86] In some states an oral charge may be given unless one in writing is requested.[87]

(11) Signature and Sealing. In Texas the statute requiring the signature of the judge to be subscribed to the written instructions is mandatory, and his failure to sign is error.[88] Elsewhere it has been held that a failure to sign the instructions when they are handed to the jury is cured by subsequently filing them,[89] or by incorporating them in the bill of exceptions.[90] In Florida the statute requiring charges of the court to juries to be sealed[91] has been repealed, and the law now only requires them to be signed by the judge.[92]

(III) MARKING "GIVEN" OR "REFUSED." In some states statutes require that the judge shall mark on each instruction asked "Given" or "Refused."[93] Such a statute applies only to instructions requested, and not to those given by the court of its own motion.[94]

d. Weight of Instructions. An admonition to the jury, before reading the charge, to pay careful attention to each word and sentence of it, so that they may be advised of the law of the case, is proper, and need not be in writing.[95] A charge that they should attach as much importance to written charges given on request as to any other charges is properly refused.[96]

e. Grouping Instructions. It is not reversible error for the court to divide its instructions into sections and read each separately, unless they are conflicting.[97] The better practice, however, is to bring together all instructions bearing on the same question.[98]

23. ARGUMENTATIVE INSTRUCTIONS. Argumentative instructions when requested are properly refused, and the giving of such instructions, when prejudicial to the accused, is error.[99]

ering the evidence,[2] or withdraws competent evidence from them,[3] or is ambiguous, obscure, or uncertain,[4] or unintelligible,[5] or meaningless,[6] or contradictory,[7] or likely to confuse,[8] or difficult to understand and calculated to mislead.[9] If a portion of a charge which is misleading is intelligible and correct when read in connection with another portion, there is no error.[10]

b. As to Duty of Jury. An instruction that it is not for the jury to say whether defendant did wrong or not, and that they are only to consider the wrong charged in the indictment, is misleading and erroneous;[11] and the same is true of an instruction that while the law seeks to punish the guilty and to check crime it never attempts to do so by punishing the innocent, or even "the reasonably doubtful innocent,"[12] and of an instruction that "the jury has no right to pardon any one for any offense whatever; and, if they are satisfied, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant is guilty in manner and form as charged in the indictment, then it would be a gross violation of their duty as jurors to acquit him through sympathy or a spirit of condonation of his offense."[13]

c. As to Weight and Credibility of Evidence. An instruction which tells the jury that some part of the testimony of a witness may be corroborated by other portions,[14] or draws a distinction between evidence which the jurors may believe as men and evidence which they have a right to believe as jurors,[15] or permits them to base their verdict on what the court vaguely calls circumstances as distinct from the actual facts of the crime,[16] or tells them, without further explanation, that the law makes no distinction between circumstantial and positive evidence,[17] or permits them to found a verdict of acquittal upon a reasonable doubt as to the credibility of a witness,[18] or upon a disbelief of the evidence generally,[19] is misleading and erroneous.

d. As to Burden of Proof and Reasonable Doubt. The instructions requested as to reasonable doubt and burden of proof are frequently confusing and misleading, and when they are so should always be refused.[20]

e. Inconsistent and Contradictory Instructions. When a general charge may be divided into two propositions, if either proposition, when separated, is not applicable to the evidence,[21] or if the two propositions are conflicting and irreconcilable, the charge is erroneous.[22] The practice of giving conflicting instructions, although not intended to be conflicting and leaving the jury to conjecture which of them is applicable to the facts, is not favorable to the correct administration of justice. The court should tell the jury the state of facts to which if proved the proposition of law announced is applicable.[23]

25. Giving Undue Prominence to Particular Matters. The court should be careful in charging the jury and stating the evidence not to give undue prominence to any phase or facts which the evidence tends to establish, but to leave the jury to determine its weight and importance.[24] It is therefore proper to refuse and generally error to give an instruction which singles out or emphasizes particular parts of the evidence or gives undue prominence to isolated facts,[25] or Illustrations.— A charge that affirmative testimony is entitled to more weight than negative, but that if other witnesses who were present stated that the acts were not done their testimony was entitled to equal weight with the affirmative evidence is erroneous, as being contradictory. Keith v. State, 49 Ark. 439, 5 S. W. 880. The same is true of a charge that "all men, sane or insane, act from motive," and if the accused "had no motive" it might be considered in support of his plea of insanity (Blume v. State, 154 Ind. 343, 56 N. E. 771), and of an instruction which tells the jury that "a mere preponderance of evidence would suffice to convict," and also states that "defendant's guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt" (People v. Levalie, 6 N. which directs the attention of the jury to a particular fact among a great number of facts.[26] An instruction which singles out certain witnesses and makes an acquittal depend upon whether or not the jury believe them is error where the evidence is conflicting.[27] So the court cannot select a particular witness or class of witnesses and instruct that if the jury believe he or they wilfully testified falsely as to any material fact they may reject or distrust all their evidence.[28] An instruction, requested by the accused, which singles out the absence of one of several possible motives on his part for the commission of the crime,[29] or calls attention to the fact that possession of stolen property by him in larceny was open,[30] or selects any other fact which is favorable to him and charges specially thereon may properly be refused.[31]

Warning the jury.— The fact that the court repeats threats and declarations of the accused for the purpose of warning the jury against placing too much confidence in them as evidence is not giving such evidence undue prominence. People v. Neary, 104 Cal. 373, 37 Pac. 943.

Reasonable doubt.— A charge designating any particular branch of the case for the state and telling the jury that unless it is proved beyond a reasonable doubt they must acquit is erroneous, as a reasonable doubt must be on all the evidence and not on any particular fact. Colored witnesses.— Where all the state's witnesses are colored and defendant's witnesses are white, it is not error to tell the jury that if they believe the black witnesses told the truth beyond a reasonable doubt it was their duty to convict on their evidence. Dolan v. State, 81 Ala. 11, 1 So. 707.

Protecting witness.— An instruction does not give undue weight to the evidence of a witness by protecting him from the unjust attack of counsel which was caused by an erroneous ruling of the court. State v. Whit, 50 N. C. 224, 72 Am. Dec. 533.

serious one which should not escape punishment,[33] or which characterizes as an outrage a transaction with which the crime charged is connected,[34] is not necessarily error. But in so far as instructions criticize unfavorably the character of the defense offered, or of the evidence which is introduced to sustain it, they are erroneous.[35] Speaking in an instruction of the deceased in a trial for murder as the "victim" has been held to be error.[36] On the other hand an instruction which calls attention to the fact that defendant is a man of family and assumes that he has a good character from his age may properly be refused.[37] It is not error for the court to instruct the jury that the case is in the court by reason of a change of venue from another county.[38]

b. Pointing Out Duty to Jury. An instruction which, while properly stating the degree of proof required to convict, tells the jury that they will, if satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, be derelict in their duty if they fail to convict, is not error.[39]

c. Public Opinion. It is not error to caution the jury not to be influenced by public opinion, whether for or against the accused, and to state to them that they have nothing to do with the pleasure or displeasure of the public.[40]

d. Admonition to Bystanders. An appeal or admonition to the spectators by the judge, under the solemn sanction of his oath, as a part of his charge, although irregular, is not error if it does not prejudice defendant in the minds of the jurors.[41]

e. Irrelevant Matters Not Prejudicial. An instruction containing observations by the court, unfavorable to the accused, absolutely irrelevant to any issue in the case, while improper because of the irrelevancy does not constitute reversible error, unless the statements mislead or tend to mislead the jury to the prejudice of defendant.[42]

27. Application to Issue or Evidence — a. General Rule. The sufficiency and correctness of instructions must be determined with reference to the evidence, and therefore a charge which asserts correctly an abstract principle of law, but is not applicable to the evidence, or which is based upon the assumption of the existence of material facts of which there is no evidence, should not be given.[43]

c. Credibility of Supporting Evidence. It is proper to refuse an instruction not based on any evidence, but it should be given if there is any evidence, although slight, which will authorize the jury to find upon it, although in the opinion of the trial court it may be weak, inconclusive, and unworthy of belief.[45] The court is not justified in refusing to charge on defendant's theory of the case because it does not believe the evidence which supports it.[46] If there is a conflict between the evidence on which the instruction is desired and other evidence, it is for the jury to reconcile.[47]

d. Ignoring Evidence. The court should not give an instruction ignoring material evidence or attempting to withdraw it from the consideration of the jury, or to divert their attention from it.[48]

To justify an instruction, the theory to which it is applicable must arise fairly and naturally from the evidence. Reynolds v. State, 8 Tex. App. 493. Instruction based on defendant's testimony.— The defendant is entitled to instructions predicated on his own testimony (State v. Anderson, 86 Mo. 309), although it be contradictory (State v. Partlow, 90 Mo. 608, 4 S. W. 14, 59 Am. Rep. 31), and although it may appear incredible to the court (People v. Keefer, 65 Cal. 232, 3 Pac. 818; State v. Fredericks, 136 Mo. 51, 37 S. W. 832). State v. Pollard, 139 Mo. 220, 40 S. W. 949. It is not error for the court to refuse to charge on facts which appear only from defendant's declarations out of court (Smith v. State, (Tex. Cr. e. Application to Evidence. Where the court charges correctly on the rules of law in the abstract, it is error to refuse, on request, an instruction which will apply these rules to the facts;[49] and usually the instructions should be framed as far as possible to apply to the particular facts of the case.[50]

28. Construction and Correction — a. Construction of Instructions. An instruction must be construed with reference to the evidence on which it is based;[51] regard is to be had to the connection and interdependence of its several clauses;[52] and words are to be construed in connection with that portion of the charge from which they are taken.[53] Where instructions state the law with substantial accuracy, and are otherwise unobjectionable, a new trial will not be granted because of verbal omissions,[54] mistakes in punctuation,[55] or slight verbal inaccuracies which do not prejudice the accused.[56] The instructions must be considered by the jury in their entirety, and not by isolated paragraphs. Hence the fact that an instruction when taken from its context is incomplete, erroneous, or misleading will not justify granting a new trial, where the instructions taken as a whole are substantially correct.[57] A general proposition of law correctly stated

The applicability of a charge is tested by the pleadings and evidence. The object of a charge is to enable the jury to adduce the proper conclusion from the evidence, and to accomplish this it should be confined and adapted to the facts in proof. Berry v. State, 8 Tex. App. 515.

b. Errors Cured by Subsequent Instructions — (i) Requests Refused and Instructions Omitted. An erroneous refusal to give an instruction requested is cured by the court subsequently giving in substance the instruction requested;[59] and where the instructions as given are incomplete the defects may be supplied by giving supplementary instructions.[60] If the jury have retired they may be recalled for the purpose of giving them an instruction previously refused or omitted.[61]

(ii) Incorrect Statement of Law. An instruction which states the law incompletely, or so as to confuse or mislead the jury, or even incorrectly in part, is cured by a subsequent statement of the judge, fully, correctly, and clearly giving the law, when it appears that no substantial right of defendant was prejudiced by the incomplete or partially incorrect instruction.[62] On the other hand

a palpable misstatement of the law in an instruction is not cured by a subsequent instruction which contradicts it and correctly states the law on that point, unless the incorrect instruction is expressly withdrawn from the jury.[63] When, however, an erroneous instruction is expressly admitted to be such, and is formally withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, and a correct instruction given, there is no ground for a new trial.[64]

(III) CURING INVASION OF PROVINCE OF JURY. It is well settled that in the federal courts the judge may express his opinion on the questions of fact which he submits to the jury when he further tells them that they are the sole judges of the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses;[65] and in a few of the state courts the same rule seems to obtain.[66] Most of the cases, however, repudiate this proposition and hold that an instruction which invades the province of the jury is not cured by a subsequent instruction of this character.[67]

H. Requests For Instructions — 1. Necessity For Request — a. In General. The practice as to giving instructions when no request is made is not uniform in the different states. The general rule seems to be that if defendant is not satisfied with the charge as delivered by the court, he should submit such instructions as he desires, with a request that they be given,[68] and if no request is made, the omission to give particular instructions is not reversible error, particularly when

In Indiana it is provided by statute that if special instructions are desired in a criminal case they shall be reduced to writing the charge given covers the facts of the case and states the law applicable thereto,[69] presents the case fairly,[70] and guards the substantial rights of defendant.[71] Where it is the practice for the judge to charge the jury in a criminal case, it seems that he should, with or without request, instruct them as to the general principles of the law which of necessity must be applied by them in reaching a correct conclusion upon the question submitted for their consideration.[72] In some jurisdictions the rule is that the law applicable to the case as it is developed in the evidence should be given, whether requested or not.[73]

b. Special Defenses. It has been held that when desired a special instruction must be requested as to such defenses as alibi,[74] drunkenness,[75] and self-defense.[76]

c. Rules of Evidence. A failure to instruct on the rules regulating the admission and the exclusion of evidence, its character, weight, effect, corroboration, or impeachment, is not error where such an instruction is not specially requested.[77]

In Missouri it is provided by statute that the court must instruct the jury in writing upon all questions of law arising in the case which are necessary for their information in giving a verdict, and a failure to so instruct in case of a felony is good ground for granting defendant a new trial. State v. Heinze, 66 Mo. App. 135; State v. Kolb, 48 Mo. App. 269. The statute is in the main merely declaratory of the rule of practice adopted by the courts before its enactment. d. Reasonable Doubt. A failure to define "reasonable doubt" is not reversible error where an instruction embodying the definition is not specially requested.[78] A charge that defendant is presumed to be innocent until proved guilty should be given, although not requested;[79] and it is error to refuse to charge as to the presumption of innocence whenever asked, even though the jury has already been fully instructed on the subject of reasonable doubt.[80]

e. Failure of Accused to Testify. A failure to instruct that the jury are not to consider the failure of the accused to testify in his own behalf to his prejudice is not reversible error, where this instruction is not specially requested.[81]

Texas rule.— While by statute it is the duty of the court, on the trial of all cases of felony, to instruct the jury as to the law applicable to the facts of the case before them, yet the law has as a general thing left it to the sound discretion of the court to determine the character, and particularly the extent, of the charge to be given. It cannot be expected that a court, in a simple charge to the jury, will attempt to instruct them in every branch or principle of law which might be applied to any particular case or state of facts. If the charge of the court is not satisfactory, it is the right of defendant or his counsel to ask such instructions as he thinks proper, and in the absence of such request he cannot assign as error the omission of the court to give them. (11) Writing. Under the statutes or rules of practice of some jurisdictions, a requested instruction may be refused if not offered in writing,[87] and in Indiana it must be signed by the party or his counsel.[88]

b. Time For Request. In some jurisdictions requested instructions may be refused without error, unless presented before the closing argument;[89] but in others a requested charge presented at the conclusion of the general charge, if before the jury has retired, is not too late.[90] The court may properly refuse an instruction not requested until after the jury has retired,[91] and it has been held proper to refuse an instruction requested when the jury returns after being out for some time without being able to agree.[92]

c. Argument of Requests. The denial of permission to read and discuss requested instructions is within the discretion of the court.[93]

3. Disposition of Requests — a. On Points Covered. The court not being required to repeat instructions which have been given in substance, it is not error to refuse to give for defendant a requested special instruction on a point which has already been properly and sufficiently covered by the general charge, although it may not or which has already been properly covered by another special instruction previously given by the court at defendant's request.[95]

b. Partly Erroneous. When an instruction embodying both a correct and an incorrect proposition of law is requested, it is not error to refuse to give it.[96] Where instructions containing several propositions of law are requested as a whole, it is not error to refuse to give all if they contain a single erroneous proposition of law.[97] It is not the duty of the court to pick out the unobjectionable part and charge thereon, while rejecting that which is erroneous.[98]

c. Modification by Court. The court has the right to modify the special instructions requested where they are incorrect, to supply improper omissions and to reject irrelevant and erroneous statements contained therein.[99] The court is Reconciling improper instructions.— It is error for the court to hand the jury submitted and requested instructions with an admonition to follow them so far as they conform to the general charge. Not only must the jury take the law from the lips of the court, but the accused is entitled to a full, fair, and plain statement to them of what the law is. If the instructions requested are in part erroneous, the court should have corrected them or refused them altogether. Lang v. State, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 433, 1 S. W. 318.

Erroneous modification.— The modification of a correct instruction so as to render it liable to misconstruction, and to mislead the jury is error. Young v. State, 24 Fla. 147, 3 So. 881; State v. Green, 20 Iowa 424.

2. In Alabama the statute requires that charges asked in writing shall be given or refused in the terms in which they are written. Blair v. State, 52 Ala. 343; Hogg v. State, 52 Ala. 2; Baker v. State, 49 Ala. 350. Under the statute the court has no right to qualify, limit, modify, or restrict the charge. If it needs qualification, restriction, or modification to make it a correct legal proposition as applicable to the evidence the court should refuse it. Eiland v. State, 52 Ala. 322; Edgar v. State, 43 Ala. 45. The court may, however, explain a charge which, although asserting a correct proposition, is inapt, or involved in expression, or has a tendency to mislead unless explained. Eiland v. State, 52 Ala. 322 [distinguishing Edgar v. State, 43 Ala. 45]. See also Ward v. State, 78 Ala. 441. And it is proper for the court to modify a charge requested orally, since this statute applies only to charges requested in writing. Richardson v. State, 54 Ala. 158; Warren v. State, 46 Ala. 549.

3. If therefore he thinks that by altering the phraseology he can without altering the sense render the instruction more intelligible to the jury, it is wholly in his discretion to do so, although the instruction be not objectionable as a statement of the law.

Law read by counsel.— Defendant has a right to an express charge by the court on proper requests submitted. It is not enough to charge that the jury must take the law as read by counsel in argument perhaps many hours before. Such a course is calculated rather to confuse than to enlighten the jury. Roe v. State, 45 N. J. L. 49.

Reading without oral comment.—A statute which requires requested charges to be written precisely as they are desired to be given, and requires them to be read to the jury, if at all, without one word of oral comment, is imperative and not directory. Failure to obey it is error. Newman v. State, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 164. It is also error under this statute to read a portion of a law-book as a part of the charge, for it is the plain duty of the judge to commit or cause someone to commit every word of his charge to writing and deliver it to the jury when they retire. Manier v. State, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 595. It is also improper practice under this statute for counsel to read requested instructions in the hearing of the jury. They should be handed to the judge who after he has examined and committed them to writing should charge as much thereof as to him may seem just and proper. State v. Missio, 105 Tenn. 218, 58 S. 2. Time of Objections. As a general rule objections and exceptions to charges given or to failure to instruct as requested must be taken at once when the charge is given and before the jury retire.[10] They will not be considered on appeal[11] or on a motion for a new trial,[12] unless this rule is complied with.

so approached and influenced;[16] but it has been held that an unimpeached affidavit that the jury have been kept where they were exposed to improper influences makes a prima facie case, and casts upon the prosecution the burden of showing that the jury have not been so exposed or that the exposure was of such a nature that it could not or did not influence them.[17]

b. Places Where Jury May Go. A new trial will not be granted merely because the jury in a body, while in the charge of the officer, attended a theater[18] or a church,[19] walked through the jail,[20] or had their pictures taken in a photograph gallery,[21] or in a capital case, while taking a ride by permission of the court, were carried by the scene of the homicide,[22] or being out for exercise were taken beyond the confines of the state[23] or county.[24]

c. Furnishing Eatables and Other Articles to Jury. By the rules of the common law jurors are not permitted to eat or drink during their retirement without permission of the court, and they are liable to fine if they take anything to eat or drink into the room with them, although they do not actually partake thereof;[25] but their eating during retirement, unless done at the cost of the prosecutor, will not avoid a conviction.[26] It is proper, however, to permit jurors to be supplied with medicine,[27] changes of clothing,[28] and other necessaries, where it can be done without exposing them to unfair influence.

d. Illness of Juror. Where after the jury have retired a juror becomes ill, but is able after medical assistance to resume his place, and it is not shown that the illness was of such a character as to unfit him to pass upon the case or that there was any illegal separation of the jurors, there is no ground for awarding a new trial.[29] If a juror becomes so ill during the trial as to be incapable of joining in the deliberations or verdict or if a juror dies the jury must be discharged.[30]

e. Absence of Jury From Room During Argument. It has been held that where the court is the exclusive judge of the law and the jury must accept it as laid down by his instructions, it is not error to permit them to retire temporarily during the argument of a question of law addressed to the court.[31]

2. Jury in Charge of Officer — a. In General. In trials for felony the jury were required at common law to be kept together in charge of a sworn officer during adjournments, and this rule is still enforced to some extent, particularly in the case of capital felonies.[32] The sheriff or his deputy is the proper officer to take custody of the jury during an adjournment, or after they have retired, where custody is necessary.[33] Where they are disqualified or otherwise unable to act, the trial judge may appoint an officer,[34] or he may take charge of the jurors himself.[35] The fact that an officer is sworn and testifies as a witness does not disqualify him from acting as bailiff in charge of the jury during their deliberations.[36]

b. Oath of Officer — (i) In General. At common law, and in some states under mandatory statutes, it is necessary to swear the officer who has charge of the jury during their retirement, and a failure to do so may be ground for a new trial.[37] The contrary has also been held, and some of the authorities approve the court's action in dispensing with a special oath on the ground that the sheriff or other officer is merely performing his official duty, and is consequently bound by his oath of office.[38]

(ii) Requisites. The form of oath as given in the statute prescribing the oath which shall be administered to the officer must be substantially followed. The officer is usually sworn to keep the jury together during the adjournment, and to suffer no person to converse or communicate with them on any subject connected with the trial, and not to do so himself.[39] An error in this particular is not cured by proof that the bailiff did all that a proper statutory oath required him to do.[40]

c. Manner of Guarding Jury. The fact that one of two officers having the jury in charge was temporarily absent, the jury being left in charge of the other,[41] or that one bailiff was substituted for another during their retirement,[42] is not ground for a new trial.

3. Separation of Jury — a. Before Submission of Case — (i) In Misdemeanor Cases. In trials for misdemeanors the court may always, even at common law, allow the jury to separate before they retire to consider their verdict, but they should be cautioned not to converse with any one about the case.[43]

(ii) In Felony Cases—(a) In General. In all trials for felony it was necessary at common law to keep the jury together in charge of an officer, and not to permit them to separate, from the time of their being impaneled and sworn.[44] In most jurisdictions this rule still applies, in the absence of a statute, in the case of capital felonies,[45] and in some it applies in the case of felonies not capital.[46] In other jurisdictions it has been regarded as within the discretion of the court to allow a separation before the case is finally submitted to them in the case of felonies not capital,[47] and even in the case of capital felonies.[48] In many states the matter is now regulated by express statutory provisions prohibiting or allowing a separation of the jury under certain circumstances.[49]

(B) Separation by Consent. In many jurisdictions it has been held that when a rule of practice or statutory provision requires that the jury shall be kept together, defendant cannot waive his rights in this respect, particularly in the case of capital felonies by requesting or consenting to a separation, since defendant ought not to be placed in the position of having to consent or perhaps prejudice the jury by withholding consent.[50] Other decisions, however, are to the contrary.[51] Defendant's counsel cannot give consent.[52]

(C) Effect of Improper Separation. Improper separation of the jury in a criminal case is not equivalent to an acquittal, but at most merely entitles defendant to a new trial;[53] and as will be shown in another place, it does not necessarily entitle him to a new trial.[54]

(D) Necessary Separation. The rule that the jury must be kept together does not apply, even in capital cases, to temporary separation of one or more jurors from the others in cases of necessity, where the separating jurors are in charge of an officer and are not allowed to communicate with other persons.[55] Where a juror is permitted to separate from his fellows, an order to that effect should be entered, and an officer should be sworn to have custody of him, not to converse with him about the trial, or permit others to do so, and to cause him to return as soon as possible.[56]

b. Before Completion and Swearing of Jury. By the weight of authority the fact that the court allowed the jurors to separate, or that one or more of them separated from the others without leave of the court, before the jury was impaneled and sworn, is not ground for a new trial or reversal.[57] Those who have separated need not, on the reassembling of the jury, be reëxamined on their voir dire.[58]

c. After Retirement For Deliberation. After the case has been finally submitted to the jury and they have retired to consider their verdict, they must in all cases be kept together in charge of a sworn officer and not be permitted to separate before they render or at least find and seal their verdict.[59] Whether or not an improper separation is ground for a new trial is elsewhere considered.[60] statute, as by a statute requiring the jury to be kept together until the verdict is declared or rendered.[62]

e. After Defective Verdict. The separation of the jury on their discharge after a defective verdict,[63] or after a verdict delivered in the unobserved absence of defendant,[64] is not ground for a new trial where, being still in court, they are at once recalled and the irregularity corrected.[65]

f. Warning the Jury. When the jurors are permitted to separate, they should be admonished by the court not to hold conversations among themselves or with any persons about the case.[66] In some states it is expressly provided by statute that the court must at each adjournment caution the jurors against discussing the case, and to omit this admonition, although by oversight, and although the omission is not objected to at the time, has been held to be error.[67]

4. Misconduct of Jurors and of Others Affecting Them — a. In General. In all criminal trials the jury must conduct themselves properly, and care must be taken to keep them free from improper influences. Misconduct on their part, or misconduct affecting them on the part of the judge, the officer having them in charge, or outsiders, which was or may have been prejudicial to defendant, will be ground for setting aside a conviction and granting a new trial.[68]

b. Taking Refreshments and Intoxicating Liquors. The jury may properly be furnished with necessary food and refreshments from a proper source,[69] but according to the weight of authority they should not be furnished with or indulge in the use of intoxicating liquors.[70]

c. Communication of Jurors With Outsiders. After the jury have retired, or even before then in trials for felony, they should not be allowed to hold any communication with outsiders.[71] It is improper to allow them to be or remain where they can hear outsiders discussing the case,[72] or to read newspapers in which the case is discussed,[73] or letters by which defendant may be prejudiced.[74] Such misconduct, unless it appears that defendant was not prejudiced, will generally be ground for a new trial.[75]

d. Communications Between Jurors and Officer. The officer having charge of the jury, before or after they have retired to consider their verdict, should not hold any communication with them further than to ask them whether they have agreed on a verdict, or to attend to their necessities, and any such communication, if it may have been prejudicial to defendant, will be ground for a new trial.[76] A new trial will not be granted, however, because of communications between the jurors and the officer which, although improper, could not prejudice defendant.[77]

e. Presence of Officer or Judge in Jury Room. It is improper and may be ground for a new trial for the officer in charge of the jury to remain in the jury room while they are deliberating.[78] The same is true of the judge. He may recall the jury and communicate with them in open court,[79] but he cannot properly go to the jury room to communicate with them or remain in the room while they are deliberating.[80]

f. Conversation Among and Taking of Notes by Jurors. Conversation among the jurors or the taking of notes by them is not of itself misconduct, and unless it is of an improper character and prejudicial to defendant, it is not ground for a new trial.[81]

5. Deliberation and Mode of Reaching Verdict — a. Deliberation. The law does not require the jury to deliberate on their verdict for any particular period.[1] It is a matter of discretion with the court.[2] The jury should, when possible, after their retirement, deliberate and discuss the case as a body.[3]

b. Papers and Articles Which May Be Sent to Jury — (I) Documents in Evidence. Usually, either by statute or as a rule of practice, the pleadings and all papers in evidence are delivered to the jury on their retirement.[4] But permitting papers and documents unfavorable to the accused, which have not been produced as evidence in the case, to be taken by the jury into their room and read and considered by them during their deliberation is error.[5] If counsel for the accused believe that papers not in evidence are being sent into the jury room he should promptly object before the jury retire, and request that they be instructed not to consider them.[6] Where one side requests that some of the documentary evidence shall be sent to the jury, it is error to refuse a request of the other to allow them to take the remainder.[7]

e. Appearance and Conduct of Accused. The jury may properly consider the appearance and behavior of the accused, not only while he testifies but throughout the trial.[16]

f. Statements by Jurors. g. Manner of Reaching Verdict — (I) Quotient Verdict. It is generally misconduct on the part of the jurors, justifying a reversal, for them to agree, after they have found the accused guilty, that each shall set down on paper the term of imprisonment or the amount of the fine which in his opinion should be assessed, that these sums shall be added, the total divided by twelve, and the quotient accepted as the verdict of the jury.[19] If, however, there was no positive prior agreement to abide by the result of this process,[20] or even though there may have been an agreement, if the jury subsequently refused to abide by it and imposed a greater or less punishment than the quotient,[21] it is not error.

(II) Agreement That Majority Determine. Evidence that it was agreed by the jurors that the verdict should be determined by the votes of a majority is not sufficient to set aside a verdict arrived at in disregard of the agreement.[22]

(III) Suggestion of Pardon. A verdict of guilty must be set aside where one juror, not being satisfied of the guilt of the accused, assented thereto on the suggestion of his fellows that the governor would pardon the accused if they recommended it.[23]

6. Aiding or Inducing Determination — a. Additional Instructions — (I) Recalling For. As a general rule it is not error for the court of its own motion[24] or at the request of the jury[25] to recall them to court and to give them further instructions on questions upon which the prior instructions are unintelligible, or which they omitted to touch upon, or upon the rules which shall regulate the framing of their verdict. The accused has a right to have explanatory instructions given when in response to a request by the state the court gives additional instructions.[26]

(II) Refusing Request For. Where the request of the jury calls for an instruction which would invade their province, it is proper for the court to refuse to give it.[27] And on the other hand where the language of a refusal to give an instruction intimates an opinion that the accused is guilty it is reversible error.[28]

(III) When Must Be in Writing. Where the statutes require the court to instruct in writing, it is error to give additional instructions orally.[29]

(IV) Confined to Doubtful Point. In some cases, by statute,[30] and usually in the absence of statute,[31] where the jury requests instructions on particular questions, it is proper for the court to confine itself to such questions.[32]

the jury[33] or to give them additional instructions[34] in the absence of the accused. The presence of defendant's counsel does not cure the error.[35] If he is present the absence of his counsel is not material,[36] unless as in some states the statute expressly provides that notice shall be given to the counsel for defendant.[37]

b. Receiving Evidence During Deliberations. The objection that the jury received evidence during their deliberations should be made before verdict and sustained by affidavits.[38]

c. Reading Minutes and Restating Evidence. It is discretionary with the court, after the jury have returned to court, to permit witnesses to restate their testimony at their request,[39] or for the court to state the evidence,[40] or to read it from a memorandum made by another person, or from the stenographer's minutes,[41] or to permit documentary evidence,[42] or a deposition to be again read to them,[43] if this is done in open court and defendant is present.[44] But the record cannot be sent into the jury room.[45]

d. Communications Between Judge and Jury— (i) In General. All communications between the judge and the jury after they have retired to consider their verdict must be made in open court, the accused and his counsel being present.[46]

(ii) Caution Against Attempt to Tamper With Jury. If rumors have come to the trial judge, creating a reasonable suspicion in his mind that an attempt is being made to tamper with the jury in their retirement, it is not error to recall them and question them as to the rumors and admonish them against attempts to tamper with them.[47]

(III) Promise of Clemency. It is error for the court, in reply to a question by the jury, to promise to exercise clemency in case a verdict of guilty is rendered.[48]

(IV) Urging Agreement. It is proper for the judge after the jury have deliberated for some time to recall them to ascertain why they cannot agree. He may then give them advice calculated to assist them in coming to an agreement;[49] may call the attention of the jury to the fact that the case has entailed great expense on the county;[50] may impress upon them the importance of the case, and urge them strongly to come to some agreement;[51] may ask them if any one has intruded upon their deliberations or attempted to tamper with them;[52] and may direct them to retire for further consideration.[53]

Ct. 84), where the judge told the jury that the court would adjourn in thirty minutes (Maury v. State, 68 Miss. 605, 9 So. 445, 24 Am. St. Rep. 291), that the judge must have a verdict as it was one of a peculiar character and he believed the jury had been tampered with (State v. Ladd, 10 La. Ann. 271), where he tells the jury after they have been out some time that they should make concessions and bring their minds together and that they need not hope to be discharged for a long time (State v. Bybee, 17 Kan. 462), that each of the jurors should try as hard as he can to be persuaded and to try and persuade themselves by listening to the arguments of those not agreeing with them (People v. Engle, 118 Mich. 287, 76 N. W. 502), that if they did not agree the next jury that tried the case could not arrive at a verdict any better than they could, and persisted furthermore in endeavoring to persuade them to surrender their deliberate convictions (State v. Ivanhoe, 35 Oreg. 150, 57 Pac. 317), a new trial will be granted and a verdict of con-which to determine what language by the court is sufficiently coercive to invalidate a verdict. This depends upon the circumstances of each case.[55]

(VI) Directing Further Deliberation. Independently of statute the number of times the court may direct a jury unable to agree to return for further deliberation is in the judicial discretion.[56] If the foreman states that an agreement is probable, it is not error for the court to direct them to return, although they have been out a long time.[57]

7. Discharge of Jury — a. Failure to Agree. In felonies not capital it is within the discretionary power of the court to discharge the jury where there is no reasonable probability that they will agree.[58] The power of the court to discharge the jury in a capital case, under circumstances which would justify it doing so in cases not capital, is now conceded.[59] The length of time which will

b. Manifest Neeessity For Diseharge — (i) Judicial Discretion to Determine. Statutes permitting the court to discharge the jury without the consent of the accused,[61] where there is a manifest necessity for it, exist in some states;[62] and even in the absence of statute prescribing when the jury may be discharged this principle is usually recognized.[63]

(ii) What Constitutes Manifest Necessity. What shall constitute manifest necessity which will justify the discharge of the jury depends always on the circumstances of each case.[64] Thus bias or prejudice on the part of the

The discretion to discharge a jury is a most important trust, in view of the fact that a discharge without sufficient reason is in law substantially equivalent to an acquittal. State v. Shuchardt, 18 Nebr. 454, 25 N. W. 722.

64. Thus if it be discovered that the accused is insane at the trial the jury may be discharged. Gruber v. State, 3 W. Va. 699.

Urgency and necessity.— The following considerations are to be held in view in determining whether the discretion is properly exercised: (1) Whether the jury have deliberated so long as to preclude all reasonable expectation that they will ever agree unless jurors,[65] the act of a juror leaving the jury-box during the taking of the testimony,[66] the end of the term or session,[67] the failure of the prosecution's case,[68] the illness of a juror,[69] or the illness of the prisoner[70] may under certain circumstances warrant the court in discharging the jury.

c. Proceedings and Determination. The jury should not be discharged in defendant's absence, unless he voluntarily remains away.[71] The exercise of the court's discretion in discharging a jury must be based on some proper evidence showing facts which will justify their discharge, and the judgment of the court discharging the jury should be formally entered on the record;[72] and although the discharge of a jury on their failure to agree is no bar to a new trial, the judge's decision that it is necessary to discharge them is conclusive on the accused.[73] forced to do so by physical exhaustion; (2) the exercise of the discretion not arbitrarily but according to all the facts in the case; and (3) the facts constituting the necessity should affirmatively appear on the record, or the discharge will operate as an acquittal. State v. Shuchardt, 18 Nebr. 454, 25 N. W. 722; State v. Ephraim, 19 N. C. 162; Dobbins v. State, 14 Ohio St. 493.

65. Whenever it is made to appear to the court that either by reason of facts existing when the jurors were sworn, but not then known to the court, or by reason of influences brought to bear on them during the trial, the jurors, or any of them, are subject to such bias or prejudice as not to stand impartial between the state and the accused, the jury should be discharged. Simmons v. U. S., 142 U. S. 148, 12 S. Ct. 171, 35 L. ed. 968.

66. The act of a juror in leaving the box and the court-house during the taking of the testimony, without leave and without being noticed by any one, warrants the discharge of the jury and a new trial. Reg. v. Ward, 10 Cox C. C. 573, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 220, 16 Wkly. Rep. 281.

67. Where, pending the deliberation of the jury, it being beyond apparent probability that they will agree, the end of the term arrives or the court has disposed of all its business, the jury may properly be discharged (Barrett v. State, 35 Ala. 406; Powell v. State, 19 Ala. 577; In re State, 7 Ala. 259; Josephine v. State, 39 Miss. 613; State v. Moor, Walk. (Tenn.) 70; Williams v. Com., 2 Gratt. (Va.) 567, 44 Am. Dec. 403) if it appears that the term cannot be continued (Com. v. Fitzpatrick, 121 Pa. St. 109, 15 Atl. 466, 6 Am. St. Rep. 757, 1 L. R. A. 451).

A discharge of the jury before the expiration of the term and against the objection of the accused, merely because the other business of the court is finished and the jury have not agreed, is unauthorized and amounts to an acquittal. Ex p. Vincent, 43 Ala. 402.

68. Where the indictment proves defective (State v. England, 78 N. C. 552), or a very material witness for the prosecution refuses to answer (Reg. v. Charlesworth, 2 F. & F. 326), or is so grossly intoxicated that he is unable to testify intelligently (Hughes v. State, 35 Ala. 351), by reason of which the prosecution cannot prove its case, the discharge of the jury is proper.

69. The court may properly, even in a capital case (State v. Scruggs, 115 N. C. 805, 20 S. E. 720; Com. v. Clue, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 498) and after the jury have retired (Hector v. State, 2 Mo. 166, 22 Am. Dec. 454) discharge the jury without the prisoner's consent, where, because of the illness of a juror, it is impossible to proceed with the trial (Lee v. State, 26 Ark. 260, 7 Am. Rep. 611; Atkins v. State, 16 Ark. 568; West v. State, 42 Fla. 244, 28 So. 430; Stout v. State, 76 Md. 317, 25 Atl. 299).

In England the court might with the prisoner's consent swear another juror in place of the one who had been taken ill, but the better practice was to discharge the jury. 1 Chitty Cr. L. 630; 2 Leach Cr. L. 621 note b.

72. People v. Cage, 48 Cal. 323, 17 Am. Rep. 436. The sickness of a juror as reason for a discharge must be determined by the court as any other fact. State v. Smith, 44 Kan. 75, 24 Pac. 84, 21 Am. St. Rep. 266, 8 L. R. A. 774. A report of his illness made to a court officer by telephone is not sufficient. State v. Nelson, 19 R. I. 467, 34 Atl. 990, 61 Am. St. Rep. 780, 33 L. R. A. 559. The fact that the jury cannot agree must be determined by the court on evidence (Ex p. Maxwell, 11 Nev. 428), and it is not sufficient that the jury state that they cannot agree without the court making some effort to ascertain whether it is probable that they will agree (Ladd v. State, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. 276). If fraud in the impaneling of the jury or tampering with the jury be a sufficient cause for their discharge, under a statute which permits a discharge for the sickness of a juror or other accident or calamity, the fraud must be proved by clear and convincing evidence. K. Verdict — 1. Rendition and Reception — a. Delivery — (I) In Open Court. The verdict in all cases of felony must be delivered in open court[74] in the presence of defendant.

(II) By Whom and to Whom Delivered. As a matter of practice, and often by statute, the verdict must be delivered to the clerk by the foreman.[75] The presence of the judge at the delivery of the verdict is indispensable, but if he is there to receive it, it is not material that the clerk is absent if he afterward records it.[76]

(III) Time of Delivery — (A) Holidays and Sundays. A verdict may be received on Sunday[77] or on any dies non juridicus.[78]

(B) After Term or During Adjournment. A verdict which is received after the expiration of the term is void, unless the court has power to receive it under a statute.[79] So a verdict delivered to the clerk during recess,[80] without the permission of the court or the consent of the parties, and in the absence of defendant and the judge, should be set aside and a new trial ordered.[81]

b. Sealing. It is the practice, sanctioned by long usage in criminal cases not capital, on the court taking a recess while the jury is out, for the judge to instruct them to seal up their verdict and separate, if they agree during the recess. They must then come in and affirm it at the next session of the court.[82]

c. Presence of All Jurors. A conviction will be set aside where it appears that all the jurors were not present when the verdict was rendered.[83]

d. Assent of Jury — (I) In General. When the jury agree upon their verdict they return to the box to deliver it. It is the duty of the clerk to call off their names and ask them whether they agree on this verdict.[84] If any juror does not agree in the verdict as rendered, he must express his dissent before it is recorded, for it is not perfected until the jurors have expressed their assent either in this method or by polling.[85]

(II) Polling Jurors — (A) Discretion of Court. According to the majority of the authorities, whether the jury shall be polled is in the discretion of the court;[86] but the rule is by no means universally accepted, and in many of the states it has been held that either party may claim as of right to have the jury polled, and that the action of the court in denying this right is reversible error.[87]

Under the Iowa and Minnesota statutes requiring the jury to be kept together in charge of an officer until they are brought into court, it is error to allow them to seal the verdict agreed upon and separate. State v. Fertig, 84 Iowa 79, 50 N. W. 545; State v. Callahan, 55 Iowa 364, 7 N. W. 603; State v. Anderson, 41 Minn. 104, 43 N. W. 786. But see State v. Thompson, 74 Iowa 119, 37 N. W. 104.

An omission to seal the envelope containing the verdict does not invalidate it where, by being written upon the indictment, it is identified as the verdict agreed upon. Com. v. Slattery, 147 Mass. 423, 18 N. E. 399.

Sealed statement that jury disagree.— Where the jury, being permitted to return a sealed verdict, write a statement as follows: "We, the jury, agree to disagree, so say we all," and separate, reassembling the next morning to affirm this as their verdict, the court will declare a mistrial and discharge the jury. Tervin v. State, 37 Fla. 396, 20 So. 551.

The consent of counsel in open court to a sealed verdict waives objections to the separation of the jury. Pounds v. U. S., 171 U. S. 35, 18 S. Ct. 729, 43 L. ed. 62.

If as customary they reply in the affirmative, the clerk must demand who shall answer for them, to which they reply their foreman. He must then direct the prisoner to stand up or hold up his right hand, and thus address the jury: "Look upon the prisoner at the bar; how say you? Is he guilty of the matter whereof he stands indicted or not guilty?" and the foreman will answer guilty, or not, as the case may be. The clerk then records the verdict, and again addresses the jury as follows: "Hearken to your verdict as the court has recorded it. You say that (name of accused) is guilty (or not guilty, as the case may be) of the matter whereof he stands indicted, and so say you all." Rex v. Arnold, 16 How. (B) Time of. A motion to poll the jurors comes too late if made after the verdict is announced and recorded[88] or after the jury has dispersed.[89]

(C) Manner of. In polling the jurors each should be questioned individually and separately.[90] A juror cannot, however, be questioned concerning his verdict further than to ask, "Is this your verdict?"[91] The juror may be required to answer "yes" or "no," and his detailed explanations may be refused,[92] but the exact words used by the juror in answering are immaterial if they indicate clearly his individual assent.[93]

(D) Effect of Dissent of Juror. When on polling a juror dissents, it is sometimes provided by statute that the jury may be sent back for further deliberation;[94] but although a juror at first answers evasively or in the negative, if he finally acquiesces in the verdict it must be sustained.[95]

2. Form and Sufficiency — a. General, Partial, or Special. A verdict is either general, where the verdict is on the whole charge; partial, where the jury find as to part of the charge, that is, where the prisoner is found guilty on one count and acquitted on the others; or special, where the facts in the case are found and the legal inference of guilt or innocence is referred to the court.[96]

Assent of juror to secure agreement.— Where on polling one of the jurors says he thinks that the prisoner is guilty of a less crime than that found, and that he assented to the verdict for the sake of an agreement, judgment on a verdict of guilty should be reversed (Rothbauer v. State, 22 Wis. 468), and the same action may be taken on a verdict of guilty where a juror answers that he had doubts about defendant's guilt, but on being told that he must answer yes or no, he replied: "Then I will answer yes, because I subscribed to it," and then on being reprimanded he answers "yes" (State v. Austin, 6 Wis. 205).

by statute, and even when writing is expressly required by statute an oral verdict is not necessarily void.[98]

e. Signature. A written verdict need not be signed by the foreman of the jury[99] or by the jurors.[1]

d. Misspelling. Neither bad spelling nor bad grammar will vitiate a verdict when its meaning is clear.[2]

e. Surplusage. A general verdict, which is responsive to the issues, will not be reversed solely because it finds facts not embraced in the issues. Such findings may be rejected as irresponsive and therefore surplusage.[3]

f. Uncertainty. A strict adherence to the statutory form of verdict is not usually required. An informal verdict, if intelligible, is sufficient where it is clearly understood to be a general verdict of guilty or not guilty;[4] but where it is so indefinite and uncertain as to be unintelligible, the court will entertain and sustain a motion in arrest of judgment.[5]

g. Special Verdict. At common law the jury may give a special verdict in all felonies. By this verdict the facts of the case are found by the jury and become a part of the record, and questions of law thereon are submitted to the court to be decided.[6] No particular form of words is necessarily to be followed in framing a special verdict,[7] but it must find all the facts and circumstances which constitute the offense charged to enable the court to render a judgment of guilty; and no defect in the findings can be supplied by the court by any intendment or implication.[8]

h. Responsiveness to Crime Charged. The sufficiency of a general verdict of guilty is determined by ascertaining whether it is responsive to and covers the offense charged in the indictment.[9] So a verdict which finds defendant "guilty as charged in the indictment" is sufficient.[10] The omission from the verdict of the words in manner and form "as charged in the indictment" has been held not to invalidate a conviction.[11]

i. Designation of Persons. The fact that the verdict does not contain the name of defendant,[12] or states it incorrectly in some immaterial particular,[13] does not invalidate it; but a verdict designating him by an entirely different name from that in the indictment is fatally defective.[14] Again immaterial variances[15] as to names between the verdict and the allegations of the indictment, or omitting names of persons other than defendant from the verdict, are not sufficient to invalidate a verdict where it is otherwise intelligible, certain, and sufficient.[16]

(III) Acquittal of One or More and Conviction of Others. Where two are jointly indicted and jointly tried for an offense which could be committed by one alone, there may be a verdict of guilty as to one and an acquittal[20] or a disagreement as to the other.[21] It is error to tell the jury, where two are tried together for the same crime, that if one is convicted both should be.[22]

k. Where Indictment Contains Several Counts — (I) Separate Crimes in Different Counts. A general verdict of guilty is invalid where an indictment is in several counts, each of which charges a separate and distinct offense, of a nature and character radically different from that in the other counts, and having no necessary connection.[23] The same result follows where the offenses, although

(II) Same Crime or Transaction in Different Counts. When but one offense is charged in various forms in separate counts of one indictment, a general verdict of guilty, or of guilty as charged, without mentioning the count on which it is based, is sufficient.[25] The same rule is applicable, although several distinct crimes are charged in different counts, if they all arose out of the same transaction.[26]

(III) General Verdict Referred to Good Count. One good count in an indictment, if sustained by the proof, will support a general verdict of guilty, although there be other counts which are defective.[27] So where there are two or more counts in the indictment, and but one offense in fact is charged, a general verdict of guilty is good if one of the counts be good and the allegations in it are sustained by the evidence.[28]

(IV) Acquittal or Conviction Under One of Several Counts. While in a few of the older cases it has been held that where an indictment contains several counts, although charging distinct offenses, the verdict to be valid must specifically pass upon each and every count,[29] it is now well settled, however, that where several counts are included in the same indictment, a conviction upon one of them may be sustained, although the jury ignores the others.[30] A conviction and judgment upon one of several counts, with no verdict upon the others, is an acquittal as to the other counts,[31] and although the conviction be subsequently reversed, the implied acquittal as to the counts not mentioned in the verdict is a bar to any further prosecution on those counts.[32]

(v) Inconsistent Verdict. If defendant is charged with separate and distinct crimes, although of a similar character, in two or more counts, a verdict of acquittal on one or more counts and conviction on the others is not inconsistent.[33]

l. Where Several Indictments Are Tried Together. Where by consent several indictments against one defendant are tried together a separate verdict must be rendered on each,[34] and the jury should distinguish between the indictments in their verdict[35]

n. Specification of Offense — (I) In General. The verdict must in itself or by a reference to the indictment contain a finding of every essential element of the crime charged.[38]

(II) Degree of Crime. Independently of the statutes requiring a verdict to specify the degree of the crime, it is the rule that where an indictment contains two separate counts or offenses properly joined, one of which charges a higher and the other a lower degree of an offense, a general verdict of guilty, not mentioning the degree, will be presumed to apply to the crime of the higher degree, particularly where the offenses grow out of the same transaction;[39] and if a party is found guilty of the higher grade the jury need not pass upon the lower.[40] It is, however, required by statute in many of the states that where a crime is distinguished or divided into degrees, a verdict of guilty of such a crime must spe-

Separate trial on plea of insanity.— Where a statute provides that a plea of insanity at the time of the crime or at the trial shall first be tried by the jury, they have nothing to do in trying this issue with determining the question of defendant's guilt. p. Assessment of Punishment — (i) Discretion of Jury. A statute which provides that the jury shall assess the punishment does not refer to an offense, the punishment for which is absolutely fixed by statute.[48]

(ii) Assessment of Fine. A verdict which assesses both a fine and an imprisonment will be sustained as to the former, although the imprisonment may be rejected as surplusage where the statute provides that imprisonment shall be assessed by the court.[49]

(iii) Illegal Assessment. A verdict of guilty which in assessing the punishment prescribes imprisonment for a period which is illegal because in excess of the statutory period,[50] or which is less than the minimum punishment the law allows,[51] or a verdict which fails to fix the period of disfranchisement and incompetency to hold office under a statute,[52] is invalid, and a valid judgment cannot be entered thereon. XV. MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIALS AND IN ARREST OF JUDGMENT.

A. Motion For New Trial — 1. Nature and Scope of — a. In General. At common law new trials could not be granted in cases of felony or treason.[73] The contrary was the case in misdemeanors, where a superior court had power to grant new trials on the record being removed from the inferior court by writ of certiorari.[74] In the United States the occasions and procedure for new trials are wholly statutory.[75]

b. Right of Prosecution. In the absence of express statute new trials will not ordinarily be granted on application of the prosecution after an acquittal.[76]

Applications for new trial and for venire de novo distinguished.— Independently of statute, the proper procedure is to apply for a new trial after a general verdict, and for a venire facias de novo after a special verdict, to bring the merits of the case under consideration. The material difference between these two methods is that the venire is only granted for a mistake appearing on the record (Dolan v. State, 122 Ind. 141, 23 N. E. 761), while a new trial will be granted on the ground of improper instructions, misconduct of jurors or counsel, and other causes which do not necessarily appear on the face of the record (1 Chitty Cr. L. 655).

At common law it seems to have been the rule that where a verdict of acquittal was obtained by the fraud of the prisoner, by keeping the prosecuting witnesses away or neglecting to give the prosecution notice of trial, a new trial could be granted. 1 Chitty Cr. L. 657; 2 Hawkins P. C. c. 47, § 12.

In England it has been held that where the prosecution, although criminal in its form and substance, involves merely the determination of a civil right, a new trial may be granted, on the application of the crown, for a misdirection, or a verdict contrary to the evidence. Reg. v. Seale, 1 Jur. N. S. 593. Rep. 369), and it has also been intimated that if in such a case a new trial was granted after acquit-

e. Right of Defendant — (I) In General. Under the various statutes new trials may be granted to defendant in trials for either felony[77] or misdemeanor[78] if sufficient cause be shown.

(II) Co-Defendants. Where two or more persons are jointly indicted and jointly or separately tried for the same offense, and one or more acquitted and the others convicted, a new trial may be granted as to those convicted without disturbing the verdict of acquittal.[79] So where several have been convicted of the same crime, a new trial may be granted to one, and judgment entered against the others.[80]

d. Discretion of Court. The granting or refusing of a new trial is said to be in the discretion of the trial judge.[81] Such discretion, however, is not mere whim tal, it would only be where there had been a very clear miscarriage of justice (Reg. v. Russell, 3 E. & B. 942, 18 Jur. 1022, 23 L. J. M. C. 173, 2 Wkly. Rep. 555, 77 E. C. 83. State v. Musick, 101 Mo. 260, 14 S. W. 212.

That an order for a first new trial was irregularly entered cannot give defendant another chance after a second conviction. Jones v. State, 67 Ga. 240.

Where the trial judge dies after overruling a motion for a new trial, but before signing a bill of exceptions, his successor cannot entertain another application, although he may under the statute sign the bill of exceptions and secure to defendant an appeal. State v. Walls, 113 Mo. 42, 20 S. W. 883.

84. Thus a new trial for failure of the evidence to sustain the indictment (U. S. v. Jenther, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,476, 13 Blatchf. 335), because the jury misunderstood the judge's charge (State v. Bates, 38 La. Ann. 491; State v. McClanahan, 9 La. Ann. 210), because of improper rulings by the trial judge (State v. Holcombe, 41 La. Ann. 1066, 6 So. 785), or because of a failure of proof (McLaughlin v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 280) will not be granted where no exception was taken at the time. And see supra, XIV, D, 2, d; XIV, D, 3, c.

85. See supra, XV, A, 1, a.

86. Local prejudice.— A new trial will not be granted solely because there was great public excitement and prejudice against the accused at the time of the trial. Fogarty v. State, 80 Ga. 450, 5 S. E. 782; Com. v. Flanagan, 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 415.

87. Acquittal of co-defendant.— A new trial will not be granted because one jointly indicted with defendant has been acquitted since the conviction of defendant, and can therefore testify freely without incriminating himself. Bacon v. State, 22 Fla. 51; Burgess v. State, 93 Ga. 304, 20 S. E. 331.

88. Intoxication of a witness to such an extent that he is unable to testify is not ground for a new trial. State v. Casey, 44 La. Ann. 969, 11 So. 583; State v. Underwood, 28 N. C. 96; State v. McNinch, 12 S. C. 89.

89. Invalidity of statute.— The question whether the statute under which defendant was convicted is void cannot be determined on a motion for a new trial. State v. Main, 31 Conn. 572, where it is held that this question can only be raised by motion in arrest or by appeal or writ of error.

90. Improper sentence.—An objection that the sentence imposed is excessive or for any reason illegal or irregular cannot be made the ground of a motion for a new trial. Bellinger v. State, 116 Ga. 545, 42 S. E. 747; Sturkey v. State, 116 Ga. 526, 42 S. E. 747; Burgamy v. State, 114 Ga. 852, 40 S. E. 991; Montross v. State, 72 Ga. 261, 53 Am. Rep. 840. But see Brown v. State, 47 Ala. 47.

91. Absence of witness.— The non-attendance of witnesses necessary to sustain defendant's case is not ground for a new trial, where no motion was made for a continuance, and particularly where the state would have admitted what the prisoner was expected to prove by the absent witnesses. Pease v. State, 91 Ga. 18, 16 S. E. 113; Boggus v. State, 34 Ga. 275; State v. McCool, 34 Kan. 617, 9 Pac. 745; State v. Simien, 36 La. Ann. 923; Munoz v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1901) 60 S. W. 759; Clay v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1893) 22 S. W. 973.

Continuances generally see CONTINUANCES IN CRIMINAL CASES.

92. Pregnancy of female defendant.— Holeman v. State, 13 Ark. 105.

93. Refusal of a motion in arrest.— Stokes v. State, 84 Ga. 258, 10 S. E. 740.

94. Surrender by bail.— It is not ground for a new trial that defendant at the request of his bail was taken into custody, where it does not appear that his freedom of intercourse and of consultation with his counsel base a motion for a new trial. But where without laches defendant by unavoidable accident or the fault of another has lost his right of appeal, he should be awarded a new trial.[95]

b. Errors and Irregularities in Preliminary Proceedings. The illegal procedure or the improper action of the officers who summon the jurors,[96] or in the absence of statute the omission of a preliminary examination prior to an information,[97] is not ground for a new trial unless the accused can show that he has in some way been thereby materially prejudiced on his trial.[98] So a refusal to order separate trials for two or more defendants jointly indicted is not ground for a new trial.[99] Nor is the fact that defendant has been erroneously advised to plead guilty and has acted thereon to his prejudice ground for a new trial, if he is informed at the time by the court as to his legal rights and acts in disregard of the court's instructions.[1] And while by statute the accused is usually entitled to a list of the jurors[2] and a copy of the indictment[3] a failure to furnish these is not ground for a new trial, where an objection was not made and exception taken before verdict.[4] On the other hand, however, the denial of a bill of particulars, by which defendant was prevented from making a just defense, is ground for a new trial.[5] Again, where the constitution requires that criminal prosecutions shall be assigned among the judges of the court by lot, and that each judge shall have exclusive control of the case assigned to him, a new trial will be granted after a conviction in a case which was not thus allotted.[6]

c. Defects in Indictment or Information. An objection to an indictment because defective is no ground for a new trial.[7] Nor can objections to the summoning and qualifications of the grand jurors and the organization of the grand jury be urged as ground for a new trial.[8] Again neither an immaterial was materially interrupted. Turner v. State, 70 Ga. 765.

An improper refusal of a motion to set aside an information can only be reviewed by an appeal from the judgment, where the statute enumerates specific grounds for new trials, and this is not one of them. State v. Schnepel, 23 Mont. 523, 59 Pac. 927.

Rulings on a demurrer to an accusation and on a motion to quash the warrant are not grounds for a new trial (Bellinger v. State, 116 Ga. 545, 42 S. E. 747); nor can the fact that the judge is disqualified be raised for the first time on such a motion (Berry v. State, 117 Ga. 15, 43 S. E. 438).

Solicitor-general as prosecutor.— An objection that he appeared as prosecutor and also officially before the grand jury should be taken by an exception to the indictment and not on a motion for a new trial. Baker v. State, 97 Ga. 452, 25 S. E. 341.

8. Potsdamer v. State, 17 Fla. 895; Mills v. State, 57 Ga. 609; Stone v. People, 3 Ill. 326; State v. Griffin, 38 La. Ann. 502.

Such objections should be taken advantage of by demurrer or motion to quash and are waived by going to trial. Montgomery v. State, 3 Kan. 263; State v. Washington, 33 La. Ann. 896.

misnomer in the indictment,[9] an immaterial variance between the proof and an allegation in the indictment,[10] duplicity in the indictment,[11] nor the failure to indorse on the indictment the names of the witnesses who were permitted to testify for the prosecution [12] is a sufficient ground for a motion for a new trial. So too neither the overruling of a demurrer,[13] a refusal to quash the indictment,[14] nor the striking out of a plea to the jurisdiction [15] is a ground for a motion for a new trial.

d. Want of Preparation. Where defendant or his counsel fails in diligence [16] in preparing for trial, and there is no surprise, a motion for a new trial for lack of opportunity for preparation may properly be denied.[17]

e. Errors in Conduct of Trial — (i) In General. It may be stated as a general rule that no error in the conduct of the trial will constitute a ground for a new trial if such error was not prejudicial to defendant and if it appears upon the whole case that justice has been done.[18] Thus, it seems, that a new trial may be refused where the application is based upon the following grounds: A violation of the rule in regard to the separation of witnesses;[19] discharging the jury on Defendant's right to challenge grand jurors is lost where he, being in custody, is brought into court when they are impaneled, and he makes no objection at that time. People v. Henderson, 28 Cal. 465.

9. An immaterial misnomer in the indictment is not ground for a new trial, where the evidence sufficiently identifies defendant as the person indicted (Brazier v. State, 44 Ala. 387; State v. Duestoe, 1 Bay (S. C.) 377), and no question as to variance is raised at the trial (State v. Senn, 32 S. C. 392, 11 S. E. 292).

10. An immaterial variance between the proof and an allegation, in the absence of statute, is not ground for a new trial. Evans v. State, 67 Ind. 68; Com. v. Irwin, 2 Pa. L. J. 329. Contra, where there is an absolute failure of proof. State v. Hamilton, 17 S. C. 462.

11. The remedy for duplicity in an indictment is a motion to quash, and not a motion for a new trial after verdict. Simons v. State, 25 Ind. 331; Com. v. Bargar, 2 L. T. N. S. (Pa.) 161; Rumage v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 64.

16. No lack of diligence. — Where the accused is forced to trial immediately after the appointment of counsel, and without an opportunity to consult him (McArver v. State, 114 Ga. 514, 40 S. E. 779), or without an opportunity to secure material evidence (Rosencrants v. State, 6 Ind. 407; Smith v. State, 20 Tex. App. 134), a new trial should be granted.

Continuance asked for. — A new trial will not be granted because of lack of opportunity for preparation, absence of witnesses, or other similar reasons, unless the facts are brought before the court, and a continuance is asked. Thomas v. State, 89 Ga. 479, 15 S. E. 537; Tobin v. People, 101 Ill. 121; State v. Benton, 65 Iowa 482, 22 N. W. 639.

Defendant, being desirous of pleading former acquittal, applied to the clerk for the former indictment and the order of discharge, neither of which could be found. The fact that pending the trial it becomes known to the jury that the accused had already been tried and a verdict of guilty annulled is not ground for a new trial. State v. Thompson, 109 La. 296, 33 So. 320.

Where the refusal of the court to accede to the request of defendant results in prejudicing him, as would be the case where the court refused an order to serve process to obtain the presence of a material witness confined in the penitentiary, a new trial should be granted. Roberts v. State, 72 Ga. 673.

19. A violation of the rule in regard to separating witnesses, not causing material in-their failure to agree;[20] remarks of the judge during the trial disparaging to the accused, his counsel, or his witnesses;[21] the absence of the judge from the court-room during the trial;[22] defendant's ignorance of the English language;[23] the expression of an opinion by a witness on the stand that defendant is guilty;[24] the illness of defendant at the time of his trial;[25] that counsel for defendant submitted the case to the jury without argument;[26] that defendant failed to put in a defense which was known to him before the verdict;[27] that defendant had no counsel;[28] that the case was called out of its turn on the docket;[29] that the court failed to ask accused, before passing sentence, whether he had anything to say;[30] that the court limited the argument to a reasonable period;[31] that the court refused to excuse a juror for Saturday because of his conscientious scruples;[32] that the judge failed to sign each day's proceedings in a trial on an agreed state of facts;[33] or that the trial judge charged a grand jury in the presence of the jury engaged jury to the accused, does not entitle him to a new trial, although he objected to the examination of the witness who violated the rule. Betts v. State, 66 Ga. 508.

20. An order of the court discharging the jury on their failure to agree cannot be urged as ground for a new trial, unless the accused excepted to it at the time. Long v. State, 46 Ind. 582; State v. Whitson, 111 N. C. 695, 16 S. E. 332; Morgan v. State, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 475.

21. Where it does not appear that such remarks tended to, or actually did, prejudice defendant. Lowery v. State, 98 Ala. 45, 13 So. 498; Hendricks v. State, 73 Ga. 577; Burns v. People, 45 Ill. App. 70; State v. Debnam, 98 N. C. 712, 3 S. E. 742. And see supra, XIV, B, 9.

This rule has been applied to a remark of the court that defendant's motion was made for delay (McRae v. State, 52 Ga. 290), and to interruptions by the court correcting misstatements of his counsel (Pritchett v. State, 92 Ga. 65, 18 S. E. 536; Vann v. State, 83 Ga. 44, 9 S. E. 945).

Interrogation of witness by judge see supra, XIV, B, 9, g.

22. As a general rule the temporary absence of the judge from the court-room during the trial, not shown to have been prejudicial to the accused and to have been properly objected to by him, is not ground for a new trial. People v. Yut Ling, 74 Cal. 569, 16 Pac. 489; O'Shields v. State, 81 Ga. 301, 6 S. E. 426. And see supra, XIV, B, 2, a.

23. State v. Orsini, 22 La. Ann. 93, although it seems this may be a sufficient ground, if it appears that he was embarrassed in the preparation of his defense and materially prejudiced thereby.

24. Ramsey v. State, 92 Ga. 53, 17 S. E. 613, unless objection be made at the time.

25. A new trial should not be granted because defendant was so ill at his trial that he could not give proper attention to his defense, where his illness was not brought before the court, and he answered ready, had the advice of counsel, and failed to move for a continuance. Ray v. State, 91 Ga. 87, 16 S. E. 311.

Insanity.— By a plea of not guilty defendant estops himself from subsequently moving for a new trial upon the ground that he was insane at the trial or when the crime was committed, where the evidence on which he relies to prove insanity was known to him at the time of the plea. Green v. State, 88 Tenn. 614, 14 S. W. 430; Burton v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 138, 25 S. W. 782.

26. If at the request of the jury counsel for defendant refrains from argument, he assuming that they believe the accused to be innocent, he cannot urge that as ground for a new trial. State v. Fontenot, 48 La. Ann. 220, 19 So. 112; State v. Holden, 42 Minn. 350, 44 N. W. 123.

27. Nothwithstanding this defense might on a new trial operate greatly in his favor. Case v. State, 5 Ind. 1; Com. v. Benesh, Thach. Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 684.

28. That accused had no counsel is not ground for a new trial, where, knowing his right to have counsel assigned, he failed to request counsel or refused to accept counsel assigned. State v. Rollins, 50 La. Ann. 925, 24 So. 664; State v. Bingham, 46 La. Ann. 299, 14 So. 905; State v. Kelly, 25 La. Ann. 381; Burnett v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 600, 62 S. W. 1063. 31. People v. Keenan, 13 Cal. 581, holding, however, that where it appears, particularly in a capital case, that counsel did not have time enough to argue it properly a new trial should be granted.

Where a statute provides that counsel shall not occupy more than one hour in argument, and defendant has the privilege of having two counsel, a new trial may be granted for refusing his counsel two hours for their argument. State v. Nyman, 55 Conn. 17, 10 Atl. 161.

32. Especially where the court, in deference to his opinions, refrained from sending the jury out until after sundown on Saturday. U. S. v. McKnight, 112 Fed. 982.

in the trial of defendant.[34] On the other hand a new trial has been granted where the application was based upon the following grounds: The intoxication of defendant at his trial;[35] that a material witness was not sworn;[36] that defendant was not present throughout the trial;[37] that defendant was not required to plead to an amended complaint;[38] that one of defendant's witnesses was improperly committed for perjury during the trial;[39] that the instructions were not taken out by the jury as required by statute;[40] that the prosecution was not compelled to elect upon which count of two or more in the indictment the prisoner should be tried;[41] that the term of court was illegally adjourned and defendant convicted at an adjourned term;[42] or that the trial judge summarily imposed a fine for contempt upon counsel for the accused and ordered him into instant custody.[43]

(II) Failure to Prove Material Facts. A failure on the part of the prosecution to prove the corpus delicti[44] or the venue[45] is a good ground for a motion for a new trial.

(III) New Trial Recommended by Jury. Inasmuch as the granting of a new trial is an exercise of the judicial discretion, the recommendation of the jury furnishes no legal reason for granting one.[46]

f. Misconduct of Counsel For Prosecution. Misconduct on the part of the

34. That the trial judge charges a grand jury in the presence of the jury engaged in the trial is not ground for a new trial because allusions were made in the charge to the same crime as that for which the accused was being tried, and other language was used applicable to acts in evidence against the prisoner, particularly where the judge disclaims any reference to the case pending. Johnson v. State, 59 Ga. 189.

35. That defendant at his trial was so intoxicated that he was unable to understand and to communicate with his counsel. Taffe v. State, 23 Ark. 34.

36. A new trial should be granted the accused where a witness for the prosecution who gave material and damaging testimony was not sworn, if this omission was not discovered by the accused until after verdict (State v. Lugar, 115 Iowa 268, 88 N. W. 333); but not where defendant, knowing that the witness was not sworn, cross-examined him (State v. Hope, 100 Mo. 347, 13 S. W. 490, 8 L. R. A. 608).

It is necessary to show that both defendant and his counsel were ignorant that the witness was unsworn until after verdict, and that defendant was prejudiced. State v. Camp, 23 Vt. 551.

The administration of the oath to a witness by an officer irregularly appointed is not ground for a new trial. State v. Dreifus, 38 La. Ann. 877; Mobley v. State, 46 Miss. 501.

The fact that a witness sworn for the state is withdrawn without testifying, because she is incompetent by reason of her youth, is not ground for a new trial, upon the theory that her appearance influenced the majority of the jury against defendant. People v. Graham, 21 Cal. 261.

37. The accused having an absolute right to be present throughout his trial, any proceedings had during his involuntary absence may be ground for a new trial. Simpson v. State, 31 Ind. 90; Payne v. Com., 30 S. W. 416, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 839. And see supra, XIV, B, 3, a.

prosecuting attorney may constitute a sufficient ground for granting a new trial. This rule has been applied to improper remarks and arguments;[47] to an offer to prove that a witness for the prosecution had been tampered with;[48] to the abuse of members of the jury;[49] to comments upon the failure of the accused to testify;[50] to the concealment of the presence of material witnesses for the prosecution;[51] and to the concealment by the prosecuting attorney from a witness that he is under indictment for harboring the accused with knowledge that he committed the crime.[52] But where defendant pleads guilty on the promise of the prosecuting attorney to recommend to the jury that a certain punishment be imposed, it is not ground for a new trial that the jury refused to follow the recommendation.[53]

g. Incompetency or Negligence of Counsel For Accused. The incompetency, inexperience, or negligence of his counsel is not ground for a new trial, unless it appears that the accused was prejudiced thereby.[54] An omission by the counsel for defendant to introduce certain evidence,[55] to except to a ruling or to an instruction,[56] or his laches preventing accused from making his statement to the Discretion of court as to granting new trial see supra, XV, A, 1, d.

47. A new trial will be granted where the prosecuting attorney, after a warning by the court, persists in making remarks which are calculated to prejudice the jury against the accused (Heller v. People, 22 Colo. 11, 43 Pac. 124; State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606, 54 Atl. 38; Laubach v. State, 12 Tex. App. 583), provided objection is promptly made and exception reserved (Epson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 584).

A suggestion by the prosecuting attorney to a witness as to his right of not incriminating himself, although improper, is not alone ground for a new trial. Ramsey v. State, 92 Ga. 53, 17 S. E. 613.

Necessity for objections to improper matter see supra, XIV, E, 6.

48. Nalley v. State, 28 Tex. App. 387, 13 S. W. 670, where nothing appears to connect the accused with the tampering, and the jury are not instructed to disregard the remark.

49. A new trial should be granted where members of the jury are abused by counsel, and their characters assailed in a manner calculated to inspire them with fear or resentment. State v. Noland, 85 N. C. 576.

50. The failure of the court, where the prosecuting attorney comments upon the failure of the accused to testify, to prohibit any further reference to the matter and to instruct the jury to ignore it is ground for a new trial. Wilson v. U. S., 149 U. S. 60, 13 S. Ct. 765, 37 L. ed. 650. And it has also been held that commenting on the failure of defendant to testify is alone ground for a new trial, although the jury were instructed to disregard the comments. Angelo v. People, 96 Ill. 209, 36 Am. Rep. 132; State v. Snider, (Iowa 1902) 91 N. W. 762. Elsewhere it seems that a prompt objection and a rebuke by the court will cure the error. Yarbrough v. State, 70 Miss. 593, 12 So. 551. And see supra, XIV, E, 4, d, (VIII).

In Iowa an objection to remarks in argument upon the silence of the accused may be taken on motion for a new trial, although none was made at the trial (State v. Snider, (Iowa 1902) 91 N. W. 762), but generally an objection of this character must be made at the trial, and the court requested to charge the jury to disregard the improper remark (State v. Hull, 18 R. I. 207, 26 Atl. 191, 20 L. R. A. 609).

51. Where the accused is persuaded to go to trial under the belief that certain material witnesses for the prosecution are absent when they are present, a new trial should be granted. Curtis v. State, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 9; March v. State, 44 Tex. 64.

If the incompetency or ignorance of counsel is so great that defendant has been prejudiced, and has been prevented from fairly presenting his defense, a new trial should be granted. State v. Jones, 12 Mo. App. 93; State v. Lewis, 9 Mo. App. 321.

The application for a new trial must show affirmatively that defendant was actually prejudiced by the incompetency of counsel (State v. Benge, 61 Iowa 658, 17 N. W. 100), and also facts from which the court may see that the attorney did not do his duty (Fambles v. State, 97 Ga. 625, 25 S. E. 365).

Fear of consequences to defendant.—Where counsel, by reason of fear of mob violence to his client, fails to take some material step beneficial to defendant, the latter is entitled to a new trial by U. S. Const. Amendm. art. 6, guaranteeing the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury, with the assistance of counsel. Roper v. Territory, 7 N. M. 255, 33 Pac. 1014. Where the accused is entitled to a written charge, the failure to claim it by his counsel, through fear that the delay in procuring it might weary and thus prejudice the jury against his client, will be ground for a new trial. State v. Swayze, 30 La. Ann. 1323.

56. State v. Currens, 46 Kan. 750, 27 Pac. 140.

court[57] is not ground for a new trial unless actual prejudice appears to have resulted thereby. Nor will a new trial be granted the accused on account of the withdrawal of his counsel, where he proceeds to trial without any objection or request to have other counsel assigned,[58] or where after such withdrawal he is represented by other competent counsel.[59]

h. Rulings on Evidence — (i) Improper Reception. The reception of evidence over objection either to its competency or materiality, where it is prejudicial to defendant, is ground for a new trial.[60] On a motion for a new trial defendant must show that objection was promptly made and exception taken at the time of its offer and admission,[61] and must also show by evidence satisfactory to the court that the testimony was prejudicial to him.[62]

(ii) Withdrawal of Incompetent Testimony. The error of admitting illegal evidence over objection is usually cured by its subsequent withdrawal.[63]

(iii) Receiving Admissions as Confessions. The reception by the court of statements of the accused which were merely declarations of immaterial facts, as distinguished from confessions, and treating them as the latter, is ground for a new trial, where the incriminating evidence without such declarations was insufficient, and with them of doubtful sufficiency.[64]

(iv) Opinion Evidence. The improper admission of expert or opinion evidence for the prosecution is ground for a new trial where the other incriminating evidence is wholly circumstantial.[65]

Some cases hold that it is enough to show that the evidence may have been prejudicial (State v. Jones, 93 N. C. 611; Joyce v. Com., 78 Va. 287), or that the chances are equal that it prejudiced defendant (Hoberg v. State, 3 Minn. 262), and that the admission of incompetent evidence justifies the granting of a new trial, although the verdict was supported by competent evidence (Frain v. State, 40 Ga. 529; State v. Allen, 8 N. C. 6, 9 Am. Dec. 616; Lancaster v. State, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 339, 91 Am. Dec. 288; Shaw v. State, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 86). If the jury are expressly instructed to disregard incompetent testimony (State v. Kingsbury, 58 Me. 238), or if the objection made had reference to the credibility and not to the incompetency of the testimony (Hellems v. State, 22 Ark. 207), and the court can see that the jury was not influenced by the incompetent testimony (Matthis v. State, 33 Ga. 24), a new trial may be denied; but it has also been held that inasmuch as it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to determine whether a verdict is founded on the illegal evidence or on the legal evidence, a new trial should be awarded even where the court is of the opinion that the verdict is correct (Peek v. State, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 78).

63. McDonald v. State, 72 Ga. 55, holding, however, that where, upon the facts of the particular case, it is probable that notwithstanding such withdrawal the accused was prejudiced thereby a new trial should be granted.

(v) Improper Exclusion of Evidence. The exclusion of relevant or competent evidence is ground for a new trial, where it appears that its exclusion has been prejudicial to defendant;[66] but where the evidence excluded would have had, if admitted, no appreciable weight in favor of defendant,[67] or where it is impeaching only,[68] its exclusion is not ground for a new trial.

(vi) Reopening Case to Let in Evidence. The refusal of the court to reopen a case to admit testimony which it appears would not have affected the verdict if admitted is not ground for a new trial.[69]

i. Instructions and Failure to Instruct — (i) Erroneous Instructions — (a) Generally. An erroneous instruction which misdirects or misleads the jury on a material point of law is ground for a new trial,[70] if objected to when given,[71] particularly where there is a conflict of testimony which leaves the case in doubt before the jury.[72] But where in the opinion of the court the evidence is sufficient it has a discretion to deny a new trial, although the instructions are partly erroneous.[73]

(b) Separate Instructions. A new trial ought not to be granted upon the ground that some of the instructions are erroneous, where the instructions taken as a whole are a correct statement of the law.[74]

(ii) Failure to Put Instructions in Writing. The failure of the court over prompt objections[75] to comply with a statute requiring written instructions is good ground for a new trial.[76]

(iii) Failure to Give Instructions. The omission of the court to charge on minor points or doctrines of law, although such charges might with propriety have been given, is not ground for a new trial in the absence of a request on the

Ga. 130, where it was held that allowing a witness to state his opinion as to the identity of the maker of certain footprints was not ground for a new trial.

In the federal courts a new trial may be granted for the improper rejection of evidence, although the court may deem that it was wholly insufficient to establish the issue. Defendant has a right to have the jury pass on all the evidence, and the court cannot, on a motion for a new trial, determine the weight of the testimony. Not only is this the case, but the court on hearing the motion for a new trial is precluded from taking further evidence bearing on any issue at the trial in order to determine whether defendant had been prejudiced. (iv) Instruction Refused. The refusal to give a proper instruction called for by the evidence or the pleadings, when requested by the accused, or giving it with an erroneous modification, is ground for a new trial,[78] unless the point on which the charge is asked is sufficiently covered by the general charge.[79]

(v) Cure of Error by Just Verdict. If the verdict is sustained by the evidence,[80] or if on the whole case substantial justice has been done, and no prejudice to the accused appears,[81] a new trial may properly be refused, although an erroneous or misleading instruction has been given.

the discretion ought to be exercised to grant a new trial where the objection relates to the moral fitness or partiality of the juror,[90] and the court is of the opinion that injustice has been done the accused by reason of the juror having served.[91]

(II) Grounds of Disqualification—(A) Fixed Opinion. An opinion by a juror with regard to the guilt of the accused, the expression of which will constitute a disqualification sufficient to furnish ground for a new trial, must be a fixed, deliberate, and determined one[92] or a settled prejudice[93] which cannot be removed or overcome by evidence.

(B) Prejudicial Expressions After Being Sworn. The expression of an opinion adverse to defendant during the trial after the evidence is in[94] or after the verdict[95] does not necessarily show that the juror was prejudiced at the time he was sworn and is not ground for a new trial.

(C) Non-Residence. A new trial will not be granted solely because a juror was incompetent on account of non-residence, although this fact was unknown to the accused at the trial.[96]

(E) Age. Defendant should have a new trial where, having used due diligence, he and his counsel fail to discover until after the verdict that a juror was incompetent by reason of his age.[3]

(F) Juror an Atheist. An objection merely that a juror is an atheist, which fact was not known when he was sworn, is not ground for a new trial.[4]

(G) Person Personating Juror. The fact that one not summoned personates one who is on the venire, sits on the jury, and joins in the verdict unknown to the accused and his counsel, and without laches on their part, is ground for a new trial.[5]

(H) Insanity. The insanity of a juror is not ground for a new trial if known to the accused or to his counsel at the trial, and he was not challenged.[6]

(I) Member of Grand Jury or of Previous Jury. As a general rule the objection that a juror has been a member of the grand jury which found the indictment should be taken by challenge.[7] And so the fact that a juror states on his examination that he did not know defendant, and that if he had ever seen him he had forgotten him, when as a matter of fact he had been a member of

Where a juror states on his examination that he has not formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, it may be inferred that he was not a member of the grand jury, and if he was, a new trial should be granted, although he was not directly questioned as to this fact (Rice v. State, 16 Ind. 298; U. another jury who had tried and convicted defendant, is not ground for a new trial where the statements of the juror were made in good faith.[8]

(J) Ignorance of English. The objection that a juror does not understand the English language should be made by challenge, and comes too late when it is urged on a motion for a new trial.[9]

(K) Alienage. An objection that one of the jurors is an alien must if known to the accused be taken by challenge, and it cannot be made for the first time on a motion for a new trial.[10]

(L) Physical Incapacity. The illness of a juror during the trial is not ground for a new trial, unless it appears that he was so ill as to be unable to give careful and conscientious attention to the evidence and issues, or that the verdict does not express his deliberate conviction of defendant's guilt.[11]

(M) Deputy Sheriff on Panel. A new trial should be granted where one of the jurors is a deputy sheriff, and the sheriff has a pecuniary interest in securing a conviction.[12]

(III) KNOWLEDGE OF DISQUALIFICATION AT TIME OF ACCEPTANCE. When an objection would have been good ground to challenge a juror for favor, if known to the accused when he was sworn, it will be ground for a new trial only when discovered after verdict.[13]

The fact that the hearing of a juror is imperfect, although unknown to accused until after verdict, is not alone ground for a new trial, where he neglects to examine and challenge the juror for this objection when he is impaneled. The temporary illness of a juror after retirement, the jury's deliberation being suspended until his recovery (Hughes v. People, 116 Ill. 330, 6 N. E. 55), or a juror's illness while counsel for the prisoner was addressing the jury, the juror being, by order of the court, placed upon a pallet, where he drowsed and did not fully comprehend the argument, although he heard all the evidence, defendant knowing he was asleep but making no objection (Baxter v. People, 8 Ill. 368), is not ground for a new trial.

The California statute allowing a new trial when the verdict results from any means "other than a fair expression of opinion on the part of all the jurors" does not include the illness of a juror, by which defendant claims he was prevented from exercising that "keen judgment or calm deliberation" required for the discharge of his duties. A distinction may be taken between objections whieh are solely grounds of ehallenge and positive disqualifieations of the juror. In the former case the objeetion must be ascertained and the right to challenge exercised

(VI) TRIER A MEMBER OF PANEL. An objection that one of the triers on a challenge for bias is on the panel is not ground for a new trial.[17]

(VII) EXEMPTION FROM SERVICE. A new trial will not be ordered solely because a juror served who was exempt.[18]

(VIII) ORDERING A SPECIAL JURY. Where the court, over the objection of defendant, orders a special jury and proceeds to try a case before the day previously fixed for such trial, and for which the regular jurors had been summoned, a new trial should be granted.[19]

l. Misconduct of Jurors and of Others Affecting Them — (I) IN GENERAL. All of the courts no doubt agree that any misconduct on the part of the jurors in a criminal case which was prejudicial to defendant, or any such misconduct on the part of the judge, officer in charge, or outsiders, improperly influencing the jurors, not caused nor waived by defendant, is ground for setting aside a conviction and granting a new trial.[20] On the other hand as a general rule a new trial will not be granted where it clearly appears that defendant has not been injured or prejudiced by the misconduct.[21] before the juror is sworn, and whether the objection is known to defendant or not, the defect or irregularity is cured by the verdict, and it is not ground for a new trial; but where the disqualification is a positive one, the trial would have been a nullity to the same extent as though it had been without a jury where defendant had a right to it. The positive disqualification usually cannot be waived, although the right to challenge may be. State v. Jackson, 27 Kan. 581, 41 Am. Rep. 424.

A general question "whether any juror on the panel knows any reason why he should not sit as a juror in this case" without more, precludes a new trial on objections which might have been discovered by ordinary inquiries. Wood v. State, 62 Miss. 220.

(II) Participation or Waiver by Defendant. As a rule if the party asking for a new trial participated in the misconduct,[22] or knowing of it failed to call the attention of the court promptly to it and move for the dismissal of the jury,[23] he cannot urge it as ground for a new trial.

(III) Presumption as to Prejudice. Beyond this, however, the cases are conflicting. Some hold that if such misconduct might have been prejudicial to defendant, prejudice will be presumed, particularly in capital cases, and that a new trial must be granted unless this presumption is rebutted by affirmatively showing that there was in fact no prejudice.[24] A few cases hold that in capital cases at least prejudice will be conclusively presumed and a new trial granted if there may have been prejudice.[25] Others hold generally that prejudice will not be presumed, at least unless a probability of prejudice appears,[26] and that a new trial will not be granted unless defendant affirmatively shows that he has been prejudiced.[27]

Communications by outsiders with jurors in jury room.— The fact that communications on unimportant matters, or on matters in no way relating to the case, passed between persons outside the jury room and the jurors within is not ground for a new trial, where nothing was said in reference to the trial, or in any way tending to injure defendant. People v. Boggs, 20 Cal. 432; Flan-

that he was prejudiced,[31] while others hold that prejudice will be presumed unless the contrary appears or is shown by the prosecution.[32] The rules above stated apply to conversations between the jurors and the prosecuting attorney,[33] or judge,[34] or witnesses.[35] It has been said that the test to determine whether a conversation by a juror with outsiders is ground for a new trial is whether his remarks indicate that he is an unfit person to discharge the duties of a juror.[36]

See also supra, XV, A, 2, l, (III).

33. McElrath v. State, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 378.

A conversation between the prosecuting attorney and some of the jurors is ground for a new trial where the subject of the conversation is not explained (Com. v. Martin, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. 140), or even where the subject of the conversation is explained and it is shown that no wrong was intended, if what was said might have influenced the verdict (Hutchins v. State, 140 Ind. 78, 39 N. E. 243. But compare State v. Fruge, 28 La. Ann. 657). Where there have been repeated communications between the prosecutor and the jury during the trial, the affidavit of the prosecutor that he made no use of any means to influence their decision is insufficient to rebut the presumption of prejudice arising through such misconduct. McElrath v. State, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 378.

34. Rafferty v. People, 72 Ill. 37.

Communications between judge and jurors. — Where the court has adjourned and the judge has left the building, he carries with him no judicial powers to communicate with the jury. Hence it has been held ground for a new trial for him to send them messages or instructions to be read by them during their retirement, without the consent or knowledge of the accused. Rafferty v. People, 72 Ill. 37; State v. Alexander, 66 Mo. 148. It has also been held, however, that this is not ground for a new trial, unless the contents of the writing are prejudicial to the accused. People v. Kelly, 94 N. Y. 526 [reversing 31 Hun 225].

Further instructions.— Sending a message to ask the jury if they want further instructions is not improper. State v. Connelly, 7 Mo. App. 40.

The affidavits of jurors are inadmissible to show that a verdict of conviction was induced by an answer to a question to the judge after the case was submitted to the jury. State v. Kiefer, (S. D. 1902) 91 N. W. 1117.

Presence of judge in jury room see supra, XIV, J, 4, e.

35. Love v. Moody, 68 N. C. 200.

Communication between jurors and witnesses.— The mere fact that a juror has been spoken to or has conversed with a witness is not ground for a new trial, where there has been no prejudice. Bryan v. Com., 33 S. W. 95, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 965 (holding that the fact that a prosecuting witness shook hands with several of the jurors and spoke to them in an earnest and excited manner did not alone require a new trial); State v. Crane, 110 N. C. 530, 15 S. E. 231; State v. Way, 38 S. C. 333, 17 S. E. 39. And it has been held that having a witness repeat evidence to the jury in their room, although irregular, was not sufficient ground for a new trial, where he went at the request of the jury and merely repeated what he had previously stated on the trial. State v. Martin, Tapp. (Ohio) 323. On the other hand it has been held that the fact that a witness converses with a juror while in the box in reference to the trial, stating to him matter inadmissible as evidence, is ground for a new trial (Love v. Moody, 68 N. C. 200), and that the presence of a witness in the jury room creates a presumption of prejudice which the state must disprove beyond a reasonable doubt (State v. Cartwright, 20 W. Va. 32).

36. State v. Cook, 52 La. Ann. 114, 26 So. 751. The act of a juror in questioning a passer-by near the scene of the crime as to relevant and material facts (State v. Perry, 121 N. C. 533, 27 S. E. 997, 61 Am. St. Rep. 683), or his declaration after hearing the case, but before retiring, that he would "wind it up in a short while; one way or the other will suit me" (State v. White, 48 La. Ann. 1444, 21 So. 26), clearly shows him to have no conception of his duty as a juror, and is ground for a new trial.

The disclosure of a verdict by the jury in open court, by the direction of the court, before it is actually delivered, is not ground for a new trial, although it might be if dis-

A statement by a juror that indicates his intention to disagree with his fellows is not of necessity ground for a new trial.[37]

(B) Reading Letters or Newspapers. Defendant is not entitled to a new trial merely because the jurors received and read letters addressed to them during the trial, if he was not prejudiced, or according to some of the cases if he does not show prejudice;[38] but it is otherwise if it appears that he was prejudiced, and some cases hold that prejudice will be presumed unless the prosecution shows the contrary.[39] The same is true of reading newspapers during the trial. If defendant was or may have been prejudiced a new trial should be granted,[40] but it is otherwise if it appears that he was not prejudiced, or according to many of the cases if it does not appear that he was prejudiced.[41]

(C) Communications Between Jurors and Officer. By the common law jurors are absolutely prohibited from speaking to the officer having them in charge, except in answer to his question whether they have agreed on a verdict, and to communicate as to their necessities.[42] The rule, however, has been greatly relaxed in modern times, and a new trial will not be granted on account of other

N. S. (N. cases have held that the mere fact of his presence in the sleeping or deliberating room raises a presumption of injury to the accused, which if not explained is ground for a new trial.[50]

(E) Separation of Jury. In some of the earlier cases it was held that a verdict should be set aside and a new trial granted in a capital case if at any time during the trial any of the jurors separated from their fellows and were out of the officer's custody, so that they became accessible to improper outside influence, without regard to whether defendant was prejudiced;[51] and in one case this rule was applied to felonies not capital.[52] Most of the courts, however, now hold that, while a conviction will be set aside and a new trial granted on this ground if it appears that defendant was prejudiced, or if it does not appear that he was not, a new trial will not be granted if it appears that he was not prejudiced.[53] Broadly speaking no merely temporary separation of the jury is sufficient to justify a reversal, if during the time of the separation they are in the charge of an officer and he keeps them in his actual sight and hearing, or when this is not possible the circumstances are such that it is apparent that they have not been tampered with or influenced to the prejudice of defendant.[54] It has been held in a number of cases that the mere fact that one or more of the jurors were, after their retirement and before the verdict, separated from the others, is not ground for a new trial unless it appears that defendant was prejudiced thereby.[55] Other cases hold that there is a presumption of injury from the mere fact of separation, and that a separation after retirement is ground for a new trial, although it does not affirmatively appear that the jury were tampered with or that the accused was in any way prejudiced.[56] If, however, it affirmatively appears that the jury were not in any way tampered with or influenced the verdict will not be disturbed.[57] In some jurisdictions the separation of the jury after retiring to consider their verdict is made by statute a ground for a new trial.[58]

(F) Failure of Court to Warn Jury. It has been held that failure of the court to warn the jury on adjournment not to converse among themselves or with any one on any subject connected with the trial is not ground for a new trial, unless it clearly appears that the accused was injured thereby.[59]

(G) Use of Intoxicating Liquors. It is gross misconduct on the part of jurors to use intoxicating liquors to excess during the trial or during their deliberations, and perhaps improper to use them at all; and it is misconduct on the part of the officer in charge or others to furnish them with such liquors or take them where they may obtain the same, but whether a new trial should be granted for this cause depends on the circumstances. If it appears that defendant was prejudiced thereby, or according to some of the cases unless it appears or is clearly shown that he was not prejudiced, a new trial will be granted.[60] It is

The circumstances of the separation are to be considered in determining whether any presumption of tampering exists. A temporary separation of the jury for a short period, as where one of them stays in the room with an officer while the others are at supper, raises no presumption of prejudice. Drinking to excess.— Where during the trial a juror drinks intoxicating liquor to such an extent as to impair his faculties and unfit his mind to intelligently consider the case, so that it appears that justice has not been done because of the juror's delinquency, a new trial must be granted. Where there is any reason to believe that a juror has drunk so much as to unfit him for the proper discharge of his duty, the verdict should not be allowed to stand. People v. Gray, 61 Cal. 164, 44 Am. Rep. 549; U. S. v. Spencer, 8 N. M. 667, 47 Pac. 715.

Drinking at expense of prosecuting attorney.— It has been held that the fact that a juror during the course of the trial drank liquor at the expense of the prosecuting attorney is not ground for a new trial where there is nothing to show that defendant was prejudiced thereby. People v. Lyle, (Cal. 1884) 4 Pac. 977. But see People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 447, 39 N. W. 585. Where no objection is made at the time on account of a juror being given liquor by the prosecuting attorney, it cannot after verdict be urged as a ground for a new trial. Grottkau v. State, 70 Wis. 462, 36 N. W. 31.

Drinking with witnesses for the prosecution, and at their invitation and expense, is not alone such misconduct as to warrant a new trial (State v. Minor, 106 Iowa 642, 77 N. W. 330; Thompson v. Com., 8 Gratt. (Va.) 637), although it has been held that drinking at a bar owned by the principal witness for the prosecution is in connection with other

(H) Sleeping of Juror. The fact that a juror was asleep in the jury-box during a portion of the trial is not alone ground for a new trial, where counsel, noticing it, failed to call the court's attention to it promptly, or where it does not appear that defendant was prejudiced.[62]

(I) Receiving Evidence Out of Court—(1) UNAUTHORIZED VIEW. The act of the jury in visiting the locus in quo without the consent of the court, although in company with an officer, where they examine and comment upon the positions of the deceased and defendant, and of the eye-witnesses, has been held such misconduct as to constitute ground for a new trial.[63] But as a rule the mere fact that the jury visited the spot is not ground for a new trial, where they were not guilty of any misconduct while there, and could not have acquired any information that might influence their verdict.[64]

(2) EXAMINING ARTICLES OF PERSONAL PROPERTY. Permitting the jury to take with them into their room, and to examine during their deliberations, articles of personal property in evidence is not ground for a new trial, where no prejudice resulted to the accused.[65]

(3) TAKING OUT AND CONSULTING PREJUDICIAL DOCUMENTS. The extent to which records and writings may be consulted by the jury during their deliberations is elsewhere considered.[66] In homicide cases new trials have been granted where the jury took with them into their room the record of the coroner's inquest, and depositions.[67] On the other hand new trials have been refused where these were accidentally in the jury room, and it was not shown that the jury read them.[68]

(4) STATEMENTS BY JURORS. Where a juror states to his fellows facts within his personal knowledge regarding the character of defendant, the credibility of a witness, or other material facts, and his statements are shown to have influenced the jurors to bring in a verdict of conviction, a new trial ought to be granted.[69]

(5) READING LAW-BOOKS IN JURY ROOM. The mere fact that law-books are circumstances sufficient ground for a new trial (People v. Hull, 86 Mich. 449, 49 N. W. 288).

Treating by interested officer.— Where a sheriff has paid out considerable money in and about the trial, with no expectation of being repaid except from a reward in case of conviction, it is ground for a new trial for the jury to permit him to take them to saloons and to furnish them with liquor at his expense. Complaint and warrant.— Permitting the warrant and written complaint and the transcript of the evidence of a witness taken at the preliminary examination to go out to the jury, although by inadvertence and without request of the jury, has been held ground for a new trial. taken into the jury room and read by some of the jurors is not usually ground for a new trial,[70] as it is necessary, where a juror reads law, to show that he was thereby influenced to the prejudice of defendant.[71] It is otherwise where prejudice appears or may be presumed.[72]

(6) Reading Newspapers. For the jury to read during or before their deliberations newspapers containing reports of the evidence given in the case may be ground for a new trial, but is not necessarily so.[73]

(J) Taking of Notes by Jurors. Whether the taking of notes by a juror shall be a good ground for a new trial depends not only upon whether it was improper,[74] but also upon whether defendant promptly objected. He may by his silence have so far acquiesced as to waive objection,[75] but he will not be presumed to have waived the objection, where it does not appear that he or his attorney noticed it.[76]

(K) Differences of Opinion Among Jurors. It is not ground for a new trial that the jurors differed among themselves for a time as to the degree of the crime and the amount of the punishment or otherwise.[77]

(L) Discharge of Juror. The discharge of a juror by consent of counsel, without the knowledge or consent of the accused, which he failed to notice until the jury was polled, entitles him to a new trial.[78]

(M) Misconduct, Prejudice, or Disqualification of Officer[79]—(1) Absence From Jury. The absence of the officer having charge of the jury, for a short period, is not ground for a new trial if the jury were not allowed to separate.[80]

(2) Keeping Jurors in Inconvenient Place. Where a statute provides that the jury shall be kept in a convenient place, the fact that the place in which they were kept was not convenient is not ground for a new trial, where the verdict is not shown to have been affected thereby.[81] The fact that the jury were taken some distance from the court to a hotel through the public streets instead of to the jury room in the court-house, although censurable in the officer, is not ground for a new trial, where the accused was not prejudiced.[82]

(3) Oath of Officer in Charge. The fact that the officer having charge of the jury was not specially sworn as required by law is not ground for a new trial, where he is a bailiff, sheriff, or other sworn officer and has performed his duty faithfully and properly, and no prejudice to the accused has resulted from his being unsworn.[83]

(4) Prejudice of Officer. The prejudice of the sheriff having charge of the jury against defendant is not ground for a new trial, unless it was so manifested in the presence of the jury as to influence them and affect their verdict.[84]

(5) Disqualification of Officer. The fact that the officer is disqualified because he is a minor,[85] or because he is related to the person for whose murder defendant is on trial,[86] is not alone ground for a new trial.

(6) Admitting Strangers Into Jury Room. It is such misconduct for the officer to permit strangers to mingle with the jury while they deliberate as to bring upon him the condemnation of the court; but the mere fact that outsiders, whether with or without the consent of the jurors, enter and remain in the room during their deliberations is not enough alone to justify a new trial, if it appear that they did not converse on the case with any member of the jury.[87]

(7) Assisting in Reading Instructions. The action of the officer in entering the jury room, and, while the jury are deliberating, reading a portion of the instructions to them, although at their request, is misconduct which will require a new trial, for inasmuch as it cannot be known, except by his oath, whether he read correctly or not, and as he may be assumed to be unworthy of belief because he violated his oath by his misconduct, the court will presume that the accused was prejudiced.[88]

(8) Communicating Progress of Deliberation to Outsiders. The fact that the officer communicates to outsiders from time to time the results of the deliberation and ballots of the jury, while it is such misconduct on his part as will call for severe punishment, is not ground for a new trial unless the accused was injured.[89]

(9) Writing Verdict. The action of the officer in writing out the verdict at the request of one juror acting for all, under the juror's dictation, is not ground for a new trial, where it clearly appears that defendant was not injured.[90]

(10) Conversing With Jurors. Any conversation on the part of the officer with the jury, of a character calculated to influence their verdict, is ground for a new trial, although it is not affirmatively shown that no prejudice resulted.[91]

(11) AFFIDAVITS TO SHOW INFLUENCE. Although jurors may not impeach their verdict by affidavits showing their own misconduct, it is proper, on a motion for a new trial, to receive their testimony to show that a statement made by the sheriff influenced their verdict.[92]

(N) Misconduct of Bystanders.[93] Thoughtless or careless remarks passing between jurors and bystanders, having no relation to the case, are not ground for a new trial.[94] And generally remarks of bystanders unfavorable to the accused, to or in the presence of members of the jury, and overheard by them, although reprehensible, are not ground for a new trial,[95] unless it shall actually appear that a verdict of conviction was produced thereby. The conduct of some of the bystanders in applauding the argument of the prosecuting attorney is not ground for a new trial, where the applause was promptly checked, and it appears probable that the jury were not prejudiced against the accused thereby.[96] The fact that a bystander during the trial handed a juror money in payment of a debt he owed him is not ground for a new trial.[97]

m. Irregularities in Verdict or in Its Reception — (I) MISUNDERSTANDING AS TO EFFECT OF. If the jury misapprehend the power of the court and on that account return a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation to mercy, on which the court has no power to act, a new trial should be granted.[98]

(II) COMPROMISE VERDICT. The fact that a verdict was rendered only after long consideration and was apparently the result of a compromise is not ground for a new trial, where there is no showing that it was obtained improperly.[99] So also it has been held that the fact that a juror agreed to a verdict because the majority favored it[1] or because he was charged with an intention to cause a disagreement[2] is not ground for a new trial. And the fact that it appears that a verdict was the result of a compromise on an agreement of all the jury to recommend to mercy[3] or on a promise to sign a petition for a pardon[4] is not ground for a new trial.

(III) INDEFINITE OR INCOMPLETE VERDICT. Where the jury return a special verdict which is formally defective or is not responsive to the issue, the court may order a new trial.[5]

Informal verdict.— A new trial should be granted where the verdict is unintelligible, and it is impossible to ascertain whether it finds the accused guilty as a principal or as aiding and abetting (People v. Schoedde, 126 Cal. 373, 58 Pac. 859), and also where the verdict finds the prisoner guilty, and the foreman states that the jury could not agree on the fact of the intent (Com. v. Mooar, Thach. Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 410).

(iv) Irregularity in Calling Names of Jury. The failure of the clerk in polling the jury to call the name of one of the jurors is not ground for a new trial, where the mistake is corrected before the juror has left the court.[6]

(v) Reception in Absence of Judge or Defendant. A verdict should be received in open court by the trial judge, and his delegation of this power to another, although by the consent of the parties, is ground for a new trial.[7] So too the reception of the verdict in the absence of defendant is ground for a new trial.[8]

n. Verdict Contrary to Law. Where the verdict is against the law,[9] and it appears that the trial court stated the law correctly, so that it is evident that the jury disregarded the instructions, a new trial should be granted;[10] but a verdict should not be set aside and a new trial granted except for an omission or error prejudicial to the accused.[11]

o. Verdict Contrary to Evidence. A new trial may be granted the accused where he is convicted on insufficient evidence, but the verdict of the jury will always be entitled to great weight with the court,[12] and will not be set aside because the court is not satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt of the guilt of defendant. Greater latitude is allowed on motions for new trials on the ground of insufficiency of evidence in criminal than in civil cases, and where the evidence of guilt is slight,[13] or where the evidence taken together, being contradic-

Where the principal witnesses for the prosecution contradict their former testimony given at an inquest, and the later testimony is also contradicted by other witnesses, a new tory, preponderates against the verdict a new trial should be granted.[14] So where the issue is one of fact only, and the court, on a review of the whole evidence, is not satisfied that the facts proved justify the verdict found,[15] or where there is no proof of some material fact or proof of such a fact which is plainly insufficient[16] a new trial ought to be granted. But a new trial should not be granted because the evidence, being all circumstantial, did not produce upon the minds of the jurors the same effect that it does upon the mind of the court, or because the court thinks it would have given a different verdict on such circumstantial evidence.[17]

The question is not whether the court, from the evidence, might come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the jury, but whether because of the insufficiency of the evidence the jury have rendered an unreasonable and unjust verdict. The court should be able to say from a review of the evidence that its injustice is manifest, and that for that reason it should not stand. And where the evidence is contradictory, so that the question turns upon its credibility, which is a question solely for the jury, the court should hesitate and exercise its discretion with great care in setting aside a conviction as unjust. (II) Time of Objection. As in all cases where a new trial is desired, it is necessary that the objection, because of surprise or accident, should be promptly taken at the time.[29]

q. Newly Discovered Evidence — (I) In General — (A) Looked on With Disfavor. Applications for new trials because of newly discovered evidence are looked upon by the courts with distrust.[30] In the absence of statute,[31] or where a statute expressly provides for what causes a new trial may be granted, and newly discovered evidence is not one of them,[32] no new trial will be granted on this ground.

(B) What Is Newly Discovered Evidence — (1) In General. It must be clearly shown that the evidence on which a new trial is asked is evidence in fact newly discovered.[33]

(2) Another Person Guilty. Evidence not known to defendant at his trial, which will prove or tend to prove that the crime of which he has been convicted was committed by another person, may be ground for a new trial.[34]

Time to prepare.— Where defendant was allowed an hour after the case was called to prepare, and he did not ask for further time or show why he was not ready, a new trial will not be granted because of surprise. Parker v. State, 81 Ga. 332, 6 S. E. 600.

30. They are granted only on the following conditions: (1) The evidence must be in fact newly discovered, that is, discovered since the trial; (2) the party must show facts from which the court may infer that he was diligent in attempting to procure it at the trial; (3) it must not be impeaching evidence alone; (4) it must be material to the issue; (5) the evidence must not be merely cumulative; (6) the facts to be proved must be such as would probably on a new trial produce an acquittal. (3) Evidence of New Defense. A new trial will not usually be granted where the newly discovered evidence supports a defense which is entirely different from, or inconsistent with, that interposed at the trial.[35]

(4) Facts Within Knowledge of Accused. Facts which were within the knowledge of the accused at the time of his trial are not newly discovered evidence warranting a new trial,[36] and the burden is upon him to show that the evidence came to his knowledge after the verdict.[37] And evidence is not newly discovered which defendant knew, but did not mention to his counsel,[38] or which was known to his counsel and not communicated to defendant.[39]

The court on the motion is not bound to accept as true a confession by a third party in one of the moving affidavits, but may consider the probability of its truth with all the other evidence. Presumption of knowledge.— It may often be presumed from the nature of the facts to be proved, aside from any other evidence of his knowledge, that the accused knew them before his trial began. Thus evidence relating to a conversation in which the accused took part (Stewart v. State, 66 Ga. 90; State v. Hanks, 39 La. Ann. 234, 1 So. 458) or to some act done by himself (State v. Foley, 81 Iowa 36, 46 N. W. 746) or evidence of his former acquittal of a similar crime (State v. Bates, 38 La. Proof that prosecuting witness has altered his opinion as to defendant being guilty is not new evidence where the change of opinion was produced solely by a process of reasoning on a suggestion by an outsider. Shields v. State, 45 Conn. 266.

Subsequent recollection by a witness of some fact omitted from his testimony or incorrectly stated is ordinarily not sufficient

ined,[41] is not generally regarded as newly discovered evidence; and a new trial will not be granted defendant because a witness would have given certain testimony if the proper questions had been put to him,[42] or if his failure to give such testimony was due to objection on the part of defendant.[43]

(6) Opinion Evidence. The opinion of a person not an expert is not regarded as newly discovered evidence, although facts upon which an opinion may be based may be received as newly discovered.[44]

(7) Perjury of Witness. Where it is discovered after verdict that a witness for the prosecution deliberately perjured himself, and the accused would not have been convicted except for his testimony, he is entitled to a new trial for newly discovered evidence;[45] but if there was sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict without that of the perjured witness a new trial will not be granted.[46]

(8) Showing Involuntary Character of Confession. Evidence discovered since the trial, showing that a confession was procured by promises and persuasion, is ground for a new trial, if the exclusion of the confession would on the new trial probably acquit the accused.[47]

(9) Testimony of Co-Defendant After Acquittal. A new trial will not be granted merely to enable one of several defendants jointly indicted and tried to use the evidence of a co-defendant who was acquitted;[48] but where the evidence is material, and would in connection with the other evidence probably change the result of the trial, a new trial should be granted.[49]

Thus where a witness testified that he and accused committed the crime, the conviction of the accused being based wholly on his evidence, but subsequently stated that the crime was committed by five persons, including himself and the accused, and also other circumstances materially contradicting his testimony, a new trial was granted for newly discovered evidence, which the court said was neither cumulative nor impeaching because if believed its tendency was to defeat a verdict for the state. have known by inquiry what the witnesses would testify to.[53] The requirement of diligence is peculiarly applicable to new witnesses to prove an alibi, where their presence could have been easily obtained by defendant.[54]

(B) Failure to Ask Continuance. A new trial will not be granted because of newly discovered evidence where the witnesses who are to give it were known to the accused, although they could not be found at the trial, if no continuance or postponement was requested.[55]

(C) Severance on Trial of Co-Defendants. Where the new evidence is that of a co-defendant jointly tried with the moving party and acquitted, it should appear that the latter asked for a severance before trial, or for the acquittal of the co-defendant, to use his evidence. A failure to do so is lack of proper diligence.[56]

(III) Materiality—(A) In General. A new trial should not be granted for newly discovered evidence, unless it appears that the evidence is material and would probably produce a different result and one more favorable to the accused on a new trial.[57] Evidence, although newly discovered, having no tendency to prove the innocence of the accused,[58] or which apparently is not calculated to change the result of the former trial,[59] is not ground for a new trial.

53. If defendant at the trial knows or has ground to suppose that certain persons with whom he is able to communicate, and whom he may examine, possess a knowledge of relevant facts, and he fails to ascertain and prove such facts before verdict, he is by his negligence debarred from proving these facts thereafter as newly-discovered. Excuses for ignorance.— The confinement of the accused in jail up to the time of the trial, which took place very shortly after the crime (Thompson v. State, 60 Ga. 619), the fact that when he inquired of a person what he knew about the matter he was told by him that he knew nothing (Phillips v. State, 33 Ga. 281), the fact that he was insane and that his sole counsel was a lawyer of little experience (Anderson v. State, 43 Conn. 514, 21 Am. Rep. 669), and generally his poverty, lack of friends, and acquaintances, and of an opportunity to obtain the testimony (State v. Stowe, 3 Wash. 206, 28 Pac. 337, 14 L. R. A. 609) will excuse his failure to produce it at the trial and may furnish ground for a new trial, if he discovers it after the verdict, for the same strictness will not be observed in motions for new trials on the ground of newly discovered evidence in criminal cases as in civil cases (U. S. v. Briggs, 19 D. C. 585).

(B) What Is Material Evidence. The materiality of the evidence will depend wholly upon the nature of the charge, the nature of the evidence, and the facts of each particular case,[60] it being impossible to safely lay down any rule by which may be determined in any particular case or class of cases what evidence is material, except the very general proposition that evidence to be material must be of such a character as would probably on a new trial result in an acquittal.

(C) Incompetency of Evidence. Where the newly discovered evidence would be incompetent on a new trial the motion should be denied.[61]

(D) Sufficiency of Evidence. Where the evidence for the prosecution was barely sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty, and the newly discovered evidence is material, the court will more readily grant a new trial than where the incriminating evidence would have been sufficient if the evidence newly discovered had been introduced to rebut it at the trial.[62]

(IV) CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE — (A) General Rule. A new trial will not usually be granted where the evidence, although material and newly discovered, is merely cumulative.[63] Accordingly cumulative evidence to prove an alibi is not generally considered of much value as ground for a new trial,[64] although where the testimony on which the conviction was based is circumstantial and of slight weight, and the defense of alibi was supported by numerous respectable witnesses, a new trial should be granted for new and credible evidence of an alibi, although it be somewhat cumulative.[65]

(B) What Is Cumulative Evidence. Cumulative evidence, in connection with motions for new trials, may be defined as additional evidence of the same general

character as former evidence received at the trial to the same fact or point which was the subject of proof at the trial.[66] If, however, the new evidence is of a different character and proves new and independent facts, it is not cumulative, although it may tend to prove a proposition or a ground of defense which was proved or attempted to be proved at the trial.[67]

Additional evidence of the identity of defendant, coming from witnesses who did not testify at the trial and relating to particular facts concerning which there was no evidence, is not cumulative, and is ground for a new trial. Dale v. State, 88 Ga. 552, 15 S. E. 287. Where the identity of defendant is in question, and a person alleged to have been with defendant at the time of the commission of the offense testifies that he was not there and knows nothing of the matter, the evidence of a subsequently discovered witness that the persons in question were not defendant and the witness is not cumulative. State v. Tyson, 56 Kan. 686, 44 Pac. 609.

In a capital case where the defense is insanity, a better reason exists for not strictly enforcing the rule that the new evidence must not be cumulative than in civil cases. If the new evidence tends to clear up and make more certain that which was doubtful and equivocal, and particularly if it may raise a reasonable doubt of the prisoner's sanity, a new trial should be granted. For, as insanity is not susceptible of direct proof, but is usually established as an inference from a multitude of facts and circumstances, the greater number of facts indicating insanity which the jury will have to consider the more likely are they to acquit. If therefore the new facts to show insanity be credible and material, and relate to different acts and occasions from those testified to at the trial, they are not cumulative. him by some other method;[70] but if the new evidence is material and not introduced solely for impeaching purposes, it is ground for a new trial, although it may be incidentally impeaching.[71]

(VI) Credibility or Probable Effect of. The trial court has the right on the application for a new trial to determine the credibility of the witnesses who are to give the new evidence;[72] and the newly discovered evidence will not be accepted as ground for a new trial unless the court can see that its admission on a new trial will probably result in the acquittal of the accused.[73] The question is

70. Although the witness is the only witness for the prosecution, or the only one on some material point, evidence merely impeaching his testimony is not ground for a new trial. 71. The general rule that newly discovered evidence merely impeaching is not ground for a new trial does not apply if the evidence of the impeached witness was weak and uncorroborated on the trial, and the evidence impeaching him would have been material for the jury to consider, and if heard by them might probably have changed the result. not what the jury might do, but supposing all the evidence new and old to be before another jury, whether they ought to give another verdict than that given on the former trial.[74]

3. Application For New Trial and Its Effect — a. Jurisdiction. In the absence of statute creating appellate courts, and conferring the power to grant new trials upon them, jurisdiction to grant them is exclusively confined to the court in which the trial is had.[75] And defendant has the right to have his motion for a new trial, when it is based on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence, heard by the judge who presided at the trial, and it is error for the trial judge to refuse to hear this motion.[76] Defendant may by his silence waive an objection that the place of one of the justices who sat at the trial has at the time of his motion been taken by another justice.[77]

b. Time of Making — (I) In General. At common law defendant lost his right to a new trial by failing to move for it until the first four days of the next term had expired.[78] In the United States the time within which defendant must move for a new trial is regulated by statute,[79] and defendant loses his right to a new trial if by inexcusable laches he waits until this time has expired.[80] It has been held that a motion for a new trial will not be entertained if made after a motion in arrest of judgment,[81] if made after judgment and sentence,[82] or if made after exceptions have been overruled in the appellate court and a rescript sent down to the court who tried the case.[83] On the other hand, notwithstanding an appeal has been taken, the court may allow defendant to dismiss the appeal and grant him a new trial, if the motion is made at the same term and within the time limited by statute.[84] So too it has been held that if made within the period limited by statute a motion for a new trial is not too late, although the governor has issued his warrant for execution.[85]

(II) At What Term. Under some statutes a motion for a new trial must be made at the term of defendant's conviction,[86] except perhaps in cases of surprise, mistake, or excusable delay;[87] but under other statutes motions for new trials on any ground may be made at the term of court next following the term during which defendant was convicted;[88] and in the absence of such a statute a motion on the ground of newly discovered evidence may be made at a subsequent term.[89]

(III) Extension of Time. Although the court will not postpone judgment solely to afford time for defendant to discover evidence,[90] it is generally the rule, where the statute is not absolutely mandatory, that the statutory period within which a motion for a new trial should be made may be extended for good cause shown.[91]

d. Statement of Grounds. The moving papers should specify with clearness and certainty the grounds on which a new trial is sought;[94] and this rule has been applied where disqualifications of jurors,[95] erroneous and improper instructions,[96] or rulings as to the admission or exclusion of evidence were relied upon in the application as grounds for which a new trial should be granted.[97] But it has been held that failure of proof of the venue[93] or failure to plead[96] may be considered where the alleged ground of the motion is that the verdict is contrary to the law and evidence. Again the motion for a new trial may in the absence of statute be made viva voce to the court,[1] but the grounds for the motion are usually required to be in writing and to be filed.[2]

e. Bill of Exceptions. It has been held in some states that a motion for a new trial, if based upon facts not apparent on the record, must be supported by a bill of exceptions.[3] On the contrary it has been held that an agreed statement of facts or a bill of exceptions is not necessary where the facts relied on are stated in the moving affidavits.[4] The bill of exceptions must contain recitals supporting the allegations of fact in the motion for the new trial, as only allegations so supported can be considered.[5]

Insufficient statements.— A statement that the jury has received evidence "that was illegal, admitted by the court" (Wolfington v. State, 53 Ind. 343), that the court admitted "irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial evidence" and "rejected competent, material and relevant evidence" (Stout v. State, 90 Ind. 1), that the court allowed evidence to go to the jury over objection of defendant's counsel (Pool v. State, 87 Ga. 526, 13 S. E. 556), that complains of the admission of dying declarations, without specifying any witness, where several gave testimony of that nature (Battle v. State, 92 Ga. 465, 17 S. E. 861), or which refers to the testimony as set out in the brief of evidence (Sheffield v. State, 97 Ga. 426, 24 S. E. 143) is not sufficiently specific.

This is especially necessary where the motion is based on a refusal to admit evidence (Mize v. State, 36 Ark. 653), or on newly discovered evidence, in order that the judge may know what the evidence is (People v. Bradner, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 233).

The Georgia statute requires a brief of the evidence to be filed within a specified period after the trial. The failure of the moving party to do this is not excused by reason of the failure of the stenographer to write out the evidence (Boatwright v. State, 91 Ga. 13, 16 S. E. 101), but ordinarily the time to file the brief may be extended by the court on good cause shown (Hyatt v. Cowan, 115 Ga. 608, 41 S. E. 985; Robinson v. State, 111 Ga. 841, 36 S. A bill of exceptions must be construed as a whole, and where the judge in settling it qualifies certain instructions excepted to by referring to the whole charge, the qualification must be considered. Fletcher v. State, 90 Ga. 468, 17 S. E. 100. And where the ground of a motion is that the verdict was against the evidence, the fact that the evidence for defendant is very meagerly set forth in the bill of exceptions, while that of the state is set forth at great length, may determine the granting of a new trial. U. S. v. Briggs, 19 D. C. 585.

Abandonment of exceptions.— Where the motion leaves out exceptions that have been taken during the trial, it will be presumed that they were abandoned. Bixby v. State, 15 Ark. 395; Waller v. State, 4 Ark. 87.

Settlement.— The rules of practice and statutes applicable to the settlement of bills of exceptions generally apply to those required on this motion. a new trial, when founded on facts not of record, is made on affidavits signed and sworn to by defendant or by some person having knowledge of the circumstances.[7]

(II) Counter-Affidavits. Where the motion for a new trial is heard upon affidavits, it is the right of the state to file counter-affidavits,[8] and it is then discretionary with the court to permit defendant to file affidavits in rebuttal.[9]

(III) Sufficiency of Affidavits — (A) In General. An uncorroborated affidavit of defendant is not sufficient ground for a new trial, although not directly contradicted, where it is controverted by a statement of fact in the record.[10] As to facts not of record, however, the uncontradicted affidavit of the accused is prima facie proof;[11] but where all the allegations in the moving papers are met by denials in the counter-affidavits, the motion for a new trial may properly be denied.[12]

(B) Absence of Defendant at Trial. The application for a new trial on this ground may be based on affidavits, without any bill of exceptions.[13]

(C) Absence of Witnesses. A motion for a new trial upon the ground of the unavoidable absence of a witness at the trial must show by affidavit that the accused used due diligence to secure his attendance, that the evidence which he would have given was material, and that the accused asked for a continuance to enable him to procure this evidence.[14]

(D) Admission of Guilt by Another Person. The affidavit of a person who testified against defendant at his trial, but who has subsequently confessed the crime, must be produced on a motion for a new trial based upon the ground that this person is guilty and defendant innocent.[15]

(E) Disqualification of Jurors — (1) Character of Affidavits. On an application for a new trial based on this ground, the court may receive affidavits and require witnesses to be orally examined.[16] Generally proof of prejudice on the part of jurors must be sustained not only by the affidavit of the accused, but by that of his counsel.[17] The affidavits should also show that both defendant and his counsel were ignorant of the grounds of challenge at the trial.[18]

(2) Burden of Proof and Credibility of Evidence. The burden to show partiality and prejudice is on the moving party, and the juror who is attacked may sustain his competency and impartiality by his own testimony.[19] The presumption is that he is competent, and a new trial will not be granted unless the court is satisfied upon the consideration of the affidavits in connection with his conduct and appearance during the trial that he was disqualified when sworn.[20]

(3) Sufficiency of Proof. The verdict creates a presumption that the jurors were qualified and that their proceedings were lawful and regular. Hence where the affidavits are conflicting, unless the court is thoroughly satisfied upon all the affidavits that the juror was in fact disqualified, a new trial will be denied.[21]

(F) Misconduct of Officer. Misconduct of an officer may be shown by the affidavits of jurors.[22]

The most important question is whether an unjust verdict has resulted from the alleged prejudice of the juror. Affidavits of jurors are incompetent to show that their verdict is the result of misunderstanding the court's instructions (Scruggs v. State, 90 Tenn. 81, 15 S. W. 1074; Cartwright v. State, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 620; Norris v. State, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 333, 39 Am. Dec. 175; Mitchell v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 278, 33 S. W. 367, 36 S. Dec. 375) to prove irregularities in the jury room (Titus v. State, 49 N. J. L. 36, 7 Atl. 621), to show what was said in argument, and what inferences were drawn from the evidence (State v. Beste, 91 Iowa 565, 60 N. W. 112), or to show that they entertained a fixed opinion as to defendant's guilt which would have disqualified them if disclosed on the voir dire (People v. Baker, 1 Cal. 403; McGuffie v. State, 17 Ga. 497; State v. Rush, 95 Mo. 199, 8 S. W. 221).

A few exceptions have been made to the rule in some states. Thus in Tennessee a juror's affidavit was received to show that he assented to a verdict of guilty on an assertion that the proceedings were defective and that the governor would pardon the accused if he were recommended to mercy (Cochran v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 544; Crawford v. State, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 60, 24 Am. Dec. 467), or to show that the juror's assent was not freely given but was procured by the threats of his fellows (Fletcher v. State, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 249; Crawford v. State, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 60, 24 Am. Dec. 467. See also McBean v. State, 83 Wis. 206, 53 N. W. 497; U. S. v. Reid, 12 How. (U. S.) 361, 13 L. ed. 1023).

(II) To Show Misconduct of Jurors. A juror's own misconduct or the misconduct of his fellows cannot be proved on a motion for a new trial by the affidavits of the jurors,[34] except that in some states by statute the fact that the verdict was reached by chance or lot may be proved by the affidavits of jurors.[35]

(III) To Show Misconduct of Others. While the jurors may testify to any fact showing the existence of an outside influence upon them, they cannot give evidence as to the effect which this influence had upon their minds in bringing about a verdict of guilty.[36]

h. Affidavits as to Newly Discovered Evidence — (I) In General. The affidavit on a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence should clearly state what the evidence is,[37] who the new witness is, his residence, occupation, and other facts which will enable the court to judge of his credibility.[38] It should also show that the evidence has become known to defendant

i. Effect of Application. At common law it was in the discretion of the trial court to stay the judgment pending the motion for a new trial,[46] and it has been held that the motion for a new trial may in itself have this effect.[47]

4. Hearing and Determination of Motion — a. In General — (i) Argument. The court should hear a reasonable argument by counsel on a motion for a new trial, especially in a capital case,[48] but if no argument is demanded, it is discretionary with the court to pass upon the motion without argument;[49] and even when demanded its refusal is not necessarily error.[50]

(ii) Adjournment. It is proper for the court to adjourn the argument of the motion for a new trial for the purpose of giving the accused an opportunity to produce necessary affidavits.[51]

(iii) Amendment. The motion cannot be amended after it has been denied and judgment pronounced,[52] or after the expiration of the period after verdict limited for filing the original motion.[53]

(iv) Evidence. It is wholly within the discretion of the court to hear oral evidence in support of the motion for a new trial,[54] or to refuse to permit the cross-examination of those who have signed the affidavits.[55]

Refusing to hear the argument of defendant's counsel because his views and the authorities he quotes were presented to the court during the trial has been held to be within the discretion of the court. Frank v. State, 94 Wis. 211, 68 N. W. 657.

Taking of testimony for review on appeal. — It is not error for the court to refuse an attachment for the purpose of having testimony taken on the motion for a new trial, and of having it filed of record, so as to bring it up for review on appeal. This is discretionary with the court, and usually evidence taken on the motion is not reviewed on appeal. Com. v. Buccieri, 153 Pa. St. 535, 26 Atl. 228.

The New York statute giving the court

b. Presence of Defendant. At common law, when an application was made for a new trial, it was the general rule that all defendants who had been convicted must be actually present.[56] In the several states of the Union it is the general rule, subject to a few exceptions, that the presence of the accused is not necessary at the motion for a new trial.[57] Nor does the fact that on the hearing of the motion testimony is taken for or against it alter the case.[58] The constitutional or statutory right of the accused to be present during his trial does not give him the absolute right to be present on the motion for a new trial,[59] as the word "trial" used in such statutes includes only the proceedings down to verdict, and not motions for new trials or in arrest of judgment.[60]

c. Determination of Motion — (1) In General. The order made in passing upon an application for a new trial should properly express the determination of the power, on a motion for a new trial, to examine and cross-examine persons under oath as to the contents of the affidavits which they have subscribed, does not permit the summoning and examination of persons who are not affiants. People v. Moore, 29 Misc. 574, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 252, 14 N. Y. Cr. 387.

56. The reason was that the court might have them in its power, before the motion would be entertained (Rex v. Fielder, 2 D. & R. 46, 16 E. C. L. 72; Rex v. Teal, 11 East 307, 10 Rev. Rep. 516; Rex v. Askew, 3 M. & S. 9, 15 Rev. Rep. 380; Rex v. Cochrane, 3 M. & S. 10 note a, 15 Rev. Rep. 380 note), for it was suggested that one of several who was most criminal might keep away and procure the court to act upon other defendants whose guilt was less apparent, and then before sentence abscond on the denial of the application (1 Chitty Cr. L. 659).

Where the penalty was a pecuniary one, as by fine, a new trial might be moved for in the absence of defendant upon his furnishing security that his fine would be paid. Reg. v. Caudwell, 17 Q. Time for objection.— An objection that the accused was not present at the argument and overruling of the motion for a new trial is the court,[61] whether it sustains the motion and grants a new trial,[62] overrules the motion and refuses to grant a new trial,[63] or dismisses the motion for defendant's laches in making the application.[64]

(II) In Case of Joint Defendants. At common law, where some of several defendants had been convicted and the others acquitted, a new trial might be granted those convicted without affecting those acquitted.[65] But a motion for a new trial made jointly by two or more parties must be granted as to all or overruled as to all.[66]

(III) Revoking Order. The court may, where an order for a new trial has been granted improvidently and without sufficient cause, revoke it during the term, and by this the judgment is left in force.[67]

5. Proceedings at New Trial. An order granting a new trial effects a rehearing of the case before a new jury, with both parties in the same position as if the case had never been heard before.[68] Defendant may be tried on the old indictment.[69] It seems that instead of pleading not guilty and going to trial on the facts he may demur to the indictment,[70] although it has been held that he cannot move to quash the indictment or plead in abatement.[71] Where defendant has once been arraigned and has pleaded he cannot demand that he shall be arraigned and required to plead at the new trial.[72] It is not error to have the new trial at too late if made after sentence. Griffin v. State, 34 Ohio St. 299.

61. See Com. v. Best, 181 Mass. 545, 63 N. E. 1073, holding that the decision of the trial court upon an issue of fact arising on a motion for a new trial and based upon testimony taken at the motion, and upon what was seen by the judge at the trial, is conclusive, and will not be reviewed on appeal.

62. The motion is properly determined as an entirety, and if it cannot be sustained as presented it is not error to overrule it altogether. Reed v. State, (Nebr. 1902) 92 N. W. 321.

63. On a motion for a new trial because of the insufficiency of the evidence, it is error for the court to decline to look into the evidence or pass upon its sufficiency, and he should expressly declare his approval or disapproval of the verdict. State v. Bridges, 29 Kan. 138. See also McIntyre v. People, 38 Ill. 514, holding that a motion for a new trial based upon irregularities at the trial need not be expressly passed upon by the court or an order made; and that where there is no defect in the indictment or record which would render proper the arrest of the judgment, it is not error to overrule the motion for a new trial by merely entering judgment and pronouncing sentence upon the prisoner.

It is a sufficient expression of approval of the verdict where the court states that the motion is overruled on the ground that his views upon the question of defendant's guilt are not so clear and certain that he ought to interfere with the verdict. Boyle v. State, 61 Wis. 440, 21 N. W. 289.

As the judge is not required to state his reasons for overruling the motion, he cannot be held to have acquiesced in such allegations of the motion as the reasons which he does give do not expressly cover. State v. Fuselier, 51 La. Ann. 1504, 26 So. 408.

New trial not beneficial.— Where a new trial is asked because of errors in the admission and exclusion of evidence, or because of errors in the instructions, and it appears that the verdict is sufficiently supported by the evidence, and that a different result would not follow on a new trial with correct rulings as to the evidence and proper instructions, a new trial should be denied. Miller v. State, 3 Wyo. 657, 29 Pac. 136; U. S. v. Daubner, 17 Fed. 793.

64. Where counsel neglects to perfect his papers on a motion for a new trial within the time allowed him by the court for that purpose the motion may be dismissed. Ross v. State, 65 Ga. 127.

B. Arrest of Judgment — 1. In General — a. Matter Appearing on Record. A motion in arrest of judgment differs from a motion for a new trial, in that the former can be based only upon facts appearing in the record, or upon some matter which ought to appear there but does not appear.[74] The motion in arrest reaches substantial errors which are patent on the record, and which vitiate the proceedings,[75] and not errors on the trial not in the record and which can only appear by a bill of exceptions.[76]

b. Necessity For Writing. In some jurisdictions, as a matter of practice, or by statute, a motion in arrest of judgment must be in writing, and must state the grounds for the same.[77]

ment must be specially pleaded, or they are waived and cannot be urged by motion in arrest of judgment.[78]

(II) DELAY IN TRIAL. Where defendant fails to object at the trial, he cannot on a motion in arrest urge that he was not discharged under a statute providing for the early trial or discharge of prisoners not admitted to bail.[79]

(III) LACK OF JURISDICTION. An objection that the court had no jurisdiction may in most jurisdictions be urged in arrest of judgment,[80] or the court may on this ground arrest the judgment on its own motion.[81]

(IV) DISQUALIFICATION OF JUDGE. That the judge is disqualified to try the case is not ground for a motion in arrest where the disqualification is not apparent on the record,[82] or where the accused voluntarily went to trial without objection.[83]

(V) WANT OF ARRAIGNMENT AND PLEA. In some jurisdictions proceeding to trial without any issue joined, as where defendant is not arraigned and does not plead to the indictment,[84] or where, on his standing mute, a plea of not guilty is not entered for him,[85] is held to be ground for an arrest of judgment. In others, however, it is held that if defendant was present and represented by counsel and the trial proceeded regularly in all respects as if a formal plea had been entered, the omission is not ground for a motion in arrest.[86]

(VI) ELECTION BETWEEN COURTS UPON ARRAIGNMENT. Under a statute providing that a defendant arraigned upon a capital offense in a county court may elect to be tried in a circuit court having concurrent jurisdiction, it is not ground for a motion in arrest that on his arraignment in the county court he pleaded not guilty before making his election, or that on his trial in the circuit court he was not again arraigned.[87]

(VII) ABSENCE OF DEFENDANT WHEN CASE SET FOR TRIAL. It is not ground for an arrest of judgment that defendant was not present when his case was set for trial,[88] particularly if the record shows that he was then represented by counsel.[89]

(VIII) LIMITATION OF PROSECUTION. According to the weight of authority, it is ground for an arrest of judgment that it appears on the record or indictment that the latter was not found within the period of limitation, although the statute was not pleaded.[90] Some cases, however, hold that the statute must be pleaded and the defense proved at the trial to be available.[91]

(IX) FORMER JEOPARDY AND ANOTHER INDICTMENT PENDING. The defense of former conviction, acquittal,[92] or that another indictment for the same crime is pending,[93] or that an appeal from a former judgment of conviction is pending,[94] cannot be urged in arrest of judgment but must be pleaded and proved.[95]

(X) PROSECUTION UNDER REPEALED OR VOID STATUTE. It is ground for arrest of judgment that it appears from the indictment that it is based on a statute which had been repealed,[96] or on one which is unconstitutional and void,[97] or which imposes no penalty for its infraction.[98] The repeal of a statute under which a conviction has been had after the verdict but before judgment,[99] or pending an appeal,[1] is ground for arrest of judgment.[2]

2. Effect of repeal see, generally, supra, II, C, 3, d, (II).

(xi) Errors and Irregularities in Conduct of Trial. As a general rule errors and irregularities in the conduct of the trial not promptly objected to are not ground for arrest of judgment after conviction.[3]

(xii) Rulings on Evidence. The improper admission or exclusion of evidence, not being a defect apparent on the record, is not ground for a motion in arrest of judgment. The remedy is by prompt objection and exception, and by a motion for a new trial or an appeal or writ of error.[4]

(xiii) Questions of Fact. The objection that the verdict is contrary to the evidence or based on insufficient evidence,[5] or that it is contrary to the instructions,[6] cannot be urged in arrest of judgment. The remedy of defendant is to move for a new trial.[7]

(xiv) Errors in Instructions or Refusals to Instruct. Objections and exceptions to instructions, or to refusals to instruct on request, cannot be urged in arrest of judgment.[8] The misdirection of the jury by the court, not being a defect in the record, is not ground for arresting the judgment.[9]

(xv) Failure to Prove Venue. An objection that the prosecution has not proved the venue cannot be urged in arrest of judgment.[10]

(xvi) Disposition of Indictment as to Co-Defendants. That certain persons jointly indicted with defendant but separately tried have been convicted is not ground for arresting the judgment as to him.[11] The fact that on separate trials an accessary is convicted before the principal is not ground for arrest of judgment, as the conviction of the principal does not appear of record on the trial of the accessary.[12] The acquittal of the co-defendants of a person convicted of a crime, such as conspiracy or riot, which can only be committed by more than one, is not ground for an arrest of judgment as to one defendant convicted, if the indictment charges it to have been committed in company with other persons unknown, as either of defendants tried might have been guilty with such unknown persons;[13] and where only three are charged as engaged in the riot or conspiracy,

S. v. Angell, 11 Fed. 34), the fact that an indictment on which is recorded a previous conviction was sent to the jury room (Forbes v. Com., 90 Va. 550, 19 S. E. 164), or a failure to ask the accused before passing sentence if he has anything to say (State v. Henry, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 539) is not ground for a motion in arrest of judgment.

if they are separately tried, the acquittal of two of them is not ground for arresting judgment as to the other, who has been previously tried and convicted, such acquittals not being part of the record of his case.[14]

(XVII) SUMMONING AND IMPANELING OF JURORS. Errors and irregularities in the summoning, impaneling, and swearing of the jury which tried the accused cannot be urged in arrest of judgment. These objections must be taken by challenge, and if not thus taken they are waived.[15] The acceptance of the jury is a waiver of all objections to its organization.[16]

(XVIII) DISQUALIFICATION OF JURORS. Objections to the jurors based upon disqualifications not appearing in the record must be taken by challenge, and cannot be urged in arrest of judgment.[17]

(XIX) MISCONDUCT OF JURORS. The misconduct of the jury as a body or the misbehavior of an individual juror, although it may be urged as ground for a new trial, is not ground for a motion in arrest of judgment.[18] Failure of the record to show that a juror was sworn or that the jury when they returned to court were in charge of an officer is not ground for arrest of judgment.[19]

ity of such objections by ascertaining whether they would have prevailed on demurrer.[28] Thus whether the facts are properly alleged, or whether if proved they would constitute a crime, may be considered on arrest of judgment.[29] If, however, the indictment charges substantial facts which constitute a public offense, and one of which the court has jurisdiction, although in very general and indefinite language, judgment should not be arrested.[30] An objection that the indictment is too indefinite and uncertain in the description of the offense,[31] or that it does not charge an offense within the statute may be determined on a motion in arrest;[32] but it is necessary for the accused to show that allegations are omitted which are necessary to insure a fair trial and protection against further prosecution.[33]

(III) Duplicity and Joinder of Offenses. As a matter of law there is no insuperable objection to charging two or more distinct felonies in an indictment, and while the court may in its discretion quash an indictment which charges the accused with two or more distinct felonies, this is not ground for arrest of judgment.[34] The objection that an indictment is bad for duplicity should be made by demurrer, by motion to quash, or by motion that the prosecution be required to elect between the offenses, and a failure to do so waives the objection and it cannot be raised by motion in arrest of judgment.[35]

(IV) ALLEGATIONS OF VENUE. In the absence of a statute to the contrary failure to allege in the indictment the state[36] or county[37] in which the offense was committed is ground for an arrest of judgment.[38]

(V) TIME OF OFFENSE. In the absence of statute the indictment must state the time of the offense, and the failure to do so is ground for a motion in arrest of judgment;[39] but under the statutes of some of the states a motion in arrest will not lie for this cause, except where time is of the substance of the offense.[40] The objection that the indictment charges the crime to have been committed since the finding of the indictment[41] or on an impossible day may be urged in arrest of judgment.[42] If there be but one statute applicable, the indictment need not allege that the crime was committed after it went into operation. This is implied by the allegation that the act was done against the form of the statute, which, being found by the verdict, is part of the record, and a motion in arrest will not lie.[43] And where there are two statutes, the later of which changes the nature of the punishment, the failure of the indictment to refer to the particular statute under which it is found is not ground for an arrest of judgment, where both the date alleged and the proof agree as to whether the offense was committed before or after the later act took effect.[44]

(VI) PLACE OF HOLDING COURT. The failure of the record or indictment to show the place where the court was held at which the indictment was found is ground for arrest of judgment.[45] Holding court at a building other than the court-house, where the court-house is not in proper condition to be used, is not ground for arrest of judgment.[46]

(VII) OMISSION TO SWEAR WITNESSES BEFORE GRAND JURY. Failure of the indorsement on an indictment to show that the witnesses sent to the grand jury were sworn is not ground for a motion in arrest of the judgment after

(VIII) Misnomer of Defendant. Misnomer of defendant in the indictment should be pleaded before the general plea of not guilty, and where the latter plea is put in, the misnomer is waived as ground for arrest of judgment.[48]

(IX) Conclusion of Indictment or Information. At common law every indictment, except for mere non-feasance, must conclude "against the peace" of the king in whose reign the offense was committed, and in this country against the peace of the state, commonwealth, or people;[49] but in some states it is held that the omission of these words is not ground for a motion in arrest.[50] If, however, the conclusion necessary to charge the offense is omitted, the objection may be raised by a motion in arrest.[51]

(X) Amendment of Indictment or Information. In the absence of express statutory provision, indictments cannot be amended, as an indictment is the finding of a jury under oath, and its amendment by the court, in matter of substance, is ground for arresting judgment.[52] This rule, however, does not apply to informations, for they are amendable.[53]

(XI) Variance—(A) Between Allegation and Proof. A variance between the allegations of the indictment and the proof is not ground for arrest of judgment.[54]

(B) Between Information and Affidavit, Complaint, or Presentment. The fact that there is a discrepancy in the setting forth of the facts between an information and the affidavit, complaint, or presentment on which it is based is not ground for arrest of judgment.[55]

the grand jurors were drawn,[56] or impaneled or organized[57] in accordance with the statute. These objections may be taken by challenging the array or by plea in abatement, and if not so taken are waived.[58]

(XIII) INCOMPETENCY OF GRAND JURORS. An objection to the indictment based upon the incompetency of one or more of the grand jurors by whom it was found cannot be urged in arrest of judgment. It is ground for a plea in abatement or motion to quash, but pleading and going to trial on the merits waives it.[59]

(XIV) FAILURE TO ALLEGE OATH OF GRAND JURORS. At common law an indictment is defective in failing to state that the charge was made upon the oath of the grand jurors,[60] and it has been held that a motion in arrest of judgment will be sustained where the indictment does not contain this allegation.[61]

(XV) RETURN AND FILING OF INDICTMENT OR PRESENTMENT. Before a defendant can be tried upon an indictment, it must appear by the record that the indictment was returned. This, according to some of the cases, will not be presumed; and if the record does not show affirmatively that the indictment was returned in open court judgment will be arrested.[62] Other cases hold that the objection can only be taken by plea and is waived by going to trial.[63] Where the record shows that the indictment was returned and that defendant pleaded to it, he cannot move in arrest for any irregularity or informality in the returning or filing.[64]

c. Defects in Verdict — (I) In General. Where the verdict, as shown by the record, is defective, objection may be made by a motion in arrest.[65]

(II) Absence of Defendant. The rendition of the verdict in the absence of defendant is ground for arrest of judgment, if prompt objection was made.[66]

(III) Entry of Verdict. That the verdict was not entered on the minutes at the term at which it was rendered is not ground for arrest of judgment, as the court may at a subsequent term order it entered nunc pro tunc.[67]

(IV) Conviction of One of Several Offenses Charged. In most jurisdictions, where an indictment contains several counts, only one of which is good, judgment will not be arrested on a general verdict; if the evidence is sufficient to support the good count the verdict will be applied to it.[68] And if two or more offenses are charged in one count or in an indictment containing one count only, a motion in arrest will not be sustained on a general verdict of guilty, unless the offenses are improperly joined and belong to different classes of crime.[69] Some cases hold that the judgment will not be arrested unless the two offenses require, not only different degrees, but different forms of punishment.[70] Where crimes are charged separately in different counts of the same indictment, judgment will not be arrested on a verdict of guilty, unless the offenses are radically different and require different judgments and punishments, and not merely punishments differing in degree or amount.[71]

(v) VERDICT AGAINST JOINT DEFENDANTS. Where one of several persons jointly indicted is separately tried, and the jury find "defendant" guilty, there is no ground for arrest of judgment, as the verdict is meant to apply to the defendant on trial,[72] but a verdict assessing a joint fine on defendants jointly convicted is ground for a motion to arrest,[73] unless the statute prescribes what shall be the only grounds for an arrest of judgment, and this is not included.[74]

(vi) VERDICT NOT RESPONSIVE. A motion in arrest should be granted where the jury finds the accused guilty of an offense not charged and not included in the one charged in the indictment.[75] Where the indictment and trial are for a misdemeanor, and defendant is found guilty of a felony, judgment will be arrested.[76]

3. MAKING, HEARING, AND DETERMINATION OF MOTION IN ARREST — a. Motion For New Trial Treated as Motion in Arrest. Where a motion for a new trial is based upon facts which would be good on a motion in arrest, it will be treated as such.[77]

b. Statutory Provisions. Where a statute expressly declares upon what grounds judgment may be arrested, other grounds for arrest are by implication excluded.[78]

c. Jurisdiction. The motion in arrest of judgment should be made in the trial court in the first instance.[79] If made and withdrawn it cannot be renewed in the appellate court solely for the purpose of obtaining a review.[80]

d. Time of Making. The motion in arrest of judgment should be made before sentence.[81] In the absence of statute prescribing the time within which it should be filed, the accused is entitled to a reasonable time, and what is a reasonable time is in the fair discretion of the court.[82] complained of with certainty and definiteness, and must show that they are defects which are apparent on the record.[84]

g. Admission of Oral Evidence. Since, on a motion in arrest, the court cannot go beyond the record,[85] it will not take notice of a stipulation which admits certain facts,[86] or hear evidence to show a fact not of record,[87] as for example to show that the prosecution is barred by the statute of limitations,[88] or that a juror was an alien.[89]

h. Presence of Defendant. In England it has been held to be necessary that defendant shall be present at the argument on his motion in arrest,[90] but in this country, by the weight of authority, his presence may be dispensed with.[91]

i. Curing Record by Amendment When Motion Is Pending. Where a motion in arrest is pending, based on omissions and errors in the record, it is competent for the court to amend the record at any time during the term to conform to the truth.[92]

j. Right to Have Motion Determined Before Sentence. The motion in arrest is properly made between the verdict and the sentence and must be decided before the latter can be pronounced,[93] and hence it has been held to be error for the court to continue the hearing of the motion and pronounce sentence before the motion is finally disposed of.[94] It has also been held, however, that the action of the court in passing final sentence is a sufficient disposition and overruling of a motion in arrest, and that no express determination of the motion is required.[95]

k. Failure to Demand Bill of Particulars. Failure of defendant to demand a bill of particulars does not deprive him of the right to move in arrest of judgment on the ground that the indictment is defective.[96]

4. Effect of Order Arresting Judgment — a. In General. The effect of an order in arrest of judgment is to place the accused as nearly as other and controlling rules of law will permit in the same situation as he was before the indictment. On its entry he must be discharged, unless he is detained in custody by some other legal process or order, which it is in the power of the court to make.[97] The decision is conclusive upon subsequent judges, so that another judge at

b. Remanding Defendant For New Trial. According to the weight of authority, where judgment is arrested defendant is not entitled to an immediate discharge, but may be remanded or admitted to bail, and a new trial may be had on the same indictment,[99] or a new indictment may be found if necessary.[1]

c. Plea of Former Jeopardy. It has been held that a motion in arrest of judgment does not prevent the accused from pleading former jeopardy.[2] On the other hand, it has been held that where, after a verdict of guilty, judgment is arrested on motion of defendant, he has not been legally in jeopardy and cannot plead the conviction in bar of a subsequent prosecution,[3] and that where judgment is arrested for error committed after the finding of the indictment another trial may be had on the same indictment.[4]

XVI. JUDGMENT, SENTENCE, AND FINAL COMMITMENT.

A. Sentence Defined. A sentence denotes the action of the court before which the trial is had declaring the consequences to the convict of the fact of his guilt.[5]

B. Custody of Accused After Verdict. At common law, where defendant was in custody, or if not, where the crime was capital, the accused was remanded to jail in the interval, if any, between conviction and sentence.[6] Where the accused is convicted of a misdemeanor in his absence, a capias should be awarded and issued to bring him in for sentence.[7]

C. Power and Duty of Court to Sentence — 1. In General. It is the duty of the court to render judgment and pronounce sentence on the verdict.[8] of the court is not lost the judge sitting at a regular term thereof may pass sentence, although the conviction was had at another term and before another judge.[10]

3. Judicial Commutation of Sentence. A statute conferring on the court the power, at defendant's request, to commute a fine to imprisonment, and if defendant shall have been imprisoned a certain period for the non-payment of costs which he is unable to pay to release him, does not conflict with a constitutional provision vesting in the governor the power to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons.[11]

4. Effect of Repeal of Statute. Where after conviction and before judgment a statute under which the conviction is had is repealed, without a saving clause, the power to sentence is destroyed.[12]

5. On Agreed Statement of Facts. Inasmuch as no one can be punished for crime except upon his conviction, plea of guilty, or of nolo contendere, sentence will not be imposed upon an agreed statement of facts.[13] The contrary has been held in the case of misdemeanors where the punishment is by fine only.[14]

6. Loss of Jurisdiction. A judgment and sentence entered on one of the crimes included in the verdict of guilty, and which has been partly executed by the imprisonment of defendant, ends the prosecution, exhausts the power of the court, and terminates its jurisdiction.[15] But the erroneous entry of judgment pending a motion for a new trial,[16] the entry of a judgment that is without substance and void,[17] or the loss of the information or indictment after verdict but before sentence[18] does not divest the court of authority to pronounce sentence.

7. Time of Pronouncing Sentence. At common law the sentence in capital cases was usually given immediately after conviction, although the court might adjourn it to another day;[19] and this is probably the rule in most crimes in the states.[20] By statute in some of the states it is provided that a certain period shall elapse between conviction and sentence,[21] although defendant may waive the statute and consent to an immediate judgment.[22] The fact that exceptions which have been taken have not been settled does not prevent sentence,[23] and a statute allowing the convict to be sentenced, notwithstanding exceptions, is constitutional.[24]

8. On Plea of Guilty — a. In General. Sentence may be pronounced on a plea of guilty[25] or of nolo contendere by the court at the term subsequent to that at which the plea was entered.[26]

b. Degree of Offense. Where the accused pleads guilty to an indictment which charges an offense of which he may be guilty in one of several degrees, the court must, before passing sentence, ascertain the degree,[27] or this may be determined by the jury under an instruction limiting them to the consideration of this question alone.[28]

c. Fixing Punishment.[29] A statute requiring that on a plea of guilty the jury shall assess the punishment is mandatory.[30] In the absence of statute, on a plea of guilty, the court has the same power to fix the punishment that the jury would have under the statute on a verdict of guilty after a trial.[31]

d. On Plea to Two or More Counts. On a plea of guilty to an information which charges the same criminal transaction in two counts and under different statutes, the court may impose a sentence on the second count, although it is greater than that which it might impose on the first count.[32]

9. Insanity After Conviction. Where the prisoner, after conviction of a capital felony, asserts that he is insane, judgment may be postponed until this fact can be ascertained.[33]

10. Pregnancy of Female Convict. Pregnancy may be pleaded by a woman, after conviction, before sentence of death is passed upon her, which shall be tried by a jury of matrons.[34]

11. Suspension of Sentence — a. When Permitted. Whether the court in the absence of statute has power to suspend sentence for an indefinite period is not absolutely decided. It has been held that where there are extenuating circumstances, or a like case is pending on appeal, or where for any sufficient cause an immediate sentence is not required, the court may, with the consent of all parties, and upon terms which to it seem just, suspend sentence.[35] Some cases hold, however, that courts have not the power to suspend indefinitely the passing or the execution of the sentence, and that an attempt to do so is a usurpation of the power to pardon or to remit the punishment, which belongs solely to the executive.[36]

b. Effect of Suspension. A suspension of sentence is not a final judgment by which the case is put out of court, but is a mere suspension of active proceedings in the case,[37] and where defendant is again arrested and brought before the same court, charged with another crime,[38] or where he fails to keep his promise to pay the costs or a fine,[39] or to do some other act which is a condition of the suspension, the court may sentence him at the same[40] or at a subsequent term.[41] Where, however, the condition on which sentence is suspended is the doing of something

A distinction is made between a suspension of sentence for an indefinite period, amounting usually to an absolute discharge, and a temporary suspension, for stated periods from time to time. Those cases which hold that an indefinite suspension is not proper concede that the court has inherent power to grant a temporary suspension to allow defendant time to move for a new trial or in arrest, to appeal, to petition for pardon, or to enable the court to ascertain what circumstances may be urged in mitigation or aggravation. And where the court has an absolute discretion under a statute to fix the penalty, mandamus will not lie to compel the court to sentence, where, under the peculiar and extraordinary circumstances of the case, the judge believes that no punishment should be imposed, for if the court has the power to impose only a nominal punishment by its sentence, mandamus will not lie to compel him to perform a useless act which would impose useless expense on the state. People v. Blackburn, 6 Utah 347, 23 Pac. 759.

In New York it is held that the supreme court of criminal jurisdiction has inherent authority to suspend sentence, during good behavior, by the common law, and that a statute which makes certain crimes punishable, and devolves the duty upon the court to impose the punishment prescribed does not abrogate this common-law authority. Where sentence is indefinitely suspended, as distinguished from temporary suspension to determine motions or other proceedings which may occur after verdict, the court cannot thereafter, and especially at a subsequent term, revoke the order and proceed to judgwhich the court can command as a part of its final judgment,[42] the imposing of the condition will be equivalent to a sentence, and the power of the court to sentence is exhausted.[43]

12. SEVERAL SENTENCES ON DEFENDANTS JOINTLY TRIED. Although a joint indictment and a joint trial are proper, a joint sentence or judgment is not. Judgments must be several,[44] so that each individual convict may be punished for his own crime alone.

13. SENTENCE ON SEVERAL COUNTS — a. Cumulative Sentences. Where two counts in an indictment charge different crimes, which are of the same character, and which grow out of the same transaction, yet differ in degree, the sentence, based on a general verdict of guilty, must impose only one penalty, and a separate sentence for each crime, imposing a separate punishment for it, is erroneous and void.[45] Where, however, defendant is convicted by a general verdict on two or more counts of an indictment charging crimes which are of the same character, although growing out of totally distinct and separate transactions, sentence may be passed and judgment may be entered for a specified term of imprisonment upon each count, which terms must be consecutive; and it is error to sentence for a certain period in gross.[46]

b. Sentence For Highest Degree. Where, as is a common practice, one crime is charged in several good counts in one indictment, in different degrees, and a general verdict of guilty is rendered thereon on sufficient evidence, the accused may be sentenced upon that count of the indictment which charges the highest degree of the crime.[47]

c. Upon Conviction on One Count. Where the verdict convicts defendant on one of several counts and acquits him on the others,[48] or contains no finding as to the others,[49] a judgment of acquittal is proper as to the latter.

d. Sentence on One Count, Suspension on Others. Where the accused has been convicted of several offenses, charged in separate counts, he may be sentenced on one count, and sentence on the others may be suspended.[50]

e. Sentence Based on One Good Count. Where there are several counts in an indictment and one is good, while the others are bad, and the verdict is a general one, a sentence on the verdict will be sustained on the presumption of law that the verdict is based upon the good count only.[51]

Where separate indictments for distinct offenses are consolidated and tried, and the verdict finds the accused guilty on each indictment separately, one judgment and sentence providing for imprisonment for a continuous term of years, but specifying the period of imprisonment for each crime, is sufficient, without a separate entry of judgment in each case.[52]

15. Power to Fix Punishment.[53] In jurisdictions where the jury assess the punishment, the judgment must follow the verdict, and the court has no authority to impose either a greater[54] or a less punishment than that assessed by the jury.[55]

D. Mode of Pronouncing Sentence and Requisites and Sufficiency of Sentence — 1. In General. The judgment and sentence should be pronounced in open court, but need not necessarily be public.[56] At common law it was absolutely necessary that the prisoner should be present in person when sentence of death, imprisonment, or the pillory was to be pronounced upon him, although, where the penalty was pecuniary, sentence might be pronounced in his absence if the court under the circumstances saw fit to dispense with his presence.[57] In the United States the rule of the common law is either established by statute or recognized in the absence of a statute.[58] In some states, by statute, it is directed that the accused when he appears for judgment must be informed by the court

2. Showing Cause Why Sentence Should Not Be Pronounced — a. In General. At common law it was absolutely necessary in capital offenses that defendant should be asked by the clerk before sentence if he had anything to say why sentence of death should not be pronounced upon him, and that this should appear of record.[60] According to the decisions of most of the states the court need not in pronouncing sentence, except perhaps in capital cases,[61] ask the prisoner if he has anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced against him.[62] In a few jurisdictions, however, it is necessary to do so.[63]

c. "Benefit of Clergy." This phrase originally denoted the exemption which was accorded to clergymen from the jurisdiction of the secular courts, or from arrest or attachment on criminal process issuing from these courts in certain cases. Subsequently it meant a privilege of exemption from the punishment of death on conviction of certain crimes accorded to such persons as were clerks or who could read.[68]

d. Plea of Pardon. A pardon when special or under a general act of amnesty might at common law be pleaded at any time, even after conviction;[69] but if not pleaded until after judgment, although the judgment would be reversed so far as the life of the accused was concerned, the pardon would not reverse the attainder.[70]

e. Plea of Non-Identity. The accused may plead before sentence, in reply to the question why sentence should not be pronounced against him, that he is not the party who has been convicted.[71]

3. Judicial Finding That Accused Is Guilty. In the absence of a statute it is not necessary that the court should before sentence find, as its independent judgment upon the facts, as a condition of its power to sentence, that the accused is guilty.[72]

In capital crimes against the United States benefit of clergy was abolished by section thirty of the act of congress of April 30, 1790.

At common law the form was for the accused to say, without holding up his hand, that he is not the person mentioned in the record, with the reply by the attorney-general that he is the same and that he is ready to verify it. On issue thus joined a trial by a jury must be immediately had. 1 Chitty Cr. L. 777. On this trial, although the prisoner was at common law allowed to have counsel, he was not given time to produce witnesses unless he would positively swear to his non-identity, nor could he be allowed any peremptory challenges. 4 Blackstone Comm. 396.

4. Responsiveness to Verdict. The sentence should in its general terms and in the character of the punishment imposed be responsive to the verdict.[73] If the conviction is for one offense, a judgment for another offense, although of a similar character, is error, even though the penalties be the same.[74]

5. Definiteness of Sentence — a. Must Be Certain. The sentence ought to be certain and definite, so that the prisoner and the officer charged with the execution of the sentence may know its length, if imprisonment, and its amount if a fine, without being required to inspect the record.[75]

b. Commencement and Duration of Imprisonment. A sentence of imprisonment is not void because it fails to specify the time for the imprisonment to commence. It is sufficient if it states the duration and place of imprisonment.[76] Such a sentence cannot be set aside as indefinite and uncertain.[77]

c. Sentence of Death. At common law the time of execution for a capital crime was never part of the sentence itself;[78] the court might either appoint the

A sentence of imprisonment to commence after the expiration of "former sentences" is too indefinite to be enforced (Larney v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 599), and the same rule of construction was applied to a sentence of imprisonment "to begin after the expiration of the first sentence," where the record did not show when such first sentence began, or for how long it was imposed (Wallace v. State, 41 Fla. 547, 26 So. 713).

To annex a condition to a sentence providing for its subsequent remission is irregular (State v. Bennett, 20 N. place of execution or leave it to the sheriff;[79] but where an offender was tried at the assize, the place of execution could not be awarded to another county.[80] In some jurisdictions the executive order fixes both the time and the place of execution, and it is improper for any place to be designated in the sentence.[81]

d. Successive Terms of Imprisonment. Judgment on a conviction of two or more offenses, involving imprisonment for two or more terms in succession, should not fix the date on which each term should begin, but should direct it to commence at the expiration of the term prior thereto, which may be shortened by good conduct or otherwise.[82]

e. Place of Imprisonment. A sentence is not invalid because of a misnomer in the name of the prison,[83] or because it does not specify the particular prison in which the accused shall be incarcerated, where the statute designates the prison.[84]

f. Limits of Imprisonment For Non-Payment of Fine. A sentence imposing imprisonment to compel the payment of a fine should be set aside where it does not limit the imprisonment and end it when the fine is paid,[85] unless the statute limits the time of the imprisonment in default of the payment of a fine.[86]

h. Imprisonment at Hard Labor. A sentence of the accused to the state's prison need not expressly state that he is to be put at hard labor, where the statute[88] provides that mode of punishment for convicts sentenced thereto.[89] Where it is provided by statute that in cases where punishment in the state prison is awarded the sentence shall be partly to hard labor and partly to solitary confinement, a sentence to imprisonment is erroneous which fails to direct as to either the period of hard labor or of solitary confinement.[90] Under a statute empowering the court in certain cases to impose an additional sentence at hard labor for unpaid costs it is proper for the sentence to specify the amount of the costs, the time defendant is to serve, and at what rate per day;[91] and it is reversible error where the sentence does not specify either the number of days or the rate per day.[92]

6. Construction of Sentence. A sentence that defendants be confined in the penitentiary "all their natural lifetime" means that each one of them shall be so confined.[93] Where an indictment charges in separate counts the commission and an attempt to commit a certain crime, and a general verdict of guilty is rendered, a sentence for "the offense in the indictment charged" is for the greater offense only into which the lesser is merged.[94]

7. EXCESSIVE AND PARTLY ERRONEOUS SENTENCES. Although there is some conflict in the cases upon the question whether a sentence which imposes a punishment in excess of the power of the court to impose is void in toto, or is void only as to the excess, the weight of authority sustains the proposition that such a sentence is valid to the extent that the court had power to impose it, although void as to the excess.[95] But where the erroneous sentence is not severable into parts, one of which may be complete and valid under the statute, although the other is invalid, the whole sentence is void, and the accused may be discharged on a writ of Conflicting sentences for same offense.— If two judgments are rendered and filed at the same time for the same offense, but each contains a different sentence, the real sentence is void for uncertainty (Davis v. Catron, 22 Wash. 183, 60 Pac. 131), and where the accused is sentenced at different times to two different punishments, to be inflicted at different places, and of different duration, the last sentence is void, although the first is valid (State v. Davis, 31 La. Ann. 249).

95. Hence on the return of a habeas corpus the whole sentence is not void ab initio, but it is good so far as it is within the power of the court, and defendant is not entitled to his discharge unless he has served out so much of the sentence as is valid.

In other words the sentence is not void as being beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and the accused is not entitled to a new trial. The judgment is voidable only by proceedings upon writ of error. Sennot's Case, 146 Mass. 489, 16 N. E. 448, 4 Am. St. Rep. 344.

Illustrations of separable sentences.—Where a court has power to sentence to fine "or" imprisonment, and sentences to fine "and" imprisonment, the sentence is separable, and on payment of the fine or on serving the imprisonment, the accused must be discharged. In re Feeley, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 598; In re Stewart, 16 Nebr. 193, 20 N. W. 255; Ex p. Lange, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 163, 21 L. ed. 872. So where the statute fixes the punishment at not exceeding six months' imprisonment or a fine, or both, and the sentence is for three years, the prisoner should be released at the expiration of six months. Ex p. Bulger, 60 Cal. 438. habeas corpus, especially where the court who hears the application for the writ has no power to pass the proper sentence or to remand the case to the trial court for that purpose.[96]

8. Erroneous Sentence Below Minimum Punishment. In regard to sentences which are lighter than the minimum punishment provided by the statute, the rule in most jurisdictions is that where the punishment imposed is not of a different kind from that which the statute prescribes, the accused cannot claim to have been prejudiced thereby, and is not entitled to an appeal.[97] Nor is such a sentence ground for discharge on habeas corpus because of the insufficiency of the punishment imposed.[98] Hence where a party convicted ought under a statute to be sentenced to two distinct and independent punishments, as fine and imprisonment, it is not error[99] nor ground for his discharge[1] that he is sentenced only to one of such punishments. Other cases hold that any departure in the sentence from the express terms of the statute, whether as to the form or the extent of the punishment, is error;[2] and such is the uniform rule in the federal courts.[3]

9. Modifying, Vacating, and Revising Sentence — a. In General. oner has paid his fine or his imprisonment has begun, the court has no power to recall him to revoke his former sentence and impose one which inflicts a greater punishment.[5] So also where the court has imposed a fine and imprisonment, where it had power under the statute only to punish by fine or imprisonment, and the fine has been paid, it cannot, even during the same term, impose imprisonment instead of the former sentence.[6] The power of the court to alter a sentence during the term should not, be exercised arbitrarily and without sufficient cause.[7]

b. At Subsequent Term. After the term is passed at which the original sentence was imposed, the court has as a general rule no power to modify, amend, or revise it, particularly if the new punishment is in excess of the original sentence.[8] Changes in the sentence, however, which do not alter the punishment but only change the time or place of its infliction may be made at a subsequent term.[9]

c. Presence of Accused. As the time and place of execution are not strictly speaking part of a sentence of death, it is not necessary that the accused should be present when a change is made in them,[10] nor need he be present at the writing out and signing of a prior oral sentence,[11] or where an order is made changing the place of confinement.[12]

d. Remission of Part of Penalty. The prosecuting attorney has no authority to remit a part of the sentence where the jury, under an erroneous instruction as to the minimum penalty allowable, have assessed it at an amount greater than that prescribed by statute.[13]

10. Waiver and Correction of Error. It has been held in regard to some irregularities in rendering judgment or pronouncing sentence that any objection must be promptly made or will be deemed to have been waived.[14] The irregularity in failing to ask a prisoner if he has anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced upon him may be cured by again calling him to the bar and imposing the sentence with the proper formalities.[15]

11. Surplusage. Words or phrases in the judgment which do not add to or change the mode of the punishment do not invalidate the sentence, but may be rejected as surplusage.[16]

E. Entry of Judgment and Correction of Record — 1. Necessity and Mode of Entry. Although it is not necessary that the judgment shall be drawn up by the judge,[17] it is necessary that it shall be properly entered by the clerk as the judgment of the court before it can be executed.[18] Sentence may be entered by the clerk from the indictment and other papers without any memoranda in the judge's minutes that sentence has been pronounced.[19]

2. Requisites of Record — a. General Rule as to Form. The record of the entry of the judgment should contain a concise statement of all facts necessary to give jurisdiction, or to show that proper proceedings have been had during the trial from the presentment down to the passing of the sentence, which would sustain a valid judgment.[20] Modern cases have, however, materially departed from the strictness of the early common-law rules as to the facts which the record of the judgment should contain.[21]

13. Defendant in such a case is entitled to a new trial. Allen v. Com., 2 Leigh (Va.) 727.

14. This rule has been applied to the case of a judgment rendered within the period which the statute declares must intervene between the verdict and judgment (People v. Johnson, 88 Cal. 171, 25 Pac. 1116; People v. Mess, 65 Cal. 174, 3 Pac. 670), and to the failure of the court to ask if the accused has anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced, before sentencing him to imprisonment (Grady v. State, 11 Ga. 253), or in some jurisdictions even in a capital case (State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. This form has been approved in the United States (Lovett v. State, 29 Fla. 356, 11 So. 172; Strong v. State, 57 Ind. 428), and is a sufficient statement that the guilt of defendant has been adjudicated (Roberson v. State, 123 Ala. 55, 26 So. 645). 21. A clear and concise statement of the names of the parties, the character of the offense, the verdict, the sentence passed upon it, and the penalty imposed has been held

b. Description of Offense. Both at common law and now usually by statute the judgment must state concisely and intelligibly the offense of which defendant was convicted.[22] An entry that the accused was convicted of a misdemeanor is proper.[23] Where the judgment record enables the elements and character of the crime to be ascertained by a reference to the indictment,[24] where it contains a reference to the verdict returned against him,[25] or speaks of his having been found guilty or convicted[26] of a particular and specifically mentioned crime, the description of the crime is sufficient.

c. Findings of Facts to Fix Punishment. Under a statute requiring that where a defendant pleads guilty, the court shall proceed to examine witnesses to determine the degree of the crime and give sentence accordingly, it is not necessary that the record should show that such evidence was taken.[27]

d. Signature and Authentication. It is not necessary that the judgment record should be signed by the trial judge, unless it is so required by statute.[28]

In federal courts.— Where, under the statute, the United States marshal is under certain circumstances authorized to hire or otherwise procure a convenient place in a state to serve as a temporary jail, no special process of commitment is necessary, the detention of the prisoner in jail being only a continuance of his custody by the marshal (Turner v. U. A defect in a copy of a mittimus or warrant delivered to a jailer does not render charged by due order of law," but should distinctly state the terms on which the prisoner is entitled to his discharge.[51]

2. Death-Warrant. The date of carrying into effect a judgment of death, although it need not be inserted in the judgment, should be designated in the warrant,[52] but the mode of execution, where it is prescribed by statute, and only one mode is provided, need not be stated.[53]

3. Confinement Pending Execution. The confinement of the prisoner from the date of his sentence to the date of his execution is a necessary incident to the sentence.[54]

4. Stay of Execution — a. Reprieve — (I) In General. The term "reprieve" signifies the withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time, which operates in delay of execution.[55] At the common law reprieves after judgment were of three kinds: (1) At the pleasure of the crown; (2) in the discretion of the court; and (3) of necessity, which latter was in the case of a woman convict alleging pregnancy when called for sentence.[56] In the United States, unless the terms on which a stay of execution may be granted are definitely fixed by statute,[57] the court may stay execution whenever it considers that under the circumstances of the case such action would be right and proper.[58] Thus a stay may be granted to allow the accused opportunity to apply for a pardon,[59] to procure a writ of error,[60] or to secure a certificate of probable cause from the trial judge.[61]

(II) Effect on Sentence of Death. The postponement of the date of the execution of a capital sentence by a reprieve does not affect the sentence so as to require a new sentence,[62] or any other order of the court on the expiration the prisoner's detention illegal, as the paper is merely evidence of the judgment and sentence. Howard v. U. S., 75 Fed. 986, 21 C. C. A. 586, 34 L. R. A. 509.

On sentence of a fine and costs, and to stand committed until the same are paid, the failure of the mittimus to recite that the complaint was under oath, to set forth the disposition to be made of the fine, and to designate to which jail the prisoner shall be committed, is immaterial, if the complaint and judgment are correct. Where this is the case, the fact that the governor delays to fix the date until some time after the expiration of the term of solitary confinement does not invalidate the warrant. State v. Gut, 13 Minn. 341.

54. of the reprieve, for, if it were otherwise, the use of the power of reprieve might cause an entire failure of justice.[63]

b. Habeas Corpus Proceedings. An appeal to the supreme court of the United States from the denial by the circuit court of a writ of habeas corpus asked for by the accused, convicted by a state court, upon the ground that his conviction and detention were in violation of the federal constitution, operates as a stay, and the warden of the state's prison is not authorized to execute the death-warrant pending the appeal,[64] nor can the state court fix the day for the execution of sentence pending such appeal.[65]

c. Insanity After Conviction. At common law, where the accused after conviction becomes insane he shall not receive judgment, and if insane after judgment he shall not be ordered for execution.[66] Later it was by statute provided that after a verdict of insanity, the court must order that he be confined in such place and manner as are most convenient until his majesty's further pleasure regarding his disposal.[67]

d. Fixing New Date For Execution.[68] The fact that the day of execution has passed without the sentence of death being executed because of the death of the sheriff,[69] because of his neglect to execute the warrant,[70] because the court granted a postponement of the execution on the application of the accused,[71] or because the accused has obtained a writ of error or taken an appeal to an appellate court[72]

63. Sterling v. Drake, 29 Ohio St. 457, 23 Am. Rep. 762.

If the reprieve be granted to a day certain, the sentence should be executed on the day the reprieve expires, and the date of execution need not be again fixed by the court. In re Buchanan, 146 N. Y. 264, 40 N. E. 883.

Where pending an appeal the day for execution has passed, in the absence of a statute requiring a resentence, the sheriff may execute the sentence (State v. Joshua, 15 La. Ann. 118), and in the case of his failure to do so, it is the duty of the governor to see that the sentence is executed (State v. Oscar, 13 La. Ann. 297).

As soon as the judgment of the United States circuit court denying the writ of habeas corpus is affirmed by the supreme court, the state court may sentence to death at once without waiting for the mandate of the supreme court to be issued and filed in the circuit court, since after the affirmance an appeal is no longer pending. In re Durrant, 169 U. S. 39, 18 S. Ct. 291, 42 L. ed. 653; Jugiro v. Brush, 140 U. S. 291, 11 S. Ct. 770, 35 L. ed. 510.

The reason of this is not that the convict having become insane is no longer a fit object of punishment, but that he is incapable of saying anything in bar of execution or assigning any error in the judgment. 4 Blackstone Comm. 396.

It is discretionary with the court to impanel a jury to ascertain whether the prisoner is really insane, and if they find that he is the court must reprieve him until the ensuing session. 4 Blackstone Comm. 396; 1 Hale P. C. 370.

Under a statute which provides that where a practising physician has made an affidavit that a person convicted and sentenced to death has been on his examination discovered to be insane, and that his condition should be tried before a jury, the court has no discretion in the matter, but it is its imperative duty to order a jury trial at once. Under the California statute, an order fixing the date of execution is one "made after final judgment affecting the substantial rights of the defendant," and is appealable, but the appeal does not stay the execution without a certificate of probable cause, and he may be executed pending his appeal where this certificate is not obtained. He may, in case the certificate is refused by the trial court, apply to the justices of the appellate court for it. He should have, under the circumstances, a settled bill of exceptions, and inasmuch as the latter is an absolute prerequisite to the certificate of probable cause, and without it no stay can be procured, to deprive him of his bill of exceptions is to deprive him of an important right, and is error. People v. Durrant, 119 Cal. 201, 51 Pac. 185.

Where the term for which the accused is sentenced elapses without imprisonment being suffered by him, he may be brought before the court and a new date specified at which the term shall commence (Ex p. Bell, 56 Miss. 282; State v. Cockerham, 24 does not entitle the accused to his discharge, and the court may, either with or without a new sentence, fix another day for the execution of the sentence.

5. Resentencing on Capture After Escape. Where a defendant has escaped after sentence of death[73] has been pronounced, and has been recaptured after the time fixed for his execution, he may be resentenced[74] on the original judgment[75] and at the next term of the court.[76]

6. Outlawry. Outlawry is a punishment inflicted on a person for a contempt or contumacy, in refusing to be amenable to, and abide by, the justice of that court which hath lawful authority to call him before it.[77]

7. Unreasonable Detention by Sheriff. One who has been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary should not be unreasonably detained in the county jail or elsewhere by the sheriff.[78]

XVII. Appeal, Writ of Error, and Certiorari.[79]

A. Form of Remedy, Jurisdiction, and Right to Appeal — 1. Form of Remedy — a. In General. The decisions of the lower criminal courts in England, reviewable in the king's bench, were brought there either by writ of error, writ of certiorari, or writ of false judgment issuing out of the king's bench and directed to the lower court.[80] In this country, owing to the various statutory modifications of the common law, no common or universal procedure exists.[81]

b. Writ of Error. Where the statute has not provided for an appeal in criminal cases,[82] the common-law writ of error is usually recognized.[83]

N. C. 204), and where one term of imprisonment is directed to commence at the termination of another, and the judgment on which the earlier term was based is reversed, the court may direct that the sentence be computed from another date (Mills v. Com., 13 Pa. St. 631).

What is a reasonable or an unreasonable time to detain him depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. O'Neil v. State, 134 Ala. 189, 32 So. 667, holding that where the prisoner is too sick to be removed, or has been exposed to a contagious disease which he might communicate to others in the prison to which he is sentenced, his detention until he can be safely removed thereto is not unreasonable.

c. Appeal. Subject to constitutional limitations,[84] it is within the power of the legislature to prescribe the conditions and circumstances under which an appeal may be had in criminal proceedings, the courts to which it may be taken and the proceedings by which it shall be conducted.[85] Accordingly in many of the states statutes have been passed providing for appeals in criminal cases, and these statutes have usually, either expressly or by necessary implication, abolished the common-law writ of error.[86] These statutes must be strictly followed, and a

A writ of error does not properly lie for matters which could have been taken advantage of by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment. Davis v. State, 39 Md. 355.

According to the authority of Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2527, a writ of error in a criminal trial, until a late period at common law, was entirely ex gratia. The granting of it was in the discretion of the crown and was not usually opposed by the attorney-general. It was conceived as merely the modification of the royal power to pardon, and the crown having thus expressed its willingness to reverse, the king's bench usually reversed upon slight or trivial objections, or upon no error at all. Subsequently it was determined that the writ of error was a matter of right, not of favor (Rex v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2527), although it still remained in theory at least in the royal discretion (1 Chitty Cr. L. 758). Hence the court of king's bench will not grant the writ unless the attorney-general has issued his fiat. Ex p. Lees, E. B. & E. 828, 5 Jur. N. S. 333, 27 L. J. Q. B. 403, 6 Wkly. Rep. 660, 96 E. C. L. 828. And although in a proper case, that is, where there is probable cause of error, the fiat must be issued, yet the attorney-general is to determine on his own responsibility whether such a case is presented, and neither the court of king's bench (Reg. v. Newton, 4 E. & B. 869, 1 Jur. N. S. 591, 24 L. J. Q. B. 246, 3 Wkly. Rep. 374, 82 E. C. L. 869; Ex p. Lees, E. B. & E. 828, 5 Jur. N. S. 333, 27 L. J. Q. B. 403, 6 Wkly. Rep. 660, 96 E. C. L. 828), nor the lord chancellor (Re Pigott, 11 Cox C. C. 311, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 114) will review his determination. Although if it be in a misdemeanor case it might be that the court would order him to grant it. Rex v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2527, 19 How. St. Tr. 981; Reg. v. Paty, 14 East 92, 2 Salk. 503; Reg. v. Ashby, 14 How. St. Tr. 695, 862, 870, 871; Rex v. Rowe, 2 Mollry 27; 4 Bl. Comm. 392.

Where appellate jurisdiction is conferred upon the supreme court by the constitution, the right to appeal guaranteed therein does not depend upon the action of the legislature, and exists although the legislature fails to pass a law regulating the exercise of the right. Laturner v. State, 9 Tex. 451. The legislature may impose a reasonable condition upon one about to take an appeal, so long as it refers wholly to the remedy and leaves that still reasonable and adequate. Johnson v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 87, 58 S. W. 60, 51 L. R. A. 272. Thus it is not unconstitutional to prohibit a review on appeal of an instruction on the evidence, unless it is complained of by a bill of exceptions, or a motion for a new trial has been made and denied. Johnson v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 103, 58 S. W. 69. But where the constitution divides the state into districts and provides that when the supreme court is sitting in any one of them it shall exercise discretion only over cases originating in that district, a statute providing that one convicted of felony may appeal to the next term of the supreme court, no matter where it may be held, is unconstitutional. State v. Steptoe, 61 Mo. 411.

A statute which imposes burdensome conditions on the right to appeal, beyond what is necessary to secure the prosecution of the appeal, is unconstitutional in so far as it impairs the right of appeal. State v. Gurney, 37 Me. 156, 58 Am. Dec. 782.

e. Exceptions. At common law no bill of exceptions was permitted in criminal cases.[93] In this country the common-law rule has been followed where the subject has not been regulated by statute.[94]

f. Reservation and Certification. In many states the statutes authorize the trial courts to reserve or certify difficult and important questions of law arising during the course of the trial to a superior or appellate court for its consideration and adjudication.[95]

g. Cross Appeals. In the absence of a permissive statute[96] a cross appeal cannot be permitted to the prosecution, but the appellate court may, where the accused appeals, pass upon all questions decided against the prosecution to which exceptions have been taken.[97]

h. Successive Reviews. Both at common law and under the statutes one convicted of a crime is entitled to but one writ of error[98] or one opportunity to appeal,[99] unless perhaps the appellant having voluntarily withdrawn his appeal renews it within the time limited by statute.[1]

Under the Wisconsin statute doubtful questions in criminal actions must be reported for determination before judgment. After judgment the appellate court has no authority to determine questions thus submitted, and the proper remedy then is a writ of error. State v. Sheppard, 37 Wis. 395.

In England, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, authorizing questions of law which arise at criminal trials to be reserved, it is held that the question whether there was a mistrial, where one juryman answered, was sworn, and served in the name of another, might be reserved, and that the court had jurisdiction to determine it. In Louisiana, on the abandonment of an appeal, the accused may bring certiorari. State v. Pettigrew, 109 La. 132, 33 So. 110.

The "extraordinary motion or case" contemplated by the statute, justifying a second bill of exceptions after affirmance of the refusal of a new trial, is such as does not ordinarily occur in the transaction of human affairs; as where, on a conviction of murder, the supposed deceased is found to be still statute.[2] So too the remedy by appeal does not, in the absence of a statutory provision to that effect, preclude the accused from procuring a review by certiorari.[3]

2. Jurisdiction — a. In General. In determining to what court an appeal should be taken, it is necessary to determine whether a proceeding is civil or whether it is of a criminal or quasi-criminal nature;[4] but when the nature of the proceeding has been determined or is undisputed the rules designating from what courts and to what courts appeals may be taken must be determined by a reference to the various statutory provisions.[5]

See 15 Cent. Dig. tit. "Criminal Law," § 2570; and Appeal and Error, 2 Cyc. 509.

The reason assigned for this is that the implication that the right to the writ has been taken away by a statutory provision for an appeal, which is recognized in civil cases because of the ease and promptness of the appeal as compared with the writ of error, does not apply in criminal cases; as it not infrequently happens that the accused is wholly unable, by reason of his inability to procure sureties, to prosecute an appeal. Barnett v. State, 36 Me. 198; Thayer v. Com., 12 Metc. (Mass.) 9; In re Cooke, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 234.

In the federal courts the distinction between a writ of error and an appeal is and always has been maintained. See De Lemos v. U. S., 107 Fed. 121, 123, 46 C. C. A. 196 (holding that the rule is based on the provision of the federal constitution that "no fact tried by the jury shall be otherwise examined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law." The use of the words "appeal, or writs of error" in a statute creating federal appellate courts does not permit the use of these remedies interchangeably, and does not necessarily, when taken in connection with other provisions of the same statute, confer the right upon the appellate court to review a criminal case by appeal); Bucklin v. U. S., 159 U. S. 680, 682, 16 S. Ct. 182, 40 L. ed. 304, 305 (holding that the final judgment of a federal court in the case of a capital or otherwise infamous crime is not reviewable in the supreme court except upon writ of error, although the statute provides that "appeals or writs of error" may, in certain classes of cases, be taken to the supreme court). But compare Ex p. Gordon, 1 Black (U. S.) 503, 17 L. ed. 134.

In some cases the state has an election between an appeal and a writ of error given by statute. Where this is the case, if the state appeals defendant may be held in custody or required to give bail, while if the state resorts to the statutory writ of error he will be discharged until the case is determined, and he must be again arrested on a new writ if the decision is reversed. Under these statutes the state can only procure a writ of error where there is no trial and acquittal. State v. Cunningham, 51 Mo. 479; McGee v. State, 8 Mo. 495.

b. General Requisites — (I) Jurisdiction in Lower Court. An appellate court has no jurisdiction to review a proceeding over which the trial court had no jurisdiction.[6]

(II) Existence of Actual Controversy. The existence of an actual controversy, being an indispensable requisite to appellate jurisdiction,[7] an appeal in a criminal case based on no real controversy,[8] or in a case where any judgment rendered would be futile,[9] will not be considered by an appellate tribunal.

c. Consent of Parties. In criminal as in civil cases[10] no mere agreement of the parties or waiver of objection can confer jurisdiction on an appellate court which has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter.[11]

d. Character of Offense or Punishment. Under the statutes of many states appellate jurisdiction is dependent upon the character or grade of the offense. In some the highest appellate court will entertain appeals in cases of felony only;[12] while in others, although an appeal in a case of misdemeanor may be taken to the highest appellate court, it must be first taken to an intermediate tribunal.[13] So too in some states the right of the accused to an appeal depends, by virtue of the local statutes, upon the amount of the fine or the character of the punishment imposed upon him.[14]

3. Matters Reviewable — a. Finality of Judgment or Order — (i) In General. At common law a writ of error could never be obtained before judgment, but was granted only to review a final determination of a cause;[15] and this procedure has been generally followed in the states of the United States, by the statutes providing for review.[16] It therefore follows that a writ of error or an appeal will not usually lie, in the absence of a permissive statute, from an interlocutory judgment or order,[17] unless perhaps from an interlocutory judgment or order deciding against defendant on a point which if it had been decided in favor of defendant would have acquitted him.[18]

(II) Refusal to Change Venue. As the granting of a change of venue is usually discretionary with the trial court, its decision with regard thereto is not ordinarily reviewable on appeal;[19] and when reviewable the appeal must be taken, not from the refusal to change the place of trial, but from the final judgment.[20]

(v) Order Directing Mistrial. An order directing a mistrial and discharging the jury before verdict, if based on sufficient cause, is not appealable, inasmuch as it is not a final judgment.[23]

b. Necessity of Rendition and Entry of Judgment. It is not only essential that there shall have been a final determination of the cause, but it is also necessary that the judgment be regularly rendered and entered before a writ of error lies therefrom;[24] and the same rule is applicable to appeals which are taken under statutory provisions.[25]

c. Necessity of Sentence. Until sentence has been properly pronounced and entered on the record an appeal will not lie.[26]

If the court is satisfied from its observation that defendant is sane, its action in refusing an order to have his sanity determined, after a capital sentence has been imposed in a regular legal proceeding, is not appealable, although the statute provides for appeals from final orders after judgment affecting substantial rights. d. Requisites and Sufficiency of Judgment — (I) In General. A judgment or sentence to sustain an appeal must show the precise character and duration of the fine or other punishment which was imposed.[27] A judgment discharging a prisoner and releasing his bail is appealable,[28] but a mere entry sustaining a motion to quash the indictment[29] without an order on the record to that effect is not.[30]

(II) Judgment on Plea of Guilty. Defendant may appeal from a judgment, based on his plea of guilty, on the ground that the indictment does not state facts constituting a crime, as such plea does not admit the validity or sufficiency of the indictment;[31] but it has been held that such plea is an admission of all facts well charged in the indictment or complaint, and a waiver of his right of trial by jury thereon.[32]

(III) Judgment Entered Nunc Pro Tunc. A judgment in a criminal cause entered nunc pro tunc may be appealed from.[33]

e. Orders After Judgment. In some states statutory provision is made for an appeal by defendant in a criminal case from orders made after judgment affecting his substantial rights.[34] Under these provisions it has been held that an order fixing the date of execution may be appealed from.[35] But an order overruling a motion to discharge from imprisonment and one denying a motion to arrest or to vacate the judgment are not appealable, since all such objections may be reviewed by appealing from the judgment.[36]

An order overruling defendant's motion after sentence, to have the sentence forthwith executed (Johnson v. State, 41 Tex. 119), judgment of an intermediate court in offenses of a certain nature is final.[37] Where, however, the constitution of the state provides that the supreme court shall have jurisdiction to review any decision of the courts below, an appeal may be taken from the decision of an intermediate appellate court;[38] and the same is true where under a statute a writ of error is a matter of right,[39] although it does not lie to an order of an intermediate court reversing a judgment of an inferior court and remanding the accused for a new trial.[40]

4. Time of Review — a. In General. At common law there is no limitation of time within which a writ of error may be brought.[41] The time within which an appeal may be taken is, however, in many of the states limited by statute;[42] and a failure to file notice of appeal[43] or an affidavit[44] as required by statute may

Cr. 84, 19 S. W. 900) are not appealable. So an order made after judgment refusing to settle a bill of exceptions in a criminal case is not appealable as the party aggrieved may apply by petition to prove his bill of exceptions. Where an appeal taken within the proper time is dismissed for lack of prosecution and is not reinstated, a subsequent appeal must also be taken within the proper period from the date of the judgment. State v. McFarland, 38 Kan. 664, 17 Pac. 654.

Where defendant escapes after conviction and is captured many years afterward his right to a writ of error is determined by the statute in force at the time of his petition, and passed before his capture, limiting the time within which an appeal may be taken; and not by the law in force when he was sentenced which placed no limitation of time on the right to appeal. deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction, unless it shall appear that the appellant was not guilty of laches.[45] A statute enacting that writs of error shall be taken within a prescribed period does not contravene the constitutional right of the accused to the writ.[46]

b. Analogy to Civil Procedure. Statutes which in general terms limit the time within which an appeal may be taken apply to both criminal and civil cases;[47] but if the time to take an appeal in a criminal case is expressly regulated by statute, such provision must govern.[48]

c. As Dependent Upon Time of Rendition of Judgment. In many states an appeal must be taken at the term at which the judgment is rendered,[49] although the contrary has been held in the absence of a statute requiring such limitation,[50] and in computing the period within which an appeal may be taken it is often necessary to determine when final judgment is entered or rendered.[51] In calculating the time after the judgment, the day on which the judgment was rendered should, it seems, be included.[52]

5. Right of Review — a. In General. Under statutes in terms permitting appeals by the state and by defendant, a judge cannot appeal in his judicial capacity from a decision reversing an order made by him, where the decision affected no substantial right of his or of any person whom he represented.[53]

Where a rule of court provides that an appeal or writ of error shall be taken without delay, and the transcript forthwith, or as soon as it can be made out transmitted, the question as to what is a delay which will defeat the appeal must be determined by the character of each case, regard being had mainly to the time it takes to prepare the papers. b. Right of Prosecution — (i) In General. As a general rule the state has no right to a writ of error or to an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant, whether upon a verdict of acquittal or upon the determination by the court of a question of law, unless it be expressly conferred by statute in the plainest and most unequivocal terms.[54] In many jurisdictions, however, statutory modifications of the rule have been made allowing a right of review upon the part of the state, under certain conditions or for the decision of certain questions.[55]

(ii) Arrest of Judgment. By statute in some states the prosecution may appeal from a judgment sustaining a motion in arrest.[56]

(iii) Discharge of Accused. The state has no right to appeal from an order dismissing the case and discharging defendant because of the delay on the part of the prosecution in bringing him to trial;[57] from an order discharging authority or consent, should not be allowed. Ex p. Door, 3 How. (U. S.) 103, 11 L. ed. 514.

(IV) JUDGMENT QUASHING INDICTMENT OR SUSTAINING DEMURRER THERETO. It is in contravention of common-law principles for the state to appeal from a judgment on the quashing or setting aside of an indictment or information.[61] It will be authorized to do so only where the power is expressly conferred by statute, or arises by necessary implication, and then only in the instances specified and enumerated.[62] The right of the state to appeal from a judgment quashing an indictment or sustaining a demurrer thereto has, however, in many states been created by legislative enactment.[63]

so providing the state cannot appeal from an order granting defendant a new trial,[66] or from an order quashing a conviction and sentence.[67]

(VIII) VERDICT OR JUDGMENT OF ACQUITTAL—(A) In General. In view of the common-law rule permitting a former acquittal to be pleaded as an absolute bar to a subsequent prosecution, and of the provisions in the federal and state constitutions that no one shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense,[68] it follows that a statute which permits the state to appeal and to retry a case after an acquittal is unconstitutional.[69] Hence an appeal by the state for the purpose of reversing an acquittal cannot be taken,[70] even though the court erred in stating the law to the jury, by reason of which defendant was acquitted.[71] Nor can the parties by an agreement go to the appellate court on questions of law reserved during the trial by consent, after a verdict of acquittal.[72] Provision has, however, been made in some jurisdictions for a writ of error or an appeal upon the part of the state not to afford the state an opportunity for a new trial after an acquittal, but to point out errors in the proceedings, and by so doing to obtain an authoritative exposition of the law to be followed in the future by the courts.[73]

the statute under which defendant is prosecuted is unconstitutional;[74] nor where the jury is directed to acquit because of the insufficiency of the evidence[75] or indictment.[76]

(IX) CONVICTION OF DEFENDANT. Appeals by the state upon questions reserved cannot be taken upon a conviction, where the statute expressly provides that it can be done only on an acquittal.[77]

(X) DISAGREEMENT OF JURY. The state may, under some statutes, appeal from a decision on legal points not amounting to final judgment, although the case was never finally disposed of by reason of the discharge of the jury because of their disagreement.[78]

(XI) JUDGMENT OF INTERMEDIATE COURT. Whether the state is authorized to appeal from a decision of an intermediate appellate court on an appeal by defendant depends on the express provisions of the statute.[79]

(XII) WAIVER OF RIGHT—(A) In General. After the right to appeal has accrued to the state no act of the prosecuting attorney can waive it.[80] So the filing of an information directly after an arrest of judgment does not constitute a waiver.[81]

(B) Payment of Fine. The payment of a fine imposed as a part of the punishment and its receipt by the clerk or other official does not defeat the right of the state to an appeal.[82]

c. Right of Defendant—(I) IN GENERAL. At common law, in England, in the federal courts, and in some of the states the writ of error is not a matter of right but is in the discretion of the court.[83] The right of appeal is purely statutory.[84] Hence a statute depriving the accused of the right to an appeal under certain circumstances is not unconstitutional.[85]

(II) WAIVER OF RIGHT—(A) In General. A waiver will be implied from any act on the part of defendant inconsistent with an intention to take an appeal.[86]

stitute a crime is not waived by a failure to demur or to move in arrest of judgment, but may be taken for the first time on appeal;[16] and an objection that there is a variance between the verdict and the indictment may be urged on appeal, although no motion for a new trial or in arrest was made.[17]

(2) STATUTORY PROVISIONS. In some states the statutes provide that objections to the indictment shall be taken by motion or by demurrer, and that objections not thus taken cannot be considered on appeal.[18] Where the statute requires the appellate court to examine the record and render such judgment thereon as the law demands, it may consider an objection to the indictment not raised in the court below.[19]

Statutory provisions in New York.— The New York statutes (Code Cr. Proc. § 527, and Laws (1855), p. 613, c. 337, § 3), which conferred the power to grant a new trial because the verdict is against the evidence or the law, or because justice requires it, whether any exception shall have been taken or not, applied to appeals to the supreme court alone (People v. Donovan, 101 N. Y. 632, 4 N. E. 181; People v. Nileman, 8 N. Y. St. 300), and to convictions only for a capital offense or an offense of which the least punishment was imprisonment for life (Wilke v. People, 53 N. Y. 525. But see People v. Chartoff, 72 N. Y. App. Div. 555, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 1088). The earlier statute was applicable only to cases brought from the court of general sessions in and for the city and county of New York and not to appeals from courts of oyer and terminer. McKee v. People, 36 N. Y. 113, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. 216, 34 How. Pr. 230; Done v. People, 5 Park. Cr. 364. Laws (1887), p. 626, c. 493, § 528, empowers the court of sufficient merely to object. The objection must be followed by an exception.[49] It has been held, however, that a statute providing that no judgment shall be reversed unless the record shows that exceptions were made does not apply where there is an absolute failure of proof that a criminal offense has been committed.[50] And if an error appear on the face of the record it may be corrected, although not excepted to.[51]

(II) Application of Rule—(A) In General. A ruling on a motion to quash the indictment must in some jurisdictions be excepted to,[52] while in others the contrary has been held.[53] The refusal of the court to require the state to elect on which count of the indictment it will proceed will not be reviewed where no exception was taken.[54]

(B) Motion For Continuance. An appellant who has failed to except to a ruling refusing him a continuance cannot have the ruling reviewed on appeal.[55] It is insufficient to raise objection to such ruling for the first time on a motion for a new trial.[56]

(C) Competency of Jurors. A juror's competency will not be reviewed on appeal, where he was not challenged when he was accepted by the court,[57] and the rulings of the court during the selection and impaneling of the jury will not be reviewed unless exceptions were promptly taken.[58]

(D) Errors in Admission or Exclusion of Evidence. Rulings of the trial court admitting or excluding evidence will not be reviewed, where no exception thereto was taken in that court.[59] So too a ruling on the competency appeals to order a new trial in capital cases where the verdict was against the weight of evidence or against law, or where justice requires a new trial, whether any exception shall have been taken or not, but does not confer upon defendant as matter of right the benefit of errors occurring on the trial, not excepted to. of a witness cannot be reviewed in the appellate court unless such ruling was duly excepted to in the court below.[60]

(E) Sufficiency of Evidence. The sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict of conviction cannot be reviewed, unless an exception was taken before verdict to a ruling of the court thereon.[61] This is the rule where the record fails to show proof of venue, if it does not appear that an exception was taken.[62]

(F) Proceedings at Trial in General. The rulings of the trial judge on technical irregularities in the proceedings,[63] or the propriety of remarks made by him in commenting on the conduct of defendant or his counsel,[64] will not be reviewed on appeal where exceptions thereto were not duly taken. So too the ruling of the trial court denying the accused the privilege of making a statement after his counsel had spoken,[65] or refusing absolutely to hear him or his counsel,[66] or refusing further time for argument,[67] or its action in arranging the order in which counsel should open and close,[68] cannot be reviewed unless prompt exception was taken.

(G) Improper Remarks of Counsel. Improper remarks of counsel must be promptly objected and excepted to, and the court requested to instruct the jury to disregard them in order that they may be reviewed on appeal.[69] And exception should be taken to the refusal or the omission of the court to so instruct the jury.[70]

(H) Instructions and Refusals to Instruct. In most jurisdictions the improper refusal or neglect of the court to charge on a particular point, or its action in granting and giving improper instructions, will not be reviewed on appeal, unless specially excepted to on the trial,[71] and this rule applies to instructions given by the court of its own motion.[72] An exception to this rule is made, however, in some states in capital cases, and an improper instruction may be reviewed if it appears to have prejudiced the accused, although no exception was taken.[73]

(I) Judgments. In the absence of a statute requiring it, a judgment of the court, being matter of record, need not be excepted to in order that it may be reviewed on appeal.[74]

b. Time of Exceptions. Exceptions must be taken during the trial, and generally at the time of the ruling complained of,[75] and as a rule they will not be reviewed unless prepared and presented to and certified by the trial judge during the term of the trial.[76] It is too late to take exceptions for the first time on motion for a new trial.[77]

c. Sufficiency of Exceptions. The exception should be specifically directed to the particular error objected to. An exception which is general and does not distinctly point out the particular error will not be considered.[78] If the alleged error be in the admission of testimony, the exception should disclose what the testimony was.[79]

3. Motions and Objections by Motion — a. In General. In the absence of a statute a motion to set aside a verdict as against the law and the evidence can be heard only in the trial court, and cannot be made on appeal.[80] But where the indictment is not sufficient to support the judgment, the latter may be reviewed on appeal, although no motion for a new trial or in arrest of judgment was made.[81] And it has been held that where the whole record is before the appellate court and it sees errors therein, or the judgment is not warranted upon the whole record, judgment may be arrested, although no motion in arrest was made below.[82] If the defect is one which would have been cured or obviated by a continuance, motion must have been made therefor or it cannot be considered on appeal.[83]

The admission of evidence received without objection but on appeal alleged to be inadmissible will not be reviewed where no motion was made to strike it out.[84]

b. Motion For New Trial — (1) Necessity in General. In most of the states motions for new trials are absolutely necessary to preserve errors for the consideration of the appellate court, and errors not brought to the attention of the trial court in this manner cannot be revieved.[85] And where there is a motion for a new trial, previous exceptions not incorporated therein are waived.[86] A motion for a new trial is necessary to save the objection and exception that there has been no arraignment or waiver thereof, or plea by defendant,[87] that the trial court erred in refusing a continuance,[88] or that there was misconduct on the part of one or more of the jurors.[89] And generally errors in the trial proceedings are

The refusal to discharge a jury in the midst of their deliberations, on account of the prejudice of one of them, of which defendant was not previously informed, will not reviewable unless they are made the basis of a motion for a new trial, an exception taken to its overruling, and the motion included in a bill of exceptions.[90] But it has been held that the refusal of the court to direct a verdict, if properly presented in a bill of exceptions, may be reviewed, although it was not made a ground of motion for a new trial.[91]

(II) Admission, Exclusion, and Sufficiency of Evidence. The improper admission or exclusion of evidence, whereby the accused was prejudiced, is ground for a new trial; and a motion therefor must be made on this ground before the action of the court will be reviewed on appeal,[92] unless an exception is made by statute.[93] Where the appellate court has power to review the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, it will not do so, unless a motion has been made in the trial court to set aside the verdict on the ground that it is against the evidence, an exception taken, and all the evidence certified in the bill of exceptions.[94]

(III) Instructions. Errors in the instructions to the jury or in omitting or refusing to instruct cannot be reviewed unless they have been assigned as cause for a new trial on a motion therefor and an exception has been taken to the overruling of the motion,[95] or it seems unless the verdict of conviction is clearly unjustified under the instruction which was given.[96]

c. Necessity For Ruling on Motions and Exceptions. The motion for a new trial must be determined and a ruling by the trial court be obtained thereon before an appeal can be prosecuted.[97] An assignment of error for the overruling not be reviewed unless the objection is renewed as one of the grounds of his motion for a new trial. Phillips v. State, 62 Ark. 119, 34 S. W. 539.

Rehearing of motion.— Where, after a bill of exceptions is filed, defendant moves for a rehearing of his motion for a new trial on of a motion for a continuance will not be considered on appeal, where the record fails to disclose that such motion was ever passed upon.[98] The ruling of the court refusing a new trial cannot be reviewed on appeal unless excepted to at the time. The failure to except waives all objections raised at the trial,[99] even though the ruling of the court is in the record with the evidence.[1]

4. Reservation or Certification of Cases. Under the statutes providing that cases may be certified to an appellate court for review, it is usually necessary that the trial court shall have rendered judgment before their certification,[2] unless the provisions of the statute refer only to certifications before judgment.[3] And where a statute provides that questions which have arisen under certain circumstances may be certified to an appellate court, it must affirmatively appear by the record that the questions certified arose as required by the statute, in order to give the appellate court jurisdiction.[4] Where the statute provides for the reservation of questions of law, questions of fact cannot be reserved.[5] The record sent up should state specifically the question or questions on which the opinion of the court is required.[6]

b. Abatement by Death of Defendant. Inasmuch as the state and federal constitutions expressly provide that no conviction shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture of estate,[11] a writ of error or an appeal cannot be supported upon common-law grounds after the death of the accused, and hence an appeal abates by the death of the appellant pending the decision.[12]

2. Term to Which Appeal Should Be Taken. The appeal ought generally to be taken to the next term of the appellate court,[13] and where this is a statutory requirement a strict compliance therewith cannot be dispensed with.[14]

In the supreme court of the United States, while an application for a writ of error to a state court may be made in open court, because of the urgency and importance of the case, it is the duty of the court, not only to ascertain whether any questions reviewable were decided in the state court, but also whether the character of these questions is such as to justify bringing them into the supreme court for examination. If on the face of the record it appears that the decision of the federal question in the state court was so plainly right as not to require argument, particularly where it is consistent with former decisions of the federal court, the writ ought not to be allowed. Ex p. Spies, 123 U. it;[17] and the allowance of an appeal or of a writ of error ought always to be manifested by some entry or order.[18] The refusal of a writ of error is neither an adjudication that error has not been committed, nor a bar to the allowance of the writ by another judge,[19] and when thus allowed the first refusal is no bar to a review upon the merits.[20]

Bond in federal court.— The fact that defendant after conviction in a state court brings proceedings in habeas corpus in a federal court and, on appealing from a decision against him thereon, gives a bond, does not exempt him from giving security on his appeal in the state courts and his appeal will not be considered but continued. State v. Humason, 4 Wash. 413, 30 Pac. 718.

In Illinois the clerk of the court to which an appeal is taken from a justice's court cannot demand a fee as a condition of having the case, which is there to be tried de novo, docketed. Defendant cannot be compelled to pay costs in advance, as he cannot on an acquittal recover them from the state. McArthur v. Artz, 129 Ill. 352, 21 N. E. 802

b. Nature of Security. In some states statutes require defendant to file a recognizance to prosecute the appeal,[25] or where a writ of certiorari is sued out,[26] to secure his appearance and his submission to the judgment.[27]

c. Requisites and Validity of Security — (i) In General. The character and contents of a recognizance or appeal-bond are usually prescribed by statute, a substantial compliance with which is ordinarily sufficient.[28] Unnecessary clauses in a bond will not vitiate it, but may be disregarded as surplusage.[29] A recognizance must, however, state the grounds of the appeal, and the proceedings that

In Louisiana the statute does not apply to appeals from proceedings for violations of city ordinances. State v. Heuchert, 42 La. Ann. 270, 7 So. 329.

Stenographer's fees.—A constitutional provision that " in no instance shall any accused person, before final judgment, be compelled to advance money or fees " does not apply to a payment demanded by a stenographer for a transcript of the evidence taken at the trial, where his employment by the county or state was not compulsory. And the words " final judgment " refer to the judgment at the trial, and not the judgment on appeal. Stowe v. State, 2 Wash. 124, 25 Pac. 1085. Compare Argabright v. State, 46 Nebr. 822, 65 N. Failure to prosecute appeal.— Where a defendant on appealing gives a recognizance to enter and prosecute his appeal, not at the next term, as required by law, but at a subsequent term, and fails to appear on the return, it is within the discretion of the court to issue a capias against him, and on his being brought in thereon to sentence him under his conviction. An appeal-bond conditioned that defendant shall pay such judgment as may be rendered against him is valid, although imprisonment may be a part of the punishment. Ott v. State, 35 Ind. 365. So a bond to " pay and satisfy the said judgment . . . and otherwise abide the judgment of the said court " is proper where a statute requires a bond that appellant will pay the judgment and render himself in execution. State v. Thompson, 81 Mo. 163.

Description of offense.— In Texas it has been repeatedly held that an appeal-bond not naming some statutory offense charged, or not stating facts which will constitute the offense of which defendant was convicted, is incurably defective, and the appeal may be dismissed. 29. Stephens v. People, 13 Ill. 131.

Analogy to civil cases.—A statute containing a provision requiring that proceedings on criminal appeals shall be the same as proceedings on civil appeals does not necessitate the filing of a bond notwithstanding the fact that by statute in civil appeals plaintiff in error is required to file a bond. State v. Polacheck, 101 Wis. 427, 77 N. W. 708.

show the authority of the court to consider it.[30] The appeal may be dismissed where the bond is for a less amount than is prescribed by statute.[31] It is, however, generally sufficient if it covers the fine and costs accrued, and in the absence of express statute it need not cover subsequent costs.[32]

(II) Estoppel to Impeach Validity. An acceptance of the benefit of an appeal, as fully as though the recognizance had been within the statute, estops one from claiming that he did not in fact appeal, or that his recognizance was informal.[33]

(III) Parties — Joint Defendants. In case of joint defendants, each should execute a separate bond, and a joint recognizance by two or more jointly convicted is insufficient to support their joint appeal, since a forfeiture cannot be enforced for a several breach.[34]

(IV) Amendment or Filing New Security. In the absence of a permissive statute appeal-bonds are not amendable.[35] Nor can the court pending an appeal permit the entry of a valid bond or recognizance in place of one which is defective, where the entry of a valid recognizance is a prerequisite to an appeal.[36]

d. Proceedings in Forma Pauperis — (I) In General. At common law the court has an inherent power to permit the accused to defend,[37] and in England, probably by statute, to prosecute a writ of error in forma pauperis.[38] In the United States as a general rule, an indigent defendant appealing from a conviction is entitled as of right to a transcript of the testimony at the expense of the county or state;[39] and a bond to secure the payment of costs may be dispensed with if the appellant shall file an affidavit of inability to furnish it.[40]

(II) AFFIDAVIT. The affidavit of a defendant seeking to avoid the payment of costs or fees by appealing in forma pauperis must show his indigence,[41] that he has been advised by counsel that he has reasonable grounds for an appeal, and that his appeal is taken in good faith.[42]

5. NOTICE OF APPEAL. The mode and time of giving notice of appeal are usually regulated by statutes which must usually be substantially if not strictly complied with, and a failure to give notice in conformity with their terms may cause the appeal to be dismissed.[43] Defendant must usually serve his notice of appeal on the prosecuting attorney,[44] and in most cases by statute he must also serve a notice on the clerk of the court from which he appeals,[45] and if he fails to

Signature to notice.— The notice may be signed by another attorney than the attorney of record for the accused, where a formal substitution of attorneys is not required. Ex p. Clarke, 62 Cal. 490. Notice on the part of the state should be signed by the official taking the appeal. Hence where the appeal is taken by the prosecuting attorney it is proper for him and not the attorney-general to sign the notice of appeal, and to prepare and sign assignments of error. A justice of the United States supreme court may issue a supersedeas on allowing a writ of error to a circuit court in case of a conviction of an infamous crime. See In re Claasen, 140 U. S. 200, 11 S. Ct. 735, 35 L. ed. 409.

In California where the court denies an application for a certificate of probable cause which would operate as a stay it is the duty of the court to grant a temporary stay to have a bill of exceptions settled. People v. Lane, 96 Cal. 596, 31 Pac. 580.

the same rule applies in cases not capital,[54] the court has full discretion in the latter class of cases to deny a stay if the exceptions are technical, insufficient to work a reversal and the moral guilt of the accused is clearly established.[55]

(II) Certificates of Reasonable Doubt and Probable Cause. In New York the statute provides that a stay may be granted where there is filed "a certificate of the judge who presided at the trial, or of a justice of the supreme court, that, in his opinion, there is reasonable doubt whether the judgment should stand."[56] In other states statutes provide for the issuance of a certificate by the court that there is probable cause for the appeal, and that such certificate may operate as a stay of execution.[57]

c. Operation of Appeal or Writ of Error. While at common law the writ of error operated as a supersedeas of all proceedings on the judgment in the court below, from the time it was sued out and notice of it served on the other party,[58] in this country the issuance of a writ of error or the giving of a notice of appeal does not in the absence of statute operate as a stay without an express order of the court to that effect,[59] which order should not be granted unless error clearly appears, or special circumstances render the stay necessary.[60] In many states, however, the statutes provide that an appeal or writ of error suspends proceedings in the lower court until the case in the appellate court is determined.[61] Under these Probable errors substantially prejudicial to the defendant, as for example where the public is excluded from the trial, notwithstanding the constitutional provision for a public trial (People v. Hall, 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 479, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 158), where defendant's admissions of the commission of similar crimes are admitted in evidence (People v. Bushnell, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 253), where his counsel is not given sufficient time to prepare for argument (People v. McLaughlin, 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 287, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 73), or the insufficiency of the evidence (People v. Erwin, 33 Misc. (N. Y.) 501, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 808, 15 N. Y. Cr. 290) will authorize the court to grant him a service of reasonable doubt.

The examination of the whole case on the application is necessary, except where a part of the record or of the evidence reveals error, and hence ordinarily a certificate may be refused if only a part of the record or of the evidence is submitted. People v. Hess, 6 Misc. (N. Y.) 246, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 630.

This statute having resulted in the granting of numerous certificates of reasonable doubt, by which unreasonable delay occurred and the course of justice was impeded, it was afterward enacted that if appeals were not brought on for argument within a specified time after the granting of a certificate, the district attorney might on two days' notice apply to any judge of the appellate court for an order vacating it. The renewal of the application before another judge after its denial is permissible (People v. Durrant, 119 Cal. 201, 51 Pac. 185), but the statute will not permit a certificate of probable cause to be granted by a single justice on an appeal from an order for the execution of a capital sentence, but the application should be made to the court (People v. Ross, 135 Cal. 59, 67 Pac. 13). (II) Preliminary Steps. As a general rule unless objections were made to the proceedings preliminary to the finding of the indictment,[70] or to the filing of an information,[71] they may be presumed regular, legal, and in accordance with the statutes and their regularity need not appear of record.[72]

An application for a writ of error from the United States supreme court to a state court based upon the reception of evidence, which it was claimed had been taken from the premises of defendant without a search warrant or other legal process, in violation of the constitution of the United States, will be denied where the record of the state court does not show, as required by U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 709, that any right, title, privilege, or immunity under the constitution of the United States, or under any treaty or federal on appeal, although lack of jurisdiction is not one of the objections urged.[74] Where an indictment found in one court has been transferred to and tried in another an order transferring it must appear in the record.[75]

(iv) Time and Place of Trial and Adjournments. It has been held that the record must show affirmatively exactly where the court was held at which the trial was had,[76] although the statute requires it to be held at designated places at stated times.[77] But the term at which a trial was had will be presumed to have been a legal and regular term where the record is silent on that point, particularly where the statute regulates the terms.[78] The presumption is that a cause not tried at once after indictment was regularly continued from term to term, and neither the fact of adjournments[79] nor the reason for them[80] need appear of record.[81]

(v) Number and Qualification of Judges. The failure of the record to show that as many judges as are necessary to constitute a quorum were present in the trial court is fatal to a conviction.[82] It has also been held that where a trial is had before a special judge, his selection or appointment and qualifications must appear of record.[83]

(vi) Appointment and Assignment of Counsel. The record need not show expressly and affirmatively that the accused was represented by counsel,[84] that the court assigned him counsel under a statute, where he requested it,[85] or that an attorney-general pro tempore took the statutory oath.[86] Nor need it show the statute, has been set up or claimed by the accused, or that the decision of the state court was against any such right, title, privilege, or immunity so set up. Ex p. Spies, 123 U. S. 131, 8 S. Ct. 21, 22, 31 L. ed. 80.

it has been held that if the record is silent it will be presumed that the statutory requirements as to presentment of indictments in court were complied with.[98] A judgment of conviction will not be reversed because the record does not affirmatively show that the indictment was indorsed "a true bill" by the grand jury.[99]

(B) Witnesses Before Grand Jury. The record need not show, even in a capital case, that the witnesses examined before the grand jury by whom the indictment was found were sworn.[1] Nor need the record show that the names of the witnesses appearing before the grand jury were indorsed on the indictment[2] or show their names.[3]

(C) Specification of Indictment or Count Sustaining Conviction. Where the record shows the return of two or more indictments against the accused, its failure to show upon which the conviction was had is ground for reversal.[4] But the record need not show upon which of several counts in an indictment a conviction was had, or whether proof was made of the different offenses therein charged, as the sentence will be presumed to be in accordance with the law applicable to the proof offered.[5]

(X) Service of Indictment and List of Jurors and Witnesses. The record need not show affirmatively that a copy of the indictment and a list of the jurors and witnesses were served on defendant, as required by statute, as in the absence of an objection of record this will be presumed to have been done.[6]

(XI) Arraignment and Plea—(A) In General. As a general rule it is necessary that the record should show that the accused was arraigned and pleaded or, if he refused to plead, that a plea of not guilty was entered for him.[7] Many cases, however, hold that the omission of the record to show these facts is not fatal error where the record shows that issue was joined and a fair trial had without objection by defendant.[8] So also where the record shows either an arraignment or a plea, but is silent as to the other, it may be presumed.[9] The record need not show that the indictment or information was read to the accused.[10] And a replication to defendant's plea need not appear in the record.[11]

usually sufficient to show that they were legally drawn and summoned, appeared and answered to their names, and were then impaneled and sworn.[26]

(B) Oath, Custody, and Presence. As a general rule the record must show that the jurors were sworn,[27] but it is not necessary that it should appear on the record where or before whom they were sworn.[28] The record need not show that the court admonished the jurors on each separation as required by statute as this will be presumed.[29] It ought to show, however, that on an adjournment the jury was committed to the custody of an officer,[30] and that he was admonished not to speak to them or allow any one else to do so,[31] although it need not show that they returned to court in his charge.[32] The record should show that the jury was present during the taking of the evidence, or a reversal may be had, particularly in a capital case.[33] The presumption is, where the record is silent, that the officer has been specially sworn, as required by statute.[34] Hence it need not affirmatively show that a deputy sheriff or bailiff who had charge of the jury was sworn.[35]

(XVI) PRESENCE OF ACCUSED. As a general rule the record should show affirmatively that the accused was present in person during the trial,[37] particularly when the verdict was rendered,[38] and when sentence was passed upon him.[39] An express recital of this fact, however, has not in all cases been held indispensable, it being held in some cases that it is sufficient if his presence appears by implication.[40] And in some cases it has been held that where the record shows nothing to the contrary the presence of the accused will be presumed.[41]

(XVII) INSTRUCTIONS. Where the statute requires a charge to be in writing, it has been held that the transcript on appeal must contain such charge.[42] On the

where the record is so far uncertain in naming the accused that if he were again indicted it might be difficult for him to establish a prior conviction, judgment will be reversed. People v. Ah Cow, 17 Cal. 101.

other hand it has been held that the record need not affirmatively show that the charge was in writing, but that it will be presumed that it was given in the manner required by law.[43]

(XVIII) QUESTIONING ACCUSED BEFORE SENTENCE. In some jurisdictions it has been held that the judgment should be reversed where the record does not show affirmatively that the accused was asked if he had anything to say why judgment should not be pronounced against him,[44] while in other jurisdictions it is held that this question will be presumed to have been asked, unless the record affirmatively shows that such was not the case.[45] In some jurisdictions the record must show a proper interrogation of the accused, only on conviction of a capital offense.[46]

b. To Sustain Jurisdiction of Appellate Court — (I) IN GENERAL. An appeal or writ of error will be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction where the record fails to show affirmatively the taking of such steps and the existence of such facts as are necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the appellate court.[47] Thus the original writ of error must be returned by the clerk of the trial court,[48] and sometimes the record must contain an affidavit by the accused or his counsel that the appeal is not taken for delay.[49]

(II) JUDGMENT AND SENTENCE. The record in felony must show the rendition and entry of a final and appealable judgment and a sentence imposed in the trial court.[50] If this does not appear, the appellate court has no jurisdiction and the appeal will be dismissed.[51] The record must also show a compliance with the formalities required by statute and by rules of practice in passing sentence.[52] So too the sentence itself must appear, and a mere recital that defendant was sentenced is insufficient.[53]

(III) NOTICE OF APPEAL. If the record does not show that notice of appeal was served and filed in conformity with the statute, the appeal may be dismissed, as these facts are jurisdictional.[54] A recital of the service and filing in the bill of exceptions is not sufficient.[55] Nor can these facts be presumed from the appellant's compliance with other statutory requirements.[56]

(IV) FILING OF SECURITY. The record must include the appeal-bond or a copy thereof, where one is required,[57] or an order dispensing with one,[58] or the appeal may be dismissed. And where, under the statute, appellant must either enter into a recognizance or be placed in jail pending appeal, the court has no jurisdiction if the record shows that neither was done.[59]

but to be reviewed on appeal must be authenticated and made a part of it by a bill of exceptions. The mere fact that the clerk has actually copied the instructions in the record does not make them properly a part of it.[72]

i. Orders and Judgments. Orders made by the court determining some interlocutory motion are properly part of the record, and must appear as such, in order that the judicial determination may be properly expressed.[73]

j. Bill of Exceptions. A bill of exceptions properly constituted and authenticated, as required by the statute, becomes a part of the record on appeal, and as such will be examined by the court and judgment given on the whole record in so far as the errors apparent thereon are injurious to the accused.[74]

See 15 Cent. Dig. tit. "Criminal Law," § 2805.

A statute passed after conviction, conferring an absolute right to a writ of error, does not by implication provide for a bill of exceptions to accompany the writ, where defendant had no right to a bill of exceptions when he was convicted. In re Claasen, 140 U. S. 200, 11 S. Ct. 735, 35 L. ed. 409.

It is not the purpose of a bill of exceptions to correct or modify the record, but to sup-being apparent of record, need not be brought up by a bill of exceptions.[94] So no bill of exceptions need be settled or filed where under a statute questions arising on a trial, being deemed important by the judge, are certified to the appellate court for review.[95]

b. Form and Contents — (I) Compliance With Statutory Requirements. The form and contents of bills of exceptions are usually regulated and prescribed by statutes, a strict compliance with which is usually required.[96]

(II) Contents — (A) In General. The bill should state clearly and specifically the errors and rulings complained of,[97] and the grounds for the objections, although not necessarily the reasons for overruling the same.[98] Unnecessary matters inserted in the bill may be stricken out on motion.[99]

(B) Incorporation of Evidence. The evidence, so far as it relates to the point presented for review, should either be incorporated in the bill of exceptions,[1] or plement it by supplying that which properly cannot be made a part of the record in the lower court. Prater v. Com., 4 Ky. L. Rep. 370; Hogan v. State, 36 Wis. 226.

94. Wiggins v. State, 23 Fla. 180, 1 So. 693.

Motion in arrest.— No bill is necessary to review the questions of law arising on a motion in arrest of judgment, based on a defect in the indictment. U. S. v. Haynes, 29 Fed. 691.

Motion to quash.— In some jurisdictions a bill has been held unnecessary to present an exception to the rulings of the trial court on a motion to quash an indictment (Hearn v. State, 43 Fla. 151, 29 So. 433; Raines v. State, 42 Fla. 141, 28 So. 57; State v. Judy, 60 Ind. 138; State v. Day, 52 Ind. 483), while in others the opposite is held (People v. Long, 121 Cal. 494, 53 Pac. 1097; Banks v. State, 114 Ga. 115, 39 S. referred to and by express terms made a part of it.[2] Merely appending a document to a bill of exceptions will not make it a part of the bill, unless it is expressly referred to and incorporated by a reference identifying the document.[3] In some jurisdictions it is sufficient by statute to identify a document, to mark in the place where it should be inserted the words "clerk here insert," or otherwise order it to be made a part of the bill, where it is not actually in it.[4]

(III) Who Must Prepare. The statutes usually provide that the appellant shall prepare the bill of exceptions.[5]

c. Settlement, Signing, and Filing — (I) In General — (A) Notice of Presentation For Settlement. The statutory requirements as to the time and character of notice of presentation of a bill of exceptions for settlement are mandatory,[6]

Texas.— Baldwin v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 245, 45 S. W. 714; Bryant v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 394, 33 S. W. 978, 36 S. W. 79; Higginbotham v. State, 3 Tex. App. 447.

See 15 Cent. Dig. tit. "Criminal Law," § 2832; and APPEAL AND ERROR, 3 Cyc. 26.

The bill should state what the party expected to prove by the evidence excluded (Tipper v. Com., 1 Metc. (Ky.) 6), should plainly show the materiality of such testimony (Counts v. State, 19 Tex. App. 450), that it was objected to promptly when offered (Thomas v. State, 17 Tex. App. 437), stating the objections very specifically (Bryant v. State, 18 Tex. App. 107), and that it was admitted over objections and went to the jury (Wilson v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 22, 22 S. W. 39), and the conditions and circumstances under which the court admitted it (Maynard v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 667). The evidence should be set out sufficiently to enable the court to determine whether it is relevant or not. McElhannon v. State, 99 Ga. 672, 26 S. E. 501.

The bill must clearly show that it contains all evidence elicited on the point (Bender v. State, 26 Ind. 285; Mootry v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 450, 33 S. W. 877, 34 S. W. 126), and if the evidence is contradictory the court may not be required to show what the evidence was, but may state that it was contradictory (Grayson v. Com., 6 Gratt. (Va.) 712). If the trial judge certifies that the bill is imperfect and does not show all the evidence the appeal may be dismissed. Wiggins v. State, 23 Fla. 180, 1 So. 693.

The judge's certificate, being the only writ of error provided for in Georgia, should state that the bill of exceptions "specifies all of the record material to a clear understanding of the errors complained of," and where this is not done the writ may be dismissed. Pendley v. State, 87 Ga. 186, 13 S. E. 443.

The laches of the appellant, where he knows that the stenographer is dangerously ill, in not procuring a transcript until he is prevented from doing so by the stenographer's death, which results in the entire absence of the testimony from the bill of exceptions, may cause the appeal to be dismissed and judgment to be affirmed. State v. Thompson, 130 Mo. 438, 32 S. W. 975.

2. Clark v. State, 125 Ind. 1, 24 N. E. 744; Ostler v. State, 3 Ind. App. 122, 29 N. E. 270; State v. Gibson, 52 Kan. 22, 34 Pac. 408.

Evidence outside of the bill will not be considered unless so expressly referred to as to identify it. People v. Taing, 53 Cal. 602.

Wisconsin.— Rooney v. State, 111 Wis. 125, 86 N. W. 547.

See 15 Cent. Dig. tit. "Criminal Law," § 2832.

The notes of the stenographer cannot be made a part of the bill of exceptions by stipulation, where the statute provides that it must be settled and signed by the judge. People v. Bradner, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 233.

4. State v. Laycock, 136 Mo. 93, 37 S. W. 802; State v. Dalton, 106 Mo. 463, 17 S. W. 700. Compare State v. Wear, 101 Mo. 414, 14 S. W. 115. And see APPEAL AND ERROR, 3 Cyc. 27.

Where this direction is required the clerk has no authority to insert the writing if it be omitted, and if he does insert it without authority it is no part of the record and will not be considered on appeal. Klepfer v. State, 121 Ind. 491, 23 N. E. 287; Endsley v. State, 76 Ind. 467; Bryan v. State, 4 Iowa 349; State v. Gordon, 117 Mo. 387, 22 S. W. 952.

5. It is not the duty of the trial judge to prepare them, although it is by statute usually his duty to sign the bill (Pendley v. State, 87 Ga. 186, 13 S. E. 443; Helm v. State, 66 Miss. 537, 6 So. 322), and in doing so he has a right and it is his duty to examine it to see that it states the facts correctly (State v. Cason, 28 La. Ann. 40).

If the bill does not state the facts truly and fairly the court may point out to the appellant the error and require him to correct it, or correct it himself before signing it. Davis v. State, 38 Md. 15; Seibright v. State, 2 W. Va. 591.

(B) Submission to Adverse Party. Under the statutes or rules of court in some jurisdictions the proposed bill of exceptions should be submitted to the adverse party for examination or amendment.[7] The person on whom service is to be made seems to be a matter of local practice.[8]

(C) Signature by Trial Judge—(1) IN GENERAL. It is generally essential that a bill of exceptions be signed by the trial judge[9] and he cannot delegate his judicial power to do this.[10]

(2) Refusal to Sign — (a) Mandamus. The refusal of the judge to sign a bill of exceptions in a criminal case, if erroneous, cannot be corrected by an appeal;[11] the aggrieved party should in such case apply for a writ of mandamus where this is the legal remedy, and not attempt to bring the matter up by a bill of exceptions.[12] Whatever may be the motive of the appellant, it is the duty of the judge, if the bill of exceptions is in proper form, to attest it by his signature, and if he refuse to do so a mandamus will lie to compel him to perform that duty;[13] but this remedy will not be granted where it is shown that the complaining party has been negligent in the preparation and presentation of his bill.[14]

(b) Affidavits of Bystanders. By statutes in some cases where the judge refuses to sign or certify a bill or to incorporate certain matters therein, the contents of the bill or the matters which the appellant desires to include therein may be shown by the certificates or affidavits of bystanders,[15] which may in turn be controverted by the affidavits of others present who heard the evidence and the rulings, and if the latter evidence preponderates against the bill it will not be considered.[16]

(c) Petition to Prove Exceptions. Again in some jurisdictions by statute the appellant, on the refusal of the trial court to allow exceptions, may petition the appellate court for leave to prove the same.[17]

dictions it is held that the time cannot be extended by agreement of counsel.[31] The appellant should ask for an extension of time to file and settle his bill before the statutory period has expired.[32] Under the statutes of some jurisdictions such application should be made during the trial and not after judgment.[33]

(c) Computation of Period. The time for filing, when stated in days, is computed by including the first and excluding the last day.[34] An order allowing a month in which to file a bill will be construed as meaning a calendar month,[35] and if the last day of such month falls on a Sunday the bill may be filed the day following.[36]

4. Case Made and Statement of Facts — a. In General. In some jurisdictions alleged errors or irregularities not disclosed by the record are brought to the attention of the appellate court by a "case made" or statement of facts.[37] Errors in ruling on the admission or sufficiency of evidence or the granting or refusing of instructions may be brought up by this method.[38] A case made or statement of facts should contain enough of the proceedings to enable the appellate court to intelligently review the errors complained of.[39]

b. Settlement and Signing. A statement of facts, to be considered on appeal, must ordinarily be agreed to and signed by counsel[40] and approved by the trial judge,[41] the settlement and approval by the judge being essential;[42] and a statement not signed by the respective attorneys will not be considered on appeal if the judge does not certify their disagreement and his consequent preparation thereof.[43] Where without the fault of defendant the trial judge refuses or neglects to act upon a statement of facts, by which defendant is deprived of an important right, a judgment of conviction will be reversed.[44] In some states by statute it is the duty of the trial judge to prepare the case on appeal.[45] Usually, however, the judge need not prepare a statement of facts unless counsel have failed to agree upon one,[46] and if owing to circumstances the trial judge is unable to prepare it, he may compel counsel to do so under penalty of contempt.[47] A notice required by statute to be given the adverse party of the settlement of a statement of facts is jurisdictional, and cannot be dispensed with unless it is waived.[48]

c. Service of Case and Counter Case. A defendant who appeals must serve on the public prosecutor a statement of the case for acceptance or rejection by him,[49] and the public prosecutor may serve a counter case.[50] Delay on his part in serving and filing a counter case beyond the time allowed therefor justifies a refusal of the judge to consider it.[51] Where the time to serve a counter case has been extended, a failure to serve it within the time stipulated entitles the appellant to have the case stated by him taken as true.[52]

d. Filing. A case made or statement of facts which does not appear to have been filed with the clerk of the trial court, as required by the statute, cannot be considered on appeal;[53] and it must have been filed within the time prescribed by law, which is usually during the term, unless by order the time to file it is extended after adjournment, or good reason is shown for the delay.[54] A failure to settle and file a statement of facts is not excused by the poverty of the appellant.[55] Where such statement has been filed out of time, it will not be considered unless it clearly appears that appellant used due diligence to prepare and file it in the time allowed,[56] and the burden is on him to prove such diligence.[57] Under the statutes of some jurisdictions a statement of facts may be considered on appeal, although not filed in time, when it is shown that appellant was diligent and that the failure was produced by causes beyond his control.[58] If the failure of the prosecuting attorney to agree to the appellant's statement or reject it promptly or the delay of the judge deprives defendant of his statement without fault on his part the judgment will be reversed.[59]

5. Abstract of Record, and Transcript or Return — a. Abstract of Record. In some jurisdictions it is made necessary, by virtue either of a statute or of a rule of court, to file an abstract of the record and brief of the evidence with the appeal, and a compliance with the statute or rule is generally essential.[60] The abstract should contain the notices of appeal served on the clerk and public prosecutor,[61] and those parts of the record which will fully present all objections raised in the trial court, and the parts of the record which it purports to contain must be complete.[62] It need not, however, show that a writ of error was issued, as the court will take judicial notice of its own record.[63]

is transmitted is the sole judge as to whether or not it is properly certified and verified.[73]

d. Transmission, Filing, and Printing — (I) In General. The transcript is filed by its delivery to the clerk, and his indorsement of the date is not essential.[74] Under some statutes the transcript cannot be filed except by leave of court;[75] and if filed at an improper place or time it may be regarded as an abandonment of the appeal.[76]

(II) Time of Filing and Excuse For Delay. The time after judgment within which a transcript of the record must be filed is usually fixed by statute, a compliance with which is necessary.[77] Where the duty of filing the transcript in proper time is a personal one devolving on the appellant, a delay is not excused by showing that the clerk was requested and had promised to file the same;[78] but where under the law it is the duty of the clerk to forward promptly the record on appeal, his neglect or inadvertence should not operate to the detriment of appellant.[79] Nor will a delay be fatal where the appellant has at all times been diligent in pursuing his appeal.[80] A stipulation or agreement by counsel for delay does not, however, justify a disregard of the statute.[81]

(III) Printing. The transcript or abstract of the record is often required to be printed at the cost of the appellant.[82] In some jurisdictions, however, this requirement may be waived, and an abstract in writing may be prepared and submitted.[83]

6. Defects, Objections, and Amendment or Correction — a. Conclusiveness of Recitals in Record. As a general rule recitals contained in the record import an absolute verity of what took place at the trial and must be taken as true.[84] Thus

If the record shows affirmatively that defendant did not plead, and the bill of exceptions states that he pleaded "not guilty," the former will control and the judgment will be reversed for want of a plea. Childs v. State, 97 Ala. 49, 12 So. 441.

A statement in a bill of exceptions will control a recital in the assignments of error (People v. Ferry, 84 Cal. 31, 24 Pac. 33), and so far as defendant is concerned his bill of exceptions, properly signed and used by him of exceptions contradicts the statement of facts the former will control.[92] And where the decision of the court on a motion in a recital of fact flatly contradicts a prior docket entry of the same fact by the clerk, the former will prevail, as the decision of the court controls the record of the clerk.[93]

e. Defects and Errors — (I) In General. Immaterial defects in a record or transcript are not grounds for the dismissal of an appeal where it contains all that is necessary for decision as to the errors complained of.[94] If, however, the transcript is palpably insufficient and does not show that the appellant was free from laches the appeal may be dismissed.[95] The presumption will be indulged that the record as it comes from the court below is correct.[96] By joining in error defendant admits the completeness of the transcript[97] and that it was properly filed.[98]

(II) Alterations. Alterations in the record, when made, will not be considered on appeal,[99] unless there is evidence that they were properly made by the proper court or officer.[1]

(III) Loss of Record. Where by reason of a loss of the record the appellant is unable by no fault of his to perfect his appeal, he will be excused from producing the transcript and the judgment will be reversed.[2]

d. Amendment and Correction — (I) In General. Defects or errors in a transcript or return when not jurisdictional and when not arising through the fault or laches of the appellant are generally amendable.[3]

96. State v. O'Bryan, 18 Mont. 1, 43 Pac. 1091, 44 Pac. 399. Thus it will be presumed that the charges were indorsed as required by statute (Allen v. State, 74 Ala. 557); that the instructions were in writing (People v. Wright, 45 Cal. 260; People v. Shuler, 28 Cal. 490; People v. Chung Lit, 17 Cal. 320); that the oral charge which appears in the transcript of record was taken down by the shorthand reporter (People v. Barton, 88 Cal. 176, 25 Pac. 1117; People v. Johnson, 88 Cal. 171, 25 Pac. 1116; People v. McGregar, 88 Cal. 140, 26 Pac. 97; People v. Wheatley, 88 Cal. 114, 26 Pac. 95; People v. Bourke, 66 Cal. 455, 6 Pac. 89); and that the judge signed the bill of exceptions when presented, and the clerk filed it when signed (Stewart v. State, 24 Ind. 142). In Texas, however, by statute, if any portion of the record is lost after notice of appeal, it may be substituted in the lower court and the transcript sent up, and if the lower court is not in session, the appellate court shall postpone the appeal until the next term thereof. In a number of cases this power is affirmed,[5] while in others it is denied.[6] After the filing of the appeal or the issuance of a writ of error the appellate court cannot amend the record of the court below,[7] although it may compel the court below to furnish such a record as the statute requires.[8]

insert in the record rulings on the trial which were not originally a part of it.[9] But in a capital case it has been held, where defendant only excepted to the charge "as given," that specific exceptions might be inserted nunc pro tunc on appeal by consent.[10]

(IV) By Reference. In some cases errors or omissions in some parts of the record as sent up may be amended by reference to correct statements of the same fact in other portions.[11] Thus it has been held that an omission in the record may be cured by the language of the bill of exceptions.[12] On the other hand it has been held that the record cannot be corrected by reference to an assignment of error, by the brief of counsel,[13] by reference to the record of a former appeal,[14] or by statements in the judge's charge.[15]

(V) Time of Amendment. Amendments must be applied for and made within a reasonable time to be determined by the circumstances of each particular case.[16] If a time for amendments and corrections is fixed by statute application beyond such time may be denied.[17] It has been held that where the record on a writ of error shows a defect, the court may withhold its decision in order to give the prosecutor an opportunity to have the record amended.[18]

e. Certiorari to Bring Up Record — (I) Jurisdiction to Issue. Upon the principle that all courts have the power to issue any writs necessary to the exercise of their rights and duties,[19] it is held that an appellate court is vested with complete authority to issue writs of certiorari or to make similar orders directing the return of a full and complete transcript when the one before it is defective.[20] And if one writ fails to bring up a complete record a second may be issued.[21]

(II) Grounds of Issuance. The applicant for a writ of certiorari must show affirmatively in what respect the record is deficient.[22] If the record below is correct, a writ of certiorari will not be granted merely to ascertain the reasons of the trial judge in excluding certain testimony not originally contained in the record,[23] or to bring up parts of the record which do not relate to the rulings under consideration.[24] Nor will the writ issue to the clerk of the appellate court to return a transcript to the clerk of the trial court that counsel may inspect it.[25]

(III) Time of Application, Procedure, and Return. A writ of certiorari should be applied for promptly. An application after submission of the case[26] or after argument in the appellate court[27] comes too late. The same is true, and with better reason, of an application after decision in the appellate court.[28] The writ of certiorari should be directed to the court below, and an order to return the record made on that court. This may be served on the clerk in vacation, and he may make the return immediately.[29] On the return of a writ of certiorari only the transcript and not the record itself need be sent up.[30] If the return is defective the transcript and other papers may be sent back that a proper return may be made.[31] A statement in the return of the reason that certain instructions were not inserted in the case made is conclusive.[32]

f. Remission of Record For Correction. If on the return to a writ of certiorari or by any other means, it is discovered that amendable defects or errors exist in the record on appeal, it is proper to send the record back to the trial court for the purpose of having the same amended.[33]

7. Questions Presented For Review — a. In General. The record furnished the appellate court must be so complete as to show intelligibly the question which is to be reviewed. If such is not the case the appeal will be dismissed or the judgment affirmed, according to the practice.[34] Thus where the record contains neither a bill of exceptions nor assignment of errors the case cannot be reviewed.[35] A bill of exceptions to be reviewable should specifically state that the exceptions therein were taken at the trial,[36] and should point out the errors complained of. A general statement that defendant excepted to the whole charge,[37] or the expression, "Defendant's exceptions noted,"[38] is generally insufficient. But an exception to each and every one of certain instructions given is sufficient.[39] An assignment of error based on the overruling of a motion for a separate trial of joint defendants will not be considered where the motion and affidavits in support thereof are not in the record;[40] nor will the refusal of a severance be reviewed where there is nothing in the record to show that the accused was injured thereby.[41]

b. Indictment and Plea. Defendant cannot have the sufficiency of the indictment,[42] or of an affidavit and information,[43] or the sufficiency or correctness of a plea[44] reviewed on appeal unless they are made to appear in the record. And an objection that there is a variance between the indictment and the copy served on defendant will not be reviewed where the copy served is not made a part of the record.[45] So also an objection that a motion to quash was improperly overruled will not be considered where the record does not show that the affidavits read were all the proofs heard or that any exception was taken to the court's ruling,[46] or where the record does not show other matters necessary to enable the appellate court to pass on the propriety of the ruling.[47] The same principle applies to

47. A refusal to quash the indictment cannot be reviewed unless the abstract contains the evidence (State v. Butterfield, 73 Iowa 86, 34 N. W. 750), or at least such a statement of it as will enable the appellate court to pass upon the propriety of the ruling (State v. Frost, 95 Iowa 448, 64 N. W. 401); and a motion to quash on the ground of a material change in the indictment will not be considered where the bill of exceptions fails to show what the change is (State v. Pollard, 14 Mo. App. 583). Where the evidence introduced on a refusal to quash an indictment for the reason that it was found without evidence does not appear in the record, the court below will be presumed to have a refusal to grant a motion to compel the state to elect between counts or offenses.[48]

e. Change of Venue and Continuances. The action of the trial judge on an application for a change of venue will not be reviewed unless the application and the affidavits in support thereof,[49] and the evidence, if any, heard on the application, appear in the record.[50] Nor will the action of the court on an application for a continuance be reviewed where the record does not contain the application and affidavits,[51] and the other evidence, if any was received.[52]

d. Selection, Summoning, and Impaneling of Jury. Errors in the selection, summoning, and impaneling of the jury will not be reviewed unless the evidence and proceedings substantially appear in the record.[53] Thus a ruling on a motion to quash the venire will not be reviewed where the evidence on which the motion was based does not appear.[54] Nor will questions as to a juror's competency be reviewed where the record does not show that he served as such and that defendant had exhausted his challenges before he was accepted.[55] So also the record ruled correctly, and the matter will not be reviewed. State v. Cole, 145 Mo. 672, 47 S. W. 895.

e. Conduct of Trial in General. Alleged errors in the conduct of the trial will not be reviewed unless the facts connected therewith so appear in the record that the court can see that defendant has been prejudiced.[58] The rule applies to the action of the court in discharging the jury because of their disagreement,[59] to the objection that defendant was absent from the court during the trial,[60] to improper argument or remarks of counsel,[61] and to various other objections.[62]

f. Questions in Relation to Evidence — (i) In General. Generally questions which depend upon the evidence are not reviewable, where the evidence is not set out in the record.[63] Where no evidence appears of record, the appellate court (Tenn.) 47, holding that in a trial for murder the rejection of a competent witness is ground for reversal, although the materiality of his testimony is not shown by the record. It has also been held that where a witness is rejected, not on account of the incompetency of his testimony, but because he is under a legal disability, the materiality of his testimony will not be considered. Scott v. State, 49 Ark. 156, 4 S. W. 750, holding that it will be presumed that his testimony if permitted would have been material.

Where witnesses were objected to because their names were not indorsed on the information, the court held that the record should show the facts occurring when the objection was made, the tendency of their testimony, and that defendant was not informed as to the nature of the testimony which they would give. Boulter v. State, 6 Wyo. 66, 42 Pac. 606.

g. Instructions and Refusal or Failure to Instruct — (I) In General. The giving or the refusal or failure to give instructions will not be reviewed where they are not set out in the bill of exceptions or record,[80] together with a statement that the particular instructions were given or refused;[81] and in reviewing instructions given the court will consider only the language used and not the tone of voice or manner in which the words were pronounced.[82] It is further necessary to a review of the giving or refusal of an instruction that the entire charge of the trial court shall appear of record,[83] unless the instruction complained of or refusal to instruct is so erroneous that it could not have been cured by another proper instruction.[84] Where the instructions actually given do not appear, it will be presumed that they fully covered the point on which an instruction was refused and all other necessary questions,[85] and that the court gave all necessary and proper instructions of its own motion.[86] A refusal to instruct will not be reviewed unless it affirmatively appears from the record that a request was made Sufficiency of certificate that record contains all instructions.— It is not necessary that the record shall expressly state that it contains all the instructions which were given, but any equivalent expression or language from which it may be reasonably implied that all the instructions are set forth, or which conveys that idea with reasonable certainty, is sufficient. Jane v. Com., 3 Metc. (Ky.) 18.

Statements that the court was asked "to give the following instructions," or "to instruct the jury as follows," have been held insufficient. Jane v. Com., 3 Metc. (Ky.) 18; Clem v. Com., 3 Metc. (Ky.) 10. But see Mickey v. Com., 9 Bush (Ky.) 593; Smith v. Com., 1 Duv. (Ky.) 224.

promptly and in proper form;[87] and where a statute requires requested charges to be submitted in writing the record must show a compliance with the statute.[88]

(II) Necessity of Setting Out Evidence. The refusal or failure to give an instruction will not be reviewed unless the evidence, or so much thereof as would warrant the charge, is in the record,[89] for without evidence showing that the instruction refused was relevant, nothing appears but an abstract question;[90] and where instructions given are correct as abstract propositions of law, and no evidence is brought up showing them to be inapplicable to the case at bar, the judgment will be affirmed.[91] So where the charge is correct in any supposable
